"Your letter to hand some few days past. We accept the propositions, as you will not debate anything else. Joe S. Warlick will represent the Church of Christ. You get a man, the strongest you have. We shall expect it, as you will not debate anything but the church question. When you want specific propositions I am ready for you. Let me hear from you at once, also as to time. We want it to begin October 26, 1903. Let me know the name of your man, and where he lives. Joe S. Warlick lives at Dallas, Texas.

"Proposition one: Is the church of which I, Joe S. Warlick, am a member, in fact the church of God, harmonizing in faith, organization, doctrine, and practice with the church set up by divine authority nineteen hundred years ago?"

"Proposition two: Is the church of which I, _____, am a member, in fact the church of God, harmonizing in faith, organization, doctrine and practice with the church set up by divine authority nineteen hundred years ago?"

I wrote Mr. Boaz that we would accept his Texas man and debate the church propositions with him, as his letter indicated clearly that he (Boaz) would not discuss the church propositions with us. I asked him what he meant by "specific question," and wanted to know if the church questions were not "specific." I certainly think they are. I told him the time would suit all right, so far as I knew then, and that I would confer with my brethren as to the most suitable place, but felt sure they would want it near Sedalia, as that would accommodate more of our people than any other place. As to the man to meet Bro. Warlick, of Dallas, Texas, that could be decided later. I would confer with I. N. Roberts, our missionary in charge, and he would appoint a man to meet Warlick. I expressed hope that we would have a nice and profitable discussion of the questions involved.

I submit the above to the readers of the HERALD so all may see just how anxious Elder Boaz was to meet me. I trust the debate may be productive of good. Bro. I. N. Roberts will please take note of the above.

Am busy and feeling well.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, June 22.

Editors Herald: I arrived here in the afternoon of the 13th instant, from Lamoni, in company with Sr. Mabel Clark who was on her way home to British Columbia. Rather of a sameness in the appearance of things on the way, vegetable growth and development being about the same as it is in Iowa. Here in Utah they have had a late spring and it has been unusually wet. Last week we had a regular thunder and lightning, rain and hail storm. Mabel was asking me on the way, if there was ever any thunder and lightning in Utah. While here she received an ocular demonstration in answer to her question. The earth fairly quaked under the loud peels of thunder.

The following day we met with the Saints at the chapel, attended the Sunday-school, after which Bro. Swen Swenson preached an edifying discourse, being assisted by Bro. Hansen, the elder of the branch. The writer was the speaker of the evening aided by Bro. Swenson. There was a cheerful feeling manifested by the Saints, who were pleased and comforted. In the afternoon Sr. Clark and the writer attended the services at the Tabernacle. It was stake conference, and we were just in time to be present at the sustaining of officers. Sustaining means something in Utah as they stand by their men after they are sustained, a virtue that might be imitated by others with profit. Sr. Clark remained over until the 17th sight-seeing and viewing things about the city, when she went on her way homeward. The event of the week with our little band of Saints was the marriage of Sr. Vera Higgins of this city and Mr. Robert H. Wilson of Denver, Colorado. The service was held in the chapel at 8 o'clock, the evening of the 17th. Vera is the only child of Doctor Higgins and Sr. Pauline and it pulled hard on them to see their favorite transferred to the keeping of another, but they bore up quite bravely. At midnight the happy pair took the train for San Francisco, where they are to reside for the present. May success and happiness attend them.

On Sunday last I made my first visit to Bingham Junction. Met with the Saints at the house of Bro. and Sr. Wardell. The meeting was a cheerful one. Bro. A. M. Chase and family came in from Ogden during service, all looking well. Bro. Chase is down with horse and carriage to try street preaching in Salt Lake City and at other points; he also made some appropriate concluding remarks at our meeting. Last evening Bro. Chase made his debut on the streets of Salt Lake City, corner of Main and Second South. There was quite a crowd present from three to five hundred. The interest was good from beginning to close. Questions were asked by the crowd, and there was wit, hot-shot, and some merriment displayed. We pronounced the meeting a success, and they are to meet again this evening. Sr. Chase is a helpful factor in the way of singing, also the boy and girl, though they are small. Just now the writer is cared for at Bro. and Sr. Barrows'. They and the Saints in general are well. Bro. Swenson is being effective among the Swedes just now. They seem to be waking up.

Fraternally,

Editors Herald: I came here in company with Elder Alvin Knisley a few days ago. Held services twice last Sunday, the 21st, in Sr. Small's house, and announced for Monday and Tuesday. Rain prevented our gathering on Monday evening but on Tuesday evening we held forth to small crowd again. The continued wet weather hindered a number who had been attending from coming out. Bro. Knisley was here some six or seven weeks ago and baptized three. At present there is quite an apparent interest and a number are very near the kingdom. I trust the Saints, especially in this part, will remember us in their prayers, that we may be guided in our work and be enabled to show the "light of life" unto the world and that these honest ones may be persuaded to render obedience to the sovereign will of God in baptism and in living a godly life "in Christ Jesus."

In the meantime we have secured a hall, and have it seated with chairs, at the small cost of one dollar per week, we get it from the mayor of the town, Mr. Jackson, who is very generous and hospitable so far as our dealings with him thus far are concerned; the hall could easily be made to seat one hundred or over. We made our first effort in the hall to-night after having billed the town yesterday and set out a bulletin board.

The crowd was not very large to-night, only some fifteen or twenty being out, but the weather continues very rainy and prevents people from moving out much. We look for better crowds as soon as the weather settles. It is hard on "Solar's system" to part with the "long days" and I suppose we may look for him to shed a few tears about the 21st of June.

PROVO, Utah, June 22.

Editors Saints' Herald: I left home and loved ones on the 17th and arrived in this place on the 20th. Here I met with and spoke to the little band of Saints yesterday, from whom I received a true saintlike reception. The little flock has lately endured many trials by sickness and other discouragement, but I hope that in time, even these things may be sanctified to their good. A loving father and merciful God will not cast away his children who trust in him, but when "the mists have cleared away," it will no doubt be seen that his hand has been over them even during the dark and trying hour.

As I am entering upon the work here I shall be glad to hear from the Saints in the mission where I have labored in times past, as well as from other places, that I may become acquainted with the needs and prospects for the work, so that time and labor may be spent to best advantage for the Master's cause. I can be addressed at 349 West Third South Street, Provo, Utah.

Hoping, praying, and willing to labor for Zion's cause, I am yours in the faith,

H. N. HANSEN.

NANTYGLO, Wales, June 13.

Editors Herald: I regret very much that Bro. Lewis has been necessitated to take his release, but his health has been very poor for some time and does not improve. He has endeared himself to the Saints in Wales and will be missed very much by many. Personally, I shall feel his departure very much as he was in subcharge of Wales. Bro. E. B. Morgan landed last Saturday and I expect to meet him next Tuesday in Cardiff.

All the Saints are in expectation and eagerly waiting to meet Brn. Smith and Evans. I believe the work is in fair condition. Bro. John Davis has spent five weeks in the Manchester District and reports successful meetings. His services have been much appreciated there.

I had the pleasure of baptizing ten in Leeds during the month of February; held good meetings there. Bro. Pierce is in that city tracting in his usual faithful manner. He has labored in Lydney in this manner and I understand his services have been helpful and productive of good. Three more have been baptized in Hamilton. The work in Scotland is moving on in an encouraging manner, though there have been a few clouds. I spent a week in Newcastle preaching on the market-place to very large crowds of interested hearers. Much credit is due Bro. H. Broadway for the courageous manner in which he has persisted in holding up the truth, and energetically holds forth in the streets to good audiences. I do wish we had an elder we could locate there. Several seem to be interested. I have been in Wales nearly three weeks, helping Bro. Davis in open air work. We have had lively times, meeting with much opposition, but still we got many hearers and a few sympathizers.

I leave here for Cardiff Tuesday, and after remaining a week shall leave for London and thence to Southampton to meet Brn.

Smith and Evans who are due to land after five o'clock in the afternoon, June 24. We are hoping to have a splendid time at our coming conference in Leeds at which our two presidents will be present.

From what I learn the work in Sheffield is assuming a very encouraging aspect. Interest is being aroused by Bro. Greenwood ably supported by local brethren. I also learn London is doing finely. So generally speaking the prospects are encouraging. Wales requires much care and labor, and under the conjoint efforts of Brn. Morgan, Jones, and Jenkins we expect a decided improvement. With regards to all,

In bonds,

SEILING, Oklahoma Territory, June 20.

Editors Herald: One Friday in May Mrs. Crawley and I started southeast to find some new places for preaching. Saturday forenoon at ten o'clock we came to the Harper School-house where a crowd was gathering. We went in and learned it was the Seventh-day Adventists' Sabbath-school. We took part with them, by invitation, they wondering who we were. The lesson was about the resurrection, where Paul says, "We which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thessalonians 4: 17. They taught that the Lord would take them to heaven to dwell with him a thousand years, all on the earth being destroyed, and the earth desolate during that time.

Some differed from them, and by permission I preached to them upon the resurrection, at the close of the school; showing from the thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth chapters of Ezekiel and the last chapter of Zechariah how matters would be at the time of the second advent of the Messiah, he coming and destroying all but one sixth of the armies around Jerusalem (Ezekiel 39: 1, 2), and in the land of Israel, "two parts [of the people] therein shall be cut off and die; but the third part shall be left therein."—Zechariah 13: 8. And this third part of Israel who had been gathered to Jerusalem in unbelief of their Messiah, are to be refined "as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried," "shall call on his name," "be his people" and he "their God" (verse 9), in that day, when he comes as Paul speaks of in Thessalonians bringing those who sleep in Christ with him. "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives," etc.—Zechariah 14: 4. "And the Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee."—Verse 5. And, "then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle."—Verse 3. All nations who are gathered against Jerusalem to battle as described in verse 2. Then after the Lord has destroyed the Gentile nations about Jerusalem, except the one sixth who escape, save the one third of Israel who are spared as taught in Zechariah thirteenth and fourteenth chapters, by causing that "In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness."—Ezekiel 13: 1. The Jews accepting Christ as their Messiah by obedience to the gospel. "And [then] the Lord shall be king over all the earth."—Zechariah 14: 9. And all that are left of all the nations must come up yearly to worship the Lord at Jerusalem. Read the chapter.

While showing that "the wicked shall be turned into hell," etc., one preacher asked, "Where and what is hell? Is it only a hole in the ground?" I answered, that to-morrow at eleven o'clock I would answer that question. That Saturday night I preached on the plan of salvation. Went to their Bible reading that afternoon, and by request, announced to preach on the nature of man Sunday night. Had fair audience Saturday night; very good at eleven o'clock Sunday, and crowded house Sunday night. Left appointment for two weeks. The next Saturday I preached ten miles southwest of there, a Christian minister taking exceptions, talking about "Joe" Smith, etc. Left appointment there for second Sunday in June, it being unoccupied.

I returned to fill the Advent appointment, and on Sunday held three sessions of debate with their champion who was there ready for battle on the subject of the Sabbath. He said he could continue no longer then, but would continue it for two weeks in the fall if the people wanted to hear it. The crowded house voted unanimously for it, and it is to be in September. I was so afflicted with a crippled leg that I was unable to stand, having to talk sitting down. I continued growing worse until the next Sunday it seemed I could not live, and only one week until my appointment in the Christian settlement, over twenty miles away, and there was no one to take my place.

On Friday, June 12, I got from my bed to the buggy, and rode ten miles to see if I could stand it. Saturday wife and I went twelve miles towards Oakwood, and Sunday morning on to my appointment in the rain. After Sunday-school the Christian minister with his family and a few others left, but many others coming in I had a good audience. Left appointment for sermon on Book of Mormon at night. Went three miles for dinner with a Methodist family, who seem much interested. They talk of coming to our reunion, at Guy, July 3, with many others. Large audience at night; excellent liberty. Was able to stand up and preach for the first time in a month. Am still very feeble; can gain but little strength, being seventy years of age. One Book of Mormon ordered, scattered numerous tracts and copies of Voice of Warning.

As ever, in gospel bonds,
D. S. CRAWLEY.

MAQUOKETA, Iowa, June 21.

Dear Herald: There are a few Saints in this place. We belong to the Fulton Branch, but that is so far that we do not hear very many sermons. We are reading the papers and church books. They have to answer for a preacher. Bro. Warren Turner was here last winter for a couple of weeks and held meetings in private houses. So many of the Wesleyan people came to hear that we had to move into a larger building. Their preacher was not pleased and would appoint other special meetings at their church to keep them away. We succeeded in getting two worthy people, Bro. and Sr. Clayton. Others are investigating. Sr. Clayton was unable to walk any distance or do her housework; she was administered to by Bro. Turner and now praises God that she has been healed.

We are all eager to go to the district reunion and conference at Waterloo. Death and sickness have visited us many times, but we feel that the heavenly Father has been with us through it all and that we have much to be thankful for. We ask the prayers of Saints that we may ever be ready to do our Master's will.

Your sister in the faith,
MAE DAVIS.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, June 23.

Editors Herald: During the year 1898, I held a debate with Elder Sewell, of Dot, Texas. This debate was published by the Gospel Advocate, printed at Nashville, Tennessee. After its publication, I got numerous letters from the South, from parties belonging to the Christian Church, making further inquiry as to our faith. One of these correspondents, Mrs. G. A. Reynolds, a writer of books, pamphlets, tracts, etc., wrote me as becoming much interested in the debate, and acknowledged that I made my points in the debate of lasting worth to her and others. This lady's husband, I understand, is a leading minister in the Christian Church. By request, I supplied this lady with tracts and pamphlets, and later with Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. She now sends to me one of her pamphlets, entitled, "The Bell Tower," in which she has this to say of the Book of Mormon:

"A WORD IN BEHALF OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

"I desire to call attention to the 'Book of Mormon.' No book I presume, has ever been more misunderstood, severely criticised, and unjustly censured than this one. Those who would be its friends have really been its greatest enemies, not knowing and keeping God's law, the law they already had—the Bible—instead of holding the truth that Jesus is 'the beginning and the end of the law.' They have been led astray by further legislation.

"Said book is all it claims to be, a revelation of God and his dealings with man on this continent, while our Bible is a history of God and his dealings with mankind on the Eastern Continent. 'The Book of Mormon' and the Bible are companion pieces. They are the two witnesses John refers to in his revelations, and the two agree, and it is a matter of prophecy that they are to run together in the last days, and that the spirit of life is to enter them, etc., and no man can prove my assertion false. Let us hear both witnesses, then we may be capable of rendering a just verdict on the whole matter. Let us not judge the book by what is claimed to have grown out of it. In this way the Bible might as easily be set aside.

"A correct copy of the book can be had by addressing I. N. White, Independence, Missouri. Said book fell into my hands about twenty months ago. I read it to see what I could find about visions and dreams. I had been accused of believing with the Mormons, but I knew I was not a Mormon, but a Christian. I knew very little about them, but understood that polygamy was one feature in the belief of at least a part of them, and with my knowledge of the Bible I knew they were in error, and was reluctant to read a work that so glaringly conflicted with the teachings of the Bible, carrying as it does, blasphemy on its very face. I felt that my spare moments were too precious to throw away on such a book, but I was sorely tried for I could find no one congenial with my way of thinking to unburden my heart to. In fact I began to wonder if those who professed to teach the Bible really knew much about it, for it seemed they did not want to talk along this line of thought, or hear me talk, and realizing that I was in 'deep water,' with no human aid, I resolved to lay hold of everything within reach, though it might be driftwood, and knowing that 'the angel of the Lord encampeth round about,' and reaching out, the Book of Mormon fell into my hands, and being assured the Lord, even the Lord, was with me in my quest for truth and knowledge, all fear vanished, and to-day I am standing on a happy shore, 'dryshod,' trying to 'throw out the life line' to others.

"I was indeed astonished when I had read the book and found what it really was, and that it is just as plain in its teaching against polygamy as the Bible is. Its worth to me can not be estimated. It has shed a radiance truly sublime across my pathway; led me onward and upward; 'out of darkness into light.' By placing it by the side of the Bible, where it belongs, I am enabled to grasp truths that have hitherto been a mystery to man. Get the book and read it, and imbibe its teachings, and you need fear no evil. Neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor powers, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, can separate you from the love of God. You will be Christ's and Christ is God's.

Truly your friend,
"MRS. G. A. REYNOLDS."

I see part of this pamphlet is published in the New Orleans Democrat; but the pamphlet itself is published at the Enterprise Office, McComb City, Mississippi. It certainly is not strange to see this lady's version of the Book of Mormon from our standpoint of an unprejudiced investigation of its contents. The Book says itself: "and when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost." This lady's unprejudiced investigation of the contents of the Book of Mormon, with her testimony as inclosed, is another witness in favor of its divinity. I can easily see that God's hand is moving "all along the line." Let us be patient, humble, and diligent, working without murmur or complaint, and the truth will plant itself in the hearts of the true and honest, and thus will Zion be redeemed.

Yours in the conflict,

I. N. WHITE.

VERNON, Texas, June 21.

Editors Herald: We came here in the fall of 1900, on account my health. I am in much better health than I was. This is an excellent country for people who have any form of lung or rheumatic disease. It is also free from malaria. In fact, it is a very healthy country. I have opened a sanitarium here and am receiving patients from different sections. I expect to make some effort to have patients from the northern states next winter. It is an ideal place to spend the winter.

During the two years just passed crops have been poor, but this year they are abundant, and farmers are feeling good.

We have a small branch of the church about seven miles east of here, and another about twenty-five miles east. Church prospects are not especially bright as some of the members are moving away, but those that are here are as spiritual and devoted to Christ as members in most of the branches, and they have a good name in the community.

My family and I are well pleased with Texas, yet we often think of Lamoni and the many friends we left there.

We also miss the church privileges we had there. But I have never felt as some do that they must live in a large branch in order to enjoy religion. Jerusalem was not the only place to worship anciently. (John 4: 21.) If the Saints would give more attention to worshipping "The Father in spirit and in truth" and not rush to large branches where they often grow into grumblers and faultfinders it would be better for both them and the church.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. H. HANSEN.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, June 22,

Editors Herald: On May 27, I left Kansas City on the last train that went to Blue Rapids, before the great flood of 1903. I was to go to Downs on the 29th, to assist in dedicating a Union church building near Cheyenne on the 31st. The flood cut off every source of travel. I was completely hemmed in on three sides with water. When the Blue was at high water mark, the people thought they had seen the worst. That night I had a dream in which a messenger stood by me and said: "The worst has not come." Here I was shown the great straits the people would be put to. My heart sickened; and had it not been for the saying of Christ, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh," there seemingly would have been nothing to bridge over the great calamity that passed before my eyes. The water came down in torrents, till the Blue was from six to ten feet higher than had ever been known by the white man. Many of the Saints lived on the low lands and I think thirteen of their houses were submerged, and three washed off by the flood; some lost their all, and barely escaped with their lives. Some had been warned in dreams, and by impressions, but it was hard to make them believe that sudden calamity awaited them unless they fled to a place of safety. We often learn by the things we suffer. Our people should make an effort to "stand in holy places"—keeping our lives pure before God, by keeping all of his commandments. Bro. Gowell, Twombly, and Madden, were with me part of the time. Not a train could go in or out for eleven days. No mail could be secured from any source, and all of the telegraph wires were down. At length they got up one wire, but I could not secure its service to send a dispatch home to let them know that I was safe.

One Kansas City Journal, for May 31, was brought to town by means of skiff and other private conveyance, and was purchased from a traveling man at the enormous price of fifty cents. This paper went the rounds as though in war times after some great battle had just taken place. The next paper that got into the place was the Kansas City Star, for June 2. Bro. Gowell and I halted the man on the bridge long enough for us to "sketch it," and the news was like water to a thirsty soul; though it told of the great calamities at Topeka, Kansas City and elsewhere. The paper was well worn, and the man refused to sell it, saying he paid twenty-five cents for it. During this time, a cyclone passed some three miles to our west. It made its appearance in the southwest and some man rode through the street, crying "A cyclone is coming," which came near creating a panic. But as fate would have it, passed by us, and the town received no harm, more than the scare. The whole thing was past before many knew of what was up.

We kept up meetings during the time we were "water bound;" I succeeded in getting in twelve sermons. "The signs of the times," was a living question, and we had little difficulty in getting people to see some things at least. On the 9th Bro. Gowell and I took train for Centralia. The road was very dangerous, and we saw sights wonderful! We were met at the depot by Sr. Joseph McDougal, who escorted us to their home where we had access to their best strawberries, cream, etc. They knew just how to make elders feel at home. Sr. McDougal stepped across the way, and got us the late papers, and we laid in a supply of "news."

It is hard to keep a "live elder" still, and so we thought to try for a place to occupy the two nights we were to stay there. Bro. Gowell tried the place for an appointment; the mayor said we could have the "street." That was something new to me; but I was there for business. Eight o'clock came, and we were found on the corner, in front of the mayor's office. We nerved up, and commenced to sing; they walked, ran, and gawked, and still we sang. Presently I gave Bro. Gowell the "nudge" and he stepped into the street, and commenced to tell the story. He was suffering with cold and I thought his voice sounded a little "tame," so I soon was by his side and suggested we sing another hymn. This was the same as saying "quit" to the brother; the hymn was sung and I took the job off from Bro. G.'s hands, at a great relief to himself, as he had urged me at first to speak. In a very few minutes a lady was walking up and down the sidewalk saying, "Amen!" "That's true!" I continued, and something I said caused the lady to stop the "amens," etc. But the people soon saw they were facing a cyclone that was not to be scared from the street by a few groans. I talked for forty minutes, my first experience in street preaching. Made an announcement for the next night.

During the day Bro. Gowell crayoned the sidewalks with, "Preaching on the street to-night." A crowd commenced to gather before the time; men, women, and children, all classes seemingly. We sang three hymns, and I took the street again and for fifty minutes held the interest of the audience. Sixty or more stood before me, and many behind me on the other walk, and in windows, etc. I just felt "splendid." This is written that others may take courage, and do likewise where you fail to make an opening in some other way. The gospel must be preached for a "witness." If the people will not come to you, go to them. Be courteous, and show yourself a "polished gentleman." If you will heed this, you will feel a piece of mind, that you will not feel when going to a town where you are closed out of the churches, and going away without letting your light shine. Try it brethren and prove my words for yourselves.

On the 11th we went six miles south to where the conference of the Northeastern Kansas District was to be held on the 13th and 14. We put up at William Brooks', and were cared for in good style. Mr. Brooks belongs to the Christian Church, but his wife is a staunch Latter Day Saint. Both are good and kind, and I trust sometime in the near future will see eye to eye. I spoke that night at their commodious schoolhouse, and Bro. Gowell the next night. The conference followed, with only fair attendance from the membership on account of the flood. Good attendance from outsiders at the preaching services. One was baptized by Bro. Thomas, our young missionary. There is a union Sunday-school at this place, some three or four denominations participating; no one of them seemingly having the ascendancy—"doctrine" being avoided for the sake of peace.

The preaching during the conference seemed to border upon a dividing line. "Doctrine," as we presented it, hit hard. But I am not responsible for what the Lord has said; though I may be, in a measure, for the way I say it. Well, I was informed that the Anti-Mormon League was to be notified of the situation. So the world moves. Elder H. I. Bryant, of the Christian Church, preached there some months ago, and said he wanted to debate with our people. He corresponded with me, and we agreed upon propositions; but later he wrote me they did not want a debate there, as the people could not care for those that would attend; so I dropped the matter; but now my visit, with the conference, and the other brethren, seems to have placed the people in a position to "care" for a debate, so I have renewed my correspondence with Elder Bryant, and a debate may be among the probabilities by and by. There is something to gain or lose there, and I will keep a jealous eye on it. May God direct in the matter. I found many good and kind-hearted people there. Unity in and for the truth is what they need. On Monday the 15th, Bro. Burns and I left for Atchison, where I preached that night to an interested congregation; and I felt the presence of God's Spirit in a large degree. Brn. Gowell and Thomas went to Vermillion for tent work; will be cared for by Bro. and Sr. Cox, who are alive in the faith.

Tuesday the 16th, I took train for home, anxious to see Kansas City, and to know more about the great flood. Train went slow, so I took it all in. When crossing the Kaw at the city, and while my head was protruding from the window, taking in the situation, bridges, cars, houses, sidewalks, etc., smashed and piled up like so much kindling-wood, besmeared with mud, slime, and filth, and a stench arising from it almost stifling me, the very spirit was given to me that men have when realizing the fulfillment of Christ's saying, "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."—Luke 21: 26. It was certainly a sad sight, and a discouraging feeling crept over me that would make the stoutest heart feel faint. Presently this spirit left me and the impression came to me very forcibly, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Thus my heart took cheer in the midst of sadness, sorrow, and pity, mingled with great sympathy, went out to all those who had met such disaster from the flood. The great damage done by the flood can only be realized by seeing it. Seemingly, "the half had not been told." On reaching my home, I found all well, and my son, Ammon, busily engaged telling the story of the gospel to the people in the suburbs of the flooded city, in a gospel tent. Brn. Hulmes, Parsons, Warnky, and some others all busy in the work of the church. I am assisting in tent work for a few days, while making my arrangements to go to Illinois to assist the brethren there till some time in August.

In gospel bonds,

I. N. WHITE.

KRISTIANSAND, Norway, June 8.

Editors Herald: I mentioned in my last letter in the HERALD that whenever I did write I hoped I would have good news. How thankful we should feel when we have made some progress; let it be ever so little, it proves that the Lord is at the helm, and is guiding the good old ship safely through the breakers and amid shoals, both seen and unseen. Skirmishes with Adventists, Baptists, Methodists, and others is the order of the day; but praise the Lord I am sailing boldly along, not changing course without orders from "the Captain." Our continued efforts begin to tell. I baptized three good men in this city, last month; men who have over a year been considering the cost, but are now "grounded in the faith," and boldly testify of the evidence received. There are others near the kingdom. Bro. Kronberg assisted nobly in declaring the word while present with us. His testimony and exhortation are powerful and instructive. Surely the Lord pointed out to Bro. Anderson the right man. Bro. Söiland in like manner. They are now opening up a new field, Tredstrand and vicinity, there being several hundred there who have separated from the state church and are studying baptism. Brn. Anderson and Muceus are pushing the work of the translation of the Book of Mormon, and preaching intermediately, so we are all about our Father's business; and yet we must say we are unprofitable servants.

Not being able to write to all my former associates, brethren, and Saints in America, I take this opportunity of stating Bro. Enge remembers you always with gratitude and brotherly love. Brn. Van Eaton, Holmes, Sheldon, Wells, Lindsey, Cole, Puckett, and Ward; Srs. Taylor, Holmes, Wells, Lindsey, Duncan and Van Eaton. Let us press eagerly forward, having our eyes fixed on the prize at the end of the race.

Your brother in the conflict,

N. C. ENGE.

PADUCAH, Kentucky, June 24.

Dear Herald: I have just read the letter to the isolated Saints in the HERALD of June 17 and thought that I might be one and concluded to make a start. I do what I can but it seems to be very little. I wish I could do more. I am alone here in the work. Our elders have never been in this part of Kentucky but some of the Utah elders were here some time ago. I have handed many papers to some of my neighbors to read, but some do not believe in it. I wish some of the elders would come here to preach. I have a nice place around my house to fix for outdoor preaching. If some of them will come, I will do the best I can to make them feel at home, and I believe some others will too. I would love for the people to hear them preach and tell the people where they stand. My six small children and I live here alone. We came here last fall and all the preaching we have is reading the papers. I am glad when they come. I love this great work. I want to go back so we can go to our meetings and Sunday-school. I try to live near my God and teach my children the right way.

I ask an interest in your prayers in our behalf. I live five miles west of Paducah, on the Hinkleville road.

Your sister,

BETTIE JOHNSON.

LET, Tennessee, June 15.

Editors Herald: As some would like to know how I came out with the woman preacher I referred to in my letter of May 26, I will write a few more lines. The interest was good throughout my meetings at Sequatchie College. The lady spoke four nights, using half of the time. Her last effort was to prove that C. L. was the son of perdition. She became angry and told the people she would not talk to me any more, as her Bible told her to reject all heretics. Some of the people came to me and said, "Elder Snow, we are not here for the fun of it, we are here to learn about the Bible, and we have about made up our minds that the sister can not teach us, but you can. We do not want you to lose half of the time by giving it to her." I told them I thought that night would satisfy her. But after missing two nights she came back again, but refused to take any part for two nights. But on Sunday after I had entertained the people for one hour she sprang to her feet and said she wanted to talk to the people. I told her I would take a vote, as some were not willing for her to speak. I called for a standing vote and no one rose, so I turned to the lady and said, "Now, sister, you see how you stand with this people; not even one wants to hear you." She spoke out and said, "That is no criterion to go by because they did not stand up." "Well," I said, "go on and talk if you want to; I will listen to you if no one else will."

So she began to tell the people not to be led astray by Elder Snow, for the Holy Ghost had revealed to her that he was a bad man and a false prophet and a son of perdition. He has come here with no authority only what he got from Joe Smith when he laid his hands on him, and who was old Joe Smith? Nothing but a thief. At this juncture the people rose up and walked out of the house and left me and her alone. Just before they all got out of the door I ask them to wait till I could give notice of baptism that evening and dismiss them. So I baptized one at three o'clock. Large crowd out, the lady preacher with the rest. She was there at night but kept silent, so I closed the effort at that place that night, having spoken fourteen times in all with excellent liberty. Left quite a number almost ready to come in with us.

Two weeks have passed and Bro. Smith and I came back to College and began meetings last Saturday night. I stayed there with W. R. till Tuesday morning then I came here some seven or eight miles north, leaving him to continue at College. I am to begin meetings here to-night. I learn the lady preacher has been here and warned the people not to go out to hear me. Am feeling well; had four Utah elders to hear me last night, but they were out and gone before I could speak to them. Somehow they are always in a hurry.

C. L. SNOW.

ADEL, Iowa, June 25.

Editors Herald: I am alive in the work and by the grace of God conduct one once in a while out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God. My health is good but I have been afflicted with deafness for many years and have been praying day and night to my heavenly Father to bless me with hearing, and have received many a testimony that he will bless me and that the time is not far off. For this I thank God.

I have no certain dwelling-place and pray to my heavenly Father day by day to soften the hearts of the Saints and friends. I stopped with a Methodist friend on my way to conference and he made me a present of a fine two-dollar hat. He is a good man and I hope he may yet be able to see the greater light. May God bless all such is my prayer.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints.

As ever, a lover of the truth,

N. STAMM.

LLANELLY, Wales, June 13.

Editors Herald: We shall return home July 3 on the Cedric, White Star line. My health has been poor for some months. I would like to have stopped till fall but under the circumstances it would not be advisable. Pleased to learn of visit of Brn. Joseph and Evans to the British Isles. They will receive a warm reception. We welcome Bro. E. B. Morgan and wife to Wales. They arrived June 5. We shall miss Brn. Davis and Pierce who go to England. Wife and Ruth are well.

WM. LEWIS.

SANTA CRUZ, California June 24.

Editors Herald: We arrived safely from Independence, Missouri after being on the road two days overtime, owing to wash-outs, and the flood at Kansas City. Our health has very much improved already. I found Brn. F. C. Smith and Jacob Smith with other Saints pleased to see us. We rented a hall. Last Sunday twenty-three were present. We hope to help the precious cause along.

Yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

BOND, Mississippi, June 21.

Editors Herald: I have been away from the church ever since 1893. I married out of the church. My husband is a Baptist. I expect to die in the truth. I want you all to pray for me that I may hold out faithful. I know that we have some Christians and I believe that three are stronger than one. Therefore, that is why I ask you to help me accomplish my desire, which is a godly one. So help me. I know it is hard at first, but God is in this plan. There is no Saints' church here. I see a good chance for one and if the Saints will help me to build the church, I will pay for the lot. I am speaking as though I had met you before. Though I have not met you here I hope to meet you in glory. I feel that a good work could be done here in this place. I am the only Saint here and I need strength. I believe the people here would follow if they only had a leader.

DORA BOOKER.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, June 26.

Editors Herald: We are here in the great city of Salt Lake still holding the fort in the gospel wagon. Bro. Chase has preached every night this week to very large and attentive congregations. Started Monday night with three to four hundred people and they have increased till last night we had five to six hundred very attentive listeners, and after two hours with them we drove off leaving a great number still discussing the subjects. We find many in sympathy with us here and when some of these abominable doctrines are being hit the hardest we hear all through the crowd "amen," "that's true," while others of course are not at all pleased. Bro. Kelley is here and a great help and may do some of the preaching. Bro. Swenson and Hansen are also here and helping in the good cause. A week's meetings were held in this way in Ogden, we think much good was done.

Hastily,

MRS. A. M. CHASE.

LOS ANGELES, California, June 20.

Editors Herald: Reflecting on our inefficiency as a pastor and our general short-comings we are yet thankful that in spite of these the branch has constantly progressed and to-day is in the best condition it has ever been. We have no serious cases of trouble and a general knowledge of the whereabouts and spiritual standing of practically every member. This attainment is largely the result of work and worry rather than of tact and skill. We take the present status as a good omen for the future and trust that in our release and the installation of a wiser and more efficient president that a marked and rapid growth will be apparent and the Saints as individuals and the church collectively will give evidence of the salutary change.

Bro. R. R. Dana has recently returned from his extended Eastern trip and is joyous and happy in the work. Bro. Nelson Van Fleet has been in poor health for some time but is now convalescent. Bro. A. Carmichael was the speaker here to-day, morning and evening; finance the theme. He stirred the Saints up and though very positive in the presentation of his positions it was clearly apparent that all the Saints do not see eye to eye along this line. He must come again.

Bro. W. E. Peak came in from the East yesterday, he goes on to San Bernardino this week. I expect to visit most of the district prior to the reunion. Am getting myself in position to enter the missionary field as soon as possible. Bro. J. C. Clapp was at Corona when last heard from. He is covering old ground and the joy of reunion seems mutual between him and the Saints.

Convention Minutes.

Northeastern Illinois.—Convened at Mission, Illinois, June 5, 1903, at 3 p. m., Bro. F. G. Pitt in the chair. Bro. R. A. Penney and Sr. Bessie Clark were chosen credential committee. Reports of district officers read. Treasurer's report was referred to an auditing committee composed of Brn. Jerome Wildermuth and James Page. Report of superintendent of the Dekalb Sunday-school read and adopted. R. A. Penney, of Chicago Sunday-school gave verbal report. Bro. F. G. Pitt offered his resignation as district superintendent. Resignation was accepted and Bro. F. M. Pitt was elected to fill his place. Five minutes speeches were made by Bro. F. G. Pitt, Bro. E. M. Wildermuth, Sr. Bessie Clark, Bro. James Page, Bro. R. A. Penney, and Sr. Suman. At 8 o'clock p. m. an entertainment was given.

Little Sioux.—Convened at Pisgah, Iowa, June 5, 1903, at 10 a. m., with Superintendent Sidney Pitt in charge, Annie Stuart secretary. The reports of schools show an enrollment of 619, one school having been organized since last convention. The district adopted plans for a circulating library, also the work of the "Cradie Roll." The schools were quite well represented and a good interest in the work was shown. Bro. J. M. Baker gave us encouraging words both in Sunday-school and Religio work. Adjourned to meet at Woodbine, Iowa, in October.

Northern Nebraska.—Met at Blair, Nebraska, May 30, 1903. The session was a lively one. We were favored with the company of Brn. T. A. Hougas and F. A. Smith. The advisability of having but one business session and two institutes during the year was considered, and arrangements made for an institute session next fall and such divisions at the business session next January.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Arizona, Greeting: Forasmuch as Bro. Luff has requested me to take the oversight of the work in your Territory and being desirous of accomplishing all the good I can, I wish to ask the cooperation of all Saints in the Territory and all others that feel an interest in the cause of truth. Will the Saints who read this write me and let me know what the prospects are for missionary work in your localities. It is a long way to travel to get to you but I am willing and ready to make the effort if you think it advisable. You will please take into consideration that I am not as active as I once was and can not climb hills and swim rivers as I used to, but I am still able to preach the word, and quite willing to do it.

My address is 1634 Grover Street, Los Angeles, California.
J. C. CLAPP.

To the Saints of the St. Louis, Missouri, District, Greeting: Having been appointed to labor with you this conference year, and having been placed in charge by Apostle I. N. White, I desire to come among you with cheer and good-will, and that we may work together harmoniously to advance the great work we all love so much.

It will be my policy to strive to encourage the people of God to the fullest extent of my ability while I may be with you; and to this end I specially invite the cooperation of all, and hope that all those holding priesthood throughout the district will seek to honor God by faithfully performing the duties devolving upon them in harmony with the instruction of the Lord to us to "Let every man learn his duty and to act in the office in which he is appointed," remembering that, "He that is slothful shall not be accounted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44.

I would therefore respectfully suggest that the local ministry exercise all their energies at every available opportunity to proclaim the angel's message among the people, making new openings and following them up wherever practicable to do so. The time is short, brethren, and much yet to be done; and the reward is to be given to those unto whom it can be said, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" Who among us shall hear that welcome plaudit? You have done well in the past, brethren, but we wish you to do better in the future, mounting higher and higher with each successive step until the victory shall be won that we may triumphantly wear the crown. Let all put their shoulders to the wheel, each one pushing, and by cautious, prayerful and persistent effort make this the banner year for the St. Louis District.

Will the ministry throughout the district, who have been, and are now doing missionary work, please be prompt in reporting to me on the first days of July, October, January, and March, that our report may be made to the general missionary in charge in good time.

I shall be glad to have the presidents of branches throughout the district correspond with me relative to the needs of the work in their vicinity, that attention and help may be given wherever practicable to do so.

That peace may characterize all our work, and the benedictions of God's love ever gladden the pathway of all the struggling, trusting children of God, is my prayer.

My permanent address is 1240 Glasgow Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri.
WILLARD J. SMITH.

permit in New Ontario; Elders Longhurst, Leverton, and Green, officers of the districts, will also labor as circumstances permit, presumably among the branches. Personally I expect to do more or less work in the new fields now opening up in Chatham District but will hold myself in readiness to answer the urgent calls that may come from other quarters. Wellington County has not been provided for; we shall expect those local stalwarts, Brn. Buschlin, Taylor, Cooper, and Tarzwell will do what they can in the regions round about. We shall look for reports the first days of July, October, January, and March. Let the work of the Religio Society continue, it is destined to become the backbone of the mission.

Now then let everybody work and be happy.

D. MACGREGOR.

Home address, Box 648, STRATFORD, Ontario.

To the Saints and Friends of Central California District, Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the field work in the above district by Elder Joseph Luff, missionary in charge, I earnestly solicit your hearty coöperation in presenting the gospel message to the people. We ask the ministry to do what you can and report to me on the first days of July, October, January, and March. If you need any help, let me know.

SANTA CRUZ, June 24.

J. C. FOSS.

To the Ministers and Saints of the Southern Indiana District, Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the above-named district I desire the hearty coöperation of all. In order that the work may be carried on more successfully, and that the missionaries may feel the responsibility of looking after the work in different parts of the district, I have placed Brn. M. R. Scott, Jr., and J. J. Boswell, in that part lying north and east of Jefferson County, including Jefferson County. This is not to interfere with Bro. Boswell looking after the finance. Brn. P. A. Flinn and Charles E. Harp, Orange, Duboise, Washington, Crawford, and Perry Counties. M. R. Scott, Sr., south of the Air Line Railroad, and W. C. Marshall in Jefferson, Ripley, and Johnson Counties when not with the missionary in charge. Looking over the district I see the necessity of pushing out into new fields, and thus fulfill the law that saith, "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." All those that desire preaching, or know of any opening, write me and we will see that your wants are supplied. Let the Saints that are scattered do all that they can to effect an opening, remembering the law, "He that is warned let him warn his neighbor." Let each one see that he does his duty. There is no time for idleness in the kingdom of God. "Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer." To the missionaries: Let us see to it that we put in full time, remembering that we are working for the Lord. "And now I speak of the residue who are to come unto this land. Behold, they have been sent to preach my gospel among the congregations of the wicked; wherefore, I give unto them a commandment thus: Thou shalt not idle away thy time; neither shalt thou bury thy talent that it may not be known." Let us remember that each one will have to stand before God and answer for his stewardship. Bro. J. J. Boswell, Wirt, Indiana, R. F. D., is the Bishop's agent. Send him your tithes and offerings, that the elders' families may be supplied and that the elders may be free to go and carry the bread of life to the world. Bro. James P. Sappenfield, Byrneville, Indiana, is the district president. Any matter arising in the branches that needs his attention write to him. I will be through the different parts of the district as soon as I can. My home address is Plainville, Indiana, Box 52. Your colaborer in the Master's vineyard, GEORGE JENKINS.

Sixth Quorum of Priests.

Will the members of the Sixth Quorum of Priests please take notice that a quorum meeting will be held at the mission conference which convenes at Leeds on August 1. Will every member who has not already done so report change of address at once, as several letters have been returned to me by postal authorities. Any member who has been ordained to a higher office will please forward particulars and date of ordination. Yours in hope, T. J. Elliott, 23 Royle Street, Seedley, Manchester, England.

Seventh Quorum of Elders.

Please take notice that a meeting of our quorum will be held during the forthcoming mission conference, to be held at Leeds, August 1-3. Will each member strive his utmost to be present, as matters unusually important are pending for our consideration. Henry Greenwood, president; Samuel Fred'k Mather, secretary.

Release of Missionary.

To whom it may concern: This is to show that Elder William Lewis, appointed to labor in Wales, is hereby (at his request) released, because of ill health and is at liberty to return home at his convenience.

Reunion Notices.

Parties coming to Southern California reunion can secure cots, tents, mattresses, etc., by making arrangement with Sr. Maggie Pankey, Santa Ana, California, in advance. Parties coming had better bring a good supply of bedding, dishes, cooking utensils, etc. Arrangements will be made for supplying all with suitable place to do cooking. Reunion convenes July 17 to 27. Nearest depot Southern Pacific, Santa Fe one mile away. Will meet all trains when notified. Get off at Orange. Notify Sr. Maggie Pankey, Santa Ana, California, when and on what railroad you will arrive. By order of committee.

Notices.

I desire the names and addresses of Saints residing in the upper peninsula of Michigan. I am within one hour's ride of Sault Ste Marie, and can conveniently reach other points, and desire these names to assist in promulgating the gospel. I hope persons able to impart information in this regard will please do so at once, or quite as early as convenience will allow. My address is Fibre, Chippewa County, Michigan. Respectfully,
E. A. Goodwin.

Contributions to Graceland College Museum.

Bro. F. A. Henderson of Pipestone, Minnesota, furnished the fine specimens of red clay pipestone for the Graceland College Museum, brought by Bro. O. H. Midgorden. This is correction of former notice.

Died.

BELL.—At Windsor, California, June 3, 1903, H. Bell, aged 79 years, 5 months, and 3 days; was baptized May 8, 1872, by Elder Glaud Rodger. His testimony of the Book of Mormon and the truth of the latter-day work was published in HERALD of March 15, 1875. This testimony was read at the grave, where about seventy-five friends assembled to pay their last respects to a man whom they highly respected. A sermon was delivered of forty-five minutes duration, expressive of the hope of the Saints, by C. A. Parkin.

WHITEAKER.—Elder Samuel H. Whiteaker died at the home of his daughter, Sr. Laura Brunson, near Ashton, Illinois, June 8, at the age of 84 years, 6 months, 16 days. Married Catherine Marquint, who preceded him three years, August 15, 1841. Eleven children were born to them, all of whom survive them. One firm in the latter-day work, a good, true friend and brother, has gone home to his "Father's house." Funeral sermon by Rev. A. Simpson, of the Congregational Church.

BARRETT.—At Lamoni, Iowa, June 17, 1903, of heart disease, Sr. Anna M., wife of Bro. George Barrett, aged 66 years, 8 months, and 3 days. They were married in 1855. Their only child, a son, lives in Texas. Bro. Barrett, being a civil engineer, has been in railway service in Virginia, West Virginia, and Arkansas. Came to Lamoni in 1894, and finding the truth were baptized by Bro. Henry C. Smith in 1895 or 1896. She was a devoted wife and glad of the gospel to the end. Funeral service on Sunday, June 21, sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bro. E. L. Kelley.

BOOTMAN.—Maud Alice, wife of Bro. William Bootman, died June 1 and was buried at West Plains June 3. Sr. Maud was a kind and noble Latter Day Saint. They had been married a little over two years and a fine son was born to them eleven weeks ago, which will be kindly cared for by its uncle and aunt, Bro. and Sr. Charles Bootman of Springfield, Missouri. Funeral in charge of Bro. Henry Sparling.

AN ILLUSTRATED HEBREW-CHRISTIAN QUARTERLY treating of the old and historic people of Israel, of their native land, Palestine, and of the Book, the Bible, and Jewish traditions and literature.
Published Quarterly by "WATCHWORD AND TRUTH" for D. A. M.
4 Schapiro, 245-247 East 3rd Street, New York, N. Y.

THIS subject is ably and interestingly treated in the Illustrated Hebrew-Christian Quarterly called

THE PEOPLE, THE LAND AND THE BOOK.

The current number contains articles on "The Law and the Gospel;" "Christian Indebtedness to the Jews;" "Zionism and its Relation to Prophecy;" "Judaism and Christianity on the Threshold of Eternity;" "Difficulties of Scripture;" "Selections from the Talmud;" "The Ground of Jewish Opposition to Christ;" "Eastern Problems and the Jews;" "Palestine and her Jewish Colonies," with illustrations taken on the spot, verifying the words of Amos: "They shall plant vineyards and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens and eat the fruit of them, said the Lord thy God," and many other important articles of great interest to students of prophecy by Hebrew and Christian Scholars.

The People, the Land, and the Book

keeps its readers well informed concerning the Zionist movement, in articles gathered from original sources. To readers of THE SAINTS' HERALD the subscription will be $1.00 with a miniature of the HOLY SCROLLS used by the Jews in the time of Christ, and now read from in the synagogue every Sabbath Day. This SCROLL will be of great help and interest to all Sunday-school workers. The magazine has been very highly commended by religious and secular periodicals such as:

The Christian Advocate, The Churchman, Christian Herald, Religious Telescope, Sunday School Journal, Journal and Messenger, Christian Work, Union Gospel News, Silver Cross, Brooklyn Eagle, Brooklyn Times, and more than a hundred others.

RESURRECTION PLANT

Spoken of in the Bible as

THE ROSE OF JERICHO.

These rare and curious plants grow and stay green by placing them in water or light drained soil. When taken out of water they dry and curl up and go to sleep. It will keep in this state for years and reawaken directly on being put in water. It is an interesting and pretty house plant, and grows in winter, if not allowed to freeze. To grow it, simply place the whole plant in water; it will open up and start to grow in twenty minutes. After that just keep the roots in water, and change water about twice a week, to keep water from becoming rancid. Send for one. You will be pleased with it. Mailed to any address in the United States on receipt of twenty-five cents. Agents wanted. I also handle toy balloons, whistling balloons, return balls, confetti, canes, and all kinds of picnic and carnival goods.

Young Men, if you want to make some easy money you can do so by selling these goods. Send for my Picnic Catalogue. 25-3t

PRESIDENT SMITH IN ENGLAND.

By cablegram which was sent by way of London, Ontario, from London, England, on June 25, news reached Lamoni that Brn. Smith and Evans had crossed the ocean safely. On July 6 letters from President Smith reached Lamoni bearing date of June 24, written on board the New York, about twelve hours before they expected to land. The following letter from him will be read with interest by those who are anxiously waiting for news from the travelers:

On Board the United States Mail Steamer New York, Wednesday, June 24, 1903.

We left New York, in company of Brn. R. C. Evans and William Newton, June 17. We have had up to date, a very pleasant trip. Bro. Evans was quite seasick until Saturday, since when he has been well and enjoying the journey. Bro. Newton and myself have been free from sickness. It is like sitting in the parlor or on the porch at home, it has been so smooth the most of the time. The first three days were cloudy. We had service on Sunday forenoon at half past ten.

The captain is F. M. Passow; purser, Thomas Kinsey; surgeon, L. F. Psotta. This vessel is three hundred sixty feet long, sixty-three feet wide, forty-two feet deep; registered tonnage ten thousand four hundred thirty-three. She is built of steel, and is well appointed for ocean travel.

By posted information we learned that there were two hundred twenty-eight staterooms, nine hundred ninety-five berths; and may carry one thousand one hundred forty-two passengers. Officers: One master, six mates, thirty engineers, fifty-seven firemen, two hundred twenty-five deck crew, twenty-one oilers, sixty coal passers, and one hundred thirty stewards.

Everything on board is clean, orderly, and quiet. Nothing of a boisterous nature is allowed, except the waves and the beat of the ship's life, the steam and the rush of the propeller. Lying in one's berth one feels the throb, throb, and can very easily fancy that the huge steel structure is alive and that the beat one hears and feels is the pulsation of its life forces like the beat of the human heart.

Excellent attention is given to every one on board and those unfortunate enough to be sick are very

The Chicago Tribune for July 6 contained a list of fifty-two dead and thirty-six hundred sixty-five injured as the harvest of the celebration of the Fourth of July, and the list was incomplete. The number grows every year. Surely there is a more joyful and patriotic manner of celebrating our national natal day than the use of deadly explosives.

kindly looked after by sympathizing attendants who by training and duty are ready and willing to alleviate distress—but Bro. Evans seems to think that there is no use for remedies. It is said there is neither prevention nor cure for mal de mer. Not knowing we do not say.

Tuesday evening there was a concert in the second cabin, the object being to aid the Sailors' Fund, for the use of sick and disabled seamen of both England and America. The roles were from volunteers, and there was good singing and recitation and music. The chairman, Mr. Gibson from Georgia, delivered an address on the Southern Race Problem. It was a characteristic exhibition of Southern sentiment against the poor "niggers." We were sorry to hear it.

It is now the eighth day "on the deep, deep sea," and it is growing monotonous. We do not expect to reach Southampton till in the night. We hope to meet Bro. Rushton there.

CENTENARIAN LATTER DAY SAINT.

The clipping below from a Welsh paper telling of one of our aged sisters comes to us with the following comment by Elder William Lewis:

"The inclosed clipping is in the main correct, only the sister is one hundred two, not one hundred four. I called to see her on her birthday, March 25, 1903. I had the honor of eating with her. She enjoys her cup of tea, sugar, and cream. This was her breakfast, ten in the morning; she took the third cup of tea, two pieces of bread and butter, and a small piece of boiled ham. She is very bright; talks like a person of fifty. Her memory is good. Remembers well her childhood days and up to the past two years. The present she forgets. I called on her one year ago, but she does not remember it. She remembers well my parents whom she saw forty-seven years ago. I notice she is not so active as one year ago and I doubt if she sees another birthday. She gets up every day and stays in her room; has not been outdoors this last year. She would reach and pour out her tea with a steady hand. Was very glad to hear of the progress the church was making. She requested me to pray with her and wishes the Saints would come and hold a meeting, which we will do ere long. I enjoyed my visit of two hours with her. She is a Saint of good record. May peace be with her to the end."

A WELSH CENTENARIAN.

At Pontrhydyfen there resides a widow named Mrs. Thomas, who, it is believed, has reached the age of one hundred four years. The old lady has only within the last few years lived at her present abode with her son, Jacob Thomas, having for several years resided at Skewen. Mrs. Thomas is a native of Pentregwelnais, adjacent to Llandebie and Llandilo. In her early years she was a weaver, and then met her first husband,—David Morgan, by whom she had several children, Morgan dying, she then married Jacob

Thomas, with whom she celebrated her golden wedding, they having lived together for over sixty years. On being asked her age she replied in the vernacular one hundred two years. Asked if any of her family had attained any great age, she answered again in Welsh that she remembered when she was four years of age that her great-grandmother called at her mother's house when she was one hundred years of age. Mrs. Thomas has a daughter living in America over eighty years of age. She remembers distinctly the battle of Waterloo, as her three uncles fought in the battle and, fortunately, all three returned upon peace being declared. Upon being questioned as to which husband she had been most happy with, the old lady's face lit up with smiles, and she said that they had both been good husbands and that she had been most fortunate. She had married the first husband when twenty-one years of age, and they lived on a small farm, for which they only paid £5 per annum. She did not know any English, and thought it was rather late to commence learning. She could not attribute anything in her past living to account for her old age, as she had had to work very hard during her lifetime, and, her husbands earning small wages, she had to live economically; but, feelingly, she said that she could ascribe everything to God. She had not had a days serious illness until she was over seventy years of age.

Mrs. Thomas' intellect is quite sharp, and her answers were given most intelligently; she wears no glasses, and easily recognizes those residing with her. She is loud in her praise of the extreme kindnesses received at the hands of Mrs. and Miss Thomas, her daughter-in-law and her granddaughter. Some relatives of Mrs. Thomas are strongly of the opinion that the old lady is in her one hundred fifth year. She celebrates her birthday on March 25.

"POLYGAMY NOT FUNDAMENTAL TO 'MORMONISM.'"

The League for Social Service, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City, has issued a number of tracts against "Mormonism." In one entitled "Political Aspects of Mormonism," by Reverend Josiah Strong, D. D., is the following language, found on pages four and five:

It is strange that the anachronism of nineteenth century polygamy—the remaining "twin relic of barbarism"—should have appeared among the most progressive people in the world; strange that a conception of marriage which originated in the twilight of the race and which for many centuries has survived only in the darkness of heathenism should now flourish in the noonday of Christian truth; strange that an institution characteristic of the Far East should be established in the New West, that a poisonous Asiatic plant should strike its roots in American soil; strange that the people who have the highest ideal of womanhood should be the ones to reduce the wife to a fraction of a woman.

It was the practice of polygamy more than anything else which fixed public attention on the Mormons and placed them under ban. It was polygamy against which Congress legislated. It was polygamy which for many years barred Utah out of the Union, until this crime against womanhood was outlawed by the proposed State constitution and the most solemn pledges were given that it should be for ever abandoned. But it is not polygamy which makes Mormonism a political menace. The doctrine of polygamy dovetails into the Mormon system perfectly, but is by no means fundamental to it. One branch of the Mormon church—the Josephites—would discipline a member for practicing it.

There is another doctrine far more radical, the root, of which polygamy is the fruit, viz., the divine authority of the priesthood.

WAS HE THE ARCHANGEL?

The following paragraph is going the rounds of the press in a letter of John Mac Reynolds to the Kansas City Star relating several reminiscences of the last visit in Kansas City of Father De Smet, the famous Jesuit missionary of the plains:

From my recollection of what Father De Smet said to me at that time about the Mormon immigration to Salt Lake Valley in Utah, Father Dalton's statement was true that Father De Smet had met Brigham Young on the banks of the Missouri River and advised him to go to Utah with his followers, where they would be undisturbed by the tread of emigration for many years to come, and that Father De Smet furnished the Mormon prophet with a vivid description of the beautiful and fertile valley of Salt Lake and also a map and chart of the route across the plains to that promised land, and Father De Smet must have been the archangel whom the Mormons generally credit with appearing unto Brigham Young and directing his course across the western wilderness into a hitherto almost unknown part of the country. That Brigham had no definite knowledge of just where he would settle with his colony, is a well-known fact, and that after meeting with Father De Smet he determined to seek the land described to him by the Jesuit priest, and kept the matter a secret unto himself until he had discovered the exact location presented on the map furnished him. Many of Brigham's followers became suspicious of their destination and, tired out with hardships, were about to revolt just as they emerged from the mountain pass and saw the beautiful fertile plain spread out before them.

"ROMAN CAMPBELLISM."

The following is clipped from the Herald and Presbyterian for January 7, 1903. It will be read with interest by many of our readers.

The Christian Standard devotes nearly four pages to an address on "How to make practical the theory of Christian Union." Its claim is that Campbellists are not a denomination, but simply Christians, and that the proper thing is for everybody else to join them. This is exactly the position of the Roman Catholic Church. The Standard likens its brotherhood to one division of an army; all the other divisions have abandoned their positions.

"What shall be done? Shall the ten thousand who stand like a stone wall in the position where their leader placed them, change? Or, shall the ninety thousand be brought back and rallied round this heroic band? To ask such a question is to answer it. Let those who have wandered away, return, and the army will again be united and victory made sure."

So the Roman Catholic Church has been saying for generations. It is The Church. All the rest are heretics. Campbellists can no more change or admit they are a sect, or give up their doctrine of immersion, than Romanists can give up the Pope. The Standard puts it in this wise:

"But if we have truly returned to primitive Christianity, we are not a denomination any more than sprinkling is baptism, and we can neither disband nor change our cry without disloyalty to God and his word. A thousand Christians adopt sectarian principles, and thus become a denomination. But when one of them breaks away from these false principles and returns to the teaching of the New Testament, he is simply a Christian."

If there is any one doctrine which deserves the name of a sectarian principle, it is the Campbellist doctrine of immersion. If there is any one claim which militates against Christian unity to-day, next to the claim of the Pope to be the representative of Christ, it is the claim of Campbellists that they are Christians and that all others are schismatics or sectarians.

Christian unity actually prevails among most denominations of Christians. They work together, pray for each other, and rejoice in each other's success. Only the Campbellist and the Roman Catholics claim infallibility, and each unchurch the other and all the rest of Christendom. Matters are not getting better, but rather worse. True, there is fraternity and cooperation in places. Ministers of various churches unite in services with Campbellists, and things seem harmonious, but at once the peace is disturbed by such utterances as this in the Standard, which, by the way, is less harsh and more tolerant than other papers of the denomination. Christian people need to know that Campbellist pleas for Christian unity mean nothing more than an invitation to accept their doctrines and join their church.

GRACELAND CATALOGUES.

The new catalogues of Graceland College have been issued, and those interested may secure copies by addressing I. W. Allender, secretary of the Board of Trustees, Lamoni, Iowa.

Copies have been mailed to many of the branch presidents, and it is hoped that they will see to it that these copies are placed in the hands of young persons contemplating attending college. We trust the Saints will make a vigorous effort this school year to support the efforts of the Board to make Graceland a place where our young people can secure a good collegiate education. Parents contemplating sending children to college should feel that it is a duty to support Graceland by patronage.

Let us have a good attendance of young and energetic Latter Day Saints. Let us support Graceland College in every way, remembering that it is our school.

UTAH ELDERS AT KIRTLAND.

The Deseret Evening News for June 27 contained the following in a letter of Elder Samuel E. Hill, Jr., from Cleveland, Ohio:

Professor Mills, accompanied by Elder Walker, took a trip out to Kirtland. While there, he had the privilege of addressing the members of the Reorganized Church who were holding services in the Temple. He expressed great pleasure in having the privilege of visiting and speaking in a place so renowned in church history. . . .

On Monday a party of elders, Saints, and friends to the number of twenty-three, including Elder Ben E. Rich, took a trip out to Kirtland, where we had been granted the privilege of holding a meeting in the Temple, through the kindness and courtesy of the Reorganized Church, who are now in possession of it.

Elder Rich presided at the meeting. Elder John Walker being the first speaker, took up the subject of the "Apostasy and Restoration." Elder Rich then occupied the remainder of the time, speaking upon the "Divine Mission of Joseph Smith," bearing a faithful testimony to this, and also to the divinity of the Book of Mormon. He reiterated the statements of the three witnesses to the book showing how faithful they were to their testimonies which are contained in that book.

Many members of the Reorganized Church who reside in and around Kirtland were present at this meeting, among them being Apostle Greene.

This is the first time that our elders have had the privilege of holding meeting in that holy house, since it has been in the possession of the Reorganized Church. Therefore the favor granted us was indeed greatly appreciated by all who were able to attend.

After the dismissal of the meeting all those present were granted the privilege of inspecting the several different rooms in the Temple. Apostle Greene and Elder Devore explained the use of each as much as they understood them.

The Temple was struck by lightning a few days ago, the bell-fry being damaged to a small extent, while several small holes were made in the roof.

Kirtland is indeed a most beautiful spot, built as it is upon a hill, and surrounded by other hills, all clad in a luxuriant coat of green. The Temple standing facing the east, overlooking Chagrin River, presents a picture to the eye that will long remain with those who have the pleasure of viewing it. How great must have been the faith of a people in the one whom God had placed to lead them, to leave so beautiful a place to travel to the distant and then comparatively unknown West.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard writes from Clitherall, Minnesota, June 28: "We start to Bottineau, North Dakota, to-night to attend reunion there next week. Six baptized at the reunion here so far. We close here to-night. Preaching good, testimony-meetings spiritual, and feeling among the people excellent."

Elder H. O. Smith wrote from San Antonio, Texas, June 27: "Bro. Macrae and I have just returned from the 'mountains.' We had a nice trip and good audiences and liberty in presenting the word. I go from here to Seiling, Oklahoma, Monday the 29th."

Bro. A. M. Chase makes the following report of the work in Salt Lake City in a letter of July 2: "Well, we are at work on the street here preaching every night on Second Street, near Main, to crowds of not less than five hundred. And such interest. Every night we have to simply bid the crowd good-night and leave them, and last night our service lasted from eight to eleven o'clock. Brn. W. H. Kelley and Swen Swenson are with us and we are happy. Wife and children assist us in singing. Altogether we think prospects are brightening here."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Utah church is advertising that a Samoan Book of Mormon has just been issued from the press.

Mirza Ghulam Ahmad, of Qadian, Punjab, India, a self-styled messiah, has challenged Dowie to a prayer-duel, to settle the question as to which one is right in his claims. Mirza says: "I am the very messiah, the promised one, for whom he [Dowie] is so anxiously waiting. Between Doctor Dowie's position and mine the difference is this, that Dowie fixes the appearance of the messiah within the next twenty-five years, while I give him the glad tidings that the messiah has already appeared. I am that messiah, I will pray him to death, to settle the question." We have not heard that Dowie has accepted the unique challenge.

Bro. George H. Graves wrote from Fulton, Kentucky, June 30. He appears to be meeting with good success. He sends us clippings from the Fulton Daily Leader and the Fulton Commercial in which his work is spoken of.

The Wheeling Telegraph devoted a column on the first page of its issue for June 22, to a sketch of Bro. Myron Thomas of that city, whom it describes as having been the youngest minister in the world at the time of his ordination, March 2, 1901. He is not yet seventeen years of age and is still a pupil at the Benwood high school, but will spend the summer with a party of field missionaries in Pennsylvania.

Elder J. W. Rushton recently sent us a clipping from the Rhonnda (Wales) Leader which reports the meetings held there by Elders William Lewis, John Davis, and J. W. Rushton. It speaks highly of the sermons delivered and states that for the purpose of explaining to the public that assertions made by the Reverend Mr. Lamb, a Baptist minister, are entirely unfounded, the church has decided that Elder John Davis shall meet him in public discussion on general church propositions and propositions regarding Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon.

The committee on Primary Quarterly appointed by the last conference is now meeting in Lamoni and looking after its work. The committee consists of Srs. V. Blair and Maggie Blair, Kansas City, Sr. Eva Bailey, Independence, and Srs. Ruth Smith and Anna Salyards, Lamoni.

As an item of interest to Book of Mormon students, the following short passage is quoted from the press news of Pope Leo's condition, in the dispatches for July 6: "In the portion of the loggia of Rapheal, adjoining the papal apartments, were the families of Count Riccardo Pecci and Count Moroni, the Pope's nephews." So it appears that some of the names in the Book of Mormon are not so "uncommon" after all.

The Saints of Lamoni enjoyed a sermon by Elder D. C. White last Sunday morning, and one by Elder J. D. White in the evening. It was indeed "White day."

Bishop E. L. Kelley addressed the people of Stewartsville, Missouri, on the Fourth, remaining also for services on Sunday.

We have received from Bro. Burton, Papeete, Tahiti, specimen pages of the first form of the Doctrine and Covenants which is being printed in the Tahitian language. The pages are about the size of our edition of the same book, and present quite a neat appearance. Bro. Burton is working against odds, however, and will deserve much credit for issuing the book under present difficulties.

Lamoni did not celebrate the Fourth, but the Star of Bethlehem Sunday-school made a big day of it and celebrated with a picnic in the church park. The games, races, program, etc., made it a very enjoyable celebration.

A PUZZLE.

The following are extracts from two resolutions which the Presbyterian Church is circulating among congregations of various denominations, asking that they be affirmed:

Resolved that we earnestly petition the Fifty-eighth Congress to submit an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to the legislatures of the several States, defining marriage to be monogamic and making polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, under whatever guise or pretense, a crime against the United States, punishable by severe penalties.

Resolved that we earnestly request the United States Senate to investigate the charges against Apostle Reed Smoot, of the Mormon church. If it be found that he is a polygamist, we ask that he be expelled from the Senate on account of unlawful practices.

While the following is an extract from the Fergus, Canada, News-Record, March 16, 1899:

PITTSBURG, Pennsylvania, May 27.—The last day's session of the Presbyterian General Assembly opened this morning with a crowded docket. An overture from the synod of India, asking for a reply to the memorial on the subject of baptizing polygamous converts was considered. The Mohammedan was admitted to the church and he was allowed to retain both wives and house. . . . Doctor Morrison representing the synod trial cases and special legislation, held that the recognition of polygamous marriage by the church in India was an absolute necessity; "any other rule," said he, "would rule David out of the church."

Consistency is said to be a jewel. The puzzle is to locate the jewel in the above.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THAT "OTHERWISE."

An effort has been and is being made, by professed believers in the gospel restored, to drag the pure and plain teachings of the Book of Mormon down to a level with that "doctrine of devils," the plurality of wives. Their efforts, however, are but a mean compliment to the understanding of intelligent people who are interested at all. But alas, there are too many who are ready to seize anything which might be used in their hopeless warfare against the progress of the cutting truth that God can only recognize one church as his when they severally fail to harmonize. This class, instead of rejoicing that they are blessed with the sound of the truth, and accepting the whole gospel with its ancient power and clearness, are too apt to be moved with jealousy and hatred, thinking their "craft in danger," and will "cry out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians." With this class, anything, regardless of its source, which may tend to besmirch the pure teachings of the Book of Mormon, is swallowed with great relish. And in the language of one writer against these terribly deluded "Mormons," such things are received with much enjoyment. But without fear of successful controversy we are free to make the statement that the Book of Mormon has no superior for the strength, simplicity, and uncompromising character of its statements in denouncing polygamy. And yet in the face of this indisputable fact, those who would excuse themselves for their wicked, lustful inclinations, have tried to wrest these same scriptures to make them fit their unholy cause.

And for this purpose, attack is made on the following from Book of Mormon, page 116, small edition: "For behold, thus saith the Lord, This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the Scriptures: for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: for I, the Lord God delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me; thus saith the Lord of hosts. Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of hosts, or cursed be the land for their sakes. For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things."

How any reasonable person can construe the above and what follows it to permit a thing which is an "abomination" before the Lord is a mystery. Yet not so much of a mystery when we realize how hard the enemy of all righteousness is striving to connect criminal teachings with the cause which he has a just reason to fear.

The last two sentences in the quotation just cited, is the meager hook on which is hung the claim of the privilege of practicing polygamy, if the Lord commands so to do, "otherwise," if he does not command to practice it, "they shall hearken unto these things," that is to these statements that it is an abomination. Oh, how weak! How apparent the cunning, deceptive work of the evil one, putting "evil for good and good for evil." "Hearken to the word of the Lord: for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none." Here we have a positive command. And he tells them that they shall keep his commands or the land shall be cursed for their sake. Now can we believe that the Lord would change his mind about the matter, and give another command to violate the former, and thus establish that which is so abominable?

Hardly. The God we desire to serve is unchangeable.

"For, if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people." This is equivalent to saying, "I have a right to command my people," or "I excuse not myself for having commanded them," as in Doctrine and Covenants, section 2, paragraph 8. He has now commanded them how to raise up a righteous seed unto him, and it is the same and only rule for the marriage relation that the Lord has ever given or ever sanctioned. And he says through his servant Jacob, that if he will raise up seed unto himself, that he wills to command his people: "otherwise," if he had not commanded them or did not, "they shall," or they will, "hearken unto these things." This last clause is a prophetic prediction of what the people would do if they were not commanded; that they would hearken to things concerning David and Solomon. It should not be construed to be a command to follow David and Solomon. The word shall, instead of will, in the prediction conveys the same meaning and makes the prophecy more forcible. The Lord knew they would, and so he says they "shall hearken," etc., if not commanded.

We see that many are determined to excuse themselves, because of David and Solomon, and hearken unto those things, notwithstanding positive commands to the contrary. And those who try to find, and push through a loophole in this God-given message, to justify their misdeeds, will eventually learn that "God is not mocked and whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Brethren, let us rejoice in the fact that when we are called upon to make a defense against such attacks, before the world, we stand upon the solid rock of eternal truth, and if we are faithful our works will not be burned at the last day.

JAMES YATES.

AUTOBIOGRAPHIC SKETCH AND INCIDENTS IN THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE REORGANIZATION.—No. 29.

April 6, 1860. Ever a memorable day in the cycle of days when God commands a work to be done! We accompanied Joseph and his mother to the conference. He is cheerful and easy in his manner, unassuming without the least expression of affectation; reserved and yet not distant in his way; he greeted us, "Good morning," as he and his mother took seats in the carriage. On the way to the hall he asked me the following question: "What do you think in relation to new revelations?" I replied, "We believe the general law of God is given to the church as recorded in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, but as has been in the ages past, so it will be in the future, as circumstances and new events or obstacles demand there will be new revelations from God, but always in harmony with what has been given, and never conflicting with the law of God already given." He then said, "I wish the conference to organize and conduct its business this forenoon just the same as if I were not there." As I led the way into the hall I gave them seats and then informed Elder Z. H. Gurley of Joseph's request and conference organized in the usual manner by choosing Elder Gurley president, and Elder William Marks assistant, Elders Andrew G. Jackson and Isaac Sheen clerks.

After invocation by one of the elders President Gurley in an eloquent and impassionate address took a retrospective view of the great latter-day work, congratulating the Saints for their union and courage in their work of love and sacrifice the last year, in the building up of the church, which was reorganized April 6, 1830, by command of God, soon came under condemnation, but continued until the ministers were established in quorums; the Choice Seer and Prophet was taken from them and finally they were rejected as an organization in 1844 and scattered as sheep without a shepherd, the rebellious driven out of the land of Zion to the great American desert graphically described by the Prophet Jeremiah as the salt land (Jeremiah 17: 6, 7), while the pure in heart have been watching and waiting for a reorganization of the church, which was effected in the year 1853 at a General Conference by choosing a majority of the Quorum of the Twelve by command of God, in order to again have divinely appointed general traveling presiding officers "to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations" (section 104: 12). Still we wait for further direction from the divine Master, who is "Christ, the head of the body which is his church." With loving exhortation as few men can make to the Saints he closed with a hearty amen.

He called on Elder Samuel Powers of the Twelve, who addressed the Saints upon the general principles of the gospel of Christ, its unchangeableness and entity must be received to have the promise of the celestial glory, and in a clear, logical manner established the fact that its elements are eternal in all its provisions, and the power of God unto salvation. He has such a breadth of thought, and is such a sacred historian and biblical scholar it is an intellectual feast to hear his oratory while he preaches Jesus Christ and him crucified, and a Savior risen from the dead.

I followed upon the same subject, that this wonderful story of the cross was restored by the angel, after the former-day apostasy as recorded in Revelation 14: 6, 7, in the year 1830, and a host of Saints had been gathered around the standard of Prince Immanuel, and for fourteen years the church of Christ had been built up in every land, and on the isles of the sea. We saw no obstacles in the way to hinder its mighty strides from conquering every foe, and becoming the triumphant church in a very few years. But instead thereof it was foreseen by the inspired prophets that after the church should be restored in the latter-days there would be another apostasy, "And many should follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth should be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you."—2 Peter 2: 2, 3. But thank God another prophet says, "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him" (Isaiah 59: 19), hence the Reorganization has been raised up in fulfillment of prophecy.

The Saints are in best of spirits and hope, and at the adjournment Bro. Joseph and his mother were introduced to many of the Saints.

At half past one conference convened and after singing Elder Archibald Wilsey offered invocation and President Gurley made a few remarks and invited those who wished to unite with the church. Brn. Horace Bartlett, Frederick Squires, and Joseph Robinson arose to their feet and expressed their faith in Christ and desired to unite with the Reorganization and were received by unanimous vote. Bro. Joseph Smith then came forth and was introduced by the president in the following words, "I am pleased to introduce to you, my brethren, Joseph Smith, the son of the Choice Seer." He then made an address after which a motion was made that he be received and chosen to the office of president of the high priesthood. A unanimous vote was had and he was ordained under the hands of Elders Z. H. Gurley, Samuel Powers, W. W. Blair, of the Twelve, and William Marks and George Morey of the high priests. The quiet, peaceful spirit of God brooded over the entire audience when the solemn ordination took place and the Saints were happy and comforted in the faith. I could realize that as his father had been ordained at Amherst, Ohio, on the 25th of January, 1832, to the office of president of the high priesthood, so now the son Joseph had been ordained at Amboy, Illinois, on the 6th of April, 1860, in harmony with the precedent in his father's case, and the law of God, which says, "Every president of the high priesthood (or presiding elder), is to be ordained by the direction of a high council, or general conference."

As I reflect upon it now it is indeed strange that all of the impostors who have risen up to lead different factions of the church since the martyrdom of Joseph, have overlooked this one sacred ordinance established by the law of God. It shows how blind they were, and the midnight blindness of their followers, who were deceived by them. The people in Utah ought to see that when their president assumes the office of the presidency without revelation or ordination to the office, he is violating the express command of God which says, "Exalt not yourselves" (section 105: 6), and this revelation was addressed to the Quorum of Twelve from which the members exalt one of their number to the presidency, thus ignoring the law of God entirely in that matter, as well as the revelation which says, "The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation."—Section 99: 6.

The minutes are here given as published in the Amboy Times and copied in the TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD, volume 1, number 5, page 101, with the comments of the editor, who I am informed is a gentleman of the Presbyterian Church in good standing.

THE MORMON CONFERENCE.

We devote considerable space to the proceedings of this body, believing that they are of great importance to us, even as a nation. There is a great body of these people scattered through the States, who, unwilling to follow the fortunes and doctrines of Brigham Young, have been quietly waiting for the time to come when they could organize under a lineal descendant of Joseph Smith, as their prophet. That time has at length arrived. Joseph Smith, Jr., occupies the position which his father once held. A new era in the history of Mormonism has dawned—an era which we hope will greatly improve the name of this despised people.

Whatever ideas we may entertain in relation to the doctrines of the Mormons, we must look with approbation and satisfaction upon any movement on their part which looks towards a radical reformation in their practices as a people.

For many years past Brigham Young has been looked upon as the embodiment of Mormonism, and those professing to be Mormons have been regarded as no better than he. Henceforth, they, or at least one branch of them, are to be judged by a different standard. The eyes of the world will now be turned upon young Joseph. Hitherto this man has borne a good name. His talents are of no mean order; and it is earnestly to be hoped that he will use them for good, and not a bad purpose.

We give a correct report of Mr. Smith's remarks, previous to his acceptance and ordination by the church,—the only reliable report yet published.

The Annual Conference of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," assembled in this city on the 6th inst., at ten o'clock in the morning.

The Conference organized by calling Zenos H. Gurley to the chair, and appointing William Marks assistant.

The forenoon was spent in preaching by Zenos H. Gurley, Samuel Powers, and Edmund C. Briggs.

The sermons were devoted principally to setting forth their peculiar doctrines and defining the difference between their branch of the church and that represented by Brigham Young. They profess, and we believe with the utmost sincerity, to hold in utter abhorrence the wicked doctrines and practices of Brigham.

It is claimed that the great body of the Mormon people are scattered through the several States, and that a prophet, by lineage, will call together the scattered fragments and unite them into a grand whole.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

According to adjournment the Conference assembled at half past one.

Horace Bartlett, Frederick Squires, and Joseph Robinson signified their desires and united with the organization.

Joseph Smith, Jr., then came forward, when Mr. Gurley said, "I present to you, my brethren, Joseph Smith."

Mr. Smith then spoke as follows:

"I would say to you, brethren, (as I hope you may be, and in faith I trust you are,) as a people that God has promised his blessings upon, I came not here of myself, but by the influence of the Spirit. For some time past I have received manifestations pointing to the position which I am about to assume.

"I wish to say that I have come here not to be dictated by any men or set of men. I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me.

"God works by means best known to himself, and I feel that for some time past he has been pointing out a work for me to do.

"For two or three years past depositions have been waiting on me, urging me to assume the responsibilities of the leadership of the church, but I have answered each and every one of them that I did not wish to trifle with the faith of the people.

"I do not propose to assume this position in order to amass wealth out of it, neither have I sought it as a profit.

"I know opinions are various in relation to these matters. I have conversed with those who told me they would not hesitate one moment in assuming the high and powerful position as the leader of this people. But I have been well aware of the motives which might be ascribed to me—motives of various kinds, at the foundation of all of which is selfishness, should I come forth to stand in the place where my father stood.

"I have believed that should I come without the guarantee of the people, I should be received in blindness, and would be liable to be accused of false motives. Neither would I come to you without receiving favor from my heavenly Father.

"I have endeavored as far as possible, to keep myself unbiased. I never conversed with J. J. Strang, for in those days I was but a boy, and in fact am now but a boy. I had not acquired a sufficient knowledge of men to be capable of leading myself, setting aside the leading of others.

"There is but one principle taught by the leaders of any faction of this people that I hold in utter abhorrence. That is a principle taught by Brigham Young and those believing in him. I have been told that my father taught such doctrines. I have never believed it and never can believe it. If such things were done, then I believe they never were done by divine authority. I believe my father was a good man, and a good man never could have promulgated such doctrines.

"I believe in the doctrines of honesty and truth. The Bible contains such doctrines, and so does the Book of Mormon and the Book of Covenants, which are auxiliaries to the Bible.

"I have my peculiar notions in regard to revelations, but am happy to say that they accord with those I am to associate with, at least those of them with whom I have conversed. I am not very conversant with those books, (pointing to a volume before him,) not so conversant as I should be and will be. The time has been when the thought that I should assume the leadership of this people, was so repulsive to me, that it seemed as if the thing could never be possible.

"The change in my feelings came slowly, and I did not suffer myself to be influenced by any extraneous circumstances, and have never read the numerous works sent me which had a bearing on this subject, for fear they might entice me into wrongdoing. It is my determination to do right and let heaven take care of the result. Thus I come to you free from any taint of sectarianism, taints from thoughts of the varied minds I have come in contact with; and thus hope to be able to build up my own reputation as a man.

"It has been said that a Mormon elder, though but a strippling, possessed a power unequalled by almost any other preacher. This arises from a depth of feeling, and the earnestness with which they believe the doctrines they teach; and it is this feeling that I do not wish to trifle with.

"I know that Brigham Young is considered a man of talent, by some a bold and fortunate man, and by others an unscrupulous and bad man, according as circumstances differ.

"Should you take me as a leader, I propose that all should be dealt by in mercy, open as to Gentile or Jew, but I ask not to be received except as by the ordinances of the church.

"Some, who had ought to know the proprieties of the church, have told me that no certain form was necessary in order for me to assume the leadership—that the position came by right of lineage, yet I know that if I attempted to lead as a prophet by these considerations, and not by a call from heaven, men would not be led to believe who do not believe now. And so I have not come of my own dictation to this sacred office.

"I believe that we owe duties to our country and to society, and are amenable to the laws of the land, and have always considered it my duty to act upon this principle; and I do say that among the people where I live I have as many good and true friends as I could desire among those of any society.

"The people of Hancock County have been strongly anti-Mormon, and there I know of no enemies. I have been engaged in business with anti-Mormons, I have mingled with them, and have not only been obliged not to make any remarks which might give offense, but also to smother my own feelings, if I had any. I hold no enmity to any man living who has fought this doctrine, nor do I know any who hold enmity towards me. I hope there are none.

"In conclusion, I will come to you if you will receive me, give my ability, and the influence my name may bring, together with what little power I possess, and I trust by your prayers and faith to be sustained. I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you, or the code of good morals.

"I have my short-comings, but I trust as a leader I shall do nothing to lead astray. If I do so, I shall expect condemnation, for I am satisfied that this people, governed by the same policy, would serve me worse than they have Brigham Young before, for I would be wholly deserted.

"A gentleman from Utah informs me that a majority of Brigham Young's people were restive—not satisfied with their condition—but dared say nothing. That those who preached and those who practiced his teachings were, in reality, the old fogies of the institution, the younger taking a different view of matters.

"I do not care to say any more at present, but will simply add that if the same Spirit which prompts my coming, prompts also my reception, I am with you."

When Mr. Smith concluded it was moved that he be received as a prophet—the successor of his father, which was carried by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Gurley then said: "Bro. Joseph, I present the church to you in the name of Jesus Christ."

To which Mr. Smith responded as follows: "May God grant in his infinite mercy that I may never do anything to forfeit the high trust confided to me. I pray that he may grant to us power to recall the scattered ones of Israel, and I ask your prayers."

Isaac Sheen then led in prayer.

Then followed the ordination of Joseph Smith as President of the High Priesthood.

These ceremonies were earnest and impressive, and when they were completed almost the entire congregation were in tears.

Emma Beideman [Bidamon], mother of Joseph, was then proposed and united with the church.

The conference then proceeded to elect and ordain the following persons as members of the High Council:

John C. Gaylord, William Aldrich, George Morey, Edwin Cadwell, Calvin Beebe, Jacob Doan, Oliver P. Dunham, Zenos Whitcomb, Lyman Hewitt, Dwight Webster, Winthrop H. Blair, Andrew G. Jackson.

The acting president then stated for the benefit of those not belonging to the Mormon church, that these councilmen were a jury for church matters, and, with their president, settled all differences between members, etc., etc.—that one half always acted in behalf of the church, and the other for the accused. To determine in whose behalf each should act, lots were cast, and those getting odd numbers would always act for the church, and those getting even for the accused.

Lots were then cast with the following result:

Gaylord	7	Aldrich	12	Morey	9
Cadwell	8	Beebe	4	Doan	1
Dunham	5	Whitcomb	2	Hewitt	11
Webster	3	Blair	10	Jackson	6

Isaac Sheen was then elected and ordained president of the High Priests Quorum.

Then followed the election of the seven presidents of the Quorum of Seventies, and the following-named persons were chosen: James Blakeslee, Edmund C. Briggs, Crowell Lamphier, William D. Morton, Archibald Wilsey, George Rarick, John A. McIntosh.

The first five were ordained, the two latter being absent.

S. J. Stone was elected and ordained president of the quorum of elders.

Israel L. Rogers was elected as Bishop of the church.

The remainder of the afternoon was spent in preaching, and prayer-meeting was held in the evening.

April 7. Israel L. Rogers was ordained as Bishop, in whom is vested the presidency of the Aaronic priesthood George Rarick was also ordained as president of the Quorum of Seventies.

A list of names was here handed to the Prophet, of persons to be dismembered, but he objected to having action on the matter on grounds of charity.

The Sabbath was spent in preaching and administering the ordinance of baptism.—Saints' Herald, May, 1860.

April 7. On the convening of conference this morning I was requested by the president to offer prayer and while in supplication I had a vision and saw the words before me as I spoke them, "Let my servant Israel L. Rogers be ordained to the office of bishop in my church, for this is his calling saith the Lord your God, Amen." The Holy Spirit in power rested on the entire audience so all confidence without a doubt was given to the Saints by the gifts of the Holy Ghost. I now feel, let the results be what they may, the reorganization of the church of God is established on the true foundation in harmony with the will of our heavenly Father, Jesus Christ being the head of the body which is his church on earth as in ancient apostolic times. The burden is now lifted from me as the especial witness crying in the wilderness of scattered latter-day Israel, the source to which to look for deliverance from the false shepherds who have sought to lead the Latter Day Saints. The church is now organized in a formidable manner, like a standard to which all who are desirous to know the truth may flock when seeking the kingdom of God, with all the elements as constituent parts of the the government of God, as clearly described in the Bible, and witnessed in the great things of God's law written to Ephraim and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. I am now happy and contented in the peace of the Holy Ghost, and will by the grace of God endeavor to build up and strengthen the church of God wherever my lot may be cast among my fellow men and return to my mission with renewed hope.

DO YOU BELIEVE IN THE BOOK OF MORMON?

That every Saint does not believe all the truths contained in the Book of Mormon, the writer has learned to his astonishment. More startling than this, however, is the fact that some do not even read the book. We do not refer alone to indifferent Saints, but also to a few who regularly attend church services, with the exception of the Religio. In September, 1832, a revelation was given to the church in regard to unbelief, and neglecting to read the Book of Mormon. We quote a part of the revelation, which is found in Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8:

And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written.

Nephi and many other writers of the Book of Mormon, testify that they know their record to be true. Whether we have a right to criticise and reject will be determined by the following quotations from the Book of Mormon:

And if there be faults, they be the faults of man. But behold, we know no fault; nevertheless, God knoweth all things; therefore he that condemneth, let him beware lest he shall be in danger of hell fire.—Page 495, verse 2, small edition.

And if our plates had been sufficiently large, we should have written in Hebrew; but the Hebrew hath been altered by us also; and if we could have written in Hebrew behold, ye would have had no imperfection in our record.—Page 500, verse 8.

But he that believeth these things which I have spoken, him will I visit with the manifestations of my Spirit; and he shall know and bear record. For because of my Spirit, he shall know these things are true.—Page 508, verse 12.

Thou hast also made our words powerful and great, even that we can not write them; wherefore, when we write, we behold our weakness, and stumble because of the placing of our words; and and I fear lest the Gentiles shall mock at our words. And when I had said this, the Lord spake unto me, saying, Fools mock, but they shall mourn; and my grace is sufficient for the meek, that they shall take no advantage of your weakness; and if men come unto me, I will show unto them their weakness.—Page 524, verse 2.

And then ye shall know that I have seen Jesus, and that he hath talked with me face to face, and that he told me in plain humility, even as a man telleth another in mine own language, concerning these things; and only a few have I written, because of my weakness in writing.—Page 525, verse 4.

And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost; and by the power of the Holy Ghost, ye may know the truth of all things.—Page 544, verse 1.

The words of Moroni just before he hid the records in the earth:

And I exhort you to remember these things; for the time speedily cometh that ye shall know that I lie not, for ye shall see me at the bar of God, and the Lord God will say unto you,

Did I not declare my words unto you, which were written by this man, like as one crying from the dead? Yea, even as one speaking out of the dust. . . . And God shall show unto you, that that which I have written is true.—Page 545, verse 2.

That a Saint should read the Book of Mormon, assisted by the Spirit, and not believe all the truths contained therein, is an impossibility.

REVISION OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CREED.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Los Angeles, May 28, by a unanimous vote adopted the revision of the Confession of Faith as prepared by the committee appointed by the assembly in 1901. Thus is settled a question which has agitated the church for about fifteen years. By the adoption of the eleven overtures important changes are made in the articles of the Confession of Faith. One of the most vital of these is embodied in the declaratory statements recorded in Chapter 3 and Chapter 10, Section 3, as follows:

"That concerning those who are saved in Christ, the doctrine of God's eternal decree is held in harmony with the doctrine of his love to all mankind, his gift of his Son to be the propitiation for the sins of the whole world and his readiness to bestow his saving grace on all who seek it; that concerning those who perish, the doctrine of God's eternal decree is held in harmony with the doctrine that God desires not the death of any sinner, but has provided in Christ a salvation sufficient for all, adapted for all, and freely offered in the gospel to all; that men are fully responsible for their treatment of God's gracious offer; that his decree hinders no man from accepting that offer and that no man is condemned except on the ground of his sin.

"Also that it is not regarded as teaching that any who die in infancy are lost. We believe that all dying in infancy are included in the election of grace and are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who works where and how he pleases."

For Section 6, Chapter 25, of the Confession of Faith the following is substituted:

"The Lord Jesus is the only head of the church and the claim of any man to be the vicar of Christ and the head of the church is unscriptural—without warrant, in fact—and is an usurpation dishonoring to the Lord Jesus Christ."

After the final adoption of the overtures Doctor Henry Van Dyke, the retiring moderator and a leader in the movement for the revision of the creed, said he wished to make it clearer and especially wished to say "to the brethren of the press that this revision does not mean that the Presbyterian Church has changed her base one inch, but it does mean that she had broadened and strengthened her foundations.

Her divine sovereignty shall never be interpreted so as to mean fatalism."—Northwestern Christian Advocate, June 3.

OUTLINES OF A PREACHABLE THEOLOGY.

The Holy Spirit, the Scriptures, the person of Christ, the kingdom of God, the Christian church, and the Christian doctrine of God comprise the outlines of a preachable theology, the points which the Christian preacher and teacher must make clear. Such is the conclusion, after "a wide and exceedingly varied Christian experience," arrived at by Doctor A. A. Berle, recently installed as pastor of the Union Park Congregational Church in Chicago. A "profound spiritual impression," says the Bibliotheca Sacra (Oberlin, Ohio), has been made by Doctor Berle's statement, which can be accepted "as indicating in a fairly representative way the trend of thought in the Congregational churches." We are indebted to the same religious quarterly for the statement itself, which is in part as follows:

"The doctrine of the Holy Spirit, I hold to be the first and most fundamental of doctrines for the Christian preacher to know and teach. . . . I believe in the Holy Spirit of God as the immanent God who is in all things, over all things, through all things; and that the supreme quest of the spirit of man is to find and commune with the Holy Spirit; and that such communion is the first and last requisite of peace with God and power in life. I believe that this Holy Spirit is a Person, not merely a power not ourselves that makes for righteousness."

The next great doctrine in the outline of a preachable theology is that of the Scriptures of which Doctor Berle says:

"The human spirit, liberated from the law of sin and bondage, instructed by the Spirit of God, immediately begins its divine career of growth in grace and knowledge of the kingdom of God. The records of such growth constitute the Holy Scriptures. . . . Scripture . . . does not become the word of God till it is illuminated by the Holy Spirit, and by him interpreted to the spirit of him who seeks its guidance and direction."

This brings us to the person of Christ. "Christ," says Doctor Berle, "is the Door."

"This is his own figure, and it accurately represents his mission. He is the last and completest provision of God by which men may come into fellowship and communion with Him, and see, in terms of their common and untechnical life, what the life of obedience and service to God is like. Thus the person of Christ becomes a matter of supreme interest in the task of the Christian preacher and teacher."

So much stress is laid upon the kingdom of God by Christ himself that "its nature and its methods must necessarily constitute a most important part of the ministry of the Christian preacher:"

"It is a kingdom where law is dominant, but the law is the law of love. It is to exercise brotherhood and practice charity. It is to seek first life in Christ, and then grow under the tutelage of the Spirit of God. It is to be a prophetic rather than a priestly kingdom, and its sacrifices are to be the sacrifices of service rather than those of ritual and offering. Its great desire is righteousness and its unfailing yearning is love. . . . Only the social teaching of Jesus can rescue us here from spiritual tyranny on the one hand, or material tyranny on the other. The one emerges in spiritual principdoms, culminating in a papacy; while the other arrogantly tells the world it has 'nothing to arbitrate,' when thousands are freezing to death."

Doctor Berle further announces his belief in "the Holy Catholic Church" thus:

"I hold this church to be a democracy in form and in government; that its authority lies solely in its collective voice, and that its collective voice, when that can be ascertained, is likely to be the path of wisdom and of power; that it can not delegate its authority to any individual or individuals, but that the preservation of the truth of God and the glory of Christ alike require that we should constantly do our utmost to discover what the Spirit saith to the churches."

Finally, "when the communion with God has reached the stage of stability and unfluctuating serenity, the knowledge of God is characterized by the filial relation:"

"It is standing on this summit of spiritual life and power that Jesus is enabled to say, 'I and my Father are one.' In a less powerful sense, but in a not less real sense, the Christian, liberated, trained, and chastened into harmony with God's law, and lifted into God's life, may also say with Christ, 'I and my Father are one.'"—Literary Digest, June 13.

A "DECLARATION OF WAR" UPON "HIGHER CRITICISM."

One result of the radicalism taught by Delitzsch and others in Germany, who have denied that the books of the Old Testament contain any divine revelation, has been a renewed activity on the part of the conservatives. The most pronounced champion on the conservative side is doubtless Doctor Johannes Lepsius, a recognized scholar and vigorous combatant. In his own journal, the Reich Christi (No. 1), he publishes what he calls a "Declaration of War" against "the Hegel-Darwinian-Wellhausen" school. He says, in substance:

We are at the beginning of a new epoch in the life of the Church. The seventy-year war between mythology and theology in the domain of the Old Testament has seemingly ended in a complete defeat of the traditional views. The critical views practically control Protestant thought everywhere and have assumed international proportions. Not one university man in Germany holds to the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch, and all make concessions to the newer views.

And yet when a person coolly and deliberately looks at the so-called "certain results" of the critical investigation of the last century and a half, what are these "results?" Nothing else than the conclusion that the most of the books of the Old Testament are literary frauds; that they do not correctly teach the historical development of the religion in Israel, and; to make matters worse, intentionally and purposely misrepresent this history, especially those books that have been "revised" in harmony with the spirit of the Deuteronomist. The whole Mosaic code, in its real essence, at any rate, is held to be a later fabrication, and its claim to have been given in the wilderness is regarded as an historical falsehood. Its whole historical background, it is asserted, is a fabrication, and the Law is but the outcome of a struggle between the advocates of the local cults and the hierarchical tendencies of the Jerusalem priesthood.

There is only one other religious book that, in its origin and development, can be compared with the Old Testament, as the critics regard it, and that is the Book of Mormon. A mere glance at this parallel must convince the earnest Christian that he can have no share in the radical criticism of the times. The strongest argument against the hypothesis is to state it in its simple and naked truthfulness.

The Deutsch-Amerikanische Zeitschrift greets this declaration by Doctor Lepsius with enthusiasm, and declares that he will prove himself a worthy antagonist. Doctor Lepsius has begun the publication of a series of investigations in the Reich Christi, in which he purposes to demonstrate that the reconstruction of the religious history of Israel by the modern hypothesis is substantially based upon a begging of the question in two directions, namely: (1) That the methods and results of the investigations of the sources of the Pentateuch are unassailable; and (2) that the archaeological data in reference to the historical books of the Old Testament have been sufficiently investigated and have been correctly interpreted. Both claims, which are essential to the newer criticism, are false, he holds, and a reinvestigation from the very beginning is necessary. If this is done, the radical views can not stand.—Literary Digest, June 20.

The most notable educational questions of the last quarter are discussed in the July-September Forum in Mr. Ossian H. Lang's paper on "The Educational Outlook." Among them are the problem of rural public schools, the shortening of the college course, and education in the Philippines.

A Savior's Praise.

Give place to truth, give place to light,
Reverence your God with all your might;
Give earnest heed to his command,
And in his holy presence stand.
With earnest heart, press on your way,
And look forward to judgment's day.

Prepare yourselves for what's to come,
And sit not ever idle, dumb;
Remember all the narrow way,
And for your future blessings pray.
Remember Him who blessings brings.
Controls the songs that angels sing.

He gives the light to mortals here,
And seeks the drooping hearts to cheer;
Remember Him whose life is light,
And worship him with all your might.
And think not in your heart to say,
He heeds not what I do to-day.

But give your service for his name,
His glorious gospel to proclaim;
Then will your joy o'erflowing be;
Then can you join the strain with me,
To praise his name in perfect love,
And seek his blessings from above.

Now gain a Savior's perfect love,
Record your name in truth above;
Rejoice in hope and never fear,
Then will he all your pleadings hear.
And then with joy we can proclaim,
I'm not ashamed to praise his name.

A Solitary Way.

There is a mystery in human hearts,
And though we be encircled by a host
Of those who love us well, and are beloved,
To every one of us from time to time,
There comes a sense of utter loneliness,
Our dearest friend is stranger to our joy,
And can not realize our bitterness.
"There is not one who really understands,
Not one to enter into all I feel."
Such is the cry of each of us in turn.
We wander in a "solitary way,"
No matter where or what our lot may be:
Each heart, mysterious even to itself,
Must live its inner life in solitude.
And would you know the reason why this is?
It is because the Lord desires our love.
In every heart he wishes to be first.
He therefore keeps the secret key himself
To open all its chambers and to bless with Perfect sympathy and holy peace,

Each solitary soul which comes to him.
So when we feel this loneliness, it is
The voice of Jesus saying, "Come to me;"
And every time we are "not understood,"
It is call to us to come again;
For Christ alone can satisfy the soul,
And those who walk with him from day to day
Can never have a "solitary way."

And when beneath some heavy cross you faint,
And say, "I can not bear this load alone,"
You say the truth. Christ made it purposely
So heavy that you must return to him.
The bitter grief, which "no one understands,"
Conveys a secret message from the king,
Entreating you to come to him again.
The Man of Sorrow understands it well,
In all points tempted he can feel with you
You can not come too often, or too near.
The Son of God is infinite in grace,
His presence satisfies the longing soul,
And those who walk with him from day to day
Can never have a "solitary way."

Dear Sister: I have thought for some time to write you and tell you of the success of our mothers meetings, and to thank you for the kind and helpful letter you wrote me last summer in regard to the Daughters of Zion meetings, and the magazine you told me of, the American Mother. Oh what a help it is; I do wish we might get the sisters interested in that magazine. I have sent in thirteen subscriptions to it from Janesville, mostly trial ones. It seems to me that any young mother after reading it would try to keep it in her home. I loaned the March number to a friend who has sent in a club of ten. I was glad to see the story, "Two Pictures," copied in the Autumn Leaves. It was good. But truly, we have just as good articles in our Daughters of Zion department in the Leaves as any that could be taken from the American Mother, only the space is so small. We need more room. I hope and trust that some day we shall have a magazine all our own for the Daughters of Zion.

Well, we hold our mothers meetings every two weeks and the way they have gained in interest is so cheering. I hope and pray that they may do good and help tired and careless mothers to a higher plane of living and thinking and thus bless the children. We now have a subject for each meeting. We try to have several papers dealing with it and then a question box and discussion, and we have special music and recitations at nearly every meeting. Often the discussion is longer than the program, and oh, so earnest, and in such a good Christian spirit. The meetings are always opened with reading from the Scriptures and prayer. Here are some of the subjects we have considered: "Sacredness and Responsibility of Motherhood," "When Should a Child Begin to be Taught Obedience," "Religious Training of Children." This last subject made a grand, good meeting and some beautiful thoughts were brought out. I hoped that it would make "our faith" as to the training of the children seem better to those who know that the superintendent is a Latter Day Saint. We give out free reading matter on the subject discussed at each meeting, or try to do so as nearly as we can. We have given out nine hundred twenty-five pages so far and have made sixty-four calls in the interest of the work. The W. C. T. U. seems to have much confidence in me and I hope and pray that I may be more worthy of it, and ever stand a true Saint.

But there were dark times when I first started. Three meetings that were advertised in the papers fell flat. I was there and a few of my friends but not enough, they thought, to have a meeting. Then we made up our minds to have a meeting anyhow no matter how few came, but we have always had as many as eighteen and over since. Next week we are to have a parents meeting and have a nice program prepared by the children. We hold this one in the evening, the next in the afternoon, changing in this way so mothers can come. We expect Mrs. Hunt of Harvard, Illinois, Assistant National Superintendent of Mothers Meetings to be with us some time soon to give two lectures afternoon and evening. I do hope and pray that it may do good.

But oh, dear sister, you do not know how I long to be with the Daughters of Zion that I might labor with them for the upbuilding of motherhood in our own dear church; and when I receive praise for work done I think, "Oh, if I were only working for my own church, how much comfort it would bring me. Then I think perhaps this is wrong. We should each do all the good we can, wherever our lot is cast. But we who are out in the world alone often long to be with our own church, or Christ's church, rather.

I shall try to save all the cream of these meetings, and at the reunions we will try to have the very best Daughters of Zion meetings possible. I have in mind now two little books I wish to distribute there, "A thoughtful Hour with Father" and "A quiet Hour with Mother," two neatly bound little books of twenty-two and twenty-eight pages each. I wish you might send for some to use in your local society. You can get them at one cent each by sending to Mrs. Evelyn H. Riddell-Houston, "The Maples," Clintondale, Pennsylvania.

I have found so many precious things along our line of work. Doctor Mary Wood-Allen's leaflets are among them. I now have the agency for all her books. Shall try to have them at conference, but not to make money. Oh how I wish we had church books, a few at least on these lines of thought, but I realize how hard it would be to get the money for the first issue. We have the birthday books for our boys. My oldest boy received "Silver Thimbles" on his tenth birthday and the second little son received "Footsteps of Jesus" and the Christmas book for his last birthday. Those are all the children's books, are they not? They will soon be old enough for "Pattie," and "With the Church in an Early Day," and I want the "Talks on the Book of Mormon" now. What a help the Religio Quarterly is! I wish you would write me about the Daughters of Zion work. With love,

EFFIE HIELD.

What Makes a Friend.

I saw this phrase on the cover of a new book the other day and it set me thinking: What is it that makes a friend? "He that would have friends must show himself friendly?" says the old proverb. It sounds simple enough, as so many other things do, till you look into them.

The art of friendship is, in fact, only one part of the art of life, which we are all set here to master and which it takes many people the whole of their allotted span to learn the rudiments of. But it is a very vital and necessary part. Do not we all feel that a man or woman who has reached old age without making friends has made a sad failure of life? The woman may be a queen of fashion, the man may be a multi-millionaire, it does not matter. To be friendless is to be horribly poor and also discreditably unsuccessful.

What is it that binds us to our real friends—the friends who last? I think a great deal of it lies in this, that they give you credit for the best that is in you. Not that they spoil you with weak flattery or blind admiration. Perhaps they may be hard on you at times—or you think so—but you feel that they believe in you, in your best self; and the sentence you would dread to hear from them beyond all others is, "That isn't worthy of you" or "I was disappointed in you there."

It stands to reason that where there is true friendship there must be a considerable amount of mutual tolerance. One must accept divergencies of taste and opinion with a large-minded charity. One must not carp and fret at little defects. It is astonishing on what tiny reefs a very promising friendship will sometimes go to wreck. Don't you remember the girl whom you thought so charming, till you went on that holiday journey with her and then her way of dawdling and missing trains or her lack of interest in something you wanted very much to see or her selfishness about having the window shut when you wanted it open, fairly made you tired of her before you got back. Well, perhaps she had her little list of grievances too. Perhaps both her life and yours might be fuller and richer to-day if you could have had a little more patience with each other.

Probably the deepest, most enduring, most satisfactory friendships all round are those that are formed between members of the same family. The friendship of happy married people is the closest human tie that the world knows. Have we not seen dear old married couples who have actually grown, through a perfect likeness of spirit, to be strangely like each other in the face? Then there are the lovely friendships of such brothers and sisters as the Herschels or the Renans or William and Dorothy Wordsworth or Charles and Mary Lamb. Those with whom you have common memories and interests reaching back to the very beginning of conscious life must always have a special nearness. Yet it is by no means a matter of course that one's intimate friends are of one's own family and household.

Possibly, if you don't make friends of your sisters, the reason is that you are too much alike. "It is so annoying," some one once said to me, "to see your own faults in other people." A girl who is strong-willed and impetuous, living with two or three like-spirited sisters, is less likely to find an intimate friend in one of them than in some quieter and more yielding nature outside the family circle. How beautifully Shakespeare shows us the attraction of difference in "As You Like it," with his picture of the princess-cousins, Rosalind and Celia, one of the most beautiful examples of loyal girlish friendship that exists in literature. The gay, witty, adventurous Rosalind, the quiet Celia, cool and perhaps a little critical, yet so simply, nobly devoted to her friend—who can forget them and where can a girl find a more charming pattern of friendship?—Selected.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, June 26.

Herald Readers: Leaving home May 21, (late of necessity) in company with Sr. George and her two children, of this city, who had been visiting in Independence and Lamoni since February, we stopped in Chicago from Friday till Monday, by the kind invitation of Bro. and Sr. Bond, and I had my first opportunity of addressing the Saints there, in both the south and west branches. Indeed, meeting with some whom I had known long ago, and making the acquaintance of others, was a great pleasure. Among the former was Bro. Charles Culver with whom I went for lunch after the afternoon service with the Saints of the west branch. At their home I met Srs. Culver, his mother and sister, but missed his father who had departed this life since last I met the family. Bro. Charles went with me to and on the first car-line I should take returning to the south branch for the evening service, for which Bro. Bond had announced me, at the close of his most interesting and instructive discourse from Revelation 11: 17, portraying the great contrast between the present conditions of human government and those which will obtain when He shall reign whose right it is to rule.

As I took a second car-line, Bro. Culver left me as he could not attend the evening service. On reaching my hand into my pocket for a loose nickel, the only change there, as I knew, I felt a small, folded, soft paper, which I knew I had not placed there. Handing the nickel to the conductor, I determined to see what it was. Imagine my surprise when I found a twenty-five cent piece closely wrapped in a five-dollar bill. Evidently the quarter had been placed in the bill to give it sufficient weight to carry it down into the pocket. A fifty-cent piece and a quarter were handed me after the evening meeting, and I had plenty. No wonder the Savior said to his disciples, "Take no thought." I was again reminded of his question, "Lacked ye anything?" and the reply. "Nothing Lord."

I need not say that our welcome among the Saints and friends of Cleveland was a most hearty one, and we were as glad to be with them again. All were disappointed that I could not remain even over Sunday, because of a discussion in Wood County, for which arrangements had been made, to begin June 1 and meetings announced for the day previous. The location is five miles west of Prairie Depot, where there are ten Saints, three of whom Bro. A. B. Kirkendall of Creola, had baptized during last winter. Some of these Saints had previously moved there from Vinton County. Bro. J. E. Kelley preached there in March, leaving quite a commotion among the people as he went on to General Conference. Out of this came the debate.

The usual church question and the Book of Mormon were the propositions. Our opponent had refused to sign the latter as worded, so only the former was expected in the outset. However, in his first negative speech he attacked Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon, paying little attention to our affirmative on the church proposition. Objections being made, in our second speech, to his course, which on the first evening he refused to change, but promised at the opening of the second session to let the Book of Mormon alone during the first proposition, and to debate the other as worded, afterward. The promise, however, was not kept, for Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon were the objects of his tirade in every speech.

Before opening the fifth session our opponent suggested to me, that we drop the church question and take up the other, saying that the people (some of them) thought the debate was doing more harm than good. Evidently they discovered he was not "downing Mormonism" as fast as they had anticipated. We objected saying that he had so hindered the discussion of the proper question, by constantly bringing in the other, which necessitated reply, that I was not half through with the subject. After a promise that I could continue as long as I wished after the other question was debated, I reluctantly consented. Suffice, it to say that after the third session on the Book of Mormon, our opponent said to me, "I'll stay with you to-morrow night, and then you can go ahead," virtually withdrawing from both propositions before we were near done.

We got in four sermons after his withdrawal, one of them by Bro. J. R. Beckley who came just in time to hear the last session of the debate; after which the angry portion of the people refused us the use of the house any longer. The director who closed the house, said "the people" were dissatisfied, and that we must close. So we took the expression of the people present, (a good representation too) by vote. No more than one hand that we could see was raised to close, but many went up for us to continue, but the director would not retract. So we left Bro. Beckley to "hold the fort," preaching at the home of Bro. Paten, and elsewhere as opportunity could be obtained.

Returning to Cleveland on Saturday last, we found Children's Day just at hand. The occasion was a very enjoyable one. The day following we waited upon Mr. Leslie, in charge of the city parks, who very kindly granted our request for permission to hold services in Wade Park, where we held forth last summer. The day being propitious we will renew that part of our work next Sunday. We are still encouraged here.

In bonds,

Editors Herald: Would be glad to see any missionary who comes this way as we have not been privileged to hear a Latter Day Saint since we left Mondamin, Iowa, more than a year ago. We are thirty miles east of Spokane, Washington. Climate is lovely, scenery beautiful, and mountain water is excellent. Crops look fine and everything favorable only we miss our church privilege that we enjoyed so much in Mondamin. Will try and look up the Saints of Spokane when an opportunity offers.

Hoping for the best with always an interest in the gospel truths, I am,

Very respectfully,

MRS. C. A. BERRY.

CLINTON, Iowa, June 30.

Saints' Herald: I have been afflicted with heart trouble for a number of years. As I did not know at first what the trouble was, I have passed through experiences which have taught me a few lessons. The most important of all is that I should be more patient with my fellow man. It is needful to pass through affliction that we may see ourselves more as we are. Now that I have been brought to a place where I can see myself a little more as I am my desire is to be able to profit by what I have learned. Through my afflictions God has blessed me. It seems to me more than I am worthy; therefore, I am made to rejoice in my afflictions.

I have made some investigation and had some experience and although but little it may be of benefit to some one. After I found myself in a condition that I could labor but little, I remembered of reading of Bro. Turnbow's experience of which he wrote in the SAINTS' HERALD of April 5, 1899, and March 12, 1902, and thought that I would try eating raw food, mostly wheat. I found it was better for me in some ways. I believe Bro. Turnbow's idea is all right, that is, to stop eating food that is not good for the human stomach and disease which is caused therefrom will leave as it did with him. It is too bad that when Saints have been given the Word of Wisdom they will keep right on using things which are not good for them. Surely we should give heed to the Word of Wisdom as far as it is possible for us to do so, if we wish to keep the health which has been given us. Saints, let us live up to the word of God both temporally and spiritually. Let us be thankful to God for what he has given us and profit thereby, and we shall receive greater light.

If you write to Bro. Turnbow or myself we will tell you where you can get a book of instructions which agrees with the Word of Wisdom as to what kind of food is good for man in different seasons, also instructions by those who have had twenty-five years experience of what kind of foods are good for different diseases; it costs but very little.

I ask the prayers of all God's people that if it is his will I may be healed of my affliction that I might be the means of helping in this great work of God.

NINA, Ohio, June 30.

Editors Herald: For two weeks past we have urgently pressed the claims of the great latter-day work to the people of this region. In Oakharbor, Elder U. W. Greene, and myself delivered ten discourses, and I can now see the shell cracking to some extent. The pastor of the Methodist Church criticized the work in his sermon last Sabbath, so we were informed. Not being present, we accosted the reverend gentleman on the street, and he denied the statements with which he is accredited. We now learn that the report is all over the town that he "falsified." There are a few golden grains among the chaff in Oakharbor, but the majority are wrapped in the dusty parchments of priestcraft.

If the church could send a minister through this part who could preach the gospel in German, no doubt a great work could be accomplished, as a large part of the population is of that extraction. If Bro. J. S. Roth could execute a mission in Ottawa

County, Ohio, my impression is, he could reach numbers, for they would be attracted by a sermon from him on taufen.

We came to Nina last Saturday, preached in the evening to a large audience. On Sunday the Saints fitted up the grove near the hall, and brought baskets blessed with good things. To say we enjoyed the Lord's favor would not justify the conditions. A very large attendance partook of both spiritual and temporal feasts. We delivered three discourses during the day, and enjoyed good liberty. There are a great many believing the gospel in this part. Last evening, as usual, we were greeted with a fine class of listeners, and we discoursed on the restoration of the gospel. (Revelation 14:6.) Bro. Carlile is announced for this evening. He arrived on the ground yesterday afternoon from Toledo, and Oakharbor.

I find the Ohio ministry humble, zealous, and united in the purposes of the gospel, free from jealousy, and anxious to follow the law, instead of enforcing individual opinions. When such equilibrium is sustained, the cause will move. But Satan is not dead yet, neither doth he sleep. But he is too much of a gentleman to take a seat in the heart, unless the door is open, and he invited.

The work is onward in these parts, if progress is slow. Old Babylon "mutters and peeps," and mystery, secrecy, and darkness are her chief elements. "He that is of God cometh to the light."

It is quite a busy season for this agricultural district. I expect to move into Defiance, Paulding, and Williams Counties after July 4.

Hopefully and hastily,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, June 26.

Dear Editor: As I have not seen much in the HERALD about the recent flood in the Kaw Valley, I thought I would try to tell the readers of the HERALD something about it. I am not going to tell it all. I do not think man can tell, nor pen begin to tell all.

On May 31 I went to the shops, in the Frisco yards where I work, to save such things as I could, for the water at that time had not entered any of the shops. About ten o'clock we were compelled to go to the hills as the flood was upon us. The small houses, shanties, lumber, and driftwood of all kinds were on the move. I went to the highest hill and there with my umbrella over my head I sat and watched the water as it moved and carried away everything that was loose and would float. The day was damp, raining part of the time. The bluffs were lined for miles with men, women, and children. I dare say that there were fifty thousand people on the bluffs all day on the Kansas City side from the Missouri River to Argentine, a distance of about three miles.

On the Kaw River there were sixteen bridges, four wagon bridges, the balance were railroad and street-car bridges. About ten o'clock in the morning two spans of the Belt Line bridge gave way, although it was loaded down with sand-cars. About four o'clock in the afternoon the bridge above gave way and all the driftwood that was held by that bridge came down and carried away the two remaining spans of the Belt Line bridge. Down came the driftwood and houses and struck the Kansas Avenue bridge and it went down. Next the street-car bridge, the Rock Island bridge, the two stock-yard bridges, and then the Union Pacific bridge with seven engines which were placed on it to try and save it. About seventy-five feet below was the Missouri Pacific bridge loaded down with engines and cars and this bridge stood the pressure. It still stands. Next the elevated bridge went down and all the bridges but one on the Kaw River from Argentine to the Missouri River were swept away. May 31 and June 1 will long be remembered by those who witnessed that awful flood. Many houses could be seen coming down the river and we could see men and women on houses waving some white garment, and when night came they would place a lamp in the window as a signal. We could hear them hallooing for help. Boats were scarce. No one but God knows how many were drowned.

On the 7th of June I went to Armourdale to see the effects of the flood. I went over the Missouri Pacific bridge, that was the only way unless I had paid twenty-five cents to cross on a boat. When I got over I saw one of the worst sights that I ever saw. Those beautiful yards such as the Union Pacific and Missouri Pacific Railroad yards were gone and nothing but driftwood and houses and oil tanks and lumber piled up on both sides and not a track to be seen that was safe. Cattle, horses, sheep and hogs were scattered all over among the driftwood, and box cars in every shape turned and twisted all over. I went up the river and destruction could be seen on all sides. When I got to Kansas Avenue I went to Packard and all along houses, barns, driftwood, sand, and mud were in the street. It is a horrible sight to see what was once a thriving city, the home of the working man, torn to pieces and hundreds of houses washed away. Hundreds have no sign of a home; all gone in the flood. I learn that some of our brethren and sisters were caught in the flood. Bishop Roderick May is doing all he can to relieve the suffering of the Saints and is trying his best to get means to supply the needy ones, and if the Saints will only respond and place means in our bishop's hands I know that he will do the best he can.

The water was six feet eight inches deep in the Union Depot and about nine feet under the Twelfth Street viaduct, and in the streets of Armourdale it was twelve to eighteen feet deep. The river was a roaring stream from bluff to bluff. There were thousands of freight cars in the flood and I am told that hundreds were washed away. Hundreds of cars of grain, wheat, oats, and corn are gone, also fruit of all kinds, merchandise, furniture, and hardware.

Our city was left in bad shape for a few days. No light; gas, and electric light and water-works plants were in the flood. Our mayor ordered all teams to haul water for the people in the city hotels, laundries, and such as needed water. No lamps were allowed to burn. Candles were in demand. This lasted only a few days.

I have heard our elders talk about the gathering, and have wondered how it could be brought about. As a rule the Saints are all poor and the price of land is so high, two or three hundred dollars a foot for land, and in the city fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars per foot. I did not see how the Saints could gather home to Zion, but all is clear to me now. I learn that God is going to redeem it by judgment when his time comes.

An old colored lady that lived in Armourdale belongs to the Baptist Church and is very religious, and is all the time talking about God's loving kindness. After the flood she was asked what she thought about God's loving kindness. "Now," she said, "I do not know sah, but I is convinced that he is awful powerful."

Your brother,

JOSEPH R. LEWIS.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, July 1.

Dear Editors Herald: I am living about five miles from Independence and do not have the privilege of mingling with the Saints in worship as much as I would like to, but by the help of the Holy Spirit and the welcome pages of the HERALD and Autumn Leaves I do not feel as lonely as I would otherwise.

When I read the Autumn Leaves and note the advancement made in the articles and general compiling my heart rejoices for my prayers are always for the onward progress of the Lord's work and I hope that as we are able to use and appreciate his blessings he will bestow. So by the blessings he grants us do I realize our onward march. A march hard for some, but Christ has given us to understand that he will be our help always in our time of need.

I enjoy the columns of the HERALD and when some one I know has been so fortunate as to be blessed in writing a letter worthy of its pages I rejoice in their joy. I remember with what joy I first saw some poems of mine in Autumn Leaves. I rejoice to see church talent in its columns.

Praying always for Zion's weal,
Your sister in Christ,

ANNIE M. WHITEAKER.

ALBANY, Missouri, July 1.

Editors Herald: Bro. D. C. White and I came here with tent and began meetings June 24. Have held eight services. Meetings well attended and considerable interest manifest. One name given for baptism and I am sure others will follow. The restored gospel is winning its way, and prospects are favorable for an ingathering here, though we expect to meet considerable opposition before we close up our work. This is the home of J. D. McClure, a would-be valiant opposer to the work, and member of the Anti-Mormon Association.

At Darlington we had a good meeting—some interested, and one name given for baptism which will be attended to soon.

Others believe the work and I hope will soon obey. We closed there June 23 and began here next night, not losing any time. While at Darlington we enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. and Sr. E. A. Bray, and others. Sr. Etta, daughter of Bro. D. C., came at the beginning of our meetings at Darlington and rendered very valuable assistance in the song service. Such help is appreciated by the missionaries, and all who attend, and adds much to the interest of the meetings. She is still with us, and faithfully performs her part of presiding at the organ, and assisting in the singing. I hope we can always be so favored. Many have spoken in a very complimentary way of our singing. Here we are enjoying the hospitality of Mr. (soon Bro.) and Sr. Robidoux and also Bro. and Sr. H. N. Pierce who have lately moved here from St. Joseph. Their presence and assistance in the singing helps very much. The tent will probably be here for two or three weeks longer.

Hopefully,

JOSEPH C. VAUGHN.

OTTUMWA, Iowa, June 22.

Editors Herald: We are still strong in the faith that the angel delivered to man in these latter days, although we are without a shepherd to revive our thoughts as to our duty and to God but by reading his blessed promise to all mankind. We rejoice to know that we are of the fold. If you can possibly send an elder here there is a man that will be baptized, as he has been investigating our doctrine for some time, and says we have the only true doctrine, although he has been a Campbellite minister here in this county and has baptized over four hundred into that faith. If any of the elders will come this way they will have a hearty welcome with any of the Saints here, and I feel that some good could be done here as Brn. Roth, J. W. Adams, and Elvin left a grand impression here in regard to this latter-day work. We will meet the elders at the depot, or they will find us at 641 West Fourth Street. Praying earnestly for Zion's welfare, I am,

Yours in bonds,

Z. M. SANTEE.

HOAG, Nebraska, June 26.

Editors Herald: I am holding forth at this place, conditions are quite favorable for the presentation of the gospel message. Bro. Walter M. Self will soon be with me, so we hope to do some good. We contemplate doing work in Beatrice and other towns. Saints please take notice and assist the missionary by giving him a place to lay his head, and a morsel of food.

Notwithstanding the incessant rains that have hampered our efforts we feel encouraged, knowing that we are engaged in the Lord's work, and that he will take care of his own. We feel to make use of the time and push the work as much as possible. I am thankful to my heavenly Father for the grace bestowed upon me, that I am permitted to enter into the labors of others. I want to so live, that while I am showing others the way, I may myself develop in the virtues and grace of our blessed Lord.

I wish to express my gratitude to the Saints in Fremont District for their kindness to me while there. They shall always have a place in my memory, as among those with whom I have spent many happy hours. I am glad to learn that Bro. C. Scott is able to be in the front again.

I like my field of work, I believe Nebraska is healthier than Western Iowa. I have had good health and gained in flesh while here. There is plenty of opportunity for preaching, and a demand for it. As I pass the ripening harvest-fields my thoughts go out in regard to the blessed work of our Master, feeling that the harvest-field of humanity is now ripe, ready for the reapers. I only wish the reapers were more numerous. My prayer is, that the Lord will strengthen the few and make them a power for good.

We have some noble Saints in this district whose aim is to do what they can, that the work may prosper. Trusting that we may all work with our might that much may be accomplished this year, I am,

Ever your fellow worker in the Lord,

ADOLPH E. MADISON.

DENVER, Colorado, July 1.

Editors Herald: Sunday was Children's Day in Denver, and at the close of the morning service six of the children of the Saints were baptized in the Platte River by the writer, and confirmed at the evening service.

At the semiannual business-meeting Monday evening the writer was again elected branch president; O. A. Westland priest, K. Seli teacher, and I. C. Edwards deacon. We hope the branch is in a better condition than for some time before, and that the work will move forward.

SPRINGBURN, Scotland, June 24.

Editors Herald: This morning I was taking a retrospective view of my three years experience as a missionary, and while I can not boast of accomplishing very much I can see many times where God has given me light and liberty in presenting the message of love. My first experience as a missionary was in the Dakotas, and I will ever remember the Saints there for their loving kindness to me, and in this far-off land I often think of the sweet peace and blessed communion of God's Holy Spirit we had while together.

Bro. Arber and I are doing our best to get our claims before the people here. We have much opposition resulting from our street-preaching. I can not say that I am in love with street work. I seem to get the street fever, but after I get started and get warmed up a little I am not so bad.

Utah elders are quite numerous in the city; I am informed there are seventeen. I met two about a week ago at Brighton Cross, a place in the city noted for street-preaching. They had quite a large crowd around them I waited till they were through and then I asked them if they believed Brigham Young to be a prophet of God. They would not answer me. I then stepped forth and with the help of God made the difference between us as plain as I could. I backed up every position with quotations from the books or from their own publications. One made an attempt to reply but it was all assertions, no proof whatever. He started out by saying that we were a contentious class of people, and that we made it a practice to hunt them up wherever they were holding meetings and try to destroy their influence with the people. I made a short reply to him and told him his statements were wrong, in my own case at least, for I had been in Glasgow nearly two years and this was the first time I ever met them, but that we as a body were determined to occupy every opportunity granted to us to make plain the differences between us. O what a joy and pleasure it would be to preach the restored gospel if those evils and abominations had not been heaped upon it by an apostate church! The principles of the gospel can not be successfully refuted by any man for it is God's divine plan for the redemption of man. We expect Brn. Joseph and R. C. here in September. We will be glad to see them. Many peace and prosperity continue with the church is my prayer.

DALLAS CENTER, IOWA, July 2.

Herald Readers: The conventions and conference of the Des Moines District were not largely attended, but much business was done, and those present were encouraged. Brn. F. A. Smith and George H. Hilliard rendered valuable assistance in the preaching services, and in giving words of counsel to membership and ministry.

Following the conference Brn. H. A. McCoy and S. K. Sorensen took charge of tent work going to Packard in Butler County, and from their late reports I am informed of excellent interest attending their efforts there.

Bro. C. J. Peters is laboring in Warren and Madison Counties; Bro. T. F. Jones near Frazer, and Bro. Cushman and myself remained at Boone, where two were baptized on Sunday, the 21st. From there I went to Pilot Mound to occupy in the Seventh-day Adventist church which had been secured by Bro. T. F. Jones for a week's services. Here we found but little interest, in fact came near being frozen out for want of an audience, although all treated us kindly.

Monday last I came here to answer a lecture delivered by Reverend J. Kirkendall of the M. E. Church, Sunday night. The spirit of the attack was that of hatred instead of love, but it has caused a spirit of investigation on the part of a few who were never interested before, and has strengthened the Saints. Tuesday and Wednesday evenings I used in making my reply, but many on account of prejudice did not come to hear, although I learn that many were within hearing distance whom I did not see. The same minister lectured against us about eight miles from here where there are none of the Latter Day Saints, and there comes a desire that we reply to him there, and an effort is being made to so arrange.

The spirit of opposition here during the last three weeks has assumed the nature of mobocracy, and boycotting. The efforts in both directions have failed to bring about such results as were desired, although it has hindered one from being baptized for the present, but we look forward with prayerful hope that God will give her grace to endure the trial of waiting the time required to prove herself a free woman, freed from hypnotism and undue influence of the Saints as charged by her relatives.

I am informed by late letter from Des Moines that nine precious souls were baptized there last Sunday, one of whom was Bro. Hall's wife for whom he has been anxiously praying for some time, the others being lambs of the fold, children of Saints.

Celebration is occupying the minds of the people principally at present, hence a slight lull in our activity. With anxiety to give light to those who sit in darkness, to lead the erring to see the error of their ways, to promote in all a forgiving spirit, and to edify the faithful, I am,

A laborer in hope,

PACKARD, IOWA, July 2.

Editors Herald: While at the Boone conference, the duty of tent preaching was assigned to Bro. A. H. McCoy and myself, and upon application of the Saints living in this locality to have the tent located here as soon as possible, we proceeded from the conference to this place. We set up the tent on the 20th of June, but owing to rain could not commence meetings until the 22d; since then we have only missed one evening.

This is a fine farming and dairy country, hence you may know that the people are all busy, especially so on account of recent rains and floods, which to some extent have damaged crops, not so much, however, in this locality as elsewhere. As a rule the crops here look well, and some extraordinary. Our meetings have been fairly well attended all through, beyond our expectations. Some are apparently interested in our talks, and think it "sound doctrine," others do not think so.

To-night we will close until after the Fourth and Bro. McCoy will deliver one of his favorite subjects, that of heart disease from a scriptural standpoint, and illustrated. Any one afflicted with that dreadful disease will be most sure to receive a permanent cure by the application of the remedies prescribed by Bro. McCoy.

The Saints here are good upright citizens, and an honor to the cause of Christ, and if I am not greatly mistaken this is the reason of the good attendance of outsiders at our meetings. Some of the Methodist choir people have rendered valuable service in singing. Sr. Farr furnished us an organ and her daughter, Mrs. Crosby, kindly acted as organist, with others to assist part of the time. Sr. Farr is a distant relative of Jared Carter and her mother, Sr. Hurd, who lives here with one of her daughters, was a member of the old church in Kirtland, Ohio, and was well acquainted with Joseph Smith and his whole family. She says he was a good man and everybody loved him. I am told that up here at Green, about six miles distant, is an old man who was well acquainted with Joseph Smith, but never belonged to the church, and no one in his presence dares to insinuate that Joseph Smith was a polygamist or an immoral man. We will likely call on him when we go to Green with the tent and secure his testimony.

Before attending the district conference we had the tent put up at Mingo, the home of Bro. and Sr. Earhart, but owing to excessive rains and floods we did not have a fair show. Small, but attentive audiences greeted us every night, after the weather was sufficiently settled to permit us to hold meetings. While there my colaborer, Bro. McCoy seemed for the first time during our acquaintance to feel somewhat discouraged after a continuous rain of seven days and as many nights, and was almost inclined to think that the "prince and the power of the air" had full control of the elements, but I rather think he has changed his opinion since then.

Editors Herald: I have had a broken piece of back-bone removed. I laid over one hour under the influence of chloroform during the operation. I am well now and have been home from the hospital six weeks. I am in the faith. I know God's word is truth. Pray for me that I may live the life of a true child of God and never bring reproach upon the name Latter Day Saint.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, July 1.

Editors Herald: When I call to mind the fact that it has been ten years or more since I have written you for publication. I wonder how it can be, when at one time I was so active in the church work. At the time I was initiated into the kingdom, in January, 1871, at Newton, Iowa, I little thought that one could feel an indifference for his welfare; but such has been the case. Soon after I united with the church, I was called by prophecy to fill the important office of elder. I had hardly acquainted myself with the importance of my mission, when I moved with my family to Elk County, Kansas, near Fall River. Settling on a new claim, it required about all of my time the first year, to make myself independent of church support, but in this I failed, on account of crop failure. I was not idle in preparing my mind for a work of which I was ignorant at that time. I soon advanced in the studies and after I began work for the Master, I was prepared for any opposition I might have to meet. I remained in Elk County for about eleven years "scattering seeds of kindness." After having seen a branch of twenty members organized I moved back to Iowa, stopping at Rhodes, Marshall County. I found a good-sized branch with plenty of elders who were willing to tell the good story, with Bro. J. F. McDowell at the head, which of course I appreciated, and as a result I spoke three or four times. After a year of quiet, I moved to Independence, the "Center of Gathering," and have lived here about sixteen years, have spoken about two or three times, there being so many good speakers present every Sunday, another good long rest was had. After coming to this place, I engaged in business and have been actively engaged ever since, but never losing sight of the good to be obtained by an active church life, in which I expect to engage as soon as I am able physically and financially.

I feel that I may tax your patience, but I will here state that I have good reason for devoting a majority of my time to church work. On the 25th day of last March I closed my office and went home, feeling a little ill. On the back of my neck was what seemed to me a boil, but which in about a week the doctor pronounced a malignant carbuncle. It was decided that the carbuncle should be lanced at once, but this did not have the desired result. I kept getting worse and worse, until Doctor Mather, formerly of Lamoni, with the assistance of Doctor Sheeley performed the first operation. A large portion of dead tissue caused by the carbuncle was removed, the incisions causing a terrible shock to my nerves, and it was about six hours before I was revived. In a few days afterward a consultation was had, and it was decided that another operation would have to be performed. I remember hearing Bro. Joseph in his prayer over me, plead with God for my recovery, and ask that the surgeons' minds be directed aright, which Bro. Mather is willing to acknowledge was done. A specialist, Doctor Van Scoyoc, of Kansas City, was called and he with Doctor Mather performed the second operation. Before the operation, however, the specialist made a close examination, after which he gave my family to understand that my recovery was very doubtful, and that I might die under the operation. With all this information, not once did I feel that I would die, and I am glad to testify to the mercy of God, to whom I give the glory. In a few days another operation was made. Although very weak I would submit. My children were anxious about me, and I remember they came to my bedside to bid me as they thought a last farewell. When the doctors came into my room to make this third operation, I said to the surgeon, "What do you think about my dying now?" "Oh," he said, "you are all right, you will go through," and I did. While I am not well, I am able to visit my office. Under the direction and skill of Doctor Mather, who in my case I believe received direction from the Lord, my neck has filled up level, and is nearly healed over.

I think Doctor Mather is one of the most careful, and sympathizing physicians I have had with me, and do not hesitate to recommend him to the Saints.

Now since passing through all this and coming out of it as I have through the tender mercy of God, do you not think I ought to do something for him?

Hoping this testimony may encourage some poor soul like myself, to return and advance in support of the kingdom of our God, I subscribe myself,
Your brother in Christ,

W. S. LOAR.

PEORIA, Illinois, July 3.

Editors Saints' Herald: We are doing the best we can in Peoria. Finding that it was difficult to get people to come to our hall, I began preaching on the streets, after having secured permission from the chief of police, and although I had no one to assist me and had to make the effort alone I was blessed in the effort, and many people stopped to listen to the gospel story and gave good attention. The tracts that I offered for distribution were eagerly received.

I am now made happy by the fact that I am no longer required to labor alone. Bro. F. A. Russell joined me June 30, and since that time we have continued the effort together. Bro. Russell is a splendid worker on the streets, and I feel that he is just the man that I have been needing to assist me here. He brought his telescope organ with him, and that together with our singing I find to be a great aid in drawing and attracting the people. Large crowds remain for more than an hour at a time and give the very best attention. We have had some opposition, but this is to be expected. We hope that good will be the result. This gives a splendid opportunity to distribute tracts. People will more readily receive a tract after having heard a sermon preached than they would if you were to take it to their homes.

We expect to continue as long as interest demands and our strength endures.

Yours in the gospel,
207 Callender Avenue.

H. E. MOLER.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, England, June 21.

Dear Herald: I thought this an opportune time to make the HERALD readers acquainted with this large city with its two hundred thirty-one thousand souls, few of whom have ever heard of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. A short time ago I received a letter from Bro. C. A. Butterworth, Victoria, with the address of Bro. and Sr. Squires' friends in this city, and as Bro. J. W. Rushton was on a visit to us shortly afterwards, we went and paid them a short visit. We found them rather hard to approach at first as they have heard so much of the Utah church, but as Bro. Rushton explained the difference they became quite reconciled to Bro. and Sr. Squires being united with the Saints as they were good Christian folks before, and wondered why they should leave their own church, the Church of England, and it had given them a lot of worry to think they had not had their youngest babe baptized, but blessed. I said I had never been able to find a command in the Scriptures to sprinkle babes, and the young lady referred me to where the babes were brought to Christ to be blessed. Yes, said I, that is just what your brother and sister have done; it is required of all to believe, and repent, before baptism is of any value, as baptism is a means to an end, and if the means are not used, we could not very well reach the end, the remission of our sins. We had quite a good time and had to stay and have tea, and were invited to come again.

Bro. Squires' mother had to confess that their letters were a great deal more spiritual since uniting with the church than ever before, and we thought that it ought to be convincing evidence to them of a move made in the right direction, and am glad to say Bro. Rushton put their minds at rest in the step they had taken. Miss Squires had been to their minister to write Bro. Squires to inform them of their delusion, but he declined. We are thankful the work is onward. The other family is Mr. and Mrs. Gimlitt, of Eldon Square, fine noble people, Methodists, and they like to talk of the work. We made their acquaintance through Bro. and Sr. Morgan on their way to their mission in Wales, as they stayed a few days here and paid us a visit, staying with Mr. and Mrs. Gimlitt. I am invited to visit again next Sunday and have a talk on the gospel, and feel sure God has a people here, and trust many may be found out and brought to the fold.

Since Bro. Griffiths paid us a visit last year quite a stir is being made in this city. On March 22 I went down town to see if the people were willing to hear what I had to say, and found two or three platforms occupied and wondered how I should be able to speak with things in full blast, so went from one to the other as questions might be asked, and was gladly surprised to hear the Christian Evidence people ask for questions or opposition. I felt there was some chance, so I went to a Mr. Boyce, and said I should very much like to speak from his platform for fifteen or twenty minutes. He replied, Are you for or against us? I told him I would speak and they could judge for themselves how I stood. I was received well, with many invitations to come back on the 25th and I can assure you I was on time. After thirty minutes talk one of the speakers came and ask me if I was a Baptist. No, said I. Are you one of the brethren? No; and so it dropped. So I continued with them two, three, and as many as seven sermons a week, two on Sunday, five through the week. It was a hard thing for them to fix my faith outside of the Mormons, but I continued to preach the gospel and minded my own business, and three or four times the leaders came to me and confessed that there was some other power than that of man with me. But oh how slow men are to see the signs of the times, as in Jesus' day, and accept his gospel.

I am more than glad that a door is opened here for the gospel to be preached as a witness, and raised as an ensign to the people. But the query was, What strange man is amongst us? They would have expelled me, only I held so closely to the Scriptures and, thank God, that saved me from being banished from the Christian Evidence platform and the big market, and so by the help of the dear Lord I made a good opening for Bro. J. W. Rushton when he came and stayed about seven days and had a grand reception to our platform and did most excellent work with the understanding the platform was always open to him, although he said things that cut as a razor, as I had done. No man can always frame his language so that it will please. The people were well pleased as a whole, and speak well of him. As they were at a loss to know who I was if not a Utah Mormon, I asked Bro. Rushton's advice, and he said, If I were you I should keep right on preaching and it will come out all right in its time. So I went with Bro. Rushton to tell the gospel story. Some seeing others making inquiries about baptism, laying on of hands, etc., said they would like the matter thrashed out. But alas, an enemy got round them after they had arranged to meet me again and talk the matter over and next time we were to meet those interested ones who had been told I was a Mormon, so they could not hear me, as it was plainly seen I was one. It spread at express speed. Oh if the gospel could be spread as quickly, it would soon reach to the ends of the earth. And now it is blazed through the camp, but I had not expected that it had reached my coworkers, the Christian Evidence men, and when I went down on Monday night the Methodist Evangelist said, Mr. Mole and I have been contending the whole afternoon on the subject of baptism, I for immersion. Mr. Mole, a Presbyterian minister, for sprinkling. I was asked my views on the subject and said surely the Scriptures do not teach sprinkling, but a burial, which means immersion. Mr. Mole said, Mr. Broadway, you hold too closely to the word, and are too earnest in your belief. The evangelist said the thought had come to his mind that I was a Mormon. I said I was what is called a Latter Day Saint, but not a Mormon, as there are two distinct bodies of Latter Day Saints. He said he had learned something that he never before knew.

Yours for the one faith,
78 Grosvenor R Jesmond.

H. BROADWAY.

DES MOINES, Iowa, July 1.

Dear Herald: The progress of God's work in all parts of the world brought to us through your precious columns is noted with interest, and when our hearts have been made to rejoice exceedingly we want to tell you of our joy. Last Sunday was an important and a joyful day for the church and Sunday-school in our city. At the Sunday-school session at ten in the forenoon the officers for the coming six months were elected, Bro. A. A. Reams being chosen superintendent for the third successive term. The Sunday-school work in the city has advanced to a marked degree during the past year and this has come about through the earnest, faithful, and united action on the part of officers, teachers, and pupils. The superintendent spoke of the addition of sixty-nine volumes to our Sunday-school library, double the number of Quarterlies being taken, an increase of twenty-five Hopes, and all obligations being met by the regular collections, which have been very liberal.

At eleven o'clock Bro. M. H. Cook gave a very instructive talk on baptism. At three o'clock in the afternoon the Saints met at the water's edge and Elder E. O. Clark administered the ordinance of baptism to nine precious souls. Eight of these were of the lower grades of the Sunday-school, the other a young woman who until quite recently was considerably opposed to the work but now rejoices in it. Bro. Clark was but recently chosen president of the Des Moines Branch, and but the Sunday before ordained an elder, and to thus administer the ordinance of baptism to so many, and to those who have been with us all in the Sunday-school for several years, was a most delightful event to all, especially to him on this first Sunday after his ordination to the higher priesthood. Bro. Clark met the new born sons and daughters at the church at five o'clock and gave them a practical talk as to their new duties. At the evening service the confirmation took place in the presence of a large congregation of Saints and was full of promise to some if they continued humble and faithful. Following this the branch priest gave a short talk with chart work descriptive of "Our Garden of Eden," pointing out the trees the fruit of which those placed therein might eat and those of which they must not if they hoped to enter the celestial kingdom of their God. May the promise of God be verified unto these obedient children that they may not be tempted and tried more than they are able to endure.

Church work in this city is advancing. Even the most conservative must admit this. There is a unity of spirit among those called to be Saints, and the united effort of the faithful saints in church, Sunday-school, and Religio work is having an effect for good, as was shown by these nine being "added to the church" last Sunday and we believe that others will follow soon. The membership of the branch now numbers two hundred three.

For the benefit of the Saints and elders who may be in the city at any time we announce the following services at the church located at East Sixteenth and Des Moines Streets: Sunday-school, ten o'clock in the forenoon; sacrament service, eleven o'clock in the forenoon, the first Sunday of each month; social-meeting and preaching service each alternate Sunday, eleven o'clock in the forenoon; Religio, half past six in the evening; preaching service, eight o'clock in the evening; prayer-meeting every Wednesday evening. All visiting Saints are cordially invited to attend these services.

Praying God's richest blessings upon all his children, and upon those seeking to learn of the gospel restored to earth, I am,

Yours in the one faith,

J. R. EPPERSON.

Editors Herald: While you Westerners have been deluged by storm and flood, we Easterners have until of late been meeting with the opposite—the long-continued drought beginning in early spring causing the earth to become dry and hot and vegetation was at a standstill for some time. Forest-fires raged with fury, being driven on by fierce wind, and the poignant fumes of hot smoke at times were almost unbearable. Whole townships lying along its pathway were swept over as if they were covered with chaff or tinder, till it had spent its fury and reached its plethora. Then the precious rain came, washing the smoke from what vegetation there was left, causing the old fields to begin again to put on their coat of green. One feels better now while he breathes the pure, clean, balmy atmosphere. Nova Scotia has suffered more by the drought than Maine, as the drought has lasted longer here.

The drought or dearth in religion still lingers here. The few Saints living here, as in most other places, are trying to be good, yet they are seemingly not willing to use altogether such material as the Master has provided to work out a thorough reformation of life and character. Saints should be very careful about their daily walk, as the eyes of the world are upon us and a versatile life can never be inviting to the world. The Saints are to be the light of the world and the salt of the earth and all this by their good works. Our lives should be spent in the contemplation of future happiness, the hope inspired by the study of God's word, and its correct understanding and proper appliance to one's life is commendable. Should there be no heaven, and if the eyes that are closed in death should know no awakening, it is still better that we now lighten the sorrow of the sad and burdened about us and leave our deeds as heritage and example to those who shall come after.

The creeds about here, so far as I can learn, are making no improvements; the seeming unity among them is not upon principles of Christianity, nor of pure love. In his Creed of Christendom Mr. W. R. Gregg justly writes: "I have but one word more to say and that is an expression of unfeigned amazement, that out of anything so simple, so beautiful, so just, so loving, and so grand, could have grown up or been extracted anything so marvelously unlike its original, as the current creed of Christendom."

Emerson says: "We boast the triumph of Christianity over paganism, meaning the victory of the spirit over the senses, but paganism hides itself in the uniform of the church. Paganism has only taken the oath of allegiance, taken the cross, but is paganism still outvotes the true men by millions of majority, carries the boy, spends the treasure, writes the tracts, elects the minister, sends missionaries to the heathen, and persecutes the true believer."

We can therefore sympathize with the little fellow who was attentively studying the map of the world, "What place are you looking for, Willie," inquired the father. The small boy knit his brow and traveled a circuitous route with his forefinger; "I am trying to find Christendom," he answered.

May we regard God's law, and bless the opportunites held out to us in making proper use of the same, is my prayer.

S. O. FOSS.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 6.

Editors Herald: Since last writing I called at Leon where I found the branch quite reduced in resident members and the services of the church nearly at a standstill, but a few faithful and well respected Saints and friends quite ready to assist in a special effort. I held meetings for two weeks and was hindered greatly by rain, but the interest became good and I was informed that we had the best hearing and the largest congregations that have been in the church for several years. Our charts created considerable stir in the city. I left with many requests to return in the near future.

I then went to Hiteman, where I found the branch in great need of officers, all the male members having gone to other mines, but in spite of discouragements I found the camp-fires burning. A few faithful sisters were at the helm and a live Sunday-school and prayer-meeting were carried on each Sunday. Honor to whom honor is due. We have some fine brothers-in-law there who look well to the financial part of the work. On June 21 I led five splendid young people into the waters of baptism. I feel sure their work will not be in vain. This is the place where the Baptists wanted to destroy our work a few years ago but did not want to undertake the job themselves, so they sent and got Clark Braden to do the job for them. He relieved himself of a great deal of abuse, falsehood, and ridicule, but, like all sediment left by an overflow, the next rain washed it all away. So I think this has been all washed away and we look for better times for the branch in the near future.

I then went to Cleveland and remained two weeks after conference. This is a live branch of about one hundred Saints and I am glad to say in the two weeks I was with them I did not hear the least particle of discord or fault-finding, officers and members all are one in the interest of this glorious latter-day work.

Yours to the end of the race,

W. H. KEPHART.

Motion prevailed to suspend delegate system during the conference. Motion prevailed that the matter touching the petition of Louisville Branch be not considered until conditions are complied with. Committee appointed by the conference of July 26, 1902, to audit retiring Bishop's agent's books, reported and report was accepted. Resolution prevailed as to the desecrating of the Lord's Day. The secretary was authorized to draft letters of condolence on the death of Elder James M. Scott and Priest Samuel Scott. Report of auditing committee accepted. Bro. James P. Saffinfield was elected president of district, W. C. Marshall assistant, Sr. Mildred Anna Marshall secretary and treasurer. Officers of church and district sustained. A vote of thanks was tendered the Byrneville Saints for their hospitality. Preaching by James W. Metcalf, Charles E. Harp, W. C. Marshall. Adjourned to meet at Plainville, Daviess County, Indiana, October 31, 1903.

Convention Minutes.

Des Moines.—Met in convention at Boone, Iowa, June 12, 1903. At 9 a. m. a joint prayer and testimony-meeting was held, which meeting was in charge of Superintendent W. Christy and Assistant Superintendent W. C. Earhart. The business session opened at 2 p. m. with W. Christy presiding. The following reported: W. Christy, W. C. Earhart, Elsie Russell, and Ida Hand. Schools reporting: St. Charles, Rhodes, Eagle Grove, Clear Creek, Oskaloosa, Grinnell, Runnells, Des Moines, Boonsboro, Dallas Center, and Ortenville. The closing session was held at 8 p. m. at which the Boonsboro Sunday-school rendered a musical and literary program, followed by an interesting talk by Elder J. F. Mintun. Adjourned to meet the day previous to and at the same place as the next district conference.

Pastoral.

Elder Evan B. Morgan is appointed submissionary in charge of Wales. The brethren are requested to report to him at 137 Severn Road, Canton Cardiff.
JOHN W. RUSHTON.

To the Local Ministry of the Little Sioux District, Greeting: You will each and all seek to labor in the district, to the best of your ability. It would be well if the presidents of branches would assist the ministers who are members of their branches, in spreading the work in their several localities so far as they can, either by preaching, or handing out church literature to those who will read.

Refrain from preaching tithing, without first consulting with the Bishop's agent, A. M. Fyrando, of Magnolia, Iowa, as this part of the work has been hindered in the past through a lack of uniformity of teaching. May the love of God abound in all your hearts.
J. C. CRABB.

To the Ohio District: Being placed in charge of the missionary force and therefore responsible, the coöperation of all is greatly desired. The Lord places responsibility upon all; we should therefore work together. Section 42: 21 of Doctrine and Covenants contains this: "And again, every person who belongeth to this Church of Christ shall observe to keep all the commandments and covenants of the church." In 119: 8 you will find this: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." Section 83: 16 says: "Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward: and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple: by this you may know my disciples."

Will all, especially scattered Saints try to effect new openings and inform me where labor is needed. Let us all work together.
Your coworker,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

Care of 220 North Fifth Street, COLUMBUS, Ohio.

To the Officers and Members of Branches in the Mobile District, Greeting: The brethren are earnestly requested to be very diligent in the performance of the work the Master would have them to do. Let due and proper regard be paid to the observance of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. The priests should with prayerful hearts and with loving and kind intent visit the members one or more times during the quarter. If all the dear brethren will consider the great privilege offered them in the matter of tithes and offerings of working for the Master along this line of service, there will be means in the storehouse and joy in the hearts of God's people. The times are perilous, and the enemy alert, but if we are wise and faithful we will receive the blessing, care, and protection of the Lord.

F. P. SCARCLIFF, president of district.

Missionary Release.

Those concerned will please note that J. W. Adams has been released from the missionary force for the remainder of the conference year, during which time he will not represent the church in an official capacity.

FRED'K M. SMITH, for the First Presidency.

Book of Mormon in Danish, Now Ready.

Special attention of the Saints is called to the work of the Book of Mormon in Danish by Apostle Peter Anderson and missionary Peter Muceus of Porsgrund, Norway. This is an excellent work and should be on the center-table of every Scandinavian household in the land.

The church has been at great time and expense in preparing this work ready for delivery into the hands of the Saints. The Herald Publishing House with its many other burdens, did not have the means to advance to get out this work, and the church has had to supply the means. We ought to have one thousand applications for this work at once from the Saints, Scandinavian or English it does not matter at $1 each, so as to help along the cause of Christ in this regard. If you can not read the work yourself it is well to have it in your library for those who can read it, and to loan to your neighbors. We trust that the Saints who can do so will be interested in helping defray the expenses of this work at once, as we are needing a translation of this book in the German and French languages as well as Scandinavian, and no one ought to hesitate to perform his or her part in having them issued at an early time. Here is where special offerings will do good to the cause of Christ, and greater good to the individuals who make them.

Please send in orders at once,—$1.00, $1.25, or $1.50, according to the style of binding you wish,—to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, or hand to any bishop's agent. Strict account will be kept of all offerings made for the benefit of this publication so that the Saints will soon see whether an effort to place this work, which gives an account of a remnant of the house of Israel, before the Scandinavian people will be a success.

Do not forget to send name and price of work to Herald Publishing House aforementioned.

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 7, 1903.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent.

The Saints and friends of the Reorganized Church in and for the district of South Dakota will please take notice that Elder W. W. Whiting, of Bonesteel, South Dakota, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in and for said territory, and that tithes and offerings, donations and gifts for the use and benefit of said Reorganized Church can be made to said agent, W. W. Whiting, who will give due receipt therefor, and perform all work usually devolving on Bishop's agents of the said Reorganized Church.

Commending the said agent, Bro. Whiting, to Saints and friends who are interested in the work of the gospel in said territory, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric of said Reorganized Church,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 1, 1903.

Notices.

To the members of the Northeastern Kansas District, Greeting: The records show 553 members enrolled and 227 of these (almost half of the membership) absent from their branches. Those who are absent should apply to their branches for letters of removal and place them in the nearest branch. The clerks should make an effort to have those absent apply for their letters so that the records could be put in a better condition. White Cloud Branch in this district has been disorganized, and as the record of that branch has never been placed in the hands of the district clerk, I therefore ask that it be sent to me at once. I also ask for the Leavenworth Branch record; any one having that record please send to me at once. Members of branches that have been disorganized should apply to me and I will send their letters as soon as possible. James W. Burns, district clerk, 219 North Fifth Street, Atchison, Kansas.

Two-Day Meetings.

The Sparta Branch will have a two-day meeting under a tent in Sparta, Michigan, July 18 and 19. All Saints and friends are cordially invited to attend. Those who can handily will please bring their baskets as our numbers are few. All come who possibly can as we wish to make a successful influence for the glory of God and the advancement of his kingdom. Your brother in Christ, Charles E. Irwin.

There will be two-day meetings at the following places: Derby Branch, July 25 and 26, W. C. Marshall and M. R. Scott, Jr., in charge; Oriole Branch, August 8 and 9, Charley Harp and Peter A. Flinn in charge; Rego Branch, August 15 and 16, W. C. Marshall and James P. Sappenfield in charge; Leavenworth Branch, August 22 and 23, M. R. Scott, Sr., and Charley Harp in charge; New Marion Branch, August 29 and 30, M. R. Scott, Jr., and J. J. Boswell in charge; Union Branch, September 5 and 6, George Jenkins and Charley Harp in charge; Byrneville Branch, September 19 and 20, W. C. Marshall and Charley Harp in charge. All of these meetings to be basket meetings on Sunday. James P. Sappenfield, district president, Byrneville, Indiana.

Meetings will be held at Theodore, Alabama, second Saturday and Sunday in July; Bay Minnette, Alabama, third Saturday and Sunday in July; Bluff Creek, Mississippi, fourth Saturday and Sunday in July; Perseverance, Alabama, first Saturday and Sunday in August. Let as many as possible of the Saints observe the third Sunday in July as a day of fasting and prayer. Fast to commence with the evening meal Saturday and close with the evening meal Sunday. F. P. Scarcliff, president Mobile District.

Reunion Notices.

The sixth annual reunion of the Kentucky and Tennessee District will convene at Crossland, Kentucky, on Saturday, July 25, continuing over two Sundays. According to previous appointment district conference will convene on the reunion grounds Saturday the 25th at 10 a. m. Plenty of room for tenting, etc., good water for both man and beast. We expect a large attendance as Crossland is about the center point of the district. It is a cozy place, nice shady groves, and very convenient to the railroad, only three miles from Hazel on the N. C. & St. L. Railroad. Brn. I. N. Roberts, W. R. Smith, C. L. Snow, and D. W. Cook of the general ministry with T. A. Hougas, General Sunday-school Superintendent and missionary, and others of the local priesthood will be present. J. R. McClain, district president, Box 202, Fulton, Kentucky.

To those who contemplate attending the Clinton District reunion to be held at Taberville, Missouri, commencing August 14, 1903. There will be a daily hack to and from the railroad, Rockville being the nearest station. All those wishing to board please give notice in due time, also those who wish tents. Pasture close by for horses at reasonable rates, also hay and corn. Free fuel and straw on the grounds. Let all come that can and enjoy the meetings. Respectfully in bonds, C. H. Athey, Thos. McCormick, Taberville, Missouri.

The Northwestern Kansas District reunion will be held at Frank Bergier's five miles east and one half mile south of Osborne, Osborne County, September 4 to 14, 1903. Hay, pasture, wood, and stoves free, and a general invitation to all to come. Let as many as possible of the priesthood be there. Brn. I. N. White, Madden, Gurwell, Teeters, Ward, and other good speakers will be there. It will be conference and reunion. Let all come. J. F. McClure, chairman of committee and district president, Gaylord, Kansas, June 25.

The Massachusetts District reunion will convene at Silver Lake, Plympton, Massachusetts, August 1-10, inclusive. Parties attending will buy tickets to Plympton, Massachusetts; the lake is about five minutes walk from the station. Tents, 10x12, $2.50; 12x15, $2.00. Orders for tents should be placed with any member of the committee as soon as possible. The boarding tent will be in operation with weekly rates of $3.25, children $2.00. We would like to know as soon as possible how many expect to patronize the boarding tent, that accommodations might be made for all those desiring to do so. Single, woven wire cots 25c each. If invalids who can not tent will write the committee to that effect the best arrangements possible will be made for them, it may be possible to get a few rooms in the village, if so they will be had. On arrival at the station all baggage checks should be given to the committee and not to the expressman. We are expecting a large representation of the ministry this year. O. L. Newcombe, 6 Union Street, East Somerville, Massachusetts, G. W. York, Adolph Leckney, Arthur Crocker, Harry Wood, Committee.

The Des Moines District Reunion will convene at Rhodes, Iowa, beginning Thursday, August 13, 1903. All Saints and friends are cordially invited to be with us during these meetings which will continue for ten days. Tents and camping supplies at same rate as on former occasions. Compartment tents: 14x21, 5 rooms, $5.50; 14x14, 3 rooms, $4.50; 10x14, 2 rooms, $3.50. Wall tents, standard: 14x16, $3; 12x14, $2.50; 10x12, $2; 7x9, $1.75. Cots: Canvas, 20c; wire, single, 35c; wire, double, 50c. Camp tables, 35c. Gasoline torches, 35c. Ovens, 75c. Mattresses, single, 25c; double, 35c. Chairs, canvas, 10c; wood, 15c. Two-burner gasoline stoves, 75c. For ten days. Address all orders to George W. Johnson, 202 Fifth Street, Des Moines, Iowa, who will have charge of the tent supplies. All orders should be in his hands not later than August 5. There will be a dining-hall on the ground which will be in charge of the committee, and we suggest that all come prepared to take meals at the dining-hall as we expect to run on the coöperation plan and we think that if nearly all patronize the dining-hall it will be cheaper and much nicer and cleaner than for all to do their own cooking. Committee: H. A. McCoy, Chelsea, Iowa; W. C. Hidy, Nevada, Iowa; W. Christy, Dallas Center, Iowa.

Conference Notices.

Central Nebraska District will hold conference at Meadow Grove, August 8, at 10 a. m. A good attendance is desired. Levi Gamet, president.

The conference of the Utah District will be held at Provo, Utah, September 4, 1903. This comes within the date of our reunion at the same place which meets from August 29 to September 5. Please let all interested take notice and let full reports be made. A. M. Chase, district president.

The Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District conference will meet with the Shawnee Branch, at Lydia, Red River County, on July 31, 10 a. m., and all visiting members coming by rail will come to this place. Lydia is ten miles south of Avery and conveyance will be furnished to carry the visiting members to place of meeting on July 29 and 30. Avery is forty-four miles west of Texarkansas, and forty-seven miles east of Paris, Texas, on the Trans-continental Division of the Texas & Pacific Railroad.

Convention Notices.

The Central Nebraska District Sunday-school association will meet in convention at Meadow Grove, August 7, at 2. p. m. Levi Gamet, superintendent.

Married.

HAMLEN—TATE.—At the Saints' church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, at noon, June 24, 1903, Mr. Edward R. Hamlen and Sr. Lillian Tate, both of Easton, Pennsylvania. The ceremony was witnessed by a number of Saints and friends. Elder W. E. La Rue officiated. May a long, happy, prosperous life be theirs to enjoy.

Died.

BEST.—Sr. Charity Ann, (nee Smart) wife of William Best, died at Plano, Illinois, June 13, 1903, aged 43 years, 11 months, and 10 days. She was baptized by Elder N. L. Blakely, December 27, 1874, at Zone, Ontario. She came to Plano in 1877 where she was married to William Best, May 4, 1886, by Elder Wentworth Vickery. Funeral sermon by Elder F. M. Cooper, June 15, assisted by Reverend Henry, pastor of the Baptist Church. She was buried under the auspices of the Modern Woodmen. Deceased was an excellent wife and mother, and a saint of God. She leaves a husband and three children to mourn.

PRIOR.—Sr. Mary Prior died at the home of her daughter, Sr. Willey, near New London, Iowa, June 12, 1903. Her maiden name was Brooks. She was born October 14, 1818, in New Salem, Virginia. She was married to William Burge in 1841, and to George Prior in 1847. She united with the church in 1890; being some of the fruit of the labor of Elder Fred Johnson. Funeral sermon at the home by Elbert A. Smith.

COWLISHAW.—William Cowlishaw was born December 20, 1826, at Old Linton, Nottinghamshire, England; baptized March 1861; ordained an elder June 9, 1862; died at Moorhead, Iowa, April 12, 1903. Funeral services conducted by Elders Mark Jensen and J. C. Crabb. This brother lived a consistent Christian life, and was respected by all who knew him. He leaves a wife and many friends to mourn, yet not without hope.

PRICE.—Bro. James B. Price of Oakland passed peacefully and suddenly away in San Francisco, California, June 23, at the age of 72 years, 11 days. He leaves six children and eleven grandchildren, five children and his beloved wife preceded him in death. Five of the children were present at the funeral, though Sr. Kaighin one of his daughters returned from a tour twelve hours too late to see her father in life. The obsequies were held at the home of his daughter, Sr. Helwig in San Francisco Friday, June 26, in charge of C. A. Parkin, sermon by J. M. Terry. Bro. Price was born in England, but has spent nearly fifty years of his life in America. He occupied as an able minister of the word, and was an honored member of the High Priests' Quorum. His words were kindness, his acts benevolence.

SMITH.—Norman Cowen, infant son of Bro. George H. and Sr. Florence Smith, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Born November 20, 1903; died June 23, 1903. Funeral service held at the Saints' church June 25, conducted by W. E. La Rue. Interment at Cedar Hill Cemetery, Frankford.

PETERSON.—Inger L. Peterson was born in Denmark, September 24, 1833, and died at her home in Grove Township, Shelby County, Iowa, June 28, 1903. She was married to Bro. J. Fred Matheson November 13, 1856, who died in 1876, leaving his wife with seven children, three of whom have since followed their father to the land of rest. She was married to Bro. Rasmuson Peterson in July, 1878. Sr. Peterson was baptized into Christ October 9, 1876, and been a consistent and honored member of the church, doing what she could to bless others. Funeral services were conducted at Saints' chapel Gallands Grove, Iowa, June 29, 1903, by C. E. Butterworth and James Caffall.

In Serbia, the change of dynasty is looked upon as the result of a revolution rather than as the consequence of a crime in the ordinary sense, and it is further held that if Alexander had not been put promptly out of the way there must have been civil war, with much loss of life and many distracting consequences. In short, it is the opinion, not only of the Servian army, but of the leaders of church and state, that Alexander and his wife had committed high crimes and misdemeanors against the Servian nation which called for condign punishment, and that it was better that they should have perished than that the country should have been plunged into civil war.

They were perfectly aware that they reigned against the will and desire of the Servian people. They knew, moreover, that they were in great perii. Even the blindest adherents of the mediæval doctrine of the divine right of kings must have found it difficult to bring people of such lowly origin and such recent advancement as the Obrenovitches or the Draga Maschins within the protecting pale of that mystical doctrine. Alexander's father was a swine-herd who became a brigand and guerrilla fighter against Turkish troops. Subsequently, the Sultan of Turkey designated him a prince, and made the dignity hereditary. Bismarck and Disraeli allowed the Principality of Serbia to become a separate kingdom, and Prince Milan assumed the title of King. Monarchs nowadays hold their positions, not by divine right, nor yet by prestige or reverence for royal blood. Most European countries have many families of more illustrious lineage and more aristocratic origin than the family that holds the ruling rank. Thrones are secure, nowadays, only where monarchs conduct themselves with discretion and with a regard to public interest. The King of England, the Emperors of Germany, Austria, and Russia, the King of Italy, and the Queen of the Netherlands, are marked examples of rulers who serve public interest with fidelity, and avoid doing that which would alienate or antagonize the people over whom they reign. Alexander's position in Serbia was like that of some strange adventurer, temporarily exercising power as a dictator over some so-called republic of Latin America, rather than like that of a stably placed constitutional sovereign.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for July.

The North American Review for July possesses the qualities of timeliness, variety, authority, and commanding interest for which one confidently looks in all the issues of that periodical. Harold Cox criticizes "Mr. Chamberlain's Protection Scheme." Discussing "The Servian Tragedy," Mr. Charles Johnson gives a summary of the history of the kingdom of Servia. O. P. Austin presents statistics showing the extraordinary place recently attained by "American Manufactures in the World's Markets." Doctor Emil Reich offers "A New View of the War of American Independence." J. N. Léger, Haytian Minister to the United States, answering certain aspersions recently cast upon his fellow countrymen, tells "The Truth about Hayti." Abraham Cahan endeavors to establish a connection between "Jewish Massacres and the Revolutionary Movement in Russia." Raúl Pérez explains "The Panama Canal Question from a Colombian Standpoint." George L. Kittredge, Professor of English in Harvard University, writes of "An American School." Lucius F. C. Garvin, governor of Rhode Island, advocates the adoption of "The Constitutional Initiative." W. L. Penfield, solicitor to the State Department, shows the advantages to international law which have resulted from "The Anglo-German Intervention in Venezuela." Adam Scot introduces "Some Letters from Ruskin to a Young Lady." Margaret Bisland contends that "The Curse of Eve" still follows woman when she possesses herself of the fruit of the tree of knowledge. Richard Arthur contributes a dramatic poem of great power and excellence, entitled "Odysseus and Calypso," and the number closes with the seventh part of Mr. Henry James' novel, "The Ambassadors."

Ida M. Tarbell completes the first part of her "History of the Standard Oil Company," in the July McClure's. Her last chapter entitled "The Real Greatness of the Standard," in which she pays ample tribute to the wonderful organization of the trust, the executive capacity of the men at the head of it, and the loyalty and efficiency of the great body of its employees. It was not Miss Tarbell's original intention to publish the history in two parts, but the subject grew so beneath her hands that more and additional chapters were seen to be necessary. The editors announce that this second part will begin in the fall, and will continue the history down to the present day, taking up many of the questions of the hour to which the trust have given rise.

Why the very general use of boiled water does not safeguard more homes against typhoid invasion than it appears to be probably due to the fact that it is not used exclusively. There is almost certain to be carelessness in the kitchen, however great the degree of care in the dining-room. The washing of green vegetables in water from the tap, and its addition to food preparations served uncooked, will often carry the germs to the most scrupulously-guarded table. If the water supply of a house is known to be polluted it should be treated like any other poison. Bottled waters may or may not be safe. It depends partly upon what they are filled with and partly upon how the empty bottles are cleansed between refillings. Since the consumer can know very little about this, however curiously he may inquire, and a person is safe in concluding that the environment of bottling-shop is not conducive to the development of the "aseptic conscience," he may feel more confidence in water he has boiled and properly cooled than in a supply which must be taken largely on faith.—Doctor James C. Bayles, in the World's Work.

RESURRECTION PLANT

THE ROSE OF JERICO.

These rare and curious plants grow and stay green by placing them in water or light drained soil. When taken out of water they dry and curl up and go to sleep. It will keep in this state for years and reawaken directly on being put in water. It is an interesting and pretty house plant, and grows in winter, if not allowed to freeze. To grow it, simply place the whole plant in water; it will open up and start to grow in twenty minutes. After that just keep the roots in water, and change water about twice a week, to keep water from becoming rancid. Send for one. You will be pleased with it. Mailed to any address in the United States on receipt of twenty-five cents. Agents wanted. I also handle toy balloons, whistling balloons, return balls, confetti, canes, and all kinds of picnic and carnival goods.

Young Men, if you want to make some easy money you can do so by selling these goods. Send for my Picnic Catalogue. 25-3t

Editorial.

The brief note sent heretofore announces the arrival of Bro. R. C. Evans and myself at the world's great metropolis, London, a city of nearly six million inhabitants. Here a small band of Saints, having a little church in an obscure street in one of the densely populated portions of the city, amid manufactories and work-people's residences, is striving to maintain the cause of a risen Redeemer, under conditions most discouraging, in charge of Elder J. W. Worth, a man of the people who devotes as much of his time as practicable to the duties of his office.

The greeting we met with was characteristic of hearty appreciation and the cheer which marks the association with Saints in every clime. We met them first at a little reception in the church, where, sitting at the table with a supply of food and drink, we passed an hour of pleasant association. After this we who were strangers were introduced by Bro. John W. Rushton, under whose care and direction we are making the tour of the branches, or so many of them as time will permit us to visit. The speech of welcome was cordial and was appreciated by us, as we tried to tell the Saints. On Friday, in company with Bro. Rushton, T. J. Sheldon, and Joseph D. Howell, we visited certain points of interest in London, including, fortunately for us as visitors, the locality known as the Pall Mall, a fine avenue reaching from Buckingham Palace, the city residence of King Edward and Queen Alexandra to the Horse Guards Parade. On this occasion the scene was full of animation and excitement, ladies and gentlemen on horse-back riding to and fro, many thousands of gaily-dressed and handsomely-attired pedestrians moving rapidly to take up positions whence they could obtain a good view of the pageant as it would pass by. The object of the parade being review of a portion of the troops and the trooping of the Guard's colors, in honor of the King's birthday. This ceremony means the presentation of a new standard to the regiment. Realizing that I was an American citizen, I nevertheless enjoyed the glitter and show, and the significance of the ceremony,—for it signalized the perpetuation of a ruling dynasty which has controlled the fortunes of the British people for many hundreds of years, protected and enforced by military power. Surrounded by subjects of the King, feeling the importance of the earthly power exercised by the empire over the world, I could still feel that the spirit which characterized the American citizenship rose from the spirit of the sturdy integrity of the Anglo-Saxon race.

SOME books needed by Library: "Secret Societies in all ages," by Heckethorne; "History of Freemasonry," by Gould; "God's Image in Man," etc., published by Lee & Shepard, Boston; "History of Egypt," by E. A. Wallis Budge, M. A.; "New Conceptions in Science," by Carl Snyder.

It was difficult to see the King with any thought of studying the man as he passed, wearing as he did the elaborate uniform of a colonel in the Grenadier Guards. The large busby sitting low down upon the forehead hiding his eyes, the heavy strap covering the mouth and lower part of the face, precluded the formation of any estimate of his character as a man, therefore can express no opinion in reference to him, other than that he presented the appearance of a well-fed, hearty, good-natured Englishman. Other dignitaries formed part of the procession, among whom were noticed the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, the popular Lord Roberts, and many princes and diplomats from foreign Courts. The carriage containing Queen Alexandra, the Princess of Wales, and other ladies of the royal household, turned aside from the route of procession just before reaching the point where we stood, and was driven rapidly to the reserved seats set apart for their use during the ceremony, so we only succeeded in obtaining a glimpse of the lovely woman, whose name and character are so universally admired and, in Britain at least, loved with a deep and lasting affection.

The pageant passed, the crowd dispersed, and under the guidance of Bro. Howell, whose guests we were for our day's outing in the city, we visited Westminster Abbey, Britain's Mausoleum of her great and historic dead. Within the precincts of this venerable and imposing pile many ceremonies attendant upon the ruling of the nation have been witnessed, and beneath its floor many of England's departed kings, queens, heroes, poets, and statesmen, have been deposited, and their various deeds of virtue and heroism have been inscribed upon tablets and placed upon its walls. To us the most suggestive and impressive spot was the council chamber, in which the leading dignitaries of the church and state have taken into consideration questions affecting the welfare of the nation, in which they were interested during the time of their incumbency and office,—the "Jerusalem chamber."

Here it was that Henry IV spent his last days and died, before the large and elaborately carved fireplace, and his son, the impetuous but generous Henry V, snatched the dying king's crown, with hasty greed before the breath had left the body of his regal parent. Here, too, were enacted the scenes of the translation of the Bible under King James, who gave to the world the common translation of our Bible, to us the most sanctifying of all the scenes and events which have transpired within the venerable pile. It was in this room, also, that the council of divines met to revise the Bible.

The impression made upon me, as I regarded this so-called venerable pile and noted the decay which the gnawing tooth of time has traced upon its walls and columns, was that it is commemorative of the rise and decline of a hierarchy which cursed the world in the sacred name of religion. Within its walls were enacted some of the most detestable and sacrilegious farces in the name of justice against individuals for the exercise of conscience and liberty of thought, whose real crimes were that they stood in the way of the unholy ambition and lustful desires of those who held political power. We could but revere and venerate the sacred uses of this edifice founded in the exercise of religious fervor to commemorate supposed virtues in others and ostensibly to the honor and glory of God. And, however much we may fancy or believe they were the virtues of mistaken piety, we can but give them credit for the motive by which many of them were actuated. But moralizing upon the still visible evidences of human frailty and folly or wickedness in high places has but little to do with modern London, and so we left the solemn cloisters of Westminster Abbey, moving out into the garish light of day to mingle and jostle in the restless, swirling torrents of London's busy streets. Near by, and right opposite to the Abbey, are the Houses of Parliament, the Lords, and the Commons. Here Britain's modern lawmakers, the hereditary incumbents of the offices and the ones elected by the people, meet and engage in wordy warfare as to what shall be and what shall not be the law by which her people shall be governed. Among these we may mention, as now pending, measures for the amelioration of the condition of the King's Irish subjects, who for seven hundred years have been under the cruel despotism of a feudal system fastened upon them by their incoming conquerors under William of Normandy; and the momentous question as to whether a man may marry his "deceased wife's sister," commonly known as "The Deceased Wife's Sister Bill."

In the first, and to my mind the most important of these two questions, occurs a splendid and historic opportunity for King Edward and his Parliament to effect a lasting and beneficial revolution for the good of his subjects in the Emerald Isle, which will inscribe his name and title upon the scroll of honor, and in after centuries he will be regarded as a benefactor and deliverer of these people who for centuries have been ground down under the heel of aristocracy and enslaved with the manacles of religious superstition. If he can and will by the deepening and broadening of his sympathies interest himself and wield the influence he possesses for the emancipation of Ireland's poor oppressed thousands, he will earn for himself a place in the affections of all his people equalled only by that of his illustrious mother and prove himself her worthy successor. Having no desire to interfere in the political questions of the British Empire I simply note the impressions received by seeing the ancient and the modern buildings which must arouse more than ordinary interest and regard.

From this place we meandered along until we found ourselves under the shadow of the domes of Saint Paul's Cathedral. What we have read of Saint Paul's was justified by our observation, brief and hurried though it was, of the grand, magnificent structure. Tired as we were with wandering in the hot glare of the sun over the hard and dusty pavement, we were pleased to sit down in the quiet calm of that sacred church, under the swelling beauties of that grand old dome, a perpetual reminder of Sir Christopher Wren, the celebrated architect under whose skillful direction the cathedral was erected, and rest on one of the plain but comfortable chairs listening to the modulated cadences of the venerable prelate who was pronouncing a eulogy of well-deserving praise upon England's greatest of poets—Milton.

This eulogy over, we passed into the street viewing the monuments of Wellington, the Iron Duke, and General Charles Gordon, Chinese Gordon, who perished in Kartoum, two of England's great soldiers.

This covered the tour of sight-seeing and we hurried home to Bro. Sheldon's to meet a representative of the London Daily Mail, one of the widest circulated papers in England. What the result of this interview may be, we do not know, though we think it was somewhat disappointing to the reporters seeking for something sensational to satisfy their readers.

A visit to Enfield and a reception at the house of Bro. and Sr. Judd were followed by a service in the Saints' hall at which after introduction by Bro. Rushton, we two visiting brethren spoke to those in attendance, two reporters being among them. On Saturday, the 27th, Bro. Howell being unable to get off from work, under the supervision of Bro. Sheldon and still in company with Bro. Rushton we visited Tower Bridge and witnessed the lifting of the draw, each leaf of which weighs one thousand seventy-five tons, which is moved by hydraulic pressure, and the passing of a Dutch vessel above the bridge to her anchorage in the Thames, a circumstance providential to visitors from a distant land. From the bridge we went to the celebrated Tower of London, an architectural monument of the reigns of the rulers of England dating from the time of William the Norman, with whom it originated. We have neither time nor inclination to attempt a description of all we saw; suffice it to say, that the impressions recalled by the reading of the history of England of cruelties practiced upon prisoners of state in the Tower, unto the end of many of them on the block under the heads-men's ax on the green, were accentuated as though we were present at the actual enactment of the scenes themselves.

Wearied by the labor imposed by passing from place to place, the Editor and Bro. Sheldon parted with Brn. Evans and Rushton, and went home to rest, the younger men feeling an active desire to visit and see the aggregated wealth of the empire in the collection known as the crown jewels, a collection representing seventeen and a half millions of dollars, one piece alone, namely, the crown of King Edward VII, valued at five millions of dollars, a magnificent sum to be gathered into one object weighing less than three pounds, to be worn by the royal head on state occasions.

Saturday ended with service in the Saint's church at which Bro. R. C. Evans preached from the first stanza of the well-known hymn, "Lead, kindly light." It was a memorable day and will furnish food for reminiscences in many an otherwise idle hour.

Sunday morning we gathered in the church at eleven o'clock, when Bro. J. W. Worth, the president of the London Branch, had charge, and Bro. Evans preached the sermon from the text, "Ye must be born again." The audience was attentive and the preacher enthused with his subject. The afternoon service was prayer and testimony in charge of our aged brother, Thomas Bradshaw, who, with his family, have been long and steadfast advocates of the faith in London, assisted by the Editor. The branch had secured the Stratford Town Hall, for the evening service beginning at half past six. The congregation was fair under the circumstances, and the sermon was preached by the Editor, who felt blessed in the effort. Bro. J. W. Rushton had charge and presided with due propriety, Bro. R. C. Evans offering the opening prayer. At the close, two of the audience presented some questions, the questions were gracefully turned over to Bro. Evans, who, as usual, was equal to the emergency. So closed our first Sabbath day in England and our labors in London ended.

Monday morning after bidding adieu to Bro. and Sr. Sheldon, whose kind hospitality we had shared and appreciated, we left the great city of London en route for Lydney. We passed on our way Windsor Castle, another of the royal residences, whose flag, floating in the breeze from the battlements, conveyed the knowledge that the King and Queen were in residence there. We reached Lydney at fifteen minutes past four in the afternoon, where we were announced to preach in the evening.

With kind regards to all,

Your colaborer in Christ,

JOSEPH SMITH.

It is vastly better to have something to say and say it roughly than to be smooth spoken and have an empty head.

HELP THE TRACT FUND.

Missionaries from all parts of the world are calling for tracts. Branches and districts are asking for tracts. The Religio Society is calling for tracts and sending in some money to pay for its orders.

The church is furnishing tracts to all of these; but all should remember that the tract fund is not endowed. The Saints must not forget this part of their work. No work is more important, and no Latter Day Saint can afford to fail to perform his duty in making an offering to help along this work.

To help send out the gospel in this way is to "cast bread upon the water,"—the good results will be realized by and by. Send in your offerings for the tract fund. Pay to any bishop or bishop's agent, or send direct to the Presiding Bishop, E. L. Kelley, Box 18, Lamoni, Iowa. But do not forget to help the tract fund, and do it now!

"TRANS-ATLANTIC AMERICAN."

President Joseph Smith in a letter to his wife inclosed a copy of the Trans-Atlantic American, "printed and published on board the steamship New York." It is a small, four-page paper, neatly printed. One column is devoted to "Latest Marconigrams." The following under the heading "From the Log" is of interest:

June 17, 10 a. m. Commenced voyage. In communication with Pier, Babylon, and Sagaponack. In communication with Cunard liner, "Aurania" she reports—"Had fine clear passage."

June 18. In communication with Nantucket Station, we report—"All well to New York."

June 19. Signals from Cunard liner Campania and American liner Philadelphia.

June 24, 11 a. m. In communication with Marconi's Lizord Station.

DANGER OF "THEORIES."

In an article written shortly before his death for the London Times, entitled a "Generation in a City Pulpit," Doctor Joseph Parker gave expression to facts or beliefs he had learned by his long experience. He spoke of the repeated but unsuccessful efforts to break down Sabbath observance utterly; then he wrote, as quoted in a recent number of the Presbyter:

I will go further and testify that within my personal observation no heterodoxy permanently thrives. Even magic lanterns "have their day and cease to be." They are toys for a season only. Odd practices, eccentric doctrines, fads, megrims, and all sorts of intellectual curiosities may flourish for a time, but "having no deepness of earth, they soon wither away." False doctrine, however eloquently expounded, hardly ever pays its own rent. Many a startling heterodoxy intended to bring in an intellectual renaissance has had its light cut off by some sordid gas company, callously indifferent to modern speculation and the artistic temperament. Account for it as we may, it is the gospel old and undefiled that alone can stand the wear and tear of time, and grow younger with the wasting years. The only thing that is really new is the Christian Evangel, and that is because its newness is really old. When time draws a draught of water from a surface pool, she mocks the world's thirst; only when she draws from eternal springs is she the servant and messenger of God. In the last thirty-three years I have seen enough dead theories, exploded nightmares and discarded hypotheses to make a full-sized cemetery. They have gone the way of all the earth. They flamboyantly entered the world as an amateur military band, and coughed their way out of it as a squad of consumptive tramps. Whenever a preacher has a new and sparkling theory in religion, I know that the first nail in his coffin has been driven and clinched.

The lesson to be drawn from Doctor Parker's words is, stick closely to the written word, and avoid finely-spun theories which take you far into the realms of the speculative and unknown.

DOCTOR INGLIS ON TEA AND COFFEE.

In connection with the Word of Wisdom, the following words of Doctor David B. Inglis, a noted nerve specialist of Detroit, are significant and worthy of careful consideration, especially by Saints who use tea and coffee despite the advice of the Word of Wisdom to the contrary. After speaking of some causes of nervousness, he said:

Another prolific cause of nervousness is the use of tea and coffee. Personally, I don't care whether you use the narcotics—it simply adds to my income. But if you ask me for the causes of nervous difficulties I must be honest, and tell you that tea and coffee are to blame for more troubles of this kind than any other poison—yes, more than alcohol or tobacco, because more widely used by both sexes. Not until the nation has stopped using these beverages can it hope to be freed from nervous difficulties.

The language as above we quote from the July number of the American Mother, in its report from the National Congress of Mothers, held in Detroit, Michigan, May, 1903. Doctor Inglis delivered his address before a meeting of the Mothers.

EVIDENCE OF PREHISTORIC MEN IN MONTANA.

Sr. M. K. Kling, of Akron, Ohio, sends us the following extract from the Beacon Journal for July 2, 1903. It may be of interest to some of the Book of Mormon students:

BIG TIMBER, Montana, July 2.—Wonderful discoveries of fossils and bones of prehistoric men and animals are being made in the Fish Creek country by Professor M. S. Farr and a party of students from Princeton University. In the remains of a city belonging to the stone age Professor Farr found the bones of animals of immense size, and various crude instruments many of them studded with gems. Near the creek was found, almost complete, the skeleton of a man nine feet high, and another skeleton, somewhat smaller, was found near by, probably being that of a woman. Bones believed to have belonged to a dog the size of a horse were also discovered.

LIFE is not made up of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things, of which smiles and kindness and small obligations, given habitually, are what win and preserve the heart.—Sir Humphrey Davy.

SUPPORT GRACELAND COLLEGE.

In the Ensign for July 9, the editor, under the caption, "It's up to you," has an editorial which is well worthy of careful consideration by every Saint who wishes to be in the line of progress. He clearly points out the urgent necessity for wiping out Graceland's debt as soon as possible, and closes his article with the statement, "If the Saints are wise, earnest, and faithful, one of the events which our worthy Historian of the church will record of this year will be, that the year 1903 marked the deliverance of Graceland from the incubus of debt which has so cruelly trammelled its usefulness in the years since its doors were first opened with a welcome to all who desired to equip themselves for effective work in the church, and in the affairs of men."

We most sincerely hope that the wish of the editor of the Ensign may be realized and that the close of 1903 will see Graceland free from debt, that the college may the more completely enter upon its work as a distinctive factor in the development of the great latter-day work in what we believe to be the latter times. We do not believe that Graceland's usefulness is fully entered upon as yet, and one of our reasons for so believing is the fact that her support by the Saints has not as yet been what it should be. With the great burden of debt lifted, the Saints then can arise to the emergency and sustain the school in such a way that it can rapidly find its place of greatest usefulness and prove to the Saints the wisdom manifested in establishing the school when it was.

The time may never come and probably never will, that the Saints will not need to contribute to the maintenance of Graceland College, unless some beneficent person arises and endows the college with a sum so munificent that its support will be ever after assured. Until such an endowment is established the Saints will have to go down into their pockets annually and maintain the institution.

That it is worthy of such a support we think no one can deny. But beside the financial obligations of the Saints toward the support of Graceland College, there is another kind of support which it is hoped the Saints will at once give, and that is the healthy, lasting support of patronage. That there was in the minds of the men whose efforts resulted in establishing Graceland, a firm conviction that there was a need for a church school, we can not doubt. To say that there was not wisdom in establishing the school when it was, would be to reflect upon the judgment of the conference which sanctioned the movement, and a continued reflection upon the conferences which have from year to year sustained the school. Whatever may have been the differences of opinion concerning the founding of the college, those differences should have long ago been buried and every loyal Latter Day Saint become active in the interests of Graceland.

As there was a need for the establishing of the school, so there must be the need of Latter Day Saints sending their children to that school, so that they may receive the benefits for which the school was instituted and has been sustained. Hence Saints should feel it not only a pleasure but a duty to see that their children who are expecting to attend college should have their eyes turned Graceland-ward. We do not see how Saints can feel otherwise than that there are decided benefits in sending their children to Graceland. We believe we are safe in saying that there has not been a young Latter Day Saint who has attended other colleges or universities under the management of either sectarian or civil authorities who has not felt the handicap of being in an element somewhat antagonistic to the faith in which he has been raised. Hence it follows that the student who is pursuing work in Graceland where he can feel that his interests are always close to those people who are guiding his footsteps along the pathways of human learning, will do the work more satisfactory to himself, and his environments will be such as to keep him more closely in touch with the faith under whose influences he has been reared.

While the work of Graceland as a school is strictly non-sectarian, in that the theology and doctrines of no particular church are taught, yet the influences which surround the school are morally such as are usually found in Latter Day Saint communities. This can not but be a recommendation to Latter Day Saints who are contemplating sending their children to college. We make the statement that the moral environments in Lamoni are such as are usually found in live Latter Day Saint communities, notwithstanding the fact that we know there are malcontents who are prone to circulate reports that the moral tone of Lamoni is not such as to justify the above statement. These malcontents, however, are found in all communities, and are ever ready to decry anything local, and are continually looking for the greenness of distant fields.

Graceland labors under one great disadvantage under her crippled financial condition, the importance or significance of which Latter Day Saints can not afford to ignore. In hiring teachers for the school, to insure efficiency the board is compelled to compete with other institutions in the way of salary, or else depend upon Latter Day Saints who are willing to make some sacrifice in this way, and work in Graceland for less than what they can get in other schools. Some there are who have manifested a willingness to make such sacrifice. Are there others?

We trust that the Saints everywhere will give Graceland serious and prayerful thought, and that all of them will assist this year to give in every way the support needed. Let us sustain the board, and the faculty which is chosen by them. Let us remember that Graceland is our school, and let us see to it that those in charge of its work are supported so heartily that it will be made a successful institution of which we may all be proud.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Under date of July 9 Bro. H. E. Moler wrote from Peoria, Illinois, to R. S. Salyards: "Bro. F. A. Russell and I are now busy at street work here in this city. We are having good crowds here most every night, notwithstanding we have some on the opposite side of the street nearly every night who conduct services of some kind, such as the Salvation Army or the Volunteers of America, but we seem to get our share of the crowds."

In a letter from Sydney, Australia, June 9, Bro. J. W. Wight wrote to R. S. Salyards: "I expect to go to Adelaide soon for the discussion which Bro. Jones has stirred up. If it turns out as the one at Melbourne did we will certainly profit, as twenty-six have been baptized since the debate began, and Bro. Mackie is to baptize five more next Sunday. We expect to get the work better established in Adelaide as a result. I expect to start home November 2, if via Vancouver: November 9, if via San Francisco."

Bro. I. N. Roberts wrote from Louisville, Kentucky, July 6: "We had a fine sacrament and prayer-meeting yesterday. Most all took part in the meeting and were blessed in so doing. We also fasted and the good Lord was with his children. I will leave here Thursday for Fulton, Kentucky. I ordained Bro. J. W. Metcalf yesterday to the office of seventy as per action of the General Conference. Felt well in ordaining."

We note the following in a letter from Elder D. L. Shinn, Annamariah, West Virginia, July 9: "Bro. E. H. Durand is with me here and we have the schoolhouse and the attention of the people where there was a battle fought two years ago between Shinn and Bunner of the Disciples, and recently another between Godbey and Kirkman of the same church. Bro. J. L. Goodrich was here a short time ago and baptized Sr. Robert Cooper. Elders Weaver and Bell of the Disciples were, we are informed, full of pugnacity and have been anxious for a fight but have not uttered a single growl since we came. Shall do our best for the HERALD."

Bro. H. A. McCoy wrote from Packard, Iowa, July 10: "Elder S. K. Sorensen and I are here with the tent. Found the interest not good, closed tent-meeting the evening of the 7th and took down tent just in time to avoid a very bad storm. Since that time it has been raining all the time; creeks and rivers are out of banks and will do great damage again."

Bro. and Sr. George F. Closson wrote these words of appreciation from Matthewson, Oklahoma, July 8: "We do not feel that we could get along without the HERALD. When a number happens to be late in reaching us we feel lost. We enjoy reading the good that it contains."

Apostle I. N. White wrote from Independence, Missouri, July 10: "Will remain in the Illinois Mission till after their reunion to be held at Dry Fork, from August 1 to 10. After that will go to the Taberville reunion August 14 to 24."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We recently noted the fact that an ancient city had been discovered in Mexico, in a remote part of the state of Pueblo. Press dispatches on June 25 from Mexico City state that the Mexican government has deemed the discovery of sufficient importance archaeologically to justify sending the sub-director of the national museum, Senor F. Rodigeruez to visit the ruins. He was accompanied by Nicholas Leon, an archaeologist and ethnologist, who reports the ruins such as never have been known to the world of science, "and the most primitive ever discovered in Mexico," so ancient indeed that a great deal of time and study would be necessary to learn "in what epoch these were built, as well as by what people."

We have received from Henry Clews & Company, bankers, New York, a little pamphlet called "Investment Guide," containing much information such as usually interests investors.

In a letter to the First Presidency dated June 12, Bro. C. A. Butterworth writes that his health is improving gradually. This will be good news to the Saints.

A. G. Mumma, of Lamoni, Iowa, an enterprising merchant, has provided Graceland College in a way that is worthy of emulation. He placed a fine clock in the hall, which has been very much appreciated by the students and faculty. We wonder that there are not other merchants as thoughtful of Graceland as Mr. Mumma has been.

Elder F. M. Cooper had a communication on the editorial page of the Chicago Inter-Ocean for July 9 in which he corrects mistakes made in a report of the celebration of the founding of Plano published in that paper. He makes plain the connection of the church with the early history of Plano and distinguishes between our organization and the Utah people in a way that is bound to aid the work.

Word comes to us from the Church Recorder's office that the family of Bro. William Graham will organize a branch at Gordon, North Dakota, on July 17.

The Mystic Bell has succeeded the Gospel Echo as the name of the little sheet published at Denver, Colorado, in the interests of the work.

A large crowd of Lamoni Saints witnessed a grand event at the "Home Pond" last Sunday. Nineteen were "born of water" at the hands of Elders F. B. Blair and J. A. Gunsolley. Three of the new members were confirmed at the water's edge and the rest at Sunday evening services.

We have received the first number of the Watchman, a monthly publication edited by D. L. Shinn and issued by the Clarksburg, West Virginia, Branch. It is to be distributed throughout that section to meet misrepresentations and to help remove prejudice and open the way for preaching. We anticipate that much good will be done by the neat little paper and commend the Clarksburg Saints for their undertaking.

WORKS.

SERMON BY ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH.

Delivered in London, England, June 23, 1898.

(Reported by J. D. Howell.)

I will read from second chapter of Ephesians:

And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience; among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness toward us, through Christ Jesus. For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them. Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands; that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: but now, in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ.

This is the reading of the first thirteen verses of the second chapter of Paul's epistle to the Ephesians.

I desire to-night to invite your special attention to the eighth and ninth verses: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast."

It is thought by a great many people who hear our theories presented, that this passage of Scripture is against us, and we are sometimes accused of avoiding it. If it is against us we want to know it. I am sure that I have no disposition to try to avoid meeting any statement made in the word of God, and if in it there is anything so contrary to the theory I preach and can be made to appear so, I am anxious to become acquainted with it, for I do not wish to do anything out of harmony with the word of God. We shall therefore, to-night, examine this passage of Scripture carefully. In the first place we call your attention to Paul's statement that men are saved by faith and not by works lest any man should boast. Our critics tell us that our theory calls upon men to obey the ordinances of the gospel which involves works, and if we are to work out our salvation in fear and trembling, then it is contrary to the theory here expressed that man is not saved by works.

I will take occasion right here to state that if the Apostle meant by this statement that man was to do no work at all, that no character of work was required at his hands, it is out of harmony with other passages of Scripture and other writers. I read in the seventh chapter of Matthew and twenty-first verse what the Lord said in regard to that subject. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Now there he places the vital issue upon what a man DOES, not upon what he says. Not upon his profession but upon his acts. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." If that does not imply that a man must work and that action is required at his hands, then I fail to understand the meaning of the language, and this will appear more evident when we read the context. "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity. Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them [mark the language] I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house, and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it."

Now in this illustration the Lord shows the difference between the wise and the foolish man in building and the difference between the two does not occur because of the building itself, but it occurs because of the foundations upon which they build. They are both supposed to have built houses, but there is no criticism here upon the man who built upon the sand so far as the house is concerned, nor is there any intimation that the house was inferior to the other man's house. They built their houses—one upon the sand and the other upon a rock. When the rain descended and the floods came and the winds blew and beat upon the house built upon the rock it fell not; it stood, but when the house that had been built upon the sand went through the like experience and the same conditions surrounded it, it trembled and fell—one had been built upon a foundation of rock and the other upon the drifting sands. Now the man who built his house upon the sands represents the man who hears the words of the Lord and does not do them, and the man who builds his house upon the rock represents the man who hears the word of the Lord and does them. Now the difference between the foolish and the wise lies simply in the doing. Not in the hearing, not in the believing, not in the acceptance of the fact that he is required to build does his wisdom lie, but in actually building and thereby doing the will of the Lord. That to my mind implies most emphatically that a man must work; that there is something for him to do. If then man must work in order to obtain an entrance into the kingdom of heaven, Paul, in saying what our friends make him say, that man has no work to perform, is out of harmony with the teachings of Christ. I, however, do not think that Paul is out of harmony with the teachings of the Lord and when we examine Paul's writings we find that what Jesus taught Paul taught: he teaches that man is expected to work out his salvation. But before we give any further attention to this, we want to cite the language of James as well. He takes the position that a man must work and that there are acts which he must perform. In the second chapter of the epistle of James commencing at the fourteenth verse, we read these words: "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him?" Now he asks a question here and asks it in such a way and frames it in such language that we are led to the conclusion if we read no further than this that the Apostle James would have us believe that faith alone would not save men. He then illustrates, "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?" He uses that illustration of the position he occupies that a man can not be saved by faith alone.

If a man is naked and he is told to depart in peace and has no home to go to, does it do him any good? That is the idea. Has he profited by your faith? He has gained nothing by making his condition known to you and importuning you, for no works accompanied the faith. James says that faith without works is dead, being alone. That is a positive statement. Further he says, "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well. The devils also believe and tremble. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?" That is his position. Our friends make Paul contradict James when they quote him as saying that man has no work to do.

James, in order that he might not be misunderstood, illustrates further and says, "Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?" Whatever others may think there is no doubt whatever about James' position on the point. Paul is not quite so clear as James, but I think we shall see before we get through to-night that he agrees with James: there is no question about that. James believed that no man could be perfect unless his faith was confirmed by acts and says, "Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the friend of God. Ye see then [and mark what a positive statement this is] how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." Now I read somewhere and you may know where it is when I quote it but I shall not tell you where it is, that "the doctrine of sanctification by faith only is a very wholesome doctrine and very full of comfort," that is, that faith alone is very wholesome and very full of comfort. Now to me that is NOT true: it is not full of comfort to me and it is out of harmony with the statement of the Apostle here, for he says that a man is not saved by faith only but by faith and works. That to me is a wholesome doctrine very full of comfort. James then proceeds to say, "Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way? For as the body [and here comes a leading illustration upon the point] without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." "As the body without the spirit is dead." Now you know just what condition the body is in when the spirit has departed from it. Its vitality is gone; its power is gone; it has become a helpless mass of clay, and that is not the worst of it, we should be glad sometimes if the body when the spirit has gone remained simply a helpless body. Men have endeavored to preserve it by embalming it, but when the spirit has gone the body is without power, vitality, and locomotion. Very soon it becomes a mass of corruption and very soon we are not safe in the presence of that body, and although we may love that unanimated form of clay, yet it must be taken away and we must bury it in the cold ground and cover it again with its Mother Earth simply that our lives may not be in danger by coming in contact with it in its corrupted state.

Now if faith without works is like a body without life there is no vitality in it. There is no power in it, but it must become a mass of corruption, and in order that we may preserve our spiritual health we must not come in contact with faith without works, but we must take it away and bury it for ever or our spiritual health will be endangered. That was James' position and he was very emphatic in teaching that man could not be saved unless work was included with his faith. Does Paul disagree with him? We can not afford to disagree with Paul. If he is in harmony with James, then the position taken up by our friends that he is against him is wrong and they are mistaken as to his teachings. We will admit for a short time for the sake of argument, that they are right, and assume that no works are to be done at all. Works avail nothing, and if that is so it is positively wrong to do anything, as it is written that we shall do nothing that is not productive of good, for "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." If then this rendering of Apostle Paul is right, it is very pertinent for us to ask, "What is work?" for if there is no work to be done, we must understand what work is, and we must make no mistake as to what is meant by the term. Our friends in taking the position they do, tell us that baptism is a work, and I assume that if baptism is to be excluded then other things are to be excluded also. Work does not mean action of the physical body alone, it is an operation of the mind as well. Webster defines work as an effort of the body or of the mind, action physical or mental. I do not know whether any one defines it in any other way, and I do not know any one that will question Webster's definition.

Now if all work is to be excluded, we are to make no effort of the mind or of the body. There must be no exercise in any way or we will be out of harmony with the passage of Scripture as interpreted by our friends. It is generally understood when you go to a library that you go to read the works of men's minds, and on the book-covers you will read the title, The Works of Professor So and So. In common parlance that which is born of the intellect of men is called work, and if Paul means no work at all, we are simply not to think, and how can we believe in anything at all without thinking? If we are not to think how can we have faith; how can we believe in God? Well did the Apostle James say that by works was faith made perfect. You can not have faith without works because it takes work to have faith and it takes work to believe. But some one says, "We don't believe it that way." I thought not. And so we agree that some works are not excluded by this passage of Scripture, and if some works are not excluded, perhaps the very thing you try to exclude is not excluded.

Says another, "We draw a line between physical and mental work. We believe that mental work is all right. But what we mean is that man is not required to do anything outwardly for the salvation of his soul." If we are to make no effort physically, then where are we? I am told here in the writings of the Apostle Paul that it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. If you think that preaching does not require a physical effort, just try it. Then if God has determined by the foolishness of preaching to save men, it requires a physical exertion to do so. So you see you can not exclude all physical works; the Scriptures will not permit it. You can not attend the house of prayer without physical exertion. It requires physical exertion to get here and physical exertion to sing the praises of God when you are here. It requires physical exertion to utter the name of God in prayer—you should not sing and you should not preach if it means physical exertion. What do you think of it? Do you think then that the Apostle Paul, when he advised that no man should boast of what he did, intended to say that there was no virtue attaching to anything accomplished which required physical exertion? I hardly think that the man who stops and analyzes the language and reads carefully will think so. If men would but critically examine the language and ask themselves, "What do these things mean?" there would not be so many false theories in the world to-day upon which so many people build their hope of salvation.

Now we will read this again: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast."

Certainly Paul did not mean that there were no works to be performed, and when we analyze his language carefully, whatever other conclusion we may come to, I think we shall conclude that Paul is in harmony with James. We will read further this time and not stop where people usually stop.

We will admit that it is by grace we are saved through faith. It was the grace of God, the favor, and love of God towards us that gave us the plan of redemption. We did not make it; we had no part in forming it; it was never born in the intellect of man, but man received it by the grace of God. God favored him with it and bestowed it upon him and for this reason Paul says, "For by grace are ye saved through faith; [faith in the plan revealed through the Christ-man to save you,] and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." That explains it. It is not of yourselves, but it is the gift of God. "Not of works, lest any man should boast." Under what possible condition could a man boast when the plan of salvation was given to him. When he had it fully presented to him there was no occasion for any boasting. If a man accepts a plan of redemption from another, though that plan may require something to be done on his part, he has no occasion to boast.

Now we told you that we would read a little further and we will. Paul, as you will notice, uses the word for in order to give a reason for what he has said before "For [because] we are his workmanship, [we are the workmanship of God,] created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." That is just as plain as the other when you read it. God has ordained good works for us to walk in.

The reason why we are not to boast and not saved by the works of which we could boast is because we are the workmanship of God and he has created us in Christ Jesus unto good works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them. God hath ordained that we should walk in good works. Now that agrees with the Savior and agrees with James and Paul but excludes the works a man could boast of if they were in any way effective in saving him.

Let me suggest here that when you are told you have something to do, that you can solve the problem by asking yourself the question, "Has God ordained it?" If he has, you ought to do it; if he has not, then do not do it. The question is as pertinent a question as any that could be asked.

If I make the statement that a certain work is necessary as a part of the plan that will save you and you are satisfied about it, obey it; if not, reject it. If I am not able to establish the fact that God has ordained it, then I have not performed my mission well.

We are told that we are out of harmony with Paul because we ask people to obey the ordinances of the gospel of Christ, but instead of our being out of harmony our objectors themselves are out of harmony if we are to walk in the good works ordained of God.

One of the most beautiful thoughts recorded in the Scriptures is that we are to be collaborators together with God, for this is what Paul says in his epistle to the Corinthians. I like to think of that. I would dislike very much to be deprived of the privilege of working together with God, for when we accomplish any material good we do so by working with God.

We enjoy many privileges to-day that our fathers did not enjoy. In the early days they did not know anything of steam which we have utilized to drive our wonderful and burdensome vessels from one part of the earth to the other. They were just as sincere as we are to-day, but the present benefits they did not enjoy because they were ignorant of the means now employed. But the thought is that we did not discover the power of steam by which all these wonderful things around us are enjoyed. We did not create it. We boast sometimes of our inventions, and of our progress, and all that sort of thing, but really in this, as in the plan of salvation, we have nothing to boast of. These things were given to us by the grace of God, and we accepted them by faith just as much as we did the teaching of the inspired word. When man harnessed the power of steam he did not create a single thing in connection with it, but he simply learned how to work together with God in the matter. God had created the law by which it was done and had suffered man to become acquainted with it in order to perform its work, and by learning the law he had placed himself in harmony with its Creator. Man learned how to bring the lightning to the earth and by its means transmit messages over the earth in an instant of time, and by its means turn darkness into light. But he did not create anything. When men use the power called electricity they simply utilize what is already created—they simply learn to labor together with God. When we place ourselves in harmony with the laws we are laboring together with God, and are able to use the forces of nature for our benefit, but so long as we are ignorant of the laws, so long will we fail to receive any benefit from the forces around us. If that is true it is true also of the spiritual law that governs and saves us, and it stands to reason if we suffer loss because of ignorance in other things, we will suffer loss if we are ignorant of the plan of salvation by which the Lord has proposed to lift us into his presence. What we have to do in other things is just what we have to do in regard to the gospel of Christ—we have to learn to labor together with God, and when we have learned that we will accomplish wonderful things in the spiritual as well as the material world.

Right here allow me to suggest the thought that if men are not performing the same works that they did eighteen hundred years ago, it is because they do not know the law. The more man learns to labor with God, the more he will be able to accomplish.

I have no sympathy with the thought that away back, nearly two thousand years ago, men were able to work together spiritually with God, but that we can not do it now; and the reason I have no sympathy with the thought is that it suggests to me that we are not so thoroughly in harmony with God as they were, and that instead of our making advancement we have been retrograding. There can be no question about that. It is, I think, a very regrettable thing to have to say that while we have been advancing in certain lines, and while we have been discovering the forces of nature in the heavens above and the earth beneath, and utilizing them for our good and for the advancement and development of the world, that we have gone back in spiritual things and can not work so effectually now as the people used to do.

Can men avoid this conclusion? Until they begin to learn the laws of God, this world will never be converted. You may arouse their enthusiasm, or you may arouse their fears and cause them to be alarmed, but that is only a mild form of the teachings of the Dark Ages. They used to put men on the rack and use thumb screws, and all that sort of thing, in order to make men confess that they believed in God, and when they had made that confession under torture they supposed them to be converted. The same spirit prompts the preaching to-day of the terrors and torments of hell, to scare you to confess that you believe in God. The principle is the same in both cases—one is applied physical torment, the other mental torment. Such teaching dwarfs the intellects of men. You want to learn the truths that we have set before you to-night, that if you are in harmony with God you will be able to accomplish something, and until this lesson is learned all the preaching that causes men to profess the name of Christ through the fear of torment hereafter, will be worse than a farce—it will be poisonous to the mind, and men will never be satisfied. But when men are conscious of the fact that they are strangers from God, and are made to understand the means of reconciliation, then they will be satisfied.

We have to think along certain lines, that is, to think according to law if we are to accomplish anything. If you allow your thoughts to run riot you will never be able to come to any correct conclusion. You want to be very careful. You want to be sure that your thoughts are in the right direction, or they may not amount to anything. We must think of how to be able to work together with God. God has given us a law by which we are not only to work but to think, and our thoughts should be directed along that line if we wish to accomplish something. We can make our faith perfect by our works, and then we are certain to be saved. That is a wholesome thought.

We sometimes talk about working for God. The man who works for humanity is the man that is accomplishing something. You may ask, Does the Divine need any assistance from you? If not, work for humanity, for the elevation of your fellow beings. The prayer of the Master just before he was offered up carries out the thought that we have presented. He says, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Oh, that is the idea: we are to be one, God in Christ and Christ in men. We are to work together and then we shall accomplish some good, and the more harmonious we are with them, the greater will be the work we can accomplish. Then we will not be discouraged by the thought that Christianity is retrograding instead of developing. I believe that so long as there is one left that shall be doing right in the sight of God, he shall work by the gifts and power of God and he shall accomplish something, not because he can do it alone, but by reason of the fact that God dwelleth in him. And so you and I may accomplish great good by working together with God. We are saved then by grace through faith, and that not of ourselves: for "it is the gift of God: . . . for we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

I have not the least particle of doubt with regard to the work in which we are engaged. I am confident that we shall see the triumph of this latter-day work. I do not know whether we shall see it here or in the hereafter, but either in the flesh or in the spirit we shall witness it. We shall see it rise triumphant over every obstacle that opposes it, for God is in this latter-day work and we shall either be satisfied and rejoice in its triumph, or we shall be filled with shame and confusion if we have not been faithful to the trust reposed in us.

It is our duty to know God each for him or herself, and when we know him we can intelligently work with him; which is the secret of success in all legitimate effort.

ANOTHER TRADITION OF THE FOUR BROTHERS.

Speaking of the traditions of the American Indian, Mr. Brinton, in "Myths of the New World," says: "Hardly a nation on the continent but seems to have some vague tradition of an origin from four brothers, to have at some time been led by four leaders or princes, or in some manner to have connected the appearance and action of four important personages with its earliest traditional history."

The following extract is along the same line and shows that the tradition was carried to the islands of the sea. It is also a clue to the origin of the inhabitants of the islands of the Pacific. It is taken from the June, 1903, number of the Paradise of the Pacific, from an article written by Reverend Westervelt.

"Four brothers, each bearing the name of Maui, belong to Hawaiian legend. They accomplished little as a family, except on special occasions when the youngest of the household awakened his brothers by some unexpected trick which drew them into unwonted action. The legends of Hawaii, Tonga, Tahiti, New Zealand, and the Harvey group make this youngest Maui 'the discoverer of fire' . . . 'the man endowed with magic,' or 'Maui with spirit power.' . . .

"The Harvey Island legends say that four mighty ones lived in the old world from which their ancestors came. This old world bore the name of Ava-iki, which is the same as Hawa-ii, or Hawaii. It is interesting to trace the connection of these four names with Hawaiian mythology."

ADDRESS OF SENATOR HOAR.

[THE following paragraphs are extracted from an address delivered by the Honorable George Frisbie Hoar of Massachusetts, at the University of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa, on Commencement Day, June 17, 1903. The eminence of Senator Hoar and the quality of the address make them worthy of our attention. In full the address occupied fourteen ordinary newspaper columns. It was all solid and scholarly though and we are sorry we can not have room for it all.—EDITORS.]

I think that our generation does not adequately comprehend the importance of treating a state, or town, or city, as a moral being with character, and affections, and principles and influence, and history, instead of a mere aggregation of human beings to be reckoned by numbers. Our ancestors recognized the American states as equals in these qualities, and did not apportion political power according to the mere brute force of numbers. Who would think of having a confederacy to which all Europe should belong in which Switzerland, or Holland, or Sweden should vote in proportion to numbers in the same body with Russia or Turkey? If there had been such a league or confederacy, in ancient times, who would have thought of having Athens, or Sparta, belong to a confederacy with Persia or Egypt, and having a vote in proportion to numbers? The fact that a city, or state, or town, is a moral being, with a life of its own, and a quality of its own, is one of the secrets of constitutional liberty. It is the secret of the great things which have been wrought out in political life in all human history. The fact that you think of your country, or your state, or your city, as you do of your mother, as an individual, is what makes you love her and ready to die for her. I have often thought, what indeed I have said more than once elsewhere, this moral quality which men in free states attribute to the state, or the country, has created all there is of value in a country's history. The citizen has a conception of the moral character of his country, and that conception inspires him with the same moral qualities, whether they be noble or base. When the French soldiers marched with Napoleon through Europe, overthrowing all her kingdoms and powers, to the tune of Marseillaise—"Sons of France, awake to glory!"—it was the master passion of France, the mother that inspired her sons. At the end of that march, forty centuries looked down on her from the pyramids. But one day in Trafalgar Bay, they met the children of another mother of a different moral quality and character, inspired by a very different sentiment. To them Nelson gave his immortal signal—"England expects every man to do his duty." Duty-loving England and glory-loving France met in that deadly conflict, as they have met on many an historic battlefield before and since, and then as ever, the lover of duty proved the stronger. The England that expected every man to do his duty was as real a being to the humblest sailor in Nelson's fleet as the mother that bore him. It is this that has made England; it is this that has made Massachusetts; it is this that has made little Rhode Island; it is this that has made Virginia; it is this that has made Iowa. And it is this that inspires her children with filial love!

The highest love of country is developed and strengthened, and not weakened, by local attachment. The man who loves his household best is the best neighbor. The man who loves his household and his neighbor best, is the best citizen for town or city. The man who loves his town or city best, loves his state best. The man who loves his town and city and state best, loves his country best.

I am, I believe, as ardent a lover of my country as any one. I do not believe that I love her better than do any of you. But I do not think it would be possible for any of us to love Russia or China or Turkey as we love America.

As soon as a free state has existed long enough to have a history that history itself becomes a powerful and, commonly, a conservative force. A great history begets a great history. It repeats itself. Everything upon which the eyes of the child have opened is full of high and stimulant counsel. The soldier's monument, the battle-ground, the legislative chamber, the scene of some civic victory, the venerable figures of survivors of a past generation, all these are inspirers and instructors of the youth. They train up the child in the way he should go better than any creed or catechism. Then comes the influence which we are apt to think of with alarm and dread, but which I incline to think is really among the most hopeful signs for the future of the people. That is the mixture of other races. Look a moment at one element in our American citizenship, which until very lately we have been more afraid of than any other. We are coming now to know better. We have had it in the East in larger numbers than you have. But it constitutes a large and important proportion of the western population also, especially in the cities, to which everywhere political power is passing. It is the element known as the Celtic. The other great component elements of our immigration, the English and the Scotch and the German and the Scandinavian, resemble the American of English stock in moral quality. They are, in general, as we are, Protestants in religion. They mingle readily and at once with the life which they find here. So we have never viewed their coming with much alarm. But to the element known as the Celtic some different considerations apply.

Nobody can tell exactly, but nearly or quite twenty-one millions of immigrants have come into this country within the living memory. If they were alive now, they would make a great and mighty nation, able to hold their own against any power in the world. I am not sure that they could not hold it against the powers of the world combined.

What brought them across the sea? Undoubtedly our great natural resources had something to do with it. But the natural resources of South America are as great as ours, and yet the immigrants do not go there. It is not a community of religious faith that attracted them. A large part of our immigration till very lately has been of conscientious and devoted Catholics. Yet they came to a Protestant country. It was not merely our rich and fertile fields or cheap lands that brought them here. Canada has a territory larger than ours; her lands are cheaper. She has still vast fields fit for wheat, uncultivated and unredeemed. Yet her chief seaports have been till very lately but gateways on one route from Europe to the United States. A majority of the natives of Canada are in the United States at this moment. The immigrants would not go to our Southern States, where slavery once existed and where it has left its race hatred behind. The one thing that brought these men here, perhaps half unconsciously to themselves, is three or four little sentences Thomas Jefferson wrote, and the fathers of the Republic signed: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by the Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

"That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundations on such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

When our fathers laid that corner-stone for the state they meant to make for the nations of the earth, without distinction of race or rank, a "City of Refuge, a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

If there be one lesson in which all authorities are agreed, it is that the greatest nations are made up of a mingling of races. The Celt not only had kept the purity of his blood in Ireland, but, in spite of Saxon and Norman and Dane, he was still the largest single part of England.

Now, in this mighty chemistry whose processes are age-long, whose cauldrons are continents, the elements do not mingle without effervescence and strife. Conflicts of religion, the struggle for political mastery, the hatred of race, the scorn of the gentleman for the inferior, the sullen anger of poverty toward wealth, all keep the great mass, in what, after all, is a healthy activity. But still, Time, the great reconciler, does his work. When the nation becomes one people, you have common interests, and common loves, and common fears. The same stars look down upon them. They worship the same God. They hope for the same heaven. Sunset and sunrise, spring and autumn, summer and winter, speak the same lesson to the soul. The noblest of human passions—love of country—burns alike in every bosom. The boys and girls go to the same school and the same college. Prosperity and adversity, hope and fear, joy and sorrow, come to all alike. As civilization and wealth grow, they come to read the same books and to think the same thoughts. They follow the same flag. They stand side by side on the same battlefields. The touch of nature that makes the world kin, makes one family of them also.

The function of the university is to declare that the most impracticable things in the world are, after all, the most practical, that the greatest reality is that which is ideal. You may trace the career of man on this planet to the very beginning of history. You may trace it back with Darwin to the monkey and the mollusk, and the grass, or with Emerson to the day—

"When the poor grass doth plot and plan
What it will do when it is man," but the most important force in human history is that of which Darwin has nothing to say, and which science does not explain.

There is a spiritual lineage for which the professor of biology does not account, and which his laboratory does not enable him to analyze. The naturalist tells us that this race of ours rose from the dead inorganic matter to the vegetable, from the vegetable to the animal, from the animal to the human, and from the savage to the civilized man. If what he have to say be all of it, our existence on this earth is a pitiful failure. It seems as if modern science is destroying the framework and setting in which imagination has painted to us the beauty and the glory of the great doctrine of immortality, has destroyed everything in which we can find comfort, either in memory or in hope. But science has not in the least helped us to explain another force—the spiritual side of man. Beside the pedigree of the physical and animal life, there is the pedigree of the spirit. We like to find it as we trace the descent of our splendid youth of 1861 from the men and women of the Revolution, and to trace their descent from the men and women of the great Pilgrim days in the inheritance of lineage and blood. But it is not confined to that inheritance. What has modern science to tell us of those forces, which burst the limitations of race, which break the chains of habit, and are more powerful than the inherited physical and moral forces of all generations? Tell us, my biological friend, if you can, why it is that every man and woman in this audience would rather die than have his neighbor believe he has done a base action, even if he will never suffer thereby? You will not find that explained in the encyclopedia. What was it that made the Pilgrims cross the sea on the bleak and stormy winter voyage, and yet when the larger part of them died the first winter, no man of the survivors went back in the ship to England in the spring? What was it that led your boys to give their lives for their country in that terrible four years of the Civil War when nearly every household in Iowa was in mourning for the dead, and yet scarcely a household in Iowa repented the sacrifice? There was a wireless telegraphy that came down across the ages from the men of Marathon and Thermopylæ to the men of the Mayflower, and from the men of the Mayflower to the men of the Revolution, and from the men of the Revolution to our young men of 1861.

The fate of the nation depends in the last resort on individual character. Everything in human government, like everything in individual conduct, depends, in the end, upon the sense of duty. Whatever safeguards may be established, however complicated or well-adjusted the mechanism, you come to a place somewhere where safety depends upon somebody having the will to do right when it is in his power and may seem to be to his interest to do wrong. When the people were considering the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, one of our wisest statesmen said that the real and only security for a republic is when the rulers have the same interest as the people. If they have not, constitutional restraints will break down somewhere, except for the sense of duty of the rulers.

All elections depend upon this principle. You may multiply election officers and returning boards, you may provide for an appeal to courts of first resort or last resort. But in the end you must somewhere come to a point where the sense of public duty is stronger than party spirit, or your election is but a sort of fighting, or, if not that, a sort of cheating. The same thing is true of the individual voter, or of the legislator who is to elect the senator, or the governor who is to appoint the judge or executive officer, or the judge who is to interpret the constitution or the statute and decide the cause, or the juror who is to find the fact. On these men depend the safety and the permanence of the Republic. On these men depend life, liberty, and property. And yet each of them has to make that choice. Each has to decide whether he will be influenced by ambition or by party spirit or the desire for popular favor or the fear of popular disfavor or the love of money on the one side, or by the sense of duty on the other.

The great single purpose of moral education must be to induce the will to adhere to its general permanent and deliberately-conceived purpose in spite of temptations which appeal to it with special strength at the time of the choice of action. In other words, it is to give a strength to resolution which will overcome the strength of temptation.

The university must choose what she will teach her children, and her sons must choose whether they will learn and practice her lessons. Whether we accept the doctrine of the old theology, that everything that comes to man by descent cometh of evil, and that neither man nor nation can escape an inexorable doom but by putting off and trampling under foot the old Adam with his deeds, we must at least believe that the great virtues, justice, veracity, unselfishness, courage, lie at the foundation of all national and all individual greatness. There is no such thing as a title in any nation by inheritance to be called the chosen people of God, or as a race doomed by God to be the subjects or dependents of any other. To the larger and surer vision there is no such thing as Fortune. Justice and Freedom are the parents of Fate. Where these are we have no need to concern ourselves with what the day may bring forth. The product of the ages will be secure. The cosmic result will be the same, whatever the daily event may be. It is to this that it is the office of the university to be a perpetual witness to the youth of America. It will be their fault if they do not make their country its perpetual witness to mankind.

Mothers' Home Column.

Beyond his love and care."—Selected.

Children.

Children are what the mothers are;
No fondest father's fondest care
Can fashion so the infant heart
As those creative beams that dart,
With all their hopes and fears upon
The cradle of a sleeping son.

His startled eyes with wonder see
A father near him on his knee,
Who wishes all the while to trace
The mother in his future face;
But 'tis to her alone uprise
His waking arms; to her those eyes
Open with joy and not surprise.

—Walter Savage Landor.

Obliging People.

I once was a wedding guest where the clergyman, venerable and fatherly, exhorted the bride to be a kind and obliging wife. The latter adjective seemed extraordinary and a little beneath the dignity of the occasion, but the more I have reflected upon it, the more the word and what it stands for have grown upon me. It is no slight thing to be obliging, accommodating, ready to put one's own desires aside and to live for others in little services, little things of daily gentleness and little self-denials. Husband and wife dwell together in life's tenderest intimacy. Unless both are obliging, they are in peril of that tiny rift which may widen to a great chasm in time.

What is it to be obliging? Is it not, primarily, to look rather upon the things of others than upon one's own, to wish for the friend's pleasure rather than for one's own ease, to give up rather than to hold fast? The obliging maid in the kitchen is not upset when the master of the house, arriving too late for luncheon, requires a meal prepared in the middle of the afternoon. The obliging boy or girl cheerfully lays down the book or the problem to go on an errand. Nobody enjoys taking a shopping-list to town for a friend and proceeding from store to store to match ribbons and braids, but the obliging woman does it and bears the fatigue without complaint. To oblige another when it costs nothing is mere amiability. To oblige when the act involves a sacrifice is pure unselfishness.

"In forty years of life with my husband," said a lady, "I never knew him to be disobliging either in large things or in small. He has never omitted the small courtesies which add so much to the pleasure of one's home." It was high praise. Would that we might all deserve it! All can not be generous in bestowal, especially of money, all can not be equal to the sudden emergency, all can not always be brave, but all may be obliging.

Perhaps one way in which this excellent quality may be illustrated is in the habit of rising at once when one is called in the morning and of coming promptly to meals when they are ready.

Few of the minor transgressions of good manners cause more real confusion and annoyance than the objection to prompt rising, which lays its paralyzing hand on the sleeper who prizes the morning nap. Drowsily he or she turns on the pillow, far-away and faint sounds the tap at the door heavily drift over the eyes the waves of slumber. Reluctance holds the brain, habit binds the limbs, frequent indulgence blinds the conscience. Down-stairs everything is at a standstill because the lazy member of the family tarries above. The omelet, that should be feather light, is flat, the warm biscuits grow to brown, the cook's temper crisps alarmingly and the children will probably be late at school. A little spice of obligingness about getting up in season would save all the needless fuss.

And then, here is a word for the man of the house, who is much too apt to linger longer than he need on the way home at night. Business, he fancies, exacts his staying later than the closing hour or, when he does start, he thinks a walk in the brisk air will be refreshing and as it involves only the taking of a train a half-hour later, he avoids the street-car and tramps sturdily to the ferry. Had he arranged at home for this half-hour's margin on his return it would have been all right, but most men have an impression that meals spring up at the wave of a magic wand and no thought occurs to them of soggy potatoes or overdone meat. An obliging man takes care to consider domestic arrangements. He is as punctual as he possibly can be about the hour of his return at nightfall.

Obliging people are sunshine bringers in a world where shadows throng. Their spirit of universal good-will is contagious and they make people happier because they are themselves happy. Churlishness has no room in their scheme of living. They grudge not, they put themselves out, they take trouble and pains that they may confer pleasure. A genius for obliging others is as valuable a natural possession as any other great and fine endowment; but when it is not natural, it is easily acquired, for it may be cultivated by prayer and painstaking.—Aunt Marjorie, in Christian Intelligencer.

Pearls From the Depths of Intellect and Heart.

Life is a duty—dare it;
Life is a burden—bear it;
Life is a thorn-crown—wear it;
Though it break thy heart in twain,
Though the burden bear thee down,
Close thy lips and stand the pain,
First the cross, and then the crown.—Unknown.

God's Spirit is throned in the heart. He walks with us as a friend, he breathes into our spirit the inspiration of power and love and a sound mind. In the secret places of our trial and our doubt, in the hour when our nature trembles on the verge of fall, in the hour when our being asserts its immortal righteousness against a base temptation, he is with us.—Stopford Brooke.

Upon him whose mind is engrossed with care or ruffled by passion, the most beautiful objects make no impression. To perceive and enjoy them the mind must be calm. The beauties and sublimates of nature are like the stars, which the storm shuts out; but when the heavens are serene, they come out, one after another, to the eye that is watching for them, till the firmament glows with their light.—Mark Hopkins.

Let us be patient, you and I;
Let us, like watchful guardsmen, make
Our hearts a haven for the sake
Of those that drift, they know not why.

Let us be patient. Let us keep
Our watch-fires faithful as God's stars,
Whatever storm or shadow mars
The breadth of life's uncertain deep.

Let us be patient. Let men trace
No frown, no insincerity,
In skies of ours, that all may see God's presence in his child's calm face.
—Frank Walcott Hutt.

Abundant joy and comfort in thy sorrow;
A faith that asks not when nor where nor how;
A gladsome day—there never comes "To-morrow,"
For each it is an ever-present "Now."
And so I wish the one long day of sweetness,
With inward peace which nothing can impair;
Each trial touching not its calm completeness,
But making life more earnest, real, and fair.
—Caroline Tickner.

Light at Evening Time.

Have not some of us had experience in the glorious Alps, when, on nearly reaching the top, we have been surrounded by clouds, mist filled the air, the tempest hurtled around us and we sat down utterly disappointed in our hope of a glorious view and ready to wail with despair at a lost day, a lost prospect, a lost joy? But by and by a strong wind swept the heavens and revealed the beauty of the skies! There stood the white throne of the Monta Rosa and yonder the magnificent Matterhorn, and as the evening sun bathed it in rosy glory we have stood lost in admiration. "At evening time it was light." Have not you and I had experiences in the past like that? Ah! we have, and realized the blessed hope. We can not give up in despair even in times of trial. Many are the experiences of this kind, I say, in the history of God's people. Look at poor old Jacob, bewailing the fate of his dead: "All these things are against me; I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning." Wait a minute! The caravan is coming! Glorious news! His sons returning, bringing full sacks of corn to Jacob and his family. At evening time to the old man it is light—it is light!

If you and I have no stormy days we never can enjoy the bright ones. If we never have any dark mists, we never can enjoy the outburst of the sunshine from behind the clouds. In the darkest moment Faith strikes a light and cheers the faint. Fear not, fear not, at evening time it shall be light. Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial that has tried you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; only keep pushing on, higher, higher, higher every hour, assured that you will get above the lower cloud and be bathed with the effulgence directly from the skies. After all, the Christian life is a walk of faith from beginning to end. God never deceives his children. There is never a broken promise in all the history of God's church, not one. All things work together for good to them that love him. He says: "I will make the darkness to be light before you, the crooked things straight. These things will I do for you." Very often our poor hearts feel—

"The way is dark, my Father,
Cloud on cloud is gathering thick before me,
And loud the thunders roar above me. See, I stand
Like one bewildered. Father, take my hand,
And through the gloom lead safely home thy child."

Listen! Back comes the answer:

"The day comes fast, my child. And it shall be
Not one step longer than is best for thee.
Cling close to me and ev'ry spectral cloud
Of fear shall vanish. I will take thy hand
And then at evening time it shall be light,
My child."—Theodore L. Cuyler.

Minnesota Reunion.

Sessions of Sunday-school were held on the camp grounds of the Minnesota reunion at Clitherall on Thursday and Sunday afternoons. The attendance was large considering the size of the camp and the interest was marked. These sessions served a double purpose, that of teaching a Bible lesson and a lesson on the management of a Sunday-school.

Besides this normal or institute work was held each afternoon during the week until Saturday when the question of a district organization was considered. Interest in that direction had been growing stronger all week and it was with considerable enthusiasm that the workers of the district voted to organize with a district Sunday-school association. They by vote adopted the constitution provided by the General Sunday-school Association and became a member of the General Association.

They organized with Bro. L. G. Wood superintendent, Sr. Kate Jepson assistant superintendent, Sr. Della Hawley secretary, Bro. P. W. Martin treasurer and Sr. Hallie Gould librarian. We bespeak for them success in its practical sense, and pray that the good Lord will bless every effort put forth in righteousness for the upbuilding of the work there. We hope to meet with them at some future time and to find them moving straight forward.

It was with many regrets that we were obliged to say "Good-bye" and with a promise to "come again" we took train for other fields where we had arranged for other work. God bless the Minnesota Saints.

THE season for "Children's Day" is now about passed and we may now with profit think over our success or our failure, or our omission. It is often an opportune time to study over a matter just as we have passed it. It is then upon our minds as it never was before and will not be again till a similar occasion passes. If you have made a fair success, see wherein you may next year vary or improve it to advantage. If you have failed, learn now what the trouble was and avoid its recurrence. If you have omitted Children's Day entirely, it is your duty to look into the real benefits of the day's exercises and then judge for yourself if you have the right to deprive the school thereof. Of course there may be some obstacles in the way, but they can be overcome if there is a strong enough will behind you. If you can not have a Children's Day program, you can have a fair substitute therefor in the shape of special class outings or picnics. No elaborate preparation is necessary, but, to the contrary, simplicity often adds to the enjoyment of the day. But whatever you do, do not fail to give your school at least two special day programs every year, if you wish to hold what you have or to gain any more scholars.

We insert here a portion of an article taken from the New Century Teacher's Monthly, published by the David C. Cook Publishing Company, Chicago. A little later, there will appear another article from the same paper on the subject of "Class and Special Outing Trips." How I wish that all of our teachers would take such an interest in their classes as to induce them to go with their classes on some outing, or invite the class to their homes and spend two or three hours on the lawn or in some comfortable nook or in the parlor. You will, from that day on, have an influence over your scholars that you never had before. It is a duty you owe to those in your care, and one which you can ill afford to neglect.

SOME HINTS UPON CHILDREN'S DAY EXERCISES.

If we would properly observe Children's Day, the plan and purpose as conceived in the minds of those by whose authority the day is set apart should be clearly understood. Sometimes there seems to be a misapprehension on this point, even on the part of pastors and superintendents. In one church of which I have particular knowledge the children of the Sunday-school sat through the morning service holding the boxes which held their carefully hoarded nickels and dimes, waiting patiently for the passing of the plates, while the pastor preached a sermon—an excellent sermon it was, too—to parents! The only part the children had in that glad festival day of leafy June was the privilege of laying upon the plate their offerings for Sunday-school mission work! Is it any wonder that the children of that church stray over into the fold of a neighboring Sunday-school where they have Children's Day?

The object of Children's Day is twofold—the benefit to the children in our home Sunday-schools, and the bringing of offerings for the work of extending Sunday-school influence into destitute regions in our own land. And again the benefit to the children is twofold, or should be, and the thought of this uplift for the scholar should run through our plans for the day. The service throughout should be of interest to the children. In some schools the program is made up entirely of exercises by the children. I am not sure that the highest point of excellence is reached by this plan. As I have said, there is a twofold object as regards the pupils in our schools. Children's Day should be a day of joy—a bright time to remember; a day of flowers and music and banners. It should also be a day when the children's Friend and Elder Brother is brought very close to them; they should be made to feel that, in the midst of their happy celebration, Christ is present, listening as, with joyful hearts, they sing their praises to him.

There should be a sermon—a sermon to children. I believe in a sermon to children oftener than once a year; but on this day at least there seems an especial appropriateness in having on the program a special sermon for the children of the Sunday-school. And a blessed thing it is if the pastor knows how to do it! It must not be too long, nor too dry; it must not be over the heads of the primary pupils nor too simple; it should not be delivered without careful preparation; indeed, if the pastor has not had this matter in mind for weeks, it will be better to wait until next year before putting a children's sermon on your program, unless you have one of those rare pastors who preach to the children now and then and already know how.

By all means have a march. A march opens the exercises of the day with enthusiasm; it sets the pulses of parents and friends throbbing with a holy joy, and, unconsciously, perhaps, the children have taken steps in the march towards the holy city. Then, when the children are in their places, let the choir and congregation rise and give a song of greeting, a glad song, sung in a way to make the younger people feel that you are glad they are "Marching on!" Then I would have the choir and congregation and children all join in the gladdest, most praiseful hymn that can be found. Thus we are well started in our day of gladness. For this glad, triumphal day I would call in those who play upon instruments—the cornetists and violinists—and add these to the volume of praise.

For many reasons Children's Day seems the best time for promotions from the primary department. Make something of this event in the lives of the children. A promotion card or certificate should be prepared, signed by the pastor, the superintendent of the primary room and the class teacher. Let the march be so arranged that the class will file into a pew near the front, and, at the set time on the program, let them be called forward to a place upon the platform, facing the audience and receive from the hand of the pastor the promotion cards. These cards may be handsomely printed in gilt, or, if this can not be done, they may be written by some one who writes a good, plain hand. Then, after the cards are given, let the main school rise in recognition of the admission of the new class to the advanced department. The superintendent of the school may speak the words of welcome, or the school may sing a welcome song, or both ways of recognition may be used. This little public ceremony marking an epoch in the lives of the scholars will be gratifying to the parents, as well as stimulating to the pupil.

Encourage the children and older members of the Sunday-school to sing. Let there be special preparation made for the music of the day. The choir should lead, but should not do all the singing. There may be class songs—quartets, duets and solos by the scholars—as well as choruses. Try to manage so that every pupil in your school may feel that he has a part in the celebration. Only a few can be brought on for recitations, but every child can be made to feel that he is needed in the singing. Hard work? Well, yes, everything is hard work, if we put it that way. But I do not suppose that you, my dear teacher, went into Sunday-school work because you thought it was easy. Nothing is easy, if we think only of weary muscles, tired brains, and constant strain—and nothing is hard when we lighten all the burdens with love, and rest all our care upon One who is strong, and take all the puzzling problems to One who is wise. . . .

Children's Day will tax your strength and your patience, and, when it is over, you may feel that you are on the verge of collapse; but, if you will, you may put into all of your effort that which will act like a piece of elastic tape—a spring-back—and you will come out of it as good as new. And this quality which will give the spring to your work is the quality of love for the work whereunto you are called.

May the coming Children's Day be a day of joy and a day of power! It may be ours to set in motion influences which shall tell upon the coming church!—The New Century Teacher's Monthly.

Children's Day Gifts.

In radiant summer beauty,
We welcome sunny June,
With all her blossoms trailing,
And birdsongs all in tune.
But dearer far and sweeter
Than other golden days,
Is this bright day when children
Lift up their songs of praise.

The children of the household—
How precious are they all!
If one is counted dearest,
It is the baby small.
And surely God, our Father,
And Jesus Christ his Son
Must love to gather closest
Each tender little one.

Hark, how the youthful voices
Ring out afar and near!
Amid the angels' chorus,
Our Father bends to hear.
Oh, blessings on the children,
In every house of God!
Dear Shepherd, lead them gently,
Where thou thyself hast trod.

—The New Century Teacher's Monthly.

DOING nothing for others is the undoing of ourself. We must be purposely kind and generous or we miss the best part of our existence. The heart that goes out of itself gets large and full. This is the great secret of the inner life. We do ourselves the most good doing something for others.—Horace Mann.

Editors Herald: As I have been blessed with the Spirit of the Master I rejoice in God. At our conference we had a glorious time. The Father revealed himself by his Holy Spirit. Through the gift of prophecy three elders, one priest, and one teacher were called. It was grand to hear the Saints tell their desires to live aright, and I was made strong in the work of God. I want to grow stronger in the faith and prepare to meet God when he comes. We know it will be a trying time when we are called upon to sacrifice our all for the building up of Zion, but I want to so live that I will be ready and willing to give my all when the Lord shall make the call. It will be a glorious time, if we are faithful and serve God to the end, when Jesus comes to this earth again. I want to so live that I can please my Father each day I live, and, Saints, do not get weary in serving our Master; he will reward us when he comes and we shall enjoy his presence. I would to God that all the honest in heart would obey the gospel. I remain,

Your brother in the gospel,

PAPEETE, Tahiti, June 19.

Editors Herald: Our mail brought us good news from home and from the church also, and we are glad to learn that the church is growing in desire to keep all the laws of the kingdom of our God. There seems to be a wonderful connection between all parts of this "one body," and as is the church at home so is it abroad, unless indeed the Australian Mission may be an exception this year past. However, we are much pleased to note that since conference there seems to be a revival of interest in some degree in the work here.

By letters from our assistant secretary of the mission,—Elder Turatahi, and a missionary, Priest Titi, we learn that there is quite an interest in Makatea, and that ten persons were lately baptized there, and that many others desired baptism, but were living with companions unmarried, and therefore could not be received.

Elder Teariiarotaha, missionary to Tubuai, upon his arrival there, learned that several Protestants had been among the Saints trying to lead them into the Protestant Church—as the old London Missionary Society organizations are called—first a few Protestant men attended the meetings, then five women accompanied them, they were permitted to speak or pray or sing in the meetings of the one branch of our church now on that island; after a short time the minister, accompanied by the women, visited them and exhorted them all to come into the Protestant Church, into the one fold, and so on. At the conclusion of his speech, Elder Peretei, the branch president, called upon Elder Araiati to respond to the speech of their guest, this he did at first by asking him to tell plainly what was the foundation of his faith, what gospel he was teaching, and what was his belief. He replied that he believed in Jesus and in his death, and the shedding of his blood for an atonement for sin, and that he believed in all that was spoken of Jesus from Genesis to Malachi, and from Matthew to Revelation. The elder then asked him if that was all, to which he replied yes. Then Elder Araiati answered saying, The devils believed and trembled, but were not saved thereby, and Jesus said if you love me keep my commandments; and all that you believe we already believe, and far more than you do, we obey his commandments; therefore you had better repent and be baptized and then you may be saved, for in the Bible we are taught that in the church of Christ were faith, repentance, baptism by immersion, and the laying on of hands, and the officers were apostles, prophets, sevens, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, and patriarchs and bishops; and the gifts of the Holy Ghost—all these we have and you have not, then why should we go into your fold? You had better come into our fold, which is the true church of Jesus Christ.

They have not visited the branch since then, and the missionary, Teariariataha, has baptized four there lately.

Elder Maruaki in Aratika—where Bro. and Sr. Gilbert were for a few weeks last summer—reports having baptized some there, and others are hindered by reason of not being married.

We are also glad to note the fact that the desire to keep the marriage law is increasing, and it is beginning to be accounted a disgrace to live together unmarried, and such are getting ashamed of it. The missionaries have long tried to bring about this state of the question, and while Bro. Peterson was here a strict law was made against allowing such persons to live on the grounds of Taronia, nor those who used tobacco or liquors either, which rule is still in force, so that step by step we are gaining in that direction also.

We made up a box of clothing and cloth for dresses and for men's clothing also for the Saints of Raroia; and Tongi, who lost her two children in the storm, brought a shirt to send up to them. All is moving on quietly. Peace be with you all.

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

WILKINSBURG, Pennsylvania, July 7.

Editors Herald: Months have gone by since I knocked at your door, and perhaps this is not altogether the proper thing for one who desires to be faithful in all duties and responsibilities.

Had just closed gospel labor at Keb and Ottumwa at time of last writing. Spent a few days at Lamoni, after an absence of six months, and while preparing necessary work for the General Conference was kindly cared for by Bro. Eli Hayer. There is a something peculiar and inexpressible to one on the downhill side of life, to be alone and homeless, and dependent upon friends for shelter. Have ever loved home, and did not leave the roof-tree of father until after my twenty-fourth birthday, and then only to establish a family altar. As age creeps apace there is a deepening of the desire for the quiet and restfulness of home. O for patience to abide faithful till the obtaining of that restfulness, and peace that shall be ours when the never-ending reign of love and peace shall be our portion.

While on our journey to Independence we witnessed two things out of date, a man gathering corn the last days of March—in the planting season,—another man cutting stalks with a “nigger-hoe.” After seeing the “stalk-cutter” in use for two or three decades in Nebraska and Iowa, it was hard to believe our eyes. But so it is in the common affairs of life, as in the realm of revealed religion, many are satisfied with the belief and practice of their parents; and if it once was right to go to mill with corn in one end of a sack, and a rock in the other end, the stick-fast fellows where they were left by the great reformers (?) think that rule is absolute and unchangeable. The mob spirit in Russia against the Jew is prophetic as to what the ministers of the restored gospel will have to cope with at no distant date. The Devil has not gone out of business, neither need we expect that he will permit the peaceable kingdom of God to be established among men without a struggle sharp and decisive.

The work of General Conference, council, and quorum, was more fatiguing to me than heretofore experienced. That which was done and said made an impress upon memory, and there came to me the thought that while we may conveniently for prudential reasons expunge from our minutes, yet there has been wisely provided, “Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.”—Malachi 3: 16.

The conviction has burned itself into my soul, that whatever of influence I am able to wield either in conference or elsewhere, by voice or vote, must finally be met when I shall appear at the bar of eternal justice to receive the reward of my life work, and as a guidance in the effort to win the crown and wave the palm when we anchor in the haven of rest, we have: “Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm.”—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7. It is worthy of all acceptance that our labor should ever be with an eye single to God and his law, a continuous effort in meekness, charity, and wisdom to be helpful in spreading and establishing on a sure, honorable, and honest basis, the gospel restored by the angel to the prophet of Palmyra, and to the uplifting of those who yield obedience thereunto, both as to a knowledge of spiritual life, and possession of things that pass away with the using. So may we be able “unto the day when the Lord shall come to recompense unto every man according to his work, and measure to every man according to the measure which he has measured to his fellow man.”—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 2.

Should the revelation of God require the despoliation of one portion of the vineyard for the upbuilding of some other portion thereof, there should be a ready and willing disposition to acquiesce in the God-imposed sacrifice and loss. Those who cheerfully submit to such earthly hardships have a rich promise, and my preference would be to have the companionship of those who make the sacrifice, that I might obtain: “Gather my Saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.”—Psalms 50: 5.

Near the close of conference la grippe put a poison fang in my system, and I still suffer from its evil effects.

While remaining at Independence for a rest spell, that was actively employed in gospel work, I visited the Second Kansas City Branch and ministered the word with the comfort of the Holy Spirit, and received the urgent, and saintly invitation, Come again!

Returning to Lamoni I met a welcome from John Scott, my new brother-in-law. Was kept busy with High Council, quorum, and Graceland College work. May 10, occupied at Pumptown Schoolhouse, and once at Lamoni; did all that opportunity and request permitted me to do.

Left on June 15 for appointed field, and while there came to me a peaceful assurance by the Spirit, nevertheless there was mixed therewith a sadness. Have heard many express the opinion that constant service as a missionary would wear a man away from the home love, and overcome hesitancy for travel. That is not the result with me. Duty and a desire to please God has been my prompting and anchorage.

I stopped at Burlington, Iowa, at Bro. Albert Giesch's. Found the family sad and dispirited, as on that date their son Carl was sent to the hospital the third time. Poor boy, what he has suffered, and what a care he has been during the ten months of his helplessness! The next day I spent a few hours at the hospital to cheer and administer to the lad. Went to the home of the missionary, and found Elbert up a tree. He puts the robins to shame cherry-picking. In the evening we made our good-bye bow to a fair audience. Blessed little Miss Nina Mildred Dussan, of Memphis, Tennessee.

June 17, went to Montrose, and had a fair turnout, notwithstanding two other churches, and a Mexican wild-west in operation. Next morning at the first cockcrow, hied to the depot, only to wait at a locked-up depot on the bank of the Mississippi for two hours for a belated train. This resulted in my spending most of the day in bed at Aledo, Illinois, where I spent two days visiting my son and his family; and although considerably under the weather, went to Chicago the 20th. Was met by Brn. F. G. Pitt and M. H. Bond. I was kept on the jump, leg and tongue, while in the great city by the lake. Spoke once at the west side, and four times at the Central Hall. Possessed the peace and freedom of the Spirit in declaring the word. I am glad that I visited Chicago. Was surprised to meet so many old acquaintances, and it was a pleasure to form new ones. Thanks, Saints, for your kindness.

June 25, at half past seven o'clock in the evening I left Chicago on the Pennsylvania Road for Pittsburg. The trip was not a pleasant one, as the train was crowded most of the way. Three horse buyers behind me kept filling up on "high life" (that to me was a new name. Had heard of "valley tan," and "tanglefoot," etc.), and were very noisy, and especially so while quoting scripture in an unknown tongue, and in explaining the same to justify illicit indulgence. Complaint was made by a lady, and for a few moments the prospect was favorable for a scene.

The night was cold, and I suffered; but all things mundane have an end. At fifteen minutes to eight on the morning of the 26th, the train pulled into the great union depot, and I was a stranger in the "smoky city." Spent some time in moving around, closely scanning and studying faces, none of which I knew. I concluded to act promptly; so moving carefully, with a prayer in my heart for guidance, I fixed upon a young man and addressed him: "Are you acquainted about the depot?" He replied: "Somewhat." My next was: "Do you know E. Harry Thomas, who works in room 625 on the sixth floor of this building?" The exclamation was: "O, you are Bro. Elvin, are you?"

By the kind care of the Saints, and the free use of "the King's English," I have not been lost in this great, busy, hilly city. So far the attendance at the meetings has been small, or at least it so appears to me. An excuse therefor is the scattered condition of the membership, the excessive heat of the past ten days by which many have lost their lives, and last, but not least, the Fourth of July attractions. However, it is yet too soon for me to write up an opinion concerning the work here, or to fix up a forecast of what shall be done, and what results will be. Faithfulness can not fail to bring a reward to those who labor and sacrifice for the sake of the gospel, and for the salvation of religiously misguided humanity.

When I first came I found a home with our genial brother, I. W. McDowell, in Sheriden, and at present am with Bro. J. H. Lockard, in Wilkinsburg. Both of these places are suburbs of Pittsburg.

Have had the pleasure of meeting my fellow associates, Missionaries L. D. Ullom and J. D. Porter, and we are expecting a visit from Bro. U. W. Greene.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths, how about that visit you expected to make to this place?

"Tired! well, and what of that?

Didst fancy life was spent on beds of ease,
Fluttering the rose-leaves scattered by the breeze?
Come, rouse thee! work while it is called to-day;
Coward, arise, go forth upon thy way!

"Lonely! and what of that?

Some must be lonely; 'tis not given to all
To feel a heart responsive rise and fall—
To blend another life into its own;
Work may be done in loneliness; work on!

"Dark! well, and what of that?

Didst fondly dream that sun would never set?
Dost fear to lose thy way? Take courage yet!
Learn thou to walk by faith and not by sight,
Thy steps will guided be and guided right.

"Hard! well, and what of that?

Didst fancy life one summer holiday,
With lessons none to learn, and naught but play?
Go, get thee to thy task. Conquer or die!
It must be learned; learn it then patiently.

"No help! nay, 'tis not so;

Though human helps be far, thy God is nigh;
Who feeds the ravens, hears his children's cry;

He's near thee whereso'er thy footsteps roam,
And he will guide thee, light thee, help thee home."

Perhaps some others of Israel's host may find a screed of comfort and cheer in the above, as well as the undersigned.

The cheering news of the result of those two sermons of Bro. Joseph Luff in behalf of Graceland College should be an incentive and inspiration to the whole church. Saints, will the Independence Stake stand "head and shoulders above all Israel" in this God-approved effort in behalf of this church institution of higher education? I hope that the time is now fully ripe to fix in the mind and heart of every Saint the necessity and utility of Graceland.

ARMA, Kansas, July 4.

Editors Herald: I moved here something over three months ago. This is a nice country village and as there was no Sunday-school here I sent for Quarterlies and organized one. Our Quarterlies did not prove very popular, but still there have been a few who have come every Sunday, although prejudice has run high and some have called us Mormons and said we were all the same as the people in Utah, and have kept their children away from Sunday-school on this account. We sent for some tracts and my wife and I distributed them among our neighbors, but in talking among the people they told us they had never heard one of our elders preach, so a few weeks ago I attended Saints' meetings at Pittsburg and met with Elder F. C. Keck and I asked him if he would come and preach if I could find a place to preach. He said he would come as soon as I could obtain a place for him and on my return home I went at once to the people who call themselves the Church of God to see if we could occupy their church as they have a nice church here which is very seldom occupied. They refused to let us have their church, and at the same time the party informed me that as he had been raised within twelve miles of Nauvoo, he had heard the martyred prophet and also our prophet of the present day preach, and like all the rest of the guardians of man-made creeds he knew it never would do to have one of God's servants to come here and preach the true gospel of Jesus Christ. I secured permission of the school board to use the public school-house and then one of the storekeepers hearing I had been refused the use of the church offered me his hall above his store free of charge. I notified Elder Keck and on the 28th of June he arrived here and that same night he preached a grand gospel sermon. On Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, by the influence of the Holy Spirit he told the angel's message, and a few are greatly interested and all said they never had heard anything like it before. We were very sorry he had to leave us so soon, as his preaching was arousing a great interest throughout the neighborhood and it will not surprise me if Bro. Keck does some baptizing on his return next fall. May the blessing of God be with him and long may he live to preach the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Your brother in the gospel,

W. R. STEELE.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, July 6.

Editors Herald: All winter and spring we have labored in this large city, holding meetings in many different places in private houses with very fair success, also visiting many that were friendly, explaining and teaching them the restoration of the gospel in our day, through the ministration of angels. For some time in connection with the stake authorities I have been preaching in the tent, but oh, how hard it is to get the people to come out and hear. If a negro minstrel, or a medicine show comes along that seems to attract many. Truly did Jesus say that the way that leads to eternal life is narrow and but few desire to go that way, but the other way is broad and many delight to travel that way.

On the morning of the Fourth I got a telegram from Osawatomie, Kansas, stating that Bro. Cornelius Johnson was dead. I at once went there, praying that God might now open a door, as heretofore (so far as I know) we never could get ourselves before the people in that town. When we got there we went to work at once to see what might be done under the existing condition. We appointed the funeral at the residence for Sunday morning, got the notice out as best we could, invited Reverend Mr. Bobbett of the Christian Church to assist in the services, and he cheerfully complied with the invitation. We then called upon Mr. and Mrs. Morley, leading members of the choir of the Methodist Church, and they in a true Christian spirit consented to take charge of the singing. Our efforts were crowned with success and we had very many of the best citizens of the town, such as bankers, lawyers, doctors, merchants, etc., at our meeting. The house was full and many outside. We enjoyed good liberty in presenting the gospel in its fullness and the hope and result of obedience thereunto; to a great extent sorrow and mourning was turned into joy because of hope which the gospel brings. We spoke again at the grave on the resurrection of the dead. Reverend Bobbett rendered us good service; he is a noble young man, of excellent ability, popular, and well deserving of it. At night he very cordially introduced me to his congregation and invited me to assist him. I made many friends for myself and the cause we love so well. I found Sr. Mattie, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Johnson, very sick in bed. I laid my hands upon her head twice and prayed that God would be mindful of her and bless her. Next morning she told me that she was better. The doctor came and after making his examination I asked how she was and he said, "She is better, decidedly better." May God help her to be humble and faithful, and be a comfort and a joy to her good mother. George, a son, has a restaurant and will care for his mother; he is a good man, though not in the church.

Near the corner of Ninth and Main Streets my attention was attracted to a large beautiful monument. I made an examination and I found this inscription upon the monument: This inscription is in memory of the heroism of Captain John Brown, who commanded at the battle of Osawatomie, August 30, 1856, who died and conquered American slavery on the scaffold at Charleston, Virginia, December 2, 1859.

I returned home to-day and will continue to labor here with the tent till next Monday, then President G. H. Hulmes and I will make a tour with tent through the stake.

In gospel bonds,

F. C. WARNKY.

FANCY, Tennessee, July 5.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading so many good letters from different ones of the Saints through the HERALD. Our nearest church being fifteen miles away, we are not permitted to meet with the Saints as often as we would like to. We never hear any preaching of our kind except when we go our church. The people around here are so prejudiced they will not come out to hear the elders when they come in.

I am many times strengthened by reading letters in the HERALD, especially those from the young people. I like to see them take an active part in this grand and glorious work which we know to be the church of Christ.

I desire the prayers of all the Saints that I may live worthy to have a home in Zion. Your sister in the one faith,

MYRTLE WILLIS.

WILLOW SPRINGS, Missouri, July 5.

Editors Herald: This is fast day and I enjoy it. I realize what a grand opportunity it is when we can approach our Divine Parent in humble devotion secretly and feel the tears flow freely and at the close of prayer feel the calm influence of the Spirit. It so strenghtens and encourages us. I have just made covenant with God to try to obey the command to come up higher more earnestly and faithfully in the future. Oh, how grand and beautiful the thought when we are meditating on the Holy word of our Savior, calling to mind many blessings and promises. It is refreshing to reflect on the many manifestations and blessings I have received. I have been very negligent in the past year, but I am striving to atone by doing more. Pray for me, dear children of our heavenly Parent, that my future life may be more devoted to this blessed work of God.

Just returned from church, heard Bro. H. Sparling of Springfield, Missouri, discourse nobly, defending our precious work. Conference adjourned last eve; a goodly number in attendance, a splendid meeting, grand sermons, good testimonies. I truly enjoyed it and feel edified. In gospel bonds,

M. LUCY BRASHEAR.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, July 9.

Editors Saints' Herald: During the series of services just closed at Tabor, Fremont County, five were added by baptism, Bro. Frank Goode making his first effort at baptizing. He did well. The entire Tabor Branch with their children are the Sunday-school, and they are alive and moving. This is as it should be. The children's preaching services Children's Day was a time of refreshing to me.

Missionaries in this field are moving, Bro. M. M. Turpen at Council Bluffs and vicinity, Bro. D. R. Chambers at Bartlett, and we are expecting Bro. J. S. Snively now at any time to join us. So far as I have been able to observe since reaching the field, Bro. Badham, the district president, is moving, looking after the interests of the work. Brn. George Kemp, F. Goode, William Gaylord, Eber Wilcox, Cline, and F. J. Redfield are nobly standing by, and looking after the interests of the work, each in his respective sphere and calling. All are hopeful of a moving forward of the work in this district.

The weather is now very warm. Corn crop rather backward here owing to the lateness of spring, this caused by late floods along the Missouri River Valley. But if the season continues it will come out all right. One can scarcely conceive of the beauty and grandeur of the valleys and undulating lands of Western Iowa now without beholding them, a continued series of variegated landscapes, the golden and green of the harvest fields, the dark green and purple of the groves dotting the valleys and slopes with a promiscuousness that of itself is lovely to the eye of the beholder, a great, almost continuous corn-field, broken by the farm buildings, and waving meadows, and all rejoicing the heart of man; but what of the secret, silent, all-potent forces of God, instrumental in producing these beautiful, affecting scenes, and the life and treasure they prophesy and life more abundantly?

But I will leave you here gazing. Am hopeful in the work. The earth here and its burden of verdure, the breezy, balmy atmosphere, the blue canopy above it, and their infinity eloquently proclaim the praises of their Creator, and to the mind of the humble Saints they all conspire with the dazzling glories of the solar orb, and the tender evening smiles of Luna to render a Zion! A brilliant mirror of the Zion yet to be. But do not let the poisonous, withering, blighting curses of sin mar it, lest decay and deadly waste chase its beauty and glory, its holiness for ever away, and this garden of Eden be turned to desolation?

Saints of the mission may address me for the present, at least, at Box 211, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa. Pray for us.

Your brother,

C. SCOTT.

WATERFORD, Ontario, July 8.

Editors Herald: By request of Elder T. A. Phillips of the London District, Canada, I drop these few lines that the Saints may know his whereabouts. He is quarantined in Waterford because of scarlet fever there.

Saints' Home, LAMONI, Iowa, July 8.

Dear Friends in Canada: Thursday afternoon, June 25, I arrived at this place having come through from Chatham, Ontario, without any serious or unusual delay.

Lamoni is a pretty little country town. The Saints' Home is a very nice place. The present building being altogether too small for the accommodation of all who need and merit a home here, an addition is to be built as soon as sufficient funds accumulate for that purpose.

The branch here numbers some thirteen hundred, and, on the Fourth of July, those so inclined celebrated the day by having a Sunday-school social in the church park, a beautiful grove surrounding the church building. The pleasure seekers of Lamoni had mostly gone to adjoining towns to spend the day and it was a very nice, quiet crowd that assembled at ten o'clock in the morning to hear the splendid program that had been prepared by the Sunday-school children. A stand, vending the delicacies suited to the day and season, netted over sixty dollars for the Sunday-school. A very enjoyable time was had by all. I met some dear old friends.

Your brother,

FERRIS B. ATKINS.

Fry, $9.95; total, $29.95. A report from C. Fry on tent fund was read: Balance on hand last report, $7.27; received on sale two hymnals, 70 cents; total, $7.97. The conference directed that this money be turned over to the bishop of the district to be reserved as a tent fund until needed. District Sunday-school association reported a profitable convention just preceding the conference in which time was granted the Religio for election of district officers. The secretary presented a bill of $1.40 for expenses which was paid by the taking of a collection. All the district officers were sustained including the bishop and counselors, and the missionaries laboring in the district viz., C. Scott, M. M. Turpen, D. R. Chambers, and J. Snively. Preaching by Charles Fry, Columbus Scott, and M. M. Turpen.

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Fellow Laborers of Northern Michigan District, Greeting: At the conference held at Whittemore, June 27 and 28, your humble servant was chosen to succeed himself as president of district and our worthy brother, C. G. Lewis, of Boyne City, Michigan, associate. We therefore invite the cooperation and assistance of all Saints in our effort to care for the work over which we have been chosen to preside. By resolution it was made our duty to arrange for two-day meetings, we therefore request presidents of branches, where they desire such a meeting, to notify us at once, as the season is now short. To those who were not present at conference we would say that the conference was a grand success, one of the most peaceful and profitable gatherings we have ever had in the district. I baptized a cousin of mine yesterday, a young man, who has been a faithful and energetic worker in the Religio and Sunday-school. With love and good will to all, we are very respectfully,
Your brother in Christ,
GLOVER, Arenac County, Michigan. J. A. GRANT.

Address to Saints of Lamoni Stake.

Saints of the Stake of Lamoni, Greeting: Since the choice and ordination of Bro. D. C. White as first counselor to Bishop William Anderson, the bishopric of the stake is filled. We desire to call the attention of the Saints to the fact that a large majority of the membership of the entire stake is resident in Lamoni Branch, and of necessity at least one member of the bishopric should spend his entire time here. Bishop Anderson is therefore almost continually in Lamoni, where financial matters connected with the church are of almost hourly occurrence. In the very near future, possibly about July 20, Bro. D. C. White will be engaged in Lamoni Stake as a missionary and member of the bishopric, and you who want his services, by way of advice, or in any way, can communicate your wants to him at his home, Lamoni, Iowa, or through any member of the stake bishopric, either in person or by letter. Any member of the bishopric will receipt for moneys paid to him for church purposes.

The address to the Saints lately published in the HERALD and in pamphlet form, should be carefully and prayerfully considered, and complied with so far as the Saints feel they are in a condition to comply. The statement in Section 64 of Doctrine and Covenants, "Now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people," is in force, and all who wisely comply with the same will be blessed as surely as the Lord has spoken it. We have opportunities to-day that we can not neglect without suffering loss. It is important that each individual member make a strong and determined effort to understand the law of God and to comply with its provisions and mandates, for it is only by so doing that we have claim upon God for his protection, his blessings, and a portion of the spirit of wisdom.

As a bishopric we feel much encouraged at the liberal support we have received from the Saints, especially of late, and being more fully organized and capable of taking care of the work, we expect to be able to secure a more general, and we hope almost universal compliance with the law. Each member's name should be upon our books as contributing what he can for the spread of the gospel, and the support of those unable to provide for themselves.

We are always willing to do whatever is in our province and power to aid you, and repeat our wish that you feel free to ask our attention to your wants.

WILLIAM ANDERSON, Bishop.
D. C. WHITE,
R. J. LAMBERT, Counselors.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 9, 1903.

Correction.

High Priests will please take notice, and correct circular No. 5, as follows:

Charles H. Caton, 189 Oldfield Road, Sparkbrook, Birmingham, England.

James M. Baker, 116 Bluff Street, Sioux City, Iowa.

ROBT. M. ELVIN, Quorum Secretary.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent.

The Saints and friends of the Southwestern Texas District will please take notice that owing to change of field of labor of Bro. John Harp, former Bishop's agent of Southwestern Texas District, Bro. David Palmer, whose address is Corner South Flores and Mitchell Streets, San Antonio, Texas, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent in and for said district.

We trust the Saints will remember and place their tithes and offerings in the hands of Bro. Palmer and so assist in the work of the gospel in said district.

The Bishopric also take this opportunity to express thanks to Bro. John Harp for the earnest and faithful manner in which he filled the office the previous year, and now wish him full success in his missionary labors.

Very respectfully,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Reduced Rates to the Dow City, Iowa, Reunion.

By the kindness of Eben E. MacLeod, chairman of the Western Passenger Association, we are able to state for the benefit of all whom it may concern, that reduced rates on the certificate plan have been granted to the Dow City reunion for the benefit of those coming from Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri, Minnesota, and Nebraska.

To secure said rates we will need one hundred certificates showing that the bearer has paid full fare from the place of starting to the reunion and that said fare has exceeded fifty cents. Certificates will be issued as early as August 29, 1903, but we must have the required number by September 4. See that agents issue a certificate for each individual or they will not be counted. Those coming via Arion, Iowa, must procure certificates from there to the reunion.

We have succeeded in securing reduced rates since holding the reunion at this place and we believe we can do so this fall if each and all will comply with the conditions. The fact that we have failed twice out of three times should not discourage any one. Remember the old yet inspiring words,

"If at first you don't succeed,
Try, try, again."

We have failed once, and I think twice, because some attending the reunion thought it was not worth while to bother with certificates as to do so would not benefit them any as they must return before the rates could be secured. This should not occur this time for it is a part of our duty as Christians to help others and especially is this so when we can do so without injuring ourselves. We have had the time for the issuing of certificates commence as late as August 29 so as to give us the best time for securing the requisite number of certificates before the time limit expires.

We hope those attending our reunion from Omaha, Nebraska, Council Bluffs, Missouri Valley, Mondamin, Magnolia, Woodbine, Sac City, Auburn, and those within that radius would take special pains to help us in securing the requisite number of certificates.

Thanking those who have kindly helped us in the past we earnestly solicit their cooperation this fall.

Two-Day Meetings.

Two-day meetings will be held in the Northeastern Kansas District as follows: Fanning, July 18, 19; Atchison, July 25, 26; Topeka, August 1, 2; Scranton, August 8, 9; Idylwild, August 22, 23; Blue Rapids, August 29, 30. In a united effort and full attendance of Saints, may we realize the favor of God, and be enabled to say with the psalmist of old, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Your coworkers, M. F. Gowell, missionary in charge, S. Twombly, district president.

Two-day meetings will be held in the Eastern Michigan District as follows: East Fremont, Michigan, July 25, 26; Shabbona, Michigan, August 15, 16; Applegate, Michigan, September 5, 6. Wm. Davis, Appin, Michigan.

Oklahoma Grove Meeting.

There will be a ten-day grove-meeting held by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at Min-eim's Grove, seven miles southeast of Matthewson, Canadian County, Oklahoma, commencing Friday evening, July 31, 1903.

All are invited to attend, and the Saints especially to come and camp on the ground, and help make this grove-meeting a success. By order of reunion committee. W. P. Pickering.

Reunion Notices.

The Spring River District reunion will convene August 21 and continue ten days at Pittsburg, Kansas, on the beautiful grounds of Forrest Park, occupying pavilion with comfortable seats and lighted with electricity. A cooperative boarding-house will be carried on so that those desiring can bring their provisions and turn the same in to the committee supervising the arrangements and receive market prices. Feed and water for horses will be handy, and an effort will be made to secure pasture close by. Able speakers will be present and all Saints and friends are invited. Tents can be secured at the following prices: 10x12, $1.25; 12x14, $1.35. Cots, 25 cts. All coming on trains should bring straw ticks and quilts for bedding. This can be brought as baggage. All desiring tents address, J. M. Richards, 307 West Third Street, Pittsburg, Kansas. Committee: F. C. Keck, J. T. Davis, J. M. Richards.

The reunion of Fremont, Pottawattamie, and adjoining districts will be held in the Hougas Grove, three and one half miles northeast of Henderson, Iowa, August 22-30, 1903. Those wishing to rent tents therefor may do so by sending their orders to the undersigned not later than August 10. The tent company will not guarantee to fill orders received later than above date. Prices are as follows: Wall tents, 10x12, $1.35; 12x14, three foot wall, $1.85; 14x16, three and one half foot wall, $2.25, all complete and delivered to you on the grounds; set up, 25 cts. extra. A limited number of bed-springs at 35 cts. per set. Orders filled in order received. All tents and springs ordered must be paid for whether used or not. But should you be unable to attend after ordering, we will assist you in an effort to rent. The committee expect to have a boarding tent and provision tent on the grounds. Watch for later notice. T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa.

First North Dakota Reunion.

The first reunion of the State was held at Bottineau, North Dakota, from June 26 to July 2. A large number of the Saints attended from various parts of the State. The meetings were marked throughout for unity and spirituality. The Saints were built up and rejoiced in the gospel. Patriarch Alexander H. Smith, Bishop G. H. Hilliard, and Apostle Fred A. Smith were present the latter part of the reunion. North Dakota was organized into a district with William Sparling as president and Warren McElwain as secretary. The next annual reunion will be held at Dunseith, North Dakota.

Conference Notices.

District conference will convene August 22, 1903, with the Mount Zion Branch, Ritchie County, West Virginia. Those coming from the west will come via Parkersburg, thence over the Baltimore and Ohio to Cornwallis on the evening trains of August 21. Those coming from the east, over the Baltimore and Ohio on the morning trains to Cornwallis, where they will be met by the brethren and conveyed to place of conference. We invite the Saints from abroad to meet with us and bring the good Spirit with them that we may have a good spiritual time of rejoicing together, and we hope the priesthood of the district will turn out in mass. We are expecting Apostle Greene with us. G. H. Godbey, district president.

The Pittsburg District conference will convene at the Saints' Chapel, Fairview Branch, Glen Easton, West Virginia, September 5 and 6, 1903. The Sunday-school will have the grant of the church Saturday evening for their entertainment. Notice will be given later in regard to meeting of trains and all particulars. James Craig, president; E. E. Omohundro, secretary.

Died.

SWENSON.—Near San Jose, June 11, John Swenson, age 46 years, 2 months, 16 days. Bro. Swenson was born in Norway near Christiansa, March 26, 1857. He united with the Church of Jesus Christ about twelve years ago. His life was one of entire devotedness to his Master. Zealous and faithful in his work, with a love for his fellows, none ever left him without being advised as to spiritual advancement, and if in need of temporal aid his hand was never withheld. He lived in Christ—his works will follow. Funeral service by Elder J. B. Carmichael, assisted by E. W. Hawkins.

GORDANIER.—Sr. Amanda Gordanier suddenly died at her home, Otego, Kansas, June 24, at 2.40 a. m., of heart trouble, being sick less than an hour. She leaves a husband, one son, and one brother, J. O. Savage, of Springfield, Missouri, to mourn. Her last words were to her son to be a good boy and meet her in heaven. Baptized in 1877, she was firm in the faith.

EVANS.—At Hirwain, South Wales, February 16, 1903, William Evans, born June 15, 1825, aged 77 years, 8 months. He was a member of the church in the early days, and the Saints and missionaries were always welcome at his home. He leaves an invalid wife, one son, four daughters, thirty-one grandchildren, fourteen great-grandchildren, and a host of friends. Funeral in charge of Bro. Evan Lewis.

EVANS.—At Hirwain, South Wales, March 17, 1903, Sr. Elizabeth Evans, in her seventy-eighth year; born June 25, 1825. Was the wife of William Evans, who preceded her just twenty-nine days. She rejected the dogmas of Utahism and with joy was one of the first to join the Reorganized Church in Wales and was a faithful member for twenty-five years up to her death. She was very spiritual and has borne her testimony to thousands of the divinity of this latter-day work. She has gone to her long-merited rest. Funeral service in charge of William Lewis.

LESTER.—Bro. Thomas Lester, born January 24, 1843, at Long Whetton, Lancashire, England. He embraced the gospel at Waltham, Massachusetts, December 13, 1870, baptized by Elder Josiah Ellis. Ordained a teacher January, 1871. Bro. Lester has been Bishop's agent for the Philadelphia and New York Districts for thirteen or fourteen years, and as such served the church faithfully. He was perfectly reconciled and prepared for the great change, and so prepared his Bishop's agent's accounts for closing. He leaves a wife, one daughter, eight sons, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn his loss.

LASITTER.—Henry Carson Lasitter, grandson of Bro. and Sr. J. P. Neal and son of Mr. John and Sr. Laura Lasitter, was born June 4, 1899, and died June 7, 1903. Blessed by Bro. John Harp. The burial took place at the old Oakwood Cemetery about fifteen miles south of San Antonio, Texas, where quite a number of our brethren and sisters await with him the resurrection morn. The funeral services were in charge of, and remarks were made at the grave by Elder H. O. Smith, assisted by Elder W. S. Macrae.

A writer for the July Woman's Home Companion recently visited Mr. Hudson Maxim, and performed the unusual and thrilling feat of cooking over high explosives. She speaks of her adventures as follows:

"Maximite, the most deadly of all modern high explosives, to most of us instantly suggests mammoth guns, shattered fortresses, wounded and dying men—synonym for destruction; yet but a few days ago, in Mr. Hudson Maxim's laboratory in Brooklyn, I cooked a neat little luncheon over Maximite, finding it as safe and manageable a kitchen fuel as a stick of driftwood, and far more convenient and expeditious. One match is always enough to start Maximite and smokeless powder. There is no danger of them not lighting at once,—and when you are first 'playing house' with these deadly high explosives you are very apt to wish there were.

"Not that Mr. Maxim wishes to make Maximite a specialty as a fuel for light housekeeping; he merely permitted me to do all these 'cooking-stunts' to prove how utterly harmless well-trained Maximite can be.

"Feeling very much as though I had received an invitation to an 'at home' in the cage of an African lion, I recently visited Mr. Maxim's laboratory, and with bated breath and trembling hands poached eggs and prepared coffee over smokeless powder, hammered nails with nitrogelatin, made tea in pretty Mrs. Maxim's drawing-room over a cake of yellow Maximite, assisted my host in hanging out gun cotton to dry, and aided in the capping of fuses that had been filled with fulminate of mercury. If a single grain of this fulminate had loitered around in one of the grooves of the fuses, Mr. Maxim, the photographer, and myself would most likely have been scattered over several blocks of adjacent real estate, but in such trifling subdivisions that the peaceful life of the Brooklyn home would not have been disturbed for a second."

An indispensable part of a truly liberal education consists of training in the science and art of interpretation. Language is the distinctively human means of communication. A knowledge of language which is essentially different from that possessed by the fluent speaker of several languages is absolutely essential to the precise and satisfactory interpretation of any language. Language is the form in which the highest expressions of human thought and feeling come to the individual man and to the succeeding generations of men. Language is, therefore, the essential form of what we call literature, in the widest meaning of that word. The interpretation of language is the use of the key that unlocks the treasures of literature. Therefore language must be studied as a training in the science and art of interpretation, or else the accurate and comprehensive knowledge of the best thoughts, feelings, and activities of humanity is shut out of the mind.

To acquire the science and art of interpretation, the prolonged and careful study of some one language is absolutely indispensable. Such a study of one language is not only indispensable, but it is sufficient for the average college student. For this purpose it is even far better to concentrate upon one language than to divide the time among three or four languages. He who knows one language in this way knows something which can not be otherwise acquired about all languages, about language as such. He is prepared not only to acquire with a largely increased facility any language which he chooses to acquire, but to use that language intelligently and skillfully as the key to unlock the stores of literature which it may contain.

Such a study of language as shall result in a training in the science and art of interpretation can not easily be conducted otherwise than in a language foreign to the student. Indeed, I very much doubt whether it is possible to impart any considerable degree of this kind of culture without compelling that careful attention to words—their meaning, their position in the sentence, their value, etc.—which unfamiliarity and the consequent compulsion to make a serious attempt at learning, of necessity bring about. He who is compelled to study a series of words that at first mean little or nothing to him, must somehow make shift to discover what they do mean. He must become an investigator, an explorer, an experimenter and discoverer in this foreign land. The attempt to force this way of investigating one's own familiar and native speech, when the way has not already been prepared by training in some foreign language, is not at all likely to be successful. English, therefore, can never be substituted for the classical languages.

Among all foreign languages the classical languages are for us best adapted to use by the teacher for training in the science and art of interpretation. This is due to the very structure of these languages, to the fact that, being dead, they are the more foreign, and especially, to the exceedingly elaborate and generally admirable apparatus of grammars, lexicons, annotated editions, historical and antiquarian illustrations, etc., with which several centuries of diligent research and careful scholarship have provided these languages.—Professor G. Trumbull Ladd in the July-September Forum.

IS THERE SLAVERY IN AMERICA?

What will be the outcome of the race troubles in the South, and indeed throughout the United States, is difficult to conjecture. That they will in time become very serious is not improbable. Rumors have of late been circulated which indicate that in many instances in the South negroes have been subjected to a species of bondage which is even worse than the slavery from which they were freed after the shedding of much blood. How extensively this contemptible practice has been carried on we do not know. It is likely that the newspapers have in many instances failed to circulate the news, though the suppression may have resulted from local efforts.

The senior editor sends us the following clipping from the London Daily Mail, issue of July 1, with the remark that we sometimes "have to go away from home to get the news."

NEGRO SLAVERY IN AMERICA.
 (From Our Own Correspondent.)

NEW YORK, Tuesday, June 30.

The recent revelations of the infamous system of negro slavery existing in Alabama have excited intense indignation throughout the country.

It was recently discovered that a widespread conspiracy existed between the magistrates, police, and employers of labor whereby hundreds of negroes have been deprived of liberty and transformed into slaves. Numbers of negroes in debt or guilty of some trivial offense have been arrested and brought before corrupt magistrates, who imposed heavy fines, which they were unable to pay. Instead of sending the negroes to prison, the magistrates would lease them out for six months or a year to the proprietors of plantations, quarries, etc., who paid the fine.

The negroes were usually sold for two to ten guineas, the magistrates or local constables pocketing the purchase price. Many negroes were arrested on trumped-up charges, compelled to stand mock trials, and illegally condemned to this form of penal servitude.

On many plantations the scenes portrayed in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" were vividly reproduced. The wretched negroes held in bondage toiled in the fields, driven by cruel overseers armed with whips, and were frequently beaten. At night they were kept in filthy pens, and were often half starved. Those who tried to escape were pursued by bloodhounds, speedily captured, and severely punished.

All sorts of barbarities were practiced. In one case recently exposed a negress who was ill and unable to work is said to have been strung up by the wrists and beaten to death. As the Alabama authorities showed no disposition to interfere, the United States judiciary department recently began an investigation of the slavery system. As a result eighteen men, including five owners of extensive plantations, mills, and quarries, two magistrates, and several constables were arrested and charged with conspiring to deprive the American citizens of their liberty.

The trial opened in the United States Court at Montgomery, Alabama, to-day, and promises to reveal further startling facts. Other prosecutions are expected to follow. Public sentiment in Alabama strongly supports the prosecution, and every effort will now be made to put an end to this disgraceful system of slavery.

THE TRACT FUND.

Many of the Saints have remembered the tract fund by donations since their attention was recently called to it. One brother sent in twenty-five dollars and we understand the Ohio branches are taking collections for the benefit of this fund. We are glad that the Saints are realizing the importance of the needs of this fund, and we trust that enough may be subscribed to enable the Bishop to send out many more tracts. The reply of President Joseph Smith to the article in the Arena for November, 1902, by Joseph F. Smith of the Utah church, has been put in pamphlet form, and will appear this week under the title, Plural Marriage in America.

RELIGION IN OUR LIVES.

The Outlook sets forth the idea that our religion should be manifested in our every-day life in the following extract from a recent number:

The final evidence or religion is always the fruit it bears. No conformity to creed, nor rigidity of observation of ritual, no devotion to any church as an organization, no ritualistic act or service, can be the final test of the love of Christ in a man's heart. The final test of the presence of that love is always the disposition to treat others as Christ treats us, to do unto others as Christ has done unto us, and to illustrate in our relations with others the charity, kindness, and sacrificial spirit which gave the life of Christ and his death their beautiful and supreme significance. In the clamor of contending interpretations of the Christian life, in the tumult of antagonistic claims of authority from this church or from that, in all the uncertainty of thought, of practice, or of organization which prevails throughout the world to-day, the Spirit of Christ manifested in our relations with our fellows is the definite and fixed thing which any man or woman may learn and which every man and woman ought to practice.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

C. J. Spurlock, Bellair, Illinois, July 14: "Apostle I. N. White is to be here to-night from St. Louis to preach. Some here are anxious to see and hear him. Doubtless he will remain in Illinois till after the reunion in August."

Under date of July 8, W. H. Kelley wrote from Salt Lake City: "Polygamy is a live issue here; in fact, the live issue; it is advocated and defended on the streets. The people are taught by the leaders to believe it in their hearts if not led to practice it. We needed a tract, and so I had the reply to President Joseph F. Smith, as published in the Arena, put in tract form, and it just hits the point. The people crowd around to get them, and when read it has a tendency to convince. Bro. Chase has a horse and carriage, and takes his wife, tents out, and stands in the carriage and talks. So far it draws. Sr. Chase, Charley, and Alice, all join in the singing, and so far the scheme is a success. Best thing yet." On the tenth Bro. Kelley wrote as follows: "The grand jury was not able to secure, or did not secure a verdict against polygamists; that is, polygamy is not practiced or taught here, yet they preach it all the time and practice it openly. The grand jury was trying to secure evidence of a new marriage, it is likely."

Under date of July 14 J. W. Waldsmith writes from Guide Rock, Nebraska: "Bro. J. R. Sutton and I are here and will preach at the Christian church to-night and continue for a time if the interest will justify, and we are permitted to use the church. We held forth in the Presbyterian church at Stoddard last Sunday night. Had a good turnout and good attention, with pressing invitation to come again. We are on our way westward so as to visit the Saints who have been isolated for a number of years, but were taken into our district last spring. We have been hindered greatly by high water, but now hope to be able to do more effective work."

E. A. Stedman, writing from Barnesville, Minnesota, July 10, says: "We had a nice reunion at Clitherall, and think at the end of the year we can report progress made. We are having a good hearing here and enjoying much of the Spirit in preaching the word. Am feeling well in the work."

J. W. Rushton writing from Llanelly, Wales, July 3, states: "On June 25 at ten o'clock in the forenoon I met Bro. Joseph and Bro. R. C. Evans at Southampton. We have visited London, Enfield, and Cardiff Branches. Have had enjoyable associations with the Saints who have been much pleased to greet our brethren. Fair crowds have attended our services and we trust that their visit will prove beneficial to the work in Great Britain. We arrived in Llanelly to-day. The brethren are well and enjoying themselves."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

I. N. Roberts in making quarterly report writes that four of his men have failed to report. One of the four, D. W. Cook, however, is lying at the point of death. We trust that the brethren working in the various fields will make it a point to be prompt with their reports, so that the missionaries in charge can report promptly to the First Presidency. These reports are necessary, and hence we trust that the brethren will not neglect them, thinking that they are of no particular benefit. The reports as they come in from the missionaries are scanned very closely in the First Presidency's office. We trust that in their next quarterly report neither Bro. Roberts nor any other of the missionaries will have reason to complain of their men in reporting.

Writing from Albany, Missouri, July 13, D. C. White reports four baptisms; fine crowds at the preaching.

The Tabor Sunday-school sends through its secretary, Sr. Agnes Dundson, a sum of money, three dollars nine cents,—special collection taken on Children's Day. She writes: "The school sends it as an offering to help out in the ministerial work, or whatever the Bishop can do with it." Such offerings are encouraging to those who are striving as best they can to carry the work forward. The manifestation of willingness to help always encourages anyway.

According to the Louisville Courier for July 12, lightning has struck the cross erected over the barn in the "Cabbage Patch." The barn is one erected by Mrs. Sarah Hedges, who preaches the immediate second coming of the Messiah. Mrs. Hedges believes the Lord will come to this particular barn, to the "Lord's Manger" which she has erected in the barn. She certainly has some peculiar ideas as to Christ's second coming.

By a news item which appeared in the London Daily Mail July 1, dated Sydney, Australia, June 30, we notice the "rain-makers" in that country carry on their operations on rather an extensive scale. The news item referred to tells how Doctor McCarthy, the "rain-maker," had gone to Broken Hill, in the silver fields "to break the drought." He was to start his process that night "with six assistants and six tents ten miles apart." The "rain-maker" evidently felt confident, and the Broken Hill Chamber of Commerce was "confidently preparing a guage to register the amount of the fall." It would be interesting to know the results of the "rain-making" process. We have often read with curiosity, to say the least, of the extensive processes indulged in by the "rain-makers" of the various tribes of uncivilized races of men; and now we wonder if future generations will read with the same feeling of the efforts of the "rain-makers" of to-day.

In a letter dated July 16 Bro. H. A. McCoy states that they had put up the tent at Greene, Iowa, and would commence services that night.

The Hawkeye of Burlington, Iowa, for July 12, contained an article under the heading "'True' Mormons Here," which tells somewhat of our work in Burlington, the Religio, Sunday-school, etc., and a little of what we believe. Our missionary there, Elbert A. Smith, received considerable notice by the reporter. The Burlington Journal for July 10 also devotes some space to a write-up of Bro. Smith and the belief of the church, also the work of the Burlington Religio.

Mrs. Ann Clarke, of Milan, New York, writes that there is a good chance for an elder to open up the work there.

Information has come to the Bishop's office that Elder D. W. Cook, whose illness was noted in an extract from letter of Bro. I. N. Roberts in this issue, has passed away.

Bishop E. L. Kelley left Lamoni Friday evening to look after matters of church business in Michigan and other parts of the East. He will be away for several days.

Just at the time for going to press with this issue we have received correspondence from the senior editor dated at Nantyglo, Wales, July 9. This will appear in next week's issue.

Pope Leo XIII, head of the great Roman Catholic Church, passed quietly away shortly after four o'clock in the afternoon of July 20. During his lingering illness a remarkable interest has been taken in him by the non-Catholic world, especially in the United States.

In a letter to the Bishop, Bro. Hubert Case writing from Redmoon, Oklahoma, reports forty-six baptisms in that district during the past quarter, fifteen of which were at Redmoon.

A special collection was taken up by the deacons of the Lamoni Branch last Sunday morning to meet the expense of the new heating plant for the brick church and other present needs. Eight hundred eighteen dollars fifty cents was the amount announced as subscribed at the Sunday morning services and several contributions have been received since.

Bro. William Lewis, wife, and daughter Ruth, arrived at St. Joseph, Missouri, July 14. The Gazette for July 17 devotes a column to Bro. Lewis and his late mission work in Wales.

During the early part of this month a plan of denominational union embracing the Congregationalists, the United Brethren, and the Methodist Protestants was formulated at Pittsburg by a representative gathering of these bodies. The promoters of this merger assert that a Protestant church union has become imperative as a measure of economy and to prevent the absorption of the struggling church weaklings by the robust religious bodies that have already obtained a firm foothold in the United States. The total membership of the union will be one million one hundred thousand. This is following the tendency of the times towards mergers and unions.

The Board of Trustees of Graceland College are expecting to build a cottage near the college building, to be used by the president of the school. The cottage is needed, and any help will be appreciated, either labor or donations.

TRAINING OF CHILDREN.

The misconduct during church services of some who are quite young has been the means of bringing forth some talk that to me, as I view those matters, seems neither dictated by wisdom nor prudence, as I have been a child and a youth, and have grown up, like most of those spoken of, in blissful ignorance of what the teaching of parents to their children should be. Like them I was trained up after the traditions of men, instead of after the "admonition of the Lord." And I am of the opinion that the best way to remove the evil is to remove the cause that produced the evil by commencing as parents and obeying the admonitions of the Lord, as Apostle Paul says, "Fathers, provoke not your children to anger." If the father has no right to provoke the child for his evils, have those in charge of church affairs any right? "But bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." And the only secure method of obtaining, and also of retaining in our mind, the admonitions of the Lord, is by living in obedience to his command, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life."—John 5:39. And again as he told the young man when asked by him, "What good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" "Keep the commandments." And he said unto him, "Which?" And we are not left to presume that the Savior pointed out to him those commands that were by any means the least essential, when he said: "Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honor thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Matthew 19:16-19. And again when asked by the lawyer, "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" Jesus said unto him, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

Here we think the question might be reasonably asked, If all the law hangs upon these two commands, and we pass either one of them by and almost entirely neglect to keep it, by what rule will we be able to keep the very numerous commands that are enjoined upon us? Jesus has said, "For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak."—John 12:49, 50.

We find Jesus in his last commission to his disciples commanding them thus, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." We are aware that our people are very tenacious about living in strict obedience to this part of the command, but are they just as much so in regard to what follows, as were those disciples whom he addressed at that time? He said, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you:" and he attached to that the promise that if they did those things, which he had commanded them, "and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28:19, 20. And we find that down to this day so far as we live in obedience to his commands he is with us, and no farther, as he has again said, I am bound when you do what I say.

We find by searching farther that those disciples went out in obedience to those commands and that Jesus was with them insomuch that they were able to heal all manner of diseases, and to perform many miraculous works, but it is with their teachings we wish now to deal.

"For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another. For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another."—Galatians 5:13-15.

Let us be watchful that there is no biting and devouring one of another, but live in accord with the principles taught in the divine word.

"Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I have told you in times past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."—Galatians 5:19-21.

And, then the apostle gives us to understand that the workings of the Spirit make manifest a very different state of affairs and he says: "But the fruit of the Spirit, is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law."—Galatians 5:22, 23. That is, those who live according to those principles live above all law, and are out of danger of being restrained or apprehended by any law. Then he goes on farther teaching the brethren how they should do in order to work out those principles enumerated and says, "If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit. Let us not be desirous of vainglory, provoking one another, envying one another."—Galatians 5:25, 26.

"Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."—Galatians 6:1.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." And what is the law of Christ on that point? "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."—Matthew 7: 12.

"And let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith."—Galatians 6: 9, 10. That is, if we do not become tired of advocating those principles laid down, and become desirous, as Paul has said, "of vainglory."

"For if a man think himself something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself." We often see men who seem to feel that they are of the utmost importance that an organization in which they have a membership would scarce be able to exist without the aid of their official capacity, to such Paul seems to be speaking, and he says farther, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Galatians 6: 3, 8.

"Owe no man anything, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."—Romans 13: 8-10.

There are numerous other quotations that might be produced in defense of the principles of the doctrine of Christ, but as there is already perhaps too much space taken we will forbear quoting farther, and would say that our object in quoting thus far from the apostles is to establish the fact that they went forth in obedience to the commands of Christ, and taught those same principles which were lived and taught by him, and we learn by searching farther that they realized in a marked degree the fulfillment of the promises he had made to them, but of that at this time we do not wish to deal, but think we have before us enough of the principles of the doctrine of Christ to establish the point now under consideration, but we will do well to bear in mind one more declaration made by one of those disciples sent out to teach all things, and we will therefore quote it here. "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

We should ever bear in mind the fact that the principles of the doctrine of Christ do not terminate at the laying on of hands, as we often hear quoted, but when we have received that ordination we are to go on to perfection.

But we wish now to search farther and learn if possible whether this is some new doctrine Jesus has come to earth and established, or whether it was taught long before he was born a babe in Bethlehem. For he has said, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me," and as the Apostle has said, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever," and therefore the fact is established that his principles are, and have been, and will be in all ages of the world. We find this same principle taught to ancient Israel, as expressed by the following words of the wise man: "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him. That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past."—Ecclesiastes 3: 14, 15. By searching we learn that God requires of us only what he has required of all others in all ages of the past, so with patience let us search.

"Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself: I am the Lord."—Leviticus 19: 18.

"Honor thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee."—Deuteronomy 5: 16.

"Thou shalt not kill. Neither shalt thou commit adultery. Neither shalt thou steal. Neither shalt thou bear false witness against thy neighbor."—Deuteronomy 5: 17-20.

"Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord; and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart." That is, we should keep them constantly in our memory, to do them in all our transactions and dealings with men in this life just as expressed in the following language: "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and thou shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."—Deuteronomy 6: 4-7.

We understand by the above language that we are to teach those principles constantly to our children both by precept and example that they may also grow up with those principles enstamped upon every act of their lives. And why not, if living those principles insures us a safe passport into the kingdom of God, teach them diligently to our children that they may walk by the same passport into the same kingdom? Would it not be a better legacy to bequeath our children than all the classical education we shall ever be able to bequeath to them? We leave the wise to answer, as that seems to be what is stirring the hearts of men at the present time, instead of living in obedience to the injunction to, "Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

We have learned by the quotations we have cited what the admonition of the Lord is, but let us also remember another saying: "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it."—Proverbs 22: 6.

Here the question would arise, are we as a people living in obedience to the admonition of the Lord as cited in the foregoing? If not, let us apply the remedy where it should be before we apply it to the child. The only way to remove borers from a fruit tree is to go down at the root and dig them out from the place of deposit, and not go into the branches, and go to pruning them, if you do, the borer will work on and on, until the tree is dead. It is just so with the church, if there is a borer destroying the trunk of the tree, you must not commence to remove the evil by pruning the branches, but get down to the root where the evil lies, and dig it out.

Let us each one examine ourselves by the word given, and see whether we are in the faith.

The subject of love seemed to be very much thought upon and taught by our Savior during his ministry here. And we sometimes hear it spoken upon here, and at one time I remember a speaker remarked that he could not love a person that was not lovable, and all the construction I could put upon that, from the teachings he gave us, was that he could not love a person that was not good and kind, and I have been somewhat perplexed over it, but by taking the Savior's admonition to search the Scriptures, I found my way out of it, and for the benefit of some others I will quote what I found: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8: 20. As the Savior was given us as a leader and a witness let us take his testimony:

"Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that you may be the children of your Father which is in heaven."—Matthew 5: 43-45.

We are taught in the divine Word that he is "no respecter of persons," that he loves all his creatures whom he has created, and if we fall short of that we are not his children. And as we find that teaching is not according to the law and the testimony we put Isaiah's construction upon it, and pass it by. But again, we are sometimes taught in regard to the subject of bringing up children, that we may bring them up the best we can and then oftentimes they will depart from our teachings and fall away, but as we discovered at once that that teaching was not according to the law and the testimony, we also pass it by as unwise words. But we would like to ask if there ever was a child trained up strictly after the nurture and admonition of the Lord, as we find them recorded in the good Word of the Lord? If so, we would like to ask farther, Did he ever depart from that teaching? We would suggest that we should wait until we have such experience before we teach in contradiction to the wise man that wrote the Proverbs, who was not only a wise man, but it seems that he was much older and had had much more experience in life than some of us, and also that he wrote under the inspiration of God.

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2-Timothy 3: 16, 17. It is not safe then to tamper with the inspiration of God.

There is another thought touched upon by the Apostle James we desire to notice. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."—James 1: 27.

It must be apparent to every thinking mind that in order that we may enjoy undefiled religion we must keep ourselves unspotted from the vices of the world, that it is equally important that our children should also be kept clear from those spots of vice. How are they to shun those spots of secret vice which are most sure to come upon them in early childhood, if their parents neglect to warn them of approaching danger? They have no other means of knowing they may be innocently caught by Satan's power.

Not long since we heard a good sermon given on the subject of opportunities, and the idea was advanced that the golden opportunity to teach children was before they reached the years of accountability, that at that time Satan had no power over them to influence them to evil. That is correct thus far, but the speaker did not tell those parents that that was their golden opportunity to teach their children, that there was a Satan, and that he had enthroned himself upon the threshold of every household, with his trap set, into which if they enter they are sure to have placed upon them more or less of those most vile spots of secret vice, and if they lose that opportunity it can never return in time to save the child untarnished, for it is Satan's occupation to destroy, if possible, all the race of mankind, and he is ever on the watch-tower seeking his opportunity to destroy; he is vigilantly watching every opportunity let pass by man; he instantly makes use of them to carry out his schemes of destruction, and that is the manner in which he keeps his work constantly in the ascendancy.

The only way that we can ever counteract his work in the least degree, is to work up, as a whole, and attach to ourselves that same degree of vigilance which characterizes his work, and seize every opportunity that comes to us and make the best possible use of every opportunity that comes to foil the works of the subtle worker. When this is done we will see the balance of the scale change to the other side, and it will tip on the side of righteousness, and the necessity will no longer exist, for any one to perform the painful duty of standing in any religious gathering to chastise either the aged or the youth for unrighteous conduct.

Let us have a few more sermons on the subject of opportunities as they come to us, and opportunities lost.

INDIAN PROGRESS TOWARDS BOOK OF MORMON FULFILLMENT.

For many years I have been deeply interested in the study of the Book of Mormon and in investigating the internal and external evidences in favor of its being a divinely given message; also in the prophecies contained in it that are yet to be fulfilled. Therefore have I been gratified in seeing the gradual unfolding of events looking to the accomplishment of the declaration in that book that, "Many generations shall not pass away," after its publication to the world, before "the remnant" of the land, the Indian tribes, "shall be a pure and a delightsome people."

Apparently one of the greatest factors, or aids, to the fulfillment of that statement, has been the interest manifested during the past twenty years by the United States Government, and by good men and women in its employ, in the effort for the real and practical education of Indian children. Without doubt great progress has been made through the teaching of the young people of that race, not only to read and study the printed text-books and histories of the white race, but also practically to understand the trades and occupations of the whites, so that many have become proficient in them. And a few have come to excel in knowledge of the professions and scientific attainments of the superior race.

Thus have many of them been made to realize that their race is capable of rising to better things than their fathers have known, and to a higher intelligence, as well as being destined to have an active participation in the progressive achievements of mankind. After that the next step will be to learn that a still greater future is to come to them and to all the nations even the good time foreordained by the Creator, by him whom Paul says "hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation."—Acts 17: 26.

Many reports have been published by the Indian Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior, also by individuals, all of them going to prove the past growth in education, the development of mental powers in the Indian boys and girls, and the general improvement being made by all who have been willing to abide by the rules and to continue in the effort for their advancement. The present status is said to be excellent, and the outlook encouraging, if the promoters and workers do not weary of the toil and sacrifice necessary to accomplish the best results.

I regret that I have not with me some of the official reports, also more complete statistics for the preparation of an article. But such as I have will be given and some readers may be interested in perusing the things gathered from the sources at hand.

It seems that at the principal Indian school, the one at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, there has been a total of nearly four thousand children under instruction during the twenty years, but how many thousands at the many other schools I have no present means of knowing. The boys have numbered more than the girls at Carlisle, and they have been taught the trades according to their likes or wishes, while the girls have learned cooking and the general work of housekeeping, how to sew and to make their own clothing, and to do laundry work, and every service pertaining to neat and careful home-keeping. Thus very much attention is paid to the practical education of both the boys and the girls all looking to their own self-sustaining when they begin the battle of life for themselves after leaving the school.

Formerly this school graduated its pupils at the grammar grade, but in recent years more advanced studies have been introduced, and now those who graduate are well along in the high-school course as taught to white children at the public schools.

Vocal music is taught in the schoolrooms, while instrumental music is taught individually, and there are three literary and debating societies in the Carlisle school.

Another thing to be noticed is that some years ago the young Indians began to desire to labor during the vacation time in order to earn money to pay their personal expenses during the following year. At first the people on farms and in towns were doubtful about the Indian boys and girls making useful workers, but the few who were first tried by the whites so quickly proved their value that since then there is more demand for them than there is a supply of them, and those who have thus labored have in the aggregate earned over two hundred thousand dollars. And more than half of this amount has been deposited in banks to their credit for future use, less than half being spent for present needs. There is a savings bank in the school and they receive interest on their deposits.

It is also stated that many of the young men and women who graduate in the Carlisle studies then enter the Normal Department and there fit themselves for teaching; also that the Government is glad to employ all such in the various schools established in Indian Territory and in other parts of the West. Most of these schools are for primary scholars where younger Indian children make the start towards an education before they go to the Carlisle or other advanced schools.

The foregoing is only a brief summary, but it is sufficient to awaken thought among members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ as to the promises of God as understood by us, regarding the future of the posterity of Lehi and Nephi, as also of Laman and Lemuel.

The foregoing reminds me that at the World's Fair in 1893 one day was devoted to Indian interests in the Assembly Hall, and there an educated Indian, Doctor Carlos Montezuma, spoke of his race and of the improvement and development of many of them under the kind care of those who were making efforts to lift his people to a higher plane of life and duty. He told how he was brought out of ignorance and darkness, and of the work of developing him, until he became a physician and surgeon in the army of the United States.

All this shows what is possible to be wrought out in harmony with the declaration of God that I quoted near the beginning of this article. And it is our faith that sometime it will be fulfilled entirely, through the process of years and by the working of God's Spirit upon human hearts and upon all races and nations, for the happiness of man and for the honor of the name of the Lord. And we must not forget that he uses means to accomplish his purposes.

BIBLE TRANSLATIONS.—NO. 1.

BY C. J. SPURLOCK.

Since Bible criticism has become so common and widespread, not only by infidels and skeptics, but also by college professors and learned men of the world, its effect is far-reaching and damaging to the masses, hence efforts should be made to counteract its influence on the minds of the people. In fact, efforts in this direction are from time to time being made, and that, too, by men of wisdom and talent, but notwithstanding this, infidelity and vain and deceitful philosophy are making great inroads on the morals of the people. What then is to be done to better the moral and spiritual condition of the minds of the people? Shall we sit still and say enough has already been done to convert the world to the Bible? Nay, verily! Should we be idle spectators to this awful scene, we would be justly overtaken by the judgments of God. Let us, therefore, while our tongues are loosed and we are yet able to wield the pen in behalf of truth, our minds being actuated by the inspiration of the Almighty, use every available means of showing the honest ones of earth's millions that the Bible is true and that its present defects are largely the result of improper translations which have from time to time been made.

Here the objector might arise and say our Bible is correctly translated, or translated from the original manuscripts which the prophets of the Old Testament and the apostles of the New Testament wrote as they were moved upon by the inspiration of the Almighty. Assertions are not proofs and taking a contrary view of the matter I shall therefore endeavor to prove from authenticated sources that the common or King James Version, or the Revised Version of the sacred Scriptures, as well as many other translations, contain errors of translation. It is truly a serious thing to believe that the sacred Scriptures contain errors of translation, yet if they really do contain them, is it not better and more honorable to say so than to disguise that fact and thus deceive the people? Certainly, it is.

In order to get a proper understanding of the subject it is necessary to know how, or by what means, the translations of the Bible now in use were produced. These Bibles, the King James Translation, the Revised Version, and many others now in common use, were translated from ancient manuscripts, which have come down to us from the misty past. But who wrote these manuscripts, what is their age, and how well have they been preserved, are questions of vast importance in the consideration of the subject.

If the Bibles now in existence were translated from manuscripts which were imperfect, then the Bible itself must be imperfect also. Instead of the manuscripts from which the Old Testament was translated being written by Moses and the prophets, as many seem to suppose, "we have not a single manuscript one thousand years old." See Old Documents and the New Bible, published by Samuel Bagster & Sons, 1890; Three Bibles Compared, by R. Etzenhouser.

When we consider that much of the Old Testament was written some three thousand years ago and that we have not a single manuscript one thousand years old, we may view the subject of Bible translation with increased interest. It is proper in this investigation to note one peculiarity of the Old Testament manuscript, both in its ancient and present form; namely, that the writing consists of consonants only. "It is easy to see how in such a case the same word might be differently read according to the different vowels supplied. For example in English, B R N, BaRN, BoRN, BuRN, BRiNy, BaRoNy, etc. . . . Here, for an example, are two Hebrew words in Deuteronomy, B Z R, and P S G H, which in our Hebrew Bible read Bezer, and Pisgah, but which the Septuagint translators render Bozor and Pasgah."—Three Bibles Compared by R. Etzenhouser.

From this explanation relative to writing of the ancient manuscripts of the Old Testament, it is evident that in translating the Hebrew into the English, or other languages, at least some conjecture was made in supplying the vowels. When we note that there are now some two hundred eighty or two hundred ninety different translations of the Bible, no two of them being alike, we see that of a truth some conjecture was necessary to produce them as they now stand. Having shown there was some conjecture used in the translation of the Old Testament, why should any one declare that the Bible contains no errors of translation? However, the difficulty is in part removed by there being so many translations made as there were, by different men at different times, and yet differing so little. For this we should all be thankful and give God the glory. Again, "Never did any writing come down through the ages so pure as we have reason to believe did our Hebrew Bible; but that it has come to us word for word as it left the hands of the inspired writers long ago, the evidence will by no means allow us to believe."—Page 22."

Having said so much in regard to Old Testament manuscripts and their translation, it is but fitting that we also refer before closing this article to New Testament manuscripts and their translation, that the reader may see how the Bibles in common use in the churches came into existence.

I shall continue to quote from Three Bibles Compared, as it contains much information on the subject by good authority. "Besides some very precious fragments there are only five copies of the New Testament at all complete which can be referred to a higher antiquity. These are to be dated, as we shall see, between the fourth and the sixth centuries."—Page 8. This same authority, Mr. Roberts, as quoted in the Three Bibles Compared, referring to the above-mentioned manuscripts says of B, or Vatican manuscript: "It now wants the Epistle to the Hebrews from chapter 9: 14, all the Pastoral Epistles, and the book of Revelation." He further shows that books or parts of books were left out of the other manuscripts.

I shall now proceed to show how the present Standard Version, as it is called, or the King James Translation was produced. Mr. Roberts continues by saying: "When an English version of the New Testament is put into our hands as furnishing a transcript in our own language of God's revelation of himself through Jesus Christ, it is of the most vital importance to be assured of the trustworthiness of the text on which that version has been based. Without this everything else must be comparatively worthless. . . . The first and gravest question to be asked regarding it has respect to the faithfulness with which the text on which it was based represented the true and original word of God. . . . The illustrious Erasmus comes into view, a man to whom modern thought is, in so many ways, under such deep and lasting obligations. That great scholar which was in England in 1515, and on April 17 of that year he received a request from Froben, an eminent printer of Basle, to prepare for publication an edition of the Greek New Testament."

By further perusing the subject in Three Bibles Compared we find that Erasmus complied with Froben's request and by February, 1516, the work was completed and immediately published. "The first edition of Erasmus was reprinted, with corrections amounting to about two hundred, by Aldus, at Venice, in 1518. A second edition, with more than three hundred improvements, was issued by Erasmus himself in 1519. This was followed by a third edition in 1522. . . . The fourth edition of Erasmus is thus the most important and became the basis of all subsequent texts, until what is known as the "Received Text" was formed."

The true successor in this department was Robert Stephens. His great edition was the third, published 1550. In his work of translating he followed Erasmus, even when the readings in it were opposed to the authority of all manuscript. (Page 10.)

Beza was the successor of Stephens in translating Greek manuscript. He published five editions of the Greek New Testament, which "varied somewhat among themselves, but were based throughout upon the text of Stephens. And now we reach the interesting and important part of this sketch, as the history of the printed text of the New Testament just given has led us very near the date at which the Authorized English Version began to be made. It was commenced about 1604, when the above-named Greek texts were, in one form or another, generally circulated. Which of them, we ask with eagerness, formed the original from which our common English translation was derived? To this question the answer is, that Beza's edition of 1589 was the one usually followed. It had been based on Stephens' edition of 1550, and that again had been derived from the fourth edition of Erasmus, published in 1527. Such is the parentage of the Authorized Version—Beza, Stephens, Erasmus. What manuscript authority, let us ask, is thus represented? Beginning with Erasmus, we find that his resources were meager indeed, and that even the materials which he had were not fully utilized.

"It has already been noticed how hastily his first edition was prepared; indeed, he himself said of it that it "was rather tumbled headlong into the world than edited." The manuscripts which he had in his possession are still preserved. . . . Some of them bear in themselves the corrections which he made, and show too obvious marks of having been used as "copy" by the printer. They consisted of the following: In the Gospels he principally used a cursive manuscript of the fifteenth or sixteenth century. . . . He also possessed another cursive manuscript of the twelfth century or earlier, and occasionally referred to it. . . . In the Acts and Epistles he chiefly followed a cursive manuscript of the thirteenth or fourteenth century. . . . For the Apocalypse he had only one mutilated manuscript. He had thus no documentary materials for publishing a complete edition of the Greek Testament. The consequence would have been that some version must have been left wanting had not Erasmus taken the vulgate and conjecturedly retranslated the Latin into Greek. Hence has arisen the remarkable fact that in the text from which our Authorized Version was formed, and in the ordinary uncritical editions of the Greek current at the present day, there were, and are, words in the professed original for which no divine authority can be pleaded, but which are entirely due to the learning and imagination of Erasmus. . . . Thus, then, stood the text of the Greek New Testament when the revisers of the Bishops' Bible set themselves to form from it our present Authorized English Version.

"Not one of the four most ancient manuscripts was then known to be in existence. . . . In these circumstances can it be wondered at that vast multitudes of changes will be found in the Revised English Version, owing to an amended text.'"

"Mr. Roberts in his companion to the Revised Version of the New Testament on pages one hundred fifty-four and one hundred fifty-five gives the time of the production of King James' Version as from 1604 to 1623 seven years. The number of scholars forty-seven."—Page 11.

"Mr. Roberts on page one hundred sixty-two, gives the date of May 6, 1870, as the opening of the work of the revision of the New Testament, and on page one hundred sixty-six gives October, 1880, as the time of its completion."—Page 12.

They were fourteen years completing the translation of the Old Testament. "Fourteen years, eighty-two men of high scholarship, wealth, the advantages and conveniences of all modern appliances, with the additional wealth of manuscripts and documents, discovered since the former translation—all these are the agencies employed in giving to the world the Revised Version."—Preface to Three Bibles Compared.

Let us now see if it was translated correctly. To ascertain the facts in the case, we need to keep in mind what has already been said about the ancient manuscripts and also to get the testimony of those who did the work of revision in the preface to the Revised Version of the New Testament.

"We recognized from the first the responsibility of the undertaking and through our manifold experiences of its abounding difficulties we have felt more and more as we went onward that such a work can never be accomplished by organized efforts of scholarship and criticism unless assisted by divine help."

Nature-lovers will find something very much to their taste in Ernest Harold Baynes' article on "Summer Wild Flowers," in the August number of the Woman's Home Companion.

THE PREVENTION OF TYPHOID FEVER.

A consensus of expert opinion would probably show that, judging by the standards of our present knowledge, typhoid fever is caused by the presence in the human body of a specific contagion. . . . It is believed that it is caused in human beings by distinctive bacilli, making their way into the alimentary canal by such vehicles as water, milk, and the saliva, surviving contact with the gastric juices of the stomach and, reaching the intestines, there multiplying and propagating their own specific toxin, to the absorption of which the beginnings of the disease are due. The guardian membranes of the alimentary tract are weakened and relaxed, or otherwise impaired, and through them the bacilli make their way into the tissues of the body. . . .

The existence of typhoid fever as a scourge of the human race, for as long a period as any form of disease is traceable by clinical records, insures a widespread distribution of the active agents of its infective industry. These might, and probably would, in time become attenuated and ineffective, if it were not true that the supply of fresh and virile bacilli is constantly being replenished by the occurrence of new cases, which are almost equally dangerous as disseminators of the contagion, whether mild or severe. Everything favors the belief that the average man is rarely quite free from contact with the germs of typhoid.

It has often been said of typhoid fever that one may eat it and drink it, but he can not breathe it. . . . It does not follow, however, that, so far as typhoid is concerned, bad air may be breathed with impunity. . . . One who seeks to safeguard himself against typhoid fever should take heed to his general sanitary environment and the appointments of his dwelling, since negligence in these respects will probably undermine his vitality and leave him an easy victim to what might otherwise find him immune. . . .

So long as the system is not in a condition of susceptibility to extrinsic forces operating to derange its mechanism and to produce the condition we call disease, it is impregnable. While typhoid attacks persons of all ages, its greatest fatality is among those in the prime of life. The period of maximum susceptibility seems to be between the ages of eighteen and four-five, and within that range the largest proportion of deaths occurs. This, however, may be less of a paradox than it appears to be. Vigorous persons in the prime of life are perhaps less prudent than the young are required to be and the old find it comfortable to be. They indulge in more excesses and incur greater risks in exposure to weakening influences. The consciousness of strength makes them indifferent to warnings which others heed.

Very likely the young and strong fail to recognize as soon as others the first symptoms of infection, and go about their business or pleasures until the disease is well advanced. . . . No doubt the relatively high proportion of mortality from typhoid among the young and strong finds its explanation in imprudence and neglect. Good general health is the best safeguard known or imaginable against typhoid; and it should not be forgotten that general good health is inconsistent with imprudence in habit or diet.

Undoubtedly the most frequent cause of typhoid infection is found in polluted drinking water. . . . It is most prevalent during periods of drought, when the water of streams and wells is low and the contamination is most concentrated. Generally speaking, the protection of a water-supply is beyond the power of the individual; but even polluted water may be perfectly sterilized by the simple expedient of boiling it. Care must be taken, however, to protect it from subsequent contamination. The cooling which is necessary to render it agreeable to the taste should not be done with ice added to it and permitted to mingle with it in melting, unless the purity of the ice is assured. Freezing does not sterilize water. . . . Ice may be loaded with them [bacilli], and with other dangerous micro-organisms. A wall of clean glass between the boiled water and the ice which cools it is prudent. . . .

Milk is in many respects the most dangerous article of food which comes into the well-ordered dwelling. It is a peculiarly favorable culture medium for many species of bacteria, and is a favorite vehicle for the germs of infectious diseases. . . . Generally speaking, it should never be used unsterilized. The process known as Pasteurization, by which it is heated to one hundred fifty-eight degrees or one hundred sixty degrees is the simplest and safest. At this relatively low temperature flavor and digestibility are but little impaired, but all of the bacteria and most of the fermentation cells are destroyed. In no other way than by heat can a household which receives a daily supply of milk be safeguarded against typhoid fever.

The same is true of sea food. Oysters and clams from their natural sea beds are rarely dangerous; those replanted for fattening and bleaching in the sewage-polluted waters of river deltas and tidal estuaries are very real sources of danger when eaten raw. . . . Indeed, there are very few things which may be eaten raw with impunity from the immediate danger of typhoid infection. . . .

Flies are industrious agents in the dissemination of the secondary infection of typhoid fever. These busy little scavengers are not at all fastidious, nor do they permit any one else to be. After wandering about all sorts of unclean places and picking up bacteria, they come in at open windows and doors and satisfy their pampered appetites by visits to food prepared for the family. A fly in the butter may be assumed to leave behind him, if he gets away, whatever parasitic micro-organisms he carried on his feet and legs, or to plant them there if he does not. . . .

The fly is also the agent of a more direct conveyance of typhoid bacilli in the spreading of secondary infection. He has a fondness for lighting on the lips of persons, sick or well, as may be, and every human being indulges more or less in the habit of wetting the lips with the tongue. In this way what the fly leaves behind him may be taken up by the saliva and passed directly into the alimentary canal, there to do whatever mischief may be its normal function. To be effectually safeguarded against typhoid fever one must keep flies, mosquitoes, and all other insects out of his house and away from his person.

Digital infection is recognized as one of the many ways in which typhoid fever is carried to persons capable of avoiding other exposures. From balustrades, door-knobs, the hand-rails of street vehicles, the straps provided for those who can not get seats, and from a thousand other things which one must touch, and usually thinks he may touch and not be defiled, he may get the bacilli on his fingers, and however neat and careful he may be, the path from fingers to the intestinal canal is usually that of "least resistance." . . .

The bacillus of typhoid is not destroyed by ordinary drying. It may be in the dust, and generally is. Consequently one who would be safeguarded against this disease must not permit dust to cling to his moist lips or get into his mouth, or reach his food, or to fall upon what he drinks. Just where he could find such immunity of course I do not know. But I know of many places where the danger is minimized, and this leads to the only moral to be drawn from such a discussion which can be assumed to have any practical value.—James C. Bayles, Ph. D., in World's Work for July, 1903.

When the plans came we saw much to change, and decided that it would be much easier to lose the cost of a set of blue prints than to make the changes in the house while it was building. So we worked over the plans. We took up one room at a time and studied it carefully from all points of view; first, for location of windows and to see that a direct current of air could circulate through each room. This called for house one room deep, and we changed the plans accordingly. Then we went over each room again for the best arrangement of heating. We had now carefully covered two points—keeping cool in summer and warm in winter. Next, we made a study of each room for artificial lighting and next for the placing of furniture. It took us about a month to carefully plan and arrange each room,—which led the architect to comment that we devoted more time and attention to a single room than most folks did to a whole house. But we found that it paid. It is so much cheaper to make changes on a set of blue prints!—From Country Life in America.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Faith, patience, love, we need to cultivate,
Our faint hearts are so ready to despair,
So prone to cry the burden is too great
For us to bear.
He sends the bitter who has sent the sweet,
And it is best,
And often 'tis in sorrow and defeat
That we are blessed."—Selected.

JONESPORT, Maine.

Dear Sisters: This beautiful Sabbath afternoon, though not being present at the services, my heart and mind is with all those who are striving to serve our blessed Master and live according to his divine will. When reading the beautiful and inspiring letters of the Ensign and Hope my heart feels to rejoice in the latter-day work, knowing it is of God. He has an organized church which will stand when all others fall. We have a solid foundation, and by the help of the Father above us, who created and as yet keeps us by his mighty power, I ever mean to stand firm to the work no matter how many trials and troubles from any source may come upon me. But I must lean on the strong arm of mercy and the oftener let my voice ascend to the Father who alone can soothe our aching hearts as well as pains and give comfort and consolation, in the hour of need. Many times I prefer being alone that I might plead with God the more earnestly when all is quiet and peaceful.

Our late conference which was held on Beals Island was a pleasant one, very edifying and instructive to Saints and those not in the faith. However, I have not heard much said against us, which makes one think those outside of the fold must be more seriously thinking and perhaps their thoughts more uniting with ours yet not quite ready to obey. When morning comes and I see the bright sun shining upon us and the beautiful earth looking so green and lovely and the children so earnest to go out to play and enjoy themselves, I am many times thinking, Will we be so earnest to prepare ourselves to meet the blessed One who has gone to prepare us such a beautiful place in which to spend eternity? May we be true to our covenant with Him and may we be ever sacrificing some portion of our time in teaching the dear, precious children the way to everlasting life. I may fail to enter that blessed abode, but it is my desire to enter therein. I trust that all who have the privilege of attending Sabbath-school and meetings will not miss them. It is the greatest school of our lives.

Ever praying you all may live faithful in the gospel plan of redemption,
A FRIEND AND SISTER.

Dear Sisters: How often do we feel helped and cheered by reading some of the thoughts of others in the Home Column, and I doubt not nearly every reader has thought if she could do any good to any one, she would gladly add her mite. And yet I know there is much talent among the sisters in writing, that is often used in some other cause. What should interest any of us more than the theme of home-making? How inadequate is the training of most girls for the profession of making a home! It is, indeed, both a science and an art. Science for the care of the bodies, the training of the mind, and the preparing of healthy foods, and the best that there is in art for the making of our homes attractive. And yet there is that God-given instinct in most women that they are able, without any previous training, to make happy, healthful homes, and create there an indefinable influence that is like nothing else on earth, whose results are far-reaching, and ennobles the thoughts and desires of the members of the home-circle, and extends even to the strangers within the gates. This has the home-maker been able to accomplish without any special training or preparation for this most important career. What, then, may we not be able to do when our young women have the advantage of a scientific education along those lines and bring to the creation of their homes a mind stored with a knowledge of foods, of the value of pure air, of the virtues of the bath, and of hygienic living, for the practical part of life, and a character trained in patience, in self-control, and the ability to shape young minds, and the Spirit of God dwelling within? Then indeed will our homes reach the plane for which our sisters are striving.

I have been much interested in the food articles that have appeared of late in the HERALD, and believe it is a step in the right direction. With a knowledge of the laws of foods that make well-nourished bodies, we are able to do much toward building character, for the relation is closer than we think.

My experience as a home-maker has extended over only a few years, and like so many young women of the age, I came straight from the school-room into the home, with no knowledge of its special duties, but with a determination with God's help to make it a home in every sense, and I have learned much! I spent a year at least trying to make good bread. I would like to append my receipt for the benefit of some other inexperienced one, for I have never known it to fail, and am convinced that there is no need of the heavy, sour, dark-looking bread found in so many homes. I commence my bread about noon to be baked the next morning. Measure, before sifting, ten teacups of flour (this makes about five loaves), sift into bread pan, and work in with the fingers a generous lump of lard; now push the flour from the center until quite a large hole is made, and put in the hole three tablepoonfuls of sugar and one of salt. Now pour in five cups of warm water or scalded milk, luke-warm, (just half as much water as flour), and break a yeast cake in small pieces and drop lightly on top. Now set the pan in a warm place, leaving the "puddle" undisturbed until evening. Mix up stiff then, adding a little more flour, if necessary to roll out, kneading until it does not stick to the board, and put in dish to raise. I use a stone jar. Any dish that will make the dough rise up instead of spreading out is preferable, and a stone jar or crock is better than tin, for it keeps the temperature more even.

Grease the top sponge with a little lard to prevent a crust from forming. In the morning it will have risen to the top of jar. Push down once, and by the time breakfast is over it will be up again, and ready for the pans. Shape into loaves and leave in warm place (not too warm) until ready for the oven. The rule is that the loaves should rise twice their size, but experience will tell you that they are ready, when they "lift" light. Put in moderately hot oven. The bread should be in at least fifteen minutes before it commences to brown, then keep fire as even as possible until the bread is done, which will be in about an hour. Upon removing from the oven place where the air can circulate around it, and do not cover or wrap it up until it is cool. I have a "butter brush" with which I lightly brush the crust. It makes it nice and flaky.

It certainly is not beneath us to try to make our meals as palatable as possible. You have heard it said that "the way to a man's heart is through his stomach," and surely it is worth our best effort to have and to hold that heart.

There is more in seasoning to make a dish palatable, than in the article itself. Did you ever try putting a small onion in the bottom of the dish in which you bake beans, and half a cup of cream when they are done? Warm up the left-over beans with tomatoes and they are a new dish. Sometime when the round of household duties presses heavily, and life seems "humdrum," get up some especially dainty meal just for your "own folks." Make your best salad—a nice one is made of sliced radishes, green onions, hard-boiled eggs, lettuce, with or without cold potatoes, and a dressing poured over it—garnish your meats with the lovely green things so plentiful at this season and make as attractive a meal as possible. It will take you out of yourself even if it isn't appreciated by the "best man in the world," but if he says, "How tempting everything looks," you will feel more than repaid.

I live on a farm, where all the attractive things of the city market are not within reach, and small opportunity for exchange of ideas with mothers, and so our Home Column and Daughters of Zion page mean much to me, and I would like to see the sisters make it an exchange bureau for helpful ideas in the care of home and the training of children. I am a mother, and I feel that I am in need of much wisdom. Ever praying for wisdom and for the accomplishment of the aim of our Home Column, I am,

Yours in the faith,

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

Sr. Gertrude Lentz, wife of our beloved missionary, Bro. John B. Lentz, now laboring in New York, has been appointed to do Sunday-school work in Western New York, there being no district association there. She will make a special effort on the line of Home Class work and we trust that all who can will help her to make the work a success there. She is located at Greenwood, New York, and will gladly respond to calls as far as she can in that line of work.

Bro. W. S. Macrae reports having enrolled twenty-five in the Home Class in his field in Texas within two weeks after receiving his supplies. Bro. Macrae is a missionary and does his full quota of preaching and other work in the missionary's line and finds time to do considerable work for the Home Class besides. It will indeed be a blessing to them when a few more hundreds of our scattered Saints may be induced to take up the study of the Sunday-school lesson in their homes. It will build them up spiritually and, as has been the result in several cases heretofore, may be the means of establishing branches of the church. We have sent Bro. Macrae more supplies and expect to hear of still many others falling in line.

Class and Special Outing Trips.

It is evident that the practice of having Sunday-school class outings is increasing. The class outing serves many purposes, and in some schools it is taking the place of the annual Sunday-school picnic. As a result, hosts of teachers are asking what methods are used in these outings, in the hope of finding something which is adapted to their own classes. The suggestions in this article are gathered from the successful experiences of some of our most ingenious and devoted superintendents and teachers.

THE SIMPLEST OUTINGS.

The kind of outing that will be most successful depends in a measure upon the age and make-up of the class, but there are many classes that would like nothing better than a trip together to some quiet place where they could spend the day together. This is particularly true of classes whose members are well acquainted with each other outside of the Sunday-school.

THE BEACH TRIP.

"Every summer," says one teacher, "I give my girls an outing to Revere Beach. There is nothing exciting about the trip or the entertainment, but my girls, who are from thirteen to fifteen years of age, seem to enjoy it very much. There is a trolley ride of about half an hour, and then we sit on the sand and watch the waves and the crowd of bathers. The girls are never tired of watching the hundreds and hundreds of mothers with their babes who come to the beach for a breath of fresh air. Then we have our lunch, and the band plays, and all the children trip it merrily around the band-stand as if it was a gigantic May-pole, and the girls ride around on the prancing horses of the merry-go-round—just for fun, you know, not because they care anything about it, such grown-up girls as they are!—but, somehow, when the day is done, the girls have had 'such a good time!' and they are already looking forward to the next trip."

A BOYS' TRIP.

A trip that suits the boys pretty well is a long trolley ride with something to see at the end of it. A teacher in Malden, Massachusetts, takes his boys to Norumbega Park. This involves a ride to Boston, about seven miles on the trolley and elevated cars, then through the famous subway, then another trolley ride as far on the other side of the city and through some beautiful towns to the park on the banks of the Charles River. Here is a zoo, a band, fountains, boating and various entertainments, lots of games and the long ride home again. It is a hard day's work for an able-bodied man, but for boys who can ride miles hanging by two fingers to the tail-board of an express wagon it is fairyland. Near the large cities, and in fact wherever the trolley goes, such an outing could be had at small expense. The total expense for this outing, at the regular rates, too, was twenty-five cents for each member of the class.

FOR YOUNGEST CLASSES AND MOTHERS.

The word "lawn" has a restful sound in itself. It suggests cool, green grass and a blue sky above. "One of our most delightful festivals of the whole year," said an enthusiastic primary teacher, "is when we have the outing for our youngest classes and let the mothers come and bring the babies with them. We put up a tent on the lawn, with settees in it for the mothers, and often there is a long row of baby carriages along the side of the church. We try to give the children just the best possible time, and we think it pays. We have games for the children, and several swings put up in the horse sheds. We have the outing just as soon as possible after the summer term of school is over, before the children leave town for the summer. It lasts from two to five in the afternoon, and fifteen or twenty of the older boys and girls from the main Sunday-school come to help us look after the children, and incidentally have a good time themselves. We make a large tub of first-class lemonade, and have some tickets prepared, and give one to each of the children, so they can go and get a drink of lemonade. When all have had their drink, if there is any more left, we throw some of the tickets on the grass and let the children scramble for them. It is seldom that any of the children get too much in this way, but, if they do, they are soon relieved of it. We have a lot of animal crackers to go with the lemonade, and other light refreshments, and sometimes we go so far as to have ice-cream, which, of course, is received with shrieks of delight. But in truth one of the most delightful features of this outing is the sight of the rested faces of the tired mothers, some of whom have no other outing."

HISTORIC OUTING.

Many teachers can plan outings to places of historic interest. A teacher near Boston took his boys to visit historic places in the city, and it proved to be intensely interesting and fascinating to the boys. They went to Griffin's Wharf, where occurred the famous Boston Tea Party; they visited the place in busy State Street, near the old State House, where a circle of stones in the street marks the spot where the first blood of the Revolution was shed in Massachusetts; they went to the ancient burial-grounds and saw on the tablets there many of the names which they had been taught to honor. Then they visited the navy-yard. Of course there was much to enjoy there, and at one of the wharfs in the city there was a full-rigged ship just in from Manila. The teacher not only got permission to go on board the ship, but he persuaded the captain to let the boys climb all over the vessel as they pleased, which they did with exceeding delight. Last, but not least, they went to a restaurant and had tables put together so they could all sit in one company and have their lunch; and so the day was one long to be remembered by the boys.

THE EGG HUNT.

This outing was planned for quite a number of young people. The class numbered about twelve, both young men and young women, and each member was permitted to invite four others, so that in all the company numbered about sixty. It was a combination of a social and an outing. The teacher opened her pleasant home, and all the young people came there at first. It was in the edge of the country, near a rocky hillside. Over all this hillside, in all its nooks and crevices, many dozens of colored eggs had been hidden, and the amusement of the outing was to find these eggs. A prize of a large doughnut was offered for the one who found the most eggs. All the afternoon the hillside looked like a huge ant-hill with the brightly colored, busy ants running to and fro in every direction. The one who gained the prize was ready to eat his doughnut as soon as he received it, and there was a little treat for all.

OUTINGS AS REWARDS.

In some Sunday-schools outing trips are used as rewards for certain things done, or for some definite kind of good record. Of course, like all other Sunday-school rewards, these should be offered after careful thought and consideration of all conditions, but there are many times when such things can be used with benefit to the scholars and to the Sunday-school as a whole. As one superintendent said, when speaking of this feature, "It is amazing to see what the children will do when you give them a good reason for it." And it is significant that some of the largest business corporations are lately coming to use precisely "Sunday-school methods" with those who are faithful in their work.

OUTING AT THE FARM.

The superintendent of a city Sunday-school bought a farm a number of miles from the city. Like a true superintendent, he tried to think how he could make his farm useful to his Sunday-school. He told the boys and girls about his farm, and promised that he would give an outing at the farm to all who would secure a new scholar before a certain date. "I thought," he said, "that perhaps a dozen of the children might secure a new scholar, but, when the time came, there were fifty children who had one or more new scholars to their credit, and so one day I took the whole crowd of a hundred children to the farm and gave them the best time I knew how to plan for. Of course I had to take some of my best workers along to help me in looking after the children."

"GO TO CHURCH BAND" OUTING.

Many Sunday-schools now have a "Go to Church Band," whose object it is to encourage the scholars to attend the morning church service. This ought to be attended to by the parents, of course, but superintendents and teachers understand that there are many homes where this is not done. One pastor and superintendent have arranged this plan: Some cards are provided containing the dates of all the Sundays for six months. These cards are carefully explained to the children, and they are told that all who attend the morning service for at least sixteen Sundays will be given some sort of an outing at the end of six months. The children are not urged to take the cards, but a number of them are pleased with the idea of the cards as well as the outing, and each Sunday they come to church one number is punched from their cards. It is very inspiring to see so many boys and girls in the congregation. At the close of the six months in the summer a large number had attended the required number of Sundays or more, and the outing that was given to them was a trip to an exceedingly interesting animal exhibition, where they rode on the platform on the elephant's back in crowds, while the boys proudly rode around the arena straddling the camel's neck. Last winter they had a fine sleighride, and among those who had won the right to go was a little girl five years old, but she concluded she would rather stay at home with mamma.

These methods are interesting in themselves, but they will be most helpful if they stimulate teachers to think of their own environment and to plan for outings which will be available for their own classes. That is really the best service which the experiences of others can give us. But whatever plan may be adopted, it is always helpful to make beforehand some plans for the entertainment of the class among themselves, such as games, races, and other contests, singing, readings, all with reference to the special conditions of the class. Some little souvenir of the outing will also serve to keep it in pleasant remembrance. And so a joyful start to all your trips, a happy day, and a contented return.—John Mervin Hull in The New Century Teacher's Monthly.

WEYBURN, Assiniboia, Canada, July 4.

Saints' Herald: I have been trying to organize a Latter Day Saint Sunday-school; set a time to organize, invited all to come, results: husband and myself were the attendance. We tried a union Sunday-school last summer and when questions arose that were not the belief of the popular churches, such as the powers and gifts of the gospel, organization in the primitive church, apostles, prophets, and so on, some would object and claim that those were all done away with, no need of them now. One could not reason with them as arguing was not allowed, so my opinion is, it is impossible to form a union out of those holding different beliefs. Some of the Saints here prefer to attend the Union Sabbath-school. One brother remarked that he attended to be sociable, while some of the sisters are afraid of persecution. We should rejoice when persecuted for the sake of the gospel. If God be for us what need we care who is against us, for if the world hate us it hated him before us. For myself, I do not want to be popular, the Scripture says, "The friendship of this world is enmity with God." No true Latter Day Saint will seek for popularity.

I made an effort to get the Saints to use our Quarterlies in place of those of another belief, but they would not leave the popular Sunday-school for one of our own. There are more Latter Day Saints here than any other denomination and a good Sabbath-school would help to present the gospel light here. I am in hopes that some of the brethren who hold offices may locate here to preside over prayer-meeting, for a prayer-meeting is strengthening and we are commanded to neglect not the assembling of ourselves together to worship him—and he will be in our midst to bless. Then, Saints, let us awake to a sense of our duty, and have an incentive to obey our Lord.

Being isolated from church privileges we miss the help and advantages of improvement in spiritual life that we are greatly in need of, so the HERALD is a source of comfort. If the dear Saints only knew the strength that is derived from reading their letters, they would not hesitate to write. I have been made to rejoice many times in reading the letters in the HERALD, the true spirit bearing witness of the truthfulness of this glorious gospel. No Saint should neglect reading the church publications. We should ever be found worthy to give a reason for the hope within us. My heart has been pained by seeing some members who never have a word to say in regard to their belief, and who could not tell what the church believed. Dear Saints, awake from your slumber and study the doctrine of Christ, for there is a work for all to do, and as the aged pass away there is a vacancy for the youth to fill. Let us buckle on the whole truth and run the race with patience, fully realizing the grandeur there is in complying with this beautiful gospel, for we know the truth and the truth shall make us free.

A thought has been impressed upon my mind for some time in regard to Saints wearing badges representing the initials of our church. It would enable Saints in traveling to recognize each other. Then perhaps the badges might cause inquiry, which would afford us an opportunity to present our faith. Every one with a badge should be supplied with a number of tracts for distribution. All could help to spread the gospel by distributing tracts. I would be pleased to hear opinions of others regarding the badge question.

This is a nice country and financial prospects look bright. It is a prairie country, adapted to farming small grain, such as wheat, oats, flax, etc. We think homesteading is a thing of the past in this locality, yet back twelve to twenty miles from the railroad there are vacant homesteads and the prairie is more rolling than in this locality. The land is rising in value. Crops are favorable here, so far we have had plenty of rain. This country is filling up, mostly with Americans. We would be glad to have more Saints here.

I was glad to see a letter in the HERALD from Sr. Florence Toovey from Weyburn, Assiniboia; will be glad to meet her. I am of the opinion that more good could be done if Saints could know each other and visit. We should all strive to live as becomes Saints, to prepare ourselves to defend the truth, and with the poet sing, "It is good to be a Saint in latter days." Now we will appreciate a visit from any of the elders that should be passing through and would try to arrange a way for them to explain the gospel. Any one coming and bringing this gospel will always find a welcome in our home. May God grant that the word may be heard here, is my prayer.

A sister,
M. V. BRANTWAIT.

DES MOINES, Iowa, July 16.

Dear Herald: The event of the year to the Saints of this district is the coming reunion at Rhodes, beginning August 13 and continuing ten days. The reunion at Newton last year was one of the best held in the district and we look forward to a grand reunion this year. The committee will do all they can in making the necessary preparation in the way of temporal affairs, and if the Saints will prepare to attend and come with the necessary preparation, spiritually the feast will be fully enjoyed by all. These reunions are but a type of the great gathering spoken of in our Sunday-school lesson of July 5. By our association together at these meetings we prepare ourselves to dwell together in love and harmony and to help us to be of one heart and one mind. The Saints coming from every walk in life, association brings union and oneness. We hope to see a very large gathering of the Saints at this time. Some of the elders of the higher quorums of the church will be present.

The Sunday-school and Religio work will be given special attention, the active workers of the district presenting the interests of these "helps" in the church.

A special session of the district conference has been called to meet at Rhodes, August 22, at which some district matters need to be considered.

The work of God in this district is moving on. The Saints are more active in the line of duty and are being blessed according to their faith and works.

The work in the city of Des Moines is, we fully believe, in the best condition it has ever been, and the effort of united action is being plainly seen. During the next four weeks the church here will begin the distribution over the city of six thousand tracts. This will be as seed sown in every kind of soil, and being sown in faith we hope that much of it may fall upon good soil and bring forth fruit.

The needs of the work here in this city, the metropolis of the state, are great. More men are needed to carry on the work properly. Saints are praying that the Lord of the harvest will send more laborers into his vineyard. The one important need of the church is a new church building, the present one being inadequate to the needs of the regular services.

We "praise God from whom all blessings flow," thanking him for all that is past, looking forward in hope and trusting him for all that is to come. In bonds,

A. A. REAMS.

FANCY, Tennessee, July 5.

Dear Readers of the Herald: Having been comforted many times by reading the letters in the HERALD and the kind words of the Saints, I desire to add my mite. Though I have never contributed to its pages before, I feel it my duty to do something for the Lord. He has been so kind and merciful to me, oftentimes comforting and cheering me when trials and troubles assail me. He has also removed afflictions from my body when I called on him in his own appointed way. All of which I am thankful for. I am thankful, too, that he has blessed me so with health. I have never had an occasion to call on the elders but twice, and never in my life for a physician. Oh, could we always have that faith to call on the Lord, and not for a physician, I feel it would be better for the world as well as for ourselves. Though after being blessed my faith oftentimes seems weak. Dear Saints, I fear that many of us neglect our duty in not talking with those that are weak in the faith and trying to build them up and make them stronger. Let them know we care for them! Make them think they are helpers though they should strive to do more. Many of us are weak, and I fear if those stronger should turn away from us, telling us we are drones and of no service, we would grow weaker still. So let us all work together and try to help one another. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may live humble and worthy to be called a Saint, and hold out faithful to the end.

Your sister in Christ,

JENNIE WILLIS.

GUIDE ROCK, Nebraska, July 14.

Editors Herald: Elder J. W. Waldsmith and myself came to this place last evening. We are staying with Bro. and Sr. Fisk, who are quite aged. Bro. Fisk is better known as Doctor Fisk by many Saints and friends. Bro. Fisk has got the use of the Christian church for at least to-night and to-morrow night.

On Sunday evening last we preached in the Presbyterian church in Stoddard, Nebraska, to a good-sized audience, mostly Presbyterians, and we were much pleased at the close of the service to have the most influential of the Presbyterians give us such a hearty invitation to come back and use the church at any time. Had it not been such a busy time with the farmers we no doubt would have continued our efforts there. But it is now right in the midst of wheat harvest, and it is simply impossible to get people out to hear when they are working so hard, early and late. We promised the people of Stoddard that we would return there this fall and give them a series of meetings. We are working our way toward the western line of our district and expect to do work at Haigler, Max, Alma, Eustis, Franklin, and many other places during the summer and fall.

Crops in this country are excellent and the farmers have had a fine time for the wheat harvest.

While at Stoddard we made our home with Bro. Pulaski Miller. He and his much esteemed wife have lived to give the name Latter Day Saint honorable mention in that community. Would that all the Saints might so live!

While at Fairbury, Nebraska, we held four meetings, and I hope some good was accomplished. Bro. A. J. Myers of that place started to Oklahoma. We hope they may have success.

May Israel's God bless all the children of the covenant, I pray.
J. R. SUTTON.

Why I Left the Dunkard Church.

[SOMETIME in the year 1901 Sr. Minerva Johnson wrote to Bro. D. W. Shirk asking him why he left the Dunkard Church to join the Reorganized Church. His reply may be of interest to many, hence we give it space.—EDITORS HERALD.]

MINATARE, Nebraska, December 15, 1901.

MRS. MINERVA JOHNSON, Farnam, Nebraska.

Respected Sister in Christ: Yes, it is true, I was a Dunkard and of the conservative branch which is the main body. There are two or three other branches. Remember this: I was born and raised in their midst in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, and united with the church in Butler County, Nebraska, about the year 1874, being baptized by Jacob P. Moomaw. From there I moved to Dallas County, Iowa; thence to Marshalltown, and in 1876 to Carroll County, where a branch was organized and I was made its standing minister about 1877. Although farming I preached a great deal throughout our region of country, baptizing several and being in full fellowship and communion up to the time I became identified with the Church of Jesus Christ otherwise known as Latter Day Saints or Mormons, and was apparently highly respected. I was a member of the Dunkard Church some eleven years; all these years I was very studious, especially of the Bible, which seemed to be about the only real comfort I had.

One of the first things that especially wrought upon my mind was that soon after my baptism Jerry Hoff and myself were ordained deacons under the hands of Elder, or Bishop, John Eversol, of Ohio, and spiritualism having made its appearance in the branch we were sent as a committee to investigate the case of an old brother whom we found to be a writing medium who performed for us by request, and when asked upon what he based his belief he referred us to Mark, sixteenth chapter, alleging that these signs shall follow the believer. This I could not disprove, nor can I now, neither do I believe any living soul can; if not, it seems the question should be easily settled, but it took me some ten years and much investigation, prayer, fasting, and mourning to settle this matter in my mind. I read of God's great blessings to his people in different ages of the world and especially at the inception of Christianity with the various gifts mentioned in the Bible, as, for instance, the day of Pentecost (Acts 2, and 1 Corinthians 12), and the promise coming down to us in Acts 2: 39: "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Then I asked myself, Where is the trouble and what good thing can I do to invite these blessings back to us. Reading and investigating carefully in the Bible and history I ascertained that great apostasy had been predicted and was being fulfilled. I also learned that the various (reformed) Protestant Churches from Martin Luther down were all seeking, but in vain, to find their way back to apostolic customs and each new reformer believed that the other had failed: finally among others the Dunkard Church started in Swartzenan, Germany, with five men and three women who decided what they believed to be gospel among which was triune immersion, etc., etc. The question arose who should do the baptizing. There being no baptized man among them, they decided to cast lots it falling upon one of the five brethren, whose name they vowed to keep a secret. This man baptized Alexander Mack, the first preacher in the church, who in turn baptized his administrator and all the rest without present revelation from God and without apostolic succession or lineage. I said to myself, Here is at least one great fault, no God-ordained ministry or priesthood, and where may they not be wrong in doctrine and practice since there is no special promise to them. Neither could I anywhere ascertain that God at any time especially approved of their action then or now and upon due examination I found that the other churches had no preëminence in this matter, the Roman Catholics not excepted, with all her boast of succession and a legal priesthood.

At last I tried to reconcile myself to the fact that I was born in the evening of the world's history and there was no hope of reëstablishing the true worship of God since many reformers had tried in vain, who were, apparently just as honest as myself with much greater mental powers. While all these thoughts and investigations were going on I was invited to preach in the Latter Day Saints' church in Deloit, Iowa, at which time I gave a synopsis of the doctrine of the Dunkard Church. Unexpectedly the Saints treated me very courteously, and being in their homes I found them entirely different from what they were represented to me to be. Among the various questions they asked me if the signs promised by Christ in Mark sixteenth chapter followed us. I said, "No." I turned the question on them and they affirmed that they did. I said, "Friends, you have a grand truth or a notorious lie." But from that time on I began to honestly and prayerfully investigate, attending some meetings as I had time, and I did but little preaching in the Dunkard Church thereafter, fearing I might be wrong, having no divine authority from God which was proved to my full satisfaction by a manifestation to me from God of which I can not here write, but I once wrote it to the HERALD.

Well, I finally attended a reunion of the Saints in Western Iowa, at Garner's Grove, leaving home right in time of a love-feast, so determined was I to investigate. I remained a week or ten days, hearing the preaching, testimonies, the gifts of tongues, interpretation, and prophecy with special manifestations and promise to myself, directly to me from God, showing this to be the true church of God. I was baptized, confirmed, and ordained an elder before I went home. Since that time I have had a number of manifestations or evidences proving to me that this is the true church, having acceptable worship before God; or, in the language of the late Elder W. W. Blair, "God ratifies what we do;" or, in the language of the Bible, "Confirming the word with signs following" (Mark 16: 20), therefore also proving that the gospel is restored, the Book of Mormon true, and Joseph Smith a prophet of God, for I personally know that the sick are healed of various diseases and the devils (evil spirits) are cast out. Should you wish the particulars later I will give them. Now have you ever known any Dunkards to hold like authority or receive such blessing through Christ Jesus?

These things being true who dare blame or despise me for being a Latter Day Saint. If there is more God or truth in any church on earth I have failed to find it, but I am willing to learn. You feel inclined to favor some of their principles; doubtless if you will carefully read the latter-day revelations you will find the same principles enunciated or taught. You say our doctrines clash; this is true and do you remember that the angel said to Joseph Smith that they were all wrong and the Dunkard Church was then in existence.

In conclusion of this explanation I will say that to me the secret of the whole matter lies in the keys to open heaven's door. Please read Matthew 16: 19. This I understand was possessed by Abel, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, the prophets, seers, judges, high priests, Christ, apostles, the worthies of the Book of Mormon, and lastly by Joseph Smith and it is nothing but unwavering faith in God and his promise. Peace to all who love our Lord Jesus Christ.

D. W. SHIRK.

HARDINSBURG, Indiana, July 8.

Editors Herald: I am taking the HERALD and read many good letters from the Saints that give me courage in this latter-day work. I have been a member for about eight years and would like the prayers of the Saints that I may learn to live obedient to the Master's will and keep his commandments. I am in the faith and hope to endure to the end, but evil is present with me as it was with the Apostle Paul. Saints, pray for me as one who needs the prayers of the Saints. I want to live right in the sight of my Master. If I can please him then all is well with me. This is my first letter to the HERALD but I hope it may be of some good to those who read it. As one that desires to encourage those that are weak may the Spirit of the living God guide me into the right and acceptable way before all people that my works may be a light to those who are desiring light in the kingdom of God.

I was baptized and confirmed by Bro. J. M. Scott. I have a wife and four small children. My wife is a member too, and she has been a good counselor to me to live right. May God keep her in health as she is not very strong! Saints, live right and the Spirit of God will lead you into truth.

I am your brother,

LEE PAVEY.

FALLS CREEK, Pennsylvania, July 13.

Editors Herald: After leaving Wheeling, West Virginia, I went to Pittsburg. Worked there in the city for two weeks with Bro. Ullom, the Bishop's agent, preaching in private homes and on the streets with some interest, and when Bro. Elvin arrived we went to Monongahela and commenced meeting in Bro. Beam's yard. Several came out to hear the truth and some few became interested. While there we visited the Saints at Fayette City. Bro. Reese was there and baptized Sr. Beam's daughter at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, after which he delivered a sermon, and we had a sacrament and social meeting. The power of God was with us. I stayed and spoke that night to the Saints and others and on Monday returned to Monongahela and commenced a series of meetings on the street. The Saints at Fayette City are alive and seem to enjoy the blessings of God. We had good crowds and good interest on the street at Monongahela. Last week I was directed to this town which is one hundred fifty miles east of Pittsburg. No Saints here and never has been any preaching. Sr. Beam of Monongahela had a brother here whom she had taught the doctrine and convinced that he was ready for baptism. I arrived here at two o'clock in the afternoon Saturday and spoke in his house that night and yesterday morning. At three o'clock in the afternoon I spoke on the two baptisms on the bank of the creek to five hundred people after which I administered the ordinance of baptism to Abner Anthony. Last night spoke at his house to an interested congregation after which I confirmed him. If it is the Lord's will I will speak at his house to-night. Then we will hold forth in the band hall or the Presbyterian church as we have the offer of both. I believe there will be a good work here as the persecution has already commenced. Bro. Anthony's wife is a believer, also his mother-in-law and a sister and two brothers. May God help his servants to work faithfully is my prayer. I am,

Yours in the one faith,

JAMES D. PORTER.

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, July 9.

Editors Herald: Our beloved Bro. I. N. Roberts just left here this morning for Fulton, Kentucky. I know it will be very warm for him in the South now. He has been here with us since the 23d of May, looking after the work. He has helped us much. We had a very enjoyable Sunday-school basket picnic on the Fourth of July and Bro. I. N. had a fine time.

The good Spirit was with us in our social meeting on Sunday in a marked degree and everybody enjoyed themselves very much. While we have some very bitter cups to drink yet the good Lord gives us some very sweet ones, too, that encourages us to move forward with renewed courage to meet the next conflict like a brave soldier. I led one fine young man down into the waters of baptism last Sunday morning. After his confirmation he gave a good testimony of how much he was satisfied with the step he had taken. He was glad that he was a Latter Day Saint. We have been holding tent-meetings with but very little interest so we have put the tent away and go in the morning to Elizabethtown, Kentucky, and will labor through the country.

I trust that I may have the prayers of the Saints of God, for my labor will be out where there is not one Latter Day Saint, but I believe there will be some.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

J. W. METCALF.

1819 Ninth Street.

RICHBURG, North Dakota, July 13.

Editors Saints' Herald: Since leaving home the last of April I have been busy trying as best I could to do my part in the great work of our heavenly Father for the salvation of the race, which he has "intrusted to us all." I first met with the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, in joint council at Lamoni, to agree on an address to the Saints, which appeared in the church papers the fore part of May, and has since been published in tract form for distribution among the Saints, and I trust will be very beneficial in assisting the Saints to arrive at a proper understanding of their duties and privileges under present conditions.

I next visited most of the branches in the bounds of the Lamoni Stake, endeavoring to assist the stake bishopric in their work, that the Saints might have a better understanding of the law, and their duty under stake organization, in regard to tithing and consecration, as it is understood by the leading quorums of the church. I believe those councils held by the chief quorums of the church are very beneficial to the work at large, and should be had on every important move in church work. It shows unity, inspires confidence, and imparts strength to the Saints.

I next went to the Des Moines District, preached once in Des Moines Branch to a small audience and attended the district conference held at Boone, Iowa. Here, as at Lamoni Stake conference, Bro. F. A. Smith, in connection with the local authorities, presided over the conference with ability and satisfaction to all concerned. Then in company with the president of the mission I went to Minnesota, spoke once in Minneapolis, where we met Bro. T. C. Kelley, who accompanied us on to the reunion held at Clitherall. On boarding the train at Minneapolis we met the Presiding Patriarch, A. H. Smith, and his efficient stenographer, L. A. Gould, on their way to the Clitherall reunion. The Patriarch attended the reunion by special invitation. We had a very pleasant and I think profitable time for ten days at this place.

Then in company with the president of the mission and the Patriarch we wended our way to Bottineau, North Dakota, where we found them in the midst of their reunion. The arrival of our company seemed to increase their joy. We were met at the depot by our efficient worker and energetic laborer, William Sparling, and a host of his noble helpers, who conducted us to the Commercial Hotel in Bottineau, where our company was provided with rooms at the expense of the reunion. The few days we were here all seemed to enjoy the association together and appreciate the instruction given. The presence of those chief men in this sparsely settled country seems to encourage and strengthen the Saints, and "do them good," as I heard some of them express it.

Since the reunion we have visited the Saints and preached at Dunseith, Turtle Mountains, and Richburg Branch. We are going to spend a few more days together, F. A. Smith and myself, in this state, then back through Minnesota, visiting a few branches by the way, to Iowa. The good Spirit has been with us in our work, sometimes to a marked degree, and we believe good has been accomplished. The law of consecration as it is now being taught, is well received by the Saints in this part of the country, and will bring forth fruit in the future. This is the best season of the year to get a hearing up here, just before haying and harvest. Small grain and flax being the chief crop, this is the leisure time for the people here. F. A. is trying hard to understand the wants of the work in his mission and meet the demands as best he can, and will evidently fill the place well, where he occupies as a member of the Quorum of Twelve.

We had our efficient Sunday-school president, Bro. T. A. Hougas, with us at the Minnesota reunion, where he did a noble work in the Sunday-school department, organized a district association and exemplified the work by giving lessons, drills on conducting schools, qualification of officers, institute work, etc. He also rendered valuable aid in the reunion, in singing, preaching, prayer-meetings, and every way he could. He seems well qualified for his work, and is a willing worker. God bless the Sunday-school work! Dakota is also ripe for Sunday-school work, and has many good workers in its ranks.

Trusting that God may bless the efforts of his people everywhere they are laboring to advance the interests of his cause; and hoping to still continue as a worker trying to do my part as best I can, I am, as ever, hopefully at work.

G. H. HILLIARD.

STANTON, Nebraska, July 13.

Editors Herald: Bro. Lloyd Marteeny and I came here July 6 with the district tent, and on the 7th and 8th we erected it and began meetings. We have been telling the good old story each night since and purpose remaining as long as the interest demands.

This is the first time any of our elders have preached here. The majority treat us civilly, and as they get better acquainted with us they find that they have been misinformed as to us: Still they view us suspiciously. But, as we proceed, we expect to overcome some of this prejudice. There are only two members of the church living here. We are staying with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Babb and they are making us welcome.

Oh, it makes us sad to think that some of the former church drifted into those pernicious ways by reason of which the way of truth is evilly spoken of. Some one certainly will be held responsible for this condition. If it had not been for the faction in the West we could make ten proselytes where we do not make one.

We will work in this vicinity until August when we will attend the conference held in the Central Nebraska District, convening August 8, at Meadow Grove.

In bonds,

ROMANAN WIGHT.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, July 11.

Editors Saints' Herald: I have not written anything for the HERALD for some time on account of sickness, but being improved in health I write to-day to tell the Saints everywhere that I am still working and praying that souls may be saved and God's kingdom on earth advanced. For a time I will admit I felt heartily discouraged because certain plans of mine were not realized, but this has given way to happiness and complete confidence in Him knowing that He doeth all things well. Sometimes if what seems to us the best should be granted by our heavenly Father how much unhappiness it might make and how much injury it might accomplish. It is, indeed, best to trust in him and wait for the call.

The work at this place has been, and is still, moving nicely. Since Bro. J. N. Ames came about seven weeks ago quite a revival has been started, and three added to our number. A Womans' Prayer Union has also been organized which, we feel, will prove helpful to all. May the good work go on and may souls be saved.

With a prayer that the efforts of the dear Saints everywhere may be crowned with success and that the Lord may bless each in his work,

Yours in the faith,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

GARRETTSVILLE, Ohio, July 12.

Editors Herald: I have been for some time a reader of the Cleveland Daily World, and have seen in every Saturday's issue a notice of meetings by the Reorganized Church, 1089 Superior Street, sermons by O. B. Thomas, Lamoni, Iowa. I was in Cleveland over the Fourth and the Sunday following and concluded to go and hear Bro. Thomas, but where I should have found his preaching place, 1089 Superior Street, I found a Baptist church. From those at the door I could learn nothing of the Saints' meetings. Now it is just possible that others besides myself have been disappointed in finding the brother's preaching place, and it seems that some one who can should correct the mistake that has been made.

I intend making an effort to set the angel's message before this people, if God be willing. I ask the prayers of the Saints that God will prosper me in the work. I have been suffering from catarrh and other troubles, so that I could not think of beginning any work in the open air, but I am better now, and hope to continue so. I want to do something toward building up the kingdom of God, being admonished by the signs of the times that the time is short in which to herald the gospel.

There are four churches in this town, and it is not unlikely that I may meet with opposition, and without the sustaining help of the Holy Spirit I shall fail. This letter will inform the brethren and Saints of the Akron Branch that I am still alive and in the one faith, and hoping to meet with them ere long.

May the God of Israel bless and keep all his people, is the prayer of your brother,

ROBT. FULLER.

SOUTH MCALESTER, Indian Territory, July 13.

Editors Herald: This finds the writer and Bro. E. A. Erwin in the town of South McAlester, preaching on the street corners every night. We have no members of our faith here. The first night a Methodist minister and his wife came on the next corner with a hand-organ and played and preached his belief, but we had a good crowd. The next night a medicine-man drove up to where we were preaching and stopped about thirty feet from us, and commenced with two negro singers and played a banjo, but we kept right ahead. It looked for a while that the medicine-man was about to get the crowd, but God gave Bro. Erwin and myself strong voices so that we out-talked the medicine-man and got a large crowd to listen to us. Last night we had a clear street and we preached the gospel in power to the people of this city.

It is hard to continue street-preaching unless you have some place to go and get something to eat. We have averaged some days two meals and some days one meal and had to walk from four to five miles for every meal.

I start for Holdenville on the 15th to meet Bro. Aylor to commence a camp-meeting for ten days. Bro. Erwin makes his way towards home to attend our district conference, commencing July 31, to continue ten days. Everything looks well for an ingathering into the church this fall. Yours in Christ,

PETER ADAMSON.

DENVER, Colorado, July 12.

Editors Herald: The Christian Endeavorers have taken the town the past week. There are about eight thousand of them. We have platform tickets, but have not been able to attend the meetings yet, we hope to before they close.

Things are quite different in Denver than some years ago, now we are invited to all the large gatherings of the different churches, and have a standing invitation to meet with the Ministerial Alliance at all their meetings. We have gained favor in the eyes of the people in Denver as well as in other places. It seems to me there never were greater opportunities in this city for presenting our claims than now. The local force are tied to the secular things of life so they have not near time to perform the work that is opening before us. Surely we feel like praying, "Lord send more laborers into the vineyard." There is a good opportunity to preach on the streets, but who is to do it? That is the question of the hour.

E. F. SHUPE.

SEMINOLE, Alabama, July 10.

Editors Herald: I can say with truthfulness that the Lord has blessed us to a great extent. We, as a little band of Saints, are striving to hold up the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard. We have had Bro. W. J. Booker with us for a short time and he delivered some excellent sermons. We also have our good old president, Bro. Jesse Reeder, with us, striving to do all he can for the Master's cause. Brn. Booker and Reeder have gone down below here about thirty miles to preach a week. The little band of Saints that belong to the Perseverance Branch hold prayer and testimony-meeting every Wednesday night and every Sunday morning at nine o'clock. All that come take part. May God bless all his people that strive to do his will.

Yours for Christ's sake,
LEWIS COOPER.

BLOSSBURG, New Mexico, July 15.

Editors Herald: Two years ago last November, Beatice Turner, now thirteen years old, daughter of John F. Turner of Raton, New Mexico, was taken with some sort of hip trouble. Her parents doctored her for rheumatism for about five months, when they called in a physician who at first pronounced it erysipelas. Upon a second examination, he decided it was hip disease and said the only remedy was an operation. An operation followed and more matter than a five pound lard pail could hold was taken from the joint. Two openings had to be made, one over the joint, the other on the inside of the thigh. These wounds never healed, but continued as running sores, till after she was administered to in January, 1903.

Doctor Hart of Raton, who waited on the patient and assisted in the operation, told the girl's mother that she never would get well and that she never ought to do anything and ought to lie on some sort of rubber bed. Doctor Shuler, the railroad surgeon of Raton, who preformed the operation, said if it had been one day later, blood poison might have set in. He said also that it was hip-disease and was incurable, but he had heard of some great doctor in New York who had cured two or three cases, but he had no hopes of this girl ever being cured. He said she would have to take iron as long as she lived. These statements were made to Sr. Lamb of Blossburg, and others.

The girl continued in a helpless condition for over two years and could do no labor at all. If she went to one of the neighbors, she would have to be in bed next day.

In January last, Bro. J. W. Morgan was called on to administer to her. Immediately the sores on the hip dried up and soon all soreness of the joint disappeared, but the matter collected and formed an abscess just above and back of the knee. This was very painful for a while, but soon broke and in a very little while the entire limb was as sound as the other, only small scars to mark the place. The sore limb had shrunken considerably, but now is as large as the other.

She began to go to school horseback three miles from home, sometimes going on foot, April 1, and has continued till the present and never experienced the least inconvenience. Her aunt did not know her July 4, she had so improved.

I have been laboring in Colfax County, New Mexico, for a month now, in Raton, Blossburg, and near Maxwell City. I have not seen any evidence of any landslide our way, but some have become interested and are investigating. Some came to my meetings who had not been to meeting for twelve years.

I intend to organize a branch here as soon as the Saints all get their letters. This is causing some delay but I keep busy. I will be in Raton this evening to preach and likely here the next evening.

There are but seven members yet in the immediate neighborhood of the branch, but there are excellent prospects of more in the near future. The girl who was healed and her mother will join soon and possibly her father. Other Saints live at Trinidad, twenty-five miles off, and others are in reach of the branch. I stop next at Trinidad with Elder J. W. Kent of that place. Correspondence sent there will reach me.

Yours in bonds,
J. M. STUBBART.

BURNHAM, Missouri, July 16.

Editors Herald: I would like to add my testimony to the great number that have gone in before. It has been nearly seven years since I joined the church, and not once have I regretted the step taken. I know it is the work of God.

When I first came into the work my uncle rose and delivered an unknown tongue which, also being interpreted through him by the power of God, assured us that we were indeed his children, and though we were prone to wander he was ever ready to forgive us if we would repent.

Dear Saints, pray for me that I may be able to do the work which the Lord has given me to do.

In gospel bonds,
P. T. PLUMB.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, July 14.

Editors Herald: This finds us preparing for the district conference, which will convene at this place on the 18th inst. We are expecting to have Bro. William H. Kelley and a number of elders present with us, and an enjoyable time is anticipated. We have been advertising the conference and inviting our friends and neighbors, and we are expecting to see a good attendance, and hope to accomplish much good.

We are striving to build up the work all along the line. As our Sunday-school convention meets here also we intend to give the Sunday-school work a boom at this place, and thus create new interest. We believe, however, the church work with all its auxiliaries is progressing in this part. We trust that interest will continue to increase and the good work go on.

In bonds,

McPherson County, Nebraska, July 14.

Dear Herald: I am traveling with Bro. Self for the summer. We will start to Bro. Sivits' to-day with the little gospel tent. The tent was set up here last Friday and meeting held over Sunday, Brn. D. W. Shirk, Paine, and Self doing the preaching, which was comforting to the Saints. Four meetings were held on Sunday, the sacrament-meeting being a great comfort to the scattered Saints here, as some had never taken the sacrament and others not for two or three years. All took part and felt to rejoice in this grand and glorious work. The Saints all seem alive to the work, ready to make any sacrifice needed for its advancement. This is a thinly settled country, hence there is not a large congregation, yet I do not think there has been any of the meetings but what there has been from fifteen to thirty and more out, and all have to go from four to seven miles. The people are busy working for their daily food. No place have I seen Saints more anxious to labor and sacrifice for the work than in the sand-hills of Nebraska.

This is a very lonely country to travel in, but when we meet with Saints, we forget the dreariness of the country. A short drive through this country is very interesting, but a long drive is very monotonous as the scenery is all the same. When I came here four weeks ago the hills were dotted over with lovely flowers of all kinds which were very pleasing to the eye. There are some fields of corn but they are so small compared with the grass land they are lost to view. No trees can be seen anywhere. Most houses are sod and as this was the first time I ever saw a sod house they were quite a novelty to me.

July 15 finds us at Bro. Sivits'. Announcements are out for meetings over Sunday, then we will start northwest with the tent, hunting up those who wish to hear the gospel in this the last dispensation of time, scattering the gospel seed, praying it may bring forth fruit in the near future. We are all equipped to care for ourselves if circumstances require it. We expect to open as many new places as possible. We have an organ along with us which will add to the interest of the meetings. To the dear Saints, at Holden, Missouri, who are looking for us to arrive there, I will say that when the summer's work is done I will be there. I am anxiously looking for the time to come when I am located in my little home in Zion.

Bro. D. W. Shirk started on his way home yesterday expecting to hold meeting as circumstances would permit. Bro. S. D. Paine is with us. He furnished the team to travel with. It is almost impossible to travel here without a team as there is no railroad in the hills. Feeling to rejoice in this glorious work and desiring to see many sheaves gathered in this year, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. R. O. SELF.

LLANELLY, South Wales, July 8.

Editors Herald: I thought a few notes might be interesting to the readers of our church paper concerning the visit to this land of our President and his worthy counselor.

The writer had the pleasure of visiting old time scenes and seeing old time faces and acquaintances at Lydney from June 27 to July 1. At this place I had the pleasure of being coachman for the visiting brethren, procuring Bro. Thomas Griffiths' conveyance for the occasion. The local brethren had advertised well, but not many outsiders came in to hear the gospel message. However, the brethren, one and all, have the satisfaction of knowing if they did their part results can be left with Him who rules above. Bro. Joseph was the speaker on Monday, June 29, and Bro. R. C. Evans, June 30. At the close of the latter service the Saints of Lydney and the visiting brethren (including the writer,) were photographed in a group, after which one and all partook of a supper provided by the kind hospitality and consideration of Bro. Thomas Griffiths. The wants of the inner man being supplied Brn. Kelsey and Griffiths introduced their respective phonographs. Bro. R. C. sang into one and Bro. Joseph spoke which was taken on record for reproduction. Bro. Joseph afterwards delighted the audience with a few of his early experiences, touching briefly upon the martyrdom of his father and Uncle Hyrum, and the bitter trouble which the early Saints passed through. Bro. Griffiths recommended that the church authorities appoint a man to labor there persistently for three or four years. He named Bro. J. R. Holford, and another whose name was taken down by the missionary in charge, Bro. J. W. Rushton. At eleven o'clock the assembly of about thirty persons dismissed (after spending a pleasant and profitable evening together), by singing the hymn, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

President Joseph and R. C. left Lydney for Cardiff on July 1, the writer following in the rear July 2. At Cardiff the local brethren had procured a large hall and also advertised and circulated upwards of five thousand handbills. If the powers of darkness were not arrayed against them I know not what was the matter, for sad to say, only about half a dozen came to meeting from the outside, and these were Brighamites. The Saints all turned out to meeting and on the latter date R. C. just exploded the doctrine of Brighamism and before he had finished there was nothing left to be said in their favor. The writer was cared for by Bro. and Sr. F. Beaven, and at Cardiff I had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Bro. E. B. Morgan and wife lately arrived from America.

July 3 Brn. Joseph, R. C. Evans, Rushton, and the writer journeyed to Llanelly where services had been well advertised in every possible way, and were held in the Saints' chapel, Island Place, July 3 and 4, at a quarter of eight in the evening, several strangers coming in and all appeared interested. On Sunday the 5th at eleven o'clock Bro. R. C. Evans was the speaker. At half past two in the afternoon Saints' fellowship-meeting was held, the brethren of Pontyeates Branch uniting in this as also all other services. A time of refreshing was had and tears of joy and gladness flowed from many eyes. At six o'clock Bro. Joseph was the speaker, the church being nearly full. Numbers of outsiders came in and listened to a most thrilling and interesting discourse, and gave vent to their feelings with loud exclamations of approval. Saints and all appeared well satisfied with the meetings and results at Llanelly and the visit of our beloved President and Bro. Evans will be a landmark in our history here as doubtless it will give a lasting impetus to the work of God all through this land. God bless the President and God speed the right, is my prayer and may the glorious cause of truth speed onward everywhere.

Yours in bonds,

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, England, July 8.

Dear Herald: The young evangelist who thought I was a Mormon, a Presbyterian minister, and others asked me questions for over two hours. There were some hundreds gathered around, and at the close I had many shakes of the hand, and one gentleman walked two miles with me home, as he was so taken up with the answers given. After I had gone home the two ministers who had spoken on the same platform as myself went and saw the gentleman who had so freely shared his platform with me and told him that I was a Mormon. I expected to be banished from the big market and in fact from the city, but having received a promise from the Lord that not one hair of my head should be hurt, I was encouraged to go down on Tuesday night and preach again. One of the men who is always at the meetings brought a platform and in a short time I was speaking. The infidel left off and came to my meeting. It is not unusual for three, four, or five to be speaking at the same time in the market. After I had been speaking some ten minutes I saw Mr. Boyce, the Christian Evidence man. When I had finished I asked Mr. Boyce to take the stand, and just as soon as he was up the infidel came right up and said, "Now, Mr. Boyce, be a man and tell Mr. Broadway what you told this audience last night." I was anxious to know what had been said. The two gentlemen used some "parliamentary language" to each other and both seemed in earnest. The infidel was bent on my knowing what was said, and Mr. Boyce did not want me to know. The infidel said: "Mr. Boyce, you told the people that Mr. B. should never speak from your platform again as he was a Mormon." Mr. Boyce said that he had not been able to detect any Mormon doctrine in my preaching and I could stand a trial of my faith and explain it to the people, and if nothing injurious was in the faith I could continue on the platform. I was to be allowed one or two nights. When I rose I told the people that I dare say it had been two or three hundred years since any man was on a trial of his faith in the market-place or in England, and although Mr. Boyce had not been able to detect anything that he called Mormonism, I had taught it every night I had spoken on the street, and if I should be put from the Christian Evidence platform and the market as well, I assured them I should continue as it was not the only platform and place in Newcastle where the gospel could be preached.

So after three nights showing the difference between the two bodies of the church, enough had been said to give satisfaction to all present and Mr. Boyce made a confession to me for his conduct and one other gentlemen came to me and said: "Mr. Broadway, I owe to you an apology for telling the two gentlemen you had interested in baptism that you were a Mormon. I never knew any different, and will never do it again." The Book of Mormon is the great mountain now to be scaled. There was no necessity for it, the people say. But as God saw the necessity of it in order to fulfill the prophets they must charge him with that, and not Joseph Smith, as he was only doing what he was commanded of God to do. Then Mr. Boyce told the people he should let me continue, but he should hold the right to oppose me.

So as I have been on the street, preaching from three to seven times a week, and felt that I could not do justice without speaking of baptism and that for the remission of sins every night, as you get so many strangers every night, and as debate was raging in the air I wrote Bro. Rushton for advice. He said if I wanted I was to go ahead, so accordingly I wrote a proposition and handed it to Mr. Boyce.

I told the people I had handed Mr. Boyce propositions on baptism so had them read and announcement was made for Tuesday night. I was on hand before time. My friend came five minutes to eight and said it was too late. Nearly two hundred were present to hear, and I protested against his conduct and so next night we met, and as chairman a Baptist schoolmaster was chosen. I commenced by showing in the ninth hour or fourth dispensation a man was sent of God as a witness of the coming of Christ and to prepare a people to receive him when he should come. He preached the counsel of God and those who rejected him rejected the counsel of God. We read of no one being sent into all the world till Christ's death and resurrection. Although chosen and ordained they must tarry till they receive power from on high. Peter and the rest of the apostles were agreed that after repenting of their sins people must be baptized for the remission of sins. It was made plain that baptism was and is for the remission of sins. I showed that John was sent of God to baptize with water and that it was for the remission of sins; that John's baptism was from heaven and therefore binding because it is attested to by three witnesses, Mark, Luke, and John. The two commissions Jesus gave to the apostles after his resurrection were to preach the gospel to all the world and baptize the believer. Baptism for the remission of sins was preached on the day of Pentecost, and three thousand accepted the apostle's statement and could bear witness to that fact. Ananias told Saul to arise and be baptized and wash away his sins. In conclusion I insisted that baptism is for the remission of sins and is essential to salvation.

Notices.

The following branches of the Southern Missouri District have long since been disorganized: Willow Springs, Ozark, Mountain Grove, and Johns Mill. Members whose names are still on the above branch records will do me and the district a favor by letting their whereabouts be known, giving name of branch nearest or most convenient to where they now reside, (also give name of branch president or clerk,) and to which they may desire to unite. Let your wants be known at once and I will forward letters of removal by return mail. J. C. Christensen, district secretary, Beaver, Douglas County, Missouri.

Tents can be obtained for the Dow City, Iowa, reunion as follows: 10x12, $1.85; 12x14, $2.10; 14x16, $2.35. Where tents are ordered set up 25 cents more will be charged. Springs can also be obtained at 35 cents. Send all orders as soon as possible to the undersigned, and send remittance with order where possible. A. H. Rudd, Dow City, Iowa.

To the Saints of the Des Moines District, Greeting: Our reunion for this district will meet August 13, at Rhodes, Iowa. I call it our reunion, held especially for the benefit of the Saints and unless you are there it will be of but little benefit to you so I write this letter to you to urge you to come. If practicable take this timely warning and arrange your work so you can come. I would love to meet and greet every Saint in the district there. We intend to board on the coöperative plan and if a goodly number come it will make this expense light. Order your tents in good time and then see that you are there to occupy them for a ten-day outing. It will do you good physically, and ten days association with the Saints will help you spiritually. Especially let the isolated Saints come. Come and bring your wife and children. Come, we need you and you need to come. Good speakers will be there. The grounds are nicely located. The people want the reunion there and a good attendance of outsiders is expected. Come and help make this the best reunion ever held in the district. On the second Saturday at 2 p. m. will be a special session of conference. Let the branches send delegates but need not send reports this time. Now if you want to hear some good preaching and some good singing, come. If you want to enjoy yourself, come. Come anyhow if you can and let the rest of us enjoy your presence. H. A. McCoy.

Ten-day meetings have been arranged for in Texas as follows: Beginning August 1, ten miles east of Dallas, at Oakdean Schoolhouse, near Elam Station; at Van Alstyne, Grayson County, beginning August 11. We cordially invite Saints and friends living near these points to attend. Brn. B. F. Renfroe and S. W. Simmons of the missionary force will assist us in these meetings. T. J. Sheppard, Tolar, Texas.

The Southern Nebraska District will sell its tent. The cost price was ninety-five dollars. It is a two-pole tent, 12-ounce duck, 6-foot wall. The tent is complete, comparatively new, and excepting a straight rent from the awning towards pole is in good shape. Size of tent is 30 by 50 feet. Will take twenty dollars for tent complete. Write soon. J. W. Waldsmith, Nebraska City, Nebraska.

Conference Notices.

The Western Maine District conference will meet at Little Deer Isle August 1 and 2. All papers for the conference can be forwarded to me at Little Deer Isle, care of J. J. Billings. All are expected to report. Eugene Brann, secretary.

Conference of Alabama District will meet with the Lone Star Branch August 1 and 2, 1903. Bro. I. N. Roberts is expected to be present. The missionaries of the Florida and Mobile Districts are invited. Come and bring the good Spirit with you!

Conference of the Philadelphia District will convene at Baldwin, Maryland, September 5 and 6. First session 4.30 p. m. the 5th. Written reports from all officers, with branch reports and other matter, should be in hands of the secretary in due time. Let us have a good attendance. W. E. La Rue, president, E. B. Hull, secretary, 2941 North 12th Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Conference will be held August 15 and 16, 1903, South Addison, Maine. Ernest Wilson, clerk of district.

The conference of the Des Moines District will convene at Rhodes, Iowa, August 22, 1903, for the transaction of such business as may come before it. Branches will please send delegates, but no official reports of any kind will be expected. A. A. Reams, district secretary.

Reunion Notices.

The Northern Missouri reunion will convene at Stewartville, Dekalb County, Missouri, twenty miles east of St. Joseph, and sixty miles north of Kansas City, Missouri, from August 28 to September 6. The committees are expecting to work hard to make this, the eleventh annual reunion, a success as in former gatherings of this nature. Now it remains for the Saints from the surrounding district to come, bringing the Spirit of the Master, then it will be a success. The Lord has been kind to us here in the "regions round about," blessed us with good crops, such as wheat, oats, hay, and with reasonable weather we will have a large corn crop. Plenty of pasture for those coming with teams and wagons at 5 cents a day for one horse. Boarding tent in charge of Bro. James Caley of Cameron. The Saints who attended the reunion last year are acquainted with this noble family of Bro. Caley, everything clean and cooked well. They have promised to be present again this year to cater to the wants of Saints and friends. Single meals 15 cents; twenty-one meal tickets for $3. Tents will be furnished 12x14, 3-foot walls, $1.75; 9½x12, 3-foot walls, 1.50. Straw free. Saints and friends should write now for tents so all things may be prepared when they come. It will also help the committee to have everything ready for this notable gathering. Get ready now to spend ten days in hearing the word preached, testimonies borne, our God praised by song for his goodness to his children. Charles P. Paul, secretary.

Southern Wisconsin reunion will be held on the farm of Bro. Henry Southwick, one mile north of Williams Bay, Walworth County, Wisconsin, beginning August 22, and concluding August 31. District conference will be held on the 29th and 30th. Branches and all officials, send your reports in time. All wanting tents send in order at once, and we will try to have them ready. They will cost about the same as last year. We expect to have some cots also. Bring a bed tick, blankets, and such bedding as you may need. There will be a boarding tent on the ground where all can get their meals at cost. Some few can get board and lodging at the homes of the Saints at the same price. Come prepared to board at the tent. Plenty of barn room and feed for horses. All those coming from the south come to Williams Bay on the Chicago & North-Western Railroad, and those coming from the north and west come to Delavan on Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad. If you drop us a card stating what day you will be there you will be met with team without cost. Send your reports and all other communications to W. A. McDowell, Elkhorn, Wisconsin, R. F. D. No. 2. Send your mail in care of W. A. McDowell, R. F. D. No. 2, and it will be delivered on the ground. We hope to have plenty of good speakers on the ground. So come, one and all, and enjoy the reunion, you are invited. By order of Committee.

Convention Notices.

The Western Maine Sunday-school association will convene at Little Deer Isle, July 31. Reports are expected from all schools and officers. Flora Smith, secretary.

The Utah District Religio and Sunday-school convention will be held September 4, 1903, at Provo City, Utah. Schools of both will please send reports to their respective secretaries in time; also let all those interested be present during all of the reunion, if possible, from August 29 to September 6, as we expect to have alternate sessions each day. Let all come who can and assist in working for the good of our Savior's cause. Guy L. M. Brokaw, district Sunday-school superintendent; Charles Wardle, district president, Zion's Religio-Literary Society.

Died.

TROOK.—Bro. Nicholas Trook died at his home near Union, Nebraska. Born in Ohio, July 31, 1833, he was near seventy years old. Raised in Missouri, he removed to Cass County, Nebraska, in 1858, and there married Miss Ellen Ervin, who survives him. He was the father of eleven children, eight of whom remain to mourn their loss. He was well to do in this world's goods, was widely known and greatly respected. He joined the church in 1872, and was faithful unto death. His funeral sermon was delivered by Elder Mark H. Forscutt in the church of the United Brethren near his former home, on July 8, 1903.

KETTLEWELL.—Sr. Flossie F. J. Kettlewell, daughter of Bro. and Sr. George Kettlewell, of Longwood, Ontario, born August 22, 1890, died of scarlet fever, July 7, 1903, after five days illness. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at about the age of ten at Longwood by Elder Benjamin Saint John. A worthy young child of God has gone to her rest.

KINGHORN.—At Roslyn, Washington, June 11, 1903, Bro. William Kinghorn; born in Scotland, December 8, 1829. He united with the old church in his native land. He was married to Margaret Campbell the day before leaving Scotland for America about 1852. On arriving in America he made his home at St. Louis and united with the Reorganized Church, at Alma, Illinois, about 1870. He was a noble, spiritually-minded man, a lover of Christ's holy words, and died in a glorious hope of the resurrection. He was 73 years, 6 months, 3 days old. He leaves a wife, three sons, two daughters.

BOOTMAN.—At Thayer, Oregon County, Missouri, June 1, 1903, Sr. Maud Alice (McClure) Bootman, born March 15, 1881, at Rosedale, Indiana; aged 22 years, 2 months, 16 days; was baptized July 4, 1897, at Harrisonville, Missouri, by F. S. Sawley; married to Bro. William P. Bootman, at Independence, Missouri, April 5, 1901, by F. C. Keck. She died firm in the faith leaving a darling baby eleven weeks old, and a beloved husband to mourn her departure. At her request she was buried by the side of her husband's parents near West Plains, Missouri. Sermon by Elder Henry Sparling.

BERTELSEN.—Annie Maria Bertelsen died July 11, 1903. She was born in Denmark, December 26, 1834; married in 1858, to Christian Bertelsen and went to Utah soon after. With her husband she joined the Reorganization under the hands of David H. Smith in 1872, and moved to Omaha, remaining until her death. Husband and two daughters, and one granddaughter remain to mourn. Peaceful in life, she was peaceful in death, and the joy of her countenance told of the glorious hope she had so long cherished in the gospel. Funeral sermon at the chapel, Omaha, Sunday, July 12, by Elder Charles Fry, assisted by Bro. J. F. Weston.

CHAMBERS.—At Muchaknock, Iowa, on June 11, 1903, Francis Chambers, a young man of 16, employed about the mines of Muchaknock, received injuries while about his work, the result of which in eight days were manifest in his death. He leaves a mother, five brothers and sisters, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. The funeral services were conducted at the home of the deceased by Elder E. J. Clarke of Grinnell, Iowa.

COINER.—William, the fourteen year old son of Bro. O. E. Coiner, at Quay, Oklahoma, July 5, 1903. He was born in Jasper County, Iowa, February 24, 1889. Baptized July 11, 1897, at Mud Lake, Iowa, by Joseph Carlson. Together with his father he moved to Oklahoma from Lamoni, Iowa.

JOHNSON.—At Osawatomie, Kansas, July 3, 1903, Bro. Cornelius Johnson died of paralysis. He was born in Copley, Ohio, in 1830. In 1855 he married Miss Nancy Woodstock of Janesville, Wisconsin. To them were born five sons and two daughters. In 1883 he united with the church, baptized by Elder Clarence St. Clair; soon after was ordained a teacher. He lived and died firm in the faith, leaving a loving and devoted wife, three sons, and one daughter to mourn. Funeral July 5, from the house; sermon by F. C. Warnky.

MARSHALL.—William Marshall died at Belvidere, Illinois, June 30, 1903, aged eighty years; born in Prettyville, Essex County, England, June 30, 1823. October 26, 1850, he was married to Miss Mary Ann Brad and to them were born eleven children, nine of whom with their aged mother are left to mourn the loss of a dear husband and father. Bro. Marshall united with the Reorganized church in 1883, and lived a consistent and an exemplary life and was loved by all who knew him. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Eli M. Wildermuth, of Plano, Illinois.

WILSON.—Hannah Ann Wilson, born April 22, 1834; died at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, July 3, 1903. She was not a member of any church but was a good mother and kind neighbor. Funeral service at her home, also at Methodist Episcopal church, Cherryhill, Maryland, conducted by W. E. La Rue.

Addresses.

The address of Elder J. C. Foss is 256 Soquel Avenue, Santa Cruz, California.

The wise mother who is planning a summer off for herself and children will bear in mind that occupation is as harmonizing a factor of daily life abroad as at home, and will take with her books and various other material which can be turned to account not only on rainy days, but during a part of each day. Absolute idleness, bears, in my mind, the same relation to recreation that license does to liberty: one is bad, the other good; hence the children who have some slight task to perform throughout the summer vacation, derive more benefit from their vacation than those who are left wholly to their own devices."

This paragraph is taken from a paper by Mrs. Theodore W. Birney, in the August Delineator, which contains much helpful advice on the treatment of the child when away from home during summer.

"Ancient Rome," considered the greatest scenic spectacle ever seen in the West, will be presented at the Iowa State Fair at Des Moines four nights, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, August 24 to 27. This wonderful representation with fireworks, depicting in a marvelous manner the burning of the city, preceded by reproductions of the life, festivities, sports, and barbarities of the Eternal City in the days of Nero, is a production of dazzling magnificence. In a historical way it is rarely instructive. Nowhere could one see the life and customs of this most wonderful of the ancient peoples so vividly and accurately set forth. The drama has been planned with the most careful attention to its historical correctness, and it tells one of the most interesting stories that is to be found in all past history.

"We do not," says Thoreau, "have faith enough. At night we say our prayers, and unwillingly commit ourselves to uncertainties." He touched here very keenly upon the fustiness of a certain sort of people who will not believe that the world is well ordered, and who feel that unless they sit up and watch things the universe will blow up in the night. They must see every step; very often they fear to make any step lest they repent it; they keep themselves in the continual state of uncertainty, because they do not trust enough. The world has wagged on better or worse; every season the earth renews her increase; everything points to the fact that the proper way to approach life is with a large confidence—confidence that if you do your best you can trust in the forces of which you do not know to take care of the general scheme of things. Never hang back even if you can not see the goal; do the work you see next to you, and trust in God for the rest. Thoreau is right. As people, as individuals, we do not have faith enough. It is a good thing to cultivate; it makes for sanity, for catholicity, for good work in all lines; it helps us to live happily.—July Woman's Home Companion.

By communication from the Arena we learn that Mr. John M. McLean has retired from the editorial management of the Arena and Mr. B. O. Flower has assumed the work heretofore performed by Mr. McLean in addition to the writing of the editorial book reviews of the magazine, and that the Arena is again evincing much of its life and spirit under the new editorial regime.

A good deal of interest attaches to those old missions of the far West, built by the Catholic fathers so many years ago. Elder Albert Carmichael gives the history of one of them in the August Leaves, The "Mission San Diego de Alcalá." A good picture of the old mission accompanies the article.

"The Christian Science Delusion" is the title of a fifty-two page booklet we have received from the Reverend A. C. Dixon, of 29 Whiting Street, Boston, Massachusetts. It is one of a series of pamphlets known as "Dixon's Sermons." Mr. Dixon in his booklet deals with his subject under the following heads: "Twenty-one Facts about Christian Science;" "The 'Christian Science' Apostasy;" "How Christian Science Wrests the Scriptures."

THE rumor seems to be authentic that the "ring of the fisherman," which should have been found on the hand of the Pope, has disappeared. This ring is used to seal papal bulls and is the outward sign of the authority of the Pope.

WE have received papers from Enfield, England, containing accounts of President Smith's visit to that city. Myers's Observer and the Chronicle and Herald, both contained accounts in their issue for July 3. The latter paper speaks editorially of the "chief of one branch of the Mormons." The articles are such as will do us good, on the whole.

Editorial.

POPE LEO XIII.

On the death of Pope Leo XIII, which occurred at Rome on Monday, July 20, there passed from earth one of the most remarkable men of the century. His death is notable not alone because it marked an epoch in the Catholic Church, but because the man himself possessed a character and individuality which would have made him great in any position or calling. So marked, so strong, and so worthy has been his record, that the "Best Beloved Pope" won the admiration and respect of the world, and grief at his demise was not confined to the Catholic Church, but was world-wide.

Pope Leo XIII, whose name other than the pontifical one, was Joachim Vincent Raphael Ludovico Pecci, was born on March 2, 1810, in the mountain village of Carpineto, in the north of the Appenines, being the son of Count Ludovico Pecci and Anna Proserpi, and descendant, according to some authorities, from Cola di Rienzi, the last of the Roman tribunes. Carpineto was then in one of the States of the Church, the temporal sovereignty of the Pope of Rome. Almost from his earliest boyhood until he was past sixty years old, Leo saw the wreck and ruin and carnage resulting from the struggles of his countrymen to free fragmentary Italy from foreign bondage and unite those fragments under one flag. It was the task of the nineteenth century for Italians, and cost them much blood and treasure. Throughout those bloody years Leo pursued his steady course as a church man.

His education began early under the direction of the Jesuits. At twenty-one he took his degree of Doctor of Divinity, and at twenty-three the degree of Doctor of Canon and Civil Law was conferred upon him. Early bent upon becoming a church man, with characteristic zeal and perseverance his energies were closely devoted to fitting himself therefor. As a student his record was brilliant, and he became proficient in mathematics, chemistry, and philosophy. Latin was a pleasure to him and he wrote it fluently, becoming especially noted as a master of Latin verse.

It was while Gregory XVI was the ecclesiastical head of the Roman Church and ruler of the church states that young Pecci began his career as a church man. Gregory was not long in recognizing Pecci's ability, and in January, 1837, appointed him domestic pre-ate, and in the following March appointed him referendary to the court of Segnatura. In December, 1837, when only twenty-seven years of age, the priesthood was conferred upon him and Gregory XVI sent him as apostolic delegate to Benevento, which office carried with it not only spiritual authority, but civil functions as well. As governor of Benevento he succeeded in suppressing brigandage, which had been carried on under the patronage of nobles with the connivance of the authorities. Complaints were sent to Rome telling of the harshness of the young ruler, and his recall suggested; but Gregory appreciated his real worth despite the complaints, and recalled Pecci only when his services were needed as governor at Spoleto, where he went in 1841, remaining there till 1843; when he was sent as apostolic nuncio at the court of Belgium. At the Belgian court he proved himself not only an excellent churchman, but a polished diplomat. On leaving Belgium in 1845 to act as archbishop of Perugia, King Leopold said to him: "I am so sorry I can not be converted; but you are so winning a theologian that I shall ask the Pope to give you a cardinal's hat."

Before returning to Italy to resume church work among a people to whom he was well known and by whom he was much loved for his wisdom and justice as a ruler, he visited London, where he was received by Queen Victoria, whom he had met in Brussels. At Paris he was welcomed by King Louis Phillippe.

Before he reached Rome Pope Gregory XVI died on June 1, 1846, and Cardinal Mastai Ferretti had been chosen pope by the sacred college. Cardinal Ferretti was crowned on June 16, as Pius IX.

The rapid progress which Monsignor Pecci made under the reign of Gregory XVI now stopped. It has been said that Pius IX was unfriendly towards him. Be that as it may, it is to the credit of Bishop Pecci that he went to Perugia and for thirty-two years devoted his labor and skill for the promotion of the general welfare of his people. He was ever a friend to the oppressed poor, and he was kept busy indeed building churches and establishing educational and and charitable institutions. Throughout the troublous reign of Pius IX, Bishop Pecci wisely governed his province, which was many times the scene of violent conflicts in Italy's struggle for liberty.

In 1853 Monsignor Pecci was created a cardinal, long overdue, as claimed by some. In September, 1877, he was called to Rome to fill the position of Cardinal Carmerlengo to Pius IX. Pius died on the seventh of the following February, and by reason of his office Cardinal Pecci became the head of the church until the sacred college should be assembled to elect the successor.

Cardinal Pecci was then sixty-eight years of age; but his past record and his learned wisdom and ability justified the college of cardinals in placing the pontifical robes on his shoulders. He was elected pope on February 20, 1878, and on March 3 he was crowned as Pope Leo XIII.

The temporal power of the pope, as ruler of the papal states, which waned while Gregory XVI occupied the papal throne, was entirely gone before the close of the reign of Pius IX. Italy had, through the intervention of France under Louis Napoleon, succeeded in expelling the Austrian army from the Italian states, and overthrowing Austrian rule, even wresting Venetia from Austria, thanks to the selfish assistance of Bismark. The fragmentary states of Italy were under the rule of King Victor Emmanuel, whose whole ambition was to see a united Italy with the capital at Rome, the seat of power when the Roman empire was at its height. When Austria was driven from Italy, all that prevented a union of all Italian states was the Pope's temporal sovereignty. Public sentiment finally overcame all objections to the overthrow of the Pope as a temporal ruler, to the extent that in September, 1870, Rome was besieged by Victor Emmanuel's army and captured. The Pope retired to the Vatican, refusing to recognize the new powers. In October of the same year by vote the people of the papal states renounced allegiance to the Pope as temporal ruler, and declared for a united Italy under Victor Emmanuel, and in July, 1871, Rome once more became the capital of Italy. Pius IX resented, and constantly refused to enter upon any conciliatory negotiations with the Italian government. The government recognized the exceedingly embarrassing features of the question which came near deluging all Europe with blood. The Pope was as entitled to his throne as any monarch in Europe. It had been recognized for centuries in all European courts. Immense wealth had been expended in erecting great buildings in the Vatican and storing them with rich treasures of art of almost untold value. These belonged to the Catholic church, not Rome. The Italian government recognized, too, the gravity of the question of whether or not a pope should be subject to any power, and was anxious to make such concessions to the Pope as would be satisfactory all around. But Pius was persistent in his claim, and as the government had nullified all civil power of the Pope outside the Vatican, he retired and remained there, the self-styled "prisoner of the Vatican."

Leo XIII faithfully kept up the practice, keeping within the Vatican walls.

Thus Pope Leo became a prince, but was virtually without a principality. His whole energies have been devoted to establishing the spiritual and moral power of the church, and by this means to lift the Vatican far above the courts of Europe, and strengthen the church irrespective of nations. Though in 1889 he made appeal to the courts of Europe to have his temporal sovereignty restored to him, yet it is believed he did so through the influence of those surrounding him, not because of his belief or conviction. Concerning the conciliation of church and state, in his celebrated allocution on the subject he said:

As we have often said before, we have for a long time and most earnestly desired that the minds of Italians should be in possession of assured peace that the fatal dissension with the Roman pontificate should at length cease, but without detriment to justice or to the dignity of the Apostolic See, which rights are not so much violated by national hostility as they are by the conspiracy of sects. But to open the way to peace it is necessary that the Roman Pontiff should be placed in such a state as to be subject to no other power, and be in possession of a true and real freedom, as every right demands. If this were done and a true judgment of things taken not only would Italy be none the worse for it but would receive great help to its safety and prosperity.

At his coronation he did not go to the window to bless the people as the kingly popes before him had done, but went into the chapel to pray for them—he was more concerned for them spiritually than temporally.

As pontiff his wisdom and statesmanship has won the Vatican more power than military power could have done. His encyclicals have been read throughout the world because of the learning and wisdom displayed therein, and have shown him a “man of the world” in his understanding of humanity and its problems. He won the respect even of his enemies.

What of his successor? Is the “Roman question” settled, or has Leo’s diplomacy but held it in temporary suspension? Is there a worthy successor to Leo XIII; and if so, will the “sacred college” find him? The questions are momentous.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Mrs. Robert Heavener wrote as follows in a letter to Bishop E. L. Kelley dated Piper City, Illinois, July 18: “Seeing the request in Ensign from Bro. Luff for prayers for his success in behalf of Graceland College I did earnestly entreat the Lord to bless his efforts, and in order to have those prayers answered I will have to do my part. Inclosed you will find an order for five dollars to help pay off the indebtedness of the college.”

Bro. W. A. Smith wrote from Missouri Valley, Iowa, July 22: “In company with Bro. J. C. Crabb I am holding tent-meetings here with good attendance and good interest. We have baptized six at this place and others have given in their names for baptism next Sunday. It seems the good Spirit of God is moving on the hearts of the people of this district, and we are encouraged in the work of the Lord.”

D. M. Rudd in writing from Dedham, Iowa, July 21, says: “Bro. D. Brewster and I are traveling by wagon (so we can lodge and board ourselves) and opening the work in new places by preaching on the streets. We have had good attention thus far.”

I. N. White wrote the following from Bellaire, Illinois, July 22: “Close a ten-day meeting to-night with fine interest. Go to Kibbie for two nights and then to Zenith for a week’s meeting; thence to Dry Fork to attend Southeastern Illinois District reunion from August 1 to 10. Bro. Slover is with me and doing good work. Bro. Spurlock is in these regions too. Things are moving quite satisfactorily.”

President Joseph Smith wrote from Stafford, England, July 16: “We are here in the rain and under shelter in good quarters, where the people are hospitable and musical, Hawthorne House, Stone Road, with a grate fire to take the chill out of the air. We came in yesterday from Birmingham, where we had spent the time from Friday of last week, we think in a profitable way, among the Saints. The weather has been good so far. England is a beautiful country to look at, and I find the manners and customs of the people delightful. Bro. E. L. Kelley is remembered here and liked very much.”

Bro. J. M. Terry writing from Oakland, California, July 24, says: “Work here is moving on. Saints are growing in spiritual strength. We hope our reunion will be an impetus for good. My health is very favorable. The Lord is blessing me in ministering the word. Our missionary force is at work doing what they can against an active enemy. We miss Bro. Price from the ranks of the active ones. We go to Chico and Sacramento to-morrow, and to Santa Rosa on the third Sunday of August. Self and wife are feeling well in gospel work.”

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

On Tuesday, the 28th, we received from the Senior Editor a resume of the travels of Bro. R. C. Evans and himself from Nantyglo, Wales, to Stafford, England. This will appear in the next HERALD. He also sends us a digest of a dissertation on evolution by Sir Oliver Lodge, one of the noted lecturers of England.

In this issue announcement is made that the new tract, Plural Marriage in America, is on sale. Much good can be accomplished by the distribution of this new publication and we would be pleased to see all of the Saints doing their best to make use of the opportunity.

SENIOR EDITOR ABROAD.

My last advices were from Lydney, England. We there met a little branch occupying its own church, in charge of Bro. Thomas Griffiths. The church building is picturesquely located on a hillside partially overlooking the valley of the Severn, and is reached by a footpath leaving the main road through the village, which, as in most places we have been in England, is a long crooked street lined by business houses and residences on either side, built fronting in every possible direction and apparently without any regard to the points of the compass. Myself and Bro. R. C. Evans were the guests of the branch, and were located at the residence of a Mrs. Leo, who proved to be a very pleasant landlady indeed. We were lodged in an upper room overlooking the street, having a sitting-room and bedroom at our disposal. We met the Saints in their church in the evening, when I addressed them on a topic connected with the latter-day work. We occupied the next day writing and visiting, and in the afternoon took a walk up a new road, observing the method by which this country is blessed with good roads. The road-beds are carefully prepared, rounded and properly drained, covered with broken stone, rolled smooth by a heavy iron machine driven by steam. Where holes are in the roads, they are carefully filled and rolled hard and level.

In the evening after Bro. R. C. Evans had preached a sermon, the branch and its visitors were the guests of Bro. Griffiths at a repast spread in the church, where a pleasant sociable time was enjoyed. This finished our labors at Lydney. The house where we were lodged was said to be two hundred years old. We confess to feeling a little uncanny when we thought that we were occupying places where men and women came and went so many, many years ago. It was a typical house of the country, thick walls of stone, solid and strong, the floor of the lower rooms being either of flat stone or tile, the upper rooms of wood. The beams supporting the ceiling and roof were exposed to view, and grown dark with age, but apparently good for centuries more of occupation. The roofs are of tile, though we saw some roofed with flat stone and rarely a roof of thatch or straw.

From Lydney we went to Cardiff, one of the largest and finest cities of Wales. The road ran through the valley of the Severn, and was a very pleasant one to traverse, the train service being excellent. We were somewhat disappointed in the appearance of the country, from the fact that we had been told that the hedges were all nicely cut and kept trim. This is a mistake. We saw many which were not only overgrown, but badly kept, many gaps unsupplied with plants, others occupying ground that we thought might be better employed. These may have been exceptions and easily explained. However, in the main, the land appeared to be well cultivated, the hedges between different fields fairly trim, on the whole presenting a very pleasing appearance. How could it be otherwise in a country so old and which has been made to support such a large population as has lived and died in it.

Under the careful guidance of Bro. Rushton, we reached the hospitable home of Bro. Gould, president of Cardiff Branch, whose guests Bro. R. C. Evans and myself were; Bro. Rushton being cared for by Bro. Green. The Saints there had secured the use of a hall in one of the city arcades, known as Queen's Arcade Hall, quite a pleasant and commodious audience room. They had also placarded the town and scattered numbers of small handbills giving notice of the meetings and inviting people to come out and hear. A leading feature of the handbills was the inquiry, "Who are the Latter Day Saints?" This was made the topic of the evening's discourse by the writer, the audience being small for so large a room. We were, however, privileged to have a number of the Utah people present, with a few others of the outside world, who may or may not have been pleased with what was said.

The next day in company with Bro. Evan B. Morgan and Bro. Rushton we visited Llandoff Cathedral, said to have been begun in the year 400 A. D., or thereabouts, partially broken and destroyed by the vandalism of war and the savagery of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, partially rebuilt and then overthrown by accidents and storm; again restored and added to, from the fourteenth century up, until it now stands a monument of the work of centuries. In it lie the remains of numbers of the heroes of the times, besides bishops and deans who have had charge and care of the disciples of succeeding generations. Over one of these graves we saw a slab on which we read, "Here lies the body of the Rev. Richard C. Evans," of whom it pleased us to think he may have been the predecessor of our traveling companion. Around the walls of the cathedral and in among its pillars and under its arches are a number of statues in marble, most of them recumbent, whose battered faces, broken hands, arms, and feet, indicate the ravages which vandals' hands may have inflicted purposely in the wars between the contending hosts, whose forces fought each other across the country alternating in their success and whose vindictive passions found gratification in breaking up and destroying the work of the hands of those who had preceded them in occupation.

The dean who kindly showed us through the premises, charitably suggested that the destruction which we noticed was the result of the falling of the walls and towers; but while giving credit to his charity, we could not conscientiously thus account for the various inscriptions made upon those prostrate marble forms of names and initials and other evidences of the vandalism of the tourist and other curio seekers. These last named were too much like the traces of other vandals of these modern times of which we have seen so many.

On the west side of this cathedral, at the eaves, are twenty carved heads of that number of sovereigns of England and the British Empire. The last of these, the head of King Edward VII, was added some six weeks before our visit. These tokens of succeeding reigns, their beginning and ending, were pointed out to us by a man whose tottering form and bleared eyes testified to his age, who informed us that for twenty years he had been organ blower at the services held in this ancient building. His vocation has ended by the placing of a modern organ in the church at a cost of two thousand pounds (about ten thousand dollars), being inclosed in a carved case of teak and olive wood, costing eight hundred pounds (four thousand dollars), the bellows being worked by hydraulic pressure.

Returning, we mounted to the upper story of one of the "buses" of the country, enjoying both the walk and the ride of our visit. In the evening we gathered at the hall when Bro. R. C. Evans gave us one of his characteristic talks on the subject of plural marriage, which, if it did not edify our Utah hearers, had the effect of arousing their ire.

We were favored with meeting Bro. William Lewis, his wife, and daughter. Bro. Lewis has been on a mission now nearly two years, and was on the eve of departing for his home in St. Joseph, Missouri, his health having failed to that extent that he could not longer remain to prosecute further the work in the mission assigned him. He has made a good record in the mission. He leaves with the warmest regard and esteem of the Saints and the people among whom he has labored. It is a pleasure to follow such men as Bro. William Lewis.

From Cardiff we went to Llanely. Here we met with a body of Saints under the charge of Henry Ellis at whose home Bro. Rushton was a guest, while the Editor and Bro. Evans were cared for by Bro. and Sr. Evan Davies. Here, as at Lydney, we met the Saints in their own church. We stayed with them, occupying their church over Sunday, the two from America occupying alternately. We also partook of the sacrament with them, the services being conducted by Brn. Ellis and Williams. The good Spirit was present, the testimonies of the Saints witnessing the confidence and good feeling of all taking part. We here met a number of the Saints from the near-by places. We had splendid interest and an excellent audience on Sunday evening. We here met with the aged Sr. Treharne, who was with the church in an early day in this land. It was here that R. C. took his first successful lesson in the pronunciation of the Welsh words. However clearly he may trace his genealogy back to the occupants of the Cumbrian hills and valleys, the long acquaintance of himself and his immediate predecessors with the hard cut-and-dried phrases of the English language has unfitted his ear, tongue, and lips for the musical rhythm of his mother tongue.

Leaving Llanely we went to Dinas. Here again we met the Saints, though occupying a hired church, holding forth with zeal and courage under the presidency of Bro. Lot Bishop. He is the brother of Alma N. Bishop, whose death the Saints in Wales and the States have mourned as untimely. He is really not at fault for being a Latter Day Saint, for, like the Editor, his parents were Saints before him, and he was born and raised in the faith. Bro. Evans and the writer were the guests of Sr. Alma N. Bishop at her pleasant home on the hillside over-looking the valley in Porth. It is useless attempting to describe this valley hive of industry, where along the banks of the Toff River the houses of the workers, the mines, and the workshops are spread out in picturesque confusion, in instances reaching to the top of the mountain, where man's able assistant, the steam engine, is used to hoist the coal that warms the inhabitants and moves the industries of other places both at home and abroad. Here we occupied two nights, the 6th and 7th, holding an afternoon prayer and testimony-meeting, holding a social gathering, and closing with a sermon by R. C. Evans, on "Beware of false prophets." Here we met Bro. John Davis, of Stewartsville, Missouri, and John G. Jenkins, of the missionary force, whom we were pleased to greet in the field.

A Mr. Lamb, a nondescript minister, having made himself conspicuous by his attacks upon the faith of the Saints in the local paper, the Rhondda Leader, besides interrupting the brethren holding services in the streets, it was thought best to make an affirmative presentation of the faith of the church and its views upon the marriage question, so that if this reverend gentleman should be present, he could not thereafter say that the question was avoided because of his antagonism. It was the Editor's turn to speak and he treated of the subject from the well-understood position of the church upon the topic.

Our visit to Dinas, Porth, and Tonypany, three villages of the valley, scarcely a stone's throw apart, was a very pleasant one indeed. Bro. Rushton, who had been somewhat indisposed for two or three days, soon rallied here and was himself again. Our association with the Saints was pleasant. We formed a number of new acquaintances, and the visit has left an indelible impress upon our memory. Bro. Bishop has earned the affection of the people and by his fidelity has made it difficult to supply his place. Bro. John Davis is active, and so far has the confidence of the Saints where his labors have been expended, we wish him complete success.

From Porth we made the trip on Wednesday to Brynmawr, from which place our next epistle must necessarily be forwarded in its relation to the readers of the HERALD. It is yet too early to begin to record our impressions of the country in any extended way, or of the work; though we are safe in saying, we find a good people anxious for the spread of the truth and devotedly maintaining the cause.

Kind regards to all. In bonds,

JOSEPH SMITH,

BUILDERS, WISE AND OTHERWISE.

SERMON BY ELBERT A. SMITH.

Delivered in Burlington, Iowa, July 19, 1903.

The subject of my discourse this morning is "Builders, Wise and Otherwise." In our opinion the world has seen many experiments in building in both of these classes since Enoch built his city that was taken to heaven and Noah built the ark in which he was saved.

Your attention is called first to an incident that occurred in the very far past. In Genesis the eleventh chapter we read that at one time the whole world knew but one language. They all journeyed together from the east till they came to a plain in the land of Shinar. Here they conceived a wonderful project; one said to another, "Go to, let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven." The world was young then, and inexperienced; the people looked up and the heavens did not seem so far away. They were like the little child playing by the seashore with his little shovel. He could not decide whether to dig a great big hole as big as the ocean or to build up a hill as high as the mountains. These people, however, had no doubts, they knew what they wanted to do. They wanted to build a tower as high as the heavens.

Tradition tells us that they feared another deluge and wished to guard against it. They wanted to build a tower so high that God himself could not drown them. This notwithstanding the fact that they had the promise of God that the waters should never again become a flood to cover the earth. This notwithstanding the fact that they could see after each storm the bow in the heavens as a token of that promise.

Like people now, they guarded against an imaginary physical evil and never dreamed of the spiritual destruction that threatened them. Think also of the monstrous conceit and ambition of a people who could solemnly engage in such an undertaking. Defying even Divinity! God saw that for their own good the project must be frustrated. How easily when the time came did he bring it all to naught. There was no upheaval of nature's forces, no sudden onslaught of dread disease; only a little confusion of language here and there and the organization was broken. The people could not work together because they could not understand each other, and so they quietly drifted apart over the face of the whole earth.

We smile when we read of the means by which they hoped to mount to heaven; for we read that they had "brick for stone, and slime had they for mortar." Nothing genuine about it! They did not even have real rock and mortar, but had brick for stone and slime for mortar. Their folly, however, was not so great that it has not been duplicated.

They were not the last people whose pretenses aspired to heaven and whose deeds were hollow mockery.

Man still, as ever, desires the beautiful city; and still, as ever, he seeks to obtain it in his own way, with scant regard for the way of God. Man has always sought to avert impending evil and has ever sought to avert it with his own wisdom. Some spend a lifetime in accumulating wealth with little regard to the means employed, just so they are effectual, and at the last they think to build a church or a hospital or a library and thereby make their peace, in other words, buy their way into heaven. Their tower of Babel is builded of infinitely less adequate material than that on Shinar. Good brick, that a man has dug from the clay and burned and laid in mortar with the careful toil of his own hand, are more respectable in the sight of God than gold-pieces that are the price of another man's liberty. The streets of the New Jerusalem may be paved with gold, but no man has gold enough to pave the straight and narrow way.

Some things that God is perfectly willing man should have, if obtained lawfully, are constantly sought after in ways that he has expressly forbidden. Let us read another chapter from the past, and before we are done we shall see the connection.

Saul had been for many years king over Israel. He had been promised wisdom and blessing and preservation, if he would but serve God; but his heart had become estranged and wicked and what he thought he needed he sought and obtained in other ways. We read that his kingdom was in danger from the Philistines. Saul needed direction and God refused to give it because of Saul's wickedness. So we have the spectacle of the man formerly of God seeking the witch of Endor for the wisdom that Divinity would have freely given him if he had lived for it.

We read that "Saul disguised himself, and put on other raiment . . . and came to the woman by night." That would have been a strange way to invoke the Spirit of light, in disguise and by night; but it was a very natural way to approach the powers of darkness. When Saul had found the woman he said to her, "Divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring him up, whom I shall name unto thee." Saul seemed to know that the woman had but one spirit, the familiar spirit; but it could represent any one whom he might choose to "call up." If he wanted Samuel, Samuel he would get, or what claimed to be Samuel. If he called for Moses, Moses he would get, or a good imitation of Moses. It would be the same if he called up wife or sister or mother. The medium needed but one spirit to represent them all, and that was the spirit of the Devil.

The woman was cautious. Said she, "Thou knowest what Saul hath done, how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land." This was very true, or at least he had attempted to do so while he was yet an honest man. He had done it in accordance with the strict command of God found in Deuteronomy 18:11, that no one should be permitted in the land who was a "consulter with familiar spirits." He had grievously fallen since he had first tried to execute that statute.

He was willing now to add the sin of blasphemy to that of hypocrisy, and he swore to her in the name of God that she should not suffer. So she said to him, "Whom shall I bring up to thee?" And he said, "Bring up Samuel." Both recognized that whatever manifestation came it would come from beneath. God spoke from on high, and the Spirit descended in the form of a dove, but this was a spirit that came from beneath, and was expected to so come. When the manifestation came Saul proved that kings are as credulous as ordinary mortals. There is no word to indicate that Saul saw Samuel clearly, with his own eyes. Indeed it was probably impossible, because in all probability the lights were turned low or extinguished according to ancient and modern custom, and probably Saul was cautioned to be mentally passive and not to attempt to touch the spirit. Most people are mentally passive who go on such an errand. Saul did not see Samuel. We know that he did not because he had to ask the medium what it was that had appeared. When she told him it was an old man with a mantle, Saul took the cue; it must be Samuel, for Samuel was an old man and wore a mantle.

You see the whole thing was off color. The man had to get down pretty low before the spirit "came up." He had to go through a moral decline in order to reach a plane where he could communicate with the emissary from the regions of nether darkness.

Thousands are daily following the example of Saul. They want to know how to act in some matter. They crave some evidence of the soul's immortality. They want to know about the welfare of some departed friend. God would give them all the knowledge they really need or could use about all these things, for his Spirit is given to guide unto all truth and to reveal things to come. Instead of seeking this knowledge in the right way from the right source, they, like Saul, by night or in a darkened room, seek some one having a familiar spirit that for a cash consideration will pose as Uncle John or Aunt Mary or Brother William. Uncle John, who never told the truth while living, is regarded as an authority when he is supposed to speak from the far side of the grave.

It is easier to come down to the level where this sort of revelation is received than it is to arise to the plane where the Holy Spirit will reveal the secrets of futurity. It looks easier. Some even have the courage to point to this dubious adventure of Saul as proof that the Bible sanctions Spiritualism. They even claim Christ as the greatest medium of the past. Incidentally the testimony of the spirits concerning him is their own condemnation. When asked if he was the Christ, the Son of God, they reply from the shadows of the cabinet, "No, he was simply a great medium." We read in the fourth chapter of the first epistle of John, "Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits. . . . Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come."

"Well," one remarks, "I know there is something in it." To be sure there is something in it. There was something in it for Saul; let us see what. It is said in the tenth chapter of First Chronicles, "So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking the counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it; and inquired not of the Lord: therefore he slew him."

A worse fate than befell the builders of Babel, and truly all these people who are expecting to obtain good from such sources might better be trying to build their way to heaven, having brick for stone and slime for mortar. The result in both cases is confusion.

So much for these ancient cases of men trying to "climb up by some other way;" now we turn to something more modern. You are familiar with the fact that Paul mourned that the saints were beginning to substitute another gospel, which was not a gospel at all, for the true doctrine of Christ. It was the same old story and it resulted in the overthrow of the church. In time the gospel was restored and the church builded again. The scene changes from Kirtland to Independence, from Independence to Nauvoo, from Nauvoo to Salt Lake.

In the last-named place was enacted another chapter in human perversity. The people had been taught that in the simple principles of the gospel as revealed to them was abundant salvation, and that obedience to them would exalt to a station of celestial glory. But there were among them men who aspired to another way, whose ambition knew no limit. One of them evidently said, Go to, let us build a city, and a tower that shall reach beyond heaven.

So they took their brick and their slime, the comparison is not bad, and they went to work. A product of that state of affairs was the revelation that their leader gave to them in 1852. It opened another way to glory, and told the people that if a man but observed the law of celestial and plural marriage his blasphemies and his murders should be forgiven and he should pass by gods and angels to his eternal exaltation. The people on Shinar are outdone.

This revelation came as Saul came to the witch of Endor, in disguise and wearing another man's raiment; but Saul in any disguise was the son of Kish, and this revelation, though given in the name of Joseph Smith, was the offspring of Brigham Young.

It is not an uncommon idea in the world that a man may choose his way to get to heaven, and if he is but sincere he will arrive in due time. These people building this ancient tower were honest. They put back-breaking work on the project. They were hod-carriers for their convictions; but it did not commend their work to God or make them successful.

Now, having observed to an extent how not to build, we may with profit consider how we shall build. The object of this building of course being to erect a spiritual structure that will be pleasing to God and bring eternal life to the builder.

It is of the utmost importance that we start right. Not alone that we lay our foundation properly but that that foundation shall rest on the eternal rock. Christ spoke of a certain man who built his house upon the sand and it fell with a great fall. Its fall was inevitable. Though he laid his foundation with the utmost care and built his walls with skill, yet under it all was the treacherous sand. He was like the man who heard the sayings of Christ and did them not. He was disposed to make an outward show but under it all there was not the proper disposition to obey. He spoke of another man who digged deep and laid his foundation on a rock. His house defied the flood and storm. He was like the man who heard the sayings of Christ and did them; under all of whose life there was a substratum of obedience.

A great dam is being builded near New York City, the Cornell Dam. It is three hundred feet high and two hundred feet wide at the base. It is over two thousand feet long and the blocks of stone of which it is constructed weigh several tons each. A trench was dug below the river bed to a depth of one hundred sixty feet, to the primal rock. The rock was washed with cement and the dam built up. It has since developed that under one portion there is a strip of disintegrated limestone that was not at first discovered. This rotten rock extends to an unknown depth and threatens the life of the whole structure. The size of the dam and the great care in building it are of no avail so long as this weak spot is beneath.

In like manner, any man who is building his spiritual building with any mental reservation or any disposition to evade complete obedience to Christ, the master builder, will some day find that his labor has been in vain. A rotten spot is in the rock on which he has built. Labor and care on the superstructure will not save the building. It is dangerous to teach or think that any of Christ's commandments are nonessential.

We find a word concerning the laying of the foundation in the sixth chapter of Hebrews. Paul says,

"Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of —." Ah, here are some who have laid their foundation and it is accepted in the sight of God, for his servant commends it and tells them to go on. Let us learn what that foundation was and build in like manner. "Not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." A very plain yet strong foundation, and nothing in it, either faith or repentance or baptism, that Paul thought should be omitted. In the third chapter of First Corinthians we learn more concerning this matter. We read there, "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Some one says, "But you have been telling us to lay another foundation." No, we have not. It is the same foundation, and every stone that Paul in Hebrews has told us to lay will put within us more of Christ. It is impossible to separate Christ from the doctrine of Christ; for it is written, "He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

In this same chapter we are told that having the foundation laid we may proceed to build, and that in building we may use either gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, or stubble; but that it shall some day be tried by fire. Wood and hay and stubble are poorly calculated to stand the test. As well attempt to build to heaven with brick and slime.

Peter tells us what this precious material is, of which we are permitted to build, when he tells us to work into our building virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity. By doing this we shall gain all that those ancient tower-builders hoped for: we will escape the destruction of the world, and we will build a tower that will reach to heaven, for Peter goes on to say, "For an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

BIBLE TRANSLATIONS.—NO. 2.

BY C. J. SPURLOCK.

Inasmuch then as these translators themselves declare that such a work as they undertook could not be done correctly without divine aid who will be so reckless in his statements as to say that it could. Seeing then that divine aid was necessary in making a correct translation or rather revision of the King James Bible is it incredible to say the Lord has given aid in translating the Bible in this age?

James says: "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him,"—James 1:5. Jesus says: "Ask, and it shall be given you." Although people may scoff at the idea, yet we believe that Joseph Smith did ask of God and was given wisdom to make a correct translation of the Bible.

The translation made by Joseph Smith was begun June, 1830, and completed July 2, 1833. Mr. Smith was in his twenty-eighth year. This work was begun by reason of a revelation in which he was commanded to translate the Holy Scriptures. The revelation was given in June and in this very month the work was commenced, Joseph being assisted by Sidney Rigdon. The translation of the Book of Mormon had just been completed and this had caused Joseph to be much persecuted. The church had been organized in April just previous, hence there were many other things to occupy Joseph's time besides the work of translation. During the three years, he traveled thousands of miles, attended and presided over a number of conferences and other important meetings. Besides he was mobbed in February, 1832. More than this he was in extreme poverty. Yet the translation made by Joseph Smith in three years is better than the King James Translation which was made by forty-seven men in seven years, or the Revised Version which was made by eighty-two men in fourteen years. It certainly looks as though some divine assistance was rendered.

In order to present the matter clearly before the reader, I shall give a number of quotations from the King James Version and the Inspired Translation that judgment may be rendered as to which of the two translations is the better. There having been some changes made in the book of Genesis, I shall begin with that book: "And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. . . . For it repenteth me that I have made them."—Genesis 6:6, 7.

Webster says that to repent is to be sorry for something done. So the Lord made man and then was sorry for what he had done. Reader, does it look reasonable that an all-wise being would do a thing and be sorry for it? But let us see how this passage is rendered in the Inspired Translation: "And it repented Noah, and his heart was pained, that the Lord made man on the earth, and it grieved him at the heart. . . . For it repenteth Noah that I have created them."—Genesis 8:13-15.

This last quotation certainly looks better than the first one, especially when we consider that in the King James Bible it says God does not repent. (Numbers 23:19.) Thus the contradiction found in the King James Bible relative to God repenting does not appear in the Inspired Translation, hence a great stumbling-block to infidels and Bible critics is removed. Nothing bad about that!

Exodus 4:21 in the King James Bible: "And the Lord said unto Moses, When thou goest to return into Egypt see that thou do all those wonders before Pharaoh, which I have put in thine hand: but I will harden his heart, that he shall not let the people go." The idea of the Lord hardening the hearts of men is preposterous, or at least very unreasonable. In other places the Bible speaks against people being hard-hearted and stiffnecked. In a number of places in the King James Bible it says the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart, while in a number of other places in the same book it says Pharaoh hardened his heart, thus making a contradiction. Surely an all-wise God would not contradict himself. The reader may say, I prefer to believe in a God who contradicts himself rather than to believe that Joseph Smith translated the Bible by inspiration. But let us see how this scripture reads in the Inspired Translation. "And the Lord said unto Moses, When thou goest to return into Egypt, see that thou do all those wonders before Pharaoh, that I have put in thine hand, and I will prosper thee; but Pharaoh will harden his heart, and he will not let the people go." How reasonable this is! Evidently Pharaoh was a covetous man wanting to be enriched by the large sums of money coming to him from his Israelitish servants. When a miracle was done by Moses such as turning the water into blood, Pharaoh would humble himself, but when the plague was removed and his thirst was again quenched by fresh pure water he doubtless thought, Well, it just happened so, there will be no more plagues, and I rather like the prestige and wealth I am gaining from these Israelites, then he hardened his heart and would not let the people go.

Again in the King James Bible it says: "And he said, Thou canst not see my face: for there shall no man see me, and live."—Exodus 33:20. In the Inspired Translation it says: "And he said unto Moses, Thou canst not see my face at this time, lest mine anger is kindled against thee also, and I destroy thee, and thy people; for there shall no man among them see me at this time, and live, for they are exceeding sinful. And no sinful man hath at any time, neither shall there be any sinful man at any time, that shall see my face and live."

The reader might object and say that this passage was not given to Joseph Smith by inspiration because the Bible says that no man hath seen God at any time. Truly it does in one place, but in another it says: "And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel: for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved."—Genesis 32:30.

In Deuteronomy 14:21, King James Bible, it says: "Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself: thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien: for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God." Think of it, you who object to the translation made by Joseph Smith, which we Latter Day Saints believe to be inspired, how would you like to have some one sell you a cow, or an ox, or a sheep, or a hog, that died of itself, either from lack of food or from disease?

In the Inspired Translation it reads thus: "Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt not give unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest not sell it unto an alien; for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God." The little word, not having been left out in the King James and inserted in the Inspired Translation makes quite a difference.

As we proceed with this investigation the evidence of the necessity of an Inspired Translation continues to accumulate. In 1 Samuel 16: 15, King James Bible, we read: "And Saul's servants said unto him, Behold now, an evil spirit from God troubleth thee," and in the Inspired Translation it reads: "And Saul's servants said unto him, Behold now, an evil spirit which is not of God troubleth thee." Evidently evil spirits are not of God. This fact is quite apparent, hence the Inspired Translation is right again.

Another quotation or two from the Old Testament will be sufficient to establish our purpose in this investigation before passing to the New Testament. We shall now see if the Inspired Translation teaches polygamy. In the King James it reads: "And if thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as thy father David did walk, then I will lengthen thy days."—1 Kings 3: 14. From this quotation it seems that if Solomon would only act as did David, his father, he would be blessed of the Lord. But let us examine some of the acts of David. Upon examination we find that he had a man put in the front of the battle that he might get killed so that he could get his wife. (2 Samuel 11: 15.) Surely the Lord would not approve of such acts by a king of Israel. The Inspired Translation reads: "And if thou wilt walk in my ways to keep my statutes, and my commandments, then I will lengthen thy days, and thou shalt not walk in unrighteousness, as did thy father David." No polygamy sanctioned there, but on the contrary the unrighteousness of David is condemned. Some people, however, prefer to believe in polygamy rather than accept the Inspired Translation.

In Ezekiel 14: 9, King James, it reads: "And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet, and I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel." Think of it: the Lord deceives the prophet and then destroys him because he is deceived. Reader, who would be responsible for the murder in such a case? The Inspired Translation reads as follows: "And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have not deceived that prophet: therefore I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel."

By an appeal to reason we must acknowledge that the latter translation is the better one.

I shall now give a few quotations from the New Testament, remember that with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged. In Matthew 4: 1, King James Version, we read: "Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil." In the Revised Version it reads the same way. It hardly looks reasonable to suppose that the Spirit of the Lord would lead Christ into the wilderness on purpose to have him tempted of the Devil. The Spirit of the Lord will lead those who will follow or be led by it away from temptation rather than into it. The Inspired Translation reads as follows: "Then Jesus was led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be with God." The former translation says Christ was led into the wilderness to be tempted by the Devil, but the last that he was led into the wilderness to be with God.

By further reading we learn that the Savior was in the wilderness for forty days during which time he fasted. The Savior had just been baptized by John and was fasting for forty days preparatory to his great work which he had been sent from God to perform. In preparing for this great work, it certainly looks reasonable that our Savior would need assistance from the Lord rather than the Devil. The Inspired Translation reads: "And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, and had communed with God, he was afterwards an hungered, and was left to be tempted of the devil." After thus communing with God, our Savior was in a proper condition to resist temptation, hence when Satan did tempt him he at once replied: "Get thee hence, Satan."

In Matthew 6: 13, King James, it reads: "And lead us not into temptation." The Inspired Version says: "And suffer us not to be led into temptation." Quite a contrast in the two statements. In another place we are informed in the King James Bible that the Lord tempteth no man. This being true then it would hardly be necessary to ask God to not do a thing that his word plainly discloses he will not do.

In Matthew 7: 23, King James Version, it reads: "And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Matthew 8: 11, 12, King James, says: "Many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven: but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." It really looks as though one would feel better never to enter the kingdom with the old patriarchs, Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, than to once enter and be cast out into outer darkness. These passages as quoted in the Inspired Translation are as follows: "Many shall come from the east, and the west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the wicked one shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Mark 1: 5, King James, reads: "And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins." It hardly seems credible that all would have been baptized; when the Bible says in another place that the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves not being baptized of him. Inspired Translation reads: "All the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and many were baptized in the river Jordan, confessing their sins."

In Luke 17:21, King James Bible, we read: "Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." By reading the chapter through we discover that Christ was addressing the wicked Pharisees. After a careful investigation one would naturally come to the conclusion that the kingdom of God was not set up in the hearts of the wicked Pharisees, who devoured widows' houses and for a pretense made long prayers and were denounced as hypocrites. (Matthew 23: 14.) In the Inspired Translation, this reads as follows: "Neither shall they say, Lo, here! or, Lo, there! For, behold, the kingdom of God is already come unto you." Many other references might be given but we deem the foregoing sufficient to excite within the reader a desire to investigate the matter thoroughly.

TWENTY CENTURIES EARLIER THAN THE INCAS.

The expedition conducted by Doctor Max Uhle for the purpose of exploring the prehistoric remains of Peru has returned to California, bringing several loads of interesting spoils from the palaces and tombs of the land of the Incas. By far the most valuable of these are the proofs, incontestable, of a highly evolved civilization antedating by at least two thousand years any hitherto discovered traces of social development in that part of the world.

Civilization of the Incas sinks into comparative insignificance in the face of these finds, and there are distinct traces of layer after layer of superimposed civilizations, some of which are actually degenerate when compared with others which have produced them.

Doctor Uhle, who is one of the best known of modern archæologists, and a distinguished scholar of the universities of Leipsic and Goettingen, was kind enough to explain some of the most striking results of his two years of labor in the interior of Peru.

"Our investigations," he said, "have brought us to a place in the history of the inhabitants of the country at least two thousand years anterior to the time of the Incas, who were the dominant civilization at the time of the Spanish conquest, when Peru was opened up to the modern world.

"One of our most interesting finds was a palace in the valley of Pisco, which was the best preserved very ancient ruin which we discovered. It was really a settlement with a great central square or patio and all around this open space were palaces of large size which bespoke a high degree of civilization and comfort for their inhabitants.

"The roofs of these palaces were missing, but the colors with which the walls were adorned were perfectly fresh and bright and the designs easily distinguishable. These people had good taste, as is clear from the fittings of their abode, and they were fond of nature, for their terraces are made for overlooking the surrounding country, and are fitted with fine balustrades.

"Class distinctions were evidently strong among them and the upper classes were separated from the common people, as is seen from the fact that the chiefs possessed the exclusive right to wear gold and silver ornaments, which becomes very evident from an examination of the graves.

"Above the valley of Pisco stands a great palace of the Sun. It is a building made of blocks of stone so cut that they fit closely one into the other, thus leaving no place for the proverbial knife to pass. The interstices were filled probably with clay, which having dried out has left the stones standing, and it is clear that the spaces between the larger stones were very exactly filled with smaller ones.

"I brought back about one thousand dollars' worth of gold in gold ornaments which were found for the most part in graves at a depth of five or six meters.

"In connection with this work, considerable excavation was necessary, and I kept a force of twelve or fifteen men constantly employed. These excavations were carried on with the approval of the Peruvian Government, which gave us full permission to excavate on Government lands and took a kindly interest in our work.

"Our excavation of the tombs of the Chincha chiefs produced fine results, as we obtained splendid ornaments of gold, silver, and copper, some of these being most delicately inlaid with turquoise. The shapes of these ornaments were very like those made by the Indians and were evidently the work of an indigenous people."

Doctor Uhle showed many silver vessels obtained from tombs, large round silver dishes closely resembling in shape some modern kitchen tinware. All of these belonged to a period antedating that of the Incas, which may be said to have begun at about the year 1100 of our era.

"This," said Doctor Uhle, showing a piece of tapestry, "belongs to one of the earliest periods.

The material was a sort of very fine wool, probably the wool of the llama, and the design on it was in blue, red and yellow. It represented a man and a condor, and in spite of the queerness of the work was in a certain sense spirited and so far artistic.

"That piece of work is at least nearly three thousand years old, and it has lain in the open air—it is impossible to say for how long—exposed to the rain and the sun; and, as you can see, the colors are just as fresh and clear as they ever were."

And surely enough the bright tints of the design gleamed out in brilliant contrast with the brown skulls and disorderly debris of tombs with which the great table was littered and in the classification of which the explorer is at present busy.

Scepters, evidently the mark of dignity, were found in large numbers, sticks with a projection at the top covered generally with gold beaten fine, or occasionally with silver. These held together by reason of the metal covering, for the wood inside was rotten with age and crumbled into fine dust at a touch. Great oars most elaborately carved evidently served also as scepters, probably to be carried before the chiefs in procession.

One very curious object found in many of the graves is a sort of cylinder of copper, so fluted as to be capable of being broken off in pieces of smaller value, the resemblance of which to the Chinese custom of subdividing copper was pointed out by Doctor Uhle. These copper cylinders were found in the mouths of the buried to pay their way over the stream, and are evidences of similarity of human ideas at certain stages of development.

A very curious find was a kind of chisel made of copper, the top of which was ornamented with the design of a man crucified on three posts; on the reverse side was the representation of the portions of the hands and feet still fastened to the posts, and a flock of birds hovering over the remains of the feast.

Doctor Uhle said: "We have at last managed to fix the Incasic period. We know what to assign to that epoch and it now remains to classify the periods anterior to that. This is all the more difficult as each period carries over something into a succeeding one and modifies or adapts it. So that it requires much experience to determine just what is due to the earlier epoch."

Specimens of stone work which cover at least four periods of Incasic civilization have been unearthed. At Huamachuco there was a small pillar-like stone from Urpi with two rude faces upon it, which is undoubtedly of very great antiquity. At Ueros there was a stone head found with carved features, which is supposed to be of the Incasic period. At Baran-chique Doctor Uhle obtained two sculptured stone heads which he believes to have been made at least a thousand years ago.

The valley of Chincha was the chief field of Doctor

Uhle's explorations, far in the interior of Peru, where things have been little disturbed and the remains of the older civilization are to be found not very far from the surface. His main object was the discovery of material illustrative of the period of the Incas and the older culture which formerly flourished, and upon whose ruins the Incasic rule was founded.

He disembarked at Trujillo, a seaport about five hundred miles north of Lima, and started for the western slope of the Cordillera of the Andes, where it has been known for many years that an ancient civilization had its seat. Here there is a high plateau which gives an uninterrupted view of the country for from fifteen to twenty leagues, thus rendering a surprise by a hostile force impossible, so that there was reason enough for the choice of this location by the aboriginal people.

Here fortresses were placed, separate structures, each surrounded by high thick walls and dominated by one main building which still retains its name in the title applied by the Indians to the spot, "El Castillo," the stones, the peculiar masonry of which has been already mentioned, being obtained from the neighboring hills. There are square and round buildings found here, the latter with very few entrances and so arranged as to render a surprise by a hostile force practically impossible.

Many tombs were discovered, some of the most remarkable being in the walls of houses which on the outside gave no sign of what was concealed within them. No clew is afforded as to whether the interments were made before or after the building of the walls. There were from two to eight bodies found buried in each of such receptacles.

Three wells were found in this region, and after draining one of these and sifting the mud a quantity of blue, green, and black stone beads and other ornaments, some of stone and some of shell were unearthed. It is a curious fact that the shell of which these ornaments are composed is found only in the tropic seas, between Panama and the island of La Plata.

The period represented by these finds is most probably that immediately antedating the Inca period, as few remains which can be called Incasic are discovered hereabouts. But one stone relic representing the head of a wild beast with feet, head, tusks, and eyes, is believed by Doctor Uhle to be a survival of a very ancient Peruvian civilization.

The old town of Vivacochapampa belongs to a different period still, for it is situated on the plain instead of on the slopes of the hills, and though constructed of the same kind of broken stone, as in the other case, bears traces of having been the conception of one mind, for it is laid out in an orderly manner in squares, separated by an eighteen-foot road, which is still in use, and the quarries from which the stone was dug are still plain to be seen.

A great room is full of the trophies which Doctor Uhle has brought back from Peru. Though but comparatively few of the objects are so rare and distinctive as to render them of surpassing interest to others than the specialist antiquarian, who gets the most delight out of what appear to laymen to be the most insignificant objects, the collection is a mass of strange and grotesque relics with that touch of pathos which always attaches to such things.

There are great earthenware jars in which mummies were placed to keep the damp of the ground from them, and skulls innumerable. Doctor Uhle took a mummified head from its covering. The owner of it must have been a great swell in his day. His skull was covered with a beautifully woven cap of black and white straw, the rim of which was a band of silver. From the straw depended drooping plumes of the most gorgeous feathers, which still kept their color unfaded.

The expedition, which was sent out by Mrs. Phebe Hearst, will enrich the State University with thousands of such specimens, simply invaluable material for the students.—Austin Lewis in San Francisco Sunday Examiner Magazine, May 3, 1903.

Beloved—A Secret.

You and I, darling, just you and I!
Never weary of each other, under any sky;
You and I, beloved, only, and we're never dull or lonely,
As we talk, or we are silent, and the day goes drifting by.

THE CARE OF THE FIRST THREE YEARS OF A CHILD'S LIFE.

Some truth-teller has said that "it matters little what kind of an old stick the father is, if children are only blessed with a good mother." It is not my purpose to apologize for man's delinquencies, or offer any plea this afternoon in behalf of my own sex. Could I voice your thought toward him who is the father of your children, I am sure it would be, "With all his faults I love him still." Nor do I believe you would wish to deny him his inherited right to drive the domestic team, if he is careful to hold the reins well back from the dash-board called officiousness, and yields to hands smaller than his own in some peculiar crises. The keener intuition of woman, her ability to reach conclusions by wireless telegraphy while he is slowly progressing in his usual process of seeking cause and effect, her insistent "because" wiping out all his nicely adjusted philosophies and demonstrations not only encourage a wise man to yield to her, but certainly helps our human judgment to appreciate the wisdom of the Almighty in giving into her keeping the more delicate and important tasks involved in the evolution and development of the human race: namely, the chief care of the boy and girl during the period of their lives when right influences from without are most potent for their future good. The child from three to ten years of age—the receptive period of life, the time when the unselfish devotion of a true home-keeping mother counts for the greatest. Do you expect Johnnie will come direct from school to his home before going off to play? He will always do so, if mother's smile is there for him, and her sympathetic ear open to listen to his childish fancies. These confidences make a golden thread in the young life, and make it easier to talk over with mother bye and bye, when subtle influences and temptations might hide the high ideals which unconsciously the boy has adopted more and more as his own.

Should we look back of the life of every good and great man we are sure to find the helpful genius of his own or some foster-mother who has pointed out the "best gifts" to him and helped him to enter into his larger possessions. What has been said of the boy will apply with equal force to his sister. Mother will always be the coordinating center for all the children in her home. Her rule is love. It may be years before she is appreciated. It may require children of their own to ripen a sympathetic recognition of her self-sacrificing virtues, but such recognition is sure to come, and in greater measure as the years go by.

The question of government is one which, perhaps, may best be left with you mothers, with some ethical suggestions from our ministerial brethren who may have the honor of addressing your body in the future, yet I can not forbear a word or two in passing. . . . I shall not attempt to win any mother to a belief in corporal punishment, or unsettle her faith in its efficacy, if such be her mind. I would suggest, however, that father and mother shall always be a unit in the presence of the children, whatever course one of them may take which seems a mistake to the other. All criticism shall be withheld till it is a convenient season, with the children absent. . . . Punishment of some kind must be applied. Love will prompt that for the good of the children; just what form of punishment remains for each to determine, but the punishment must be of that quality and quantity to correct the evil and prevent its repetition. We should remember all the while that we are dealing with partially developed minds, and we must call into exercise all our patience and love.

If the child is selfish let us magnify the beauty of generosity and develop an appreciation of it. If vain, hold up humility; if cruel, teach mercy; so that we may overcome evil with good, and help the balancing of the worst by developing the best. The later juvenile writers are doing much to reach the child mind. "Black Beauty" and the writings of Ernest Thompson Seton have saved many an animal and bird from torture by changing the undeveloped boy from a thoughtful yet cruel enemy into a devoted friend and ally, and all this because his love has been developed and overcome his cruelty.

The object of all training is to teach self control. The mind readily adopts certain attitudes, and as the face is covered with muscles which are played upon by the thoughts and emotions, we can readily see why the face becomes an index of the mind, and differentiates one from another in youth as well as later life.

The right influences of home life will overbalance the casual act or word into which the child may run on the outer circles of its life. There is no smudge of public or private school which will not be erased if the mother has the confidence of the child, listening at the shrine of the home confessional and meeting the same with a wisely discriminating mind. Watchful, without being distrustful, encouraging the child to lay every new experience on this home altar, there will be synonymously glad hearts and cheerful faces.

Once was the time and not far in the distance either, when education was regarded as "acquisition of knowledge," and this much to be desired commodity was dished out to young minds without regard to whether the capacity to receive it was a bushel or pint measure. The more sensible idea that all true education is a development of the germ, latent within, is fast supplanting it. There is danger that the pendulum will swing too far, and the memory be neglected. The child before ten years of age will acquire an accurate speaking knowledge of several languages, a feat which can not be so well done at any later period of its life, and this time must not be lost for gaining the best from the Bible as well as some of the profane writers.

We have too many predigested mental foods for the minds of our children. When I see such or such a book is specially adapted to children's minds I am suspicious that there will not be enough juice left to give a proper flavor. To strengthen the child's mind we need to give it something difficult enough, not only to stimulate, but to leave sharpened faculties for that which comes next, meanwhile furnishing material which may be specially adapted to develop his peculiar talents.

To attain the highest all-round development we must remember that it is sound minds in sound bodies. A mother once came to Daniel Webster with the question concerning her son, "What must I do, Mr. Webster to make him a great man?" "Make him a great animal," said the famous statesman. Mr. Webster's reply holds good for all time. What to eat and what to drink is not a narrow or unimportant matter when related to infancy and childhood. If a child's education begins with its grandmother so also the physical tendencies and idiosyncrasies will find their roots in preceding generations. Indiscretions in diet, whether through indulgence or ignorance, will have their trail of invalidism upon offspring and their children. But the builder is not concerned whether his finished work will be perpendicular; his care is that the daily use of square and plummet shall be faithful from foundation stone to the last stick in the superstructure. I turn to the less interesting but ever important topic of feeding. The preparation of the child's food should never be left to careless servants, who are anxious to get through their tasks as soon as possible, and will regard the preparation of a special meal as something of a bore and neglect their instructions. I feel compelled to go into this subject somewhat at length, although I run the risk of being somewhat tiresome. If I were to name one principle to guide us in diet through the years up to puberty, yes, and through adolescence, it would be "all for nourishment, nothing for stimulation." It should be remembered in this connection that tea and coffee contain theine and caffeine, powerful heart stimulants, hence tea and coffee should be rigidly excluded from the diet of childhood and youth.

Milk is an ideal food—nourishment from the mother from birth till the child has its first ten teeth, adding after the sixth month some preparation of gruel and also some of the meat broths. Fruit can be given after a year old. When the child has reached eighteen months there should be at least five feedings a day, and ten or twelve ounces of milk and gruel at a feeding, perhaps half that quantity at the noon meal, and in place [of the other half] the addition of beef juice, scraped beef or dried bread with egg. Water can best be given between the feedings. Now this should be the diet, only increasing the amounts, up to three years of age, at which time we may expect a child with normal digestion, and we may consider a digestion normal when its possessor, child or adult, does not know that he has a digestion.

Cream in the milk should be depended upon from the beginning to correct constipation. It will do it in almost all cases. I can not urge too strongly the necessity of taking early care of constipation in children, it is so liable to lead to injurious habits for which the child may be entirely irresponsible, although the results are just as disastrous.

After three years, children should eat beefsteak, roast beef, mutton, or lamb. They should not eat any fried meats, bacon, ham, corned beef, liver, dried beef, pork, sausage, duck, goose, or wild game. They can also have baked potatoes, stewed celery, peas, spinach, and asparagus. On the prohibited list I should put raw celery, green corn, lettuce, and radishes. Soft boiled eggs two or three times a week is a valuable proteid. Meat broths in all variety. Oat meal, nearly all the wheat preparations, rice, and hominy; the important thing about cereals is that all shall be well cooked.

Again we best deny the children all hot bread or rolls, griddle cakes and cake containing dried fruit, pastry, nuts, preserves and sirups. Bread which is over twenty-four hours old is best; also oat meal and graham crackers, custard and plain rice puddings; ice-cream in limited quantities is always allowable. When it comes to berries we best proceed cautiously. Under five years no child should eat them; after that feed them carefully; never forget that too many berries may cause fatally acute indigestion; neither should they have canned fruits or over-ripe fresh fruits. Bananas are too heavy. Apples, oranges, and peaches, baked apples and stewed prunes, make a liberal and sufficient list to draw from.

Four meals a day from the third to the tenth year will be better than three. Very few adults know, except theoretically, how valuable thorough mastication of the food is to the proper digestion of every meal. It requires from a pint to a quart of saliva to properly take care of the same amount in weight of food, and the only way to get out that quantity of saliva is to keep on chewing without any liquid being taken to soften the bolus of food. The digestion of starch begins in the mouth, and a dry crust properly chewed begins to taste sweet because it is turning into sugar under the action of the ptyalin in the saliva. The child must be taught to take time to masticate its food. His eagerness to finish and get out to play early leads to the bolting habit with resulting indigestion. This whole matter of diet may seem to some after all not of such great consequence. But what a laboratory we have here in the digestive tract. All is usually well if the action begins right. The chemical processes, however, are continually turning out substances which nourish the body or act as poisons upon it. It requires no extended argument to convince that not only good material must go into the bridge which is to span the river, or the massive structure which will tower into the heavens, but that it must go in correctly. Good food, correctly prepared and properly eaten will turn out vigorous, healthy men and women. The suggestions in diet which I have made refer to the child in health. When we come to feeding during illness there must be modification, very little or no solid food given, and much water, especially in all the febrile diseases of childhood. When nervous symptoms develop and the child exhibits spasm, the most the mother or nurse can do is to place the child in very warm water, as quickly as possible, and send for the doctor, and he best direct the feeding from the very first of illness. The question of feeding is far more important than the use of drugs in most cases. I believe we have too much medicine anyway, and the less we have of it the better for our children. No drug should be given except it be for a specific purpose, and as soon as that has been accomplished a continuation of the medicine is an injury.

The physiologist has emphasized the importance of alternating exercise and rest, hence play with a freedom to stop or go gives the child its most natural and healthful interchange of these needful factors. It is better that this exercise be taken in the open air, where plenty of oxygen, sunshine, and trivial but painful injuries make up a day's successful progress. When the child is crying lustily from the loss of a little epidermis remember the gain to his vital capacity in increased lung power far outbalances the loss from this break in continuity in his external covering.

Finally, give the children time to grow. They need some opportunity to be alone, and while we need to keep a watchful care over them always, it best appear to them that we are unmindful much of the time. We crowd our thoughts upon them; the school keeps up the same course and it is a wonder this hot-house forcing process does not completely quench all tender growth of originality in their minds. If you have a son it is your privilege to make a manly man of him. If he comes home with evidences of recent battle about him, torn clothes and a bloody face, don't censure him for fighting. First ascertain what it was all about. If he has acted the coward's part let him feel that you are ashamed of him. If, on the other hand, he has resented injustice, has righted some wrong by this only court of appeal known to boys, be sure that what you say strengthens his manliness, so that in after years he will not hesitate to wield other weapons in defense of right. Let your sons wait on you, mothers, in boyhood if you will have a kind and thoughtful son in after years, and furnish the right kind of a man to make some wife happy in the years to come.—Edward F. McIntosh in Mothers Journal.

A Class Outing.

All here? Yes, eight, and every one in the happiest of spirits. It is to be a class outing. The place to be visited has received much discussion. A teacher may wish to make the occasion instructive as well as agreeable. There are two localities within a few miles of my home that are great magnets. One is a humble hill with a lofty granite monument on its back. That is Bunker Hill. Another is a village common, at one end of which towers a minuteman, his gun in his hand. This is the famous battle-ground of Lexington. There is a third place that, on a hot day, sends in a cool breath as an invitation to land-toilers, and that is the Atlantic Ocean. Nothing historical about Revere Beach. None of the characteristics which could be called exciting. Everything quiet save the drum-beat of the surf. When young people go off to one of these attractions, what is the result? There is a ride that breaks up all stiffness and furnishes a diversion for those who take the ride. After the ride, comes a joyous, happy mingling of the company on seashore or in field or park. By the time the picnic is over, has not the acquaintance of the picnickers been advanced? That is just what is needed in class-organization—acquaintance with one another, classmates that have become friends. They might go to school and sit side by side through the year as scholars and there still be separating spaces between them, but one day of hearty enjoyment, of innocent mirth, or boyish, girlish glee, will convert the half-acquainted, shy, stiff classmates into happy, loving old friends. Such class development is what we need in Sunday-school work, but may get little of. We can make the class unit a strong one by such a healthy process of treatment. . . .

Acquaintance will come from lunching together, from a joint meeting of any mishap like the losing of the lunch, from the exultant ride together in the morning and the subdued return home of the tired picnickers. They all understand one another now, and the big Sunday-school has this benefit of the big outing. It is on the basis of such reasoning that I plead also for the smaller, the class, outing. It will help the class, develop it as an institution. It will be appreciated among the young people when class outings are known to be a custom in a school.

They will help make a full class—and what a blessing to a Sunday-school is a full class! They are soon noticed and marked and appreciated.—Edward A. Rand, in New Century Teacher's Monthly.

What to do with the Disorderly Scholar.

If the teacher has disorderly scholars in his class, the lesson is constantly perched on an active volcano. At any moment there may be an explosion, and the lesson will be torn to fragments or buried in débris. There is no assurance of either pleasure or profit in a class that is subject to disorder. Yes, and if there is disorder in your class, there is not much hope for the class next to you. If order is heaven's first law (as it is), it is certainly the first law of that heavenly thing, the Sunday-school.

Disorder is always a result, for which, somewhere, there is a cause. Don't doctor symptoms. Discover what is at the and remedy that.

The disorder may be due only to the overflowing vitality of the boys and girls. In that case, take a leaf from the secular schools and try a bit of calisthenics just before the lesson is taught.

It may be due to bad air. Open the windows.

It may all spring from some mischievous scholar. Quell him or expel him.

It may be due (more than likely—saving your presence—it is due) to unskillful teaching. Then learn your trade.

Certainly, with almost no exceptions, is an orderly one. Much depends upon the way you start out, and no part of the lesson deserves such careful planning as the first three sentences. If you begin in a hesitant, apologetic, faint-hearted way, you have thrown up your case at the outset. If you begin with some surprising statement, or some brisk question, or with the holding up of some object or picture, you will hook the most lively attention before it has time to wiggle out of the way.

AN INTERESTED CLASS

Much depends also on

HOW YOU CONTINUE,

after you have thus started out. Keep things moving. Moving objects hold the eye, and a lesson that progresses swiftly (if not too swiftly) holds the mind. By careful preparation come to be at home in the lesson, so that you can range through it with easy freedom. Get a goal, and leap toward it. Your class will run eagerly alongside.

Much depends also upon

THE EXPRESSION OF YOUR FACE.

A bright, quick eye, a mouth all ready to smile, a face mobile to every changing thought, and responsive to every thought of the scholars, will attract and hold your class. A putty face, heavy and listless, will put them to sleep—or to mischief.

And much depends upon

whether it is rasping or flabby, or, perchance, is loving, cheery, and vibrant. On the whole, the right kind of voice is the teacher's most important exterior assistant. Some teachers can do more with a restless class by the one word "Now" (and any other word will do) than many teachers by a half hour's exhortation.

Whatever qualities the teacher may possess, however, she must count as her best ally in the preservation of order the scholars' own hands.

PROVIDE SOME WORK FOR THEM.

Hand-work affords usually the best avenue for instruction, as well as the best remedy for disorder.

This hand-work will vary, of course, with the lesson. Sometimes it will be the copying of an outline map or the drawing of a map from memory. Sometimes it will be a diagram that is copied, or a tabular outline of the lesson. Sometimes the teacher will read slowly a list of questions that call for very brief answers, and the class will be busied writing the answers. Sometimes, if the scholars are old enough, they may be set to copying some outline picture of a simple object, such as an Oriental lamp. Sometimes they may be persuaded to write paraphrases of the lesson text, or statements of the lesson teachings. One exercise of this kind, calling for hand-work, I would introduce into every lesson, planning for it long ahead. It will prove a sovereign remedy for disorder.

Sometimes it will be necessary to

with some particularly irrepressible scholar. You must get into helpful and close relations with him. Go to his house. Invite him to tea at your house. Try raspberry jam as a lubricant. Never threaten him without carrying out your threat, better never threaten him at all. Scolding disorder is like spreading mustard on a burn. Devise some occupation for the restless one. Many a shrewd teacher has taken the worst boy in his class and made him class sergeant to keep order; and he has kept it. Such a scholar, too, is just the one to take up the class collection, keep the class records, clean the blackboard (if you luckily—or enterprisingly—have one), and aid the teacher in drawing maps and making diagrams for her teaching operations.

Rarely, and yet sometimes, the teacher will find it wise to in subduing the disorderly scholar. If the other scholars can be trusted, quietly appeal to them to help maintain order and not to join in any pranks that may be started. If the superintendent is a wise man, call in his aid. Perhaps a few sentences from him, with the boy apart, will end the whole struggle. If the parents are wise (that is, if they really look at their child with seeing eyes), tell them frankly about his misdemeanors, and secretly conspire with them to make him what he should be.

For classes that are old enough to carry out the plan, try throwing upon them the responsibility of

SELF-GOVERNMENT.

A class organization—constitution, president, committees, and all the rest—has a beautifully steadying influence. A committee on order, nominated and elected by the scholars themselves, will by that very process be rendered almost unnecessary. This plan is in harmony with the self-governing methods that have been found so useful in various secular schools.

Finally, but most important of all, try to cultivate in your class a spirit of and holy themes. I know of no better way of doing this than by a brief prayer just before the lesson, all heads being bowed while the teacher asks the divine blessing upon the class and upon the truths that are to be studied. Nor would it be at all out of place for the teacher to pause, even in the middle of the lesson, at some solemn and impressive point, and ask the class to bow their heads in silent prayer, asking God to impress the truth upon their minds and help them to carry it out in their lives. If the tone of the class is such that this moment of prayer would come naturally and easily, there need be no fear of disorder.

ATTLEBORO, Massachusetts, July 18.

Dear Herald: We are doing fairly well in Attleboro. We are being blessed by our heavenly Father both temporally and spiritually. Of course, that is not saying we have not had our trials. We have had sickness amongst us and business is not very bright. All these things tend to ruffle us a little. I am glad we can get lots of comfort in thinking of the promise the Master left us on record, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you," and David when he was an old man said: "Yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." We are told by James that if we call for the elders and they anoint our heads and pray over us we shall recover and we are told plainer in the later revelation that if we die we die unto Him. With such comforting thoughts as these we ought to be thankful and cheerful at all times.

The new publication, Marvelous Manifestations, ought to be read by every Latter Day Saint. It will give them something to encourage them through the trials of this life. I think more testimonies ought to be published as they help the Saints to have more faith. It also does our hearts good to read the sacrifices of Sr. Thorburn and Sr. Burton in July Autumn Leaves. Such sacrifices must be pleasing to our heavenly Father. Let us have more of these articles. They show us younger Saints what we may accomplish if we try and sacrifice a little.

I agree with Bro. Bond, it does seem that Reverend Dowie and his management of the building up his "Zion" seems to be "wiser than the children of light" in building up God's Zion, but we must bear in mind the opposition we have and always will have. God's people have always worked under these difficulties. Yet I think we can do a great deal better than we are doing, and we will have to do it if we gain the reward. Our Father has said that he would have a tried people and it is our duty to meet every trial, calmly, but firmly trusting in Him who has said that he would give us grace sufficient for our day.

In Bro. Wilson's letter in HERALD of July 8, I was pleased to read of his trial and success of the raw diet. Again the children of this world seem to be wiser than the children of light, for nearly all the periodicals of the day have articles telling us to abstain from meats and tea and coffee and our physicians are telling their patients to let them alone, yet some of us can not see the wisdom the Lord had in the thirties when he told us what was good to eat and drink. How many are there of us that will be wise and take his advice? I have been weak of body for about four years and I have continually grown stronger without the aid of any stimulant. When I used meat, tea, coffee, and other stimulants, I was sick, then I opened my eyes, or the Lord did, and left them alone and since then I have gradually gained in strength. I have not tried the raw diet as our brother advocates.

Bishop Bullard, the president of our district, has been to this place quite often of late and has given us the spiritual food we needed. On Friday, May 22, he baptized four of our Sunday-school scholars. Our missionary in charge, Bro. Sheehy, and Bro. Bullard, were at our business-meeting and both gave us some good and encouraging words to keep on in the good work we have started.

We were a little disappointed about our district tent as those in authority thought it wise to send it to other places this year. But we got a sermon by Bro. Farrel when he came for the tent which pleased us very much. We would like to have heard Bro. Phillips. By all accounts we have two good men with the tent this year again, and our prayers are that God will bless them in their efforts.

We went to several to borrow the money for our new church, they examined the plans and specifications and said we would be able to borrow the money all right, but when they found out that it was the Latter Day Saint Church they did not want to lend it on church property, it was not good security. We are not discouraged as we feel it is only a little opposition which I believe will vanish like the dew before the morning sun, when our heavenly Father gets ready, as we are sure he notices his children in this place and we take this little opposition as a matter of course. We think the time is near at hand when we will be able to start our church. District President Bullard and Bro. Sheehy, missionary in charge, have been here and looked our land over and they will do their best, we are sure, to help us. I think we have done well. Two years ago this month we paid the first ten dollars on the lot. Now it is paid for, cellar put in, town water and other improvements, and nearly one hundred dollars on hand. We are confident we can do better the next two years, so we have nothing to be discouraged for. We desire the prayers of the Saints that we may keep faithful to the work and be in unity and then we are sure of success and the honest in heart will be gathered in. I remain with you for the gospel.

JOHN SIDDALL.

WEST JORDAN, Utah, July 20.

Editors Herald: Yesterday was a very busy day with my family. We drove to the city, twelve miles, in time for Sunday-school, where wife and I each taught a class. Then we occupied the pulpit to a small audience at eleven o'clock. Then at seven o'clock in the evening we were at our old stand on Second Street near Main, where we spoke to a good-sized and very attentive crowd. There were probably two hundred fifty or three hundred who listened to us. We took up the contention of our Utah friends that Joseph Smith was a polygamist and tried to show the folly of determining the right or wrong of the matter that way and then proceeded to examine some of their star witnesses in the case and from the nods of approval there were many in our audience who agreed with us in our conclusions. After our effort there we went to the chapel where we again spoke to Saints and friends. This time to a nice-sized audience. There is one thing in this street work that presages good for our cause in the city of Salt Lake and that is that even though we are absent for a week in other cities still when we return to fill our appointment Sunday evenings the same faces that have met us during the most of our series of sixteen nights in the city, before we moved out to give them a rest and to preach elsewhere, are there to greet us and listen to our plea for right and righteousness. Well, we closed a week of very successful meetings in Murray and commenced under favorable circumstances and to a good-sized audience at Sandy. One man in Murray said: "If that kind of preaching will not do the people good we don't know what would." We are rejoicing in the gospel and trying to do our part in this field to call wandering Israel back to her allegiance to God and the promised inheritance, and like the Psalmist of old we "pray for peace of Jerusalem."

Yours for the triumph of truth,

A. M. CHASE.

SIoux CITY, Iowa, July 20.

Editors Herald: As I think and see how good our Father has been to us and all mankind, my feelings go out in thankfulness to him and I only wish I had more power to help this part of the busy world see his goodness. But I never see my nothingness as I do here, and I often ask myself, What am I in a city like this and how can one so weak do anything that will be of any value to this great latter-day work? But by the help of God and the prayers of the Saints I will try to do my best, leaving the results in the care of Him who is able to care for all.

I see nothing so far in my new field to discourage, only my own weakness. The work seems to be taking on new life here in a good many ways; our meetings are well attended as a rule, all things considered. But we are not getting crowds of hundreds nor thousands to preach to, but are doing well with what seems to be a growing interest. The Sunday-school and Religio are doing finely, and preaching meetings are interesting, from the attention and attendance.

We are soon to move our place of meeting to the court-house. Think this will be better. After laboring as a missionary for only three years then to be placed in a city of this size, and the first missionary located here by our church, of course, and of necessity, too, I am getting new experiences. I trust they may be helpful to myself and to the cause we love so well. It is always encouraging to the minister when he can see a growing interest, and realize he is having the support of the majority of his congregation and know that the most of the Saints are trying to do the best they can under the conditions they are placed. This is about as I see things here, and it is truly a help to me.

On the other hand we see the many things to attract and lead the mind away from the things of God, and see the sacrifice some are making and how little it is appreciated by others, then the picture does not look so bright. I believe I am learning not to think too much of the little sacrifices we adults are making. But when I see even the children and young people of this church being called upon and compelled to make sacrifices beyond their understanding with the thought in my mind of the possibility of driving them from the church, I am made to shed tears, even if I am considered to be hard-hearted. I can not help it when I think of those precious lambs and their dear souls, and then the query comes, What can a missionary do to prevent his children from coming to these conclusions, of being, as it were, forced from home and the church, when the demand is made upon him perhaps for a nickel to get something that he knows his child ought to have, and the only thing he can do is to tell the child he has not the money to spare. Of course if the child is an observing one it wants an explanation of the why, and what is there to prevent the young mind from thinking that to be cruel when other children of their own associates have the very things that they are wanting and needing.

I find already in city work those things which to my mind are calculated to make those connected with the missionary work more humble and faithful, and if successful must be patient and full of wisdom.

Whether I shall ever be able to bring myself to this or not, time alone will tell. My address is 116 Bluff Street, and any one that has friends in the city they would have me call on, please write at once, I have already found some of the wandering ones and some friends that I believe will come into the fold. Asking an interest in the prayers of the readers of the HERALD, I remain,

Your colaborer,

J. M. BAKER.

HEARNE, Texas, July 19.

Dear Herald: I have been long silent in your valuable columns, but not in the work assigned by the church of the Redeemer. I have labored in Texas all that opportunity offered. Have received several into the family of God; and many have given assent to the doctrine but withhold that obedience that will make them acceptable to Him who has the perfect right to demand obedience of all his erring creatures.

I joined Elders E. W. Nunley and John Harp on the 8th near Grapeland and enjoyed my association with them very much. I had a previous appointment about seventeen miles south and left the brethren firing away at heterodoxy and receiving an occasional shot from one of its representatives in return. I returned on the 11th to find that Bro. Nunley had gone home to get ready for district conference to convene on the 24th of this month at Cookes Point, Texas. I found Bro. Harp still holding forth with attendance increasing and interest intense, and I feel safe in predicting grand results to follow his labors at that place. Two Christian preachers, and men of various parts of Babylon are among his opposers; but Bro. Harp in reasoning from Scripture soon has them acknowledging the inconsistencies of their own theories and the entire consistency of ours—a pretty good thing to be accomplished by a harp—but that Harp gives out no uncertain sound, and though loud its tones are refreshingly musical to the ears of those who are held bound, those who have so long been turning their ears away from the truth to fables. Some have promised obedience in the near future.

With best wishes for the HERALD'S success, and prayers for the final triumph of the truth, I remain as ever,

Your brother in the one true faith,
JAMES W. BRYAN.

MONONGAHELA CITY, Pennsylvania, July 21.

Herald Readers: In a May number of Ensign I wrote an item inquiring the whereabouts of Elders A. H. Parsons and R. Etzenhouser. At that time a brother at Falls Creek, Pennsylvania, was anxious to obey the gospel and there being no elders near, I did not know how it would be brought about, consequently the advertisement. My object in writing this is to tell the Saints how the Lord worked to convince the people of the truth in that place.

April 1, I went from Butler, Pennsylvania, to Lindsey to visit my mother, and while there I also went up to visit my brother Abner Anthony, who lives at Falls Creek, Pennsylvania. We talked together of the plan of salvation, showing in the Scripture the principles, and as the brother seemed so interested we talked all night. He was so much interested that sleep was out of the question, and that being the last night that I would be there, I went home the next day. I told him if he doubted these things to ask of God. (James 1:5.) I did not hear from him until May 24, when I received the following letter which gave me much joy:

"FALLS CREEK, Pennsylvania.

"Dear Sister: I suppose you would like to know how I am growing in faith in the Lord Jesus. I believe I must be baptized for the remission of my sins. I wish also to tell you of the vision I had. I thought I had been killed here on earth and I went to where God was, and my neighbor that lives beside me here was there, too, and God gave him a book and I stood beside him, but I could not see what he wrote. When he got through God told him to go down below. I looked and saw doctors and other men down there. Then he came to me and told me to mark in the book. I thought the lines were about six inches long and about a line and a half or two in a verse. He told me to read all the lines and mark all I understood like this "X." I read all of them and marked all I understood, until I came to the one about the middle of all the lines, and I thought it was the power of Jesus, whether it was taught and preached, and if I understood or had accepted the word of truth. And then I told him that I had heard of the Church of Jesus Christ, and it taught all the power. Then he came up to me and put hands on me and told me how he loved me and told me to go on. I thought my brother Elmer and wife who live in Washington State were there. Then I saw my neighbor, who was in the first part of my vision, come in with a new suit of clothes on. Now Eunice, I am strong in this faith and I know it is of God, and I want you to fast and pray for me, that the time may speedily come when I can be baptized as he tells me, by an ordained man of God. If there are any elders there please send them; tell the Saints to pray for me.

"ABNER ANTHONY."

This letter gave me much joy to know that God was crowning the work with fruit. I then inserted that item of inquiry in the Ensign, also wrote the brother that I would begin to fast and pray the following Sunday, but before the letter reached him I received the following letter from a sister at Lindsey, Pennsylvania. She is not a member of the Reorganized Church. She writes:

"May 31, 1903.

"Dear Sister Eunice: I have bad news to tell you. Abner was found unconscious last Friday, May 29, in the coal bank.

They carried him home and he did not come to until seven o'clock Saturday morning. When mother and a brother arrived at Falls Creek Abner knew them, but could neither hear nor talk. His wife thinks it is owing to overwork and too much meditating on the Bible. The doctors pronounce him demented and talk of sending him away, and since you were there and preached to him he has searched the Bible and thought he was in the wrong, till they say his brain must have given way. He will not touch one drop of medicine. He gathered up all the medicine, took it out and buried it and stamped on the ground. He seems afraid they will take him away. We can not tell just what they will do. I will let you know as soon as I hear.

"JOANNA ANTHONY."

I continued to receive some very threatening letters from various sources. By the way some of them sounded, it was just as healthy for me that I was safely at Monongahela at the time. Notwithstanding the threatenings and opposing power of Satan, the Lord worked a wonder that will not soon be forgotten by those people. Even when they tried to keep the letters away from my brother Abner and would not let him hear from me, the Lord sent me a powerful blessing the morning that Abner came out of the trance. I did not know what it meant until I received the letter which corresponded with the exact hour it happened.

Bro. Jacob Reese, also Fayette City Branch Saints were instrumental in bringing the work to pass at Falls Creek with their directions and prayers. Bro. L. D. Ullom and James D. Porter came to my house about the 29th of June and began holding meetings July 8 with very small interest. The Spirit seemed to direct Bro. Porter to Falls Creek. Accordingly we prepared for the journey. Bro. Porter started, taking with him my two little girls Joanna and Leone. They arrived safely now, the time being nearly two months that brother Abner did not have the use of his speech. He seemed natural in every way; was kind to his wife and children; would go in secret to pray and seemed to be always looking for sister Eunice. He was seemingly unconscious of the surrounding conditions, paying no attention to them, going about his daily work. He would notice no one until some one would touch him, then he would look up and smile pleasantly. I will just give Bro. Porter's letter, telling of how it came about after arriving at his home.

"FALLS CREEK, July 12.

"Dear brothers and Sr. Eunice: We reached Abner's home about two o'clock in the afternoon. Abner rejoiced at my appearance. We held a meeting the same night. Several were out to hear. Greater power never fell on me before. It seemed the heavens were all opened to me in presenting the word. Splendid interest. We also held service at half past ten on Sunday, announcing the baptism. All of five hundred people met at the water to witness the baptism. Before I baptized him I preached a sermon on the two baptisms. The order was splendid. I know there will be a grand work done here, notwithstanding the opposing powers of Satan. I have the evidence that Abner will be a power for good in the church. At the confirmation we had a good turnout. After confirming Abner he glorified God telling his experience with liberty. He can talk and hear as well as anybody. The Presbyterian elder insisted on my trying to get their church. He thinks the trustees will give it. We are going to try, and if they will not give it we can get the hall free. If the people do not turn out, we will preach on the street.

"JAMES D. PORTER."

Bro. Porter wrote later that they were preaching on the street with splendid interest. Crowds increasing by the hundreds. He is going to baptize Abner's wife and Mother Cox Sunday, July 26. Bro. Porter, do you think that fulfills my dream of the twins?

I will give my brother Abner's first letter after being baptized.

"July 12.

"Dearest sister and all: The Lord has come and shown me the true way, as you told me he would if I believed. You know you told me that the Lord was going to call me for his work. I gave him my life, and he gave it back to me. The Devil wanted to try me as he did Job, to see if I would deny the faith. I came through hell and the Devil tormented me to make me deny the faith, but God brought me out. He only let the Devil go so far and then he stopped him. I came through the second death and the outer darkness, and saw the powers of the Devil revealed in the sight of the beast, with the wound of the sword. I saw the life that he gave to the image of the beast with the mark of the sword, and lived as it is written. In the heavens I saw the power the beast gave the image, and it flew in the heavens as a fowl and as a beast. God revealed to me how to flee him, and be led as a child, and not to let my left hand know what my right hand doeth. The Lord kept me silent, but gave me the privilege if I wished. But I wanted to do as he saw fit. I knew in my heart God would bring me out of all this. Bro. Porter is here and I am going to keep him as long as he will stay, if it is God's will. The Lord showed me this was in the last days. I saw the moon turned to blood and the sun darkened, and I am going to work in the vineyard of the Lord. May God bless his noble work everywhere.

"ABNER ANTHONY."

Dear Saints, does this not sound like the old Jerusalem gospel work? It seems to me I can almost see the Jerusalem saints at work, it is so real.

EUNICE BEAM.

TRYON, Nebraska, July 22.

Editors Herald: A word from the sand-hills might be welcome to some of the household of faith. Here is where Bro. Caffall spent thirty-five days, I think, some three years ago and as he gave such a correct description of the place and families it will not be necessary to repeat it here. We were pleased with his letter and the Saints here remember him very kindly. It is not out of the world here, but is inhabited by kind-hearted people. We came here last March from Farnam where we left the Saints rather heavy-hearted at our departure as we had helped them in the Mt. Hope Sunday-school ever since it was organized three and a half years ago. There will always be a warm spot in our hearts for the Saints at Mt. Hope.

Bro. Payne organized a Sunday-school here last month which is doing very well and we hope for its prosperity. The Saints seem willing workers and we pray that they may continue and we think they will. Bro. and Sr. Self and Bro. Shirk were with us awhile. We had a good visit (under the circumstances), and some good meetings. When Bro. Shirk went home to Minatare, Bro. and Sr. Self and Bro. Payne went west with the tent where Bro. Payne will be at home in the tent. Bro. Self thinks our country a rough one, but Sr. Self seemed to enjoy it. It does look rough to the unaccustomed eye, while to those accustomed it seems beautiful. Bro. Self will like it better when he gets more used to it, we think. We had prayer-meeting the morning they left and all felt sad at parting, but how sweet is the soul-cheering thought that the time is coming when there will be no parting for those worthy to be invited to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

We ask to be remembered in your prayers, all you who know the value of prayer.

MINERVA JOHNSON.

OAK VALLEY, Kansas, July 24.

Editors Herald: It will be thirteen years August 18, since I embraced this latter-day gospel in Wisconsin, when J. W. Peterson was on his first mission, then only a mere boy in the missionary field.

As I look back over the past thirteen years I can see many missteps, hard, constant fight with self, but I do not feel that I really want to give up the prize that lies at the end of the road. Having lost my companion, April 6, my lot seems doubly hard and lonesome, being left with four small children from three to twelve years old, two of them being in Wisconsin, one in Illinois, and one with me. Only those who have had to pass through similar trials can know anything of the hardship. Living in a strange land among strangers and none of like faith that we can hear of, I would like to hear from any Saints that may live near the southeastern part of Elk County, Kansas. I live on the south line of the county and four miles from the east line. Should like to get acquainted with the Saints if there are any near me.

I hear there has been some preaching by our elders at Pleasant Hill Schoolhouse. Would be pleased to have some of our missionary force call as I hear the schoolhouse can be had and they can have a home with me. Would be pleased to have J. W. Peterson's address. Have lost all trace of him. Hoping the work may move more rapidly than ever, I remain,

Yours in bonds,

S. E. BELSCAMPER.

LOGAN, Utah, July 23.

Editors Herald: We closed a profitable session of conference the 20th inst., eight of the missionary force being present. Elders Kelley, Swenson, and Hansen, being present from Utah and doing the preaching to the satisfaction of the large attendance. We left Bro. Kelley holding forth evenings, while Bro. Layland accompanied by Elders Swenson and Hansen went to Bear Lake to perform a little labor there and then to join me here.

Bro. John Condit returned to Pocatella to continue street preaching there as we had promised them in an opening effort made the 14th inst., as we tarried there over night on our way south. He made a bold but successful start there, as, without announcement, singing, or prayer, he stepped into the street, and forcefully established the necessity of a continuation of the ancient order of gospel work. Having gathered an interested crowd of listeners, I found courage to address them for half or three quarters of an hour as he closed. This with an effort made on the streets of Blackfoot by him and Bro. Layland the 11th and 12th inst., gives us courage to hope that something will be accomplished by street preaching.

We organized a branch at Blackfoot City the 12th inst., to be known as the Grove City Branch. Elder Hyrum Grimmitt is president; Bro. Lars P. Larson was ordained a priest and chosen branch priest; and Sr. Ida Shoemaker chosen clerk. Thirteen charter members and some to be added by letter. We trust it may be effective for good.

In bonds,

S. D. CONDIT.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, July 23.

Editors Herald: In company with Bro. H. N. Hansen and Swen Swenson I came here on the 17th inst. in order to attend the district conference. Bro. J. E. Vanderwood met us at Colliston, the railroad station, with team, and conveyed us to this place, distance thirty-five miles. Sr. Addie Condit joined us at Colliston also. We received a kindly reception here from Saints and friends, the writer and Bro. Swenson being provided for at the home of Sr. Williams and her daughter, Sr. Coddington.

Saturday, the 19th, was taken up with Sunday-school work, in charge of Srs. Addie Condit, Fannie Pender, and Bro. E. T. Richards. A program was rendered in the evening which showed that the Saints are keeping apace with the times in work of this kind. Sunday following was taken up with Sabbath-school in the morning, followed by three preaching services during the day, with attentive listeners present. The time passed pleasantly and profitably.

Monday, the 21st, at half past ten in the forenoon, the conference was organized by selecting the president of the mission and the president of the district to preside. An excellent feeling prevailed all through.

There has been considerable improvement in this place in twenty-eight years. There is a little band of Saints here and they own their church building. They are actively engaged in the work and appear to be cheerful and hopeful. The dominant church of Utah is in control numerically, so as usual, we are in the conflict. It has been hot and dry and the people are busy haying and doing other farm work, but our audiences have been good, and there is seemingly a disposition developing among the people to do their own thinking which is a sure solution of the vexed problem here. It will lead to a strike for freedom.

Yesterday Brn. A. J. Layland, Swen Swenson, John and S. D. Condit, and H. N. Hansen left here with team to visit points of interest and render needed aid in the district. Bro. W. S. Pender resides here and he and Sr. Pender are essential helpers to the cause. Sr. Pender is quite a favorite. Bro. Vanderwood has been laboring with some success in adjacent places, and is hopeful of doing more later on. A good feeling prevails among the Saints. A nice rain fell last night, which settled the dust, and there is a cheering cool breeze to-day.

The writer will return to Salt Lake City in a few days, and join Bro. A. M. Chase, who is pushing ahead with street preaching there and at adjacent places.

We are all feeling quite cheerful and hopeful in the work, and the writer is feeling better physically than for three years.

On the firing line.

WM. H. KELLEY.

WHEELING, West Virginia, July 23.

Editors Herald: It came to my mind to write of some of my experiences in life, and God's dealings with me to bring me to the knowledge of the truth, also an incident happening when I was quite young. I was about seven years old. In the year 1855, on a frosty morning in the fall, my father woke me up and sent me to the field to get the horses, as he wanted to go to mill early that morning. I arose and started to go, but was timid and afraid on account of my mother and grandmother talking so much about witches and ghosts. I was going along with great agony and fear, and loud crying, when all of a sudden there appeared before me a vision of beautiful stars; some were about the size of a hulled walnut, others the size of a walnut with hull on. They were arranged one above another, a sheet about four feet long and four feet wide, and about two or three hundred in that collection. When they came before me, they commenced moving down gradually, and when they touched the grass, they would disappear all of a sudden like a light going out, until they all disappeared. All fear left me and I felt as if God was near and he would take care of me. I went on and got the horses.

Time went on until in January, 1875, I took pneumonia, and in that sickness the Lord brought all my sins before my eyes. I thought I was going to die and was not prepared. In that condition of repentance, the Lord took away all my strength, also power of speech. For about two hours I could hear and see, but was unable to move so much as a little finger. I knew it was the power of God working with me. The people came in to see me and thought I was dying, but when the Lord gave me strength it came in the twinkling of an eye and I got well from that time.

In 1883 I got a strong desire to serve God, and as the Methodist people were holding a revival meeting, I went to hear them preach but I did not believe in their mourner's bench, or their mode of baptism, but thought they were a good honest people trying to serve God according to the light they had, like all other churches planted by the wisdom of men. I thought there could be but one true church, kingdom, sheepfold, or bride, the Lamb's wife. We see by this there is but one body. Apostle Paul in 1 Corinthians 12: 13, 14, says, "For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have all been made to drink into one Spirit."

half an hour then sang a hymn and gave the invitation to come to the mourner's bench. He told the members to come forward to talk and pray with those at the bench. He then came back to me (I was sitting alone) and shook hands with me, then he sat down beside me and asked me if I enjoyed religion. I told him no. He then asked me if I would like to have religion. I told him I thought it would be a very nice thing to have, but I believed in baptism by immersion. He told me in his young days he was baptized into the Baptist Church, but sprinkling or pouring would answer the same purpose. I told him no, that I believed there was but one mode and that was immersion. He told me that he would like for me to join the church. I told him that I was not ready, I wished to investigate further. He urged me not to put it off for to-morrow as we only had the promise of to-day. He turned away from me, went up to the altar, and said to the members, Let us kneel and pray. I knelt and prayed asking the Lord to show me where the true church was, and I would obey the true gospel and try to live aright the remainder of my days. This was the subject of my prayers. I repeated this prayer many times. Tears were coursing down my cheeks.

That night I had a dream. I thought I was walking on the top of a mountain in a path. I saw a serpent lying across my path. It did not move. I was carrying a chopping ax on my right shoulder. I took the ax and cut off the serpent's head. I then ran down the right side of the mountain, came out of the water, raised up a large flat rock, and buried the ax in the water under the rock. The sun was shining bright and beautiful. Then I woke up. The dream was impressed on my mind so strongly that it caused me to meditate. I thought that I might have an enemy that was going to kill me, as serpents are a sign of an enemy. Then it came to me, You are master of the enemy.

Time went on till May 4, 1883, at sundown a man by the name of Isaac Johnson came down the railroad. He asked me if I was going up to hear the preaching at the schoolhouse. I asked him what kind of a meeting it was. He said the Latter Day Saints. That was something new to me. I told him I would go up to hear them. G. T. Griffiths was holding meetings. He preached on the two baptisms, immersion in water, and the principle of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. When he was preaching the words pierced me. I felt that he was a servant of God that had authority to preach the gospel of the kingdom. I soon made up my mind to be baptized.

When he got through he told the people to come out Friday and Saturday nights. He gave an invitation to any that desired to be baptized to rise to their feet. I arose to my feet, also a lady by the name of Gill, and a Mr. Humes, three of us. Bro. Griffiths told us to come out to the Sunday morning meeting and he would baptize us. I went out at the appointed time and he baptized me. I felt that my sins were all remitted and I was filled with the love of God. It was the great desire of my heart to see all of the people come and be baptized into the church and kingdom of God. Bro. G. T. Griffiths told us to come to Bro. Thomas Humes' to a meeting on Monday night where he confirmed us by the laying on of hand for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

The next day I was working, drifting in under the hill quarrying limestone with Bro. Linton. About nine o'clock the Holy Spirit came upon me. It went down through me, brought me the interpretation of my dream, and showed me that I had fulfilled the dream myself in all of its details. The serpent was a type of the serpent that beguiled our mother Eve and caused her to eat of the forbidden fruit, the ax also represented that I would be cut loose from the serpent and flee to the Lord and when I buried the ax in the water under the rock it typified that I would be baptized, buried with Christ in baptism and put on the new man which is Christ Jesus. He is called the rock of salvation. The day I was baptized was a beautiful sunshiny day, like it was in my dream. The Lord heard and answered my prayers. When I prayed the Lord to show me the true church he sent one of his servants to preach the old Jerusalem gospel of the kingdom, near where I lived so I could obey it and do as I promised the Lord, and I know this is the true work of the Lord, that he has put forth his hand the second time to restore the gospel in all of its fullness with the authority to preach and minister in all of the ordinances of the Lord's house.

In gospel bonds,
L. D. ULLOM.

COQUILLE, Oregon, July 20.

Editors Herald: I am pleased to inform the Saints that the work is moving forward in these parts. Five weeks ago Bro. and Sr. Anderson joined us and are helping to roll on the missionary car. They are highly appreciated by both Saints and friends.

We commenced a series of meetings at Dora where Bro. and Sr. Chase and the writer planted the work five years ago. It was a new place then, not a Saint or a friend to our cause lived there. I often wonder, as do others, why we stopped there, but we did. It must have been because of daily seeking the Lord's direction we were lead there by him. We held a series of meetings and baptized two, Sr. Minard and Sr. Mayse, who stood nobly, and for a while all alone for the truth. But their brave stand was not in vain, others saw the light they had and now seven more are rejoicing with them, of all of whom we can be justly proud.

Our last meetings there resulted in the baptizing of two noble souls. It was a beautiful sight, one the angels love to look upon. Some thirty or more Saints and friends gathered alongside a clear, cool mountain stream. In the hush of the forest, with the calm sweet spirit brooding over all; while the beautiful songs so expressive of our faith were being sung Bro. Anderson lead Mr. Smith and Mrs. Devault into the waters of baptism. Both are highly respected citizens and their influence with others will be for good. Tears coursed down the faces of some not members of the church as they gazed on the impressive scene and we could but feel that others are near the fold.

We came here with the tent four days ago. It is a central place and one our people have been trying for some time to open. Prejudice is strong but we are having good success so far. The first two nights we had forty-five inside and several outside the tent. The third evening we had eighty, and last night one hundred thirty in the tent and a goodly number outside that we did not have seats for. The Lord was also present in spirit. The second evening Bro. Anderson was the speaker and a noted infidel was present who unhesitatingly told around the next day that it was the best sermon he ever heard.

This gospel finds its way to the hearts of many and most all classes though some fail to find their way into it.

Bro. and Sr. Anderson's music is a great help, in fact, good singing is indispensable to tent work. We are all happy in our work and hopeful of doing good. We feel assured that the Master approves of us, for we feel the comfort of his Spirit.

May God keep us ever in the narrow way.

HIRAM L. HOLT.

ROSCOE, Missouri, July 23.

Editors Herald: Bro. Jessie Paxton and I have just arrived home from our field of labor, Polk County. Polk County is a new field apparently. Two years ago Brn. F. L. Sawley and William H. Mannering held meetings in a Methodist church near Huron, where there were two members of the church, Bro. and Sr. Davis. They had been living in that section of country for about eighteen years. Everybody that attended their meetings were well impressed that they were messengers of the Lord and presenting the truth, but Satan is always on the alert and the minister in charge of the church then gave the people to understand that he was controller of affairs and held the keys or authority, not to preach the doctrine of Christ, but to fasten the doors against those who had been sent to deliver the people from darkness into the marvelous liberties of the gospel of Christ.

Bro. William H. Mannering and I were sent into Polk County about one year ago. We failed to get an opening here, where Brn. Sawley and Mannering had been. We moved west four or five miles, held a few weeks, baptized three. Interest was good. We left that place with a promise to return in a short time. We did and found the schoolhouse locked up, and now Bro. Paxton and I will commence grove-meetings in that neighborhood. Bro. Mannering and I made six new openings in the latter part of August last year.

Bro. Paxton and I have just come from near Dunnegan in Polk County, where we have been holding a two-week meeting in the Christian church. We left interest good and the longer we preached the larger was the congregation. After closing here we secured the Christian church at Humansville, made announcements in the Star Leader, edited by a Mr. Grey, who had got acquainted with our people at Lamoni and stated that a better people he never knew. But notwithstanding all this when we had made all necessary arrangements for preaching in Humansville four days later, we returned, found the church locked against us. Several out that night, but no chance to impart to them our knowledge of the restored gospel, only through private conversation. We were told that just west of this church stood the Methodist church. No preaching had been in that church for two or three years and we tried to secure it. We soon found all that were connected with it. Some were willing, but others said, No, it will never do to allow them in here, for if they get a start they will take the place. This was a sad disappointment to us. Just about this time Bro. T. R. White, missionary in charge wrote us that the tent would be at Roscoe this week and desired us to come in and help in tent-meetings.

In all there have been some seven or eight new openings made in Polk County. It is a promising field but it will be slow in developing. I feel that our labors are not in vain and we expect to return just as soon as we can to push the good work forward but I fear that many will be disappointed when the Master comes. I feel that God has blessed me in my work and if I can only hold out faithful till the end I know I shall have a crown of life for ever. May God's blessings be with us and the church prosper in all of its departments is the prayer of one that hopes to see Zion flourish.

J. N. STEPHENSON.

DORA, Oregon, July 23.

Dear Herald: Brn. H. L. Holt and D. A. Anderson preached for us about two weeks. I think they were the most spiritual meetings I ever attended. We had very good crowds and good attention. What a pleasure it is for us to listen to these brethren! It does us so much good and builds us up in the faith. Two more precious souls were gathered into the fold. Those who have labored here will be glad to know that Sr. Smith's husband and Bro. Devault's wife were led into the waters of baptism by Bro. D. A. Anderson. Sr. Anderson presided at the organ during the meetings. All who have heard her sing and play know what a treat we have had. Praying God will care for his servants everywhere and protect our President,

Your sister in the one faith,

ROXANNA MINARD.

Conference Minutes.

Chatham.—Conference convened at Blenheim, Ontario, June 20 and 21, 1903, D. MacGregor, A. Leverton, George Green, and D. Snoblen, presidents; R. Coburn, secretary. Branches reporting: Cedar Springs 25, Lindsley 50, Blenheim 46, Olive 51, Stevenson 39, Wallaceburg 58, Longwood 42, Wabash 41, Tilbury 52, Ridgetown 110. Ministry reporting: A. Leverton, George Green, D. Snoblen, R. B. Howlett, J. H. Tyrrell, M. Traxler, J. W. Badder, J. M. Baggerly, W. H. Taylor, S. G. St. John. Bishop's agent, J. H. Tyrrell, reported: Total receipts, $1,702.29; paid out, $1,032.44; balance on hand, $669.85. District treasurer, John W. Badder, reported: Total receipts, $29.92; paid out, $25.00; balance on hand, $4.92. The secretary presented an account of $1.33 for expenses which was ordered paid. The district officers were sustained. Resolved that the Battlehill Branch be declared disorganized on account of the members moving away, also that the members receive letters of removal on application to the secretary in order to join any branch they wish. Preaching during conference by J. H. Tyrrell, D. MacGregor, A. Leverton, and J. M. Baggerly, Bro. E. W. Long was called and ordained to the office of elder. Adjourned to meet in Wallaceburg in October, 1903; date to be fixed by president of the district.

Idaho.—Conference organized July 20, 10:30 a. m., by electing Bro. W. H. Kelley to preside, assisted by Bro. S. D. Condit. W. S. Pender was elected secretary, Sr. W. S. Pender, organist and chorister. Bro. J. H. Condit spoke of a committee appointed at the last conference to audit the Bishop's agent's books, which did not appear in the minutes also of a decision rendered by the president of the mission as to whether we should recognize members who had joined the Utah church, but had not been expelled from ours, as still members of the church. Secretary instructed to insert these omissions in the minutes. The answer of the president of the mission to the above question was: "Yes, if they ask for recognition by us." The following branches reported: Hagarman, Teton, and Cedrine. Report was also made of organization of the Grove City Branch. The report of the Malad City Branch was referred by the branch to a committee for correction. The committee had not had time to make such correction, hence no report of the branch was made. Committee appointed to audit the books of the Bishop's agents: Brn. H. N. Hansen, J. H. Condit, and J. E. Vanderwood. Elders reporting verbally: W. H. Kelley, S. D. Condit, J. H. Condit, H. N. Hansen, Swen Swenson, W. S. Pender, A. J. Layland, W. L. John, William Richards, and Henry John; Priest E. T. Richards; Teacher Elias Richards. Written reports were received from Brn. A. L. Rice, A. Hendrickson, Charles Albertson, H. Grimmett, B. L. Hendrickson, and J. E. Vanderwood. Reports of Bishop's agents James Jennings and H. R. Eyaas audited and found correct. Report of committee on case of Sr. Agnes Heaton referred back to court for further investigation. Brn. Hansen and Swenson added to this court of inquiry. The committee appointed to correct the records reported through Bro. S. D. Condit. District secretary ordered to furnish each branch with blanks on which to report with instructions how to report. S. D. Condit was elected president of the district, A. J. Layland, assistant, W. S. Pender, secretary. All the spiritual authorities of the church were sustained. Bro. James Jennings sustained as Bishop's agent. Bro. Elias Richards was then recommended to the Bishop as his agent for the southern part of the district. Preaching by W. H. Kelley, Swen Swenson, and H. N. Hansen. Adjourned to meet at Hagerman, Idaho, September 12, 1903.

Minnesota.—Conference convened at Clitherall, Minnesota, June 20, 1903. Elder T. J. Martin, district president presided, assisted by Elder F. A. Smith. Secretary being absent Elder T. C. Kelley was appointed secretary pro tem. Branches reporting: Bemidji 41, Audubon 74, Minneapolis 63, Oak Lake 67, Amor 28, Union 99. Total gain 9. Elders reporting: Alonzo Whiting, T. J. Martin, Henry Way, L. Whiting, E. A. Stedman, T. C. Kelley, L. G. Wood, and G. H. Hilliard. Priests reporting: F. G. Barnes, W. W. McLeod, Charles Pierce, E. B. Anderson, Frank Horn, A. W. Whiting, and E. G. Huntington. Bishop's agent not reporting, Bro. Martin made a statement showing a balance of over sixteen dollars in the hands of the agent. Bro. E. B. Anderson was ordained elder June 21, 1903, by Elders F. A. Smith and T. C. Kelley. The following officers were elected: Bro. E. A. Stedman, president; Sr. Alta S. Hawley, secretary; and Bro. W. C. Griffin, Bishop's agent. A vote of thanks was tendered to Bro. T. J. Martin, the retiring president. Conference then adjourned to convene at Friberg, Minnesota, at such time as the president shall appoint. Six baptisms. Bro. Hougas, general Sunday-school superintendent was present during the conference and reunion and gave the Saints much good, practical instruction in Sunday-school work.

Convention Minutes.

London, Ontario.—Convention was held at Waterford, Ontario, June 5, 10 a. m., Elder George Buschlen, president, with President R. C. Evans and Sr. D. V. MacGregor, associated. Sr. Floralice Miller, secretary; James Pycock, assistant; Y. R. Seaton, chorister; Sr. E. L. Pope, organist; Elders S. W. Tomlinson and A. E. Mortimer, press committee. As per resolution of last convention, no reports were read. By order of former convention the purchasing committee presented reward of merit banner. Banner was accepted and order drawn on treasury to remunerate Bro. W. S. Faulds for cost of material. He furnished his excellent work gratis. Plan of convention was read by Bro. Buschlen. Notes taken by delegate to General Convention were read. The afternoon was devoted to institute work, and a model session was held, Bro. Buschlen superintending. At eight p. m. a program was rendered. The Waterford school won the banner, their proficiency in enrollment, number of sessions, and attendance being the greatest. Adjourned to meet at London, Ontario, 10 a. m., Friday prior to district conference.

Idaho.—Convention met in the Saints' chapel at Malad City. District superintendent, Miss J. A. Condit, and Elder Swen Swenson presided, S. D. Condit secretary pro tem. Delegate system was waved and all, including visiting church representatives, were invited to participate in the proceedings. Reports were read from New Hope, Hagerman, Cedrine, Badger, West Fork, and Malad, showing an aggregate membership of 151, and an average attendance of 117. Pocatello school failed to report. Elias Richards was elected librarian. Papers were read by W. S. Pender, J. E. Vanderwood, and one from Miss M. J. Condit. Discussion followed each paper participated in by W. H. Kelley, H. N. Hansen, S. Swenson, W. S. Pender, A. J. Layland, J. H. and S. D. Condit, J. E. Vanderwood, and E. T. and Elias Richards. An entertainment was given in the evening. Adjourned to meet at Hagerman, September 11.

Eastern Michigan.—District Sunday-school association was called to order by Elder O. J. Hawn, superintendent. Prayer by Elder T. A. Hougas. Number of schools in district 13; reporting 10. Amount of money on hand last report, $16.13; amount received since $2.57; disbursements, $10.18; amount on hand, $7.52. Lake View Sunday-school carried off the banner for having learned the largest number of verses from the Bible. Bro. Hougas gave us a very interesting talk on Sunday-school work which was appreciated by all. Many questions were asked and satisfactorily answered. District officers: Elder O. J. Hawn, superintendent, Carsonville, Michigan; Elder E. J. Goodenough, assistant superintendent, Flint, Michigan; Mrs. F. C. Stevens, treasurer, Crosswell, Michigan; Miss Grace McInnis, secretary, East Fremont, Michigan. Adjourned to meet Friday preceding conference.

Reunion Notices.

To the Vocalists and Instrumentalists of the Gallands Grove and Little Sioux Districts and to all Others Who May Attend the Dow City Reunion, Greeting: We, the undersigned, having been requested to take charge of and direct the musical department at the above-named reunion commencing August 28, 1903, have selected the following numbers for practice from Winnowed Anthems No. 1: Pages 43, 18, 21, 30, 35, 38, 40, 50, 54, 62, 65, 68, 78, 81, 90, 93, 97, 100, 113, 116, 119, 133, 137, 158, 163, 177, 184. We hereby extend a general invitation to those that are blessed with musical talent to come and use it in the service of the Lord. We also say to the band boys, Bring your instruments and music and enliven the camp as you have in the past and get your reward by and by. Some sacred selections would be nice to play on Sunday between services. We ask the coöperation of all. Practice these selections at home and in the branches, so that when we come together you can easily adopt the movement of the one leading whoever he may be. Respectfully submitted, James Pearsall, S. B. Kibler.

Married.

JOHNSTON—SMITH.—At the Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, on July 23, 1903, David A. Johnston and Ethel J. Smith were united in marriage, Elder F. B. Blair officiating. After the ceremony was performed a sumptuous wedding supper was served to the invited guests.

Died.

PURCELL.—Sr. Nancy Purcell was born March 26, 1868, at Council Bluffs, Iowa; united in marriage with Bro. Benjamin Purcell, August 21, 1884; baptized October 13, 1883. She fell asleep in Christ July 7, 1903, at 1.40 p. m., at her home in Missouri Valley, Iowa. She leaves husband, six children, mother, eight sisters, four brothers, and a host of friends to mourn. She was faithful to the end and said, God's will be done. Funeral sermon by Elder W. A. Smith.

SIVITS.—Glen Rubert, darling son of Bro. C. F. and Sr. Alice Sivits, born near North Platte, Nebraska, died of scarlet fever, May 12, 1903. Age 3 years and 20 days. Sermon by Reverend McNicols. Little Glen was sick only a few hours.

SAWYER.—Elizabeth Caroline Sawyer died near Fort Recovery, Ohio, June 9, 1903, aged 83 years, 5 months, 28 days. She was born near Adams, Jefferson County, New York, December 11, 1819; married John B. Sawyer September 15, 1842, and became the mother of three children, two of whom remain to mourn their loss. Baptized into the church in the days of the Martyr, at Vienna, Ohio, she joined the Reorganized Church in April, 1877, baptized by Elder J. F. McDowell. Firm in her convictions respecting the church of her choice, she passed through many trials. Funeral services were held in the Disciple church by Reverend W. Lundy, of Spencerville, Ohio.

RICHEY.—At White Bird, Idaho, May 12, 1903, of pneumonia, Sr. Cornelia A. Richey, a member of Lamoni Branch, Iowa, aged 78 years, 2 months, and 28 days. She was born in Tioga County, Pennsylvania, in 1825; baptized February 12, 1876, at Kingston, Caldwell County, Missouri, by Elder T. W. Smith. She lived a steady and consistent life, according to her profession in Christ. Her last days were spent at the home of Bro. O. A. Richey, one of her sons.

COOK.—Elder D. W., at his home near Sedalia, Graves county, Kentucky, July 9, 1903. He was born in Calloway County, Kentucky, February 22, 1846. He was married to Miss Lizzie Howard, January 14, 1875, who with eleven children are left to mourn—all at home except Mrs. Eula Roberts and Mr. Charley Cook of Independence, Missouri. In his early days he favored Methodism, but later he joined the Christian Church, with whom he remained for about five years, when after a prayerful investigation of our doctrine, he was baptized March 15, 1893, by T. C. Kelley. He was afterwards ordained an elder, and acted as Bishop's agent.

"A Trip to Ireland" is the title of an article in the August Leaves from the pen of Elder J. W. Rushton.

Bro. Burton writes interestingly in the August Leaves of the needs of a young missionary who attempts to do work in the Society Islands.

After several days of seclusion in the Vatican the conclave of cardinals, which is to elect a successor to Pope Leo XIII, is still unable to make any progress, and an immediate choice of a pope is hardly expected. The influence of the pope is wide, hence the world has strong reasons for hoping that the one who is elected to this office will not only be learned, but will also be imbued with the spirit of modern progress. It is announced that the next pope may not remain in the Vatican as Pius IX and Leo XIII have done. This might indicate that the papacy will give up the last of its claims to temporal power.

SENIOR EDITOR ABROAD.

Our last was directed from Nantyglo, Wales, where our people had secured the Brynmawr Market Hall for services. The advertisement had given President Joseph Smith as chief speaker, in compliance with which he spoke the first evening to quite a fair-sized audience. There was but little time between our arrival and the evening service, which time was spent in visiting with the brethren, three of whom met us at the station, namely, Thomas Jones, John G. Jenkins, and Alfred Jones. The first visit was to the home of George Morris, where a refreshing meal had been provided for the visitors; after this we visited Bro. John Jones, who is one of the veterans in the cause and has proved himself worthy as a defender of the faith, according to the talent granted him. We here met his venerable mother, now in her ninety-first year, who was among those who first obeyed the gospel in Wales. Her recollections of those days are quite clear and she spoke in high terms of the ministers who have preceded us. There is but a small band in this place, but they are faithful and doing the best they can under the circumstances which surround them. The place is away up in the Welsh mountains, nearly a mile above the level of the sea. The weather was mild, so notwithstanding the elevation we did not suffer from the cold. It is a picturesque country, the valleys and hillsides dotted with homes, pastures and grain fields, where not occupied by coal and iron mines and blast furnaces. The soil is rocky and hard and yet by careful husbandry and persistent labor is made more or less productive, and the people apparently have enough of that which is good to eat. Bro. Thomas Jones, one of the Welsh missionaries, a young man of fair promise and excellent ability, presides over the branch. We met Bro. Jenkins at Dinas first and he preceded us to Nantyglo. Services by President Smith had been advertised for the two evenings, so he essayed to fill the appointment. At the close of his effort the audience requested to hear the boy preacher all the way from Canada; to which request he gave the usual assent in a brief but forcible address on the views of the church on certain topics, which had been treated of by the Editor. A reference by him to a statement made by a noted preacher of London aroused some controversy after meeting was over, in which some of the local brethren took active and defensive part. From what the brethren stated to us the next day we gathered the impression that something had been said which would, at least, leave matter for thought among the people.

From Nantyglo to Birmingham the road lies through a beautiful and fertile country, oat-fields, hop-fields, meadows, pastures, all showing a high state of cultivation. Albeit, the hedges in many places are broken and ragged and untrimmed, a condition which we were not prepared to see from what we had heard from others who had visited this country. On mentioning this to several of the brethren, they attributed this neglect of the division lines made by hedges, to the passage of the corn laws, which admitted certain food products into the country at so small a tariff that the farmers could not afford to expend the labor upon their farms they had hitherto done; however, whatever it may be attributable to, it is a fact that there is no general neglect visible, for the greater part of the hedges are beautifully pruned and the lands evidently cared for to the best advantage. On our arrival at Birmingham we were met at New Street Station by Brn. Thomas Taylor, the bishop of the mission, C. H. Caton, counselor to bishop, C. Walton, and J. E. Meredith, from whom we received an excellent welcome to the busy hive of industry, known as the metropolis of the midlands, a place of six hundred thousand inhabitants. We were placed in the charge of Bro. Meredith, and were taken to his home and installed as the guests of Sr. Meredith during our stay in the city. There was a social gathering at the Priestly Road Branch at which we were made acquainted with the Saints and received kindly speeches of welcome from Brn. Taylor and C. H. Caton, on behalf of the branch, the latter being chief spokesman. Responses were made by Brn. Smith, Evans, and Rushton. A very pleasant time and excellent promise of what would result during the visit.

On Saturday morning we arose early and we all were taken for a drive by Bro. Meredith in his neat little turnout. A lovely summer morning, the air full of perfume, the sun brilliant and warm, and the many birds trilling out a sweet chorus of praise as we bowled along the fine hard roads. We were greeted on the way by swarms of flies who in persistency and rancor are equal in our judgment to their American cousins. Bro. Meredith drove us around Sutton Park, much of the way the roads on either side being lined with pretty residences belonging to business people who labor in the city and live in the country. Very fancy names were given to most of these homes such as "Holly Dene," "Daisy Dene," "Fairview," etc. Many of the hedges are holly and hawthorne, the peculiar shapes and glossy leaf of the first-named giving a very beautiful appearance to the well-kept hedge. It is an evergreen and therefore is always beautiful, summer and winter alike, and very desirable as a hedge. The love for seclusion of the average citizen is the motive for building walls around the premises and topping them with nicely trimmed hedges, which not only keep out burglarly-disposed persons but also prevent the passers-by from seeing the beauty of the front gardens, which are usually full of flowering plants and shrubs. The English people are great lovers of flowers and they are cultivated in lavish profusion with great variety. Frequently the tables at which they sit to eat have vessels filled with flowers, and often a beautiful stand is laid at the plate of each guest, an act of graceful hospitality much appreciated. The vigorous appetite for breakfast following our morning ride was amply supplied by Sr. Meredith. After the morning meal, by appointment we met Bro. C. H. Caton in the city, who kindly showed us some of the more attractive features and curiosities of the city, including the market, the city arcade, town hall, quite a number of principal business houses, the municipal in which is located the art gallery and museum. Here we were highly entertained by statues and pictures of noted men and philanthropists, curious works of art from various nations, including some of the most exquisite carving in ivory from Japan and China. We here spent an hour or two with great satisfaction. Bro. Caton was quite well informed in regard to many things we saw and kept up a running fire of comment and information from which we learned much of the history of things which we saw. This visit to the art gallery over, we met Bro. T. Taylor by agreement at the post-office and were taken to the residence of Bro. Caton where we had dinner, which was not only very palatable but was much enjoyed after our tramp through the city.

At five o'clock we were to meet with Bro. Frank Swan and family who had arranged a kind of conversazione with quite a number of their friends and acquaintances. We arrived there on time, and soon we were made acquainted with a number of fine people of both sexes representing many religious views but all unanimous in a fervent desire and practical effort to ameliorate the woeful conditions obtaining by reason of sin. We sat down to a very pleasing repast of which all partook with a relish thus testifying to Sr. Swan's ability as hostess. After tea conversation became general; the Editor having the privilege of conversing with the Reverend F. Gould of the Congregational Church, which was mutually enjoyed.

After some little time thus spent, Bro. Swan invited the attention of the company to the principal feature of the program, which was to be short addresses illustrative of our positions as religionists and become acquainted with that position from representative men, besides becoming acquainted with Joseph Smith, the president of the church, etc. Brn. Rush-ton, Smith, and Evans, gave short conversational addresses, which were received with interest and apparent pleasure. Afterward some discussion took place in a very pleasant manner and spirit of toleration upon some points distinctive of our faith. Among others we met Mr. Harborne, president of the Commercial Temperance Society in Birmingham, Mr. John Lawson, a well-known temperance reformer and preacher, Mr. Terry, a city missionary, Mr. Dyer, Mr. Whiting, and several of our brethren and sisters. We were regaled on ginger beer and cake afterwards, and shortly the party separated wending their way to their homes. Bro. Swan is to be complimented for his diplomacy and success of the evening's entertainment; we enjoyed it very much.

Sunday morning Bro. R. C. Evans was announced to preach at Priestly Road Branch, the writer at the Icknield Port Road Branch. A fair-sized audience greeted Bro. R. C. who delivered a very fine discourse on Christ's Mission. The Editor had an enjoyable time, quite a good crowd, good interest, and all seemed to enjoy the effort. After dinner the Editor was in attendance at Priestly Road Branch, Bro. Evans at Icknield Port Road; at each place a profitable and spiritual time was spent in prayer, testimony, and praise. In the evening a fine crowd greeted the Editor who addressed the audience on the important subject of Salvation, was blessed with splendid liberty and felt good in the work. We heard a very high account of Bro. Evans' effort. There was a good audience and our brother was exceptionally blessed in his effort.

On Monday, after dinner, we met Bro. Taylor who had very generously provided for our pleasure. We were driven in an open carriage through Selby Oak Park which was very enjoyable. We then had a drive to and through Bournville, the "Model Village," set apart and fitted up by Messrs. Cadbury Bros., of cocoa fame, a standing monument of their philanthropy and practicable effort to solve the social problems of the present time. Cleanliness, comfort, and æsthetic environments in Bournville at least gave an unmistakable affirmation to the question, Is life worth living?

We had tea at Mr. and Mrs. Roberts', son-in-law and daughter of Bro. Taylor, who made us very welcome. In the evening Bro. Evans preached at Priestly Road to a roomful of intelligent people, after which the Editor was asked to address a few words, and did so.

Tuesday we spent in visiting the Saints, including Sr. Crump, Sr. Tyler, Sr. Gibbs, and Sr. Newey, under the kind offices of Bro. Meredith and his wife. In the evening, according to announcement, the Editor preached to an overflowing meeting at Icknield Post Road with liberty, and had the attention of the audience, which seemed to be sympathetic.

This closed our labors in Birmingham, for next morning after partaking of dinner at Bro. and Sr. Swan's, we bade adieu to the small company of Saints assembled at the station to bid us farewell, and soon were speeding along to Stafford, where, after an hour's ride, we arrived at three o'clock in the afternoon. We were met here by Brn. Henry, George, and Joseph Greenwood, a trio of noble brethren whose work and record stand high in the mission. More anon.

Fraternally,

JOSEPH SMITH.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Are the Saints under obligation to make an offering to a patriarch every time he preaches, teaches, expounds, exhorts, or gives counsel or advice?

No; no more than they are when an elder, a priest, a teacher, or any other church officer preaches, teaches, expounds, exhorts, or gives counsel or advice.

Are the Saints under obligation to make an offering to a patriarch every time he "lays on hands for the conferment of spiritual blessings?" If so, about how much?

No; no more so than when that same patriarch preaches, or gives counsel or advice. The one is as much a part of his work as is the other. It is a mistake to give the Saints the idea that they can not receive their patriarchal blessing unless they have money in their pockets with which to remunerate the patriarch. The patriarchs are supported by the church as are the elders, and where there are Saints who do not feel that they can make the patriarch an offering, that should not prevent them from receiving the comforts of that blessing. Of course it must be remembered that the patriarchs have expenses, just the same as do all elders who are traveling in the interests of the latter-day work, and hence their needs should be attended to; but as for it being an "obligation" upon the Saints to give money or make an offering to the patriarchs any more than they are to any of the missionaries, that is a mistake which the patriarchs themselves should hasten to rectify. Usually the patriarchs are accompanied by stenographers whose duty it is to report and copy the blessings as pronounced by the one administering, and of course there are expenses attached to this work of reporting which should be met so far as possible by offerings from those receiving the blessings. But as for it being obligatory, it is not.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. N. C. Enge gives the following notes on the progress of the work in Norway in a letter to Bro. R. S. Salyards. He wrote from Kristiansand, July 14: "We have seemingly made a lasting impression in this city. I have managed to keep the people interested for over one year, and had two hundred out to hear a week ago when Bro. P. Anderson arrived and we have held 'the fort' ever since, Bro. Anderson being the speaker. Our stand is in front of the police headquarters. The chief of police and his staff are among the earnest listeners. This evening we hold meeting in the military camp near the city. The Adventists who have so bitterly opposed us are receding. The Methodist minister who was the first one to show fight at my advent in the city is now believing that a certain lawyer in America had a vision of the Savior, and that inspiration in our day is possible; so judging from apparent symptoms the opposition is likely to diminish. Those I have baptized are fine young men who have sat down and counted 'the cost' a whole year before taking leave of 'the dear old mother.' You see it takes extraordinary effort to extricate one from the state church, but its doom is sealed. Her watchmen are getting weary and discouraged beholding the constant attack made on the "lady of their choice;" the most popular minister now is the one who can strike the hardest blow at the already tottering system. A division of church and state is imminent, so we are hopeful in the Lord. We are as a family trying to live our religion, without which no one can succeed. Sr. Enge is somewhat better and the rest of us are well."

L. C. Donaldson, Riverton, Iowa, August 1: "Bro. Columbus Scott has been preaching in Riverton. Attendance continued to increase till at the close there were about one hundred out to hear. We hope Bro. Joseph Snively will visit us and hold some meetings in a Methodist church north of Riverton."

Heman C. Smith in reporting to the Presidency for the quarter, writes: "We have the greatest increase in any quarter since I have had charge of the present field. Reports show one hundred six baptisms by the missionary force. I do not know how many have been baptized by the local authorities in addition to this."

Bro. C. M. Fulks wrote from Lehigh, Indian Territory, July 31: "We are made to rejoice in the work of the Lord among men, the liberties, order, and development of the mission work of the church and its publications, wherein we take so much comfort. We are more full of hope as we are looking for our noble brethren, Myers and Sheppard to visit us soon with a view to locating to help move the work feebly begun here."

A. M. Chase, West Jordan, Utah, August 1: "Wednesday evening last we closed a ten-night service on the streets of Sandy and Thursday night commenced in Bingham Junction. The attendance and interest are good in all these meetings. In the last forty days I have preached forty times and thirty-five of those sermons have been in the open air upon the street. Provo will be our next point."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Officials of the Census Bureau are arranging to take the census of the religious people of the United States. The census will be on the order of that taken in 1890, but more complete than the former one. It will embrace statistics on the number of religious sects and denominations, the number of their members, the number of churches, seating capacity of churches, number of rented pews, and the income derived from them, number of missions maintained, number of orphans and indigents reported, number of ministers and their aggregate and average salaries, number of publications and their circulation, value of property owned, and other equally interesting points.

Business Manager F. B. Blair and Foreman R. J. Lambert spent last Friday in Chicago, investigating the relative merits of the Monotype and Linotype typesetting machines, and looking after other business of the HERALD Office, including the publication of the new song-book.

A city court is to be established at Zion City and the question is brought up whether justice will really be meted out by it in cases where Dowie's interests may be at stake. A party who is to be tried before it thinks not, and, considering the fact that all Dowieites take oath to obey Dowie in all things, claims that a grand jury there composed of Dowieites would be illegal, inasmuch as they would be prejudiced. His attorney proposes to make a fight to ascertain the legality of such a proceeding.

Patriarch A. H. Smith has returned from his extended trip through Minnesota. After a few days at home he will leave again to visit other fields.

The St. Joseph Gazette of August 3 devotes a column to the sermon of Elder J. A. Gunsolley delivered before the Saints of that place the day previous. Bro. Gunsolley's sermon was on the texts used and deductions made by the Reverend C. M. Bishop, D. D., pastor of the Francis Street Methodist Church, in a sermon delivered on July 26, and which appeared in part in the Gazette of July 27, upon the subject: Unity of the Church, One Faith and an Organization Sustained by the Scriptures.

With the assistance of some of Lamoni's singers, Bro. F. B. Blair has instituted a series of basket-meetings, the first of which was held last Sunday at Greenville.

The letter from Dibley, Minnesota, on page 729 of this issue should have the signature A. A. Baker, not N. A. Baker. The pages in which this letter and its signature occur, were printed before our attention was called to the error, hence our only course for correction lies in calling it to your attention.

The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the fiscal year just ended shows a steady increase in the consumption of alcoholic liquors and of cigars and manufactured tobacco. We regret that an increase in the use of these articles can be reported after so many years of continued efforts at educating the people concerning their evil effects.

Bro. W. R. Rush writing from Independence, Missouri, July 26, advises that the poor counsel with the Bishop before moving Zionward. He says his experience is that other places are better for the present.

Bro. J. M. Terry, of Oakland, California, has kindly sent us a copy of a paper issued at Oakland, California, in 1888, called, "Naked Truths about Mormonism," published by Arthur B. Deming. It is volume 1, number 1, and Bro. Terry says it lived through one issue. We shall preserve it as a historical curio.

In the Herald of Coquille City, Oregon, issue of July 21, the tent work of Elders Hiram L. Holt and David A. Anderson received mention. Their meetings are reported as being well attended and quite interesting.

Bro. J. D. Howell had a communication in the issue for July 10 of the Chronicle and Herald, published at Enfield, England, explaining the work and thanking the editor for his fair mention of the brethren lately visiting there which is helping to remove prejudice in that part of England.

RITUALISM IN CHURCH SERVICES.

A joint commission of representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met at Ocean Grove, New Jersey, week before last, to consider and prepare a "common order of worship." The following order was adopted by the commission and has been published in the Methodist organs:

Let all our services begin exactly at the time appointed and let all our people kneel in silent prayer on entering the sanctuary.

1. Music voluntary, instrumental or vocal.
2. Singing from the common hymnal, the people standing.
3. The Apostles' creed recited by all, still standing.
4. Prayer, concluding with the Lord's prayer, repeated audibly by all, both minister and people kneeling.
5. Anthem or voluntary.
6. Lesson from Old Testament, which, if from Psalms, may be read responsively.
7. The Gloria Patri.
8. Lessons from the New Testament.
9. Notices, followed by collection, during or after which an offertory may be rendered.
10. Singing from common hymnal, the people standing.
11. The sermon.
12. Prayer, the people kneeling.
13. Singing from common hymnal, the people standing. (The order of prayer and singing may be reversed.)
14. Doxology and apostolic benediction (2 Corinthians 13: 14).

Let all our people be exhorted to kneel in prayer, keeping their faces toward the minister. In the afternoon or evening the lesson from the Old Testament may be omitted. An invitation to come to Christ or to unite with the church shall be given when the last hymn is announced.

This makes the Methodist services quite ritualistic, doing away to a very large extent with the freedom of the minister to conduct the services as he may feel inclined. It is evident, also, that it is not intended that the sermon shall be a very lengthy one, for the large number of exercises preceding and three following will undoubtedly consume a large part of the time devoted to the services.

However, the curtailing of the sermon is the result of a tendency long apparent. Long sermons in the sectarian churches seem to be deprecated,—short discourses of from twenty to thirty minutes seeming to be the ones demanded most by the congregation. Hence it has become necessary, in order to keep the length of the services about the same, to add preliminary and final exercises. The new order for Methodists seems to have made ample provision for time consumers.

We still believe that the sermon is so decidedly the principal part of such services that it should be the dominant feature,—as nearly the whole of the services as possible, whether long or short, the length, of course, depending upon the will of the preacher. We like the instruction, "It always has been given to the elders of my church, from the beginning, and ever shall be, to conduct all meetings as they are directed and guided by the Holy Spirit." But that is because we believe that a sermon is something more than a literary effort. A large part of the efforts from sectarian pulpits to-day are for the purpose of amusing and pleasing. We believe sermons should be for instruction, advice, and even consist of stern rebuke if necessary. A minister who depends upon his salary, and upon his power to please for the maintenance of his salary, is loath to rebuke or criticise his audience, but rather to condone. On the other hand, the man who is "called and ordained of God," and told to "preach, teach, expound, and exhort," and who does so not merely because he is paid to do so, but because he feels it his duty, and because his heart and soul are in the faith and doctrine he teaches, is not at all inclined to condone, but he will preach as he feels led by the Spirit; and where rebuke and severe criticism are necessary he will administer such. And thus to us the sermon becomes a very important part of the services, much too important to smother it with a cumbersome ritual. The introductory and concluding exercises should, as we believe, be merely incidentals, and both should not consume more than five or ten minutes, leaving the greater portion of the time devoted to the services at the disposal of the preacher.

But doubtless the Methodists have felt the need of ritualism to maintain interest in their services, hence their commission and its report,

GATHERING—GRACELAND.

The success of every undertaking and enterprise of either a religious, educational, or a business character depends largely upon the amount of push and snap that may be put into it. History demonstrates that it has ever been the persistent workers who have succeeded. And one of the most vital and important things in every enterprise is that it shall be fully and clearly understood.

The object of this paper is to set forth by way of historical statement, also drawing from revelation, whatever we may find helpful in comprehending the relationship of the educational institute, Graceland College, to the topic of the gathering, which is dear to every true Saint.

Do not say, my kind reader, Pugh! pugh!! we know all about that institution, and do not want to hear anything more about it, for I can assure you that there are still many who are in ignorance, and thereby false ideas prevail among earnest, honest Saints. I know this from the many answers received, in reply to letters written in regard to Graceland, wherein objections have been urged against this church institution of learning. It was my conviction that a fair and a full examination would be profitable.

An elder once wrote me that he did not favor the College. Believing him to be a fair-minded man, and one who does not hesitate to express his opinion, and withal a fair and active representative man of the church, I requested that he write me fully, freely, and frankly why he did not favor the College. He wrote as follows:

1. You ask for a frank statement of my objections to the College. I had hardly formulated the matter in my own mind. I had thought but little about it, except when my attention was drawn to it in some way. I have not been among the "kickers."

2. As I have understood it, it is not a college that belongs to the church, and it teaches nothing in the way of religion, but simply occupies a position similar to very many other colleges throughout the country.

3. If this is its position, I can not see what the church has to do with it, nor why we as a church should be called upon to pay for it.

4. If anybody in or out of the church as a human being wants to help a college built for the benefit of humanity in general, I believe it would be good to do so; but why it should be a matter to be considered by our General Conference and take the attention of our leading ministers (as such) is a mystery to me.

5. If it is not a Latter Day Saint college, why is the church any more interested in it than it is in any other college?

6. Why the church or the members thereof should be called upon to support a college that is of no particular benefit to them as a church or as individuals is not clear to my mind.

7. If it is expected that it will be a good college to educate the children of the Saints in, then let the cost of attendance thereat be sufficient to pay for it.

8. Why should those who can get no benefit pay for those who do?

9. Had it been a college in which particular attention was paid to teaching the theology of the church and everything else that has an important bearing upon our church work, so that young men who are called to the ministry could take a course in it, and be thoroughly trained in "What we believe," it seems to me that the church would heartily take hold of it. In that case it seems to me it should have been located at Independence. Or even had the school been located at Independence, and run on its present plan, the thought might be presented to the church that a good college at the gathering place will probably be useful to nearly all the church. In this way I could see the idea of the church being particularly interested in it.

10. The idea prevails (to what extent I do not know) that the citizens of Lamoni and vicinity want a college to educate their children in, and that they are using the church as a means of raising money to help them in a matter that is entirely their own.

11. This may not be true, but some think it is.

12. I have tried to make the matter clear from the negative side, and hope it may aid you by correcting the mistaken ideas, or, if they are correct, aid you by letting you see the right position.

The straightforwardness of the foregoing, without bitterness or harshness of expression, entitles this man's objections to a fair and a calm examination. For the purpose of an orderly review, I have numbered the paragraphs, and the answers or explanations will bear corresponding numbers.

1. Lack of interest and a lack of knowledge relative to the facts about Graceland College, also the hearing of uncomplimentary remarks and occasionally misleading and untrue statements concerning this institution of the church, have been the chief hindering causes. If opposition to Graceland were only a mask used for the purpose of opposing the locality where the college is established, such an opposition would be unsaintlike in character, and would be quite reprehensible. We are pleased to think that there are but very few who might be called "kickers" against the college at this writing, and we have every reason to believe that the signs clearly indicate that the day is not far remote when the "kicker" will be an extinct species. "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him."—Proverbs 18: 13.

2. The donation of land for a college was clearly understood by the church authorities, and may be called the beginning of a specific work, accepted and ratified as follows:

Resolved that we look with favor upon the effort to build a college at Lamoni, to be controlled by the church.

Resolved, further, that we believe it should be a purely educational institution and free from sectarian influences or bias.

Resolved further that we give our hearty support to the present movement looking in the above direction.—Doctrine and Covenants 123: 4-6.

This was adopted April, 1894, by the full and united vote of a council designated by direct revelation. The men who voted were: Joseph Smith, W. W. Blair, Alexander H. Smith, E. C. Briggs, James Caffall, W. H. Kelley, J. H. Lake, J. R. Lambert, Heman C. Smith, Joseph Luff, G. T. Griffiths, E. L. Kelley, G. H. Hilliard, and E. A. Blakeslee.

Graceland was established as an educational institution, and to be under church control, and so it has continued from its inception.

3. This objection was a hypothesis without the element of fact in its composition, and for that reason requires no answer.

4. Donating for educational purposes meets with the approval of the elder, as it should with all Saints, and especially so for the support of Graceland, a church institution.

The General Conference being a delegate body, wherein the whole church is represented, it is proper and right that it should legislate for the protection, upbuilding, and extension of church work, as it also should seek to guard against loss and evil. Graceland College being an institution of the church, no mystery should obtain or exist in the mind of any, that the General Conference should give time and strict attention to its demands and interests.

5. Graceland is, and has been from the start, a Latter Day Saint college, and that is the reason for the church taking so much more interest in it than in any other institution of learning.

6. There is nothing in evidence that Graceland College is of "no particular benefit" to either the church or the individual members thereof. It is not within the possibility of man to estimate the real, positive good that has already come to the young people of the church, and therefore to the whole body. Space is too limited for me to give a list of the names and a resume of the work done, and being done by graduates from Graceland. Even to-day our church is reaping benefits from the faithful and sacrificing labors of graduates from Graceland, and the waves have but just commenced to circle. Give her the needed assistance and a world helper she will prove to be.

7. This must have been either a hasty or thoughtless expression. Graceland must compete with like institutions of learning, and for that reason must be governed as to tuition by the usual expense in other colleges. The proof has not yet come under our notice of either a small or a large institution meeting the running expenses from the tuition and fees, to say nothing of the cost of building, and the appurtenances necessary in starting the school. Millions of dollars are donated annually for educational purposes, and that to some of the oldest and strongest institutes of our nation. One illustration: The University of Chicago has received in the past ten years more than sixteen millions of dollars; and yet last year had a deficit of over two hundred sixty-five thousand dollars. An endowment of a hundred thousand to Graceland would give us the opportunity of investment, or the loaning the money so as to realize a safe income of six thousand yearly, and this would more than meet running expense for some time to come, and give us the privilege of assisting the worthy poor of the youth of the church. We are not writing of that which is chimerical, but of that which is practical and possible.

8. The mutual uplifting of every integral part of the household of faith should be an all-sufficient reason why we should assist those who are unable to provide for themselves, and thus fulfill the command, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."—Galatians 6:2. As also, "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification."—Romans 15:1, 2. While these passages were not written to authorize helping Graceland College, nevertheless the principle of aiding our less fortunate associates in the gospel covenant is clearly taught; and as the disciples of Christ are to be all one and equal in all things, we therefore urge that those who have, should assist those who have not; otherwise, the children of the poor, and the children of the eldership who give all their time to church work, would be deprived of the benefit of this higher education, and could never be the equal of their more fortunate church companions, neither be permitted to enter the race in the affairs of a business life upon an equal plain. What true Saint would be willing to put the children of a faithful elder at such a disadvantage, just because their father gave his life to the gospel?

9. We have the school of the prophets provided for acquiring a knowledge of gospel, or church principles, and there is also to be a house of learning provided by and under the control of the church. To make this plain we cite:

And again, the order of the house prepared for the presidency of the school of the prophets, established for their instruction in all things that are expedient for them, even for all the officers of the church, or, in other words, those who are called to the ministry in the church, beginning at the high priests, even down to the deacons; and this shall be the order of the house of the presidency of the school: He that is appointed to be president, or teacher, shall be formed standing in his place in the house; which shall be prepared for him; therefore he be first in the house of God, in a place that the congregation in the house may hear his words carefully and distinctly, not with loud speech. And when he cometh into the house of God (for he should be first in the house; behold this is beautiful, that he may be an example) let him offer himself in prayer upon his knees before God, in token or remembrance of the everlasting covenant; and when any shall come in after him, let the teacher arise, and, with uplifted hands to heaven, yea, even directly, salute his brother or brethren with these words: Art thou a brother or brethren, I salute you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, in token or remembrance of the everlasting covenant, in which covenant I receive you to fellowship, in a determination that is fixed, immovable, and unchangeable, to be your friend and brother, through the grace of God, in the bonds of love, to walk in all the commandments of God blameless in thanksgiving, for ever and ever. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 39-41.

But outside of this school of the prophets, we are to put forth individual efforts, as we also have the promise of the assistance of the Holy Spirit, so that we may utilize "all knowledge and understanding gained pertaining to all things that are expedient" for us.

There is yet another school mentioned as follows: "And let the higher part of the inner court, be dedicated unto me for the school of mine apostles."—Doctrine and Covenants 92: 3.

No provision is made in the school of the prophets, or in the school of apostles, for the membership obtaining an education of any character.

The Lord is never unmindful that we shall gain knowledge—education. Hear ye him:

"Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand. Even so. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44. None would think of applying the above to the gaining of education by the youth of the church. Neither to make such application of the following:

Also, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth. And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.

All of the foregoing quotations relate to the priesthood and direction for their qualification in the ministry.

Now for something that will furnish aid to the membership—the youth of the church as well as the ministry: "Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36. This "learning" and that by "study" we conclude to be of the character that Graceland is seeking to furnish her students, and the following is of like nature: "And verily I say unto you, that it is my will that you should hasten to translate my scriptures, and to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 12.

The church in the early thirties understood that to be of an educational character that was required, and provided the same as the history of the church plainly indicates. And even now instead of Bibles, with some, dictionaries and grammars are much more essential.

There is little danger of the church ever adopting an educational course or system to qualify young men for the ministry, rather the broader, and deeper views as to education prevails, namely: that intelligence and education, are both desirable and praiseworthy, as they increase one's usefulness. And as to the ministry, there is no disposition, so far as I am aware, to change or amend the ancient rule, "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5: 4.

Graceland operated as it is now run, if located at Independence, Missouri, would be a good thing, for the reason that Independence is "the gathering place." It was this thought, coupled with the statement rung in our ears many times, "Graceland should have been located at Independence the center spot," that furnished the first half of our caption.

So far as the principle of the gathering is concerned, Graceland is located as favorably and inspirationally as it could be at any other point.

The gathering has ever been a delightful topic of study, and is near and dear to the heart of every true Saint.

RULE FOR GATHERING.

The inspirational rule, or instruction of God to the Saints relative to gathering is as follows, and is still in force: "And again, inasmuch as there is land obtained, let there be workmen sent forth, of all kinds, unto this land, to labor for the saints of God. Let all these things be done in order. And let the privileges of the lands be made known, from time to time, by the bishop, or the agent of the church; and let the work of the gathering be not in haste, nor by flight, but let it be done as it shall be counseled by the elders of the church at the conferences, according to the knowledge which they receive from time to time."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 12. This is dated August 1, 1831, about sixteen months after the organization of the church.

Again, verily I say unto you, I will show unto you wisdom in me concerning all the churches, inasmuch as they are willing to be guided in a right and proper way for their salvation, that the work of the gathering together of my saints may continue, that I may build them up unto my name upon holy places; for the time of harvest is come, and my word must needs be fulfilled. Therefore, I must gather together my people according to the parable of the wheat and the tares, that the wheat may be secured in the garners to possess eternal life, and be crowned with celestial glory when I shall come in the kingdom of my Father, to reward every man according as his work shall be; while the tares shall be bound in bundles, and their bands made strong, that they may be burned with unquenchable fire. Therefore, a commandment I give unto all the churches, that they shall continue to gather together unto the places which I have appointed; nevertheless, as I have said unto you in a former commandment, let not your gathering be in haste, nor by flight; but let all things be prepared before you; and in order that all things be prepared before you, observe the commandments which I have given concerning these things, which saith, or teacheth, to purchase all the lands by money, which can be purchased for money, in the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my saints; all the land which can be purchased in Jackson County, and the counties round about, and leave the residue in mine hand."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 9.

This was dated December 16, 1833, or a month after the Saints were expelled from Independence. The prayers were many and fervent, before God again spoke upon this rule of gathering; but it is quite evident that he had neither forgotten nor changed his mind: "Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me."—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11. This bears date of March 3, 1873,—harmony and the wisest of instruction in all.

GATHERING.

Next we chronicle the statements of the promise of a gathering in their chronological order. So early as July, 1828, we find a promise to those who hear and obey the gospel: "I will unfold unto them this great mystery; for, behold, I will gather them as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, if they will not harden their hearts; yea, if they will come, they may, and partake of the waters of life freely."—Doctrine and Covenants 3: 15.

To the first apostles of the church, God committed "the keys" of his "kingdom, and a dispensation of the gospel for the last times; and for the fullness of times, in the which I will gather together in one all things, both which are in heaven and which are on earth; and also with all those whom my Father hath given me out of the world; wherefore lift up your hearts and rejoice, and gird up your loins, and take upon you my whole armor, that ye may be able to withstand the evil day, having done all ye may be able to stand."—Doctrine and Covenants 26: 3. This was only some five months after the church was organized, and indicated that the great and final gathering of all the redeemed had in this last dispensation its beginning; also, that troublesome times were awaiting the church. The gathering of God's people will be attended by severe trials. In the same month as the last was given, another revelation is bestowed to six elders, requiring purity of lives: "Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, the great I Am, whose arm of mercy hath atoned for your sins, who will gather his people even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, even as many as will harken to my voice, and humble themselves before me, and call upon me in mighty prayer."—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 1. In this there is a reference to accepting the gospel, and the gathering as a sequence thereto. Of like application is the following: "And righteousness and truth will

I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusalem."—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12. The gospel is the means of preparing the people for the gathering and Zion. The pure in heart are those who will abide there. I pass without note the gathering of the nations, also, of the Jews. (See Doctrine and Covenants 43: 5-6, and 45: 3. A more important revelation to the Saints is as follows: "And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we can not stand, and it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting glory."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 13, 14. We need not err, for here is clearly foretold the composition, the condition, and the greatness of Zion.

Chief among all the revealments concerning Zion, and the gathering thereto, is the following paragraph:

Hearken, O ye members of my church saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints: wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. And thus saith the Lord your God, If you will receive wisdom here is wisdom. Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center place, and the spot for the temple is lying westward upon a lot which is not far from the court-house; wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the saints; and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile. And also every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands. Behold, this is wisdom, that they may obtain it for an everlasting inheritance.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.

Missouri is named as the chosen land for the gathering of the people of God, and in Independence is the site for "the temple." There were sixty-three acres in the original purchase by the bishop of the church; the topography of that immediate vicinity has undergone a complete change during the past seven decades, all the witnesses present at the dedication have joined the silent majority, and unless the suit brought by the Reorganization for the recovery of the fraction held by the "Church of Christ" fixes and identifies the exact "spot" for the temple, we are without satisfactory evidence; however, none should take alarm in regard to this, for when the time is ripe for building the temple, God will command the people who are to build, designate the lot upon which it shall be erected, and furnish a perfect title that will be sustained by the laws of the state of Missouri. God works wonders, and he will bring surprises to untold thousands.

Inseparably are the gathering of the Saints and the building of the temple associated:

A revelation of Jesus Christ unto his servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and six elders, as they united their hearts and lifted their voices on high; yea, the word of the Lord concerning his church, established in the last days for the restoration of his people, as he has spoken by the mouth of his prophets, and for the gathering of his saints to stand upon Mount Zion, which shall be the city New Jerusalem; which city shall be built, beginning at the Temple Lot, which is appointed by the finger of the Lord, in the western boundaries of the state of Missouri, and dedicated by the hand of Joseph Smith, Jr., and others, with whom the Lord was well pleased. Verily, this is the word of the Lord, that the city New Jerusalem shall be built by the gathering of the saints, beginning at this place, even the place of the temple, which temple shall be reared in this generation; for verily, this generation shall not pass away until a house shall be built unto the Lord, and a cloud shall rest upon it, which cloud shall be even the glory of the Lord, which shall fill the house.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 1, 2.

The people of the church went with a vim to colonize at Independence and vicinity, and for some reason the Lord permitted them to be driven out of the county in the fall of 1833. Shortly after the Saints were expelled by the mob, and were sorely depressed in spirit, the Lord spoke:

Let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands: be still, and know that I am God, Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion. And all these things, that the prophets might be fulfilled. And, behold, there is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the work of the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them: and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.

The above seems to be intended to cheer and comfort the poor scattered Saints; and later comes an explanation of why God allowed this great misfortune and calamity to fall upon them:

In consequence of the transgression of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion, that they themselves may be prepared, and that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience, and know more perfectly, concerning their duty, and the things which I require at their hands, and this can not be brought to pass until mine elders are endowed with power from on high; for, behold, I have prepared a great endowment and blessing to be poured out upon them, inasmuch as they are faithful, and continue in humility before me; therefore, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season, for the redemption of Zion; for, behold, I do not require at their hands to fight the battles of Zion; for, as I said in former commandment, even so will I fulfill, I will fight your battles.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 3.

This suspended the purchasing of land, and the gathering of the Saints in Jackson County, until the time of the "little season" be past. The dark and cloudy day worked havoc and spiritual shipwreck to thousands. In November, 1851, the Spirit testified to Jason W. Briggs: "And in mine own due time will I call upon the seed of Joseph Smith, and will bring one forth, and he shall be mighty and strong, and he shall preside over the high priesthood of my church; and then shall the quorums assemble, and the pure in heart shall gather, and Zion shall be reinhabited, as I said unto my servant Joseph Smith; after many days shall all these things be accomplished, saith the Spirit."—Church History, volume 3, page 201.

April, 1860, Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith, the Palmyra Prophet, presented himself by the direction of revelation to the General Conference of the Reorganization, and was ordained a high priest, and president of the Melchisedec priesthood. Subsequently his two brothers, Alexander Hale and David Hyrum, united in the same church work, and at this writing the sons of these three brothers, grandsons of the Choice Seer, are actively engaged in the work of the gospel, namely: Frederick M., son of Joseph, a member of the First Presidency, Frederick A., son of Alexander H., a member of the Traveling High Council, and Elbert A., son of David H., a member of the Lamoni Stake High Council. Did Isaiah have these events in mind when he wrote, "So shall they fear the name of the Lord from the west, and his glory from the rising of the sun. When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; My spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever."—Isaiah 59: 19-21? If this has received a fulfillment elsewhere, we have its parallel in the religious career of Joseph Smith, his sons, and grandsons.

REGIONS.

We next press an investigation as to what provision existed for the Saints to gather, from the time of their expulsion from Jackson County, in 1833, until April 15, 1901. By turning to Doctrine and Covenants 98: 9, we learn that "places" had been appointed to which the Saints were to gather, and these "places" are known as the "regions round about," as a prudential safeguard against the day of sore trial, the Lord instructed his people: "Ye shall impart to the eastern brethren; and inasmuch as ye have not lands, let them buy for the present time in those regions round about as seemeth them good, for it must needs be necessary that they have places to live for the present time."—Doctrine and Covenants 48: 1.

A wise, thoughtful general operating a large army in an enemy's country never piles up his entire supplies at any one place, but usually selects and plants depots available to himself, and of practical easy defense against the enemy. It was He who spake as man never did, that said, "for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."—Luke 16: 8. We are not yet past the possibility of a mob driving us from the beloved home of our strongest possession. It would be presumptuous and suicidal upon the part of the church even at this late date to attempt any gathering whatever, contrary to the following: "Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works; but carefully gather together, as much in one region as can be consistently with the feelings of the people."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 7.

The growth of the church and the anxiety of the Saints for the redemption of Zion was heard by the Lord, and he made answer: "It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary I will command that they be established."—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11.

The objection to Graceland College because it is located at Lamoni, Iowa, perhaps might be removed, or at least ameliorated somewhat, by a careful reading from the biography of President Joseph Smith.

It was during this summer and fall [of 1853] that I had the first serious impressions concerning my connection with the work of my father. That spring, if my memory is correct, there was a large emigration to Utah; a part of which was camped at Keokuk, twelve miles below Nauvoo, on the Iowa side of the Mississippi River. A delegation of them visited Nauvoo, and with one of them, whose name if I learned it, I do not now remember, I had a long conversation respecting Mormonism. I had talked with many upon the matter; but had never taken the subject into very earnest consideration. This person urged that I was possibly doing a great wrong in allowing the years to pass by unimproved. I stated to him that I was ready to do any work that might fall to my lot, or that I might be called to do. I had no fellowship with the leadership in the Salt Lake church, and could not then give my sanction to things there; my prejudices were against them. In the summer and fall several things occurred that served to bring the question up; my sickness brought me near to death; my coming of age, and my choice of a profession were all coincident events, and during my recovery I had opportunity for reflection, as for weeks I could do no work. One day, after my return to health was assured, I had lain down to rest in my room; the window was open to the south and the fresh breeze swept in through the trees and half closed blinds, I had slept and woke refreshed; my mind recurred to the question of my future life and what its work should be. I had been and was still reading law under the care of a lawyer named William McLennan, and it was partially decided that I should continue that study. While weighing my desires and capabilities for this work, the question came up, Will I ever have anything to do with Mormonism? If so, how and what will it be?

I was impressed that there was truth in the work my father had done. I believed the gospel so far as I comprehended it? Was I to have no part in that work as left by him? While engaged in this contemplation and perplexed by these recurring questions, the room was suddenly expanded and passed away.

I saw stretched out before me towns, cities, busy marts, court-houses, courts, and assemblies of men, all busy and all marked by those characteristics that are found in the world, where men win place and renown. This stayed before my vision till I had noted clearly that choice of preferment here was offered to him who would enter in, but who did so must go into the busy whirl, and be submerged by its din, bustle and confusion. In the subtle transition of a dream I was gazing over a wide expanse of country in a prairie land; no mountains were to be seen, but as far as the eye could reach, hill and dale, hamlet and village, farm and farmhouse, pleasant cot and home-like place, everywhere betokening thrift, industry, and the pursuits of a happy peace were open to the view. I remarked to him standing by me, but whose presence I had not before noticed, "This must be the country of a happy people." To this he replied, "Which would you prefer, life, success, and renown among the busy scenes that you first saw; or a place among these people, without honors or renown? Think of it well, for the choice will be offered to you sooner or later, and you must be prepared to decide. Your decision once made you can not recall it and must abide the result."

No time was given me for a reply, for as suddenly as it had come, so suddenly was it gone, and I found myself sitting upright on the right side of the bed where I had been lying, the rays of the declining sun shining athwart the western hills and over the shimmering river, making the afternoon all glorious with their splendor, shone into my room instinct with life and motion, filling me with gladness that I should live. From that hour, at leisure, at work or play, I kept before me what had been presented, and was at length prepared to answer when the opportunity for the choice should be given.—Life of Joseph the Prophet, pages 756-758.

For the benefit and comfort of those who may have entertained or now have any degree of prejudice against Graceland College, or the place where it is located, be it understood that Joseph Smith wrote that article for that history and the same was published while he was a resident of Plano, Illinois, and be it further understood that he was not a member of the locating committee that fixed upon Lamoni as a place to which the Saints might gather under the provisions of "in the regions round about." It was under such rule that the branches at St. Louis, Bevier, Stewartville, St. Joseph, and Independence commenced their work.

The omen of a more satisfactory and a more perfect condition of home and inheritance was signified when the Lord said: "The Spirit saith further: That Lamoni, Iowa, having been made by the agreement of the church under the law of the land the principal place of business of the church, it is wise and expedient that it should be considered and declared by the conference to be the seat of the presidency of the church, and in due time be made a stake."—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 12. This revelation is dated April, 1894, and Lamoni had been the principal place or headquarters of the church by settlement from 1881, and by adoption of "Articles of Association," June 6, 1891. (Rules of Order, pages 162-172.) Nevertheless, the Lord said, in 1894, it was "wise and expedient" for the General Conference to act. The conference adopted by a unanimous vote the recommendation of the revelation, and Lamoni became to the whole church the principal place of business, the seat of the Presidency of the whole church, with a promise that it would become a stake.

At the close of the conference, April, 1894, there was a "Joint Council" of the First Presidency, the Traveling High Council, and the Bishopric. Among the things adopted by this council was this:

LOCATING IN REGIONS ROUND ABOUT.

Resolved that all parties wishing to change their location be recommended to correspond with the bishopric for information.—Doctrine and Covenants 123: 12.

Thus it will be seen that in locating Graceland College at Lamoni no risk of loss has been incurred, and only prejudice, unwise action, or foolish opposition will prevent the college from fulfilling its mission in our church work.

There came to the church in April, 1901, an improved condition relative to the gathering, wherein the Lord directed: "My people are directed to establish two stakes; one at Independence, one at Lamoni, Iowa, organizing them after the pattern which is found in the law; a presiding high priest with counselors, a high council, and a bishop and his counselors. These stakes shall be made to comprise the boundaries of the districts as they now stand, the center at the towns and places named; and the majority of the councils that should be chosen should be residents of the places named, in order that there may ever be a sufficient body to transact the business required."—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 10.

The above in no wise disannulled or made nugatory the fixing of Lamoni as the seat of the First Presidency, or principal place of business of the church. It does, however, provide two places of equal importance to which Saints may gather, the vocation of life and the counsel of the Bishopric to aid all in selecting their homes.

So far as the locating of Graceland College, with its relation to a gathering place and its being available and beneficial to the whole church, is concerned, we hope we have amply demonstrated that it was no mistake. Church advantages at Lamoni are equal to any, and that, too, without proximity to the worldly amusements and allurements, so hurtful to pure religion and contaminating to good morals, found in large cities.

10. We have been aware for some considerable time, and are still aware that there are in circulation mischievous reports that are derogatory to the character of the citizens of Lamoni as regards Graceland College. Some are told in a harsh, bitter, accusative spirit, while others, in a more diplomatic method, assail in a smooth, confidential manner; both are equally injurious and reprehensible. The people of Lamoni and vicinity, both the church members and those not members, have been practical in their helpfulness to the College, and that without selfishness or sinister motive. If the following could be carefully observed, and lived up to, all the stumbling-blocks would soon be moved out of the way of Graceland's progress and ultimate success:

The college debt should be paid, and ministers going out from conferences held by the elders of my church are not expected or authorized to throw obstacles in the way of the accomplishment of that which has been intrusted to the bishopric to pay this great debt. Their right to free speech, their right to liberty of conscience, does not permit them as individuals to frustrate the commands of the body in conference assembly. They are sent out as ministers to preach the gospel, and their voices if opposed to what may be presented to the conference should be heard in the conferences, and not in the mission fields, to prevent the accomplishment of the object with which the officers of the church have been intrusted.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 16.

Let the above be complied with, in unity of voice and means, and the College debt will soon disappear as the fog before the summer's sun, and the operating of the College will be an assured fact.

11. The belief by uninformed and honest, God-fearing Saints of those misrepresentations of truth and fact has been the sprag in the wheel of our success. Had there been truth in those statements, it would have evinced that the majority of the leading men of the church were unfaithful servants of the body. Saints, can we afford to allow evil to obtain in the church? Nay! Therefore, let none stand as obstructionists to the revelation of God, and the acts of the General Conference.

12. We thank the brother for his honest, negative statement, and trust that the contents of this paper will assist to dispel whatever of cloud, doubt, or of darkness that may still exist against Graceland College.

With unfeigned love for unsullied truth and an earnest trust and prayer that we, as the "army of the Lord," shall be able to present at all times an unbroken phalanx to the enemy.

My pen shall now rest from this topic, unless a necessity shall confront us.

Still on duty,

THE fundamental remedy, both for the mobs, on the one hand, and for the offenses which provoke the mobs, on the other, is to be found in a better and more thorough education. The right kind of education will train the children of the more unfortunate classes of our population, not merely in such arts as reading and writing, but also in sound ideas about work and citizenship. Fortunately, although the actual number of lynchings for some weeks past has been greater than the average, the general trend of our civilization is toward a more lawful and orderly life.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for August.

Questions and Answers.

HOME STUDY SERIES NO. 1.

The questions, "What is the character of the work contemplated by the Daughters of Zion?" and, "What are they doing that the Sunday-school and Religio are not doing?" are among the first usually asked by those whose interest we seek to enlist.

In the earlier days of the Sunday-school the same questions (differing slightly in form) met the worker there, and later on the worker in the Religio was expected to answer similar ones. "Does not the gospel cover it all?" was often asked.

Let us say briefly that the gospel does cover it all. It is gospel work all of it, hence it is good work and greatly needing to be done; but as the body has many members so has the work of the body many divisions, and that the body may prosper the work of each division needs to have its due share of attention in order to be thoroughly done.

In answering the first question, namely, "What is the character of the work contemplated by the Daughters of Zion?" let us say, it is foundation work, and contemplates the laying of a solid, firm, foundation upon which a beautiful superstructure of character may be reared.

"Ah, but is not this mainly the work of parents?" you reply; and we answer, "It is." "How, then, can it be done by the Daughters of Zion or by any other organization?" In reply let us say we are most firmly persuaded that it can be done only by parents and done thoroughly only by educated, God-fearing parents.

"Where, then, does the work of this organization come in?"

It comes in simply as the work of parenthood united for the accomplishment of the highest results. Parenthood taking counsel together and together not only praying for wisdom to guide, but seeking wisdom as God has commanded out of all good books. Parenthood thoroughly alive to the responsibility resting upon it and baptized with the Spirit of Christ sufficiently to understand that, to a certain extent, all parents are responsible for the welfare not alone of their own children but the children of other parents as well. Parenthood which realizes the right of every child to be well born; which realizes the responsibility and power which God has laid upon it, in intrusting immortal souls to its guidance; which has a realizing sense of the strict account God will demand at its hands for the manner in which this responsibility has been met.

The recent sickness and death of Pope Leo has drawn upon Rome and the Roman Catholic Church the eyes of the entire civilized world, and the literature of the day has been flooded with sketches of the wonderful growth and prosperity of this powerful church. The dying Pope, as spiritual head of the church, did not have to ask in vain for the children intrusted to his care. The children have been cared for and by millions respond to the call of the mother church. In this lies the secret of her success—her mighty power.

Has Zion done as well? her daughters are beginning to inquire. And what is the testimony which comes to them upon every hand? We leave this question for you to answer, and when you find (as you will find) that children born to parents in the church are straying from the fold, indifferent to the faith and often even opposed to it, will you not be ready to inquire why this is so, and will it not come to you with all the force of a deep conviction that somewhere there is neglected work?

"If one member suffer, all the body suffers with it." Let us illustrate:

"Boys will be boys," says a thoughtless young mother, not realizing for a moment that to a very large extent she has it in her own power to determine what kind of men her boys shall be. She has not studied, she has not been taught the laws governing her own being, and has a vague, indefinite idea of her duties and responsibilities. She does not realize that in all his creations God governs by immutable laws. That obedience to these laws places her in harmony with him and that violation to them (no matter how ignorantly done) brings discord and sin with sorrow and suffering in its train. Thus in her child or children are perpetuated the mistakes of her own ignorance and many times such mistakes bring trouble, even disgrace and reproach upon the entire body—the church.

Now we ask, Is it not good work to lend a helping hand to such?

Is it work to be done in the Sabbath-school, among the children—in the Religio among the young?

Yes, a part of it may be done even there, but it can never be done thoroughly by any one but parents or guardians and to such the Daughters of Zion say: Come and let us counsel together, pray together, and together labor for the advancement of the cause we love—the cause of Zion the pure in heart.

Said one of our highest spiritual authorities to us recently: "That there was a demand for such an organization is evidenced by the fact that a few of the sisters, though their number was not large, perfected such an organization. The benefit to them individually comes by reason of the fact that collectively they are wiser than the individuals of the organization, and they learn of their own mistakes by the experiences of others. The one great object of the organization should be to eliminate ignorance upon the part of the rulers of the home by a mutual education, advice, counsel, and even consolation. The mental picture of experienced age wisely guiding the footsteps of young parenthood is one to bring joy to the heart looking and longing for the redemption of Zion."

How to Interest a Class of Boys in the Sunday-school.

A class of boys until they get about fourteen years of age is not so hard to keep in the Sunday-school as older ones. The parents are largely responsible for their being kept in the school. The teacher's first effort must be to place himself on a level with the scholars and become familiar with each one. The good old motto, "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you," is one of the characteristics of a teacher, and many times this thought has urged me to be punctual at Sabbath-school, when my greatest desire is to have each scholar punctual.

The example of the teacher whose daily life proves him to be a Christian in word and deed is one that should be a model for the children. We must have their interest at heart; therefore, we should be prayerful and ask for wisdom that the lessons taught may be impressed on their young minds and of lasting benefit to them in their future lives. The main object is to get them so interested in the lesson that they will be anxious to know more of the lesson under consideration. It is very hard to try to teach one whose mind is otherwise occupied. If I find one of that kind, I pay especial attention to that one till I find he has the thought of the lesson. Oftentimes we find they are paying more attention than we had any idea. Be careful, loving, and faithful to duty, and if we can not always have things as we wish, let us do the best we can and leave the result with Him who doeth all things well.

What to do With a Disorderly Scholar.

(Concluded.)

Much of what I have said will apply equally well to the order of the entire school and yet of course this requires a little different treatment from the class, and I must next address the superintendent. We must remember that disorder breeds disorder. A school that is allowed to be disorderly at the opening will be disorderly when it separates into classes, and class disorder means a disorderly close, when the school comes together again.

To get order in a school, one must

BEGIN BEFORE THE SCHOOL BEGINS.

With delightful zeal, the children are likely to be over-prompt. When the school, as in so many places, is held just after the morning services, the grown-ups are still in church, and those children that did not go to church have the school-room to their riotous selves. No matter where or when the school is held, some older persons should be in the school-room half an hour before the opening. If I were the superintendent, I should want to be there myself, ready for consultation with any officer or teacher, and eager to take advantage of any chance of becoming acquainted with the scholars. If this at any time is difficult or inexpedient, I should appoint some one else to this service, or perhaps a succession of persons, each taking the task for a month. Moreover, the trouble may be greatly diminished by urging the children not to come so long beforehand, and the parents not to send them over-soon.

Whoever superintends these early comers must have something provided to occupy their time. Mere forcible repression will only insure a postponement of disorder. Perhaps the best aid is a book full of pictures, each of which requires a little explanation. Or a collection of photographs from Bible lands may be used with fine effect.

The second necessity, if one would have an orderly school, is that

THE SCHOOL BEGIN ON TIME.

I deprecate the use of a call-bell. It should be enough simply for the superintendent to step to the platform and raise his hand. If teachers and scholars are taught to watch for the signal and respond to it instantly with perfect order, the drill and the weekly obedience will prove one of the greatest gains that come from the entire work of the school.

This initial quiet should have a well-understood purpose. What better than prayer, silent prayer, with bowed heads for God's presence and blessing? Print a brief form for it, and hang it before the school for the use of the younger scholars, and as a constant model for this unvoiced petition. At the close of this moment of silent prayer, without prelude except the sounding of the chord, let the school sing softly some stanza of a familiar hymn, which may be changed from month to month or from quarter to quarter.

A regular and

helps much to make an orderly school. Pack it full of things for the scholars to do. Leave little room for the superintendent, secretary or any other officer. The talking superintendent is a recognized Sunday-school peril. Let him talk up the school in private, and not talk it—down—in public. In Mr. Wanamaker's great school the young folk's are kept constantly eager for their part. Now they must say, "Good-morning, Mr. Wanamaker." Now they must hold up their Bibles. Now they must sing. Now they must read in concert. The opening exercises are an animated drill, and no one has time to grow fidgety.

It is very necessary, if an order of exercises is to be carried out in an orderly way, that in it, no pauses while the superintendent is finding his place in the Bible, or consulting with some other officer, or while the secretary is feeling in his pockets for some announcement he intends to read. Such gaps are like holes in a fence, through which a whole drove of mischiefs is likely to leap. If the superintendent, with a strong voice, a decisive air, and thorough preparation of all details, passes swiftly from point to point of his program, he will sweep the school along with him in perfect and beautiful order.

In spite, however, of all these precautions, some particularly unruly scholar or set of in disturbing the school. The trouble will radiate out, and, first of all, it will be necessary to locate its source, and deal with that especial class or scholar. Too often the mistake is made of scolding the entire school for what is really the fault of a very few and the school speedily resents this injustice.

THE FIRST STEP

is always for the superintendent to speak to the teacher. It is his business to preserve order in his own precinct; never take his work out of his hands till he has proved himself incompetent. Sometimes, instead of speaking to the one teacher, it will be sufficient to give an indirect hint through a general talk at the teachers' meeting on the subject of disorder, and the teachers' responsibility for it.

Failing the teachers' effective action, is for the superintendent to deal directly with the offending scholars; never by a public reprimand, which is more than likely to fix them in opposition to the rule of the school, but by private exhortation.

THE NEXT STEP

If even this proves useless,

THE THIRD STEP

is a call upon the parents, a frank statement of the condition of affairs, the child himself being present, and a loving, manly appeal for their assistance in the matter.

THE LAST REMEDY, of course, is expulsion; and I am persuaded that, long before the need for that arises, the other remedies I have named will have proven efficacious.

The Sunday-school may be made as orderly as the secular schools. It will not be as easy, because in the secular schools the teacher is backed up by legal authority. But authority may be obtained for the Sunday-school superintendent and teachers. It is to be won from the parents. Get them to visit the school often. Their presence will of itself transform many a turbulent scholar. Better, enlist them among the regular members of the school. A disorderly scholar whose parents are interested and regular participants in the school work, is indeed a rare bird. As the parents come in touch with the needs of the school and understand the aims of the teachers, they will gradually become ready and eager to back up the officers and teachers with whatever authority they need, to reprove, correct, and discipline. The parents will be added to the superintendent's staff; they will become his orderlies.—Amos R. Wells, in the New Century Teacher's Monthly.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado, July 27.

Editors Herald: Since the opening of tent meetings in our city by Elders Emsley and J. F. Curtis four additions have been made to our branch by baptism, viz.: June 28, Mrs. B. M. Mitchell; July 5, J. C. Allen and Mrs. Cora B. Derry; July 12, Esther Vincent, the latter was formerly from Higbee, Missouri.

Bro. J. C. Allen, sometime before his baptism, came to us asking for the use of our chapel that he might present the views of the "Church of God," of which church he was a minister. He preached one night only. Elder Emsley Curtis replied the following night. Bro. Curtis treated Mr. Allen kindly in the reply. Mr. Allen weakened on his position, and in a few days gave in entirely, and later announced himself a candidate for baptism.

Bro. Allen will make a valuable addition to the cause here, we are assured.

The Spirit was in our midst at our prayer-meetings, giving direction, admonition and comfort.

By direction of the Spirit it was decided to move the tent to Denver, which was done last Friday, accompanied by the Elders Curtis.

Thousands of tourists visit this place at this season of the year. Among them an occasional Saint.

The work at this point looks hopeful at present. We have lately completed payment on a small chapel; the ground is rented.

I preach once in a while in the branch. Health fair. Am employed at secular labor all the time.

Ever your brother,

A. BURTON HANSON.

ALMA, Nebraska, July 28.

Editors Herald: Elder Waldsmith and I came to this place yesterday and will begin services here to-night in the park. The Utah Mormons have been in this place and have scattered their tracts and the people learned they were Mormons and of course their minds are considerably prejudiced.

We had one of the warmest discussions we have had for some time with a Baptist minister on the streets in Franklin. We held our meeting on the street and on the last evening this minister got up after our meeting and said he wanted to enlighten the people some, or disprove some things I had stated in my discourse. After he got through I gave him such an overhauling as I deemed necessary on an occasion of that kind, and allowing the statements of the people afterwards to be a criterion they never before saw a man get such a whipping with his own club. I had a talk with the editor of a paper there the Sunday afterward and he said the preacher freely confessed that he had gotten into a position where he could not hold his own. The editor gave me permission to put in his paper quite a good article explanatory of our faith. We go from here to Wray, Colorado.

Editors Herald: Last winter I held a few meetings seven miles north west of here at a place called Hoosierbend. Considerable interest in the gospel was manifested there. Since coming here I have kept the teachings of the gospel before the people whenever occasion offered. Being a member of the Epworth League, I am enabled to give them quite a sermon during its meetings. My talks and explanations are well received but still they will not come to us.

On the 19th the Methodist minister told his congregation that those sects that believed in present revelation were morally inferior to the Christian sects and spoke of the Mohammedans as an example of what that unscriptural belief will do for such people. He quoted the last chapter of Revelation to show that there is no such thing as present revelation, maintaining that the canon of scripture is full and was completed A. D. 96, and that the curses of God would rest on any one who added to the Bible. He also claimed that he did not believe in present-day miracles and that miracles ceased with the apostles. After he closed his meeting I went to the front and told him that I could not indorse much of what he had preached. He smilingly replied, "I thought you would not." I then told him that I would reply to his sermon and invited him to come and hear me and he promised me he would. As the Methodists have torn down their old church and are erecting a new one, they are obliged to occupy the town hall which is controlled by one of the pillars of the Methodist church. I was somewhat afraid that I might be refused the hall, but to my surprise he told me that I could use it free of charge although he charges his brethren a good round price for the use of it. So last Saturday night I made my answer but the Methodist minister told me that he could not be there. I excused him but others did not; they said, "I told you he would not come out." Although the crowd was small they seemed to be well pleased with the effort. One young man told his father that the Methodist minister could not stand before the Doctor ten minutes in argument.

I also hold meetings every Sunday night at Oak Park about two miles from here and occasionally teach the Bible class at that place. I have been assistant superintendent in the Viola Union Sabbath-school for some time but find that, although they can not even try to answer my arguments, a union Sabbath-school is a very poor place to forward the interests of the kingdom of God.

Yours in the one faith,

DR. F. J. POTTER.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, July 14.

Editors Herald: The inclosed letter is from my brother who is an elder in the Christian Church. I have been holding a friendly discussion with him by mail on the restored gospel for more than two years. I finally sent him a "Voice of Warning," and requested him to give it a careful investigation, and this letter is the reply he gave. Bro. H. Sparling has used it in two discussions with the Christian elders.

The Saints in the Springfield Branch are still rejoicing in the restored gospel and the one great hope of the final gathering of God's people to Zion. We are more than glad of the fact that we are living in the regions round about Zion. We believe also that we must live humble and righteous lives, if we would be partakers of the great gathering.

We have a nice little church building here, and a local membership of about seventy-five, with a full staff of branch officers, the writer presiding. The Saints have made quite a sacrifice in purchasing a tent for missionary work in the city. Our tent and telescope organ cost ninety-five dollars. Bro. Sparling is the chief in the tent work, and it would be hard to get a better one for the place. He deals in plain facts as they are laid down in Holy Writ. We hope to do much good for the Master during the summer.

Ever praying for the success of this great latter-day work, and the safe return of our beloved Bro. Joseph to his native land, I remain,

Yours for the one faith,

1544 Irving Place.

J. W. QUINLY.

WATERFORD, California, March 11, 1903.

Dear Brother and Family: Your letter received several days ago, but my health has been such that I could not give you an early answer as you requested; and now, would wait a little longer, but fear you might think that I did not appreciate your letters. I assure you that I prize your letters very highly, as they have been a source of information on some points heretofore I could not satisfactorily understand. When I wrote you last I hoped that in my next letter I would be able to write more lengthily, but now will have to be content with what I am able to do. My stomach trouble affects me so now, that I can not sit down very long at a time. Have a continual fluttering or palpitation in the pit of the stomach. While moving around I do not feel it so badly. The past three days have felt better. Am taking a simple remedy, and eating as little as possible, and have hopes that I will soon get over it.

Had a letter from Frank a few days ago. He stated that Vivian and Ralph were just getting over a severe spell of diphtheria. For a while Ralph's recovery seemed doubtful. Balance of family in usual health. As the current news here would not be interesting to you, will give you an estimation of "Voice of Warning." Have read it twice and commenced it the third time. This time more slowly and studiously, for there are so many new things brought up, that knock the underpinning out from under the various Protestant churches. The reader to be true and honest to himself and give regard and fairness to the writer, can not cast the book aside. The arguments are worthy of consideration, and if all are truths, it is time for the world to wake up.

The first chapter, on "Fulfilled Prophecies," I can heartily endorse; and it is the simplest and plainest I ever had the pleasure of reading. No fair and honest reader and believer in the Bible can deny the facts as stated. To do so, would be to deny the Bible.

The second chapter, on the "Fulfillment of Unfulfilled Prophecies," is also good. Some points I must examine more closely, before I could deny them. It is somewhat on the line of thought of my letters to you a year ago. If there was more study of the prophecies by the preachers of the day, I am confident there would be fewer creeds binding man to a certain faith and doctrine. Some of the prophecies of the Bible I can readily understand, for they are in harmony with history, both ancient and modern. With my limited knowledge of the Bible, there are grand and sublime truths that I can not comprehend, while they stand out clear as the noonday to those that are learned, and have made them a study.

The writer in "Voice of Warning," being right on so many of the prophecies, there is a possibility that he is right on all. I pray for aid to help me to comprehend and understand the truth in its fullness. The third chapter, on the "Kingdom of God," still further knocks the props from under the churches. All along the writer has been taking out the props gradually, but now in this third chapter, the whole fabric of the combined so-called churches, is totally demolished, a mass of ruin. Have read the chapter carefully and can find no fault. It is New Testament doctrine, as taught by Christ and his apostles. Yet there is a query in my way, and that is whether without the Book of Mormon could we not have gotten back to the organization of the church on the same plan. Have never read the Book of Mormon, and in the book before me I can not see that anything new has been added to the plan of salvation or the organization of the church, more than is found in the New Testament. Before the Book of Mormon came forth, we had the New Testament and the plan of salvation, plainly and specifically given. Now here is my trouble, and I ask why could not you and I, and a number of others, all agreed on the apostolic pattern, have gotten together and pledged ourselves to stand on apostolic ground and to teach the same? Could we not have received the various gifts promised? At present I can not help but reason in this manner. If I am in error, I want to be set right. I have some grounds for so reasoning, from the fact that in the early days of A. Campbell's reformation (or it would be more right to say the reformation started by Campbell), in 1859, I remember reading in the Christian Evangelist, from the pen of Elder Jacob Creath, of several cases of healing through prayer and anointing with oil. The case I will give you I distinctly recollect, and have thought of it many times since, while reading the commission as recorded by Mark. A gentleman in Kentucky, a member of the church, who had been confined to his bed for a long time, having lost all power to walk, sent for Jacob Creath, whom he knew to be an earnest Christian, and a believer in the command of James, "If any are sick, let them call the elders," etc. Elder Creath came, and calling in another elder of like faith, they prayed, anointed with oil, and commanded the man to rise up and walk, which he did, and the following day went about his usual business. Other instances were given, but I do not remember the details as in the above case. Jacob Creath, John Smith, and others during those days, gave their time and talent in preaching, asking no remuneration, only that the people accept the gospel. Even the Christian Church has departed somewhat from the faith and teachings of the reformation. To-day it is money, money, and the church that is able to pay the largest salary, the preacher says that God has called him to the charge of that church. But nay, it is the money that calls, and not God. If the preachers of to-day would follow Paul's example, working with their hands, supporting themselves, and contributing to the wants of others, the world would have more respect for the gospel. The world to-day looks upon preaching as they do upon other kinds of business. They follow it for the money, and to avoid physical labor. The churches of to-day really cater to the world for support, with their socials, festivals, baby shows, etc. It is first cousin to gambling. The Lord never intended for the church to call on the Devil for support, and this is just what the evil one wants. The Lord has always been ready and willing to take care of his people, if they trust him confidently. I believe in supporting those that preach the word, but not in paying large salaries, and thus making merchandise of the gospel. I firmly believe that those who preach the word with an earnest desire to do good, and with the love of God burning in their souls, that God will provide a way for their support. It was so with the apostles and the seventy that were sent out. They perhaps will never be rich in this world's goods, but a rich legacy is awaiting them that will be their joy and comfort through the ceaseless ages of eternity.

Well, my brother, I am glad that I have one brother who is God-fearing, and is living up to and enjoying the privileges of the gospel. My prayer is that each one may yet get the true light. Will you pray to that end? I realize that I am not what I ought to be. God being my helper, I shall continue to seek after more truth and light. Well, I must close for this time. I began this letter three days ago. You will notice that I have only read the book the third time, up to the fourth chapter. As soon as I feel better, will write you again in regard to the remaining chapters. Write as soon as you can. Am always glad to hear from you. I will remain here until after harvest, if I can get along with the work. Will do all I can to be with you the latter part of the summer. I trust this will find all well. May the Giver of all good abundantly bless and keep you, is the prayer of your brother,

J. M. QUINLY.

CLINTON, Prince Edward Island, July 24.

Editors Herald: I came to Clinton, Prince Edward Island, July 13. I find a very hospitable, kind-hearted, industrious, hard-working people. Their veneration for the minister and to all that relates to religion surpasses anything I ever saw before. It seems to be a sacrilege for one not to kneel in meeting, they have so accustomed themselves to churchgoing. I wish our people were more that way. During prayer, all bow their heads, thus reverencing the minister if not the Lord. I began to preach the day I got here and the longer I am here the larger the congregation. I have reason to believe the opening wedge for future success is being driven—so may it be.

The population of the island is one hundred three thousand. Its early settlers were French, after which, in 1783, the Scotch people settled here, later other nationalities have moved here and now the blood is quite mixed. The Island is one hundred sixty miles long by about forty miles wide. The soil is a sandy loam of a yellowish color and quite productive. Fine oats, barley, wheat, and potatoes, also turnips and other roots are raised here in abundance. There is but little manufacturing carried on. There are more than two hundred miles of railroad on the island. The people as a rule seem very fond of their island. It indeed is a little continent by itself—a real garden in the sea.

The conference in Williamsdale, Nova Scotia, was as good as could be expected under the circumstances. One was baptized. The preaching was done with fair liberty and good audiences. The work in that section is moving just slowly. Unity of action is much needed.

At Glenville a more active spirit is manifest. When the Saints learn to take religion into their every-day life and make it a part of their business, using their money and their means to carry it on, and look after the interest of their own meetings, then God can and will bless. As soon as the farmers get busy at their haying it will be as well to leave them till another time. I will then go to Hants, Halifax, and Kings Counties, Nova Scotia.

The climate at this season of the year is delightful as the Island is situated in the Gulf of St. Lawrence about twenty miles from the Nova Scotia shore. The cool sea breeze comes to us from every direction. It was very dry here during the early part of the season, hence the crops are backward. Of late beautifying showers have made their appearance and all nature is smiling in its garments of green.

Hastily and hopefully,
S. O. FOSS.

From Over the Border.

Editors Herald: The town of Listowel is one of the important ones of Perth County. Besides its minor establishments it has a brewery and a piano factory, the former for the manufacture of liquid crime and the latter for the pleasure of the ear. More modern, imposing residences for a town of its size I have not seen; yet there are some hovels. Opulence and plenty abound; yet there is poverty and want. The place is noted for its infidelity. The preacher market is well filled; yet there is a terror of sin and intemperance.

I came here on the 4th inst. and to-night I will have preached twenty-three sermons and held or assisted in two other meetings. Much tract distributing and visiting has held a small audience who, for the most part, are attentive listeners. Work and no preaching in a place like this is more efficient than preaching and no work. Lazy orators are played out. The man who depends only on the rostrum to proselyte better be at home with his wife. He will do more good with the plow and pitchfork earning tithing money than he will with his empty voice and unwilling legs. Action and energy can get listeners nearly any place. If a crowd does not come, strike out and get one. Calling and talking are the best posters to put up. They are seen and heard; the paper ones are not.

A little incident. The sister with whom I stay, Sr. Phillips, has a daughter named Pearl, in her sixteenth year, who has been baptized. Yesterday morning she came to me, and I discerned she had something to relate to me of extraordinary importance to her. I gave her the chance to tell, and she gave the following account of a vision she had received upon awakening: "I found myself in front of the Queen's Hotel in the night-time. There I met Miss — first, and directly after, two boys. She with one of the boys went under the drive-shed, as I knew, for a bad purpose. As they started off I quoted to her these lines of one of our hymns:

" 'Tis a war that calls for valor;
'Tis a conflict with the world;
There can be no furlough granted;
(Next three lines omitted)

We have all for life enlisted,
In the army of the Lord.'

"The other boy invited me to accompany him under, but I refused, and turning I started off for home disgusted with their conduct. When I neared the top of the hill between the scene described and our place I was met by Jesus who, laying his hand upon my head, in a very gentle tone pronounced these words: 'Pearl, I feel proud of you.'"

The other girl, a little older than Pearl, has incurred a bad name by running the streets at night with the permission of her parents when she should have been at home. I said to Pearl: "Avoid her as you would leprosy, especially on the street. She has all to gain and you have all to lose. She is a bad girl and will make you as bad as herself if she can. She is in a slough of impurity and nobody cares to go to her rescue for fear of their own contamination and sticking fast in the filth with which she is surrounded. The time will come when with burning regret she will gaze upon the verdant summit, the smiling hill-top from whence she has fallen. There she will see the firm and noble stalwarts of chastity and virtue, whom she has deserted to descend into the vale of pollution down beneath. She vainly beckons them to come to her; they refuse. And she has no power to return to them except by a long tedious journey of many years."

DIBLEY, Minnesota, July 28.

Editors Herald: I left home on the morning of June 19 for the mission field, a little late in getting started; but on account of circumstances, it seemed that I could not get started sooner. I arrived at Clitherall, Minnesota, on the following morning, to attend the reunion held at that place. Although the attendance was not very large, the Spirit of God was there to a marked degree. The preaching was mostly by the missionary in charge, F. A. Smith, Bishop G. H. Hilliard, and Patriarch A. H. Smith. The rest of the mission force and local priesthood assisted in the meetings and did some preaching. Although the preaching was along a different line than it generally is at a reunion, it was very instructive and accompanied by a good degree of the Spirit, and the Saints all seemed to rejoice and feel strengthened. As for one, I know it did me good. There were six baptisms, and I believe much other good done.

I left on the morning of June 29 in company with some of the Saints for this place. Commenced preaching in a schoolhouse Tuesday evening, with a fair attendance, good attention, and fine liberty. Bro. E. A. Stedman arrived Wednesday evening, but not in time for services, and remained until July 13, when he left to attend to other work as district president. Ye writer continued the effort every other night for two weeks longer, with the assistance of Brn. Will Shackow and L. Whiting, who are here building a house for Bro. John Corliss; but on account of haying and harvest being almost here, we closed Sunday evening, the 26th, for the present, the same good spirit prevailing in all the meetings, the largest attendance being the last night.

When we came here a lady by the name of Smith was quite sorely afflicted with a cancer, and the doctors said she could live but a short time. She was able to be up and around only part of the time. Calling on her at her request, she told me if the Lord would give her strength she wanted to be baptized, and also at her request we administered to her and she felt better, and after about a week had passed, and she had been opposed by some of her relatives, I administered the ordinance of baptism, and when she came up out of the water she said she felt better, and has been quite well since, being able to attend church, and the other day she walked to one of the neighbors, over one half mile from their place. So God be praised for his goodness to his children!

Sr. Lamphier's two children were also baptized while here and we believe others are near the fold. Do not know where I will go from here as yet, as this is now the busy season, but will try and find some place to labor. Have been blessed with a good degree of God's Spirit in all my labors, so desire to continue in the good work. And as the time seems near when all things must be accomplished and there is so much to be done, we should put forth every effort that lies in our power, that the honest in heart may be gathered out and his children be prepared to gather home to Zion.

N. A. BAKER.

Mission address, AUDUBON, Becker County, Minnesota.

DES MOINES, Iowa, July 28.

Editors Herald: Came here on yesterday evening to begin a missionary effort associated with the local workers of branch, Sunday-school, and Religio.

Public services have been arranged for each night while literature is being distributed from house to house by local helpers under the supervision of the missionaries. The public will be invited to the chapel for private conversation, when the distribution of special literature and sale of church books will be conducted by one of the ministers.

To the pleasure of all, the branch is now in a splendid working condition, and the present efforts are expected to accomplish much good. During a week following the district conference at Boone, I held services in the German Reform church there, which resulted in baptizing Bro. Thomas Rodgers and Sr. Anna Brown. From thence I went to Pilot Mound, where Bro. T. F. Jones had secured the use of the Seventh-day Adventist church. Here we found but little interest.

From there I came to Dallas Center where on the 28th of June a union service of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Progressive Brethren Churches was held for the purpose of opposing the progress of the faith, Reverend J. Kirkendall of the Methodist Episcopal Church delivering a lecture both in the town and about eight miles in the country. On the 29th Bro. W. Christy and I visited Reverend Kirkendall, and while he refused to discuss the issue, or come to hear a reply, yet he said he believed we were sincere, and let us have what books he had the disposition of that he had used in his lectures; and when others were seen whose books he had used they granted us the use of them, except Reverend Gurley, of the Presbyterian Church, who positively and vehemently refused us the loan of "The Story of the Mormons" by Linn, although he had previously advertised in the paper that any one could get it to read. We, however, obtained information from Reverend Kirkendall that what he used from the book was from E. D. Howe's work, and I then did not care for the book for I showed Howe's unreliability, although Linn uses him as one of his most authoritative witnesses. When I had showed in my reply six of the lies told by Howe I imagined the people who heard decided that the book was well named "The Story of the Mormons."

Had quite a number present the first night of the reply; not so many out the second night, but we were sure good was done. The Progressive Brethren not being satisfied that all had been done that should be done in opposing the faith, occupied a week ago last Sunday night in another "union service" of all the churches in town except the Catholic by delivering a lecture against some of the "principles of Mormonism." This was not an attack upon the character of Joseph Smith and the Saints as had been the previous lecture, but an effort to ridicule the teachings of the church and show contradictions therein, and then closed by saying that there were similarities between us and the Brighamites in that both believed in Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. After I had presented evidence that we did not believe alike in any of the above items, and that the only similarity between us was they claimed to believe in these items, according to their interpretation of them, but not as they should be represented, nor as they claimed to represent themselves, we believed in them correctly repre-ented, and gave proof of it. I then showed that Reverend Grisso and those associated with him in this "union service," agreed with the Brighamites in at least seven points, viz.:

1. Brighamites say Joseph Smith introduced polygamy, so say these preachers. We say he did not, and the courts of the land say he did not.

2. Brighamites say, "Pay heed to what we say without question;" so say these preachers.

3. Brighamites say "Don't go to hear representatives of the Reorganization," so say these preachers.

4. Brighamites say that the Book of Mormon has a "loop-hole" for the introduction of polygamy, so said these preachers.

5. Brighamites say their testimony is better than ours, so say these preachers.

6. Brighamites like the King James Translation best, because it gives more consolation for the practice of polygamy than the Inspired Translation, see 1 Kings 15:5, so do these preachers.

7. Brighamites pretend to take the written word for their guide and do not, neither do these preachers.

Both lecturers used the text, "Prove all things," but made effort to keep the people from hearing our side, making a special canvass on last Saturday evening urging the people not to attend our reply which I gave last Sunday afternoon. Despite their efforts about a hundred were within hearing distance.

Before the lecture Reverend Grisso refused to have a private conversation with me, and after the lecture I went to see him, requesting the use of the history of the Progressive Brethren Church. He refused it upon the ground that he was afraid I would use it in my reply as he did not want I should. At this time he said, "We have a right to poison the minds of the people against going to hear the reply." I asked, "What right," but no reasons were given for any such right.

The papers published a challenge for religious discussion without hesitation. It will be noticed by the following extract from Bro. Christy's article in the New Times how he and his wife were used when in attendance at the last lecture:

"After shaking hands with Reverend Kirkendall . . . myself and wife got a very positive invitation to stay away from the Methodist Episcopal church in this language: 'I am surprised to think that you would have the cheek to come here; I am ashamed to think that you would dare to come here to do as you have done.'"

This is only a sample of what they and the Saints there have suffered from other religionists of the town, but they have all borne it patiently; so much so that people are seeing with whom the Christ spirit is, and now several are condemning the actions of the ministry, and are defending the Saints. Even boycotting is still resorted to in order to crush out the Saints, but God has admonished the Saints to be faithful and all would end well.

At Waukeem, meetings were held from the 12th to the 19th, with much interest, Brn. Christy and Reiste with their wives were noble helpers, some of them being present at each service to assist with the music, although they had to come about nine miles. An invitation was extended by the owner of the hall for me to return this fall, and he would furnish the hall and bear the expense of lights and board me while there free; besides he rendered material aid when I needed it as badly as I have ever needed it in all my missionary efforts in the state of Iowa. This need was caused by expense incurred through exigencies arising that had to be met.

I held forth from the 23d to the 26th at a schoolhouse near Ortonville, where the Brn. Harvey live. Only a few attended except Saturday evening. This was principally on account of the extremely busy time in the country. Here I was helped quite liberally. Here again the brethren and sisters from Dallas Center rendered great help by way of music. May God abundantly bless these Saints, who have become endeared to me in the noble help they have rendered me in all the efforts I have made to defend the work against the severe opposition there, when the burden rested heavily upon them!

Besides the opposition of the ministry we have the opposition of the profane class, who manifest no better spirit, but at times do not have it under as good control, especially when they are stimulated with intoxicants. Cursings and railing accusation, with threats have I and the Saints had to meet on the public streets of Dallas Center. That is now, however, subdued, and we are continually praying and feel somewhat hopeful that it will remain subdued, and finally be removed.

One of the profane class had been selected as chairman of the park committee, and when we requested the use of the public park we were refused, but this made us friends. God is making the wrath of man to praise him. We now hear rumors that the Presbyterian minister, G. D. Gurley, who wrote such a scurrilous article against us last summer, will give a lecture against us. So goes the conflict in this mission.

God has wonderfully favored me with the presence of his Holy Spirit of late, and I rejoice that I am considered worthy to suffer for his sake so long as I am permitted to minister the word. When I think of the sad condition of those deprived of the privilege of ministering the word either from physical infirmities or through being overcome of evil I am saddened indeed.

Hopefully,
J. F. MINTUN.

CORDOVA, Illinois, July 28.

Editors Herald: Bro. J. Arthur Davis and writer came to this place yesterday from Savanna, where we had spent Sunday. Bro. Ezra Robinson's folks met us at the train and are caring for ye missionaries at present. Last evening we borrowed his horse and buggy and drove to Cordova. Could not find a room to occupy for meeting, so got consent of the village board to preach on the street, which can not be excelled except for seating convenience. We began our service to half a dozen men, but it was not five minutes until the broad sidewalk was lined with at least a hundred people. Attention was one of the special features of the occasion.

The work is new here, but we believe it will be a splendid place for the tent in the near future. Our hearts were made glad when the Spirit of the Lord came to our rescue and Paul's experiences (as he stood before the rulers) came to our minds. Our boldness increased, and thanks be to our Father in heaven we were permitted to occupy with great freedom of thought.

Savanna Saints are a little, unorganized band of workers with a small church and lately have, with the help of the brethren, attracted the attention of some of the best people in the city. We were pleased to note this onward progress. We expect to remain here this week.

Yours for truth,
O. H. BAILEY.

DEFIANCE, Ohio, July 30.

Editors Herald: We are six miles south of Defiance, and have been unfurling the gospel standard for eight consecutive appointments in the Union church. Have been greeted with fine large audiences of intelligent listeners. Interest is excellent. A body of people known as Christians dating from Antioch are about the only religious class recognized here. They are a liberal and tolerant people. We have visited with them at their homes, and find them willing to learn the truth. I am impressed that many will take hold of "the rod of iron" in this section. The people in these regions have not heard of the Latter Day Saints to any extent, but they recognize that we have truth, and they are so anxious to learn.

A very pleasant incident was the finding of Sr. Lucy Bodenbender (nee Mathison) of Gallands Grove, Iowa, located here with her sister, and who has not forgotten the gospel as of yore. A visit with them brought up pleasant memories of bygone times and well-known faces in Western Iowa. Sr. Lucy is glad the gospel has come to these parts.

I believe Western Ohio to be an important field, and the time is opportune. I am sure that such preludes as has pointed to success in the past, are manifest here. The crowds are so eager to hear, and so large, and such good liberty is given in the presentation of the word, it indicates a work for the Lord.

Bro. Beckley was at Antwerp at last report. Bro. John Erter wrote us that either a union church or the opera house would be secured. Bro. Erter's grove will be opened for a two-day meeting a little later along. We have appointments this week for this point, and will have to give way Sunday for Reverend West's regular appointment.

Hopefully yours,

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, July 24,

Editors Saints' Herald: I have been reading the letters from the Saints written for the HERALD and feel strengthened and encouraged for having done so—strengthened because I realize more than ever that we are fighting under the command of a leader who knows no defeat and who will ultimately lead us to a final, lasting victory—encouraged as I see all about me and in all directions fellow comrades faithfully fighting to gain the same victory for which I am fighting—realizing that in such a Christian union there must be strength such as Satan can never overthrow.

If it is essential that we should be united in order to make rapid progress and gain the final victory how necessary it is that we guard ourselves carefully day by day that we may do nothing which will cause a separation in any way! Let us be united—united in our prayers, our songs, our work, our movements—working with one aim in view—the salvation of souls and the advancement of God's kingdom here on earth. Let us each and every one see to it that we do our full duty, not simply a part. Let us keep the law, not a part of it. Remember Christ said we should live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God, and if we do that we must keep the law of God in its entirety.

Am very glad to say that the work here is progressing nicely and much interest is shown in the work. The Saints are generally working for the advancement and upbuilding of the church and new life seems to be taking the place of the indifference of a few months ago. Think we shall have more added to our number in the near future as several not members seem to be quite interested in the work. May the Father above aid us that we may cause those in Satan's ranks to prove traitors and come and join the ranks of the army of the great King!

With a prayer for the advancement of the work and the upbuilding of God's kingdom, I remain,

Your brother in the faith,
WALLACE A. SMALL.

FALLS CREEK, Pennsylvania, July 25.

Editors Herald: Elder James D. Porter was directed by a dream to come to this place. He came the eleventh of this month, held a series of meetings, and baptized me after holding eleven meetings to large congregations and with good liberty. He went to Lindsey, held five meetings at that place and baptized Edith Barry. He then returned to this place and on last night held a discussion with a Russelite on the street before a large congregation. The subject under consideration was the resurrection of the dead and the personal reign of Christ on the earth for the space of a thousand years with the Saints. They each had two speeches and Bro. Porter made many friends to the work. To-day at two o'clock he spoke on the ten virgins and at the close of the meeting he baptized Cora Anthony, my wife. To-night he will hold services at my residence to attend to the confirmation and to bless my five children and administer the Lord's supper. On to-morrow he will endeavor to open up the work at Sandy Valley, about four miles from this place.

The work at this place is in a prosperous condition. Many are near the kingdom. There must have been a thousand people at the baptizing Sunday. Bro. Porter went to Sandy Valley and secured the union church for a series of meetings, and I think lots of good will be done at that place. Many of the people from there attended the preaching here.

Bro. Porter is an earnest, faithful worker for truth and wants to spend his whole time in the work. He has a friendly, sociable turn and always has a kind word for all. May the Lord bless him and all others whom he has called to preach his gospel, is the prayer of your brother in the one true faith of our Lord and Master,

WILLIAM ABNER ANTHONY.

DES MOINES, Iowa, July 26.

Dear Readers: I have been comforted many times by reading the letters in the HERALD and the kind words of the Saints. As I read the many letters my heart is made to rejoice to know that there are so many precious souls striving to serve their Lord and Master. I can truly say that the Lord has blessed me in my efforts to serve him.

We have two dear little boys that the kind Father has seen fit to give us and our hearts were made to rejoice on the 28th of June when they with seven others were buried with Christ in baptism. They are young in years but seem to have a very clear conception of their duty toward their heavenly Father. Our prayers are that God will always find us striving to do our duty, that as they grow to manhood our lives may be the means of keeping them true to the covenant they have made.

We attend Sabbath-school every Sunday. I have a class of thirteen girls, ranging from nine to thirteen years, of whom I am very proud. They seem to take such interest that I feel well repaid for the effort I make in trying to present the truth to them. At times I feel so weak and unworthy. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may live humble, worthy to be called a Saint, and hold out faithful to the end.

Your sister in bonds,
EMMA JOHNSON.

BEARDSTOWN, Illinois, July 23.

Dear Herald: We have a Sunday-school of fifty-two scholars. The harvest is good but the workers are few. God has truly sent his Spirit here in our Sunday-school. Our school is mostly children of other denominations. They are bright, willing little workers and are deeply interested in the lessons. Some are of parents who fight the work. Saints, there is no time to lose in this work. The prince of the power of the air is at work on all sides to drive the Saints away from their duty with rain and storms, and the world will find some most unreasonable faults with the Saints that they might feel condemned and neglect their work. We should arm ourselves with wisdom and remember the Savior's words, that when men shall speak all manner of evil against you for my name's sake then ye know ye are mine.

Asking an interest in the prayers of God's children that health may be my blessing and that I may be able to do the work of the Master in cheerfulness,

I am your sister,
MRS. A. H. LUFKIN.

AKRON, Ohio, July 26.

Dear Editor: The gospel has been preached here by Elders Greene, E. P. Schmidt, F. J. Ebeling, and our worthy district president, V. M. Goodrich. These noble brethren and the local ministry have brought many near the kingdom. We have a nice little branch here, the majority of whom are trying to live up to the covenant they have made with the Lord and to build up the kingdom in this city. We have a fully organized branch with three priests, one elder, one teacher, and the writer being the deacon. Brn. McCoy and McConnoughy have announced street-preaching. Last night they went down town and found the United Brethren preachers holding forth with a large crowd because of their fine singing. When they got through our brethren stepped up and said they had something to say. Bro. McConnoughy expounded to them the gospel in its beauty. They held the crowd for about forty minutes with good liberty and spirit and announced Bro. McCoy to speak Saturday night. The brethren have a permit from the mayor allowing our elders to preach on the street. He gave us three dollars for the benefit of our church which the faithful members are trying to build hoping that it will benefit the work. We are trying to spread the gospel all over the city and we believe that the gospel tracts will be a great help to us.

Your coworker for Zion's cause,
683 South High Street. HARRY KOZMAN.

RICHMOND, Victoria, June 25.

Editors Herald: In reading conference minutes lately to hand we were glad to note that Australia was well to the front in numerical gain, thus confirming a prophetic message given some time ago that the hastening time was upon us. We are glad to be able to report good progress for this year also. It is just a little over a year since Bro. A. H. Smith visited Victoria and organized a branch in Melbourne with just about twenty members. To-day we have seventy-four upon our branch record, which speaks for itself. Some have moved in from other branches, but over one half of that number have been baptized in Melbourne, so that we have reason to feel grateful to our heavenly Father.

Bro. Wight is here at present but leaves us on the 8th of July for Adelaide, where he intends staying for a month and will likely engage in debate. There is almost certain to be another debate here when he returns, with Mr. Blair, who debated with Bro. Wight last year and intends having the debate published in book form. The previous debate was on the Church of Christ, authority, signs following, and Book of Mormon. Still Mr. Blair is hardly satisfied. He wants the Reorganized Church to figure in his book, so that it will be complete. It will be a good thing for us if the debate does come off. The former one advertised us splendidly and a good many baptisms followed. The Saints are looking forward to the event with eagerness.

The Utah elders are still here tracting from house to house with the same persistency but do not seem to be making any headway. They are careful never to introduce any of the hidden mysteries. In the summer months they hold forth on the streets, but in the winter confine themselves to tracting alone. Our mission paper is doing good service out here and is greatly appreciated. We are hoping for the day to come when it will be a weekly.

In bonds,
189 Lennox Street. W. MACKIE.

PEORIA, Illinois, July 30.

Editors Saints' Herald: Bro. F. A. Russell and I are still continuing street work in this city. What the result will be we can not say; but we are sure that we are reaching a great many people in this way, and are furnishing them with information regarding who and what we are that we could not do if we were holding forth in an obscure hall somewhere. People of all classes stop and listen and carry away tracts with them. Who knows but this will be the way by which we shall be able to reach the masses of the people in the large cities of the world?

To-day we go to Pekin to look after an opening there for street work, and if successful, we will move on thither later.

Yours still in the conflict,
207 Callender Avenue. H. E. MOLER,

WATERVALLEY, Kentucky, July 29.

Editors Herald: I am still seeking to become obedient and faithful and more worthy of the Lord's kindness and blessing. I suffer loss many times because I am overcome by those little things which we should not notice at all. I suppose Satan is trying to lead me along by degrees, and is feeding me on such as I am able to bear at this time. My Father knows I want to live to his glory and honor, but I fail many times. I hope to continue striving to do my Master's will while I shall live.

We regard this great work as the grandest of all works in the earth, and look upon the various denominations with a degree of pity and wish for a plan by which we might bring to bear upon their minds the importance of this marvel and wonder, which God has brought to pass thus far, also to enable them to realize the worthlessness of the creeds, disciplines, confessions of faith, and general laws gotten up by fallen man. When I see them hire to travel from place to place and teach the people that God is a liar, and that the true servants of God are a disgrace to their community, I think, How long, O Lord, wilt thou allow those blind deceivers to keep such sway in the earth? I often think I would love to take vengeance on some of those blasphemous slanderers, but God has said, "Vengeance is mine." When I see those claiming to be called of God preach for money, I wonder if any of those claiming to be Latter Day Saints will spend the Lord's money in order to enjoy the luxuries of this world, when some of the Saints are in severe need and remain so, because of the lack of supplies in God's storehouse. We hope there is not one of the Saints who would shun to work or is pretending to preach simply to get an easy living, as some others are doing. We should try to serve God from a business standpoint. May the Lord bless one and all!

Your brother in Christ,
J. W. WILLIAMS.

WEBB CITY, Missouri, August 1.

Editors Herald: I have been very busy since General Conference. We have had interesting meetings everywhere I have been. I have been preaching on the streets for the past two months to large crowds of attentive listeners. Have been assisted by J. M. Richards, F. J. Christie, J. T. Riley, Henry Smart, and H. E. Jones.

At Seneca, Missouri, we preached in front of a saloon and a butcher shop. The best of respect was shown us by the saloon-keeper. The last two nights the billiard hall was emptied of its players to hear me preach.

While at Seneca I preached five sermons in twenty-nine hours, four in open air, and one funeral sermon. While at Pittsburg, Kansas, and Seneca, Missouri, my voice was heard three quarters of a mile. Since June 7 I have preached seventy sermons and the most of them in open air, and my voice is as good and strong as when I commenced. To God be the praise! This is in fulfillment of a revelation to me years ago through Bro. Abner Lloyd when I had the grippe and it settled on my lungs and I had hemorrhages.

I know the power of God is in this church. Can I repay God for what he has done for me? No, but I will try and do what I can for the spread of the truth. This is my second year for street preaching. We have also scattered many tracts.

For truth,
F. C. KECK.

COOKES POINT, Texas, July 28.

Editors Herald: We have just closed one of the best conferences that we have had in this district. A good turnout and interest from beginning to end. Of the missionary force we had John Harp, J. W. Bryan, and S. R. Hay. On Sunday we had an extraordinarily spiritual social service. Two were called to be ordained to the office of elder, Johnnie Hay and John M. Nunley. We ordained one to the office of priest, baptized and confirmed one old lady who had been a member of the Baptist Church a long time.

We have arranged for meetings at Lone Pine in Burleson County commencing on second Saturday in August, one commencing on the first Saturday in August on Navasota River at the usual place of our meetings, one in Falls County at Grady Schoolhouse, commencing second Saturday in August, Brn. John Harp and S. R. Hay to be associated together, Brn. J. W. Bryan and Higgin, Brn. T. L. Veale and E. W. Nunley. There will be other two-day meetings held in the district by us, but we are not prepared to make appointments. Let us hear from the scattered Saints in the district as to demands for preaching. Let the Saints do their best to assist in these meetings in every way that they can. If we discharge our whole duty, our efforts will be crowned with success.

Your brother in the one faith,
E. W. NUNLEY.

District treasurer B. J. Dice reported on hand $2.50. Present officers were reelected for the coming quarter. Arch E. McCord was ordained an elder under the hands of I. N. Roberts and J. A. Gunsolley. John Topham was referred to the Pleasant Grove Branch for ordination as teacher. Preaching by I. N. Roberts, A. H. Smith, J. A. Gunsolley. Adjourned to meet with the German Stewartville Branch, October 3.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Northeastern Missouri District, Greeting: Funds are needed to keep tent work going for the summer. If each member in this district will pay one cent per week we will have enough for tent expenses. Can each one do that much, that the gospel may go to those who have never heard it? The district is large and few in it have heard our faith. That Saints may know if they are in the Northeastern Missouri District, I will tell you the counties in it: Carroll, Chariton, Linn, Sullivan, Putnam, Adair, Macon, Randolph, Howard, Boone, Callaway, Audrain, Monroe, Shelby, Knox, Lewis, Marion, Ralls, and Pike. Scattered Saints, please send your contributions to Bishop's Agent J. T. Williams, Bevier, Macon County, Missouri. In branches, pay to the Bishop's agent's collectors or to the branch president. Do not forget your tithes and offerings, as Bro. Williams is in need of money for the general expenses of the church. Those sending him money please state what it is for.

There never were better opportunities for gospel work than now and if the Saints do their duty and stand faithfully by the work, good results are sure to crown our efforts, and many who do not now know the truth will bear a faithful testimony to this great latter-day work by reason of the sacrifices and prayers of the Saints in sustaining the ministry. Those knowing of good openings for preaching, please let me know and we will try to faithfully occupy as wisdom directs. Home address, Knobnoster, Missouri.

JOHN KALER.

Second Quorum of Seventy.

Please correct Circular Letter No. 4, to agree with the following: 6. Berve, Amos, 601 North Elmwood Avenue, Traverse City, Michigan. 14. Crumley, Charles E., 964 Court Circle, Los Angeles, California. 34. Metcalf, James W., 1819 Ninth Street, Louisville, Kentucky. Any of the brethren who may not have received a copy of the new circular letter, please notify the undersigned at 207 Callender Avenue, Peoria, Illinois, and I will send you a copy. H. E. Moler, secretary.

Northern Missouri Reunion.

We received a letter from a sister wanting to know in what part of Missouri, Stewartsville is. Stewartsville lies twenty-one miles directly east of St. Joseph, north of Kansas City about sixty miles, on the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad. Those coming by Kansas City can buy their tickets direct to Stewartsville by way of St. Joseph or Cameron, Missouri. Do not buy a ticket to St. Joseph and then on to Stewartsville, for this will cost you sixty-five cents extra. A round trip ticket will be 10 per cent off, making the round trip from Kansas City for $3.40. Do not forget the dates, August 28 to September 6. We have been blessed with good rains in the past week, so there will be plenty of feed for those coming by team. Remember the prices are at cost. This reunion is not organized for an investment but for the purpose of bringing God's chosen people together for ten days where they can get acquainted with the Saints and friends and hear the word preached by our ministers, such as Brn. Fred'k M. Smith, of the First Presidency, M. H. Forscutt, J. A. Tanner, Joseph R. Lambert, one of the Bishopric, and our own missionaries. Write the secretary of your wants. Charles P. Faul, secretary.

Wanted.

A person or persons to do the cooking and other necessary work in the boarding tent at the Oakland, California, reunion, September 4 to 13, 1903; for which ample remuneration will be given. Man and wife preferred. Let us hear at once from any who will take this work. Address J. M. Terry, 1219 Chestnut Street, Oakland, California.

Reunion Notices.

On account of a misunderstanding as to time of the Dow City reunion, this notice is published that all may know that the opening date is August 28. Certificates, however, can only be honored when obtained August 29 to September 4 inclusive. Be sure to obtain certificates sometime between these two dates. Plenty of able ministers will be in attendance. A. H. Rudd, reunion secretary.

The reunion of the Northern and Central California Districts will be held at Oakland, California, September 4-13, 1903. The grounds are at Sixteenth and Magnolia Streets, opposite the chapel. There will be an eating-house on the ground, where good meals will be served as cheaply as possible. Tents will be rented as follows: 7½x9½, 3-foot wall, $1.50; 10x12, $2.00; 12x14, 5-foot wall, $2.75; freight and other necessary expense extra. Burlap flooring 50 cents extra. Bed springs, cots, etc., will be furnished as cheaply as possible. It will be pleasing for the committee to hear from each branch or individual as to how many are coming and who will want tents. Negotiations are on foot for some Eastern talent, yet we have with us those who can tell the gospel story nicely. The committee is laboring to make this reunion a great success. Come, let us feast together. Committee: J. M. Terry, chairman, 1219 Chestnut Street, Oakland, California; Joseph Ferris, secretary, 630 Chestnut Street, Oakland, California; J. M. Cockerton, C. A. Parkin, J. M. Anderson, J. Driver.

A reunion will be held at Minatare, Scotts Bluff County, Nebraska, commencing September 17. As many of the Saints as can come are expected to be present. Come prepared to camp out for ten days or two weeks. Our new tent will be there to hold meetings in. Come, dear Saints, and bring the Spirit of the Master with you, and let us have a time of rejoicing long to be remembered with pleasure. The ministry of this field are expected to be present. R. O. Self.

I have received letters of inquiry in regard to boarding with Saints during the Clinton District reunion to be held here commencing August 14. The Saints here are not in a position to keep any one and all should come prepared to camp on the grounds, if possible, as board with lodging will be scarce. Meals can be obtained at reasonable rates; also tents, if ordered in due time. Respectfully, C. H. Athey, Taberville, Missouri.

Two-Day Meetings.

Two-day meetings will be held in the Northern Michigan District at Alpena, August 22 and 23; at Fork, September 5 and 6. J. A. Grant, district president.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Eastern Colorado District will convene at Colorado Springs, 743 East Willamette Street, at 10 a. m., September 5, 1903. Reports should be sent in due time to the secretary at Wray, Colorado. J. B. Roush, president; A. E. Tabor, secretary.

The conference of Spring River District will meet at Sherwin, Kansas, September 4, 1903, at 7.30 p. m. All are invited, J. T. Davis, district president.

Northern California District conference will be held in connection with the district reunion which convenes Monday, September 7, 1903, at corner of 16th and Magnolia Streets, Oakland, California. All branches are hereby requested to send in statistical reports, and members of the priesthood to present written reports of labors performed. We also press upon the attention of presidents and clerks of branches the necessity of legally appointing delegates to represent them in conference assembled as that system will be adhered to. Convention Notices.

The Northern California District Religio convention will convene on Wednesday, September 9, at Oakland, California, at place of district reunion, Sixteenth and Magnolia Streets. The business session will convene at 10 a. m. During the afternoon an interesting program of music, papers, and discussion will be given. The evening will be devoted to an entertainment given by the Religios and Sunday-schools of San Francisco and Oakland. We desire as full a representation as possible from the local societies. Please send in all reports early to the district secretary, Mrs. E. Keeler, 1654½ Seventh Street, Oakland, California. Mrs. Vira E. Lawn, president.

Died.

NEWCOMB.—Bro. Robert W. Newcomb died of heart disease at Delhaven, Nova Scotia, July 10, 1903. For twenty-one years he was a faithful Latter Day Saint, being the first fruits of the preaching by Elder Joseph F. Burton in that place, joining the church when persecution was rife against the then new doctrine, but who by his "patient continuance in well-doing" and honest upright life did much to allay prejudice to the work and died retaining the esteem and respect of everyone who knew him. He leaves a widow and nine married children to mourn their loss.

ROSS.—At her home in Oakland, California, July 17, 1903, Sr. Jane Ross passed from a long and severe affliction of rheumatism, to a condition of rest, at the age of 55 years, 8 months. She leaves Bro. James Ross as chief mourner. The funeral was at the home and well attended. Bro. R. Ferris offered prayer and J. M. Terry spoke words of comfort and admonition. Sr. Ross and husband were once engaged in the Bickerton movement, he holding the office of apostle in that church. Peace to her weary soul!

LEEKA.—Myrth Irene, the only child of Edward and Sr. Lizzie Leeka, was born February 23, 1898. She was called to depart this life July 26, 1903, at the age of 5 years, 5 months, and 3 days. She was taken sick on the morning of July 22, and all was done that could be done to ease her suffering. She was patient and never complained, but on Sunday, the 26th, she closed her eyes on this world, and is now free from her pain, and her dear spirit is in the paradise of God. The funeral services were held in the Latter Day Saint church, near Bro. William Leeka's, on July 27, 1903. Sermon by D. R. Chambers.

DAVIDSON.—Arthur Allen, the oldest son of A. J. and L. C. Davidson born March 24, 1880, near Bartlett, Iowa, departed this life July 8, 1903, at the age of 23 years, three months, 24 days. He united with the Latter Day Saint Church at the age of 14 years. The funeral services were held at the home of his parents, near Glenwood, Iowa, on Friday, July 10, 1903. Sermon by Elder D. R. Chambers.

MILLARD.—Sr. Mary Jean Millard was born at Arm Prior, Canada West, now the site of Ottawa, May 9, 1825. In New York in 1855 she married John Patton Millard, who died in 1878. She was the mother of four children, three of whom are still living. From New York they moved to Ohio, and in 1860 to California. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church about 1875. She has lived at Brighton, California, from 1864 until her death, which occurred July 21, 1903. Her faithful, consistent life has made her many friends. Funeral July 24, at Sacramento; sermon by R. J. Parker.

The August Leaves contains still more of interest concerning Elder C. W. Wandell. The closing pages of his diary are reproduced, and a sketch of the mission of Elders Wandell and Rodger is given, the latter by Elder G. R. Wells.

As is the custom of that periodical, the August number of the North American Review deals comprehensively and authoritatively with a number of subjects that have a leading place in the public mind. "The Proposed British Zollverein" is the title of a symposium, in which the Right Honorable Sir John E. Gorst, M. P., opposes that policy as "A Crushing Burden to the British People;" while Archibald R. Colquhoun advocates it as "A Policy that would Conserve the Empire," and Henry Loomis Nelson, Professor of Political Sciences in Williams College, considers "Its Effect on United States Trade." Wolf von Schierbrand discusses the "Results of the German Elections." An interesting feature is a posthumous poem, by R. H. Stoddard, entitled "An Old Story: a Roumanian Folk-Song." Brigadier-General W. H. Carter, U. S. A., enumerates some of the influences which have retarded the "Anglo-American Friendship," which is now a happy fact. James P. Kimball denounces recent "Aggressive Forest Reservation" which menaces the interests of portions of the West. Archibald S. Hurd describes the phenomenal growth of "Russia's Fleet" in recent years and points to the significance of that fact in its relation to Russia's expansion in the Far East. J. Keir Hardie, M. P., gives much timely and interesting information regarding the purpose and operation of "Federated Labor in British Politics." Mrs. Kate T. Woolsey deprecates "Woman's Inferior Position in a Republic." Luigi Luzzatti defines the "Economic Relations of America and Italy." Lord North concludes his personal memoir of his grandfather, who was Prime Minister of England during the Revolutionary War. From the point of view of an officer in the regular army, Lieutenant-Colonel James Parker, U. S. A., analyzes "The Militia Law of 1903" and John J. Esch, Member of Congress, examines the same measure from the standpoint of one who has been an officer in the National Guard. The number concludes with the eighth part of Mr. Henry James's novel, "The Ambassadors."

I am solicitous for the fresh-water springs of our country, and their preservation and utilization for our comfort and pleasure. Springs over which the early Greeks would have built temples we too often allow cattle to trample into mire; and that which nature intended for a thing of beauty, a delight to the eye and the refreshment of man, becomes a nuisance. I plead with the improvement associations, and with all societies for the preservation of natural beauty, to rescue all such springs along roadsides, and to develop all latent and feebly flowing springs, and wherever possible secure the consent of farmers to allow paths to be made through their fields to them. In Germany not only is this done, but sign-boards tell the traveler where they may be found and the distance to them. When reached, a simple seat is found upon which one may rest. Often a rustic shelter is built over the spring, and after such refreshing rest the traveler goes on his way "thanking God for a good spring" and with grateful remembrance of a kindly country. If American farmers will not permit paths through their fields to springs, many of them will permit the water to be piped to the roadside, where some simple yet artistic device may be placed to receive it.—Jessie M. Good in the Chautauquan for August.

The idea of culture has always included a quick and wide sympathy with men; it should hereafter include sympathy with nature, and particularly with its living forms—a sympathy based on some accurate observation of nature. The bookworm, the monk, the isolated student, has never been the type of the cultivated man. Society has seemed the natural setting for the cultivated person, man or woman; but the present conception of real culture contains not only a large development of this social element, but also an extension of interest and reverence to the animate creation and to those immense forces that set the earthly stage for man and all related beings.—President C. W. Eliot in the August World's Work.

A two-part story, "The Day of the Dog," by the versatile George Barr McCutcheon, begins in the August number of McClure's and leaves the hero in a situation at the end that is almost a stroke of genius. It is a delicious combination of farce and romance, based on the every day business of a matter of fact Chicago law firm, and may be warranted as good reading for the dreariest dog-day of the month. The pictures by the author's brother, John T. McCutcheon, the well-known cartoonist, are as laughable as one could expect and in the very spirit of the story.

The story of a family life as perfect as that of Meyer Guggenheim and his seven sons is rare, indeed. Edwin Lefèvre, in the August Cosmopolitan, traces the development of this family of millionaires from the time when, as a small boy, the elder Guggenheim came from Langnau, Switzerland, and began life as a Philadelphia pedler, to the present time when he is the revered adviser of his seven sons, all of whom are prominent and wealthy men of affairs. No article could be a better lesson on the value of family coöperation and home sympathy in business life.

In August Autumn Leaves Elder Henry C. Smith closes his series of articles on the Kirtland Temple. Earnest A. Webb has a poem on the same subject, and the frontispiece is a fine cut of the Temple.

POPE PIUS X.

On August 4 the conclave of the sacred college of cardinals, which was held in Rome, succeeded in electing a successor to Leo XIII, whose death vacated the papal throne. The choice fell upon Cardinal Giuseppe Sarto, patriarch of Venice, a man now sixty-eight years of age, the same age at which Cardinal Pecci became Leo XIII. The newly-elected pope has chosen the name of Pius X, and under this name was crowned on August 9, in St. Peter's, Rome. It is estimated that between sixty and seventy thousand people attended the coronation ceremonies.

As was expected before the election, the newly-chosen pope is an Italian. He was born at Riese, Italy, June 2, 1835. From this same town came Benedict XII, who was chosen pope nearly six hundred years ago, a peculiar coincidence being that he was chosen on the same day of the month as was Pius X. It was therefore expected by some that Cardinal Sarto would choose Benedict as his papal name.

From his early youth it was designed by his family that he should enter the church, and hence his education was such as to qualify him for this work. He was educated at the seminary of Treviso and Padua University. He received the priesthood early, being ordained a priest when only twenty-three years of age, at Castel Franco, and for nine years he continued as pastor in a small parish, when he was assigned as coadjutor to the priest at Tombolo.

In 1867 he was appointed parish priest at Salzano, a village of over three thousand inhabitants, where he stayed but two years, when he was called to a higher position. In 1875 he was elected chancellor of the bishopric of Treviso. He continued to fill positions of responsibility, being actively engaged in church and educational work, winning the love of the people among whom he worked. His excellence as a churchman soon attracted the attention of Pope Leo XIII, and at the age of forty-six he was appointed bishop of Mantua, where he remained for nine years, gaining the reputation of possessing great executive ability and being one of the greatest preachers in the church. His work as bishop of Mantua was closed by his being created a cardinal and his assignment by Leo to the position of patriarch of Venice. The action of Leo in this instance was likely to cause some trouble, in that the position of patriarch of Venice was considered within the province of the Italian government to fill. The consistory of 1893, which appointed him, adjusted the matter with the government by conciliatory measures and compromise, and he entered upon his work in the city of Venice, where until his election as Pope Pius X he carried on his church work in such a way as to win the love and confidence of the entire city and the highest authorities of the government.

ACCORDING to the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission on Railroad Accidents in the United States, within the three months ending March 31 last, three hundred people were killed and two thousand eight hundred thirty-four injured in train accidents. Other kinds of accidents, including those sustained by employees while at work, run up the total casualties to eight hundred twenty-seven killed and eleven thousand four hundred eighty-one injured. Inasmuch as one thousand six hundred fifty trains were in collision and one thousand one hundred eighty-one trains were derailed during this same quarter, it is evident that these accidents can not be put down entirely to the fault of the passengers and employees themselves.

D. MACGREGOR, Ridgetown, Ontario, August 4: "Saints here are talking church. The mission generally seems to be in a progressive state. Experiencing no special trouble while marked union seems to bind our missionary force."

It was while at Venice that Cardinal Sarto created a sensation by publicly declaring in favor of the union of church and state. Whether or not his utterances concerning this offended the Pope, was not made known by any action or words from Leo XIII, who maintained a silence which was interpreted by some to be equivalent to his approbation. What Cardinal Sarto said and did in this matter and what Pope Pius X will say and do, will not necessarily be the same, though the same man. The difference in position makes all the difference in the world. What was said by Cardinal Sarto can safely be taken as a criterion of his personal views, indicating him to be a man very liberal in view and fearless in expression.

The great interest manifest throughout the world in the selection of the successor of Pope Leo XIII indicates the general acknowledgement, tacit at least, that such selection has a bearing upon the affairs of the world in general. When it is remembered that the pope is the spiritual head of about two hundred and fifty millions of people, it is at once seen that his influence is such as to justify the concern of the world in the selection of a new pope. It is probable that many people among the protestant churches do not realize to what extent the pope is venerated by the Roman Catholics. John S. C. Abbot, in his "History of Italy," quotes Abbé J. H. Mignon, who wrote in his book, "Projet de Solution de la Question Romaine," as follows:

There is one name which my lips never pronounce but with profound veneration. It recalls to me in my mature years, as in my more tender youth, the power and the goodness of Christ visibly represented on earth; and the day in which that name shall fall upon my ear, without awakening in me filial respect, I shall believe that an impious thought has come to succeed in the depths of my soul that pure faith which I have imbibed with my mother's milk. This name is that of the pope.

This was written by a representative man of the Roman faith, and very probably portrays with great fidelity the sentiments of a very large majority, if not all Roman Catholics. It is very apparent, then, that the pope becomes a person of tremendous influence throughout all the world where Catholics are found. It is no wonder, then, that people are asking the question, what will be the policy of the newly elected pope?

It is well, therefore, that a man has been chosen to that powerful position whose selection meets with almost universal approval, as being a man of liberal views and great learning and wisdom. While the Catholic Church as a whole seems bound to resent the wresting of the pope's political power from him, yet it is hoped and expected that the new pope will follow in the wise ways of his predecessor, the learned and good Leo, and confine his influence to the spiritual development of the church over which he watches, and not attempt to stir up anew, in a way likely to prove dangerous, the question which so nearly disrupted Europe not many decades ago,—the great "Roman Question."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Copies of the Book of Mormon in Danish, as translated by Brn. Peter Anderson and Peter Muceus, have been received at this office. The printing and binding were done at Porsgrund, Norway, and evidently by men who thoroughly understood those arts, for the books are exceptionally well bound and the printing is everything that could be desired. There are three styles of binding, with prices one dollar, one dollar and a quarter, and one dollar and a half. These books are on sale at the Herald Publishing House and it is hoped that the Saints generally will provide themselves with them.

T. W. Chatburn writes from Necedah, Wisconsin, August 3, as follows: "I just finished up a series of meetings here, baptizing man and wife and their oldest son. The branch here has been more fully organized by the ordination of L. O. Wildermuth to the office of elder. Calls for preaching on every hand. The work is onward in this mission."

Heman C. Smith left Saturday evening for his mission field. The first points to be visited were Rock Island and Moline, after which he expected to go to Chicago and various other places. He will remain in his mission several months.

It will be noticed by reading the requests for prayer made in this issue, that Bro. Eli T. Dobson makes a request that his friends and relatives join him in fasting on certain days. Bro. Dobson has many friends, and we feel sure many will observe the days as he asks.

The Des Moines Register and Leader for Sunday, August 2, contained a portrait of Elder J. F. Mintun and announced as the subject of the sermon that evening: "Prayer, Its Place in the Economy of God." An invitation was extended to anyone desiring special information concerning the faith to call at the Saints' chapel between the hours of two and five in the afternoon.

Brn. F. G. Pitt and H. A. Stebbins were in Pecatonica, Illinois, last Sunday, and began a series of meetings which will continue several days.

SENIOR EDITOR ABROAD.

We reached Stafford on Wednesday, July 15, at three in the afternoon, and were met by Brn. George Greenwood, Joseph Greenwood, and Henry Greenwood, the president of the Manchester District, who was in Stafford for the day on business. We were made the guests of Bro. John Dysche, the president of the Stafford Branch. Before reaching his home, however, we made a detour, visiting the ancient castle of Stafford, about two miles from the town. It is one of those strongholds of the landed gentry of England, of which but little is remembered of its internal history except that it is one of the many places which suffered at the hands of Oliver Cromwell and his Roundheads, the ruins of which lie scattered all over the lands. The ruins of the castle stand upon an eminence and are approached by a flight of narrow steps. It stands in fair repair, affording a home for the caretaker and his family, the only inhabitants. The main part of the building has gone to decay, walls broken and destroyed, grounds neglected and soon will be only one of the picturesque remains of the time in which it was built. This was the only visit we made to any of the local attractions in this place, aside from seeing as we passed an ancient church, into which Brn. Evans and Rushton secured an entrance and enjoyed an examination of its unique and old-time grandeur. There are at this place standing several houses which are in good repair and occupied which were erected in the reign of Charles I. One in particular in the main street is occupied as a place of business.

The brethren had secured the Odd-fellow's Hall for services, where on the nights of the 15th and 16th the Editor occupied first and Bro. R. C. the second night, Bro. Rushton being in charge. The efforts were well sustained by the Saints, several having come from a distance, Bro. and Sr. H. Greenwood and Sr. R. Smith from Manchester, Bro. and Sr. Tabbiner and family from Hanley. But, notwithstanding an excellent effort to advertise the meetings, the attendance of outsiders was small. The song-service was good, under the direction of Bro. John Dysche, whose family including himself are musical. Among their musical instruments is a phonograph, into which the touring elders were requested to speak or sing so that in the reproduction of song or speech there would be a souvenir after they had departed. The visiting elders responded, the Editor with "Over the fence is out," Bro. R. C. Evans with an original piece entitled "Twilight musings in Wales," composed by himself, commemorative of his visit to Wales, and "My mother's sweet face," Bro. J. W. Rushton with "A calm and gentle quiet reigns to-night," in a new tune by Bro. John Morgan of America.

Our visit to Stafford ended Friday, July 17, at a quarter to two in the afternoon, when we boarded the train for Leicester, where we arrived at four o'clock.

Our stay at Leicester was until Tuesday, the 21st, the time being occupied with visiting places of interest in the city and its environs. On Friday night Bro. Evans and Rushton were taken around by Bro. Ecclestone, and among other interesting places visited was St. Mary church, of the Established Church. The early foundations were laid by Ethelfræda, daughter of King Alfred the Great, in the early part of the tenth century, and passing through various scenes of turmoil, disruption, and warfare, it stands to-day a historic landmark in ecclesiastical and architectural development. On the Saturday we visited the remnant of old wall called the "old Jewry Wall," said to have been built to separate the Jews from the citizens many centuries ago. We passed on our way the old church of St. Nicholas whose history is lost in the twilight of antiquity. We passed by an old house built before the reign of Charles I through whose gateway Prince Rupert passed many years ago, and it is now called Prince Rupert's gateway. From there we visited a large archway under the Great Central Railway under which is preserved a large portion of Roman pavement said to be the best specimen of antique tessellation in the world, said to have been laid eighteen hundred years ago. It seems to be a portion of the covered court-yard familiar to the Roman villa of that time. The pavement is beautifully flagged with beautiful mosaic figures, indicating the æsthetic taste of Roman civilization. It was pleasing to contemplate that while amid the evidences of modern civilization and the over-mastering influences of commercialism we could look upon an evidence of the almost barbaric splendor and luxury of the Roman rule. In striking contrast to this we passed inscriptions at the two ends of a bridge spanning the river Soar; the one marked the place where it is said, the spur of King Richard III marked with a scratch a stone by the wayside, against which on his return he was dashed by the frantic actions of the horse he rode, and his head was broken causing his death, as he was dragged by the stirrups fleeing wounded and defeated from Bosworth Field. The other stone marking the spot where his body is supposed to lie, a fit ending to his ambitious, unscrupulous, and bloody reign.

Our meetings were held in the Leicester Temperance Hall, which the Saints had secured. In the morning Bro. Evans gave us a very affecting and instructive address, from the text, "If I perish, I perish" from the language of Queen Esther, which all present appreciated. In the evening quite a fair-sized audience was in attendance when the Editor occupied, using Hebrews 8 as a basis for his effort. The audience seemed to enjoy and grasp the trend of thought presented. On Sunday afternoon the Editor rested while Brn. Evans and Rushton, under the guidance of Bro. Ecclestone, visited the ruins of the old Abbey, where were enacted the closing scenes of Cardinal Wolsey's eventful life. His "many summers in a sea of glory" had reached at last the "killing frosts" of disgrace and death, and now fast loosing his hold on mundane affluence and power in shuddering despair wailed his last regret, "Would I had served my God with half the zeal I have served my king. He would not have deserted me in my gray hairs."

On Monday morning Brn. Evans and Rushton took a trip to Lutterworth, a little village nestling on the side of the hills at the foot of which gurgles and prattles the little stream called Swift on its way to the sea.

Lutterworth is a veritable treasure-trove to the antiquarian and lore-lover. Here is the old church, whose first incumbent occupied from 1221; but more particularly famous because of the memorable scenes and episodes of John Wycliffe, "the morning star of the Reformation." John Wycliffe was the incumbent here from 1374 to 1384. He almost lived in the sacred edifice, spending his time translating his famous Bible and writing works on religious subjects. In a glass case carefully preserved is the gown of Wycliffe, very old and faded. The pulpit from which the present minister preaches is the identical one out of which the reformer preached many of his notable discourses. In the chancel is contained the very chair, of solid oak, black with age, in which he was carried out of the church, stricken with paralysis of which he soon after died. There was also the heavy oaken table, elaborately carved, on which he wrote many of his translation manuscripts and from which he often dispensed the sacrament. Our brethren were informed that some American had offered one hundred fifty thousand dollars or to build a new church for this single relic of the notable reformer. Needless to say it was refused. In the center of the choir galleries, right between the "decani" and the "cantori" is the spot where the body of the venerable old preacher was reposed; and after lying undisturbed for many years it was exhumed and his bones burned on the banks of the river and the ashes scattered upon its bosom and carried down to the sea.

Monday evening was our last service in Leicester, the writer being the preacher. We had in our audience a goodly number of Utah people. Whether the discourse was pleasing to them or not, it is needless to say. It was a presentation of the views of the church on marriage, in an affirmative way; as exhaustive as the time would permit, and was well received.

We left Leicester on Tuesday morning, reaching Clay Cross just about noon. We were greeted at Chesterfield by Brn. W. H. Greenwood, Harry Holmes and Simon Holmes, Sr. The latter conveyed us in his chariot to his hospitable home. Bro. Simon is a unique personage. Some thirty-five years since, while in the prime of his life, he met with a serious accident. Being a collier or miner by occupation, the cage in which he and several others were traveling was precipitated to the bottom of the shaft, owing to the breaking of the rope. Some were killed, and the rest maimed. Our brother had both legs broken, and for all these years has not been able to use the lower part of his body. But despite his serious and deplorable affliction, he is bright and happy, steadfast and zealous in the gospel which has proved such a boon to him in his calamity. For twenty-five years he has been at the head and front of the work in Clay Cross, sustaining and strengthening the ministry who have visited the place and labored there; until there is a branch of some eighty members, nearly one half of which are members of the veteran's family. His sons are excellent collaborators in looking after the interests of the branch, Simon, Jr., being president of the branch. It being a country place, we thought to take a rest, but the brethren Simon Sr., and Jr., would not consent to our being there without occupying the time in service. So resorting to the old-time method of advertising meeting, Bro. Simon, Sr., and the regular crier, by the name of Mr. Walford, "cried" the announcement; and services began on Tuesday night. The Editor delivered the first sermon, from Psalm 15. This was followed by Bro. Evans on Wednesday night, and Bro. Rushton on Thursday night. On Friday evening the ordinance of baptism was performed in the chapel by Bro. R. C. Evans, application for baptism having been made the night before. In the evening the Editor occupied in a gospel effort, at the close of which service Bro. Evans again administered the rite of baptism to Sr. Birkenshaw, the wife of the brother who was baptized in the morning, Sr. Holmes, wife of Bro. John Holmes, and Joseph Holmes, son of Simon, Jr. These baptisms could not be said to be the result of our labors at Clay Cross, but our coming was the occasion of the completion of the work begun by others; and it was a pleasing thought that Bro. Evans was permitted to receive the seal of his ministry by baptizing in England. Confirmation of course, was performed after baptism thus adding four to the number at Clay Cross.

By patient and persistent effort and at considerable sacrifice the Saints have erected a nice brick chapel, sufficiently large to accommodate themselves and as many as from time to time will turn out to hear the word, conveniently located in a good neighborhood, and have it neatly finished and appropriately furnished. It is well ventilated by an arrangement of the windows in such a way that an upper section can be opened by drawing the window down on hinges, thus throwing the air upward instead of direct or downward. At either end of the building, well up in the gable, is a small window so hung in the center that by the cords attached it can be swung open, thus affording excellent ventilation, without permitting a direct draught upon those who happen to be seated underneath. The building of this chapel has involved the expenditure of about three hundred pounds, a large portion of which has been advanced by Bro. Holmes, to be replaced by the branch at convenient intervals, showing both the faith and zeal of the branch.

While at Clay Cross we were taken to the picturesque town of Ashover, situated in one of the most beautiful valleys to be found in England. To reach this village we passed the spot where tradition, as told us by Bro. Simon, Sr., relates that the Devil puts his foot upon the blackberry bushes on the 11th of October, after which the inhabitants do not gather the berries. We were told that this tradition still holds, and after this date the berries are allowed to dry on the bushes unpicked. We were also shown the spot where a woman owning mines stole twopence from a boy who was working for her and when confronted with the wrong-doing denied, saying, "I hope the ground may open and swallow me up if I have the twopence in my pocket." The force of the accusation was accentuated by the ground opening and swallowing her up. Of these traditions Bro. Evans remarked that they were undoubtedly true when they happened. But leaving out these traditions the approach to the town of Ashover presents one of the most beautiful views it is possible to conceive. The hills are high and rugged and are covered almost to their summits by fertile fields divided by stone fences hundreds of years old, within which inclosures the grass and grain was as green and luxuriant as any that can be produced in any country. The village hangs upon the hillside and spreads along the narrow valley by the side of the "Derwentwater." It was a beautiful drive, to us, made doubly enjoyable by the quick wit and genial mirth of our host. This trip will live with us who enjoyed it "while the flowers of memory bud and bloom."

On Thursday following Bro Simon, Jr., took the party to Matlock Bath, also situated on the Derwentwater, which at this place is both deeper and wider. Matlock is the fashionable watering place of the Midlands. To reach it we passed through what is known as the peak of Derbyshire district. We found the town situated upon both banks of the river. It is a health resort and combined in its attractive features relics of the old Roman occupation and the usual advantages of modern watering places. Some of its springs are of the petrifying quality, and covering articles subjected to their spray with a hard incrustation of lime. It is said some of the springs possess medicinal properties which are sought after by many. The town lies between the heights known as the heights of Tor on the one side and the plains of Abraham on the other. There are here caverns called Roman which are evidently relics of their mining efforts. We investigated one of these and were furnished specimens of ore which we brought away with us. Exposed in the shops are various articles, including birds' nests, tin horns, umbrellas, and old hats all thickly encrusted with this hard deposit of lime, for which the enterprising proprietors ask pounds, shillings, and pence. There are also many articles of virtue manufactured from the various stalagmite, stalactite and other stone formations found in the hill together with other ornaments set in gold and silver including amethysts and jades intended to catch the nimble shilling. We ate dinner in one of the quaint houses and returned to Clay Cross impressed by the idea that while the views from the hills above Ashover were beautiful, the views seen around Matlock and in the valley of this celebrated stream on whose banks the town was situated were not only beautiful but grand and magnificent. Bro. Simon, Jr., was well informed in regard to the nomenclature of the places and objects we passed and came in sight of, but we failed to remember a tithe of them. Near to the town and elevated on a striking eminence stands Ryber Castle. We failed to learn its age or time of its erection, but concluded from its architecture it was of early date. It is yet inhabited and looks down over the country probably possessed by the family of original proprietors who may have received their grant from William the Norman or some succeeding ruler who gave away both lands and people and fastened the feudal system upon the nation.

Our stay at Clay Cross and visits into the country through the kindness of the Brn. Holmes will long stay with us in memory.

By the way, we must not omit to mention the one special feature of attraction at Chesterfield, aside from its bearing the name of Lord Chesterfield, who was long quoted as the proper authority on good manners; it is the famous crooked spire. This spire rises from the Ancient Parish church and is remarkable from its peculiar construction. Either by accident or design it has the appearance of being broken or bent with a striking inclination to what appeared to us to be the southwest. It is seen from almost any point of approach to the town and impresses one with the thought that it may one day pitch off; but probably like the leaning tower of Pisa, it may stand until a church wastes under it by the action of rain, wind, and storm, for in places already extensive repairs are being made upon the ancient building. On some of the slabs in the cemetery adjacent, we saw dates as early as 1708. We were informed that they had the history of the church for over eight hundred years and was probably eight hundred years older than that. The inside of the church bears evidence of extreme age in that the seats and the pulpit have grown black with age and have withstood the encroachments of time.

Our next will probably be after the conference at Leeds, to which place we go after leaving Sheffield, which is our present location.

HAVE SALT IN YOURSELVES.

"Have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another."—Mark 9:50. Salt, an article in common use, is so well known that no description of it is needed here. Every one knows of its seasoning and preservative qualities. It is distributed throughout the whole earth and the sea is largely impregnated with it; it performs an important part in the economy of nature, as a preservative, and in this sense it is referred to by our Lord and is used as figurative of the grace, or righteousness of God that should abound in the human heart. It played an important part in the Mosaic economy. God says, "And every oblation of thy meat offering shalt thou season with salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat offering: with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt."—Leviticus 2:13. The Lord tells Aaron, "All the heave offerings of the holy things which the children of Israel offer unto the Lord, have I given thee, and thy sons and thy daughters with thee, by a statute for ever: it is a covenant of salt for ever before the Lord unto thee and to thy seed with thee."—Numbers 18:19. "The Lord God of Israel gave the kingdom over Israel to David for ever, even to him and to his sons by a covenant of salt."—2 Chronicles 13:5. In these passages the term salt is used as an emblem of perpetuity or endurance.

Jesus said unto his disciples, "Ye are the salt of the earth" (Matthew 5:13), meaning they were to be a means in the hands of God of blessing mankind, and, by the spreading of righteousness, of saving the human family from corruption and destruction.

I will here venture an illustration showing how God's people may be the means of preserving the earth, or the people on the earth. In the eighteenth chapter of Genesis we read of the Lord appearing unto Abraham and communicating unto him his purpose concerning Sodom and Gomorrah, "because their sin is very grievous." Abraham pleads with the Lord on behalf of those cities, "Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city: wilt thou also destroy and not spare the place for the fifty righteous therein?" "The Lord said, If I find in Sodom fifty righteous within the city then I will spare all the city for their sakes." The friend of God is emboldened to continue his pleadings, and finally the Lord assures him, "I will not destroy it for ten's sake." But alas! ten righteous could not be found, there was not sufficient salt in the city to season and preserve it. Such was the case in the antediluvian world, "All flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth," except Noah, who "found grace in the eyes of the Lord," because "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God,"

It is God's will that all mankind should be saved. (John 3:16; 1 Timothy 2:4.) For this purpose he established his church, and gave authority unto his servants to preach the gospel unto the world, the glad tidings of salvation through Jesus Christ the Son of God, and to administer in the ordinances of salvation to all who obey him. (Mark 16; Matthew 28; Luke 24:47.) And he tells us in the revelations in these last days, "When men are called unto mine everlasting gospel, and covenant with an everlasting covenant, they are accounted as the salt of the earth, and the savor of men. They are called to be the savor of men."—Doctrine and Covenants 98:5.

Seeing that the church of Christ is called to be the salt of the earth and the savor of men, how important is the injunction of the divine Master, "Have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another." I have already intimated that Christ used the word salt as figurative or emblematic of the grace or righteousness of God to be manifest in the lives of his children. God said unto Noah, "Come thou and all thy house into the ark; for thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation."—Genesis 7:1. He assured Abraham that if ten righteous people were in Sodom he would spare the city. (Genesis 18.)

There are many reasons why we should have salt in ourselves. First, as a church we can not fulfill the purpose of our existence, as the church of Christ, unless the righteousness of God abounds in us as the body of Christ. That is the reason that modern christendom is so powerless to stop the rushing tide of iniquity; it has not salt in itself but like the Pharisees of old, "They, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God."—Romans 10:3.

But the great question before us is, have we as a church salt in ourselves? Are we living up to the law of God? Or are we neglecting the weightier matters of that law? Does our light shine forth so that all men may see our good works and be led to glorify our Father which is in heaven? Or are we trying to trim our sails so as to sail pleasantly side by side with the world's ships? Are we admiring and longing for the fashions of the world, spiritually or otherwise? If as a church we are not living by every word of God our vessel will founder, our light will go out in darkness, our salt will have lost its savor, and we shall be cast out and trodden under foot of man.

Equally important is the question, Have we as members of the church, individually, salt in ourselves? If we have not it can not be in the church collectively. I do not mean to say that if a few individual members do not possess that quality that it is necessarily absent from the whole body, but I do say if none of the members individually possess it, the whole body is deficient, and if the church is to be in a perfectly healthy state, every member must be healthy, having salt in himself. The language of the Master seems to appeal to us individually. "Have salt in yourselves" implies that every member of the body must possess it. Righteousness is a personal affair; each individual must possess it; it must be manifest in his life. No one can be righteous for me, I can not be righteous for any one else; we must stand or fall individually for ourselves, hence we must "have salt in ourselves."

It is true, Christ's righteousness availed for all mankind in delivering us from what must have been the eternal consequences of Adam's transgression, and in placing us upon our own responsibility, with the liberty to choose for ourselves, and also in atoning for our individual sins when we truly repent and obey the gospel, and by faith in him avail ourselves of his atoning grace, realizing that, "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."—1 John 1:7. Thus having entered into the everlasting covenant with God and Christ we become members of the church or body of Christ and as such the salt of righteousness must abound in us or we become dead and withered members.

Without salt in ourselves we can not overcome the evil tendencies of our nature, and unless we subdue them we can not overcome the evils of the world, though such desire may be in our hearts. Really the hardest battle to be fought by the children of God is to overcome the evil propensities of their own natures. Bring these under subjection and the conflict with the world is comparatively easy. In this struggle we shall be tried in a thousand different ways, for "the flesh lusteth against the spirit," and Satan will use the flesh as a means of destroying the spirit and body. Paul says, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own."—1 Corinthians 6:19. Again, "If any man defile the temple of God him shall God destroy."—1 Corinthians 3:17. Here then we see the necessity of keeping our bodies and spirits pure, that we may have the divine Spirit dwelling in us and strengthening us against the power of the enemy.

If we have not salt in ourselves, our worship will be formal and empty; we shall crave fine churches, popular and eloquent preachers, attractive choirs, attractive both in outward adornment and for musical talents, and who love to display their talents more for the praise of men than for the glory of God, and the simplicity of "worshiping in spirit and in truth" will become a thing of the past. We shall be found coquetting with the world, adopting their manners and frivolous fashions, taking greater pains to adorn the outer man than we ever dreamed of doing to adorn the inner man with the excellences and virtues of the gospel of Christ. Some one has uttered a sentiment like this regarding our position in relation to evils around us: "We first despise, then pity, next admire, and then embrace." Let this truth ring continually in our ears and reverberate in our hearts, "No man can serve two masters. . . . Ye can not serve God and mammon."—Matthew 6:24. If we love God indeed we shall have salt in ourselves and as an evidence of this fact we shall successfully resist the tempter's charms, for "every tree is known by its fruits."

I will give one more reason for having salt in ourselves and peace one with another. The truth of God has been opposed in all ages and its adherents have ever been the subjects of persecution. The Scriptures abound with evidences of this fact, but none more bitterly realized this sad truth than the Son of God himself. The foulest slanders were hurled against his character, false witnesses were bribed to testify against him, and as a last resort they subjected him to the most ignominious death, and he has told us, "The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord. . . . If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?"—Matthew 10:24, 25. Again, "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."—Matthew 5:10-12. Christ gives the reason for this persecution, "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."—John 15:18, 19. But, dear reader, if we have not the salt of righteousness in ourselves, we can not endure the persecution. But if we have we shall be enabled to endure; and unless we have peace one with another we shall fall a prey to the siren song of the tempter and fall away. "A house divided against itself can not stand." Then let us stand shoulder to shoulder with each other, Buckle on the whole armor of righteousness, wielding "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," cultivating the graces of the gospel, and bearing the fruits of the Spirit, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." Let our eyes be fixed upon the mark of the prize of our high calling of God in Christ Jesus, "watching unto prayer," and we shall realize that He who is for us is more than all that be against us, and we shall come off conquerors through Him who has loved us. Amen. CHARLES DERRY.

PREPARATION FOR THE KINGDOM.

1. Where is the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world?
2. Who are the sheep and the goats?
3. Who are the brethren?
4. Who are the nations mentioned in Matthew 25: 33-46, I. T.?

In consequence of different views held by many on the above subjects, I desire to review the above questions, with the intent to ease my mind of the confused understanding on the points in question.

The whole chapter, Matthew 25, has reference to the kingdom of heaven (the church), the righteous and the wicked ones in that kingdom, or the sheep and the goats. Read the first verse. In Matthew 13: 40 the kingdom of heaven is compared to a net that was cast into the sea (the world) and the bad ones of that kingdom (the church) will be cast away, go back into the world where they came from and have their fight and swearings and wailing and gnashing of teeth among the wicked, where they can fight each other unto death, until no man or woman or child will be left, but the honorable ones. In proving this statement, we want you to read carefully all the verses in the Inspired Translation with which it has reference.

The kingdom of heaven (the church of Jesus Christ) contains good and bad seed, wheat and tares. (Matthew 13: 22, 23, 28.) The good seed are the children of the kingdom, those who are saints indeed. (Matthew 13: 37.) The tares are the children of the wicked, those who will be gathered out of the kingdom of heaven (the church) and cast out into the world among the wicked to be burned. (Matthew 13: 37, 43, 51.) We read further, "For the world shall be burned with fire."—Matthew 3: 44. Later on I will show how that burning process will be.

On the first point: Where is the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world? I answer, This kingdom will be on this earth, which was created for the children of God, but cursed because of their transgression, and will have to be prepared as the Lord said he would. The Lord is working for its preparation, to be a habitation for those brethren, the saints who shall inherit the celestial glory, for we read: "Therefore, it [the earth] must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory; for after it [the earth] hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father; that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it for ever and ever; for, for this intent was it made and created; and for this intent are they [the Saints] sanctified."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.

We read further: "And when I go, I will prepare a place for you [for the brethren], and come again [on the earth], and receive you unto myself; that where I am [on the earth], ye may be also."—John 14: 3, I. T.

We learn from the above quotations that the earth is the place which the Lord was going to prepare (sanctify from all unrighteousness) for his brethren, the Saints. That the kingdom of God, which was prepared for them from the foundation of the world, was also for the brethren, the righteous, the saints, the following quotation will prove: "Behold, the righteous, the saints of the Holy One of Israel, they who have believed in the Holy One of Israel; they who have endured the crosses of the world, and despised the shame of it; they shall inherit the kingdom of God, which was prepared for them from the foundation of the world; and their joy shall be full for ever."—2 Nephi 6: 7, small edition.

"And blessed is he that is found faithful unto my name, at the last day, for he shall be lifted up to dwell in the kingdom prepared for him from the foundation of the world."—Ether 1: 12, small edition.

We learn thus that the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world and the place which the Lord was going to prepare for his brethren are for the same people, the saints of God.

Who are the sheep which are placed on the right hand of the King to inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world? (Matthew 25: 33, 35, I. T.)

We read in St. John, chapter 10, verse 4: "And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him, for they know his voice." In verse 5 we read: "And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him; for they know not the voice of strangers." In verse 26 we read: "But ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep." In verse 27 we read: "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." In verse 28 we read: "And I give unto them eternal life."

In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 28, paragraph 2, we read: "For I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the hosts thereof, and dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand."

In the same book, section 85, paragraph 6, we read: "Wherefore, it [the earth] shall be sanctified; yea, notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again, and shall abide the power by which it is quickened, and the righteous shall inherit it: for, notwithstanding they die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body."

We read in St. John 17: 3: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

When we now review Matthew 25, I. T., we can easily see that the sheep of verses 33 and 35, and the righteous of verse 38, and the righteous who would go into life eternal, as mentioned in verse 47, are not the honorable men of the earth, but are the saints of God, who did obey all the commandments and did pay their tithings and offerings to the storehouse for the promulgation of the gospel, to the support of the ministry in the field and the poor brethren; because we read in Doctrine and Covenants: "Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward: and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple: by this you may know my disciples."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 6.

We read further in the same book: "And thou shalt take no purse nor scrip, neither staves, neither two coats, for the church [the members] shall give unto thee in the very hour what thou needest for food, and for raiment, and for shoes, and for money, and for scrip."—Doctrine and Covenants 23: 7.

We read in St. John 13: 20, I. T.: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me."

We can now easily see that the brethren in Matthew 25 are the saints, and especially the priesthood in the field, represented by the twelve apostles in this parable. The honorable men of the world are not represented in this parable; they can not become sheep unless they follow the Shepherd; they can not inherit life eternal unless they obey the gospel and receive the earnest of their inheritance, the Holy Spirit, whereby they will know the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom he has sent. The honorable men of the earth, who are blinded by the craftiness of men (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6), who followed a stranger and not the Shepherd as did the sheep (John 10: 5), may receive a second glory, if they repent, after the coming of Christ, but will certainly not receive the glory of the first-born. It is against the Scriptures that the honorable men of the earth should receive a kingdom of glory, life eternal, without obeying the gospel and without enduring the crosses of the world; it would almost be like putting a premium on disobedience, if men could be justified by their works; but we know that this is not the case, because it is written: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; . . . not of works, lest any man should boast."—Ephesians 2: 8, 9, I. T.

"Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith alone without the deeds of the law."—Romans 3: 28, I. T.

"Therefore by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified in his sight."—Romans 3: 20, I. T.

I hope that we will now all come to the conclusion that all the so-called good works of the honorable men of the earth are of no account in reaching life eternal, and certainly not celestial glory, for this can only be reached by those who have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide in this world, those who have reached that zenith of love when they could even love their enemies and pray for them; and this can not be reached unless we have the Spirit of Christ in us.

The Lord has given to us the commandment: "But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you; and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you."—Matthew 5: 46, I. T.

If we come short of this love, we are not more than the honorable men of the earth or the publicans, for the Lord says: "For if ye love only them which love you, what reward have you? Do not even the publicans the same?"—Matthew 5: 48, I. T.

"But," some might say, "will you not recognize any of the kind acts of the honorable men of the world?"

My answer is: "It is written, there is none righteous, no, not one."—Romans 3: 10, I. T.

"They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one."—Verse 12.

This is said of the Jews and Gentiles, who had not obeyed the gospel, for they are all under sin under the law; for the Apostle Paul says: "Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law; that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world [also the honorable men] may become guilty before God."—Romans 3: 19.

Further said the same apostle to the saints, those who obeyed the gospel: "For ye are not under the law, but under grace."—Romans 6: 14, I. T.

"But," some might say, "are the honorable men of the earth placed on the same line as the wicked ones, the murderer, the thief, the sorcerer, the adulterer, and those that oppress the hireling and the widow and fatherless, etc.?"

I answer, No; because the heathen nations, and among them the honorable men of the earth, shall have part in the first resurrection; for we read: "And then shall the heathen nations be redeemed, and they [the honorable men] that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.

These men, if obedient to the gospel and faithful, will at the end inherit the terrestrial glory, (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6) but have to pass through practically the same trials the saints have gone through before the coming of the Lord, for they have not escaped the possibility of falling away, and of being overcome by Satan during the little season (Revelation 20: 3); while the saints have passed through this danger because they have overcome (Revelation 2: 11; 20: 6.)

It appears to me that there are several classes of honorable men among the nations outside the church of Jesus Christ, who will have part in the thousand years reign of our Lord. The honorable men who died without hearing the gospel law, and who would have obeyed it if presented to them; those men will not only have part in the first resurrection, but will be heirs of the celestial kingdom. See vision, Church History, volume 2, page 16. Another class are those who died without law (who were blinded by the craftiness of men), and received the testimony of Jesus in the prison house. Another class are those who are still alive at the coming of our Lord and are blinded by the craftiness of men. Perhaps there are some other classes.

It appears to me that these last two classes are not desirous to inherit the celestial kingdom; otherwise they would have given more heed to the following counsel: "Blessed are all they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost."—Matthew 5:8.

"But if from thence thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart and with all thy soul."—Deuteronomy 4:29.

Through not heeding these counsels they are blinded by the craftiness of men. I believe that the reward which the honorable men and all men receive for their good deeds is that glory which is best suited to the nobility of the character formed.

But who are the goats mentioned in Matthew 25? The goats are the disobedient ones in the church; not in the world. It is written: "And they shall gather out of his kingdom all things which offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them out among the wicked; and there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."—Matthew 13:43, I. T.

"And the world is the children of the wicked."—Verse 50.

"The angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just [the saints], and shall cast them out into the world to be burned. There shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."—Verse 51.

The goats are the foolish virgins who have not taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and who will be plucked out (of the church) and cast into unquenchable fire (into the world to be burned). See Doctrine and Covenants 63:13; 45:10; Matthew 25:2, I. T.

These are they who have not exercised the charity required of the saints, and did not contribute their tithings and offerings to the storehouse for the promulgation of the gospel, to the support of the ministry and the poor brethren. See Matthew 25:42-46, I. T.; Malachi 3:8, 10; Doctrine and Covenants 83:16; 23:7; John 13:20, I. T.

In connection with this we read: "Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2. See Ezekiel 33:15, I. T.

The men of the world who do not know this gospel law are not under this law, and are not the goats, and could not, therefore, be reproached nor come under condemnation of this law; the men of the world are to be judged by the light they have received, until opportunity is given to receive the higher light, the perfect law. See Romans 2:12, 14, 15, I. T.; 2 Nephi 11:10; Nephi 4:6, small edition; Malachi 3:5.

Who are the "all nations" mentioned in Matthew 25:33, I. T.? It is clear to my mind, if the "all nations" are composed of the sheep and goats, and, whereas, we have shown that the kingdom of heaven on earth is composed of sheep and goats, that the "all nations" must mean the seed of Joseph gathered out from among "all nations;" because it is written: "But truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations."—Genesis 48:25, I. T.; verse 19, K. J.

This looks reasonable to me, because the Lord would not gather the heathen nations in this way, as they are not yet converted; some of them would refuse to come and could not be forced without taking their agency away, and that is not God's way. On the other hand, the seed of Joseph is very anxious to be gathered, the sheep as well as the goats, because all hope to be accepted, but some will be terribly disappointed as we have read in Matthew 25:45-47.

THE CHURCH IN THE WILDERNESS.

While I differ from the brother who wrote on this subject some time ago, I do so with all due respect to his opinions. His numerous quotations in definition of the word church have reference to the church out of the wilderness, and not in the wilderness. Had conditions continued as in the description given by the passages quoted, the church would not have gone into the wilderness at all.

The brother holds that the church must be organized, to exist at all. If that be true, then it must be organized aright, in order to constitute the church of Christ.

Was, or is, the church spoken of by John in Revelation, seventeenth chapter, organized aright? If not, then it can not be the church referred to in Revelation, twelfth chapter, because it went into the wilderness, and it is implied at the end of twelve hundred and sixty years that it will come out.

The Lord said in confirmation of this thought, in Doctrine and Covenants 5:3, "In this, the beginning of the rising up, and the coming forth of my church [not the mother of harlots] out of the wilderness."

The above was given in March, 1829, and that too, to parties who did not, at that time, belong to any church, but they had begun to move, and thus fulfilled the "rising up" part, and afterward joined the church of Christ, so that it began to exist, as it did before it went into the wilderness.

But later on, when the church had been organized in part, for five months, the Lord says in Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2, "And verily, verily I say unto you [two of the brethren], that this church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness; and even so will I gather mine elect from the four quarters of the earth."

The above sets forth three distinct facts: First, the church went into the wilderness; second, the church came out of the wilderness; third, that the elect are the church in the wilderness, and the Lord is calling them out, looking upon the church in the sense of its being composed of the people of God; and that the wilderness, which means "a state of disorder" (Webster), is where they occupied.

If we want more evidence on the above, see in the previous verse of the revelation last referred to, "And my vineyard has become corrupted every whit; and there is none which doeth good save it be a few; and they err in many instances, because of priestcrafts." Right in line with this see Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 12: 14, large edition. "They have all gone astray, save it be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err, because they are taught by the precepts of men."

These passages show plainly that some at least of God's people, or as expressed, "humble followers of Christ," are mixed up in the different churches, as expressed in Revelation 18: 4. "And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people,"—"my people," mark you.

Come out of her (Babylon), which would signify, no doubt, that the people of God were to be found in churches and out of churches, because all, more or less, are influenced by the "precepts of men." The last quotations destroy the possibility of the "woman" going to paradise, as argued by a late writer in the HERALD; because the Lord is not "calling" many, or even any, out of paradise yet, that is, to dwell on the earth. Those angels who have come, or who may yet come to earth, are not from paradise, but from the presence of God. (See Luke 1: 19.) While it is true that a portion of the people of God are in paradise, it is not true that they are in a "state of disorder." To sum up then, the church in the wilderness simplified would be "the humble followers of Christ" left, for the time, in a disorganized state, but in the due time of the Lord, when the church is again organized, she comes out of the wilderness.

Another position taken by the brother in the article above referred to, is that the "keys," and the "kingdom," mean one and the same thing; and that no one held the "keys" but Joseph, and some of the leading authorities of the church. In the light of first position (if it could be called light) how would this read? "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 16: 19. Why not say, I give unto thee the keys of the keys of heaven?

Another, Doctrine and Covenants 65: "The Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God which is set up on the earth; wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come."

Why not the Lord have said the "keys" of God which is set up on the earth? And this, may the "keys" of God go forth, etc. This I think is sufficient to show that the keys and the kingdom are not the same; no more than the house and the keys to the house are the same.

If we can get at the meaning of the word key, or keys, we will have made a good start in finding out what the Lord means in the use of the word. Webster: "Key: That which serves to explain anything difficult to be understood."

Right in line with this thought read Doctrine and Covenants 6: 12, 13. "Verily, verily I say unto you, that there are records which contain much of my gospel, which have been kept back because of the wickedness of the people; and now I command you, that if you [Oliver Cowdery] have good desires, a desire to lay up treasures for yourself in heaven, then shall you assist in bringing to light, with your gift, those parts of my scriptures which have been hidden because of iniquity. And now, behold, I give unto you, and also unto my servant Joseph, the keys of this gift." Herein lies a difficulty, beyond the power of man to bring forth. But God could do so, by giving to man the key, not the kingdom. And yet the keys through which this and other knowledge can be conveyed, will develop the "kingdom" so that it "may go forth."

Again, Doctrine and Covenants 34: 4: "I have sent forth the fullness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph; . . . and I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me."

Again, Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2: "I have given unto you the kingdom; and the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom, shall not be taken from my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., through the means I have appointed, while he liveth, inasmuch as he obeyeth mine ordinances."

The above shows that the keys to unlock the mysteries of God, for the benefit of the church, belong to the president of the church. And thus may the church be organized, the kingdom established, or that part of it that is on the earth, and be prepared to meet the other part, which shall come from heaven and paradise, at the coming of the Savior.

“Keys: Ecclesiastical jurisdiction.”—Webster. This fact is set forth by the Master to Peter, “I give unto thee the keys. . . . Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven.”—Matthew 16: 19; and in Matthew 18: 17, 18, the church, through its ministry and membership, is given this same power, which shows that others may possess the authority or keys to govern the church.

Other evidence may be gleaned by reading the whole of section 42, Doctrine and Covenants, but especially by reading paragraphs 5 and 18 of said section. In paragraph 18 we read, “For unto you the kingdom, or in other words, the keys of the church, have been given,” and by turning back to paragraph 5 we learn that the word you referred to, “elders, priests, and teachers.” And to show conclusively that others besides the leading quorums hold the “keys” of their ministry, see Doctrine and Covenants 107: 46, which names priests, teachers, and deacons, giving them the right, as well as others, to hold the keys of their ministry, in order to properly minister to those under their charge; and deal out to them the words of life; or in other words, hold the keys, in order to be able to explain any difficult matter, that may be bothering the minds of the Saints, so that peace and good will may prevail.

Notwithstanding these officers, as well as all others, including the president of the church himself, are to be governed by the books of the church and the revelations of God that may come through the president of the church, yet they may teach the president himself, if he is not sufficiently posted as to his duties, as a member of the branch to which he may belong, over which they may have jurisdiction, as such officers have under the law.

If I mistake not, the following is the main text, from which the brother gets his idea: “For unto you the kingdom, or in other words, the keys of the church have been given”—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 18. From which he tries to make it appear that the “keys” and the “kingdom” are the same. When it is evident that the Lord intended to say, that the terms “kingdom” and “church” are similar, if not the same.

Suppose we place it this way—for to you the kingdom, or in other words the keys of the kingdom. In place of doing any damage to the text, it would make it agree with Christ’s statement to Peter (Matthew 16–19) and with all similar statements made to others in Doctrine and Covenants.

But let us place it to suit our brother’s idea. For to you the kingdom, or in other words the kingdom of the kingdom. Would that be good reading? And what would it convey?

I was taught by the ministry of the church, from my first remembrance, (when on that line of thought), and have been up to the article above referred to, that the kingdom of God, the kingdom of heaven, the church of Christ, the body of Christ, were all synonymous terms, to express the same or nearly the same thought, and unless more light comes to me from some other source, than from the article above referred to, I shall continue to so teach, as I have been instructed.

Respectfully submitted,

JOSIAH STRONG’S BLUNDER.

The Reverend Josiah Strong in his tract entitled, “Political Aspects of Mormonism,” as referred to in HERALD of July 8, states that “the doctrine of polygamy dovetails into the Mormon system perfectly, but is by no means fundamental to it.” The first part of this statement is decidedly untrue, while the latter part is all right. In fact, if the latter part is true the first part can not be true, as we will show. Giving Mr. Strong the benefit of the more excusable position between malicious misrepresentation and ignorance, we will proceed to show that the term “dovetail” as he used it, means to join firmly as wood-workers do by means of a portion of one block being cut in somewhat the shape of a dove’s tail to fit perfectly into a cutting made into another block purposely to receive it. You will readily see that polygamy can not perfectly dovetail into Mormonism unless there were an opening in the system made on purpose to receive it. Now if it can be shown that such an opening existed, then polygamy becomes fundamental, inasmuch as it was considered and provided for in the original design. Facts, however, prove the writer to be correct in the latter statement but do not help him as to the first; and withal show him to be seriously illogical.

Turn with me, Mr. Strong, to Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6, and read, “There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none,” and kindly explain what kind of an opening that is to dovetail into the doctrine of polygamy. O, yes, we are aware that Brigham Young and his followers sought to fasten the doctrine to original Mormonism but it would not fit. There was no opening found there and the material would not cut, so they were obliged to originate a system that could be cut to suit anything, and so make it to fit the doctrine and practice of polygamy. You certainly ought to know this before posing as a teacher to the world along those lines.

It has been argued by some that the doctrine of present revelation is the opening arranged for the doctrine of polygamy or any other doctrine, good or bad, that might suggest itself.

Would Mr. Strong like to take that position and charge Christ and the early disciples with constructing and organizing a system of religion that polygamy would dovetail into perfectly? I hardly think so, and until he does we need not consider that position.

That Mr. Strong has blundered sadly in this matter is apparent, but an even more serious blunder occurs in his next statement: "There is another doctrine far more radical, the root, of which polygamy is the fruit, viz., the divine authority of the priesthood." Think of that! What a statement to make in the light of New Testament history. The priesthood or ministry of the early church was nothing if it was not divinely appointed. And did God, the author, plant the root of polygamy in the early church and all institutions in which he appoints the ministry, which might possibly include the church which Mr. Strong is connected with, or does Mr. Strong wish to frankly acknowledge that there was no divinity in the appointment of himself and colleagues by virtue of which they are termed reverend? Well, if to them divine appointment is the root of polygamy we can not blame them for disclaiming everything of the kind; still it looks childish for men with nothing but human appointment to be engaged in a fight against a "fruit," the "root" of which was planted by the Almighty if his statement be true.

"And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers."—1 Corinthians 12:28. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest."—Luke 10:2. "As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them."—Acts 13:2. "Paul, an apostle (not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father)."—Galatians 1:1. "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5:4. Now all this means a divinely-appointed priesthood, and if that is the root of polygamy, Mr. Strong has the honor of placing a feather in Brigham Young's cap, which all polygamists can readily see.

When are we going to see some one of the learned and mighty men of the earth, arise and fight the doctrines of polygamy in a way that will recommend itself to God, angels, and thoughtful men?

CONTEMPORARY IDEALS.

Once in a while a sane man arises and questions the worth of all this contemporary strenuousness—asks whether the name is worth the candle. But the captains and the drums raise a noise which drowns the not-to-be-tolerated doubter. He is a disturber of the current theory that men, as well as nations, must lead the strenuous life, fight, plunder, and "expand." No self-respecting nation but meditates murder and robbery, the murdering to be done by way of testing the national muscle, and the robbery to satisfy the general greed. The statesmen most appaused are the finders of plausible reasons for theft on a gigantic scale. Monarchs can not pay a friendly visit to another of their caste but they must change uniforms a dozen times a day, and so keep the gaping crowd pleased as at a variety show. Patriotism is exploited like any other commercial asset. It has come to be little else. The crowd likes the cry and din, and the big bills for pomp and show and land-grabbing expeditions are sent in to it, and it pays, with a wry face, but pays all the same, and bards like Kipling write verse which, boiled down, means, "Pay, you beggars, pay!"

The French Revolution came along opportunely and a great many useless heads were cut off and people dreamed that things were going to be better, that the common man was to have a fairer chance in the world. In spots and places he has; but, taking the world by and large, he is in the same dismal plight as before that neck-chopping episode. And where the world has improved in some ways, life has been made mighty hard for the every-day man. The current ideals are very much as if they had been framed by restless lunatics. Everybody is told to "succeed," when all about us we see that most success is a wretched phase of failure. The successful man commonly has paid for his wealth in manhood, or in ideals. In a current magazine, Mr. Frank Putnam sums up the matter very crisply:

"Tell your friend you mean to spend your life fighting for money and power, and he will, if he be an average man, applaud your decision; tell him you mean to dwell in the country, gaining a simple livelihood from your labor, and he will either not believe you mean it, or will conclude you are a beaten competitor in the city's race. Most people do not know they are the slaves of their modern improvements, so-called. They build houses larger than they can occupy—for show; they pinch and scrape year after year to pay for them, and after that continue pinching to pay taxes, repairs, and other maintenance charges. A large house demands expensive furniture. Then fine dress. And the demands increase. The man keeps his nose on the grindstone, the woman wears herself out taking care of the fine feathers. No time to just live and enjoy it; got to make a show first—going to take a real rest, and cut off all the little vanities, next winter—next summer—some other time, when matters are not quite so pressing. I am not exactly a loafer, but I like Walt Whitman best of all our American writers, because he had sense enough to loaf and invite his soul once in a while. I am tired of hearing the everlasting preachers of the strenuous life. Go slower, and you'll go farther and enjoy it better. Don't live to work; work to live. Bread and butter work, I mean. Leave a little time for the sort of work you find your chief pleasure in."

This man Putnam is a perilous sort of person. He is talking, like Thoreau, to a deaf generation, but some there be who can hear him, and, if they go and do as he advises, what will become of the queer scheme called "our civilization?" We are told that wealth increases, that the world grows steadily better, and all that. But does it? There is an immense amount of sordid poverty, and among the middle classes of the nations of white men a sorry rush and a scramble to keep up appearances. A sane, agreeable life is seldom lived, even where all the light of science shines down, and where culture stalks abroad. All the world's a joining something, and, in the process loses individuality and mental liberty.

The crowd rules and the result is a horrible complacency of opinion, and a stupidity against which the gods themselves can not fight. The net outcome of the general progress of which people are talking is something not half so agreeable as the pleasant old centuries when men had time to be themselves, had a broad margin to their lives, and the longest day's journey was as far as a good horse could take a man.

It is well, once in a while, to stop and take account of the sort of life we are leading, and ask a few questions, even if we get no answer from the so-called leaders of the modern movement—mostly very tiresome persons.—Mexican Herald.

Compensations.

Some day, grown tall enough, we shall step o'er
The gritty pebbles that now bruise our feet;
And, larger souled, with charity shall meet
The querulous discords lesser natures store.
Hot, scathing words that pierced love's guard of yore,
Scaling the citadel, fear's last retreat,
Making our daily bread more salt, less sweet,
Will lose their sting when patience keeps the score.
Gray hairs bring gentle moods. Impetuous youth,
Unchastened by experience, vaunts its claims;
But seasoned age, by knowledge tempered, waits
The test of Time that weighs and sifts their truth;
Setting Heaven's mint-mark on unselfish aims—
Giving them entrance through Love's golden gates.

In the home of the soul, far more radiant than this;
The supremest joy in that heavenly place;
Mid the crowning, we shall see him face to face.”—Sel.

Dear Home Column: While I feel my inability to write anything interesting or profitable for the Mother's Home Column, yet I feel to try, and if I dare to send in, surely others with far more talent than I, ought to do so.

I am made to wonder at the seeming lack of interest for this column. I always turn to that first and feel much disappointed when I see nothing from our sisters. I can not feel that it is lack of interest they feel on the subject, and I am sure it is not for the lack of talent. God will not expect more from us than we are able to do. Let us try to do the best we can. You who have little ones tell your experience with them. No doubt you could relate many things that might help other mothers. God bless the dear little ones. “Buds of promise,” they verily are. O mothers, do you realize the great responsibility that rests upon you? Do you not know those buds were given to you, came to you, as a gift from God? Remember you are training them for both time and eternity; then look well to your work. See that you begin with them right. Teach them as soon as they can talk to say their little prayers. Teach them to have faith in the Father, and to believe that he will hear them when they pray, and that he will give them what they ask if it is his will for them to have it. What more beautiful sight could there be than a child bowed in prayer? Surely the angels stoop to listen and rejoice.

It may seem to all who know, that as God saw fit to take our two dear little boys in their infancy that we have had but little experience in child training, but we nearly always had a child in our home. We raised one, an adopted daughter, and our niece to womanhood, and her early training led her to obey the gospel while young. We had another come to us when a little past two years old and kept her until my husband died, then I gave her back to her mamma. She was then past eight years old. I began to teach her to say her prayers as soon as she could lisp the dear name of Jesus. I would talk to her about him and tell her how much he loved us and how he had to suffer and die for us, so that we might go to him and be happy. She would say with tears in her eyes, “O why did they kill him?” I had her with me in St. Louis at the time of that terrible cyclone that dealt death and destruction to so many. Trees were uprooted in our yard, the chimneys blown from our house and the terrible work was going on all around us and we were frightened and went to the cellar. As soon as we got there my little Ruby fell upon her knees in prayer, and who can say that child's faith and prayer did not turn destruction from that house and we were saved through her prayer? I believe we were, for many were hurt and some killed in our neighborhood. I can say with Sr. Moore in a late HERALD, “O for the faith of a little child.” She had been taught to love and trust in God, therefore called upon him to save us, believing that he would.

The other child with us screamed with fright because she had never been taught to pray. See the difference? Then, dear Saints, how necessary it is to begin with your children while young! Do not feel you have not the time to give them. Remember you must give an account to God for this lack of duty. He gave them to you, expecting you to help make them fit subjects for his kingdom. Give them an hour each day. Read a chapter in the Bible to them, then explain it to them so they may understand. After they learn to read let them each read a chapter and explain it to them. You have no idea how much they will enjoy it and will look with pleasure to the hour they can spend with mamma.

When I think how this duty is neglected by parents in the church it makes my heart ache. I have been in many homes of the Saints and I can not recall one where I ever saw a child at prayer.

I feel deeply upon this subject and may have said too much, but I do not mean to be personal toward any one as one dear sister thought I was, after reading something I had written for the HERALD.

And now I want to say a word to parents who believe in using the rod. I beg of you not to do it. Do you think God gave you those little ones for you to beat? Remember how much Jesus loved them and said, “Of such is the kingdom of heaven.” Do you not know when you stand over them with the cruel rod, that you are beating his subjects? Remember this and let the thought stay your hand. No children were ever made better by whipping them, but it makes them worse and creates in them a cruel resentful disposition. No child can love parents who cause them to suffer. It is not natural that they should.

We may quote Solomon when he said, “Spare the rod and spoil the child,” but to reverse this, I think would be correct.

Ingersoll was called an infidel; nevertheless he had a very kind heart. Think of the tender love he had for his children. No man could be bad who loved the good and the beautiful as he did. I remember in some of his writings a plea against whipping. He said: “O mothers, after your little ones have been taken from you by death, go visit their little graves, think of the little forms laying there that you have beat, and see if the thought comforts you.” No child ever suffered from a cruel blow from his hand, I venture to say. His heart was too full of love for them. While he was called an infidel, I never read where he ever denied the existence of a God, and I have read the most of his writings. He said he did not know. That there was a power that ruled over man he was willing to admit. Solomon knew that there was a God, yet think of the hardness of his heart. Some may take exception to what I have written, but I can not help it. I have not said what I feel upon this subject. I could not find words to express how deeply I feel upon it. I hope to learn from others, and I hope there will be very few who will uphold this cruel practice of whipping.

Prayer Union.

Elder Eli T. Dobson, of St. Joseph, Missouri, sojourning temporarily at Lamoni, devoted Sunday last to fasting and prayer for his final release from long-continued affliction. He has felt impressed by the Spirit to do so, and was remarkably supplied with strength to forego two meals that day while he spent the day, as he has many other days, in prayer and meditation. He says he was much blessed of the Lord. And he now feels further impressed to continue the fasting during each Lord's day, the third, fourth, and fifth Sundays of the present month. He earnestly requests his relatives and friends to join him in this effort and small sacrifice so far as such may feel inclined to do so, on any one or all of such days. Any of the beloved Saints who know of Elder E. T. Dobson's sufferings during the long night of his afflictions (five years and more) are requested if so moved by a desire for his complete recovery to likewise join in the worthy effort. The Lord's ears are ever open to the humble cry of the truly needy. Bro. Dobson has had recent intimations of complete restoration, in which event his future life will be devoted to our beloved church work, if it be the Lord's will. He asks not merely for himself but a prayer also for all the afflicted among the Israel of God.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE General Superintendent was present at the latter part of the reunion near Guy, Oklahoma, in the interests of Sunday-school work. It was unfortunate that the late, cold spring retarded the growth of the crops till the harvest was so late as to prevent the attendance of many at the reunion. The camp was small, very small, but the interest was all that could be desired. The work is comparatively new there as is also the country. And while these and other odds are against them, their push and energy help them to make progress that is exceptional under the circumstances.

Institute work upon subjects of interest to Sunday-school workers was held each afternoon and Sunday-school on Sunday afternoon. The workers manifested great interest in the work and will doubtless accomplish much good in the future.

The work there is in charge of Bro. James Yates, a competent and earnest Sunday-school worker and one who loves the work. May he be blessed!

BRO. W. S. MACRAE has been appointed a Home Department superintendent for the territory embraced in his mission, Texas. He has already done an excellent work there in that line, as well as keeping up all other departments. I do not know whether Bro. Macrae ever takes "no" for an answer or not, but it is very evident from his reports that the "noes" do not have it with him very often. We note in his reunion notice that he expects to hold a "session of Sunday-school every day during the reunion." This is an excellent plan, as it not only teaches a series of scriptural lessons, but gives several good object-lessons in the running of a successful school. And there is no better way to get the plan of work before the people than in a session of the school. And, again, it often interests many persons who have hitherto given no attention to it.

OWING to sickness we did not reach the reunion of the Kentucky and Tennessee District until Tuesday. But on arrival we found a happy band of Saints enjoying the blessings of association, worship, and hearing the word. Our jovial and earnest Bro. I. N. Roberts, who is as big of heart as he is of body, met us at the railway station and conducted us into camp, where we were given a hearty welcome.

We opened up our work at once and continued each day with such work as was thought suitable, closing with a session of Sunday-school. Much good seed was sown. We have many young workers there who need only an opportunity to develop and they will be of value to the work. But they have and will continue to have some conditions to meet that are found in no other section, and these are difficult to overcome. The stamp of tradition and the customs of a country are influences that have their power, and when some of these customs are antagonistic to higher development, it is indeed very difficult for the rising generation to "come up higher."

The district has no district Sunday-school organization and the time is not yet ripe for one. But a year or two more may bring about many improvements. We established the Home Class work and left it in charge of Sr. Alma Roberts of Owens Hill, Tennessee. She has set to work and now has several names on her roll. We look to this as a foundation for a future district association. Sr. Roberts is an earnest worker and enjoys the confidence of all her acquaintances. And although she has, as we know, a big task on her hands, we feel that she will be abundantly able to handle it. May she be blessed!

Conscience Not a Teacher.

Conscience tells us we ought to do right, but conscience does not tell us what is right. Conscience is a monitor in the spiritual school; conscience is not a teacher in that school. If we were shut up to the instructions of conscience, we should be ever in doubt as to our duty, and often going astray.

Therefore it is that God has given us a specific revelation of his will and law, so that we may know our duty. If, indeed, conscience were a teacher to tell us our duty we should have little need of the Bible to give us instruction; then every person, the world over, would have the same standard of right-doing and holy-living. But, as it is, we need the Bible and conscience; neither alone is sufficient. Let us prize aright the God-given promptings of conscience, and the God-given teachings of revelation. All of us need both.—Sunday School Times.

WE have often and always urged the use of the blackboard in the Sunday-school for the many benefits obtained thereby. But we are so often met with the sometimes pathetic reply, "I could not draw a picture," or words to that effect, and usually they are speaking only the plain truth. But the fact that you can not "draw" does not make it impossible for you to do much good with the blackboard. Simple illustrations are decidedly best. Better to make a straight mark and call it a man than to have an elaborate drawing of a man. In the first case the mind of your scholar will be upon the point of the lesson that you wish to emphasize, and in the latter the elaborate picture will take the mind entirely off of the lesson. They will think only of the picture. Have just enough and no more in your illustration. Keep the scholar's mind on the point in the lesson, not on something else.

Doctor A. F. Schaufler in his "Secrets of Successful Teaching," in Sunday School Times for May 16, has very nicely expressed the same views upon this point. Doctor Schaufler is currently accredited with being one of the best Sunday-school teachers of the times. He says: "Can we do anything with the blackboard? Yes. The blackboard is much abused, and therefore by many thoughtful men little used. But it can be effectively used, I believe, in very simple ways. Many feel that because they can not draw pictures, and make goblets and snakes and crowns and angels, therefore they can not use the board. I can do none of these things, indeed I can hardly write straight. Nevertheless, used with the utmost simplicity, the blackboard can be a potency in carrying truth through Eye-gate." He then goes on with some very unique designs which any person who can write and make a straight mark with crayon and ruler could use. Remember that your sole object in using the blackboard or any other form of object lesson is to make a point in the lesson clear or to emphasize it, and not to make a display. Fine drawings are too apt to amount to display only. Use, not abuse, the blackboard.

SANTA ANA, California, August 5.

Editors Herald: After spending about three and a half years in Michigan, I felt that my work was done there and I applied for a western mission, little expecting that I would be sent so far west as I am. It is with pleasure that I look back on the experiences of my stay in Michigan. In some respects they were the most pleasing of my ministerial work. I found many noble Saints there and our associations have done me good, and they will be remembered as long as the tablets of memory retain their records.

With the reading of my appointment to Southern California came a feeling of contentment and a desire to reach my field. I purchased a home for my family in Independence, Missouri, and moved them there from Galien, Michigan, arriving May 23. There was plenty to do, but after three weeks of hard work we had things so arranged that I was able to leave, and June 13 I packed my valises and started for Los Angeles, California, arriving there on the 20th. I soon found Bro. T. W. Williams and was welcomed into his home. The next day being Sunday and Bro. A. Carmichael, our Bishop's agent, being there, I had the pleasure of hearing him preach twice. Both efforts were commendable. I remained in Los Angeles till the following Friday getting acquainted with the Saints and trying to learn the needs of the branch and what I could do, as a missionary, for their advancement.

Then went to San Bernardino where I remained for two weeks, during which time I preached twelve sermons. This is a fine branch presided over by Bro. A. E. Jones, a missionary. He is a reliable, faithful man, ready and anxious to do all he can. Bro. William Gibson also resides here. He has been one of our active, energetic missionaries and is just as willing to do all he can for the church as ever, although he has far passed the allotted time of man, "three score and ten." He is loved and honored by all and a fine example of gospel fruit. He does good missionary work wherever he can go.

From there I came to Santa Ana and remained till after the reunion which closed July 26. This branch is presided over by Bro. A. Carmichael, our assistant district president, Bishop's agent, and missionary. The reunion convened July 17. There was a large number of Saints camped on the ground for the number in the district. The prayer-meetings were spiritual and the preaching good, characteristic, to quite an extent, of the office held by the speaker. Elder Gibson and Patriarch Van Fleet were as fathers to the flock. High Priests A. E. Jones and T. W. Williams tried to lead the Saints to higher ground and show them grander beauties of the gospel. A. Carmichael with the spirit of the bishopric clearly and forcibly presented the law of tithing and consecration. Many have complied and others are talking of moving forward in this respect. Seventy J. C. Clapp in a true missionary style presented the fundamental principles of the gospel in such plainness that it instructed the outsiders in the plan of salvation, so they could tell exactly what must be done to be saved, and also cheered and gladdened the hearts of the Saints. Nothing does the Saints more good than a representation of those "first principles" that brought hope and satisfaction to our souls at first. The writer was suffering from the "bad cold" that the "tenderfoot" generally has to endure before he becomes acclimated, but endeavored to do his duty by preaching three afternoon sermons and one on Sunday night. The attendance of strangers was larger than ever before, we are told, and many say it was the best reunion ever held in this district.

While the opportunity for doing missionary work is not as good as in some missions, yet I feel well impressed with the situation, and believe that by a persistent, faithful effort a good work can be accomplished. It seems that we need determined, permanent workers. It takes one some time to learn the needs of the field and if he only stays a year he has not had the time to carry out his plans.

This district, like some others, is reaching a condition which demands that missionaries be located in the branches. This does not mean that the missionary is to preside over the branch, for as a rule this is not necessary. (Doctrine and Covenants 122:7.) The local talent should always be utilized and thus develop preachers to fill the demands when made. There are many men who can and are willing to do all the local work of a branch, except the preaching, if given the opportunity. These should have the privilege to work and develop. They should be encouraged to preach as much as wisdom directs, while the missionary devotes his whole time to his labors as a missionary. While the missionary who is appointed to labor in a district has the right to do missionary work in any branch or place in that district, under the direction of the missionary in charge, yet he has no right to do local work or interfere with branch affairs by virtue of that appointment. A high priest or seventy doing missionary work should not be tied down to local work, unless it is absolutely necessary. He should leave "the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible."—122:7. We do not understand that the missionaries are to keep as far from the branches and districts as possible, for generally in branches and their vicinity are the best opportunities offered for missionary work, but the local affairs should be left to the standing ministry "so far as possible." But occasionally it is necessary for the missionary to take charge of a branch.

Bro. T. W. Williams has been president of the Los Angeles Branch for a number of years, and as he is appointed to labor in Oregon, he will be greatly missed when he goes. He has many admirers and staunch friends in the district. We believe there are suitable men to fill the local offices in Los Angeles, but it will not be so easy to find men to fill the pulpit. They have a fine little church well located, but, as in so many other places, few desire the truth.

The missionaries that are appointed to this field are well liked and are doing the best they can under the circumstances. They have been here for years and their influence increases with their labors.

I am of the opinion that the missionaries that are sent here should bring their families and remain four or five years. The peculiar conditions of the field make this necessary. We have three branches with a membership of nearly eight hundred. Many of these are living a few miles from the branches. They should be cared for and missionary work done among them. This can not be done by spasmodic efforts. The missionary should be so located that he can follow up his efforts and save what we have and gain others as the way opens. With regular appointments in the branches and vicinity for the missionary and also for the local officers that can occupy, making such changes with the missionaries as wisdom directs, to fill those appointments, so neither the elder nor the people will get into certain ruts, we can save the members we have and build permanently. It may cost the church a little more but I believe it will be money wisely expended.

I am feeling well and hopeful. We begin a twelve-session debate with a Campbellite minister the 16th inst. I am glad to read of the success of my collaborators in other fields.

Yours in gospel bonds,

W. E. PEAK.

PUEBLO, Colorado, August 5.

Editors Herald: I am on my way for Delta, Colorado, to see what can be done to bring about unity there. I am waiting here to meet Bro. J. B. Morgan, vice-president of the district, whom I want to accompany me to Delta.

I finally succeeded in organizing a branch in Colfax County, New Mexico, named the Colfax Branch. We had ten letters and certificates of baptism the day of organization; other letters had not come. There are four or five more there to be baptized in the near future and perhaps others. Brn. John Lamb and J. P. Young were ordained elders, and N. E. Young a teacher. Bro. John Lamb was chosen president, Bro. J. P. Young presiding priest, Bro. N. E. Young teacher, Bro. Jesse Young secretary, and Sr. M. A. Lamb treasurer. There was a goodly portion of the Spirit present and all enjoyed the meetings.

I have succeeded in getting together a number of Saints at Trinidad, Colorado, with the promise of some more baptisms there in the near future. A branch of at least fifteen members can be organized there, if conditions prove suitable when I return there in the fall.

I assisted Bro. J. I. Young in the baptism of Bro. Nephi Spencer, and I baptized his wife, Sr. Anna M. Spencer, near Trinidad. Nephi is a son of Elder George Spencer, now dead.

When I went to Elk, New Mexico, in May, it was in anticipation of a debate that was partially arranged for between Bro. Seli and a Christian minister. When I got there the minister did not want to engage in the debate himself nor had he secured a man to represent his side of the question; so he and I entered into an agreement to find a man to represent each of our respective churches and the debate was to come off October 5.

I have just received a letter from Reverend W. L. Stafford of Coahoma, Texas, who has agreed to debate the church propositions, and in addition I am to affirm the divinity of the Book of Mormon, and he denies, and he is to affirm "that the Scriptures teach that the ministers of the Church of Christ, by divine authority, administer the rights and ordinances in the Church of Christ." The last proposition is not as I drafted it, but I am willing to let it go at that. So I am looking forward to the time of battle.

The Brn. Curtis have been having good success with the tent in Colorado Springs, and by direction of the Spirit they have gone to Denver with the hope of accomplishing a good work there.

Bro. J. Kemp is battling away for the Master in Boulder County, and is finding some of the "scattered sheep." The other brethren I have not heard of lately.

My address for a couple of weeks will be Delta, Colorado; after that it will be 743 East Willamette Street, Colorado Springs, Colorado.

Your colaborer,
J. M. STUBBART.

FLORESVILLE, Texas, August 2.

Editors Herald: We are still in the faith and doing all we can towards the advancement of the gospel of our Lord. Bro. S. S. Smith preached some here at the schoolhouse. Those who came out were well pleased and I think good was done. The Baptists at once gathered their flock and tried to prove salvation by faith only, but utterly failed in the estimation of those whom they called "the unsaved." The preacher said those outside of the Baptist Church were cold-blooded murderers of our Lord Jesus Christ. All except the Baptists are disgusted with such doctrine. I think with proper care some will be gathered into the fold here.

The Christian Campbellites have been holding meetings here. One year ago Bro. Harp wanted their house to preach in, offering them half the time for reply, but the preacher refused. Now he is disliked by his own flock. They have a new man who offers us the use of their house. I believe this will be the best way to open up the work in Floresville, the county-seat of Wilson County. There have been but two sermons preached there, so, Bro. W. S. Macrae or S. S. Smith, if you see this, please come to our rescue this summer. Would be glad to have any of the elders come and preach.

We rejoice in reading the church papers and learning how God is blessing his children. We desire to be faithful to the end. Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may become pure and wise instruments in God's hands in defending this grand and glorious work. I pray for the welfare of Zion and the salvation of the honest in heart. In the hope of eternal life,

ED JACKSON.

CLINTON, Iowa, August 4.

Editors Herald: I arrived here July 8 and began my work. I find a few devoted Saints in Clinton who so far have nobly seconded my efforts. I have preached fourteen sermons since my arrival, administered to two sick, and visited among the Saints and friends. I find some interest manifested by a few, and believe some work can be accomplished here. I expect to begin a protracted effort here next Sunday to continue, if the interest shall justify it, for from two to three weeks. We have rented a church situated between Fifteenth and Sixteenth Avenues, on Fifth Street, and shall hold forth there.

I visited Fulton, Illinois, but was unable to accomplish anything much. I met a Methodist minister who said that if he had been where he could, he would have shot Jo Smith for he knew that he was a bad man. A few questions developed the fact that he knew nothing but unfounded rumors. I intend to open the work in Fulton, if I have to preach on the streets, but have other work for the present. I am preparing for a systematic distribution of tracts in the city and to follow up with public preaching as opportunities may be opened.

Feeling hopeful for the work and with a determination to do my part, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

MARCUS H. COOK.

221 Twelfth Avenue.

DEADWOOD, South Dakota, August 5.

Editors Herald: Bro. J. L. Detrick and I came to this place the first of July and commenced to introduce the gospel to the people. This is quite a new field and from appearances one would conclude that religion was but very little thought of by most of the people here. We have visited Lead City, Belle-fourche, and Spearfish, and have preached the word in the vicinity of Spearfish with good effect. Made some friends to the gospel that I think will obey it sometime if the interest is kept up. We have been blessed with friends that have very kindly cared for us thus far. And we have been blessed of the Lord in presenting the word. There are a great many places here in the Black Hills and Northwestern Nebraska that we have been unable to reach for want of a place to preach in. To overcome this hindrance we have raised money by the assistance of the few Saints and friends in the parts mentioned and have bought a tent for gospel work, and we think it will be a great help. Our tent has just come and I have been out to get a place to set it up. We will set it up to-morrow and invite the people in to hear the gospel message. We are short of money to buy seats and private tent; hope those interested in the spread of the gospel in Western Nebraska and the Black Hills will help us out. We will send list of names of those that contributed to the tent fund later on. I am quite hopeful that the gospel will be established in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Hope we may have the prayers of God's people that the Spirit of the Master may attend us in our ministry, and that we may succeed in the work assigned.

Deadwood is located between two huge mountains and is strictly a mining town, and the hissing steam and heavy pulse-like thud of the great mills may be heard at any time, day or night, crushing and grinding the great rocks to fine dust so that they can extract the precious gold. O that people would seek for truth as these people do for the precious metals. As I look at these mountain peaks and see their rugged, riven sides, they seem like silent watches testifying in their grandeur to the suffering of our Savior as he breathed his last for poor fallen man. May God keep his Saints humble and faithful.

In the faith,
C. W. PRETTYMAN.

DES MOINES, Iowa, August 8.

Dear Herald: The Saints of the Des Moines District have reasons to rejoice in the progress of God's work and be thankful for the blessings given by an all-wise hand.

The district reunion convenes the coming week at Rhodes, beginning on the 13th and continuing until the 23d. Many of the Saints of this district live on farms, and this being their "busy season," they can not all attend the camp-meeting. There will be some there and a profitable meeting is looked forward to. It is expected that Bishop Kelley will be present and the Saints will thus be made acquainted with the law of tithing and consecration, and some be led to more fully comply with these laws. J. A. Gunsolley, representing the Religio and Sunday-school, will be present and thus lend earnestness and enthusiasm to these departments of church work.

The large tent has been in the northern part of the district through June and July, in charge of Elders McCoy and Sorensen. Their double duty as district officers and general missionaries makes their work very responsible. They are not able to devote much time to local church matters, and are leaving that to the branch officials. They are manifesting their interest in the several branches, however, and have recently prepared and had sent out to each branch an epistle containing advice and counsel on the duties of Saints. These brethren speak as shepherds over the flock in this district and we feel sure their epistle will be kindly received; and why should not this epistle be received by us with as much earnestness and loyalty as the Ephesians, or any of the ancient saints, received the epistles of the servants of God of those days?

It gives us pleasure to speak of the work in this city. The battle-cry has been sounded and the conflict is being carried on. The house to house distribution of Elder Mintun's tract, "The One Faith and the Evils of Utah Mormonism Briefly Outlined," has begun and will be continued until finished. Elder Mintun came to the city July 28, to begin his contemplated missionary work here. Preparations for a united and determined effort to present the gospel to the people of this city had been made. Services were held at the church every night. The city press very kindly gave space to all notices handed them, handbills were used, the Saints were prayerful and did what they could.

During the Sunday-school hour on August 2, part of the time was given to the subject, "Spreading the Gospel." As sub-topics under this head, "The needs of our district," and, "The needs of our city," were used. Under the former it was stated that our district, comprising twenty-six counties in central Iowa, contained a population of over six hundred thousand people. The last General Conference was able to send but six men into this vast field. What is the duty of Saints in assisting these few men to present the gospel to so vast a multitude?

Under "The needs of our city," it was stated that with a population of ninety thousand people here in the city two of our missionaries had come to the city to proclaim the gospel. To those who would not come to hear it, the angel's message must be taken. What can we Saints in the city do to assist in this great work? Certainly all can find something to do. The call for volunteers in the army of the Lord has been well responded to. Last Sunday nearly every brother in the church took a certain number of tracts and passed them out. In this distribution, one brother on handing the tract to the wife of a prominent physician of the city, paused while she read the title-page, and she then threw it to the ground with very great contempt. The brother picked it up and passed on. Another brother witnessed the tract torn to atoms and given to the wind. We did not think that in our great city of learning, enlightenment, and culture such religious intolerance existed, but it does.

This activity on the part of the church causes Satan to show his hands and his feet, and just where and in what manner he will show his craven head in all its hideousness we can not tell. Activity in the church causes activity in Satan. The bugle-call for assembling in line of battle and a forward march has been sounded and we do not believe that Elder Mintun and the branch officials will sound the note of retreat. There are few of the Saints in proportion to our numbers who have not responded to the bugle-call and nearly all are now wearing the uniform of a fighting soldier. Satan's right to supreme control here has been questioned, the honest-hearted who are seeking light will be called to come out of Babylon, and there are Saints enough here, with proper consecration to the Lord, to take the city, even though it must be done by a long-continued siege.

The membership here has increased twenty-five per cent the past year, and we are hopeful that this rate of increase will continue the coming year. The eyes of the Saints in every part of the State are turned upon the church here in our capital city, and too often it is the criticising eye. Brethren and sisters, we do not claim to be infallible, and you have but a very faint conception of the obstacles to be met here. We fear that your faint hearts would give way. Be with us in spirit, and plead for the church here in your prayers.

In gospel bonds,

A. A. REAMS.

J. R. EPPERSON.

From Over the Border.

Editors Herald: I came here, a new place, on Monday last to make an opening; preach first sermon to-night, but out of town. If a hall is obtainable I will use one; if not I will take what I can get. Rather stay and preach to a few in a private house than not preach at all or preach to no more in an expensive hall. It is a lamentable fact that sometimes we go to the burden of a big preparation to come before the public in a large central hall and then we are greeted with fewer listeners than we could have had or had been having in an obscure dwelling in the town's outskirts. I entered the town here yesterday afternoon and made fruitless efforts to secure a place where I could invite the people that they might hear what they have not heard. May go again to-morrow to see if opportunity will hold out its generous hand to one who wants.

Allow me the satisfaction of a few words in kind criticism of our Religio Quarterly and the Quarterly compilers. I experienced an awkwardness Sunday evening last in attempting to teach the Religio class with the Quarterly which, in my mind, in this one lesson, at least, betrays an over-sufficiency of Americanism. The church, it might be proper to observe, is not a national institution. If it bears any relation to nations it is international. The same is true with reference to both the Sunday-school and the Religio which are equally universal, and in their relation to the church may be said to exist as wheels within a wheel. The gospel is for all mankind and all nations have the same right to become its beneficiaries. When it is introduced into Hindostan the faithful Hindoo has as many rights, is as much a citizen of its commonwealth, as much a partaker of its bounties, as an Ephraimite who may live in the very heart of Zion. The church of God is no more American than British and no more British than German. The mere fact of the church having had its origin within the domain of the United States, of the Book of Mormon coming forth there, of the United States having most of its members, of the headquarters of the church being over there, does not make the church American. God is no more of an American than a Dutchman and I notice with delight that he is not particular when he wants a man for an office, whether he lives in England, in Canada, or in Australia, as long as he is the right kind of a man. And I have noticed with a degree of admiration where American brethren have partaken of the same impartiality in selecting their life's companions.

The feature of the Quarterly I refer to is particularly the Lesson Questions, and also some of the comment preceding, in the lesson for the first week in August. Take the first question: "How is this land spoken of?" I should ask, What land, United States, or all the Americas? Remember that America is spoken of as Zion and Zion is spoken of again as the "pure in heart." Aside from this then and the fact of the capital of Zion being located (for the most part) within the United States, the United States is no more Zion than Patagonia or Alaska.

"How is this land spoken of?" How is a pupil in England in class to answer that? "This land" over there would be England. "This land" in Canada might be Canada, or all America, to minds previously educated on Book of Mormon usage. But whom do the compilers mean by "this land"? Why certainly the United States exclusively, for in the comment, page eighteen, quoting, "And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles," is applied to the United States in an unmistakable manner. The application is certainly incorrect. The language referred to as it variously occurs in 2 Nephi 7 applies to all America and there is no reason for applying it to merely a section of the North American Continent. We do not doubt that there are references to that particular section or portion of this hemisphere in Doctrine and Covenants and possibly in the Book of Mormon, and in the former to the inspiration of its Constitution as the Quarterly suggests; but we can see and feel over here that necessary distinctions are ignored. Better than "To-day our nation is not the only nation," etc., say, To-day the United States is not, etc. Instead of saying "our land" and "this land" and "we," as occurs so frequently, say the United States or the American nation when you mean it. Its intelligibility will be easier to foreigners and it will display less of the—well, it might have a better tone.

If all the Quarterlies were used on your side, it might work all right, and even then it would not be right to apply to your country what includes more. No injury was intended to any one by our good patriotic compilers; only a little oversight, they being Americans and a large percentage of their useful work being used within their own land, a country of which they ought to feel proud and which I admire.

One more point. I used to read, in our General Conference Minutes, of resolutions that were adopted in condonement of things done by Americans, war with Spain, for instance, eulogies of parties like Francis Willard, and performances which seemed to me to amount only to feats of patriotism, and don't you know I wondered if we were to have a General Conference in Canada if we would be accorded without dissension the same liberties in respect to our Boer War and in respect to some distinguished men of our empire who might about that time be passing away. O I guess we would all right enough, but I just wondered, you know: I wish our publications would never contain anything to give rise to remonstrances over national affairs. The day is too far spent to throw our time away. The night is nearly on, the dew is falling, the glebe is becoming damp. Soon we will hear the bridegroom, soon the glorious day.

As for myself I have very little attachment for any of the old powers of Europe (save one) and do not care how soon every inch of these continents is entirely free. It does seem that a nation which wants to be free ought to be free—some exceptions. The time may come when all this land, this vast expanse from Cape Horn to the eternal ice fields of the frigid North, will be loosed from the long grasp of the avaricious East, when eastern domination here will be for ever past. We love England, but if the results unseen were not too chafing which might be brought to bear, I would not mind seeing Canada and England separate nations to-morrow, with no uncommon amenability between them. We could not conscientiously advocate annexation, but if there is any avoidance I never could see the wisdom of paying fifty thousand dollars per annum to keep you fellows from eating us. If it is a matter between the fifty thousand and being eaten I suppose every Canadian would take the former. What an awful calamity it would be for us to have to stand in glittering steel to pierce our brethren whom we had learned to love! God is overruling and undoubtedly he will fix things up all right.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

BRUSSELS, Ontario, August 5.

FULTON, Kentucky, August 7.

Dear Herald: Since leaving my home in Stewartsville, Missouri, I have labored in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, with but little effect so far as outside work is concerned. However, I believe by the help of God I did some good with the Saints. J. W. Metcalf assisted me nobly. We have some good people there, and some few outside that seem interested. It is a wonder to me that the work stands there at all, from the conduct of certain ones. My heart ached within me when I learned how things were going there. I did the best I could to encourage the Saints and build them up. Bro. John M. Resch, teacher of the Louisville Branch, assisted me much in looking up matters of import to the good of the church. The Saints are having a very nice Sunday-school under the supervision of Bro. Harry Smith, one of our coming young men in Kentucky. It does my heart good to see the young of the church take hold of the work in earnest.

On July 9 I bade the Saints farewell and left for Fulton, Kentucky, to assist in preparing for our reunion to be held at Crossland, Kentucky. On arriving at Fulton I found that little had been done towards getting things in shape for a successful reunion. Well, I just simply felt blue. I heard that Bro. D. W. Cook was very low, so on Saturday in company with Bro. J. W. Williams we made an effort to reach Bro. Cook's place. A heavy rain and wind storm hindered, so that we did not reach there until Sunday morning. We found the family all in mourning. Our dear brother had passed away on the evening of the 9th and was buried on Friday, the 10th. O how sad it was to see that dear good family so distressed and their home made sorrowful from the loss of one that everybody liked.

I returned to Fulton and with Bro. J. R. McClain set about reunion work. We soon had notices of the reunion going over the country, inviting the people to meet with us on Saturday, the 25th, at Crossland. Bro. McClain and the writer went several days early and found that Bro. Cook, one of the committee, had been there in the winter and secured a good place for the camp, etc. Mr. John Turnbow, one of Crossland's merchants, received us kindly, and told us the lot was his and we could occupy free of charge. Mr. McLeod, postmaster of the village, also received us kindly, and did all he could to help make our meeting a success. On Friday, the 24th, Bro. W. L. McClain and sisters came in with the tent and before night we had it up, all ready for service. Some of the citizens of the place came and helped us get ready.

At ten o'clock in the forenoon Saturday, conference convened. Business passed off quietly and in good shape. Preaching began Saturday night, the writer giving a synopsis of what we believe to a good crowd. From then on our crowds increased day and night. Interest was good from start to finish. Bro. T. A. Hougas did good for the Sunday-school and otherwise. He made many friends while there, both for himself and the Sunday-school. Come again, Bro. Hougas.

The people were sorry to see us leave and gave us special invitation to have our next meeting there. Brn. Smith and Snow are using the tent in Murray, Kentucky. Have not heard what success they are having. I came here on Monday feeling well and happy, but Tuesday night I took quite sick and am still on that list. May God bless his people is my prayer.

Yours in the conflict,
I. N. ROBERTS.

R. F. D. No. 1, OELWEIN, Iowa, August 5.

Editors Herald: We held business-meeting of Oran Center Branch August 2, 1903, at Oran Center Schoolhouse. Since giving Bro. and Sr. Sutton letters of removal there are only forty-six members of this branch. Some are in Oelwein, some at Independence, and others at Waterloo, Iowa, where our president and visiting priest, Bro. Robert Smith, resides. Bro. Smith has organized a prayer-meeting in Waterloo, which he says is doing pretty well.

Our Eastern Iowa District conference convenes at Waterloo, Iowa, September 5 and 6, 1903. I understand meetings will continue after conference if interest is taken.

Of the forty-six members of this branch, six are absent, and there were only six members present at business-meeting. There are five more who could have been present if they had only tried. The Lord says, speaking through his servant Paul, "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching. For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins."—Hebrews 10: 25, 26. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."—Verse 31.

Last January I started a Sunday-school of my own children, and sent for Quarterlies and kept it up for two quarters but I got to working away from home and found it inconvenient and at the close of the second quarter I discontinued, but when I get to staying at home again I thought I would organize more fully under the Home Department as I have leaflets of instruction.

Yours for the spread of the truth,

JOHN G. HODGES.

WINSTON, Missouri, August 7.

Editors Herald: We are holding tent-meetings at this place. Have been here some ten or eleven days and have had fair turnouts. Some of the best citizens are out to hear us. We expect to stay about a week longer if nothing prevents and then go to Osborn, Missouri, to stay eight days, and then to the reunion at Stewartville, on the 28th, if all goes well. Bro. Haden is here with me. Brn. W. W. Smith and Arch McCord are holding forth at Mirable, Missouri, about four miles south of Kerr.

Respectfully,

B. J. DICE.

FALLS CREEK, Pennsylvania, August 4.

Editors Herald: I am glad of the opportunity of writing a few lines concerning the condition of the work in these parts. After closing a series of meetings at Falls Creek I commenced at Sandy Valley. Held eight meetings up till last night in a Free Methodist church with considerable opposition, but large audiences and the best of interest. The second night I had a short controversy with a Presbyterian and he has not shown up since. Last night I was attacked by a Methodist. He was in a rage and demanded the church, saying I had misrepresented the Scriptures. I told him we were always ready for investigation. The people could soon see who had the truth. The only way for him to meet me was to shut me out of the church. The majority of the people took sides with us. There are many near the kingdom. Their class leader told Bro. Anthony and me that they were all teaching false doctrines; he gave me a dollar and several others gave me smaller amounts.

After closing the meetings at Falls Creek, I was called back to baptize a Presbyterian lady fifty-one years of age. Yesterday a Catholic lady asked for baptism. That will make four at this place and one at Lindsey. If there is no change I will start for Lindsey to-morrow and then for Monongahela City. I love to labor in my new field; I find the people kind and generous. May God bless all his servants and Saints is my desire. May all help to push the work throughout the world!

Your colaborer,
JAMES D. PORTER.

SEMINOLE, Alabama, August 4.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the Latter Day Saint church only one year, but not once have I regretted the step taken. I know it is the work of God. We have had Bro. G. W. Sherman with us in this part of the Lord's vineyard and I truly believe he is a servant sent of God. It made all the Saints here rejoice to see him come, for we all knew that he was a father in Israel. Our hearts were grieved when he had to leave and we hope for his return.

It has been about a month since Bro. W. J. Booker was down to see us and we long to see him again, for he is a very welcome visitor at our homes.

I wish also to tell you of a dream I had. I dreamed that Sr. Gilly and I were together and I looked in the south and saw a terrible destruction. I thought it was a destroying angel. I could see houses and trees coming in every shape and I fell down on my knees and asked my heavenly Father how I could escape that destruction. I was told that the only way I could escape it was to take a part in the prayer and testimony meetings. I promised the Lord that I would do so. I want all the Saints to pray for me that I may continue faithful.

Your sister in the one faith,

ROXEY COOPER.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Northeast Missouri District: The condition of the district financially compels me to appeal to all the Saints to give a helping hand in the way of tithes and offerings. I have implicit confidence that you will respond to this appeal as usual. Let us all make a strong pull and a long pull together to set our work up in this district. You have read Bro. John Kaler's letter in the Ensign describing the large territory comprising twenty-two counties, with only three missionaries regularly appointed by the proper authorities of the church, but it seems that this number is as much as our district can support. Truly the harvest is great but the laborers are few. The season for tent preaching is passing away, Saints, and very few of these counties will hear the glad tidings ere the cold season will set in. Shall we all give a little of our temporal means to carry the good news to these counties, or shall we suffer ourselves to be unconcerned in rescuing the perishing ones? Let us all think seriously on this important matter. Pardon me, Saints, if I speak too plainly. The wise man has said there is a time for all things and perhaps it is proper to call your attention to our duties in temporal matters, as I find the financial condition of our district forcing me to appeal to you. Let us all pull together at once, and cast our mites into the treasury of God, and while you send in your tithes and offerings do not forget the penny tent fund as suggested by Bro. Kaler, and may God bless us in our efforts is my prayer. J. T. Williams, Bishop's agent.

Reunion Notices.

The Eastern Oklahoma reunion will convene in Bro. S. J. Hinkle's grove, seven miles southeast of Stillwater, four miles west of Mehan, at ten o'clock, Friday, August 28, 1903, and will continue ten days. Those coming by rail will buy tickets to Mehan, on the Guthrie and Stillwater Branch of the Santa Fe Railroad. Notify the committee what day you will come and teams will meet you at trains. There is only one train a day each way. Come, Saints, one and all, and help make this meeting a grand success. S. J. Hinkle, Stillwater, Oklahoma.

The Southwestern Iowa reunion convenes near Henderson on the 22d inst. The committee failed to make any arrangements for boarding but a stand on the ground will furnish all things in the line of provisions for the campers; wood, straw, hay, and grain on the grounds. Bro. Fred A. Smith, of the Twelve, Bro. Henry Kemp, patriarch, and Brn. C. Scott, Turpen, Chambers, of the missionary force, are expected to be present and also others of the local ministry. Trains will be met at Henderson on Friday and Saturday, August 21 and 22. Those coming by train later than that date please notify the committee. Let all come that can and help make this the best reunion ever held in this district. By order of committee, D. Hougas, chairman.

The third annual reunion of the members of Bandon Branch convenes at Myrtle Point, August 28 to September 6, lasting ten days. The speakers expected to be present are: G. T. Griffiths, one of the Twelve, who has charge of the Northwest, Elder T. W. Williams, who has charge of Oregon and Washington, and Elders H. L. Holt and D. A. Anderson, who are already in Coos County, doing missionary work. As large an attendance as possible is desirable. Come and bring your tents along and let us have a season of earnest work in the Master's cause. There will be some expenses to meet in defraying the cost of the reunion and in sending the elders on their way rejoicing, and all members of the branch who can not attend, and who feel like helping to bear this burden can do so by remitting to S. N. B. Hunt, Bandon, Oregon, who is deacon of the branch and has charge of the funds. D. E. Stitt, branch president.

Conference Notices.

Eastern Iowa District conference will be held September 5 and 6 at Waterloo, Iowa. Send your branch reports to Elder Warren Turner, in care of J. A. Goodrich, 215 East Sixth Street, Waterloo, Iowa, Florence Green, secretary.

The conference of the Northwestern Kansas District will meet on the camp ground near Osborne, Osborne County, Kansas, Saturday, September 5, 1903. District officers are to be elected and the business of the last six months to be considered. Ella M. Landers, district secretary.

The semiannual conference of the New York District will convene in the Saints' chapel, Broad River, Connecticut, on September 5, 1903, at 7 p. m. Reports from the presidents of branches are desired, also from all holding the priesthood, stating their labors in their several callings, etc., that the conference may know what is being done in the district. Reports should be sent to the secretary three days before conference. We hope the Saints will make efforts to be in attendance. We look for Apostle F. M. Sheehy to be with us. Joseph Squire, district president, 227 McDougal Street, Brooklyn, New York. Samuel Guilfoxy, secretary, 189 Schaeffer Street, New York.

Convention Notices.

The Eastern Colorado Sunday-school association will meet at Colorado Springs, at 10 a. m., September 4, 1903. L. A. Schmutz, superintendent; L. Fishburn, secretary.

Eastern Iowa District Sunday-school association will hold its convention at Waterloo, September 4, 1903. Florence Green, district secretary.

The Sunday-school convention of the Northwestern Kansas District will convene with the Twin Creek Branch between Downs and Osborne in Grandpa Bergier's grove, September 3, 1903, at 2 o'clock p. m. John A. Teeter, superintendent; Myrtle Coop, secretary, Downs, Kansas.

Sunday-School Work at Dow City Reunion.

The order of the Sunday-school work at the reunion at Dow City, Iowa, August 28 to September 6, 1903, will be about as follows, subject, however, to such changes as may be necessary or desirable. T. A. Hougas will be superintendent, J. L. Butterworth and Sidney Pitt assistant superintendents; other officers to be selected. Sr. Nellie Hall will be in charge of primary department. Meeting for organization and general preparation will be held on Saturday, 4 p. m. Regular sessions of Sunday-school, both Sundays at 8 a. m., using the lessons for the days. Teachers' meeting, Monday, 4 p. m. Sessions of Sunday-school at 4 p. m., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, using lessons 3, 4, and 5 of current quarter. Religio session, 4 p. m., Friday. Sessions of Sunday-school and Religio institute work at time to be agreed upon. Union Sunday-school and Religio prayer-meeting, 8 a. m., Friday. Business to be called. Bring your Bibles, Quarterlies, and song-books. We anticipate a very profitable, as well as a pleasant time. T. A. Hougas, general superintendent.

Died.

MCKENZIE.—Mr. John McKenzie, a friend of many of the Saints, died at his home in Jefferson City, Missouri, at the age of 84 years and 6 months. His death was incident to old age.

FISHER.—At the home of her son, Adelbert, near Necedah, Wisconsin, August 1, 1903, Sr. Elizabeth E. Fisher, aged 77 years. She was born at Albany, New York, in 1825, baptized by Elder J. C. Foss, November 10, 1855. Funeral services conducted by Elder Lester Wildermuth, sermon by Elder T. W. Chaburn.

SENIOR EDITOR ABROAD.

We left Clay Cross for Sheffield July 25. The ride was short and pleasant. We were met at the station by Brn. W. H. Greenwood and John Austin and were escorted to the home of Bro. Greenwood where the Editor and Bro. Evans were made welcome, while Bro. Rushton was billeted at Bro. Austin's. In the evening, there being no services in the hall, Brn. Evans, Greenwood, and Rushton, accompanied by a few of the local brethren, went into town and occupied at the monolith, a rendezvous for open-air preachers and orators representing various creeds and beliefs. Here you can see the Salvation Army energetically carrying on their services, pounding the drum, blowing the various trumpets, sometimes harmoniously and often discordantly. Testimonies from the soldiers, male and female, all delivered with vigor and fervor, are interspersed with songs and solos and frequent appeals for money. On another of the four sides was a clap-jack, shouting out the respective values of his assorted wares. Another side was occupied by a representative of socialism whose fiery eloquence breathed challenges to all Christianity, with incisive sarcasm ridiculing the discrepancies and inconsistencies, real or imaginary, to the extravagant amusement of a large number of youths and men representing citizens of various orders, loafers and devotees of the beer-pot and clay pipes from which they sucked the fumes of the weed to say nothing of distilled nicotine, and then poured the volume of smoke from their mouths like miniature factory chimneys. The fourth and only remaining side of the monolith was occupied by some faction of the common evangelical school.

Our brethren waited until the Salvation Army had closed their meeting and made their final appeal to the generosity of their hearers, and when the strains of their music grew fainter and fainter as they marched away, stepped up to the spot and mounting the steps Bro. Rushton opened fire, followed by Bro. Evans. They had a good crowd of respectful hearers, who seemed to be interested in what was said. Bro. Evans spoke with vigor and lucidity which caused one man to feel somewhat uncomfortable and when our brother was done he came forward to criticize. For quite a while a discussion was maintained in which the critic did not appear to have the best of

ACCORDING to an article which appeared in the Minneapolis Tribune for August 8 considerable excitement has been caused by a discovery made at Gray's Bay, on the shores of Lake Minnetonka. Charles von Steinkirsh, while excavating for a cellar, found some corroded metal disks which on examination proved to be Roman coins of great antiquity. The date of issue of the coins has been variously estimated from as early as 515 B. C. to 715 A. D. They are very old, and the query is, How came those early Roman coins to be on the shores of Minnetonka?

CRIME is no more rampant this year than it was last year, only certain unusual circumstances in certain unusual places have called special attention to it, matters by a long way. The crowd, which was large, was appreciative and orderly. After meeting was over a quantity of circulars was distributed announcing the special services in the Temperance Hall on Sunday. It was half past ten o'clock when our little band left this forensic arena.

On Sunday at half past ten in the forenoon a meeting was held in the Temperance Hall at which some few strangers were present, besides the band of believers, among them a number of Utah people, ministers. Bro. Evans held forth on the Marriage Relation. He showed the evils of plural marriage or polygamy, as a departure from the faith predicted in prophecy in a clear and emphatic manner. The effort was well received by the Saints, and we conclude was not so well received by those representative men from Utah. In the afternoon the Saints gathered in their little meeting-house in Ada Street, Uppertorpe, over which the Editor and Bro. John Austin presided. The Spirit was with the little band, and the hour was well employed and enjoyed, one being administered to, the ordinance being attended to by Brn. Evans and Rushton.

In the evening at half past six meeting was held again in the Temperance Hall, when a fair congregation greeted the Editor, who discussed some of the leading portions of the faith of the church, resulting from the angelic message and the spirit and power of revelation. Some disposition to question was shown at the close of the meeting, the spirit of the questioners seeming to be fair, devoid of a disposition to cavil or unnecessarily interrupt. We were under the necessity of closing earlier as the hall was to be occupied by other parties at eight o'clock.

After the meeting the brethren again visited the monolith and occupied under conditions somewhat similar to those already recorded. Bro. W. H. Greenwood spoke first, followed by Brn. Rushton and Evans. A crowd larger than the one which greeted them the previous evening was in attendance. When through with preaching several were disposed to question and criticise, but the questions and criticisms were not of any grave importance. One old man, who boasted of his ability as an old hand in dealing with Latter Day Saints, was sorry he had interfered, before he had done. Bro. Evans in his usual manner maintained the cause of truth. An atheist thought he could do better so putting in rest his lance endeavored to bear down the brethren, but the effort was so utterly unsuccessful that the audience very warmly evidenced their approval of the defense made by the brethren. It was again quite late when the meeting dispersed, it was estimated that five or six hundred must have been listening, besides many who "stood afar off." The open-air services were highly successful and encouraging, the local brethren expressed their determination to keep the meetings going.

On Monday it was raining, so we spent the time in the house attending to correspondence; and in the evening Bro. Evans spoke to the people in the hall again. The small room was well filled with attentive listeners who appreciated the able effort of the brother.

On Tuesday under the kind guidance of Mr. London, a friend of Bro. Greenwood, we visited the plant of Messrs. Walker and Hall, silversmiths, platers, etc., and were shown through the establishment and witnessed the transition of some of the wares from the crude material to the polished article packed ready for sale. The establishment is very large and manufactures all kinds of solid and plated goods. A guide was detailed from the staff to show us through, and we are very pleased to acknowledge the kindness and consideration.

We next visited the renowned firm of cutlers, Messrs. Rogers & Sons, where we were permitted to see in their showroom some very fine and costly cutlery, including a clasp-knife having seventy-five blades. Some of these blades were very elegantly chased with landscapes, views of castles, and other attractive pictures. Another had one hundred fifty blades, and last but not least one having nineteen hundred blades to which additions are made every five years, the number of blades corresponding with the number of years of the Christian era. These knives are kept in glass cases evidently for the purpose of advertisement. The gentleman in the office was very kind, and showed us the lower section of an elephant's tooth, said to be the largest ever secured, it was some eight inches across. On the stairway we saw what is said to be the second largest tusk ever brought into England.

Passing from this place on our way back to the house, we visited the Sheffield Parish Church, of which it was said by the gentleman in charge they had definite history to trace it back eight hundred years, if not farther. It is a very large building and in some respects is very well preserved and in others is rapidly going to decay, which is being restored at some considerable cost.

The Editor was to have occupied in the evening in the hall, but a severe indisposition prevented and the burden fell upon Bro. Evans, who cheerfully consented to fill the vacancy. He was again accorded a good hearing.

On Wednesday Brn. Evans, Greenwood, and Rushton, under the guidance of Bro. Austin, visited the steel-works of Messrs. John Brown & Co., in which almost everything in steelware up to tons of armor-plate is manufactured. This firm employs about twenty thousand hands, including the mining of its own coal, the transportation of its own ore, making its own gas, and other industries connected with the business. This ended our stay at Sheffield. We were escorted to the train by Brn. Greenwood, Austin, and Arber, and at half past two in the afternoon were on our way to Leeds.

Our stay in Leeds was from July 29 to August 3, a time filled with excellent meetings, beginning with a reception held in the Saints' little chapel at Hyde Park, where we were met and cordially greeted by Brn. Thomas Taylor, John Girdham, W. Aveyard, J. Moir and Bro. Sharp. After the reception we enjoyed with them their business session, making provision for the coming conference. Thursday evening Bro. Evans preached at the Saints' chapel in Wortley, while the Editor remained at the comfortable home of John Girdham to whose care he and Bro. Evans had been consigned.

No meetings were held until Saturday evening, when the annual conference of the British Isles Mission convened at six o'clock in the Saint James Hall. After the preliminaries and reading of the minutes the Editor and Bro. Evans were elected to preside, associated with the president of the mission. Upon the platform were assembled these presiding officers, the secretaries, Brn. W. R. Armstrong, S. F. Mather, and J. D. Howell, and Bishop T. Taylor and his counselors, C. H. Caton and J. Dewsnup, Sr.

The time was occupied until half past nine with the routine business of conference including reports of mission, missionaries, districts, isolated branches, and so forth. An adjournment was had for public services in the Grand Assembly Rooms on Sunday at half past ten in the forenoon. At this hour the visiting brethren were very agreeably surprised to greet so large a number of the Saints from different parts of the mission. The minutes will show a very general attendance. Bro. R. C. Evans was the speaker for the hour and occupied very acceptably, the meeting being in charge of Evan B. Morgan and John Davis, missionaries. The impression made by Bro. Evans in his discourse was evidently a good one, as notes of commendation were heard in every quarter.

The afternoon was devoted to social service in charge of the Editor and Bro. Evans. At this meeting Brn. Henry Greenwood and T. Taylor were ordained high priests, and Brn. T. J. Sheldon and W. H. Greenwood were ordained seventies as per order of the annual General Conference. One brother who had been baptized at Warrington was confirmed, after which besides prayers, some twenty-four spoke in testimony. An excellent spirit prevailed and the service was enjoyed by all. At half past six in the evening the house was again well filled and the Editor was the speaker of the hour.*

*The Editor spoke on the occasion with liberty, force, and power, tinged with raciness that had not been equalled since his arrival in Great Britain. It was with feelings of trepidation that Bro. Evans and I looked forward to the occasion, as our brother had been suffering very severely from indisposition, but under God's blessing he was not troubled and preached to the satisfaction and pleasure of the large assembly.—Rushton.

Conference resumed business at ten o'clock in the forenoon Monday at the Saint James Hall and continued during the day until business was finished, the services ending by the holding of a social service in the evening, provided for by a vote of conference, presided over by Elders T. J. Sheldon and G. W. Thorburn, like veterans in the cause. Thus ended one of the pleasantest episodes in our tour through the mission. We were very agreeably surprised at the number of those present and much pleased with the spirit which prevailed during the entire session. There was not a jar or manifestation of impatience or indifference during the time we were together. We met many leading men from various parts of the field and the various districts and branches, many of whom were accompanied by their wives and other portions of their families making it a very pleasant reunion indeed. If the Saints of the British Mission were as much impressed with the pleasantness of this meeting as were the visitors from the other side of the water, it will be a subject of conversation for a good time to come.

We omitted to mention that upon our election to the presidency of the conference, a very cordial and feeling address of welcome was presented to the Editor and Bro. Evans, the sentiments of which were highly esteemed and much appreciated by each of us. After being read by the secretary, Bro. W. Armstrong, it was ordered by vote that the address be engrossed in an artistic manner and copies be presented to each of us.

On leaving Leeds we were escorted to the train by a number of the brethren and sisters who kindly bade us God-speed, our destination being Manchester, from where this epistle is being directed.

MANCHESTER, August 7.

JOSEPH SMITH.

LIQUOR IN CHURCHES.

According to a press telegram which appeared in an eastern paper recently, the Reverend Charles Spicer, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Cincinnati, says he believes the time is soon coming when liquor will be served in the churches in order to appease the appetites of those who otherwise can not keep away from the saloon. He would also have the church building equipped with a complete gymnasium, a pool-room, and a near-by reading-room.

It seems that as the power of the modern ministers to attract and hold congregations lessens, the poor ministers are racking their brains for schemes to bring the church in "closer touch with the people." Somebody ought to suggest to them the idea of preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ to their audiences. The Messiah did not have to dispense liquor and have pool-rooms in order to get the people to church. The crowds came unbidden to hear his doctrine. It has power yet to attract the people. Try it, ministers, and leave out the liquor!

SOCIETY ISLANDS AGAIN STORM-SWEPT.

According to Associated Press dispatches received by way of San Francisco, California, August 9, dated at Papeete, Tahiti, July 23, the Tuamotu Islands were again swept by wind and waves. The dispatch says:

In January the Islands were swept by a flood from the ocean, and in consequence nearly six thousand persons were drowned and property to the value of five hundred thousand dollars was destroyed. And now, six months later, fierce gales from the southwest and southeast have again caused great crests to sweep over some of the islands. So far only four persons are believed to have perished, but the fear is that when all the islands are cleared there may be a distressing list of fatalities.

The steamer Excelsior suffered much damage during the series of gales while it was on its way from Tahiti to the Marquesas group.

Three of the Tuamotu Islands were under water to such an extent that the inhabitants had to climb cocoanut trees for safety. Houses and stores, copra, and finally the cocoanuts were destroyed, while the inhabitants had a close call from death. It is thought most of the islands were visited by the storm.

We shall await letters from our missionaries with interest.

A PREHISTORIC VILLAGE SITE DISCOVERED.

The following appeared in the Cleveland Press for August 1:

CHILLICOTHE, Ohio, August 1.—Doctor M. C. Mills, curator of the state archæological society, has discovered a prehistoric village site on the Gartner farm, a few miles south of this city. He has made excavations which disclose many valuable relics.

Doctor Mills has opened forty-nine pits which were used for storing food, and in some cases for burial. In these were found charred corn and beans, which leads the archæologists to infer that the mound-builders knew something of agriculture.

Bones of elk, deer, gray fox, coon, and ground-hog were found. Broken pottery of varied designs, beautiful necklaces of delicately colored sea shells and polished beaver teeth, weaving instruments, including needles and small bodkins of stone were unearthed. Several skeletons and specimens of carved bones and pipes were also secured.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

W. A. Smith wrote from Pisgah, Iowa, August 13: "I am holding meetings near the above place in the tent. We have good attendance, from one hundred to two hundred at night and good interest. Last Sunday I baptized two. Brn. J. C. Crabb and J. M. Baker are operating the other district tent at Akron, Iowa. The Lord is blessing my efforts this year. I have baptized thirty-seven thus far. There are many calls for work."

On August 9 A. B. Phillips wrote from River Point, Rhode Island: "Four converts this month here—result of tent work. I hope for others."

Bro. Samuel Frederick Mather wrote from Manchester, England, August 7: "We are all thoroughly enjoying the visit of President Joseph Smith and his counselor, R. C. Evans, and are convinced that much good will accrue from their coming amongst us."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A brother sends us a copy of a pamphlet entitled "Zions Temporal Redemption" which has been circulated to a considerable extent, and asks the question, "Is this pamphlet being sent out according to the law in Doctrine and Covenants 125:11?" No; the writer of the pamphlet has circulated it on his own responsibility. For a tract to be issued in harmony with paragraph eleven of section one hundred twenty-five, the manuscript must be examined by the First Presidency, and if approved by them is passed to the Board of Publication for publication. The pamphlet in question did not go through this course. It would be well too, if the instructions given concerning tracts were more closely heeded.

The Midland Free Press of Leicester, England, in its issue of July 25, 1903, mentions the visit of President Joseph Smith to that city and his sermon there on the Sunday evening previous; also giving a few dates and facts in the history of the church.

A "trust" in religious forces is advocated by Reverend Bruce Brown, of the North Side Christian Church, Chicago, who would practice greater economy in the expenses of "soul saving." He thinks present religious methods tend to multiply churches in respectable communities and leave the slums without church privileges. He advocates the expenditure of less money in building churches among the "comparatively good people" and the expenditure of more to preach the gospel to the poor. He thinks a "religious trust" is the thing to bring us nearer the dawn of the millennium.

In our issue for August 5, we had occasion to answer some questions relative to patriarchs and their work. In connection with our answers it would be well for those interested to turn to HERALD for November 26, 1902, on page 1166, and read a "pastoral" by the presiding patriarch, Alexander Hale Smith. Speaking of the matter of "remuneration" he wrote: "I am so often asked, What does it cost to get a blessing? that I will answer it here, although I have answered it through the HERALD before. There is no charge made for blessings. It is true there is considerable expense attached to the work, but the matter of remuneration does not enter into consideration; if the person desires to aid in the expenses, and is able, it rests with him entirely; the blessing will be given just the same." He has always taken this position, arguing that if a "charge" were made some of the very persons who would derive the greatest comfort from the blessings would be deprived thereof because of their inability to pay. He is right.

News dispatches from Jamaica, recently visited by a devastating storm, tell of the great suffering as a result of the hurricane. Property loss on the island is estimated at fifteen millions of dollars.

THOUGHTS ON ROMANISM.

It is perhaps fortunate the Pope is dead and buried and another elected, so long as it had to be, for now, no doubt, peace will ensue. Not nearly so much paper would be written over, nor so much ado made if the Savior should come to earth again without sin unto salvation.

But methinks I can see danger in the movement now headed by Cardinal Gibbons of America—"The Federation of all Roman Catholic Societies." While there may be a star of hope in the fact that the Federation may be to some extent Americanized, yet it is not for the interests of the people, but purely for the interests of the Roman Church which is doing work against the interests of liberty while it claims to be its champion. We believe the object is to unite all the Catholic races into one political whole, to be governed by the Vatican of Rome. This organization had its birth at Long Branch, New Jersey, on the eighteenth day of August, 1901, and met in convention on December 10, in the city of Cincinnati, since which time its delegates have been hard at work with the avowed purpose to unite all Catholics and more particularly to press the claims of the church in America.

This movement may have much to do with our life as a people in the coming days, especially when we consider it in the light of latter-day revelation.

It is reported there are seventeen millions of Catholics in the United States and her dependencies. This society is to unite this hitherto somewhat divided class. In a single sentence, it is the same old fight, Romanism and Protestantism. Find out what those two words stand for in the light of history and you will know what the secret of the present contest is.

A commandment was given by Leo when he said, "It is your duty to enter politics, go in and use your vote and voice for me, the holy father, and the church, and do your best to make America a Catholic country." Who can forget the history of Italy when Rome ruled her politics. The light cast over the world was the light of burning torches that kindled the fagots to burn dissenters. Has the papacy changed? If not, are there reasons for fears?

Leo saw the power of our institutions was to "set free." Rome claims one mind must dictate in all things; our institutions teach that the people govern. One mind or many minds, that is the issue. I confess I am tired of this Romish todyism. Even the President of our nation welcomed the Federation which is now in session in Atlantic City, New Jersey, and sends regrets of his inability to be present, etc., wishing the Federation great success. Surely he can not be ignorant of the fact that the real purpose of the Federation is to run an opposition government. It was plainly stated by Bishop McFaul that its objects were to control the nation, if possible. President Roosevelt may be worldly-wise in catering so much to Roman elements but the Taft Commission to the Vatican of late may commit us to a policy we may deplore in time. We would rather hear our President say to Rome and all her federations, Hands off, your methods are against the institutions of our government and that for which our flag stands.

There was one good note in the president's welcome which is significant. "The mission of the Federation is one of love. You bring no gospel of hatred. The key-note of your best hopes and of your efforts always will be that Catholics and those of other denominations may better understand each other, because better understanding each other there can not be any ground for unkindness. So all may be sure, no matter what may have been said, that our main object is one of charity, one of better understanding among all Americans, so that even though in the inscrutable dispensation of God, who permits men to follow different paths in seeking his divine truth, yet as Americans they can not go back to the ages of intolerance in this country."

"So mote it be." It was Henry Clay of Kentucky who said, "I would rather be right than be president," and Lincoln said, "We can not exist half free and half slave." We hope this question was fully settled at Appomattox and that American Romanists may have their eyes open to their own interests, and, casting off the fetters of church slavery, join us in making America the land of the free, as it has always been the home of the brave. Surely there can be no such thing as a republic and papacy under one flag.

If this new Federation is to usher in a new regime, we say, "All hail." But tell us a few things squarely, and let the bishops and priests say amen. Will you say the year of jubilee has come, no more slavery of mind or body, tyranny is at an end, no burning of Bibles or branding of heretics, old wives' fables, worn-out traditions, dead men's bones, heathen rites, and fasts to the winds, and as Christians we will exalt Christ and his gospel among men, worshiping only God the Father, the Son and Holy Ghost. If not, then we must have a mighty federation that will.

T. W. CHATBURN.

"A STAR IN THE WEST."

After the McDowell-Bridwell debates, Bro. A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, Ohio, thought it advisable to be in possession of Boudinot's work, "A Star in the West," issued in 1816, "Archæologia Americana" (American Archæology), issued in 1820, and "View of the Hebrews," by Ethan Smith, issued in its second edition in 1825. By an extended effort, and paying a pretty good price, he secured them. As they are rare works now I thought something as to their contents might be of value, if the issue in the ever-continuing conflict shall be from Mr. Bridwell's position; and perhaps, otherwise. In the brief on Boudinot, in reference to Bridwell's arraignment of P. P. Pratt, Bro. A. B. Kirkendall's opinion is that quotation marks have been made to include, what was intended by Pratt, as his own language, summing up traditions in a way. This seems quite possible.

Interest centers in these briefs, in a measure, at least, as the works they are upon have been used by Mr. Bridwell to show that Joseph Smith had ample from which to form the Book of Mormon. I am of the opinion (having read them) that no candid, fair-minded person could read them and the Book of Mormon, and conclude the Book of Mormon originated in such a way. It is possible, of course, Mr. Smith, or any other man might have read such works and reproduced from them; but it does not follow of necessity that such was done by Mr. Smith in the case of the Book of Mormon, though some things agree. The points of dissimilarity, leave the matter clear, in the case of the Book of Mormon. If, as Mr. Bridwell would have it, these books being so much in use, so accessible to Mr. Smith and it is so clear that he drew from them, why, oh why, was there not a Bridwell to point it out then? Fate of fates, Bridwell must have been born out of due time! So evident, yet none saw it, and Mormonism went on!

Can it be the deceased, distinguished Boudinot, first speaker of the House of Representatives, and also the first president of the American Bible Society, had no friends remaining to defend his work? Did the "American Antiquarian Society," existing by enactment of the legislature of Massachusetts and of Congress, and composed of many of the distinguished men of the time, sit idly by, seeing Joseph Smith utilize their work, to impose on mankind, and make no objection? Ethan Smith, author of "View of the Hebrews," probably still lived in the early years of the publication of the Book of Mormon, but, if he did not, had he, too, no friends to object to the ill use of his book? Ethan Smith's book, the latest of the three, was published in 1825, or five years before the Book of Mormon. E. D. Howe published "Mormonism Unveiled" in or about 1835, ten years after Ethan Smith's work, and five years after the Book of Mormon. He snatched up at once the Spalding tale (an unpublished affair), and did not publish it because it did not read as expected—would not answer his purpose. Hall and all the Goliaths who have opposed Mormonism in those days and all since, even down to John T. Bridwell, lost the opportunity of his recent important discovery, that from Boudinot, etc., the Book of Mormon was formed, when it would have been so easy to have shown it up from those works, so abundant as they were at the appearance of the Book of Mormon. What a compliment to the whole army of stalwarts opposing Mormonism! Even Bays saw the Spalding tale would not do, but could not see the other. Who can not see that if it were true, as Bridwell claims, scores would have seen it back there in 1830, and urged it at every mention of the Book of Mormon. It would have found place in the encyclopedias and histories equal to the Spalding tale.

The Spalding tale theory was driven to the extremity of four supposed copies, and yet this of Mr. Bridwell's still eluded the grasp of such searching theorists. Mr. Bridwell's discovery is one more boomerang—it will do its work on the return trip.

That Mr. Bridwell found points of identity is granted. But the points of dissimilarity count most sometimes. Between an ostrich and a canary there are points in common, each having two wings, two feet, two eyes, and one beak; both are clothed with feathers, but their size and their song for ever bar their similarity. No claim of the knowledge of the existence of the Cliff-dwellers dates back as far as 1860, yet thirty years before that the Book of Mormon told of such a people in such habitations. They were the Cliff-dwellers. The continental cataclysm, which the Book of Mormon records as having occurred at the time of the crucifixion of the Savior, is borne out by incontrovertible evidences.

A continual enlargement of the evidence that some mysterious, divine personage visited the ancient Americans, an ever widening knowledge of the tradition as to the cataclysm, and that it was attended by a period of darkness, and other features attaching, do not admit of being explained away by the limited knowledge of seismic disturbances and theories concerning them at the time of the origin of the Book of Mormon.

Submarine vessels were not in use at or before 1830, nor till very recently. The first colony from Babel, the Jaredites of Book of Mormon history, came in such vessels. The physical features of South America were disclosed in such detail in the Book of Mormon as could only have been by those on the ground; that opportunity Joseph Smith did not have, neither did any existing work of his day contain it.

Ancient American hieroglyphics are similar to those of the Book of Mormon plates, and both have similarities in the Egyptian and the Hebrew.

Mr. Bridwell has only developed difficulty for himself and all who follow in his wake. He has heaped shame upon his predecessors, accusing them, as he has, of such stupidity as not to have seen what to him is so clearly a fact. Who will succeed Mr. Bridwell, and with what?

Elias Boudinot, having been first speaker of the House of Representatives and first president of the American Bible Society, may justly be rated among the notables. He wrote a work entitled: "A Star in the West," which was published in 1816. His purpose was to prove that the American Indians were the Lost Ten Tribes. At the completion of his writing and the research it afforded, he says he was gratified to find that he is not alone in his sentiments on this unpopular subject. (Preface, page 3.)

Of his method and work of compilation: "The writer will avail himself of the best accounts given by the Spanish writers he can meet with, the histories written by our own people who first visited this land, or have since made themselves acquainted with the native inhabitants, and record anything relative to their languages, customs, manners, and habits, such as Colden, Adair, Brainerd, Edwards, Jr., . . . Beatty, Bartram and others."—Introduction, page 29. In chapter nine as Spanish writers he quotes from Acosta, Lopes de Gamara, Lericus, Ribault, Landon, Don Antonio de Ulloa Lact, Escarbotus, Malvenda, Abbe Clavigero Emanuel de Moraez, (a Portuguese,) and others.

Chapter one takes up the Hebrew people; identity, conditions, effects of bondage, the deliverance, and continuation of their history in detail. Division into Israel and Judah. Traces Israel to last known point, from Bible and associated history. Reaches the conclusion that they crossed from Kamschatka to this continent.

Chapter two is an inquiry as to where descendants of Hebrews may be found. Evidence from Bible and such authors as favored their location on this continent is presented, William Penn's work of 1682 among them.

Chapter three is "an inquiry into the language of the American Indians." A comparative table of English, Charibee, Creek, Mohegan, and Hebrew. Summing up: "To speak in general terms, their language in their roots, idiom, and particular construction, appears to have the whole genius of the Hebrew, and what is very remarkable, and well worthy of serious observation, has most of the peculiarities of that language, especially those in which it differs from most other languages, and often both in letters and signification, synonymous with the Hebrew language."

Chapter four is entitled, "The Indian traditions as received by their nations." "They hold it as a certain fact, as delivered down from their ancestors, that their forefathers, in very remote ages, came from a far-distant country, by way of the west."—Page 109.

"It is said, among their principal, or beloved men, that they have it handed down from their ancestors, that the book which the white people have was once theirs. That while they had it they prospered exceedingly; but that the white people bought it of them, and learned many things from it; while the Indians lost their credit, offended the great spirit, and suffered exceedingly from the neighboring nations. That the great spirit took pity on them and directed them to this country. That on their way they came to a great river, which they could not pass, when God dried up the waters and they passed over dry shod. They also say that their forefathers were possessed of an extraordinary divine spirit by which they foretold future events, and controlled the common course of nature, and this they transmitted to their offspring, on condition of their obeying the sacred laws. That they did by these means bring down showers of plenty on the beloved people. But that this power, for a long time past, had entirely ceased."—Pages 110, 111.

"They have a tradition that in the beginning of this continent, the angels or heavenly inhabitants, as they call them, frequently visited the people and talked with their forefathers, and gave directions how to pray, and how to appease the great being when he was offended."—Page 115.

"Can any man read this short account of Indian traditions drawn from tribes of various nations, from the west to the east, and from the south to the north, wholly separated from each other, written by authors of the best characters, both for knowledge and integrity, possessing the best means of information, at various and distant times, without any possible communication with each other, and in one instance from ocular and sensible demonstration; written on the spot in several instances, with the relaters before them; and yet suppose that all this is either the effect of chance, accident, or design, from a love of the marvelous or a premeditated intuition of deceiving, and thereby ruining their own well-established reputations?"—Page 116.

"Adair lived forty years entirely domesticated with the southern Indians, and was a man of learning and great observation. Just before the Revolutionary War he brought his manuscript to Elizabeth-Town, in New Jersey, to William Livingston, Esq., (a neighbor of the writer,) to have it examined and corrected, which was prevented by the troubles of a political nature just breaking out."—Page 117.

Mr. Boudinot next gives the creditable standing of Brainerd, Edwards, Beatty, Bartram, and M'Kenzie as authors cited and reaches the conclusion it is most reasonable the Indians are "the lost tribes of Israel." The chapter concludes with the supposed arrival here by way of Behring Strait.

Chapter five is entitled: "Their general character and established customs and habits."

The names of tribes then known are tabulated alphabetically. No Stockbridge tribe appears. Kirkland's Indian census is thus referred to: "In 1790 he made a census of the whole number of Indian inhabitants then remaining, including in addition those who reside on Grand River, in Canada, and the Stockbridge and Botherton Indians, who had lately joined them."—Page 132. Another similar reference is found on page 255; they do not, however, indicate a Stockbridge tribe, but refer to Indians who were resident at Stockbridge.

Adair is quoted on color: "He thinks the Indian color to be the effect of climate, art, and manner of living."—Page 137.

"Robertson, again speaking of the war in New England, between Connecticut and Providence, in their first attempt against the Pequod Indians, says, 'The Indians had secured their town, which was on a rising ground in a swamp, with pallisades.'—Page 140. The evidences throughout the chapter support Hebraic descent.

Chapter six is on "Religious rites and ceremonies of the Indians." It presents their worship of the great spirit and religious ceremonies after the Mosaic institution.

Chapter seven, entitled, "Their public worship and religious opinions," deals with five feasts.

"The Indians, in general, keep the following religious feasts and festivals: First, their Feast of First-fruits, and after it, on the evening of the same day, one something like the Passover. Second, the Hunter's Feast, like that of Pentecost. Third, the Feast of Harvest and day of expiation of sin. Fourth, a daily sacrifice. Fifth, a Feast of Love."—Page 205. All these appear to be fashioned after those of the Hebrews, if they are not those of the Hebrews continued. Boudinot accepts them as strong evidence.

Chapter eight, "Miscellaneous facts omitted," adds matter and evidence along the chosen line.

Chapter nine is devoted to the recital of Spanish authors in confirmation of what had been otherwise set forth.

Chapter ten presents a high degree of morality and character, as quite common to Indians before corrupted by the white man.

Chapter eleven, "Separation of the Indian women," of but two pages, presenting another feature of the Mosaic institution.

Chapter twelve, "The conclusion." A retrospect of evidence presented assures Mr. Boudinot the Indians are the lost Ten Tribes.

The foregoing is written to give an idea to those who may wish it, what this rare work contains, and to show the quotations made from pages 106, 110, 111, 115, and 116, as they are, so it can be seen that those in the Voice of Warning, pages 81 and 82, while not all exactly verbatim, present the facts about as they are.

Mr. Bridwell in the Arena for May states that Boudinot said: "That the book which the white people have was once theirs," while Pratt had it, "such a book as." How Pratt got it in that form, we can not say, but it is hardly as serious as Mr. Bridwell would have it.

Mr. Bridwell next refers to the quotation on page 106 of Boudinot, and explodes the narrative of the "aged Indian of the Stockbridge tribe." But this had been done, in a letter nine years ago, from Middletown, Ohio, June 2, 1894, to the HERALD, by the writer. The story, of the "aged Indian of the Stockbridge tribe," does not occur in Boudinot's, "Star in the West;" neither is it to be found elsewhere that I know of; but on page 223, "View of the Hebrews," Doctor West of Stockbridge, gave the following information: "An old Indian informed him that his fathers in this country had not long since had a book which they had for a long time preserved. But having lost the knowledge of reading it, they concluded it would be of no further use to them; and they buried it with an Indian chief."

Parley Pratt introduces the quotation used, thus: "Mr. Boudinot in his able work, remarks concerning their language," "concerning their language." The forty-seven words or first sentence of which Mr. Bridwell says: "The first half of it consisting of forty-seven words, is exactly right," Albeit he did not see the twenty-ninth word, "attention," as Pratt has it, is "observation" in Boudinot. Those forty-seven words are "concerning their language" the rest on traditions. Put quotation marks there and call the balance Pratt's comment, as it is tradition, now he branches out and probably drew from his general information, and got matters mixed. This may explain it. If Pratt's first publication is to be had, it may be found to be so. Anyway, Mr. Bridwell was not the first to discover the error and call attention to it.

The changes that appear in the punctuation are of a character that imply change from earlier method.

The changes in phraseology, while to be regretted, do not to an unbiased mind change the material facts. It is likely, too, that access to the first edition would reduce the irregularities.

Ethan Smith in "View of the Hebrews," page 93, quoting Boudinot on language, from 106 of "A Star in the West," leaves out six words, not indicating it in any way whatever and adding "it."

Haines in his book, "The American Indian," page 101, adds an "s" to "language," an "s" to "idiom," omits the six words Smith did, without indicating it, inserts "have" for "has" and like Smith closes at a comma, making it a period. But all the main facts remain.

Praise.

Come let us each one join to praise
Our Father in the sky
Let all our voices to Him raise
A word to gratify.

He watches o'er us through each day
And through the starry night,
O live for Him and you will be Protected by his might.

He loves the young in innocence
The aged and the youth,
O praise Him for his wondrous love
And seek for heavenly truth.

ADAM'S FALL.

(All quotations in this article are from the Inspired Translation.)

Was Adam's fall decreed or does man exist as a result of sin? As there is nothing definite written on the question, we can not safely take a definite stand, but a few suggestions may not be out of place.

To affirm that Adam fell in order to fulfill God's purposes is to reflect on his character. And to assume that God gave man a commandment in order to tempt him, conflicts with the statement that "God tempts no man." We aver that God was not bound by Satan for the accomplishment of his purposes. Let us keep these thoughts in mind as we proceed.

We will now call attention to the following: "And we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God."—Doctrine and Covenants 76:3.

There are several points to be considered in the above. First, Christ is the Only Begotten of the Father. Second, by, through, and of him the worlds were and are created. Third, by and through Christ the inhabitants thereof are begotten unto God. Fourth, the inhabitants of all these worlds are sons and daughters. Fifth, the laws governing in replenishing this earth have also governed in these other worlds.

Now let us read again: "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? . . . When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?"—Job 38:4-7.

If we understand the above correctly, the cause for all the singing and the shouting for joy was the fact that the foundations of this earth were lain. Why the laying of the foundation of this earth caused so much joy among the sons of God may be gleaned from the following: "For as ye have looked upon the long absence of your spirits from your bodies to be a bondage, I will show unto you how the day of redemption shall come."—Doctrine and Covenants 45:2.

Again: "Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:4.

Now the spirit and the body being the soul of man; and the resurrection of the body is the redemption of the soul; and the absence of the spirit from the body is considered a bondage, may we not reasonably conclude that the idea of the spirits receiving tabernacles was the source of great joy which caused the sons of God to shout? Was it not in the eternal plan of God that spirits should have bodies and become living souls? If this is not the purpose of God in all his creations, then man has become a living soul as a result of sin, and there is no special purpose in the redemption of the soul. Moreover, if man is a result of sin and Christ has come to destroy the works of the Devil—sin and its results—we have no hope of a resurrection of the body as that would only be restoring to us that which we both obtained and lost through sin.

But we learn that Satan "was an angel of God, who was in authority in the presence of God . . . he was Lucifer, son of the morning."—Doctrine and Covenants 76:3. Surely, an individual of his excellence and power was not holding such authority in the presence of God without knowing anything about his creations and the inhabitants thereof, who were born sons and daughters unto God. Or shall we presume such an authority ignorant of the plan by which these worlds were inhabited or replenished? God, while speaking to Enoch, says: "Wherefore I can stretch forth my hands and hold all the creations which I have made, and mine eye can pierce them also. And among all the workmanship of my hands there has not been so great wickedness as among thy brethren."—Genesis 7:42, 43. (Doctrine and Covenants 36:7.) It is evident from the foregoing that all these sons and daughters of the creations of God have undergone a test, were tried, and to some extent found wanting. But their wickedness was never "so great" as that of this earth. Lehi evidently had reference to this when he declared "that there is an opposition in all things." Lucifer also seemed to know something regarding these things, and becoming jealous of Him who was in the bosom of the Father, by whom, and through whom, and for whom all these worlds had been created, offered to come and save the inhabitants of this world—and save every soul, too, not one should be lost. Now, the inference here is that Christ had lost some, and Lucifer was going to excel, and as a reward for his excellence in saving all he desired that God would give his glory unto him. Failing in his purposes, he waged war against his God and is bent on doing all in his power to frustrate the purposes of the Almighty. But oh, what folly! While Satan understood the law by which other creations had been inhabited or replenished, and planned his attack accordingly, he nevertheless did not know the "mind of God." And the idea of the sacrifice of the Son, by which the redemption of the human family from his satanic power could be effected, was a hidden thing unto him. Hence, he sought to destroy the world, and frustrate the purpose of God. He also knew that unto man—Adam and Eve—God had intrusted the right of government, which right by law would fall into his hands, if he could only induce the man and woman to obey him. Nay: he thought all that would be born to man would be his. Thus would he defy God, and turn the joy of the "morning stars and the sons of God" to misery and woe; or remain in their spirit condition. In either case the purpose of God would have been destroyed. But he knew not the "mind of God."

The fact that God created man, male and female, and blessed them, saying, "Be fruitful, multiply," etc., forces the conclusion upon us that sin is not the cause of our appearance on this globe. For to assert that God could not carry out his purposes in the creation of man except he had obeyed Satan, who sought to destroy the world, is to assert that had Lucifer not fallen, man would not be; and that God could not accomplish that which he had ordained and decreed, if it were not for Satan. Is this consistent? We think not. However, we believe that the principles of opposition have always existed, and are represented by the tree of good and evil. We also believe that in the economy of God, provisions are made to bring these principles to bear upon man, that he might exercise his agency. For where possibility does not exist, agency does not. But what their provisions were, we have no inclination to attempt to explain. This God has kept entirely from us, but it is reasonable to conclude that they were operative in the other creations of God; and that the purposes of the Devil in order to destroy the world were to overthrow the operations of these provisions of the law. But in this he was disappointed, for God was able to meet the emergency; and He who was in the bosom of the Father from all eternity, by whom and through whom the inhabitants of the other creations had been born sons and daughters unto God, was prepared to come and suffer the penalty of a broken law. God evidently had reference to this when he said, "And he also sought to beguile Eve, for he knew not the mind of God." The adverb "also" carries with it the idea that he had beguiled many; and that those many were his; they could not be redeemed. Satan therefore would naturally reason that as those angels who followed him from the realms of glory were his, so also would Adam and Eve and all their posterity become his. All this reasoning and planning was, of course, in accordance with his knowledge of the law governing in the other worlds.

But imagine his terror and dismay when the declaration from the throne of God was heard, that "the Only Begotten of the Father" would at an appointed time enter His Satanic Majesty's realm, pay him the demands of the law, and "lead captivity captive;" redeem the human family and all that was lost through transgression; and finally banish him from his realm and restore unto man his inheritance. If ever His Majesty wailed and gnashed his teeth, he did it when an angel from the mansions of glory announced unto Adam the "glad tidings of great joy," and pointed out the sacrifice of the Lamb who was ordained to redeem him and all his posterity.

We believe the language of Eve very pertinent in this connection. She says: "Were it not for our transgression, we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient."—Genesis 4: 11.

Again: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman; and between thy seed and her seed; and he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel."—Genesis 3: 21. With the above let us connect the following: "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blest."—Genesis 22: 22. "He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ."—Galatians 3: 16.

When Eve said, "Were it not for our transgression, we never should have had seed," she evidently referred to Christ through whom the "joy of redemption" should come, for while speaking of the "seed" she rejoices in the thought of redemption which was vouchsafed to them in the "seed" through obedience to the gospel of Christ—the seed. Had not Adam and Eve fallen they would not have had seed—the Christ—nor have had the joy of their redemption through that seed. But what joy was it to them for Christ to suffer for their sake? We answer, It was a source of great joy for them to know that Satan had no power over them even after their transgression, and that whatever scheme he would invent for the overthrow of God's purposes would avail him nothing, since God was able to offset all his designs.

All this they would not have known, had they not transgressed, for there would not have been occasion given for its revelation. Man, therefore, having given Satan power and authority over the world through his obedience unto him, necessitated the coming of Christ as the "seed" of promise given unto the woman, to pay the penalty for man, and thus buy him from the grasp of the arch-enemy.

With this thought in her mind is it not reasonable that Eve should manifest her joy in the promise of the "seed" who would "bruise the serpent's head" and bring redemption to "all the obedient"? We think so.

Again it is written: "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee."—Genesis 3: 22.

We do not claim that she saw sorrow in her Edenic state, but after her transgression she sorrowed. It is natural that she did, for after their transgression their eyes were opened to the awful calamity they had brought upon themselves, which of itself was a source of great sorrow and distress, for at this time they had no idea of the redemption through Christ. And even after they were commanded to offer sacrifices, they knew not what it meant, only that they had been commanded to do it. But after the matter had been explained, they surely did rejoice; and they had great cause for it. Hence her sorrow, etc., could be multiplied.

The idea of the sacrifice of the Son of God seems to have been an unknown thing unto His Satanic Majesty. In his ignorance or not "knowing the mind of God" he "sought to destroy the world." But the following language explains clearly that he knew something regarding the test of good and evil, and man's agency which man was capable of exercising since God had given unto him his knowledge. It is as follows: "Behold I, send me, I will be thy Son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore, give me thine honor." Here Lucifer manifests his knowledge of the law by which the other creations of God and their inhabitants had been proved, and their agency had been exercised; and intimates that some had been lost, (evidently by the same means as himself and his angels became lost afterwards,) and if God would allow him the jurisdiction over those appointed for this earth, he would save them all. And his saving plan is given by God as making man a mere tool in his hand, by taking his agency and will power away; he would not allow him to choose the good and eschew evil, but compel him to do his bidding whether good or evil.

But let us return again to an examination of the words of God unto Eve. The Lord in his expostulation with her continues, saying: "And thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." Before this he was not her ruler, but both were equal in authority and power. When God told Adam, "Be fruitful . . . and have dominion," etc., Eve was included. But she had forfeited her right, through her transgression because she became the means by which Adam fell also. Hence she received not the priesthood; and Adam having been blessed with the authority to administer in the ordinances of the gospel and offer sacrifices, by virtue of the priesthood after the order of the Son of God became her "ruler" and also a type and figure of the Great High Priest who had been delegated by God and blessed with the priesthood or authority to become the sacrifice for sin. In Adam also was invested the authority "to hold the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church; to have the privilege of receiving the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; to have the heavens opened unto them; to commune with the general assembly [all creations] and church of the Firstborn; and to enjoy the communion and presence of God the Father, and Jesus the mediator of the new covenant."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:9. Hence through Adam her hope of eternal life came. He held the keys of the gospel of reconciliation through Jesus Christ. Wherefore, her desire was to her husband who was the symbol of the second Adam—the desire not of Eve only, but of all nations. Hence we conclude again, that the cause of Eve's great joy was in the fact that Christ is the "seed" referred to. Hence her statement does not prove that they had no children before the fall. For unto this end were they blessed in the spirit world, not to procreate spirits as some have claimed, but to procreate tabernacles for the spirits already in existence.

The blessing pronounced upon man in the spirit world and the word of the Lord to his church in the latter days are corroborative. He says, "And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."—Doctrine and Covenants 49:3.

The earth having been made to the end that it might be filled with "the measure of man" and God having instituted marriage, according to the plan ordained in man's creation and blessing "before the world was made," "and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation," it stands with reason that it was never the result of sin. Shall we sin that good may come? Is sin the source of our existence? If it is, then God could not have carried his purposes into effect, had it not been for Satan and we should thank him for our existence.

It is not necessary that man had to carry the command (if indeed a command it was) into effect in the spirit world, because he was blessed there, any more than Christ should be crucified there, because he had been anointed and ordained to become the sacrifice for sin. The blessing, anointing, and ordaining the sacrifice was done in heaven, but it remained for His Satanic Majesty's forces to take his life as they thought, upon Calvary's hill.

Another thought in connection with the curse pronounced upon Eve is included in the words "I will multiply," etc. We believe there existed a cause to produce this effect. Before the fall there was no death, no sin with its varied results, nothing to prevent God's law from being effectually operated. But when sin entered, it brought its varied results along with it. But the all-wise God was equal to the emergency, and pronounced the word "multiply" with a full meaning; and thus he forestalled the effects of sin upon the blessing which man received in the spirit world.

But what of Lehi's statement in the Book of Mormon? Brother, get not impatient if I tell you I believe it to be a mistake of Lehi. Now, it is not impossible. We would not be guilty of claiming infallibility for any man's opinion, whether he lived over two thousand years ago, or whether he lives to-day. If we will read carefully this statement, we will find that he only "supposed" those things to be so from what he had read. He does not claim to know that such was the case. The things he had read evidently were the accounts given by Moses as found to-day in the Inspired Translation. This record only states facts in a general way, without explaining or giving anything in detail. The brevity of the record makes it a little ambiguous; and may be it is for a wise purpose, since it is written that the record of the creation as fully given is sealed and can not be revealed in the days of wickedness. The statement of Eve seems to have been Lehi's foundation for his opinion. And since he himself casts a doubt on the matter by saying that he must needs suppose these things, we must not misrepresent him by saying that he declared emphatically that which he does not.

There is another passage of Scripture upon which Lehi seems to have based his opinion: "Because that Adam fell we are." We do not claim that Adam deliberately and purposely sinned because Eve had. All we say in this connection is that Adam, being blinded by the power that led him, obeyed the counsel of his wife, and fell. Thus Satan in his endeavor to gain a point lost it. Enoch seems to wish to convey the idea that had Adam not fallen we would not be in the condition we are, for continuing he says, "And by his fall came death; and we are made partakers of misery and woe."

In conclusion, let us state that we do not claim to prove our position correct. We have merely stated our opinions, and endeavored to give the reasons why we entertain them.

THE REJUVENATION OF EGYPT.

An interesting phase of the present trend of mining investment is the large attention that is being paid to the reopening of old and abandoned properties, most of which, instead of being "worked out," as has been long thought to be the case, are found to be highly profitable under modern methods of metal extraction and recovery.

No better illustration of this fact can be found than the activity noticeable at present in London mining investment circles, where "Egyptians" are becoming a strong feature of the market. In a late London paper reference is made to four such companies, in each of which the stock is already selling at a premium, and of the formation of three other companies to carry on the good work of prospecting extensive holdings. One of these companies owns a concession of 3,000 square miles; another of 1,200 square miles and others of various proportions, and all of them are reporting the location or discovery of ancient workings, gold mines, samples of emeralds, gold-bearing quartz, etc.

The territory in which these explorations are being chiefly carried on is that immense area comprised between the Nile and the Red Sea. It is desolate in the extreme, with very little water; it is destitute of soil and hence of verdure, save a few scattered and stunted acacia and mimosa shrubs, on which browse the few camels of the wretchedly poor Arabs that eke out a miserable existence in the land.

This forbidding territory was once, long before the beginning of the Christian era, the scene of the greatest mining activity. Egyptian taskmasters drove herds of slaves before the lash to an exhausting toil which ended only with their lives, fresh throngs of the unfortunates being drafted from the captives taken in the continual wars waged by Egypt with the surrounding peoples. With the crudest of implements and under the most unfavorable circumstances, immense quantities of the precious metal were extracted. After the exhaustion of the placers, or stream deposits, resort was had to the quartz veins.

These were worked by pick and gad in narrow tunnels or gophering that followed their tortuous courses. Those who performed this labor were the able-bodied males and females, whose bodies scored by the whips of the overseers, were entirely naked. It was the duty of the children to pick up the gold-bearing quartz and carry it out to the sick, of whom there were always multitudes, and the aged, whose duty it was to pound the quartz in mortars to a fine powder. This was then taken to the streams and washed for its gold contents. In this process, which was carried on for several centuries, the land, originally a country of mountains and fertile valleys enriched by living streams and beautified by groves, was gradually brought to a state of desolation. The trees were cut down, the soil, what was left of it after the washings of the placer days, was covered with detritus and things went from bad to worse, until, on the exhaustion of the richer and more easily worked ledges, the country was gradually abandoned.

Meanwhile, fed by the flow of cheaply-extracted gold from these mines, Egypt experienced an unexampled prosperity. It was during this age that the pyramids and temples, whose stupendous ruins have made the name of ancient Egypt synonymous with grandeur and solidity, such as has been witnessed but seldom, if ever, elsewhere in the world, were erected by the dominant race, who in this work, also, utilized the labor of slaves.

With the decline of the wonderfully rich gold mines of ancient Egypt came the decline of the nation. Steeped in sloth and luxury, her riches made her the victim of every horde of freebooters who could harry her borders. Gradually the wealth was dissipated and the great irrigation and other works, the pride of the ancient world, fell into decay. Egypt passed from her high estate. She became the prey of rapacious foreigners, and was soon a land of desolation.

With the advent of British control, however, the old land is awakening to a new life. The immense fertility of the Nile basin, renewed each year by the flooding waters, has been made available again by enormous barrages and irrigating canals, and once more the country is prosperous.

With the reopening of the old mines, to be worked by modern methods and under kindlier ideals, still higher prosperity may be expected, and once more old Egypt may become a storehouse of wealth and the granary of the nations.—Mining and Engineering Review, May 16, 1903.

PROTESTANTS AND THE POPE.

Prayers offered up in Protestant churches for the late Pope are "indicative of a change in the attitude of Protestantism toward the Roman Catholic Church which is one of the most remarkable religious developments of recent years," says the New York Sun:

"Even not more than a quarter of a century ago that church, by far the greatest in Christendom, was usually excluded from consideration by Protestants when they were discussing the means and agencies for the propagation of Christianity. The article on the Pope in the Westminster Confession, in which he was described as 'that antichrist, that man of sin and son of perdition,' represented the prevailing Protestant belief. . . . The Roman Pontiff has become a Christian brother and Protestants join with Catholics in celebrating the spiritual exaltation of his character and the services he has rendered to Christianity. He was described by a Methodist preacher of New York on Sunday as 'a leader of the great army of the Lord's hosts,' a 'spiritual commander-in-chief,' a 'champion of the faith who has never wavered from the Catholic position and the theology of Thomas Aquinas,' 'who has done much for the progress of civilization,' 'who has restored the golden age of the papacy in its best sense.'

"Such a tribute to a pope from a Protestant pulpit would have been impossible when Leo XIII ascended the papal throne. The bitterness of the old Protestant controversy, as expressed in the article of the Westminster Confession to which we have referred, had been moderated even then, but it had not been mitigated to an extent which would have made possible such expressions in a Methodist pulpit or in any other Protestant pulpit. Even then Catholicism was looked upon by Protestantism as apart from Christianity."

In seeking for the cause of what it considers "this new spirit of tolerance," the Sun is led to the same conclusion that it reaches in nearly all its discussions of religious questions, namely, that it is due partly to "lessened religious conviction." It says:

"When men's religious faith was strongest it was most inflexible. Protestantism divided up into warring factions for conscience' sake. Baptists pursued Methodists with reproaches and Episcopalians spoke contemptuously of Presbyterians, but they all united in denunciation of the wickedness of the papacy. Now there is a strong tendency in Protestantism to get together, for differences which once provoked bitter controversy are now indifferently regarded. It is significant too, that the Methodists have just adopted at Asbury Park a ritualistic form of worship which once would have been rejected by them with loathing as a 'Romish' device, and a Methodist minister lauds the Pope before an approving congregation as 'a leader of the great army of the Lord's hosts.'"—Literary Digest.

Scowling and growling will make a man old;
Money and fame at the best are beguiling;
Don't be suspicious and selfish and cold—
Try smiling.—Selected.

The Glorified One.

O merciful Father in Heaven,
May we enter thy glorious home,
And there meet our long absent loved ones,
In the presence of Jesus thy Son.

We forgive those who sin, Lord, against us,
May we thus be forgiven by thee,
Help each to know truly his own faults,
As plainly as those of his neighbor he see.

We toil and we suffer affliction,
The weary wayfarer we feed,
And comfort the hearts of the mourner,
For thy blessing towards them we plead.

Thus daily we strive, Lord, to serve thee,
And study the words of thy Son,
The instructions of all his apostles,
And the wonderful works they have done.

We read of the great works of healing,
And of Lazarus raised from the dead,
While the birds of the air had their home-nests,
Thy Son had not where for his head.

Yet many received him with gladness,
And multitudes sought for his aid;
How often he wandered in sadness,
And on the lone mountain tops prayed.

Yes, he prayed to his Father in heaven,
That he might do all things aright;
And hungered for food while he feasted
On heavenly, God-given light.

O help me, my Father, to follow
In the steps of thine own beloved Son,
The scoffed, scourged, and crucified Jesus,
The sanctified, glorified One.

MRS. JANE HEATON.

Dear Sisters: This Thursday afternoon at the close of our Bible reading my thoughts turned to the Column and the letters I had read therein, and I thought I would send a line or two to bring us into touch with each other on matters touching our sanctification. I hope to see each of the mothers some day, and to rejoice with them over trials borne and for ever past and to glorify God for all his goodness and loving kindness. We only know in part now but that part is sweeter than honey to the mouth of all those who taste. We are only a few in number but I believe all are sincere in desiring to walk in the footsteps of the Master, meeting to read and study the sacred writings, and it is wonderful how it lifts and strengthens us in the Christian warfare. The greatest fight is with the enemies within for the enemies outside are not so hard to conquer. But our Captain is all-sufficient. He knows all and is able to lead us to victory. Blessed be his holy name, who loved us and gave himself for us. Hoping and trusting in him and watching his face we shall grow like him and then he will take us to the home he with such loving care has provided for us. A mother's cares are heart-cares, but he knows and he cares for mothers. Even in the agony on the cross he cared for a mother whose heart was pierced with such bitter sorrow. All mothers are sure of his tender care if they do their duty faithfully and lovingly. Oh, my sisters, his heart is touched with our sorrows, and he came to comfort those that mourn and he drops such sweet joy into our lives that even in tribulation we can say, Oh, how good he is! and we can also say,

Take us and mould us and make us thine,
 Cleanse and polish and make us shine,
 Feed us and clothe us with garments rare,
 Fitted to dwell in thy mansions fair.

May God continue his gracious care and guidance, and fit his children for their several duties is my prayer.

A MOTHER IN ZION.

31 Beech Street, New Lane, Beel Green, MANCHESTER, England.

CUMBERLAND, Massachusetts.

Dear Home Column: I often wish I could do more to help the work along. Sometimes I really want to be rich. It may seem to some to be a wrong idea, but I see so much that needs to be done, to help the work, so much that can not be done without money. I often think of the days when I first came into the church, I had heard it preached that the gospel was preached without money and without price, and I was so well satisfied with the change I had made, with the gospel and church, I actually felt I had got all I should ever need of this world's goods, for I knew so little about the needs of the church, having heard but two sermons preached, and knowing from the Lord that it was his will I should be baptized, I obeyed not daring to disobey. But as time passed on and I began to inquire into the financial requirements of the church work, I saw the need, and when the Lord told me I must work for the support of the church, I must say I was not prepared to hear it, for I only wanted to pray, and read, and think; did not want to trouble myself with worldly cares. I often wished I could preach.

Then I heard the law of tithing preached, and I felt such a weight rested upon me. How was I going to pay so great a debt? I well knew it must be paid by my own efforts. We had a little home not all paid for then, and no bank stock or weekly envelope. I went to work with a will, ever praying the Lord to open the way and give me ways to earn money besides my own house-work, and I asked him to help me to know how to economize in every possible way. I counted no sacrifice too great, and did not use a penny I could do without, stopped every leak, as far as it was possible for me in my surroundings to do. And now I am thankful to say we have nothing in our possession on which tithing has not been paid. The Lord has opened the way for me to earn money in ways I had no power to foresee. I feel very thankful for it all. This is the way I pay my tithing: As soon as a bill is paid me, I take the tithing out and send it to the Bishop, and use the remainder in any needful way. I know the Lord has helped me, although it requires hard work to do any work for the Lord, for he wants no idlers in his band. Now I see the need of money worse than ever before, and think I could make use of a million or two easily.

Ever praying for the upbuilding of Zion,

RUTH A. BURLINGAME.

Shall We Have a Junior Class?

The junior department, if I understand correctly, takes in that part of our Sunday-school workers that are just entering into young manhood and young womanhood, when they are in a measure leaving the instruction of their parents and are beginning to build characters for themselves. The condition of the junior department thus far has been such that it has not received the hearty support of every Sunday-school worker, for the reason that it has not wholly met the requirements of such a department. Whether this department shall be continued, is the question to be considered. Or whether some new ideas can be infused into it which will give life and activity, something that will broaden the minds of our young people both intellectually and spiritually, something that will cause them to dwell upon the handiwork of our Creator, their duty to him as their heavenly Father, their duty to each other as children professing to follow him. These and many other things we might mention here, appeal to us as intelligent Sunday-school workers. Are we then living equal to or below our privileges on this line? This is an important question for each of us to consider. It is very easy for us to locate the cause to our own satisfaction, but whether our reasons will stand approved by this body remains yet to be seen.

THE REAL CAUSES.

The underlying principle of the whole is the laxness of parents concerning their children. They bring them to church and in many instances they are allowed to run around the room to the annoyance of those present. In a short time this becomes quite a pleasure for them and they are controlled with difficulty. Thus the instruction so necessary in childhood for a reverence for the house of God has been left off.

Again, they are sent to Sunday-school and most are unaccompanied by parents. Here they are placed in the various classes to receive such instruction as would properly train their little minds and bring them up in the admonition and fear of the Lord. But in spite of the instruction some become rude and unconcerned. They like to play and talk, and do not comprehend what Sunday-school is for.

As they grow older and are placed higher in their class they should be more susceptible of right and wrong. But they are attending day-school and are mingling with children of different temperaments, habits, and passions, and are very liable to indulge in things of an evil nature. At the age of twelve to sixteen in their Sunday-school they talk of "Buffalo Bill," and "Wild West," the "James boys," etc., and it is very hard to keep their attention. They are allowed to run at large on the streets late at night. You will find them in bad company, smoking cigarettes, in company with older boys where foul and vulgar stories are being told of every sort, until scarcely a decent person can pass on the street but what indecent remarks are made of them by boys pretending to be young men of refined character sitting on some dry-goods box or back in some stair-way or other.

We now turn to the

and find them of the age of fifteen to twenty. They speak of their beaux and their girls, and their object of meeting together is almost lost sight of. They talk of parks and pleasures, theaters and operas, until the mind is almost constantly occupied by things of a carnal nature. We are glad to note, however, that our young people are not all of this mind. A question may arise here, Why is it that they are always upbraiding the young people? We are not, we feel that the trouble is directly where we have placed it. We feel to say also that the junior department will be a grand success when the previous training has been fully and well done.

Use of Maps and Blackboards in Sunday-School Work.

In some schools there is either a lull or a total suspension of the use of blackboards, maps, pictures, etc., either for lack of interest therein or a supposition that there is a lack of talent; therefore, let me offer a few thoughts lest the tendency become predominating.

One thing is certain, we have five gateways for the entrance of knowledge; namely, the five senses. The more gateways through which any knowledge may come to us, the deeper the impression and consequently the less liable are time and worldly allurements to erase it from our memory. We obtain a great deal of our knowledge through the gateway of hearing, whereas if by devices it is made to enter through the gateway of sight, our education would be much improved. Blackboards and illustrations are devices by which knowledge enters the mind through the

GATEWAY OF SIGHT.

The real value of this does not lie merely in adding to our stock of knowledge, but in creating deeper and more lasting impressions of knowledge upon the mind. Never mind "cultivating the memory." If you make a deep impression on the mind of the child the knowledge is there ready for use at any time. The blackboard meets the demand for deepening the impressions that have been created through hearing. The impression would be deeper if touch could be employed. Will not a knowledge of these facts arouse an interest on the part of our superintendents in whose hands the carrying on of this work is placed?

BY WHOM USED.

The blackboard, charts, maps, etc., should be used by the teacher in the class and by the superintendent or some one appointed by him in the review. This will involve the second difficulty spoken of in the beginning of this paper. Teachers think they are not able to sketch a map or trace a journey in the presence of the class which is the proper place for the work. There is no teacher but what can learn to do this very work. Who could not have traced Paul's first, second, and third missionary journeys in the current Quarterlies and this in the presence of the class, as each step is advanced? Men have taught themselves to use the pencil with their toes and I suppose they possessed no college education. The sketching of maps is not a work that requires accuracy. A crude outline is all that is required. Could you not as a teacher do a little thing of this kind when a little goes so far? It helps the children to retain the lesson by connecting abstract truths with images. We are surprised when we see how they recall the truths associated with images. Let us use the eyes as well as the ears in our Sunday-school work.

DES MOINES, Iowa, August 14.

Dear Herald: We are glad that we have good news to report in addition to our letter of last week and that we Saints here still rejoice in the goodness of God and the manifestation of his love to us as a people and that each day brings added evidence of the divinity of the work we love so dearly. On July 28 Elder J. F. Mintun began a series of meetings here at the church and continued each night until the 12th inst. when he went to Rhodes to attend the reunion. Elder S. F. Cushman came to the city at the same time and assisted in all the work. This week several of the Saints from here are at the reunion with the missionaries and not as much missionary work can be done during the absence of some of the workers. To distribute six thousand of Elder Mintun's tracts from house to house is no small task, but the work is being done and will be continued until finished.

It has been especially pleasing to all to note the liberality of the press in the city. Every notice furnished them has been given space and some of the daily papers prepared lengthy articles concerning the church and when Elder Mintun was asked to review the work before it was printed he only corrected one or two local errors, and in sending his card with some announcements to one of the city papers he was pleasantly surprised the next day to see an excellent likeness of himself in the paper.

The use of hand-bills and the announcement of the subject of the discourse each evening in the daily press has been the means of bringing a goodly number of outsiders to the church and several have expressed themselves as being well pleased with what they heard. Elder Mintun did most of the preaching and his sermons have been in the power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit. As the Saints who are acquainted with him know he is a strong defender of the faith, an eloquent speaker, and a clear reasoner, and his sermons have been delivered, as we all believe, under the direct inspiration of God, some of them markedly so, and the way of truth has been made very plain.

One was baptized last Sunday, a sister, and the confirmation prayer was something remarkable in the way of warning of severe trials before her and counsel as to faithfulness on her part. The interest manifested on the part of a number outside of the church is good. The seed is being sown in faith and we are hopeful that it will reach the honest in heart. The missionaries are proving themselves worthy servants of God and the branch officers are alive and active to the interests of the work and the spread of the truth. The Sunday-school, desirous of doing something to advance the work, gave last Sunday's collection, amounting to three dollars and sixty-six cents, to the missionaries. The Religio is especially active and doing a good work.

At a branch business-meeting in June one of the priests was recommended to the district conference for ordination to the office of elder and at a business-meeting last week another of the priests was recommended to the coming conference for ordination to the office of elder. The field here is large and the demand for laborers great and the faithful ones of the priesthood are being called to higher service. There is abundant evidence that the Holy Spirit is working in the hearts of the people of this great city. Many of the Saints are faithful in all things; some who have not eaten of the Lord's supper for some time are now partaking thereof; some who for so long could not find an opportune time to get to the church now get out occasionally; some who have always been too timid to take part in the social meetings now permit their voices to be heard; and some of the young members are letting their voices be heard for the first time.

The number of HERALD readers has largely increased during the past year, and some who have not considered that they were under the law of tithing because they did not have any surplus have now commenced the observance of this law. Thus is activity shown in the church, and that the Holy Spirit is working upon the hearts of those outside of the church there are many evidences. As we said in our recent letter activity in the church is a sure sign of activity on the part of Satan and his cohorts. We believe the Saints are clinging to the rod of iron firmly and that all will be able to stand against the tempests which will surely come, and we are hopeful that a very large majority of the Saints will be able to stand even though the church in this city may be called to pass through a dark and cloudy day. We know they will if they give heed to the counsel and exhortation lately given and are faithful to their trust. It is expected that Elder Mintun will return to the city at the close of the reunion and continue his labor here. The field here is so large, the people so hard to reach, and the obstacles to be overcome so great that progress is necessarily slow, but the results thus far visible from the efforts put forth are very satisfactory and we will hopefully labor on.

Editors Herald: "Preaching on the street to-night at eight o'clock; bring a chair," was the notice I wrote on the sidewalks in this town of about two hundred inhabitants. The mayor cheerfully granted me permission to talk to the people. It was my first experience in open-air services, but do not intend it will be my last. The first evening the moon gave the only light, after which I borrowed a gasoline torch.

Mr. and Sr. C. T. Donkin keep the hotel here and have cared for the preacher; Sr. Wallace also has shared in boarding him.

Since our district conference at Dow City, Iowa, I have visited several branches, and many Saints at their homes in the interest of church finances, receiving from some the real substantial help needed for the Master's cause. We find the wheat, oat, and corn crops very poor, in the greater part of the district, caused by excessive rains and cool weather. However, we feel disposed to look upon the bright side, and truly hope the Saints in the Gallands Grove District will make the greatest effort possible to comply with Christ's law directing us to pay our tithes, free-will offerings, and consecrations.

While in correspondence with Reverend Henry Mason Baum, president of Records of the Past Exploration Society, Washington, District of Columbia, on the question of prehistoric civilization in America, I mailed him a leaflet treating upon the Book of Mormon and the origin of the American Indians, and from his reply I quote the following:

"The matter contained in the leaflet is new to me in so far as it relates to your claiming an origin for the prehistoric races of North America. If you have any literature on that particular point I should be glad to have an opportunity to examine it. . . . The subject is one of great interest and importance and I am inclined to think that we are very far from arriving at any satisfactory conclusion. I have no doubt of our prehistoric races being of Asiatic origin.

"The fact that your religious body disapproves, as strenuously as we do, of polygamy is a matter of considerable satisfaction. I spent the early years of my ministry in Western New York near Canandaigua and am familiar with the early history of some of the principal characters in the founding of the Mormon Church. Our differences, however, on those points are of no importance in the investigation of the origin of America's prehistoric races. I will be glad to cooperate with you in any way possible in getting at the bottom of the matter."

Since receiving the above I have supplied Mr. Baum with suitable literature as requested, and shall await his reply with interest.

Editors Herald: Having promised to visit Southern Wisconsin when possible to do so, I left home July 3 for that purpose. Was in Burlington over Sunday and by invitation spoke both morning and evening in the Saints' chapel. There was a feeling of peace and of comfort. Bro. Elbert A. Smith, pastor and missionary, is doing a good work there, one that is helpful to the members; also his method of teaching is such as to attract those who are not members.

On Tuesday the 7th came to Sandwich, Illinois, to the home of Bro. L. D. Rogers. Was at Plano one day and met Brn. F. M. Cooper, C. H. Burr, and other Saints. Both there and at Sandwich visited with those known thirty to thirty-five years ago, when I had charge of the Northern Illinois District six years and Sandwich Branch three years. Most of the old timers have passed over, but a few remain whose names stand among the faithful.

On Friday came to Rockford and was welcomed and cared for by Bro. and Sr. Warren Cushman and their son, the only family of our people living there. Intended to reach Janesville next day where I was expected to preach on Sunday the twelfth, but my companion had taken cold, and chills and malarial trouble developed, so I remained and spoke to a few in Bro. Cushman's house. But conditions improved so that a week later, July 19, I met with the Janesville Branch at Bro. O. N. Dutton's home, five miles north of the city. Preached twice, and the kind interest and prayers of the Saints sustained me in the efforts. In that home I was helped during the struggling years of 1869 and onward, and their kindness can never be forgotten. The sons and daughters have grown up to usefulness and honor, and are also alive and active in gospel work.

Sunday night I went back to Rockford to care for the sick one. The next Saturday evening I went again to Janesville, and on Sunday morning, July 26, rode eighteen miles to Evansville and spoke twice. On Monday Bro. Dutton drove with me to Belleville to visit my mother's sister, Sr. Hannah Loveland, now in her ninetieth year. She joined the church at Chardon near Kirtland, seventy years ago; also lived in Nauvoo where her husband, Levi Loveland, was one of the Seventy in those days. She has been a widow over fifty years. For some ten years she has been nearly helpless from disease, and she is anxious to enter into rest. At Beloit I saw my uncle, Henry Pease, who was also with the church at Kirtland. He is eighty-seven years old. Both have continued in the faith.

On August 2 again met with Saints and friends near Janesville. There were preaching and sacrament services. Bro. C. C. Hoague presides over the Janesville Branch, and its members live in and near Janesville, Evansville, and Lima. Was called to the latter place to administer to Bro. Charles Woodstock. Among them all continues to dwell the spirit of brotherly love, hospitality, and kind association. This blessing is above all the riches or honors of the world to those who love God.

Telegram and letters from Bro. E. L. Kelley caused me to go one day to Elkhorn, Wisconsin, to testify before the court as to the membership of Sr. L. C. Hicks, whose bequest to the church was contested by one of her heirs. Bro. W. A. McDowell was with me there.

At Beloit on the evening of August 4 Brn. Jerome Wildermuth and J. O. Dutton began street preaching. There was an encouraging attendance and attention, and these young men are pressing forward to do what they can.

At this writing Bro. F. G. Pitt is here, and yesterday (Sunday) we began preaching. Expect to continue evenings this week as may be found advisable. We are cared for by Bro. and Sr. Ogden Hance and Sr. Clara Kilgore whom I baptized here in 1874. Others have moved away, but the majority have passed to the other shore.

Your brother in the gospel,
H. A. STEBBINS.

THAYER, Missouri, August 11.

Editors Herald: I preached four times in the courtyard of Westplains, Missouri, to large crowds. A week's preaching at Brandsville brought good results. It is a new place. Some other new places have been opened up of late by me. I now have two names for baptism at Alton, Missouri, a school-teacher and her husband, both fine people. I preach a week at Cane Hill beginning to-night. Am quite busy.

Yours in truth,
JAMES T. DAVIS.

DETROIT, Minnesota, August 7.

Editors Herald: I am now at the home of Bro. T. J. Martin, who was one of the first to receive the gospel under the preaching of Bro. T. W. Smith, who visited this part of the State in 1874. Bro. Martin has taken quite an active part in gospel work since. He was ordained an elder soon after coming into the church. He is respected by both those inside and outside of the church.

I have just closed a series of meetings at Frazee with some interest and good was done. Brn. F. A. Smith and G. H. Hilliard stopped a few days, on their way south from North Dakota, and aided in the work, F. A. speaking twice and Bro. Hilliard once. Bro. Hilliard also spoke at Audubon and gave good satisfaction there. One lady not of the church said that his discourse Sunday night was true, every word of it. His subject was the judgment.

The conference and reunion at Clitherall was a success, and many thought the reunion the most spiritual of any ever held in the district. The preaching in the main was above the average and I think all were benefited, and went away with a renewed determination to do better in the future.

From Clitherall Bro. A. Baker and I went to Wilkin County, near Barnesville, to do some preaching, also to administer to a lady not of the church who was dying with a cancer of the stomach. When we called to see her on Friday the doctor had been there the day before and told her that he could do nothing more for her, and that she might live till Sunday, but not longer than that. Her father and mother were both there when we called. All were feeling bad, and especially because the doctor had kept her condition from them so long. She had heard some of the brethren preach and she said she thought we were the nearest right of any she had ever heard. She desired to be administered to and baptized before she died. We had no oil with us that day, and told her what our practice was, to anoint with oil when it was possible to do so. As she was quite anxious to be administered to, we told her we would have prayer with her that day and go to town and get some oil and give her a regular administration. We had prayer and both prayed that she might be blessed and receive strength to obey the gospel in baptism. I called the next day and found her feeling much better, and as she desired I prayed for her again, laying my hand upon her head, asking the Lord to accept our offering as we had no oil to more fully comply with the command. She was also blessed under that administration. We went to town Monday, July 6, and got some oil and on our way home called to see her again. She was still alive and feeling better, so we blessed the oil, administered again, and she was out to our meeting Tuesday and Wednesday nights and walked about forty rods to get there. I left there soon after. Bro. Baker writes me that he has baptized her since I left and that she was still improving. We hope she will be spared to her family, for she has several little children, and that many more in that region may obey the gospel.

We expect to meet with opposition, but do not expect to convert the whole world. The Master could not do that. We shall try to do what we can, live and teach in harmony with the law and leave the result where it belongs. I expect to visit all the branches in the State and give them what encouragement I can, and hope that at the end of the year we can see that advancement has been made. Am feeling well in the work and expect it to prevail.

Yours in the gospel,
E. A. STEDMAN.

MALAD, Idaho, August 6.

Editors Herald: We have just returned from Cache Valley where we have been trying to spread the gospel news. We are feeling well in our efforts, and enjoy good liberty in the presentation of the truth; and hope our labors will be effectual of much good.

We rode to Fairview on a wheel the 27th ult., a distance of about thirty miles; and not being able to secure a house to speak in, returned to Weston the next day where we secured the Mormon church and preached once to a fair-sized audience.

Then leaving an appointment for the following week, went north to Oxford where we made our abode with Bro. John Baker and family, where Bro. W. S. Pender joined us, but not being able to secure a house until the 31st we visited Bro. Walker and family and also Bro. and Sr. Hobson, who live about three miles out of town.

Bro. Pender having appointments to fill returned to Malad on the 31st ult., and we remained and spoke that evening to a small attendance. We again arranged for the house for Sunday evening, August 2, and advertized and tracted about town considerably; also attended their Sunday-school and the services for the evening announced there. At half past two in the afternoon we held sacrament-service at the residence of Bro. and Sr. Baker. At the time announced, we went to the meeting-house accompanied by Bro. and Sr. Baker, expecting to see a good attendance, but to our surprise, no one came to the house except a few noisy girls and boys who only marched into the house and turned and marched out again; we waited until after nine o'clock and I then told Bro. Baker if they considered themselves unworthy of the gospel message it was their own fault, and we extinguished the light and went home.

The next morning I departed for Clifton, about five miles distant, and not being able to secure a house there, went on to Fairview making a long and dusty ride of about twenty miles, and yet being unable to secure a house there returned to Weston and filled our appointment; after which I talked until half past twelve with three of their representative men.

We then returned to Malad, making in all, a distance of about one hundred ten miles, on our wheel. Looking forward to the perfect day, I remain,

In bonds,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

ADA, Indian Territory, August 11.

Dear Saints: I have known of the Reorganized Church only twelve years, and have been a believer for a long while but have never been permitted to join, my husband being so bitterly opposed to the church and its doctrines. I am not permitted to read a tract or a book or anything containing any information concerning the church. I have many friends and relatives who are members of the church, but I am forbidden to see them and my dear father and sister are among them.

I write this believing that through prayers my poor husband may be made to see his wrong. He has never heard a sermon and will not hear. Man can not reach him for he will not stay to hear, but there is nothing impossible with God. He alone can make all things right. I ask the Saints to fast and pray with me on Sunday, August 30, that the Lord may open up the way that I may be permitted to join the church and that my husband may see his error and turn and be saved by obedience to the gospel before it is too late.

Yours in the one faith,
MRS. MOLLIE ARNOLD.

SHELTON, Nebraska, August 10.

Editors Herald: The Lord is with us in our work and good is being done for which we thank God.

Bro. Madison and the writer have been holding meetings on the street at Tecumseh where we called the people together with a dinner-bell. We had a fair hearing and some interest.

From there we went to Fairbury and caused a Sunday-school to be organized with sixty-five members, and then to Fairfield where we organized another school with seventy-seven members and left the Saints feeling well.

We next went to Clay Center where we held forth in the court-yard and the people treated us well, furnished us with singers and an organ and lights. We had a good crowd and fine singing. We gave them seven sermons. Good was done, we believe. Sr. Orr was instrumental in getting a favorable hearing as she has labored for a long time with the people of Clay Center and helped them and proved to them that she believed in true Christian action and they have learned to love and respect her. What a power for good are the righteous lives of the Saints!

From there we came to Shelton where we met with kind Saints and Bro. Madison was made happy by meeting Miss Stena Christianson from Council Bluffs, and some of the Saints were surprised when our beloved brother and Sr. Stena were made one in the holy bonds of matrimony on the 9th of August, the writer officiating. Many good wishes went out for their future prosperity and prayers that God might bless and prosper them in the great work that is before them as they are desirous of devoting their lives to the service of God. I glory in their choice. May God bless them always!

We are pleased to say that the Lord has crowned our efforts with a degree of success as we have led seven precious souls into the waters of baptism of late and we expect more to follow soon. We preach on the streets at Shelton this evening and from here we go to Cairo or Bluff Center where we expect to hold forth for a time and organize a Sunday-school.

Your brother,
W. M. SELF.

GRANNIS, Arkansas, August 11.

Editors Herald: We have just closed a very successful ten-day meeting at Lydia, Texas. Every meeting was characterized by the Spirit and I enjoyed wonderful liberty in the presentation of the angel's message and the other brethren said they did. Brn. H. R. Harder, Ellis Short, E. L. Henson, E. A. Erwin, A. Z. Rudd, and the writer did the preaching. I did all the preaching at night after Bro. Short left, which was on the first Tuesday, and took up the subject of the calling of Joseph Smith. And surely God bore testimony by his Spirit of this latter-day work.

About the middle of the meeting Bro. Erwin baptized seven and at the close I baptized six and left many more almost persuaded. This is where a discussion is to be held this fall with J. W. Chism of the Christian Church, if we can agree on propositions. He was there in the winter, and lectured on "Mormonism," as he calls it, and has since boasted that he had killed Mormonism at Lydia, Texas. But if he could have been there last week he would have seen the liveliest corpse he ever saw. I found on inquiry that he had not injured our work there at all. The Saints were greatly built up in the meetings.

The branch numbers one hundred eight live, active members. They say that they understand their duties much better than they ever did before and are determined to perform them. During the meetings the Baptists held a meeting within a half mile of us and while they made considerable noise we got the converts. They baptized two, we thirteen.

I begin a meeting to-night here and on the 20th go to Dorchest, Louisiana, and on the 1st of September to San Antonio, Texas. The harvest is great in this southern country, but the laborers are few. Pray and work, Saints; that is, every time you offer a prayer for more laborers put something into the Bishop's hands to support the laborers when sent, and I can assure you that God will send them. But "faith without works is dead."

Yours for truth,

H. O. SMITH.

SCANDIA, Kansas, August 10.

Editors Herald: Through the kindness of Bro. Ed Fender and Bro. and Sr. Grant and Sr. Knapp of Beloit, Kansas, paying my way to Goodland, Kansas, I was enabled to baptize Mrs. Nettie May Murray on the 26th of July. May the Lord bless her! Bro. and Sr. Fender and Sr. Gay Fender helped me to return to the tent at Scandia. Bro. Ward is with me. With not very large crowds we have had very good success, the Lord being with us.

August 6 we went to Bro. VanMahon's near Republic City. The large schoolhouse was full on Sunday night. The work is moving along in this district. This is a large district and there are only two of us in the field. Bro. Teeter is at home harvesting, Bro. Gurwell at home sick. I hope they will be in the field with us soon for we need their help. Our reunion will soon be here, the 4th of September to the 14th. All who want tents will please write to Bro. J. F. McClure, Gaylord, Kansas, one week before the 1st of September. Tents 9½x12, 3-foot wall, $1.25 each; 9½x14, 6-foot wall, divided into two rooms, $1.75 each. We will have to pay the freight on them. Bro. I. N. White and Bro. Stebbins will be with us. Come, brothers and sisters!

LOGAN, Utah, August 7.

Editors Saints' Herald: Since the Malad conference, the writer in company with Swen Swenson and A. J. Layland, took a trip to Bear Lake County to look after the interest of the work. Our trip was a pleasant one, notwithstanding dust, mosquitoes, and other unpleasantness, encountered in traveling by team. Bro. Layland, the owner of the conveyance, took us by many places of interest not easily forgotten. Among these Soda Springs, where we drank soda-water to our hearts' content, as it flowed fresh from Mother Earth's inexhaustible fountain. We visited Montpelier, Bloomington, St. Charles, Dingle, and other places including a visit to Bro. Layland's home in the borders of the state of Wyoming where Bro. Swenson and I did ample justice to the delicious strawberries just then ripe. Bro. Layland has nearly two acres of that fruit which seems to thrive excellently in the high altitude.

Our mission to that part of the country was mainly to investigate the standing of some who were charged with departing from the faith. This kind of work is not pleasant in its nature, as we would rather see men coming into the fold, than to behold them forsaking the true way and turning again to the world and its follies. We were, however, permitted to witness the fact that labor performed by brethren in the past was not without result, two persons, husband and wife, being baptized by Bro. Layland near McCamon, as we were passing through.

Our work in Bear Lake consisted largely in visiting the Saints and attending to the matter above referred to. We did but little preaching, it being the most busy time of the year as hay-making was in full force. However, we preached a few times in the Methodist church in St. Charles, where on the last evening we met some opposition from a Mr. Alfred who had recently been a missionary in the state of Wisconsin. He was evidently a pupil of B. H. Roberts, for like him, he understood section 43:2, Doctrine and Covenants to mean, that if Joseph Smith became a transgressor, he should appoint his successor, but if he remained faithful, he should have no such privilege. As we had not so learned to know the Lord, we differed.

We left Bear Lake Valley on the 3d, Bro. Layland still conveying us. The road being over a high range of mountains, the ascent, of course, was slow, but the scenery being grand, time passed pleasantly. It was evident that Bro. Layland regarded Bro. Swenson and me as "tenderfeet," and wished to give us a little experience. Hence after having passed the summit he increased the speed, and when we came to a place where the narrow road-bed ran around the mountain side, down a steep incline, with a ravine several hundred feet deep on one side and a towering peak on the other, he kept shouting "Come up, come up," though he evidently meant go down. At any rate down we came over chuckholes and boulders at the rate of about ten miles an hour. Bro. Swenson with closed eyes was clinging to the seat for dear life, at the same time, no doubt, thinking of loved ones at Far West, Missouri; while the writer sat in readiness, in case of accident, to leap from the back end of the wagon. This part of the trip was to us a novelty long to be remembered, but Bro. Swenson says he will have his life insured before he enters upon another like it.

We have begun preaching on the streets in this city and prospects are good for a hearing at least. What the result will be we can not tell, but we feel to labor, hope, and pray. Here we will have to part company with Bro. Layland, as he and Bro. S. D. Condit who reside here, contemplate taking a trip into Idaho, while Bro. Swenson and I will move southward to reach Provo in time for the reunion there the 29th inst.

In gospel bonds,

SCRANTON, Iowa, August 10.

Editors Herald: My silence in the papers does not necessarily imply that I have been silent elsewhere. On the contrary, I have been making my voice heard as far as possible, in proclaiming the glorious gospel of the Son of God. I have been preaching on the streets of villages and towns. I find I can get hearers by the hundred where they would only be by the dozen if we had a tent. Have been laboring, largely, where the people never heard any one speak well of the Latter Day Saints. Bro. David Brewster, of Harlan, fitted up a spring wagon with a cover and bed and together we traveled for three weeks when he had to return home. We found friends nearly everywhere we went.

When we reached Dedham, Carroll County, and had gained permission to preach on the street, we learned that the "Church of God" was holding a revival. "A big gun from Indiana is preaching," a merchant told me. The "big gun" had heard we were there, for that night he devoted his time to abusing the "Mormons," "Reorganization," and "Latter Day Saints" with all his power of ridicule. He said, "I know all about them." "I am ready to meet them." He closed his meetings that night, and left town the next day, although meetings were announced for him for the week, and this was only Monday evening. "I have met their Apostle Kelley [his actions verified this statement] and I said unto him, 'Apostle Kelley, why don't you prophesy and tell us when the wind is going to change?'" After he had finished his tirade, the local preacher, or pastor of their church, told the people that there were "two Mormon elders in town and they will go from house to house," etc. "If they come to your house I would advise you to shut the door in their faces." Bro. Brewster was present and heard all and asked for the privilege of saying a few words. They asked, "Who are you?" He told them, and the evangelist—"big gun"—said, "No, sir! We won't have any snake talk in here." We were well advertised and the rest of the week we had good crowds to talk to on the street.

After we had closed our meeting one evening, an old man came up to me and asked, "Are you an Old Joseph Smith or Young Joseph Smith Latter Day Saint?" I answered that we were both as they taught the same doctrine, and that it was not under Joseph Smith but under Brigham Young that polygamy and other evils were introduced, that Joseph Smith had nothing to do with it. He said, "That's right! that's right! I was there and I know that's right." We afterward saw and conversed with him and I noted some of his statements as follows: "My name is Joseph Miner, am eighty years old, heard Joseph Smith preach, when I was nine years old, in November, 1832. He preached six times in my father's house. They camped near my father's place when they were on their way to Missouri. Joseph and one of his company by the name of Berry had some trouble and Berry drew off from them and did not go any farther. Joseph felt bad about it. I also saw Joseph many times after they came back from Missouri and located at Commerce. I tell you, gentlemen, they have as good a doctrine from a Bible standpoint as there is. The Latter Day Saints were as good neighbors as I ever lived by. I want to tell you what I know. Many things were done by a band of thieves and laid onto the Mormons." Here he related a number of instances among which was the driving off of four cows and sixteen hogs, from a widow that he knew, by twelve horsemen. They told her, "The Lord hath need of them." They were traced to Warsaw, where the stock was sold. Some of the men were captured and sent to prison. None of them belonged to the Latter Day Saint Church. He said, "Now, gentlemen, what I tell you is God's truth."

This old gentleman's home is in the northwestern part of Oklahoma. He was visiting with a daughter that lives near Dedham when he heard us. It does our souls good to hear these old people, that were neighbors of the Saints in the early days of the church, testify. He also said he had heard Emma talk—had taken a good many meals there with her and the Major as he lived only twelve miles from Nauvoo. Had also heard Young Joseph preach.

Am now domiciled at the home of Bro. T. W. Lewis, Sr., while trying to enlighten the people of this town concerning the faith of the Latter Day Saints.

Your brother in Christ,

D. M. RUDD.

NECEDAH, Wisconsin, August 10.

Dear Herald: Your pages are read with interest in our family, especially the letters from those we know. We feel rather lonely now, as Bro. Chatburn just left us and all who know him can sympathize with us. He has been with us several weeks and delivered some fine sermons while here and, as the fruits of his labors, baptized a man and wife and little son who learned the gospel in the Sunday-school. We feel that the Religio and Sunday-school are a great help in a branch.

We were called upon to part with dear old Grandma Fisher last week. She passed away so peacefully, it was like falling asleep. We miss her very much. We have our sorrows and joys here as elsewhere.

We enjoyed a brief visit from Brn. F. M. Cooper and A. V. Closson last week who came to ordain Bro. Lester Wildermuth to the office of elder. Bro. Cooper favored us with one fine sermon.

Although our branch is small we have some excellent meetings. We have some very earnest members. One sister (a little girl named Ruth calls her grandma) often walks three and one-half miles to attend services. The honest in heart are being gathered out here and led to see the truth. Several are very near the kingdom. We often thought of Bro. Gowell this summer in blueberry time and perhaps he remembers the time spent here. We have been favored with visits from several missionaries here and are always glad to see them, especially in watermelon time.

We are striving to keep the work moving. We have a fine Sunday-school and Religio.

Your sister in bonds,

RILLIE MOORE.

TOWNER, North Dakota, August 8.

Editors Herald: Bro. J. S. Wagner and I are engaged in gospel tent work in this little town in the northwestern part of North Dakota. We arrived here yesterday after a long hot ride over a sandy road and began erecting our white tabernacle and to prepare for housekeeping. Neither of us, however, are professionals at the occupation. But as our kitchen utensils are not numerous and our bill of fare is of the simplest order we manage to imitate the order of housekeeping.

Whatever disagreeable events come to pass we manage to keep our equilibrium and endeavor to find no fault. There is, however, one feature which quite concerns us and that is the wind of this broad prairie. We watch every cloud of the horizon quite suspiciously.

We are not aware of any Saints in this vicinity, neither has the gospel been preached here. We are to make our first effort this evening.

Our reunion at Bottineau was quite a success. A Home Class of the Religio was organized with Bro. Warren McElwain of Bjelland, North Dakota, as superintendent.

North Dakota has from twenty-five to fifty young Saints, many well qualified for usefulness in the church, if it were not for such a widely scattered condition. Many are now filling important positions in the business world.

At Lansford and Norwich where we have been laboring with tent since the reunion we left some investigating the gospel. At the latter place Bro. Sparling had done some preaching last winter. I think some will come into the Lord's kingdom in time in each place.

I think tent work a very successful method of introducing the gospel in places where we could not otherwise gain access, as it both affords the missionary a home and place to speak, and being out of the ordinary method of religious work it attracts attention.

Our work in Dakota is growing very encouraging, notwithstanding the obstacles to be met in mission work. The missionary here must travel a great many miles and oftentimes preach to small audiences, and much of it is to be done in cold weather as it is a very busy country during the work seasons.

Praying the Lord will grant us all grace and courage to perform well the duty allotted us, I am,

Your brother in Christ,
LEONARD HOUGHTON.

TRYON, Nebraska, August 3.

Dear Saints: Some time ago Bro. S. D. Payne called upon the Saints to help him get a tent for this mission; they responded liberally to his call. My husband bought a cheap organ which he repaired and took with the tent, starting west in company with Bro. and Sr. R. O. Self. Bro. and Sr. Self and Bro. Shirk were with us some time and we were very lonely when they left. Bro. J. L. Detrick gave us a short call, and we would have been glad to have him remain with us awhile. I ask an interest in the prayers of God's people.

In the one faith,
EMMA PAYNE.

SPRINGERTON, Illinois, August 11.

Editors Herald: The reunion of the Southeastern Illinois District which was held near Jeffersonville closed the 9th inst. with a large audience in attendance. The speakers during the meeting were I. N. White, W. J. Smith, T. J. Bell, F. L. Sawley, C. J. Spurlock, R. T. Walters, T. A. Hougas, and the writer. Bro. Hougas gave us good instruction and did an excellent work in behalf of the Sunday-school and we hope that all who were present may heed the advice given and move forward in this excellent department of this great latter-day work.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might" is the injunction given by divine authority and we should do it right now or we may otherwise be considered slothful servants.

This is the hastening time and if we move on to a final victory with this great army of workers we must be diligent in whatever line of work to which we have been called. It was decided by vote to have a reunion next year and a committee of three was chosen to select the time and place.

The reunion just held was a success and all who camped on the grounds were blessed and strengthened for future work. The committee had no trouble in getting means to pay the expenses as the Saints as well as those outside were very liberal and willing to help in this way. We were glad to see an improvement along this line. Saints should not hesitate to give of their means in order to aid the greatest work ever known to men.

I expect to labor here a few nights with Bro. Sawley and then on into Crawford and Clark Counties where I expect to labor with Bro. R. T. Walters and meet some opposition.

I promised some of my friends that I would write to the HERALD this year and that is one reason why I write this letter. My faith in the work is getting stronger every day and I have a great desire to overcome every evil and continue faithful until the end. God has greatly blessed me in my office and calling and my labor has strengthened others and I believe progress is being made. I have a great desire to abide in the truth until Jesus comes to reward his servants.

In the field at work,
F. M. SLOVER.

ALVA, Wyoming, August 9.

Editors Herald: I came here the 22d of May, and on the 24th preached the first gospel sermon ever delivered in these parts by our people, in the union church built about four years ago and occupied exclusively by the Missionary Baptist people ever since. I have now preached about twenty discourses in that church to congregations ranging from twenty to one hundred, and have baptized four grown persons and one child ten years of age, giving us now seven members in all.

I came here mainly through the persistent efforts of Sr. S. E. McWilliams who tried long and hard to get some one to preach, and now she rejoices in the baptism of her husband as the fruit of her prayerful effort. Honest efforts are always crowned with success to some extent.

Bro. Hiram Mahoney has lived here for about fifteen years, he was baptized by Elder Forscutt, in Iowa. Many of the Iowa Saints will remember him, he is also rejoicing in the new birth of his companion. She was the first to be baptized here, and is also rejoicing in the faith that makes souls happy indeed.

The Baptists say I ought to be run out of the country. I gave them an invitation to come on with their theological war-club, but as yet no warrior has appeared. A Mr. Coffee came here once, and I expected to get a reviewing, but not so, only a repetition of that old, old, stereotyped sermon of the alabaster box of precious ointment. Notwithstanding my sixteen-foot chart hung on the wall just behind him and silently preached the old Jerusalem gospel to his audience as they faced it, for I saw many glancing at it and apparently reading its contents.

The Baptist minister, Mr. Woods, informed me once that he had decided to reply to some of my arguments before I left but after more mature reflection considered it unnecessary. I think what changed his mind was the fact of our having too much Bible for his repentance before faith—and remission of sins before baptism. In a social gathering one day at Sr. McWilliams' home, to which some of the invited neighbors came to listen to our talk he said, "I came to your confirmation meeting and strained all my faculties to see and hear those confirmed speak in tongues, but I remarked after dismissal to one lady, 'Well, I am from Missouri, and will have to see.'" I replied, "Did you expect God to give you a sign so that you might know that the Bible tells the truth?" In reference to repentance before belief, he said, "Bro. Morgan, you know that there are thousands of sinners in the world that believe." "Well," I replied, "you admit my point. Now the next thing for them to do is to repent." "Well," said he, "all the good people of all denominations will be saved." "What! The Methodist and others with their sprinkling?" "Yes." "And the Latter Day Saint with his Book of Mormon?" "Yes." Then I asked him, "Can a person with Baptist repentance dying before baptism get into heaven?" "O Yes," was the reply. "Can a person get into the Baptist Church without baptism?" To this he replied, "No." "Well, then your church demands more than heaven itself." Saints, why such useless ceremony, so void of divine power? Have you had to come under the ban of such useless forms? No. But to such of you as have adopted them, God has set his seal that they are truly essential. God bless and prosper you all is my prayer.

In hopes of success,

J. W. MORGAN.

WINGHAM, Ontario, August 11.

Editors Herald: I came to this place about three weeks ago and after securing the Congregational church (now unused by them), I held a number of services, preaching to a very small congregation, notwithstanding I had a bulletin-board out at the post-office and at the last even announced my subjects to attract the people. But they did not come out. I also did some tracting and gave them personal invitations.

So after giving them what we considered a fair trial we gave up the church in town and found another opening about five miles out in a little village called White Church, which thus far bids fair to prove successful. The people are more responsive to invitation and tract distribution, and consequently a nice crowd greets me in the Forester's Hall. Some questions have been asked through which the differences between the Reorganized Church and the Utah seceders have been shown up. Trusting lasting good will result, I am,

Sincerely,

WALTER L. BENNETT.

WALLACEBURG, Ontario.

MAX, Dundy County, Nebraska.

Dear Herald: Bro. Sutton and I came here on Monday evening. We commenced services in the Congregational church last evening. We had a very nice congregation of attentive listeners last evening. We will continue each evening this week, and also on Sunday. There are some here who I think will obey the gospel; if not at this time, surely they will later on. I am pleased with the outlook at present. There seems to be some good, honest-hearted people here.

Your brother,

J. W. WALDSMITH.

SAN JOSE, California, August 10.

Editors Herald: I am here holding forth and enjoying fine liberty in preaching to the few that come to hear. Our hall was badly broken by an earthquake Sunday night, August 2, and last night from eight o'clock in the evening to three in the morning we had four shocks. One woman and a young man died from the shock, and a young woman was taken to the hospital. My wife was in very great danger. Brick buildings were badly cracked, and chimneys broken off. The fine finish of plaster on our hall was broken off in many places on the ceiling. The people fear something worse is coming. I guess they are right in that, if they are wrong in most everything else.

This morning one old man was complaining to me about how things were going, and he seemed to express great fear, but I was led to believe that an earthquake would never convert him. While we have earthquakes here, in the East are floods, tornadoes, cyclones, and hail, destroying most everything in their track. Look at the wars and bloodshed, famine and pestilence all over the land. It speaks of the fulfillment of prophecy and the near advent of Jesus, our King evermore. O may he soon gather in his people, build up his kingdom, and come and reign on the earth, for I am tired of seeing so much folly among the people! Saints, what manner of men and women ought we to be, seeing that the end draws nigh?

Your brother,

J. C. FOSS.

Southern California Reunion.

The Southern California reunion was a success in nearly every particular. Forces were at work to circumvent the committee in their work, but pluck and a "never-know-fail" spirit on the part of the committee caused the reunion to come as scheduled. At the last moment, a change of location was made imperative owing to the change of front of our Holiness or Free Methodist friends. The committee had secured their camp-meeting grounds near Orange; a stipulated rental price having been agreed upon, etc. But early in July their leaders held a solemn conclave and after carefully and prayerfully considering the matter in all of its bearings light came and they discovered that our church "was a worldly church" and therefore we could not use the grounds—a desecration so to speak.

As soon as this information was conveyed to the committee they at once looked around for another location, and with the assistance of Bro. A. Carmichael, who ever has an eye open to assist the work, secured a pleasant place in close proximity to Santa Ana, the county-seat of Orange County. The refusal of the Methodists turned out to be a decided benefit for us as conceded by everybody before the reunion was half over.

The district president called the meeting to order and moved that Bro. W. E. Peak preside over the reunion and Bro. A. Carmichael act as assistant. This was unanimously carried, a secretary and other officers were appointed, and everything placed in working order the first day, July 17. From start to finish interest was not lacking. Enthusiasm increased with each service. The principal speakers were Brn. J. C. Clapp, W. E. Peak, A. Carmichael, A. E. Jones, William Gibson, George Wixom, and Nelson Van Fleet. Bro. Clapp did more of the preaching than any one else, due in a measure to the physical indisposition of Brn. Peak and Carmichael, and also because the people were anxious to hear "Uncle Joe" again. All "up and down" the coast Bro. Clapp is widely known and respected by the Saints.

Bro. Peak is a new man, right "from the East," and you know new men always take with the people and Bro. Peak is no exception to the rule. He fits into his position nicely, and it is clearly apparent he will do his utmost to fulfill the duties imposed upon him.

Bro. A. E. Jones is wide awake and doing what he can to advance the work under his charge.

Bro. Carmichael has been affected with his old asthmatic trouble, but is ever on the alert to gather in the tithing and consecration and provide for the protégés of the church. His address is Anaheim, California, R. F. D. No. 1. Saints, send in your mite!

Our aged Bro. William Gibson, noble soul that he is, is still quick and bright at his advanced age, and duly impresses one as to the value of an abstemious diet and temperate life. He kept the Word of Wisdom strictly during the reunion. I saw but one or two others doing so.

Californians could well dispense with the use of meat entirely, and in this country where fruit and nuts are in abundance there is no excuse for any one eating meat during the summer months.

Bro. C. W. Earl is bending his energies preparatory to entering the missionary field in September. Success to him!

Special interest was taken in the prayer services, and, as Bro. A. M. Green remarked, "Every one is better than the last."

Bro. R. R. Dana drove the "bus" and carefully landed all arrivals on the ground.

Bro. N. W. Best was chief of police, but so orderly were the crowds that his services were practically uncalled for. Bro. Peter Kaufman was a willing helper.

The Newport Saints did everything they could to make the reunion a success. Reunion next year at the same place. Several of the Central California Saints were in attendance.

During the week the morning hour was given over to Sunday-school institute work under the direction of Bro. A. Carmichael.

There were several baptisms. In all good was accomplished, sinners instructed, and Saints cheered. These meetings can not be valued in dollars and cents. Things about as usual in the district. Bro. Peak is to hold a discussion with Reverend "Heider," Bro. Chatburn's friend, commencing August 16, to continue twelve nights.

SECRETARY.

LOS ANGELES, California, August 4.

Des Moines District Reunion.

The reunion here opened yesterday under quite favorable conditions. The camp is nicely located and the dwelling-tents located around and in close proximity to the large district tent. A goodly number came in and occupied their tents on Thursday and most of them will remain throughout the meeting.

Bishop Hilliard is with us and Bishop Kelley will not be present. Apostle Fred A. Smith is here, as also Elder J. F. McDowell, who was in our district several years ago and those who knew him then will be pleased to meet him at this time. The district missionaries are present.

The reunion was held here two years ago and the people of Rhodes very kindly received the Saints at that time and they have looked forward to this reunion with interest and are now extending a welcome to the Saints. The Saints thus assembling are coming together in the spirit of love and we believe by our association together will more and more see eye to eye and be more of one heart and mind. Nearly all will board at the dining-hall, which is in charge of the committee and in this we will have all things common.

The special session of the district conference will convene on the 22d inst., and two of the branches make a request for one of their members to be ordained to the office of elder. If these requests are granted it will be four elders ordained during the past year. A new branch has been organized in the northern part of the district.

Elders F. A. Smith, J. F. Mintun, and H. A. McCoy were chosen to preside at the reunion and all arrangements for the meeting and the details were left in their charge. During the latter part of the hour Bishop Hilliard spoke in his happy and forceful manner urging the Saints onward, speaking of his personal experiences, comparing the church now with what it had been at any time in the past. He was followed by F. A. Smith who spoke of the work of entering upon the reunion and the individual duty of each one. J. F. Mintun spoke of the reunion as being a type of the gathering and wished that all in the district might be present to enjoy the association and blessing.

Kindly,

A. A. REAMS.

RHODES, Iowa, August 14.

The following is taken from a paper on Habits and Will, by Mrs. Theodore W. Birney, in the Delineator for September: "The habits of reverence, gentleness, courtesy, honesty, courage, and patience, like their opposites, are absorbed by the child from those with whom he is most closely associated. It is in these attributes that an ounce of example outweighs a ton of precept. It is a charming custom to lose no opportunity either in reading fiction or in the circumstances attending on every-day living to express an enthusiastic appreciation of the good, the noble, beautiful, and true, but valuable beyond and above all discussion of these virtues is, 'To be as nearly as we can what we wish our children to be.'"

Conference Minutes.

Western Maine.—District conference met at Little Deer Isle, Maine, August 1 and 2, J. J. Billings presiding, J. N. Ames assistant, Eugene Brann secretary, H. J. Davison assistant. Branches reporting: West Surry 33, Little Deer Isle 61, Brays Mountain 43, Stonington 45. Elders reporting: J. N. Ames, H. J. Davison, J. J. Billings, and Eugene Brann. Priest A. C. Dunham. Teacher H. R. Eaton. Deacon A. O. Candage. Bishop's agent's report: On hand last report, $106.03; received, $67.50; expended, $116; due church, $57.53. Auditing committee, H. J. Davison and Eugene Brann, reported the accounts correct. Voted to raise money to pay district president balance due on expenses. Recommendation of the Stonington Branch that Freeman Haskel be ordained to the office of priest accepted and provision for the ordination left to the district president. J. J. Billings sustained as district president and Eugene Brann as secretary. Freeman Haskel elected district treasurer. Sr. Colby, the tract fund committee, was requested to report to the district president and turn all moneys now on hand over to the district treasurer. It was resolved that all branches and district officers be requested to report at the next conference. Preaching by Eugene Brann, J. N. Ames, and H. J. Davison. Adjourned to meet at Brays Mountain, October 31 and November 1.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Northwestern Kansas District: As there is nothing in the treasury to supply the families of the missionaries, I thought it necessary to stir up your minds by way of remembrance in regard to your duty in keeping the law of tithing. We should all be interested in keeping this principle of the gospel, for by it we may all be instrumental in spreading the fullness of the same. Christ said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Now if we turn to Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5, we will see that it is a command to latter-day Israel as well as Malachi 3: 10 was to Israel in that day. As people of God we expect to find favor with him by keeping his commandments and by so doing we will obtain the promise through faith and be blessed with faithful Abraham. Let us be careful and not be found under condemnation as Malachi 3: 9 says that Israel was. Neither should we be slothful in observing the commandments, nor doubtful in regard to them.

I hope that all the Saints of the Northwestern Kansas District will rally to the call for assistance, so the missionaries will not have to return home to serve their tables. All small as well as large favors will be received with thanksgiving. May the Lord bless you in well-doing! For the sake of the gospel, F. S. Ward, Gaylord, Kansas.

Change of Mission Appointment.

Those concerned will take note that for the remainder of the conference year Bro. H. R. Harder will labor in the Southwestern Mission instead of Eastern Mission, and report according to the direction of H. O. Smith, in charge Southwestern Mission.

FRED'K M. SMITH,
For the First Presidency.

Chicks for Graceland.

A thoughtful sister in sending aid for the college wrote: "Hoping this will reach you safely and be all right I will tell you its mission."

"In March I set a hen for Graceland. I raised three chicks, sold them for ninety cents, and received ten cents for eggs. She has set and raised eight more; they are not large enough yet to sell. Will keep track of eggs, as I think it too late to set her again. I hope to do well with them and wish you and Graceland a prosperous year."

This is a demonstration of "faith and works," the essential to success. Go thou and do likewise!

Notices.

This will notify all concerned that Mr. Joseph A. Chandler, who was baptized by Priest W. H. Rhoads, of Cookville, Missouri, on March 22, 1903, was not confirmed for reasons. He has made the boast that if not confirmed at Cookville he will go elsewhere for that purpose.

Northern Missouri Reunion.

Do not forget that this reunion convenes August 28 to September 6 and that President F. M. Smith, Mark H. Forscutt, J. A. Tanner and Joseph R. Lambert will be with us to preach the word; then there are our missionaries who will assist in the meetings. T. T. Hinderks, B. J. Dice, A. M. Lewis, A. W. Head and C. P. Faul are the reunion committee. These men will do all in their power to make your stay for the ten days pleasant. The grove in which the meetings will be held lies one and one fourth miles southeast of the city of Stewartville, Missouri, which is twenty-one miles east of St. Joseph, and sixty-five miles north of Kansas City, Missouri, on the Hannibal and St. Joe Railroad. The carfare is $1.90 direct to this reunion from Kansas City. The tents will cost you $1.50 and $1.75 for the whole time. Straw free. We are expecting a large crowd out this year and are making every preparation for this notable gathering. You can board as cheaply here as at your home. Seven meal tickets for one dollar. You should bring an empty straw tick, pillow, and sheets in your trunk. You can pasture your team for ten cents a day. Sr. Carrie M. Lewis will have charge of the song service. We have fine grounds, healthful, plenty of shade and good water. Bring your young people with you so they may get acquainted with the noble Saints who live in the "regions round about." Make your arrangements now to attend the Northern Missouri reunion. Charles P. Faul, secretary.

Reunion Notices.

The annual reunion and camp-meeting of the Northeastern Kansas District will be held at Centralia, Kansas, commencing Friday, September 11, and continuing ten days. Patriarch A. H. Smith, Apostle I. N. White, and a number of elders will be present. All are cordially invited to attend. Committee on arrangements: George Johnson, Atchison; S. F. Cox, Vermilion; Arthur Smith, Clay Center.

Conference Notices.

The Kewanee District conference will convene at Millersburg, Mercer County, Illinois, on September 5 and 6. All parties interested will have their reports in the hands of the secretary at the proper time. All who can come are urgently requested to do so. Joseph Terry, secretary, J. S. Patterson, president.

Conference of the Southern Nebraska District will convene at Wilber, Nebraska, September 27 and 28. We would like a full representation. Come and bring the Spirit of the Master with you. The branches and the ministry of the district should send full reports. J. W. Waldsmith, district president.

Conference of the Mobile District will convene with the Three Rivers Branch, Jackson County, Mississippi, at 10 a. m., Saturday, September 12, 1903. F. P. Searcliff, district president.

Successful Masterpieces.

Doubleday, Page & Co., have sold over a million volumes of their "Little Masterpieces of Literature" and they will soon publish some "Little Masterpieces of Science," edited by George Iles, of which over 120,000 volumes are now being printed in anticipation of their success.

"Animal and steam power no longer suffice for agriculture," says Emile Guarini in the Electrical Review for August 8. "There is a need for an agent assuring more rapid working and better economy and efficiency, a need which is supplied by electricity." And then by means of an illustrated article entitled "The Use of Electric Power in Plowing" he tells a number of schemes by which the versatile electric motor is made to do old "Dobbin's" work on the plow.

The Greeks and Romans paid special attention to the physical culture of their youth, to public water supplies and baths, and Athens and Rome were provided with sewers early in their history. During the middle ages, sanitation received a decided check. Ignorance and brutal prejudice prevailed and this was the most unsanitary period in history. Most European towns were built compactly and surrounded by walls. The streets were narrow and winding, and light and air were excluded. The accumulation of filth was frightful. Stables and houses were close neighbors. The dead were buried within the churchyards or in the churches. Wells were fed with polluted water. All conditions were favorable for the spread of infectious diseases, and in the fourteenth century alone the oriental or bubonic plague—the Black Death of recent historians—carried off a fourth of the population of Europe. The birth-rate was much less than the death-rate normally. The cities had to be continually repopulated from the country. These sentences from a review in Science of new works on sanitation in our own times illustrate, by provoking a comparison, the improvement in our day.—Scientific American, June 6.

The Disciples of Martin Luther.

To those who have not followed the Lutheran Church very closely it has appeared as a very small and weak denomination, for the reason that Lutherans have not asserted themselves as strongly as some of the other Protestant denominations. To such people it would be a revelation to know that the Evangelical Lutheran Church is the largest Protestant denomination in the world, and that there are as many Lutherans in the world as there are of all the other Protestant denominations put together. To be exact, of the one hundred and forty million Protestants in the world, seventy million are Lutherans.

In the United States, the Lutheran Church ranks third among the Protestant denominations, with nearly twelve thousand congregations and a membership of one million eight hundred thousand. Twenty-five theological seminaries, forty-three colleges, fifty academies, ten young ladies' seminaries, twenty-two hospitals, fifty-two orphans' homes, twenty homes for the aged, eight deaconess houses and twelve immigrant-missions are controlled and directed by the various Lutheran bodies in this country.—September Womans' Home Companion.

CALVIN A. BEEBE DEAD.

It was with deep regret that we learned of the death of Bro. Calvin A. Beebe, of Council Bluffs. Bro. Alma Ellison, of Lamoni, on Sunday evening, August 23, received a telegram from Walter Beebe, which read: "Father died to-day. Funeral Tuesday at ten o'clock." Bro. Beebe had been suffering much for about a year, and his condition was known to be serious, hence his demise was not wholly unexpected; nevertheless the news of his death was a shock.

Bro. Beebe was born in Caldwell County, Missouri, on April 28, 1836, and on September 11, 1859, he was baptized at Anderson, Mills County, Iowa, by Elder E. C. Briggs, who was then on his historical mission in Western Iowa. It will thus be seen that Bro. Beebe has been connected with the Reorganization almost from the first. The first branch with which he united was that at Council Bluffs, with which he has remained affiliated ever since. He has been very intimately associated with the development of the work in Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska, where he has large business interests.

Six years after his baptism, or on October 8, 1865, he was ordained an elder at Council Bluffs, Iowa, by Wheeler Baldwin, and labored in that capacity for many years, proving his heart and soul were in this latter-day work. His faith in its ultimate triumph was always great.

At Logan, Iowa, on June 7, 1890, he was ordained a high priest by W. W. Blair. He was chosen by the conference of 1890 to act as member of the Standing High Council, but not being present, his ordination as such was not performed until April 11, 1893, at a meeting of that body, by President Joseph Smith.

He has long been associated with the work of the church, and was a well-known figure at the annual conferences. He will be greatly missed. The church has lost a staunch friend. He was a man of strong opinions and outspoken convictions, but was loved and respected as a man of great integrity and devotion to the cause he so dearly loved, and for which he had sacrificed much.

Our heartfelt sympathies are extended to the bereaved family and the Saints of the Council Bluffs Branch. Where he has been so long known and loved, his death will be keenly felt; yet his life was such as to soften that grief with bright hopes for his future happiness. He is at rest, peaceful rest.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEEDS A HEAD.

The following paragraph which appeared in the New York correspondence of the Chicago Tribune for August 21, will be read with interest by our ministry.

In the current issue of the Churchman, a leading Episcopal church paper, a chief executive for the Episcopal Church is demanded in a leading article which declares that a chief executive is as necessary for a church as for a nation. The Episcopal Church in this country now has not a real executive head. The oldest bishop is known as the presiding bishop and is chairman of the house of bishops, but he really has no specific executive or administrative functions.

GREAT BRITAIN OFFERS JEWS COUNTRY.

The sixth Zionist Congress assembled in Basel, Switzerland, August 23. The recent trouble experienced by the Jews in Russia seem to have aroused an interest in this movement which promises good for the cause of the Jews. The aim of the Zionist movement is to establish a Hebrew nation. At the present congress at Basel propositions were read from the British government offering the Jews a vast tract of territory in East Africa for colonization purposes. Great Britain pledges itself to grant an autonomous government, subject only to British suzerainty.

For many years have the Jews been waiting for the Sultan of Turkey to make terms under which they would be justified in returning to Palestine, but so far he has refused a charter permitting the Jews to resettle their loved country.

The Zionist movement is well financed by the Jewish Colonial Trust. The trust was established four years ago with a capital stock of ten million dollars. About one hundred fifty thousand Jews have subscribed stock to the amount of over five hundred thousand shares. Much money has been raised by various means, which will be expended in purchasing land bordering Palestine, and towards securing a charter from the Sultan.

Latter Day Saints will watch with great interest the efforts of the Jews to resettle Palestine.

THE "FLYING ROLLERS."

Considerable attention has been given of late to a body of religionists at Benton Harbor, Michigan, known as the "Flying Rollers." They are under the leadership of a man who calls himself Benjamin, and is considered by his followers to be a prophet. His real name is John Pelten. His wife Elizabeth, but called Mary by the "Flying Rollers," has given birth to a boy child which, according to an article which appeared in the Chicago American for August 9, is being heralded as the Christ. The "Flying Rollers" believe the millennium will begin June 22, 1906, after which date only their sect, which will then number one hundred forty-four thousand, will remain upon earth. They will then come in possession of the riches of the earth. They believe they are the ten lost tribes of Israel, and by remaining free from sin they will become immortal, and that they will be endowed with the powers of Christ.

Their rules of conduct are rather severe. They must never eat meat nor any food that involves the taking of life. They must never cut their hair nor beards. They must never touch an unbeliever, even though it be a husband, wife, or child. They must never look upon a picture or image, and on becoming a believer must write a full confession of their lives from birth. Their belief in the idea that no "Flying Roller" who lives his religion can ever die, is, says the writer in the American, the "magnet that is drawing pilgrims from the uttermost ends of the earth to the little Michigan town."

THE SPALDING THEORY AGAIN.

THE MORMON BIBLE.

A subscriber sends a leaf from a paper published in 1881, containing a history of the Book of Mormon. We published the same thing when it appeared about that date, and afterwards republished it. It is undoubtedly the true history of the Mormon Bible.

The facts briefly stated, are these: In 1812, Reverend Solomon Spalding, a retired minister, and a man of scientific and literary culture after investigating certain prehistorical mounds in Northern Ohio and finding human skeletons of unusual size, wrote a book, a romance, in which he dealt with the early peopling of America, and connected its prehistoric inhabitants with the lost tribes of Israel. This book was for a long time in the hands of a Pittsburg printer who, however, declined to publish it. In the employ of this printer was Sidney Rigdon, since famous as a Mormon elder. Years afterwards Joseph Smith published the book, alleging that he had found it on gold plates in a mound to which he was divinely directed. The book was recognized by persons who had read Mr. Spalding's manuscript. Quite a number testified to the identity of the book. Mr. Spalding's wife and daughter testified to it—the manuscript being still in their possession. They had heard Mr. Spalding read it aloud. They further testified that at a later date certain persons claiming to have been identified with the Mormon Church, but anxious to learn the truth in regard to the manuscript, asked the privilege of comparing it with Smith's Mormon Bible, and that they allowed them to take it, and had never been able to recover it.

All this was set forth in Scribner's Magazine about a quarter of a century ago, and has never been answered. No one who read it could doubt that the original of the Mormon Bible was the manuscript of a novel prepared by Reverend Solomon Spalding, a copy of which came into the hands of Joseph Smith, who palmed it on the public as a divine revelation.—Herald and Presbyter, August 5, 1903.

It seems strange that after all which has been presented to show the falsity of the Spalding theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon, such articles as the above will appear in papers like the above-quoted. We presume it is simply because the editors refuse to examine the evidence in the case. Desiring to believe the Book of Mormon a fraud and a base deception, they rest content in their examination when they have once read the Spalding theory, no matter how flimsy the fabric of the "yarn." For years we have been presenting facts to the public which completely disprove the Spalding theory, yet for some reason the story still lives.

Twenty-five years ago it was "set forth in Scribner's Magazine," says the Herald and Presbyter, "and has never been answered." On the contrary, it has been answered time after time. It is not at all unlikely that it has been unanswered in Scribner's. We venture the guess that should an answer be sent to Scribner's it would be refused space. The editors of the Herald and Presbyter are content to repeatedly present to their readers the old, worn-out, weak theory, and it is not likely that Scribner's would care to present to its readers the real truths in the matter any more than do the editors of the Presbyter.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Have teachers and deacons authority to take a text and preach sermons the same as a priest? If so, would it be proper for them to preach by request, there being higher officers present?

These questions seem to be perennial, and have been answered time and again. In fact, so general did these questions become at one time that General Conference took action on the matter. On April 9, 1898, the following was adopted as presented by the Quorum of Twelve:

"As a quorum we have considered the question referred to us—the right of teachers and deacons to publicly preach—and report as follows:

"Whereas the the law contained in section 17, paragraph 11, Doctrine and Covenants, clearly authorizes teachers and deacons to 'take the lead of meetings, . . . to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come to Christ;' and,

"Whereas in section 42, paragraph 5, teachers are required, together with elders and priests, to teach the principles of the gospel; and in section 120, paragraph 2, either of said officers is permitted to preside, and,

"Whereas in our judgment said duties include in their performance what is commonly understood to be preaching; and,

"Whereas in section 83, paragraph 22, teachers and deacons are limited in their duties to local service,

"Resolved that in our judgment teachers and deacons are authorized by the law to labor as preachers within branches to which they belong, when they are presidents thereof, or with the advice and consent of the chief presiding officer."

We think the foregoing is a specific answer to the questions without adding thereto.

When did Christ preach to the "spirits in prison," before or after his resurrection?

For answer we quote from HERALD for March 11, present year, in which this same question was answered as follows:

"The church has assumed no position on the point questioned. But the consensus of opinion among the ministry is that the preaching to spirits in prison was done while the body lay in the tomb, because the preaching was done in the spirit; there being no sufficient proofs that Christ in his resurrected body went into the confines of the prison."

To this might be added the following passage of Scripture found in Ephesians 4: 8-10, I. T.:

"Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He who descended, is the same also who ascended up into heaven, to glorify him who reigneth over all heavens, that he might fill all things.)"

To settle a difference of opinion between two persons, will you kindly state as to whether any king reigns on the continent of South America or not. It has been asserted by one that Brazil is a limited monarchy; another denies this, declaring that the last monarch was Don Pedro, who abdicated. In second Nephi 7: 2 we find: "And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles: and there shall be no kings upon the land, whō shall raise up unto the Gentiles." Is this the condition?

Not having a history of recent Brazilian affairs handy, we referred the forepart of the question to Mr. H. M. Skinner, of Chicago, who is well versed in history. He very readily replied as follows: "In regard to the question in reference to Don Pedro. He was dethroned in 1889, since which time Brazil has been a republic. The question submitted to you is not quite clear as to its intent, for it can be answered in two ways. There is no king or emperor in South America. There is no monarchical nation in South America. There are in South America, however, two countries which are not nations and which are subject to royal sway. British Guiana is a colony of Great Britain, and Dutch Guiana is a colony of Holland, or the Netherlands. Both of these colonies or provinces are under royal sway, but neither is a nation."

As to the latter part of the question, whether or not the conditions indicated in the quotation from Book of Mormon exist now, that depends very largely on what one wants to believe. One may say yes, another no, and there you have it. Who's to settle the difference of opinion?

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

On August 5 G. J. Waller wrote as follows from Honolulu, Hawaiian Territory, of the condition of Bro. Ingham who has undergone an operation for appendicitis: "You will be glad to hear that Bro. Ingham is recovering very rapidly, having left the hospital last Thursday. He expects to resume his duties at the office in about ten days more."

Elder R. J. Parker writes from Slater Camp, Butte

County, California, under date of August 19: "I am up in the mountains among the tall pines. There are about two hundred men working up here, making a large reservoir for an electric power company, and quite a number of men have their families camped here. Am having quite a crowd of attentive listeners each evening. As people in the valleys are very busy with fruit, and in the cities there is so much indifference, we have to go to the mountains and hunt for sheep. Am feeling quite well."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The New York Central in making room for its new terminals in New York will pull down about one hundred twenty houses, three churches, two hospitals, storage houses, and stables. Nothing stands in the way of improvement nowadays.

A copy of the Attleboro Sun for August 19, sent us by John Siddall, notes the announcement of the awarding of the contract for a new church building by our branch in that Massachusetts city. An epitome of the faith is also given. The church is to be located on Orange Street.

Bishop Kelley returned home Friday morning last, after an extended trip through Michigan, Ohio, and other states east of us.

R. C. Kelley of the HERALD staff, left Lamoni on Monday noon, August 24, to spend a few days in Des Moines visiting the State Fair.

In another column our readers will notice a call by the HERALD management for loans. Often there are Saints who have money in various amounts to loan. Why not respond to the call of the HERALD management, and assist in a good work. It takes money to issue books like the Church History the Sunday-school song-book, etc, and the management is compelled to make large outlays of money before there are any returns. This accounts for the need of money. Respond Saints who have money to loan.

The Centerville Daily Citizen, of Centerville Iowa, issue July 27, contained a favorable notice of the meetings of Bro. Kephart in that town.

The Marquis of Salisbury, former premier of England, died at Hatfield House on the evening of the twenty-second of August. His career was a notable one. Being a younger son and under his father's disfavor he began life with small prospect of a career such as he eventually had. But after work as journalist, arbitrator, and member of Parliament, and occupying posts in various cabinets, he was chosen prime minister in 1885 by Queen Victoria. He was returned to this position several times and his terms of office were marked by events of unusual responsibility. The Boer War was the most conspicuous event of his last administration. Lord Salisbury was considered a great and able statesman, but his brilliancy and record are dimmed in the eyes of many by the fact that this costly and distressing war was fought while he was in power.

F. B. Blair held another basket-meeting Sunday, this time at Pleasanton, Iowa. A large part of the Lamoni Choir accompanied him.

Fred'k M. Smith left here last evening for Council Bluffs, Iowa, to be in attendance at the funeral of Bro. Calvin A. Beebe. To-morrow Bro. Smith and family go to Stewartsville, Missouri, to attend the Northern Missouri reunion.

News dispatches from New Buffalo, Michigan, dated August 19, stated that the Congregational Summer Assembly, with representatives from Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and seven other states, adopted a resolution indorsing the plan of organic union now under consideration by the United Brethren, Methodist, Congregational and other Protestant denominations.

The religious census of London compiled by the London Daily News shows the ratio of church-goers to be one in 5.25, or sixteen per cent of the population.

The first page of the Gospel Standard for July 15 is dressed in mourning in commemoration of the death of Bro. James Imrie, one of our young missionaries in Australia, and also one of the "sub-editors" of the Standard. The editors of the Standard pay touching tribute to the departed brother.

Selected Poetry.

The Fault of the Age.

The fault of the age is a mad endeavor
To leap to heights that were made to climb:
By a burst of strength, of a thought most clever,
We plan to forestall and outwit Time.

We scorn to wait for the thing worth having;
We want high noon at the day's dim dawn;
We find no pleasure in toiling and saving,
As our forefathers did in the old time gone.

We force our roses, before their season,
To bloom and blossom for us to wear;
And then we wonder and ask the reason
Why perfect buds are so few and rare.

We crave the gain, but despise the getting;
We want wealth—not as reward, but dower;
And the strength that is wasted in useless fretting
Would fell a forest or build a tower.

To covet the prize, yet to shrink from the winning;
To thirst for glory, yet fear to fight;
Why, what can it lead to at last but sinning,
To mental languor and moral blight?

Better the old slow way of striving,
And counting small gains when the year is done,
Than to use our force and strength in contriving
And to grasp for pleasure we have not won.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

THE CONTRAST.

It is said, "Comparisons are odious," yet I may be pardoned for drawing one at this time. But, gentle reader, do not set it down as a mark of envy or the work of a jealous mind, for no one reads of the kindly reception and generous welcome everywhere accorded to our beloved President and his Counselor, in my native land, with greater pleasure than your humble writer. Were their reception otherwise none would regret it more deeply than I.

As I read of those kindly greetings received by my brethren, my mind reverts to the fourth day of February, 1863, when after a weary journey of two thousand miles by land, and a stormy voyage of ten and one half days by sea, I landed in Liverpool weary and alone. No anxious eyes were straining to catch a glimpse of the stranger, no outstretched hand or friendly voice to bid him welcome, not a door, however humble the cot or splendid the mansion, was thrown open to receive him. He was indeed a stranger in his native land. His relatives who remained there had already discarded him when he embraced the gospel, hence he could expect no welcome from them.

His little means were nearly exhausted, and if there were a single soul amid the vast millions that breathed the sentiments that had inspired his soul to bid farewell to those dearer to him than life, in order to tell the glad news of the renewal of God's work to his fellow men, he knew it not.

A great apostasy had decimated the church and scattered its members, and spread a pall of darkness over the minds of those who had been humble followers of the lowly Nazarene—its murky folds had fallen over the branch in the British Isles, and wherever the standard of truth had once been reared. False shepherds were feeding themselves on the flock, and clothing themselves with the wool of the shorn lambs, but the good Shepherd of the flock had gazed with piteous eyes on the dreadful havoc made by the unfaithful stewards, and in his infinite love had again raised the glorious standard of truth, which the false shepherds had trailed in the quagmire of iniquity. He had called his chosen ones to stand in the breach and wave high the heavenly ensign; and in his own due time he had moved upon the heart of the chosen seed to stand in his place and lift up the voice to the wandering flock and cry aloud and show God's people their sins, and Israel their transgressions.

The writer heard that voice and knew it was the voice of the Good Shepherd, uttered by his chosen one, and he rallied to the standard, and with others was appointed to upraise again the blood-stained banner of the cross in the British Isles, and for that purpose he stood there now, alone, so far as human companionship, but God was with him, he had opened up his way over land and sea, and had preserved him amid the dangers of the deep—he was with him still. His first move was to print one thousand copies of the first epistle of President Smith, then his means were nearly exhausted, but not his faith in God. He visited the authorities of the Brighamite faction in England; they spurned his message, denied him the privilege of presenting his message to their people, threatening to close every door so far as their influence went, against him. The editor of the Millennial Star published in the next issue what he claimed to be a revelation from God warning him that "apostates" would soon be in their midst seeking to lead them from the truth, and thus he warned his people against me, and counseled them not to receive me into their homes, nor feed, nor shelter me, nor listen to my message. But he neglected to tell them that he whom he was denouncing as an apostate, was the "spirit" that revealed unto him my presence, mission, and purpose, but posed before them as having been favored with a revelation from God.

It had the desired effect; with very few exceptions, every door was closed, but the messenger knew that God had sent him, and his heart was set to fill his mission, whatever the results might be, or whatever opposition he might meet. It is not the purpose of the writer to detail the privations, sufferings, trials, and heart-burnings endured. After nearly four months of lonely work Brn. Briggs and Jeremiah came, and I was no longer alone in the land, but demands for the spread of the truth and the circumstances surrounding us demanded that we should labor separately in the different parts of the land, but I was glad that the way before my brethren was in some measure prepared for them. Some had accepted the truth before they came, others were on the eve of admission into the true fold, but it began to spread more rapidly now, and the work was planted in England and Wales.

I had set my mind to return sometime in June, 1864, and as the time drew near I was reflecting upon the work before me, filled with anxiety for the success of the mission; my Book of Mormon lay upon the floor beside me, I took it up, when these words met my gaze: "Behold, the field was ripe, and blessed are ye, for ye did thrust in the sickle, and did reap with your mights, yea, all the day long did ye labor; and behold the number of your sheaves, and they shall be gathered into the garners, that they are not wasted; yea, they shall not be beaten down by the storm, at the last day; yea, neither shall they be harrowed up by the whirlwinds; but when the storm cometh, they shall be gathered together in their place, that the storm can not penetrate to them; yea, neither shall they be driven with fierce winds, whithersoever the enemy listeth to carry them. But behold, they are in the hands of the Lord of the harvest, and they are his; and he will raise them up at the last day."—Book of Mormon, small edition, pages 274, 275.

Reader, I accepted this as the Master's seal of approval of my labors and those of my brethren. I have watched the progress of the mission these forty years, and as I see the work established there on a firm foundation, and note the numbers that have been gathered in, and the self-sacrificing workers that have succeeded me from this land, and the noble army of intelligent, brave, noble, and God-fearing workers in my native land, I am led to say in the language of another, "What hath God wrought!"

I rejoice in the visit of two of the Presidency, and am thankful that they are honored as the servants of the Most High, nor is my interest confined to the British Isles, but extends to every land where the gospel standard has been raised through the self-denying labors of the noble messengers of life and salvation. I know of some of the bitter experiences they have realized and do realize, and I pray that God may give to every one strength according to his day, and that he most assuredly will do, for his promise never fails.

CHARLES DERRY.

"ARCHAEOLOGIA AMERICANA."

"Archæologia Americana" is a work published by the American Antiquarian Society in 1820. The society was organized November 19, 1812.

To the formation and development of this society, the first fifty-nine pages of the work are devoted. "American Archæology" a more convenient name for the book came into use. England is credited with the first antiquarian society in 1572. It was suppressed by James I, but was revived in 1717. In 1751 it was incorporated as, "The President, Council and Fellows of the Society of Antiquarians," in England. The organization of others abroad is also mentioned. The work "American Archæology" bears painful evidence of being the beginning of things, so to speak, in that line.

"It is presumed that the proceedings of the American Antiquarian Society have given a stimulus to the researches into the monuments, yet to be found, in the northwestern section of our country. The greater portion of the original articles given in this publication, consists of descriptions of these works. [Did the eminent J. Brooks, writer of the preface, mean works "yet to be found" were described?—R. E.] These were all communicated to the president of the society in the form of letters, and most of them were written with the haste and carelessness common to an epistolary correspondence. In these letters important information was blended with much irrelative matter; and the publishing committee, at the expense of time and labor, was obliged, on their own judgment and responsibility, to select the parts, which they deemed most worthy of public inspection. The interesting and valuable communications of Caleb Atwater, Esq., of Circleville, Ohio, are present to the perusal of the intelligent and candid reader, under the disadvantages above mentioned. They were originally the hurried productions of a professional man, constantly engaged in various branches of business; the first and the only draughts were sent to the society. The distance of the author from the place of publication, rendered it impracticable to forward to him either the written copy, or the printed proof sheets, for his revisal and correction. The committee regret the mistakes in the names of places, and other errors which have unavoidably occurred from reading letters not written in a manner the most legible; but the mistakes and errors, it is believed, are not important, nor more numerous than might have been expected under existing circumstances."

"More recent examination has confirmed an opinion previously formed, that the works described in this publication were erected by a race of men widely different from any tribe of North American Indians known in modern times. It is also made probable, that this ancient people emigrated from Asia, made their first settlement around the waters of our northern lakes, followed in their progress southwest the streams and rivers which empty into the Gulf of Mexico, leaving in every place of their residence traces of the degree of their civilization and improvement."—Preface, pages 3, 4.

"It is indeed nothing but one vast cemetery of the beings of past ages. Man and his works, the mammoth, tropical animals, the cassia tree, and other tropical plants are all found here reposing together in the same formation. By what catastrophe they were overwhelmed and buried here in the same strata, I know not, unless it was the general deluge."—Preface, page 5.

Passing over the fifty-nine pages devoted to the formation of the society, etc., we come to the disconnected, and as to fact, improbable tale of Father Lewis Hennepin, published first in France near the close of the seventeenth century. Of his arrival he says: "I arrived at fort Frontenac on the second of November, 1678." He mentions reaching River Niagara thus: "and on the sixth of January entered the River Niagara." In a rather hop-skip-and-jump style, he and others get to the Gulf of Mexico and back, amid romantic adventures, the main significance centering in him, as it impresses the reader.

Another chaffy tale of his, about La Salle in 1684 undertaking to discover the Mississippi by way of the Gulf of Mexico, follows.

The title page of the remainder of the work is: "Description of the antiquities discovered in the state of Ohio and other Western States communicated to the president of the American Antiquarian Society by Caleb Atwater, counselor of the American Antiquarian Society for the state of Ohio, illustrated by engravings of ancient fortifications, mounds, etc., from actual survey."

The plates of engravings are excellent as also are the descriptions as to surveys, etc., but limited to the section specified.

Of previous efforts at description it is stated: "Our antiquities have been noticed by a great number of travelers, few of whom ever saw one of them, or, who riding at full speed, had neither the industry, the opportunity, nor the ability to investigate a subject so intricate. They have frequently given to the world such crude and indigested statements, after having visited a few ancient works, or, heard the idle tales of persons incompetent to describe them, that intelligent persons residing on the very spot, would never suspect what works were intended to be described."—Page 109. Anything of "indigested statements," in the above?

Observations follow; one writer, seeing something that suggested amusement, concluded that all the works had been for places of amusement. Another seeing the military features, suggested that all had been of that sort. Still another, seeing indications of sun worship, thought all had been places of worship. If such had been the character of the past efforts, surely the evolution was not so complete as to have attained the near approach to entire success.

But to proceed: "We shall divide these antiquities into three classes: Those belonging to Indians; those of people of European origin; and those of that people who raised our ancient forts and tumuli."—Page 111.

Such qualifications as "it is believed" and "if" are introduced and philosophized upon, thus, "It is believed, that when America was first visited by Europeans, our prairies were too wet for the habitations of men. Besides, if our Indians came from Asia by the way of Behring Straits, they would naturally follow down the great chain of our northwestern lakes and their outlets, nearly or quite to the sea."—Page 113. This is given to account for the population being denser east than it is south or west.

Of the works at Circleville, Ohio, this is said: "As the square fort is a perfect square, so the gateways or openings are at equal distances from each other, and on a right line parallel with the wall. The walls of this work vary a few degrees from north and south, east and west; but not more than the needle varies, and not a few surveyors have, from this circumstance, been impressed with the belief that the authors of these works were acquainted with astronomy. What surprised me, on measuring these forts, was the exact manner in which they had laid down their circle and square; so that after every effort, by the most careful survey, to detect some error in their measurement, we found that it was impossible, and that the measurement was much more correct, than it would have been, in all probability, had the present inhabitants undertaken to construct such a work. Let those consider this circumstance, who affect to believe these antiquities were raised by the ancestors of the present race of Indians. Having learned something of astronomy, what nation, living as our Indians have, in the open air, with the heavenly bodies in full view, could have forgotten such knowledge?"—Page 144.

"The round fort was picketed in, . . . a place to be distinctly seen, where a row of pickets once stood. . . . These works have been examined by the first military men now living in the United States, and they have uniformly declared their opinion to be, that they were military works of defense."—Page 145.

A communication of July 19, 1819, of Doctor S. P. Hildreth, of Marietta, Ohio, is quoted from, describing articles found in a mound there: "Two or three broken pieces of a copper tube, were also found, filled with iron rust. these pieces, from their appearance, composed the lower end of the scabbard, near the point of the sword."—Page 169.

The age of this relic and the crumbling bones accompanying them is thus spoken of: "We say centuries, from the fact that trees were found growing on those ancient works, whose ages were ascertained to amount to between four and five hundred years each, by counting the concentric circles in the stumps after the trees were cut down; . . . besides them, were other trees in a state of decay, that appeared to have fallen from old age. Of what language, of what relation were this mighty race, that once inhabited the territory watered by the Ohio, remains yet a mystery, too great for the most learned to unravel. But from what we see of their works, they must have had some acquaintance with the arts and sciences. They have left us perfect specimens of circles, squares, octagons, and parallel lines, on a grand and noble scale. And unless it can be proved that they had intercourse with Asia or Europe, we now see that they possessed the art of working in metals."—Pages 171, 172.

"I have been told by an eye witness, that a few years ago, near Blacksburgh, in Virginia, eighty miles from Marietta, there was found about half of a steel bow, which, when entire, would have measured five or six feet; the other part was corroded or broken. . . . Mounds are very frequent in that neighborhood, and many curious articles of antiquity have been found there."—Page 176.

Again he says: "The writer was present at its [the mound's.—R. E.] removal, and carefully examined the contents, it contained."—Page 178.

Of one he says: "The handle either of a small sword or a large knife, made of an elk's horn; around the end where the blade had been inserted, was a ferrule of silver, which though black, was not much injured by time. Though the handle showed the hole where the blade had been inserted, yet no iron was found, but an oxyde remained of similar shape and size."

Still another: "A large mirror, about three feet in length, one foot and a half in breadth, and one inch and a half in thickness. This mirror was of isinglass (mica membranacea), and on it a plate of iron, which had become an oxyde; but before it was disturbed by the spade, resembled a plate of cast iron."—Page 178.

The Tower of Babel, the dispersion, and the building of towers in many lands is considered; and, that the earthworks here are similar. (Pages 196–204.)

"Doctor Clark informs us that the bones of horses, as well as human bones, were found in some mounds in Russia. The teeth of bears, otters, and beavers, are found in ours, lying beside the bones of human beings; but no bones of horses have been found to my knowledge."—Page 205.

The similarity of earthworks in the different lands is presented, as also the similarity of relics, as evidence of the one and common origin of man.

In opposition to the idea of a vast number of military works as held by some, the writer guessed there were not more than twenty forts, from the Alleghanies to the Rocky Mountains, and from the Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, and referring to the principal Ohio works, says: "And I by no means believe that even all these were real forts."—Page 207. How is that for a conclusion? Other writers had written recklessly, says this work. But this may be a description of works "yet to be found."

"The skeletons found in our mounds never belonged to a people like our Indians. The latter are a tall, rather slender, straight-limbed people; the former were short and thick. They were rarely over five feet high, and few indeed were six."—Page 209.

As to age of the Mound-builders: "That it was in an early age of the world, we infer from the rude state of many of the arts among them."—Page 215.

The receding of waters of Lake Erie, from three to five miles from a line of works on its supposed former shore, is presented as evidence of great age.

Also this of the principal Ohio works: "Many of these works had gateways and parallel walls, leading down to creeks which once washed the foot of hills, from whence the streams have now receded, formed extensive and newer alluvions, and worn down their channels, in some instances, ten and even fifteen feet."—Page 218.

Again: "Trees of the largest size, whose concentric annual rings have been counted, have, in many instances, as many as four hundred, and they appear to be at least the third growth since the works were occupied."—Page 219.

"To have supported such a great population, the inhabitants must have been considerably employed in agriculture."—Page 223.

"I am disposed to believe, although their houses in some instances, might have been built of stone and brick, as in the walled town on Paint Creek, and some few other places, yet that their habitations were of wood, or that they dwelt in tents; otherwise their ruins would be more frequently met with in every part of this great country. Along the Ohio, where the river is in many places wearing and washing away its banks, hearths and fireplaces are brought to light, two, four, and even six feet below the surface. A long time must have elapsed since the earth was deposited over them."—Pages 225, 226.

Some observations are made in connection with Humboldt's and Clavigero's writings in reference to Peruvians and Mexicans being related to Mound-builders. A supposed idol found on Cumberland River is thought to be a representation of India's chief gods, being triune.

After several presumptions as to the arrival of ancients from Asia, he says: "In the same way, might have arrived persons from Africa and Europe."—Page 248.

After still more speculation this: "Thus we have traced the authors of our ancient works, from India to North, and thence to South, America."—Page 250.

The matter of an "appendix" to the preceding part of the book is thus introduced: "The following extracts from Humboldt's Views of the Cordilleras, etc., are subjoined, to show the correspondence which exists between the teocali of the Mexicans, and the tumuli of the North Americans, the resemblance will be perceived, and is supposed to furnish evidence that they are the work of the same race of people, indicating their improvement in the arts, and their increased population as they progressed from north to the south, and supporting the opinions respecting their origin and final destination, which have been advanced by the author of this memoir."—Page 251.

From Humboldt: "Among those swarms of nations, which from the seventh to the twelfth century of the Christian era, successively inhabited the country of Mexico five are enumerated, the Toltecs, the Cicimecs, the Acolhuans, the Tlascaltecs, and the Aztecs, who notwithstanding their political divisions, spoke the same language, followed the same worship, and built pyramidal edifices, which they regarded as teocallis, that is to say, the house of their gods. These edifices were all of the same form, though of various dimensions; they were pyramids, with several terraces, and the sides of which stood exactly in the direction of the meridian, and the parallel of the place."—Pages 251, 252. Seventeen pages follow from Humboldt on temple pyramidal Mexican structures, also a splendid cut or plate of Cholula.

Central and South American antiquities, are not mentioned at all in the table of contents, and only in an incidental and very limited manner in the work.

The next section of the work gives the state of the Indians then inhabiting Ohio. Then follows "Miscellaneous articles."

Moses Fiske in an article on North Americans says: "But iron was unknown. Those who can manufacture iron, will not cut wood with a flint. Besides, the smelting of that metal requires stone work. And where was the furnace? Where any structure of stone? . . . Not a chimney, . . . oven, . . . bridge, or dam, or well, or cellar, or wall of rocks; no masonry, however rude, either of stone or brick."—Page 302.

Of the ancient people he says: "Nothing satisfactory, as far as I can ascertain, is gathered from the modern Indians about them; though these tribes have been in possession of the country for ages, and are a credulous race, who would rather have exaggerated than impaired any tradition respecting the ancient people."—Page 306.

Doctor Samuel Mitchell concludes: "Malays, Tartars, and Scandinavians contribute to make up the American population."—Page 315.

After other miscellaneous papers sixty-seven pages are devoted to a "Brief account of the caribs, who inhabited the Antiles."—By William Sheldon. The final appendix describes a remarkable cave in Indiana, and errata close the work.

R. ETZENHOUSER.

"YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN."

SERMON BY R. C. EVANS.

Delivered in London, England, June 28, 1903.

Reported by J. D. Howell.

Permit me to read a few words found in the third chapter of the gospel as recorded by St. John:

There was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews: The same came to Jesus by night, and said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him. Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God. Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born? Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again.

There are three thoughts suggested in this reading to which I desire to direct your attention. "Except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God." "How can a man be born when he is old?" "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again."

I feel a deep sense of the responsibility that rests upon me this morning as one commissioned by Divinity to direct men to the sunny way of obedience. Standing in the awful presence of God, I feel that the greatest mission that man has ever been sent to perform is this errand, to act as ambassadors for God, and were it not that I stand under the consciousness that God has authorized me, I would shrink from this heavy burden and fearful responsibility.

It is true it is said, "It is not a vain thing to serve the Lord," and sometimes I think that I enter to a degree at least, into the feelings of that great man Paul when he felt the responsibility resting upon him, and said, "Necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" I feel that in the midst of tradition, mysticism, priestcraft, superstition, and idolatry, we can not be too careful in the presentation of the word, lest we transplant the errors of men—the tradition of the elders—in the holy ground of men's minds, and cause to grow there some plant that our heavenly Father hath not planted. The recognition that every plant that our heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up, and the consciousness that our works may be uprooted unless we work the works of God, should ever be before the servants of God.

We are born into the world under the favor of God, according to the law of God, and the atonement of Jesus Christ has made it possible that infants should stand under the approbation of our heavenly Father and hence he hath said: "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven" and "their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."

The creeds which men have invented, by which they teach that the infant may be improved by baptism, flings a shadow o'er the cross and reflects discredit upon the atonement, and is an insult to the divine plan. But after we have reached the age of accountability, passing from the innocence of childhood, we partake of the element of disobedience and become sinners by actual transgression, and suffer the disapprobation of God, not because of our birth, but because of our actual transgressions.

Now there must be an act of obedience on our part if we are ever brought back into the favor of God. By sin we transgress and depart from God, so that if we are ever brought back into his presence it must be by obedience to the law that he has designed, or we can never be brought back into his presence in this or any other world, so far as we have any knowledge of them revealed to us in the word of God.

Now that seems reasonable to your speaker, for if I by a willful act drive myself from you should I not by my own act of obedience, contrition, and repentance seek your favor again, even in this world?

Why does it seem unreasonable to the world that when man has left God and said by his life, "We will not have you to rule over us," God should have the right to stipulate the terms upon which he will receive the repentant and disobedient child back again into his favor? Why, that seems to me to be very reasonable. Now this is to be brought about by this wonderful term found in the text—the new birth. We have got to be born again. We have lived in such a way since our first birth—the birth of the flesh—that we have met with the disapprobation of heaven and, in order that we may rest under the sunny smiles of our Father, we must be born again.

We may have by our life proven that we have a father who is the Devil. It is well written, “Ye are of your father the Devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do.” We can easily trace our parentage here. It is still true that by your works you are known.

Now there is another class to whom Jesus addressed this language: “When ye pray, say, Our Father who art in heaven.” Now here is the way by which we manifest who is our Father. If we are doing the works of Satan, we have not been born again, and we are of our father the Devil, and the proof lies in the fact that our works attest our kinship. There can be no gainsaying that on the part of any man who believes that record, for they were the words of the Christ who spake as never man spake.

Now, in order to have God as our Father, we must be adopted by and under the new birth. I am not going to take a great while this morning to speak of the birth of the water, but it is perhaps necessary that I should bring it in incidentally at least, and show how this new birth is to be brought about, and a word to the wise will be sufficient, and in the language of another I say, “I speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say.”

When Jesus used the term “born again,” we have every reason to believe that he had some reference to a method that was similar in many regards to the first birth. Now, if some one were to come and tell you that a child had been born into this world last night, and that the natural law of procreation was not put into operation, you would smile at the unfortunate some one and say the poor thing’s brain had been turned by reason of trouble, and you would refuse to believe that that child’s existence had been brought about by a miracle. No, you would say it was the result of a fixed law, and that is just how I feel when men tell me wondrous stories about their peculiar experience at the penitent form or at some stump where they found the Lord, or some place like that. I feel like pitying them sometimes, and there is a feeling of disgust, which comes to me, for the gospel law is so plain as recorded in this word that they ought to know better. The second birth is no more the result of a miracle than is the first birth. We may not understand the operation, and the causes for all those laws, neither do we understand the first birth—both are miracles to the ignorant, and perhaps we are all more or less ignorant with regard to both of these births, and therefore they may appear more or less miraculous, but they are nevertheless the result of well-defined laws emanating from God.

Let us follow the method of the new birth so far as we are able comparing it with the first birth as fairly as I can in this mixed congregation. First, the conditions must be proper in order to conceive of the good seed. You may have heard of and perhaps seen men who have heard this gospel preached for ten or fifteen years, and perhaps, to use a common expression, “It was like so much water poured on a duck’s back,” it made no impression upon them, but finally they come in and they hear the blessed old story that they had already heard over and over again. The good seed at last finds lodgment; conception has taken place. Now, that is true in natural life—you must think it out for yourselves. Conception must produce the natural birth, and so conditions must be proper before conception of the good seed—the word of God—will take place in the brain or heart or mind of man.

It should not be necessary for me to prove to you by a lengthy dissertation here that the good seed is the word of God, for Jesus said the good seed is the word of God. It is said there are many signs of conception but there is but one true sign of conception and that is life—all others may be mistakes. And so in this second birth the evidence of proper conception is our repentance. That is evidence of the genuine conception, and if we have not received the good seed so as to produce repentance, then I may say that we have not properly conceived. Now conception is an evidence of life in that sense, but conception and life occur a long time before birth in the natural world.

We sometimes in the sectarian world have the new birth before repentance—before life. They tell us that faith saves, and that if we have the proper faith then we will begin to repent of our sins but we are born again before we repent.

This is a fallacy and contradictory to the experience of the first birth, and can therefore not hold good with regard to the second birth. Well now, our repentance is an evidence of life, and after life comes birth, and as I can not go fully into an explanation of how birth is brought about, I again remark, a word to the wise is sufficient.

There are three that bear record in heaven, and three that bear witness on earth—the Father, Word, and Spirit in heaven, the water, blood, and spirit on the earth. This is true, as may be decided by all mature minds.

We are born of water. How is that brought about? What does it take to illustrate this new birth in this water? We die to sin and are buried with him by baptism unto death. Now, if we live again we must be born again. Where is the symbol of the new birth? We come from the element of water into the element of air which represents a birth. Sprinkling and pouring never did represent birth, but immersion does. We come from the element of water into the element of air. Here is a correct representation of birth in many ways, and these mature minds before me can fully think that out, and see the strength and beauty of this wonderful truth that fell from the lips of the Master.

That this birth of water has reference to baptism is a fact not only supported by the Bible, but by ancient history and modern church discipline.

In proof of that I may say that the very people who will argue against the essentiality of the birth of water in baptism are they who have baptismal formulas in their "confessions of faith" and disciplines and prayer-books. Every one of them, without a single exception, quotes this passage as being in support of water baptism. Is it not strange, I remark, that in argument they oppose us when we use that passage, and yet when they read their prayers in the baptism of a baby or an adult, they use this very statement in support of their contention that water baptism is an ordinance in the church? Here is an inconsistency—to oppose the passage in argument and yet support it in their church formulas. Yet it is done. I have a clipping here from history which I wish to read:

We bring them to some place where there is water and they are regenerated by the same way of regeneration by which we were regenerated, for they are washed with water (that is, baptized) in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, for Christ says, Except ye be regenerated you can not enter into the kingdom of heaven . . . and that we shall obtain forgiveness of the sins in which we have lived by or in water . . . and this washing (or baptism) is called the enlightening.—Justin Martyr, First Apology, A. D. 140.

When Christ gave to the apostles the commission of regenerating unto God he said unto them, Go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.—Irenæus, A. D. 167.

We after the example of Jesus Christ are born of water; the act of baptism itself is carnal, in that we are plunged in water, but the effect is spiritual in that we are freed from sin.—Moshiem, chapter 1, page 7.

The expression being "born again" was not first used by our Lord in his conversation with Nicodemus. It was well known before that time, and was in common use among the Jews when our Savior appeared among them. When an adult heathen was convinced that the Jewish religion was of God and desired to join therein it was the custom to baptize him first before he was admitted to circumcision, and when he was baptized he was said to be born again, by which they meant that he who was before a child of the Devil was adopted into the family of God and accounted one of his children. This will satisfy every reasonable man who desires only the salvation of his soul.—John Wesley's Sermon on John 3: 5-7, volume 4, page 30.

Now where will the Methodist go. He must either go back on John Wesley or accept the doctrine of baptismal regeneration. While I might proceed further on this historical line, that will suffice.

Now, Jesus did not stop with the water birth alone, neither should his followers, nor do his true followers. It is remarkably strange that some who profess to follow him lay great stress upon this water baptism, and make ridicule, almost bordering on blasphemy, against spirit baptism while others lay all the stress upon spirit baptism and ridicule water baptism, but the signs follow the believer also in this particular, for he that is of God heareth the words of God, and so being of God we quote them, and believe them as they are written. We shall therefore proceed with the examination of this text coupling as Jesus couples the spirit baptism with water baptism to produce the entire birth, and so he said: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God," and to your speaker it seems nothing short of cheek and impudence for any man to draw a line of demarcation through that sentence that was breathed out in one breath. Where in the history of the past has God ever given to man the right to draw a line of demarcation through a sentence made by the Lord Jesus Christ and yet it is done to-day!

Now it is essential to our salvation that we be born of the Spirit as well as the water, and hence the great Apostle said: "Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. A gospel without the Holy Ghost is not worth having.

"Except ye be born again ye can not see the kingdom of God." You can not observe its grandeur, its greatness or structural design, its beauty, its force, its potency, and its power to save. The things of men are understood by those who are governed by natural forces, but things of God are only understood by those who have the spirit of God and if I have strength I will try to show you how the Scriptures plainly show this, for that is all I know about it. Take the disciples of Christ for instance—they had been born of water. They had been closely associated with the Master in his work of three and one half years, and yet although they listened to the words as they fell from his lips, he did not think they were sufficiently qualified to correctly present the doctrine and represent the kingdom of God until they had received of that other Comforter—the gift of the Holy Ghost, the reviving Comforter. Now that Holy Ghost had not been poured out upon them as an abiding Comforter until after the ascension. You may doubt this, but I will just cite one or two texts in support of my position. "If I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you." "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever." "When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth."

Further: "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you;" "and he will show you things to come." "For the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified." What did John mean by saying that he was not yet glorified? Why, that he was not yet glorified with the glory which he had before the world was, until after his resurrection and ascension to sit on the right hand of the Father in the midst of the angelic throng. Having gone there he prayed the Father; the Father sent the Holy Spirit as is recorded in the second chapter of Acts on the day of Pentecost and brought to the remembrance of the disciples the promise that Jesus had made to them, and there in his first sermon to the astonished crowd of Parthians, Medes, Elamites, dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia, Phrygia, Pamphylia, in Egypt, Libya about Cyrene, strangers of Rome, Jews, proselytes, Cretes, and Arabians, Peter said in explanation, This is the very power which you have seen and heard to-day. Did you know that before that the disciples did not comprehend the mission of Jesus. This is a subject in itself, I can only briefly touch upon it this morning. You who have read the record know that Jerusalem was under the shackles of Roman oppression, and they were looking for a deliverer, and several had appeared before Christ claiming to be that deliverer. History supports us in this contention. When Jesus came these disciples had heard of this coming deliverer, and they looked upon him as the legitimate heir to the throne of King David, and I have some reason to believe that some of those men were moved by motives that seemed to say, "We will change our fishermen's coats for the royal purple and become the senators of the new kingdom when the oppressive power of Rome shall be broken down and the kingdom of Israel shall again be organized and the posterity of David shall sit upon a literal throne and establish his kingdom in Jerusalem and round about." And you have only to read the record, and you will find that when Jesus on different occasions entered unobserved into their midst, he found them discussing this very question, Who shall be greatest in the kingdom, and again of a mother scheming for her boys and asking as a favor of Jesus that one should sit on his right hand and the other on the left—she wanted one to be a prime minister in the kingdom of God and the other a minister with a portfolio in an important position. Jesus, we are told, rebuked them, and let me introduce the thought here that it is this desire to be prominent that is injuring the work in these latter days, and men sometimes appear disheartened in their effort to appear prominent and to advertise their greatness, forgetful of the fact that this is not needed. If they are great and the combination of enemies were to do their worst and pile the world on top of them, that would not hurt them. God will find the man who is truly great and he will use him. His enemies may slander him and keep him in the background, but the great God who found Saul and who selected David away down there in the sheepfold, who passed by the Sanhedrin of Jerusalem and went down to the seashore and selected his representatives, will find him. That God still lives and we need never shed a tear because of our being passed by. May we seek to be humble and recognize this truth: "He that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve."

I had a practical exhibition of this true greatness while upon the sea. God's representative did not wash my feet, but he did the closest thing to it. When I was so sick that I could hardly lift my hand, he took my shoes off and laid his hands upon me, and asked the Lord's blessing upon me. And do you want to know the sign of true greatness—it is humility. Those who are truly great are never haughty, proud, and austere, but are approachable, kind of heart, tender and sympathetic. Those fellows who when you ask a question will shout so that you can not tell what they have said are not great. They may be on horseback, but they are going downward.

Now these disciples were troubled a little that way because they did not understand the Lord's mission; and do you remember that when he was crucified the record says they all forsook him and fled. One writer seems to say in contradiction that one stood by him, but the record of Mark 8 is that all forsook him and fled and went back to their fishing nets. There were some who loved him for himself who were not looking for the loaves and fishes and places of prominence, and I draw your attention to one or two of them briefly noticed. These were two women; they loved him. I refer especially to Mary, as I do not want to make my remarks too lengthy. She had been helped in the trials and storm of adversity and lifted up by the kind hand and assured by the sweet voice of Christ. She loved much and was forgiven much, and death could not chill the fire of her love, and when her loved one had been placed in the tomb, we find her in the dawning of the morning approaching from the garden with her friend to do honor to the body of her dead hero. It is said that there were "about one hundred pounds" of embalming mixture used in the embalming or in the burial service and the robing of the body of Jesus. Is not that evidence of kindness and love, more weighty in another direction in that it proves they had no faith nor understanding as to the resurrection.

And so Mary came, it would seem, with more spices to finish the work that loving hands had performed, never dreaming that he had risen from the dead or would do so.

She learned the story by looking into the dark sepulcher and he was not there, but even then she did not imagine that he had risen; it was beyond the wildest fancies of her dreams and with weeping eyes and sorrowful heart she and her friend wended their way through the morning dews and damp grass back to the city. Passing through the garden they beheld a stranger whom they supposed to be the gardener. Now notice, "Tell me where thou hast laid him." No evidence of faith in the resurrection in that remark. No. She but thought that they had just exchanged the place of burial. That was all. The stranger now turned and looked upon her and spoke one word, but that word was sufficient. Doubtless it was the same word that he spoke when there came into her heart the first kind impulse perhaps in her long years of dissipation—her own name, "Mary." No one else had ever spoken that name so sweetly to her hearing as this personage, and she recognized him as the risen Christ. Instantly she would have embraced him, but he said, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God," and the woman hurried off to bear testimony of the resurrection.

Oh, I wish I had more time to talk about this, but, when you are talking about the woman bringing the curse into the world and all that sort of thing, remember that it was a woman who was honored first with the testimony of the resurrected Christ. It was a woman who first told the story of the resurrection to the world. Did the apostles believe her story? No, but her words "seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not." By and by two of them, Peter and John, ran to the sepulcher and peeped in and the angels bade them tell the story of the resurrected Christ. By and by Jesus appeared to them on different occasions. You remember that on one occasion he appeared to two of them on their way to a neighboring village and said to them, "What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad?" And one of them replied, "Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days?" Jesus did not always tell all he knew, and it is a foolish man who does. Trying them he said, "What things?" and they told him about the Christ. You remember the rest—how that he went down to the little town and when he would have passed on, they invited him to stay, and that on his breaking the bread they recognized him. Again, when he appeared in the midst of the eleven he rebuked them because they did not understand that he had risen from the dead and showed them his hands and his feet. These very men could not understand this glittering truth until the facts were adduced to them, and yet they finally died bearing testimony of the resurrected Christ. Now let us from this little talk gather this thought:

We must be born not only of the water, but of the Spirit. We must receive the light that cometh from the Father above and oh, may we all, as sons of God, recognize fully the depth of this sentence, We must be born again. May we strive earnestly to walk the path of obedience until God shall have given us the evidence of the new birth, and that being born again we may receive the sincere milk of the word and by and by masticate the strong meat growing in Christ and in the knowledge of the truth, and finally, having arrived to the measure of the fullness of Christ, having thought like him and spoken like him and acted like him, we may become like him, that when he comes he may see reflected in us himself, is my prayer.

INTERESTING CLIPPINGS.

In the Christian Herald of July 8, 1903, is found the following statement which is interesting because of the fact that the National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association, through its general secretary, John T. Bridwell, has publicly declared that there is no evidence that iron was ever known by the ancient Americans except some meteoric iron:

In a press dispatch from the City of Mexico to the New York Sun, the announcement is made of an extraordinary discovery. In the state of Puebla, a prehistoric city hitherto unknown to antiquarians has been found, and Doctor Leon, the eminent archæologist of the National Museum was sent down by the Mexican Government to examine it. He reports that in a valley surrounded by high mountains he found the city. The ruins consist of a series of pyramids guarded by elaborate trenches and connected for purpose of communication, by wide avenues, which were set off at intervals by sloping acclivities, platforms and staircases. All the pyramids were found to be quadrangular, and to have been with special reference to the cardinal points of the compass. They were constructed entirely of rocks and sandstone cut and laid in juxtaposition, with a surface dressing of small stones worked into cubical forms of very ornamental appearance and laid close together. Great walls with bases much wider than their summits reinforce the pyramids, the tops of which are so wide as to be really streets. On one of the highest of the platforms and at the base of all the pyramids, we found pieces of pottery, which were certainly made before the time of Columbus, and which were evidently the remains of a civilization relatively more advanced than that of the builders of the pyramids. We found also many sculptured scenes in bas relief of prehistoric times. Figures of humans and animals in stone and iron were numerous. Domestic utensils of stone painted rose color were scattered over the ground. Leagues of the mountainous country were covered with ruins. It is strange we should know nothing of the existence of a people so highly civilized as to erect such edifices.

These iron figures meteoric in their nature, like the image that fell from Jupiter at Ephesus, were not men's handiwork.

Taken in connection with Brn. Etzenhouser's and Forscutt's recent articles in regard to Book of Mormon names, the following from a sermon preached by Reverend T. Dewitt Talmage, printed in Christian Herald of May 13, 1903, is valuable to show that the names were not fanciful inventions of Joseph Smith, but real names of the times in which the events are said to have occurred.

Not long since, a professor formerly of Yale University . . . asserted that the present reigning house of Great Britain is descended from King Solomon, through a Hebrew Princess named Tea Tephi, who became the bride of King Fergus, of Ireland and Scotland, from whom descended James VI of Scotland, who became James I of England.

Thus the terminal syllable "phi" in Nephi is sustained by "Paphi" and "Tephi."

In the Christian Standard of July 19, 1902, is the following by T. A. Hall, and coming as it does from those who have opposed the translation by Joseph Smith it is interesting:

There were no better nor more encouraging things said at the Terre Haute Convention than those said concerning our position. The unanimity was splendid. But how can we hope to restore an apostolic church without an apostolic Bible with which to work? It seems to me that the Christian Church will lose an opportunity, neglect a duty and, in the end, suffer a penalty, if she does not improve this most opportune time for doing this. We are abundantly able, numerically and financially to support a clear revision, unhampered by sectarian prejudice or ecclesiastical manipulation.

There are revisions galore, but all of them circumscribed in some way. The existence of these make it so that one by our people need not be looked upon as such a departure. Let them call it a "Campbellite Bible;" we are in a woeful predicament when we shirk duty to avoid epithet.

The religious world needs a clear Bible with which to meet the destructive criticism and the dissipated religious spirit of the present time. The Christian Church itself needs it. The foolish knight enters the lists having previously permitted the adversary to bend his lance. The church needs this also as a means of education. We are getting too much like other people. We need it also as a means of awakening. There must be new issues to inspire new life, lest we settle down beneath the halo of our achievements.

Our missionary boards could not employ two or three men to better advantage than for this. Let the work run in our leading papers subject to criticism before final publication. Thus could be gotten and sifted the ideas of the whole brotherhood.

The above needs no comment. A dozen points in it worth storing for future reference.

"Life is hard enough at best;
But the love that is expressed
Makes it seem a pathway blest
To our feet;
And the troubles that we share
Seem the easier to bear."—Sel.

"I Will be Glad and Rejoice."

It's O my heart, my heart,
To be out in the sun and sing!
To sing and shout in the fields about,
In the balm and the blossoming.
Sing loud, O bird in the tree.
O bird, sing loud in the sky!
And honey-bees, blacken the clover seas;
There are none of you glad as I.

The leaves laugh low in the wind,
Laugh low with the winds at play;
And the odorous call of the flowers all
Entices my soul away.

For oh, but the world is fair, is fair!
And oh, but the world is sweet!
I will out in the gold of the blossoming mold,
And sit at the Master's feet.

And the love my heart would speak
I would fold in the lily's rim,
That the lips of the blossom more pure and meek
May offer it up to him.

Then sing in the hedge-row green, O thrush!
O skylark, sing in the blue!
Sing loud, sing clear, that the King may hear,
And my soul shall sing with you.

Dear Sisters: I thought I would try and contribute my mite to the Column, as I am interested in the welfare of my family, also of others of the fold of Christ. I feel it my duty to try, trusting that God may use my pen to his name's honor and glory and my talent to the upbuilding of his church and kingdom on earth, so that we may hasten the time of Christ's coming, for he will not come until his bride is prepared to receive him.

I have often asked myself the question, Will he find faith on earth? We find it recorded in God's word that if we have faith as a grain of mustard seed we can say to that mountain, Be thou removed and it shall be so. This looks too miraculous for most of us to pay any attention to, for only looking at one side we can not see it clearly, nor understand it. God's word is a mirror. We read in James that if any man be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding himself in a glass. He goeth away and forgetteth what manner of man he is. He needs to look into the glass, God's word, again.

I have before now wanted to see how my hair looked in the back and have stood before a glass holding another one behind my head reflecting my image in the one I was looking in, thus seeing the back of my head clearly. Some may say, Well, what has that to do with removing a mountain or with faith? Just this, we take up the Bible, God's looking glass, and we see things we can not understand. We need more of God's word to reflect the other side. So we take up two other glasses, the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants and hold up here. We have a glass on each of three sides of us, reflecting in one another. Things that seem dark in one are revealed in another, so we can understand perfectly our duty towards God.

In the Book of Mormon it is told how we can cultivate faith. To illustrate, take a grain of mustard seed, a very small seed, plant it, care for it, and see it grow to a large plant, spreading out branches large enough for birds to lodge in. That one seed will produce many more just like it. Then plant all of those and see what a lot there would be all from one seed.

We can cultivate our faith by living aright before God, asking him for such things as we need, trusting him, for he will open up the way before us, that we can do many things that look impossible to us at present. To further illustrate, take a very few mustard seeds, grind them, and put them on the flesh as you have seen done in sickness to relieve pain. How soon it will draw a blister. We, a few of us who have faith, have already blistered sectarianism until we have created a running sore. May we continue to cultivate and use our faith until all corruption will have run out and nothing will be left but the good pure flesh. We see the inflammation such as the anti-Mormon League trying to pull the plaster off, but let them struggle, we have them down and aim to plaster them all over, until the pure in heart have all seen the corruption of false creeds and come to the living fountain of life and have partaken of the pure waters that they may never thirst.

Let us unite our faith, remembering that faith without works is dead, being alone. Be a doer of the word of God and see the glorious victory we shall have over this world of sin and Satan. Dear sisters, pray for me, as I have a family of little boys and need your prayers and the help of divine guidance to raise them aright. I continually pray for wisdom from on high.

Your sister,
LIZZIE BAGGERLY.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The Needs of a Junior Department.

That our present system of grading is incomplete will be readily admitted. Sunday-school workers generally recognize the fact that both girls and boys from the ages of twelve to seventeen are exceedingly hard to interest in the study of their lessons and in class recitation.

If we can have a department especially prepared for them, that will arouse their interest and fix their attention, it will be a step in the right direction.

No system of grading could be complete which did not recognize the successive stages of development in the pupil. There is manifestly a department lacking in the jump from intermediate to senior. True, there is sketched very briefly a line of work for advanced intermediates, but this does not meet the necessities of the case.

Our Sunday-school teachers of to-morrow and members of the priesthood will be found in the junior classes of to-day. How important then that the young should be found deeply interested in this work that the steady growth in grace and knowledge of the things that pertain to salvation may not be interrupted or retarded. Any improvement that shall arouse their interest should be gladly welcomed and earnestly labored for.

The "suggestions for advanced intermediate work" are insufficient. They lack the dignity of position which it is only right to accord to the young manhood and young womanhood of the church.

As to the needs of the junior department, I would suggest a quarterly specially prepared for their use, that a course of daily readings on the lessons be given,—which may be suitable to be read as a scripture lesson at family worship,—that the leading doctrinal points and practical applications be printed in bold-faced type to attract the eye and make it easier to retain in memory.

And I would suggest that the study of the lesson at home be made as much a part of the daily life as the blessing of the food or the partaking of a meal. I have always observed that pupils coming from such families, never come with the lesson unprepared.

Indeed I would observe that

of a junior department is consecrated parents who will interest the children and young people in the study of the lesson because they themselves are interested. How can any one reasonably expect pupils to be interested when parents are not! And right here we have our first obstacle in the way of properly prepared lessons, an obstacle not easily overcome.

It is the pupil who is not required to study at home that we must reach. How to do it is the question. If a boy, is addicted to the cigarette habit I must confess I do not see much hope. But if the pupil only needs an awakening, then we must first study the pupil. Perhaps he has a talent for some special line of study in connection with the lesson upon which he could be induced to make special preparation and present his discoveries to the class.

Another thing I observe is

for the house of God and for the Sabbath Day. The flippant replies of some pupils show a painful lack of interest in the things of eternal life, and an utter lack of reverence for the time, place, and subject. Personal conversation in private, having first sought the help of God in earnest prayer, will often subdue such manifestations. If persisted in, they must be dealt with as wisdom and charity may suggest.

Some of the needs then of a junior department are, first, have a junior department and call it by that name. Then, special helps as may be suggested by conditions existing in that grade; quarterlies with special memory aids by the use of type that will attract the eye; the division of the lesson into topics that may readily be memorized; special lines of work suggested by the teacher; home study encouraged and required by parents; daily readings on the lesson which may be used at family worship.

With earnest, willing, consecrated workers in the Sunday-school, dominated by the Spirit of Christ, with an intense desire to see the children and young people qualifying themselves for useful work in the church and in the world; with parents equally interested; with the study of the lesson in the homes as part of the daily life, we must move forward to gratifying success.

Dear teachers, dear parents, brethren and sisters in the Lord, our hands are upon the plow. Let us not look back but forward. "Let the solemnities of eternity be upon us." Let us with determined hearts and unwavering minds grasp every opportunity for improvement, step promptly forward as each succeeding step is presented and with mind and heart and soul occupy till our Lord comes.

IDA STEWART.

Letter Department.

ADELAIDE, South Australia, July 23.

Editors Herald: It is now nearly one year since we reached Australia, and some facts learned during that time may not be amiss to your readers. The sending by the church to this mission of the missionaries gave a renewed impetus to the work as the people seemed to realize the more that the church was after all solicitous for the mission's welfare.

Some debates were on the tapis on arrival and the author had been consigned to the task of the forensic battle as the church representative. Mr. Bell of the Christadelphians had consented to further debate in Sydney, but since we met at Saint Mary's we have heard nothing from him.

In Melbourne we met Mr. Blair on two occasions and some late correspondence has passed between us with a view to further discussion, but a disagreement as to the wording of the proposition in behalf of our church arising, has opened a breach beyond healing. Since debating with him, thirty have been baptized in Melbourne and the work there has a prestige that presages a continuous growth. We would have been glad to have once more measured forensic swords with Mr. Blair for the work's sake, but when it comes to the question of his manner both as a debater and writer it is certainly anything but enviable. He threatened me with publishing an exegesis of all my scriptural quotations and the "corruption" of both the Reorganized and original church if I did not word my affirmation as he wished it. I did not get scared, and his last letter, to which I do not expect to reply, was replete with vituperation.

The condition in New Zealand became such that Brn. Tucker and Hanson had to hire a house and buy food. On account of the low state of the finances in the hands of Bishop Lewis, largely incident to the drought, Bro. Butterworth and I thought it much better to bring Elder Hanson to Australia, where we were very short for help, and thus save expense as well as give to us needed help. The change has proved to be a good one for the work in Australia, but Bro. Tucker is left alone and under the conditions needs both the prayers and financial sympathy of all. His address is Kaitangata, Otago, New Zealand.

Bro. Butterworth is building a home in Geelong, Victoria, and has recently baptized three there. He is likely to live some time yet in Australia but I think should be in attendance at the next General Conference. His health is much improved since I first saw him last September.

Bro. Jones and the writer are making a house to house visit, distributing tracts and papers and entering into conversation if we can find people willing to talk. We meet with rebuffs as well as pleasant features but it is the only successful way to reach all the people.

Bro. Jones will resume street preaching as soon as the weather will permit and on Sunday afternoon we go to the Botanic Park; we have both a large and attentive hearing. On Sunday night the hall is well filled and there will certainly be an ingathering. We have walked many a weary mile to save car fare and in this, though somewhat frail in body, Sr. Jones is not one whit behind. Bro. Jones' expenses, though careful as he knows how to be, have exceeded his receipts. If any of the philanthropic feel a desire to kindly remember him a money order drawn on Adelaide, South Australia, and sent to J. H. N. Jones, 47 King William Street, Kent Town, South Australia, will be used in the interests of the gospel.

In Melbourne Bro. Mackie is making a diligent worker and there the branch now numbers nearly one hundred and they badly need a chapel. They already have some thirty pounds toward this and are doing what they can toward such an end. They have to pay two dollars and forty cents every Sunday for hall rent, beside a great many people will look upon a church, meeting in a hall, as having no standing. "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." Any one wishing to assist in so worthy an object may send to William Mackie, 189 Lennox Street, Richmond, Victoria, Australia. There would not be the same necessity to make this appeal only for the drought that has prevailed and brought hard times. The Saints here are a financially willing people all over Australia.

In Sydney Bro. Wells looks after missionary interests and edits the Standard, many copies of which are being read. The plan adopted by Bro. Jones is to call for them again and thus keep them on the move. The Australian Saints certainly appreciate the manner in which the American subscribers have come to the aid of the mission paper.

Bro. Barmore is located in the Newcastle District, where more than sixty thousand inhabitants reside. He is doing a good work. Bro. Hanson is further up the coast and has baptized a number there while Brn. Avery and Haworth will work still further northward with horse and buggy. The death of Bro. Imrie has removed from our midst a noble young man.

My stay in this city will soon be at an end; thence to Geelong, Melbourne, and Mount Eden, Victoria; thence to Sydney and various points in New South Wales and possibly Brisbane, Queensland, with a start for home on the 2d or 9th of November, likely.

As I review the work I am satisfied that the President received divine intimation as to my coming to the mission, for, with no thought of even the nature of a boast, I am satisfied that I was needed. One hundred one have been baptized since our landing in Australia with prospects fair for others to come in soon. After earnest prayer over the matter, I feel free to return home at the time appointed and should any feel that the stay is not sufficiently prolonged all I ask is for them to try the experiment under like circumstances and then see what the decision would be.

I shall take home many a pleasant remembrance of my stay in Australia and hope that all done may redound to the glory of God and his work. So far as I am able to determine my feelings in the matter I have a conscience void of offense toward both God and man and feel in a deeper sense than ever before the necessity of being humble. The length of silence is offered in extenuation for the length of this letter. Any one wishing to communicate will please write G. P. O., Sydney, Australia, in time to reach me by November 1.

In bonds,

J. W. WIGHT.

FREMONT, Indiana, August 19.

Editors Herald: We have been very busy this conference year thus far. Have occupied mostly away from the branches, in fact I am heartily in accord with Bro. Peak's idea of the local officers caring for the branch affairs officially, but missionaries are needed to assist at least in pushing the work into new fields, as well as dispensing the word in the branches where they see the need and are in harmony with the branch officers; also to encourage the branch officers to push the work in the way of preaching, exhorting, and officiating in all ministerial work connected with the branch.

This year we have endeavored to work along this line. We have had appointments at two different places miles apart nearly every Sabbath, and have been nobly assisted by our young Bro. William Shaub, he having filled appointments at the Farr Schoolhouse, seven or eight miles away from the branch, also at California, Michigan, which enabled me to open up the work near Reading, Michigan, where we have met with a great deal of opposition from the creed-bound sects.

Bro. I. M. Smith filled two appointments for us while he was with us, enabling us to follow up the work in the new opening near Reading, Michigan. We go there again next Sunday.

Last Sunday we met with the Saints at California, Michigan, and had an excellent meeting, although the number was few. We occupied some time, then we changed the order of the meeting, and all testified to the goodness of God, and their determination to hold on to the end.

The work in many places in this district is solidifying, the lines are being drawn between the earnest and the careless ones. Some are moving along with the work while others are lagging. The breach seems to widen and all are made manifest.

Elder J. Emerick, our branch president, is a good man, patient, forbearing, and enduring, devoting his all to the cause he loves.

Bro. O. H. Storey, priest of the branch, is an earnest, energetic, man, clean in word, in action, and in person, and is possessed of good presiding ability. He is Sunday-school superintendent and looks after the Sunday-school work and also assists all the other officers of the branch and all love and appreciate his assistance. I hope all will hold on to the rod of iron, the word of God, and be saved in his kingdom.

The Saints have been prospered this year, as a rule, in this country. Crops have been quite good; some heavy storms, but not much damage done. Harvest and threshing have been hindered some on account of heavy rains. Hands were hard to find to help gather the crops, so we donned overalls and helped some, but with all hindering causes we have only missed one appointment this conference year, although our appointments were miles apart.

Bro. D. B. Teeters, the branch teacher, reports doing what he can to push the work and keep the members in line of duty and have peace and harmony prevail. He is very zealous in his work.

Floyd Smith, the branch deacon, is taking hold of the work with renewed courage and we hope and trust he may do much good in his official labor. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

Your brother,
G. A. SMITH.

MINATARE, Nebraska, August 17.

Saints and Friends: September 17, 1903, has been set as the time of commencement for our first reunion at Minatare. Of its duration I can not say, doubtless it will depend upon the interest taken which should be good. All are invited to attend regardless of their social standing in life. It is our desire that the reunion may be highly spiritual. All should seek to make it a success by the spirit of humility and godly fear, lightening one another's cares and burdens all that is possible and thus make the occasion mutually profitable and long to be remembered. Now to make it thus you will understand that fine or costly clothing or raiment will not be an essential feature; in fact, we would rather have you obey God's word and be plain and unassuming.

Now should any come from the east by railroad, please remember we have but three regular trains a week coming west, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. We will be at or near Minatare with our services.

When last heard from our missionaries with the two tents in Western Nebraska and the Black Hills were doing finely and we truly feel the work is advancing. We have a great desire that it should and greatly regret that we are now kept out of the mission field for a while, as we enjoyed our six weeks tour about North Platte City and the Sand-hills, on which trip we had the great pleasure of baptizing and confirming six and blessing five children, administering to the sick, etc.

WATER VALLEY, Arkansas, August 15.

Editors Herald: Bro. Bozarth used to say a great deal about the "battle-scarred veterans." I look like one. As the natives here say, "The ticks and fleas are a sight on earth this time," and my wounds are numerous. They are only skin deep, though, and soon disappear, but others are inflicted in their stead. As long, however, as I can keep the banner of our King Jesus afloat I can well afford to bear my light afflictions. I can frequently get these little enemies of the flesh under my nail, but the enemies of the cross are too bulky for me. I frequently get hold of them with the gospel and when I apply the fire of the Spirit, how they do contort!

Weeds were the only enemy our husbandmen had time to fight during the early spring; so the Devil had free swing, but the people were too much engrossed to be influenced, and he, like the begotten sons of God, had to abide his time for the strife. We must have the people between us to make it interesting. When I went to the city of Jonesboro he had preceded me there. Every church, tabernacle, gospel shed, and even their groves and superannuated seats were impudently refused me and diligently guarded against God's message. I commenced preaching in a little grove in the suburbs to respectable congregations but a lady official of the Holiness band commanded me to move on, for thus the spirit had bidden her do. She acknowledged that she knew nothing of our doctrine. I replied, "I will quit your commons, but God commands you to 'prove all things,' therefore, the spirit that bids you close your doors and your ears is from the wrong source."

The postmaster gave me the use of another grove, the street commissioner hauled me lumber for seats, and I continued preaching nightly.

Comes now the Culpepper's great tabernacle that accommodates two thousand people, with electric lights, soul-charming music, first class singing, a more diminutive plan of salvation,—all on a popular platform. Why should not the people boycott my humble quarters?

I was invited to preach next week at Keller's Chapel, four miles southeast of the city, so I helped my son rebuild his bake oven, saving him a neat sum of money. Two Baptists reverends of the city went to Keller's Chapel and prefaced my effort to be made there, advising the people not to hear me. Some of the people received it as a travesty upon their intelligence. I preached to good houses nightly, walking both ways, and worked during the day making my son some shipping boxes. At the end of the week as a matter of reciprocity I was invited into a fifteen-dollar suit of summer clothes.

I next preached three weeks to a few interested souls at Birell. We resorted to various methods to induce the inquisitive populace out to hear for themselves. I learned that they were divided and wrought up over the nature of hell, so we published a program for August 2 and 9, advertising an illustrated lecture on hell, and among other features of the program all were invited to ask questions. On the 9th six preachers, Advent, Baptist, and Christian, kept me answering questions for ninety minutes after I had preached an hour. Everything passed off in splendid order.

It is wonderful indeed how vegetation is growing; one month ago cotton was very backward and from one half to two thirds of a crop was all farmers dared to hope for. Now they are topping it to check the growth. Fields are now profuse with blooms and squares and bolls. A bloom opens this morning a clear, fresh white; to-morrow it is a pinkish red; the third morning it drops off, and a "square" stands in its place; and on the twentieth morning the "boll" is full grown. Merchants are offering a big price for the crop in advance; farmers are jubilant; there is a strong demand for whisky, and an opening for preaching the gospel. I am to begin at this place to-night.

The wine-colored coleus plant, raised in hotbeds in the North will soon be considered indigenous in the bottoms here. Whole farms are profusely embroidered with it. It is considered a nuisance. I think I have seen it four feet high. The little Japan clover is surely a Godsend to the Ozarks. Many places that were naked a few years ago are now beautifully carpeted with a nutritious growth, and it is spreading rapidly.

ENTIAT, Washington, July 24.

Editors Herald: I am one of the isolated Saints. I have the promise of the schoolhouse if an elder could come this way. A preacher here says he has bought books and studied to find the key of the kingdom but has not been able to get the right light on it. I believe a good work could be none here, although the people do not care to talk with any one about the church.

I hope that I can live so as not to bring any reproach on our church and that I may be found worthy to meet our blessed Jesus when he comes to claim his own. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may be able to raise my little children aright so that the evilness of this world may not lead them off from the path of our Lord Jesus Christ.

In the one faith,
BERTHA KENT.

Dear Herald: Just closed an eight-day discussion with Brad Giddens, of the Campbellites. Bro. J. B. Graham was with me during the conflict. We feel the cause of truth was advanced, and are rejoicing in the mercies of the Lord.

HARDINSBURG, Indiana, August 18.

Editors Herald: I have been visiting some of the Saints at Dry Run and Chestnut City, and have enjoyed myself very much with them. I have been in company with Bro. Charles Harp for a week and have been holding meetings at a union chapel in a new place with good interest as the people knew me and had asked me to come there and hold meetings with them. Bro. Charles and I have had a fine time this week and he has made some friends during his meetings.

There was a two-day meeting at our branch and Brn. G. Jenkins, J. P. Sappenfield, W. C. Marshall, and C. Harp were with us. I thank God for the blessed gospel that he has revealed to his Saints in the latter days.

Last night we held meeting in Hardinsburg, near where we live. It has been hard to get to preach here, although the people have opened the schoolhouse and let us occupy it. Bro. G. Jenkins preached last night and Bro. Marshall will preach to-night if the Lord will. I hope that some good will be done there. Saints, pray for me that I may become an instrument in the hands of God in carrying the gospel to the people, and that I may be the means of accomplishing much good in helping to build up his kingdom.

I have been striving to live aright. I love the Saints wherever I find them, and I love to read the letters from the Saints in all parts of the world where the gospel has reached them. May the Master bless all the Saints everywhere. Saints, pray for me and the welfare of all God's servants everywhere. My desire is to live aright.

SPRINGERTON, Illinois, August 18.

Editors Herald: The writer and Elder F. M. Slover held meetings in Springerton last week. One was baptized by Bro. Slover and others are ready for baptism. Last Friday Bro. Slover went to Bellair, Illinois, where he is to engage in a four-day debate with a Christian minister. On Saturday the president of the district came and remained over Sunday. Sunday night I was invited by members of the New Light Church to preach for them three miles west of Springerton, where our people were refused the use of the house a few years ago. I found Brn. Spurlock and Davis had gotten up quite an interest, having some just about ready to obey the gospel, among the number a Christian preacher. We are all busy in this field and are encouraged to press onward in the conflict.

LEHIGH, Indian Territory, August 13.

Dear Saints: We started from Fairbury, Nebraska, to this place about six weeks ago following the prompting of the good Spirit that we believed was leading to other fields. While my wife and I were permitted to do some good work at Fairbury the time had come when we could do more work somewhere else. After crossing the broad wheat-fields of Kansas we came to Indian Territory. At the cattle quarantine we had to dispose of a fine jersey cow we started with.

I preached the farewell sermon at Fairbury in the fair-ground to a large audience and with good liberty. Met with Coalgate Saints last Sunday; found them alive to the work, preparing for district reunion, and looking forward to conference work, next month. Think the change will be good for us and we hope to live so it will be profitable to the work of the Lord. Our motto is to move on into the great harvest-field with the workers while it is day, for the light may not always shine for the Gentile. May God bless the Saints in their efforts to open the way for the priesthood to magnify their holy calling to the completion of the work!

Yours for good,

A. J. MYERS.

HEARNE, Texas, August 9.

Editors Herald: We feel thankful for the many refreshing letters which your paper brings to us. We are striving to live up to the laws and commandments of God, and are trying to be Saints indeed and in truth, but there are so many things to try us. We do not intend to give up the ship as long as we can see the top of the mast.

We are having good meetings since Bro. Harp has come. Perhaps some of the Saints in Florida will be glad to learn that we are still alive and in the faith of the gospel and trying to fight a good fight of faith. We are getting quite old and will have been married fifty-two years the twenty-first of this month.

RIDGETOWN, Ontario, August 11.

Dear Editor: I have been laboring in Ridgertown, Ontario, for some few weeks. Some interesting experiences have been realized which have brought an increase to the branch in number, and we believe we can truthfully say in spirituality also. There have been three baptized. The first was a young man about twenty-eight years old. He had heard preaching by different men called of God and this caused him to consider his ways on the Lord's Day of July 10. When he came to the meeting-house of the Saints here at Ridgertown he informed a brother that his object in coming that evening was to learn what there was for him to do to get salvation. The writer was the speaker of the hour. While the opening prayer was being offered, I prayed for light and guidance and was led to turn to Acts 16: 29, 30 to these words, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved." I was greatly blessed with the spirit of my calling and brought forth scripture from Paul, Jesus, and Peter, proving in the mouth of these three witnesses that something had to be done. After I was through, the young man said to Bro. Ellis, priest of the branch, that he thought somebody had told me what he had come for; but had I heard not a word of him, and he was a stranger to me; but the Spirit of God was with us. The young man left the meeting under deep conviction. His home was about five miles out in the country. He started to go, got some distance when he stopped and pondered; at last he came back and stayed all night. I had a long talk with him, showing to him the outline of the latter-day work, and he asked for baptism and that evening I baptized and confirmed him.

It is very encouraging to see a few here and a few there coming into the true fold of God. A young woman was baptized by the writer on the 23d of July, and I baptized one of the Sunday-school children August 1 at the Ridgertown Sunday-school picnic.

The beloved president of the mission did not arrive in time for the outing, but we enjoyed his presence on the following Sunday, when he gave us an able discourse in the evening on the necessity of self-denial on our part in order to be true disciples of Christ.

LOGAN, Utah, August 12.

Editors Herald: Since I last wrote to you I have labored in the Rocky Mountain Mission as per appointment. Also, with the consent of Bro. I. N. White and the president of the Independence Stake, I labored for a few days among friends and relatives in Independence and Kansas City, Missouri. Baptized four at the latter place. Have visited and labored in the Snake River Valley, Teton Basin, Malad Valley, and the Bear Lake Valley in Idaho, also Cache Valley in Utah. These valleys cover or extend over a large scope of country in Eastern Idaho and Northern Utah. In order to reach these places and perform the labors necessary to be done I have traveled with team more than a thousand miles in the mission.

Bro. S. D. Condit and I have labored together, most of the time thus far, and we expect to continue to labor together until the convening of the Idaho District conference to be held at Hagerman, Idaho, September 12 and 13.

Elders H. N. Hansen and Swen Swenson accompanied me to the Bear Lake Country, Idaho, where we held an elders' court, and also did some preaching, after which we came to Logan, Utah, where we have since been preaching on the streets for a week and expect to continue over Sunday. We are having good attendance, good attention, and some opposition at our meetings, and hope that good will result from our efforts here.

Elders J. H. and S. D. Condit and myself did some street preaching in Blackfoot City, Idaho, and so far as I am able to judge of street preaching I believe it will prove a success during the summer months.

The work is onward in this part of the Rocky Mountain Mission and the interest is increasing. So we will try to accomplish all the good that we can by united efforts to break down the mountains of prejudice that exist among the people, and by the assistance of the Holy Spirit lead the people back to the old paths, wherein is the good way, that they may find rest to their souls. A few are rendering obedience to the gospel and others are believing. Since General Conference I have baptized six in Idaho, and we hope that many more will believe and obey the gospel of Christ before this conference year shall close.

With kindest regards to all God's dear children,

In the faith,

A. J. LAYLAND.

SAULT STE MARIE, Ontario.

Editors Herald: I saw a letter in the HERALD some time ago from Elder Goodwin, inquiring for Saints in American Soo. There are some there I know, but can not say how many. I expect our work to move forward here now. There are thirteen members of the church here at present, mostly heads of families, and all from Ontario. I expect to remain here for a couple of weeks, then on to Saint Joseph Island, and then probably back to Manitoulin Island.

The Saints here were pleased to see me drop in, and I have been holding services nightly from house to house and occasionally in a hall. Rent is very high and our great need here is a tent, and I trust it may be possible to have one next summer.

The "Soo," as it is generally called, will certainly be a great city in the near future, when its natural resources develop. But a few years ago the population was only a few hundreds; now it numbers about fifteen thousand.

I am feeling well and hopeful of much good being done when our work gets fairly before the people.

Your brother in Christ,

G. C. TOMLINSON.

To "Over the Border."

Editors Herald: We do not feel called upon to make a personal rejoinder to the criticisms of the brother "From Over the Border," in the Herald for August 12, 1903, since the Religio Quarterly lesson referred to does not enjoy a monopoly of his attention, but we all come in for a "dressing down," all of us Americans—there it goes again, our national egotism cropping out; calling ourselves Americans, when we mean we are citizens of the United States. As if there were no other Americans!

But is it national egotism in us, or is it a term of convenience to which we resort because of necessity, that we speak of ourselves as Americans? If the name United States would gracefully conform to personal adaptation like Canada, Canadians, Mexico, Mexicans, we should not be compelled to speak of ourselves in such a way as to make the residents of Patagonia, Alaska, etc., think we wanted the cake all to ourselves. So have charity for us, please, ye brethren of neighboring nations, in our extremity, for you see we have to admit that in one thing, at least, your advantages are ahead of ours.

But to the point—"this land;" now honestly, Miss Editor, what did you mean by that? The brother concludes that the United States, only, is referred to, and lest some who have not read the lesson may think that this is the idea conveyed, we wish to call attention to the mistake the brother makes. He has failed to observe that the lesson deals with a general thought, and a specific one; on one hand, "this land" (quoting the language of the text); on the other, the specific mission of a particular nation on "this land."

The brother asks the question, "Whom do the compilers mean by 'this land?'" and answers it, "Why certainly the United States exclusively, for in the comment, page eighteen, quoting, 'And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles,' is applied to the United States in an unmistakable manner." If the brother had been a little more thorough in his examination and noticed the continuation of the treatment of the subject, there is given on page nineteen an account of the vain attempt in Mexico, at one time, to encroach upon the liberty of "this land," and Mexico is not in the United States. The application in the lesson in reference to "this land" (remember we use the language of the text) is made still broader than the limits including the North American division. Referring to the Monroe Doctrine it was shown that it protects the liberty of not only the United States, but of the "American continents" (we have recently had an illustration of the fact in the Venezuelan affair) and the observation is made, "Thus every door is shut against monarchy ever gaining a foot-hold on these continents."

"But why did you give the United States, only one of the nations on 'this land' the prominence you did in that lesson?" may be asked. We reply, we did not do so; the text and associated texts did that. It is our business to skip nothing, but to take the text as it comes, and treat it frankly. If the United States is indicated by latter-day revelation as the most influential of the nations of "this land" affecting God's purpose in modern times, we can not help it, neither can we help it because inspired Book of Mormon writers designated the United States as the nation that was to be chiefly instrumental in establishing liberty upon "this land," and preparing the way for it to be a Zion land.

As to the church being an "international" institution, the gospel being for "all mankind and all nations;" that "the faithful Hindoo has as many rights" "as an Ephraimite who may live in the very heart of Zion"—why all that argument is unnecessary, and directed at an assumed supposition. An object of our lessons has been to impress the world-wideness of God's love for mankind; to emphasize that he has destined the gospel should go to all lands. In the particular lesson under discussion it was sought to explain how the Almighty has been shaping circumstances to bring about this purpose, in the choosing of a nation to set an example of political and religious liberty, by whose candle other nations should, and have been lighting their tapers, and freedom to think and act according to the soul's convictions, the forerunner of the gospel, should spread in all the world. We can not help it because a special nation was appointed to be the pioneer instrumentality in that work, but the Quarterly has endeavored to show that the benefits were for all mankind; the design, to bless the world.

The brother charitably remarks that "No injury was intended to any one by our good, patriotic compilers," and we have taken no offense at the brother, nor thought that unkindness lurked in anything he has said. But upon that question of patriotism we have our views. We regard national patriotism as commendable in its place, but it seems to us that Latter Day Saints have subscribed to a higher patriotism; that their love for the land of their birth should be second to their love for the consecrated soil upon which the King of kings will establish the reign of reigns, the city of refuge, the haven of peace for all earth's tried and true ones; that to this place the eye of every Saint would turn, and the longings of every saintly heart go out, that above a Saint's pride in the land of his nativity should be his love for the home of Zion, were it to be located in the United States, England, Germany, or Russia.

We are glad that our "over the border" writer has not failed to notice some things by which "American brethren" (did he mean United States brethren?) have given evidence of our (pardon us, the United States folks') "impartiality." Why bless you, we have the friendliest feelings for not only our neighbors "over the border," but our brethren and sisters on other shores. Our own father is a full-blooded Englishman, was born on the other side of the "briny deep." Our mother, even, is not entirely a Yankee, if she was born in the state of New York, and our—we'll not mention that, though. But there, now! Accuse us of excessive "Americanism," will you? or we suppose United Statesism was meant, and we shall not take any advantage if it were a slip, and claim all the Americanism—any more.

LOUISE PALFREY.

MACON, Missouri, August 15, 1903.

NANTYGLO, Wales, August 10.

Editors Herald: We were glad to learn that Bro. William Lewis and wife arrived safely at their home. We feel the loss of their fellowship; however, we hope that Bro. Lewis' health is improving. Bro. John Davis, another active laborer, has left us to labor in the Birmingham District. With reluctance we part with those in whose company we have enjoyed divine presence, beside their efforts for the spread of the work.

Bro. E. B. Morgan and wife have located in Cardiff with a view to spreading the knowledge of the restored gospel to some of the thousands that are in that large town. There are now just three missionaries in Wales, two English speakers and one Welsh speaker, Bro. J. G. Jenkins, with whom I have labored a little at Merthyr, Aberdare, and Pontlothyn. I am of the opinion that we were all right in those places, because some are Welsh-speaking, others English. Bro. John is a good preacher in his language; he is listened to with respect, and credited as regards to the way he handles the gospel. I wish especially in the summer months, that we were out two by two, as it is kind of tough to preach alone on the streets. I am not afraid but rather nervous until I start to talk and then I am seemingly at home. The most encouraging feature in Wales is the outdoor work, as there is no difficulty in gathering a crowd together. One of the best places for attention that I have been in is Pontlothyn.

Near New Tredegar where some years ago there existed a large branch, Bro. James Evans is doing his best, tracting, and at times preaching alone on the street. He is a priest and belongs to the Nantyglo Branch. Surely the Lord will bless his efforts. I try to remember that there is a sowing and a reaping time. My grandmother says that the people of Wales are much prouder now than when the gospel was first preached to them. Further, the work has practically died out for lack of missionaries; I met one aged sister who told me that she had not seen a Saint for nearly seventeen years.

We are hopeful of good results at Llanhilleth, street preaching has drawn all the hire of that small town to amalgamate in opposing us. I had been there alone but fortunately when the ministers came to warn the people concerning us, Bro. Davis was on hand, and we exchanged views with the Calvinistic minister who, after failing to incite the people in regard to what we preached, said it was "an hellish lie," all our claims to the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. The Church of England curate wanted to have a say so I told him if he did then I would. He scored for truth once and said to the Methodist Bro. Clarke, "We are dealing with eternal truths, the word does say that we must be born of water and the Spirit." We agreed to meet them the next night but none of the ministers came. So we were on the scene of battle as arranged and an audience of about four hundred was awaiting us. We kept at it until nearly ten o'clock from half past seven, preaching and then discussing. This sort of thing gives courage to those who are inclined truthward. I was glad to learn that the people were asking what was the matter with these reverends, as they could preach on the square as well as we could, but why did they come out when we were there? Ah, they wanted to show that they considered themselves the guardians of the people's consciences.

We have made some friends there, besides those we had in a Mr. Cousins and his family. One lady inquired if I had a place to sleep, that if I had not there was place for me at her home. Such talk as that inspires one of what God is able to do for his servants. Others said that what we say, is practical common sense; and, of course, there were those who said it was bosh. Our hearts were made glad at the effects; it caused them to be reasoning until eleven o'clock each night.

Permit me to say that we enjoyed the visit of Presidents Smith and Evans, also Bro. Rushton, to Nantyglo. We believe their presence and what they said have created a good impression for themselves and the work. The press said little only that of late an opportunity had been afforded to hear the Latter-day Saints' gospel. They failed to see that it was also the former-day saints' gospel.

Our little band of Saints here have been through the furnace, through the heat, underneath the hammer's beat. Bro. Lewis Oakey has been idle over twelve months, having met with an accident in the mines. My father has had two accidents in about twelve months, and my brother, Alfred, about twenty years of age, strained his abdominal muscles, but he is by God's blessing gaining. It is a loss to have these brethren down, as a great loss is suffered by the work financially. Saints, pray for their recovery. We ask this because of long trial and suffering.

In the hope of eternal life,

55 King street.

THOS. JONES.

LLANELLY, South Wales, August 12.

Editors Herald: Some will think I am neglecting my duty in not writing for your columns ere this. We started from Lucas, Iowa, the 25th of May. Quite a little crowd of Saints came with us to the depot. Father Watkins, (though nearly eighty years of age) was among the number and Bro. John R. Evans with unabated interest continued with us until we mounted the cars. Many thanks to the Saints of Lucas and Cleveland for their kindness, encouragement, and substantial aid. After thirty years of close association with the Saints of these two branches, fraternal and kindred ties have grown strong, and we were made to feel sorrowful at parting from those who have been our fathers and true brethren in gospel work. However, it is a Spanish proverb, "We meet to part." Bro. and Sr. Phillips accompanied us to Chariton. After parting from them we tried to become reconciled to the fact that we were travelers among travelers, but seeing others weeping when parting from loved ones we felt to say,

"Blest be the tie that binds

Our hearts in Christian love."

We called at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and reached New York in the forenoon of the 29th, having traveled in each case by limited express trains from Lucas to New York. We visited the noble ship Campania and were delighted to see so good a prospect of being carried over three thousand miles over the mighty deep. She is a reserved ship. The British government pays an annuity to the Cunard Steamship Company as a consideration. In case of war ships so built and reserved are brought into immediate service for the transportation of troops and supplies.

While in New York City (not with a view of advertising) we stayed at the Hughes House, 322 West Twelfth Street, where we found good treatment at low rates.

We went to ship at half past seven o'clock on the morning of the 30th. When we got close to ship everything seemed to be going the same way, and somewhat hurriedly, too. However, they were not paired off as exact as we see the emigrants in the pictures of Noah's ark. That great ship, with all the preparation that has to be made, and carrying tons of mail and nine hundred fifty passengers, was only sixteen minutes behind the scheduled time of starting. Going at a speed of eighteen miles an hour, we soon had lost sight of "Old Glory."

Next day, Sunday, I attended church at half past ten. Edward C. Pagett, the dean of Calgary, conducted the services, which were very solemn and impressive. The meeting was in the first cabin, or saloon dining-room. It would accommodate four hundred people. The wreaths of flowers and other decorations were so beautiful I am unable to describe them. A nobler looking lot of men I never saw than those that attended that morning service.

Nothing unusual occurred on the voyage, except that a good big collection was made for the widows and orphans of deceased sailors. There were religious services among passengers of the third class nearly every day. I felt too weak and indisposed to take any part in them. We received and sent messages by Marconi's wireless telegraphy, and those received were posted up for all the passengers to read. How it is possible to communicate with stations hundreds of miles away and going at the same time at a speed of twenty-five miles an hour, is more than the ordinary mind can comprehend or explain. And to communicate with other ships in mid-ocean. We received messages from Steamship Lucania.

Upon our landing we made for Manchester. Attended services at the east branch on Sunday, the 7th. I gave them a little talk in the evening. They are working with commendable zeal. We left our baggage and went up to Newcastle-on-Tyne to see what is to me one of the most sacred spots on earth, my mother's grave, and although it has a Scotch granite at the head and a beautiful weeping-willow at the foot, it afforded but little consolation. Newcastle is a great city. We met Bro. Broadway of Australia there. He is working, though all alone, with commendable zeal, and whatever the misunderstanding between himself and his Australian brethren may be, the quicker an adjustment is had and his disabilities removed the better.

We visited Mr. Gimblett and family, relatives of Bro. and Sr. Wilkinson, of Lucas, Iowa, who gave us a very cordial reception. They are strong Methodists, but their hearts are moved somewhat toward the latter-day work. We made our visit short for we felt anxious to get to our mission field.

Cardiff was our first point to make. We were glad to meet Bro. John Davies, J. W. Rushton, William Lewis, his wife and daughter Ruth, there. We had a little America of our own. But the spirit of secession or love of duty soon got us divided. Bro. Lewis had a very strange appearance and complained of feeling sick. We felt sorry for him. If he would exert himself by preaching or otherwise he suffered from it. He left Cardiff for America July 2. He has the best wishes of the Saints in Wales, and his labors were appreciated. We were present when Presidents Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans visited Cardiff, and think their efforts were entitled to much larger audiences.

Quite a little crowd of the Saints and the missionaries of the Welsh Mission attended the European Mission conference held at Leeds the 1st to 3d of August. I was very much pleased with the general appearance of the Saints, and a more kind-hearted and sociable gathering I never met. There certainly is a brighter day ahead for the English Mission.

The conference expressed great pleasure and satisfaction at having two of the Presidency present, and especially because they were permitted to see Bro. Joseph. One old brother expressed himself as feeling like Simeon of old when he was permitted to look upon the holy child Jesus.

We got back from conference to Cardiff Tuesday the 4th and Friday the 7th I came on to Llansamlet, and Saturday to this place, the old stamping ground of Latter Day Saintism. I spoke twice at our church at this place last Sunday. In the afternoon I spoke some in Welsh because the president of the meeting was unable to understand English. It should be a matter of record. However, they say I did all right except when I got to a point where I had no Welsh word to express myself. Bro. Henry Ellis, the branch president, has moved away from here to Llansamlet and at present there is no other officer. So as an expedient one of the brethren from Pontyeates, six and half miles away, comes and returns afoot every Sunday. They come in turns.

I intend going over to Pontyeates in a day or two to work among the Saints and distribute tracts. At present I am at Bro. and Sr. Evan Davies' home where many of our missionaries have found rest and welcome. I am not going to prophesy just now concerning the Welsh Mission, but will say that there are some excellent people over here, and I have felt that thousands of them will yet obey the gospel of Jesus Christ as presented by us. A good work will be done among this people, but when I can not say. The Lord helping me, I will try to do my part towards it.

Bro. Jones and Jenkins are doing what they can in the face of adverse conditions. Soon after coming to Wales we rented two small furnished rooms in 137 Severn Road, Canton, Cardiff, South Wales. So my wife has her little home and I am free to labor wherever opportunity offers. Bro. John Davies has left Wales and gone to his mission field in the Birmingham District. I traveled with him nearly two weeks before he left and enjoyed his company. He and I have been friends for thirty years. He has a number of warm friends in Wales. John has become quite an expert as a street preacher. The passing of a cart or flock of sheep, not even a dog fight, can stop him when he gets started.

Bro. Pierce, the faithful tract distributor, is often referred to for his faithfulness and zeal in the work. Bro. John R. Evans had a hard time of it when here. The work was almost at a standstill, and to resuscitate the body was not a little job. Finances were very low and places to stop very few. At the resurrection of the just each and all of the faithful laborers will come in for their share of the reward. I pray for the welfare of all of God's people in every land. Home address: 137 Severn Road, Canton, Cardiff, Wales, England.

Yours in the conflict,
EVAN B. MORGAN.

Des Moines District Reunion.

The weather during the reunion here has been all that could be desired, and the health of all the Saints in camp has been good. Many of the Saints are rooming in town, and all are boarding at the hall, there being no cooking done in any of the individual tents, and this is proving satisfactory.

Fred A. Smith preached two sermons on the "Marvelous Work" and one on the higher laws which we are called to observe. He left us for the western part of the state on Tuesday evening. Bishop Hilliard spoke several times during the week. On Thursday he presented "The Gathering" in his plain, forceful manner. He also spoke on the law of tithing and that of consecration.

The people of Rhodes and surrounding vicinity have attended and manifested some interest in the sermons. The prayer-service each morning has been well attended and full of interest.

All seem to be in favor of holding a reunion next year and it will likely be located in the vicinity of Des Moines, the capital city being nearer the center of the church membership. The reunion committee this year have done their work well and their names are well worthy of mention. They are H. A. McCoy, our district president, W. C. Hidy, of Nevada, and W. Christy, of Dallas Center.

Elder J. A. Gunsolley, of the General Sunday-school Association and the Religio, came last Sunday and has been here during the week. Round table meetings for the discussion of Sunday-school and Religio questions have been held each morning. In the afternoon sessions have been held to take up lines of work in these departments. The regular lessons from the Quarterlies were taken up, the Home departments were presented, and one session given to a talk on a historical outline of the Book of Mormon.

We have mentioned these meetings as being a type of the gathering and they are truly the means of bringing the Saints to an equality, to seeing eye to eye. The associations here for the week have been marked by unity and love, with nothing of any kind to mar the peace and happiness of those present. All have enjoyed the reunion, all have had their spiritual strength renewed. The attendance has not been large in proportion to the membership of the district, but the Saints throughout the district will more and more realize the good to be received by attending these meetings. The Saints should not neglect the assembling themselves together.

The prayer service on Friday morning was a spiritual meeting indeed. The voice of the Spirit was given calling one of our young men to higher work in the church, and the servant of God spoke with inspiration urging the Saints to comply with the instruction in regard to respecting authority in the church. The one in charge of the prayer-service spoke of the meeting as a pentecostal one.

The reunion closes with the Saints present praising God.

Massachusetts Reunion.

The fourth annual reunion of the Massachusetts District was held at Silver Lake, August 1 to 10. Apostles Sheehy and Greene, also Bishop Bullard, had charge and presided. In addition to these there were present Apostle Joseph Luff, George W. Robley, and W. E. LaRue, of the general ministry, and also a number of the local ministry of the district. Bro. Luff made a strong appeal in behalf of the college work and his remarks were well received. The district Religio held an interesting meeting presided over by Ruth M. Sheehy. The Sunday-school workers of the district held a meeting and a number of interesting papers were read. A number were baptized in the beautiful lake adjacent to the camp. Nearly all boarded at the commissary tent and were well pleased with that accommodation. The weather was fine at the start but several stormy days made it somewhat unpleasant for tent life. There were sixty-seven tents on the ground and about three hundred people in all in attendance. It was universally pronounced as the "best" reunion ever held in these parts. The meetings were spiritual and good interest was maintained throughout.

Reunion in Southeastern Illinois.

The reunion in Southeastern Illinois District closed on the evening of the 9th after an enjoyable time. The visiting ministry present were I. N. White, missionary in charge, Elders Willard J. Smith, R. T. Walters, and T. J. Bell. Also Bro. T. A. Hougas, the General Sunday-school Superintendent, was with us a part of the time and did work in the Sunday-school department which was much needed and appreciated.

I believe the reunion will prove a benefit to this district. At times the crowds were so large that many failed to get seats under the tent. The preaching was excellent, the social-meetings grand, and therefore we rejoice, trusting that the work done in the reunion will be felt for good throughout the whole district. Saints, let us go onward and upward.

Died.

IMRIE.—Elder James David Imrie was born September 24, 1879; baptized August 3, 1901. He was ordained an elder December 30, 1901, and counselor to Bishop Lewis in February of the following year. At the 1902 session of General Conference he was appointed to the missionary force, and has labored since as continuously as his health would permit. Fifty-five hours before death he left his mission field, and bore up through a railroad journey of twenty-five and a half hours. Thirty hours later, on June 26 he fell a victim to that dread disease, consumption. Funeral exercises were conducted at the house and grave by Elder W. J. Haworth, assisted by Elder Barmore, also a memorial service in the Saints' church, Hamilton West, New South Wales, Australia, on July 5.

EASTWOOD.—Sr. S. Lizzie Eastwood, daughter of Mr. L. and Sr. Catherine Eastwood, departed this life at Devon, Bourbon County, Kansas, July 21, 1903, aged 26 years, 4 months, 7 days. Sr. Lizzie was baptized January 12, 1896, by Priest Lee A. Quick, and confirmed by Elder W. S. Pender. Our sister was one of Bourbon County's well respected school-teachers, following this vocation until compelled to desist because of the encroachments of the dread disease, consumption. She passed away full of trust and faith. Funeral sermon by Elder Lee A. Quick.

HARMON.—At Shenandoah, Iowa, August 16, 1903, after one week's illness, William, husband of Sr. A. M. Harmon, to whom he was married in 1891. Deceased was member of the Baptist Church, but was kind, considerate, and attentive to both the person and faith of her whom he has left behind as his widow. Mr. Harmon of Shenandoah, and Mrs. Roger of Glenwood, children by a former wife, also mourn his absence. The funeral services were conducted by Elder Mark H. Forscutt of Nebraska City, on August 17, from his late home, and the body interred by the side of his first wife's body in a country graveyard about eight miles from Shenandoah.

The heavy rains and floods in Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska last week caused some loss of life and seriously delayed traffic and travel. Reports show that the rainfall Wednesday was the heaviest that has extended over Iowa for many years. In several places the average precipitation registered was above eight inches.

Elder E. Keeler, writing from Fieldbrook, Humboldt County, California, says: "I have been here five weeks. Baptized seven adults. Others near the kingdom and will come in if the work is followed up here. Bro. Joehnk is with me."

Mrs. M. C. Schofield advises us that any of our elders coming to Dayton, Ohio, will find a home at 492 Forest Avenue.

Editorial.

SENIOR EDITOR ABROAD.

Our last was addressed from Manchester, where we arrived Tuesday afternoon, the 4th. We went from the station to the home of Bro. and Sr. James Clarke, where we were domiciled during our sojourn in this great city, another of the commercial centers of Great Britain. Manchester can trace its origin to the time of the Romans, when its foundations were laid and the early city was established and encircled by substantial walls and it received the name of Mancunium. This was in the year of our Lord 80. It has passed through many changing scenes since and has acquired a reputation and influence in the commercial world of no mean order. It is situated in the county of Lancashire, and if it is not the county capital, this honor belonging to Lancaster, it certainly is the most important city in the county, with the possible exception of Liverpool.* Manchester is the center of the cotton industry, besides having other industries which give occupation and the means of livelihood for more than six hundred thousand inhabitants.

The city is built on each bank of the river Irwell and is in connection with Liverpool by means of the Manchester ship-canal, which canal is about forty-five miles long and deep enough for ordinary sea-going vessels to navigate in. Besides this several railways join the two cities together. The canal is unique as an engineering exploit and is proving of increasing value to the city and a great saving of time and money, in that it now allows vessels laden with merchandise for the city to unload their cargoes almost at the doors of the warehouses instead of having to unload at Liverpool, then load the railway trains and unload again in Manchester, and finally load at the depot to be transported to the various warehouses in the city. Manchester, like most of the cities in this country of any size, is composed of a group of smaller towns which have gradually been absorbed as the city has slowly pushed its way outward to meet the influx of the populace and commercial demands of the times. Most of these small towns have lost their municipal identity, but still retain their nomenclature, hence we have such names as Ancoats, Trafford, Hulme, Charlton-on-Medlock, and Ardwick, in which portion of the city we were located. The only part of the city retaining its disinct and separate municipality is Salford. The means of transit over the city are electric cars and railway trains, which offer happy facilities to the stranger and busy persons whose desire or occupation demand change of location.

The Saints in Manchester used to meet in one hall in the center of the city, but as the work grew and gathered in adherents from the outlying districts it became inconvenient for them to meet at a common center and was found advisable to separate into necessarily smaller branches located in the northern, northeastern, eastern, and southern portions of the city, besides one in Salford. Manchester is the strongest place in England for the work of the Reorganization and besides the branches already named it includes within its district Stockport, Warrington, Wigan, and Farnworth, and, until recently, the city of Leeds. The district was presided over for many years by Elder Joseph Dewsnap, Sr., whose influence and ability have done much to establish the work upon a solid basis, assisted very faithfully by noble men and women, some of whom have passed away. For a few years, however, the district has been sustained under the presidency of Henry Greenwood, supported by Bro. George Baty as vice-president and Thomas Brien as secretary.

After partaking of tea, which had been prepared for us by Sr. Clarke, we were escorted to the hall of the East Manchester Branch, presided over by Elder Nathan Weate. This night was the time for the meeting of Zion's Religio-Literary Society in a special session to welcome the Presidents. We had the privilege of greeting quite a number of strangers and renewing the acquaintance of many whom we had met at conference in Leeds. The exercises were in charge of Bro. Rushton and included, besides the usual preliminaries, a few musical items, an organ solo by Sr. Marian Clarke, and a mandolin exhibition by Sr. Leah Weate, which were skillfully performed and duly appreciated. After these items of the program had been enjoyed Bro. Weate, in behalf of the Zion's Religio Society, gave a speech of welcome to Bro. Evans and the Editor and at the same time presented us with the "freedom of the Society" making us honorary members, which event was marked by the presentation of silver medals to each of us. We were then asked to respond and the Editor did so appreciating very sincerely and deeply the work of distinguishment and honor thus conferred. Bro. Evans followed and in a racy and humorous manner accepted the honor with a sense of appreciation and gratitude. A very pleasant evening was brought to a close after partaking of a light lunch. We were pleased indeed to find a real lively interest in Religio work in this city and fervently hope that its influence and power may grow and increase, and in the near future other societies may be established for the help and benefit of our young people in England.

Wednesday and Thursday evenings were occupied in the East Branch by the Editor and Bro. Evans respectively. Both meetings were well attended and the audiences appreciated both efforts. We were the guests of Bro. and Sr. Mills on Wednesday afternoon and enjoyed their effort to make us welcome. On Thursday we were entertained by Bro. and Sr. Weate whose bounty and hospitality were duly appreciated. Friday there was no meeting.

On Saturday we were in attendance at North Branch, where at fifteen minutes to six we sat down with many of the Saints to a very palatable repast, making the acquaintance of many of the Saints. After tea the meeting was of a social kind in charge of Bro. Rushton. The president of the branch, Elder John Bailey, read an address of welcome to the Editor which was responded to. Then Bro. Evans was greeted similarly and fitting response was made. Then we enjoyed a miscellaneous program including two songs by Elder John Davis, one song by Bro. Evans, one by Sr. Ada Green, and recitations by Bro. John Bailey; the instrumental part of the program being ably sustained by our genial brother, John Foden.

Sunday, 9th, the morning hour was occupied by Bro. Evans who preached an excellent discourse. In the afternoon a social service was enjoyed in which many testified of God's goodness and their joy in his service. A representative of the Utah church was present and testified of his happiness and pleasure in that church and incidentally sought to justify his people in some of their positions. In this meeting we met with Bro. Hassall of Farnworth, who had joined the Mormon Church, but under the influence of the Spirit of God which was enjoyed very much in the service his heart was touched by his old-time love for the truth, and in deep earnestness he thanked God for the testimony borne by Bro. Evans which had been light to his soul. The elder of the Utah church complained because he thought it was darkness. In the evening the Editor preached to a full house on the distinctive differences between the Reorganized Church and the Mormon Church using as a basis the epitome which was borrowed for the occasion from Elder Saunders, the representative of the Utah body already referred to. The effort was well received and was delivered with liberty.

Monday evening owing to indisposition the Editor remained at home while Bro. Evans filled the appointment. Of his effort we heard the highest praise. This closed our visit to North Manchester Branch. This day Bro. John Davis bade us farewell and left Manchester at ten o'clock in the forenoon for Birmingham, his field of operation during the remainder of conference year.

On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings owing to the continued indisposition of the Editor, Bro. Evans filled both nights in the Northeast Branch. We learned that open-air services had been held prior to service in the hall each night and quite good attention was given by fair-sized audiences. After open-air service the meeting adjourned to the hall and R. C. occupied with excellent liberty to the edification and pleasure of crowded audiences. Both efforts were highly appreciated. This branch is presided over by Elder Leggott and the members deserve recognition for the noble efforts to sustain the work in this part of the city. By their individual exertion they have purchased a neat, wooden chapel in which to hold services, that one time had been held by the Plymouth Brethren from which community and chapel several of our members in that part of the city came. Negotiations are afoot to purchase the grounds and convert the wooden building into a brick building in time.

Thursday and Friday, appointments were out for Salford, which were filled by Bro. Evans. Each evening a good audience listened with attention and interest to the sermons of our brother. This branch is presided over by Elder J. W. Taylor and we learn grew out of a Sunday-school movement of some years ago. A band of earnest people are engaged in holding forth the truth as it is in Christ, whose efforts will produce fruit by and by.

The weather during our stay in Manchester was not inviting, but was dull, damp, and often very wet. We understand, however, that Manchester is notorious for wet weather. Saturday was wet indeed. Almost incessantly the rain poured down in torrents keeping us prisoners more or less all day. It had been arranged to take us to Bellevue Zoological Gardens this day in order to enjoy the pyrotechnic display representing the capture of Gibraltar by Sir George Rooke in 1704, said to be the finest exhibition of fireworks in the kingdom. The rain frustrated the scheme.

"The best laid plans of mice and men Aft gang a'gley."

Sunday the 17th was to be a "red letter day;" all the branches were to close the several halls and meet en masse at the Coöperative Hall, Ardwick. The Sunday-school banner was to be unveiled and a procession headed by a band and the banner was to parade the streets in the immediate vicinity of the hall. It was with apprehension and anxiety that the weather was criticised on Sunday morning, but it rained. Hopes were dashed down and disappointment seemed imminent. We set out for the hall, and despite the gloomy prospect and the rain a good company had braved the inclement weather; we greeted many Saints from Manchester, Bro. and Sr. Rudd, Sr. Daeley, and Sr. Howden, of Leeds, Bro. Bennett, a veteran of the work from Birkenhead, Liverpool, Bro. and Sr. George Baty, Stockport, Brn.

Spargo and Hankin, of Wigan, Bro. Hassall, of Farnworth. The morning hour was occupied by Bro. Evans, who preached a very able discourse on the Book of Mormon. His effort, though hurried and synoptical, was followed with the closest attention and interest by the audience, regret being expressed that the time had been so short.

After the sermon Bro. S. F. Mather, the superintendent of the district Sunday-school, was called upon to give an outline of the purchasing of the banner, from which we gleaned the following items. The fund was originated about six years ago and had been largely supplied by pence and half pence from the children of the different schools in the district until it reached the sum of twenty pounds or one hundred dollars. The banner is about seven feet six inches by five feet six inches and is of pure silk, an orange colored border enclosing a square ground of royal blue, the center on one side bearing the picture very finely executed in oils of Christ blessing little children, having the words, "Suffer little children to come unto me;" in a scroll of silver the names of the church and schools are printed. The other side has a very fine picture of an angel flying with a scroll, representing Revelation 14:6. The angel is without wings. The banner is a work of art and does credit to the patience, zeal, and persistency of the Sunday-schools of the Manchester District.

The Editor was invited to unveil the banner, which he did, and in a few choice words the banner was consecrated and dedicated to the glory of God and the use of the schools. On leaving the hall we were all very agreeably surprised to find the rain had ceased, the roads and pavements were dried, and the sun was shedding its golden radiance as if in approval and pleasure, to the joy and encouragement of the children especially. There was not much time between adjournment of morning session and the meeting again for procession; we therefore hurried home, and after partaking of dinner the procession formed. First of all came the band, a fine one, too, neatly dressed in a quiet but effective uniform, then the banner, all resplendent and gay in the shimmering light of the sun, the poles supported by two stalwart brothers, the steadying cords held by fair young sisters looking very pretty in their white dresses garlanded with flowers, the silk ribbons were borne by four little tots of girls also in white carrying baskets of flowers. Then followed the representative ministers headed by the Editor, Brn. Evans, Rushton, Dewsnup, and Greenwood, followed by the elders and priests; then came four little folks carrying a stand all trimmed with flowers upon which a large open Bible was laid; then came the body of the procession. Thousands of people lined the roads we traversed. The parade was a credit and a splendid testimony of the efficiency of Sunday-school effort. May God bless the Sunday-school work!

After the parade we assembled in the hall, the service was in charge of Bro. Evans. Singing and prayer being over short addresses were delivered by the Editor, Brn. Rushton, Dewsnup, Sr., H. Greenwood, S. F. Mather, W. R. Armstrong, W. H. Greenwood, and several others. The speeches were timely and interesting and were pleasantly interspersed with hymns. At night the hall was nicely filled with a splendid audience. The Editor was the preacher and spoke for an hour and a quarter with liberty and force, the congregation being sympathetic and appreciative. Benediction was pronounced by Bro. James Baty, the evangelical minister of the district. So ended a pleasant, happy, and instructive day.

Monday Bro. Ernest R. Dewsnup took the writer, and Brn. Evans and Rushton through the library of Owens College, where our College President graduated. The College is a noble pile of buildings and an ornament to the city, a splendid memorial to the educational tendency of modern times. We took dinner with the family of Bro. Dewsnup in Fallowfield, the residential suburb of Manchester. We spent a pleasant afternoon and at tea were joined by Joseph and his wife, son of Bro. and Sr. Dewsnup, and Bro. Dewsnup himself who had returned from business. In the evening we were in attendance at South Manchester Branch. An overflowing meeting was enjoyed. Bro. Evans in his characteristic manner preached an excellent sermon on baptism after which the meeting adjourned to the baths where eight were immersed by Bro. Evans, taking upon them the name of Christ, among them being Bro. Hassall who had concluded to leave the Mormon Church and return to the church he had erstwhile forsaken. It will be remembered by some that the Mormons made a considerable spread in their Millennial Star, when they baptized Bro. Hassall. It will doubtless be a little humiliating for them to know that he has returned.

This closed our official visit in Manchester. We enjoyed the many efforts to make us welcome, and appreciated the kindly welcomes we received. We were glad also to make the acquaintance of many whose names were familiar to us, such as Brn. J. Dewsnup, Sr., H. Greenwood, James Baty, W. Armstrong, S. F. Mather, and many others whose labors in behalf of the work have been blessed and appreciated. On Tuesday we bade adieu to Bro. and Sr. Clarke, their son-in-law, daughter, and family, whose kind hospitality will be a very pleasant memory in our reminiscences of our British tour. We left Manchester about half past two in the afternoon, and after about an hour's ride in the electric car we were safely ensconced in the comfortable home of Bro. and Sr. George Baty in Stockport, whence we write.

Fraternally,

JOSEPH SMITH.

STOCKPORT, England, August 19.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Elder W. A. Smith has been laboring with success near Pisgah, Iowa, the past three weeks; altogether thirty baptisms; and including tent work sixty-five baptisms by Brn. Smith and Lane together. Bro. Smith has had to return home on account of the sickness of his little child but expects to be around again in a short time.

Patriarch A. H. Smith and Bro. Leon Gould left Lamoni Thursday morning for the Dow City Reunion, going by the way of St. Joseph, where they remained over night.

On Wednesday J. R. Lambert, of the Patriarchate, left Lamoni for Stewartsville, Missouri, to attend the Northern Missouri Reunion.

F. M. Smith returned from Council Bluffs, Iowa, on Wednesday morning last, where he had been in attendance at the funeral of Bro. Calvin Beebe. The funeral was a private one, held at the home on Glen Avenue. The wealth of beautiful flowers sent to the home by sympathizing friends bore silent but touching testimony to the high esteem in which our brother was held in his home city. The services were marked by simplicity, and seemed to be appreciated by all present. The remains were interred in Farview Cemetery.

Bro. and Sr. Columbus Scott have been sorely afflicted the present week in the loss of their son, Virgil L. Scott, in a train accident in Kansas on the evening of August 29. Virgil was a young man, twenty-four years of age, and only married in May last. It is a great trial to all, but Bro. and Sr. Scott are bearing the stroke courageously. The remains were interred at Lamoni on Wednesday, September 2.

On the morning of August 31 Elder Mitchell L. Sory, who since early in the spring has been sick and cared for at the Saints' Home, passed from earth life. It is pleasant to speak of such a patient and noble character as Elder Sory, one of the most kind and just of men. He was seventy years of age the 27th of July last, had been earnestly engaged in missionary work the past ten years, and his strength failing of late he asked the privileges of the Home for a rest. A few days ago when he seemed so feeble he was asked if he was well cared for. "Everything is done for me," he said; "no one could have better care." He left directions for his burial in the simplest manner possible, showing that same desire for plainness in death as in life. On the other side, he trusted for a goodly reward. His funeral was from the Saints' Home, Elder John Smith officiating.

In a letter of August 31 F. M. Smith reports a good attendance and prospects for a very successful reunion at Stewartsville, Missouri.

Bro. G. H. Graves writes that he has been preaching at Watervalley, Kentucky, and Happy Hollow, Tennessee, with fair interest at both places.

THE HOLY GHOST.

"In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory."—Ephesians 1:13, 14.

The terms Holy Ghost or Holy Spirit are used in the Bible synonymously. Proof: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God."—Romans 8:16. "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and . . . unto the uttermost part of the earth."—Acts 1:8. To be a witness for Christ or God undoubtedly is the same thing. For they are one.

There are many passages to which we might refer to prove this point, but space will not permit such references. Read 1 Corinthians 3:10-14, and you will observe that these two terms are used by the inspired apostle synonymously. None but hair-splitting theologians would quibble over this point.

Let me call attention to the basic thought: It is the heritage of every true child of God to have a degree of the Holy Spirit. Paul declares, "This is the earnest of our inheritance." How long? All through this life of mortality. Yes, even through the intermediate state, and until our bodies are raised from the grave. The Spirit is to be with us "until the redemption of the purchased possession."

But says one, I have never received the Holy Spirit and I have been obedient.

In answer to the above we say, Let God be true. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."—John 7:17. This is one of the golden promises, and the rock upon which every child of God must stand. If the Holy Spirit has not been received after a compliance with all the requirements, there is something lacking on your part—perhaps not enough humility, humble devotion, and true sincerity. God says you shall receive.

Before we proceed further with this subject, we must determine what the Holy Ghost is. When this is intelligently answered, then we will know whether it is worth obtaining.

Many have thought the Holy Ghost to be a personality. This is a mistake, although there are several passages which infer that the Holy Ghost is a person. For instance, the personal pronouns he and himself are used. Of course those terms stand instead of the term Holy Ghost. But, in the language of the "silver-tongued Prophet," "Come let us reason together."

Every child of God is entitled to the Holy Spirit. Now if the Lord has a people scattered all over the world, and at an appointed time they assemble together in their respective places of worship to call upon God in mighty prayer—how could God be with them all with his Spirit at the same time—if the Holy Ghost is a personality? It is absolutely impossible.

The Holy Ghost is nothing more than the mind and will of God and Christ. Jesus declares: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—John 17:3. According to this it is life eternal to know God and Christ. How may we know these personages? Paul says: "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Corinthians 12:3. Well, says one, if the Holy Spirit is not a person, what is it? Let the beloved Disciple answer: "This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth."—1 John 5:6.

The word of God should be the end of all dispute. It declares the Spirit is truth. What is truth? "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth?"

However we are not supposed to take this in its broadest significance for Jesus declares: "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life."—John 6:63.

The word of God and the Spirit of God are two different things. But they go hand in hand. "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save by the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God."—1 Corinthians 2:11.

Our "Campbellite" friends are divided among themselves with reference to the Holy Spirit, but the following is one theory advanced by Alexander Campbell: "Hence it follows that to be filled with the Spirit and to have the word of Christ dwelling in one are of the same import in Paul's mind; and as a means to this end, Christians were to abound in singing psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs."

Paul didn't so understand: "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power and in the Holy Ghost and in much assurance; as ye know what manner of men we were among you, for your sake."—1 Thessalonians 1:2. This shows conclusively that the word and the Holy Ghost are not the same. If they are, Paul with all his learning manifested gross ignorance of the use of language when he wrote the above.

For further proof upon this point we refer to the following: "And when he had said this, he breathed on them and saith unto them, receive ye the Holy Ghost." This was after the resurrection. Now if the word is the Holy Ghost and vice versa, the above proceeding was non-essential for Jesus had been teaching them the word for over three years.

Those people to whom Philip preached at Samaria had received the word when it was preached; miracles were wrought, etc., but they did not receive the Holy Ghost until Peter and John came down and prayed for them, "Who, when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost."—Acts 8: 15-17.

Go with me to the day of Pentecost: "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."—Acts 2: 1-4.

Now if the word had been flying through that house in the form of a large family Bible, it would have been quite a dangerous place to be in. Fortunately it was the Holy Ghost.

Some theologians endeavor to make it appear that the Holy Ghost and the gift of the Holy Ghost are two different things. We deny such statements and demand the proof.

Peter, when officiating at Samaria said to Simon, "Thy money perish with thee because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money."—Acts 8: 20. Simon saw that through the laying on of hands of apostles the Holy Ghost was given (Acts 8: 18.) He desired this gift for the purpose of self-aggrandizement, and offered money for it. But it can not be purchased with money.

Whenever the Holy Ghost is given to the disciples of Christ it is a gift just the same as when a friend gives a present or a gift to another friend.

Listen to Jesus: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever."—John 14: 16.

The Holy Ghost baptism which Christ administered was a gift from God. (Luke 3: 16.)

The Holy Ghost which God's people enjoy to-day is a gift from God, just as it was on the day of Pentecost, when Peter said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2: 38. Thus in that age men and women in order to receive the Holy Ghost as a gift had to have faith, had to repent and had to be baptized, and then they were in a condition to receive the Holy Spirit,

Do we have claim to the gift? Yes, on the same conditions, "For the promise is unto you, and to your children and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."—Acts 2: 39.

Thus, whenever the Holy Ghost is enjoyed by mortal man, it is a gift from heaven and every effort man makes to disprove this fact only makes it more apparent.

When Jesus was baptized the Holy Spirit came down from heaven and rested upon him in the form of a dove. (Matthew 3: 16.)

Now we will show that the Holy Ghost is one of the God-head.

"For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one."—1 John 5: 7.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—Matthew 28: 19.

In summing up our arguments on this point we have proven the following: First, The Holy Ghost represents the mind and will of God and Christ; second, it is the Spirit of truth; third, it is a gift from God; fourth, it is one of the God-head. Is it worth obtaining? We think so.

The next point for us to consider is the office work of the Holy Ghost. We should never be in possession of anything and not know how to use it. You will remember the Philistines came into possession of the Ark of God at one time, and not knowing how to use it, it played havoc among them.

If a man hires a laborer to work on his farm, he outlines the work and expects his servant to perform certain duties. Now we should know what the Holy Ghost will do for us—what its office work is. "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me."—John 15: 26.

The Comforter is to testify of Christ and his work. "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."—John 14: 26.

From this we understand the Holy Ghost will teach the Lord's people all things. Why then do men endeavor to build up God's church by human wisdom? "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."—James 1: 5.

The Holy Ghost will teach us all things if we will manifest a disposition to be taught. But we must be willing to humble ourselves sufficiently to ask in simple childlike faith. Yes, it will bring all things to our remembrance, whatsoever we have heard of an inspirational character, just as it brought the sayings of Christ to the minds of his disciples.

"Nevertheless I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment."

The Holy Ghost has a work to do in the world, among the ungodly. John the beloved tells us "That was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."—1:9. This "Light" is even Jesus the Lord. Again we read: "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day."—John 6:44.

God will even feel after the ungodly, just as he felt after Saul of Tarsus when he was persecuting the church of the living God. There are honest-hearted people scattered all over the world, and God will draw them out by the influence of the Spirit operating upon their minds. God's sheep will not follow strangers, but when they hear the "gospel sound" they will fall into line with the true Israel of God.

Many times wicked men may have the Spirit of God but not as a "comforter." They may not know what the influence may be working upon them, but if they are on the point of committing some terrible crime and some influence comes upon them which restrains them from doing such a deed, undoubtedly it is the Spirit of God.

Columbus was a Roman Catholic yet he had a degree of God's Spirit. For fourteen long years he labored to secure the necessary means to fit out an expedition to cross the unexplored sea. Nothing short of the Spirit of God would have given him such courage and valor. (Book of Mormon, page 53.)

Some of our early statesmen surely had a portion of the Spirit when they wrote that immortal document, the Constitution of the United States of America.

These circumstances might be multiplied but we desist. It is an evident fact that the Holy Spirit performs a certain work in the world.

"Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come."—John 16:13.

From the above we learn that the Holy Ghost can speak and it will show us things to come.

Of course, the popular religions of the world do not want the Holy Ghost to do such work to-day. They tell us the age of revelation is past, the heavens are sealed with brass, and the Bible contains all the revelation of God's will to man that will ever be given. If this "popular theory" is true then there is not any Holy Ghost in the world or in the church.

Robert Ingersoll declared: "The religious world needs another revelation to tell them what the present one (the Bible) means."

Dear reader, if God has an authorized ministry upon the earth to-day, they must be called by the Holy Ghost. Paul says: "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."—Hebrew 5:4.

Surely the clergy of to-day are in a leaky boat, if there is no revelation from God in this present day. The only clue they could possibly have to establish their authority would be to steal the commission Christ gave to his ministry nineteen hundred years ago, when he said, "Go ye into all the world."—Mark 16:15.

Paul and Barnabas were called through the direct influence of the Holy Ghost. (Acts 13:1, 2.) The Spirit operated through the prophets in the church at Antioch, or in other words they were called like Aaron, through a living prophet, Moses. The Holy Ghost spoke through Moses, for it is written in 2 Peter 1:21, "For prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

This is what constituted prophets anciently. Well could good old Simeon say: "For mine eyes have seen thy salvation."—Luke 2:30. It had been revealed unto this father in Israel, even by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, until he "had seen the Lord's Christ." (Luke 2:26.) Thus in those early times men were operated upon directly, in an abstract sense, by the power of the Holy Ghost, even before Pentecost. The idea that persons never received the Holy Spirit until on the day of Pentecost is absurd in the extreme.

I have already shown that Simeon was enabled to discern the "babe of Bethlehem" by means of the Spirit. This is the office work of the Holy Ghost, to testify of Christ.

Paul says, "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Corinthians 12:3. According to this inspired writer the Holy Ghost is indispensable. A true testimony of Jesus can not be obtained without it. We must not only believe that Jesus is the Christ. We must know, in order for us to have saving knowledge. Listen to the Master: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."—John 17:3.

Then when we have received the "testimony of Jesus" we have the "spirit of prophecy." (Revelation 19:10.)

How did Job (19:25) receive a knowledge of the Redeemer? If Paul told the truth, it was by the revealing power of the Holy Ghost. Simeon received it in the same way and so did Peter. "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."—Matthew 16:17.

Peter did not know Jesus to be the Christ, simply because he had been associated with him for several months in the ministry. The knowledge had to be revealed from heaven.

Now the question arises, Is any one being saved to-day? "O yes," says the popular clergy, "people are being saved by the thousand, in every land and clime." Then they have the "testimony of Jesus" or the "spirit of prophecy." For it is life eternal to know God and Christ. This knowledge can be obtained only by revelation. Then the old theory that the Bible contains all that God will ever reveal to man is merely the freak of a wild imagination. Every individual who comes into the kingdom must have present day revelation. Yes, the Holy Ghost will show us things to come.

The parting words of Christ to his disciples were: "And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high."—Luke 24:49.

If the servants of God could not break the bread of life acceptably in the New Testament times without the power from on high, can his servants do so to-day without the power? Certainly not. God is unchangeable and is no respecter of persons. (Malachi 3:6; Acts 10:34.)

The objector may say, "O we have colleges nowadays where our ministers can be educated, and we do not need the power of God, as it was enjoyed anciently." There were institutions of learning in primitive times, yet our Lord in choosing his ministry, selected them from the humble avocations of life. He chose the foolish to confound the wise. Paul said that he neither received the gospel of man, neither was it taught to him by man, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. (Galatians 1:12.)

Education is all right. The more we have the better. It refines and polishes. Couple education with inspiration and we have a "polished shaft." Paul is an example. Many of the ministry of the popular churches are confessing that there is a lack of spiritual power in their ministrations. "I believe the Holy Spirit is withdrawing from the church as a body. There is a supreme crisis in foreign missions. It is the most alarming that has confronted the church in the last century. Surely the situation is desperate when is considered the difficulty of getting money, or even to get audiences to listen to missionary appeals."—Doctor Pearson, editor of the Missionary Review of the World.

D. L. Moody said: "A dead cold has come over the church."

Where are we drifting? Paul said that the time would come in the last days, when people would have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof; from such turn away. (2 Timothy 3:1-5.)

Prophecy is being fulfilled before our eyes to-day. This is a prophetic age as every age of the past has been. Therefore let us seek the right way: "Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls.

But they said, We will not walk therein." Jeremiah 6:16.

Dear reader, will you be one that will not walk in the old paths? Remember the Spirit will not always strive with man (Genesis 6:3). It will strive with the poor sinner until he turns a deaf ear to its pleadings. To those who have been inducted into the kingdom the Holy Ghost is given (as occasion demands) through prayer. Even Christ declared, "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter."—John 14:16.

Paul said, "I . . . cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him."—Ephesians 1:15-17.

"Quench not the Spirit."—1 Thessalonians 5:19. This is an admonition we should strictly observe. It is proper to quench some spirits, for John writes thus: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets have gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is in the world."—1 John 4:1-3.

There is a standard by which to try these spirits, even with the law of God. "If they speak not according to this word, is it because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8:20. According to the law, every spirit which confesseth not that Jesus has come in the flesh is not of God.

Simply saying that Jesus is the Christ would not be sufficient, however. The devils believe and tremble. (James 2:19.) But the confession that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh means, that Christ is the Savior of the world. This is what Simeon said when Mary brought Jesus to the priest to be cared for according to the Mosaic law. The prophets had declared for many years that this personage would come, that he would be born of humble parentage, and in all things it would behoove him to be made like unto his brethren. Therefore, by believing in his doctrine (John 3:16; 2 John 8-10) and being obedient we will be saved.

The fundamental principles of his doctrine will be found in Hebrews 6:1,2: "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead and of eternal judgment."

These principles cover every phase of the gospel, even to its consummation. Now as the office work of the Comforter is to guide us in the ways of truth, when God's word is presented to us we will willingly say: "Lord I believe," obey the gospel, live in harmony with the divine plan and receive whatever spiritual gifts God has in store for us as enumerated by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12: 1-12.

THE SEALED BOOK.

The first thing seen most worthy of note by John, after being told to "Come up hither and I will show thee things which must be hereafter" (Revelation 4: 1), after describing some of the beauties of heaven, was in the hand of God, "a book written within and on the back side, sealed with seven seals." The inquiry was made, "Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?"—Revelation 5: 1, 2. None being found worthy among men, "the Lion of the tribe of Judah [Christ] prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof."—Verse 5. Next describing events transpiring upon the opening of the seals, we learn in the "Key to the Revelations of St. John" that "The sounding of the trumpets of the seven angels, are the preparing, and finishing of his work in the beginning of the seven thousand years; the preparing of the way before the time of his coming," hence the opening of that seal refers to events to transpire in the future, in the beginning of the millennial reign. And in Revelation 10 an angel is sent from heaven having a little book in his hand proclaiming that there shall be time no longer. And John is told to go and take the book from the angel's hand; and it is given him, with instruction to "take it and eat it up," or learn and digest its contents. And that it should be bitter in his belly, "but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey." And as we learn in Revelation 12: 1, Inspired Translation, that what John saw was "in the likeness of things [to be] on earth," we shall inquire, Has anything come to pass on the earth, in fulfillment of what John saw regarding the sealed book? Compare Revelation, chapters 5 to 10, with Isaiah 29. John sees a sealed book, inquiry is made, and no man found able to "open and read the book." (Revelation 5: 4.) Then the Lord was found able (verse 5) to read the book and open the seals. This was in the last days, or when the proclamation was made that "time shall be no longer." (Chapter 10.) Paul says, "In the last days perilous times shall come."—2 Timothy 3: 1. And then he describes the sad condition of people in that age. John describes them in Revelation 14: 8 as "drinking of the fornication of Babylon," and in Revelation 17 as being "drunken with the blood of the saints" (verse 6); and Isaiah 29: 9, describes the people in the same age, "the last days," as being "drunken but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink."

How and why? "For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep. "For, behold, ye have closed your eyes and ye have rejected the prophets, and your rulers; and the seers he hath covered because of your iniquities."—Verse 10. Having no spiritual light—in a deep sleep, and as Paul says, "They that sleep, sleep in the night." Jesus said, "The night cometh when no man can work;" can not see, or work, the works of righteousness, the Lord having closed their eyes; the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered." Having both the prophets and seers removed, or "covered," they were all in "the spirit of deep sleep" as "where there is no vision [or revelation] the people perish; and the vision of all [or all that was claimed to be a vision or revelation by any one] is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this I pray thee; and he saith I can not, for it is sealed."—Verse 11.

It is an admitted fact by all that Professor Anthon, a great linguist of New York, wrote to the Episcopal Church Record, New York, volume 1, November 22, in 1841, admitting the receipt of the words of a book, sent to him by Joseph Smith by "a plain looking countryman," desiring him to read, or translate it; which he admitted he could not do as it was "a sealed, or dead language" to this generation of people. The letter is published in so many works that I will not quote it. Here is the evidence of the learned, that the words of the book were "delivered to one that is learned" to read, and he said, "I can not for it is sealed." Isaiah continues, "And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, [Joseph Smith] saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned."—Verse 12. As in Revelation 5 inquiry was made everywhere, and no man found able to read the book, and as in Revelation 5: 25, the Lion of the tribe of Judah read the book, so in Isaiah 29: 13, we read, Wherefore the Lord said, that because of the terrible condition of the people having their "eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers covered," so that none could read the book; "that he would proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder" (Verse 14) bringing to naught all "the wisdom of their wise and prudent men."—Verse 14. And the time of doing this marvelous work was "a very little while before Lebanon [Canaan] shall be turned into a fruitful field."—Verse 17. "And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book," (verse 18,) etc. or the book would be opened and read by the Lord, as said in Revelation 5: 4, by raising up a seer to do his work. In Revelation 10, John says an angel came from heaven proclaiming that "time shall be no longer," (verse 6,) or as in Revelation 14: 7, "the hour of his [God's] judgment is come." There seems to be one series of symbols from Revelation 1 to 12 and another beginning in chapter 12 in which some of the same events are presented under different symbols or in different language. The seven churches of Asia are described in chapters 1 to 4 and the angel's message in chapter 10. And the same church or woman is again presented in chapter 12, in different language and in different condition, and the angel with the gospel message in chapter 14 in different language. In chapter 10 when the angel with the "little book open," cried with a loud voice, "seven thunders uttered their voices" (verse 3). John was forbidden to write the utterance of the seven thunders. (Verse 4.) It seems their voices were caused by the angel's cry evidently in opposition thereto. In Revelation 17:3, John saw a woman on a beast with seven heads and ten horns. In verse 5 she was called Babylon, the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth. The seven heads were said to be seven mountains on which the woman sitteth. (Verse 9.) "And the woman is that great city that reigneth over the kings of the earth."—Verse 18. No great city since John, built upon seven mountains, or hills, has ever reigned over even one kingdom, except Rome. To make it plain as "A name written upon her forehead."—Verse 5. The angel tells John that the seven hills are seven mountains on which the woman (city) sitteth. "And there are seven kings: [a two-fold meaning or forms of government pertaining to that city,] five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh he must continue a short space."—Verse 10.

All histories teach that Rome was first ruled by the kings; Romulus being the first; second, by the consuls; third, Decemvirs, a tribunal of ten; fourth, the Triumvirs, a council of three; fifth, the Senators. All had fallen and the emperor ruled in John's day, the sixth. And the other is not yet come, and when he cometh he must continue a short space. The emperor Justinian ruled over the church and state, styling the Bishop of Rome "dictator of heretics," or a ruler over all church officers; sustaining his authority with the army under Belisas in a five-year war from 533 to 538. But in 568 Justinian died and three of the ten horns on the beast or power that sustained the church, being Aryans in religion, refused allegiance to the Bishop of Rome, or Pope under the Greek Catholic emperor or Exordite of Ravenna who was the seventh, "for a short space" of two years, when the Ostro, Goths and Lombards, were overpowered by the pope and plucked up by the roots. See the "Footprints of Time and Outline of History," page 130, in fulfillment of Daniel 7:8, where he was to pluck up three horns by the roots. This he did by removing their Aryan kings and placing Roman Catholics in their places, causing these ten kings to all be of one mind (all Roman Catholics) and give their power and strength to the beast. (See Revelation 17:13.) Hence the beast, civil power of Rome, rode by the woman, or church, verse 3, controlling the beast of government as a rider does a horse. "Even he is the eighth, and is of the seven [taking the place of the three Aryan powers, who continued a short space under the Greek Catholic emperor] and goeth into perdition."—Verse 11. Hence the church power emanating from the seven-hilled city with its daughters are the Babylon, the great of the Scriptures, "uttering its thunder" against the angel's cry, because in that cry, as in Revelation 14:7 the hour of God's judgment was proclaimed. "That there should be time no longer" (Revelation 10:6) for Babylon the great to flourish; but that "the hour of his judgment is come." So when the little book was given into the hands of men by the angel, as testified of by Joseph the Seer; "eaten up," its glorious truths understood, it became in the mouth sweet as honey. (Revelation 10:10.) In Isaiah 29:18, 19, he says, "And in that day when the Lord would do what no man could do, "open the book," "And in that day [a very little while before Lebanon will become a fruitful field, which occurred in 1852] shall the deaf hear the words of the book. The meek shall also increase their joy in the Lord; and the poor among men rejoice in the Holy One of Israel." "They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine."—Verse 24. But alas! after taking from the angel's hand, the little book, the erring ones coming to understanding; the murmurers learning doctrine; the meek increasing their joy in the Lord; and the poor among men rejoicing in the Holy One of Israel, because of teaching such glorious doctrine learned from the book, the terrible denunciations uttered by the seven thunders, brought bitterness, persecution, and death.

The things John saw were to be hereafter on the earth. The angel of Revelation 10 was not seen to bring the book from heaven; but after coming, he was seen with the book in his hand. He gave it into the hands of men. Isaiah says, "And the book is delivered to him that is unlearned," asking him to read it. Who delivered it to the unlearned, the Lord or his angel? It was not the work of men, as the Lord said that because the unlearned could not read it, he would do it. Joseph Smith, the unlearned, says the angel of God delivered the book to him; and it seems to be in perfect harmony with both Isaiah and John the Revelator. It is apparent that Daniel in prophecy refers to many of the same events as John the Revelator, and it is reasonable to suppose that some of the other prophets did. At least the harmony existing between Isaiah's prophecies of the sealed book and those of John the Revelator is worthy of our consideration.

"VIEW OF THE HEBREWS."

"View of the Hebrews, or, the Tribes of Israel in America, by Ethan Smith, Pastor of a Church in Poultney, Vermont, published and printed by Smith and Shute, Poultney, Vermont, 1825."

Chapter one is entitled, "The destruction of Jerusalem." A detailed and graphic description of the city occurs, one item is: "Most of this city was surrounded with three walls. In some places, where it was deemed inaccessible, it had only one. The wall first built was adorned and strengthened with sixty towers. Fourteen towers rested on the middle wall. The outside one (most remarkable for its workmanship) was secured with ninety towers.

"The tower Psephinos was most celebrated. It was seventy cubits high; had eight angles; and commanded a most beautiful prospect.

"Here the visitor might (in a clear atmosphere) delight himself with a view of the Mediterranean; forty miles to the west; and most of the Jewish dominions."—Page 15.

"The temple was, in many respects, the most astonishing fabric ever beheld. Its site was partly on a solid rock, originally steep on every side. The lower temple had a foundation of vast dimensions; said to be three hundred cubits from its lowest base.

"This foundation was composed of stones sixty feet in length; and the lower part of the superstructure was composed of stones of solid white marble, more than sixty feet long; and seven by nine feet in bigness. Four furlongs compassed the whole pile of building; which was one hundred cubits high; with one hundred and sixty pillars, to afford both support and ornament."—Page 16.

The wars, famines, earthquakes, pestilences, sea and waves roaring, of Matthew 24, Mark 13, and Luke 21 are credited to the time approaching the destruction of the city of Jerusalem.

The invasion and destruction by the Romans, is vividly portrayed, agreeing with and largely from Josephus. Chapter two is entitled, "The certain restoration of Judah and Israel." The revolt under Jereboam, the captivity under Shalmanezar and being outcast, is set forth of the ten tribes; while Judah was dispersed much later.

The sticks of Ezekiel 37 are personified as Israel and Judah. The reunion of the two branches of that people follows, by the figure of the two sticks, as given by the prophet. (Page 53.)

The position is presented to the reader, that, while Judah (Jew), were dispersed everywhere, the ten tribes en masse were "outcast," and both again to possess Palestine in peace.

Chapter three is entitled, "The present state of Judah and Israel."

The census of the Jews in various parts of the world is given, followed by an effort to trace and locate the ten tribes. A part of a quotation from

Second Esdras 13:40 says: "But they took this counsel among themselves, that they would leave the multitude of the heathen, and go forth into a further country, where never man dwelt; that they might there keep their statutes which they never kept (i. e. uniformly as they ought,) in their own land. There was a great way to go, namely, of a year and a half."—Page 74.

So by a northeastward journey in Asia they "came to a great water, and their way hither was thus obstructed, till God dried up that water." Probably it froze between the islands and in Behring Strait. And so they landed on this continent. (See page 78.)

James Adair a trader of forty years among the Indians of North America is introduced: "He left them and returned to England in 1774, and there published his 'History of the American Indians,' and his reasons for being persuaded that they are the ten tribes of Israel."—Page 80.

An examination and certification of Adair's work by Boudinot is given, and the writer, Ethan Smith, says of Boudinot: "He was satisfied with the truth of Mr. Adair's history and that the natives of our land are the Hebrews, the ten tribes."—Page 84.

Jonathan Edwards and William Penn are gleaned from as having made observations corroborative, among the Indians. On pages 90 and 91 appears a comparative table, of English, Indian, and Hebrew or Chaldee. In the "American Indian" by E. M. Haines, published in 1888, it occurs on page 101. In Palmyra to Independence, pages 72, 73, Mr. Smith continuing his work says: "Doctor Boudinot from many good authorities says of the Indians: 'Their language, in their roots, idiom, and particular construction, appears to have the whole genius of the Hebrew; and what is very remarkable, it has most of the peculiarities of that language; especially those in which it differs from most other languages.'"—Page 93.

Mr. Smith continuing notices song: "They frequently sing the name of Shilu (Shilo, Christ,) with the syllables of the name of God added; Thus, 'Shilu-Yo-Shilu-Yo-Shilu-he-Shilu-he-Shilu-Wah-Shilu-wah.' Thus adding to the name of Shilu, the name of Jehovah by its sacred syllables. Things like these have been found among Indians of different regions of America."—Page 101.

A grave, venerable Delaware chief said, in 1824, says Mr. Smith: "Long ago, before ever a white man stepped his foot in America, the Delawares knew there was one God; and believed there was a hell, where bad folks would go when they died; and a heaven, where good folks would go."—Page 104.

"Being destitute of books and letters, the Indians have transmitted their traditions in the following manner. Their most sedate and promising young men, are some of them selected by what they call their beloved men, or wise men, who in their turn had been thus selected."—Page 113.

"Dr. Boudinot gives it as from good authority, that the Indians have a tradition 'that the book which the white people have was once theirs. That while they had this book, things went well with them; they prospered exceedingly; but that other people got it from them; that the Indians, lost their credit: offended the Great Spirit and suffered exceedingly from the neighboring nations; and that the Great Spirit then took pity on them, and directed them to this country.'"—Page 115.

Referring to Humboldt's disclosures, also American Archæology of 1820, as to mechanic arts and degeneracy, Mr. Smith says: "Different clans parted from each other, lost each other, and formed separate tribes. Most of them formed a habit of this idle mode of living, and were pleased with it. More sensible parts of this people associated together, to improve their knowledge of the arts; and probably continued thus for ages. From these the noted relics of civilization discovered in the west and south, were furnished. But the savage tribes prevailed; and in process of time their savage jealousies and rage annihilated their more civilized brethren."—Page 172.

Mentioning eight principal localities of earthworks, in Ohio, and that there were others, it says: "These works have evinced great wars, a good degree of civilization, and great skill in fortification. And articles dug from old mounds in and near those fortified places, clearly evince that their authors possessed no small degree of refinement in the knowledge of the mechanic arts."—Page 173.

Mr. Smith notes publication of Humboldt's works, in New York in 1811. "His travels in New Spain were in the early part of the present century. He ventures no opinion on the origin of the natives of America."—Page 177.

Humboldt's comparison of the pyramid of Cholula with those of Egypt is given. (Page 179.) Says Mr. Smith of Humboldt: "To give an accurate idea of the indigenous (native) inhabitants of New Spain; it is not enough to paint them in their actual state of degradation and misery after the Spanish conquest. We must go back to a remote period, when governed by its own laws, the nation could display its proper energy. And we must consult the hieroglyphical paintings, buildings of hewn stone, and works of sculpture still in preservation; which, though they attest the infancy of the arts, bear however a striking analogy to several monuments of the more civilized people."—Page 182.

The fact of a more civilized people to whom Humboldt here refers seems to have thus far escaped Mr. Ethan Smith's attention. Mr. Smith says: "In the Archæologia Americana, (American Archæology) containing Transactions and Collections of the American Antiquarian Society, published at Worcester, Massachusetts, in 1820; are found antiquities of the people who formerly inhabited the Western parts of the United States."—Page 188.

Quoting again: "From what we see of their works, they must have had some acquaintance with the arts and sciences. They have left us perfect specimens of circles, squares, octagons, and parallel lines, on a grand and noble scale. And unless it can be proved that they had intercourse with Asia or Europe; we now see that they possessed the art of working metals."—Page 190.

Ample descriptions of earth works in Ohio are reproduced from American Archæology.

"Tools of iron, not being found in these works, is no sign they did not possess them. For had they been there, they would no doubt, long since have been dissolved by rust. Some remains of iron articles however are found, as will be seen."—Page 193.

Among articles found in a mound in Circleville, Ohio: "The handle of a small sword, or large knife, made of an elk's horn, was here found, and is now in a museum at Philadelphia. A silver ferule encompassed the end containing the blade; which silver ferule, though black, was not much injured by the rolling ages. The blade was gone by rust. But in the hole of the handle, there was left the oxide, or rust of the iron of similar shape and size of the shank formerly inserted."—Page 194.

A mirror is next described: "On it a plate of iron which . . . had become an oxide or plate of rust."—Page 195.

Of another sword: "Two or three broken pieces of a copper tube were also found, filled with iron rust."—Page 197.

What by later writers is called the Christ myth is presented in its variations. This also was from American Archæology.

Of the work and departure of this mysterious personage, he quotes: "He preached peace to men, and would permit no other offerings to the Divinity than the first fruits of the harvests. He disappeared, after he had declared to the Cholulans that he would return and govern them again and renew their happiness."—Page 205.

Continuing to quote, Smith inserts a parenthetical clause of his own; changes to parenthesis a clause of the quoted matter; transposes phrases; omits forty-five words and in no way indicates it. See page 206 where he quotes from page 263 of American Archæology, issue of 1820.

The last eight pages are devoted to finding, description, etc., of Hebrew writing on Indian Hill, in Pittsfield, Massachusetts, by Joseph Merriek. Its genuineness being questioned, Smith examines objections and overcomes them successfully as he thinks and as it would appear to the reader. Closing the Hebrew relic narrative he says: "This view of the subject may give an intelligible view of the account of the old Indian in Stockbridge to Doctor West, that his fathers had buried, not long ago, a book which they could not read."—Page 225.

Chapter four, entitled, "An address of the Prophet Isaiah relative to the restoration of his people," centers on Isaiah 18, in which the writer sees the mission of the present people of the United States to instruct suitably and restore Indians to Palestine.

Then follows conclusion, and next appendix; one notable feature of which is the answering of objections to the Joseph Merrick find of Hebrew, as having been lost by a transient Jew, or to have been accounted for otherwise than a genuine article. The answer seems complete and leaves the "find" a genuine one. The several reproductions of the account, varying somewhat, however all contain the essential facts.

SOME DUNKARD CHURCH DOCTRINE: FEET-WASHING.

"The errors in the books that attempt to describe the Brethren, as they call themselves, have been both numerous and lamentable," is the published statement of Mr. D. S. Miller, senior editor of the Gospel Messenger, Elgin, Illinois.

We trust that our attempt to describe their faith in and practice of feet-washing will be fairly presented.

While in conversation with our own missionary, J. S. Roth, on some of the various opposing faiths of our district, we noted the doctrine of the German Baptist Brethren or Dunkards who practice feet-washing as a sacred church ordinance, among the women as well as the men.

We were agreed that, for several reasons, their favorite text (1 Timothy 5: 1-25), which they give in support of women washing women's feet as a church rite, would not stand investigation. Bro. Roth stated that the Dunkards would not allow a woman to engage in that ordinance before she had been taken into their church by water baptism, which fact really debarred them from getting any consolation out of the chapter referred to, for the instruction is "Let not a widow be taken into the number" (which to the Dunkards means taken into their church), unless she has "washed the saints' feet," which they interpret the performing of the sacred ordinance of feet-washing. (See 1 Timothy 5: 9, 10.)

For argument's sake only do we allow them the interpretation of Paul as meaning that a woman must have "washed the saints' feet" before she should be "taken into the number." It is true that Dunkards lay great stress on that ordinance; but their universal practice is to take the sisters into their "number" by baptism first as will be seen by the following question to and answer from Mr. J. H. Moore, office editor of the Messenger: "Can a man or a woman join with the Brethren Church in the sacred ordinance of feet-washing before they have been baptized by triune immersion?"

On July 25 of the present year Mr. Moore answering said: "Referring to yours of recent date, allow us to say that it is not considered in order for one to go to the communion table and engage in the rite of feet-washing or any other communion service, who has not been duly received into the church by the ordinance of Christian baptism. By Christian baptism we, of course, mean triune immersion as it is performed by the Brethren.

"Among our people, one is not considered a member of the church until he has been baptized by a duly authorized administrator, and thus received into the church. After that, and never before, he is permitted to go to the Lord's table and engage in the regular ordinance connected with the love-feast occasion."

In a tract by Elder D. L. Miller we read: "The Brethren follow closely the practice of the apostolic church, and admit none into fellowship until they have been baptized."

Although the letter to Timothy infers that the "widow" should have the reputation of "washing the saints' feet" first before being worthy of a place with the "number," yet we find Elders Moore and Miller teaching directly opposite.

In a widely circulated tract (Number 42) by the senior editor of the Messenger we find that faith, repentance, baptisms, confirmation, right hand of fellowship, and kiss of love are all enjoined on a convert before invitation is extended to take part in the feet washing and communion services.

Having presented so much on the subject we now recommend that the Brethren teachers give the first twenty-two verses of that fifth chapter of Paul's first letter to Timothy a more careful reading and see if the Apostle was not giving instruction as to future administration of financial aid to certain worthy men and women, directing special attention to the care of widows over "threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, [The Inspired Translation renders it the saints' clothes.] if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work." Then Paul adds "But the younger widows refuse," giving his reasons therefor.

Do the Dunkards refuse the "younger widows" membership in their church, and accept only those fully "threescore years old"? We think they do not.

As to their claim, even, for men observing the ordinance of washing of feet in the church as the Bible directs, we find them decidedly in the wrong as will be seen by a careful reading of John 13:1-20, in which we find Jesus directing the ordinance for those "sent," "chosen," and "whomsoever I send" which certainly means his ministry—those holding the priesthood—and not all the male members of his church.

In confirmation of the above please read Matthew 26:17-29; Mark 14:13-25; Luke 22:14-20; Doctrine and Covenants 85:39-46.

Selected Articles.

THE HINDU DOCTRINE OF THE MOTHERHOOD OF GOD.

In a recent book on "Vedanta Philosophy," by the late Swami Abhedananda, he dwells at some length upon the doctrine, novel until recently to the Western mind, of the divine motherhood of God. The "Prajapati," the Lord and Father of all creatures is described in a hymn of the Rig Veda as "Aditi," signifying the motherly aspect of the Divine Being. "She is also the Father and Protector of all; she is the Son and the Creator; by Her grace She saves from sin the souls of those who worship Her. She gives unto Her children everything that is worth giving. She dwells in the forms of all Devas or bright spirits; She is all that is born and all that will be born. She is all in all." Thus runs the hymn of the Rig Veda, showing that in India before the beginning of the Christian era, God was conceived as both the Father and the Mother of the universe. Jupiter, the God of the Greeks, or Jehovah, the God of Judaism, we are told, was conceived as an extracosmic personal God, and, dwelling outside of nature, as Father alone, He remained the efficient cause of the universe, while nature appeared to be the material cause. In the Vedic conception, however, "nature or the material cause is nothing but a part of the manifested Divine Energy;" God "projects by the process of evolution everything out of His own body wherein dwell all matter and forces of the world." Says the Swami further:

"In no other Scripture than the Vedas, in no other religion than that of Vedanta, is the personal God described as the Father and the Mother, the efficient and material cause of the universe. Nowadays liberal-minded Christians are trying to introduce the idea that God is both Father and Mother of the universe; but they do not realize that by so doing they are entirely upsetting the Christian conception of God, who dwells outside of nature and of the universe. The God of Christianity can never become both Father and Mother at the same time. If we address Him as the Mother of the universe, we have outgrown that conception of God which is taught in the Bible and in Christian theology. In the whole Scriptures of the Christians there is not one passage where Jehovah is addressed as the Mother. . . .

"The vedantic idea that God is the Mother as well as the Father of all harmonizes with the modern scientific conception of God. Modern science traces the whole phenomenal universe back to the state of eternal energy. The doctrine of evolution, correlation of forces, persistence of energy, all these clearly prove that the phenomena of the whole universe and the various forces of the external and internal world are but the expressions of one eternal energy. The theory of evolution explains only the mode in which that eternal energy produces this phenomenal universe. Science has disproved the old theory of creation out of nothing through the fiat of an extracosmic God, and has shown that something can never come out of nothing. Science teaches that the universe existed in a potential state in that energy, and gradually through the process of evolution the whole potentiality has become kinetic or actual. That eternal energy is not an unintelligent energy, but is intelligent. Wherever we cast our eyes, either in the external or internal world, we find the expression, not of a fortuitous or accidental combination of matter and mechanical forces, but of regular laws guided by definite purpose. This universe is not a chaos but a cosmos, one harmonious whole. It is not an aimless chain of changes which we call evolution, but there is an orderly hidden purpose at every step of evolution. Therefore that energy is intelligent. We may call this self-existent, intelligent, eternal cosmic energy the Mother of the universe. She is the source of infinite forces and infinite phenomena. This eternal energy is called in Sanskrit Prakriti (Latin Procreatrix), the creative power of the universe."

Swami Abhedananda affirms that it is more appropriate to call this Divine Energy mother than father, "because, like a mother, that Energy holds within her the germ of the phenomenal universe before evolution, develops and sustains it, projects it on space, and preserves it when it is born." He further asserts that the Hindus have understood this Eternal Energy as the mother of the universe and have worshiped her as such from the prehistoric times of the Vedic period. At the same time he inserts a caution against confusing the worship of the Divine Mother with the nature-worship that was rejected and ignored by the Jews and the Christians. In a hymn of the Rig Veda, the Divine Mother thus proclaims her being and attributes:

"I am the Queen of the universe, the giver of all wealth and fruits of works. I am intelligent and omniscient. Although I am one, by My powers I appear as manifold. I cause war for protecting men, I kill the enemy and bring peace on earth. I stretch out heaven and earth. I have produced the Father. As the wind blows by itself, so I produce all phenomena by My own will. I am independent and responsible to none. I am beyond the sky, beyond this earth. My Glory is the phenomenal universe; such am I by my power."

The wonderful effect, says Swami Abhedananda, of this conception of Motherhood of God is to be seen in the daily life of almost every Hindu man and especially of the Hindu women. To quote further:

"A Hindu woman thinks that she is a part of the Divine Mother, nay, one with Her. She looks upon all men and women of the world as her own children. She thinks of herself as the blessed Mother of the world. How can such a woman be unkind to anybody? Her pure motherly love flows toward all men and women equally. There is no room for any impure thought or feeling or passion in such a heart. That perfect motherly feeling makes her ultimately live like the Divine Mother on earth. Her ideal God in human form is her own child. She worships the incarnation of God as her most beloved child. Just as Mary was the Mother of Jesus, so the Hindu women in India often look upon themselves as the mother of Krishna, the Hindu Christ, or of Rama, another incarnation. Christian mothers, perhaps, will be able to appreciate this to a certain extent. If a Christian mother thinks that she is Christ's mother and loves him as she loves her own child, the effect will be wonderful. She will then understand what Divine Motherhood is. The Hindus think this the easiest way for women to attain to that love which makes them unselfish and divine. A mother can sacrifice everything for her child; she naturally loves the child without seeking any return, though there are mothers who do not possess pure, unselfish, motherly love. A true mother, however, loves her child above everything. If such a child be an incarnation of God himself, how easy it will be for the mother to attain to the highest goal of religion."—Literary Digest, August 1.

PASSIVE WARFARE.

The world is passing through a strange phase of human government.

When has it happened before, one wonders, that three of the greatest governments in Europe have been defied within their own borders by great communities, usually among the most peaceful and law-abiding members of their population?

In Russia, the land of the Czar of Peace, the gallant little Finns are resisting the policy which dooms their national life; in France, the land of the Roman Catholics, the pious monks are driven by force from their monasteries; and in England, for the first time in our generation, we are at the beginning of a religious war against an Act of Parliament under which thousands of loyal citizens, ministers, professors of universities, and members of Parliament are refusing to pay their rates. Then resistance varies—in England it is Nonconformist, in France, Roman Catholic, and in Finland, National; but there is something remarkable in this simultaneous rising of forces against the powers that be.

The noblest spectacle of all is in Finland, where the Czar who summoned Europe to gather round his table of peace is driving loyal citizens from their country because they refuse to take part in war, but believe in peace too well. It is an astonishing comment on the great hypocrisy of The Hague.

The passive resistance of the Finns will leave Finland, perhaps, a wilderness. General Bobrikoff, the Governor-General, has no mercy. A bank manager, a retired publisher, a barrister, and the manager of a paper-mill were banished by the first of his orders, and on the day it was issued a well-known Finn was heard to say: "We have been free men for seven hundred years; to-day we have become Russian serfs." When the exiles left their homes the station would not hold the people who met to see them leave, and for half a mile along the railway the people waved their hats and threw flowers and sang their national hymn.

Newspapers in Finland have insured themselves against their own laws, the young men driven into the army have refused to appear when called up, and again and again the elected representatives of the people have defied the man who writes a peace rescript with one hand and makes a military despotism with the other.

There is something in the struggle of the priests in France and the suppression of their schools which recalls the heroic days of Cromwell. Think what we will of the religious orders, only a heart of stone can fail to be moved by the picture of the monks driven from their knees by armed troops. Two thousand people ascended a mountain at midnight to resist the detachments of infantry, engineers, and dragoons who marched to expel the monks from the Grande Chartreuse, and a hundred people seized a sheriff, took his horse, and turned him back when he came to summon the monks to appear before the Civil Court.

So, in more than two thousand schools, the Associations Law has been resisted, and the best-hated man in France to-day is its Prime Minister.

Temper runs high when soldiers disobey, and even the army has refused at times to do its duty under the law which closes the rebellious schools. Colonel de St. Remy refused to obey his general's orders to send a squadron to close a school in Brittany and was deprived of his command and thrown into prison. Major Ladurie refused to carry out his orders at Douarnenez, and was imprisoned and struck off the army list. And now we read that the other day, after sending two squadrons of his regiment to the Grande Chartreuse, the colonel in command of the Fourth Dragoons at Chambéry immediately resigned.

Laughed at and pooh-poohed as a platform threat, the passive resistance of the Nonconformists to the Education Act is developing into a situation of the gravest import. One district council in London has refused to put the Bill into operation if it should be passed for the metropolis. Two Oxford professors have refused the rate already, and the adherents of the movement are counted in ten thousands.

The right to resist has been the last resource of free men in all ages; there is, perhaps, a point at which the citizen has the right to say to the State: "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther." Yet nobody has ever been able to finally answer the question: "How far is it justifiable for a good citizen to resist a law he believes to be wrong? In two or three cases taxpayers refused to pay the extra war tax for South Africa, but it has been left for the Education Act to bring the crisis between conscience and taxes to a head.

The rebel ratepayers have more than one illustrious example to appeal to. John Milton did not think it a crime to defy Parliament and its statutes when they conflicted with his ideas of common freedom, and when the Presbyterians were attempting to suppress free printing the poet set himself directly against them and published pamphlets without a license. One of them, his "Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce," was ready for the press when the new law was passed demanding that all printed matter should be licensed, and Milton brought it out without a license, dedicated to the Government whose law he was breaking.

A WISE MAN.

Further back in history, good William Tyndale defied the Government to do its worst against his translation of the Bible, and published and republished the books in spite of laws and threats. He was wise in his generation. When the Bishop of London sent to buy up his Bibles, Tyndale sold them readily, and the Bible bonfire in Cheapside was the first huge advertisement the Bible ever had. Out of the profits of his sale Tyndale printed a new edition, and the Scriptures were circulated far and wide.

It was passive resistance which gave England a free press. Sixty years ago the guard of the London and Brighton mail, as he neared his journey's end, would throw a parcel to a man standing in a field by the line. It contained the unstamped newspapers which the police were waiting to seize at the other end, but which were in this way delivered to the agents and circulated secretly to subscribers. There is a man still living to-day who incurred six hundred thousand pounds in fines by this resistance of the law.

But we need not go back so far for precedents. It is an astonishing thing to remember that the House of Lords itself, within the memory of men who still sit in the Upper Chamber, has resisted not merely the law of the land, but the sacred right of the Crown itself.

Within the last half century the House of Lords refused to admit a peer created by Queen Victoria. Lord Palmerston was Prime Minister when the Queen created Sir James Parke a baron of the United Kingdom, with the title of Lord Wensleydale, and the new baron was summoned in the usual way to the opening of Parliament.

The Lords refused to admit the new peer on the ground that the peerage was created "for the term of his natural life," and was not therefore, hereditary. The highest legal authorities were against the peers, and the law officers of the Crown supported Lord Wensleydale; but the Government and the Queen gave way, and a new patent had to be issued before the House of Lords would admit Baron Wensleydale to its debates.

Passive resistance, indeed, has been a weapon of reformers at all times. Not many weeks ago a new law came into being which owes its existence to the persistent defiance of the law by a little group of men in the interests of science. For years cremation was illegal in England, but bodies were burned on private estates in spite of the law. Then a child was cremated in Wales, and the Government prosecuted the father. The case went against the Crown, and after that the resistants had no law to resist. The resistance of to-day is the obedience of to-morrow.—London Daily Express, May 12.

TWO PICTURES.

Number 1.

Mrs. Willis sat in her pleasant living room looking about upon its orderly arrangement, not with the smile of satisfaction one might have expected, but with a little frown of vexation which deepened as hurrying footsteps came through the hall. The children, a boy of ten and a girl of twelve, rushed into the room and with the impulsiveness of children, threw their books and other school belongings upon chairs and table and hurried out to their play, leaving the room in greater disorder.

"Come back, Paul! Come back, Mabel!" cried the mother in an irritated tone; "Come right back this minute and put your things away!" but the children were out of hearing and the mother, with a manner that indicated much perturbation of spirit, hung up Mabel's hat, picked up the books and put them away, sighing as she did so. "Oh, dear! when will these children ever learn to be orderly? I talk to them continually, but they pay no attention. I don't believe they would pick up and put away their things from one year's end to another. The house would always be in disorder if I did not pick up after them. I am sure they do not take after me, for I can not bear to see things in such confusion."

Mrs. Willis' annoyance had not disappeared when the children came in to supper and was not lessened by seeing Paul throw his hat upon the table and his ball upon the sofa, while Mabel disposed of a family of paper dolls in various places upon the table and chairs.

"Take those things right away from there," called out Mrs. Willis in vexation. "I have just got the room in order after you.

Some of these days I will burn up all of your trumpery if you persist in leaving it around. It seems to me," she said as they took their places at the table, "there were never two such careless and disorderly children. I am just worn out picking up after them," turning to her husband. Then began a recital of their various manifestations of untidiness which lasted during a good part of the meal. The children paid little attention to the shower of words; it was such a usual thing that it made very little impression upon them. They knew that, with all the scolding and complaining, mother would pick up the books, hang up the caps and take care of the toys, so what need was there that the children should be anxious about putting them away? If they could not find their school-books in the morning, mother would help them find them, and the fault-finding which accompanied her efforts were of no importance so that the things were found.

Mrs. Willis was a discouraged mother; she loved order, how could her children be so disorderly? She had failed to teach them to care for their belongings and now she felt herself powerless. There was nothing for her to do but to live in confusion or herself keep putting things back in place as often as they were thrown about. No wonder she felt discouraged with such a prospect in view.

Number 2.

Mrs. Markham was a mother who had an experience similar to that of Mrs. Willis. She, too, had felt discouraged at her failure to teach her children to be orderly, but she did not give up in despair. She read and studied and thought and at length evolved a plan of action. She had been accustomed to following her children up and putting away their various possessions. She would do so no longer; they must learn this great lesson of order for themselves.

Her children were Harry, a boy of ten, and Alice, a girl of twelve. On the day when Mrs. Markham had come to her decision her children rushed home from school, threw down their books and hurried off to play. Resisting the impulse to restore order, the mother apparently paid no attention to the children's carelessness, but patiently waited. The supper was a happy meal, there were no reproaches, no finding of fault, even though the cap was thrown on the table, the ball club on the sofa and the dolls left to encumber the chairs.

When the time came for the evening visit with her children Mrs. Markham sat down with one on each side of her and told them some very interesting stories. She at length began to tell them about the law of order which prevailed throughout the universe and the disastrous effect which would result if these laws were not obeyed. She told them how the planets must keep in their various places in order that the universe should not fall into chaos. She talked of the orderly recurrence of the seasons and the value it is to the farmer to feel no uncertainty as to where he should find Spring and Winter. She spoke of the fact that day and night never got out of place; and she endeavored in many ways to illustrate the fact that "order is heaven's first law;" and also that heaven is not a place so much as it is a condition; that order in the household brings harmony, and that is heavenly. Disorder brings confusion, annoyance, and irritation, and these are not heavenly.

The children were deeply interested and asked many questions. At length Mrs. Markham in a quiet manner called their attention to the disorder in the room. "Now," she said quietly, "I straightened everything here and put everything in its place this afternoon; can you imagine how things have become disorderly?"

"Why, it is because we children threw our books and things down where they did not belong."

"Have you ever done so before?" asked the mother.

The children smiled as if that question were a needless one.

"Do you ever put your belongings away?" asked the mother.

"Not very often, I guess," said Harry.

"And yet you usually find them put away when you want them, do you not? How does that happen?" said the mother.

"That is because we have such a good mamma," said Alice, "and she puts them away for us."

"I am not so sure about her being a good mamma," said Mrs. Markham, "if she does your work for you. Do you think it quite fair that you should leave it for her to do?"

"She don't have to," said Harry, "she just wants to."

"But why does she want to?" said the mother. "Is it because she likes to do extra work?"

"I know," said Alice, "it is because she likes to see things tidy."

"Don't you like to see things tidy?" asked the mother.

"Oh, I don't care very much," said Harry, and Alice answered with a blush:

"I am sure I don't care enough to pick things up all the time."

"Well," said Mrs. Markham, "I have been thinking this matter over, and I have come to the conclusion that I will no longer do your work for you. We shall either be obliged to live in disorder, or you will have to take care of your own things. I want you to understand this and you must not feel annoyed or make any complaint when your things are lost, for I shall not help you find them. We will try this for a time; you may throw your things down and I will not put them away and we will see what the result will be. I shall not scold you and I shall not remind you to put things away. Do you think this would be a good plan?"

The children were quite willing to make the experiment, as it seemed to promise them exemption from responsibility. And so the next week Mrs. Markham endured with perfect placidity the confusion that ensued. The books and caps and playthings were thrown down and left undisturbed. Of course there resulted much annoyance, for somehow they would not always stay where they were dropped. Books could not be found when it was time to go to school and caps were missing, but mother did not seem to be in the least disturbed.

"I can not go without my hat," said Alice one morning, "and I can not find it anywhere."

"I am sorry," said Mrs. Markham, "but you must not stay away from school; you can wear your Tam."

"Oh, mamma, wear a Tam this hot day!" expostulated Alice.

"Well, then, you can go bareheaded," said her mother serenely.

Alice compromised by wearing a last year's hat and made up her mind that after this she would take care of her hat.

"I can't find my arithmetic," said Harry. "I am sure I left it right here on the table last night."

"There are so many things on the table it would be difficult to decide that it is not there."

"Oh, mamma, the bell is beginning to ring. Do help me find it!"

"I can not break my part of the contract," said Mrs. Markham, quietly. "I promised not to interfere either in putting away your things or in hunting them up when they are lost. If you can not find the book you will be obliged to go without it."

The week's experience was quite a trial to the children as well as to the mother, and they acknowledged that they did not like their own method.

"Well," said Mrs. Markham, "what shall we do now?" I find it much more comfortable for myself not to do your work, though I should be very glad indeed if we could find some plan by means of which we could have an orderly house once more. I am quite sure it has been quite unpleasant for papa to have things in such confusion and I will be more than pleased if we can find some way by means of which orderliness can be restored."

"I would be willing to take care of my own things," said Alice, "only I forget."

"That is what ails me," said Harry; "I don't want to be disorderly."

"Then," said the mother, "what we need is a help to the memory. I will propose this plan: Every time that either of you leave a book, cap, or other belonging out of place it shall disappear and you can only obtain it by paying a fine, not of money, but some little task which I shall set you to do. You understand that when I put things away where you can not find them I am not doing it to punish you, but to help you remember, and therefore you will pay your fines with promptness and with perfect good nature."

The children both gladly agreed to the proposed method. Sometimes in carrying it out they were subjected to great annoyance in not finding their belongings where they had left them, but they realized that they had no just cause for complaint, for this was a contract, and little by little they grew into the habit of thinking to put things away, and so established for themselves a disposition towards orderliness which brought comfort into the home and created greater harmony of development in their own characters.—Mary Wood-Allen, M. Program for September Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

Opening hymn, No. 151, Saints' Harp. Prayer. Scripture reading, Ephesians 5: 15-33. Reading from Home Column with discussion. Roll call. Business. Closing hymn, No. 146, Saints' Harp.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Ellen L. Cook of Sedalia, Kentucky, requests prayers that she may be healed of typhoid fever and other afflictions, if it is the Lord's will. She has been afflicted more than three months.

Bro. Orlando O. Halsted, Harrow, Ontario, desires that Saints join him in fasting and prayer three Sabbath days, September 6, 13, and 20, that his wife may render obedience to the gospel.

Sr. Mary Campbell of Kibbie, Illinois, requests the prayers of the Saints, and especially of the Prayer Union, that she may be healed of her afflictions and be able to raise her children to love and fear the Lord.

Miscellaneous Department.

TECUMSEH, Nebraska, August 25.

Editors Herald: Brn. Self and Madison did some street-preaching while in this city during July; they also delivered three sermons at Mount Auburn Schoolhouse, two miles east of Tecumseh, which were appreciated. I think a good work can be done here.

Verily, this town is "cursed with churches," as one gentleman remarked, there being the Catholic, Presbyterian, Methodist, Christian, Universalist, Baptist, Seventh-day Adventist, Christian Scientist, United Brethren, and Episcopal—ten in all.

We hold our prayer-meetings and Sunday-school each Sunday afternoon when the weather permits.

We were rather surprised, though pleased, to learn of the marriage of Bro. Madison and Sr. Stena Christianson.

Your sister,

BERTHA BRANDON.

PADUCAH, Kentucky, August 24.

Editors Herald: I thought I would drop you a few lines to tell of the grand meeting we have had. In my first letter I asked for some of the elders to come here and preach. Bro. C. L. Snow reading my letter came to our assistance. There was a real good crowd out to hear Saturday evening also at eleven o'clock Sunday and Bro. Snow told them the good news in such a good, plain way that any one could understand. He is a good instructor and can give strength to the Saints. We hope to have him come again soon. A rich lady was out to hear him and wants him to come again. It was the first time they had ever heard such preaching. I hope and pray some good will follow. It did us good to meet with a true Saint once more. It was the first preaching we have heard since last August. We hope to get to go back home to Illinois where we can attend our meeting and Sunday-school. Asking an interest in your prayers for me and my little ones, I remain,

Your sister,

BETTIE JOHNSON.

Bow, Washington, August 19.

Editors Herald: It was the privilege of myself and wife to hear Elder J. W. Roberts preach at both Seattle and La Conner. Afterwards he came here and preached three good sermons in the schoolhouse, August 1 and 2. We expect him here again on his return from British Columbia. How good it seemed to hear a good sermon after being without so long. We hope to see Apostle Griffiths here before long.

To those who have written either to Sr. Hilsinger or myself in regard to an elder coming here and locating, working at secular work through the week and preaching when opportunities present themselves, I would say there is room in Washington for several.

Don't worry about "big money," and a chance to "make a fortune" in a year, but come prepared to do your duty as a laborer for Christ, and verily you will have your reward.

Surely the sheep need a shepherd and they should be fed so as not to backslide or be a stumblingblock for others. Temptations beset us on every side and many are led from the "narrow way," especially young people. Satan is on the alert to catch the unwary and it behooves both the priesthood and laity of the body or church of Christ to be on the watch that we may confess our faults one to another and strengthen and be strengthened by mutual ties.

As I come in contact with different people and talk with them, how I wonder when I take them by the hand, if they are sincere in what they say!

As a Latter Day Saint, I say to my fellow brethren and sisters, in all we say and do, let us be sincere. If we are sincere, surely we will make some sacrifice towards the debt of Grace-land, subscribe for one or more church papers, or help in some other way the onward march of the gospel work. If we are sincere in what we say, we will try never to say anything that will offend or hurt another. Let us live as though we were what we claim to be and not like the world.

In gospel bonds,

WILLIAM E. CLARK.

PACKARD, Iowa, August 24.

Editors Herald: On August 6 Elder F. A. Smith arrived here, accompanied by Bishop Hilliard, Bro. McCoy having arrived from Buffalo Center the third. We had the privilege of listening to a splendid sermon and receiving much instruction from each of the first two named elders. Two officers were called and ordained by Brn. Smith and Hilliard—Bro. Oscar Sherman, teacher and W. H. Farr, deacon, the writer having been ordained to the office of priest. We were placed in good working order and organized with sixteen members and expect to receive two or three more soon. We also have a Sabbath-school of nearly thirty members. We expect to hold a picnic September 5. So you see the northern part of the Des Moines District can not longer be counted with a cipher. We hope to grow spiritually, as well as numerically.

It got noised about that the writer was to preach his first sermon the next Sabbath after organization and the schoolhouse was full. I preached with good liberty on "What shall I do to be saved?"—Acts 16: 30. I contrasted man's way with Christ's and drove home a wedge between truth and error that I hope will cause them to separate in the minds of those present. To God be the credit, who gave so abundantly of his Spirit.

Praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your brother,

FRED FARR.

TABERVILLE, Missouri, August 25.

Editors Herald: The Clinton, Missouri, District reunion convened at this place August 13 and continued ten days. The attendance was good. It was thought there were eight hundred people on the grounds last Sunday. Of the ministry, there were with us Elders I. N. White, F. C. Keck, Henry Sparling, and Ammon White, besides our own missionary force and local workers. All seemed to enjoy a goodly degree of the Spirit. At the close three precious souls were baptized by Elder Ammon White.

It was decided to hold a reunion on the same ground in August, 1904.

Several are still in camp waiting for the debate which will begin here August 26, between the Christian people and us. Elder Padget will represent the Christian Church and Bro. Henry Sparling will represent our side of the question.

All seem to think the reunion has removed much prejudice, and we hope the debate will convince many of the truthfulness of the gospel.

Your brother in Christ,

A. C. SILVERS.

HARRISBURG, Arkansas, August 20.

Editors Herald: I was taken sick a week ago and was so low I could scarcely speak, when through the prayers of my wife I was raised from my bed and to-day I walked five miles. I ask the prayers of all the Saints, especially of the Prayer Union, that I and mine may be healed.

I ask the address of the nearest elder or the missionary in charge, that if it be the Lord's will one may come here. There are no other Saints anywhere near that I know of. I have been doing what preaching I could this summer as I am a priest from the Kibbie Illinois Branch. The people are anxious to hear and have asked me many times to send for an elder. I would be pleased to have one come this way. He would be cared for.

In gospel bonds,

C. A. GRISWOLD.

PIEDMONT, Missouri, August 20.

Editors Herald: I have been in the work of my Master and I am in the work to the end. I left home about the first of May, have held meetings in Springfield, Missouri, and several places in my field, Southeastern Missouri. I returned home July 5; enjoyed the pleasure and comfort of home and the company of the finest lady and boy in the world for about three weeks. Found considerable sickness and some deaths in Independence among the Saints. I preached several times while at home in Independence and Kansas City.

Left home again July 25 for St. Louis where I preached for the Saints in their fine church the following Sunday morning. Began tent meetings at night and remained a week, doing most of the preaching in the tent. Was cared for by Sr. Walrond. Found Bro. and Sr. J. B. Bowers living near the tent. I baptized Sr. Bowers some four years ago at Cove, Arkansas. To say that we enjoyed ourselves in talking over old times in Arkansas is putting it mildly.

August 6, I received a telegram to come to Piedmont, Missouri, at once. Bro. John Hartrup was not expected to live twenty-four hours. I preached Wednesday night and took train early next morning for Piedmont where my arrival at twenty minutes past seven that morning found Bro. Hartrup very low. I administered to him and all fever and disease seemed to leave him. Remained with him several days and left him and went to Sawyer, Missouri, preached five times and was then called back to preach his funeral sermon. Quite a large crowd gathered at his son's house and we presented the hope, promise, and reward of the Saints. Good attention was given and two of the ministers of the town were out and assisted in the funeral. Bro. Hartrup had only lived here about two years, but was well respected in the town. I will return to Sawyer to my meeting. I want to get in steady work until December.

In bonds,

J. D. ERWIN.

MONONGAHELA, Pennsylvania, August 22.

Saints' Herald: I will write some concerning the labors of Bro. L. D. Ullom and James D. Porter in this valley. Since Bro. Porter returned from Falls Creek, Pennsylvania, he has preached nearly every night. The Lord has blessed him with a strong voice and it is remarkable how he stands the work, as the preaching is about all in open air, and in new places. He is fearless and energetic. The Spirit has truly been his educator. May God bless his noble ministers with power and Spirit wherever they go, that the honest in heart may hear and obey.

Bro. Porter is not without unpleasant experiences in his labors. At Falls Creek, Pennsylvania, the Catholic brothers wanted to treat him to cold lead, but he came off unharmed and baptized a Catholic lady beside. At Bellevernon fists were shaken, and the looks were ugly, and the remark was made, "That man ought to be driven out of town." But as no one undertook the driving, Bro. Porter and Ullom walked out after preaching ten sermons, and having aroused a good interest. As a result of their labors a Baptist lady, Mrs. Belle Cromlish, was healed of cancer of the stomach. She had doctored for thirteen years. After the brethren administered to her, the doctor came the next day, but did not give the usual treatment, as she seemed so well. And when the brethren came back five days after, she expressed her intention of being baptized. That will naturally change her from a Baptist to a Latter Day Saint. Her husband is so well pleased that the indications are that he will soon follow suit. He says she eats better than she has for thirteen years.

The last news we had from Fayette City is that if the elders come there to preach, they will hear from "hen land." We should think it would be all right if they are fresh and applied right; but it is different when the intention seems to be to make an external application by using the elders as targets. Bro. Porter says he wants those eggs so he will go anyhow; and Bro. Ullom is not frightened. And as precious souls are in question the work will go on in spite of threats, bullets, eggs, or anything else.

After finishing meetings at Bellevernon, the brethren came to Charleroy and commenced meetings on the streets. A good band of Saints came and made sweet music, and a large and interested crowd soon gathered about. The police kindly stood by, keeping order. The outlook for a revival is all right, so far. Husband and I take turns in making flying trips to the meetings.

Bro. L. D. Ullom administered to a child here which was instantly healed. My husband also was healed from kidney trouble which had prevented his work.

The brethren intend going to Gleneaston to conference, which will convene September 5. We regret their departure, but live in good hopes of their return. May the Lord bless those wives and families who sacrifice thus for the gospel of Christ.

There is a general indifference manifest among the people of the world. It is the fulfilling of the prophecies. God bless all Saints,

MRS. EUNICE BEAM.

ROSLYN, Washington, August 24.

Editors Herald: I left my home in Dow City, Iowa, August 13, leaving my family in care of our Father in heaven, and arrived in Ellensburg, Washington, the 15th. I was permitted to preach the next day nine miles southeast of that place in my brother's schoolhouse to attentive listeners.

After visiting my brother a day or two I left Ellensburg and came to this place and spoke twice yesterday and am to speak again to-night. One lady has given her name for baptism which will be attended to to-day. I expect to leave this place Wednesday, the 26th, for Seattle, Washington, leaving the work here to those who have been placed in care of this part of the field, Elders D. E. Powell and Frank Chatburn, and will try and find my associate J. W. Roberts who is on the Sound.

I feel grateful to our Father in heaven that I am again able to leave home and sound the gospel story. I have been shut up at home for a long time on account of my wife's sickness, but I am glad to tell you the Lord has blessed her with health again. I love this work and am willing to do all in my power for the advancement of it. The Saints are very kind to the missionaries here in Washington and are anxious for preaching, so we have plenty of work to do.

Your brother in Christ,

N. V. SHELDON.

KIDDER, South Dakota, August 24.

Editors Herald: Leaving home June 12, my first stop was with the Saints of Des Moines, where we had the pleasure of listening to Bro. G. H. Hilliard on the date named above. After the service we were kindly cared for until morning by Bro. and Sr. Charles Johnson, of East Des Moines. From there I went to Eagle Grove, Iowa, where I spoke on Sunday, June 14, morning and evening. A Sunday-school is being held there with Ella B. Hayes as superintendent. The following week I went on to my appointed field of labor, South Dakota, my first effort being at Dyce, where May Vickerman resides, who was baptized one year ago when we first made an effort there. Having tried to live as one of God's children, she has had an influence for good among the people there, and nobly defends the work. I held a few meetings and left some investigating, with a desire to learn more of our faith before taking the necessary steps of obedience. I think perhaps three or four may obey when we return there sometime this fall.

While there I received a card from Bro. and Sr. A. C. Stone, desiring me to come at once to their home, near Winfred, in order to administer to one of their boys, who was very low with a gathering of water around his lungs and heart. He had been tapped by the doctor, who said if the gathering came again nothing would save him except the same operation. It seemed the young man had no inclination to try the doctor this time, but wished to trust the Lord's plan of being healed. Nine days had passed before I could get there, and from all appearances the young man was failing fast; so much so that his heart skipped every fourth beat. We asked him if he desired to be administered to, and he expressed himself as being willing to trust the Lord. We therefore proceeded with the administration according to the written plan, inviting the family into the room while we had a season of prayer. The Lord knew what we desired and came to our assistance by that calm, gentle influence of his Holy Spirit by which we were made to realize we were not forgotten. As a result of this administration the young man began to mend from that time. The next day at the dinner-table he said food had not tasted as good for a long time. While this man was not a member of the church, there was a manifestation of faith in God's power, and this should be an evidence to him and all who witnessed the same. To God be all the praise.

Have been at Waubay and Millbank on our way here. Have held meetings as much as possible. Only Sunday work could be done here because of harvest time among farmers. Have held some meetings over the line in North Dakota, at Forman.

My colaborer and myself have been trying our hands at gathering grain the last week. Farmers are rejoicing over an abundant harvest of all kinds of grain. Church building is the talk here at Newark by outsiders and some of the Saints, several having offered substantial aid. I hope the Lord may direct the matter.

One week ago we organized a Sunday-school at Newark, South Dakota, with Bro. Joseph Mitchell superintendent, and Bro. P. Davis assistant, Sr. Martha Bierlein secretary, and other officers as required.

We have reason to feel encouraged in the work, yet we do not expect to convert all we meet or hear of. We shall try to patiently and faithfully perform our duties day by day. Have enjoyed a goodly degree of the Spirit in presenting the word from time to time, for which we feel grateful to the Lord, realizing our success depends upon his aid and assistance.

Desiring to be in such a condition that we can labor together with God in the accomplishment of his work here on earth, I remain,

Yours in the faith,

ELI HAYER.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, August 16.

Editors Herald: This morning I am favorably situated in the Kirtland Hotel, Mrs. Givens, her two daughters and two sons being in charge, all of whom I find to be Saints who are desirous of doing right. The property belongs to the church and is now in good condition, and upon entering the hotel I am pleased to see for the perusal of boarders and visitors not only a Cleveland daily paper but also the SAINTS' HERALD, Zion's Ensign, and Autumn Leaves; and one has only to look around a little to get hold of a number of the Gospel Quarterly.

Many Saints doubtless will feel glad to learn that there is here a public house kept in proper order and run in keeping with the principles of temperance and godliness; and I trust that when they have occasion to visit Kirtland, as one of the old landmarks where the pioneers of the gospel under the restoration wrought in the last century, they will not forget to patronize this hotel in which each member of the Reorganization has an individual interest. If you wish to give notice of your visit there beforehand, address Miss Susie Givens, Willoughby, Ohio, R. F. D. No. 2, Kirtland Hotel. There is a telephone in the hotel, however, so that should any one arrive in Willoughby, by night or day, they can soon be in communication and get conveyance and accommodations.

At present there are sixteen regular boarders here and a few transients. The writer is one of the transients, and as I sit and write my eyes occasionally are turned toward the window, and just across the street in full view is the Temple upon which tastefully set out in gold letters I read, "House of the Lord." Wonderful inscription, indeed, is this, found almost alone among the myriad of names written over and across the face of so many edifices erected within the same century, but bearing the appellations of men and women who seem to have been fortunate enough to have had their names written thus high, by human and erring judges, who have taken it upon themselves to pass upon the lives of their fellows. Many magnificent tabernacles have been noted in my travels inscribed to Saints Peter, Paul, Patrick, John, Thomas, Catherine, Mary, Joseph, Cecil, Margaret, etc.; but, whatever others may deem most right and proper, to the writer it is appropriate that the tabernacle of the Lord should be placed preëminent, over them all. "Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man?"

But a few weeks ago, a lady missionary from Salonica, Turkey, came with others through curiosity to see the Temple, and entered the building with the same thoughtless indifference as to the sacredness of the place, as though she had entered one of the mosques of Omar. But after canvassing with Elder Greene the work of the lower audience room and learning something of the faith of the Saints a different sentiment seemed to pervade her mind; and upon going to the second audience room, a holy and divine influence, she said, touched her, and she exclaimed: "Surely this is the Lord's house." The stream of tourists from various parts of the world to visit this building which seventy-two years ago was so quietly and prayerfully erected under the divine guidance, so claimed, of the young Palmyra seer, is a marvel.

Since I reached here I have had the pleasure of showing the building to a resident of Bangkok, Siam, and the register is fairly interspersed with the names of prominent men and women, of their respective localities at least, over the world, the list since May 18 of the present year numbering seven hundred and forty-five. To show the reader something of the places and countries from which these parties come I have hastily taken from the registered list, the following: Mrs. Caroline E. Parke, Washington, District of Columbia; Mrs. Wilber Frick, New York City; Ben E. and Diana F. Rich, Rexburg, Idaho; Mrs. A. B. Waite, San Francisco, California; Miss Bessie Vair, Barrie, Ontario; Mrs. Doctor T. Heyward Hays, Bangkok, Siam; John Maedel, Cash, Michigan; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Rosendale, Pasadena, California; Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Marple, Louisville, Kentucky; Mrs. Ellen La Hell, Stratford on Avon, England; Lester Bernstein, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; M. W. Day, Vienna, Virginia; Alice S. King, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hungerford, Loda, Illinois; James Webber, Ft. Wayne, Indiana; J. H. Smith, Knoxville, Tennessee; Rebecca Whitfield, Sunderland, England; C. J. Kaighin, wife and daughter, San Francisco, California; Alice E. Stillman, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Sarah M. Hughes, Manchester, England; John E. Meredith, Birmingham, England; Miss Cecelia McHenry, Cleveland, Ohio; Miss Camille Wolfram, Cleveland, Ohio. These will be sufficient to help the reader to judge of the territory of the world covered on the list, an average of one hundred and forty-five visitors a month and of nearly all classes and conditions of people in the world. Since coming here I have noticed as many as three large automobiles at once standing before the temple door besides the fine carriage turnouts, awaiting an examination of the building by the people, and that they also might hear the story of the restored gospel.

Bro. L. R. Devore, formerly missionary to the Society Islands, is in charge, and from morn till night waits upon the people. Incidentally he remarked to me that his age and infirmities were such that he could not travel much more anyway. I said, "Why should you make excuse for that, Bro. Devore? Could you preach to as many by traveling?" He thought not. During the summer season not half so many; and of the classes usually met with here he said that he could never meet them in any other way. This is the Lord's way then. Let us not be unmindful of it.

While attending worship in the Temple the first Sunday upon my arrival, I was greatly impressed that the work of the restoration of the building should be completed at an early time. The vails of the Temple, placed there for proper useful purposes from the first, have never been restored since they were torn out in the dark and cloudy day. When we repaired the building we thought we could not do this for want of means. Now the Saints are better able to do it by far, than they were to perform the work of the other repairs in 1883 to 1885. One thousand dollars would likely be sufficient to properly restore both audience rooms. But if it takes more the work should be accomplished before the time of the meeting of the next General Conference. What would the Tabernacle in the wilderness, or the Temple at Jerusalem have been, without the vails divine wisdom directed placed therein? Why should we hold out to the world, who seem anxious to see and learn of the work of the Lord, as begun in 1830, his house in a pillaged and half restored shape, thus minimizing the actual greatness of the work of the Saints of our time?

This temple should be fully restored at once by the offerings of the Saints, and we have determined to give all Saints an opportunity of helping in this; and as was said touching the building of the Tabernacle under Moses, the call is again made in behalf of this special work: "TAKE YE FROM AMONG YOU AN OFFERING UNTO THE LORD: WHOSEVER IS OF A WILLING HEART, LET HIM BRING IT, AN OFFERING OF THE LORD." These offerings may be sent to E. L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop, Lamoni, Iowa, or pay to any bishop, or Bishop's agent. Due lists will be kept of the same and published with the annual report. How many of the Saints and friends want the "House of the Lord" fully restored? Let us hear from you.

I have taken pains to examine the effects of the stroke of lightning over this building in the spring. Certainly it was a terrible bolt as stated by Brn. Griffiths and Greene at the time; and yet it did not touch either of the audience rooms. A close examination of its work shows that the bolt was divided into at least five distinct parts as it approached the building, and whatever the cause of this, doubtless it was the means of preserving the building. Whatever criticism or doubt may have occurred to saint or sinner by reason of the occurrence it is apparent that the result discloses the fact, however loath persons may be to admit it, that Providence was on the side of the Saints in the midst of the great storm. In this connection I am also reminded of the imperfect manner in which the rod has been left on this building. Originally a good rod well pointed and forming the weather vane extended properly to the ground on the outside of the building. Links of this rod were carried away later, and since the rod has been cut so that it stops in the belfry. This should be placed as it was originally. It takes some means to do this; the neglect has been for want of the help. The Bishop can only do when he has the means to do with in making the repairs.

Among the visitors met since my arrival, is a gentleman who when a young man had charge of the temple. His name is Horace H. Ranney of Otisville, Michigan. His father's name was Amos Ranney, in the early time a resident and member of the church at Kirtland. This is the first visit of Mr. Ranney for about fifty years, and I was interested in his narrative of an incident in connection with the Temple when he had charge. The old settlers had told me that there was such an occurrence, but they only had a general idea of it and I paid little attention to it, thinking there might be a streak of imagination about it. Mr. Ranney, however, says that he was the party in charge and that the experience has impressed his mind all through his life. He said: "One night I dreamed I saw Satan on the cupola of the Temple trying to destroy it. And he finally stretched himself down in front of the lower northeast corner window and made an assault upon it, breaking it in." The dream aroused him up at once, and he awakened his father, saying that something was wrong at the Temple. They both arose and hastened to the building and found the lower window at the northeast corner broken in and a large firebrand thrown in upon the floor. They were just in time to save the building from destruction. Mr. Ranney claims that it was a warning from the Lord. He seemed glad to get the church tracts to read and to learn of the work of the Reorganization.

The meetings here have been fairly good and quite well attended of late. Have met with the missionaries Brn. G. T. Griffiths, James E. Kelley, J. W. Smith, Francis Ebeling, V. M. Goodrich, and Bishop's Agent Eben Miller, since my arrival, and at Cleveland Bro. O. B. Thomas. Later Bro. U. W. Greene, missionary in charge, has returned for a short stay, and later still Evangelist J. H. Lake and all for the time help in the work at Kirtland.

The Saints in Cleveland are feeling well and rejoicing in the possession of a new church in which to hold their services. They have a very pleasant place and neat church on Wade Park Avenue. When in Cleveland do not forget to see them in their new home, and encourage them with a brotherly lift. During my trip I have been for a short time within the lines of Michigan, and met with missionaries J. J. Cornish, C. G. Lewis, and R. W. Hugill, also Brn. Campbell and Davis and others of the local force. Our work, however, was mainly in connection with elders' courts. The meetings of the Saints in Boyne City were enjoyable and it was encouraging to find a goodly number striving unselfishly for the right in their warfare. How inspiring if all could rise to the plane of leaving self in the background in their work, and humbly seek to glorify and exalt the name of God, losing sight of self! As ever, in the faith,

E. L. KELLEY.

ST. JOSEPH, Missouri, August 29.

Dear Herald: Permit me to say to the dear Saints and friends in Wales that my health is much improved since coming home, and though I was with them not quite two years, it seems as if I have known them all my life, and they have in my heart a warm place. Just before returning home I received from some good brother in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, a draft for twenty dollars. I do not know who he was, but I wish to inform him that the money was divided equally among the missionaries there in Wales, viz., Davis, Jones, Jenkins, Morgan, and Lewis, and to all it was a Godsend and I thank the good brother very much. Hope to yet meet him.

Wales now has but three missionaries, Elders Morgan, Jones, and Jenkins. Elders Davis and Pierce are in England. There is a good supply of tracts in the English and Welsh languages, and if the church will for the next five years support the work there, much good will be done. One sad mistake has been made by some of the Saints moving to other lands, and some that were of much help to the work. For the next ten years Wales needs all her present strength and all the help she can get from the States. I regret very much that my health failed the last three months I was there. I can not say why this was permitted. I can say that in June, 1902, about one year before I returned, I dreamed that I was engaged at a certain work and that my voice failed and I had to leave it to others and go elsewhere, and as I turned to go I said, "Be sure to use plenty of good, clean water." That is just what is needed, Brighamism has brought such a coat of filth upon the name Saint that it will take a life of purity as represented by good, clean water (righteousness) to remove it. May it so be.

Des Moines District Reunion.

At the business session of the reunion held on Saturday it was decided by unanimous vote to hold a reunion next year in August. A committee of three consisting of G. W. Johnson and E. O. Clark of Des Moines and William Park of Runnells were named by the body to have full charge of the reunion for next year as to location and preparation.

On Saturday morning Bishop Hilliard presented the law of tithing and that of consecration in a clear and concise manner, and we believe there are many Saints who will begin a more faithful observance of the law of tithing and there are some who are ready to take up the law of consecration.

On Sunday August 23, Brn. C. B. Brown of Oskaloosa and Wardell Christy of Dallas Center were ordained elders under the hands of Elders G. H. Hilliard and W. C. Nirk. The spirit of prophecy rested upon one sister in power to the edification of all present and special promise to Bro. Christy in his work in the Melchisedec priesthood. The morning sermon by Bishop Hilliard was one of the strongest, plainest, and most practical sermons ever preached in the district. The discourse was to members and non-members both, on the subject of our duties toward God in both spiritual and temporal things. Those who have heard the Bishop know something of what the sermon was. Those who have not heard him should make a special effort to do so.

Several of the isolated Saints requested that the sacrament be administered and this was done at a special service at fifteen minutes after five in the afternoon. This service, so fully enjoyed by so many, was a fitting close to the ten days association of the Saints. Elder J. F. Mintun was the speaker in the evening.

The Saints present during the reunion were all made to rejoice and all came "up higher" in our work. We were all made to believe that "the gathering" had now begun and our association together for the ten days, dwelling together in union and love, helped us to see eye to eye and to move forward in the direction of being of one heart and mind. It is earnestly hoped that another year many more of the Saints of the district will attend the reunion and thus be helped and built up in the faith and by their presence strengthen and encourage others.

Kindly,

RHODES, Iowa, August 24.

Appointment of Bishop's Agents.

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE DISTRICT.

It is with sadness and regret that we announce to the Saints of the Kentucky and Tennessee District the death of Elder D. W. Cook, of Sedalia, Kentucky, the financial agent of said district. Bro. Cook was a faithful and earnest worker in all that he was called to do, and his loss is great to the Saints and friends of the district, as well as to his family. His reward upon the other side is assured, however, as is that of all the pure and good. Let the Saints imitate his virtues.

By recommendation of the district conference, Elder J. R. McClain, of Fulton, Kentucky, has been chosen Bishop's agent in place of Bro. Cook, and duly authorized to act in said office. Bro. J. R. McClain is a young and energetic elder, and will do great good for the district finances, if properly sustained. Every member and friend of the cause of Christ in the district should at once send up a contribution, tithe or offering, to Bro. McClain, to help the work along. The treasury is in need of the help. Bro. McClain will give you proper receipts. Address J. R. McClain, box 202, Fulton, Kentucky.

IDAHO DISTRICT.

At the district conference of Idaho, held July 18 to 20, 1903, Bro. Elias E. Richards, of Malad City, Idaho, was recommended as Bishop's agent for southern part of Idaho, in place of Bro. H. R. Evans, former agent. The appointment of Bro. Elias E. Richards is therefore made, in accordance with resolution of district conference.

The thanks of the Bishopric are extended to Bro. H. R. Evans for his faithful services as Bishop's agent heretofore in the Idaho District.

All tithes and offerings of the Saints and friends of Southern Idaho should be sent to Bro. Elias E. Richards, and he will give due receipt for the same.

Every member of the church in Idaho and such of the friends as are interested in the cause of the church should be enrolled upon the agent's books, either of the northern or southern part of the district; with Bro. James Jennings of Idaho Falls for Northern Idaho, and Bro. Elias E. Richards of Malad City for Southern Idaho. In behalf of the Bishopric, I am,

LAMONI, Iowa, August 29, 1903.

Very respectfully,
E. L. KELLEY.

Correction.

In HERALD of August 19, page 766, ninth line should read, "Interest centers in these works" instead of "briefs," the books written of being the works. Ninth line from bottom please read: "Howe and all the Goliaths," etc. Page 768, line twenty-five from top of second column, insert on so as to read: "Now he branches out on," etc. I may be presumptuous but hardly so much as the first error would make me to appear.

Notice.

There will be a basket-meeting at New Trenton, Indiana, September 13; preaching also Saturday night before. Everybody invited. Jas. P. Sappenfield, district president.

Reunion and Conference Notice.

The Southern Missouri District reunion and conference will be held in the Grove Springs Branch, Wright County, Missouri, beginning on the following dates: Reunion October 3, 1903, and the conference on the 6th. Everybody should come prepared to camp out, so as not to become burdensome to the few Saints in the branch. We will give further notice later on. Plenty of able ministers will be in attendance. J. C. Chrestensen, reunion secretary.

Conference Notices.

The quarterly conference of the St. Louis District, Missouri, will convene with the St. Louis Branch September 19 and 20. Business session opens at 7.30 o'clock on Saturday evening. Reports from all the branches in the district are earnestly solicited. Let all come who can. Willard J. Smith.

Pottawattamie District conference will meet at Hazel Dell, at 10 a. m., Saturday, September 26, 1903, by order of the president. Please send in all reports one week earlier to J. Chas. Jensen, secretary.

The Spring River District conference convenes at Columbus, Kansas, September 4. Because of the sickness of the secretary, presidents of the branches did not get blank reports or notices. We urgently ask you to furnish your statistical reports to me without delay. And do not neglect the collection on the Sunday preceding conference date. M. S. Frick, secretary.

The fifth semiannual conference of the Independence Stake will be held in Kansas City, September 12, 13, 1903, the business sessions to be at the First Kansas City, Missouri, Branch Church, near Twenty-fourth and Wabash, the Sunday preaching services at the Academy of Music. An accurate report from every member holding the priesthood is desired, also statistical reports from each branch. These reports together with branch credentials and any other business you may wish to present to the conference should be in my hands not later than September 2, ten days before conference convenes, that no unnecessary business may be crowded into the hands of the busy secretary during business sessions. Saints, make a special effort to be in attendance and bring the good Spirit with you. W. S. Brown, secretary, 2305½ Bellevue Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

Died.

WALKER.—John Walker died at Genoa, Nevada, August 11, 1903, aged 84 years, 10 months. He was born October 18, 1818, in Gringley, Nottingham, England, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Jacks Valley, Nevada, February 6, 1869, by A. Johns; ordained a teacher December 5, 1869. He lived a faithful and consistent life. His wife preceded him. Four sons are left to mourn. Funeral at Genoa on the 12th, D. R. Jones in charge.

HARTRUP.—At his home in Piedmont, Missouri, August 19, 1903, William John Hartrup, born April 10, 1830, at St. Johns, Newfoundland, age 73 years, 4 months, 9 days. He was baptized August 6, 1899, at Excelsior, Warren County, Pennsylvania, by R. Etzenhouser. Bro. Hartrup died in the faith, leaving four sons to mourn. Burial at Piedmont, Missouri, funeral sermon by J. D. Erwin.

COOK.—Theodosia E. Cook died August 19 at Gaylord, Kansas, aged 35 years, 7 months, 18 days. Born in Macon City, Macon County, Missouri, December 17, 1867. Maiden name, Jeffs. Married January 14, 1883, to William E. Cook. Six children were born to them, three of whom are dead. Sr. Cook was baptized February 26, 1892, by Joseph S. Lee, in Salt Lake City, Utah, and confirmed by J. S. Lee and Joseph Luff. Funeral was held in the Methodist church at Gaylord, Kansas. Sermon by S. J. Madden. A very large gathering of friends and neighbors who had learned to love her were in attendance.

"If alive to their true interests, rich and poor alike will set their faces like flint against the spirit which seeks personal advantage by overriding the laws, without regard to whether the spirit shows itself in the form of bodily violence by one set of men or in the form of vulpine cunning by another set of men."—President Roosevelt in his Labor Day address at Syracuse, New York.

THE pipe-organ in the Independence church is the first pipe-organ to be installed in any church of the Reorganization. Arthur H. Mills writes in the September Autumn Leaves concerning its history, and of the history and properties of pipe-organs in general.

THOSE interested in the literary work of the church, particularly among the young, should read Duncan Campbell's article in the September Autumn Leaves, "Successful Literary Work."

GODLY WALK IN EVERY-DAY LIFE.

The effects of religious teachings should be apparent in the lives of the followers of that particular teaching. There should always be manifest in the conduct of the individuals, evidence that the teachings have been understood. The best religion therefore is the one which results in producing the best individuals, or rather, in making the very most of the individuals who profess. Religion is or should be practical. If it is not it is a failure.

One of the best evidences of the divinity of the latter-day work is the fact that Latter Day Saints become better and better members of the community as they live nearer and nearer to the teachings of the doctrines and beliefs of the church. As a general rule Latter Day Saints are known as good citizens in the various communities where they dwell. This is as it should be, for our religion teaches us that we should be submissive to the powers that be, and so long as we are citizens of a government the laws of that government should be upheld by us, and hence we must be good citizens. The fact that Latter Day Saints become good citizens after espousing the cause, even if they were not good citizens before or were indifferent ones, is evidence that our religion works a practical change which speaks well for the cause.

Where there is a Latter Day Saint community wherein the members of the church are living according to the teachings of the books, there will be found a people who are honest to the degree that their word is considered as binding as their bond, the laws of the land are obeyed, the poor are cared for, debts are paid, and the children are reared to walk uprightly, and God is feared. In such community the elders can preach with the greatest liberty, for they can point to the people as a result of the doctrines they teach. They can show those outside the church what the religion will accomplish in a practical way.

While it is true that the Saints have made progress along this line, it must be admitted by close observers that there is room for improvement yet, and the Saints can continually "come up higher." Still more should the gospel enter into our lives and govern our conduct. We may be known as good citizens in that we do not break any of the laws of the land, and to a very great extent we may be observing the laws of God and yet there be room for improvement in ways which will be made apparent to us as we shall develop in the ways of God.

Many times have we been impressed with the fact that the Saints are neglecting some of their opportunities in a way which retards their progress both spiritually and temporally. We believe God to be a being whose aim is to conserve all good things and eliminate the bad so far as possible. Are we as a people conservers of good? Do we always exercise the greatest possible care to waste not anything?

We have been promised that when we shall be a people living strictly according to the commands of Deity we shall be a wealthy people in that we shall possess the "riches of the land" as well as "the riches of eternity." To become such, unless we are content to let God work a miracle to accomplish it, we must learn to be a wealth-conserving people. Waste must be eliminated, and in all things we must learn to save the good and useful and get rid of that which is useless and destructive of good results. We must grow in wisdom in material things, as well as in the things of God and his work. But then, even temporal things, and the things of ordinary affairs, are in reality the things of God with us as a people, for we are commanded that all things should be done "with an eye single to the glory of God" and the redemption of Zion. Do we do this? In all the affairs of our lives, do we have in mind the glory of God and the redemption of Zion? Do we conduct the affairs of our business, no matter what that may be, with an eye which looks forward to the glory of God and the final redemption of Zion, people and land? Do we, as we go about the various affairs of life, when we are at work, ask ourselves this question, How can I, in doing this, best conserve the interests of God and his people? Have we progressed to that condition where the affairs of life have become to us intimately associated with the affairs of God and his church?

Saints who live according to the commands of God as they are found in the books of the church, as nearly as they understand them, rejoice in the knowledge that they are blessed for doing so. Even in the temporal affairs of life they are blessed. But sometimes when prosperity follows the blessing of God, the Saints fail to remember that to God they are indebted for those blessings, and they drift away, or fail to reciprocate to what small extent they are able, the favors of God by remembering their obligations, financial as well as spiritual, to him and the church.

Saints, the redemption of Zion is a practical work, and to accomplish it we must improve in every way. Our lives must be a complete consecration to God and his cause. We must feel that in our every-day life and occupation we are working for God, and study to see if in all our doings we are working according as he would have us work. The spirit of our religion is one of education and we should study in all we do to do the very best possible under the circumstances. "Zion the pure in heart" means that the work of redeeming Zion is one of individual enterprise to a large extent, the grand work as a whole being culminated as a result of individual preparation. When the people are ready for Zion in a gathered state, then the gathering will come so surely as day follows night. Let us see to it that in all we do we have in mind the glory of God and the final redemption of Zion.

COMMON-SENSE MINISTERS.

Some good thoughts were presented by Bishop Isaac Joyce at the Methodist conference of Northwestern Indiana, which was in session last week. He evidently recognizes a fault which is more or less prevalent among the ministers of the various churches to-day, that of preaching along the line of science or metaphysics, or dealing with some great author's works or somebody's mistakes and failures, without making the thoughts presented apply to the lives of the auditors, for he wants to found a chair of common sense in the theological schools. Sermons on topics such as those mentioned can be made interesting and instructive to a congregation only by the man who knows the lives of his auditors and can make proper application of the thoughts deduced from the study.

The minister must have a knowledge of common things and common people. One can not become a writer by simply getting acquainted with the figures of speech and by a study of the construction of the sentences of Ruskin, Carlyle, or Macauley, and it is equally true that the preacher must have something more than a summary of his reading of the week to present to his audience. The learning is acceptable, but it must be accompanied by a presentation of spiritual possibilities drawn from the facts of every-day life.

After all, the sermon which suits best, and most often reaches the hearts of the church-goers, is what they term "a good gospel sermon," one presenting lessons from the lives of the good men as recorded in the Scriptures, for the application of its principles to our lives is so much more easily understood.

It may be that "chairs of common sense" would help to bring the ministers prepared in theological schools closer to the common people than they have heretofore been. The remarks of Bishop Joyce, as reported in the Chicago Tribune for September 5, were as follows:

It is a fact that God calls poor boys to the ministry and they are forced to go through many sacrifices before they are fully equipped for the work of the ministry. The pioneers of Methodism had no theological training, or at least the training of theological schools. Therefore their preaching was genuine and right from the heart.

I do not wish to be put down as against the theological school, but I wish those schools would introduce a new chair and call it the chair of common sense. It is needed in the training of young men for the ministry. Some of them actually lose their best traits by too much book learning. The preacher should be skillful in himself and the school should help his skill to reach the hearts of men.

The path for preachers is laid out by the Scriptures and he should get his inspiration there. Holiness should be preached, not the sour, cranky kind that only makes men feel bad and bitter, but that which is cheerful and gracious. I would like to see young men who were strong within themselves, who had the right kind of judgment, who would study human nature as well as the Scriptures, and know the people with whom they had to come in contact in the capacity of pastor.

VALUE OF CULTURE.

The following clipping from the Atlantic Monthly expresses rather well the value of culture universally:

Those who regard higher education as a social ornament, valueless except as a badge for the delight of its possessor, and those who regard culture as the private perquisite of the elect few, are alike in the wrong. The presence of men of culture and training raises the value of everything about them. It insures the success of enterprise, the safety of person and property, the contact with righteousness of thought and action which is the mainspring of right thought and right deed in the future.

Moreover, if clear thinking with clean living is good for the elect few, it is equally good for the mutable many. Culture not only raises the man above the mass, it turns the masses into men. That the multitude may imagine themselves men before they hold a man's grasp on life is the grievous danger of democracy. Here again the university plays its part, teaching the relative value of ideals. Under its criticism men learn that good results are better than good intentions, and that they demand a far higher order of skill and courage.

THE story of the life of Elder John Hawkins, of Tahiti, as told by Joseph Burton, beginning in the September Autumn Leaves, is a story of romance, adventure, and tragedy seldom equaled in the field of fiction. Read it!

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. S. Roth writing from Dow City, Iowa, August 30, has this to say of the reunion which had just opened: "The reunion is in full blast. Friday and Saturday were gloomy days with small crowds, but to-day is fine with a splendid crowd all day. There are thirty tents on the grounds now. Some had to wade water to the wagon-box to get here. So far the speakers have been Elders Cohrt, Roth, R. Wight, F. A. Smith, and A. H. Smith. Brn. Garrett, Brewster, Rudd, Hawley, McDowell, Butterworth, and perhaps some others are on the grounds. All present seem to be happy. The gift of tongues and interpretation was enjoyed this morning in the prayer-meeting."

Bro. and Sr. J. F. Gunsolley and children of Shenandoah, Iowa, send to the Bishop their offering to assist in making the repairs on the Kirtland Temple and write: "The children earned their money, and upon explaining your letter to them, they willingly give the amount. We hope you will receive the necessary amount to make the repairs."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We have received a copy of the Chatham Banner News of August 19, 1903, which devotes a column to a write-up of the golden wedding of Bro. and Sr. George Green, of Appledore, Ontario. Bro. Green was instrumental in introducing the faith in that part of Canada, and has taken a leading part in the work there.

Bro. F. M. Arnold requests that any of our elders passing through Louise, Texas, call on him there.

In this issue of the HERALD is published a notice of change of date of the Northeastern Illinois District conference. It will convene at Plano, Illinois, September 26, instead of October 3, as previously announced.

Elder Columbus Scott addressed the Lamoni Saints at the morning service Sunday. Elder M. M. Turpen occupied in the evening.

Frank W. White, who had been employed in our composing-room during the last twelve years, passed on to the land of rest Saturday, September 5, at St. Joseph, Missouri, where he had been under medical attendance this summer. The funeral was held at Lamoni, Sunday afternoon, Elder H. A. Stebbins preaching the sermon.

On Tuesday morning, September 8, Bro. F. B. Blair returned from the Dow City reunion. He pronounced it one of the grandest reunions ever held. The meetings were spiritual and the preaching exceptionally good, though the attendance was not as large as it has been heretofore, owing to the heavy rains and the condition of the crops. It was decided to hold another reunion at Dow City next fall.

The Allegan Press of August 28 contains items from an interview between Bro. Charles E. Irwin and some Utah elders who had been laboring in that Michigan city. Points of conflicting doctrines were explained, the true succession in church leadership set forth, and "the Mormon elders took down the quotations and said they would look the matter up."

Sr. Isabella McComie, a blind sister and an occupant of the Saints' Home, was the first to respond to the letter of the Bishop in last week's HERALD asking for offerings to more fully repair "The House of the Lord" at Kirtland.

Apostle F. A. Smith returned to Lamoni Tuesday. He came direct from Dow City.

Bishop E. L. Kelley went to Stewartsville, Missouri, last Friday to be present at the closing days of the reunion there. He returned home Tuesday afternoon, reporting the reunion to have been very satisfactory. There was a good attendance and good weather throughout.

PROPHETS, ANCIENT AND MODERN.

Doctor William Smith, in his Bible Dictionary, says: "The ordinary Hebrew word for prophet is nabi, derived from a verb signifying 'to bubble forth' like a fountain. Hence the word means one who announces or pours forth the declarations of God." However, not satisfied with this definition, he proceeds to fall into line with a more modern idea. The "classical Greek" is made to do service; the clear statement "one who predicts" is pronounced "post-classical," and the bewildered student slowly lays aside the book with a vague impression that "a prophet" is simply a man who stands in the pulpit and preaches.

I am pleased to note that Charles Buck, in his Theological Dictionary, has given the important and biblical definition of this sacred word: "Prophet, a person who foretells future events. It is particularly applied to such inspired persons among the Jews as were commissioned by God to declare his will and purposes to that people." And be it said to his praise and honor, that he has not refrained from expressing many valuable thoughts on this subject, under the article "Prophecy." This is "a word," he says, which "signifies the prediction of future events. It is thus defined by Witsius: 'A knowledge and manifestation of secret things, which a man knows not from his own sagacity, nor from the relation of others, but by an extraordinary revelation of God from heaven.'" Mr. Buck resumes:

Our Lord himself made very frequent appeals to prophecy as the evidence of his divine mission: he referred the Jews to their own scriptures, as most fully and clearly bearing witness of himself. Upon them he grounded the necessity of his sufferings; upon them he settled the faith of the disciples at Emmaus, and of the apostles at Jerusalem. . . . This was a powerful instrument of persuasion in the succeeding ages of the church, when used by the primitive apologists. . . . Prophecy keeps the attention of Christians alive to the truth and importance of their holy religion: to its truth, because prophecy and Christianity had one and the same origin, both being derived from the same fountain of perfection. . . . It confirms the general belief of a God, and points out to a careless world the plain traces of his watchful providence. It displays the counsels of inspiration, incessantly directing the course of events, without violating the order of reason. . . . Thus it appears that the chief design of prophecy is to bear constant witness to religious truth. . . . It is designed to protect believers in the word of God from the dangers arising from the prevalent corruptions, errors, and vices of the age in which they live.

Few Bible readers will deny that the heavenly Father for over four thousand years spoke to his people through prophets. Luke 1:70 proves this: "As he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began."

We also learn that important things were revealed to all the prophets; "God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer."—Acts 3:18. "To him give all the prophets witness."—Acts 10:43.

We learn from Paul: "God . . . spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets."—Hebrews 1:1. And Amos seems to set a divine seal upon all this by his inspired statement that "the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets."—Amos 3:7. This much is certain—whenever the Lord has a work to perform on earth he calls upon men to assist him, and these servants (to whom "he revealeth his secrets") are prophets. You can not deny this and remain in harmony with the Scriptures.

There is an argument, advanced by men of other minds, that when John the Baptist entered the world, prophets ceased. To support this hypothesis Luke 16:16 is quoted: "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." Upon examination of this passage the following facts are evident: In translating this sentence from the Greek, King James' learned men could not complete the meaning without supplying a word; consequently they inserted were, employing italics to indicate that it is no part of the original text. There would have been greater harmony had they supplied the word testified or prophesied, for so we read in Matthew 11:13: "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John." And we have the whole thought clearly expressed in the Inspired Version: "Then said Jesus unto them, The law and the prophets testify of me; yea, and all the prophets who have written, even unto John, have foretold of these days. Since that time, the kingdom of God is preached, and every man who seeketh truth presseth into it."—Luke 16:17, 18.

However, to remove what imaginary weight there is in this supposition, I quote Jesus' words, "There is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist."—Luke 7:28.

To attempt to prove that there were no prophets after John came into the world, is a task as useless as driving nails into rotten wood. And as it can be (and will be) proven that prophets were in the church during the days of the apostles, and many years afterwards, I fail to see wherein man, poor, simple being, dares to dictate to God that prophets are no longer needed.

If the reader is a laughing philosopher, he will find ample food for mirth in the absurd thought that a live God no longer speaks; if he belongs to the other school, he can not but weep at the folly of a people who deny the full power of the Holy Ghost.

Acts 11:27, 28, informs us that some years after Christ's resurrection, there "came prophets from Jerusalem to Antioch." The same record teaches us that "there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets."—Acts 13:1. What divine harmony rings out when we strike another note of the gospel by reading: "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets."—1 Corinthians 12: 28. And according to Paul's letter to the Ephesians (4: 11, 12,) prophets were "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body [church (Ephesians 1: 22, 23)] of Christ." This office work of the prophet is a sufficient plea for his continuance in the church. Any person who opposes the divine law simply steps into a trap set by his own hands; and we keep thinking of a passage in Revelation: "The dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not."

Before closing this line of thought, I submit the following quotations: William Cave, D. D., in Primitive Christianity, a book published over two hundred years ago, remarks: "This miraculous power [of the gospel] continued in the church some considerable time after Constantine and the world had become Christians, as appears from Saint Basil, Nazianzen, and others."

Mosheim, First Century, part 1, chapter 4, verse 9: "The power was vested in the apostles of transmitting to their disciples the miraculous gifts. . . . They spoke languages which they had never known or learned before, foretold future events, healed the sick . . . and performed many things above the reach of human power."

McClintock and Strong, in their Biblical Cyclopedia, article "Spiritual Gifts," referring to 1 Corinthians 14: 1 ("desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy"), remark: "This refers not to ordinary discourses for the edification of the church, but to such a forthspeaking of the mind of God in relation to truth, duty, or coming events, as the inward action of the Holy Spirit on the mind, may produce."

Conybeare and Howson, in their Life of Paul, page 375, say: "The gift of prophecy was that charism which enabled its possessors to utter, with the authority of inspiration, divine strains of warning, exhortation, encouragement, or rebuke; and to teach and enforce the truths of Christianity with supernatural energy and effect."

But enough of these extracts, which could be multiplied till the brain tired from reading them. Sufficient have been given to prove that this gift of the Spirit blessed the early saints for many years after the "friends of Paul" had sealed their testimony with their blood. And the reason this gift (prophecy) and others were taken away, is clearly stated by John Wesley, father of Methodism, sermon ninety-four: "The cause of this was not, as has been commonly supposed, because there was no occasion for them, by reason of all the world becoming Christian. This idea is a miserable mistake, as not a twentieth was at that time even nominally Christian. The real cause was that 'the love of many waxed cold,' and the Christian had no more of the Spirit than the heathen. . . . This is the real cause why the gifts of the Holy Spirit were no longer to be found in the Christian church; the Christians had turned heathen again and had only a dead form left."

In arguing the necessity of prophets (1 Thessalonians 5: 20), I directly plead for present-day inspiration—revelation, for the one can not exist without the other. To acknowledge the presence of the Holy Spirit as the power of revelation, and at the same time clog up the channel of its utterance, and proclaim against the instrument through which it communicates to the children of earth, is the height of absurdity, and may be compared to a man waiting at the end of an Atlantic cable, after severing it, and expecting to receive a message from across the ocean.

A prophet is a person through whom God reveals his will. To preach that God is unchangeable, the first and the last, the common Father of the great brotherhood of man, no respecter of persons, and then maintain that the children of the gospel were blessed with the spirit of revelation for only a few years, after which, in one of the darkest hours of the world's history, it was taken away never to return, is an inconsistency that borders on blasphemy. Man (clay) wiser than his God (maker)! This erroneous view, this false conception of revelation, has brought confusion (which is the mother of mistakes) into the world and retarded progress in spiritual things. What is responsible for the clashing of creeds, the bitterness of sects? The gifts of the gospel were given that we might not be "tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine." (Ephesians 4: 14.) "God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." Who can bring order out of chaos? Only One—who in the beginning, when "the earth was without form and void," said, "Let there be light: and there was light."

Ever since the "Apostles' Creed" was formulated by men who never saw these worthy disciples, the churches have been tinkering at their creeds, revising, taking from, adding to, till the whole affair resembles, as one of their representatives has said, "a theological hodge-podge." And in this dilemma, Mr. Talmage was forced to exclaim: "Let us put the old creed respectfully aside and get a brand new one."

Man is helpless before this herculean task. In face of the world-wide controversies, when your opinion is as weighty as mine, who is to solve the problems that have occupied the attention of religious wise men since Satan prompted them to inquire of their gods (creeds) instead of their God? Who can tell the correct mode of baptism? Has man settled the question of infant baptism? Can you inform me how many offices there must be in the kingdom of God? What is the work of apostles, elders, teachers, deacons, bishops, seventies, etc.? Shall we observe the Sabbath or the Lord's Day? Am I to believe the church that teaches the salvation of all men, or the one whose creed reads: "Some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and others are fore-ordained to everlasting death"? Other questions rush to the mind as numerous as particles of dust in the sunbeams on a thrashing-floor.

We find no such disgraceful confusion as this in the early church. When men "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" the divine principles of the doctrine were taught, and the church at Rome was warned to "mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which" they had learned. (Romans 16: 17.) The very men who have striven to unite Christendom (and have so miserably failed), are the individuals who so bitterly denounce present revelation from God. I wish from the very depths of my soul, that I could shout with a voice that would echo around the world, and sink so deeply into the heart of every man that he could never silence it, that the only gospel Paul or the early disciples knew, was a gospel of power, a gospel of life, a gospel of revelation! (Galatians 1: 8, 9.)

The query now rises, Is there a church on earth possessing prophets who receive communication from God? Daniel said: "There is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets." And why are not we entitled to some of these "secrets" as much as Nebuchadnezzar. It is quite useless to inquire of a church that maintains the unimportance of the "spiritual gifts," concerning which Paul would not have us ignorant (1 Corinthians 12: 1). Has it not been emphatically declared that the "gifts of the Spirit" are no longer needed in the world? One who claims to preach the gospel (J. Freeman Clarke, Inspiration of the New Testament, page 34) has exalted himself to the station of a judge and has said, with considerable truth, they "are wanted no more." Hundreds of denominations have accepted this decision; but do you believe this sort of modern logic?

After finding a church that has prophets, it is necessary to learn whether they are true or false. We are now brought, after much rambling, to the object of this article: to prove that Joseph Smith was a prophet sent from God.

The test of a true prophet, as given to ancient Israel, was this: If a man prophesied and it came to pass, then were they to know that a man inspired of God had blessed them. This is weighty evidence, yet, strange as it may seem, not sufficient to justify or condemn modern men who claim to speak the Lord's will. Our Savior has warned us that there shall arise false prophets who shall show great signs and wonders. (Matthew 24: 24.) But he has not neglected to furnish us with an infallible test: "Ye shall know them by their fruits. . . . A good tree can not bring forth evil fruit."—Matthew 7: 16, 18.

Now then, I believe that "good fruits" and a fulfillment of the prophecies form a sufficient "fire" to test any man's works and demonstrate to the world whether God has spoken or not.

As to the "fruits" of Joseph Smith, let his life-work testify. The gospel, restored through his instrumentality, is here. Investigation is solicited. What more can a people do? His mission was in harmony with the prophecies. (See Revelation 14: 6, 7; Isaiah 29: 11, 12; Zechariah 2: 4, etc.) His teachings were the purity of the gospel. His followers have challenged the world to prove otherwise, but it has failed to do so. In the simplicity of a youthful heart, he came forward with the statement that an angel had visited him; but he was denounced as an impostor by the professors of a religion which teaches that angels are "ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." (Hebrews 1: 14.) And when I read the answer of Amos to Amaziah, my mind recalls the beginning of Joseph's work to latter-day Israel: "Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was a herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit: and the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and the Lord said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel."—Amos 7: 14, 15.

And is it not singular, though the old cry of "false prophet" has been hurled at him ever since he delivered the "angel's message," the slanderous remark has never been proved? And to-day, sixty years since his blood swelled the crimson stream of countless martyrs, his name is loved and honored by fifty thousand people who know his life was pure, and that a coal from the prophetic altar had touched his lips.

Great minds have bowed before his inspiration, and their "wisdom" is indeed perishing before the "marvelous work" that God performed through him. (See Isaiah 29: 14.)

If I am profuse, pardon me; but I wish to quote this remark from Governor Reynold's History of Illinois, pages 359-361:

In all the great events and revolutions in the various nations of the earth, nothing surpasses the extraordinary history of the Mormons [so called by their enemies]. It may be veritable history, in a thousand years, that the standing and character of Joseph Smith, as a prophet, may rank equal to any of the prophets who have preceded him. . . . The success of the Mormons is the greatest wonder that has occurred in the nineteenth century.

Honorable Josiah Quincy, who visited Joseph Smith a few days before his death, said this, as recorded in Figures of the Past, page 400:

Born in the lowest ranks of poverty, without book learning and with the homeliest of all human names, he had made himself, at the age of thirty-nine, a power upon earth. Of the multitudinous family of Smith, from Adam down (Adam of the "Wealth of Nations," I mean), none had so won human hearts and shaped human lives as this Joseph. His influence, whether for good or for evil, is potent to-day, and the end is not yet,

. . . If the reader does not know just what to make of Joseph Smith, I can not help him out of the difficulty. I myself stand helpless before the puzzle.

In the book of Doctrine and Covenants, which contains the revelations of God to his church in this dispensation, is the following statement: "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled."—Section 1: 7.

The truth of the following is so evident that comment is unnecessary: "My disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days . . . shall go forth and none shall stay them."—Section 1: 1.

In another revelation given to Joseph Smith, Jr., we read that God had spoken "unto him from heaven" in order "that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers."—Section 1: 4. "The day speedily cometh, the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth."—Section 1: 6. This prophecy was uttered in 1831, at the time of the great "peace conferences" when nearly all thought the millenium was soon to be ushered in. The man who can not discern that the day of "wars and rumors of wars," strife, murders, and terrible wickedness, is here, must be in a pitiable condition indeed.

In section 2: 6 we read: "My work shall go forth." This was given as early as 1828, even before the Book of Mormon was translated. Have the combined attacks of men and devils succeeded in preventing the fulfillment of this prophecy?

One year later, 1829, we read: "A great and marvelous work is about to come forth unto the children of men."—Section 12: 1. Governor Reynolds testified to the fulfillment of this when he called it "the greatest wonder that has occurred in the nineteenth century."

Your attention is called to another prophecy that has been terrible in its fulfillment, and wonderfully plain, yet the people cry "peace and safety;" we cry with the souls under the altar, "How long, O Lord?"

In March, 1829, Joseph uttered the following: "A desolating scourge shall go forth among the inhabitants of the earth and shall continue to be poured out, from time to time, if they repent not."—Section 5: 3.

Bearing the foregoing date in mind, let us read a statement given March, 1831: "When the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; [the gospel was restored April 6, 1830] . . . and there shall be men standing in that generation that shall not pass, until they shall see an overflowing scourge for a desolating sickness shall come over the land."—Doctrine and Covenants, section 45: 4.

Edmund Charles Wendt, M. D., says in A Treatise on Asiatic Cholera, edition of 1885: "Cholera had prevailed, as we have seen, in Russia in 1829 and 1830 [but it was quite impossible for Mr. Smith to be aware of this fact, because he predicted in March, before this scourge had begun its ravages in Russia]. It reached England, Scotland, and Ireland in 1831, and was first landed at Grosse Island, the quarantine station for Quebec, on April 28, 1832." And in six months this "fell monster" destroyed twenty-two hundred and eight lives in Quebec alone.

J. G. Webster, M. D., in his work, Epidemic Cholera, published in 1866, remarks:

The consternation caused by the presence of this scourge on its first appearance among us in 1832, was so great that many of our large cities were almost deserted by their inhabitants, and, among the few remaining in them, death held high carnival. . . . We can not sit down and fold our hands and lament our feebleness and untoward fate in view of the mysterious character and operations of this dreadful scourge, and the vain attempts that have been made in many places to limit its progress and stop its ravages. Nor can we go on in stolid indifference, denying its existence, as the best means of preventing it, until it falls upon us like a judgment from heaven and desolates our land; this would not save a single life when the devouring pestilence comes upon us, much less fill up the gaps left in our population when the scourge shall have swept over our land. . . . The nature and phenomena of the cholera have always appeared mysterious and past finding out.

Ah, how appropriate is God's statement through Joseph, in 1832, to this sinful generation: "I, the Almighty, have laid my hands upon the nations to scourge them for their wickedness; and plagues shall go forth, and they shall not be taken from the earth until I have completed my work."—Doctrine and Covenants, section 33: 16.

Doctor Wheeler, in his treatise on Asiatic Cholera, edition of 1849, page 15, quotes an eloquent writer in the London Sun, as saying:

"The great scourge of humanity—a scourge more awful than the eruptions of a volcano—more devastating than the throes of an earthquake—the scourge of the cholera—is at this moment advancing towards us with silent but indomitable rapidity, if we may believe the intelligence received almost daily from the frontiers of the Russian Empire. Its course is described as being northwesterly and it is said already to have penetrated into the interior of Europe. God defended us from the agonies which desolated the world in 1832! Those agonies are not yet forgotten; nor can years obliterate the recollection of a pestilential malady so mysterious in its character, so inexorable in its diffusion, and so inexplicably dismal in its progress through the nations of Christendom. It passed forward like an avenging fiend, and decimated the nations as at a breath of the Nemesis."

This most dreadful scourge and visitation upon the human family has again made the circuit of nearly two thirds of the globe, with all its devastating consequences; spreading death and terror in its advances, leaving nothing but horror, misery, and despair behind. It does not come within the province of a publication like this, to enter into the causes of this dire and malignant malady, or to know if it be the dispensation of an Almighty Being for the wickedness of mankind; or for what other purposes the all-seeing God has thought it necessary to depopulate portions of the earth.

In reading the Memoir of S. S. Prentiss (a book that should be read by every young man in the United States), I learn that only a short time after Joseph Smith uttered this marvelous prophecy, Mr. Prentiss wrote home to his sister in Portland, Maine, from Mississippi, November 11, 1832:

We have had the cholera in Vicksburg. . . . It broke out very suddenly and very violently; most of the people fled. . . . It is a terrible disease. I saw persons walking about the streets perfectly well, that were corpses in two or three hours afterwards. . . . It is raging awfully in New Orleans. They are dying at the rate of three hundred a day.—Page 118.

The cholera has been raging here [Vicksburg, Mississippi,] to a horrible extent. Every place on the river has suffered more or less, and not only on the river, but for many miles in the interior, the disease has prevailed so as to wholly depopulate many plantations; scarcely one has escaped without some loss. In fact the ravages of this terrible epidemic have been much more extensive than they were last year, and God knows when or where they will stop. I see the disease is traveling north, and is already desolating the interior of Kentucky and Tennessee, and before long, you must have it again at the East.—Page 124, in a letter to his brother, June 24, 1833.

One more thought on this awful subject. No man will dare to say that the word of the Lord returns unto him void. "Plagues shall go forth."

In 1830 cholera, advancing up the Volga River, entered the heart of Russia in Europe, attacking many towns, until it reached Moscow, where it continued four months. The "black hand" struck eighty-five hundred and seventy-six wretched people, forty-six hundred and thirty of whom never rose again. The appetite of this Black Fiend was only whetted by these victims, and in the following year, in seven weeks Warsaw lost fourteen hundred and sixty-two of her inhabitants. Appearing at St. Petersburg, seventy-five hundred and sixty-seven were stricken; thirty-eight hundred and four died.

The ravages were extended over Europe; England, Scotland, and Ireland not being exempted because of their Norman blood, and wicked Paris, in a few weeks, was deprived of fifteen thousand sons and daughters. Man was powerless to stay this Death Fiend, and in 1832 it crossed the Atlantic Ocean, but no blood-stained lintel protected the homes of Canada, and thousands of her first and last born were called to meet their God. Hurrying on to New York, where the people had ripened in iniquity, it fell upon six thousand, one half of whom died, and two thirds of the inhabitants fled in dismay. And from this place the "Black Death" as we might well call it, spread over all the United States cutting down the flower of American manhood, as the scythe lays to earth the fields of waving grain. That these plagues are "poured out from time to time," is proved by the accounts that have rung in the ears of the world till they refuse to listen.

The year 1833 witnessed the death of thirty-seven thousand nine hundred and fifty-four from cholera in Bombay, and in the same year France and Italy saw fifty thousand of their children die. Ten years later we read of from five hundred to seven hundred dying daily in Mecca, and what seems well-nigh incomprehensible, that two hundred and fifteen thousand one hundred and fifty-seven died from this scourge in Russia in 1892.

The most terrible bubonic plague, springing so suddenly into action, plays no small part in fulfilling the prophecy of 1832. So fatal is this plague that one can not read statistics of its mortality without a feeling of horror, it raging so extensively in some countries that there are none left to bury the dead. Yellow fever, la grippe, and other diseases assume the form of epidemics to such an extent that the like of which has never been known since the world began. But let us cease, lest the very figures turn into the form of corpses, with white, cold faces and staring eyes.

Hastily passing over the angel's statement to Joseph, on the night of September 21, 1823, that his name "should be both good and evil spoken of among all people" (Times and Seasons, volume 3, page 729); without commenting on the promise that "Lebanon" (Jerusalem) should very soon receive the "former and latter rains" (Isaiah 29:17); also refraining from detailing the prophecies of the Book of Mormon, such as: "For after the book of which I have spoken shall come forth [1830], and be written unto the Gentiles, and sealed up again unto the Lord, there shall be many which shall believe the words which are written" (2 Nephi 12:12); "And because my words shall hiss forth, many of the Gentiles shall say, A bible, a bible, we have got a bible, and there can not be any more bible" (paragraph 6); "The blood of the saints shall cry from the ground against them" (paragraph 1); we will consider the following most startlingly fulfilled prophecy given to the world at Christmas time, 1832:

Verily thus saith the Lord, concerning the wars that will shortly come to pass, beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina ["The State Convention of South Carolina at once assembled and on the twentieth of December, 1860, passed 'an ordinance of secession.' . . . Led on by the bold step of South Carolina the other 'Cotton States' followed suit."—True Story of the United States, Brooks, page 206], which will eventually [four years] terminate in the death and misery of many souls. ["If we may presume the losses of the Rebels equal to those of the Unionists, the actual aggregate loss of life because of the war is swelled to six hundred thousand. Add four hundred thousand cripples or permanently disabled by disease, and the total . . . reaches the stupendous aggregate of one million men."—The American Conflict, Greeley, page 759.] The days will come that war will be poured out upon all nations, beginning at that place [No student of history will deny that war has been or is being poured out on all nations]; for behold, the Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States ["The South had struck the first blow and that settled the question in the North."—Brooks], and the Southern States will call on other nations, even the nation of Great Britain, as it is called ["The fabricating, trading, banking classes across the Atlantic were for the most part, early and ardent partisans of disunion. . . . Hope and gratitude on the one hand, apprehension and dread on the other, made the hereditary masters and chief priests of the Old World the natural, instinctive allies of the Slaveholders' Rebellion."—The American Conflict, pages 504, 505. Also this from Eggleston's History of the United States, page 352: "The Alabama claims, as they were called, after years of discussion, were submitted to a court of arbitration which set in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1872, and condemned England to pay to the United States fifteen million, five hundred thousand dollars", and they shall also call upon other nations, in order to defend themselves against other nations; and thus war shall be poured out upon all nations. And it shall come to pass, after many days, slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war. ["Having enrolled and called out Blacks as well as Whites for its defense," etc. "Of our Whites enlisted, one tenth died in the service; of the one hundred and eighty thousand Blacks, twenty-nine thousand, two hundred and ninety-eight died," etc.—The American Conflict, pages 759, 761.] And it shall come to pass also, that the remnants who are left of the land will marshal themselves, and shall become exceeding angry, and shall vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation [And I call attention to the fact that while the slaves were to be marshaled, the "remnant"—Indians—were to marshal themselves. "In the summer of 1862 the eastern bands of the Sioux nation fell suddenly upon the defenseless settlements of Minnesota and killed nearly five hundred people."—Eggleston's History of the United States, page 367. "The Indian War along the Southwest having, in 1865 and 1866 increased so as to demand active measures for its suppression, General Sheridan was ordered thither."—United States History, page 284] and thus, with the sword, and by bloodshed, the inhabitants of the earth shall mourn; and with famine, and plague, and earthquakes, and the thunder of heaven, and the vivid lightning also, shall the inhabitants of the earth be made to feel the wrath and indignation, and chastening hand of an Almighty God, until the consumption decreed, hath made a full end of all nations; that the cry of the saints, and the blood of the saints, shall cease to come up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, from the earth, to be avenged of their enemies. Wherefore, stand ye in holy places, and be not moved, until the day of the Lord come; for behold it cometh quickly, saith the Lord. Amen.

This is a wonderful prophecy, and enemies and skeptics have accused the church of "hatching it up" since the Civil War. However, no evidence has ever been presented by the wiseacres, and the other class who have investigated are as silent as the ancient's Baal. The revelation has been published in many publications, among them the Pearl of Great Price, printed in Liverpool, England, in 1851, a copy of which is in possession of the church.

J. H. Beadle, in his book, Life in Utah; or, the Mysteries and Crimes of Mormonism, published 1870, has this to say on page 305: "On the 25th of December, 1832, Joseph Smith delivered a remarkable prophecy. . . . It was published in The Seer, a Mormon periodical in Washington City, of April, 1854, from which I copy." He then gives the revelation. This proves most conclusively that the prophecy was in existence, April, 1854.

John Hyde, Jr., in his work, Mormonism: Its Leaders and Designs, published by W. P. Fetridge and Company, 281 Broadway, New York, 1857, has given a brief account of this prophecy, page 174.

Reader, the evidence is before you, what will you do with it? In closing I present the testimony of Mr. R. D. Foster, recorded on page 311 of From Palmyra to Independence. The prophecy was delivered in Washington, District of Columbia, whither Mr. Smith and Mr. Foster had gone to seek redress of the "powers" then in force. A Reverend Cookman of that place had willingly picked up the weapon of persecution, slander—the only one that he could use—and the cry of "arch imposter," "false prophet," rang in the ears of his delighted congregation. A few days after this incident, Mr. Smith was privileged to reply, and I finish the subject in the language of Mr. Foster:

He [Joseph] adverted to the statement made by this George C. Cookman, declaring them to be willfully and wickedly false, and that if he, Cookman, did not take it back and acknowledge that he had dealt falsely of him, his people, and his own congregation, also that he must turn and preach the truth and quit deceiving the people with fables, he should be cut off from the face of the earth, both he and his posterity. And he said that this should be so plainly manifest that all should know it. At this, many gentlemen then took their tablets out of their pockets and began to take notes of the prophecy; and Mr. Smith noticing them, "Yes," said he, "write it on your tablets; write it in a book; write it in your memory; for as sure as God ever spoke by my mouth, all these things shall come to pass."

Henry Clay, Felix Grundy, Tom Benton, John Q. Adams, and many other celebrated characters were present at the time. Now, instead of Cookman doing according to justice and truth, he became more virulent than ever, and laid all the obstacles in our way that he could during our stay in the city. The matter appeared to be forgotten by many, and I thought often upon the subject, having taken notes also. Soon after this there was an extraordinary excitement in the religious world, and a conference appointed of all orthodox religions to assemble in England, at a certain time, to adopt measures of harmony among all the sects; the United States were invited and accepted a part in these proceedings to break down the partition wall that separated the various churches. George C. Cookman was elected or appointed as a delegate for the District of Columbia to represent his views on the subject, standing, as he did, at the very head of the church and chaplain of the United States Senate. He, being an Englishman by birth, thought it would be very pleasant to take his whole family with him, and this he did. Both he, his wife and all his children went on board the steamship President.

If the reader ever passes along the rugged coast of Maine, near the spot where the fresh waters of the Penobscot River neutralize the bitterness of the mighty Atlantic, he will observe a small lighthouse boldly stationed on a rocky island two miles from land. One cold winter's night, when the waves were madly lashing the gray rocks and the winds were mournfully howling about the tower, the writer of this article was seated before a cozy fire protected by the staple walls of this building. He was turning the leaves of a book (the People's Atlas, published in 1885 by Phillips and Hunt, New York), when a familiar word, on page 163, attracted his attention. Holding the book so the rays of the light fell upon it, he read this significant statement:

President, steamer, from New York to Liverpool, with many passengers on board, including Reverend John [George]

Cookman, an eloquent Methodist minister . . . sailed on March 11 [1841], encountered a terrific storm two days afterward, and has never since been heard of.

CHURCH BUILDINGS.

In the past few years considerable interest has been manifested by the church in general in the building of church edifices. This is evinced by the fact that there have probably been more churches erected in the past ten years than in any other period of the same duration in the history of the church.

Especially are we pleased to note this feature of solid progress; we are preaching a gospel that knows no competition—our only drawing-card is the plain truth. We should never degenerate into the policy of offering other inducements to win seekers after God, and thus swell our ranks.

Thus the situation has been that we have been offering the truth, while our contemporaries have been offering the churches. In the estimation of the honest, intelligent truth-seeker, we are in the advance so far as the truth is concerned. But when it comes to the consideration of church buildings and church privileges, in the general estimation of the public we are thought to be somewhat "behind the times." What shall be done? Shall the building of churches in various parts of the world be encouraged or disapproved? In consideration of the expense and effort, will the end justify the means? From our personal observation and experience we are led to take the affirmative side of the question; it may be thought by some that the idea of permanently establishing the church in various parts of the country is squarely against our popular ideas of "Zion," "the hastening time," "the gathering," etc., that if there is anything of a permanent character to be done it ought to be done within the confines of the stakes.

This argues all well and good for the inhabitants of those places but it is very poor encouragement to the persons who are compelled by reason of unavoidable conditions to live in other places and who have not "all things prepared before them" so they can enjoy such privileges.

It is right and consistent that wherever regular church services are held, they should, if at all possible, be held in a decent, respectable place—a place worthy of such a holy occasion, a place to which we need not be ashamed to invite an investigator or a friend.

It is as inconsistent as it is impracticable for our branches to continue to meet in "dance halls" and "lodge rooms," where the filthy stench of tobacco, liquor, and the like pollute the air which God gives us to breathe, while we endeavor to worship him; and there are few public halls of any kind that are not polluted with these things. In many places it is impracticable to erect a church, but in many places nearly, if not entirely, enough money has been paid out for the rent of halls, sufficient to have built decent, respectable places of worship to be owned by the church.

Ought not the church in general to be sufficiently interested in the establishment of the cause in the larger cities especially, to be willing to contribute from its general funds to such a worthy cause? We think it should. Furthermore, the movement to erect churches in such places where at all practicable ought to receive the hearty approbation of the church authorities.

Let us make a few observations. A short time since I visited Scranton, Pennsylvania, where the gospel has been preached for a number of years, and that too by some of the best talent in the church. The place and only place of meeting was a "lodge room," up three flights of stairs, adjacent to a large "dance room" used for the Devil during six days of the week, for the Lord one. The usual "ensigns" of half a dozen lodges adorned the walls. People say, "Why! this great, large city and no church building?" They seem astonished at our claim to be the "light of the world," and yet so far, in appearance, behind it. When I came to this great city of Philadelphia, over two years ago, a city of over a million inhabitants, our only place of meeting was in a "lodge room" over a horse stable. The "stench," and the "ensigns" of the lodges were there. People, as a rule, did not take to it very well. And who could blame them? Some of our energetic brethren long since had begun a fund, a "chapel association;" they made and saved money. Now, to crown their commendable efforts, we have a church edifice—a credit to the cause in these parts, which before many years will be free from debt.

In the great city of New York, a city of above three millions of people, what have we? A small, unsightly place that looks somewhat like a shoe-shop from the outside but neat and clean on the inside. It is situated in Brooklyn, quite a distance out. What does the investigator think when he comes to such a place for worship? Comment is useless. We all know what he thinks. The brethren there are at present engaged in building a church. May they have abundant success!

Chicago is another place where we have had some of the ablest representatives of the church located and where the gospel has been preached for years past. It is one of the three largest cities in the United States, yet has no church edifice, nothing but "halls." We shall hail the day when we hear of a movement on foot to erect a house of the Lord at that place. It will help to establish a reputation for the church. It will give the public to understand that we mean business and are "here to stay." In numerous ways it will prove a lasting benefit to the cause.

The building of very costly structures is to be deprecated. What we want is plain and commodious buildings, built sufficiently large to accommodate the people and suited to their comfort, convenience, and health. When the time comes to gather to Zion, we are confident that the people who have been privileged to attend service in our own church buildings will be only the better prepared by having been so favored.

Let the building of churches go on.

GRACELAND COLLEGE BRIEFLY.

"Our Graceland!" What a euphonious term that is! Who ever looked upon the beautiful building and campus and did not admire?

Who of the interested church workers, the progressive, live ones, ever thought of saying a word to discourage the noble men and women who are aiding and supporting "Graceland" by donations, by tongue, or by pen?

Silence, my good-souled, well-meaning brother! Go into the "silence" with God for thirty minutes daily for one week and "watch" for a message to your anxious soul telling you whether you should pay twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, one thousand, or ten thousand dollars toward cancelling Graceland's debt, which the Lord has said "should be paid," and toward equipping and endowing it with necessary funds for maintenance and good work.

"Precious" few young colleges like Graceland ever paid their way during the twenty-one years of their minority. When such was the case they were remarkable for early vitality and vigorous growth, owing, no doubt, to the foster parents, who with unusual ability and skill, by advertising well and by liberally advancing from private funds for current needs, pushed the healthy child of their care into deserved prominence and to early success.

Graceland is yearly improving and advancing in its forceful work. The faculty is working hard for its present and future utility and if we all pull together firmly and in "faith believing," Graceland will "win out" on the line of gradually fulfilling the design of its founders.

"Not the right location" (as a doctor would say of a misplaced heart), did I hear some one stammer? O, do not repeat that phrase again, please! Do not do it! It is located just right. Do not forget that!

Independence is undoubtedly the place to begin building that splendid university about eight or ten years hence, where such educators and professors as E. R. Dewsnup, John B. Hatcher, George Chatburn, and others may acceptably occupy chairs of learning and education. Yes, Independence is such a place. Lamoni is best fitted for the location of our beautiful "Graceland" where as a "feeder" it may prepare students (not "scholars;" a scholar is a finished school pupil; please keep that distinction in mind when writing or speaking on educational topics) well and truly for the new university at worthy and ambitious, yet beautiful for location and happy in destination and appointment, our Independence.

But just now and in the near future, let us work like true men and women for the sure success of Graceland, "our" (your) only college thus far attempted.

I have been unable from my five years continued illness to financially aid Graceland as it was my wish to do. I now can only offer "hypothetically" my little mite and must yet wait for the "silver to be put into the fish's mouth" with which to pay the mite. It is thus I figure now that during my days of fasting for my own good and that of others, in the month of August just past, I "forewent" some six meals. Not much of a sacrifice for even me so weak as I am (if robust, one hundred and seventy pounds; now, one hundred pounds), and surely not for the physically strong. It did not even give me the naughty headache some folks get from fasting. I just felt as strong (weak) as if I had eaten.

Well, "children," let us figure. The value of the six meals "forgone" is about one dollar. When I get a dollar that I can spare, that I will spare to Graceland (and I will get it, I think), I will just hand it to the treasurer and say: "It's all I have just now." I am willing to be one of twenty thousand to fast six meals (forego them) and with it breathe a prayer for Graceland's triumph, and place the value of the little (it's just a little sacrifice, one dollar per every six meals) in the hands of Graceland's worthy treasurer for Graceland's needs. Who will be the other nineteen thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine? Hands up, let's count and try it once and see the result!

I, like some others, perhaps, am a "coming" man, I hope. The trouble is I've been too long on the way. How "long" on the way have you been, dear Graceland brother, and how "short" have you been on cash support? Answer your own conscience.

BABYLON OF THE BIBLE AND BABYLON OF TO-DAY.

Professor Friedrich Delitzsch, of "Babel and Bible" fame, recently delivered another lecture in the presence of the German Emperor and Empress, but confined himself this time to a report of personal observations during his recent six months journey in Babylon, and a comparison of conditions to-day with those of biblical times. From the Allegemeine Zeitung of Munich (No. 88) we extract the following data given by Professor Delitzsch:

Ancient Babylon was the alluvial land of the Euphrates and the Tigris region, about equal in size to the Italy of to-day, and was the granary of the ancient world, with a phenomenal wealth of vegetation and palm forests and olive orchards and vineyards. Canals dug in various directions served to store the waters and to irrigate the land, and at the same time were the avenues of commerce and trade. Indeed, the Babylon of the biblical period was the Holland of antiquity. Every king found his glory in the extension of the water-way system, and from the days of Hammurabi through many centuries the work of the ruler in this regard proved to be the greatest blessing to the country. The whole country was practically one vast garden, northward from Babylon, between Hillel and Bagdad, according to the wonderful reports of Xenophon, Ammianus Marcellinus, and Zosimus, the last mentioned finding as late as the fifth Christian century vast vineyards and olive-groves throughout the land. In the times of the early Arabian caliphs no fewer than three hundred and sixty cities and villages are mentioned by name along these canals, and the booty in gold taken here was many hundredweight. Pliny declares this to have been "the most fruitful land in the East."

Now, on the other hand, it is a dreary desert, the playground of the storms and wind. In the southern portions there are still some remnants of the canals left, but two famous rivers, Euphrates and Tigris, are no longer connected, and between Bagdad and Basora a few English steamboats can scarcely force their way. The country is depopulated, poverty and sickness prevail among the Kurds and the Arabs, and no physician is to be found for many miles. The localities in Southern Babylonia that were once the centers of a great caravan trade are now entirely deserted.—Translation made for the Literary Digest, July 18, 1903.

Original Poetry.

"Redeemed."

O glorious day when first the light
Broke on my raptured soul,
When error's darkness took its flight
And the gospel made me whole!

CHORUS:

Then sing a song, a joyful song,
A soul redeemed I am,
The ransom's paid and I'm set free,
Hallelujah to the Lamb.

I have passed through gloomy valleys,
And the desert's burning sand,
O'er raging seas, 'neath stormy skies,
To a blessed Beulah land.

CHORUS.

I have climbed the rugged mountain
With torn and bleeding feet,

But from its top a rapturous sight
My new born vision greets.

CHORUS.

For I see with eyes unclouded,
As the Spirit thrills my soul,
That Christ has paid the ransom,
And the gospel's made me whole.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Is the road very dreary?

Patience yet!

Rest will be sweeter if thou art a-weary,
And after night cometh the morning cheery—
Just bide a wee and dinna fret!

The clouds have silver lining,

Don't forget!

And though He's hidden, still the sun is shining,
Courage instead of tears and vain repining,
Just bide a wee and dinna fret.—Anna Shipton.

Dear Mothers and Sisters: A paragraph in the county paper to-day read that five little waifs from Chicago had arrived at our town for a two-week outing, and I have been thinking that perhaps as mothers we had become so absorbed in our own, that we had neglected this privilege God had given us to do good to one of his little ones. I know some mothers already have heart, hand, and home filled to overflowing, but let me tell you these are usually the ones to first open their hearts and homes and find room for these little waifs of charity. Too often we find it is the childless homes which are the last to open their doors to receive them.

Why, O why, is this so? Is it for fear the tidy home will be littered with childish toys, or that it will take too much care and time from our worldly pleasure? God forbid.

Perhaps some fear that the little ones will be unpleasant and undisciplined, which may be so, but some one must care for the bad as well as the good. I believe that did we do this more, we would gain more from the pure childish love and comfort they would give us. And who can withstand this child-love even though it be not for our own? And then we would have the peace that comes to our hearts with the feeling that God approves of our act of kindness to one of his little ones.

I remember a dear friend who had five little ones of her own. Still her home and heart were never so full as to exclude the child of a friend, neighbor, or of charity. And how the little ones loved her and it seems to me that when her time comes to go home to her Lord and Master that many childish voices will sing a glad welcome home for her as she enters the pearly gates.

As for me my joy would be complete if I could gain the love of the little ones here and when my time comes to be called home that they with my darling (gone before) would welcome me to my Father's home.

The Best Gift.

Around the cradle that thy childhood bare
Came God's own angels, with their pitying eyes,
And gazed upon thee in a still surprise
To see beyond heaven's portal aught so fair.
They brought thee precious gifts. One gave to thee
The gift of beauty for thy body's grace,
Deep-smiling eyes to light a dreamy face,
And perfect limbs as young Apollo's be.

One set the crown of genius on thy head,
 And one bestowed a heart like woman's own,
 Strong as the sea, and trembling at a breath.
 Last, a veiled figure bent above the bed,
 And said, "I give thee everything in one;
 In heaven I am named Love; men call me Death.

"So shalt thou never tread the weary ways
 That lead men up the dusty slopes of life,
 Nor feel the fierceness of the noonday strife,
 Knowing alone the morning of thy days.
 For thee the dew shall linger on the flower;
 The light that never was on land or sea
 Shall have no momentary glee for thee,
 But brighten into love's immortal hour.
 Thy beauty's grace shall never know decay,
 Nor Sorrow lay her hand upon thy heart;
 Neither shall chill mistrust thy spirit slay,
 But like a star thy life shall pass away,
 Its light still shining, though itself depart,
 Until all stars are lost in one eternal day."

—Kate Hillard, in Harper's Magazine.

True Meekness.

One of the weakest traits of any person is to be unwilling to accept honest criticism and correction. From the foolish child who will never listen to parental authority, on to the foolish man who will never listen to rebuke or reason, pride always goeth before a fall. Honest criticism is often a bitter dose to swallow, but most tonics are bitter and we are the stronger for taking them down bravely. "If I am censured," said that godly man, Bishop Griswold, "then let me correct, but never justify, my faults." A minister with more zeal than discretion once called on the bishop and belabored him with rather a harsh denunciation. Instead of showing the man out of the door, the bishop calmly replied: "My dear friend, I do not wonder that they who witness the inconsistencies in my daily conduct should think that I have no religion. I often fear this myself and I feel very grateful to you for giving me this warning." This reply was made in such unaffected meekness and sincerity that the visitor at once begged the bishop's pardon and always regarded him afterwards as one of the most christlike Christians he had ever known. He is doubly the fool who not only flings himself into a pit, but resents the friendly hand that tries to help him out of it.

Another evidence of the might of meekness is that it enables a man to rein in an unruly temper. He that ruleth his own spirit is better than he that taketh a city. I do not know of a better definition of this grace than was given by a negro lad in a mission school when the missionary asked, "Who are the meek?" and the boy answered: "They are the people who give soft answers to rough questions." This sort of meekness is quite too rare. When our house takes fire, the first impulse is to bring a bucket of water. But when temper takes fire the first impulse with too many is to throw on more fuel. Angry, resentful speech is explosive and shattering; it often breaks what never can be mended. Silence is cooling: it cools us off and cools also our assailants. One of the meekest men I ever knew told me that he had naturally a most violent and passionate temper, but he had subdued it by resolutely bridling his tongue until he had cooled down. There is an infinite sublimity in the conduct of our meek and adorable Master when, amid all the insults of his brutal enemies, he who might have laid them all dead at his feet, only with majestic silence "held his peace!" The more that you and I have of the Spirit of our Lord, the more shall we display the irresistible might of meekness.—T. L. Cuyler, D. D.

Prayer Union.

Sr. May Canfield, who is at present at Lamoni, Iowa, separated from a large circle of "orthodox relatives" and friends, desires every Saint who reads this to offer up one earnest prayer that she may be enabled to properly interpret Christ in her daily life and conversation, that her influence may be wholesome wherever felt, that her relatives may listen to and obey the blessed fullness of the gospel, and that her oldest brother, who has been exceptionally kind to her and quite favorable toward the gospel, but who is now in very poor health, be restored to perfect health (if it be God's will), and that he may eventually be with the Lord at his coming.

The prayers of the sisters' Prayer Union, together with fasting by those willing to do so, are earnestly requested by Sr. Jane Heaton in her own behalf. Sr. Heaton is suffering with kidney trouble; and while she asks your prayers in her present affliction, she wishes to testify that upon an occasion of a similar request some years ago she was entirely healed, for which she thanks the faithful petitioners and gives God the glory.

Editors Herald: As far as missionary work is concerned, I am in as poor a field to labor as I was ever in, and think perhaps a little worse. The climate is beautiful and there is most everything you can think of to draw people away from meeting or where the truth is spoken. Everything here has its audience but the servant of God, who dares tell the truth. There has been a different band here almost every week this summer to call the people down to the beach of Monterey Bay, one of the most beautiful bathing places in the state of California. But it is the trumpeters they want to hear and not the truth. The saloon has its crowds, the popular churches have their crowds, and people will listen to the fables spoken of by Paul, and say, "That is good. Give us more like that, but do not preach any doctrine." So the preacher says, "Come out, friends, and do not be afraid, we are not going to preach any doctrine." And they tell the truth then, for they do not preach any doctrine, and the people could not endure it anyway. It seems too bad people are so much in darkness.

Last night a man said he was looking for the Lord to come, and when he came he was going up. So blind! No prophets in their church, no seers, and the Lord said, "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch;" so, if they have no seers, (eyes) in the body, surely they will both fall into the ditch together. May the Lord bless his people and help them to live so as to be worthy to reign with Jesus when he comes to reign a thousand years, not up in the sky but on the earth in Jerusalem, in Zion.

There are a good many different kinds of flowers all in bloom now, and orange trees are loaded with little green oranges which will get ripe by spring. This is such a fine climate it puts one in mind of the time when the earth will be created anew, and flowers bloom the year around, and everything live in peace and happiness. May the Lord hasten the day when his glory will cover the land as the waters cover the great Pacific Ocean is my prayer.

Editors Herald: Since the reunion in Southeastern Illinois District I have been preaching in McLeansboro for three weeks. This is the county-seat of Hamilton County. Bro. and Sr. Matthew Davis live near there and rendered valuable assistance in the meeting. Bro. Sawley assisted a part of the time, but soon left to go to the Parish Branch to look after the Sunday-school work as directed by the missionary in charge. While at McLeansboro I preached in the Christian church, at a private house, on the street, and in the public square. I left quite a number believing and some were apparently near the kingdom.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

CANTON, Illinois, August 31.

Editors Herald: About the last of June I went to Peoria to assist Bro. Moler in his task of warning that "spiritual" (?) city. I found he had already begun operations on the street. These meetings we continued till the 26th inst., when, after enjoying a splendid prayer service with Peoria Saints we came here to occupy until our district conference on September 5. As to the success attained I can not write other than that very many have heard the truth, many tracts have been distributed, numerous inquiries made, and our hearts made glad because of the privilege afforded to speak to our fellow men. Some opposition was manifested, of which we can not write at length. Had a slight brush with both the Volunteers and the Salvation Army, which incidents made apparent the spirit ruling in their work.

We began our work here Friday night, held service also on Saturday afternoon as well as in the evening. At yesterday's regular service in the church we were pleased to see a number of strange faces. Cause—street-meetings. We have had a splendid hearing thus far and many are openly admitting we have the truth. Attention is good.

I am of the opinion that we of the ministry have lost many a splendid opportunity of reaching the people in times past by not going out where they were. Music is an essential feature of street work unless some one has some other special qualifications useful in calling the people together. There is plenty of chance for one to show his originality in services of this kind. Others may do as they wish but you will find me taking to the streets in warm weather rather than paying rent for some old hall where nobody will come.

I have found in Bro. Moler a splendid worker, one not easily baffled by seeming obstacles. His knowledge and ability in the music line as well as in preaching make him an efficient laborer.

We have received kind treatment at the hands of Saints and friends. May God reward them. We expect to leave here Wednesday or Thursday for conference at Millersburg.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, August 31.

Editors Herald: I am still working in the blessed ranks and am striving earnestly day by day to live faithful to my dear heavenly Father that I may some day receive a crown of life and an inheritance pure, undefiled, and which fadeth not away. I realize that in order to sometime enjoy these promised blessings I must live faithful, not only this day or this year, but through all time, even unto death as John the Revelator says, that I may be counted worthy to receive the reward of the faithful ones.

There is much to discourage one as he passes on through life's pathway—many obstacles and snares, many clouds which hide the blessed light for a while, many wiles of the Evil One to be overcome, but if through all this of a discouraging nature we but hold fast to Him who is our light and our life we shall finally gain the lasting victory, for "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." Satan is truly strong, a prince of the power of the air, but how glad I am to know that He who leads me on to battle and victory is far stronger and is the great Prince and Ruler of all things. Troubles, trials, discouragements, separations may, yes, most surely will come to the true Saint, but we can never have a reasonable excuse for being discouraged and failing in the performance of our duties while He leads us with his unerring hand.

We should become strong when we remember that if we truly love the Lord—love him enough to keep the law which he has given us to live by—all things will be working together for our good and our final redemption and everlasting salvation. Just now to us the way may indeed be dark and we may fail entirely to see how God's ways and thoughts can be better and higher than our own, but thank God we have his assurance that if we are faithful to him, sometime we shall see and know even as now he in his great love and wisdom sees and knows all things. Now we see through a glass but darkly, but then face to face, and then, yes, thank God, then we shall know even as we are known.

"Not now but in the coming years,
It may be in a better land,
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And then, ah, then, we'll understand."

Asking the prayers of the Saints everywhere that I may live faithful unto death, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

SEMINOLE, Alabama, August 10.

Editors Herald: I have been reading the letters from the Saints in the HERALD, and am strengthened and encouraged by having done so, for there is much good spiritual food in them. It makes me rejoice to know that we are living in the day and time that we are. My heart can not express the good feelings that I have for this grand work of God.

Bro. W. D. Booker spent the Fourth of July with us, and nearly two weeks in all. He delivered some excellent sermons, teaching us the laws of the church.

Bro. Sherman came over from Mississippi the first day of August and spent a short time with us; he preached four times, and we were edified by his sermons, for we all believe he is a chosen vessel of God. We were sorry to see him leave.

We are preparing to build us a church-house, and we have part of the material on the ground. We are doing all we can to get the balance of it so we can raise it this fall.

We have not many workers in the Master's vineyard here, but the few here are, I believe, true children of God. I ask the prayers of all the Saints in our behalf.

Your sister in Christ,

T. B. COOPER.

WARRENSBURG, Missouri, August 27.

Editors Herald: I closed my labors in Kansas City, Missouri, July 13, and started out into the country with the tent. We came to Lees Summit and found quite a number of good Saints there. Elder DePuy, Bro. Dutton, and others manifested a willingness to do all they could in order that our efforts might prove a success. Elder J. Harvey is president of the branch. The Saints are getting along nicely except in a few instances where that unruly member (the tongue) is not held in subjection. Oh, that the Saints could learn that if they can not speak so as to do good in building up God's cause and help our brothers and sisters in their efforts for good they should keep their lips closed!

At times our meetings there were largely attended and a good spirit prevailed in preaching, and among the people. We were ably assisted by Elders Hulmes, DePuy, and Parsons. Four precious souls were added, three were baptized by Bro. DePuy and one by the writer. The choir with Sr. Flo McNichols as leader rendered us excellent assistance. From there we went to Burtville. We found the Saints in charge of Priest W. Weir quite lukewarm. The place we set the tent was in the woods about half a mile from any public road. I thought it doubtful if any one would find us there. The first meeting was on Sunday. Nineteen were present including the preacher. A sister remarked: "This is about the crowd you will preach to while you are here." But in a few days the scene changed. God by his loving Spirit ruled and the people came from far and near, so that at times the seating capacity was not more than one fourth what we needed. We enjoyed good liberty in preaching. The Saints were built up and the people seemed to receive the word gladly and we feel that much good will result in time to come.

We were assisted by Elders Hulmes and Needham. Sr. D. H. Blair was present one Sunday and gave us a talk on Sunday-school work. We tried to get her to stay, because we were needing her, but she could not. Srs. Gross and Nace, and Mrs. Davis, a Methodist sister (who told us she received much good from the meetings, and no doubt will unite with us), were a great help to our meetings with their musical talent, both vocal and instrumental. We held one sacrament-meeting and a business-meeting in which the Saints chose Elder George Needham president of the branch, and arranged for regular meetings. Also organized a Sunday-school Home Class with Sr. Clear in charge. May God help them to go forward and not backward.

From there we went to Knobnoster. There the branch is getting along well. Priest Weidman is in charge, assisted by Teacher Hancock. "Ignorant prejudice is terrible." For the first few nights but few came to hear us, but by visiting and giving personal invitations, also publishing our program in their papers, we succeeded in getting the people out and interested. Reverend West of the Christian Church came twice and seemed well pleased with what he heard. We baptized two noble souls in Christ, mostly the result of Bro. and Sr. Willoughby's labors.

We came here Monday. The branch and Saints here are getting along very well, Bro. N. Abrahams in charge. We held meeting last night and a good spirit was with us. We were here a year ago and made many friends, some of whom we expect to see come into the fold.

Editors Herald: The basket-meeting at Oriole was well attended, five hundred people in attendance on Sunday, the best of order all through the meetings. The Saints and the citizens did well in preparing a place in the grove for the meeting and in making provision to feed the hungry. This multitude nearly all ate their dinners on the grounds and there was plenty of food. The meetings were spiritual. Bro. Harp and the writer were the preachers. The basket-meeting at Leavenworth was well attended. Brn. Scott, Sr., and Harp who were appointed to take charge of meeting were not present, and the writer took charge. Our Father blessed those meetings. I think they will result in good.

LANAGAN, Missouri, August 26.

Editors Herald: I have been thinking of writing as it might strengthen the faith of the HERALD readers. I was investigating what is called Mormonism and praying with all power for the Lord to show me if it be true. In a vision I saw a beautiful orchard and was eating of the fruit, so thought it was all right. I was baptized and rejoice in the step I have taken. My wife has been healed of the dropsy, and the children have been administered to. I believe if I had not belonged to this church, I would have died. I got down with a fever, the doctor came three times and never broke the fever. I had got past taking medicine and took what is called the death hiccoughs, was dying, or near death, and I asked the Lord to receive my spirit. I had a letter written to Brn. T. J. Shepherd and Sam Simmons to come and administer to me, but they did not get the letter. I had given up all hopes of living, when a Latter Day Saint elder came to the door and asked me if I knew him. I told him I did and wanted him to administer to me. He did, but I got no better. He said he must go, but I told him to administer to me so I might die easy. He did so and I went to sleep and when I waked up I called out that I was healed. So you see the goodness of God. The fever left me, I quit pouring cold water down my neck and in about five days the hiccoughs got easier and I got well.

Another time, when I got careless, neglecting my prayers in the season thereof, I had a vision or dream. I thought there was a ladder reaching from earth to heaven, and I was sitting on one round of the ladder up high between the earth and heaven, about to fall.

I ask all the Saints to live prayerful and humble. Those who will do the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine. Brothers and sisters, I bear testimony to all that this is the church of Christ, the only true and living church. May the Lord help us all to be faithful.

Yours in bonds,

CROSS, Texas, August 26.

Dear Herald: Elder John Harp has been in this place for a week, carrying on meetings. He preached eight times. We had large crowds, and toward the last everybody seemed interested in the services. My wife and I were the only Saints in this country until the meeting started. We got one member during the meetings, and I think that the eyes of many were opened so they can now see the gospel more clearly than they ever did before. I hope some day that there will be a branch started at this place and we can have preaching regularly. If we could I believe that many would join the band.

We have had preaching several times this year. Bro. Harp has been here twice. He is now holding meetings at Iola. The people here are prejudiced against our faith, but I think we will show them that we are right and that we are not "Mormons" as some say we are. We are defending the faith to the best of our knowledge.

A brother in the faith,

W. P. FRANKLIN.

EUSTIS, Nebraska, August 27.

Editors Saints' Herald: Elder J. W. Waldsmith and I came to this place about one week ago. We find that it is such a busy time for the farmers (and nearly all the Saints here are farmers), that we have been unable to do very much in the way of preaching, but we find the Saints here in a real good condition spiritually, and the officers of the branch doing all they can to maintain the work, as we view it. Brn. G. W. Johnson, Gottlieb Keller, and Alvin Easterday are looked upon by the Saints here as splendid representative men of the work in these parts, and indeed it rejoices the souls of the missionaries to find the work so well established, and the honor of the holy priesthood so well maintained.

By the grace of God we have been enabled to effect some very promising openings in the southern part of this field, where all our summer's work thus far has been spent, and I feel certain that much good will be accomplished in those places.

At Franklin, Franklin County, I was permitted the insertion of a two-column article in the Franklin Sentinel, the editor putting this heading at the beginning of the article, "Learn the Truth ere you Condemn." I have promised to return to that place in the near future and give them a two or three weeks' series of meetings.

Truly I never saw greater opportunities for the preaching of the word than in this field, and, as Bro. Waldsmith often expresses himself, I wish we had twenty missionaries to help spread the work here now.

We made a few days' visit to Wray, Colorado, where my cousin, Johnny Roush, lives, and from him received some useful information in regard to the western part of our district, for it formerly belonged to Colorado. Bro. Johnny seemed somewhat improved in health, and I felt to thank God that I could find him looking so much better than I had anticipated, from what I had heard. I hardly knew Sr. Roush, she had grown so well and strong again. Surely one feels the spirit of true Latter Day Saintism when in the home of Bro. and Sr. Roush, as also many others of the Saints at Wray.

From here we go to Maxwell and will endeavor to do some work there. The small grain crop in this country is very large, and the corn crop promises to be enormous. This is a fine country indeed. Ever praying for the success of Zion's cause,

In bonds,

HOPE, Idaho, August 28.

Dear Herald: I live in the far West where you see mountains and trees unnumbered; a very large lake is also in view. I have often wished I could see the prairies and a corn-field. Here we have far different sights than in Iowa. There is plenty of wild fruit here; blackberries grow like strawberries do in the East; huckleberries are very abundant. Flowers are in blossom from early spring until frost and there are many different kinds. The large lake seems to be full of a number of different kinds of fish.

There is a good deal of wickedness here. Hope is about the size of Davis City, Iowa, I should judge, and has seven saloons. There is wickedness all over the world, I think more in the West. There are no Latter Day Saints here except myself. I am very thankful my parents taught me the gospel when a child. It has always been my guide. "It is good to be a Saint." I have often made mistakes in life, but trust all will be well in the great day.

A great deal has been said in regard to teaching little ones the gospel; I do not think too much can be said on that subject. I will tell you of my ideas. I teach my little girl all about our dear Savior from his birth until his death so thoroughly that she can tell it to any one she meets; she tells her papa the story very well; it pleases him, too. He is not a Saint, but I hope sometime he will unite with us. She asked me one evening why Jesus wanted us to be baptized. I told her so he would know we were going to do better and obey his command. She said: "Mamma, I am going to be baptized too when I get big." She is four years old. I think it the duty of all parents to teach their children the gospel while little and they never forget.

Some mothers have so many home duties to attend to that little ones are neglected. I would say to such mothers, Do the best you can. God knows how much we are able to do.

My father has no idea of the pleasure I have in reading the church books he gave us as a wedding present. I would like to attend church as I have in the past, and would be glad if some of our ministers would come here and preach. I would do all in my power to get a church. If I fail, my home shall be used for the purpose of holding meetings. May God bless and prosper you all is my prayer.

Your sister,

HESTER GEORGE.

CANTON, Illinois, September 4.

Editors Herald: Just a little while and autumn will again appear with her trees clothed so gorgeously, a sight that is always pleasing to the human eye, a sight wherein is displayed so magnificently the handiwork of God. This season comes, as it were, as a reminder that ere long the days will soon dawn upon us with their cold and chilly blasts, when such as tent work and street preaching will be put aside for a time.

In Canton we have just been having five nights of street preaching by Elders H. E. Moler and F. A. Russell. From one hour to one hour and thirty minutes were occupied by both elders each evening. The grand sermons that were uttered from the lips of those servants, their voices blending so beautifully in songs of praise with the help of Elder Russell's telescope organ, were surely good food for the hungry soul. Some selections were rendered by a male quartette during the meetings; the quartette was composed of Elders Moler and Russell, Bro. D. I. Bath, and Doctor Graham. The last-named does not belong to the church but is quite favorable, his wife belonging to our faith. Many were heard to say that the singing was fine. What good will result from these meetings, time alone can tell.

During one of the evening services a sister and I were conversing with a prominent lady doctor of our town, and she asked, "What denomination do those men represent? Do they preach for pay?" Of course all will know our answers to her. She remarked, "You can go to these other churches, they are always pleading the money question. Of course, when I go to church, I take my purse along and aid with my coin whatever it may be, but let us ask the church people for help [referring to the doctors when she said, "us"], a committee has to be called. I read and hear so often where preachers leave one pulpit to enter another, stating that they have had a higher calling, but mark you, it was the higher salary that caused the change." So, kind Saints, I feel glad that this can not be said of the Latter Day Saint servants, if only the truth is told of them. I do think street preaching will reach many a person, where inside preaching would not, many preferring open-air meetings in summer.

Praying that good may result from these meetings, I am,

Your sister,

IDA L. JONES.

COOKES POINT, Texas, August 26.

Editors Herald: I commenced a meeting in Milan County on the 4th inst., continuing three evenings with good interest all the time. Had to close to fill another engagement in Falls County. On my way to Falls County I stopped at Texas Central Branch and preached twice. Here I met Brn. John Hay and John Nunley, two young elders who went to Falls County to assist me in the meetings there. We commenced there on the 12th inst., at a schoolhouse named Grady. We continued for a week and had good turnouts and interest all the time. The Johns did good service which seemed to be much appreciated by the people.

We then moved to another place where we held nine services with good turnouts and interest, both of members and outsiders. Here we held a business session of the Philadelphia Branch and an elders' court to investigate some charges against a member. I had kept the boys away from home two weeks and they seemed willing to return. I think they will make good missionaries if they continue faithful and humble as they are now. We aim to meet Brn. John Harp and S. R. Hay at Texas Central Branch, near Hearne, next Saturday to commence a week's meeting. We are doing much more missionary work in this section of Texas this year than heretofore. Prospects are looking up.

Editors Herald: The letters testifying to the divinity of Joseph the Seer in some of the late numbers of the HERALD have been very interesting to me and comforting also. I would like to add mine, for it may help others, as I have been helped by theirs.

When I was baptized into the church, I had not the slightest evidence of its divinity, save only the words of others and the proof that the Holy Scriptures contain, which is plain enough to convince any one who has not been taught otherwise, but, after investigating a week with Bro. J. L. Lancaster and wife of Joplin, Missouri, as instructors, I was fully convinced that if what they claimed of the Latter Day Saints were true, they had more gospel than any other church I knew of and I made up my mind to test it anyway. I firmly believed the words in James 1: 5: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him," and Bro. Lancaster told me the way to find out for myself was to obey, that I must do the will or obey the will of God. He quoted this to me: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God." I said to him: "I will obey, and if I do not learn of the doctrine right off, I can get out, and no harm done," but I seemed to know almost that I would know for myself, when I had obeyed.

I was baptized the day I heard the first Latter Day Saint sermon preached. It was a memorable day to me. I was most miserable all day and the Evil Power said to me as I stepped into the water: "If you go in here you will fall through to the fire and brimstone." I almost stopped, but I thought no, I will test this to the end and know for myself.

The next morning I still had no evidence. I was wretched, though I kept my own counsel and said nothing, hoping and praying every minute that God would tell me in some way whether I was right or wrong. I had no idea how I was to get this evidence only that God would tell me. Whether or not Joseph the Seer was a true prophet did not worry me, for I reasoned that he had to be a true prophet or else the idea of Latter Day Saintism was a fraud from beginning to end.

What seemed to worry me most was a desire to know if this church was the true one or had I done wrong in uniting with it? As I said before, the next morning came without any evidence and I was quite sick. I very nearly took that as an evidence that I had done an unwise thing, but kept on praying as I lay in my bed. I was afraid to speak of what was in my mind so kept silent, and as the day began drawing to a close I got very uneasy and nervous as I still had received no evidence.

I told the Lord if there was anything I had left undone to let me know and I would do it. The thought was presented to my mind to be administered to. I asked Sr. Lancaster, who sat by the bed, if I was sick enough to be administered to. She said: "Yes, certainly, if you wish it." Arrangements were made and Brn. J. L. Lancaster and J. W. Thorpe performed the ordinance. During the administration the heavens seemed to be opened; I seemed to be lifted from the bed; everything looked white and bright (or seemed that way, for I had my eyes closed). I do not know how to tell what I saw or how to explain it, but this I do know, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, that he shed his precious blood for me and for all mankind, that the gospel that has been restored is the true gospel of Christ, that Joseph the Seer was chosen for that divinely appointed task of interpreting the Book of Mormon so that all the world might know the true way of salvation, for no other way will be given. There can be no other way. The Latter Day Saint Church is the true church.

While Bro. Thorpe spoke he told me what was in my mind, what I had been praying for and what I wanted to know but had kept a secret from every one. This knowledge has been a great comfort to me. I can not be thankful enough for it. I wish I could impart it to others; and this is my testimony to the whole world that this great latter-day work is true from beginning to end, that Jesus is at its head and will conquer all opposition sooner or later. I certainly "know" of "the doctrine," as Jesus said.

I hope all of us will live faithful to the end. Saints, "Let us pray for one another."

Yours in the one faith,
HELEN LOGAN SHERWIN.

Editors Herald: I am now at home at the side of our sick baby. He seems a little better at this writing, but is very low yet.

I commenced tent-meetings August 1 about three miles north-east of Pisgah, Iowa, where I continued meetings three weeks up to August 23. During those three weeks I baptized thirty into the church and kingdom of God and left others near the door. I was called home because of our little darling being sick.

There is a noble band of Saints at and near Pisgah. The good Lord is selecting some of the very best people in that neighborhood, and our noble brother, Joseph Lane, is the shepherd of the flock there.

The Lord has blessed my efforts for truth. He has been with me with his Spirit in power, and I have baptized sixty-five this conference year. I expected to start back to my field of labor to-day, but our little darling has been so poorly yesterday and to-day, and my companion is nearly worn out; baby has been sick four weeks, and I could not leave home.

I do hope and pray that God will bless all the soldiers of Christ that have taken upon them his name, and that the honest in heart may be gathered into the fold. Oh, how grand it is to have a gospel that when we stand to proclaim it to the people, the Spirit of God bears witness with our spirit that it is true!

My prayer is that God will speed the right.

Editors Herald: We are here in the midst of our reunion. The meetings are being held in a tent conveniently located. The attendance is not large, but of sufficient number to render the meetings interesting and attractive. A good interest and excellent spirit have been manifest so far. Of the ministry of experience, Brn. H. N. Hansen, Swen Swenson, and A. M. Chase are present. Of the younger men, Brn. J. Vanderwood and Guy L. M. Brokaw. As a part of the work of the reunion, Religion and Sabbath-school exercises are being conducted. The Saints are well and all appear happy in the faith. The weather is hot and ground dry. We could stand a cloud burst pretty well just now. The water would not stay on the surface long. Meetings will be continued over Sunday.

Editors Herald: The Savior described in a parable a servant who knew his lord's will and prepared not himself, neither did according to his master's will. Such will be beaten with many stripes, if they do not repent.

Theories in religion have a beauty of their own, but if they do not result in a true Christian life, it is like the beauty of hornblende and feldspar. I do not call such coldness religion. The river of life never freezes over and icicles never hang on the eaves of heaven. Soundness of intellectual belief is a beautiful cloak, well woven and well cut, but in the hour when God shall demand it, our souls will not be sufficient, of themselves, to hide our iniquities. "Believe that ye must repent of your sins and forsake them, and humble yourselves before God. . . . And ye will not have a mind to injure one another, but to live peaceably, and to render to every man according to that which is his due. . . . For behold, are we not all beggars? Do we not all depend upon the same being, even God, for all the substance which we have; for both food, and raiment?"—Mosiah 2: 3, 4.

May God bless the honest in heart, is my prayer.

ALICE RUSH.

DES MOINES, Iowa, September 5.

Dear Herald: We are still in the conflict for Zion's cause. Satan and his cohorts and all the opposers of truth are not the kind to offer any terms of surrender, and we who are under the banner of King Immanuel are not yet ready to offer any peace protocol.

Elder J. F. Mintun returned to the city at the close of the district reunion at Rhodes, and Elder S. F. Cushman came also. Beginning on August 27 services were held at the church and have continued each night since. This series of meetings began July 28 and continued until August 12, and with those now in progress makes a total of twenty-four services. Of these our worthy branch president has attended all except one. A faithful shepherd, did you say? Yes. Some of the Saints in the city have not attended a single one of the services. Sleeping soldiers, did you say? Yes. These would not likely hear even the "midnight cry." Sad thought, indeed!

The six thousand tracts have been distributed, and six thousand homes in this great city have had their attention called to the "marvelous work." This seed has been sown in faith and we hope that some at least has fallen on good soil.

If only one soul to Christ is led,
Thy labor is not in vain.

There will be baptismal service to-morrow. Beginning on Tuesday evening, September 8, a ten-night discussion will take place between Elder Mintun and a representative of and the founder of the Church of God. Two propositions will be canvassed, each to occupy five nights. The debate will be held in a tent right in the heart of the city, across the street from the Young Men's Christian Association building. The Saints are generally interested in this discussion and will attend, as many of them have never had opportunity to hear one of our elders in debate.

Elder Mintun has labored earnestly, faithfully, and prayerfully for the success of the truth in this city, and the building up and strengthening of the church. Possibly he has not been able to please all, but he has endeared himself to many of the Saints and the Spirit of the Christ which he so constantly manifests draws the children of God to him and he calls all to a higher plane in life. He has at times been depressed in spirit, but has never faltered; his sermons have been strong and convincing; his counsel to the Saints has been earnest, and at times he has been but the mouthpiece of the Spirit of God.

In gospel bonds,
A. A. REAMS.

DELTA, Colorado, August 28.

Editors Herald: The two-day meeting of the Fairview Branch near Delta, Colorado, is a thing of the past. The Saints had planned for a reunion, but conditions were unfavorable for a reunion, so it was decided to have in place of it a two-day meeting. The writer and Bro. C. E. Willey of the missionary force were present and did the preaching. The meeting was held August 23 and 24. On Monday, the 24th, seven buds of promise were added to the kingdom. One each was baptized by Brn. Howery and Woods, and five by the writer. Brn. Willey, Cheney, Howery, and the writer did the confirming that evening. A fair degree of liberty was enjoyed by the speakers, and all seemed to enjoy the meetings.

Yours in the faith,
J. M. STUBBART.

Des Moines.—Conference met at Rhodes, Saturday, August 22, at the call of the district president. The district officers were chosen to preside over the session. Delegate credentials were passed and all members of the district present given a voice and vote in the conference. The treasurer of the tent fund reported: Receipts, $21.68; expenditures, $11.92; balance, $9.76. The Oskaloosa Branch asked that C. B. Brown be ordained to the office of elder, and the Des Moines Branch asked that W. Christy be ordained an elder. These requests were granted and the ordinations provided for. Licenses were granted to three of the branch officers recently ordained at Packard, Iowa. It was decided that the next conference be held at Runnells, February, 1904.

Notice.

To the Officers and Members of the Oregon District, Greeting: I hereby give notice that Elder D. A. Anderson has been appointed by me to preside over said district to fill the office made vacant by the transferring of Bro. C. E. Crumley to the California Mission. The brother will look after the interest of the district until members of said district meet in conference to elect a district president. So please direct all matters that belong to the district to D. A. Anderson, Bandon, Oregon. Gomer T. Griffiths, minister in charge.

CHANGE OF DATE.

In order to have the missionary in charge, Elder Heman C. Smith, with us at conference, it has been decided to change the date of the Northeastern Illinois District conference one week earlier than that announced, namely, September 26 instead of October 3. Conference will convene at Plano, Illinois, September 26, at 10 a. m. We hope to hear from every minister in the district. Come if you can and bring the good Spirit, that we may have a profitable time together. If you can not come, at least let us hear from you. The district desires to hear from each and all. It will be best to send ministerial reports to me at Plano. Delegate credentials and branch reports can be sent to the district secretary, W. E. Williamson, Marseilles, Illinois, R. F. D. 57, but should be sent in at least a week or ten days previous to the convening of conference. If delayed later than this, send them to Plano. F. G. Pitt, district president, 3810 Langley Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Convention Notices.

The Northern Nebraska District Sunday-school association will meet with the Saints at Decatur, Nebraska, Saturday, September 26, 1903, at 2.30 p. m. The session is to be in the form of an institute. It is urged that all schools send delegates as a good attendance is desired. Alice R. Watkins, secretary, Columbus, Nebraska.

The Sunday-school convention of the Northeastern Illinois District will convene at Plano, Illinois, Friday afternoon, September 25, commencing at one o'clock. We hope to have a good attendance of the workers and a profitable and enjoyable time. F. M. Pitt, superintendent; Mamie C. Williamson, secretary.

The Idaho District Sunday-school convention will convene at Hagerman, September 11, 1903, previous to the convening of the district conference, September 12. We desire to see each school represented, with good reports. Julia A. Condit, superintendent.

The Sunday-school convention of the Kirtland District will convene at Akron, Ohio, October 2, 1903, prior to the district conference. All are cordially invited. Sunday-schools of said district will please send reports at earliest convenience to V. D. Schaar, secretary, 150 Dibble Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

The Northeastern Missouri District Sunday-school association will meet at Greenleaf Chapel, October 2, 1903, at 10 a. m. Bring your Winnowed Song books. We are expecting a good time at this convention. Wm. Chapman, district superintendent; G. A. Tryon, district secretary.

The convention of the Alabama District Sunday-school association will convene on Friday before the full moon in October, beginning at 10 a. m. Sunday-schools, please take notice and be on hand with your report. Bro. T. A. Hougas, general superintendent, will be with us. Everybody come or you will miss something you will regret. I. N. Roberts.

Married.

Mr. Andrew Dooms and Sr. Harriett Williams were united in marriage at the residence of the bride's parents, Bro. James and Sr. Mary Wilkinson of Lucas, Iowa, August 20, 1903. Quite a number of relatives and friends were present and a very pleasant evening was spent. May the blessing of God be with them through life.

Died.

CHAFFEE.—Frederick A. Chaffee, infant son of Bro. and Sr. George E. Chaffee, was born August 27, 1902, died August 16, 1903, at Pocatello, Idaho. Little Frederick was a bright and promising child, and it was with grief his earthly form was laid away, yet with hope in Him who rules and can comfort the bereaved. Funeral sermon by H. N. Hansen.

MCDONALD.—At Edgington, Illinois, August 13, 1903, Bro. John W. McDonald, aged 81 years, 11 months, 19 days. He was born at Hampshire, Virginia, August 24, 1821; was married to Mary Maynard, March 12, 1855, and leaves his wife, three sons, and one daughter; one son dying in infancy. He joined the Reorganization, September, 1880, and remained faithful until his death. Funeral at his home, August 15, 1903, in charge of Elder Dale S. Holmes; sermon by Elder David S. Holmes.

FROST.—Sr. Esther J. Frost, born in Haverhill, Massachusetts, December 30, 1883, died of appendicitis following an operation in Lynn Hospital, July 30, 1903. She was baptized by Elder J. N. Ames, in Haverhill, May 29, 1898. Funeral sermon by Elder F. M. Sheehy.

BEEBE.—Elder Calvin Alvaro Beebe died August 23, 1903. He was born April 28, 1836, in Caldwell County, Missouri, and married Eliza T. Lincoln, April 26, 1857. There was born to this marriage one son, Mr. Walter Beebe. Mrs. Eliza Beebe died in 1858. C. A. Beebe was married to Angeline Cherry Runyan, June 26, 1859. Eight children were born to them, three of whom survive. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus of Latter Day Saints in 1859, by Elder E. C. Briggs at Henderson, Iowa; ordained an elder in 1865; ordained a high priest on the 7th of June, 1890; ordained a member of the High Council of the church, April, 1893, by President Joseph Smith. He faithfully presided over the Council Bluffs Branch for many years, and his name has been on the record of that branch ever since 1865. He was a faithful and affectionate husband, a tender and loving father, a patriotic citizen, an honorable business man, a fearless defender of the right and an unflinching foe to all wrong. His life was that of a true saint of God, and his death was that of the righteous, his hope in God and Christ being steadfast while life remained with him. President F. M. Smith conducted the funeral services; the sermon was preached by Elder Charles Derry.

BOYD.—Cannie Gay Boyd, born October 5, 1900, died August 30, 1903, aged 2 years, 10 months, and 25 days. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder F. M. Slover in the Saints' chapel at Kibbie, Illinois, September 1. She was laid to rest in the Curtis Cemetery. She leaves father, mother, three brothers, and two sisters to mourn.

OWENS.—At Roslyn, Washington, August 11, 1903, Morgan, infant son of Mr. Morgan and Sr. Etta Owens (nee Holmes), died at the age of 4 months and 20 days. He was a babe of sweet and lovable disposition, a fit subject to dwell for ever with Him who said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Funeral was from the Latter Day Saints' church, August 12, 1903, in charge of Bro. H. P. Hansen, assisted by Bro. John W. Holmes.

BELL.—At her home in Angus, Iowa, August 19, 1903, Mrs. Cirrinda M. Bell, (nee Page), aged 70 years and 6 months. She was born at Pagetown, Meigs County, Ohio, February 19, 1833; was baptized by Elder M. T. Short, December 28, 1884, and married Mr. A. C. Bell, December 25, 1856. To them were born ten children, of whom five with her husband are left to mourn their loss. She is also survived by an only sister, Mrs. Paulina Ruby, eight grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. Her funeral was conducted by Elder Morris, of the M. E. Church, a Latter Day Saint elder not being available. She died striving in the faith with the hope of coming forth in the first resurrection. As long as she had struggled her lips moved in prayer and she would repeat over and over, "O rest, sweet, sweet rest!" She exhorted her husband and children to prepare to meet her in a better world. Her funeral was largely attended and the profusion of beautiful flowers gave evidence of the love and respect of her many friends.

SCOTT.—On the 29th day of August, nine o'clock p. m., at Great Bend, Kansas, Virgil L. Scott came to his death by means of a railroad wreck, while he was at his post of duty as brakeman upon a passenger train. He is the son of Columbus Scott and Flora L. Scott of Lamoni, Iowa; was born at Lawrence, Michigan, May 29, 1879, and came with his parents to Lamoni in March, 1892. He graduated from the Lamoni High School June, 1896, and from the Commercial Department of Graceland College June, 1899. He took a position with the Santa Fe Railroad Company March, 1902, and continued with them until the time of his death. On the 25th of May, 1903, Virgil L. Scott was married to Miss Clara E. Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Thompson, of Scott City, Kansas. The young wife accompanied the remains to Lamoni where the interment took place September 2. Bro. Scott became a member of the church April 15, 1890, being baptized by Bro. E. C. Briggs and confirmed by Bro. W. W. Blair, at Lamoni, Iowa. On the evening of August 29 his train had just run into Great Bend, Kansas; the engine was detached and was being taken to the roundhouse by Bro. Scott, who was brakeman, and the engineer and fireman. When near the roundhouse a freight train dashed into them demolishing their engine. After the crash Virgil asked to be raised up that he might be able to breathe, but breathed his last soon after without showing further consciousness. The fireman who was with him died soon after. The engineer stated upon the occasion that Virgil could have saved himself as he saw the freight coming but was endeavoring to save the engineer and fireman also. Upon the 2d of September the funeral service was held at the Brick Church, Lamoni, Iowa, Elder John Smith in charge, and Elder E. L. Kelley preaching the discourse.

BLUNT.—William Earl Blunt, fourth son of William and Mary E. Blunt, was born December 2, 1901, at Fanning, Kansas; departed this life August 18, 1903. Funeral sermon by Elder L. G. Gurwell in Saints' church at Fanning, Kansas.

HALEN.—Augustus Halen was born July 27, 1849, in Denmark; united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ December 9, 1894, at Omaha, Nebraska, and was faithful unto the end, which came August 10, 1903, and which relieved him of the pains of a lingering affliction. His companion for many years is left a widow almost alone to finish the journey of life. Funeral services at the Saints' chapel at Omaha by Elder Charles Fry.

CLARK.—John Roscoe Clark, infant son of Bro. and Sr. J. R. Clark, died at Hood River, Oregon, August 22, 1903, aged ten months.

CLARK.—Bro. John M. Clark, aged 55 years and 3 days, died at Lamoni, Iowa, September 3, 1903, from wounds received by the kick of a horse. His lower jaw was broken and his head badly hurt, so that he lived only six days after the accident. In 1883 he married Hannah Weedmark who, with one child, survives him. He was baptized in 1888 by Bro. John Shippy, in Hersey, Michigan, and came to Lamoni in 1896. He was an honest and industrious man. Funeral sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, Bro. John Smith in charge of the services.

WHITE.—At St. Joseph, Missouri, September 5, 1903, Frank W. White, aged 29 years, 11 months, and 6 days. From childhood he was a cripple through an accident that made one leg crooked, and he suffered greatly. But he persevered, learned to set type, and for years has been a valued compositor in the HERALD Office. Last spring it was decided that an operation be performed to save his leg, but finally it had to be amputated, and from his weak condition death resulted. He was the son of Bro. Valentine and Sr. Martha A. White. He married July 15, 1900, and with one child his wife is left to mourn. Frank was highly esteemed by his fellow workmen in the office, and with deep and sincere regret they laid him to rest, six of their number acting as bearers. He was brought to Lamoni for burial. Funeral sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bro. John Smith, Sunday, September 6.

The spirit of this nation is expressed by these three words, Liberty, Equality, Fraternity. We need for the solution of the race problem fraternity both between North and South and between black and white. The remedy for illegal execution of legal and just provisions is to be found, primarily in the recognition of that word fraternity, and in maintaining the fraternal spirit between North and South. We, in the North, have been excessively credulous about the ability of the uneducated negro, and excessively skeptical about virtues of the educated white man in the South. There are considerable classes of men in the South who are as strenuously opposed to injustice and inequity toward the negro as any man in the North. There are considerable classes in the South who are as strenuous believers in Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity as any man in the North. They do not believe in universal suffrage; they do not believe that the ignorant portion of the community should dominate the intelligent portion of the community; they do not believe in amalgamation and social equality; but they do believe in these three great principles,—Liberty, Equality, Fraternity. They may be in a minority. That is not material. Majorities do not rule. Virtue, intelligence, justice, rule. If there are a few men brave, courageous, honest, true, in these Southern States,—and certainly such there are,—who believe in Liberty, Equality, Fraternity, those in the North who believe in these principles should strike hands with their fellow believers across that Mason and Dixon's line, and work in coöperation and combination with them for the solution of this problem which confronts us. All the sinners are not in the South; all the saints are not in the North. The remedy for this problem is Christianity; but it is not pharisaism; and there are many persons who mistake pharisaism for Christianity. The remedy for this problem is not going into the South with "I am holier than thou, and I am wiser than thou, and I am a greater lover of liberty than thou, and I am a greater philanthropist than thou, and thou must follow my lead." The remedy is to find the honest and true lovers of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity in the South and work with them, more ready to follow their lead than to ask them to follow ours. For they live where the problem must be wrought out. If there were but a few,—there are, in fact, many,—who believe in the free development of the negro, in the equality of the negro before the law, in the spirit of fraternity that is helpfulness toward the negro,—it would still be for us to say to them, "Lead you the way; we will work with you, we will follow you."—From "The Race Problem in the United States," by Doctor Lyman Abbott, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for September.

Radium.

THE REMARKABLE PROPERTIES OF THE MOST WONDERFUL SUBSTANCE IN THE WORLD.

Radium makes amends for its scarcity by its remarkable properties. A little of it goes a long way. It is so highly luminous that print can be read by its light. Curiously enough, it possesses the power of imparting its own luminosity to other bodies which in their normal state are quite inactive. A mere fraction of a grain in solution poured from one vessel to another imparts to each considerable activity, which persists for some time, even after both vessels are washed in the usual way. The property is similar to that of a grain of musk, which imparts its odor to every article of clothing in a wardrobe, although there has been no material contact. So powerful is the photographic action of radium that it is capable of penetrating black paper and other opaque objects as readily as sunlight passes through clear glass. Its chemical action is no less energetic and remarkable. Oxygen is transformed into ozone; yellow phosphorous is converted into red phosphorous.

The physiological effect of radium is such that we should, perhaps, be thankful that large quantities of the material can not be readily obtained. For six hours Professor Currie carried in his waistcoat a very small tube containing a very small quantity of radium. A few days later a sore developed, which healed only after seven weeks had elapsed. The constant handling of radium is attended with inflammation of the fingers. Held against the temples of a blind man, radium will so affect the retina that the sensation of light is produced. In normal persons the experiment if prolonged will result in paralysis of the optic nerve. Applied to the unprotected nerve-centers of small animals, the rays produce paralyzing effects which kill.

Radium destroys the germinating power of seeds, kills the larvae of butterflies, and has such a bactericidal effect that it may find a wide use in the cure of certain skin-diseases. Indeed, in one of the Parisian hospitals it has been employed with results quite as remarkable as those obtained by Pinsen with ultraviolet rays. Diamonds are rendered phosphorescent, and can thus be readily distinguished from paste imitations, which are not so sensitive to the rays.—September Woman's Home Companion.

Ray Stannard Baker's article in McClure's for September on the labor situation in Chicago is opportune and significant. The great strikes of last winter and spring in Chicago have been settled, and capital and labor have come together, with what astonishing results Mr. Baker all too irrefutably points out. "Capital and Labor Hunt Together" is the startling title under which he writes, no more startling or portentous, however, than the facts he states and the incidents he relates. Capital and labor have combined, and the public pays—pays in higher prices and poorer service all along the line. "The New Industrial Conspiracy" the author calls it. In almost all trades, unions of employers and employees work together to boycott the independents—the independent firm or the independent workman. Mr. Baker cites instance after instance of this game of freeze-out that may well astonish readers. As a clear, careful, and circumstantial investigation of a most menacing phase of our industrial development this article deserves a wide reading.

The September number of the North American Review is an unusually attractive issue. The leading feature is one of extraordinary interest. It is a symposium of appreciation of "Leo XIII., His Work and Influence," from the pens of eminent representatives of the Catholic, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregationalist, Methodist and Jewish churches, the writers being Archbishop Ireland of St. Paul, the Rev. Dr. Coleman, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Delaware, the Rev. Dr. R. F. Coyle, Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, the Rev. Dr. J. B. Thomas, Professor of Church History in Newton Theological Institute, the Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden, the Rev. Dr. J. Wesley Johnston and the Rev. Dr. H. Pereira Mendes. A. L. Snowden, formerly United States Minister to Greece, Roumania and Serbia, discusses "The Problem of the Balkans." Joseph Pennell writes with enthusiastic admiration of the late "James McNeill Whistler." Archibald S. Hurd describes "British Naval Progress." Crisanto Medina, Minister from Guatemala to France, explains "Why the Panama Route was Originally Chosen." Hugh Clifford, formerly Governor of North Borneo, contrasts the rival systems which have been employed by the British and Dutch in the government of Malayan peoples. Charles Waldstein sets forth "The Ideal of a University." Brander Matthews tells "How Shakspeare Learned His Trade." H. G. Furbay gives an account of the aims and the work of "The Anti-Saloon League. Cesare Lombroso, the famous alienist, gives the result of recent research as to the frequency and significance of "Left-handedness and Left-sidedness." W. B. Yeats, the Irish poet, contributes an exquisite morality drama, entitled "The Hour-Glass," and the number concludes with the ninth part of Mr. Henry James's novel, "The Ambassadors."

The enforcement of the new Education Act in England shows that the "passive resistance" to it, described in Mr. Horne's recent article in the Outlook, is not confined to the Nonconformists. Several members of the Established Church appear in the lists summoned for refusal to pay the education rate. Among these a prominent layman positively refused to pay for the maintenance of Roman Catholic schools, four of which were in his district. The law now puts the support of these, as well as the Anglican Church schools, upon the public. An Anglican clergyman has joined the passive resisters, and another has denounced the imposition of sectarian tests upon the head masters of schools supported by public money. The English papers report the commencement of legal proceedings in over fifty places against persons who refuse to pay the education rate. Actions against such persons are brought into court in batches, in the city of Bath seventy at once, and distress warrants for the seizure and sale of household or other goods are issued against the recusants. These legal proceedings are not without occasional excesses: in one case goods of the minimum value of $50 were distrained to satisfy a rate of less than $2. In some cases magistrates retire from the bench to avoid participation in the proceedings; in other cases auctioneers decline to sell the goods seized. At the sales of goods they are bought in by friends of the recusants. After the proceedings in court public meetings in denunciation of the Act fan the flame of opposition. The passive resistance movement now includes some twenty thousand avowed supporters, and seems to be spreading. Its immediate consequence is an embittered feeling against the Established Church, which the clerical promoters of the Act could hardly have foreseen. The animus of the resistance to the Act is the emancipation of the public schools from the control of the Established Church. In Wales, where the population is overwhelmingly Nonconformist, a great majority of the county councils have declared hostility to the Act, and threaten to render it unworkable. The special Education Act for the city of London, which has just been passed, may not work any more smoothly.—The Outlook, September 5, 1903.

"The Yukon" is the title of an article by Sr. Mamie Suttles, in the September Autumn Leaves. It is written in her usual attractive style and is very interesting.

The crucial period in a man's life is the time when he is forced to make a choice of the profession he is to follow. Where it is likely to be one which differs from that of his father, he is often compelled to make his choice without sufficient advice on which to base his decision. For this reason, the Cosmopolitan's series on "Making a Choice of a Profession," is of particular value to young men, containing, as it does, sound, practical advice from the men best qualified to speak on the subjects discussed. In the August number, John M. Carrère deals with the career of architect—what it offers in rewards to the aspirant for success, and what it demands of him in qualifications and character.

A HERALD EDITOR IN MISSOURI.

On Thursday morning, August 27, accompanied by wife and daughter, we left Lamoni, bound for Stewartsville, Missouri, to attend the Northern Missouri reunion. Owing to heavy rains the night before, the train was thirty-five minutes late out of Lamoni, and over an hour late into St. Joseph. Along the road were numerous evidences of a very heavy rainfall, the streams at places being out of their banks, playing havoc in cornfields and meadows. Later we learned that considerable damage was done by the rain along the main line of the Burlington and on other railroads in Southern Iowa.

We reached St. Joseph about half past twelve, and in the evening entered a Hannibal train for Stewartsville, which was reached about seven o'clock. Being met at the train by "Arch" McCord (a one time Graceland student, now a worker in the missionary field), we felt that we were not entirely a stranger in a strange place. At Bro. McCord's home we spent the night and part of the next day, going to the camp-grounds in the afternoon. We found the committee had furnished us a very comfortable tent, our boxes and trunks were on the grounds, and we were soon "at home" in our canvas house.

We found the reunion committee somewhat worried because the "big tent" ordered for the occasion had by some mistake been carried past Stewartsville by the train crew, and difficulty was being experienced in locating it. The weather was good, the smaller tents were on the grounds and erected, and a goodly number of the Saints being present, a meeting was held in the open air at four o'clock. T. T. Hinderks, president of Far West District, was chosen president of the reunion, the writer and I. N. White associates, and C. P. Paul secretary. The appointment of Sr. Carrie Lewis to have charge of the music was indorsed. Short speeches were then made by some of the brethren, and the "reunion" was well under way.

Not in the least daunted by the failure of the big tent to put in its appearance, the large tent owned by Bro. B. J. Dice, which had been erected as a sleeping-tent for the elders, was seated, a platform erected, lights furnished, and in the evening Bro. John Kaler began the preaching of the reunion. The presiding authorities announced that the order of

AFTER a voyage which was made somewhat unpleasant by the roughness of the sea, President Ernest R. Dewsnup, of Graceland College, with his wife and two children, arrived safely in Lamoni Tuesday noon. They are warmly greeted by their many Lamoni friends.

COLLEGE students and professors have been arriving here during the last few days and Graceland now begins her ninth year of school work. Indications point to a successful year. The faculty will be of greatly increased efficiency; students are reported from New York, Michigan, Missouri, Idaho, and Iowa, and with the increased support financially which the College is receiving we think the outlook very propitious.

THE Independence Stake held services in the Academy of Music, at Kansas City, Missouri, Sunday last. Bishops Kelley and Hilliard and Apostle Joseph Luff were the speakers.

meetings would be prayer-meeting at eight o'clock in the morning, preaching at a quarter to eleven, at half past two, and at eight in the evening. This order was carried out with a few exceptions. The prayer-meetings as a whole were enjoyed by the Saints, some of them being marked by special manifestations. The preaching during the reunion was done by the following brethren: John Kaler, Alfred White, I. N. White, W. W. Smith, C. Ed Miller, J. A. Tanner, J. R. Lambert, Arch McCord, W. E. Haden, Joseph Luff, J. A. Gunsolley, Ammon White, E. L. Kelley, and the writer. The speakers as a whole enjoyed fairly good liberty, and their efforts seemed to be well received, though discussed freely.

On Monday the large tent came to hand, and was erected in time for the afternoon services.

There were some special features of the reunion which deserve special mention. On Sunday and Monday nights, August 30 and 31, C. Ed Miller gave lectures on the Book of Mormon, the lectures being illustrated by numerous pictures and drawings projected on a large screen by a stereopticon. The lectures were well received, especially by the Saints, and evidenced the fact that Bro. Ed has spent much time and money in gathering the material for them. A number of the young Saints who are gifted in a musical way assisted the lecturer to make the occasion more enjoyable. On Monday night a notable feature was a song sung by Sr. Cordie White, the words of which were written by Bro. W. J. Smith, and set to music by Bro. Hougas.

Wednesday, September 2, might be called Graceland Day. The morning preaching hour was occupied by the writer in an effort in behalf of Graceland, and at the afternoon service Joseph Luff delivered an able discourse on the subject of coöperation with God. At the close he called for subscriptions to assist in paying Graceland's debt. Only a little over one hundred dollars was subscribed that day, though Bro. Luff returned towards the latter part of the reunion, after visiting the Dow City reunion, and secured a few more subscriptions.

Thursday, September 3, was Children's Day, and a large number of children were in attendance. The prayer-meeting in the morning was in charge of some of the Sunday-school authorities, the special subject being the Sunday-school and its work. The forenoon sermon by Bro. Gunsolley was designed for children, and he succeeded in holding the attention of the children throughout, which speaks well for his ability. He succeeded in interesting the older ones, too. In the afternoon a mixed program was rendered, consisting of recitations, speeches, songs, quartets, etc. It was well received, though a general criticism was that it was too long,—interest towards the last lagging because of weariness. On the whole the day was an enjoyable one, and we trust the little ones will look forward to next Children's Day with joy.

On Friday, besides the regular services, a business session was held at four o'clock in the afternoon, over which the writer was called to preside. Bro. Faul as secretary was in his place. It was decided to hold another reunion next year on the same grounds, to be held in the light of the second moon in August. The committee of this year was by unanimous vote continued,—a testimonial of their worthiness. The committee is composed of T. T. Hinderks, C. P. Faul, A. W. Head, Andrew Lewis, and B. J. Dice. To the efficiency of this committee is very largely due the success of this year's reunion. They agree with Bro. Terry, however, that it takes something besides talk to run a reunion.

Saturday was Religio Day, all the services but the evening hour being given over to the Religians. The morning prayer-services had for special subject the Religio and its work. Walter W. Smith and J. A. Gunsolley delivered addresses in the morning hour, and Ammon White and S. H. Simmons addressed the audience in the afternoon. Of course their addresses were on subjects in which Religians are generally interested. Some recitations were also given. At four o'clock a "Religio" was held. The Religians seemed to enjoy their day, and we trust that branch of the work received a healthy impetus.

It is worthy of note here that the business-meeting on Friday voted that next year the afternoon sessions should be given over to the Religio and Sunday-school authorities.

The attendance on both Sundays was large, but the largest attendance of the reunion was on Sunday, the 6th. The weather was good, and all day long large numbers were on the grounds. Some idea of the size of the crowd can be gathered when it is known that after the evening services a count revealed the fact that one hundred and ninety-seven teams and forty-seven horse-backers left the grounds.

Over forty tents were pitched on the grounds, and the committee had calls for more but could not supply them. The weather throughout was exceptionally fine. No rain disturbed the campers, though on the day before the reunion began, much rain fell, and also on the day after the close. On Monday morning, the 7th, fortune again favored the campers. No dew fell in the night, and the tents were dry and in good condition for rolling up. Some of the tents were down and rolled up before daylight, some of the campers leaving on an early train. All the tents were down and under shelter before rain struck the grounds. Truly the reunion was blessed with good weather.

There were many of the ministry present, making possible a distribution of the burden of preaching. The brethren called on responded cheerfully, each being willing to do his part.

A boarding tent, run by the committee, furnished meals for those who did not wish to cook at the tents.

The grounds were beautiful, and admirably answered the purposes of the reunion. They are located on the farm of Bro. B. J. Dice, and what he has seems to be at the service of the district,—a worthy example.

The reunion was a success, and many who came from a distance expressed their determination to "come early and stay late" next year,—they had enjoyed themselves. We predict a larger attendance next year.

On Tuesday, September 1, Bro. C. P. Faul took myself and family out to his country home, near what is known as the Pleasant Grove Church, where Bro. Faul is branch president. We spent some time in looking over his nicely improved farm, which has for a few years past been under the care of Bro. and Sr. Fred McWethy. We enjoyed seeing the country where lives our genial "Charley."

On Monday, the 7th, Bro. T. T. Hinderks took my wife, daughter, and self to his home about four and one half miles north of Stewartville, in the midst of what is termed the German settlement, where our German brethren have a branch and neat church building. They are located in a splendid farming country, the lay of the land being almost ideal. The fine looking crops testify to the industry of the farmers and the richness of the soil, while the large and neat looking barns, cribs, and out-buildings indicate that thrift is a prominent factor. The Lord is blessing our German brethren near Stewartville, and we are glad to note their willingness to give the praise where it is due.

On Tuesday morning Bro. Hinderks started to fill a promise he had made to us,—to take us to Far West. About nine o'clock, Bro. Hinderks, wife, and daughter Ruth, myself, wife, and daughter Alice, started for the Far West country, behind one of Bro. Hinderk's sturdy teams. The night before I had studied the map to locate "Far West," but failing to find it, I waited for the explanation. It came later.

On our way we passed through Osborn and Cameron, stopping at the home of Sr. S. Simmons in the latter place for dinner, resuming our journey about two o'clock, and a couple of hours later drove up to the home of Bro. Samuel H. Simmons, who lives about a mile and a half from the site of old "Far West," a name applied to a tract of ground to indicate where once had stood a town of about three thousand inhabitants.

Soon after we reached the home of Bro. Simmons, rain began to fall, and until sometime the following night it ceased only at short intervals. Of course we were prisoners, and spent the time reading, writing, eating pop-corn, etc., etc., everything possible being done to relieve the monotony caused by the constant downpour of rain and the accompanying gloom. So the time passed not altogether unpleasantly, after all.

Thursday morning the sun rose bright and clear, and soon the steam was rising from fences, buildings, and ground, but there was mud everywhere. About the middle of the forenoon Bro. Hinderks hitched up and drove with us past the hamlet of Kerr to old Far West. Of course we got out and walked around on the "Temple Lot," the most famed spot in that part of the country. We walked around in the excavation which had been made for the basement and which showed that the Saints had planned to build a very large temple. Some of the large stones still remain in place, and we stepped the length of the building. Nearly forty steps! Three feet to the step would be between one hundred and one hundred and twenty feet. That length with a width proportionate would have made a very large building.

Of course as we walked around the historic spot we had peculiar feelings. People always do when wandering among the relics of the past. With us those feelings were strengthened by the knowledge that the people who had planned that large building and built the large town in which it was to have stood were a people who believed as we do, whose hopes in the gathering of the Saints were such as is ours now. And to think of what they suffered at the hands of their ruthless enemies, and what bitter disappointment they must have felt as they were driven by ruthless enemies from their homes and farms, and turning their faces for one more look at the loved spots saw their homes in flames. Truly their sorrows were great. Their faith must have been strong to enable them to trudge patiently to another far away stopping-place and begin the erection of other homes. We had read of how the Saints had been driven from their Missouri homes, but as we stood on the Temple Lot at old Far West and saw around us only the slightest evidences of where once had stood a large town filled with a happy, devoted, and religious people, we realized as never before what those Saints must have suffered in the bitter persecution waged against them by relentless foes.

The view from the Temple Lot is magnificent. Located on an eminence higher than most such eminences around it, it commands a view of a splendid stretch of country, a country rich in agricultural possibilities and one well calculated to support a large and thriving city. To the northwest about nine miles can be seen the smoke arising from the chimneys in Cameron, a busy little city of about three thousand souls, or about such a town as old Far West is said to have been. To the north and northwest lies the beautiful valley of Shoal Creek, the stream through which barefooted women and children were driven by their persecutors. On every side the hills of the rolling country were dotted with houses and barns of thrifty farms, and orchards, corn-fields, green pastures, and brown oat and wheat-fields bore silent but strong testimony of the fertility of the land. It was a quiet and beautiful scene. And to think of what might have been!

It is worthy of note that Mr. Whitmer, on whose land the Lot lies, has never disturbed it. It is just as the passing of time has made it since abandoned by the fleeing Saints. In the basement grows a large cottonwood-tree. It is now dying, which probably gives rise to a tradition often heard in the neighborhood that trees will not grow on the Lot, a tradition merely, we think.

But thoughts of the thirty-mile drive back to the home of Bro. Hinderks did not permit us to linger as long as we might have done, so we reëntered the carriage and drove on south to the home of Bro. George S. Swenson, on the well-lying and pretty Church farm. Under the guidance of Bro. George we were taken over the place and shown the evidences of the one-time town. Old cellarways and filled-up wells were seen, and in one place two lonely graves were still plainly visible, grimly keeping within their cold walls the secrets of their inmates. Whose graves are they? Who knows?

"Here," said Bro. George as he stood beside an old well in which some of the brick wall still remained, "is a well which is said to have been in Bro. Joseph's yard." We knew by that that we were on the ground where the home of one of our ancestors is supposed to have stood. Not far away were the graves. Whose graves? Who knows?

Bro. George also told us of a large stone which tradition says, "fell from heaven," and weighed about fifteen tons when it fell. We asked to see it. On our way back he pointed it out, and we broke off a piece. It must have shrunk terribly since its long "fall," for we judge it would not now weigh more than five or six hundred pounds at the most, which is evidence of how a "heavenly" stone will shrink or earthly tradition will grow with the passing of time. To us the specimen we have bears a striking resemblance to specimens we have of the stones on the Temple Lot. They are probably from the same quarry. We saw fossils in the "fallen" stone,—fossils, possibly, of "heavenly" creatures of long ago. If that stone "fell from heaven" it must have been dropped by some sportive but stray Kansas cyclone after through playing with it. But we prefer to think the "fallen" stone came to its present resting-place through the medium of human hands assisted by the straining muscles of beasts of burden.

We drove away from the historic grounds well repaid for our trip, and feeling grateful to Bro. Hinderks for enabling us to see and be on the famous spot. We drove back to Bro. Simmons' house and after dinner started on our return trip, which was made without unusual incident other than that plenty of mud was encountered. We reached the Hinderks' home about eight o'clock in the evening.

On Friday afternoon we were taken to Stewartsville, where we stopped at the home of Bro. and Sr. McCord until morning, when we took train for Lamoni, reaching home in the rain about the middle of the afternoon, well pleased with our trip among our genial brethren in Missouri.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. M. A. Christy wrote from Akron, Iowa, September 8, renewing her subscription to the Church papers, and added: "I could not be a true Latter Day Saint without the papers, for I am so anxious for this great work to spread throughout the world, and am watching the papers to know of it. I praise my heavenly Father that he accounted me worthy to show me this gospel and verified his promise that if we do the will of the Father we shall know of the doctrine. I do know this restored angelic message is true and is the true doctrine of Christ. We have just closed a two-week series of tent work by Brn. J. C. Crabb and J. M. Baker, with Sr. Baker assisting in the singing, which helped us very much indeed. Better interest the last few nights. Hope we will not have to wait so long between elders' visits as we have before. May God send more laborers into his vineyard!"

Bro. E. F. Shupe, Denver, Colorado, September 9: "I learned this morning that one of the members of the Second Congregational Church who has been attending our tent-meetings became dissatisfied with her baptism and demanded baptism in the legal way, and the Reverend Blanchard had to baptize her, which he did last Sunday. Maybe she will get her eyes open a little wider after a while, and conclude to be immersed by proper authority."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. C. Ed Miller delivered illustrated lectures on archæological evidences of the Book of Mormon at the Religio and Sunday-school convention at Evergreen Friday and Saturday evenings, and at Lamoni Sunday evening.

As we go to press we are in receipt of a communication from the senior editor dated, Hamilton, Scotland, September 4. This will appear next week.

In another column notice is given of the bazaar planned by the Patronesses of Graceland College. This society is working along a good line, and we trust they will have the assistance of all.

The dictionary of the ancient Egyptian language, compiled by the Berlin Academy of Sciences, under the direction of Professor Emmann, is nearly completed. It contains two hundred and eighty thousand words or subjects. The work is endowed by the German Emperor.

THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM.

(Synopsis of the funeral sermon of Bro. Alexander McFarland, delivered by Elbert A. Smith, at West Burlington, Iowa, September 2, 1903.)

The lesson that we read to you before the singing of the second hymn was the twenty-third Psalm. We chose that Psalm because there are so many noble sentiments in it that might have been voiced by our aged brother who has gone from us. It is a Psalm that has claimed the admiration of the greatest minds in many ages. It has done that despite the fact that it is couched in very simple language—or perhaps because it is couched in simple language.

“The Lord is my shepherd”—that is the opening statement. In this age when, as predicted, many are saying, “Lo, Christ is here,” or, “Lo, he is yonder,” when doubt has taken hold on the hearts of many others and they have written in their creeds as the chief proposition, “We do not know,” it is a splendid thing that one can truthfully say, as could our brother, “The Lord is my shepherd.”

To be able to say this presupposes a certain amount of personal knowledge that is the result of personal revelation. Christ tells us that his sheep know his voice and a stranger they will not follow. How can we know Christ? Not by the testimony of others. Not even by the testimony of the Bible. Paul gives us to understand in the Corinthian letter that we can only know him through the testimony of the Holy Spirit. That was the way Peter was able to answer the question, “Whom say ye that I am?” He had daily intercourse with the Master, yet flesh and blood had not revealed to him that Christ was the Son of the living God. It required a personal revelation from God.

So to-day we say that when the repentant sinner falls at the foot of the mercy-seat and then rises to say, “I know that Christ is the Son of God. I know that my sins are forgiven,” he must do so by virtue of a personal revelation. He is testifying to the fact that God still speaks, that it is still a day of revelation. He is stating a fact that an hour ago he did not know; if it is a fact and he does know it, he has learned it from a source not human.

Christ promised to send the Comforter, and said that it should show the disciples things to come and should testify of him. Peter on the day of Pentecost extended the promise, declaring, “The promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.” Blessed fact! God is calling us. The promise is to us. The Spirit is still given to show things to come and to testify of him. By it we can say, “The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.”

“He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters.” In the land where the Psalmist lived there was so much of sandy desert and barren hill that a little green pasture beside the still waters meant something. As a boy he had led his sheep from the fold in the morning, out over a hot and dusty way, brown and barren foot-hills on one side and yellow, sandy wastes on the other, till finally they came down into a valley where there was a little stream of pure water, bordered by fields of green grass.

Years later when he became the Psalmist he remembered that oft-repeated scene and it occurred to him that he was one of a flock also, led by a shepherd; so he wrote, “He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters.”

It is typical of the Christian experience. It is not all peace and pleasure, eating in green fields and drinking from cool brooks. There is the hot road to be traveled, the desert to cross; but there is a Guide who knows the way that leads to the green fields, so we are content.

“He leadeth me in paths of righteousness.” Let me read you a clipping from yesterday’s Hawk-Eye: “Mr. McFarland was a Christian from boyhood and was loved and esteemed by all who knew him. He had kind words for all and spoke evil of no one. He was a member of the Latter Day Saint Church.” The Lord led this man in paths of righteousness. I am glad that I can read these words from a disinterested party. They are better than any sermon that I can preach to you. I am not ashamed that they are better. I am glad that we still have those in our Church whose lives are grander than any oral profession that can possibly be made. It is a proof that there is still a power in the gospel that does not confine itself to the pulpit.

A righteous life prepares one for a noble death. The head nurse at the hospital told me that Bro. McFarland was one of the best patients they had ever had. He was brave and patient and willing to do whatever was demanded of him.

“Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil.” The mystery of life and death has long engaged the attention of man. How strange that the human brain, so potent to solve the mysteries around it, is helpless in the presence of the problem within it. We may not understand the mysterious forces that permit or compel the infusion of spirit into matter in the beginning or the forces that compel their separation at the end. Our brother has solved the problem; but he is silent. Neither love nor policy can persuade him to speak; neither force nor authority can compel him. We have come with him to the portal and the door has opened. His spirit has gone in and we are shut out. We have seen nothing: we have heard nothing. All that we ever saw of him we see now, yet something is gone.

Observation will not satisfy us. There is but one answer to the riddle of life and that is found in the statement, "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." The only solution to the mystery of death is that in the statement of Christ, "He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." We may accept these or reject them; no others are offered anywhere.

They are the hope of the Christian, and so, though he sorrows when his friends die, as he does when they leave him to go to a foreign land for a long sojourn, he does not sorrow as those to whom the future is shrouded in impenetrable mystery. He looks forward to the time seen by John on Patmos when the dead in Christ shall rise and reign with Christ; he hopes to avoid the fate of the wicked who live not again till the thousand years are ended. He understands the nature of God's justice and knows that he will get what he has labored for. Paul tells us that as one star differs from another in glory so shall it be in the resurrection. The man who has labored and lived for the truth will shine more brightly than the nominal Christian who rests on his oars and drifts. It is this understanding of the future that spurs the Christian to action, and in the hour of death takes away his fear.

The young man starts out in life. He begins to climb the upward road with joy. He is strong and the morning is bright. By and by he reaches the summit of the mountain. It is noon. He has but a moment to enjoy his triumph and then he begins the descent. His steps are halting now. Soon the mists of evening creep around him. He enters the dark, damp valley. He is not afraid because he knows that soon he will see the lights of the city shining like stars in the evening haze—the lights of the heavenly city. For we look for a "city not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

"Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies." It seems strange that the mere fact that a man lives his religion should stir the animosity of a certain class. Yet so it has always been. Christ harmed no man; yet he had more enemies than friends among men. His enemies, strange to say, were among the strictest sect of the most religious people of the time. The persecutors of men for conscience' sake have always been among those who professed religion.

I do not know that our aged brother had an enemy; but I dare say that more than once as he went about his work he had to bear the reproach of Christ. The very fact that he was a member of the peculiar Church that he loved would insure him at times the jeers of the world. As it was with the Master so is it with the servant. He is gone now where a righteous Judge will judge between him and them. The eloquent tongue of Christ will plead the cause of the man who had not language to defend himself.

What a glorious day when Christ shall plead the cause of injured innocence! But let us learn now religious tolerance. The true Christian will respect the convictions even of a heathen. If he visits a Chinese joss-house he will treat the men who worship there with respect. He may not feel to take off his hat to the god they worship; but he can remove it to the divine impulse that is stirring the yellow heathen to seek after the great first cause.

The things that men worship are not always sacred; but the sentiment that moves them to worship is always sacred, and the true Christian and the true gentleman will never make it the object of ridicule.

What a grand thought that all men who have suffered or shall suffer for the cause of Christ—whether among the disciples driven from Jerusalem or among the Puritans driven from England, among the Quakers driven from Massachusetts or among the Saints driven from Missouri and Illinois—what a grand thought that they can say, "Thou preparest me a table in the presence of mine enemies."

"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."

"Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life." Some might say that this was not fulfilled in the case of the brother, because of the peculiarly sad and painful accident that caused his death, after a long life of usefulness. We do not always understand what goodness and mercy are; we think we are the recipients of them when we enjoy physical health and material prosperity, while in reality sometimes the loss of both is a blessing to us. The fact that the brother was blessed with that spirit of patience and charity that led him never to speak evil of another and made this his watchword when a slanderous story came to his notice, "Oh, let that enter at one ear and pass out at the other," is an evidence that God blessed him with the most choice blessing. When he gave him that spirit he blessed him more than he did you and me in merely sparing us the accident that caused this man's death.

It is infinitely more to be desired that we should lie on our bed with shattered body and a pure spirit, than that we should be able to walk the street yet have a spiritual deformity that will bar us from the kingdom of God.

The Christian is not promised that he will escape sickness and accident and death; but he is promised that through the gospel he shall be enabled to compel all these to minister to his good.

Now we come to the closing promise of the psalm—"I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever." That is the culmination of all Christian hope. "In my Father's house are many mansions." No house reared by human hands in Burlington, the association of no human family, however kind, but a mansion in our Father's house, the companionship of the family of God.

"FOR WHAT WAS CHRIST'S BAPTISM?"

The HERALD for September 24, 1902, contains an article under the above caption, contributed by Elder C. F. Snow. While I do not wish to contradict any essential position he has taken, I beg permission to offer a few comments on that article, and also to make some suggestions in regard to the question, "For what was Christ's baptism?" and the purpose for which men and women are to be baptized.

Bro. Snow began the subject matter of that article by asking, "What was Christ's baptism for? Was it to remit the sins of the world?" He then begins answering his own questions as follows, "I say not. It was to fulfill all righteousness. How is righteousness fulfilled? By keeping the commandments of God, is it not? He came to do his Father's will, to keep the gospel law, to show the world what they must do to be saved. I understand he made faith perfect by works." Admitting all, not only what we have so far quoted from his contribution, but also all of the rest of it, there are nevertheless some principles involved in the baptism of Jesus, which if I understand aright, the brother neither mentioned, nor explained. While agreeing with the brother that "all righteousness" is fulfilled by keeping the commandments of God, nevertheless there was a special and particular purpose, beyond and superior to just a simple act of submissive obedience; a certain purpose to be filled and a certain object to be attained by the baptism of Jesus. What was it?

At this day and age of the world contracts or covenants between individuals and organizations are put in either printed or written form, and when the stipulations and details have been stated therein, and the parties entering into the arrangement have attached their signatures or marks, and the proper court or officer has applied the seal, the instrument becomes an official contract or covenant, obligatory, and binding each person to his respective part of the contract. But in past ages of the world's history men sometimes employed types and emblems for the accomplishment of like purposes; and God always has bestowed respectful consideration and regard to the custom and habits of all people when teaching them with reference to the providences which he has mapped out to administer to, and bestow upon his creatures. In all of the parables of Jesus, many of the teachings of the Apostle Paul, and prophetic instructions of the prophets, the same system was employed.

John the Baptist neither originated nor invented water baptism. It was in use by both Jews and pagans before his day. From an article on the origin of baptism we quote: "Treatises on Jewish antiquities speak of the baptism of proselytes."—Encyclopedia Britannica, twentieth century edition, Werner Company, Akron, Ohio.

In a manual of baptism, by Elder Bailey of the Missionary Baptist Church, we find a statement to the same effect. To prove that the Jews had already had an acquaintance with water baptism, and a partial understanding of the purposes for which it was employed, I cite the following: "And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet."—John 1:25.

Some years ago the writer read a treatise on baptism wherein the writer informed his readers that the Jews practiced the baptism of water for the purpose of initiating Gentile proselytes into the Jewish congregation; and that the Gentile went to his baptism, declaring that by that act he was dying to, and being buried away from, all past relationships and associations; and that it was his purpose and intention to emerge from that watery grave with new objects and new desires, in order that he and his posterity might be included in that covenant which God made with Abraham and receive of the blessings flowing to his descendants. Hence, in view of the above, when we read Paul's declaration, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death" (Romans 6:3, 4), we are given to understand, let all other considerations and purposes be what they will, that in some manner, a covenant of death is irrevocably attached to it.

It will hardly be disputed that physical and spiritual death are both the consequence of sin, yet notwithstanding that fact, Jesus was not subject to death as the natural result of his humanity, for in connection with his purity, "In him was life; and the life was the light of men."—John 1:4. Nevertheless, as Bro. Snow says, Jesus "made faith perfect by works." And, having come to do his Father's will, which was the redemption of man, both from sin and the thralldom of death, "death having passed upon all men, for that all have sinned," and also "as in Adam all die," Jesus, in being baptized, used that for the purpose of committing himself to the covenant of the sacrifice, whereby he was to "become the author of eternal salvation, unto all them that obey him." (Hebrews 5:9.)

Prior to his birth in the flesh, Jesus or Christ was the word by which the worlds were framed, but by his birth in the flesh, the way was opened whereby by his baptism, to complete his obligation to the covenant to die, of which we read, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil."—Hebrews 2: 14.

Then as Bro. Snow says, "John [the Baptist] was the porter to open the door to let Christ pass into the kingdom of God." And thus he entered what was till then an untried field of enterprise, which had long been a mystery that angels and prophets were desirous of looking into. But, "Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word." But in his entrance into the kingdom of God, he went in not as a purchased subject, but as Son and Lord over his Father's house.

While the baptism of Jesus was not for the remission of his own sins, for he had no sins, nevertheless indirectly he was baptized for the sins of his espoused bride, the church, in that he loved the church, and by his baptism he covenanted to give his life a ransom for it, which covenant eventuated in the shedding of his blood upon that rugged cross, and his victorious resurrection from death and hell. Then, as Jesus by his baptism entered into covenant to pass through death in order to accomplish our redemption, we by our baptism enter into covenant with God to accept that sacrifice as the propitiation for our sins.

In another place it is written: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."—Galatians 3: 29. Hence as the brother said, baptism is "not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God." (1 Peter 3: 21.) I am authorized to inform those who understand that remission of sins is bestowed upon the individual because of mental remorse (commonly called repentance), independent of any stipulated, overt, public act of obedience, and those who claim that sins are literally washed out by baptism, that, in either case, they would make salvation to be of works instead of by grace.

Also, "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation."—2 Corinthians 5: 19.

Then, while the poor sinner in coming to God must be prompted by and exercise a godly sorrow which worketh repentance to salvation (2 Corinthians 7: 10), which repentance includes obedience to every commandment given by which we are introduced into the kingdom and "church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Timothy 3: 15), he is not required to engage in a protracted struggle of mental remorse and agonizing prayer in order to appease the wrath of an angry God, so as to obtain peace and the God-birth and be adopted into the family and household of God. It is the sinner that has become estranged and alienated from God by wicked works, and it is God who prepared the plan, provided the means, and ordained them unto man's salvation, and arranged the conditions, so that the benefits may be received and the blessings enjoyed by accepting the terms and yielding obedience to the commandments which God has ordained for his deliverance.

And now, to those who claim to have received remission of sins and to have been born of God, by the operation of that mental ordeal, commonly called repentance of past sins, independent of, and before being baptized, let me say that the writer has been all along that line and has passed through those experiences. It was my honest belief that I had received the new birth and become a child of God and adopted into the covenant of grace, which for a long time even in spite of the plain teaching of the word, operated as a hindrance to my entering fully and unfettered into the spirit of the true gospel doctrine, until I received the knowledge that the conscience is a creature of education, subject to the judgment and in harmony with the understanding of the individual. When I realized that in that transaction which I had so long believed was my conversion and God-birth, that when going through that ordeal which I had depended on as my repentance, that when in my wretchedness a genuine abhorrence and loathing of sin became actively engaged in my bosom, I was released from my great sense of guilt and condemnation and a sensation of peace and love swept through my being which I was persuaded was conversion, while in fact I had only experienced that change of heart which prepared me to complete my repentance and perfect my conversion.

So then, baptism is "not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God" (1 Peter 3: 21), because in our baptism we enter into covenant of death with Christ, and acknowledge and accept the blood of Jesus as the purchase price and ransom of or for our salvation, in the way and manner which God ordained for us to exhibit our obedience, and in consequence of our obedience thereto, God grants to us the testimony or evidence of the remission of our sins, by sealing us "with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession."—Ephesians 1: 13, 14.

JOHN H. TIBBELS.

CHARITON, Iowa, R. F. D., No. 1.

In an excellent article in the Delineator for October on the Hygiene of Clothes, Doctor Grace Peckham Murray makes the following points in regard to seasonable and unseasonable clothing, which are particularly appropriate at this time: The practical utility of clothing is to retain the heat of the body, and consequently it should be adapted to the climate and season. Too much clothing is as injurious as too little, for it prevents free exercise and development. In changing the clothing with the various seasons one should exercise judgment. It is a common practice to fix a certain date as the time for changing, irrespective of the temperature; many persons will shiver in light clothing because the calendar has not yet announced the appointed day, and again will swelter in heavy clothing when the temperature rises after light clothing has been discarded. These methods Doctor Murray rightly condemns, and makes the suggestion that every house should have an out-of-doors thermometer, preferably placed outside the window of a bedroom, so that the temperature can be read each morning and the clothing donned accordingly.

MAN'S PLACE IN THE UNIVERSE.

AS INDICATED BY THE NEW ASTRONOMY.

To the early astronomers the earth was the center of the visible universe, sun, moon, planets, and stars all alike revolving around it in more or less eccentric and complex orbits; and all were naturally thought to exist as appendages to our globe, and for the sole use and enjoyment of man—"the sun to rule by day, the moon and the stars by night." But when the Copernican system became established, and it was found that our earth was not specially distinguished from the other planets by any superiority of size or position, it was seen that our pride of place must be given up. And, later, when the discoveries of Newton and of the many brilliant astronomers who succeeded him, together with the ever-widening knowledge derived from the growing power and perfection of the telescope and of improved astronomical instruments, showed us the utter insignificance even of our sun and solar system among the countless hosts of stars and the myriads of clusters and nebulae, we seemed to be driven to the other extreme, and to be forced to recognize the fact that this vast, stupendous universe could have no special relation to ourselves, any more than to any other of the millions of suns and systems, many of which were probably far grander and more important than ours, and perhaps fitted to be the abode of more highly organized beings.

During the last half-century, and perhaps much longer, popular writers have often dealt with the problem of the habitability of the planets by intelligent beings and the probability of other suns being attended by other trains of planets similarly inhabited, and the most diverse and even opposing views have been held as to the inferences to be drawn from these supposed facts. Sir David Brewster held them to be almost essential to an adequate conception of the power and wisdom of the Deity and in some way bound up with the doctrines of Christianity, and this has been the view of many of the teachers of religion. On the other hand, the tendency of all recent astronomical research has been to give us wider views of the vastness, the variety, and the marvelous complexity of the stellar universe, and proportionally to reduce the importance of our little speck of earth almost to the vanishing point, and this has been made use of by the more aggressive among modern sceptics to hold up religious creeds and dogmas to scorn and contempt. They point out the irrationality and absurdity of supposing that the Creator of all this unimaginable vastness of suns and systems, filling, for all we know, endless space, should have any special interest in so pitiful a creature as man, the degraded or imperfectly developed inhabitant of one of the smaller planets attached to a second or third-rate sun; while that he should have selected this little world for the scene of the tremendous and necessarily unique sacrifice of his Son, in order to save a portion of these "miserable sinners" from the natural consequences of their sins was, in their view, a crowning absurdity too incredible to be believed by any rational being. And it must be confessed that the theologians had no adequate reply to this rude attack; while many of them have felt their position to be untenable, and have renounced the idea of a special revelation and a supreme savior for the exclusive benefit of so minute and insignificant a speck in the universe.

But, during the last quarter of the past century, the rapidly-increasing body of facts and observations leading to a more detailed and accurate knowledge of stars and stellar systems, have thrown a new and somewhat unexpected light on this very interesting problem of our relation to the universe of which we form a part; and although these discoveries have of course no bearing upon the special theological dogmas of the Christian, or of any other religion, they do tend to show that our position in the material universe is special and probably unique, and that it is such as to lend support to the view, held by many great thinkers and writers to-day, that the supreme end and purpose of this vast universe was the production and development of the living soul in the perishable body of man.

The Agnostics and Materialists will no doubt object that the want of all proportion between the means and the end condemns this theory from its very foundation. But is there any such want of proportion? Given infinite space and infinite time, and there can be no such thing as want of proportion, if the end to be reached were a great and a worthy one and if the particular mode of attaining that end were the best, or, perhaps, even the only possible one; and we may fairly presume that it was so by the fact that it has been used, and has succeeded. The development of man as a spiritual being, with all his intellectual powers and moral possibilities, is certainly a great end in itself, so great and so noble that if a universe of matter and ether as large as that of which we have now obtained some definite knowledge, were required for the work, why should it not be used? Of course, I am taking the view of those who believe in some Intelligent Cause at the back of this universe, some creator or creators, designer or designers. For those who take the other view, that matter and ether, with all the laws and forces without which they could not exist for a moment, are, in their essential nature, eternal and self-existent, no such objection is tenable. For the production of life and of man then becomes merely a question of chance—of the right and exact combination of matter and its complex forces occurring after an almost infinite number of combinations that led to nothing. On this view the argument as to our unique position, derived from the discoveries of the New Astronomy, is even more forcible, though hardly so satisfactory, because it also teaches us that if man is a product of blind forces and unconscious laws acting upon non-living matter, then, as he has been produced by physical law, so he will die out by the continued operation of the same law, against which there is no appeal. These laws of nature have been finely described in the late Grant Allen's striking philosophical poem, which he has entitled "Magdalen Towers," and which was written when he was an undergraduate at Oxford:

"They care not any whit for pain or pleasure,
That seems to us the sum and end of all,
Dumb force and barren number are their measure,
What shall be shall be though the great earth fall.

"They take no heed of man or man's deserving,
Reck not what happy lives they make or mar,
Work out their fatal will unswerv'd, unswerving,
And know not that they are!"

It is the object of the present paper to set forth the nature of the evidence bearing upon man's position in the universe, and to summarize the various lines of research that converge to render it at least a thinkable and rational hypothesis. Although most of the facts and conclusions are well known separately, and have been set forth by both scientific and popular writers, I am not aware that they have been combined, as I now attempt to combine them, or the conclusions drawn from them which seem to me to be the obvious ones.

ARE THE STARS INFINITE IN NUMBER?

It has often been suggested that the stars are infinite in number, and that the stellar universe is therefore infinite in extent; and if the preponderance of evidence pointed in this direction, our inquiry would be useless, because as regards infinity there can be no difference of position. In whatever part of it we may be situated, that part can be no nearer the center than any other part. Infinite space has been well defined as a circle, or rather a sphere, whose center is everywhere and circumference nowhere.

As the telescope increased in efficiency through the labors of Dollond and Herschel, it was found that every increase of power and of light, due to increased diameter of object-glass or mirror, greatly increased the number of visible stars, and this increase went on with approximate equality of rate till the largest modern telescopes were nearly reached. But, latterly, increased size and power has revealed new stars in a smaller and smaller proportion, indicating that we are approaching the outer limits of the starry system. This conclusion is further enforced by the fact that the numerous dark patches in the heavens, where hardly any stars are visible, and those seen are projected on an intensely dark background, as in the "Coal-sacks" of the Southern Hemisphere and rifts and channels in the Milky Way itself, continue to present the same features in telescopes of the very highest powers as they do in those of very moderate size. This could not possibly happen if stars were infinite in number, or even if they extended in similar profusion into spaces very much greater than those to which our telescopes can reach, because, in that case, these dark backgrounds would be illuminated by the light of millions of stars so distant as to be separately invisible, as in the case of the Milky Way itself. . . .

The same conclusion is reached by means of that powerful engine of research, the photographic plate. When this is exposed in the focus of a telescope for three hours, a much greater number of stars is revealed than any telescopic vision can detect, but longer exposures add less and less to the number, again indicating that the limit of stars in that direction is nearly reached. . . .

THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE STARS IN SPACE.

The first great fact bearing upon this subject is, that a large number of stars are not "fixed," as was universally believed down to the eighteenth century, but that many of them, and probably all, have proper motions of their own. These motions are very small, and can only be detected by observations continued for many years. The most rapid motion yet observed is that of a small star of six and one half magnitude of the constellation Ursa Major, which moves seven seconds of arc per annum, while others move only this amount in a century, and all but a few less than a second per annum. The proper motions of several thousand stars have now been determined. These motions are in every possible direction, but it has been recently discovered that considerable groups of stars often move in the same direction and at the same rate. The Pleiades exhibit this phenomenon, but much larger groups have the same kind of motion, and this has led to the theory that in certain parts of the heavens there is a star-drift in fixed directions. Our sun is now known to have its own "proper motion," the direction and rate of which has been determined approximately. This will, of course, produce an apparent movement in all the stars, except those situated exactly in the line of our motion, and the displacement thus caused has to be allowed for in determining the true motion of the stars in space. Should any of the stars be moving obliquely towards us, we shall only perceive that portion of the motion which is at right angles to the direction of the star from us, but the beautiful method of determining motion in the line of sight by means of the spectroscope has overcome this difficulty, and by its means we now know the real motion of many stars, both in direction and velocity, when we have been able to measure their distance from us. . . . It was long supposed that the brightest stars were the nearest to us, but it is now known that there is little or no relation between brightness or magnitude and distance. The nearest star yet measured is, indeed, a very bright one in the Southern Hemisphere, Alpha Centauri, but one almost as near, 61 Cygni, is of the fifth magnitude only, and another still nearer in the constellation Piscis Australis, is of the seventh magnitude. Other stars of the first magnitude which have had their distances measured have a parallax of considerably less than one tenth of a second, and are therefore among the remoter stars.

The true relation, as was long suspected theoretically, is between proper motion and distance, those which move fastest being nearest to us. It is as if, from a mountain-top, we observed ships at sea from two or three miles to forty or fifty miles distant, and kept a record of their angular movements. All might be really moving at not very different speeds—from five to perhaps fifteen or twenty miles an hour, yet while some would appear to move rapidly, others would seem to be almost stationary, and this would depend almost entirely on their distance from the observer. So with the stars. All may have, and probably have, real motions which do not differ very greatly in rapidity, but only in those which are comparatively near us can we detect any motion at all. This theoretical conclusion being confirmed by all the stars, whose distances have been measured, we have a most valuable and trustworthy means of ascertaining their comparative distances from us, since those whose proper motions are either exceedingly small or can not be detected at all, are certainly very much farther from us than those which have well-marked and large, proper motions. It is by such indications that we are enabled to arrive at some definite conclusions as to the real form and structure of the stellar universe, as we will proceed to show.

THE GALAXY, OR "MILKY WAY."

By far the most prominent feature in the starry heavens is that vast, irregular, nebulous ring which in all ages has attracted the attention and excited the admiration of observers. This great ring divides the whole heavens into two hemispheres, making an angle of about sixty-three degrees with the equinoctial, so that portions of it pass not far from the North and South Poles. Its nebulosity is now believed to be almost wholly due to the massing together of myriads of minute stars, since each increase in the power of the telescope shows more and more of these stars, while the best photographic plates show them everywhere closely packed but still with a luminous haze between them indicating yet more stars beyond.

But besides these minute stars which give us the cloudy or milky appearance, it is found that stars of all degrees of brilliancy are more numerous in the Milky Way and in its vicinity, than elsewhere. The two poles of the Galaxy are the regions where stars are scantiest. Each fifteen degrees nearer to it, they increase in numbers, at first slowly, then more rapidly, till we reach its borders. . . .

These facts lead to the conclusion that the Galaxy is a vast annular agglomeration of stars forming a great circle round the heavens, although in places very irregular, being split in two for about one third of its circumference and being, besides, full of irregular dark streaks and patches where the most powerful telescopes show very few stars, so that, as Sir John Herschel says, we are irresistibly led to the conclusion that, in those regions, "we see fairly through the starry stratum;" and this is further shown by the fact that in these parts "the ground of the heavens seen between the stars is for the most part perfectly dark, which would not be the case if multitudes of stars, too minute to be individually discernible, existed beyond." This great ring is, therefore, evidently not very much extended in the direction of its own plane—that is, the ring is not flat or greatly compressed (as is Saturn's ring, for example), or we should nowhere see through it.

But what is more important is, that we must be situated not in any part of it as was once supposed, but at or near the very central point in the plane of the ring, that is, nearly equally distant from every part of the Milky Way. . . .

The fact of the Galaxy forming a great circle as seen from the earth being so familiar, no one seems to have thought it worth while to ask why it is so. If we could look at such a fact from the outside, as it were, we should certainly impute it to some casual connection between our system and the Galaxy. But before speculating what this relation may mean we must consider another point of equal importance in our relation to the system of stars.

OUR STAR CLUSTER.

It has long been observed that the brighter stars seem scattered over the whole heavens with no special abundance in or near the Milky Way, and this was thought to be due to their being much nearer to us. It is now known, however, that brightness is no indication of nearness, so that this fact has little significance. But, as we have seen, we do possess a real test of nearness in the amount of the proper motion of stars, and this leads us to a very definite and most suggestive conclusion. For the stars which are nearest to us, judged by this test, not only have no apparent relation to the Milky Way, but are spread over every part of the heavens with tolerable uniformity. The most recent examination of this class of stars is by Professor S. Newcomb, who states the result in the following words: "If we should blot out from the sky all the stars having no proper motion large enough to be detected, we should find remaining stars of all magnitudes, but they would be scattered almost uniformly over the sky, and show no tendency towards the Milky Way."

Professor Kapteyn, of Groningen, appears to have been the first to draw the obvious conclusion from these facts that these nearer stars spread around us in every direction, constitute a globular mass, which he termed the "solar cluster," nearly concentric with the Milky Way, and that our sun is "deeply immersed" in this cluster.

Other astronomers have adopted this view, which seems to be almost indisputable if the facts are as stated. . . . But although there may be some irregularities in their distribution, it has not been pointed out that there is any such regular inequality as this, and if there is not, then we must be situated very near indeed to the center of this "solar cluster."

The results so far reached by astronomers as the direct logical conclusion from the whole mass of facts accumulated by means of those powerful instruments of research which have given us the New Astronomy, is, that our sun is one of the central orbs of a globular star-cluster, and that this star-cluster occupies a nearly central position in the exact plane of the Milky Way. But I am not aware that any writer has taken the next step, and combining these two conclusions, has stated definitely that our sun is thus shown to occupy a position very near to, if not actually at, the center of the whole visible universe, and therefore, in all probability, in the center of the whole material universe.

This conclusion is no doubt a startling one, and all kinds of objections will be made against its being accepted as a proved fact. And yet I am not acquainted with any great inductive result of modern science that has been arrived at so gradually, so legitimately, by means of so vast a mass of precise measurement and observation, and by such wholly unprejudiced workers. It may not be proved with minute accuracy as regards the actual mathematical center. That is not of the least importance. But that it is substantially correct in the terms I have stated there seems no good reason to doubt, and I therefore hold it to be right and proper to have it so stated and provisionally accepted, until further accumulations of evidence may show to what extent it requires modification.

This completes the first part of our inquiry; but an equally important part remains to be considered—our position in the solar system itself as regards adaptability for organic life. Here, too, I am not aware that the whole facts have been sufficiently considered, yet they are facts that indicate our position in this respect to be, in all probability, as central and unique as is that of our sun in the stellar universe.

THE EARTH AS ADAPTED FOR LIFE.

Among the many writers who have more or less seriously discussed the question of the adaptability of other planets for the development of organic life, and of the higher forms of intellectual beings, I have not met with any who have considered the problem in all its bearings. They have usually been content to show that certain planets may possibly be now in a condition to support life in forms not very dissimilar from those upon our earth; but they have never adequately considered the precedent question: Could such life have originated and have been developed upon these planets? This is the real crux of the problem and I believe that a full consideration of the required conditions will satisfy us that, so far as we can judge, no other planet can fulfill them. Let us therefore consider what these conditions are.

The earlier writers on this subject could give free play to their imaginations and overcome difficulties of temperature, moisture, etc., by supposing that in other worlds there might be other elements which had different properties from any we possess, and which might render life under conditions very unlike those which are essential here. But the revelations of spectrum-analysis have shown us the unity of the constitution of matter throughout the whole material universe, so that not only are the planets of the solar system all composed of the same elements, but that the farthest stars and remotest nebulae alike consist of the very same elements with which we are so familiar, while the same physical and chemical laws undoubtedly prevail. We may be confident, therefore, that wherever organized life may have developed, it must be built up out of the same fundamental elements as here on earth.

The essential features of the structures of organized beings are, continuous growth and repair of tissues, nutrition by the absorption of dead or living matter from without, and its transformation into the various unstable compounds of which their bodies are built up. For these purposes a double system of circulation, gaseous and liquid, has to be constantly in operation, and this is carried on by means of minute tubular or cellular vessels which permeate every part of the body. These wonderful complex and exquisitely adjusted circulating systems are entirely dependent on the continuous maintenance of a very narrow range of temperatures somewhere between the extremes of the boiling and the freezing points of water, but really within much narrower limits, since if the whole of the water at any time become solidified, all the higher forms of life would be destroyed, while a temperature very much below the boiling point, if permanently maintained, would be almost equally detrimental.

When we consider that the temperature of space is about -273 degrees C., while that of the outer surface of the sun is about 9,000 degrees C., we realize what a combination of favorable conditions must exist to preserve on the surface of a planet a degree of heat which shall never for any considerable time fall below 0 degree C., or rise above, say, 75 degrees C., and that these narrow limits must be continuously maintained, not for hundreds or thousands only, but for millions, perhaps for hundreds of millions of years, if life is to be developed there. . . . Let us then enumerate the chief favorable conditions which in their combination appear to have rendered this development possible on our earth. These are:

(1) A distance from the sun such as to keep up the temperature of the soil to the required amount, by sun-heat alone, and to evaporate sufficient water to produce clouds, rain, and a system of river circulation.

(2) An atmosphere of sufficient extent and density to allow of the productions and circulation of aqueous vapor in the form of clouds, mists, and dews, and to serve also as an equalizer of sun-heat during day and night, winter and summer, and also between the tropical and temperate zones. This amount of atmosphere is held to be largely dependent upon the mass of a planet, and this one feature alone probably renders Mars quite unsuitable, since its mass is less than one eighth that of the earth.

(3) The very large proportion of the surface covered by deep oceans so that they surround and interpenetrate the land, and by their tides and currents keep up a continuous circulation, and are thus the chief agents in the essential equalization of temperatures. This, again, is largely dependent on our possessing so large a satellite, capable of producing a regular, but not excessive, tidal action. The want of such a satellite may alone render Venus quite unsuitable for the development of high forms of life, even if other conditions were more favorable, which seems in the highest degree improbable.

(4) The enormous average depth of these oceans, so that the bulk of water they contain is about thirteen times that of the land which rises above their level. This indicates that they are permanent features of the earth's surface, thus insuring the maintenance of continuous land-areas and of uniform temperatures during the whole period of the development of life upon the earth.

It is extremely improbable that this remarkable condition obtains in any other planet.

(5) Lastly, one of the most peculiar and least generally considered features of our earth, but one which is also essential to the development and maintenance of the rich organic life it possesses, is the uninterrupted supply of atmospheric dust, which is now known to be necessary for the production of rain-clouds and beneficial rains and mists, and without which the whole course of meteorological phenomena would be so changed as to endanger the very existence of a large portion of the life upon the earth. . . . Now, the chief portion of this fine dust, distributed through the upper atmosphere, from the equator to the poles, with wonderful uniformity, is derived from those great terrestrial features which are often looked upon as the least essential, and even as blots and blemishes on the fair face of nature—deserts and volcanoes. Most persons, no doubt, think they could both be very well spared, and that the earth would be greatly improved, from a human point of view, if they were altogether abolished. Yet it is almost a certainty that the consequences of doing so would be to render the earth infinitely less enjoyable, and, perhaps, altogether uninhabitable by man. . . .

Now, if we consider that these five distinct conditions, or sets of conditions, many of them dependent on a delicate balance of forces acting at the origin of our planet, appear to be absolutely essential for the existence of high types of organic life, we shall at once see how peculiar and unique is our place and condition within the solar system, since we know, with almost complete certainty, that they do not all co-exist in any of the other planets. And when we consider further, that even if they do happen to exist now, that would be nothing to the purpose unless we had reason to believe that they had also existed, as with us, in unbroken continuity, for scores or, perhaps, hundreds of millions of years. All the evidence at our command goes to assure us that our earth alone in the solar system has been from its very origin adapted to be the theater for the development of organized and intelligent life. Our position within that system is, therefore, as central and unique as that of our sun in the whole stellar universe. . . .

But leaving this question of variation of the force of gravity as beyond our powers at present, we may give a little consideration to those wonderful radiant forces, other than light and heat, the very existence of some of which we have only recently discovered. Such are electricity, magnetism, the Rontgen rays, the Hertzian, the Goldstein, the Becquerel rays, and some others. That electrical forces bear an important part in the development of living organisms there can be little doubt, while the other forms of radiation here referred to, some of which produce curious physiological effects, can hardly be supposed to have been wholly without influence in the formation of the marvelous living machine, the substance of which, in its complexity, both of structure and constituent elements, is a true microcosm — an epitome of matter and its forces. But if all these radiant forces, or several of them, have combined in the development of life, we may feel sure that they can only have done so under conditions which limit their energy to that gentle and imperceptible action which has caused them to remain so long hidden even from the most inquisitive seekers of the past century. And it is at least a possible, and I think not improbable supposition, that this imperceptibility and continuity may exist only in the more central portions of the universe, while in its outer regions less regularity may prevail, and while some of these necessary radiant forces may be wanting, others may be too abundant, or be manifested in so irregular or excessive a manner as to be antagonistic to the delicate and nicely-balanced forces which are essential to the orderly development of life. . . .

We can hardly suppose any longer that three such remarkable coincidences of position and consequent physical conditions should occur in the case of the one planet, on which organic life has been developed, without any casual connection with that development. The three startling facts—that we are in the center of a cluster of suns, and that that cluster is situated not only precisely in the plane of the Galaxy, but also centrally in that plane, can hardly now be looked upon as chance coincidences without any significance in relation to the culminating fact that the planet so situated has developed humanity.

Of course the relation here pointed out may be a true relation of cause and effect, and yet have arisen as the result of one in a thousand million chances occurring during almost infinite time. But, on the other hand, those thinkers may be right who, holding that the universe is a manifestation of mind, and that the orderly development of living souls supplies an adequate reason why such a universe should have been called into existence, believe that we ourselves are its sole and sufficient result, and that nowhere else than near the central position in the universe which we occupy, could that result have been attained.—Alfred R. Wallace in Fortnightly Review, for March, 1903.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

My sandals are his strength;
And his great love
The staff that helps me toward
The home above.
He holds my hand in his;
How can I fear?
It is not hard to trust
While he is near.
I do not know how long
The way will be;
I only know it is
The best for me.—Selected.

“Father, Take My Hand.”

Our walk, as Saints and children of the light, in the Christian path, is often in our own strength, and so long as we are not willing to say, “Father, take my hand,” we will find the path a rough one. Our walk in the Christian path is illustrated by a walk on the street, as papa and his little daughter Mary start out on a winter morning on the icy sidewalk to go a short distance. As they reach the walk papa says, “Mary, let me take your hand, for I fear that you will slip on the icy pavement.” “No papa, I will not fall,” said Mary, full of confidence in her own strength to travel a rough road and not willing to recognize the superior wisdom of her father.

She had not gone far before her little foot slipped and she fell to the pavement. Hastily regaining her feet she started again, still full of confidence in her own ability to travel the slippery road. Papa spoke to her the second time, “Mary, better let me take your hand, as I fear you will fall again.” “No, papa, I will be more careful and will get along all right.”

Before passing the second block, at a moment when her childish mind was soaring in the realms of imagination, full of hope, and not thinking where her feet were being planted, she again slipped and fell to the sidewalk. Hastily making several efforts to regain her feet she found it very difficult to do so as she had fallen upon a very icy spot. But still confident in her own ability and strength she felt able to go on. The third time papa said to her, “Mary, better let me take your hand, so you will not fall, for you see the walk is so very rough and icy.” Mary, still not willing to admit her weakness, said, “Well, papa, let me take hold of your hand and then I will not fall.” So in full faith and hope she grasped her father’s hand, but only with a tender grip.

Papa realized that the clasp of his hand was not strong and he feared she would lose her hold, but willing to allow her to use her own wisdom and to satisfy her intense demand to learn by experience, though it would be the cause of another bruise to her young and tender limbs, he kindly urged her to hold fast to his hand. Another icy place on the sidewalk and just at the time her little mind was again soaring, her feet slipped, her hold on papa’s hand was not secure, and for the third time she fell to the pavement. Faith in her own strength had now weakened and she was now ready to acknowledge the superior wisdom of her father and that she in her young and tender years needed some help to walk the rough and icy road.

Again regaining her feet and fully realizing the need of help from one who was able to give the needed assistance she said, “Papa, I will now let you take my hand, for I can not get along.” The father now grasped the tiny hand of his little daughter and by holding it gently and firmly, especially when a very rough place was being passed, the journey was completed and Mary did not fall again.

Thus it is when we as children in the gospel start out upon the road we often feel as did Mary that we can walk alone and refuse the kind offer of our loving and all-wise heavenly Father to take us by the hand. We fall, but the first fall seldom causes us to realize our own weakness. Sometimes we say, as did Mary, “Father, let me take hold of your hand.” Even when we do this, in a moment when we think not our feet slip and we fall.

When we fully realize that in and of our own strength we are nothing, and are willing to say in all humbleness of spirit, “Father, take my hand,” then will we be resigned and acknowledge the ability of our heavenly Father; he will lead us and we will then pass over rough places not to fall. Can we not as children in the gospel learn obedience and humble, faithful trust without having to go through the dear school of experience? Let us, when we start as children, ask God to take our hand and lead us. He will hold our hand gently and firmly and all will be well.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Eliza Moore, of Thurman, Iowa, requests the sisters of the Prayer Union to pray for Sr. Lucy Roberts, as she is sorely afflicted, and has a great desire to live that she may bring up her three little girls in the fear of the Lord, also that she may not be a hindrance to her husband who has lately been ordained to the ministry. She is in the first stage of consumption. Also pray for Sr. Nettie Moore that she may be restored to health, to the end that she may work for the good of humanity, and help to spread the gospel.

Two sisters write from St. Joseph, Missouri, requesting the prayers of the Prayer Union in their behalf.

Their Holiday.

THE WIFE:

The house is like a garden—
The children are the flowers,
The gardener should come, methinks,
And walk among his bowers.
Oh, lock the door of worry,
And shut your cares away,
Not time of year, but love and cheer,
Will make a holiday.

THE HUSBAND:

Impossible! you women do not know,
The toil it takes to make a business grow;
I can not join you until very late,
So hurry home, nor let the dinner wait.

THE WIFE:

The feast will be like Hamlet,
Without the Hamlet part;
The home is but a house, dear,
Till you supply the heart.
The Christmas gift I long for
You need not toil to buy;
Oh, give me back one thing I lack:
The love-light in your eye.

THE HUSBAND:

Of course I love you and the children, too;
Be sensible, my dear. It is for you
I work so hard to make my business pay.
There, now, run home, enjoy your holiday.

THE WIFE, TURNING AWAY:

He does not mean to wound me,
I know his heart is kind,
Alas, that men can love us,
And be so blind—so blind!
A little time for pleasure,
A little time for play,
A word to prove the life of love
And frighten care away—
Though poor my lot, in some small cot,
That were a holiday.

THE HUSBAND, MUSING:

She has not meant to wound me, or to vex.
Ah, but 'tis difficult to please her sex!
I've housed and gowned her like a very queen,
Yet, there she goes, with discontented mien.
I gave her diamonds, only yesterday—
Some women are like that, do what you may.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE annual reunion of Southwestern Iowa was held in the pleasant grove just across the little ravine from our home, near Henderson, Iowa. It opened up with the weather the best that could be desired and all seemed so happy to meet in another reunion. The work in all departments opened up promptly and with the customary activity and almost universal response, always characteristic of this reunion. The preaching was inspirational, the prayer-meetings fraught with earnestness and strengthening testimonies, the singing would prepare the minds for the service to follow.

The work of the auxiliary societies was done as per previous arrangement—Sunday-school on Sunday and Tuesday, institute work Tuesday morning and each day at four o'clock in the afternoon.

Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, first assistant superintendent, arrived Monday and with the assistance of him and the district superintendent the work was made pleasant and light.

But just as the opening service of Wednesday afternoon was concluded, a storm burst upon us which, however, consisted only of torrents of rain. The rain fell in literal torrents, one after another, till the grounds were flooded. The tents were flooded to such an extent that it was necessary to lay floors in them. Some tents were moved to higher ground and into the sun. All was done that could be to make the campers comfortable for the night. The rain ceased for a time, but as night came on the rains again fell heavily and all night long. And when morning came daylight revealed that all the streams were swollen beyond their bounds, higher than they had been for many years. But in spite of this seeming calamity, all had passed the night in comparative comfort. Not a murmur or complaint was heard. And while it was fully expected that much sickness would certainly follow, there was not a case of sickness on the camp grounds. One elderly sister came there sick but left well. A loving Father doth care for his people.

After all that the storm had done was over, regular work was resumed. The sun came out and the disagreeableness of the situation was soon forgotten. All moved on as before. Bro. Gunsolley conducted one session of Religio normal work and one session of Religio.

The nine o'clock hour Sunday morning was voted to be used for Sunday-school instead of prayer-meeting. A splendid session was had, a fitting close to a successful series of sessions.

At the business session of the reunion it was "resolved that we hold a reunion in 1904, and that the Sunday-school and Religio work be a component part thereof, and that time out of the regular sessions commensurate with the importance thereof be given these societies for such work as they may provide."

After the close of the reunion at Henderson, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley left for the Stewartsville reunion and the General Superintendent for the one at Dow City, Iowa.

At this latter place, work had been begun by Bro. J. L. Butterworth, the district superintendent. Sunday-school was held on Sundays and three sessions during the week. Three sessions of normal work on Sunday-school subjects, and one session of Religio work were held during the week.

The work was well attended and no doubt much good was done, notwithstanding there was not as much enthusiasm manifested for the work as is usual at this place. The attendance at this reunion is not as large as in years past, possibly owing to recent floods. And this may in part account for the difference in the work of the auxiliary societies. But we are happy in the thought that the faithful ones are still faithfully bearing their share and more too of the so-called burdens of the work.

It will be remembered that we are here in one of the oldest district Sunday-school organizations that we have, bring antedated by but one and that by only a few short months, and the sound and solid, as well as growing conditions of the work, are unquestionable evidences of the earnest efforts put forth by the resident workers here.

WE will hear from the work of our first assistant superintendent, J. A. Gunsolley, at Rhodes, Iowa, and Stewartsville, Missouri, with the fellow workers at the respective places, in a later issue.

Questions and Answers.

1. Q.—May an individual be enrolled a member of two schools that meet at different hours? A.—Yes.
2. Q.—Who has authority to organize new schools? A.—In or near an organized school, it should be by or with the approval of the local superintendent if all comes within the precincts of one branch of the Church. "Precincts" as here used includes only such area as is in reasonable access to the place of meeting. Territory outside of this should be referred to the district superintendent. If he fails to make provisions therefor, the people or a missionary, or any one so disposed may work the matter up and call a meeting at which an organization may be effected. The object is to get schools started wherever it is proper to have them, but where there is local or district organization, those placed in charge should not be ignored. But if such persons fail for any reason to reach the matter, it should not be allowed to lapse on that account. Organize and report.

3. Q.—How are new schools taken into the district association? A.—All that is necessary for a school to do to become identified with the district association is to adopt the Constitution and By-laws provided by the General Association and report the same together with their enrollment and a list of their officers to the secretary of the district Sunday-school association. They will then be enrolled in the district association. Some districts vote to accept a school that has made application for membership, but this is not necessary. A negative vote could not bar them from membership. The Constitution is silent on this point when referring to districts and local schools, but in article 8, section 1, page 6, gives such privilege to both district and schools in joining the General Association. And the same principle should apply to schools and districts.

4. Q.—Can a superintendent organize another school in his branch when a demand for it exists without consulting the district? A.—Yes.

5. Q.—Should such a school be an independent school and report to the district secretary, or be subject to the main school? A.—It should be entirely independent, and report to the district secretary the same as any school. This does not apply to a home class which is under the care of a school. They are subject to and a part of the school organizing them.

Letter Department.

LAMONI, Iowa, September 8.

Editors Saints' Herald: A few lines from the Fremont District may not be amiss at this time. My last to your columns was in the early days of July. I left Shenandoah, July 14, and went to Riverton. On Sunday following, July 19, Bro. Eber Wilcox baptized seven at Shenandoah.

July 17 to 26, held a series of services at a beautiful tabernacle situated in a park on an elevation south of the town of Riverton. Bro. James Comstock, who has charge of the work there—both branch and Sunday-school, had charge of the services, and with daughter Fannie as organist rendered the labor much easier for the missionary. It would do any lover of right good to see Sr. Comstock hold the individual attention of the large primary class, and elicit the answers to the questions on the lessons so promptly. Riverton Saints make the latter-day work first, and so are live Saints. But there are many such in the district.

July 29 to 31 was at Hamburg, held three services, with Bro. Frank Beckstead in charge. Hamburg Branch has had its trials, but is hoping for better days. Sr. Vanderpool, a niece of the Brn. White, was undergoing severe trial, of a nervous character, and was greatly discouraged. We administered and prayed for her recovery. She could not survive the condition long without relief. Good Saints at Hamburg, may greater encouragement come to them! I carried liberal tokens of remembrance of the work to Bishop William Leeka, from Saints by the way, a good example to emulate by all Saints.

Saturday and Sunday, August 1 and 2, a two-day meeting was held at McPaul, in which the resident Saints were joined by those of Bartlett and Thurman. On Sunday quite a host of Saints and friends were present. Bro. D. R. Chambers was with us, doing his part of the work cheerfully. Bishop Leeka was present to aid in the good work. Brn. David Eittleman and H. Study duly represent the interests of the work at McPaul.

August 5 to 11 we were at Thurman, Bro. Chambers and I making headquarters at Bro. William Leeka's, preaching evenings and Sundays; I felt to be on historic ground, for my early readings of the work had Plum Hollow, the names of the Leekas, Kemps, Greens, and Gaylords, associated with them. And these pillars we found still there, faithful to the truth. And later, the names of Goode, Moore and others join the history of the work there. We would not forget to note that a number of young Saints are developing in those regions, who, we hope, may continue to push the work along, since we find that the greater the work grows the more work there is for all to do.

On the 14th of August I was called to preach the funeral of little Grace Moore, aged thirteen years, daughter of Mr. Thomas Moore and wife. Grace was very spiritually minded for one of her years, a member of Sr. R. Leeka's class, of the Thurman Sunday-school. She always prepared her lessons before going to Sunday-school. She was ill about four weeks. She had a desire to go, saw in a vision her sister Myrtle, who had preceded her a year or more, come to a beautiful doorway with a bouquet of flowers in her hand and beckon to her to come on. When asked why she was so anxious to pass on, she replied: "It will not be so hard to breathe, and you [mother] can then rest." Her aunt, Sr. J. C. Moore, and her Sunday-school teacher sang at her request before she died. She selected the songs to be sung at her funeral. A large concourse attended.

August 12 to 20, Bro. Chambers and I were at Bartlett. Here are some long tried Saints, and some whose experiences are not so protracted. All seemed alive in the work. We sojourned with Bro. S. Orton and wife (he is familiarly called by all "Uncle Sam"), Brn. Eittleman, Huston, Novinger, and others whose names I do not remember, especially the one offering us conveyance to any adjacent points we might desire to visit. All seemed alive in the work. Services were well attended, and good attention to the word preached. On Wednesday, August 19, Bro. Chambers baptized Sr. King, who had been for some years associated with the Disciple Church. But she had not found the fullness of the gospel, or of gospel blessing with them, and hence, embraced the greater light, desiring to walk therein, to the pleasure of the Father in heaven. (Matthew 13: 12; Mark 4: 24, 25.)

Was at Glenwood, Mills County, August 20 and 21, and while there preached once in the new Saint's church, a neat, cozy place of worship. Bro. G. Walling is in charge, with Bro. Kuykendall and others assisting. They hope soon to be able to dedicate the church.

Saturday, August 22, went on to Henderson and beyond, three and one half miles, to the camp of the Saints, where the Southwestern Iowa reunion was held, Brn. A. Badham, McClanahan, and others supplying us conveyance to the grounds. On arrival we found a number of brethren busily engaged getting arrangements ready for the convenience of all. All were cheerful and happy, but not too busy to extend the greeting that only those who have enjoyed the Spirit of the Master can extend.

Elder F. A. Smith, our missionary in charge, had arrived and was busy helping to arrange. We were quartered with Bro. and Sr. T. A. Hougas, with Brn. G. H. Hilliard, D. R. Chambers, J. A. and Sr. Mae Gunsolley, and others, where everything was made as pleasant as need be, while Elders F. A. Smith, H. Kemp, and others were fraternized at Bro. Daniel Hougas'. These brethren have a beautiful country seat. Any one in Zion ought to be satisfied with a home as nice.

Just here the thought is suggested to our mind, How long is it going to be—in this the Lord's day for the tithing of his people—before his Saints will take the steps necessary for him to employ them as stewards over what he has intrusted to them? Or, will they continue stewards by self-appointment, thus directing, rather than being directed by him? Is it pleasing that the law given be honored, or shall they still claim his direction, while refusing to be directed? Is any man who belongs to the Church exempt from the law of God in this matter? See Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1: "For it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity." "Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God: yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse."—Section 70: 3. As to how to be appointed a steward of the Lord, see Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8-10; 122: 6; and section 51.

The reunion was duly inaugurated with Apostle Frederick A. Smith in charge, C. Scott to assist. I do not think a greater degree of unity could well characterize a congregation of Saints than did this. The preaching was done by Brn. F. A. Smith, G. H. Hilliard, H. Kemp, D. R. Chambers, Charles Fry, and the writer. The brethren assisting in the services and having charge of other services responded to the call willingly, and each strove to render all happy.

Brn. T. A. Hougas and J. A. Gunsolley, with their helpers, carried the Sunday-school and Religio work along in the time allotted, with life and dispatch that rendered it pleasant and encouraging to all. The Spirit was in all the work. Some of the brethren were all-around men, in both spiritual and temporal affairs, and work was found for all. Other elders present and participating were Brn. D. Hougas, A. Badham, George Kemp, F. Goode, S. Orton, Wood, Frederickson, and others. Four were baptized and confirmed on the 28th, and three children were blessed.

I do not remember of any one being administered to for illness contracted on the grounds. By resolution a reunion was provided for Southwestern Iowa for 1904, and the Sunday-school and Religio work made "a component part thereof." It is to be held some three miles south of Tabor, in Fremont County. Many not of the faith heard the gospel preached on Sundays and at evening services.

The cup of joy of all seemed to be full at the adjournment of the reunion, Sunday evening, August 30. So many things to be grateful to our loving Father for, good health, beautiful weather, of earthly goods plenty and to spare, the gospel in fullness and richness.

But, who may say what a day may bring forth? The day of disappointments has not yet passed. As all nature seemed smiling upon us, and all seemed bright, while Saints were breaking camp and saying the cheerful "good-byes," the wire silently carried the news to me that our older son, Virgil L., who was in the employ of the Santa Fe Railroad Company, had been suddenly brought to his earthly end in a wreck at the city of Great Bend, Kansas, on Saturday evening, the 29th, between half past eight and nine o'clock. Only those who have had the experience can know what one's heart feels under a like stroke. I came home, rather than on to the work.

Virgil rests from the trials and disappointments of this life,—only twenty-four years of age.

Many tear-bedimmed eyes, and sad countenances with sweet, saintly, sympathizing benedictions, told me I was not alone under the cloud. I and my little family will never be able to tell how our hearts have been moved by the heart-felt kindness, tokens of sympathy, loving words and prayers in our behalf in our sad, tragic, sudden bereavement; nor of the real love in the gospel of our Father's sustaining hand.

With sympathy for fellow men,

Your brother,

C. SCOTT.

SWINK, Indian Territory, August 31.

Editors Saints' Herald: District conference at Lydia, Texas, closed the 9th. Indeed we had a fine conference, the Lord greatly blessing us with his Spirit which was felt and enjoyed by both saint and sinner. Thirteen were baptized and many others brought near the kingdom by the preaching of the beautiful gospel.

I went to Sawyer, Indian Territory, being accompanied by Bro. P. B. Bussell. Preached a few sermons there and thence to this place, where no preaching has ever been done. Bro. P. B. Bussell preached one very fine sermon and then went back to Texas to his home and left the writer to plant the gospel in a place where it had never been preached and among strangers, but the Lord blessed me with the spirit of my calling and I had fine crowds for eight days, congregation increasing until hundreds were out. One noble lady was baptized; her husband runs a mill and cotton-gin at this place. He said he would be ready to be baptized before long, others giving their names for baptism when I return.

I hope by the help of others to look after the interest we left there. The South is getting ripe for the gospel; if we only had the laborers. Saints, try and pay your tithing so other laborers can go into the field.

Bro. Ellis Short has appointed me bishop's agent of the Choctaw Nation, except Wilburton Branch. I hope to be able to collect a good amount of tithing this fall. Let us build up Zion and our Savior will come.

Ever praying for the success of the gospel,

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, England, August 25.

Dear Herald: I wish to express some very strong convictions I received since I was permitted to attend the mission conference of the British Isles, held at Leeds, from August 1 to 3, and to have the honor to clasp hands with our dear presidents, Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans, and many of the dear Saints of the British Isles, and to sit under the sound of inspiration as it flowed from the lips of Bro. R. C. at the morning service, and at night from the overflowing heart of our dear President Joseph. While I pen these few lines, with the tears blinding these feeble eyes of mine, my heart swells with gratitude to our dear heavenly Father for raising up such men to stand at the head of his church on earth, and to break to his children the bread of life.

I sat with my cheeks wet with tears, and drank from one of the streams that flows from the fountain of life, and to-night I still feel the effects of our conference. Yes, and when speaking of Peter asking our dear Savior how oft should he forgive his brother, seven times, and Jesus said seventy times seven, Bro. Joseph said: "Make it as wide as you can." Oh, that we had more of that blessed spirit manifested one to another!

I have learned this lesson: the more we love God, the greater will be our love for one another, and I can truly say I have received that love. John says love is of God and it is a continual feast nearly all the time, although we have to pass through many trials and are misunderstood. But to-night I can rejoice with a heart full of gratitude to our heavenly Father because he can see right down into our hearts. While we are at the present clothed in earthly tabernacles and can see and know only in part, we shall understand and know each other better when the mists have cleared away.

And now, dear HERALD, I feel free to speak my mind, "for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." I would not be able to do very well without your sacred pages gracing my door every week, for I look for you as eagerly as I look for my pay on Saturdays. How any of the Saints can do without you I fail to understand, and I feel sure that no one can keep thoroughly in touch with the Church and what it is accomplishing without reading your (to me) sacred pages. May you live and prosper until every Saint feels your need and subscribes for your pages!

I have only penned the sentiments of an honest conviction, trusting that no one will take offense at what is penned. I am glad there are some here interested and trust that they may soon be ready to obey and receive for themselves the testimony of the work.

Herald Readers: The debate between Elder Padget of the Christian Church and the writer is a thing of the past.

Elder Padget's attack on our position was the same taken by all Campbellite ministers, but it was apparent to all thinking people that he was very "small fry" indeed.

The more I meet these men, the weaker their effort seems and I rejoice to know that others not of our faith could see his attack was a feeble one.

But when he took the affirmative it was plain to all that he was only trying to kill time. He denied A. Campbell's having anything to do with the Church he represented and claimed to receive his commission direct from Pentecost.

A leading representative of the Missionary Baptist Church said to-day that the Christians were not satisfied with Padget's effort. It seems that Elder Padget had promised to wipe out "this latter-day fraud," but they say he failed to do what he promised. And while they were willing to admit Padget failed to sustain his Church, yet they think Sparling failed to sustain the Book of Mormon. I can say that Padget is far below the standard as a debater.

The Saints all feel well and Bro. Moler baptized four of the members of the Christian Church and I am safe in saying that we knocked a dozen more off the roost. A great many others will fall yet from the result of the shock. I preached six sermons, at Roscoe, to good crowds.

HENRY SPARLING.

CLARDY, Texas, September 4.

Editors Herald: This finds me in the conflict battling for the truth. I came to this place one week ago. About this time last year Bro. E. A. Erwin and myself held a meeting at this place and created a splendid interest, but because of the push of the work we could not return soon.

On my return to this place at this time I find the interest has almost died out. Some that were interested have moved away. Others have lost their interest. And to prevent the renewing of interest, the Baptists started a meeting the same night I commenced preaching about half a mile from the place I am preaching at. The result is they get the majority of the people. The crowds that attend our meetings are very small yet it causes the Baptists a great deal of uneasiness.

They tell the people nearly every time they meet what a mean fellow I am, and that I am preaching the doctrine of the Devil, that my heart is black and that I ought to be run out of the country. But they have not succeeded in getting any one to take the job yet. I am still here.

On the second, I baptized three sons of Bro. and Sr. J. A. White. The Baptists made the noise and I baptized the converted.

I go to-morrow five miles south of Detroit to look after the work. The Campbellites have challenged us for debate at that place. It seems as if the adversary has put on the war paint all at once in this part of the field. I never did like to raise a row but I always like to be at the fight when it comes off; so let them come; we have the truth and if we will be humble, the truth will prevail.

There is a very bright outlook for the work in this part. The result, though, rests in the hands of the Saints; I hope they will be wise.

Our reunion in Lydia, Texas, as has been reported in HERALD by H. O. Smith, was quite a success; thirteen were baptized. One week after I baptized two more, and day before yesterday three, so the work moves on. The prospects for good times this fall in this country are flattering; corn is good; cotton will be excellent and will command a good price, I think. So if we do not help the work financially this year, it will not be the Lord's fault. If we neglect this part of the gospel we will suffer loss.

Saints, do not get impatient for my presence in your midst; the field is large; I will get around as fast as I can. Remember Bro. Short appointed me bishop's agent in this district. I would like to have every Saint's name in Northeastern Texas on my book, with a neat sum to the credit of each.

E. L. HENSON.

DAVENPORT, Iowa, September 8.

Editors Herald: I returned yesterday from the conference of the Kewanee District, held at Millersburg, Illinois, on the 4th, 5th, and 6th inst. It was a very pleasant and profitable gathering. The Sunday-school and Religio conventions were enjoyed by all. What was, to the writer, a new departure in Religio work proved very enjoyable. The Religio News, edited by Sr. Louise Suman, contained original articles on Religio work and a news department giving items of news of Religio workers. The convention was so well pleased with the paper that it was decided to continue it with the same editor.

Another pleasing feature was the singing of the songs composed and used in street-preaching by Bro. H. E. Moler and Bro. F. A. Russell. The Saints enjoyed them and they were sung on three different occasions.

The Saints of the Tri-cities have done like the Arabs, folded their tent and put it away for the season, and taken up their winter quarters in the Knights of Pythias hall on Third and Brady Streets in Davenport. This hall is very much more convenient, also more pleasantly situated than the old one.

Should any of the missionary force be passing through the Tri-cities and could do so conveniently, we would gladly have them stop and give us the benefit of a few sermons.

Your brother,

EDWARD RANNIE.

Editors Herald: I have been preaching on the streets two and one half weeks, every night on the same corner, and have had good interest with a great deal of opposition. The Baptists, Methodists, and others corporated in trying to draw the crowds away from my meetings, and they do not care how they do it. They get on the street and preach not more than a block away, and get up ice-cream suppers to draw the crowd. But I have had some large crowds to preach to and have got the gospel before a great many in this way.

I got Bro. Sid Metcalf to make a frame to hang my chart and gasoline torch on, and it is a drawing card, for everybody wants to see what I have on my chart. Different ones have come and talked with me and said they liked the work, and I have invitations to come to their homes and have meetings, if I want to.

I have been up in the east end of the city to-day, talking with a good family on the work, and I think they are interested. They say that they will come to church. I am working hard to infuse some new life in the work here, as it has been so badly stunted by the conduct of one who came in our midst. My prayer is that God will be merciful to those who have done wrong and save them if possible.

This is a hard place for our work, for I have to go against opposition and make my openings as I go or have none. I recently visited a lady by the name of Sullivan. She has just returned from Utah, and is a missionary from the Presbyterians out lecturing against the Mormons. She said she knew Joseph Smith and Emma and David and young Joseph, and she knew Joseph Smith said that David should lead the Church after his death, and Joseph had other wives than Emma. But he proclaimed against polygamy before he was killed. She gave me a tract on Mormonism.

Editors Herald: We are now enjoying ourselves at a reunion that convened here on the 29th ult. We have had a very spiritual time so far, and believe all feel repaid for the time spent while here.

On the morning of the 4th inst. at nine o'clock, the writer with a little band of Saints assembled at the water's edge in reverence and thanksgiving to our heavenly Father, while Elder H. N. Hansen led three precious souls into the waters of baptism, after which we returned to the tent, and those who had just made a covenant with the Lord were confirmed at the morning service.

The reunion closes on the 6th, and the writer, accompanied by Apostle Kelley will depart for Bliss, Idaho, to attend the Idaho District conference that convenes there from the 11th to the 13th.

Since last writing, we have enjoyed the work very much and have preached the word in some new localities.

Trusting the good cause will continue to spread, I remain,
In the one faith,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

SEMINOLE, Alabama, September 7.

Dear Saints: The few Saints here are still trying to live faithful in the Master's work in which they are engaged, so as to share with the Lord's people when he comes to make up his jewels. The Saints are trying to get a churchhouse for this branch of the Church, but we are getting along somewhat slow. However, we have made an effort and we think we will complete it by the close of this year. If there are any who wish to put in a mite it will be kindly accepted. The more we do for the Master's cause, the greater will be our crown in the sweet by and by.

My desire is to do all I can to push this work along. I want an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that I may continue in the one faith. May God be with you all!

Your brother in Christ,
JAMES COOPER.

BAY MINETTE, Alabama, September 10.

Editors Herald: You will find inclosed a letter from Reverend W. T. Boaz, of Sedalia, Kentucky. The letter speaks for itself. The debate spoken of by the gentleman has been under way for several months past, and was agreed upon by the writer and Mr. Boaz to begin October 26, or near that date. Mr. Boaz had selected Mr. Warlick of Dallas, Texas, to defend his Church; the writer having secured the service of our worthy Bishop to defend our Church. I shall offer no criticism upon the letter but will say it is quite suggestive.

My health is better and I am busy at my work. I am doing all I can to strengthen the work by teaching and encouraging the Saints in the work. The good Lord has seen fit to hear our prayers in behalf of his work in the South and designated some young and middle-aged to take hold of the local work.

We have just closed a profitable conference of the Florida District. The Lord manifested his will concerning the work there at the Calhoun Branch. Bro. Lomax Jernigan was called and ordained an elder, and others have also been designated and will be set to work in the near future. Some troubles of long standing have been settled and we hope permanently so.

The missionaries, what few I have, seem to be busy and write encouragingly from their respective fields. There are many places now open for us to occupy, but we can only respond to few of them. I do hope the General Conference will next spring give this long-neglected field a more prayerful consideration and divide the missionary force so as to give us our share in the Southeastern Mission. We are trying to hold our own and cultivate the territory open to us. But it is hard to do with so few men at our disposal—only eight of us all told in this large field of eight States and a corner of another.

My labors are mostly confined to getting the local organizations on a better footing. I feel very thankful to our heavenly Father for the guidance of the Holy Spirit in his work, and that he is blessing me with better health of late. We are not baptizing many so far this year but feel assured that the good seed being sown by the writer and his coworkers will in due time bear fruit.

Bro. George Graves, our colored missionary, is doing a good work in Tennessee and Kentucky, so I am informed. He, too, has to meet opposition from the white man who is opposed to the faith. They do not want him to preach to his race. One place he was notified by the whites to get out of the country or they would shoot him. Stay with them, George, the victory will soon be gained.

Since writing you last I have labored within five miles of Fulton, Kentucky, leaving a fine feeling with all and some ready for the water. From there I came south, preaching first near Garland to the Methodist people. Heard since they were well pleased. Preached in the Pleasant Hill Branch with good liberty, leaving the Saints feeling well. Also preached in the little village of McKinzie, Alabama, to good crowds, with interest good.

I came here yesterday en route to Mississippi. The work here in this branch is dead for want of spiritual leaders. It is sad to think how careless some will get. We have a good church-building here, but it is idle only when the missionaries or some other brother drops in and gives them a sermon. Bro. Scarelliff has done what he could to keep up a Sunday-school, and has preached at intervals as his business would permit. We want to make an effort soon to build up the work here. I hope and pray that the Lord will raise up some one to lead his people here.

With love and best wishes to all, I am,
Yours in the faith,

I. N. ROBERTS.

CORINTH, Mississippi, August 31, 1903.

ELDER I. N. ROBERTS.

Dear Sir: Your letter to hand. Now will say that I had a letter from Bro. Warlick to-day stating that he had many debates on hand to be held before he could come to this one. Your statement about the Mayfield brother I know nothing about. I have been very anxious for the debate; am yet, but I can't get a congregation or any number of the members to stand by me in supporting the debate. So you see my condition. The reason the brethren have for not having the debate is, that the people called "Saints" are not hurting the Church anywhere in Western Kentucky or Tennessee, and that the only reason you have for entering the same is to be brought into notice. Now understand, if I could have this debate with some church (congregation) to stand by and help me support the same, I would do so; but unless I find this, this debate will have to fall through. I trust that in your publication of this matter you will state facts, not leave the impression that I wanted the debate called in, for indeed I am anxious to have a discussion between one of your best men and one of ours.

You state that some say that the "Saints" will back out. I have not heard of such talk. Faithfully yours,

W. T. BOAZ.

N. B.—Please understand that Warlick is not desiring to get out of the debate.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado, September 9.

Editors Herald: The Colorado Saints have passed through one of the best conference periods, including the conference just past, that they have had for years. The missionaries, with one or two exceptions, had very encouraging reports to offer. Had all been able and willing to have put in their full time, still better results would have obtained.

One of our mission force has been hindered from doing any missionary work, owing to local affairs; and Bro. Roush has done but little owing to ill health.

The conference held the 5th and 6th was not as largely attended as some have been, but a good, peaceable time was had and the Spirit was present to give cheer and consolation and encouragement. All felt its cheerful influence and some spoke as it gave utterance. The missionaries, as well as others, go forth with renewed energy to battle with the trials before them.

Bro. J. F. Curtis goes to the San Louis Valley and Durango and vicinity to revive the work there; Bro. Roush to Pueblo and vicinity; Brn. Kemp, Seli, and Bullard will look after the work in the northern part of the mission; while Bro. J. W. Morgan and the writer will take the tent and look after the work at Trinidad and other southern points. Bro. C. E. Willey has gone home for a short time to look after home interests and to get his family comfortably fixed for winter. After that he is to look after the work in Western Colorado.

Yours in bonds,

J. M. STUBBART.

WHEELING, West Virginia, September 7.

Editors Herald: I address you again with a brighter hope in the triumph of the work of the kingdom of the Giver of all good things. I am pleased to believe that the young of the Church may assist the work in bringing about the redemption of Zion. I am glad to note the great help of the Religio. May it ever prosper!

I hope our young people will not be idle in paying tithes for the benefit of Zion. Let us not wait for opportunity to come to us to bear the worthy name of Saints in good deeds as well as in words, for if we leave words without works and few good deeds, we appear like a garden full of weeds.

For Zion's success,

N. D. GILL.

DENVER, Colorado, August 30.

Editors Herald: It may be thought by some because we do not appear in the columns of your pages very often, that we are not in the faith, or are among the sleepers, but not so. The district tent has been here for three weeks. The preaching has been done by Elders Emsley and J. F. Curtis and J. B. Roush, with an occasional sermon by the local force. The attendance has been good from start to finish. None have been baptized, but we think some are interested. Of one thing we are sure, many more know of our presence in this great city than before.

The elders have planted, the Saints have assisted in the watering, and now we wait for God to give the increase.

To-night closes the tent work in this city. The tent will be shipped to Colorado Springs to-morrow to be used for the district conference.

For a few months things have been moving along nicely in branch affairs, but with prosperity in preaching the word, Satan has commenced business again on the inside, and we will have to work to keep him from destroying the good done. So it goes; there is no place to stop and rest in this great warfare.

The Reverend Sinclair Killen, a Presbyterian minister of Highlands, has challenged the Reverend Robert F. Coyle, of Central Presbyterian Church, Denver, to discuss the question of water baptism as held by the Baptist Church. The following is a part of the challenge: "For the sake of the glory of Christ and for the well-being of believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, who wish to follow righteousness when they know what righteousness is, I hereby respectfully and earnestly solicit a public discussion with you in Denver at an early date, at any place you may designate, on one of the supreme, important and precious commandments of Jesus Christ, viz., water baptism. H. Sinclair Killen." Reverend Killen says: "There is no such thing as a nonessential commandment in the teachings of Christ. No scripture can be broken without infinite harm and loss." The reverend gentleman must have heard some Latter Day Saint elder preach. I wonder if Doctor Coyle will meet the issue. We think it extremely doubtful. Reverend Killen closes his challenge with the entreaty that Doctor Coyle will enter into the discussion and that he will debate as one who is a seeker after truth, "in the spirit of one who acknowledges unconquered territory in the New Testament." We anxiously await Doctor Coyle's reply.

GRAND RAPIDS, Michigan, September 12.

Dear Herald: I left home May 12 for Michigan. The next evening found me at Wayland, where I spent one day with my sister Amy and family. She was for a time one of the HERALD Office force. Next day found me at Mattawan, where Brn. W. S. and Volney Glidden reside. They were very glad to see an elder, for the reason that a son and brother and wife were anxiously awaiting an opportunity to be baptized. Saturday evening I spoke to a very few persons in the Congregational church where Bro. Columbus Scott preached frequently in days of yore. A five-mile ride after meeting took me to the residence of Bro. Charles E. Glidden. On Sunday, the 17th, this brother, his wife, and a brother, Alonzo F. Coy, were baptized and confirmed. A few days were spent in this vicinity, visiting and conversing with Saints and their friends. A special blessing had been received by this brother and sister, their little son being restored to health in answer to prayer when he was very low with pneumonia.

This part of Michigan is adapted to the culture of grapes. Many acres of vineyards are now bearing, and last spring two million five hundred new vines were transplanted, so local papers state, about four hundred to the acre.

I next called on James Baybrooks and family, three of whom are members of the Church. They live near the village of Lawrence, where Brn. Henry C. Smith, John Foreman, M. McHarness, S. P. and S. M. Bass, A. H. Tyrrell, and others used to reside. While there I helped James plant corn and catch and eat fish, which I enjoyed very much, especially the latter.

At Hartford Branch I was made welcome by Bro. F. E. Robertson and family and other Saints. Found Bro. Francis Earl, whom I met in this district thirty years ago, he having moved there a short time before from West Pullman, Illinois. Am pleased to report that there is a nice little band of Saints at Hartford who have been kept alive for several years past by the watchcare of Bro. Robertson, who held the office of teacher. They have a small building of their own, and under the watchcare of Brn. Earl and Robertson we shall look for good results there to the cause we love. Held several meetings here and was substantially aided on my way to Coldwater to attend district conference, where I met several whom I knew several years ago.

In June, 1869, I visited Coldwater for the first time to attend the first conference held after Bro. E. C. Briggs was appointed to labor in this State. Here I met for the first time Brn. George and Bradford Corless, Samuel V. and Oliver J. Bailey, W. H. Reynolds, George Pope, and their families, and others whose names I do not now recall. And here I met for the first time President Joseph Smith. I also met L. D. Hickey, J. S. Comstock, and Wingfield Watson, who were of the Strangite faith and seemed desirous that Bro. Joseph should enlighten them as to his calling to the office of President of the Church. Mr. Hickey, pointing to Bro. Joseph, said: "There is the man that was the successor of the Martyr," but wished him to acknowledge that he had been ordained by James J. Strang while asleep, and stated that he would go to hell and be damned for a thousand years before he would change his position. Bro. Joseph, who had exchanged views previous to this, had nothing more to say, deeming it useless to continue the conversation under those conditions, and declined to answer any questions as to his calling to the office mentioned. Here at Coldwater at later dates I passed through some of the most enjoyable experiences of my life spiritually, the remembrance of which now causes tears of joy and thankfulness to start unbidden.

We had a very pleasant conference, the preaching on Saturday night and Sunday being done by Isaac M. and George A. Smith and S. W. L. Scott, one sister being baptized in the twilight hour by Bro. Samuel Stroh.

After conference, in company with Bro. Charles E. Irwin, I visited Knox, Indiana. Here is a branch of the Church, presided over by Bro. J. B. Prettyman. They have a nice little church and several members are zealous in the work and would be very glad to see it prosper. The only officer is Bro. Prettyman who is about seventy years old and has a large amount of the vexing cares of business on his mind as well as the interests of the work. We held several meetings here and several nine miles east of Knox.

July 4 found me at Hopkins at the residence of Bro. Sherman I. Smith. The next day I spoke twice at the schoolhouse where I used to teach school and where we first heard the gospel preached in 1867.

Then I came here. Found that six had been baptized in my absence and two have been baptized recently; also found that Sr. Lydia Supry, who has ever been very active in spreading reading matter and talking of the work, had passed away. Bro. Isaac M. Smith soon came and preached once, and then we went to Sparta to attend a two-day meeting about the middle of July. Here the services were held in the town hall, several of the missionary force being present. Saints from Belding, Greenville, Grand Rapids, and Slocum were present on Sunday. Preaching was splendid, principally by Brn. Smith and W. D. Ellis. We remained over the following Sunday, then returned to Grand Rapids, where Bro. Smith preached several excellent sermons on the duties of the Saints which were highly appreciated by some of the Saints.

We then visited the Saints of Lansing, Dimondale, and Williamston, holding meetings at the first and last named places. Parted with Bro. Smith on the 18th of August and went to Belding, where, in company with Bro. Ellis, we organized a branch of thirty members, August 21, a portion of them having been connected with the Lansing Branch which had been disorganized. Two more were baptized since the branch was organized. Many of these Saints have been baptized by Brn. W. D. Ellis and C. E. Irwin. Several more are investigating and will probably unite soon.

We also visited Fenwick, where we administered to a Sr. Stephens, and Bro. Ellis baptized her daughter. Then I went to Crystal, where in company with Bro. F. D. Omans we organized a branch, to be known as the Crystal Branch, with fourteen members, ten of whom have been baptized by Bro. Omans. Here also others are interested.

This district is large and the Saints are not as numerous as in many other parts of the State. Prejudice is quite high and as a usual thing few outsiders attend the meetings. It is difficult in many places to get places to preach in. Many neighborhoods have churches, all they need, but they refuse to allow the elders to occupy; and having places for their own accommodation close schoolhouses against all religious meetings.

Yours lengthily,
A. S. COCHRAN.

Reunion of Spring River District.

A reunion of the Spring River District was held in Forest Park, Pittsburg, Kansas, beginning August 21. An organization was effected with F. C. Keck in charge. Sr. Mollie Davis was organist and George English served as chorister. Sunday-school work throughout the reunion was in charge of Sr. Mollie Davis and Religio in charge of Bro. Ammon White.

Sermons were preached by the following: F. C. Keck, John T. Davis, W. H. Garrett, Ellis Short, Ammon White, John A. Davis, E. A. Davis, Lee A. Quick, J. T. Riley, Henry Smart, T. S. Hayton, and John Arthur Davis. The nine o'clock prayer-meetings were well attended and were spiritual and uplifting. On Wednesday afternoon Elder F. L. English baptized three children, and on Sunday afternoon Ammon White baptized four boys and five girls.

Forest Park is only a short distance from a city of twenty thousand inhabitants, but few who are nonmembers of the Church were present at any of the services.

A coöperative boarding-tent was conducted by Srs. McKnight and Snyder, who deserve much credit for their work.

The ten days spent at this reunion will be long remembered as a time of pleasure and profit, by those who attended.

PAMELIA PEARL JONES, Secretary.

The Dow City Reunion.

The first meeting was held at eleven o'clock Friday forenoon, August 28, when an organization was effected by choosing Frederick A. Smith and D. M. Rudd to preside, A. H. Rudd secretary, and W. A. Carroll chief of police with authority to choose others to fill out the required number of police as wisdom might direct.

The grounds were in first class condition with an ample supply of the best of water for man and beast. Pasture for horses was good and cheap and other provender for horses was had at market prices, the citizens trying to do their part for the good of all.

Prayer services were held from 9 to 10.20 a. m., and preaching services were held at 10.45 a. m., and at 2.30 and 7.45 p. m., except when time was occupied by Sunday-school and Religio workers, and one session of business held Friday afternoon.

The prayer-meetings attended by the writer were excellent in the spirit and zeal and love manifest. We noticed the manifestation of the Spirit was had in prophecy, tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, so that the Savior's promise to this people was verified.

The preaching was done by the following brethren, some of whom spoke more than once, and so far as the writer was able to judge the sermons were both entertaining and instructive to a very high degree: F. E. Cohrt, R. Wight, D. M. Rudd, J. C. Crabb, J. S. Strain, C. J. Hunt, C. E. Butterworth, J. F. McDowell, W. H. Garrett, Charles Derry, G. H. Hilliard, Joseph Luff, Frederick A. Smith, and Alexander H. Smith.

Bro. T. A. Hougas was with us and busy with his line of work, and we noticed that considerable interest was taken in the Sunday-school sessions held at four in the afternoons as well as in the sessions held in the forenoon for normal work which I think were held on Wednesday and Thursday.

All things considered, the meetings were well attended from first to last, there being many of the town people out at a number of the services and on each Sunday Saints and outsiders were on the grounds from all directions. Twenty-seven were added to the Church by baptism, which speaks well for the interest taken in the meetings.

Our presiding patriarch, Alexander H. Smith, was present and his advice and kindness were enjoyed and appreciated. Of the same order there were present: Charles Derry, Henry Kemp, and C. E. Butterworth, and all were busy with their special work, there being over a hundred blessings given.

Judging from what we saw, heard, and experienced we feel sure that the Holy Spirit was received and enjoyed by both the administrators and those receiving their blessings, for many hearts were made to rejoice in the Lord.

At the business-meeting it was decided to hold a reunion on the same grounds in 1904. The committee appointed to set the time and make all necessary arrangements for the good of the meeting are: J. L. Butterworth, A. H. Rudd, W. A. Carroll, C. E. Butterworth, and Romanan Wight. By vote the Sunday-school association is to occupy the forenoons of Tuesday and Wednesday of the session for their work.

The Saints missed President Joseph Smith from their number at this reunion, but felt to rejoice in the fact that he was able to be with and labor among the Saints in Europe.

Brn. James Pearsoll and S. B. Kibler, with their helpers, gave us some excellent music and singing, which was appreciated by all.

The weather was all that could be desired and the reunion was well presided over and may be written down as a success from first to last. The Saints returned to their homes encouraged, strengthened, blessed, and rejoicing in the goodness and favor of God.

Revised Constitution of the Religio.

This is to give notice to all Religians and friends that the perfecting of the Constitution and publishing of the same as authorized by the late General Convention has been unavoidably hindered, and we can not tell when it will be done. Due notice will be given, however, as soon as it is ready for mailing. In the meantime do not order Constitutions from the Herald Publishing House, as the supply is exhausted. There are a few copies in the hands of the executive officers, and in case of urgency, write to said officers for them. Due explanation of the hindering causes will be made known at next convention, if required. J. A. Gunsolley, president, for executive committee.

Reunion Notices.

Saints and friends who contemplate attending the Southern Missouri District reunion and conference which convenes at the Grove Springs Branch, October 3, 1903, will be met at Niaugua, Missouri, on the Frisco Route, on the morning of the 2d of October, if you will notify Elder G. W. Anderson, Grove Springs, Missouri, a few days beforehand, as Niaugua is about twelve miles from the reunion grounds. The Springfield gospel tent will be located near the church, so that one of the two can be used for a sleeping apartment for those that have not accommodations of their own. A. M. Baker, J. C. Chrestensen, P. T. Plumb, committee.

Graceland College Bazaar.

The Patronesses of Graceland College will hold a Bazaar on October 15, 16, and 17. It is the object of this society to promote the interest of the College by providing necessary furnishings for the different rooms. All contributions for the Bazaar such as quilts, curtains, table covers, art squares, paintings in oil or water-color, aprons, waists, holders, or any donation you may see fit to make, will be appreciated. Send articles by mail, express, or freight. Address Mrs. E. L. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa.

Conference Notices.

Eastern Michigan District conference will convene with the Bell River Branch at Riley Center, October 3, 1903. All reports may be sent to J. W. Davis, Riley Center, Michigan. Parties coming on the Grand Trunk Railroad, will be met at Capac. All trains will be met on Friday. Those coming on the Pere Marquette Railroad, will be met at Doyle. William Davis, district president.

The fall conference of the Chatham District will be held in the Wallaceburg Branch, October 17 and 18, 1903. R. Coburn, secretary.

Conference of the London District will convene at London, Ontario, October 10 and 11. Delegate rates on all roads will be arranged for. President R. C. Evans will be present. D. MacGregor, R. C. Longhurst, presidents.

The Massachusetts District conference will convene at Fall River, Massachusetts, October 3, 1903. The branch clerks will kindly see that their reports are in my hands by September 18. I would also call the attention of all elders to the fact that they are expected to report to each conference in writing. The blanks for the same may be obtained of your branch clerk. Let us come together at this time and renew ourselves for a greater work unto the Lord. I may be addressed at 39 Hudson Street, Somerville, Massachusetts. M. C. Fisher, clerk.

The conference of the Lamoni Stake will convene at Lone Rock, Missouri, at 10 o'clock a. m., Saturday, October 10. All branch and ministerial reports should be sent to D. J. Krahl, Lamoni, Iowa.

The quarterly conference of the Little Sioux District will convene at Woodbine, October 3, at 10.30 a. m. Jas. D. Stuart, clerk.

Convention Notices.

Religio convention of the Northeastern Illinois District will be held at Plano, Illinois, September 25, 1903. Laura Hayer, secretary, Morris, Illinois.

Pottawattamie District convention will convene at Hazel Dell, September 25, at 10.30 a. m. All schools please appoint delegates and those who have not sent in their report mail same to district secretary no later than September 20. Jennie Scott, secretary, Necla, Iowa, R. F. D. No. 4.

Clinton District Sunday-school association convenes at Nevada, Missouri, October 2, 1903. Prayer-meeting at 9 a. m. Schools that failed to send in reports of last quarter's work are requested to send them in at once. We hope to see the district well represented. Iva Keck, secretary, Nevada, Missouri.

Convention of the Alabama District Sunday-school association will meet with the Pleasant Hill Sunday-school on Friday, October 2, at 10 a. m. We are expecting the best convention we have ever had. Bro. Hougas has promised to be with us. We trust all those who are interested in the Sunday-school work will be present from all parts of the district. E. N. McCall, assistant superintendent.

The Sunday-school convention of the Little Sioux District will convene at Woodbine, Iowa, October 2, 1903, at 10 a. m. Let all come who can. Annie Stuart, secretary.

Died.

RILEY.—David Thomas Herbert Riley was born in Bell County, Texas, August 10, 1874. He was reared under the fostering care of affectionate Christian parents. He was of a lively turn, loved his friends, and by his courteous manner, he early made friends among the young and aged of both sexes. At an early date in his life he joined the Presbyterian Church. In later years he became careless in Christian duties, but a short time before the gavel of time called him to rest his love for God was revived. He wrote letters to his mother saying that he read and reverenced the Bible and desired to lead a Christian life. He was at one time a member of a benevolent society, was charitable and generous in his nature, and held an open hand to the needy. His love for his mother knew no bounds and he dearly loved his father, sister, brother, and other family relatives. He came to his death by an accident, June 19, 1903, at Flagstaff, Arizona, while on duty as brakeman. Death was instantaneous and his face showed no symptoms of suffering, but bore the sweet impress of a soul "at rest."

When I looked upon Herbert clothed in the habiliments of death, I remembered once, twice, yes, three times in the last three years, of hearing a faint voice in plaintive tones say, "Pray for my boy!" And now, as his lifeless form has been brought from a far-away land and lies in the presence of his grief-stricken parents, sisters, brother, and other family relatives, we are indeed at a loss for words. Faces are turned and look on us with an expression that speaks louder than words, saying, "Say something to palliate our throbbing hearts." I stand and gaze on the sad scene and ask myself, Is this all there is of man? and the echo is all I get for answer. I ask all the dark ages, Is this the last round of the ladder? I receive nothing for answer but midnight darkness. I turn to the savage, the infidel, and the atheist, and still it is the blackness of midnight. I turn to the "prince of the power of the air," "the demon of darkness," and I hear nothing but the clanking of chains. How I long to console those weeping ones! My heart yearns for something to say that would dry those scalding tears. There is only one resource left. We turn our faces heavenward and the blazing light of revelation is turned on and we see, written in golden letters: This is not all there is of men. Christ our Redeemer has said in the face of all darkness and in the face of him who reigns in darkness, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."—John 11: 25. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Corinthians 15: 22. Then when we read in Thessalonians 4: 16: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: the dead in Christ shall rise," we begin to see the light shining brighter and brighter, until we are brought face to face with the great redemption of all Israel, and the glories of the redeemed shine before us. Then, what John saw in vision, we shall see in reality, the hundred and forty and four thousand standing on Mount Zion, having the seal of the living God in their foreheads, and the teeming millions that no man could number, clothed in white robes marching upon the shores of eternity. We begin to behold the glories of the redeemed and long to be there. Then, parents, sister, brother, and all loved ones, over yonder you will shed no tears, you will have no need of them, neither the light of a candle, nor the sun, for God himself will be there, and the light of his face will banish all clouds of darkness. The prince of darkness will be chained and we will be permitted to behold the face of God and Christ, in peace with all our loved ones around us, as bright, shining stars in our crowns. What a joy will be there! No more sorrow, no more death! Yes, at that time the heavens will burst with the glory of God and Christ will be seen wrapped in the clouds of glory, and as the light shineth out of one part of the earth even to the other part, so shall the coming of the Son be. Then we will sing, "Bring forth the royal diadem, and crown him Lord of all."

"From the sides of the hills they come,
From their sleep in the mounds of earth,
With wonder and fear in their longing eyes
At this wondrous second birth.

"Where the fields of fierce strife have been,
They hurry, a numberless throng;
Where they laid them down in the lowly glen
They awake with a sigh or a song.

"Where the murderer's hand concealed,
Where they died in the fen and wood,
From the precipice foot they start revealed,
They rise from their solitude.

"All men who have lived, sinned and died,
By their father Adam's disgrace,
By the grace of the Adam crucified,
Spring up from their burial place.

"The ocean surrenders its dead,
Death, the prison, and realms of hell,
The reign of death to oblivion fled,—
How the multitudes throng and swell.

"All the records are open, prone,
And judgment doth now sit in state;
Before the great King on the great white throne,
The gathered dead stand, small and great."

An idea of the progress in modern transportation facilities can be drawn from the report that a New York man recently made a tour of the world in fifty-four days, seven hours, and twenty minutes.

Bro. Joseph Luff occupied the stand at the Brick Church, Lamoni, at both services on Sunday last, calling attention to the duties and opportunities presented in regard to the Graceland College debt. In answer to his call, donations to the amount of seven hundred forty-seven dollars and twenty-three cents were subscribed. While this shows up fairly well for one day, we do not think it represents what Saints and friends in Lamoni are willing to do in this matter, and expect to see many further additions to the list during the week. Bro. Luff left for Independence Monday forenoon and Bro. D. J. Krahl is collecting and receipting for the subscriptions.

Editorial.

SENIOR EDITOR ABROAD.

Our last closed with an account of our labors in the Manchester Branches, and our next stop was at Stockport, where we held services from August 18 to 20 inclusive, Bro. Evans occupying on the evenings of the 18th and 20th, the Editor on the evening of the 19th. The town is hilly like Sheffield and is a noted hat-manufacturing emporium with a portion of textile industry. The ride from Manchester over the electric line is picturesque, and in fine weather would be quite pleasing; but in dull weather, with a strong wind blowing, it is not quite so pleasant, especially if one rides on the top, the tram-cars all being what are called double-deckers.

The branch here is in charge of Bro. George Baty, at one time a British soldier, who has seen service in Africa during the Zulu War, also in Egypt, and has spent some years in America as well, and is a very efficient local laborer, though quiet and unassuming in manner. The branch, though small, is in good working order. During our stay Bro. Baty took us on a tour of observation on the tram-car line running through the town out into the country. In company with Bro. Rushton we were the guests of Bro. Baty and his pleasant partner, Sr. Jane. Two nights of the services our congregation was augmented by a small detachment of Saints from Manchester.

On Friday, the 21st, we went to Warrington, where we were met by Bro. John Schofield, the president of the branch, at whose house Bro. Evans and the Editor were billeted, Bro. Rushton being domiciled with Bro. J. Grundy, apparently no relation to "Mother Grundy" of American fame. In the evening we were officially received in their meeting-room and made welcome on behalf of the branch in a speech by Bro. Schofield, its presiding officer, after which an informal social repast was enjoyed, the time being occupied with speeches and singing.

On Saturday, under the care of Bro. Schofield, we visited Liverpool, the great shipping metropolis of the Empire. During this visit we went by ferryboat to New Brighton, one of the chief watering-places and seaside resorts of the western coast. This pleasure resort is like all others in some respects, especially in the peculiar attractions presented to the public to catch the pennies; this coin being the unit of value of the realm. Among these attractions a man from America had considerable amusement in witnessing the junior counselor enjoying a donkey ride, and an attempted donkey ride by the presiding elder of the British Mission, of which snap-shots were obtained more or less accurate in delineation. On the hypothesis that a "little nonsense is relished now and then by the wisest men," these "grave and reverend seigniors" unbent for the time being and were boys again. A negro from Kentucky sang the songs of the South, accompanying himself on the guitar, used the pronoun "we," and collected pennies for his effort. He told us that he was four thousand miles from home; and it made us feel lonesome to think that we also were that far away from home.

The relaxation for the day was restful, and we returned to Warrington quite prepared to enter into graver duties for having witnessed the sights and sounds attendant upon our visit to this city of nearly half a million of inhabitants and one of its favorite watering-places.

We held three preaching services in the Saints' meeting-rooms on Sunday, the audiences in the afternoon and evening being fair. Here again Bro. Evans bore the burden of service, occupying morning and evening, the Editor occupying in the afternoon. Wire-drawing is the principal industry of Warrington, Bro. Schofield himself being one of the "wire-pullers" of the city. The branch is under the charge of Bro. Schofield as elder, and Bro. Grundy as priest, who, though young, are zealous and bid fair for usefulness.

From Warrington our next stop was Wigan, where we found the branch in charge of Bro. James Spargo, at whose house Bro. Evans and the Editor were made welcome. We spent but the one evening at Wigan, holding service in their hall, Bro. Evans and the Editor occupying in the same service. We had a fair congregation, and, which was perhaps much to the point, had a reporter from the Wigan Examiner, who gave us a very fair and comprehensive write-up. We were much pleased with our visit to Wigan and regretted afterwards that our stay had been made so brief. At this place we enjoyed the music of the orchestra composed of the young people under the charge of our young brother, George Spargo, who is striving to make himself an accomplished violinist, with fair prospects of success. On the platform at Wigan station we took pennyweights of ourselves and found that the Editor had lost four pounds and that our Canadian brother had gathered from the flesh-pots of Britain an extra two pounds, the prospect being that in time he will be a typical Welshman, round, rosy, and jolly.

From Wigan we went to Farnworth, where we had service one night in their hall, and the Editor and Bro. Evans again spoke, the hall being well filled. At this service we met Bro. C. H. Hassall again, with a number from Manchester and Wigan, including Brn. Laycock and Hawkin, who, though deprived of sight, are able to find their way around the city and across the country, and are as jolly and good-natured as we would wish to see, bearing their infirmity with patience, and the best of good feeling. Farnworth and Wigan are coal-mining districts employing thousands of men and women, the women acting as "pit brow lassies." There are also a number of cotton-mills in Farnworth which give employment to a large number. We were the guests of Bro. Harper, who is the president of Farnworth Branch.

At the latter place, also, we met four Utah elders, one of whom, a Mr. Kimball, grandson of Heber C. Kimball, whilom counselor to President B. Young of the Utah Church, seemed to be in charge. We had quite a little conversation with Elder Kimball, who seemed to think his only desire was to know the truth, to be willing to exchange error for truth.

After meeting we returned to Manchester, in company with Brn. Henry Greenwood, James Clarke, John W. Green and wife, Robert Smith, and Sr. Lottie Davis, all of whom had been present at the meeting. We reached our pleasant staying-place at a late hour, and partook of the inevitable fourth meal, at which we had the pleasant company of our genial brother, W. R. Armstrong, who had been made the bearer of a magnificent rug for each of the American visitors, a present from a number of Saints about Manchester. These rugs were intended for service in our trip across the ocean and will indeed prove serviceable. We accepted these rugs and authorized Bro. Armstrong to express our gratitude to the donors, whose names he knew, and we did not. In order to make the early train it was necessary to rise betimes next morning, which we did, partaking of a hearty breakfast. We parted with Bro. Clarke and his wife, our genial hosts, who intended to take a later train to London on a holiday trip; and accompanied by Bro. J. Green and wife we reached the station in time for the morning train to Carnarvon, North Wales.

It was our intention to stay over night with Sr. Lloyd and her son Robert, Captain Lloyd being absent on a voyage, but a letter from Bro. Frank Swan, of Birmingham, informed us that he had made arrangements for our stay at the Aitkens Hotel in Dublin, whither we were bound en route for Belfast and Glasgow. After partaking of dinner with the hospitable people, we were ready for our trip across the Irish Channel.

We had before dinner visited Carnarvon Castle, the walls of which we found in a fair state of preservation for the age of them. It is a splendid type of the castles of the period succeeding the Roman occupation. The outer walls are almost intact, only one or two portions of the castle proper being fit for occupancy; one of these is occupied by the care-taker, the other portion being in possession of a Masonic fraternity, notwithstanding the castle belongs to the crown. It was founded in 1282 A. D. and in it Edward II, the first Prince of Wales, was born 1284 A. D. Within these walls the unfortunate King, after an inglorious reign and subsequently to his crushing defeat at Bannockburn by Robert the Bruce, was incarcerated by his wife and at her command done to death. It is even in its decay an imposing structure, and in the heyday of its glory it must have been of much grander aspect, glowing in the glitter and pomp of military and regal occupation and showing wonderful facilities for defensive warfare. We here visited old Sr. Williams, a relict of the old-time faith, now only waiting the call of the pale reaper. At ten minutes past two in the afternoon we left Carnarvon, and a good family of Saints there, for Holyhead, via Menai Tubular Bridge, in the rain and storm.

At Holyhead we embarked on the London and Northwestern Railway Company's steamship Cambria, a very fast and finely appointed steamer, for Dublin, a ride of sixty-four miles across the stormy sea. Who shall describe this crossing of the Irish Sea? One of the sailors told Bro. Evans that it was the second roughest voyage during the season. And, oh, dear! we were hardly out from the shelter of the harbor into the open sea, when our kind-hearted, tender-stomached, and generous brother from Canada had pressing business below and was soon lying prostrate on one of the forms in the cabin, striving to shut out all sights and sounds of a sea-faring life, and paying full and overflowing tribute to his marine majesty who bears the trident. It was a stormy passage indeed. The boat like a thing of life rushed at the wind and waves, rolling and pitching into and over the high and higher rolling billows, many of which struck the bows with sufficient force to throw the spray over every portion of the deck. Bro. Rushton kept up a brave front, keeping on deck for the most part, occasionally going down to commiserate with our suffering fellow voyager, who cared little for human sympathy and a good deal less for outspoken commiseration, until coming up from one of the trips, he slipped and fell on the slippery deck and rolled into the scuppers, which fall and the sights and sounds below among those who were sick made demands upon him which he cheerfully acceded to, and paid his tribute over the rail, direct to the fishes. All this time the Editor was enjoying the sight of the storm and the roll and pitch of the vessel, with stomach and brain unaffected, holding on to a stanchion to avoid being thrown into the scuppers or against the rail, in company with other passengers who preferred the outdoors, though it was both rainy and stormy, to the closeness of the cabin below. Bro. Rushton soon rallied from his attack and was soon also a jolly observer of what was aloft and below.

Before reaching the harbor, the storm seemed to have broken, and upon entering the smooth water of the estuary of the Liffey, Bro. Evans came on deck, pale but determined to renew the conflict if necessary. The Editor was happy, for he had triumphed, crossing the Irish Channel without being seasick. We found our hotel, where we were kindly cared for by the landlady at the direction of Bro. Frank Swan.

We spent the day of the 27th from early morning until four o'clock in the afternoon in taking in the sights of Dublin. Visited the celebrated Phoenix Park and stood upon the spot where Lords Cavendish and Burke were assassinated, May 16, 1882.

The park is a magnificent place of public resort. During our visit to it, we were painfully reminded that Ireland was but one of the dependencies of England, and notwithstanding all boasts of liberty it is still a military province, governed by a lord lieutenant and an armed constabulary force, whose presence was manifest in bands of armed men passing to and fro. We made a visit to the locality of the celebrated Donney Brook Fair. There was a horse-show in progress, to which we did not go, being contented to pass by and hear the shouts of the spectators mingled with the strains of music from the band.

We left Dublin for Belfast by the train at five o'clock in the afternoon, having a pleasant run and arriving in due time at Robinson's Hotel, where we took quarters for the night. We undertook to do Belfast on the morning of the 28th, but our visitation was to some extent spoiled by the rain which again came pelting down in the forenoon and kept it up more or less all day, to such an extent that when we boarded the steamship Adder at four o'clock in the afternoon, it was still cloudy and raining at intervals. The trip from Belfast to Glasgow was one of the most miserable that it has ever been our misfortune to endure. The boat is owned and run by a company named G. & J. Burns, and it would seem was more intended to gather in the shekels than to furnish decent provision for travelers. Imagine, if you can, between six and seven hundred men, women, and children crowded upon an open deck, with cabin accommodations and cover for barely one third that number, all exposed to a pelting rain, with scarcely a dry spot under foot either upon the deck or in the cabin; men, women, and children seasick with all its unfortunate and unbearable accessories, and you have the situation. Bro. Evans and Rushton wore water-proof coats, and the Editor was sheltered more or less under an umbrella facing a breeze created by the motion of the vessel driven by powerful engines at a rapid rate, going below only when the rain fell in too great force to be withstood. It was a spectacle manifesting human greed such as we have seldom if ever seen excelled. In connection with the cabin were a bar and a refreshment stand. At the first of these there was a constant attendance and long before the voyage was ended there was a motley lot of intoxicated men and women both; for beer and whisky were indulged in by both sexes to a greater or lesser extent; but, to the credit of the strange company and all the peculiar conditions, there was the best of good humor, except one little episode, in which a jolly Scotchman was offended at the alleged interference of another and showed fight, a prompt interference of the women folk preventing. We heard no swearing, nor loud or boisterous language. A little amusement was created by a coterie of musicians, who had an organ, a violin, and a cornet, and played several airs, to which a half intoxicated woman danced in accompaniment.

Fortunately, the sea was smooth and none of us was affected by the mal de mer, even Bro. Evans sticking it out on deck, notwithstanding some fifteen to eighteen were awfully sick immediately around him. We reached Ardrossan at half past nine in the evening and taking train were soon landed at the station of Glasgow, where we were met by Brn. Arber and Thorburn, Bro. Evans and the Editor going to the home of Bro. Thorburn, Bro. Rushton taking train for Hamilton to his home a few miles away. It was still raining when we reached Glasgow. On Saturday we dined at Bro. Henry McPherson's by invitation, meeting there Brn. Rushton and wife, Thorburn and wife, Arber and wife, Munro and wife, Hepburn, and Wilson.

Bro. McPherson is the son of Bro. Colin McPherson who was perhaps the principal laborer in building Brooklyn Branch, and who was killed in a railway accident while traveling to a conference at Fall River many years ago. Bro. McPherson was baptized many years ago, and is still in the faith. His wife is a Baptist and gave us a cordial welcome and attended our services in the hall. A reception was held at Bro. McPherson's at which Bro. Rushton presided, the address of welcome being by Bro. Arber, and a social time, enjoyed in songs, short speeches, and recitations, made up the program for the evening. The day was fair.

Sunday, the 30th, in the morning, we met in prayer at Bro. Thorburn's residence. Bro. Arber was in charge. At two o'clock in the afternoon we met in the Baronial Hall, which is occupied by the Saints for meeting purposes; the sermon was by Bro. Evans, the congregation being small. In the evening the audience was something better and the Editor occupied the hour. In the afternoon service we met Bro. Pratt, of Kely, who had been for many years a citizen in Boone, Iowa, and whom we last met at a reunion at Logan. We were pleased to see him once again.

Public announcement had been made for a meeting in Saint James Hall, Monday, the 31st. At this service we had quite a number of outsiders including Elder Eccles, of Utah, and three of his ministerial corps. He came and introduced himself to the Editor and engaged in a little conversation prior to the beginning of service. He seemed to be quite friendly and regretful that there was cause for difference between the two bodies, the Reorganized Church and the church in Utah. The sermon was by Bro. Evans, Bro. Rushton being in charge, and the effort was of those briefly described as timely and able. His text was, "And it shall come to pass at even time it shall be light." At the close of the effort he dealt with the question of difference between the two bodies in a pleasant, efficient, and profitable way. It was stated to him by Elder Eccles that he conceded it to be a very fair and strong representation of the case of the Reorganized Church and that he had never heard the case presented in that way before.

September 1, we visited the city, taking in some of the prominent sights, including the Art Gallery and the principal business streets of the city. On Wednesday, the 2d, we went sight-seeing, and visited one of the attractions of the Scottish Highlands, Loch Lomond, by train to Ballock Pier and thence by boat to Ardlui, passing Luss, Inversnaia and Tarbet, landings on the loch. The morning was misty, but by ten o'clock it had cleared some, giving us a chance to see some of the beauties of the upper portion of the loch. At half past twelve, however, it began to rain and we were glad to seek the shelter of the boat, which started on its return trip at twenty-five minutes past one. We gathered buttercups, asters, thistle, and heather, sprigs of which we sent home to our lassies as evidence of our trip to the "Bonnie, bonnie banks of Loch Lomond."

We can not forbear to mention, in closing this relation of our labors, the fact that notwithstanding we paid our fare from Glasgow to Ardlui by rail and boat we had to pay for passing over the approach to the boat two pence (four cents) for the privilege of going ashore over the dock, which tribute to greed was politely termed, "pier duty." It was to us an unfortunate exhibition of Scotch canniness on the part of either the company or the persons who own the land at the head of the loch. Bro. Evans kicked, but as the dock-keeper was only an employee and had probably heard the like before, it made little or no impression.

Our next stay will be at Hamilton, whence we write, the guests of Bro. Rushton. Fraternally,

JOSEPH SMITH.

HAMILTON, Scotland, September 4, 1903.

LETTER from I. N. White dated at Independence, Missouri, September 19, states that he is slowly recovering from the illness from which he has been suffering since the Stewartsville reunion.

"MORMONS BOG" AND THE SCANDINAVIAN MISSION.

Scandinavian Saints everywhere ought to be interested in the new edition of the Book of Mormon in Danish, just issued from the press in Porsgrund, Norway, under the auspices of Brn. Peter Anderson and Peter Muceus, the latter being Bishop's agent for the Scandinavian countries.

Copies of the book have been received in this country, and the execution and finish are fine. This book should be on the center-table of every Scandinavian family in the country. Prices range from one dollar to one dollar and fifty cents, according to binding. Aside from the usual missionary expenses incident to a foreign mission the Church has advanced over six hundred dollars to the completion of this work. Any one interested in the gospel going to any of the Scandinavian countries should not hesitate to secure a copy of this important translation and thus help the missionary cause in Norway, Denmark, and Sweden.

Bro. Muceus, in a letter bearing date of August 27, reports the progress of the work in that country as follows:

The present outlook for missionary work in this land is brighter than ever before; opportunities for presenting the word are found nearly everywhere, but we can not hold as many services during the week as in the States, hence more time is needed to explain our position. On Sunday is our best time, as during the week very few meetings can be held, and those held are not well attended. In the summer we can have large attendance on the streets, sometimes several hundred. I have held street meetings here this summer with good results; on Sunday evening I have occupied an open square by the court-house and there I have preached to from seventy-five to three hundred very interested listeners. The Spirit of God has been with me in greater power than ever before, and I have never seen better attention given. People who have come to sneer and laugh have suddenly changed and stood spellbound. I wish we had half a dozen good, experienced men for this land, and much good would result.

With such a demand as this from the brethren across the waters who have to be supplied from the home office in order to successfully carry on their work, can any truth-loving Scandinavian, or any other nationality for that matter, fail to perform his part in helping along this work? This means that each one should do his part to help in this missionary labor—on this side of the water as well as on the other.

Such a demand as this also comes from England, Scotland, and Wales, and from Australia. Surely it is a time when there should be found no laggards among Zion's children. If we can not go and preach, or if we can and have means so we can also help otherwise, let us forward to the Bishop and fill the Lord's storehouse so as to help "increase the fruits of righteousness;" then, by and by, all having been parties to the labor and spreading of the truth will receive the commendation of the Master as "faithful stewards" of the trust bestowed upon us here.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

W. D. Ellis baptized three at Englishville, Michigan, September 14.

W. H. Kelley, laboring in Ohio, reports splendid interest in Highland County, where he has held meetings in a grove every evening for a month except three. Turning him out of the schoolhouse there put the people on his side and made them more anxious to hear.

While people on this side of the globe are making preparations for winter Bro. D. E. Tucker writes from Kaitangata, New Zealand, August 11, that he has been "keeping back all winter," but is getting ready to push the work in that land "when warm weather comes."

Bro. J. R. Lambert was the only member of the Patriarchate at the Stewartville reunion, and the result was that he was taxed to the limit of his strength in endeavoring to answer the calls made upon him as patriarch. We note that there were several patriarchs at the Dow City reunion, held at the same time. Would it not have been better to have divided forces a little? It probably did not occur to the patriarchs to look out for this, and another time it is not likely to occur. The Stewartville reunion has grown to proportions which nearly rival the Western Iowa reunion, and it is too large to leave one patriarch to do the work there all alone.

Bro. John Shields, reporting from Silver Water, Manitoulin, states that the gospel work is moving nicely where he was laboring. He has made a good new opening of late; nine baptisms. He says some have tried to confound us with Salt Lakeism. We trust these will observe their mistake in due time, as it is as serious a mistake as confounding Paul with the Nicolaitans.

Elder I. N. Roberts reports successful work at Escatawpa, Mississippi. Two baptisms on Sunday the 13th.

In the Charlestown Enterprise, Massachusetts, of August 29, we notice a write-up of the Winter Hill Business College, an educational institution owned and managed by Brn. M. C. and E. H. Fisher, well known to many of our readers. The Enterprise speaks well of the new institution and its principals. The rates of tuition in the school are twenty-seven dollars and fifty cents for a term of ten weeks or one hundred and ten dollars for the full course of forty weeks. We wish the Brn. Fisher success in their school undertaking.

The Wheeling Telegraph of September 8 contained a report of the Pittsburg District conference held at Glen Easton, West Virginia, on the previous Saturday and Sunday.

In another column, notice is given of change of date of the Clinton District conference. It will convene at Nevada, Missouri, October 24, instead of October 3.

TRUE SUCCESSION IN CHURCH PRESIDENCY.

A REJOINDER.

BY ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH.

Since the publication of my book entitled True Succession in Church Presidency, which was a reply to the work of Elder B. H. Roberts of the Utah Church, entitled Succession in the Presidency of the Church, Mr. Roberts has published a second edition of his work in which he has added some new matter, in some points changed the reading of his original publication, and in some minor points undertaken to reply to me. The more important part of my argument and evidence, however, remains unchallenged by Mr. Roberts. Taken as a whole I could have afforded to have let the two books stand before the public without further comment were it not for the new matter introduced which may mislead some who are not acquainted with the history or the circumstances referred to. However, since it became necessary to notice the new matter I will take occasion to briefly refer to some of his so-called replies. Elder Roberts sometimes quotes a part of a passage and leaves out the vital point to the argument. Where he quotes from private journals and writings, leaving us to infer that he has access to them while he knows we have not, we neither admit nor deny the correctness of the quotations. This kind of evidence to a certain extent may be admissible but can not be accepted as conclusive where there is a vital point at issue. One of the most unfair things he does, however, is to insist that every one who is in sympathy with him is a competent witness, while he assumes without a particle of evidence that if a witness did not agree to the actions of the Twelve at Nauvoo he has lost his honor. If an advocate is permitted to introduce all witnesses without question who are in sympathy with his cause, and all who are not in sympathy are for that reason impeached, he can establish any proposition he may wish. This ought to be apparent even to a Brighamite, but nevertheless Mr. Roberts insists on conducting the argument on this basis.

In replying to Mr. Roberts I raised three objections to his basic proposition, viz., that Brigham Young had prophesied that "All that want to draw away a party from the Church after them, let them do it if they can, but they will not prosper." First, that the statement is not significant, as we must first determine where the Church is before we can judge of its fulfillment. Second, that the evidence of its fulfillment is not complete even from Mr. Roberts' standpoint, as there is yet a flourishing organization opposed to what he calls the Church. And third, that the evidence that Mr. Young ever made this statement is not clear.

The first two objections he entirely ignores, thus virtually conceding their strength. With these two points conceded, we care not whether Mr. Young made the remark or not.

But he meets the third objection by simply claiming that the minutes of the meeting as published in the Times and Seasons were not full and adding: "But when the history of the event was more fully written his remarks were given more in detail." Mr. Roberts does not tell us how these detailed remarks were preserved for nearly twenty years without publication. Was there a verbatim report taken at the time? If so, by whom? Where is the original copy now? Or were there simply notes taken, and the skeleton perfected afterwards? Or was it written from some one's memory who was present? If he wants us to believe he should tell us something to believe. But if Mr. Roberts makes it clear that Elder Young did say just what is reported he has effected nothing so far as this controversy is concerned.

We believe that he who undertakes to lead a party from the Church will not prosper: but the question is, Where is the Church? Who represents it? Why not meet the issue without so much equivocating?

On pages 7 and 8 Mr. Roberts corrects a mistake made in his first edition and says: "Inadvertently Hyrum Smith was represented as the counselor to the Prophet," and sets forth that Sidney Rigdon and William Law were the counselors at the time of the Prophet's death.

Perhaps it was inadvertently that he failed to correct page 9 so as to harmonize with the foregoing, for there he still represents Sidney Rigdon as the fellow counselor of Hyrum Smith. This he could not correct, however, without abandoning his former position that Rigdon was retained in the Presidency on account of the importunities of Hyrum Smith of the same quorum.

On page 13 of my treatise I called attention to President Woodruff's testimony as presented by Roberts being in conflict with the record regarding the vote on accepting Elder Rigdon. Mr. Roberts makes no effort to defend or explain the testimony of his witness, thus leaving Mr. Woodruff to be impeached without protest. Would he do this if defense had been possible?

Mr. Roberts still insists that the Twelve were sustained at that meeting in Nauvoo on August 8, 1844, as the First Presidency, and gives the resolution as quoted from Millennial Star, volume 25, but does not attempt to explain the discrepancy between the resolution as published at the time in the Times and Seasons and the one he quotes; it surely can not be explained on the ground that the first publication was shorter and the last more in detail for the one is not only shorter than the other, but is entirely of different import.

On page 8 Mr. Roberts reaffirms his charge against Sidney Rigdon; and though he had not given

Mr. Rigdon the credit of being exonerated from any of the charges made against him in 1843, he now admits that the charge of treacherous correspondence with Ex-governor Carlin was satisfactorily explained but claims that the charge of treasonable conduct in connection with John C. Bennett was not explained, and accuses us of making a part to bear off the whole burden.

The reader will observe that Mr. Roberts has not presented any evidence of treasonable conduct; and though we are not specially interested in defending Sidney Rigdon, we are not willing to believe him guilty of such base conduct simply on the affirmation of Mr. B. H. Roberts. He states that if any doubt exists of the treachery of Sidney Rigdon it can be dispelled by perusing the letter of John C. Bennett to him bearing date of January 10, 1843, and by the minutes of his trial before the Bishop of the Church published in volume five of Times and Seasons, pages 647-655, and 660-667. He gives us no reference as to where we may find the letter of John C. Bennett referred to.

A careful perusal of the minutes of the so-called trial of Sidney Rigdon does not sustain the charge of treachery. The minutes of that trial disclose a disposition on the part of Brigham Young and his associates to dominate and bring all departments of church work under their dictation.

It is presumed to be a trial before the Presiding Bishop of the Church assisted by a council of high priests; but it is quite evident that the Twelve were in control. The minutes represent that Brigham Young was in charge. He requested the choir to sing; Orson Hyde, one of the Twelve, opened with prayer; Brigham Young made the opening remarks, though taking occasion to remark that the Twelve were simply there as witnesses, and not as judges. He was followed by remarks from Orson Hyde, Parley P. Pratt, Amasa Lyman, John Taylor, W. W. Phelps, and Heber C. Kimball. These each of them not only gave evidence, but argued the case, and each of them presumed to decide the case before the verdict of the court was rendered. Brigham Young made the statement in his opening remarks that Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the Book of Mormon and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the Temple, Joseph Smith's measures, and the Twelve, were all one party, and represented Elder Rigdon and others as being of opposite parties.

Orson Hyde said, "Elder Rigdon is now going to work to make a division." Mr. Hyde related a great deal of hearsay evidence, making the statement that he would omit names unless called upon; but there is no record that the names were ever called for. Elder Hyde's statement of what somebody told him without the council knowing who it was passed for evidence before that council.

Parley P. Pratt said:

I say and bear testimony that the things revealed to Sidney Rigdon touching the great battles to be fought somewhere; the secret meetings; the ordination of officers, and the government of this Church, is a revelation of falsehood and delusion, calculated to lead the people astray.

Amasa Lyman said:

There are many who seem to be in difficulty concerning Sidney Rigdon's standing in the Church during the time he has been wallowing in his filth and corruption for four or five years past.

John Taylor said:

There has already been much said, sufficient to criminate Elder Rigdon, and to prove satisfactorily to the mind of every unprejudiced person, that he is unworthy of the confidence we have reposed in him; that he has dishonored his high and holy calling, and has in every way disqualified himself to act in that relationship to the Church, which he has heretofore sustained.

W. W. Phelps said:

He has come and lied in the name of the Lord. . . . The Devil has blinded his eyes, and he has endeavored to blind the minds of the people against those revelations that have been our guide since we came into this Church. . . . I therefore, in the authority of the holy priesthood, and as one who can not look upon sin with any degree of allowance, declare his late revelations, and his extraordinary ordinations of prophets, priests and kings among the Gentiles, holding the keys of David,—of the Devil; and let all the people say: Amen.

Heber C. Kimball said:

I wish the people would hear and be wise, and those who have been upholding Bro. Sidney, would turn about before they go into everlasting despair.

Thus all of these so-called witnesses presume to decide the case and tell that high council what Sidney Rigdon was guilty of, instead of simply giving testimony and allowing the council to decide the question of guilt or innocence. No respectable court understanding its prerogatives and duties, would allow witnesses to be guilty of such contempt. If Mr. Young or any of his colleagues had gone before any court of justice and used such language, they would have been reprimanded, and if not heeding the reprimand, would have been punished for contempt.

After all this Mr. Young takes the floor the second time and states what Mr. Hyde had before stated, that he had some testimony from other parties whose names he would not give if it could be dispensed with, and so far as the record is concerned it seems to have been dispensed with. There is no record of the names being called for, nor of the parties being brought before the council.

The law gave Mr. Rigdon the privilege of having a part of the council to speak in his behalf. One of the council did volunteer to do so, namely, William Marks. Then instead of other members of the council speaking against the accused as provided in the law, Brigham Young, one of the witnesses in the case, is permitted to reply to Mr. Marks. And in that reply he says: "I have known that Bro. Marks had no evidence but the written word; but if this people have no evidence but the written word, it is quite time to go to the river and be baptized for the remission of their sins."

Witness Young was followed by witness Phelps in answer to William Marks. He was followed by witness Hyde. After these three chief witnesses had been allowed to speak in answer to the arguments of one of the council, Bishop Whitney, who presided, gave privilege for any other councilor to speak who wished to do so, but no one responded.

Taking into consideration that Newel K. Whitney, who presided over that council, was not at the time Presiding Bishop of the Church, but was substituted for George Miller, who was appointed by revelation as Presiding Bishop of the Church; and the further fact that he was himself implicated as a party in the case, as is evidenced from the statement of Brigham Young before the court that he accompanied eight of the Twelve when they went to converse with Sidney Rigdon, laboring with him—and upon the matters developed in that labor these charges were based, and we have a case equaled by none on record, to our knowledge, for injustice and partiality.

There are many other points of criticism that we might make on this trial, but we forbear. No one who reads the records of those times impartially will allow that trial to have any effect in passing judgment upon Sidney Rigdon.

It will be remembered that I cited Mr. Roberts to his inaccuracy in stating that William Smith was expelled from the Church at the time when he was simply suspended from exercising the functions of his office; to which Mr. Roberts now replies: "Suspended from exercising the functions of their office comes so preciously near suspension of fellowship for an apostle as an apostle, that the Josephite 'Reply' is welcome to all that exists in the difference."—Page 19.

I thank Mr. Roberts for his liberality in this case, and accept the difference cheerfully.

In Mr. Roberts' first edition he claims that William Smith did not teach the doctrine of lineal priesthood until 1850. I showed from the writings of one in sympathy with Mr. Roberts' faith, that he was teaching it in St. Louis in November, 1845.

Mr. Roberts, on page 26 of his revised edition, acknowledges his error, and claims that his fault was in trusting too implicitly in Josephite statements of its own history. He says:

The authority upon which the statement of the text was made is from the statement of Jason W. Briggs, once a leading light of the "Reorganized Church," and by Tullidge in his account of the rise of said Church, called the "first standard-bearer of Israel's return." The statement by Briggs is quoted with approval by Tullidge, and Tullidge's History here quoted is "Published by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." (See title page Life of Joseph the Prophet by Tullidge, Plano edition, 1880.) Following is the passage in question:

"In the general disorder that prevailed from the death of Joseph Smith, here and there appeared a gleam of light and hope—a manifestation of the Spirit that all was not lost. Many ran to and fro in the character of prophets and shepherds. Among those appeared William Smith, who in the spring of 1850, called a conference at Covington, Kentucky; from which time he visited many of the branches and scattered Saints, teaching lineal priesthood, as applying to the Presidency of the Church; and thus disposing of all pretenders already arisen, or to rise out of the posterity of the original President of the Church. This principle, though pretty clearly shown in the books, had been almost entirely overlooked or forgotten by the Saints; but when their attention was then called to it many at once accepted it as the solution of the question of Presidency."—(Page 576.)

This quotation is not accurate; but the most damaging mistake made is in changing the word thus to then. The quotation as it reads in the work from which Mr. Roberts quoted is:

This principle, though pretty clearly shown in the books, had been almost entirely overlooked or forgotten by the Saints; but, when their attention was thus called to it, many at once received it as the solution of the question of Presidency. (See page 576, Tullidge's History.)

A mistake like this might occur without design; but when it is a mistake made to favor a theory that he is just at that time urging, it looks suspicious. Mr. Roberts was trying to maintain that then, in 1850, was the first time, according to Josephite history, that William Smith taught the doctrine of lineal priesthood; and by changing the word thus to make it read then it would favor his point. What makes it more suspicious than before is that he quotes from the same passage again on page 37, and there he quotes it correctly and italicizes the word thus when striving to make the point that it was through William Smith's teaching the lineal priesthood was first known. To make one point he changes the wording by substituting another; to make another point he emphasizes the word, probably forgetting his former effort. There is nothing in the quotation or from Elder Briggs to intimate that William Smith had not taught lineal priesthood prior to the Covington conference.

In his first edition in speaking of Lyman Wight, he made the positive statement:

In the latter part of August, 1844, President Young desired him to return to the pineries and continue his labors; but he refused and expressed a determination to carry out his own views, and be controller of his own conduct regardless of the counsel of the presiding quorum. He therefore went to Texas instead of to Wisconsin, taking a small company of the Saints with him, and settling in Texas, not far from the present site of Austin.—Page 26.

I showed that Lyman Wight did in fact go to Wisconsin at the time when Mr. Roberts says he refused to go.

Now on page 28 of his second edition Mr. Roberts changes the text in the body of his work and makes it to read, "He therefore finally went to Texas instead of to Wisconsin to get out timbers for the Temple," and so forth, thus throwing in an explanatory statement that was not in the first edition, and contending that that was his point in the beginning, that he did not go to get out timbers for the Temple. If he intended to say that he certainly failed in his intentions, for not an intimation of such a thing is found in his first edition.

He then contends that he was right in his main contention that Lyman Wight was not in harmony with his fellow apostles, and that he refused to follow their counsel, and goes on to some length to prove this assertion. He might have saved himself this trouble; for I made no claim to the contrary. I am aware that he was not in harmony with Brigham Young and others and refused to follow their counsel; and hence no testimony to that fact was necessary.

Again, Mr. Roberts claimed that Lyman Wight lived in obscurity and died outside the Church of Christ without a following. When I showed that he had continued to have a following to the time of his death; and that many are still following in the line of his counsel and teaching on the doctrine of lineal priesthood he changes the text again, and throws in after the words, "without a following," the words, "worthy the name of following." A very convenient way for a man to escape the dilemma of his wrong conclusions is to change without explanation or confession, and decide that the following was not worthy the name.

I do not care in this treatise to enter into the discussion of the question of worthiness; and hence leave the matter for the reader to judge of the dilemma a man is in who will thus change and pass judgment upon a body of people in order to escape the error that he has fallen into.

Mr. Roberts, on pages 48 and 49, enters into a labored argument to show that the revelation coming through Elder Deam required determination as to who held the highest authority previous to the choosing of the seven apostles.

This is not material; and we have already spent as much time as I care to spend on this point. I shall therefore be content with quoting the words themselves, and permitting the reader to form his own conclusion. Here are the words of the communication:

Verily, thus saith the Lord, as I said unto my servant Moses, "See thou do all things according to the pattern," so say I unto you. Behold, the pattern is before you. It is my will that you respect authority in my church; therefore let the greatest among you preside at your conference. Let three men be appointed by the conference to select seven men from among you, who shall compose a majority of the Twelve Apostles; for it is my will that that quorum should not be filled up at present. Let the president of the conference, assisted by two others, ordain them. (The senior of them shall preside.) Let them select twelve men from among you, and ordain them to compose my High Council. Behold, ye understand the order of the Bishopric, the Seventy, the Elders, the Priests, Teachers and Deacons. These organize according to the pattern. Behold, I will be with you unto the end; even so, Amen. (See Church History, vol. 3, pp. 217, 218.)

It will be seen from this, that while the one holding the greatest authority before the conference was to preside at the conference, it was the senior of the seven who was to act as the President of the Church.

On page 53 Mr. Roberts again concedes that he was mistaken in setting the date of Lyman Wight's advocacy of lineal priesthood at 1850; but he still contends "that this question of 'young Joseph's' claims to the Presidency was not mooted in the controversy over the Presidency at Nauvoo in August, 1844, the time of all times for those who knew anything of the subject to have spoken."

In my reply I presented the fact that William Smith and Lyman Wight preached lineal descent so soon after their difference with others of the Twelve as to make it strong presumptive evidence that this was one of the points of difference. We invited attention to the fact that the real points of difference were never published; that the Church papers were silent upon the point; and that neither William Smith nor Lyman Wight had an opportunity to preserve their opinions in any periodical of the times. Mr. Roberts ignores all this, and still asserts that they and all others were silent upon this point.

Fortunately, since the publication of our reply, the evidence has come to our hand which removes all possible doubt; and it is not necessary for us to stand upon this presumption, plain though it may be. We have before us a letter written by James Blakeslee to Jacob Scott, dated Hampton, Rock Island County, Illinois, August 16, 1844, just eight days after the memorable meeting on August 8 on which so much has been said, and at which time so much was said regarding Presidency and leadership. He says:

But alas, what a change one year has made. Even the space of about one year, or a little more, has successfully introduced into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, a sufficient amount of false doctrine, to deceive and lead away nearly all the Church at Nauvoo, while the prophet and patriarch of the Church have been barbarously murdered by the hand of a gang of demons in human shape. Thus you see, sir, that the Church is left without an earthly head, unless the promise of the Lord shall be fulfilled, which saith, that if he removed Joseph, he would appoint another in his stead. But as this has not yet been done, what is the Church to do? Now sir, if I have been correctly informed, some of the members of the Church at Nauvoo, want Stephen Markham for their head, and others Sidney Rigdon, and others President Marks, and others little Joseph, and others B. Young, and some others P. P. Pratt, and if they can all have their choice, we shall soon have a multiplicity of Churches of Latter Day Saints.

It appears that Elder Blakeslee was not present at Nauvoo; but that in about one week after that meeting word had reached him of the controversy over leadership at Nauvoo, and that in that controversy young Joseph's name was mentioned with others. This sets aside effectually and positively the statement of Elder Roberts that young Joseph's claims to the Presidency were not mooted in the controversy.

Mr. Roberts thinks I might have added some interesting information in connection with my extract from the Gospel Herald regarding the position of Lyman Wight on lineal priesthood had I quoted John E. Page in that connection. Doubtless it might be interesting information, but it is not material to the point in discussion. I was only attempting to show that William Smith and Lyman Wight taught lineal priesthood. I was aware that John E. Page did not. His opinion has no more bearing upon the point as to what William Smith and Lyman Wight taught than has the opinion of Young, Kimball, or Pratt.

Mr. Roberts undertook to show a discrepancy in the testimony regarding the blessing of President Joseph Smith, a part of the testimony going to show that he was blessed in Liberty Jail, and a part to show that he was blessed soon after coming out of Liberty Jail. I showed that he was several times blessed to the same effect. All Mr. Roberts has to say in his late edition is to ask how many times it is necessary that young Joseph should be blessed, appointed, and ordained to the same position by the same person. It is not necessary for us to answer the question. It is only necessary to show that he was actually blessed at different times and places, and this I have clearly shown. The question of necessity should be asked of those who participated in this blessing.

Mr. Roberts makes a labored effort to show a conflict between Elder Whitehead and others because Elder Whitehead calls this blessing an ordination while others do not. It is not necessary to occupy space in arguing this. President Joseph Smith explains it sufficiently clear in the quotation which Mr. Roberts himself inserts; he says, "This blessing has by some been called an ordination, from the usual predilection to confound names and terms."

The evidence shows that the Prophet Joseph Smith laid his hands at different times upon the head of his son and blessed him, declaring that he would succeed him in his position in the Church. That is all we claim. We have not taken a position as to whether priesthood was conferred or not; simply that in fulfillment of the revelation he designated who the successor should be. In the sense of an appointment it may be called an ordination.

Mr. Roberts thinks it very strange that young Joseph was set apart before the congregation where there were thousands present, and that that congregation accepted him, and yet Mr. Whitehead is the "sole witness." He thinks it very reasonable that others in that congregation would have remembered it, and would have contended at the time that he was the rightful successor. The strangeness of it is admitted; and one wonders why if true that the efforts of Brigham Young were successful with so many. But we have the positive testimony that Mr. Whitehead was not the "sole witness," and that young Joseph's claims were advocated by some, I know not how many, in August, 1844, as evidenced from the letter of Elder Blakeslee before quoted.

John H. Carter, of near Provo City, Utah, in his testimony in the Temple Lot suit said:

I was present at a meeting in the city of Nauvoo, in the state of Illinois, at which something was said or done about the successor of Joseph Smith. It was held in the Bowery, right north of the Temple, and Joseph Smith was on the stand. I can not tell you when it was, but it was not long before he was killed. This happened in Nauvoo, in the Bowery that was erected right north of the Temple, where they held meetings before the Temple was finished. Yes sir, Joseph Smith who was called Junior, was on the stand. It was on a Sunday. There was a congregation gathered there on that occasion; it was a large gathering. It was the people mostly from Nauvoo who had gathered there, and when they got together on these occasions there was a large gathering. . . .

Joseph Smith came on the stand leading his son, young Joseph, and they sat him down on a bench at the Prophet's right hand, and Joseph got up and began to preach and talk to the people, and the question he said was asked by somebody, "If Joseph Smith should be killed or die, who would be his successor?" And he turned around and said, pointing to his son, "There is the successor," and he went on and said, "My work is pretty nearly done," and that is about all he said in regard to his son. He said in answer to a question that was asked as to who should be his successor in case he should be killed or die, and he pointed to his son, young Joseph, who was sitting there at his side, and said he: "There is your leader."

My father-in-law was with me at the time, and sat there and heard what was said, and when we were going home my father-in-law asked, "What does that mean?" He said, "That has got a meaning to it, from the way Joseph talked and pointed to his son," because Joseph had said, "There is your leader," pointing at the time to his son, and my father-in-law said, "We will see the fulfillment of that by and by."

It was the understanding of the people generally, of the Church as far as I know; all understood it from that day on that when the boy Joseph came of age he would take the lead in the Church and be its head. There were a great many people who believed that, and moreover, President Young preached it himself for some time after he came into the valley. That was the belief of hundreds and thousands; was the belief then, and is the belief now.

I have always believed that ever since I heard Joseph say the words I have stated, ever since I saw his father point him out; and I believe it to-day just as strongly as I ever did, and it was under that belief that I have followed President Young west with the branch of the Church now known as the Salt Lake branch. That was the teaching and the ideas held out by the officers and elders, including Brigham Young and other prominent elders of the Church, who afterwards came west and located here at Salt Lake City; and it was the teaching in Utah Territory for several years after the death of Joseph Smith. Here in Salt Lake City they publicly taught and held out the idea to the members of the Church that Joseph Smith the son of Joseph Smith, Jr., would eventually be the President of the Church.—Plaintiff's Abstract, pp. 180, 181.

This testimony corroborates in the main features the statements made by Elder Whitehead; and also accounts for, what otherwise would seem strange, how Brigham Young succeeded so well. Thousands, according to Mr. Carter, accepted his teachings because he held out the idea that young Joseph would be the proper person to take the leadership of the Church when he became of age.

This testimony of Elders Whitehead and Carter is strengthened by the testimony of Charles Derry, W. W. Phelps, Alpheus Cutler, P. P. Pratt, D. S. Mills, Lucy Smith, George Miller, Louis Gaulter, Harriet E. Gaulter, Arthur Milliken, and A. B. Moore, as set forth in our former reply.

Mr. Roberts in his former reply presented the claim of Brigham Young that Hyrum Smith was appointed by Joseph as his successor. I met this by saying that if this claim be true it would destroy the prophetic character of Joseph Smith, as it failed of fulfillment. Mr. Roberts can not see how it would affect the prophetic character of Joseph Smith. I do not know how to make it plainer. If Joseph Smith said Hyrum would be his successor and Hyrum fell in death before he did, it shows beyond controversy that Joseph Smith was deceived in setting apart as his successor a man whom God never intended to succeed him. If this does not affect the evidence of his prophetic calling I do not know what would.

Again, if Joseph Smith set Hyrum apart as his successor, where is the consistency in the claim that he provided that the Twelve should succeed him by conferring upon them all the keys and responsibilities which he had himself held?

Elder Orson Hyde in his testimony before the Bishop's court that tried Sidney Rigdon, makes a pertinent statement on this point. It is as follows:

Now why did he say to the Twelve on YOUR shoulders will this responsibility rest, why did he not mention Bro. Hyrum? The Spirit knew that Hyrum would be taken with him, and hence he did not mention his name; Elder Rigdon's name was not mentioned, although he was here all the time, but he did not attend our councils.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 651.

Here is a direct conflict between Elders Young and Hyde, Elder Young stating that Joseph did ordain Hyrum as his successor, and Elder Hyde stating that Joseph did not mention him because the Spirit knew that Hyrum would be taken with him. Can Mr. Roberts or any other advocate of that theory reconcile these statements?

On page 79 Mr. Roberts states that I had no other means of escape from certain conclusions only to throw discredit upon passages in the history of the Prophet, because I questioned the genuineness of some publications issued by the Utah Church.

It was not the writer of the "Reply" that threw discredit upon the history of the Church as published by the Utah people; but that discredit has been the result of their own acts. In the face of the facts it will avail nothing for Mr. Roberts to call references to this subject "contemptible Josephite quibbling."

The late Elder Charles W. Wandell, who in 1845 was employed in the historian's office in Nauvoo, in speaking of the purported writings of Joseph Smith the Seer, notices some interpolations and then remarks:

I notice these interpolations because having been employed (myself) in the historian's office at Nauvoo by Doctor Richards, and employed too, in 1845, in compiling this very autobiography, I know that after Joseph's death his memoir was "doctored" to suit the new order of things, and this too by the direct order of Brigham Young to Doctor Richards, and systematically by Richards.

I presume Mr. Roberts will resort to his usual tactics, and say that Elder Wandell had lost his honor when he offered this statement; but he will hardly claim that George A. Smith and Wilford Woodruff had lost their honor when they stated the following as found on page 5 of the preface to the first volume of Church History as published by the Utah Church, in 1902:

The history of Joseph Smith is now before the world, and we are satisfied that a history more correct in its details than this was never published. To have it strictly correct, the greatest possible pains have been taken by the historians and clerks engaged in the work. They were eye and ear witnesses of nearly all the transactions recorded in this history, most of which were reported as they transpired, and, where they were not personally present, they have had access to those who were. Moreover, since the death of the Prophet Joseph, the history has been carefully revised under the strict inspection of President Brigham Young, and approved by him. We, therefore, hereby bear our testimony to all the world, unto whom these words shall come, that the history of Joseph Smith is true, and is one of the most authentic histories ever written.

This certainly agrees with the statement of Elder Wandell, and is a confession published by themselves that the history of Joseph Smith was carefully revised under the inspection of Brigham Young. Who, then, was it that threw discredit upon the genuineness of history as published in Utah? When we state that its genuineness is questionable we state just what their confession shows.

Mr. Roberts quotes an action of the conference of October, 1844, sustaining Brigham Young as one of the Twelve and First Presidency of the Church, and asks, "Can there be any doubt but what this was practically the same as that of the eighth of August?" We answer, Yes, there can be and is doubt. The whole history of the transaction shows that they ventured a little farther each succeeding time that the case was mentioned.

On page 74 Mr. Roberts misrepresents us by conveying the idea that we had taken a position that lineal priesthood as applied to the Presidency was an invariable rule, subject to no contingencies; whereas I stated our position clearly on page 50 of my first edition, that "the son's right to his father's position is contingent upon these conditions, and that God alone is a competent judge of ability and worthiness, we hold that no man should be ordained to any office without a call from God." Our position was that all other things being equal, God had determined that the son should succeed to his father's place; but not alone by virtue of his lineage, but that he to occupy must be called of God, as God alone was the judge of availability and worthiness.

I repeat that we do not know why Hyrum Smith, an elder son of Joseph the Seer, was not chosen. He probably had the right of lineage; but God called Joseph, that is sufficient. Why should Elder Roberts contend upon this point when it is not the point at issue between us? The issue is not regarding the first or second son but regarding lineage as applying to the Presidency at all.

On page 75 Elder Roberts repeats his challenge to produce a purported revelation through Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganization, that he was called to the position. I do not know how to convey an idea to the mind of Mr. Roberts if I have not done so upon this point. We cited him to the revelation given through Jason W. Briggs, to the effect that the seed of Joseph Smith was to come forth and preside over the high priesthood of the Church; and in connection we have a revelation given to Joseph Smith indorsing that organization at Zarahemla. If the revelation indorsed that organization it indorsed the position on which it stood, that the seed of Joseph Smith the Seer was to preside over the high priesthood of the Church.

Again, when he went to Amboy, in 1860, to assume that position, he said, "I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me." To occupy space upon this point would be useless. Though Mr. Roberts may not understand this language, I am sure that the majority of our readers can.

On pages 77 and 78 Mr. Roberts quotes a purported statement of Joseph Smith as published in Millennial Star, volume 22, as follows: "We have a Judas in our midst; whatever can be the matter with these men;" and throws into the midst of this quotation his own words as follows: "This appears to have had an unpleasant effect upon the minds of some leading men in the Church, especially upon the minds of William Law and William Marks, who complain before the mayor's court about the action of these special police."

By what authority does Mr. Roberts say that these were William Law and William Marks? True, their names are mentioned further on in this purported quotation; but not in the connection in which Mr. Roberts places them. It must be remembered, too, that at the time the history of Joseph Smith was carefully revised under the inspection of Brigham Young he had a controversy with William Marks that might have induced him to write his name into the revised history.

In the following pages Mr. Roberts again takes up the argument of the lesser ordaining the greater, and represents us as taking the position that the lesser ordains the greater by virtue of its position in the priesthood. This is not and has never been the position of the Reorganization. Our position has been that a command of God is sufficient authority for an ordination; and that if one holding the lesser position is directed to ordain a man to a higher position than that which he himself holds, it is legitimate for him to do so. Our position upon this point has recently been conceded by the editors of the Juvenile Instructor, of which Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah Church, is the chief editor. In commenting upon the ordination of the Twelve in 1835, the editors of this periodical say in the issue for March 1, 1902:

This proceeding is strong evidence of the fact that the priesthood is greater than any of its offices; and further, that any man who has received the holy Melchisedec priesthood is empowered by and through the possession of that priesthood to perform any ordinance connected therewith when called upon to do so by the proper authority. For this reason we find in the history of the Church that apostles have presided over stakes of Zion, at other times they have acted as traveling elders in the foreign missions of the Church when a high priest or seventy has presided therein. It is the duty of a high priest to preside at home, but high priests are often called to labor as missionaries abroad, while seventies, whose special mission is to preach the gospel to the outside world, are occasionally called to preside at home. Again, seventies have been authorized to ordain high priests and high priests, seventies. All these apparent deviations from the usual procedure were regular and proper because every man holding the Melchisedec priesthood has within him the latent power to do all things that that priesthood authorizes, no matter what office he holds; but he has no right to depart from the limitations prescribed for his office unless he is specially called upon and appointed to do so, either by the Lord through revelation or by the Lord's representative, or by one holding an office in the priesthood whose calling clearly authorizes him to give such instructions and special authority.

The case in point is one of the evidences of the truth of our position. Here the Lord by revelation and by the instructions of his mouthpiece calls upon three men, two of whom are high priests, to choose twelve men to form the quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and then to ordain or set them apart for this most responsible and exalted calling. He did so because they had the Melchisedec priesthood and in that priesthood was embraced the necessary authority to perform this duty. We admit that even if it did not, that the Lord himself could, if he so pleased, give these men extraordinary and unusual powers on any occasion. We have no desire to limit the powers of the Lord.

If there is any question in the minds of any as to the responsibility of the editors upon this point, the following letter will settle that question. I wrote the Juvenile Instructor immediately after this appeared, asking who was responsible for the answers to questions in the department of "Answers to Questions" in the Juvenile Instructor, and received the following:

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, March 13, 1902.

ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH, Historian, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir: Your favor of 7th inst. is to hand. In reply I will say, the Editors of the Juvenile Instructor are responsible for what appears in its pages under the caption of "Answers to Questions;" indeed, by far the greater portion is written by one of themselves.

Yours fraternally,

JOSEPH F. SMITH.

President Joseph F. Smith in the above takes even stronger ground than the Reorganization has ever taken in which he sets forth that one holding authority to ordain can direct another, and that other can ordain by virtue of the authority thus delegated.

Which is right, President Joseph F. Smith or Elder B. H. Roberts when the latter speaks of the position of the Reorganization on this point as "the untenable position, as false in philosophy as it is in fact, that the lesser can ordain the greater, and the greater thus accredited can ordain a still greater even the greatest of all"?

On page 85 (see also page 78) Mr. Roberts makes one of the most stupendous blunders that it has ever been our fortune to notice in a man of ordinary carefulness in controversy: He states:

The "Reply" writer seems to think there was some special virtue in the fact that William Marks took part in the ordination of young Joseph, because Marks was a high priest in the days of Joseph the Prophet. ("Reply," p. 142.) That is disposed of by the fact that Marks was a follower of the Apostate Strang and a member of his apostate church; and "Young Joseph" has said: "Whenever individuals claiming authority under the Church as organized by the first Joseph became members of any faction, they immediately became divested of all authority." (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 4, no. 10, p. 158.) And since young Joseph is a "prophet" of course that disposes of the man who is supposed to have made assurance doubly sure in ordaining him—nay, of the very man who, I believe, was mouth at his ordination.

The above quotation made by Mr. Roberts is an incomplete one. It is part of the minutes of a special conference held at Galland's Grove, Iowa, October 25 and 26, 1863, and does not purport to give the exact words of the president of the conference, but says:

The president then (in substance) made the following remarks: "All official acts of any elder, while acting under the authority of the old Church, are recognized by us as valid; but the acts of those elders who received their authority from any of the factious organizations, such as Brigham's, Brewster's, Strang's, etc., etc., are not recognized by us as valid; for whenever any of those factions were organized, each member received his authority from that faction; hence whenever individuals, claiming authority under the Church as organized by the first Joseph, became members of any faction, they immediately became divested of all authority except that received from the faction to which they had joined themselves. Thus when Brigham Young usurped the Presidency of the Church at or near Council Bluffs, the disorganization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was thereby effected, and Brigham's church was brought into existence. The same is true of all the factious organizations. Therefore from the time they set up for themselves their acts in a church capacity are spurious."

So we have not the exact words used upon that occasion, but the substance of them. But the most remarkable part of it all is that Mr. Roberts represents it as being the language of "Young Joseph" when there is nothing in the entire proceedings to show that young Joseph was present; but it is stated in the heading of the minutes that the district was under the presidency of Elder John A. McIntosh; and the minutes are signed right in the column opposite the one from which Mr. Roberts quotes, "John A. McIntosh, president; O. E. Holcomb, Nathan Lindsay, clerks." So the president referred to is John A. McIntosh, and not "Young Joseph" as asserted by Mr. Roberts.

If the remarks were made as reported in this synopsis, and we grant they may have been, for Uncle Johnny McIntosh, as we familiarly called him, though a man of sterling integrity, was a man of radical views, and may have held the view expressed; it commits only him, if anybody, to that position, and not President Joseph Smith. Mr. Roberts makes the blunder of referring to this several times in the course of his reply. It is impossible for us to determine how he could make such an egregious blunder as this.

In the body of his work, page 86, Elder Roberts states that, "One who succeeds to the position of the Prophet Joseph must come in at the gate, and be ordained as the Lord had before instructed the Church—that is, he must be accepted by the Church, and be ordained by the direction of a general conference." But on page 105 he states: "Brigham Young always held, and is on record from the death of the Prophet, that the keys of the kingdom, which the Prophet Joseph held, he bestowed upon the Twelve, and that to occupy any position in the Church, they needed no other ordination."

If Mr. Roberts is right in his statement, then Elder Young is condemned as not being properly ordained to the position he held.

On page 90 he states that Amasa Lyman had been ordained a counselor to Joseph Smith the Prophet to take the place of Sidney Rigdon; "but Elder Lyman had never been presented to the people to be sustained by their vote, and hence his appointment was not completed, and he had no claim even to the counselorship in the Presidency."

If Elder Lyman had been ordained to the position of counselor, and had no claim because he had not been presented to the people to be sustained, what becomes of the claim of the Twelve even though it be conceded that Joseph appointed them to succeed him? They had not at that time been presented to the people to be sustained by their vote. If the Twelve could be presented after the death of Joseph, why would it not have been consistent to have presented Elder Lyman at the same time instead of turning him down because he had not been previously presented to the people?

On page 86 Mr. Roberts makes the following comment on the subject of Joseph Smith appointing his successor:

The "Reply" writer seeking to combat the limitations of the revelation here described, and contending for a larger application of it, says: "To take the position, as Mr. Roberts does, that Joseph Smith was not authorized to appoint his successor except in the event of transgression, is to make the authority to appoint contingent upon transgression." Nevertheless such are the limitations of this particular revelation, as an inspection of it will disclose; and at this point it is this particular revelation and not the general power of appointment which is under consideration. If Joseph Smith remains faithful he is to continue God's mouthpiece to the Church, and none other is to be appointed. If he transgress, then he is still to retain power enough to appoint another in his stead.

Mr. Roberts asserts, what the revelation clearly implies, that in case of transgression he is to retain power to appoint his successor; it follows then that he had it before the transgression. He could not retain that which he did not have; and hence his power to appoint is not contingent upon his transgression.

Commencing on page 93 Mr. Roberts enters into a long argument on the question of Church rejection. I shall simply content myself with quoting what the Lord has said in regard to it in paragraph 10 and part of paragraph 11, section 107, Doctrine and Covenants:

And again, verily I say unto you, Let all my saints come from afar; and send ye swift messengers, yea, chosen messengers, and say unto them, Come ye, with all your gold, and your silver, and your precious stones, and with all your antiquities; and with all who have knowledge of antiquities, that will come may come, and bring the box-tree, and the fir-tree, and the pine-tree, together with all the precious trees of the earth; and with iron, with copper, and with brass, and with zinc, and with all your precious things of the earth, and build a house to my name, for the Most High to dwell therein; for there is not a place found on earth that he may come and restore again that which was lost unto you, or, which he hath taken away, even the fullness of the priesthood; for a baptismal font there is not upon the earth; that they, my saints, may be baptized for those who are dead; for this ordinance belongeth to my house, and can not be acceptable to me, only in the days of your poverty, wherein ye are not able to build a house unto me. But I command you, all ye my saints, to build a house unto me; and I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me, and during this time your baptisms shall be acceptable unto me.

But, behold, at the end of this appointment, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable unto me; and if you do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord your God.

If this be true, that the Lord granted unto them a sufficient time to build a house, and they failed, the Church was rejected; and there is no use of Mr. Roberts pleading that they did not have time or opportunity, for the decree had gone forth that they should have a sufficient time.

I introduced witnesses in my former reply, one of them being President Brigham Young, to the effect that the temple was not completed. The testimony of these witnesses Elder Roberts had not noticed. He says we tried to bring him and Elder Charles W. Penrose into conflict. "But there is no conflict." Whether or not there is a conflict we will leave the reader to judge. Roberts says, "The temple was completed." Mr. Penrose says: "There were probably some additions which would have been made to 'complete' the edifice in the full sense of the term if the builders had remained to enjoy it."

Referring to a point of a personal nature, as Mr. Roberts terms it in his note on page 96, I am still at a loss to understand Mr. Roberts. In his former treatise he quoted from Pratt's autobiography what purported to be a communication of the Spirit to Parley P. Pratt in 1844, and used the word organize where the text had it reorganize. I invited his attention to this, and now he says: "The copy of Pratt's autobiography in my library is the second edition, 1888, and referring to the passage again, I find was quoted accurately by me, whatever difference may exist between that and any edition the 'Reply' writer may have quoted."

I have before me the edition of 1888, and the word is plainly reorganize in that edition. Mr. Roberts must be mistaken; he did not use the edition of 1888 if his book reads organize. I trust that every one who reads this, if at all possible will get the edition of 1888 and determine who has told the truth in regard to it.

We have careful thoughts for the stranger
And smiles for the sometime guest,
But oft for "our own"
The bitter tone,
Though we love "our own" the best.
Ah! lips with the curve impatient,
Ah! brow with that look of scorn,
'Twere a cruel fate,
Were the night too late
To undo the work of morn.

The Waters of Life.

The soft flowing waters invite thee to come;
All sparkling with beauty they silently run;
Refreshing the trav'ler who seeks the blest shore
Where the waters of life shall flow evermore.

O thou weary stranger, thy murmurings cease;
Saints beckon to thee in the valley of peace,
Where faint, thirsty souls may drink deep from the stream
Which flows from the land where the cherubims beam.

Over rough, stony paths God's people oft tread,
The waters to find which bring life to the dead;
So then weary mortals, ere life's journey is o'er,
The pure waters seek which flow evermore.

Partnership with God in Patience.

The example of God's forbearance and the incentive of his trust help to prepare us for that self-control and patient waiting which are perhaps the most difficult arts of living. Preachers of the strenuous life often forget that for one who dares to act there must be many who are compelled to wait and to endure. It is not the charge which commanders dread for their commands, it is the waiting before the word to charge is given. Action relieves the tension of the nerves and occupies the thought. The example of God's patience is not in itself a sufficient incentive in our time of need. God waits because he knows. He sees the end from the beginning and is never tempted to gather unripe fruit as we so often are. He asks us to be sharers of his patience by the exercise of faith. We can wait because we believe. He trusts us in the partnership of work and waiting and we renounce and have patience because we trust him for the end he promises.

So our patience becomes more than a trial—it becomes an opportunity of faith. If God is patient in what seems the halting progress of his kingdom; if he endures the slights and insults of his children, we whom he has made his fellow workers can not be impatient without refusing him the trust he gives. It is a trial, the hardest trial for all active souls, but to be called to hard and special trial is a proof of special confidence. God honors every man to whom he gives this opportunity of patient faith.

This incentive of our partnership with God lightens the burden of our waiting and arms us to endure. It is easier to be patient for another's sake than for our own. Where we might yield, the thought of one who loves and trusts us and will suffer for our yielding makes us strong. It is well to keep before our minds the thought that God is with us and defends us, but never to the exclusion of the other thought that God depends upon us for his work and patience in the earth. God is patient because he desires repentance and return.—The Congregationalist.

A Word of Caution.

I wish to notify our friends and those of all the missionaries here, not to infringe upon the laws governing the revenue. The custom house detective is on hand when the foreign mail is distributed to open parcels that come through the office, if suspected, even rolls of magazines, if he suspects that they contain anything other than what is made to appear, and should there be anything else within it would make us no end of trouble; and the same with newspapers. No writing should be underneath wrappers of magazines.

Any little article that can be inclosed in an envelope with letter postage on it is all right; otherwise parcels should contain nothing. We want to keep the law, then there will be no trouble. We know the kind-heartedness of the Saints, and how they delight to give pleasant surprises, therefore send this word of caution lest some might forget that we were not under Uncle Sam's lenient ruling.

All is well at the missionary house. Sr. Gilbert came here from the Paumotus three weeks ago quite sick, but soon recovered her normal self again when out of reach of the treacherous sea. It has been playing hide and seek with the islands again—none entirely covered but many partially so. When the sea has once made its path over them it is much easier a second time.

First Primary Quarterlies.

The Executive Committee is pleased to announce that the lessons prepared by your committee for the First Primary, or infant classes, are ready for mailing.

To insure a thorough circulation these lessons are sent out together with the Second Primary, making one quarterly for “Primary Grades.”

Special attention is called to “A Letter to Primary Teachers,” on page 36, which fully explains the object of these additional lessons.

It is hoped they will be found helpful to all for whose help they were prepared.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Sunday-School Work at Des Moines District Reunion.

At the annual reunion of the Des Moines District, held at Rhodes, August 13 to 23, special attention was given to Sunday-school work. The district association in its organization covers the district and all the schools except one are in the association. The district superintendent, W. Christy of Dallas Center, and the other district officers were present during the reunion.

A regular Sunday-school session was held at four o'clock, August 16, the lesson from the Quarterly being taken up. J. A. Gunsolley of the General Association arrived on Sunday morning and took charge of the school during the afternoon. Another session for lesson study was held on Monday at four o'clock, with an hour for teachers' meeting at eight o'clock in the morning. These teachers' meetings were held each morning and were well attended.

Sessions were held each afternoon at four o'clock, Sunday-school and Religio work being taken up alternately. At half past ten on Thursday morning the hour was given for Sunday-school work, an address, "The Mission of the Sunday-school," by Elder J. F. Mintun, being the main feature. A paper on the use of the Quarterly in school, followed by a general discussion, was of interest. The regular lesson from the Quarterly was taken up on Sunday, August 23, at four o'clock, and in the review Superintendent Gunsolley placed the following outline on the blackboard, using the golden text, "Children, obey your parents," as the foundation:

Children Servants All	}	Obey Love	{	Parents Masters God
-----------------------------	---	--------------	---	---------------------------

Reading this forward with the word obey and reading it backward with the word love, each makes good reading.

A fair representation of the Sunday-school workers of the district was present and all have a greater love and a better understanding for the work than ever before. The Home Class work was especially mentioned and determined efforts will be made to extend the study to the isolated ones. A number of the young people who have only been timid local workers manifested such an interest and had the field of Sunday-school work so enlarged before them that they will become active district workers.

This was the first visit of J. A. Gunsolley to this district for Church work and he expressed himself as pleased. All at the camp enjoyed his presence and he was kept busy with Sunday-school and Religio work. The earnestness which he has for the work seems to go from him to others, when he comes in contact with them.

The next Sunday-school convention will be held at Runnells, in February, at the time of the convening of the district conference.

A. A. REAMS.

"Zion's Praises."

Sunday-school workers will be pleased to learn that the song-book will soon be in the hands of the printer, and our Business Manager promises to have it on sale by the first of the year. A committee, consisting of Srs. A. Anderson, V. Blair, May White, Vida Smith, and the writer have made a selection of what they consider the very best songs out of dozens of books furnished them. These, together with a number of original pieces, will form a book of over two hundred songs, and we believe will be recognized as one of the very best Sunday-school song-books published, from the fact that it will contain the very best songs of a great number of books.

In the course of their work the committee met with some surprises—and some disappointments. We were surprised at the very high price asked for permission to publish copyrighted pieces—prices away beyond our reach, and it seemed for a time that we would hardly be able to surmount this obstacle, but our Business Manager went at it and hammered prices down till most of the pieces desired were within our reach.

We were surprised, too, when we learned that the older pieces that we expected to get almost free were the highest. After being reduced to the very lowest price, "When He Cometh" is held at twenty-five dollars. "Jesus Loves Even Me," "Sweet Peace, the Gift of God's Love," "True Hearted, Whole Hearted," "Take Time to be Holy," and "Wonderful Words of Life," are each held at twenty-five dollars. A few other good pieces, such as "The Story of His Love," "Tenderly Guide Us," "Are Your Windows Open," "I will Never Leave You," "Through the Valley," "Sunshine in my Soul," and "Leaning on the Everlasting Arms," are held at from ten to twenty dollars each, and are therefore beyond our reach unless some one is sufficiently in love with these songs to donate the price required to have them in our book. These pieces are held at a high price because they are popular. In place of these, however, we have some new pieces that cost us but little because they are little known, but which we believe will be just as popular as these older ones.

We were disappointed in being refused permission to publish any songs controlled by E. O. Excel or James McGranaham at any price. To offset this we received permission from Mrs. C. E. Rounsefell, author of that beautiful piece, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," at our own price. She also sent us the manuscript of a new piece by her which she says she felt impressed to let us have to secure the copyright. It is a beautiful piece. This indicates the spirit of this lady and may account for the soul in her music.

The committee feel that they have been blessed in their work and we hope the book that we have all waited for so long will soon be in our hands and will be satisfactory.

DOW CITY, Iowa, September 13.

Editors Herald: I feel thankful for the gospel committed to men in these latter days and the influence by which it is felt and made known among the children of men.

I can say God is no respecter of persons, but in every age of the world he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him. I am glad of this fact.

Your brother,

FRANK CASE.

BEAVER, Missouri, September 8.

Dear Herald: I have been traveling with Elder A. M. Baker for the past two months or more, and while with him I have learned more fully the duty which has devolved upon me.

Since leaving Pomona we went to Cookville, but were not able to do much there, so we went to Eldridge where the debate was held between Elder H. Sparling and William Martin of the Campbellite Church. We held meetings there for a week with good attendance and fair interest. Some seem to believe that ours is the true church, but, for popularity and praise of men, they seem to lack the courage to obey. There are some honest-hearted people there who, if they arrive at the proper understanding of our position, will step forth in obedience; but it seems that Satan has a stronghold in that locality. He is never found sleeping. While there we were kindly cared for by Bro. and Sr. Hollandsworth, and their son Allen. We certainly appreciate their hospitality.

From there we went to Grovesprings, where we found the Saints looking forward to our coming conference and reunion. We held a three-day meeting about twelve miles east of this place. There are some here who will be baptized during our reunion, I think.

Then we made our way to Norwood, where we parted company for a little while, Bro. Baker going home and the writer coming to this place. Here I find Elder P. W. Premo laboring under very trying circumstances, but holding the fort as best he can and providing for his family. He has opened the work in two new places and if circumstances will permit he will undoubtedly be the means of starting a branch at Roy. Bro. Premo is an earnest worker, ever on the alert for an opportunity to do some preaching.

From here I will go to Springfield, where I expect to engage in manual labor for a while. I am anxious to see the gospel wheel roll on.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,
Yours in the one faith,
P. T. PLUMB.

ISLAND OF ARUTUA, June 29.

Editors Herald: We feel that we ought to apprise you of our movements occasionally, even though we are far away in these islands; not that our work is of very great consequence, but that you have a right to know what we are doing. After the storm at Hikueru, wife and I were compelled by force of circumstances to remain in Tahiti until toward the last of May. During this time we labored in Papeete and Tiona, and attended the mission conference. I also read the entire manuscript of the Doctrine and Covenants with Bro. Burton, correcting it to some extent.

After conference we waited quite a while for a vessel coming to the Tuamotus and finally succeeded in getting one by paying a big price for our passage. We stopped one day on the way up in Makatea, and we were grieved to see their desolate condition; almost all of their houses had been wrecked by the high seas; the insects were almost killing their cocoanuts, and they were without flour and almost all other provisions.

While we were ashore they gave us our dinner, which consisted of fried fish without salt, and boiled pumpkin, and coconut water to drink.

At Kaukura we stopped over Sunday, and they were about in the same condition, and it was as hard for them to find us something to eat as it was in Makatea. Although this island was not hurt much by the storm, the insects were damaging some portions of their cocoanut groves very badly, so the governor informed me.

Our destination was Niau, where we landed safely after some pretty rough weather which caused Sr. Gilbert considerable sickness and misery. She gets worse, it seems, every trip we make.

During our stay at Niau, which was five weeks, we held a meeting of some kind every night except Saturday. Just to give you some idea of what we do all the time, I will give you our program for one week: Sunday morning at seven o'clock, preaching. Ten in the forenoon, preaching again, followed immediately by the Sunday-school. Three in the afternoon, prayer and testimony meeting. Seven in the evening, preaching followed by the Religio, which wound up the services of the day. Monday evening, priesthood meeting, which is very important, and, I believe, great good will result, and has already resulted from it. Tuesday evening, prayer-meeting. Wednesday morning at seven o'clock, preaching; in the evening, singing. At this time we would teach them new songs by singing them over and over till they would learn them by rote, which was indeed very tedious. Thursday, three in the afternoon, sisters' meeting, seven in the evening, Sunday-school teachers' meeting. This is having a telling effect upon the Sunday-school, and they are making marked progress. Friday evening, prayer and testimony meeting. This is the week's program. I generally preach at ten o'clock, Sunday and Wednesday mornings. Sr. Gilbert leads the sisters' meetings, and assists in the teachers' meetings and Sunday-school.

So you may see that we are very busy all the time. The program differs somewhat on different islands, but it is pretty much the same.

We came to Arutua June 15, stopping four days at Apataki on the way, and preached three times for them on Sunday. Some time ago their church was demolished, together with several other houses, by a whirlwind and they have not yet finished rebuilding it. We met a boat there that was bringing our American mail, which was the first we had heard from the General Conference. Here at Arutua my wife was sick for two weeks as a result of the trip from Niau, which was on a small boat. They do churn one up in great shape; just ask Bro. Devore how it is, for we came on the same little boat that he and I made the same trip on from Niau to Apataki nearly ten years ago.

Sr. Gilbert will either have to go to Papeete and stay while I make the rounds of the islands, or we will have to return very soon to America. Sometimes we have to put up with some very rough fare and also rough usage.

Even since we have been here on Arutua we have had another hard blow; not so bad, however, as at Hikueru, but so hard that it drove the sea up onto the land and flooded our house and we had to wade out and carry all our things up to higher ground, where we stayed for three days in a little temporary tent made of cocoanut leaves. We, who had had our nerves already racked at Hikueru, spent some sleepless nights and anxious days in spite of our belief that no harm would befall us. Sometimes we think if we keep on at this rate, we will be able to tell tales of peril by sea with brother Paul of old. We will be perfectly satisfied though if we never come up to him in that line, and are willing for him to continue to hold the cup. The storm has about blown itself out now, and we are back in our house again, which is a thatch house.

The people are in poor circumstances here at present. There is only one little spot left where their trees are bearing, the rest being damaged or killed entirely by the insects. Diving for the pearl-shell is their only means for a living, and the present condition and prospect throughout the group is anything but encouraging.

The moral status is not encouraging either, although with our vigorous stirring them up on the marriage relation, they are seemingly trying to make amends, but how effectual it will be, time alone will tell. Personally, I think that unless they speedily do away with their adultery and other immoral practices, they will, in time, be all swept away from off these islands. They have been taught the gospel now for a long time, and they know better; and if they do not do better they must expect to be swept away by the judgments that are coming upon the earth. I come down pretty firm and hard on them sometimes along this line, and they acknowledge that what I say is true, but whether they will ever be able to break away from their old customs or not, under the present conditions, is a question. Otherwise they are a good people, and have many admirable qualities. I think, however, that the Lord will be very lenient, and have great mercy, else our labor here would be in vain. There are noble ones among them, which gives us courage to go on.

In hope of Zion's day, I am your brother,
J. W. GILBERT.

WISEMAN, Arkansas, September 10.

Editors Herald: I came here about a year ago. I can not read or write, but I can work and pray. I have sold three copies of the Book of Mormon and scattered a dollar's worth of tracts.

I take the HERALD. I carry it around with me and get the folks (whoever I can, old or young) to read for me.

I have no home. I came here by request, to my sons, but they oppose the gospel so strongly, I can not stay with them; they went so far as to order my HERALD stopped and to forbid the neighbors reading for me.

I had been trying to get some one to come here and preach, and after writing a good many letters, I learned of Bro. D. R. Baldwin and he came in person in answer to my first letter to him. He has been preaching since the 20th of August. The schoolhouse will not hold the people that come to hear. Many say he is the greatest preacher they ever heard, and some are talking about being baptized.

On Saturday night he preached an hour and a half on the Book of Mormon; the house was crowded, and the doors and windows were full, and more around that could not see his charts; the order was first-class. When he stopped a Campbellite preacher begged privilege to speak, and with his abuse and misrepresentation he stampeded the congregation in less than two minutes.

To-night is our last meeting. I do hope he will come back here this fall. The joy I have had from the influence of the Spirit while he has been preaching has paid me fourfold for all the sacrifice I have made and for all the sport that has been made of me. I am going to keep on working. Pray for me that I may do good work.

Your brother,

W. H. BOLES.

GOREVILLE, Illinois, September 10.

Editors Herald: The serious illness of my father has made it necessary for me to leave my field of appointment, Minnesota, for a time. How long I may have to remain away, I can not tell with certainty, but I hope not very long.

In the meantime I trust the brethren under general appointment will make every reasonable endeavor to push the work into new fields, and in this work I hope they will be assisted by the local workers, both ministers and members, throughout the State.

In some places and in some respects the outlook grows a little brighter, but diligent and faithful effort will be necessary to hold the ground already gained, and also to capture new fields from the enemy.

There may be "giants" in the enemy's country, but we are not "as grasshoppers" compared to them, and a few faithful Joshuas and Calebs can, with the help of the Lord, vanquish the enemy and capture the land and annex it to Zion's borders.

Let there be a general advance all along the line. Let every soldier for Christ put on "the whole armor of God" and faithfully perform his or her duty, and the victory is sure.

May Zion's borders be enlarged, and may her peace increase. May her gates be gates of "righteousness" and "praise" until that which is written shall be fulfilled, namely, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in."—Psalm 24: 9.

In gospel bonds,

T. C. KELLEY.

DEKALB, Illinois, September 10.

Saints' Herald: Having so arranged we left our home at Plano, July 9, for the purpose of touring Northern Wisconsin District in company with the district president, A. V. Closson, in the interest of Church work. On our way north we stopped at Marengo, Illinois, from the 9th to the 14th, enjoying the hospitality of the veteran Saints, Bro. and Sr. David Brand. Bro. Brand is in his eighty-ninth year, his wife eighty-two; they are as active as are most people at fifty, as they have cared for four gardens the present year, Bro. Brand cultivating the land while his good wife marketed the proceeds of his labor. The Lord's cause received its share of the proceeds of the toil of these faithful soldiers of the cross in the shape of a ten-dollar bill. We held several services in their cottage home, where we tried to tell the way of life to a few hearers. The few seemed interested.

We reached the East Delavan, Wisconsin, Saints, July 14, where we remained until the 20th of the month. This is the home of the missionaries, W. A. McDowell, in charge of the Southern Wisconsin District, Henry Southwick, at present in charge of the branch at that place, and Joshua T. Hackett. The work seemed in fair condition, and it was a real pleasure and comfort to join the Saints in the worship of God in their neat chapel, located a little over a mile from the beautiful Lake Geneva, through whose clear waters many of the membership of the East Delavan Branch were inducted into the church of Christ on earth. Lake Geneva is noted among the world's rich people as a beautiful watering-place, where artistic skill has transformed the beauties of nature into an earthly paradise; but in heaven Lake Geneva has a record that will never be dimmed by the power of time, for many precious souls have had their sins washed away in its clear blue waters, and their names inscribed in the book of life.

We reached Valley Junction, Wisconsin, on the evening of the 20th of July. We were made welcome at the home of Bro. and Sr. A. H. Whiteaker. Bro. Whiteaker is one of the live missionaries of Northern Wisconsin, but we found him very busy enlarging his house by elevating it another story heavenward. The family and their house seem to be moving in the same direction. Met friends at the Junction whom I had known thirty-three years ago, and some who heard me make my first attempt to preach the gospel in the home of "Aunt Fanny Green," in Vernon County, Wisconsin, thirty-three years ago last February. Life's shadow has lengthened since then, and the sun of our earthly day is hastening towards its setting. We met some excellent Saints at Valley Junction whose kindness we hope to always hold in pleasant memory. Bro. A. V. Closson and the writer held services in the Saints' chapel at the Junction until the 26th of July to good audiences.

On the 27th we went to Necedah, where we were met by some of the brethren of the Searles Prairie Branch, who conveyed us to the home of Bro. John Moore, ten miles out in the country. Here we had the good fortune to meet the "Jots by the Wayside" man, preaching the gospel in a country schoolhouse to people who seemed interested in something: whether it was in the man or in what he was saying we could not then determine, but have since concluded that they were interested in the speaker and in the things spoken, because he baptized some of those people since then. Bro. Chatburn is a good missionary worker who only enjoys himself on the firing line.

After filling a few appointments and doing other work imposed upon us by action of the district conference, Bro. Closson and the writer returned to Valley Junction, where after filling two appointments, we took train for Porcupine, arriving there on the evening of August 1.

While at Porcupine we held meetings in the Saints' chapel up to August 9. Bro. Closson baptized two while there. The attendance upon the meetings was very good, considering that it was harvest-time. Bro. Livingstone, Hooker, Longsdorf, Ganoe, and Shedd, with many others, including the sisters, deserve the credit of having made the name of Latter Day Saint honorable in that country by upright living before the world. The Spirit of the Lord is with the workers at Porcupine.

Bro. Orrin Ganoe conveyed us to Orio on Sunday morning, August 9, a distance of seventeen miles. We held two meetings at this point, one a preaching meeting, and the other a sacrament and social service. While at this place we were kindly entertained by Bro. and Sr. Lafferty.

On the 11th of August Bro. Jasper Lawrence conveyed us by team to his home near Spring Valley, Wisconsin, where Bro. Closson left me for other points on the 17th. I remained at Bro. Lawrence's until the 19th, then took train for North Freedom, Wisconsin, my former home. Bro. Closson baptized two more precious souls while at Spring Valley. We held a few meetings in the pleasant home of Bro. Lawrence, but the greater number of services were held in the town hall at Spring Valley. Very little interest was shown by the outside world in the meetings held in the hall. Bro. and Sr. Lawrence did their part of the work nobly and may the dear Lord ever bless them in their efforts to advance his kingdom.

Reached North Freedom on the 19th, stopping at the home of Bro. and Sr. Hackett, whose hospitable home I had shared before with dear friends long since gone to rest. We reached the reunion grounds near Williams Bay on the afternoon of August 22, in company with Brn. T. W. Chatburn and J. B. Wildermuth, who joined us at Madison.

The reunion was good; but we will let others sing its praises who possess a more competent vocabulary than does the writer.

Came to Chicago on the last day of August, where I remained until September 2, being engaged upon a matter submitted to the president of the mission and the writer.

I reached home on the the 3d inst., remaining at Plano over Sunday, then came to Dekalb to join Bro. F. G. Pitt, district president, in an effort here. The Lord willing, we expect to join Bro. C. H. Burr the fore part of next week in a missionary effort at Batavia, Illinois, then on to Plano and Sandwich to aid the brethren in local Church work until district conference convenes September 26.

We hope that all of the missionaries under General Conference appointments, laboring in Wisconsin and Northeastern Illinois, will have their quarterly reports in the hands of the writer as early as the 3d of October. Plano, Illinois, is our mission address. We hope to continue until the end.

In bonds,

F. M. COOPER.

CHICAGO, Illinois, September 11.

Editors Herald: The missionary in charge has come and gone, but gave us good service while with us, excellent sermons, full of practical suggestion and thought.

Friday, August 21, in company with him and a dozen of the Chicago Saints we boarded the Northwestern train for Williams Bay and the Southern Wisconsin reunion.

Of all the good things enjoyed at that time and place we will not try a detail. The weather, however, was hardly an indication or basis for judgment, as we struck a rainy season. The damp kind of weather predominated, although we enjoyed some days of sunshine. But the "sunshine in the soul" was of an almost continuous character. Bad weather hindered large attendance of strangers, but a "reunion" in its best sense, was certainly had, and that consists largely, very largely, in being at the place where God and good Saints meet.

We were made happy by the many good things we participated in. Not only was it a reunion for us with many of the western brethren of the ministry whose acquaintance had been of a limited sort, at General Conference, etc., but of brethren and sisters belonging to the Southern Wisconsin District whom we had never before seen or met, and whom to know is to respect and love. Their kind reception and generous provision for all our wants will be a hard thing to obliterate from our memory.

The location is an ideal one, overlooking the beautiful Lake Geneva whose shores have been made to present a picture which nature and art seldom excel. With its beautiful grounds and costly mansions of Chicago, Milwaukee, and other city millionaires, and covered with sailing and steam yachts and crafts, this beautiful inland gem of a sea presented a constant picture of enjoyment to the lover of the beautiful,

"Where every prospect pleases,
And only man is vile."

The preaching and social services were of a character to comfort, instruct, and profitably warn us who become careless at times and fail properly to sense all that a beneficent and loving heavenly Parent has vouchsafed to his children, and more especially those who are called to be children of his covenant and heirs by adoption into a nearer association with him than has been privileged to former generations of men. Elders Heman C. Smith, McDowell, Robinson, F. G. Pitt, the "jot" man, F. M. Cooper, and many others of the missionary and local force of elders from all parts of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin Districts were present and all added to the social and spiritual success of the meetings.

I do not want to omit mention of the fine Religio entertainment gotten up by the young people of that important arm of our service. It was excellent, and a credit to the Church and to all concerned; and all we could say of that entertainment we desire to repeat and affirm concerning the Daughters of Zion or mothers' meeting to which all were invited. Those who did not attend, missed something that every family of Saints ought to hear and know. Southern Wisconsin evidently has some sisters who are trying to learn what the terms "mother" and "wife" ought to mean to every Latter Day Saint.

The missionary in charge, Bro. Heman C. Smith, was at his best, so far as our experience goes. His preaching and counsel was of a godly and high character, and excellent discourse generally characterized the pulpit efforts.

A visit to the scene of operations of J. J. Strang, at Voree, Wisconsin, which is a lovely country and a place where Saints might have founded a permanent home and an honored name had not the success of the enemy of the first Eden had its repetition in our day, was among the privileges of the Wisconsin visit.

The great Yerkes Observatory with its huge telescope, situated on or near Lake Geneva and about three miles from our "camp," and the Saturday afternoon lecture which we were privileged to hear, were also among the good things that fell to our lot.

Last, but not least, a lovely day and sail of thirty-five miles around beautiful Lake Geneva, the day following the close of the reunion, completed the series of enjoyment and contrast to the sights and sounds and discomforts of a great city.

Monday afternoon, leaving Williams Bay, in company with Bro. Heman Smith, we came to Elgin by train, from there by trolley line to Batavia, stopping over night at the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. Joseph Rodger, where we were royally entertained. Made calls the following day upon Bro. and Sr. Blakeslee and the family of Sr. McDonald. Found an interest remaining in that place in the latter-day work which needs the fostering attention and care of some wise missionary effort.

Home again, and glad to meet the unfortunate, but not less faithful ones whose duties compel their presence in the city and absence from such pleasant and profitable associations as the Southern Wisconsin reunion.

We shall be very glad to reinstall our housekeeper, whose home coming from the East we expect next week.

M. H. BOND.

LOS ANGELES, California, September 10.

Editors Herald: A word of explanation as to my failure to reach my mission ere this. So desirous was I to execute the work outlined by the Twelve and Presidency, that I canceled engagements in Western Iowa and Nebraska, to the disappointment of very dear friends, and hastened home, praying in the meantime that God would open the way for a faithful prosecution of my work. Disappointments came thick and fast. I was physically prostrated ere I reached home; it took me weeks to rally from this. Financial embarrassment now confronted me. Communications to those who could assist in this elicited no response. I did what I could, relieving the pressure somewhat, only to have my hopes dashed to the ground by a neighbor boy feeding ice to our baby, causing such a violent illness that he is only slightly improved now. This occurred on the 19th of July. In the meantime, together with others of the missionary force of the district, including Brn. Peak, Carmichael, Clapp, Earl, and Dana, I contracted a severe cold which, as in the case of Bro. Earl, culminated in pneumonia. Being still weak from my previous attack, I was not in a position to withstand the latter and I am now physically depleted.

However, I have this consolation, I have done the best I could. God does not demand the impossible. When he thinks I should go to my mission he can and will open the way. Until then I can only patiently wait.

I make this explanation that the Saints in Oregon and elsewhere may be apprised of conditions as they really are.

Very truly yours,
T. W. WILLIAMS.

BUXTON, Iowa, September 10.

Editors Herald: I called on the Saints at Centerville about July 10; found a few earnest, wide-awake Saints. There has been a branch there for a number of years, but as they did not have a building of their own, the work has not reached the people as they desired it should. Centerville is a city of about three thousand inhabitants and is the county-seat of Appanoose County. Early this spring a golden opportunity presented itself and the Saints, though few in number, were not slow to see it, and by united effort bought the old Christian church, a fine brick building, forty by sixty feet, in one of the best locations in the city. I had the pleasure of preaching the first sermon in it. I stayed with them until August 9, and made many friends for the work. I made a personal canvass of the city, and left preaching notices at the majority of the homes. It was quite hard to reach the people, as Evangelist Sunday had just closed a remarkable revival where eight hundred and fifty had professed conversion.

The Saints got a word of comfort from General Drake and a check for one hundred dollars. He informed Bro. Archibald and others that Joseph and Hyrum Smith used to stop at his father's house and that they were honest, and gentlemen in every respect, and that their murder was one of the darkest crimes ever thrust upon the American people.

On August 11 I arrived at Buxton. This is a new coal town, only two years old, and has about fifteen hundred inhabitants, located nine miles north of Albia, Monroe County. This is an entirely new opening. I preached the first sermon in this part of the country August 11, and closed with a full house on the evening of September 6. I baptized five precious souls and feel quite sure there are more to follow. We have removed mountains of prejudice and made many good friends. This is the home of Bro. Nathan Miller, who has with his family stood firmly by me, and he will keep up a regular appointment here.

I will commence a series of meetings two miles east of Lovilla on Tuesday evening. I have arranged to open the work in several new places as fast as I can. I think the harvest is ripe in this section of country, and with the assistance of Bro. Miller, who has a team of horses that has long been set apart for missionary work, we look for the spread of the gospel.

ALLIANCE, Nebraska, September 10.

Editors Herald: As per previous letter, we set up tent in Deadwood and held forth there ten days with fair audiences and some interest. Some of our audiences said they believed we had the truth.

From there we went to Spearfish and held a ten-day meeting. Congregation small, though a few became interested. One man said he would obey the gospel when we come back. Here Bro. J. W. Morgan visited us from Wyoming and favored us with three grand sermons which were a treat indeed.

From Spearfish we went to Belmont, Nebraska. Visited Evergreen Branch, preached to them, and baptized a brother, Matthew Diehl.

Came here, set up tent, and held our first services last night. Congregation small. We expect to continue here till the sixteenth and then go to reunion at Minatare, Nebraska. That will end the campaign with tent for this year, and Bro. J. L. Detrick and I will separate, I suppose. I shall miss him very much.

Following are the names of those who contributed to the tent fund: Ora McClain, $3; Carrie McClain, $10; Dr. Grantz, 50 cents; A. Price, 45 cents; Dr. Howe, 50 cents; J. Hattenbach, 50 cents; W. J. Morgan, 25 cents; A. B. Ludig, $5; Gus Kellen, 25 cents; Zipp Shoe Company, $1; M. J. Werthimer, 50 cents; Zoellner Brothers, 50 cents; Sam. Swartzwald, 50 cents; H. O. Bennett, 50 cents; J. L. Detrick, $5; C. W. Prettyman, $5; S. E. McClain, $5; J. Hogaith, 25 cents; George Ayer, $1; Fishel's Bazaar, 30 cents; American National Bank, $1; Arnold Brothers, $1; Rogers and Son, $1; Fish and Hunter, $1; Wilcox Company, 50 cents; J. Hines, 50 cents; Black Hills Steam Laundry, 50 cents; L. Gergard, 50 cents; Harry Munard, 30 cents; Mrs. Crain, 25 cents; H. Cohen, 25 cents; Mrs. Buckman, 25 cents; Joseph L. Benson, $5; Peter Lungren, $1.40; T. T. Duncan, $5; L. Lachapelle, $5.50; Irwin Mengel, $7; John Diehl, $1; Matthew Diehl, 50 cents; G. A. Heywood, $1; John Cairne, $1; Samuel Twombly, 50 cents; R. O. Fellows, 25 cents; W. H. Hutchinson, 25 cents; Getts and Martermar, 25 cents; O. Nowak, 25 cents; William Glassie, 25 cents; M. Foshery, 25 cents; unknown, $1.55; total, $83.

July 24, paid out for tent, $70.20; August 5, freight on tent, $7.10; August 22, freight on tent, $2; August 31, freight on tent to Alliance, $5.55; total $84.85.

It is due to Sr. Carrie McClain to say that had it not been for her very determined efforts we might not have obtained the tent.

We feel very thankful to all the Saints and friends that contributed to the tent fund. May God bless you all.

In hope of eternal life,

C. W. PRETTYMAN.

DES MOINES, Iowa, September 10.

Dear Herald: Sunday, September 6, was another memorable day for the Church in this city. The Sunday-school at ten o'clock in the morning was especially good; our attendance is nearing the one hundred mark. At eleven o'clock the sacrament was administered to a large congregation of Saints, and the sermon following was by Elder S. F. Cushman. During the afternoon several were doing missionary work in the city, some distributing tracts, and the sisters calling on the Saints in the interests of the Sunday-school and Religio work.

At six o'clock in the evening we gathered at the water and seven precious souls were baptized, Elder J. F. Mintun officiating. At the evening service, after the sermon, these newborn children in the kingdom of God were confirmed members of the body of Christ, known among men as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, under the hands of Elders Cushman and Mintun. Four of the new members are heads of families and the other three members of our intermediate class in the Sunday-school. One little girl was eight years old on Friday.

The Religio met at half past six in the evening and was largely attended, it being prayer service. A special part of the service was that several had been asked to testify of their experiences in the Church.

One aged sister, Grandma Chubbic, was present. Her hair is silvered by the frosts of eighty-five winters, and for twenty-two years she has testified to the divinity of the latter-day work, and that in this Church she had found rest, after having membership in three other Churches. Her faltering voice was remarkably strong on this occasion, and all listened attentively as she spoke and bore her faithful testimony, standing as she is, in the very sunset of life.

Another sister related that in her seeking for salvation the true gospel was revealed to her in all its fullness, that she was made to understand the gospel perfectly as it is recorded in the New Testament. She at once began a search among the Churches of her acquaintance to find the gospel which had been revealed to her. She almost gave up her search in despair, when by chance she related to a lady friend the kind of a gospel she was looking for. The lady said, "We have that gospel,—faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands, with the gifts and blessings." The sister said, "What Church is yours?" "The Latter Day Saints," was the reply, and this was the first time she had ever heard that name. She went and heard a Latter Day Saint preacher and recognizing the gospel which had been revealed to her, she soon obeyed. As she sat down Elder Mintun arose, and under the influence of the Spirit of God he exhorted her to faithfulness, under promise of special blessings.

The debate between Elder Mintun and Elder W. P. Houbuslaben of the Church of God began on Tuesday evening. Elder Mintun affirms the divinity of our Church for five nights, two alternate thirty-minute speeches each session. Elder Houbuslaben affirms the divinity of his Church for five sessions. The weather has interfered some with the debate. A good-sized audience has attended each night. At the beginning each speaker stated that he was seeking after truth. Elder Houbuslaben is a representative of and the founder of the Church of God. We believe that this is the first time that any of our elders have met the elders of this faith. The Saints here are attending the debate very regularly and are listening attentively to each speaker in his arguments. The debate will be the means of extending a knowledge of our faith and all are hopeful that much good will be accomplished.

In gospel bonds,
A. A. REAMS.

Extracts from Letters.

A. M. Chase, Salt Lake City, Utah, September 15: "By advice of our missionary in charge we have taken up our abode here for the winter. Had quite a successful series of street meetings and reunion at Provo. We expect to do some street preaching here soon."

Bro. S. F. Cushman on the nineteenth instant wrote from Des Moines, Iowa, concerning the debate between Bro. Mintun and W. P. Halbesleben. Bro. Cushman was pleased with the outcome and spoke well of the work of Brn. Mintun, W. E. Peak, C. Scott, T. W. Williams, and H. C. Smith in debate. He had heard each at various times. He wrote: "May God bless these men and others of like qualifications with opportunities to use their talents in forensic defense of his cause. No man can accuse me of covetousness in the ordinary sense, but I stand self-accused of coveting ability to speak in behalf of this work like these men can. But I must not forget that these men were natural branches or else grafted in when young and sappy; but poor me was a gnarled old stick that came near dying during and since the grafting process. One thing I am sure of, however, and that is, I am in lively sympathy (which means suffering with) with all other old grafts. May the Lord have mercy on us, and the brethren charity for us, and the sisters speak as well of us as they can."

Bishop Thomas Taylor of the English Mission writes, September 13, to Bishop Kelley touching the visit of President Joseph Smith to that country as follows: "In reply to your query in regard to 'effect' of President Joseph Smith's visit to this country, we are happy to say the 'effect' on the Saints is remarkably good. In all places it is strengthening the confidence of the brethren and sisters. In many cases brethren whose faith and confidence was shaken by the actions of some who came years ago, and have, in consequence, been in the background, have renewed their energies and are coming to the front again. The straightforward and manly manner in which Bro. Joseph and Bro. R. C. Evans have met the Saints has won for them golden opinions everywhere they have visited. The general regret is that their stay is short. Personally we regret President Smith did not visit us years ago. We feel sure better results would have followed mission work here. From the standpoint of the 'effects' of President Smith's visit upon 'outsiders' we are not in a position to judge. We have not been able to 'draw the people' out in large numbers to hear the brethren. Those who have given their ear can not any longer remain in doubt as to polygamy, etc., and true Latter Day Saints. Bro. Joseph has put it so plainly that all who care to can understand. No doubt much prejudice has been removed from the public mind, the effects of which will appear later on—at least we hope so. Our conference at Leeds was a good and enjoyable time, just what the "Senior Editor" of HERALD wrote of it. We are glad to report baptisms in several parts lately, eight in Birmingham."

Conference Minutes.

Sheffield.—The semiannual district conference convened in the Saints' meeting-room, Ada Street, off Springvale Road, Sheffield, July 11 and 12, 1903, Elder W. H. Greenwood in the chair, J. Roberts, clerk. Spiritual reports of branches were read. Ministry reporting: Elders J. Austin, C. Cousins, S. Holmes, Sr., S. Platts, J. E. Roberts, and J. Naylor; Priests H. Taylor, J. Holmes, G. H. Holmes, and R. Rallings. The negligence of the Clay Cross Branch in not reporting spiritually was left to the district president to inquire into and deal with. Committee on rules was continued to complete their work and report to next conference. Resolved that we sustain all Church authorities by our faith, means, and prayers. Sunday morning the meeting was addressed by several of the brethren, and a profitable time was spent. Preaching in the evening by Elder J. Austin. The conference then adjourned to meet at call of president.

Kewanee.—District conference convened at Millersburg, September 5, 1903. Apostle Heman C. Smith was chosen to preside over the conference, with J. S. Patterson to assist. J. L. Terry was chosen secretary, with F. A. Russell to assist. Bishop's agent reported: On hand and received, $177.10; expended, $175.30; balance, $1.80. Branches reporting: Canton 79, White Eagle 24, Joy 35, Kewanee 126, Millersburg 75, Peoria 57. The committee appointed at the February conference to investigate the title of the Henderson Grove church, also the condition of the cemetery there, reported that the title was vested in the Church and that they had through the wishes and advice of the Saints at Henderson Grove and permission of Bishop E. L. Kelley sold the church to Thomas Junk for $200. The cemetery was reported in bad condition, as to fence and the graves, but Lewis Tryon had promised to renew the fence. The report of the committee was accepted and their action in regard to selling the Henderson Grove church approved. The Henderson Grove Branch was disorganized and district secretary instructed to issue letters of removal to Henderson Grove Saints. Ministry reporting: Elders M. D. Murdock, J. S. Patterson, Edward Rannie, Dale S. Holmes, F. A. Russell, H. E. Moler, David S. Holmes, J. W. Terry, Henry Holmes, and J. L. Terry; Priests Oscar Harter, W. P. Terry, and Mordica McC. Terry; Teachers Charles Holmes, J. H. Allen, J. C. Epperly, C. M. Duncan, and Melvin Holmes. Preaching by Heman C. Smith, H. E. Moler, and F. A. Russell. Adjourned to meet at Kewanee, Illinois, on the first Saturday in February, 1904, 10.30 a. m.

Appointment of Bishop's Agent.

NOVA SCOTIA DISTRICT.

It is with sadness and regret that we are called upon to chronicle the death of Bro. Robert Newcomb of Delhaven, Bishop's agent in and for the Nova Scotia District. Bro. Newcomb has performed a good work and has passed to a goodly reward. The same faithful services that commended him upon this side will commend him on the other. We trust that the Lord will remember and comfort and bless the family of Bro. Newcomb and also the Saints in Nova Scotia in their loss.

In behalf of the Bishopric and at the request of many of the Saints in Nova Scotia, we hereby appoint as Bishop's agent in and for the territory of Nova Scotia, Sr. Lois G. Johnson of Williamsdale, Cumberland County, Nova Scotia, who will receive and receipt for all tithes and offerings in said territory in behalf of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. We commend Sr. Johnson to the Saints and trust that each and all will cheerfully and heartily aid and sustain her in her work.

In behalf of the Bishopric, I am,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, September 16, 1903.

Eureka.

A brother in remitting for Graceland writes: "I have been a reader of the HERALD for fifteen years, and during that time have heard many a plea for Graceland and the Home, from your pen and others, and have heard many remarks like this: 'I hardly ever take up the HERALD but what I see something about money for Graceland or the Home; it makes me tired or irritates me.' And not wishing to have brothers and sisters irritated unnecessarily, have been thinking how to prevent the malady, and I believe I have found a sure cure, and that is to be a contributor to their [Graceland and Saints' Home] support, and thereby remove the cause of irritation. I would like to have an interest in all things that pertain to this latter-day work." The brother is on the road that leadeth to blessings and eternal life, and in harmony with Doctrine and Covenants 125: 16. May many others adopt his wise and practical action!

In bonds,
ROBT. M. ELVIN.

Missionary Release.

At his request William Lewis is released from missionary appointment, the release to take effect October 1. Those in the Far West District, where he has been laboring, will take note. He leaves the field to go into business.

FRED'K M. SMITH,
For the First Presidency.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Kentucky and Tennessee District, Greeting: When I received my appointment as Bishop's agent there was only $12 on hand; since then I have been called to help the poor to the amount of $20. Hence there is a shortage in the funds, as I have received nothing since. Saints, can we afford to withhold our substance when there is not a sufficiency for the Lord's poor? All who are interested in Zion's redemption please read Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2, also 102: 2, and act accordingly. In the language of our late Bishop's agent, "Every true Latter Day Saint should have his name on the Bishop's books, either as a receiver or a contributor." That means much. I hope to be able to visit all the branches in the district this fall and winter, and would like to enroll the name of every Saint if only to the amount of five cents. Let us be equal in "temporal things" that we may be equal in "spiritual things." Those who desire may send their tithes and offerings to my address and I will receipt for same. Yours in the hope of Zion's temporal redemption, J. R. McClain, Bishop's agent. Box 202, Fulton, Kentucky. September 12, 1903.

Notices.

All Saints of the former Fruit Branch in Colorado who desire letters of removal may obtain the same by addressing A. E. Tabor, Wray, Colorado. J. W. Morgan, district president, 725 East Dale Street, Colorado Springs, Colorado.

To the Saints of the New York District: By reason of other duties imposed I find myself unable to fill the appointment made last spring. While I regret very much to disappoint you, I assure you it would have been a pleasure to me to have performed gospel labor in your midst. May the Lord bless you all with his loving Spirit and supply you with a more proficient gospel laborer. In fond remembrance of past association, I remain, your brother, A. H. Parsons. Holden, Missouri, September 14, 1903.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Nodaway, Missouri, District, meets with the Sweet Home Branch near Ravenwood, Missouri, on Saturday, October 3, at 10 a. m. A full attendance is desired. E. S. Fannon, district president.

The Southern Nebraska District conference will be held at Wilber, Nebraska, as follows: Friday evening and Saturday, district Sunday-school convention; Sunday, devotional services; Monday, business session. On account of continued ill-health, the secretary will resign that he may go to California, if he can raise the requisite funds, and desires that his books may be audited and passed upon before he resigns. He hopes that an able and willing successor may be found. Let there be a gathering of saints indeed, who shall come filled with the Spirit of the Master. The time for the sessions is September 25-28. Let every elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, and every leader of prayer services authorized at the last district conference send a full written report of all Church work done in May, June, July, and August, from May 1 to August 31, 1903. Do not report work done in September; that will belong to the next report. Let every report be sent in writing before September 20, 1903, so that we can have a complete report. All Saints living elsewhere, yet holding membership in the Southern Nebraska District, are requested also to send their names and addresses at that time, if they desire to be considered as being in good standing in the church of Christ. Mark H. Forscutt, district secretary, 203 First Avenue, Nebraska City, Nebraska.

Far West District conference will convene with the German Stewartsville Branch, four and one half miles north of Stewartsville, Missouri, on Saturday, October 3, 10 a. m. Will the several branch secretaries and ministry, also branch delegates, have their reports and credentials in the hands of the district secretary so the business of the conference can be expedited when we are convened. Chas. P. Faul.

CHANGE OF DATE.

By request of the Nevada Branch on account of delay in getting windows for their church house, the conference of the Clinton District will convene October 24 instead of October 3 as per previous notice. James Moler, district president.

Conference of the London, Ontario, District will meet with the London Branch, October 10 and 11. Arrangements will be made with all lines of railroads for delegate rates. All coming to conference ask ticket agent for a single fare ticket to London and for a delegate certificate to Latter Day Saint convention. If fifty such certificates are presented at conference and signed by the secretary the holders of certificates will return for one third fare instead of two thirds. We hope every one going to conference will procure certificates. Elders, priests, teachers, and deacons are requested to bring or send reports of labors for past year in writing. Hannah Leeder, district secretary. Box 4, Port Elgin, Ontario.

The conference of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District will be held at Galien, Michigan, October 24 and 25. Bro. Heman C. Smith, missionary in charge, and Bro. Isaac M. Smith, submissionary, will be present, unless something unforeseen prevents. The Saints at Galien expect to have their new church building ready for use at that time, and extend a very cordial invitation to the Saints of the district to be present. Come and let us have a profitable time together. A. S. Cochran, district president.

The Gallands Grove District conference will convene in the Saints' church at Deloit, October 10, 1903, at 9 o'clock a. m. for prayer-meeting, and at 10 for business. Have all reports sent to the secretary in good time before conference. Be sure to send delegate credentials with branch reports. D. M. Rudd, president, Mrs. Nellie Rudd, secretary.

Convention Notices.

The Sunday-school association of Nauvoo District will hold a convention at Adrian (Rock Creek), Illinois, October 2, 1903. All interested in advancing the Sunday-school cause, are urged to come. Come without fail! Madge M. Craig, district secretary, Box 126, West Burlington, Iowa.

The Chatham District Religio convention will convene at Wallaceburg, Ontario, Friday, October 16, at 10 o'clock a. m. Prayer-meeting for Religians and Sunday-school workers will be held Saturday, 8 to 9.30 a. m. Topic under consideration will be: "Returning thanks to God for benefits derived in these branches of Church work now established." Officers and teachers of the locals are requested to meet on Sunday, 1 to 2 p. m., to receive instruction as to the best method of teaching and presiding. Religians please send in reports and credentials by October 1 to A. M. Kettlewell, Osman, Ontario. W. L. Ross, president, A. M. Kettlewell, secretary.

The Sunday-school workers of the Fremont, Iowa, District will meet in convention October 15, 1903, at Glenwood, Iowa. Let every worker of the district feel that his presence is needed. Opening session 7.30 p. m. Mrs. T. A. Hougas, superintendent.

The London District Religio association will convene in London, October 8, 10 a. m. Local secretaries are requested to send credentials and reports promptly to James Pycock, Humber Bay. Home Class members will report to Lizzie Morrison, Holstein. Floralice Miller, president, James Pycock, secretary.

The London District Sunday-school association will convene in London, October 9, 10 a. m. Secretaries of schools will please send reports and credentials to Floralice Miller, 142 Peter Street, Toronto. The quarterly reports will be used for convention. George Buschlen, superintendent, Floralice Miller, secretary.

Died.

LASEUR.—Sr. Amanda Taylor LaSeur was born in Dryden, Tompkins County, New York, December 19, 1816; was married to Gilbert LaSeur of the same place in 1838. Her husband died September 2, 1891. Sr. LaSeur united with the Church in the year 1860, being baptized at Fox, by Elder John Shippy, and confirmed by Elders Israel Rogers and Shippy. Though for the past few years of her life she has been deprived of Church privileges, she ever remained a faithful member and a consistent Christian. She died at the residence of her son at Sandwich, Illinois, September 8, 1903. She leaves one sister, Mrs. Fasset, who survives her, and seven children. Funeral services at the Saints' church at Plano, Illinois, by Elder Charles H. Burr assisted by Reverend Charles Henry. Interment at Griswold Cemetery.

JULIAN.—Mrs. Louisa L. Julian was born at Akron, Ohio, November 13, 1833. When eight years old she was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. She was joined in marriage to John Stafford Julian in 1847, and they took up their residence in Quincy, Illinois, where they remained until the spring of 1849, when with their little daughter Elizabeth they journeyed across the plains by ox team to Sacramento, California. After Mr. Julian had spent some time among the gold mines, meeting with indifferent success, they settled on a tract of land near Freeport, California, where they resided for about thirty years, having born to them a family of eight children, five of whom are now living. They removed from this place to a farm at San Jose, California, and then to another near Lafayette, California. At this time Mrs. Julian was baptized into the Reorganization by Elder William Anderson, at Oakland. She died in Santa Cruz, August 29, 1903. Interment at city cemetery, Sacramento. Sermon by Charles A. Parkin.

McFARLAND.—Alexander McFarland died at Mercy Hospital, Burlington, Iowa, August 31, 1903. His death resulted from the loss of one leg, accidentally taken off in the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway yards at West Burlington. He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, July 15, 1827; moved to St. Louis, Missouri, in 1850. He married Miss Mary Ure in 1852. One daughter and two sons were born to them. The wife and one son have passed on before. The funeral, in charge of Elder Elbert A. Smith, was held at the home in West Burlington. The Burlington Hawkeye said of him: "He was a Christian from boyhood and was loved and esteemed by all who knew him. He had a kind word for all and spoke evil of no one." He united with the Latter Day Saint Church in early life.

FURGERSON.—Louisa A. Furgerson departed this life near Lambert, Oklahoma, August 29, 1903, aged 58 years, 5 months, 9 days. She was born near Nashville, Illinois, March 20, 1845. Her maiden name was Armstrong, and she was married to James Furgerson, November 20, 1862. To this union ten children were born, seven boys and three girls. Six boys, two girls, husband, and several grandchildren are left to mourn. She was baptized at Platte River, Nebraska, in 1874, by Gordon E. Duell. She was a kind and loving mother, dutiful wife, faithful and consistent Saint, and died in the hope of a glorious resurrection. The esteem in which she was held by her neighbors was attested by the kindness shown her in her severe sickness and by the large attendance at the funeral. No elder of her faith being within reach, the services were conducted by Reverend Brown of the Methodist Church.

ACCORDING to the Chicago Daily News, the old man was sitting on the roof of his house in Kansas after the floods, and was gazing placidly across the rushing waters.

"Washed all your fowls away?" asked the man in the boat.

"Yes, but the ducks swam," smiled the old man.

"Tore up your peach trees?"

"Don't mind it much. They said the crop would be a failure."

"But the flood! It is up to your windows!"

"Wal, them windows needed washing, anyway, stranger."

FILING CABINETS FOR MEMOS., CLIPPINGS AND MANUSCRIPTS.

SENIOR EDITOR ABROAD.

From Glasgow to Hamilton is but a matter of seven and one half pence, and a very pleasant ride through green valleys and by several towns, busy marts of trade and industry. Hamilton is a mining town of sixty-five thousand inhabitants. The mines pay a royalty of a shilling (twenty-four cents) per ton (twenty-two hundred and forty pounds) to the estate of the Duke of Hamilton, who has a residence not far from Bothwell. We did not visit the seat of this English lord, for being "in residence," that is, at home on the estate, no visitors were allowed. When the family is absent, then visitors are on certain days permitted to see the mansion through the courtesy of the Duke and his resident caretaker.

However, on the Friday of our stay in Hamilton, a party consisting of Brn. Thorburn and Arber and Srs. Thorburn, Arber, and Anderson, of Glasgow, Bro. Rushton and Srs. Rushton and Munro, Bro. Evans and the writer visited the Bothwell Castle, made famous by the story told by Miss Jane Porter in the Scottish Chiefs, of the patriotism and heroic deeds of Sir William Wallace, Robert Bruce, and others; as also by the infamous part played by the Earl of Bothwell, who became the husband of the unfortunate Mary, Queen of Scots, after the death of Darnley, her second husband. The Castle is in ruins, though the towers still standing give striking evidence of the strength and magnificence of this stronghold in its palmy days, during the times of feudal occupancy and internecine strife. It stands on a high hill facing the Clyde River, which makes here a straight run past the Castle and a turn to the right, showing a beautiful aspect from the hill, which must have been especially grand from the heights of the towers. Visitors are cautioned not to climb upon the crumbling wall, for it is dangerous. It is a quarter of a mile from the lodge gates to the Castle, and a thick wood hides the building until the seeker for it is close upon it on its southern side. A modern mansion stands between the Castle and the road by which it is reached, the garish simplicity of which affords a striking contrast between the days when the castles were kept by the sword and the days when "peace hath its victories as well as war;" now the force of law keeps the Englishman's doors; then

In an address before the Long Island Baptist Association, September 28, Reverend P. S. Henson of Brooklyn declared money to be the principal aim of Alexander Dowie. He classes Dowieism with Zionism and says they "wrench certain isolated Scripture passages from their moorings and build a system around them." He also stated that it was one of the signs of the times when people are looking for material things rather than spiritual.

BRO. C. ED MILLER has devoted considerable time and money and hard work to the study of the Cliff-dwellers. His lectures on that subject have attracted considerable well-earned commendation. He writes in the October Autumn Leaves on that subject. His article is illustrated with a good picture of the Mesa Verde Cliff-palace. Book of Mormon students, take notice!

the strongest and the boldest guarded the feudal lord's estate.

The "kodak fiend" was one of the party and a group was taken in the courtyard of the Castle with one of its walls as a background.

On the bank of the Clyde only a little way from the Castle is a stone seat said to be the place where the unhappy Queen used to sit in pensive meditation upon her griefs and their causes. Her son James I, born in Edinburgh Castle, was filial enough to take her remains to Westminster Abbey for a final resting-place. Married at sixteen to the Dauphin of France, a widow at nineteen, married to Darnley, the father of James I, whose death is partly charged against Bothwell, who by either force or intimidation, compelled her to marry him and permit him to share in her rule of the kingdom, and who grossly mistreated, and finally abandoned her in the hour of her adversity, when the Scottish nobles gathered and deposed her, she had much to cause her to be sad and weary of life. She at length sought refuge at the court of Elizabeth, of England; but was by that monarch kept prisoner for nearly twenty years and finally was beheaded by her orders at Fotheringay. Curiously, by the irony of fate, or the grim humor of her son James I, a splendid monument now stands in Westminster Abbey in her memory, over against one of similar magnificence raised by the same King, in memory of Elizabeth, whose hand signed the warrant order for the beheading of this most unfortunate Queen. It is now said that the rooms occupied by this beautiful and gifted woman contain the reminders of the saddest epoch in the Scottish history. Raised in luxury, gifted in graces of mind and body, educated in France, a wife at sixteen, a widow at nineteen, a sovereign for nine years, again a widow—made so by the violent death of a husband whom she may have loved but could not esteem; the enforced wife of an unscrupulous and licentious man; deposed and the bauble of rule taken from her; eighteen years a prisoner, and beheaded at forty-five: who can not see in this the truth of the saying, "Uneasy lies the head that wears the crown"? There is not far off a small house in which she also lived in retirement.

On Saturday Bro. Rushton, Bro. Evans, and the writer visited the capital city of Scotland; a capital whose parliament and center of rule are to be found in the city of many cities, London, of England. Edinburgh (usually called "Edinboro") is by far the most beautiful city we have seen in this old world. The view from Edinburgh Castle, a huge fortress of stone built on a rocky crag overlooking the city on all sides, is one of beauty and grandeur. The city is small in comparison with some we have been in; not so large as Toronto, Ontario, or Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. It lies comparted in the vale in which the Romans once built their rude altar, and where now stands Holyrood House and ruined Abbey. Our objective point was the Castle. This we saw so far as visitors were allowed to see. Nor will the impressions made by what we saw soon fade. Here in the Banqueting Hall, which was also used for the assembling of the chiefs of the clans to decide on matters affecting the state, we saw the relics of the warlike Scots, from the arrow to the gun caisson on which the body of Queen Victoria was carried when borne in state through the city. The huge fire-place showed the token of ancient hospitality and good cheer; but the thick walls, the swords, pikes, lances, pistols, guns, wall-pieces, and other accessories to the trade of hand-to-hand strife bore evidence to the bloody scenes which characterized the reigns of the earlier Scottish kings. We looked through the window from which the Duke of Argyle escaped; we saw the little room in which Mary's son was born and the window through which while yet a child he was lowered and taken to a place of safety to become afterward James I, King of England and Scotland. We also climbed to the ramparts, whence a magnificent view of the city is to be obtained. At one side of the Castle are the barracks in which soldiery are located; and we saw some of one of the Highland regiments in their characteristic dress—skirts, kilts, plaids, even to the naked knees.

It was a fair day until eleven o'clock, when as we stood on the ramparts a spiteful spit of rain thrown by a strong wind made it cool on the heights. We saw, also, the Scottish regalia, the crown and crown jewels, with the scepter of office and the sword of state with its jeweled hilt. It was a sight suggestive of the melancholy reflection that these were about all that is left of the royalty of Scotland, and the reign of its kings.

From the Castle to the University of Edinburgh, all the way downhill by land, but uphill in moral and intellectual development, was a short step past the gardens planted in the one time moat, or lake fronting the Castle on the hill. As we gazed on this wealth of building justly celebrated in the world, we thought of modest little Graceland, and was gratified that the latter, though small and occupying an obscure niche in the citadels of learning, might still turn out men of honor and true manhood, and then,—

Passing by the Saint Giles Church in which Jeanie Geddes hurled her stool at the bishop presiding over a council taking measures to introduce the liturgy into the kirk, in righteous indignation against the heretical blasphemy, and passing to the house of that sturdy Presbyterian, John Knox, it must needs be that Bro. Rushton and Evans should cross the street and "stand in the house of John Knox," so that they could say afterwards, "We have stood in John Knox's house." Having no desire to ever say that, the Editor stood in the street below and looked at the house, which from the outside at least showed the cranky side of that irate religious bigot who was the standing menace and irritation to Queen Mary. If the inside is like the outside it is a gloomy relic of a theology that ought to have died when John Knox was buried.

From these places of interest we went to Holyrood House and the ruins of the Abbey. Space forbids a history of the institution of the Abbey. Suffice it to say that it was built, destroyed, rebuilt, and again destroyed, partially rebuilt, and the walls of the main building now standing show that the hands of warlike human fiends or visiting vandals have been busy by hammer, or sword and fagot. The Royal Palace, now being renovated for a temporary residence for the present royalties, is a center of interest. It was here that we saw much of varied and grave interest to the citizen of the Western Republic.

In the portrait gallery hang the portraits of the long line of Scottish kings from David I to the last king, James VI, who by hereditary claim became King James I of England and Scotland. It was a matter of longer time than we had at our disposal to look at, examine, weigh, and determine the estimate as to the moral worth each pictured face would impress us with, but lingering longest and looking last upon the splendid portrait of the beautiful and fated Queen Mary we passed on to the other rooms open to visitors.

We saw the room of Lord Darnley, the man whom the unfortunate Queen was compelled to marry; the rooms of the Queen, sitting-room, dressing-room, and "supping-room," in which she used to have her meals. In this room she was sitting at table with a companion or two, one of whom was the Italian musician, Rizzio of the history, (but whose name is given in the annals of the Castle as Riccio,) when the conspirators, headed by Lord Ruthven, rushed up the private stairway. Lord Darnley assisted, and he held Mary while a ruffian struck a dagger into the throat of Riccio over the Queen's shoulder. Then the murderous crew dragged the victim through the Queen's apartments and finished their bloody work at the angle of the wall at the head of the main stairway. We stood in the room where the little supper-table was so suddenly overthrown by the treacherous assault, and stopped for a moment to stand on the spot where the victim finally fell and died after receiving fifty-six wounds.

The Abbey itself, with its broken and battered walls, its roofless state, its gravestone floor, whence rain and snow, and the wear of many feet have almost completely obliterated the inscriptions placed on them, the defaced monuments, all told a sad tale of departed greatness—it would be a fit place in which to sit of a gloomy November day and read Gray's Elegy.

A dinner in a tidy eating-room, a ride up the estuary to the celebrated bridge over the Firth of Forth, and the ride back to Hamilton filled up the day. But the fact that we sought to find a Bro. Black, resident in the city, and did not find him, he being absent from home, ought not to be omitted.

We held meetings twice on Sunday in the Victoria Hall, usually occupied by our people, Bro. Evans occupying the morning hour and the writer the evening. But few were out, but the attention was good. Bro. Evans spoke again on Monday evening, but a steady rain and the fact of a festal gathering in the same building though in another hall seemed to make ours the secondary consideration. Bro. Evans gave a clear exposition of the attitude of the Church for the benefit of all, especially a small coterie of devotees of the Utah faith. It was moderate in tone and while explicit ought not to have given offense; indeed we think none was taken.

This finished our stay in Hamilton; and though loath to part from Bro. Rushton, his family, and the Saints there, Time, whose foretop we had been striving to catch, was busy with the hours, and so on the morning of Tuesday, the 8th of September, we left for the city of cities, London.

The branch at Hamilton is in charge of Bro. Walter Browning, and he has able assistance from Bro. Robert Munro. The band is small but faithful.

It took eight and a half hours, with losing a quarter of an hour, to reach the city. Bro. T. J. Sheldon, our resident missionary, met us at the station and conducted us by an underground passage to his home.

What of London? Well—"that is another story."
JOSEPH SMITH.

RUSSIA IN THE HOLY LAND.

In the Chicago Tribune for September 16, 1903, there appeared a dispatch from Berlin to the effect that reports from Constantinople were that the Russian monastery at Jerusalem had been sacked by a Mohammedan mob and all the monks murdered. In connection with the dispatch the Tribune printed the following interesting description of the monastery and Russia's strategy in the Holy Land:

The Russian monastery at Jerusalem is really a huge fortress in disguise, well known to be stored with arms and ammunition, taken there at various times in small quantities, and under convenient disguise.

In addition to the monastery, the Russians have a lofty tower on Mount Olivet, inaugurated some years ago by the Czar's uncle with much pomp and ceremony. The use to which this tower could be put was always an enigma until the discovery was made that from its topmost platform signals can be flashed so far that they can be observed by a fleet in the Mediterranean.

Russia owns large areas of land in the vicinity of Jerusalem and it has been noted by diplomats that her purchases—which, of course, stand in the names of private individuals—possess strategic value.

Orthodox Russians make annual pilgrimages to Jerusalem in large numbers at Easter, and there is a firm belief in the mind of every true Russian that one day the Czar will be crowned king of Palestine in the church of the Holy Sepulcher in the Holy City.

The Russian belief is so firmly grounded and so well known that there is an intense Moslem hatred of everything Russian at Jerusalem. So hostile is its feeling against the Russians that the pilgrims from the land of the Czar have need of the protection of Turkish troops every Easter.

KNOWLEDGE IN PLANTS.

Professor Shaler, of Harvard University, has recently given expression to some thoughts on the subject of "Knowledge in Plants," which may be of interest to some of our readers. In the Chicago Tribune for August 16, 1903, are two extracts from a thesis by Professor Shaler. After discussing the automata, he says:

We may accept as true the statement that our higher intelligence is but the illuminated summit of man's nature, and extend it by the observation that intelligence is normally unconscious, and appears as conscious only after infancy, in our waking hours, and not always then.

In summing up he uses the following language:

Looking toward the organic world in the manner above suggested, seeing that an unprejudiced view of life affords no warrant for the notion that automata anywhere exist, tracing as we may down to the lowest grade of the animal series what is fair evidence of actions which we have to believe to be guided by some form of intelligence, seeing there is reason to conclude plants are derived from the same primitive stock as animals, we are in no condition to say intelligence can not exist among them. In fact, all we can discern supports the view that throughout the organic realm the intelligence that finds its fullest expression in man is everywhere at work.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We are glad to note the progress that is being made in many parts of the country in the construction and maintenance of improved streets and highways. Good Roads Magazine, New York, is an important factor in the movement in inducing localities to "mend their ways."

In presenting the selected article, "Man's Place in the Universe," by Alfred R. Wallace, in the HERALD of September 16, credit should have been given to the Independent of New York, as well as to the Fortnightly Review of London. It was through the courtesy of the Independent that we were permitted to publish the article.

J. M. Stubbart wrote from Trinidad, Colorado, September 19, that he was going to Elk, New Mexico, to hold a debate beginning October 5.

On returning from the Northeastern Kansas District reunion held at Centralia, Kansas, commencing September 11, Patriarch A. H. Smith reported a very enjoyable time and that the people in that part are much encouraged despite the fact that during the reunion a cloud-burst compelled them to put their organ on the seats and move to higher ground.

Bro. Samuel Tomlinson, North Bay, Nipissing, Ontario, writes that he is laboring near the "New Ontario" and that any who are entitled to Free Grant Lands on account of service under the English Government, would do well to write to him for location.

On September 13 an international congress of social democrats began session in Dresden. Herr Kaden delivered an address in which he showed by figures the enormous strides the social democrats have made in numbers. In 1873 there were only one hundred thousand socialists in Germany; now their numbers reach the three million mark, and they have eighty-one members of the Reichstag. They are the strongest political party in Germany, and control seventy-six newspapers. In France the socialists in 1902 polled one million votes and now control one hundred and forty-nine seats in the Chamber of Deputies. The social democrat party in England has a membership of nine thousand, and at last election elected one member of the House of Commons. In Austria the socialists control ten thousand votes. The Belgium socialists placed thirty-four of their members in parliament last election, and in Norway and Sweden the socialists number ten thousand. In Spain there are twenty thousand, and in the United States the socialist vote has grown from two thousand and sixty-five in 1888 to eighty-two thousand two hundred and four in 1898.

The HERALD Office would like to secure several copies of the January and February Autumn Leaves. Saints having them to spare will confer a favor by sending to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Bro. D. B. Higginbotham, writing from Grapeland, Texas, September 15, reports four recent baptisms by himself and associates and some little friction with adherents of the Christian Church.

Sr. Margaret Reed writes from Myrtlepoint, Oregon, under date of September 14 and reports good attendance and the blessings of the Spirit at their recent ten-day reunion, where Brn. Anderson and Holt have been preaching. Three were baptized. She mentions Sr. Anderson as being a great help in the work.

Letters received at the home of President Joseph Smith announce that he and Counselor R. C. Evans landed in New York, Saturday morning, September 26. They returned aboard the steamship Saint Louis. President Smith stood the voyage well and remained in Brooklyn to be present at the dedication of the church building there, as both had intended to do, but Bro. Evans was somewhat indisposed as a result of the ocean travel and left for his home in Canada, Saturday evening.

The first number of the Lamoni Lecture Course, arranged by the Lamoni Religio and a Graceland College committee, is by Fred High, entertainer, October 16. Lectures by Professors T. H. Macbride and C. C. Nutting are leading attractions on the course. Some good musical numbers are also announced.

TRUE SUCCESSION IN CHURCH PRESIDENCY.—NO. 2.

A REJOINDER.

BY ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH.

[THE following paragraphs came into our hands too late for insertion in last week's issue. In the pamphlet form of this article they are inserted after the paragraph which ends with the fourth line on page 889 of the last HERALD.—EDITORS.]

There is another point referred to by Mr. Roberts on page 49 of his revised version which may need a more extended notice. In his first edition he said:

We have now followed the history of the Reorganized Church as far as it is necessary. It only remains to remark that it is a stream formed by the confluence of two other streams; one of which, represented by Mr. Gurley and his following, flows from Strangism; and the other, represented by Mr. Briggs and his following, flows from the Church organized by William Smith. We leave it for Josephites to inform us on what principle of philosophy two corrupt, apostate streams by uniting, make a pure one!

On this I commented as follows:

This conclusion is evidently based upon the supposition that when parties come out of one organization to affiliate with another, the one they leave becomes a part of the one to which they adhere.

How profound! According to this philosophy the Church organized by Joseph Smith and others from 1830 to 1835, was a stream formed by the confluence of several other streams issuing from the several sectarian Churches. (See page 34.)

In his rejoinder Mr. Roberts seeks to ingeniously avoid the consequence of this false philosophy of his by turning the controversy upon a point that was not even hinted at in his first supposition and says:

Not at all. The circumstances are wholly different. When the Lord in the first vision to the Prophet Joseph announced his rejection of all sectarian Churches there had to be a restoration of divine authority, and hence sent John the Baptist, Peter, James, and John, and others to restore that authority; and all who left the several sectarian Churches, received the gospel and divine authority through this new dispensation of authority from heaven, and hence in the new Church thus formed there was no taint of the old sects from which they had emerged—or, in other words, no flaw in their claims to divine authority.

This is quite fairly stated, but it is foreign to the point Mr. Roberts raised in his first edition. The circumstances so far as they relate to his first contention are exactly parallel.

God by revelation "announced his rejection of all sectarian Churches." He authorized the organization of another Church and many came out of them and united with the new Church thus formed. They brought with them no taint of the old, but built on divine authority before restored through Joseph Smith the Seer, and others.

Again God by revelation "announced his rejection" of the Churches under James J. Strang, William Smith, and others. He authorized the forming of another organization, and some came out of these rejected organizations and united with the one thus formed. They brought with them no taint of the old, but built on divine authority before restored through Joseph Smith the Seer, and others. The Church organized from 1830 to 1835 was the successor of a Church once acknowledged of God, but rejected on account of transgression, though unauthorized sectarian Churches had intervened between, and it was in fact a reorganization.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was the successor of a Church once acknowledged of God, but rejected on account of transgression, though unauthorized sects had intervened between. In both cases members entering into the new organizations renounced all allegiance to these unauthorized sects, and repudiated all authority claimed by them. Then the cases are parallel, and if one was formed by the confluence of corrupt, apostate streams, so was the other.

But as Mr. Roberts has sought to turn our attention from the above to the questions of authority, Church organization and rejection, let us follow him in his flight. He adds:

But with the Josephite reorganizers it is different. They claim that the Church founded by the Prophet Joseph was rejected of God, together with its dead. . . . If that were true, then its actions were repudiated, its authority was gone; and the only way it could be regained would be by a reopening of the heavens, and a restoration of the priesthood as in the dispensation of the gospel received by Joseph the Prophet.

Then by endeavoring to hold the Reorganization to the philosophy of his own conclusions Mr. Roberts argues that the men instrumental in its formation were inconsistent in proceeding to reorganize without a restoration of divine authority.

Mr. Roberts' error consists in supposing that authority is contingent upon Church organization, and hence when an organization is rejected all authority is gone. He is evidently wrong in this, for authority preceded Church organization and hence could exist when said organization was rejected. Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were ordained and authorized to administer in the priesthood before there was a Church, and by the authority thus bestowed the Church organization was effected.

So priesthood may exist independent of Church organization, and hence could be retained by individuals after the organization was rejected. I would like to suggest to Mr. Roberts that if he will change his premises and instead of arguing from the premises that authority is contingent upon organization, argue from the premises that organization is contingent upon authority, his logical brain will lead him to safer conclusions.

Further, though the priesthood held by Briggs, Gurley, Deam, et al., was doubtless good and accepted of God, they did not proceed in the important matter of organization until so directed by revelation from God. So as far as that particular act was concerned the authority was restored.

(Concluded from last week.)

In my reply to Mr. Roberts I showed how he had confounded the terms keys and oracles, and that the words were never synonyms. This he now virtually concedes, but attempts to get out of the dilemma by saying that this is not the only passage in which the Lord uses words in his revelations outside the technical sense in which they are used by lexicographers; and invites attention to the passage which provides that the Twelve shall ordain evangelical ministers as they shall be designated unto them by revelation. He says:

The context clearly establishes that these "evangelical ministers" are "evangelists," or "patriarchs." Yet you shall look through your standard dictionaries in vain to find that "evangelist" and "patriarch" are equivalent terms, yet God here so uses them.

Not quite so fast, Mr. Roberts. God does not so use them. The word patriarch is not found in the quotation. The passage reads as follows:

It is the duty of the Twelve, in all large branches of the Church, to ordain evangelical ministers, as they shall be designated unto them by revelation. (See Lamoni edition of Doctrine and Covenants, section 104, paragraph 17; Utah edition, section 107, paragraph 39.)

It will be observed that the word patriarch is not used. An evangelical minister may be a patriarch according to the definition given in our standard dictionaries. The leading definition of the word evangelist according to Webster is: "A bringer of the glad tidings of Christ and his doctrines." A patriarch certainly may be and ought to be that, and could be called according to this definition an evangelical minister. While all evangelists are not patriarchs, every patriarch ought to be an evangelist, or "a bringer of the glad tidings of Christ and his doctrines." So Mr. Roberts' point here is not well taken.

It will be remembered that I criticised the witnesses of Mr. Roberts whom he quotes to prove that Joseph Smith the Seer bestowed all the authority and keys and powers which he held upon the Twelve. I showed that their language differed, no two of them giving the same words, and no one of them relating it twice alike. To which Mr. Roberts replies on page 102 as follows:

That sort of quibbling is worthy of a tenth rate lawyer just beginning his career, or—Josephite writer. The complete answer to the contention is, that while no two of the witnesses give the same words, and no one of them, perhaps, relating the same circumstance twice employs the same language, yet the reader will see that they do not fail to make it plain that all the authority, and all the keys of power and priesthood the Prophet Joseph himself held, he conferred upon the Twelve; and that was perfectly consistent with, and even made necessary by the revelations which provide that the Twelve shall be equal in power and authority with the First Presidency.

Were these witnesses relating in their own language an event which each of them saw, Mr. Roberts' point would be well taken. It is not necessary that witnesses should use the same language in describing that which they have seen. But when they are quoting the language of another, and undertaking to say what another said, they should agree as to the words used, or we can not determine what was said, and will not be able to judge of the import.

On page 104 Mr. Roberts inserts an additional testimony upon this point of Joseph Smith ordaining the Twelve, namely, the testimony of William B. Smith as given in the Temple Lot Suit. The following answer which Elder William B. Smith acknowledges having been the author of, is the one upon which Mr. Roberts relies, stating that this agrees with the testimony of Brigham Young, Orson Hyde, and Wilford Woodruff, to the effect that Joseph Smith the Prophet gave the keys and authority which he possessed to the Twelve.

Following is the matter referred to as it appears in an undated epistle of the Twelve and which the witness was asked to read:

PRESIDENT WILLIAM SMITH WAS ORDAINED BY HIS BROTHER JOSEPH SMITH.

Previous to President William Smith's leaving Nauvoo, on his mission to the East, for the last time during the earthly existence of his brothers, President Joseph Smith ordained him a Prophet, Seer, Revelator, and Translator, and then informed him that he had all the necessary ordinations to lead the Church (in his time), then leaped, smote his feet together, and observed that it was done; in a few days Brother William started on his mission and saw his brothers no more. He returned to Nauvoo in about a year after they were murdered.

A comparison of the above with the quotation made by Mr. Roberts will show that he has not been careful in his copying.

I can not see that there is anything in William Smith's testimony to convey the idea conveyed in the statements of Young, Hyde, and Woodruff. He simply says that Joseph Smith ordained him individually, and makes no reference in this statement to his bestowing authority upon the Twelve as such. William Smith, as we have already shown, claimed that the son of Joseph Smith was his legal successor; and in this same testimony given before the court, from which Mr. Roberts quotes a part, he says: "I held the view that in case the legal successor who I seen as such, never came forward himself to occupy that place that I held a sufficient claim under my apostleship to be properly the legal successor to my brother Joseph, in case that position was never held at that time,—by persons who at that time were legally entitled to that position." (See answer to question 464, page 192, Original Testimony.) So he only claimed the right to preside when the legally authorized President was not installed, and only then by the virtue of his apostleship.

He was further asked: "Had your brother ever undertaken to confer upon you that authority?" To which he answered: "Never any further than the ordination conferring upon me the office of an apostle." (See question 467, page 193, ibid.) The ordination referred to in the passage quoted by Mr. Roberts is thus explained by Elder Smith himself.

Though Elder William Smith was made under cross-examination to acknowledge the authorship of what Mr. Roberts quotes, the language clearly indicates that it was not the language of William Smith, as he would not call himself "Brother William." He was a very old man, hard of hearing at the time of giving his testimony in court, and in all probability was made to say what he did not intend to say, but his explanation makes it plain.

If Mr. Roberts insists upon this testimony of William Smith quoted by him without its connection being taken in evidence, it proves that William Smith was ordained the successor of Joseph Smith, not Brigham Young, nor any other member of the Quorum of Twelve, and not Hyrum Smith; and Mr. Roberts' theory that Hyrum Smith was ordained the successor, and that the keys were all bestowed upon the Twelve as a quorum, falls to the ground under the testimony of William Smith.

On the point of succession Mr. Roberts is considerably confused. At one time he says Hyrum Smith was ordained and set apart as the successor; at another time that the keys and authority of the priesthood were bestowed upon the Twelve as a quorum and thus they were authorized to preside. And now he comes forward with the testimony that William Smith was ordained to be the successor of Joseph Smith. If Mr. Roberts and his associates will take a position upon this point so that we will know where they are and what they claim really was done to provide for succession, we will be pleased to consider their position more fully. Judging from Mr. Roberts' treatise it would be impossible to tell what their position is.

On page 109 Mr. Roberts again refers to the statement made by Brigham Young at Council Bluffs in 1847, that they were about to reorganize the Church with the First Presidency and Patriarch, and declares that the language can not be construed to mean to reorganize the Church. In his first edition he said it only referred to the Presidency. He has made a little improvement in his reply and adds the Patriarch. I said before that I was willing to let the matter stand by simply quoting the words. I am still content to do so. Here they are;

Since the murder of President Joseph Smith, many false prophets and false teachers have arisen, and tried to deceive many, during which time we have mostly tarried with the body of the Church, or been seeking a new location, leaving those prophets and teachers to run their race undisturbed, who have died natural deaths, or committed suicides; and we now, having in contemplation soon to reorganize the Church according to the original pattern, with a First Presidency and Patriarch, etc.

On pages 110 and 111 Mr. Roberts enters into quite an extended argument to prove that the approximates of the numerical strength of the Church as given by Joseph Smith on two different occasions, and by Wilford Woodruff, were wrong, and says, "The numbers they referred to were simply not in the Church." He contends that Mr. Franklin D. Richards' estimates of about twenty-six or twenty-seven thousand are much more reliable. To confirm Elder Richards' estimates he quotes a letter from George J. Adams to the Boston, Massachusetts, Bee, copied in the Times and Seasons of March 15, 1843, where Mr. George J. Adams places the membership in the United States at fifty thousand, and those in the British Isles at twenty thousand, and says that the editor of the Times and Seasons corrects this by saying about ten thousand in the British Isles. Then Mr. Roberts, upon what authority I do not know, makes the statement that if Mr. Adams' estimate in the United States should be cut down one half it would be nearer the truth. After getting these reductions made it would leave thirty-five thousand, a discrepancy between Richards' figures and Roberts' lowest estimate of eight or nine thousand.

Nor does Mr. Roberts take into consideration that the communication of Elder Adams was published in Times and Seasons more than a year before the death of Joseph Smith, and hence the year and three months increase was not computed by him; nor the further fact that the communication bears no date, and hence we can not determine when it was written nor when it was published in the Bee. Further, he does not tell us that Elder Adams in his communication speaks of the work being established in Upper Canada in 1836, "and soon spread through that Province." "This glorious message has also spread into Germany, a part of France, and reached even Constantinople, Jerusalem, the East Indies, and the islands of the seas."

These statements were before Mr. Roberts when he quoted Elder Adams, and he knew that Elder Adams made no computation of the numbers in these countries. Yet he quotes Mr. Adams' figures in the United States and Great Britain as though that was all. Reduces these figures one half—ten thousand on the authority of the editor of the Times and Seasons, and the other twenty-five thousand on his own assertion, all to prove that Joseph Smith and Wilford Woodruff did not know!

Further comment is needless.

Mr. Roberts quotes quite an array of testimony to prove that an exploring expedition was authorized by Joseph Smith to explore the western country. Some of this testimony is of a very questionable character, and none of it is of very vital importance. Whether they organized to explore or not has nothing to do with the issues before us. I think it quite possible that they discussed the propriety of going west, south, and elsewhere; but that the determination was finally made to settle in Utah, does not appear clear. And even if it did, it does not justify the Church policy adopted in Utah, which is the real issue between us. Nor would a determination in council to make a location in Salt Lake Valley, or anywhere else, change the decree of God as set forth in the revelation locating Zion, and declaring that it should not be removed out of its place.

In this connection Mr. Roberts introduces the testimony of two men who claim to have volunteered to go with the company to explore the West. The first is Mr. S. W. Richards. He simply states that he was one of a company of twenty-five young men to be sent "westward to find a suitable place for the Saints to move to, where they could rest for a time from the constant harassings and persecutions to which they were then being subjected, and which was likely to increase if the mob did not have the life of the Prophet placed at their disposal." He does not say that they were asked to go to the Rocky Mountains, only the direction is indicated westward from Nauvoo, and that the place to be selected was to be a temporary abiding place where the Saints could "rest for a time." In closing his statement he remarks that "California and Oregon if deemed necessary, were to be the fields of our exploration; while it was thought Lower California would offer the greatest inducements for locating a city for the Saints." This latter statement seems to be thrown in incidentally. He does not say that the Church authorities when asking him to go westward indicated these places, nor where the suggestion came from to explore California and Oregon. Taking this last statement, it is very indefinite, showing that they had no settled decision as to where they would go.

Mr. Joseph A. Kelting, the other witness, is as indefinite upon this point as Mr. Richards, or even more so. He says: "I also know that previous to the death of the Prophet Joseph Smith, there was a movement on foot, looking to the removal of the Church from Illinois to the West. Joseph Smith was the one who took lead in that matter, and called upon certain brethren to go on an exploring expedition to seek a suitable location for the Church; and I was among the number selected to go."

There is no mention in this statement of the Rocky Mountains or the Great Salt Lake; but simply west from Illinois. After all their efforts to prove that Joseph Smith originated the exodus to the Rocky Mountains, they fail to prove that any place was selected or that it was finally determined to go west at all. The most that they can prove is that it was under consideration and its feasibility discussed. But as we have before said, that is not the issue at all. The issue is upon the policies adopted by that people. We have no objection to their temporary residence in the Salt Lake Valley, or anywhere else. Our objection is to making it the Zion of the Lord, and to the doctrines taught and the policies inaugurated.

Another subject, however, is introduced in this statement of Mr. Kelting, and it is sought to prove by him that Joseph Smith the Seer was implicated in polygamy. In this as on other points Mr. Roberts is not treating upon the questions involved. The issue between us is not whether Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy or not; the question is, Is polygamy right, or is it wrong? However, it is proper to state that the evidence connecting Joseph Smith with polygamy is very unsatisfactory so far as we have been able to examine it; and this statement of Mr. Kelting is no exception to the rule. He represents the Prophet as being too cowardly to openly avow his convictions, which is exactly contrary to the record of the Prophet Joseph Smith. He is represented as taking Kelting into a private room, locking the door, and then making inquiry if he had heard certain things. Then pledging him not to tell if he revealed to him the facts in the case; getting his promise not to betray him, and then confidentially telling him about this plurality of wives doctrine; a doctrine, according to the purported revelation on the subject, that was of such importance as to affect the salvation of men's souls in eternity. Notwithstanding all this, the Prophet of the Lord in the secrecies of his own chamber pledges a man not to tell this important thing, and puts him under obligations by getting him to be a party to the practice. There is no one present but Joseph Smith and Joseph A. Kelting; no possibility of proving or disproving his statement by other witnesses, so far as the original conversation is concerned. The only intimation of any one knowing anything about it is that he told it sometime a few years ago to Alexander H. Smith, son of the Prophet. Elder Alexander H. Smith being the only other witness in the case, we wrote him, sending him a copy of Mr. Joseph A. Kelting's statement and asking him to answer for publication as to his remembrance of such a conversation. In answer to our inquiry we received the following:

DETROIT, Minnesota, July 11, 1903.

BRO. HEMAN SMITH:

Yours of July 2, containing affidavit of one Joseph A. Kelting, of Colton, California, reached me this forenoon on my return from Bottineau, North Dakota.

I remember the man's name, but have no remembrance of having called upon him while in California. If I did it was not at Colton, but San Bernardino.

The man has simply drawn upon his imagination, for no such conversation ever passed between us. It is of such a nature that I should have remembered it. I could not well forget it. You will note he affirms his statement relative to the body of his article, and incidentally says he told me of it. You may publish my answer if you wish.

It is fabrication from beginning to end. The man evidently is taking refuge under that infamous clause in that supposed revelation on celestial marriage, which says, under certain conditions a man may commit all manner of sins save the shedding of innocent blood, etc. If that people are not taking refuge under a covering of lies, this world never saw a people who did.

Mr. Anson's statement is again published; but we quoted that in our reply to Mr. Roberts and made all the comments necessary. Then comes the purported statement of Gideon Carter without the signature of Mr. Carter, but stating that it was subscribed and sworn to the twenty-seventh day of February, 1874, before J. C. Christy, a notary public in and for San Bernardino County, state of California. Why Mr. Carter's signature is not secured seems strange. I was personally acquainted with Mr. Gideon Carter, and believed him to be an honest and truthful man. I can hardly credit the report that he ever said what he is reported to have said in this statement; for he represents that at the time of the death of Joseph Smith the Prophet he was living in the family of Orange Lysander Wight, the son of Lyman Wight. Though he does not say that they resided in Nauvoo, that inference is to be drawn, for he is relating events that transpired in Nauvoo, and he says that the killing of the Prophet is an event that he distinctly remembers.

Now, if Mr. Gideon Carter lived in the family of Orange Lysander Wight, in the spring and summer of 1844, he was not at Nauvoo but at Black River Falls, Wisconsin. A boy thirteen years of age, living in Wisconsin, with means of communication so limited as they then were, could have known but very little of events transpiring at Nauvoo at that period of time.

Lyman Wight in his journal states:

I started about the middle of April, 1844, to Nauvoo with my wife and my three youngest children. My three oldest children having married on the sixth day of February last, I left them to tarry with the remainder of the company until the first of July next, having already sold the mills, but reserved them until that time.

Orange Wight was the oldest son of Lyman Wight, and is one of the three spoken of. The mills spoken of were at Black River Falls, Wisconsin, which place Lyman Wight was leaving in the middle of April to go to Nauvoo. According to this statement Mr. Gideon Carter is wrong; also when he says that Orange Wight married his sister Matilda Carter about a year before the killing of Joseph Smith, for that event occurred on February 6, 1844, not quite five months before the death of Joseph Smith. He had been living in Wisconsin from sometime in 1843 until the middle of April, and was living there in April, 1844, to continue in possession of the mills until the first of the following July. His oldest sister, Mrs. Anna C. Smith, one of the three spoken of, who was married at the same time he was, now residing at Lamoni, Iowa, says she does not remember distinctly the date of their arrival in Nauvoo; but does remember distinctly that it was after the death of the Prophet, and that she came down the river on a raft in company with her brother Orange.

So Mr. Carter, if he ever made the statement, may be right in saying that he lived with Orange Lysander

Wight; but if so, he is a very poor witness of what transpired at Nauvoo, being but a boy of thirteen years and not present. The rest of his testimony is very unimportant. He relates that Lyman Wight made certain claims in Texas in regard to the doctrine of polygamy. This is but second-hand testimony. Mr. Carter knows nothing about it. I have talked with Carter in regard to it; and while I found him quite willing to throw the responsibility of the conduct of those with whom he was nearly related upon Joseph Smith, he personally knew nothing in regard to Joseph Smith's connection with the practice of polygamy.

I presume that the date of this statement of Mr. Carter is a typographical error, and that it should be 1894 instead of 1874, as Mr. Roberts was in that country in 1894, and the date of the statement of Joseph A. Kelting is March 1, 1894. The date of Carter's probably should be February 27, 1894. At that time Mr. Roberts was contemplating a discussion with some elders of the Reorganization in San Bernardino, and was doubtless collecting these statements for that purpose. But if so, why did he not give his opponents an opportunity to be present when these examinations were made and to cross-examine the witnesses. Right in the neighborhood where his opponents were living, and where it was supposed the discussion would take place, he privately interviewed parties, procured a signed statement from one, and now publishes another unsigned and gives no opportunity for the other side to be represented. Such testimony as this is of but very little value; and we have already given it all the consideration that it merits, if not more.

Mr. Roberts publishes a statement purporting to be a statement of John Taylor and Orson Hyde, in a communication to the Saints in Great Britain, in which they give notice of the removal of the Church from Nauvoo, and further say "years before the temple was completed, and long before the martyrdom of our Prophet and Patriarch. Many living witnesses can testify that we proposed moving to California, leaving the land of our oppression, preaching the gospel to the Lamanites, building up other temples to the living God, and establishing ourselves in the far distant West."

This is immaterial. Suppose there was a proposition of that kind; it does not affect the main question at issue, as we have before shown.

On page 127 Mr. Roberts makes another of his historical mistakes. He says that "the Church while in the Eastern States never numbered more than three or at the most four stakes of Zion."

Mr. Roberts will hardly dispute that there was a stake at Kirtland, Ohio; one at Adam-ondi-Ahman, in Missouri; one at Commerce, or Nauvoo; one called the Zarahemla Stake, across the river from Nauvoo. Millennial Star, volume 18, page 55, contains a notice of the First Presidency deciding to organize a stake at Crooked Creek, Illinois. On December 4 and 5, 1841, a conference was held at Ramus, Illinois, at which time it was decided that the organization of Ramus Stake should be discontinued. At the October conference of 1840 a committee was appointed to organize stakes, consisting of Hyrum Smith, Lyman Wight, and Almon Babbitt; and during the same month they organized stakes at Lima, Quincy, Mount Hope, and Freedom, and on the first of November they organized a stake called Geneva Stake, in Morgan County, Illinois.

Here are at least eleven stakes organized in the East. Mr. Roberts may mean, however, that there were never more than three or four at the same time. But this is not true, for here is an account of at least five organized within one month after the October conference of 1840.

In my reply to Mr. Roberts I refused to take the statement in that "carefully" revised history of Joseph Smith as evidence that there could be more than seven quorums of seventy legally in existence at the same time. Mr. Roberts, on page 129 of his revised edition, cites as confirmation of his former statement the following from a copy of the manuscript of Church History written by John Whitmer:

About the same time . . . there were seventy high priests chosen, who were called elders, to be under the direction of the Twelve and assist them according to their needs, and if the seventy were not enough, call seventy more until seventy times seventy.

This history, written by John Whitmer, of which Mr. Roberts says the Church in Utah has a copy, is now in our hands. The quotation by Mr. Roberts is nearly correct; but Mr. Roberts would hardly be willing to take the statement of John Whitmer as being correct in every particular, for he will not admit, I believe, that these seventy were high priests. There are many things in this history of John Whitmer which Mr. Roberts would not admit as authoritative. If Mr. Roberts has had an opportunity of perusing the copy of this history, he certainly knows that Mr. Whitmer was not an accurate historian. Nor has the Church in Utah confined itself to the limit set forth in this quotation from John Whitmer. They have more than doubled the number of "seventy times seventy."

On page 132 Mr. Roberts quotes a statement made in our reply to the effect that ordinations to the priesthood for the dead, endowments for the dead, sealings (husbands and wives) for the dead, sealings (children to parents) for the dead, were not contemplated in the law of God; and then asks the author of the "Reply" if he will "undertake to argue that confirmation is not as necessary to salvation of the dead as baptism; or that baptism is complete without the baptism of the Holy Ghost, as well as the baptism of water."

Certainly not. Why does Mr. Roberts lug in the ordinance of confirmation and the receiving of the Holy Ghost here, when it is not mentioned by us? We mentioned that the law did not contemplate ordinations for the dead, endowments for the dead, the sealing of husbands and wives, and the sealing of children to parents. We do not deny the ordinance of confirmation in its proper place nor the reception of the Holy Spirit.

But he again quotes (page 133) that revised history of Joseph Smith, volume twelve of Millennial Star, page 664. This reference is probably a typographical error, as we have not been able to find the quotation by the reference. But this particular quotation purports to be a sermon delivered by Joseph Smith, January 20, 1844, reported by Elder Woodruff. He is there made to say regarding the dead:

But how are we to become saviors on Mount Zion? By building their temples, erecting their baptismal fonts, and going forth and receiving all the ordinances, baptisms, confirmations, washings, anointings, ordinations, and sealing powers upon their heads, in behalf of all their progenitors who are dead, and redeem them that they may come forth in the first resurrection and be exalted to thrones of glory with them; and herein is the chain that binds the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers, which fulfills the mission of Elijah.

The only point in which this purported sermon conflicts with our statement is on the ordinations. Nothing even in that about sealing husbands and wives, parents and children! We are still of the opinion that the people in Utah are doing work in their temples not authorized by the law of God, at least they have not been able to produce any law covering their practices.

Mr. Roberts in his first edition stated that "some of our 'friends' of high standing in the 'Reorganization' joining in the hue and cry against the Saints of God, and aiding in the work of misrepresentation."

In replying to this I challenged the proof that the Reorganization had aided in the work of misrepresentation. Replying to this challenge Mr. Roberts says:

Well, here is the proof: On February 22, 1882, in the course of a speech against the Church in Utah, Joseph Smith, the President of the Reorganized Church said:

"There were many men in Utah who were single because they said they had no assurance they could find for wives women who were not contaminated. They might go to the farm houses to choose wives, but could not feel certain that some of the bishops had not been there and robbed the daughters of their virtue."—The Chicago Daily Inter-Ocean, February 23, 1882.

The Chicago Times' version of this part of the same speech, under the caption "A Lusty War Cry" (issue of February 23, 1882), is as follows:

"There are hundreds and thousands of Mormons in Utah who will not marry wives because they do not know where to get wives that have not been contaminated. They do not know what houses have escaped the invasion of lecherous bishops who have robbed hundreds of women of their purity. The men can not afford to take the risks that marriage means."

Many vile and vicious things have been said of the Saints in Utah, but it was reserved for Joseph Smith, the President of the Reorganized Church, to say at once the most untruthful, the lowest, the most contemptible, cowardly, and vicious thing that ever was said of a much-maligned and misrepresented people. And what makes it so utterly inexcusable is the fact that the speaker knew better; for he had been in Utah, and had been among the people sufficiently to know that no such conditions as he describes in that speech existed. It was malicious, willful misrepresentation. He bore false witness against his neighbors. At the time of the speech I noted down the misrepresentations, not from the Chicago papers, but from other papers, for the false statement was widely copied, and I think made a dispatch to the press of the country. Recently I sent to the Chicago papers and had the above quotations verified.

It is only necessary to say in this connection that President Joseph Smith denied these statements, and published his denial immediately after. In the SAINTS' HERALD for June 1, 1882, there is not only a denial but a statement of what he did say as follows:

Some of the statements made by the Editor in the speech, complained of by the News, are not given in the Tribune's report as they were uttered. This is the case with the one referring to the "contamination of women by Mormon bishops." The statement as made by the Editor was this; that while in Salt Lake City, in 1876, he became acquainted with an unmarried man, then thirty-nine years old, whose youth and early manhood had been spent in Utah. The Editor asked him the question why he had not married, and he gave in reply substantially, that he did not know where to go in the Territory, to get a wife; that it was not easy to find young marriageable women who were not already married into polygamous families, or were bespoken for some bishop. This man further stated that he was not alone in being unmarried for the same cause, the contamination of polygamy. We believe the statement made by him was true; but the Tribune's report gives the Editor as the author of the saying.

Notwithstanding this denial the people of Utah continued to reiterate the charge; and July 2, 1885, President Smith while in Salt Lake City wrote a communication on the subject to the Deseret News and handed it to the editor in person. I am informed that it did not appear. It was, however, published in the Saints' Advocate for July, 1885. The letter is as follows:

SALT LAKE CITY, July 2, 1885.

Editor Deseret News: Please do me the justice of the following correction:

The statement complained of by you in your to-day's issue, as given in the Chicago Tribune's report of my Chicago speech, February 22, 1882, was not made by me in the form stated. The statement made by me was, "That while in Salt Lake City, in 1876, I became acquainted with an unmarried man, then thirty-nine years old, whose youth and early manhood had been spent in Utah. I asked him the question why he had not married, and he gave in reply, substantially, that he did not know where to go in the Territory to get a wife; that it was not easy to find young marriageable women, who were not already married into polygamous families, or were bespoken for some bishop. This man further stated that he was not alone in being unmarried for the same cause, the contamination of polygamy."

Neither the Times nor Herald gave the sentence in the obnoxious form used by the Tribune. I had twice before been misrepresented by the same paper, and tried to have them set me right, and failed; and so did not try in this instance; but in the issue of our own paper, the SAINTS' HERALD, for June 1, 1882, as soon after the presentation of the matter in your issue for May 13, 1882, as it was possible, I published this correction, of which a copy of the paper containing it was sent you, with the denial of having made the statement; using the following language concerning it: "The statement as given in the Tribune report, and which the News denounces as an 'atrocious lie,' was not made as stated. The Times and Herald each published a report, and neither of them got the remark in the form given by the Tribune. As given it is a harsh remark, of which we do not object to the News finding fault."

The virtue and purity of the women of Utah, aside from plural marriage, were not questioned by me and never have been.

I hand you herewith a copy of the SAINTS' HERALD for June 1, 1882, that you may see that I made the correction of the improper statement as soon as I could after my attention was called to it. Had I made the remark I should justly deserve censure; but not having made it, you should in honor to yourself and justice to me permit this to go before your readers.

Yours respectfully,

JOSEPH SMITH.

Mr. Roberts may claim that the denial of President Smith was only on the Tribune report, whereas he is quoted from the Daily Inter-Ocean and the Chicago Times. But though the reports in these papers may differ, Mr. Roberts certainly is not justified, in the light of these explanations, in quoting the language as President Smith's when he clearly states that it was the language of another, and also gives the language which he did use, which differs materially from that published in the Times, Inter-Ocean, Herald, and Tribune.

In Mr. Roberts' late edition of his book he adds an article entitled, "A Sufficient Answer to Josephites," which purports to have been published in the Improvement Era for February, 1898, and is now copied into this treatise.

In the first place he essays to state the position of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and states for them that they hold that Joseph Smith, the President of their organization, of right should have succeeded to the Presidency for two reasons: "First, because, as they allege, it is his birthright; and second, by virtue of an ordination to that position which they affirm he received from his father before the latter's martyrdom."

This is not only a misstatement of the case but a partial statement also. The "Josephites" do claim that all other things being equal he had prior right by birthright; but they do not claim that he was ordained to that position by his father (only in the sense that an appointment can be called an ordination), but simply that he was blessed and designated as the successor. It was an appointment, not an ordination to the priesthood.

He should have said that the claim is made not only upon these two reasons, but, third, that he was called of God to that position; fourth, that he was accepted by the Church to serve in that capacity, and, fifth, that he was properly ordained by those authorized.

He again misstates our position when he says that the Reorganization claims "that in leading the people to Utah, the Twelve led them astray." It is not our claim, and Mr. Roberts ought to know it, that they led the people astray in leading them to Utah, but that they led them astray in many things besides leading them to Utah.

The "Sufficient Answer to Josephites," as Mr. Roberts terms it, consists in this: That in May, 1843, Joseph Smith had an interview with Stephen A. Douglas, and during that interview he said:

Judge, you will aspire to the presidency of the United States; and if you ever turn your hand against me or the Latter Day Saints, you will feel the weight of the hand of the Almighty upon you; and you will live to see and know that I have testified the truth to you; for the conversation of this day will stick to you through life.

He claims that this prophecy was fulfilled, and that the hand of the Almighty rested upon Stephen A. Douglas because Mr. Douglas made a speech on the twelfth day of June, 1857, in Springfield, Illinois, in the course of which he said, referring to the Mormons:

Should such a state of things actually exist as we are led to infer from the reports—and such information comes in an official shape—the knife must be applied to this pestiferous, disgusting cancer which is gnawing into the very vitals of the body politic. It must be cut out by the roots, and seared over by the hot-hot iron of stern and unflinching law. . . . Should all efforts fail to bring them to a sense of their duty, there is but one remedy left. Repeal the organic law of the Territory, on the ground that they are alien enemies and outlaws, unfit to be citizens of a territory, much less ever to become citizens of one of the free and independent States of this confederacy.

This was said regarding the people in Utah; but it will be noticed that Mr. Douglas based this strong statement on the contingency that "such a state of things actually exists as we are led to infer from the reports." Perhaps Mr. Douglas was right; and if a state of things such as was reported existed there, the measures advocated by Mr. Douglas would have been proper. We have not the reports and can not judge. But why hold, as Mr. Roberts concludes, that the judgments of God followed Stephen A. Douglas any more than any other defeated candidate for the presidency? Other men have been defeated. Other men died after their defeat; and but few if any died more honored than Stephen A. Douglas by that portion of the citizenship which supported him.

But to show Mr. Roberts' ignorance of the facts of history we have but to quote one paragraph of his comments found on page 146 of his revised work:

Stephen A. Douglas did aspire to the presidency of the United States, and was nominated for that office by the Democratic Convention, held in Charleston, on the 23d of June, 1860. When in the convention he was declared the regular nominee of the Democratic party, "The whole body rose to its feet, hats were waved in the air and many tossed aloft; shouts, screams, and yells, and every boisterous mode of expressing approbation and unanimity, were resorted to."

When Mr. Douglas aspired to the presidency, no man in the history of American politics had more reason to hope for success. The political party of which he was the recognized leader, in the preceding presidential election had polled 174 electoral votes, as against 122 cast by the other two parties which opposed it; and a popular vote of 1,838,169, as against 1,215,798 votes for the two parties opposing.

It would be hard to form a passage as short as this with more mistakes in it. Stephen A. Douglas was not nominated at Charleston. The Charleston convention was not held in June but in April, at which time there was a division in the convention; and the part of the convention that favored Douglas met at Baltimore, Maryland, June 18, and there Douglas was nominated. He was not declared the regular nominee of the Democratic party in the convention that met at Charleston; simply the nominee of that convention that met at Baltimore. The Democratic party did not poll a majority of the popular vote in 1856 as asserted by Mr. Roberts. Mr. Buchanan polled 1,838,169 just as Mr. Roberts gives it, but his two opponents' combined vote was greater than his. Fremont received 1,341,264, and Fillmore 874,534; making their combined vote 2,215,798. A mistake of just one million, a characteristic mistake for Roberts after all! (See History of Ready Reference by Larned, vol. 5; also Greeley's American Conflict, vol. 1.) It is not true that no man in politics had more reason than Douglas to hope for success. Had he represented the Democratic party as a whole, he might have had great reasons to hope for success; but he represented but a faction, and was nominated by a faction.

Mr. Roberts asserts that he "died at his home in Chicago, a disappointed, not to say heart-broken man."

There is no reason to say that he was a heart-broken man. Disappointed, of course, as many other men have been, but Stephen A. Douglas had the manly courage after his defeat, when the Union was about to be rent asunder, to rally to the support of Mr. Lincoln, his successful competitor. He advocated that it was the duty of the defeated party to sustain Mr. Lincoln's administration and the Union.

Mr. Roberts concludes after making these misstatements that this is a sufficient answer to the Josephites because it was not the Josephites whom Douglas spoke against but the people in Utah; and that he died under the judgment of God because he did so speak.

In the first place he did not speak against the people in Utah only on the supposition that reports concerning them were true. In the second place there is no evidence that the judgment of God specially followed him. I presume Mr. Roberts would agree that if reports concerning the people in Utah were true some heroic measures would be necessary.

In Appendix 1, page 153, Mr. Roberts gives some instances of history which he claims would justify Joseph Smith in receiving a revelation on polygamy and keeping it secret, and that the charge of cowardice if he did so would not obtain. He speaks of Jesus the Christ saying unto his disciples that they should tell no man the vision, and quotes from that carefully revised history of Joseph Smith to show that on different occasions he counseled the elders not to teach certain doctrines until the work was more fully established. He also quotes from the revelation of March 7, 1831, as follows:

And now I say unto you, Keep these things from going abroad unto the world, until it is expedient in me, that ye may accomplish this work in the eyes of the people and in the eyes of your enemies, that they may not know your works until ye have accomplished the thing which I have commanded you.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 15. (Utah edition, paragraph 72.)

In the instruction of Christ to his disciples there was no principle of practice involved regarding which they were to keep silent. To make the revelation of 1831 apply Mr. Roberts would have to maintain that the terms these things and this work mean identically the same thing—a construction that the context will not justify.

The Lord has just been explaining some of his teaching to the early disciples, and says:

It shall not be given unto you to know any further concerning this chapter, until the New Testament be translated, and in it all these things shall be made known; wherefore I give unto you that you may now translate it, that ye may be prepared for the things to come," etc.—Paragraph 11.

A very good reason for keeping these things was that they were not fully revealed. This was given in March, 1831, and was of course to be understood in the light of what was given on the same point the month before as follows:

Thou shalt ask, and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15. (Utah edition, paragraphs 56-58.)

In the passage which Mr. Roberts quotes the phrase these things refers to the things which the Lord was partially explaining but which were not to be fully revealed until the New Testament was translated, and hence were not at that time to go unto the world. But this work referred to as "the thing which I have commanded you" refers to the work in hand, namely, the translation of the Scriptures. They understood by the express terms of the former commandment that they were to teach to all men the things prescribed as soon as they were revealed in full.

In the case of the polygamous revelation, so called, it was kept secret after it was revealed and in full force. Exactly the opposite procedure from the one referred to in the revelation of 1831.

There is nothing in what Mr. Roberts has quoted to justify the keeping of anything secret which affects the souls of men when the time for the accomplishment of the work arrives.

In Appendix 2, page 155, he seeks to justify the Church authorities in declining to discuss the issues between them and the Reorganization, and again quotes that carefully revised history by President Brigham Young, to show that Joseph Smith told the elders not to contend with others on account of their faith or systems of religion, but to pursue a steady course. An open, fair discussion of differences, and a contention with others on account of their faith or systems of religion, are quite different things. This did not forbid discussion held in the proper spirit of discussion. It was not so understood at the time, if indeed Joseph Smith ever said it; for the elders at that time did meet all who cared to differ from them in discussion. Few if any opportunities of the kind were ever declined. This shows that it was not their understanding that debates were forbidden.

But Mr. Roberts says:

Though there may be times and circumstances when public debate would be proper—and at such times and places the elders of the Church will not be found wanting in the courage necessary to defend the truth.

It is peculiar, however, that the times and circumstances are always propitious when these Utah representatives meet the sectarian world; but entirely unpropitious when it becomes necessary to discuss with the representatives of the Reorganization.

Mr. Roberts closes with the testimony of President Wilford Woodruff. I have already noticed that in my former treatise, and showed that he differed from the record in important particulars; and Mr. Roberts has not undertaken a defense. I therefore leave the matter for the consideration of the reader without further comment on this point.

If in anything we are surprised at Mr. Roberts' attempt to reply to our criticism, it is that the weakness of his position becomes more apparent, and we are more than ever convinced of the soundness of the position of the Reorganization.

Mr. Roberts in the course of his remarks throws out insinuations that we have abandoned certain positions because we did not defend all the arguments made by representatives of the Reorganization. Personally we have abandoned no position taken in the former book. It can hardly be expected of us, nor would Roberts be willing to place himself in that attitude, to defend all the arguments made by parties on his side of the question. It is not always, however, because we are not willing to defend that we have kept silent. Sometimes defense was not needed. Arguments may be fallacious; men may in their zeal strain texts to apply them where we do not see the application; but after all and the most that can be said, the position occupied by the Reorganization is invulnerable; and should the policy of the Reorganization continue to be in harmony with the foundations laid and the positions occupied by its early defenders it can not fail of success.

I submit this brief review, praying that the blessing of God may attend it; that light and liberty may come to those who read, together with the courage of conviction, that they may henceforth stand for the right and the truth.

"BUSINESS IS BUSINESS."

The above and such expressions as "That is not business," "Religion is one thing but business is quite another," are so common, that the reader will doubtless find an interest in canvassing their true worth and fitness in shaping and governing a person's actions.

For the expression, "Business is business," to be justly applicable and answer as an excuse for one's attitude and action in a matter, it must be used so as to do service equitably in more directions than simply to sustain the selfish side of a transaction.
