The man who is anxious to accumulate wealth rapidly, and feels so intent in his favorite pursuit that he can not be disturbed a moment to listen to a word and extend "alms" to an unfortunate beggar, although he may be his brother, because "business is business," must not forget that the same fortunate excuse must be applied to him, by and by, when all are judged and rewarded according to their works, and that the words "Business is business" will then fall ten thousand times more sadly upon the ear when they are thus returned by the judgment of the Master than they could have done when spoken to the most worthy and sensitive beggar.

One who essays to maintain a true business mien must be equally prompt in meeting his obligations to God and the Church as to the merchant and bank. A lower standard than this proves that the proud claim to promptness in business after all is but a bauble, for the individual really acts in such cases from policy, rather than from the principle of right-doing. The true business man will be reliable and prompt in the performance of duty in religious matters as in the marts of barter and trade, and is to be depended upon to a reasonable degree everywhere.

We find ourselves under obligation to a neighbor, arrange for an extension of the indebtedness, and earnestly prepare to meet it when it is due, because business is business, and the neighbor demands his money, and so we pay, which is right; but at the same time we find that we are indebted to the Lord for his especial blessings and mercies, have not turned over that which is his own as provided by his law, and arrange for an extension, giving a note to the keeper of the storehouse; when it is due, not yet having attained all that was desirable, we fail to meet the obligation as we did that of the neighbor, this being a part of our religious work and not strictly business.

The keeper of the storehouse with our promise to back him arranges and feeds the poor and the Lord's mission workers, dealing on the lines of business, for he can not furnish in any other way; this account is also due and must be paid, because business is business. Looking over the other side of the ledger it is discovered that promises to the storehouse, both implied and direct, are touching religious duties and not strictly business according to the idea of some, and we inquire, Can the payment be postponed without the consent of the keeper of the storehouse? Is not business business as much when it relates to the Lord's work as when it is purely secular or worldly?

There exists a sacred duty, a solemn obligation under an implied covenant made more certain by reason of the holy command to every member of the body, the Church, to render his or her account to the Lord, observing faithfully the law of tithes and offerings to keep the same, as they must be judged of the Lord as to their work in this, as other acts; and yet it has been held by many that this is of less urgency than the common business affairs of a day. Should the Church chance to owe these same parties, it must promptly pay as a matter of business honesty; but what of the other side? Is business business?

It is not uncommon to find the elder who has been given a missionary appointment under severe criticism because he has not been prompt in getting into his field of labor, prompt in getting out his appointments, prompt in attendance at every meeting and prompt in answering every call to visit the sick; yet diligence in this work is by an implied contract with him as with the member who aids financially, and the elder is condemned, and justly, unless he has made faithful efforts to fulfill. But what of the member who acts as the critic of the elder for nonperformance of duty when his own work is examined and it is found that he has not even undertaken to discharge the duty assigned him? Is not the law just here, wherein it says, "Out of thine own mouth will I condemn thee"?

The excuse is made that persons will not pay their tithes and offerings because the elder does not always go to his labor when he should. The elder may just as rightly say, and with much more propriety, that he will not leave his home unless the members first pay their tithes and offerings so that he will know that his family may be cared for in his absence. Such a position and policy is suicidal, and contrary to the laws of faith under which we work, for while each thus waits depending upon the action of the other nothing is done in the Lord's work.

These duties and obligations are not enjoined upon condition that one party shall fulfill providing the other does so. The discharge of the duty of one is not made dependent upon that of the other. On the contrary the duty of each is invariable and without condition and the same should be complied with without ever offering such an excuse.

At this present time the Church is needing funds to carry on its work. The promise of the Lord is that if the members discharge their duties in temporal matters, duties enjoined by the law, there shall be plenty and to spare. But while some do all they can and perform with much sacrifice on their parts, others are seemingly indifferent, or heedless of the necessity of each making an earnest effort to help on the work of the Lord.

Several thousand dollars of overdue notes are in the hands of the Bishop which if taken up at once would greatly lessen the expenses of the Church and help it perform its obligations. Several more thousand are due the Church from members who have made no arrangement upon a business basis with the bishops or agents touching the same, according to the implied agreement under the law. Is it the work of a true business man to neglect these things?

If the tithe is the Lord's as the Scripture says, and we use the tithes in our business, or the surplus which is also a special tithe, are we not using the Lord's part without his consent? Is there a good business man in the country who will claim that this is strictly business? What will we do when called upon to render an account when the conditions have changed and we have not the goods to pay? No wonder the instruction of the Master is: "Men should render an account in time as well as eternity." Is business business indeed?

WHAT PREPARATION SHOULD THE CHILD HAVE FOR ENTERING SCHOOL?

BABY TALK.

Before starting to school, the child should be taught, if it has acquired that language, to lay it aside. Of course, it is not the thing to keep a child at home because it has not done so; nor should its school privileges be denied because there is an impediment of speech which honest effort can not overcome. If the speech is not plain, schoolroom practice will help to correct it. The child who does not speak plainly is often the butt of ridicule by other children, which is torturing to a sensitive child; then, too, the effort spent in getting clear speech would advance the pupil in other directions. So, if it can come with good English on its little tongue, there is an advantage.

A mother of a little girl who spoke exceptionally plainly was asked how it came about. The reply was, "I do not know, unless it was that we never talked 'baby talk' to her nor encouraged her to talk it. When her pronunciation was imperfect, we took pains to help her to rectify it."

RESTLESSNESS.

Often children who have never been quiet except when asleep, come to school. Being of a nervous temperament, they are restless and in "perpetual motion." If their hands are still, their feet are not under control. If their feet are quiet their hands are in action. To such, the restraint of school life is apt to be irksome, making the schoolroom an uncomfortable place. Then, too, being not prompt in obedience and not good listeners, they lose the example of mates and the directions and instruction of the teacher.

To think that this restlessness can not be remedied, is a mistake. If a child has no control of its nervous system, it is in a serious condition and should have competent medical attention. The child who is allowed to pass its early life without practicing some little self-restraint and learning to put itself in a passive or relaxed condition, is woefully wronged. It is physically injured. Such a restless existence adds injury to an already tense nervous system. Everybody needs moments of rest and relaxation. Physicians rail at the rocking-chair habit. Why? For the same reason. The woman who thinks that she is resting herself in a jiggling rocker, is deceiving herself.

Ordinarily, people can have more control of nerves than is usually conceded, and they are not justified in allowing their nerves to run away with their better sense. The one who makes too little attempt to command his own nerves will sooner or later find himself being carried by an untamed engine to shattering destruction.

Hence, the command of quiet behavior at times from restless children, is to them a physical benefit.

The child must first grow (and that requires time) into little habits of self-restraint and self-control before it can do what is accomplished by its mates who have the power to promptly do as they will. This proves true in spite of the fact that in the primary schools of to-day the recitation hours are brief, the sessions are shortened, the work is varied and attractive, and the most capable, interesting teachers are in charge.

While the unfortunate child is taking a few weeks, or a few months, or even a year, to learn self-control, as the writer has known some cases to do,—classmates who have some power to attend and to obey directions have made a commendable start in their serious work. As a result, the restless child, in graded schools, must begin over again with the next incoming class.

ITS MARK IN THE WORLD.

It is natural and normal for people to want to express themselves in different ways. That desire is not outgrown in age, nor is it undeveloped in early youth. So soon as a child can hold things and discovers that he can make a scratch, it wishes for pencils, paper, scissors, and knife. In most homes these wants are supplied. At first he makes nothing but curious marks and scraps. What of it? There is being gained a control of little muscles which must be managed before what is willed can be made. A pair of scissors seems like a simple tool; yet, a child who has not learned to manipulate it can no more cut a simple model than a green rider can strike out on a bicycle.

It may seem strange to some that these little things should need mentioning. It is surprising how many six-year-old children come to school who are actually unable to hold a pencil or a pair of scissors. They do not all come from homes where lack of money is a powerful controlling agent, either.

As the use of these implements is necessary for the proper development of the child, it is best to supply slate, blackboard, pencils, paper, scissors and like material as soon as they can be used.

"But," says some mother, "I will not have my walls, furniture, and draperies ruined."

Oh, no. That does not need to be a part of the program. The child has a strong, compelling desire to make a mark in this world, and it will do it in spite of you. Therefore, if you are wise, you will direct that mark. To provide proper material and teach its use according to rules, will save your furniture and paint and allow the growing soul a chance for free development.

HANDLING BOOKS.

Along with training of this kind should go some pains in teaching a child to have a proper respect for books and periodicals. The child has lost much that is attractive, helpful and pleasure-giving in life and which can never be made up, if the first acquaintance with books is made in the schoolroom.

Here is one mother who never reads to her child, never allows it to examine a book nor touch a paper. A book has no more contents for her child than the empty box in the barn. Here is another who reads short stories and bits of verse to her boy, shows and explains to him pictures and allows him to carefully turn the leaves and look at the pictures by himself, and teaches him when he is done with it, to put it in its proper place.

These two children enter school together. Is it fair to expect that they should have equal regard for the personality of the book, that the book should have the same contents for both, and that their progress should be abreast?

“What makes the lamb love Mary so?”
The eager children cry.
‘O, Mary loves the lamb, you know.’
The teacher did reply.”

The child knows nothing of duty or obligation. It has no control of its affections. If older ones would have the love of human lambs, they must follow Mary's example and win it with love. In only this one way can the love and confidence be gained and held. The child never makes a mistake. It instinctively knows who loves it.

Recently a little fellow said to a visitor at the house: “I tell you, we've got a jolly good teacher this term. She's better than Miss A.”

Miss A is said to be one of the finest teachers in the place. “What is the matter with Miss A?” was asked.

“Oh, nothing; she does very well, but this teacher just loves every one of us.”

That bit of conversation tells volumes. The children felt the difference.

The emotions are great drawbridges connecting the child with, or separating it from, the outer world. If they can be kept in good working order, the child's inner self can be reached and touched. If not, it is as unapproachable as a castle surrounded by an impassable moat; and those who can not get into sympathy with the child say that it is queer and not to be understood. Do we often enough reflect that by our lack of sympathetic love, we drive timid children to strange, unaccountable ways, and then, cowardlike, cast the blame upon those who would come to us did we give them but half a chance?

Opening hymn, 664 Saints' Harp. Prayer. Scripture reading, 2 Peter 3: 10-14. Reading and discussion of select reading in Home Column. Roll call. Business. Hymn, 707, verses 1, 4, and 5. Closing prayer.

Prayer Union.

Bro. Wm. Plunkett, 3312 Mascher Street, Philadelphia, requests the prayers of all the Saints for his wife. She came to this country from Glasgow, Scotland, in July, and since that time has been very ill. Bro. Plunkett has four children and finds it difficult to carry on his work with his companion in the hospital. Let all remember her.

MANITOULIN ISLAND, Ontario, September 16.

Editors Herald: Silverwater is a new opening on the north-west part of the Island. The editor of the Manitoulin Reformer (published in Gore Bay) took a business trip to Meldrum Bay and en route was present at one of our meetings (at Silverwater) and in his paper for the 10th instant has this to say: “Mr. Shields, an elder of the Latter Day Saint Church, is still holding services in the schoolhouse, which are well attended. Although the elder's creed is not a popular one here, he has made a number of staunch friends who have been attracted to him by his ability to back up his arguments with Scripture and his intense earnestness in the doctrine he advocates.”

I also copy from some Silverwater items: “W. H. Farthing's new house is being rapidly completed and when ready for occupation will be one of the most commodious and comfortable residences on the Island.” Bro. Farthing is the first baptized on this portion of the Island and therefore the first-fruits of our labors in those parts, he first becoming interested in the life and conversation of Bro. W. R. Smith as they together traversed the forests in the interests of the Government in June last. Mr. Farthing, by the kindness of Mr. Henry Smith and other trustees, secured for me the use of a schoolhouse and at first furnished me with meals and cared for “Blind Billie,” while Mr. William Clark provided me a bed. Then Mr. James Wylie furnished both bed and board.

As a partial result of what the kindness of these people, through the goodness of God, made it possible for me to accomplish the following in Reformer of the 17th will explain: “Elder John Shields of the Latter Day Saints is still conducting meetings in the schoolhouse. So far he has been given an attentive hearing and has met with encouraging success, having already baptized nine converts. He has also started a Sunday-school in connection with his work there.” The above nine are all heads of families, except one young man.

On the 16th inst. I baptized James W. Burnett and wife of Burpee Springs, who were the first to give me a home there February last. The reverends have been very active against us, but their “weapons” hit wide of the mark, and their tongues have been “condemned,” one losing eight members at Silverwater and one at Burpee. Yours in the struggle,

JOHN SHIELDS.

TREBANOG, PORTH, Wales, September 9.

Editors Herald: Since entering upon missionary labors, things have not been so bright; the Aberaman Branch has sustained a loss in the Lewis family going to America, also Bro. Howell Jones and wife. The Penygraig Branch has lost Bro. D. Morris in the same way.

Our losses in this way tell badly because the branches are so weak numerically. And the missionary has to be tied somewhat to branches when we lose men like Bro. Evan Lewis. It seems that a “fever” catches them sometimes and they abandon the hope of doing good and defer it until they get to Zion. They forget that to-day is a day of sacrifice. We should sometimes consider that by moving out we are liable to injure the work of the Lord. However, every person is an agent to himself in this movement.

Bro. H. Ellis has moved from Llanelly owing to his business affairs to Llansamlet. Llanelly Branch is very low; most of the number are sisters. I have a brother in the States; he writes to me, “Stay in Wales, John, and help the work there.” Brn. Adolphus Edwards and Rees Jenkins had twice the ability that “John” has. I would gladly hail them to the land of leeks to rouse the work, because they are able brethren in Welsh or English.

We are doing our best here, but prejudice runs high. I have been with Bro. Thomas Jones laboring for a couple of weeks at Llanhilleth, a new place. Preachers and parsons rage there, and when Bro. Jones was preaching, a young man, undoubtedly sent by hire, commenced giving tracts about the Utah people and some extracts from the book, Hell upon Earth. Bro. Jones turned their own guns on them and referred them to the same book, giving pages where William Tarman, the ex-priest, exonerates us as a Church from the evils of Brighamism. Good was done on account of the Utah question that night.

We were credited last week, in the Pontypool Free Press, with interesting many people with our preaching. We would like to have some tracts to exchange with some. We have some good tracts, one by Bro. William Lewis and What we Believe.

Could some good brother send us a couple hundred of Temple Lot tracts, or Questions and Answers? We would like to give out small tracts to test interest before giving large and expensive tracts.

Some of our local brethren are doing well and we hope that they will realize how necessary it is for them to sustain the work, as it depends upon them when the missionaries are trying to do their duty in other parts. I have heard good reports of the work of Brn. Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans on this side of the water.

We trust that the Saints will do their best with the missionaries here by their faith, prayers, and means, so that if possible the gospel may yet be received by many.

We can report that where labor is performed prejudice is decreasing. I am in hopes of some obeying soon at Llanhilleth. We found a man and wife here whose people were Saints and are favorable to us. They are satisfied with our position but could never indorse the Brighamism of 1852, so while they have long believed the gospel, those evils prevented their being baptized.

Your brother in Christ.

EDGERTON, Ohio, September 23.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a word from this western portion of the Kirtland District would not be amiss. We see a large, beautiful field before us, and the counties receiving attention from the ministry (Williams, Paulding, and Defiance) constitute but a small territory compared with the whole. The gathered out ones are few, but the few are noble, self-sacrificing children of God.

In November, 1902, the writer visited Williams Center, holding a series of meetings in the old academy through the kindness of Bro. and Sr. Peter Smith. Since then Elders James Kelley and E. P. Schmidt have labored and opened up Farmer Center and Sherwood, occupying union churches at both places, with good interest and attendance. Later on Elder Beckley came into the field, but pushed farther south into the region where Bro. Erter resides and still further, occupying at Antwerp. During this time the writer wended his way into Defiance, then south to Arthur, where we obtained the use of a union church among a class of Christians dating from Antioch. We held a series of meetings with large crowds and fine interest, lodging with Bro. and Sr. Davis, who had moved into that locality from Baldwin, Indiana, but formerly from Flint, Indiana. Sr. Davis is one of the charter members at Flint, dating her connection with the Church from 1895 when the writer baptized about twenty-two persons in the mill-pond at that place.

In August we returned there to Bethel—the religious name—Arthur—the municipal name—and held another short series of meetings, and baptized Sr. Davis' two daughters, Vivia and Lillie,—traveling three miles through dust and heat to the Auglaize River, where the ordinance was performed. A large crowd witnessed the scene as those beautiful girls dressed in pure white walked out into the river to follow their Lord and Master in the "bath of regeneration." The highest (iron) bridge that we have ever seen spans the river at this point, and the baptism must have been solemnly beautiful to the crowd gathered thereon.

So far these points are open, but the usual characteristics prevail—prejudice and misrepresentation. The church and schoolhouse have been locked against Elders Beckley and Schmidt, with no reason assigned for the latter, and no other for the former than simply "the conference ordered it" (U. B.). This is in the neighborhood of Bro. Erter's. Seems strange that particular schoolhouse should be closed, when where I am at present we have occupied the schoolhouse for a week by consent of directors, with those men present every night. They say, "We have no kick coming." And only about fifteen miles from the closed district!

At Arthur we were happily surprised in meeting Sr. Bodenbender (nee Matheson) of Western Iowa. She was happy in the faith and rejoiced that opportunity was offered to hear the gospel once more. She was walking in sadness because of the death of her mother, Sr. Peterson of Gallands Grove. She has another sister living in the community, who is also a Latter Day Saint.

Just at present the union church is occupied every Sunday by college students, with a view of selecting a pastor for the coming year. I suppose the people are treated to some "flowery almonds" in the contest. I do not blame the people there for wanting the best, as they have been supplied with quite poor food. But in those people one will meet intelligent Bible reasoners. They are in advance of the sects, and this point alone will help them get back to Antioch.

So the people in these parts are being stirred, friends are being made to the cause, and Satan growls occasionally, while the real, true gospel is preached. All in a new territory! We are endeavoring to keep up action, and with Martin's cannon balls (?) to dodge, and some small grape to hurl, and complying with music committee's requests, and keeping pace with our appointments, and preaching funerals, we have found a busy season so far. But our success is not so great in this field as in Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana. Clouds of discouragement will arise; it seems that the horizon of mind in the great religious realm grows narrower as the years go by, and it is so hard to get the people to see a simple truth. Audiences at this point are not large, but they are away ahead of Noah's audience in the ark, i. e., the people. They seem interested and respectful. We sow the seed, trusting for God to give increase and fruit.

Hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, August 29.

Editors Herald: I inclose in this a letter and an extract from another one, from Elder Pinga of Hao; am expecting a letter from the branch secretary with a statement of the number of the Saints lost in the storm at Hikueru; so far as we can learn at present there were about twenty members of that branch lost, besides their children.

Sr. Laura Gilbert has been here from the Tuamotus for about three weeks, was quite poorly on her arrival, but is better now; we expect Bro. Gilbert here in a few weeks.

Many of the natives are in poor circumstances now by reason of the losses of the storm; not so much because of their personal losses—although their boats were a great loss to them—but by reason of the great loss sustained by the traders, who now are not able to give credit to the natives, so that those who do not have cocoanuts or pearl-shells can not get food, except fish and cocoanuts, which are generally plentiful enough for food. Although this was their principal food for many years, since the white people have furnished them with flour and canned foods, they do not relish their former diet.

We expect to send a few bags of flour up to Taenga as soon as we can find a vessel going up there. It costs at the Tuamotus six dollars, Chili money, a fifty-pound sack, which is about two and a half dollars, American coin, for fifty pounds of flour, and other foods are in proportion.

There are quite a number of diving machines at work now in the Tuamotus diving for pearl-shell; there are fifteen in Hao and its vicinity, and Turepu, a teacher in the branch at Raroia, died from the effects of staying too long below in one of them, lately; he lived about an hour after he was hauled up into the boat.

The printers are getting along very slowly with the Doctrine and Covenants, and we hear that the Utah people have issued an edition of the Book of Mormon in the Samoan dialect. Their elders here tell me that it is in Tahitian—if so, we will soon be supplied with all three of the Church books (if certain passages in the Book of Mormon are correctly translated) and the Saints will be thus better qualified to maintain their faith and the Religio get more in harmony with the general association in America.

By a glance at the HERALD I notice the death of Bro. Robert Newcomb of Nova Scotia, one of the first-fruits of the labor of Emma's brother, George N. Davison, and one of the first baptized in that field of labor after our arrival there. A firm Latter Day Saint and an honorable, just, and upright citizen has passed to his rest till the morning of the first resurrection. We feel sad to lose the prospect of meeting here again, but will soon meet in a happier place. May God bless the bereaved.

We are well and still striving to hold aloft the banner of truth, and think that the work is progressing here, although slowly.

May peace abide upon all the true Israel of God.

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

JOPLIN, Missouri, September 16.

Editors Herald: Since reading the letter from Sr. Sherwin, of Tulsa, Indian Territory, whom I know personally and have heard relate this experience, the thought occurred to me that my narration as to how I became a Latter Day Saint might be interesting and possibly helpful to others. Sometimes Saints are prevented by environments, sickness, distance, or some other cause from often attending the testimony-meetings, and thus deprived can get much encouragement and help from reading the experiences of isolated members. Such has been the case with many.

When I came to Joplin, eleven years ago, I knew nothing of the restored gospel, and was as regards it in "darkness that could be felt," though considered to have made some advancement in things spiritual by others in the Church with which I was connected. I had at one time made a profession of sanctification, and thought I had received almost all the light there was for me, but I still kept seeking for more, and some five years ago became very much discouraged. It seemed to me that the Spirit of God was not in the services I attended. There seemed no power attending the preached word or the prayer-meetings. I spoke to my pastor of this. He said, "It is that way all over the Church."

I had sacrificed much for my convictions. Had been sent out as a missionary teacher to the Indians (Lamanites) and labored several years among them. Stricken with an affliction of partial deafness, unfitting me for schoolroom work, I resigned my position and returned to the States. Some years after, I married and came to Joplin.

About five years ago I called in to see a stranger—a lady who with her family lived next door to me. I was teaching a Sunday-school class (Methodist), and I asked the lady, now Sr. C. H. Barnett, to let me have her two little boys in my class. She replied, "We send them to our own Sunday-school." I asked "What denomination?" she replied, "The Latter Day Saints." "Oh," I said, "then you are a Mormon?" "Perhaps so, but not as you understand it," she replied. So I asked her to tell me of her Church, and she lent me her books and papers, and she and her husband explained and answered my questions and objections. It was a memorable winter to me. I (with my husband) began to read. When I began, I looked on the Book of Mormon and examined it in much the same way as I would have the Mahomedan Koran, but this soon gave way on my part to wonder and delight. We read the Voice of Warning, Book of Mormon Vindicated, Faulty Creeds, Joseph the Seer, Braden-Kelley Debate, Probation after Death, and Manuscript Found, besides all the Heralds and Ensigns in the house, also the Instructor.

Bro. C. R. Duncan, now dead, stopped at Bro. Barnett's on his way from Virginia. I plied him with questions and was instructed further. By this time I was determined to investigate the subject fully, and you may know I was pretty well shaken up and my man-made creeds shattered.

I struggled against my convictions at first, but as had been my way in years gone by, as I left the Church of my parents (the United Presbyterian) for the Methodist, as soon as I found more and better light (as I thought), I followed it regardless of consequences, only concerned that I might find the only true and living way and walk in it. My husband said, "Oh! you have changed Churches so many times, now to join something else! Cut yourself off from all your old associations!" He thought it would be too hard for me, but like a true gentleman stood by me when I was baptized, said he would never oppose me in my religious convictions.

I went one night to the Blendville church and heard a sermon by Bro. Leslie English, followed, I think, by a short talk by Bro. J. L. Lancaster, who afterwards as president of the branch, further instructed me. I seemed to know that I must be baptized and straightway made my preparations and was led into the water by Bro. J. W. Thorpe and confirmed the same afternoon. I could hear very little of what was said, but was told that it was prophesied that afternoon that I should have a knowledge of the gospel. I have never doubted the divinity of the work from that time to this, and such a sweet peace filled my soul. I felt that I had done all I knew how to do, and said to Bro. Thorpe, "Now I have obeyed the gospel, been baptized and confirmed; what have I a right to expect?" He replied, "You have a right to the fulfillment of all the promises." There is a passage in the 37th Psalm that will, I verily believe, be verified to me if I am faithful, for it has already been partly fulfilled: "Delight thyself also in the Lord; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart. Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass."

A year ago in answer to my prayers my little daughter Nellie, eight years old, was baptized. I had instructed her as well as I was able, and she had not seemed willing; said she was afraid of the water. One morning she came to me and said, "Mamma, I asked God last night to make me willing to be baptized and he did; now I am ready," and she never faltered. The next day she said, "Oh, I am so happy because I have been baptized and it will never have to be done over again." I thought to myself, "No, this is the one true baptism that needeth not to be repented of."

I could write more experience of blessings and of healings at ministrations, but time and space will not permit. Pray for me that I may live worthy.

Your sister,

JENNIE W. LIGGETT.

FORESTVILLE, Michigan, September 19.

Editors Herald: The work in Eastern Michigan is moving along nicely. The debate held at Shabbona between Elder J. J. Cornish, and R. B. Brown of the Disciple Church, has now passed into history, but will long be remembered by many who attended; the Saints were strengthened and many outsiders were convinced that we have the truth. Our cause was ably defended. Bro. John seems to be at home in debate.

Two charts were used by Bro. Cornish, one representing the Latter Day Saints, the other the Disciple Church. The people could easily see the difference between the two Churches, Elder Brown called the chart representing the Disciple Church, "Cornish's Cartoon;" it made his side look very inferior and he felt bad about it. Before the debate closed we baptized nine, and the day after it closed four were baptized, making thirteen in all. We are satisfied that the debate did good.

Ever praying for the advancement of the cause of Christ, I am,
Your coworker,
WM. DAVIS.

CHATHAM, Ontario, September 19.

Dear Herald: I saw a good piece in last week's HERALD in regard to church building which I think is the proper way of helping this good work move.

The Chatham Branch have their new building nearly completed; it will be a good frame building, twenty-eight by fifty, finished inside up to date and lighted by electricity and situated in North Chatham on the corner of James and Head Streets, almost, you might say, in the heart of the city.

Some of the Saints of the district have helped us in our long struggle to get a church and save the heavy expense in renting halls, etc., for which we are thankful and hope more will come to our aid; the Saints and outsiders in the city are doing nobly.

We expect to have a church opening soon after our district conference to which all will be cordially invited.

Yours for truth and progress,
J. H. TYRRELL.

MURRAY, Kentucky, September 18.

Editors Herald: To my mind there is a place for every Saint to work where he can do good and help build up the kingdom of God in the earth. Let every one learn his duty and then perform it, is the command of God to the Church. How many of us are complying with this commandment? Brother, are you? Sister, are you? Answer this. When you read this letter, remember we are to learn every duty, then perform it. The first duty we owe to God is to seek to build up his kingdom and establish his righteousness, then other things can be added.

How then can we help in building up the kingdom of God? If we are holding the priesthood, we must see to it that we manifest the Spirit of the Master in all of our works. Be not slothful in our works, but wise as serpents and harmless as doves in everything. Try and let our lights shine so others can pattern after ours. Let us be able to say what Paul said one time, "Be ye followers of me as I am of Christ." Do not do your own will but the will of the Father. Our wills must be set aside in the service of God.

In the first place, you must remember your teachings can not be effective unless they are made so by your examples. Let me ask you some questions that may teach you to learn your duty.

Do you pay your tithing and offerings? If not, then there is that much of gospel teaching you can not teach to others.

Again, do you commit sin willfully? If so, there your teaching will be halted again. Your mission is to teach the Saints to sin not. So if you are all the time doing wrong, committing sin every day, how can you claim to be a follower of Christ?

Sin is of the Devil, you remember, and when you are sinning you are following after him, not Christ. Do not excuse yourself by saying, "I do not want to sin. But I just can not help it. I will get over it sometime." Remember, if you say you can not keep from sinning, you deny God's giving you your agency. With every temptation he has made a way for our escape. Be honest and say, "I just did not want to do right that time." I have never been able yet to believe a man can not do right if he wants to.

Do you ever speak evil of anybody? If so this will block your teaching to some extent.

What is your mission, to preach the gospel, or to tell the difference between you and the Utah Church? If it is to tell the difference between you and the Utah Church, tell me in your next letter where that commission is recorded. I have not seen it recorded yet in either one of the three books that govern us. Remember, the Lord says, "The honest ones of that Church will return in the Lord's own due time." Let not the ministers for Christ prevent their coming. There is a way the ministers for Christ can prevent their coming. How is it? To my mind it can be done by raking them over the coals all the time.

I have in mind a statement of one of the writers of the New Testament where he refers to some that had departed from the faith. He says, "they went out from us." But in all his preaching after that I never read where he took the time to tell us the difference between them and the Church they went out from. I can call to mind a member of the Utah Church who was almost ready to come into the Reorganized Church, but when one of our elders raked him a little and called him by bad names, he became disheartened and would not investigate our claims any more. To my mind, the Spirit was leading this man and if he had not been prevented by the elder who was anxious for the people to know the difference between us and the Utah people, that man would have soon been a member of the true church of Christ.

Now a word to all the members of the Church. Is it your duty to pay tithes and offerings? If you have learned this much, then prove your faith perfect by your works. Your faith can be made perfect only by your works. Do not wait one day, if you believe in the tithing law, until you perfect your faith in that principle of the gospel by your works. If you say you believe in the tithing law and do not pay your tithes, your faith is dead in that principle of the gospel.

Do you believe it is your duty to help pay off the College debt? Since the Lord has said the debt must be paid, if you believe it is your duty to help pay that debt, make your faith perfect by your works. Remember, faith without works is dead.

Do you believe it is right for the Saints to live by every word of God? If so, prove that faith perfect by your works.

Do you believe it is right to do unto all men as you would they should do to you? If you believe the above, make your faith perfect by doing unto all men as you would they should do to you.

I have in mind one man who hired another to do some hauling for him. The man who did the work did two good days' hauling in two of the long summer days. When the time came to settle for the work, the question was asked, "How much do you charge for the two days' hauling?" The answer was, "Whatever you think is right you can pay me." So the man paid him one dollar and twenty-five cents for the two days' hauling and the man was forced to take the one dollar and twenty-five cents, which was only sixty-two and one-half cents per day for himself and his team, and the man was compelled to board himself and team while he was doing the work. This same man could have gotten two dollars and fifty cents per day for himself and his team if he had worked for another man. In this case the man who did the hauling was a poor man with a large family of small children, while the man who thought it was right to pay him one dollar and twenty-five cents was in good circumstances with plenty of everything around him.

If I were to say the two men referred to above were members of the Latter Day Saint Church, the editor would not want to publish this letter, and if I were to say they were members of some popular Church, he still would refuse to do so, on the grounds that it would be too personal, and so it would. So I shall not say what faith they belonged to. I heard the man who did the hauling grumbling about it and he said some things that he would not have said if the man had allowed him a reasonable sum for his work.

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Remember, dear Saints, you are making a record here in this life you will have to meet some day. The recording angel is keeping a record in heaven and we will be compelled to meet it after a while.

So in conclusion I will answer a question that was put to me some years ago, "Why is not every man good?" It is because he does not want to be. So let us all learn our duty, and strive with all our hearts to perform it to the building up of the kingdom of God on the earth. In the faith, Editors Herald: We have fine weather here of the kind,—but it is a wet kind. It has rained thirteen days, and this is the fourteenth day. It is not raining this morning, but do not know what will happen before night. The wet weather has hindered outdoor preaching, and it has almost made me tired wishing for better weather.

I left Wales the last of July, for the mission conference. While I was in Wales I did what I could to tell the people the "old, old story." I think they like the story all right, but it is the one that tells it, and the way that he tells it, that is not altogether agreeable to them. I have often thought of the statement of the Psalmist David, "Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing?" The Welsh people with their religion are dying hard, and instead of accepting the truth, as they should, they drift off into the "go as you please way." They will not be turned in a day, or a year, to the truth as it is revealed in the Scriptures and taught by the Latter Day Saints. I feel sorry for them, but it is the story repeated, that has often been told, "Utah," "Salt Lake," "Mormonism." The preacher will say, "There goes a Saint." The man of the town will say, "There goes a Saint." The little boys and girls will say, "There goes a Saint," and the drunkard will say the same thing. Generally they look on the name with contempt, and upon all who bear the name with disgust. Such a field as that I have been sent to labor in the last year. Still, for all that, I am sure that God has a people there and in due time they will turn from those ways and accept the truth. Brn. Morgan, Jones, and Jenkins have my sympathy. I do pray that God will bless them and the Welsh Mission.

My mission for this year is the Birmingham District. Am now doing what I can in and around the Summerfield Branch. Bro. Meredith is in charge and is a willing worker.

Outdoor preaching is hard on a person's lungs and throat. Two or three years is enough for any ordinary man. Bro. Rushton has been at it now for five years, I believe, so he must be extraordinary. Brethren, be careful with the young men, or the time will come when they will not be able to speak, neither outdoors nor indoors.

Well, along with the preaching, we do a little tracting. So we have been meeting every Sunday morning at half past nine at the room (Americans would call it a hall), and after prayer we start off "two and two," with twenty-five tracts each. When these are given away we return for Sunday-school which meets at eleven o'clock in the forenoon. Last Sunday eight of us were in the tract business, and we gave away two hundred tracts. Those engaged in the work are Brn. Meredith, Edwards, Johnson, a young boy of the Sunday-school, and Mrs. Nelly and Blanche Edwards and Annie Swan. So we are now casting bread upon the water and we will see the result by and by.

Last Saturday I had the pleasure of leading three precious souls into the waters of baptism, my first in this mission. Sixteen months have passed since I left home and dear ones to tell the people of these islands the story of Jesus and his love. I have no occasion to apologize for God or his word, so I tell them the story as plain and as straight as I can put it in the English language. Of course, some do not like it, and some do. I have my way in telling it; advice is always accepted.

Your brother,

JOHN DAVIS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, September 19.

Dear Herald: The debate between Bro. Mintun and Elder Halbeslaben, of the Church of God, closed last night. The first proposition of five nights our brother affirmed the divinity of our Church, and presented our claims in an able manner. When he spoke of the apostasy of the Church his opponent denied a complete apostasy, saying "the gates of hell were not to prevail," that the Church went into the wilderness, but that the Holy Spirit was never taken from the earth and quoted Hebrews 11, where the saints were scattered and hid in caves and dens of the earth. Here they perpetuated the church of God. In his negative argument he denied the trinity of the Godhead and also denies the existence of our Savior, Jesus Christ, prior to his birth in Bethlehem.

Elder Halbeslaben grew up in the German Lutheran Church, then associated with the Advent Church, and later himself formed the Church of God. He affirms that he is a chosen instrument in God's hands to do a special work in these last days. In the second proposition he affirmed the divinity of his Church for the five nights. The debate was carried on in the spirit of kindness and without a discord.

Quite a number of citizens attended and the Saints of the city were present as much as they could be. They were pleased with the able manner in which Bro. Mintun defended our faith and they listened attentively to his arguments as also to the effort of his opponent. We believe good will come from the debate in that our work is presented to a much wider circle of people. Bro. Mintun may later write of the debate, as the faith and doctrines of the Church of God are not known to the Saints.

Bro. Mintun has now labored continuously in the city for two months, except his absence at the reunion. The good that has come to the Church is plainly seen, yet the amount can not be estimated. The Saints have been brought together in a bond of union that will not be easily broken. We all better understand the gospel, the law of God, and our duties as children of the light. There is life and activity in the Church; those formerly inactive are now at work; young and timid members have put on the armor of fighting soldiers. Bro. Mintun has endeared himself to the Church in a strong manner. He goes to his home in Woodbine the first of next week to be with his family for a short time, when he will return to the district and continue his missionary labors.

Bro. M. H. Cook was at his home here last week from his mission work in Clinton. Bro. S. K. Sorensen has been in the city a few days, coming in from Eagle Grove. Bro. S. F. Cushman has acted as one of the moderators during the debate.

A. A. REAMS.

HICKORY HILL, Pennsylvania, September 21.

Editors Herald: I just closed a series of services at this place, having preached eight times. The crowd increased from the beginning. The services were held in a union church. Bro. D. C. Carter lives near this place and believes in warning his neighbors, so he was instrumental in effecting the opening. He and his family are well thought of in this community. The living of faithful, devoted, consecrated lives, coupled with honesty, uprightness, and integrity on the part of the Saints, puts in the hands of the ministry a weapon of defense extremely difficult to gainsay or resist. There was good interest shown and the best of attention given all through and many expressed themselves as being very much pleased. Some of those who did not come to the services took it upon themselves to do considerable talking about us, but it did not amount to much. At the suggestion of some of the friends I asked the congregation how many of them would like to have me come back and preach again, when I could so arrange. Nearly every hand went up.

In this day and age all it needs for the triumph of truth is to gain the ears of the people. Priestcraft, superstition, ignorance, religious intolerance, tyranny, and bigotry are still to be met.

This is a time when men of God can demonstrate their loyalty to the truth and save themselves and assist in saving others from this untoward generation. "Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" is a motto for time and eternity. As a rule men love liberty. They will stand oppression usually about so long, then something will burst the bands that bound them and let them go free. The French Revolution is an apt illustration of this fact. Give men liberty to think, to believe, and utter freely their convictions, and priestcraft, superstition, and spiritual darkness will not remain in their company.

I thank God for the liberty, privileges, and rights to be enjoyed by both ministry and laity of this Church; am glad we can tell our people to go and hear any and all others and if they find anything that suits them better, accept it if they wish. Our ministers are unrestricted when in the pulpit. Speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is the watchword all along the line. Our creed will not change. Our clergy, whether in England, Canada, the islands of the sea, Maine, or California, preach the same old Jerusalem gospel. They may have a different way of telling the story, yet it is the same old story. As a rule they are quite able to tell it to the satisfaction of the truth-seeker. I look for this Church to make rapid strides forward in the near future. We are preaching a gospel the people demand. If only they could understand!

Our conference at Baldwin, Maryland, September 5 and 6 was a pleasing one. Small number present, yet quite earnest, and interested, in the progress of the cause. Elder Hackett of Wisconsin was expected to be present, but failed to put in appearance. I am still alone in this large field and will have to try to cover the ground and occupy as opportunity affords. I can always be busy in the city where I spend most of my time. There are a number of scattered Saints throughout the district that must be looked after as well. Brn. Angus and Bacon and others of the local laborers look after the interests of the work in Philadelphia in my absence. I will say again, if any of the Saints or friends have relatives or friends in the city whom they would like me to visit, I will be pleased to do so. I still rejoice in the gospel restored and feel hopeful and happy in the service of God and the Church.

In bonds,

MONTE VISTA, Colorado, September 17.

Editors Herald: During the conference of the Colorado Mission held at Colorado Springs, Colorado, September 4, 5, and 6, the Spirit of the Master was with us to a marked degree. All seemed encouraged.

I was called to this place by telephone Sunday, September 13, to preach the funeral sermon of Dean Clyde Kennedy, aged thirteen, son of Bro. G. O. and Sr. M. Kennedy. The prospects for preaching here at present are not good owing to the scattered condition of the Saints. I am on my way to Durango and New Mexico.

May the Lord abundantly bless his work is my prayer.

Oakland Reunion.

The Northern California reunion has passed and become an item of history. The memory of it will, in the main, be pleasant, and the real, spiritual good accomplished will be widespread. A spirit of peace and good will pervaded the camp, bringing joy to the Saints assembled. The prayer-meetings were peaceful and spiritual and the sermons attended by a goodly degree of light and liberty, and were well received by those in attendance.

The organization was effected, September 4, by choosing the writer and Bro. J. C. Foss as associate presidents, and Joseph Ferris as secretary, Brn. John Driver and D. Joice as police; the latter were kept busy by the scavenger-boy element.

A sudden gust of wind on Saturday drew about half the pins of the large tent and the canvas was torn and other damage done. The center pole, however, withstood the strain, and through the steady nerve and quick understanding of Bro. J. Driver, assisted by others, all was soon righted, and went merrily on.

There were twenty tents on the ground, well filled with happy Saints. The attendance from without was quite good for this climate.

The preachers were J. C. Foss, F. C. Smith, R. J. Parker, E. Keeler, A. Carmichael, C. E. Crumley, C. A. Parkin, and the writer. There were twenty-three sermons, nine prayer-meetings, four business sessions, one Religio, one Sunday-school, and one entertainment, making forty services in all. Bro. E. Keeler had charge of the administrations, and reports thirty-six.

There was no serious illness on the ground. We mention among those who did good service in opening meetings and conducting prayer-meetings, Brn. J. A. Saxe, Joseph Flory, John Lawn, J. M. Range, J. Peat, J. B. Carmichael, C. A. Parkin, J. A. Anthony, E. R. Williams, L. Dagner, E. S. Chase, and Bro. Furguson, who is in the naval service on Goat Island here.

Bro. A. Carmichael had a class in Sunday-school normal work, and accomplished good work. The entertainment was of a high order; the closing piece, "The Legend of the Cross," was absolutely sublime. The great success of this is due to the untiring efforts of Srs. Saxe, Driver, Terry, Mable Cockerton, and some others.

The next reunion will be in Sacramento, where also will be held the next district conference, the conference convening on March 12, 1904. Three children were baptized by Bro. R. J. Parker and confirmed by Brn. Parker, Smith, and Terry. We now turn from the busy, laborious scenes of reunion to our mission and local work again, with a goodly degree of satisfaction with results.

J. M. TERRY.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Roxey Cooper, Seminole, Alabama, September 15: "We had a grand meeting Sunday, the 13th. Our good old president, Bro. Jesse Reeder, preached for us; we also enjoyed the Spirit in our prayer and testimony meeting. We met with Sr. Reeder in a prayer-meeting. She has been in Florida for about two months and has been near death's door, but our heavenly Father has enabled her to meet with us once more. I want all of the Saints to pray for me that I may be healed of my afflictions and be able to help my husband to raise our children in the strait and narrow way."

Sr. Anna Ballard, of Ozark, Missouri, sends in her renewal for the HERALD, and says: "I am one of the isolated ones. We long for the day when we can meet with those of like faith again and attend meetings. We would care for an elder if one would come. We should be glad to have Bro. J. C. Chrestensen come. There are some here who seem to take to the work and like it very much. As there are no denominations here, I think a good work could be done. May the Saints remember me in their prayers."

James P. Sappenfield wrote from Byrneville, Indiana, September 21, that he has been laboring in the Southern Indiana District at the Rego, Palmyra, Union, Derby, and Byrneville Branches, and assisted in the organization of the Millstone Branch, twelve miles below Derby on the Ohio River. He has been associated with Elders George Jenkins, W. C. Marshall, and J. W. Metcalf, and Priest Charles Harp. He adds: "I want to say for Bro. Charley, that he is a harp; not of a thousand strings, but of one string, and that plays to the tune of the old Jerusalem gospel and never runs down. Bro. Charley, as he is familiarly known, is liked by everybody in Southern Indiana, and if you have any more Harps like this one, send them along, we can make good use of them."

Bro. Edward A. Lewis, Philadelphia, September 22: "I think we should remember those of the ministry who leave their home for the gospel's sake. They have so much to contend with and we should remember them in our prayers from time to time that they may accomplish the work which is assigned to them. It brings tears to my eyes when I see how they are treated in some places where they try to bring glad tidings to the people.

"When I first came into the Church I got along all right, but I went around with people of the world and I soon fell away into forbidden paths. I thank my Father in heaven for bringing me back to my first love. I would advise those of the Church, especially the young, to attend church and try to do their duty at all times, that we may be faithful unto the end."

Bro. B. F. Renfroe writing from Davidson, Oklahoma, September 21, reports having been busily engaged in laboring in Texas and Oklahoma. During August he and Bro. Simmons held forth in Dallas County, Texas. He adds: "I have had some splendid meetings in Oklakoma of late, crowded houses at all the places and more calls than I can fill, and the best of all is the Lord has blessed me with his Spirit in my efforts to preach and I hope to so live as to be worthy of continued blessings. I have had some opposition of late which may result in a debate; the Christian brethren are not liking to have us preach to their little flocks, but we are telling the gospel in its fullness."

W. D. Ellis wrote from Belding, Michigan, September 21: "I baptized four here yesterday. More to follow soon, I think. Interest is fair."

Bro. Frank Stiner, Theodore, Alabama, September 22: "We can not go before the Judge when the time comes and say that we were not taught, for we know that we have been instructed and are still being taught by God's servant. Will we heed the advice given or will we just let it pass unnoticed? Wake up, Saints, there must be no sleeping soldiers in the army of the Lord! We are expecting Bro. I. N. Roberts to preach for us Sunday. Our district conference at Three Rivers Branch passed off pleasantly. Two were baptized."

Writing from Raton, New Mexico, September 25, J. M. Stubbart says: "We expect to baptize some here Sunday. I baptized two last Sunday."

Conference Minutes.

Philadelphia.—District conference convened at Baldwin, Maryland, September 6 and 7, President W. E. LaRue in the chair, E. B. Hull, clerk. Ministry reporting: Elders W. E. LaRue and H. H. Bacon; Priests A. D. Angus, M. O. Matthews, and D. C. Carter; Teachers: H. Carr, W. Atkinson, and J. P. Fowler; Deacons H. Hargon, E. Lewis, W. Lewis, and I. Humes. Branches reporting: Philadelphia 133, Baldwin 51. Bishop's agent reported: On hand at last report, $1,243.61; received, $400.50; expended, $1,605; balance on hand, $39.11. Treasurer reported: On hand at last report, $5.03; collected, $2.19; total, $7.22. A communication was read from the Scranton, Pennsylvania, Branch, asking for admission into the Philadelphia District, which was granted. Resolved that we favor the enactment of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the practice of polygamy in all States and Territories under the jurisdiction of the Republic. A bill of $4 for the expenses of the president and secretary was presented and ordered paid. The following officers were elected for the ensuing term: District president, W. E. LaRue; secretary and treasurer, E. B. Hull. John Zimmermann was sustained as Bishop's agent. Preaching by W. E. LaRue and A. D. Angus. Adjourned to meet in Philadelphia in February, date left to district president.

Florida.—District conference convened with the Calhoun Branch, September 4, 1903. Bro. I. N. Roberts, missionary in charge, was chosen to preside, W. M. Hawkins was made secretary pro tem. Motion prevailed that visiting brethren take part in the conference; minutes of previous conference were read and approved. Ministry reporting: I. N. Roberts, S. D. Allen, W. A. West, W. J. Booker, E. Powell, J. G. Vickery, W. M. Hawkins, Asa E. Bailey, W. Dixon, and G. C. Sellers. Branches reporting: Pleasant View 25, Calhoun 60, Santa Rosa 48.

Bishop's agent said he had no report to make, had received nothing and paid out nothing. Report of elders' court was received, read, and adopted. Van S. Jernigan plead guilty to charge and asked forgiveness which was granted. Ellen Fowler was found guilty of charge and according to decision of elders' court and at her own request her name was taken from the records. J. N. Hawkins was found guilty of charge and he was allowed thirty days to go before his branch to make confession and ask forgiveness. If he failed to make confession in the time allowed, the next district conference will vote on his expulsion. W. A. West was sustained as district president, S. D. Allen, vice-president; B. L. Jernigan was elected district clerk. Preaching by Brn. I. N. Roberts, J. G. Vickery, S. D. Allen, E. Powell. All was done in a spirit of meekness. Adjourned to meet at Coldwater on Saturday before first Sunday in December, 1903, at 10 a. m.

Convention Minutes.

Eastern Colorado.—Convened at Colorado Springs, Colorado, Friday, September 4, at 10 a. m. Sr. L. A. Schmutz, superintendent, in the chair. District officers reported. Schools reporting: Rocky Mountain, Pueblo, Wray, Colorado Springs, Denver, and Fairview. Some time was spent in the discussion of Home Department work. Adjourned to meet at Denver, the first Friday in March, 1904. L. A. Schmutz, superintendent, Louisa Fishburn, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Northern California District: I make this appeal to you to help me in the discharge of the duties of my calling. By the first of November I will be entirely out of funds to supply the elder's families, unless you come to the rescue. I expected to get one or two hundred dollars, but I only received about three dollars at the late reunion at Oakland. I can only pay out funds in hand, and the allowances of the families are urgent for them to have. Let us "labor together." No one is excused from doing his part "according to the law of the gospel"—which is a tenth of the increase. Please let me hear from you at once. Whatever you intend to do, do now.

Two-Day Meetings.

Meetings will be held in Bay Minnette, Florida, second Saturday and Sunday in October, and in Bluff Creek, Mississippi, third Saturday and Sunday in October. F. P. Scarcliff, president of district.

The true foundations of democracy are in the character of the people themselves, that is, of the individuals who constitute the democracy. These are first, intelligence—the power to weigh evidence and draw sound conclusions, based on adequate information; second, manliness, that which the Romans called virility, and which at bottom is dignified self-respect, self-control, and that self-assertion and jealousy of encroachment which marks those who, knowing their rights, dare maintain them; third, and equally important, the capacity of cooperation, that willingness and ability to organize, to trust their leaders, to work together for a common interest and toward a common destiny, a capacity which we variously designate as patriotism, public spirit, or self-government. These are the basic qualities which underlie democracy—intelligence, manliness, cooperation. If they are lacking, democracy is futile. Here is the problem of races, the fundamental division of mankind. Race differences are established in the very blood and physical constitution. They are most difficult to eradicate and they yield only to the slow processes of the centuries. Races may change their religion, their forms of government and industry, and their language, but underneath all these changes they may continue the physical, mental and moral capacities and incapacities which determine the real character of their religion, government, industry, and literature. Race and heredity furnish the raw material, education and environment furnish the tools, with which and by which social institutions are fashioned; and in a democracy race and heredity are the more decisive, because the very education and environment which fashion the oncoming generations are themselves controlled through universal suffrage by the races themselves whom it is hoped to educate and elevate.—From the "Race and Democracy" (in the series "Racial Composition of the American People") by John R. Commons, in the Chautauquan for September.

A magazine which would be of great service to every mother in the land is the American Mother published at Battle Creek, Michigan, and edited by Mary Wood-Allen, M. D. It fairly teems with good things on child-raising and advice to mothers. A glance at the contents of the September number shows this. Some of the articles in that number are: "Cause and Cure of 'Race Suicide,'" "School Preparation for Children," "The Wider Field of American Parenthood," "The Nervous Child," "House-keepers or Home-makers," "The Children's Thought," "Methods of Teaching Morals," "Children's Quarrels." Besides these are the regular departments.

Open Court for September contained the following: "Charles C. Bonney," an Appreciation by the Editor; "Mesha's Declaration of Independence," by the Editor; "The Taj Mehal," by A. C. Albers; "The Praise of Hypocrisy," by G. T. Knight, D. D.; "The Religion of Enlightenment," by the Editor; "Sketch of Mr. C. C. Bonney's Career," by the Editor; "Impressions of Italy," Emilie Castellar; "The Hiawatha Legend," Book Notices; Notes. Open Court is published at Chicago, Illinois.

The Electrical Review still keeps abreast of the times. A glance at the contents of the last number convinces one that it is determined to give its readers a great diversity of articles on timely topics. The issue contains thirty-six pages of wholesome reading on subjects connected with one of the leading technical professions of the day.

"The Socialistic Legislation of New Zealand" is the subject of an article in the Review of Reviews for October by Doctor Lucien C. Warner, who has recently made a journey to the Antipodes and observed the actual operation of the much-discussed laws which Australia and New Zealand have placed on their statute-books in recent years. Doctor Warner's article is supplemented by a significant contribution of "A Tired Australian" on "Trade-Unionism and Democracy in Australia."

SENIOR EDITOR ABROAD.

Our stay in London was from the evening of the 8th to the morning of the 19th of September. On the evening of the 8th we attended the session of the Religio, presided over by an able young brother, H. Fletcher. The evening exercises included the usual opening service, and the reading of a paper on the subject of the laying on of hands, by Bro. F. Funness, quite a well written paper and read in good form. This was followed by a solo sung by a young sister, E. Newman, who sang with feeling and in good voice. After this there were speeches upon the subject of the Religio by Bro. Evans, the Editor, Brn. Gerrard, Bradshaw, and the presiding officer, all of which seemed to be timely and well received.

We also attended the Thursday evening prayer service, and took a part with the Saints in prayer and testimony.

The rest of the week the visiting brothers were privileged to visit some different parts of the great city, including the walk along the river Thames, a bus ride across the famous London Bridge, to the Elephant and Castle, and thence by another bus across Westminster Bridge to the Abbey, where we spent a profitable hour and a half in visiting the tombs of royalty, under the chaperonage of a clerical robe of the Church of England, who named to us with the rest, some fifteen in number, the various tombs and monuments by which the chapels are crowded. On opposite sides of one lie the remains of Mary, Queen of Scots, and those of Queen Elizabeth, by whose command and warrant Mary was imprisoned and subsequently beheaded. The costly monuments commemorating their lives and virtues were raised by King James I, the son of Mary. It was a seeming travesty upon the venality and superpity of the times and reigns of these sovereigns.

On Sunday, the 13th, Bro. Evans occupied in the church in Bow Common Road, both morning and evening; and the Editor in company with Bro. T. J. Sheldon, went to Enfield, where he occupied in the little hall where the Saints are wont to worship. Brn. Judd, Kemp, and others made the temporary stay very pleasant. We also found here Bro. Joseph Smith, a young man of some promise. There are here two or three other young men from whom we expect to hear good things by and by. The hall was small, but it was filled, and excellent attention and marked interest were felt and exhibited. Bro. Sheldon and the writer returned to London by train at a late hour, but that is the custom and inevitable.

WE are in receipt of the October number of the Iowa Journal of History and Politics, the quarterly publication of the State Historical Society, Iowa City, Iowa. The contents of this excellent number are as follows: "Chief Justice Marshall as a Constructive Statesman," by Emlin McClain; "Problems in the Administration of Iowa," by Harold M. Bowman; "The Development of Party Organization in Iowa," by John W. Gannaway; "Local Tradition," by John-son Brigham; reviews; notes and comment.

On Saturday, the 12th, we visited that staunch old soldier of the cross, Bro. Thomas Bradshaw, 48 Repton Street, Mile End Road, and found him feeling quite well, and ready to tell us of the faithful labors of our predecessors in the mission, Brn. Briggs, Forscutt, Patterson, Gillen, Griffiths, Pitt, Smith, and others, with all of whom he had had acquaintance. If all would speak of the missionaries in the same kindly terms as did this veteran to us, it would save many an anxious hour and save a lot of heartburning and scandal.

By vote of the branch, services were held Monday evening, the Editor the speaker; and Tuesday evening, Bro. Evans doing the speaking; both were fairly attended by the Saints; but few outsiders.

On Wednesday, September 16, Brn. Smith and Evans were taken to South Kensington Museum in care of Bro. J. D. Howell. The things to be seen here are many and very instructive; indeed, to the Editor it surpassed in attractiveness the British Museum, its lordly competitor.

We went with Bro. Howell to his home on Wood Green, to supper and to spend the night with them. We were pleasantly received and entertained, Bro. Howell having an interesting family.

Returning to Bro. Sheldon's on Thursday morning, we succeeded in putting in the time till the evening service of prayer, which the Editor enjoyed but Brn. Evans and Sheldon missed—bad train service as a primary reason, we suppose—but think it likely that it was starting too late to get on time. Bro. Thomas Bradshaw presided in old-time vigor and success.

Friday was spent in getting ready for the boat on Saturday, at noon, at which hour we were on board when the good United States mail steamer St. Louis turned her prow oceanward with her cargo of human freight.

During our stay in London we were the guests of Bro. and Sr. T. J. and Ella Sheldon, who did all they could to make us welcome and contented. Our thanks are due for such kindness. Bro. Sheldon was our guide about London, and pleasant hours and scenes resulted to us from his indefatigable care and guidance.

DEDICATION OF GREENLEAF CHAPEL, MISSOURI.

On Wednesday, September 30, the junior editor left the "sanctum" to be present at the conference of the Northeastern Missouri District, to be held near Huntsville, Missouri, in the Greenleaf Chapel, a newly erected church building which was to be dedicated at this conference. Our trip to Albia, Iowa, over the Burlington Route, our stay over night there, and the trip next day to Macon, Missouri, over the Wabash, was without unusual incident. We reached Macon about nine o'clock on the morning of the 1st, and as we stepped from the train to purchase transportation to Cairo, we were greeted by Bro. J. A. Tanner, president of the district, Bro. Fred T. Mussell, and a number of other Bevier Saints, who were on their way to the conference. On getting on the train again, we found that there were thirteen or fourteen Saints en route to Cairo, in Randolph County, not far from Macon.

On alighting at Cairo we found it to be a hamlet of small dimensions. Bro. Robert De Rigne was waiting with a two-seated carriage, and Bro. George Summerfield with a wagon and hayrack. We wondered why the hayrack was in waiting, but found out later. Of course the carriage could not hold all of us, and as Greenleaf Chapel lay some five miles to the west and south of Cairo, several of the women in the party who were accompanied by little tots were put in the carriage and started off. The hayrack was then driven up to the depot platform and nearly eighteen hundred pounds of canvas and tent paraphernalia were loaded on, and on top of this six of the "men folk" found seats, and behind a small but very persistent span of mules we started for Greenleaf Chapel, over a road which we were promised we would find very rough. We did, and part of the way we walked while the tugging little mules slowly but surely wiggled their heavy load up the rough hills.

The combined capacity of the carriage and the hayrack was not enough to carry all the crowd to the destination, so later a spring wagon was sent and all were finally brought to the church.

Despite the inconveniences under which the trip was made to Greenleaf (by those on the hayrack, we mean, for we can not speak for the others), it was not entirely an unenjoyable one, for the utmost good humor prevailed, and no complaint was heard,—only jokes and pleasantries concerning various features of the trip. Even Bro. George and the mules kept their tempers under perfect control. We made slow time, but even that had the advantage of giving us plenty of time to see a country through which we had not passed before.

At the church building we soon found a number of Saints and friends to greet us, and when we had unloaded the tent, we all repaired to the home of Bro. David Shaw, our object being (as might readily be guessed) to relieve pangs of hunger which had not in the least been lessened by the jostling ride we had taken. After dinner the tent was erected on land which belonged to the Shaws, near to the church, and we were ready to begin the sessions of conference and convention.

The work was begun in the evening, when the district Sunday-school association began its sessions. The Sunday-school authorities had charge of the meetings on Friday also, in convention capacity, institute work, etc., the evening hour being given over to an entertainment by the scholars of the Greenleaf Sunday-school. The school was organized on the 28th of June last, and the entertainment spoke well for the energy with which the school has been conducted.

While at the conference we were domiciled at the home of Bro. and Sr. D. Shaw, who have been members of the Church but a short time, but who seem to be happy in the religion which they have recently espoused. We were made to feel at home.

By the time conference convened on Saturday morning, at ten o'clock, there were present of the missionary force, Brn. I. N. White, J. A. Tanner, A. White, John Kaler, George Hicklin, and others who had been assisting these men. Among other assistants we must not forget to mention "Gospel John," the missionary horse which was given to the Church by Bro. George Fry. Bro. George gave an exhibition of how well he had trained the horse. The exhibition was a credit to the trainer's ability and "John's" good horse sense. The local priesthood of nearly all the branches in the district was represented by various men, and a goodly representation of the membership was also present. The Bevier Saints were well represented, to the advantage of the singing services. Our Welsh brethren and sisters certainly enjoy singing.

The writer and Bro. I. N. White were selected to preside over the conference, at the suggestion of Bro. Tanner, and the routine business of the conference started, and was kept up at a rate which finished the business soon after the afternoon session had begun. The remainder of the time was devoted to speeches by several of the brethren, and the ordination of two of the brethren who had been regularly selected for ordination to the priesthood. William Kelso was ordained an elder by I. N. White, and W. J. Richards was ordained a teacher by J. A. Tanner. The time fixed for the convening of the next conference of the district was the first Saturday and Sunday in February, and the place Bevier.

The evening hour was devoted to preaching by Bro. I. N. White, who spoke for about an hour on the first principles.

On Sunday morning at half past nine the regular session of the local Sunday-school was held, in which the visiting Saints participated.

At eleven o'clock the church building was well filled with Saints and friends who had assembled to be present at the dedicatory services which had been appointed for that hour. The meeting was in charge of Bro. Tanner, and the writer was the speaker,—his first attempt at a dedicatory sermon. Whatever may have been the merits of the effort, we were given very excellent attention throughout, a courtesy which tended to assist much. At the close of the sermon Bro. Lewis Tryon, president of the Greenleaf Branch, in a short speech told of the circumstances which lead to the building of the chapel, and of the work of Saints and friends whose persistent efforts were finally crowned with success. He gave much credit to the "outsiders" who had so materially helped by donating the land and helping with the building. He then presented to the writer the deed to the lot, and the key to the building, who on behalf of the Church accepted the deed, and received the key as symbolical of the fact that the doors of the church would be unlocked to those who came with a message to deliver to the people of that part of the world. Bro. I. N. White then delivered the dedicatory prayer, and after the usual closing exercises the audience felt that the building had been fully ushered in upon its work of being of service in the Lord's work here upon earth.

In the afternoon a preaching service was held in the tent, the speaker being Bro. Kaler. Following that the Saints held a sacramental and social service in the church building, in which the Spirit's power was felt, indicating that the efforts of the Saints in building had been pleasing to the Lord, and that opposition would still be met. The Saints were admonished to be faithful, diligent, and humble.

The evening services were held in the tent again, and Bro. I. N. White was the speaker. He had good liberty, and for about one hour and twenty minutes he preached steadily.

The building of Greenleaf Chapel is almost a direct result of opposition. The Saints were shut out of the schoolhouse, and Brown Cross and his brother, James, suggested to the Saints the idea of building a church of their own. The idea grew, and soliciting was begun with the result before mentioned. The land on which the church stands was donated by David Shaw and wife, Brown Cross and wife, and James Cross and wife, and a Miss Cross, as we remember it. About one hundred and ninety dollars in money was subscribed and paid out, three thousand feet of lumber was donated, as was also manual labor to the amount of eighty days, and twenty days of work with teams. The sisters of the branch, by means of selling a quilt, raised the funds necessary for painting the building, furnishing the material for the seats, and paying the insurance on the house.

The building stands about five miles west and south of Cairo, and four north and east of Huntsville. The prospects seem to be that a number now outside the Church living near the building will soon be associated with the Saints in belief. Some who were not members at the time the building was first begun are now members.

We trust the Saints of Greenleaf Branch will by careful and Christian living bear evidence to the efficiency of the Latter Day Saint religion, and that their every-day lives may be veritable sermons to those who are watching their spiritual warfare.

On Monday morning one was baptized by Bro. Tanner. About half past ten three loads started for Cairo, twenty of us on the hayrack drawn by four mules. We made the trip in pretty good time, though we found the roads no smoother than before. For dinner at Cairo we had crackers, cheese, cookies, and apples, spread out on an express truck beside the depot. But a merry crowd surrounded the "board" and partook thankfully.

We left Cairo about half past two, and reached Macon a few minutes later, where we parted company with those bound for Bevier, who soon left on a "local" freight train.

The writer went to the home of Bro. F. Palfrey, where we spent a few hours very pleasantly, until about seven o'clock, when we again entered a Wabash train, bound for home, alone, but feeling repaid for the trip, and trusting we may have done some good.

WALES' GREATEST NEED.

[DEAN HOWELL was truly one of the great and good men of Wales. In December, 1902, he wrote this article and it was published in some of the leading Welsh papers after his death, which was just a month later, January 15, 1903. The Welsh publications all referred to it and most of them published it in full, regardless of their Church and creed. For years this good man was a very active minister in the Church of England and was up to the time of his death. Our Bro. Frank J. Pierce translated it from the Welsh. The readers will notice that the views held by Mr. Howell are in perfect harmony with the restored Church, and can be presented to the people, especially those in Wales, where the Dean was well known and respected.—WM. LEWIS.]

What is it? Political reformations, some say. An increase of sympathy and unity between various social classes, others say. Better physical and social organizations, say others. Important matters, truly important, are each of these. But are these the greatest needs of Wales at the present time? Allowing that they are desirable, and can be obtained, will they fulfill Wales' greatest need at the present time? Will these and similar things salt and leaven society, counteract the corrupt tendencies of the age, revive the nation's home and social life, and above all else, raise it to a higher standard in its moral tone, spiritual zeal, and religious enthusiasm? Are these the things that should receive the first and most serious consideration in the mind and meditation of all men and women who have the best welfare of their country and nation constantly upon the tablets of their hearts? Well, not wishing to judge others, nor for others, but according to my own judgment there is something else much more important, more necessary, and more vital than the things mentioned; something that will reach the living root of the nation; that which will produce general and mightier fruits and influences than all these combined; something more lasting in its effect, and copious in blessing, temporal and spiritual, namely, a spiritual revival! Not a reformation, but a revival; not a local disturbance, such as is had in connection with a "parish mission," but a sort of spiritual upheaval, that overflows the whole country, and will saturate all classes with the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Is not this the greatest need of Wales at the present time? Is not this necessity felt, more or less, by nearly all who profess and who call themselves Christians? Is it not true concerning our time, as in that of Haggai: "Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye are not filled; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink."

There never was so much preaching; but what about the effect? Have not the services, the festivities, the meetings of every description, and the many schemes to entice listeners, proven almost a crucial? Can we not hear complaints on every hand, because of indifference, the sleepy and spiritual lethargy that half cankers the nation's religion? The complaint comes from every quarter that the ministry has lost its might, its edge, and its convincing power, and is no longer as a sword that wounds, nor as a trumpet that awakens. The preaching, they say, is able, masterly, interesting, and instructive; but with little unction accompanying it—no smitten consciences nor unveiling of conditions as in former times. Old-time phrases, such as conviction, conversion, repentance, adoption, dead to sin, self-abhorrence, and the like, have grown strange and useless to a large extent. The old experiences that were represented by these old phrases are now like unto lifeless fossils. And what is the result?

It is said that family worship is fast declining, that it is exceptional to find a family who gather to worship night and morning around the hearth. Hardly does the Sunday-school hold its own. In many places the gatherings are rather upon the wane. The Sabbath observance is a question of debate, and the prayer-meeting savors of the consumption. The godliness of professors is no longer a terror to the ungodly; nor is there material difference between many professors and worldly moralists. The authority of the Bible together with the cardinal truths of Christianity are being measured in the scales of reason and criticism, as if they were but men's opinions.

Unshaken belief in the unseen miracles and in the supernatural are open questions. The number of communicants is increasing after all, it is true; but the Lord's Supper is not the feast of good things as in days gone by, nor is it looked upon with the reverential fear that characterized the godly Welsh in times past. The temperance cause is not quite as flourishing as it has been, while the drink curse is rampant in town and village; the desire for pleasure has seemingly taken possession of the rising generation; and the foot-ball gatherings are more attractive than gospel gatherings, even in Wales! Well, if this, more or less, is the state of things in our midst (and if this picture is overdrawn, no one would rejoice more than myself), is it not time that we meet the truth, and examine ourselves to find out what is at the root of the evil? What saith the word? "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear." Well, shall we be satisfied with things as they are? Is this the New Testament standard of religion? Is this the religion that will conquer the world? Are these things the object of the incarnation of the Son of God, and the finishing work of redemption? It almost paralyzes the pen to write such words! Was it not contemplated that the Church of God should be "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army of banners"? Was it not decreed that she should be filled with the spirit of aggressiveness, and do her utmost in evangelizing the whole world? But is this her spirit? "The beginning of degradation," says one of the chief divines of Wales, "is self-complacency." "Woe unto those who are at ease in Zion!" What about the message of the "Amen" to the Church at Laodicea? "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth." What a fate! God deliver us from it! But what of the remedy? There can be no question about this. If there be such a thing as truth between the lids of the Bible, undoubtedly it is this, namely, that the Spirit of God is the only fountain of spiritual life; that this life can not be attained nor revived apart from the instrumentality of the Spirit—"Not by might, nor by hosts, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts"—and that this divine Person with its treasures of grace and favors, is at the service of all who receive it according to the ordained plan. This is the fundamental teaching of the gospel. This is what divides Christianity from all other religions of the world; and this is what divides true Christianity from all hypocrisy. The Holy Ghost religion was what the old Welsh Saints used to call true religion; and the Holy Ghost religion is the only remedy for the moral and spiritual ailment of Wales to-day. What was Pentecost but a sort of ensample and earnest of what this dispensation was calculated to be? Not an ensample pertaining to outward demonstrations, but pertaining to its convincing effects and supernatural impressions.

The reason that the same power, unction, and authority does not accompany the preaching of the gospel in every age is man's fault, not God's will. Nor was the outpouring of the Holy Spirit limited to place, time, and duration, but was the fruit and result of the disciples' expectations for ten days from the Ascension to Pentecost; and it is quite certain that the right use of the same means will produce the same effects. "Behold the Lord's arm is not shortened, that it can not save; neither his ear heavy that he can not hear." "And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer, and while they are yet speaking I will hear." "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Ghost to them who ask him." "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."

Are these statements to be understood in their natural meaning? And are they to continue in power, and authority, and in the assurance of their fulfillment? They are as true and certain as the unchangeability of God. Therefore, it follows that if two or three in a place should unite, and bind and seek with all their hearts to petition, implore for a fulfillment of these promises, and persevere in so doing, being untiring and hopeful, so certain, I say shall they be fulfilled as that God has spoken. They have been fulfilled over and over again; nothing can hinder or prevent their fulfillment but men's unbelief and doubt. Not merely a form of prayer—lukewarm and wordy, but unceasing fervency; a sort of clinging to God like Jacob; with a bold, unshaken, and undoubtful certainty for answer, that will be effectual in bringing us to think in harmony with God. Prayer is not bringing God from his path, but it is God drawing man to his way.

Reader, wilt thou do thy part in this blessed cause? Wilt thou consecrate thyself by making this the chief object of thy desire at morning, noon, and night? Wilt thou do thy best to bring others to unite with thee, so as to create a circle of petitioners? Great is thy privilege—great also are thy responsibilities!

O that thou wouldst rend the heavens, and descend; that the mountains might flow before thee! "O breath, come from the four winds, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live!" "Awake, O north wind; and come, thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out."

"Bywha dy waith, ni phery'm taith yn hir.
Rwy'n of ni'r bedd heb wel'd dy wedd yn wir."

"Revive thy work, my stay but short will be.
I fear the grave without thy face to see."

Take Notice.—If I knew this to be my last message to my fellow countrymen all over Wales, before being ushered to the judgment seat, and with the dawn of eternity already breaking over me, let me say this, namely, that the greatest present need of my dear country and nation is—a spiritual revival by a special outpouring of the Holy Ghost.

"Nefol jubil,
Gad im wel'd y boreu wawr!"

"Heavenly jubilee,
Let me see thy morning dawn!"

AS TO THE NAME "MORMON."

I am a reader of the HERALD and wait for its weekly visits with pleasure and am also interested in the success of the work. I have noticed several times expressions in the HERALD which have caused me to write this letter. I refer to the practice of some of the ministry in the field, in sending reports of their labors to the HERALD, of speaking of the Utah people as "Mormons." To me it has always sounded bad. In the very first place I believe it has a bad effect on the work. Outsiders will ask, in their minds at least, if not otherwise, "Why do they call them 'Mormons' and disclaim the name themselves?" Now the elders if answering would most likely say, "To call attention to the difference between the two Churches, in that the Utah people teach and practice polygamy and the Reorganized Church does not."

Well, suppose the outsider takes to reading the Book of Mormon and finds no authority there for the practice. Will he not think it strange that there is a stigma attached to the word "Mormon?" Does not the practice reflect on the book? And if anything distracts from the work in a general way, to my mind this does.

Again Mormon, of the Book of Mormon times, was a good man, and in speaking of Mormons as impure, does it not also reflect on his memory? Of course it will not make any difference to the award of Mormon in the resurrection or to his rest in paradise until that time, but to show how this looks in print, let us consider that as we of the Reorganized Church much more nearly follow the teachings of the book and are more like that good man of Book of Mormon times, we are the ones most entitled to the name "Mormon."

Yet we find the word used to convey the idea that the Mormons are not a pure people. Does this not hamper the ministry in the field in presenting the book and its claims? How does it sound when we hear Joseph Smith, to whom the angel came, spoken of as a "Mormon"? If it has a bad significance in one case, does it not in the other?

"THE CHURCH IN THE WILDERNESS."

A CORRECTION.

In the HERALD for August 12 is an article under the above caption which I judge was intended as a criticism on a former article written by me, in the HERALD for September 24, October 1, and October 8, 1902. My position was misstated by the brother; hence this reply. He may not like my position any better when he understands it than he does the position he has been criticizing; but whether he does or does not, I insist that my position be correctly stated, and I shall try this time to make myself understood.

To correct that misunderstanding and to set forth my position, if possible, in language that can not be misunderstood, is the object of this paper. I say "if possible" because I know it is almost impossible for one to say just what he means, nothing more and nothing less, and to say it so that others will understand it as he means it.

I do not care to further discuss the subject of "The Church in the Wilderness," at this time. My understanding of that is set forth in my former article, and after referring to one thought in the brother's article on that part of the subject, I am willing to let that matter rest for the present. The brother in referring to the proof texts which I used in my former article defining the Church of Christ says: "His numerous quotations in definition of the word church have reference to the Church out of the wilderness, and not in the wilderness."

Now, will you please give me one quotation defining the Church in the wilderness? The "numerous quotations" which I gave simply define the Church of Christ, by telling us what the Church is; they say nothing about its being "in the wilderness" or "out of the wilderness." That they all refer to the Church "out of the wilderness," I concede. And now I ask for one quotation, only one, defining the Church "in the wilderness;" and I am willing to accept that one quotation from any one of the three standard books of the Church.

And now as to the "Church" and the "kingdom," and the "keys of the Church" and the "keys of the kingdom" he says: "Another position taken by the brother, in the article above referred to, is that the 'keys' and the 'kingdom' mean one and the same thing; and that no one held the 'keys' but Joseph and some of the leading authorities of the Church."

If there is anything in my former article making the claims set forth in the foregoing, I am not aware of it; I am positive that I did not intend to take any such position. The words keys and kingdom, unqualified, are too indefinite to say that they "mean one and the same thing." I certainly did not take such a position as that. And I did not take the position that "no one held the keys but Joseph and some of the leading authorities of the Church," either. I did take the position, however, that "the kingdom," as used in Doctrine and Covenants 42:18, and in other places, is defined as being "the keys of the Church;" and that is my position now. And I also took the position that no one holds the "keys of the kingdom of God" on the earth, except the presidency of the high priesthood; and I have not changed my mind on that. The Patriarch holds "the keys of the patriarchal blessings;" the Bishop "holds the keys" of the Aaronic priesthood; the Twelve "hold the keys to open up the authority of my kingdom upon the four corners of the earth;" and others of the priesthood hold the "keys" of the office to which they have been called and ordained; but no one holds "the keys of the kingdom of God," on the earth, only in a limited sense, except the presidency of the high priesthood. And what I mean by "a limited sense" is this: the "kingdom" is the "keys of the Church;" hence any one holding the "keys" to any priesthood office in the Church holds one of the "keys of the Church," that is, he holds one of the "keys" of which the "kingdom" is composed; and that might be called one of the "keys of the kingdom," in the sense of its being one of the "keys" which help to make up the "kingdom." Or it might be called the "keys of the kingdom," as pertaining to that particular office or work; but to say that such a one "holds the keys of the kingdom," without qualifying or telling in what sense he holds them, would be incorrect, if I see the matter rightly.

But the president of the high priesthood holds the "keys" to every office in the Church; hence he holds all the keys which go to make up the kingdom. And, besides that, he holds the keys through which or by which all these keys, and the knowledge of how to use them, can be obtained. And, as the president of the high priesthood and his two counselors are the only ones who hold all the keys of the Church and the only ones who hold the keys by which the keys of the Church can be obtained and by which a knowledge of how to use those keys can be obtained, they are the only ones who hold "the keys of the kingdom."

Others may hold the "keys" of the office to which they have been called and ordained; but not "the keys of the kingdom." This is my position; and, whether it is correct or incorrect, I have tried to so state it that my meaning may be clear to all. Now I shall give my reasons, or some of them at least, for so believing.

Is "the kingdom" "the keys of the Church"?

What I understand by "the keys of the Church" is this: The "keys" which the Lord has given to the Church; the authority to officiate in the different offices of the Church.

"Lift up your hearts and rejoice, for unto you the kingdom, or in other words, the keys of the Church have been given."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 18. This shows us that "the kingdom" is something which is given to the Church and that to define or tell what "the kingdom" is, it is proper to define it as "the keys of the Church"—not "the keys of the kingdom," but "the keys of the Church." The "Church" and the "kingdom" are not the same; they are often used interchangeably, when applied to the people of God on the earth, but they do not mean one and the same thing. Hence it is not permissible to substitute "kingdom" for the word "Church," in the above quotation, and make it read, "or in other words, the keys of the kingdom." No, the Lord was speaking to "ye elders of my Church, who have assembled yourselves together" (verse 1), and "unto the Church" (verse 6); and, when speaking to the elders and the Church, he never says, "I have given you the keys of the kingdom;" he always says to them, "I have given you the kingdom." As proof of this, please read the following:

"And it is his good will to give you the kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 2.

"Fear not little flock, the kingdom is yours."—34: 6.

"Behold, the kingdom is yours."—38: 2.

"Fear not for the kingdom is yours."—38: 4.

"Hearken, O ye people of my Church, to whom the kingdom has been given."—45: 1.

"And the kingdom is given you of the Father."—50: 7.

"For I have given unto you the kingdom."—64: 2.

"The kingdom is yours and the blessings thereof are yours."—77: 4.

"For even yet the kingdom is yours."—81: 6.

"But verily I say unto all those to whom the kingdom has been given."—83: 12.

"Glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received."—43: 3.

"Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."—Luke 12: 35, I. T.

"For unto you the kingdom, or in other words, the keys of the Church, have been given."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 18.

As a definition of the phrase, "little flock," please read the following:

"Press onward, ye elders and people of my Church, even my little flock."—Doctrine and Covenants 115: 1.

"Ye elders and people of my Church," then, are the "little flock;" and I have given thirteen brief quotations, showing that "the kingdom" is something which has been given to and is in the possession of the "little flock," the "elders and people of my Church."

I now ask for one quotation, only one, from any of the three standard books of the Church, in which we are told that the "keys of the kingdom" were ever given to any one, except "the presidency of the high priesthood." Who will tell me where to find it?

If you can not give me so much as one text, to prove that others hold the keys of the kingdom, I shall certainly feel justified in still holding to my position, as expressed in my former article, that is,

THE PRESIDENCY OF THE HIGH PRIESTHOOD HOLDS THE KEYS OF THE KINGDOM.

In support of this, I submit the following:

"Therefore thou [Joseph Smith] art blessed from henceforth that bear the keys of the kingdom given unto you; which kingdom is coming forth for the last time."—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 1.

"The keys of this kingdom shall never be taken from you [Joseph], while thou art in the world, neither in the world to come."—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 2.

"And they [Sidney Rigdon and F. G. Williams] are accounted as equal with thee in holding the keys of this last kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3.

"My servant Joseph Smith, Jr., unto whom I have given the keys of the kingdom, which belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood."—Doctrine and Covenants 80: 1. Question: To whom does the Lord say he has given the keys of the kingdom? Answer: "My servant Joseph Smith, Jr."

To whom does the Lord say the keys of the kingdom belong? Answer: "The presidency of the high priesthood."

When do the keys of the kingdom belong to the presidency of the high priesthood? Answer: "Always."

Well, if the keys of the kingdom "belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood," when do they belong to any one else? Answer:—

I find answers, clear and plain, to the first three questions, but I have not been able to find an answer to the last one; hence I leave it for some one else to answer.

Here are four texts, positive and pointed, declaring that the keys of the kingdom were given to the presidency of the high priesthood, and the last one says they belong "always" unto that presidency. Who will give me one text which says they were ever given to any one else? Who will give me one text which says they belong to any one else?

And, if you can not give me so much as one text, in any of the three books, which says the keys of the kingdom were ever given to any one else, or that they belong to any one else, then upon what grounds do you ask me to change my belief? Or, in other words, what evidence have you for believing that I am wrong in my belief?

I know you will find that Thomas B. Marsh is "the man whom I have chosen to hold the keys of my kingdom (as pertaining to the Twelve) abroad among all nations, that thou mayest be my servant to unlock the door of the kingdom in all places where my servant Joseph, and my servant Sidney, and my servant Hyrum, can not come."—Doctrine and Covenants 105: 7. But this is in that limited sense; limited to a certain quorum, "as pertaining to the Twelve"; limited to certain places, "abroad among all nations"; and limited to those places abroad, where the presidency could not be present. And, besides this, he is limited to a certain line of work, that is, to open or unlock the door of the kingdom; and he is also limited in his use of the keys, in that he is authorized to unlock the door of the kingdom only in those places where he is sent by the presidency of the high priesthood.

The president of the United States is commander-in-chief of the United States Army; and yet we often say that a certain general, or sometimes a colonel, is commander-in-chief of the United States Army at a certain post, or in a certain country or locality; and we speak correctly, in so saying. But to say that such an officer is commander-in-chief of the United States Army, without this qualification, would be misleading and incorrect.

And so it is with the text now under consideration; we may say that the president of the Twelve holds the keys of the kingdom (as pertaining to the Twelve) abroad, among all nations, etc; we may say that the Patriarch holds the keys of the kingdom, as pertaining to the spiritual blessings belonging to his office; and we may say that the Bishop holds the keys of the kingdom, as pertaining to the temporal affairs of the Church; but to say, without any qualification, that any of those men hold the keys of the kingdom is to say that which the law does not warrant.

There is another text in Doctrine and Covenants 94: 3 which reads as follows: "In all things pertaining to the kingdom of God on the earth, the keys of which kingdom have been conferred upon you." And this revelation begins with, "Verily, I say unto you my friends;" but, while I confess that I am not prepared to prove that the phrase "my friends," as used here, is limited to the presidency of the high priesthood, I can say that I find no proof that it is not limited to them.

We are told, also, that the keys of the kingdom were committed unto Peter, James, and John, (Doctrine and Covenants 7: 2; 26: 3; and 110: 20); and that the Lord said unto Peter, "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven" (Matthew 16: 20, I. T.); but, as the keys of the kingdom "belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood," I see nothing in all this against what I have already advanced. In fact, it is clear to my mind that Peter, James, and John were the presidency of the high priesthood; and that, because of holding this presidency, they were permitted to hold the keys of the kingdom.

And it proves nothing against that position, either, to quote Matthew 18: 18, I. T., and then argue that the Church, as well as Peter, held the power or authority to bind and loose on earth; for the Church had a presidency of the high priesthood and, through this presidency, to whom the Lord had given the keys of the kingdom, the Church could bind and loose on earth, just as the Savior says. And the Church of Christ, which has within it this presidency of the high priesthood, has within it the keys of the kingdom; and we may say, in that sense, that the keys of the kingdom have been given to the Church; but we should remember that the Church has those keys only in the possession of those to whom they always belong.

ARE THE CHURCH AND THE KINGDOM ONE AND THE SAME THING?

It is sometimes thought that, because the words church and kingdom are so often used interchangeably, they mean one and the same thing, or nearly so. Just what is meant by nearly so, I can not say; but I do know that words are often used interchangeably, which do not mean one and the same thing. And I shall now try to explain why these words are so often used that way when applied to the Lord's people on the earth. These words are not really used interchangeably. The word kingdom is often used in speaking of the Church; but the word church is never to my knowledge, used in speaking of the kingdom.

"For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magni-fyng their calling, are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies: they become the sons of Moses and of Aaron, and the seed of Abraham, and the Church and kingdom and the elect of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 6.

"Whoso," that is, whatever body of people is sufficiently faithful and humble before God to obtain these two priesthoods, and then magnify their calling they become the Church and kingdom of God. Not the Church or kingdom; but the Church and kingdom. They were not the Church of God nor the kingdom of God until they "became" such, either; and they "became" the Church of God and also "became" the kingdom of God when they obtained the priesthood. (I wonder if the Church in the wilderness did "become the Church and kingdom and the elect of God" by "obtaining these two priesthoods" and if they magnified their calling?) "And they who were baptized in the name of Jesus, were called the Church of Christ."—Nephi 12: 11, large edition.

Now, just keep in mind that those who are baptized in the name of Jesus are the Church of Christ; and also keep in mind that I have given thirteen different texts showing that the kingdom was and is given to the Church, the little flock; and then you can certainly see that they are the "Church and kingdom;" the baptized believers are the Church, and the "keys of the Church," that is, the priesthood authority which God has given to the Church is the kingdom.

"And this shall be your business and mission in all your lives to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this Church and kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 4.

CHURCH AND KINGDOM.

"In all things pertaining to the Church and kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 91: 1. "For the purpose of building up my Church and kingdom on the earth."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10.

And this body of baptized believers, after the Lord had given them "the kingdom," is sometimes referred to as "the Church of Christ," and sometimes as "the kingdom of God." "They become . . . the Church and kingdom and the elect of God." But, while you may refer to the Church, to whom God has given the kingdom, as "the kingdom of God," it would hardly do to substitute the word Church for kingdom and read: "I have given you the Church;" "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Church;" "the Church is yours;" "the Church which ye have received;" and "fear not little flock, the Church is yours;" or "O ye people of my Church, to whom the Church has been given." No, that would not express the thought contained in the original texts. It is all right to call the Church "the kingdom," or "the kingdom of God;" because it is both the Church and kingdom. But, when speaking of the kingdom, proper, that which was given to the Church, it will not do to substitute the word Church.

And these are not the only words used in that way; the word priesthood is used to represent divine authority; and is represented as being without father or mother, etc., and yet we often refer to those holding the priesthood as "the priesthood." We speak of a "priesthood meeting," or of "calling the priesthood together;" but we do not mean a meeting of, or a calling together of the divine authority; we mean a meeting of those holding the priesthood. You will find two illustrations of this in Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1, as follows, "and for the priesthood," "for my holy priesthood."

But, while you may refer to those holding the priesthood as "the priesthood," you would not dare to reverse that and substitute those who hold the priesthood for the priesthood proper and say that they are without father or mother, etc.

And, if it is all right to refer to those to whom the priesthood has been given as "the priesthood," it is all right to refer to those to whom the kingdom has been given as "the kingdom;" and so we do. I could give you text after text where the Church is spoken of as "the kingdom," or "the kingdom of God," but that no more proves that "Church of Christ" and "kingdom of God" mean one and the same thing than the fact of those holding the priesthood being referred to as "the priesthood," proves that they are one and the same thing as the priesthood which they hold.

But as the brother, in the article above referred to, is so positive that they mean practically the same, and intends to so teach, until he gets more light, I shall ask him to explain Revelation 12: 1-7. This woman "brought forth a man child," and then she "fled into the wilderness," and John says that "the woman," which brought forth the man child, "was the Church of God, who had been delivered of her pains and brought forth the kingdom of God and his Christ."

Now, what I want to know is this: How can "the woman" and "the man child," which she had just brought forth, "mean one and the same thing," or even "nearly so"?

"The woman" represents "the Church of God;" the "man-child," which she brought forth, represents "the kingdom of God and his Church;" the "woman" (Church) fled into the wilderness and the "man-child" (kingdom of God) was caught up to God and his throne; and yet the brother says they mean one and the same thing, or nearly so. And that the Church should bring forth the kingdom is in harmony with the teaching of the Savior in Luke 12: 34, I. T.: "Therefore seek ye to bring forth the kingdom of God." Jesus commanded his followers "to bring forth the kingdom of God;" and John says that his Church, the Church of God, "brought forth the kingdom of God;" and yet some will insist that the Church and the kingdom are one and the same thing, or nearly so.

Because we were taught and believed certain things when we were children is no reason that we should still cling to them when we get old enough to examine for ourselves. I can remember the time when I believed and taught that the Church and the kingdom were one and the same, and I still believe and teach that the Church is often spoken of as the kingdom," the "kingdom of God," and sometimes as the "kingdom of heaven," but, at the same time, I recognize the fact that they are not one and the same thing.

I refer to the Church as the kingdom; in the same sense I refer to those holding the priesthood as the priesthood; and I do so because I believe that when the Lord gives to those "who are baptized in the name of Jesus" the "kingdom of God," then they are the Church and kingdom, just as they are a "holy priesthood," or a "royal priesthood."

And now, in conclusion, I wish to say that I do not know that I am absolutely correct; I believe, however, that I am in the main points; but if I am not, I shall be glad to be set right. I have given this subject some attention, and I have been blessed and encouraged in my investigation.

It may seem dry and uninviting, to many, but it does seem that the ministry should be interested in these matters, and as we are not a unit on some things, I believe an exchange of views will be beneficial.

This work is dear to my soul, and I long to see the time when Zion's watchmen shall see eye to eye, when they shall know as they are known, and see as they are seen. And to this end may the good Lord help us all to labor.

In gospel bonds,

PIEDRAS NEGRAS, A NEWLY DISCOVERED PREHISTORIC CITY IN GUATEMALA.

The region comprising the greater part of Guatemala, the western portion of Honduras, and the southern part of Mexico, including the peninsula of Yucatan, was the seat of an ancient American civilization highly developed and as interesting to the archæological student as any of the primitive civilizations of the Old World.

Throughout this region are found numerous remains of ruined cities, or, more correctly, ruins of religious and governmental centers; for religion and government were inseparable among this people.

The Spaniards, upon their arrival, found numerous books among the priesthood, each book consisting of many pages, the leaves being eight or ten inches in length and folded like a screen. The pages were covered with numerals, glyphs, and explanatory drawings beautifully executed in colors, which are supposed to refer to the calendar, to astronomical matters, and to religious ceremonies. The Spanish priests collected and burned every book they could obtain. Fortunately for students, three of the books found their way to European libraries. Their value is now appreciated, and they have been carefully reproduced by photo-lithography and are known under the titles of "Codex Dresdensis," "Codex Troano-Cortesianus," and "Codex Peresianus." Copies are now accessible to all students.

Upon the monuments and altars, upon the lintels, walls, and stairways, and upon the altar slabs within the sanctuaries of the temples are sculptured with elaborate detail hieroglyphs of the same character as those occurring in the codices. It is known that in many instances these hieroglyphs record certain dates by days, months, and longer time periods, but the significance of the great majority of the glyphs is as yet unknown. When they are deciphered, as they are sure to be in time, a flood of light will be cast upon the religious history of one of the most remarkable primitive cultures known.

With the view of bringing together reproductions of all the inscriptions upon the monuments of the Mayan people, the Peabody Museum of American Archæology and Ethnology of Harvard University has for several years had expeditions in the field conducting explorations among the ruins and making paper molds of inscriptions from which plaster reproductions have been made. While engaged in work for the Peabody Museum, Toberto Maler, long a resident of Mexico, heard of the existence of certain ruins in Western Guatemala known only to the native wood-cutters. After a long journey through tropical forests he reached the Usumacinta River, upon the banks of which the ruins lay.

The structures are built upon an irregular plateau or series of connected hills, artificially terraced. A transverse valley opens upon the river at the south of the plateau. At this point is a mass of blackish limestone rocks, visible for a long distance from the river in either direction, and called by the natives Piedras Negras. This name has been given to the ruins. Upon the flat surface of the largest of these rocks is sculptured a circle of hieroglyphs inclosing two seated figures. Entering the transverse valley and climbing the slope to the north, the ruins of two temples were discovered upon artificial pyramids placed side by side. In front of each temple and upon the upper terrace of the pyramids stands a monument or stela of limestone. Upon the front face of the best preserved of these has been sculptured with elaborate detail an inscription in Mayan characters. A gigantic stela broken in two pieces lies upon the lower terrace connecting the two pyramids.

Across the plaza to the northwest stands a third pyramid upon a natural elevation. The temple upon its summit is in ruins. A flight of stone steps leads from the plaza to a broad terrace in front of the pyramid. Six large stelæ stood in a row upon the terrace. Hieroglyphs cover the sides of these monuments, and upon the face of one is an inscription, the first few characters of which form the initial series and record dates in the complicated Mayan calendar.

Elaborately carved human figures, with explanatory groups of glyphs, cover the fronts of the remaining stelæ upon this terrace.

The sculptured stone lintel of the doorway to this temple has an inscription of eighty-one characters upon the upper half of its face. Below this is a group of figures illustrating the return of successful warriors with prisoners and plunder. The priest wears an enormous headdress covered with short, stiff feathers, from the back of which spring five plumes of the sacred quetzal. A short tunic with sleeves covers the upper part of the body, and below this fall the embroidered sash-like ends of the breech-cloth. He wears elaborate sandals with heel-bands coming well up upon the ankle. Beads encircle his wrists and neck. He holds in his hand a spear-like staff of office ornamented with feather work. Before him kneel two warriors with spears in hand presenting a pile of plunder, and a naked prisoner bound with ropes.

North of this temple the ruins lie for the distance of nearly a mile and a quarter, the terraces and the larger pyramids being fairly well preserved. Most of the temples are in ruins.

One of the most interesting of these is built upon the terraced side of a natural elevation upon the eastern side of the plaza at about the center of the ancient city. Ten stelæ and three great altars stand upon the upper terrace of the pyramid and upon the plaza below.

Of the ten stelæ belonging to this temple, the one standing at the southern end of the building and called "stela twelve" by Mr. Maler is of the greatest interest. This has unfortunately fallen and is broken into four pieces. Each piece was photographed, however, and prints fitted together, making a perfect picture.

The great stone altars scattered here and there in the plaza and in front of the temples consist of oblong or circular blocks with hieroglyphs and occasional groups of figures. The altars are raised upon stone pillars, which are often sculptured upon their outer faces with inscriptions or are cut into the form of grotesque heads.

These ruins differ in many respects from the other ruins of Central America and of Yucatan. Piedras Negras was evidently the seat of a powerful military chieftain, as the sculptures everywhere indicate.

The sculptured groups and figures of the ruins of Yucatan and of Quirigua and Copan are almost wholly of a peaceful, religious character, indicating priestly power and a growth in culture and wealth by peaceful means.—Charles C. Willoughby, Peabody Museum, Harvard University, in Scientific American, September 26, 1903.

WHAT PREPARATION SHOULD THE CHILD HAVE FOR ENTERING SCHOOL?

(Concluded.)

ONE MOTHER'S WAY.

One of the many beautiful young mothers, when about her household tasks, continually interests her little ones in whatever she is doing. She is never too busy to talk with them about what is claiming her attention, not as she would discuss matters with a neighbor, but from a child's standpoint. She interests them in doing little things to help her,—though not because of the assistance they render. When questions pour like water she patiently tries to answer. If she wishes them to entertain themselves, she suggests some occupation. In short, she sees to it that they are not left alone with idle hands willing to be led into mischief by elfish sprites.

Do you see what she is doing? In thus exercising this noble type of maternal love, she is keeping her children very near to her heart; she is opening their little eyes to common things about them; leading them to feel that they are a real part of, and have some interest in, the family and home life; and creating in them a desire to be helpful to self and others.

ANOTHER MOTHER'S WAY.

Another mother whom some of us know, thinks that she loves her children devotedly—and she does, in a way. If one of them gets hurt or gets into trouble of any kind, she makes as much fuss as any one.

When busy, she wishes them out of her way; when resting, she wishes them to leave her alone; when, in spite of her, they have interest enough in their surroundings to ask questions, or with willing hearts offer to help, she bids them to run out to play and quit bothering her.

She continually pushes them away from her and the home, compelling them to satisfy their hunger with whatever hit-or-miss information comes their way, and forcing them to seek the comradeship of others.

This half-hearted mother is turning up soil rich for the mischief planter and is herself creating careless, shiftless habits in her children.

COMPARISONS.

What preparation for school life are these two mothers making?

When the first mother's children go to school, they will carry a habit of noticing, of talking about things—which means a wide vocabulary and ability to express themselves in language; they will be self-helpful and self-reliant, but not selfish, for they have a feeling that they are only a part of the machinery and that there are others to receive some consideration; they will have ready habits of industry, willingness and obedience; and, above all, their simple hearts are open to receive the seed sown by the teacher. The children of the second mother will doubtless have the expectation of being ordered around by a heartless somebody, whom it will be well to defy. Habits of attention will be lacking; names and uses of common things will be Greek to them; hence, their vocabulary and store of mental pictures more limited. They will demand much personal attention from the teacher, and, not having learned to act, neither at command of self nor of others, they will be unable to grasp and work up with children of the other family.

STEALING.

Among the problems with which primary school-teachers must wrestle is that which is commonly known as stealing. At that time, it is not always, strictly speaking, theft, but if left unchecked will very soon develop into thieving habits.

When a child first comes into this world, it is not conscious that there is self and other selves,—that there is self and other objects. When the blank stare passes away and it grasps at neighboring articles, it is making an attempt to get acquainted with them. When it gets older, especially in small families and in families in which children are greatly indulged, it goes around, picking up attractive, interesting things. He says, "They are mine." As no one disputes him, possession is ten tenths of the law.

When the child passes into the community life of the school, it finds itself in the midst of a number of peers—all of whom admire and long for similar things. Some desirable object is seen in the possession of a mate. Now a new, more advanced lesson must be learned. Perhaps the child has never before realized that some things do not belong to it. Consequently, when something which it sees is wanted, the innocent child appropriates it. When taken to task, there is a reiteration that the disputed article is its own. Considering its past experiences, is it not probable that the one-sided child does not mean to be dishonest, but thinks that, being in its possession, the coveted thing really is its own?

That one person has a right to his own property, which none should dispute and all respect, is something which all children must learn before acquiring good citizenship. Knowing that children are to go from the home life to a wider one, where many temptations will allure, parents should certainly fortify them with a feeling of regard for property rights.

RECOGNIZING ITS OWN.

There is still another cause for the beginning of taking what belongs to some one else.

Children come to an independent schoolroom life fresh from the mother's lap, where they have been nursed and waited upon. The fond mother has thoughtlessly always put on the rubbers, coats, and mittens. Mother has always brought things to the child. Perhaps he has never noticed his own belongings closely. As he was the only little fellow of his size at home, there was no special need. Now there may be several whose hats, rubbers or pencils were bought from the same stock. One pencil is claimed by a number of owners. When it comes to dismissal time and the hunting of caps and rubbers begins, the situation becomes interesting, to say the least. Some do not know whether their mittens are wool or kid; others do not know whether they wore Tam o' Shanters or sailor caps. Mary insistently claims Dora's rope. Mary's is just like it, but she has forgotten that she left hers at home. When these things occur, how is either the distracted teacher or the tear-faced pupil to know which is whose?

There are other reasons why every child should know its own, as well as be able to assist itself. Mother has not anticipated the time when her child is to be one of perhaps forty who will be dependent upon the care of one woman. When closing time comes, the majority of the forty stand helplessly waiting for the teacher to put their arms into their coats and jackets for them. They make no effort to put on either mittens or rubbers.

In every primary school in the land this unwritten part of the program consumes a great waste of valuable time which belongs to the reading, and which might be avoided if children only knew their own garments and were able to help themselves.

WHO AM I?

It is not an uncommon thing for a child of six who does not know his own name or where he lives, to put in an appearance at school. How strange that people should send to school a child that does not know who he is, away from home!

LYING.

A little girl, an only child, unaccustomed to mingling with other children, started to school. One stormy day, on her way to school among a crowd, the wind turned her umbrella wrong side out and demolished it. The little thing emphatically told both her teacher and mamma that another child had done the deed. Perhaps there was some fear of punishment, but more than likely, as she was unfamiliar with the power of the elements and the affair happened so quickly as to confuse her, the child could only attribute the charge to some human agency. Had the affair not been ferreted out and carefully explained to the child, she would have herself believed what she told, and the next time anything happened to her which she could not explain, she would have accused some innocent person. A few such incidents, and she would have had the reputation of a willful liar.

As in the first steps in stealing, unless the causes of little misrepresentations are discerned and removed, the habit of lying will be soon established. It will be readily seen that the children of the mother who talks much with them, calling their attention to the appearance, uses, and qualities of things around and leading them to talk of those things, has a great advantage in this respect.

When children first begin to tell untruths and appropriate things which do not belong to them, instead of berating them for being naturally depraved, parents should consider that something in their training and development has been neglected, and seek to supply training along the proper lines.

PERPLEXING PROBLEM.

Is it humane to place a child under the restrictions of school life without having taught it to attend to the demands of nature? Every entering class has one or more pupils who either do not recognize those demands or are too timid to make them known. At any rate, they should be taught the necessity of making them known.

There is no problem connected with school management more vexatious than that of special recesses. Teachers are just as loath as parents to have accidents of this character befall pupils, and if notified by parent or physician that a child has a weakness, they are very willing to grant the privileges of special recesses.

Requests to leave the room come so thick and fast that, should the teacher grant them all, the school work would be in a constant state of demoralization. One pupil asks to leave the room. The power of suggestion gets in its work; several who have been reminded of it simultaneously make a similar request. Or, a shirking pupil attempts to take advantage and thus escape from study or class work. In order to prevent playing on the outside while school work is going on, the teacher must try to not allow more than one to go at one time; yet, for all, in large buildings, it sometimes happens that several from different rooms escape at the same time and they waste their time in loitering.

As the school sessions of to-day are, the longest hours between recesses are not over one hour and a half. A child in ordinary health who has attended to going to the closet before the school begins ought to be able to wait until recess. But pupils are thoughtless and negligent. In less than five minutes after bell ringing, requests to leave the room begin, and they continue.

Whenever a pupil leaves the room, he misses either class work or study time. That is a direct loss to him. In addition, he makes more or less disturbance to the class in recitation and to the class at study. This is an annoyance to the whole school.

If only absolutely necessary requests were made, the perplexity of the question would be lessened. Guardians could greatly help the teacher in this matter by impressing the children with the feeling that every moment of program time is a desirable nugget, and the advantage of attending to their wants regularly at the proper time.

CAUTION.

A caution is timely. Sometimes, quite thoughtlessly, people say to children under school age: "There is Miss X. Next year you must go to school. She will be your teacher, and she will whip you, too." "No, she won't," replies the resentful child; "I'll fight her!" and the elder speaker laughs heartily. Poor child! his is righteous indignation. Or, some loving friend teasingly says: "When you go to school, you will be made to sit on the platform and stand in the corner," and so on.

Never say, nor allow such things to be said, to your children. They give the sensitive child in the beginning a false and unluring impression of the whole institution. How much better to say, "That is Miss X. She loves little boys and girls. When you go to school to her, she will show you how to do so many things and tell you what will interest you." Or, "When you go to school you will learn such pretty songs and have happy times with the other children."

As kindergartens are not common and the ordinary child goes from the mother to the primary school, those invaluable institutions have not been considered.

It will be noticed also that nothing has been said of teaching a child its letters, to write, to count, or anything of that sort. That is not essential for his preparation for school. While the more it knows, the better for it, yet a start along those lines is not essential for entrance to school. The teacher's business is to teach those things. If the child comes to her well developed and in good spirits, that is all she expects. Nothing pleases her better than good soil for the germination of her seed.—Loveday A. Nelson in the American Mother.

Duties of Sunday-School Secretaries.

It is not all of a Sunday-school secretary's duty to sit at his desk, count the pennies, and with a wondrous wise air assume the dignity of a conqueror. The session work proper is the least arduous of all the secretary's duties. It is, however, a very necessary portion of the whole, and should be given careful attention. To arrive at school at exactly the moment for opening (a tardy secretary is simply out of the question) only handicaps his work. He should be at his desk at least fifteen minutes prior to the opening hour, correctly placing class-books and papers without confusion. Your pardon for a personal reference, but it best illustrates the idea: At our home school in Independence there is scarcely a Sabbath morning that some teacher has not made an effort to be early on hand to interview the secretary, either to gain information on some specific subject in which both should have a direct interest, or for mutual explanations and converse.

THE REPORT OF THE SESSION SHOULD INCLUDE

every item of interest that one could possibly cull from the incidents, events, and regular routine of the school hour; not a stereotyped, drilled report, but to be thoroughly successful, one should cultivate an exhaustless supply of originality from which items may be drawn to make up an interesting report, such as banner-classes, not only of the general school, but department banner-classes, which inspires good-natured rivalry. The result will be just what you are looking for—a good collection.

The banner-class in attendance may also be occasionally mentioned in the report, the number of officers, teachers, and pupils absent or tardy, the total attendance, percentage of attendance, number of visitors, total collection, officers' collection separate. Make for your primary department, or classes, a department report in detail, then later include in the general school report. It pleases and interests the little folks as well as the teachers, and why not?

A secretary should have the

that a quarterly or yearly average collection or average attendance may be calculated in a moment; then draw a comparison. Be so on the alert that the smallest or largest attendance or collection of the year may be recognized and reported. At times report the number of girls compared with the number of boys in attendance. (It generally runs about sixteen to one in favor of the girls.) Report this comparison of numbers between the young men and young ladies, but let me warn all secretaries present that the utmost caution is necessary in drawing this delicate age line, for the result may be fatal (to the secretary).

If several teachers and officers are tardy do a little hasty figuring and astonish them with the information that a greater percentage of officers and teachers were tardy than of pupils. (This also gives the superintendent something to talk about.) Seek to awaken the entire school to a sense of responsibility. Above all, report anything specially creditable, whether it be among teachers or pupils.

From these suggestions is there not sufficient of interest to make the secretary's report something to anticipate? I once knew a secretary who considered the report of such slight importance that he did not even arise, but simply read an item or two in a tired, sleepy voice that suggested to me a thought of the famous African bird called the secretary-bird—the name derived from the arrangement of a number of black and gray quills over the ear in the position of a clerk's pen. So in this case, the sole suggestion of the secretary was the pencil over the ear.

THE REPORT OF THE DAY

should not be placed in the record at the school session, but an outline comprising the above items may be carefully made during the week and filled out at the school. Instead of increasing the secretary's work it considerably lessens it, as the day-book work may be filed and every possible item of interest entered in the ledger later. Then in making up the annual report it is next to impossible to dispute an item of the entire year's work. I have in my possession files of almost four years' continuous school work. A secretary should attend every business-meeting of the school.

Even though you provide a thoroughly competent substitute, you are at

because of not knowing the exact routine of the former. Certainly you have the minutes before you, but you can not act with that intelligence born of the actual knowledge produced by personally and actively engaging in the informal discussions that the minutes do not contain. A secretary should maintain for the finances of the school: funds received and disbursed, and keep a duplicate of every order on the treasurer filed. He should be acquainted with every pupil of his school whether it enrolls twenty or five hundred. He should be able to locate each one by class number as readily as the superintendent. You may consider this a stupendous task, but my experience in a school that enrolls four hundred and sixty-four proves its accomplishment. Of course this requires keen interest, thorough study of faces and classes; in fact it means an intimate acquaintance with your school in its entirety.

A great many more suggestions could be made aside from the regular duties outlined in book of rules and parliamentary practice, and chief among them is, be energetic. I never see a sleepy, listless secretary but that I think of a little bit of humor I read of several years ago: "Mamma, did you say all things were possible with God?" "Yes, my son, all things." "Well, anyway, I don't believe he could make Jimmy Smith's mouth bigger without setting his ears back!"

Just as impossible is it to make of one a good secretary without an unlimited supply of energy. Perhaps the local secretary does not realize how far-reaching are his careless acts. If his records are not complete, how can he furnish to the district or stake secretary the necessary information which serves to make his report to the General Secretary? Thus it is necessary that the local secretary thoroughly and systematically attend to his duties that the Church may be able to correctly estimate its (the Sunday-school's) condition.

While I have far from exhausted the subject, yet I hope to have advanced a thought that may benefit some secretary. How long we live is not told by our years, but by our work; and no matter how humble the sphere, we may honor it by throwing out advance lines and occupying step by step, thus creating and enlarging opportunities.

BANDERA, Texas, September 15.

Editors Herald: I was transferred from my mission in Oklahoma, to the Southwestern Texas District in June by the missionary in charge, H. O. Smith. Since arriving here I have done labor in San Antonio, Florisville, Pipe Creek, East Verde, Bandera, and Tuff, and in these respective places I have found some Saints who treated me as kindly as I could expect and may the good Lord bless them for it.

We have some commendable workers in San Antonio who seemingly are doing their best to advance the cause. Sr. Ruth Gifford is an excellent leader of the young folks there and her services as well as those of others in the Sunday-school are very good and will bear fruit some day. Some conditions at that place are not as good as my colaborer, W. S. Macrae, and I would like to see them. Bro. Macrae has done some good service there and made improvement that we hope will be lasting.

At Florisville, Bro. Ed Jackson is trying to make the name of "Latter Day Saint" honorable by doing right and distributing tracts and books to be read by his neighbors.

Bro. Hodges and family at Pipe Creek were very kind to me, and have lent aid to the work by supplying us with a team of ponies.

The work in and around Bandera is rather in the background, owing to the lack of work being done there. The "Millennial Dawn" people are considerably in evidence there under the leadership of a man who once preached the true gospel of Christ to the conversion of some who are still in the faith. Sr. Hay and others there hold faithfully to God's work.

While at East Verde I tried to make the gospel message plain to the people, and feel that my labors were not in vain. Bro. O. D. Johnson is respected there, and his son-in-law, Bro. Monroe Secrest, who has lately taken hold of the work there, will make a serviceable man in the work of God if faithful to the covenant he has made.

While at Tuff I met a community of outsiders who seemed to be interested in our work. About the only religion they respect is ours and it remains for those in the faith to renew their diligence and put forth a proper effort and many will be gathered in. While there I was taken care of principally by Bro. Roscoe Love and family. Grandma Bruton is a whole-souled Latter Day Saint and if all would follow her advice, they would be saints indeed.

Our conference and reunion convened at Pipe Creek, September 4 and continued ten days. Only a fair turnout of Saints was had but a good turnout of those not of the faith. Two were baptized during the meeting, Bro. Monroe Secrest and Sr. Mary E. Langford. Some effectual labor, we think, was done in behalf of the Sunday-school by Bro. W. S. Macrae. Bro. H. O. Smith gave some instructive lectures nightly on the Book of Mormon which seemed to be well received by those out of the Church.

Altogether we think the reunion was one of much profit to all who sacrificed to come and we trust the desires expressed may be carried out by all to the glorification of God and the establishment of righteousness in the earth.

I see the hand of God in this great work the more I labor for it. I thank God I am privileged to labor in such a grand and noble cause. The great glory and beauty of a Church like this is that all of its machinery when properly at work is that of character-building. Behind all the social, intellectual, and spiritual attainments is character-building in the individual, and if he fails, the privileges granted are trampled under foot and he is living below his rights as a servant of God.

A servant of God once said to a poor, lame man who was broken and helpless, lying at the gate Beautiful at the temple: "Silver and gold have I none; such as I have give I thee," and then the current of a new life surged through him, actuated by the power of the Holy Ghost. The deep lesson of this paragraph comes back to us down over the dark steps of time with its precious truth, which we can discover, and when found we know it is the secret of spiritual power leading us to give to others something of lasting benefit. Such as you have, that and that only can you give.

As Saints of God what have we to give, of moral dignity, of high purpose, of spiritual quality, in truth that which you have gained of Christ and his gospel? I believe it is true that the test of moral, intellectual, and spiritual possession is the capacity to give. Certainly no one can possess a high quality of character without making some one else feel the heart beat of that possession.

From youth to old age, man is ever giving something good or something evil, joy or sorrow. Each has an influence and our associates feel the stamp of our personality whether it be good or whether it be evil.

First of all, I think we Saints, after finding out what the law of the gospel is and its import to us, should emphasize it by acting in accord with it and we should have clear, definite views with regard to or against loose habits and morals, that our influence will be for the betterment of all. We certainly need leaders everywhere with trained consciences in harmony with God's law, whose moral judgment is accurate and correct against evils and vices of the day, who have been trained to do the right because it is right. We need those who love God and righteousness more than they do anything else in life. Those who are willing to be unpopular if need be, in order to stand for the right, those who boldly and openly fight the battles of righteousness fearlessly, prayerfully, and earnestly, are the servants whom God will honor. Those who compromise the right and refuse to stand clearly, openly, and honestly are unworthy of the name of Saint.

Success, morally and religiously, largely depends on the clearness and precision to which we cling to all questions of morality and religion. If you have been enabled to "add to your faith virtue" then you will certainly impart some of that to others; if you have "knowledge" added, some knowledge you will give to others, and thus the earnest person gives earnestness, the spiritual man gives spirituality, and the faithful man inspires others to be faithful.

A possession our lives should contain is moral earnestness. To treat lightly and carelessly great questions such as immorality, profanity, intemperance, etc., is a serious mistake. What we need most is "Zion" in each home, and to make the gospel effective and of value in the eyes of the world is to have it lived by men and women of character, of force, of consecration, and of moral and spiritual earnestness.

To leave the word consecration out of our catalogue of morals and spiritual attainments would leave a gap which would hinder our progress. It is those who consecrate their lives, their all, and are following the highest ideal—Christ, who have caught the Spirit of God and whose eyes are longing to see the dawn of a better age—they are the ones who feel that the deep, divine life is the most wondrous life of all, a life that bears the impress and stamp of God.

If we are selfish, prejudiced, narrow and careless on matters of right and wrong, and our spiritual vision is clouded, we know the Spirit of God does not pervade us and we will give forth to others that which we possess, but if there is light, with purity of character and an eager desire to make the most out of ourselves for the high purpose of consecration to God and his kingdom, the world will be bound to feel the impulse of such a life and realize that we indeed have something to give that is worth more than great treasures of gold.

A sympathetic chord in the nature of others is struck when they discover in you the characteristics of the Christ-life. Our duty is to do the most good we can, to the most people, by aiding the needy, caring for the sick, shielding the helpless, protecting the orphan, and all along the line cheering saddened hearts and darkened homes; and all this is in accord with God's Spirit.

The spirit of many is like the old proverbial prayer: "Lord bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife, us four and no more." If they are surrounded with plenty and feel safe, the ills, sorrows, and hardships of others do not touch them. Sometimes we get dull and unsympathetic and we need some great shock to arouse us to a sense of our duty, as a dash of cold water to the heavy slumbering boy. Only those who work the work of righteousness on gospel lines, by doing that in life which, small or great, lies before them, and with a willing mind and an unslackened pace, will have the beauty and strength of character God loves.

I sincerely trust the Saints of Southwestern Texas will heed the instruction of God's servants, given with the kindest of feeling at the reunion just passed, and arise more fully to a sense of duty to God and leave off those things (tobacco, snuff, etc.) which are so detrimental to our spiritual development, and buckle on the whole armor of God and act while it is day.

I find our predecessors of last year and year before, Brn. John and Charley Harp, well spoken of by the Saints throughout the district.

Ever hopeful of the ultimate outcome of the conflict in the triumph of God's work and the success of his Saints morally, temporally, intellectually, and spiritually, I remain,

In gospel bonds,

S. S. SMITH.

TEPA, Hao, July 23, 1903.

Joseph Burton and Emma: Peace be with you and all the congregations of Saints, through the grace of the true God. Amen.

Very great is the love of the brethren of this island to you all, and to the Saints of America for their kind words of sympathy. According to your request I will inform you of the occurrences of that storm, and of our great affliction in the death of our children; I accede to your request.

This is what that storm [in Hikuera] was like: On Wednesday, the 14th of January, the sea was very high on the land, and destroyed the houses, my house being the only one left; at three o'clock in the afternoon I advised all the Saints, and others also, to gather into one place for prayer. At the conclusion of the prayer service I told all the people to be diligent in prayer to God, to put away all our works, and trust in God this day, and I advised all the people to fast. On the 15th of that month at six o'clock in the morning of the fast-day we began the morning prayer, and the sea receded from the land. At three o'clock in the afternoon we began our evening prayer for that day, and at four o'clock the sea returned and came into our house, but we continued in prayer. When the prayers were concluded I advised all the people to pray earnestly to God and he would help us. At six o'clock the sea had come up into our house very high; I took my wife and our children and sought a place of refuge. We saw a dry place where the sea had not reached yet, and we built a niau (cocoanut leaf) house to shelter us from the storm, and in there a portion of the people gathered. I encouraged my wife and our children and that night we prayed to God, in whom we trusted, and who is the source of all good. At half past two we all arose, and the people gathered beside my niau house and I earnestly prayed to God that he would keep us in his hand; two of our brethren also prayed. When the prayers were ended I saw by my watch that it was three o'clock. I prayed again, after which my wife said, "There is the sea!" I looked and saw that the sea was high up on the cocoanut-trees. I then caught hold of my children, and we were covered with the sea; my wife and three of my children lost me. I heard my wife calling my name; I called to them to be watchful and we would meet, and we met. There were eight of us adrift without a raft; our little nursing child died, and I yielded her up, and a little while after another one of our daughters died, and I yielded her up. My wife was in very great trouble of mind because of the death of our children and she said to me that I should deliver her up to death, and that I should take care of the children that were left, but I did not agree to her thought. Then our children cried aloud and said,

"You must not talk that way; you take care of us." We obtained a box and a sack of flour and a pandanus-tree which was our raft upon which we drifted. We were continually covered with the sea, and my body and limbs became weakened by holding up my wife and children. I then saw a cocoanut-tree and encouraged them and said, "There is the land! Be encouraged!" and then we were again covered up with the sea. We lost our raft, and my wife and children were separated from me; only one daughter was left with me. Because of the greatness of the sea, my daughter dropped from my hand and was lost to me. I was also in great distress; I thought surely I could not live; not a breath was left in my body; I was drifting and I surely thought I would die. I then met my wife and daughters; she asked me, "Where are our children?" I answered, "They are lost. Let us be vigilant till we get ashore." We then got on to some driftwood with two of our daughters, and we gathered together on shore in that place; my wife and children asked me, "What place is this?" I said, "It is the town."

We met Tepoatea and his daughter, and we stayed where the sea had left the land; we then went to seek the people, and we met our brethren Punua and Maire and other Saints who treated us very kindly and furnished us with dry clothing and food.

Thus is ended a portion of the description of the happening of that storm, of its occurrences which befell us while drifting, and of getting ashore, and of meeting the Saints; and this is the end.

This recital of our great trouble in the death of our children is to you and to all Saints, and this is the number of our children who died in that storm—six—two boys and four daughters; these are their names—the boys are Tuhiva and Varoa—and the girls are Kahara, Tevavaro, Teikamotu, and Meto.

In these days our thoughts are continually upon them all. Alas! the grief of our hearts for their departing from those rafts of driftwood.

The officers of the branch have not been chosen this year; there are only a few members left now; there are but a few Saints now in this branch; the number does not reach a hundred, counting the officers and the brothers and sisters and the children blessed.

Peace be with you all. Amen.

From your loving brother in Jesus Christ.

HERSEY, Michigan, September 22.

Editors Herald: I am in the faith, and believe the faith is in me. I have the tent work to look after just now, and the missionary work, and also the Bishop's agent's work, etc. This keeps one very busy at all times. I am glad to tell you, dear readers, that this work we all love so well is moving on nicely, and that some are coming into the Church here and there, and as time goes on and we have opportunity to present the gospel before our fellow men, prejudice gives way, and we are being better understood than in years past.

A little over a week ago we closed a debate with Elder R. B. Brown of the Disciple faith, at Shabbona, or rather finished one begun there over two years ago. Over two years ago Bro. Brown and I discussed the doctrine of our Church, he agreeing to discuss his faith later, and on the 1st of September we met and discussed three evenings on our Church over again, then three evenings on the Disciples' faith, then one evening each on the three books, viz., one evening on the Book of Mormon, one evening on the Doctrine and Covenants, and one evening on the Inspired Translation by Joseph. Nine evenings all told. As the debate was a long-looked-for affair, many were in attendance, and almost every evening, rain or shine (and it rained almost every day or night), there were good congregations in attendance, that is, good for a country place—we think about from one hundred and fifty to over two hundred every evening. There was good order through the entire discussion.

Two were baptized when the debate was about half over, and on the last day of the discussion, Bro. William Davis, president of the district, baptized six more; and as there were others who wished to be baptized, arrangements were made, and Bro. Davis baptized four more on the following day, making twelve all told. Requests were made that we continue and preach for them after the debate was over, but as I had left the tent with no one permanent to run it, and on leaving had promised to return as soon as the debate was over, I hastened back.

Brn. Joseph and Heman Smith, who attended the conference at Shabbona, one year ago last June, and who also assisted in the dedication of the church at that place, will no doubt remember the good time we had at that time, and be glad to hear of our success and increase to the fold.

It may please some to know also that the gentleman who acted as chairman during the last debate was with his wife and daughter baptized, being among the number of six. I might also say that the gentleman who acted as chairman at the former debate was with his wife baptized, being among the four who were baptized on the day following the debate. In fact, as one of the outsiders said to me at the baptism, "It pays you fellows to debate as you usually get several into your Church afterwards. And say, you're getting the cream of this country, too."

One gentleman asked me (when on my return on the train), "How did you come out at the debate? Did you beat him?" I said that I never say after the debate is over, that I beat, or came out victorious, or anything like that. "Well," said he, "How many did you baptize?" I said there were eight baptized, and Elder Davis will baptize three or four more to-day. Then he asked, "And how many did the other fellow baptize?" I said he did not baptize any. "Well," said he, "that is answer enough."

In the Northern and Eastern Michigan Districts we have three tents running, but the weather has been so very wet that we have not had the success that we would have had, had the weather been more dry. Yet with the tent we were enabled to get into places where we otherwise would not have been enabled to reach the people, hence we feel that some have had the privilege of hearing who would not otherwise have heard.

Here in Hersey, among the farmers, is a branch of Saints, some of whom have lived here for about twenty-five years, and who have had meetings in their schoolhouse occasionally during that time, but have not done any preaching in the village; in fact there has been no preaching in the village by any of our people except two or three sermons which were delivered by William H. Kelley, a number of years ago, and one funeral sermon delivered by me. We have therefore pitched the tent here and are doing the best we can, but the interest is not very good, but few attend, and two of the ministers have in public warned their people to keep away from the tent and have nothing to do with us. I wonder if they have learned that the "freeze-out" argument is the best argument to bring to bear against us! However, there are two or three who say that they intend to unite with us in the near future.

Almost everything is moving on nicely in both northern and eastern districts, with the exception of one or two of our men who are not in good working order, they having had some affliction upon them, some by exposure to the bad weather, and others by much work, rheumatism, etc. All are doing the best we can, however, and we are being blessed by the good Spirit of the Master, and I believe I am safe in saying that the last conference was the best conference ever held in the district. Our people are learning the law, and many are doing it, and are receiving the blessings for so doing. Many of the outside people are having a better understanding of our work, and less prejudice to our people.

Storms and winds are also the things which are upon us, giving us a reminder of the latter days. The end is truly nearer now than when we began. May the blessings of God be upon Zion and her people, is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,

J. J. CORNISH.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, September 23.

Editors Herald: We are back in the city again, have located here for the winter, secured rooms quite centrally located, and have the children nicely started in school again, Charley in the high school taking a commercial course and Allie in sixth grade; both seem to like their schools and teachers.

Well, Bro. Chase has begun the street-meetings here again and, as before, we are having the best of interest and big crowds every night, there being about five hundred in attendance last night. The subject was "baptism" and the way it had been perverted by the dominant people here, calling attention to some notable examples, one being that of Thomas Arsh who was baptized at Florence, Nebraska, under Elder Cunningham, then on coming here had to be rebaptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and received into full fellowship, Brigham Young thus putting him on a sort of probation something as the Methodist people do on instituting an entrance to the kingdom by a succession of doors; the first I suppose was a kind of storm-door or outer door, then the inner door after reaching here. And thus in these many reformations the signification of baptism was changed from the door of entrance to the kingdom to a sort of planary indulgence with no more authority in the gospel than the pope has in the confessional.

But this of course is one of the many diversions from the plain and simple truths of the gospel. This subject proved of interest to them, for at the close, liberty for questions being given, there was much to be said in form of questions, showing that this was quite new to some. The subject for to-night will be "Baptism of the Spirit and its Fruits," contrasting its effects in the character and lives of this people with Christ and his apostles.

The summer's campaign thus far, while it has been one of some sacrifice and inconvenience to us in some ways, has been interesting and very instructive to us and we think these meetings must have been of benefit to many people.

Since writing you last we have held meetings on the streets of Murray, Sandy, and Bingham Junction; these being smaller places there was not so large an attendance but very good interest. During these last meetings, through the kindness of Bro. and Sr. James Wardle of Sandy we had a very pleasant camping ground or place for our living tents in their orchard and were treated very kindly while there; they are saints in very deed. This family, old and young, also that of Mr. and Sr. Smith, came out with buggies nearly every night at the last three places named, encouraging us with their presence and greatly helping in the singing, which we think is quite a factor in street work. We do not always find the Saints thus willing to help, so were very grateful for this.

Our next move was to Provo, where we rented a small, furnished house for one month, which was quite a treat after tenting all summer; of course we enjoyed tenting, but a change is good sometimes. The soldiers' encampment at the lake running each evening at this time, took many from town, but this being quite a Mormon town, quite an interest and sometimes excitement was shown during some of these meetings. At the close, questions poured in thick and fast, but during it all good order has been maintained.

After two weeks of these meetings, our reunion, conference, and conventions were held in the gospel tent just in the edge of town. These were quite well attended and lasted about ten days. Apostle Wm. H. Kelley and Elders Hansen, Swenson, Thorson, and Chase all being in attendance gave us some very interesting and instructive discourses, together with the social meetings, some of which were excellent. It was a very enjoyable time for all, or this seemed to be the general opinion of those present.

The Sunday-school and Religio meetings held alternately each afternoon of the reunion were also of great interest to us, also the convention meetings. The program of Friday night, rendered by the Sunday-school and Religio conjointly, was excellent; music and declamations were fine, and the program brought our Sunday-school and Religio work before the people. Features of the program were an interesting speech on archæology by Bro. Kelley and a brief review of Paul's letters by Bro. Chase.

But what made all this more enjoyable to me was the presence and association of my dear mother, Mrs. Alice France, two sisters, Mrs. Stanley and Mrs. Baguley, and niece, Miss Ruby Baguley, all from Lamoni, Iowa. After much begging and persuading, I received word just before conference that mother was really coming and when we went to the depot to meet her imagine if you can the joyful surprise to find not only mother but these other loved ones also. Well, we enjoyed it to the fullest extent; they are enjoying a trip all through this country, sight-seeing, etc., and are with us again here in the city for a short time, having a taste of missionary life, helping with the singing and tract distributing, and it would surprise some of you Lamonites to see how well Miss Ruby takes to this, handing out more tracts than any of us. These young Mormons seem to want her kind of tracts for some reason.

Am trying to persuade my mother to stay with us all winter but have not got her persuaded yet. We are very busy trying to do some visiting among these people in the interest of Sunday-school and Religio work along with all the other duties. Have had to drop about all of my correspondence, and thinking that all might hear of our whereabouts and doings in this way I will occasionally, if permitted, write a short letter to the Church papers. There is indeed plenty of opportunity for a "Religian," a "Sunday-School worker" or a "Daughter of Zion" in this country as well as the elder and we are trying to do our part.

In gospel bonds,
MRS. A. M. CHASE.

Editors Herald: I am still working in the Master's blessed cause, and I am striving earnestly day by day to live faithful and keep the commandments of my dear heavenly Father, that I may some day receive a crown of life and "an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away." I realize that in order to enjoy these promised blessings I must be faithful not only this day or this year, but through all time even until death, as John the Revelator says, that I may be counted worthy to receive the reward of the faithful ones. There is much to discourage one as we pass on through life's pathway, many obstacles, snares, and many clouds which hide the blessed light for a while, many wiles of evil for one to be overcome with, but if through all these discouragements we endure and hold fast to Him who is our light and life, we shall finally gain the lasting victory.

Your sister in the faith,

Editors Herald: Constant association so familiarizes us to our environments as to dispel the strangeness or novelty of first impressions. Thus after three months' time the narrow, crooked streets of the great "Smoky City" of "iron and steel" do not tax my consideration; the abrupt and towering hills seem to have lost some of their exalted height.

After a careful and prayerful examination of the state and standing of the Church work in this part of the "Keystone State," we are in a better condition to comprehend the necessity of the cause, and with a fuller knowledge of our rank and file here, I am now better prepared to form an opinion than when last writing.

In the more than a half million population of Pittsburg and her immediate surrounding towns and country, there is a large quota of religion as indicated by the many Churches, and numerous ministers. If quantity and quality were both acceptable in the sight of God, we might in safety and without compunction of conscience fold our tent, and hie us away to greener pastures and more inviting fields.

There is eternal weight and responsibility in the following: "And also those to whom these commandments were given might have power to lay the foundation of this Church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity, and out of darkness, the only true and living Church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I the Lord am well pleased." The work relative to bringing the Church pleasing to God out of "darkness"—human ignorance—has not yet been accomplished, and the unrelenting and potential enemy of the Captain of our salvation is neither dead, gone on a vacation, nor gone out of business, and he is quite unwilling to permit us to come out of "obscurity." The battle betwixt truth and its perversion is still on.

With a united, working effort upon the part of those resident here, the cause can be sustained and an ingathering made, but the paramount task confronting us now, is to cheer, comfort, uplift, keep, and to save what we have, and in our feeble way fulfill as best we can: "And again, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked."

How I may fully and acceptably discharge my humble part of the responsibility has been the great anxiety of my soul for many, many long years, and I have not yet solved to my own satisfaction what would be the best method to reach, in a gospel—witness—sense, all classes and conditions of people. One thing that I feel fully assured of, we must gain the good will of those whom we are to benefit by our ministrations. He whom we essay to represent said: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." O for an intuition divinely bestowed, that a greater installment or endowment of that drawing power may be possessed.

Those not of our faith who come to hear the word are few indeed, and they only transient. At present we are distributing tracts to the utmost of our limited means, hopeful of some fruitage. Ebn-El-Farid is credited with:

"Not in vain the nation-strivings, nor by chance the currents flow; Error-mazed, yet truth-directed, to their certain goal they go."

We unite with the above the beautiful lines of Alfred Tennyson:

"Oh, yet we trust that somehow good
Will be the final goal of ill,
To pangs of nature, sins of will,
Defects of doubt, and taints of blood;
"That nothing walks with aimless feet;
That no one life shall be destroyed,
Or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made the pile complete."

The constant yearning of my soul in every invocation is that God in grace and peace will bring unto all men the uplifting power of the gospel, and the inspiration manifest in Doctrine and Covenants 125:11, surely indicate a soon fulfillment of the verse by Mrs. L. H. Sigourney:

"There is a cry in Burmah, and a rush
Of thousand footsteps from the distant bound
Of watery Siam and the rich Cathay.
Not for food
Or raiment ask they. Simply girding on
The scanty garment o'er the weary limb,
They pass unmarked the lofty domes of wealth
Inquiring for a Stranger. There he stands;

The mark of foreign climes is on his brow;
 He hath no power, no costly gift to deal
 Among the people, and his lore perchance
 The earth-bowed worldling, with his scales of gold, Accounteth folly. Yet to him is raised
 Each straining eyeball, 'Tell us of the Christ!
 And like the far-off murmur of the sea
 Lashed by the tempest, swelled their blending tone,
 'Sir, we would hear of Christ. Give us a scroll Bearing his name.' "

ROSLYN, Washington, September 24.

Editors Saints' Herald: I started for the West the latter part of August. Stopped off at Galesburg and Canton, Illinois, for a few days. At the latter city I had the pleasure of meeting Brn. H. E. Moler and Frank Russell. Heard good reports of their labors for the Master, especially of their street preaching and their excellent singing. I heard them sing some of the songs that they have composed for street use and they are good. Brethren who are engaged in like work would do well to send to these brethren for those songs.

I spent a few days at Bevier, Missouri, visiting my aged mother and sisters. While there I called on our old-time friend, Sr. James Davis, who has been confined to the house for the last two years through illness. I found her very patient in her suffering and waiting calmly for the call to come home to the mansions above. May the sweet peace that our heavenly Father can impart through the Holy Spirit continue with her to the end of life's journey, and with all others of God's suffering children, is my earnest prayer.

I came West by the northern route. At Bozeman, Montana, I just had time to extend my hand to Bro. J. H. Wells. Bro. John looked quite natural and as cheerful as in days of old.

My next stop was Butte, Montana. However, I only spent a few hours in the city. My object in stopping off there was to find the grave of my oldest brother; hence the first thing that I did on my arrival there was to look up an undertaker. I happened to come across the very man who had charge of my brother's funeral and after a short ride on the street-car I reached Mount Moriah Cemetery and in a short time I found myself standing by the side of a lone grave and on the head-board I read, "John T. Griffiths. Died February 11th, 1897. Age 60 years." Yes, that was my brother's grave, and as I stood there all alone a strange feeling went over me and my heart was very sad and the silent tears were hard to keep back. I had not seen him for ten or twelve years prior to his death. He was on the grand jury and was taken suddenly sick and died within a few days, hundreds of miles from his aged mother and brothers and sisters. It was a long time after his death ere we learned of it. As I turned my back on the lone grave, it was with a very sad feeling in my heart and with an earnest prayer that we would meet in the land "where none are dying."

I wandered back to the station and was soon on the Northern Pacific express speeding away toward Spokane, Washington, and arrived there at twenty-five minutes past eight the next morning, and after walking around some time I came across Brn. Tripp, Smith, Chatburn, and Bell. The latter brother took me to his home, where I received a kind welcome. Bro. Bell and wife provided a home for the missionary. God bless them for their kindness.

Soon after my arrival Bro. David Powell came in from Deep Creek. He and Bro. Chatburn are well liked by the Saints and are doing a good work. We have quite a number of true and faithful Saints in Spokane and we look forward to the day when we will have a large branch of the Church in that city.

Spokane is one of the finest cities in the great Northwest and people come here from all parts of the world. The Church should keep from one to two able ministers in Spokane and surrounding country.

The branch here has had much trouble in the past, but we feel that better conditions will obtain in the future. However, we will do our very best to make the Spokane Branch a power for good in the state of Washington, if the Saints there will second our weak efforts, and we believe that they will.

We held meetings there ten days and had a good interest. To our great but happy surprise, Bro. William H. Kelley turned up at the Sunday morning service on the 18th inst. We were truly glad to see him and hear his voice again. He preached for us and his sermons did much good to the Saints. He was still in the city when I left for this place. He was on his way to Hope, Idaho.

Have had only one meeting here. They have a nice little chapel and the few Saints that we have here seem to be alive to the interest of the work of God.

I leave for Seattle on the 26th, thence to Tacoma, Castle Rock, Portland, Hood River, and Condon.

Brn. Holt, Anderson, Allen, Roberts, and Sheldon are busily engaged in their line of work.

We sincerely hope that the ministry who labor in towns and cities will procure tracts and carry on a house to house work.

With love to all, I remain,

Your brother and colaborer in the one faith,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

WINTERSSET, Iowa, September 6.

Dear Readers: Sitting in our country home this Sabbath evening,

I look across the grassy hills
 And watch the lights gleam in the city;
 I hear the chimes of bells
 From many church towers. Ah, the pity

That seven churches* there should be,
 Each differing somewhat from the other,
 That seven pastors can't agree
 In making man to man a brother.

They've cushioned pews, and frescoed walls,
 And pulpits with their carpets fine;
 Yet, from those should-be hallowed halls
 There comes no word to heart of mine.

Their salaried preachers rise, and read
 Their sermons from some pages printed;
 They talk on many a social need,
 But gospel themes are sadly stunted.

Their doctrine sounds not like we read—
 What Christ, or Paul, or Luke, or John,
 Or Mark, gave people as a creed,
 To build salvation sure upon.

No semblance scarcely can I see.
 Christ's teachings stand in bold contrast;
 And oh, how thankful should we be
 We have the gospel of the past,

The way Christ gave it unto men,
 While on this earth in days of yore,
 The gospel pure restored again.
 Lord, praise to thee for ever more.

*Church building.

Let all Saints remember the isolated ones of the Church, for truly there are some who "hunger and thirst" after righteousness. Pray that they be faithful and diligent, their lives exemplary, and that Christ should tenderly, patiently lead them home at last.

FAIRLAND, Indian Territory, September 24.

Editors Herald: This leaves me still in the faith and battling for the truth. I have been laboring a great deal of the year in a field that is almost new so far as the latter-day gospel is concerned. They have not had much of it preached to them and like nearly all other places they do not want it preached. What they have is good enough for them and sometimes they take the pains to go around over the community to try and keep others from coming out to hear, and if that fails, they will often try something else.

In the community where I was preaching, in the Creek Nation, Indian Territory, on September 13, some persons tried to talk the people out of coming to hear me and when that failed they concluded that they would give the preacher a few rotten eggs and maybe he would leave, but I took the eggs and stayed with them from Saturday night until Thursday night. On Monday after the eggng took place Bro. Stewart and I went up to Holdenville and Bro. Stewart had a warrant issued for four of the parties, but they had not been arrested yet when I came away. There was quite a stir over the neighborhood amongst those guilty ones for a day or two after they found out we had gone to town.

When I was preaching there a few weeks ago, an old lady had a revelation from God telling her not to go out to hear the "Mormons" preach, but when I was there this time she came out on Sunday to hear me. Sr. Stewart sent her word that her God was a changeable one.

If you missionaries in the North think that the sea is always smooth down South and the sailing nice and pleasant, you are mistaken. Hope that none of the ministry will have to meet with such experiences as your writer has.

Your brother in Christ,

H. J. THURMAN.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, October 1.

Editors Herald: It is some time since I wrote to your interesting and valuable columns. Maybe some of my old friends think I am lost or growing cold in the work, but not so by any means. My heart and soul are still in this wondrous work of our God; in it I live and move and have a being, for which I feel truly grateful to my Father in heaven.

I have just returned from a trip to my old field of labor, Fremont District. Attended the reunion held on the grounds of Bro. Daniel Hougas, near Henderson, Iowa, and must say that seeing the dear old faces of those I had labored with so satisfactorily to myself, as well as to them as they all expressed themselves to me, gave me great joy. I met with tears of joy and I parted with tears of regret, which will never be forgotten. The gospel ties that bind true hearts together are stronger than death.

We have labored in the interest of this work for thirty-eight years in the Fremont, Pottawattamie, Southern Nebraska, and Nodaway Districts. I am still deeply interested in the welfare of all the Saints who are so dear to me and have so willingly administered to my necessities in the past years. I shall ever pray to my Father and God to let the choicest of his blessings be theirs in this life and in the life to come.

I have made the acquaintance of many in this stake who, I am assured by the Holy Spirit of promise, are of the royal stock of the house of Israel, and who through their faithfulness will not come short of the glory of God.

The officials of this stake with the bishopric are true men of God, who with many of the membership have their all upon the altar of sacrifice with their lives, in the interest of this work and the building up of the Zion of our God. I have been greatly blessed in my labors of love among the Saints in preaching the gospel and working in the evangelical office and in other duties as a minister for Christ in this field of labor. I have met with kind and loving reception in all the branches I have visited and all say, "Come again."

Dear Saints, please accept my sincere thanks for favors bestowed. May God's choicest blessings with the Holy Spirit of promise be with you all ever more, is the prayer of your brother and fellow servant in Christ,

HENRY KEMP.

THAYER, Missouri, September 27.

Dear Herald: I have just closed a series of nine sermons at a historical spot in the Ozarks, "The Gulf," where twenty years ago grandpa and his fifty sons waged war against the angel's message as presented by Elder Heman C. Smith and old Bro. Springer, and where the county paper stated that the flowing locks were clipped from the head of one of the Mormon leaders (John R. Jones), "by the lead from their guns." But grandpa is not here now. Gone, gone to the land of accounts, to witness the coming of his fifty sons.

Yes, since twenty years ago Time has turned the dial, and where once stood an old log cabin locked against the truth, now stands a nice frame union church, doors open to one and all. Here for a full week I sounded out the good tidings of Christ to the world. I had fine crowds of good listeners, except for a few rude boys on the outside. I closed the effort with at least one hundred present.

There are lots of homes here in Southern Missouri which can be gotten cheap. If any are planning to come to this country, we would be glad to hear from them, as our acquaintance might help them to a location. It seems almost too bad to see what chances there are to get homes here and the Saints not take the advantage of them. To be sure, this is a rough and rocky country, yet in all my travels I never have heard of one individual dying from starvation unless he was too trifling to work, and we do not want that kind of folks, anyway.

Can any of the HERALD readers give me the address of Bro. Andrew J. Fletcher? You will confer a favor in doing so.

Your brother,

Home address, Pomona, Missouri.

J. T. DAVIS.

RATON, New Mexico, September 28.

Editors Herald: After a good, spiritual conference at Colorado Springs, Colorado, on September 5 and 6, Bro. J. M. Stubbart and I came to Trinidad and held tent-meeting for about eight evenings. We closed tent-work on the 19th inst., for the season. We had good interest, but small congregations on account of cold evenings. Bro. J. M. baptized Sr. Menzies and twin daughters, twelve years of age, on the 20th.

On the 24th we came here and preached in private houses to Saints and a few outsiders. Sunday, the 27th, was quite a busy day. We went ten miles east in the country and baptized Bro. Turner, wife, and two of their children, also Bro. J. T. Young's son, eleven years old. About sixty feet from Bro. Turner's residence is a miniature lake of fresh spring water from the mountain above which constituted the liquid grave for the burial of the dead to sin.

After dinner they were all confirmed and three children blessed. A prayer-meeting was also held at which the gift of tongues and the spirit of revelation were manifest. And then we made our return in time for preaching in town. The day was joyously spent. Here in the mountains of the West, God blesses his children and calls sinners to repentance.

We go to-night to Trinidad to take train for Elk, New Mexico, where Bro. Stubbart will enter upon the platform of discussion with a minister of the Christian Church. We have prepared a large chart of identity, and have bills of the same kind, to set before the people a clear-cut distinction and are anxious to witness the results.

Ever praying God to bless Zion, I am,

J. W. MORGAN.

LAMONI, Iowa, October 2.

Editors Herald: Since the Independence conference, I have been able to do but little work; but if I could do none, it would be a much greater trial to me, hence I am trying to be thankful while I do what I can.

In the latter part of June I labored for a short time at Lucas, Iowa, speaking three times and giving fifteen blessings. Bro. Sandy, then of the HERALD Office, reported for me. It was his first effort at this work, but his interest and zeal brought success, and his companionship was pleasant and agreeable. The coöperation of Bro. J. R. Evans was a great help to us in our work, and was and is highly appreciated by us. He informed us that he had been quite skeptical about the work of the patriarch, but the Lord had helped him to see it in a different light. He received his blessing, noted the character of the work, and expressed himself as being satisfied. Our aged Bro. John Watkins obtained permission to attend our meetings, and afterwards, at the prayer-meeting, expressed his high appreciation of the "treat" enjoyed. Bro. James Wilkinson was a true friend and helper, also, and was present much of the time.

June 26, I spent most of the day with Bro. and Sr. Isaac Phillips of Chariton, where I enjoyed a pleasant visit and a good rest. At thirteen minutes to ten o'clock in the evening, I took train for Adrian, Illinois, in which region I remained till the evening of July 8, visiting with relatives and friends (including my aged father), and preaching four times, twice on each Sunday, in the Rock Creek Church. This privilege of meeting with relatives, Saints, and friends, where I was so well known, where I obeyed the gospel and, in weakness, performed ministerial duty as a teacher, priest, elder, and apostle, and speaking to them in defense of so glorious a cause, after an experience of nearly thirty years, was indeed enjoyable. May "God be with" them "till we meet again."

I attended the Stewartsville reunion from August 28 till September 7, remaining nearly a week after the close of the reunion to complete my work. I gave forty blessings and spoke once, but the committee will not blame me for not doing more preaching, as one of the invited speakers, for the fault was in no sense mine. As others have said, the reunion was a good one; and as I say, the preaching, with but little exception, was from fair to very good. One thing is clear and very cheering, that is, the Lord still stands by and with those who stand by him and his truth.

I suppose I might as well confess and hold myself ready to answer for an innovation. While at Stewartsville, I did, by his request, give a patriarchal blessing to my father who is nearly eighty-one years old! Is there another case on record of a son giving a patriarchal blessing to his father?

I think I can truly say that I never was more interested in the salvation of souls than I am to-day. May God help his people to be what they ought to be, is my intense desire.

In gospel bonds,

J. R. LAMBERT.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. D. E. Tucker wrote from Kaitangata, New Zealand, September 1: "The prospect is growing somewhat darker on one hand, but lighter on the other. All things considered our heart and soul are made glad at times, and sad at other times. The prospect is fair for me to have a traveling companion in the person of Bro. R. Hall, sometime in the near future, I hope, as the Lord has so manifested to me. He is humble, and a worthy young brother. Was a worker in the Church to which he formerly belonged. The Lord has also manifested to him in answer to prayer, in that he has seen himself in dream preaching to a congregation of people.

"Later. September 4. On last eve while Bro. R. Hall and I were engaged in solemn prayer, seeking to know the Lord's will concerning him, the good Lord spoke to him through unworthy me calling him to the office of an elder in the Church and to take part in the ministry with me, and telling him what great joy he would have in the kingdom of heaven with the souls he would win if true and faithful. He broke down weeping. We prayed together several times after and thanked and praised the Lord, and I have rejoiced in heart and soul all this day. I was so rejoiced, I entirely forgot my supper until I was in bed for some time. Bro. Hall is an honest, upright, and honorable young man twenty-two or twenty-three years of age and is ready to place all upon the altar and take the field with me, when his ordination is favored by those in charge. 'Praise the Lord, O my soul!'"

Sr. Ada Bolding, writing from Fanshawe, Indian Territory, September 24, says: "We have been having some good preaching at this place by Bro. E. A. Erwin and others of our faith. Bro. Erwin has been with us the past week, preached some fine sermons, baptized two, and left some more ready to come into the kingdom. I hope that this work will roll on, and that some day there will be a branch organized at this place."

Bro. W. S. Bond, Pawnee City, Nebraska, in renewing subscriptions to Church publications, September 29, says: "There are no Saints here except myself and I can not do without the Church papers. Would like very much for an elder to come here and hold some meetings. Would be glad to pay all expenses to get one."

Bro. C. Scott wrote from Shenandoah, Iowa, September 28: "I expect to be at Red Oak next week. Brn. H. Kemp and D. R. Chambers go south to Riverton and Hamburg from here to-morrow."

Sr. Dora Booker, Bond, Mississippi, September 22: "Though I am the only Saint here at this place, I am standing firm in the faith, and it is often asked why I get along so well. Reverend L. Franklin, a Baptist peacher, is very anxious to join the Saints' Church. I pray that the Lord will send elders or a missionary here. I want the brothers and sisters to pray for me that I may endure to the end. If we had some more Saints here, I would be better satisfied. The Bishop may expect some tithes from me in the near future for the upbuilding of Zion. I was glad to hear from Bro. George Graves through the HERALD. My determination is to do all that I can to have a church here, and I believe that the Lord will bless me in my undertaking."

S. W. Simmons writing to Bishop Kelley from Haileyville, Indian Territory, September 28, says: "Baptized two yesterday and will baptize five more this evening. So far this has been the best year of my life. Gospel work in the South is looming up. I have been well sustained this year."

Born.

JASPERSON.—To Bro. H. H. and Sr. J. L. Jasperson, at Lamoni, Iowa, June 6, 1903, a daughter, blessed August 9, 1903, by Arthur Allen; named Ruth Marie.

Married.

PINKERTON—HASKINS.—In the presence of a few relatives and friends at her residence in Colfax Township, Harrison County, Missouri, at 3 p. m., September 27, 1903, Sr. Helen B. Haskins was married to Mr. Robert M. Pinkerton of Viola, Illinois, Elder H. N. Snively officiating.

Died.

SCHOMAKER.—Died in Jackson, Michigan, September 12, 1903, of cholera infantum, Harry E. Schomaker, only child and infant son of Bro. Frank Schomaker and wife. Harry E. was born in Coldwater, Michigan, September 12, 1902, and was the only grandchild of Bro. and Sr. Charles J. Schomaker.

SMART.—Sr. Smart died at her home in Appleton, Sunday morning, September 13, 1903. She was born June 12, 1857, at Gouverneur, St. Lawrence County, New York. She was married to Joseph Smart, who survives her, December 24, 1873; to them were born five children; two died in infancy, and three remain to mourn. She was baptized May 31, 1903, by Elder W. P. Robinson. Funeral sermon by W. P. Robinson.

KEPLEY.—Sr. Martha Kepley passed away at the home of her son, W. W. Kepley, Galena, Indiana, September 9, aged 92 years and 18 days. She was born August 22, 1811, at Corydon, Indiana. She leaves five sons, two daughters, twenty-four grandchildren, thirty-four great-grandchildren, and four great-great-grandchildren. Baptized by W. H. Kelley, October 28, 1894, at Byrneville, Indiana. Funeral was preached at the Wolf Cemetery, where the remains were laid to rest. Sermon by Elder George Jenkins. There was no disease preying upon her body; she was like the clock that runs down, her spirit quietly leaving her without a struggle.

FRICK.—Bro. Martin Snyder Frick died at Joplin, Missouri, September 6, 1903, aged 54 years, 5 months, and 19 days. He was born March 18, 1849, near Newton, Pennsylvania. He leaves a wife and five children besides a host of friends to mourn. He was an indefatigable worker in the Church. He manifested great patience and faith during his sickness. Funeral sermon by Elder F. C. Keck.

STONE.—Lula Stone died of typhoid fever at Nevada, Missouri, September 10, 1903, after an illness of thirty days. Born August 10, 1870, in Vernon County, Missouri; married December 10, 1889, to John Stone, half brother of Ex-governor Stone. She leaves a husband, three children, and many others that loved her, to mourn. Her life was that of a devoted Christian. She belonged to the Church about five years; baptized by John D. White. Funeral sermon by F. C. Keck.

EVANS.—W. J. Evans, father of Bro. M. Evans, died at Webb City, Missouri, September 11, 1903, of cancer of the stomach. He was born October 29, 1838, in Fulton County, Illinois. A wife and nine children survive him. He was a Federal soldier and fought in defense of the Union. Funeral sermon by F. C. Keck.

PETERS.—After a lingering illness of several months, High Priest James H. Peters passed peacefully away, September 21, 1903, at Coleman, Michigan, aged 64 years, 11 months, 15 days. He was born October 7, 1838, in Courtland County, New York; united with the Church at Plano, Illinois, April 16, 1879; ordained high priest at Lamoni, Iowa, April 15, 1890. Elder Peters was a very zealous man in Church matters, and his uprightness of character and godly walk before all men brought honor to the Church. He leaves a wife, two sons, one daughter, two brothers, one sister, and a host of friends who mourn his loss. Funeral services were conducted at the residence by Elder J. R. Beckley, of Barryton, Michigan. The remains were taken to Manistee for interment.

BEECROFT.—Isabel Beecroft was born at Hull, England, August 15, 1816; June 24, 1835, she was united in marriage to Henry Beecroft. To this union eight children were born, four boys and four girls. She and her husband came to America in 1852; in 1860 they located at Council Bluffs, Iowa, where they resided until her death, which occurred Sunday, September 13, 1903. She united with the Church of Latter Day Saints at Hull, England, on June 24, 1844, and lived a consistent Christian life. She was a friend to all. She leaves to mourn her departure an aged companion, two sons, Henry and Robert Beecroft, and two daughters, Mrs. Theodore Guittar of Council Bluffs and Mrs. Brackenbury of Alma, Idaho. The services were held at the home of Mrs. Guittar; sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by Reverend Frank A. Case, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Council Bluffs.

MASON.—Sr. Caroline Mason, whose maiden name was Caroline Brozzo, was born April 3, 1857, at Brownville, Jefferson County, New York, died September 24, 1903, at her home in Appleton, Wisconsin, at the age of 46 years, 5 months, and 21 days. She leaves her husband, mother, three brothers, and two sisters to mourn her loss. She was married to Eugene Mason, June 27, 1893, and they lived happily together. She was baptized a member of the Church, July 22, 1903, by Elder W. P. Robinson and we believe she was a good, faithful Saint from that time until her death.

SHUTE.—At the home of her daughter, Sr. Martha A. Catlin, Wheatland, Wyoming, Sr. Mary A. Shute, widow of Elder George W. Shute, aged 64 years, 4 months and 17 days. She was born in Knox County, Illinois, in 1838; was baptized October 20, 1869, by Elder Z. H. Gurley, Sr., and remained faithful to the end of life. Of seven children six united with the Church. Five children are yet living.

HERINGTON.—Ralph Wayne, infant son of John S. and Sr. Ella Herington, was born March 15, 1903; died September 3, 1903, at the age of 5 months and 19 days. The funeral was held at their home in Magnolia, Iowa, September 4, 1903. The little one was laid to rest in the Magnolia cemetery. Sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by R. Chambers.

MCCALLUM.—Ray Harold, infant son of Bro. and Sr. Alexander McCallum, was born June 11, 1903, and died September 2, 1903, at the age of 2 months and 20 days. The funeral services were held at their home in Missouri Valley, Iowa. The little bud of promise was laid to rest in the Missouri Valley cemetery. Sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by R. Chambers.

HALL.—Hyrum Gardner Hall, near Shenandoah, Page County, Iowa, September 21, 1903, aged 78 years, 3 months, 26 days, from indolent ulcer on the face. He was born near Antwerp, New York, May 26, 1825; baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, October 13, 1845; was married soon after to Serena H. Lynde, also a Saint; to them were born four sons and three daughters: James Samuel, Hanes Calab, Edward Chidester, Hyrum Gardner, Jr., Mary Ann, Amy Jane, and Ida Ette. He removed to Emmet County, Michigan, about 1844 or 1845, living on Beaver Island for some time. Tiring of the claims of James J. Strang, he returned to the state of New York. Later he went to Wisconsin, and then to Nauvoo, Illinois, where his wife died in 1865. He married Sr. Martha Truman, at Nauvoo, August 19, 1867. She died April 19, 1868. Married his third wife, Sr. Jane M. Coppes, at Lamoni, Iowa, January 14, 1883. To them were born two daughters; Ella Mae, and Emma Catherine. Two sons, Edward Chidester and Hyrum G., and four daughters, Mary A. Newton, Emma J. Gill, Ella Mae, and Emma C., with the wife, remain to mourn. He passed through the "dark and cloudy day" of the Church, identifying himself with the Reorganized Church at Nauvoo, Illinois, being baptized by President Joseph Smith. He settled near Shenandoah, Iowa, in July, 1874. He died peacefully, known as a worthy neighbor, an affectionate husband, a loving father, an upright citizen, a follower of the Christ. Funeral from the Saints' church, Shenandoah, September 23. Remarks by Elder C. Scott, text Philipians 3: 20, 21.

STRAUSS—Sarah A. Straus, formerly Sarah A. Sweet, daughter of Elder George Sweet, died July 3, 1903, aged 54 years. She was born at Racine, Wisconsin. She leaves a husband, one son, and four daughters to mourn. She was laid to rest in the Valley View Cemetery, near Persia, Iowa. Funeral sermon by Elder Sidney Pitt.

EDMONDS.—O. P. Edmonds died September 25, 1903. He was born March 5, 1840, in the state of Michigan, moved to Iowa in 1868, and settled in Harrison County near to what is now the town of Orson, where he remained until his death. He was not a member of any Church, but was respected by all who knew him. He leaves a wife, three sons, and a host of friends to mourn his departure. Sermon by Elder J. C. Crabb.

LONZWAY.—Sr. Dora Lonzway died in Malheur, Oregon, September 20, 1903. She was born in July, 1861; baptized by Elder A. M. Chase, March, 1899. She leaves a husband, four daughters, and three sons to mourn. She was loved by all in the Church and admired by those outside for the noble character she bore. Funeral sermon by Reverend Mimmie (Congregational).

PHILLIPS.—Roseberry Garfield, son of Mr. and Sr. John and Maggie Phillips, and grandson of Bro. Evan and Sr. Amelia Davies, of No. 1 Upper Inkerman Street, Llanelly, South Wales. After an illness of one month from scarlet fever and consequent dropsy, passed peacefully away August 29, and was buried September 1. The funeral being private the services were held at the grandparents' home, for they had raised him, Elder Evan B. Morgan in charge. Garfield was six years, three months, and twenty-eight days old. He was a bright bud of promise.

"HAMILTON HERALD" INTERVIEWS PRESIDENT SMITH.

Those who have been interested in the writings of the "Senior Editor Abroad" will no doubt enjoy reading of his labors in one of the chief cities visited, from the pen of a local newspaper man. This clipping is taken from the Hamilton, Scotland, Herald, of September 12:

INTERVIEW WITH MR. JOSEPH SMITH.

Hamilton was this week honored with a visit from the President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Mr. Joseph Smith, the famous son of a still more famous father. On the evenings of Sunday and Monday last Mr. Smith addressed largely attended meetings in the Victoria Hall, and the presence of the head of the Church was naturally regarded as an event of considerable importance by the Latter Day Saints in Hamilton and district. Believing that an interview with the son of the famous prophet of Mormonism would not be devoid of interest to our readers, a representative of the Hamilton Herald waited upon Mr. Smith at the close of the meeting on Sunday evening, and found a white-haired, pleasant-faced, quiet-mannered old gentleman of venerable aspect, who welcomed him with the utmost cordiality.

"I shall be very glad to tell you anything you want to know," said Mr. Smith, when the Herald man made his errand known; "for we court the fullest investigation. I sometimes think there is not enough investigation in these days, otherwise the claims of our Church would be more widely known."

In the course of a pleasant chat, Mr. Smith informed our reporter that this was his first visit to Great Britain—indeed, it was the first occasion on which he had left the continent of North America, his responsible duties as head of the Church having prevented him from traveling further afield. He reached London on 25th June last, and had spent the interval in visiting the various congregations of Latter Day Saints throughout England and Wales. Glasgow and Hamilton were the only places that he had visited in Scotland, but he expected to take a run through to Edinburgh before he started for home on Tuesday.

"Are you satisfied with the condition of the congregations which you have visited, Mr. Smith?"

"Yes, I find our work in pretty good condition everywhere I have been, with a possible exception or two. While the congregations are mostly small, they are quite active and doing well. I am quite satisfied, on the whole, with the state of the Church in this country. Our Church now contains upwards of four hundred congregations, numbering altogether about fifty thousand members in actual communion. Besides this country and America, we have congregations in Norway, Sweden, Denmark, the Sandwich Islands, and the Society Islands."

"I understand, Mr. Smith, that the Church was originally founded by your father."

"The Church was organized by my father and others on the 6th of April, 1830, in the state of New York. In 1844 my father was killed at Carthage, Hancock County, Illinois, whereupon

THE HERALD OFFICE has inadvertently run short of the October number of Autumn Leaves. Any who have this number of the Leaves which they do not specially care to keep will confer a favor on the Office by sending them to us. Several copies are needed at once, and a prompt compliance will be appreciated.

THE Lamoni Religio and the College are offering to the citizens of Lamoni and vicinity a splendid lecture course this fall and winter. The first number will be given on October 16, and will be an entertainment given by Fred High. Only one dollar is charged for the course of six, and at that price should be well attended throughout.

the Church became divided, and a considerable number of the members went to Utah, and there, under President Brigham Young, formed what is now known as the Mormon Church. A great many others, however, including my mother's family, refused to accept the ruling of President Young, and refused also to accept the doctrine which he taught of plural marriage, or polygamy; and those who remained as members of the Church, believing that they had right on their side, met together and reorganized the Church, calling it the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." I became connected with the movement in 1860, was chosen to preside over it, and have acted as President ever since. We are not affiliated or connected in any way with the Utah Mormons. It may interest your readers to know, however, that the Mormon president, Joseph Fielding Smith, is a cousin of mine. As distinguishing us from other believers in the Scriptures, we believe in what is called "present revelation," viz., that wherever the gospel is taught there is the Spirit of revelation with the believers. This, of course, involves the proposition that there are prophets, seers, and those who receive manifestations or Spirit power, while on the other hand, the ordinary believer accepts the idea that these things do not now exist, but ceased with the apostles.

"How do you like this country, Mr. Smith?"

"Well, I have not yet formed what you might call specific conclusions. I like the country very much—I don't see how any one could help that. It has the advantage of age. Your roads are splendid, and I have been very much struck with the solidity of your buildings, which is bound to strike a visitor from a new world like America, where everything is just temporary, and where buildings are mostly composed of wood. With the manners of the people in this country," continued Mr. Smith, "I have been very well pleased. True, I saw a little roughness in Glasgow and here, but not so much as I had been led to expect. I have not heard any swearing or loud talking, and, personally, I have been treated politely on the street and everywhere else."

"Please tell me something about yourself, now, Mr. Smith," ventured the Herald man.

"There is very little in my career that would interest you," replied the venerable President, with a quiet smile, "for my life has been an extremely uneventful one. I was seventy-one years of age in November last, and have been President of the Latter Day Saints for forty-three years. I have witnessed all the important events in the advancement of art and industry since the opening of the Nineteenth Century. I remember when, in 1832, steam was applied as a motive power in railways and steamboats, and many other momentous inventions have been brought out in my day. I have baptized in both the great oceans—the Atlantic and Pacific—as well as in all the principal rivers of America. I never resided in Utah, but I have preached up and down the Mormon territory at different periods since 1876. Our Church has its headquarters at Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa, where, in a town containing a population of sixteen hundred, we have a congregation of thirteen hundred and sixty. I must repeat how pleased I am with the spirit of fairness which I have met with both in Scotland and in England."

Mr. Smith left Hamilton on Tuesday, and sails for New York on the 19th of this month.

PENROSE ON POLYGAMY.

In the Semi-Weekly Deseret News for September 17 there appeared a report of a sermon preached by Charles Penrose at a conference held September 14. We make extract from it, as he speaks on the doctrine of polygamy. It will be of interest to our readers.

The speaker said many people were wont to associate "Mormonism" with polygamy, thinking they were synonymous. This was because they were unacquainted with the subject. The Latter Day Saints were not teaching polygamy. The fact was it was being taught most by those opposed to the "Mormons," for they were publishing Bibles and sending them to the four quarters of earth. "If you want to know anything about polygamy," said the speaker, "read the Bible." The "Mormons" are neither preaching it nor entering into it. Those of them who married plural wives are taking care of them and their families, which it is their duty to do, and if their enemies do not like it they will have to do the other thing. The speaker expressed the fear that some good people would not be willing to go through the pearly gates of the New Jerusalem, depicted in the Revelation of Saint John, because the names of the twelve sons of Jacob by his four wives were on those gates; and that when the Savior's prophecy was fulfilled, namely, "many shall come from the east and the west, the north and south, and shall sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God; while the children of the kingdom shall be thrust out," some of our kind friends would hesitate to enter, for fear that the wives of the Patriarch would be with him. This, the speaker explained, he mentioned by way of pleasantry, and stated further, that when the man who held the keys of authority in the Church, declared that plural marriages should cease, they were prohibited and stopped.

"Mormonism," then, he explains, was the pure gospel of Christ as taught by the Savior in Palestine, and on this continent after his resurrection. The writings of the prophets on this land were abridged by "Mormon?" whose book of hieroglyphs on metallic plates was translated into English by Joseph Smith. It does not teach polygamy as its doctrines were given to a people who were forbidden to practice it. The speaker bore testimony to the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith, the truth of that which is called "Mormonism" and the faith, devotion, and union of the people who peopled these mountain valleys having come here to serve God and build up Zion.

THE following taken from the Kansas City Journal for October 5, shows that the spirit of religious intolerance is not entirely dead in Missouri yet:

AURORA, Missouri, October 4.—Popular indignation has been aroused here over the fact that a band of Mormons from Utah arrived here last Wednesday and have been holding nightly street meetings and making house to house canvass during the day, distributing tracts and looking for converts to embrace the Mormon religion. Saturday night is pay night for the miners and the streets are always crowded. Last night when the Mormons were holding their meetings stormy threats were made of treating the elders to a dose of tar and feathers and a ride out of town on a rail.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Henry Watterson, the famous editor of Louisville, Kentucky, is persistent in his attacks upon the "400." He thinks he has cause, and we fear he has.

On Monday, the 12th instant, news reached us that Bro. Charles J. Kaighan, of San Francisco, California, passed away on October 8, at twenty minutes past two in the afternoon. We knew that Bro. Kaighan had been afflicted for some time, but had not supposed that his affliction was so serious, and the sad news was a surprise to us. Our sympathies are with the bereaved family, and we trust God's grace may be with them. Bro. Kaighan was counselor to Bishop C. A. Parkin, and will be greatly missed in church work in that part of the country.

Press reports say that more than thirty people were killed and scores were injured in a storm which swept through Minnesota and Wisconsin on the afternoon of October 3. The points at which the greatest damage and loss of life were reported are, St. Charles, St. Cloud, and Winona, in Minnesota, Almond, Sheridan, Blaine, and Independence, Wisconsin. Many lives were also lost on Lake Michigan in Saturday's gale, and towns in Ohio, Illinois, and Iowa, suffered great damage, with no lives lost.

In discussing the matter of human longevity, the Philadelphia Record says that where records have been kept it is shown there is now a larger proportion of people of eighty or more years than thirty years ago, and observes that "if men would live up to their light or would take as good care of themselves as they can, they would live to be one hundred and ten years old—an age which is so rare that some scientists doubt whether it has ever been reached by man or woman."

According to the Nauvoo Independent for September 26, certain elders of the Utah Church who have been working in Hancock County, Illinois, "said that the report that the Mormon Church was talking of purchasing the old Carthage jail which was the scene of the killing of Joseph Smith, the founder of the Church of Latter Day Saints, was true, but thus far no deal had been closed, as the owners of the property wanted too much money for the building."

In a letter from D. A. Anderson dated at Myrtle Point, Oregon, September 28, he reports the baptism of seven at Dora and four at Lee.

The contest of the will of Mrs. Lavinia C. Hicks, deceased, at Elkhorn, Wisconsin, has been decided in favor of the Reorganized Church. The decedent in her will provided as follows: "Ninth, I give and bequeath to the Bishop of the Latter Day Saints' Church three hundred dollars for the use of the Church." It was claimed by the contestants that the gift was indefinite and uncertain, and therefore void. The judge held that while there were several bodies of people calling themselves Latter Day Saints with bishops, the evidence admissible in explaining the latent ambiguity showed that Lavinia C. Hicks had no interest in or connection with any body of Latter Day Saints other than the Reorganized Church, and that there was in fact but one chief financial bishop of this organization, who held the property of the same by virtue of its articles of incorporation. The gift therefore was held valid and that E. L. Kelley was the Bishop proper to receive.

The Pittsburg Dispatch for October 4 contained a paragraph descriptive of Bro. Williams' tract "Latter Day Saints. Who are they?" In connection therewith the address of our Pittsburg church building is given.

Bro. Charles Harp, of the missionary force, wrote from Dodd, Indiana, October 5, that he was there holding a series of meetings, but that prejudice was running high. He had challenged an "exposer" of "Mormonism," but the latter did not seem disposed to enter into an examination of the subject.

I. N. Roberts writes that in his field there are plenty of places open for us to occupy, but he has not the help to work them. This shortage of laborers is common to many fields.

Corsets for men is a new fad in fashions which is being spoken of by various daily papers. Some of the devotees of the new fashion are loud in its praise.

What the editors of the Boston Globe think of "Mormonism" is indicated by the following editorial paragraph which appeared in the Globe on October 8: "The feature of yesterday's session of the seventh semiannual conference of the Mormon Church, at Salt Lake, was the stirring exhortation of Apostle John W. Taylor, in which he denounced Christian Science, hypnotism, evolution, spiritualism and other 'isms' as the work of the Devil. Could it be forgetfulness on his part that excluded Mormonism? Isn't it one of the isms?"

E. C. Warnky writes that he has been holding a successful protracted meeting at Raymore, Missouri. Bro. A. H. Parsons has now joined him in the effort and they will continue the good work of proclaiming the gospel message in that part of Missouri.

D. R. Baldwin, writing from Vane Island, Arkansas, October 7, states: "I am having an interesting meeting, a goodly degree of the Spirit, and plenty of opposition." Well, this is all in harmony with the experiences of the apostolic gospel preacher.

On Tuesday, October 6, we received a telegram from "Uncle Mark" Forscutt announcing the death of his wife, and asking to have some one come and preach the sermon. Failing to get some one nearer, on Wednesday, the seventh, we telegraphed "Uncle Mark" we would be there for the funeral on the eighth at two o'clock in the afternoon. We left Lamoni in the evening of the seventh, and reached Nebraska City about half past eight Thursday. At Shenandoah we were joined by Bro. F. Redfield and wife, Bro. Wilcox and wife, and Sr. Belle Swain, who were on their way to the funeral. We found all of Sr. Forscutt's family at the home, together with her sister, Mrs. M. A. Johnson, of Kansas City. It was a sorrowful household, yet there was consolation in the fact that every one bore willing testimony to the departed sister's integrity of character and nobleness of soul. At the services we were called upon to preach the sermon, and offered such words of consolation as we could. Sr. Forscutt was widely known and loved in the Church, and we felt well in speaking of our hopes in the resurrection and eternal life.

At last General Conference we heard much about the bad sidewalks of Lamoni. Whether or not that talk has caused the movement, yet it is true that prospects are good for a considerable improvement in the condition of our walks in the near future. Quite a number of our citizens are preparing to put in cement walks between now and winter.

Captain H. Hankins, a representative of the Salvation Army, with headquarters at Omaha, Nebraska, was a caller at the HERALD Office on Tuesday, the 13th. We engaged in a pleasant chat with him. He was traveling in the financial interests of the "Army."

The tract on "Plural Marriage in America," by President Joseph Smith, is being translated into several foreign languages, and will be circulated widely.

Marriages in which some members of the HERALD force were specially interested have not been uncommon in the past few months; but on last Wednesday, the seventh, two of our employees married each other, and the business manager, F. B. Blair, tied the knot. Our pressman, Bro. William Conover, took to himself as bride one of our efficient folders, Sr. Nellie Powell. They have the best wishes of the HERALD. May their married life be long and peaceful.

Dowie has planned an attack on New York. He will lead an army of over three thousand, and they will go to the attack in ten special trains. His army is his "Restoration Host," and they will make a "moral invasion" of the metropolis. New York contains much wickedness, to be sure; but we hardly expect Mr. Dowie and his zealous followers to accomplish much of a reformation. He will cause scarcely more than a ripple in New York affairs, and will probably come back to his western home much disappointed and loaded with invectives to hurl back at the city he failed to conquer. His seat of operations will be Madison Square Garden, which he will occupy from the time he lands there until November 1.

President Joseph Smith reached Lamoni on Thursday morning, October 8, returning from his long trip to England. He was feeling well, the trip as a whole proving beneficial to him in a physical way. After landing in New York he spent some time in Brooklyn, Boston, Providence, Fall River, and other eastern points, then came west. He was the speaker at the Brick Church Sunday morning last, when he spoke briefly of his visit to King Edward's domain. He seemed well pleased on the whole with what he saw in the land of the Britons. Doubtless the HERALD readers will later get the benefit of his observations and reflections.

Lamoni Stake conference met on Saturday and Sunday last with the Lone Rock Branch. The Stake Presidency was in charge, and the usual routine business was gone through with. The reunion question was taken up, and it was decided that the Stake would hold a reunion in 1904. A committee was appointed to make all arrangements, the committee being composed of Fred B. Blair, Duncan Campbell, and Price McPeck. The reunion idea is something new for Lamoni Stake; but there are scores of other reunions being held every year, why not Lamoni Stake have one? On Sunday a basket-meeting was held, and the services were characterized as good by those in attendance. Bro. Charles W. Dillon, of the Evergreen Branch, was ordained an elder.

The article by J. W. Rushton, in this issue and next, on the "Apostasy and Restoration," will be issued as a tract, and will be on sale at the HERALD Office. It is a well written article and is calculated to do much good. Send in your orders and see that your outside friends get a chance to read it.

Next week we will have a series of articles on the work of the "Anti-Mormon League," which will be of interest to all our readers. Watch for them.

Bro. Walter W. Smith, who has of late been holding tent-meetings in Caldwell County, Missouri, near "Old Far West," closed his meetings there on the ninth. He wrote that on October 4 he baptized four in Shoal Creek, about one half mile north of the old "Temple Lot." "It was with no ordinary feelings," says he, "that I stood on the 'old waste places,' baptizing on almost the same spot as the Saints of other days." When we were at Old Far West just after the last Stewartsville Reunion, we felt that a good work could be done in that region, and we are indeed glad that Bro. Walter has got the work nicely started. Let the Saints near Kerr live the lives taught in their religion, and be zealously active in the good cause, and we may yet see that "waste place" built up by the Saints. It is worth a trial, anyway. Bro. Walter's letter will appear next week.

It is expected to have Tract Number 209, "The Church of Jesus Christ," translated into the German. This is an excellent little tract, and should do much good in German. Our German brethren will no doubt be glad to learn that it will be published in German.

Suffern, New York, was wiped out of existence on October 12 by a flood resulting from the breaking of a dam above the town. Fortunately no lives were lost, owing to warnings which had been sent out by the town authorities. The inhabitants had fled to the hills when the flood came.

Reverend John Watson, known as Ian Maclaren, has publicly expressed the belief that the world is on the eve of one of the "greatest religious revivals since the days when all Rome succumbed to the teachings of Christ in the first century."

W. T. Clark writes from Des Moines, Iowa, that the work is progressing there. "Some are near the kingdom," he says. They are expecting Bro. Mintun soon.

BRO. C. M. MILLS is an entertaining writer on astronomical subjects—see his article, "The Moon," in October Autumn Leaves.

"THE APOSTASY AND THE RESTORATION."

BY J. W. RUSHTON.

One of the most prolific sources of misunderstanding in regard to religion is the refusal to acknowledge that there has been a universal departure from the original gospel as taught by Christ. Most people are aware that such an event as the Reformation was the reactionary result of the great abuses which had obtained in the Roman Catholic Church; yet it seldom occurs to the minds of these people that to concede the need of a reformation is a tacit admission that an apostasy from the true gospel had taken place; otherwise the so-called reformation was not only unnecessary, but actually an evil. In face of this important piece of history it is really unaccountable that there should be so much indifference to this very important event and the consequences which necessarily result therefrom.

If we are believing and practicing a religion or a creed other than the one authorized and accepted by God, or associated with a Church other than the "body or Church of Jesus Christ," our religious service must be valueless so far as effecting our salvation is concerned. To argue that we can believe what we please and join any Church we choose and obtain salvation, not only discounts the "word of God," but introduces successful competition in regard to the salvation of mankind, which work the Bible most emphatically teaches is exclusively the mission and work of Jesus Christ our Lord. The following scriptures are selected from a number in support of this: Matthew 15:8, 9; Colossians 2:22; 2 John 9-11; James 1:25; 2 Thessalonians 1:7-9. From these we learn that service rendered unto God in a way or manner different from the "way," "plan," or "method" revealed in the word of God will not only result in disappointment in this life, but will yield disaster and loss in the life which is to come. Men and women are not only forbidden to worship God in a manner different from the way shown to us by Christ, but all blessings here and hereafter can only be realized when we believe in and conform to the gospel of Christ. (Read very carefully Acts 4:12; 2 John 9; John 4:23, 24; Matthew 7:21-28; John 3:16; John 5:24; John 12:47-50; Hebrews 5:9.)

In the epistle of Paul to the Galatians, 1:6-9, is depicted in unequivocal terms the fate of any one so daring as to attempt to compete with Christ in the presentation of a gospel by and through which it is argued salvation can be obtained. This scripture forbids the thought that any religion will do, or that it is a matter of no importance which Church we belong to. To persist in such a thought is not only hazardous and foolish, but wicked in that it dishonors God and Christ, besides jeopardizing the salvation of those who are influenced by such teachings. Further: if, by being members of any Church, whether it be Catholic, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Methodist, etc., we shall be all right, let us put the question, Why did God in the days of Christ disapprove and reject all other Churches and forms of religion and command Christ to build his Church? If any Church or creed will do, then obviously such a work was altogether unnecessary. (See Matthew 16:18, 19; Matthew 6:33; John 3:3-5; Colossians 1:13.) The fact that God is unchangeable and no respecter of persons, coupled with the forgoing fact that such Church or kingdom was established as the means of salvation (see Numbers 23:19; 1 Samuel 15:29; Malachi 3:6; Matthew 5:18; Hebrews 13:8; James 1:17), gives to us the following conclusion: Inasmuch as it was necessary in the days of Christ to become members of his "body" or "Church" or "kingdom," in order to be in a saved condition, and in order to become members thereof it was imperative that man should conform to his gospel; then, God not being subject to change nor having respect for persons, exactly the same means and process must be in evidence and operation now. Therefore we reject the popular and delusive teaching because of it being untenable and contradictory to the word of God.

Some, indeed many, urge that the church of Christ is composed of individuals scattered in the various Churches. Obviously this is a fallacy; for the body or Church can only be composed of those individuals who do his will and keep his commandments. The following scriptures expose this fallacy: Matthew 12:49, 50; John 10:27, 28; John 3:3-5. The attempt to claim this relationship with Christ short of or different from this divine plan will prove abortive and calamitous. (See John 10:1.) Jesus, the Shepherd, entered into the fold or Church by that means (see verse 2 and Matthew 3:13-17); and his sheep enter in by the same way. (See verse 4.) Those only who follow Christ are counted as sheep; those who do not are rebels. (See also John 1:12.)

These divine premises warrant the conclusion that it is necessary for us to become members of the one true body of (Church of) Christ; otherwise we are in jeopardy and salvation unrealized.

It is so obvious to every thinking person, that it is not necessary to enter into details to prove there is something seriously wrong in the religious realm of our day. Such a vast number of diverse organizations or Churches (numbering, it is commonly computed, over five hundred), each claiming to be "the Church," yet every one different from its fellows. That Christ can only be "the head" of the one body ("which is his Church," Colossians 1:18) is self-evident, so that there can be one only whose claim is right and legal and four hundred and ninety-nine of these religious bodies (Churches) must be without a head. The great question to be solved is, How can we know which (if any) of these different Churches is really the true one? The only way is to examine them in point of organic structure, doctrine, and results. This is the only effective way. (See Isaiah 8:20; John 3:34; 2 John 10, 11; Mark 16:16-19; Matthew 16:17, 18.) All Churches must be tested by this divine standard, and any or all that fall short must be rejected.

We now come to the consideration of our claim that there has been a universal apostasy, and ask of you a candid, unbiased investigation of the evidences adduced. As a preface we give the authentic definitions of the terms we are using; viz., Apostasy, Reformation, and Restoration:

Apostasy.—Abandonment of one's religion, principles, or party; a revolt from ecclesiastical obedience, from a religious profession, or from holy orders. (Greek: A standing away: Apo, from. Stasis, a standing.)

Reformation.—The act of forming again; the act of reforming; amendment; improvement.

Reform, v. t.—To form again or anew, to transform; to make better; to remove that which is objectionable from; to repair or improve; to reclaim.

Reform, v. i.—To become better; to abandon evil; to be corrected or improved.

Reform, n.—A forming anew, change, amendment, improvement.

Restoration.—Act of restoring; replacement; recovery; revival; reparation; renewal; restoration of a building to its original design.

Restore.—To repair; to replace; to return; to bring back to its former state; to revive; to cure; to compensate; to mend.

The foregoing definitions are all taken from Chambers' English Dictionary, 1898.

To claim a restoration of the original gospel of Jesus Christ and the Church established by him (as the Latter Day Saints do), implies that there has been a departure from this gospel and a forsaking of the Church. The Reformation can not be entertained as being adequate to meet the demands arising from a universal departure from the truth. At the very most all that is ever claimed for the Reformation is that it attempted to reform the abuses and evils that had arisen in the Roman Catholic Church. (See D' Aubigné's History of the Reformation, pages 237, 238.) There was no one in a position to bring back again the wanderers—the apostates; for all were saturated with the evils of superstition, unsound doctrine, and sacerdotalism. (See the "Homily on Idolatry" of the Church of England, which reads: "Laity and clergy, learned and unlearned, men, women and children, of all ages, sexes, and degrees, of whole Christendom, have been at once buried in the most abominable idolatry (a most dreadful thing to think), and that for the space of eight hundred years or more.")

It is a matter of historical fact that the reformers were seceders from the Roman Catholic Church, and in most instances were ordained clergymen or priests. Luther, Melancthon, Calvin, Knox, Cranmer, etc., were prominent in the vanguard of Protestantism, and these all were apostates from the papacy. Not only so, but every one of the Churches established under the influence of the Reformation borrowed from the Roman Catholic theology many of its distinctive doctrines, and more or less tenaciously hold them to-day. If it is urged that the Catholic Church was the one true Church, then it did not need any human reformation; for if it emanated from a perfect designer it could not be improved either by addition or by subtraction. At this juncture we cheerfully pay tribute to the memories of the noble host of "reformation" martyrs and protesters against the crying evils of that age, and believe without question that they were more or less inspired by the Spirit of God to resent the arrogant efforts to enslave the minds and consciences of men and throw off the yoke of sacerdotalism and so prepare the way to a large extent for the subsequent introduction of God's purpose. A careful study of history shows the strict relationship and sequence of events one with the other, and the Reformation beyond question swept away immense barriers, which, had they remained, would have frustrated the designs of God.

So to-day the religious world is divided into three distinct sections; namely, Roman Catholics, Protestant or Reformers, and the ones who hold and claim a divine restoration. It is true the latter section is comparatively very small, but that by no means can be an evidence of error, but rather the reverse; for truth always has been unpopular, even though its humble following was graced by the actual presence of the Son of God. The question to be decided, then, is, Which of these three sections is right?

We shall now collate evidences from the Scriptures to show that an apostasy was not only prophesied of and anticipated by the inspired servants of God, but that this condition of affairs had already obtained in the early days of Christianity, and would spread wider and wider until its direful shadow would cast its gloom over the entire world. The events inscribed in history abundantly prove that these men were not carried away by fanatical alarms, nor did they speak presumptuously.

We now invite a studious perusal of the following passages:

"And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."—Matthew 11:12. (Read also Matthew 13:24-26.)

"Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you; and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake. And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold."—Matthew 24: 9-12.

"Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood. For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them."—Acts 20: 28-30.

"Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day [of Christ's second advent] shall not come, except there come a falling-away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth [hinders] will let, until he be taken out of the way."—2 Thessalonians 2: 3-7. (Read entire chapter.)

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth."—1 Timothy 4: 1-3.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away."—2 Timothy 3: 1-5.

"But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you: whose judgment now for a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not."—2 Peter 2: 1-3.

(Read now Jude's Epistle, and Revelation, chapters two and three.)

in that they not only narrate then current history, but with an accuracy that could only result from the divine afflatus being possessed by these men, the future is unveiled, even down to the present time, and a minute catalogue of the characteristic evils of the age is tabulated as evidencing the apostate condition of these latter days. They more than established the claims we have advanced; viz., That universal apostasy was not only predicted, but had even then made rapid encroachment in very many of the various branches of the Church.

It is not our business to discuss the multifarious causes which brought about such a direful condition; it is only within our province to show the fact that such a condition did obtain.

We now invite your attention to a careful reading of Revelation, chapter twelve. Here under the symbol of a woman the Church of Christ is portrayed in all her primitive glory and purity. Radiant with the glory and power of God, encircled with a crown of apostles, symbolized by the stars; and as the stars received their light and brilliancy from the center of the solar system, so the apostles were then receiving light, intelligence, and power by being in communion with God, the great center of the universe. Having under her feet the Mosaic law, typifying the ascendancy of the Church above the light of the Mosaic law, and basking in the effulgence of God's direct presence, above the medium of the "law of carnal commands and outward ordinances."

But, as we look upon this prophetic panorama, we see the Church is assailed by a power represented by the "great red dragon," symbolical of paganism, and is prevailed against. "Her child," representing "the authority or priesthood," is caught up to heaven, while the Church is driven into the wildness. When next we meet this woman it is under a vastly different aspect. (Read now very carefully Revelation, chapter seventeen.) Instead of being clad in the habiliments of God's power and glory, the tawdry, tinsel vestments of human and worldly glamour now attract the attention. Instead of being the consort and bride-elect of God, she is now the voluptuous mistress of earthly potentates, courting first their smiles, protection, and flattery, and afterwards without any mercy or compunction treads under foot these very powers which have given to her this unholy exaltation; for, "she reigneth over the kings of the earth." Instead of the virgin comeliness of innocence and virtue, the marks of vice, dissipation, and selfishness are chiselled in her form; instead of being upheld by the strength and power of God, she is riding on a beast, typical of the power of the world. The once persecuted now becomes the relentless persecutor, and in turn actually becomes the scourge of the world. "And now the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth."—Verse 18.

When we take hold of ecclesiastical history these salient features are fully corroborated, and with no more vividness than that which attends these features revealed by divine prescience.

We can not within the compass of a small tract narrate all the events of history dealing with these events, but we just present the following synopsis:

As is seen from the Scriptures, in the first century the Church was manifesting signs of departure from the Christian truth and form. These became more and more pronounced as time went along; but it was not until Constantine's conversion (A. D. 312) when Christianity, hitherto confined very largely to the poorer classes, became popular, and as a consequence the asceticism which had been so characteristic of the Church was entirely abolished, and pride, selfishness, unholy ambition, and licentiousness drove away every vestige of the primitive power and graces and paved the way for the inglorious quarrels which very shortly afterwards arose among the prelates and officials at Byzantium (or Constantinople), Rome, Carthage, and Alexandria. With the evil of a man-made ministry there came the consequent aspirations of the one to lord it over his brethren, and then came the divisions, the most important of which was the great schism of the Church when it was divided into the eastern and western sections; the one under the bishop of Constantinople, and the other owning the bishop of Rome as supreme bishop. It is apparent that these two factions could only be inimical to each other's interests, hence it is not difficult to account for the disgraceful scenes of contention and bitterness that frequently occurred. Things seemed to reach a climax in A. D. 538, when Emperor Justinian united church and state and thus affected the transformation so graphically foreshadowed in Revelation, chapters twelve and seventeen.

In A. D. 605 Boniface solicited from Emperor Phocas the title of universal bishop with the privilege of handing it down to his successors. This profligate potentate who had a grudge against the bishop of Constantinople granted the request, conferring it in 606. History reveals that from this time the tragic and wonderful fulfillment of prophecy was rapid and complete.

The Pope of Rome acquired more and more power, became more arrogant, proud, and selfish, forced by every means his degenerate dogmas upon all nations, until in the sixteenth century the inherent power of God-given intelligence rebelled against such an abject mental and spiritual slavery, flung off the fetters, and soared aloft; until from the pinnacles of newly discovered truths these pioneers of the Reformation sighted the "promised land of knowledge, truth, and power which we are enjoying today.

MARY GARVIE has an excellent article in the October Autumn Leaves, dealing with the pathetic story of the Acadians.

THE ONE THING LACKING.

OPPOSING ELEMENTS—HOW REMOVED.

"And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God."—Romans 8: 28.

Some ask, In what sense is this true? Others ask, What qualifications attach? And still others are trying to decide how far they may explain it away and yet not be guilty of disbelief. Jesus gives all the qualifications in the following: "If a man love me he will keep my words." And to the latter class he says: "O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken."

Therefore I am writing this text on my slate and on my board and on my tablet and inscribing it on my soul. I am underscoring the word all and believing it in its broadest sense. I am believing it with all that the word all does or can be made to imply. Nor am I transcending the limit. It is an edict of God's perfect law. It is an eternal truth and has no limits.

No exigency can arise, no extreme circumstances can be imagined wherein harm can come to the soul that vibrates with God's love.

It is a rule to which there can be no exception, for "If God be for us who can be against us?" Who can conceive of higher honors than to be the recipient of this great promise? That is to have "all things work together for [our] good" and nothing to our harm and to reach this honored station in this life, only one thing is lacking and that is love.

As I contrast the low estate of man with the height to which the gospel is to eventually elevate us, I grow impatient and chafe at the sluggish movements of the waters of life. So many think of nothing but evil; therefore they see nothing but evil, hear nothing but evil, talk of nothing but evil, and are influenced by nothing but evil. They are handcuffed by evil, associated with evil, chained and fettered and bound to evil. How can they help being evil? How can they be anything else but evil? Paul's answer is, "Charity thinketh no evil," therefore charity, "the pure love of Christ" thinks of nothing but good, sees nothing but good, hears and feels and talks of nothing but good, is associated with and influenced by nothing but good; it is only natural that she should be wholly good.

ENVIRONMENT—WHAT STUBBORN THINGS ARE OUR SURROUNDINGS!

Evil stalks abroad in all places, "flourishes like the green bay tree;" it wears the most gorgeous apparel, is adorned with glittering jewels, feasts on the fat of the land, perfumed with all sweet savors. Oh, how attractive! Who can but see and hear and smell and taste and think of evil? How can we avoid being shackled and chained to and influenced by evil?

So it is that the philosophers of the past have called charity blind. But is it true? Verily, no. God forbid. Charity sees at first glance that which the Roentgen rays a thousand times intensified can never see. She sees that evil "has stolen the livery of heaven." She sees and admires the display of everything beautiful, knowing that God is the author and maker of all existing things, but she silently passes and refuses to be moved by the huge lie that falsely assumes ownership. She sees things invisible to physical sight, even the redeeming features in sinful man.

The X-rays see into opaque substances; charity sees all this, plus that which is transparent. The X-rays see the bones, sinews, and tissues of the human body; charity sees not only these, but she sees the transparent, intellectual, eternal forces that propel those parts. The X-rays see the inanimate, physical part of man; charity sees the same plus the animate, the God part, or the spiritual. The natural man sees the warped, blighted, deceived actions of their fellows and judges them to be altogether sordid, mean and depraved; charity weeps with the suffering, for she sees the underlying, deep-seated emotions of their souls, but she knows that it is all a well-arranged school that will eventually enable the dear hearts to develop character. But all this does not do away with the blasting influence of environment.

HOW TO DEVELOP CHARITY.

The speculation of philosophers and the ingenuity of sages, combined with the sweet strains of poetry and music, have most signally failed, and in the absence of the gospel will ever fail to devise means for the development of this heaven-born boon, charity.

Charity is not only "a more excellent way;" it is the most excellent way, even God's way, God's perfect law, the cap sheaf of the gospel shock; the superb reasoning of all the pies and all the cakes and the savor of all the soups of the great "marriage feast." It is the rule by which the style and fit of every wedding garment must be measured.

Charity is the rule that regulates the twist of every thread and the shape and size of every separate mesh in the great gospel net; and not only so, but it is the test applied to every fiber of which it is constructed.

Charity is the ingredient that must enter largely into every man's work to prevent its being burned when it is tested by God's eternal fire. Every supposed virtue, every attainment, every great work will be "as sounding brass" or as a "tinkling cymbal" without charity; and the only power on earth or in heaven that can develop this sacred, sanctifying element in man is the gospel, pure and simple. One half or three fourths or nine tenths of the gospel can not accomplish this desired effect in a very large majority of mankind; it must be in full force.

"The whole body, fitly joined together and com-packed by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, making increase of the body [and all this is] unto the edifying of itself in love."

The Church, the called out, can never as a majority reach these high attainments in its scattered, mingled condition. The gathering, the calling out act, is as much a part of the gospel as is baptism, and the effects of a separation from Babylon will be more marked along many lines than the immediate effects of baptism. Environments are too strong for the average man. I do not know of one human soul that is not susceptible to influences, both good and bad; and that which can sway the strong can easily captivate the weak.

The Saints are few in number who will graduate in any degree, until they have had the benefits of a social training in the department of God's great commonwealth, whatever that may be. The actual practice education of our colleges along monetary lines must be supplanted with something not akin to selfishness; profits and premiums, beneficial emoluments, interests, rewards and gains—everything that stimulates a grasping, avaricious, greedy, eager, and covetous disposition, must be swallowed up by a peaceful, trusting, loving, consorted movement of the called out. It must be a movement wherein we cooperate not only with each other, but with God and his Son Jesus Christ.

It will be better for the called out to volunteer and receive their bounty, than to drag along and be drafted and forced out by the scathing, surging, grinding, wearing contacts between labor and capital.

THE INEVITABLE IS AT HAND.

I would rather stumble upon this latter-day movement and be broken than to have it fall upon me and grind me to powder, whatever that may signify.

It will not do to merely hold the great central truth of this proposition as a vague theory, but we must feel and know that it is "more blessed to give than to receive."

The world has been so schooled and trained in the awful system of gouge that it has become second nature. Profit and pelf is the watchword. "Every one for himself and the Devil for the bunch" is no exaggeration of the ruling proclivities of both church and state, one trying to survive by pulling another down. It is all wrong. We are nearing a point when as Saints we must cooperate, not compete with each other. Concurrence—not rivalry must be the motto. Our ambition must be to work for, not against one another; to benefit and bless, not to beat and supplant. If we could only get a glimpse of God's great storehouse, bursting with supplies for every legal demand; if we could only believe that "God is able of these stones to raise up children to Abraham;" that he has "more than twelve legions of angels" to fight our battles if it becomes necessary, that the invisible elements are richly laden with every conceivable earthly commodity, that our Father is the owner of the universe, that he is going to "cut his work short in righteousness," we might then fall in line, and see what the author of our text saw, namely, that neither "tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword"—"that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God." "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God." Lord, speed the day; thy kingdom come; thy love reign on earth as it does in heaven.

PAUL AND THE CHRISTIANITY OF CHRIST.

Modern biblical scholars have made a sharp distinction between the original Christianity as proclaimed by Christ and the form that Christianity assumed in the hands of the apostles, especially in the hands of the Apostle to the Gentiles. The question has actually been raised as to who is the real founder of Christianity. For instance, Professor Schell (who as a member of the Roman Catholic faculty of Wurzburg several years ago attracted attention by his criticism of Jesuitic theology and his remarks on the "scientific inferiority of Catholicism"), in his work entitled "Christus," asks: "Who is it that can lay claim to being the founder of the Christian church? Is it Christ or is it Paul? Who is it that established the ruling religion of the world, the Christianity of the church, with its doctrines and dogmas on Faith, of Vicarious Atonement, of Salvation by Grace, of the Sacraments, of the Holy Offices? Is it Paul or is it Jesus?"

This emphasis now put by biblical critics upon the influence of Paul in early Christianity is in marked contrast to what Professor Schell considers a lack of appreciation by the church at large. Professor Schell says on this point:

"And yet Paul, this most religious man in the most eminent sense of the word, this firebrand of a God-seeking soul has not even become an object of veneration in the church in the sense in which this is true of Mary, the mother of Jesus, or of Joseph or of St. Anthony or St. Aloysius. The Apostle Paul has always remained a stranger to the soul of the church at large."

In modern theology there is seen at times a disposition to place Paul's influence above that of Jesus in establishing what has become the historical Christian church. Doctor Weimel, of the University of Bonn, one of the most gifted of the younger theological teachers of Germany, is a leading defender of this view, and in an article entitled "Paulos," in the Christliche Welt (No. 16), he discusses the importance of this apostle substantially as follows:

Among the Christians of the first generation, Paul is by far the most prominent and truly-gifted man. When Jesus and the faith of his disciples had won the victory over Saul, their most active opponent, it was the most decisive victory which Christianity has ever gained. It was an event that was epoch-making in the history of the world. It is more than a rhetorical expression to say that the great missionary tour of the apostle from Antiochia to Rome was an inverted Alexander the Great march of victory. The great mission of Christianity, in the conquest of the new type of faith and civilization, is really the work of Paul—of that man who boldly and proudly claimed but one title, namely, that of Apostle of Jesus the Christ. It was preëminently his work that Christianity won the day.

But equally epoch-making was the influence of Paul on the history of this new religion inwardly. He created a natural transition of the theological views which had for their purpose the organization of the people through a system of legal paragraphs according to prophetic ideals. This organization finally became antagonistic to all that was prophetic in the people, as is evidenced by the relations of John the Baptist and Jesus of Nazareth to the Scribes and Pharisees. Paul is that one among the Pharisees upon whose mighty soul the pressure of the Law was so great that it burst the fetters and turned itself in destructive antagonism against the Law, and against everything legal in all religion. Paul is the great discoverer of the fact that God and Law are mutually contradictory and exclusive; and that the Law can lead to God only in this sense, that it becomes a torment and awakens a desire for something better in us. That which in Jesus was the self-evident life of the child of God in the love for the Father, Paul had to win for himself in a bitter hour of struggle. But it was then defended by him against all attacks and in this way was saved for mankind. Only once again did the religion of nature, in the form of Roman Catholicism, try to take it away from the church, until Luther, in unequal struggle and through the teachings of Paul, rediscovered it.

Paul, by virtue of his religion, was the first Protestant, and, by virtue of his theology, the first Catholic. Jesus occupied a much more lonesome position in his day, however much he became a part of the world around him. Paul has also worked more effectively for the Gentile work than did Jesus, who only through Paul became an active factor for the Gentiles in their desire for mysteries, sacraments, and philosophies. It remains true that Paul and Jesus, in the innermost kernel of their religion, agree; that both recognize in true religion not the service of a slave of God nor a service of the Law, but a freer service of the heart. Nevertheless, it is to be regretted that the complicated form in which Paul possessed the gospel, interspersed as it was with the elements of the piety and wisdom of the antique world, still possesses more influence over the Christian world than does the more simple form in which Christ proclaimed the gospel.—The Literary Digest, May 30.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

They are such little, simple things to do;
To sweep a room, to bake a loaf of bread,
Kiss a hurt finger, tie a baby's shoe,
To mend a crying school-boy's broken sled.

Such little, simple things; but they above
Who on our little world attendant wait,
And joyful wait, note only if through love
The deed be done to count the work as great.

—Mrs. M. P. A. Crozier, in Morning Star.

In our last we promised to consider other ways of serving the Church than by writing for our Church papers—ways in which almost every member can serve, if only the desire is strong in the heart. The first of these we will consider is the Christmas Offerings. In this respect many have done nobly in the past, but if all would lend a hand how much more could be done. From our letters we learn that there are yet whole Sunday-schools that have not adopted this means of helping to spread the gospel. And yet we have the first child to find whose mind can not be enthused with the thought of bringing a present to Jesus on his birth-day. Of course they need older heads to plan, manage, and then encourage, but is it not worth all the time it requires to do this? Try it once and let the results answer.

Another way which we wish you to consider carefully is the great help which you can render the publishing department of our Church by aiding them in sending out books for your children. Do not say the world is full of books already. We know it is, because the world is fully alive to its own interests. Jesus said, "The children of this world are wiser in their day and generation than the children of light." But ought this to be so? Did Jesus say it was the way it should be? The world we know is full of books, but all, unfortunately, are not good books, and very, very few of them teach the gospel as we believe it or have the same faith, the same views of life which we as a people ought to have.

O, if we could just hold your attention long enough to have this matter reach your heart! You who have the ability to respond, and respond generously, to this appeal; the work would be in a large measure accomplished. Just a tribute to the Lord when your little babe is safe in your arms—just "a pair of turtle doves or two small pigeons" such as Mary offered in the temple at Jerusalem for her Son. There are in our Church some as noble examples of self-sacrifice as the world holds to-day—some who are always ready to cast in their last mite, but it is not this class we are striving to reach, but those who can do this without the least sacrifice and who would do it willingly if only they thought of it and yet others who could do it just by the sacrifice of some small amount of extra ornamentation put upon baby's wardrobe. If every mother when she presents her babe to the Lord for a blessing, would send a birth-offering to the Hope for the purpose of helping to publish books for the children, how long do you think it would be before the Board of Publication would be issuing handsomely bound volumes for the children of the Church, the contents of which would (if carefully read and heeded) help to make them wiser and better and to establish them in the faith of the restored gospel?

It really seems so little to ask when one takes time to consider the far-reaching results which would surely follow. Mothers, our appeal is direct to you. It may be you did not think of this when baby came. It is not too late. Send it in now with date of birth, also when and by whom blessed and thus help us to get the work started. We are now commencing in the Hope a series of stories of animals and various creatures inhabiting the earth, the great deep, or flying in space above. The series is being written by Sister Pamela Pearl Jones, one of the Lamoni High School teachers. These the writer has contributed freely without money or price, though they have cost her much time and labor in preparing, and are such stories as bring much money to writers of the world who sell the productions of their brains. One bright-eyed, intelligent little boy upon hearing some of these read and being told that they were going to be published in the Hope said, "I just wish you would put four or five in every Hope! Just fill the Hope full of them!" While another little fellow asked to criticise them drew a long breath and said very earnestly, "She didn't tell all of it. It ought to be three times longer."

Now these stories we are not willing should just be run through the Hope and then lost to the children who are not old enough to read them now. They are intended to draw the child nearer to God by making him acquainted with some of God's wonderful works and to teach him to see in all nature the beauties of the Creator's handiwork. They are to be illustrated and when bound will make a volume of child literature of which the Church may well be proud. But we need help to do this, and to whom should we look for this if not to the mothers for whose children we are laboring?

It is just a small amount, but like the drops of the ocean may become a mighty power.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas.

Dear Little Hopes: Our little paper is a great object of interest to the children as well as to the older ones here.

I have four little tots of my own and they never tire listening to the nice little stories and letters from the first page to the last, while it is equally as interesting to me as I read it to them.

I love to read the letters from each one and to know what they are doing in different places.

And I thought perhaps some of the little Hopes would like to know what we are doing down here in this part of Texas.

We have a small chapel of our own to worship in and each Sabbath finds happy little groups of Saints both old and young, wending their way there to Sunday-school and preaching service.

We have only a small Sabbath-school but it is a pleasure to me to tell you that though there are only a few of us we are all willing workers, and are doing all we can for the success of the work we love. Bro. Charley Harp organized our Sunday-school last winter after our church was finished, and now Bro. Macrae and Bro. Smith are laboring with us. They are giving us many helpful ideas on conducting our Sunday-school which I am confident will prove beneficial.

They are making plain to our minds the duties of other Church work also. We appreciate their efforts very much and I am led to believe their work will not be in vain. Our little chapel is situated on the top of a rolling hill, just in the outskirts of the city.

In front we have the view of one of the main streets leading north through the city. And in the back is a view of a long row of large pecan-trees bordering on the bank of the beautiful San Antonio River. In all, I think it is a very picturesque scene and in time when we get a fence around our little church and plant trees and grass in the yard, we will have a lovely place to worship.

With a prayer in my heart for all the little Hopes, I am,
Your sister and friend,

ETTA ALLBRIGHT.

It is not by any mistake upon the part of the editor that the above letter finds its way into the Home Column instead of the Hope. We have an object in view and we trust this means of calling attention to what we wish to accomplish may be, to a certain extent at least, helpful in forwarding that object.

Notice if you please, how this writer speaks of our little Sunday-school paper, the Hope, especially of what she tells us of the untiring interest of the little ones in it, from its first page to its last. But we want you to notice especially her statement of the fact that the older ones are just as much interested in reading it themselves—and also in reading it aloud to their children. We have no need to search further for the reason why these children are interested in their little paper and surely it is a fact which ought to appeal to every parent who has a desire to bring up the children God has given them in a way that they may be firm in the faith of the restored gospel and ready when older to give an intelligent reason for the faith in which they have been reared.

Now the HOPE is very far from being all which its editors wish it to be—all which it is their aim and ambition to make it, but far short as it has fallen we yet feel that we have done the best we could under the circumstances. We have neither time nor space, even if we had the inclination, which we have not, to enter into the minutia of those circumstances and hence will mention only a few of the chief ones—want of means to illustrate and in other ways improve the general make up of the paper and the almost universal indifference upon the part of those in the Church who, possessing the talent to contribute to its columns, have entirely failed to do so. It is a rare gift—a talent which deserves to be carefully cultivated and diligently improved upon, namely, the ability to write in a way to interest the young. All do not possess it, hence the Lord will not hold all responsible, but he surely will hold to a strict responsibility those who having this talent fail to use it for the good of his people—of the world.

But there is a way in which each one may serve and if each member of the Church was only faithful in this service, many years would not pass before Zion would renew her strength and shed her light upon the nations of the earth. In our next we will consider this in connection with some other ways of serving.

The October number of the North American Review is notable for the great variety of its contents. In an article entitled "Congress and the Currency," William A. Nash, president of the Corn Exchange Bank, New York, deprecates any alteration of existing currency laws, except such as would prevent the hoarding of public funds in the Treasury. James H. Eckels, formerly comptroller of the United States currency, pleads for a more businesslike relation between "The Government and the Banks." Stephen Bonsal, in a contribution entitled "The Gordian Knot in Macedonia," gives an interesting description of the conditions existing in that province of the Trukish Empire. H. M. Somerville, formerly associate justice of the Alabama Supreme Court, enumerates "Some Coöperating Causes of Negro Lynching." Edith Wharton writes entertainingly on "The Vice of Reading." United States Senator J. R. Burton shows the close relation between the measures which should be taken for effecting, scientifically, "Flood Prevention and Irrigation." E. T. Chamberlain, United States commissioner of navigation, analyzes "The New Cunard Agreement," with a view to ascertaining the influence it will have upon American shipping. Fannie H. Gaffney, honorary president of the National Council of Women, replying to Mrs. Kate T. Woolsey, sets forth "Woman's Actual Position in a Republic." Charles Johnston gives a glowing account "Ireland's Bright Prospect Under Recent Legislation." Dr. A. G. Mayer, curator of natural sciences in the museum of the Brooklyn Institute, explains how the "Educational Efficiency of our Museums" can be developed. Archibald S. Hurd tells the story of "Japan's Growing Naval Power." Frank B. Tracy contends that present relations between "The Dominion and the Republic" are unnatural, and predicts amalgamation of Canada and the United States. Charles F. Thwing, president of the Western Reserve University, maintains that the best business man is the man whose faculties have been trained in college. James Gustavus Whitely defines "The International Position of the Pope." Wilbur Larremore criticises the conditions pertaining to "American Courts Martial," and suggests certain remedies for their defects; and the number closes with the tenth part of Mr. Henry James's novel, "The Ambassadors."

WOODBINE, Iowa, October 4.

Editors Herald: It is with a sad heart that I write. Our little Ancil died on September 5. We miss him from our home, and as I left my home on the 15th for my field of labor, my heart was heavy.

I commenced meetings at the Center Schoolhouse seven miles southwest of Persia, Iowa, and closed last Wednesday evening. On last Sunday I baptized five, which makes seventy this conference year.

The good Lord has blessed me in presenting the truth.

Though my heart has been made sad, I desire to say, God's will be done. Dear Saints, please remember me and mine.

W. A. SMITH.

ADRIAN, Illinois, October 5.

Editors Herald: The conference of the Nauvoo District closed last night with a full house and good attention. Conference met with the Rock Creek Branch, situated between Nauvoo and Adrian. A heavy rain on Friday made the roads very bad on Saturday, but on Sunday they were in a much better condition, and we had a good attendance at all the services, but perhaps not so many as there would have been if the roads had been in a better condition. Every motion that was presented received a unanimous vote in the affirmative, with one exception, and that the place of the next conference. Not that the brethren and delegates were not willing to fully consider matters, but because nothing of an objectionable nature was presented by any one. All seemed considerate of others' feelings and opinions yet not to the exclusion of the law so far as we knew. The social meeting was not so diligently occupied as it could have been, yet the Spirit spoke the word of the Lord to the comfort of all present and especially to Father Lambert. The sermons were well delivered and well received so far as we could hear. One man presented himself for baptism at the close of last night's service, we hear. Bro. Elbert Smith delivered the evening discourse in a logical manner, which showed research and forethought. Each sermon delivered during the conference was on the restoration in latter days. Taken altogether it was one of the most harmonious conferences we ever attended—harmonious in itself and harmonious with itself. All leave for home to-day feeling very much encouraged and feeling that it is good to meet together in meetings of this kind and be revived and encouraged. We who remain feel somewhat lonely and long for the time of the final reunion with all God's people, where, though we may part for a time, each to his own mansion and city, for one shall rule over one city, another over three, another over five, and another over ten—we shall be kings and priests and shall reign on the earth—yet with the expectation of meeting again, at our home if faithful—the capital of all the earth—the home of the King of kings and Lord of lords—the New Jerusalem.

Our next conference meets in Burlington in February, subject to the call of the district president. We hope to hold the fort here for a while and in other parts in Illinois till near the new year. Bro. McKiernan also attended the conference and will remain a few days.

Very kindly,
J. W. PETERSON.

Editors Herald: I am pleased with the prospect before us as a people, "the body of Christ;" and as a branch of this "body." After A. B. Phillips left us nearly a year ago, I was chosen to preside over the branch in this place. The burden fell quite heavily upon me, but by the grace of God I have endeavored to do what I could. We now have an elder with us, R. J. Parker having moved his family here from Oakland, just after the reunion closed at that place. He has decided to give us the helping hand in this city and its surroundings. He is preaching at present on the street, with some who seem to be interested to hear. May the Master draw by the Holy Spirit the honest ones everywhere until they shall come and lodge in the branches of this "gospel tree."

Sr. Cornelia Cox, of this place, has been confined to her bed for almost a year, and has been a great sufferer during this time. Prior to this she was well and strong. She has no use of her lower limbs. As branch president I have set apart the first Sunday in November as fast-day for the branch to observe and we desire those Saints who may feel to join us to do so that our sister may be brought into a condition spiritually that it may please the Lord to restore her to health. She is the daughter of Sr. E. Twaddle, of this place, and will be administered to on the above day, November 1. Saints, please note the day.

T. J. LAWN.

DES MOINES, Iowa, October 3.

Dear Herald: Your pages are filled each week with that which is interesting to us and you are a welcome guest in many homes throughout the land. That which is full of interest to all in your pages at the present time are the articles, "The Senior Editor Abroad." This missionary journey of our president is a remarkable one and will certainly occupy a chapter in volume five of the Church History when it is published. It is claimed by some that Paul at one time reached England. Could it be that the ancient apostle had any intimation to him that a latter-day prophet and his counselor would visit that same island, bearing the same gospel message? The conference year is passing by rapidly. The church is advancing, the redemption of Zion is nearer, the final triumph of God's work is closer at hand. The gospel message is being extended, the Saints are coming up higher, and the promises of God are being daily verified.

Here in this city the work is onward. At the recent election of branch officers, E. O. Clark, of 2501 Logan Avenue, was unanimously reelected branch president. The other officers are, priest, J. R. Epperson; assistant priest, T. P. Cook; teacher, C. E. Lent; assistant teacher, C. F. Merrill; deacon, F. Chandler; clerk, E. F. Hall. Saints who might be in the city at any time should remember that the church is located at East Sixteenth and Des Moines Streets, and they will be welcomed at any of the services.

The interest manifested in the Religio work is worthy of mention. During the past month a number of new members have been added; several of these are the young members lately received into the Church, and a junior class will be established for them. A valuable gift to the local here last week was six copies of the Book of Mormon from our Bro. Joseph G. Carpenter. He has not long been an active worker here but is a faithful one indeed. The books are especially needed in the local and are the beginning of what we may hope will be a large library for the society.

A. A. REAMS.

BOONESBORO, Iowa, October 5.

Dear Herald: I was baptized four years ago last June, by Bro. Columbus Scott, at Boonesboro, and I am very weak in the work yet and earnestly ask all the Saints to pray for me that I may overcome all difficulties in life and be strengthened and be able to do more for the Master than I have in the past. I have had enough experience to know that I am in the right path. One year ago last March I was at death's door, and not expected to live. I promised God if he would raise me up I would begin a new life, and follow his footsteps. An elder was sent for to administer to me, and in a moment or two I got strength and in a week I was up and around. I have also seen my brothers raised up.

MISS SARAH RODGERS.

WESTON, Iowa, October 5.

Editors Herald: Our district conference met here with Hazeldell Branch September 26 and 27. The Spirit of the Master was with us to a marked degree. Bro. C. Derry was present, working in his office of patriarch, but the demand on him was greater than his strength would allow. Quite a number of blessings were given.

We were somewhat disappointed in having so few of our missionaries meet with us. The business was not all as pleasant as it might have been but we hope all things will work together for their good who will put their trust in God.

Two German people have lately been baptized here. We believe they are the fruits of Bro. T. E. Cohrt's labors here last winter. They are noble people, husband and wife. We trust God will give them a bright testimony in regard to the work and their acceptance of him and guide their feet in the narrow way.

Surely the hastening time is here and God is pouring out his Spirit upon his people. Dear Saints, let us not be slumbering in this latter-day work, but strive to do all God requires at our hands. May God bless his people and help us to "come up higher."

Your sister,

CHRISTINA RASMUSSEN.

RHODES, Iowa, October 3.

Editors Herald: Some of your readers, perhaps, would be interested in hearing of the "aftermath" from our reunion held at this place August 13-23.

The reunion had a splendid attendance of outsiders, at all the evening and Sunday services, and many of the people have expressed themselves as being well pleased with the meetings and some have gone so far as to say they believe the Latter Day Saints have the truth; and that Joseph Smith was indeed a prophet.

This has roused the ire and jealousy of some of the good (?) folks here, especially of Reverend Bracket, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

A short time after the close of the reunion he borrowed a copy of the Book of Mormon from Mrs. Remington, pastor of the M. P. Church, who has a copy of both the Book of Mormon and the Holy Scriptures, given her, she says, by one of the elders. And procuring a copy of the Doctrine and Covenants (and another book the name of which I did not learn, but Mrs. Remington told me that Mr. Bracket said it revealed the "inside secret workings of the Church") he proceeded to "post" himself, to combat "Mormonism."

But he must have found the "posting" too great a task, for the next thing we heard he had bills out advertising a lecture to be given September 28 at the Methodist Episcopal church, by Reverend Emmet G. Hunt, secretary of the Utah Mission. Subject, The Rise and Development of "Mormonism." Mr. Hunt (so the bills stated), had been a missionary in Utah for ten years. While there was nothing in the bills to indicate that the Reorganized Church would be attacked, we, knowing the state of Mr. Bracket's feelings towards us, well knew what to expect.

But we earnestly prayed that the work might not suffer; and that any attempt made to injure or misrepresent the Church might be confounded. And I believe the Lord heard our prayers, for Mr. Hunt made such a bungle of his so-called lecture, that even Mr. Bracket himself acted as if he thought he could have done better.

Some of Mr. Bracket's members were displeased with this proceeding on the part of their pastor, and would not go to hear the lecture. Others are desiring a debate that they may hear both sides. Mr. Bracket gave a lengthy prelude to the lecture. And strange to say he began harping on what had been said at the reunion, the first thing.

He appeared to feel especially antagonistic toward Bro. McDowell, and was smarting under some things he said in his last sermon Sunday afternoon, in regard to the Methodist Church being an "accident." Said he "tried to enlighten the brother, but he would not be enlightened."

Said he understood the marks of difference between the two Mormon Churches, "But," said he, "it's the doctrine they teach, that we are antagonizing." Said the Reorganized Church did not accept the extremes of the Utah Church, but they all tend in the same direction.

He accused our elders of using ambiguous language, making their words mean one thing to themselves and something else to the people. Said Elder Cushman said the people need not be in a hurry to become Latter Day Saints, that there were other cycles of time, etc. And a great deal more that I will not attempt to write. He finally yielded the floor to the lecturer saying he could finish his talk at another time; so I presume we will hear more later on.

Mr. Hunt began by stating that there were too great differences between the Utah Church and the Reorganized Church; viz., "the Reorganized Church never antagonizes the government, and does not practice polygamy." "But I have been told, however," said he, "that they believe it is necessary to be sealed to spiritual wives; but they do not openly teach this!" Said "they all sprang from the same root; the Reorganized Church does not bear exactly the same fruit that they do in Utah."

Then he went on to give a summary of the early history of the Church. Said the Church was organized in New York April 4. I was so astonished at the day of the month that I did not catch the year given, but will suppose it was as nearly correct as the day of the month anyway.

When he came to the Book of Mormon he told the old Spalding story. (Well "posted" lecturer wasn't he?) Said the Book of Mormon bore a strong resemblance to the Spalding Manuscript. He gave as the cause for the trouble and persecutions of the Saints in Missouri that Joseph Smith antagonized the laws of the State, and the cause for Joseph Smith's arrest and imprisonment in Carthage, Illinois, that he took a "spiritual wife"—an editor's wife. When speaking of the mob gathering around the jail he said: "While the humble Joseph Smith defended himself with a revolver."

It appeared to me that the authorities of Illinois were quite lenient after all, to allow their prisoners to carry fire arms(?)!

And I think the man who would not have defended himself against an angry mob who sought his life when the means to do so was in his hands would have been either a coward or an idiot.

Mr. Hunt thought, however, that the killing of Joseph and Hyrum Smith was a mistake, as it created a sympathy on the part of the people and they were more ready to listen than they were before, and the Church grew more rapidly in consequence, "when if they had left them alone it would have soon died out."

Wonder why they do not profit by the experience of their predecessors!

He said Joseph Smith taught that there was no such thing as spirit; that it was a sort of refined matter or fluid or influence acting upon the nerves and could be received only by the laying on of the hands of the priesthood. Said he, "They do not believe in regeneration, or that you can be saved here, but if you obey the priesthood and pay your tithing you will be saved when you die."

He had a great deal to say about the personality of God. Said they "believe God was at the beginning just like any other man, but had developed into a great, big, overgrown Brigham Young."

Said they "believe that Jesus Christ was a polygamist, and that Mary and Martha were his wives."

Said "the Book of Mormon does not teach polygamy but the Doctrine and Covenants does." He said Utah was only a little side-show; that the big tent was to be set up down in Missouri. And in all this he made no distinctions between the two Churches save the two points mentioned in the beginning, so that the people unacquainted with the history, had no way of knowing how much applied to the Reorganized Church or how much to the Utah Church.

He told a great many ridiculous stories about the Utah people to raise a laugh which I verily believe were trumped up for this and like occasions. If there was no more truth in his statements concerning those people than there was in what he told about Joseph Smith and the Reorganized Church there certainly was not much truth in his lecture.

After the close of the profound (?) lecture, Mr. Bracket got up, and called the people back from Utah to Rhodes, and the terrible doctrine taught at the "tent meetings." I think he was somewhat disappointed that there was not more said outright against the Reorganized Church.

He said: "We do not wish to be personal; those we know in this vicinity are good citizens and good people, but it is not because of the teachings of the Church that they are good, but they are good in spite of the teachings." Is it not strange that this is what is said of the Saints everywhere? The bad ones are always somewhere else!

After the benediction, Bro. Nirk made a statement or two, correcting them on the point that the Reorganized Church ever believed, taught, or practiced the sealing of spiritual wives, also that the Book of Mormon had no resemblance to the Spalding Romance. Bro. Anway called his (Mr. Hunt's) attention to what he said in regard to the Doctrine and Covenants teaching polygamy. "Oh," said he, "I know that is left out of yours." And then for Reverend Bracket to talk about "ambiguous language!"

A few days after the debate one of the brethren met Reverend Bracket on the street and entered into conversation with him, in course of which the brother asked him if he were willing to give our people a chance to vindicate their position, or in other words, was he willing to debate formulated questions?

He replied that he was no debater himself, but he thought he could furnish a man if our people were anxious for a debate. The brother told him that our people did not court debate, that it was only when driven to it in self defense that they debated.

After considerable talk he said: "Well if I were you folks, I would just go on, and live it down!" Does not that sound a little strange? Live what down, I wonder! The truth that the two reverend gentlemen told about the Church? We do not often hear ministers of the gospel advising people to try to live down the truth. Oh, consistency, where art thou!

Why did he not advise us to renounce our erroneous doctrine and come out of such an abominable Church? We do not feel discouraged over the situation at all, for we believe this is only an indication that God has a people here to be gathered out of Babylon, and Satan is raging because they are beginning to think for themselves.

We can get the ground for a reunion next year, on the same terms that we did this year, and should the committee be led to locate it here, for the work's sake, we will gladly welcome it back. It would worry the preachers some, no doubt, but God is able to open the understanding of the most prejudiced minds and lead them to the glorious light and liberty of the gospel.

We have some noble men preaching the restored gospel who once preached in other Churches. They have come to the light; why may not others?

Then let us be careful of our influence and try to win them by kind and not harsh means to a higher plane. I thought as I listened to Mr. Hunt, ridiculing and abusing the Utah people, saying that he would not open his church to them or invite them into his house any more than he would a vile serpent, that this was strange language for a minister of the gospel who had been sent out to win souls to Christ. He appeared to have only hatred in his heart for them. I trust that our people, especially our missionaries, will never stoop to such methods, for this could never win those people back to the "old paths," neither convert sinners to Christ, nor yet bring honest souls out of Babylon.

With perfect faith for the final triumph of truth, I am,

Your sister in the gospel,

MATTIE HUGHES.

TORONTO, Ontario, October 1.

Editors Herald: I am now completing my long-promised astronomical essay upon "Saturn and his Rings," which I hope to forward you very shortly now.

I greatly appreciate the many good, well-thought-out and well-written articles in your valued columns, and trust you will long continue to enjoy an ever widening and ever increasing circulation, not upon this continent only, but upon the "Islands of the Sea."

Occasionally I come across letters and communications in your pages that I would fain to see printed in tract or pamphlet form and dispatched broad-cast o'er all the lands from east to west and from north to south, so grand are they, and so full of the very sublimation of truth.

Other articles or essays again, cause me much anxious consideration and disquietude of mind, from the fact that I am unable to harmonize statements advanced in them and assertions propounded by them, with the direct pronouncements of holy writ.

I very seldom, indeed, enter the fields of polemical controversy, and am exceedingly reluctant to do so on the present occasion; but I certainly feel as though I should be very grateful for a little light on a subject commented upon by a certain brother in your columns just a week or two ago. The article in question was a somewhat lengthy one, and was intended by the writer to demonstrate (indeed he expressly so states), that it is, from the very nature of the case, impossible for the Holy Spirit of God to be a personage; it is therefore merely an influence or emanation from the Father and the Son.

I had no sooner read the article than my mind at once reverted to statements in the Scriptures, and in the Book of Mormon, where the Spirit of God is distinctly and explicitly referred to as a person, i. e., a spirit personage, and acts are attributed to the Holy Spirit which could only be demonstrated of a personality.

For instance, Nephi emphatically asserts that when upon the mountain pouring out his soul unto God, a man appeared unto him showing him many great and marvelous things, and he says: "Behold, that he was in the form of a man. Nevertheless I knew it was the Spirit of the Lord!" Yet the brother in question says that the Spirit can not be a personage, that it is only the "influence from the Father and the Son." I write his words from memory, not having the HERALD at hand; but the meaning is precisely similar, even if I may not have reproduced the exact language employed by the brother.

Again, Christ says unto his disciples, "When he [not it], the Spirit of truth, is come, he [not it] will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself."—John 16: 13. Again, "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one."—1 John 5: 7. But how can these three be one if two of them are personages (either of spirit or of tabernacle), and the third is not a personage at all?

Again. How are persons to be baptized in the "name" of an influence? Yet our Lord joins the name of the Holy Ghost with his own and his Father's. (See Matthew 28: 19.) The elementary principles of grammar and composition teach that none but a person or personage can have a proper name.

An influence has no name; it is simply referred to by the impersonal pronoun "it". But the brother says in his article, the Holy Spirit can not be a person or personage; for it is written "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." (Romans 8: 9.) For each Saint, then, to have the Spirit dwelling in him, there must needs be thousands of such for each to possess the Spirit, if the Spirit is a person"—(or some such words to the same effect) for I have not the exact words before me.

This simply demonstrates to me that the brother is confusing two Greek words (or rather a Greek word and a Hebrew word), which bear totally distinct meanings. He is confusing the Greek word pneuma which means wind or spirit, as in John 3: 8, "The wind bloweth where it listeneth," etc., with the Hebrew word ruach, a spirit, as in Mark 6: 49 and in Matthew 14: 26.

The Spirit personage as in Matthew 28: 19, "baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost (or Ruach Jehovah) is not to be confused with the divine afflatus or Spirit, "pneuma" or "wind," "shed forth" or "poured forth" upon the multitude, as in Acts 2: 1-3; and in the other portions of Holy Scriptures enumerated by our brother in his essay.

Yours for truth alone,

FREDERICK R. TUBB.

EDGEWOOD, Iowa, September 27.

Editors Herald: Thirty-five years ago I became very much concerned about my condition. I knew nothing of the Bible except what I heard some one say concerning it, having always avoided churches; but after getting married I determined that if there was any such a thing as religion I would try and get it. I met an old Irishman who said, "Come up, Bro. George, and get religion." So I made up my mind to carry my resolution into effect. I shall always remember what happened that night. I knew I was looked upon as a hard case, for I had led a reckless life; but I was determined to become religious and stop sinning. So when they gave an opportunity for any one to tell of their resolution or if any one had a word to say, I rose and stated what I had made up my mind to do. I was willing to do anything to get religion, so you know what followed: one, the anxious seat; two, to testify; three, to get happy; four, to get the Holy Ghost. When I got through the revival I was on my "way to glory."

For four years I was happy, then something occurred that destroyed my happiness. The same Methodist preacher that I had been listening to for four years was holding a revival with a Hardshelled Baptist. It was then that I saw some one had told an untruth, for they said that the Churches were all united, and I had seen no difference for the first four years, but the Methodist priest introduced sprinkling for baptism to show how convenient it was in cold weather and I supposed it was all right. But when he got through the Baptist man arose and such a shaking up I never heard before. When he was through I was lost. I was completely undone. Then for the first time in my religious career I was like a boy thrown overboard at sea. There was my first starting point to know for myself, and I became determined to follow the book, so I decided the Baptist was right and was immersed by them. The next four years of reading led me to see the Baptists were not altogether right. I had heard of the Dunkards, and I saw they washed feet and greeted one another with a holy kiss, as we see in John 13, and I wanted to find some of them. After finding one that was passing through our settlement I hurried to seek him. I saw things as they did, with the exception of three immersions; but they put much stress on the commission "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Then I saw it must be done in the name of each, so I was immersed three times more. I became a Dunkard through and through.

I thought I never would have to change again; but one of our Dunkard sisters who was one of the best posted ones in the Scriptures came to me and told me she had heard the Mormons and they led her away so far in thought and got her so far beyond anything she had ever heard before that she must tell me something about it; so she related a good many thoughts to me concerning their doctrine. I asked her if they were honest and candid. She said they were willing to talk, so I said: "If they are as you say, I can make Dunkards of them." She told me where I could find them. I started in a few days to do some mission work, and soon came in contact with O. B. Thomas. When I was introduced to him I did not like the looks of him,—he was a Mormon. Such a feeling never came over me before. I feared him. I felt so sorry for him, but I remembered what my errand was, so I commenced on him. He was kind and patient with me, and heard all I had to say. I thought I was doing well, and had given him something new, and thought he was about converted; but he asked me if I would listen to him as he had to me. I said, "Surely." He commenced with the Church that Jesus set up, and followed it into the wilderness, and showed me that authority ceased, and that the Church and power ceased, and led me to see that God was not what Churches represented him to be, and in fact, he gave me so many of the promises concerning the Latter-Day work, I was carried away so far beyond anything I had ever heard, that I was upset again. He said nothing of the Dunkards only he said they had many good teachings.

I went home forgetting my mission and my idea of converting him to my faith. My brain was full. I could think of nothing else, but I was determined to know, so I went and related the whole theme to my Dunkard elder, supposing he would help me out, and see the fraud if there were any; but he had read the Mormon bible, and it was a fraud from start to finish. But he had quoted one passage so many times, like this: "Hear all things; prove all things; hold fast that which is good." I got no satisfaction from him.

The next thing my Dunkard sister came on an errand for O. B. Thomas and Bro. Roth, asking me to let them put up their tent on some lots I had. They wanted to preach in our town. Our neighbors said, "No, we will egg them out." There was general hatred against them. I was afraid of them. I thought I might be led away by them, but I turned it over and over in my mind until I said, "They can not turn me over to them." So they came. The people came to see a Mormon. They looked to me about as I felt. They stayed about two months. I heard them through. I bought a Book of Mormon, and they went away. We bought other books and tracts.

We took the whole winter for it. I want to say right here that the Book of Mormon did the work by the Holy Spirit. My soul was lit up by the light of its teachings. We were ready for the water again. Once by the Methodist, once by the Baptist, three times by the Dunkards. Now I saw the use of being baptized by some one in authority; so in 1894 my wife and I were baptized by Bro. Roth. We have no fears of changing any more. We know that the word of God is ours, and we accept it all,—all that is rightly translated.

My struggle is now to do the will of my Father. I now can see the beauty and the leadings of the Spirit, and the power of God healing my wife and me,—restored to health in a moment through the instrument of one whom God has chosen. One year ago next month I was taken with chills and fever. The doctors could not break the fever. I went down so low they called a council of doctors. They said I could not live until morning. All neighbors gave me up. I lay thirteen days unconscious, then rallied and came to my mind enough to call for the elders, Brn. Peterson and Turner, and they administered to me. The Lord heard and answered, and I commenced to recover from that hour. I took no more medicine, but began to eat and get stronger every day.

Let us burn the light we have and we shall receive more. God will lead us on to victory over self, the flesh, and the Devil, through Him who has spared us by his own blood which has given us a hope of the resurrection.

I am now sixty-six years old. I shall soon go down to the end of this life. Surely we have a bright hope. My efforts shall be to keep it to the end. Oh, let us pray for one another, until we meet where trials and sorrows cease.

G. W. SEWARD.

HULDA, Mississippi, September 21.

Editors Herald: Our conference is closed and we had a grand time indeed. Bro. I. N. Roberts was present with us and preached some noble sermons. He baptized two more into the fold of Christ and will baptize a colored lady this evening. He preached last night on "Joseph Smith; is he a prophet of God?" Referring to the Bible he proved that he is a true prophet of God, and made it so plain that a little child could understand it.

When we come to investigate this glorious cause, and live up to its principles, we find it is the grandest and noblest work on earth. I have no doubt in the work at all, but I feel that I am one of the weakest of God's children and ask all the Saints to pray in my behalf that I may live up to duty in everything. Pray for the Mobile District, for we realize that we are living in the last days and need to be directed by that Spirit of truth that is promised to God's Saints. His blessings are promised unto all who will obey him and I do not want to trample on the grand opportunities which he has given; but I want to live by every word that has proceeded from his mouth. We are given the blessed assurance of eternal life if we live up to the gospel, and I humbly pray that we may live true to the covenant we have made.

Mr. Alice E. Smith was buried yesterday. Bro. I. N. Roberts conducted the funeral services. She died of consumption—had been sick quite a while.

HULDA PORTER.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. E. W. Orr, Clay Center, Nebraska, October 2, writing of the conference at Wilber: "Conference was well attended, the weather being fine. Excellent sermons were delivered by Brn. Madison, Goldsmith, and Sutton, the latter, Sutton, speaking twice. Six were added to the Church by baptism. The entertainment given by the Sunday-school was appreciated by all. The good Spirit was present throughout. I shall ever hold in pleasant memory the few days spent in conference with the Wilber Saints."

Bro. H. A. Stebbins has received a letter from W. R. Smith dated September 24 in which he wrote: "Have just closed one of the most interesting meetings which I have held this year, at India, Tennessee, near Paris. It is a new place, but the interest was good from first to last. Last winter S. H. Fields and myself opened the work there, but the trustees closed the schoolhouse against us. However, we kept on laboring in private houses and arbors and tents until we succeeded in baptizing two noble people and left others seeking the kingdom of God."

Bro. James McKiernan, writing from Adrian, Iowa, October 7, in submitting obituary notice of Mrs. Eliza Roberts, widow of Elder Henry Roberts, says: "She had many relatives and friends in the Church, and many of the early church workers remember her hospitality. She always defended the character of the Church against false accusations. Her husband was an earnest supporter of the Church, and was an officer in the branch from the time of its organization until his death in 1892."

Conference Minutes.

Northern Nebraska.—District conference met at Decatur, Nebraska, on September 25, 1903, with Bro. Roman Wight, district president, in charge; Charles Fry, vice-president; James Huff, secretary; Burn Case, assistant secretary. Minutes of previous session read and approved. Statistical reports from Decatur 99, Omaha 305, and Platte Valley 71. Ministry reporting: Elders R. Wight, Charles Fry, James Huff, J. S. Strain, George W. Galley, H. S. Lytle, J. E. Butts, and John Avondet; Priests J. F. Weston, George Murie, Marcus Bilyne, Lloyd Marteeny, Richard Brown, and E. R. Ahlstrand; Teachers C. M. Hollenbeck, Jesse Allen, H. H. Robinson, and J. M. Case. District treasurer reported: On hand last report, $3.36; received, $24.50; paid out, $21.40; balance on hand, $6.46. Bishop's agent reported: On hand last report, $224.65; received, $78.15; paid out, $216; balance on hand, $86.80. Audited by committee and found correct. District president reported the district in fairly good condition. Tent committee reported the top of the tent worn out, but the side curtains and poles in fair condition. Preaching by James Huff, John S. Strain, and Charles Fry. Next conference to meet in Omaha the last Friday in January, 1904, at 7:30 p. m.

Idaho.—District conference convened at Hagerman, Idaho, September 12, at 10 a. m. S. D. Condit presided, assisted by W. H. Kelley; W. S. Pender, secretary. Forenoon session was devoted to prayer and short speeches. Branches reporting: Hagerman 19, Cedrine 27, Grove City 14, Teton 13. Report of Cedrine Branch referred back for correction. Ministry reporting: Elders W. H. Kelley, S. D. Condit, A. J. Layland, John H. Condit, W. S. Pender, John E. Vanderwood, A. Hendrickson; Priests M. J. Durfee and L. P. Larson; Teacher J. E. Condit. The report of committee to correct records was accepted and committee continued. The reports of elders' courts in the following cases were read and approved: Agnes Heaton, Alfred Van Kammel, Arnold Younelly, Elizabeth Younelly, Malvina J. Jarboe, Matilda Erickson, and Johannes Berthelson. Present officers of the district were sustained. Time and place of holding the next district conference were left with the president of the district to select. The missionaries of this mission and the general authorities of the Church were sustained by vote. Preaching by W. S. Pender, W. H. Kelley, and A. J. Layland. Vote of thanks was given to Owen Brothers for the use of their hall and to Saints and friends at Hagerman for entertaining the conference. Four were baptized.

Pottawattamie.—District conference met September 26 and 27, at Hazel Dell, J. P. Carlile presiding. In the absence of the district secretary, J. A. Hansen and E. A. Carlile were chosen temporary secretary and clerk. Credentials from all branches except Fontanelle were read and delegates seated. All branches reported: Boomer 57, Carson 27, Council Bluffs 257, Crescent 27, Hazel Dell 58, North Star 107, Fontanelle 37, Wheeler 53, total 748. Ministry reporting: Elders James Caffall, J. P. Carlile, M. M. Turpen, D. R. Chambers, R. McKenzie, D. Parish, D. K. Dodson, S. Butler, Joshua Carlile, William J. Cook, M. F. Elswick, and F. E. Cohrt; Priests S. Harding, J. P. Christensen, J. O. Booth, T. Scott, J. Leytham, S. C. Foote, C. C. Larson, and J. C. Lapworth; Teachers J. A. Hansen, P. W. Frederickson, John Adams, H. M. Liles. J. P. Carlile, Bishop's agent, reported: On hand last report, $476.47; received, $727.30; paid out, $740.65; balance on hand, $463.12. Report audited and approved. Elder Hans Petersen having handed his license to the district president, the matter was referred to the missionary in charge. Elder S. Butler was sustained as missionary in charge of conference to labor in vicinity of Fontanelle. Conference adjourned to meet in Underwood, Iowa, the last Saturday in February, 1904.

British Isles.—Annual conference met in the St. James' Hall, Kirkgate, Leeds, at 6 p. m., August 1, J. W. Rushton being in the chair and Brn. Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans, of the Presidency, were associated with him. Elijah Abbott was elected conference deacon with power to choose assistants; Bro. Foden was chosen chorister and Sr. A. Green organist. Minutes of 1902 conference were read. The following address of welcome was then presented to our Bro. Joseph Smith:

"We, the members of the British Isles Mission conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in the name of the ministry and laity of the Church in the British Islands, heartily bid you welcome to our shores which we sincerely hope may not prove inhospitable to you. We feel pleased to think that you have for forty-three years carried on, and trust you may continue to carry on the Lord's work which your father so nobly and faithfully performed amidst attacks from foes without and false brethren within, until he met a martyr's death at Carthage, Illinois, 1844. We thank Almighty God that he has in his infinite goodness spared your life to visit us and with us worship the one God and enjoy association with the Saints whose homes are in these islands, the inhabitants of which have done more to disseminate the written word than any other people on the earth. We earnestly hope that you, the servants of the Lord, with your honorable colaborer, R. C. Evans, may have ample opportunity to rightly interpret that word which our fellow countrymen have so lavishly distributed among the nations. We reverently hope that the good accruing from your visit may be reciprocal; that while you, our brethren, may be benefited, intellectually, physically, and spiritually, we may be blessed and strengthened by association with representatives of that nation whose forefathers in 1620 anchored their barks off the wild New England shore, braving the perils of tempestuous seas, rigors of climate, and a new country peopled with the savage, benighted descendants of a once enlightened race, to find " 'A faith's pure shrine, Freedom to worship God.' "

Greetings of a similar nature were presented to Bro. R. C. Evans.

In replying to the greetings Bro. Smith said: "Bro. President and members of the mission conference, it is with great pleasure that I find myself in your presence to-day. I have long wished that I might visit the Old Country and see those who have so long and so well been maintaining the cause restored through the ministration of the angel, and I am pleased that in the speech of welcome you have referred to the fact that the word has been widely dispensed by this nation and that we are privileged, in a degree at least, to be the interpreters of that word, by virtue of the gospel which has been vouchsafed to us by God. Without this, we can not do more than others, to bring about the desired end. We are glad that with others we have been permitted both here and in the New World to win victories for the truth as it is in Christ, not by the power that is in ourselves but by the force and power of the Spirit. I feel grateful for the greeting you have given me because it encourages me on my way, for it requires great courage to maintain the cause in this life; for whatever victories we have won, have been won by virtue of earnest effort and by strong persistence on the part of those who have received the ministry and I greet those victories with thankfulness."

Bro. R. C. Evans said: "Mr. President, Brethren and Sisters: Words are inadequate to express the feelings of my heart as I essay to reply to the tender words of brotherly affection voiced in the speeches of welcome tendered to the President of the Church and myself. I am sure that the work that we have come to represent here is very dear to you. I have heard it in your voices. I have seen evidence of it in the conduct of many of you with whom I have been privileged to meet prior to this occasion. The work we are engaged in is the gift of God's love to those who will hear him; and I am glad to-night that we have been wise in our selection in that we have chosen to follow the voice of the Good Shepherd. We may be led into paths where but few have trod because of its being strewn with thorns of difficulty and shadowed with the darkness of human oppression, but I believe in this selection we may perhaps have been called upon to part with all that is valuable to those who value earthly conditions, but having parted with our all we have been made the recipients of the 'pearl of great price.' He who is in possession of this pearl is rich indeed, though he may die a beggar on your streets. The work in which we are engaged has been inaugurated by the Almighty for the amelioration of the condition of the sons of men, and is as dear to me as I have power and ability to appreciate it. For twenty-nine years I have been thinking and reading of this great work, and in a busy life of over twenty-two years in the ministry, I have been called upon to meet perhaps as fierce an opposition from every sectarian quarter and from the ranks of infidelity that it has been possible to bring to bear upon it. And I am glad that after nearly a quarter of a century in the conflict I know of no single argument that has ever been made against this work that will stand the test of logic and trial. Every effort that has been brought to bear against it has but proven the weakness of the argument by demonstrating the truthfulness of the work that God has called upon us to take an active part in. There is nothing in this gospel that is calculated to bring a blush of shame to the most modest and virtuous of human minds; but it is calculated to help, to strengthen, and to enlighten. I am glad to see such a noble band of men and women enlisted under the banner of our king in this land. I am glad that I have lived all my life under the British flag and a subject of good King Edward. Englishmen have ever been instrumental in doing good. They have been in the front rank as a nation for the civilization and enlightenment of the world. I could not but lift my eyes heavenward in grateful thankfulness when standing in the old church at Lutterworth. Here I ascended the pulpit and seated myself at the sacramental table where the morning star of the Reformation, John Wycliffe, gave to the world the first English Bible. I raised my heart in thankfulness, too, when I was permitted in the sacred confines of Westminster Abbey to view the place where the greatest English Bible of its time had been presented to the people. Again I am brought to a realization that the posterity of an Englishman gave to us under inspiration the Inspired Translation, the gift of God's love to the Church, and I think that after a comparison of the Inspired Translation with all other translations and revisions made, is in itself sufficient to demonstrate the divine calling and prophetic mission of Joseph the Seer. I think that we as a body, wherever we come from, from whatever clime, may be one, for we are one if we are Christ's; one in faith, one in hope. I trust that as one we shall strive to be true to ourselves, individually and collectively, true to our Lord and true to the work that he has committed to our care, and that we may think of the stupendous work that has already been performed by the Palmyra Seer and his son, our President, who is with us to-night. We have reason to lift up our heads and thank God that their words have been as seed that has given fruitage to acres of sermons. I trust that we may strive in our life's work to exemplify the divine character of the Master whom we are called upon to serve and thus prove that their work is not only devised to favor men but that God has devised it to save the race. Again I thank you."

President J. W. Rushton's report was presented. He had labored in Hamilton, Glasgow, after the Birmingham conference in North and Northeast Manchester along with Bro. G. T. Griffiths, after which he went to Wigan, where he held a public debate with a Mr. G. Wade of the Christadelphian Church. In December a branch was organized in Glasgow under the presidency of Bro. James Wilson. Brn. Griffiths and Rushton visited Belfast soon after with a view to establishing missionary labor in Ireland, but it was found inopportune on account of the expense of boarding and having no resident Saints. On December 19, Brn. Griffiths and Rushton visited various branches of the mission. Leeds District was organized in January, 1903 and in February, 1903, a branch in Enfield and the London District were organized. February 18, Bro. Griffiths sailed for America, since which time Bro. Rushton has been in charge of the mission. The work generally is in a favorable condition. He had baptized eighteen since last report. In some parts a tendency to apathy is observable amongst laity and ministry. A spiritual revival was needed to arouse to activity and energy. It would appear that local effort had relaxed in consequence of increase of missionary labor. There has been an effort made to bring about a uniformity in district rules. This will help the work. Amity and good feeling exist. Bro. Rushton had received practical help and sympathy and rejoiced to have the privilege of greeting our beloved President and his counselor, Bro. Evans. Their happy counsel and advice have been received with pleasure and appreciation. Saints in various branches deserve highest praise. Bishop Taylor had informed Bro. Rushton that the treasury is practically empty. Our monthly income averages £12 and our expenditure is £50. Attention was called to the tract issued recently by the joint council at the late General Conference. We have opened the work at Newcastle-on-Tyne. Bro. Rushton labored there a week and had splendid interest in the streets. The missionary force have done nobly and generally their efforts have been appreciated and blessed.

Ministerial reports were received from the following: T. J. Sheldon, John Davies, Frank J. Pearce, J. D. Jenkins, Evan B. Morgan, Thomas Jones, George W. Thorburn, Joseph Arber. Glasgow as an isolated branch, made report. It was organized by Brn. G. T. Griffiths and J. W. Rushton, on December 14, 1902, with seven members, including 1 elder, 1 priest, 1 teacher, and 1 deacon. February 28 two were baptized; since then two have moved away to America.

District reports: Elder Henry Greenwood reported the Manchester District in a better condition than it was some time ago. The ministry is laboring diligently to spread the truth by street-preaching and tract-distribution. During the past year two new branches have been organized at Warrington and Stockport, where the work is being pushed with vigor. Leeds branches have been formed into a district. Hope it may be for the good of the work. The labors of Elder John Davies were very acceptable and will be long remembered by the members. Eastern Wales, reported by Elder Thomas Gould. The majority of the members are feeling well and desire to do what they can for its progress.

Leeds District, reported by Elder Thomas Taylor, who had been president since January 11, 1903. Fifteen persons have been baptized since that time. The work is in a good condition generally. Harmony prevails and there is a spirit of sacrifice. Elder W. H. Greenwood reported Sheffield in a very fair condition. Branches are very much improved and efforts are now being made to reach the people. Prospects appear to be good. The labors of the Claycross Saints are to be commended. Have organized a string band which helps to make the services a success. Their chapel has been beautified and it is now the finest in the mission. Work in Sheffield is onward. Ministry are striving to walk in line. Meetings are fairly well attended and a good spirit prevails. Birmingham District, reported by Elder William Ecclestone. It contains four branches, with a membership of 233; there are also 20 isolated members. Efforts are being made to revive the work at Nottingham, where 3 were baptized in June, making a total of 7 members in that place. Condition of the district is fairly good. The future is brighter and the ministry are becoming more active. There is peace and harmony among the members.

Missionary report: Apostle Peter Anderson wrote from Asseus, Denmark: "We have confined our labors to Norway this year. We have a small membership in three places, viz., Christiansand, Grinstad, and Porsgrund, the last named being the largest. In all places the prospects are fair. We expect some to unite with us at Christiana. Four men are now laboring in Norway, viz., Bro. Muceus at and around Porsgrund; Bro. Kronberg at Grinstad, Bro. Enge at Christiansand, and Bro. Sojland about Egersund, which is still further west. We are extending our work as far as the means and men at our disposal will permit. We have now ready the Book of Mormon in our language, and we are glad to say that interest is manifested in it by several who are not of our faith."

Bishop Taylor's report was presented. Attention was called to Bishop E. L. Kelley's report in HERALD Supplement for April 8, 1903. Also to the fact that the present year opened with a discouraging prospect. We had then a balance of £190. Since that time we have spent £300 and have about $2 16s on hand. This fact gives some anxiety as the family allowances of the missionaries amounted to more than £50 per month. Have been able to pay them promptly hitherto but shall not be able to do so in future. Missionaries were asked to exercise patience and economy and to remember that their first duty is to provide for their families. Personal expenses come second. Bro. Taylor tenders his thanks to all the Saints for help given and also to his counselors and agents for services rendered.

On Monday, August 3, conference resumed its sittings at 10.20 a. m. R. C. Evans occupied the chair assisted by Joseph Smith and J. W. Rushton. Report of auditing committee reported being unable to audit Bishop Taylor's accounts because certain books referring to the same were not presented. The matter of auditing the books was referred to a committee appointed by the chair, to draft and present a resolution to the body which will cover the ground. The secretary of the Seventh Quorum of Elders reported verbally. Henry Greenwood had resigned the presidency of the quorum, having been called to the high priest's office. George Baty was elected in his stead. His counselors are John Austin and William R. Armstrong. It was decided to issue a circular letter and list of (62) members. Three members have been called to the high priest's quorum and one to the office of seventy. A verbal report of the Sixth Quorum of Priests was given by its president, John Foden.

The president of the mission, J. W. Rushton, was sustained by vote; also the secretaries, W. R. Armstrong and S. F. Mather; Bishop Taylor and Counselors C. H. Caton and Joseph Dewsnup; also the historian to the British Isles, W. R. Armstrong. The appointment of W. R. Armstrong as book-agent for the Board of Publication was indorsed. He was requested to submit a financial report to the annual conference of the British Isles.

Afternoon session began at 2.30. Conference was requested by the Seventh Quorum of Elders to ordain its new president and second counselor. George Baty was ordained president of that quorum by Joseph Smith and J. W. Rushton, and W. R. Armstrong was ordained second counselor by J. W. Rushton and Joseph Smith. The committee appointed to recommend an appropriate means of providing for the auditing of the accounts of the bishopric in the British Isles reported recommending that the accounts of the said bishopric for each the 21st and 26th days of January; and that for this purpose a standing auditing committee of three be created by this conference, so chosen that the term of one expires a year from now, one in two years, and one in three years, and that hereafter one member shall be chosen each year to fill vacancy, the term of office of those chosen to fill said vacancies to be three years. It was arranged that the auditing should be done each year at the office of the mission bishop, and that legitimate expenses of the auditors while at work should be borne by the mission. The brethren chosen as this committee are: J. E. Meredith, to serve three years; J. W. Taylor, two years; J. D. Howell, one year.

The following resolutions were carried: "Resolved that we proceed to publish a paper and that a committee be elected with power to act in harmony with instructions from the conference." "Resolved that the secretaries' expenses be paid."

By vote, the general, mission, and local authorities of the Church were sustained. It was resolved that when we adjourn we do so to meet again as per rule, the place of meeting to be left at the discretion of the presidency of the mission. On Sunday August 2, 1903, services were held in the Grand Assembly Hall, New Briggate, Leeds, Elder Evan B. Morgan in charge. R. C. Evans was the speaker. The audience was large and appreciative. At 2:30 p. m. a social meeting was held in charge of Bro Evans. Bro. Wray was confirmed a member of the Church, and several ordinations were attended to. Henry Greenwood was ordained a high priest by Brn. Joseph Smith, J. W. Rushton, J. Dewsnup, Sr., C. H. Caton, and Thomas Taylor, of Birmingham. Thomas Taylor (Leeds) was ordained high priest by Brn. J. Dewsnup, Sr., Joseph Smith, J. W. Rushton, C. H. Caton, and Thomas Taylor (Birmingham), T. J. Sheldon was ordained a Seventy, Second Quorum, by Joseph Smith, R. C. Evans, and J. W. Rushton. W. H. Greenwood was ordained a Seventy, Second Quorum, by J. W. Rushton, Joseph Smith, and R. C. Evans. A very enjoyable but all too short social meeting followed the ordinations. Some stirring testimonies were borne. At 6:30 p. m. J. W. Rushton was in charge, and Joseph Smith was the speaker. A large congregation was present. This was one of several masterly answers delivered by President Smith to those who still foster belief in the saving efficacy of the hydra-headed monster of the Utah valleys.

Far West.—Convened with the German Stewartsville Branch October 3 and 4, T. T. Hinderks and G. H. Hilliard in the chair, Charles P. Paul and Arch E. McCord secretaries. Report of Bishop's agent: Received, $298.20; expenditures, $544.95; balance due agent June 3, $450.58; September 29, balance due agent, $697.31. I. McCord, W. W. Smith, and J. S. Constance, auditing committee, reported the accounts to be correct, and report was adopted. Branch reports: Dekalb 62, loss 1; Stewartsville 230, gain 15; Edgerton Junction 57, gain 2; Kingston 122, gain 5; St. Joseph 578, gain 7; German Stewartsville 77; Pleasant Grove 81, loss 3. Ministerial reports: T. T. Hinderks, J. C. Elvert, G. W. Best baptized 4, A. St. Lewis solemnized 1 marriage, W. W. Smith baptized 3, W. E. Haden baptized 5, M. Shaw, A. McCord, Charles P. Paul solemnized 1 marriage, A. Booker, J. Armstrong, W. E. Summerfield baptized 2, solemnized 1 marriage, J. S. Constance, B. J. Dice, Walter Kinney, H. Taddicken, William Lawrenson, C. E. Guinand baptized 2, solemnized 1 marriage, A. W. Stead baptized 2, A. Nisser; Priests James N. Claiborn, E. M. Bryant, F. T. Dobie, C. J. Craven, Jerome Middleton, J. L. Bear baptized 3, Robert Garlich, I. McCord, Daniel H. Schmidt, B. R. Constance, Frederick Uphoff; Teachers John Agenstine, William Worden, W. L. Vail, R. McFee, John Piepergerdes; Deacon William Sterenson. District treasurer, B. J. Dice, reported: Balance on hand, $6.94. The president of the district Religio reported. A communication was read from Joseph Lampert in a form of an appeal from the decision of the action of the Stewartsville Branch. This matter was referred to a committee consisting of G. W. Munzey, J. S. Constance, J. C. Elvert. This committee reported after investigating the case, recommending that the action of the Stewartsville Branch be affirmed. On the recommendation of the Delano Branch it was moved and carried that Bro. Samuel H. Simmons be ordained to the office of priest and that T. T. Hinderks, president of the district, and the missionary in charge see that the brother be so ordained. A petition signed by a number of members living in Cameron, Missouri, asking to be organized into a branch, also a petition from members living in and near Kerr, Missouri, asking to be organized into a branch was presented; both these petitions were referred to missionary in charge, Bro. I. N. White, and president of district for their action in the matter. Election of officers: T. T. Hinderks, president; B. J. Dice, vice-president; Charles P. Paul, secretary. Charles P. Paul was sustained as Bishop's agent. B. J. Dice was sustained as district treasurer. Moved and carried that the several branches take action and come prepared to vote at the next conference on the question of holding our conferences semiannually in the future. Two-day meetings appointed as follows by the president and vice-president. St. Joseph, November 28 and 29, in charge of W. W. Smith; Edgerton Junction, October 17 and 18, Arch E. McCord and A. W. Head; Wakenda, November 7 and 8, Alma Booker and Jacob Snider; Kingston, October 31 and November 1, T. T. Hinderks and B. J. Dice; Cameron, December 12 and 13, C. P. Paul and

B. R. Constance; Delano, December 5 and 6, William Lewis and T. H. Hinderks; Far West, November 28 and 29, W. E. Summerfield and C. J. Craven; Stewartsville, December 12 and 13, C. E. Guinand and M. Shaw; Mount Hope, December 5 and 6, J. C. Elvert and W. W. Smith; Pleasant Grove, November 28 and 29, J. S. Constance and C. F. Householder; Dekalb, October 31 and November 1, J. Armstrong and F. Uphoff; German Stewartsville, December 26 and 27, B. J. Dice and D. H. Schmidt. These meetings to commence on Saturday at 2 p. m. Saturday evening W. W. Smith preached; Sunday, 10.45 a. m., Bro. George H. Hilliard was the speaker; 8 p. m., G. H. Hilliard; Sunday, 2.30 p. m., social meeting in charge of William Lewis and Arch E. McCord. Adjourned to meet with the St. Joseph Branch, March 5 and 6, 1904.

Massachusetts.—Convened in the Saint's church, Saturday, October 3, at 2.30 p. m., F. M. Sheehy presiding, President Joseph Smith, R. Bullard, and George H. Gates associates; M. C. Fisher and W. A. Sinclair clerks. The following reports were read: Bishop's report: Receipts, $2,408.98; disbursements, $2,316.36; balance, including balance at last report, about $700. District treasurer reported about $30 on hand in district fund. The conference voted that the collections taken up during its sessions be given to the Fall River Branch to assist them in the completion of their new church and to cover the extra expense of fixing it up temporary for conference. The collections amounted to $38.45. Ministry reporting: R. Bullard, G. H. Gates, G. W. Robley, John Gilbert, Joseph B. Pierce, I. B. Ames, N. R. Nickerson, William Bradbury, George Burnham, G. S. Yarrington, Joseph Woodward, George York, W. F. Frost, Albert A. Dane. Statistical reports: Boston 174, Brockton 24, Cranston 32, Dennisport 57, Fall River 122, Little Compton 14, New Bedford 19, Plymouth 33, Providence 238, Haverhill (new organization) 20. The result shows a loss of 8. Recommendations from Providence Branch for ordination of John D. Suttell to the office of elder and Daniel F. Joy to office of priest referred to committee of elders of conference. The committee later recommended to the conference to refer ordination of John D. Suttell to missionary in charge and district president and that the other be deferred. The reunion committee reported: Receipts of reunion, $614.97; expenditures, $614.05; balance, 92 cents. Considerable property was bought this year, thus the large expense. The evening session was devoted to short speeches by A. B. Phillips, R. W. Farrell, George Smith, Thomas Whipple, J. F. Spinnett, D. T. Shaw, E. L. Travers, and G. H. Gates. The morning prayer service in charge of Joseph Smith was well attended and the time was well occupied. Preaching at 11 a. m. by President Joseph Smith; the church was well filled, some people of note being present. At 2.30 Apostle F. M. Sheehy occupied the stand and delivered a very interesting discourse. At 7.30 p. m. President Smith again occupied the stand and spoke with seemingly good liberty to a large congregation, possibly one of the largest at any of our conferences in the East, people from many denominations, among whom were Congressman Greene and many others. During the afternoon service one child was blessed by R. Bullard and G. W. Robley. Monday morning prayer service was in charge of R. Bullard and Joseph Smith, during which time there were five prayers, seven songs, and thirty-four testimonies offered. At the close of the meeting President Smith gave a short talk on "How to be happy," bidding us grow old gracefully. Adjourned at 9.30 to meet with the Providence Branch the first Saturday in March, 1904.

Kirtland.—Convened at Akron, Ohio, October 3 and 4, Elders U. W. Greene, V. M. Goodrich, and O. B. Thomas presiding; J. A. Becker and J. E. Kelley clerks. Ministry reporting: F. J. Ebeling, R. Baldwin, O. B. Thomas, L. R. Devore, V. M. Goodrich, E. P. Schmidt, J. E. Kelley, W. G. Kimball, Eben Miller, A. R. Manchester, W. H. Forbes, J. A. Becker, J. C. Carlisle, James McConaughy, John McCoy, Perry C. Hartz. Branches reporting: Akron 48, Sharon 53, New Philadelphia 83, Youngstown 29, Conneautville 35, Toledo 30, Cleveland 71, Byesville 31; no report from Washingtonville. By recommend of Sharon Branch, approved by the conference, Thomas U. Thomas was ordained to the office of elder. The elders' court appointed by the district president to investigate charges made against Wesley O. Fischel reported that the defendant was found guilty and in harmony with the law recommended that he be expelled from membership. The report was affirmed and the recommendation adopted. The following resolution was adopted: "Whereas it is the opinion of this conference that the court's decision in the case of W. H. Kelley vs. Henry C. Smith has never been properly acted upon, and together with the fact that there is now no branch at Kirtland, therefore, be it resolved that this conference affirms said court's decision." Upon separate motion the recommendation of the court, recommending that Henry C. Smith make suitable apology to W. H. Kelley, was adopted. Upon distinct motions each district officer was sustained. Conference adjourned on the fifth at 11.30 to meet with the Cleveland Branch, March 6 and 7, 1904.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Southern Wisconsin District, Greeting: I feel it my duty to call your attention to the financial condition of our district. For five years previous to 1902, as a district we were self-sustaining; but for the last year we have been obliged to call on the Presiding Bishop of the Church to assist in sustaining of such missionaries as we are called to sustain. However, we believe that this is not all due to the neglect of the Saints, for some who have formerly assisted have died, and to some extent their property has passed out of the Church. And others who have been assisting in this district are now assisting in other parts of the vineyard. So we do not wish this to be taken in a fault-finding spirit; but we believe that there are those who may not fully know the true conditions as they are. There also may be others who have not complied with the law of tithes and offerings who should do so as a principle of the gospel. And again, others who do not know the real needs of the present, who when informed may feel disposed to sacrifice more for the Lord's work.

We are now about one and one half months behind with our support of the missionaries and so we kindly call attention to the facts as they really are. We do not want to see any of our missionaries obliged to leave the field in order to maintain their families; but we are fearful that such will be the case unless the Saints come to the rescue at once. We are informed that the Presiding Bishop is short also. Remember that small amounts are just as acceptable as large ones. Also remember the instruction of Paul as recorded in 2 Corinthians 9: 6, 7: "But this I say, he which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver."

EDGERTON, Wisconsin, October 2.

Reunion in Northeastern Kansas.

Northeastern Kansas annual reunion convened at Centralia September 11, 1903. Samuel Twombly was chosen president and M. F. Gowell to assist; James W. Burns clerk. Sr. Lenea McNutt was selected as organist and chorister. M. F. Gowell was appointed as news agent. On the 12th at 9 a. m. a prayer-meeting was enjoyed by all and at 11 Bro. Alex. H. Smith preached an impressive sermon. Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached at 3 p. m. In the evening there was a very heavy rain storm, flooding some of our tents and the railroad for miles east of us. The next day was damp and cold and we moved our tents up on higher grounds and began meetings. Our heavenly Father assured us that if the Saints would observe his commandments and use wisdom none should be seriously afflicted from inclemency of the weather. The meetings were exceedingly good at the last. The speakers were as follows: Brn. Alexander H. Smith, Samuel Thombly, Harry Thomas, S. P. Cox, M. F. Gowell, H. A. Stebbins, Ammon White, Arthur Smith, J. A. Gunsolley, James W. Burns. This was the first reunion for the Northeastern Kansas District and was profitable and strengthening to all.

Notices.

Northern California District Sunday-school secretaries who have not sent in their reports which were returned at the last convention, will you please do so at once, so the district report can be sent to the general secretary? Lizzie Day, district secretary, 913 Twenty-fourth Street, Sacramento, California.

All communications in regard to the branch at Hazeldell, in the Pottawattamie District, and also foreign mail matters, should be sent to Bro. C. C. Larsen, branch president, Council Bluffs, Iowa, R. F. D. No. 2, box 114. J. J. Christiansen, former president.

Two-Day Meetings.

A two-day meeting will be held with the Hartford, Michigan, Branch, October 17 and 18. Bro. Isaac M. or George A. Smith will be present and perhaps others of the missionary force. Visiting Saints inquire for Francis Earl or F. E. Robertson in south part of town. A. S. Cochran, district president.

Missionary Release.

J. A. Gunsolley, who was appointed to labor in St. Joseph, Missouri, is released from missionary appointment, at his request. Those interested please take notice.

FRED'K M. SMITH.

LAMONI, Iowa, October 7, 1903.

Transfer of Missionary.

W. H. Kelley, who was appointed to the Ohio field, has been transferred to Kentucky for the remainder of the conference year. This transfer is made by agreement between missionaries in charge, U. W. Greene and I. N. Roberts.

FRED'K M. SMITH,

For the Presidency.

Fourth Quorum of Elders.

Kindly advise your secretary, Bro. F. E. Cochran, Box 345, Lamoni, Iowa, of any changes in address since last report.

Correction.

In the sixth line of last paragraph of article on "Zionism" in current Autumn Leaves, the substitution of the word now for never changes the meaning and confuses the whole sentence. The error is noted here as it places the parties from whom I quote in a false light.

M. H. BOND.

In the report of the British Isles conference minutes in this issue of the HERALD, there is a typographical error. Between the ninth and tenth lines from the bottom of page 970, second column, please read in the following: "financial year ending December 31, be audited annually between".

Conference Notices.

Conference of Mobile District will convene with Three Rivers, Mississippi, Branch, Saturday, 10 a. m., before the first Sunday in November, 1903. F. P. Searcliff, president of district.

The Southern Indiana District conference will convene with Plainville Branch, October 31. We understand Heman C. Smith, president of this field, and possibly E. L. Kelley will be with us. Branch secretaries are requested to send branch reports to district secretary, so corrections may be made, if any occur, before convening of conference. James P. Sappenfield, president, Annie Marshall, secretary.

Died.

HARDING.—Mrs. Marie Harding, at Dibby, Minnesota, August 23, 1903, aged 82. She emigrated to America from Germany in 1833; was married to Thomas Conway in 1835, they having nine children born to them; after the death of her husband, she was married to Hiram Harding and to them three children were born. She lived and died a Catholic. May God in his mercy blot out her wrongs and let her meet her family in heaven.

ROBERTS.—Mrs. Eliza Roberts, widow of Elder Henry Roberts, died at Farmington, Iowa, September 29, 1903. She was born in Leeds, England, July 12, 1816. She was married to Henry Roberts in Canada, December 29, 1835. He united with the Church shortly after and moved to Kirtland, later to Farmington. She never united with the Latter Day Saint Church, but was a friend to it, and in the early days of the Reorganization her house was the home of its elders. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Elder James McKiernan conducted funeral service at the house and Elder Taylor at the Methodist Episcopal church, at 2 p. m., October 1, 1903. She was greatly respected by all who knew her and leaves to mourn her death one son, one foster son, three daughters, and one foster daughter, all married.

STODD.—Bro. W. E. Stodd, born in England, December 16, 1864, baptized September 12, 1886, in Mercer County, Illinois, by Elder D. S. Holmes; held the office of deacon. He was going to visit his mother in England whom he had not seen for more than twenty years, intending to leave August 29, but was taken sick on the 28th with typhoid fever; died at Rock Island, Illinois, September 13, 1903.

It is curious how a short space of time completely obliterates the incidents of a man's career, even though fame preserves his name. Very little which is authentic has been written concerning the discoverer of the Hudson River, the three hundredth anniversary of whose voyage is to be celebrated in New York City six years from now. For the Cosmopolitan for October Thomas A. Janvier has prepared an article which deals in a fascinating way with the romance and adventure of Hudson's life.

Raising Animal Infants.

Real Natural History (not "animal stories" for the experts to squabble over) is the subject of a capital article by A. W. Rolker in the October McClure's, on "Babies of the Zoo." Most of the interesting things that happen in a menagerie occur at times when the public is excluded, and are witnessed by the keepers alone. In a big modern zoo the young of the wild animals are reared on strictly scientific principles, and yet their lives are as eventful and as fraught with hardships and perils as those of their brothers of the jungle. All the prize babies of the zoo have sat for their photographs to illustrate the article.

In the Delineator for November Mrs. Theodore W. Birney has a suggestive paper on the Education of Boys as Future Fathers and Citizens. The gist of her argument is that boys seldom receive the sympathy to which they are entitled—not a maudlin, sentimental sympathy that is calculated to spoil the child, but an intelligent comprehension of his needs and an interest in his doings and belongings. Her conclusion is that if parents will only take a genuine interest in all things that interest their boys, they can hold their confidence, and so long as they possess that they can be reasonably sure that their sons will not go far wrong. Parents are wont to look on the problems of youth with eyes of an adult. How much good would result to many little fellows if their parents would come down to their view point, or come up perhaps, recognizing the limitations of their inexperience, and judging their deeds and misdeeds in the light of it. The rule of the rod is past, and inasmuch as the new order of things has brought much happiness into the lives of the little ones, so will a better understanding of the boy nature on the part of parents benefit them immeasurably.

The Largest Gun in the Country.

An official attached to the ordnance department of the United States Army conceived the idea of excelling his predecessors by building the largest gun ever cast in the country. Finally, after much effort, he succeeded in having a bill passed in Congress appropriating money to build a sixteen-inch gun, the "first of ten." The enormous piece of ordnance, which weighs one hundred and fifty tons and is forty-nine feet in length, is now mounted at Sandy Hook at the entrance to New York harbor. Its trial was successful, because the gun was fired without bursting, but it is safe to say that the remaining nine will never be finished. The needs of the service do not reach to the extent of hurling a ton of metal a distance of twenty-one miles. Still the gun is a "record-breaker," and thus serves a purpose.—October Woman's Home Companion.

An excellent account is given in the October McClure's of an engineering project second only in magnitude and importance to the Isthmian Canal; to wit, the stupendous undertaking of the Dutch Government to drain the larger part of the Zuyder Zee, convert the rest of it into a great fresh-water lake, and reclaim from the sea a piece of land equal to one fourteenth the present area of Holland. Though the work, which has hardly begun, will extend over some thirty-three years, each stage of it has been plotted and the cost estimated by the Dutch engineers, with the utmost exactness and thoroughness; all of which is most interestingly set forth by the writer of the article.

Extensive observation of mob action in many countries, in many periods, has shown that, irrespective of race, the aggregation of men in crowds is in and of itself, highly favorable to impulsive, unreasoning, and often violent action. Men in crowds are easily influenced by suggestion, and in the mass a sense of individual responsibility is lost. So far, then, the increasing density of modern populations is seemingly favorable to popular tumult, which might easily become insurrection or revolution. In the literature of political science there is perhaps no more familiar assumption than the one which associates all the dangers of the mob spirit with a democratic organization of great cities.

And yet a strict application of the comparative method to the study of this question does not justify the apprehension. On the contrary, a systematic grouping of observations from many parts of the world would demonstrate that the phenomena of lawless popular action, as in insurrections, lynchings, and riotous outbreaks in connection with labor strikes, are, on the whole, phenomena of rural rather than of urban populations. There have been scenes of wild violence in Paris and in London; there have been draft and other riots in New York City; but the collective violence in all the great cities of Europe and America for two hundred years would not make a great showing by comparison with the epidemics of emotion—accompanied by dancing and other manias—that surged through rural communities in connection with the great revival movements under the Wesleyans, the later revivals of 1837 and 1857, the insurrections like Shay's rebellion and the whisky rebellion, the Ku Klux Klan outrages, the Vigilance Committee activities, the conflicts between Gentiles and Mormons, the White Cap outrages, and the lynchings in our Western and Southern States.

The reason for this curious fact is undoubtedly to be found in the restraining effect of ethnic and mental difference. The rural community is relatively homogeneous. The "neighbors" for miles in every direction are nearly all of one blood. They are practically of one economic condition. For the most part they are of one religious confession or of two or three confessions not very unlike in creeds and practices. All are acquainted with one another. An exciting event or suggestion that moves one will, almost certainly, move the others. Emotion among them is highly contagious. They respond to like stimuli because they are alike. The city population is composite and differentiated. In a mixed crowd of hundreds that gathers on the street no one man of them all recognizes a dozen others. They are of all sorts and conditions, the well-to-do and the poor, and often of many nationalities. Danger arises only when discontent and inflammatory suggestion find homogeneous material to work upon in a quarter whose denizens are of one nationality and of the same economic condition, and among whom may be found, here and there, small gangs of toughs who are already disciplined in associating for lawless purposes. Only an extraordinary influence can combine the impulsive tendencies of unlike classes, differing nationalities, unacquainted neighborhoods, in one great outbreak. Such things have happened, and doubtless will happen again; but the normal influence of heterogeneity and differentiation in a population is unfavorable to collective action.—By Professor Franklin H. Giddings in the October-December Forum.

In the Outlook's Magazine Number for October the life and work of a Post-office employee form the general subject of an article by Mr. Earl Mayo, which is illustrated with special photographs by Mr. Arthur Hewitt, obtained for this purpose with the aid and consent of the Post-office authorities. Some exceedingly interesting and little-known facts are given about the methods of work in the Post-office, such as new devices for saving time and kindred matters. Mr. J. Horace McFarland is one of the most enthusiastic and skilled photographers of trees, shrubs, and flowers in the world; he is not only a skilled photographer, but an artistic photographer, and also writes in a popular and readable vein on these subjects. "The Elm and Tulip" is another of a fine series of illustrated articles on trees by Mr. McFarland, which in due time will make a book worth having. The story of the number, which may be described as a long short story, is called "Priscilla's Maying"; the author is Una L. Silberrad, who is rapidly coming into prominence as one of the strongest of recent English novelists; the story is a romance pure and simple of the old Puritan days in England. There are extremely interesting illustrated personal articles on Jonathan Edwards apropos of the bicentenary of his birth, on Tolstoi's "Marriage and Family Life" by Edward A. Steiner, and on men and things in Washington during the Spanish War, by Ex-secretary John D. Long. Jacob A. Riis's series of articles on Theodore Roosevelt, the Citizen, will begin in the November Magazine Number.

RETURN TO THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST DEMANDED.

John Watson (Ian Maclaren), a clergyman and writer of some celebrity, has by reason of much thought drifted into the following conclusions, which to us of the latter-day philosophy is both significant and striking for the reason that for now nearly three quarters of a century the "ignorant and unlearned" men whom the Lord called and authorized to preach the "everlasting gospel" have been steadily telling the people that there must be a "return to the old paths" before peace could come to the troubled waters of the sea of religious doctrines, differences, and contentions.

Many have been impressed with similar thoughts as those stirring Ian Maclaren, and they have essayed a return, but have failed; because they were either afraid to declare the "whole counsel of God" by reason of the opposing forces of opinion such a course would have been met by, or because they failed to see fully the need of a full return, and a complete abnegation of human opinions and an absolute adaptation of men to the will of God as expressed in the word.

One of the prophets of the Book of Mormon was permitted to see a time future to the day in which he was living, when there would be a spirit going out among man, causing them to become uneasy and restless concerning the things of God, and that spirit would direct them in a search after the Christ; and if they should heed the admonitions of that spirit they would be led to the "Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

There are many evidences to be seen indicating that there has been a spirit of information moving upon men here and there, which must necessarily lead them to just the conclusions which Ian Maclaren has reached if heeded. Unfortunately for the hastening of the events hoped for by all who are groaning in spirit under the adverse conditions burdening the present generations of men, there has been a disposition manifest everywhere to say as those did of whom the prophet wrote, "But they said, we will not walk therein."—Jeremiah 6:16.

Just as they said then so do they say now; and though there may be some who may follow in Maclaren's thought, unless the Messiah himself shall come, it is very doubtful if they will heed his prophets, rise they never so many.

"THE Terraced Palaces of Chichen Ytza" is a fine article in the October Autumn Leaves reprinted from Four Track News. It is illustrated with three fine half-tones. Archæologists, take notice!

We quote from the public notice of the statement of John Watson (Ian Maclaren), found in the Chicago Tribune for October 9, 1903, as follows:

WORLD ON EVE OF GREAT REVIVAL.

NEW YORK, October 8.—The Reverend John Watson (Ian Maclaren), author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," has published a brochure which expresses the belief that the world is on the eve of the "greatest religious revival since the days when all Rome succumbed to the teachings of Christ in the first century." . . .

He continues: "Except in the realm of science no real progress is being made, no great men are rising, no poets, no novelists, no painters, no statesmen, no preachers. It is an age of mediocrity and commonplaceness.

"We are tired, therefore we are restless, and Matthew Arnold's words are still truer to-day than when he wrote: 'Your creeds are dead, your rites are dead, your social order, too; where tarries he—the power who said: "See, I make all things new."'"

"What does all this mean? It means that the world is in want of something, in want of a revivifying force. If there ever was a time when the world needed this, that time is now.

"If there is one thing the Christian world needs to-day it is a repetition of that movement which passed over the Roman empire in the first century and saved society from dissolution, that movement which in literature is called the 'renaissance,' in spiritual life a revival."

The attendance at public worship, the writer declares, has decreased and daily is decreasing: the grasp of things spiritual is relaxing, and the cult of Christ's cross is fading. We are between the tides, between the creed dead and the creed to be. We are in the gray mist between night and morning.

He continued: "No serious person, whether he be a religious or a nonreligious man, can look out upon society in our day without being depressed and alarmed. There is a general unsettlement both of belief and of institutions, a weariness of the present slackening of energy, an exhausted atmosphere, which is difficult to breathe and which is apt to be charged by noxious germs."

So much from the other side of the "great deep," now for this:

Dr. Patton, the president of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Princeton, is one of the sanest, acutest minds in the whole range of theology. He never misses an essential point or seeks to avoid it because the inevitable conclusion from it would be uncomfortable to either the new or the old theology, or because it would involve an irrepressible conflict with science.

In the intellectual operations of Doctor Patton there is a courageous honesty in the direction which we often, nay, usually, miss in the new fashioned theologians. We observe in this latter-day school much timidity. They dare not go to the theological conclusions of their arguments, for these would land them in the square infidelity where really they belong. For this new theology the question of miracles is a stumbling-block. They fight shy of it, or if they venture to tackle the subject they essay to give a "figurative" explanation which leaves the miracle something betwixt a poetic imagining and a superstitious hallucination—a vision of a mind distraught or a fancy engendered by the exaltation of religious enthusiasm, profitable for contemplation as spiritual imagery, but not as a fact of history.

Doctor Patton is too honest and his logical discernment is too clear for him to deceive himself with any such subterfuge. In a sermon at the autumn opening of the Princeton Theological Seminary last Sunday Doctor Patton presented the only view of miracles which is compatible with the existence of Christianity as a religion, or as a supernatural system of divine origin.

Doctor Patton sees plainly that to deny or doubt miracles or attempt to explain them away is to give up the very foundation of Christianity as a religion and to leave it with nothing more than a basis of human philosophy and poetical imagination on which to rest. "Christianity," as he said at Princeton on Sunday, "is a piece of information given supernaturally and miraculously," or it is no more than a mere superstition, a mythology. It may exist as a moral philosophy without a supernatural birth and mission for Jesus, but it ceases to be a religion, the religion which has built the temples of worship of Christ. If Jesus was a mere man, worship of him is idolatry. And if the one essential miracle of the Incarnation is accepted, what difficulty is there in the acceptance of the rest of the miracles of the Bible, if not of other miracles dogmatically proclaimed as of subsequent occurrence?

Doctor Patton meets the issue made by scientific infidelity with a square profession of faith in miracles as requisite to Christian religious belief, and it is the only way in which it can be met. If the miracles are not to be received as historical facts, the worship in thousands of churches, the teaching in hundreds of theological schools and the hope which has inspired countless millions of mankind for nineteen hundred years and more are vain and superstitious delusions and the contest of Churches as to the possession of divine authority to teach and represent the Christian religion is a farcical controversy.

Correspondents are discussing in the Sun candidates for election as Coadjutor Bishop of the New York diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church. We observe, however, that little or no attention is paid by them to the distinctly theological position of any of the candidates put forward. It is true that their varying schools of "Churchmanship" are considered—whether they are "High" or "Low," "Broad" or "Catholic." But is not the really important question how they stand toward Christianity: whether they believe in its miraculous origin and character, as Doctor Patton believes, or regard the Bible as simply comfortable and inspiring literature to which prophets and other enthusiasts contributed visions and poetic imaginings? Is it worth while to quarrel over the title to churchly authority by right of descent from the Apostles unless there has come with the physical inheritance Doctor Patton's uncompromising Apostolic belief in the miraculous origin of Christianity as a fact of history?—Editorial in New York Sun for September 24, 1903.

If this is the same Doctor Patton, who some few years ago in Chicago prosecuted Reverend Doctor Swing out of the Presbyterian Church because of his "broad orthodoxy," we welcome the change in his courage and the methods of his advance in thought. There is no mightier miracle than that the dead rose again in the persons of Lazarus and Jesus; and if Paul could write "why should it be accounted an incredible thing that the dead should rise again," why should it be an incredible thing even now that all minor miracles should be possible to the power of God among believers?

Let the light blaze.

PATRONESSES' BAZAAR.

On Friday and Saturday, October 16 and 17, the Graceland College Patronesses' Society held a bazaar in Lamoni, and the results therefrom will net them about four hundred dollars, which will be spent in furnishings for the building which will add materially to its appearance and usefulness. The Patronesses deserve much credit for their work and sacrifices. The bazaar was a very pleasant occasion in many ways. Dinner was served on both days, and the people of Lamoni, irrespective of religious beliefs, turned out and had a very pleasant time assisting the hard working Patronesses make a success of the bazaar. Many pleasing features were presented for the amusement of the visitors, not the least among which was a baby show in which there were some fourteen contestants. The prize was carried off by the child of Mr. and Mrs. Howard White. The victorious infant is a grandchild of Bro. D. C. White, well known to many of our readers.

DOWIE IN NEW YORK.

Some idea of what Dowie is accomplishing in New York may be gathered from the following headings of a press report dated at New York, October 19: "Dowie, jeered in New York, sees Failure. Leader of Zion Host is greatly discouraged by cold reception in Gotham. Rails at his treatment." Mr. Dowie, finding his New York audiences entirely different from his Zion City congregations, towers into a rage, and hurls invectives at the New York ministers, the newspapers, and the reporters. There is probably greater disappointment in store for him. Indeed, it is not at all unlikely that his "invasion" of New York will prove disastrous to him.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. I. N. Roberts wrote from Bay Minette, Alabama, October 15, that he had a call to Atlanta, Georgia. He expected to respond to the call soon, then on to other fields. He has been holding meetings at Bay Minette, with a good hearing. One is ready for baptism, others near. He hopes a good, active local man may be raised up to care for the work and push it onward. Prejudice, he says, is quite manifest among the people, but it is giving away slowly. He is enjoying good health and is well in spirit.

I. N. White, in his quarterly report, dated October 16, says he has just returned from a trip into North-eastern Missouri District. He is still in poor health, but thinks he is gaining strength slowly. He reports the field in fair condition. One hundred and five baptisms for the quarter, fifty more than last quarter. He states there have been fewer baptisms at the reunions this year than last. The baptisms have been mostly in the field where the ministers are laboring. He says he is feeling well in the work, and that he has been greatly blessed in presenting the word,—a general report from his men. "Let God have the praise," he adds.

G. T. Griffiths, of the Oregon Mission, reports about thirty baptisms for the quarter; quite a good showing. He says the men of the ministry have rendered "faithful service and are still willing to do their part." He has spent much of his time since reaching the field in regulating affairs in some of the branches where such work was necessary. He feels that the work there is now in better condition, and that prospects are good for a number of outsiders to join us. All the men in that field seem to be actively engaged in the Masters cause.

An extract from H. O. Smith's report will be found in another place.

J. M. Stubbart, in charge of Colorado Mission, reports eight baptisms for the quarter. "In general," he writes, "the work is moving on nicely in the mission."

JOSEPH SMITH AND HIS POSTERITY.

In the Nauvoo Independent for October 17 J. W. Peterson has an article under the head of "Joseph Smith and his Posterity," in which he corrects a statement made on the streets of Nauvoo by an elder from Utah to the effect that he (the Utah elder) was a grandson of Joseph Smith. Bro. Peterson properly makes the statement that none of the posterity of Joseph Smith are in the Utah Church, nor have any of them ever been in that Church. Such grandsons of Joseph Smith as are holding the priesthood and are engaged in ministerial work are in the Reorganized Church, and, as Bro. Peterson truly says, repudiate polygamy and its kindred evils. Why should the Mr. Smith from Utah think it well to misrepresent himself on the streets of Nauvoo? Is their cause one in which deception is necessary? Bro. Peterson closes his article with these words: "Joseph Smith had four sons: Joseph, Alexander, Frederick, and David, all well known in Nauvoo. Not one of their descendants ever united with the Utah Church."

DISCONTENT IN ENGLAND.

There is much discontent in England in regard to an education bill lately enacted by Parliament, the operation of which is objected to by a great many. The following from the Chronicle, of Enfield, a town in the suburbs of London, will give a good idea as to what the objection to the law is. Its enforcement is being passively resisted, those resisting being called "passive resisters."

WHY I REFUSE TO PAY THE CHURCH SCHOOL RATE.

The Reverend Allon Poole, who is one of the leaders of the Passive Resistance Movement in Southgate, and who has himself been before the magistrates because of his objection to pay rates in support of denominational schools, preached on Sunday evening a special sermon on the subject of "Passive Resistance" at the Baptist Chapel, Southgate, some notes of which we now give.

Taking for his text the words, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's," the preacher said: There can be no doubt that we are face to face with one of the gravest crises in our national life. The land is being shaken from end to end at something new and strange. Law and liberty-loving citizens are being summoned to the police court by the thousand, having their goods seized by the bailiff, and publicly sold by the auctioneer. People who think little about public questions, and less about disputes between churches, are beginning to ask why this is. Good citizens do not submit to such indignities for the fun of the thing. They do not come into conflict with the "powers that be" "rashly, thoughtlessly, or lightly, but advisedly, reverently, and in the fear of God." These starting events are due to a base and foul conspiracy between the government, the Bishops, and the Catholic hierarchy.

During the late war it seems that managers of church schools and diocesan inspectors were busy making reports to rural-decanal meetings and diocesan conferences. Bishops and clergy were active in convocation; consultations between Ritualists and Romanists must have been frequent. The priests saw their chance had come and they seized it. They drafted the Education Act of 1902. They pulled the wires which moved their Parliamentary puppets. The wax nose of the Government was molded by their soft fingers. In a word, the Government became the mouthpiece of the priests and obeyed their will. That the Roman Catholics were in league with the English bishops is seen clearly by the frantic appeal of the late Cardinal Vaughn to the Irish party to "help the Government to triumph over the Nonconformists." But for the Irish party's response to that appeal, the Act—while yet a bill—would have been defeated again and again. Drafted by the Roman priests and English bishops, the Education Act of 1902 is the cause of the civil war now being waged. Now, what are the injustices of this Act?

(1) It sets aside the compromise of 1870. We hear often of this compromise, but very few know enough of the history of education to understand it. Previous to the year 1870 education was of a private character, and was carried on by British, Church, Wesleyan, and Roman Catholic schools. These were built out of private subscriptions and maintained by school fees and voluntary contributions. But these did not cover the ground. What was wanted then (and what is coming now) was a real system of national education. The Education Act of 1870 was framed to secure this, and then a difficulty arose. How were the existing schools to be treated? What amount of religious teaching should be given? Many there were who thought that it was the duty of the state to educate in secular matters, and the business of the church to teach religion, and that the two should be separated. But a great many saw a danger—in that a vast number of children would grow up with no religious instruction whatever, and a great many more thought that as the Church had made great sacrifices in building their schools, and would have to subscribe the balance—not paid out of the taxes—to maintain them, they should be allowed to give their own form of religious instruction. And so the compromise of 1870 was effected. The Church schools—partly supported by voluntary contributions and partly by taxes—were permitted to teach Church dogmas, and the new Board Schools were permitted to give simple Bible instruction. To that Churchmen and some of the leaders of Free Churchmen alike consented. But the Education Act of 1902 sets that agreement on one side. There, Free Church leaders were consulted; here, they were ignored. Then, Free Churchmen were comparatively weak; now, they stand equal in numbers to Churchmen, and therefore should have had more consideration. Then, all private schools were maintained by voluntary subscriptions and school fees; now, they are placed wholly upon the rates and taxes, and still remain under private management.

Without a mandate from the country, without conference with Free Church leaders, the Government have done the bidding of the bishops and set aside the Compromise of 1870.

(2) The Act of 1902 helps the clergy of the English and Roman Catholic Church to capture the children of Free Churchmen.

There can be no doubt that the clergy are not enthusiastic about education apart from the power it gives them over the minds of the children. They confess that the "sole reason of the existence of the Church School is to teach Church doctrine." They are concerned, not about turning out sharp, well-trained scholars, but minds well-steeped in dogmas which are not to be found in Holy Scripture, and can teach them that "Nonconformist bodies are not churches of God, but merely Sectarian clubs;" that "the sacraments in Dissenting hands are as fictitious as the ministers themselves;" that dissenting preachers "may be classed with Korah and his company of old." The fact is that in most—not all—Church schools, the most cherished convictions of Free Churchmen are ridiculed, satirised and travestied, and the children are made to understand that unless they enter the Church fold there is little chance for them in the next world. Cannon Pennington, a Church School Inspector, has made a most valuable utterance on this point. "In fact, we are training the children of Nonconformists to be the children of the Church." A Church clergyman—neighbor to Doctor Clifford—has said that "many a little Nonconformist has become a little Churchman" in his school. We quite believe it.

Suppose for an instant that the opposite was possible, that all this powerful machinery was in the hands of Baptists, that we were using it for our Church purposes, that our aim was to make little Church folk into little Baptists, and that Churchmen were compelled to pay for it by an Act passed without consulting them, do you think they would submit? In my opinion they would be justified in driving the country to the verge of a civil war in order to repeal it! I believe in divine right, not only of kings, but of Parliaments and peoples. Of kings to rule justly, of Parliaments to rule righteously and with equity, and of peoples to protest against oppression under what leadership they may; if not peaceably, then as they otherwise can! Of one thing I am certain, the resolute declaration of Doctor Fairbairn to Mr. Balfour expresses the determination of Free Churchmen on this question: "We will NOT submit!" The spirit of Oliver Cromwell is abroad. The leaves of the tree of the Nation's best life are dancing in the breath of Freedom. Godly men and saintly women have counted the cost, and will go forward. The compact of 1870 having been broken, Free Churchmen are no longer bound by its terms. We shall go before the compromise and later—if not sooner—we shall obtain a just settlement of a matter which has inflicted gross injustice upon Nonconformists for over thirty years.

(3) Under the Act, Free Churchmen have to pay the chief lay workers in the English Church. Who are the chief lay workers? The organist, the choir leader, the Sunday-school teachers, the officers of Boys' Brigades and the like. And who, mostly, fill these positions? The masters, mistresses and teachers in the Church day school. It is demanded of them, not only that they shall teach daily, but often on the seventh day of the week, and fag for the clergy in their spare time. They are appointed, often, conditionally upon their taking some specific Church duty. As a member of the late Edmonton School Board I have often heard from the lips of Church teachers applying for positions under the Board an expression of a desire to be free from the interference and tyranny of the clergy, and to have some spare time wherein to serve themselves. The clergyman of Withiccombe, Somerset, advertised on August 28 last as follows: "Certificated mistress wanted, November 2, able to take organ and train choir. Loyal Churchwoman; salary subject to approval by County Council, £70." That means that the vicar, "good, easy man," means to get an organist paid for out of the County rates, and Nonconformists must pay their share, and be thankful they have to pay no more.

The Education Act puts Rome on the rates. That is to say, for the first time since the Reformation Englishmen must pay to have the errors of the Roman Catholic Church taught in the Catholic schools to Protestant children. There is such a school at Wood Green, and another, I believe, at Enfield. The residents in these places are now rated for the support of these schools in order that children who are not Catholics may be taught to adore the cross, use holy water, confess to the priest, pray to the virgin, worship the bread and wine of the Lord's Supper as being his actual body and blood, and other superstitious errors. Then remember that the teachers in Roman Catholic schools are monks and nuns, bound by ties of poverty, who, after they have paid the cost of living, hand the balance of their pay over to their superiors to be used to scatter the errors of Rome more widely. Let me show you what this means. Thirty years ago there were two hundred and ninety-nine monasteries and nunneries in England. Before this year has ended there will be one thousand of them. The St. James' Gazette says that last year forty-seven new convent schools were started, and these contain three thousand four hundred and fifty-five pupils. The Roman Catholic Bishop of Southwark has just started thirty-one new missions in South London alone by monks and nuns recently expelled from France for their abominable practices. Is it for this we are to be summoned to court and sold up? Are our children to be exposed to these perils and we—their parents—to pay for their exposure? In God's name, no!

We are assailed in our dearest interests! We are asked to be wickedly false to our most solemn responsibilities! The bond between us and the great Head of the Church, and the sweet tie of parenthood alike, compel us to resist the foe! "Here we stand, and we can do no other! God help us!" We can go to the police court; our goods may be sold by public auction; we may make acquaintance with the warders of a prison, or enlist under the banner of a modern Cromwell; but to the soul-seducing act of the priest behind the Government we will not submit!

What then is the alternative? Is our policy destructive only, and not constructive? No. We are willing that the Anglican schools—where they are Anglican—should be hired until such time as the nation can build its own schools. We are willing that Bible instruction should be given in all schools, and that specific Church teaching should be given, and paid for, by the Church which demands it out of school hours, attendance at which shall be purely voluntary. We demand that the schools shall be National in the true sense, financed and controlled by the people. We ask that the cumulative vote of the School Board system shall have no place in the election of the new authority. We demand that the Board of Education shall be purged of its priestly party, and that its work shall be done—not at the dictation of an irresponsible few, but for the benefit of the people as a whole.

Only as these basal principles are embodied in a new Act and passed by the representatives of the people will Free Churchmen cease from their agitation. The Bishops have made war on Nonconformity through the Government! We accept the challenge! The tide of battle will roll on until all the religious people of the land are Free Churchmen!—Enfield Chronicle, September 18, 1903.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Does the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as a religious and corporate body hold the power to suspend from Church privileges any official member, take away his license, and deprive him of partaking of the sacrament of the Lord's supper, without giving the man an opportunity to show whether he had sinned or his accusers had blundered? Be kind enough to point in the outlaw given of God the authority for such a course.

The Church has neither adopted nor pursued such course, that we have any knowledge of.

The first law of nature is said to be, "self preservation." This right, that of self defence, inures to every class of association, secular, or religious; as well as to individuals. Every society must necessarily be the judge of the rules conducive to its own well-being and the enforcement of those rules must be left to the official machinery of the society, nor can the decision as to the justice or injustice of any given rule be left to any one individual who may perchance to come under official displeasure; to do this would be to abandon order and just subject to rule at the bidding of any disorderly or discontented person.

The Church as an association of believers, as well as an incorporate body, claims the right to try alleged offenders by its own rules, such rules as may from time to time be agreed upon as being best calculated to conserve its own unity. It finds its right to do this in its organic structure, and in the various rules found in the New Testament teaching and in the revelations to the Church during its formative period, in agreement with the principle stated in section 112, Doctrine and Covenants, edition of 1900, "of Government and Laws in general," enacted August 17, 1835, and the rule of the Church ever since. Paragraph 10:

We believe that all religious societies have a right to deal with their members for disorderly conduct according to the rules and regulations of such societies, provided that such dealing be for fellowship and good standing; but we do not believe that any religious society has authority to try men on the right of property or life, to take from them this world's goods, or put them in jeopardy either life or limb, neither to inflict any physical punishment upon them,—they can only excommunicate them from their society and withdraw from their fellowship.

The Church neither claims nor exercises the power to deprive a man of his personal rights in the Church without cause therefor. Ample safeguards for the safety of the individual have been provided so that no one need to suffer injustice who will properly avail himself of the rules prescribed. But in the pursuing of his own rights no man should or will be allowed to set at naught the rules of the Church, or defy the officials upon whom the duty of enforcement of the rules is imposed. No member can be allowed to disregard the courts of inquiry, the trial courts, or the courts of final appeal upon his whim or notion that they are in error and have blundered in their action, or to walk out of court setting the "jurisdiction of the court at defiance, on the decision of his own judgment that the court is improper. His remedy is in appeal provided for his own protection and that of the Church as well, for whatever justly conserves the good of the individual must conduce to the good and safety of the whole body.

It is not necessary for us to point out any law or part of law supporting the course suggested by the question, as to attempt doing so would be to admit what is covertly asserted in the question. There having been no such action known to us, we neither feel inclination, nor acknowledge obligation to cite precedent or law in defense; and can only express surprise that such question is asked. And were it not that we have a degree of respect for the questioner no attention would have been paid to the question.

“UNCLE MARK” FORSCUTT DEAD.

On Sunday, the 18th, President Joseph Smith received a telegram from Nebraska City, sent by Sr. Ruby Faunce, stating that her father, Mark H. Forscutt, died on the morning of the 18th. His demise follows closely on that of his wife, who preceded him to the land of rest by thirteen days, she dying on the fifth instant. The telegram stated that the funeral exercises would be held on the afternoon of the 20th.

This will be sad news to many of the Saints, as “Uncle Mark” was widely known and loved by the Saints. Nearly his whole life has been spent in the work of the ministry, and he has been the means of bringing many into the Church. He has preached the word both in this country and foreign ones. He was an Englishman by birth, being born in Manchester, on June 19, 1834. He at one time after his ordination as a high priest in 1868, went to his native country as a missionary, and he has also done missionary work in the South Sea Islands, where the news of his death will no doubt be received with much sadness.

All over the country the Saints know him by the appellation of “Uncle Mark,” which speaks well for the love and respect in which he was held by them. A man of some eccentricities, yet his earnest and faithful work for the cause which he so loved won him friends throughout the Church.

He was the founder and first editor of the Zion's Hope, and there were many issues of the paper when it was first started in which every article was something from his versatile pen, though they were signed in various ways. The readers of the Hope can not but feel that they have lost a friend to whom they really owe the existence of their little paper.

It was while he was in St. Joseph, Missouri, doing missionary work, that Uncle Mark started the young people's society there which was really the nucleus from which has grown the Religio society. The Religio people owe much to “Uncle Mark.”

President Joseph Smith, accompanied by Bishop Hilliard, left Lamoni at noon on the 19th, bound for Nebraska City, to be present at the funeral, the former responding to a request from the family to have charge of the ceremonies.

May “Uncle Mark” find peaceful rest after his long life of service in the Master's cause!

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In this issue we have made an extract from a recent letter from W. W. Smith, in which he speaks of Saints moving into the country near old Far West, and gives the names of two who would be good people to give information. It would be well for all Saints who contemplate moving to follow the advice given in Doctrine and Covenants, and consult the authorities therein spoken of. Like Bro. Smith, we believe a good work could be done by Saints moving into the country near Far West. Saints who are contemplating changing locations would do well to look at that country.

The editors of the HERALD desire to secure a copy of “Hesperis,” and are willing to pay a reasonable price. Anyone willing to dispose of his copy please address the “Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.”

Bro. O. B. Thomas, writing to Bishop Kelley, October 12, states that their branch at Cleveland, Ohio, is succeeding well in the building and finishing of their church. That the meeting on the eleventh was well attended, Bro. R. Etzenhouser, the preacher. That there had been one baptism. That the conference at Akron was well attended, business session harmonious, and all business done was in good spirit. That the first wedding to take place in the new church (as ours) was to be celebrated October 19, Bro. Vincent Schoar and Sr. Emma Warnock, being the parties most interested in the affair.

Bishop Hilliard arrived in Lamoni on the afternoon of the 14th instant. He came from St. Joseph, Missouri, having spent some time laboring in the Far West District.

A good Latter Day Saint of the Lamoni Stake, when solicited in behalf of Graceland College, displayed the right kind of spirit by promptly contributing nearly enough to pay all running expenses for one month. Nine such liberal hearted Saints could easily guarantee the running expenses for one year. Where are the other eight?

In our next issue the Senior editor partially answers the question which has been put to him so often since his return from England, “What do you think of England?” His answer will occupy about two pages of the HERALD.

We have on hands a good sermon by Bishop G. H. Hilliard which will appear in the HERALD soon. Watch for it.

In this issue our readers will find two articles written on the work of some of the representatives of the “Anti-Mormon Missionary Association.” Others will appear next week, and all will be published in pamphlet form for general distribution where needed.

The article in this issue by Bro. Rushton on “The Apostasy and the Restoration,” continued from last week, will be issued as a tract. It is a well-written article, and will be of service to the Saints in introducing the work. Send in your orders for the tract.

CHARITY TOWARDS THE SECTS.

When Joseph Smith related his first divine communication he claimed that he was visited by two heavenly personages, and in that vision in answer to his inquiry as to which of the churches represented in his neighborhood he should join he was told that he "must join none of them, for they were all wrong." And the person who addressed him said that all "their creeds were an abomination" in God's sight; that those professors were all corrupt; "they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof."

This has been used many times by his opponents to show that he was intolerant and lacked in charity towards the churches. It has also been used to prejudice the public against Latter Day Saints by making it to appear that their claims are boastful and full of egotism.

The logical mind will at once see that this is false reasoning, and that it betrays stupidity upon the part of those who use it. The question is not one of tolerance or charity, but it is one of veracity. Joseph Smith did or did not see that vision. He was or was not told what he relates. If these things did not transpire he solemnly lied in the name of the Lord. If he did see the vision and was informed, as he claimed, that the creeds were an abomination in the sight of God, it was the very highest possible exhibition of charity to inform the churches of their true condition and standing before God.

In favor of the correctness of his statement we cite the fact that though learned men rejected it with scorn, no doubt honestly believing him wrong, subsequent developments have proven that he was correct, and the adherents of all the churches in question have materially revised the creeds referred to. While doing so they have themselves used much harsher language concerning the old creeds than did Joseph Smith.

Of all the people who have sought to make capital out of the above language and thus get favor of other churches (when it was supposed to be to their advantage), at the expense of Latter Day Saints, the so-called Christians, or Disciples, are perhaps the most demonstrative.

It is therefore proper to inquire where the original ambassadors of the movement represented by them stood on the sects, creeds, etc. If it appears by the evidence that their conclusions were in harmony with the attitude of Joseph Smith, then any reflection made upon the charity or tolerance of Latter Day Saints, must recoil upon their devoted heads, notwithstanding their anti-Mormon cant.

We will commence with Alexander Campbell, and if they repudiate him we have other victims to bring forward; but if they stand by Elder Campbell, then do they vindicate the position of Joseph Smith, and their hypocritical flattery in representing themselves as defenders of all Christians as against Mormonism, is exposed.

Here are a very few of the many statements of Mr. Campbell on creeds and sects:

On examination of the history of all the platforms and constitutions of all these sects, it appeared evident as a mathematical demonstration itself, that neither the Augsburg articles of faith and opinion, nor the Westminster, nor the Wesleyan, nor those of any state creed or dissenting establishment could ever improve the condition of things, restore union to the church, peace to the world, or success to the gospel of Christ.—Christian System, by Alexander Campbell, page 5.

Our opposition to creeds arose from a conviction that, whether the opinion in them were true or false, they were hostile to the union, peace, harmony, purity, and joy of Christians, and adverse to the conversion of the world to Jesus Christ.—Ibid., page 9.

Still the question recurs, Are all religious sects works of the flesh? Paul makes no exceptions. We dare not. He speaks not of philosophic, political, or foreign factions and sects; but of those appertaining to the Christian institution. Among the Jews Paul himself was a Pharisee; among the political castes he was a Roman; but in religion he was a Christian; not a Calvinist, Arminian, or Methodist; but a Christian. Indeed, Paul himself, in his history of sectaries, or of the founders and makers of religious parties, traces all their zeal and effort to the stomach, rather than to the conscience, or the love of truth.—Ibid., page 100.

Now, we do not suppose that there is the same guilt in forming a new Protestant party that there was in first of all forming the Roman Catholic, the Greek, or any of the ancient sects. The modern sects have been got up with the desire of getting back to primitive Christianity; the ancient sects arose directly from the lust of power,—from fleshly, selfish, and worldly motives. Now, however, since we have so largely eaten of the gall and wormwood, of the bitter fruits of sects and parties, and have learned the cause, the cure, and the preventive of sectarianism, alas for all that are found keeping up the old landmarks of strife, or laying the foundation for new rivalries, partialities, and antipathies, to arise and pollute many, to retard the progress of the gospel abroad, and to foster the spirit of infidelity at home!—Ibid., page 102.

It behooves all men, then, who wish to be approved by the Lord at his coming, to be up and doing to purge and cleanse the Christian profession from every root and branch of sectarianism, and to endeavor to destroy those destructive sects that have been a sort of Pandora's box to the human race; that have filled the profession with hypocrites, the world with infidels, and retarded for so many centuries the conversion of both Jews and Gentiles to the Christian faith.—Ibid., page 103.

Compare this last statement with what Joseph Smith said was revealed to him regarding the professors.

Again Mr. Campbell says:

Our opponents can not, or will not, understand how any society can be in progress to a better order of things than that under which they may have commenced their pilgrimage. Their sectarian policies were soon formed, and the limits of their reformation were soon fixed; beyond which it soon became heretical to move. The founders of all new schisms not only saw through a glass darkly, but their horizon was so circumscribed with human traditions, that they only aimed at moving a few paces from the hive in which they were generated. A new creed was soon adopted, and then their stature was complete. They bounded from infancy to manhood in a few days, and decided if any presumed further to advance, they should be treated as those who had refused to move from the old hive. Hence it became as censurable to grow beyond a certain standard, as not to grow at all.—Christian System, by Alexander Campbell, page 274.

On the subject of apostasy Mr. Campbell takes the position that it was complete. He says:

If Christians were and may be the happiest people that ever lived, it is because they live under the most gracious institution ever bestowed on men. The meaning of this institution has been buried under the rubbish of human traditions for hundreds of years. It was lost in the dark ages, and has never been, till recently, disinterred. Various efforts have been made, and considerable progress attended them; but since the Grand Apostasy was completed, till the present generation, the gospel of Jesus Christ has not been laid open to mankind in its original plainness, simplicity, and majesty. A veil in reading the New Institution has been on the hearts of Christians, as Paul declares it was upon the hearts of the Jews in reading the Old Institution towards the close of that economy.—Ibid., page 180.

Which is the more egotistical, for Mr. Campbell to claim that notwithstanding all other efforts had failed he and his associates had discovered the meaning of the Christian Institution by their unaided wisdom; or for Joseph Smith to claim that it could only be discovered by God revealing himself? They were agreed on the completeness of the apostasy. The question was, How shall the Christian Institution be again made plain?

Under the head of "Effects of Modern Christianity," Mr. Campbell gives some of his experiences and deductions as follows:

Our greatest objection to the systems which we oppose is their impotency on the heart. Alas! what multitudes of prayerless, saintless, Christless, joyless hearts have crowded Christianity out of the congregations by their experiences before baptism! They seem to have had all their religion before they professed it. They can relate no experience since baptism comparable to that professed before the "mutual pledge" was tendered and received.

It was the indubitable proofs of the superabundance of this fruit, which caused me first to suspect the far-famed tree of evangelical orthodoxy. That cold-heartedness—that stiff and mercenary formality—that tithing of mint, anise, and dill—that negligence of mercy, justice, truth, and the love of God, which stalked through the communions of sectarian altars—that apathy and indifference about "thus saith the Lord"—that zeal for human prescriptions, and, above all, that willing ignorance of the sayings and doings of Jesus Christ and his Apostles, which so generally appeared—first of all created, fostered, and matured my distrust in the reformed systems of evangelical sectaries. Communion, with me, was communion of kindred souls, immersed into one God, that celestial magnet which turns our aspirations and adorations to him who washed us from our sins in his own blood, and made us kings and priests to God.

To sit in the same pew; to gather round the same pulpit; to put our names to the same covenant, or subscription-list; to contribute for a weekly sermon; to lisp the same opinions, extracted from the same creed; always appeared to me unworthy bonds of union or communion, and therefore my soul abhorred them as substitutes for the love of God shed abroad in the heart, for the communion of the Holy Spirit.—Ibid., pages 244, 245.

Under the head of "The Regeneration of the Church," Mr. Campbell uses this harsh and severe language:

Now, we can not set about these matters too soon. The time has again come, when judgment must begin at the house of God. The people who have long enjoyed the word of life and the Christian Institutions must soon come to a reckoning. They must give an account of their stewardship, for the Lord has promised to call them to a judgment. An era is just at the door, which will be known as the Regeneration for a thousand years to come. The Lord Jesus will judge that adulterous brood, and give them over to the burning flame, who have broken the covenant, and formed alliances with the governments of the earth.—Ibid., page 291.

Mr. Campbell and Mr. Smith agreed as to the inadequacy of sects and creeds. They differed regarding the source from which the remedy should come.

Mr. Smith's language is mild indeed compared with the harsh and intolerant language of Mr. Campbell, and yet these so-called Christian ministers who accept the philosophy of Mr. Campbell want to pose before the public as representatives of what Mr. Campbell so unjustly called "that adulterous brood." Is it not time the mask was torn from the face of such impudent hypocrisy?

If any consideration would reconcile a man to the epithet of "Mormon" it would be the fact that this crowd styles itself "Anti-Mormon." If there was not some good in what they call "Mormonism" there would be no inducement for their anti.

HEMAN C. SMITH.

UNREASONABLE MEN; OR, FALLACIOUS CRITICISMS AGAINST THE BOOK OF MORMON.

In the August number of the Helper, under the heading "The Book of Mormon," an attack is made upon that work by what appears to be the only remaining living spokesman of the Campbellite Church, and notwithstanding his name appears upon the same page, as editor, he seems so elated over his find that he further attaches his name to the article, "R. B. Neal, Grayson, Kentucky."

Mr. Neal has a wonderful faculty of discovering objections and glaring absurdities to the claims of the Book of Mormon, but his difficulty lies in maintaining them after the discovery.

The past few years he has been much like a small boy in the street casting dirt into the air; he seems to imagine himself covering over some one else with his fantastic maneuvers, but so soon as he takes a few moments to stand aside and survey the situation, he will discover that, like the boy, he is but the victim of his own folly, for instead of covering over his supposed enemy, his dirt has but fallen back upon his own head.

In this last desperate effort he is so certain that he has found a point, that he at once sits down and places in parallel columns three paragraphs from the reprint of the Palmyra edition of the Book of Mormon and a later edition of the same work. The first, reading as follows: "And he said unto me, Behold the Virgin which thou seest, is the mother of God, after the manner of the flesh." The second reading: "And he said unto me, Behold the Virgin whom thou seest, is the mother of the Son of God, after the manner of the flesh."

Upon this discovery this wonderful critic does not stop to inquire why and when the change was made so as to be able to throw some light on the matter and give information to his readers, but at once hurls his dust in the air and solemnly announces: "This fact, and the character of the changes, brands the book false. As the work of men, not of God." Now it will be well for Mr. Neal to answer this question, If the change, which he has held out as being so important, as to be useful as an item to prove the Book of Mormon "false," and the work of men only, was in fact simply the correction of a mistake of the printer who set up the work, and not that of the translator, will not that fact sweep away his objection and logically leave the Book of Mormon with such standing as it claims for itself to be entitled to, a work touching "the things of God," notwithstanding "the mistakes of men"?

The first reprint of the Book of Mormon was made by P. P. Pratt and J. Goodson, Kirtland, Ohio, A. D. 1837. In the preface of this is set out the following: "Individuals acquainted with book printing, are aware of the numerous typographical errors which always occur in manuscript editions. It is only necessary to say, that the whole has been carefully reexamined and compared with the original manuscripts, by Elder Joseph Smith, Jr., the translator of the Book of Mormon, assisted by the present printer, Bro. O. Cowdery, who formerly wrote the greatest portion of the same, as dictated by Bro. Smith."

This reprint and corrected edition, then, should have been consulted by Mr. Neal before he cried "false." In this work, page 27, this same paragraph reads: "And he said unto me, behold, the Virgin whom thou seest, is the mother of the Son of God, after the manner of the flesh."

Who compared it and corrected it according to the original manuscript? Answer: Joseph Smith, Jr., and O. Cowdery, scribe to Mr. Smith when the manuscript copy was made. These were the most competent and proper men in the world to do this work, and it must be a caviler indeed who would not permit the correction of a printer's error.

But the examination does not close here. I turn and compare with the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon and find that it reads as follows: "And he said unto me behold the virgin whom thou seest is the mother of the Son of God after the manner of the flesh." It was, without the slightest doubt, then, properly corrected.

Now will Mr. Neal stand up and look about and take his bearings and observe where his dust is tumbling, and let us know if he is manly enough in his contest to make a confession when he sees that he is wrong? Or does he belong to the class who close their eyes, "lest they should see"?

There was in fact little necessity for making this false attack upon the Book of Mormon if the party had been looking for the truth and not for an objection, true or false, against it. This is the manner in which the infidel critic attacks the Bible; but for a professed Christian to employ such weapons in his onslaught against the Book of Mormon proves that he is not only infidel to the teachings of the Book of Mormon, but as a fact also to the Bible.

The reader by turning to the preceding paragraphs in the same chapter in the Palmyra edition of the Book of Mormon, referred to by Mr. Neal, will read clearly that the personage referred to in the paragraphs claimed to have been changed, was "the Son of God;" and in the succeeding paragraphs in the same chapter he is called the "Lamb of God," the "Messiah," and "the Son of God;" yet with all this evidence before him Mr. Neal fails to discover that what he had stumbled upon was but the common error of the printer. Is he, in fact, the hope of our Campbellite brethren?

Such attacks as this against the Book of Mormon, instead of proving the work false are, in fact, further proof that it is what it claims to be. The book is thus made to fulfill the predictions made for it by the prophets in the attitude of its enemies subsequent to its publication—one of the surest evidences of its divinity.

One of the prophecies contained in the Bible referring to the coming forth of a book of an identical character to the Book of Mormon, and the work which the Book of Mormon claims to be in fulfillment, speaks also of the kind of warfare that would be waged against the book and those who received it. (Isaiah 29: 11, 12.) "For the terrible one is brought to nought, and the scorner is consumed, and all that watch for iniquity are cut off: that make a man an offender for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of nought."—Isaiah 29: 20, 21. No, these critics would not have a typographical error or printer's omission corrected in the Book of Mormon, although it is done hundreds of times with the printing of the Bible. Logical, is it not? Scorn and contempt are chief weapons hurled against it, and a man, by the critics of the work, is made an offender for a word although that word may have been a typographical error.

If the friends of the Book of Mormon were not ready and willing to examine, criticize, and defend the work openly and fairly, any place and anywhere, with both Christian and infidel opponents, there might be a little more chance for an excuse for the method of warfare employed against it. But the believers in the Book of Mormon are Christian in the highest sense themselves; in fact, there are no firmer believers in, and supporters of, the Bible than are the believers in the Book of Mormon; nor can there be, for that book teaches that the Bible is true and that Jesus Christ is the only Savior. The anti-Christian methods of the Helper, then, must eventually fail.

The Book of Mormon is supported from the following certain propositions, any one or all of which are entirely defensible, and an honorable man, whether minister or infidel, does not have to look long for some one with whom to canvass the subject in an honorable and fair manner, but he only has to send his address and name the place where he wishes the investigation to be had. If he can not call, a proper man will call upon him and look after it, the Lord helping:

1. The internal evidences of the Book of Mormon maintain the truthfulness of its claims, and its doctrine and precepts are fully in accord with the word of God as contained in the Bible.

2. The Book of Mormon is a work brought forth to the people of the present age of the world answering to the predictions of the prophets and the Messiah as contained in the Bible, and is an additional witness to that of the Scriptures, that Jesus is the Christ.

3. That the claims of the Book of Mormon are true is sustained by scientific developments and discovery in American Archæology brought to light since the publication of the work.

Is the self-styled "Anti-Mormon League" now going to look around another year for an opponent?

Mr. Neal begins his article referring to the Book of Mormon as follows: "The so-called Bible of the Western Continent." But who calls it a bible? Not the Latter Day Saints, nor any persons who believe in the book. Who, then? Simply the enemies of the work, like himself; and then after nicknaming it a bible he introduces his article with the words, "The so-called bible," etc. Is it possible that this great critic can not see that by this method of attack he is exposing the unchristian work of himself and his six colleagues? This was the method of warfare waged against the New Testament and the Christian religion in Paul's day. No wonder, then, that we find the Apostle asking the prayers of the saints, that they might be "delivered from unreasonable and wicked men." (2 Thessalonians 3: 2.) So, Lord, deliver thy children now!

"AS TO THE NAME MORMON."

A recent writer in the HERALD objects to the custom of the elders of speaking of the Utah people as "Mormons." I do not see why we should not speak of them in that way. They do not object to the name; in fact they use it, as applied to themselves, in private and in public, in speech and in printed literature.

With our people it is different. The name is repugnant to many of them. That is no reflection on the memory of Mormon, either. No more than it would be a reflection on Bro. W. W. Blair if we refused to be called Blairites. Or on any good man of the Church whose name we as a Church should refuse to bear.

Let us call ourselves Latter Day Saints and the Utah people Mormons. It will result in the world knowing us by those distinctive titles by and by. It will save confusion. It is entirely lawful that we should do so. The courts of the land have twice decided that the Utah people are not successors to the original Latter Day Saint Church. They have no more right to the name than they have to the property of the old organization. We who know this better than most people should be the last to give them the name. The name is ours by right.

"THE APOSTASY AND THE RESTORATION."—NO. 2.

BY J. W. RUSHTON.

We have already discussed the Reformation, its place, influence, and effect upon the history of man, and have seen that it did not nor could it supply that which was lost. This could only be done by God himself. So we now present evidences to show that just as surely as the baneful effect of a universal apostasy was predicted by the power of God, so also was the divine restoration; a theme that did not escape the vigilant eye of the prophet.

First of all, we introduce Revelations 14:6-7: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." We especially emphasize the following points in this remarkable scripture:

1. The everlasting gospel was sometime future from A. D. 96; to be restored to earth (a proof that it was to be taken away).

2. It would be restored by angelic ministrations.

3. No nation or people would be in possession of it at the time this gospel would be thus restored.

4. This event would take place just prior to the judgments of God being poured out.

A glance at Revelation 1: 1 informs us that a series of events shortly to transpire was shown to John. Verse one of chapter four introduces us to a new series of events which would take place hereafter, this restoration being among the events catalogued under the latter heading. We present the following references to locate as nearly as possible the time when this event would take place. (Read remainder of chapter fourteen.) We gather therefrom that this angel would come just prior to the fall of Babylon; then there transpires the end of the world or "harvest." These all clearly point to the latter days: the time just before the end. This is corroborated by Jesus in Mathew 24:14, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." The great sign to signal the near approach of Christ's second advent would be the restoration of this same unchangeable gospel to be preached to every nation; when this had been done then should the end come. The Old Testament furnishes a multitude of evidences bearing upon this, which will admit of no other application.

(Read Ezekiel 37:15-28.) These two sticks represent the two records; one of the children of Joseph, and one of the children of Israel, or the Jews. These two records were to be joined in one, for the accomplishment of God's purposes, revealed in verses twenty-two to twenty-eight, viz., the reconciling of the different tribes one to the other and all to God; that they may realize the blessings so frequently promised to them. Verses twenty-two and twenty-three show the time when this shall transpire, just prior to the restoration of the national rights and hereditary blessings to Israel. The uniting of the two records or testimonies was to prove a factor in the accomplishment of these purposes. We certainly all agree that the Bible is the record of the Jews, but where and what is this stick or record of Joseph? (Now turn to Isaiah 11:10-16.) We cull the following information; In the days of the gathering of Israel, the Lord would set an ensign for both Jew and Gentile and "unto him shall the gathering of the people be." That ensign is Christ. And, as Christ and his gospel are inseparably connected, we can readily see that in the day of this gathering it was contemplated by God to set up the "Light of the world," Christ, for the gathering of both Jews and Gentiles. (Turn now to Isaiah 18.) Here we have again the statement that an ensign would be set up; a description of the land, and its location where this ensign would be set up, also the time. "A land shadowing with wings," lying west of Jerusalem, beyond the rivers of Ethiopia (now called Africa), just before "the harvest" of "the world." Jesus defines the harvest of the world in Matthew 13:39, "The harvest is the end of the world."

We now present a summary of discoveries:

1. There would be an apostasy from the truth.
2. Sometime, subsequently to A. D. 96, in the hereafter, an angel would come from heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach to all the world.
3. This event is synonymous with the setting up of a "standard or "ensign," prophesied of by Isaiah and Ezekiel.

4. That standard is the gospel of Christ.

5. Contemporaneous with this, then, would come to light the record of Joseph and it would be joined with the record of the Jews, i. e., the Bible.

6. These events would transpire just prior to the gathering of Israel, Judah, and Ephraim, the removal of the curse for disobedience; just anterior to the coming of God's judgments, or the end (harvest) of the world.

7. The place or locality where these events would be inaugurated would be in a land west of Jerusalem beyond the African rivers.

The foregoing features stand out clearly and unmistakably in the word; they must have a significance and fulfillment.

We now turn to Isaiah 29, where we obtain proof that the foregoing summary is not a vague medley to bolster up an impostor's dream or story. The first six verses tell of the disasters to befall the city of Jerusalem; especially do the denunciations apply to the time when Jerusalem should be besieged so persistently that the invaders would not desist until they had literally razed it to the ground, only the debris of dust and stones bearing melancholy witness of the erstwhile glory. In A. D. 70 Vespasian, and after him his son, Titus, literally fulfilled this scripture, and also the one given by Christ in Luke 19:41-44. Verses seven and eight depict the condition of the nations who had been engaged in warfare against Jerusalem. The literal fulfillment of this is so tragically evident that we scarcely need to produce evidence to prove its veracity. Nineveh, Babylon, and Rome are now but names that flit intermittently across the page of history; the ancient glory and existence are but "dreams of a night vision." Verses nine and ten portray not only the obliteration of these hostile nations, but also the fact of a great spiritual lethargy and famine. The spirit of prophecy would no longer operate; neither communion with God, which ever has been the safeguard of the Church. In short, we have the state and condition of the world under the influence of apostasy clearly and concisely reflected. Verses eleven to fourteen speak of a book that is sealed which comes to light during this time, "the words" of which are delivered to one that is learned, with the request that he read—decipher it; the reply is made, "I can not; for it is sealed." "The book" then is delivered to one that is "not learned," with the same request, "Read this;" the reply is, "I am not learned." Because of the base hypocrisy manifest among the people, having a pretense of worship, hollow and insincere, the Lord says, "Behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder," a work in which the wisdom and learning of the world shall have no part; but this work of God shall be in opposition to all the wisdom of men. Verses fifteen and sixteen reflect the spirit of agnosticism and infidelity which would be rife at the time these things would take place: Men excusing the sin and evil by disputing God's existence; those not so bold and daring seeking to undervalue his matchless skill and creative power, and questioning his inscrutable wisdom and providence. If these characteristics fail to reveal the time, verse seventeen dispels all doubt. In the form of a query we are informed that just subsequent to the coming of this book and the introduction of God's marvelous work Lebanon, i. e., Palestine, shall once again become fruitful to such an extent that it would be regarded as "a forest." Then shall the blind and deaf (spiritually) see and hear. Prophecy and revelation would once again be introduced. The "sealed book" would be unsealed; i. e., interpreted or deciphered, and hence the poor among men rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. Verses twenty-two to twenty-four, show that after this the curse upon the Jews shall be removed, they returning from their back-slidings, are restored to their national rights, their faces lose the hunted, pallid look of the outcast, and instead the bright hue of health and vigor bespeak the spirit of independence, God and the Holy One (Jesus Christ) shall be sanctified and revered among them, and the gospel so long rejected by them will correct the proud spirit, and reveal the "goodness, mercy, and love of God which endureth for ever."

We now adduce a short synopsis of historical fact concerning the inception of this latter-day work, and ask you to note carefully the concurrence between prophecy and history in the restoration, as we have in regard to the apostasy. We venture to affirm that never, in all the history of God's dealings with man, has there been any event, or series of events foreshadowed by prophecy, more accurate, detailed, and astounding. Wonderful, marvelous, improbable it may appear,—but fraudulent, never.

The chief person connected with the inception and early history of this latter-day movement was Joseph Smith, the third son of Joseph and Lucy Smith (whose maiden name was Mack), daughter of Solomon Mack. Joseph Smith was born December 23, 1805, in the town of Sharon, Windsor County, state of Vermont, United States of America. He lived the ordinary life of one born of working people; the family were poor, but honest and industrious, and capable in such employment as was open to settlers of that time in a comparatively new land. Joseph was not learned, nor educated in any sense, but was illiterate. But before his death he became a good scholar for the time, was a fair linguist, writer, speaker, and grammarian. Certainly he could not have been such a lazy, worthless vagabond as his enemies say to attain even to this condition when his life was ended before he was thirty-nine years old. At the age of fifteen his mind was turned to religion, owing to the influence of a conjoint religious revival among the various sects in the town of Manchester, where this family lived at the time. He was much exercised and anxious to find out the true Church; for, what seems to be common experience, he was perplexed in regard to the matter; for after the revival quarreling ensued as to which was the right Church. Of course they each claimed to be.

The effect of this unseemly contention was to repel the boy, and created a desire in him to search the Scriptures for himself. One of the first scriptures that attracted his attention was James 1:5. Here, he thought, was the solution of his difficulties and perplexities. So, on the morning of a beautiful, clear day, early in the spring of 1820, he retired to a secluded spot in the wood not far from his home and in the spirit of prayer presented to God the desire of his heart. While in the attitude of prayer two personages appeared to him, and one addressed him by name, saying, pointing to the other one, "This is my beloved Son; hear him." He stated his dilemma, and was informed that he must join none of the Churches, as they were all wrong and their creeds were an abomination in His sight. Much more instruction was given him. In obedience to this instruction he kept himself aloof from all the religious bodies in the locality of his home, and made known to one of the ministers his reason for doing so. At once he became the subject of much bitter persecution and many inexcusable methods were adopted to prevent the influence of such a claim spreading. Hence it is very easy to account for the vulgar falsehoods circulated about him. Romances and slanders of the foulest kind were gotten up, some of which are far more miraculous and incredible than anything ever Joseph claimed; yet because they are bad, people readily believe them in lieu of the truth. Three years elapsed, when one evening (September 21, 1823) after retiring Joseph engaged in fervent prayer and had another visit from a heavenly being, all radiant in celestial glory, who said his name was Moroni, and that he had been sent of God to inform him that God had a work for him to perform; that his name should be had for good and evil among all nations; and further stated that there was deposited in a box in the earth a record written upon metal plates giving an account of the former inhabitants of America, revealing their origin, containing also an account of the fullness of the gospel as delivered by Christ unto them. Deposited in the box, also, was an instrument known as the Urim and Thummim, by which the characters on the plates could be translated. He quoted many prophecies of the Scriptures, among them Malachi third chapter, also the fourth chapter; Isaiah eleventh chapter; Acts third chapter, verses twenty-two and twenty-three; Joel third chapter, from verse twenty-eight to the end, and stated the time was at hand for the fulfillment of them. In the vision he was shown the locality where the plates were deposited, and that so distinctly that he recognized the place when he visited it. This same messenger came back twice in the same night. The visions and conversations occupied all night; for morning light had diffused itself upon the earth when the glory of the messenger had faded away. After four years, on September 21, 1827, the plates and the Urim and Thummim were given into Joseph Smith's keeping with instructions to care for them and let no harm come to them. These plates were seen and handled by eleven persons besides Joseph Smith. Three of them, namely, David Whitmer, Oliver Cowdery, and Martin Harris, had them shown to them by an angel. The testimonies of all the witnesses appear on one of the first pages of the Book of Mormon. The Book of Mormon was published in March, 1830, as the result of the translation. In February, of 1828, Martin Harris took a paper containing a transcript of some of the words of this book to Professor Anthon of New York, for him to decipher. He certified that the characters were genuine and the translation of them correct. Upon Harris' informing Anthon of the peculiar circumstances under which the plates had been obtained, he said if the book was brought to him he would read it; but, being informed by Harris that the book was sealed the Professor replied, "I can not read a sealed book." Many manifestations of God's power were experienced, besides revelations being received from him; and on the 6th day of April, 1830, the Church of Jesus Christ once again was organized by the power and authority of God, according to the primitive pattern reflected in the New Testament, with apostles, prophets, sevens, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, pastors and evangelists. The everlasting gospel once again was committed to earth by angelic ministrations, to be preached and practiced as in the days of Christ and his immediate disciples, including faith, repentance, baptism (by immersion) for the remission of sins, the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. The Spirit of God was poured out upon them in power, the gifts of the gospel were common experience (see Mark 16: 16-20); healing of the sick, blind, and lame, the gift of tongues, prophecy, etc., etc. The points of identity between the prophecies quoted and the history epitomized are very plain to be seen.

Just one point more needs emphasis; that is in the year 1852 the former and latter rains were restored to the land of Palestine, and instead of a barren waste there now is one of the most fertile and productive countries in the world. It is also notorious that the Jews are gradually losing their national ostracism and are now occupying foremost positions in financial, political, and scientific circles, besides being conspicuous in art, literature, and philosophy. It is common history that they are rapidly gathering back to their long desolate home. The great Zionistic movement can at least be valued as evidence that the time is not far distant when "the highway of the Lord" shall be established and all Israel be gathered home "with songs of everlasting joy."

I ask in face of prophetic verity and historical fact, Can we account for these strange, complete harmonies between the Scriptures, history, and the latter-day work, by calling Joseph Smith a charlatan, fraud, or deceiver? Intelligent men and women must have, and they demand, a more reasonable, honorable, and truthful explanation of this otherwise phenomenon than the traducing of the dead. Can it be that Joseph Smith by mere trickery or precocious sagacity succeeded the divine end of God's own word to perpetuate a fraud of such stupendous proportions? Never! The thousands of the poor among men who are to-day "rejoicing in the Holy One of Israel" because of the latter-day work are a standing witness against such an insult to intelligence. While the evils of Utah Mormonism have caused the work among the uninformed to be evilly spoken of, yet as it was in the early Church, so it is repeated in latter-day history, "they went out from us, but they were not of us." The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has by sheer merit and perseverance won for itself a recognition at the hands of the intelligent and fair-minded.

We feel justified, in conclusion, in claiming that, if the Bible is any guide to us upon the questions of Spiritual and ecclesiastical identity, then this work through Joseph Smith is indeed the "great and marvelous work" God pledged himself to introduce in the latter-days, in fulfilment of his own word.

Trouble.

Can not some wise one tell us,
To ease our wondering mind,
Who is it loses all the fault
That other people find?—Baltimore World.

Anger in the Morning.

"If I get angry in the morning, it spoils my work all day." That is an experience which many of us can recognize with lament for days that did not bring their full harvest of accomplishment. For each day is a new beginning endowed with possibilities of work and pleasure, but strictly limited in its allowance of energy—and especially of that highest type of nervous energy which enables us to bring out the best that is in us. Anger is an irritant, a fever. If we begin the day with it the fine flower of our vital strength is exhausted in the effort to get back to serenity and we work all day with the poorer forces of our mind and spirit. If there were no other argument for peaceful home morning hours, this of efficiency alone would be worth considering. If the son or husband robs the housewife of her serenity of soul by trying words before he leaves for his work, he has robbed his home of energy all day. If children go scolded and angry to school, they are in no mood to make the best of their opportunities. The world wants the best work and will reward nothing less than that. Our best work is none too good for the world's needs and for our own conscience. Let us not provoke each other to anger in the hour of beginnings, lest we make ourselves responsible for failure. And let us not overdo today, lest we be tempted to visit our own weariness on others to-morrow, so hindering their work.—The Congregation-alist.

The Two Wives.

In a certain city there were two wives named Gerda and Huldah. Although their homes adjoined, these wives were in very different social stations, for Gerda was the wife of a very proud and very rich man, while Hulda was the wife of a humble artisan. Gerda's house was lofty and spacious and was adorned with the most beautiful things; but Hulda's house was a scantily-furnished little cottage. The difference in their social stations did not, however, prevent Gerda and Huldah from being very friendly in a proper fashion and the two frequently exchanged visits while their husbands were away from home.

One day Hulda was at Gerda's house and Gerda said: "I must show you the painting we have just received from Paris. It is the most beautiful painting in the world and it cost a princely sum of money."

And Gerda took Hulda into an adjoining room and uncovered the picture, and for a long time Huldah stood admiring it in silence. It was indeed a masterpiece of art. Such beauty of conception, such elegance of design and such nicety in execution had never before been seen. It was a marvel of figure and color and effect.

"Is it not the most beautiful picture in all the world?" asked Gerda.

"It is very beautiful," replied Hulda, "but it is not the most beautiful picture in all the world."

Then Gerda took Hulda into another chamber and showed her a jeweled music box which the most cunning artisans in all Switzerland had labored for years to produce.

"You shall hear it make music," said Gerda.

And Gerda touched the spring and the music box discoursed a harmony such as Hulda's listening ears had never heard before. It seemed as if a babbling brook, a summer zephyr, and a wild-wood bird were in the box vying with each other in sweet melodies.

"Is it not the most beautiful music in all the world?" said Gerda.

"It is very beautiful," said Hulda, "but it is not the most beautiful music in all the world."

Then Gerda was sorely vexed.

"You said that of the picture," said Gerda, "and you say it of the music. Now tell me, where is there to be found a more beautiful picture, and where the more beautiful music?"

"Come with me, Gerda," said Hulda.

And Hulda led Gerda from the stately mansion into her own humble little cottage.

"See there upon the wall near the door," said Hulda.

"I see nothing but stains and marks of dirt," said Gerda. "Where is the picture of which you spoke?"

"They are the prints of a baby's hand," said Hulda. "You are a woman and a wife, and would you not exchange all the treasure of your palace for the finger-marks of a little hand upon your tinted walls?"

And Gerda made no reply.

Then Hulda went to a corner and drew forth a pair of quaint, tiny shoes, and showed them to Gerda.

"These are baby's shoes," said Hulda, "and make a music no art can equal. Other sounds may charm the ear and delight the senses, but the music of a baby's shoe thrills the heart, and brings the soul into communion with the angels."

Then Gerda cried: "'Tis true, O Hulda; 'tis true," and she bowed her head and wept. For she was childless.—From Eugene Field's Tales.

Putting Away Things Past.

One of the most serious problems of life is the laying down of things with which we have nothing more to do. It is hard for us to let go interests and affairs for which we have been responsible for a time, but the responsibility for which is now another's, not ours. We are apt to want to keep our hand upon the old tasks even when they are ours no longer. They seem to be part of our life which we can not lay down. The old man, when his work and his cares have passed to his sons, or to others, finds it almost impossible not to continue his hold upon things. The mother in her advanced years, when her daughters are in their own homes and she is a guest now, her old age gently sheltered by their love, unconsciously thinks of them as children still and expects not only the old honor which is rightly hers and freely accorded, but oftentimes the old deference to authority, which is not hers by right.

In other ways, too, we find it almost impossible to break with our past. It is hard to give up a friend with whom one has been long associated, when by some providence the friend is taken away from one's companionship. Perhaps it is by death. The relation was one of sacred closeness. The friend was all in our life, one with us in all tender interests, the companion of our days and nights. We had learned to turn to him for counsel, to lean on him for support, to look to him for guidance and wisdom. We did nothing without him. He was eyes and hands and feet for us. He had long absorbed our early affection.

Then death takes him from us. It is easy to read over the comforts which the Scriptures have for us in our sorrow. We may also accept these comforts and let their quieting peace into our hearts. There may be no rebellion, no insubmission in our thought. We may look forward to the after-life with sure hope of reunion. Yet it seems impossible to leave our friend out of our life, or to go on without him. Until yesterday he was in everything; how can we endure having him withdrawn from everything, every interest, every joy, every task, to-day? Yet that is the problem we must work out, for we can not bring him back again. We must go on with our work and must do it well. We must learn, therefore, to do without the companionship, the cheer, the inspiration, of the friend who has gone from us.

There are two thoughts which will help to make this possible: first, a simple faith in Christ's teachings concerning the Christian's death and the other life; second, a vivid sense of present duty. If we clearly understand and fully believe that he who has gone from us is with Christ, living and continuing his life in a higher sphere, that he is happy and blessed and actively engaged in his Redeemer's service, it will not be so hard to go on here without his bodily presence. Though we do not have him with us, cheering our earthly life as before, we have not really lost him. He is with us in all precious memories. The influence of his life broods over us and has an abiding benediction for us. We are sure of his unchanged love for us, though out of our sight, and of his continued sympathy with us in all our work, struggle, and sorrow. With such faith as this our life here will not be lonely. We have Christ and in Christ we have our friend, too, in a companionship that is full of precious joy and holy inspiration.—J. D. Miller, D. D.

ZIONISM is a subject that always interests a Latter Day Saint, especially at the present time when world events are shaping themselves to favor the Jewish dream of a land of their own. Readers of Autumn Leaves will find in the October number an instructive article on "Zionism," from the pen of Elder M. H. Bond.

Are You Helping?

How often we hear the expression, "If I had money, I would do this, or I would do that, or, If I had the ability to preach, or the opportunity or authority, possibly I would do great things. How many have asked themselves this question, and answered it honestly, Am I doing all I can under the circumstances? Are you helping the little that you can now? Or are you waiting for the time that will never come, unless you begin now, when you can do some great thing?"

Are you helping in the Sunday-school, either as officer, teacher, or pupil? If you are selected as an officer, do the best you can. If you feel incompetent, ask God daily to make you more competent; and if you are faithful, he will surely do so. This will also apply to teachers. If you are a pupil, help what you can by being faithful in attendance. Study your lessons. Come prepared. This is a big help to the teacher, and the balance of the class. You know not at the time how great. It may take years, and you may never see the greatest good of this kind of helping. Possibly you are situated so you can not help in any of the ways mentioned. Maybe a mother at home with children too small to take to Sunday-school, or burdened with other cares; but still you can help, by seeing that the children that are old enough to go, are ready for Sunday-school on time. See that during the week they have studied their lesson, as this will help both children and teacher. When you see the teacher or officers of the school, do not be afraid to give them a word of encouragement, or advice maybe; all these are helps.

Are you helping in any or all of these little ways? Or are you waiting for the time to come when you will be able to do some great thing? If so, you are apt to be disappointed, because it is those that do the little things that are fitted and prepared for the greater ones.

Discipline and Tact.

The problem of class-government is especially important to the teacher of younger grade pupils, for every intelligent instructor knows that order is the first consideration necessary to successful work. He understands that if the atmosphere of his class is not that of respect and reverence, he will have failed so far as the real spirit of his work is concerned.

THE DISCIPLINE

of the Sabbath-school class can not be modeled after the manner of the day-school class, for the same requirements do not exist. The discipline of the Sabbath-school is but little more than restrictive, and it can not be made mandatory except in a limited degree. The spirit of free moral agency can not be wisely separated from the true work of Sabbath-school instruction, and at all times the spirit of independent thought should be encouraged. Therefore the question of discipline is not so apparent to the Sabbath-school teacher as the question of how much and in what manner he shall discipline.

It is the desire and aim of every Sabbath-school teacher to bring his class-work up to such a standard of excellence that his instruction shall be beneficial and lasting. He wishes his pupils to like him and his work, the effects of which he desires shall inspire the pupil in his daily life. How and by what means he may do these is the problem that confronts him.

It is probably the experience of every teacher that, while are indispensable, they are inadequate if alone, and that there is a more subtle quality necessary which is not measured by method, but in its nature is very closely related to the use of wisdom.

It has been said, "talent is something, tact is everything." Another writer says, "talent knows what to do, tact knows how to do it." We have all seen those peculiar beings, who, as the definition of tact expresses it, seem to have "the ready power of appreciating and doing what is required by circumstances." To do the right thing at the right time and place seems to be the peculiar ability of such people.

THE VALUE OF TACT

in class instruction is too obvious to need special comment. By it the teacher may accomplish his work with far better finish and quality. By it he may present truths in such a manner as to reach the minds of some who would otherwise be listless pupils. Very often a pupil of dull, uncomprehending mind may be reached by a clever appeal to the one power of his mind that is more prominent. Again, thoughts plain and barren of interest may be clothed in such habiliments as will attract and win for themselves a reception.

Instances of tact abound. We have only to look to those who succeed and whose work is well done to find abundant examples. Its use is too important to be esteemed of little worth.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, October 6.

Editors Herald: After reading the favorable reports from all parts of the world regarding our progress and growth in membership, I think it not amiss to state a few facts in reference to the work at this place.

Our branch was organized about three years ago under most adverse conditions; there being but a few Saints here, most of them women, and persecution to be met with upon every hand. Brn. Goodrich and Beatty having opened up the work, and baptized several, we rented an abandoned church building, being the property of the North Methodist Episcopal Church. Bro. W. H. Kelley preached almost the first sermon in this room. The furniture was limited to a smoky stove and two old broken pews. At the end of the month we were ordered out of the place by the Methodist minister, who in explanation of the order, stated that he did not want us to teach anything contrary to what he taught, for some of his members might visit us and be deceived. Upon every hand we were talked about, threatened, and subjected to the vilest accusations. The Saints met together often in their houses, and through prayer and fasting sought the Lord for a way to be opened up. In a few days we were offered a hall in a building that had formerly been used for a store; and making an appeal to the district, they loaned us some chairs. Things drifted along slowly for a time, and the attendance was very poor, frequently only two and three of the Saints being out, but with untiring effort and patience Priest J. E. Matthews conducted the services, prayed with the members, and set them a noble example of self-sacrifice in the promulgation of the work.

After a year, persecution began to die somewhat, for by our strict adherence to the gospel, our consistent attitude at all times, coupled with the fact that we bore patiently with those that slandered us, and demonstrated by our faithfulness and thrift that we were not of the transient order, but that our system seemed to triumph over all that opposed us, and instead of being scattered and driven away in a month, as the Methodist Episcopal minister had predicted, we had remained with added numbers, and instead he was gone.

Many of the best people of the north end began to relax their stern views, many coming out to hear, leaving their fine and comfortable churches and coming to our poor little hall; but with all of its humbleness, they perceived a spirit and truths uttered there that were not to be found in any of the others. One man in particular, a most worthy gentleman, Bert Sherman, post-master of Station B, coming out to our meetings and learning that we had been misrepresented very much, began in a most energetic manner to defend us against our accusers. He began to read our books, and in a little while had the pleasure of being able to put any to flight that opposed his stand in the matter. And this thing in itself did a most worthy service for us; for as he was not a member, and as yet is not, his views could be expressed with a candor and directness that we brethren dare not attempt. Bro. Sherman, as we all call him, stated to the writer recently that when he wanted to feel at home in church he always came down to the little hall and mingled with the Saints; that there was nothing in the other churches for him any more. We have great hopes that he will be a brother in all that the word implies, in the very near future.

We now have a membership of about sixty-five, most all of whom are active, and who are respected by all they come in contact with, persecution having almost died out; and while our growth has been slow it has been builded in a manner that makes it certain. We now have one of the nicest meeting places in this city, outside of regular church edifices. We have repapered and decorated our hall, installed electric lights, will soon have natural gas for fuel, and in the language of one of our visitors, "Why, we would never have known the hall! Just think how it used to look when you people first moved in! It just looks fine!" On last Friday the writer baptized two, and Bro. Matthews will administer same ordinance to another very worthy woman, who is a sister of Bert Sherman. Many others are very near the kingdom, and the whole outlook is the most encouraging the writer has yet experienced.

On Sunday, October 4, we were visited by Saints from Middletown, Dayton, Creola, Jackson, Wellston, about thirty-five being in attendance. The day was spent in a sacrament, prayer, and testimony meeting, followed by a preaching service.

Sacrament-meeting was presided over by T. W. Wrenn, of Middletown, Ohio, assisted by J. E. Matthews and E. E. Long. The prayer and testimony meeting was presided over by A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, assisted by the writer. Many beautiful testimonies were rendered, and the Spirit was strongly in evidence, and all testified of the mercy of God, and the divinity of this grand latter-day work. After an intermission of a few minutes. Bro. Kirkendall preached, assisted by Bro. Long, and preached a sermon that will long live in the memory of all who heard it. In beautiful language he portrayed the beauty, the harmony, and certainty of this work we are engaged in, proving that we have the Church in theory, in organization, and in the power of the Holy Ghost.

We have been encouraged and greatly benefited by the visit of these brethren, and the Saints of the Most High, and feel that we can go into the battle with renewed vigor from now on, and the Saints of Columbus, Ohio, feel deeply indebted to all those in attendance for their words of comfort and the fellowship we have in Christ Jesus.

We may all receive the great blessings that are at the end of the race for those who love God and keep his commandments, is my prayer.

GILCHRIST, Illinois, October 10.

Editors Herald: This is a little mining town, and about two years ago the first sermon was preached by the Latter Day Saints. A little union chapel was at that time being occupied by Christian and Methodist Episcopal ministers. Virtually wedging our way in between times we kept working away, feeling that there were some here who would obey soon. O. H. Bailey and writer arranged for a series of meetings. As time passed the people here received the ministrations of Brn. J. Arthur and Evan Davis, Cushman, Murdock, Patterson, and Dickey. Without entering into details I wish to say that we were privileged to administer the ordinance of baptism to five adults, Sunday afternoon, September 20. A very pleasing feature worthy of mention is that husband and wife went together in two instances, viz., Bro. John Fassnacht and wife and Bro. George Sachfield and wife. The other was Sr. Della McKellip, of Viola. Earnest study and careful investigation bring results, and in this instance results are visible. Some of this number have already received rich blessings; the same we believe as are in store for each one who honestly obeys the truth. The Saints have truly had a season of rejoicing, as God fulfilled his promises to those who obey. The world may cry deception; but what of that in the face of such glorious evidences? I shall say nothing regarding these people other than I have the utmost confidence in their integrity and fully believe they will some day speak for themselves. Neither will I be surprised to hear that special work has been given to some and their talents required in the Lord's work directly. My heart is gladdened as I listen to their expressions of joy as they relate their new experiences. May God help them to be faithful with all the Saints.

For the past week I have been assisting Bro. Bailey in getting his house repaired, and am here over Sunday and expect to continue in these regions if opportunity shall permit. Last night I listened to a lecture against Romanism, subject being the "Convent." The speaker surely had a "bad" subject and he put on no gloves in his work. The aim of the speaker is to show the very many instances in which the power of the papacy is dominating in the affairs of our country,—an eye-opener to those who may think that the "mother of Harlots" is asleep. The speaker was William Clark, a young man of ability—and while we do not agree with all his methods, we are willing he should pursue his course, feeling that we have a better one.

With an earnest prayer for all of God's children, that they may prove by their conduct that they are his children, I am

DEER LODGE, Montana, October 8.

Editors Herald: A few lines from the Rocky Mountains in Montana may not be amiss at this time. My last to your columns was in the month of May. I have been trying to do what I could since that time in connection with D. L. Allen, of Kirtland, Ohio, who has been associated with me since June 27. I have not much that is flattering to report from this field; neither do I wish to be understood as speaking or writing discouragingly of it. Perhaps the work in Montana is in as good condition now as at any time in the past. A great deal of the kind of work we have done the past quarter was to make an effort for a week, advertising and inviting the people out to services on Saturday evening and Sunday, only to be disappointed at the appointed time for service in meeting a very few who had come out to hear the preaching; many things more attractive than the gospel to keep them away.

We are pleased to report seven baptisms of late administered by the writer, with the name of one more given and perhaps others to follow in a few days. Four of the seven baptized, John W., Andrew E., and Gardner G. Catron and their aged mother, of Adel, Montana, have been investigating this latter-day work for more than ten years; only one of them, Gardner, ever heard a sermon preached by a Latter Day Saint minister, and that was years ago; but he was so impressed with what he heard he never forgot it. The "incorruptible seed" was planted in good soil. As a result from that planting, with the aid of the Church papers, SAINTS' HERALD and Ensign, which they have been taking and reading for a number of years, four noble souls were born into the kingdom of God. I found these good people in one of the most favored places in Montana for grazing stock. Judging from their past history, as related to me by them, the Lord's guiding hand has been over them, directing them in more ways than one; evidently they have been directed, guided to their present location, where they are blessed above their neighbors, in temporal things, in that they have the best of the land, some twenty-three sections of it. And their cattle, horses, and sheep are numbered by the hundreds. I am fully persuaded these brethren are wholly converted to the Lord, soul and pocket-book, judging from the liberal contribution handed to the missionary on his departure and the hospitable entertainment given him while there. May the good Lord prosper and bless them in the use of such things, as will result in good to them and their fellow men. The other three, Mrs. Spragg, Mrs. Smelser, and Miss Irene Davis, all of Elliston, are fine people, and will no doubt be an honor to the cause. There are others who have expressed belief in the latter-day work, and I hope to see or hear of them being numbered with us at no distant day.

We have never got a shot at those wild animals we mentioned in our last, but it is not too late yet; we have seen several deer and antelope, but they would not stand still long enough for me to shoot at them. The streams out there are full of mountain trout. Bro. Allen and I have had enjoyable times catching them when we had nothing else to do.

We have quite a program mapped out for future work. It is hard to tell how well we will be able to work it. I am pleased to say I am enjoying better health than for some years in the past; for which I am very grateful to my heavenly Father. I feel like doing what I can in return in assisting to build up his kingdom and establish his righteousness among the sons of men.

J. D. STEAD.

NEWARTHILL, near Motherwell, Scotland, September 25.

Dear Saints' Herald: I have read many very interesting letters in the HERALD, and am strengthened and encouraged by having done so, for there is indeed much good spiritual food in them. I am only young in this Church, but was a member of the Salvation Army for a number of years, believing as I did that they were the people of God. But I was somewhat dissatisfied in regard to baptism. I saw the necessity of it, and never found rest until I heard this gospel preached; then I was willing to do my Savior's bidding, by being born again. My heart can not express the gratefulness I feel to God for all his love and mercy towards me and mine; for since coming into this work I have been made to realize that this is indeed God's work.

I wish to relate a circumstance which has greatly confirmed me in the faith. Some little time ago when I came to live at this place, I tried to let my light shine by telling my neighbors of the gospel plan, and as might be expected met with some opposition, more especially from the sect known as Plymouth Brethren, who are pretty strong in this place, as they are all through Scotland. So one night I attended their meeting and they said that they would prove to me, if I would come the following Wednesday night, that there was no longer any need of apostles. I went home and thought the matter over whether to go to their meeting again or not, when on the Friday night I made it a matter of prayer, as I believed God would guide me in the matter. I went to sleep, but was not asleep long before I had the following dream: I was shown that the work I had embraced was true, and a voice spoke to me, telling me I was to attend aforesaid meeting, but I was not to go alone, but was to bring Brn. Joseph Arber and Robert Munro with me. I felt glad to know that our heavenly Father was willing to hear and answer my prayer, for I verily believe he knew best. I wrote to the brethren and they came, and we attended the meeting. Surprising to say, their lesson for the consideration of the above question was the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles.

One of their leaders opened out trying to show that there was only the original twelve and the choice of Mathias was the doings or work of the other apostles. When pressed by Brn. Arber and Munro, as to whether they thought God would allow them to do so important a thing, and him not guide them, as the record says they prayed and said, "Thou, Lord which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen," and the lot fell upon Mathias and he was numbered with the twelve. Then they tried to prove that an apostle must of necessity be an eye-witness to the resurrection of Jesus Christ. When asked, Were Paul, Barnabas, Silvanus, Timotheus, and Apollos eye-witnesses to the resurrection of Christ, they really did not know before there were so many apostles, and denied it, until it was clearly shown that they were apostles. Other things were mentioned; but as the time was up they closed their meetings, but not before Bro. Arber announced that on Friday week all being well, we should preach upon the question of the Kingdom of God, what is it, and where is it to be found? The meeting was held in the Muirs Hall, where Elder R. C. Evans so beautifully discoursed upon the above subject, as he was visiting here along with our beloved President Joseph Smith. I have been pleased to meet these men, as I can truly say they are men of God. We have continued these meetings and hope to do so, with the help from Brn. Rushton, Thorburn, Arber, and Munro. Trusting good will result, I ask the prayers of all the children of God in our behalf.

Your brother in Christ.

ROBERT MURRY.

STOUCX CITY, Iowa, October 12.

Editors Herald: We here are doing, I believe, the best we know how, and I believe the work is steadily though slowly advancing. Like others, we have times of sunshine and of clouds.

Our meetings are better attended, although for a place of this size our attendance is not large, but from one half to two thirds better than a few weeks ago. Another matter of encouragement is, we have a goodly number of young people here now who are attending and taking hold of the work.

We were slightly discouraged for a time on account of three of our best workers moving so far away that they can not attend our meetings at all, leaving the Sunday-school without a superintendent and the Religio without a president, vice-president, or chorister. This loss has been to some extent replaced by others moving into the city. Bro. A. L. Premo and his family of six, all members of the Church, have come from Adrain, Minnesota. Bro. and Sr. Conklin from Decatur, Nebraska, Sr. Jones from Mondamin, Iowa, Bro. Calhoun and family from Akron, Iowa, and Sr. Fictland and son George have returned from the Dakotas—twelve in all since losing the three before mentioned. If we can so live and keep our meetings and branch in such a condition that those coming can find a spiritual home with us in this busy city, I believe we will do pretty well.

While we have not held a series of meetings this conference year as yet in the city, we are at present holding six regular meetings a week, and all of them are well attended, comparing the present with the past. At present we have two regular places in the city to hold preaching services and expect to establish another this week. The difficulty is that all this has to be done on Sunday, and this makes it hard on the missionary, to do about a week's work in one day. But the Lord so far has enabled us to do it. I do not wish to be understood this is the only day we labor. But it is the preaching day.

The general health of the Saints has been good. Bro. M. S. Gidd has for a number of years been a sufferer with a cancer just below his right eye; he has been administered to a number of times and has tried several remedies but still suffers patiently. I would ask the Saints to remember him in their prayers.

Sr. Fictland has been very near death's door. The doctor said when first called about one week ago that she could live but a few hours at the most. But through administration and the prayers of the Saints and friends she is still with us and, we trust, recovering.

The writer's health is better than a month ago, but not so good as usual yet. But we all are hopeful and by the help of God will do the very best we can.

This latter-day work is dearer to me as the days go by. May the God of heaven and earth bless his people in every land in my earnest prayer.

The Methodists are holding their annual conference of the Northwestern Iowa District here in the city. I should like to attend but can not spare the time from my own work. I see through the papers they too have some things that are not pleasant to meet. So it goes; we all have our battles to fight.

I find here what to my mind is an advantage to Saints. That is, there is plenty of work of all kinds and good, fair wages paid for labor. But to me the best of it all is, a man to get work does not have to join any union or organization; he is left free.

There has not been a strike in the city nor scarcely even talked of, and under present conditions there could not be one of any note. The most I have seen or heard along this line has been in regard to the unions quarreling among themselves, but I have not seen any of this for a week or ten days, so I guess all is sailing smoothly now.

I am confident that if this mission is sustained, the day is not far distant when a good and great work for the Church will be done here in this city. But it can only be done by wise and patient, saving labor and standing right by it through prosperity and adversity. For both are sure to come, especially the latter. This will call for a good, wise, humble, faithful missionary to be placed here and devote all his time to the city. Yes, there is work enough for half a dozen such men right here; but if we can have only one we will be satisfied. May God bless his Church and people evermore.

Yours in the conflict.

KERR (Old Far West), Missouri, October 13.

Dear Herald: It may be of interest to some to know how the work progresses in this part of the field. We are able to say more truly, God is in the work. We closed the tent work last night and stored the tent to-day in the barn of Bro. Samuel H. Simmons here at Kerr.

We began operation in the district tent at Palo, Missouri, on July 18, Bro. Arch E. McCord assisting. Soon the enemy began to rage, but we had the pleasure of baptizing three precious souls as a result.

From Polo we moved the tent to Mirabile, August 3, where Brn. Alma Booker and Arch McCord held forth for two weeks. Bro. McCord was called home on account of sickness and Bro. Booker assisted me a few nights and he had to attend to work, laboring for the bread that perisheth, but without which we would perish.

I continued the work at Mirabile till August 24, when we moved the tent to Stewartsville for the Northern Missouri reunion which began August 28 and closed September 6. Rain following the reunion prevented us from moving as soon as we desired to, but on September 17 we left Stewartsville with the tent destined for Kerr, where I write from at present.

Arriving on the 18th I opened up the tent work, Bro. W. E. Summerfield having preceded me some days to represent the tent till it came, and Ephraim was "the tent" till I got there.

We continued to hold forth jointly till September 28, when Bro. Summerfield left me, going to Huntsville, Missouri, to district conference of the Northeastern District.

I continued till October 1, when I closed the meeting for three nights to go to Stewartsville to district conference and convention.

On Sunday morning, October 4, I drove from Stewartsville to Kerr, with Bro. George L. Swenson, Bro. Sloan and I being passengers with Bro. Swenson. At quarter past twelve I had the pleasure of baptizing three precious souls in Shoal Creek, one mile north of the old Temple Lot, Bro. Alma Booker assisting throughout the day.

We continued to declare the word of truth, and on Wednesday last, we were joined by Elder J. S. Roth, who was visiting his daughter who lives here at Kerr; he assisted very materially, and yesterday—Sunday—Bro. B. J. Dice, vice-president of the district and missionary, also assisted, preaching the afternoon discourse. At eleven o'clock I, assisted by Brn. Roth and Dice, ordained Bro. Samuel H. Simmons to the office of priest. At half past seven in the evening Bro. Roth spoke on the judgment; this closed our tent work for this season.

Yours in bonds,

WALTER W. SMITH.

BLUEMOUNDS, Wisconsin, October 12.

Editors Herald: I noticed in the last issue of the HERALD an article on the name Mormon, signed "W. M.," that contains some very good thoughts. I have long been of the opinion that it was a mistake for our people to refer to the Utah Church as the Mormon Church. The idea seems to obtain among some of the brethren that there must be a Mormon Church, and not wishing to assume the name themselves they insist that the "other fellow" must be a Mormon.

Why not take the position that there is no such thing in existence as a Mormon Church. It is only a nickname and if used at all, let it be applied to those who are most deserving.

To the outsider who has not investigated our work the name Mormon naturally conveys the idea of a believer in the Book of Mormon, and I am sure no true "Josephite" is willing to concede that the Utah people are better believers in the Book of Mormon than we are, especially when Brigham said "We have outgrown the book as a boy outgrows his jacket."

And have we not always contended that the Utah people have departed from the teaching of the book in the practice of polygamy and other heresies? It seems to me that their claims to the book, if they have any at all, are rather meager.

Pray tell me where is the consistency of going before a prejudiced public referring to them as "Mormons," classing them as everything that is bad, and then trying to defend the claims of the Book of Mormon?

It seems to me to be a case of putting the rope around our own necks, at least so I have found it in my own experience. Says one, They have accepted the name themselves. Very true, and to my mind, by so doing they have demonstrated their shrewdness. To illustrate: Some time ago in the city of Minneapolis the writer had occasion to enter into a little discussion with two of their representatives at the close of a service they were conducting on the street, and among other things one of them said "The greatest favor you 'Josephites' can do us is to call us 'Mormons,' for it was a nickname that was given to the original Church, and by using it on you unwittingly tell the world that we are the natural continuation of said Church."

Brethren, what can be plainer than that? Some time ago I noticed in the Prophetic News a letter written by quite a prominent brother in our Church, wherein he made a statement like this: "Any Latter Day Saint who will permit himself to be called a 'Mormon' and not resent the insult is bringing disgrace on the Church," and to prove his position, he gives a definition (found in some dictionary) of Mormons: "A sect founded in 1830, by Joseph Smith, later settled in Utah." Well, suppose the dictionary did say so? Is the dictionary infallible? Why not admit all the old, worn out encyclopedia and school history stories too?

But let us see what the dictionary does say. The one to which I refer says: "A sect founded in 1830, by Joseph Smith, later settled in Utah." Nothing is said about the Reorganization. Is the brother willing to indorse this statement in its entirety? It seems to me that our brethren who make use of the term Mormon with reference to the Utah Church are admitting that the Church has actually followed the name Mormon out into the "valleys of the mountains," and as for us, well, we are simply not under consideration.

Brethren, it seems to me that if we would refrain from using the term Mormon in connection with those people over there and show to the world by godly walk and conversation that we are doing the Master's work, let the nickname fall where it may, that the time will come that we will have no fear of being insulted by being called a Mormon.

I believe that the above subject is one that should attract the attention of at least the ministry who are out before the world, that they may exercise prudence to our benefit.

DOWN, Kansas, October 11.

Dear Herald: I thought a few lines from this part might be of interest. We have a small branch here but it is not very active. Father, mother, three sisters, and myself belong to this branch.

I know this work is true. I have received so many blessings since I came in the Church over five years ago. I do not want to give up but try to do my duty. We take the Ensign and Hope, and a dear sister in the Church sends me the Autumn Leaves. I would not like to do without any of them. I have been trying to scatter tracts and papers to get others interested. My health is poor, but other blessings are so many I ought not complain. I want to go on and make a good, useful woman.

Your sister,

MYRTLE COOP.

DETROIT, Minnesota, October 11.

Dear Herald: We have just returned from our fall conference. We left home October 2, and drove across the country to Friberg, reaching there at quarter past five in the afternoon, where we were most hartily welcomed by Bro. and Sr. Elliott and Bro. and Sr. Kidder, parents of Sr. Elliott. Here we also found Bro. L. G. Wood of the missionary force. I copy from Wheelock's Weekly:

"MEETING AND SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION IN FRIBERG:

"RUMSEY, Post-office, October 5, 1903.

"The usual humdrum of country life was relieved from Thursday evening to Sunday evening by religious service. The Latter Day Saints' Sunday-school convention convened Friday morning and adjourned Friday evening, three sessions being held. The semiannual district conference of the same denomination began Saturday forenoon and closed Sunday evening with a vote of thanks to the Saints and neighbors in this locality who had so kindly welcomed them. The traveling ministers present were Elders E. A. Stedman of Lamoni, Iowa, also president of the district, A. A. Baker of Logan, Iowa, L. G. Wood of Woodbine, Iowa, and T. J. Martin of Detroit, Minnesota. Several interesting sermons were preached and all enjoyed themselves very much in spite of the inclemency of the weather. The home of Joseph Elliott was thrown open for their reception and two sessions were held there on account of the rain. Their next conference and reunion with a Sunday-school convention will convene at Fergus Falls, June 10, 1904, which will continue over two Sundays. Elder Wood and Baker remain here and will continue services the remainder of the week in the schoolhouse."

Owing to the rain the attendance was small, but the meetings were full of interest from beginning to end. The Sunday-school convention was very interesting and profitable, and at the prayer service the Holy Spirit was there to bless. Sunday morning was ushered in with a snow-storm. At the prayer service of which the writer had charge he was prompted to sing that hymn "God moves in a mysterious way," and as we sang "Behind a frowning providence he veils a smiling face." The sun shone out filling the room with light and the hearts of the Saints were cheered by the presence of the Spirit. The preaching was instructive and above the average. Monday morning came the parting, and it was with regret that we said good-by. At the close of our Sunday evening meeting two small girls, daughters of Sr. Evans and granddaughters of Elder H. B. Fay, sang in a very creditable manner "God be with you till we meet again."

We had a good trip home, notwithstanding the fact that the writer had a horse lame from a wire cut, but the horse is doing finely now. Bro. Stedman and Srs. Albertson and Jepson came home with the writer. We stopped at Sr. Byron McLeod's on our return and were made welcome to dinner by herself and daughter Addie. When we reached home we learned that a serious accident had befallen the son of Bro. William Nunn and husband of Sr. Grace (Sherman) Nunn, met with while driving the delivery wagon of the Blanding Norby Company. Surgeons were called upon to dress the ugly wound in the groin. The lad is doing as well as can be expected and no serious results are looked for.

Tuesday morning we again separated, Bro. Stedman going to Audubon, Srs. Albertson and Jepson returning to their home at Frazee, and Bro. Penn W. Martin taking his place as foreman of the grand jury. Tuesday afternoon we were again called away to preach a funeral sermon at Pelican Lake over the body of Mrs. Hawkins, daughter-in-law of Sr. Gregory. The day was stormy and I contracted a cold from which I have not entirely recovered.

THOMAS J. MARTIN.

Extracts from Letters.

J. M. Miller recently wrote from San Bernardino, California: "Sr. Anderson, a sister to J. C. Clapp, is in the hospital here and not expected to live. She has undergone a serious surgical operation, which lasted about three hours. Tumors in the stomach was the trouble. Nothing but the power of God will save her. May God's blessings be with the afflicted ones."

Under date of August 22, Bro. C. A. Butterworth wrote to the First Presidency as follows: "We are sorry indeed to think that the departure of Bro. Wight is so near at hand, for he has been a good help to the mission since arriving. I have been building a house, and the hard manual labor seems to have been a great blessing to me, for my cough has nearly gone, and I can again speak without such awful distress."

E. H. Durand in writing from Rhoda, West Virginia, says: "I have been holding meetings in this section for some little time. Opened up a new place in Big Springs, four miles from here; as a result baptized Mr. Wilson, who I think will make a good worker for the cause. His wife is a member of the Church, an earnest worker, and a splendid Saint. A Mr. Kirkman has been here and made an effort to destroy the work in this part. He uses R. B. Neal's tracts and the publications of the Anti-Mormon Missionary Association; but he has failed. There are several more about to enter the water, and I look for a revival of the work in this section if the Saints will do their duty."

Brn. A. Carmichael and W. E. Peak wrote from Anaheim, California, October 11: "Debate with Campbellite just closed. We are satisfied with the result."

Bro. John Heide writes from Fulton, Iowa, October 12: "We have a very fine interest here. The tent is crowded to its utmost. Four were baptized yesterday. We think more will follow."

Writing from Kerr, Missouri, which is near old Far West, on October 10, Bro. W. W. Smith says: "If a few good families of Saints will locate here, the work will soon be on a safe basis. Either Samuel H. Simmons, R. F. D. No. 7, Cameron, Missouri, who lives at Far West, or T. J. Sloan, who lives in Cameron, Missouri, would be good people to confer with."

E. M. Parker wrote from Amos, Arkansas, October 13: "The few scattered sheep down here in Northern Arkansas would be glad to have some of the elders call on us and do some preaching in this part of God's vineyard. Surely some will come out of Babylon if they have the chance."

In his second quarterly report Bro. H. O. Smith reports ninety-two baptisms in his field. He writes from Independence, Missouri, October 14: "The baptisms exceed any other quarters' report since I took charge of the mission. There is much agitation on the debate line. Elder Nichol, of Campbellite faith has been met and vanquished at Redmoon, Oklahoma, by Bro. H. Sparling. Another debate is already dated to take place in Eastern Oklahoma between Bro. Case and a Campbellite, Colons by name. A debate between Elder Chism, of the same faith, and one of our ministry is pending at Lydia, Texas. Two others, one a Campbellite, the other a Millennial Dawn man, are on the warpath in Southwestern Texas, and altogether the outlook is encouraging. My force is not so large but the men are all alive to the situation and are occupying acceptably wherever they can."

Conference Minutes.

Little Souix.—Convened at Woodbine at 10.30 a. m., October 3, James Crabb presiding, assisted by W. A. Smith, James D. Stuart clerk. Statistical reports from all of the branches of the district were read showing totals as follows: Number at last report 1499, present number 1580, a gain of 85 by baptism, 29 by letter and vote, a loss of 28 by letter and 5 by death. Six ordained to the priesthood. The spiritual condition of the various branches fair, good, and in some cases excellent; all improved. The Bishop's agent notified the conference that Bro. C. J. Hunt from Gallands Grove District would begin labor this month in the interest of tithes and offerings and asked for coöperation with him in this work. Also urged that the various branches interest themselves in raising funds for the Kirtland Temple. The conference was in harmony with these suggestions. Seventeen of the priesthood reported 580 services attended, 356 sermons preached, 292 other services held, 87 baptized, 6 ordinations, 5 marriages solemnized, 22 children blessed, 123 sick administered to, besides many other services performed not specifically mentioned. Bishop's agent reported $153.53 on hand at last report, $500.96 received since, total cash $654.49; disbursed $550.61, leaving a balance of $103.88 due church. Had also received and disbursed $38.11 on account of tent work and $20 received and sent to Bishop for Graceland. Brn. J. C. Crabb and W. A. Smith reported receipts and expenses for conducting tent services. All of above accounts were audited and found correct. A resolution was made sustaining the district secretary and district presidents in locating and bringing into branch membership all scattered members. The Sunday-school and Religio each reported successful and profitable conventions. Logan was chosen as place for holding next session and February 6 as the time. The preaching and social services were spiritual meetings and largely attended.

Northwestern Kansas.—Met near Osborne in gospel tent, September 5, at 10 a. m. J. F. McClure and S. J. Madden presiding, F. E. Taylor secretary pro tem. Branches reporting: Rural Dale 48, Homestead 80, Goodland 12, Scandia 32, Twin Creek 29. Ministry reporting: S. J. Madden, T. E. Thompson, F. S. Ward, F. E. Taylor, John A. Teeter, and S. A. Madden. Report of district treasurer, L. F. Johnson: Amount on hand and received, $6.90; disbursed, $7.05; amount overdrawn, 15 cents. Report of Bishop's agent, F. S. Ward: On hand and received, $166.23; disbursed $166.23. The following officers were elected for one year: President, S. J. Madden; secretary, F. E. Taylor; treasurer, Sr. Olive Ratcliff. Preaching during conference and reunion—which followed—by J. A. Gunsolley, Ammon White, S. J. Madden, J. F. McClure, Fernando E. Taylor, F. S. Ward, and S. A. Madden. Two were baptized, J. A. Gunsolley officiating. Adjourned to meet for next conference with the Twin Creek Branch, December 6, 1903.

Southwestern Texas.—Convened at Pipe Creek Schoolhouse, in Bandera County, Texas, September 4, 1903; Elder W. S. Macrae, president of the district, in the chair, W. H. Davenport and Ruth Gifford clerks. Elder H. O. Smith, missionary in charge, was by vote placed in charge of the conference. Minutes of the last conference read and approved. Branch reports: San Antonio 84; Medina City 56; deaths 3, gain by baptism 3; Bandera 43. Ministry reporting: H. O. Smith, W. S. Macrae, D. S. Parmer baptized 4, J. P. Neal, W. H. Davenport, S. S.

Smith, and O. D. Johnson; Priest A. R. Wheeler. Elder D. S. Parmer, Bishop's agent, reported: Received, $12.88; paid out, $6.35; balance on hand, $6.53. Committee appointed to audit reported as received $12.98 instead of $12.88 as reported, leaving a balance on hand of $6.63 instead of $6.53. Officers elected: W. S. Macrae president, D. S. Parmer vice-president, W. H. Davenport clerk, Ruth Gifford assistant clerk. Bro. D. S. Parmer was sustained as Bishop's agent. A Sunday-school was organized in connection with the conference by W. S. Macrae. Preaching by Elders H. O. Smith, W. S. Macrae, and S. S. Smith. One baptized by S. S. Smith. Next conference will meet at San Antonio, December 18.

Western Nebraska.—Friday, September 25, at 2.30 a mission conference was held at Minatare, Nebraska. The following officers were chosen to preside: F. A. Smith, chairman; R. O. Self, assistant; J. L. Detrick, secretary and treasurer; S. D. Payne, chorister; and Sr. Barkdall organist. Missionaries reporting: F. A. Smith, R. O. Self, W. Prettyman, S. D. Payne, J. L. Detrick, and D. W. Shirk. All reported interest good in their fields of labor and felt more than paid for the sacrifices they had made. The Lord by his Spirit was manifest to a degree. Those in charge of tents reported all expenses paid. The reunion was a success, the Spirit of the Lord was manifest throughout, both in preaching of the word and at prayer services, as also in the singing. The discourses on the two covenants, the difference between Latter Day Saints and Mormons, and also the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon was pronounced grand and sublime. Twenty-five services were held. Two were baptized and four children blessed. By unanimous vote a reunion and mission conference will be held next year. J. L. Detrick, C. W. Prettyman, and S. D. Payne were chosen as committee to make arrangements.

Southern Nebraska.—Conference convened at the Saints' church at Wilber, September 27, 1903, Elder J. W. Waldsmith in charge, C. H. Porter secretary. Ministerial reports: Mark H. Forscutt, J. W. Waldsmith, Bishop's agent, reported: On hand at last report, $63.33; money received from all sources, $440.74; paid out, $192.58; on hand, $248.16. Statistical reports were read from Nebraska City, Shelton, Eustis, and Blue River Branches. Report of Sunday-School association was read, showing 8 schools, 275 members; money in treasury $1.92. C. H. Porter reported as district historian. Report of M. H. Forscutt as district secretary was read and his resignation tendered; on motion his resignation was accepted and a vote of thanks given for service rendered. W. M. Self was elected district treasurer. Adolph E. Madison was ordained an elder by Brn. J. R. Sutton and W. M. Self, and Brn. J. W. Waldsmith and Mark H. Forscutt were authorized to ordain Harmon Higgins an elder at the earliest possible time. Sr. E. W. Orr was chosen district secretary. Words of instruction and encouragement were given by Bro. Sutton and responded to by Brn. Self and Waldsmith. On motion J. W. Waldsmith, C. H. Porter, and Sr. J. S. Myers were sustained in their respective offices. A vote of thanks was tendered to the Saints of Wilber for their kindness. Preaching during conference by Brn. Madison, Goldsmith, and Sutton. Six were baptized, Bro. W. M. Self officiating. Adjourned to meet with the Blue River Branch subject to the call of the president in January, 1904.

Independence Stake.—Convened at the First Kansas City, Missouri, Branch church near Twenty-fourth Street and Wabash Avenue, September 12 and 13, 10 a. m., G. H. Hulmes presiding, assisted by W. H. Garrett and J. D. White, W. S. Brown, sec. After singing and prayer President Garrett made a short address, after which A. H. Parsons, E. Etzenhouser, and F. C. Warnky were appointed a credential committee. Upon motion E. L. Kelley together with other visiting brethren were given the privileges of the conference. E. L. Kelley, G. H. Hilliard, R. May, and A. White offered encouraging remarks, after which the report of credential committee was received by the body. Ministerial reports: Melchisedek, including high priests and elders, 27; Aaronic, including priests, teachers, and deacons, 30. Of a total of 13 branches all reported, showing a net membership of 2,381, a gain of 110 during the past six months. The report of stake secretary was accepted by motion. The report of stake bishop was adopted by motion as was also that of the auditing committee. Statement from February 28, 1903, to August 31, 1903: Balance on hand last report, $644.05; total collections since, $6,275.10; balance due bishop, $61.75; total, Bishop May then presented a proposition concerning the building of churches within the limits of the Stake, the text of which is as follows: To adopt a system by which all the members of the Stake could join hands in building houses of worship. Any branch wishing to build, to furnish ground, with the approval of the bishopric, also appointing their building committee together with the bishopric of the Stake; this building committee to formulate plans and cost, submitting same for approval of high council, and if approved a general call to be made by bishopric on all members of the different branches to contribute to the erection of said building, same to progress as fast as means are forth coming, and when completed to be dedicated to the Lord; which carried by amending to read, after the words high council, "or stake conference." A motion carried that so much of the provisions of the article just passed which relate to the assistance of churches be made applicable to churches in process of building and in debt in the Stake. A request of Bishop May that B. J. Scott be his second counselor was granted and the brother appointed. By motion the next stake conference will be held at Independence, Missouri, on second Saturday and Sunday in March (11 and 12) 1904. Preaching by Bishops E. L. Kelley and G. H. Hilliard and Apostle Joseph Luff, at Academy of Music, Sunday, September 13.

Convention Minutes.

Idaho.—The Sunday-school convention was called to order at Hagerman by Superintendent Sr. J. A. Condit. An organization was effected, Sr. J. A. Condit being chosen to preside and Bro. and Sr. Pender as her assistants. Bro. J. E. Vanderwood chosen assistant secretary, Sr. Pender organist and chorister with two assistants. A short time was devoted to prayer service in behalf of the great Sunday-school work. After this the minutes of the previous convention were read and approved. Reports from the different schools showed that the schools were prospering. Also reports from the Home Class work. Reports from the treasurer and district superintendent were read. At the afternoon session several papers were read, followed by discussion. It was decided to hold the next convention at the place of the district conference the day preceding. A short program at the evening session closed the convention.

Pottawattamie.—Convened at Hazel Dell, September 25. Prayer service from 10.30 to 11.15. Convention, called to order by Superintendent J. A. Hansen at 11.15. Jennie Scott, secretary. Official reports, also school reports were read from Council Bluffs, Underwood, Crescent, Grand View, Hazel Dell, Carson, Fontanelle, and Wheeler. Treasurer reported a balance on hand of $11.55. Instructive remarks on, "Why we are interested in Sunday-school Work," by Bro. J. P. Chrestensen. Paper, "Difficulties in Sunday-school Work," followed by discussion. Instructive and beneficial program on Sunday-school work, interspersed with music, was rendered in the evening. No special business was brought before this convention, but a peaceful session remained through the entire service. Adjourned to meet Friday previous to and at the same place as the February or March district conference.

Minnesota.—The first convention of the Minnesota District Sunday-school association met at Friberg, Friday, October 2, in charge of L. G. Wood, district superintendent. Opening address by Bro. Wood, followed by short prayer and testimony meeting—the theme being Sunday-school work. P. W. Martin then read a paper, "Our first convention," prepared by Sr. Della Hawley. Meeting then adjourned until afternoon. At the afternoon session the minutes of last meeting were read and approved. Schools reporting: Star of Hope, Clitherall; Frazee; Bemidji; North Star, Audubon; Forest Leaf, Rumsey. Reports from district superintendent and treasurer read and secretary's bill presented and allowed. Treasurer reported as follows: Receipts, $5; disbursements, 61 cents; balance on hand, $4.39. Paper, "Special Days," written by Sr. Sue Hawley, read by Sr. Eleanor Whiting, and discussed. Reading by P. W. Martin. District superintendent reported one new school organized at Cormorant. Present district officers were sustained. Next convention to be held at Fergus Falls—the time subject to call of district officers.

Appointment of Bishop's Agent.

In and for Western Nebraska and Black Hills in South Dakota. To the Saints and friends of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in and for the foregoing named territory. Please take notice that at the Reunion of the Saints in the unorganized territory above referred to, at Minatare in September last, a resolution was passed requesting the appointment of a Bishop's agent on the part of the Bishopric of the Reorganized Church and the recommendation made of Elder R. O. Self, whose permanent address is Nebraska City, Nebraska, for appointment.

The Bishopric takes pleasure in making the appointment of Bro. Self as agent in and for this territory and the same will be entered upon the Bishop's books for the present as Western Nebraska and Black Hills District.

We hope that the Saints and friends in this part of the Lord's mission field will show such interest in maintaining and publishing the gospel work in their assistance and aid to the agent as shall soon develop the territory into one of the first mission fields of the Church.

Trusting the Lord will remember and bless each one who labors to this end, in behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, IOWA, October 13, 1903.

Correction.

An error in the copy furnished caused the HERALD of October 7 to say that a daughter was born to Bro. and Sr. Jaspersen at Lamoni, Iowa. It should have said, at Independence, Oregon.

Died.

FORSUTT.—At her home in Nebraska City, Nebraska, October 5, 1903, Sr. Mark H. Forsutt passed peacefully away, surrounded by her entire family. Bronchial trouble caused her death. Sr. Forsutt, nee Unsworth, was born at Bolton, England, December 25, 1835, and in early childhood joined the Church. In March, 1860, she married Elder Mark H. Forsutt, and to them have been born three children, Mrs. Amy Parr, Mrs. Lee Faunce, and Zenos Forsutt. In 1868 she was one of a party who traveled to Utah with a hand-cart train, but she never united with the Utah Church. In 1866 Bro. Forsutt was compelled to leave there, and two years later Sr. Forsutt followed him to the States. In 1876 she took her family to Nebraska City, and began business as a milliner, in which she continued up till her death. As wife, mother, friend, and member of community she leaves a record which is highly worthy of emulation. Her relatives and friends mourn the demise of a noble woman. Funeral services from the home, October 8, at 2 p. m., in charge of W. M. Self. Sermon by Fred'k M. Smith. The remains were interred in the city cemetery.

DANIEL.—At the home of her parents, Bro. and Sr. L. F. Daniel, 1106 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, September 24, 1903, Sr. Nellie May Daniel, aged 20 years, 2 months, and 6 days. She was a member of the Central Chicago Branch; was baptized May 10 last. Services at the home by Elder E. J. Lang, and at Plano, Illinois, by Elder F. M. Cooper. Interment at Plano.

KAIGHIN.—At San Francisco, California, October 3, 1903, Charles J. Kaighin. Born at Salt Lake City, Utah, April 18, 1855. Married to Mattie M. Price September 6, 1883. Baptized June 13, 1897, by Elder J. B. Price. Ordained counselor to Bishop C. A. Parkin at Oakland, September 6, 1900, by G. T. Griffiths, A. H. Smith, and J. F. Burton. Funeral from his late residence, 1588 Fell Street; short sermon by C. A. Parkin, assisted by Elder J. M. Terry.

SHREEVES.—Sr. Sue Shreeves departed this life October 12, 1903, at Columbus, Ohio, aged 69 years. Baptized at New Philadelphia, Ohio, September 15, 1895, by Elder John Cramer. Interment at New Philadelphia, Ohio, October 14, 1903. Funeral sermon by Elder V. M. Goodrich. She had a hope of a better resurrection. She selected the hymns to be sung at her funeral, and requested that an elder of the Saints preach her funeral sermon. Husband and four children survive her.

BOUSH.—Bro. Albert Boush was born in Germany, June 6, 1831, and passed away in Oakland, California, October 10, 1903, aged 72 years, 4 months, and 4 days. He came to the United States in 1861 and located in California. He was afflicted in body, but true and faithful in spirit to the restored gospel; honest in deal, faithful in testimony, paying his tithes to the Lord; faithful in life and honored in death. He was buried from the undertaking parlors in Oakland, the services being well attended by Saints and friends. The service was in charge of Bro. F. W. Wells, the sermon being by J. M. Terry. He leaves a wife as chief mourner. Peace to his tried spirit.

DAVIS.—Richard E., at his home near Angola, Kansas, September 27, 1903, of Bright's disease. Was born November 9, 1865, at Monroe, Sevier County, Utah; moved to Kansas with his parents, B. H.

and Margaret Davis, in 1870; was baptized March 10, 1879, by R. H. Davis, and confirmed by William France. His desire was to live and he exercised faith in God to the last, but submitted to the will of our Father. He was a faithful member of the Church, an obedient son, a kind and patient companion. Wife and two children mourn his departure. Funeral sermon by Elder Westervilt.

BURLINGTON.—Elder John Burlington, Jr., born July 4, 1860, in Glasgow, Scotland, died September 14, 1903, at St. Joseph, Missouri after a long illness. Was married in February, 1880, to Sr. Mary Butler, in St. Joseph; to them were born eleven children, eight of whom were present when he passed away, three having preceded him to the grave. He was a provident man and by means of life insurance leaves his family in comfortable circumstances for the battle of life. Funeral in charge of Brn. William Lewis and G. W. Best. Interment in Mount Mora Cemetery.

BUELL.—Gertrude N. Buell, of Lookingglass, Oregon, October 13, 1903. Was born March 31, 1877; baptized July 18, 1898, by A. M. Chase, at above-named place. She had been on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Nettie Archer, in Oklahoma; was taken sick while visiting Sr. McCullah in Pond Creek, Oklahoma, and died after ten days illness, of typhoid fever. Father, mother, three sisters, and three brothers remain to mourn her departure.

GARDEN.—At the home of her sister, Mrs. Edward Maxwell, Cadillac, Michigan, September 28, 1903, Sr. Sarah Garden (nee Kennedy), after a long illness, aged 45 years and 19 days. Was born in Canada in 1848 and had belonged to the Church over twenty years. She leaves to mourn her departure an aged father and mother and many friends. Her remains were laid to rest in Maple Hill Cemetery. Services were conducted by Elder A. Whitehead.

AND NOW, WHAT DO YOU THINK OF ENGLAND?

The scenes and the events witnessed by any person in passing through a new country under any circumstances must be more or less kaleidoscopic, especially so where such passing through is restricted to short stops in any one locality and pursued with a special object in view, such as the one which actuated President Evans and ourself in our late visit to England. The primary object of the visit was to see and become acquainted with the brethren of different localities, the missionary and local force, and become as conversant as opportunity would permit with the needs of the various localities through which we passed. So much was seen, and, necessarily, so little observed, that it can only be told in fragmentary portions from time to time as opportunity or necessity may demand referring to the things experienced on the visit.

First. We were cordially welcomed by the brethren wherever we went; we found the brethren earnestly holding to the faith and in places more or less active, as the temperament of the laborers and the opportunities of the localities permitted.

In London the local brethren are widely scattered, and their place of worship is practically an out-of-the-way place, except for the few, and is not where there is any extended demand for the preaching of the word as held by us. Bro. T. J. Sheldon, at work in the mission, together with Bro. Worth, late president, and Bro. Clift, acting president, with other officers of the branch, and brethren not officers, including Bro. Thomas Bradshaw, probably the oldest member of the Reorganization in London, and his younger compeers, are doing what they can. Their labors are more or less restricted by the absolute necessity of constant labor to provide for the necessities to existence in a great metropolis like London. House rent and the demand for food are inexorable and must be met, or, in the language of the street, "Out you go!" We occupied in London at our first visit and upon our return before taking boat. The interest among the brethren was good. Of that we could make no complaint. Some difficulty was in existence, which Bro. Evans was able by good advice to partially allay if not altogether compose. We hope the latter will be the result.

At Lydney, our first call from London, we found a small band of Saints meeting in their own chapel,

THE Church Library needs the July, August, and September numbers of the World's Work, to complete the file. Who has them to spare?

AN electric car on the military railroad between Berlin and Zossen, Germany, recently traveled at the record-breaking rate of one hundred and twenty-five miles per hour. Who can say when the limit will be reached?

under the care of Bro. Thomas Griffiths. By conversation with him and others we gathered that it was their opinion that no permanent success could be achieved there unless it was by the persistent effort of some man located for a time. The movement might meet with success. There is no active persecution, but an indifference to spiritual things, which seems not to be specially confined to Lydney and vicinity, but traces of which may be found throughout the entire British Isles wherever we traveled, and may not be referred to again in these reminiscences.

At Cardiff the brethren spent considerable effort and money to create an impression upon the public that would bring attention to our work, in the spacious hall which they had procured. To the disgust of the local brethren this effort was but partially successful, as but few greeted the visitors from the West on the occasion of our visit there. Bro. Thomas Gould has been persistently holding the fort as best he could. Their numbers are few. We here met a number of the Utah eldership, who seemed to be quite indignant that we should persist in the position the Reorganization has assumed that the United States should look to President Young as the author of the introduction of plural marriage into the religious systems of the United States. This same disposition upon their part was found in other places in England, Scotland, and Wales where we visited; and we met them at Leicester, Sheffield, Leeds, Manchester, Glasgow, and other points of our itinerary. The misfortune of those whom we met is clearly that they are not informed touching the absolute history of their own organization, whether it is the result of willful ignorance on their part or too implicit reliance upon "counsel."

The effort at Manchester developed the fact that there was scattered through the city a number of earnest people gathered into separate nuclei miles apart and easily reached, where efforts were being put forth to reach the people, and with a degree of success that must necessarily bring good results by and by. The sowing in any field of any enterprise is necessarily tedious, and sometimes the sower is by sheer weariness or inattention led to sow carelessly and inadvertently, leaving gaps in the sowing which are not discovered until the grain approaches the harvest. But the brethren sowing at Manchester are doing well, and from the efforts put forth we believe that time will show that the sowing has been more or less carefully done, and the harvest will be by and by. It seems to us that we could meet no kindlier treatment anywhere than was extended at Manchester; and the efforts of the local brethren, culminating as this did in the reunion meeting of the various branches in coöperative halls, must give the work more than a favorable attention from those who were willing to visit from the outside. It was certainly a triumph of persistency, the accomplishment of the part of the Sunday-school and the branches resulting in a full house in the afternoon and evening of the day in which the banner was unfurled. While the banner was but an insensate thing of silk and paint, it was nevertheless an expression of sentiment and principle that never die; and we can with truth congratulate the workers who so carefully wrought and so painstakingly gathered the mites constituting the fund which produced the banner.

The Editor was unable to attend all the meetings held at Manchester and the different points where the little chapels are located, but President Evans was equal to the occasion, and from what we gathered of his efforts he maintained the cause well, and we know that he was grandly supported by the presidents of the different branches. There is a feeling of unity which we were pleased to witness, and believe that under careful administration it will not only continue, but increase. We believe that President Rushton will with careful management be enabled to continue a good work at Manchester and its vicinity.

A similar condition of things, so far as attracting the public attention is concerned, we found at nearly every place we were, with notable exceptions at Nantyglo, Leeds, Birmingham, Manchester, as the principal points. Wherever we went, however, we found the brethren alive to the situation, quite willing to exchange views with our Utah cousins, and prepared to defend the positions of the Reorganization, either in private conversation or in public upon the rostrum. We believe, however, that a little kinder spirit might be manifest in dealing with the question of the departure from the faith than some of the brethren seem to be willing to exercise by reason of the denunciation which they hear from the people in the West, who seem to think that the cry of "apostate" is a sufficient answer to every inquiry, which it very clearly is not. Men can not apostatize from that which they have never acceded to, which the people in the West seem never yet to have gotten through their brains nor in their philosophy.

From what we gathered at the different points where we visited we were pleased to discover what we recognized to be a spirit of mutual concession and consideration for each other's views that must be conducive to final unity, while at the same time there is a sufficiently pronounced assertion of individuality that must necessarily prevent the taking captive of our people by adventurous or unscrupulous leaders. With this we could certainly find no fault, neither do we think any need to.

The conference passed as a spiritual oasis in a great desert perishing for the word of the Lord. It has seldom been our lot to meet with a better class of minds, or those who are more readily in subjection to the spirit of an occasion like that which gathered us. From every point whence the brethren came they evidently brought with them an earnest desire that the truth and the truth only should prevail, no matter by whom it was presented or by whom opposed. They were free men, endeavoring to defend the gospel which makes men free, without fear, undue favor, or affection, the main question being, What is right? If there was any complaint that could be made it would be upon the question whether it might not be practicable and beneficial to observe some of the things which were expedient, rather than to insist upon too strict application of the letter of the law. But this we find everywhere, and it is not confined to the field over which we were journeying. We are impressed with the thought now, as we were then, that the conference at Leeds would be productive of great good to the Saints, and as a consequence be fraught with possibilities for good to them that are without. In the carrying out of the resolution to meet at Leeds there was an expenditure of means which was cheerfully borne.

Second. The monetary and economic questions in the British Isles presented an aspect but partially understood on this side of the water, the condition of which very materially affects the effort to advance the cause over there. The laboring population are struggling with the proposition to maintain themselves in the necessaries of life. The industries in many places are barely holding their own, so far as may be judged from appearances; and some are slowly perishing, for what reasons a stranger may not be able to say. This condition of things is aggravated to some extent by the new educational law, the provisions of which seem to place the control of schools in the hands of the state church and the Catholics, though what are called the Nonconformists are in the majority numerically. We have given elsewhere from a clergyman the reasons why he opposes the taxes involved in the new law. The question raised by this new phase of the educational bill is of absorbing interest, as there is added to the taxes imposed the question of personal right, which is always dear to the British subject; and if he is compelled to pay for the support of religious institutions in which he is not interested, it arouses the old antagonism, and many are resisting it in a passive way which may presage an active campaign against it. But of that it is not our province to predict. We only note its effect to a certain extent upon our labor over there; for everything which detracts the attention of the people is calculated to add to the difficulty of getting a hearing. Our people are unable to pay for the use of halls in suitable places and the advertisements necessary to call attention to our labor. This confines their efforts largely to a sort of personal canvass and to outdoor meetings. Usually in places where these outdoor meetings may be held there are labor meetings and the discussion of the educational bill with other questions of like meetings to attract the people's attention at the same time and place; as for instance, at Sheffield, there were no less than four speaking from respective sides of the pedestal upon which some memorial monument was erected. This meant four crowds, in close juxtaposition, being addressed by four men at the same time. And while our speakers received a fair proportion of attention, it is difficult to estimate the amount of good that may have resulted. This is likely to occur at any place where outdoor speaking is allowed by the police authorities.

Third. Whoever visits England must necessarily notice the universal solidity and apparent building for all time of everything that he sees. The public buildings, the offices, railways, roads, and bridges—everything—evidence the fact that whoever engineered them had in view their permanency. In this respect the old country is far in advance of the new; though in returning we noticed that the railways in the eastern part of the United States are building their public appurtenances something after the same style of architecture. Whether they are doing this from the results of observation of their working in the old country, or otherwise, it is an excellent thing. The primary cost of such buildings may be greater, but they are longer continuous and less liable to repair, and in the long run make up for the extreme cost of construction.

In the matter of roads the fact is that England has had something like two thousand years or more to perfect her public conveniences in the way of roads and streets; and it would seem difficult to improve upon them as we saw them. This facilitates transportation by horse-power and gives better results for the means employed, one horse doing the work of four as compared with America, except in few instances in the cities. In their efforts to secure human life on their railways and tram lines they have made great success, and persons who will pay reasonable heed to the public notices at the stations and the instructions of the guards will escape being put in jeopardy anywhere. We can not remember to have seen a railway crossing at grade during all the time we were in the Islands; nor are passengers allowed to cross the "metals" except by passageways provided by the railways, either by bridges over or subways under the tracks. This may seem odd to strangers; but a little observation and the following of one's nose in pursuance of instructions soon make it a matter of course, and they are no longer strange. The compartment cars, of which we have seen so much objection from many of those who have visited England, so far as the interurban traffic is concerned, are a convenience rather than a hindrance to rapid transit. A car with six or seven compartments in its length, each of which will hold from ten to twelve persons sitting opposite each other, and passing in or out of the doors on the side, opening upon and level with the platform, can be just as easily emptied, and as well, as a car with one compartment. Seventy persons walking out of seven doors leading out of seven different compartments simultaneously can certainly do this in less time than the same seventy could passing out of one door at the end of a car, or of two doors, one at either end of a car containing the same number of passengers. In the long distances over which we traveled there were sufficient conveniences in the cars, known as corridor cars, to avoid any extreme inconvenience or trouble. Their ticket system is different from that in America; but so far as any inconvenience to the traveler is concerned, we can not see how they are really more inconvenient than our own system. Their baggage system is not so secure or handy as our own; and yet if one is wide-awake and willing to pay "tips," he need not have his baggage go astray. The officers of the roads are polite and even friendly, taking pains that persons do not go astray, and giving information pleasantly and usually in terms easily understood.

Fourth. One of the excellent things to be observed in the old country is the respect which is paid to law and the almost inevitable enforcement of police regulations. We can say this without saying that the laws are better than in our own country; but it simply means that the laws are better enforced, and infractions thereof not looked upon with the degree of leniency that they are in this country. The average Englishman is a great stickler for his personal rights, and where these are involved, any departure from the law is at once complained of by him and the offender is brought to justice or given an opportunity to prove himself innocent. The papers are full of constant statements of infractions of law, and persons are fined or imprisoned almost without mercy, and, necessarily, this is followed by apparent or real respect for the legal enactments of the state.

This may be sufficient for the present, and as opportunity may occur impressions may be presented in answer to the question, "What do you think of England?" In brief, we answer, We like the country and like the people, as a rule.

There was no summer, or scarcely any this season, the weather for the most time being wet and cold and dreary; but it is a beautiful country to look at. The people are great lovers of flowers, and flowers abound everywhere; every public garden, park, gentleman's residence, and even country cottages and village houses where they have a little plot of earth, are garnished with flowers in endless variety. It is not an uncommon thing to see workmen pass after their work is done, grimy and in their working clothes, yet carrying home beautiful bouquets in their hands with which to grace the tables where they may eat their frugal meals. More anon.

By telegram from J. W. Peterson to F. M. Weld, dated at Adrian, Illinois, October 24, we learned of the death of Daniel Tripp, who died from lockjaw. The funeral was held on Sunday the 25th.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

W. H. Kelley reports from the Rocky Mountain Mission, October 19: "Since September 13 I have visited points in Idaho, Spokane, Oregon, San Francisco, and Oakland, California. Returned here Friday evening last and joined Bro. A. M. Chase in Sunday's service. Weather is fine here and interest at chapel increasing. Street meetings are still being kept up with good interest. To the baptisms reported by Bro. Chase I add five, making fifteen in all. Brn. Hansen and Swenson have gone on a trip south of Provo. On their return they will labor at Provo, here, and in and around Ogden, for the winter. Bro. Chase will be here largely. Brn. Pender, Condit, Vanderwood, and Layland in Idaho. No change in Montana. Altogether the outlook seems more hopeful than it did. But we are surely doing something. The new tract 'Plural marriage in America,' is doing a good work. There are lots of them being read and they are going all the time."

F. M. Sheehy in his report for the quarter, dated October 20, says: "We have a sort of a wave in chapel building. New ones are under way in Washburn, Mountainville, Birch Harbor, and Lamoine, Maine. A new one Attleboro, Massachusetts, and an addition to the one in Fall River; a project under way for one in Boston Branch; a new one in Brooklyn. I expect to leave for Maine in a day or so to attend the Western Maine District Conference, and probably attend the dedication of two churches. More men is the cry with us: Taking all things into consideration, we are not discouraged, and progress is our tocsin."

U. W. Greene, in his last quarterly report, dated October 15, writes: "Arrangements have been made for a discussion between Bro. R. M. Elvin and Ira C. Moore, of the Church of Christ; time not definitely settled, but about November 1. Mr. Bridwell, of "Anti-Mormon" fame, is anxious for a discussion, and Bro. F. M. Sheehy will care for the interest of the Church. We have not heard from Bro. Briggs yet. Many are anxiously awaiting his coming. He should be in the mission. There is no trouble of any moment in this part of the mission. We have planned for an active campaign in new fields this fall. Saints in Cleveland have purchased a beautiful church building, and the work is on excellent footing there. Twelve thousand and ninety-three visitors have passed through the Temple to date this year. I go into Southern Ohio this week, expecting to remain during the remainder of this year. Am well and rejoicing in the work of God, and move forward with confidence of ultimate success."

F. A. Smith reports one hundred and thirty-three baptisms in his mission the past quarter, with six branches and one district organized. He says: "Upon the whole the summer's work has been a very good one and the men have been busy. Bro. G. H. Hilliard traveled with me about three months through Iowa, Minnesota, and North Dakota. I have been blessed in my work and feel well in spirit, and have been blessed with good health the greater part of the time."

Original Articles.

WHO IS LOYAL AND PATRIOTIC?

Quite frequently the charge is made that Latter Day Saints are not loyal, but that they seek to establish a government of their own, independent of all civil governments.

None are more forward in circulating these and other accusations than are our friends of the Disciple or Christian Church. We think it proper, therefore, to set forth here the evidence that will disprove these allegations.

It may be true that individuals have made unpatriotic expressions which savor of disloyalty, or treason; but such are not in harmony with the revelations found in the standard books of the Church. It may be that an organization calling itself the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has taught disloyalty, or had treasonable intentions, but if so, such organization is in this as well as on other points, in a state of apostasy from the faith as proclaimed by its early defenders and revealed in its sacred books.

We neither defend nor apologize for such; but we do affirm that every true Latter Day Saint is bound by the immutable constitution of the Church to sustain the government in which he lives, and especially the Constitution of the United States.

The Book of Mormon sets forth that Nephi saw in vision the Gentiles who were to come to this land, now called America. He says of them:

And I beheld the Spirit of the Lord, that it was upon the Gentiles; and they did prosper, and obtain the land for their inheritance; and I beheld that they were white, and exceeding fair and beautiful, like unto my people, before they were slain.

And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles who had gone forth out of captivity, did humble themselves before the Lord; and the power of the Lord was with them; and I beheld that their mother Gentiles were gathered together upon the waters, and upon the land also, to battle against them; and I beheld that the power of God was with them; and also that the wrath of God was upon all those that were gathered together against them to battle. And I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles that had gone out of captivity, were delivered by the power of God, out of the hands of all other nations.—1 Nephi 3: 37, 38.

The believer in the Book of Mormon is therefore committed to the conclusion that the Spirit of the Lord was with the Fathers of the Republic in their struggles to free themselves from the mother country, and establish an independent government on this land given them as an inheritance. No Latter Day Saint can fail to recognize that God authorized and appointed the organization of this the Republic of the United States. Should Latter Day Saints desire the overthrow of this government, they would from their own standpoint desire to overthrow a government directly authorized of God. Such an idea could not be entertained by any sane person.

In support of this position and in extension of the principle involved, a revelation received through Joseph Smith in August, 1833, said:

And now, verily I say unto you, concerning the laws of the land, It is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them, and that law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before me; therefore, I, the Lord, justifyeth you, and your brethren of my Church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; and as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these, cometh of evil. I, the Lord God, maketh you free; therefore, ye are free indeed: and the law also maketh you free; nevertheless when the wicked rule the people mourn; wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men, ye should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these, cometh of evil.—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2.

So Latter Day Saints are commanded to sustain the Constitution of the United States, and to seek diligently to place honest, wise, and good men in office, and uphold them there in the execution of constitutional law. Latter Day Saints also recognize that in case of controversy as to the constitutionality of law that the Supreme Court of the United States is the court of last resort, and the constitution of the Church requires them to abide its decision.

In harmony with this is a revelation given August, 1831:

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until he reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

The Divine inspiration which prompted the writing of the Constitution of the United States is still more clearly expressed in a revelation bearing date of December, 1833:

And again I say unto you, Those who have been scattered by their enemies, it is my will that they should continue to implore for redress, and redemption, by the hands of those who are placed as rulers, and are in authority over you, according to the laws and Constitution of the people which I have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles, that every man may act in doctrine, and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which I have given unto them, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment. Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10.

Comments are almost useless. No man who believes these statements to have been prompted by divine inspiration can ever lift his hand against the government founded upon the Constitution, which God declared he had "established" by the hands of "wise men raised up unto this very purpose." On the contrary he is expected to defend and maintain that government with his life if necessary.

No wonder that Joseph Smith, through whom these manifestations came, should declare that "Congress, with the president as executor, is as Almighty in its sphere, as Jehovah is in his."—Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 396.

Nor is it strange that the Church in expressing its opinion "of governments and laws in general," should declare:

We believe that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments, and that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming every citizen thus protected, and should be punished accordingly; and that all governments have a right to enact such laws as in their own judgments are best calculated to secure the public interest, at the same time, however, holding sacred the freedom of conscience.

We believe that every man should be honored in his station: rulers and magistrates as such—being placed for the protection of the innocent and the punishment of the guilty; and that to the laws all men owe respect and deference, as without them peace and harmony would be supplanted by anarchy and terror: human laws being instituted for the express purpose of regulating our interests as individuals and nations, between man and man, and divine laws, given of heaven, prescribing rules on spiritual concerns, for faith and worship, both to be answered by man to his Maker.—Doctrine and Covenants, 112: 5, 6.

It is said that comparisons are odious; and doubtless they sometimes are to somebody; but under some circumstances they are necessary. None of us are superlatively good, pure, loyal, or patriotic. We can only possess these virtues in a comparative sense; and hence we wish to compare the teaching of leading men among us on the subject under consideration with the teaching of Alexander Campbell, that illustrious leader of the reformation represented by these gentlemen who hold up their hands in horror, and organize an anti-Mormon association, because "Mormonism" progresses. He says:

All the kingdoms of this world shall soon become the kingdoms of our Lord the King. He will hurl all the present potentates from their thrones. He will grind to powder the despotisms, civil and ecclesiastic; and, with the blast of his mouth, give them to the four winds of heaven. The anti-Christian power, whether it be called Papistical, Mohammedan, Pagan, or Atheistic, will as certainly be destroyed, as Jesus reigns in heaven. No trace of them shall remain. The best government on earth, call it English or American, has within it the seeds of its own destruction—carries in its constitution a millstone, which will sink it to the bottom of the sea. They acknowledge not that God has set his Christ upon his throne. They will not kiss the Son. Society under their economy is not blessed. The land mourns through the wickedness of those that sit in high places. Ignorance, poverty, and crime abound, because of the injustice and iniquities of those who guide the destinies of nations.—Christian System, by Alexander Campbell, pages 291, 292.

Compare the patriotic declaration given through Joseph Smith that the Constitution of the United States was written by men whom God had "raised up unto this very purpose," with the declaration of Mr. Campbell, that the American as well as other governments, "carries in its Constitution a millstone, which will sink it to the bottom of the sea," and answer the question, Who is loyal and patriotic?

Query: Has the attitude of Latter Day Saints on this subject anything to do with angering these pious men of seditious tendencies?

HEMAN C. SMITH.

DARBY AND NEAL'S PATRON SAINT.

The Helper for August, 1903, makes an effort to disparage the revelations of Joseph Smith in an article by James W. Darby, which is also indorsed by R. B. Neal, in which they set forth as their chief and most reliable witness, E. Robinson, former editor and publisher of the Return. The following is the editorial indorsement in the Helper:

"I'm indebted to a volume of the Return edited and published by E. Robinson, one of the purest men the Mormons ever had, for full information about this Salem matter."

Messrs. Neal and Darby introduce Mr. Robinson as a most reliable witness and from his works set out what is termed the "Salem Revelation." They did not find anything so very objectionable in the statement set out as a revelation, but they surmise much. Even if Joseph Smith ever claimed to have received the document set out, there is nothing in it that would indicate that he was anything other than what he claimed to be. Their paper was taken, however, from a volume of the Times and Seasons published by others after Joseph Smith's death and which belongs with the doubtful exhibits.

But Mr. Darby having introduced his witness should now be willing to accept his testimony touching the revelations of Mr. Smith, and for his benefit we present the statement over the signature of Mr. Robinson, made January, 1845, nine years after the document referred to as the Salem Revelation. He writes:

"If being a firm believer in the Old and New Testaments, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Covenants, constitutes an apostate, then most assuredly I am one! If having implicit confidence in the prophecies and promises contained therein, that they will all be fulfilled, makes an apostate, then I am fully entitled to that appellation."—Messenger and Advocate, January 1, 1845, page 79.

Messrs. Darby and Neal, you have introduced this witness upon the question of the validity of the revelations of Joseph Smith. The above is the testimony of your witness during the lifetime of Joseph Smith and after his death. You hold out your witness to the public as one worthy of the highest confidence and belief. If not, you stand convicted by your own work before the public as hypocrites of the worst type. Will you have the case decided according to the testimony of your own witness?

But Mr. Robinson is not only posed as a star witness touching the claim of the Salem Revelation, but he is also held out as the chief one upon the question of polygamy. During the lifetime of Joseph Smith, he with eleven others signed and published to the world in the Times and Seasons, October number, 1842, page 939, the following:

We the undersigned members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and residents of the city of Nauvoo, persons of families, do hereby certify and declare that we know of no other rule or system of marriage than the one published from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and we give this certificate to show that Dr. J. C. Bennett's "secret wife system" is a creature of his own make, as we know of no such society in this place nor never did.

In the same number his wife, Angeline Robinson, together with eighteen other ladies, signed and published the following document:

We the undersigned members of the ladies' relief society, and married females do certify and declare that we know of no system of marriage being practiced in the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints save the one contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and we give this certificate to the public to show that J. C. Bennett's "secret wife system" is a disclosure of his own make.

This continued to be the testimony of these parties, during the lifetime of Joseph Smith.

In February, 1844, Joseph Smith, and Hyrum, his brother, published through the Times and Seasons, the official paper of the Church at the time, the following:

As we have lately been credibly informed, that an elder of the Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter-day Saints, by the name of Hiram Brown, has been preaching polygamy, and other false and corrupt doctrines, in the county of Lapeer, state of Michigan. This is to notify him and the church in general, that he has been cut off from the church, for his iniquity; and he is further notified to appear at the Special Conference, on the 6th of April next, to make answer to these charges.—Times and Seasons, February number, 1844, page 423.

Elder E. Robinson was present in Nauvoo at the time of the publication of this notice and made no public or private protest against the same, or in any way intimated that the position of Joseph and Hyrum Smith as set out at that time was not absolutely true. By his silence in this and his continuous fellowship with the people after his former publication he said to the people as late as February, 1844, that Joseph and Hyrum Smith believed and taught that polygamy was a false and corrupt doctrine. By witness Robinson, Neal and Darby must look for facts subsequent to February, 1844, to in any way connect Joseph Smith with the plural wife doctrine. Or will they try to impeach their own witness?

In this same issue of Darby and Neal's paper appears an article ostensibly by "I. C. Stars," in which is promised in the next issue a full revelation of "Spiritual Wifeism." It is said that a man will see stars at times when he suddenly runs his head against a snag. From the misrepresentations in the present article of I. C. S. in the transposition of the facts, it is quite evident he is under the right name; he is likely to see stars before he is through, and he should note well the testimony of the star witness of the anti-Mormon league brotherhood.

On January 22, 1869, Elder E. Robinson, being at this time a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, wrote as follows:

For years I longed for the time to come when the same peaceful and pure Spirit would be poured out upon the church, which was received and enjoyed at the beginning of the work of the last days: behold here I find it, and why should I not rejoice?—Church History, volume 3, page 517.

This is a full and complete indorsement of the doctrine and faith of the church by Mr. Robinson, twenty-seven years after this certificate published by witness Robinson in the Times and Seasons, in 1842. Query: Will Mr. J. W. Darby and editor Neal take the ground that their chief witness posed before the public as a hypocrite and deceiver for twenty-seven years? Or will they accept his testimony after having presented him before the public as a person to be believed, and profit thereby? E. L. KELLEY.

A RARE WORK IN THE INTEREST OF THE TRUTH.

There has just come into my possession, an interesting letter written from Tiffin, Seneca County, Ohio, July 24, 1846, by Oliver Cowdery, the early associate and scribe of Joseph Smith, Jr., in the translation of the Book of Mormon, which is of infinite importance in dispelling the silly stories and fabrications of the people with reference to the time of the introduction of polygamy.

The letter is sent through the mails without envelope; bears the post-mark "Tiffin, O., July 28," and is addressed to "Daniel S. Jackson, Esq., Montrose, Lee County, Iowa Territory." This letter has been in the possession of a sister and niece of Oliver Cowdery and is at the present time the property of the niece, Mrs. Adelia K. Quigley, Sacramento, California. The letter is written and mailed two years and one month subsequent to the death of Joseph Smith in reply to one that Oliver Cowdery had received from Mr. Daniel S. Jackson, from Montrose, Iowa. The letter shows conclusively that the receipt by Oliver Cowdery of the letter of Mr. Jackson, was the first that he knew anything about the introduction of the doctrine of polygamy among the Latter Day Saints. This is, in the midst of so much gossip and "old wives' tales" which for years has been sent out by B. Young and his accomplices in trying to fasten polygamy on Joseph Smith, a stubborn fact which will in the minds of fair and honorable men and women go further toward relieving Joseph Smith and his immediate colaborers from the charge of polygamy than a thousand tales started after their death.

While the Anti-Mormon Leaguers are looking for evidence, will they please examine that which is legitimate and conclusive and compare it with the stories and tales that have been manufactured by apostates from the faith of the Latter Day Saints, and men who were afraid their craft was in danger of other faiths?

E. L. KELLEY.

THE DANGER OF SECURITY.

"Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

A man may walk safely the length of a taut rope or a slack wire, every muscle tense and every faculty on the alert; but descending from his triumph, his feet on the solid pavement and his attention relaxed, as he walks through the crowd with his hands in his pockets, he may slip on a banana peel and fall. He may walk a half mile on smooth ice, choosing his steps with caution, and as he runs carelessly up the beach tumble over a loose pebble.

There is danger in too great a sense of security. It is that which enables the trapper to take his game and the Devil his victim. Jeremiah pronounces a malediction on those who cry, "Peace! peace!" when there is no peace. Many a man in the history of the world has fallen down simply and solely because he was too confident of his footing and so did not exercise due care.

BELSHAZZAR'S CASE.

There was the case of Belshazzar; there seemed no especial need that he should have lost his kingdom. There he ruled in the greatest city of the greatest kingdom in the world, the "Lady of Kingdoms." There were his palaces with furniture of gold, the hanging gardens, and all the wonders of his time. True, the enemy was at the gates; but what of that? His trained soldiers were at the gates also. Fifty miles of wall near four hundred feet high surrounded him. Why should he fear? What should he fear?

In the very excess of his security he made a feast to a thousand of his lords. It occurred to him that in the midst of that great multitude he was safe to defy even God. So he sent for the gold and silver vessels that Nebuchadnezzar had taken from the temple in Jerusalem, and he and his princes and his wives and his concubines drank from them and praised their gods of silver and of gold.

Foolish man! that night it was written on his wall, "Mene, Mene, Tekel, U-Pharsin." That night his adversary turned the river from its course, and walking in the dry bed of it came under the wall of his city, and, bursting into his palace, slew him.

AN INCIDENT IN AMERICAN HISTORY.

At Trenton, during the Revolutionary War, a similar scene occurred, with a different setting. It was Christmas night, and the British troops were having a time of gay festivity. Cornwallis considered the war ended. He had sent his trunks on ship-board and was prepared to embark for his native land. The people at Trenton were off their guard. Washington with his few ill-clad Continentals was miles away on the other side of the Delaware River. What had they to fear? Nothing, only their own too great sense of security. Musket shots broke up the carousal; morning saw them prisoners, and the war took on an entirely different aspect.

PETER'S MISTAKE.

Peter had some reason to think himself a solid Christian. He had received a personal revelation from God that Jesus was the Christ. He had seen the marvel of the transfiguration; surely after that Peter would stand fast.

Peter's opinion of himself was revealed in his statement to Christ: "Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended, . . . though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee." Peter was so confident of his safety in that regard that he did not guard himself on that particular point. The result was that ere the night was spent he denied Christ—denied him at a time when all had forsaken him.

WHAT ANOTHER MAN THOUGHT OF HIMSELF.

There was another individual whose pride went before a fall. He was a church member and prayed and fasted and paid tithing. He thought his standing very secure, and there lay his danger, there was his grievous fault. He thought too much of his own worth. He was one of those men whose eyes are so constructed that they see only good in themselves and only bad in another. It was a source of wonder to him that every one else did not see as he saw and do as he did and think as he thought. He thought that if they only would the world would be much better.

He went up to the temple one night to pray; and as he prayed he looked around to see if any one was observing the fact that he was praying, and his eyes lighted on a sinner, a publican. He was looking for a sinner and he was glad to see one; the contrast made him shine the brighter.

It always made him feel good to see a sinner, and so he lifted his eyes to God and said, "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican." This prayer was offensive to God, and the man who made it went way down in his favor.

It happened that Christ himself saw the affair and heard the words, and he used the man as an example in talking to his disciples; and so the story has gone wherever Christianity has gone. During all the centuries till now the man has been pointed out as the climax of pride and the sepulcher of charity.

Ah, you say, "That was the Pharisee; he lived long ago." Yes, it was the Pharisee; but do not apply the story to him alone. Many a sermon is wasted because each is thinking how nicely it applies to some one else. Are we not all to an extent Pharisees? Are we not always too ready to see the evil in others? The man who always sees the faults of others has no time to correct his own. He who always finds fault with the work of others has no time to do any work himself. To put it plainly, it is an excellent idea to mind one's own business and permit others to do likewise.

THE MAN WHO DID NOT PAY HIS TITHING.

So much for the case of the man who paid his tithing and neglected to cultivate the spiritual graces. There was another man who was willing to cultivate the spiritual graces if they did not cost too much; but he was not willing to pay his tithing.

The gospel came to him with its message of love. He accepted it. He was taught that he should help care for the poor and help to carry the gospel to others. This man, however, had other ambitions. He was a hard working man and was fast accumulating money, and it was his ambition to own the finest property in the county. He wanted all the land that joined him. He wanted plenty for his old age and a legacy for all his children. In the pursuit of all these schemes he never had money to spare for tithing.

He was very diligent in arguing with his neighbors, and considered his spiritual condition good to excellent. As for his financial condition, it never entered his head to doubt his security; he felt sure of his standing. But in an evil hour he went too deep and a hard year caught him. Some way he did not feel very free to pray for help. It may be that God did not feel under obligations to answer, because the man had forgotten others in their hour of need; anyway, his property went. It was a pitiful sight; he had been so sure of his standing.

In his old age he was homeless. He did not feel free to turn to the Church for help; and when a friend took the matter to the Bishop the Bishop shook his head. He said that if the man would lay his case before him he would see what could be done; but there were many calls for help and more than that the man's name was not on the Bishop's books at all. He never had given a dollar into the Church to help the poor. It did not appear that he had much claim; did it?

THE UNGAURDED BACK DOOR.

Satan is a great deal like a burglar, he comes in at the point of least resistance. While the householder is watching the front door and congratulating himself on his safety, the Devil comes in at the back door.

A certain individual had considerable treasure and also entertained a fear of thieves. He locked all the windows and fastened the shutters and bolted the front door and went to bed with a revolver under his pillow. He did not fasten the back door at all, because he said that no one would bother to go around there. While they were trying to force their way in at the front door he would wake up and shoot them. So he felt secure and slept so soundly; but the thieves did not bother with the front door, they simply slipped in the back way and took what they wanted.

THE MAN WHO LOVED WHISKY.

That man was foolish; but not more than others. There was another man, a young man, who had treasure. His treasure was not gold and silver, it consisted of a good, clean soul, a manly heart, and a bright active brain. His ambition was to make the most of these, and so he took pains to educate himself; he worked hard and secured a little home, and married a good woman. His prospects were bright and he felt very secure.

He had one failing; but it did not give him any uneasiness; he loved a good glass of liquor. He thought there was no danger of his failing on that point, because none of his family had ever been drunkards. He bolted the front door and the windows against ignorance and idleness and poverty, but left the back door wide open, and the Devil came in long since and spoiled all his treasure. Gone are the pure heart, the clean soul, the active mind, the little home; only the wife remains, and that is the saddest sight of all. That is a true story of a man who had a too great sense of security. You will find him in any little town and in any part of any great city.

THE MAN WHO WORKED IN A BANK.

There was another man who had an entirely different danger to face, and like the other did not know that he had a danger. He worked in a bank and he loved to handle the gold and silver coins. When the other men were gone at night, he would look at the money bags and figure what he could buy and where he could go if he but owned their contents. It had a fascination for him; but he did not think much about it. His folks were honest and he himself attended a popular church and taught in the Sunday-school. He had fastened some of the windows, but not the one that needed fastening. When he disappeared with the money of his friends and the window's mite that was in his care, people thought that it had been a sudden temptation; but it was not, the Devil had been working his way in for a long long time. He came in at the back door while the man slept with his front door locked.

VARIABLE AFFECTIONS.

There was another man whose prospects seemed bright; he had no idea of getting into the trouble that he did. He was a young man and had a good wife. He gave her a good home and provided a good table and gave her good clothes; he treated her with the utmost consideration. There seemed nothing to mar their future happiness. People said they were an ideal match.

It seems that he took every pains to guard the happiness of the home. In fact he did give his wife everything that her heart desired except the one thing that is worth all—absolute fidelity.

He was like the man spoken of by a certain writer, "He loved one woman with all his heart, and had a gentle south wind feeling for all women in general." He did not take any pains to check this south wind feeling, because he did not fear it. The wind bloweth where it listeth and he who sows it reaps the whirlwind. No need to tell the details; you may read them in the records of a thousand divorce courts.

THE MAN WHO TOOK HEED.

How surely an unwarranted sense of security breeds carelessness; how surely carelessness leaves some point unguarded; how surely the enemy enters at the unguarded point!

There was one man who did not trust himself too far. He took good heed where he stood. When he was about to meet the adversary he did not think, "What have I to fear? I am especially called of God." No; he fasted and he prayed and he studied the Scriptures; and then he went forth armed on every point. He was victorious. Not until the last battle was fought and won did he say, "All power is given into my hand." ELBERT A. SMITH.

JOSEPH SMITH AS A TRANSLATOR.

A great effort is made in an article of D. B. Turney of Effingham, Illinois, under the discourteous heading, "Joe Smith as a Translator," to throw discredit upon the translation by Mr. Smith of the Scriptures.

From the spirit of the article it is evident that Mr. Turney has been disappointed in finding any serious objection to the translation of the Bible by Mr. Smith, for had he found such, he would not have been under the necessity of employing coarse and vulgar vernacular in order to reach his readers.

If Mr. Smith's translation of the Bible is such a great imposture as is claimed for it by his critics, it is not necessary for these gentlemen to burden their attacks with such ignoble expressions as "Old Joe", "Self styled Saint," and "pretendedly inspired translation." This kind of weapon was hurled against good men in the days of Jesus and the Apostles; "Nazerene," "Belzebub," "ring-leader," "Christian," "winebibber," being quite as handy to those who loved themselves and the world more than Christ then, as is "Mr. Saint," "Joe," "Smithianity," "Mormon," etc., to this class now. There is no merit attaching to the style, however, and the reader should beware of the pit set for him, for if the cloven foot was hidden under this kind of warfare in the first century, because the truth could not be met by honorable and fair controversy, it is fair to suppose that it is there to-day.

The fact that Mr. Smith claimed divine light and authority for his work as a translator renders his position far less tenable if he was an impostor, than had he claimed to have translated by his own wisdom and learning. Under the former position his translation must stand the test of being correct in doctrine, example, and historical narrative; under the latter, it would simply be a question as to whether he had the original text as it was penned in the time of the apostles and prophets, together with the requisite learning.

Why not be manly and christlike in the examination of his work, then, and let it stand or fall upon its merits?

Mr. Turney says: "Smith's pretendedly Inspired Translation has actually omitted our Lord's declaration: God is a Spirit."

If Mr. Smith did not so translate the language found in John 4:24 it was under the claim that the translation as given in the common version was not correct. If not correct, Jesus did not say that, and the question is one of fact, to ascertain what Jesus did say.

To say that God is a Spirit, gives no idea of his attributes or character. What proper conception of God do we receive from the statement that he is a Spirit? The prophet Michaiah states: "Then there came out a spirit, and stood before the Lord, and said, I will entice him."—2 Chronicles 18:20. This was not God, however, and it is unreasonable that Jesus, the only true representative of God on earth, should have compared him to a spirit, of which there are so many, and diverse kinds. "The Spirit of God" is a proper and scriptural expression: we read, "The Spirit of God came upon Azariah the son of Oded." But would it add to the text to say the spirit of a spirit came upon Azariah?

Jesus in the conversation with the Samaritan woman is directing as to the proper way to worship God. This is the thought for the reader to keep in mind. He reveals and represents the Father elsewhere. Jesus himself was the true representative on earth of the Father. He says: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."—John 14:9. After his resurrection with his spiritual body he appeared to his disciples and when, "they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit," Jesus said: "Handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have."—Luke 24:37-39. He was not a spirit, yet the very image of the Father. The Apostle says: "The express image of his person."—Hebrews 1:3. When he ascended upon high he sat down upon the "right hand of God." The Martyr Stephen did not see Jesus upon the right hand of a spirit, but on the right hand of God. He says, "Behold I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God."—Acts 7:56. God is spiritual, his nature, attributes, all, and Jesus is the express image of his person; but it adds nothing to our knowledge of him to say that he is a spirit.

The literal translation of the best text we have of this twenty-fourth verse of the fourth chapter of John is: "A spirit the God. And those worshipping him, in spirit and in truth it behoves to worship."

It will be seen at once by the investigator that there is a lack in the original, as we have it, that must be supplied by the translator whoever that may be. The translation of this verse by Mr. Smith is: "For unto such hath God promised his Spirit. And they who worship him, must worship in spirit and in truth." This is wholly true according to the teaching of Jesus and the Apostles as found elsewhere in the Bible. Is it wise, then, to condemn it, because it is in the translation of Mr. Smith?

Objection has also been made to the translation by Mr. Smith because in John 4: 2, which reads, "Though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples," he translated: "Now the Lord knew this, though he himself baptized not so many as his disciples."

In John 3: 22, speaking of Jesus, it reads: "He tarried with them and baptized." Verse 26 reads: "And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou barest witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and all men come to him." This is plain and emphatic that Jesus did himself baptize, and yet these critics prefer a direct contradiction of the fact in the fourth chapter, rather than the harmonious translation of Mr. Smith. Here it seems quite proper to refer the men of this generation to a former one: "John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine; and ye say, He hath a devil. The Son of man is come eating and drinking; and ye say, Behold a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!"—Luke 7: 33, 34.

The real objection was that John and Jesus claimed to be sent of God, and did not talk what the people wanted to hear, therefore they cast epithets.

Does not this also fit the case of the would-be critics of Joseph Smith? If he spoke the truth, as Jesus says, "Why not receive it?" At least let us try to be honest and fair.

By the way, just keep a good look out and see who "charts a knot-hole, speaking metaphorically."

Selected Articles.

ISRAEL ZANGWILL ON THE FUTURE OF ZIONISM.

The sessions of the sixth Zionist Congress in Basle lend special interest to Mr. Israel Zangwill's article on "Zionism and the future of the Jews" in the September issue of the World's Work. Mr. Zangwill, as is well known, has been giving a large share of his time and talents for several years past to the advocacy of Zionism, and the present article is evidence that his faith in his cause is as firm as ever. He writes:

"Zionism, in its latest official exposition, aims at securing a public, legally assured home in Palestine for those Jews who are unable or unwilling to assimilate. It is not the movement that George Eliot's Mordecai dreamed, nor that which Rabbi Mohilewer, of Russia, initiated. The advent of Doctor Herzl has stamped Zionism with "modernity." In the Austrian journalist's first published scheme of a Jewish state, indeed, Palestine played no necessary part. Herzl, whose instrument of national regeneration is the bank, for dealing with the Sultan and subsidizing the selected immigrants, was never, despite the date of his advent, fin de siècle (which seems to imply a certain flippancy), but prophetically twentieth century. He would, if it were possible, lead back his people to Palestine by the moving sidewalk of the Paris Exposition. Withal a charming, magnetic, even poetic personality, a more diplomatic and domesticated Lassalle.

"But the deeper issues and sequels of the movement will develop themselves with the material success, and the present leaders might quite conceivably be swept away by spiritual floods they have themselves let loose. The Orthodox Jewish Congregational Union of America, at the convention of June 8, 1898, while maintaining that the restoration to Zion is the legitimate aspiration of scattered Israel, likewise declared, 'we reaffirm our belief in the coming of a personal Messiah.' The agents of political Zionism—men like Max Nordau, or Mandelstamm, the great Russian oculist, or Narmorek, of the Pasteur Institute—can no more control the religious future of Judaism than they can control the mystic interpretation which Christendom would put upon their success. Men are only instruments. And each must do the work he sees at hand."

At present, "though orthodox rabbis are working amicably with ultra-modern thinkers," the Zionism movement is "political, and more indebted to the presence of the external forces of persecution than to internal energy and enkindlement." Mr. Zangwill continues:

"Viewed merely on its prosaic side, Zionism is by no means a visionary scheme. The aggregation of Jews in Palestine is only a matter of time—already they form a third of its population and it is better that they should be aggregated there under their own laws and religion and the mild suzerainty of the Sultan than under the semibarbarous restrictions of Russia or Rumania, and exposed to recurrent popular outbreaks. True, Palestine is a ruined country and the Jews are a broken people. But neither is beyond recuperation. Palestine needs a people; Israel needs a country. If in regenerating the Holy Land, Israel could regenerate itself, how should the world be other than the gainer? In the solution of the problem of Asia which has succeeded the problem of Africa, Israel might play no insignificant part. Already the colony of Rishon le Zion has obtained a gold medal for its wines from the Paris Exposition—which is not prejudiced in the Jews' favor. We may be sure the spiritual wine of Judea would again pour forth likewise—that precious vintage which the world has drunk for so many centuries. And as the scientific activities of the colonization societies would have paved the way for the pastoral and commercial future of Israel in its own country, so would the rabbinical singsong in musty rooms prove to have been but the unconscious preparation of the ages for the Jerusalem university.

“But Palestine belongs to the Sultan, and the Sultan refuses to grant the coveted Judean charter, even for dangled millions. Is not this fatal? No; it matters as little as that the Zionists could not pay the millions, if suddenly called upon. They have collected not two and a half million dollars. But there are millionaires enough to come to the rescue once the charter was dangled before the Zionists. It is not likely that the Rothschilds would see themselves ousted from their familiar headship in authority and well doing. Nor would the millions left by Baron Hirsch be altogether withheld. And the Sultan's present refusal is equally unimportant because a national policy is independent of transient moods and transient rulers. The only aspect that really matters is whether Israel's face be or be not set steadily Zionward—for decades, and even for centuries. Much less turns on the Sultan's mind than on Doctor Herzl's. Will he lose patience? For leaders like Herzl are not born in every century.”

Mr. Zangwill concludes:

“Apart from its political working, Zionism forces upon the Jew a question the Jew hates to face.

“Without a rallying center, geographical or spiritual; without a Synedrion; without any principle of unity or of political action; without any common standpoint about the old Book; without the old cement of dictory laws and traditional ceremonies: without even ghetto walls built by his friend the enemy, it is impossible for Israel to persist further, except by a miracle—of stupidity.

“It is a wretched thing for a people to be saved only by its persecutors or its fools. As a religion, Judaism has still magnificent possibilities, but the time has come when it must be denationalized or renationalized.”—The Literary Digest, September 5, 1903.

To the Shepherds.

Satan is stealing
God's beautiful sheep.
His lambs are bleeding,
From ragged wounds deep.

The Master has told
His good servants all
To watch o'er the fold,
Feed the great and the small.

Art thou a watcher
And feeding the sheep?
A faithful shepherd?
Or—art thou asleep.

JOSEPH FERRIS.

Gathered from Doctrine and Covenants 108: 6.

When back the sea is driven
To the north, at God's command,
And the isles so long divided
Shall become again one land,
When Zion and Jerusalem
To their former place return,
Then the Lord will bless his people
And they nevermore shall mourn.

Their prophets, when his voice they hear,
Will themselves no longer stay;
They'll smite the mighty rocks, and soon
The ice will melt away,
And a highway will be cast up
In the midst of the great deep,
For the passage home to Zion
Of the Savior's "Other Sheep."

Much rich and varied treasures
They'll to Ephraim's children bring,
While pools of living water
From the thirsty land shall spring;
The everlasting hills shall tremble,
As they come with one accord,
And be in Zion crowned with glory
By the servants of the Lord.

With songs of everlasting joy
The Lord their souls will fill,
'Tis the blessing of the mighty God
Upon the tribes of Israel;
And the tribe of Judah, also,
When ended is their pain,
Shall dwell with God in holiness,
And ever there remain.

DUTIES OF PARENTS FROM THE STANDPOINT OF A TEACHER.

Julia N. Dutton.

Shakespeare says, "I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teachings." So perhaps it is easier to tell parents what is their duty, than to be one of the parents and do the same.

I believe no parent can successfully do his duty by his child without some knowledge of child nature and an understanding of his own duties as a parent, any more than a teacher can do good work without some knowledge of child nature and of her duties as a teacher; and neither, though as wise as Solomon, can be a success before God, who is lacking in character, in true manhood or noble womanhood.

Many things must be considered in training children, for children of the same family do not develop in the same manner, neither do the different faculties in each child develop at the same time or at any given time. In the animal world, memory is one of the strongest powers, and in the young child it is one of the earliest and strongest of his faculties.

We hear much about reasoning with children being as easy as it was to obey the command of old, "make bricks without straw." Not that a child has no reasoning power up to a certain time, but his reasoning, even at the age of five or six years, is so weak it is of little use in controlling his actions.

Psychologists and those who have made a special study of children tell us that reason is the highest power of the human intellect—and the last to develop; and this must be true when we consider upon what reason is based.

If we but knew at what age the different faculties develop, and all children were alike in their mental growth, many of the perplexing questions which come to parents and teachers would never arise; but if we have given this subject any thought, we know that many children who develop slowly, when they reach maturity have strong minds. Just a glance down the pages of history shows us an army of powerful men who in their boyhood were diffident, awkward, green-appearing, for they were slow in maturing in both body and mind.

The duties of parents change as their children advance in years, but as my time is limited we will consider those which pertain to young children. Children know neither their physical nor their mental needs, so until right habits have been formed, correct judgments can be reached and the reasoning power developed, the parent must answer these calls for the child. One of the first duties of parents, then, is to teach obedience. At first a blind obedience, but as soon as possible a reasoning obedience. It is cruelty to a child not to teach him to obey in infancy, and "in infancy" means long before four years of age. Though there are many parents who will agree with this, there are many, many who wait "for reason to grow" which results in woes innumerable for parent and child. I have in mind a boy of five years whose father came to me and said that he and his wife had determined to send their boy to me a year earlier than they had intended as they thought he would receive discipline better at school than at home. He came, but he had not the remotest idea what obedience was. There were many unhappy hours for the little fellow which would never have come to him had he been taught obedience. Like many a child he had to suffer as a result of his parents' failure to do their duty by him.

It is the child who has never learned obedience, who recognizes no rights of others, no will but his own, who grows to be one of the lawless mob in country and town.

Children learn to understand the mood of their parents; therefore one of the most important factors in the training of children is the power of the parent to control himself. Parents become annoyed by their children at times, lose their tempers, threaten to punish, and often punish when angry, for what at another time would not be noticed. How many parents wait an hour or even fifteen minutes after a child has done wrong and deliberately decide what the punishment should be and then inflict it? I am afraid the majority of parental punishments are inflicted when the parent is angry and the child knows it, and thus he will soon have little confidence in the judgment of father or mother.

Do you think I am exaggerating in this? In a few weeks I shall have in a room some sixty little people from nearly as many different homes. At first there will be many of those children who will not believe that I mean just what I say and it will take several weeks for some of them to learn the lesson. But to me one of the saddest sights will be when I have occasion to pass quickly down an aisle to do something on the other side of my room and see several children dodge when I pass their seats, as though they expected to have their ears boxed or be hit over the head; but I am glad it never takes long for them to learn that there is no such danger and that instead of dodging they will soon simply look up from their work to see what is wanted.

If a teacher in a public school used no more self-control than the majority of parents do he or she would be asked to resign, if not be sued for cruel and unusual punishments. It is a pity for the sake of childhood that many parents could not be made to resign their position.

Another duty of the parent is to be honest with his child. You may think that the lack of this is an uncommon failure, but I believe that more children learn to lie from the example of parents than from any other reason unless it be from the fear of physical pain. For instance, a child is sick and the parent instead of saying that the medicine must be taken even if it is not good, deceives the little one by pretending to like the medicine himself, or by telling the sick child that brother or sister will take it if he does not, for they like it. Thus through a selfish motive the bitter medicine will be taken, but the child knows that his father or mother has lied to "accomplish a purpose" though he may never think it in those words. Will it be strange if it is found some day that he has lied to father or mother in order to carry out some little plan of his own? Many a child is frightened into obedience by parents telling him that the policeman or something big and awful under the bed or down cellar will get him. This may accomplish its purpose for a time, but some older child will soon tell him all about policemen, blackmen, etc., and your child's confidence in you will be dying a death from which there is no resurrection. The child who has never learned to obey, and whose confidence has thus been betrayed, has two hard lessons to learn in his first days at school.

Many a time I have had parents tell me of the unbounded faith their child had in his teacher and that he would take the word of "teacher" against father or mother. But I have also had children whose confidence in father's or mother's word was unbounded as it should. Children who have confidence in their parents usually have confidence in their teacher's word and then it is but a step farther to believe in God and to trust the heavenly Father.

Reading for Innocent Amusement.

Very much has been said both for and against reading. It is not our mission this afternoon to entertain you for two minutes on the very broad subject of reading, but "Reading for Innocent Amusement." We think we are safe in saying a very large number of readers to-day read for amusement only. If they are students, they get enough of poring over deep literature at school, and wishing amusement they naturally read something light, easily digested; and although they may not try to remember what they have read, some of the thoughts, whether they be good or bad, are sure to remain stored away in the mind's basket of knowledge, usually presenting their influences in the most unexpected manner.

Our libraries, therefore, should contain such books as afford amusement and still contain high thoughts and good morals.

One of our modern writers has said, "Never under any circumstances read a book unless you have an assurance from the table of contents and title page of its solidity, and a probability of its being instructive either in spiritual or temporal things." We think the advice worth taking. Why should we waste or worse than waste our time for amusement, by reading immoral literature, whose influence will come over us, confusing our minds, when instruction gained by reading moral literature is most needed, but is crowded out—entirely forgotten? There is no reason why we should. There is plenty of literature in the world like delicate food, and which contains good morals. Yes, there is plenty of such literature in the world, but people differ greatly as to which is the best. There are many novels which contain good morals, are instructive to some extent, and which are amusing, and yet some people are decidedly opposed to novel reading in any shape or form.

Does it pay to read fiction? is a question agitating the minds of many to-day, and much has been said upon the subject. But after all the reading, writing, and talking the question still remains undecided, and the coming generation of literary people will have it handed down to them for consideration; and we predict they will hand it down to the next.

We, as Saints of latter days, or at least a large majority of us, have some time to "Read for Amusement." Shall we see that our libraries are supplied with the right kind of literature and see that it is "dealt out" in the right way?

How shall we employ our amusement time? Shall we read fiction, whether it be good or bad? Shall we lay our Church publications upon the shelf, or what is worse, leave them in the office, and read worthless publications? Will the latter way make us pure in heart and prepare us to live and reign with Him who rules the universe? We leave these questions with you, ever praying that a merciful and all-wise God will ever guide us in choosing books for our libraries and reading for innocent amusement.

Your colaborer,

LULU P. KEMP.

DES MOINES, Iowa, October 10.

Dear Editor: Accept, please, a few lines from this our capital city as to what we are doing in the Sunday-school work. Our school in point of numbers does not compare with the schools in the two stake centers, but we believe that we are working just as earnestly as any other school, and we have many evidences that good is being accomplished.

In our school we have the

"CRADLE ROLL."

This contains the names of all children, whose parents are connected with the Church, under three years of age. We placed the "Roll" in our school one year ago and enrolled about thirty names at that time. Since that time whenever another "Angel of Love" comes to the home of our brother and sister and it is given a name, the said name is placed upon the "Roll." If this "Roll" should remain in the Church for twenty-five years, and the infants of to-day, then grown to manhood and womanhood, who have become the active workers in the Sunday-school, would look upon it, they would certainly esteem it highly.

"THE CHILDREN'S DAY"

is one of the most interesting days in the Sunday-school. We are glad that it is coming to be observed generally. The programs published in the Sunday-school department last June were just what we needed for the Sunday-school. Next year we hope to see something better, and that is a "Children's Day" program published in pamphlet form, and then to see all the Sunday-schools of the Church unite in carrying out that program. What a pleasing sight it would be to see all the Latter Day Saint children observing "Children's Day" at the same time.

The publication of

in the present issue of the Primary Quarterly is an excellent thing, and these lessons will be fully appreciated by all teachers of the infant class, and all Sunday-school workers. Here in our school when the Study Hour was discontinued we were at a loss what to do. We have a sister for teacher of the infant class who is a teacher in the fullest sense of the word. She enters into the spirit of her work with a glad heart, she impresses lessons on the little minds which are lasting, and the little ones from their earliest recollection are drinking at the Sunday-school fountain. We secured for this teacher the book, "Bible Lessons for Little Beginners." This book has furnished the foundation for the lessons for this class for the past nine months, and the teacher and her class of little "tots" have gotten along very nicely. Now that the Association furnishes us with lessons for this class, of course, we are using them.

Our Sunday-school is reaching out and broadening its field of labor and usefulness by seeking after the indifferent ones and the wanderers, and bringing them into the Sunday-school; and where they can not come to the Sunday-school is urging them to take up the study of the lesson in their homes.

A HOME CLASS OF SIXTEEN

has been formed in a suburb of the city, composed of Saints and their children. How much good we can do by taking the Sunday-school to those who can not come to it, and thus bring all into one class for the study of God's holy word. All can not be made to understand the good that will come to them, and the school also, by this study, but many are anxious to take up the lesson course. Some may have thought that there was not much in Paul's letters to Timothy to study that would help us; but a careful study of this quarter's lessons will certainly be of interest and profit to all.

The teachers' meeting is one of the most necessary parts of the Sunday-school. Here we officers and teachers meet, each to feel that he has his responsibility in carrying on the work. Here the needs of the school are considered. Its progress is noted; its field of usefulness is surveyed; its drawbacks are removed; its lessons are studied. This meeting is where the Sunday-school workers unite to carry on this great department of Church work.

that is being introduced in our school is to have all the officers and teachers in their turn take charge of the school in the opening exercises. This breaks the monotony that necessarily comes from one being constantly in charge. It causes teachers and officers to feel the responsibility of the school resting upon them, and calls them from the duty of standing before a class to the broader work of standing before the school.

"ZION'S PRAISES"

will, we hope, be warmly welcomed by every school in the Church. The supply of books in our school has been limited for some time, and we have not increased the supply because we have waited for the new book, and we anxiously look for it. Many of the schools may have a supply of song books on hand, but we hope to see all singing the songs of "Zion's Praises" in a very short time.

When a Feller's in Trouble.

When a feller's in trouble, I tell you,
An' life ain't got nothin' to bring,
It's comfort he'll find
Ef he'll make up his his mind
Jest for to whistle or sing!

(Yet, still that's a hope whar it's trouble to cling, Kaze some folks can't whistle, an' others can't sing!)

When he shakes an' he shivers in winter,
Let him think o' the roses o' spring;
When the blizzard is heard
Let him chirp like a bird—
A bird that kin whistle an' sing!

(Yit still to that hope it is trouble to cling, Kaze some folks can't whistle, an' some folks can't sing!)

Letter Department.

WATERLOO, Iowa, October 17.

Dear Readers: I am here enduring a wait of six and a half hours for a train for Des Moines, and will occupy a portion of the time in a pen conversation with you upon experiences relating to the importance of the work of God, and experiences I have had therein of late.

The last services that I rendered in my mission previous to my departure for home and duties relating to my presence there was a discussion previously referred to in letters of others to the HERALD, with Elder W. P. Halbesleben, a representative of a "Church of God" which had its beginning with the baptism—no, the immersion—of a Mr. Norstrum by a man who had not been immersed by any body; and the man I discussed with being baptized by this man Norstrum, has become the great apostle of this church, which according to the argument of my opponent is not an organization.

The main points of belief my opponents affirmed were:

1. One God, a disbelief in the association of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost as one; a disbelief in the existence of Jesus Christ in any sense, only by promise that he should be, until his birth of the Virgin, and his associated disbelief of the pre-existence of man or any part of him as an intelligent existence.
2. The total annihilation of all who die.
3. The resurrection being a new creation.
4. The seventh day as the Sabbath.
5. The partial apostasy of the church.
6. The elect of God, specially chosen unto God's favor, and the preaching of the gospel during the thousand years to those who never heard it here, and the final salvation of all through that means.
7. That anything which was contrary to his views was "damnable."

He would not accept the common version of the Scriptures as standard, but wished to accept of "the word of God so far as translated correctly;" but upon my informing him that that would mean the Inspired Translation, which we believe in, he was willing to accept the Revised Version as that to which final appeal should be made by either party, but that the King James Translation should be used as evidence during the discussion.

While at home I assisted the Woodbine Branch as its counsel in a case of the Woodbine Branch against a member of the branch which has proven already a very perplexing question, but we hope that the results will be the salvation of this member and a complete restoration to righteousness of all who have been injuriously affected by this case; but whatever else may follow as a result, one thing is certain: the Woodbine Branch has dealt with long-suffering and mercy with the transgressor, and could not have dealt justly with the Church or its law, or the transgressor, had they done less than they have, but could have done more and been in harmony with justice; but it is the mission of the Christ and of those who are led by his Spirit to be merciful, just so that mercy does not rob justice.

Prepared provisions and fuel for the fall and winter so far as possible, and made home comfortable for my afflicted companion and family while at my home, assisting in all the services of the branch and the district conference of the Little Sioux District, which convened at Woodbine while I was there. The conference was a very pleasant session to me, being privileged to meet with those with whom I had associated since childhood. Many faces that were familiar at previous conferences were missed, but the Spirit of wisdom and peace characterized all the sessions of the conventions and conference.

I was called to administer to a Mrs. Brownell, near Greene, who was led by what I believe to be the Spirit of God to send for Bro. Fred Tarr, president of the Packard Branch, to have a conversation upon religious matters. She requested the prayers of Saints and they met fasting and prayed for her, and she used the consecrated oil, since which time she has been improving and is willing to give God the glory; but the physicians and some of her friends do not wish it that way. She has been operated on twice for cancerous growth, and given up by one physician as incurable but now the physician says that all that hinders her from getting up is hysterics. She and husband are persuaded of the way of life, and as soon as the afflicted one is stronger will enter the kingdom though opposed by several quite bitterly.

I begin a series of services at Waukee on Sunday night by request of Mr. Spencer Smith and others. Mr. Smith accompanies his request by offering the use of the hall free, with lodging and room thrown in while I am there. Much interest was experienced there last summer when I was there, and some are near the kingdom.

Brn. Jones, Cushman, Peters, and McCoy are active, or were when last heard from. Bro. Sorensen was at home with his afflicted companion arranging home affairs for further labor in the mission work.

Any one having friends in any of the twenty-six counties of this district whom they would desire should be called upon with the gospel message, please write me immediately, and any of the scattered Saints in this district who desire labor done in their locality so inform me soon, that I may arrange to fulfill their wishes.

The work at Dallas Center is assuming a normal condition of opposition, the faith and Saints being treated more considerably, and the Saints feeling hopeful.

With hope in the final triumph of this work and a desire for full salvation, I am,

J. F. MINTUN.

MIDDLE VALLEY, Idaho, October 12.

Editors Herald: Since the conference held at Hagerman, Idaho, on the 11th to 13th ult., have not been able to do much preaching.

Bro. J. H. Condit and the writer were assigned to this part of the district from the conference above stated. We did not get away at once as we were making arrangements for a conveyance and during that time we held a few meetings at Hagerman and Bliss.

Mr. Madison Durfee furnished us a gospel wagon. (Mr. Durfee is not a member of the Church but is quite friendly and always ready to help the Lord's people.) Bro. M. J. Durfee furnished a harness and Bro. Condit furnished the team, and so we were fitted for the field.

We stopped at Boise City, but not being able to get a house there to speak in, we stayed the night with Bro. and Sr. Montrose and then departed for Emmett, where we stopped a couple of days with Sr. Augusta Hansen, who received us courteously.

Sr. Hansen is a faithful Saint; she has lived in the wilds here among all classes of people for years, but yet is as firm as ever in the faith. While there we held two meetings in the Mormon church and gave them something to think about; then being closed out of a house there came over to Middle Valley, where we intend to hold the fort for some time if the Lord permit.

We have had considerable rain in this part, of late, making the grass grow and causing the stockmen to rejoice.

There are a few Saints in this locality and there seems to be an opportunity for a good work to open up here and I pray the Lord to assist us in establishing his work among the people in this part.

Ever praying for the advancement of the gospel, I remain,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

PENDENNIS, Kansas, October 15.

Editors Herald: After an absence of several months I am again in my field, and find plenty to do. Am now preaching in the schoolhouse at Pendennis, a new opening, and am stopping at the home of Bro. Bert Coop, and travel fourteen miles each night to get to meeting and return; but distance is not counted in Western Kansas as it is farther east. I began preaching on the 11th. The postmaster and family are attending all the meetings, going one mile. Interest is good, but as yet I know not what the harvest will be. There are, I presume, hundreds of towns in this district where the people have never heard the gospel preached. Only four missionaries are assigned here, Bro. Teeter leaving the field the 15th of June and going home to harvest his two hundred acres of wheat, and, I presume, to seed the ground again; I being absent from June 15th until now, leaving Brn. Madden and Ward in the conflict. Bro. F. S. Ward has just been traveling through the district as Bishop's agent, in the interests of that department of the work, while Bro. S. J. Madden is held to the branches, largely as an adjuster of and feeder to the flock.

The Western Kansas people this year are enjoying the benefits accruing from the big wheat crop, some fields yielding as high as fifty-one bushels to the acre. Help has been very scarce, at times a steam thrasher flailing away with only one man to pitch grain, endeavoring, as best he could, to satisfy its greed; wages from two dollars to three fifty per day. Seeding will soon be over now, then wages will lower, and there will be plenty of men idle in the winter days. I am feeling good in the work, preaching with good liberty, and with the same desire of all the missionaries. I hope many people during the coming winter will get to hear the wonderful things of God, as they are revealed through the gospel.

With a steadfast hope, I am in the conflict to prevail.

L. G. GURWELL.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, October 5.

Editors Herald: Again our monthly mail has arrived bringing us good news of cheer and progress in Joseph's land.

I see by HERALD of August 19, that there is some uneasiness caused by the report from here that the islands had been storm-swept again, in which report it is stated that there were six thousand drowned in the storm of January last. It should have read six hundred instead. While the gale from the southward caused the waters of the ocean to rise very high on some of the islands, we have not heard of any material damage being done, and all the letters state that no lives were lost. But many of the natives, and whites also, are fearful yet, when the winds blow or the sea rises higher than usual. A long while ago it was written of the condition in our days, "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." So some of those here who are leaders in government matters, and in society, are soon expecting to retire from active business and seek a more safe resting place. Yet it may be "As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him," for the Lord has a controversy with the inhabitants of this planet, and now-a-days it is not a very large place, and the whole creation groans by reason of man's injustice to his fellow man, and his ungenerous treatment of the counsels of his Creator.

We are feeling somewhat lonely here, for Bro. and Sr. Gilbert leave here tomorrow for home. They received such a shock to their nervous systems during the three days' exposure in that terrible storm in Hikueru and its attending circumstances that they never have recovered. Sr. Gilbert's bodily health, never too good, has suffered by the continued adverse circumstances attending those who travel in the Tuamotus; for the conditions for living there, and for traveling from island to island, are all far worse now than they have been for the last ten or more years.

While the storm brought much loss of property to some of them, yet the natives will lose more, I think, from the ravages of the insect which is eating their cocoanut trees, than from the storm. Places which formerly produced say one hundred tons of bufa now produce five tons, and on some of the motus they get none at all. To illustrate: The boat that took Bro. and Sr. Gilbert from Arutua to Ahe, took back a load of cocoanuts, a gift from the Saints of Ahe to their brethren of Arutua for food. It will seem almost incredible to Bro. and Sr. Devore, Case, Peterson, and others who were acquainted with the former prosperity of that island. Bro. Gilbert thinks that the able bodied people of that island will have to go to other islands to make a living when the diving reason is over, until the pest of those insects is past, for after about three years the young trees are killed, but the older trees bear most profusely again. All such things combined make it very discouraging for a white missionary, and especially for the wife. Bro. Gilbert promised to return when he left here in 1895, and never felt quite satisfied until he returned in 1901, and now feels that his work is finished here, so feels free to return. They both have done good in all the branches of the work, in branch, Sunday-school, and Religio, and leave here with the respect and confidence of the whole mission.

The printers are getting along very slowly with the Doctrine and Covenants. Both Emma and I are well, and try to be uncomplaining, while striving to perform our daily tasks as if in the presence of our Master.

Peace be with you all.

Your brother,

J. F. BURTON.

LOGAN, Iowa, October 6.

Dear Saints: This is the true Church, and I have felt so ever since I embraced this work, now over twenty-three years ago. Of late years there come to me from time to time stronger and greater testimonies, proving to me the divinity of this great and marvelous work, and confirming me in the faith. Over a year ago, when I was discouraged because of poor health and many other trials, I felt it would be a relief if God would call me home, but I always prayed that God's will be done. Then I was made to feel that I had a work yet to do, and I earnestly prayed that I might be able with the help of God to help some one to see the true way.

About three months later a friend came to me and wanted to know what we believed. She was a member of another Church, but said that she was dissatisfied with her faith because it did not agree with the Scriptures. I told her as best I could what we believe, and invited her to attend our services. She did, and she became convinced we had the truth. She became wholly and truly converted, and offered herself for baptism, as many of the Saints already know; but because of the opposition of relatives and her companion she was denied the blessed privilege of being numbered with God's children. She says her husband is all to her that any husband could possibly be, only in this he is very bitter. They have denied her the privilege of having anything to do with the Church or any of our people, and are doing all they can to change her faith; but still she believes, and only fears that she might not be able to continue faithful. She deserves and needs the sincere faith and prayers of the Saints, that she may be able to withstand all temptations and hold out faithful. Pray that her husband may be led to see and obey the truth, that they both may be saved in God's kingdom. This sister's name is Mrs. Lilly Osborn, of Norfolk, Nebraska, formerly of Logan, Iowa. Let us all pray earnestly for her.

I feel that this friend was sent to me to inquire of our faith in answer to prayer. It is encouraging to us when we can see and know that God does hear and answer our prayers, and that he is ever the same and mindful of the weakest of his creatures. I feel that I have much to overcome and I desire to go on in the good way. I feel I have a duty in teaching my children the way of truth, striving to lead my family in that way which if they obey will lead to life eternal.

Your sister,
MRS. MAY BENC.

FULTON, Iowa, October 22.

Editors Herald: I spent the first two weeks following our district conference, held at Waterloo, September 5, in Des Moines, where I had the privilege of hearing the debate between Bro. Mintun and Elder Halbesleben. From there I went to Muscatine, September 21, and remained there ten days, preaching eight sermons and visiting with the Saints.

I left the home of Bro. C. G. Dykes October 2, he accompanying me, and went to Davenport, where we spent about two hours very pleasantly visiting the machine-shops at the Government arsenal on the island across the big bridge from Davenport. In the afternoon I said good-bye to Bro. Dykes and boarded the City of Wynona and continued my journey up the river, arriving at Clinton in the evening. I found the Saints well, and on Saturday evening several Saints and friends met at Bro. August Monson's,—where I have made my mission home,—and gave me a very pleasant surprise. Refreshments were served, and a very pleasant evening was enjoyed. Then on the day following I began anew the work of my mission to Clinton.

Sunday, October 4, according to a resolution of the district conference and by request of the district president, W. E. Turner, I ordained Bro. August Monson an elder. Monday evening I preached on the street at Camanche to a few men. I had other work for the rest of the week and was called to Fulton, Iowa, to assist Bro. Turner in tent-meetings, Bro. Case having been called home by the sickness of his wife and sister. I arrived at Fulton Wednesday, October 14, and found that the brethren had been doing excellent work. A splendid interest was manifest. The Sunday before Bro. Case had baptized four, and several more deeply interested. I was called on to preach Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings. I had to return to Clinton by Sunday, where I baptized five precious souls into the kingdom; another also gave her name and said she wanted to be baptized as soon as I returned. Those baptized in Clinton were confirmed at the evening service, Bro. Alexander McCallum and the writer officiating.

Upon returning here I found that Bro. Turner had not been idle, having also baptized five and has good prospects for more.

I preached to a very attentive audience of between seventy-five and one hundred last night. I find that the consistent lives of the Saints here have done much to make the present work a success. There have been in all eleven baptisms here. Brn. Turner and Case have been giving full proof of their ministry; may the Lord bless them, is my prayer.

Praying for the success of the work, I am as ever,
MARCUS H. COOK.

TRYON, Nebraska, October 15.

Dear Herald: You are to me a companion and instructor: companion because you come with the words and thoughts of others which are interesting and cheering; instructor, because you teach us the "way of God more perfectly." I especially enjoy the instruction to do what is right, and calling our attention to things that are or are not right. The Bible says that except our righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees we shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven. So we "hunger and thirst after righteousness" that we may be worthy to enter that kingdom. And while we are reaching out and trying to be filled with righteousness, the enemy of our souls finds plenty to tempt us from the straight and narrow way. And I am afraid that one reason we so often are led into temptation is that we do not take a firm enough stand against the enemy, and make provision for yielding by saying, "I will try," instead of saying, "I will." We make resolutions instead of promises to God. When I look back over the two years that I have called myself a "Saint," and see the wrecks of resolutions strewn along the way, I realize that one promise made to God (and made known to others, which, by the way, is a great help) is worth all the resolutions I could make. But it seems as though we can not overcome all our faults at once (I do not mean this for an excuse for my faults that I still have), but must grow in grace, as well as knowledge and love.

The Bible says, "Confess your faults," which I believe is a good way to overcome them, as we would very soon get tired of confessing the same thing over again. I have always tried to live right; but not until after I was baptized did I have the courage to say, "I will not yield to certain temptations," as before I was afraid I would fail; I was depending too much on my own strength (though I professed religion and had been immersed by a Methodist Episcopal minister).

My mother's family is much opposed to the Latter Day Saint doctrine, but my own immediate family thinks it is all right. I have no relatives, except my mother-in-law, in the Church.

I ask the prayers of all who are on speaking terms with our Father in heaven to the end that all my people may see the right way, that we might meet as one unbroken family in the world to come.

With charity and love to all the Saints I am,
Your sister in Christ,
BLANCHE E. CLINE.

Extracts from Letters.

O. H. Bailey wrote from Viola, Illinois, October 20: "Bro. Frank Russell and myself are holding forth here at present, with fairly good crowds. Interest seems good. Baptized five four weeks ago. More to follow soon, we think."

Columbus Scott wrote from Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 16: "Splendid services here last Sunday, the 11th, forenoon and evening. Spirit with us in much power. Have just returned from Hazel Dell, where we held interesting meetings. Bro. M. M. Turpen is looking after the interests of the work here and in adjacent vicinities, and is well liked, and his labors are appreciated. We expect to attend conference of Fremont District at Glenwood, the 17th and 18th instants."

Sr. Margaret Reed wrote from Myrtlepoint, Oregon, October 15, expressing her pleasure in reading the HERALD, especially the letters from those known to her. Bro. Lambert's recent letter brought many old memories to her. She says: "How I should like to see all the Saints I knew thirty-five years ago at Nauvoo. I was a lost sheep for twenty-five years, but I am glad I am found. I praise God and thank him for sparing me. I ever pray to be good."

Clay Bridgforth wrote from Poplar Bluff, Missouri, October 14, that he had moved there from Unity, Tennessee, and desires that Bro. H. Sparling or others of the elders find him. He says: "I am a poor man, but my house has been the elders' home for twenty years. I know of eight members here. I live north of town."

D. E. Tucker wrote from Kaitangata, New Zealand, September 26: "All is well. Will ordain Bro. R. Hall an elder Sunday evening, and he will take the field with me. I am compelled to return home within a year or less time, on account of very important business which can not be postponed longer than that time. Am happy, and feel somewhat encouraged in the work here."

A. M. Merrill wrote from Milan, New York, October 15, renewing for the HERALD, and says: "We sincerely hope to find it as profitable, if not more so, in the year to come as in the year past. We have often read its sermons and knelt in prayer together, asking God to help us to grow and profit by its teachings and truth. And we take pleasure in loaning these papers to our neighbors, who are becoming deeply interested in the teachings of our Church. I have also loaned reading to the Christian minister and his wife, and in attending prayer-meeting have been asked to pray; also while in preaching service was asked to pray, which I did kneeling at my seat, and I prayed that some might hear and know the gospel as upheld by Jesus Christ, who alone can give the true spirit of worship by obedience to the truth as taught by him and his chosen vessels. Having been ordained to preach in the M. E. Church, and being known as once having preached, I now have a grand chance to turn the guns against the enemy of souls, and show that I had no right to take this honor upon myself unless called as was Aaron. I never see an elder or a missionary here. We have a baby to be blessed, and there is another to be blessed at the home of my brother-in-law. I have asked the Christian minister for the use of his church building if some of the elders come. My whole life and soul have been blessed, and I have only one desire: that is for a humble, prayerful, and simple Christian character, that people may see that I love this gospel better than all else. Surely you can not blame me, it is so grand and blessed."

A thrill of pleasure surely has been felt by every Catholic in America at some indications of the personal disposition of Pope Pius X. His openly expressed dislike to be shut up "in that box"—the sede gestatoria; his welcome to the laboring people of Rome; his informality of reception in audiences; his luncheon with his friend Perosi, the musician; his partial suppression of the Swiss Guard; his ordering of a table "set for four" to dine with his secretaries—whatever of absolute exactness these reports possess, there is conveyed at any rate a personal tendency towards democratic simplicity which evokes at once a pleasurable response in the heart of every man born and bred in the atmosphere of democratic institutions.

No exaggeration is intended either of fact or inference. It is not to be forgotten that the government of the church, even humanly, is the exercise of a "world power." The administration of merely executive functions over three hundred million persons throughout the entire globe; in all kinds of countries and races; all manner of social and political organizations; customs and habits; circumstances and requirements; means of influence and guidance—all this involves a system of precedents and order, an intrinsic complexity and importance of function, which from the natural, physical point of view alone, demands formality and conservatism of method, at times obnoxious in some quarters, and perhaps almost inadequate in others.

But, on the whole, it is true of this modern age that the trend of its thought and inclination is democratic, and it is best led and taught by democratic ways. Whatever tends towards our own standards of life and intercourse, of relation between men as men, if it respects the sacredness of lawful authority, of office and of function—that surely must elicit the readiest and heartiest response of freemen.

All hail, then, to Pope Pius X! The world has welcomed him enthusiastically. With triple reverence do we hail the spiritual powers with which he is endowed by his office—reverence all the deeper because it goes beyond personality and form to the spiritual Faith that invests its object with highest sacredness—divine power and infallible guidance in official teaching.

Don'ts for Digestion.

Don't eat when very tired, if you expect to get any good from your food and preserve your beauty.

When you are exhausted, instead of eating, lie down for ten or twenty minutes.

Don't eat more than one hearty meal a day. This is the secret of good looks, health and long life—a secret which, if every one followed, the doctors could not make a living.

Don't eat much meat in hot weather if you would keep your skin free of eruptions.

Don't eat hot or fresh bread if you want to be healthy and beautiful.

Don't eat cold, starchy foods like potato salad and cold porridge unless you have strong digestive organs.

Don't eat ice cream too fast. Eaten slowly and allowed to melt in the mouth it can do no harm to either stomach or complexion.

Don't drink iced water. It kills more persons than strychnine does. Cool water quenches thirst much better than ice cold fluid.

Don't drink much water at meals, but take a glassful the first thing in the morning and the last thing at night if you want peach blow cheeks.

Don't drink too much coffee or tea unless you want a complexion like leather in color and texture.

Don't drink sparkling waters and unsweetened lemonade if you want to gain flesh. They act directly on fatty tissue.

Don't eat potatoes, peas, macaroni, cream, olive oil, pastry, and bonbons if you want to lose flesh.

Don't go to bed hungry. A glass of milk or a cup of chocolate will refresh you.

Don't think you can eat too much spinach, lettuce, water cress, dandelion, and carrots. They are splendid complexion beautifiers.—Kansas City Journal August 8, 1903.

The rich and striking contents of the November World's Work, covering a variety of timely and vital subjects, more than ever emphasize its title as the magazine of achievement. With "The Post-office and the People," M. G. Cunniff inaugurates a notable series of articles, the results of searching, first-hand investigations. Significant facts and pictures reveal conditions and inadequacies that every citizen ought to know. "John S. Sargent," by Charles H. Caffin, is an eminent art critic's comprehensive estimate of the world's greatest portrait painter, illustrated with reproductions of many of his noted pictures. There is a personal sketch of the artist by Evan Mills. In "What the Macedonian Trouble Is" Louise Parker Richards treats lucidly an opportune subject, with the aid of many new pictures. "The Corn Growers," by Professor T. N. Carver, of Harvard University, is the first of a series of noteworthy articles on The New Agriculture. Professor Carver rode a thousand miles on horseback through the corn belt, getting his facts. The article is profusely illustrated. An explanation of the personal character of the Sultan of Turkey is made in "His Majesty Jekyll and Hyde" by Henry Thompson, for twenty-five years a resident of Constantinople. Both Christian and Mohammedan points of view are offered with many interesting stories. The usual financial article points "The Lesson of the Steel Corporation," and shows that it was a promoters' scheme. Professor William Z. Ripley, of Harvard University, tells interestingly of "The Labor Union Conquest of the United States," showing how our industrial army has outstripped that of Great Britain and Ireland. He illustrates his article with a diagram that graphically shows trade union membership in the British Isles, the United States, France, and Germany. Another opportune feature is "The Russian Absorption of Asia" by Charles W. Barnaby, the story of an eye witness of the acquisition of Manchuria and Mongolia. Accompanying is a map, showing the Russian advances during the past fifty years. M. L. Brittain writes of "The Rural School Awakening in the South," and shows the need of such an awakening. Isaac F. Marcossou tells how "The Country Merchant Come to Town" does a business each fall in New York of half a billion dollars. A plea for a national museum of industrial art is made by Louis Rhead in "The Industrial Arts in America." F. T. Cooper has a sincere appreciation of Mr. Kipling's "The Five Nations," with a new portrait of the poet. In "An Experiment in Teaching Farmers' Wives," Professor Liberty H. Bailey tells interestingly of a unique educational plan. The editorial portraits include Joseph Chamber, John Hays Hammond, Mayor Seth Low, Charles Francis Murphy, and Doctor John Huston Finley. The departments of the The March of Events, Some Recent Books and Among the World's Workers maintain the usual high standard of the magazine.

Motions to sustain the general Church authorities and the missionaries sent to this district, carried. Adjourned to meet at Ogden, Utah, the first Saturday in March, 1904.

Lamoni.—Stake conference met with the Lone Rock, Missouri, Branch on October 10 and 11, 1903, and was presided over by Elders John Smith, J. A. Gunsolley, and F. B. Blair, the Stake presidency. D. J. Krahl, secretary; Jessie Campbell, assistant secretary. Ministry reporting: John Smith, F. B. Blair, J. R. Lambert, J. A. Gunsolley, William Anderson, Elbert A. Smith, Duncan Campbell, J. S. Snively, J. R. Evans, H. A. Stebbins, D. C. White, George T. Angell, David Keown, W. E. Williams, W. H. Kephart, D. D. Young, Leonard Holloway, A. B. Young, G. M. Jamison, Price McPeck, F. P. Hitchcock, John Lovell, E. E. Marshall, D. J. Krahl. Branches reported as follows: Pawnee 29, Wirt 35, Leon 42, Greenville 50, Hiteman 53, Centerville 54, Pleasanton 94, Cleveland 99, Davis City 100, Lone Rock 79, Allendale 86, Evergreen 107, Lucas 212, Lamoni 1366. The Stake Sunday-school association reported. Bill of C. I. Carpenter, stake recorder, for work on records was referred to the auditing committee appointed to audit the accounts of the stake bishop, W. W. Scott, J. A. Garver, and W. J. Mather. Bills of Herald Publishing House for $8, rent of stake presidency's office, and $4.30, secretary's expenses were allowed. Charles W. Dillon, of the Evergreen Branch, was ordained to the office of elder by D. C. White and G. W. Blair. It was "Resolved that the resolution in regard to the payment of bills include the bills and expenses of the bishopric of the Stake as well as all others." Resolution referred to is as follows: "Resolved that it is the opinion of this body, that the necessary expenses incurred in the legitimate work of the Stake, should be borne by the bishopric, provided, that all bills shall first be approved by vote of the stake council, or conference." The conference voted to hold a ten days' reunion in the Lamoni Stake in 1904 and appointed a committee of three consisting of F. B. Blair, Duncan Campbell, and Price McPeck in charge of same, with power to appoint other committees. Collection taken up at the Sunday afternoon service which amounted to $8.65. Preaching by Duncan Campbell, William Anderson, J. S. Snively, and John Smith. Adjourned to meet with the Lamoni Branch in February, 1904, at call of the stake presidency.

Eastern Wales.—Convened at 137 Severn Road, Canton, Cardiff, October 10 and 11, T. Gould and E. B. Morgan presiding, B. Green and E. J. Trapp secretaries. A few Saints from Western District were welcome visitors. Ministry reporting: E. B. Morgan, T. Jones, T. Gould, J. Jones, B. Green, E. J. Trapp, J. Evans. Cardiff Branch reported a net gain of two by letter. No report from Nantyglo or Lydney Branches. Bishop's agent's report: Receipts, £1 10s; expenditures, £10 10s; balance on hand, £19 2s; audited and found correct. District treasurer's report, account balanced; audited and found correct. A committee to draft a code of general rules for the district and present same to next conference was appointed. Committee: E. B. Morgan, E. J. Trapp, and B. Green. Officers elected: T. Gould president, B. Green secretary, E. J. Trapp treasurer. Resolved that the whole of district fund and collections be handed to Cardiff Branch to defray conference expenses, and providing there remains still a deficit the same shall be placed to the debit of the district fund. Adjourned to meet at time and place appointed by president. Resolved that we sustain the general Church authorities. Resolved that we request Apostle J. W. Rushton to represent us at the next General Conference. Preaching by Brn. Gould and Morgan.

Convention Minutes.

Nauvoo.—Convened at Adrian, Illinois, October 2. Called to order by Superintendent George P. Lambert; Madge Craig, secretary; Jessie Ward, assistant. Schools reporting: Farmington, Burlington, Montrose, Rock Creek. Reported by district superintendent, as in "good working order." School at Fort Madison (reorganized in June) still struggling; school at Keb (a mining town), verbally reported as "enjoying lively sessions at present." Our library work, I find "looking up and prospering," says superintendent Lambert. Treasurer's report shows $9.89 on hand. The Sunday-school entertainment in evening was well attended; and although lengthy, was very pleasing and interesting, showing care and practice on part of Rock Creek School—aided by Farmington and Burlington. Convention adjourned to meet the day before, and at same place as next district conference.

Northwestern Kansas.—Convened with the Twin Creek Branch, near Osborne, Osborne County Kansas, September 7, 1903, at 8 p. m., F. E. Taylor presiding. Secretary's report read and approved. Sunday-schools reporting: Rural Dale 59, Mount Hope 35, and Minersville 22. Officers elected: F. E. Taylor assistant superintendent, Cora Cook librarian. A good program was rendered. Adjourned to meet with the Twin Creek Branch on Friday before conference. John A. Teeter superintendent, Myrtle Coop secretary.

Fremont.—District convention convened at Glenwood, Iowa, Thursday, October 15, in routine business. Friday, 9 a. m., social services in charge of G. F. Walling and D. R. Chambers. 10 a. m., prayer by T. A. Hougas. Librarian's report was read. Secretary's and superintendent's bills presented, which were allowed. Reading of secretary's reports. Paper: "Home Class Work in the District," by district secretary, followed by a discussion and short talks on subjects brought up. Talk by General Superintendent on "Order of Sunday-school." At 2:30 p. m., three two-minute papers: "The Teacher's Aim," Mrs. A. J. Davidson; "The Teacher's Example," G. F. Walling; "The Teacher's Preparation," followed by general discussion. Institute work in charge of T. A. Hougas, entitled "Work of Sunday-school Teacher." Sunday-school newspaper read by Misses Susie and Agnes Dunsdon. Adjourned.

Reunion.

The reunion of the Northwestern Kansas District met with the Twin Creek Branch, near Osborne, Osborne County Kansas, September 4-14. The speakers were Elders J. F. McClure and S. J. Madden, Brn. F. E. Taylor, F. S. Ward, and Alfred Madden.

Elders Ammon White and J. A. Gunsolley came the 8th and stayed till close. Some good talks and advice were given. The meetings were spiritual throughout the session. Two were baptized on Sunday, September 14,—one sister and one brother. A number of Saints from other branches attended. S. J. Madden elected district president and F. E. Taylor district secretary. Saints, let us all strive to do our duty at all times and we will receive our reward. Pray for me that I may be more faithful than I have been. Myrtle Coop, reunion secretary.

Little Sioux.—Convened at Woodbine, Iowa, October 2, 1903, at 10 a. m., F. A. Fry, assistant superintendent, in charge, Annie Stuart secretary. The reports from fifteen of the schools of the district (two not reporting) show an enrollment of 771. A greater interest is shown in the Home Department than heretofore. The interest was good throughout the convention, the Lord being with us. Adjourned to meet at Logan in February.

Conference Notices.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Southern California: That I may be able to properly supply the legitimate calls on me, I earnestly request that you all try to comply with the law governing in financial matters. In looking over the list of names of those who have paid, I find quite a number have not complied with this important law. If you can not pay all at once make an effort to do what you can. The treasury is at present empty, and prompt action on your part should be had, if possible. Anyone wishing to comply with the request to make inventory and file same with the Presiding Bishop and not understanding how to proceed, please notify me and I will gladly aid you. Saints, let us be up and doing, and place ourselves in the front ranks of those who are willing to make a full compliance with the advanced steps taken by the Church. Do not forget my address, Anaham, California, R. F. D. No. 1. Your colaborer,

A. CARMICHAEL.

Died.

RONAT.—At Lamoni, Iowa, October 14, 1903, of many infirmities, Sr. Marie Ronat. She united with the Reorganized Church of Christ at Sacramento, California, being baptized by Elder J. H. Parr, April 29, 1894. She came to Lamoni a few year ago. But little is known of her life, only that she was born in France and that her husband and children are dead. A nephew lives in Sacramento and two nieces in St. Louis. Funeral sermon by Elder H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bishop E. Kelley.

ELLIOTT.—Sr. Elizabeth F. Elliott, born at Conifer, Jefferson County, Colorado, September 22, 1890, died at Idaho Springs, October 11, 1903, from effects of blood-poisoning caused by stepping on a rusty nail, aged 13 years and 19 days. Was baptized at Conifer, August 11 last, by J. Kemp. Father, mother, three sisters, and five brothers, also many friends mourn her departure. Funeral services at the Conifer Schoolhouse by J. Kemp, attended by a large concourse of friends.

MADISON.—Inger M., daughter of Bro. James and Sr. Amelia Madison; born at Olborg, Denmark, September 17, 1879; came to America in September, 1882. They settled in Pottawattamie County, Iowa. She obeyed the gospel September 30, 1891; baptized by Elder H. N. Hansen, in Hazel Dell Township, Pottawattamie County, Iowa. Died at Benner, Colorado, of Bright's disease, September 29, 1903, aged 24 years and 12 days. Funeral services at cemetery near Hazel Dell Church, ten miles north of Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 10 1903, conducted by Elder C. Scott assisted by M. Turpen. Thus passed away a faithful follower of the Savior.

SCOTT.—Earl Edwin, second son of James and Sarah Scott, was born at Blue Rapids, Kansas, March 7, 1875; blessed by Bro. John Landers, when a month old; died October 3, 1903, at the home of his parents, Grow, Oklahoma, after an illness of six weeks, from what was pronounced typhoid fever. Earl expressed a living faith in God's promises by talking of his work, also by calling for the elders to administer during his severe affliction. The death messenger came to call him from this earth life at four minutes past ten o'clock p. m. of the above date. He leaves his parents and four brothers, also a host of friends to mourn his departure. Funeral was conducted at the cemetery by W. T. Rook, October 4. Sermon by Elder Hubert Case, assisted by L. W. Pate.

MORRIS.—Martha, the infant child of Bro. David and Sr. Ellinor Morris, was born March 28, 1902; died of consumption of the bowels at Dinas, Glamorgan, South Wales, September 29, 1903. She was interred at Trealar Cemetery, October 3, 1903, Elder E. B. Morgan officiating. Bro. Morris, the father of the child, had emigrated to America quite recently. At that time the child was in good health, the mother being alone to bear the burden of care and grief. Much sympathy was shown by all, the Saints taking special interest in her affairs, which was comforting to her and will be consoling to the father.

BISHOP.—Lot Albert, infant son of Bro. Lot and Sr. Margaret Bishop, was born December 10, 1901, died of scarlet fever, September 23, 1903, at Dinas, Glamorgan, South Wales, Elder E. B. Morgan officiating, assisted by Elder Thomas Jones. The interment took place at Trealar Cemetery, September 26. After much sickness and repeated recoveries the little fellow succumbed to this to him deadly malady. By administration two days before his death he received a blessing by immediate relief from his constant suffering, and became calm and peaceful; so much so that he was thought to be dying then.

YOUNG.—Jessie Marie Young, daughter of Bro. George and Sr. Daisy Young, aged 6 months and 20 days, at Byesville, Ohio, October 20, 1903. She was the only and first born, was idolized by her parents, and indeed was a "little bud of hope." Their loss is a severe blow. May the good Master comfort their sad hearts.

The "Export and Domestic Number" of the Electrical Review for October 10, was an exceedingly interesting number. It is world-wide in its interest and range of subjects. The Review stands in the front ranks of technical journalism, and seems to grow better every issue. Those interested in electrical science would do well to send for a sample copy. It is published at 13 Park Row, New York, N. Y.

Education's Debt to Science.

The last century's progress in representative government has also made new demands upon the educational system. While we have not witnessed such marked advances in America as have been seen in Europe, because we began the century with a more representative system, we have nevertheless been trying to interpret the documents of our forefathers, and endeavoring to adapt our political institutions to the industrial changes. We have, therefore, gained new conceptions of political responsibility for which the old-time school made no provision, but which gives to the school of to-day the opportunity for a fuller expression of equality. A no less significant result of the march of events in the nineteenth century is the development of humanitarianism, which has received notable reverses in recent wars and other barbaric activities, but nevertheless encourages the belief that the fraternal spirit is influencing men, and may become a greater inspiration in the school of to-morrow.

We may ask ourselves, then, how may the results of the nineteenth century's industrial, political, and social advantages be utilized in the school for the extension of the worker's liberty? During the nineteenth century the greatest contribution to education came from science. Theoretical and applied science contributed to man's welfare and penetrated even into the recesses of the academic curriculum, while in the scientific schools education is paying its debt to industry. Nineteenth century science is the direct result of the industrial revolution and the greater emphasis laid on the relation of man to natural advantages. Not only was man's dependence on the earth evidenced in the use of raw materials, but in the application of machinery for purposes of industrial progress the same laws were exhibited which attracted the attention of the evolutionists in the biological world. Charles Darwin is not merely the product of an age which was devoted to scientific research; he is chiefly the child of an industrial era in which the survival of the fittest and the doctrine of natural selection were daily demonstrated. Industry thus contributed to education its most important doctrine, that of evolution or development, and education reciprocates by giving the youth not only general intellectual training, but special technical skill.—From "The Training of the Citizen" by Charles Zueblin, in October Chautauquan.

Eugene Wood, who had a paper in a recent McClure's on "The Swimming Hole," has followed it with one on "The Sabbath School" in the November number. Mr. Wood seems to be tilling his own little plot of new land, the commonplace doings of commonplace people, the class to which most of us belong. No one who has sat through the droning sessions of the old-fashioned Sabbath-school in the days before golf links covered the land and the automobile ran riotously on the highways, will fail to be amused and perhaps touched by this clever paper. The little flow of feeling continuously breaking through the whimsical humor gives great charm to Mr. Wood's work.

A study of national characteristics is always interesting, especially of a people like the Scotch, possessing strong personalities. Bro. J. W. Rushton handles the matter nicely in the November Autumn Leaves. At least one who is not a Scotchman will appreciate it.

THE Alaskan boundary decision has caused considerable agitation of the question in Canada, and in some instances considerable feeling has been manifested. After all, Canada and the United States are too near together, country and people, to be disturbed over boundary question. The boundary question is one which should not bother the two countries.

Under the management of the stake presidency a series of meetings were held in the brick church building in Lamoni last week, and were continued into this week. The attendance has been good, and we trust good will result abundantly. Bro. Hilliard has been the principal speaker.

In an article in the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, for October 14, under the above caption and over the signature of "Penn," the late effort of the Methodist ministers of the "city of brotherly love" holding a meeting for the purpose of discussing the "Menace of Mormonism," is quite exhaustively noticed. From it we quote enough to give point to a few thoughts on the subject:

The Methodist ministers of this city at their meeting on Monday declined to pass a resolution similar to the one adopted recently by the Baptist ministers on the subject of the right of Reed Smoot, of Utah, to be a member of the United States Senate. For some time past Smoot has been an object of much alarm to various religious bodies which have been induced to look upon him as a monstrous reprobate in his morals and a traitorous-spirited enemy to his country in his religion. Originally held up to scorn and contumely as a polygamist, he was declared unfit to sit with the conscript fathers at Washington in their temple of virtue, and a widely organized attempt was made to exclude him on that ground, as he would have deserved to be, if it were true that he had thus violated the laws of the nation. But no proof whatever was advanced that he was living with more than one wife. Indeed, what was reported of his opinions and habits served somewhat to raise an impression that in point of personal morality he might easily invite a comparison of his own character with the character of some of his senatorial colleagues and not shrink from the test. However this may be, there seems to have been little doubt that Smoot's marital relations were those of a monogamist and that, therefore, there was no reason to deny him admission to the Senate on the ground that he had entered into lawless and immoral contracts of matrimony.

But the line of attack which since has been maintained against him concerns his religious opinions and connections as a Mormon. It is now contended that the Senate should expel him because polygamy is recognized in the doctrines of his Church, because he is an officer of that Church and because fidelity to it is made paramount to fidelity to any other human institution, including the Federal government. While it is admitted that he may not practice polygamy, it is his religion that the Senate is to be urged by "public opinion" to consider as a proof of his disloyalty and unfitness, despite his oath of office and the earnest protestations of his devotion to the republic and its constitution. It seems that the Reverend Doctor Johnson, in supporting the resolution and in replying to the objection that "public opinion" was a loose phrase, declared that anyhow "the Mormons were displaying a baneful amount of activity," but the Reverend Doctor Sayers got the question on the right ground as far as the duty of his Church is concerned when he said that "it would be a good thing if the Methodists displayed as much."

What have these Methodist ministers to do with the question of a man's religion where the qualifications entitling him to a seat in the national halls of legislation are concerned?

If there is any pith in any objection, it is that allegiance to his church affiliation was paramount to his obligation to the government, and that as a "Mormon" he could not be loyal to the United States; for the reason that in case of a possible conflict between the edicts of the Church and the statute laws, his duty required him to be subject to the Church, even to the disregarding the laws of his country.

It has often been shown in these columns that there is nothing in the revelations given to the Church at its organization and during the formative period subsequent to April 6, 1830, which justifies or demands such an extreme rendition of church obligation. It is true that in the written and oral contention urged by the ministry against the views held by the various denominations professing to base the claims of their organizations on the word of God, such quotations of the word as, "We ought to obey God rather than man" (Acts 5: 21); "Yea, let God be true, but every man a liar" (Romans 3: 4), and others of like import, are used to enforce the sentiment that the word of God, and especially all that is understood as commands, are to be considered as binding and of first importance. But this has been understood to refer to the duty of man in a spiritual sense, and had not the element of disloyalty to country in it.

In the "Testimony of the United Presbyterian Church," formed at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1858, composed of the "Associate and Associate Reformed Churches of North America," which claimed as their parent the Church of Scotland, there is the following: "Article 13. That the law of God is supreme in its authority and obligations, and where commands of church and state conflict we are to obey God rather than man."—What the World Believes, p. 447.

In the affirmations of beliefs in some others of the church denominations a similar declaration of the supremacy of the obligation to God over the obligation to obey human laws and rulers may be found; and we are quite sure no stronger expression of such belief can be found in the faith of the "Mormons" of Utah; or in the confession of faith in any branch of those believing in the angel's message, or the mission of Joseph Smith and his teachings.

We have never seen in the public press an expression of distrust as to the loyalty of the United Presbyterians; nor have we ever read a word of stricture or condemnation of the above article found in their Testimony. Why have these Methodist ministers, now so anxious to have Mr. Smoot, of Utah, expelled from the senatorial office and communion, because they fear that his devotion to his Church makes him a dangerous man who may prove disloyal to the country, never assailed the United Presbyterians because of their public avowal that where "commands of church and state conflict we are to obey God rather than man"? There is not a preacher of them all, we venture to state, who has not time after time in public ministrations referred to the "three Hebrew children," and commended their faithfulness in suffering punishment rather than to yield to the commands of a king, the supreme human authority in the land where they dwelt. By what rule of consistency can they commend this steadfastness in a hero of the ancient time and condemn a man now because they fear he may prove to be just that sort of a hero in these last days?

We notice this for the reason that the principle involved in this Methodist objection to Mr. Smoot is of such a character that it reaches out and includes others whose way of worship may not be pleasing to these Methodist objectors. They have assumed that what they call "Mormonism" is a "menace to Christianity." What they mean by Christianity is evidently the particular religious philosophy professed by themselves, first, and after that those systems held by other denominations held by them to be orthodox. Protestantism was and is a "menace" to Catholicism; and reformers since Calvin and Knox have been a menace to Protestantism. For what reason? Because Catholicism needed reforming. So did Protestantism, and, if the doctrines and tenets enunciated by Joseph Smith and his compeers during his lifetime are a menace to the dogmas of the "Christianity" referred to by these ministers, it is because those dogmas need reforming, or relegating to the oblivion imposed on the errors of Catholicism by protesting reformers, and those errors of Protestantism discovered by John and Charles Wesley, etc., to the end.

We object seriously to the making of any man's religion a cause of war against him when no overt act of outrage against the laws and usages of the social institution of the country is alleged, or proved. It is a dangerous principle and is a menace to the rights of citizens of the United States affirmed by statutes everywhere.

The Catholic, the Presbyterian, the Episcopal, the Methodist Episcopal, and each of the later brood of Churches all accept the idea that if God commands, men should obey. It would then be bad policy as well as be subversive of human liberty to exclude any man from the dignities of office in the national service because of his religion, upon the hypothesis that he might at some time be under the necessity of making choice between his allegiance to his Church relationship and his duty to the country during his term of office. Every Church member is interested in the question, for he may be involved in its solution soon or late.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF M. H. FORSCUTT.

We were called to the home of Bro. Mark Hill Forscutt on the morning of October 18, by message from his daughter, Sr. Ruby Faunce, announcing the death of Bro. Mark, at four o'clock that morning, and requesting us to be present at the funeral obsequies to be held on Tuesday, the 20th. We responded to the the call, went to the house of mourning, whence the body of wife and mother had so lately been borne; Sr. Forscutt having died on the 5th, thirteen days before Bro. Mark's departure.

The long service of Bro. Mark, or "Uncle Mark" as the Saints delighted to call him, his connection with the varied interests of the Church, his extended labors at different places where he had been stationed by the Church, and his long association and friendship with us, made the task which devolved upon us an arduous and difficult one. However, Bro. George H. Hilliard accompanied us and we found Bro. Columbus Scott and M. M. Turpen already there, together with friends and Saints from Omaha, Nebraska, and Shenandoah, Iowa.

The post of the Grand Army of the Republic, of which Bro. Mark was a member, kindly took an interest in the obsequies and furnished a guard of honor, who took charge of the body and aided in the services at the Hall and the grave.

The Nebraska City daily Tribune of the 20th had the following in memory of the occasion:

The funeral services of the late Reverend Mark H. Forscutt were held this afternoon at two o'clock from Memorial Hall, and were attended by hundreds who had known and respected him in his lifetime. So many were present to pay the last tribute of respect to the dead that the spacious hall was unable to shelter the throng, and many remained outside in the autumn sunshine, unable to gain admittance. The services were conducted by President Joseph Smith, of the Church of Latter Day Saints, who had been associated with the deceased for many years in the work of the Church and the publications issued by it.

President Smith spoke eloquently and feelingly of the life and character of the deceased, and drew from the large concourse of people in attendance an indication, in some measure, of the respect and esteem in which he was held. He paid a glowing tribute to the sterling character, the high integrity, and the ripe scholarship of the departed and the fearless and patriotic stand he had always taken for the principles he believed to be right, regardless of the personal consequences. He spoke of incidents in the personal history of the deceased showing his character as a fearless advocate of right even to the extreme of imperiling his own life.

The casket bore the flag of freedom, the Stars and Stripes, under which the deceased had rendered loyal service, and was buried amid a mass of flowers, the last gift of the hearts and hands who through life had loved him. Many floral designs of exquisite beauty were among the offerings of relatives and friends. At the conclusion great numbers of those who attended the services at Memorial Hall, continued with the funeral cortege to the cemetery, where all that was mortal of him who once lived and wrought among men as God gave him to see the right, was laid to his last peaceful rest in the quiet shades of Wyuka.

TROUBLE IN THE CAMP OF SEVENTH DAY ADVENTISTS.

BATTLE CREEK, Michigan, October 26.—Seventh Day Adventists are facing a schism in their Church because Mrs. Ellen G. White, prophetess and leader of the denomination, has denounced Doctor J. H. Kellogg, chief man in that Church, as teaching dangerous religious doctrines. Mrs. White has been regarded by her followers as infallible, and the instructions which she gives to the Church she says she gets direct from God in visions.

Doctor Kellogg, who is at the head of the Battle Creek Sanitarium and its twenty-five branches all over the world, has just issued a book entitled "The Living Temple." Mrs. White says that God warned her in a vision that the teachings in this book are unscriptural and dangerous. This warning was presented to the Adventist General Conference committee, which authorized that it be printed in this week's official organ of the denomination. —New York Sun, October 27.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Daniel MacGregor, reporting for the Canadian Mission for last quarter, reports forty-three baptisms.

D. A. Anderson, writing from Castle Rock, Washington, October 23, reports encouragingly of the work of Brn. G. T. Griffiths, A. Allen, and himself in that field, giving promise eventually of success. Brn. Allen and Anderson have arranged to open up the work in Portland, Oregon, beginning November 1, and have secured a hall for the purpose. There are a number of families of Saints now in Portland who are cheerfully aiding them in their work, all of which betokens success.*

L. R. Devore in letter of October 19, reports number of visitors to the Temple in Kirtland since May 18, one thousand two hundred and twenty-one and says "still they come." A new branch has been organized in Kirtland, with Bro. L. R. Devore as president, which gives him additional work to that of looking after Temple affairs.

C. G. Lewis, Boyne City, Michigan, reports encouragingly of the work in that field. He also incloses check for ten dollars for himself and wife to aid in further repairs on the Kirtland Temple, and with true devotion to the cause of Christ says: "We desire to take some little part in the work of repairing the 'Lord's House', which was built by such great sacrifices of our dear brothers and sisters of seventy years ago. I read that our brothers worked night and day and our sisters were engaged in spinning and knitting in order to clothe those who were laboring on the building. No doubt the Lord alone only knows of the signs of poverty, tribulation, and distress they were wont to pass through in order to accomplish the work of this building, which now needs some repairs. I was pleased one week ago last Sunday while at South Boardman when the Bishop's request was mentioned touching the final repairs on the Temple. After the meeting, it seemed as if each one wanted to be first to hand his offering to the branch treasurer, and almost eight dollars was there paid from their loose pocket change. Not the amount paid in, particularly, that did me so much good, as it was the spirit in which it was done; and well they might so do, for two of God's bright and holy angels were seen standing one on each side of the pulpit with hands stretched out over the two elders leading the meeting and towards the Saints, as if in the act of blessing them. It was a time of rejoicing." We think the foregoing but an intimation of what might be done in every branch of the Church with little or no effort, if the Saints would take hold of the matter. For such a work as the restoring the veils of the Temple, there ought to be but little time consumed in furnishing the means for the work by the body of Saints now in the world. When a work like this is to be done, every one should feel that he will at once perform his part in the matter.

Bro. U. W. Greene, Dayton, Ohio, October 26:—"Work opening here nicely. Two recently baptized, ordained priest and teacher yesterday. Bright prospects ahead. The Ohio district needs help. Brn. Etzenhouser and E. E. Long doing fine in new fields. Bro. Kelley has departed to Louisville. There have been nearly one hundred baptisms by the local and missionary forces the past quarter.

THE receipt of the Church History sent to the Library of the Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio, is acknowledged to Bishop E. L. Kelley as follows:

Dear Sirs: I beg to acknowledge, with the thanks of the University, the receipt of History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, four volumes.

Very truly yours,

OLIVE JONES, Librarian.

THE following views regarding the future of the Jews were expressed at the late Jewish Missionary conference held in London, England, October 22:

LONDON, October 24.—Some remarkable views about the future of the Hebrew race were aired at the Jewish missionary conference held in London Thursday. The Bishop of Salisbury and Canon McCormick advanced varying theories as to the biblical prophecies relating to the return of the Hebrews to Palestine.

The Bishop of Salisbury did not believe the Hebrew people would ever set up a separate nationality until they were converted to Christianity.

Canon McCormick, on the other hand, argued for a literal interpretation of the oft-quoted prophecies on this subject. Especially in view of the eleventh chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, he believed that Jerusalem would be peopled by Hebrews on the return of the Messiah, and that then the nation would be associated with one of the most astounding miracles in all history, the conversion of a nation in a single instant.—New York Herald.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We are informed by the post-office authorities that Edgar F. Smith, of Battle Creek Michigan, whose advertisement of apples appeared in the last two issues of the HERALD, is a fraud. Beware!

In this issue will be found a pastoral by M. F. Gowell. While it is addressed to the Saints of the Northeastern Kansas District, it can be read with profit by all. It has the right ring, Bro. Gowell.

By a loan of $5,000,000, the Rothschilds saved one of the oldest private banks in England. It was going to wreck in a panic. The taking of "gilt edged" securities is the alleged cause of the bank's difficulty.

On Thursday last the junior editor had the pleasure of being with the West Chicago Branch at their mid-week prayer-meeting. A splendid feeling of unity seems to exist in the little branch, which we trust may continue.

Bro. C. Ed Miller has resigned his post as business manager of the Ensign Office, to accept a position with a printing company in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. He will be succeeded at the Ensign Office by Bro. W. H. Deam, of Chicago. We wish both brethren success in their new positions.

On November 2 Bro. U. W. Greene wrote from Vales Mills, Ohio, that he baptized seven in Middletown "last Friday."

The tract "Plural Marriage in America" has been translated into the Norwegian and Swedish languages, and will soon be on sale at the HERALD Office. The tract has done much good, and will do more, if rightly distributed.

Bishop Kelley was called to Macedonia, Iowa, last week, to the bedside of his brother James, who had been quite sick. Bro. Kelley returned Sunday and reported his brother better.

Bro. A. N. Hoxie has our thanks for sending us regularly the New York American, that we might learn of the work and failure of Dowie on his New York mission.

On Tuesday, October 27, a fire in the Lamoni Telephone Exchange destroyed the switchboard, and for a week Lamoni was without telephone service, while a temporary board was being secured from Chicago and installed. Our citizens did not realize what a prominent part the telephone was playing in our community until they were deprived of them.

Reports from Rome, dated November 1, state that on that date fire raged in the Vatican for three hours, doing extensive damages in and around the library. It is feared many valuable manuscripts and papers have been damaged. The pope was compelled to call upon the city firemen to assist the Vatican service to extinguish the flames. The combined damages by fire and water will probably be great.

DIVORCE AND REMARRIAGE.

"Like a flash two jurors descended from the jury box in Judge Johnson's court yesterday afternoon, after having stated positively that they would refuse to consider a divorce proceeding, even if it were based upon statutory grounds. H. Byrd Northrup, a real estate man, and James Waddington, a well-known grocer, have taken the lead in maintaining a stand against the free and easy divorce grind."—Denver Times, October 2, 1903.

To a Times reporter Mr. Northrup said: "I am opposed to divorces, I am against them under all circumstances, unless possibly infidelity, and even in that case the charge must be proven beyond the least shadow of doubt."

Mr. Waddington said: "There are too many divorce cases, they are granted upon too easy grounds. A man and woman decide to separate; they fix up a deal; one goes into court, the other stays away, and while you are thinking about it the woman marches out free from a tie that God says should bind. If there were less divorces people would be more careful when they marry. New York State does not tolerate divorce unless adultery is proven beyond the peradventure of a doubt. Its policy meets with my approval and I shall not be a party to a divorce proceeding even in the capacity of a petit juror."

I feel like taking these men by the hand, and saying, Amen. Had we more like them it would be a great blessing to humanity.

The laws of the different States are entirely too lax along the line of divorce. In this State the law says persons shall not marry for one year after a divorce is granted. But how little attention is paid to it! Persons who have been divorced by the courts of Colorado have been known to take the first train to Cheyenne, and be remarried almost before the ink was dry on the divorce papers.

There is only one cause recognized in scripture where divorced persons are at liberty to marry again, and I believe the Church should adhere strictly to the rule therein laid down. Maybe some of the elders have been careless in this matter in the past.

Maybe they have not been particular enough in their inquiry as to the causes of divorce when parties have asked them to perform the marriage ceremony. Brethren, this should not be. "Mine elders are to see that my law is kept." This applies to marriage and divorce as well as to other infractions of the law. Observation teaches us that any disobedience to known law brings punishment and the displeasure of God upon the individual who thus willfully breaks the law.

I have the first case to note where happiness has resulted from marriages contracted by persons divorced for other causes than that prescribed in the New Testament. The Lord undoubtedly knew what was best in the premises or he would not have given such instruction. The law of divorce is now, as in Moses' time, because of the hardness of the hearts of the people. Shall we as elders and Saints be parties to such hardness of heart? No, emphatically no!

So far as I am concerned, I shall refuse to perform the marriage ceremony for divorced persons, where the divorce has been granted on other grounds than those prescribed by Christ and the Church.

THE PRESIDENT OR CHIEF OFFICER IN THE CHURCH IN THE TIME OF THE APOSTLES. JAMES OR PETER, WHICH?

BY W. H. KELLEY.

Since the publication of "Presidency and Priesthood," in which the claim is made that James, the Lord's brother, was the chief or presiding officer in the church in the time of the apostles, various opinions have been passed and criticisms made in opposition to the position, and a theory has been advanced that Peter was the president and visible head of the church in his time. Chief among the publications attacking the position taken in "Presidency and Priesthood" is the Appendix to the "Exegesis of the Priesthood," by Elder G. T. Griffiths, published in Cleveland, Ohio, 1902.

As truth,—and to ascertain the proper station or place in the organization of the church in the first century of these distinguished gospel workers,—is the object doubtless, of all the several critics and writers engaged in this research, and each seems quite willing to have his position tried in an open and fair manner, the final result must be good to the student and general reader, and the attainment by all of a more correct, scriptural view touching the question, than that which has heretofore been arrived at through the accumulated traditions of the past.

At the outset of this examination, note is taken of the alarm expressed by a few, of the doubt that must be cast upon the work of the body by the attitude of two prominent officers in the apostolic quorum engaging in a controversy over church matters, or church history. What an error! The church of Christ is founded in the principles of free and full discussion; open and fair examination and research, the successful foes of error and superstition whenever and wherever wielded, and it may well be said that the old ship of Zion is being guided safely when men and women are left free to think and canvass all questions pertaining to its cargo or voyage. It was from such a sure and divine basis as this that the Apostle Paul could oppose in controversy the acts of the Apostle Peter, because, in his estimation of the case, "He [Peter] was to be blamed."—Galatians 2: 11.

It is true that the author of the "Exegesis of the Priesthood" sets forth his views with a hint at secure intrenchment, and that serene complacency that challenges criticism, but since these are not the most certain marks of correctness of position, it is eminently proper that "Presidency and Priesthood" should be heard in reply. It is unpleasant, however, to be forced into controversy with so good a friend as Elder Griffiths; but as he has announced that he is "conscientious" in the matter, and as there may be others following conscientiously the same view held by him, the more important it becomes to continue the examination.

There being no Bible text that makes a clear statement in favor of either position, the truth can only be determined by a comparison of what is presented on either side in support of the respective claims, in regard to which every one is entitled to his or her opinion. Unfortunately the article of Elder Griffiths is lengthy, and written in such a manner as to require a lengthy reply; but those interested can afford to read, if we can afford to write.

There is nothing new in the claim that Peter was at the head. This simply follows in a general sense Rome and Utah; the former puts the church on Peter; and the latter puts Peter on the church. Hoary sentiment is to be met in regard to Peter in either case. The Bible puts Peter in the church. (1 Corinthians 12:28.)

To begin with, the writer of the Appendix fortifies himself with a statement, said to have been made by Joseph Smith the Seer, found in the Millennial Star for 1855, pp. 310, 311, which makes him to say that "the Savior, Moses, and Elias, gave the keys to Peter, James, and John on the Mount when they were transfigured before him." So in the mind of the writer of the Appendix, these three were constituted a first presidency, upon the Mount. Which, if true, Jesus should have abdicated, or declined serving in that capacity longer, for it would appear unseemly or confusing to have two sets of first presidents occupying at the same time and in so small a territory.

In the first place, Joseph could not have said anything of the kind as claimed in the light here presented, for it was not true; there is no fact to support such a presumption anywhere, and we prefer to say that he has been misstated. People will have to learn that even prophets must talk in harmony with facts as known, or they are not believed. Peter, James, and John were not "transfigured before him," as claimed. It was Jesus that was "transfigured." If Joseph ever said anything at all about this transaction, he certainly could not have been properly reported, and this is not singular, as there were no shorthand reporters to take it down, and only scraps and partial statements could have been secured at best.

This was published by the Utah people long after Joseph Smith's death. It is in harmony with their philosophy that the president of the Quorum of Twelve by right succeeds as the permanent president of the Church, so there is nothing strange that it is made to appear in the light it does, as it would be easy to read into it what was not said. The following shows that that could have occurred: "Since the death of the Prophet Joseph, the history has been carefully revised under the strict inspection of President Brigham Young, and approved by him." (History of the Church, by Utah Historian, page 5.) This will be sufficient as to the authority for our statement.

Second. There is no word upon record by either party who was upon the mount of transfiguration, that even hints that Peter, James, and John were either selected, received "keys," or were appointed or ordained to preside over the church. Peter, James, and John were present as witnesses on that occasion, and nothing more. Moses and Elias conversed with Jesus. It was Jesus that was both "transfigured" and administered unto upon the occasion. Moses and Elias "spoke of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem." The apostles were asleep on the ground much of the time, and what Peter did say he uttered not knowing what he said. The apostles were afraid. Jesus had promised that they should see the "kingdom of God come in power." This they evidently did see, and were also shown how they were to put off this mortal tabernacle, by and by, and they heard the voice, "This is my beloved Son; . . . hear ye him." It was Jesus that received honor and glory, not Peter, James, and John. The apostles bore witness to what they did see, as on other occasions. They were witnesses, not presidents. (See 2 Peter 1:17, 18; Matthew 17:1-9; Mark 9:27; Luke 9:28-34; Acts 1:8, 21, 22; 22:32; 3:15; 4:20-23; 5:33; 1 Peter 5:1; 2 Peter 1:16.)

Third. There was no call for Moses and Elias to appear in order to confer keys and authority on Peter, James, and John. Jesus was on earth and outranked them in every way. "When he bringeth his first begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him."—Hebrews 1:6; 1 Peter 3:22. Christ could have constituted Peter, James, and John a presidency, had he been so minded, without the aid of either Moses or Elias, or even the transfiguration scene. That scene was for a very different purpose. Jesus had said, "Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom."—Matthew 16:28. "And after six days, Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John, his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. And, behold there appeared unto them

Moses and Elias, talking with him.”—Matthew 17: 1-3. The power and coming of Jesus Christ was shown forth, his decease at Jerusalem foretold—how this mortal tabernacle is to be put off in death, the testimony of the Father to the fact that Jesus was the Son of God was renewed unto them, but not one word is said about the appointment of a presidency, ordination, or the bestowal of keys; all of this is assumed and worked in by those claiming Peter was at the head, without a single fact to support it.

Fourth. Just a few days after the transfiguration scene was the time alluded to when the dispute arose between the twelve as to which should be the greatest. Had Peter, James, and John been selected, appointed, ordained, or received keys upon the Mount, as chief leaders and presidents, this gave them a fine opportunity to make known their rights. But no, they were silent about anything of the kind having taken place. When Jesus questioned them concerning the dispute had on the way, he, too, had forgotten all about the advancement of the three, the receiving of keys, or ordination on the Mount. Why did he not tell the disciples that this favored three had been selected, received keys, ordination, and appointment as a presidency, and thus for ever have settled the controversy? But no, he, too, was as silent about any such thing having occurred as the other three, for the evident reason that no such thing ever occurred upon the Mount or elsewhere. Moses and Elias did not appear on the Mount to create a presidency, by giving keys, ordaining or appointing a head over Jesus. It was Christ that received “honor and glory,” and the testimony that Jesus was the Christ was renewed unto the apostles by the voice heard, “This is my beloved Son; . . . hear ye him.” The apostles were witnesses, so Peter testified, “We were eye witnesses of his majesty.”

Again, Moses and Elias, had they been so disposed, could not have set apart or ordained a presidency upon the Mount, by any known rule, and certainly they would not have done so by any unknown rule, or right of law or precedent. “Every president of the high priesthood . . . is to be ordained by the direction of a high council or general conference.”—Doctrine and Covenants 17:17. Was there a general conference or high council called upon the Mount? The transfiguration scene will not support the contention or theory that Peter, James, and John were constituted a first presidency over the church at Jerusalem at the time of the Savior’s transfiguration, for there were neither keys bestowed, appointment made, nor ordination received. Hence when the claim for the transfiguration scene is examined it fails to support the contention made for it.

It is true that Jesus said to Peter, “And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven.”—Matthew 16:19. But Jesus evidently intended that the others of the twelve should share in this authority as well as Peter, although Peter was the one named in the address. Jesus addressed them all when he put his question, Peter answering as was common for him to do, and no doubt his answer was theirs also. The full meaning of what the Savior said may be seen in his statement to the twelve after his resurrection: “Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained.”—John 20:21-23. This referred to the power conferred on the apostles to qualify them to carry out the commission to be given them, set forth in Mark 16:15: “Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.”

The same view is presented when the Twelve in this last dispensation were authorized; the instruction is as follows: “Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you my servant, Thomas, I have heard thy prayers, and thine alms have come up as a memorial before me, in behalf of those thy brethern who were chosen to bear testimony of my name, and to send it abroad among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people; and ordained through the instrumentality of my servants. . . . Let thy heart be of good cheer before my face, and thou shall bear record of my name, not only unto the Gentiles, but also unto the Jews; and thou shalt send forth my words unto the ends of the earth. . . . Now, I say unto you,—and what I say unto you I say unto all the Twelve,—Arise and gird up your loins, take up your cross, follow me and feed my sheep.”—Doctrine and Covenants 105:1-6. This disposes of the idea that no one was to feed the “sheep” but Peter. But we read further: “and again I say unto you, that whosoever ye shall send in my name, by the voice of your brethren, the Twelve, duly recommended and authorized by you shall have power to open the door of my kingdom unto any nation whithersoever ye shall send them,” etc.—Ibid., paragraph 8. It really looks as though the Twelve hold some “keys of the kingdom” and can represent that kingdom abroad, as well as at home, and all within the meaning of the phrase (“as pertaining to the Twelve”) that is set out as having such restricted meaning in the Appendix.

The Lord, speaking of this authority, says, “But purify your hearts before me, and then go ye into all the world, and preach my gospel unto every creature who has not received it, and he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not, and is not baptized, shall be damned. For unto you (the twelve), and those (the first presidency), who are appointed with you to be your counselors and your leaders, is the power of this priesthood given, for the last days and for the last time, in the which is the dispensation of the fullness of times, which power you hold in connection with all those who have received a dispensation at any time from the beginning of the creation; for verily I say unto you, the keys of the dispensation which ye have received, have come down from the fathers; and last of all being sent down from heaven unto you. Verily I say unto you, Behold how great is your calling!"—Ibid., paragraphs 11, 12, and 13. (The italics are mine to call special attention of reader.) There are "keys," a "calling," and authority enough here bestowed for Peter and associates ("as pertaining to the Twelve"), or any one else to bear the keys of the kingdom of heaven, in the full sense set out in the Scriptures, and, too, without being first presidents of the church or their being changed from the apostolic quorum. That there may be no mistake about the authority, power, and keys conferred upon the church in both ancient and modern times, and those who hold these keys, we cite the following: "The Melchisedec priesthood holds the right of presidency, and has power and authority over all the offices in the church, in all ages of the world, to administer in spiritual things."—Ibid., 104: 3.

Who holds this authority in chief? Answer: "For unto you (the twelve), and those (the first presidency), who are appointed with you, to be your counselors and your leaders, is the power of this priesthood given for the last days and for the last time," etc.—Ibid., 105: 12. Again, "the twelve traveling counselors are called to be the twelve apostles, or special witnesses of the name of Christ, in all the world; thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling. And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned."—Ibid., 104: 11. Also, "The twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the presidency of the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, and secondly unto the Jews."—Ibid., paragraph 12. The Lord counseled the Twelve, "Exalt not yourselves; rebel not against my servant Joseph, for verily I say unto you, I am with him, and my hand shall be over him, and the keys which I have given unto him, and also to youward, shall not be taken from him till I come."—Ibid., 105: 6. In the distribution of "keys" thus conferred, Thomas B. Marsh is set forth as favored as was Peter: "Verily I say unto you, my servant Thomas, thou art the man whom I have chosen to hold the keys of my kingdom (as pertaining to the Twelve) abroad among all nations, that thou mayest be my servant to unlock the door of my kingdom in all places where my servant Joseph, and my servant Sidney, and my servant Hyrum, can not come; for on them I have laid the burden of all the churches for a little season; wherefore, whithersoever they shall send you, go ye, and I will be with you," etc.—Ibid., paragraph 7. No one need fail to see the similarity of keys, authority, and commission here conferred upon Thomas B. Marsh and associates, and that which was given to Peter and companions at Jerusalem (Matthew 16: 19; John 20: 23). Alike keys, authority, and commission—not as a presidency, but to travel in all the world.

Section 80, paragraph 1, Doctrine and Covenants is cited by the opposition: "Unto whom I have given the keys of the kingdom, which belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood." Certainly; but who constitutes the "presidency of the high priesthood"? Answer: "For unto you (the twelve) and those (the first presidency) who are appointed with you, to be your counselors and your leaders, is the power of this priesthood given, for the last days and for the last time, in the which is the dispensation of the fullness of times, which power you hold in connection with all those who have received a dispensation at any time from the beginning of creation; for verily I say unto you, The keys of the dispensation which you have received (the twelve and first presidency), have come down from the fathers; and last of all, being sent down from heaven unto you."—Ibid., 105: 12. Again, "The quorums in respect to authority are designed to take precedence in office as follows: . . . the parallels are: in the presidency, the president and his counselors; in the second presidency, the twelve; in the missionary work, first the twelve."—Ibid., 122: 9. The keys were conveyed to this second presidency, as follows: "And the keys which I have given unto him, and also to youward, shall not be taken from him till I come." So there is a distribution of keys and authority; the first presidency hold the keys "pertaining" to it; and the second presidency hold the keys "pertaining" to it; and all keys held by either presidency are "keys of the kingdom." These two presidencies constitute the "presidency of the high priesthood;" not to mention the seventies and others who hold keys. It will be readily seen that there are "keys of the kingdom" involved here that "pertain" to the second presidency of the "high priesthood," that answers to every point of power and "keys" that was conferred on Peter, without an implication or hint that he was to be appointed a member of the quorum of the first presidency. Hence section 80 of Doctrine and Covenants does not prove nor sustain "emphatically," that Peter, James, and John were constituted a first presidency over the church at Jerusalem. Their calling and commission forbid it. Their constant labors abroad forbid it. Peter and associates constituted the second presidency. Christ was the first president, and after his ascension another was chosen. So we read: "Of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office," etc.—Ibid., 104:11. Clement represents it thus: "Peter, James, and John, after the ascension of our Savior, though they had been preferred by our Lord, did not contend for the honor, but chose James the Just as bishop of Jerusalem."—Eusebius' History, p. 37. Hegesippus, who lived nearest the time of the apostles, in the fifth book of his commentaries, says: "But James, the brother of the Lord, who, as there were many of this name, was surnamed the Just by all, from the days of our Lord until now, received the government of the church with the apostles."—Ibid., p. 64.

It is also claimed: "That this was designed as a peculiar honor to Saint James, in regard that he was the brother of Christ."—Antiquities of Christianity, p. 58; Christian Antiquities, by Bingham, vol. 1, p. 16. "For nothing is plainer," says Reverend J. W. Harding, D. D., "than that Saint James, the apostle (whom Saint Paul calls 'our Lord's brother' and reckoned with Peter and John one of the pillars of the church), was the same who presided among the apostles by his episcopal office, and determined the cause in the synod of Jerusalem. He was preferred before all the rest for his near relationship to Christ."—Sacred Biography and History, p. 522. "That this James was the James who was named with Joses, Simon, and Judas, as one of our Lord's brethren, must be received as certain. But whether he was identical with James, the son of Alphæus, who was one of the twelve, is a question much discussed, and on which eminent biblical scholars are found arrayed on opposite sides."—Pictorial Bible, by David C. Cook & Co., Chicago Illinois. The children of Joseph and Mary were Jesus, James, Joses, Jude (Judas), Simon, and three daughters whose names were not given. (Matthew 13:55, 56; Galatians 1:19; 2:9, 12.) His brethren did not believe in Jesus as the Christ at first (John 7:5), and some of them not until a few days before the Day of Pentecost (1 Corinthians 15:7). James occupied a prominent position among the apostles, and was surnamed "the Just." James and Peter seem to have been in authority on equal terms when Paul was admitted to the fellowship of the apostles on the word of Barnabas (Acts 9:17; Galatians 1:18), and after that time he acts as the president of the council in Jerusalem (Acts 12:17; 15:13), whose decrees he delivered formally, a position recognized and recorded by Paul (Galatians 2:9), and honored by a formal visit of ceremony in the presence of all the presbyteries (Acts 21:18). "He is believed to have been appointed bishop of Jerusalem by Jesus in a vision, . . . Eusebius says the appointment was by the apostles." (Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, p. 143, published at 1222 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1883.)

These eminent writers are quoted in evidence that it was not Peter, James, and John that presided over the church at Jerusalem, but James the Lord's brother. This is the main point presented in these references. As to whether this James was the son of Alphæus or the Lord's brother, the son of Joseph and Mary, or was an "apostle," will be discussed further on. These writers view it as certain that this James was the president at Jerusalem. It is clear, too, that this James could not be the son of Alphæus, because the son of Alphæus was chosen as one of the original apostles (Matthew 10), and this James did not believe in Jesus at that time (Matthew 13:55; John 7:3), and it would be ridiculous to assume that Jesus placed a man who did not believe in him in the apostolic quorum. We shall produce further evidence from the writings of eminent authors that it was James that was constituted the president at Jerusalem, and that he was not the son of Alphæus, nor did he belong to the college of apostles. It should be borne in mind that this theory that obtained, that James the Lord's brother was the son of Alphæus, was an "invention" of Jerome, three hundred and fifty years after the time of Christ, presumably to cater to the Romish sentiment that Mary was "ever virgin;" a theory which has been the fruitful source of darkening counsel by all writers holding Romish views and superstitions in regard to the office and work of Peter. Later and better informed writers, who are further removed from Romish superstitions and traditions, present the matter in a better light, and more nearly in harmony with the scriptural view, as may be seen by a careful reading. George T. Pures, D. D., LL. D., recently Professor of New Testament Literature and Exegesis, in Princeton Theological Seminary, author of "Christianity in the Apostles' Age," writes (page 16): "Christianity originated in the appearance among the Jews of Jesus Christ, and especially from the belief in his Messiahship created by the events of his career, his teaching, and unique personality. The Gospels show that the immediate object of Jesus during his life was twofold. On the one hand, he offered himself to the Jews as one who had come from God to establish the kingdom of heaven, inveighed against current Judaism as a false interpretation of God's commands, and summoned the people to accept him as the revealer of the true religious life. On the other hand, foreseeing from the start their rejection of him (see John 2:19; 3:11, 14, 19; Luke 4:24-27; Matthew 8:10, 12; 12:39, 41; Luke 11:49-51; Matthew 9:15; John 6:51-56; Matthew 16:21-23, etc.), he addressed himself to the task of attaching to himself and his teaching a nucleus of believers who should carry on, after his death, the establishment of the kingdom. But he did not organize them into a separate society, save by the appointment of twelve apostles. These he constituted his personal representatives and the official heads of the new Israel (Matthew 10:40; Mark 3:14, 15; Matthew 17:19; 18:18; 19:28; Mark 10:37; Luke 22:29, 30); but he attempted no further organization.

Page 11: "The apostles were the official witnesses (Acts 1:22; 10:41; 1 Corinthians 9:1; 4:5-8; John 21:14), though their testimony was confirmed by that of many others. . . . Peter, the most conspicuous witness in Acts,—the appearance of Jesus to whom is specifically mentioned by Luke (24:34) and Paul (1 Corinthians 15:7),—never represents it as resting on his own testimony or that of any other individual, but on that of all the apostles." (See for example, Acts 2:32; 3:15; 10:41.)

Page 17: "The apostles returned from Jerusalem from their Lord's ascension, to wait for the promised Spirit, . . . the company, however, comprised more than the eleven apostles. Mention is made of certain women, who were perhaps wives of the disciples or others mentioned as witnesses of the resurrection, with perhaps still others who, like Mary and Martha of Bethany, had been followers of Jesus. . . . The mother of Jesus also belonged to the company, and with her were his brethren. The latter had not believed in his Messiahship even towards the close of his life (John 7:5). But to one of them, James, he had appeared after his resurrection (1 Corinthians 15:7), and doubtless this, with the other evidence, had secured their faith." It will be noted that this doubting James, according to the theory set forth in the Appendix to the Exegesis, was placed as one of the original apostles, as the son of Alphæus, which is absurd upon the face of it. His brethren did not believe in him, no matter whose children they were. After reciting the setting apart of Matthias to the apostleship, this writer continues, on page 23, "His [Peter's] conduct, therefore, shows that it was recognized by all that the new community had been organized by Christ under the direction of the body of apostles. Peter's prominence indicates neither that he occupied a position of primacy, nor that the authority of the apostolic body as a whole did not yet exist. His words imply quite the contrary. He was simply the most active leader of the governing body. The power of further organization had also been, it is clear, left by Christ with his disciples." Referring to further organization, page 41, he says, "The complaint of the Hellenists, however, suggested to the apostles the necessity of some arrangement to meet the difficulty; and this was accomplished in a way that satisfied all parties and harmonized with the supremacy of the apostles and the rights of the community. Seven men were chosen by the brethren and were set apart to the work by the imposition of hands of the apostles. Thus the apostles again appear as the authoritative founders of the church, whose special function, however, was teaching. The advance in organization, it should be noted, was brought about by the pressure of practical needs and without reference to any previous program. The whole congregation was recognized as having the right to choose their officials." Page 96: "Thus must be explained the origin of the Christian office of elder. No specific account of its institution is given. We simply find it existing; but there can be no question that it was copied from the office of the same name among the Jews. In each Jewish community the elders were the governing body." Speaking of the apostles, page 95, "But they now appear more and more to have directed their efforts to the superintendence and advancement of the cause at large. So Peter's activity, quite early in this period, is expressly described. (Acts 9:32.) So, too, had Paul, as we have seen, been sent forth to Selicia. From this time forth we hear no more of most of the original apostles. We can not doubt that they went abroad as tradition affirms (Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, book 3, chapter 1) as missionaries and founders of new churches." Page 96: "Jerusalem indeed continued for many years to be headquarters of the faith, and to it they may have returned like Paul himself from time to time. But the progress and organization of the Judean churches appears to have delocalized the apostles and made it a traveling and scattered body, delivering in wider circles the gospel of the risen Lord."

It will be observed that Peter was no exception to this scattering: "And it came to pass, as Peter passed throughout all quarters, he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda." It was thus while Peter was passing "throughout all quarters" that he was directed to the house of Cornelius. (Acts 9 and 10.) Peter is not president of the church here; he is simply out on a mission, and in the community where he was chief laborer as an apostle, he is sent to Cornelius. The apostles all scattered abroad now, Peter included, we ought to soon find some leading character in charge of the church at home, the headquarters. So this writer goes on, page 130, "After the Herodian persecution (A. D. 44) the most conspicuous individual among the Palistinian Christians was James 'the Lord's brother'" (Galatians 1:19; compare Galatians 2:9; Acts 12:17; 15:13; 21:18; Matthew 13:55; Mark 6:3; Josephus' Antiquities 29, 1; Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, book 2, chapter 23). He is not to be identified with the apostle James, the son of Alphæus, for the brethren of the Lord are distinguished by the evangelists from the apostles. (Matthew 12:46; John 7:3, 5; Acts 1:14.) Paul's language (Galatians 1:19; 1 Corinthians 15:7) has indeed been thought to imply that James was an apostle, and the hypothesis has been advanced, that after the death of James, the son of Zebedee (Acts 12:2), the brother of the Lord was chosen to fill his place. Others think that in these passages Paul, contrary to the usual custom, uses the term "apostle" in a loose sense. But his language does not impel either of these interpretations. That in Galatians 1:19 James is not necessarily to be included among the apostles is shown by the example of other sentences similarly constructed (see Romans 14; Luke 4:26); while in 1 Corinthians 15:7 the order of words in the original would seem to imply that James is rather distinguished from those included among them. As already observed, also, it is questionable whether he was meant to be included among the apostles by Luke in Acts 2:27. Certainly apart from these very doubtful witnesses, he is not called an apostle; and what is most significant, he does not so call himself in his epistle. It is more likely that after the apostolate had become delocalized by the progress of the organization of the Judean churches, James, who remained in Jerusalem, became the practical head of the Jewish Christians, and this leadership, on account of his personal character and high spiritual gifts, rather than because of any office held by him, became so marked that he exerted an influence equal to that of the apostles themselves (Galatians 2:9), and was remembered in after times as the head of the mother church. (Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, book 2, chapter 1.)

At any rate the prominence and influence of James are beyond dispute. Peter, when fleeing from imprisonment, sent word of his escape to "James and brethren." (Acts 12:17). At the council at Jerusalem James' opinion had decisive weight. (Acts 15:12,21). It was "certain from James" whose presence at Antioch led Peter to withdraw from fellowship with the Gentiles. (Galatians 2:12.) On Paul's final return to Jerusalem it was James and the elders who received him. (Acts 21:18.) The epistle witnesses to the authority and wide influence of its writer; and the author of Jude introduced himself to his readers as the brother of James. (Jude 1.) To this may be added the testimony of secular history and tradition. Josephus (Antiquities 20, 9, 1) relates that after the recall of Festus A. D. 62, the high priest Annus secured the stoning of James, the brother of Jesus, and some others, on the ground that they had broken the law, but that the better citizens complained of the act, so that in consequence Annus was removed from office by Agrippa II. The respect in which James was held by the whole city is attested by traditions. Hegesippus relates (Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, book 2, chapter 23) that he was known as the "Just" and as the bulwark of the people; that he lived the life of a Nazarite; that he had a high reputation for piety of a rather ascetic type. But the evidence wherever we find it, discloses a man of large influence, impressive character, and intense piety according to the finest Hebrew ideals; one, therefore, most likely to attain to leadership among the Jewish disciples. A GERMAN REVISION OF CHRIST'S PRECEPTS

A reconstruction of the practical teachings of Christ, in accordance with the "modern spirit" and the approved methods of "advanced theological thought" has been attempted by a prominent German religious paper, the Christliche Welt (Marburg). According to this journal, Christ's sayings, translated into the terminology of our age, would read somewhat as follows:

"Blessed are they who have great longings in their hearts, for God rules in their souls.

"Blessed are they who have endured sufferings, for they shall gain peace to their hearts.

"Blessed are they who are helpful to the needy, for everybody will gladly help them.

"Blessed are they whose purpose is pure, for they can see God in the world.

"Blessed are they who maintain peace, for they shall be called the friends of God.

"Blessed are they who are hated and rejected and upbraided by men for my sake. In like manner have their fathers treated those who sought their best good.

"But woe to those who seek only pleasure in this life, for they have had their joy before their time.

"Woe to those who indulge in the luxuries of pleasure. The time of weeping and lamentation will surely come.

"Woe to those who are beloved by all men. Such persons can only be false heroes.

"Ye have been taught in the schools: Thou shalt not commit adultery. I say unto you: Thou shalt not permit the desires of thy senses to obtain the mastery over thee. If a book or a picture inflame thy imagination, cast it aside. It is better that thou lack one beautiful object than that thy will become weakened and thy whole character demoralized.

"Ye have been taught in schools: Thou shalt not lie. I say to thee that if thou show a submissive demeanor to a man and suggest to another, He is a rascal or a hypocrite, then thou hast lied. And if a person earnestly invite thee and thou hast accepted and at the same time hast inwardly determined not to go, then thou separatest thy soul silently from God. Ye must keep your word and be honest in speech. For behold, God's great nature is also honest, and He eternally maintains its laws.

"Ye have been taught: Thou shalt not kill, nor strike anybody in anger. I say to thee that if a man contend with thee in anger and seek to strike thee, and thou resist him not, then shalt thou have conquered him.

"Ye have been taught: Thou shalt not steal. I say unto you: Thou shalt not even try to labor half an hour with half a will and yet demand full wages, for this is theft. Thou shalt also not take with thee any goods, out of the workshop of thy employer; thou shalt not destroy the shrubbery in the garden of the rich; thou shalt not destroy what the state has created for ornamental or useful purposes. For all of this will make thee a criminal.

"Ye have been taught: Thou shalt love thy neighbor. I say to you: Love thy enemies; respect those who stand in the ranks of your opponents. Those who are workingmen should honor those who wear good clothes. Those who wear good clothes must honor the workingmen. Then ye will be just and fair to everybody. Look at your God who permits his sun to shine over all creatures, and the rain to fall on the just and the unjust. If ye are good to your relatives and friends, what special good do ye do?"

"When thou givest a gift of charity, then do not have it reported in the newspaper, so that the community may read it and laud thee. Verily in this way thou lovest the blessing of the deed. If thou hast helped a poor man, then thou must not know on the morrow what thou hast done the evening before, and thy Father who seest what is hidden will bless thy life before all people."—Translation made for the Literary Digest of October 3, 1903.

KEEPING THE HEALTH OF A CITY.

The sanitary conditions of a great city concern all who dwell within its borders, and the comparative mortuary tables prepared by its health board are being recognized more generally as important commercial assets. Nature has generously environed some cities with conditions favorable to the good health of their citizens; but continued neglect to keep pace in a sanitary way with rapidly-growing population has converted many such a town into a hot-bed of fever and contagious diseases. Of the many municipal problems pressing for solution, few demand more accurate study and investigation than that pertaining to the health of our large cities, with their vast ignorant and foreign population, congested tenement districts, crowded business places, and numerous public halls for amusement, education, and recreation. London, Paris, Bombay, Berlin, and Rome have had their scourges in the past to testify to the fearful penalty of ignorance and neglect; but American cities are young and vigorous yet, and they have escaped many of the plagues and disease epidemics that have marked the pages of ancient history.

Modern sanitary conditions have improved in the past quarter of a century in all the principal cities of the world, and we stand less in danger of widespread epidemics than ever before; but the ambition of every well-ordered city is to decrease its mortality to the lowest possible minimum. Contagious and infectious diseases may always be with us; but the prompt work of isolating and stamping them out is rapidly robbing them of much of their terror. There is a new era dawning in respect to the spread of all such diseases. Medical science has already robbed the bubonic plague of most of its dread. The appearance of a steamer in the port of New York with several cases of plague aboard barely causes a ripple of fear among its three million odd inhabitants, and yet a little more than half a century ago the terrible disease took such a strong hold of the city that grass could be found growing on lower Broadway in the busiest part of the town.

Yellow fever has succumbed to the inevitable. Havana has been relieved of its pall of death, and our own southern ports no longer fear the annual summer visitant. Small-pox has practically been controlled and brought under supervision, so that an epidemic of it in any well-regulated city is a disgrace to its governing powers and health board. We have become so well accustomed to the regulation and isolation of these violent diseases that few give much thought to them. But immunity from them is purchased by eternal vigilance and constant work on the part of those in charge of our public health. The workings of a modern, up-to-date city health board are peculiarly interesting. To the uninitiated, dealing with diseases is far more complicated than dealing with crime. Our individual danger is ten times greater from epidemics than from murders, robberies, accidents, and fires. Yet as a rule our police and fire departments excite our admiration, while the squad of health inspectors more often arouse our anger and opposition.

The Health Department of New York City deals with a total population of something like 3,500,000, extending over a vast area, and housed in almost every imaginable form of habitation. The population is the most heterogeneous in the world, representing every nationality, religion, and belief. The problem of dealing with so varied a population to enforce sanitary and ordinary health precautions is intricate and difficult. Instead of coöperation there has been more often bitter opposition. The crusade against small-pox conducted by the present Health Board in the past two years was opposed by the ignorant and superstitious, and by a considerable body of the more intelligent who were opposed to vaccination on principle. The inspectors were openly abused and resisted, and it was only through the coöperation of the police that an effective campaign was conducted. When the scare reached its height, the opposition from the tenements decreased, and the educational value of the campaign was worth all the efforts and expenditures made. It was rarely then that a case of small-pox was discovered in the tenements without being promptly reported, and, in most cases, followed by a wholesale exodus of the people to the Health Board's headquarters to be vaccinated.

The dread of small-pox epidemics in New York City is thus lessened for the next twenty years. Instead of opposing and fearing the inspectors, the people of the tenements in most cases to-day show a wholesome welcome to them when they come armed with the quill and virus to save them from small-pox infection.

Contagious eye disease among the children of the public schools reached alarming proportions in the city until the Board of Health attempted to stamp it out. There were some fifty thousand children suffering from the disease at one time, but effective measures were taken to check its spread. Children suffering from it were kept at home or sent to the hospitals, and a strict quarantine placed on all the schools. The disease now has been almost stamped out. But eternal vigilance is the price of immunity. Every public school is under the immediate supervision of the Health Board. Scarcely a day passes that the children of nearly every grade are not examined. Should one of them show feverish cheeks, high temperature, or furred tongue, he is quietly examined, and sent home as a precaution. When measles, chicken-pox, scarlet fever, or diphtheria break out in the home of some little scholar, his home is quarantined to some extent from the school. Each day a child coming from an apartment or house where any of these contagious diseases are known to exist must be examined by the Health Board physician before he is allowed to enter his class.

So strict is the quarantine now enforced against the schools that a scholar who has become a victim to any of the contagious diseases can not return to his studies until a permit has been issued to him by the Health Board. This requires a personal visit from the Health Board doctor. In the private schools similar enforcements of the rules of the Health Department are now being made. Likewise churches, concert halls, and all places of amusement of a public nature are being visited and their sanitary conditions examined. Wherever people congregate together, there the seeds of disease are apt to spread and flourish, and the Health Board puts competent men on the scene to investigate. Scarlet fever, chicken-pox, diphtheria, and measles are ever present somewhere in a city like New York. Several hundred new cases will develop every week in the city if left unquarantined.

In the matter of milk inspection the Health Department alone saves the city all the expense which it incurs. Hundreds of innocent babies are saved every summer by the recent rigid system of milk inspection. The doctors of the department go further. They give free instruction and directions to the poor and ignorant parents of the children. Inspectors not only test the milk as it reaches the city, but they go from store to store and make tests of milk purchased over the counter. The practice of sending inspectors to the farms in milk districts to study conditions there has been inaugurated. Instructions are given to the farmers about sanitary conditions of their cow stables and creameries, and if these orders are not obeyed, a ban is placed upon the milk coming from the spotted farms, and it is not admitted.

Milk inspection has always been one of the most difficult questions for the department to handle, for dealers, shippers, and farmers appear to combine to elude the Health Officers. Light fines were usually the only punishments for adulterating the milk, or for putting chemicals in it to increase its thickness. Under the present administration so much terror has been inspired by heavy fines and imprisonments that few dare openly break the law. Moreover, the inspection is kept up continually, and no dealer knows just when an inspector may test his samples and hale him before a magistrate.

Clean food, free from all disease germs; pure water, milk, and beverages, untainted by foreign substances; honest drugs, unadulterated by inferior mixtures; healthy, sanitary living and working quarters, with oxygen sufficient to nourish and strengthen life; and streets and avenues, as free from filth and dirt as broom, water, and chemicals will make them—these are the things which the Health Department stands for to-day in New York. It is what every city demands. But to get them the price must be paid—the price of energy and eternal vigilance, the price of intelligence and expert experience, the price of men and money consecrated to the cause.—Scientific American, October 10, 1903.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

WE are much pleased at the generous response which our appeal in behalf of publishing books for the young is meeting. There is yet room for many other names, and we only wish that the Lord would put it into the heart of every mother to help us that we might see many volumes of healthful, faith-promoting literature issued from the Church publishing house, before our earthly labors are ended.

DUTIES OF PARENTS FROM THE STANDPOINT OF A TEACHER.

Julia N. Dutton.

(Concluded from last week.)

I believe it is just as much the duty of parents to feed the minds of their children as to feed their bodies. So, tell the children stories, give them something good to think about. Children love stories, and there are none that they like better than Bible stories, and all true stories.

It is the duty of parents to be careful of their own language, and by this I mean more than to refrain from profanity. The careless remark, the vulgar expression, the low story which parents do not think is understood by the little tot, is comprehended in part, if not wholly, many a time. Parents may not believe this but I know it is true, and many would be surprised, mortified, dumbfounded, if they knew what children tell each other as well as their teacher. Primary teachers know much concerning the private life of many a home little dreamed of by its inmates.

A child's playmates should be carefully considered, and do not believe that the children of your friends are always safe playmates. You may do your duty fully in other ways, but neglect this and your other work may be a failure. I had two bright, pretty children in school one year who poisoned the minds of forty-five other little ones, and no one mistrusted the condition until a little girl confidentially told her mother what was going on.

Another duty of the parents is to have an active interest in the school work of their children. Not an interest which ends in knowing that Mary will be promoted with Susie, a neighbor's child, or that she keeps ahead of Tommy. The child who wants to take his work home to show papa or mamma how well he can do, will not do careless work. Encourage his efforts and commend his good work. Wholesome praise in moderate quantities but administered generally in private, acts as a stimulant, but in excessive quantities, as a narcotic. In plain words, if your child is bright and does excellent work, do not in his presence laud him to the skies every chance you have. If you do, in nine cases out of ten he will get conceited and begin to do poorer work in school, and very likely some day in the midst of quiet he will raise his hand and tell his teacher that mamma said he could "learn faster than Jimmie or Joe."

Again, if your child is slow in getting started, can not keep up with his class, do not blame your child; no, nor his teacher either. Neither one is responsible for the quantity or quality of his brain matter. If you scold him and make constant comparisons with some of his classmates, you will discourage him, and very likely cause him to dislike school. Just be patient and kind.

In a first year class, there are many children who are slow, or whose minds seem to work peculiarly, but there often comes suddenly an awakening and the seemingly dull child becomes the leader of the class.

Be as considerate of your child's feelings as of a grown person's. Do not, before your child, tell all his misdemeanors to your friends or to the teacher, for it makes your child, as well as others, uncomfortable, if not angry at you.

Some morning you may get up with a headache, your bread does not rise well, or the grocer sends his bill and you are annoyed at its size; in short you are "all out of sorts." So when Nellie accidentally lets her kitty upset your work basket you are angry in an instant, Nellie is scolded if not slapped, kitty is sent with a "scat" out of the back door, and with a glum, if not an angry face, the box is righted. Now, would you like to have your first caller duly informed—by your husband, say—of the morning's episode? Would you feel comfortable, to say the least, and would you love your husband just the same and always be delighted to see that caller?

It is an old instruction to teachers to get acquainted with the parents, but I believe it is just as much the duty of parents to make the teacher's acquaintance. I know it is often hard for a mother to do this, but how about the teacher's time? When can she best visit you is often a perplexing question to her. Will many mothers be delighted to see the teacher before eight o'clock in the morning? Will she have plenty of time about the supper hour?—for a primary teacher must work quickly if she leaves the schoolroom before five o'clock in the afternoon. She may get time to visit Saturday—but is that a time when a call would please? Then when the teacher calls at the home all the little ones are there listening to every word spoken—and do not underrate the ability of the children to understand what is said. If parents only realized how much good might come from a private talk with the teacher I believe more would make the attempt to visit the teacher.

The child who is obedient and respectful at home finds it easy to be obedient and respectful at school and elsewhere, but there are many children who lead double lives. I have known children who were terrors at home, and a dread to the neighborhood, to become the most orderly and obedient under schoolroom discipline, and to take pride in not even being "spoken to" by the teacher. Again I have had children who were a constant source of trouble in school and among other children, who, through fear perhaps, were exceedingly quiet at home, but these are exceptions, of course. Too many people lead double lives who began to do so in childhood's days. Teachers can not always end a two-fold life, even if they know one exists, neither do parents always know that their child leads two distinct lives; in fact, they rarely know it. But if parents and teacher are acquainted, and are working together, such a state could not be long unknown, and surely it is a parent's as well as a teacher's duty to end, if possible, a double existence. In school the child is one among many, but at home he is often the center of interest. Then whose is the greater responsibility, the parents' or the teacher's?

Too many parents fail to realize that their duties extend farther than to clothe, house, and feed their children; that their duties are innumerable through each twenty-four hours; that in training a child the occasion, the previous training, and disposition must always be considered. But it seems to me that the first duty, the most important duty because it is the farthest reaching, is the self-control of the parent in thought, word, and action, for no man can control others who can not control himself.

When parents realize the full meaning of Christ's words, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," it seems to me they must seek more diligently to know their duty in all respects, for the early home-life and training is an influence which extends throughout this life and all eternity. I found this thought beautifully expressed in a little poem entitled "A Mother's Song:"

"A mother spoke to her child one day
In an angry voice, that made him start
As if an arrow had sped that way
And pierced his loving and tender heart.

"And when he had grown to man's estate
And was tempted and tried as all men are,
He fell, for that mother's angry words
Had left on his heart a lasting scar.

"A mother sang to her child one day
A song of the beautiful home above;
Sang it as only a woman sings
Whose heart is full of mother's love.

"And many times in the years that came
He heard the sound of that low, sweet song;
It took him back to his childhood days,
It kept his feet from the paths of wrong."

COUNCIL, Idaho, October 20.

Editors Herald: This finds us near Council, preaching the gospel to the people, who seem to be deeply interested. We have now held meetings here one week, and presented the first principles of the gospel, with very good liberty. There are several who are nearly ready for baptism. We held four meetings at Indian Valley since last writing. We occupied the church building of the Utah Church. The bishop told us he had no objections to our occupying the house to preach the gospel, but he would not like us to say anything about polygamy and Brigham Young, as that had nothing to do with the gospel. Pretty good admission for a Utah bishop.

I trust our labors here will be crowned with sheaves.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

BRIDGE, Oregon, October 24.

Editors Herald: Perhaps it is time readers of the HERALD were informed of the work in these parts. I am alone now, and I realize it, to. Bro. Anderson has gone to Portland to meet Bro. Griffiths, to consult regarding the work in this State; so I am left to get in and out of the mud-holes alone. If one gets rewarded for that kind of work the prospects are excellent.

I intended going into Eastern Oregon this winter, where the opportunities for preaching during the winter are much better than here, but submission to the powers that be is one of the things we have to learn in this work; so those in other parts of Oregon and Washington who have requested me to visit them will know the reason I can not, and will please accept of my thanks for their kind invitations and proffered assistance. I, too, think that it is not wise to scatter one's labors too much.

This is a good field during the summer for about four months. We have been quite successful during the past four months; have baptized eighteen, all adults, but two not altogether the result of our labors.

I have just closed a series of sixteen meetings at Bandon, and commenced another here last Sunday. The attendance is nearly double what it was at the beginning, so we are hopeful of doing some good; but the nights are dark and the roads are very bad.

We have a fine people in these parts, that are an honor to the cause, and will, to a very large degree, compensate one for being in the mud. I trust that God will hasten the day of sunshine.

HIRAM L. HOLT.

PENDENNIS, Kansas, October 26.

Editors Herald: I have now been here over three Sundays preaching. When I began prejudice was great; but by making friends of the postmaster and family our work began to have an effect for good. Every night but one during the series of meetings I have had an organist, then she was sick. The railway agent and wife became interested. His wife presided at the organ and with her voice; as soon as she began singing, new life was given to all. Even the little preacher was enthused. Yesterday afternoon the Sunday-school superintendent came to me and said, "We will not have to tie or bind you to-night if we take a collection, will we?" "Certainly not," was the reply. As I closed the series of meetings last night the Sunday-school superintendent, Methodist, arose and said, "We will take a collection for Bro. Gurwell." The result,—I was handed five dollars and twenty-five cents.

This is a new opening, and a good feeling seems to prevail. Friends have been made to the cause. I intended remaining in the community to hold a two-week meeting in Gove County, where Bro. E. H. Elbert and I opened the work two years ago, as the call is continually, "Come and preach for us;" but I received a letter calling me away.

The work is slowly finding its way to the different localities where the people have never heard of the gospel. I am stopping with Bro. Bert Coop and family. In hope of eternal life,

L. G. GURWELL.

CARDIFF, Wales, October 14.

Editors Herald: The Eastern Wales District conference, held October 10 and 11, was fairly well attended. The good Spirit was present and all seemed to be encouraged. The gifts of tongues and prophecy were enjoyed; and although the children had been quite noisy and restless, a phenomenal peace and stillness came over the meeting. The Spirit gave words of encouragement. "It is the will of God that the gospel should be preached to all nations, and that men of all nations should minister before him," and other words that gave promise to the perpetuity of the work in this country. Bro. Thomas Gould, as usual, was faithfully at his post, and was elected to preside for the next term.

SEILING, Oklahoma, October 25.

Editors Herald: Seiling seems to be gaining slowly but surely, although there is not the interest manifest by some of the Saints that should be. At present the Disciple or Christian people are occupying the Church (when not in use by the Saints), which gives us a good opportunity to get the gospel before a good many that we otherwise could not reach, as the most of them attend our meetings when we occupy. As we have no compromise to make, we do not fail to declare the whole counsel of God, believing that if there are any among them that are not satisfied, they may be able to see the true light as it is in Christ Jesus.

The work in and around Richmond is also progressing and there are quite a number inquiring. Some we think will obey in the near future.

The Saints have passed through quite a severe trial, owing to the arrest of one of our brethren, charged with a crime of which, thank God, he was proven innocent, the prosecuting witness was impeached, and our brother proved a clear alibi and a good reputation. He was sustained by some of the best and most influential men in the community, which we believe will result in good to the work in and around Seiling. I speak of this in my letter that the Saints who may have heard of the charge may know the result.

It has been very dry in this part of Oklahoma for some time, so much so that there has been but a small percentage of the wheat sown, and that which was sown is dying. Some are very much discouraged and are wanting to sell out. Now would be a good time for any one with a little nerve and money to come to this country and buy real estate.

Trusting that the time may soon come when envy, jealousy, and spite may cease, and peace, union, and love prevail among the Saints, I remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,

H. F. DURFEY.

FALLS CREEK, Pennsylvania, October 15.

Editors Herald: Since the district conference held at Glen-easton, West Virginia, after a period of four months absence from home in the Pittsburg District, traveling in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia, on the 9th of September I made a trip home to Madison, Indiana, to see my family and attend to some necessary business. I held eight services at my home branch and had a good time. I was requested by the members of the Oriole Branch to make them a visit and they would pay all expenses. Not knowing the condition of the branch I went and found them in a disorganized condition, without Sabbath-school, and had not met together in social service for six weeks. My heart pained me to find them dead spiritually, as when I left them last spring they were all alive. I stayed with them from Tuesday till Sunday night, and on Monday left them with a feeling of determination to keep up their meeting. There was a cause for their getting in that condition, which is well known in that district. Most of the Saints of that place are splendid people. I had a long experience working there and became well acquainted with them. I hope Bro. H. C. Smith will be able to visit them.

When I returned home I found one of my boys down with fever, which detained me a week longer at home.

Last week I came to Steubenville, Ohio, and remained there over last Sunday; had a splendid time with them. On Sunday afternoon we held social service, which was grand; had tongues and prophecy. I left there Monday and came to this place. I am speaking on the street, but the nights are rather cool for outdoor work. We are trying to get the schoolhouse. We saw the teacher yesterday; she is willing and will see the trustees and let us know. Bro. Anthony has done much good here since I was here before, by scattering tracts and the HERALD and Ensign, and talking the doctrine to them. The Catholic sister I baptized at this place has moved about sixteen miles east and has secured a schoolhouse for me to open up the work. I have Bro. Anthony's sister to baptize next Sunday and probably there will be others.

I baptized a noble sister at Oriole; her father and mother have been in the Church for twenty-five years.

I received a letter from Bellyvernon yesterday. There are some ready to obey the gospel at that place and at Charleroi, where I labored in August. The field is so large here we can not fill all the calls. I am expecting Bro. U. W. Greene or F. J. Ebeling to join me soon. The prospect seems very favorable here and in the surrounding community for a good work, although prejudice is great.

I received a letter from Sr. Beam, of Monongahela City, stating that she had got things in good shape for good to be done there, and asking me to come. So you can imagine that missionaries do not need to be idle in these parts, and that is what I like—I want to labor seven days a week. My desire is to get the gospel before as many people as possible, and all who are seeking the truth will obey it. My delight is to open new places and give people a chance, for Christ says it shall be preached as a witness, and all who do not hear it will not be witnesses. So brethren, let us as his servants do all we can and improve the golden moments; in example, in our walks, as well as in our teachings. I am as ever,

Your colaborer in the faith,

J. D. PORTER.

LAKE CREEK, Illinois, October 22.

Editors Herald: An Englishman by the name of William Tipling, living at this place, said he had a cousin belonging to this Church by the name of Thomas Subdun, from Hetton-le-Hole, Durham County, England. Mr. Tipling requested me to make inquiry for him through the Church paper.

Respectfully,

C. J. SPURLOCK.

MINATARE, Nebraska, October 20.

Editors Herald: We remained here after our reunion in the Platte Valley near the west line of the State. We were at Gering about ten days. As I was suffering from a bad cold I did but little preaching, but visited the Saints, encouraging them, and organized one Sunday-school. We found some good Saints there. While there, we were cared for by Bro. and Sr. Barkdoll, who made our stay with them very pleasant. They are old-time Saints whom we knew at Wilber, Nebraska.

From there we came back to the Olive Branch; held meeting during the week, but not many came out on week nights, as this is a busy time of year, for the people are baling and marketing their hay crop, which is the best paying crop in this part.

Sunday last was a busy day for us: Sunday-school at ten o'clock in the forenoon, preaching at eleven. After preaching a young man asked for baptism, which we attended to as soon as dinner was over. We held prayer-meeting in the afternoon, which was a spiritual feast to all present. There were quite a number in attendance for this thinly settled country. We preached on the temporal law, and about all present have made up their minds to comply with this part of the gospel law, and statements to the amount of over seven hundred dollars have been given in with promises to pay as soon as possible. I also got subscriptions for five HERALDS—two new subscribers, one Book of Mormon, one Instructor, two True Succession.

My life companion is with me and doing her share of the work, which makes it much more pleasant for your humble servant. We leave here for Oshkosh to-morrow, where some are interested, and one is waiting to be baptized. Bro. Payne, our colaborer, will join us there.

Yes, Bro. Stead, we are hunting up the Lord's sheep among the sand-hills, and have found a warm-hearted and generous people, who have kindly supplied all our temporal wants. We can not report great numbers baptized, but have sown the seed to the best of our ability, for others to come after us and water.

We are now enjoying good health, for which we thank the Master. I ever pray for the welfare of Zion.

R. O. SELF.

DERBY, Indiana, October 22.

Editors Herald: I have often thought of writing to your valuable columns, but have always given way to better writers than myself. I look for the dear HERALD every week, for I scan its pages with eager eyes.

I am holding meetings below this little town in a Universalist church. Expect to continue over Sunday, then go to Oriole, then to Plainsville, where we hope to meet our missionary in charge, Heman C. Smith, also our worthy bishop, E. L. Kelley, and the rest of our missionary force.

Having been appointed to this Southern Indiana District last spring, I left home May 9 and arrived at my native home, old Hoosier, (being a lad of only five years of age when we took our journey to fair Zion in the West.) I have traveled over some of the territory that was well canvassed by C. Scott, B. V. Springer, W. W. Blair, T. W. Smith, I. P. and V. D. Baggerly; all of whom are held in remembrance by those who knew them.

I am made to rejoice in this latter-day work. The longer I live, the brighter becomes the hope that the gospel has begotten within me. My desire is to live faithful, do whatsoever God has for me to do, that when my life is finished, I may be permitted to wear a crown that fades not away.

My mind is carried back to dear old Lamoni and Saints whom I have known for the past twenty years, many, many times every day.

This being my first effort to intrude on your fair columns, and knowing of the large waste basket, I will close by saying, I am striving to do all that I can to spread this latter-day message.

Yours in the conflict,

CHARLES HARP.

PADUCAH, Kentucky, October 24.

Editors Herald: I feel firmer in the work than ever before and trust I may be found faithful. We are well and keep busy daily from house to house, with this blessed latter-day gospel, looking forward for God to give the increase.

I have ordained one priest by the name of Robert R. H. Dunlap, and blessed three of his children: R. H. Dunlap, Jr., H. F. Dunlap, and little Molley Dunlap. So the good work goes on. I expect to baptize Sr. Dunlap, her eleven year old son, Mrs. A. Davis, and a young lady—Miss E. Right. They will be baptized Sunday, November 2, 1903.

Pray for us.

Your brother,

727 South 6th Street.

G. H. GRAVES.

FANSHAWE, Indian Territory, October 18.

Editors Herald: I have just closed a few days meeting at this place. I held meetings here one month ago, baptized two, and then in company with Bro. Harder went to the Creek Nation and we had a fine meeting there. Some Indians attended and seemed very much interested. Bro. F. M. Mouzay lives in the vicinity where we held the meeting, and he is doing a good work. One lady was baptized while we were there, and many others are near the kingdom.

While I was there I received a letter to return to Fanshawe to attend to some baptisms, so I returned and while here baptized four: Charley Goss and wife, Doctor Lewis, and Thomas Herington. All are fine people who will be of use to the Church. Doctor Lewis belonged to the Christian Church, and preached some for them; but he had been dissatisfied for some time. He said he knew they did not have the gospel as it once was. I do not blame the Christian Church for fighting the gospel, because we get many good people from their Church.

I have been made to feel this year, by God's Spirit, that the prospects for the [gospel in this Territory are very bright. Sometimes I start a meeting with twenty or thirty in attendance, and before we close probably there will be hundreds in attendance. Indeed, the field is white and laborers are few. Let us pray the Lord will send other laborers into the field, and while we pray for that let us honor the law of tithing. Saints, put forth all the effort you can to send your tithing in. We have calls from every direction for preaching, and only few to fill the calls, so, brother, let us wake up and do all we can to throw out the life-line. We are nearing the shore. The time is close for our Savior to come to earth, and Zion must be built up. So let us work and pray until the warfare is over and the victory ours.

Yours in the Christian warfare,

E. A. ERWIN.

WARRINGTON, England, October 12.

Dear Saints: It does me good to read the different letters in the HERALD and Ensign; they are welcome visitors to our home. I believe I love the gospel, and with all my weaknesses I desire to be found faithful unto my life's end.

We have a branch of fourteen members in this town and it is encouraging to hear them testify of God's goodness to them. Myself and husband were the only Saints here for five years. The Manchester District formed a mission, the Lord brought an honest young man to see the truth and obey it, and our members have increased as above stated to fourteen. To God be the praise.

I have passed through a very severe trial, but through the goodness of God I am made well. I have received comfort and a blessing through the ordinance set apart in the Church for the healing of the sick. I would say unto all that suffer, "Have faith in God and he will surely bless you." We had the honor of housing Bro. Joseph and his counselor, Bro. Evans, and their stay with us was altogether too short. May God bless them. We are expecting our esteemed Bro. Rushton with us sometime during this month.

Love to all Saints,

8 Gorsey Lane.

SR. JOHN SCHOFIELD.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, October 27.

Editors Saints' Herald: Since last writing to your columns I have been doing what I could in the interests of the great work.

Through environments then surrounding me, I was ignorant of the time appointed for the holding of the conference of the Pottawattamie District, so failed to be present on September 27 and 28 last. Do not know whether the brethren were disappointed by my absence or not, but I was. But perhaps not nearly so sadly as many now expecting to be present at the glorious coming of our blessed Lord will be.

After being and laboring at Shenandoah over two Sundays, I left there September 29, and went to the town of Red Oak, where I called on the few Saints living there, doing what I could to encourage them in the faith but having no opportunity to do any public preaching. Found Bro. and Sr. Ware and their children in the faith, and Sr. Meerit holding on to the rod of iron that leads to the tree of life. Her husband, though of Universalist proclivities religiously, treated us as becometh a Christian. He is a minister of that persuasion, but is able to discern something of the signs of the times—events that to him dimly, at least, foreshadow the future coming of our Lord in glory; and he expressed a "hope" that it might be so. He is a gentleman, and I rather like him. He reads our works with interest.

I preached two sermons while there to Sr. Canworthy, on the evidences of the latter-day work. She is an excellent lady, late of the Disciple Church, baptized by Bro. Charles Fry; is passing through some trials through opposition of family, and friends, usually common in the early experiences of many Latter Day Saints. She said our labors did good. Hope she may be fully confirmed in the gospel by the Holy Ghost.

I visited Griswold, twenty miles north of Red Oak, and found Sr. Philips and children strong in the faith; Mr. Philips, affable, willing to learn of the work. Mr. Taylor and wife, of the "Church of Christ" (no other name allowed), called on us, and we labored with them till midnight. Church organization was the all-absorbing theme; but for some reasons such passages as 1 Corinthians 12:28, 29; Ephesians 4:8-13; Acts 13:1-5; 14:14; 15:19-21; Galatians 2:9, were unfortunate, in that to him there were "no points" in them, though we thought they had. I was next found at Bro. J. W. Crawford's, three miles from Emerson, and on Sunday, October 4, preached at the Garfield Schoolhouse to a small audience at three in the afternoon. People there too busy thrashing their grain to come and hear, though twice notified by personal visits by Bro. Crawford and his daughter; we think, however, there are some near Emerson who will yet embrace the truth. It was while we were at Emerson that Bro. Mark H. Forscutt's family was called to mourn the loss of Sr. Forscutt; also Bro. and Sr. Harrington of Tabor, lost their son. I should only have been too willing to have responded to their calls if I had heard in time. How often we find ourselves hard against, "It might have been." Human vicissitudes are so disappointing! October 6 I went to Council Bluffs and joined Bro. M. M. Turpen, who was in charge there and in adjacent vicinities, and was seeking diligently to advance the interests of the work. A visit to Hazel Dell and Underwood Branches occupied the week, and on Sunday following a large audience greeted us at Council Bluffs, both in the morning and evening, and we felt thankful for the rather unusual goodly degree of liberty bestowed on us while dispensing the word. An encouraging day for us. Bro. Turpen was not idle, but enjoyed laboring at Crescent.

October 13 to 15, we were at Hazel Dell. Preached three times, other work also claiming our attention. We hastened our work in order to be at convention and conference of the Fremont District, the 16th 17th and 18th. Found the Sunday-school convention in session when we arrived, with a goodly attendance, and Bro. and Sr. T. A. Hougas in charge; and all active, vital questions were discussed, and a lively interest manifest. Bro. Hougas manifests an increasing ability in the work, and Sr. Hougas plies the pertinent questions. Each one called on made an effort, and we think the convention a success. All seemed interested. The best of feeling prevailed. The conference? Well attended, by local as well as visiting Saints.

Business was light. Reports showed interest on the part of the ministry.

District officers continued. The preaching was by Bishop E. L. Kelley, M. M. Turpen, and the writer. Most of it was good and had the spiritual, refreshing ring to it. Saints at Glenwood have a very neat church edifice lately built. Pleasant to speak and hear in. A credit to the branch. A goodly number of outsiders have contributed to its building fund. But Saints at Glenwood are not very numerous. They are making a noble effort, but the church building is not all paid for yet. On Sunday afternoon, after the sermon, Bishop Kelley took the services in hand, and after some encouraging and pertinent remarks, started the subscription papers going, and in a very brief time, with what was paid in, one hundred and twelve dollars and fifty cents were subscribed. This was a good, long, and strong pull toward the brow of the hill they are ascending. Here another stake will soon have been driven, another light-station in the great work. Should any who read this feel to lighten the burden of the Saints at Glenwood, it will be thankfully accepted, and Bro. A. J. Davidson will record the same to your credit on earth, while your guarding angel will see that you are properly accredited in heaven. And when all heaven reverberates with angelic joy over the repentant sinner at Glenwood, will not your name be then remembered on high? Who would not seek thus to help make the heavenly hosts glad and rejoice over the coming of the soul lost in sin and death out into justification and life!

Saints, children of light, let us not forget our duties, our heavenly calling.

But, we shall miss the voice, presence, and labors of Uncle Mark Forscutt at the conferences, reunions, and other gatherings of the Saints. His works follow. A man, a saint, a citizen, and a minister of Jesus Christ, ever true to conviction and faithful to duty! What more could be said?

Was at Hazel Dell and Boomer churches over Sunday, October 25. Saints there seem, mostly, to be alive to the interests of the cause; Bro. Lanson presides over the former congregation, and Bro. J. Parish over the latter. Both seem to be alive in the work. Meetings every evening here in the city this week.

Hopefully,

C. SCOTT.

CHEYENNE, Oklahoma, October 23.

Editors Herald: Our Nichol-Sparling debate is past and all is quiet again. As usual, both sides claim the victory. One of the Campbellite brethren told me he thought both men got whipped. I can see that much prejudice has been removed. Elder Nichol got angry once and wanted to fight, and asked Bro. Sparling to go round the hill with him. He spat on his hands and pulled up his sleeves. Bro. Sparling got the laugh on him the most, and Nichol was quite irritable to have his own jokes turned on him.

Bro. Aylor preached a few times near Redmoon, where the debate was held, and had good crowds. He and I are now here in Cheyenne, preaching this week to fair crowds of interested listeners.

Our reports the past quarter show about sixty baptisms in Oklahoma and Indian Territory. Our work is building solidly. We are getting some noble people in the Church. God speed the good work.

My debate with Collins, near Matthewson, will begin November 25.

Your coworker in the Master's cause,

HUBERT CASE.

CASTLEROCK, Washington, October 27.

Editors Herald: My last communication was written at Roslyn, Washington. I continued services two or three days after writing you. The interest there was only fair. Roslyn is a mining town and is composed principally of foreigners and is a very wicked city for its size, in my opinion, there being only eighteen saloons in the business center of town. You can form your own opinion with regard to the conditions that obtain there.

We have some noble Saints there. Bro. Hansen is president, and is a worthy brother and wields an excellent influence among the people. The branch is not complete in point of officers, lacking, I believe, a priest and a deacon. Brn. John, Frank, and Father Holmes and wife reside there; all of whom are alive to the interests of the work. Frank is our Bishop's agent in Washington, and we hope that the Saints will bear this fact in mind, and that they will not be backward in paying in their tithes and offerings, as there is a great demand for financial help at present to keep the work moving.

I next stopped at Seattle, the enterprising city of the great Northwest, situated on Puget Sound. Here are to be seen steamships from all parts of the country. This city is growing at a rapid stride, and her buildings are up to date. I found the branch here in a dilapidated state, the president having moved about eighty miles away, leaving the branch without any officer to care for it. We have here about forty members. About the first thing I did was to reorganize the branch. Bro. D. W. R. Davis was elected president, Bro. Fred Holman, formerly of Conneautville, Pennsylvania, was called to the office of priest; Bro. Gorbitt, formerly teacher in one of the Chicago branches, was elected teacher, and Peter Jessen was ordained to the office of deacon. Thus we have four competent men in charge of the work there. The Saints hired the Armory Hall, in the heart of the city, which we occupied two Sundays, with excellent interest and good liberty. We feel very strongly impressed with the thought that if the officers and members of said branch will strive to live together in peace, and up to the privileges of the gospel, many souls will be added to their numbers in the due time of the Lord.

One of the great evils we have to contend against in this western country, that works to the detriment of the progress of the Church, is the marriage question. The law of the land is very lax, in that it is very easy for either husband or wife to secure a divorce. But they soon get married again. Hence, we see that they do not think marriage is a failure, for they are very ready to remarry. Now if the divorce were granted on the grounds provided by the Savior we would not enter any protest, but they divorce each other on the least provocation. And in many instances it is for the immediate purpose of winning some one else. I am more and more convinced that, as a Church, we are not strict enough on the marriage question. A man or woman should not be permitted to remarry and remain a member of our Church unless divorced for the cause assigned by the Savior, namely, adultery. The position taken by the Catholic and Episcopal Churches is not too rigid, in my opinion. The sooner we reach the same position the better it will be for us.

The branch in Tacoma is in a rather weak condition because of the lack of proper officers to carry on the meetings. This defect will soon be remedied, as we have some good material in view. It must not be understood that we have not good material in office there at present. Circumstances over which they have no control hinder them from magnifying their calling. We also have some Saints who have come there of late from Iowa and other points who will be a help to the work. I have come across a number of Saints from different sections of the East, some of whom, I am sorry to say, do not seem anxious to let their lights shine and in some instances seem to be ashamed to own the name. The way we find out is that some of their relatives give us their address and we find them really hidden from the Church. Too bad!

From Tacoma I went to Portland, and at that point I met Bro. D. A. Anderson and wife and Bro. Arthur Allen. Bro. Allen having preceded us had found a number of Saints, about eighteen. We held meeting and the brethren seemed anxious to do all in their power to get the work to moving and secured a place of meeting. In pursuance of their desire they have secured and fitted up a store building that will seat about seventy-five people in the central part of the city. Bro. D. A. Anderson and wife will make this an objective point for some time to come. We contemplate organizing a branch there in a short time, providing the interest continues, and present indications are that it will steadily increase. Bro. Anderson and myself held meetings for a week in a schoolhouse three miles from this place; interest was fair and we think that some will unite with us by and by. We have an aged brother living close to the schoolhouse by the name of Lobsien, whose hospitality we shared. He is advanced in years but firm in the faith of the Saints.

At present we are operating in the Saints' chapel here in the city. By the way, their Church house is a fine building and is a credit to the Church. The branch here is not in as flourishing a condition as it might be. Some of the Saints have moved away, and only a few families remain. Bro. Williams has served as president for some time, but expects to leave soon. He will be missed by the Saints here as he been a faithful and valiant worker in the interests of the cause. He intends to go with one of our ministers and assist in missionary work during the winter, hence his service will not be lost to the Church. Bro. Appleman was elected president of the branch to fill the vacancy made by Bro. William's resignation. Bro. Appleman is a young man and only weighs two hundred and twenty-two pounds, so we will expect big things of him. We have reason to believe that if he is humble, prayerful, and will apply himself to constant study, he will become a useful instrument in the hands of God for good. Bro. Bebe, acting priest of the branch, is hindered by his present occupation from being as active as he would choose to be; but we look forward to the time when he will be of greater service to the Master's cause, as he has been in the past. This brother has made a good record among the people. Bro. S. Crum is as smiling as in days of yore, and he and his wife still furnish a home for the missionary and are striving to help the work along. He will make an effort to fill appointments in neighboring localities.

Present prospects are very encouraging for the the advancement of the work in this place. It is to be hoped that they will all seek to bring about much righteousness in their daily lives, by constant obedience to the commandments of the Lord.

My missionary force is reporting progress all along the line. There have been some baptisms since last report. Am sorry to hear of the sudden death of our old-time and intimate friends, Brn. Charles J. Kaighin, and "Uncle Mark." I have known the latter for thirty-five years. One by one they are passing away, and we often think, Who will be the next? Well, so long as we are ready it is immaterial how soon we go. God bless those who weep and mourn. May the sweet, consoling Spirit of the Lord be with them to comfort their hearts in their great trials.

We have had grand weather here for weeks. May it continue. With love to all.

Your brother in Christ,
G. T. GRIFFITHS.

Editors Herald: Perhaps the readers of the HERALD would be interested in a few items from this distant land. As a rule the Saints are much concerned about the work in foreign lands. To begin with: The work moves about as it does at home. The last year revealed exceptional progress. We trust it may continue to be so until this exception shall become the rule. To my mind the recent success is but an inkling to what the mission is susceptible of if properly worked. But "properly worked" means a great deal; more, perhaps, than is attained to anywhere. At the present time the Church here as well as elsewhere is hindered by lack of love and unity among the Saints, also by the absence of methods, spirituality, and energy in gospel work. This lack or absence is not absolute, of course; but in some places it is very noticeable. All, however, are not equally deficient in these respects. If a proper, united effort were continually made the record of last year could be easily maintained, or by hard work doubled, or more than that. Our chances to draw large audiences are not so great as they are in some places in America, but our opportunities to build up the work by general means are good.

Tract work does well here. Can not the Religio of the United States and Canada assist in furnishing us tracts and papers? Old HERALDS, Autumn Leaves, etc., of any year will be appreciated. Anything sent to the above address will be thankfully received.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. G. J. Waller wrote from Honolulu, Hawaii Territory, September 28: "You will be pleased to hear that Bro. Ingham since undergoing an operation for appendicitis is very much improved in health. Last Tuesday, September 22, he left on a trip to see his parents in England. He expects to be absent about three months. I have no doubt the change will do him good. Our Chinese Bro. Tao Shau Chinn has again manifested interest in the work and is attending services regularly, and seems anxious to help as far as he can. Four Chinese children joined our Sunday-school last Sunday morning, and I hope to be able soon to get up a Chinese school for Tao Shau Chinn to teach. A Hawaiian woman who has been interested in our work for some time stated Sunday that she wished to be baptized; her children attend our Sunday-school." Under later date, October 14, Bro. Waller wrote that on October 4, he baptized the Hawaiian woman. Concerning Bro. Ingham's trip to England, he wrote: "I have received word today that Bro. Ingham and his little girl were in the accident on the Southern Pacific in Nevada on the evening of October 2, in which one man was killed and thirty-five were injured. I am thankful to say that Bro. Ingham and his daughter were uninjured."

J. W. Peterson wrote from Adrian, Illinois, October 26: I have been holding meetings at the Rock Creek church every night since the conference the fourth of the present month. Attendance and interest good. Meetings will continue another week. I expect Bro. Munsell here to-day to help me."

U. W. Greene wrote from Dayton, Ohio, October 24: "Excellent prospects of establishing the work on a solid basis here. Everybody at work; splendid spirit prevailing. Our hearts are glad."

F. M. Gowell wrote from Topeka, Kansas, October 22: "Am holding street meetings here with great liberty and good interest. No shifting crowd; it remains till close. Street preaching is coming."

J. W. Gilbert, from San Francisco, California, October 19: "I have left the South Sea Islands, and for the present will be moving around a great deal. Arrived here October 18, safe and sound."

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Northeastern Kansas District: With a realization of my own insufficiency and imperfection, I write you in behalf of the great and good work we are privileged to be identified with. The difficulties of our warfare are not light; they are within ourselves as individuals, as branches, and as a district; they are also without.

But shall we stand dismayed before them, or move forward under the direction of our great commander in spite of them?

As said our martyred prophet, "Shall we not go on in so great a cause?" The conquest is not yet made. We have much to accomplish.

"Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come," said the Master. What does this mean to us but that the time will not suffice to warn those of our own nation till the Savior appear? And do we not desire that all shall be warned? And are we not all to the extent of our abilities made responsible for the accomplishment of the work?

We are responsible as a Church for the enlightenment of the world, and therefore responsible as individuals constituting the Church. And as this Church or kingdom is nevermore to be thrown down, it is possible that it shall fulfill its mission and be crowned with glory and honor.

But how much progress as a district are we making in acquainting the people with our message? How much of our opportunity are we improving? Are those at our own doors, the doors of our branches, being warned?

Do difficulties or disorders within the household hinder the message? Let them first be removed. And the way to remove them is not by talking about them. The proper ones should attend to them, that every member may be ready for action, and those who are dead and can not be resurrected should be buried. Can we get our army in action?

As an officer I ask you, are you willing to act—first, you who are officers; second, you who are in the ranks? If so, are you willing to work in harmony, to recognize any leadership, to conform to law, to order; or is your opinion the law always? Are you willing that the majority should prevail on questions to be decided by vote, or must your individual vote swing all others. Are you willing to sustain, uphold, encourage, and strengthen the hands of all who are striving to work, to honor every man in his office, and instead of obstructing his work assist him to preform it? For the work's sake honor the office, and God will honor you. "He that heareth him who is sent, heareth the Lord who sent him, if he be called of God and sent by the voice of the church."—Doctrine and Covenants.

Further, with reference to individual sins as "difficulties within," remember, the strength of a chain is no greater than its weakest link. Do not say then, and console yourself by saying, "well, that is my weakness." But 'tis good you know it. Put it away then, brother, sister! "Let us lay aside every weight and the sins that do so easily beset us."—Hebrews 12: 1. It is written, "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me." We can not have, and love God with all our hearts.

The way to kill that bad habit is to cut its head off at one stroke. It will not die if you feed it. Give thy sins no nourishment: starve, absolutely starve them to death. Fix your thoughts and set your affections on heavenly things. Do you want those bad things, bad thoughts, bad habits, to be your consolation forever? Are they good enough for eternity? Then nourish them here. "They that sow to the flesh," have the promise that they shall reap corruption, or as they sow.

Let us sow abundantly to the Spirit. Let work be the watchword of the hour. There is no grander word. Jesus dignified it, saying "I work," and commanding, "Work while the day lasts." Do not despise the work that is offered you in the details of every day or church life. Is it in the Sunday-school? Be there. Take an interest. You can learn so long as you live. Be at the prayer-meeting and take part. There is work for all; work for young and old. It is hunting you, in the Religio, in the Daughters of Zion, in Aid societies, among your neighbors and friends, at home, in the shop, on the street. It will not let you rest "till the summons home be heard." "Let us work together with God." Let us if possible subordinate ourselves; keep Christ in the foreground, our ambitions in the background. Let us in submissiveness, be willing to say at all times, "Thy will, O God, not mine, be done."

By individual effort and faithfulness on the part of all, old and young, the right kind of a change will be brought about. Daily will be added to the Church such as shall be saved. Can we be satisfied when it is not so? Those who are doing all possible, are doing enough. Continue. Those who are doing less are going backward, and should arouse, putting on the whole armor of God. It is hard to "serve God and mammon." But Jesus says, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." Do not try to deceive and make yourself think you are tolerably good and will sort of pass along somehow, and finally come out all right, and at the same time your own heart condemns you, "for God is greater than your heart and knoweth all things," said the apostle; you will not be able to stand when he shall appear unless you purify yourself and maintain a conscience void of offence toward God and all men. All that you can do to assist the work in any way will have its effect in the salvation of souls. What you do of duty in the Church will reach out as the pebble dropped in the water makes the waves circle round with the shock.

Desiring the faith, prayers, and coöperation of all for the success of the work, I have written in plainness, it is true, but with malice to none and desire of salvation for all.

With respect to openings or demands for gospel work, please address me at 711 North Ninth Street, Atchison, Kansas.

TOPEKA, Kansas, October 22.

New Cemetery at Independence, Missouri.

Not one in ten thousand knows the place of his sepulchre, but we all know that we must die.

The Saints at Independence and vicinity have for many years felt the need of having a resting-place of their own for their dead. For the past ten or fifteen years the buying of a suitable piece of ground for this purpose has been a matter of consideration, and especially during the last two years the necessity has become greater and greater until we were in a measure compelled to do something. How to do so was a question. The right kind of land was high. By the advice of the general Bishopric of the Church we concluded to make the venture. Bro. G. H. Hilliard and the writer, by the advice of Bishop Kelley, went to select a place. We found a very suitable piece of land, but we did not have a dollar of money in hand. We prayed the Lord to open up the way for us, and he did. The writer was selected to see the owner of the land. The price asked was one hundred and fifty dollars per acre for nineteen acres, but finally we agreed on two thousand dollars for the field. A good brother came to our rescue and said, "I will consecrate one thousand dollars for this purpose. This money to be paid to the General Church Fund as the lots are sold." So we paid that much cash, and gave a mortgage and note for the balance of one thousand dollars payable in six months at six per cent interest.

The land lies almost directly north of the church and is on a good road. It is just outside of the city limits, about one and one half miles from the church on the river road. It is a beautiful location, high and overlooking the Missouri River and a vast country round about. One desirable feature of the land is that two thirds of it is on a high ridge, and one third hillside and valley which can be used to the very best advantage for family vaults. The ground is now being cleared up, all the underbrush and weeds cut and it is being gotten ready for surveying and platting.

We expect that this cemetery will be under the care and management of the Church, but maintained and kept in order from the purchase price of the lots in such a way that although a person may be dead and his place in the world to a degree forgotten, yet his grave and the cemetery will be cared for forever.

We can not now give the prices of the lots, but will state that they will be very reasonable, ranging in price from $10 to $40 according to location. The size of the lots will be about 12 by 24. As we have no money on hand to prepare and embellish this ground, we will receive the purchase price of a lot or lots and those buying can make selection when the land is platted. The land must be redeemed from the one thousand dollar mortgage before any deeds are made or permission for interment granted. Surveying, making driveways and roads, suitable fencing, trees, public vault, and many other necessary improvements must be made. The work is going on now and we do not expect to stop until it is finished. This cemetery can be made one of the most beautiful in the country and ruled and governed as are all the first-class burying-grounds. Lots will be sold subject to rules and regulations to be adopted by the cemetery board of directors which will be elected. We extend the privilege of purchasing a lot or lots to any person in or out of the Church and from all parts of the world.

It will be to the special interest of the Saints of Independence and Kansas City not to lose sight of their long-looked-for privileges and opportunities and not allow themselves to be crowded out. First come, first served. Your choice will be according to your turn as the money is paid in. Money can be sent to me at Independence, Missouri, or to Bishop E. L. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa.

Yours in bonds, R. MAY.

Bishop of Independence Stake.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, October 29, 1903.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To Saints of Little Sioux District: We wish to remind you that our report as Bishop's agent closes with December 31, 1903, for the year. The number of names on our books, and receipts to date, are below that of some years past. Some have striven to do their full duty in matters of tithes and offerings, but not one in ten of our district membership is thus far enrolled for 1903. Why? Let each reader answer. Neglect, lack of faith, what? 'Tis well to speak of and pray for "Zion's upbuilding," "inheritance of Saints," "gospel's spread," but "faith without works is dead," and we are largely responsible for the little progress made. We invite isolated members to send us their tithes and offerings, as well as those who live within the branch limits. Children who are members as well as their parents, — and the parents should instruct in these, as well as other matters of faith. We further request you to forward as early as possible, that we may not be burdened the last day of the year.

There are those who are worth thousands, who give us a small amount annually; others who were, and are, members in the district from our earliest recollection, whose names are not on the Bishop's books for so much (?) as five cents. Wherein have such "made a covenant by sacrifice"? If every good deed shall be rewarded (and giving for "gospel spread" none will question as good), will not those who give appear in spiritual advancements over those who do not? May not the text "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say" (Luke 6:46) apply to "church members" in doing of duty, as well as to the world?

Bro. Charles J. Hunt, bishop of Gallands Grove District, is now visiting our district in the interest of finances (owing to our physical disability we can not travel), hence we bespeak for him your attention and coöperation. We also have a sub-agent in each branch. So none need be hindered in giving. We are anxious to advance this department, believing it means not only temporal blessings to comply therewith, but spiritual advancement as well.

Yours in bonds,

ALMA M. FYRANDO.

Correction.

In the report of the proceedings of the British Isles Mission conference, in HERALD of October 14, at top of first column, page 971, the resolution in regard to the publication of a Church paper and appointment of committee to act in the matter, should have been reported lost instead of carried. The error was caused by a wrong preparation of copy for the printer.

In HERALD for October 28, last week's number, page 1004, in note concerning visitors to the Kirtland Temple, read twelve hundred and ninety-three, instead of twelve thousand and ninety-three.

Married.

BARTON—COOMBS.—At the home of the bride's father, Plainville, Massachusetts, October 21, 1903, by Elder John Gilbert, Mr. Richard Barton to Sr. Florence Coombs. The ceremony was performed with the bridal party standing beneath a bower of evergreens bedecked with flowers and was witnessed by the large company of invited guests. The happy couple were the recipients of many beautiful presents. May joy attend, and happiness be their portion.

Died.

ROBERTS.—Lucy A., beloved wife of C. M. Roberts, born December 11, 1873, near Thurman, Iowa. She was the daughter of Philip and Cinderella Benner. Was married to C. M. Roberts December 20, 1891; to this union four daughters were born, of whom three survive, one having passed away in infancy. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints sometime in March, 1895; was baptized by Henry Kemp. She was a faithful follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, and showed by her daily life that she was a Christian indeed. She was an active worker in the Sunday-school and did what she could for the good of others. She was a dutiful wife, a loving and indulgent mother. She departed this life October 23, 1903, at the age of 29 years, 10 months, and 12 days. She leaves a loving husband, three sweet little girls, an aged father, two brothers, and one sister. Funeral services at her home, October 24, in charge of T. M. Roberts. Sermon by D. R. Chambers. Her body was laid to rest in the Dawsonburg Cemetery, there to await the resurrection of the just.

FORSUTT—At his home in Nebraska City, Nebraska, in the early morning of October 18, 1903, Bro. Mark H. Forscutt passed on to his reward. He was born June 19, 1834, at Manchester, England; baptized into the Reorganized Church by Elder David Pudney, January 1, 1865. Ordained at Plano, Illinois, to the office of high priest, by Joseph Smith, William Marks, and Isaac Sheen. He held membership in the Plano Branch until 1872, when he was granted a letter. In 1874 he became a member of the branch at Canton, Illinois, retaining his membership there until 1876. From 1876 to 1879 his membership was with the Nebraska City Branch, and from 1879 to 1881 at Shenandoah, Iowa. From 1881 to 1884 at St. Joseph, Missouri. From 1884 to 1890 at Nebraska City; from 1890 to 1895 at St. Joseph, Missouri; and from 1895 till his death at Nebraska City. In 1860 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Unsworth, whose death preceded his by thirteen days. Bro. Forscutt was buried from his home and the hall of the local post of the Grand Army of the Republic, the members of which post assisted in the funeral ceremonies, taking charge of the services at the grave. Bro. Columbus Scott was in charge; the sermon was by President Joseph Smith, who also offered the closing prayer at the grave. "They are passing over, one by one."

HARRINGTON.—George Ival was born October 13, 1884, on the home farm near Tabor, Iowa. He was the fourth oldest child of A. C. and Anna Harrington. On Monday, October 5, he in company with his younger brother went out hunting and by accident the gun was discharged and the contents entered the left side and arm, which resulted in his death Tuesday evening, October 6, about 5:30. He was not a church member, but before he died he desired to be baptized and become a member of the Latter Day Saints' Church, but on account of his being so low this request could not be complied with. He leaves to mourn his departure a loving father and mother, five brothers, one sister, one aged grandfather, two grandmothers, uncles, aunts, and a host of friends. At the time of his death he was 18 years, 11 months, and 24 days old. Funeral services were held at the home of his parents in Tabor, Iowa, October 8, 1903, Charles Fry in charge. Sermon by D. R. Chambers.

It has been my experience that red squirrels are rather irritable animals. It is a common thing, when meeting a red squirrel in the woods, to have him drop whatever he may be doing, and just sit and scold, as though you intended to rob him of all he possessed. If you make a quick movement to startle him, he will often sit bolt upright, with quivering lower jaw, clasp his breast frantically with one or both front paws, and look at you with an injured expression which seems to say, "How cruel! When you knew I had heart trouble, too!" He is a playful little fellow, though, and would be a welcome tenant in the garden, if it were not for his fondness for bird's eggs and young birds. Some time ago a pair of scarlet tanagers built their flimsy nest of twigs and grasses in a pine-tree near our front door. One morning we heard the birds screaming piteously, and rushing out, I found a red squirrel sitting on the edge of the nest, deliberately eating one of the eggs, which he held in his front paws, while the contents dripped from his jaws to the ground. I did my best to drive him away, but to little purpose; so I borrowed a gun, and did what I had not done for more than fifteen years—I shot something.—Ernest Harold Baynes in October Woman's Home Companion.

CALIFORNIA.

The great PROSPERITY of this Land of Opportunity, has recently been marked by a distinguished visitor, Honorable Hamilton Fish, Assistant United States Treasurer. Mr. Fish saw nothing that impressed him more than the ENORMOUS BUSINESS being done on the Pacific Coast, the apparent permanency of its prosperity, and the NEED of more WORKERS.

The basis of this prosperity is first of all CLIMATE, then ELECTRICAL ENERGY and FUEL OIL for manufacturers, and finally IRRIGATION. Given WATER to turn on at will, in a country so full of SUNSHINE, and growth is continuous. Something is growing EVERY MONTH to put on the table, to fatten stock, or carry to market. ONE ACRE of alfalfa will support TWO COWS, and for hay can be cut five times a year. Larger than England and Scotland combined, California has ROOM for a MILLION MORE people, and this makes land CHEAP, and OPPORTUNITY GREAT. A SELF-SUSTAINING home, the VALUE of which will RAPIDLY INCREASE, can EASILY be secured where life means COMFORT as well as COIN.

COLONIST RATES now make it easy to see how it is yourself. They are based on a rate of $33.00 from Chicago, or $25.00 from Missouri River points, via Southern Pacific. California books can be had of any agent. Write to

THOMAS A. EDISON, the great American inventor, sometimes styled the "Wizard of Menlo Park," was once asked why he was a total abstainer. His reply was characteristic: "I think it was because I always felt that I had a better use for my head."

WE recently made a call for an early edition of the Voice of Warning, but have not heard the response we were expecting. We shall be glad to secure a copy.

ELDER J. C. CLAPP writes under date of November 3 that he has lately opened up the work in Naco, Arizona, speaking in the Baptist church building, which was secured for him through the influence of Sr. Fike.

EVERY MAN.

A cardinal feature of the gospel of Christ is that every man must stand, triumph, or fail for himself; all must pass under this rule; none can be exempted or excused.

No one objects to this inexorable rule when it is applied to the subject of the award or glory which has been offered in the gospel economy; all feel satisfied with the application of it from that point of view. None will attempt to justify any other conclusion than that the rule applied in either way will secure to every man his just meed of loss or punishment for unworthiness in conduct, either temporal or spiritual.

The rule is absolutely just, and equally imperative as to its observance by the Judge who may sit on the judgment-seat. No man will be permitted to take another's crown of reward; neither will any one be compelled to receive another's punishment, or suffer another's portion of loss.

This is a rule in the operation of which all are at an equality, no matter whether rich or poor, high or low, wise or foolish; the scales hang even, and neither bribe, fear of censure, the love of favor, or the force of threat will cause the balance to move a hair's breadth.

Any rule of conduct to be effective for the good of those affected thereby must be observed in the spirit of it as well as the letter of it. An axiom of law is that any instrument of writing must be construed according to its obvious import; if it is sufficiently plain that the intention of the parties to it may be gathered from its terms, then that is the meaning of it, and it must be so held by the courts.

Take the rule referred to, "every man must answer for what he has done in the flesh" is sufficiently plain to carry the intention of the Lawgiver. So that no one may take shelter under the plea, "I did not understand it." Neither is there any doubt as to what construction the Judge will put on the law.

Hardly a day passes in which there does not reach this office letters containing requests for answers to questions concerning matters of personal conduct; such answers to be given in the HERALD or by direct personal reply by letter. While we do not object to receiving such letters, or answering them when we can, or find any fault with the motives of the writers, so far as we can judge of them from the form of the letters and the nature of the questions asked, we are led to think that, by implication at least, some of the writers forget the injunction so frequently quoted by them, or by others in their hearing and with their acquiescence, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm."

Our reasons for thinking this way we venture to give, as it may help some to a possible solution of some of their difficulties in deciding questions of personal conduct both in others and in themselves.

"Every man must answer for himself."

That is: when the fitful fires of human life shall have burned out, and the earthly tenement has finished the course appointed unto it, the record completed, then the responsible inmate must stand before the Judge who judgeth not according to the outward seeing with the eyes and hearing with the ears, but judgeth righteous judgment, alone, with no one to answer for his own conduct, to receive his reward, or take his punishment; all based on the record of the deeds done in the flesh.

The acts of which an account has been kept are those for which he is himself responsible; that is, those of his determining, those performed at his own suggestion, under the exercise of his own discretion, the result of his own decision as to the wrong or right involved in the doing of them.

It follows that the acts, deeds, that any man may do under the dictation or at the suggestion of another as to the rightfulness or wrongfulness of them, will neither be overlooked nor disregarded when the final verdict is made up, and allowance will be made for them in favor of the doer because of such dictation or suggestion.

The decision will be made upon the facts of the responsibility of the doer and the right and wrong of the acts. The questions at issue will be, Did the man do the acts recorded? Were the deeds done good or bad, right or wrong?

If it should be urged in palliation of the act performed that it was done at the dictation or suggestion of another, such plea will be met by the inquiry, Were you at liberty to decline or refuse to do the thing dictated or suggested? No one would think of confessing that he was not free to do, or not to do, as dictated or suggested, provided he assumes the premise that "every man must answer for himself." If by any possible conditions a man is forced to do a wrong deed, such fact of being compelled to do it will be held to exonerate the doer to a greater or lesser extent, subject of course to the facts of the particular case. But, in our Church work and in consideration of our relationship to that work and each other there is no such compulsion intended or provided for. It is for one's own acts, the results of his own volition and choice to do, that he must answer, not the acts or deeds of another.

Many of the questions regarding personal conduct, whether it is right to do this, or wrong to do that, are of such a nature that they ask for the opinion of the editors, or president, upon actions done either by the writers or others whom they may have in mind; and some even ask in the sentiment that the answer is a passing of judgment or decision upon the act referred to, either of approval, or condemnation. Sometimes the question is, Is there any rule of law for such and such an act, or, Is it in accordance with the law of God for a man to do such and such a thing, naming the act inquired of.

In answering these various questions, when we have replied at all we have tried to keep within the sweep of the ground principle, "Whatsoever ye would that man should do unto you, do ye also unto them."—Jesus. Taken together with the following: "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" . . . "Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honor thy father and thy mother, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Jesus. These requirements were reënforced, or reinstated by revelation to the Church as organized by command of God in these last days, in 1831: "Thou shalt not kill;" "Thou shalt not steal;" "Thou shalt not lie;" "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart;" "Thou shalt not commit adultery;" "Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm."—Section 42, Doctrine and Covenants.

It seems that these commands, or precepts, should cover the whole duty of the disciple. To square one's conduct in life by them should make a man a suitable citizen for any condition and sphere of labor, a fit companion for any association, from the family fire-side to the cabinet council and the ruler's chair, from the rags of decent poverty to the broadcloth of affluent riches; for the use of every talent in every form of labor, from the tilling of the soil, man's primitive toil, to the proper uses of wealth.

It does not lie within the province of one man to know the right and the wrong of every phase of human conduct, other than the man Jesus the Christ, and he has seen fit to simplify the requirements within the gospel economy by a few general rules, chiefly, "Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, all thy mind, all thy soul; and thy neighbor as thyself."

"Is it right for a Latter Day Saint to do thus and so? Please answer through the HERALD. We have a case in which this question is involved. Please answer in next HERALD, that we may know how to act."

If the editors answer, it is taken as an expression of judgment on the act of the member who is supposed to be accused of the deed referred to. How are the editors supposed to know the nature of the act complained of without a knowledge of the attendant circumstances? By what rule of right is he required to pass upon the acts of personal conduct of those whom he does not know? Every man is the keeper of his own conscience, the guardian of his own will, the conservator of his own peace; he must stand or fall by his own deeds. If he is to be judged, excused, or condemned by the editors' opinion, or knowledge of things right and things wrong, then is he not being made to subject his own to another's will and conscience?

We preach to them that are without that the Holy Spirit is to be "given to every man to profit withal." We teach to them within that the Holy Spirit is to be the directing, guiding, comforting, controlling force in every true disciple's life. If true, is it not past the bounds of consistency to continue to increase the code of rules of personal conduct by an unceasingly extending line of questions and answers defining by opinion the rightfulness of this or that act, or the wrongfulness of that or the other saying or doing?

If men should fashion their deportment by the presence of the Spirit of the Master in its capacity of teacher and prompter is not a rule of a code prescribing this or that a burden to the memory and a hindrance to the free action of the would-be Saint?

We do not object to human helps, nor the careful submission of questions touching one's course, between neighbors, friends, and counselors, as aids to human weakness; but do object to the submission to an apparent censor of these questions concerning human conduct which are clearly within the discretion of the individual. Of this class are the various phases of financial dealing between brethren and those in and out of the Church. The common meanings of the words honesty and fair dealing with all must obtain in every transaction; whatever is honest and fair between man and man is right; whatever is not honest and fair is wrong and no Saint is justified or even excusable in doing what is wrong, or dishonest.

What is the extent and compass of obligation as to virtue and morality?

Whatever partakes of the nature of adultery is not only wrong but sinful. "Thou shalt not commit adultery, nor do anything like unto it."—Revelation of 1831, Doctrine and Covenants 59:2. Anything in our intercourse with the membership and the outside that trends toward the commission of the crimes of fornication and adultery is wrong. Men who would be safe from these crimes must shun the very appearance of the evil, and the things in human conduct that lead to them.

"Thou shalt not kill." Any conduct or acts by which human life is destroyed is sinful and men must not do them. The command covers the entire range of intercourse of man with his fellow man.

"Thou shalt not steal." Anything and everything, word or deed, by means of which a man may take the properties of another, member of the Church or otherwise, without the owner's knowledge and consent and for a just consideration, is theft, stealing. There is no need to send a query to the HERALD to ascertain whether a given act is an act of theft; try it by the rule, that will give the answer needed.

"Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor; nor do him any harm." There is nothing that may occur in neighborly intercourse that is not included in this command, so far as wrong-doing toward one's neighbor is concerned. "Do good to all men; especially to them who are of the household of faith."—Paul, Galatians 6:10. This is the opposite, or antithesis of the rule against wrong-doing and ought to be easy to understand.

"Thou shalt not lie." A lie is anything told or acted with the intention to deceive.

Lies are of infinite variety. They range from the faintest suppression of the truth which ought to be told, to the broad assertion of what is known by him who states it to be false, and is stated with the purpose to deceive. Who can be so dull as not to know enough to tell the truth? Who needs a list of clauses stating what is, and is not a lie?

But there are many things, acts of personal conduct, which must from their very nature be left to the personal decision of the individual member as he may be directed by wisdom, or controlled by conditions. Shall I insure my property from loss by fire or storm? Can I unite with benevolent societies, secret or open in regard to business methods, without violating the law of God? Am I at liberty to join popular secret orders of the day, for safeguarding my family in case of accident or death? Are various kinds of business ventures open for me to accept? May I go to this, or any other locality to make my home? These questions may be lengthened out to an alarming extent; but all of them and others like them must be left to be answered by those in whose lives the conditions arise making answers necessary. The editors may not in equity assume the position of the requisite knowledge and infallibility of wisdom to answer these queries and their correlatives of every possible shade. All we can do is to aid the doubting, halting, undecided and anxious to make a decision, so far as in us lies.

Believing, as we do, that the Spirit will and does aid those needing help, we advise the Saints to be careful in asking questions for others to solve and answer, and to see that they have made the proper effort to obtain and make suitable answers for themselves.

CORRECTION.

On page 1018 of HERALD for October 28, is an article on Pope Pius X, which should have been credited to the Catholic World Magazine, from which it was taken. We regret that the credit was overlooked.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. Peter Anderson reported from Porsgrund, Norway, October 22, for the Scandinavian Mission. He reported seven baptisms for the quarter, six in Norway and one in Sweden. Bro. Söjland has been laboring in and near Eysersund, and prospects are good for an ingathering soon. Bro. Söjland has been ordained an elder. Bro. Enge has labored about Christiansand, and Bro. Kronberg about Grinstad, where three of the baptisms occurred. Bro. Muceus has labored mostly at Porsgrund, being kept there by duties connected with publishing the Banner. Three have been baptized in Porsgrund, and others are interested. Bro. Anderson writes: "We have reached many people this summer in our open-air meetings, and many have become acquainted with the Church who knew of only the church in Utah. Several in Christiania, the capital, are interested, and I hope to continue our labors there again this coming winter. The Saints are growing spiritually, and we have had some excellent social meetings. We are hopeful of success all along the line. I have traveled some the past three or four months, assisting the missionaries, and have had a good hearing everywhere. Made a short trip into Denmark. We could use several men there to good advantage if we had them and the means needed to start the work there."

In his report for the quarter, dated at Plainville, Indiana, Heman C. Smith states two branches have been organized, both in Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District. The missionary force in his field have reported one hundred and thirty-one baptisms, and those of the local ministry have baptized still others. While some places in the mission seem in stagnant condition spiritually, there is serious trouble only at one point, and that is being looked after. Bro. Smith writes: "I have been in the field since August 1, and have attended conferences in all the districts in my field except Northern Wisconsin District, and have labored otherwise as opportunity offered."

 EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We have received a lengthy letter from W. H. Kelley, written from Utah, which will be of interest to our readers. It will appear next week.

John Schreur wrote on October 31 that there was quite an interest at Bendon, Michigan. Seven had been baptized, and the Saints were happy in the work.

A fast mail train on the Burlington, No 15, on October 4 ran from Chicago to Burlington, two hundred and six miles, in two hundred minutes. For long runs the Burlington holds some fine records.

Sr. G. T. Griffiths writes that the Kirtland Saints are looking forward with great expectations to General Conference.

In a speech made by Heber J. Grant, an apostle of the Utah Church, on November 5, he said: "Yes, I have got two wives, and the only reason I have not got another is because the government won't let me." It is said that this statement has created quite a stir in Salt Lake City, as it is taken as equivalent to saying that the apostle was living in open violation of the law and boasting of it.

In another column will be seen a notice of missionary release affecting the British Isles Mission. We regret the necessity for decreasing the force in Bro. Rushton's field; but facts are stubborn things and wise men will meet them as they exist and govern themselves according to the conditions.

Bro. J. W. Luff, treasurer of the Independence Foundry Company, Missouri, sends us an order drawn on Edgar F. Smith, Battle Creek, Michigan, for eight barrels of apples, and accompanied by a check for sixteen dollars, the price of the apples agreed upon. The letter to Smith was returned to Bro. Luff by the post-office authorities with the official mark FRAUDULENT stamped on the envelope. We regret the occurrence and the occasion making it necessary.

Bro. Joseph Arber, whom we met at conference at Leeds, England, and after at Glasgow and Hamilton, Scotland, was to leave Glasgow, October 31, by the Columbia, of the Anchor Line of ocean steamers, for America. It is by the emigration of members of the Church from some of the branches in Europe, that the carrying on of the work over the water is made more difficult than it would otherwise be. But it is hardly possible to advise against such emigration, for the reason that the conditions over there are almost intolerable in many cases. There seems to be but one way to escape them, and that is to get away from them. It is said that the needs of men are few, but it is certain that though few, they are more or less urgent and importunate and must be heeded and provided for. We hope Bro. Arber will, like the dove, find a place to rest his feet.

The editor of the Deseret News in the issue for November 7 speaks of the attempts of the eastern press writers to draw comparisons between Dowie and Joseph Smith, and thinks the comparison not good. "There is nothing in common," says the News, "between the two very dissimilar characters, nor is there any identity in their respective doctrines, although there is little if any doubt that Dowie once made a study of 'Mormonism,' and endeavored to adopt some of its ideas and discipline in his own system, without really understanding either the principles or the organization of the church which he attempted to plagiarize."

By clippings sent us from some of the Philadelphia papers of recent dates, we note that Bro. La Rue has several times appeared in print in defense of our work.

Original Articles.

THE PRESIDENT OR CHIEF OFFICER IN THE CHURCH IN THE TIME OF THE APOSTLES. JAMES OR PETER, WHICH?

BY W. H. KELLEY.

In order to form a still clearer image of James, we must go back to the Nazarene home in which Jesus was reared. The "brethren of the Lord" were either the children of Joseph by a former marriage, or the children of Joseph and Mary born after Jesus. The latter view seems best to accord with the intimations of the gospels. The view advanced by Jerome and elaborated by others that they were the cousins of Jesus on his mother's side is beset with difficulties, of which it is sufficient to mention the fact that it identified James with the son of Alphæus and so makes him one of the original apostles.—Page 133.

There is still less foundation for the view that they were cousins of Jesus on Joseph's side. In any event James had been the daily associate of Jesus in the Nazarene home. We infer that from early life he had been an earnest, religious character, steeped in the teaching of the Old Testament and in later Hebrew literature. The tradition of his devoted piety can hardly have been without some foundation, yet with all of his piety James did not accept Jesus as the Messiah. This does not exclude, however, sympathy with much of Jesus' teaching, nor warm affection for his person. His unbelief may have been due to Jesus' rupture with many Jewish conventionalities; also to James' exalted view of the glory of the Messiah, and the impression of Jesus' loneliness produced on one who had himself shared it. The fact that Jesus, after his resurrection, appeared to James (1 Corinthians 4: 7) is a testimony to the latter's high character as well as his brother's love for him and foresight of his future usefulness.—Page 134.

We can not wonder, then, that when convinced of the Messiahship of his former brother and now risen Lord, James soon ranked high in the new community. It is not clear what office he occupied in the Jerusalem church. Later traditions made him its first bishop, chosen to that office by the apostles (Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, 2, 23); and among extreme Jewish Christians of the second century, he was represented as the bishop of the entire church. (Church Homilies.) But these traditions read back later ideas into the apostolic age. He was doubtless one of the elders of the church; and if the eldership of Jerusalem had a president—of which there is no proof—James presumably held that office.

This is all that might be expected to be conceded by one who does not believe in the idea of a first president or first presidency. It is clear, however, that James was the prominent man in Jerusalem, which is enough to support our contention, and that this James was not the son of Alphæus. True, the name of the office he held is not recorded; but in after-years when the word bishop was used to dignify the highest church official, or designate his office, it was read back and the same title or office was accorded to James the Lord's brother, in speaking of him. The above citations are given from this eminent scholar and author, for the reason he discusses the questions at issue quite fully, and certainly fairly; and he is an up-to-date man. His treatise from which these selections have been made is a rare work, of value to any student. It will be observed that after the ascension of Jesus, the completion of the organization of the church was left to the apostles as a body. That when the church was supplied with competent local officers and set in order, the twelve were "delocalized" and went into all the world. That the organization was kept up in Jerusalem and its authority was recognized everywhere. That Peter held no preëminence other than the president of the quorum over the other apostles; they acted together. That "James, the Lord's brother," by proper selection and choice became the recognized head or president of the church at Jerusalem. As to his prominence there is no dispute. That Peter's preëminence appears nowhere more than when Jesus was on earth with the disciples, and it could hardly be claimed that Peter outranked Jesus in official standing. That James "the Lord's brother" was the son of Joseph and Mary, is the most probable view, and that he could not have been the son of Alphæus. That the theory that James, Joses, etc., were cousins of Jesus, and not brothers, was an "invention" by Jerome over three hundred and fifty years after the time of Christ; that this was gotten up most likely to harmonize with the Roman Catholic sentiment and claims of the times, that the church was built on Peter and that Mary was "ever virgin," etc. So the contention made by the writer of the Appendix to the "Exegesis of the Priesthood" is shown to be without foundation in the main view presented.

But the evidences are extended.

I am led by close examination of evidence to the conviction that James, the son of Alphæus, and James, who is styled in Galatians 1: 19 the brother of the Lord, were different persons (see John 7: 3; Mathew 13: 55). The former was an apostle; the latter does not seem even to have been a believer in Christ at all till after the resurrection. Immediately on his joining the little Christian church, however, he took a prominent position, being president of the council at Jerusalem. It is my opinion, from the statements made in Scripture, that James was the son of Joseph and Mary; and consequently, as stated by Paul, the brother of our Lord. He was the author of the epistle.—From the Self Interpreting Bible, under the head of the General Epistle of James, page 480.

Again, page 512, the following occurs:

Had the author of this epistle (Epistle of Jude) been the same as Judas Lebbeus, one of the twelve, there is scarcely a doubt that he would have called himself an apostle. This would at once have given his epistle the stamp of authority. As he has not done so, it seems in the highest degree probable that he was not an apostle, and that James mentioned as his brother was the well-known president of the council at Jerusalem and author of the epistle that bears his name. Jude was then one of the brethren (or as I believe, a brother of the Lord).—From notes in the Self Interpreting Bible by Rev. James W. Lee, D. D., Josiah L. Porter, D. D., LL. D., Henry Cook, D. D., LL. D., John Brown, D. D., LL. D., published by R. S. Peale and J. A. Hill, New York.

These writers rank among the most eminent scholars in Europe and America. In point of scholarship there is no better authority.

It will be noted that these writers take the same view in regard to the brother of the Lord, Jude and the son of Alphæus, that is presented in "Presidency and Priesthood." In Tell's Popular Encyclopedia, page 1363, under the head of James, the following occurs:

James the son of Alphæus, one of the twelve apostles (Matthew 10: 3; Mark 3: 18; Luke 6: 15; Acts 1: 13). He is called James the less, either as being younger than James the son of Zebedee or on account of his low stature (Mark 16:1; Luke 24: 10). James the brother of the Lord (Galatians 1: 18). Whether this James is identical with the son of Alphæus is a question which Doctor Neander pronounces to be the most difficult in the apostolic history, and cannot be considered as settled. It is probable however that he was a different person.

It will be observed, however, that all of the eminent authors cited above, place the probabilities of this question upon the side that they were two distinct persons; and some take strong grounds, being convinced that the brother of the Lord was not the son of Alphæus, but none other than the son of Joseph and Mary and brother of Jesus as affirmed by Paul. But it may be important to examine this Appendix to the "Exegesis of the Priesthood" more minutely.

On the second page, the writer endeavors to convince his readers about a matter concerning which there is no dispute, viz., "that Peter, James (the son of Zebedee), and John were the messengers sent to Joseph Smith, the Seer, and Oliver Cowdery, and that John the Baptist acted under their direction," also the quotation from Doctrine and Covenants 110: 20 in regard to the "voice of Michael on the banks of the Susquehanna," etc. There is no difficulty about these texts,—it is only the conclusions arrived at by the writer that mystifies, and gets him into trouble. He says, page 145, "Now if there was a James, the Lord's brother, who held the keys of the presidency subsequent to Christ's departure, why did not he and his associates Jude and Silas, as stated by some, appear and confer the keys of the presidency upon Joseph Smith?" We answer, for the best of reasons. Neither James, Jude, and Silas, nor Peter, James, and John were directing the matter. Jesus Christ, the great Head of the church in heaven, was doing the sending. The Savior sent the men whom he selected for his special ambassadors at Jerusalem, and gave commission to "go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" and again, "and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Jesus had said unto them in similar speech which was addressed to Thomas B. Marsh, "Unto you three I will give this power and the keys of this ministry until I come." (Doctrine and Covenants 7: 2.) The keys of this ministry related to the preaching of the gospel and bringing souls unto Christ, as the context shows, home and foreign missions, and has not the least allusion to a presidency on earth. It referred to their work in the ministry in this world, and their standing and work in heaven when they should become angels, next to Christ, his prime ministers to be sent. These keys were to be held by them until Christ comes, then they are to appear on thrones (Matthew 19: 28), not as presidents, but as judges. So their authority and work are set out on earth, in heaven, and in the millennium, standing next to Christ as chief ministers, not church presidents. Again, it is nowhere written that one first presidency is to send another first presidency, and most especially this would be true if the work in view had been assigned to others to do. Jesus, the great First President, sent three of his apostles according to law and order, and not the presidency of the church at Jerusalem, or any other church; but men to whom this work belonged, under the direction of the First President in heaven. Jesus was always careful to keep the law on his side.

The writer of the Appendix, then, is not supported in his theory by this text. The trouble with the "Exegesis" is that it does not sufficiently set out the proper presidency that belongs to the "high priesthood," which consists of a presidency and a second presidency; and then the keys held by the second presidency are made to belong only to the first. But sections 104, 105, 80, Doctrine and Covenants, made clear the places of the two, arranging each presidency in its place with its proper "keys of the kingdom," or keys of the Melchisedec priesthood. The second presidency are the messengers sent. So Jesus, the great Head and President in heaven, sent those to whom he gave the keys of this ministry, under whose direction the Aaronic priesthood was conferred upon Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery by the imposition of the hands of John the Baptist, and the Melchisedec by the command of God through the laying on of hands of Joseph Smith upon Oliver Cowdery, and Oliver Cowdery in turn laying his hands upon Joseph Smith; after which, Joseph says, "I should be called the first elder, and he (Oliver) the second." There was nothing conferred here but what is admitted that Peter, James, and John were invested with at Jerusalem, during Christ's ministry on earth, and also their associates; only now, these three are empowered with an increased authority, that is, a dispensation of the gospel for the last time and the fullness of times, showing that they had received new keys since becoming angels. Peter, James, and John, John the Baptist, and Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, were all instruments through which these ordinations occurred and priesthoods were bestowed, but it was Jesus Christ who did the ordaining. Jesus says, "by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles and special witnesses of my name, and bear the keys of your ministry." Nothing but the admitted authority held by Peter, James, and John, as apostles, at Jerusalem, is here indicated as having been conferred; but had there been other, that authority and the keys could have been bestowed by the great Head who sent them, just as well as he could confer on them the authority and keys of the dispensation of the fullness of times, that perhaps none will claim they held at Jerusalem, whatever their place in the church.

When the church had been sufficiently organized, so as to require a permanent local president, it was provided for according to law, as shown in the revelations already quoted, viz:

Of necessity there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices of these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith and prayers of the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

This is the course that was pursued by the apostles and church at Jerusalem after the ascension of the Savior. Peter, James, and John "did not contend for the honor as to who should occupy the highest seat, but chose James the Just as bishop of Jerusalem." As a second step, after the death of James, it is written:

Sometime after his death, as Eusebius relates from ancient traditions, the apostles and disciples of our Lord, as many as were yet in being, met together with our Savior's kinsmen (several of whom were alive) to consult about choosing a successor in Saint James' room, and they unanimously agreed upon Simeon, son of Cleopas, our Savior's cousin according to the flesh, thinking him the most fit and worthy person.—Antiquities of Christianity, p. 28.

This "choosing" of a president of the church at Jerusalem is in harmony with the rule as cited in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, but who ever read anything about Peter, James, and John being "chosen" as presidents of the church? According to this law and precedent, Joseph Smith, Jr., was "chosen" president of the Church and, ordained at a conference held at Amherst, Ohio, and, too, ordained by those holding a like priesthood with himself, thus refuting the claim made by some, that in every case of ordination, the one receiving ordination must be set apart by one holding a higher office in the priesthood than the one being ordained. If there is a higher officer present or available, he is considered and recognized, otherwise a commandment from God to ordain is the end of controversy. This is what occurred in the chamber of old Father Whitmer, and what occurred at Amherst, Ohio; the stream never rises above the fountain, for the fountain is in heaven; men are "ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost which is in the one who ordains." So in referring to Joseph and Oliver, the Savior is made to say, "Whom I have ordained."

On page 3 of the Appendix, reference is made to Peter, James, and John going with the Savior upon the Mount, of their being permitted to enter the sick room (Luke 8:13), and selected to be with Christ during his trial at Gethsemane (Matthew 26:37, 38), and all of this is made to bend to the notion that these experiences were for the purpose of fitting them for the presidency of the church. But the references do not warrant the conclusion. They were present as witnesses. Christ in answering his accusers, said, "Ask those who heard me," "In secret have I said nothing." The transfiguration scene claim has been already noticed and refuted, however.

Further on, the writer of the Appendix is disturbed over the number of Jameses mentioned in the New Testament, and states:

If the Lord had a brother James in the flesh, then there were three who held the apostleship, viz.: First, James the son of Zebedee and the brother of John; second, James the son of Alphæus (see Matthew 10:2, 3), third, James the Lord's brother and son of Joseph (see Galatians 1:19), and in paragraph 19 he says, "James, the son of Zebedee, was slain by Herod, about 44 A. D. (see Acts 12:2). When and where was James the son of Alphæus slain? This must be shown to get the matter as claimed, beyond question. If his death can not be accounted for, how can it be construed that every quotation containing the name of James, after the year 44 A. D., refers to James, the Lord's brother?"

In reply, we say we know of no such claim being made that every passage containing the name James after 44 A. D. refers to James the Lord's brother. It may be, however. As an explanation they could refer to James the Lord's brother just as well as James the son of Alphæus, if it be true there is but one referred to. "The son of Alphæus is only named in the four lists of apostles."—Britanica, p. 552, vol. 13. It is not necessary, however, that we show the death of the son of Alphæus in order to clear up the matter. The case is clearly made without this. First, we avoid the inconsistency of making James the son of Alphæus the president of the church at Jerusalem, as he was one of the twelve apostles. James the Lord's brother did not belong to the quorum of apostles at any time. Second, when the son of Alphæus was chosen one of the twelve, James the Lord's brother did not believe in Jesus as the Messiah, and it is impossible that Jesus would select an unbeliever for a place among the other believing apostles. When Jesus was born it was announced that he was Mary's "firstborn;" and it would be very inconsistent for the historian to speak of a "firstborn," had there not been a second. See also the discussion of this in the main evidence by others in this article.

No "figurehead" is made of the son of Alphæus either; he simply stands in his own place as do the other members of the twelve, and always will in this world and the one to come. He went abroad as his calling required of him, as did the others, and most likely was finally slain, as others were, for the testimony he bore, a reliable account of which we do not have—nor do we have of but few, if any, of the other apostles.

In regard to the "Oxford Teacher's Bible" and "Wilson's Emphatic Diaglott," they likely teach just as claimed, but what of it? Oxford is so close to Rome in tradition and sentiment that she could not be expected to reflect but the current traditional sentiment, the "inventions" of Jerome of the fourth century, gotten up long after the actual occurrences and under the flavor of the Roman Catholic claims of power through Peter as the head, and are of a piece with the theory of the immaculate conception of Mary, that she was a goddess, and all who are saved, are saved only by means of this divine mother, etc. Their value is no more, so far as deciding the question is concerned, than the statement of Jerome, which, unsupported, is too shaky to base anything of fact upon.

On page 147 the writer says:

In Acts 12: 17 we read, "But he (Peter) beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison, and he said, Go show these things unto James (son of Alphæus) and to the brethren."

Here Peter recognizes James the son of Alphæus as prominent among the apostles in the year 44 A. D., and shortly after the death of James the son of Zebedee. This same James, in connection with Peter, presided at Jerusalem in the year 52. (See Acts 15: 13.) This could not have been James, the Lord's brother, because we find that six years later (Galatians 1: 19) James, the Lord's brother, was only called "an apostle," which shows conclusively that he was not yet "chief apostle" nor "president."

It is a little amusing to note how our author manages to inject into the passages cited, "son of Alphæus," as though he had settled the matter. It reminds one of the story of the smart boy at the corn-husking, who claimed he could squeeze cider out of cotton. When challenged, he just dipped the cotton into the cider, so it was no difficult task to squeeze it out. He first put it in. That is the way the writer of the Appendix gets the son of Alphæus into these texts; he just puts it in. But this is the point to be proven. How quick and easy our author fills up the vacancy caused by the death of James the son of Zebedee, with the appointment of the son of Alphæus. If this were true, what becomes of all his claim about Peter, James, and John being upon the mountain; in the sick room; at Gethsemane, etc., in order to make church presidents of them? The son of Alphæus was not one of these favored three; but if these experiences were essential to their election as the first presidents, they would be for him also. But he was not so favored. Acts 12: 17 does not read, then, as set out in the "Exegesis," and the insertion by the author of the words "the son of Alphæus" is a blunder of the worst kind. Again, whoever heard anything about Peter and James presiding at Jerusalem? (Acts 4.) This is more cider in the cotton. Again, page 147, it is stated that

James the son of Zebedee was killed in 44 A. D. James the son of Alphæus must have presided at Jerusalem in connection with Peter, 52 A. D., as James, the Lord's brother, is still called "an apostle" when Paul went up to Jerusalem in the year 58 A. D.

But the theory here presented makes the son of Alphæus and the Lord's brother the same person, which is not correct as we have shown. It would be quite as easy of explanation by assuming that it was James the Lord's brother who presided at Jerusalem. So it is not "conclusive" that he was not president for twenty-five years after the ascension, etc. But as this is answered elsewhere it is not necessary to further consider it here.

On page 148, what is said of the Emphatic Diaglott and other matters is of a piece with what has already been answered in a general way. Why Jesus used the language he did while on the cross, to John, in connection with his mother, is not stated. If he intended to put her in John's care, he evidently had a good reason for it, whether she had children or not. We have read somewhere that John had means and a home; if so, this may account for it. Jesus loved John and his mother, and in a gospel sense, they were mother and son (Matthew 13: 48, 50). Jesus knew and likely his mother knew that she would be safest with John. The "opinion embraced by Augustine, and by the majority of the Romanists and Protestants," is of the same class that has been considered.

But the author of the Appendix goes on:

There is but one statement in the Bible where it is said, James, the Lord's brother, viz:—Galatians 1: 19, nor is there any reference whatever made to him in the revelations of the latter days.

Well, this is interesting. There is one place in the Bible where James is called the Lord's brother; but there is not even one place where it says he was not his brother. It appears, therefore, that the evidence is decidedly in favor of James being the brother of the Lord. But James' name does not occur in "the latter day revelations." Does that of the son of Alphæus? No. Then what? Lost the point again!

Again, page 148, the author states:

We now present historical proof that James, called the, "Lord's brother," was cousin to Jesus in the flesh. . . . Jerome appears to have been the first to suggest the more probable explanation. . .

Who is this Jerome who appears to have been the first to suggest the "more probable explanation"? Why, he was a writer of the fourth century of the Christian era. He was the "first to suggest the more probable explanation,"—in fact one writer says he "invented" it. He was three hundred and fifty years removed from the scenes enacted, with Roman Catholic theory, tradition, and sentiment out of which to "invent" the "more probable theory." No doubt this theory was suited to the demands of the times, a strong point to keep Mary "ever virgin," and the church on Peter. This theory was copied into the manuscripts of other writers, until of late years, scholars further removed from Catholic traditions and sentiment, and of deeper research, discard this "invention" as may be seen by the weight of testimony furnished in this article. The theory never was heard of until Jerome presented it, who was not in possession of the facts relating to it. It is simply a theory.

On page 149, we are told that,

"We are at liberty, then to assume that the word adelphos among the Jews may be applied indifferently to the relation of brother, or to the relation of cousin. Hence, it may be so applied. (Matthew 13:55, and Mark 6:3.) That is, some of the persons there mentioned by name, may be strictly brethren, the rest may be merely cousins of the Lord."—Greswell's Works, vol. 2, p. 119.

Let us try this method of interpretation:

Mark 1:16: "he saw Simon, and Andrew his brother"—adelphos.

Mark 1:19: "he saw James . . . and John his brother."

Mark 3:17: "And James . . . and John the brother of James."

Mark 6:3: "the brother of James, and Joses, and of Judah and Simon."

Mark 6:17: "for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife."

Mark 12:19: "If a man's brother die, and leave (his) wife."

Mark 12:19: "that his brother should take his wife."

John 1:40: "One . . . was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother."

John 11:23: "Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again."

In all of these instances and many others which might be cited, brother is from this original word adelphos. Can it properly mean cousin in a single one of these citations?

It will be observed that when this text is relieved of its assumptions and maybes (which we have italicized), it is divested of pretty much all of its force. Again, "Some of the persons there mentioned by name, may be strictly the brethren," and as we take it, before it can interpret or reflect the view in Matthew 13:55, some of the persons should be "strictly the brethren," before "merely cousins" could be included.

But it is a paragraph further on that seems the worst. "The four brothers and their sisters were always found living and moving about with the Virgin Mary." Rather a natural place for a mother's children to be found, we think. But read on, "If they were the children of Cleopas the Virgin Mary was their aunt." Why, of course. "Her own husband would appear without doubt to have died between A. D. 8 and A. D. 26. Nor have we any reason for believing Cleopas to have been living during our Lord's ministry." [And none that he was dead.] "What difficulty is there in supposing that the two sisters (in law) should have lived together?" Why, none at all, of course. No difficulty in "supposing" anything. If they were children of Cleopas, there might be something in the supposition, but as that is the point to be proved, there is nothing in it whatever. But here again, "It is noticeable that Saint Mary is nowhere called the mother of the four brothers." Just so. But there is another thing "noticeable"—it is nowhere stated that she was not the mother of the four brothers. It is affirmed, however, that she "brought forth her first born son." This implies a second born son, and Paul affirms that James was the Lord's brother; and in Mark it is said of Jesus, "Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, brother of James, and Joses, and of Jude, and Simeon? And are not his sisters here with us?" (Mark 6:3, and Matthew 13:55.) It is, indeed, quite "noticeable" that these children were the family of Joseph and Mary, and not cousins, as claimed.

On page 150, "the Hieronymian hypothesis" is presented, said to have been advocated by this same Jerome, already noticed, in A. D. 382, which assumes that the children referred to above were nephews and nieces of Saint Mary. This "hypothesis" was likely put in vogue to make people stare and wonder, so they would take down the theory, genealogical map and all, as a learned conclusion. But without facts sustaining it, it remains an assumption and is entitled to no credence whatever.

On the last line of this same page, we are relieved with a new line of thought. That is, it is claimed, "First, Christ did not come from the lineage of Joseph, but through the lineage of Mary." However, Matthew and Luke both count it through Joseph (Matthew 1, Luke 3). Besides, if the lineage of Jesus could be counted through his mother, that of the second son could also, and in either case they were brothers and heirs to the priesthood, and if only cousins of Jesus would be first entitled to considerations in priesthood lines.

On page 157, we have:

Second, the order is from father to son; and James is not the son of Jesus but of Joseph; therefore James' only right by lineage would be through his father, Joseph, and not through Christ. Hence, no right to the presidency by the above order of lineage, as it was not to be handed down from brother to brother, but from father to son. Except in case of transgression or disqualification.

It is true enough that lineage is counted from father to son, as a rule. But there are exceptions. Two are admitted, and this is not all. Another is where there is no heir to occupy under the rule. Then another rule obtains, it goes to the nearest of kin, all other things being equal. This is shown in the Nephite history. The lineage as counted may be traced by the transfer of the sacred things. They went from Nephi to his brother Jacob. From Enos to Jarom (Jarom 1:1), from Jarom to Omni (Omni 1:1), in regular succession. From Amaron to his brother Chemish (Omni 1:3, 4); from Chemish to Abinadom (paragraph 5), Abinadom to Amaleki (paragraph 6). Amaleki, having no children, delivered the plates to King Benjamin. They went on down to Alma, then to his son Helaman (Alma 17:5-14); from Helaman to Helaman's brother, Shiblon (Alma 30:1;) finally to Amos, then to his brother Ammaron (Nephi 1:11), etc. It will be observed that the descent of the sacred records indicating the lineage or genealogical line, was from father to son, and brother to brother; and when there was no brother, to others, which shows the theory of the writer of the Appendix wrong on this point, also.

Again the writer goes on: "We will now proceed to offer further proof to show that Peter occupied the position of 'chief apostle' and president. 1. Because he was the first called to the apostleship by our Savior (Matthew 10:1), and according to all rules of choosing or appointing them the first named is president, where not otherwise designated."

Allowing this as a rule in business, for which the Bible makes no provision, in case of the appointment of a committee, what would the first member selected be president of? Of the committee, of course. A committee appointed by congress, then, would not make the chairman of that committee, according to this rule, president of the United States. So accepting that Peter was chairman of the council of apostles, there is a long distance between that position and his being made president of the church.

But we read on: "2. It is evident that he continued in this chief office and leadership from beginning to end, and was so recognized by Christ both before and after his ascension."

Some very bad logic here. Because a man is appointed the head of a committee or quorum, he is declared to be the head of the church, and what is equally as bad, he is continued in the leadership "both before and after his ascension." According to this Peter was president of the church both before and after the crucifixion and ascension. But what was Christ doing all of this time, that Peter was presiding over the church previous to the ascension? All of this because he was selected first among the apostles, as head of a "committee." But this is not all; he is continued "in this chief office and leadership from beginning to end." Why, yes. From the beginning and end of what? The beginning and end of the church, or what? Or is it the beginning and ending of Peter's call to the apostleship to his death? All there is of fact in any of this is that Peter may have been recognized leader of the apostolic quorum both before and after Christ's ascension, but could not have been the president of the church in either case, more especially if he continued in the position "from beginning to end." Again, if Peter was made president because of being selected first, then Andrew should have been given the second place, on similar grounds of being selected second; but no, James is admitted to have been second. What becomes of this supposed to be evidence, then, adduced to prove that Peter was made president of the church because he was first called to the apostleship?

"3. In the transfiguration, Peter is the first named and is spokesman for the rest." This has been answered in another place. It will be difficult to show, however, that Peter spoke for anybody but himself on this occasion.

"4. He was chief speaker when the matter of choosing an apostle instead of Judas was under consideration.

"5. Peter was chief speaker on the day of Pentecost, when the important question was asked by the multitude, etc., and the question was directed first to him; second, 'and to the rest of the apostles.'" All there is in any of this is, that the reading shows the apostles to have been in charge as a body. "Peter stood up with the eleven." There is nothing indicating a president or presidency about it. Peter is shown to be the most active member or leader of the apostolic body, that is all. He stood with the eleven and was therefore one of them in order to make the twelve.

"6. Peter was first of the twelve to whom Christ appeared after the resurrection." If there is any point in this, then Mary Magdalene should have been the president, for Jesus "first" appeared to her. But our author should have cited more passages in Peter's favor. He could have said, Peter was the first and only one that cursed and swore and denied his Lord, therefore he was to be the president of the church. He was the first to try walking on the water by faith, but sank, therefore he was to be the president.

"7. Peter was chief in pronouncing the judgment upon Ananias and Sapphira." This only shows Peter in his accustomed place, speaking for the apostolic body. The goods were to be "laid at the apostles' feet," not at Peter's feet only, not the feet of the presidency. So there is no president of the church indicated here either.

"8. Peter denounced the sorcerer Simon." (Acts 8.) We reply that Paul "denounced" and rebuked Elymas the sorcerer (Acts 13), so that if rebuking a sorcerer was evidence that Peter was to be the president of the church, the same class of evidence will make Paul the president. Hence the writer of the Appendix gets more presidents on hand than he can dispose of. It only shows that there is nothing in his assumed positions and method of reasoning.

Again, page 151: "9. Peter received knowledge of the Father, and Christ here commits the keys of the kingdom to him. (Matthew 16: 16.) But the objector says that the keys, herein referred to, applied only to Peter's presidency over the quorum of the twelve."

Who this "objector" is, we are not informed. The writer of the "Presidency and Priesthood," however, holds that all of the Twelve hold "keys," and also other ministers, including those of the Aaronic priesthood, but the ones in chief, as in Peter's case, especially so; as is clearly presented in Doctrine and Covenants 105. Anyway, Thomas B. Marsh is especially mentioned as the one to hold the "keys."

But our author goes on, "We frankly confess that we never before knew that the terms 'quorum' and 'kingdom' were synonymous." But who has said they were "synonymous"? The writer of "Presidency and Priesthood" made no such statement. The Lord says to Thomas B. Marsh, "Thou art the man whom I have chosen to hold the keys of my kingdom." He then qualifies by saying ("as pertaining to the twelve"); but were they not "keys of the kingdom" all the same? Did it indicate that they were not "keys of the kingdom," because it is explained what "keys of the kingdom" they were and who was to hold them? It really looks as though our author finding himself in a strait has descended to a little sophistry in order to help his theory out. Taking the man of straw set up in this ninth citation a weak conclusion might be reached, but as it reflects nothing affirmed by us, or any other that we know of, it is meaningless as it only reflects its own absurdity.

THE WAY OF SALVATION.

SERMON BY JOSEPH R. LAMBERT, PATRIARCH, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
SEPTEMBER, 24, 1903.

(Reported by L. A. Gould.)

I desire to read two paragraphs from section 95, Doctrine and Covenants, the third and fourth:

And I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall forsake all evil and cleave unto all good, that ye shall live by every word which proceedeth forth out of the mouth of God; for he will give unto the faithful, line upon line, precept upon precept; and I will try you, and prove you herewith; and whoso layeth down his life in my cause, for my name's sake, shall find it again; even life eternal; therefore, be not afraid of your enemies; for I have decreed in my heart, saith the Lord, that I will prove you in all things, whether you will abide in my covenant, even unto death, that you may be found worthy; for if ye will not abide in my covenant, ye are not worthy of me; therefore, renounce war and proclaim peace, and seek diligently to turn the hearts of their children to their fathers, and the hearts of the fathers to the children. And again, the hearts of the Jews unto the prophets; and the prophets unto the Jews, lest I come and smite the whole earth with a curse, and all flesh be consumed before me. Let not your hearts be troubled, for in my Father's house are many mansions, and I have prepared a place for you, and where my Father and I am, there ye shall be also. Behold, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with many who are in the church at Kirtland, for they do not forsake their sins, and their wicked ways, the pride of their hearts, and their covetousness, and all their detestable things, and observe the words of wisdom and eternal life which I have given unto them. Verily I say unto you that I, the Lord, will chasten them and do whatsoever I list, if they do not repent and observe all things whatsoever I have said unto them. And again, I say unto you, if ye observe to do whatsoever I command you, I, the Lord, will turn away all wrath and indignation from you, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against you.

This was a revelation given in 1833, and how far the instruction contained in these paragraphs may be applicable to us at the present time is for you to judge.

This morning I shall content myself with making the effort, at least, to present a few thoughts on the subject that is always before us, that of salvation. It seems to me, more and more, as I grow older, and gain additional experience, that we are prone to overlook some of the important things connected with our work; that we are prone to lose sight, at least in a degree, of the extremely practical character of the work which God has enjoined upon us. And because of these failures upon our part, we suffer more or less loss.

You remember when Saul of Tarsus was journeying to Damascus to accomplish his own will, and do the work which he had determined to do, he was arrested in his wild career; and when he became satisfied that the one who spoke to him was none other than the Lord Jesus, he immediately began to repent of his course. And he propounded to the Lord this important question: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

In our effort to secure the great and promised salvation, two things, at least, are necessary. First, we must labor. We must work. Unless we labor and work we can have no hope of securing the promised reward. When we examine man in his physical and mental constitution we discover that he was made for work. Every stage of investigation will reveal to us, plainly, that God intended, in our creation, that we should exert ourselves, physically and mentally,—of course in a proper manner. I know it has been taught by many religious people in the past that there is nothing that we can do that will secure for us salvation, or the favor of God; that God, through Jesus Christ, has done it all, and we are simply to accept what is done; that there is no merit in the work that may be performed by us. But I notice, in reading the New Testament, that when the apostles, whom we concede were inspired of God, were asked by earnest inquirers what they should do to be saved, the question was never ignored. But these men who had been called of God, properly ordained, and sent out to preach, immediately proceeded to answer the question. This seems to be one evidence, among many others, that God intended that we should work.

There is another thought in connection with it, another essential to securing the great salvation, namely, that we should work in the proper way; that we should do the right thing. It is not enough that we should be industrious, but that we must perform the right kind of work in order to secure what God has promised. A little reflection will convince you of this, I think. When we take into consideration the character of God, it ought not to require much argument to convince us that the work accomplished by us must be that which he has ordained; it must be that which is in harmony with his will, else it will not secure the best results, to say the least of it.

You know Jesus said, "Enter in at the straight gate." This shows that there is something particular, something definite in the character of the work required at our hands, and as recorded in Luke, he says, "There will be many who will strive to enter in, and shall not be able." The question arises, Why shall they not be able? Surely God will not stand in the way to keep the people from entering into his kingdom: never! The evident reason why they shall not be able to enter in, is because they seek to "climb up some other way." They seek to enter in by some other means, not by the straight gate. The straight gate here represents God's eternal truth. It represents that which we are required to do. And though we make ever such an effort, no matter how vigorous it may be, if we ignore his truth, refuse to become obedient to the demands which he justly has made upon us, we can not enter in. Or as the Apostle Paul expresses it in one place, a man is not "crowned except he strive lawfully." Our efforts, then, must be in harmony with the law of God in order to secure the salvation promised.

The teachings of Jesus, himself, as recorded in Matthew and elsewhere, show not only that we are required to labor, but to labor in harmony with the word. Jesus said upon one occasion, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven: but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Then he proceeds to say, "That in that day [I understand in the day of judgment], many will say unto me, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works? Then will I profess unto them, I never knew you, depart from me, ye cursed;" or, as the Inspired Translation has it, "Ye never knew me, depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

Now this shows the importance of being right. It shows the importance of complete obedience to God. We can not admit the thought for a moment that these individuals were insincere. It was a very poor time, there before the great judgment seat, to manifest any degree of insincerity. They either had cast out devils, prophesied in his name, and done many wonderful works in his name, or they had been deceived. One of these two conclusions must be admitted. But I am prepared to admit the possibility of a partial obedience upon our part, and taking such a course as to secure power with God to perform many wonderful works, to prophesy in his name, and actually to cast out devils, and yet, failing to obey the truth as a whole, or continuing to abide in the truth, we lose the reward. What will help us to understand this is to consider very briefly the character of salvation. What does it mean? We are seeking to be saved—we desire to be saved. If there were nothing else that would prompt us to make some kind of effort in securing our salvation, our selfishness, of which we usually have a plentiful supply, would move us in that direction. But what is it to be saved? We are assured that God has many good things in store for those who shall be found worthy. How shall we secure them? Does it not follow logically, and is it not easy to understand, that we must, according to the judgment of the great God, be brought into a condition that will enable us to enjoy these good things which he has in store for those who shall prove to be his? If this be true, then there is no such thing as securing eternal salvation except by developing true character. The revelations of God, ancient and modern, teach us that by virtue of our creation we receive good; that the light of Christ lighteth every man that cometh into the world. They teach us that when the gospel is properly proclaimed to the people, that if they will follow this light of Christ, given to them of God in the creation, they will respond to the demands of the gospel in their lives. Light cleaveth unto light, truth unto truth. And when the truth is declared under the influence of God's Holy Spirit, and we perform our duty before God, there is a response, and an obedience rendered to the truth as declared by the messenger of the gospel. And hence, it is possible for all men to receive the truth, and be saved; and that is why God has commanded that it should be preached "to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved."

If, then, a true character is to be developed, the question comes squarely before us, What are we required to do? And while I may not be permitted to particularize this morning, I will say in a general way, First, we are required to do right. And no man can secure eternal salvation without doing right. When I make the effort to emphasize this, I am making the effort to meet the demands of the age in which we live. The general trend seems to be to accept anything and everything that promises immediate or temporary success; and people frequently say to us, The question with us is how to get there; it is not so much how we move, or what we do, as to get there. That is the question of all questions. But they overlook the very important consideration that we can not get there unless we move in a proper way. They overlook the fact that they never can get there except they are obedient to the principles of truth and righteousness. That is the only way. I know that I will be met by some with the usual objection that it is very difficult for us to tell what is right. There are so many "lo heres" and "lo theres," that we become more or less confused; and what one individual thinks is right, another one thinks is wrong. The people are divided, and how can we tell what is right? Well, we must tell. It is not only possible, but it is highly essential. Upon no other condition has God promised us eternal salvation. Upon no other condition than obedience to the right can we succeed as ministers and members of the church of God. Now, if God has made our eternal salvation dependent upon doing right in this world, does it not follow that he has placed within our reach the means of determining what is right? Does it not follow that we may learn what is right—that we may accept it and obey it? One thing we notice, that when men and women give their attention to right and truth their ability to discern truth and right increases very rapidly. But when they begin to ignore the plain principles of truth and righteousness, then they lose their ability to discern the truth. They may be very intellectual; they may possess much brain power; but that is not sufficient. We must place ourselves in harmony with the Spirit of truth. We must cultivate a love for the truth, a constant desire to do right under all circumstances. There is nothing in the world that will so increase our ability to locate truth and determine truth, and to decide what is right—what God requires us to do, as to seek the right and do it. If God had not intended that his children should be able to discern the truth and obey it, he would not have made their salvation dependent upon it; certainly not. But the very fact that he has made our success in a spiritual sense entirely dependent upon doing right, is presumptive evidence that the means of determining right, and seeing clearly what we ought to do, have been placed within our reach.

Not only has God spoken to the people in the ages of the past, but he has spoken to us in these last days, and he has, so to speak, taken a great deal of pains to explain to us what we ought to do, and what we ought not to do. More than all this, in the gospel we find this grand provision: that through faith and obedience we receive the Holy Spirit, the Spirit which takes of the things of the Father and shows them unto us; that Spirit which guides into all truth; the Spirit of which Jesus said, "It shall bring to your minds whatsoever I have commanded you." Now, here is a wonderful provision. Here is something that challenges our admiration at once, made by the infinite One for our good, that we may move in the right direction, and not be deceived. Do you not know that the warning is all through the revelations of God, here, to his people, against being deceived? The importance of being right is manifested in all the revelations of God, given to his people in former days and in latter days. And we read in one of these revelations contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, that when Jesus comes in glory to rule and reign in righteousness, those who have treasured up his truth in their minds, taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and who have not been deceived, shall not be hewn down; but the Father shall fulfill the precious promises which he has made unto them. And it is necessary that we should treasure up the word, for it is given of God. It is necessary that we should take the Holy Spirit for our guide, for it is one of the leading provisions of the gospel for our good, our safety, our salvation. It is necessary that we should guard against being deceived; that we should use all the means God has placed within our power to avoid it, and then we will be found in the condition to receive from him, when he shall come to make up his jewels.

It seems to me that we ought to be suspicious of some of these objections that are urged against doing right. I can hardly help being a little suspicious when I hear them repeated so frequently, for it naturally comes to my mind that the individuals who are constantly urging objections, making statements of difficulties that stand in the way of our ability to determine what is right, have lost confidence in God, and consequently, confidence in the right, in the truth. It is not an evidence of faith. It is not an evidence of trust in the great God. But it is an evidence of weakness. And while it is conceded that we may all make mistakes, while it is frankly conceded that there are frequently difficulties about us, and that we have to be very careful in order to move in the right direction, yet shall we surrender everything, shall we lose our faith and confidence in God, and say that the right can not be reached? I believe it is within the power of every individual to find out just what he ought to do, and then he ought to see to it that he does it.

If I understand it correctly the Apostle Paul had this kind of faith. No man knew better than he did that he was inspired; and yet when writing to one of the churches he said, "I write as unto wise men, judge ye what I say." He allowed that they had the right to judge. They had the right to pass upon it. He was anxious that they should. Upon another occasion he said, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." This is doctrine that can not be improved upon. Here is a text that was used by early Latter Day Saints; one that is used by the Latter Day Saints to-day; one that can always be used. It is comprehensive and sound from beginning to end. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." There is nothing narrow about this, unless you call that narrow which excludes evil, rejects error and wrong. That is the only sense in which it is narrow. It is just as broad as the truth. Hence, it is as broad as God. And it not only permits us, but it requires us to investigate, to think, to find out, and then fall in line with the principles of truth and right. But he puts it in a very emphatic way at another time. It seems that the saints at Galatia had failed to make that progress in the gospel that they should have done. They had failed to comprehend the character of the truth which they had received. Becoming careless, they had suffered themselves to be imposed upon by a perverted gospel. And Paul, writing to them, as contained in the first chapter of his letter to the Galatians, says, "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel; which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." So you see how far the apostle uses this test. It did not make any difference who came with the message, whether he came from earth or heaven. The great question is, What is the character of the message? If the message be true, receive it. If the message be not right, reject it, even though it be brought by an angel from heaven. But some have thought that when the Apostle used language like this, he gave evidence of being narrow, intolerant; could not bear a rival claim. I think that is a mistake. I think this conclusion is the result of superficial examination. The Apostle Paul had gone far enough to understand that when God originated and revealed the gospel for the redemption and salvation of the human family, he did the very best that an infinite God could do. No other effort made by the infinite One could surpass it. If that be true, how can we neglect this plan in part, or altogether, without incurring loss? And just in proportion to our neglect of this divine plan, we bring loss to ourselves. The Apostle desired that we should secure the greatest degree of good. He was laboring, like the Master, for the salvation of people. And hence he was loyal to the truth in its entirety. "Though we or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Then he proceeds to inform us that the gospel that he preached was not after man, that it was not according to man, not according to man's wisdom, but he received it by the revelation of Jesus Christ. It is according to God. It is according to God's wisdom. It is divine. And that is the reason why no other gospel will do. No other gospel will do, because this is God's plan. That is what the Apostle virtually says.

Now, we should take this plan which we have accepted, by virtue of the restoration, into all the walks of life. In order to secure the full benefit and be sure that we secure celestial reward in eternity, we must make our profession practical in its character. It is not enough to prophesy, though that is all right, when done by the Spirit of God. It is not enough to cast out devils. It is not enough to perform other wonderful works; but we must be righteous in our lives, we must be obedient to those principles of righteousness contained in the gospel records, in order that true character may be developed, without which there can be no salvation.

I have heard many hint that this kind of teaching is wrong; but I do not know how these things are going to be corrected unless we speak of them, more or less. I have often wished in my soul that our branch officers would rise up a little higher, and, running the risk of what the effect may be upon them, that they would teach in harmony with what is enjoined in the Doctrine and Covenants, and declare all those duties that belong to the members, in their houses and in their homes. The gospel enjoins and comprehends all that is good; it excludes only that which is evil. I have grave responsibilities resting upon me as a member of the church of God. I am not only required to treat my fellow men right, to be honest, upright, and to deal according to the principles of righteousness and truth, contained in the gospel, but I am required also to treat the beasts, and the fowls, and everything that is in my care, in a proper manner. I am not prepared to appreciate very highly the effort of the man that will leave his horse, or his cows, or his chickens starving for water and proper food, and run up to the church in order that he may bear his testimony and pray. I believe that these are practical duties that devolve upon us, and the sooner we learn them the better. I believe if we neglect them we will come short of the glory of God promised in the gospel. To observe them develops true humanity, with its benevolence and kindness; and if this be not developed, there can be no true character. And if there be no true character, there is no salvation. But we might speak of this principle in various ways.

Suppose that a man sits around home; his wife can hardly get him to feed his stock, and she can hardly get him to attend to the affairs that should be done. He seems to be indisposed, mentally at least, all the time. But he goes into the house, brings all the mud in that his shoes will hold, lets it drop along through the house, for the good housewife to pick up or clean out at her leisure. But he keeps on day after day, and when he comes to the prayer-meeting, he is the first one to testify, the first one, perhaps, to pray. How can we appreciate these efforts? It may be that sometimes he feels well, and feels like praying and doing his duty, and he is so weak that he forgets, or has failed to comprehend what his duty is, when he gets outside of the church. But it is a mistake to come to the church expecting to find some treasure in there and pick it up and enjoy it for a little while, and leave it there, and then go home and follow our own carnal desires all the rest of the time. That is no way to secure salvation in the kingdom of God. But this treasure should be sought by the individuals and members of the church of God in their homes; and when they go to the church they should take something there to contribute to the general good, that they may be found in a condition that when they go home, and meet the influences there, God will send forth his Spirit at once to cause a profound operation of practical righteousness in their lives, treating each other as they should, and treating everything else that God has given into their care as it should be treated.

I do not believe, either, that we are just required to be good Saints in the spiritual work that we speak of, and then when we go into our business, or our profession, as the case may be; or when it is necessary for us to dabble in politics a little, that we can lay our religion on the shelf. I believe if we have to lay our religion on the shelf, we had better let the business go, better let the politics go. We have no business to go into politics or into business that comes in direct opposition to the demands of the gospel of the Son of God. If it demands of us, and necessitates such a course upon our part, we had better let it alone altogether.

If we would observe these practical principles in our lives, it would improve our condition; it would increase our faith; it would brighten our hopes; it will qualify us to stand in the hour of trial which is surely coming. And there is nothing else that will take its place. No substitute will do. Individual righteousness before God is necessary; and the great question of every individual member of the church of God to-day should be, What does the Lord require me to do? He requires us to observe his laws. "Yes, but if things were right, I would try to observe these laws; but there are so many things that are wrong." The greater need of you being right; and you are right when you are in harmony with the law. By his own works will every man stand or fall. It will never excuse me in the day of judgment, because I see things that are wrong, for an effort to ignore upon my part. Never! I should not only strive to get others to observe the commandments and precepts of the law of God, but I should exemplify them in my own life, observe them myself, and then my teachings will have force connected with them.

May God bless us and help us to be faithful in the important work that has been committed to our trust.

"He Maketh Me to Lie Down."

Dear Sisters: In the following poem I found great comfort and consolation. I found the clipping lying on the floor of my bedroom at a time when it seemed to be written expressly for me. I did not find out for a long time that its getting there was as accidental as the finding of it was. At the time it seemed as if an angel had laid it in my path. I hope it will help some one else who is tried as I was.

I. C. F.

"'He maketh;' yes, He sees us on the mountains,
Toil-worn and weary, sadly needing rest;
And yet determined to be pressing onward
To gain the summit of some distant crest.

"Too much intent to listen to His teaching,
Too eager to be gladdened by His smile,—
Too worried, often, to hold close communion,—
And then He bids us rest a little while.

"And we rebel: we do not wish to tarry;
It is so hard to feel we must lie down
Just at the moment when our hopes were highest
And glory waiting our success to crown!

"And so He takes us from the hum of voices
And will most tenderly our souls restore;
Until we are refreshed, and duly strengthened
To walk more watchfully than heretofore."

A Plea for the Children.

Driving past a humble home one beautiful evening in September, I was attracted by the inmates—a family of six small children with poverty to fight; but each one was busy and all seemed happy and content. One was carrying wood, one water, another caring for a baby sister and the eldest helping the mother with the evening meal. On the mother's face was the look of contentment. I knew she must have many cares with a family of this size and not much of this world's goods, but she has taught her children to help and they do it willingly and she has learned the lesson (that too many times it takes some of us a lifetime to learn), "don't worry." Each one has his work to do, mother planning and encouraging. They are not always clean, the home is not always tidy; but love reigns there. Oh, mothers, let me say, do spend more time with the children, even if the house is not always tidy and their clothes not extra clean. I think I hear some one say "Do you practice what you preach?" and I plead guilty; but I want the dear mothers to profit by my past experience and avoid some heartaches.

Now, in some of my lonely hours as I sit and ponder on the past, I regret that instead of working, when unfit for it, to keep the house so tidy and the children (to their discomfort) spotlessly clean, I had taken them and gone to the beautiful woods to enjoy with them the benefit of this or some other recreation that would have been mutual pleasure to all. Let the work go for once, or better still have them help you and when finished go out with them for a romp. They will enjoy it so much better if mamma shares it with them. But poor, weary, over-worked mother, whose life is like a machine, can hardly enjoy such. But it is better to economize in work—less pastry, less lace-trimmed clothes, than to scrimp on one's love and company for our children; let them feel that every interest of theirs is yours. As I sit in my lonely home (made so by the death of a loved son and the daughter gone to a home of her own), my sweetest memories are of the twilight hours when they would sit at my knee for their favorite song which was never refused them, and which as they grew older was sacred to their memory. I recall many times when mamma played "hide-and-go-seek" with them and so many times when they would say, "Mamma, let us help you with the work and then you play with us."

I live those days over and over again and wish there had been more treats and fewer disappointments in their young lives.

Dear mothers, let me beg of you to spend more time with your children. You will never regret it when they have gone out from the home-nest or gone on before you to the Father's house of many mansions.

A MOTHER.

ASHTON, Illinois.

DES MOINES, Iowa, October 19.

Dear Sister Walker: This morning I was reading in the HERALD your appeal to the mothers to help in the matter of the birth offerings, and "your arrow went straight home," and I resolved to write to you at once and send in our offerings. We have neglected doing so for the dear little ones whom the Lord has sent to us since our first little darling, "Opalita," was taken away from us. My husband did "extra duty," earned the one dollar and gave it to me. I had thought to use it for other purposes, but shall deny myself and send it as an offering for our little ones, who are our comfort and joy, the very sunshine and gladness of our home. We are indeed grateful to our heavenly Father, that he in his mercy has spared them to us and we are very much interested in having good literature for our children. The two older ones love the Hope dearly and are eager to go to Sunday-school to get their paper. Dear Sister Walker, I can remember when I was a child and my parents came into the Church; how I loved the Hope, and you were faithfully working for the children then; and now I have children of my own, and I have neglected to do my share of the work. I keenly felt the appeal for help in your editorial and I will say that "I am only one, but I am one. I can not do everything, but I can do something and what I can do, I ought to do, and what I ought to do, by the grace of God I will do"—you shall hear from me ere long. I am grateful to God for the children he has given us; they are all welcome children and we are striving to bring them up as becometh Saints.

Last Christmastime I told them the sweet story of the Christ-child and of Mary and Joseph, and among the pictures I showed them one of the "Flight into Egypt," my little Gomer (three years old then), after looking earnestly at it, said, "Mamma, wasn't Joseph a good man to walk, and let Mary and the dear little Jesus ride?"

When baby came to us, in May, the children of their own accord wanted him named Joseph—and so it is, and we call him Joseph William. On Sunday as we were coming home from church we passed a number of mules on the roadside. Gomer never had seen one before, but he quickly touched my hand and said "Mamma, mamma, them is what Mary rode on when she had the little baby Jesus." I had no idea the child would connect the picture with the live object after so long a time. He was four years old in August. What a responsible position is that of the mother! Sometimes I feel so weak and unworthy of the blessings that are mine.

Ever praying for your success and Zion's weal, I am,

Your sister in gospel bonds,

CARRIE E. MAITLAND.

MADISON, Wisconsin.

Sister Walker: As our little boy wishes to send his Christmas Offering and a letter telling how he earned it, I will add a few lines telling the Saints that the Saints in Madison are trying to keep God's commandment under many trials. Only seven Saints live in this city. Trusting in the hope of being gathered to Zion, I remain,

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. H. D. STEVENS.

Prayer Union.

The prayers of the Union are requested by Sr. (Mrs.) S. L. Iverson, of Radcliffe, Iowa, for her father, Oden Jacobs, who is near eighty-three years old, that he in his declining days may have grace to bear up under the bodily suffering he is under and may not have to suffer to extremes. He is affected with kidney trouble; is willing to go and ready for the Master's call.

The Sunday-School Banner.

Dear Saints and dear friends, with gladness we greet,
And deem it a joy and pleasure to meet
Each bright smiling face here to-night.
We hope, trust and pray that good you'll receive
And that every one from his heart will believe
This work for the Master is right.

The Sunday-school work! Should not our hearts thrill
When we think of the thousands of little ones, still Outside of the fold of our God?
How can we be idle and see day by day
Young men and young women whose feet now astray,
Have never the paths of peace trod?

Shall we sit content with these little ones here,
While Satan is ready and willing, I fear,
To lead them the way they have gone?
Or shall we arise in the strength of the Lord,
March under His banner, and teaching his word
The Sunday-school work roll along?

Parents, and teachers, and officers too,
March forward, the work is all ready for you,
The field for the harvest is white.
Go! search out the children and gather them in
From highways, and byways, and pathways of sin,
And teach them the ways that are right.

Bring in all the children, pass none, for be sure
The Lord loves the child of the needy and poor.
For these, too, the gospel he gave;
And oft does a small, ragged jacket enfold
A little rough diamond, a heart of pure gold,—
A soul that is worthy to save.

And how do we know in the years yet to be
When some of God's servants, whose white hairs we see Pass over the river beyond,
These little bare feet, quite often not clean,
Will stand where the feet of these servants have been Proclaiming the glad gospel sound.

Perhaps that wee girl in the patched, faded dress,
Denoting at home there is want and distress,
Some teacher's place, vacant, may fill.
Then bring them all in to the fold of our God,
And teach them the way that our Savior has trod,
Our Savior who walks with us still.

Enroll every one 'neath the banner of truth,
Not merely the children, the aged, and the youth,
As soldiers to fight for the King.
As reapers, to work in the field of the Lord,
As teachers dividing His most holy word,
As worshipers praises to sing.

Oh! let not the Sunday-school banner be furled,
But raise it aloft to a sin stricken world.
Stand by it whatever betide;
Teachers and officers, stand by your trust
The cause is a true one and noble and just—Remember that God is our guide.

Then fling out the folds and let every one see,
"Suffer the children to come unto me,"
Let each little heart now be given;
Nay, do not forbid, for has not Christ said,
As He laid his dear hands upon each little head,
"Of such is the kingdom of heaven"?

MINA PERKINS KEARNEY.

Work of the Officers.

Some may perhaps think that the duty or work of the officers has been discussed until the subject is worn threadbare; but in teaching children I find repetition is necessary before they have a perfect understanding of that which I desire to teach. So if we repeat what may have been said on the subject, let us remember the words of the poet where he says "Men are but boys grown tall."

THE SUPERINTENDENT. HIS PREPARATION.

One must prepare himself for any office in the Lord's work if he would be successful. He must pray and study, study the books and also the best methods for carrying on the work he is to do. Especially is this so of a superintendent of the Sunday-school. He should seek to make the work attractive so that it may not become a dull routine to the children. Children like something new in the Sunday-school as well as their amusements, or dress, etc., and if we can hold the interest of the children it may be the means of interesting their parents who do not attend.

IN THE SCHOOLROOM.

The superintendent should enter the schoolroom with a cheerful face and a pleasant word for all, regardless of how he may feel. If the leader is "alive" the children will be. He should be one with the children, make them feel that they have an important part in the school, and that they are missed if absent.

A word of praise from the superintendent to the children is worth a great deal. This is true of the older ones also.

EXAMPLE.

Above all things, the superintendent should be on time. The Lord's work is one of order and promptness, and the children will soon learn this if the superintendent and other officers set the example. We little know how much we are imitated by the little ones. How careful, then, we should be to use the influence of example in the right way. How true the words of the elder who said, "The impression you make with a child is carried with that child throughout its entire life."

SOME THINGS HE CAN AND CAN NOT DO.

The superintendent can take charge of the school, have his lesson, select teachers, and perform the various duties of his office; but he can not make the Sunday-school a success unless all the others are willing to do something.

He can teach a class, but he ought not to. He can not visit each scholar in his home but he can encourage the teachers to do so.

He can see that the stranger has a place in a class and make him feel at home by making him acquainted with others.

He can also act as chorister, and in fact may, at different times, be called upon to do the work of all the other officers; but if each one is in place, so much will not be required of him and he will feel encouraged.

HIS ATTITUDE TOWARD OTHER OFFICERS AND MEMBERS.

He should recognize each officer's right and counsel with them, meet with them as often as possible in a teacher's meeting.

TEST OF EFFICIENCY.

The best test to be found is the amount of work he gets others to do.

He is to be a leader—not a commander. The superintendent is an "engineer" of the Sunday-school, so to speak, but he should not be expected to shovel his own coal.

THE SECRETARY

Must keep all necessary minutes and records. You perhaps have heard it said of some person, He is a walking dictionary. I sometimes think the secretary should be a "walking history" of the Sunday-school. To keep all records, etc., he should always be present, for to depend on some different person from Sabbath to Sabbath soon makes an incomplete record, and when time for his quarterly report he knows nothing of the work. His record should read like a history, so that any one looking over the same could tell the interesting events that have transpired, the date of same, who the different officers have been and are, how many are in regular attendance, etc.

Ordering the supplies is an important feature in his work, to have them on time and enough of them.

He should know every duty and do it without having to be reminded by the superintendent.

LIBRARIAN.

He must know the books, and to do this he must be a student and have a love for the work.

Too many times we find those who know nothing of or care nothing for the work, taking charge of this department. Such can not make good librarians.

He must know the patrons. The children are usually the patrons of the library, and the only means by which you can really know them is by personal visits with them. This may mean a great deal for most of our librarians, but the time at Sunday-school is too short for anything but work.

He should not depend on his own knowledge alone for selecting books, but counsel with the general librarian and other lovers of books.

He should seek to establish a circulating library where practicable, and have, charge of same.

When each officer performs the work of his office he has all he can do; but many times we are called upon to do much more than this. The field is broad, we need more efficient workers.

I pray for the general advancement of the work.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, October 26.

Editors Herald: Bro. John Harp and I came here on business and a visit. We arrived on the 17th inst., found the Saints in fair health and getting along very well spiritually.

We commenced meetings on Sunday, the 19th, and have continued up to this date every night except two, and each Sunday. Interest is good. Bro. Harp has baptized one since we came. We have blessed two children. Meetings continue at nights.

We are quarantined on account of yellow fever. Not many cases, but enough to keep the quarantine on for some time. The State physician says he hopes to raise the quarantine in ten days from now.

Bro. Harp and Smith went up in the mountains of Mellena County to remain and preach until some time next week.

The work seems to be in some better condition here than it has been; but still room for improvement, I see. I feel safe in saying that the work in Central and Southwestern Texas is in better condition than it has been.

We are hopeful, and expect the victory after a while. I am in the conflict until the battle is over, and the victory is won.

STANBERRY, Missouri, November 2.

Editors Herald: I am located temporarily at Blanchard, Page County, Iowa, where I will have charge of a Blanchard newspaper after the first of the year. If there are any Saints living near there, I would be glad to hear from them, as I am going among strangers to engage in the newspaper business. It is claimed that the Covenanters have the largest congregation there of any place in the United States. They sing nothing but Psalms, etc., and have some ideas and ways that look very peculiar to a believer in the gospel of Jesus Christ. The more I come in contact with creeds formulated by man, with nothing higher to depend on than human wisdom, it convinces me more and more of the genuineness and solidity of our doctrine.

May the Lord help us all to keep our covenant we have made with him, and live worthy of the honored and beloved name, "Latter Day Saint," is my prayer.

JAMES D. SCHOFIELD.

October 31.

Editors Herald: After the reunion at Rhodes we started out with renewed energy to open up work in the territory to which we were assigned. Our first effort was near East Peru, where we labored about a week, preaching and visiting among those not of our faith. We had a very good hearing while there, although the elements and Satan were against us. We made several friends for the work there, selling two copies of the Book of Mormon, and were kindly cared for by liberal-minded people.

From there we wended our way two miles north of St. Charles where Bro. Joseph Carlson and I opened up the work nearly three years ago, which terminated in the baptism of Bro. and Sr. Joseph Herr, this fall. Here we held forth for a week, with a fair attendance, but with little interest manifest.

Thence we wended our way six miles east of our home to Broad Horn Schoolhouse, where the sound of the restored gospel had never been heard. Here we continued for three weeks, with the best interest and the most opposition we have ever had since we have been engaged in this work. I do not know of a person who opposed us who had been out to hear; but those who opposed stayed at home and told their old, worn-out tales over the telephone.

Once we were called to the telephone by these enemies of the truth and spent most of the afternoon answering their questions. They called me to the 'phone again at half past seven in the evening, and we "hung up" again at half past eleven. Dozens of people were listening, and all manner of questions were asked regarding the Church, and our past study of our position and its defense came into good play here.

This opposition, a refusal to come out and hear, and an effort to close the schoolhouse against us, created a greater interest in those who were coming and caused others to come. One of the directors, a Presbyterian, who would not come out, said, "Let us close the house against him." But the other two, who were out to hear right along, said "No, sir; he can have the house just as long as he wants to preach. Come and hear. He is setting up good argument for his position." He said my argument would not amount to much if they had one of their educated preachers there, so I requested them to get all the educated preachers they could, as there were eight or ten within five miles of us, to come and hear what I had to say, and then refute it; but none came, although they were doing nothing except on Sunday. They said no one would come unless paid for it.

So by carefully presenting the truth, attacking no man's faith or Church, but showing them that we had a better structure than they, we left them to tear down their own tottering house, and get into one not made with hands. We made many friends for the truth, and caused many as in days of yore, to read their Bibles daily to see if these things be true.

Though among strangers, yet we never went hungry nor lacked a place to lay our head, but had many invitations to go home with the people. We were invited to return to preach and visit the people in their homes.

Last but not least, the story was started that Joseph the Seer had numerous wives. We found an old, respected gentleman right in the neighborhood who said that in the days of Joseph Smith he had lived near Nauvoo, Illinois, and he knew that Joseph Smith never had more than one wife. Thank God for preserving such men to bear testimony to the truth. We thank God for the liberty and quickening power of the Spirit that we were endowed with in presenting and defending the truth, without which we could do nothing.

We are now preaching eight miles west of Winterset in a new territory, near the homes of Bro. and Sr. Norve Weens, and Sr. Jessie Sawyers, with whom we are domiciled. Have good interest in our meeting, with increasing numbers. We have sold five copies of "Stick of Ephraim" lately to those out of the faith.

We expect to be organized into a branch at St. Charles about December 25, by Brn. H. A. McCoy and F. A. Smith, as we have now eighteen names to enroll.

I ever pray for the advancement of the truth.

C. J. PETERS.

SAN JOSE, California, October 29.

Editors Herald: I came here the eleventh of this month. Spoke twice on Sunday, the twelfth, and on Monday went to San Francisco, and enjoyed the company of Bro. W. H. Kelley for a few days, he leaving for Utah on Thursday.

On Saturday Bishop C. A. Parkin said to me, "You will speak to us to-morrow at eleven, and continue your subject in the evening." I said to myself, "That will not be, for I never continue a subject the same day;" but on Sunday at eleven I chose for my discourse "Angelic Administrations," and, not getting half through with the subject, I was forced to continue it in the evening. The evening part I had never spoken on before. The Lord moves in a mysterious way, to minister food for thought, and to educate his children.

On Sunday evening, Bro. and Sr. Gilbert, our two noble missionaries from the islands of the sea, were present. All were pleased to learn of their safe return to Joseph's land.

On the evening of the twenty-third I addressed the few that came to hear, at the newly organized branch in West Berkeley, where I met with old-time friends. Bro. Chester, from Minnesota, E. R. Williams and family of Independence, Missouri; called on Bro. and Sr. Terry, at Oakland. They are among the faithful workers of the Golden State.

Last Sunday I spoke twice to the few Saints at Irvington, the home of our noble Bro. Ephraim Chase, with whom I became acquainted at East Machias, Maine, when but a small boy. I felt proud of him as he opened my meetings. I could not but look back thirty years ago when I led his noble sister, now Eliza Walker, at Jonesport, Maine, into the water. Ephraim says: "I did not like my name until I found the latter-day work, now I like it."

At Irvington, I met Sr. Hannah M. Davis, a daughter of James and Hannah Beavan, who is now seventy-six years old. She was eleven years old when she came to America, from England. She lived in Nauvoo, Illinois, from 1841 until 1846, when they were driven out. I asked her if she knew Joseph Smith, the prophet. She said she did, and that she knew the present Joseph, Alexander, and David when boys, and was well acquainted with their mother. "Did you hear Joseph Smith preach polygamy?" She answered no. I asked her if she knew whether the temple at Nauvoo was ever finished. She answered, "I know it was not finished. In the upper story was only the studding put up, and canvas tacked on them. The temple was destroyed without being finished."

While in San Francisco, I visited the mint, and saw them make money very much faster than we make converts. Only think of Joseph's land, how rich! If you had the gold on a cube that has been taken from the precious hills, in American mines, it would be sixteen feet, weighing two thousand three hundred and fifty-three tons, and requiring one hundred and forty-seven freight cars to move it. To-day our country surpasses every other nation. There are but three mints in the United States. One in Philadelphia, where all the cents are made, one in New Orleans, and one in San Francisco. But here let me say, it is not all gold that glitters, for in coining the gold and silver ten per cent is alloy (copper).

All of the shiny metal is being prepared for the good Master's use by and by.
J. C. FOSS.

LOUISE, Texas, October 26.

Editors Herald: We have no news of church progress here, but still our interest and hope remain bright. There are no members here that we can learn of.

We live fifty miles west of Houston, and would like to see or hear from any of our people that may be near us.

We have bought a rice farm here, and from the experience of others it looks as if there was money to be made here. I have known some to make from forty to sixty dollars per acre on their rice. There are lots of our people who could easily invest in such a business, and support a number of men in the mission field.

We are from Illinois. There are a good many from the North buying here.

Have heard but one sermon by one of our elders since General Conference.
F. M. ARNOLD.

ST. CLAIR, Michigan, October 27.

Dear Herald: St. Clair has modestly remained in the background so long that you can possibly find room for a few items. A few of the St. Clair Saints crossed the boundary line to attend the conference at Wallaceburg, Ontario, of the Chatham District. There was a good attendance. The weather was fine, although a little cold.

R. B. Howlett occupied a short time on Sunday morning, giving his reasons for becoming a Latter Day Saint. In the afternoon A. Leverton gave a grand discourse on the gospel, and was listened to by a crowded house with good interest. R. C. Evans was the speaker of the evening, and one could feel the solemn hush that pervaded the large assembly, as he drew a word painting of the unregenerate soul, standing before its God in judgment.

The Saints' church at Wallaceburg was dedicated, a brother whose name was withheld having paid off the balance of debt. Bro. Evans offered the dedicatory prayer. The following Sunday the Chatham, Ontario, Saints dedicated their new church, and the Kimball, Ontario, branch will have their church dedication in November, when they expect Bro. Evans to be with them. And so, in spite of scoffing and prejudice, God's work is moving on. Thank God for his "marvelous work and a wonder" (see Isaiah 29) to come forth in the latter days, and also for the restored gospel brought back by an angel, as told in Revelation 14: 6, 7.

I rejoiced in my heart to see so many people together, formerly representing such varied forms of belief, having thrown their creeds and old traditions behind them and all uniting in one grand testimony, "This is the work of God and we know it is true." As for myself, I was fed on the "shorter catechism," and all the other husks of error connected with the old Scotch Presbyterian "kirk," who binds her devoted followers in chains of tradition stronger than bands of iron. I heard one mother teach her little child that Jesus Christ was a Presbyterian.

But creeds and catechisms did not satisfy or convince me. I looked for something tangible. I remember how I used to rage and rebel in my heart at a God who complacently sat on a great, white throne, and listened unmoved to the wails of innocent babes in a burning hell, and had foreordained a few particular pets for salvation and another certain number for everlasting destruction. No matter how pious they lived, they must be "damned," "all for his glory." The Scotch poet, Burns, puts it this way:

"O thou wha in the heavens dost dwell,
Wha as it pleases best thyself
Sends aye to heaven, and ten to hell,
A' for thy glory,
And no for ony guid or ill
They've done afore thee."

I can now look back and see how God's hand was leading me unconsciously, as it were. I could see, by comparing the signs of the times with the prophecies of the Old and New Testament, that we must be nearing the second coming of our Savior. Of course you may be sure I got no sympathy or encouragement in this line of reasoning. Eventually we (my husband and myself) came to St. Clair, and thus came in contact with the Saints.

I knew comparatively little of Latter Day Saints, and still less of what they believed, but Bro. Skinner and others were careful in giving me plenty of good reading. And as I read the old traditions began to tumble, till at last the whole man-made structure fell about my ears, and I shocked my relatives and astonished my circle of friends by renouncing and denouncing the creeds and traditions of my fathers. I thank God who enlightened my mind, and gave me strength and courage to come out in the face of old associations and obey the true gospel of Jesus Christ. The superintendent of the Sabbath-school where I was once a teacher, told me I was a fit subject for a lunatic asylum for referring him to James 5: 14, 15 as proof of God's willingness to heal.

Yours in the gospel,

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

GLASGOW, Scotland, October 22.

Dear Herald: My heart and soul are still in this marvelous work of God. In it I live and move and have a being, and am grateful to my Father in heaven. I was requested by the missionary in charge, J. W. Rushton, to remain in the mission field a little longer, and have done so until the present; and I leave it now not because I am not as interested as ever in the Scotch Mission, but because of an empty treasury in the bishopric here. I have striven to the best of my ability to discharge every duty imposed upon me. I am sorry to leave the association of the dear Saints in Scotland, whom I have learned to love, and especially my colaborers Brn. Rushton and Thorburn. The Saints have treated me kindly during my sojourn of nearly two years amongst them. The gospel ties that bind true hearts together are stronger than death. May the good Lord bless them.

We have continued to impress upon the minds of the people the necessity of serving their Maker; and how happy they may become by being obedient to the angel's message. But alas, how woefully true the statement is that men will be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. Did the apostle mistake the situation when he said that there would be all these? Verily, no; we meet them, I am sorry to say, every day.

On September 19 we took advantage of a cheap excursion down to Sheffield, to bid our relatives and friends good-bye, before we crossed to America. We also visited Clay Cross, where we arrived late at night; finding a welcome at the hospitable home of Bro. and Sr. William Holmes.

We had the pleasure of preaching twice for the Saints in their neat little chapel, which is indeed a credit to the people of that place. There we met their genial missionary, W. H. Greenwood, also Brn. Austin and Sharpe, from Sheffield, our native town. It is indeed hard to part from such kind-hearted people; but duty demands it. We visited Sheffield, staying only two days; we did not see all we would liked to have seen, but our time was limited. We were reluctant in taking the parting hand of our loved ones. Perhaps we may never meet again with some of them, especially my aged father. If not, we trust we shall meet them all again, where we meet to part no more.

I have just returned home from Kelty, where resides our estimable Bro. and Sr. Pratt, late of Boone, Iowa. I cycled there and back, with roads not the best, because of continued rains. I was made to feel at home with Bro. Pratt and his good wife who are the only Saints in Kelty.

That being Saturday, we soon had announcements out for meetings on the Sabbath, morning and evening, in the Coöperative Hall. Bro. Pratt spoke in the morning, to the edification of but a small congregation. At night the writer occupied with fair liberty, there being between thirty or forty attentive listeners, which was considered a good audience such a stormy night. I believe good was done. One lady expressed herself pleased with what she had heard.

I reached home again on Monday night, tired and wet to the skin, having been caught in a heavy rain in the open country, where there was no shelter. The next day will not soon be forgotten by us. Our little Alex was sick and finally went into convulsions. We really thought we should lose him. But thanks be to our heavenly Father, after the boy was administered to by Bro. Thorburn and myself he appeared to be much better and has continued so up to the present. The doctor pronounced the affliction to be bronchial catarrh. We trust the lad will soon be well again, as we have our tickets out to sail on the 31st of this month, from Glasgow, on the Columbia, of the Anchor Line.

I am ever hopeful of the ultimate outcome of the conflict in the triumph of God's work and the success of all his dear children, intellectually and spiritually.

J. ARBER.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, October 3.

Dear Herald: We have just ended a conference of the Southern Nebraska District, long to be remembered because of the unity and love that prevailed. The Sunday-school session evinced God's approval. When will the Saints awaken to the fact that the Sunday-school does as much in the harvesting of souls, as the general missionary work? I notice that among the candidates for baptism, the little boys and girls of the Sunday-school are in the majority. If Latter Day Saint parents would take a greater interest in their children, spiritually, where would we not be as families, as a Church, in the ascendancy towards the "mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus"?

I am thoroughly satisfied that parents should be very diligent, in influencing their children to enter relationship with God as soon after eight years of age as possible. It is very consistent, to my mind, if children belong to the kingdom of God before eight years of age, which is true without a doubt, from a gospel standpoint, the sooner they are reinstated after eight years of age the better. Eight years is the approximate age of accountability. Children then become aliens to the kingdom of God. The Holy Spirit is given as a comforter, to guide into all truth, and, as they can not receive this as an abiding comforter till relationship is formed by the law, the sooner they come in possession of that precious jewel, the better. There will not be as many wild oats sown, to be harvested in after-years. While the warfare against sin is always great, the conflict will be more against hereditary than self-indulged evils brought on because of improper influence.

My heart is pained because of the increase of sin in the world. When I see the rapid inroads of vice everywhere, and that children must become contaminated, unless properly guarded, I long for the power of an angel, to awaken fathers and mothers to their sense of duty, that the sooner they get their children under the direct protection of our heavenly Father, and in the sheep-fold, the better.

When I see the indifference of Latter Day Saint parents, and especially when they show by words and actions their disapproval of the Sunday-school work, I brand them immediately as not sound in the Latter Day Saint faith; and, like Peter of old, unconverted.

I rejoice in the unity and love made manifest among the ministry, and among the Saints throughout the district, which to me is a great mark of progress in spirituality. According to my understanding of conditions in the district, the present and future outlook is encouraging. If the Saints will sustain us by their prayers, and otherwise encourage, there is no reason why the good work of the Master will not roll on.

My beloved Bro. W. M. Self and I will work in the eastern part of the district this fall and winter, and we solicit the aid of the Saints in using their influence to announce meetings, and help in getting congregations, when missionaries come.

Love to all.

ADOLPH E. MADISON.

ROSETTA, Idaho, October 26.

Editors Herald: This finds us laboring here among a good people who have not heard much regarding our work. Seven have united with the Church since our coming, viz.: Bro. and Sr. Cleveland, Bro. and Sr. Melvin Butler, Bro. Clarence and Sr. Bessie Butler, and Sr. Minnie Little. Others are interested, and we hope will be numbered with us soon.

After our Hagerman conference in September, I started for this place, but tarried a little time in Indian Valley and, with the aid of Bro. Henry Shaw and others of his family, aroused a little interest there, but left against their protest, before fairly getting started. We reached here about the eighth inst., and but for the transferring this, with other counties, into the Washington Mission, I should not feel at liberty to leave for a time, but we trust Bro. Chatburn can continue the good work.

Excellent material here now for a branch, but unfortunately, seven out of the fourteen expect to go into Eastern Oregon soon, where they have bought homes.

I hope to coöperate with Brn. John Condit and J. E. Vanderwood between the Weiser and Boise Valleys, and visit some of the branches and scattered Saints elsewhere before the close of the year, if practicable; but we can not accomplish the half we would like. Will try to keep busy, at least.

Address me at Logan, Utah, for matters pertaining to district work in Idaho. We will endeavor to meet all demands, so far as practicable.

S. D. CONDIT.

AKRON, Iowa, November 2,

Dear Herald: We much enjoy reading the HERALD. It is one of our many blessings. We are among the isolated ones, but do not feel discouraged. We are trying to be faithful children, and hold meeting every Sunday at eleven o'clock at our home; we feel that though only two or three are met together we are blessed. We are in need of more preaching here, and trust that the way may be opened up soon.

I have only been in the work a short time but I would not exchange the glorious hope we have for any other.

A little over a year ago I left the Catholic faith, in which faith I was reared; but ever since I embraced this work I have had cause to rejoice that the Lord gave me strength and courage to leave all my dear ones and follow him. Of course I have had some trials, but, thank God, the blessings outweigh the trials. I feel as though I am one of the weakest of God's children; but pray that I may overcome my weaknesses and be found worthy when Jesus comes.

Your sister,

KATIE ANWAY.

GALIEN, Michigan, October 30.

Editors Herald: The district conference of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana Districts, which closed its sessions here Monday morning last, was one of the best attended and the most spiritual conferences ever held in this district. There were about eighty of the Saints present, from the various branches in the district. The following places were represented: Coldwater, Hartford, Mattawan, Buchanan, New Troy, Baroda, Michigan City, and Clear Lake. Many of the scattered Saints from other places were present also. Of the missionary force there were present, Heman C. Smith, I. M. Smith, S. W. L. Scott, G. A. Smith, Asa S. Cochran, Samuel Stroh, F. D. Omans, F. Granger, and many of the local elders.

The business sessions passed off nicely, with perfect harmony. The preaching and prayer services were especially remembered by our blessed Lord, with the gift of his Holy Spirit. The hearts of the Saints were filled with peace and comfort, and their souls strengthened for the work before them.

The preaching was by Elders F. D. Omans, I. M. Smith, S. W. L. Scott, and Heman C. Smith. Bro. Heman continued the services until Wednesday evening, then left next morning, for Southern Indiana, to meet the Saints of that district in conference.

The Saints here have their new church about completed, and are striving with every effort to get it paid for, so that the beautiful little structure may be properly dedicated to the service of the Lord.

I desire to indorse the article in the HERALD sometime ago from the pen of Bishop E. L. Kelley, relative to the raising of funds to restore the "House of the Lord" (the Temple at Kirtland) to its original condition. I am fully convinced that it is the will of the Lord, and feel that the Saints should come cheerfully forward with their holdings, however small, that this "noble sentinel" of the Master may be fully restored before the convening of the General Conference in April next.

In bonds of truth,

E. A. BLAKESLEE.

Extracts from Letters.

Gomer R. Wells wrote from Australia, October 5: "Bro. Wight is now on a flying trip taking farewell of the branches, and he intends to sail on the Ventura for 'Frisco on November 9. The Balmain Sunday-school intends to entertain him on that day with a picnic (their annual) and a trip in the harbor in a steamboat, hired for the occasion. They are all looking forward to a good time. Everybody, without exception, regrets to see him go back. It seems too bad we could not retain him for about five or six years. He is such a valuable man, and commands the respect and confidence of so many different classes in and out of the Church."

Peter Adamson wrote from Lehigh, Indian Territory, November 2: I am here with the gospel tent holding meetings. One man at the close of the meeting last night said he was nearly persuaded. I sold two copies of the Book of Mormon after my lecture. So the good work goes on."

Matthew Brearley wrote from Gulliver, Michigan, October 26: "I do not see how any Saint can get along without taking some of the Church papers. Since coming into the Church we have tried to live up to the command to warn our neighbors, and with the usual results of stirring up the people, and now we have some for and some against, but still we have them investigating. So I think now is a good time for an elder to come and preach here again, and I think there are some ready for the water, and others willing to hear. So please let it be known that an elder can find a home with us, just as long as he thinks it profitable for the work. By inquiry for me at the store they can find me, as I live about one mile south of the town. I hope soon to see an elder."

On October 21 A. N. Hoxie wrote from New York, sending us

some clippings concerning Dowie. He wrote: "You will find inclosed a clipping from the Evening Press that will show you that all that has been said and done against Dowie, persecution brings to him just what he has sought for. I have heard from many sources that if Dowie had been mild mannered and had not gone into railing accusations on every hand he would have received the admiration, respect, and money. He has already found scores of people who believe the scoring he has given fits the times and methods of Church and business, and if he continues to keep up that method he is sure to get from that class converts and money.

"I tried to get into Madison Square Garden, but at half past seven the hall was packed and thousands outside which compassed the entire block; streets and sidewalks filled, and people actually waited knowing that they could not get in. There was never such a time over the claims Dowie makes; but the people are in gross darkness and are inclined to believe that there is some grounds for the position he takes."

Sr. M. A. Simmons writing from Spillertown, Illinois, October 13, says: "I could not do without the HERALD. It is a welcome visitor in our home, and I enjoy reading the letters from the dear Saints and the good lessons the elders write. We have had a visit from Bro. Bozarth, and he preached three excellent sermons. I thank the heavenly Father for his goodness, for he has answered my prayer. My oldest daughter has come into the Church. I have another daughter that I pray will soon see where she stands and come into the fold. There is another family of Saints living near, and we meet at our houses each Friday night and have a very enjoyable time, with the help of the Holy Spirit. We are doing all we can to let our light shine, that others may see our works. I was made to feel sad when reading in the HERALD of October 9 of the brother losing his children in the sea storm."

J. M. Baker wrote from Sioux, Iowa, November 5: "We have just had a series of meetings here for four days. The interest has been good all the time. Bishop Hunt preached four sermons, which were well received by Saints and others. Then Bro. F. A. Smith gave us a good sermon last night. Our little room was well filled, notwithstanding the fact that in the next room on the same floor there was a returned missionary from Africa lecturing and using a stereopticon. I am thankful we can see a growing interest here."

Bro. George H. Graves, our colored missionary in the South, writes from Paducah, Kentucky, October 29: "I write something about my missionary work in this part of God's world, away down in old Kentucky and Tennessee. I arrived at Fulton, Kentucky, June 13, and spent seven weeks there, and at Water-valley and Happy Hollow, Tennessee, three weeks, making ten weeks in all. I left that part August 28 and arrived in Paducah same day. I have been very busy ever since, preaching the word from house to house, and distributing tracts from door to door, and am now holding meetings in their private houses. I did very well among the preachers until they found out how I stood in the faith of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, and then they closed the doors against me. They wondered how long I expected to stay in this town. I told the people that I expected to stay until God told me to leave and go elsewhere. So, I have been here for eight weeks, and may stay one year, if life last. My work here is onward and I am making a desperate effort to get started the first branch in the world known as a colored branch of Latter Day Saints. A number say that just as soon as I get a place to hold meetings in they will be baptized. So I have taken the burden upon myself, with the aid of Bro. Dunlap, whom I ordained a priest a few weeks ago. He is a splendid man and his heart is in the work. His wife is a splendid lady. She is a Protestant Episcopal Methodist, but I have about gained her over to our faith; she is to be baptized November 1, if the day is suitable. One of her sons will go with her, so I expect to break the ice of prejudice in those parts. May God speed on the time when hundreds of the colored people may come into the faith. The sick are also healed through my hands with God's blessings to his humble servant. Now, Bro. Kelley and Bro. Joseph Smith, this is the first appeal since I have been in the Church. I ask the Editor to write an article that the Saints may take notice and help the colored people in this part of the world, for surely they are oppressed in wages and labor so that they can scarcely live. Please, Bro. Editor, for God's sake do not fail to write an article so that Saints who choose to help in a financial, temporal way, may do so."

Bro. Graves has asked us to do what it has been decided it was not proper to do, to recommend the taking of a collection at stated periods for money to be sent him for his use in the mission to his race. We could not do this for others, and so can not for him. If any should feel prompted to devote a portion of means to the special support of Bro. Graves' mission among the colored people of the South, they can forward it to Bishop Kelley, who will see that it is so applied.—ED.

Bro. Joseph C. Clapp, writing from Naco, Arizona, October 31: "I am away here in this desert land, right on the line of Old Mexico, trying to tell the angel's message. I have the use of the Baptist church building and am holding forth nightly. I am in very feeble health, and being alone it is hard on me; but I intend keeping the flag up as long as I can. Will likely continue this week. I would like to get down on to the Giles River, among the Utah people; but I am too feeble. It is very humiliating to see so much to do and not be able to do it. There are only two places I know of that I can get shelter in this territory; one is here, and the other in Bisbee, fifteen miles from here. The weather is delightful of days; the nights are getting quite cool. I have to ride about six miles every night to meeting; it will be a little severe on me, but the cause we represent is worth all of that, and much more."

We regret to learn of Bro. Clapp's feeble condition, but when we reflect that the "three score and ten" limit marks the duration of strength to the average man, we do not wonder, and can not complain—who is there that is not growing old; let him rise and declare himself.—ED.

Release of Missionaries.

Owing to the heavy financial strain in the British Isles Mission, upon consultation with Brn. Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans of the Presidency, and the local bishopric, it was thought advisable and necessary to reduce our staff. Therefore, very regretfully we have had to release Bro. J. Arber, Scotland, Bro. T. Jones, and J. G. Jenkins, Wales. We are very sorry that circumstances necessitated the severance of ties in the ministerial capacity. The brethren have labored very earnestly to build up the work and their labors have been appreciated and valued. Trusting that the present strain with its attendant embarrassments will soon be relieved.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Southern Idaho District, Greeting: Having been appointed Bishop's agent for this part of the district, I desire to call your attention to the financial condition of the same. We have nothing at present to provide for the financial part of the Lord's work. Dear Saints, we should see that our missionaries' families are cared for. Let us see to it that our tithes and offerings are not neglected, for we can in no wise expect blessings of the Lord if we do not the things he has commanded.

F. H. B.

A guest visiting a family containing a number of children was frequently puzzled at meal-time by hearing one or another member of the household murmur, in a warning tone, "F. H. B." Finally his curiosity became so astute that he asked his host what the saying meant.

"It means," replied the head of the household, smilingly, "that it isn't safe to ask for a second helping, or to accept if one be offered—that there isn't any more of that particular dish in the kitchen."

"I see," returned the partially enlightened guest. "But what is the exact significance of those three letters?"

"They stand," said the host, "for 'Family, Hold Back.'"—November Woman's Home Companion.

DEDICATION AT NORWOOD, LUCAS COUNTY, IOWA.

For several years labor of the eldership has been bestowed at points some nine or ten miles north of Lucas, Lucas County, Iowa, in the Lamoni Stake, where there has been quite a large branch of the Church, by different elders in the field and those of the local force as well. An interest was aroused and numbers were baptized, until there was quite a hearing in the neighborhood of a resident of the name of R. C. Crooks. Two years ago, November 15, an effort to build a church culminated in the selection of a committee of five, of whom Bro. David E. Daniels, of Lucas, was the chairman, and William Stem, James Keen, R. C. Crooks, and Jacob Cackler were the other members.

An acre of ground for the church building and one and one half acres for a cemetery were donated by James Nyswonger in the northeast corner of his farm, but a few rods away from the residence of Bro. R. C. Crooks. Ground was broken on the 15th of November two years ago, and a church building erected and finished for occupation and dedication on the 15th of November, 1903, and by invitation and arrangement President John Smith, of the Lamoni Stake, Bishop William Anderson, and President Joseph Smith were present to take part in such dedication.

There was a morning service held at eleven o'clock, at which President John Smith preached a gospel sermon; at half past two in the afternoon the dedication services were held. At this service Bro. John Smith presided; prayer was offered by Bro. W. H. Kephart, who had come from his field of labor, some twelve miles, to be present at the dedication, returning in the evening to fill his appointment. The song service was in charge of Bro. Thomas Hopkins, of Lucas, who was assisted by a Bro. Jones, lately from Wales, at the organ, and a number of singers from Lucas and Cleveland choirs.

After an opening hymn and prayer Bro. D. E. Daniels made a statement, briefly giving the time of beginning labor, the names of the donors, and the amounts donated of money and of labor, and stating the exact cost of the building. The sermon was by President Joseph Smith, and the dedictory prayer by President John Smith. The ground was donated by Bro. James Nyswonger. The actual cost of the "ATHENIAN ARENA" PRAISED.

The Decatur County Republican, a paper published at Leon, Iowa, has the following to say of the Athenian Arena, published by the Athenian Literary Society of Graceland and issued from this office:

AN EXCELLENT COLLEGE PAPER.

We were gratified this week upon receiving the October number of the Athenian Arena, the monthly publication of Graceland College of Lamoni. The opening article is a synopsis of the inaugural address of Ernest Ritson Dewsnup, delivered upon the occasion of his assuming his duties as president of that institution on September 24. The address is replete with suggestions in regard to the advantages of education in relation to all the affairs of life, and not only marks its author as a man fitted for the duties and responsibilities of the station to which he has been called, but should prove an inspiration to all who have the education of youth in charge and an incentive to high aims and steadfast effort on the part of the student himself. Typographically the Athenian Arena is a gem. Set as it is in a clear, bright-faced primer and worked in a skillful manner upon heavy enameled stock, it is indeed a revelation to the admirer of the artistic in printing. A splendid short story, entitled, "It's an Ill Wind That Blows Nobody Good," and matter of news pertaining to the College and a few advertisements of business firms in the College town make up the balance of the publication, which taken altogether is the neatest, most appropriate and attractive in every detail of any College paper of small pretensions we remember ever having seen.

building, including the organ, was eleven hundred and twenty-two dollars and ninety-six cents, the amount for the organ being a little more than thirty-eight dollars, leaving a small sum to be collected when the organ shall be received. This amount includes the money furnished and the labor donated.

The building is an excellent one in design; it has a recess at the back of the pulpit, is nicely lighted by colored glass to avoid too strong rays of the western sun; with a small vestibule in the front, and is capable of seating some two hundred or more of an audience. The seats were donated by the Lucas Branch, and the Bible for the desk by the Band of Hope Sunday-school, of Lucas.

At the close of the sermon the deed of the property having been placed in the hands of the Bishop, the preacher presented the key of the building to Bishop William Anderson, and it was by him turned over with the care of the building to the following as trustees: Jacob Cackler, William Stem, and R. C. Crooks, the first named of whom will have the local charge of the building as its janitor. The cemetery trustees are John Ewbanks, R. C. Crooks, and William Stem. We understand the cemetery has been platted and the plat properly recorded in the county recorder's office at the county-seat.

The Saints who have taken an interest in the work of erecting this building, together with the citizens near by who have become interested in the work, are deserving of great credit for the completion of their task. Bro. D. E. Daniels has been unsparing in his effort, both in time and money, and so also has been Bro. Crooks; and indeed it may be said of all of them that they have spared no effort to secure the erection of the building and its dedication at an early date. Bro. Nyswonger, who dedicated the land, showed his public spirit and his interest in the work by his donation.

EARLY MORMONISM.

The following appeared in the Philadelphia Public Ledger recently:

EARLY MORMONISM.

To the Editor of Public Ledger: As I am glad to witness all proper efforts to expose and oppose Mormonism, especially its polygamy, I read with interest a letter in the paper of to-day by W. E. La Rue. But there is one point in the history of these people on which he appears to have been misinformed. As my memory reaches back to the juvenile days of "Joe" Smith, and I was a little time in the neighborhood of Nauvoo (their home in Illinois) in 1839, there seems no doubt on this point: That at that time Joe Smith had put in practice a something called "Spiritual Wifery." Also that the unbelieving world was very incredulous as to its spirituality.

I presume the case stands thus: At the date specified, the community being then established in Utah, Brigham Young simply threw off the mask. He and his people then openly avowed what had been for fifteen years in practice. L. B.

COLORA, Maryland, October 26, 1903.

In the Ledger for November 4, Bro. La Rue made the following reply to the foregoing:

EARLY MORMONISM.

To the Editor of Public Ledger: I note a communication from L. B., of Colora, Maryland, under the above caption, referring to a previous article written by me. He thinks I am misinformed with reference to the first public proclamation of polygamy as a tenet of the Mormon faith, which I said was in Utah, August, 1852. This is an absolute fact. It is a fact that one John C. Bennett instituted an institution which was called "secret wife system." It is also a fact that he was expelled from the Church. Rumor circulated by enemies of the Saints is perhaps what our friend heard of during the "little time" he was in that neighborhood. Joseph Smith, at that time editor of the Times and Seasons, the Church organ, wrote as follows:

"We have given the above rule of marriage (monogamic) as the only one practiced in the Church to show that Doctor J. C. Bennett's secret wife system is a matter of his own manufacture; and, further, to disabuse the public ear, and to show that the said Bennett and his misanthropic friend, Origen Bachelor, are perpetrating a foul and infamous slander upon an innocent people, and need but be known to be hated and despised."

Doubtless our friend, L. B., heard of these "slanders," but they did not represent the teaching of the Church of Latter Day Saints. Brigham Young later withdrew in fact from the Church and taught polygamy, and he is the party to be blamed for the evil deed, not those who were innocent of such things. Thus Bennett and B. Young were apostates from the faith, and the faith itself is not to be judged by what they did. Neither Christ nor his followers are justly to be blamed because Nicholas taught evil things in the primitive church.

Joseph Smith was not a polygamist, either in theory or practice. Every public utterance by him is in relation to the subject monogamic. He had but one wife. No children were ever born to him by the polygamous wives which rumor says he had. His wife affirmed until her death that she was his only wife. In our opposition to Mormonism let us destroy error with truth. It is most effectual to prove to the people of Utah that they are the victims of a false leader, and that the heresies taught by him, Brigham Young, are out of harmony with the true Church of Latter Day Saints.

CARTHAGE JAIL SOLD.

The following from the Burlington Hawk Eye for November 6 would indicate that the Carthage jail, in which Joseph Smith was killed in 1844, has been purchased by the Utah Church:

KEOKUK, Iowa, November 5.—The Mormon Church has purchased for four thousand dollars the old jail at Carthage, Illinois, in which Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet, and his brother Hyrum were killed by a mob in the early history of the State.

SALT LAKE, Utah, November 5.—Officials of the Mormon Church say that the announcement of the purchase of the old jail at Carthage, Illinois, where Joseph Smith was put to death, is premature, although negotiations for its purchase are pending. The intention of the leaders of the Church is to preserve the old prison as a memorial building and probably to keep their mementoes and relics of the prophet and of the struggles of the Church in the early days.

Supplemental to the above dispatch is the following unquestioned information gleaned from the Carthage Republican:

"Mrs. J. M. Browning has sold her residence property here to the Latter Day Saints for the consideration of four thousand dollars. This house is the old Carthage jail in which Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet, and his brother Hyrum, were killed by a mob. The property consists of one acre of ground with good improvements, besides the stone house. Mr. A. H. Woodruff, of Chicago, is in the city completing the deal with Mrs. Browning for the Mormon Church."

The building is of redish brown sandstone, excellently built and still in perfect state of preservation. It is a two-story building, and still contains the heavy oak doors with the bullet holes from the shots of the mob which killed Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet. It is said the Mormons will make the place a sort of Mecca to which pilgrimages will be made by faithful members of the Church of the Latter Day Saints.

"JOHN WESLEY."

The following quotation taken from an editorial in the Outlook for June 27, 1903, was sent us by Bro. S. F. Cushman:

The theological reformation which he imitated was twofold: he denied the doctrine of Calvin, that man had lost his freedom by the fall, and taught that all men were free to accept the salvation which was proffered to them, and all were able to do so.

This doctrine of human freedom necessarily carried with it a doctrine of philosophical universalism, which, heresy though it then was—heresy social as well as theological—he frankly accepted and logically developed. He taught that the Christian life was in good faith offered freely to all men—elect and non-elect, rich and poor, cultivated and ignorant. Holding these two doctrines—perhaps we should say, this one doctrine, since philosophical universalism is a necessary result from freedom of the will—he laid upon the church the responsibility of carrying the gift of life to all men, and he practiced what he preached by going forth as a herald to offer this gift to the uncultivated and nonelect, as he could gather them in the streets of the towns and in the fields of the country.

"SENATOR BURROWS AND HIS FIGHT ON THE MORMONS."

Under the above caption there appeared an editorial in the Evening News, of Benton Harbor, Michigan, November 6, 1903, which will be read with interest by our readers. We are glad indeed to hear Bro. Blakeslee so well spoken of by this Michigan paper:

SENATOR BURROWS AND HIS FIGHT ON THE MORMONS.

It is reported that Senator Burrows will lead the fight against the seating of Reed Smoot as senator from Utah on the ground that he is a Mormon and a polygamist. As far as the Evening News is concerned it sincerely hopes that Smoot will be kicked out of the Senate and that that body will at the same time expel its other unworthy members.

But what should interest Senator Burrows and the other fighters of the Mormons is the methods that are being used to arouse sentiment against the Mormons. Mrs. Weed of Chicago, who recently spoke here, has been going about the State and in several places it is reported that she openly attacked former State Senator Blakeslee, of Galien, as a Mormon who had got into the legislature of Michigan, and the picture she drew of the Mormons getting control of Michigan was very horrifying.

Senator Blakeslee is a leader in the sect known as the Latter Day Saints, and he is in every way a model citizen and one whose religious influence is not dwarfed by his daily life. If he is a sample Mormon then all that Michigan could ask, or the United States Senate could ask, is that all its citizens and members become Mormons.

If Mrs. Weed is no more correct in other things than in regard to Senator Blakeslee she should make haste and get off the platform.

Senator Burrows should pay little attention to the petitions of Mrs. Weed.

CORRECTION.

In our notes of affairs over the water we made some mistakes to which our attention has been called by J. W. Rushton. The Hamilton Branch, Scotland, is presided over by Bro. R. W. Munro, instead of Bro. Walter Browning, as stated by us; Bro. Browning is the teacher, Bro. Porteous is the priest. We ask Bro. Munro and Browning to pardon our mistake.

Bro. Rushton states the Duke of Hamilton, whom we classed as an English lord, is a Scottish nobleman, who by virtue of being the premier peer of Scotland has the right of residence in the Holyrood Palace, the seat of royalty. From what we saw in Scotland and England and know of the history, we obtained the impression that there are no lords in either country, except upon the sufferance of the English crown and Parliament, and that the Duke of Hamilton, though he may have been a Scottish noble, was and is an English lord. However, we are pleased to be corrected by one to the manor born.

We were also of the impression that James, the son of Mary, Queen of Scots, was James I of the United Kingdoms of England and Scotland. Bro. Rushton corrects us, James I of England, VI of Scotland.

We thank Bro. Rushton for kindly setting us right.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Late advices inform us that Bro. Rushton is doing good service at Manchester, England, and was to be in London for work there November 7 and 8, and later.

On October 30 Sr. T. B. Cooper wrote from Seminole, Alabama, that on October 10, 11, and 12 they held some interesting meetings under the direction of the presiding elder, Bro. Jesse Reeder.

Pope Pius X in his first consistory, held at Rome on November 9, made public the fact that he would hold to the policy of his predecessor in regard to the temporal dominion. He has declared it as his conviction that the papacy must be independent of every earthly power; hence there is no likelihood of the present pope bringing about any reconciliation between the Vatican and the Italian Government. The settlement of the great Roman question is moved farther into the future.

The young men, Myron McConley and George Harris, from Colorado to Graceland, mentioned elsewhere, while attending the College were not only willing, but did what they could find to do, including "sawing wood." Men of this kind of "grit" are the ones who "get there," and succeed.

CHARITY TOWARDS THE SECTS.

Under the above caption, I read an article by Heman C. Smith in HERALD for October 21. It seems to me that Bro. Heman has not selected the worst that Alexander Campbell said in his estimation of the sects. I have the "Christian System," edition 1890, before me, and on page 106 he says: "Every sectary is, then, Paul being in the chair of judgment, a fleshly man, and without the precincts of the kingdom of God. A severe judgment truly. How shall we understand it?" What he means by sectaries is plainly stated on page 108, where he says:

But a great mass of sectaries are following, as they imagine, Jesus Christ and his apostles, under the name and tenets of Luther, Calvin, Wesley, etc. They are, without knowing it, the mere followers of men; for they examine nothing for themselves by a constant and habitual reference to the Bible. . . . Now, what may be the amount of carnality and fleshly or worldly influence that keeps them there, and what may be the amount of long-suffering and forgiveness exercised toward them from heaven, I presume not to dogmatize; but that the factionist,—the person who makes a party,—and he who labors to keep it up, are certainly earthly, sensual, and demoniacal; and as such not of the kingdom of God, we can not but assert as a conviction deep and rational, derived from the most impartial examination of the sacred Scriptures.

He here asserts that what he means by sectaries are those churches organized by "Luther, Calvin, Wesley, etc." His estimation of those who began these sects he gives on page 109. After quoting Peter and Paul (2 Peter 2:1; Acts 20:29) rendering "damnable heresies" "destructive sects," he says:

From these intimations we learn the Apostles Paul and Peter foresaw the rise of sectaries and sects; and both of them, it is worthy of remark, distinctly connected the sects with sectarian teachers: for all sects have been originated by false teachers, or by corrupt men. Sectaries, it would appear, occupy the same place under Christ that false prophets did under Moses.

On page 131 he inveighs against them as follows:

To present such a creed as the Westminster, as adopted either by Baptists or Pedobaptists, such a creed as the Episcopalian, or, in fact, any sectarian creed, composed, as they all are, of propositions deduced by logical inferences and couched in philosophical language, to all those who are fit subjects of the salvation of heaven—I say, to present such a creed to such for their examination or adoption, shocks all common sense. This pernicious course is what has paganized Christianity. Our sects and parties, our disputes and speculations, our orders and casts, so much resemble anything but Christianity, that when we enter a modern synagogue, or an ecclesiastical council, we seem rather to have entered a Jewish sanhedrin, a Mohammedan mosque, a Pagan temple, or an Egyptian cloister, than a Christian congregation.

This is surely worse than Joseph Smith ever said.

In the Christian Baptist, the first paper published by Alexander Campbell, page 23, I find the following from the pen of "Philip," who was Walter Scott:

Thirdly, the worshiping establishments throughout christendom, increased and cemented by their respective voluminous confessions of faith, and their ecclesiastical constitutions, are not churches of Jesus Christ, but the legitimate daughters of that mother of harlots, the church of Rome.

His illustrious compeer, Alexander Campbell, expresses similar sentiments on page 34 as follows: "For assuredly every sect that holds a human creed and an ecclesiastical court, is a legitimate daughter of the holy mother; and it is no more than common honesty to own the relationship."

On page 626 I read again:

They of the present order, they of the sects, of the different streets of the great city, deepened my convictions that all sects have drunk of the wine of the cup of the mother of abominations. They are not yet sobered. They have taken, upon implicit faith, the cup out of her hands.

Following the lead of Campbell and Scott the modern disciple of these men, a man Hodge by name, expresses himself in a book published by J. W. Chism, once of Thorp Springs, Texas, now of Norman, Oklahoma, as follows:

As the apostacy, the Catholic Church, is the "beast" of Revelation, so denominationalism is the image of the beast; and as the creed or covenant of the Catholic Church is "the mother of harlots," so the creeds of denominationalism embrace the daughters. Each creed of a denomination is a harlot, and the members are the children of the harlot, and such children are called "bastards;" and as bastards can not inherit with sons, it seems that the members of the denominations must cease to be such or lose their inheritance.—Campbellism—What is it? by J. W. Chism, pp. 226, 227.

Surely consistency should compel the disciples of Campbell and Scott to keep silence on the matter of the statement of the Lord to Joseph Smith that the sects were wrong. The only crime of the young man in declaring the creeds faulty, seems to have been the fact that he said the Lord told him so.

HYRUM O. SMITH.

BY W. H. KELLEY.

The position held by the writer of "Presidency and Priesthood" on the text in Matthew 16 is that the question propounded by Jesus as to whom he was, was addressed to the twelve. Peter answered for himself and his associates, and when Jesus said in answer, calling Peter by name, "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shalt be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shalt be loosed in heaven," the other members of the twelve were included in the authority to be received, as seen in John 20:23, when Jesus breathed on the twelve, he said, and to all of them, "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them, and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained." In harmony with this, Doctor William Smith says:

The early church regarded Saint Peter generally . . . as the representative of the apostolic body; a very distinct theory from that which makes him their head, or governor in Christ's stead.

Peter held no distinct office, and certainly never claimed any distinct powers which did not belong equally to all his fellow apostles.—Bible Dictionary, p. 427.

This view is the Bible view, and the one expressed in Doctrine and Covenants 105: 12:

For unto you (the twelve) and those (the first presidency) who are appointed with you . . . is the power of this priesthood given, . . . the keys of the dispensation which ye have received come down from the fathers, and last of all being sent down from heaven unto you.

The power of this priesthood was given to these two quorums: "The keys of the dispensation which ye have received have come down from the fathers, and last of all being sent down from heaven unto you." "And again I say unto you [Thomas B. Marsh] that whosoever ye shall send in my name, by the voice of your brethren, the twelve."—Paragraph 8. This shows that the twelve acted together, held the authority and keys along with the presidency, and they were "keys of the kingdom." So much for that ninth criticism.

Again it is urged: "10. Christ, the third time having appeared to his disciples after his ascension, still recognizes Peter as chief apostle and president unto whom he had previously given the keys of the kingdom and not quorum." When did Jesus give Peter the "keys of the kingdom and not quorum"? He promised to give them the keys of the kingdom, but when did Peter receive them? Oh, I see; it was upon the Mount, for which there is not an item of proof. Does the author of the Appendix still hold that the keys given to the twelve are not keys of the kingdom? But to the conversation held by the Savior with the apostles by the seaside: Jesus said to Peter, "Feed my sheep."—John 21: 15, 16. Though this conversation was addressed to Peter, the responsibility to look after and "feed my sheep" rested upon all of the twelve. So it is written, "Now, I say unto you,—and what I say unto you I say unto all the twelve,—Arise and gird up your loins, take up your cross, follow me, and feed my sheep."—Doctrine and Covenants 105: 6. It is far from "plain to be seen," then, that Peter's "charge was not only over the quorum of the twelve, but to the whole church, either congregated together or scattered abroad." It seems "plain to be seen" that no such thing was intended, if revelation can be depended upon.

Again:

In purview of this charge (to feed my sheep), Peter writes to the "scattered saints," called "strangers" and endeavors to "feed" them as the Savior had commanded him. (See 1 Peter 1.) Again, in his second letter he addresses "all those who have obtained like precious faith with us," thus obeying the injunction "feed my sheep." (2 Peter 1: 1.)

There is nothing in this to indicate that Peter held any position in the church but that of an apostle. Light on this point is seen in the following statement by Paul:

Then fourteen years after, I went up to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also. And I went up by revelation, and communicated unto them that gospel which I preach among the Gentiles, but privately to them which were of reputation. —Galatians 2: 1, 2.

No doubt some were of greater repute among their fellows than others. Of the conference, Paul speaks, in verse 7, "When they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter." Verse 9: "And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision." Thus Peter is made the leading apostle among the Jews and Paul among the Gentiles. Both went abroad to their fields of labor, Peter to preach among the circumcision, and Paul among the uncircumcision. In after-years, both of these apostles addressed letters to those among whom they had labored and built up churches, and so far as an ecumenical character in their address, Peter's shows no preëminence over that of Paul's. The Galatian letter was addressed by Paul to the Galatians. His first Corinthian letter, "Unto the church of God, which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours."—1 Corinthians 1: 2. Nothing that Peter wrote partook so much of the ecumenical character as this letter written by Paul. Peter's first epistle was addressed, "To the strangers abroad throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia." His second letter was addressed to the same people (see 2 Peter 3: 1) and he writes, "That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us, the apostles of the Lord and Savior."—Ibid., 3: 2. Here Peter puts himself with the other apostles. Peter addressed his letters to those among whom he had labored, as is admitted by all scholars. Hence there is nothing in the claim made that Peter was a whit ahead of Paul. If there is evidence for Peter's being president, there is more for Paul; and as indicated before, this brings to the surface too many presidents, so defeats the assumption of the writer.

The facts in regard to the saying, "Feed my sheep," etc., are these: The apostles, it appears, had become discouraged, and Peter said, "I go a-fishing. They say unto him, We also go with thee." This was their old employment, and Peter was their former captain and leader in the business, before they started to follow the Nazarene. At least Peter and Andrew were in company with James and John and their father Zebedee, and they had hired servants as helpers. Peter was the leader. This will account for the fact that the other apostles looked to Peter so readily as a leader. He was a man of affairs, prominent and relied upon in a business sense before Jesus appeared among them. On the occasion here referred to Jesus perceived that they had a longing and desire to return to their former avocations, and thereby seek a livelihood, rather than go to the harder task, that of the ministry; so Jesus put the question, and to the leader, "Lovest thou me more than these?" These what? Why, these fishes and nets that were the means of their living and wealth. Jesus wished to impress upon their minds, that if they loved him, they would have to make the sacrifice and give up the fishing business and attend to the ministry,—"Feed my sheep." He knew they loved him, and he used this strongest tie and motive force to win them from their nets, and encourage them not to labor for the things that perish, but to carry out the commission to preach the gospel and catch men. Peter was the most culpable of any for this seeming desertion, as he was the leader in and out of the church. Only a few days had passed since he was cursing and swearing and denying the Lord. Hence Jesus plied him thoroughly, and what he said to Peter was meant for the rest as well, as expressed in Doctrine and Covenants 105:6: "What I say unto you I say unto all the twelve,—Arise and gird up your loins, take up your cross, follow me, and feed my sheep." So the claim to Peter's primacy fails here also.

But we will take up and consider the point presented by the writer of the Appendix to "Exegesis" on Acts 15, in regard to the conference held at Jerusalem by the apostles and elders. There had been a growing feeling and contention between the Gentiles at Antioch, whose rights under the gospel were defended by Paul and Barnabas, and the Jewish converts in regard to keeping the law of Moses. The Jewish converts insisted that certain Jewish customs that were mentioned in the law should be observed by the Gentiles. The contention went on until it came to be so serious that it was necessary to carry it before the church authorities at Jerusalem. Paul was strongly in sympathy with the Gentile claims, and defended them, being the apostle to the Gentiles. Peter, on the other hand, was the apostle and leader among the circumcision, sometimes standing firm for the rights of the Gentiles, at other times vacillating and catering to the demands of the Jews. So it was necessary for Paul, in defending the rights of the Gentiles, to oppose Peter. He says, "But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed."—Galatians 2:11. The dissension began at Antioch, by the Jews insisting, "Except ye be circumcised, after the manner of Moses, ye can not be saved." Paul and Barnabas took the matter up to Jerusalem, where the contention was going on also. "And the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter."—Acts 15:6. The assembly was organized and had a chairman. The writer of the Appendix assumes that Peter was the president of that council. But in this he stands alone. No other writer whom we have read after so holds, whether he follows the theory of Jerome or not. In the council Paul and Barnabas were the chiefs on one side, and Peter on the other. These great, experienced leaders sat in silence while the conflict went on among the more contentious ones; the hotheads were to the front. So, "after there had been much disputing, Peter arose" (not from the chair, but down on the floor) and simply reiterated his experience he had years before, down at Joppa and the house of Cornelius, and concluded by objecting to the view being held by some, to put a yoke upon the necks of the disciples. "Then all the multitude kept silence and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul." They made their speeches. The chief ministers to Jew and Gentile had now been heard, together with those who had stirred up the dissension. Then what? "And after they had held their peace, James answered saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me."—Verse 13. "My sentence is that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God."—Verse 19. This decision closed the matter. As is well expressed in the Diaglott, "Therefore I judge." Correct enough,—he had to judge in order to cast "sentence." But in his ambition to do something for Peter, the writer of the Appendix makes Peter the president and has him decide the matter, and then James decides it, and finally the Holy Ghost decides it. But what is worse, he has it, "Peter was the first to rise and render his decision as presiding officer." Still the discussion goes on just the same. Nothing is said about Peter deciding anything, or presiding, yet it is clear to this writer that he did. However, the discussion went on until the chief leaders had spoken, and then James said, "My sentence is," etc., after which there was no more discussion, but a general agreement or assent to the decision of James, and letters of instruction and congratulations ordered sent abroad. So our critic has lost his point on this.

We are told that this "was a special conference of the apostles and elders at Jerusalem, and not of the church in general." But the Book says, "Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men," etc.

We wish to call attention to another important point that supports the position that Peter was the president of the church. The fact that God who sent his angel to Cornelius (Acts 10) and directed him to send for Peter to present unto them the "words of life and salvation," and also the vision which God gave Peter, proves emphatically that God recognized Peter as the head of the church on earth.

But there is nothing required here but what is provided for in Peter's calling as an apostle. It was in line with the sending of Ananias to seek out the unconverted and blind Saul of Tarsus; Philip joining himself to the chariot (Acts 8); and Paul being beckoned to go into Macedonia. This work belonged to the ministry abroad and not to a localized president. At this time, however, as in the case of filling the place of Judas, the Day of Pentecost, the rebuking of Ananias and Sapphira, the selecting of the seven, etc., there may have been no permanent president selected at Jerusalem.

We are not told just when James was made president; neither are we told when and how elders and bishops were introduced. We find them in existence, and in due time James was made the president of the church.

With the apostles, James, the brother of the Lord, succeeds to the charge of the church,—that James who has been called "Just" from the time of the Lord to our day, for there were many of the name of James, etc.—Hegessippus.

Again:

For the church of Jerusalem, James, the Lord's brother, was the first bishop thereof, as all ancient writers agree, though when and by whom he was ordained they are not so unanimous; for some say by the apostles, after the Lord's crucifixion; others, by Christ himself; and others again, both by Christ and the apostles.—Bingham.

But there is no history that places Peter as president either by Christ or the apostles or anybody else.

Again, the position assumed by the writer of the Appendix is absurd, in the light of the commission and authority given to the apostles, to require that the president of the church should perform all the work in person outlined by the writer. There is neither law nor precedent for it. The Lord works through whom he will. The apostles were his chief ministers abroad, and he directed them in the work to be done in the ministry abroad. He said, "Lo I am with you always." Peter, with the other apostles selected at Jerusalem, lived and died apostles (those of them who did die) and are apostles yet in heaven, under the direction of Jesus Christ the great head of the church, and can be sent by him to minister to men on earth; hence Peter, James, and John were sent by their Master to Joseph Smith, Jr., the Seer, and Oliver Cowdery to direct in the bestowing of the priesthood upon them and their ordination. It was not required to send a former president of the church on earth, whoever he may have been, to do this work, neither to come himself. He trusted the three strong ones, those best known, of the old guard, Peter, James, and John, and sent them. So everything is orderly and right, if only the right view is had. So the criticisms and evidences adduced by the writer of the Appendix to the "Exegesis of the Priesthood" fails to maintain his "contention," and much of it is not strong, to say the least, and is only noticed because of the importance of the subject in hand, and for the benefit of the inexperienced who are likely to read it.

Further evidence on the disputed points raised, is continued as follows, to which the reader's attention is called:

James, Epistle of, one of the books of the New Testament canon, which has been ascribed to James the son of Zebedee, to a pseudo James who assumed the name to get authority, to James the son of Alphæus, and to James the brother of the Lord. . . . The entire recent literature on the epistle is reviewed in the Studien und Kritiken, January, 1874, by Professor Berschlag, who believes that it was written by James, the brother of the Lord, whom he distinguishes from both the apostles of that name.—The American Encyclopedia, vol 9, p. 519.

James the son of Alphæus. He also was one of the apostles, and is mentioned in all the four lists (Matthew 10: 3; Mark 3: 18; Luke 6: 15; Acts 1: 13) by this name, but in no other place. It is, however, thought by some that he is the same with James the Lord's brother. In Matthew 13: 55, and Mark 6: 3, the brethren of the Lord are named James, Josés, Judas, and Simon. It is also to be remarked that they are in both places spoken of as the children of the carpenter, that is, of Joseph the husband of the Virgin Mary. But it has been urged that they were called sons of Joseph and Mary because the children of two families,—of Mary the Virgin and Mary the wife of Clopas, her half sister,—were brought up together. Those who in this way make James, the Lord's brother, to be a son of Alphæus require to establish (a) that Clopas is the same name as Alphæus; (b) that Mary the wife of Clopas (John 19: 25) was the sister of the Virgin Mary, and (c) that this Mary, wife of Clopas, is the same who is called (Matthew 31: 56; Mark 15: 40) Mary the mother of James and Josés, and (Mark 16: 1; Luke 24: 10) simply the mother of James, in which four passages the same person is evidently intended.

But the identity of the names Alphæus and Clopas is by no means certain. Those who maintain it take Clopas as the Aramaic Chalpai, and Alphæus to be a Græicized form thereof. But when we turn to what might be supposed the best source of evidence on this point, viz., the Peshito version of the New Testament, instead of finding the two names treated as the same word, we find in all cases Chalpai where the Greek has Alphæus, and where Clopas or Cleopas occurs, it is simply transliterated Kleopha. The same is the case with the Jerusalem Syriac. The identity of these names is, thus, far from being established. Then in John 19: 25, the versions and best authorities are in favor of making four persons of those there mentioned: "his mother, and his mother's sister, and Mary the wife of Clopas, and Mary Magdalene." This is the Peshito rendering, and, even if the conjunction were not there, it is not uncommon in scriptural enumeration to find names given in pairs without any conjunction, while to make Mary the wife of Clopas the Virgin's sister would be to assume two Marys in the same family of sisters, which is not very probable. Whether Mary wife of Clopas was the mother of a "James" (called in one place "the little") and of Josés can neither be asserted nor denied from the evidence in the Gospels; but, when the other two assumptions have so little foundation to rest on, it seems impossible to consider the son of Alphæus the same person with the "brother of the Lord."

Further, James the Lord's brother was bishop of Jerusalem (compare Galatians 1: 19 with Galatians 2: 9-12), and was president of the church in its earliest days. (Acts 12: 17; 20: 13; 21: 18.) Such a position required him to be a resident in Jerusalem, while had he been an apostle (as the son of Alphæus was) we should have expected him to take his share of the missionary labor of publishing the gospel in distant lands. But this bishop of Jerusalem was the author of the epistle of Saint James. He simply styles himself in the introduction thereto "a servant of God and of the lord Jesus Christ." He who could thus write with the certainty of being identified must have been the most famous person of his name in the church, must have been what Saint Paul in a passage (Galatians 2: 9), where he places James before both Peter and John, calls him "a pillar" of the Christian society. And again Jude, when commencing his epistle, calls himself the brother of James, with no other mark of distinction. Here too the same James must be intended, and when we read Saint Jude's epistle (17, 18) we find him distinguishing himself from the apostles, and as it were disclaiming the apostolic dignity. This is as it would be if James and Jude were both brethren of the Lord and were not apostles, but we should certainly expect one or other would have left some indication in their letters had they been of the number of the twelve, and most surely neither of them would have been likely to give us reason for believing that he was not an apostle.

The two passages (1 Corinthians 15: 7; Galatians 1: 19) from which it might be argued that James the brother of the Lord was an apostle can not be relied on, for we find the same title given to Barnabas, and it is certain that the name "apostle" began to be more widely applied after the ascension than it is in the Gospels.

Once more, the brethren of the Lord are expressly said (John 7: 5) not to have believed on Jesus at a period much later in his ministry than the appointment of the twelve; while in mention of them in Acts 1: 14 there is given first a list of the eleven, who are said all to have continued in prayer with the women and Mary the mother of Jesus and with his brethren. Such a studied severance of the brethren of the Lord from the number of the apostles is very significant, while the position which they hold in the list may well be due to the fact that it was only at a late period that they had become disciples of Jesus. The change in their opinions has been thought by many to be sufficiently accounted for by the statement of Saint Paul (1 Corinthians 15: 7) that after his resurrection Jesus "was seen of James." Such a demonstration of the truth of what others had long believed and Jesus himself had taught could not fail to work conviction on a mind which, if we may accept the tradition of the "Gospel according to the Hebrews" (which also testifies to this appearance of Christ to James), was somewhat inclined to believe, even before the crucifixion.

It seems right, therefore, to conclude that James the son of Alphæus, one of the apostles, was a different person from James the Lord's brother and bishop of Jerusalem. Of the history of the former we are told nothing except that he was an apostle. The latter is spoken of by Saint Peter (Acts 12: 17) as if he were at that time the recognized head of the Christian community in Jerusalem. Again (Acts 15: 13), after the debate at Jerusalem about the circumcision of the Gentiles, it is he who sums up the arguments and declares the sentence of the council, as if he were the chief person among them. In Acts 21: 18, on Saint Paul's last visit to Jerusalem, he holds the same position, and receives the visit of Saint Paul in the presence of all the presbyters. In Galatians 1: 19; 2: 9, he is placed foremost among "the pillars" of the church at Jerusalem.—Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 13, pp. 532, 533.

The interested critic will peruse with satisfaction the learned disquisition of Reverend T. K. Cheyne, M. A., D. D., Oriel Professor of Holy Scripture, Oxford, in this connection as being among the best thoughts upon the subject from the other side of the water, and which is herewith submitted:

James (Jacobus), the name of three persons preëminently mentioned in the New Testament—James the son of Zebedee, James the son of Alphæus, and James the brother of Jesus. The first two of these are included in the lists of the apostles given in the Synoptic gospels and Acts (Matthew 10: 2 F, Mark 3: 17 F, Luke 6: 14 F, Acts 1: 13). The former of this pair was a brother of John; their father a Galilean fisherman, probably a resident of Capernaum.

Of James the son of Alphæus, called in Mark 15: 40 James the less (minor, younger) little is recorded in the New Testament. According to the same passage, his mother was a certain Mary who is there mentioned as a witness of the crucifixion. . . . The question whether James the son of Alphæus was identical with James the brother of Jesus must be discussed before the consideration of the latter. Doubtless in early times, and perhaps latterly, a prepossession in favor of the perpetual virginity of Mary the mother of Jesus has had an influence in determining some scholars to maintain the affirmative of this question. It is argued that from Matthew 27: 56, Mark 15: 40, and John 19: 25 the inference may be drawn that Mary the mother of Jesus had a sister Mary who was the wife of Cleopas, and that she was the mother of two sons, James the little and Joses. Moreover, since James, Joses (or Joseph), Judas, and Simon are mentioned in Matthew 13: 55 and Mark 6: 3 as brothers of Jesus, and since in Luke 6: 16 and Acts 1: 13 a James and a Jude are included among the apostles, it has been argued that these latter were identical with the James and Judas mentioned among the brothers of Jesus, yet they were not his brothers, but cousins. In support of this hypothesis it is maintained that James called the brother of Jesus, mentioned explicitly by Paul in Galatians 1: 19 as such, and frequently elsewhere as simply "James," and always indicated as holding a prominent place in the church at Jerusalem, was no other but James the son of Alphæus, who is identified by the hypothesis with Clopas of John 19: 25. Thus he would be shown to have been a cousin of Jesus, being a son of a sister of Mary, Jesus' mother, and one of the original apostles.

This argumentation is, however, beset with insuperable difficulties. If the apostle Lebbeus (Matthew 10: 3; but R. V. and W. H. Thaddeus) who is called Thaddeus in Mark 3: 18, and who by the hypothesis was identical with "Judas of James" of Luke and Acts was by the first evangelists known to have been a brother of James the son of Alphæus, it is improbable that this writer would not have indicated the fact after the analogy of Simon and Andrew his brother, and James and John his brother. It is no less improbable that if Judas and Simon were sons of Alphæus and the Mary in question, they would not have been mentioned along with Joses in Matthew 27: 56 and Mark 15: 40.

It is also evident from the attitude of Jesus' brothers toward him, according to Mark 3: 21, 31, that they could not have belonged to the friendly apostolic group. For they are here represented as "standing without," and were probably of the "his friends" who went out to lay hold on him, because he was, they thought, beside himself. (Compare John 7: 5.) In this connection the fact is important that wherever they are mentioned in the New Testament they are distinguished from the apostles (Matthew 12: 46, Luke 8: 19, John 7: 3, Acts 1: 14, 1 Corinthians 9: 5; "the other apostles" [besides Paul] and the brother of the Lord). Besides there is nowhere an intimation that any one of the apostles was either a brother or cousin of Jesus. The attempt to show from John 19: 25 that Mary, the so-called wife of Clopas (identified by the hypothesis with Alphæus), was the sister of the mother of Jesus and that hence James the son of Alphæus was his cousin, is hazardous. For it is doubtful whether Clopas and Alphæus are Aramæic and Greek forms of the same name, since the Syriac version uniformly transliterates them differently (Cleopha and Halpai). . . . The opinion that four women instead of three are mentioned here has the support of the Syriac version and many of the highest authorities (see Meyer on the passage, and Mesler in St. Kr. 40, p. 650.) Besides, the position is quite tenable that according to the prevailing usus loquendi, "Mary of Clopas" means Mary the daughter of Clopas, in which case Clopas would be known only as the father of the Mary mentioned in John 19: 25; see Clopas. Thus in any case the improbable supposition that in the same family there were two sisters of the same name is obviated.

Still, even if it could be shown that James the son of Alphæus was a cousin of Jesus, it would not follow that another James was not his brother, since better reasons than those given by Lange and Meyrick are required to justify the abandonment of the natural meaning of adelphos. Nor is it necessary to resort to the supposition of step-brothers; for according to the obvious sense of "firstborn" (protokos, Luke 2:7; Matthew 1:25 Sin. Syr) Mary was the mother of other sons than Jesus.

James the brother of Jesus, surnamed the Just, although sharing with the brothers, of whom he was probably the oldest, in their opposition to Jesus during his public ministry, appears to have been converted to his cause soon after the resurrection. According to Galatians 1:18, 2:9, Paul finds James holding a prominent place in the Christian community in Jerusalem along with Peter and John, and with these three, "reputed pillars of the church" he came to an arrangement respecting his mission to the Gentiles. So great was the influence or authority of James that Peter was controlled by him at Antioch in the matter of eating with the Gentiles. For when "certain" from James came, he drew back and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision (Galatians 2:12). From this fact and from Paul's statement that, yielding from the emissaries, the rest of the Jews dissembled, "and even Barnabas was carried away with their dissimulation," the inference is obvious that this brother of Jesus was the acknowledged head of the Jewish Christian party in the church of Jerusalem, and a zealot for the strict observance of the Jewish law.—Encyclopedia Biblica, edited by the Reverend T. D., formerly assistant editor of the Encyclopedia Britannica, volume 2, pages 2317, 2320.

James the Lord's brother; author of the "Epistle of James." He is described as holding office in the church at Jerusalem, and appears to have been president of the council that met there in A. D. 50 or 51.—The Century Cyclopaedia, p. 539.

(Concluded next week.)

ENTER IN AT THE STRAIGHT GATE.

SERMON BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
NOVEMBER 1, 1903.

(Reported by L. A. Gould.)

I have chosen a world-wide text this morning; and whether I shall be able to present any thoughts that will be beneficial, or lead any more rapidly to a conclusion in the minds of those who are hearing the series of sermons now being preached, can better be told at the end of the service.

I take for granted that the Bible contains the words of God; that in the Old and New Testaments is to be found a record of God's dealings with men, and a proper account of his ministry, both in the olden time and in the new. I take it for granted, further, that whatsoever may have come to us in later days, that reinstates, or attempts to reinstate that which was declared by the Master, foreseen by the prophets, testified of, is always from God, is to us his word, and ought to be to all who make a profession of belief in God, in Christ, and in the Bible. You remember (possibly it has been said to you during the week that has passed), that John was sent to deliver a message, and was charged to make the way of the Lord straight, to make his paths straight. I once had a little controversy with a gentleman who was under the impression that we had made a mistake. He contended that the word straight as found in the text meant difficult, or narrow, or hard to walk in. But if the word found in the declaration of the voice which said, "Make his paths straight," thereby agreeing with what has been said heretofore,—that God does not walk in crooked paths,—it does not mean that the way is winding or hard to follow. And it also comports with the statement made by the Master, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light," evidently meaning that whatever burden may be imposed, whosoever has put on the yoke of Christ can easily bear the burden, however weak he may be naturally. He will receive from God a sufficient amount of strength to bear the burden. And we are also admonished, rather adversely, I admit, "Bear ye one another's burdens," and in another place, "Every man should bear his own burden." I do not attempt to reconcile this apparent difference; but I have long since solved the mystery so far as my own action is concerned; that by bearing my own burden uncomplainingly, I am helping to bear the burdens of others. And if by any possibility I am continually complaining about my burdens, and finding my difficulties heavier than anybody else's burdens, I am simply adding to others' burdens, and not relieving myself, bearing my own. And that is how I understand this apparent difference.

Now, the text that I have chosen will be found in the seventh chapter of Matthew's gospel, verses 22 and 23 (Inspired Translation), although I shall read what precedes these verses in order that we may find out, if we can, the reason why he should have made use of the expression at that time:

What man among you, having a son, and he shall be standing out, and shall say, Father open thy house that I may come in and sup with thee, will not say, Come in, my son; for mine is thine, and thine is mine? Or what man is there among you, who, if his son ask bread, will give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father who is in heaven, give good things to them that ask him? Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets.

Now here comes the text:

Repent, therefore, and enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat. Because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

It seems from our natural organization, that it is much easier for us to walk in the broad way than it is to walk in the narrow way. Some of us require a wider path, even, in walking the streets than others, because of the unsteady manner in which we walk. But there is a way known to sailors, and to men who are accustomed to working in high places, by which they may feel secure; and that is, look up. Pay not too much heed to the possibility of falling. Exercise what care is practicable for you to do, and look up. Any one walking the streets will easily find that they will stumble less if they will look straight forward rather than looking down upon the ground, either to the right or to the left. If you think I am mistaken in this, the next time you walk one of those planks laid down at the crossings, try it, and you will be convinced that I have told you one truth, at least, this Sunday morning.

It is fortunate for us that the Master in the major part of his teachings, whenever he gave them with the appearance of a commandment or a requirement, gave us the reason for them. And as intelligent beings, we ought to be satisfied with that, and give him the credit that is due for dealing with us as intelligent beings.

While thinking of this text this morning, I had transposed them in my memory, and I thought the injunction to walk in the straight path came first. But I discover to my comfort, that the warning precedes the command. "Repent therefore, and enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat."

You may be admonished, if you have not already been during the services of the week, that upon one occasion a prophet wrote concerning a portion of Israel, a commandment that they should seek after the old paths, that they might walk therein and find rest to their souls.

I am glad if what President Blair has stated is true; that persons who have been members of the Church, whom he has never yet become acquainted with as members, have been attending these meetings, and he says he is glad of it, and so am I. It is evident that the faith is latent in them, and that an occasion brings it to light. And for that reason I present a few thoughts this morning; not that they are new, but that they are like those whom he has become acquainted with,—they have been in the background in the minds of some.

By what rule of reasoning, from the ordinary human standpoint, does it occur, that in the teaching of the doctrines of the New Testament scripture, we more nearly conform to that which the Savior has given as instruction and commandment than our neighbors who believe in God, as they say, and find fault with us because we believe too much? If all these various religious organizations are but human products, where is the limit? And who is not authorized to build up a theory and present a doctrine, and induct members into the organization which he may represent? If there are none divine, all are standing on a similar level; that of every one having the same right as each and every other has, and enjoying equal authority to minister in the name of Jesus Christ. Now, I am aware that the minds of nineteen twentieths, if not the entire body to which I am speaking this morning, immediately conclude that no man has a right to misrepresent Christ, no matter how wise he may be, no matter how old he may be, no matter how young he may be, nor no matter how foolish he may be. No man has a right to misrepresent Christ, if indeed he is the Savior of the world, to which we all agree; if he is the Messiah, the one upon whose shoulders the government was laid, whose name was Counselor, Wonderful, the one by whose stripes we are to be healed; then no man has the right to stand before his fellow men and represent Christ, as having been sent by him, unless he has the warrant from the Master himself. And we are permitted to judge of such an one, for it is distinctly declared in the word, that he that Christ hath sent speaks forth the words of God; or he whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God. And if men only represent themselves, they surely are not representing Christ.

Bro. Blair has said that before the meetings closed, an opportunity would be given for those who were yet without the pale of the Church which we represent to enter in and begin a service with God, with others who had espoused his cause. If it be not true that the body which he represents, which will be represented by the preacher during the week that is coming, now, is authorized to speak in behalf of Christ, and actually represents him here, of what particular value will it be to any one to make covenant with those who are already in the same work, and are, as we believe, in the church of Christ? We can not avoid this statement. There must be some reason why men should enter into relation with Jesus Christ. There must be some reason why they should seek first the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness. There must be some reason why there is such a constant presentation of Christ as the life of men, that spiritual life of men, the one sole representative of God that has the right to speak by authority, the only one infallible source, from whence comes all that men can rely upon in a spiritual way. There must be some reason why men should unite with the body calling itself the church of Christ, representing the things of Christ. For if there be no such reason, then all this effort, this preaching, is, according to the statement made by the apostle, foolishness unto men. And yet the same writer said, that when man by the wisdom of man could not find out God, he chose by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

What is this straight way? If God does not walk in crooked paths, he does not want his own to walk in crooked paths; and neither will he commend those who do walk in crooked paths.

I have heard men say, in prayer-meeting, that they had made many crooked paths. And when I have heard it I have said in my consciousness, if I became certain that I was walking in crooked paths, it was my duty to quit walking in crooked paths, if I ever expected God to commend me, and Christ to be my friend, who came to walk in straight paths; and sent a messenger, or had a messenger sent before him who was commissioned to make straight the way of the Lord; to make his paths straight.

I ask you again, for I want to emphasize this point if I can, How did it happen, that a people that began this religious crusade three quarters of a century ago, nearly, have been persistently forging to the front in teaching what they understand to be the gospel of Christ; they never have been concluded as misrepresenting Christ in their preaching the gospel found in the New Testament scriptures? How does it happen? That is a problem for some of you thinkers to solve. Do not evade the proposition by saying that Joseph Smith and his compeers were ignorant; for if you do it gives them more credit for having reached safer conclusions than their wiser neighbors did. Do not say that they happened to hit upon it; for if that were true, then such ignorant men would have been apt to fail in some other way. But hundreds and thousands who have come after them, who have listened to their teachings, who have taken what they said to be a proper statement of the message of Christ who came as the Savior of men, have borne witness by precept and by example, and by life, that this message was true, and they found life and satisfaction in walking therein.

The proposition must have force, that these men spake truly when they said that the message came from God that told them they were to preach the gospel as they found it in the New Testament scriptures; and, without multiplying words, without specifying step by step the processes of their future proceedings, just simply sent them out with the Bible in their hands, open, and told them to preach what they found in it. And they did so. From the north, from the south, from the east, from the west went up the record of their preaching, and hundreds and thousands obeyed, and found that they had spoken the truth. Now, my friends, no other body that I know anything about, who has written a history, so far as I have been able to discover, has ever come before the public with the Bible in their hands in such a way as that, and told the people that the Bible should be the criterion by which they should be judged; and if they be condemned by that they would stand condemned. And then the conclusion forces itself upon us, if they spoke according to that which is written, they must have been sent of God.

There is not a religious denomination that I know anything about (and I am not speaking disparagingly of them), but there is not a religious body now extant that I know anything about that has done more to put themselves in the hands of their fellow men for judgment, either for condemnation, or commendation, so fairly and so squarely and so completely as those who are being represented during this series of meetings. The preacher may have erred,—I have not heard all his statements; I do not know that I shall hear all that he shall make in the week that is coming, but the main principles will remain true, and he will preach those just as they are found in the Bible. And you men who have your Bibles, bring them with you, and see whether or not he fairly presents the statements of religious men, putting themselves before their compeers for the purpose of examination, to stand upon the judgment that may be given either for or against them.

You may ask me, Now, Bro. Smith, what has that to do with the preaching of the gospel of the Son of God? I will tell you. There are two principles of the gospel of the Son of God that have been preached ever since Jesus preached at Jerusalem. And they are, repentance and remission of sins. Mrs. Booth-Tucker, who was killed only a day or two ago in an accident on the Santa Fe Railroad while on her way to Chicago, preached them. Our Catholic friends have preached them for hundreds of years; and the Protestant denominations, every one of them, have preached those two principles: repentance and remission of sins. But they have not preached the balance of them. Christ said it should be done, and it should be done as a witness.

While I am here to agitate the principles of the doctrine of Christ, as mentioned by the Apostle Paul, and as taught by Jesus Christ, one by one, I am not here to say that men are saved by doctrine alone. I am not here to say that simply a faith in words will save men; but I am here to say that they are taught by Christ as the underlying principles upon which man shall build to receive life and salvation. They may have a head full of knowledge, and their efforts, their impulses may be wrong. In fact some of the most skillful rogues the world has ever seen, are among the most learned men. And yet the more dangerous element in the world is the ignorant element.

“Repent therefore.” That is the opening way. These are the first words, almost, that fell from the Master, as represented by Mark in his first chapter, “Repent, and believe the gospel.” He says here, “Repent, therefore, and enter ye in at the straight gate.” That is, to repent and believe the gospel.

Now any man who says that any may receive life and salvation by entering in some other way than the straight way, he is not representing Christ. Can you see that? He is simply entering into the broad way.

Recently I was passing over some of the roads in England. They have a wonderful network of rails laid; they call them metals over there. There were dozens upon dozens of different lines leading in the same direction, and I noticed that whenever a train started out from the station it seemed to cut directly through the mazy leadings of these different lines. And I took special pains to notice, and a man standing on one of these tracks and looking right down these metals could see the path was straight so that the off-shoots did not catch the train unless somebody had put in a switch and derailed the train. Christ never intended that his gospel train should be derailed. For that reason he sent a messenger to prepare the way and make his paths straight, and he never authorized a man, from that time until now, to ever put in a switch that should lead that train off on a side-track. He never has authorized it, and I believe he never will.

I remember hearing a man, once, in a little discussion I had with him, say, "Bro. Smith, here is a railway out here, and there are two lines of rails out there, and you see they run in the same direction. There may be many lines leading to the same destination." Well, I said, dear sir, that is an unfortunate representation, for this reason: Those two parallel lines of rails never run together, but always are just so far apart. And if I wanted to take that train, and take that line of rails to go to Chicago, I must not stop at Mendota; but I must keep on the rails that go to Chicago. If I start from there to go to Quincy, I must not switch off at Galesburg and go to Burlington; but I must always keep on the line that is established for the end to which I am going. Well, he thought it did not make any difference. Well, I said, I would like to have you try it; let you start to California, and see where you would go, if you started east. "Oh, well," he says, "Bro. Smith, you are too hard." Thank you for that, it was not me that was hard, it was the word that was hard. It is the word coming to us by prophecy, "To the law and the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, there is no light in them." Law is that which is commended as the rule of conduct, spiritually or temporally. The municipal law is that rule of conduct prescribed by the highest authority in the land, that is, by the legislatures, and by congress. Now, when we come to the realm of spiritual things, that which is law is that rule of spiritual conduct that is prescribed by the highest authority in earth or in heaven. There we have it. A man who kneels down and prays, "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," commends himself in that operation to that law enacted in heaven which is everlasting, and eternal, and operates in its spiritual force upon every man who puts himself within the lines of its precincts. Makes no difference who he is or where he is; he is entitled to the operation of that law. It is hard; it is inexorable; I am willing to admit that, but I am not responsible for it. But it is as hard in its operation as the law by which a man must keep himself in strict conformity to the rule of physical life, if he does not get hurt. The man who deliberately puts his hand in the fire, or stands by the side of one of those wonderful trip-hammers, as I have heard of them doing, and simply puts his hand under it, his hand will be smashed. The man that puts his hand in the fire will be burned. It is an eternal, inexorable law, enacted by the same power by which the spiritual laws have been enacted.

"Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

We want to be among the few who shall find it. And comparatively speaking we are but few. I had abundant reason to realize that when I saw the swarming multitudes over yonder in the old country, such immense crowds as I have seen in those big cities there, and in New York. We are but few. What God will do with the many, I do not know. But I trust it shall be better with them, in the administration of that with which we are acquainted, than it was in Boston some years ago, when I was talking with a young man who had served for four years on a vessel there in Charles River, called the Sailors' Bethel. He was going down to Yarmouth to build up a congregation, and hire a hall. Told me just what he was going to do. He would establish himself with a congregation of twelve or fourteen hundred that would make him a living for a life time. He says to me, "Brother Smith, what proportion of the congregation to which you preach, do you really think is worthy to be saved?" That set me to thinking. There were about two hundred people in the branch, and an average of these that attended regularly was about eighty. I rapidly went over it in mind; and I knew every member; and I scanned the life of each, the public and private life, so far as known to me. I turned to him and said, Sir, I could not number as many as I can count upon the fingers of my hand, whom I believe are not worthily striving to live according to the teachings of the Master in the New Testament scriptures. And so if I had reason to say something of that kind to the people to-day, that is my earnest conviction. I might have picked up an unruly one here and there; but I am not going to do it. I do not believe in scolding. Dowie does. Let him scold. Let me plead.

Well, he straightened himself up, and said, "Brother Joseph, I wish I could say that of my congregation that I have preached to." Well, I says, what proportion do you think of your congregation that you have been preaching to for the last four years, are worthy? "Well," he says, "not one quarter of them." Well, what about the other three fourths? I asked. He says, "To tell the truth, Brother Smith, they are not fit for anything in God's world, but to be damned." I was shocked. I said to him, Sir, if I could be satisfied that only one fourth of the congregation to which I was preaching had been so far inducted into the doctrine of Jesus Christ as to endeavor to comport their lives to it; that only one fourth should strive to be worthy, or being worthy of salvation, and the other three fourths only fit to be damned, I would shut my Bible, go home, and never preach another gospel sermon while I lived. He says, "I can not help it." That is just my earnest conviction. He had been preaching four years, acquired a name and reputation, and on that reputation he was going to Yarmouth, hire a hall, establish a congregation with a membership that would give him a living the rest of his life, enable him to get married, raise up a family, and live among men as a man.

Now, do you believe he was preaching the gospel of the Son of God? I do not. He was preaching a popular theology. He was preaching what would tickle the ears of the people, that he might have a good congregation where he was going. I was preaching an unpopular philosophy; and at the same time those to whom I was preaching were receiving the ministration of the Spirit of God by which they were striving to walk uprightly among their fellow men, and tread the narrow way that leadeth unto life.

Now let me adjure you, let me plead with you, let me ask you, by every influence that you hold to be good in this life, and the hope of the life to come, Pause, take cognizance of what the Master says, bring yourself into subjection to that call, take the step that may be necessary, and conform to his word that you may be saved; enter in at the straight gate, and have everlasting life.

Original Poetry.

Understood.

Would the Christians love their gold
And their hearts be hard as stone;
Would their looks be proud and cold
And their swords pierce to the bone,
If they understood?

If God's plan they understood,
Would they slay each other so;
Would they seek more than the good,
From their lips would poison flow,
If they understood?

O, the cross now hid in gloom,
May it shine like glist'ning snow;
May the One who left the tomb
Come with those who truly know
And have understood.

Restoration.

Our God has wrought in latter days
Such marvels, long foretold
By holy men inspired of him
His wisdom to unfold.

CHORUS.

Then Saints arise and praise the Lord,
Let joyful anthems ring,
Such wondrous works our God has done,
How can we fail to sing.

The glorious gospel is restored
In every point complete,
With gifts and blessings that no power
Of darkness can defeat.

Out of the earth the truth has sprung,
And righteousness looks down,
The former and the latter rains
Make Canaan's fruit abound.

The Jews are now being gathered
To their own loved Palestine;
Soon the Savior on Mount Olivet,
In splendor will be seen.

And the cry, "Go forth and meet him,"
By all nations will be heard;
Lo, the Bridegroom comes, prepare ye
For the great day of the Lord.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Dear Home Column: George Fox said that one live Christian could shake the country for ten miles around. This being the test, I feel I should come far short. But I wish that every move I make was something to advance the cause. It is God's work, and nothing can equal it. It calls for all our energies, talents, and time, if we work with our might. Our lives are too short to waste our time and means on the frivolous things of life. We are not to live butterfly lives. Let the world do as they may. We are told to come out from the world and be separate, the Spirit of Christ is not there. Let us all work together for the cause.

RUTH A. BURLINGAME.

Dear Home Column: I have been reading to-day the many nice pieces the HERALD contains from brothers and sisters, and I think what a comfort it is to us to be able to exchange our ideas. In this way we form acquaintance, learn to love one another, feel interested in each other's welfare, and remember them in our prayers. We all have our trials and need each other's prayers, and it helps us to realize we are all one family, brings us to a better understanding of the work, and prompts us to try to live right. No home is complete without the HERALD. There is no better way to improve our spare moments than in reading or writing for the advancement of God's work; just a few lines to some distant friend may some time bear fruit, although it may not be looked upon with favor at first. It requires patience on our part. We may sometimes feel we have not been able to do any good in the world, when the very things we most desire have been withheld, but God's ways are not our ways, and he knows best. We often say, Lord, increase our faith, for it is said if we have faith like a grain of mustard seed we can remove mountains. And surely it does sometimes seem we must have even as much as that to be able to call upon him at all. But the mysteries of godliness are past finding out, except it pleases God to unfold them to us.

Oh, how insignificant we are! How we realize it when we witness a display of his power in a heavy thunder-storm, the rising and swelling of the tide, the grand and lofty mountains, and the many things the seasons bring; we are led to exclaim, How grand, how wonderful are the works of God, all for the benefit and comfort of mankind! These things ought to bring a spirit of worship; but, alas for poor, fallen humanity, created just a little lower than the angels, and yet so rebellious! The only creature that sins against him! Sad, sad case!

I often wonder what there is in life to live for outside of this plan of salvation! and yet how unworthy I am, and of how little use! Oh, how can we help calling upon the name of the Lord when we realize it.

RUTH A. BURLINGAME.

GLASGOW, Scotland, October 12.

Dear Home Column: I have thought for a long time that I would like to write a few of my thoughts, though it seems a difficult matter; but while reading the letters in the dear HERALD to-night I thought we can all add our mite, so now I will try. It may help to cheer some one as the letters from the sisters have helped me. I often think, although we do not know each other personally we have all the same love and interest at heart, and the same story to tell of God's great mercy and goodness toward us. While I write this I feel that our heavenly Father has been especially good to me, one of the weakest of his handmaidens.

A little over a week ago I was taken very ill, and grew much worse towards midnight. I said to my husband, I would like to be administered to, and oh how thankful we as Saints should be that God has set such an ordinance in his Church; that when there are sick ones among us, we can call for the elders of the Church and let them pray over us, anointing with oil in the name of the Lord, and the promise is, that the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise them up. So he administered to me, and I felt from then that God would answer our prayers, and I am grateful to say that before morning I was relieved of the intense pain. To God be all the praise.

I often wish I could do more to help the great work along, but I am so backward. I feel many times, if I could do something that would lead one dear soul to see the precious truths, I should have accomplished a little. We have been made glad and encouraged in this latter-day work, by the recent visit of Presidents Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans, and only regret that their stay was so short; but we believe much lasting good was done while they were in Scotland.

We were extremely sorry to hear of the illness of Sr. Plunket, of Philadelphia, late of Glasgow. We have often wondered about her, for we knew she was sick when we saw her set sail in July for America; but I can assure her that the Glasgow Saints have remembered her in their prayers and trust that our heavenly Father will abundantly bless her and restore her to health and strength, that she may be able to perform the duties that devolve upon her as wife and mother. We as mothers know how hard it is, when we are not able to do for our little ones that which is necessary; and when we are sick, they seem to need a mother's attention more, or I always think so. Although I have only one little boy I often look at him and feel very thankful that God has so blessed me that I have been able to be with him in his young years, for I believe that if we will only bring them up in the fear of the Lord they will not easily forget their early training in later years. I therefore pray that God will give me wisdom and strength that I may be able to bring up my child in such a way that he will be a shining light in God's dear kingdom.

Dear sisters, let us with determined hearts and unwavering minds grasp every opportunity for our improvement that we can also say,

"I want a true regard,
A single, steady aim,
Unmoved by threat'ning or reward,
To thee and thy great name."

May God continue his gracious care and guidance, to all his dear children for their several duties is, the prayer of your sister,

ETHEL ARBER.

Dear Mamma, please tell me why people deceive
Their own little children and make them believe
That a real "Santa Claus" comes with a bag full of toys
To fill all the stockings for girls and for boys.

I am sure I don't want him to ever come here
If he smokes an old pipe and drinks lager-beer;
And 'tis sinful and foolish to tell them such lies,
That he comes down a chimney one quarter his size.

And I would far rather that papa and you Should give me my presents, be they many or few;
For it gladdens my heart and fills me with joy
To know you are thinking of your dear little boy.

Little Florence and Mamie were showing their things,—
They had dolls, games, and ribbons, and two pretty rings,—
I asked them who gave them, and they exclaimed with delight,
"Why Santa Taus put them in our stottins last night."

I told them that "Santa" and his reindeers so fleet,
And his beautiful sleigh were all a great cheat,
Then Mamie in anger said, "Do you suppose We'll believe your naughty stories, I dess our Mama knows."

Last Sunday our teacher had a talk with us boys
About Ananias and Saphira and their wicked lies.
She said it was sinful and there was no defense
For telling a falsehood under any pretence.

So parents remember that your words and your deeds
To the "Tots" are like laws of the Persians and Medes;
When they're old they'll look back to the days of their youth
And bless you for teaching sweet lessons of truth.

What Shall Our Harvest Be.

I believe it to be the duty of every woman in domestic life to cultivate a greater intelligence in the government of home in order that she may become a prudent guide, an economical manager, and have a knowledge of the laws of nature, without which she can not preserve the health and happiness of her family. Besides, how can she give to the world intelligent men and women, if she is not herself possessed of a well-filled mind? For as the character of her mind, so will it be brought forth again in her children, and the influence we exercise with them will show. If good the reflection will be good. We can form good habits only through regular work. We can develop our faculties only through exercising them honestly and systematically. A good way to improve the world is to improve ourselves, to remember that our characters are what win. We should not be afraid to study or work if we want to progress and develop a good character. What we think effects our character, as well as what we do, so we should entertain noble thoughts as well as practice noble deeds, and always try to remember the counsel of our kind and loving Savior. We find a good promise in Proverbs 21: 21: "He that followeth after righteousness and mercy, findeth life, righteousness, and honor." All good is eternally reproductive; the more good we have in us the more good we can do. That which we are, we shall teach not only voluntarily, but involuntarily, for from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. So it is profitable to us as well as others that we keep our hearts full of good thoughts; and that will help us to build a good character. What we sow we reap, so we ought to throw out our influence for good, that our harvest may be good. We as a people desire to purify and ennoble human life. Every period of life has its peculiar temptations and dangers, but youth is the time when we are most likely to be ensnared. It is the spring season of disposition and habit. It is during this season, more than any other, that the character assumes its permanent shape and color. We must consider temperance as one of the great virtues to help us in forming a good character. Prayer is also a key to help us largely in this building. A good character is in all cases the fruit of personal exertion. It is not inherited from parents; it is not created by external advantages; it is no appendage of birth, wealth, talents, or station;

but it is the result of one's own endeavors or victory. May we so exert ourselves for truth and righteousness that we may become strong in the Lord and have a perfect character, for the getting of a good character is worth more than riches and will assure to us a good harvest.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, October 30.

Editors Herald: At last writing we were in the midst of the reunion at Provo, which was interesting and inspiring all the way through. Another was provided for 1904, to be held at Salt Lake City. The visitors from Lamoni, Srs. J. H. Stanley, Alice France, Margaret and Ruby Baguley added interest to the meeting. We knew young Sr. Ruby was a product of the Lamoni high school, Religio, and Sunday-school training, so we had confidence to put her to the front with a favorite, Sr. Lizzie Smith. Lamoni was nicely represented. Go on with the training business and send out some more representatives.

The district conference was held immediately after the close of the reunion; an excellent feeling prevailed, and the business was transacted in a satisfactory manner. T. Thorsen was chosen president of the district and Sr. Maggie McLane continued secretary. The preaching was good, and the devotional exercises and spiritual experiences the most encouraging that I have observed in Utah.

After the reunion, in company with Sr. Proctor, of Ogden, and her two young daughters, Hazel and Vera, I returned to Salt Lake City for a few days, and with Bro. S. Swenson aided the meetings at the chapel the Sunday following. Swen is very companionable and has many friends.

September 11 I started to attend the district conference to be held at Hagerman, Idaho, beginning the 12th instant, and arrived at Bliss next morning at two o'clock, the train five hours behind scheduled time; sat in the depot until daylight. Mr. Pickering, the agent, gave me breakfast, as there was no hotel or restaurant in the place. Bliss is a small station away out on an elevated desert table-land, overgrown with sagebrush. The soil is rich and very productive when water can be gotten to it. After breakfast Mr. Pickering, the older, and hackman conveyed me to Hagerman, distance fourteen miles, arriving in time for the conference. Here were congregated of the ministry, Brn. John and S. D. Condit, A. J. Layland, J. E. Vanderwood, and Will S. Pender, not to mention Srs. Pender and Condit, who are about as effective in their line of work as the eldership. These, together with a number of the local brethren, were assembled for the conference.

Hagerman is a small inland town situated also in the arid lands of Idaho, but there being a plentiful supply of water for irrigating purposes, farming is carried on extensively. Wheat, oats, barley, and most every variety of vegetables common to a northern climate, apples, peaches, pears, plums, apricots, and varieties of berries and melons grow in abundance. Those who have been living there for some time seem to be doing well.

The business of the conference was transacted satisfactorily to all. The meetings were well attended and appeared to have excellent effect with the audience. Everything went well. Three were baptized. My home while here was mainly at Bro. E. E. Sherman's, from Western Iowa, but shared also the hospitality of the Saints and friends of the neighborhood, who possess typical Western generosity. There is good about Hagerman.

In company with Bro. and Sr. Pender, Sr. Addie Condit, and Bro. Layland the writer made two trips out to the fruit farm of Bro. George Conyers, four miles distant. The apple, peach, and plum-trees were literally loaded with fruit, and vegetables to match. After much toil and waiting Bro. George has a fine prospect for a cozy and valuable little home. We enjoyed the visit with the family. In the river near by, I caught a mountain trout, my first luck.

Thursday, the 17th, Bro. Sherman carried me to Bliss by private conveyance, stopping on the way at his son's for dinner, where we had a pleasant visit with his son and daughter-in-law. Bro. S. D. Condit met me at the station and we took the evening train, he for Weiser and I for Sagle via Spokane, Washington. At Weiser Bro. Condit left the train, and I was left alone for a long ride. Arrived in Spokane on Saturday. Called on Mrs. Hubble, daughter of Sr. Proctor of Ogden, Utah, and learned the location of the Saints' chapel. Sunday morning I went to meeting not expecting to see any one whom I had ever seen before, but the first person seen was Bro. G. T. Griffiths, the Brn. David Powell and Frank J. Chatburn, and Bro. and Sr. Ferguson of Lamoni, Iowa, and not least Sr. Almeda Emly Kennedy, whom I assisted to confirm after baptism in Minnesota twenty-seven years ago. So I was at home again. How Saints do scatter about! It was a treat to meet these and others of the Saints at Spokane, especially Sr. Kennedy, as it was at her father's that I made my home at times in Minnesota, years ago, when she was a young girl. So unexpectedly my visit to Spokane proved to be a kind of reunion, a home provided at Sr. Kennedy's and open doors at others of the Saints. Bro. Kennedy is not a member of the Church, but is an excellent man, so we call him brother. He only needs to take another step, join the Saints and be happy. He is reading. Bro. Griffiths and associates have been holding a series of meetings. I joined them and aided the services as best I could during my stay; in the meantime visited the homes of Brn. Ferguson, Smith, Belle, Hooper, Srs. Jewell and Hubble, with others. Sr. Hooper was of special interest, as her father was killed at Howe's Mill, Missouri, during the persecution of the Saints. She is strong in the faith. I met also Bro. Barr, who appeared quite in earnest. By the counsel of Bro. Griffiths some troubles standing in the way of the progress there were settled, and it is hoped permanently.

The 23d Brn. Powell and Belle accompanied me to the depot and I took the morning train for Sagle, Idaho, distance about five miles, Bro. Belle using his influence with the officials to stop the train and let me off at the station, which they did. This train was scheduled to pass without stopping. In due time I was at Sagle, a little wood station, with a post-office located out in the wilderness of pines and red cedar timber. I started on the wagon road through the timber to go three miles to Bro. Turnbull's, but missed the direct way and made it four, arriving there in the afternoon. Sr. Turnbull received me very cordially, and I was pleased to find a friend. Sr. Turnbull is one of that kind of women the Bible speaks of who build their own house, and is entitled to a standing with the elect. Bro. Turnbull soon came home from Sagle, also, and brought my valises. Bro. Turnbull is not a member of the Church, but he believes so much of the faith, and possesses so much of real manhood that we call him brother. I soon learned that two of their sons are attending school at Graceland College, Iowa. Their home seems to be one for every one who comes along, and I was no exception. There is nothing small about folks hereabouts. It was arranged to commence meetings two miles away, the next evening. In due time we were at the place to find an interesting audience present. Bro. Turnbull brought a load with him in what he called his new buggy, but which was a new lumber wagon with high box. Six meetings were held, the friends present taking charge of the singing. Everything went well until the influenza, epizootic, or some other foreign foe struck me so hard that it almost disabled me. It was a relief to learn that all newcomers there have to pass a similar ordeal. For short they call it grip. I was just getting over something akin to it. I managed to pull through the services, which seemed to be enjoyed by those present.

Sunday, the 27th, I baptized Sr. Lillie Whorton Osborn, a promising young married woman of the neighborhood, who will, if faithful, be helpful to the cause there. Monday following, Bro. Turnbull brought me with team to Sagle and I took the afternoon freight train to return to Spokane. It was a slow ride, the train seemingly stopping at every woodpile on the way. At midnight the train pulled into Spokane. On the way some men got on the train who were engaged in the lumber business, bringing their black bottles with them, filled with the "stuff." They frequently took a drink and invited all present to join in with them. I jokingly remarked to them, "We will have to send for Carrie Nation to come up here and regulate you fellows." They answered, "All right, we have a hatchet here now," pointing to an ax without a handle. I began to talk along lines of man's agency, opportunities, and responsibilities in life, and they all listened with close attention. One of them stepped up and handed me a dollar, saying, "Take this. I was not always as you see me now. I had a wife back in Michigan, and I love her yet. We had trouble and I just came away and left her, took to drink to drown trouble. Another man would have done something else, but I done this. I believe in doing good and I help in many ways, and hope that the good things that I do will make it better for me when I have to account. I love my wife yet; she was about so high [measuring with his hand from the floor of the car]. Sometimes I think I will go back. She destroyed my happiness and here I am," etc. Another one, for whom nature had done much as shown in his appearance and general make-up, spoke up and said: "I was not brought up this way either. I belonged to the Methodist Church until I was fifteen years old, and if I was not drinking I would like to talk with you. There are a great many things in the world to lead people wrong. A great many bad places, but the worst place in the whole business to lead young people astray and cause their downfall is the public ballroom. That is the worst." And with an oath he added: "I know what I am talking about; I have been in all of them. There are more downfalls and ruin come to young people from that than all the rest." This harmonizes with the statement of a young lady in Salt Lake City, in regard to the dancing-hall out at Salt Air. She said: "It isn't a place fit for decent folks to go. My mother won't let me go there." Yet she is a "Mormon" girl, born in polygamy, but bright and sensible. Yet many are wild over the Salt Air playhouse.

The men alluded to above were good men at heart, but from various causes had gone wrong; so while listening to right lines of thought and life they woke up, though under the influence of intoxicants, and began to think of their mistakes.

Next day I visited at Spokane, met with Brn. Powell and Chatburn again, attended the evening prayer-meeting, and at eleven in the evening took train for Salt Lake City, via Portland and San Francisco.

Spokane in many respects is one of the nicest and most attractive cities I have seen, either East or West. I have heard and read much of the delightful climate and scenery of Oregon and California, so concluded to return that way, thinking that maybe the Sagle grip would let go by the time I arrived at point of destination. Saturday morning, October 3, I arrived in San Francisco, and went to the home of Bro. Charles J. Kaighin, to find him sick and under the doctor's care, though up and walking about the room at times. Sunday morning, I had a short visit with him and he directed me how to find the hall in which the Saints held their meetings. I went to the hall, and was soon recognized and by invitation of the president, Bro. Parkin, preached to an attentive audience, mostly Saints, though still contending with the grip. Assisted in the sacrament and prayer service in which an active interest was shown. This was my first appearance before a California audience, but Saints are Saints wherever found. Some prominent ones assisted in the services, whose names are not recalled. An unexpected friend appeared, however, in the person of Sr. Ella

Miller, of Coldwater, Michigan. Her name is now Lawton. It was a pleasure to meet her again after so many years, and I soon found another home. Her husband does not belong to the Church but is so sensible that one would not know the difference if not told. We three went to Oakland in the evening, Bro. Lawton paying expenses, and I preached in the church there, Bro. Cockerton in charge. Bro. Joseph and Sr. May Ferris were in charge of the Religio work, in which there appeared to be quite an interest. Here, also, along with other Saints, I met Bro. George Pope, one time resident of Coldwater, Michigan, at whose home I had received many kindnesses, many years ago. It was a pleasure to meet him again. Bro. Pope is nearing the seventieth mile-post and is well preserved.

After meeting we returned to the city. Monday morning Bro. Kaighin appeared worse, so I thought, as did Sr. Kaighin, but the doctor said he was better. Notwithstanding there was a feverish anxiety moving all present, which continued until Thursday in the afternoon, when Bro. Kaighin yielded to what seemed to be the inevitable from the first, for neither the skill of the physicians nor prayers of the Saints availed. Thus passed away a most excellent character—an ideal home invaded. Only words of commendation were heard of Bro. Kaighin from his neighbors. So the good has gone on before. The funeral services took place at the family residence the following Sunday, Brn. Parkin and Terry in charge. Bro. Parkin delivered a very appropriate address, with well chosen words. The casket was removed to the vault at Laurel Hill Cemetery.

Sunday morning I preached again at the hall in the city, and at Oakland in the evening, remaining over night at the latter place with Bro. Cockerton. Young Sr. Cockerton was very helpful to me by her suggestions and remedies applied to counteract the grip, as she is a registered and skillful nurse. Thanks. It was a pleasure to meet her mother, also, the wife of Bro. Jairus Putney, whom I knew when in the teens.

Monday morning, the 12th, I returned to the city, and at ten o'clock met Srs. Kaighin and Gladdys, with their near relatives and friends at the grave in Laurel Hill, and made a short prayer at the interment of the mortal remains of Bro. Kaighin to its final earthly resting-place. Both Sr. Kaighin and daughter Gladdys bore their trial bravely, but keenly felt their loss. Their many friends and sympathisers extend to them every sympathy.

In the afternoon Bro. J. C. Foss called on us, and on Tuesday, after breakfasting with Sr. Pearl Hellevig, we visited together the Presidio where the soldiers are quartered, viewed the forts, big guns, heard the bugle blow, and saw the soldiers go on guard mount again, listened to the music of what is said to be one of the finest bands in the army. This called to mind our youthful days when we were both soldiers in the army, and we felt glad that we still lived under the Stars and Stripes and had helped to keep it waving unrent in heaven, one and for ever. We spent the day together about the city, and stayed over night with Bro. J. A. Anthony where we received a welcome.

The 15th, I called on Sr. T. W. Smith, at Bro. E. R. Williams', 1240 Ashley Avenue, Berkeley, California, where she makes her home. Sr. Smith was in her usual health. Returned to the city at evening, took supper at Bro. Parkin's and attended the evening prayer service, which was good. Bro. Foss and I stayed over night at Sr. Kaighin's, and the next morning, the 16th, I started for Salt Lake City, Bro. Foss accompanying me to the ticket office. San Francisco is a great city. The rush of travel between, Berkeley, Oakland, and that city reminds one of the travel between New York City, Brooklyn, and Jersey City. The weather was beautiful during my stay, but there has been so much said and written of the attractions of California, that it need not occupy my pen, on so short an acquaintance. Will just say it is immense.

Saturday, the 17th, at half past nine in the evening I reached Salt Lake City, procured mail at the office, and went to Bro. E.

Barrows and stayed over night. Found Bro. and Sr. Barrows well, and received a welcome.

Sunday following I preached morning and evening in the chapel, aided by Bro. A. M. Chase, and listened to Elder Grant of the Utah Church deliver a cleverly worded discourse in the Tabernacle, at two o'clock in the afternoon. According to Elder Grant, there is nothing but sweetness about the Mormons of Utah. All talk and criticism to the contrary is naught but rank prejudice and persecution for righteousness' sake. But while he was going on with his fine talk and eulogies we could not help thinking of their past record, polygamy, Adam-god belief, blood atonment, intolerance, Mountain Meadow, Danites, etc.

At half past four in the afternoon I assisted Bro. Chase in his street-meeting, quite a number being present, and a good many tracts were distributed. Bro. Chase is a success on the street. Is doing well here and a good report comes from Brn. Swenson and Hansen at the south; also, through Bro. Gomer Reese from Brn. Allen and Stead in Montana.

COLUMBUS, Nebraska, November 3.

Editors Herald: On October 5 I left home in Omaha for Stromsburg, Nebraska, and stayed two weeks and preached nine sermons in a new opening where none of our elders had ever been; and while there were no additions to the Church, yet I left some interested in the work and I think good can be done there in the future. I then went to Grand Island, Nebraska, and held six services in the church at the Soldiers' Home, and baptized one of the comrades of the Home, Bro. James Murie, and then received a telegram asking me to go forthwith to Columbus, Nebraska, on account of sickness of Mr. Morgan Watkins, who was desirous of being healed to an extent that he might be baptized before he died. I administered to him twice, and he seemed much better.

On October 27 I was called to Norfolk, Nebraska, to preach the funeral sermon of Mrs. Mary A. Worley, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Hyrum Strong. She was buried on October 28. On October 29 I was permitted to baptize five at Norfolk, and on the 30th returned to Columbus to be with Mr. Watkins; but the Lord saw fit to call him from this life on the 31st, and on November 22 we laid him to rest in the Columbus Cemetery. I preached the funeral sermon at the house to a large audience of the friends of the deceased. He leaves a widow and three daughters to mourn his loss, all of whom are members of the kingdom.

JAMES HUFF.

HARRIS STATION, Ohio, November 7.

Editors Herald: I came to this place the 27th ult. on my way to Scioto County to join Bro. Beatty. Not knowing just where he was at the time, I dropped off here to see a cousin whom I had not seen for about five years, and felt impressed to preach. I secured the use of an old schoolhouse owned by private parties, and went to work. I went to the "Christian Union" chapel two miles distant on Sunday evening and announced my meeting for Monday evening. One preacher (there being three present), asked me what I was going to preach. I told him the gospel. Then he wanted to know what I was, and I told him a Latter Day Saint, when he wanted to know what that meant, and I told him, "Christianity in the highest sense." He gave me a sneering laugh and told his brethren that I was an "old Latter Day Saint," and was only there to "tear down." But curiosity got the better of them, and the next evening they turned out en masse. I spoke on the "Law of life," with fine liberty, and they were so surprised that their "class leader" invited me to preach for them on Thursday evening. But I learned that he was sorry he had done so, as gospel baptism didn't settle well on their theological stomach.

Well, I preached for them on "Mission of Christ," and it was denounced as "false doctrine," "damnable doctrine," and I a "false teacher". They prayed that I might get the kingdom of God set up in "heart" and be saved from such darkness. For a time, I felt about like Jeremiah's "speckled bird" (12:9). After they were through "praying" they came up and shook hands with me and said, "God bless you, brother." Then I felt better.

Yesterday morning I secured the use of the Baptist church building, now owned by a Mr. Ray, and will begin meeting Monday evening. This is right close to the other chapel, and some have set up the cry of "delusion," "Mormons," etc. But in spite of all this, there are a number of good people believing, and one lady who is very much interested said it was "cutting them right and left."

I never had better order and closer attention than I have here, and have been wonderfully blessed of God. The enemy is aroused and we are expecting a struggle. I have been warned, and will be on my guard.

I pray for the success of the truth everywhere.

ELMER E. LONG.

MONMOUTH, Iowa, November 6.

Editors Herald: I am to-day rejoicing in the great work and trying to do what I can to advance it. I have labored with Warren E. Turner in the Eastern Iowa District this year, and our association has been very pleasant. We just closed a series of five weeks of tent-meetings at Fulton, assisted by Marcus H. Cook, of Clinton. Fifteen were baptized, and many more near the kingdom. I moved the tent to Emaline and am continuing a few days; but it is getting a little cool for tent-meetings. This is a new place for our work, and I am staying with outsiders, but hope to convince them of the angel's message before I leave. Some of the people imagine vain things, and Satan tries to hedge up our way; but we will not stop because of such small obstruction.

I expect to assist Bro. Cook, in Clinton, in the near future, with a series of meetings.

Altogether we feel to press on and finally sing with the redeemed, "Jehovah has triumphed and Israel is free." We have more work here than ten men can do, so we feel to pray the Lord to send us more laborers. Who will be the first to volunteer and say, Here, Lord, am I; send me? Would to God the young would all prepare themselves to enter the field and assist in the final scene in the triumph of Zion's cause!

I ever pray for the success of gospel work.

OSCAR CASE.

LAMONI, Iowa, November 6.

Editors Herald: In justice to those with whom I am associated to labor, and to the Saints in the district where I was appointed to labor, I desire to make known my whereabouts and intentions. In the latter part of September it became necessary for me to go home, accompanied by my wife, who had been absent from home for six months, for the reason that she was yet unable to be alone after a prolonged siege of sickness for the space of nearly a year and a half. During the six summer months she was kindly cared for at the home of Bro. and Sr. C. R. Johnson, of Des Moines, and everything that could be done for her was done to make her stay a pleasant one. Thanks to Bro. and Sr. Johnson and all the kind Saints in Des Moines and elsewhere who so kindly ministered to her in her affliction, and to the dear Saints and friends of Lamoni, who so abundantly cared for her while yet almost helpless. Now she is sufficiently well again to attend to household duties, and after a prolonged stay at home in straightening things up a little and making some improvements necessary to be made. I am now again ready to enter the field, ready for the conflict.

Just a word or two in behalf of our little Danish paper, Sandhedens Banner; and this would be most applicable to the Scandinavian Saints and friends. It is a paper worthy of your support. If you do not wish to subscribe for it yourself, assist it with your means while it is yet in its infancy, that it may be sent to others, and in years to come when it can assume a more independent position than it does now, many a soul will bless you and bless it for the good news it brings. If the HERALD or Ensign were to drop out of existence now, what a cry there would be from thousands who now enjoy their weekly visits. Would it not be likewise with the Banner, when in years yet unborn the Saints in Scandinavia will look for the weekly visit of the Banner as much as we now look for the HERALD or Ensign? But it is yet a child and needs support. Please do not forget that.

Possibly some of its contents would be of interest for your readers to know. Since its reestablishment one year ago, it has had a continued sketch of "Important and interesting incidents in the history of the church." Very interesting indeed. Another continued article entitled, "Jesus our Savior," very instructive and necessary for all to understand. With now and then encouraging letters both from this side and that side of the great waters, showing the progress of the work amid existing opposition and foes from without. To show that the editor-in-chief is not asleep nor careless nor forgetful as to conditions in the West, for years his mission field, I have made a translation from the Banner of October 15, which reads translated as follows:

"HAS POLYGAMY CEASED?"

"In reference thereto one of the Mormon papers, the Kanab Clipper, says as quoted from the Utah Correspondent, another Mormon paper, as follows:

"There are found those since the interdiction was made [to stop polygamy.—Ed.] who have taken to themselves polygamous wives. Some would try to keep secret every argument by denying it; but a denial has not much weight as a counterpart to knowledge. That those marriages can not be proven by the courts, has nothing to do so far as their existence is concerned.

"While the Church as a body can not be held responsible for those marriages, so far as they are not performed in the house of God, yet the Church has no right to say to its members that such things do not concern them. If the Church can not make an end to such marriages, then the public will have a right to condemn them as absurd liars, for God and the Church. The people of God have a right to know how far the Church sanctions such marriages. If it does not, then it has no right to demand of the people to sanction such marriages by keeping silent. If that is "to steady the ark" so let it be! Many of the members of the Church suppose that the Manifesto [concerning the abolishment of Polygamy.—Ed.] ought to be closely adhered to or abolished.

"Missionaries sent out by the Church tell the people that polygamy is no more practiced by the Mormons, but that it is a thing of the past; but when they return home, they find that they have been mistaken in what they have told and wonder how it is. The most faithful members of the Church wonder how it is, but they are satisfied to silently await the answer on this important question. Perhaps it is best to keep silent.

"Does the Church uphold the Manifesto or not? Some of the members of the Church have said that the Manifesto was only a bait thrown out to the nations in order to secure to Utah the right of statehood. Would to God that they were mistaken. . . . Perhaps the Church will explain that it can not keep its promise given in 1890, because the doctrine of polygamy makes it impossible to punish those who violate their promise. Anything would do rather than to be obliged to say that the Manifesto was only a deception.

"Would that the Church would solve these questions in one, to all reasonable minded men, satisfactory way, for it is evident that it will not do for the Church to set forth the Manifesto as its shield at the same time its members are obeying the revelation on polygamy."

The above is clear and pointed and needs no interpretation as to its meaning. An institution established on a lie must be fostered and perpetuated on lies and it makes one think of a class of people of whom the old Prophet Isaiah wrote, saying: "We have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves." If the condition as above described by one of their own members be true, then what conclusion can we reasonably arrive at, but that they had hid their polygamous propensities behind the Manifesto while they secured statehood? It is to be hoped that the honest in heart will some day shake off the shackles which now bind them to an institution unworthy their affiliation and zeal, and be made to see the inconsistencies in a bolstered-up revelation that is in entire opposition to all that God has ever previously said or caused to be written by holy men on the marriage question, and in direct opposition to the laws of the most civilized countries. Instead of placing themselves in a harmonious position with the light set before us in ancient as well as modern revelation and with the great lights of the world in the law-making assemblies, they have chosen to retrograde rather than to advance, and have placed themselves out of harmony with God's precious commandments, out of harmony with the laws of civilized nations and in harmony with ancient customs and the customs of semibarbarous nations of the present day.

The Book of Mormon comes to us now in this generation as a revelation from God, in that we are told that he (God) led out Lehi and his family from under those conditions represented as abominable as mentioned in reference to David and Solomon, for the purpose of raising up a righteous people, by the taking of one wife only, and this the Lord says he would command his people to do for the purpose of raising up a righteous seed, otherwise they should pay heed to things written concerning David and Solomon. And now this people to whom this came as a revelation adopts the method of raising up seed in the way that the Lord called an abomination regardless of the revelation which says that "God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course one eternal round."—Doctrine and Covenants 3: 1, given July, 1828. Oh, consistency! Hoping and long-ingly and patiently waiting for the time when Zion shall be redeemed and her converts learn righteousness,

S. K. SORENSEN.

FULTON, Kentucky, October 13.

Editors Herald: This has been a trying year in some respects, especially in the way of finances, both with the missionary and his family. I would be glad, indeed, to see all the Saints learn their duty and then do it. I believe most of the Saints understand that it is their duty to pay tithing, but they have not learned that it is their duty to pay that first. Yet we are told that we should give the first fruits unto the Lord. But instead of most of us doing that, we use the first, and then if there is any left we spare a small portion to the storehouse of the Lord. I presume that is better than none at all; but would it not be much better to comply strictly with the law and give the first of our substance, that we can claim the promise of the Lord and also not retard his work? And as to free-will offerings which are handed to the missionary, I find by looking over the elders' reports of the past they are not what they should be. Look at the number of times the elder has to call on the Bishop or his agent for money to purchase clothing or for traveling expenses when it is the duty of the Saints where he labors to see that his expenses are met and that he goes as well fixed as they would want to themselves when traveling in a strange place. It is humiliating to an elder to go too roughly dressed, especially among strangers; and also to have to call on the Bishop for means. He knows that this is taking the means which should go to the families of the missionaries and to the poor of the Church. Yet he has to make the demand, and sometimes quite often, too, or fail to go where he is most needed. We all want to see this great work of God roll on; so let us be up and doing. Do not wait for the elder to parade his wants before us, or ask us for money, for if we do we are liable to just keep waiting, for there are not many of the elders who care to make a display of their wants before the people; neither do they want to take the money that is for the support of their families and buy clothing and pay traveling expenses; yet they have it to do at times. I find that free-will offerings have been hindered to some extent by some of the elders teaching the Saints to not give to the missionary, but to hand it to the Bishop or his agent. It is all right to hand to the Bishop or the agent the tithing and offerings for certain purposes, but not necessarily so for the missionary's expenses; for in so doing you force him to call on the Bishop or agent for means.

Well, lest some one should think I was in need of a little free silver to satisfy the man who recounts his worthies on Nahum's chariots, I will forbear on that line, hoping that the Saints will learn their duty and do it so there will be plenty in the storehouse of the Lord, and to spare.

I notice in the HERALD sometimes where one elder will give another one a back-handed lick because he did not do just what he thought he ought to do or preach just as he thought he ought to have preached. I call to mind a statement made recently by a brother in the HERALD who asked the question, "What is your mission, to preach the gospel, or to tell the difference between you and the Utah people?" He then goes on to say, "If it is to tell the differences between you and the Utah Church, tell me in your next letter where that commission is recorded." Now, after giving a few comments on those people returning if not hindered by the ministers of Christ, and how they could be hindered, he calls to mind a member of the Utah Church who was almost ready to come into the Reorganized Church, but a brother gave him a little raking and called him bad names and he became disheartened and would not investigate our claims any more, etc. I am not the man who was referred to, that hindered the Utah brother, therefore I can write what I have to say without any spirit of retaliation. To my mind that Utah man is just as near the Reorganization as he was before. While we preach on the first principles and the restoration, it is "katy did, and katy didn't" with them. But just so soon as you touch on that polygamus spirit, the devil is up in arms, and the ones who will get mad because the differences are shown, are not ready for the gospel; nor almost ready, either. Paul in writing to Timothy, said: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine," etc.—2 Timothy 3: 16. Now, is not the scripture given concerning the Latter Day apostasy just as profitable for doctrine as that concerning the former day apostasy? I think it is, and that we should present it unto the people so they can comprehend it, and in so doing we are preaching the gospel, "the glad tidings of great joy which is to be to all people." Therefore it must go to the Utah people, and the only way is to show them the departure and the reorganization. Do it in a gentlemanly manner, and with a brotherly spirit. Show them that you are friends and not enemies, and the honest in heart will not get angry, but will hear it gladly and accept it. Hence it will be glad tidings of great joy unto them, and the commission will be preached. As I understand the preaching of the gospel, the elder is to be directed by the Holy Spirit and not by the brother who is sitting by. My desire is that the honest ones of the Utah people may turn and be saved as well as the honest ones elsewhere; but I am no hand to compromise truth with error.

Your colaborer,

W. R. SMITH.

PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, November 2.

Dear Herald: I take pleasure in saying that since I wrote to you requesting the prayers of the Church on behalf of my companion, she has been blessed to a great extent and is able to go about her duty in the house. The doctor said that he did not expect her to be alive in the morning, but you see that man may say what he likes but God always fulfills his promise to them that faithfully seek him. Sometimes I think how ungrateful I am for all the blessings that God has bestowed upon me. I thank God that I have been brought to a knowledge of the truth, and my desire is to run the race with patience.

I was a member of the Campbellite Church; but when I heard the gospel preached on the streets of Glasgow by J. W. Rushton it did not take me long to understand it, and I went right to the man that taught me in the Campbellites, and after we had a long talk on the question he told me that he too was beginning to think that the Campbellite Church was all wrong. So I made up my mind and obeyed the gospel in its purity; and I have never regretted it, and hope to be faithful to the end.

Your brother,

3312 Market Street.

WILLIAM PLUNKETT.

HARTLY, Iowa, November 6.

Editors Herald: The fine weather we have been enjoying for the last few weeks is quite a contrast to the excessive wet spring and summer, and seems to be appreciated by most people. Farmers are very busy preparing for winter, the shortage in crops troubling them more than anything else, apparently. However, there are some exceptions to this as well as all other general rules, and we find some who are interested in the old story of Jesus and his love.

Since leaving home I have enjoyed a pleasant visit with Sr. Elizabeth Wallace and friends of near Rockwell City, Mr. and Sr. Donkin of Jolley, Manley and Frederick Hartshorn and families, where I preached two discourses in a schoolhouse near Manley's old home to a few Saints and friends, which was enjoyed by the writer. Leaving Marathon we called on Mr. and Sr. Charles Lincoln and family at Pickerel Lake and Sr. Henry Smith, the two last mentioned being daughters of Bro. Harris Cook and his most excellent wife, the latter having gone to her eternal reward some eight or nine years ago. The writer will remember the kindness of Sr. Cook and family as long as life shall last. Indeed nearly all the Saints are specially kind to the traveling minister; but when one visits the old home of those who have departed and misses their presence, it awakens thoughts that have lain dormant for a time owing to the change of fields and changing surroundings though all may be alike kind. May the departed enjoy the good things she and her family so often enjoyed singing about.

The writer was next welcomed at the home of Bro. and Sr. James O. Sheldon, near Melvin, Osceola County, where we secured the use of the Reformed church, and the first night had a few of the upper-crust out as hearers; but whether the preacher put too much do into the discourse, or whether it was from some other cause, the second night he had the pleasure of entertaining himself as preacher and audience, and he naturally reached the conclusion, whether correct or not, that a Lutheran town or neighborhood is not a very encouraging community in which to preach the restored gospel.

By the kindness of Bro. James we were brought on our way as far as this place, and are at this writing staying with his brother, Joseph O. Sheldon, near Hartly, where for two weeks the writer has been preaching the A B C's of our religion to attentive listeners while enjoying the hospitality of Bro. Sheldon and family, where we expect to remain over Sunday and perhaps longer to tell the good news of the gospel of God's dear Son.

How glad I am, in these days of heresy hunting, that I belong to a Church that puts the Bible into her ministers' hands and tells them to preach what they find therein, and let God be responsible for the results. It is so very cheering to know that the Christian liberty enjoyed in the body of Christ is so full and free that one may even venture to leave, in teaching and method, the old and long-used rut which is worn hub deep without being classed as a heretic, so long as he preaches nothing but the truth.

O, I am so glad that salvation is free!
For Jesus loves you, and Jesus loves me.

There are two sides to our work; the human and the divine. The divine is wise, true, and good, but the human is weak and needs much encouragement and help; and so far as possible it is the duty of the true disciple of Christ to help and encourage each and all. More "charity, which is the pure love of God shed abroad in the heart," and which "thinketh no evil," would, I believe, help the very best of us who help to form the human part of our work.

We need much more knowledge and wisdom and are commanded to teach each other that the highest possible condition may finally be reached, that the most and greatest good may accrue to all. But to succeed along these lines we need very much the light and power of the Holy Spirit, without which we must succeed but poorly. To receive this help we need to live near to God, and I think all will agree with the writer when he states that the closer one walks to God the more of his truth will be understood and the more of the divine power received and enjoyed.

May prosperity, health, and love be enjoyed by all is the prayer of your brother,
CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

BONESTEEL, South Dakota, November 8.

Editors Herald: Bro. Gamet and I have been traveling together recently over a portion of the Central Nebraska District, and find a lack of interest prevailing with some of the members. As I view it the needs of the work are pressing. We need fear no outside pressure, for the Lord has promised that no weapon formed should prosper; but it is the inside diversion that will prove disastrous, should disaster come. Let us all remember that the "work is entrusted to all."

ROMANAN WIGHT.

ADRIAN, Illinois, November 10.

Editors Herald: The Lord's work at this place is progressing with good prospect of harvest in due time. We are having a rather exceptional opportunity, inasmuch as the Spirit has so far softened the hearts of our Methodist friends in this place as to induce them to open their house to us. We are in the midst of our second week with them. Having been rescued from Methodism to the truth as it is found in the complete and only gospel ever authorized by God, I truly enjoy preaching to this people; whose feelings and beliefs I understand so well.

Bro. J. W. Peterson has the work in charge and testifies that in all his experience he never enjoyed a better hearing than had developed up to last Sunday evening. This being the beginning of my experience in the field as missionary, I wonder if I am not being unfitted for future discouragements.

We are endeavoring to present the restored gospel in plainness and without modification. Some seem to be offended when they find their Bible disagrees with them, but for this we are not responsible. We think possibly some have been attracted to our meetings by the practice of singing a solo each evening, and I find God has wonderfully strengthened my weak throat for this part of the work. However, we make no endeavor to cause sensation and depend upon the "preached word" for the sowing of seed; not even desiring that any one should ever say that converts were persuaded by song.

To all our friends and beloved brethren we extend best wishes.

Yours in bonds,
J. GUY MUNSELL.

PAWNEE CITY, Nebraska, October 30.

Editors Herald: I commenced a series of meetings here in Bro. Bond's neighborhood, one week ago last Tuesday evening, and the people have given me quite a fair hearing most of the time. There are quite a number of the old school Dunkards in the neighborhood, but they are not disposed to come and hear. They have a preacher or two living here, and from what I can learn these preachers would have the people believe that we are all polygamists, all of the same stripe. The Presbyterians seem more inclined toward the truth than any others here; but manifestly we have much prejudice to meet, and I do not feel that we will be able to accomplish much at present.

I have been much pleased to hear Bro. Bond so well spoken of by his neighbors. They like him as a man, but seem suspicious of his religion. I will go from here to Dawson, thence to Clay Center, Nebraska.

While meeting many discouragements, yet I feel strong in the Master's work.
J. R. SUTTON.

PRINCEVILLE, Illinois, October 20.

Editors Herald: The writer in connection with Bro. D. C. Smith has occasionally held services in the little church at Dahinda, Illinois, as opportunity offered and on the fourth of the present month three were baptized: Mrs. Carsica Hayes and Clarence Smith, children of Bro. D. C. Smith, and the youngest child of the writer. All are promising young Saints. Especial mention is made of Mrs. Hayes. She has a very bright and promising baby boy a year old who was taken seriously ill a few months ago, and was given up to die by the attending physician. Everything that loving care and tender nursing could do, was done for the little sufferer, but to no avail. Spasm after spasm followed in quick succession, and the little one was almost gone, when Bro. Smith, grandfather of the child, was called to administer in God's name to the little one. As soon as administration was over the little sufferer went quietly to sleep and did not have another spasm and continued to improve and has been well for several weeks. The next day after the little one was administered to the doctor came and expressed great surprise at finding the child alive, and expressed himself in this manner, saying he expected to find it dead or nearly so, and with astonishment declared the child so much improved that it was out of all danger and would get along all right, which proved to be true to the great joy of all.

Yours for truth,
J. H. HOPKINS.

On board the Columbia, November 9.

Saints' Herald: We left Glasgow at fifty-five minutes past nine o'clock in the morning on the 31st of October, taking the parting hand of Brn. Wilson, McPherson, and Hepburn, and Srs. Thorburn and Anderson, who had come to the station to bid us a long good-bye. Our genial colaborer, Elder G. W. Thorburn, accompanied us to Greenock by train, where we went aboard this steamer. I do not know how George felt, but he looked bad, and to be candid we felt worse. Since then, we have had quite a rough time of it. Sr. Arber, myself and our little Alec, have been more or less seasick, Alec proving the best sailor of the three.

This boat is considered a fine one, and is indeed in many respects, but she is not equal to the winter seas, as she has to be docked each fall, this being her last trip this year. It has been a very unfortunate voyage, as the westerly winds have been at their highest, thus tossing her about considerably, making nearly all aboard ungratefully pay tribute. We are now two days late, but expect to land at New York in the morning, being ten days in crossing. This is not a very good record for a fast steamer.

The first mishap we had was, one of the engines broke down the first day out. There has also been one death, an elderly lady who got a shock. We hear she will be buried at sea. There was also a gentleman, a saloon passenger, who had his leg broken, and a few others slightly injured while walking the decks during the worst time of the storm. One man had to be put in close confinement because of excessive drinking. We shall be happy to once more place our feet upon terra firma.

I made the acquaintance of a few very nice people, among them a Doctor McAlvin, of Grundy Center, Iowa, who has met some of our people and who speaks highly of them. I loaned him my Book of Mormon and Voice of Warning, which he said he would be glad to read. He appears to be a fair-minded gentleman. May God direct him to see the truth of the everlasting gospel. We feel very grateful to our heavenly Father for all his blessings. May we live worthy of his favor from day to day is ever the prayer of your brother.

In gospel bonds,

J. ARBER.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, November 12.

Editors Herald: We are greeted with large audiences here in the city to hear the word. The feeling in the regions round about is to hear more of the word. Bro. J. C. Crabb, passing through on his mission work, preached for us the evening of the 9th inst.—a word in due season. He seems bright and vigorous, cheerful in his labors, and is hopeful. Brn. M. M. Turpen and D. R. Chambers are moving the work at McPaul and adjacent points in Fremont County. Bro. Chambers had baptized some of late and others were favorable. He is not feeling so well. Will the Saints pray for him, as for all the ministry?

I am not so vigorous as for some months past but hope to be able to keep moving.

Was glad to grasp the hand of President Joseph Smith at Nebraska City not long since, and note his vigorous appearance after his mission of such activity to the isles of Great Britain.

I was out to Boomer Township, Pottawattamie County, on the 10th inst., and preached the funeral of Bro. Thomas Handlen; quite a concourse of people present, largely outsiders, or not of our faith.

Elder J. P. Carlile, president of the Pottawattamie District, attended the sacrament meeting, at the Bluffs, November 1, and gave encouragement to the Saints, emphasizing the doctrine of forgiveness more particularly, citing among other examples that of President Joseph Smith, who had a long time ago forgiven fully those who had deprived him of his father, when he was but a lad. To thus forgive is surely a manifestation of the divine in man begotten through the gospel. When it is thus possible to forgive one's enemies, who is that brother who will not forgive his brother, for offenses so much less in magnitude? Brother, speak up and tell us why. Those who took the life of the Seer never returned to acknowledge their heinous sin,—crime against Joseph,—your brother does and begs your pardon, also. Has the gospel of Christ wrought so in you? Even the most ultra opposer ought to confess that the gospel is with the Saints. It is the veriest of human weaknesses to offend; to confess and ask for the pardon craved is highly manly; but to forgive "all men," whether they confess their offenses and ask pardon or not, is humility to a great degree, indeed. But to forgive one's enemies impenitent is surely very close to the spirit that pervaded the garden of Gethsemane on the eve preceding the day of crucifixion. But, we must all be crucified with Christ, if we would reign with him (Romans, sixth chapter).

If only men would submit to the gospel's discipline in all its fullness, how soon would the life of Christ be manifest in them; his life once seen and felt here, would go far to remove the doubt of his verity from the minds of many, and what a mighty impetus would be given his work, in the salvation of souls,—how soon would Zion be redeemed! But alas! 'Tis not so; human nature dies hard, even if it be the Saint's most inveterate enemy. Man's lower nature is his worst enemy. When will we learn, and learning, when will we unitedly arise and conquer? Man's lower nature gives advantage and occasion to all his lesser enemies.

WELLSTON, Ohio, November 3.

Editors Herald: The dear old HERALD comes every week freighted with food which is good for the soul. I am never too tired or weary to read its precious pages, and never lay it down devoid of comfort. I do not see how the Saints can do without our Church papers. They miss a great deal when they do not take them. I have been trying to get subscribers for the HERALD, and have succeeded in getting three, one for HERALD, and two for Ensign. I promise the HERALD some more new names in the near future. The Saints are scattered in this locality, and it takes quite a while to canvass them all.

This is a noble cause and I love to see it spread because I know it is the truth. The truth is to make us free; and when we try to keep God's commandments, and do his holy will, we can indeed feel free. When I feel the most free is when I am trying to do something for the advancement of his cause and kingdom on earth.

I ever pray for Zion's victory.

JEANETTE WILLIAMS.

PIPESTONE, Minnesota, November 3.

Editors Herald: After leaving home the second week of October I have labored in Southwestern Minnesota, at Hills, Luvern, and Pipestone, and Winfred, South Dakota. I preached in Pipestone eleven sermons, and baptized a Mrs. Aldrich who had been investigating for some time. She had been somewhat injured in one of her limbs by stepping on a rusty nail, but the ailment was removed after baptism, and has felt nothing of it since that time. She stated to Sr. Henderson, of this place: "I never passed such a peaceful night in my life." She truly is one of God's earnest children. She also inquired of me what was her whole duty, tithing and all. I told her to the best of my understanding.

Several who never before have attended our meetings are attending now. Our attendance is not large, but a good interest seems to be manifest. Last week I was called to Winfred, South Dakota, where I found Bro. E. F. Robertson, my companion in missionary work, and on Sunday, the 1st, at four o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Edward Stone and Miss Maud Pulford. Also Mr. Charles W. Cronland and Miss Cora Stone were united in matrimony by the writer, at the house of Bro. and Sr. A. C. Stone. All these young people have attended our meetings, and seem to manifest an interest in the latter-day work. Trust it may increase until they may see the need of obeying the requirements of the law.

We look for Bro. F. A. Smith, minister in charge, in the near future. The Saints in these parts will be glad to see him and hear him speak. Weather is beautiful; Saints enjoying health and prosperity.

ELI HAYER.

INLAND, Michigan, November 7.

Editors Herald: Everything is not as we would like to see it; but as a whole the work is moving along and some additions to our branches. Nine have lately been baptized by John Schreur,—all heads of families but one. Several others are believing. One takes the HERALD and one lives to the law of tithing. There are some new openings around us, and I think some will come into the church in those places. Bro. J. J. Cornish was here a few days and set the ball rolling in one new place, and looking after the finance of the Church, as he says it is pretty low now. It being part of the law that saves us, why do we not observe it better and not rob God and have it come up against us at the judgment day? As one writer has it in the HERALD, the back door needs to be locked as well as the front one.

So I ask the Saints to remember me in their prayers that I may be able to come forth in the resurrection of the just.

G. W. ANNEYS.

CHRISTY, Missouri, November 5.

Dear Herald: I am on the frontier battling for gospel truth. What a grand mission! I feel the need of an entire consecration of self to the Master's cause. May God help us all to be more humble. At present I am preaching at the "Red Ranch." From here I go to Shiloh, then to Alton and Shannon Counties. From the latter place I will go to Jack Forks, a place noted for its wickedness. If a man is convicted of crime they give him the choice of taking ten years in the penitentiary or five years on Jack Forks. They usually take the penitentiary, so they say.

Some time ago my article on the Holy Ghost was criticised by a brother from Canada because I stated the Holy Ghost was not a person. Thanks for the criticism. My position was as follows: "The Holy Ghost is the influence emanating from the mind and will of God and Christ." Did not the Holy Ghost descend upon Christ in the form of a dove? Did it come in the form of a person on the day of Pentecost when it filled the whole house and appeared as fire upon their tongues and those present were all filled with the Holy Ghost?

The pronoun itself is also used in referring to the Holy Ghost (Romans 8: 16) as well as the personal pronoun himself.

Of course Nephi saw the Holy Spirit in the form of a man, but it can appear in different forms. Read Joel's prophecy in second chapter, twenty-eighth verse. The Spirit will be poured out upon all flesh. Why use the word pour if the Holy Ghost is a personality? Read also the seventeenth chapter of John and you can readily see this position is ably sustained. Many more proofs from Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants might be presented.

May God help us to be faithful and magnify his holy name.

A. M. BAKER.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. J. C. Clapp is at Bisbee, Arizona, on the line between Arizona and Mexico, preaching the word. He wrote of himself November 9: "Yes, Bro. Joseph, but few of our old class are left, excepting you and me; but my most solemn thought on this line is that there is so much to do and I shall be permitted to do so little, for I am now only waiting for the reaper. I am getting very feeble, and considering my many afflictions I have held on quite well, and am willing when the Master gives the summons. Yes, I can say, 'Speak, Lord, thy servant heareth.'"

Bro. P. Muceus, writing from Grimstad, Norway, to H. A. Stebbins under date of October 20, gives some interesting news of the work in that far-off field. He says: "I left home Friday morning for an extended tour along the west coast up toward Egersund, where our young Bro. Söjland has lately labored and where Bro. P. Anderson held some stirring meetings on the street this fall and thereby created a breakup among the [Utah] "Mormons," who had labored there and gathered a few converts. All their members except one have decided to leave them and I think they will accept the truth. Our summer work in Porsgrund has been good, I think, and will no doubt result in good. I have held meetings on the streets every Sunday and in houses during the week, and our outdoor meetings have been well attended and splendid interest manifested. Many have come full of prejudice and ill will, but have been compelled to change and to depart after meeting with a kindly feeling for us. The Lord has blessed me wonderfully in presenting his truth this summer and enabled me to make it so plain that enemies have been made to confess that our work is scriptural. My faith and confidence in the progress of the work in this land is stronger and firmer than ever before and I believe that, if we had the material to work with, as I hope we sometime shall have, this mission will be one of the best yet opened. But it will require time, labor, and money before great results can be expected. Money will be needed to print tracts, and we need good, wise, faithful workers, who will, in love and kindness, present the word, and who will labor onward faithfully and with patience, even if but little result is seen at first. I have baptized fourteen persons since my arrival in Norway, and others are about ready, besides many who are interested and may unite in time. For this I am very grateful, and it gives me courage to labor on among those who will listen. My experience in this land has greatly increased my faith in the work of God and his power, for he has in so many different ways blessed me in his service and shown that he is leading his work on to victory and glory. My desire is to prove faithful and true in the work intrusted to me, that in all my service I may prove a man of God, diligent in all my labors among those whom I may serve. Our little paper is progressing; a year has gone and we are a little ahead, but we need continued help in order to keep it up."

Bro. George E. McConley, whose son Myron, with George Harris, from Colorado, attended Graceland College, wrote Bishop Kelley: "I notice with pleasure the statement in last HERALD that the twenty-five thousand dollar College debt has been subscribed, and to show my appreciation of the noble efforts put forth by the brethren and others who have brought about this happy condition, I inclose five dollars to show that I rejoice with those upon whose shoulders has rested the heavy burden of raising this debt. May Graceland always prosper. I sent one son to Graceland College, who obtained a commercial course and now is chief clerk in the union depot in this place at seventy dollars per month—better than husking corn or sawing wood."

Miss Bertha M. McCulloch wrote: "Inclosed please find money order for five dollars to apply on Graceland College account. I appreciate the fact that the Lord has spoken regarding this debt, saying his people should pay it. Of course they should! If for no other reason than to keep the injunction, 'Owe no man,' for even though in the building of this College man's wisdom may not have been God's wisdom, yet, as a Church, the debt has been contracted and we should stand by her and see that her obligations are met, for I believe we should have a great care for the integrity of the Church."

Pastoral.

Dear Readers: By direction of the missionary in charge, Bro. G. T. Griffiths, I am to labor in this city and adjacent points for some weeks and to write as follows: We are making an earnest effort to permanently establish the work in this place. We ask that any one reading this who has relatives or friends—members or nonmembers—living in or near Portland, whom they think might be interested in our work, will write me immediately, giving name and address of such individuals, so that I can call on them and, if possible, interest them in our Church. Any information regarding their attitude to religious subjects, and to our work in particular, would enable me to do better service.

Your brother in Christ,

D. A. ANDERSON.

History Correction.

In the publication of the four volumes of Church History now before the public, errors have crept in unawares.

It is contemplated to publish as soon as practicable a list of these errors. This will be published on separate sheet, so it can be furnished to all having books, in form to be pasted in them.

Will all who have observed errors, especially in fact or date, please send them at once to the undersigned at Lamoni, Iowa, so that we may have the benefit of the research of others for consideration. We wish to make the correction as complete as possible, so as to avoid the necessity of future correction.

Respectfully,

HEMAN C. SMITH, Church Historian.

Work of Graceland College Patronesses.

The full report of the Bazaar held by the Patronesses shows the net receipts to have been $450. At a meeting of the Society on the 10th of November the following expenditures were ordered: $250 for equipment of the College Laboratory under the supervision of President E. R. Dewsnup; the sum of $100 to the Treasury of the College for running expenses; $95 for lights, wall-maps, program-clock, and song-books, under the supervision of the Executive Board of Patronesses, the chairman of the Board of Trustees, and the president of the College. We again thank all who so kindly assisted toward the Bazaar.

Call for Special Conferences.

To the Officers and Saints in Eastern Washington and North-western Corner of Idaho, Greeting: I herewith give notice that there will be a special conference at Spokane, Washington, with a view of organizing a district, Saturday and Sunday, December 26 and 27, and it is desired that as many as can do so be in attendance. I also give notice to the officers and members in Western Washington and British Columbia that a special conference will be held in Seattle, Washington, for the purpose of organizing a district, Saturday and Sunday, January 30 and 31, 1904. Let all Saints put forth a special effort to be in attendance.

G. T. GRIFFITHS,

Missionary in charge Northwestern Mission.

Mission address, Castlerock, Washington, Box 23.

Notice of Change of District.

To the Officers and Members in Oregon: As missionary in charge I hereby declare the Oregon District to be disorganized with a view to the organization of two districts because of the scattered conditions of the branches and the impracticability of their meeting together under present conditions. This is done by and with the consent of the proper officers and in compliance with the wishes of the Saints of said district,—no dissenting voice, as far as we can find out. And I hereby give notice that a special conference will convene at Bandon, Oregon, for the purpose of organizing a district, Saturday and Sunday, November 28 and 29, 1903. Also a special conference will be held in Portland, Oregon, Saturday and Sunday, December 5 and 6, for the purpose of organizing a district. All the Saints of Eastern and Central Oregon who can do so are expected to attend the Portland conference, and those of Southwestern Oregon are asked to attend the Bandon conference if they can conveniently do so.

G. T. GRIFFITHS,

Missionary in charge Northwestern Mission.

Mission address, Castlerock, Washington, Box 23.

Appointment of Missionary.

Bro. J. W. Gilbert, having returned to the States from the Society Islands Mission, will labor in the Northern California District, under the direction of Bro. R. J. Parker, who is in charge of said district. This arrangement is made upon the statement of Bro. Gilbert announcing his return, and upon consultation with Bro. Joseph Luff, missionary in charge. We trust this will be approved by Bro. Parker, whom we have not had time to consult with since the receipt of Bro. Gilbert's letter. Bro. Gilbert is instructed to report to Bro. Parker for labor and direction.

JOSEPH SMITH, For Presidency.

November 13, 1903.

Conference Notices.

The ninety-first (91) quarterly conference of the Northwestern Kansas District will be held in the "Baker" Schoolhouse near Osborne, Osborne County, Kansas, December 5 and 6, 1903, beginning at 10 a. m. We especially request an accurate report from each of the ministry, and also statistical reports from all branches. These reports with list of delegates and any business desired to come before the conference should be in my hands not later than November 28; this will assist the secretary in his work and enable all the work to come before the conference in its proper order. I am also authorized to announce the convening of the Sunday-school convention, December 4, 1903, at 10 a. m., in the building where conference meets. Come one and all, bring a generous degree of the good Spirit with you, and help to make this conference one long to be remembered. F. E. Taylor, secretary, Rydal, Republic County, Kansas.

Muhammad Barakatullah, a learned Muslim, presents in the November number of the North American Review "A Mohammedan View of the Macedonian Problem." According to the writer, the seeds of rebellion against Turkey have been sedulously sown in Macedonia during the last ten years, by a revolutionary committee which has its headquarters in Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria. The movement represented by this committee has the thorough sympathy of the Bulgarians, and the object sought in prolonging the struggle is to force Bulgaria to wage war against Turkey, and thus compel Europe to allow Bulgaria to have control over Macedonia. The stories of Turkish atrocities which reach western Europe from time to time must be regarded with suspicion. The revolutionary bands march through the country, burning Turkish and Greek villages, murdering men, women, and children, in the hope that the Turks may be goaded to vengeance; and when the Turks do inflict reprisal upon them, they send out harrowing accounts to the European press of Turkish barbarity to excite the sympathy of the Christian world. The European nations are banded against Turkey:

"There is no spot on the face of the earth where diplomacy, regardless of all ethical and religious obligations, plays such a fast and loose game as it does in Constantinople. Men of great knowledge and ability, who represent great Powers, do not hesitate to act without scruple, if they can achieve a diplomatic point. Each Embassy at Constantinople, with a heavy purse of secret-service money at its disposal, is a center of peculiar activities. These great diplomats of Europe, although each pulling the strings to his own country's advantage, are agreed on one thing, that whenever the Turkish government introduces a measure which is calculated to promote the welfare of the Empire, they must manage to stop it, whether by persuasion or by threat. In the old days of the Grand Turk, it was customary to ask for concessions as a favor from the Padishah; but now, when the Turk has become weak, those ancient stipulations have become as the laws of Medes and Persians that can never be altered. For example, the fiscal arrangements of Turkey require to be reorganized to help the trade and industries of the country; but Turkey can do nothing in that direction, because the European governments are opposed to any kind of alteration in her fiscal arrangements. The whole Continent of Europe has adopted protection, but Turkey is obliged to remain, practically, a free-trading country, and to keep an open door for the products of the whole world."

Some Recent Developments in Applied Science.

A new application of electricity, and one which is interesting from its very originality, is seen in a process for detecting and determining the dilution of wines with water. It is a well-known trick of the trade to add to certain wines as much water as they will stand; and the difficulty of proving the adulteration, with the cost of the necessary chemical analysis to determine the percentage of water which has been added, renders this trade deception a difficult matter for the authorities to handle. In a recent communication to the French Academy, M. Maneuvier describes a method of measuring the extent of adulteration by the electrical conductivity, or rather by the resistance. Experiments have shown that the resistance offered by a given wine in its natural state to the passage of an electric current is very nearly constant, while this resistance is very greatly increased by the addition of water. It is, therefore, only necessary to compare the electrical resistance of a suspected sample with one of known purity to determine the question at once. By comparing a number of specimens to which known percentages of water have been added, it is possible to construct a curve of resistances which will make possible an immediate quantitative determination of the amount of water which has been added.

From the testing of the purity of wines to the destruction of the germs of disease is somewhat of a leap in considering the work of the engineer; but it serves only to show the increasing scope of that work. The use of steam to sterilize infected clothing and materials has been tried repeatedly, and usually success has attended the attempts; but there are certain features about the use of steam for this purpose which until recently have been but imperfectly understood. Assuming, quite correctly, that the sterilizing effect of steam was due to the heat, it has been supposed that the greater heat carried by superheated steam would render it more effective for this purpose than saturated steam, such as is supplied by an ordinary steam boiler. Experience, however, has shown that the best results are attained when the steam is slightly moist, and that superheated steam, in spite of its higher temperature, is not so effective. The recent experiments made at the Government institute at Hamburg have shown that the saturated steam penetrates more thoroughly into the pores and interstices of the fabrics to be treated than is possible either with highly heated dry air or with superheated steam. It appears that the penetrating power of the steam is assisted by the partial condensation of the first portion which enters the interstices of the materials; this aiding in the removal of the entrapped air, and permitting the subsequent flow of steam to come into intimate contact with every portion of the infected articles. It has been fully demonstrated that such articles as bedding, blankets, heavy clothing, and the like, may be completely sterilized and disinfected by exposure in a closed chamber to a current of saturated steam for a period of about thirty minutes. Various convenient forms of sterilizing chambers have been designed for conducting the operations rapidly and effectively on a large scale; and the importance of the subject is leading governments and bodies having control of large numbers of men to consider this as an important detail in the work of the sanitary engineer.—Henry Harrison Supplee, in the October-December Forum.

A MEMORY OF ENGLAND.

In parts of England the fashion of naming the houses or homes prevails. At Leicester, where Bro. William Ecclestone lives at 69 Oban Street, on Pool Road, we noted the following: "Top Hill View," "Holbeach House," "Rosevear Villa," "Fitzroy Villa," "Graham Villa," "Gordon Villa," "Vine Cottage," "Myrtle Cottage," "Winston House," "Carisbrooke House," "Uffington House," "Grassmere House," "Tinwell House," "Charnwood House," "Haslemere House," "Gladstone House," "Alma House," "Lochmoor House," "Dawsmere House," "Osborne House," "Dannett House," "Sibsey House," "Mansfield House," on Newport Street: "Roseberry," "Balfour," "Alma," "Trafalgar," "Pool View," "Colindale," "Elsidene," "Fosse Bank," "Lilydale," "Elm View," "Hassledene," "West Leigh," "South View," "Woodville," "Ashville," "Sunnyvale," "Glennville," "Roseville," "Oakdene," "Elmdene," "Southwood." You pay your money and take your choice.

These houses standing in long rows on the sides of the street, creations of stone, or brick, and mortar, fronting streets paved with stone, brick, or concrete, have not a thing about them or their location to suggest to the stranger the significance of their names, except it may be the caprice of the builder or owner.

Some of the names in the old country are both euphonious and significant; of these "Victoria Embankment," "London Bridge," "Tower Bridge," "Westminster Bridge," and "Trafalgar Square," are pleasant localities and are pleasantly remembered. "Princes Street," in Edinburg, is beautiful, so is the name, and suggestive. The "Bull Ring" and "Gravelly Hill" are suggestive, the one of its ancient origin, the other of the hardness of the hill to climb before it was graded and macadamized. One would hardly look for the fashions in "Boar Lane," but some of them may be seen on that thronged thoroughfare in Leeds.

Much of the nomenclature of localities, ways, and byways in the old country come from hundreds and thousands of years back, and have their meaning to those whose families have lived in and about them, or are acquainted with their history. Many of the names are full of meaning and give a sense of beauty in the sound of them. Of these "White Chapel,"

THE winter term of Graceland College opens January 5, 1904.

"St. Mary's White Chapel," "Monument," may be offered. What about "East Ham," "West Ham," "Bow Common," "Plaistow," "Hornsey," "Pica-dilly," and "Petticoat Lane"?

THE W. C. T. U. AND THE SMOOT QUESTION.

An attempt of the annual convention of the W. C. T. U., of Iowa, being held at Sioux City, Iowa, October 22, to pass a resolution condemning Reed Smoot, on the ground that he was a "Mormon," was successfully "held up" by Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, who was presiding. The following is from the Burlington Hawk-Eye of October 23, and shows how it was done:

Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, of Burlington, the president, precipitated all the trouble when she objected to the wording of a resolution denouncing Reed Smoot. Mrs. Dunham wanted the word "polygamy" substituted for "Mormon" in the denunciation. It seemed like a small matter, but it stirred things most decidedly.

She argued that the Church of the Latter Day Saints was known as a Mormon Church, and it was unfair to stigmatize such a religious organization along with the polygamous Mormons.

Members of the resolution committee and most of the other members jumped to their feet and protested against the change. They insisted that a Mormon was a Mormon, and that the resolution should stand. The debate was a warm one throughout, but Mrs. Dunham finally won her point.

This action on the part of Mrs. Marion H. Dunham has significance to us for the reason that she is the daughter-in-law of Bro. O. P. Dunham, deceased, who was for many years a resident of Burlington. Mrs. Dunham's plea was in our behalf, and she had the advantage of knowing whereof she affirmed.

IS THERE LACK OF SYMPATHY?

We noticed the other day in a late periodical received at the office a reference to an apparent indifference in some of the different parts of the Church towards the efforts being made in other portions, especially in regard to the building of places of worship. We extract the following:

There has been one very sore disappointment, and that is the absence of sympathy from our brethren and sisters in the other States. We have been seriously thinking of suggesting the revision of the hymn, "Blessed be the tie that binds." Do you really understand our position here? All alone; with as much Brighamite opposition as there is in all the other States. If they do understand, "May the Lord reward them."

We do not know just what States are referred to, or what particular acts of failure, or accomplishment may have been taken as evidence of sympathy; but suppose the reference has regard to a long, strong, and finally successful effort to erect a suitable house of worship where there were but few able to do much, and these few had much to sacrifice of time, labor, and means to reach the desired end; and that the Saints in other places failed to extend a helping hand to the few, either from lack of understanding the situation, or from want of sympathy in the movement.

It is barely possible that the situation in some of the other States in which a lack of sympathy is supposed to have existed was not fully understood; and the lack of sympathy was not the result of indifference but of inability, or the pressure of demands apparently as urgent and nearer home, in which case there may be not so much reason for censure, though there may be loss of reward.

The Saints in nearly all places, if not quite all, are daily met with calls, requests, and demands for help in aid of the accomplishment of some local enterprise, either in or out of their own field of labor and vision, and it frequently happens that the greater number are not in condition as to temporal means to extend the help required, though the sums asked for may be but small in each separate case. "Many mickles make a muckle," is as true in this as in the country where it originated as a device for checking a waste of little things. A small donation from each one of many would give a very substantial help to a struggling few endeavoring to do a necessary work requiring money; but, multiply this small sum from each to a great many demands of a similar sort and it becomes out of the question for the many to respond. Inability to help where demands are so many finally results in an indifference to any. And it may be this is the general reason why neglect may be taken for want of sympathy, or failure to understand the situation. It is charitable to think so.

IOWA EDITORS AT ALBIA AND ST. LOUIS.

On November 12 the Southwestern Iowa Editorial Association held its semiannual meeting at Albia, Iowa, and the junior editor of the HERALD had the pleasure of attending. We reached there late at night of the 11th; in fact, early in the morning of the 12th. Soon thereafter the dread alarm of fire awoke the town, and by the time the fire was under control, Albia citizens had lost property to the amount of about two hundred thousand dollars. Despite the direful calamity which had befallen their little city, the citizens of Albia rose to the demands of the occasion and carried out their program for entertaining the visiting newspaper men and their companions in a way that won the admiration of every visitor. It was a striking illustration of the enterprise of Albia.

The editors held their sessions in King's Opera-house; and though the confusion following the morning's fight against the fire-fiend resulted in a failure to begin the first session on schedule time, the pre-arranged program was carried out satisfactorily.

At ten o'clock in the forenoon of the 12th temporary adjournment was had to permit the association to become the guests of the Burlington Railway and the Smoky Hollow Coal Company on a trip to the Smoky Hollow mines, located south and east of Avery, Iowa. Mr. Nutt, superintendent of the Iowa lines of the Burlington, and Mr. Evans, proprietor of the Smoky Hollow mines, had joint charge of the excursion, part of the trip from Albia being made over the Burlington road and a part over the seven miles of railway owned by the coal company. On this trip the excursionists were given opportunity to examine the workings of some well-equipped mines, Mr. Evans having two mines in operation now and the slope of the third nearly driven to coal. One of his mines, known as No. 6, has a daily output of one thousand tons.

Mr. Evans remembered that editors must eat, and at noon at the little mining town of Hynes, named for Superintendent Hynes, of the mines, the entire party, over a hundred strong, was served a tasty and bounteous dinner. Neat souvenirs of the trip, in the shape of descriptive pamphlets, were distributed by Mr. Evans among the visitors.

About half past two in the afternoon the party returned to Albia, and the editors were in session till about six o'clock, spending the time listening to and discussing well-written papers on timely topics.

The evening's entertainment consisted of a banquet tendered the visiting editors by the Albia editors and the Business Men's League. It was a delightful occasion, both the "innerman" feast and the subsequent "intellectual" feast being greatly enjoyed by the two hundred guests seated at the tables.

About ten o'clock a large number of the editors, many accompanied by their wives, left the banquet room for the Wabash depot, to start on a prearranged trip to St. Louis. All the details of this trip had previously been arranged by the secretary of the association, Mr. O. E. Hull, and the president, Mr. L. S. Robinson. Two Pullman coaches took the party to St. Louis, and the coaches were put in the Wabash yards and used by the party at nights during their stay in St. Louis.

We reached St. Louis about nine o'clock Friday morning, and at eleven o'clock met at the Planter's Hotel, whence, under the guidance of some of the Fair representatives, we were taken in special electric cars to the Fair grounds and direct to the administration building, a fine structure of stone, which will be occupied by Washington University after the Fair is over. We were escorted to the room of President Francis, and in his absence were gracefully received by Secretary W. B. Stevens, who welcomed us in a few well-chosen words and introduced F. J. V. Skiff, director of exhibits, who addressed the visitors for a few minutes, telling of the work of the Exposition. President L. S. Robinson, of the association, responded pithily on the part of the visiting editors. We were then escorted to the north wing of the building, known as Cupples Hall, and partook of a luncheon tendered by the Fair authorities. After the meal Mr. Stevens, at the head of the table, introduced Miss Florence Hayward, who modestly told of her trip to Europe to secure from King Edward permission to have displayed at the Exposition Queen Victoria's Jubilee presents. Her mission was successful. She spoke with just pride of the fact that her mission was unique in that it was the first time a woman had been sent abroad as a commissioner on equal footing with men who were acting as commissioners. She called attention to this indicating that at this Fair woman's work would compete on equal terms with man's, not consigned to a "woman's department."

The next was a drive through the immense grounds, twelve hundred and forty acres in all. Mr. Stevens informed us that ninety per cent of the work on the grounds was done, and that the other ten per cent would be finished in time; and the din of hundreds of busy hammers and the noise of hundreds of workmen bore evidence that the promise would be fulfilled.

On Saturday at noon the visiting editors were taken in charge at the Planter's Hotel, this time by the Iowa World's Fair Commission, and on special cars taken to the grounds and direct to the nearly-finished and beautiful Iowa Building, one of the first to be finished. There the party was received by President Francis and Secretary Stevens, and at one o'clock all sat down to a spread in the west room of the Iowa Building, the guests of the Iowa Commission. We had the pleasure of listening to several good after-dinner speeches. Among others were President Francis, F. W. Lehman, and W. J. McGee, the two later being former Iowa men who have won national reputation. Mr. Conaway, secretary of the Iowa Commission, was master of ceremonies, and Mr. W. W. Witmer, also of the Commission, presided as toast-master. Members of the association also responded to toasts. The three speakers representing the Fair all gave great credit to Iowa for the prominent part it had played and was playing in the great Fair. Their praise was unstinted.

After the entertainment at the Iowa Building the party was taken by special cars to view one of St. Louis' greatest industries, the great brewing plant, where over one million barrels of beer are produced every year.

On Sunday no special entertainment was provided, and each was left to follow his own pleasure. In company with Bro. John Scott, also of the party, the writer looked up the church on Glasgow Avenue, and was with the congregation at the morning service, occupying the pulpit. The rest of the day we spent at the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. S. R. Burgess.

At half past seven Sunday evening our train left the union depot and we were homeward bound.

In the foregoing we have very briefly touched upon our recent trip to St. Louis. There are some features of it to which we desire to give more space subsequently. There is too much to tell all at once.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

In his quarterly report of work done in the British Isles Mission, dated from Manchester, October 13, Bro. J. W. Rushton gives a not over-bright outlook for the future, owing to the financial condition, but has hopes of better things. He says in part: "All of our people, with but two or three exceptions, are poor; the depression of trade affects the earnings of our brethren, and so directly affects the tithing. Bishop Kelley, I believe, has been informed of the circumstances, and I see, in a letter to Bishop Taylor, he advises the missionaries to exercise faith and patience. The advice is wholesome and I believe has been adopted, but conditions are some different here to the conditions in America. We do not own our homes here—rent must be met every week, quarter, or six months with 'hard cash.' The landlord has no sympathy with 'faith and patience' on rent-day. None of us can raise corn, wheat, potatoes, or fruit, nor keep a cow, pigs, or poultry,—everything has to be purchased. The allowance every month is a bare existence, and consequently to have any irregularity means great distress; the supply of necessaries is stopped, and the landlord issues an order for distraint. These are cold, harsh facts.

"Touching the bright side of the question, I am glad to say the visit of Brn. Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans, commencing July 26 and ending September 19, has been very successful. The good effects will be lasting and prolific. Every branch in the mission has been visited, and in each one commendable effort was made in nearly every instance at sacrifice to the members to make the visit a success.

"I am glad to report that baptisms have taken place recently in Birmingham, I believe ten having been added to the Icknield Port Road Branch, which for many years has barely sustained itself. Bro. J. Davis' efforts are highly spoken of, his work being ably supplemented by the efforts of local brethren and sisters in tracting and open-air meetings. From Leeds come similar reports; six or seven have been baptized through open-air services and tracting by Brn. Taylor and Pierce, of whom we have very encouraging reports.

"In Scotland we maintain our own and very steadily are increasing. Hamilton Branch is proving very capable and is maintaining a progressive movement despite many discouragements. Glasgow has been unfortunate in losing some members by removal, and the struggle there seems to be very hard. Brn. Thorburn and Arber have done good work in tracting and open-air preaching. We have opened a mission at Newark Hill, five miles from Hamilton, where Bro.

and Sr. Murray reside, and have very good meetings; one baptized two weeks ago.

"In Manchester conditions are fair; there is a spirit of contention among some which militates against progress. Still we are hoping for better times.

"In Wales good work has been done by Brn. Lewis, Morgan, Davis, Jones, and Jenkins, but despite all the work seems to be barely able to maintain itself. The continued emigration of Saints to America leaves branches depleted and prostrate; baptisms do not occur there, or have not for a long time. Bro. Morgan is doing his best and we trust will produce good results."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By letter from Bro. Joseph Squires, of 227 McDougal Street, Brooklyn, New York, November 13, we learn that the Brooklyn Branch held its first service in their new building on Sunday, November 8. Bro. Joseph Arber, late of Glasgow, Scotland, had arrived at Brooklyn on the 10th.

W. S. Macrae, of Knobnoster, Missouri, writes that he has a copy of the Palmyra edition of the Book of Mormon for sale. Eighteen pages of it are missing; otherwise all right.

William N. Hanner wrote from 442 Chestnut Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, that he would gladly care for any of our elders who might come there to preach.

The Iowa State Farmers' Institute and Agricultural Convention will be held under the auspices of the Iowa Department of Agriculture at Des Moines, Iowa, December 7, 8, and 9, 1903. A strong program has been arranged. Reduced rates on the certificate plan have been secured.

Subscribers on that "$25,000 college list" will greatly aid the force in the Bishop's office if, when sending in their payments, they will mention on whose list their subscriptions appear.

A protracted effort by Brn. Joseph S. Snively and D. C. White, at Pleasanton, Iowa, twelve miles east of Lamoni, closed Sunday, November 15, with fifteen baptisms, one of them the grandson of Elder David Morey, the first janitor of the Temple at Kirtland.

"All well here," wrote E. A. Smith from Burlington, November 18.

The Alumni Association of the State University has decided to publish an alumni magazine, to be known as the Iowa Alumnus. Its editor will be J. W. Rich, who has been connected with the school as student, as regent, and as librarian. It will be a bi-monthly and its first issue will appear December 15, 1903.

Brn. W. H. Kelley and F. A. Smith, of the Quorum of Twelve, are in Lamoni, having recently come in from their fields for short visits with home folks.

ELIJAH THE RESTORER.

The "invasion" of New York City by some three thousand of Zionists of Zion City, Illinois, under the leadership of John Alexander Dowie, is an incident of considerable interest to the people of all religious classes. Perhaps nothing is more noteworthy in the claims of this remarkable man than the fact that he claims to be "Elijah the Restorer." He endeavors to substantiate his claim by asserting that he is that prophet of whom Moses spoke: "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken."—Deuteronomy 18:15. Further, that he fulfills the prophecy of Malachi, where he says: "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord."—Malachi 4:5. Also the statement of the Savior where he says: "And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things."—Matthew 17:11.

Among opinions expressed it is very evident that people as a rule do not attach much faith to his claim to be that prophet of whom Moses spoke, as it is most universally understood that in so speaking Moses could have referred to no other prophet than the Lord Jesus Christ. Dowie's claim seems inconsistent, in that he is not an Israelite, while the prophet of whom Moses spoke was to be raised up "from the midst of thee, of thy brethren." Jesus in every way completely fulfilled this prophecy. There is some significance and importance attached to the other two predictions as cited above. Judging from various sentiments expressed from the pulpit, the press, and the commentators, we are inclined to think it is to them a mystery. Elijah was a wonderful man. We read the principal part his life in the first and second book of Kings. Among things notable which he did was that he "prayed that it might not rain," and it rained not for the "space of three years and six months." As he dwelt by the brook Cherith, the ravens brought him "bread and flesh." After the brook dried up he went to Jarephath, and dwelt in the house of a widow, where the "barrel of meal" she had "wasted not," "neither did the cruse of oil fail" while Elijah remained in the house. He spoke against and finally killed a great number of the priests of Baal, by the brook Kishon. He called down fire from heaven. He smote the waters of Jordan with his mantle and in company with Elisha went over "on dry ground." Elisha had been appointed as his successor, and the parting came, when Elijah "went up by a whirlwind into heaven." Elisha took up the mantle and smote the waters of Jordan, and they divided according to his word, and he went over, and as he met the "sons of the prophets" they cried out, "The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha."—

2 Kings 2:15. Thus Elisha moved out in the spirit and power of Elijah.

When the angel Gabriel announced to Zacharias the coming birth of John the Baptist, among other things he said: "And he shall go before him [Christ] in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord."—Luke 1:17. It will be observed that Elias is the Greek form of expression, while Elijah is Hebrew, both meaning the same. John moved out in the realm of the authority conferred upon him. To assert that he was Elijah the prophet reincarnated would at best be but an assertion. He evidently maintained his individuality, as also did Elijah. The "spirit and power" (authority) of Elijah simply was given him, as it was given to Elisha, as before noted. His first ministry was the beginning of the gospel of the Son of God. He did baptize in the wilderness and did preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. He pointed the people to one mightier to follow after him, who should baptize them with the Holy Ghost. His work was only that of a preparer at this time. He ushered in the great Christian dispensation. After his work of preparing the way before the Lord was accomplished, he decreased, while Christ increased. Finally because he rebuked Herod for marrying the wife of his brother Philip, he was cast into prison. There he was beheaded by request of Herodias and by decree of Herod. Of John, Christ said: "There is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist."—Luke 7:28. And also: "If ye will receive it, this is Elias, which was for to come."—Matthew 11:14. Of the work he accomplished Christ further said: "This is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee."—Luke 7:27. If anything was done by John as a restorer at that time, little if any mention is made of it; while his work as a preparer was duly recognized. However, he was to do a great work as a restorer. At the transfiguration I believe that he was the Elias which appeared with Moses in the presence of Peter, James, and John. It was a most notable occasion. And it is not unreasonable to presume that John, who had entered the spirit world, here appeared with Moses as representative of the Aaronic priesthood, to confer with those who held the keys of the Melchisedec priesthood. Here was indeed the "spirits of just men made perfect." (Hebrews 12:23.)

The disciples Peter, James, and John had seemingly thought that John's work was entirely completed, and they inquired of him:

Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come and restore all things. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.—Matthew 17: 10-13.

Now, then, we have the point clearly made that John's work as a preparer is separate from his work as a restorer; that his work as a restorer is to be accomplished at some future time; that he is to do this work himself. To restore is to bring back, to replace, to return. No one is to move out in his spirit and power to do this particular work. He is to do it himself. He is indeed one of the "ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation."—Hebrews 1: 14.

In the light of this fact, then, how absurd and ridiculous the claims of Mr. Dowie. Moreover, what has he restored that was not here? Divine healing, triune immersion, tithing, Zion., etc., all of which are his specialties, were being taught among various people almost before he was born. He openly avows himself as the ruler of his people. He has made a great financial success out of his enterprises in the name of religion. It is a fact that he has become immensely rich by reason of his religion. A great contrast is this new-styled, self-appointed "Elijah" to the ancient Elijah, John the Baptist, and Jesus. They could sleep in caves, be fed by ravens, eat dead locusts and wild honey, and have nowhere to lay the head. But this man lives sumptuously every day, in an elegant palace; the ravens do not feed him now, nor does he likely live on "oil and meal," or "locusts and wild honey." He has servants; he is here to be ministered unto. He rides across the country in a palatial car, and invades and restores New York while he sojourns in about as fine a set of rooms as may be found there. Surely somebody is being made merchandise of in order to support such extravagance. The Christ's warning is certainly in order: "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect."—Matthew 24: 24.

But John is to come as a restorer. Let us not be confused by the very things which Christ said should be. The kingdom he established did, as he said, from the days of John the Baptist suffer violence, and the violent finally took it by force. The candle of truth soon began to burn low after the Savior ascended upon high. The foes without and false brethren within rained blows upon and did violence to the kingdom and finally did completely "wear out the Saints of the Most High." They killed and martyred nearly every disciple until their work was done. The authority of the priesthood was taken from the earth, and the church went into the wilderness. The Dark Ages ensued, Christ's religion lost from earth and wholly corrupted by evil men. Every Protestant church in existence is an undeniable evidence of that fact.

But before Christ comes we are told that "Elijah" is to come and restore "all things." This to be before the "great and dreadful day of the Lord." This certainly could not have had reference to Christ's first appearing. He is to "turn the hearts of the children to the fathers," or "plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers," and thus prepare a people by restoring to them the means of preparation—the gospel. "Lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." Thus it is probable that only a few out of the earth's inhabitants will be prepared. The gospel was to be brought back by the angel (Revelation 14: 6), and the priesthood is "all things" in the administration of the gospel. The gospel could not be effectual without a divinely appointed priesthood. We believe that angel has come with that old, everlasting gospel, and as we hear it preached our hearts turn to our fathers; their faith is our faith, their hope is our hope. We do contend most earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. We also contend for the angel's message of this the dispensation of the fullness of times. On May 15, 1829, the holy priesthood was conferred upon the first elders of the Church. Of this wondrous event, Joseph Smith wrote: "The messenger who visited us on this occasion and conferred this priesthood upon us, said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the Melchisedec priesthood."—Church History, vol. 1.

Oliver Cowdery also thus eloquently describes this heavenly visitation:

After writing the account given of the Savior's ministry to the remnant of the seed of Jacob, upon this continent, it was easily to be seen, as the prophet said would be, that darkness covered the earth and gross darkness the minds of the people. On reflecting further, it was easily to be seen, that amid the great strife and noise concerning religion, none had authority from God to administer the ordinances of the gospel. For, the question might be asked, Have men authority to administer in the name of Christ, who deny revelation? when his testimony is no less than the spirit of prophecy? and his religion based, built, and sustained by immediate revelations in all ages of the world, when he has had a people on earth? If these facts were buried, and carefully concealed by men whose craft would have been in danger, if once permitted to shine in the faces of men, they were no longer to us; and we only waited for the commandment to be given, "Arise and be baptized."

This was not long desired before it was realized. The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will. On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spoke peace to us, while the veil was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously looked for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance! What joy! What wonder! What amazement! While the world was racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld,—our ears heard, as in the "blaze of day." Yes, more—above the glitter of the May sunbeam, which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature! Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, "I am thy fellow servant," dispelled every fear. We listened—we gazed—we admired! 'Twas the voice of the angel from glory; 'twas a message from the Most High! And as we heard we rejoiced, while his love enkindled upon our souls, and we were wrapped in the vision of the Almighty! Where was room for doubt? Nowhere: uncertainty had fled; doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled for ever!

But, dear brother, think, further think for a moment, what joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hand the holy priesthood, as he said, "Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness."

I shall not attempt to paint to you the feelings of this heart, nor the majestic beauty and glory which surrounded us on this occasion; but you will believe me when I say, that earth, nor men, with the eloquence of time, can not begin to clothe language in as interesting and sublime a manner as this holy personage. No; nor has this earth power to give the joy, to bestow the peace, or comprehend the wisdom which was contained in each sentence as they were delivered by the power of the Holy Spirit! Man may deceive his fellow man; deception may follow deception, and the children of the wicked one may have power to seduce the foolish and untaught, till naught but fiction feeds the many, and the fruit of falsehood carries in its current the giddy to the grave; but one touch with the finger of his love, yes, one ray of glory from the upper world, or one word from the mouth of the Savior, from the bosom of eternity, strikes it all into insignificance, and blots it forever from the mind! The assurance that we were in the presence of an angel; the certainty that we heard the voice of Jesus, and the truth unsullied as it flowed from a pure personage, dictated by the will of God, is to me past description, and I shall ever look upon this expression of the Savior's goodness with wonder and thanksgiving while I am permitted to tarry, and in those mansions where perfection dwells and sin never comes, I hope to adore in that day which shall never cease."—Letters of O. Cowdery to W. W. Phelps, published in Messenger and Advocate, vol. 1, pp. 15, 16.

This does not sound like a "cunningly devised fable." It is a narration of a fact, a testimony. It agrees with the words of the prophets. It is the fulfillment of what had been said would come to pass. The gospel as declared by these men divinely commissioned was not a new gospel, but the old Jerusalem gospel restored in its original simplicity, purity, and beauty. In every way it harmonizes with the gospel as taught in the New Testament. These men were teaching no specialties, such as "divine healing," "second coming of Christ," and other theories upon which churches have since been built. All truth was their creed then, is the unchangeable creed yet. What was gospel in Christ's time is gospel with us to-day. Not a part of it, but all of it. Thus the gospel in its fullness has been restored and the promised blessings which followed its administration in the primitive age have likewise followed its administration in this age. That gospel is being preached to various nations of the world. Men are yet acting under the authority of the priesthood restored by John the Baptist, the Elias which was to come. Honest-hearted individuals who have accepted this angel's message have not been disappointed. It is the boon and joy of their lives. The Church has truly suffered from within, and from without, but yet she stands and is earnestly endeavoring to make ready a people "prepared for the Lord." John the Baptist, he who ushered in the great Christian dispensation, has also come and ushered in the dispensation of the fullness of times. Truly not a greater prophet ever lived than he.

PHILADELPHIA, November, 1903.

THE PRESIDENT OR CHIEF OFFICER IN THE CHURCH IN THE TIME OF THE APOSTLES. JAMES OR PETER, WHICH?

BY W. H. KELLEY.

(Concluded.)

The article of the celebrated scholar and historian, Doctor Philip Schaff, is also submitted as furnishing the best attainable evidences from the standpoint of a faithful historian, as follows:

JAMES, the name of three important characters of the New Testament.

I. James, the son of Zebedee.—His mother, Salome, was a follower of Jesus (Matthew 27: 56; Mark 15: 41). He was a brother of John, and older than he, as is very probable from the fact that his name is almost always mentioned before John's (Matthew 10: 2; Mark 3: 17, etc.). It is likely, though not certain, that he became a follower of Christ immediately after the baptism in the Jordan (John 1: 32; sqq). He and his brother were surnamed Boanerges, i. e., "son of thunder," by Christ (Mark 3: 17). The reason for giving this designation is not recorded. He certainly did not intend an allusion to their eloquence, as the Fathers supposed. The more probable view is, that the surname had reference to their passionate and vehement nature, both in thought and emotion, which sometimes showed itself in ambitious aspirations (Mark 10: 35; sqq) for a place of honor in the Messianic Kingdom, but also in an ardent attachment to the person of Christ.

James belonged, with John and Peter, to the narrower circle of Christ's more intimate disciples, was admitted into the chamber of Jairus' daughter (Mark 5: 37), to the vision of the transfiguration (Mark 9: 2), and to the scene of the agony in Gethsemane (Matthew 26). Nothing further is recorded of him than his death by the sword, under Herod Agrippa I (Acts 12: 2). He was the first of the apostles to suffer martyrdom; and thus, in a more pronounced measure than in the case of John, the prediction of Christ was fulfilled in his experience, that the brothers should indeed drink of his cup, and be baptized with his baptism (Mark 10: 39); and at least in point of time, he received the second place of honor in the kingdom of heaven. Ecclesiastical tradition says that the accuser of James confessed Christ, and, after receiving the apostle's pardon, himself suffered martyrdom (Clement Alexander in Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History 2, 9). The Church of Spain boasts that he shared in its foundation, but its fables are in conflict with the statements of the New Testament.

II. James, the son of Alphæus.—One of the twelve disciples of Jesus. He is so designated in four places,—Matthew 10: 3; Mark 3: 18; Luke 6: 15; Acts 1: 13. No other passage can with certainty be regarded as referring to him or his family, and nothing further is known definitely of his life. The alleged blood relationship of his family with the house of Jesus lacks all evidence. This hypothesis identifies his father Alphæus with Clopas, and makes "Mary the wife of Clopas" (John 19: 25) a sister of Mary the mother of Jesus, or Clopas a brother of Joseph (Hegesippus). These suggestions are pure assumptions; for it is not at all certain that Maria e tou Klopas means the wife of Clopas. It may mean the mother, or daughter, of Clopas. Nor has the identification of the name Alphæus with Clopas anything in its favor. A further objection is that sisters would not be apt to have the same name, Mary. It is possible that he is the James whose mother is called Mary (Matthew 27:56; Mark 16:1; and who is styled "James the Less," and the brother of Josès (Mark 15:40). The title "the Less" contained an allusion to his stature, and was not given to distinguish him from James the son of Zebedee (Meyer). But it is possible that another James is here mentioned, as we would rather expect the expression, "James the son of Alphæus." Of his further experiences we know nothing, except that according to tradition, he labored in Egypt, where he suffered martyrdom by crucifixion, in the city of Ostrakine (Niceph. 2:40).

III. James the Just, the brother of the Lord, the head of the church at Jerusalem, is distinguished from the two apostles of the same name in Matthew 13:55; Mark 6:3; Acts 12:17; 15:13; 21:18; 1 Corinthians 15:7; Galatians 1:19; 2:9, 12; James 1:1; Jude 1; and is mentioned by Josephus (Antiquities 20, 9, 1), Hegesippus (Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, 2, 33) and the church fathers.

In the early church the existence of our James as a distinct person was denied by some; he being identified with one of the two apostles of that name; and more generally with James the son of Alphæus. The fraternal relation reported to have existed between James and Jesus was explained as a relation between cousins. But Tertullian is a witness to the fact that the distinction between James and the apostles was still held in his day. He speaks of the consummation of Mary's marriage with Joseph after the birth of Jesus, and of the brothers of Jesus (De carne Christi 7, adv. Marc. 19), to prove the reality of the incarnation over against Gnostic objections. At a somewhat later date the Apostolic Constitutions (2. 55, 6. 12, 13) declare for the same view, when they mentioned as the representatives of Catholic doctrine the twelve apostles, Paul and James the brother of the Lord, who is also placed among the seventy disciples. That a fraternal relation is here meant is vouched for by another passage (7:46): "I James, a brother of the Lord according to the flesh." The testimony of Eusebius is also very important. He clearly distinguishes James, the brother of the Lord, from the twelve apostles, places him among the seventy disciples, and counts fourteen apostles in all, Paul being the thirteenth, and James the fourteenth (Com. Jes. 17:5; Ecclesiastical History 1, 12; 2, 1; 7, 19); and the passage (Ecclesiastical History, 2, 1) in which he speaks of him as the "so-called" brother of the Lord does not refer to a more distant relationship, for he prepares the way for his expression by stating that Jesus was born before the consummation of the marriage between Mary and Joseph. Gradually the presumption of the perpetual virginity of Mary gained currency, and the fraternal relation of James was resolved into the relation of a step-brother. It is a matter of doubt whether this was done by Hegesippus, and in the pseudo-Clementine writings; but it is certain that there is not a trace in either of an identification of the brother of the Lord with an apostle. Hegesippus clearly makes this distinction (Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, 2, 23). In the Protevangelium Jacobi, which originated in Essenic Christian circles, Joseph is represented as having been an aged man, surrounded with grown-up sons, before his espousal with Mary. It was only with hesitation that some learned Fathers, under the influence of a growing devotion to Mary, adopted this fable. The first trace of it occurs in Clement of Alexandria,—whom Origen followed, leaning upon Josephus and some others (tines in the Greek) Gregory of Nyssa, Cyril of Alexandria, Eumenius, Hilary, and others.

From this hypothesis, which was entirely wanting in historical confirmation, it was natural to proceed farther, and resolve the fraternal relation into that of cousin, and identify the so-called brothers of our Lord with the apostles of the same name. It is quite possible that Clement of Alexandria identifies James the brother of the Lord with James the son of Alphæus; for he speaks of only two men by this name—the one thrown from a tower, the other executed with the sword (Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History 2:1). But the first to declare himself distinctly for this identification was Jerome, who wrote a work against Helvidius, advocating the doctrine of Mary's perpetual virginity. He speaks of the theory that James was a son of Joseph by a former marriage as an ungrounded fancy taken from the Apocrypha, and tries to prove that our James was the same as James the son of Alphæus by identifying Mary of John 19:25 ("Mary the wife of Clopas"), the sister of Jesus' mother, with the wife of Alphæus. He seems after to have renounced this theory; for in his commentary on Isaiah (17:6) he mentions fourteen apostles,—the twelve, James the brother of the Lord, and Paul. Augustine spoke of James as the son of Joseph by a former marriage, or as a relation of Mary. To the latter view he gave the preference. These various views have had their advocates among modern divines. The theory that James the Just was a son of Mary and Joseph, and is to be distinguished from the apostles, has been held by Herder, Stier, Credner, De Wette, Wieseler, Neander, Schaff, Lechler, Reuss, Huther, B. Weiss, Bleck, Keim [Alford Farrar], and others; Stier, Wiesler, however, referring Acts 12:17, 15:13, 21:18, Galatians 2:9–12 to James the son of Alphæus. Semler, Hug, Schneckenburger, Hoffmann, Lange, and others identify our James with James the son of Alphæus. And Theirsch and [Lightfoot] hold that he was a son of Joseph by a former marriage. The statements of the New Testament emphatically favor the first view. The expressions in Matthew 1:25, and Luke 2:7 most naturally imply that the marriage between Joseph and Mary was consummated after Christ's birth; and the expression "first-born son," by the analogy of the other cases in the New Testament (Romans 8:29; Colossians 1:15, 18; Hebrews 11:28; Revelation 1:5) indicates that other children were born to Mary. The subsequent close relation in which the so-called brothers of our Lord stand to Mary (Matthew 12:47; sqq; 13:55; Mark 6:3; John 2:12; Acts 1:14) likewise strongly favors this view. The word "brother" (adelphos, in the Greek) is never used in the New Testament of any other than the fraternal relation; and the few cases adduced from the Old Testament are indefinite; and special terms are employed for kindred (suggenes in the Greek) and cousin (anepsios) Mark 6:4; Luke 1:36, 2:44; Colossians 4:10). To these arguments must be added the fact that James the brother of the Lord and the Lord's "brethren" are distinguished from the apostles (John 2:12; Acts 1:13; 1 Corinthians 9:5). In John 7:5 it is stated that in contrast to the disciples, the brethren of the Lord had not believed; and in Matthew 12:46 Christ institutes a comparison between his brethren by blood and by moral affinity.

Paul's expression in Galatians 1:19—"other of the apostles saw I none save James the Lord's brother"—refers back to Peter, and not forward to James. He afterwards (Galatians 2:9) calls James a "pillar" of the church, avoiding the expression "apostle," but in 1 Corinthians 15:7 he is as little distinguished from "all the apostles" as Peter is from the twelve (1 Corinthians 15:5). The expression "Servant of the Lord" (James 1:1) does not prove anything at all against the view; for the appellation "the brother of the Lord," which was given to him by others as a mark of distinction, would have been out of place in his own mouth. The objection that the names of the four brothers of the Lord correspond to the names of four of the apostles ought to be of little weight when we remember that Josephus mentions no less than twenty-one different persons by the name of Simon, and sixteen by the name of Judas. James was, therefore, the full brother of Jesus, and a different person from the two apos-ties of that name. James was the representative of the conservative Jewish party at the council of Jerusalem (Acts 15) and stood at the head of the local church. The party of the Ebionites took him as a Nazarite, who from his childhood had drunk neither wine nor strong drink, had never been anointed with oil, never bathed, never worn any but linen garments, and whose hair had never been cut. He was surnamed the Just, and represented as having prayed constantly at the temple for the forgiveness of his people. According to Hegesippus, he suffered martyrdom in 69, by being thrown from a pinnacle of the temple by the Pharisees; but according to Josephus he was stoned to death by the Sadducees in 62 or 63.

The latter passage is of doubtful authenticity, and the former statement is to be preferred.

To conclude. The reader will have observed:

1. That James the son of Alphæus and James the Lord's brother were two distinct persons.
2. That James was a brother of Jesus and not a cousin, as claimed. That he was a son of Mary the mother of Jesus.
3. That the son of Alphæus belonged to the apostolic quorum. James the Lord's brother did not.
4. James the Lord's brother was made president of the Jerusalem church after the ascension of the Savior.
5. No facts either in sacred or secular history point to Peter, James, and John as a presidency of the church at Jerusalem.
6. That there is no foundation for the theory invented that the brethren of the Lord were not his brothers according to the flesh, but cousins. That this invention was put in vogue hundreds of years after Christ's ascension, to support Roman Catholic views, of Mary being "ever virgin," etc.
7. That the best authorities deny the contention of our opponents.
8. That nothing authoritative is had as statements made by Joseph Smith, on the disputed questions. If he said what is claimed for him, no reason is assigned for his opinion, hence it is worth what any other unsupported opinion would be and no more.
9. In the light of the facts herein presented the contention of our opponents is not supported, and James the Lord's brother, a son of Joseph and Mary "beyond question" was after the ascension of our Lord constituted the president of the Jerusalem church and acted as such, and not Peter, James, and John, as claimed.

FRUIT AND NUTS AS FOOD.

The Department of Agriculture has for several years been conducting a series of experiments to determine the dietary value of different foods.

Nine dietary studies and thirty-one digestion experiments were carried on. In the majority of the dietary studies and all but one of the digestion experiments fruit and nuts constituted all or almost all of the diet. The results of the investigation emphasize the fact that both fruit and nuts should be considered as true foods rather than food accessories. The subjects were two women, three children, two elderly men, and two university students. The men all did hard manual labor during a part of the time, the students working to support themselves while pursuing their studies,

The fare given in these experiments was in every case one that would appeal to any normal appetite. It embraced honey, tomatoes, apples, bananas, cantaloupe, grapes, verdal, cornichon, tokay, muscat, scarlet haws, pears, pomegranates, persimmons, oranges, strawberries, watermelons, figs, almonds, and peanut butter. The only animal foods allowed were cottage cheese and eggs; and these in limited quantities. The cost of such a diet varied from fifteen to eighteen cents a day. Comparative experiments were carried along in which animal foods were employed under the usual conditions of living, and in these the daily cost ran from twenty-six to thirty cents. It was found that the food eaten supplied about sixty per cent of the protein usually secured by the average meat diet, while health and strength continued the same, if not improved, and in two or three there was a slight gain in flesh and weight.

One of the chief objects of the series of experiments was to furnish data as to the value of nuts as food. Fruits contain little protein, and nuts are relied on in the fruitarian plan of eating to balance the ration. Fruits are rich in carbo-hydrates and nuts in fat. A pound of peanuts, which costs seven cents, furnishes one thousand calories of energy at a cost of three and one half cents, and protein at a cost of thirty-six cents a pound. A porterhouse steak costs for the same result respectively twenty-two and one half cents and one dollar and thirty-one cents when the steak can be bought for twenty-five cents a pound.

The average price per pound of the protein of nuts ranges higher than the corresponding average of meats, but the cost per pound of peanut protein is lower than for meats, fish, eggs, milk, dairy products, and prepared cereals. The only foods which furnish protein at a less cost than peanuts are flour and dried beans. According to Professor Jaffa's experiments, nuts are the cheapest source of energy for the fruitarian, the peanut ranging far ahead of any other variety.

Although peanuts supply protein and energy for a smaller sum than bread, they are outranked by dried beans, which at five cents a pound, will supply for ten cents over two hundred grammes of protein and three thousand and forty calories of energy.—Scientific American, October 10, 1903.

HAWAIIAN VOLCANOES.

To go to the Hawaiian Islands and not see the volcanoes is to go to Egypt and not see the pyramids. On the last created island of the group, Hawaii, are the twin volcanoes, Mokuaweoweo and Kilauea, the former noted for its spectacular displays and the latter for its unfailing regularity of daily exhibits. On the sixth of this month, shortly after noon, three violent outbreaks of fire suddenly occurred on the Kona, or western, side of Mauna Loa, just below the crater of Mokuaweoweo. The red pillars of flame shot upward several hundred feet and the smoke ensuing from the same assumed an unbrageous cloud of several miles in circumference. The spectacle at night, viewed from Hilo and other parts of the Island, as well as from the decks of vessels off the Kona coast, was magnificent. After the fifth day the activity centered in the great crater itself, and as this magazine goes to press, October 15, a flow of lava is momentarily expected. Naturally this phenomenon created intense excitement on Hawaii and the neighboring island of Maui, and as the news of the eruption spread throughout the group there was a general desire to inspect it, as nothing of that character had been seen since the lively demonstration of Mokuaweoweo on the Fourth of July, 1899, when the glare of the fire was seen fifty miles at sea and the smoke was conveyed by southeast winds to the islands of Maui, Molokai, and Oahu. The very fact that the two Hawaiian volcanoes are in constant activity must dispel any fear of such a disaster as an outbreak of pent-up force entails. Geologists affirm that the craters of Mokuaweoweo and Kilauea are the newest, and the latter the liveliest on the globe.

The trip to Mokuaweoweo should be undertaken only by men who are accustomed to the saddle; who have a sound stomach, and who are inured to rough traveling. The excursion, which is no picnic, is made chiefly by scientific explorers, who, being the most fearless people in the world, will endure any hardship and risk any danger in the practice of their profession. After leaving the steamer at Punaluu the traveler takes the Pahala Plantation railroad to Pahala. Then comes a five-mile horseback journey to Kapapala, where arrangements may be made with Mr. Julian Monsarrat, the manager of the stock ranch there, for transportation to the crater, forty-five miles distant. Horses and rations for man and beast, as well as warm clothing, must be secured for traversing the roughest kind of up-hill, barren country. A blacksmith with a kit of tools and sets of new shoes must accompany the party to shoe the animals after they have trodden the sharp stones of the narrow trail. Forty-five miles of a journey, only less dreary than the same length of trail through an Arctic region, must be accomplished before the rim of Mokuaweoweo is reached. At the end of the itinerary the atmosphere is so rarefied that the stomach will sustain only liquids, such as milk or spirits, and respiration is effected with an effort. Few islanders have scaled this grand eminence, which is usually far above the clouds, a desolate tract seemingly apart from earth, and wrapped in the sublime silence of the illimitable space. A calm inspiration of awe pervades the soul that stands there.

Mokuaweoweo, the summit crater of Mauna Loa, is 13,675 feet high, and twenty-five miles west of Kilauea. Its superficial dimensions are: Area 2,370 acres; circumference, 9.47 miles; length, 3.7 miles; width, 1.74 miles. It holds less interest for the average tourist than Kilauea, being out of the route of travel and showing volcanic energy only at long intervals. Notwithstanding its apparently quiescent state it has created greater spectacular shows than its twin relative, Kilauea. The first great eruption on record occurred on August 11, 1855, when a wide stream of molten lava started directly for Hilo and, after flowing fifteen months, stopped within eight miles of the town. Three and a half years later another outbreak happened, the lava taking a northwesterly course and emptying into the sea. This phenomenon lasted seven months. In March, 1868, there were violent earthquakes on Hawaii and on April 7, lava spouted up in fountains six hundred feet high and found its course to the sea. It was a five-day reign of terror to the nearby inhabitants. Houses and cattle were destroyed and much land rendered inarable. In 1880 Mokuaweoweo again threatened the town of Hilo with a lava flow, which took a course along the southern edge of the flow of 1855. The danger was easily averted. On January 18, 1886, an outbreak occurred at an elevation of six thousand five hundred feet, whence a stream ran to the sea, twenty-five miles away, continuing six days. On July 4, 1899, an exhibition of violence was given in lofty columns of fire, which by their reflection on the sky told sailors fifty miles at sea that old Mokuaweoweo was celebrating Independence Day. This eruption continued two weeks, during which time smoke hung over Maui, Molokai, Lanai, and Oahu as well as Hawaii.

KILAUEA.

The volcano of Kilauea, the greatest phenomenon on earth, is four thousand feet above sea level and is the chief attraction of tourists visiting the island of Hawaii. The crater has an area of two thousand six hundred and fifty acres, and is over seven miles in circumference, nearly three miles long and nearly two miles wide. The fact that its fires never go out establishes its claim to being a world wonder. It is here one has a conception of the bottomless pit in its awful reality. Day and night the spectacle of boiling lava in a vast natural caldron, sunk to unknown depths, can be seen from a view-point of safety on the rim of the crater. To a naturalist, or a geologist, or to a visitor in search of novelties this manifestation of nature's majestic force is worth going around the world to see.

All Transpacific passenger steamers sailing from San Francisco call at Honolulu, from which point two steamship lines take passengers for this volcano. The steamer Mauna Loa goes to Nonuapo, on the island of Hawaii, whence the journey to the volcano is made by stage or horseback. The steamer Kinau, which has thirty-one large state-rooms, broad decks, saloon and smoking-room, electric lights and electric fans, leaves Honolulu every Tuesday noon and arrives at Hilo on Wednesday evening following. The train of the Hilo Railroad, a moderny equipped, standard guage system, leaves Hilo Thursday morning and connects with stage for the volcano, seventeen miles from Hilo, enabling passengers to arrive at the Volcano House, which is within sight of the volcano, at half past eleven o'clock in the forenoon. On the return trip the stage leaves the hotel early on Friday, connects with the railroad and brings the tourist back to Hilo at half past nine Friday morning, giving him ample time to board the Kinau which arrives in Honolulu Saturday afternoon. This excursion of four days, including steamer, railroad, and carriage fares, hotel bills at Hilo and the Volcano House, and the services of a guide to the volcano, costs forty dollars. If one chooses to visit places of minor interest on the island of Hawaii he may avail himself of other rates. A tourist is allowed two hundred pounds of baggage, but an excess of this weight is charged at the rate of one dollar a hundred pounds.

The journey from Hilo up through the tropical country is one of the delights of the volcano trip. After debarking from the train at Mountain View the tourist seats himself in a comfortable wagonette and is soon in the midst of a fern forest, many of whose trees reach a height of fifty feet. The soft air is laden with the perfume of the woods and the senses are exhilarated by the influence of nature's wild charms. Interspersed with stretches of wilderness there are coffee and sugar plantations for several miles along the roadway and then the dreary area of the higher altitude, where vegetation is scant, comes into view. The road continues evenly and regularly, however, and a good team of horses brings the carriage up to the door of the Volcano House on schedule time. Here is a veritable oasis in this strange mountain desert. The grounds about the house are tastefully set out in bordered flower plats and an air of invitation pervades the atmosphere. The hotel is, of course, built for the reception of visitors who come from all parts of the world to see Kilauea, and consequently every party of travelers finds entertainment ready at hand. It is often a pleasant experience to come from the tropical heat of Hilo through the lowering degrees of temperature up into the cool atmosphere of this spot, where one may sit before the open grate and feel the cheerful warmth of a blazing wood fire. Besides affording the regular accommodations of a hotel this house provides sulphur-steam baths for rheumatic guests who desire to test the curative properties of Kilauea's elements. The treatment is invariably beneficial.

If one's time is limited to a round trip from Honolulu he sets out early to view the volcano, after luncheon at the hotel. Furnished with a stout cane, to help him over the rough places, he starts from the house under the escort of a native guide and walks a mile or so before he reaches the brink of the great furnace. The pathway bears little evidence of the fires beneath his feet till he comes to the limit of plant life, when indications of the proximity of the volcano begin to assert themselves in mammoth bodies of coagulated lava, yawning crevices, sulphur-hued caverns, columns of steam rising from the ground, and an uncanny warmth of terra firma. Arriving at the brink of the crater he views something that he has never had aptly described to him, and he will confess his own inability to tell the story of the scene. Tavernier with his brush has done more than any one else in presenting an idea of what Kilauea is like, but he failed to convey the grand impression that one receives from personal observation. Hitchcock and Strong have done well, and innumerable amateurs have used hundreds of yards of canvas in trying to portray the grandeur of the spectacle. The efforts of brush, pencil, and pen are ineffective in representing the sight. With all its Titanic power and ominous threatenings Kilauea is as harmless to the onlooker as its pictures, the lake of lava boiling in a deep pit, the fumes and gases ascending directly skywards and the occasional explosions venting their force in the air. The degree of heat in this furnace has never been reckoned, nor can it be, but it is high enough to turn granite into gas. One of Kilauea's peculiarities is that it offers a new play almost every day, shifting the scene and action with infinite variety. It is more sublime at night, when darkness lends a strong contrast to the vermilion hue of the seething lava and, should the silvery rays of the moon glance into the crater, an additional effect of splendor is given to the scene.

Only three times have the fires of Kilauea been known to break their bounds, but in each instance a warning was given. Once, in 1790, such a quantity of black sand and cinders was thrown from this crater as to destroy a part of Keoua's army, which was marching to Ka-u. As the Goddess Pele was supposed by the Hawaiians to direct the fiery elements of Kilauea, Kamehameha the Great, the enemy of Keoua, believed she had conferred a personal favor on him. On May 30, 1840, a lava stream forced its way underground eastward, breaking out twelve miles from the coast and flowing for three weeks into the sea. No lives were lost, but the dwellings of some natives were destroyed. In 1868 another break occurred, when lava flowed to the southwest, and the center of the crater floor fell in, enlarging the pit.—Paradise of the Pacific, October 1903.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

THE following letter is very encouraging to the Hope editors. Let us once win the hearts of our mothers and nothing can prevent this good work from moving on:

Mrs. M. Walker: I am glad to see some of the mothers responding to the call for Birth Offerings, for it adds an interest to our already interesting little paper, which I have taken and enjoyed reading ever since the first copy was issued. I have no little ones of my own, but I try to interest the children of others by sending the Hope to them, and I sometimes have sent Birth Offerings and will now send one dollar and seventy-five cents as Birth Offerings for seven little tots. Do not know the dates of their births, but the money will help to furnish good reading for them, sometime when they are older.

AUNT LAURA.

Something Each Day.

Something each day—a smile
It is not much to give,
And the little gifts of life
Make sweet the days we live.
The world has weary hearts
That we can bless and cheer,
And a smile for every day
Makes sunshine all the year.

Something each day—a word,
We can not know its power;
It grows in fruitlessness
As grows the gentle flower.
What comfort it may bring,
Where all is dark and drear,
For a kind word each day
Makes pleasant all the year.

One need not ask a merry face or a sad one whether it hath come forth from joy or from grief. Tears and laughter tell their own story. Should one come home with fruit, we say: "Thou art come from the orchard;" if with hands full of wild flowers: "Thou art from the fields;" if one's garments smell of mingled odors, we say: "Thou hast walked in a garden." But how much more, if one hath seen God, hath held converse of hope and love and hath walked in heaven, should he carry in his eyes, his words, and his perfumed raiment the sacred tokens of divine intercourse!—Henry Ward Beecher.

The Silent Little Prayer.

My little boy knelt at my knee last night
And said the prayer my mother taught me long ago;
Then for a while was silent, with his head still bowed,
And when at last he rose to give the kiss
For which I waited, and withdrew his arms,

I asked him why he had kept kneeling when
His "Now I lay me down to sleep" was done.
Grave-faced, he said, "In Sunday-school they asked
The children all, when they have said their prayers,
To whisper, asking God, up there, to bless
The little ones in China and to put
The love of Jesus in their hearts." If one
True, tender little prayer like that were said
For me each night, I'd ask no more and claim
The richest blessing God may send as mine.

The Loom and Web of Life.

Life's moving web is woven fast
In sunshine and in tears;
The woof made up of incidents
Adorns the warp of years.
The flying shuttle plays the part
Of moments as they go;
The warp affixes all the scenes
Now moving to and fro.

And living nature is the loom
That throws with wondrous will
The flying shuttle day by day
With such unerring skill;
And in and out with canny knots
The varied meshes run,
As colors blend in magic tones
Inwoven one by one.

But far above all nature's realm,
Beyond her wide command,
Divine intelligence controls
The forces of that hand;
He shapes the mottled web of life,
Its sunshine and its shade,
And bears away the lengthened roll
Which his own hand has made.

But by and by, when nature throws
Her last long thread of tears,
The woven web complete and wound
For all the coming years,
Then, yonder, where the deeds are known,
Where faith is changed to sight,
The scenes of life on earth will be
All woven into light.

—Reverend John O. Foster.

The times want scholars—scholars who shall shape
The doubtful destinies of dubious years,
And land the ark that bears our country's good,
Safe on some peaceful Ararat at last.

The age wants heroes—heroes who shall dare
To struggle in the solid ranks of truth;
To clutch the monster error by the throat
And lead a universal freedom in.—Sel.

It Doesn't Matter.

A delicate boy with a twisted leg
Was trudging along one day,
When I stopped to pity the little man
And some kindly words to say,
"I know lots of boys who are cripples," he said,
"So it doesn't matter much."

Oh, brave little soul, with your cross of pain,
I would that our hearts could say,
When the cares of life press heavily

And our erstwhile sky is gray,
 "There are many who bear a load of care,
 So it doesn't matter much."

—Ruth Sterry, in Tribune.

Help for the Sorrowing and Suffering.

There are suffering people everywhere. There are sorrowing people everywhere. There are burdened, breaking hearts everywhere. More than the fortunate and happy ever imagine are they who walk life's journey with sad and heavy hearts. There are sorrows that come from poverty and sorrows that come from sin. There are griefs that burden weary souls because of disease and weakness of body, and other griefs as great or greater that result from the loss of loved ones. To all the smitten, suffering and discouraged, the good pastor is indeed a son of consolation. Doubtless there are numberless records of sin and sorrow and suffering, but one is now lying before me that has greatly touched my heart. The pastor who is giving a report of his work says: "The past month has been taken up as follows: I have made eighty regular pastoral calls; held eight preaching services; attended four sessions of the Sunday-school and led a Bible class; held after-services following the preaching on Sunday evenings; officiated at several funerals and been constant in labors among the sick and poor." Here is a sample of one afternoon's work: "Called where the wife and mother of two children is in trouble. The younger child is only four weeks old. The father got drunk a few nights since, fell in the street and cut his head very badly, was brought home at two o'clock in the morning, routed the poor woman up, while three policeman dragged in the helpless sot. She has not slept for three nights, the husband in the meantime being only semiconscious. They are poor and have nothing with which to pay rent or purchase food." Another family not far from the one just mentioned: "Wife and four children, the youngest only a few weeks old. The husband drinking up all he earns, the mother sick and the family left without the necessities of life." Another family still: "Wife and five children and all the children sick, nothing in the house to eat, no means to buy anything; landlord threatening to turn the family outdoors; the husband full of licensed beer. . . . And so I might take you to a score of such families who attend our church if they attend anywhere."

And all this in this so-called Christian land. It is enough to cause the hot blood of righteous wrath to stir every heart that is loyal to the Lord Jesus Christ. What an unspeakable shame and disgrace that the Christian people of this day and generation will tolerate the traffic that curses so many homes! If the drink habit is a sin, then it is the duty of all good people to remove the temptation to sin. If the drink habit is a disease, then the deadly poison that induces the disease ought to be put quite out of the reach of the sick.

These facts in a pastor's experience show us the vast, difficult, and most discouraging obstructions which lie in the pathway of the faithful pastor. If we wait for outside organizations to remove them we shall wait in vain. If we wait for organizations within the church our waiting will not avail. There is only one sure way to do the work of God committed to the hands of God's ambassadors—they must do it themselves. According to the strength and wisdom given them, they must consecrate themselves to seeking out the wretched, the outcasts, the slaves of sin and, with tender sympathy, might, faith, and tireless love lift up and lead to Christ even the most hopeless. Such service calls for uttermost devotion, self-denial and self-sacrifice, but in such service the soul will find sweetest fellowship with the blessed Christ. The more wretched and hopeless the people, the more need of the pastor's presence, sympathy and love. The Master alone knows how many and peculiar are the duties of the pastor. There must be a constant and vivid sense of the presence of Jesus in order to their performance.—Bishop W. F. Mallalieu.

Questions and Answers.

1. Question.—In local schools is the librarian alone expected to select and purchase books for the library with money raised for the purpose? Answer.—No. He may be left to do such work but it is quite a common practice for schools to appoint a library committee of which the school librarian is usually chairman, and they to make selections and purchases. Also to judge of the fitness of any book that may be donated. This committee should be a standing committee for perhaps a year or as the school may elect.

2. Question.—Should the treasurer give money to the secretary or librarian whenever asked for, without order or advice from any one else? Answer.—No. Schools usually make provision for the expenditure of the funds of the school. The regular supplies must be decided upon by the superintendent and most schools have a standing order for the treasurer to pay such regular demands. But in case of purchasing books, the school should place it in the hands of a committee of one or more to make purchases up to the limit they may set. All schools, however, do not require written orders for moneys paid out, though it is a very safe plan and usually the best.

3. Question.—Is the treasurer to take charge of money raised for purchasing of books? Answer.—Yes. All moneys of the school should pass through the treasurer's hands, that an accurate account may be kept thereof.

4. Question.—May money be taken from the regular treasury for purchasing books? Answer.—Yes, if the school so elects. They may appropriate their money as they think best. Many schools set apart one collection in each month or quarter for library purposes. Others appropriate a certain per cent of all of their collections for such purpose. Each school has the right to say how it shall be done in their case.

Doing Better Than We Know How.

Doing as well as we know how is ordinarily considered a pretty creditable performance. One who can honestly say that he has done as well as he knows how is likely to take credit to himself for his doing; and, in passing judgment on another for his conduct, we are inclined to commend him if he, or if we, can say that he has done as well as he knows how. Yet just here is a common mistake of mankind. All of us ought to do better than we know how. Doing only as well as we know how may be a lack and a failure on our part.

An employer set a young man at a task. The task required carefulness, intelligence, patience, skill. When the young man had finished the task, and reported it, the employer saw that it was done bunglingly, imperfectly, and in every way unsatisfactorily. He told the young man so.

"But," said the young man, "I did the best I knew how."

"Did the best you knew how! Why, any fool could do that! I wanted you to do something better."

That was a blunt way of putting a truth, but it was the truth that was put thus bluntly. It would be well for every young man, or older one, to consider that truth. Doing better than one knows how is the possibility and imperative duty of every one who is above the level of a born fool or an idiot. An ordinary infant, who is not an idiot, takes his first toddling steps in life, and begins to walk, by doing better than he knows how; and he is encouraged to find that he is able to do so. In this way he gets on in life. All his progress, in every line and sphere, is similarly made by doing better than he knows how,—better than "any fool can do." In this way he can hope to keep on improving and attaining through this life, and into the endless eons of eternity.

A schoolboy would be discouraged, or he ought to be, if he could not do better each day than he knew how when the day began. It is only in this way that he makes progress beyond himself and beyond his fellows. A farmer's boy would never learn to milk a cow, to plant seed, to gather potatoes, or to husk corn, if he only did as well as he knew how to begin with, and, if that were his limit, the farmer would want to get another boy in his stead. And thus it is with a lad on a sailing-vessel or a railroad, or with a young mechanic making shoes, or buildings, or watches. Thus with one setting type, or reading proof, or writing editorials. Doing only as well as one knows how is a fatal barrier to progress and improvement.

The higher one rises in spheres of effort and attainment, the more clearly evidenced by his experience is this important truth. Doing better than one's best is ever the duty and the characteristic of a superior person. When an admirer of the work of J. Q. A. Ward, the American sculptor, asked him which of his artistic works he counted the best, the instant reply of the sculptor was, "My next." That man was not satisfied with doing his best. He felt that he must do better than that. Thorwaldsen, the great Danish sculptor, went from triumph to triumph in the artistic world by thus continually doing better than his best. But there came a time, in his advancing years, when he was discouraged and depressed. As he scrutinized his latest finished work, he could see no flaw in it, nor how he could hope to improve on it if he were to try again. Because of this he felt that his mission was ended. He could no longer expect to do better than his best. His hope of improvement was ended for this life.

Doing better than one knows how, doing better than one's best, is the duty and the practical attainment of every person who wants to fill his place in the world and to help his fellows as he should. One who expects to be limited, in his work and in his endeavors, by the best that he has done, or by the best that others have done, or by what he can do, is practically without the noblest ambition, and certainly without the highest aspirations. To be stopped by the thought of the impossible is to be held within the bounds of the ordinary and the commonplace.

All substantial progress in this world is by doing better than one knows how. Every great explorer and discoverer and inventor and pioneer and master missionary, in all lands and on all seas and in all the ages, has secured to the world and to his fellow results and advantages of priceless value, and has proved himself a benefactor of his race, because he was not limited by precedents and possibilities, but was determined to do better than his best, better than he knew how. Thus it was with all the long roll of noble names, from Columbus and Gutenberg and Magellan and De Soto and Xavier, and Watt and Fulton and Sir John Herschel and Franklin and Faraday and Jenner and Carey and Livingstone and Eli Whitney and Joseph Henry and S. F. B. Morse and Cyrus W. Field and E. K. Kane and Doctor Horace Wells and Lord Lister and Goodyear, to Edison and Roentgen and Tesla and Marconi, and their peers, who have been worthy of the world's honor. Thus it will be with any who are now leaders of their fellows, or who are truly reckoned the world's benefactors.

It is said that Napoleon in a critical emergency gave an order to one of his marshals for a daring and unexpected movement. "Sire, it is impossible!" replied the marshal. "Impossible?" exclaimed Napoleon. "Then it shall be done!" Doing the impossible was a Napoleonic mode of generalship, and there ought to be something of that method of planning and acting in the course of every true man of God and soldier of Christ.

We may, indeed, in ourselves, lack the genius and the intellect and the courage and the commanding personality of Napoleon, but One greater than Napoleon is with us, and we may be in him and his power may be ours. To him and to those who are in him nothing is impossible. Jesus himself says, as to the humblest of those who trust him, "All things are possible to him that believeth." And again, "Nothing shall be impossible unto you [that believe]." Is there any limitation of power there indicated to those who are in Christ? In Christ, and in his strength, we have the duty and the power to be always doing better than we know how.—Sunday School Times.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, November 11.

Editors Herald: We are still alive and the Utah contingent says we are still kicking. In fact, we were told yesterday that we as a church, got all their kickers and they wondered how we got along with them. Our reply was that to "possess the ability and courage to deliver a hearty kick and in the right time and place was certainly commendable." We could not but think of Christ kicking at the Scribes and Pharisees who made the law of God of none effect by their traditions paid tithes of mint and rue and cummin and neglected the weightier things of the law, such as justice, judgment, mercy, and truth, and who made "My father's house a den of thieves," and because of that kicking he was cast out of the synagogues, i. e., cut off from the Jewish church. And not only was he cast out, but every kicker, who followed him, and the church of Christ became their haven of refuge. Our conclusion was, that the company of such kickers was and is good.

We have been busy with our street work here until of late, when the cold weather has stopped that part of the work. We now are commencing our campaign of halls and school houses, with now and then a meeting house opened to us. Our first attempt at this was on October 21, when through efforts of Bro. Pederson, the use of a school room at East Bountiful was secured. With Bro. Kelley and my wife as backers, we occupied with fairly good liberty and before a fairly good-sized and attentive audience. As it was our first time there we thought it only proper to tell them why we considered it necessary to stand among the "apostate Josephites" as they call us, and cry repentance to this people. Of course, among other reasons was that of polygamy. And although we did not make any especial strike at this doctrine, only putting it in contrast with the Book of Mormon teaching, when we had opened the door for questions, an Elder Woods who had but lately returned from a mission to England, arose and commenced to talk upon that principle, when we stopped him and suggested that if he had a question to ask, we would hear him and answer, but if it was a discussion that was wanted (and hitherto we had failed to be able to induce any of their elders to enter into a discussion of the matter), we would be glad to arrange with him and meet him upon that or any other disputed point. Of course he did not believe in discussion, but he would like to speak upon the subject of polygamy; and when we asked how much time he wanted he answered, "An hour and a half." Well, the result was an appointment for the 23d and we told him that he could have the first chance and all the time that he wished. When the evening came he was present and occupied three hours and ten minutes, simply opening up the subject of polygamy. We say "simply opening" the subject, for the next appointment (the 26th) was our turn, and we had a crowded house and an excellent blessing from the Spirit. And while there was an effort from some of the ringleaders to interrupt us and to stamper our audience, they signally failed to keep the people from hearing the truth. We are satisfied that good was done and friends gained for the cause.

It is all right to win these people with kindness. That we always endeavor to do; but still there are times when Adam-god, blood-atonement, polygamy, and kindred evils must be mentioned if we are to cry repentance to this people.

If they would only "confess their sins and forsake them" none would be more ready than we to say, and in fact in our public utterances to remember them no more. But as long as they hug them to their bosoms and cry, "Sacred truth revealed from heaven," and by precept, and, as far as possible, example, teach them to the young, just so long will we be under the necessity of raising the warning voice, even if it does "intensify the hatred already existing in the hearts of many" against not only the "Josephites," but also against all who oppose these errors and the gigantic system of "priestcraft" that fattens thereon. And apropos of this subject we inclose some clippings that will emphasize the point. Three of them in relation to Apostle (save the mark!) Grant and his plural wives, of which he openly boasts that "if the laws of the United States would permit" he would "make it three." And very pertinent is the inquiry of the editor of the Salt Lake Herald, "Will he be good enough to point out the statute under which he is working now?" And our comment upon that point would be, Certainly under no statute of the United States, neither under any command of God, for even with the Manifesto here, which they contend is a "revelation from God," we fail to see how he could make it three and be in harmony therewith. Not to mention God's law, indeed, as given in Book of Mormon, where the law is so plain, that a way-faring man, though an apostle in the Utah Church, need not err therein. Apostle Grant's statement only emphasizes the fact that only the strong arm of a law that is "made for . . . the lawless and disobedient, . . . for whormongers, . . . for liars, for perjured persons [note the pledges given to the United States of an abandonment of this same polygamy], and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine" (1 Timothy 1:9-10) can hold such men to even a semblance of morality. Well did Peter say they were "chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness," and such teachings to our young people in the colleges can only result in one of two things, either to make them "despise" the law of God and this government which he declares was appointed and formed by his inspiration, or to despise the men who thus pose as apostles of Christ while they are really deceitful workers of iniquity.

The other quotation taken from the Salt Lake Telegram is in reference to a follower of such "apostles" who declares, "I am god over my family. I do not need to ask my wife's forgiveness for what I do. It's between me and my God." And well does this wife who has been wronged in this system of "concubinage" cry out, "I'd like to know what his God is!" And when this wife reminded him that he ought to keep the law, his answer was that when he was serving God he did not care for the law.

Bro. Editor, as long as we are surrounded by such examples, we shall be obliged to strike at the root of the tree, even if some who are clinging to its branches, and partaking of its sin-breeding fruits, do get angry.

Well, once in a while there are pleasant experiences in the ministry even here, and one came to us when we were granted the use of the meeting house at West Bountiful the evening of the 28th ult., and where by request we spoke upon the subject of "The Succession." Here the Bishop took charge of the meeting and the choir sang for us. And while we presented our faith many took notes; and while there was a quizzical smile with some at first, they looked quite grave and earnest as we massed our evidence and pressed home the only logical conclusion that could be drawn therefrom. A courteous reception here, and we earnestly pray that the Master may reward them by the help of the Spirit, that they may see light in this light.

From the 5th inst. to the 8th we visited with and preached to the Saints of Ogden and Plain City. It is needless to say that we enjoyed our visit with them; and last night we had the pleasure of speaking the words that made Mr. James F. Huscroft, of Creston, Canada, and Sr. Hannah Wardle (daughter of Bro. and Sr. James Wardle), of East Jordan, husband and wife. And we yet feel to echo the words, "May God add his blessing."

Since writing last we have baptized four, three at Provo and one here. Our family has lately undergone and to some extent still is undergoing, a siege of something that we call the "grip." However, at present are on the mend. As for the writer, personally, he is well, his appetite is good, and he is hopeful of better times in the future, when the gospel leaven shall more thoroughly work and the time of harvest come.

May the Master keep us faithful.

RICHMANDALE, Ohio, November 16.

Dear Herald: I am in the faith and trying to let my light shine. Husband and myself are the only Saints in this place, but we are made glad by the weekly visit of the HERALD laden with good news and healthful food, and the Ensign, Hope, and Autumn Leaves, all full of cheer. We have Sunday-school each Sunday. We tell the good old gospel story to our neighbors. If God has a people here, my daily prayer is that he will draw them into the fold.

Your sister,

ANNIE E. SPAWN.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, November 17.

Editors Herald: My health is much improved, though incessant pulpit work, as in days of old, makes me very nervous, which disturbs my sleep greatly. But I am thankful to God for his unbounded mercy towards me. I am now taking a tour through the Spring River District, setting in order and regulating some things for the betterment of the work, I believe. Have been in the district twenty days and preached twenty sermons. On the 19th I go to Eldorado Springs for four days, and home to spend Thanksgiving with my family.

I. N. WHITE.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, November 6.

Editors Herald: The quarterly conference of the Western Maine District convened at this place October 31 and November 1. Several of the ministry present; fine weather and a crowded house at every service. We trust that as a result of this conference much good will make itself manifest and God's kingdom on earth be advanced thereby.

The work here is not in quite so flourishing a condition as it has been in the past few months, due, I suppose, to a lack of interest in the work by some of the Saints. Yet there are some who are striving, I believe, to build up the Church and advance the work in every way possible.

Bro. J. N. Ames, who has been with us for a long time, in company with his wife, will leave soon for Massachusetts, where he will spend a few weeks with the Saints. We feel that he has been instrumental in building up the Church here in a great degree, and pray that the good Lord may be with him and his companion.

We expect to resume work on our chapel, now building, in a few days, and hope that we shall have the privilege of holding meetings there early next year.

Personally, I am still working as a common soldier in the Lord's ranks doing what I can under the circumstances for him who has done so much for me. I am trying to live a watchful, prayerful life, living according to the divine precepts that I may at last enjoy a celestial glory with Christ and the redeemed.

Saints, let us all try to live such pure lives, setting good examples before our fellow men, that we may not only receive the reward of the faithful ourselves, but help others to receive it, too. Let us be faithful to him who has died that we might in the fullest sense of the word so live that we may at last receive a crown of eternal life.

I ask the prayers of the Saints everywhere.

WALLACE A. SMALL.

MIDDLE VALLEY, Idaho, November 8.

Editors Herald: On the 6th inst. we closed a series of ten meetings here, and I am now about ready to depart for points south and east of here.

The "Campbellites" are in the majority in this valley, and, like all others of that persuasion, use all their influence against the latter-day work. However, we have had a good attendance at the meetings just closed, and have gained some friends to the cause.

We closed a series of ten meetings near Council on the 25th ult., and left some there who were ready for baptism; but on account of their guardians being positively opposed to it, we did not think it wisdom to baptize them under those conditions.

We have had considerable rain here the last few days, and the snow is quite low on the hills, causing them to have a chilly appearance.

I ever pray for the spread of the gospel news.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

LEHIGH, Indian Territory, November 9.

Editors Herald: I came here thirteen days ago with the gospel tent, at the request of the district president, A. Z. Rudd. Lehigh is a coal-mining town. There are two families of Saints here. Elders C. M. Fultz and A. G. Meyers have given me assistance. The weather was quite cold, but we had fair crowds. Some nights every seat was taken. I believe we have made a great many friends. I have preached considerably on the Book of Mormon, and have sold seven copies of it in this town. The work is started here, and it will be a good place for some of our elders to come and gather in the sheaves, as I go now to other fields. I am thankful to my heavenly Father for strength. I have no other desire than to do the will of God while I remain here.

Indian Territory is becoming a good field for the preaching of the gospel.

May the Lord bless all his Saints.

PETER ADAMSON.

LEXINGTON, Tennessee, November 7.

Editors Herald: I thought I would drop a few lines from these parts to let you know that the work is not lagging here under the wise counsel of Ern. S. Reed and J. H. Scott. Both are elders whom the Lord has raised up to look after his work here in these parts. They have been born and raised in Henderson County, Tennessee, and it affords me pleasure to say they have lived so they have been an honor to the cause. No one is able to say aught against them truthfully. This is as it should be by all Latter Day Saints. I have met with different men here who oppose the work, but when they refer to the two brethren mentioned, they say they are good men, honorable in their dealings and Christians in every respect. S. Reed was baptized in California in 1882 by W. W. Blair. J. H. Scott was baptized in Henderson County, Tennessee, in 1886 by John Thomas. Since their baptism both men have stood firm to the work here in this county. This is where the Haley Creek Branch is located. They have a nice house and it is paid for. It was built when the Saints here numbered only seven, four men and three women. All poor men; renters, most of them.

Since the work was opened here there have been some seventy-five or eighty brought into the Church in this county, and some in the adjoining county. I am glad to say the Saints are improving here fast and are willing to perform their duties as fast as they learn them. I have been laboring among the Saints here of late trying to teach them their whole duty as true Saints. Quite a number have come forward and placed their names on the tithing book, besides making some free-will offerings to help out the missionaries. This help came in such a good time. I was thinking perhaps I would have to strike out to our district conference on foot, some seventy or eighty miles away. This would have been a little hard on C. L., but I had decided it would not be as hard on me as it would be to hint around to the Saints that I needed help. But thanks to them, I did not have to do either. May the Lord bless their offerings and prosper them in all their works.

I will leave here this week to meet with the Saints in conference at Foundryhill, Henry County, Tennessee. I am traveling alone of late, as my companion, Elder J. R. McClain, thought best to leave me here and go to Cradlan, Kentucky, to look after the work there. He and I are the only ones in this district under appointment since Bro. W. R. Smith was called to Alabama by our missionary in charge. He writes me he is well pleased with his new field. Hope he may meet with success down in that country.

I am meeting with some good people here who are willing to hear our claims. They seem to be interested. Some say their preachers can not teach them anything. They want to go to hear men preach who can teach them some Bible. I baptized seven yesterday near Lexington, Tennessee. Left others almost ready for baptism. I will visit the eastern part of this State as soon as I can get the time to do so. The harvest is truly great but the laborers are few. Saints in Tennessee and Kentucky, pray the Lord that he will send more laborers into this field; also bring your tithings into the storehouse.

C. L. SNOW.

PLEASANTON, Iowa, November 10.

Editors Herald: On October 18 Bro. Joseph Bogue took me to the Hill Schoolhouse, about four miles southwest of Decatur City. I preached there for a week and had a full house every night, but chiefly composed of young people.

We visited Decatur City and got the promise to use the Christian church building to preach in as soon as there is some repairing done on the building.

While up in that section of country I found conditions that made me marvel; that is to find people who had lived for twenty years or more within nine miles of Lamoni and had never heard the gospel. How will it be with some who are holding the priesthood and "lying on their oars"? Does the Lord mean what he says in Doctrine and Covenants, section 116, "Be ye very careful, for many elders have been ordained unto me, and are come under my condemnation, by reason of neglecting to lift up their voices in my cause, and for such there is tribulation and anguish: haply they themselves may be saved (if doing no evil) though their glory, which is given for their works, be withheld, or in other words their works are burned, not being profitable unto me"? There may be reasonable grounds for excuses but we want to be sure of that.

I call to mind the year of 1884 when Bro. I. N. White and I moved to Henry County, Missouri, each with a family to provide for, Bro. I. N. being crippled and I a poor, weak creature with no health to speak of.

Here lay a vast field before us where the gospel had never been preached. What were we to do? Sit still? Ah, no! Bro. I. N. took the mission field under general appointment. The Lord opened the way before him. I began to preach in schoolhouses and such other places as I could get, leaving oftentimes our business in the hands of young boys to manage; but the Lord did not forsake us, and we were blessed in "basket and store." Soon scores were baptized into the kingdom of God. Elders and priests were called from these faithful ones and the gospel was carried to others until a district was organized and not long until it numbered somewhere between eight and nine hundred. I know much is required at the hands of the local priests and elders of the branches. If they would but move out and occupy in schoolhouses and prepare the way before the missionary, what a wonderful gathering into the kingdom there would be! The Lord has said in Doctrine and Covenants, section 60: "But with some I am not well pleased, for they will not open their mouths, but hide the talent which I have given unto them because of the fear of man. Woe unto such, for mine anger is kindled against them." Also: "Thou shall not idle away thy time; neither shalt thou bury thy talent that it may not be known."

Now dear reader, does this apply to you? If so, what are you going to do about it? Decide now and act.

Bro. J. S. Snively and I commenced a protracted meeting here November 1 and have continued right along; good hearing and fair interest most of the time. Two were baptized last Sunday and we still look for more. Bro. William Anderson was with us last Sunday. It was a fine day, and all seemed to be pleased and rejoiced on account of the meetings.

May the good Lord bless this branch, officers, members, and all, is my prayer.
D. C. WHITE.

UNION FURNACE, Ohio, November 14.

Dear Herald: We are of the scattered ones—only five members here—and our nearest branch is fourteen miles away, so we do not get to attend very often; but we try and get together once in a while for prayers and sacrament services, which we all enjoy.

We are trying to live our religion in this place so as to show to the world that this gospel of the latter days is more than a dead form, such as so many of the Churches have. We enjoy reading all the Church papers—HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, and Hope—and always look forward to their coming with pleasure, and after we get them read give them to others to read, always praying that they may receive light and knowledge from them, and in this way we try to help spread the gospel.
S. B. KRUBEL.

BRIDGE, Oregon, November 10.

Editors Herald: We have been having a series of meetings here which closed a few days ago. Bro. Hiram L. Holt began preaching October 8 to an audience of about twenty-two. He preached on fifteen days, delivering twenty sermons; and before the meetings closed the number in attendance had increased to about seventy-five people. There were a few questions asked which were very satisfactorily answered. The meetings resulted in bringing two into the kingdom, and two others have requested baptism.

Our friend, Mr. Nosler, a member of the Christian or Disciple Church, furnished the hall and lights free of charge. For such kindness we feel very thankful.

May God speed the day when all honest souls will obey this gospel of the kingdom.
R. A. CRIBBINS.

TENANTS HARBOR, Maine, November 12.

Editors Herald: Surely there is no mistaking the fulfilling of the prophecies of scripture to an observing and sincere mind. Between six and seven o'clock in the evening of October 31 last I started out for a walk. The moon was about half full and shining brightly, with not a cloud to be seen in the whole heavens. I had not walked far on the sidewalk before my attention was attracted by a bright spot in the northeast. Then another spot appeared to the west of the first one. This one began to put out streamers. Both spots commenced spreading and forming into a most beautiful bow, each end hidden from sight behind the earth, one in the northwest, the other in the northeast. While looking at it one seemed to be carried away from earth, it was so beautiful. It remained some ten minutes, then scattered away and nothing was to be seen but the clear sky.

Bro. Hooper, from Iowa, was here to visit relatives this fall, and preached us some good sermons. Applied for the Baptist chapel to preach in and was refused, so preached in the school-houses and Odd-fellows Hall.

One F. W. Sanford is building up a city in the northern part of Maine, called Shiloh. He claims to be Elijah the restorer. They have a fine yacht, and some thirty of them, men and women, live on board, going from harbor to harbor, holding meetings wherever they can get a chance, claiming to preach the everlasting gospel and the gathering of Jews and Gentiles to Jerusalem. They preach some good doctrine; but they are like the rest of the professed Christians, they know nothing of the working of the Holy Ghost.
D. S. SEAVEY.

TACOMA, Washington, November 13.

Editors Herald: The few Saints in Tacoma are trying to build a church, so that when our elders come they will have a place to preach in. This is a city of about sixty thousand inhabitants, and it seems a shame that in all this place there are only one or two small private houses for our elders to preach in when they come. We all know that people will not turn out as they would if we had a church.

We have had some grand sermons here this fall, but very few to listen to them. I want to ask the Saints, are there any who are interested in the master's work for this part of the vineyard? If there are, will they make it manifest by helping us a little? We are not trying to build a large church,—one perhaps twenty-four by thirty-six;—but we do want it very much, and think there would be a good opening here, if we had one. Any favors will be gladly and thankfully received. All those wishing to help can send to Mrs. J. H. Van Eaton, Tacoma, Washington.

We have had Brn. Sheldon, Roberts, and Griffiths with us this fall. Brn. Griffiths and Roberts made a very short stay.

Your sister,

MRS. J. H. VAN EATON, Treasurer.

RHODES, Iowa, November 15.

Editors Herald: Lest some may have received a wrong impression from the reading of my letter in HERALD for October 14, I make an explanation. It might appear from the reading that the speakers at the reunion at this place attacked the faith of the Methodist Church and that Reverend Bracket only took up the cudgel (so to speak) against the Latter Day Saints in self-defense. Such was not the case. The Methodist Church was only incidentally mentioned. The preaching was all free from antagonism to a marked degree. The speakers presented the faith and doctrine of the Church in a clear, forceful manner, and let others alone; which we believe is as it should be. We are well aware, however, that the gospel can not be preached in its fullness without coming in contact with the faith of some. Even some of the outsiders who attended our meetings said the lecture was uncalled for and very much out of place; that they heard nothing out of the way at the "tent-meetings."

One lady whom Mr. Bracket visited with a view to getting her to join his Church, telling her that the Book of Mormon was not fit to read, is now reading it, and has asked for some of our church papers to read.

Surely the Lord can make the wrath of man to praise him.

I do not think the "lecture" has injured either the work or the Saints here in the estimation of the people.

We are earnestly praying that the heaven may continue to work, and that the honest in heart may speedily be gathered out.

Not having any public place to hold services in is a great hindrance to the work. There are not enough of us to pay the prices they ask for halls, even if there were a suitable one in town. But if we do the best we can that ends our responsibility, and God will bring to pass his purposes in his own way. I trust, however, that we may not come short of doing the very best we can, but that we may diligently improve the golden opportunities that come to us,
MATTIE HUGHES.

VOSHOLL, Missouri, November 10.

Editors Herald: I arrived in my field in May and Bro. W. J. Smith came in a few days later. Since that time we have been actively pushing the work. The St. Louis District is a large one, with only two active missionaries this year, and one of them confined principally to the city of St. Louis. This gives the others a large territory to cover.

There is work in this field for at least four good, active men. It has been sadly neglected on account of not having men to put into it; but by persistent work we are getting the district in good condition. Some trouble of long standing has been properly adjusted, to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. Our work has been confined among the branches principally, but we have found time to run the district tent in the city of St. Louis for nearly two months, and also make some new openings which we think will be productive of good. One of them is at Hillsborough, Illinois, the county-seat of Montgomery County, where lives our worthy brother, Alfred Ferry, and his family. I went there on August 7 and held meetings on the street every night and three times on Sunday until the 23d. I think seed was sown that will be productive of good results. I have been at this place since October 18. Will remain here a short time and then go to Nebo, Illinois, until district conference, which convenes at St. Louis December 19 and 20. There is a branch here of seventy-five members, scattered over a large territory. They have a neat little church of their own and most of them are doing what they can to advance the cause we all should love to honor.

Bro. W. J. Smith, our district president and submissionary in charge, paid this branch a visit of a few days, leaving on the 9th inst. for St. Louis. We were sorry to see him go, but the work in the city demands constant attention.

There are many noble-hearted Saints in this district who care for the missionary.

W. R. ODELL.

DES MOINES, Iowa, November 14.

Dear Herald: Our district Sunday-school superintendent, Ward Christy, has been out over the district the past two weeks looking after the Sunday-school work in connection with his insurance business. He also speaks in the interest of the Religio.

Bro. and Sr. George Elliott, of Baxter, met with a serious loss the past month by the burning of their barn and its contents. Bro. and Sr. C. J. Carlson, of Dexter, moved this week from their farm here to Independence, Missouri. We regret to lose them from our district. Our district president, H. A. McCoy, has been in the north part of the district for some time past, and good interest is reported. J. F. Mintun has been south of the city the past week, and spoke here in the city the 13th and 14th inst., and thence to the east part of the district. The new tract which he recently prepared entitled, "The Book of Mormon, not From Spalding's Manuscript, but a Biblical Necessity," is a collection of facts on a small leaflet that is handy and it is being circulated quite freely.

Arrangements are being completed for the organization of a branch in Madison County, and most of the members will go out from the Des Moines Branch.

The progress of church work in the city here is continuing. Some more to come into the Church soon. The interest in the Sunday-school is good, especially among the junior members. Those now in the intermediate and primary departments will soon grow to mature years, and if their interest continues they will occupy important places. In the preaching service, visiting elders are invited to occupy the stand when in the city, and at other times the local officers occupy, those of the lesser priesthood speaking frequently. The social meetings are well attended and are good, spiritual meetings.

The Religio is more and more coming into prominence, and we fully believe is filling its mission in being a "help" to the Church. Our branch president is an earnest, active Religi- an and recognizes the worth of the society in asking it to assist in church work. This it is doing in many ways. The different committees which the society brings into existence each finds work to do. The program committee provides the literary work for each meeting. These have been in the form of debates, papers, etc. The debates have been interesting and helpful in bringing the young people into active work. Several very interesting papers have been prepared recently, and some of these are worthy to find their way into print at some time. The literature committee is handling a large amount of reading matter. It takes the church literature from the homes where it has been laid aside and places it where it is in many cases most thankfully received and read, being as food to hungry souls. The relief committee finds its work to do; and so on with all the committees. A frequent expression of our branch president is, "The Religio can do that."

If all branch presidents would stop and carefully consider the offer of the Religio to be a "help" to them in their work, if they would consider this kind offer for just one half hour, they would arrive at the conclusion that many of their brother presidents have reached, that the Religio is a "help," and it would not be long until every branch had an active Religio society, the members all studying God's sacred word as found in the Book of Mormon, those who wished developing their talents in a literary way, and the several committees doing a large amount of certain church work.

Sample copies of the HERALD have recently gone into many homes of Saints in the district, and we hope that your calling once or twice will be so kindly received that these homes will ask you to come weekly the coming year.

Thanksgiving Day is soon here, and we as the children of light can most heartily join with all the people of our nation in giving thanks to God.

A. A. REAMS.

Extracts from Letters.

C. U. Grant wrote from Bay Port, Michigan, November 16: "I drove fifteen miles yesterday (Sunday) morning to meet with the Pigeon River Saints in prayer-meeting. We met at eleven o'clock for prayer service. Truly it was a love feast to be long remembered. At three o'clock in the afternoon we met to listen to an address from O. J. Haun, which was delivered in power, the Spirit being present in power, which caused us to rejoice, knowing surely God is with his people. We reached home about half past seven in the evening feeling well repaid for the journey. I shall ever strive to come higher, and assist the cause of Christ in every way I can."

The following is an instance of "the strenuous life," an extract from a letter of Bro. R. C. Evans, November 11, the Sunday referred to being November 8: "While resting Sunday last, I presided over prayer-meeting at nine o'clock in the forenoon, and preached at eleven o'clock; jumped into a buggy, rode eighteen miles to St. Thomas, ate lunch on the way; preached funeralsermon of Elder Compton's father at three o'clock in the afternoon, then drove to London, arriving seven o'clock in the evening, preached to packed church. Several hundred people heard funeral sermon."

Bro. F. C. Keck, writing from Shaw, Kansas, November 12, says: "I am having large crowds, a fine interest, and the best of liberty telling the angel's message."

Sr. Margaret Johnson, Cucamonga, California, November 5, writes, expressing her appreciation of both HERALD and Ensign. Her companion is not a member. She writes: "If there are any of the Saints who have two copies of "With the Church in an Early Day" and care to dispose of one, I would gladly pay what it cost them, so that I might place the book in the hands of my six children, the oldest of whom is thirteen years of age. Our eldest belongs to the Church, and in vacation he works on the fruit farms and earns enough to buy winter clothes for all the children. He earned nearly twenty dollars this summer, and he pays his tithing."

Convention Minutes.

Alabama.—Met with Pleasant Hill Branch, near McKenzie, Alabama, October 2, 1903, at 10 a. m. The forenoon session was devoted to the discussion of the needs of the district. Officers reporting: E. N. McCall, Bertha D. Harper, and O. M. Sellers. Schools reporting: Pleasant Hill and Lone Star. Officers elected: E. N. McCall, superintendent; Bertha D. Harper, assistant superintendent; D. T. Parker, secretary; L. G. Sellers, treasurer; Bertha D. Harper, librarian. Delegate to General Convention, Elder I. N. Roberts—authorized to cast entire vote of school. Adjourned to meet Friday before next quarterly conference.

Northeastern Missouri.—Met at Greenleaf Chapel, October 2, 1903; William Chapman superintendent, Margaret L. Richards assistant superintendent, George A. Tryon secretary. Bevier, Higbee, and Greenleaf schools reported. Superintendents' reports read from Sr. Ellen Davies and George A. Tryon. The resignation of Bro. J. A. Tanner, district historian, was accepted and Sr. Margaret L. Richards was chosen to fill the place. It was ordered that hereafter we dispense with the regular evening program and devote time to institute work. Considerable time was devoted to institute work and the discussion of subjects of interest to the Sunday-school workers. Adjournment was taken subject to the call of district officers.

Chatham.—Convened at Wallaceburg on October 16, 1903; President R. C. Evans was chosen to preside; Sr. Jessie A. Hackett, Bro. J. W. Badder and Sr. C. E. Bristol as associates; Mary M. Green and Walter L. Bennett secretaries. The school reports were in tabular form and as far as had been sent in quarterly and correctly were read and accepted. Reports from district librarian and treasurer were read and approved; also written reports from various officers were read. It was moved and carried that a banner be purchased costing $25 and the design be left to the presiding officers. Moved and carried that each school in the district send President R. C. Evans $1 to assist in replacing the veil in Kirtland Temple, to be sent the first week in December 1903. Officers elected: Sr. Jessie A. Hackett, district superintendent; Bro. John W. Badder, first assistant superintendent; Sr. C. E. Bristol, second assistant superintendent; Sr. Mary M. Green, secretary; Bro. George A. McFadden, treasurer; Bro. Leslie Brown, librarian. Sr. Estella Kettlewell was chosen as Home Class Superintendent. Bro. J. W. Badder and Sr. Jessie A. Hackett were chosen as delegates to the General Convention at Kirtland, and empowered to choose others. The evening entertainment was in charge of President R. C. Evans and consisted of an address from the Religions and Saints to him, followed by a fitting reply. Other speeches were given, music, songs, recitations, and selections on the phonograph. A prayer and testimony meeting was held on Saturday morning in charge of R. C. Evans and Elder A. Leverton. Adjourned to meet the Friday prior to the convening of our next conference.

Clinton.—Convened at Nevada, Missouri, October 23, 1903, at 10.30 a. m. Sr. Mina Kearney, superintendent, in charge. Officers reporting: Sr. Mina Kearney, Bro. C. W. Keck, Iva Keck, Sr. B. Wright. Schools reporting: Vere, Walker, Richhill, Maple Grove, Wheatland, Coalhill, Roscoe, Eldorado, Nevada, Fort Scott. In the evening a lengthy program was rendered.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Minnesota District: My annual report closes December 31. The number of names on our books and receipts to date are below that of some years past. Some have striven to do their full financial duty; but there are many from whom I have not heard. It may be they send their tithing to the Bishop. If so, I would advise you not to do it, as it is impossible to supply the elders' families without sending to the Bishop for money, and that makes just double expense.

The law of tithing is a part of the gospel, and Latter Day Saints should comply with the full law. Let me hear from you, Saints, at an early date.

WM. C. GRIFFIN, Bishop's Agent.

FRAZEE, Minnesota, November 13, 1903.

Transferred Appointment.

By arrangement between Brn. H. O. Smith, of the Southwestern Mission, and I. N. White, of the Independence Stake, Bro. W. S. Macrae will labor for the remainder of the conference year in the Independence Stake.

JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, November 19, 1903.

By agreement Bro. H. R. Harder will labor in the Eastern Mission under the direction of Bro. U. W. Greene, who is in charge. Bro. Harder was appointed to this field, but owing to conditions labored in the Southwestern field for a time. He is now in the East, and by request will occupy there until the April Conference.

JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, November 20, 1903.

To whom it may concern: This will notify you that Bro. W. S. Macrae has been released from his Texas field and assigned to Bro. I. N. White's charge. All missionaries in Texas will report their labors to me, with all other matters that should be reported to the missionary in charge. Bro. Macrae has been released on account of sickness in his family. H. O. Smith, missionary in charge, Bald Knob, Arkansas, November 20, 1903.

David Wilson, pieces of pottery found by him on his farm near Western, Nebraska.

History Correction.

In the publication of the four volumes of Church History now before the public, errors have crept in unawares.

It is contemplated to publish as soon as practicable a list of these errors. This will be published on separate sheet, so it can be furnished to all having books, in form to be pasted in them.

Will all who have observed errors, especially in fact or date, please send them at once to the undersigned at Lamoni, Iowa, so that we may have the benefit of the research of others for consideration. We wish to make the correction as complete as possible, so as to avoid the necessity of future correction.

Respectfully,

HEMAN C. SMITH, Church Historian.

Correction.

In the minutes of Eastern Wales conference, as published in HERALD for October 23, 1903, the expenditures in Bishop's agent's report should read "ten shillings and ten pence," balance "nineteen shillings and two pence," not pounds, as printed.

Conference Notices.

Oklahoma District conference will meet at Redmoon, January 1, 1904, at ten a. m. Full reports from branches and ministry are expected by the undersigned at Redmoon, Oklahoma. Election of district officers, and other important business to be transacted. W. P. Pickering, district president.

Born.

WALLER.—CARROLL Duane, son of Mr. B. N. and Sr. Katie P. Waller. Born at Council Bluffs, Pottawattamie County, Iowa, December 21, 1902. Blessed by Elders C. Scott and Robert McKenzie, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 11, 1903, and the name Carroll Duane confirmed upon him.

Married.

BOWERMAN.—BAGGERLY.—At the residence of the parents of the bride, on Wednesday, November 11, 1903, Mr. Frank P. Bowerman, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and Sr. Ella Florence, daughter of Bro. and Sr. I. P. Baggerly, of Lamoni, Iowa, were united in marriage, Elder R. S. Salyards officiating. A pleasant company of relatives and friends were in attendance, who gave evidence of their interest in the happy couple by their congratulations and substantial tokens of esteem. The groom and bride departed on the evening train for their new home, Minneapolis, Minnesota, attended by the good wishes of their many friends.

ROTHWELL.—BARRETT.—At the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Barrett, near Lamoni, Iowa, Mr. William H. Rothwell to Miss Eunice Eulala Barrett, at one o'clock p. m., November 15, E. L. Kelley officiating in the ceremony. After the wedding a large number of the friends who were present sat down to an excellent dinner prepared by parents of the bride. The occasion was quite an enjoyable one. The usual number of presents from friends showed the esteem in which the parties were held by their relatives and acquaintances. The young couple will begin housekeeping at once on a farm near the former residence of the bride. The good wishes of the HERALD are extended to the young couple with the hope that their future lives may be ever pleasant ones.

HANSEN—SCOTT, McCANT—SCOTT.—At the home of Bro. Thomas and Sr. Martha Scott, near Underwood, Pottawattamie County, Iowa, on Wednesday, November 18, at high noon, Elder C. Scott officiating, Sr. Jennie E. Scott to Bro. Frank H. Hansen, M. D., of Magnolia, Harrison County, Iowa; also at the same time and place, Sr. Elta A. Scott to Mr. Thomas E. McCant, of Council Bluffs, Iowa. A large audience of friends witnessed the ceremony; a beautiful sight as the bridal parties and attendants stood under a beautiful arch of evergreens, and amidst spreading palms. A rich repast was enjoyed by all present, and extended sympathy to Bro. and Sr. Scott as they sadly gave away the two amiable daughters on the one occasion. Many costly and practical presents were made to the newly wedded ones. May blessings and joy attend them as they glide away to the other shore.

Died.

SKINNER.—At the home of his daughter, in Rowley, Massachusetts, Bro. William Skinner. He was born at Addison, Maine, on January 2, 1838; was baptized September 5, 1900, by W. W. Blanchard, and died October 31, 1903. Although at the last he was a great sufferer, still he was much comforted by the promises of God's word. His remains were brought to his old home and funeral services were conducted by his friend and brother, Elder Uriah M. Kelley. A noble man has gone to rest to await his reward.

CLUM.—At Lamoni, Iowa, November 5, 1903, of dropsy of the chest, Sr. Bessie Gertrude, daughter of Bro. Mendall J. and Sr. Stella F. Clum, aged 9 years, 9 months, 4 days. Both when in health and during her long illness she was very patient and unselfish, never complaining or murmuring. She was faithful in Sunday-school study. She was anxious to be baptized and was just two months before death; after that was perfectly resigned. The day before her death she dreamed that she died and went to heaven and saw its beauty and glory. Funeral conducted by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bro. A. S. Cochran.

WALLWORK.—Ann Wallwork was born at Rateliff-near-Manchester, Lankashire, England, May 1, 1827; died at the home of her daughter, Sr. Sarah Haskins, at Savoy, Potter County, Pennsylvania, October 24, 1903. Funeral services conducted at St. Marys, Pennsylvania, by Myron E. Thomas. Sr. Wallwork came to this country in 1864; was baptized in 1892 by R. Etzenhouser. She died firm in the faith, her last words being, "It is well with me."

HANDLEN.—In Boomer Township, Pottawattamie County, Iowa, Bro. Thomas Handlen, aged 79 years, 11 months, 28 days. Born in Davis County, Indiana, November 11, 1823; married to Miss Leah Jones, who died in Indiana, July 13, 1872. He came to Boomer, Iowa, 1892; baptized by Charles Derry at Hazel Dell, Iowa, July 2, 1893. He leaves three daughters, one son, and other relatives to mourn him. Funeral Wednesday, November 11, at Cemetery church, Boomer, Iowa, conducted by C. Scott, assisted by Samuel Harding. Text, 1 Corinthians 15: 50-58. Another ripened sheaf gathered in to God's garner.

HARDER.—At Glover, Michigan, October 1, 1903, Bro. Charles E. Harder, aged 20 years, 10 months, 17 days. He was born at Bay Port, Michigan, November 13, 1882. He was baptized into the Reorganization by J. A. Grant, May 25, 1902. Funeral at Glover Schoolhouse, October 4, Elder Thomas McNamara in charge; sermon by Elder J. A. Grant.

PRETTYMAN.—At the home of his father, Elder J. B. Prettyman, Knox, Indiana, Bro. Delbert F. Prettyman, passed to the beyond, October 20, 1903, at 2 p. m. Bro. Dell was born May 28, 1878, at Knox, Indiana, and died at the age of 25 years, 5 months, and 22 days. Was married April 14, 1898, to Miss Clara Broadstreet. Was baptized into the Church May 17, 1903, by Elder S. W. L. Scott. He was highly esteemed. He leaves a loving companion, father, mother, three sisters, one brother, with a host of friends and relatives, sorrowing his early demise. The funeral occurred from the Christian church; sermon by Elder S. W. L. Scott, assisted by Reverend Foster.

PRUYN.—At Lamoni, Iowa, Saints' Home, October 29, 1903, Elder Matthew Pruyne, aged 90 years, 9 months, and 16 days. He was born in Prince Edwards County, Ontario, January 13, 1813. He was baptized June 30, 1869, in Winnebago County, Wisconsin, by Elder William Savage; was ordained elder in October, 1869, and preached for years. His wife died in 1888. He came to Iowa in 1889. Married Sr. Margaret Gibson in 1893. She died in 1897. Funeral service at the Home, prayer by Bro. G. H. Hilliard, sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins. He was a good man and passed peacefully over to rest.

SMITH.—At Hope Hospital, Fort Wayne, Indiana, Sr. Cora A. Smith, nee Brooks; was born August 8, 1868, at Clear Lake, Indiana, died October 27, 1903, of cranial hemorrhage. Was married to Peter Smith, Jr., March 29, 1884. She was baptized into the Church September 14, 1902, at Clear Lake, Indiana, by Elder S. W. L. Scott. Devoted to the work of the gospel, "she has done what she could" to introduce, and scatter the light in her immediate vicinity—Melbern, Ohio. She was a woman of true principles and lovely qualities. Funeral was conducted from Saints' chapel, Clear Lake, October 29, S. W. L. Scott preaching the sermon.

TRIPP.—Elder Danial Tripp, at Adrian, Illinois, October 24, 1903. Six days before death his foot was pierced with a rusty nail, causing lockjaw. Was born at Council Bluffs, Iowa, July 24, 1862; moved with family to Montrose, Iowa, in 1863; baptized by J. S. Roth in February 1886; married to Miss Lottie Gunn at Nauvoo, Illinois, February 10, 1883; to them were born seven children, six of whom, together with his wife, one brother, one sister, and his mother survive him. Was chosen vice-president of Nauvoo District nineteen days before death. Funeral from Rock Creek Latter Day Saint church and was largely attended. It is said he had not an enemy in the world. Interment in the Nauvoo cemetery.

PENROD.—At Malheur, Oregon, October 8, 1903, Stanley Lionel, infant son of Sr. Jessie and Bro. A. D. Penrod. Aged 7 months and 14 days.

JUDD.—Jessie E. (Holman) Judd passed peacefully away October 17, 1903, at her home near Conneautville, Pennsylvania, after a brief illness from heart trouble. She was born July 17, 1870; was baptized December 2, 1888, by Bro. G. T. Griffiths; was married to Bro. James B. Judd, January 3, 1894, by Bro. W. H. Garrett. Her life was fraught with those noble traits of Christian character by which she exemplified the Christ-life in the domestic, social, and religious circles. She leaves a devoted husband, two lovely children of six and eight years, and many near relatives, Saints, and friends, to deeply mourn her untimely death. Obsequies at the Saints' church by Reverend J. A. Dean of Conneautville. Bro. O. B. Thomas arrived (because of misinformation of the train service) only in time to conduct the service at the cemetery.

The Alaska Boundary Award.

Careful topographical surveys will be requisite to the location and marking of the exact boundary. Curiously enough, the great volume of maps presented to the tribunal as a part of the British case, and containing reproductions of a great number of earlier and later charts, might be regarded as in itself containing all the evidence necessary to the full establishment of the American claim without the necessity of any argument whatever. The Canadians have not done well to accuse Lord Alverstone of having given their case away at the instance of Messrs. Balfour and Chamberlain in pursuance of the British policy of friendly relations with the United States. Lord Alverstone is a great lawyer and a great jurist, and his position on this tribunal was such as to permit him to deal with the subject before him absolutely upon its merits. It remains to be said, however, that it would have been much wiser and better for the British Government,—if it were ever in any real doubt as to the justice of the position of the United States,—to have consulted Lord Alverstone and other eminent authorities for its own private guidance. It would thus have learned that the Canadian contention had no substantial grounds to rest upon, and it could have said so frankly. It did not do well to arouse false hopes in the minds of the Canadians, who had nagged it into undertaking this costly method of arriving at a foregone conclusion. The position of the United States in the whole matter forms a new precedent of courtesy beyond any experience in the history of the dealings of nations with one another. For our government has, in a word, allowed the lord chief justice of England to decide that it may and ought to keep what is its own.—American Review of Reviews for November.

Some Uses of Olive-Oil.

A tablespoonful of olive-oil a day, taken internally, will help liver trouble and indigestion. It is also healing for throat or stomach catarrh. Serve it frequently in salad-dressings, where it will be both appetizer and medicine. For severe internal disorders or emaciated and run-down condition of the body, rub the patient every morning for twenty minutes with the oil, then with a bath-towel; at night rub the spine for ten minutes, and in two months you will see great improvement. Mixed with quinine, then rubbed on the chest and back, it prevents cold; mixed with camphor, then applied to the throat, it cures soreness; mixed with kerosene and turpentine, then used on the throat and chest, it relieves the most obstinate cough. Heated and applied to the bowels, it helps constipation. Try it for chapped hands and roughened or burned skin. Before putting away the stove, rub the nickel parts with the oil, also the gasoline oven or other sheet-iron, and you will see no rust.—November Woman's Home Companion.

Modern Printing Statistics.

THE ECONOMIC SIDE OF THE INDUSTRY.

The development of the "art preservative of all arts" has been very rapid during the last decade, and many of the changes have been revolutionary, resulting in enormously increased product, manufactured in quicker time, and at a much lower cost. The quality of the work has also improved. The far more general dissemination of intelligence, the rapid and efficient means of intercommunication between all parts of the world, with the cheapening and broadening of educational facilities, constitute one of the most notable features in the progress of the world during the past fifty years; and the one most vitally contributing to all our great industries is the printing press. Some idea of the volume of business may be gained when it is stated that in 1900, the census year, the value of the finished product was $347,055,050. This sum was almost equally divided between newspapers on the one hand and book and job printing on the other. In the United States there are 22,312 establishments, 15,305 of which publish or print newspapers. The total capital invested is $292,517,072. A large clerical force is necessary to transact this amount of business; 37,799 salaried officials, clerks, etc., draw $36,090,719 in salaries, while the actual work is done by 162,992 persons, drawing $84,249,954 in wages. Miscellaneous expenses of these establishments were $55,897,529, and the cost of materials used was $86,856,990.

Of the total value of products, advertising forms 43 per cent, subscriptions and sales 35.8 per cent, and book and job printing, including miscellaneous products, 21.2 per cent. The total cir-ulation of daily papers is enough to supply one for every five inhabitants, and the total circulation per issue of weeklies and monthlies is one to each two inhabitants. Ninety-four per cent of all the publications are printed in the English language. One and a quarter billion pounds of paper were used in the census year. Of this amount 77.6 per cent was consumed for newspapers and 16.4 per cent for books and periodicals, and only 6 per cent for job printing. On analyzing the total circulation of each State it is found that the ten leading States supply four-fifths of the circulation per issue of all publications, thus indicating the concentration of circulation in certain populous States. Weekly publications are more numerous in proportion to the inhabitants in the West and Northwest. New England ranks high in dailies but low in circulation, suggesting that in that densely settled region the daily has to some extent supplanted the weekly.

There were 18,226 publications reported to the census authorities, while 3,046 publications failed to report. This would give a remarkable total of 21,272 periodicals, and the aggregate circulation of those reporting was 114,229,334 per issue, while the aggregate number of copies issued during the census year 8,168,148,749.—From the Scientific American's Special Number on "Modern Aids to Printing."

The Forests of Hawaii.

The Territorial Government of the Hawaiian Islands will appoint as superintendent of forestry this winter a man furnished it by the Bureau of Forestry, who will take charge of important projects for the betterment of the islands' forests. The man appointed will have the responsibilities first of determining the location and the boundaries of a system of forest reserves, and later of superintending a great deal of forest planting both on public and private lands.

The forest conditions of the islands are unlike any that prevail in this country. Mr. William L. Hall, of the Bureau of Forestry, who has just returned from a two-months' examination of the islands, reports peculiar and interesting problems which forestry must solve there. The islands contain scarcely any forests capable of yielding timber of value for lumber. Nearly all the lumber used for building purposes comes from the Pacific Coast. But there are several hundred thousand acres of forest land of the greatest value for protective purposes. Indeed, so great is the importance of these forests that on their preservation depends the existence of the sugar industry, and that is equivalent to saying the continued prosperity of the islands. The sugar exports of the last fiscal year amounted to twenty-five million dollars, and sugar is practically the only export. The raising of sugar requires an enormous amount of water, nearly all of which must be supplied by irrigation, the water being carried in flumes and ditches from the wet, mountainous parts of the islands to the dry plains on which the sugar-cane is grown. The rainfall of the islands is nearly all confined to the northeast and east mountain slopes, where it is tremendously heavy, some years more than two hundred inches. On the other side of the divide, and in the plains beyond, where the sugar-cane grows, there may be no more than fifteen inches of rain a year.

The forests are largely confined to the rainy side of the mountains, and are necessary as a protective cover, to keep the ground from washing from the slopes and the rain from rushing back too rapidly into the sea. The presence of the forest cover, since it makes the stream flow regular, preventing both floods and periods of low stream flow, is indispensable to the success of irrigating projects. The value of this forest, strangely enough, consists not so much in the trees it contains—for they are frequently low, crooked, and sparsely scattered—as in the impenetrable mass of undergrowth beneath them. This undergrowth, composed of vines, ferns, and mosses, is of so dense a character that it shades the ground absolutely and holds water like a sponge. It is, however, exceedingly delicate and easily destroyed. Let cattle into such a forest and they will speedily eat or trample down the undergrowth till the bare ground is exposed. The soil then rapidly dries out and becomes hard, and the trees soon die. Grasses, insects, and wind usually hasten the destruction. Cattle and goats have ravaged the Hawaiian forests without hindrance for many years and have worked further each year into the heart of the dense tropical growth.

The Hawaiian public lands consist of one million seven hundred and seven-two thousand six hundred and forty acres. All of these lands, which are in forest, and many forest areas privately owned which the Government can gain possession of by exchange, will be put into forest reserves, cleared of cattle and goats, fenced, and preserved. Some compensation must also be made for the great areas of forest already destroyed. It will be part of the work of the forester to plant to valuable trees large areas of this denuded land upon which forests are of most vital importance to the agricultural interests. Mr. Hall, who carefully examined the climatic conditions, believes that species of the Pacific Coast, such as redwood and red fir, will do well in most places at the higher elevations on the islands. An example of how a foreign species may succeed in Hawaii is furnished by the mesquite of our own southwest, which was introduced into the islands fifty years ago and now covers about one hundred thousand acres, furnishing quantities of valuable fuel. It is not called mesquite in Hawaii, however, but goes by the name of algaroba.

Political Status of the Southern Negro.

For eight years the governments of the southern states were in the hands of the Negroes. Two different policies were pursued by the whites. In Georgia they accepted the conditions and took part in the elections. In South Carolina and other states they refrained from voting. The results were correspondingly different. Georgia never suffered from Negro domination as did other states, and never went through the violent reaction of the Kukulux period. But in a state like South Carolina, with more than a majority of the voters belonging to the black race, the whites were overcome both by resentment toward the policy and by the hopelessness of the situation. The result of turning a state over to ignorant and untried voters was an enormous increase of debt without corresponding public improvements or public enterprises. Even the Negro governments themselves, after four or five years began to repudiate these debts, and they were almost wholly repudiated by the whites after returning to power.

Uplifting the Sunday-School Through the Study of the Child.

"A hundred children suffer and a hundred lives are marred through misunderstanding for each one wronged by intentional cruelty or conscious neglect." These are strong words, but it is the truth they express that has aroused the Sunday-school forces of the world to realize the importance of knowing the child as well as the Bible; we can not bring the two together by knowing only one. As Extension Lecturer of the Bible Normal College, and now as State Superintendent of the New York State Sunday-school Association, Mr. E. P. St. John, from whom the above words are quoted, is making Sunday-school workers his debtors by showing them the gain and the fascination of intelligent child study in Sunday-school work. Mr. St. John is more than an abstract student of child-life; he works and studies to make his investigations of living, practical value to every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent in the land. In a series for the Sunday School Times he will present some of the results of his years of study in this rich field.—Sunday School Times.

The Exposition which will open its doors in St. Louis next year will be an International Universal Exposition of the most extensive scope and complete organization ever planned or assembled. "It will constitute," as states Mr. Frederick J. V. Skiff, Director of Exhibits, who is one of the leading, if not the leading expert on Expositions in the world, "a complete encyclopedia of society, containing in highly specialized array a thorough collection of society's words and works. It will present a sequential synopsis of man's development, or, rather, of the developments that have marked man's progress."

Every nation of the world has been invited to participate in this Exposition, and already forty-five have officially accepted this invitation, including Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Italy, Spain, China, and Japan, which have made appropriations and appointed Commissioners-general to direct their representations. Favorable responses will shortly be received from the few countries not yet heard from, all now having the question under favorable consideration. The visit of the President of the Exposition to Europe, which created such enthusiasm in the leading countries there, has brought definite assurance of a complete and representative foreign participation.

The States and Territories of the Union have come forward with even greater alacrity. Forty-nine of our commonwealths have already responded to the invitation of the Exposition, with a total appropriation for their representation of considerably over eight million dollars, and most of these States are now erecting State buildings. The roster of participating States will be complete during the present fall.

The St. Louis Exposition is especially to be an Exposition of interest, of attraction in its exhibit features. The remarkable advancement made in every line of invention, and of scientific and industrial achievement and endeavor, since the Chicago Exposition, provides a field of marvels for exhibition at St.

Louis which will make this Exposition undoubtedly the most remarkable and interesting array of social activity and achievement ever presented to the world.

The activity idea will be developed in the highest degree. there will be no such array of still life, as has been customary at expositions. More living pictures and running machinery will be presented—more life, color, motion. Every exhibitor who is awarded space will be expected to install upon it something novel, and show how it works. Operating exhibits will be the rule. This departure will add infinitely to the popular interest as well as to the educational value of the Exposition.

The organization of the Division of Exhibits embraces sixteen leading Departments, which are subdivided into one hundred and forty-four groups, covering every feature of the earth's resources and man's activity. These sixteen grand Departments are: Education, Art, Liberal Arts, Manufactures, Machinery, Electricity, Transportation, Agriculture, Horticulture, Live Stock, Forestry, Mines and Metallurgy, Fish and Game, Anthropology, Social Economy, and Physical Culture.

A staff of experts, designated Chiefs, has been assembled under the Director of Exhibits to superintend the collection and installation of the display embraced in these sixteen Departments of the Exposition. Under these Chiefs are additional experts in charge of special important groups of exhibits. Fourteen splendid palaces, the largest and most elaborate ever constructed, have been raised to present these exhibits of the Exposition. Each of the palaces has been designed with the special purpose of displaying the exhibits to be installed in them to the best advantage. The expert attaches and aids of the Division of Exhibits will spare no care or labor to arrange in perfect and attractive order, in each of these palaces, the rare and interesting exhibits, the selection and collection of which have, during the last two years, occupied their best skill and endeavor.

The North American Review for November both reflects and illumines the living interests of the time. The number opens with "An Indictment of the British Monarchy," drawn up by a well-known writer, who conceals his identity under the pseudonym "Anglo-American." John J. Waterbury, President of the Manhattan Trust Company, gives an interesting account of the proceedings at "The Preliminary Wireless Telegraphy Conference" held at Berlin in August last. R. P. Roblin, Premier of Manitoba, tells "How Western Canada Regards the Chamberlain Scheme." Vernon Lee contributes an essay of great interest, entitled "A Postscript on Ruskin." Charles A. Conant, one of the members of the United States Commission on International Exchange, explains the methods by which the powers hope to succeed in "Putting China on the Gold Basis." S. J. Barrows answers in the affirmative the question, "Is our National Congress Representative?" Mayo W. Hazeltine, in an article entitled "The United States and the Late Lord Salisbury," recalls a signal and unselfish but patriotic service rendered by Lord Salisbury to the United States, when he held back the European powers from supporting Spain at the beginning of the Cuban war. Royal Cortissoz writes in warm appreciation of "Augustus St. Gaudens" and his work. Muhammad Barakatullah presents "A Mohammedan View of the Macedonian Problem." Henry Michelsen discusses the "Purpose and Method of Forest Reservation." G. E. Merrill, President of Colgate University, asks the question, "Is Football Good Sport?" and points to certain elements in the game which, in his opinion, prevent its being regarded in that light. Frances W. Carruth describes "A Unique Municipal Crusade," which is being conducted in New York against eye diseases in the public schools. Thomas Hardy, the famous novelist, is the author of a poem of great dramatic interest, entitled "The Tramp-Woman's Tragedy," and the number closes with the eleventh part of Mr. Henry James's novel "The Ambassadors."

It is not necessary to dwell upon the methods by which the white voters regained and kept control of the states. Admittedly it was through intimidation, murder, ballot-box "stuffing," and false counting. The Negro vote has almost disappeared, and in more recent years that which was accomplished through violence is perpetuated through law. Mississippi, Louisiana, South Carolina, North Carolina, Alabama and Virginia have adopted so-called "educational" tests with such adroit exceptions that white illiterates may vote, but Negroes, whether literate or illiterate, may be excluded from voting. The fifteenth amendment, by decisions of the United States supreme court on cases arising in Alabama and Kentucky (April 26 and May 3, 1903), has been rendered inoperative, and with these decisions it may be taken for granted that the Negro will not again in the near future enjoy the privilege of a free ballot.—John R. Commons, in the Chautauquan for November.

It has been estimated that nine novels had a total sale of 1,600,000 copies. This means 2,000,000 pounds of paper. We are assured by a manufacturer of paper that the average spruce-tree yields a little less than half a cord of wood, which is equivalent to 500 pounds of paper. In other words, these nine novels swept away 4,000 trees. Is it any wonder that those interested in forestry look with anxiety upon the paper mill?—From the Scientific American's Special Number on "Modern Aids to Printing."

WE have compiled an article on "Press Comments on 'Mormonism'" which we expect to publish soon. It is an amusing collection, and we think it will be of considerable interest to our readers.

A RECENT writer in the National Magazine predicts that America's climate will gradually undergo a change. He says the winters will become milder, the summers drier and hotter. The lower Mississippi will protect its own, but the midland region of the great cotton belt "will become as dry as a Kansas holiday." No irrigation, he says, will avail to undo all the mischief of the "run and ruin system of agriculture."

FAITH CURE IN OHIO COURTS.

The status of faith cures before the law of the land seems to have been ascertained, so far as Ohio courts are concerned under existent laws. A Mr. and Mrs. Bishop, Christian Scientists, were had before the Common Pleas Court, of Butler County, Ohio, on a charge of manslaughter based upon the fact that a child of theirs was severely burned; they called no physicians, but treated, or failed to treat the child in their own way without avail, the child dying of the hurt.

The jury before which Bishop and his wife were tried acquitted them, the trial having been had at Hamilton. The State took the case up to the Supreme Court on exceptions, the exceptions were overruled and the verdict of the jury sustained. "The case rested upon the proposition whether under the laws of Ohio a person was compelled by the statute to call a physician in case of illness or injuries. The court held that while such a course [the failure to call a physician] was to be condemned, there was nothing in the laws to forbid it." In other words there is no provision in the statute of Ohio making the calling of a physician in cases of illness or injury obligatory.

It is probable that in some of the States there may be such statutory provisions; but we fail to see why such provisions should exist, unless it can be shown that physicians are uniformly, or necessarily successful in warding off the attacks of disease and prolonging the lives of those whom they are called to treat. To assume that a physician must be called in any and every case of illness or injury, such as the burn of this Bishop child seems to have been, is to assert that physicians are infallible in saving life.

The making of laws by which it will become a misdemeanor or a crime for persons to refrain from calling a physician in all cases of illness or injury by accident would be a travesty upon the medical fraternity, for laws making it lawful for physicians to make charges, and defining what those charges should be, would be necessary. If such a thing could be in justice done, where would such laws cease, where the dividing line be drawn between acts of voluntary dictation and those of compulsion by law?

THE CHICAGO STREET RAILWAY STRIKE.

There has been a long street-car strike in Chicago, in which on November 12, the employees of the Chicago City Railway Company, operating in the south side of Chicago, struck for a change in service, recognition of their labor union, and better wages, and went out of the employ of the company. The strike continued until November 25, when, after constant effort made by representatives of both parties, the mayor and aldermen of the city, and others, to bring about a cessation of the strife, a settlement was effected upon the following agreement, which we give as published in the Chicago Tribune for November 26, 1903:

It is hereby agreed that the question of wages between the parties hereto shall be submitted within the next ten days to a board of arbitration, the board of arbitration to be composed of three persons, one to be chosen by the party of the first part (the Chicago City Railway Company), one to be chosen by the party of the second part (the street-car men's union), and the two thus selected shall choose a third. As soon as the third member of the board is selected they shall organize by the selection of one of their number as chairman and then decide upon the times and places of meeting.

The board of arbitration shall settle the wages of all the trainmen and other employees of said Company for the period of this contract, and this question shall be determined upon the fair value of the services to be rendered by said employees as shown by such evidence as would be legally competent to fix said wages if the various men had performed the services without a specific contract and were suing to recover the value of such services, with the exception that inasmuch as the Company claims that the present wages paid to its employees are above the market value, the present scale or rate of wages paid by the Company to its employees shall be ignored in determining the wages hereafter to be paid by the Company.

The expense of said board shall be borne equally by the parties hereto.

The rate of wages fixed by the board shall date from the signing of this agreement, it being understood that the present rate of wage shall be paid regularly until the decision has been reached.

Second. The Company shall meet with the committee of trainmen from the organization and will make the hours of service as nearly as possible to suit them on the basis of a maximum of eleven hours and a minimum of eight hours within fifteen consecutive hours or will establish a nine-hour day within fifteen consecutive hours if preferred, but the Company shall have the right to fix the number of cars running at all hours and the length of time they shall be on the streets, endeavoring always to make the work as agreeable to the men as will be consistent with the performance of its duty to the public.

Third. There shall be no opposition by the party of the first part to the employees becoming members of the union, neither shall there be any discrimination or distinction by either party for or against men who belong to a union or who do not belong to a union. No attempt shall be made to prevent employees from becoming members of the union, and employees who are not members of the union shall not be annoyed or subjected to pressure to compel them to join the union. But reasonable and peaceable solicitation shall not be considered annoyance or pressure. A disregard of this provision of the contract shall be construed a repudiation of this contract, but nothing herein contained shall be construed as in any way interfering with or limiting the right of the company to absolutely exercise its own judgment and discretion in employing, discharging, or disciplining its employees, except for membership in the union.

Fourth. The properly accredited officers of the Company agree to meet and treat with any committee of the organization on all questions and grievances that may arise in the future.

Fifth. The Company agrees that any employee who has been unjustly suspended or discharged, shall, upon reinstatement, be reimbursed for all time lost.

Sixth. The Company agrees that officers of the organization shall be granted leave of absence on organization business when so requested.

It further agrees that any member of this organization who now holds office or who shall be elected to any office in said association which requires his absence from the company's employ, shall, upon his retirement from said office, be placed in his former position, provided such officer during his absence from the Company's employ shall not have been guilty of acts which would justify his discharge if he had continued in the employ of the Company.

Seventh. The Company shall endeavor at all times to maintain an adequate and proper extra list.

Eighth. The Company shall place in the office of each car-house of the respective lines an open book, in which the men can register the particular day or days on which they want to get off, and the men so registered first for any particular day or days shall have first preference. It is agreed, however, that members of the executive board of the executive organization shall be entitled to get off in preference to others. Said book shall be dated seven days ahead.

Ninth. All car repairers, motor repairers, grip repairers, inspectors, dopers, car pushers, and car cleaners shall be absent from duty every other Sunday.

Tenth. This agreement to be binding and in force, beginning this 25th day of November, 1903, and continuing until the 25th day of November, 1904, with this understanding: That this agreement will not be ratified until all employees shall return to work in the positions they occupied prior to the 12th day of November, 1903, provided that the company shall have the right to refuse to take back any employee who shall have been guilty of acts of violence or intimidation on or since November 12, 1903, which would justify his dismissal from the service of the company.

We offer no comment upon this strike as to the merits of the claims and statements of either party to the contention. There may be right in desires and efforts of both sides. However, during the continuance of the strike there was rioting and a resort to violence against the property of the company and against those employed by them in an effort to run their street-cars on the lines operated by them. Whether this violence was done by the strikers or by sympathizers with them in their fight against the corporation, or by irresponsible, evil-disposed persons, it was aimed at the company as employers, in violation of municipal ordinances and as the law reads "against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of Illinois," requiring the enforcement of order by the executive officers of the city government.

We have no restriction to offer in regard to the right of laboring men to organize for the purpose of securing better results for their labor; but acts of lawless violence by which men's lives are endangered or taken, their persons subjected to intimidation and bodily injury, can never commend a cause to thinking and just-minded communities, and should be condemned by all.

Chicago is an immense city and still growing. Hundreds of thousands of people were put to inconvenience and trouble because the means of transportation from place to place in the city, which they had long availed themselves of and to which they had become accustomed, and were put to great and unusual expense in overcoming the inconveniences to which they were put. Both employers and employees sustained great losses in money; the first, because their receipts for service rendered to the public were interfered with and cut off, and they put to extra expense to carry on their business, care for their property, repair what was damaged and replace what was destroyed; the second, because the wages they had been receiving and upon which they depended for a livelihood were stopped and they shut out from the benefit of them; so that both sides lost in the contest. It has been the inevitable result in contests of the kind and will continue to be.

It is to be hoped that the settlement now effected and which is to run for a year will be honorably kept by both sides, and that, when the year is closed, the experience gained by each party may justify either a continuation of the same arrangement, or the substitution and establishment of something better and more equitable, if time develops any inadequacy of provisions to reach the end designed, an amicable adjustment of interests, obligations, and privileges which should exist between employers and employees.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The editor of the Glenwood Opinion, in his notes on the late visit of the Southwestern Iowa Editorial Association, in his issue for November 26, has this to say of one of the HERALD editors:

"Frederick M. Smith of the Lamoni SAINTS' HERALD, was on the excursion. Mr. Smith is a splendid person to meet and he impresses a person as being always in earnest."

On Monday, November 30, there came to Graceland from Washington by mail two sacks of books weighing three hundred and ten pounds. These were sent through the courtesy of Congressman W. P. Hepburn, who has on a number of occasions served the college in a similar way. We can assure Mr. Hepburn such favors are appreciated.

Hiram L. Holt writing from Camas Valley, Oregon, November 24, reports progress in the gospel work. He had preached forty-three times in thirty-nine days. The heavy Oregon rains have set in now and work will have to be more in a house to house canvass than heretofore.

Bro. D. C. White by card calls our attention to an error in our editorial notice of the work of Bro. J. S. Snively and himself at Pleasanton; he wrote that the number baptized was eleven, not fifteen. Our error, Bro. White, but why not baptize the other four and make it fifteen?

Bro. J. R. McClain, now Bishop's agent for Tennessee and Kentucky District, writes of his experience in administering the law relating to temporalities in the Church. He says: "I have convinced myself that the law of tithing, consecration, etc., is a part of the celestial law and unless observed we will receive no inheritance in Zion. (Doctrine and Covenants 63:13 and 102.) This I am teaching, and it is having the desired effect. Am I right? This way of teaching is new to the Saints here. They have always regarded it pretty much as some do the Word of Wisdom, namely, not of much importance. I see the need of the Saints being taught more perfectly along these lines." Bro. McClain's position is certainly a consistent and proper one. The Lord does not ask his children to conform to laws that are non-essential and we should treat none of his commandments as of little importance. The statement is clearly made in the revelations that the Lord has not at any time given a law that is temporal to his children, but his laws are spiritual, and must relate to the spiritual and eternal good of all who willingly conform to them. Whether it requires a sacrifice or not to comply does not enter into the question. God's children are often called upon to sacrifice in order to carry out the work that is authorized in his law. This is where we honor the faithful of the past and the martyrs for the truth of the different ages. Why the children of the present hesitate to conform to the law of Christ because it will require a sacrifice on their part to do so is remarkable. The very fact of the hesitation and refusal shows that we are not prepared to inherit with those who have endured many things for the exaltation of the name of Jesus of Nazareth. The faithful and valiant soldiers of the cross, and none others, will eventually receive commendation from the Master whom we serve.

We have received from Bro. La Rue, from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, a sample of some little folders the Philadelphia Sunday-school is sending out for the purpose of gathering in "Christmas offerings." It consists of a four-page folder. On the third page is tied a neat little cloth bag, in which the offering is to be placed. A very brief synopsis of what we believe occupies the second page. It is a very neat arrangement, and we trust the returns will be satisfactory to our Philadelphia Sunday-school workers.

J. F. Mintun has an article in the Grinnell Herald for November 27, in which he sets forth the attitude of the Reorganized Church on the polygamy question and also concerning the proposed constitutional anti-polygamy amendment. Bro. Mintun quotes the action of General Conference of 1902 and the reaffirmation at the last conference.

WHO IS IN THE FAITH?

SERMON BY ELDER GEORGE H. HILLIARD, AT DOW CITY, IOWA,
SEPTEMBER 6, 1903.

Reported by L. A. Gould.

I trust that our meeting this morning may not be in vain; and that it may be most profitable we desire the prayers of all may be lifted before Almighty God that the speaker may be able to present the truth in a clear, plain way, that all may easily understand, that God's Holy Spirit may direct the service both in speaking and in hearing.

Our object this morning is to endeavor to instruct, edify, build up, and encourage; for we believe and are satisfied that we have the truth. As the foundation of my remarks, I call attention to 2 Corinthians 13: 5; and 1 Peter 3: 15. Paul says: "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves." And Peter says: "Be ready always to give an answer with meekness and fear to every man that asketh of you a reason for the hope that is in you."

This morning we want to examine ourselves to see whether we be in the faith. The faith referred to is evidently that system of faith taught by Jesus the Christ, revealed for the salvation of men. Peter desired that God's people should always be ready to give a reason for their hope. No doubt many of you who do not belong to the Church with us, think it strange that people would belong to a church which is unpopular in many places, and many times evilly spoken of. This morning while I sat and listened to the testimonies in the meeting, it occurred to me that those who were listening would come to the conclusion that those testifying were a set of deluded and deceived people, or that they did know that the work they were engaged in was the work of God; for they said they knew. A man knows only what he demonstrates. I read in the Scriptures that Peter said Jesus was the Christ. That does not make me know that Jesus was the Christ. Peter knew it. You do not know that because Peter knew it. You know it is written; but we can know nothing except that which we demonstrate. We can have a historical knowledge of things; we can have faith in certain things; we can believe a great many things; but we know that which we demonstrate. This morning we propose to give a reason for believing that we are in the faith.

The Church of my childhood claims to be the church of Christ, the universal church of Jesus Christ in all the world. They claim to have an unbroken succession from the primitive church down to the present time. The Protestant churches to-day do not believe that the Roman Church is the universal church. Their works testify to the world louder than words could, that they believe that the mother church, as it is termed by herself and by the Protestants, too, departed largely from the faith, brought in many things that were not in harmony with God's truth, brought about a necessity for a reformation, and hence we have the Protestant churches coming to us with the desire, and the effort, and the declaration that they want to bring about the necessary reformation. It is clear that the effort made did not reform the mother church. She remains about the same. But the effect was to establish other societies called churches. And when this work began (I mean now the work of reformation), the first ones did not satisfy the world, or the religious people in the world, and so they have multiplied and multiplied until we now have them numbered by the dozens, and scores, and hundreds of societies claiming to be the churches of Jesus Christ.

I wish to impress upon you the thought that the promise of Jesus Christ was that his Spirit should guide men into all truth. And the promise of Christ was, as recorded in John 7: 17, "He that doeth the will of the Father, shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." Another promise of Christ, recorded in John 8: 31, 32, is that those who would abide in his word should know the truth, and the truth should make them free. Then according to the promise of the Master, it would certainly be the privilege of every child of God to know whether he had the truth or not. I could not believe that our heavenly Father desires or designs that men should pass through this world, spend their whole lifetime in a service on which their everlasting welfare depended, and that not bring to them certainty and knowledge. This being true, I do not believe that men ought to be satisfied with anything professing to be the gospel of Christ unless they can to their satisfaction demonstrate the truth of that thing. And if it be true that "other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ," we want to know whether we are building on the proper foundation or not. These points have been brought before you from time to time by the brethren in their discourses. We must build on the proper foundation; we must use the proper material, or else our works will not stand the test when tried by fire. The infidel looks on with astonishment, and concludes that if the gospel was what it is claimed to be by the Christians, and all guided by that one Spirit of truth, there would not be so much division as we see to-day. He concludes that if God be a God of truth, and not the author of confusion, as claimed by Christians and revealed in the written word, he could not call one man to make a proclamation of what he declared to be truth, and then authorize or justify another man in contradicting the first man in his proclamation. And hence the infidel concludes that God can not be the author of these contradictory systems taught to the world as the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Truth must be in harmony with itself; and must be a unit, "no matter where it may be found, whether on Christian or on heathen ground;" and wherever we find truth we will find it in harmony with every other truth. Our reason teaches us that two contradictory things can not both be true. One may be true, both may be false; but both can not be true. That is self-evident. Hence we can only account for the contradictory theories in the world from the standpoint that men have assumed the responsibility of teaching, and have gone forth to teach when they really did not know that they had the truth. And that they might be charitable they extend the possibility to everybody that is honest of being right as well as they, and will be saved if honest and true to their convictions. And they have concluded from this standpoint that they can afford to contradict each other, and at the same time conclude both will be saved, and both are right, so they are honest. And they go before the world, posing as teachers sent from God, with that kind of a philosophy.

To me it seems marvelous that we have no more infidelity and skepticism than we have to-day. I would expect at least four fifths of the intelligent people to be skeptics, and the other fifth would be the ones who did not stop to reason. I thank God from the depths of my soul that men are permitted to use their reason, and are not compelled to accept a thing that to them is unreasonable.

I once had a little controversy with a gentleman; and after the discussion was over, the weather being bad, he had to stop and listen to me preach another night. I was appealing to their reason and intelligence. When I got through I gave permission for him to talk. He said: "I only have a little to say, but would like to say just a few words. There are three powers contending for the mastery; one is the infallibility of the pope of Rome, another is reason, the other is revelation. Brethren, I warn you against the first two." He warned them against two but of course they were free to accept the third,—revelation.

I replied: What good does your revelation do you if you are deprived of your reason? Reason, to my mind, is a precious gift from God. If I had to throw away all the books in this world, or lay down my reason, I should throw the books to the four winds and cleave to my reason; for without my reason and my intellect the books would not be worth anything to me.

If the system of faith that we believe is true, it will bear investigation. Jesus Christ told the truth when he uttered the prophecy recorded in Matthew 24: 14, when he was telling them how they might know the near approach of the end of the world and his second coming. Among other things he said: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Now, "this gospel" refers to the same gospel Jesus Christ was preaching, not another gospel, not a perverted gospel, not a part of "this gospel," but "this gospel of the kingdom." That will be the complete gospel of Jesus Christ. This, he says, shall be preached in all the world as a witness to all nations, then shall the end come; and we should know that it is true, if we have the same gospel he preached.

Now, if it be a fact, as the priest taught me when I was a boy, that this mother church has continued as the successor to the original apostolic church, with the pope as the vicegerent of God Almighty and the successor to Saint Peter, and has preached the true gospel all along the ages every year, every month, and every week, perhaps every day somewhere,—if that be true, I ask in the name of reason what sign it would be to hear that gospel preached now that the end was near at hand? If it has been preached all the time, there is not a particle of significance in the statement of Christ; there could be no sign attaching to it. Well, if the conclusion be true that has been reached by many of the Protestant churches, that the gospel has been preached all the time, and there has not been an apostasy, nor a time when the gospel in its purity and fullness and power was not taught,—if that conclusion be correct, there was no necessity for the Protestant churches. Why not stand by the mother church?

We have to deal with things as we find them. While we refer to these things this morning, it shall not be done in a manner that will hurt any one's feelings, because they must know that we have to meet things and deal with them; and we can not have everything just as we would wish it; therefore we have to take them as they are. And it is our duty to reason together. "Prove all things," Paul says, "hold fast that which is good." Hence we conclude that the claim if made by the Protestants that the gospel has been preached all the way down the centuries, is no better than the claim made by the Catholics, and would destroy the significance of the prophecy of Jesus Christ. And Jesus knew, and the apostles and prophets knew that there would be a falling away; and they made the declaration. The Apostle Paul says, speaking of the coming of Christ in glory, "That day shall not come, except there be a falling away first." Are you going to say there is not going to be a falling away? Turn to the second chapter of 2 Thessalonians, and read what Paul says: "Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition."

Now, this being true, it is in harmony with what John saw. John says he saw the church go into the wilderness represented by the figure of a woman, in the twelfth chapter of Revelation. In the thirteenth he says he saw every nation and kindred and people overcome. In the fourteenth he says: "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, . . . Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come." Now, that is the same thing that Christ prophesied of; that in the hour of God's judgment, in the period of the end, just before Christ should come, this gospel should be preached as a witness in all the world. And John says he saw the angel bring that gospel and commit it unto men to preach to the nations of the earth. Why, says one, haven't we all the time had the gospel in the Bible; has not the Bible been with us all the time? That is not the question. Did those inspired leaders tell the truth? I think they did. We will concede that we have had the Bible, or somebody has had the Bible all through the ages in some form or other. But does the Bible contain the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ? Says one, I so understand it. Your understanding and Paul's understanding would not agree, then. In 1 Thessalonians 1:5 Paul says: "For our gospel came not unto you in word only." We have, in the Bible, the written word, and the word only; that is all we have in that. "Our gospel came not unto you in word only; but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." Without the power, without the assurance, without the authority, without the Holy Spirit, we never could have the fullness of the gospel. We may have the written law; but we must have some one authorized of God to administer that law. It is said to be the law of life (Romans 8:2), and the law of life, Paul says, "hath made me free from the law of sin and death." The law of life makes us free from sin. The law of life gives us an assurance, and brings the life to us through obedience to it. And so our gospel, if we have the gospel, must be the gospel that Paul had; the gospel that Jesus preached; the gospel that Christ said should be preached in all the world as a witness; the gospel that John saw committed to men to be preached in all the world, in the hour of God's judgment or the end of the world.

It matters not what church you belong to, you must concede that these statements are true as recorded in the Bible. And from the Bible here, what do we conclude? We conclude that there has been an apostasy; we conclude the Reformation was started to bring about a condition of things that they believed ought to restore the gospel. This being true, if that end is reached sometime and somewhere, why should not all Protestant people be glad in their soul that that end has been reached? They do not all believe that Luther had reached that, or we would never have had another Protestant church in the world. They do not all believe that the Baptists have that, or we would never have had a Methodist Church on earth. They do not all believe any other church had it, or we would not have had any multiplication of churches. And when we have these churches multiplied, multiplied, and multiplied, for we still have other societies starting up, this proves they do not all believe these others are right yet. Now, what is the matter? If the gospel has been restored, and those people have the gospel, ought it not to be just what it was in the apostolic days? Will not, in other words, the same cause produce the same results under like conditions in all ages of the world? If the gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God to save men, if there was given to it power in the apostolic age to accomplish the work that God designed it to accomplish, if we now, like them, need salvation, and we have a gospel that saves men, must not that gospel have the same power, the same ordinances, the same blessings, and produce the same results in this age that it did when the New Testament was being written?

Do you think that you can have the gospel, and not have the power that belongs to the gospel? Do you think that you can administer the gospel, and do it efficaciously, for the good of men on the other side, and not hold the power that was committed to the apostles in the days of Christ, the keys of the kingdom of heaven, so that what you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and what is loosed on earth shall be loosed in heaven? Do you think you can administer the gospel ordinances without that authority? Oh, well, says my good brother, I do not think anybody holds that authority now. You do not? Suppose I pose before you this morning as a minister sent from God, standing here as a minister representing Jesus Christ to administer the ordinances of this gospel, and you come to me for baptism, and I baptize you claiming to baptize you into the church of Christ. If my official will is not recognized, recorded, and binding, and sealed in heaven as well as on earth, what good will that do you after you die and pass over the Jordan of death to judgment? If that act is not recorded there, if in the heavens that act was not binding, and sealing, and recognized, and recorded, what good could it do you when you stand before the great Judge? You can see it would do you no good. Everybody may be able to see that it could do no good, unless that act was recognized by God, and sealed in heaven as well as on earth. But if my official act were binding in heaven, and you stand before the great Judge, claiming to be a citizen of the kingdom, when the books shall be opened, your name will be there; and as the apostle says, "As many as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." There is the official act recognized in the heavens. Then with your name recorded properly there, your initiation into the kingdom of God by a servant sent to represent him, if you have lived faithfully, will entitle you to admittance there. And if Jesus Christ told the truth when he says, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God;" if you have not been born of the water and of the Spirit in a manner that would be recognized as binding in heaven, you would not be admitted, would you? If Jesus told the truth you would have to stay outside.

Oh well, says one, I don't believe that. Well, that does not nullify it, whether you believe it or not. The question is, Did Jesus Christ utter the language? And if Christ uttered the language, did he tell the truth? And if Christ uttered that language and told the truth, and all power is given to him, in heaven and on earth, your not believing that would not give you power to pass him and enter in. He is the gatekeeper there, and no matter what you believe or disbelieve, Jesus says, "The words that I speak, the same shall judge you at the last day." And these are the words that Jesus spoke.

Now, we ask, Who is it that has the best foundation? Who is it that is in the faith? Who is it that is able to give the best reason for their hope? That people that expects to live by every word of God, accepts every ordinance, administers every ceremony or rite just as Jesus and the apostles did, or those people that have excluded a part of them, and only retained a portion? You remember what Peter said when Jesus inquired, "Who do men say that I the Son of man am?" Some say one thing, and some another. "But," he says, "whom say ye that I am?" "And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." "And Jesus answered and said, unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." He was able then to say that Jesus was the Christ. Now, "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." And Christ's church never has rested on anything else from that time until this, neither collectively nor individually. Any class of people, or any individual who has claimed to have the hope of eternal life, and was not confirmed in that truth that Jesus was the Christ, and that did not predicate his faith and hope in the knowledge that Jesus was the Christ, has never had a proper foundation on which to erect his spiritual building. That was the rock or the foundation of the primitive church, made known by the revelation of God to Peter.

Now, in the reformation we ask this question: Have the prophecies and promises of God as revealed to the prophets and apostles, and recorded in the Bible, been fulfilled in their work? If they have not been we are going to briefly look for the fulfillment of a few statements here, and see where they have had their fulfillment. Do you remember reading in the fortieth chapter of Isaiah, where Isaiah talks about one that should come?

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain: and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." A few verses further on he says: "O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain: O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God! Behold the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him: behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him."

We ask you to think about that. Who was that one crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord?" Says one, That was John the Baptist. So I believe. Then there is no difference in our opinion on that point, but the difference of opinion comes in the fulfillment. Nearly everybody applies that to Christ's first coming, because John came before him to prepare the way. John did come before him to prepare the way when he first came; but we do not admit that Jesus fulfilled the statement there altogether when he first came. When he first came, what did he do? He came as the babe of Bethlehem. He had to be guarded, and his parents had to flee with him to Egypt, to save his life. He came, but there were no valleys exalted so far as we know of. He came, but there were no mountains lowered so far as history shows, no crooked ways made straight at that time. He did point out the straight and narrow way in his ministry. Those scriptures were not all fulfilled at Christ's first coming; they received the curse of God on Jerusalem for rejecting him. Now, when he comes this time he says Jerusalem has received at the Lord's hands double for all her sins, now she is to receive his blessings. It refers to his second coming, when he comes in power, and glory, and to bring about his own purposes and fulfill his word as revealed in the prophets.

Again I read in Malachi 3:1: "Behold I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming?" Then we are told of what is going to transpire when he comes. Among other things, the wicked are to be burned with unquenchable fire, the sons of Levi are to be purified and purged as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness, and the offering of Judah and Jerusalem shall be pleasant unto the Lord as in days of old. Did that occur at Christ's first coming? Just the opposite. At Christ's first coming the Jews rejected the Messiah, and they were rejected of God for so doing. Jerusalem was trodden down, the Jews scattered. But this messenger was to come before his second coming, as well as his first coming. Well, is there anything said about that in the New Testament? Oh, yes, of course there is, and Jesus himself said it. In the seventeenth chapter of Matthew we have an account of the transfiguration of the Master, when Peter, James, and John went up on the mount with Christ, and Moses and Elias appeared unto them. Coming down out of the mountain they were interrogating Christ about this saying, that Elias should first come and restore all things. "Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come and restore all things [as the prophets have written]. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist." Is that a fact? Did the prophet say that John the Baptist should come? Did Jesus Christ say that John the Baptist should come after he had been here, after he had been put to death? After he had appeared to Jesus on the mount? And now, coming down from there, Christ says, He shall come again, and they say he spake of John the Baptist. If that be a fact, when, to where, and to whom, of all these reformers, did John the Baptist come, and for what purpose?

"Oh," says one, "John did not come to any of the reformers, for they say so. He would have to come as an angel, and there has not an angel come to this world for over eighteen hundred years, or never since John was on Patmos Isle."

Christ said he should come. Can you make Christ's word false? Can you countermand the word of God Almighty, and say the prophets have testified falsely, when they said he should come before his second coming. Christ said he should come. No guessing. How are you going to have the gospel now, in this world, in this age, if the church did apostatize, and go off into wrong-doing, and was not recognized as the church of Jesus Christ any longer, which brought about the necessity for a reformation, which was admitted by all Protestant churches of to-day by their actions; what are you going to do now? If there was an apostasy, and the gospel was to be restored, and that was to be by an angel, if the angel did come at the right time in the world's history and restore that gospel, are you still going to reject the witnesses and not accept the messenger, when the prophets and Jesus Christ said he should come? He must come to some one, or God's word fail. To whom did he come, or has there been a total failure in the promises of God?

We claim the authority was lost by transgression, and if the Roman Church had apostatized from the true gospel order of Christ, when Luther and others left it, she had no power to confer authority: but if that church had the power to confer authority she had the power to take that authority away again, when they departed from that faith. I do not care which horn of the dilemma you take. If they received the authority it was taken from them again. If they did not receive it from that Church, where did they get their authority? You see where they stand. Here is our faith on this point: We believe that there was an apostasy, we believe in the restoration of the gospel. And we must not only have the word, but we must have the power and the authority to administer that law of life; and if apostates can not confer authority, then we must get that authority from some other source, as we must hold that authority that will bind in heaven as well as on earth, or it can do no good. And as that authority had been lost, (John, you remember said he saw this, as we believe, represented by the man child in the twelfth chapter of Revelation, taken away to heaven,) that authority must come from heaven again. I am glad that John saw that angel having this everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell upon the earth, in a late period in the world's history, just before Christ should come. We claim that angel did come just like the prophet said he would come, like Jesus Christ testified he should come, and on the 15th day of May, 1829, by the imposition of hands, conferred the authority upon the first elders of this Church, authorizing them to go forth and preach this everlasting gospel; they were commanded of God, now, to go forth and make this proclamation, preaching the gospel of repentance for the remission of sins. They were afterwards ordained elders, with authority to lay on hands for the impartation of the Holy Ghost. We claim that was fulfilled by the conferment of authority in this generation to preach the everlasting gospel, which Jesus said should be preached in all the world as a witness. Are you prepared to say that men shall not receive authority from God, and then stand by the statement, made by nearly every Protestant church, that their ministry is called of God? Every orthodox Church in the land, almost, makes that claim. We have one Church, claiming to be Christian, that does not make that claim; but their claim is so inconsistent, that I do not see how a person can help but see the inconsistency of it.

If this Bible authorizes me or any other man to preach the gospel, it could only authorize me to preach the gospel recorded there. And if I preach from the authority conferred by this book, I must preach the gospel recorded in this book. If I preach under the apostolic commission, I must preach the apostolic gospel. I must not change it in any sense whatever. Paul says in Galatians 1:8, 9: "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." So if I claim my authority from the book I must preach what Jesus and the apostles preached. If I get my commission from heaven, and am called of God, I must not contradict what they preached. So no matter how I make the claim, I must preach the original gospel, if I represent Jesus Christ among men. If I do not, am I in the faith? "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith. Prove your own selves." Could you stand before an intelligent people and tell them that you had the hope of eternal life in you, if you were preaching a different gospel than what Jesus and Peter and Paul preached? "Oh, no," says one, "we do not preach a different gospel." Well, what did they preach as the gospel? They preached those principles rehearsed by my brother last night. He said they preached faith in God and in Jesus Christ whom he had sent. They preached the gift and power of the Holy Ghost. They preached that it was necessary for a man to be called of God as was Aaron, holding the authority to administer the gospel ordinances. They preached the doctrine of baptism, in connection with faith and repentance, for the remission of sins. They preached and practiced the laying on of hands, and prayer, for the confirmation of members and the gift of the Holy Ghost. That was what the apostles preached. Can you preach what they preached and preach less than that? Can you preach the gospel in its fullness and preach less than that? Did they preach too much? Then if you do not preach as much as they did, you do not preach enough; and if you preach something more than they did you preach too much, perhaps.

"Oh," says one, "nobody but the twelve apostles have held authority to lay on hands; and you claim that authority."

I will tell you why we claim it. We claim the gospel must always be the same; and we must have authority to administer in all the gospel ordinances. When this first angel came he did not confer authority to lay on hands for the imparting of the Holy Spirit; but God said that authority shall be given. I quote from section 17 of the revelations given to this Church, in the Doctrine and Covenants. This book takes the place of the discipline of the Methodist Church, and the discipline of the Presbyterian Church. They contain the construction man has placed upon God's word, what they think men ought to do. But when we do not know just what to do, we do what James says, refer the matter to God Almighty. And when he tells us what to do, we record that. And when God speaks, and a record is made of it, it is the word of God. And in the beginning of this work the Lord spoke to those elders of the Church. And they were called to be special witnesses, apostles of Jesus Christ. Yes, they were. They did not belong to the Quorum of Twelve, but they were special witnesses, and apostles of Jesus Christ, to go into all the world. And when this first authority was conferred upon them the promise was given from God, that they should receive the authority to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Then as we read in section 26 that when John came, as the prophet said he should come, and conferred this authority whereby they might administer baptism for the remission of sins, then immediately after we are told that Peter, James, and John conferred the authority and right to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. These men did not claim to assume the responsibility, but said God conferred the authority; then they started out to preach this glorious gospel in its fullness. Now notice what they did. They said that this heavenly messenger came and revealed to them the fact that there had been a people once living on this continent; and that people had the gospel revealed to them; and they kept a record of God's dealings with them, and that record was to come forth in this age by the hand of an angel; and that angel came, and revealed this book that I have in my hands, which is called the Book of Mormon. By the way, sometimes people get it into their heads and say the Book of Mormon, with us, supplants the Bible; but bless your soul, that is not correct. This Book of Mormon claims to be a history of a people that once inhabited this country, gives us a history of God's dealings with them, and the same gospel was revealed to the people on this continent that was revealed by Jesus on the other continent. As the Bible contains a fullness of the history of the gospel there, so the Book of Mormon contains it, here, on this continent. When the angel came and committed the law that was established on this continent to those sons of men, and this authority came from heaven, then there was a fullness of the gospel committed. And so this book instead of supplanting the Bible, gives us another witness, the testimony of another nation, that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, the son of the living God. It comes teaching the same principles, inspiring the same hope, representing the same God, promising the same reward. Hence, my friends, it comes in fulfillment of what the prophets of the Bible said should come to pass. Without the coming forth of this book there are prophecies in the Bible here that no man can show have been fulfilled. I am sure they can not. I have seen them try by the week. No man can show they have been fulfilled anywhere else. And this Bible that you have would be proven false if it had not been for the the coming forth of this record. But in its coming forth it demonstrates the truth of the first, like the Lord said here it should do, because the additional witness testified to the same grand truth.

Now when this work began these men had received a knowledge of this truth, and we have it recorded in section 76, that this is our testimony, that Christ lives, for we saw him in a heavenly vision, and received instructions from him. Hence, as to Peter, it was revealed from the God of heaven, that Jesus Christ was yet alive, and he was our foundation, he was our hope, he was our Savior, he was our all. And so we have the Church built on the proper foundation, started right, the authority coming from the God of heaven, by the medium of revelation and angelic administration, as the Bible said they should come; and the work starts out now. They said that this prophecy given by Joel in the second chapter, was about to be fulfilled. The Lord also said that the land of Palestine should be barren and unfruitful from generation to generation, until a certain time should come; then when this marvelous work should begin in the last days to restore all things as God promised should be, then Joel says the former and the latter rains shall return to that land. And so when these elders started out to preach they said the time is now at hand, for the angel said so, and in a few years you will see the former and latter rains come upon that land. They said the time had come that Isaiah spoke of when he said the Jews should return and build that city again. Zechariah also said that time should come. He saw the angel go out; that angel spoke to another, and said, Go speak to this young man, say unto him, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls. Then God was to send an angel to tell some young man when the time was at hand for this prophecy to be fulfilled. Now these elders went out and preached this gospel, and prophesied all the time for a little more than twenty years, then the former and the latter rains came. In 1852 and 1853 the former and latter rains descended upon that land again. The Jews began to gather to that land of theirs, and rebuild their city. Now you know in former time when they returned to Jerusalem from the Babylonish captivity they first repaired the walls, then built the city. This time it is to be built as towns without walls, and we see they are so rebuilding it. This time the walls are not rebuilt. God Almighty said it shall be built as towns without walls. They come back now, building and reconstructing, and they pay no attention to walls; but they keep coming, and now there are fifty thousand Jews in the city, and about that many more in the surrounding territory. Could these elders make God Almighty send the former and latter rain? Could these elders make the Jews begin to gather back, just like the prophets said they would gather into that country? Could they do that? Well, if they could, we can depend upon them, anyhow. If they can control the elements, control the people, and revolutionize the world, they will do to depend upon. But they could not do it; they simply gave the message that God sent from heaven. Now, the Lord said by prophecy, just a little while after this work came forth, it should be accomplished; and this work came forth in 1830, the Church was established, and the gospel preached among the nations of the earth. In a few years you see this literally fulfilled.

Now, you can not say, This may be fulfilled by somebody else. It is too late. Because just after the coming forth of this marvelous work, and this sealed book as spoken of by Isaiah, then the former and the latter rains should come, then the Jews would begin to gather back and this all should be accomplished. If we have not fulfilled the prophecy, tell me who has. Nobody else claims to have done it, but they try to apply these prophecies somewhere else. And if you would listen to them, as much as I have, make the effort to apply the prophecies that are spoken of, somewhere else, you would pity their ignorance and blindness, I am sure you would. It is a fact that these things are so plain that everybody who reads may know they are true. Who is it that does not know that the Jews are gathering back and rebuilding the city of Jerusalem? And yet with these prophecies, and with the preaching of the elders of the Church, and with all these things coming to pass, literally fulfilled before the eyes of this generation, then they will hold up their hands and say, Show me a sign, and I will believe you. Do you not read? Do you not know what is transpiring in the world? Do you not know what the Scriptures say shall come to pass? Do you not see that it is coming to pass? Where is my infidel friend that can account for the fulfillment of those prophecies, without taking God into the account when the utterance was made so long ago? You can not account for it at all. I was once almost a skeptic. If I had not found this gospel I would have been one altogether, because I never found anything in this world before that satisfied my mind.

There is not a single gospel truth preached by any Church in all this land that the gospel of Jesus Christ does not incorporate in its system. Our Methodist friends tell us that we can be saved through faith and repentance, relying upon the mercy of God and the atonement of Jesus Christ. If that be true, we can be saved that way. If it will save them it will save us. Another brother comes and says, that is insufficient; we must be baptized, for Christ the Son of God had to be baptized. All right. Now we accept what the first one said. It is necessary to have faith in God and Christ, believe in Jesus Christ. And we accept what the second one said. We will be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, by proper authority, for the remission of sins. Now we have done what the first one said was necessary, and what the second one said was necessary. And the first one would not say that baptism would endanger our salvation. They would not dare to say that. So you see we have done all that both of them say it necessary, and we stand one ahead, because we have done all that both said was necessary. Will our believing that the Book of Mormon is true, and doing what that book says to do, when that book tells us we must do just what the Bible says we should do, endanger our salvation; if we obey the gospel just like it is taught in the Bible, and live as Jesus Christ and the apostles have commanded, will belief in that book save us or condemn us? Which one? It can not condemn us. If it does no good it could do us no harm; because it teaches the same principles the Bible does, and you could not believe one without believing the other; and hence if that book was of no good at all, it could not condemn us, for it teaches the same principles as are taught in the New Testament.

Now, suppose there was to be a history found in Northern Africa, or down in Southern Africa, or anywhere in the world, and that was to be translated into our language, and it gave the history of a people that once lived there, and we believed it to be true and we found afterwards that record was not true, what effect would that have on our salvation, whether that record was true or false? It could not effect us. But we have evidence that the Book of Mormon is true. First of these, is the fact that it comes forth in fulfillment of God's word; and second, by the coming forth of this the prophecies have been fulfilled, and the truth of the Bible confirmed. Then you see we stand one ahead again. And so you see there is nothing in our system of faith that can endanger the hope of the salvation of anybody.

Now suppose it was not true that God had conferred the authority to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Could it hurt anybody to have a good man lay his hands on his head and pray for him, that God might richly endow him with the Holy Ghost, that it might come as an abiding comforter, and impart strength and grace sufficient to enable him to endure, and overcome the trials of life, and gain final salvation? That could not hurt anybody, or injure his hope of salvation. Then what do we do to forfeit salvation? We do everything that the Christian world says is necessary to secure salvation, and we do nothing to forfeit it. But, says one, you claim power to heal the sick. We claim no such thing. We claim that God Almighty has the power, and we have the promise here, put on record, through Jesus Christ and his apostles, that we shall perform certain things for the sick, and Jesus Christ says, "You shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." James says, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up [not the elder; the Lord shall raise him up]; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." Now we do that work just like the apostles and Jesus said to do it, then if it be the Lord's will, and they are not sick unto death, the Lord raises them up. If they are appointed to die he will raise them up in the resurrection.

In the Church of my childhood, when a man gets sick they send for the priest, to pray for them. He will say the prayers for the dying, he will perform this solemn ordinance, the last in this life. Well, I am not finding fault with them for that, if they would do it in the Lord's way. What do the Protestant churches do? If they get sick they go for the preacher sometimes. What does the preacher do? Why, he prays for them, that God may give them peace and consolation; that the Lord will bless them and comfort them. If it is his will, that he will raise them up. I do not find fault with them for that. But do they do that just like the Lord said to do it? That is the question. Why find fault with us for doing like the Lord says to do here in the Bible you profess to believe? Do you not know that the Lord said, by the Apostle James, "If he have committed sins they shall be forgiven," through this appointed ordinance of God Almighty? How is that? says one. Here stands the servant of God authorized by divine revelation from heaven to administer in the name of Jesus Christ. He stands there offering up a holy sacrifice. But, says one, the day of sacrifice is past. Yes, bloody sacrifices are past. But Peter said, "We offer up spiritual sacrifices unto God." Now, the elder comes and offers spiritual sacrifice in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of this poor brother's or sister's sins, in His name; and God says through that he will pardon their sins, if they have committed sins. There is a man offering up a spiritual sacrifice for the remission of sins and the promise of Jesus Christ stands security that he will receive it. Is there any benefit in that? Is there any good in that? Now, Peter says of God's servants, that they are "an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God, by Jesus Christ." Yes, and we receive a benefit and blessing in that, that the world knows nothing about.

If we are in harmony with God's word, I ask you why you reject the gospel of Jesus Christ. Why not accept the whole system of truth, which Jesus promised should be preached in all the world as a witness before the end should come? John says he saw the angel come, and he commissioned men to go forth and preach the gospel to every nation, just before the end should come, in the hour of God's judgment. These things are fulfilled in your eyes. Before you we stand as the servants of the Master declaring the message of life, authorized of God through the medium of the Holy Ghost to go forth and proclaim this blessed gospel, giving the promise of life to the children of men, ministering in those holy ordinances whereby the blessings of heaven are conferred upon the sons and daughters of men. You can demonstrate the truth of our mission if you want to. Hundreds and thousands of men and women have received these gospel ordinances, and what is the result? They have received the Holy Spirit as promised, confirming the work with signs following, just like the blessings followed the believer of the gospel in ancient times; and we have demonstrated that to our entire satisfaction. Then we are surely in the faith, and have a good reason to offer for our hope of eternal life.

May God help us to abide in the faith and have the hope of everlasting life, and be faithful and true, that we may receive, finally, full salvation in the sweet bye and bye, is my prayer in Jesus' name. Amen.

ANTI-MORMON METHODS.

In what might be called a preface to the "anti-Mormon movement" we find a statement made at the Omaha convention which conveys the thought that the object of the "movement" is to prepare men to meet what they are pleased to call the "Mormon delusion." The declaration is as follows:

"We have not been in position to meet the Saints always to the best advantage. They have gone to the rural communities where the churches were weak and our ministers were not well equipped with the necessary evidence to meet them, but the Latter Day Saint ministers are always fully equipped."—Reply, page 2.

We would like our "anti" friends (?) to compare this statement with the following from their founder, Alexander Campbell, and see where it will land them. And it might be well, while reading the extract, to remember the eulogy pronounced on Mr. Campbell by Grafton in his life of Mr. Campbell, page 180: "He thought as no other man ever thought, spoke as no other man ever spoke, wrote as no other man ever wrote." In the Christian System (edition of 1890), pages 316, 317, I find the following from this prodigy of wisdom, and it would be well if our opponents would heed it:

He that can, while preaching the gospel, deride and ridicule the errors of his fellow professors, is for the time being disqualified to persuade them to accept the truth, or gladly to receive the message of salvation. . . . Error must be attacked. It must be opposed by the truth. But it may be asked, whether the darkness may not be more easily dissipated by the introduction of light, than by elaborate discourses upon its nature and attributes. So with moral darkness or error. To dissipate it most effectually, the easiest and most ready way is to introduce the light of truth. No preacher is obliged to learn all the errors of all ages, that he may be able to oppose them; nor is a congregation enlightened in the knowledge of God by such expositions of error. Present opposing errors may require attention; but to attack these most successfully, it is only necessary to enforce the opposing truths. This is a very grave subject, and requires very grave attention. Much depends upon a rational and scriptural discussion of the question, Which is the most effectual way to oppose and destroy error? To aid us in such an inquiry, it is necessary to examine how the prophets and apostles opposed the errors of their times. The world was as full of error in those days as it has ever been since. The idolatries of the pagan world, and the various doctrines of the sects of philosophers, in and out of the land of Israel, threw as much labor into their hands as the various heresies of apostate Christendom have thrown into ours. Their general rule was to turn the artillery of light, and to gather into a focus the arrows of day, upon the dark shades of any particular error. Their philosophy was: The splendors of light most clearly display the blackness of darkness, and scatter it from its presence. Thus they opposed idolatry, superstition, and error of every name. Going forth in the armor of light, as the sun in the morning, the shades of the night retired from their presence, and the cheering beams of day so gladdened the eyes of their converts, that they loved darkness no more. Let us go and do likewise.

In the light of the above, it is quite a confession upon the part of the "antis" that their ministry are not equipped to meet us. If not equipped, then they must lack that light that was so effectual in dispersing the darkness and errors in apostolic times, hence they must be educated to discourse on the "nature and attributes" of darkness. Their light is so feeble that they can not retain their converts so they must confess that we, the Saints, "have taken more people from our Church than all other religious people." According to this, then, their light must be weaker than any other religious people. Perhaps it would be well for these men to read the confession of another of their leading men as found in the Christian Evangelist for February 9, 1899; editorial, J. H. Garrison editor. He says:

As a result of all this philosophizing, tampering, and trimming, we have an emasculated Christianity as it is received in the minds of a large number of professed Christian people of to-day.

We believe that many of these modern religious organizations, including the various schools of "divine healing," "faith cure," "Christian Science" are to be attributed to our impoverished and emasculated Christianity.

What these men evidently need is to turn the light in upon themselves and increase their own power to save and dispel the darkness by that increased light and power. "Emasculated" means without power, effeminate, without virtue, etc.

In this connection we wish to present another extract from Alexander Campbell's writings called the "Logic of the Ins and Outs, or of the Populars and Unpopulars," and let these "antis" classify themselves according to their illustrious leader:

I have long since discovered that there are two systems of logic, or two modes of reasoning, that seem to be almost uniformly adopted by two classes in society, irrespective of their religious or political views. The Ins adopt one system, the Outs another. By the Ins we understand those in authority with the people, and by the Outs, those not in authority with the people. The former are the Populars, the later the Unpopulars. The logic of the Ins has in it the following rules: First. Never submit any of those points essential to your good standing with the people, to the hazard of investigation. Remember you have something to lose, but nothing to gain.

Second. When your system is attacked, always extol the wisdom, piety, or virtue of its founders; discard upon its antiquity, and enumerate its votaries.

Third. Ridicule the pretensions and expose the arrogance of those who would dare to oppose names so revered, usages so ancient, and authorities so numerous.

Fourth. If possible, as far as lies in your power, arraign the motives and impeach the aims of your opposers.

Fifth. Calumniate their characters, if you can, under any pretense, and defame them, but with apparent regret that you should be compelled to do so.

Sixth. And lastly, when you are conscious that you can not carry your point, represent your opponent as unworthy of your notice; give his system or his arguments the name of some obsolete heresy, and tell how it was blasted and refuted centuries ago. The logic of the Outs is not so easily reduced to one system as that of the Ins. If in politics, one system is adopted; if in religion, another. But the general points of coincidence are:

First. To submit everything to the test of reason; and if in religion, to revelation.

Second. Neither to adopt nor to oppose any point because of the names of the persons who embrace or reject it.

Third. Canvass the opinions and arguments of those who oppose, without invading their reputation, or attempting to injure it. When the cause of the Outs is a good one, such is the system of logic adopted. And even when it is not so good, there must be an apparent respect to the above decisions.—Christian Baptist, pp. 402, 403.

Let the "antis" pause and reflect.

HOW RELIGION IS AFFECTED BY COLLEGE EDUCATION.

In the discussion, during the last few months, of the effects of college education on the religion of young men and women, it was given as the conclusion of many of the representatives of leading institutions, as a result of continual observation among their students, that there is a growing tendency, in most of the larger schools at least, to give too little attention and thought to religious matters, and this lack of attention often reaches the point of being an almost total disregard of religious teaching. This is true even of those who have been carefully and religiously reared, although President Harper of the University of Chicago attributes it to a lack of religious training, to which it may in some cases be due.

President Harper recently made some statements concerning the influence of college education on religion which are especially noteworthy. They are taken from the Ringgold Record of July 16, 1903:

The university is just beginning to feel the effects of the disregard of religious instruction which has been prevalent during the last twenty years. In the home and on through the preparatory school there has been a peculiar and fatal lack of religious training. The boys and girls whose characters and habits would be affected by this irreligious spirit have now reached the age when they should enter the universities, and their views on life and religion are accepted by the public as those fostered by the university. There is naturally a tendency in a university environment to confirm them in their skepticism. They are thrown into the company of others of like opinions, opinions that have been formed through lack of religious instruction in early life. The university training may possibly strengthen these opinions.

To teach a man to discriminate is the primary purpose of education. If it does not do that, it has not served its purpose. But in doing this it very frequently causes the student to doubt the truth of what little religion he has. It is difficult to see why it should not do this.

No truth is accepted on the basis of another person's authority, according to the scientific attitude of mind which is taught in the universities and colleges of to-day. The college student is taught to question everything. Problems whose very existence he had never imagined are offered to him for solution. Philosophy commands him to doubt the existence of matter. Problems which in his years of adolescence he had firmly believed were settled are being investigated and new solutions offered by his teachers and fellows. He passes through not only a mental but a moral evolution. The same questioning attitude which he is directed to assume in the classroom toward scientific phenomenon may be unconsciously assumed by him in his every-day life toward religious dogma.

Just as he doubts the occurrences of every-day life he doubts the teachings received from parent and pastor.

While the lack of proper religious training and the teaching of students to "question everything" may have an effect in bringing about the state of affairs described above, they are not the most important factors. A chief element of the cause lies in the want of contact with influences which would keep before the student early teaching and precepts, when so many attractions which lead him to forget this training take up his time and attention. Another primary feature is the fact that when many students learn to "discriminate" and "question," they find in the teachings received from parent and pastor inconsistencies and ideas which their own reading and study disprove, and this has a disastrous effect upon their religion at a time when they are beginning to think and make up their own minds in regard to religious and other matters.

If these deductions are correct, it is of greatest importance that there be religious teaching which will stand the test of the research of the student mind, and that the student be in surroundings which will offer every inducement to keep him in line with that teaching.

Among the thousands who enter college every year it is customary, in choosing a school to attend, to consider the size, age, equipment, and other similar points of an institution. A much more vital question is, Does the place give the student sufficient moral and religious attractions along with the other instructions of school? If what Doctor Harper says is true, that in the environments of many institutions the students are often made to doubt the truth of what religion they have, and there is a tendency to "confirm them in their skepticism," too great care can not be taken in choosing which to attend. The consequences of the choice may be of inestimable importance.

How does Graceland stand in respect to these qualifications? Investigate!—R. C. Kelley, in the Athenian Arena, November, 1903.

THE IDEA OF GOD HELD BY NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS.

We most of us have come across references to the "Great Spirit" which has been so often represented as the object of Indian veneration and worship. The impression conveyed by this term is a misleading one, says Lætitia Moon Conard, a Philadelphia lady who has given careful study to Indian mythology. She writes (in the American Journal of Theology, October):

"The first thing to note and to remember is that the Indian has not one god only, but many gods. When he passes by a remarkable waterfall, he makes a prayer and leaves an offering. There are various rocks, caves, and other objects of nature that are approached with awe and presented with gifts. Father Brebeuf, writing about the Hurons in 1636, tells of a certain rock which they passed on their way to Quebec, and to which they always offered tobacco, placing it in the cleft of the rock and addressing the demon who lived there with prayer for protection and success. When the Indian in crossing a lake finds himself in serious danger, he prays to the spirit of the lake, throwing an offering, perhaps a dog, into the water. When the sound of the thunder frightens him, he prays to the thunder-being for protection. When he needs rain, he directs his rites to the god of rain and thunder. Air and earth and water are alive with spirits, any one of which may be prayed to; but, as a matter of fact, certain ones are singled out for worship. Add to these the many animal deities which are invoked even more frequently than those of the elements in the sacred formulas of the Cherokees. Among all the Indians we find particular species of animals and plants adored by particular individuals or tribes as special guardian deities, the famous totems of the Indians. It will be remembered that the Indian corn appeared to Hiawatha."

Bearing in mind the fact that the Indians are "vigorous polytheists," it is interesting to study the character of the chief of their many deities. In several tribes the chief god was figured in purely human form, and worshiped as the "Great Man," the "Old Man Above," etc. The sun was especially prominent in the worship of southern Indians. The chief deity of other tribes was described as an animal—an eagle, turtle, or "great hare." We quote further:

"Some of the northern Indians say that the first person on earth was a woman. After her came a dog. Later, a big man came, who made the lakes and ponds, and filled them with water, and tore the dog to pieces to make other animals out of. Over these he gave control to the woman and her offspring. The big man figures here as creator; but the story does not tell who created the woman and dog. The Tinneh in British America tell of a great ocean in the beginning, inhabited only by a huge bird. This bird by its touch on the waters created the earth and its inhabitants, except the Tinneh, who were created by a dog (to them a sacred animal). Some of these travelers say that this bird was the Great Spirit. This is a later idea tacked on to the old story. It is interesting to note in this connection that some of the Indians speak of the chief deity as a great bird who flies through the air, the flapping of whose wings is thunder. These ideas of the Deity as a great bird present striking analogies with biblical ideas. A story of the Iroquois and Hurons tells us that the human race sprang from a woman that fell from heaven and lighted on a turtle. This is interesting as being similar to the idea found in Christian literature, that there were heavenly beings before the earth was created.

"There are other stories that show even more than the preceding how incomplete were the wisdom and foresight attributed to the Creator. Creation was accidental, according to one myth reported from the Sioux, which tells us that the Great Spirit, taking a stone to hurl at a serpent, suddenly changed his mind and transformed the stone to a man. The man was, however, fastened to the ground until a serpent perfected the creation by gnawing him loose. This and several other myths show that the Indian creator was either not wise enough or not good enough to do his work just right. A Chinook chief of the early part of the last century told a traveler that one deity created man imperfectly, leaving him with closed eyes and mouth, and immovable hands and feet. A second and more kindly god opened his eyes and gave power of motion to his feet and hands; he taught him also to make tools. Some of the California stories represent the coyote as creator; others have another creator-deity, but say that the coyote gave man gifts that the creator refused. Indeed, the coyote is more worshiped than the superior god.

"The creator-god of the Indians rarely receives much worship. He is a deity of long ago, an ancient father, an exalted being, perhaps; but he takes no interest in the present affairs of men. Colonel Dodge, who lived among the Cheyennes and other Indians of the plains, once asked an Indian, 'Who made the world?' 'The Great Spirit,' answered the Indian. 'Which Great Spirit?' asked Dodge; 'the good God, or the bad God?' 'Oh, neither of them,' replied the Indian; 'the Great Spirit that made the world is dead long ago. He could not possibly have lived so long.'"

The Indians frequently urge that the white man's God is good for him, but that they have their own deities which serve them better. Perhaps, as is suggested by the writer, their thought is like that of a New England Indian who said to a missionary: "Shall I throw away my thirty-seven gods for your one God?" We quote in conclusion:

"The Indian's god falls in his estimation as he himself declines. When confronted by a people greater than themselves, the Indians were easily convinced that their deity also must be greater. We find similar ideas among all uncivilized and semicivilized peoples; when the people show great power it is evidence that their god is a powerful one. Thus Israel felt assured that Jehovah, or Yahveh, was greater than the gods of other peoples, because his people had conquered others under his banner. . . .

"When the Indians in councils with the white men use the term 'Great Spirit,' they are apparently thinking of the white man's God, and have come to claim him for themselves also. Thus they often say that the Great Spirit gave them their land, and appeal to the laws of the Great Spirit as common to them and to the white people. In spite of the fact that the early Indians, as the first missionaries tell us, did not believe in a universal supreme Deity, it is surprising how easily they accept the monotheistic ideas of Europeans. They like to think of this greater Deity, but they do not wish to give up their old rites, to cease praying to the sun, the earth, the thunder. We find the Indian under Christian influence reconciling his religion with his new ideas by describing thunder as the voice of God, and the sun as his residence."—The Literary Digest, November 7, 1903.

HOUSEKEEPERS OR HOME-MAKERS.

I think we, as mothers, need to have often impressed upon us the distinction between housekeeping and home-making. A true home-maker ought to be a good housekeeper; but I am afraid some of our perfect housekeepers are not successful in making pleasant homes.

I know a mother who has highly polished floors all over her house, even in the kitchen. Her fifteen-year-old boy is expected to walk on tiptoe, or take off his shoes when he comes into the house. If he needs to walk about very much, as when carrying in wood or water, newspapers are laid down at convenient distances for him to step on. This boy when at a neighbor's whose summer kitchen was not plastered, said, "How nice it must be to have a room like this where you can drive all the nails into the walls you want to, and do as you please."

He usually entertains his company in the yard or woodshed, and if they go into the house they are commanded to walk carefully. The floors are kept beautifully clean and free from scratches; but isn't it a pity to have such nice floors that one can't walk on them in comfort?

I know of another case—one of my own school-mates. The boy was an only child. His people had a nice house and a pretty yard. I can remember as a child, thinking it strange that the front of the house was always closed and the shady front porch never occupied; while often, on summer evenings, we would see Mr. and Mrs. D. sitting in the woodshed door that overlooked the potato patch. The boy was running wild on the streets. When he grew older, he stole some money and was sent to prison. I often wonder what sort of a boy he would have been if his home had not been too good to invite his friends into.

I know all about how nice it is to have things clean and in order, and how much disorder a crowd of children can stir up in a short time—but what are our homes for? I confess that a clean, quiet room is a perfect delight to me, and I often feel impatient because things do not stay in order longer, but the little ones must have some liberty. I feel sorry for the child in the home where all the chairs are too good to be used for making houses and trains. It is rather trying when you have an untimely caller to have all the chairs tied together or turned bottom side up against the door; but what fun the little boys do have with them!

I know it is difficult to sweep up the little pieces of paper, and no matter how big the pan for the clippings, some are sure to get on the floor, and the little fingers don't do a very thorough job at picking up. But don't scold—the little folks have had a delightful morning cutting out pictures.

We have all had a rest during the warm weather, when even the wee ones wanted to be out of doors; but now the dark days are coming when they must play in the house; let us get a good supply of patience and let them stir things up a little.

I sometimes feel that it is a positive blessing not to have such highly-polished woodwork or such nice furniture that one need to be in terror for fear something will get scratched—another compensation of poverty!

I heard this conversation between two friends recently:

Mrs. S, who is noted as a fine housekeeper, but who has very little time to read, said: "Oh, dear, what is the use of living, just to dig and scrub all the time."

"I think it is wicked to spend all one's time digging and scrubbing," said Mrs. L.

"But what can one do?" replied Mrs. S; "I work all the time, and then my house is always dirty."

Another lady said, "Why, Mrs. S, I always feel that my house is quite comfortably clean until I see the way you keep yours. I always go home from your house feeling like a sloven."

Then I thought what a pity to get so in the habit of looking for dirt that we can see it everywhere. I could not help wondering which was the worst—dust in the corners of room or in our brains.

I have often thought with gratitude of the scolding a motherly woman once gave me. She asked me why I looked so tired; and I replied, I am afraid, with a feeling of virtuous pride, that I had done a big ironing that morning. She soon made me realize that I was sinning against my nursing baby, in so tiring myself, and then she gave me a little talk on the subject of ironing.

"You will be surprised," she concluded, "to find how many clothes can be put away without being ironed and no one be the worse for it. I fold my sheets, the kitchen towels, and a great many other pieces, tuck them away in the drawer and run out on the porch and read the paper."

I tried the experiment, rather doubtfully, the next week, but was reassured by the gallant remarks of my husband, when I asked him what he would think if he found wrinkles in his underclothes, he replied smilingly that he would much rather have the wrinkles there than in my face.

So I concluded that we women would be wise to get the dust out of our brains and the wrinkles out of our faces, even if we had to leave them in some less noticeable places.

I am truly sorry for the woman who is so over-civilized that she is positively wretched in a room where the colors are not harmonious, the window shades up too high or a picture hung a little crooked, although the same woman would not be in the least disturbed over the lack of soul harmonies, or a distorted spiritual vision.

So many details crowd upon the attention of the housekeeper of to-day that it is very difficult to keep clearly before ourselves and our children the real aim of all this machinery of living. Are we really getting more life out of it all, or are we so burdening ourselves with trifles that we have no strength or time left for the real things of life?

It seems as though it must be more easy to-day than in the days of Mary and Martha to become troubled over many things; but it is still true that the Marys who take time to draw inspiration from the source of true life are wiser than the over-anxious Marthas.

I know women who are slaves to their nice houses, who get no comfort out of their homes except a foolish pride in keeping them in perfect order.

Sometimes, when I go into a house where everything is always in order and the furniture is unacquainted with dust or scratches, the housekeeper's instinct arises within me and makes me almost envious. But when I go home to my noisy, happy crowd, the mother-heart gets the better of me, and I think what does it matter, so long as we are all happy? What would a child amount to who would always sit on a chair in the corner and never disturb anything? Let me be thankful that none of mine are of that kind.

Most of all to be pitied is the mother who can keep her house in perfect order because her children seek their happiness elsewhere.

Let us remember that our homes are for the comfort of the family, and not the family to take care of the house.—Mrs. R. E. Longenecker in the American Mother.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

SR. SUSIE GILBERT, primary superintendent of the Massachusetts District, writes that she is "much pleased with the new First Primary lessons" now being published in the Primary Quarterly. She adds that "they are exactly along the line of lessons I have used before, but delight to use them again. I think they will be a great help to all first primary teachers."

We would be glad to hear from other primary teachers how they find these new lessons; how they may be improved (for there is no piece of work of man that can not be improved), or any kindly-made suggestion with reference thereto. Let us labor together to make these lessons as nearly perfect as may be. Have you tried them in your school?

Reports.

District and local school officers should not overlook the matter of reporting, as the end of the calendar year is fast drawing near. It will be remembered that each school is expected to report to the district secretary immediately after the close of each quarter, this without regard to when your district convention may be. Thus you will make four reports per year, April 1, July 1, October 1, and January 1. If you have not done so, make report on January 1, 1094, to cover all of the year of 1903, if your school has been in existence that long. The district secretary needs these reports and must have them to make up the annual report of the district to the General Secretary.

The Annual Reports of the districts for 1903 are due at the office of the General Secretary on February 10, and that they may not be late, it will be well for district secretaries to begin at once upon this matter and have it well under way so that all reports may be made out and forwarded promptly after the close of the year. It will insure better success if report blanks be previously sent to each school with a request for prompt return. If you do not receive the report after a reasonable time, write again for it. And if necessary, write again and again. Get the report. We want to have a complete report at the forthcoming General Convention in 1904.

We shall be glad to receive items of news, short, spicy articles, paragraphs, or lines upon Sunday-school work from the workers anywhere in the field. What are you doing? What have you done? and what are you going to do? What apparatus and supplies do you use, need, or desire? What would improve your condition? What have you that will or may improve our condition? Let us hear from you. Do not think that you can not interest any one. Try it and see. Who will lead out in this?

The General Superintendent in the Field.

From now till the beginning of the new year, the General Superintendent will work in the districts in the sunny South,—Alabama, Mobile, and Florida districts. The new year up to General Convention time will be spent in the districts of California, Utah, and Idaho. We can not possibly work the fields as we would like, but hope by the coöperation of local and district workers to do considerable. It should not be forgotten that the world is a large field for one man to work and that it necessitates considerable haste and hard work to cover even a portion of it each year, in addition to the work in the office of the General Superintendent. But we are hopeful and encouraged.

IN a letter from Bro. Frederick A. Smith he said: "When I made up my quarterly report last quarter it showed nine Sunday-schools and one Religio organized in my field by the missionary force. . . . A number of these are in places where we have no branches, and some in what is known as unorganized territory. And I think most all of them are working under the General Association rules." This is very good news. And it is a splendid showing for the field for one quarter. "What will the harvest be?" At that rate there will not long remain what we are pleased to call "unorganized territory." We were well aware that "Bro. Fred" and his coworkers were "hustling" matters pretty well, but did not know to what extent they were successful. Further in the letter he adds: "I think you can refute the claims that have been made in the past that the missionaries were not helping the Sunday-school as they should. I think that a pretty good showing for one quarter, don't you?" Yes; the time has long since passed when it could be correctly said that the Sunday-school was being neglected by the missionary force, if indeed, it could ever have been said truthfully. Some have neglected it, and there may yet be some that do neglect it, but they are indeed very few. We do not always hear all about it, but the work is there just the same and is having its influence in the right direction. May we all work together and make this as well as all other phases of the work a complete success. If we work together, God will bless our efforts.

THE following is clipped from the report of the Iowa State Sunday-school Convention for 1902, in the Iowa Sunday-school Helper. Here are some practical suggestions from successful Sunday-school workers of long experience. What most schools lack is the "go" of which they speak. If your school seems disinteresting, put a little "go" into it. If your average attendance is gradually growing less, put a little "go" into your own movements. If your young folks and children would rather go on a picnic than to Sunday-school, put a little "go" into all the exercises of the day. If you can not draw and interest people from the outside world, put a little "go" into yourself and assistants and lighten up and brighten up the work at all points. Whatever may be the matter, put a little "go" into the whole concern and see if the conditions do not materially change for the better. A little "go" is the panacea for many an ill in the Sunday-school. Try it:

HOW TO PUT "GO" INTO THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

THE OPENING EXERCISES.

F. W. Evans.

Not the rush and hurrah, a get through in a hurry sort of a go; this would not be desirable; but rather the quiet mien, a feeling of reverence, an air of worship, a spirit of prompt compliance with the order of exercises, an unconscious feeling in all present that they are there for the purpose of learning of God.

1. The superintendent must have this kind of go in him. You can't have "go" in your Sunday-school if "go-to-sleep" is in the leader.

2. Begin promptly with a quiet signal from the superintendent. Do not use a bell. Open with prayer.

3. The superintendent should not talk too much. Comment when you can—scold, never.

4. Arouse an esprit de corps among the scholars that will make them alert, quick to catch your will, and prompt to execute it.

5. Before reading the lesson take a few minutes for review, correction, and preview. Use variety of method in reading the lessons.

6. Have good music.

REGULAR AND PUNCTUAL ATTENDANCE.

Mrs. Doctor Little, of Burlington, presented this topic. Mrs. Little has been eminently successful along this line. She stated that it was just as important to have pupils regular and punctual in attendance as to secure new pupils. Teachers can not teach irregular pupils. It pays to put time and money into devices that will help along this line. Accurate records must be kept and pupils made acquainted with these.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, November 10.

Editors Herald: To-day I received the following report from Elder Pinga of Hao. In his letter to me he says that as the branch book was lost there may be a few others which they may have forgotten, but as near as he can tell the report is correct.

He says: "Ei faaiteraa i te mau mero no te amaa i Hao i pohe i te ati, te mau taeae e te mau tuahine e te mau tamarii faatahinuhia." A free translation is: "A report of the members of the branch of Hao who died in the storm, the brothers and sisters, and the children who were blessed."

Officers: Moeava, elder; Tauruhua, priest; Mahei, Tuporo, Tagihia, Tamahakirua, teachers; Tapuni, deacon.

Brothers: Tuaka, Punga, Tuhiva, Torohia, Mitai, Kuranui, Tamatoa, Fariua, Temagi, Ganohoa, Tekiro, Pahoto, Tetopata, Teinopohe, Toporeo, Temere, Torikura, Temauri, Tuarau, Taati, Rogonui, Nomo.

Sisters: Tekura, Teua, Tehetu, Taha, Tauhara, Rata, Patuhua, Pigoi, Tepogi, Tiairoa, Tepori, Tuhiata, Reihiva, Teniniko, Meka, Tapora, Tutaki, Kakaraua, Turou, Punau, Hinano, Huiro, Gakura, Warohiga, Tikere, Kapua, Takua, Piritake, Tikamotu, Katupu, Higoariki, Tukua, Tiaki, Teipo, Unu, Kahura, Atanua, Teroromataigo, Gahina, Tekopu.

Children blessed:

Males: Varoa, Teuvira, Tepiki, Mohi, Tinirau, Tehiva, Moeovoiti, Hiti, Puniava, Fatitiri, Tuohea, Munanui, Teagi, Pugoiti, Huri, Kararu, Tautu, Viri.

Females: Kahuragi, Tekura, Takua, Poroarika, Teagai, Mohaga, Teato, Mokouri, Putake, Teari, Tepori, Vero, Toka, Gatake, Haki, Huirooiti, Teihoariki, Mohea, Mapuna, Fakarua, Tikamotuiti, Reihivaiti, Petano, Meto.

Thus there were lost from that branch in the storm of last January, seven officers, twenty-two brethren, and forty sisters, or sixty-nine members of the church, and forty-two children who had been blessed by the eldership, making a total of one hundred and eleven deaths from that one branch; and as Elder Pinga wrote in a late letter that there were not one hundred members left in that branch counting the children blessed, and as they are about two thirds of the number of the members, there are only about sixty members left of that once large and flourishing branch in Hao.

Elder Elia, who is governor of Amanu, an island near Hao, was here a short time ago and promised to send us a list of those of that island who were lost in that storm; but by far the largest number of our Church members who were lost were those of Hao; and we have no fuller details of the loss of others since we last wrote.

Although the printer affirms very positively that he will have at least six hundred of the Doctrine and Covenants printed and bound by the last of February, so that I can take them to the conference in Anaa, I am getting doubtful, and rather expect that I will have to go without them. I am rereading the translation with Mr. Henry before giving it to the printer, and we find some few mistakes yet, and sometimes have to correct some of the former corrections.

The missionaries are reporting a few baptisms in the Tuamotus, and in Raiatea a few of those who left the Church a few years ago have repented and have returned to the Church.

Peace be with the Israel of God.

JOSEPH BURTON.

PROVIDENCE, Rhode Island, November 15.

Editors Herald: I am glad to renew for my HERALD, for I could not get along very well without it.

We as a branch are getting along pretty well. The pastor, Bro. George Robley, is doing all he can for the benefit of the branch, and for the encouragement of the Saints. I am glad to see the young brethren and sisters coming up to the front. The deacon of the branch, Bro. Gondolff, is faithful, always at his post, rain or shine, and gets the chapel warmed for the Saints. Our missionary brethren, Sheehy and Bullard, are visiting the branches and encouraging them in their duties.

I am feeling well in the work of God.

T. H. MOORE.

SPRINGBURN, Scotland, November 17.

Editors Herald: After a long spell of rainy and cloudy weather the monotony is broken this morning by the sun shedding its gentle rays upon all nature and making our hearts rejoice in the wonderful works of God. To add to our joy we have just received our American mail. We always get an abundance of digestible matter from the HERALD, Ensign, and our home paper, the Chronicle. The splendid articles and stirring testimonies seem to lift our spirits above the groveling things of this world; and as I sit this morning in deep meditation upon God's revealed plan for the amelioration of the human race and feel his gentle spirit brooding over me, that which alone is calculated to exalt the intellectual powers of the human mind and fill our heart and soul to its fullest capacity, I feel to breathe silent thanks to my heavenly Father for the angel's message.

The work in Scotland has its hindrances and drawbacks as well as elsewhere; but occasionally we get one willing to embark with us in the gospel boat and to withstand the storms of a Galileean life. Christ requests us to embark with him upon this tempestuous sea and has promised us not a smooth voyage, but if faithful, a safe one.

Through the godly walk of Bro. Murray and wife at Newarthill, they have brought a young man into the work. We have been holding meetings there on Friday night with some interest, but have abandoned them until later in the winter when Bro. Rushton returns from England. In our meeting at Newarthill, Bro. Munro, president of the Hamilton Branch, ably assisted, and also Bro. Pinkerton by his presence. These brethren after working hard all day came six miles every night. That is showing their faith by their works. Bro. and Sr. Arber left here October 31, on steamship Columbia for America. Their presence and assistance are very much missed, but may they meet with success in their new venture is our prayer.

Your brother in Christ,

25 Avenue Road.

GEORGE W. THORBURN.

SANTA ANA, California, November 4.

Editors Herald: Since my last letter I have visited and labored as the way opened for me, with fair success. I can not report a large number of baptisms, yet the indications of advancement are such that I feel encouraged. But it seems to be a question with some as to just what is sufficient to encourage a missionary. While I know of no standard of measure on this question, that has been accepted by vote, yet the presence of the Holy Spirit in my efforts has always been sufficient to give not only satisfaction but joy. So when I preach a sermon or converse with a person and the Spirit gives liberty of speech or clearness of thought I feel that advancement is made in the work we are engaged in, and I feel encouraged, although I may see no visible signs of it, at present.

I have never visited a district or branch that I thought was in as good a condition as it might be; neither have I ever felt that I was in the condition that I should be in; but realizing that things might be worse, I have felt to thank God for the good and the few victories we have won.

There are not many opportunities for missionary work in this field as in some others, yet it is not as hard a mission as it has been represented. Viewing my work since I have been here, I feel about as well satisfied with the results as with any summer's labor. There are many noble Saints, and they are making a fine record in this district.

We have done some street preaching and have seen some good results. Three times we had an opposition meeting on the opposite side of the street. Twice it was the Salvation Army. The army only had one man whose vocal organs were sufficiently well developed to compete with us, and he, too, was a Kansas production; and as he could not talk long at a time, they gave us several select hymns, which were sung with unusual force, accompanied with heavy pounding on the base drum and mighty shaking of several tambourines. But as the average missionary has learned to stand his ground if on the street, and as there was plenty of fresh air coming from the Pacific Ocean to be utilized in telling the gospel story, we made the necessary vocal effort and let our voice rise above the din and noise so even our self-appointed opposers heard more than they wanted to. Towards the last of their efforts, our strong-lunged Kansas boy made a mighty effort in prayer, but all I understood of it was "Oh God, give salvation," then they moved off in stately procession singing and playing their musical instruments. I wondered how such opposition looked to those who stood by.

But the most interesting experience I have had in this mission, was a twelve-session debate on the "church propositions" with an "Anti-Mormon" Campbellite, the Reverend E. Hyder. My opponent was blessed with an abundance of confidence, but it became apparent that he and his members lost considerable courage before the debate closed.

A short time afterward Bro. A. Carmichael visited Reverend E. Hyder and one of his main supporters and an agreement was made to repeat the debate at Garden Grove in our church, beginning October 25, and later in a hall in Santa Ana. After the arrangements had been made and the announcements circulated they came to the conclusion that Reverend Hyder would not have a fair show in our church, so declined to carry out their agreement. Sunday, October 25, we were at the church and quite a crowd had gathered by the time appointed, but no Reverend E. Hyder. He has insisted on having at least half of the first debate in our church, so we compromised the case by going to Talbert, away from both churches, but near enough for quite a number of the members of both churches to attend.

They now say he is willing to debate Peak or any other "Mormon" on earth in an open field, so we wrote him on Sunday and offered to meet him in his own neighborhood, beginning November 22. I have not heard from him yet, but rather expect from the condition of things he will be compelled to accept.

I hear Bro. C. Crumley is on his way from Northern California with his family to locate them in Garden Grove. I believe this is a wise move for Bro. Charles, and I wish him success. The Saints speak well of him, and from certain conditions of this district I hope Bro. Crumley will be permitted to remain here till spring at least.

My health is good and I feel confident in the work. As the light of Zion increases in brilliancy I hope to be as near the fountain-head as possible.

W. E. PEAK.

BOONEVILLE, Missouri, November 25.

Editors Herald: I am now working homeward to spend holidays with loved ones. We find the Northeastern Missouri District not an easy field in which to make converts to the latter-day work. Some few noble souls have obeyed the word, and the intimations of the good Spirit have been that in the Lord's own time the honest ones will be gathered in, if only the Saints and elders live faithfully and strive to make the needed sacrifice. New openings are being found in many places to sow the good seed, and the reaping time is sure to come if the Lord's workers grow not weary in well doing.

During the summer season Bro. Alfred White labored with me, and in the fall Bro. Essig assisted me in the southern part of the district, while Brn. White and Summerfield labored in the northern part. Bro. George Essig is not under conference appointment, but he devotes a goodly portion of his time to preaching the word, and I trust that God will bless him spiritually and temporally so that the mortgage on his home may be removed and his usefulness may be increased.

We have tried to preach the word in new places as much as possible and avoided being with the branches except at conference time and when specially requested to preach the word. The good Spirit has been with us to cheer, comfort, and specially direct at times, for which I feel to praise the Lord.

No earthly riches would induce me to so long remain away from home and loved ones; but Jesus said to build up the kingdom of God should be the first choice of his servants and all other things should be added. May we have that abiding faith.

JOHN KALER.

THORNTON, Rhode Island, November 23.

Editors Herald: Quiet reigns in our small State after the late election, and everything is running as usual. Election comes once a year, but religion is always with us. We are moving along here in Providence and some encouraging signs come to gladden the hearts of the earnest workers now and then, just to keep things going. At present we have fairly good attendance at the preaching services and prayer-meetings, but nothing to what it ought to be. If each individual member could only realize how much of responsibility rests upon him, I think they would all try to be present and fill a seat at least in the house of God.

Bro. George H. Smith, who is laboring in the district, preached for us on Sunday morning and the writer at night. We are holding preaching services at Bro. James McKinnon's on Tuesday evenings, and some interest is manifested in that section of the city. An effort was also put forth at Bro. Frank Abbott's, at Pawtucket, by Brn. Bullard, Smith, and Gates, and good done; the meetings, however, are discontinued for the present. The work in Fiskville and vicinity is moving along with interest manifested on the part of the membership and others.

I find it quite difficult to keep up with all of the services, acting as president of the branch here, and work for the bread that perishes. (The bread perishes pretty fast at our house.) However, I do what I can and wish I had the strength to do more. If I do not get to work on Monday the "boss" is very kind and does not say anything; I am the "boss." The Sunday-school here is improving continually under the care of Bro. John Suttill, and we trust may yet lead in excellence and numbers.

Signs of the Christmas-tide are already visible, as the singing practice has begun for the occasion.

Work is progressing on the chapels at Fall River and Attleboro.

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

STEWARTSVILLE, Missouri, November 25.

Dear Herald: I closed a very pleasant series of meetings at Edgerton Junction, Missouri, a few days ago, and on last Saturday went to Far West to fill a Sunday appointment. On Sunday evening I organized a Religio there.

Early Monday morning we made arrangements for the use of a vacant building as a place of worship, which will be much better than meeting in private houses of the Saints.

At Cameron I met Bro. Temme Hinderks, the district president. Monday afternoon we had made an appointment with the Saints there to meet on Monday evening to consider the matter of branch organization provided for by the last district conference. We met at half past seven at the home of Bro. Edward Austin. After a season of prayer and testimony, in which the power of God was manifest, we proceeded to organize the Cameron Branch, as the Lord gave us direction. Elder J. C. Elvert was chosen president, Bro. A. R. Daniels called and ordained a priest, Bro. T. J. Sloan called and ordained a teacher, Sr. Susie Wolf was chosen clerk, and a building and location committee selected. Thus we have in Cameron a branch, Sunday-school, and Religio, and hope soon to have a church house.

I expect to spend Thanksgiving in Stewartsville, thence to St. Joseph.

WALTER W. SMITH.

TUNCURRY, N. S. W., October 30.

Editors Herald: When I last wrote to the HERALD I was in New Zealand; my address now is Tuncurry, New South Wales, (Cape Hawke). Australia offers a good field for the prosecution of missionary work, but one must be satisfied with a less number of "times preached" than in America. I am glad to see the advancement of the latter-day work in Australia; and as I look back upon the pioneer efforts of Brn. Rodgers and Wandell and others, surely I must say the Lord has hastened his work in this land. The opposition was bitter in the days of the early missionaries, but conditions have greatly changed.

Good news comes to me from Maoriland. Bro. Robert Hall, our first convert in New Zealand, is now laboring as an elder with Bro. Tucker preaching the gospel. Bro. Hall is a young man, and I am sure the Saints throughout the whole church will be glad he has enlisted for life. If the work in New Zealand moves though slowly to begin with, it will be but in accordance with the work of God in all ages. The "kingdom of heaven" being likened to a "grain of mustard seed" shows that there will be a gradual development from a small beginning. I have found out that as the plant of the mustard seed is at first insignificant, so the work of God is at first looked upon with contempt. The germ of the seed is small, but in the finality there will be outspreading branches for the birds of the air to rest in. May the kingdom of God as the flowing tide go forth till it shall "cover the earth."

Bro. Wight will take his departure for America in about ten days. He was in this district not long ago for about a month and I was during that time privileged to be with him. I heard many discourses delivered by him to the edification and instruction of the hearers, and which was attended by the power of God. He left here for Sydney the 20th of this month on board the Electra. As the boat steamed away and I saw his handkerchief waving till he was out of sight I thought of the waving of handkerchiefs at San Francisco fifteen months ago by Brn. Luff and Hilliard and the Saints and friends, and I was moved to tears. I thought of the brotherhood of man and how since we were of "one blood" we ought to be "one." With the going away of Bro. Wight home will seem farther away from me than before. Yet I could not but be glad he was going homeward, for I knew loved ones awaited his coming.

Doctor McCarthy's rain-making experiments which were referred to in the HERALD some months back were a perfect failure. We are now having plenty of general rains and all vegetation looks lovely.

A Religio has been organized here and is doing well. About twenty-eight were out at last meeting. There is a readiness on the part of the members to take what is assigned them for the program, which I delight to see. A diligent study of the Religio lessons and an active participation in the entertainments it affords will prove a source of great development to both old and young.

I have baptized eight since coming to Australia, but I do not record that as evidence of diligence on my part. One sometimes gets praise for baptizing when others get no praise who did all the work of converting. But then the satisfaction which comes to one after having done his duty is better than the praise of men misdirected.

I am well and surrounded with plenty of work to do. Kind regards to all my American friends.

PAUL M. HANSON.

STODDARD, Nebraska, November 25.

Dear Herald: I held some meetings about the first week of the present month at Hoag, Gage County, Nebraska. I went back from there to Wilber, where I met Elder J. R. Sutton. We held a few meetings at Wilber, and went from there to Clay Center, where we held forth in the Methodist church building for one week. The Methodist Episcopal minister and his wife were pretty regular attendants at our meetings. We had a pretty fair audience a part of the time, but part of the time it was very cold.

We went from Clay Center to the Lone Tree Schoolhouse, northwest of Fairfield, where we held a few very good meetings. We came from there to this place, and will remain here until after Sunday, November 29.

I will go from here to Fairbury. Bro. Sutton will move westward to Guide Rock and to Franklin. I feel quite well in the work, and hope that we may meet with success in this district this winter. Our missionary force seems to be composed of diligent workers, and our local men seem to be active also.

J. W. WALDSMITH.

GREAT BEND, Kansas, November 25.

Editors Herald: I was called to officiate in a marriage ceremony October 29, and on the prairies of Western Kansas, in the warm rays of the noonday sun, I united in marriage Mr. Pfenniger and Miss Maggie Shades, about thirty people forming a circle, we three standing on inside. The license was issued in Pawnee County, the bride lived in Ness County. I could not according to the law, unite them in Ness. This accounted for our walk of about forty rods over in Pawnee County.

From Bazine wife and I took train for Chase. At Ellinwood we missed the branch train to Chase just ten minutes, and it only fourteen miles away. We spoke to the roadmaster and conductor on the through train we had just left. They told us to get on train, go to Florence, which was ninety-six miles away. We arrived there, changed cars, then back to Chase eighty-two miles, thus making one hundred and seventy-eight miles to get fourteen. Yet we were thankful, as we saved fifteen hours in time and no more ticket fare.

At Chase prejudice is great against the work. Four churches, but all closed against the Latter Day Saints. I occupied the pulpit one night by invitation of the Congregational minister; but his flock said before I preached, Close him out. We then rented a large hall for four nights, to pay one dollar per night or the amount of the collection. Forty-two cents was the amount raised. The postmaster and assistant were at meeting the last sermon. We left there with prejudice somewhat allayed, some friends made to the cause. Sr. Senie Hudson is the only Saint there. Arrived here. Mrs. Gurwell is teaching elocution and physical culture, while I am to begin preaching to-night in a private house. We began working quietly when we came here, now have landlady where we are boarding much interested in the work, also several others are interested, are really anxious to hear me preach, and prospects are that they will furnish a place for preaching, so we learn, 'tis not always best to go into a new place and try to storm the town, but move cautiously, slowly, gain confidence ere they are frightened by the words "Mormonism," or similar things, but do as Jesus said, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel;" the questions as to who organized your Church, etc., will all come in their proper time and not to the confusing of the mind of some people. We expect to remain here until December 20, when we go to Bazine for holiday season. Hopefully in the gospel covenant,

L. H. GURWELL.

ADELAIDE, South Australia, October 13.

Editors Herald: I have been laboring in the above city since my appointment in February last and have to report some progress. Three have been baptized and others are interested.

There are now ten Saints in this city and they are contemplating branch organization. A little over a year ago there was only one Saint here (Sr. Lane) and I was sent here to baptize some who are interested. Three were added at that time (last May twelvemonth); spoils won from our Utah friend; three came from Victoria and three having been added this year make the ten.

We are steadily gaining ground and dispelling the false impressions created through Brighamite misdoings, and preaching side by side with them in the Botanic Park helps to emphasize the difference. Considerable open air work has to be done for advertising purposes, as it is difficult to get people into our hall.

The ones won up to date, have been reached by our "tracting" from house to house efforts, for which custom we have brought ourselves into disgrace with some of our pious, orthodox friends; having been informed by letter that it is "always considered dishonorable."

¶ We wanted chapter and verse to condemn the practice, but it was not forthcoming so we go on in spite of the objection raised. The Lord tells us to go from house to house and he will go before us (Matthew 6: 26, I. T.) and I have found him true to his word and hope to continue to obey God rather than men, thereby obtaining his blessing.

The work seems to be onward throughout the "Australasian Mission" as good reports are continually heard from the various centers of labor.

Ever praying for Zion's redemption, I am

Yours in the bond of brotherhood,

41 Sturt Street.

J. H. N. JONES.

SPOKANE, Washington, November 24.

Editor Herald: There is a little band of Saints here who are striving to hold up the banner of truth. The work is steadily advancing and our meetings are better attended, although not large for a place of this size.

There have been new vicinities opened up around Spokane this summer by Elders F. J. Chatburn and D. E. Powell. As a result several have been baptised and many others are interested and in time will come in if properly instructed. There is a good work to be done in and around this place. Prejudice is slowly giving away here, and may the time soon come that the greater portion will be taken away entirely.

Bro. George Winegar has been ordained priest, and we trust he will remain faithful and prove to be a valiant soldier for our Lord.

Bro. F. J. Chatburn, who has labored in this part all summer and fall, has left for Seattle and Portland to labor the rest of the year. We were very sorry to lose him, but wish him success in his work there. Bro. D. E. Powell is still with us.

We have been encouraged and greatly benefited by the visits of Brn. W. H. Kelley and G. T. Griffiths, and we feel we can go on in the battle with renewed vigor. We feel deeply indebted to them for instructions and words of comfort and the fellowship we have in our Lord Jesus Christ. May we all receive the great blessing that is at the end of the race for all who love God and keep his commandments.

Your sister,

EMMA M. BELL.

CAMAS VALLEY, Oregon, November 23.

Editors Herald: Camas Valley is a little world of its own, comparatively speaking, being separated on all sides from other settlements by ranges of mountains.

Sr. Croy and myself are the only Saints living in the Valley in this vicinity, but we trust that in the near future there will be others, as we have recently had a series of fine sermons delivered by Bro. Holt. He came from Bridge to the Valley on the third and preached every evening until the eleventh. On Sunday he preached also, in the afternoon.

On the eleventh, owing to the inclemency of the weather and the condition of his health, he closed the meetings. One who is not a Saint, but who manifested quite an interest, told Bro. Holt that his preaching had left the best impression of any series of sermons ever delivered in the place. The people were not pleased to have him close, but his condition made it necessary for him to have rest, and he appears to be enjoying it at our home in the mountains a few miles from the Valley.

He was suffering very much from stomach trouble, but since his sojourn with us we have confined him to a diet that is working like a charm and has already benefited him quite materially. His stay with us is indefinite, as we will not consent for him to leave until his general health is greatly improved. The trouble with his eyes makes it very difficult for him to get along alone, without additional disabilities. Bro. Holt thinks of holding tent meetings in the Valley next summer if he is then in tent work, as there are a number here who have manifested quite an interest, and a few more sermons may prepare them for baptism.

Your sister,

LEAH M. CONOVER.

Extracts from Letters.

C. L. Webb wrote from Sulphur Springs, Texas, November 23: "I should like to know if there are any Saints living in Hopkins County, Texas. If any of our elders pass this way they will find a welcome at our home. If they will notify us we will meet them at the train, as we live four miles from Sulphur Springs."

Under date of November 25, Columbus Scott wrote from Council Bluffs, Iowa: "The mantle of white enwraps Mother Earth here now. I go to Persia for to-morrow,—Thanksgiving. Expect to preach twice. Hope good health, with divine blessings, attend all at Lamoni. Find plenty to do. Health better than for a long time. Lame chest almost well. Am thankful."

W. A. West wrote from Berrydale, Florida, November 19: "The work is gradually advancing here, and I think with the help of such men as Bro. I. N. Roberts, there can be a fine work accomplished here in the South. The district conference convenes Saturday, December 5, at Coldwater. We are looking forward to the time, trusting that the district will be well represented, and that much good will be done. We are expecting Bro. Roberts to be with us then."

Bro. Richard Baldwin writes from Monongahela City, Pennsylvania, November 26: "Bro. Ebeling and I are preaching here—a new opening—in private houses. Six or eight people, heads of families, will be baptized next Sunday, and we expect to organize a branch."

Convention Minutes.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana.—Convened at Galien, Michigan, October 23, 1903, at 10.30 a. m., prayer by I. M. Smith. District Superintendent Sr. J. H. Royce and her assistant and treasurer were sustained. Sr. Elsie Lockerby was chosen secretary, and Sr Mary Corless assistant. At the afternoon session a round-table conference was held and the following topics were discussed: Are conventions worth the cost? How would you use the lesson helps? How to increase attendance at the Sunday-schools. What are the three leading objects of the Sunday-schools? Should every branch make an effort to have a Book of Mormon class? How do you get the subject of personal salvation before the young? The minutes of last session were read and approved. The superintendent reported new schools organized at Belding and Alto; Knox School disorganized. Thirty-three delegates were appointed to the General Convention from the eight schools in the district.

Resolutions of G. A. R. Post.

The following has been received from the William Baumer Post, No. 24, G. A. R., of Nebraska City, Nebraska:

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska, November 25.

REVEREND JOSEPH SMITH.

Dear Sir: I herewith transmit to you a copy of the resolutions adopted at our last meeting in memory of our deceased comrade Mark H. Forscutt. Fraternaly,

S. L. JOHNS.

Whereas it hath pleased our great Commander to remove to the grand army above our worthy and respected comrade, Mark H. Forscutt, therefore be it resolved that we do here pay, ungrudgingly, our tribute of respect to him and to his manly character. Comrade Forscutt trod life's stormy pathway, "With charity for all and malice toward none," he heeded the promptings of his better nature and scattered smiles and sunshine among those with whom his lot was cast. Resolved that as a further mark of respect the charter of this post be draped for thirty days, and these resolutions be spread upon the post record.

Resolved that a copy of these resolutions be sent to family of the deceased.

Church Recorder's Notice.

We again call attention of district officers to the non-arrival of branch reports presented to conferences, but do not wish to prevent any needful corrections that are being made. However, it is better to make a minute of imperfections and omissions in reports, after having written the branch officers about them, and then send reports here so they may be recorded and help be given by us in perfecting them. Carefully examine all reports as to names and items, also see if they agree with themselves and with past reports of same branches. If anything is lacking, or is disagreement, write clerks and keep copies of same to refer to when answers come. Do not return reports to branches lest they get lost or are mislaid and never found.

Following reports have not yet come to hand and we desire to have them as soon as possible, that we may place copies on records:

Conferences were appointed to be held last February in the Idaho and the Montana districts, but no branch reports have come that were then presented, though Idaho reports of later date came. Montana adjourned in February to meet on call, but no minutes published nor notice given.

May reports of Florida not come, though have those for September. Would like to receive the missing reports from all three districts.

Have received no reports from Northern California, Central California, or Northwestern Texas since the March conferences. If any held since then please send reports.

Southern Nebraska, no reports from May conference, though have those for September.

We need the June reports from the Nova Scotia and London, Ontario, conferences.

Of the August reports we lack those from Des Moines, Central Nebraska, and the Ohio.

Of September we lack from Northern California, Eastern Colorado, Independence Stake, New York, Philadelphia, and the Utah districts.

Of October we have not yet received those from Chatham, London, Northern Illinois, Western Maine, Massachusetts, Northern Michigan, Nodaway, Clinton, Missouri, and Northern Wisconsin.

Of November we need from Mobile, Kentucky, and Tennessee and the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw districts.

The conferences for January, February, and March we need not name but hope that attention will be given to sending promptly as may be.

Kindly give all aid you can and we and the Church will be obliged for every help received.

Respectfully yours,

H. A. STEBBINS, General Recorder.

LAMONI, Iowa, November 24, 1903.

Correction in Appointments.

George H. Hilliard's appointment at Knox, Indiana, begins December 14, instead of December 7, as heretofore announced.

Ministers' Diaries.

We have a few diaries especially prepared for the ministry, giving places for sermons preached, number baptized, confirmed etc., as well as a large number of blank leaves.

Leather Bound 50 cents.

Clergy Credentials for 1904.

Corrected lists of General Conference and other general mission appointees have been forwarded to General Passenger Associations that issue Clergy Credentials, to facilitate prompt issue of the same for 1904. Said lists indicate all releases from fields. Local ministers are referred to general missionaries in charge, as heretofore, for indorsement.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, November 30, 1903.

Notice to the Saints of the Des Moines District.

We the committee appointed to locate the next Des Moines District reunion desire to have any branch in the district that may wish the next reunion held in their community to correspond with E. O. Clark, 2501 Logan Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa, setting forth their reasons for wishing the reunion and the advantages of their locality. The committee will consider the different offers and the place they deem best. G. W. Johnson, William Park, E. O. Clark, committee.

Notice.

To Fourth quorum of Priests: All members of said quorum are requested to inform the undersigned as to whether they hold a quorum license or not, that to those who have not they may be issued. Be prompt, brethren. W. B. Torrance, secretary.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the unorganized territory of Western Nebraska and the Black Hills: Having been appointed Bishop's agent on October 13, for the above named territory, and as I must report on December 31 for the year, all of the Saints who are ready to comply with the temporal law, and so help the Church along financially, which is very much needed at the present time, will please send their tithes and offerings to me at Nebraska City, Nebraska, and I will receipt you for the same.

Please send in time so your names will appear on the Bishop's annual report.

R. O. SELF.

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska, November 26, 1903.

Conference Notices.

Southern Nebraska District will hold conference at Wilbur, Nebraska, January 24 and 25, 1904. A good representation of the local and traveling ministry is desired; also of the membership. J. W. Waldsmith, president.

Married.

MOORE—ALLEN.—At the residence of Mr. J. F. Hopkins, the bride's home, at Lamoni, Iowa, November 26, 1903, J. J. Moore and Ada E. Allen, of Lamoni, were joined in matrimony, E. L. Kelley officiating. Wedding march played by Pauline Anthony. The occasion was made pleasant by the genial hostess, Mrs. Hopkins. The groom's mother, Mrs. Moore, and her two daughters, from Corning, Iowa, were present. Promptly at six in the evening the couple were ceremoniously pronounced husband and wife. Many beautiful presents were given the happy couple, and the good will of Lamoni people will follow them in their new start in life's journey.

REEDER—CRIPPEN.—At the residence of Bro. and Sr. Albert R. Crippen, Cherokee, Iowa, in the presence of about forty relatives and friends, their eldest daughter, Sr. Myrtle B., and Mr. William W. Reeder, of Storm Lake, Iowa, were joined in marriage, Elder Charles E. Butterworth officiating. A bounteous supper was partaken of by all present and an enjoyable time was had. The congratulations extended and the presents given show the high esteem in which these young people are held. May happiness and prosperity long be theirs to enjoy.

Died.

BLAIR.—Elder Winthrop H. Blair died at his home in Lamoni, Iowa, on November 26, 1903, aged 82 years, 5 months, and 14 days. He united with the Reorganized Church June 13, 1859, baptized by Elder James Blakeslee, and was ordained a high priest and one of the General High Council of the Church April 6, 1860, at Amboy, Illinois. His record is that of a pure and upright man of God. Lived near Amboy from 1838 to 1882, then removed to Lamoni. His wife died August 6, 1899. Five daughters survive him. Funeral sermon by Elder H. A. Stebbins; prayer and benediction by President Joseph Smith, prayer at the grave by Bishop E. L. Kelley.

PALMER.—At Council Bluffs, Iowa, November 22, 1903, Sr. Sarah L. W. Palmer, aged 27 years and 10 months; born near Neola, Iowa, January 23, 1876; married to Mr. Fredrick Palmer, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 2, 1893; baptized by Elder M. M. Turpen, July 12, 1903. She leaves a husband, two children, and two brothers to mourn. Funeral services at the home November 24, in charge of Elder C. Scott, a goodly number attending. Buried in Walnut Hill Cemetery. She rests from toil and care.

FOSTER.—At Stewartville, Missouri, November 18, 1903, Bro. Luther C. Foster; born June 10, 1857, in Pike County, Pennsylvania; married June 28, 1884, to Miss Dora B. Harris; to them were born five children, two sons and three daughters. Baptized by Elder Duncan Campbell, August 21, 1898. Ordained a deacon, December 8, 1901. He leaves a wife and five children, together with all who knew him, to mourn. Funeral from the Saints' church building, in charge of Elder Andrew Lewis; sermon by Elder Walter W. Smith; interment at the Dekalb Cemetery.

GRAYBILL.—Sr. Hannah, wife of Bro. Graybill, died at Underwood, Iowa, November 6, 1903. She was born in Henry County, Indiana, December 24, 1826; baptized May 15, 1862, by Elder George Sweet. She was the mother of nine children, all of whom survive her. Funeral sermon by Elder Joshua Carlile.

DUNHAM.—At Stonington, Maine, November 7, of consumption, Bro. Alvin Chase Dunham; born on Deer Isle, Maine, 1868; baptized August, 1893, at Stonington, Maine, by Elder U. W. Greene; funeral service by Elder F. M. Sheehy, at the Saints' chapel. He was in charge of our church work where he lived. He was highly esteemed by the entire community, among whom he spent his life.

Tolstoy as He is To-day.

Professor Edward A. Steiner, whose book, "Tolstoy the Man," is to be one of the fall books of the Outlook Company, spent last winter in Russia, much of which time he spent with Count Tolstoy and his family. Writing of the present appearance of Tolstoy,

Professor Steiner says, "He is so thin that his features stand out with unusual sharpness. The eyes are still searching but show the effect of much suffering, and a veil like the shadow of a passing cloud hangs over them. His voice, too, has grown weak, and his hand clasp is like the touch of gloved fingers, without warmth or strength; but the greeting is not less cordial than ever. Now, struggling with approaching death, he is fastening upon paper memories and impressions of bygone years, and when every moment is precious he yet denies himself to no one, and does not stint the time which he gives to his friends. It is such a large welcome as only a large soul can give one. It is in striking contrast to the welcome which one receives from every other member of his household."

Christmas in Bethlehem of Judea.

Bethlehem, the home of Christmas, is that happy Utopia of which every American child dreams—it has more than one Christmas. In fact, it has three big ones, and strangely enough, the one falling on December 25th of our own calendar is not the greatest of the three. It is, at least, the first. Twelve days after the Latin has burned his Christmas incense in the sacred shrine, the Greek church's patriarch, observing that it is Christmas-time by his slower calendar, catches up the gloria, and bows in the Grotto of the Nativity for the devout in Greece, the Balkan States, and all the Russias. After a period of another twelve days the great Armenian church of the East takes up the anthem of peace and good-will, and its patriarch visits the shrine.

All three of these big Christmas observances have some few things in common, at least one—the red fez-capped Mohammedan soldiery of the Sultan that stand with fixed bayonets as the background to brilliant pictures. In this most sacred of all Christian shrines, and especially on the natal day—according to the different calendars—of Him who taught the brotherhood of man, the Latin, as he chants the song of good-will, must be protected from fanatical Greek and Armenian; the Greek, as he sings his gloria, must be protected from fervid Armenian and Latin; and the Armenian, as he takes up the glad refrain, must be protected from Greek and Latin. All must be protected from Copt and other Christian churchmen, who, in their turn, must also be protected from the zealots of the three big churches. This duty falls on the followers of Mohammed. The presence of the armed Turkish soldiers has prevented riots at the Christmas and Easter festivals in recent years. The last great clash, thirty years ago, resulted from a discussion over some curtains. The result of that bloodshed in the holy of holies, and the constant threatening attitude of the different protectors of the holy shrines, was that the Sultan stationed a garrison of troops at Bethlehem, and connected the town with Jerusalem by a telegraph-wire. Now, at every hour of the day and night, two Mohammedan soldiers with fixed bayonets stand sentry over the birthplace of the Nazarene.—December Woman's Home Companion.

Tolstoy's Favorite Walk in Moscow.

Interesting details of Tolstoy's life in Moscow are told by Professor Edward A. Steiner in his work "Tolstoy the Man," which is to be issued by the Outlook Company. "Tolstoy's Favorite Walk in Moscow," says the writer, "was down the river bank to the Kreml, that mixture of Church and State, of barbarism and civilization, that last citadel of an absolute monarchy among civilized people. Rugged, quaint, and queer as is the Kreml was this frequent visitor on whose footsteps fastened numbers of beggars from whom he never turned away. One day, he says, he was going to give some money to a beggar when the watch came and with the butt of his gun began to drive away the importunate fellow. Tolstoy remonstrated, and asked him whether he did not know the Gospels, in which Christ commanded us to love our neighbor and do good even to those who hate us, and the puzzled gendarme replied shrewdly, 'You may know the Gospels, but you don't know the military regulations.'"

An Inviting Idea.

Something new in the hotel line is supplied by the famous New Northern Baths, a palatial establishment at 14 Quincy Street, near State Street, Chicago. This is the most handsomely fitted up establishment in the United States—in fact, there is no other place quite like it anywhere. It is a hotel and baths combined. The New Northern has lately undergone additions and improvements that make it an extremely attractive place to visit. The furnishings in every one of the eight floors are the best and most luxurious that money can buy, especially in the office floor, where the wall decorations, stained-glass windows,

WHY IT SHOULD BE EXPUNGED.

The Deseret Evening News, the organ of the Utah Church, in its issue for May 16, 1903, takes occasion to read us a lecture for suggesting "expunging" from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants published by that Church in Utah the so-called revelation on plural marriage. At the close of this screed is the following:

The assurance and expectation that the holy wedlock of the new and everlasting covenant, with its sacred ties and family endearments, shall survive the tomb, exist beyond the grave, and form the beginning of a kingdom and a dominion in celestial glory that shall never end, are among the grandest beliefs and anticipations of the true Latter Day Saints, and they are embodied in the revelation that our would-be critics desire us to expunge from the book that contains some of the sublimest manifestations of the mind and will and purposes of God ever made known to man. We are not compelled to bow to such dictum, and people with ordinary sense will perceive the reason why.

It is because we have ordinary sense that we object to the insertion of the so-called revelation on celestial marriage in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and its continuance there; and we will give some of the reasons why we believe said revelation should be expunged from that book.

1. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants as left by Joseph Smith at his death, published by the Church under the administration of its ministers during the lifetime of Joseph Smith, and subsequently published up to the fall of 1876, contains no provision by revelation or by church enactment that authorizes or sanctions plural marriage.

2. The document presented by President Brigham Young, August 29, 1852, eight years and two months after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, was not presented or known to the Church until that date.

3. No action was taken by the Church indorsing or accepting said document as a revelation from God, so far as public knowledge is concerned, either before or at the time of its presentation on the date referred to, and at no time subsequently, prior to its publication in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in 1876.

4. No reason is assigned or authority for its insertion in the Book of Covenants is stated in the book itself, nor is there any publication of such authority prior to its insertion.

5. It appears to have been inserted in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants by order of President Brigham Young, without action on the part of any

A PASTOR of Camden, New Jersey, in a recent sermon on "The Devil and his Demons" said that Satan probably had three thrones in the United States,—at New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago. "If the Devil wants to be sure of a man," says the Camden divine, "he makes a politician of him." There may be more of the Devil in politics than some of our politician friends would like to admit. Be that as it may, it is quite true there is not enough of the Christ either in politics or general society. Satan may, as intimated by the Camden preacher, be having his day; but for how long? A burning question with latter-day religionists is, When will Christ come to claim his own and take Satan prisoner?

leading quorum of the Church or of the Church itself.

6. At the time of its insertion in the Book of Covenants in 1876 there was taken from the Book of Covenants as published from 1835 up to 1876 a public statement of the Church adopted in solemn assembly, which provides unmistakably for but one companion in wedlock during the natural lives of the contracting parties.

7. It is solemnly affirmed in that section on marriage taken out of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in 1876 to give place for the so-called revelation on celestial marriage, that "all legal contracts of marriage made before a person is baptized into this church, should be held sacred and fulfilled." This sacredness of the marriage bond binding thousands of Latter Day Saints together during the lifetime of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, is directly assailed in that so-called revelation, and its sacredness denied.

There is also in that same section a statement which implies that the covenants entered into in monogamy are to be kept and fulfilled from the time they are entered into thenceforth "and for ever."

8. The so-called revelation on plural marriage which we ask our Utah friends to expunge from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, strikes fatally at and makes void many of the "sublimest manifestations of the mind and will and purposes of God" contained in the Book of Covenants as left by Joseph and Hyrum Smith at their death. And the editor of the Deseret News very artfully leaves the impression at the close of his article, that it is within the so-called revelation that the wondrous manifestations referred to are to be found; but the language employed by him simply states that it is the book in which those wondrous things are found; and to this we agree. And it is for this reason we object to having their sublimity marred by the broken and discordant statements found in that revelation. The obvious import of many of its statements and the contradiction between the revelation as a whole and the plain provisions found in the revelations given of God, in which the monogamic nature of the domestic relation is specifically enjoined upon the Church, in accordance with the laws and institutions of the United States, form sufficient ground for objection to said revelation remaining in the book. Well does the editor say that "through submission to the laws of the land the extension of that union to plural marriage is not now practiced or permitted."

9. Had there been always this disposition on the part of President Brigham Young and his compeers to have obeyed the laws of the land, the system of polygamy which has been so offensive to the nation, ostensibly based upon that so-called revelation, would never have existed.

10. It is because that from 1835 to 1876 there was always held out to the world and the Church in the publication of the Book of Covenants the revelations of God found in sections 42 and 49 establishing the monogamic principle, and giving as the reason why, that this was the will and purpose of God from before the foundation of the world, that we object to the insertion of said so-called revelation in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as it nullifies and destroys the direct teachings of God, grand and sublime as they were, as contained in said book prior to the insertion of that so-called revelation.

11. In his lecture to us the editor of the News very blandly refers to the Mosaic code, where a provision is made for a surviving brother to care for the wife of a deceased brother. He evidently forgets that the Mosaic code was not reenacted in the gospel dispensation. The implication that a married man whose brother died was under obligation to take the surviving wife as a wife, is a misapplication of the scripture, and shows an unfortunate necessity to resort to bad argument to maintain a bad cause. The teaching of the Book of Mormon disposes of that proposition.

12. We object to the revelation referred to remaining in the Book of Covenants because it is in opposition to the teaching of the Book of Mormon, which by direct statement calls plural marriage an abomination; and one of the revelations given through Joseph the Seer, and published in the Book of Covenants published from 1835 up to 1876, enjoins it upon Latter Day Saints to remember the Book of Mormon, which is the new covenant, to do according to that which is written. This is one of the grand and sublime things contained in the book which the so-called revelation on plural marriage invalidates and renders void.

13. That so-called revelation enjoins or permits the performing of acts contrary to the morals of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations in the Book of Covenants, to which said so-called revelation on plural marriage has been added, and all contrary to statute law. According to those who have preached the revelation and who now hold to it under the Enabling Act by which Utah became a State, said revelation permits unlawful cohabitation, and which is now punishable by fine under the statute law of the state of Utah.

14. Said revelation also permits the destroying of a woman for constructive adultery, ignoring the provisions of statute law for the punishment of the same crime, contrary to the provisions in the revelations given to the Church in which it is provided that he who keeps the law of God hath no need to break the laws of the land. It is clearly proper to object to the continuance in the book of the revelation, so-called, in which provision is made for such disregard of the statute laws of the country.

15. We object to the document further because it never was sufficiently identified or certified. The connection of Joseph Smith with it has never been satisfactorily accounted for. We object further to its continuing in the book for the reason that as a whole it is out of character with the teaching of the Church during the lifetime of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and the revelations received and acknowledged by the Church up to the time of their death. For these and other similar reasons, we believe that on righteous and moral grounds, and on the ground of public policy and legality also, said revelation should be expunged.

ABUSE OF RAILWAY CLERGY PERMITS.

Missionaries in charge of different fields of labor, and those laboring in the several fields to which they have been appointed, either by the General Conference, or by missionaries in charge, upon the certificates of appointment to which fields those appointed have secured permits over the lines of railway in their respective fields, will please remember that those permits are not transferable, and to allow any person other than the holder of the permit to ride upon them is a breach of good faith toward the railway company issuing the permit and forfeits the permit to the holder upon discovery of such act of bad faith.

The Church will not tolerate such course; as it is not only an act of bad faith, but it involves the element of direct wrong-doing in that the person riding on any borrowed permit is guilty of lying and deception, as he personates another and does so at the loss of honor and self-respect on his own part if detected, abuses the confidence of the railway officials and brings suspicion and disgrace upon his immediate associates and dishonors the good name of the Church.

Any representative of the Church who thus violates his contract with the railway companies as to allow another to use his permit is guilty of acting in bad faith toward the Church as well as the railways, and is liable to lose his permit, and his certificate of appointment as well, for the general Church authorities will not consent to become parties to frauds of that sort.

The Secretary of the Church will not recommend the names of those misusing their railway permits by allowing others to ride on them to the officials of the roads whose duty it is to issue them, if the knowledge of such abuses comes to him.

Missionaries in charge are requested to report to the Secretary of the Church the names of any of the appointees in their fields who may be guilty of this act of wrong-doing; and also to report the name, time, place, and circumstances to the general Church authorities that proper steps may be taken in the premises.

IN TROUBLE.

On Tuesday, December 1, Judge Kohlsaas, of Chicago, by order of court placed Zion City, with all its properties and assets, in charge of receivers, at the instance of certain creditors, to whom Doctor J. A. Dowie, Elijah III, as general overseer, had become indebted for goods, wares, and merchandise furnished Dowie in the prosecution of his Zion City scheme. The amount sued for was but a little over one thousand dollars, but an array of claims amounting to over sixty-seven thousand dollars was added to the sum of indebtedness before the officers appointed by the court had been placed in possession of the property.

The proceeding in court is on petition to have Mr. Dowie and his institution declared a bankrupt, and his effects be ordered sold to meet the obligations.

By December 3 a sum of indebtedness aggregating one hundred and twenty thousand dollars additional to the sixty-seven thousand dollars appeared, and it is stated by those placed in charge that it will take months of application on the part of those appointed by the court to get at the facts of the situation.

Evidently Mr. Dowie is in trouble; but he may succeed in overcoming it, and Zion City institution be found by examination to be in a sound condition, but it looks dubious at present writing, December 3.

Mr. Dowie denounces the legal attack made upon him as an effort to destroy Zion; and declares he will have all satisfactorily arranged before January 1, 1904. He has made and is making frantic appeals to his followers to put all their money into Zion City Bank. He asked them for two hundred thousand dollars, then for five hundred thousand dollars, stating that he had immediate need for the money.

We can not but regret that Mr. Dowie is in these sore straits; but if he is it is but the aftermath of misguided zeal, and an improvident use of money in schemes more or less visionary, for the glorification of John Alexander Dowie. It is thought that the immediate occasion of the present stringency was the attack upon New York City, engineered by Dowie, and carried out by his three thousand followers, the cost of which is said to have been about three hundred thousand dollars.

We hope that Mr. Dowie will be able to pay off his accumulated debts, and perfect his model city, as he is confident he will. We hope, also, that there will be such an examination of the methods employed by him as will show them to have been legitimate from a moral point of view, and lawful from a legal one, or expose them if they have been crooked or evil, and his followers duped and deceived.

The Newark Sunday Call, Newark, New Jersey, for November 22, 1903, contained a lengthy account of Bro. A. N. Hoxie's work in fighting "pound net fisheries."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The "Holy Rollers," of whom our readers have doubtless heard, are given a whole page in a recent number of the San Francisco Examiner, which appears as a communication and tells about the "mysterious doings" of these peculiar people at Corvallis, Oregon. According to this communication there are two leaders, the organizer, Captain Brooks, and their prophet, John Creffield. Their devotion takes the form of "frenzied emotion," contortions, etc., according to the direction of their prophet. Upon his return recently a fire was built on a large rock and upon this altar they made sacrifice of things "of this world," such as ornaments, musical instruments, and even pet cats, dogs, and birds. It was rumored that a young woman was to be sacrificed and Brooks and Creffield were arrested on the charge of insanity, but the case was dismissed. The citizens then threatened tar and feathers and the leaders fled, but came back a few days later, their return being celebrated as above. How much of truth there is in these reports is hard to determine; but if they are true, the "Holy Rollers" are weak-minded fanatics, to say the least, and lacking the discernment which comes with the true Spirit of God.

By telegram from Bro. R. T. Cooper, Los Angeles, California, we learned of the death of Bro. R. S. Nayaka, a native of Ceylon, who was baptized at Independence, Missouri, some three years ago. He was at Los Angeles seeking a return to health, but passed away a victim to the rigors of our northern temperate climate. We have awaited particulars from the brethren at Los Angeles, but none received to date.

Bro. W. H. Kephart, one of the missionary force whose residence is at Lamoni, on a late visit to his home reports at the Bishop's office having been out in his field, last tour for fifty days, and has preached fifty-one sermons. His hair and beard are white, he has been on new grounds about all the time; and on November 15, drove twelve miles to attend the dedication at Norwood, north of Lucas, Iowa, and after the services, which closed at about half past four in the afternoon, he drove back over the twelve miles to fill his evening appointment. He told us that he had good congregations. Can any of our young stalwarts do any better than this?

In the death of Bro. Winthrop H. Blair, the Church lost the last remaining member of the first high council of the Reorganization, chosen at Amboy, Illinois, April, 1860, all of the rest having passed away, one by one. They were, John C. Gaylord, William Aldrich, George Morey, Edwin Cadwell, Calvin Beebe, Sr., Jacob Doan, Oliver P. Dunham, Zenas Whitcomb, Lyman Hewitt, Dwight Webster, W. H. Blair, and O. G. Jackson. Bro. Blair died on November 26, over eighty-two years of age, a veteran indeed. He hath gone to his reward.

Every fall there is a live stock show in Chicago, when cattle are entered from several States. Iowa's Agricultural College has taken an important part in these shows for several years, as also have the agricultural schools of neighboring States. In the recent contest the Iowa school easily led in the number of prize-winners, taking down six prizes on December 1, among them the champion shorthorn of the fat class, by Silver Crown, a snow-white steer. The University of Nebraska College of Agriculture furnished the grand champion of all classes, however, in a Hereford, Challenger, which was bought as a calf a year ago at a sale for an insignificant sum. Scientific feeding again demonstrated that "blood will tell," and several hundred dollars has been paid for this steer which at two years weighs seventeen hundred fifty-five pounds. The six prizes won by the Iowa school at Ames in the aggregate amounted to three hundred and fifty dollars. The other successful schools are Nebraska, Minnesota, and Purdue. The steer is a big factor in the success of our country and our schools are wisely paying a great deal of attention to his breeding and raising.

Bro. J. W. Peterson has been engaged in a newspaper controversy concerning the origin of polygamy. The Nauvoo Independent has been the medium through which the controversy has been carried on, and that paper has generously given space to Bro. Peterson's articles and those of Joseph F. Smith, Jr., who has been supporting the contentions of the Utah Church. Bro. Peterson's last article appeared in the Independent for November 28.

The Christian Scientists have reared another magnificent structure in New York City. According to the Boston Post of November 30 the temple cost one million one hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars, and is free from debt. The organ alone, with which the building is furnished, cost twenty-five thousand dollars, and the electric fixtures are hand chased and made of bronze, quadruple gold plated. The windows are elaborate affairs of stained glass, very artistic in design. In the building are thirty "treating rooms," besides reading rooms, reception rooms, etc., all elaborately furnished. If wealthy and elaborately furnished places of worship are essential elements of righteousness, the Christian Scientists surely have much on which to make claims.

Miss Helen Gould has offered seven hundred and fifty dollars in prizes to be awarded the writers of the best essays on the double topic, "The Origin and History of the Version of the Bible approved by the Roman Catholic Church," and "The Origin and History of the American Revised Version of the English Bible." The competition is open to the world, and the Bible Teachers' Training School organized by the regents of the University of the State of New York will be the medium of the offer. The best essay will draw four hundred dollars, the second two hundred and fifty dollars, the third one hundred dollars. The conditions of the contest will soon be made public.

OFFICE WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

SERMON BY ELDER H. A. STEBBINS, AT THE SAINTS' HOME,
LAMONI, IOWA, NOVEMBER 15, 1903.

Reported by L. A. Gould.

Then cometh he [Jesus] to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph. Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well: and it was about the sixth hour. There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water: Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink. (For his disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.) Then saith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans. Jesus answered and said unto her, if thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water. The woman saith unto him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water? Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle? Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again: but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life. The woman saith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw.—John 4: 5-15.

In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink. He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. (But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive.—John 7: 37-39.

For some cause known to God and Christ the Redeemer, water is used not only literally for the salvation of the children of men, as in baptism by water, but we find in the statements made here by the Savior that he even likens the Holy Spirit to water and speaks of it as water. You notice of baptism that the statement is made by the Savior that except one be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God. And we are all aware of the fact that water baptism is essential to salvation, that we must be buried in the water to typify the death and burial of Jesus Christ, "For in that he died he died unto sin once, but in that he liveth he liveth unto God," so likewise we should remember that we ought to reckon ourselves as having died unto sin. Paul said of himself that sin was in him and by it he was slain; that when the commandment of Christ came it condemned him to death and he was buried. Therefore the baptism of water is a type of burial, wherein is the putting away of the old man and his sins and the rising to walk in newness of life. Hence the ceremony called sprinkling or pouring will not answer the requirement as does a burial in water, to be born of the water, coming forth out of the water. And inasmuch as Christ died unto sin and arose again we should remember that, in repenting of our sins, we have been buried in water that the old sins might be put away and that we might rise to walk in newness of life.

But the necessity of the baptism of the Spirit is also made very plain in the Scriptures. And here the Savior, in his talk with the woman at the well of Samaria, directly says that the water that he would give men would be in them a well of water springing up to everlasting life. As the body is nourished by water, the water of the earth that we can see, taste, and feel, so the Savior shows that the spiritual man must be nourished by the Holy Spirit. And the Holy Spirit, we understand, is here likened to water, because the real water is essential to our happiness and salvation.

Water is a source of life. It is said that men can go longer without food than they can without water, without drink; that it is essential that men should have water and without it they would soon lose their faculties and senses. People have become insane because of a lack of water, far more than from a lack of food. It is a source of life and comfort and peace to men. I remember that in marching during the war in the South forty years ago, we were almost famished for water; how we dug holes in the gravel and sand to let the water ooze in, that we might dip it out with our cups and drink. Though it was filthy and warm, yet we needed water, and a long line of men would come, each in his turn, ready to dip into this filthy water that they might try to satisfy their thirst. We skimmed the pools where it had stood for months in order to get out a little water that we might drink. Men almost perished on those long, dusty marches; and did perish in fact, as a consequence of the drouth, of the great heat, and of the impossibility to get water fit for human beings to drink, or even fit for a beast to drink.

I understand that Christ uses this word water to show the great need of the Holy Spirit. As we drink and are nourished, our bodies are nourished, so he speaks of the need of the Spirit of God. "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink," and that out of the hearts of such as will receive it "shall flow rivers of living water."

We understand this to mean that whosoever has the Spirit of God is not only nourished by that Spirit, which is the very life and spiritual power of the inner man, but he also is able to communicate and give to others of the same thing. When we are converted, when we have obeyed the gospel and have received of God's Spirit, we are ready immediately to tell somebody else about it. We want to let them know of the good things we have received. We want to tell our friends and our neighbors about it. We want to bear testimony. We want to tell about the doctrine and of the Bible evidences that we have for our faith; and thus the word is verified that out of him "shall flow rivers of living water." And therefore we understand that the Savior, in these teachings in the fourth and seventh chapters of John, sets forth the idea that as the water sustains the body so the Holy Spirit nourishes the inner man that dwells in these bodies of ours. We need something to nourish and feed it, and God's Holy Spirit is the power which informs us, instructs us, teaches us, and guides us; and without its influence we would not know what to do. We would be left to wander in darkness.

I read only a day or two ago of a certain woman in New York who has set herself up to be Christ reëmbodied, Jesus Christ come back to the earth and reëmbodied in the form of a woman. And she claims to be the Messiah, the Master, the Savior himself, and to teach by the Spirit and power of God; as a woman Christ is administering through her unto mankind. And many are following after her ways. She believes that the spirit of man comes back and is reëmbodied; it transmigrates, comes from the beyond, and enters into a body again, and thus the spirit is reëmbodied, and she is the veritable Christ. The papers say that many are following after such a delusion as this. If they are it is because they have not the guidance of God's Spirit. They do not understand what is right, and they have gone foolishly after the teaching of this woman who sets herself up as a messenger from God, as the great leader of mankind. We see around us so much of this, people are being led astray. But as the Apostle Paul said we should follow after the real Christ, that we be not tossed to and fro by any wind of doctrine, and that in the church of God we may grow up unto the fullness of the stature of a man in Jesus Christ the Lord.

Consequently this is the water that Jesus says shall be in you, not as a well, but shall be in you "a well of water springing up into everlasting life." A source of life, a source of power, a source of wisdom, a source of understanding, and a source of knowledge of the things of our heavenly Father. And by this we understand that the great promise of God is given to mankind. The Apostle Peter says in one of his epistles that there are given to us "exceeding great and precious promises; that by this ye might be partakers of the divine nature."

We understand that the Holy Spirit is the special promise of God, and in such manner does the Savior speak of it in the twenty-fourth chapter of Luke, saying as follows:

Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things. And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high.—Luke 24: 46-49.

And in the first chapter of Acts we read again, "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." And they were to wait for "the promise of the Father." And on the day of Pentecost to those who asked, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

Peter said, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is to you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." In Ephesians 1: 13 Paul wrote that after they obeyed the gospel they were sealed with "the Holy Spirit of promise." Thus a great promise of God is the gift of the Holy Spirit, that we should receive as children of God, so that we do not need that anybody else shall tell us what the truth is. After we become acquainted with it, after we have received of this Spirit, we shall know for ourselves the things of the kingdom of God; not be independent of all teaching; not that we may not receive instruction, you understand; but, so far as the guidance of that Spirit in the knowledge of God, while we may continue to be instructed, and to have understanding from each other, yet it is the Spirit of God that must certify to us that we have received the truth.

It must certify to you that whoever you hear tells the truth, if it be such. It should be in you so that when any man preaches you may know whether he tells the truth or not. Because no matter what I may teach, or what anybody else may teach, if it be true, you are entitled to know that it is true. And it can only be true to you because God shall lead you and guide you by his counsel and his Holy Spirit. If any do not tell the truth it ought to be with you that you shall understand by the Spirit of God that it is not true. And if you shall seek a knowledge of the truth, the Spirit ought to be with you so that you may obtain that knowledge, and you may go on from step to step. Jesus says, "He shall guide you into all truth." He shall guide you, evidently not give all at once, but it is to be a well of water that shall continually supply you, be strength to you, and that shall lead you to a knowledge of the things of God and of his kingdom.

I remember when I was marching in the South that I thought if I could only drink from one of the wells or springs that we knew of in the northern land just a little while before, it seemed to me that it would be everything. I would have given all I had (though I did not have much) to find a place where I could drink of the cool and wholesome water such as we drank in the northern land before we went south. So we understand that there is this difference between that which is wholesome, that which is pure and clean, that which is altogether delicious, between such and that which is vile and filthy and unfit for man to drink. This is the difference, we understand, between the pure and wholesome water of the Spirit of God and that which is presented in the world of every kind of delusion and deception, everything that men are running after,—they who do not know where the truth is,— that they may be made free from darkness; but they do not know where to find it.

Now, the Savior very clearly teaches that this is the promise that God has given to his people, this great promise that I have spoken of to you. And Jesus said plainly, and the disciples taught plainly also, that this Spirit is to guide God's people into all truth, and that by one Spirit they are all made members of the one body. And we ought to see alike and believe alike, so far as that which pertains to everlasting life, and that which is the doctrine of Christ, that which is the truth of God. We ought to see it alike, understand it alike, and be profited alike, and thus be able to go forward in that truth, so that we may obtain eternal life in the kingdom of God.

In the fifteenth chapter of John the Savior tells us further about this Spirit. He says, "When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." What we need is the Spirit of truth.

I remember a certain spiritualist debated with one of our brethren thirty-eight years ago, in Northern Illinois. I was present and heard him. Our Bro. Sheen proved that in a great many instances the so-called spirits of the dead, in spiritualism, did not tell the truth, when they were manifested through the spiritual medium. Some would assume to be the spirits of great men, like George Washington, and others. Some were found to tell falsehoods as to time and place and circumstance. They did not always tell the truth by a great ways. And in the reply that this man, Jamison, made, he said, "Yes, I admit that eight times out of nine they are false as to the names that they claim, or as to circumstance, or as to the time in which they say that certain things will take place. But because some men lie do you call all men liars?" He claimed that there were many true manifestations, and that the need is to have a spiritual medium that is true, the best and the surest. I thought, Well, if spiritualism is something that eight times out of nine you are liable to get a falsehood, where is the assurance, where is the safety, where is the security? I may get nine lies out of nine manifestations; you may get two truths out of nine. You would have two truths and I would have none. This spiritualist, W. F. Jamison, spoke as I have stated, and I wrote it down at the time.

You notice the difference between that way and the one the Savior speaks of, "When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." Now, what we need is the Spirit of truth, so that we will know just what the truth is. That is the testimony that we need, the evidence that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. Then we would not need to believe, or even have a thought, that this woman in the city of New York is the reembodiment of Jesus Christ to-day, that he has come back to the earth and dwells in her body, that she is the divine child of God or in his place. We would not even have a thought of it, because the Spirit has guided into this great truth that Jesus Christ has come once for all in mortality, and that he has ascended to the Father, where he sits upon the right hand of God until he shall come to his own throne to reign over the earth redeemed.

Again the Apostle Paul, in 1 Corinthians 12:3, says that no man can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost. Of course anybody can say that Jesus is the Christ, no matter how bad the man is, how wicked he is; but you see the apostle means that no man can truthfully say, that is, no man can assuredly say, that Jesus is the Christ, can not testify of it, unless he has the Holy Spirit. We have an example way back in the fifth chapter of Jeremiah, where the Lord says to Jeremiah, "Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon it. And though they say, The Lord liveth; surely they swear falsely." Why, does not the Lord live? How did the people swear falsely when they said "The Lord liveth"? For the simple reason that they repeated something that their fathers had told them and did not know it for themselves. And when they said "The Lord liveth" they swore falsely. That is, they did not know it; they could not testify of it any more that I could go up to Leon and testify before the judge and say I saw certain things, when I did not see them, but heard somebody say they saw them. He would say, "Well, did you see this?" "No." "Then we do not want your testimony at all." And so in this case the Lord said to Jeremiah, "Though they say the Lord liveth; surely they swear falsely." They had heard that from their fathers. Now that is the distinction and difference between those who simply receive the testimony of somebody else and those who know for themselves. Hence Jesus says that the Spirit of God shall be in you "a well of water springing up into everlasting life," and "He shall testify of me."

That is the great need that all have when they are baptized, that they should be able to testify of Jesus Christ our Lord. Paul says that no man can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost; he can not say it truthfully. In the fourteenth chapter of John we find a like statement:

I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. . . . But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

Here is the blessedness and the joy of the presence of that Spirit which he says is the Spirit of truth. You see the difference between this teaching and the admission of Mr. Jamison, that eight times out of nine the spirits of the dead, so-called, tell falsehoods. Another thing, his kind of manifestations must come through somebody else; but the Holy Spirit witness is given to be right in our own hearts. We do not go to any Witch of Endor or spirit of the dead, but it shall be received in here, shall be in you "a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

Now the teaching of the latter days, as shown forth in the writings of Joseph Smith, as presented to us on page twenty-seven of the Book of Covenants 10:6, 7, is after the same order, as follows:

And now, verily, verily I say unto thee, Put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good: yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit. Verily, verily I say unto you, I will impart unto you of my Spirit, which shall enlighten your mind, which shall fill your soul with joy, and then shall ye know, or by this shall you know, all things whatsoever you desire of me, which is pertaining unto things of righteousness, in faith believing in me that you shall receive.

Here is the same promise given in the Book of Covenants that is in the New Testament, according to John's record of the teaching of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. And that promise was that the Holy Ghost, which the Father will send in Christ's name, shall teach you all things. We understand by this that he will teach us not all things about this world, or about astronomy, or about the work of this life and the things we see around us, but all necessary things about God's word and work, enough to make us wise unto salvation, all things concerning the spiritual kingdom of our heavenly Father. It was given to guide us into all truth and it should be to us as an actual fact.

In another place Jesus spoke thus: "Ye shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." Think of this. Again, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Free from what? Evidently free from dubiety of mind, free from darkness. Therefore, if we have the Spirit of Christ in that degree we are entitled to, it is evident that we shall not stumble, we shall not fall. We may see the mistakes of others; we may feel that we are faulty ourselves; we may doubt our own ability, feeling that we make slow progress, and that we are not doing everything that we ought to do. But with it all we must realize that this is the only Spirit that can guide us aright. Everybody can see faults in others, and some see them so much that they say, "Brother So and So and Sister Somebody have such faults and failings that I propose to have nothing more to do with it." and then they stop. You see it is not intended that we should go by what somebody else practices.

A good many years ago a brother wrote to me about certain elders and said: "I want you to take my name off the Church record. If you are going to keep such men in the Church I do not want to stay in it any longer." And he urged that his name be taken off. What good would that do him? The truth was the truth no matter what other men did. It would be true all the time, and would save him. But later those men that he disliked did go out of the Church. Then came the time when others said, "Well, if these men did not know what the truth was, if as long as they stayed with the Church they were not sure that it was right, and they have now gone out of the Church, why, you might let me out too." So you see there is danger that men will try to walk by somebody else's light, by what others say and do.

And hence it is that we need to have this Spirit dwelling in us, for Jesus said, "It shall be in you a well of water springing up into everlasting life;" "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free;" "Ye shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." Consequently it is the privilege of God's people to so possess that Spirit, and to so walk in humility, in godliness, and in righteousness that the deeds of others will not throw them off the track, but that they shall continue in the faith. It may be a great trial. I admit that it is. I have been tried in that way a great deal myself. And I have thought how many things of injustice and wrong there are in human nature. But that is in human nature, and not in God. It is not in the Spirit of God; but in humanity. We are all human and we all err. I have felt my own faults and failings to be very great, as well as the faults and failings of others. But we must try to learn to bear with each other, and to possess the Spirit of Christ. Try to be as patient as you can; and to do good to others as you go along, so that you may be able to abide in the truth.

Again John teaches in this manner: "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him."—1 John 2:27.

Here we have a statement by John that agrees with what Christ said, "which is truth, and is no lie." Not like Mr. Jamison's eight times out of nine a falsehood, and the truth one time out of nine. John says it is the truth and is no lie.

John calls it the "anointing," and Peter said (Acts 10:38) that God "anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power." And in the fourth chapter of Luke, eighteenth verse, we read: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor." That is the true anointing. When we administer to the sick we pour the oil upon their heads, and we say that this oil is the outward anointing, the emblem of the Holy Spirit, we understand. We pray God that as this oil is poured upon them, so God will anoint them with the Holy Spirit, the true anointing, that it may permeate their bodies and heal them. Thus it was the Holy Spirit that came from God and anointed the Son and made him not only wise unto salvation, but also a wise teacher and a great leader.

It is the privilege of the Saints to be anointed more or less, to a greater or a lesser degree, with the same Spirit, according to the necessities of the men and women who receive it. Some receive a greater degree in order that they may be able to teach great truths; for Jesus said that out of them should "flow rivers of living water." Some in administering in the chief offices of the Church may receive greatly of the Spirit of God, in the degree according to their needs. So says John, "The anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you." We may instruct each other, but the true teacher is that that certifies of the truth. So we say to the world, when we are teaching and preaching the principles of the gospel, "Now we want you to listen to this truth, we like to have you understand it; but we do not want you to come in the Church because we say so." We do not want you to obey it because we tell you it is true. But we want you to feel sure that it is true; and then when you have obeyed it you are entitled to the Spirit of God that shall certify to you of its truth; not because we tell you it is true, but because the Spirit of God tells you. Jesus said that whosoever did his will should know of the doctrine, whether it was from God or if he only spoke of himself. Thus all may receive the teaching and instruction of the Holy Spirit, they may receive of his power and be anointed thereby.

We live in a time when there is great need of this blessing, this Spirit, when there are a multiplicity of isms and theories and teachings of every sort. There are the most grotesque and strange ideas advanced as teaching of truth, and people are following after these things. Multitudes are going after them because they do not know the difference between truth and error, consequently the need that the Lord's people should be guided by the Spirit of God, the great need that they should be enlightened by the Spirit of truth.

I will not speak at any great length; but close by saying that I am thankful, with you, that the Spirit of God has been again given unto mankind in the times in which we live. And if we can endure, if we can possibly continue, without a doubt it shall be well with us, and we shall receive whatever we shall be entitled to at the end.

I remember when I was in the army, more than forty years ago, that I knelt down on the hillside, in the southern land, and I asked God to show me where his truth was. And I made the promise there that if he would show me what his truth was I would obey it; if ever I escaped from there, that I would obey the truth if I could find it. And I fulfilled my word when the time came for me to make the effort. But I became discouraged. I could not find the place where I could feel satisfaction or assurance, and I was almost ready to turn to skepticism, if not infidelity. And all at once I accidentally heard this doctrine preached in the state of Wisconsin. Then I opposed it; but the more I opposed it the more I became convinced that there was truth in it, and in the course of time I was constrained to accept it. I was convinced that the original gospel power was with that people. And while I have passed through a great many trying scenes, and for thirty-six years I have been trying to preach it, I am glad to say that I feel sure that I have never told a lie unto men and declared it to be the truth of God. I have never tried to tell anything to mankind but what I felt sure that it was true, that if put to the test people would find it to be so. And I am thankful to-night that God has given of his Spirit to the sons and daughters of men, that as Jesus foretold, his Spirit will continue to guide them into all truth, and it will reveal the things of God unto them, and make them indeed to be the sons and daughters of God, heirs of everlasting life, if they live faithful.

May the Lord guide you, lead you by his counsel, that you may live during the time that remains to you as the sons and daughters of our heavenly Father; that when you shall pass over you may find there that you have not believed a lie in any degree, but that it is the whole truth and that you have been sanctified by that truth.

EXPERTS ON BEER DRINKING.

Professor G. Von Bunge, professor of physiological chemistry in the University of Basle, Switzerland, says: "Beer is the most injurious of alcoholic drinks because no other is so seductive. One can accustom himself more readily to the drinking of beer than any other intoxicant, and no other so readily destroys the appetite for normal food and nourishment. It is not only the concentrated alcoholic liquors that cause heart and kidney trouble, but preëminently the continued use of beer."

The Scientific American says: "The use of beer has been found to produce a species of degeneration of all the organs. In appearance the beer drinker may be the picture of health, but in reality he is most incapable of resisting disease."

The late Adolf Fick, professor of physiology in the University of Wurzburg, Germany, said: "It is quite beyond doubt that every dose of alcohol, even the most moderate, diminishes the strength."

Doctor August Forel, of Zurich, says: "Is there any alcoholic drink which, taken moderately either as a supposed tonic or as a means of nutriment, is beneficial to human health? I answer the question with a decided 'No.'"

Doctor Alfred Wolff, in a remarkable paper on the increase of cancer in Great Britain, which appears in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, quotes figures to show that the deaths from cancer have risen in England from 67.6 per 100,000 in 1890 to 82.8 in 1900; and that in Prussia, Holland, and Norway, there has been an increase of over 30 per cent. It is equally noteworthy, however, that the districts in which the cancer death-rate is a high one are just those where beer is largely consumed. Doctor Wolff says: "The evidence is extremely convincing. The amount consumed in the United Kingdom, which was twenty-seven gallons per head in 1885, was thirty-one and one half gallons in 1900, and in the German Empire the consumption rose from ninety to one hundred and twenty-five litres per head. In countries such as Italy and Hungary, in which the consumption of beer is small, the mortality from such diseases is small. . . . In no other country could any instance be discovered in which a large consumption of beer was accompanied by a low cancer mortality." —Ram's Horn, September 12, 1903.

THE "MOST BEAUTIFUL CHURCH IN AMERICA."

The recently completed Leland Stanford Memorial Church, at Palo Alto, California, stands on the campus of the Stanford University, and is regarded as a unique example of American church architecture. Says Mr. J. L. Harbour, in the Christian Endeavor World (September 3):

"It has required four years of constant work to erect the church Mrs. Stanford has built to the memory of her husband. The most skilled architects in California, the most skilled decorative artists in both America and Europe, and the most notable sculptors and workers in mosaics in Italy have been called upon to help erect and embellish this beautiful temple of worship.

"Mrs. Stanford has chosen to keep the cost of the church a secret, but it is certain that it has cost at least six hundred thousand dollars.

"The carvings, the marble statuary, and the exquisitely beautiful stained-glass windows representing John, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, David, Elias, Moses, Samuel, and Isaiah, represent a great outlay, and are the finest in the world.

"The ceiling of the church is seventy feet above the floor, which is of the richest Moorish tiling. There are forty-seven stained-glass windows, and a great many beautifully carved arches and columns. It is said that the cost of the mosaic decorations in the church has been about one hundred thousand dollars.

"Of course the plans for the music in a church like this have been carefully considered, and there is in the church one of the finest organs in the world, and there are seats in the choir-loft for one hundred and fifty singers. The organ has three thousand pipes and forty-six stops, and it has the most beautiful front ever placed on an organ.

"The pulpit is of richly carved stone, and the altar is a block of Carrara marble upon the face of which has been carved a bas-relief of Ruben's 'The Entombment.'

"There is back of the altar a wonderful representation of the 'Last Supper' in rich mosaics, which is a copy of the original in the Sistine Chapel at Rome."

In brief, the Leland Stanford Memorial Church is believed to be the "most beautiful church in America," while some go so far as to say that there is not a more artistically beautiful church building in the world.—Literary Digest, September 19, 1903.

Original Poetry.

Seeking.

[Dedicated to Brother Joseph.]

Who doubts within his soul there is a God?
Who doubts his works and universe abroad?
The mighty wonders of his arching sky
Do in their silent majesty reply.

O, could his glorious works above but speak
And tell their story to the doubting weak,
O, would it not from worldly things estrange,
And give each secret thought a higher range.

O God, if I within thy kingdom could Find rest eternal in the Fatherhood,
I'd give my every earthly thought to prayer
To make assurance sure on reaching there.

I seek not worldly power, nor worldly fame,
I seek no worldly place, nor titled name,
But ask that when my work below is done,
I may rejoice in the reward I've won.

I seek to know the truth that sets us free,
The truth which robs the grave of victory;
And when I'm called to go, with my last breath,
I'll praise His name who took the sting from death.

Selected Poetry.

It Is Time to Quit.

It is time to quit the grumbling,
Time to take a hopeful view,
Time to drop the foolish notion
That the world is all askew;
There are lots of blessings yet
That the world is booked to get,
And the good Lord in his mercy's saving some of them for you.

It is time to quit the sighing,
Time to look up with a smile,
For the good old world's revolving
In the same old steady style;
Wicked people day by day
Close their eyes and pass away,
And there won't be any left here but the righteous, after while.

It is time to quit the fretting
 Over trifles that go wrong;
 Think of all the joys you're getting,
 All the blessings right along;
 Don't sit down disheartened, sad,
 Over small rebuffs you've had,
 Fortune tries our spirits often, just to make them good and strong.

It is time to quit believing
 That there's nothing left to do
 For the ones who'd be achieving;
 Every day brings something new.
 Don't give up the hope to rise,
 Far ahead the future lies,
 And to-morrow may be bringing just the needed chance for you.

It is time to quit the grieving
 For the good old happy days;
 It is time to quit believing
 Men are sunk in sinful ways;
 Still the morning may be bright,
 Still sweet dreams may come at night,
 Fate has favors for the cheerful, but our grumbling never pays.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Singing in Darkness.

Blind and a captive in his narrow cage,
 My little bird lives on from day to day;
 Cheered by no sight of feathered friend, he sits
 In darkness, lighted by no sunbeam's ray.

And yet a burst of sweetest melody,
 Limpid and clear as any wild-bird's trill,
 Comes forth from out that narrow, close-barred cage,
 With heaven-born music all my room to fill.

Dear little patient singer, may I learn
 The secret of your heart's rejoicing note?
 Whence springs the music from your darkened life
 Which seems to fill my soul and round me float?

So would I sing when light and hope seem fled,
 And all my path is barred with doubt and care.
 Shall I not sing of brighter days ahead?
 Yea, little bird, thy song, thy life I share.

—Mrs. E. A. Hawkins.

Dear Mothers: We feel that we can not possibly occupy our Column better this week than by reproducing from the Sunshine Bulletin, for November, 1903, of the International Sunshine Society, published at New York, a paper prepared and read before our Zion's Hope Sunday-school, of St. Louis, Missouri, by Sr. Fannie I. Morrison, who last week started her Sunshine Column in the Hope. Sr. Fannie, while among the world's bread-winners, is also an earnest worker in almost all departments of church work, and those who carefully read this article will see that she does not furl the banner of her faith when working along lines outside the Church, but still within the pale of "Good will to men."

We trust that as mothers you will study this work of Sunshine and be prepared (if you find it good and approve of it) to encourage your children in adopting it. Sr. Fannie sent the article which we reproduce to the State president of Missouri,

Mrs. C. W. Trowbridge, of St. Louis, just to let her see that she was working for Sunshine, and was greatly surprised upon receiving her Bulletin to see it in print, and she has since received an earnest request to contribute other articles.

It is good to have our young people not only prepared to defend our faith, but able and willing to stand side by side with the honored and honorable ones of the earth laboring for the advancement of the race. The Church has many now capable of doing this, and she will have more in the future.

Saints Should be Cheerful.

This lesson seems particularly adapted to the Sunshine idea which we have been trying to present to you for the past few weeks. In it we are taught to be cheerful, to show moderation in our conduct, to pray with thanksgiving, to cultivating things pure, true, and lovely, to endure privation with contentment, to deal generously one with another. These things are the very aims and objects of the Sunshine Society, so I think Paul must have been a Sunshiner so many years ago, and yet some are willing now to vote it "a fad" and say it will "soon die out" when it has endured through all the ages.

The motto of the society is "good cheer." The instruction of the Lord to his disciples in John 16:33 was, "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer." In Acts 23:11 we are told, "The Lord stood by him and said, Be of good cheer, Paul." It is also the word of the Lord to us in these latter days, as we are told in Doctrine and Covenants that "Saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph."

If we believe all the glorious promises which we have through this gospel of ours, surely we should be cheerful and glad and willing to bear the cross here for a short space of time, when we think of the glories that await the faithful.

From the terms of endearment used by Paul in his letter to the Philippian saints, and also to the Thessalonian saints, we should understand that he had great love for them. If there were any among them who had any differences between them, he kindly entreated them to be of one mind. He wanted them to rejoice and be glad in the good the gospel brings to those who receive it. The admonition is just as much for us to-day as it was for those saints to whom Paul was writing. We have much to be thankful for if we do not fail to count our blessings, and we know that God's promises are "Yea" and "Amen" to those who keep his commandments and rest in him.

Paul told the saints they should "Be careful for nothing." The Inspired Version says, "Be afflicted for nothing." He meant by this that they should not think their troubles greater than they were, but that they should be cheerful and happy even when things happened that might trouble them.

It is a true saying, that "We make our troubles double by dwelling on them long." Paul instructed the saints to make their wants known to God by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, and they should have the peace of God which passeth all understanding. This is just as good advice to us to-day. We should not become so easily discouraged and cast down; nor should we be excessively happy. It is better to be cheerful always and trust God day by day for just the strength we need to overcome every difficulty, relying on him for guidance and believing that God will bring all things right in the end if we keep his commandments.

Paul had learned the lessons he was striving to impress upon the saints, the lesson of cheerfulness under all conditions of life. He tells them, "Those things which ye have both learned and received, and heard, and seen in me, do." Again, he says, "I know both how to be abased and I know how to abound." And then he tells them how he is able to do this: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." I am learning these lessons with you.

Now, just a word for Sunshine. Please do not tell us it is "a fad" and will soon "die out." I have received too much encouragement from this Sunday-school lesson and from my experience during the past week in this work to believe that it is going to "die out" now. It will not if you will lend us your prayers and your aid, if only that a kind word be said, and at least that you do not speak the word that will discourage those who have become ever so little interested in it, and I am sure we will have God's blessings.

We want to make it a success. We believe it will be good for the children, the parents, the young, and the old. It seems to me this would be a pitiful world to live in if all the love and kindness, good cheer and happiness had "died out" of it. "Sunshine" is what Jesus spoke of when he said, "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another." If we have love in our hearts, we have charity for all and will rejoice and be glad to do little kindly acts and deeds of love.

You know there are none but kind deeds as dues in this society; some are generous enough to give money as their kind deed. The only methods of creating a fund to carry on the work is by collections, socials, entertainments, donations, etc., and there is also the method of securing what is termed "honorary" members—that is, those who are willing to promise a certain sum to be paid once a year; this sum may be any amount the person feels he can give. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

I am glad to tell you we have one "honorary" member who has given me five dollars for this work, and that is my employer. I talked "Sunshine" yesterday for our own cause, and am glad to be able this morning to hand five dollars to our treasurer. We hope we may have many others who will see the good resulting from the work and be willing to give us their aid financially, as well as by their prayers and kind words.

FANNIE I. MORRISON.

ADRIAN, Illinois, November 25.

Dear Sister Walker: Today being my little boy's first birthday, I will send a small offering for him. For some time I have been keeping a purse especially to save odd nickels and dimes in, such as I might have spent for candies, extras, etc. I call that my offering money and when I wish to give a gift, send a paper to a friend, or any little act of kindness, I have always some change on hand and intend to teach my little one to save in the same way; for I believe many a dollar would find its way into the treasury for good if the mothers would so direct.

There are few children who do not have money of their own given them by older friends or relatives, and some bright little fellows even earn it in different ways, and I for one think it a sin to allow them to spend it for any foolish thing that fancy dictates, when there are so many calls for help on every side. Of course this saving idea applies to all, but it is well to instill it in the young minds. I think money spent for church work along any line well spent, and am a firm believer in the tithing law, and not until all the Saints comply will God's work roll on as it should. Could give instances coming under my observation to confirm the belief, but will forbear, as my ideas are of little consequence.

Hope the mothers may rally round the standard and send in their offerings.

TEACHERS' MEETINGS.

(Concluded from last week.)

F. F. Jones, of Villisca, said: "The teachers' meeting is an important factor in helping to put 'go' into the school. Not so much 'thermometer' as a 'generator.' The best instrument God can use is the individual who is possessor of result-provoking energy. The first essential to a successful teachers' meeting is a company of workers of the sort mentioned, pledged to stand by each other and the teachers' meeting in furthering the interests of the school. Then there needs to be a good room with the usual class equipment, maps, blackboards, etc. There needs to be continual planning, buttonholing, leadership, and at all times the most careful preparation.

"Inside of the meeting, in every part of it, there needs to be the same exercise of personal snap and go. 'Always have something on, and that something worth while.' Make instruction and conference both prominent in every meeting and never neglect the devotional.

"Instruct the teachers on lesson facts and teachings and show them methods, illustrations, and applications for use in their classes. Keep them posted on association work and news. Refer to our State paper, the Helper, occasionally. Secure special papers and lectures on timely topics. Encourage normal work and use of teachers' library among the teachers. Talk the teachers' meeting, work it, emphasize its importance, and do not adjourn or disband a single session for anything short of a cyclone. (The M. E. teachers' meeting, Villisca, has not missed a meeting for five years or more.)

This is work. Yes and the price of success. This is not theory. This is exactly the way we put go into the teachers' meetings in our town, and we make them successful so that they rank along the important services of the churches.

(Here was given the regular program of the M. E. T. meeting, Villisca.)

"A teachers' meeting conference, seeking unity of action and harmony and effectiveness in teaching, is as necessary to the Sunday-school as is the meetings of trustees or faculty in an institution of learning or the conference around the directors' table in a bank.

"The go spirit of the teachers' meeting manifests itself in every department and service of the school. The machinery runs more smoothly, officers and teachers are stimulated and prepared for a more efficient service. Results are apparent in the increasing numbers who present themselves for membership in the church."

THE following is taken from the New Century Sunday School Teachers' Monthly, and is so pertinent to the needs of our schools at this season of the year that we give it to our readers. We sincerely hope that no school, large or small, will fail to observe the Christmas festival. There is too much to be gained to afford to miss it. Have some observance of the day, even though it be simple or little.—ED.

December, the month which brings with it the sweet and hallowed influences of the Christmas season, is with us again. We hear once more the angel's message of "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," and with it those kindly words of the Master: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Shall we not aim to more fully impart this beneficent influence to those who gather around us from week to week? If our scholars learn to think of this festival not simply as a time when a great deal is to be done for their pleasure, but as one in which they are to engage in seeking to give enjoyment to others, will we not have revealed unto them a deeper knowledge of the true Spirit of Him whose birthday we celebrate?

We hope many of the suggestions contained in this number of the New Century Teacher may be a true help to you in your plans for a blessed Christmas season.

A SURPRISE SUPPER.

Dear Friends of the Round Table: If there is one thing in the world that children tall and children small love above another, it is a surprise. And so last Christmas eve we had a surprise supper for our Sunday-school, and here is a sketchy idea of it:

The primary teacher had just exhausted her songs and marches when the great double doors rolled back, and through the latticed archway the children beheld—fairy-land.

The Sunday-school room was a bower in pink, and the tables a veritable rainbow with their long lines of brightly-colored sheaf-shaped bags. With what eager delight our little guests swarmed about the table to find their "place cards." Suddenly, amid the light laughter and chatter, a signal-bell sounded and the cunningly-tied paper napkin bags of the first "course" of this surprise supper were opened and revealed dainty sandwiches cut in various shapes. Five minutes passed, another bell, and a snowy cover disclosed a glistening ball of "angels' food." Another bell, and in a green-tipped napkin the children found a big golden orange. Then from its crimson hiding-place came a roll of toothsome candy. And last of all the children found hidden in a nest of gray and gold their Christmas gift. For the girls there was a thimble, a handkerchief, a pin, or a buckle, for the boys, a box, a ball, or a book.

"And all done," triumphed the superintendent, "with paper wreaths and napkins, and what do you call that stuff? Oh, yes, tarlatan—"

"And bits of baby ribbon," supplemented the primary teacher.
MRS. A. E. BARNES.

EVERYBODY HAD A GOOD TIME.

Dear Friends of the Round Table: In one of the largest Sunday-schools of Cambridge, Massachusetts, it was decided to arrange the Christmas festival so that the item of expense would not be so large. This was done not simply from motives of economy, but because it was felt that the general tendency has been toward too much expense, and that it was well to see if just as much true enjoyment could be had from a simple and inexpensive festival. This is the plan which was carried out:

The usual trees were provided, and also a chimney and fireplace for the use of Santa Claus and his wife and little boy. Then each teacher was appointed to procure presents for his class, and no present was to cost more than five cents. It might cost only a penny. These presents were all brought to the vestry and placed upon or around the trees. At the time of the festival the Sunday-school was arranged in classes. Santa Claus made his appearance, and with his wife and little boy gave most of the entertainment, for they were very good singers.

When the time came for the distribution of presents, Santa Claus called for the superintendent and eloquently presented him with a bag containing a large onion. The superintendent feelingly responded, and then the pastor was called up and received a fine cabbage, and the other officers received some vegetable. Then the classes were called up in turn. As the name was called the class arose and went forward together to the trees, and there Santa Claus gave them whatever presents happened to be nearest to his hand. This was the feature of the festival. Old and young entered into the spirit of the time with equal zeal. It was delightful to see the classes of older people go forward to the trees, receive their presents, carefully wrapped from view, and then to hear the merry exclamations when the presents were opened. All agreed that this festival was a great success. It removed the anxiety about expense and the selection of appropriate presents; it did away with all unhappiness from the comparison of gifts; it put the whole Sunday-school on the same footing, and was the means of renewing and awakening the best kind of fraternal feeling in the school.

J. MERVIN HULL.

A CHRISTMAS TREAT.

Dear Mr. Cook: Our Christmas entertainment was so successful that I am very glad to send you an account of it. A few words of explanation are necessary. We have a very small Sunday-school, about twenty in regular attendance, held in a chapel at ten o'clock in the forenoon, and most of the children come long distances to attend the service. We had never had any Christmas celebration before, so our tree was anticipated by the children weeks before Santa Claus was to arrive.

As many of the children were small and lived so far away it was thought best to have the entertainment in the afternoon so that all might get home before dark.

We sent invitations to all the scholars asking them to be at the chapel Thursday afternoon at three o'clock. The blinds were closed and lamps lighted, also candles on the tree, which stood in the center of the platform. When the children were all there they spent quite a time looking the tree over and trying to discover all the things hidden among the boughs. After a time they were invited to another room where a Christmas tea was served them.

When they were once more around the tree they were surprised to hear bells, and as they came nearer and nearer great was their delight when old Santa Claus appeared in their midst, and after a few minutes had been spent by Santa telling the children of his adventures in getting there, etc., he was invited to remain to the exercises, which consisted of speaking and singing by the children, after which the presents were distributed. While we enjoyed the entertainment we did not forget those who were unable to attend on account of age or sickness, and gifts were sent to about fifty such in our town. It is a blessed time to teach others to be thoughtful of the sick and "shut-ins," and even children enjoy a "giving" as well as a "getting" Christmas. Our one aim in all we did was to so teach the "sweet old story" in verse and song that a desire for a Christlike life might truly be born in some child's heart that day. Our rooms were decorated with evergreen and red crepe paper, with stars and wreaths around the walls. The expense was very small, as most of the articles needed were given. And the results? Our Father knows.—Mrs. H. E. Cudworth.

A CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL.

Dear Friends of the Round Table: Last year some of our Sunday-school workers said: "Let us have a supper for the children." Others said, "Let us have a tree and Santa Claus." And still others, "A musical and literary program and a bit of candy." And our superintendent said, "Let us have them all. Many members of our school have wandered away. And how better can we win and welcome our prodigals home again than by a good, old-fashioned Christmas festival?" And so we had them all.

Committees were appointed at once. As our superintendent had "genius for begging," he was made chairman of the committee to find money for gifts. A lady who knew where to find the most delicious things to eat, was placed at the head of the refreshment committee. And upon me fell the burden of providing a musical and literary program "to last no longer than half an hour." For three days I went about in a brown study. (If they put me on this year I shall send to the David C. Cook publishers for their Christmas Cantatas.)

The program must be simple—"easily rendered," for busy housewives were my coworkers. It must be effective, bright, cheerful, to make hearts glad. And above all, it must be hospitable, so as to take in all the younger classes—for children dearly love to "show off." As a result of that brown study I handed to the committee the following:

A HOME-MADE CHRISTMAS CANTATA.

Arrangement of Stage.—Christmas tree concealed by curtain; rug on the floor with two or three sofa pillows on right of stage.

First. Lights turned down. All children under ten enter singing.

Second. Children fall asleep while an older girl sings a lullaby.

Third. Colored lights. All children over ten, dressed in white, enter singing, "Hark the Herald Angels Sing;" march out on final chorus.

Fourth. An older girl reads selections from "Twas the Night Before Christmas." During reading, curtains are drawn, showing lighted tree with Santa Claus standing near. As reader passes out, the children awake, and singing, circle around tree and Santa Claus, pass off stage while singing last verse.

The songs were practiced in the Sunday-school hour by the whole school, and so required but one full rehearsal.

As our pastor was a young man without a family, our parsonage at Christmas time stood empty. Fires were kindled in furnace and in kitchen range. Lights, tables, chairs, rugs, and even flowering plants were brought in by the older boys. And a right merry time had we that night before Christmas. Warmth, light, music, laughter, that delightful, enchanting tree. The grumpiest man there, as he beheld the radiant faces of the children, was compelled to say that "it paid." Pay? Those children will never forget it. Give your children one full Christmas Eve, spiritually, mentally, yea, physically, that in later years they may have the sweet memory of it to carry with them to the uttermost parts of the sea.

Mother-Training, or Child-Training?

Around the the dinner-table, in the home of a highly cultivated family noted in religious work, the conversation turned to modern child-study and child-training. The talk was stimulated by the presence of a prominent writer and lecturer on these themes. After a prolonged and delightful discussion of children's ways and needs, one of the company said earnestly, "It seems to me that this whole subject is really a question of parent-training quite as much as of child-training." It was at once evident that he voiced the feeling of those around the table. And now the guest of that evening, Mr. Patterson Du Bois, author of "Beckonings from Little Hands" and "The Point of Contact in Teaching," has written an article for the Sunday School Times which mothers and teachers will want to read. For Mr. Du Bois considers, with pertinent illustration, amusing anecdote, and keen perception, the question, "Is Mother-Love Unerring?" Are you an accomplished and trained parent?—Sunday School Times.

Prayer is the spiritual process in which we give ourselves to God. It is not mere words. It is feeling, it is attitude, it is purpose, it is desire, it is hope. In prayer we lean upon God. In prayer we bring our work to God, our successes, our troubles, our perplexities, and spread them out before him. Prayer is the source of spiritual revelation also. The soul needs to know "the things that are freely given to us of God." The Spirit will take of the things of Jesus and show them unto us. It is the Spirit that searcheth the deep things of God. You will rise from your knees after prayer, with your spiritual sky washed as by the rain of God. Do not try to teach without prayer.—Selected.

In the Talmud we find: "The crow brought fire into the nest; it warmed him, but it burned the nest." Milton tells us, in Paradise Lost,—

"Revenge, at first though sweet, Bitter ere long, back on itself recoils."

GLEN JEAN, Ohio, November 24.

Editors Herald: Six hours or more at a depot awaiting train affords time for something preferable to loneliness. About the best panacea I have found for loneliness is to be occupied otherwise. I do not suppose that is new.

Whatever the "antis" have accomplished in fields remote and of which I have not heard, round about their center or headquarters, McArthur, Ohio, scarce a ripple has been caused. As Bishop Kelley observed, a year gone and nothing done. In August Reverend Bridwell wrote A. B. Kirkendall wishing to engage some one in debate practically on the former scene. Bro. Kirkendall turned the matter over to Bro. U. W. Greene and he to Bro. F. M. Sheehy, all of which was quite to my satisfaction in the event of a debate. To those on the ground it became clearer that almost the sole purpose on the part of Mr. Bridwell was to raise finances. Mr. Bridwell took up one of the country schools of the county, the highest wages paid others being thirty-three dollars per month for similar and adjoining schools. They may of course pay him more, but it is evident neither the antis nor the Disciple Church find for him very lucrative employment. This may be unkind in me, but thus a part of the antis are getting on.

Right here may I ask where and who is the man that has opposed the latter-day work persistently from its very inception that has swelled his bank account to any considerable sum, or won for himself an honored name among men? It is the same with all of them, those who left the faith and the others. Who can not see, if their work was approved, some of them should be veritable world-benefactors and esteemed as such? While the world is not approving the work these men oppose they do not approve their work as right.

Braden, perhaps heading the list in a way, is about as little esteemed as a man so widely known could be. How much is he the gainer financially? While we can not know it for certain, the same effort otherwise applied, we are safe in judging, would have realized more for him.

D. H. Bays, one of those "children of providence," has not been so much appreciated among the flock giving him that exalted title, but that he served in the little town of Collins when a much better situation should have been afforded so distinguished a personage. Verily, how are the mighty fallen! Let them reverse this by giving Braden or Bays one of their best charges. Will they? To many others of the past the same facts apply. Will it be otherwise with Darby, Bridwell, and Neal? We shall see.

The repetition of a cause usually reproduces the result. On the street at McArthur, Mr. Darby stated to Bro. E. E. Long and myself "We have compared the first hundred pages of Palmyra and present Book of Mormon and found no material difference." He mentioned the one used by Mr. Neal and corrected by Bishop Kelley as really the only material one found. I remarked in answer, "If in one hundred pages you found no material difference, that being about a fifth of the book, you will hardly find it." This is the exact sense of the conversation, if not the words. It is clearly evident, that in and about McArthur their work is not making them famous. Of their recent efforts at Detroit I have heard nothing whatever.

Soon after reaching my field I met Doctor C. B. Taylor with whom I debated church propositions in 1895. Partly as a joke I asked him, Do you want to kill Mormonism again, Doctor? He had said he had done so in that debate. His answer was, "No, I want to live at peace with all men. I see more good in them all than I used to." Well, Doctor, what did you think of the McDowell-Bridwell debate? "Well, I did not attend it all, but my opinion was they both lost their affirmatives." Of course if either had made good his proposition, the Doctor would be out, being a Presbyterian. See?

Right here another estimate will be pertinent, that of Doctor Taylor's moderator, Reverend Davis, of the Disciples, who had once debated with Bro. James Moler. In conversation with him, I asked, What is your estimate of the debate Doctor Taylor and self had in which you acted as moderator? "Why, Doctor Taylor is a very scholarly man, but then he is no debater." Another affirmative must have been lost then.

Of our own work it may be said, moderate success is attending efforts made. Others have written of their own and each other's work except Bro. Beatty, who has not written or been mentioned in the letters of others. In opening new places, in which he delights most, he has exceeded all others. Like Bro. Keeler, of California, he is a first-class frontiersman. While considerable new ground has been broken and sown, the reaping time lies ahead.

Bro. E. E. Long made a fine opening at Harris Station, Ross County, recently. In the faith,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

CEDAR FALLS, Iowa, November 29.

Editors Herald: I am one of the scattered,—self and son being the only Saints in this city. There is a branch of the Church at Waterloo, eight miles from here, and I attend as often as I can. The little band of Saints in that place are striving to let their lights shine. They have a nice little Sunday-school, Bro. Beel superintendent. I came from Michigan one year ago last July and the gospel has not been preached in Cedar Falls yet; but hope it will not be long till it will be, as I intend to have an elder come as soon as I can secure a place to hold meetings.

I desire to let all of my dear brothers and sisters know that my son is very sick and it seems that doctors can not do him any good. He is very bad and has not been able to work for five months, so hope the Saints will remember him to the throne of grace, that if it be the Lord's will he may be spared. He has six little children and there is great need of his being raised to health.

Your brother in the great conflict,

ELIJAH HINDS.

GUILFORD, Missouri, November 30.

Editors Herald: This last day of November I feel disposed to write a few words from a part of the Lord's vineyard not often heard from through your columns.

Measles have been quite prevalent for the past three weeks in and around Guilford. Schools have closed because of it, though no one has seriously suffered. In the northwestern part of this (Nodaway) county scarlet fever has appeared. The general health of Saints and of the community is good at present.

Sr. Eliza Byergo has just returned from a visit of one month with her sister, Lettie Ross, in Holt County. Bro. R. Lorensen of the Bedison Branch, visited Guilford Saints and gave us one of his practical sermons on Sunday the 22d.

I love to read the church papers, of which the HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, Glad Tidings, and Watchman reach my home and they are welcome visitors. I also take one violent periodical, the Helper, which is and will be the cause of much prejudice, because of lies, trash, etc., it makes a business of hunting up and putting into print. And all this for the purpose of poisoning the minds of the people against the pure gospel of Christ. But they who are honest with themselves and who seek to hear the witnesses in defense, will be more apt to be of the class whom Jesus referred to when he said, "My sheep will hear my voice and a stranger will they not follow." The person who will compare the tale told by the Helper with the preaching of the true representative men will behold at a glance no marks of similarity, and will decide that the similarity is between the recorded word and the preaching of the representative men of the Church the Helper seeks to destroy. Why will the Helper combine forces with their own enemy in their endeavor to destroy the Reorganized Church? Surely Herod and Pilot are now friends! How zealous then should Saints be to pray for wisdom and to use of their means to send representatives and tracts out to tell the true story of redemption.

Brn. Vaughn and Haden have been holding forth in Maitland and go next to a union church south of Bro. R. K. Ross's.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

W. B. TORRANCE.

BROADHEAD, Kentucky, December 1.

Editors Saints' Herald: I have just closed an eleven-day meeting, and on Sunday led four into the water of baptism,—a man and his wife, another married man, and a young man; and others have told me that they will come in in the future.

I have made many friends for the truth; but a preacher from the Church of Christ made a very unmanly attack on me and prejudiced the members of his Church against me. He is making a desperate fight against the work here, trying to get other preachers to help him in his fight. The Baptist preacher told me he would not do anything of the kind.

This morning I am with Bro. Forbes' family. They are fine Saints and are highly esteemed by all who know them. Another fine family of Saints lives here,—Bro. Dunlap. I will try to start the work here. May Zion's cause move on is my prayer. A merry Christmas to all.

J. W. METCALF.

FORT COLLINS, Colorado, November 14.

Editors Herald: I struck this place on Monday, the 9th, and found Bro. L. J. Bradshaw at the depot to meet me. He conducted me to his home about two miles north of town, where I enjoyed the hospitality of his noble family for several days. I found them firm in the faith and rejoicing in the great latter-day work, taking all the church papers and keeping pace with and well posted in all the affairs of church work, as all who call themselves "Latter Day Saints" should do, even paying up their dues to the Lord by way of tithing.

I came here from Loveland, where there is established a noted sugar factory, the all-important beet being raised there for that purpose, and where, by the kindness of James R. Adams and P. L. Case, I obtained the German Congregational church two nights for the sum of one dollar and fifty cents. Here I presented the subject of "the kingdom of God" to an attentive congregation. The minister and his good lady were very much pleased with the subject. The minister played the organ for us, by which we felt honored, it being hard usually to get anything of this kind done for us.

On Sunday, the 12th, I gathered the few Saints together at the house of P. L. Case and held a social service, administering the sacrament, Bro. and Sr. Brownlee coming in from the country six miles to attend, and it was the first meeting of any kind they had attended for five years.

I also had the opportunity of making a visit to the study of the Reverend Violet, Christian minister. He had been talking of debating with some of our elders. He thought he would like to do so, but during our conversation I found he would rather back down and out. He merely wanted to hold a private debate with some smart elder first, but to this I did not agree. He positively declared that "Alexander Campbell" was not the founder of their Church and that the laying on of hands was not taught in the Bible. I thought this a strange position for a minister to take, so I left him, thinking it was not necessary to bother with a man of that kind. I believe that sometime there will be a work done in Loveland. There are a few people interested in the gospel, and if there was only a place open to us where we could hold forth for some time some would be ready to unite with the Church.

I could find no place here in Fort Collins to hold services in and all the people were working early and late to gather in their beets, so will move on to Berthoud and Ni Wot and see what the prospects are there. It seems to be an inopportune time to get anything done around in these beet countries at present.

In gospel bonds,

JAMES KEMP.

GWIN MINE, California, November 26.

Dear Editor: I am preaching twice a month at Ploma, one mile from here. I gave notice I would preach in the union church when I went there; but there were only three out and the shoemaker told me the Methodist preacher was a good preacher and he could get only a few out, and I stood a poor show. It disheartened me, but the thought came to try again, which I did. When I came out the next Sunday night about thirty-five were out, and the next Sunday about forty came and some of the women fixed the stand with flowers and made things look nice. Some are much interested in the work and I hope some good will be done. Bro. and Sr. Phelps and myself are the only Saints here.

Your brother in Christ,

T. W. DAVIS.

TORONTO, Ontario, November 21.

Dear Herald: It is with a lively sense of gratification that I enter again the grateful arena of your hospitable columns.

The circle of your readers is, like the circle described by Professor Drummond in "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," ever-moving, active, and increasing. The HERALD will, I believe, yet take rank and place among the best known and most widely perused exponents of periodical literature and journalism. To this end let there be plenty of variety; for as it has been often and well said, "variety is the spice of life."

The city of Toronto was formerly the wild and desolate but beautiful home of the Mississauga Indians, a branch of the great Iroquois Nation whose almost innumerable hosts once overspread the vast ranges of hill and lake and plain, which extend from this point all the way to the base of the Rocky Mountains. "Toronto" means "place of meeting," and the Indian Road, Delaware Avenue as it is now called, was constructed by those Indians in a manner which evinced accurate acquaintance with the cardinal points of the compass.

"Ontario," in which province Toronto is situated, is another Indian word, of Huron origin, I believe, signifying "a prospect of broad lakes, rivers, and valleys," a beautiful and truly poetical description, but no less true than beautiful.

The great lake of Ontario, lying at the foot of Toronto and extending one hundred and ninety-seven miles in one direction and fifty-five and one half miles across to Niagara Falls, is a grand and soul-inspiring scene, with the silver moon shimmering upon its broad and expansive bosom,—a spectacle which makes man's greatest works of art seem tame and poor in comparison and suffer indescribably by the contrast.

Toronto has about three hundred thousand inhabitants. Nearly all its streets and roads are wide and at right angles, one to another,—a very great advantage to a stranger inquiring his way to any given portion of the city.

The church here is a standing memorial to the energy and public spirit of the brethren and sisters of Toronto, and is largely the work of their own hands. Inspired by this praiseworthy example, the brethren of Humber Bay, two or three miles west of Toronto, have erected a house of prayer which is an ornament to the district and a credit to the Humber Bay Branch.

A very successful bazaar and concert has been inaugurated and carried to successful culmination by the Ladies' Auxillary Society in connection with the Toronto Branch. It was held in St. Andrews Hall, a fine and commodious building in this city, and I understand they realized no less than one hundred and forty-five dollars after all expenses were paid. This is most gratifying evidence of what can be accomplished by the ladies of the Church acting and working together in a spirit of sublime devotion to the welfare of the cause, and of almost tireless zeal and self-sacrifice in the carrying out of a sacred and well-sustained purpose.

The bazaar and concert were graced by the genial and ever-welcome presence of our esteemed brother, R. C. Evans, whose witty and humorous observations as chairman contributed so materially to the pleasure and enlightenment of the entire day's proceedings at the bazaar and concert which followed it. I was much gratified to hear of the cordial reception accorded Bro. Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans by my brethren in old historical London of sweet and sacred memories and associations and among the hard-working brethren and sisters in that vast metropolis.

And now a word as to the Holy Ghost and my criticism of Bro. A. M. Baker's letter in your columns recently.

I am fully aware of the spirit or pneuma poured out upon the day of Pentecost and promised in Joel 2: 29, and in many other passages of holy scripture, as I admitted in my last letter; but what I anxiously desire to know is, What has become of the Holy Spirit personage (Ruach ha Elohim), the third person mentioned in Matthew 28: 19, in whose name all are commanded to be baptized?

Like the man who asked for bread and they gave him a stone, for fish and they gave him a serpent, I fear I may be under the necessity of repeating my inquiry a number of times; and, like a certain character in one of Dickens' works, I "pause for a reply," and hope I may get it.

The brother returns to the attack in the HERALD just to hand, No. 46, in which he thanks me for my criticism. I may here mention that it is in no spirit of disrespect towards Bro. A. M. Baker, for I do not even know him and never had the pleasure of seeing the brother; but it is merely in a spirit of brotherly forbearance that I write, and in the hope of understanding the brother's theological proposition; so that the truth, and the truth only, may be evolved.

The brother now says, "Did not the Holy Ghost descend upon Christ in the form of a dove? Did it come in the form of a person on the day of Pentecost when it filled the whole house and appeared as fire upon their tongues and those present were all filled with the Holy Ghost?" The spirit pneuma (or wind) never did appear in the form of a person. It is spoken of as being "breathed," "poured out," or "shed forth," as in my former letter I pointed out concerning the divine afflatus. See John 20: 22; Joel 2: 28, 29; Acts 2: 2.

The personal Spirit has a name Ruach Jehovah, that is, "Spirit of God" or Holy Ghost (Matthew 28: 19), and is one with the Father and the Son; for it distinctly says, "And these three are one."—1 John 5: 7. So I keep on pegging away at my inquiry, "What has become of the third person named in Matthew 28: 19 if he is not a personage at all, but only the "will and mind of God and of Christ," as Bro. Baker asserts?

I have endeavored, not without many qualms and misgivings, to ascertain what position the brother really does assign to the eternal Spirit, so I turn to his former letter. He says that the Holy Ghost is nothing more than the mind and will of God and Christ. (See HERALD for September 2, page 13.) He announces further that our Campbellite friends are "divided among themselves," etc., (page 813, line 33,) and that the Spirit is a gift from God (page 814, line 36), just the same as a gift from a friend.

Later on we come upon the startling statement, startling in view of the brother's foregoing remarks: "Now we will show that the Holy Ghost is one of the Godhead" (page 814, lines 8, 9), and on the same page (line 20) he says, "It is one of the Godhead." I certainly would be grateful for further illumination upon this very perplexing piece of doctrine, as I utterly fail to see how the Spirit can be in one and the same breath God and yet not God, a gift and yet not a gift, but simply the mind and will of God and Christ.

I remember Lord Byron's Prisoner of Chillon, who says:

"My hair is grey but not with years,
Nor grew it white in a single night,
As men's have grown from sudden fears."

But either the poet or Bro. Baker must have forgotten that there is another way in which "men's hairs grow white in a single night," and that is by poring over abstruse metaphysical problems. I have none too much hair on my head as it is, and I certainly do not want to lose what I have in a vain endeavor to solve the problem (or rather conundrum) of how the Spirit can be a personage or one of the personages of the Godhead, and yet at the same time nothing but the will and mind of God! Nor do I want one of my Canadian friends to whom I habitually loan my HERALD to come back to me and say, "I am going to come down on you for a bottle of hair restorer or a powerful hair-dye, for my hair, which was a jet black when you lent me that last HERALD, now look, it is as gray as a badger's back, and all through puzzling over one letter; and now I am no nearer the solution of the problem than before you lent me the book."

Bro. Baker's is a good and well-meaning letter, but I would be grateful for just a line or two in elucidation of the "knotty problem."

With sincere love to all the Saints,

F. R. TUBB.

MERIDIAN, Idaho, November 29.

Editors Herald: That the few elders laboring in this part of the country may learn our whereabouts, we are one mile east and two miles south of Meridian, which is on the branch road from Nampa to Boise. Brn. Condit and Vanderwood passed us, not knowing we were here, which we hope will not happen again. We will not only give them a home and means to travel on but will assist in getting a place to preach.

As a family we wish to say to the Saints, especially those of the Far West District, that we are still trying in our weakness to love and serve our Master, and at present the distance is too great to hear their words that once gave us so much courage and strength. We are working, watching, and praying for the time when all things are prepared before us and this separation will end and the eye can see and the ear hear the things that we once so loved and cherished. Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may help spread truth while we sojourn in this far western country.

Bro. Vanderwood paid us a very pleasant visit, staying about a week on his return from Middle Valley to Southern Idaho. I saw his letter in the HERALD and wrote him. I find him a very zealous worker for the cause of Christ. He is fully armed against the evils of Brighamism, which is very necessary in these Western States.

Brethren passing through or laboring in this part of the country are cordially invited to call on us. May God bless his people everywhere.

JAS. N. CATO.

STILLWATER, Oklahoma, November 28.

Editors Herald: Having been appointed to labor in the Oklahoma District, I left home about May 5 for a tour of the district, in accordance with the advice of the missionary in charge, H. O. Smith, with a double purpose,—to preach the gospel, and to visit the branches and as many scattered Saints as possible in the interest of church finances, being Bishop's agent as well as missionary. In looking over the map I find I have done considerably more traveling than preaching, and the work of visiting is far from complete yet. It seems necessary that the Bishop's agent should be acquainted personally with every member in his district.

Now I wish to say to the Saints: Send in your tithes and offerings, as the year is nearing the close and we will have to make our report soon and would like to see every name on our books. Send all drafts or orders to my address and they will be taken care of by my wife and receipted for whether I am at home or not.

I have done some preaching of late in the Creek Nation, on what is known as Blands Ranch, where none of our people had ever preached, and had a fine interest. Preached eight times and promised to return when they got their schoolhouse completed.

I have just returned from Mathewson, where I went by request of Bro. Hubert Case, to be with him in his debate with Denton Collins of the Christian Church, which commenced on the 16th and lasted eight evenings, on the usual church propositions. This debate was held in a place where there were no members nearer than six miles, and we had to drive six and eight miles every night at first, but before the debate was over we had plenty of places to stop and many pressing invitations to come again.

I left the morning after the debate closed. Bro. Case remained by urgent request to preach at the same schoolhouse over the next Sunday. Collins challenged, and they signed up propositions for another debate to be held in Seiling, Dewey County, Oklahoma, within the next year.

In conclusion, any one wanting preaching in their neighborhood will please let me know and I will attend to it as soon as possible. I am looking for a lady now at my place to be baptized this week. She is from Perkins and a convert of Sr. Tate through private conversation, and reading tracts and papers.

Ever hopeful for the upbuilding of Zion.

Your brother,

S. J. HINKLE.

XENIA, Illinois, November 30.

Editors Herald: On November 22 we had a Sunday-school and Religio rally and had a nice program arranged to enliven the Sunday-school and Religio, and we also took a collection for Graceland College amounting to eight dollars and fifty cents. I long to see all the young people take an interest in these organizations, for in them great good can be accomplished.

Your sister,

NAR HOOVER.

Patriarchs and Blessings.

To Editors of HERALD and all whom it May Concern: Some time during the last summer and fall rumors reached my ears of a harmful nature, relating to the service of Patriarch John H. Lake. At first I paid no attention to them, simply because I had faith in the integrity of the brother mentioned, and also because I am painfully alive to the fact that there are fault-finders, and mischief-makers, and street-corner gossips, who seem to think they can run any and every department of the Church from the First Presidency and Bishopric, to the branch presidency, including the Patriarchate, much better than the present incumbents. But some questions which appeared in the HERALD, and their answers, caused me to look this matter up. While I do not question the right of the editors to answer questions through the columns of the HERALD, I do believe when those questions are of a nature to reflect upon any department of the ministry, it would be far better to refer such questions to those in charge of that department before publishing answers, especially when those answers and comments reflect upon the integrity or the work of some ministers in that class.

Now the case in hand was of this nature, and pertained to the Patriarchate. By correspondence and inquiry, I learned the complaint was said to come from Canada, but I could not find any one who was willing to assume the responsibility and furnish proofs of wrong-doing; and now comes a statement to exonerate our brother as follows:

"CHATHAM, Ontario, September 21, 1903.

"We, the undersigned, desire to express our disapproval of certain reports that have gone to Patriarch A. H. Smith, in reference to Patriarch John H. Lake, who is now laboring in this mission and of whom it has been said that he (J. H. Lake) is making charges and collecting moneys in a way not becoming his high office. And we hereby assert and affirm that the above-named brother has never asked for any money, but has left it to ourselves what to give to help defray expenses. We also state that the brother has been heard frequently to state, in public, that the blessings were free to all who desired them, and that no charge was made, but if any one felt like giving to help defray the expenses of the patriarchal blessings, it was acceptable. We believe any one stating otherwise is either misinformed or is malicious in his intentions."

Signed by one dozen Saints of Chatham, Ontario, Canada.

And I am asked to publish the same. Those who have read the HERALD have no doubt seen and read the questions referred to, but some may not have read them. So that all may understand the matter who read this article, I will repeat the statement made twice or thrice by me in HERALD relative to receiving pay for giving blessings. There is a continual expense attached to the work, and this expense must be met some way; but there never has, to my knowledge, been a fixed charge or price put upon the blessings, and invariably I have given the Saints to understand that there was no charge, but if any one was able and felt to assist by giving an offering it was his privilege to do so. If any poor Saints wanted blessings and had nothing to give, they got the blessings just the same as if they had thousands of dollars, and no remarks made. Am I making the matter plain?

I trust that those who have talked unwisely, having a mistaken idea about the work of our brother, J. H. Lake, will correct the error they have made and exonerate our brother from any blame.

And now, while I am before you, I will call your attention to a little complaint or criticism also made in HERALD,—the statement that there was an unequal division of labor by the patriarchs or evangelists at the late reunions, Dow City and Stewartville, that there were four evangelists at Dow City and but one at Stewartville. The statement looks unfair on the face of it, without an understanding of how it occurred. Patriarch A. H. Smith was requested by the Dow City reunion committee to attend months previous to date of reunion. Patriarchs Charles Derry and Charles Butterworth reside in the district, the latter in Dow City, the former in Woodbine, a neighboring village, and of course were in attendance at the reunion, while Patriarch Henry Kemp was in attendance upon the reunion at Henderson, and at its close came over to Dow City to attend for two days, thus swelling the number of evangelists at Dow City. Bro. H. Kemp came to Dow City to see his daughter who resides there, by permission of presiding officer of the mission, F. A. Smith, and left the reunion Saturday evening at the close of the afternoon service, to fill appointments at another place over Sunday, thus depriving himself of the closing services of the reunion, only remaining two days. Stewartville was simply just a little behind in her request in making up her list. Those who complain must bear in mind that the reunion committees make selection of the best speakers they can get to draw a hearing. Stewartville committee may have invited the writer, but it was long after he had consented to attend Dow City. Let the Saints and those interested be patient and reserve their criticism until we are more perfectly organized, and the order of evangelists will try to meet the calls made upon them. If any complaint is to be made, with grounds for complaint, so far as the order of evangelists is concerned, please notify the Presiding Patriarch.

Again, until different arrangements can be made by General Conference and the mission-appointing power, the presiding patriarch can not be expected to furnish evangelists to fill appointments on request of committees or otherwise, as by act of General Conference the evangelists are located, and become local or standing ministers. See, Bro. J. H. Lake, Canada; Bro. H. Kemp, Independence Stake; Bro. J. R. Lambert, Lamoni Stake, etc. Suppose I were called upon to furnish an evangelist to attend a conference or reunion, as I am at this present writing, outside of these local fields, how could I supply the demand? By going myself, of course, as I have been doing; but I can not meet all the demands of this nature, and I am not to blame, neither is the order to which I belong.

Once again let me say, in order to keep from misunderstanding, there is no charge for patriarchal blessings. Saints who are poor and have no money may be rich in faith, and have and enjoy many of the blessings of God; and may be rich in spiritual power, and gifts of the Spirit. There should be no bar to their receiving a patriarchal blessing; and so far as the Patriarch is concerned, there is none. Nevertheless it must be remembered, there are necessary expenses attached to the labors of patriarchs that do not attach to the work simply of an elder, as a missionary. While the elder is expected to preach, so is the patriarch; may be called upon to minister to the sick, so may the patriarch. The elder must travel from place to place and necessarily incurs expenses, so do the evangelists. The elder does not have to employ a stenographer and furnish stationery for blessings, stamps for mailing, books for records, tablets for shorthand work, typewriters and supplies, while the patriarchs do; and yet according to the answers in the HERALD the patriarchs are entitled to no more consideration than the elder or missionary for preaching a sermon or ministering to the sick. So far as setting a price upon the work is concerned, the answers are right enough; but so far as meeting the expenses occurring, they are misleading.

It should be reckoned a privilege for those who have (and sometimes they have an abundance) to consider the expenses and make such offering as they may be led to do, and thus aid those who have not, and avoid the necessity of a call upon the Bishop. There are no grounds for fear upon the part of Church members that the Patriarch will get rich off the hard earned means of members, poor or rich. I can assure the Saints upon that point, and relieve their minds if they have been so troubled.

Now let the Saints and all concerned please remember that we, as ministers for God, are laborers with God, in the upbuilding and establishing the church and kingdom of God, in Zion of the latter days, and be not suspicious, unbelieving, or doubtful; but be believing and faithful and ever ready to make sacrifice for the work whenever the necessity arises. So may God's blessings multiply and ever be with his people till the coming of our Lord and Savior, is the constant prayer of

Your brother in Christ,

ALEXANDER H. SMITH, Presiding Patriarch.

LAMONI, Iowa, December 2, 1903.

DOW CITY, Iowa, December 4.

Editors Herald: Having been absent from your pages for a long time, I take the privilege of letting the Saints of this district and others know of our doings and whereabouts. We are still contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints. It is the only thing that satisfies the longing of the soul. It is our all in all, and it grows brighter from day to day. We rejoice in our warfare, are stronger in the faith, and seek to be up to date with the progress of God's kingdom on earth. After reading in the daily journals, that Dowie's institution has gone into the hands of receivers, we imagine what gloom must come over many that trusted in this self-made Elijah and now feel the sting of defeat. Some of them will surely realize that a deed to their possessions is better than a lease. Surely we can sing with the spirit and with the understanding:

"How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word!"

We have no cause to be discouraged; the prospects are good and some are gathered into the fold. We have been called upon to open the door for sixteen of his sheep to come in, seeking shelter in the fold, and may the good Shepherd watch over them. And, dear ones, keep your eye on the Shepherd, don't stray too far away. Keep within sounding distance, that when the Shepherd calls we may hear and obey. We trust that more will enter in before this conference year closes. There are several lingering near, and some are

"Out on the mountains wild and bare, Away from the tender Shepherd's care."

It makes us think of our old, familiar song, "There were ninety and nine that safely lay." But that one that was out on the hills far away—did the Shepherd say, "O it's only one. I still have ninety and nine; we'll just let it go till some more convenient season"? As a tender shepherd careth for his sheep, he went after this one that had strayed away. It was far from home. Maybe it was sick and faint; probably a little footsore, and perhaps had been pricked by so many thorns as it went through bush and bramble that it had been fleeced a little here and there; maybe lost its identity; had not fed of late "in pastures green, by the living waters." Can you hear any of your flock bleating in pitiful tone, thou shepherd, "over which thou hast been made overseer"? There is yet room in Father's house. Let us have a feast, a time of reviving and refreshing from the Lord.

The cold, cold weather is against us, but we have a good hearing. We can not answer all calls. We are ever busy laboring for the one cause.

I hope our Bishop will receive enough to restore the Kirtland Temple to its former condition, that a blessing may come to all. Turn to our Church History, pages 46 and 47, volume 2. While that was the beginning, we can have a repetition of some things at least. Many are doing nobly for this restoration of the Temple. Hope it will be complete by General Conference.

There are many things necessary for the spread of this gospel. Our publishing department needs to be strengthened and enlarged. We need German literature very much. I wish some brother or sister who is blessed with this world's goods would assist in getting out our standard works in German.

Our work is spreading wherever God's servants are. Some places are slow, but steady and sure. I am not ashamed of the latter-day gospel. It is not of man, neither came it by the wisdom of man, but as a gift from God. Truly has the poet said:

"A man is thought a knave or fool,
Or bigot, plotting crime,
Who, for the advancement of his race,
Is wiser than his time.

"For him the hemlock shall distill,
For him the ax is bared,
For him the gibbet shall be built,
For him the stake prepared!

"Him shall the scorn and wrath of men
Pursue with deadly aim,
While envy, malice, hate and lies
Shall desecrate his name."

The wisdom of God is greater than the wisdom of man. The fate of the Palmyra Seer came in line with the saying of this poet. Onward is our aim. All hail to this restored gospel.

F. E. COHRT.

TARKIO, Missouri, December 4.

Editors Herald: After closing our meeting at Guilford we (Brother Haden and I) came to the western part of the district, stopping at Maitland where we secured the Christian church, and held a week's services. Owing to religious indifference, prejudice, and a "combine" against us by the religious leaders of the town, in a "revival" begun soon after we commenced our meetings, our attendance was very small, notwithstanding all our efforts in advertising, tracting, and inviting the people to come.

The main attraction at the "revival" was a lady preacher and of course they got they biggest crowd. We dislike to admit being outdone—and by a woman, but "an open confession is good," etc. However, we "died game," and concluded to move where we could find more who were willing to listen to the truth, and not spend our time unprofitably casting pearls before swine any longer in that place. There are a few there who must not be included with the "swine" and so our efforts were not entirely without good effects, and the few Saints seemed to be greatly benefited by our stay and labors there.

Bro. Robinson's family had the measles, so could not attend meetings. We were kindly cared for by Bro. Joseph Curtis and family, and "Grandma Black" and her husband, "Uncle Ike."

We closed our meeting on Wednesday evening, and attended a union Thanksgiving service the next day. We were not invited to take part in the services, nor recognized as ministers or otherwise by any except the Christian minister and another gentleman. These came and shook hands with us, expressing a friendly feeling. And this in a "union Thanksgiving" service where all the people are supposed to come and offer up thanks, and praise to God for blessings received! Surely the "man of sorrows" blushed. Perhaps 'tis better so, as worldly praise and adulation we are not seeking for ourselves; but our hearts are pained and grieved and filled with pity when we see people so blinded to the truth and their own interest.

We began meetings at a union church, three and a half miles from Bro. R. K. Ross, last Friday evening, the attendance being small, owing perhaps to the very busy time, but the interest on the part of those attending good. Sunday night a nice crowd was present, and we announced meetings to continue during the week. Bro. Haden is there "holding the fort," assisted by Brn. R. K. and William Ross. I expect good to be done.

On the 2d Bro. Ross kindly consented to bring me here to his sister's, Sr. Thomas Fowler. This is two miles east of Tarkio and twenty-two miles from Bro. Ross'. Next day Bro. Ross went east to see about getting a schoolhouse, while Mr. Fowler and myself went to Tarkio where we applied for the Christian church. The board will meet Sunday and let us know Monday. This usually means we will not get the church, but I hope this will be an exception to the rule. I had a good talk with their minister who seems to be a nice young man. I hope he is favorably impressed. Made plain to him the difference between us and the Utah Mormons, and that we were aggressively opposed to the heresies taught by that people.

Bro. Ross secured the schoolhouse and we have announced meetings over Sunday beginning to-night. We will know then about the church in town.

The people are very busy gathering corn, rushing to get done before it snows, and it will be hard to get a hearing for a while yet. Tarkio is a new place. Population about twenty-two hundred, beautifully situated on a gentle eastward slope just west of Tarkio creek, and surrounded by a fine, fertile country.

Very little if any missionary work has been done in this county, the last few years. I hope to make some permanent openings that will give the work a start. We are laboring and trying to be faithful to our mission, to merit the approbation and blessing of the Master.

Praying for the success of the work, and for the ultimate triumph of truth.

Your brother in the gospel,
JOSEPH C. VAUGHN.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Penn W. Martin, of Arago, Minnesota, wrote to Bishop Kelley, November 19: "That $25,000 list complete." These words caught my eye lately and I am thus reminded that I come in on the proposition for five dollars, which I inclose. I hope the entire amount is collectible."

Sr. Rillie Moore writes from Necedah, Wisconsin: "All are prospering in the Searles Prairie Branch. We have decided to build a church and are receiving donations from outsiders. The sisters are working with their society."

By letter from Bro. George S. Lincoln, San Francisco, California, November 29, we learn that Bro. J. W. Gilbert is assisting the choir of the branch and has greatly improved the song service. He is engaged also, in street preaching and is meeting with some success. Of the branch Bro. Lincoln writes: "Our branch is in a good spiritual condition. Good liberty is enjoyed in presenting the word, and there are always some strangers present at our services. There has been considerable sickness among the members, but there have been wonderful blessings given through the administrations. Never have we enjoyed so much of the Spirit in administering to the sick as during the last year. Tongues and prophecy have been given and the Spirit's presence has been strongly felt by all present. All is comparatively well with us at present. Bro. Terry preaches for us quite often, and we in turn exchange with him in Oakland. That branch in a good condition also. He keeps himself busy in the good cause."

Bro. J. C. Clapp has of late been compelled to quit his Arizona field and return to Los Angeles by reason of ill health. He writes: "I am very feeble and must soon lay off the armor, but I thank God I can say 'I have kept the faith,' and whether I have fought a good fight or not the Lord will settle that; I am willing to meet my record. O, yes that patron Saint of yours [Ebenezer Robinson]: The feather that I could put in his cap is that I never heard a man bear a stronger testimony than I heard him bear to the Reorganization. I sought his testimony when I first came east because I recollect him in Nauvoo when he was editor of the Times and Seasons, and when I came east I was young in the work and I sought counsel from the old veterans in the cause. E. Robinson told me of the great blessings he had received in the Church. How wonderfully the Lord blessed him in his efforts to print some of the books; in a most miraculous way was the money provided, and how the Lord showed him before the martyrdom that the Church would be broken up; that after a time of darkness he would call young Joseph to gather up the scattered ones, and the Lord showed just as soon as Joseph came forward that he was the right man in the right place. The Lord showed him also the spot where Lamoni now is. That was to be a stake of Zion, etc. I thought if those fellows, Neal & Company, had so much confidence in their witnesses, maybe they would take a little of this." We are glad to have Bro. Clapp's statement of the case concerning the Reorganization as he received it direct from Bro. Robinson. It is as a great many others of the Saints can doubtless testify.

Bro. Ed Rannie, now doing missionary work in Davenport, Iowa, recently wrote in a letter to Sr. Walker: "The sixteenth volume of Autumn Leaves is nearly completed and I am happy to say that my name was with the first year's subscribers and at present have fifteen volumes nicely bound and a bookcase made especially for them that will hold thirty-two volumes. The good it has done me and my family is not possible of conception. It is my wife's favorite reading and it is a source of great pleasure to reread the back numbers. It has made great advancement or improvement since the first number was issued. Long may it live to bless the old and young."

In a letter to Bishop Kelley, Sr. H. A. Button, Slateville, New York, wrote on November 30: "Inclosed you will find two dollars for the benefit of Graceland College. I rejoice that there is a prospect of her soon being free from the burden of debt and am desirous of adding my mite whenever I can. I have a son who is a student at Graceland, and I hope to see the day when her walls will be crowded with young men and women who seek her portals for instruction and counsel."

L. S. Moore wrote November 20 from Center, Texas: "We certainly want to keep the Church papers, HERALD and Ensign, coming. They are all the preachers we have. The true gospel was never sounded but once from the pulpit in this place and that was by Bro. Ellis Short not long ago, and he had time to preach but once. We are doing all we can to warn our neighbors by talking our doctrine and lending our books and papers. We realize some good will come from our efforts as several are interested, and believe if an elder could come here there would be two or three baptized. May it please God to open the way for an elder to come here. We will furnish a home for one or two elders as long as they can stay and do good. We are among the scattered Saints, having membership with no branch; but were once members of the Cove, Arkansas, Branch. Though isolated we are strong in the faith and desirous of doing all we can to advance the true gospel."

Bro. O. J. Hawn wrote December 1, from McGregor, Michigan: "I went home from Blaine, where I had been holding good meetings, to attend to Thanksgiving appointments. The Saints and friends met at my house at half past two in the afternoon for fellowship meeting and indeed it was a thanksgiving meeting for all present. The Spirit was there to comfort and bless, the Master speaking to us in prophecy and encouraging His children to be faithful. After the meeting the sisters prepared dinner of which sixty-seven partook and it made my heart rejoice! How thankful I was to have so many of God's children to meet with us on that day to return thanks to our Heavenly Father for his many blessings in life. One brother said to me after our meeting, 'I believe our branch is a hundred per cent stronger now than it was before meeting.' There are some splendid Saints, old and young, in the McGregor Branch."

Bro. A. M. Chase writes from Salt Lake City, Utah, under date of December 4: "We received a letter this morning from Elder H. N. Hansen, inclosing propositions for a discussion to take place at Richfield, Utah, commencing December 16. The propositions are affirming the claims of the two churches. Elders Swenson and Hansen will represent the Reorganization and Bishop A. G. Young and Elder I. J. Stewart the Utah contingent. By their request we will try to be present at the discussion. Through the courtesy of Bishop Randall, at Centerville, we occupied the church at that place the night of the 2d; our effort was upon the "Authority" and was quite well received. We expect to speak there the 11th as they have granted us the use of the house for that night. At present Sr. C. Walker of this place is quite sick with the prevailing "grippe," pray for her. Sr. Robinson will be greatly missed here. We think we discern encouraging signs of the times in this field in a more tolerant spirit and a desire to hear for one's self. May the Master give us grace to tell the story aright."

Conference Minutes.

Chatham.—Conference convened at Wallaceburg, Ontario, October 17, at 10 a. m. R. C. Evans was chosen to preside, assisted by A. Leverton, George Green, and D. Snoblen, district presiding officers; R. Coburn, secretary, assisted by Bro. Davis of Eastern Michigan. The minutes of last conference were read and approved. Branches reporting: Petrolea 54, Blenheim 47, Chatham 95, Zone 63, Wabash 41, Olive 50, Ridgetown 115, Cedar Springs 25, Lindsley 50, Longwood 41, Wallaceburg 58, Green Valley 36, Stevenson 45. Ministry reporting: A. Leverton, George Green, D. Snoblen, R. B. Howlett, S. Brown, J. W. Badder, S. G. St. John, D. W. Johnston, J. H. Tyrrell, R. Coburn, J. M. Baggerly, W. H. Taylor, and Phelan Shaw. Bishop's agent's report: Total receipts $998.13, paid out $386.07, balance on hand $612.06, consisting of cash $330.06 and tithing notes $282. District treasurer reported balance at last report $4.92, received since $30.02, paid out $26.33, balance on hand $8.61. The above reports were audited and found correct. President R. C. Evans reported for the Canadian Messenger, receipts $318.20, expenditures $189.90, balance on hand $128.30. Resolved, that a sufficient amount of the balance on hand be used for paying for the Messenger for the missionaries, also for a copy each to the HERALD and Ensign offices. The secretary was paid $1.50 for expenses. Resolved, that all branch reports be sent to the district secretary at least two weeks before each and every conference and that the secretary make a summary report of the branches to the body in session. A. Leverton was sustained as district president; George Green first vice-president, and D. Snoblen second vice-president; J. H. Tyrrell Bishop's agent; J. W. Badder district treasurer, and R. Coburn secretary. Resolved that instead of paying the expenses of a delegate to General Conference of 1904 a donation of $25 be made toward the repairing of the Kirtland Temple, the secretary to solicit the same from the branches. A. Leverton and George Green were appointed delegates to General Conference of 1904, they to have power to select other members of the district to act with them, and in case only one of the brethren named is present, he shall have the same authority as though both were present. Resolved that the secretary of the conference be authorized to write the managers of the different railroads and if possible secure convention rates for the next conference, also to have the same published in the HERALD and Canadian Messenger. Preaching on Saturday evening by J. H. Tyrrell; Sunday at 8 a. m. prayer and testimony and sacrament meeting. Three were ordained to the office of priest, two to the office of teacher, and one to the office of deacon. The ordination of H. Atkinson to the office of elder was left with Bro. S. Brown, and that of C. Jacklin to the office of deacon to S. H. Bacon and R. Coburn at Blenheim. Preaching by R. B. Howlett, A. Leverton, and R. C. Evans. The dedicatory prayer for the Wallaceburg church was offered by R. C. Evans. During conference $33.79 was collected and turned over to the Wallaceburg Saints for expenses in sustaining the conference. Adjourned to meet in Chatham on the second Saturday and Sunday in June, 1904.

Kentucky and Tennessee.—Conference convened at Foundry Hill Branch, November 14, J. R. McClain in the chair, J. J. Adair secretary pro tem. Branches reporting: Haleys Creek 65, Sedalia 136, Foundry Hill 59, Eagle Creek and High Hill not reporting. Elders reporting: J. R. McClain, C. L. Snow, S. H. Fields, S. Reed, J. H. Scott, and J. H. Adair; Priest E. P. Cook; Teacher McRoss. J. J. Adair elected to fill unexpired term of secretary, Secretary W. L. McClain having gone to Missouri. Adjourned to meet at Eagle Creek Branch at the call of district president. Preaching by C. L. Snow, J. R. McClain, S. H. Fields. Benediction by J. R. McClain.

Leeds.—Quarterly conference was held October 10 and 11, with the Burley Branch, J. W. Rushton presided. Priest J. W. Green, Manchester, was present and the conference accorded him voice and vote: Elder F. J. Pierce, missionary, was appointed secretary pro tem. Deacon E. Abbott was appointed conference deacon. The minutes of the previous conference were read and after a correction was made making the appointment of the assistant secretary to read "temporary" they were adopted. Apostle Rushton then gave a brief and suitable address in which he urged the Saints to observe the law of tithing in the present hour of need. The secretary read a communication from Patriarch James Baty who stated that he regretted his inability to accept the invitation to attend the conference which President Thomas Taylor sent him, but he hoped to visit Leeds in the near future. The following ministry reported: High Priest Thomas Taylor, district president; Elders: Tom Roberts, James Moir, W. H. Seekins, F. J. Pierce, W. R. Roberts, J. T. Girdham. A resignation from the district secretary, Priest S. H. Warren, was read, also a letter in connection therewith from Elder T. Roberts to Priest S. H. Warren. The resignation was accepted and a vote of thanks for past service was given him. Bro. W. R. Roberts was appointed district secretary. The district treasurer, Priest W. Rudd, had not prepared a report, not being aware that one would be required. He was requested to present one at the next conference. The chair authorized the district treasurer to supply money to the book agent, Priest J. T. Girdham, for the purchase of a district record book. The following auditing committee was appointed: T. Roberts for two years, J. T. Girdham for one year, both dating from January, 1904, but to include the audit for the period ending December 31, 1903. It was resolved that the resolution providing that conferences be held in the rooms of the Burley and Leeds Branches alternately be rescinded. A resolution was then passed that the Leeds District hold its conferences quarterly and that each conference decide by vote the place of its succeeding conference. Priest J. W. Green was invited and kindly assisted the chorister with his cornet during the Sunday session. Sunday services commenced at 10.30, Bro. F. J. Pierce presiding. Bro. Rushton preached on the "Gathering." The afternoon fellowship service, Bro. W. R. Roberts and J. Moir in charge, proved to be enjoyable and refreshing, the Spirit's gentle influence being felt to a marked degree. The evening service opened at 6.30 and the congregation filled the room, Bro. J. T. Girdham and Bro. J. W.

Green presiding. A solo was sung by Sr. Lizzie Bosomworth. Bro. Rushton preached, taking John 4: 24 as a text. After the sermon a report from Priest H. Harper was read and adopted. Resolutions were passed to sustain the local and general authorities of the Church; to give thanks to the chorister, organist and those assisting; and to the Burley Branch for the use of their room; and that the next conference be held at the Leeds Branch meeting-room. The conference then closed, benediction by Thomas Taylor, president.

Northern Wisconsin.—Convened at Porcupine, with Frankfort Branch, October 3, District President A. V. Closson presiding. In the absence of secretary, L. M. Longsdorf was chosen secretary pro tem. Branches reporting: Frankfort 88, gain 2; Evergreen 92, loss 1; Searles Prairie 27, gain 2; Fox River 25. Ministry reporting: High Priest A. V. Closson baptized 5; Elders: A. L. Whiteaker baptized 5; T. W. Chatburn baptized 4; S. E. Livingston, Lester Wildermuth, and William Hutchinson. Priests Albert Lacy, A. J. Fisher, M. O. Shedd, J. H. Thompson, and J. W. Hooker. Teachers L. L. Cook, William N. Livingston, Austin Johnson. Deacons Fred V. Dreyer, George Rose. Bishop's Agent A. V. Closson reported receipts $62.60, paid out $48.45, on hand $14.15. District treasurer reported receipts $10.45, paid out $9.70, on hand $1.65. Two-day meetings were appointed at Twin Lakes and Valley Junction, time to be set by district president. Motion prevailed that a committee of three be appointed to investigate case of Bro. Wood and report to next conference, if there are grounds for rehearing. Speakers were A. V. Closson, A. L. Whiteaker, and T. W. Chatburn. Adjourned to meet with Searles Prairie Branch at Necedah, time to be set by district president.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of South Dakota, Greeting: Having been appointed Bishop's agent of the above State except Gregory County and the Black Hills, will say that since my appointment I have been trying to get half-fare rates, but have failed; and as winter is here and it is too cold to go with team, I can not get far from home. But I want to visit all the Saints in my district as soon as the way opens up. In the meantime please remember our dear brethren who have left home and loved ones to face the cold and storms on our bleak prairies to tell the angel's message, that a people may be prepared for Christ's coming. They are trusting in God and his Saints to care for wife and little ones and I am sure God will do his part. Shall we neglect so sacred a trust when God says the work is intrusted to all? Do not wait until you can give a large amount, but if you have a small amount send it and I will receipt you for the same and in one year you will be surprised at the amount paid in. We have a privilege no people have enjoyed for many a cold and dreary century, of helping in a work of which God is the author and of which he gives evidence of his divine sanction by signs and wonders and diver's miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost. Did not your hearts ache when you read in the HERALD that our noble missionaries in Europe had to leave their fields of labor for the want of money? We have two in our part of the State. Let us make them feel that we are as earnest in the work as they, by doing all we can with our small amounts to feed and care for them and theirs, and may God bless us to this end.

W. W. WHITING.

BONESTEEL, South Dakota, November 25, 1903.

Release of Missionary.

For reasons given by them, and which are deemed by Elder H. O. Smith, missionary in charge, and the Presidency to be good and sufficient, Elders S. R. Hay, of Hearne, Texas, and H. J. Thurman, of Fairland, Indian Territory, are released from their appointments to the Southwestern Mission during the remainder of the conference year. The brethren will do what local labor conditions will permit in their respective localities.

A Boy's Reading.

The great treasure of English literature is the birthright of our boys and girls. So much of the store as each one can, by reading and understanding, make his own is freely his, and forms a large part of his intellectual capital for pleasure and profit throughout life. But much the possession of which will be most greatly to his pleasure and profit is beyond his reach after the "Shades of the prison-house begin to close Upon the growing boy."

Careful fathers give thought and sharp endeavor to equip their sons with that material capital which is supposed to ease their struggle in the business world; but too many fathers neglect to help their sons to gain that intellectual capital which saves their lives from mental poverty and from starved imagination.

Let us at the outset take an example: every boy of seventeen should have had an opportunity to read Robert Louis Stevenson's essay on "Gentlemen." The boy has been taught to read; the book is in his father's library, or at least he has access to the public library, but still he lacks something to complete the opportunity which is meant in the title of this article. The boy is entitled to a personal introduction to the essay, which will make him eager to know it. It is usually idle, not to say foolish, casually to recommend any healthy boy to read "an essay" on any subject, and especially one on "Gentlemen,"—a subject about which he probably supposes he has heard quite enough already. Moreover, this particular essay is hidden away in the "Thistle Edition" of "Familiar Studies of Men and Books," which, as a whole, has little or nothing else specially appropriate to the boy.

The boy's affinity for

"Schooners, islands, and maroons,
And buccaneers and buried gold," will probably have drawn him to acquaintance with "Treasure Island" without any particular introduction further than the verdict of some other small boy.

The first time that the boy comes to the study of the Civil War and its dramatic close at Appomattox Court-house, his heart will be warm with enthusiasm for Grant and with sympathy for Lee. Then is the time to tell the boy what his friend, the author of "Treasure Island," has said about the one sentence that Grant added with his own pen to the articles of capitulation before he signed them, and how in that one sentence, "All officers to retain their side arms," the "Silent Man" wrote himself down to all the world as a great gentleman, if not a fine one.

The chances are good that, under such circumstances, the boy will read the essay; but whether he reads it or not, he has had the opportunity, which is our point in question.—From "Some Things a Boy of Seventeen Should Have Had an Opportunity to Read," in Review of Reviews for December.

The North American Review closes the year with a number of notable excellence, that bears impressive testimony to the success with which the editor pursues his purpose of keeping it close to the most important interests of the time. Wayne MacVeagh, one of the counsel for the United States before the Hague Tribunal, writes on "The Value of the Venezuelan Arbitration to the Hague Tribunal." Goldwin Smith contributes the first part of a most interesting review of "Mr. Morley's Life of Gladstone." Demetrius C. Boulger offers a defense against the recent "Attack on the Congo Free State." W. L. Scruggs, the well-known authority on constitutional law, considers the relation between "Citizenship and Suffrage." The Reverend Doctor H. A. Stimson extracts from ex-President Dwight's "Memoirs of Yale Life and Men." "Light on Some Educational Problems." Colonel W. C. Church, editor of the Army and Navy Journal, traces a connection between "Increasing Desertion and the Abolition of the Army Canteen." Ernest Crosby indicates what, in his judgment, would have happened "If the South had been Allowed to Go." W. D. Howells writes, in his usual entertaining and instructive manner, of "The Personality of Hawthorne." P. T. McGrath suggests that there may be "A New Anglo-American Dispute" in the question whether Hudson Bay is or is not a closed sea. Sylvester Baxter criticises the injustice involved in the "Representative Inequality of Senators." "Defensor" replies with spirit to "Anglo-American's" recent "Indictment of the British Monarchy." A group of three articles deals with "The Revolution on the Isthmus" from three different points of view—Eusebio A. Morales, Minister of State in the Provisional Government, explaining the motives which influenced the Isthmian people in establishing "The Republic of Panama;" Marrion Wilcox describing the event in its historical relations as "Columbia's Last Vision of Eldorado;" and Paul Perez, a Columbian citizen, denouncing what he calls "The Treacherous Treaty" of 1846-48, as being responsible for the latest disaster of his country. Mr. Henry James's novel, "The Ambassadors," is concluded in this number.

A short illustrated article in the December Cosmopolitan shows what the poorest farmers can accomplish when driven to the last ditch. Home-made windmills constructed of box boards, barrel staves, scrap-iron and odds and ends of discarded threshing machines and farm implements, costing in cash about thirty cents, have been made in the prairie States to irrigate farms, pump water for thousands of cattle and sheep, shell corn and relieve the farmer of what used to be the hardest manual labor.

THE REJECTION OF THE CHURCH.

When was the Church disorganized? When that which was contrary and adverse to the revealed word and the rules given to the Church at its origin for its government was introduced into its formulated creed, or its well understood faith, the elements of disorganization came in with it.

This was well understood by the men who constituted the Twelve in the days of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. In the Times and Seasons for December 15, 1841, will be found an Epistle signed by Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Pratt, William Smith, Lyman Wight, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, George A. Smith, and Willard Richards. In this Epistle occurs the following:

The building of the Temple of the Lord, in the city Nauvoo, is occupying the first place in the exertions and prayers of many of the Saints at the present time, knowing as they do that, if this building is not completed speedily, "we shall be rejected as a church with our dead," for the Lord our God hath spoken it.

The words "we shall be rejected as a church with our dead," were italicized as above, showing that special attention was called to them. It closed in these words:

The elders everywhere, will instruct the brethren, both in public and private, in the principles and doctrine set forth in this Epistle, so that every individual of the Church may have a perfect understanding of his duty and privilege.

Joseph Smith wrote September 6, 1842, thus:

Let us therefore, as a Church and a people, and as Latter Day Saints, offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness; and let us present in his holy Temple when it is finished, a book containing the records of our dead, which shall be worthy of all acceptance.

Joseph Smith, editor of the Times and Seasons, in the number in which the letter is found wrote an editorial in which occurs the following:

The word of the Lord is, build my house; and until that command is fulfilled we stand responsible to the great Jehovah for the fulfillment of it; and if not done in due time, we may have to share the same fate that we have heretofore done in Missouri.

Hyrum Smith wrote to a member of the Church at Kirtland, Ohio:

"Thus saith the Lord," "there shall not be a General Assembly for a general conference assembled together until the house of the Lord shall be finished, and the Baptismal Font, and if we are not diligent the Church shall be rejected, and their dead also."—Times and Seasons, November 1, 1844.

Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and the Twelve, whose names are given above, knew that there would be a

It is gratifying to note that Lieutenant Peary has received a leave of absence which will allow him to carry out his cherished hope of another trip in search of the pole. Instead of relying upon sails as the chief part of motive power, the explorer will depend almost entirely upon steam, sails only being used as an auxiliary. Peary's plan is to make his base on Grant Land, and winter at Cape Columbia, or some part further west. Some of the Eskimos will transport his party across the hummocky ice that exists between the eighty-third and eighty-sixth degrees of latitude. The men who are to make the dash for the pole are not to engage in any of this toilsome work, but are to preserve their energies for the last stage, which will be three hundred miles long. The expedition will be small. In all probability it will not number more than twenty-five men.—Scientific American, September 19, 1903.

rejection of the Church if the Temple was not built as commanded. The Temple at Nauvoo was never finished.

The idea of a rejection of the Church did not originate with the Reorganized Church.

At the trial of Elder Sidney Rigdon, Nauvoo, September 8, 1844, Parley P. Pratt, then of the Twelve, said:

The great God said through Joseph: Build this Temple; I give you a sufficient time to build it, and if you do not build it by the appointed time, you shall be rejected as a people with your dead.

On the 8th of August, 1844, the question of who should succeed the Prophet Joseph Smith as president of the Church, came up for consideration. It was claimed by the leading men, Brigham Young among them, that the vacancy caused by the death of the Prophet and Patriarch would not again be filled but that the authority to carry on the work rested with the Twelve, as a quorum. The vote was taken on the question put in this form: "All in favor of supporting the Twelve in their calling, signify it by the uplifted hand." This motion prevailed. (Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 638.)

An Epistle signed by President Brigham Young as president of the quorum dated August 15, 1844, distinctly states the position:

Let no man presume for a moment that his [Joseph's] place will be filled by another; for remember, he stands in his own place, and always will; and the Twelve Apostles of this dispensation stand in their own place, and always will, both in time and in eternity, to minister, preside, and regulate the affairs of the whole Church.

And another in the same Epistle:

Brethren, be not alarmed; for if the Twelve should be taken away, still there are powers and offices in existence which will bear the kingdom of God triumphantly, victorious in all the world.

On September 2, 1844, a statement was made to the Church that "when any alteration shall be required, seasonable notice will be given."

ORGANIZATION BY BRIGHAM YOUNG.

On the 6th of August, 1847, the Twelve, comprising Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Pratt, Willard Richards, Wilford Woodruff, George A. Smith, and Amasa Lyman, were rebaptized in the valley of the Great Salt Lake, Brigham Young baptizing and confirming the rest, himself being baptized and confirmed by H. C. Kimball. On the evening of the 7th, succeeding, Heber C. Kimball baptized (rebaptized) fifty-five in the City Creek, and on Sunday, August 8, the "whole camp of Israel renewed their covenant by baptism;" "two hundred and eighty-eight" being "rebaptized" during the three days.

This became a rule requiring that all who came "over the rim of the basin" should be rebaptized. The "rim of the basin" was the mountain ranges encircling the valley of the Salt Lake. The only reason assigned for this, so far as known, was that the authorities required it.

On December 5 a feast and a council were held at a private house in Winter Quarters, near where Council Bluffs, Iowa, now is, at which Orson Hyde made and Wilford Woodruff seconded a motion that Brigham Young be president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which motion was carried. Brigham Young then nominated Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards as his counselors, and they were so appointed. On the next day John Smith was appointed Patriarch by the Twelve.

On December 24, 1847, nineteen days after the feast and council, one thousand of the then fleeing multitude met in a "log tabernacle," and chose Brigham Young president. This was reconfirmed the next year in October, at Salt Lake City, by a conference held there. This is when, and how, Brigham Young and his fellows organized the Utah Mormon Church.

NUMBER OF THE CHURCH IN 1844.

There were in Nauvoo and vicinity at the death of Joseph and Hyrum, an estimated number of twenty thousand; and in the United States and Europe an estimated membership of one hundred and fifty thousand. These, so far as the Times and Seasons and Millennial Star were taken and read, and so far as the elders disseminated the views concerning the Presidency and the position occupied by the Twelve, had been taught that no such organization would take place; or if it did, "seasonable notice" would be given.

SHORT AND IMPERFECT NOTICE.

All the notice that was given must have been what circulated from mouth to ear during the nineteen days referred to; and that could not have been very extensive. The council was held by special call; the conference in December was a special one; and when held, less than a twentieth of the number of the Church estimated to be at Nauvoo and vicinity, and less than one hundredth of the entire membership, as estimated at the death of Joseph, were present when that vote was taken. It was sprung upon the people without that previous preparation and notice that the Church was entitled to, under the circumstances. It was done, too, after the man so chosen had rebaptized his coassociates unto himself in the waters of Utah—a land afar from the place where the promised Temple was to be builded. It was presented at a time when no such extra official act was needed. Brigham Young, as President of the Twelve, was virtually the leader; and by the counsel of his quorum had done as he deemed best. No additional priesthood was conferred by the choice; nor could there be. That body of twelve men could have done all that the exigency demanded. By the taking of Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, and Willard Richards out of it, the Twelve was disorganized. By the defection of John E. Page, William Smith, and Lyman Wight, and removal of the three taken into the Presidency, that Twelve upon which Joseph had "rolled the work," (if such a thing had occurred,) had been vitiated, and the quorum disorganized.

A NEW LINE OF POLICY.

A new line of policy had been adopted by the man thus created president. Brigham had preached, and published to the Saints in the Times and Seasons, volume 6, page 955, that "Joseph in his lifetime did not receive everything connected with the doctrine of redemption, but he has left the key with those who understand how to obtain and teach to this great people all that is necessary for their salvation and exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our God;" and yet Joseph had received and taught "the fullness of the gospel," which Jesus, and Paul, and all the faithful servants of God declared to be "the power of God unto salvation."

A system of marriage which was to vitiate and destroy, was to be fostered and finally made a church tenet. To do this a recreation, a reorganization, must be had. It was for this end that a renewal of a covenant made years before was in that far away land enforced upon the people; and in the rebaptism and reconfirmation that followed were more of the seeds of that disorganization laid which culminated in the completed rejection of the "Church as a church."

REBAPTISM AND REORGANIZATION.

Following in the footsteps of this example, a wholesale rebaptism took place, a readjustment of quorums ensued.

BRIGHAM FAILED TO HAVE THE POLYGAMY REVELATION TESTED BY THE QUORUMS.

The quorum referred to by Orson Hyde, September 8, 1844, as the one "where revelations can be tested," was disbanded by President Young. The rule given by Joseph the Seer, by which whatever was alleged to be a revelation from God to the Church was to be tested, was ignored. The way was prepared for the final stroke of policy by which the usurpation of unwarranted power was made possible. It is not amiss to believe that all who were emigrated to Utah were rebaptized into this reformation.

A SECOND GENERAL REBAPTISM.

Again, in 1856 and 1857, after the introduction of the unauthorized revelation touching plural marriage, August 29, 1852, which Brigham Young had prepared the way for, a "Reformation" took place. A general rebaptizing was ordered, and the faithful and obedient were baptized into the spirit and power of that "New and Everlasting Covenant"—the Plural Marriage tenet.

JOSEPH THE SEER NEVER PRESENTED POLYGAMY TO THE CHURCH NOR THE QUORUMS.—POLYGAMY FIRST PUBLICLY INTRODUCED IN 1852.

In defense of this dogma it is asserted that Joseph Smith received the revelation and practiced its precepts. It is certain, however, that at no time in Joseph's life was this doctrine, called a revelation, submitted to the tribunal test required. No such claim for its validity was ever made. No publication of it as a Church tenet, or as a properly accredited revelation from God, was ever made during the time that Joseph lived. The practice of its precepts, if had, was in secret. Not until such secret practice could no longer be concealed did Brigham Young avow it. Then he came before a special conference, eight years after Joseph's death, and told the beggarly tale that it was a "copy," the original having been "burned by Emma Smith," Joseph's wife. Joseph's wife declared that she never burned it—never saw it.

EVIDENCES OF REJECTION.

The iniquity that destroyed the organization of the Church, perfecting its rejection, had done its work. Henceforth there can be no doubt that the Church to which the command to build the Temple at Nauvoo had come, had been rejected. The law of their organization was ignored. Instead of the Twelve remaining complete as a quorum as left by Joseph, three of them, by the new and strange policy of Brigham and his fellows, had been driven away from it and three others taken out of it in an unauthorized manner, and without a proper and seasonable notice, and those so taken had been put in the places of Joseph and Hyrum. The quorum next to the Twelve, of which the law provides there may be seven times seventy only, had swollen to one hundred and twenty-five times seventy, by improper ordinations. Twice had the people been required to be rebaptized, under the plea of a renewal of their covenant. The original bond, stated of God and recognized as the new and everlasting gospel from 1830 to 1844, had been thus weakened and derided. The Temple in which they were to receive the further endowment of the Spirit, "when finished," had not been completed.

What further evidence of a rejection can any one ask?

WHO ARE THE TRUE, GENUINE CHURCH?

It is a principle well known in civil law, and ought to be in ecclesiastical circles, that whenever a church is founded, its principles of faith formulated, its traditions fulminated from the forum, pulpit, and press, those declarations become the constitution of its corporate and legal existence. If in the history of such church, anything out of harmony with, or antagonistic to that constitution is introduced, or a change is sought to be made in the creed and government, which is opposed and resisted, or denied by any of the members of the Church, such portion of the membership as remains in adherence to the faith as it was before the change was attempted or made, is the Church. Nor does it make any difference in law how few this adhering portion may be, or how numerous the changing membership, the Church is that part of the members remaining true to the original tenets.

Saint Jerome anciently said: "Wherever the true faith is, there is the church."

In spiritual harmony with this principle of law is the statement of Joseph Smith the Seer, whom Utah teachers profess so much to revere, and whose words when possibly favorable to them they so delight to quote. He wrote from Liberty jail about March 20, 1839, as follows:

There are many called, but few chosen; and why are they not chosen? Because their hearts are set upon the things of the world, and are aspiring to the honors of men; they do not learn the lesson that the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven; and that the powers of heaven can not be controlled nor handled, only upon the principles of righteousness. That they may be conferred upon us it is true; but when we undertake to cover our sins, to gratify our pride, vain ambition, or to exercise dominion or compulsion over the souls of the children of men in any degree of unrighteousness; behold the heavens withdraw themselves, the Spirit of the Lord is grieved, then amen to the priesthood, or the authority of that man. Behold, ere he is aware, he is left to kick against the pricks; to persecute the Saints, and to fight against God.

And again:

We further caution our brethren against the impropriety of the organization of bands or companies, by Covenants, Oaths, Penalties, or Secrecies. . . . And let our covenants be that of "the everlasting covenant," as it is contained in the holy writ, and the things which God has revealed unto us. Pure friendship always becomes weakened the very moment you undertake to make it stronger, by Penal Oaths and Secrecy.—Times and Seasons, volume 1, number 9, pages 131, 132, 133.

This statement was made sixty-five years ago, and it seems almost prophetically, as if the Spirit guided the pen of the Seer: "But when we undertake to cover our sins to gratify our pride, vain ambition, or to exercise dominion or compulsion over the souls of the children of men in any degree of unrighteousness." This is the condition named by the Seer. In the same letter we see that he cautions the Saints not to enter into secret organizations, or to bind themselves by oaths to each other.

THE GOSPEL FAITH CHANGED BY BRIGHAM AND OTHERS.

The case is clearly made. There was an attempt to introduce other principles into the faith, quite distinct to any of those held at the organizing of the Church. What was sought to be incorporated into the creed was directly contrary to the faith formulated and taught from 1830 to 1844. The inevitable ensued; the man or men who essayed to do it, practiced deceitfully, and corruptly. There was an end to their priesthood. They no longer held the "powers of heaven." They were practicing unrighteously; not in a small degree, but in a great and vital departure from the faith. "He that repenteth and is baptized shall be saved." "This is my gospel." "Whatever is more or less than this cometh of evil," had been given as the divine will. These were the constitutional pillars of the law. To depart from them was to say, "Amen to the priesthood" of him who did so. If our Utah Mormon contemporaries have not departed from the original faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, there has not been an apostasy, or departure from the faith, since Christ's ascension.

If the "power of the priesthood was conferred for the last time," there were those upon whom it had been bestowed who would remain true to the faith. With them would this power of the priesthood remain. It could not be with those who were practicing secretly what was contrary to the publicly avowed faith of the Church. It must be with the few, or the many who remained in adherence to the faith as it existed when it was bestowed. This is the claim of the Reorganized Church. It takes the position that the power to act for the upbuilding of the Church having been conferred, there would always remain men of the faith who could perform every functional duty necessary for the perpetuation of the work. If the quorum of the First Presidency was broken by death or apostasy, the Twelve, if faithful, would remain as the leading quorum. If both the Presidency and the Twelve were destroyed by similar means, the Seventy remained. If all three of these leading quorums should conclude to abandon the faith, or be killed in the massacres of the faithful, the priesthood held alike by elder and apostle, would hold efficient authority to still carry on the work.

How happened it? The First Presidency was broken by death. The Twelve had the opportunity to carry the work on to its completion, as it had been begun. Did they? Let the history of the long fifty-nine years since elapsing tell.

A REVELATION MUST BE LAWFULLY EXAMINED AND TESTED.

What revelation touching the Church was presented to the Twelve, then to the Seventy, and thence to the whole body, under the administration of President Young?

The First Presidency must be organized by revelation. (See Doctrine and Covenants, revelation February 17, 1834.)

Through whom did the command to organize the First Presidency in 1847 come?

THE POLYGAMY REVELATION NEVER TESTED EVEN IN THE BRIGHAMITE CHURCH.

When and where was the revelation on plural marriage submitted for examination before its final foisting upon the people in 1852? The spirit of it had ruled in secret for years, so we are told by its devotees. The man who presented it stated that it had been in his care all the years from Joseph's death to that day.

NAUVOO TEMPLE NOT FINISHED.

The Temple was unfinished. The dread consequences of a failure to do that work in due time were known to President Young and his coworkers, and public statement of them had been made. The Lord had said: "I give you sufficient time in which to accomplish this work." If you do it you shall be blessed within its walls. If you do not do it, you shall be rejected as a church. The iniquity of unrighteousness which caused the "heavens to withdraw themselves" and "grieved the Spirit" was at work. Priesthood, the right to act in the name of Christ as quorums, was at an end. Whatever acts were done by them afterward must be weighed in the balances of individual righteousness and acceptability before God. The powers by which the gospel should be preached, souls won to Christ and salvation secured, had been conferred,—they could not be destroyed, except by personal unrighteousness and unlawful ministrations. Those persons upon whom the authority to act had been conferred who accepted the new departure, were left to "fight against God." On the other hand, those who had received this right to act and who refused to accept the new dogmas and rule, were still commissioned of Christ. His work must be completed in righteous administration of the gospel law as it had begun. Upon these, sooner or later, the lot of reorganizing the broken but faithful element into an acceptable whole was to fall.

It may be difficult to name any stated day and date on which the rejection of the Church "as a church with its dead" took place. So, no specific event may be fixed as the one which justified such rejection. It is certain, however, that somewhere between 1843, when the elements of mischief began their work, and the date on which the organization was accomplished under the rule of President Brigham Young, and the dogma and practice of polygamy fastened upon the body over which he held sway, God did reject the Church as an organized body, with the privilege to baptize for the dead taken from it. The crowning act in the list of deeds of unrighteousness, was the palming upon the people who consented to the desecration of their baptism into the original Church the so-called revelation on celestial marriage, the evil consequences of which had been already fastened upon them. This occurred in 1852.

IN NOVEMBER, 1851, THE SPIRIT OF GOD REVEALED THE COMING REORGANIZATION.

Eight months prior to the crowning act of forgetfulness of the original faith upon the part of those who had forfeited their priesthood, a number of those who had been true to the constitution of the Church met by direction of the Spirit and avowed their allegiance to that constitution, and in formal terms declared their opposition to the iniquity that had been secretly at work. These men held valid priesthood. It had been conferred upon them as individuals in the days of the Seer. No power on earth could divest them of it, unless they had become iniquitous or had denied the faith. This they had not done.

ELDERS INQUIRE FOR THE OLD PATH AND WALK THEREIN.

They had refused to accede to the new dogma, preferring the command of God, which said: "Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee, in my scriptures, for a law, to be my law, to govern my church." Those men had the right, under God's command, to reorganize the Church so sadly marred, and they set about doing so. The Spirit worked with them, and the end, though sure, is not yet.

SO-CALLED absent-mindedness may oftentimes arise from mental concentration. Indeed, the mind trained to concentrate itself upon one line of thought is likely to be found oblivious to an extent of things immediately transpiring. People sometimes called "absent-minded" by casual observers should not, therefore, feel discouraged. It is said of Professor Mommson, the late German historian and philosopher, once met one of his own children crying in the streets, and he stopped to comfort the weeping little one without observing that it was his child. His master-mind had probably been so concentrated in thought as to fail to take note of the individuality of the weeping tot.

DOWIE AGAIN IN CONTROL OF ZION CITY.

Doctor John Alexander Dowie, of Zion City, Illinois, whose financial affairs seem to have become entangled and whose creditors had proceeded against him in bankruptcy, has succeeded in compromising matters by making the following offer to the court:

"The payment of ten per cent of all debts in ninety days, of twenty-five per cent additional in six months, twenty-five per cent additional in nine months, and the remaining forty per cent in one year, obligations to bear six per cent interest."

The cost of the litigation so far is variously estimated, one attorney putting it at ten thousand dollars.

It is suggested that the governing reason why the creditors accepted the proposition agreed upon was this statement made by Mr. Dowie, as quoted by the Chicago Tribune for December 9:

"If you insist upon the receivers settling, then my bank depositors will appear as creditors and there will be one million dollars debts instead of four hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Take your choice, allow me to handle matters and settle as I deem best, or run the chances of getting a smaller proportion of your claims in settlement made by receivers."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The fight against Reed Smoot retaining his seat in the United States Senate seems to be growing in strength. It is quite generally admitted he is not a polygamist, yet the fight continues, probably for the very flimsy reason that he is a "Mormon." In taking their seats in the Senate, other men are not asked concerning their religion. Why should Reed Smoot's religion be thought to bar him, if he is not in such violation of law as would disqualify him as a senator? To oppose Senator Smoot simply because he is a "Mormon" smacks strongly of disregard of religious liberty. If he is to be ousted from the Senate it must be for legitimate reasons. Senator Smoot's colleague, Senator Kearns, is a Catholic and a monogamist. Why not urge objection against Mr. Kearns because he is a Catholic? The HERALD has before taken grounds on the "Smoot question," as may be seen by referring to pages 50, 169, 170, current volume.

According to the Chicago Tribune for December 9, the Reverend David Morgan, Methodist clergyman in St. Paul, Minnesota, at a discussion at the Hamline Six O'clock Club, maintained that ministers of the gospel are parasites, that religion and the church are luxuries, that teachers and professors are leeches, and that schools and universities are nonessentials. Hamline residents who heard Reverend Morgan in the discussion are wondering "what next."

Bro. L. E. Hills, of Marion, Iowa, appeared in the Marion Register of December 4, calling attention to the mistake made by a lecturer on Mormonism, in failing to state that the doctrine of polygamy is one introduced only after Brigham Young assumed the leadership of the Church. Bro. Hills also calls attention to the fact that the Reorganized Church has always waged a bitter fight against polygamy and other evil doctrines advocated by the Utah religionists.

Will the Deseret News kindly tell us the name of the "periodical published in the interest of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints" in which the Utah church, of which the News is the organ, was advised or "urged" to expunge from its Book of Doctrine and Covenants the so-called revelation on celestial marriage. Please give us name and date of issue, and oblige.

Mrs. Julia E. Work, of La Porte, Indiana, maintains a large orphanage where boys and girls are reared to maturity. Mrs. Work's experience has doubtless given her many practical ideas, and one such idea she has given expression to in the following words: "This country is in need of wives that know the difference between biscuits and Battenburg. Too many of our modern young women lack the knowledge of practical housekeeping." Believing thus Mrs. Work's ambition is to have her girls leave her institution thoroughly trained in culinary and domestic science.

A remarkable record in corn-husking is the leading topic among the farmers of Southwestern Iowa, and was made by Charles Renack near Shenandoah, Iowa. He husked two hundred and one bushels and sixteen pounds in ten hours,—hard to believe and possible only in the section of Iowa where the biggest corn in the world is raised. Judges watched the work and did the weighing. Who can beat this record?

Editor E. Peterson, of the Letter, Independence, Missouri, has been active in the effort to secure for his city the new Missouri Pacific Railway shops which that Company had decided once to build in east Kansas City, but on account of the recent flood has determined to put elsewhere. We are indebted to Zion's Ensign for the following from Mr. Peterson's pen: "Another good feature this town has, favorable to the car shops, is the class of labor we can furnish. It is a well-known fact that the Latter Day Saints who are coming in very rapidly furnish a class of labor which is above par. They will give the Company little trouble in strikes, labor unions, or hanging around saloons. They will come here by the hundreds and make permanent homes here as soon as employment is assured them. These facts will have their effect on the location of the shops at Elm Park."

Sr. May Gunsolley, wife of Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, the latter well known in the Church as a general officer in the Religio and Sunday-school organizations, and a member of the presidency of the Lamoni Stake, died at Lamoni on Saturday, December 12, at noon, after a long and severe illness. Sr. Gunsolley was a noble woman, loved and respected by those who knew her. Bro. Gunsolley has the sympathy of the community; and we feel the news of his loss will be sadly received by Religions and Sunday-school workers particularly.

Bro. John W. Wight, of the Twelve, missionary in charge of the Australian mission, reached home in Lamoni, Friday evening, December 11, well and hearty after his arduous service and the trying sea voyage. Bro. Wight is welcome to both his family and the community.

INTERESTING HISTORY.

During the month of April, 1903, I was permitted, in company with Elder W. W. Smith, to visit some of those places where the Saints settled after the cruel expulsion from Jackson County, Missouri: Far West, Haun's Mill and the ruin of the old jail in Liberty, Clay County, where Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Lyman Wight, Sidney Rigdon, Alexander McRay, and Caleb Baldwin were confined from December 1, 1838, to April 6, 1839. Being anxious to learn what evil things these men were guilty of, that led to the inhuman treatment they received, we visited the court-house and first called upon Honorable L. H. Hopkins, probate judge of Clay County. The following extracts from the History of Clay and Platte Counties, Missouri, which he loaned us, will prove interesting:

"In 1832 the Mormon's under their Prophet Joseph Smith came into Jackson, where the previous year large tracts of land had been entered and purchased for their benefit, and began to occupy and possess the land, with the intention, as they said, of remaining for 'all time.' But their years in that land were few and full of trouble. They were in constant collision with the Gentile neighbors, who frequently tied them up and whipped them with cowhides and hickory switches, derided their religion, boycotted them where they did not openly persecute them, and at last engaged in a deadly encounter with them, tarred and feathered their bishop, threw their printing-press into the river, and finally drove them from their homes and out of the county."—Page 132.

"On one occasion a delegation of eleven Jackson County citizens, led by Mayor Sam Owens and James Campbell, came over to Liberty to hold a council with the Gentile citizens and Mormons of Clay in regard to the lands from which the Mormons had been driven. The title to these lands was in the hand of the Mormons, but the Gentiles wished to extinguish it by purchase if it could be obtained at their—the Gentiles'—price. Accordingly they offered the Mormons an insignificant sum for their lands and farms, many of which were already in possession of certain citizens of Jackson, but this offer was refused. The Clay County people generally indorsed the refusal."—Page 133.

"True history, however, must record the fact that the deluded followers of the so-called prophet, Joseph Smith, in their first effort to organize and establish a religious socialistic community in Jackson County, Missouri, were unjustly and outrageously maltreated by the original settlers. That is seen in the tragic and pitiful scenes which occurred during the last part of their sojourn in this their promised inheritance, their Zion, and New Jerusalem. With scarcely one exception the settlers were aggressors so far as overt acts of hostility were concerned. During the last year of their stay the continued persecutions to which they were subjected, excited the sympathy of many outside of the county, especially the people of Clay County, who gave them an asylum and assistance for a year or two after their expulsion."—Page 133.

The foregoing was written by an old citizen of Independence and first published in the Kansas City Journal.

Speaking of the expulsion of the Saints from Far West the writer says:

"They—the Clay County men—saw the white flag pass back and forth from the Mormons, and saw the robber, Captain Bogard, of the Missourians, fire upon it."—Page 134.

Concerning the trial of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Caleb Baldwin, and others, he states:

"The entire proceedings in the cases were disgraceful in the extreme. There never was a handful of evidence that the accused were guilty of the crimes with which they were charged."—Page 135.

When I thought of the Saints driven from their homes under the exterminating order of Governor Lilburn W. Boggs; of the Prophet Joseph and his companions betrayed by the treachery of a trusted friend, sentenced to be shot by order of General Clark, who paraded them in different towns to the vulgar gaze of the rabble; confined in a loathsome dungeon over four months without being convicted of any crime; offered human flesh for food, and subjected to many indignities, my heart sickened. Could it be possible this was a part of America! The land whose Constitution guarantees religious freedom to all! I have always loved the flag of my country, but am ashamed of the acts of those mobbers who walked beneath its folds and used it as a cloak for their crimes.

The clerk of the circuit court placed before us all the court records covering the period of Joseph Smith's sojourn in Missouri. After careful examination we found one case where the Prophet had brought suit against one of his enemies. This man, taking advantage of the unlawful confinement of Mr. Smith, and the persecution of the Saints which drove them from the State, sought relief from the indictment. The following is the court entry:

"Wm. E. McLein.

"The defendent filed his motion to rule the plaintiff to give security for costs and also filed his plea of not guilty."—Page 279, book 2, Circuit Court, Clay County, Missouri, April 18, 1839.

"Joseph Smith, Jr.

vs.

"Wm. E. McLein.

"On motion of the defendant by his attorney it is ordered that the plaintiff file bond with sufficient security for cost in this case twenty days before the term of the next court."—Court Records, page 298.

"Joseph Smith, Jr.

vs.

"Wm. E. McLein.

"On motion of the defendant by his attorney his cause is dismissed at the plaintiff's costs, he having failed to file bond in this case as directed by an order of this court made at the last term thereof. August 21, 1839."—Ibid., page 315.

Pleading the cause of the injured, innocent prophet, Joseph Smith, I remain,

Respectfully,

ASTRONOMY.—PART 2.

SATURN AND HIS RINGS.

(The former one of these papers appeared in the HERALD for May 27, 1903.)

In a former astronomical article written for the HERALD, I alluded to the planet Jupiter, the giant of the solar system; to his immense volume, thirteen hundred and ninety times the volume of our earth and its satellite put together; its distance of over four hundred and nineteen millions of miles; its bands, and the wonderful attraction it exerts over comets, meteors, and even the other planets of the solar system; as witness the case of Lexell's "lost" comet of 1845, which got drawn in and so intermixed with Jupiter and Jupiter's satellites, that for six whole months it remained, as it were, in Jupiter's powerful gravitational grip or embrace, before it was able to pursue and complete its vast orbital journey to its perihelion round the sun. But so rapid, so extensive, and so vast is the onward march of scientific achievement, particularly in the vast regions of astronomical research and discovery, that no sooner is one great discovery announced to a wondering world, than it is followed up, nay, I had almost said swallowed up, in the maze of discovery upon discovery, each so sublime, so startling, and so wonderful, as to all but eclipse the marvel and magnificence of all preceding discoveries of the kind. So emphatically true is this fact, that long before my last essay upon Jupiter was robed and arrayed in its typographical garments, a discovery was made which so far eclipsed anything in my humble essay, that it threw the glaring light of a totally new and unexpected aspect around that planet, so to speak, and positively rendered the essay obsolete before it was actually in print; so vividly and so literally is the "hastening time" upon us, that many are (as Daniel predicted) "running to and fro," and knowledge is being "increased" at so marvelously rapid a rate that the minds of the most conservative and well-read workers in the vast fields of astronomical research and discovery, are fairly being staggered by the results of their own telescopic and photoscopic achievements, particularly of late.

The startling discovery regarding the planet Jupiter was on this wise: For a period of forty years, more or less, the minds not only of astronomical explorers, but also, to a large extent, of the general public as well, had been agitated and aroused by the question of the habitability of the other worlds or planets; and Latter Day Saints will recognize the extreme probability, if not the absolute certainty, of the other planets being inhabited, by a brief reference to Doctrine and Covenants 85:9 (page 217, new edition), where it is definitely enunciated "that" there is "no space in which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions." This distinctly postulates and presupposes the complete habitus and the actual habitability of all the planets—whether "greater or lesser;" for where would be the divine wisdom of giving to those distant kingdoms a law, were there no inhabitants to keep that law? Paragraph eleven in the same section, by the way, distinctly intimates that the "greater or lesser kingdoms" here adverted to, are in fact the Earth and all the planets.

But here interposed an insurmountable obstacle. It was fairly conceded by scholars of the highest attainments, that the four inferior (or interior) planets might well be inhabited by human beings, or beings analogous to the human species (that is, the four planets nearest to the Sun, namely, Mercury, Venus, Earth, and Mars); but how, it was asked, was it possible that human or any beings could live upon the four superior (or exterior) planets, viz., Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune? The latter ones, though vastly greater in size than the Earth, are so far removed into the distant regions of space that even Jupiter, the nearest of them, is distant from the Sun no less than four hundred and seventy-nine millions of miles; Saturn eight hundred eighty-six and three fourths millions; and Neptune no less than two trillion, seven hundred and sixty-nine billion miles; at even a tithe of which distance it was, of course, absolutely impossible for the Sun's rays to furnish any appreciable light or heat; and where, therefore, it was simply impossible to imagine that any human beings or indeed any beings at all to whom light and heat were necessities of their existence, could possibly subsist!

This was, of course, a difficulty of so serious a character as to threaten a prompt and summary abandonment of the entire problem of habitability, and to cause the all but universal adoption of the theory that habitability, so far as the four superior and grander planets were concerned, presented all the features of an abstract and absolute impossibility. There, for some years, the matter compulsorily stood in abeyance, until it occurred to that astute and profound mathematician, Sir Richard Proctor, R. A., to try whether the spectroscope, rather than the telescope, would not furnish him with a solution to this apparently insuperable problem and enable him to come to more distinct and definite understanding upon the important question whether life was really and entirely impossible upon those four great and distant orbs.

The spectroscope, that small but invaluable instrument which I fully described in my former essay as having the power to analyze the constituent parts of a beam of light received by a specially prepared telescope from any particular star, was the means by which the learned Professor Proctor made the greatest discovery ever achieved in late years; for upon analyzing the light received from Jupiter, he made the startling discovery that that giant planet, instead of being too cold for habitation, was in fact many degrees hotter than our own Earth!

In astronomy it is perhaps more strikingly exemplified than in any other field of investigation, that success leads to success; and discovery causes discovery. The same marvelous little instrument which informed Professor Proctor of this startling fact in relation to Jupiter, caused him to extend his scientific investigations in a similar direction, and upon the same telesco-spectroscope being turned to survey Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune, he at once became aware that these planets also, and especially Saturn, greatly exceeded in temperature not merely our own Earth, but Venus as well! Thus we are face to face with a mystery that might well astound not only the learned discoverer himself, but the entire astronomical world as well! Four giant planets, distant from the Sun as follows: Jupiter four hundred and eighty millions of miles, Saturn eight hundred and eighty-seven millions of miles, Uranus one billion, seven hundred and seventy-two millions of miles, and Neptune two billion, seven hundred and seventy millions of miles from the Sun; yet every one of them greatly hotter than our own Earth, and Jupiter closely approximating the Sun himself in heat and physical radio-activity.

When it is considered that ice and snow-caps are plainly visible upon our next-door neighbor, Mars, but little more than one hundred and twenty-three millions of miles from the Sun, it is perfectly obvious that the intense heat of Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune can not have our Sun in the firmament of heaven as its source. Closer and more exact scientific investigation reveals the cause of this heat. Doctor Proctor says, in his work entitled "Other Worlds than Ours," that certainly Jupiter and Saturn, and probably also Uranus and Neptune, are not earths at all, but miniature suns with numerous satellites revolving perpetually around them! Thus the serious objection against the habitability of these planets on the score of the supposed intense coldness arising from their great distance from the central luminary, is at once and effectually removed from the arena of discussion and objection; for it is perfectly obvious that all these satellites basking in the light and heat of Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, or Neptune, may well be the abode of life similar to that which seems so plentiful and abundant upon our own Earth!

Thus we have, in the sublime word to the prophet, Joseph Smith, "greater kingdoms and lesser kingdoms;" that is to say, greater suns and lesser suns, greater earths and lesser earths, yet all and each comprised within the limits of the solar system.

Very few persons actually form an adequate idea of the real extent of the solar system, and it may assist my readers a little if I just state that Saturn's orbit is so vast that it takes twenty-nine years, eleven months, and sixteen days to complete one revolution around the Sun. Uranus takes eighty-four years, one month, and twenty-one days, and Neptune one hundred and sixty-four years, two months, and eleven days, while a cannon-ball, going at its usual speed, would be five hundred years in crossing the orbit of Neptune from one side to the other. Our solar system may fitly and accurately be regarded as an island in the midst of the fathomless inter-stellar space. The dimensions of the solar system, as the learned Professor Simon Newcomb says, are "vast compared with any terrestrial standard." A cannon-ball, as I before remarked, going incessantly at its usual speed, would be five hundred years in crossing the orbit of Neptune from side to side. But vast as these dimensions appear, they sink into positive insignificance when compared with the distances of the "fixed" stars, so called.

Outside of the solar system are spaces which, so far as we know, are absolutely void, save here and there a comet or a meteor, until we look far outside of that region which a cannon-shot would take a million years to cross. The very nearest star is thousands of times farther away than the most distant planet; yet our solar island in the midst of an infinity of space, is, in reality, a very large island indeed.

Thus far I have been but in a manner introducing my subject; yet the introduction was necessary, too. So I now invite my readers to a brief study of that strange yet familiar, unknown yet well-known, member of our solar system, the planet Saturn, with some account of the mysterious and wonderful rings by which he is surrounded.

Time was in the medieval days of ignorance and superstition known as the "dark ages," when this planet was regarded as exercising a malevolent and baleful influence upon the lives of those unfortunate enough to be born "under the planet" (whatever that may mean); but the gradual diffusion of light and education, and especially the light of the everlasting gospel, has, I trust, long ago dissipated any such absurd ideas as this or any other dogma of astrology. The true science of astronomy, as opposed to the fallacies of any such false science, so-called, as astrology (see 1 Timothy 6:20), utterly refuses to believe that a star or planet can by any possibility whatever exert an influence either for good or evil; or make one atom or iota of difference between one human inhabitant of this globe and another, no matter where or when born; for to suppose one person's destiny "ruled" by a planet, for either good or evil, is to rob the "Eternal Ruler of all things" of the chief attribute of his moral nature and character, viz., his abstract and absolute impartiality towards every individual among the countless thousands of human creatures of his hand; and his eternal will and purpose is that not a sinner should die among them, but that all should "come to repentance." (2 Peter 3:9.) To suppose, therefore, that God permits or causes any one of the planets to exercise the slightest interference with the destiny of any of his creatures, thus robbing them of their inalienable birthright of freedom and liberty to serve him and to enjoy eternal happiness, is little short of a libel upon his creative power and wisdom and righteousness.

Saturn is, of course, clearly visible to the naked eye from the Northern Hemisphere, where he shines with a pale bluish light. He is not particularly conspicuous by reason of the transcendent glories of Jupiter, Mars, and Venus among the planets, though both Mars and Venus are immeasurably smaller, though much nearer to us; and by Sirius, Rigel, Canopus, Olgol, and many others among the stars.

His rings too, are wholly invisible to the unaided eye-sight; but, seen through a small telescope of about two feet and six inches in length, and three and one half inches aperture (or object glass), his rings are to be seen quite plainly. Viewed through a twelve-foot reflecting telescope, he is a much grander and more conspicuous figure, and his rings give him a very impressive and beautiful appearance. But, even through the newest, largest, and best equipped refracting telescopes in our finest observatories, though his appearance is much superior to that of the other members of the solar system save Jupiter, only the faintest idea can be conveyed of Saturn's real magnitude and dimensions.

We will, therefore, with your permission, undertake an imaginary journey through space to this giant of the solar system; and to do so we will make a rather extensive draft upon our imaginative faculties of supposing that the great French aeronaut, M. Santos Dumont, had accomplished his dream of years and had constructed an airship or dirigible balloon; i. e., a balloon that can be steered in any direction, and against any cross current of winds or other atmospheric commotions.

We will farther tax our imagination to the extent of conceding that Dumont's newly equipped airship is replete with every newly invented convenience; and can assume and maintain a speed of one hundred miles per hour under the propulsion of the most powerful and complete electric generators, engines and steering-gear; the latter being perfect enough and powerful enough to preserve the airship traveling undeviatingly in any given direction, undeterred and undeflected by the highest and wildest crosswinds or gales we may have to encounter upon our long, long journey.

We will further suppose that we have so far prevailed upon the well-known courtesy of M. Santos Dumont, as not only to place this valuable and well equipped balloon at the disposal of the HERALD readers, or at least as many of them as care to embark upon the enterprise, but also that the intrepid and experienced aeronaut himself has kindly consented to make one of the party, and to control and direct this vast and swiftly flying ship to within two hundred and fifty thousand miles of the planet Saturn, to enable us to observe his vast dimensions. We start, then, whether at New York or Chicago or Washington or Lamoni is immaterial, at the initial velocity of one hundred miles per hour, double the speed of an express train, a speed indeed, which would carry any train completely round the earth in ten days, eight hours, and twenty-six minutes.

Probably the most sanguine and enterprising of the young people comprising our fellow voyagers in the dirigible balloon, would imagine that sixty or seventy days, or three months at most, would suffice for our journey to within two hundred and fifty thousand miles of the planet Saturn; instead of which, careful calculation reveals the astounding fact that such a journey, even continuing the high rate of speed of one hundred miles per hour, day and night, would consume no less than ten hundred and thirteen years, eight months, eleven days, and seventeen hours for its accomplishment, and that even when we had reached Saturn himself, we should still be more than one billion, eight hundred and eighty-three millions of miles short of the known confines of the solar system, at the orbit of the planet Neptune, a vast distance which would involve another period of two thousand and forty-one years, seven months, two days, and nine hours for its accomplishment, supposing that our airship could survive the strain and maintain its initial velocity of one hundred miles per hour, day and night incessantly, which is, of course, a purely imaginary supposition. I have merely figured out the idea mathematically, to show the utter impossibility of reaching Saturn by any means whatever known to human foresight, human power, or human intelligence, not to speak of reaching the furthestmost bounds of the solar system.

Where infinite wisdom sets bounds and limitations to human enterprise, it is purely a "non possumus;" for God hath said, "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further."—Job 38: 11.

Saturn's distance is in fact so great that it is nearly twice as much as the entire distance that separates Jupiter from the Sun. If the whole Earth's orbit around the Sun, measuring close upon two hundred millions of miles, were filled by a sun, that sun would appear to an inhabitant of Saturn, only about twenty-four times larger than he appears to us. A cannon-ball, flying five hundred miles per hour, could not bridge this vast distance to Saturn under two hundred years; while a railway train, traveling at fifty miles an hour day and night, would require no less than two thousand years.

If no human contrivance or conveyance ever made or even dreamed of by finite imagination, could convey us to Saturn, there are celestial objects, however, which not only reach his surface, but which fly with incredible velocity past and beyond him. I allude to those wonderful and little understood comets, which from time to time make their way to our solar system from distant spaces, far, far beyond the ken of mortal man.

Imagining ourselves to be able to join with and accompany one of these cometary messengers in its swift and fiery flight, far, far swifter than airship or railway train, or even than the cannon-ball at five hundred miles per hour, let us imagine ourselves able to return with the great comet of 1883 after its next perihelion passage around the Sun, and that we are by some wonderful means enabled to embark with him when he reaches our Earth on his vast returning journey away beyond even the outermost of all the planets comprising the solar system. Even now, we shall find that our journey to Saturn is very far from being an instantaneous one, or even a matter of but a few hours or days. The great comet of 1883, at its perihelion passage around the Sun, was moving at the almost inconceivable velocity of three million miles per day, one hundred and twenty-five thousand miles per hour, two thousand and eighty-three miles a minute, or thirty-four and forty-three sixtieths miles per second of time.

A comet, however, does not continue its outward journey at quite so high a rate of speed as when just passing around the Sun; even if it did, we should find that eight months and twenty-two days would be consumed before we would arrive within half a million miles of the planet Saturn. Taking, therefore, the average speed of the comet of 1883 at two and a half millions of miles per day, instead of the maximum of three millions; i. e., one hundred and four thousand one hundred and sixty-six miles per hour, seventeen hundred and thirty-six miles per minute, or twenty-eight and fifty-six sixtieths miles per second, we should not reach the neighborhood of Saturn under eleven months, twenty days, and sixteen and one half hours. Thus even at the unheard of speed of two million five hundred thousand miles per day, we have consumed almost an entire year, before we arrive within five hundred thousand miles of Saturn's outer surface. But when there who shall be able to picture the one thousandth part of the glorious scene unfolded to our enraptured view?

Instead of a comparatively pale star, with a small ring surrounding its greater diameter, as it appeared from the Earth, what do we now behold? A vast and wondrous orb, of exceeding power and brilliancy, whose semidiameter is thirty-nine thousand five hundred and eighty miles; and whose diameter, therefore, is seventy-nine thousand, one hundred and sixty miles, while its circumference embraces the enormous total of two hundred and forty-nine thousand three hundred and fifty-four miles! Compare that with the diameter of the Earth on which we dwell, viz., eight thousand four hundred and sixty-five miles, and whose circumference is but twenty-four thousand nine hundred and twenty-three miles, and the least astronomically disposed of my readers can form some idea of the vast disparity in size between our little Earth and Saturn's vast proportions.

We now turn our attention to those magnificent rings around Saturn which, from the earth's surface, appeared, even with a good telescope, to be from two and one half to three inches in extent, with a small space, comparable to a pin's point, between the inner and the outer rings. We now see that the rings subtend an angle of more than one hundred and sixty degrees in the firmament and shine with a brilliancy which exceedingly few people would be disposed to credit or believe, while the "pin's point" between the two rings has now widened to a distance of no less than seventeen thousand one hundred and seventy-six miles.

When we gaze upon the awe-inspiring grandeur of the scene presented by this magnificent planet and his rings, we are not at all surprised on being informed that Saturn is eight hundred and forty-seven times the size and volume of our Earth, and that the semidiameter of his outer ring is eighty-eight thousand two hundred and nine miles, and its diameter one hundred and seventy-six thousand four hundred and eighteen miles, while the circumference of the outer ring comprises no less an extent of orbit than five hundred and fifty-five thousand seven hundred and seventeen miles. The sublimity and grandeur of the scene before us is farther enhanced by the presence of eight satellites, or moons, as they are called, which circle at greater or lesser distances from Saturn, in just the same way that the eight planets revolve around the Sun, as the great central luminary, the guard, guide, and guardian, of them all.

Taking into consideration Saturn's intense heat and relatively small specific gravity (but sixty-nine times the weight of our earth, though nearly eight hundred and fifty times its size), it would doubtless be more scientifically correct to describe these satellites as miniature earths rather than moons; for they receive greatly more light from Saturn than they can possibly reflect upon him, as has been abundantly demonstrated by the leading astronomers of the world. Some of these bodies are at comparatively small distances from Saturn; but the outer three range to great spans of from seven hundred and seventy-three thousand miles to two million two hundred and fifty-two thousand miles distance, that is to say, from four to nearly ten times the distance that our own Moon is from the Earth, is the most distant satellite, Iapetus, being just nine and two thousand and fifty-one ten thousandths or nine and thirty-four sixtieths the distance from Saturn that the moon is from us, and yet it is plainly visible even in a small telescope.

This demonstrates to us that Saturn's satellites, or at least some of them, are very far from being the diminutive objects they appear to us, situated at the enormous distance of eight hundred and eighty-seven million miles. Imagine our moon, for instance, to be ten times the distance it is from the Earth, and yet to display an apparent spherical diameter equal to or nearly equal to what it now displays. It would need to be a globe of very large proportions, indeed, to appear even half its present size at that distance; but what if it were placed where Saturn's satellites are? Suppose a globe of the size of one hundred thousand, nay, even a million moons placed at the distance of one of Saturn's satellites from our Earth, and it would be barely visible if not absolutely invisible to the naked eye, and but doubtfully prominent even in a very good telescope. Yet Saturn's satellite, Titan, was plainly visible even in the crude and imperfect telescope of the Astronomer Huggens, in the year 1650, when it was first discovered by him.

I now subjoin, for the benefit of those among your readers who are further advanced in the sublime science of astronomy, a table of the elements of Saturn's satellites:

TABLE OF ELEMENTS OF SATURN'S SATELLITES.

Name and Roman Numerals.	Sidereal Revolution.			Distance in Radii of Saturn.
	Days.	Hours.	Min.
II. Mimas		22	34	3.360
III. Enceladus	1	8	53	4.312
IV. Tethys	1	21	18	5.339
V. Dione	2	17	41	6.839
VI. Rhea	4	12	25	9.552
I. Titan*	15	22	41	22.145
VII. Hyperion†	21	7	7	28.000
VIII. Iapetus	79	7	53	64.359

* Titan is numbered I because the largest and first discovered.

† This satellite, Hyperion, exhibits remarkable peculiarities in its perturbation by Titan, resulting in a complete revolution in its pericenter occurring in less than twenty years and in a curious libration or balancing between the two bodies. These perturbations form a most curious and interesting chapter in the wonders of celestial mechanism, which has so far defied the efforts of the ablest and best mathematicians of the world to work out to complete and satisfactory solution.

It is also most remarkable and worthy of notice, that Saturn and his eight satellites seem to present a wonderfully accurate model (upon a smaller scale, of course) of the Sun and his eight satellites or planets, and that just as in his case the five smaller planets, Mercury, Venus, the Earth, Mars, and the planetoids, are nearest to him; while the three greatest planets, Jupiter, Saturn, and Neptune, are the farthest away; just so is it in the case of Saturn's satellites, the greatest of which, both in size and distance, i. e., Titan, will beautifully correspond, equally both in size and distance with the Sun's giant satellite Jupiter, while Hyperion and Iapetus will represent Saturn and Neptune.

Just one more thought upon this wonderful Saturnian system and we must bring our imaginary visit to this mighty orb to a conclusion, for I have already far exceeded the limits I proposed to myself at our first starting out upon what has, I hope, proved to my readers a pleasing and interesting voyage of discovery. My concluding thought is this: Astronomers and wise men of various times and nations have cast about in their minds for some hypothesis or conjecture which would account for the present appearance and even the origin of the Sun and his accompanying earths or planets, deeming the Mosaic account of their creation altogether too weak and unscientific to engross serious attention. So a great thinker propounded the idea that in the ages of the far, far distant past, the Sun, by a periodic revolution much swifter than he now enjoys, threw or cast off the various planets in the order and symmetry in which we now find them. This theory he said would also account for the fact that they all revolve upon their own axes and traverse their orbits in the same direction in which the Sun himself does.

All this and more looked remarkably well upon paper, and not a few persons promptly accepted this hypothesis as a complete solution of all doubts and uncertainty upon this vast subject. However, their dreams were destined to receive a most disconcerting shock when it was discovered beyond dispute that not only the satellites of Saturn, but also those of Uranus and Neptune, every one of them, revolve with a retrograde motion; that is, from west to east, instead of like all other planets and moons from east to west. Here, then, was proof positive that the planets could not have been "thrown off" by the Sun in the manner thus imagined, for it is impossible and contrary to all the known laws of mathematics and mechanics for a body thrown off from a greater revolving body to revolve in the opposite direction to its primary. Thus passed away their beautiful vision.

Let us now suppose that, our original idea safely and completely carried out, we are enabled to rejoin Donati's comet on his speedy way back to our own earth, toward which he is speeding at the rate of two million miles per day; thus landing us home after the lapse of one year, two months, and twenty-seven days; and now I bid all my readers a kind farewell.

Selected Articles.

UNIVERSITIES IN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

Our English contemporary, Nature, in a recent article, makes a statistical comparison of the provision for university education in Great Britain and the United States, in which some truly remarkable results are shown. We were well aware before reading this article that in the wealth of their endowment, in the completeness of their equipment, in the numbers and qualifications of their professorial staff, and in the total enrollment of students, our universities were well ahead of those of the older country; but we were not prepared for such remarkable disparity as is shown in the article referred to. It seems that in the United Kingdom, with a population of forty-one million, there are twenty-five thousand five hundred university or university college students, or say five to each ten thousand inhabitants, while in the United States, with seventy-six million inhabitants, there are ninety-seven thousand and one hundred students, or twelve and seventy-six one hundredths for each ten thousand inhabitants. After commenting on the important bearing which these facts must have upon the struggle for industrial supremacy, our contemporary proceeds to point out that the amount donated by private individuals for higher education in the period from 1871 to 1901 was eight times greater in the United States than that given for similar purposes in Great Britain; while, to say nothing of the income from state land grants, the amount provided by the state for higher education in the United States is six times as much as the government grants for the same purpose in Great Britain. In the older country there are thirteen universities and twenty university colleges, whereas in the United States there are one hundred and seventy colleges with an endowment of over one hundred thousand dollars, and forty-nine of these have endowments of over five hundred thousand dollars, while three of them have an endowment of over ten million dollars. Even more significant is the fact that the value of the endowments of the institutions of higher education in the state of New York alone exceeds the total value of endowments for education raised during thirty years in the whole of Great Britain; while the same thing may practically be said of the states of Massachusetts and California. Perhaps the most striking comparison is that from which we learn that the total number of professors and instructors in universities and colleges, included in the list of the United States Commission of Education, is seventeen thousand, whereas the number of day students in the university and university colleges of Great Britain is only about twenty thousand and five hundred, so that there are almost as many university teachers in the United States as there are university students in Great Britain.

Of the many institutions of our country of which we are justly proud, there is none, surely, more splendid than our system of public school and university education. Even in Germany, of whose educational advantages we have lately heard so much, there are only seven and eighty-seven one hundredths university students to each ten thousand inhabitants, as compared with twelve and seventy-six one hundredths in the United States.—Scientific American, July 4, 1903.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Grandma's House Is Stilled.

Grandma's house is stilled;
Though birds are singing in branches high,
Roger whistling in fields close by,
Mary irons, noisily working away,
And a horse outside, this summer day,
Is stamping flies.

Yet grandma's house is stilled.
'Tis not because there is no sound;
'Tis not because there's no one 'round;
But loving hearts are wont to say
That all their joys have flown away
When one is gone.

Grandma's house is stilled.
Two little children that were so gay,
Prattling, singing, and laughing at play,
Now are gone; one to dreamland town,
The other went merrily toddling down
The lane toward home.

Grandma's house is stilled.
Dear little pearls from love's great deep—
No wonder we miss them when they sleep,
Thinking the sun has hid his face,
Making of earth a desolate place
Without a flower!

SMILAX.

Dear Mothers: I have been much interested in reading the good instructions on the training of children, but my mind goes on to the time when our sweet little girls have grown to womanhood and begin to think of leaving mother's protecting care to be mistresses of their own homes. Then O, what anxiety fills a mother's heart as to whom her darling's future is to be intrusted! No wonder parents so often oppose a daughter's choice when they can see his imperfections, and desire the very best future that this life holds for her on whom they have lavished so much love and care. And they have need to be anxious, for there are too many broken hearts and wrecked homes caused by mismatched marriages.

But how to oppose with judgment, so as to be effectual, is a problem a great many parents have not solved. And in spite of careful training and selection of companions, the choicest girls often take up with undesirable suitors. Then judicious intervention of parents might save her a lifetime of misery. On the other hand, parents are often too ambitious for wealth or social position and overlook the true manhood of the, to them, unwelcome suitor for their daughter's hand. But O, how much sadness, bitterness, and heartaches are often caused by impulsive, harsh, or injudicious opposition!

I wonder if any mother, or daughter, could learn a lesson from my own experience? If they would, then it would be wrong for me to keep silence, for my mission here is to do all the good I can in every way I can, trusting God for results from my weak efforts.

I was one of a large family. We were poor in this world's goods, but rich in health and love for one another. I had very good, high-principled parents who did the very best by their children that was in their power. I was taught to obey and did so gladly in everything until they began to oppose my choice of company. The first objection they made was that I was too young and the first young man who called on me they treated quite coolly, father even making some unkind remarks. I yielded to their wishes after a time through a sense of duty, but what shame and mortification I felt, that a friend, a quiet, respectable man, too, whom I had consented to receive at my home should be mistreated by my parents, who had always been so hospitable before and made every one welcome. I felt insulted. I believe that was their first mistake. Had they treated him kindly and asked me not to allow his attentions I would readily have yielded to their request, as at that time I never thought of opposing them.

I made the next mistake. Instead of quietly telling the young man that I did not feel at liberty to entertain him, I thought in my youthful ignorance (I was but sixteen) that I must by kindness make up for their lack of it, and so continued for a time to receive his attentions whenever we happened to meet, thereby hardening my conscience against filial duty and respectful yielding to parental wishes.

After dismissing this man, I waited until I was old enough so that age would no longer be urged as a reason, but it was something else then. They opposed every one whom I fancied, praising others whom I disliked, and I don't know to-day whether they really liked those they praised, or intended this little diplomacy to turn me from some one else, but I thought the latter. Anyway the effect was that I felt we never could agree, so I might just as well marry to suit myself, for I wouldn't marry without love, and I couldn't love those they praised.

And now comes the last suitor. My parents thought pretty well of him until he began to notice me. I knew he was respectable, as were also his people. I never chose any other kind of company. His worst faults were youth and poverty, but he was a willing worker and used good judgment and of course he would grow older, so I had a hope that he would overcome both faults in time, and he has.

At first my parents said nothing which gave me a hope that they didn't object to him, but when his attentions were continued, father began to oppose in a mild way, and mother seemed to think it was only neighborly for us to attend places of entertainment together. And while affairs were this way I had seen quite a bit in this young man to admire. His kindness and companionship, and finally his love for me, won me and I promised to be his wife, never dreaming but what my parents would refrain from further opposition when they knew we were pledged to each other.

I intended to tell them at once, but before I had an opportunity to do so, they expressed such strong sentiments in regard to our further association that I thought I better wait awhile, believing they would think better of him by and by. If they had opposed before friendship ripened into love I would probably have yielded to their wishes as I had in times past. But now it was hard to break my pledge and harder still to give in and feel that I was conquered, for the opposition had taken the form of a sort of warfare in which I was the "rebel" and the homefolk all arrayed against me.

Father's opposition was stern but quiet. And mother, my kind, loving mother, my confidante and hitherto dearest friend, was now transformed into my enemy, seemingly, though of course I know it was for love of me and ambition for me to do well. In her impulsiveness she was harsh, she ridiculed, and accused me of being ungrateful. She mistreated my affianced, and said so many unkind things that I felt like an outcast in my own home. I felt that home could never again be to me what it had been. So it was easier to go on than to turn back. To give up one who I felt sure loved me, and to stay at home where I was looked on as an ungrateful, disobedient, and headstrong girl, was a task too great for me. So I went ahead and married my choice, without secrecy or running away, but without my parents' consent.

But O, the heartache and loneliness! the longing for the love I had forfeited! I got as good a husband as heart could wish; but even time, the great healer, has not taken the edge off the longing for the place I once held in their esteem, although for years they have treated myself and family as though all were forgiven and forgotten. I believe it has all been forgiven, and I don't want to forget my part until my own girls are married. The thought of what my parents suffered only adds to my remorse. Only think what my suffering might have been had I got a husband who was unkind or immoral. O, may I but have wisdom not to "provoke my children to wrath!" May I deal with them kindly; for if kindness won't win them there is small show for harshness to do so. Mothers, if your girls do give up to your entreaties, don't say, "I'm glad you have come to your senses at last." There are mothers in this world kind enough to say, "Dear child, I know it was a trial for you, but I'm sure you will see the wisdom sometime."

I must now try to live so that my life may be a blessing to those around me, never letting them know that there is a secret sorrow at my heart. May God lead the daily steps of A SISTER.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

WITH "bag and baggage" the General Superintendent set out on the afternoon of Thanksgiving day for the "sunny South," there to bend his efforts in Sunday-school lines for a few weeks. And after riding on trains and waiting at depots for more than two days, we at length landed at a little town they call McKenzie, in Southern Alabama. We were met there by Bro. L. G. Sellers, who took us to his home for the night and made us as comfortable as could be. We found they had expected us Friday evening instead of Saturday evening, and had appointments for meetings on Saturday which, of course, we were not there to fill. We regret very much that we disappointed them; but it could not well be prevented. We started as we supposed on time, but were unable to make late trains connect with those that left on time. It is trying on one's patience to stand forty minutes in a switch-yard and see the curling smoke of one's train as it gracefully rounds the curve not a great way off. But so it was. We are here now and at work and all is well.

The Saints at McKenzie have a nice and comfortable chapel about two miles from town amid the tall pine-trees, where they meet for Sunday-school, preaching, and prayer service, and such other meetings as may be desired.

They have a nice school with about sixty enrolled, and an average attendance of nearly fifty scholars in seven classes. We saw them in their "working clothes" at the session Sunday morning and are pleased to note their good order and efficient work. They have splendid opportunities before them and they are not letting them pass. Bro. L. G. Sellers has the school in charge and his efforts, together with those of Sr. Bertha Harper, the assistant district superintendent, have placed the school in the ranks of the progressive. May their efforts continue and their zeal never abate.

We held forth in institute or Sunday-school work Sunday afternoon and night and Monday and Tuesday nights with seeming good interest. We leave with a warm spot in our heart for our kind reception and the hospitality while there, hoping that in a not distant time we may be permitted to return. Till then, "God be with you."

Our next point will be Berrydale, Florida, where the conference of the Florida District is to convene on the twelfth.

AS CHRISTMAS time is here and decorating committees are at work to make all things as bright and pretty as they can with as little outlay of time and money as possible, we give a clipping from the New Century Teacher's Monthly on these subjects. They will be of help to some, no doubt.

Hints for Christmas.

It is well to adapt the Christmas festivities to the community in which they are held. The following illustrates this point:

A small community, in which there were but two Sunday-schools, planned very wisely. They would take turns in celebrating Christmas and Children's Day. It is well not to try to carry out plans too elaborate unless circumstances will permit. As it is, we will seek to give suggestions suited to various needs.

As a general rule, plans will have to be made for a larger attendance at the Christmas festivities than there promises to be. Much is said about children going to Sunday-school right before Christmas in order to obtain presents; but this can not be helped, and it is a good thing to have the children come at this time, at least, if they do at no other time.

Funds for the Christmas Observance.—Many think best to take up a special contribution, since, if taken from the school treasury, it really comes from the children themselves.

The Salvation Army of New York place about the city on tripods kettles in which those so disposed can drop offerings to be used in giving Christmas dinners to the poor, or, as they express it, "to keep the Christmas pot boiling." This feature might be carried out by a school, who could place such a receptacle where it could best receive contributions to be used for Christmas gifts for the poor children of the school.

Christmas Sunday.—Instead of doing away with the entire usual routine upon the Sabbath observed as Christmas Sunday, let special attention be given to some features of the day, since many will be present who have not been in attendance for some time. More attention than ever should be given upon this day to the distribution of library books.

The teachers may give the members of their classes an extra card upon Christmas Sunday.

Give the children letter paper upon this day, telling them to write upon it the story of the first Christmas, bringing it to you upon the following Sabbath.

Decorations.—Boughs of spruce, hemlock, pine, or of any evergreen tree placed behind the pictures in the school room will brighten it up for the occasion, but of course no elaborate decorations will be attempted here. This will be kept for the auditorium where the exercises are to take place.

The Tree.—Most schools need two trees to hold their presents. Upon the top of one of these could be placed the Stars and Stripes and upon the top of the other the Union Jack, for England and America are in reality but one nation. We have the same God, the same language, the same literature.

Tree Ornaments.—Many home-made ornaments for the tree can be used. Birds' nests can be made of egg-shells lined with moss. Candy eggs can be placed in these. Very pretty puff-balls can be made of the down of the silkweed.

Candy-bags made in the shape of stockings are much in favor. These can be made of mosquito-netting, muslin, or even bright-colored tissue paper, feather-stitched about the edges.

Corn balls hung upon the tree please the children and help out on the decorations.

Gifts.—It is not wise for any teacher to be elaborate in her gifts to her class at that time, for the simple reason that all teachers can not be, and children are like "bargain hunters;" they go where they can get the most. Christmas is not only the best time in the year for obtaining, but also the best time for losing, scholars.

General Decorations.—Flowers are seldom used in Christmas decorations, but why not? A few bright, blooming plants might be introduced to advantage among the greenery.

By the way, those in the North who can have no holly except what they are obliged to purchase at comparatively high prices, can use substitutes; bright berries of the black alder, for example, which certainly are as beautiful as those of the holly, and even the great red seed-pods of the wild rose.

Candles placed in the form of a cross can be kept burning during a portion of the exercises.

Trimming may be made from tinfoil. This can be found about the house or can be obtained from almost any grocery store. Fold each piece, cutting slits in each edge reaching not quite to the opposite edge. Then unfold each and pull it open from either end. It will then present a chainlike effect. The tinfoil cut as just recommended can be twisted about a string. It will then form a rope or fringe.

Perhaps some member of the school has a valuable painting representing some Christmas scene, which he will be willing to lend to the church to help out on the decorations for a day. Such would be a very great step in advance of some of the cheap decorations often resorted to. One of the earliest recollections of my own church days is the enjoyment I received from a large painting of the Lord's Supper, which our genial superintendent lent, and afterwards presented, to the Church.

An Outing.—A teacher who wishes to give his class an outing at this time of year might plan for a coasting party, or they might indulge in a toboggan slide or an afternoon skate upon the pond or an iceboat party.—Alice May Douglas, in the New Century Teacher's Monthly.

Editors Herald: We are still about our master's business, preaching the gospel to good crowds of attentive listeners. We preached in Brownville with some interest and some opposition, and we believe good was done, as some may unite with us. We shall return soon and explain to them the way of life more perfectly.

From there we met with the Saints of Tecumseh, whom we found alive in the work. We had some very interesting meetings and the people said, "Come again," with good spirit as if they meant it. There are some good people there that would be an honor to the cause of Christ, and we hope to gather them in due time, for we are very anxious that the good Lord shall give the increase and the people be converted to God and not to the preacher. We believe that in these days of trouble it is only the power of God that will hold his people in the path of truth, and if they are converted to God they will seek his help in the hour of need. With love to all Saints, Your brother,

WILLIAM SELF.

PRAIRIE DEPOT, Ohio, December 7.

Editors Herald: We came to this point the latter part of November and our services have been continued nightly and twice on Sundays. Have preached thirteen discourses with fine liberty to crowded houses, and the interest and attention is fine. The country is quite aroused.

Mr. Esterly, Bro. O. B. Thomas' opponent, is a regular attendant with note-book and pencil and has been kept busy. He has announced "a few lectures in the United Brethren Church at close of their protracted meetings" which began last night. The people think he will not be prepared until close of winter. We don't think he will accomplish much, for we are informed he lost about a third of his friends for even contemplating his onslaught. We feel confident a great work is awaiting proper labor in this part. Our audiences are large and intelligent, and great light and power is given the public administration of the word.

Bishop Dillon, with whom we crossed theological swords at Sugar Grove, has been here and "lectured." He was sent for and came last June. His audience was multitudinous. He says he will debate if the Latter Day Saints will furnish him a scholar, but he "doesn't believe there is a scholar in the rank and file." He was smarting under the defeat which he sustained in the discussion at Sugar Grove and remarked that Elder Scott "had" not an education—didn't know A, B, C. But while I plead guilty to part of the indictment, the people here are of a different opinion. I am not susceptible to flattery, nor have I an inordinate bump of self-esteem, else I might topple under the encomiums, but sufficient has been seen to stamp Bishop (?) Dillon as unreliable. If he hasn't discovered yet, he will later, that "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God," and when he builds his tower of Babel, God will destroy it; that while his spiritual ancestry were guilty of vitiating the gospel of Christ, of poisoning and corrupting the streams of pure Christianity, it were folly for Bishop Dillon to manifest his lineage and loyalty in a manner faithful to their memory, by "walking backward to cover his father's shame."

Bishop Dillon has had a proposition hanging over his head since the fall of 1901. The glove has never been lifted, and he dodges behind the ruse of scholarship; but it won't work.

The few Saints here under the indefatigable lead of Bro. Patten, have rented a schoolhouse, repaired it and fitted it as cozy and pleasant as any place of worship in the land. It is roofed, papered, painted, and seated, and is supplied with fixtures up to date. It has cost them over fifty dollars in repairs, but how comforting,—a home in which to meet! They were closed out of the line district school-building and the churches. All public buildings have the popular Babylonian stone rolled against the door of "open sepulcher," and, as Mr. Esterly wrote the Bowling Green Tribune, "the Mormon temple is a fixture here." So "the heathen rage, and the pious (?) imagine vain things," but the gospel is certainly melting its way through the ice.

Bro. and Sr. Monaghan, with Sr. Lottie, have located here from Creola, Ohio. They with Bro. and Sr. E. Patten, and mother, and Bro. and Sr. Lambert, constitute the sentinels for the work here. We believe their numbers will be augmented soon.

We will continue our services for an evening or two and then on to other points while the leaven works. Will possibly be notified to return here when Esterly-Eckard et al. make attack. They do not like to see our large crowds, and they sicken to think they can not meet the argument. Our audiences consist of a variety of beliefs. The religious bird here is speckled. Wishing success to all the lines of righteousness, I remain,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

Prejudice Removed.

CHATHAM, Ontario, December 2.

Dear Editors: For many years the Saints of this city have struggled under the demon of prejudice. All our efforts to liberate ourselves seemed in vain, although we have had some of the brightest stars in the Church to preach for us, including the Senior Editor and President R. C. Evans.

We believe the bands have at length been severed and that from this time forward we shall be enabled to represent ourselves and be represented more fairly and honestly before the public. Last Sunday we were honored by the presence of His Majesty's Twenty-fourth Canadian Regiment, in full uniform, under the command of Lieutenant-colonel J. B. Rankin, king's counsel of the Supreme Court of Canada, and Major G. P. Scholfield, general manager of the Standard Bank of Canada.

The regiment is officered by some of the most brainy men of our city and county. Among the principal officers were to be seen Captain O. L. Lewis, the celebrated criminal lawyer; A. E. Jewett, B. A., professor of science at the Colonial Institute; J. W. McLaren, chemist; George Massey, general accountant of the Bank of Montreal; J. S. Turner, general accountant of the Standard Bank of Canada; Fred Stone, solicitor of the Supreme Court and barrister-at-law; and Adjutant W. Coltart, of the firm of Coltart & Wilson.

At eleven o'clock in the forenoon the pretty little church of the Saints was crowded to the doors by the soldiers and their friends when branch president, Elder S. Lamont, arose and announced as opening hymn No. 14, so familiar to all the Saints:

"Hark! listen to the trumpeters!
They sound for volunteers;
Commissioned by the King of kings,
Behold the officers," etc.

Prayer was offered by E. W. Long, followed by the reading of the nineteenth Psalm by the same elder. The president announced hymn No. 179, another of our favorites:

"God is marshaling his army
For the rescue of his truth,
He is calling now to battle
Both the aged and the youth," etc.

It was gratifying to the Saints to see the honorable colonel and his officers, accompanied by their gallant defenders, join heartily in those beautiful songs of Zion. Probably for the first time in their lives, these men, upon the breasts of whom hung badges and clasps which told tales of former valor and deeds of fealty to their earthly king, joined with the Church militant in their declarations of fealty to the King of kings.

After the singing of those hymns, President Lamont, in a short, pointed, yet well delivered speech, welcomed the regiment in the name of the branch. Elder Arthur Leverton, president of the Chatham District, was then introduced and in his usual masterly and eloquent style spoke for an hour, taking as his text Mark 16: 52: "Go ye into all the world," etc. The brother did the text ample justice, for which we are thankful to the giver of that Spirit who was able to convince the mocker of the divinity of the preacher's call and the gospel he represents. That Bro. Leverton captivated his audience is an acknowledged fact in and about the city, for it has not ceased to be the talk of the population.

The sermon being over the branch officers and priesthood took the opportunity thus afforded to show their welcome personally, by a hearty shake of the hand with the regimental officers and those soldiers within reach.

The colonel's address upon the campus will long be remembered by both soldiers and civilians. He commented very favorably upon the very hearty welcome they had received and the most excellent sermon which the elder had given. Especially did he draw the attention of the men to the manner in which the speaker had covered each step of his sermon by the Scriptures and not by his own ideas. He further stated that he sincerely hoped that in the near future they, the Twenty-fourth Regiment, would have the pleasure of again attending the little white church where officers and men might, with gain to both, listen to such sound Bible as they had heard that day.

The church parade brought many through curiosity to see and hear, but who to-day express themselves as well pleased with the people they once despised.

The music was under the direction of the branch chorister, Elder J. H. Tyrrell, who, supported by a choir composed of Saints and friends, sang some very excellent pieces, and especially was the quartet worthy of favorable mention.

We wish to state that for this favorable position in which we now are placed before the public, the branch is indebted to their amicable president, Elder S. Lamont, who, by the aid of that Spirit which leadeth and directeth his people, has by his untiring efforts brought about the change. Elder Lamont has set himself to the task of clearing the horizon of the mists of prejudice which hitherto has kept many from our midst, and in the same we wish him God speed.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and the work of the living God, I am,
Your brother in Christ.

BLACKWELL, Oklahoma, December 9.

Editors Herald: I am sending for some tracts for some friends of mine who are getting interested in the faith of the Saints. One is a gentleman who has preached for the Baptist people for ten years (the Baptists have a college in Blackwell), but he is quite willing to learn more. I have had quite a few talks with him and have loaned him Pratt's works and Bro. Luff's tract, "The Antiquity of the Gospel." He liked them and wanted more. I will loan him the oldest true history of America next. Then he says he will compare the Inspired Translation with the uninspired works. He asked me when one of our elders could come and preach, and if Bro. H. O. Smith or some of the traveling elders can come to Northeastern Oklahoma they will be well treated by us and by Doctor Hutchinson, who is a fine scholar and student. I rather believe if Bro. H. O. Smith could come down he would capture a worker. All well and striving to keep in the narrow way. We have not seen any of the elders for over a year.

W. D. MCKNIGHT.

OAKLAND, California, December 7.

Editors Herald: In pursuance of duty as district president, and in answer to a kind invitation from the church at Chico, we boarded train on morning of November 28. A run of thirty-three miles brought us to Benicia, where we crossed the San Francisco Bay on the largest ferry-boat in the world. The whole train is transferred at one crossing. As we passed on we crossed miles of low flat land mostly covered with water, on which is found also an immense growth of flags. In the distance may be seen the picturesque mountains, the coast range, an impressive object lesson of the power and wisdom of our God. Sacramento was reached after another run of fifty-seven miles. This city is located on the Sacramento River, a sluggish stream of muddy water, something like the Missouri, only not so quick in action, and more contented to occupy the same "bed" continually. The site of the city is low and flat. At half past three we boarded train again for Chico, ninety-six miles north, and arrived at seven o'clock, to be met at the depot by Bro. J. S. Hommes, the elder in charge of the branch.

One hour later found us in the stand of their church home, a neat little building which they bought and removed to the lot owned by the Saints. They look upon this as only a temporary home until they can build. We found the room a little difficult to speak in, but the good Spirit present and the hearty welcome reduced this difficulty to nothing. We found a shelter under the saintly roof-tree of Sr. Mary F. Fulton, where also resides her daughter, Sr. Welch, and her son Charles, and where we spent each night while there. We found a hearty welcome in the homes and at the tables of Bro. Fisher, Bro. Opsal, Sr. Sarah E. Boydston, and others, whose hearty good wishes testified that they had partaken of the divine love.

Our meetings continued until Thursday night, and because of previous arrangements we closed. Bro. White and family, Bro. R. J. Furguson and wife, Sr. Cora Woods, and Bro. and Sr. Hinty were present from the regions north and east, from whom we received urgent invitations to visit their country, also from Chico Saints to return, which we intend to do when an opportune time presents itself. We found at Chico a most delightful atmosphere, the purest and best we have found, and it did us good physically, also spiritually. The Lord bless the branch at Chico.

On our return we stopped one night at Sacramento, and enjoyed the hospitable home of Sr. C. C. Day and "Lizzie" whom we found still in love with the work. Bro. R. J. Parker with family are now located here. He is putting in all the time he can in preaching on the street, and was lately put in charge of the branch. His health is not excellent. The attendance has increased since he went there.

We arrived home at seven o'clock Saturday evening to meet a hearty welcome from wife, with evening meal prepared, and also by the kindly household of Bro. J. M. Cockerton, in two rooms of whose house we reside.

Bro. J. W. Wight had arrived and to our joy was still with us, and on Sunday morning the Saints by vote expressed a wish for him to speak instead of our usual prayer and testimony. So after the sacrament was administered he gave us a good sermon. He spoke in the city in the evening and starts to-day homeward to see the ten-months old babe for the first time.

Bro. E. Keeler has been busy in Mendocino and Lake Counties for some time with varied interest. Bro. J. W. Gilbert has been doing street work in the city as permitted by the weather with interest such as is peculiar to that work. Bro. Crumley has been for some time in the south part of the State.

We have been engaged here in Oakland and San Francisco, visiting Santa Rosa, trying to occupy where it was possible. The work in the district is progressive, so far as the growth in grace; but for baptisms there are very few. At Chico we met Bro. W. P. Walshe, lately baptized by Bro. Hommes, and found him a well-educated, humble-hearted, teachable son of Erin. If faithful and diligent he will develop marked abilities in the work. The missionary spirit comes to us of late with additional pressure, also my wife is standing with me in the great work and is the better missionary of the two. With faces set to duty and labor and with a desire to continue until Christ comes to call the laborers to their reward, I am,

Yours in Christ,

J. M. TERRY.

ENFIELD, Middlesex, England, November.

Dear Herald: It gives me great pleasure in addressing you from this distant mission.

Our little branch was organized during Elder G. T. Griffiths' stay among us in the early part of this year, and I am glad to say that although we are but few in number, yet the spirit of peace and harmony prevails, and truly God has verified his promise many times.

I am a young man and have not had much experience in the Church, but from personal observation I am satisfied that no man can become a Latter Day Saint in deed and in truth, nor can his services be acceptable to the Master, if he lacks in the attribute of charity. It is needed among our companions, it is needed in our homes. It is not always an easy matter to be charitable, but on the contrary it requires much of the Spirit of God to accomplish such a thing in our hearts. We are all weak and liable to stumble from the path which we as children of God should tread, and this being so, how can we for one moment stop to condemn our brethren and sisters, when, in a weak moment, they fall before temptation? If in our hearts we are unable to feel sorry for them and take their case to the Lord asking that strength may be given to them, then the eloquence of a Demosthenes would not justify us before our heavenly Father. Thus may we each endeavor to live the lives we profess, striving to cultivate the charity that Christ taught.

The people here are not so much prejudiced against the work as they were before Bro. Joseph visited us. In my opinion the work in Enfield will soon be making great headway. There is much to be done, but we must not get discouraged because we do not convert the whole town; so long as we do our part God will do his. Bro. Sheldon has held meetings here nearly every night for a month; the weather being wet, however, it was rather disappointing. Still a great deal of good has been done. If I understand rightly, three are going to be baptized next month while others are "almost persuaded."

Pray for us, dear Saints, that the work over here may indeed go forward, that although we are but few we may not get discouraged.

Your brother in Christ,

DOVER ERNEST JUDD.

14 Churchbury Road.

BACKUS, Minnesota, December 4.

Dear Herald: You are dear to me and I love to read the letters and sermons. That is all the preaching I hear. There are no other Saints in these parts, and I long so to hear a good Latter Day Saint sermon again, for I am getting old and do not know how soon I may be called away and I want to be ready when I am called. Pray for me that I may be worthy to be called a Saint. I send my papers to my neighbors for them to read. May God bless all the Saints.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. MARY FRAME.

OMAHA, Nebraska, December 9.

Editors Herald: The Saints are generally active in the work and the branch officers are laboring together in unity, in consequence of which the cause is not at a standstill. We have been blowing the gospel trumpet at the walls of Babylon, but the old walls are still standing. With Bro. J. S. Strain we have had an extended campaign in South Omaha this fall, with the result that three noble mothers are rejoicing in the truth and a number of others investigating. Regular weekly meetings have been established and the Saints and friends take an active interest.

The branch in Omaha is in a prosperous condition under the presidency of Bro. J. F. Weston and his faithful associates. The meetings are good. Sunday-school is progressive under the care of Sr. Alice Schwartz and an active Religio is in charge of Bro. Turner McCaig, who united with us but a short time ago. Our choir, under the care of Bro. Leroy Wood, is doing efficient work and is a great aid in the services. Many of our young people are showing great promise in the Church by the way they are taking hold of the work. The Lord has blessed them, and by continued faithfulness greater blessings will come.

We have the usual routine of duties in a large branch,—visiting Saints and friends as opportunity permits and telling the gospel story to them; visiting the sick, of whom there are a number; preaching the word and administering in the ordinances from time to time.

On November 18 we assisted at a very pretty home wedding, when Sr. Eva M. Coates was united in matrimony to Mr. Joseph A. Withee. These young people start out upon life's sea with very favorable prospects. May their voyage be a happy one to the end.

On the 29th we laid to rest Sr. Ellen Richardson, who had been a faithful Saint here for nearly forty years. Many friends as well as Saints were present at the funeral to pay their last respects to her memory, showing the esteem in which she was held. Her hope in Christ was bright and her departure peaceful and joyous.

Again we were made sad by being called home to Tabor, Iowa, on the 4th inst., to attend the funeral of Bro. William Gaylord. He had been a father to us and others as well as a brother. The expressions of love by Saints and the world surpassed all I had ever seen. One worldly and godless man, we noticed, shed tears at the loss of his neighbor. Bro. David Chambers spoke words of comfort and assurance to the bereaved ones. Bro. Gaylord had lived a faithful life and was prepared to go, having had a premonition of the end. His rest is glorious.

We find many difficulties in trying to get the gospel before the world and progress is somewhat slow, but we are desirous of doing all we can according to circumstances. Our work here has been done with considerable pleasure, especially because of the cheerful cooperation of the Saints.

In observing the changes taking place in the world we see indications here and there of the decline of Protestantism. Following creed revision by the Presbyterian Church, there is now a movement on foot among the ministry of the "Protestant Episcopal Church of America" to change its name to "The Catholic Church of America," as if that would strengthen the position of the Church. At the twenty-second congress of that Church held at Pittsburg, Reverend F. M. Clendennin of New York, in discussing the change of name, on November 6, said: "That the mighty house of Protestantism is falling according to divine prophecy, is a fact as sure as death is coming to us all." They had better come into the house built upon the eternal rock and be safe from the storms of time. May God hasten the time when his kingdom shall fill the whole world.

CHARLES FRY.

DES MOINES, Iowa, December 12.

Dear Herald: The Christmas of 1903 is here and we wish all your readers a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. As we look back over the year that is closing we can see much progress in church work in our Des Moines District. The missionaries have labored faithfully and the work is in good condition. One new branch has been organized and the date for the organization of another is set for this month.

During the past two months the District Religio association has been sending out tracts by mail. Eight hundred letters have been mailed to persons in our district, each letter containing four tracts. These are "The One Faith" and "The Book of Mormon," by J. F. Mintun, "What We Believe," and the Constitutional Amendment slip. The Saints in the district are being asked to contribute to this tract fund. This much has been done and only a part of the Saints have as yet been solicited.

We believe that great good is going to come from this tract distribution, as is already shown from the following extracts of letters. During October one hundred of these letters were sent into Poweshiek County and early in November Bro. Mintun went to Grinnell to hold meetings and continued there three weeks. He writes thus: "I do not know whether the tracts mailed have done any good or not, but I know that I have never been accorded better treatment in any place, neither have I had tracts circulated where I have known of more of them being read and favorable comments upon them made. I visited Montezuma yesterday and found a welcome by all I met, and these were quite a number and the Lord is truly working there." Tracts were sent to all the ministers, lawyers, doctors, and teachers in these two towns.

One hundred and twenty-five tract letters were sent into Mahaska County and of these a sister writes: "The tracts sent to the ——— home, Oskaloosa, I think may reap a harvest, at least several of the family, including an uncle and an aunt, are investigating. The Utah elders had been there recently, just a few days before the tracts arrived, and presented their faith, but did not acknowledge that they believed any different than we. Am told they claimed to belong to the Reorganized Church."

The following extract from a Boone letter is of interest: "Down where Bro. T. F. Jones was preaching before he came to Boone, after his service one evening, a gentleman came up and asked him if he would come and preach in their church the Saturday evening following. Bro. Jones said he would. The gentleman asked him if he would preach the same doctrine that he had been preaching. Bro. Jones said he would and a little stronger if he wanted him to. The gentleman said all right. They secured the church and sent to a nearby town for one of their ministers who was at the church on that Saturday evening. Bro. Jones said, without boasting, that he never saw such a weak man made as strong as he was on that occasion."

Our district conference will convene at Runnells early in February. The exact date will be published soon.

A. A. REAMS.

CHETEK, Wisconsin, December 7.

Dear Herald: Just in from the picket lines and resting at the hospitable home of Bro. Frank Gilbert, reading HERALDS and daily papers, of which we have been deprived on the firing line.

Small war clouds in the southern horizon, "Uncle Sam's" ditch across the Isthmus, "Teddy" fixing his fences, Uncle Mark Hanna gazing at the weak places, murders, suicides, calamities, commotions, graft and greed have been a change of diet beneficial to ye jots man.

Last but not least comes the financial embarrassment of John Alexander Dowie, the court's blanket upon him, his New York Waterloo, his minions' disappointment, and Zion's discomfiture—all are interesting reading indeed. We are sorry for any man who has to "lie down" financially, and we really hope for his own sake and the sake of his dupes that he may extricate himself from the leeches of a receiver's court.

Dowie's stock in trade has been vituperation and abuse of all outside his pale and now in his difficulty it is quite natural for the press, doctors, lawyers, and bankers to laugh at his calamity. We are pleased to read Bro. La Rue's article on "Dowie the Elijah," and without comment we say "them's our sentiments." Dowie's government has been a government of Dowie, not in the least democratic, but in the absolute sense a theocratic government and largely an imitation of Brigham Young's. His followers are expected to obey counsel without question, and in our opinion his enthusiasts will have their bones well picked, between the prophet and the receiver's court.

We are nearing the end of our itinerary in Wisconsin. Have opened a few new places which we hope will be followed up by others. They are Dallas, Barron, Elmwood, Pine Grove, Sand Creek, and Bennett schoolhouse, where now are friends and open doors for our elders. I have preached one hundred and nineteen sermons, baptized ten, confirmed eight, ordained one elder and one priest, blessed fourteen children, and administered twenty-five times to the sick. My labors have been largely in the forefront, opening up the new ground.

I will start south on the 10th and will make Plainville Indiana, as soon as circumstances will permit. Until then, ye Hoosiers, be patient.

T. W. CHATBURN.

SPRINGFIELD, South Dakota, December 7.

Editors Herald: Since November 10 I have made three new openings. At Dell Rapids I secured the use of a hall controlled by the Scandinavian Free Mission people and preached four times to small but attentive audiences. Then as missionaries of their own society desired the hall I went to Rowena on the 17th and found a home with Mr. and Mrs. George Craig, who are not members of the Church, but are firm friends to the cause and know how to make the missionary feel welcome.

I held meetings in their house, a schoolhouse near by, and in the town hall at Rowena, and I was blessed with excellent liberty. I think friends were made to the cause. We met with some opposition by the Methodists. Their preacher announced that he would preach two sermons on Mormonism. I asked if he would do so while I was there, but he said he could not possibly do it so soon. I have many invitations to return later in the winter and give them another series of meetings, and have promised to do so.

From there I came to this place and called the scattered Saints together yesterday for a sacrament service. Though there are about twenty members in this vicinity they have not had the privilege of partaking sacrament for almost a year. They have a Sunday-school and the sisters have been keeping up their prayer-meeting.

In the afternoon at four o'clock I said the words uniting Sr. Bertha Urfer and Bro. George Schidler for life, and last night began meetings in a schoolhouse north of Perkins with a full house and splendid interest manifest. Have been enjoying excellent liberty of late, for which I thank the heavenly Father.

EDWARD F. ROBERTSON.

DOWNES, Kansas, December 8.

Editors Herald: Bro. F. S. Ward and S. A. Madden preached two or three times at the Union Star church, then for about two weeks five miles north. I think good was done, and they have many friends there.

About two weeks ago Bro. James Teeter began meetings near Cheyenne and was joined by J. F. McClure. The meetings lasted until December 3, with small but interested crowds, and on November 30 Bro. McClure baptized two, John and May O'Connor, and thus a good, kind mother and a father have obeyed the gospel, and I think they will be a help in the work of the Lord. On Thursday, December 3, the Saints met at Bro. O'Connor's for prayer and sacrament meeting. There were seven of us, and a good, spiritual time was had. Many seem to be interested and think much of the elders who have been there. If we as Saints would do our duty there would be a large branch here.

On December 4 a Mr. Marshall who lives about ten miles from here was baptized. A good time was had at our Sunday-school convention and conference which we attended. Much good advice was given which we should follow. I am determined through the help of God to do better.

In the one faith,

MISS MYRTLE COOP.

HOLDEN, Missouri, November 30.

Editors Herald: The work here is onward, have a good branch, and many good Saints who are working for the Master and preparing for the reward of faithfulness. We have the benefit of some of the best talent in the Church, and as a result are coming up higher.

Since this district was organized into a stake many have gathered here from all points of the compass in fulfillment of the word of God through one of his servants: "This shall be a gathering place for my people." Those who come here must come expecting to assist the cause, as the Spirit of progression is here and there is much to be done, since the hastening time has come. They must expect to be tried, for the Lord has said, "I will have a tried people." If the Saints here will unite in an effort to bring about those conditions which must obtain before the coming of the Master, right here will Zion be; for Zion means the pure in heart. The promise of God to those who keep his commandments is, "Behold, I am with you always, even unto the end." "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city."

There can be no doubt whatever that God is moving in his work, inspiring men to do his work, and that the set time to favor Zion has come. What greater incentive is needed to energize the body to increased activity, self-denial, and sacrifice, that the desired end may be accomplished and this land be what it is destined to become,—the land of Zion?

EMILY B. FANAR.

ALVA, Wyoming, December 5.

Editors Herald: After the debate with W. L. Stafford, of the Church of Christ, at Elk, New Mexico, which closed on the 10th of October, I remained with Bro. Morgan and preached in that part of the country as circumstances would permit till the 29th, when we left, Bro. Morgan for Trinidad and I for home at Lamoni, where I remained for nearly three weeks, building a barn and making other necessary improvements and giving such counsel and direction to my children as they were much in need of, and assisting in gospel work when called on.

My stay at home was shortened by the sickness of my brother David's wife. In answer to his request I started on the 20th of November for Meadow Grove, Nebraska, near where he resides, and did what I could in administering comfort, relief, and assistance. Nothing seemed to check the ravages of disease or thwart the claims of the grim monster, death; so on the 25th her spirit took its flight to the "God who gave it." On Thanksgiving day, while others were enjoying a season of joy and rejoicing, I, with my bereaved brother, with other relatives and friends of the departed, attended her funeral.

Neither she nor her husband belonged to any church, yet they believed to some extent in the restored gospel. She requested administration and Bro. R. Oring and I administered to her, but our combined faith was not equal to the emergency, or it was not God's will for her to recover. David also was sick from continued vigilance and worry. At his request I administered to him and he began to mend at once. He promised to mend his ways and obey the gospel as soon as his health and conditions would permit.

His wife expressed a desire to live to obey the gospel. She played her confidence and trust in God, and so far as death-bed repentance will do one any good, I believe she will get her reward. Her mother, Mrs. Mary A. Hubelits, is a Methodist and desired me to talk with and pray for her daughter. I did so with the above results. At her death her mother shouted that she had gone straight to glory, believing she had made her peace with God. The mother wanted me to preach a death-bed repentance sermon from Matthew 20:6, 7, 9, where Christ speaks of those employed at the eleventh hour receiving as much as those who labored through the "heat of the day." I did not want to be rude and hurt her feelings, so I told her that I had thought of speaking from the text, "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children." She seemed satisfied and said that would do very well. In my remarks I avoided as much as possible anything that would have a tendency to irritate the feelings of the old lady or her relatives, of whom there were several present; and held out what hopes the Scriptures warrant for the departed in her condition spiritually; but also tried to impress all with the necessity of following Christ in all things, both in complying with the outward ordinances of the gospel and also in purity of life.

After the burial, and after partaking of as good a Thanksgiving dinner as could well be expected under such circumstances, my sister, Ellen J. Dickerson, who, with part of her family, is a member of the Church, took David and me to their home near by, where she will care for David till he has fully recovered.

I stopped there but a day or so longer and then pushed on to Inman, Nebraska, where I met our aged and esteemed Bro. J. Caffall, who was holding a series of meetings there. At his request, I occupied the stand at eleven o'clock Sunday forenoon. He closed his series of meetings there that evening and went to Clearwater next morning. The writer remained and preached to a small audience Monday night. Here I visited Mr. G. Sinlinger and daughter Alice (his wife was absent), formerly of Dodge County, Nebraska, who were warm friends of mine while I preached in their neighborhood in Dodge County. When I first opened up the work in their neighborhood, a request was sent to the Sunday-school there, to announce my services the next Sunday. The Methodist Episcopal preacher would not make the announcement. Mrs. Sinlinger got into her buggy and drove for miles around to spread the announcement, and of course we had a good audience. Their friendship seems not to have waned, though years have passed since that time.

From Inman I went to O'Neill, Nebraska, to inquire into some government land matters for a friend. My stop there was but for one day, when I went to the Black Hills and beyond to Alva, Wyoming, where the present finds me. Here I find a Baptist evangelist, Reverend McKeehan, in the midst of a revival. How long this will keep me from work, I do not know. This is the only opening we have in these parts yet. A handful of Saints struggling for the maintenance of the Master's cause against the most vigorous efforts of the Baptists to hold them down. What the outcome will be God knows.

I wish to say to the missionaries in the Colorado Mission, that Alva will be my headquarters till after New Years; so send your reports to me here. And to others in the mission that may desire assistance from the missionary force, correspond with me here and I will do what I can to meet your requests. I desire especially for the scattered Saints of Eastern Wyoming to let me know of the prospects for labor in their parts, as I desire to call on as many as I can this winter.

Bro. J. F. Curtis reports a good work done in Southwestern Colorado. I hope all the missionaries will have a good report to make at the end of the quarter. Courage, brethren, and push onward in the good work.

J. M. STUBBART.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. J. S. Roth, Grinnell, Iowa, on December 5, wrote as follows: "The weather is terribly cold up here now, but no snow."

Bro. George Buschlen, Arthur, Ontario, writes December 7: "I lately sent for Bro. Lambert's book, 'What is Man,' to defend our claims against the attacks of one who claims he has defeated Presbyterians, Methodists, and Disciples on the 'immortality of man,' and who is ready to meet some one on the question in HERALD columns. The book is worth its weight in gold, and a great many do not know of its merit. The 'soul-sleeping' question is not easily met without study and is a trick of Satan to hide truth. I thank God that he has men who can expose error and defend truth."

Bro. Peter Muceus, writing from Porsgrund, Norway, November 25: "The work in general is onward and we all are hopeful. Bro. Anderson has commenced in Christiania and next week I will join him, and we will then try to do what we can there this winter."

Bro. Marshall Jamison who graduated from Graceland College last spring, wrote to Bishop Kelley from Des Moines, Iowa, December 10: "I have been in this city since August working for the Edison Electric Light Company in their plant. I tried to get a position suitable to my education, but remembering the text of the Baccalaureate sermon: 'Whatever your hands find to do, do with your might,' I accepted the first job that was open to me. I am well pleased with my work, except that there is Sunday work. Yet I attend church regularly in the mornings and try to so live that I will be an example to my associates."

Brn. Hans N. Hansen and Swen Swenson are arranging for a discussion with Bishop A. G. Young and Elder I. J. Stewart, at Richfield, Utah, to begin December 16, and hold four sessions. The claim of the respective churches to be known as the Church of Jesus Christ, organized April 6, 1830, is the subject for discussion. Bro. Hansen wrote December 3, 1903: "We have succeeded in arousing the people considerably and look for a large attendance at the debate. We expect to preach at Annabell and Glenwood, near-by settlements, to keep up the interest until the time of the conflict. Our opponents are making considerable preparations, but we are hopeful for the truth."

Conference Minutes.

Special Conference.—Pursuant to call of G. T. Griffiths, the Saints of Bandon and Dora Branches met in conference at Bandon, Oregon, November 23, 1903, when the following proceedings were had: Elder Griffiths took the chair and stated the object of the call, which was for the formation of a district in the southwestern part of Oregon, the old district having been disorganized with a view to forming two out of the same territory. Sr. Ethel Boyd was chosen secretary pro tem. D. E. Stitt was then elected president of the district, and R. A. Cribbins district secretary. Elder William Smith, of Dora, Oregon, was recommended as Bishop's agent. It was decided that the district should be known as Southwestern Oregon District, comprising Coos, Curry, Josephine, Jackson, and Douglas Counties. Brn. G. T. Griffiths and D. A. Anderson were chosen delegates to General Conference. A proposition was then submitted to the Portland conference to make an offer for the old district tent, give or take. The district officers were then sustained by motion, and the conference adjourned to meet at Lee, in August, on the last Saturday and Sunday of the reunion.

Southeastern Illinois.—Convened at Tunnelhill, Illinois, at 10 o'clock, June 17, Elder I. A. Morris presiding with Elder F. M. Slover assistant, and P. G. McMahan secretary. By motion courtesy was extended to those from outside of the district to take part in the conference work. Branches reporting: Tunnelhill 169, Parrish 89, Brush Creek 297, Springerton 119. Ministry reporting: Seventies T. C. Kelley, F. M. Slover, C. J. Spurlock; Elders M. R. Brown, I. A. Morris, J. F. Henson, J. E. Bozarth, W. A. Kelley, S. D. Goosetree; Priests A. H. Johnson, P. G. McMahan; Teachers W. S. Miller, R. Y. Smith, John H. Smith. I. A. Morris was chosen president for another year, F. M. Davis vice-president, P. G. McMahan secretary. A district Sunday-school association was organized with the following officers: T. L. Sawley, superintendent, C. J. Spurlock, assistant, P. G. McMahan, treasurer, J. E. Bozarth, secretary, Mrs. I. A. Morris, librarian. It was moved that the Sunday-school association should convene during the next quarterly conference. F. M. Slover was sustained as Bishop's agent. Preaching by J. E. Bozarth, C. J. Spurlock, T. C. Kelley, I. A. Morris, and F. M. Slover. Adjourned to meet at Springerton in February at call of president. I. A. Morris, president, P. G. McMahan, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

Northern Wisconsin.—Convention convened at Porcupine, Wisconsin, October 4, district superintendent, A. V. Closson, presiding. In the absence of the secretary Sr. Lily Longsdorf was chosen secretary pro tem. Minutes of organization were read and approved. Schools reporting were Prince of Peace, Appleton, and Searles Prairie. Report from Sr. Rillie Moore, district secretary, showed four schools and an interest in the work that was encouraging. Total enrollment 143. District superintendent reported and gave instruction in Sunday-school work. Resolved that each school in the district be requested to prepare one or more papers on Sunday-school work and send to next convention. Adjourned to meet on Monday after next district conference at Necedah.

Notice.

To First Quorum of Elders: We are now preparing to issue our annual circular letter to the Quorum and wish to get the list of names and addresses corrected to date. Let any member who knows of deaths, expulsions from church or change in post-office, either of himself or of other members, report the same to me as soon as practicable. There are so many changes constantly being made by reason of rural free delivery being established that many changes will be necessary this time. Please do not overlook or delay this matter. T. A. Hougas, president, Henderson, Iowa, December 6.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To Saints of the Central Nebraska District: I take this method of informing you that there is urgent need of coming forward with your tithes and offerings. It seems to be a time of financial depression and probably no institution feels the depression sooner than the Church. Let us remember that at our last General Conference a large number of missionaries were sent into the field, and yet not as many as the ever widening field demands. To keep these men in the field their families must be provided for. Let each one ask himself, "Am I doing my part in this great work and making the sacrifice that God demands of me?" Let us remember that God has said "it is a day of sacrifice," and not put off the time of paying to the Lord the portion he requires of us until it will not be a sacrifice to pay. Let each earnestly consider this matter and come to the help of the Church treasury just now.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

To the Saints of Southern Wisconsin District, Greeting: Will all please take note of my change of address from Edgerton, Wisconsin, R. F. D. No. 1, to Janesville, Wisconsin, R. F. D. No. 7. Be sure to put on number of rural delivery route, as I have brothers who get mail from same office, and save delay and trouble. The change is owing only to change in rural delivery. Make all post-office orders payable at Janesville or Evansville and not at Edgerton.

C. C. HOGUE.

Conference Notices.

Conference of Central Illinois District will convene with the Taylorville Branch, December 26 and 27, at 10 a. m. All branches are requested to report. M. D. Lewis, president.

The St. Louis District conference will convene in St. Louis, Saturday, December 19, at 8 o'clock, for business, and continue over Sunday, December 20. A full report of all the branches of the district is desired, also of all the ministry. Let all work together for the good of the district. Willard J. Smith, president; Chas. J. Remington, secretary.

Convention Notices.

The Southern Nebraska District Sunday-school convention will be held at Wilber, January 22 and 23, 1904, at 8 o'clock p. m. All are especially invited to attend, as there will be important business to transact. Bring or send all reports of schools. W. M. Self, superintendent.

Died.

KNUDSON.—At her home near Guilford, October 4, 1903, of heart disease, Sr. Christian Knudson (Annie Marie Sorensen) was born in Denmark April 12, 1836; married to Christian Knudson October 16, 1858. To them were born eight children; one son, K. C. Knudson, and three daughters, Mrs. S. C. Nelson, Mrs. C. D. Koch, and Mrs. W. B. Torrance, survive her. They with their father and many friends, mourn her departure. They came to America in the spring of 1878. The following year she joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in which she was a faithful and consistent member to the day of her death, bearing always a faithful testimony to the love of Christ who gave his life for all. During the last day of her life she bade her children and their companions good-bye, telling them to be good and think upon the gospel, exhorting them to be faithful thereto and be prepared to meet her in heaven.

DICKINSON.—Bro. Harry B. Dickinson died at Plattsmouth, Nebraska, November 9, 1903, aged 57 years, 3 months and 2 days. He united with the Church in 1883, being baptized by Bro. Brand. He lived a true Saint, loved and respected by all who knew him, and died firm in the faith. He was born in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, and was married September 5, 1882, to Sr. Sally Dickinson who died one year and three months ago. Buried November 11, Reverend Swan of the M. E. Church preaching the sermon.

HARRIS.—At her home in Youngstown, Ohio, on November 23, Sr. Hannah Price Harris. She was born March 12, 1843, at Rymney, Glenmorganshire, South Wales; was married to William Harris, July 6, 1865; was baptized October 9, 1875, at Danville, Montour County, Pennsylvania, by Priest William Harris, and confirmed by Elder William Crumb. She lived a consistent Christian life, remaining steadfast in the faith to the last. She left a husband, three sons, three daughters, and two grandchildren (adopted) to mourn her death. Funeral services by Elder O. B. Thomas.

WOOLSEY.—At Pueblo, Colorado, April 4, 1903, little Nellie May, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. John V. Woolsey. The little child was born March 29, 1903, and blessed April 4, 1903, by Elder H. L. Ashbaugh, who had charge of the funeral.

LUTCH.—At Clifford, North Dakota, August 28, Bro. William Lutch. He was born March 18, 1816, in Roburgeshire, Scotland; moved to Canada when a young man and afterward to Clifford where he has since lived. At the time of his death he was visiting his daughter, Sr. Percher, at Esmond, North Dakota. Funeral service was held by Elder William Sparling at the house. He was baptized by Elder Sparling, June 25, 1894, and lived in the faith until death.

LOWE.—Sr. Addie Lowe died at the home of her brother, Richard Lowe, Baldwin, Iowa, November 11. She was born at Canton, Iowa, February 22, 1879; united with the Church May 26, 1892, being baptized by Warren Turner at Nashville, Iowa, and confirmed by Warren Turner and C. C. Reynolds. She was esteemed by the entire community and is resting in peace. She leaves a father, mother, four brothers, and two sisters to mourn. Reverend Thomas Carson officiating, the remains were laid to rest in the Canton Cemetery.

ROBINSON.—Sr. Ann F. Robinson was born at Straid, Galloway, Ireland, May 21, 1828. She heard the news of a Restoration, and was baptized in the Utah Church in Liverpool, England, in 1852. The message of the Reorganization reached her in California and she obeyed it December 27, 1874. She died at the home of her daughter, Sr. Alice Wilson, Salt Lake City, November 19. Faithful in life, her reward is sure.

CARMER.—Sr. Myrtle E. Carl Carmer, December 1, at the home of her aunt, Sr. C. B. Harding, ten miles east of Des Moines. She was born December 18, 1875, in Peoria, Illinois; united with the Church at eight years, and married Bro. L. E. Carmer, July 29, 1897. She leaves husband, three children, and a host of friends. She lived a saintly life, her children claiming her attention and for whom she showed great self-denial, bearing her long sickness with unusual patience. She was resigned and willing to meet her Savior; asked a kiss from each and bade them good-bye, rousing only to speak the names of her loved ones, communing with angels whom she greeted with a smile. Funeral December 3, by J. S. Roth.

ARCHIBALD.—Nina Marie Archibald, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. James Archibald, died at Cleveland, Iowa, November 27, and was buried at Centerville, on the 29th. Funeral by D. C. White in the Saints' church.

GAYLORD.—William W. Gaylord at Tabor, Iowa, December 2. He was born in Genessee County, New York, September 30, 1832. When but a child he with his parents moved to Kirtland, Ohio, and from there to Hancock County, Illinois. He came to Fremont County, Iowa, in 1846, and has since made Iowa his home. He was united in marriage to Miss Hannah Johnson, of Knox County, Illinois, October 1, 1854. Unto them were born six children, two dying in infancy, the remaining four who grew to manhood and womanhood being Mrs. Edith Praher, the oldest, who resides in Oklahoma; Hattie, the wife of William Dawson who died several years ago; William H., J., who resides on the home place where the father passed away; and Ammi D., who lives in Shenandoah, Iowa. After the death of his first wife he was again united in marriage to Miss Francis Badham. To this union five children were born, three of whom died in infancy, while those yet living are Lenora and Alma Gaylord. Elder Gaylord united with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints March 22, 1863, being baptized by David M. Gamet. Was ordained an elder February 7, 1869, and belongs to the first quorum of elders. He was chosen president of the Thurman Branch in December, 1902. He leaves three sons, two daughters, two brothers, three sisters, and a host of friends to mourn. He was a humble follower of the Lord Jesus Christ and died strong in the faith of the gospel. He was a friend to all and an enemy to none. The funeral was held at his home, December 4, 1903, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Sermon by Elder D. R. Chambers, assisted by C. Fry, after which interment took place in the Dawsonburg Cemetery.

RICHARDSON.—At Omaha, Nebraska, November 27, Sr. Ellen Richardson, who was born April three, 1830, at Buckingham, England. She united with the Reorganized Church August 21, 1866, at Omaha, where she lived a faithful Saint until the time of her death. Funeral services at the chapel; sermon by Charles Fry, assisted by J. F. Weston.

For now fifteen years it has been the custom of the Outlook at this season of the year to put forth a special number devoted largely to the books of the season. The December Magazine Number of the Outlook is also the Annual Holiday Book Number, and contains not only a survey of many of the important books of the season in various departments of literature, but also several articles having a direct bearing on literary topics, together with a remarkably large and complete list of publishers' announcements. The "Record and Review" of books is prepared under the general supervision of Mr. Hamilton Wright Mabie, and is specially illustrated with beautiful reproductions of John W. Alexander's series of paintings representing "The Evolution of the Book," reproduced by permission from the famous lunettes in the Library of Congress. A readable and suggestive feature is a group of articles called "What the American People Are Reading." This gives the views of a librarian (Mr. John Cotton Dana), a publisher (Mr. George P. Brett, of The Macmillan Company), and a bookseller (Mr. Ernest D. North), while a particularly entertaining paper, entitled "Reading in the Farm Home," by Martha Van Rensselaer, includes amusing extracts from reports received in answer to questions sent out broadcast among farmers and farmers' wives.

CHRISTMAS.

Day after to-morrow is the day set by Christians to be observed in commemoration of the birth into earth-life of Jesus, the Redeemer, the beginning of the holiday week of the year.

We, in common with other believing peoples, observe this day as it comes and goes, striving to memorialize, as best we can, the advent of one who by the grace and power of God, his Father, who sent him, set about the task of overcoming the evil in the world by the good; the accomplishment of which, though long deferred, we all believe to be possible and impending. We believe, or should if we do not, that the Church was chosen as a means to be used in accomplishing this desirable object, and ourselves as a part of the Church.

It does neither impoverish nor enrich the Lord for us to observe the day, but a proper respect for the work done by the Savior for mankind, and for us, being a part of the many, is a help to ourselves, and in participating in the exercises of the day and time in the true spirit of recognition of the work done, the manner of its accomplishment, and a sense of the benefits conferred by it, we are enriched by the recollection of the circumstances attending the birth, life, and death of the Holy One whom we are memorializing.

The wonderful manifestations amid the starry heavens, the splendid testimony borne by the shepherds and the wise men, the fervent and eloquent utterance of good old Simeon, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel;" all tend to lend sanctifying influence to a believer's contemplation on this memorial day.

One thought among others to which the day should give rise and by which we should profit is, What have I done since the last anniversary of this reputed birth-day of my Redeemer to show my love for my fellow men, my regard for truth and law, my respect for his word, and my desire to honor his cause and glorify his name? Nor should we pass this thought lightly by. For, as the world advances in years, ripening in the works of righteousness and of iniquity for the Great Harvest Day, we see a more rapid increase of evil among men, a more abounding abundance of crime and wrong-doing; while faith and the good deeds resulting therefrom seem to be growing less and less as each moon waxes and wanes and the months pass into years.

If, upon this recurrent holy day, we can be conscious of effort honestly made, and of recurring determination to abide in the faith, let us also renew our diligence in the things which make for peace in the Church; and, when he whom we this day honor by our remembrance of his birth comes, may we be found worthy of entering in upon and enjoying the joys of a never-failing holy day in the New World.

To the end that we may meet the requirements of the day and time, we bid the workers on and readers of the HERALD a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

MYSTERY OF SLEEP.

The following is taken from the Chicago Evening Post for December 12, 1903. It is a pleasant and refreshing series of thoughts suggested to the mind of one of the secular laity by the death of the noted philosopher, Herbert Spencer. We commend these thoughts to the thinkers in the ranks of our ministry; especially the paragraphs beginning with the words "So long as," and "All our philosophy," at the close of the article. It may be old-fashioned to believe in the Scriptures and have faith in the resurrection, but it is a good thing to be so in this day of doubt, skepticism, and unbelief, and as a consequence uncertainty:

THE MYSTERY OF SLEEP.

A doctor of divinity and a newspaper man were considering certain phases in the life of the late Herbert Spencer. The theologian could see nothing but an infinite pathos in the philosopher's inability to bring his giant intellect to the point of understanding the childlike trust with which the finitely human expresses faith in the infinitely superhuman. The newspaper man could not see the pathetic side of this problem, for to him the life of Herbert Spencer was godlike in its achievement; but the theologian's regret started a train of thought which ran somewhat like this:

Is the mystery of the infinite any greater than the mystery of many things which have to do with the finite? Is it really any more difficult to understand the faith with which the Christian, for example, falls into his long sleep than the faith with which the babe and the octogenarian, the infidel and the pagan, the agnostic and the philosopher, once every day of their lives unflinchingly submit themselves to "death's counterfeit"?

What we call death is perhaps the most profound mystery that has puzzled the mind of man since the lifeless form of Abel brought the first real sorrow to a mother's heart. But is death, after all, any more mysterious than sleep? Shakespeare felt this when he said, "O sleep, thou ape of death." David's realization of it appears in many of his songs. And the founder of Christianity spoke it with conviction when he told the ruler, "The maid is not dead, but sleepeth," and when he said, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth."

We marvel that any one can have faith in the unknown, where it touches religious belief; and then show our absolute faith in the unknown and the humanly unknowable every time we drop to sleep. We believe that in a few hours of complete unconsciousness we shall return to new life and vigor, and yet doubt the belief of those who look on death as merely a longer sleep. We trust the unknown without reserve a third part of our lives, and are assailed with doubts when we feel the lethic touch of that last slumber of all.

The philosophy of Herbert Spencer tried to embrace the universe, and he built up a system of reasoning that must remain one of the great, purely intellectual things that men have done. But so far as the solving of ultimate problems is concerned has he left us any unflinching light? His theory of evolution, apparently flawless, does not pass beyond the closing of our eyes in sleep any more than it penetrates the mystery of death. At both of these unknown things the Platos, the Aristotles, and the Spencers pause with the Luthers, the Wesleys, and the Knoxes, the intellectual giant with the intellectual pygmy, the sage with the savage, the patriarch with the babe. Of all this questioning through those alone who have faith can go further.

So long as the philosopher can not explain the mystery of sleep let him not laugh at the faith of those who look beyond the mystery of death. Until he can show us without question where evolution began let him be careful about telling us where it ends. While he trusts the unknown every day of his life, let him not wonder at those who trust the unknown after life.

"Unless ye become as little children" has more comfort and meaning for many of us than all the philosophy the world has known. "Approach thy grave as one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams" is infinitely better than "I am taking a leap in the dark."

All our philosophy will not solve the mystery of sleep, any more than it can explain the mystery of life, the mystery of evolution, or the mystery of all that lies beyond the narrow horizon of our lives. We believe at night that we shall rise refreshed and strengthened on the morrow. So may we believe that the to-day of this life has its to-morrow and that the sleep between these two will end just as surely as does the lesser slumber which now daily for us "knits up the raveled sleeve of care."

"I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep, for thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety." MCE.

STRAWS FROM THE WINDS THAT PASS.

From a late work in a popular magazine we gather the following, which in present conditions is added evidence against the evil that invaded the Church and disrupted the ranks of the believers:

In 1848 Abraham Galland made the first permanent settlement in Gallands Grove. In 1849 some of the families from the scattering Mormons, pleased with the shelter of the Grove, made cabins for themselves. Many of the early settlements of Pottawattamie, Harrison, Cass, and Shelby Counties were effected by the Mormons who left the Mormon Society at Kaneshville because of its polygamous practices. In 1854 there were one hundred and forty-seven people in the northwest part of the county on an area of thirty-six square miles, now known as Grove Township.

The settlers who followed Abraham Galland to Gallands Grove left the Mormon train at Kaneshville, now Council Bluffs, because of differences in religion and morals. Polygamy was not in accord with the moral sentiments and religious feelings of these separatists and it formed a motive for them to find homes where they could associate with those who were likeminded with regard to marriage.—From "Shelby County—A Sociological Study," by John J. Louis, in the Iowa Journal of History and Politics for January, 1904.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. Heman C. Smith returned from his mission field on December 11, in good health and spirits. He reports a good reception all along the line of his labors in Illinois, Indiana, and Michigan. At Peoria, Illinois, he was permitted to address the Sunday Lyceum, a local organization for hearing and discussing topics of interest, at Schnellbacher's hall, Sunday, November 29. He chose for the subject of his lecture, "The Marriage Relation." Of his effort the city papers of November 30, gave the following notices:

THE SUNDAY LYCEUM.

The Sunday Lyceum had a very entertaining meeting yesterday afternoon. It was addressed by Elder Smith, one of the ablest apostles of the Church of Latter Day Saints. The elder, however, belongs to that branch that does not believe in polygamy, and his apostrophy of "The Marriage Relation" was very finely rendered. A long and interesting debate followed, participated in by members of the association and others, and the society gave Elder Smith a vote of thanks.—Peoria Star.

ELDER SMITH TALKED ON "MARRIAGE RELATION."

The meeting of the Sunday Lyceum in Schnellbacher's hall yesterday afternoon was one of the most largely attended of the present season. The speaker was Elder Smith, one of the greatest Mormon preachers of this section of the country. Elder Smith has charge of the work in Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, and is one of the most eloquent expounders of the faith of the Latter Day Saints. He took as his subject "The Marriage Relation" and his address was a forceful one and created a great impression upon his audience. Elder Smith made an earnest plea for the uplifting of the standard of morality and better relations between man and wife. He said that every man should stand upon his rights to investigate the lives of other men and women and to work for a betterment of condition which is specified in the Scriptures by the command that every man should love his wife, even as Christ loved the church. In speaking of the relations between man and wife Elder Smith said: "There is no one so devoted to a man as his wife, but complete and entire affiliation can not be had where there is reservation. Jealousy is one of the chief causes of reservation and often separation. There is no woman who will not reverence her husband if he lives up to the Scriptures, which teach him that he should love his wife, even as Christ loved the church."—Peoria Herald.

Bro. Heman corrects the Herald's closing statements thus, "Reservation is one of the chief causes of jealousy and often separation. There is no womanly woman who will not reverence her husband if he lives up to the Scriptures, which teach him that he should love his wife as Christ loved the church."

He thinks the lecture resulted in good.

Bro. George H. Hilliard on December 9 wrote of his work in Michigan and Northern Indiana in presenting the law relating to consecrations and tithes as set out in the scriptures, and says that he has been well received by the Saints and friends and many have expressed themselves as being not only edified but pleased and delighted with the law relating to this part of the gospel economy. His meetings at Knox, Indiana, begin Monday, December 14, where he will continue for some days.

Bro. Columbus Scott wrote from Council Bluffs, Iowa, December 12, that he had been into Nebraska preaching some funeral sermons. He says his side, which has been sore so long, has "closed," and he is rejoicing. This will be good news to Bro. Scott's many friends.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

According to press dispatches from Rome Pope Leo XIII left the finances of the Vatican in a bad condition. He had been made suspicious of men by having large sums stolen from him, and hence kept large sums himself, and dispensed from such himself without passing them through the regular channels. This complicated the bookkeeping, and things are said to be in a tangle.

Reverend N. D. Hillis, a noted preacher in the East, in a recent sermon on the subject of "Women," gave the following warning to young men: "If you don't want women to outstrip you in the industrial race, and compel you to come to them when you want fifty cents, you would better stop drinking poor whisky and quit gambling at race-tracks and in pool-rooms. Women," he continued, "in spite of man's refusal to give them the rights and privileges to which they are entitled, are to-day in one hundred and forty-five branches of business and in instances showing more ability than the men."

A number of papers recently have given space to editorials under captions such as "The Dowies Collapse," "Zion's Fall," etc., in which the editors seem to take it for granted that Mr. Dowie is "down and out;" but is he? Will he extricate himself from the financial straits he is in at present? He certainly is a resourceful man, and may pull through all right. For the sake of his thousands of followers it is to be hoped he will. It has a bad appearance, however, for Mrs. Dowie and her son Gladstone to be living so lavishly in the French capital while their husband and father is wrestling with debt at home. What the outcome of Mr. Dowie's trouble will be it remains for time to reveal soon.

A most interesting article is one by Henry R. Evans in the December Open Court, in which he tells somewhat of the interesting and varied life of Robert-Houdin, conjuror, author, and ambassador. Many of the tricks of the great worker in "magic" are described by Mr. Evans. No doubt many of Robert-Houdin's tricks are perpetuated to-day. Mr. Evan's article gives the reader a desire to know more of the life of the great French prestidigitator. It is a very interesting article to one interested in the development of "mechanical" magic.

In the Portland Oregonian for November 24, Bro. D. A. Anderson has an article under the caption "Polygamists are apostates," in which he sets out the differences between the Utah religionists and the faith of the original Latter Day Saints Church. Bro. Anderson in his article shows the fitness of the caption he uses.

The cotton crop of the United States for 1903 is estimated to be worth over one billion dollars, and the corn crop will reach the same figure. Our gold production is eighty million dollars, not an increase over other years, but enough for our country to be called yet the Eldorado of the World.

Brn. J. W. Wight and Cornelius A. Butterworth were jointly in charge in the Australasian Mission field. The return of Bro. Wight leaves Bro. Butterworth in charge. We omitted to mention this in our notice of Bro. Wight's return in our last issue. We learn from Bro. Wight that Bro. Butterworth's health is improving; but he still needs to husband his strength, by avoiding too loud or too long effort in preaching.

The United States produces over one million tons of pig iron per month. Truly this is an age of iron and steel.

In the Marion Sentinel, of Marion, Iowa, issue for December 3, Bro. C. A. Riley challenged Reverend R. L. Campbell, who had previously given a lecture on "Mormonism," to maintain his positions in a public discussion. Bro. Riley objects to the Reorganized Church being classed with the polygamy-teaching Church in Utah, and says one of the statements against polygamy is found in the Book of Mormon.

A peculiar plague has visited Uganda, in Central Africa, and is called the sleeping sickness. Investigation has shown that the disease is confined to an area where the tsetse fly is found, and so is called a "human tsetse fly" disease. Great loss of life has followed this plague, the population of the Buvuma Island alone having been reduced from twenty-two thousand to eight thousand.

The issue of the Scientific American for December 12 is another one of the special issues put out at intervals by that enterprising journal. It is devoted to "Iron and Steel," and is profusely illustrated. The methods of iron and steel production in the United States are interestingly portrayed, in article and picture. Some idea of the present great extent of the steel industry in this country is well illustrated by the following figures: In a single month one hundred and eighty thousand steel rails have been rolled out by the rail mills of the country, the rails varying in length from thirty to sixty feet, and from twenty-five to one hundred pounds per yard. Last year there were two million, nine hundred and forty-seven thousand, nine hundred and thirty-three tons of rails made. Over two and one half million tons of steel sheets and plates were produced. Nearly eleven million one hundred-pound kegs of wire nails were made, and over one and one half million kegs of cut nails. The total output of steel was nearly fifteen million tons, or enough to furnish a steel column with a cross-section two hundred feet square and seven-hundred feet high.

Herbert Spencer, the last of the Victorian writers, had the reputation of being the most profound thinker in England. He was a hard worker, and success came slowly and was uncertain. He antedated both Darwin and Wallace in proclaiming the theory of evolution. He devoted thirty-seven years to his "Synthetic Philosophy" and wrote in all over seven hundred books, in spite of ill health which limited his mental labor to three hours a day. The money received for his work he spent in search of additional material. He never married and allowed none but intimate friends to enter his home.

Reverend H. Clay Trumbull, editor of the Sunday School Times, died of apoplexy, December 8, at his home in Philadelphia. He was engaged in Sunday-school work for many years and his name has often been seen in our columns. He served in the Union Army during the Civil War and was captured by the enemy and tried on the charge of having acted as a spy under a flag of truce, but was vindicated. His son, C. G. Trumbull, has succeeded him in the editorship of the Times.

According to a press report from Rome, dated December 18, light was shed on the financial affairs of the Vatican by Cardinal Gotti bringing to Pope Pius nine million dollars in bank notes, with the following explanation: "Your holiness, the lamented Leo, just before his death, confided to me the money which I now lay at your feet, saying that if I succeeded him I was to use it as I thought best, but that if another took his place, I was to turn the money over to him after a period of four months had elapsed. This I now do in the presence of Monseigneur Marzolini, who has been the only other person to share the secret." It was further reported that about the time Cardinal Gotti was delivering this large sum of money to Pope Pius an electrician who was working in the late pope's chamber found in a hole in the wall several loosely-tied bags which were found to contain one million, eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Thus nearly eleven million dollars of the Vatican's wealth was suddenly accounted for.

COMFORT IN THE RESURRECTION.

SERMON DELIVERED BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, AT THE FUNERAL OF SR. J. A. GUNSOLLEY, AT LAMONI, IOWA, DECEMBER 16, 1903.

Reported by L. A. Gould.

At the death of Lazarus, according to the New Testament history, the sisters in their mourning were impressed with the thought that if Jesus, the Christ, had been there at the time of the sickness of Lazarus, he would not have died. Those women when they met the Savior on his return, after the message had reached him that Lazarus was dead, met him with this cry, that had he been there their brother would not have died. It is recorded of him that when he heard the news that Lazarus was dead, he wept.

We have from this short statement the spectacle presented to us of the humanity's side of the Redeemer, and his recognition of the sadness of the parting of those who had been in life, when separated by death. And it has always seemed to me, if there had been any time in the history of the man's life (treating him as a man), during his sojourn upon the earth, when he might have disabused the minds of his followers and all subsequent believers of any mistake in reference to the resurrection from the dead, this was the grandest opportunity that ever occurred to him. And I have been surprised of late years at the almost constant effort made in certain directions among those of the higher criticism, to destroy man's faith in the resurrection. For if we attempt to reason upon it we are driven to the condition of one who has written in reference to the death of Herbert Spencer, a great philosopher and author who had become a world-renowned writer, and who has indeed done much to fasten scientific ideas upon the world; and in reference to his effort to get rid of the supposed origin of life as given in the Bible, suggests this thought in reference to Herbert Spencer himself, and with him all philosophers of the same character: Until such time as these men can tell us the mystery of sleep, and how it is, and why it is, that a man may lie down to rest at night, knowing that he shall become unconscious, knowing that while thus unconscious he has no watchcare over himself, can not prevent the incoming of evil-minded men, or evil-minded spirits if there are such, but lies down with confidence that when the night shall have passed he shall come to his normal condition again. And, though he may rise with renewed strength and vigor, the mystery of his sleep is unsolved still; and until these philosophers can thus tell us the mystery of sleep, how dare they call in question our faith in regard to the mystery of death? Until they can assure us by some means, through which they may reach our investigating minds, the mystery of this confidence and trust of ours in reference to lying down to sleep so carelessly in reference to the coming of the morrow, with such supreme assurance that our unconsciousness will be but momentary and we shall rise in normal conditions; until they can do that, what use is there for them to attempt to disturb our confidence in the creation, as we have the recital in God's holy book? How dare they, how can they call in question our implicit trust, that when the time shall come for us, we may lie down to rest in the grave for the unconscious time that may be allotted us, even with the same assurance, the same holy confidence, that we lie down to rest at night? And until those men can thus explain the mystery of sleep, or the mystery of death, they had better leave the task unattempted; and disturb not our trust in the Creator.

It does not matter to us, as a community, how often death invades our number; it does not matter how often one is taken out of the family circle, here and there; we have learned that it is a condition in which we live, that the young may die, the old must die; and it is confidently impressed upon us in spite of everything we may do, that we are unprepared for death,—that is to say, that the living are unprepared for the going away of those who have lived among them. And it matters not how frequently the attack may be made upon the constantly lessening circle of a man's acquaintance, he is never satisfied, never contented, never feels that the stroke has come without inflicting injury and harm. We feel this. We may reason upon it as we may, we feel it.

It is remarkable that the Savior at the time that he was visited by these sisters, made no attempt to disturb their hopes and trust in the resurrection from the dead. And it is also remarkable, that he said to them at the same time, "Thy brother shall live again." And I have no doubt that when he said it, he said it with such depth of earnestness that it must have been a comfort to those mourning sisters. I am sure, had I been standing by, having suffered as I myself have suffered, and as others have suffered, and as our brother to-day is suffering from the attack of death, taking from me one on whom I had fixed mine affections, and I could have heard him say to them as he did say, "Thy brother shall live again," I should have felt the thrill that must have passed through the minds of those women, that they could so confidently answer him, "Yes, I know he shall rise in the resurrection at the last day."

I have wondered who taught them the doctrine of the resurrection. I have wondered whether it might have been that he in his loving kindness in the conversation had by the fireside, in the conversation had when he was visiting at the house partaking of their hospitality, he could have taught them of this doctrine of the resurrection, so that they with others might have comprehended what he meant when he said about his own tabernacle, "I have power to lay it down; I have power to take it up again." That they might have been permitted to comprehend what he meant when he said, "I am the way, the resurrection, and the life;" and that they might have comprehended to the fullest extent what he meant by saying, "He that believeth on me shall never die." "They who believe shall not taste death." And we who read those words, we who are permitted to comprehend to a certain extent through revelation the condition that lies over on the other side and awaits those who are living here, we are never contented with the striking from our midst of those whom we love; and the mystery of death is just as great as it ever has been. Our sympathies are just as great; our feelings just as tender as they have ever been; and we can not become accustomed to this constant visitation of this messenger that cuts short the thread of life. We feel in some sense that incomprehensible doubt and hesitancy in regard to the fulfillment of the promise, even the promise upon which we lean.

I read in the thirty-seventh Psalm, and I find the promise made to the righteous something like ten or eleven times, that they shall inherit the earth. And in our practical religion we do not look to the other side with the contemplation that some do, that it is beyond the bounds, but that it shall be through the loving kindness of the transforming power of the Almighty that the earth upon which we live and from which we get our constant living shall in some sense be transformed by him, by his extraordinary power, into a dwelling-place that shall be fitted for the righteous, for those who are to be found worthy of inheritance, under that wonderful promise which has been made and has been recorded by the Psalmist. And as we contemplate it, we learn that he himself was an advocate of the resurrection from the dead, and trusted in it; and we have no grander expression touching the condition of those who are beyond, than the simple statement made by him, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." And the oldest book of the Bible, according to some, a wonderful gathering of the proverbs and faithful expressions, comes to us with remarkable statements. And Job himself was satisfied that notwithstanding the troubles and the sorrows of the living, notwithstanding all that may occur in the corruption of this body, yet the time shall ultimately come that he shall stand face to face with the Savior, and shall be satisfied when he also awakes with the likeness of his Master.

In later times, by the voice of revelation, it has been given unto us to comprehend to a certain extent the condition of some of those who shall be on the other side. And I read a few words because they are practical, and because they bring home to us the conditions under which we live, largely, and represent to us the qualifications of those who shall be found worthy of the highest, the noblest, and the best that is in the gift of God:

And again, we bear record for we saw and heard, and this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ, concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just: They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of his burial, being buried in the water in his name, and this according to the commandment which he has given, that by keeping the commandments, they might be washed and cleansed from all their sins, and receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of the hands of him who is ordained and sealed unto this power; and who overcome by faith, and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds forth upon all those who are just and true; they are they who are the church of the Firstborn; they are they into whose hands the Father has given all things: they are they who are priests and kings, who have received of his fullness, and of his glory, and are priests of the Most High after the order of Melchisedec, which was after the order of Enoch, which was after the order of the only begotten Son; wherefore, as it is written, they are gods, even the sons of God; wherefore all things are theirs, whether life or death, or things present, or things to come, all are theirs, and they are Christ's, and Christ is God's; and they shall overcome all things; wherefore let no man glory in man, but rather let him glory in God, who shall subdue all enemies under his feet; these shall dwell in the presence of God and his Christ for ever and ever: these are they whom he shall bring with them, when he shall come in the clouds of heaven, to reign on the earth over his people; these are they who shall have part in the first resurrection; these are they who shall come forth in the resurrection of the just; these are they who are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly place, the holiest of all; these are they who have come to an innumerable company of angels; to the general assembly and the church of Enoch, and of the Firstborn; these are they whose names are written in heaven, where God and Christ are the judge of all; these are they who are just men made perfect through Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, who wrought out this perfect atonement through the shedding of his own blood; these are they whose bodies are celestial, whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God the highest of all; whose glory the sun of the firmament is written of as being typical.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5.

Whatever doubt we may have had, it seems to me that the voice of inspiration should dissipate that doubt; and so far as it is possible for man to approve himself unto him who hath the power of life and death, it lies within the reach of all; and those who make use of the means which is offered to them, are within the limits of this promise to them who are Christ's and God's.

I take up the New Testament Scriptures, and I find in one of the writings of the Apostle Paul, a matter of comfort that I read. And as I do so please bear in mind what I have read from this word of revelation to the Church. Paul writing to the Thessalonians, in the fourth chapter, says: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep." We have laid our dead away from time to time over in Rose Hill Cemetery, until it has grown to be quite a city, the silent city of the dead. Those who have been laid away there are sleeping. And while we may not understand all the mystery of death any more than we understand all the mystery of sleep, here we have the Apostle writing concerning that very class of people. And we are within the pales of those to whom he wrote, and the words are applicable to our time and to us:

I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

And these are they who shall come with him, whom God shall bring with him, according to the revelation and voice of the Spirit unto us.

For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord.

What a promise that is, and how like the Master when he said to those sorrowing sisters, "Thy brother shall live again"! When the earth shall have finished the order of its creation, when it shall have completed the design which was intended; when upon it shall be wrought out all the conditions in which humanity may be called to take a part; when it shall have accomplished the object of its creation; then will this final scene come, and there will be such rejoicing, such an accomplishment of hope, such a fervent realization of all that man may have been promised, or that he has hoped for, that we may well form an impression of the apostle's words and be comforted thereby.

I read again, and you will see how completely the reading shows the inspiration of those ancient writers to have been of the same character as the inspiration of that inspiring Spirit through which the vision from which I have read has been given: "Blessed and holy are they who have part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years. And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison." I do not need to read further than this of the voice of the revelation through John on the Isle of Patmos. It is sufficient for us to know that those who are Christ's are those who shall be his at his coming, at the resurrection of the just. Then shall it be accomplished for them that they shall not only escape from the power of the second death, but they have arrived unto that life which is for ever and ever.

I read from the twenty-second chapter of Revelation, also, that which ought to be a source of comfort to-day, if we indeed are within the pales of the promises of the gospel of the Son of God:

And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. And there shall be no more curse; but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him: and they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign for ever and ever. And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to shew unto his servants the things which must shortly be done. Behold, I come quickly; blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book. And I John saw these things, and heard them.

We have here the confident testimony of one to whom was shown the conditions after the great conflict should have been ended, and the city which the people of God have been waiting for, we may say the very central capital city, the city described here, shall come.

I am impressed with the thought that the circumstances which have gathered us together, have a pressing significance so far as your speaker is concerned. Our brother has lost his loved companion, and is left with the care of three little children. Thirty-five years ago I lost a companion of about the same age, and was left with three little children. It is not needful for me to say whether or not the occurrence is vividly brought to my mind. It took me some time to finally say unto him whose praise we sing, and to whom we offer our prayers, that all comprehending and forceful expression, "Thy will be done." It seemed to me so hard, so wrong, and I had almost said so cruel, that in one, in the heyday of life, when there should be no let nor hindrance to the joyousness of living, there should be sown the seeds of death in the mortal flesh and frame, and that that companion should go out from me, wasting, wasting by sickness. And it seemed to me there could be left no sting or pain, no sorrow or condition of any kind that could bring me face to face more completely with despair than that. And always when conditions of this kind occur, the struggle that I passed through recurs to me. And it was not until I faced the condition of my younger brother, not until I stood face to face with a spirit that had gone wrong, not until I realized that the man around whom we had thrown so much affection, and for whom we were prepared to suffer and do so much, was, as it might be said, a man living a living death, did I comprehend that there was still within the grasp of the Almighty to permit sorrows that were worse than death, worse than the taking out from the circle a loved and loving companion. For it would have been far better for me, indeed I may say that I would have followed his body to the grave with a far more comprehending sorrow, a greater resignation, than I had, being compelled to put him away from among the living, while yet he was living.

So, I am prepared to say to my suffering brother, Be not cast down overmuch; be not overcome with sorrow; for the conditions under which this separation has been wrought are of such a peculiar character that always the remembrance of the companionship will be sanctified by a contemplation of that that is noblest, truest, grandest, and most beautiful in human character and in human association.

May Camelia Gunsolley, only daughter of Lyman and Sarah E. Fisher, was born June 21, 1870, at Shenandoah, Iowa. Baptized into the Church August 4, 1878. Resided in Shenandoah and vicinity until her marriage to J. A. Gunsolley, March 19, 1890, since which time she has lived at Lamoni, Iowa, and you know what her life has been among you. Her last sickness was a time of great suffering, extending over a period of about four months, death coming to her relief December 12, at four minutes past twelve at noon. She was unconscious the last twenty-four hours and did not rally so as to speak to loved ones. She was associated with the various Church societies, such as Sunday-school, Religio, Daughters of Zion, Prayer Union, Patronesses of Graceland College, in each and all of which she was an earnest worker. Her pleasure was to visit and minister to the afflicted and unfortunate. She leaves to mourn her departure, husband, three children, the youngest of whom has been afflicted with paralysis of the lower limbs since September 12, last; father and mother, residents of Lamoni; two brothers, E. H. and M. C. Fisher, of Boston, Massachusetts, the latter of whom is her twin and is present at her funeral.

This is a brief record, and yet it covers the time of life, in the flesh, of one of earth's fairest daughters; and illustrates to us how it is possible for one to become endeared, not only to a family, but to a community; one who has so faithfully filled every department of life, who has moved in spheres of usefulness, and has impressed herself upon her associates as one of such specially affectionate desires, and who so completely has sought to identify herself with every measure of good instituted among those with whom she was associated, shunning no labor, avoiding no care that was possible for her, within her reach, and within her powers of endurance to accomplish. It is a lesson that ought to be fraught with good to us all. And I believe that so far as this lesson is practicable for us we will profit by it, that we will take cognizance of that that was beautiful in the character of our sister, that we may remember the assiduousness with which she discharged her duty before God. Submitting herself to his ordinances, she became identified with the body of people recognized as the Church, through which she believed, and through which you and I believe, that she placed herself in such condition that it has been written of her, by the sapphire pen of him who keeps the record upon high of the family of God (her name being inscribed with those who, upon earth, not only keep the faith, but keep it faithfully, and whose name is written among those in the flesh that had the courage to accept Jesus Christ as he has been revealed to them in the New Testament scripture); that that inscription which made her name to appear upon the family book of God on earth was borne record of on high, and her name inscribed with them of whom it has been written, Blessed are they upon whom the first resurrection has its power; for they are free from the fear of the second death.

And what a wonderful blessing it is to us to-day, to contemplate the condition of those of whom it is written, and I have quoted it frequently, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection;" but I am pleased that in this version of the Scriptures from which I am reading it says, "Blessed and holy are they who have part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." And when the thousand years are expired, then may come the day of trial. But to us who are looking forward to that time, if we can do so with the assurance that we feel in reference to our sister whose body lies before us, and whose remains loving hands shall take to their final resting-place, we shall be permitted to see over on the other side and recognize that her spirit is now mingling with the good, with the redeemed, with the sanctified; and shall be prepared to see, if we remain and are among those when he shall come, to see her in that glorious throng, coming with them who shall be with her, to greet them who shall be caught up in the air, and returning with the Lord shall be for ever with the Lord.

We have in the Scriptures a declaration concerning some who shall never go where God and Christ are. But the promise is made to those who shall endure faithful unto the end, having made the proper preparation in this life, that they shall not only be where Christ is, but they shall be where God and Christ are, and they shall live in the happified condition which is referred to in the closing chapter of Revelation.

I felt when I was called upon to officiate upon this occasion that I was in a sense unfit; the circumstances returned so vividly to my mind of the struggle through which I passed, and the subsequent trials through the affliction that met my brother David. But having passed through that affliction, having become satisfied that the loss I felt to be so great was indeed minor to some that might have taken place, I finally became satisfied (I can not say contented, but satisfied), until I was able to say, "I will trust him, though he slay me." And from that time on, whatever may have occurred has in no sense shaken my confidence in God, nor broken my trust, nor my hope in the resurrection from the dead.

I am but a little ways this side of the final accounting and as often as these conditions recur, and I meet those who, like these, are called upon to mourn, I feel like saying to them, Fix your eyes upon the mark of the high calling. Never forsake the dignity and the honor of the hope of life in Christ Jesus, here and hereafter. Never by any sense, in any way, betray the confidence that you may have had in the Almighty. And trusting him through all the peculiar and devious conditions of life, carry a perfect conception of human character over on the other side, where by and by you shall meet those who have gone before; and meeting them, I confidently believe we shall know them, recognize them, and shall be permitted to greet them as we would greet them here, with an increase of Christian love, as those who have passed through the difficulties and trials and have overcome, and to whom the promises have been made, and will be fulfilled, "They shall sit down with the righteous at the right hand of God."

THOSE WHO LIVE IN GLASS HOUSES SHOULD NOT THROW STONES.

The National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association was organized to oppose the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints as taught during the lifetime of Joseph Smith, and as now taught by the Reorganization under the presidency of his son Joseph; only citing to the Brighamites and some other apostate factions and members as their idea of what these doctrines had produced and would produce, generally taking the testimony of these same apostate factions or members as their principal evidence.

One must take their interpretation of what the doctrines of the Latter Day Saints are to make a case against them; and their interpretation is founded largely, if not wholly, upon the testimony of those whose lives condemn the doctrines they profess to believe, instead of permitting the golden rule to prevail, and letting those who are and have been representatives of these doctrines in precept and practice interpret them and testify of what they are.

The courts of the land, after hearing the evidence from every source, and considering it unprejudicially, have decided that the Church organized in 1830 and continuing till 1844, and the Church reorganized in 1851 to 1860 is the same in doctrine and practice; but the National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association, after a prejudicial investigation and upon the strength of the testimony of apostates alone, have decided that the Church organized in 1830 to 1844 and the Brighamites are the same, thus agreeing with the Brighamites instead of accepting the decision of the courts of the land, and like the Brighamites are showing themselves to be unfavorable to the decision of the United States tribunals and more favorable to Church tribunals.

But this is not the only point in which they agree with the Brighamites, and are more favorable to what they teach and practice than to what is taught and practiced by the Reorganization, for the Brighamites teach that they have authority to baptize for the remission of sins, and the church whose officials brought into existence the National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association will accept as having been authoritatively baptized such as have been baptized by Brighamites, and will accept them into church fellowship. The following testimony is given in proof:

"PREPARATION, Iowa, March 27, 1891.

"This is to certify that I know two persons that had been baptized into the Brigham Young church in Cache Valley, Utah, by a Brighamite elder, and confirmed a member of the same church by the laying on of hands. The names of the persons baptized were John Davenport and wife of Egypt, Mills County, Iowa. These persons were received into the "Christian Church" on their former baptism by the Reverend Dow Cook, minister of the Christian Church, and he, Dow Cook, acknowledged publicly that their baptism was a Christian baptism.

"R. A. GUNSOLLEY."

This position of the Christian Church favoring Brighamite principles and practices is supplemented by an answer to a question found in the Christian Evangelist of March 30, 1893:

"The gospel took men as it found them, and told them to go and sin no more. We not only find traces of these things in the epistles, but even of a man having more than one wife. It seems to have been the inspired policy to exercise the greatest possible toleration. When a man with two wives was converted he was not required to wrong one by putting her away, but at the same time the disapproval of the church was placed on his marriage relations by making him ineligible to office in the church."

In the teachings of the Church organized from 1830 to 1844, nothing favoring polygamy in any way can be found, but when men who were ordained to represent the Church taught that which in any wise favored this corrupt practice they were silenced at once, and, unless they repented, were severed from Church membership, and so it is in the Reorganized Church. The above is sufficient to show that the Christian Church through her representatives is more in agreement with the Brighamite principles and authority than the Latter Day Saints; for the latter has never received any into the Church who have been confirmed into the Brighamite Church upon that confirmation, neither will they put such an interpretation upon the "inspired policy" as to argue that "when a man with two wives was converted he was not required to wrong one by putting her away." This is, however, the argument of the Brighamites to-day. They claim they married their wives in good faith, and they consider it would be wronging them to put them away since the Supreme Court has decided they should not contract any more polygamous marriages, and hence are still living with them; and according to the above evidences all that such persons would need to do would be to present themselves to the representatives of the Christian Church, be received as members, and they would be permitted to live with their present wives, and be considered by the Christian Evangelist to be following the "inspired policy." According to the principle expressed by Jesus, let the Christian Church withhold the stones they are throwing until they are free from Brighamite sins. They pretend to be throwing stones at something sinful, and yet are more favorable to the sinful thing they pretend to be opposing than is the Reorganized Church which they have it in their hearts to oppose and destroy, though they have not as yet proven that we are guilty of any sin, even with the help of the Brighamite and other apostate testimony.

THE GLORY OF GOD.

"The glory of God is intelligence."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

We are prone to think of the glory of God as manifested in the splendor and light of his immediate presence, which is so marvelous that no sinful man may behold it and live. Perhaps this thought sometimes hinders us from seeing that his glory is no less visible in all that surrounds us. The analogy may still be carried out—the sinful man can not see the glory of God in these things and live, as a sinful man; to see that glory, would mean the opening of his eyes and the conversion of his soul.

The Psalmist tells us, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge." On a beautiful spring morning, when the ice of winter is gone out of the rivers and the soft winds are blowing and God is "renewing the face of the land," and creative energy is at work all about us, we may see a manifestation of glory. We see it again when autumn has come and the blue haze is over the distant hills, when the broad fields and orchards have yielded their increase, and the autumn leaves are tinted by the great Artist. Day unto day uttereth speech. We go out at night, when the world is filled with silvery moonlight and the stars are crooning again the ancient song that was theirs when the sons of God shouted for joy, and we say with the Psalmist, "Night unto night sheweth knowledge."

It has been so ever since God separated darkness from light, and called the one day, and the other night; ever since the great Intelligence lighted the great light that made the day, and thrust the shadows down to the nether side of the earth to form the night.

There is no place or time where the voice of created things is not sounding the praise of the Creator. The upheaval of a little clod that lets the violet into the light is not less a manifestation of power and glory than is the upheaval of a mountain-top to free the fires of Pelee.

Note this, however, the heavens declare his glory; they simply declare it. His real glory is not in what he has done or in what he has created; but in what he is. It is so with man. Man must ever be somewhat greater than the deed that he does. An ignoble man may not do a noble deed, unless he be used merely as a tool. It must spring from a noble impulse that is the fruit of a noble trait. Man's work must ever be but a partial revelation of himself, and ever below himself. The architect may carry a hod and carry it well, because that is below his capabilities; but the hod-carrier who is no more than a hod-carrier can not possibly design a house. The honor of man and the glory of God is never fully revealed in what they have done but in what they are.

Primitive minds may satisfy themselves by saying with Moses that God has made the earth and heavens and all that in them is; but the higher conception of God leads one to go on with John and others to declare not alone what God has done, but what he is,—God is love, God is power, God is justice.

God is God because in all attributes of excellence he is perfect. His love never lacks, his justice never errs, his power is never used to oppress, his judgment is faultless. It is that which makes his ways higher than our ways. We may count all our excellencies, but there is always some little flaw somewhere that largely counterbalances them and keeps us from true greatness. We realized this of late when called to preach the funeral sermon of a young man. He had been apparently well endowed for the struggle of life. He had an athlete's body and a bright mind. He held a good position. Yet there was something lacking from his intelligence so that he might not appreciate or use all these excellent attributes, and in a moment of despondency he threw away his chances and ended his own life. Many men, like Poe and Burns and Byron, have failed of success because of a defect in an otherwise great intelligence.

God being perfect in all his attributes it may seem useless to attempt to point out the one characteristic which is his chief glory. Yet if we may discover the one attribute which rules and balances all the others we have found the keystone to the perfect arch of his greatness. We consider the quality of love; with us it is not always a glory. Improperly expressed it becomes a disgrace and a harm. Even in our home life we permit our affection to hinder a proper discipline of our children. God never does that. Whom he loveth he chasteneth. Now it occurs to us that the quality we lack that he has, making our love a menace and his a blessing, is intelligence. So also with power. The power that we have we often use in such a way that it harms rather than benefits. We use it to oppress others or to pull down the temple about our own heads.

What is it that enables God to use his power always wisely? Is it not intelligence? What is it that keeps his justice from harshness and his mercy from too great lenience? It is intelligence.

Now then we may repeat our text. It consists of six words: "The glory of God is intelligence."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

Revelation has never at any time voiced a more sublime sentiment. The man who wrote that was given a most wonderful idea of the glory of God.

The vital point to us is that we are striving for the same glory that God has. Not that we expect to become so great as God; but we do strive for the celestial glory, the highest glory, God's glory. Paul tells us that if we suffer with Christ we become joint heirs with him to the glory of God.

If the glory of God is intelligence, it must be that our glory shall be intelligence, or because of intelligence. We read further in the revelation quoted above that "he that keepeth his commandments, receiveth truth and light, until he is glorified in truth, and knoweth all things." Glory increases with an increase of intelligence until man knows all things, and there is perfect glory and perfect intelligence.

Do not gather from this that only college professors or scientists or wise men of the world will be glorified. Often the greatest of them are not intelligent. They are not in harmony with God. God is intelligence, and he that is not in harmony with him and his teaching is not intelligent. Nor is he intelligent who neglects that which will make him wise unto salvation, even though he gain the whole other world of science and literature.

If one would increase his glory, then let him increase his intelligence. In other words, let him add to his store of wisdom and of knowledge. God has told us if we lack wisdom to come to him; if we lack knowledge, to study good books. Man and God work together in perfecting the intellect.

"Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith. Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36. This was given touching one certain institution, yet it has a broader application. Any place where men come with reverent purpose to get wisdom and knowledge, by prayer, and by study, becomes a house of God and a house of glory; because there there is an increase of intelligence, which is the "glory of God."

You see we stand on a broad platform—the word of God first, and after that any good book; all are open to study until we "know all things."

Prayer and study and meditation and labor will add to our glory and make it bright; not alone for what we have done, but because of what we are.

IS THE ATLANTIC COAST SINKING?

According to recent surveys, the coast at and around the city of Boston is sinking into the sea at about the rate of a foot a century, having lowered seventy-one hundredths of a foot in the past seventy-two years. That the fate of Boston is to be shared by the whole Atlantic coast is asserted by an editorial writer in the Engineering and Mining Journal. He says:

"The slow sinking of the Atlantic coast is a fact well known to American geologists, but the definite measurements of the rate of that subsidence is a matter of scientific interest. As long ago as 1868, the late Professor George H. Cook, state geologist of New Jersey, investigated this matter very fully, collecting numerous observations indicative of the encroachment of the sea on the New Jersey shore. Later investigations, made by the United States Geological Survey, have demonstrated that this is no local occurrence, but a condition characteristic of the entire Atlantic seaboard.

"In other parts of the world similar observations have been made. Along the eastern coast of England the sinking of the land relative to sea-level has been a serious matter during recorded history; villages lie buried under the salt-marshes and the waves now sweep over submerged forests. On the other side of the North Sea, the Norwegian coast is rising rapidly, that is, geologically speaking. Observations show that the Scandinavian coasts are being elevated at a mean rate of two and one half feet per century; the maximum rate, at the North Cape, being nearly twice as much. The Pacific side of South America is rising rapidly, Charles Darwin, when on the Beagle, having been one of the first to draw attention to the raised beaches on the coast of Chile, where plaited reeds and other evidences of human handiwork were found buried among marine shell deposits at a height of eighty-five feet above tidewater.

"Such observations as these, usually disregarded by the nonscientific, become impressive to the average man when he finds, by the evidence of landmarks, that the ground under his very feet is unstable. It brings home the great facts which underlie the study of geology, and suggests that even the apparently catastrophic events of geologic history, as written on the pages of rock and stone, are the result of quiet forces acting with that unwearied patience 'which hardens the ruby in a million years.' When Sir Charles Lyell saw the stupendous folds and inversions of strata which characterize the Swiss Alps, he remarked that all such apparently violent results might well have taken place without any interruption of the habitable state of these mountains, had man been then in existence, which he was not. Considerations such as these enlarge the imagination and serve, as astronomy does, to illustrate the poetry which lies often buried deep in dust, amid the dry pages of science."—Literary Digest, July 18, 1903.

CHEMISTRY OF SOILS AS RELATED TO THE YIELD OF CROPS.

The Secretary of Agriculture announces that the Bureau of Soils has just finished an exhaustive investigation of the chemistry of soils as related to the yield of crops. The results indicate that practically all soils have sufficient available plant food for normal crop yields, and that this supply is constantly maintained through natural agencies in the soils dissolving the material of the soil grains. The difference in yield is dependent upon the condition and kind of cultivation and rotation of crops, maintaining certain necessary physical conditions in the soil, under which this plant food can be used by the crop. A bulletin has just gone to press giving the details of the investigation, and discussing the influence of climate, texture of soil, rotation, fertilizers, and soil management upon the yield of crops. The work is based upon analyses by new and exceedingly sensitive methods, by which the amount of plant food in the soil moisture itself, which is the great nutritive solution for the support of crops, has been determined, and not by digesting the soils in acids which attack the inert mineral matter of the soils.

While the conclusions appear to be in conflict with the opinions held for so many years by agricultural chemists, they are in strict conformity with the experience of good farmers in all countries, and with actual facts which have long been established by agricultural chemists. The fertility of the soil is thus shown to be due to physical causes which control the supply of water and plant food which it contains, as the soil moisture in all cases appears to be about the same in composition and concentration. The fertility is therefore controlled by a physical cause, and a chemical examination of a soil can not be expected to indicate the yield of a crop.

It is believed that a simple physical method will be devised for determining the relative fertility of soils.—Scientific American, September 19, 1903.

A Pretty Custom.

The Christmas feeding of the birds is prevalent in many of the provinces of Norway and Sweden. Bunches of oats are placed on the roofs of houses, on trees and fences, for them to feed upon. Two or three days before, cart-loads of sheaves are brought into town for this purpose. Both rich and poor buy and place them everywhere.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

The Last Gift.

LINES ACCOMPANYING A FLORAL TRIBUTE ON THE BIER OF SR. MAY GUNSOLLEY.

By Sr. M. Walker.

We bring the last gift we can ever bestow
Upon her who was lovely in life,
Whom Jesus has called from her loved ones below
From the cares of this world and its strife—

To enter the mansion he went to prepare
For those who should love and endure
Even unto the end in patience and faith,
And whose hearts by his love are made pure.

There sweet be her rest till he brings her with him
When he comes with his angels of light
To her home on this earth, redeemed from the curse
Of sorrow, and sickness, and blight.

Fear Not the Tempest.

When o'er Zion's ship the tempest lowers,
When raging storms may sweep her floors,
Yet sweetly calm our vision soars

All peril past.

With heavenly courage all serene,
We stand the storm and calm between,
And read far through the misty sheen

A "Safe at last."

With sterling valor heaven-born,
Of every earthly terror shorn,
We'll wait the dawning of that morn—

The voyage done.

Those seas beyond—who here can measure
The holy joy and boundless pleasure,
Or count the wealth of real treasure

For every one?

Let God be for us, the world may oppose
Her forces all in combat close,
Yet through the mist a strong light shows
From on high.

Let God be for us, where then the power
To spread dismay for even an hour?
His strength will make the arch foe cower
In the by and by.

Let the gospel ship then face the billows,
Her structure is not formed of willows;
Her crew scorns ease on sluggard pillows;
Let breakers foam.

Though foes attack with wrath and bluster,
Truth assailed will show more luster.
The grand old ship,—we'll safely trust her
To harbor home.

JAMES YATES.

There Came a Little Child.

There came a little child to earth,
Long ago;
And the angels of God proclaimed his birth,
High and low.

Out in the night, so calm and still,
Their song was heard;
For they knew that the child on Bethlehem's hill,
Was Christ, the Lord.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Reading for January Meetings of Daughters of Zion Locals.

THE SCOPE AND RESULTS OF MOTHERS' CLASSES.

There is a homely old adage which says, "You must first catch your fish before you can fry them." But its meaning is of especial value to the kindergartner who is about to organize "A Mothers' Class." The time has passed for educated mothers, in intelligent communities, to lift their eyebrows when told that a mothers' class is about to be started in the neighborhood and that it is to be conducted by a kindergartner who is an unmarried woman. Educational conventions, child-study clubs, scientific magazines and, sometimes, the pulpit, have brought to such a class of women the facts that chemistry, biology, psychology, and sociology, all of them comparatively recent sciences, have revealed many things, which will be of value to them in the bringing up of their children.

In such communities the kindergartner needs only to have tact, a certain amount of polish of manner, a due sense of her own limitations, and a "divine enthusiasm" for the cause which she has, at least, partially mastered, and she wins the day. The mothers themselves will teach her many things and give her flashes of insight far deeper than they realize. She has only to hold to the few eternal verities which have made the kindergarten a power in the land, and the mothers will supply illustration after illustration of the genuineness of the truth she has proclaimed, and will astonish her with its applicability to the details of ordinary home life.

The intelligent mother is always willing to listen to anything which may help her to rationalize her efforts in her child's behalf, if she can be convinced that this is the case.

In ignorant, or even in half-informed neighborhoods, much tact and ingenuity have to be exercised, first to bring the mothers together, and then to continue the class long enough to enable them to realize that there are certain inborn instincts in all children which should be understood; that there are certain laws of child-nature which can not be violated without bringing inevitable punishment. This is not an easy task. Yet the mother-heart is there waiting to be touched.

One of the most successful devices for getting these mothers interested in mothers' classes is visiting in the home of the children. Another efficient method of getting into the hearts of the mothers to whom you would teach the better way, is to invite them to the birthday celebration, Christmas and Easter festivals, Valentine parties, and similar red-letter days of the kindergarten. Every mother enjoys seeing her child made happy, and the sight brings her a step nearer to the woman who has given this joy to her child.

Next in importance in this socializing process, comes a cup of good, warm coffee, with perhaps a bit of coffee-bread. It is well known, in social circles, that the click of the cup breaks the ice of reserve, and it is just as true among these shy, oftentimes tired, mothers in the lower walks of life as it is among the rich. It warms them up in more senses of the word than one.

Experience from all over the land shows that, except in the neighborhoods of the abjectly poor, the mothers soon offer to provide these simple refreshments and enjoy dividing themselves into groups of entertainment committees, each serving in turn. The mothers' class thus becomes their social club. Any real activity in which all can take part is as valuable in a mother's class as in a kindergarten. Music is always a help, finger songs may be learned, or ball games for the baby.

Another common device has been to have kindergarten songs and games with the children and mothers together, then send the children with an assistant to the park or to another room and explain in simple fashion to the mothers the value of the exercise.

Some easily-accomplished hand-work may be brought in, such as cutting out of patterns for children's garments. In such cases a ready-made garment should always be shown to encourage the class to try to make one like it. A lesson on the construction of simple toys with which to amuse the younger children on rainy days leads naturally into a talk about the value of keeping children employed as the best preventive of mischief. The making of Christmas cards and childish valentines has started many a mother of limited means in the right way to cultivate her children's self-activities.

Among foreign-born populations an eager interest has been awakened by showing pictures of famous places in the "old country" and by means of some one of them who speaks English calling from them reminiscences of their own early days or their trip across the Atlantic, thus giving them an opportunity to describe what is the great event by which they record time. It is well to follow such an afternoon by one in which the famous and beautiful places and buildings of America are shown and explained in order that they may realize that this country also has a history and a future of which they may be proud.

A whole volume could be filled with such suggestions as these. Yet each live kindergartner creates her own methods of winning the interest and confidence of her mothers. It must always be kept in mind that such meetings, however, are introductory merely to the real aim of a kindergarten class for mothers. It must never descend into a gossip-club. Nor must the kindergartner rest satisfied to have it continue an amusement hour much as such hours may be needed in some neighborhoods.

A mothers' class, to be a real vital power in a community, must work as mothers.

The divine-right-of-kings idea has worked untold mischief in the past. A man born a king must do kingly deeds! But where is the unwritten history of the wrongs and crimes that have been committed under the equally erroneous idea that because a woman has borne a child her treatment of it must be motherly? I could cause your blood to curdle with harrowing details of the treatment by mothers from which our humane society rescues children. But we need not turn to the debased element of society to see a mother who is injuring her child even while loving him. Who does not know the weak mother who yields to her child's caprice, the vain mother who overdresses her child, the ambitious mother who pushes her child's studies at the sacrifice of his health and character, the preoccupied mother who never plays with her child, the fault-finding mother who never praises her child's honest efforts, the unsympathetic mother who never sees the child's point of view? But I need not add to the list to convince you that great as is the power of mother-love, it needs to be rationalized, to be made conscious of its power, or else it may work untold evil as well as immeasurable good.

(Concluded next week.)

Resolution of Sympathy.

Inasmuch as our beloved sister, May C. Gunsolley, has been called from the scenes of earth, wherein we did so much enjoy her presence, be it

Resolved that, as the Daughters of Zion of the Lamoni Society, we deeply mourn for her and recognize that in her we have lost a valued friend, a faithful member of our society.

We have rejoiced in her exemplary motherhood, her worthy example in the various callings of life, and while we mourn, not as those who have no hope, we feel that to us her vacant place can not be filled. And, because our hearts are so deeply touched, we can more nearly realize how great is the loss to those of her family circle. We hereby offer to them our earnest sympathy, praying that the tender consolation of Him "whose love exceedeth ours" may be given to them in abundant measure.

May the husband and father receive added grace for the care of his children, in which he has hitherto so wisely and so nobly shared.

To the grandmother we pray may be granted the rich blessings of heaven while she bears the mother-burden, laid down by the child of her tender care, and so lovingly taken up by her. May it be a part of her reward to see these children reach the noble manhood and womanhood of which they now give promise.

Together may they look forward in brightness of hope to the happy meeting with the mother now waiting for them in the heavenly home.

One added prayer we breathe—the dear Lord grant that healing may come to little Marjorie.

AFTER holding forth one more day at McKenzie than we had intended, we left in company with Bro. W. R. Smith, of the Southern Mission, on Thursday, for the conference of the Florida District near Botts, and after a two-hour ride on the train and about twenty-five miles by wagon through an unbroken forest of pine, we arrived at the home of Bro. L. F. West, where our wants were generously provided for and where we were made even more than comfortable during our stay of a few days by him and his congenial family. The proverbial and always present Southern hospitality and a delightful climate, together with other equally pleasant environments, make the tired missionary from a far Northern clime feel that he is in God's country and among God's people. Our stay was very pleasant and will remain one of the sunny spots in our memory of events.

The Sunday-school work in this district is wanting. There has never been a district association here and now there is not a school in the district, a condition to be regretted. But we are hopeful that efforts will be made soon to organize schools in most of the branches, which will certainly be of lasting benefit to the work here if only kept moving. We have noted that where there is a live school, there will be found a live branch, and we do not now recall having seen an exception to this since the Sunday-schools were established. But after our efforts on Sunday evening to arouse an interest in the Sunday-school work, it was determined by the representatives from three branches to organize schools at once. This they can and will do, and we feel confident of the ultimate success of their efforts. We wish them success unbounded, and shall watch with pleasure the growing schools and the results of their work.

As soon as these schools are well on their feet and have become, as they surely will, a permanent fixture in the work of the branches, we shall work for a district association to aid them and to establish other schools in other branches. The outlook is now very bright for the conditions prevailing and we feel quite certain of the ultimate success of the schools. May they prosper and may God bless, guide, and encourage every one who makes an effort to assist in the work.

WE will work two days each in the branches referred to above, after which we will go to the Mobile, Alabama, District for a tour therein.

The Jerusalem Convention.

The International Sunday-school people will hold a "World's Convention" at Jerusalem in April, 1904. The workers from America have planned to go from New York together and for the purpose have chartered a large "ocean liner" for their exclusive use on the entire itinerary. Thus they will have not only the pleasure of association with one another, but will be free from the presence of objectionable characters. This will tend to make the trip one of continued enthusiasm and pleasure.

There has been planned in connection with the convention trip an itinerary of almost all the important places and sights of interest to Bible students and lovers of the gospel, in Palestine and enroute. The whole tour will require about seventy days from time of leaving New York City to the return. The cost of the trip including berth, board, and other expenses of the tour will be from four hundred to seven hundred dollars, according to berth had in the boat. Some other expenses will, of course, be necessary, but that will much depend on the person. It will be both a pleasant and profitable trip to any one who may be able to go. But to get into the company, it will be necessary to secure an appointment as delegate from the State in which you reside. There are a few berths yet unsold, but they will probably not long remain unsold. The boat will sail from New York the latter part of March.

The International Evangel, of St. Louis, Missouri, has published several items concerning the matter and requests that all Sunday-school periodicals assist in advertising the convention and the tour. We give a portion of them as they will be of interest whether we have any thought of going or not:

THE JERUSALEM CRUISE.

In this issue we present the missionary side of the cruise, and gather much from Chairman Warren's correspondence, as is evident in the numerous items.

Never before has such a large company of active Christian workers called on the missionaries in foreign lands. May the visit be of mutual and lasting profit.

What a glorious coming together—the Sunday-school hosts and the missionaries! And the meetings are to be on the mission fields or at the missionaries' headquarters.

This contact with the missionaries is going to be of very great value to the Sunday-school teachers. Perhaps we will come back more ready for self-sacrifice in our work.

No one movement has ever before aroused such enthusiasm among or interested the missionary leaders in the great missionary stations, as this tour of the Sunday-school workers.

A study of the itinerary of our "Jerusalem Cruise" will show that we are to stop at a number of well-known missionary stations, managed by various American Boards with which we are familiar. For example the ports of Funchal, Algiers, Valetta, Piraeus, Constantinople, Smyrna, Beyrout, and Alexandria on way to Cairo.

In all probability meetings for conference and lectures will be arranged for at Algiers and Athens.

Chairman Warren is in correspondence with Rev. Dr. Parkson and Mr. B. C. Edwards of Maderia with reference to a probable service at Funchal, perhaps of an hour, which the time allowed for the stay at Funchal makes entirely practicable.

There is also an important work being done in Egypt under the Presbyterian Board, and already correspondence is under way with Rev. Dr. H. C. Ewing of Cairo, Dr. and Mrs. A. Watson of Cairo, Dr. H. T. McLachlan, Assuit, and Rev. Chauncey Murch of Luxor.

Dr. Henry H. Jessup, of Beyrout, being at the present time in the United States, is quite likely to return with the delegates to the Jerusalem Convention on the Grosser Kurfurst, proceeding at least as far as Beyrout, where he again takes up his work under the Presbyterian Board.

President Samuel B. Capen of the American Board, in a helpful letter, makes this statement: "I am sure the missionaries will all welcome you most heartily, and will do everything in their power to make you familiar with their work, as well as showing any courtesy which they are able to render."

Within a radius of forty-five miles there are three most important stations—Tripoli, Sidon, and Zahleh; Tripoli being but four hours steamer ride to the north, and Sidon a pleasant ride of less than a day, by either water or carriage, southward; Zahleh is quickly reached by rail and the other stations—Sukel Ghurt, Abeih, and Schweir—are within a few hours ride by carriage.

One missionary in writing expresses his views of the cruise and convention in this very comprehensive sentence: "The plan contemplates the purpose not only of receiving, but also of communicating a blessing." He adds further: "The great cruises of recent years have been planned wholly in the interests of the traveler and if the earnest home worker came in contact with a home missionary, it was usually accidental."

From Smyrna, we receive assurance of a very cordial reception and hearty coöperation from Rev. James P. McNaughton, and also Rev. Alexander McLachlan of the International College. It is altogether likely that there a number of the bright young men of the college will serve us as guides, and they will quickly put us in touch with the religious and educational work which is going on at that station.

Arthur J. Brown, secretary of the Presbyterian Board, writes: "I am very much gratified that you are planning a conference with the missionaries in connection with the World's Sunday-school Convention in Jerusalem next Spring. I earnestly hope that you will do everything in your power to see that this phase of your program is carried out. The mission has suffered many things from many travelers, because they have not taken pains to study missions at first hand, but have contented themselves with more or less shallow and frequently grossly unjust impressions which they have picked up at hotels and clubs in the port cities."

Dr. C. F. Gates, late of Harpoot, Turkey, and the newly elected vice-president of Robert College, states that it seems to him that the plan of holding the World's Fourth Sunday-school Convention "offers large possibilities of usefulness, and that it will serve to awaken and stimulate interest in Bible study, to call attention to work done by the Sunday-schools, and that it invites coöperation of the Oriental churches in the study of the Bible." He says further, "I shall lay special emphasis upon this last point; to hold such a conference in the place which is held most sacred by all of the oriental churches, seems to compel us to say to them—come join us in the study of the word of God which we all hold sacred."

Beyrout is quite the center of much of the mission work of Syria, and here we find located the American Press under the direction of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. The American Presbyterian Mission at its annual meeting in December last, passed . . . resolution, . . . not only showing its good will but also indicating its help upon our arrival there.

After reading this issue of the Evangel how can any one resist the desire to join in the cruise? If you intend to ever visit the Holy Land, now is the time of all times to do it. To those who are able to go and do not, it will be a life-long regret. It will be a life-long pleasure to be able to say of this cruise and convention, "I was there." If any of the delegates have friends whom they feel ought to go, hand them this copy of the Evangel and make another appeal to them to embrace this golden opportunity to go on the Sunday-school ship. We believe there will still be a chance to secure a berth by the time this issue of the paper is out. But the chances are getting fewer every day.

Over two hundred ladies are already booked for the cruise. Possibly not in a lifetime will there be another so favorable an opportunity for ladies, not personally accompanied, to tour the Holy Land, as on this Jerusalem Cruise. The fact that over one hundred ministers, with an additional number of other professional men, and a host of secular and Bible teachers—Christian men and women—make up this party, indicates its high character and is ample assurance of every attention and provision for the comfort of all ladies—school girl or older. Any lady intending to some time journey to Jerusalem and the Mediterranean, should grasp this best of all opportunities. Or any man may safely send wife or daughter on this cruise. Better get in application at once, before last berth is taken.

CAMERON, Missouri, December 14.

Editors Herald: We have changed our location from Gallands Grove, Iowa, to Far West, Missouri, and are well pleased with this country. Our nearest railroad town is Cameron and we are nine miles from Kerr, which consists of a store, post-office, and blacksmith shop.

The Saints here are characterized by the same spirit and faith as those left behind. Bro. J. M. Franklin, of Gallands Grove, will soon move to Kidder, the first station east of Cameron. We hope to help build up the work and assist others in getting located here, as this country can be recommended to all Saints if it continues to be what it is now.

Bro. Householder, of Stewartville, has just closed a two-day meeting at Cameron, where a branch organization was lately effected. Bro. Walter W. Smith preaches there to-night. The kindness shown me and my family here while getting located will not soon be forgotten.

Your brother in Christ,

FRED B. SHUMATE.

AUDUBON, Wisconsin, December 13.

Editors Herald: I am still in the faith and trying to get others there. Have met with some success of late and feel encouraged. This has been quite a busy year with me, and the month of November was the best month of my ministry, and this, too, in the pine forests of Northern Minnesota.

The first day of November I preached at eleven o'clock in the forenoon and at two o'clock, and then going to one of the beautiful lakes for which Minnesota is noted, I baptized four. After I changed clothing we met and the four were confirmed. I also ordained two priests, Brn. Lewis E. Anderson and Birch Whiting, one of the Bemidji Branch, the other of Clitheral Branch. Then I preached again in the evening, making quite a busy day.

I held meetings in five different places that month, two of them where they knew nothing about our faith except by hearsay. I see by my diary that on the 15th I preached three sermons at three different places and rode about fifteen miles to do so,—another busy day. On the 11th I baptized two more, making six for the month. Two of those baptized were twins whose birthday is the same as the writer's.

There is one thing that I never have done before, and I believe no other minister of the Church has done, and that is, to confirm a member who had been baptized fifty years before. The person is Sr. Hall, of Windom, Minnesota. She was baptized in Canada in 1842 by Elder Powers when sixteen years of age and away from home visiting. She was baptized with several others, but before being confirmed she was called home and did not have the chance to meet any of the Church for fifty years. But during all this time she held to the faith as she understood it, and so was in condition to be confirmed. Had not she received of the spirit of the work which enabled her to stand? I think so, and she should be commended for her integrity of purpose and strength of character. How many would have fainted by the wayside long before the fifty years had passed? Fifty years without meeting one of like faith! Not a gospel sermon in all this time! Just think of it, you Saints at Lamoni and Independence who do not like to go to hear the poor, struggling priest tell the gospel story as best he can, you who do not care to go unless some of the able ones are to speak. Don't you think that if you were to wait so long without hearing a gospel sermon, you would be glad to hear even a priest?

Old winter has come in good earnest up here,—only thirty degrees below. Still we held two preaching services and Sunday-school yesterday. Not a big crowd out, but we held our services and were blessed in so doing. As we look at it the work is advancing in this district. The growth is slow, yet we feel that it is sure. I am now visiting the branches and membership of the district and shall try to visit all before spring.

We feel encouraged and are blessed in our work.

Yours in the faith,

E. A. STEDMAN.

LAMONI, Iowa, December 15.

Editors Herald: While at Spokane, Washington, an agreement was had with Bro. Frank J. Chatburn that he should continue the meetings at Sagle, Idaho. This left Bro. David Powell to care for the work, for the time, in and about Spokane. Bro. Chatburn reports having visited Sagle, preached a number of discourses, and baptized five persons. These with the few substantial Saints already there will insure a good working force and provide material for a branch organization. This is as it should be. Bro. Chatburn and Powell are highly commended by those whom we met while in their field of labor. This is true also of Bro. Terry, of San Francisco, California, all of which is pleasant to mention. Bro. Foss was fretting a little over the lack of opportunity to reach the people, but was ready to do when the way opened. We spent an evening together at Bro. Davis' and family, of pleasant memory, while in San Francisco.

Good news is heard of Sr. Starr, of Provo, the lady at whose house the writer made his home while attending the reunion. She has united with the Church together with some of her family. Sr. Starr is a very worthy woman and has a pleasant little family. She has seen some of the severities and disappointments of Utah life, but is now enlisted in the true way.

While at Salt Lake City, the writer accompanied Bro. and Sr. Chase to Bountiful, by private conveyance, and attended a service announced by Bro. Peterson, in the schoolhouse. Bro. Chase was the speaker and made a good effort. But one of his auditors, Elder Joseph Wood, took exception to some things said and proposed to reply, which was agreed to. A time was fixed upon, after which we returned to the city, arriving there at two o'clock next morning. At the time agreed upon, Bro. Chase and the writer returned to Bountiful and listened attentively three hours to Elder Wood's effort at trying to prove the doctrine of polygamy from the Bible and Book of Mormon.

Elder Wood had just returned from England where he had been on a mission, was full of enthusiasm, in good health and has fine lungs. He was born in polygamy and credits his existence to that system of unions, so the question naturally enough arises in his mind, Where would Elder Wood be had not his father taken a second wife? He was courteous and confident in his effort. We admired his manliness in trying to defend his belief, also his genial nature.

Another meeting was provided for at which, in due time, we appeared, and Bro. Chase put in three hours and twenty minutes replying to Elder Wood. Bro. Chase's effort was effective, as could be seen by the nervousness and some fluttering shown by some in the audience at the happy hits made at times against the position assumed by Elder Wood. It all ended peaceably and pleasantly and evidently started some to thinking.

Sunday, November 1, the writer went to Ogden and occupied morning and evening in the chapel, also attended the sacrament service, aided by a resident brother. The day was spent pleasantly and to edification. Was kindly entertained at Bro. Wells Chase's, where all elders find a home. Monday following, by request, I called on Elder David O. McKay, professor in the Heber College. His wife is the daughter of the well-known Doctor Riggs, of Kansas City, Missouri. They received me very nicely. At the dinner-table the question turned during conversation to the immaculate conception of Christ; we affirming that the Bible and Book of Mormon both teach that Jesus was begotten by the Holy Ghost. The elderly McKay—Bishop McKay—raised his eyes with a knowing expression, and put the question, "What was that angel doing in Mary's bedroom?" This was so strongly ridiculous that it struck us as comical rather than serious, though aware, however, that it is a proper thing to be serious over solemn matters. President Young declared that Jesus was not begotten by the Holy Ghost, but failed to reveal further in that discourse. From the manner of putting this question, and other hints given in talks with others, it seems that these people really hold to the strange notion that the angel was an erratic visitor, around making love to Mary, a union was formed and Jesus was born. All of this, as with some others, because of the lack of faith in the power of God, who by his creative energy made the first man and woman capable of offspring, of being able by the same creative power to cause a virgin to bring forth a babe. But which is the greater miracle, the one at Eden or at Bethlehem! If the first is believable the second ought to be. "O ye are of little faith." The prophet said, "A virgin shall conceive and bear a son." The young man expressed himself as honest and in search of light and urged that we spend an evening at his home. He would not discuss anything in public. We agreed upon an evening, as I thought that if he was really in search of truth, by taking the Inspired Translation of the Bible and turning light on some of the passages relied upon to support his view, he might be benefited.

The evening agreed upon, Bro. Chase and I met at Elder McKay's. Soon after a kind of discussion or talk was entered into, sitting around the stove. The Inspired Translation was introduced to explain some texts adduced, but to our surprise Elder McKay objected to it. He claimed to believe, however, in the angel message and the work of the Seer, so his attention was called to the fact that the Inspired Translation was commanded to be made, with the promise given that it should be preserved in safety and preached to the nations, hence was authoritative, especially to all claiming to be Latter Day Saints. But he thought the Reorganization had tampered with it. This was suggestive as to how earnestly he was in search of light, so we lost interest in a private reading.

Polygamy was the main topic, but others were introduced. By request Bro. Chase read from the Journal of Discourses the speech of Brigham Young wherein he states that "Adam is our God and the only God with whom we have to do," etc. After reading, Bro. Chase looked up inquisitively and addressed a young lady sitting by, "You do not believe that, do you?"

"Yes I do," came the quick reply.

This was another surprise, for there are many of the Utah people who do not believe this fallacy, or so express themselves, and the Church there, as a body, has so far failed to declare itself on this point, except to tacitly acquiesce in the utterances of President Young binding the body, as he was held to be the Lord's mouthpiece. The amazement is, when the Bible and Book of Mormon both speak so clearly and definitely against the sin of idolatry, that down here in these modern times, at the beginning of the twentieth century, a class of people has been so blinded and lured on into a belief in such a monstrous absurdity. But so it is.

Socially, the evening was spent agreeably, with possibly some benefit accruing, and at one o'clock in the morning we returned to Bro. Wells Chase's and slept. Bro. Chase remained over Sunday and preached in the chapel, but none of the parties so interested in seeking light were there.

The writer returned to the city and chanced on the way to fall in company with Bro. Haws from California, bound for Lehi.

He was a resident of Nauvoo in its early days and remembers distinctly when the Seer pointed to his son Joseph and declared that he is the successor. It was at a Sunday meeting.

Sunday we occupied at the chapel with Bro. Thorsen and Larsen. Spent a few days after calling on the Saints, among them, Srs. Robinson and Wilson. Sr. Robinson was quite sick with pneumonia, from which, the news came, she died on the 19th following. She was upwards of eighty years old, if memory is correct, has passed through many trying experiences and disappointments in life, but adhered firmly to the faith and died respected and loved by those who knew her.

An evening was also pleasantly spent at Union with the Smith family, substantial friends and supporters of the faith; another home of welcome to elders. Grandma when young walked the plains from Omaha to Utah, only to be disappointed when she arrived there. But notwithstanding her disappointments and hardships endured, now old, she has her children around her, and amply provided for, is in the faith and as saintly as Saints can well be. Thanks to Srs. Smith and Allie for conveyance to and from the trolley.

The 13th I started on return trip home. I concluded to stop over at Denver and see the Saints. Bro. Shoop, president of the branch, met me at the depot and nicely cared for me over night. Sunday we attended the Sunday-school and Religio meetings, which were made interesting. Some good talent and enterprising persons are here. They think of going ahead—not failing.

At eleven o'clock in the forenoon listened to a Bible Christian preacher, name forgotten. His sermon was well delivered and interesting. At close, Sr. Lum, whom I knew in Chicago when she was Miss Culver, introduced herself. I accompanied her home and spent the afternoon pleasantly with her and her husband, S. B. Lum, M. D. In the evening I preached in the hall with ease, a good audience being present, the doctor and wife among them. Was nicely provided for at Sr. Evert's for the night.

So we have been to Denver, Colorado. It is a great western city and spread out all over. Now, Mr. Editors, while contemplating its grandeur and greatness, I find myself "up a stump" and in serious thought. When in Utah the theory advanced as being important was marriage and children, the more children the better, as one representative there put it. "We are no worse than other people, but we believe in children. A man is capable of an almost limitless offspring, a woman is not, hence the philosophy of having many wives. We believe in children. We can take them to heaven with us. Our money and lands we can not take. I have a Kanaka wife, a Filipino wife, and an Indian wife. I am proud of my children. Thank God, my children take to the missionary spirit." This is in substance, if not fully, the exact wording of his statement. He seemed to pride himself in his large family of children. But as an unprincipled character who covets wealth, resorts to any kind of scheme or method to obtain it, forgetting that while it is well enough to desire and acquire wealth, there is also a right and a wrong way to accomplish it, and that he is bound by the same rules of right in his acquisition as others. So it is all right for one to desire and attain children, but there is a right and a wrong way to attain them, and fortunately in this case God has pointed out the proper way, as follows: "For marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation, and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made" (Doctrine and Covenants 49:3), which this man in his anxiety for children should have respected; but as he did not, he is found in possession of unlawfully obtained treasure, having followed in the ways of men, and hence has gone backward instead of forward, with all of his pride of possessing wealth.

But now, while even so short a time in Denver, I have been credibly informed that there are as many as fifty persons in this one city engaged in the practice of striking at the foundation of life itself by stifling nature in her effort at reproduction and destroying in embryo her gift and blessing to the world as children. We are taught that when two evils are set before us to choose the least. Now while balancing in the mind as to which of these two great evils is the least, one naturally would lean upon the side of the protection of children. For if there is or ever was such a thing as a wrinkled old mossbacked devil, whether dead or alive, it must have been he that instigated the practice of paralyzing and destroying the life forces of nature or rendering them impotent and incapable of contributing to the continuance of the race—death to children, worse than death to mothers, and a curse to the world.

Is Denver representative of this modern practice—only a twig of the terrible evil tree that has been spreading over the earth to depopulate the globe, and help fill up the measure of great Babylon? And is it possible that conscientious and intelligent, thinking men and women are called upon to rise up and fight this growing and monstrous evil that insures to those who engage in it the fires of hell—the destruction of body and soul? Those who sympathize with and practice this monstrous vice, never ought to make faces at Utah and cry, unholy, for shame of being guilty of a worse sin. Better believe in what God Almighty has said the race is capable of doing in regard to offspring in Genesis 1:26, and stay this effort at reversing nature and destroying the race. This will insure safety, prosperity, health, happiness, and heaven. Repent quickly.

Tuesday noon found me in Kansas City, Missouri. Lunched with Doctor Riggs and wife, went over to Independence, called at the homes of a few Saints living nearest to the route of travel, met several prominent Church officials all in seeming good spirits, and attended the entertainment in the Saints' church at evening, which was a success, we thought—some fine talent brought together, and a large, appreciative audience. Returned home with Doctor Riggs for the night, and next day, in company with E. L., I returned to Lamoni, Iowa, to find family well. Sunday following preached in the brick church and met a large number of Saints. This brings us in tolerable order up to date.

In my last letter read "about fifty" miles from Spokane to Sagle, Idaho, instead of five. The name Barr, read Parr.

WM. H. KELLEY.

OOLOGAH, Indian Territory, December 10.

Editors Herald: I left home November 6, after having a severe attack of pneumonia. For a week and a half I had hemorrhages of the lungs, and two days after they stopped bleeding I took faith in one hand and works in the other. I have been preaching in the pulpit right along and doing nearly all the praying in opening and closing. I have ridden from one and one half miles to three miles after preaching, and have made from sixteen to twenty-five miles in the daytime in the cold and my lungs and voice are as strong as ever, and I have the greatest liberty of my life in preaching. My faith is increased, my hope is strengthened, and I know God's power is in this work. To God be the glory for healing me and for the blessings he is bestowing upon me.

I had fine meetings at Oak Grove Schoolhouse, Kansas, in Bro. Higgins' vicinity. Many turned out and were interested. A Quaker preacher and I had a tilt. He wanted me to affirm the Book of Mormon, he to affirm nothing. I offered to affirm Joseph Smith a prophet of God, or the Book of Mormon, or the Church against the church he represents, and he would not. He said the Quaker Church was not right, and I asked him why he did not get out of it.

From there I went to Shaw, Kansas, and preached in a Christian church, creating quite an interest. One leading Christian complimented and thanked me for our sermons and how much he had learned from the Bible. Bro. Berger did his part in caring for the elder and paying for oil and fuel.

At Winter, Indian Territory, we had a very fine interest and it was the first preaching done there by our people. I occupied the union church with perfect order and was the only preacher that ever had order there. The night before I arrived they had a box supper and a fight in which knives and revolvers were used. Some Indians attended the meetings throughout.

Last Sunday the Spirit of God was given me till many were in tears. One young woman from Cherryvale, Kansas, who was visiting her relatives, cried and sobbed as though she was at a funeral. O, how the good Spirit softened the hearts of the people in this place! Every sermon I preached there was inspired of God. I have ten times as many calls for preaching as we can fill.

Doctor Baldwin, of Coffeyville, Kansas, examined my lungs and said they were sound, nothing the matter with them. I am thankful to all who have cared for my temporal wants. It would take too much space to tell all their names.

In gospel bonds,
F. C. KECK.

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska, December 13.

Dear Herald: We got home yesterday, tired after so long a trip with the team. Our travel among the Saints will long be remembered and the kindness shown to us will never be forgotten. We started from North Platte, November 25, driving to Maxwell and spending the afternoon and evening with Bro. and Sr. Pell. The next day we drove over sixty miles to Bro. Johnson's, near Eustis. Though strangers, we soon felt we were at home. We find in traveling among the Saints that the same spirit prevails, and we truly are baptized in one body and there is something that seems to say we are well acquainted and have met before. This is something the world knows not, and we ought to be thankful for the Holy Spirit we can enjoy if faithful.

We visited with the Eustis Saints until the following Tuesday, meeting with them in their Sunday service, and were strengthened by being with them. On Tuesday, December 1, we drove down in the canyon six miles south of Elwood and called on Mr. and Mrs. S. Andrews, members of the Dunkard faith. They received us kindly and we tried to teach them the way of life and salvation. Although they listened, it was plain they think they are on the right road and care not for any greater light. They explained to us the mode of baptism, dipping forward because Christ bowed his head when dying on the cross; and explained feet-washing. They were not posted on the Bible, and in this they were not in accord with it, as we all know. We gave them our lecture and left them, trusting God will give them light and lead them in the right way.

From here we drove to Mr. Mitchell's, one mile south and about three miles east of Kearney, where we put up for the night and found a nice family. They were not acquainted with the gospel in any way. We left them tracts and a Voice of Warning, and they said they would care for an elder and do all they could to have meetings, if some one would come. This is a thickly settled country, houses from a quarter to a mile apart and they have a good schoolhouse. We think this would be a good opening for some of the missionaries.

On the second we visited with Bro. Lippincott's family and were disappointed in not seeing him. We then started for Wilber, a one hundred and fifteen mile drive. We stayed over night at Sr. W. E. Oer's, at Clay Center, and had a very pleasant visit with her family. We arrived at Wilber on the 4th, very tired and cold. How good it seemed to meet once more with our home Saints in this district. The time was spent visiting with the Saints. We enjoyed the sacrament meeting on Sunday, as during the summer we have not had the privilege of partaking of the emblems. On the 8th we started for our old home near Palmyra and had the privilege of stopping at our old home where the first eleven years of our wedded life were spent. Bro. Self was a farmer then and his wife never expected that he would be called from her side to preach the gospel of Christ; but time changes, and when God speaks we must obey, and we must be as faithful and work as hard to bring souls to Christ as we did in laboring for the temporal things of life. We are trying hard to lay up treasure in heaven where neither moth nor rust can corrupt. How thankful we ought to be that we are worshiping a God that heareth prayer and will reward every man according as his works shall be.

One more trip took us home to loved ones. Driving over to Bro. W. M. Self's home we found them all well and glad to see us. The telephone was used and we tried to surprise some of the Saints; but all knew our voice. Our summer travel as missionary among the Saints and friends of Western Nebraska has proven to be of value to us. We were blessed by our Savior in trying to teach the gospel, and in talking to those outside we were often made to rejoice to see what a grand gospel we had to present. We do not have to say we think so, or we believe so, but can say we know, and always can answer questions by quoting scripture, letting the Bible tell what we believe. Bro. Self will return soon after the holidays. We should not have left the field so soon, but we thought best to come before the storms came. As it was we had very cold, stormy days to travel in, yet do not feel that we have suffered any injury. With love to all God's people and an honest desire for the upbuilding of his kingdom,

In gospel bonds,
MR. AND MRS. R. O. SELF.

FULTON, Iowa, December 15.

Editors Herald: We are drawing near the close of the year. Have we all done our duty? Have we helped along the gospel work as we should? In making out my financial report I find there are some who sent means last year who have not responded this year. Have we grown cold in the Master's work? Has not God fulfilled his promises? The work in our district has been furthered, and quite a few have obeyed the gospel; shall a few do the burden of the work, or shall we not all help, so that there may be meat in the storehouse of our God? Some of the Saints are making much sacrifice for the work, and such are growing stronger in the gospel work. We have tried to do our duty; the Lord has heard our prayers and blessed us abundantly.

We have changed our place of meeting for the winter and have organized a Religio. We have thirty-six members, and nearly that many more attend. All help sing the beautiful songs of Zion; even some who are opposed to us sing our songs as they are about their work.

Elders Turner and Case have baptized fifteen here; twelve will be members of our branch. The work here is in better condition than for some time. May it continue so.

Let us do our whole duty, letting our light shine. We say we love the gospel restored in these last days; can we not, then, sacrifice a little for the work and give of the means God has given into our hands, so the elders' families may be supplied, God be honored, and the work furthered? Your brother,

JOHN HEIDE.

DEVILS LAKE, North Dakota, December 15.

Editors Herald: We have not much news to offer from this far northern State, but we wish to express heartily our appreciation of the many good things we read in the HERALD columns. We read of discouragements and partial failures, but even they are not without their beneficial influence. Such experiences, when properly utilized, develop our characters along the line of patience, and when we read of some struggling soul under similar adverse conditions it gives us courage and helps us to try, try again.

By reports from Brn. Wagener and Houghton, I learn that they are out battling singly against hardships, chief of which is the very severe weather this fall, thirty-two below zero, high winds, and drifting snows, completely suspending meetings in country schoolhouses where the congregations have to travel from two to ten miles, and often no stable to shelter the horses during the meetings. City halls are three to five dollars per night and "we have practically no foothold in the towns of this State." No members where an elder can get free shelter and hence are driven to hotels at two dollars a day, and so the gospel is shut out.

Taking the State as a whole the work is in better condition both spiritually and financially. Though as elsewhere there are some very negligent of their known duty, I see signs of improvement as the result of more complete organization and the labors of additional help from Brn. A. H. and F. A. Smith and Bishop Hilliard.

The Saints will be sorry to hear of the death of Bro. William Leitch at eighty-seven years, five months, and ten days. He died strong in the faith and towards the last was more and more kind and thoughtful to all, and every missionary who ever labored here will remember his generous hospitality. At eighty-five years of age he quit the use of tobacco after having used it sixty years, and one of the last things he did was to carefully estimate and pay his tithing with this remark, "Bro. Sparling, I once thought I could give as I chose, but now I see I was in error. God has given a law and I want to be as near right as possible in all things, so I shall not be ashamed when I stand before the Lord in the day of judgment."

May the Lord pour out his Spirit and open the way for the success of this glorious gospel of Christ.

Hopefully,
WM. SPARLING.

CHelsea, Iowa, December 15.

Editors Herald: We think the work in this section is moving upward. Bro. Cushman has been in our branch laboring faithfully, and has done good. He told the Saints he did not want to hear anything about their troubles. He stilled the tongue and set the example himself. James says if any seems to be religious and bridles not his tongue, his religion is vain. This can not be said of Bro. Cushman. He has now left for other parts.

The gospel restored brings new joys with each passing year, as the pendulum of fate swings to and fro and the fleeting years are marked on the dial of time. Changes take place in all our lives. The places of some loved by us are vacant. Perhaps our worldly affairs have not prospered; perhaps sickness and misfortune have fallen to our lot; but let us take courage, from the teachings of Him whose birth the angels announced. We can all gain some happiness by trying to make others happy and some little gift bestowed upon others less fortunate than ourselves brings joy to both the giver and receiver. Let this be our motive: "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Yours in love and gospel bonds,
G. W. SHIMEL.

ST. CHARLES, Iowa, December 12.

Editors' Herald: I am now trying to get the gospel before the people at the little town of Wick, twenty miles south of the capital city. I procured the use of the town hall here by paying forty cents per evening and furnishing my own fuel. This is a Methodist stronghold, the hall being over a store just across the street from the Methodist Episcopal church.

We have now held three sessions with good attendance. Last evening there were about seventy-five out to hear and at the close we gave opportunity for asking questions, and answering them to their discomfiture seemed to enrage them. After dismissal a number gathered around us just like a pack of wolves ready to devour. One smart young man accused me of saying that Christ did not suffer on the cross, and after I proved to him by his own friends that I had not said it, he insisted that he would tell it anyway. Another said he had a right to strike me. But they dispersed without doing us harm.

I was blessed with the Spirit this evening in speaking upon the faith and hope of the righteous, which should have raised the ire of no one. We will appear among them again Sunday, the 13th, as the hall is in use on Saturday evening.

We are plodding alone this winter, doing all we can to advance the cause of truth. Bro. McCoy will drop down on the 19th to labor with us a while. The Saints here are striving to walk by the rod of iron. May the Lord help us all to come up higher and to have charity, the pure love of Christ which endureth for ever, and help us to put from us all selfishness and add to our faith those seven graces so essential to our eternal welfare. Surely this is a marvelous work and a wonder, as told of by Isaiah.

One of the men who took part in the killing of Joseph the Seer in 1844, has lived in this neck of the woods for some years, boasting many times that he helped to kill "old Joe Smith." He lived a miserable life in poverty, many times threatening to take his own life, and finally eighteen months ago he hung himself about five miles from here. This fall I had the pleasure of burying his daughter, a married woman, and her husband with Christ in baptism. So the world moves.

With a hope of final triumph,
C. J. PETERS.

PISGAH, Iowa, December 15.

Editors Herald: On November 22 I closed a series of five weeks meetings at Little Sioux, one of the oldest branches in the district and of which our good-natured brother, George Shearer, is president. The good Lord was with us in defense of the truth there, and on the 15th I baptized one noble brother, George Meggers, in the Little Sioux River, and I think his voice will be heard in telling the gospel story.

We commenced meetings at the Echo Schoolhouse, near Little Sioux, on the 23d, and on December 6 I baptized two more, and four more last Sunday. This makes seventy-seven this conference year.

I commenced meetings at the Griffiths Schoolhouse, near Pisgah, last night, and will remain over next Sunday and return to the Echo Schoolhouse next Monday night, where we expect to baptize a few more on Tuesday. If all is well we expect to take the early train at Mondamin for our home at Independence, to spend the holidays with loved ones. There are more demands for labor than we can fill.

Wishing all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year,
Your brother,
W. A. SMITH.

DES MOINES, Iowa, December 19.

Dear Herald: The holiday season here in the city is claiming the attention of all the members of the Church, and will long be remembered. The Christmas exercises at the church here are in charge of the Sunday-school.

As this memorable year closes and we look back over the work of the Church we are able to see much progress. A spirit of love and unity prevails throughout the Church that is indeed Christlike and promises good for the Church here in the city. True, there is a spirit of indifference and coldness on the part of some, but this, we presume, will ever be in the Church to some extent. A goodly number of the members here are passing down the hill of life towards the close and they are relinquishing their activity in church work, but their places are being filled by younger ones who are entering in as valiant soldiers in the Master's cause. This year is memorable for the number of young people who have entered upon active work in the Church.

The sacrament service on the first Sabbath of the month, followed by social meeting, and social meeting again on the third Sabbath of the month, are seasons of rejoicing to the Saints here. The spiritual gifts are frequently enjoyed, and the presiding elder in visiting among the Saints is able to say, "We are having excellent social meetings."

On Sunday, December 13, Bro. McDowell was in the city and spoke both morning and evening. His morning theme was the love of God as manifested at this Yule-tide season, and as he enlarged upon this theme, our conception of God, and of Christ, and the love they manifest to us as children, was broadened. Heaven seemed nearer and Christ dearer as we listened to the expressed thoughts of our brother. In the evening Bro. McDowell spoke upon the Book of Mormon, along the line that since the book was published scientific explorations are confirming every statement made in the book as to the people on this continent and their condition while living here. He referred to the fact that the Church was at one time commanded to remember "the new covenant," even the Book of Mormon; that in the past there had been a lack of interest in this book, but that a change had now come about and there was a renewed interest manifested in this record, the change being due to the efforts and work of the Religio Society. In closing he urged all to study the book and said that careful study would add interest to it as a divine record.

On this same Sunday Mrs. L. E. McGarry, matron of the Iowa Children's Home Society, was at the church and spoke of the work this Society is doing in caring for homeless children. She is a lady of much intelligence, strong personality, and a missionary in a noble work. The Society is supported by donations and a liberal contribution was given towards the work. The Home is located here in this city, and extends its work to all parts of the State.

The Register and Leader of this city, in its issue for Sunday, November 29, contained a half page of reading matter under the heading, "The Mormons Buying the Old Carthage Jail." A likeness of the Martyr and of the old jail appeared. The "write up" was sent out from Keokuk and was a prejudiced and sensational statement of the causes which led up to the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. The civil strife in the city of Nauvoo prior to the assassination was enlarged upon and some entirely new phases of it presented. No word of condemnation for state authority that permitted a lawless mob to shed innocent blood appeared. No effort was made by the Church here to reply to the article, but possibly at some future date the said paper may be asked to give space to a "write up" furnished by the Church.

A. A. REAMS.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, Missouri, December 10.

Editors Herald: Our branch is in fair condition spiritually. Some have had severe sickness and some have yet to endure trials of this nature. We had a grand treat in the visit of our missionary in charge, Bro. I. N. White, who held forth three nights from his new chart, which was surely an eye-opener, setting forth the gospel dispensations and based on the scripture. The last night the house was well filled. His argument was forceful and logical. Who can tell what the harvest will be? We have excellent counsel from our district president, Bro. James Moler, who calls to see us in turn with other points in the district, and may God bless his faithful workers in all the Church.

Thirty-three years ago my wife and I were inducted into the church and kingdom of God and as we are now about to finish the record of another year, how important that we labor wisely and well! Since our knowledge of this great latter-day work, how many great and noble workers have been called home to their eternal reward. We can recall their teaching with fond recollection, along with their valiant testimony to the restored gospel. Who knows but their mission work is still on in the land of spirits? So many of them were aggressive and so desirous of the spread of the truth in their earth life. So who knows but our merciful God wants them to prepare for the near coming of their Savior to reign triumphant on the earth. We can but exclaim, Thy will be done, O Lord! May God bless all his believing children, and may they be sustained in their efforts to serve him.

Your humble servant,

ABNER LLOYD.

The kindness of Christmas is the kindness of Christ. To know that God so loved as to give us his Son for our dearest brother has brought human affection to its highest tide on the day of that brother's birth.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Amy Sackes, Republican City, Nebraska, writes: "My husband and I and son are the only Saints here, and we are trying to let our light shine. I think if an elder would come there could be lots of good done here."

J. R. Sutton writes under date of December 8, from Franklin, Nebraska: "I am having quite a warm time in this country. A Methodist Episcopal preacher is to lecture on 'Mormonism' and I am announced to answer him. I tried to announce meetings at the close of one of his sermons, when he asked me to desist from 'disturbing' his meetings, and evidenced a bad spirit. So I made the announcement on the outside for a meeting that evening and had a crowded house. I will remain here for probably a month, for I feel that God has a people here."

G. T. Griffiths wrote from Condon, Oregon, December 14: "I arrived here on the 10th inst. and have been preaching every evening to a well-filled house, and will preach every night this week and over the coming Sunday. Then I go to Spokane to organize a district on the 26th inst. The Condon Branch numbers over one hundred members. There were one hundred and twenty-five in attendance at the Sunday-school yesterday. On Saturday the branch held a business-meeting, and Bro. H. C. Snively was ordained an elder and elected president of the branch. He is one of our coming men. Bro. Austin was ordained a teacher. Bro. Hartshorn is a teacher and has been recommended to the Bishop for selection as agent for this district. I have met with a great number of Lamoni Saints here, and all are lively in the work of the Lord. I am well in body and feeling excellent in the work. I have been abundantly blessed in my labors since coming to this mission."

T. J. Lawn wrote from Sacramento, California, December 15: "R. J. Parker is with us at present, and we believe the work is looking up some at least. Prospects here are brighter now than for a long season. My love to all the Israel of God."

Bro. W. P. Buckley, 916 South Pine Street, Lansing, Michigan, writes as follows: "I have the HERALD and do not see how I could get along without it. I realize that Saints should keep up with the work, and to do so we must not be slack in tithes, offerings, or subscriptions. There are not many Saints in Lansing, but we hold meetings at our houses as the weather permits, and we will be glad when the time comes that the scattered may have the privilege of God's sanctuary. I am looking forward to the redemption of Zion and desire to be humble and diligent. My prayers have been answered many times and I would like the united prayers of the Saints that my boy may be healed of a difficulty which has troubled him all his life."

Bro. Rushton, writing from Hamilton, Scotland, December 3: "I have held a series of splendid meetings, and believe the district [Manchester] is in a fairly good condition. I have been received very kindly by Saints and strangers. In Warrington I gave a series of discourses on religion and science; had a good number of friends out who were impressed with the position of our Church. Some are to be baptized in Stockport, where a faithful band under the presidency of Bro. George Baty are laboring assiduously, and above all, harmoniously. I expect to remain in Scotland until Easter, unless something unexpectedly turns up."

Sr. L. W. Donaldson writes from Rat post-office, Sherman County, Missouri: "I have been teaching in Sunday-school so long with the Quarterly that I would be lost without it. I am the only Saint here and wish some of the Saints would get homes in this country. Land can be bought for from a dollar and a quarter to five dollars per acre. A flour mill would do well here. Will some of the Saints send me their old HERALDS, as I am unable to take it. They will be received thankfully and I will pass them on to my neighbors. What a grand, glorious gospel this is! I am thankful for the Lord's blessings and ask your prayers that I may continue faithful, and not be a stumbling-block to any."

Conference Minutes.

Northwestern Kansas.—Quarterly conference of the Northwestern Kansas District was held in the "Baker" schoolhouse near Osborne, December 5 and 6, with District President S. J. Madden in the chair; James J. Teeter was chosen assistant secretary. Branches reporting: Rural Dale, Homestead, Scandia, and Twin Creek; Goodland not reporting. These reports show a net gain of five. Ministry reporting: Elders S. J. Madden, J. F. McClure, and L. G. Gurwell; Priests F. S. Ward, J. J. Teeter, John A. Teeter, Fernando E. Taylor, and E. H. Eberts; Teachers S. A. Madden and John Sears. The reports of Priest Eberts and Teacher Sears were for quarter ending August 30, but reached us too late for last conference. Bishop's agent, Fred S. Ward, reported as follows: Received since last report $225.21, paid out $176.33; balance on hand $48.88. District treasurer, Olive B. Rateliff, did not report. Acting upon recommends submitted by Rural Dale Branch, Brn. Fred S. Ward and Silas A. Madden were ordained to the office of elder and priest respectively, Elders S. J. Madden and J. F. McClure officiating. The speakers were Brn. S. J. Madden, J. F. McClure, F. S. Ward, and S. A. Madden, all enjoying splendid liberty and a goodly degree of the Spirit in presenting the word, which we believe was well received and highly appreciated. Adjourned to meet with the Gaylord Branch at call of president. Fernando E. Taylor, secretary.

Eastern Maine.—Meeting called to order by President J. J. Billings. F. M. Sheehy was chosen president of the conference, J. J. Billings assistant, Sr. A. L. Colby, secretary. Minutes of last meeting read and approved. The visiting Saints were allowed to take part in the business of the conference. Elders reporting: H. J. Davison, J. J. Billings, J. N. Ames, Eugene Braun, Samuel Eaton; Priest J. E. Eaton; Teachers H. R. Eaton, W. G. Hardy; Deacon A. O. Candage. Bishop's agent report: Received, $214.58; paid out, $96; balance due church, $118.58. Referred to auditing committee, C. H. Rich and S. O. Foss, and was reported correct. Branches reporting: Little Deer Isle 61, Stonington 95, loss 1, Brays Mountain 43. Request from the Brays Mountain Branch asking for the ordination of J. K. Eaton to the office of deacon, was granted and the ordination provided for. Following delegates to the General Conference were appointed: F. M. Sheehy, S. O. Foss, J. N. Ames and wife, J. J. Billings, H. R. Eaton, and W. K. Small, those present at conference to cast the entire vote of the district. Voted the delegates be empowered to fill all vacancies. District officers were sustained. J. J. Billings reported the Brooksville Branch spiritually dead and that W. G. Pert had sent his license back to the conference. Voted to accept the license. Voted that Bro. Levy Gray be honorably released from his office as priest. A motion to disorganize the Brooksville Branch was lost. Voted the next conference be held at Stonington in May, 1904, the Saturday nearest the full moon, and also that the nature of the meetings be left with the conference presidents. Sunday morning prayer-meeting, J. K. Eaton was ordained to the office of deacon, and F. J. Smith, who had just been baptized, was confirmed. Preaching by F. M. Sheehy and J. J. Billings. Eugene Braun, secretary.

Portland.—Special conference convened at 7.30 p. m., December 5, with the Portland Branch, which had been organized the previous evening. G. T. Griffiths, missionary in charge, presided; D. A. Anderson acted as secretary. Branch reports: Condon 98, gain 17; Portland 40. Ministry reporting: Elders N. T. Chapman, W. A. Goodwin baptized 4, A. B. Moore; Teacher S. B. Hartshorn. Bishop's agent's report: Receipts, $740.48; expenditures, $642.34; balance on hand, $98.14. The Portland District was organized, consisting of Condon and Portland Branches. The action of the missionary in charge, in declaring the Hood River Branch disorganized, was approved. The district officers were authorized to issue letters of removal to members of the former Hood River Branch and any other scattered Saints living in the district. The disposition of the tent belonging to the former Oregon District was placed in the hands of the president of the Southwestern Oregon and Portland Districts. The next conference will be held in Condon, Oregon, the first Saturday and Sunday in June, 1904. Brn. G. T. Griffiths, A. Allen, J. W. Roberts, D. A. Anderson, and Sr. Roxanna E. Anderson were chosen to represent the district at the next General Conference. Elder Arthur Allen was elected district president and Sr. Lutie E. Kinney secretary. Preaching by G. T. Griffiths and J. W. Roberts.

Florida.—District conference met at Coldwater, December 5, I. N. Roberts presiding, B. L. Jernigan, secretary. The visiting brethren were invited to take part. Santa Rosa Branch reported total membership 49, a gain of 1. Elders reporting: I. N. Roberts, W. A. West, W. R. Smith, W. J. Booker, T. A. Hougas, E. Powell, B. L. Jernigan; Priests W. M. Hawkins, John Johnson; Teacher Asa Baily. Bishop's agent failed to report. District officers were sustained, including Bishop's agent. Bro. Joseph G. Dixon was ordained to office of teacher. Preaching by Brn. I. N. Roberts, W. R. Smith, T. A. Hougas. Adjourned Sunday evening to meet Saturday before first Sunday in March, 1904, with Santa Rosa Branch.

Convention Minutes.

Northwestern Kansas.—Convention of the Northwestern Kansas District met December 5, at 7.30 p. m., near Osborne, Kansas. The superintendent being absent, F. E. Taylor, assistant, took charge; Myrtle Coop, secretary. Secretary's report was read and approved. Report from our superintendent, John A. Teeter, was read; also a report from Rural Dale Sunday-school accepted, enrollment 126. F. S. Ward, F. E. Taylor, and James Teeter were elected committee on program. A short and interesting program was given. Adjourned. Prayer by F. E. Taylor.

Missionary Release.

For reason given, deemed good by missionary in charge and the presidency, Elder E. H. Durand is released from the missionary field for the remainder of the conference year.

LAMONI, Iowa, December 17, 1903.

Clergy Credentials, 1904.

The following from the Chairman of the Western Passenger Association, dated December 14, will explain itself:

"The printing of the application blanks for Clergy Certificates for 1904 is being delayed, and from present indications it is doubtful whether they will be ready before the first of January. . . . As this delay will not admit of the issue of Annual and Time Clergy Certificates for use commencing January 1, 1904, arrangements are being made to have the lines members of the joint Clergy Agreement honor all 1903 Annual Certificates during the month of January, 1904."

R. S. SALYARDS,
LAMONI, IOWA, December 16, 1903. Church Secretary.

Bishops' Notices.

To Saints of Lamoni Stake:—The Bishopric of the Stake extend to you greetings at this season, and in order that you may not be disappointed we wish to inform you that we close the books in the office of the stake bishop on December 31. All moneys received by any of the bishopric up to and including that date will appear in our forthcoming annual report, while those received after December 31, will not appear in report until one year later.

We are considerably encouraged with the support given during the past year, the tithes and offerings fund being considerably larger in receipts up to December 1 than for the same period in 1902, or any preceding year. The month of December, 1902, was a heavy month in receipts. We trust that the month of December, 1903, will come up to the same month of 1902, in which case the year will show a substantial gain.

WILLIAM ANDERSON,
D. C. WHITE,
R. J. LAMBERT.
Bishopric of Lamoni Stake.

Notice of Amendment to Constitution and By-Laws.

Whereas the Pittsburg District Sunday-school association in convention at Glen Easton, West Virginia, expressed disapproval of article 3, page 16, in Constitution and By-laws, and in harmony with article 11, page 8, offer the following amendment: Whereas it is stated all members of the school under eight years of age are prohibited from voting, and an absence of three months without sufficient cause will forfeit membership and thereby lose right to vote, to strike out the words "eight" and "three" and insert the words "twelve" and "one," viz., all members of the school under twelve years of age are prohibited from voting. An absence of one month without sufficient cause will forfeit membership and thereby lose right to vote.

JAMES CRAIG, Superintendent.
LOUIS A. SERIG, Secretary.

Correction.

Bro. J. W. Rushton, the author of "The Apostasy and the Restoration," appearing in HERALD for October 14 and 21, 1903, wishes the third sentence of the first paragraph on page 989, of HERALD for October 21, of his article to be corrected to read as follows: "Can it be that Joseph Smith by mere trickery or prococious sagacity succeeded in subverting the divine end of God's own word to perpetrate a fraud of such stupendous proportions? Never!" instead of the way it reads as published.

Notice.

A meeting of delegates representing the Religio society of the Eastern Michigan District, will be held with the Detroit local at Detroit, Michigan, beginning at 10 o'clock, Saturday, January 2. All visitors coming by railroad or electric car will take any city car and transfer to Fort Street car going east, and get off at Baldwin and Champlain Streets. We hope for a full delegation, feeling that the work in Eastern Michigan demands it. F. V. Benedict, secretary.

Western Nebraska Tent Fund.

I give below the names of donors to the Tent Fund in Western Nebraska, and the amount each donated. In case anybody is omitted or of a mistake in amount, I will be glad to correct. TRYON, Nebraska, December 10. S. D. PAYNE.

Conference Notices.

The Northern Wisconsin District conference will convene with the Searles Prairie Branch, Necedah, Wisconsin, January 30 and 31, 1904; Sunday-school convention, February 1. Full reports of branches and ministry are expected, also reports of Sunday-schools. Send reports to Elder Lester Wildermuth and Sunday-school reports to Sr. J. H. Moore, Necedah, Wisconsin. A good representation of the local and traveling ministry is desired. A. V. Closson, president.

Southern Missouri District quarterly conference will convene with the Ava Branch, Saturday, January 2, at 10 a. m. All petitions, reports, and communications pertaining to conference should be addressed to me at 1923 Vernon Avenue, Springfield, Missouri, up to December 28, and after that date to Beaver, Douglas County, Missouri. Be sure to name the county, as many of my letters go to Bevier, Macon County,—hence a delay. J. C. Chrestensen, secretary.

Last conference of Northern California District previous to General Conference will convene in Sacramento, California, Saturday, February 27, at 10 a. m., in the Saints' church. It is important that there be a complete statistical report from each branch, as we wish the report incorporated in the general report of the Church. Let business-meetings be held at least a week before, and send at once report and credentials for delegates to Bro. E. S. Chase, district secretary, Irvington, Alameda County, California, who will prepare a credential report for conference. Delegates to General Conference will be chosen. Remember the delegate system in force. Select delegates, send credentials, and forward correct statistical report to district secretary. Let all come and we will have a profitable time. We have the promise of a noted visitor being present if we come aright. (Matthew 18: 20.) J. M. Terry, president.

Convention Notices.

Oklahoma District association will convene with the Redmoon Branch, December 31, at 10 a. m. Local secretaries, take notice and do not neglect to send annual reports to me at Redmoon before that date, as nearly all have failed to report quarterly. Please do not neglect the reports. Alice M. Case, secretary.

Died.

LEWIS.—Ammon Alvin Lewis, son of Ether and Emma Lewis, was born near Decatur, Nebraska, July 23, 1901, and died December 9, 1903. His death was caused by falling into a pan of boiling lye from which death resulted in less than twenty-four hours. Parents, three brothers, and one sister are left to mourn. Funeral was from the Saints' chapel in Decatur, and his remains were deposited in the Decatur Cemetery. Sermon by Elder R. Wight, assisted by Elder E. J. Butts.

WILLIAMS.—Sister Emma Jane, wife of Bro. Edmund Williams and daughter of Bro. and Sr. D. J. Powell, was born January 5, 1868, at Stewartville, Missouri; married July 22, 1897; died October 23, at Stewartville, and was laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Netawaka, Kansas, funeral being in charge of William Lewis. Sr. Emma was a good Saint, a kind and affectionate wife. She leaves husband, child, father, three brothers, four sisters, and a host of friends to mourn.

HOLLENBECK.—At Elmwood, Nebraska, December 5, Bro. Henry Hollenbeck, aged 69 years, 6 months, and 5 days. Born at Bainbridge, Chenango County, New York; and married to Miss Eliza F. Tyson, in Boone County, Illinois. To them were born two sons and three daughters, four of whom with his aged wife survive him. Baptized by Elder J. W. Waldsmith, December 25, 1867. He was an old settler at Elmwood, and his funeral was largely attended. Sermon by Elder C. Scott, Elder Waldsmith in charge. Prayer by the Methodist Episcopal minister. He rests from the trials of earth life.

KARR.—John J. Karr died at Cameron, West Virginia, December 1, aged 40 years. He united with the Reorganized Church September 9, 1890; baptized by Elder James Craig. He was a faithful brother until death; was highly respected as an honest man and kind neighbor, a loving father and faithful husband. He leaves wife, five children, three brothers, one sister, and all who knew him to mourn. He was buried in the Cameron cemetery by the Odd-fellows' lodge of which he was a member. Funeral by Elder James Craig, prayer by Reverend Pierce of the Christian order.

TREMMER.—At Santa Barbara, California, Mabel Alice Tremmer, November 22, aged 6 years and 13 days, and Violet Elsie Tremmer, November 30, aged 6 months and 27 days. These beautiful little girls, only children of our good and faithful Bro. and Sr. R. Tremmer, died of pneumonia which developed from the whooping cough. All that could be done by loving hearts to keep the little buds of promise on this side, was done. This is a sad blow to the tender hearts of father and mother. Funeral sermon of Mabel by J. C. Clapp; of Violet by Elder C. Earle.

The Model City at St. Louis.

The idea of a "model city," suggested by Mr. Albert Kelsey, of Philadelphia, to whom the work has been intrusted, was the most unique suggested to the Exposition authorities, and has given the Fair a fuller advertisement than any other idea proposed. Yet it has been treated with a niggardliness which is not only ungenerous but stupid, since it might be the most instructive feature in the Exposition, as well as a distinctly remunerative one. There is still time to make amends, and it may be that the Model City will yet give distinction to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. Certainly its groupings of buildings about a typical city square, with the graphic representation of methods of street and subterranean construction, and the handling of municipal services, will guide the student not only to an appreciation of the Model City itself, but of the larger exposition in which the same principles are exemplified.—From "The White City and After," by Charles Zueblin, in the Chautauquan for December.

What Nature Has Done for the American Ironmonger.

We must recognize the lavish hand with which Nature prepared the way for our industrial triumphs, by accumulating along the southern and western shores of Lake Superior those vast beds of iron ore, which are not only the most extensive in the world, but are so placed that the labor of excavating and loading for shipment is practically nothing. The ore, which is extremely rich, sixty per cent of it being iron, lies practically at the surface of the ground; and it is so loose and friable that all that is necessary for its recovery is to run in a train of cars, set a steam shovel at work, and load the material directly onto the cars. This work has actually been done at the rate of 5,800 tons in ten hours, and this with the labor of but eight men at a cost of five cents only per ton for labor. The supply is enormous, a single corporation having recently estimated its holdings at 500,000,000 tons, valued at as many million dollars. These vast and easily-recovered supplies, however, would have a limited value, were there not available a proportionate supply of coking coal; and this has been provided with an equally lavish hand in the famous Connellsville district, where a single coke company on entering into one of the great industrial combinations of the past few years, stated that it owned 40,000 acres of coal lands in this region, and 11,000 coke ovens. Within easy reach of the coal district there are also large quarries of limestone, the third of the three constituents in the charge of a blast furnace.—The Iron and Steel Number of the Scientific American.

The New Idea in Journalism.

A new and pleasing innovation in the great metropolitan Sunday newspapers has been introduced by the Chicago Record-Herald in giving away with its Sunday edition the Chicago Record-Herald Sunday Magazine. In the Sunday Record-Herald Magazine readers of the Sunday Record-Herald will recognize the advent of a new epoch in journalism. On December 6 the Sunday Record-Herald began furnishing its readers without extra cost a magazine that surpasses the best illustrated weeklies in the beautiful execution of its color pages and equals them in every other particular. The magazine having a minimum size of sixteen pages will be printed on heavy enameled paper. At the present time eight pages will be in colors, four of which will be suitable for framing.

The beautiful, highly illustrated pages in colors must be seen to be appreciated. Any news dealer handling Chicago Sunday papers will be glad to show you a sample of the magazine and the advance pages for next Sunday if you will give him an opportunity to do so.

A magazine which every farmer ought to find of interest and value is Good Roads Magazine, published by the E. L. Powers Company, 150 Nassau Street, New York. It contains illustrated and timely articles on subjects connected with the question of good roads. The December number has reached our table, and we find the usual variety of good articles.

Open Court for December contains the following: "Hammurabi and Amraphel," by Doctor Hugo Radau; "Tolstoy's Answer to the Riddle of Life," by E. H. Crosby; "Robert Houdin; Conjuror, Author, and Ambassador," by H. R. Evans; "Cross or Crescent in India?" by F. A. Ogg; "P'A-Lek," by the Editor; "The Wandering Jew," Albert J. Edmunds; "Frederick Douglass on Toussaint L'Ouverture and Victor Schoelcher;" "Hammurabi and Abraham," by Constantine Grethenbach;" "Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Green," an obituary; "Zodiacal Mithraic Tablets," by A. B. Grimaldi; "Eduard Koenig's Bible and Babel." As usual, the magazine is well illustrated.

What Do People Read?

Mr. John Cotton Dana of the Newark Library and well known as a writer and lecturer on library work, is not a pessimist on this subject. In an article on "A Librarian's Experience" in the December Outlook he says: "Every roadside fence is now a primer for the passer-by, every trolley car a first reader to the traveler, and every hoarding a treatise on zoology, manufactures, and social problems. To-day, most read a little, if only the signs and posters; some read newspapers—probably ten to twenty millions of the forty millions who could read them if they would. A few read novels; if the most popular novel finds only a million buyers in a country where forty millions could read it if they would, who can say that novel-readers are more than a few? A very few, possibly two or three millions, read standard literature and serious contributions to thought and knowledge. Surely, the procession of readers grows larger every year, relatively as well as absolutely."

A new plant has been discovered in South America which is said to contain twenty to thirty times as much sugar as the ordinary cane or the sugar beet, says County Life in America. This plant, a species of Eupatorium, is an herb which grows eight to twelve inches high. Its possibilities as a rival to the sugar-cane and sugar-beet are being carefully investigated.

THE SACRAMENT.

In the administration of the bread and wine of the sacramental service, it is not specially essential that the elder or priest who officiates in asking the blessing of consecration upon the emblems in prayer should take the plate or plates containing the bread, or the vessel or vessels containing the wine into his hands while offering the prayer. In many cases it would be quite impracticable for the officer to do this because of the number of vessels and servers. It is sufficient if the emblems be arranged on the desk or table where the audience may see them, and the officer offering the prayer kneels with the Church in the act of consecration.

It has been said that in asking the blessing upon the oil used in administrations to the sick the Seer taught that the bottles containing the oil should be open and held in the hand. We do not know how this is, but it seems to be the custom with the elders, and without specific instruction is sufficient.

Some have believed that the only act to be called the administration is the one of prayer by which the blessing is asked upon the bread and wine, the act by which the emblems are blessed, consecrated, set apart and sanctified to the use and benefit of those who afterwards partake of them, and that the passing of the emblems is not a part of the administration. We think, however, that the administration of the sacrament is not completed until the bread and wine have been offered to the members of the congregation present who propose to partake of them, each in turn, and the bread eaten and the wine drank.

While we do not believe that in the act of asking the Lord to "bless and sanctify" the emblems to the souls of those who partake of them, any change or transmission from the elements of bread and wine, as material substances, into the flesh and blood of Jesus, respectively, takes place, we are impressed with the belief that by the act of consecration the bread and wine become substantial tokens to the worthy believers of the broken body, the flesh, the wine, the shed blood of Jesus; and that partaking of these tokens in the spirit of strict propriety and due solemnity should characterize the occasion of the assembling of the Saints for the purpose.

The sacramental service is intended as an occasion upon which there may be a renewal of the believer's

WE here give space to the following query:

QUERY.

Joseph Smith, the Martyr, was married to Emma Hale, January 18, 1827, under statute laws, by a Gentile justice of the peace, three years and two months before the Church was organized on April 6, 1830. The fifty-first paragraph of section 132, in the Utah edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, contains the following: "A commandment I give unto mine handmaid, Emma Smith, your wife, whom I have given unto you." This occurs in the section said to be a revelation on the "eternity of the marriage covenant, including a plurality of wives." The date for this alleged revelation is given as July 12, 1843, sixteen years after Joseph Smith and Emma Hale were married and under Gentile administration had become "husband and wife," not "man and wife." Query: Through what prophet did the Lord give Emma Hale to Joseph Smith as his wife? Did Squire Tarbell, of South Bainbridge, New York, a Gentile justice of the peace, have authority from God to consummate that marriage as the act by which he gave Emma Hale to Joseph Smith as his wife? INQUIRER.

vows, in the presence of the Lord's Spirit and fellow believers, that spiritual strength may be renewed and a continued remission of sin be assured. If this view prevails among those gathered where the sacrament is to be administered, there will be no caviling as to method or manner, but those who administer will endeavor to conform to the rule laid down in the Church articles and covenants, and the partakers will overlook any slip of form which may occur through lapse of memory, or natural bashfulness on the part of the administrator, not the purpose of intention or design.

"IF PROPER CARE BE TAKEN."

We often receive letters from elders in the field, telling of the good work being done in the places where they are or have been laboring. These letters sometimes close about thus: "If the effort be followed up and proper care be taken a good work will be done there."

This is, of course, very encouraging; but the ending is unfortunate in that it leaves the situation open to the suggestion, Why did the elder not stay and finish the work seemingly open to the laborer? Why leave it to the incoming of another, which may not occur for months, or years, and possibly never; or to the possible incoming of an elder whose manners and teaching might not be so attractive to the hearers; or to be so long delayed that the good impression left by the temporary labor done may have been wholly dissipated, and the work all have to be done over again?

It also leaves the situation open to the further suggestion that, as the elder writing has a sufficiently good knowledge of the work done and the conditions attending it, to write that if proper care is bestowed upon it, no one coming after him would be so well qualified to give the proper care to foster what impression for good had been made. Who could be better prepared to do the work aright than he who has knowledge of it and what is needed to continue it unto completion? Is it not too often the case that the elder leaves the locality where his labor has been favorably received just at the time when he should stay and complete it and not leave it to the chance of another being sent to finish what he had begun?

We know that it sometimes happens that an elder can not stay at length in every place where his labor is demanded because he has previously made arrangements ahead for other places. But would it not be a good plan to avoid making appointments at too many points requiring too great hurry to fill them? Would it not be better to occupy in fewer places and bestow more labor in them if the word was well received there? We remember hearing that the Seer gave the following advice to some elders starting out on their missions: "Do not be in too big a hurry. When you go into a place where the opportunity seems good, stay there until you preach yourselves into a branch or out of a congregation." We did the latter once. After a number of efforts with continually decreasing audiences our last two services were attended by a middle-aged man and two boys under twelve years of age; and yet we enjoyed the situation; its experiences were beneficial; we found out that there were better preachers than we were—for that locality.

It seems to us that in new fields where an elder is well received, labor would be expended with more lasting results if he would stay long enough to meet personally the efforts almost sure to be made against the work by those who properly or improperly are adverse and make opposition. To excite opposition and to go from it before testing it, makes the work of another who may follow after much harder to meet. Of course we refer to the usual opposition urged against the work by the sectaries and not to the mob violence of the "fellows of a baser sort." "If they persecute you in one city, flee unto another," was good advice once, and may be good now. But while it is good, it is not best to invite persecution for the purpose of following it. Indeed, we think it quite unnecessary to offer bids for persecution, by undue laudation of one's self, or a harsh and denunciatory way of setting forth the truth. Especially is it not only bad policy, but absolutely wrong to conduct one's self in such a way as to bring both the elder and the church he represents into bad repute. An elder should be like Cæsar's wife, "above suspicion." There is enough evil in the world without the elders of the Church being guilty of any of it. "Be good, and you will be happy," is possibly a childish maxim, but it is true, and worth a study and an application.

"Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," means much in these evil and perilous times. The corrupting influences of greed for wealth and lust for power are so prevalent that it may well be said, If "judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" Unlike men, God will cleanse his own house first, then apply his forces to the cleansing of the world.

THE British and Foreign Bible Society has proposed a world-wide observance of March 7, 1904, as "Bible Sunday." This proposition has been approved by the American Bible Society. It is the date of the centenary of the British society. It is said that the Society has in the century distributed one hundred and eighty million volumes of the Scriptures at a total expenditure of over seventy million dollars. Three hundred and seventy languages are represented in the distribution.

SENSITIVE HORSES.

Under the above caption we find the following sensible statement:

AN OWNER WHO WOULD NOT ALLOW HORSES TO BE SWORN AT.

The horse does not like a nervous, fidgety, fussy, or irritable man. He is too nervous and irritable himself, says Country Life in America. "Why is it," one teamster was heard to ask another, "that Phin's horses are always gaunt? Phin feeds well." "Yes," was the reply; "but he's like a wasp around a horse." A well-known owner of race-horses, not at all a sentimental person, recently made an order forbidding his employees to talk in loud tones or to swear in the stable. "I have never yet seen a good-mannered horse," he says, "that was being sworn at all the time. It hurts the feelings of a sensitive horse, and I'll keep my word good to discharge any man in my employ if I catch him swearing within the hearing of any horse in this stable."

Our own experience with horses has proved to us the good sense of the above statement. Horses are not only sensitive but sensible, and when treated in a sensible manner are much pleasanter to handle, and far safer in the service they give to owners and drivers.

"HAWAII."

"Hawaii, Its People, Climate, and Resources," is the title of a booklet of one hundred and seventeen pages, written by Daniel Logan, we have just received from Honolulu. It is published by the "Pioneer Advertising Company," Honolulu. It is neatly printed, finely illustrated, and contains a fund of information concerning our island Territory. From it we learn that the Territory, composed of eight islands, has a population of one hundred and fifty-four thousand, the greatest number being on Oahu, where fifty-eight thousand five hundred dwell. Oahu is the island on which Honolulu is situated. Of the total population, sixty-three thousand two hundred were native born; the remainder foreign born.

We are told in the pamphlet that the Islands were discovered in 1778 by Cook. For about one thousand three hundred years prior to that time the Hawaiians had remained almost totally isolated. "It is well known," says Mr. Logan, "that the pioneers voyaged hither in their own-built canoes, thousands of miles from Southern Polynesia, from whence tribal warfare drove them, guiding their frail barks by their knowledge of the stellar paths above. It is equally authentic that much intercourse was maintained in canoes between here and the southern archipelagoes in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries."

Besides the short historical sketch of the Islands as a group, we find descriptions of the individual islands, telling of their resources, natural beauties, development, etc.

We are glad to acknowledge receipt of Mr. Logan's interesting little book.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. Paul M. Hanson, our young missionary who has been doing arduous work in Australia and New Zealand, wrote from Tuncurry, New South Wales, November 25, that he was "well and busy." He has found the Australian Saints to be a warm-hearted people. Their annual conference was to convene the latter part of December.

C. A. Butterworth, in making his quarterly report, states that the missionaries in his field (Australia) report sixteen baptisms. Two Religio societies were organized, one each by Paul M. Hanson and W. J. Haworth. Brn. Butterworth and J. W. Wight were in joint charge of the Australasian Mission, but since the departure from Australia of the latter, Bro. Butterworth is overseeing the missionary affairs there.

By clippings sent us from Oskaloosa, Iowa, we note that Bro. Mintun has been using printers' ink to present our position to the people. He sends us clippings from the Times-Journal and the Herald.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Quite a sensationally written article appeared in one of the New York papers recently telling of the "hypnotic powers" used by the handsome "young Mormon elders" in New York City in their proselyting efforts. Considerable excitement along this line was stirred up by a meeting in Philadelphia of the National Union of Women's Organizations, in which a "Crusade" was begun, the object of which is to "stamp out Mormonism." A number of portraits of the "hypnotizing" Utah elders is printed with the article, and indicated as the "Mormon elders with the hypnotic eyes."

The report of the United States Commissioner-general of Immigration for the fiscal year of 1903 shows that eight hundred fifty-seven thousand and forty-six foreigners came into this country in the year, an excess over 1902 of over two hundred thousand. The greatest number were Italians, over two hundred and thirty thousand coming from Italy. The immigration question is a disturbing one. To make laws such as will keep out the undesirable immigrants and admit those whose coming will be for the good of the country is a difficult task indeed.

Through the kindness of Sr. Etta M. Hitchcock, of St. Louis, Missouri, we have received a copy of the Christmas number of the "Indefinite," a "Religio magazine" of the St. Louis local. Forty-five copies were "printed" on a typewriter and mimeograph, "bound" by hand with a punch and ribbons, and illustrated by photogravure, photograph, and half-tone. Sr. Hitchcock says the entire issue was sold at ten cents per copy, and the amount turned over to the building committee of the St. Louis Branch. Our copy was sent to us with a "Merry Christmas." Sr. Hitchcock as senior editor was assisted by Grace Anderson, junior.

Bro. Charles E. Blair, son of Bro. W. W. Blair, who was hurt in a railway wreck on the main line of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway a few days ago, returned to his home in Lamoni, on Christmas day; still lame, but improving and out of danger, it is believed.

Bro. D. W. Shirk, formerly of the Dunkard faith, who was baptized at Garners Grove, Iowa, at the reunion of 1884, now living at Minatare, Nebraska, on the North Platte, paid Lamoni a visit the 20th and 21st of the month, being present at the services on Sunday evening. We were pleased to meet him, having been present at his baptism nearly twenty years ago. During all these years he has been on the frontiers fighting both battles: the one to maintain himself and family; the other to maintain the gospel message in its integrity. He is winning in both, by trust in God. Bro. Shirk is but one in the many hundreds who are facing the gainsaying world in isolated places; where, relying on the Spirit of the Master they are fighting a good fight and keeping the faith. All honor to such.

By the kindness of Bro. Joseph Luff there has been laid upon our desk a copy of "The Old Jerusalem Gospel," a series of twenty-nine sermons, delivered by Bro. Luff at different periods and taken by a stenographer. It is a readable work and contains a fund of gospel truth and argument worth reading and remembering.

There is in existence what is known as the Hawaii Promotion Committee, whose object is evident from its name. We have received some interesting literature from this committee which gives information concerning the "paradise" of the Pacific. No doubt persons interested in Hawaii can receive literature concerning the Islands by addressing the committee at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii.

The Burlington Hawk-Eye quotes the Washington (Iowa) Press as follows: "The old prophets had no money. They were as poor as Job's turkey. They did not run banks, build cities, have lace factories, deal in stocks and bonds. They did not mix religion and business. They were not manufacturers whose capital was furnished in tithes."

OUR PRIVILEGES AND RESPONSIBILITIES.

SERMON BY R. S. SALYARDS, AT LAMONI, IOWA, NOVEMBER 15, 1903.

Reported by L. A. Gould.

I invite your attention to the Epistle of Paul to the Ephesians:

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus: grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved: in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace; wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him: in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will: that we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ. In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory. Wherefore I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all. And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience: among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we are dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ (by grace ye are saved).—Ephesians 1: 1-23; 2: 1-5.

I find myself in position to be led, in harmony with the prayer uttered by our brother, that that which may be presented may be the mind of the Spirit. I do this gladly; not that I do not believe that preparation is necessary for an effort, but because there are circumstances in which we can not always make specific preparation. I believe our lives should be a preparation for service, so that when called upon at any time we may be in condition to be used by the Master in the interests of his work; and this not only as referring to preaching as a part of the service to be rendered in the building up of the kingdom of God, but to all the membership of the Church.

I am impressed with the thought, as I continue in my work, that no effort made in the interests of the kingdom of God that is not made in humility before God, that is not made with the purest of motives, that is not made with a sincere desire to glorify God and accomplish his will, can be acceptable to him; and that any effort which is made contrary to the Christ-spirit and Christ-character, can not result in the building up of his kingdom.

I believe there is not enough thought given to our work; that we are apt, in the spirit of this busy world, to rush along too much in what we do. In other words, we are apt to become mechanical. And I have become impressed with the thought that when I hear people talk too fast, and are too much given to words, that they are not doing much thinking in their work.

The responsibilities which attach to us, and the privileges which present themselves to us in the work of the kingdom of God are not ordinary in their character. And if we have learned wisdom by the experiences of this life we must conclude that best results are reached by men and women as a result of sober, clear, and painstaking thought; and that completeness or fineness of work is not the result of careless workmen, but is the result of proper training, proper attention given to every detail of the work. Our work as a people in performing the trust which has been committed unto us (for it is a trust, a sacred trust, that has been reposed in us) is largely educational in its character. It is a work in which we are called to represent God, and the God-idea throughout. In this letter which the apostle presents to the Ephesian brethren we have the statement of an inspired man, one who claimed to be a master-builder, one who had been called by the direct revelation of Jesus Christ, and who had been anointed by the spirit of an especial apostleship, the impress of whose work has come down to our own times, and in the benefits of which we share, under better conditions of civilization as well as in the specific lines of church work which he did; because this man was a contributor to the civilizing forces of mankind, which transformed a heathen world into a world that believed in God, that became a believer in the one God idea through Christianity, which was extended largely as a result of his mission and the mission of his fellow-disciples. And the theme of his testimonies and of his presentation seems to be: Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of all mankind. The thought of God's Fatherhood, and of the relationship which humanity bears to him is the theme of his presentation. And you will notice that he draws a vivid picture or contrast between the life of those people when they were in the world, and their after-life when brought out from the world. Their conversation in the world was after the lusts of sin; it was carnal and selfish and foolish in its character; it was that which was degrading, misleading, mis-educating throughout. But through the mercy of God as made manifest in Jesus Christ, those people were made acquainted with better conditions; they were faced about. In the language of this same apostle, they were transplanted from the kingdom of this world into the kingdom of God's dear Son. The transforming and renewing influence of truth was brought to bear upon them. Their minds hitherto darkened by the evil of the world, by the influences of Satan, were now enlightened, and by grace they were saved. And he leads them up to the logical sequence of their then present attainment; not to the thought that they should remain where they were, but he presents the excellency of Jesus Christ, and that he, having risen from the dead, continues to work the regeneration of his people until they are brought before him in a perfect condition of development. This he presents as the comprehensive work of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I think of it this morning, as I have thought of it at other times, seeing our people gathered together here in such large numbers; seeing how we have been brought out from the influences of the world and, as we are given reason to believe, located in a place in which we are largely apart from influences that prevail in the world about us. It seems to have been the will of God that his people should be gathered together, in this gathering principle, this principle in which we believe the Zion of God is to be established as the light of the world; in which the standard of God is to be erected; in which it is to be a light unto all people; in which Christ the light of the world is to be revealed.

There are two leading divisions of work presented in the kingdom of God; viz., the missionary department, in which the gospel is to be preached to all the world and people gathered into the fold; and the internal work of the body, in which all are to be brought under those divine influences that shall mold and fashion them; and in which the Church shall educate the people. And while the missionary work brings them into the Church, and they are gathered here, such influences should be thrown around them as will educate and separate them from every influence that is contrary to the mind of God. This morning I wish to present this thought of our privileges and of our responsibilities, that we may constantly be impressed with the importance of occupying ground high enough to bring us to nobler conditions of life.

The scale of life in the kingdom of God is an ascending one. It is not one in which we are to stand still, but like the growth of the man from physical childhood on up to full developed manhood, so are we to grow as men and women into the exalted character of our Lord Jesus Christ. In the organization of the kingdom of God he has placed officers, and helps and governments, for the accomplishment of his work. He has given unto us all the means we need to accomplish this work. We need not cast about to invent means whereby we shall be able to accomplish it. But we must give more thought to that which he has already placed within our hands, that we may discover what the wisdom of God has done for us, that we may make a right use of the means, the perfect means he has adapted to these ends. I believe it is largely true that we have failed to discern the full purposes of God in this particular. It is possible for us to conceive of prophets, apostles, evangelists, pastors, teachers, gifts, graces, helps, governments, etc., in a sense, and glibly enumerate them, without really discerning the import of the work they are to accomplish. It is always a benefit to an individual to be impressed with the thought that he should improve upon his present condition. I do not find fault with people who are quite particular, if they are not over-particular. I think the great trouble is that we are inclined to be careless, rather than too particular. And while we do not want to be over-nice in our definitions, and over-careful in the work we attempt to do, we want to be careful enough in thought to apply corrective influences to our lives in order that our work may fully measure up to the divine standard.

There is a great deal said to-day about the strenuousness of our modern life. The use of the word strenuous has become quite as general as the word environment that we heard so much about a few years ago, when scientific men presented certain theories. It is getting to be a sort of byword or catch-word that indicates the present trend of the spirit of the times. Strenuousness is said to mean that forcefulness, that activity applied to the affairs of life, as a result of which some claim we largely have our development. Activity is life, stagnation is death; and we want to be active, that we may live, that we may grow, that we may accomplish something in the world. And I think we can not accomplish the purpose of our creation and our calling without a good deal of active mental life. I do not believe we can grow up in bodily vigor and bodily power, and accomplish the will of God, and remain children in intellect; but that we must think and that we must apply the processes of thought to our work that we may comprehend it. The great things of God are not to be comprehended by a listless condition of life.

They are great things, as they are represented to be, and require devoted, painstaking effort.

In the work of the Master we find that instead of being diverted by the conditions of life by which he was surrounded, the low standard of the world, he was often engaged in fasting and in prayer and in study and in thought. And I believe he voiced the sentiment that should be expressed in the life of the true disciple when he declared, "My meat and my drink is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish his work." He devoted himself to that object. He recognized the importance of preparing himself that he might measure up to the responsibilities God had placed upon him. The men and women who have developed spirituality, who have come near to God, who have become forceful in the hands of God for good, are the men and women who have studied his word, the men and women who have given thoughtful consideration to the problems of the Church and to the conditions of society about them. We have the responsibility resting upon us as it rested upon Jesus Christ, that we shall not be carried away by our surroundings, but that we shall influence our surroundings, and help bring them up to the right standard; that the Christ-character may be represented in all conditions and details of life.

When Jesus Christ was upon the earth he did not accept the doctrine and the leaven of the Pharisees. He did not accept their hypocrisy. He did not accept many of their opinions and their customs; but he presented to the people a superior system of life. And he bade his disciples that they should rise above the low conditions and customs of the Jews. And those men went forth as a renewing and transforming influence in that day and age of the world; and the grace of God was so manifested upon them that after Jesus Christ arose from the dead they continued in their work until they were instrumental in overthrowing that Jewish system, and afterwards in overthrowing the Gentile system; and in bringing in a better order of things. I want to say, right in this connection, that those who work for good, and those who believe in God, should never permit themselves to remain discouraged. I do not deny that I have been very much discouraged, and very much depressed in my life. I do not deny that I have been discouraged in regard to the development of this work. I think an individual who has never doubted, who has never been troubled, or never felt anxious concerning the development of the work of God, has never realized very much of its condition or very much of its importance. I have reason to believe, as I read of his life upon earth, that Jesus Christ, when he met the satanic influences that were about him, when he met the low conditions of the spirit of that Jewish society and that Jewish church in its apostasy, felt the darkness that was upon those people. He was made to realize it, and as a result of realizing it, he renewed his efforts. And I believe that God's faithful servants now will be sensitive in this respect; that they will feel that worldly influences may have a bearing upon the work of the Church; and that they will be led thereby to realize the importance of aiding the Church to rise from under those influences, and seeing to it that they are not compromised thereby.

Those who live in the Church, those who have studied the past history of the Church, must know that the Church is influenced by the conditions surrounding it; that it receives from God in proportion to its faithfulness; and that it suffers often because of not receiving the degree of light that it ought to receive, if it is careless, if it is unspiritual, because it does not measure up to the conditions that God has designed it should reach. And we have a warning to us in latter-day revelation in the early times, in the early thirties when the Lord said unto them that the Church was under condemnation; that condemnation rested upon the children of Zion, even all; and that they should remain under that condemnation until they repented and remembered the Book of Mormon and the former commandments, not only to say, but to do according to that which was written. And the Lord speaking to them upon the land of Missouri declared that he would not permit them to pollute his holy land; that the rebellious among them should be sent away; that when men were called to his everlasting gospel, they were called to be the light of the world, and if the light in them became darkness, they were accounted as salt that had lost its savor, that they were cast out and trodden under foot of men; and the Lord warned them that if they were not faithful the kingdoms of this world would prevail against them, and not cease to prevail against them. That did happen with ancient Israel. They were scattered in all the world, because they knew not the time of their visitation. When Jesus Christ came they were not able to make use of their great opportunity. They were too worldly-minded, too darkened to avail themselves of it, and were swept away by the spirit of the world. But the Lord told the Church in this age, also, that if they would continue in faithfulness before him, would renew their diligence, and separate themselves from wrong-doing, the kingdom of God would prevail, and that it would begin to prevail from that very hour, and would not cease to prevail until Christ should come and subdue all enemies under his feet.

The thought I wish to present is this: In all things with which we come in contact here in Lamoni, or wherever we may be, let us see to it that the gospel standard is applied to the various phases of our lives. I do not care whether it be business, politics, or what not, it is our business to conform conduct to the gospel standard, to live by that standard, and walk in harmony with it; to see to it that in our homes, in all the work that we have to do, we have an eye single to the glory of God and the good of his people.

Reverting to the idea of strenuousness, I wish to present this thought: While Jesus Christ and his apostles impressed upon men the necessity of being active, and being earnest in their work, there was another principle to which he called attention; namely, that their activities should be rightly directed; that they should be guided by the influences of the Spirit of truth; that they should exercise due moderation in what they did; that they should not be swept away by the tide and current of human affairs that was about them; but that they should be governed by that Spirit of wisdom and truth that God would give unto them. And Jesus enunciated unto men that they must "deny" themselves; that they must exercise necessary restraint; that it was just as necessary for a man to deny himself in some respects as it was for him to assert himself. If we love the gospel as we ought, our conduct will represent that which will build it up, and we will not compromise its interests in any particular; not for gold, or position, or place, or love of power, or anything of this kind will we surrender a principle of right, will we permit our selfish interests to manifest themselves; but we will crucify these things, and prove our loyalty and integrity by doing the will of our heavenly Father. The work of the Church and the spirit of the gospel demand that men shall exercise this spirit of self-denial; that they shall continue to restrain themselves.

I know of men in this world who are called great men, and the chief feature of their greatness seems to be that they can ride over principle roughshod, and seemingly have their own way in everything; can dominate over men and push them out of the way. Such was the character of Napoleon, such was the character of Julius Cæsar, such was the character of Alexander the Great, men who are called great men according to the wisdom of this world. But they did not have the true spirit of greatness in them. Their work was destructive in its character; they enslaved people according to their own ideas that they might accomplish their purposes. And we must not forget that that spirit has been made manifest in the work of God. Take past history and look into it, and you will find this distinctive characteristic of humanity. And the disciples of Christ were troubled a little, too, in this respect, when in traveling together they had disputed which was the greatest among them. And Jesus took a little child and set him in their midst, and told them they must become as a little child if they would become qualified for the kingdom of heaven. There is that characteristic of Jesus Christ that when he stood before his betrayer, approaching the climax of a life of submission and sacrifice and love for humanity, and the endurance of pain and of scourging and every evil condition it was possible to bring upon an individual, knowing he was the Son and a servant of God, yet he submitted himself to those influences and endured them; and he said, "Know ye not that I could pray the Father, and he would send me more than twelve legions of angels?" But he restrained the power he might have exercised, and manifested the virtue and the strength of the divine manliness that enabled him to control himself; and in that respect, as well as in every other, he stands superior to the characters of human history, as one who submitted himself to that which was necessary that he might descend below all things, that he might comprehend all things, that he might fill all things. As the people of God we can never realize that spirit of true greatness, can never get a comprehension of the Lord Jesus Christ, of his divine love and suffering and goodness, unless we are willing to manifest this spirit among us.

And now a word with regard to authority in the Church. It is a word, in some respects, that I do not like. In its proper sense, as every other word and every principle, it represents a proper idea. Jesus Christ said upon one occasion, "I am among you as him that serveth." And he said, "He that is greatest among you, let him be the servant of all." That I understand to be the spirit that should prompt men who are called of God; that they are called to be servants of the people; and I do not believe that there is a true representation of Jesus Christ when men become pompous and overconscious in regard to authority and position. I believe mistakes have been made by men permitting their human activities and their human desires and ambitions to rule them in this respect. But what we want in the church of God, and what I believe we will have as time develops, is that administration of authority in which the meekness and long-suffering, the patience and love of our Lord Jesus Christ will be represented by men who have so studied the life of Christ and the interests of the people that they will not think of exalting themselves in any particular.

How can we be devoted, how can we be true to Jesus Christ and serve ourselves, with a desire for ambition? Everything of this kind should be sunk into insignificance. We may admire men for their supposed strength and courage; but I believe that true strength and true courage are exemplified in quietness; not in a failure to stand by that which is right, but by doing it in quietness and self-possession and self-control; that these admirable qualities are necessary that we may make manifest the character of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory.

Now, the apostle in his letter calls attention to the contrast between the carnal life and the spiritual life. All along the line of this man's ministrations there seems to be impressed upon him the necessity of presenting to the people that they should make this distinction. He knew as we know to-day, I trust, that the tendency of humanity is towards earthly things.

We are surrounded by earthly conditions. I have thought and I believe that it is the systems in vogue among men that largely pervert humanity. A great many people are finding fault with the selfishness that is in the world to-day. I believe it is admissible, in present conditions, that largely it is the system of things that makes conditions wrong. People in this world, to obtain a competency, have to be very careful, have to manage very wisely and the tendency of a life of this kind, if we are not careful, is to narrow us; and we ought not to be narrowed by any condition. And while I believe that we should be careful in what we do, careful with our means, let us remember that if we do our part God will provide for us. If we are diligent, not slothful, do not fail to trust in God, he will bring us out of every difficulty. Each one has his difficulties. If we are ever brought face to face with poverty, with any condition hard to meet, there is our opportunity to receive help from God; there is our opportunity to trust him and go forward. I am thankful that I can testify, in my humble experience, that God has more than verified his promises to me. He has not blessed me with the wealth of this world, and it is with sincere thankfulness to God that I state that he took me out of the world where I might have been successful in that way; but the opportunity of having done a little for this work, and of realizing the blessing of God, I would not measure by the riches of this world; for it is possible for us to have quite a little in temporal things and not have what we ought to have in the spiritual way, and thus be very poor indeed. What we want is a proper union of the spiritual and the temporal, which are but parts of a whole.

It is this thought that I present to you this morning, that we should bear in mind the character of our responsibilities. And when we go out into the world, be not conformed to the world. In the language of the apostle, "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds." To "transform" is to change. To renew an individual is to make him a new creature in Jesus Christ. While we have been pursuing certain beaten paths, conforming to that which is customary, according to the education of this world, let us stop and think if we are taking just the ground we ought to take, if our influence is one for good as it ought to be; if we are walking in the light.

There have been times when I have been with the Church in general conference and elsewhere when the inspiration of the time impressed me that I should never give my vote as a representative of the Church, however humble my influence might be, to that which I did not know to be right, and that I did not have a clear conception to be right. We can not afford to act without knowledge or to walk in the dark. We are called to be the children of the light, to comprehend the will of God, to know the mind of the Spirit. The Spirit of God is not expressed alone in prophecy and in tongues, and I do not speak lightly of these manifestations; for when they appear they should present light and wisdom and understanding. The Spirit of God is life; the Spirit of God is truth, the Spirit of God is strength. And we can never become children of God in the sense in which we ought to be unless we are made strong under the influences of the gospel. It requires strength of character upon the part of men and women to represent this Church as it ought to be represented.

I have been considerably impressed, in looking over the book of Covenants, in thinking of one of the provisions therein for the development of God's people. You are aware that we have the visiting officers go among the people, men who we believe by the anointing of the Spirit of the Lord in their ministrations will be men of skill among the people, men of wisdom, men of understanding; men who give comfort to the people, and teach and instruct them. We believe that their work is to be done in this way as visiting officers, these priests, teachers, and deacons. And we also have the fatherly, loving work of the patriarchs in the Church, as God has appointed them to be advisers and spiritual fathers to the people. Now, the Lord says the priest's duty is to preach, teach, exhort, and baptize, administer the sacrament, visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and to attend to all "family duties." I do not believe we have fully comprehended the scope of that important work. I do not believe we have seen the wide range of importance that attaches to it. We have these officers presented here that they may keep an affectionate, watchful oversight of the people; that they may notice when they are absent; that they may care for their spiritual welfare. And God, in his word, has appointed these men that they shall pray with the people, and under the influence of the Spirit teach them to attend to all family duties. Now, the man or woman who presides in the family, who does the work well, is a man or woman of wisdom. It requires wisdom there that they may teach, that they may train their children aright. I confess that while I have realized this responsibility to some extent, I have something to learn every day in regard to it. I find that the greatest principle in life that will move people is the principle of love; and of that principle the Apostle Paul said upon one occasion to the people, that their love should "abound" more and more in wisdom and in prudence, or words to that effect. So love is something more than a feeling of affection. It is to be abounding with that wisdom and that prudence by which proper care and proper oversight and proper restraint shall be exercised. I do not believe in undue restraint upon the young people; I do not believe in expressions of harshness, or anything of that kind. And you will pardon me for giving expression to this thought to-day, as I have no desire to find fault with any individual, because scolding and fault-finding are not of the Spirit of Jesus Christ: I do believe that some people have suffered in their homes, and that some children have suffered because there was too much indulgence, because the love was not a wise love, because there was not sufficient firmness in saying no when no should have been said. I believe that we are under the responsibility of keeping our children as much at home as possible, especially in the hours of the night. I do not believe that where we have so many attractions in the cities and towns, where we have so many diversions, that it is a good idea for children to be away from home too much. I think we want the influences of home preserved; and that in this so-called strenuousness of life there is a tendency to rob the home of something which should be largely possessed by it, as a place of attractiveness, as a place of comfort, as a place of sweet satisfaction to the whole family. I believe that we should make our homes pleasant and attractive. We ought not to scold our children; but we should be firm in restraining them, and loving in all our ministrations to them. We ought not to fail in that; but when it is necessary to exercise proper restraint, we should do that. I believe that parents often manifest a good deal of weakness in this regard. "Attend to all family duties." There is a good deal in that thought. And is it not a reasonable conclusion that there should be more development along this line than there has been? I present this to you as suggesting more thought upon this phase of our responsibilities, that we may occupy higher ground.

The question of amusements is one which also presents itself unto us. To-day there is great development along the lines of so-called amusements; and I think a good many people go to extremes in regard to them. Amusements, to-day, run to the extreme in amateur and professional athletics. Men and boys, women and girls, are carried away by leagues and other absorbing combinations, until educators themselves are crying out against it. We can go to extremes on one side or the other of these things; but it seems to me that temperance, as the apostle says, ought to be exercised in all these things. You know the Apostle Paul said that one of the peculiarities about the last days would be that men would be "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." I think it is all right to have amusements, but persons have been ruined by going in companies where some forms of amusement have led to excesses and have resulted in the formation of bad habits. I know that such have affected some of the boys of this town; and I think the fathers and mothers should have said no upon those occasions. If we are not careful in our attitude, we make it harder for other people who want to be careful in this respect. Now, it does not make any very great difference to me whether or not people call men cranks who speak upon these questions. I would rather please people than displease; but at the same time there is danger, and I do not believe in those easy attitudes and principles that the world presents to those who simply drift along with it. I believe we have suffered, as a people, because the standard has not been high enough in the minds of some who might have lifted it up more; and we must lift it up in spite of the surroundings we have to meet that are hard. It is necessary for us to do it. Hence we must keep the Christ-standard before us. And if any one fails to measure up to that, look beyond that man to the Christ; keep that standard before you, and live by it, and God will bless you in your efforts. The apostle said upon one occasion, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Reprove them by a proper attitude concerning them.

The spirit of the gospel will not deny to us anything that is for our good. It will broaden us; it will give us peace; it will give us satisfaction; it will give us joy. And if we are existing alongside of conditions that represent worldliness, let us not be unduly worried concerning it, if we do our part to overcome it. Concerning another phase of worldliness, a brother who was here a short time ago expressed a sentiment that has merit. He said that men will in time build monuments to such men as Rockefeller and Gould because they are helping people to comprehend the incorrectness of the present business systems; that the selfishness of these men will tend toward a reaction in the end, and will thereby help create a development of the spirit of equality, under the reign of Jesus Christ. But that will not be developed by men and women who are not sensitive to the interests of humanity. The gospel does not simply mean entrance into the kingdom of God; it does not simply mean the beginning of faith, and repentance, and baptism, obedience unto the outward ordinances of the gospel. It is the comprehensive means to an end. The Spirit of God is to endow men and women; it is to endow them with life and make them positive characters in the development of truth in the world.

Sometimes I hear individuals say, "I want to attend to my business." I, too, want to do that; but when I take into consideration what is "my business," I find that it takes in a wide range. I do not think it is my business to meddle with the personal affairs of other people in the sense of being a meddler, or anything of that kind. I do not want to do that; all should have too much to do to do that; I do not like to see that characteristic in anybody. But is it not my business to take cognizance of everything in the world, and in the Church, that has a bearing upon the well-being of the Church, or on the proper development of the body, or that may pervert the body if it is not restrained? Certainly, it is. If a man keeps a saloon down town, it is my business to take note of it. If a man is making a mistake in the administration of his office as a public servant in church or in state, or employs improper methods by which the welfare of the people is affected, is it not my business to take note of it? It certainly is. The Devil does not want a better weapon put into his hands than to lull people to sleep. "Eternal vigilance is the price of safety," and the ground of attainment of present liberty for good. There may be a good deal of selfishness and evasion of duty in an idea of the kind referred to. It is a good deal like the thought: "Me and my wife, my son John and his wife; we four and no more." And it does not appeal to the conscience of intelligent men and women. Let us attend to our business, and see the full scope of our business, be ready to act in the interests of the work, in the interests of the community, in the interests of everything that will pertain to the will of God. Then we shall find that the gospel means a life of activity and a life of accomplishment. I believe it means a life of accomplishment. I do not think we ought to fail in anything that is given us to do; and when any of us fail to measure up to requirements, we fail in necessary development. I have said before, and I repeat it here to-day, I have seen some men in lower offices in this Church that were men of power in the preaching of the word, because they were humble; but when called higher, they became exalted in mind and careless. Their preaching was not so good afterwards as it was in the day of their humility. It has taught me this lesson, that men to win and retain the favor of God must answer to the conditions upon which he bestows favor. The favor of God will be bestowed upon us in proportion as we develop proper character, by proper work; but when we are afraid to stand up in the interests of duty, or when we neglect to do it, we are simply unprofitable servants and are not pleasing in the sight of God, and can not be. I often think of the language of David. David was pursued by Saul, and his life was at stake because Saul knew God had chosen David to be king of Israel in his stead. And David lived in dens and caves, led that life for weary years of trying existence, until the death of Saul. He refused to put forth his hand, when the life of Saul was in his hands. What did David say, in his inspiration, upon one occasion? "The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?" Do you not believe that God will take care of your interests, temporally and spiritually, if you do right?

In our public school work we could do a great deal better. The pupils in many instances could do better work, and be better equipped for the responsibilities of life, if there were more interest upon the part of all concerned. Where there is lack of interest the tendency of the children is to neglect their studies, some of them, if they are not imbued with their work. That is as it is in the gospel work, because the same principles apply. We find children coming up to the higher grades unprepared for them. They have not assimilated the lower grade work as they ought. When they come to higher mathematics, they have not learned the lower, and they stumble and fall, and simply blunder through in some way. I think most every school teacher could point out some of these conditions. In all these things we want the coöperation of one another. We want the coöperation of parents. This is a part of our gospel work. You know our gospel work means advanced work; and every dispensation is in advance of previous dispensations, as civilization is in advance of what it was years ago. And so this movement must be an upward movement; so this Church will stand upon higher ground than it occupies to-day; so some day there will be no indefinite attitude upon the part of this Church as a body upon any public question in which principle is involved.

May we live and labor to that end, that we may rejoice in the glorious victories that are to be attained by those who love God and the truth, who love it with all their hearts, and who love their neighbor as themselves.

Sufficiency of the Atonement.

Jesus, thy blood and righteousness
My beauty are, my glorious dress;
'Midst flaming worlds, in these arrayed,
With joy shall I lift up my head.

Bold shall I stand in thy great day,
For who aught to my charge shall lay?
Fully absolved through these I am,
From sin and fear, from guilt and shame.

The holy, meek, unspotted Lamb,
Who from the Father's bosom came,
Who died for me, e'en me to atone,
Now for my Lord and God I own.

Lord, I believe thy precious blood,
Which, at the mercy-seat of God,
Forever doth for sinners plead,
For me, e'en for my soul, was shed.

Lord, I believe were sinners more
Than sands upon the ocean shore,
Thou hast for all a ransom paid,
For all a full atonement made.

Reading for January Meetings of Daughters of Zion Locals.

(Concluded from last week.)

A direct appeal must be made to the nurture element which lies in the breast of every woman who is worthy of the name of woman. From the dawn of recorded history wherever women have been found, nurture has been found. The old myth of the She-Wolf, suckling Romulus and Remus, is but the primitive way of asserting what the experience of the race had already proved, namely: that even the mother who has not risen beyond the brute instincts has the nurture element within her.

A belief in this nurture element is the keynote to the truly successful mothers' class. It is the highest element in woman, and, if rightly developed, leads her into the highest form of womanhood. I do not mean sentimental gush, nor do I refer to the morbid love of self-renunciation which is sometimes called unselfishness. But rather that deep spiritual element in woman which makes her intuitively feel the weakness or need or discouragement of another when her more outward-looking brother has not yet perceived it, and that makes her rejoice in serving, rejoice in growing, that she may serve the more and the better.

This spontaneous, unconscious nurturing element in her must be rationalized and made a conscious power. This is the aim and scope of mothers' classes.

When you ask me what are the results, a vision comes before my eyes, the richest vision that all my work has left me, of class after class who have grown in such a thought-atmosphere as this and I see their faces grow luminous as little by little they learn to think of their work not merely as an individual work of love which concerns their own children, but as a great world-work whose influence will go on for generation after generation.

The first great result of rationalizing mother-love is that it dignifies the office of mother. With this dignifying of the office comes the dignifying of its every detail for the sake of the end in view—the giving to the world of one more man or woman, strong in body, clear in intellect, warm in heart and deep in that spiritual life which feels the God-presence every hour! This trained mother knows that sending her child out into the world without a strong body is sending him to his life task with broken tools. Aye, more: she knows that his body reacts on his mind and soul; that the health of the three are inseparable. It is the inner life of her child that she has learned to watch and to nourish as well as the outer. So she prepares his food, or sees that it is prepared, in the most wholesome manner possible, not merely that he may have good digestion and grow in stature and in size, but with his feeding comes her guardian care that he may learn to eat to live, not live to eat.

She watches over his sleep and his quiet waking hours not merely because she has learned that diseased nerves are generally the result of too much excitement during childhood, and that fatigue poisons the blood, and poisoned blood unbalances the mind, but also that the peace which passeth all understanding comes only from quiet, serene communing with nature and with self.

The too "strenuous" life that is being forced upon our American children is preparing a generation that will fear not God nor keep his commandments. I say this from both a physiological and psychological standpoint. The child that hears not "the God-voice" in his childhood will not be able to unhesitatingly distinguish its words of command in later life.

I do not mean by this that each child should not have active life, an abundance of it: that whenever it is possible there should be allowed perfect freedom for the "motor nerves" to respond to the "sensor nerves." This nature will see to, if we will permit her. But I had reference to the over stimulation of the sense-perception in childhood, a common fault of to-day.

Let us return again to the rationally trained mother. She has learned that she can not too early begin her child's social training in gratitude, courtesy, and compensation toward the world-workers by whom he is surrounded and sustained. Even in their nursery play she begins to help him play that he is a carpenter, a blacksmith, a cab driver, or other server of mankind. For unless he can enter into the consciousness of the solidarity of the race, she knows he will never comprehend the height nor depth nor true meaning of living!

Nothing that affects the life of her child is uninteresting or unimportant to such a mother, for she has learned to see it in its bearing on the inmost life by which all outer life is made rich and beautiful, or mean and poor.

Again, such a study leads the mother to look upon her work from the standpoint of a universal work. She learns that most of her problems are the problems of all mothers. I have held possibly a hundred mothers' classes. Some have been large, containing many mothers, and some small, with not more than a score of members. Yet when "Questions and Answers" day came, I have never failed to have asked in some form the question, "What would you do with a child who lies?" "How should I manage a boy of ten who teases his little brother?" "What would you do with a girl of thirteen who is disrespectful?" "How can a slow child be cured of dallying?" etc., etc.

A little book written for a small circle of Chicago mothers, and dealing with these universal characteristics of children, has already leaped the boundary of five foreign languages.

Does not this short outline show where the stress of mothers' class work should be placed? Not until a mother has learned to look upon her child, not as her child, but as a life given to the world, that she is allowed to unfold and develop for humanity's service; not until she has learned to look upon her new-born infant as one more effort of the divine life trying to manifest itself in concrete form, is she ready for the highest work of motherhood, the real spiritual motherhood of her child! When this day comes there will be such a religious awakening as the world has never dreamed of!—Miss Elizabeth Harrison in an address before the National Educational Association, Boston, July 10, 1903, and published in Kindergarten Magazine.

Resolutions of Sympathy by Lamoni Sunday-School.

In the passing of Sr. May Gunsolley another faithful teacher has for ever gone out from the Star of Bethlehem Sunday-school. The cheerful readiness with which she lent her assistance to the various organizations in the Church deserves a grateful recognition. As a Sunday-school, we do appreciate the diligent service rendered by her during her long association with us, by which she won the esteem of all, endearing herself especially to those whom she taught.

To those who mourn for her in the closer relationship of the family circle, we extend our heartfelt sympathy, and for them we pray that God may sustain them in this time of sorrow. With them we rejoice in the assurance that the life ended here is renewed in the paradise of God, and the exceeding precious promises of the gospel bid us hope for a happy meeting with our sister when Jesus shall return and shall gather, from heaven and from earth, all the faithful children of God.

This message of sympathy and hope the Star of Bethlehem Sunday-school sends to those who mourn.

Work in the Field.

Leaving the vicinity of the Coldwater Branch of the Florida District where announcements were made for the organization of a Sunday-school the following Sabbath, and accompanied by Bro. W. R. Smith, we took the mail hack for Berrydale near the Santa Rosa Branch meeting place. We were domiciled with Bro. and Sr. W. A. West during our two-day stay there.

We held two evening meetings of Sunday-school institute work Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, the second evening effecting an organization of a school. Prospects are good for a successful school there. They went at it in a way that is business-like and they only need to continue as well as they have started to assure success. They proceeded to raise means at once and ordered a full supply of literature, records, etc. We bespeak for them success.

The Santa Rosa Branch is one of the oldest branches of the Reorganization in this section, and though the work there is not what it might have been under different circumstances, yet we are hopeful for improvement and growth. May God inspire each one to take hold individually and help to push the work along.

Thursday morning, ere the sun had risen to consume the chill of the southern winds, we started for Pollard to take the train enroute for Bay Minette, Alabama, where we were to meet with the Saints. But a wreck above Pollard delayed our train more than seven hours, making us late at our place of meeting. And because of the train being very late, it was taken for granted that it would not come at all and the house was not lighted up. How easy it is to find an excuse not to do in this work of the Lord. The appointment was unnecessarily lost, but we shall try it again next Wednesday evening. We hope it will not be "too cold."

Friday, in company with Bro. F. P. Scardiff, superintendent of the Mobile District, we arrived at Theodore, Alabama, where a two-day meeting is to be held. We find here a good school and some workers who are alive to the interests of the work. Had they sufficient help and encouragement they would bring the work up to a desirable standard. As it is, they are doing well; but give them proper support from all, and they could, of course, do better.

We held four sessions of institute work which were well attended and apparently appreciated, and I assisted in the session of the school on Sunday morning, offering such suggestions as seemed necessary and wise. We wish them continued prosperity.

We go from here to the school at Three Rivers, Mississippi, for work Monday and Tuesday evenings, and to Bay Minette, Alabama, to try once more on Wednesday night.

THE NEW SUNDAY-SCHOOL SONG-BOOK.

Every school should get and use the new Sunday-school song-book, "Zion's Praises." It will soon be in hands of the customers and we hope to have ample time to become familiar with its contents before the next General Convention where it will be used. We want to make the music of the Convention a complete success, and this can only be when the singers all over the Church use the same book.

"Zion's Praises" will, in our opinion, be one of the best collections of Sunday-school songs that we know of. It will contain many of the "gems" found in other collections together with some old favorites and some original numbers. On the whole it will be a creditable collection, we think.

THE HYMNAL.

The question is often asked, why not use the Hymnal? What is the use of having two books? To this we would reply that while the Hymnal is as good a collection of hymns as we know of, it is not appropriate for the Sunday-school. But why not appropriate to the use of the Sunday-school? The Sunday-school work being of a different character from that of the preaching service or of the prayer-meeting, and the audience being composed of children as well as adults, it needs a class of music suitable to the needs of school work and to the comprehension of children. The school needs something to enliven and brighten it up and this the best kind of a solemn, heavy, slow hymn will not do. In the school we are doing the work of scholar and teacher, and any one can do more in a given time and do it better if he feels cheerful, lively, and bright than when he feels sad, dull, or drowsy.

THE OBJECT OF SONG SERVICE is to put the congregation into proper frame of mind for the approaching work or service and to concentrate their thoughts upon the service. And it is obvious that this can best be done by music exactly adapted to the occasion. You would not sing a funeral hymn at a picnic or even at an ordinary preaching service; you would not sing a national air at a wedding or a prayer-meeting. They would be ridiculously inappropriate. They might be our very best hymns of their class, but they would be clearly out of place. Select your music for the occasion.

The Sunday-school needs, as a rule, a lighter and more simple class of songs than does the Church. Children must be kept cheerful and bright if you would do good work with them. The songs must be such that they will appeal to the feeling of and be understood by the children or young people. They should be such that children can sing and will love to sing.

that is often made is in using the Hymnal or any other collection of church music in the Sunday-school. You wonder why your school does not have the life in it you would like. Try some good, live Sunday-school music and note the results. You may wonder why you can not interest the people or the children in the school. It may be partly the fault of the music you sing. You may wonder why so many of your young people drop out of the school. One reason is the school does not interest them, and the music may be and usually is one of the disinteresting parts. In fact, many of the ills of the Sunday-school are readily traceable to the deadening effects of poor or heavy and inappropriate music. This is one of the often overlooked defects in our school work. Try at all hazards to improve your music. Good and appropriate music is a panacea for many an ill in the Sunday-school.

We had a Sunday-school song-book adopted and it was good and quite generally used. But in some localities we had sung the songs so much that there was an increasing demand for a change. Again, many wanted a book we could call our own. These demands we have sought to supply, and will soon place in your hands the new Sunday-school song-book, "Zion's Praises." Send in your orders to the Herald Publishing House, and they will be sent as soon as ready.

Letter Department.

OSKALOOSA, Iowa, December 21.

Dear Herald: After preparing for the needs of winter for loved ones I left home for Butler County on October 15, to seek the Lord in behalf of a Mrs. Bownell, living near Nashua, who had desired administration. She was in a critical condition, but had been somewhat relieved by fasting and prayer with the use of consecrated oil previous to my arrival. She seemed blessed in the administration, but through the persuasion of relatives who were much opposed to the Church she sought the physician and she died.

From October 18 to October 26 I held services at Dallas Center and Waukeo with little interest. The bitter opposition at Dallas Center has caused the people in the near vicinity to become intimidated who previously were much interested. This opposition has taken the form of social boycott, the ministry seeking to persuade the people by slanderous stories and threats not to associate with the Saints in any form, and the drinking and profane element have joined the ministers in this crusade, and some people who at other times have shown bravery and nobility of character, have become silent accessories to the boycott. Mob violence is now threatened again, and all this because a soul desires to enter into God's kingdom. The Saints are hopeful and trusting, and have used discretion in their doings, yet always ready to give an answer to every man who asks a reason for their hope in Christ.

On the 30th I began a series of services at Hastie where some interest was manifest and some persuaded of the truth. Here is where Bro. W. F. Clark has done a good work, and is spoken well of by all.

Began services at Grinnell, November 15, where I continued till December 6. A few were interested and the Saints expressed themselves as having been much benefited. Here was distributed about seven hundred and fifty booklets, the sisters doing much the larger part of the work. All wrought with a hearty will, and God approved of their labor. Here is a noble band of Saints, whom the adversary has sought to separate, but their hearts are more firmly bound together than previously. By all I was treated with extreme kindness, and all vied with each other to see who could excel in kindness, my relatives as well as Saints. Relatives there who had heard only unfavorable comments relative to the Saints were very favorably impressed, and are investigating.

On the 10th inst. I came to Oskaloosa, where with Bro. S. F. Cushman I began meetings which closed last night. Many discouraging features to hinder the work were met with here, but some self-sacrificing ones are holding on, which in time will be the salvation of the work if they do not become discouraged. Much need of regulating exists, and it is to be hoped the work on the part of local officials will not cease till all is set right which now so hinders the progress of the work. Since October 15 several notable instances of healings have occurred, some of which were immediate. This is evidence that faith exists, and God is with those who profess his name.

Erroneous ideas in regard to Zion's redemption have constituted one of the discouraging features which has to be met. Too many have been imbued with the idea that it is necessary to make a change of location in order to redeem Zion, no matter how much of a sacrifice this might be to them or to the work where they now live. In some places in this mission the moving of Saints, even where such moving has not been of any special advantage to them, has been of great injury to the work. The preparing all things means more than a change of location on the earth's surface, and of social advantages to be secured. The pure in heart are of Zion, and to secure selfish advantages only signifies a species of selfishness from which the heart must be purified to make any place, even heaven, a place of eternal joy. It is more blessed to give than to receive, and the Spirit of Christ, without which we are none of his, inclines every soul imbued therewith to sacrifice self for the advancement of God's work and for his glory.

Saints should so live as to know the will of their heavenly Father wherever they are, and when that will is made known to them it will give a peace of mind and satisfaction of soul such as the world does not give, and when they find themselves wrought up to a discontented state of mind for any reason it should be a conclusive fact that such conditions are not the legitimate results of the Spirit upon a pure heart. As many as are led by the Spirit of God they are his sons, and that wisdom which comes to us through its leading is that which brings love, peace, and joy.

The Saints of Des Moines are contemplating building a chapel that will be worthy of the location, the capital of a State, the best in the Union in many respects, although it may not always be. We shall hope that God's redemptive power may be permitted to work through the righteousness of the Saints until other stakes will be established elsewhere within the limits of the State.

The missionary force has of late been very active, and interest has been awakened in several new places, or in places where there has been no labor for years. Isolated Saints could do so much for the spread of the work by a devoted effort continuously made, and by securing openings for the missionaries, and sending me immediate information so I could arrange to supply the demands. We have the offer of the Methodist Episcopal church at Kellogg through the influence of Bro. and Sr. Hutchinson, and will occupy as soon as possible.

I am persuaded that park and street preaching will yet become the most effective means of reaching the people. This will be a fulfilling of one feature of God's work, the going out into the highways, and by reason of coming in touch with the common people they will be compelled to rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. They may not be persuaded to come where we are, but when we go where they are they are compelled to come in because their better judgment informs them that what they hear is the truth, and being honest at heart they are constrained to say "The Lord, he is God, and I will serve him." To prepare for such work more should become acquainted with music, both vocal and instrumental, to assist in one of the prominent features of the worship of God through which souls are reached.

The local officials in nearly every place are anxious to do their duty, but lack of qualification and time prevent them from doing what is necessary to purge out iniquity.

The Utah elders are ministering here, and even when the people tell them they have not time nor a disposition to talk with them they will push themselves into their homes to talk, and persist in talking; especially have they done this with some of the Saints. I note that they now publish the "Pearl of Great Price" by omitting the so-called Revelation on Celestial Marriage, and it is just probable they will leave it out of the Doctrine and Covenants as they publish it in some following edition. This would be consistent with the spirit of their work. They add to what is previously published without any principle of law governing, and they by the same plan can omit or take from. They deny the practice of the evil of polygamy while their ministers live with more women than one. They circulate literature without any mention of the abominations of blood atonement and polygamy, and teach the people that their literature, with these abominations which were once advocated as essentials to salvation omitted, will instruct them in all that is essential to salvation. Why then should these abominations have been advocated. If the people can be saved by the teachings of that people without the advocacy of evils that have been such a menace to the truth now, it is an argument that salvation is believed to have been secured without them in the past, and hence to omit all that tends to promote these evils from future publications will be a consistent policy with them and it may be that they will then say, "We don't believe in those things now," and they can with the same consistency that they now say they do not practice them. The meaning would be that "we do not believe in its practice now, because we are prevented by civil authority," and this would carry with it, with thinking people, this meaning: "At one time damnation would result from disobeying these things, but now civil authority has sanctified condemnation to the glory of God."

It is sad to know that laborers are under necessity of leaving the mission work to supply the families with food and raiment. To pray that more laborers be sent into the vineyard means to pray that God may lead the people to obey the law of supply and place in the hands of willing contributors sufficient, so that God's storehouse may have sufficient and to spare. May God enlighten the Saints to see the race set before them, and how much help they can be in advancing his work by keeping the whole law.

May God comfort mourners, relieve the distressed and oppressed, supply the needy, and give to all the Spirit of Christ that, like him, they may take joy in God's will being done, and thus give to all the most practical way of reminding them that it is a time when the birth of him through whom salvation, both temporal and spiritual, is being commemorated; and seeing the distress of nations, and the perilous conditions of the times, we can, although persecuted and tried, lift up our heads and rejoice, for our redemption draweth nigh.

While pleading for Zion's redemption, and hoping for the ability to endure, I feel the divine support and encouragements of heavenly origin.

Your brother,
J. F. MINTUN.

HAMILTON, Scotland, December 10.

Editors Herald: After a long silence, I once more ask the privilege of informing your readers as to conditions in this mission.

The anticipated visit of Brn. Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans of the Presidency is now history. A pleasant, instructive tour comprising the whole mission was made during the time from June 25 to September 19. Each branch in England, Wales, and Scotland was visited, also Dublin and Belfast in Ireland. It is not necessary to recapitulate the many pleasant experiences which have already been described by the Editor; I need only say that the association of our Presidents with the Saints in Great Britain will long remain a pleasant memory, besides proving a landmark in the history of the Church here. The tie of Christian brotherhood, which binds us together in sympathy, affection, and desire, has been made concrete by their genial and kindly deportment, also the helpful and timely advice and counsel and effective preaching. Indeed, when contrasted with the sacred ties of Gospel love, nationality is valueless, and the accidents of birth insignificant. In the Pauline diction we feel that "in Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, for we are all one in him." In gospel relationship capricious and portentous classification no longer obtains; but the classification according to moral and spiritual worth takes the place.

"Rank is but the guinea stamp,
'The man's the gowd for a' that."

May this spirit of brotherly love increase, not merely as poetic sentiment, but as an actuality, permeating the whole body.

The writer vacated his position as "chaperone" in Glasgow, where we bade our brethren good-bye. They traveled directly to London and after a few days sojourn there, embarked at Southampton, September 19, for New York per steamship St. Louis; where after many "ups and downs" they arrived in safety.

I spent a few weeks in Scotland, preaching in Glasgow, Hamilton, and Newarthill. We had fair congregations both in the streets and in the halls. Bro. Sutherland of the latter place was baptized October 3. Despite many difficulties the work in Scotland is holding out fairly well. Bro. and Sr. Thorburn and Bro. and Sr. Arber have made many friends. The latter with their little son Alec left Glasgow for New York, October 31, where they arrived in safety, we learn. We commend them to the Saints in America as good, worthy members of the Church, and regret very much that we were obliged to lose their company and services. Their removal has practically left the Glasgow Branch in a disorganized condition; for now we have lost two families by emigration to America, the other being Bro. and Sr. W. Plunkett, now of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, who left us early in the summer.

In Hamilton, our little band is making a good stand under the efficient labor of Brn. Muceus, Porteous, and Browning. This branch sustained a loss in the removal of Bro. and Sr. Skene to Aberdeen. Our brother has been busy in the streets some and believes a good work can be accomplished in the Granite City. They have been made happy by the advent of a daughter recently. Bro. and Sr. Pratt, of Rely, are doing what they can at that place to interest the people, but find it hard work. Bro. Block, in Edinburg, was some better in health, last news we had of him.

October 2, I left Hamilton for Manchester to attend the quarterly conference which convened October 3. We had a very pleasant time; peace and unity were characteristic of all that was done. Bro. Dewsnup, the Bishop's counselor, received fourteen pounds tithing during conference, which speaks highly for the Saints there. The spiritual services were enjoyed by all who participated therein. We were pleased to meet many old friends, among whom were Brn. H. Greenwood, president of district, Brn. G. Baty, James Baty, T. Brien, S. F. Mather, and W. R. Armstrong. The minister was made very happy and comfortable with Bro. and Sr. Clarke, whose home has for many years been open to the missionaries.

Immediately after conference I commenced a propaganda throughout the district, visiting and preaching in the North and South Salford, Northeastern, and East Branches, presided over by Brn. John Bailey, George Towers, John W. Taylor, G. W. Leggott, and N. J. Weate respectively. I was well received and had good audiences—not very crowded, it is true, but I speak of quality. I attended two priesthood meetings while in Manchester, once as president and once as speaker. I heartily and earnestly commend this good work among the ministry. It is very encouraging to see such efforts put forth to make themselves efficient and able representatives of the restored evangel. I was sorry to observe that many of the priesthood were absent, while several brothers and sisters were present. I would like to urge the importance of such meetings and believe none can afford to miss so splendid an opportunity for instruction. I also visited twice the Religio at the East Branch and spoke both times. We tried to arouse an interest in this work in the North Branch so as to organize a Religio there, but failed; we hope to try again with success before long.

While in Manchester I attended one of the special services which commenced November 1 and continued until December 30, conducted by Doctor Torrey and Mr. Alexander of the United States and held in the large St. James Hall which is capable of holding five thousand. These evangelists have made quite a sensation throughout the country, and have "saved" thousands. Their services are after the Moody and Sankey style. Doctor Torrey takes the place of the late D. L. Moody. The whole service is highly sensational and directed to the emotions. Mr. Alexander sings in a very enthusiastic manner and very wittily teaches the audience the hymns and tunes. He sings alone first; then the large choir of one thousand voices sings; then the congregation. By and by all the ladies sing it; then all the gentlemen, and so on. After prayer has been offered, Doctor Torrey preaches.

On this particular afternoon his subject was prayer. There was nothing very brilliant in the manner of handling the subject. It was quite ordinary, and the manifest straining of the preacher to make himself heard over the large hall at times was distressing. I noticed one remark worth remembering, as follows: "The machinery of church organization is perfect; never has the church been so perfected in this regard, but it is a machinery without power."

Of course we could not accept the statement that "church organization is perfect," but we do believe, and for seventy years the representatives of the restored gospel have been insisting, that there is only a "dead form" left; that the churches are devoid of power, hence powerless. May we not suggest that imperfect organization may have something to do with this bankruptcy of power?

Well, I understand that the revivalists have made one thousand converts in the thirty days of November. In cool, deliberate criticism it seems to be nothing short of a burlesque, a huge parody on religion, and personally I can not wonder that intelligent men are wearying of this kind of thing. It is neither elevating mentally nor spiritually. Without hesitancy it may be said such a caricature of religion as presented unfortunately too frequently in these so-called revivals is dishonoring to God and man. Salvation without character is impossible. Salvation without submission and conformity to law is not only unscientific but anarchical. Anything declaring itself to be lawless is a menace to the common good and peace of all and must result in disaster.

We also were privileged to attend the anniversary services of the Methodist Manchester Mission. We spent an enjoyable time, heard some very eloquent preaching and heard some very fine reports of the social work done and being done by this mission, very similar to the social work of the Salvation Army.

Such a spirit of loving sacrifice is worthy of the highest praise and must be blessed of God.

We had special meetings at Farnsworth, one of the oldest churches in the Reorganization in Great Britain. From Farnsworth we went to Stockport, which is one of our new branches. We found an excellent spirit and had splendid audiences. Wigan was next visited; three lectures on the Book of Mormon by request did not provoke the interest expected, but we had good meetings. Warrington was the last place to visit in the Manchester District. Here we had quite good audiences to hear four special discourses on "religion and science."

We also attended conference of the Leeds District which convened in October. We found the work in a fair condition, but room for improvement. Brn. Taylor and Pierce of the missionary staff are doing a good work. We have learned that Sr. Abbott, who has been a faithful member of the Church many years, whose hospitality many have enjoyed and appreciated, passed away very peacefully; also Sr. Sheldon, mother of Elder Thomas Sheldon, missionary in London, who had not long been baptized, was called upon to answer the summons of the pale reaper.

We attended, by request, the district conference in London, November 10 and 11. We had a splendid time, and while matters have not been as smooth as they might have been, we have hope that the splendid feeling at the conference will produce good results.

Home was reached on the evening of December 1, my presence being especially welcome because of severe sickness of my wife, who had been run down by long attendance on our two children who had been very ill. We are grateful that all are well at present.

I was very much surprised and made very sad to have news on Monday of the death of our esteemed brother, Simon Holmes, of Clay Cross. A valiant soldier of the cross has been called upon to lay down his arms. Kindness, geniality, and unqualified love for the work of God have been characteristic of Bro. Simon for many years. His kindly smile and hearty cheer will be missed so much. He was highly respected by people out of the Church in and around Clay Cross. Peace to his memory.

I can not close without taking this opportunity of thanking the Saints of this mission for their generosity in providing for the missionary without clothing and shoes. Such a manifestation of regard and affection can not be properly nor adequately estimated in words; but I wish to at least express my appreciation of such thoughtfulness and kindness.

Praying for ultimate success,

In bonds,

19 Burblea Street.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Extracts from Letters.

T. J. Bell wrote from Beardstown, Illinois, December 20: "The work is moving slowly here. Baptized two more adults the other evening, making six in all here of late."

Bro. Walter L. Bennett, writing from Mitchell, Ontario, December 17, sends some clippings from the Mitchell Advocate through which he carried on a lengthy correspondence with a Reverend McAulay, who had attacked "Mormonism" in a lecture abounding in the usual errors of "lecturers" against "Mormonism." Bro. Bennett warmly defends his positions, and in his letter wrote: "Interest is quite lively, and has been since the 8th instant. Prejudice is being removed and good established."

If any one here is troubled with doubts about prayer, those two simple words, "Our Father," if he can once really believe them in their full richness and depth, will make the doubts vanish in a moment, and prayer seems the most natural and reasonable of all acts.—Kingsley.

Miscellaneous Department.

Change of Field.

By arrangement between Bro. Daniel MacGregor, in charge of Canada, and Heman C. Smith, in charge of Michigan, Bro. James M. Baggerly is transferred from the Canada field to Eastern Michigan until the April session of Conference, by concurrence of the missionaries in charge and the Presidency.

Texas Central District will meet at Texas Central Branch on Saturday, January 30, at 10 o'clock. Those who come by rail will be met at Hearne with conveyance to the branch. E. W. Nunley, president.

The Montana District conference will be held at Bozeman, February 6, 1904. Send all reports to Elder Gormer Reese, Bozeman, Montana. Frank Christofferson, secretary.

Died.

NEWBERRY.—Sr. Eliza A. Newberry was born October 24, 1824, in Newberry, Vermont; was baptized in 1840 when 16 years old; was married to A. N. Newberry in 1842. One daughter and two sons were born to them. She died December 14, at Argyle, where she had been living with her son Charles and was buried from the Argyle church December 15. Services in charge of F. M. McDonald.

URFER.—Near Springfield, South Dakota, June 28, 1903, William H. Urfer, husband of sister Kate (Beebe) Urfer, aged 51 years and 2 months. Wife, four children, brothers, sisters, and numerous friends mourn his departure. No elder being available at the time of his death, funeral services were held December 20, in charge of Elder E. F. Robertson.

SHERMAN.—Franklin B. Sherman, one of Ottertail County's most respected citizens, died at his home on Vine Street North, Fergus Falls, December 15. Mr. Sherman was born in Lewis County, New York, January 1, 1835; married in April, 1861, to Miss Ann Mathews, and the next fall settled in Fillmore County, and in Ottertail County in 1871, homesteading in the town of Maine, where he remained for thirty-two years, coming to this city last April on account of failing health. His wife and five children survive him. His children are A. Frank Sherman and Winfield Sherman, of this city, Ira Sherman, of Ymir, British Columbia, Mrs. R. B. Anderson, of Bemidji, and Mrs. Edward Nunn, of Detroit, Minnesota. He was a man of worth and integrity and enjoyed universal respect. The funeral was held at Fergus Falls, December 16, by Elder T. J. Martin, of Detroit, chaplain of the Grand Army Post, remains being buried at Maine. Bro. Sherman was baptized October 25, 1885, and ordained a teacher December 24, 1885, by H. L. Holt, and was a consistent Saint.

Addresses.

Bro J. W. Rushton, of the English Mission, has moved, and should be addressed at 19 Burublea Street, Hamilton, Scotland.

An examination of the Electrical Review for December 19, the last to our desk, shows that it covers the electrical field from giving short descriptions of late patents on electrical devices to an elaborate mathematical demonstration of a "Method for determining Rates and Prices for Electric Power." The Review is alive to the demands of the times, and keeps its many readers closely in touch with modern electrical developments. Among other things in the issue mentioned we note an account of a demonstration of the Cooper Hewitt Mercurial vapor lamp at the Technology Club, New York City. Exaggerated accounts of this invention have appeared in the daily press, and it is good to read of Mr. Peter Cooper Hewitt's own account of the lamp and what he expects of it. He seems confident of the great commercial utility of his lamp.

The World's Work for January.

The World's Work begins the new year with a number that interprets significant phases of contemporary activity. A first hand view of "Colombia, the Government, the Country and the People" is obtained in an article by Thomas S. Alexander, who has just returned after four years of exciting adventure in that revolution ridden land. The true inwardness of the Panama secession is revealed by John M. Williams. In "Labor Met by Its Own Methods," Isaac F. Marcossou tells of the work of the Chicago Employers' Association, which has revolutionized strike conditions in the most thoroughly unionized city in America. "The Public Schools about New York," admirably illustrated, is the second of Miss A. M. Shaw's series of investigations of American public schools. "The best House to Live In," by Joy Wheeler Dow, is a richly illustrated review of American architecture. Another illustrated article is "A Day with Eskimo Seal Hunters," by F. Swindlehurst. "The Main Plan of the Fair," by Edward Hale Brush, shows, with many pictures, how the sculptor, the artist, and the landscape engineer will unite at St. Louis. "Herbert Spencer" is the title of a comprehensive appreciation of the late philosopher of evolution, by George Iles. Arthur Goodrich writes entertainingly of "The Home of Invention," pointing the romance of American mechanical achievement. "A Busy City Underground" by William R. Stewart describes life in the vitals of New York. Churchill Williams' article "The Politician in Life and Fiction" is an interesting study. The usual financial article, "Two Directions of Monopoly" shows that the monopoly of natural products and of franchises for public service is fast becoming complete. The editorial portraits include J. S. Williams, Sir Henry Mortimer Durand, Frederick W. Job, Herbert Spencer, and Philippe Buneau-Varilla. The Department of the March of Events, the Work of the Book World, Books for young Children, and Among the World's Workers complete a notable issue.

"Country Life in America," for January.

Country Life in America for January is a large and superb number of this most beautiful magazine devoted to all the work and play of the outdoor world. Among the leading features "Country Homes of Famous Americans" deals with John Greenleaf Whittier's home life in New England; "How to Make a Living from the Soil" is a second article in a vitally interesting series by L. H. Bailey; and "The Frightened Horse," an intimate study of "safe" and "unsafe" horses for all purposes, showing how the best qualities of horses may be carefully developed; while "In the Ducking-blind" is an article, wonderfully illustrated with actual photographs of the birds and paraphernalia, on hunting ducks in the Chesapeake shooting-grounds, and geese and swans as well. Other delightfully practical articles are elaborately illustrated. "A Hundred-dollar Greenhouse," maintained at a cost of twenty-five dollars a year, "A four thousand five hundred dollar Suburban Home," made without an architect and beautiful grounds, "Violet-growing as a Business" made successful from small beginnings without capital, and "How to Build a Rural Telephone" by the farmers themselves in an organized company—are all truthful accounts of actual experiences, with many photographs that in themselves tell the stories. Other articles and brief notes touch upon many sides of outdoor life, treating the problems of country living from the standpoint of the average man suggesting things to do, how to do them and telling what they cost, and the large magazine can not fail to interest anybody who loves the country.

Flower in the crannied wall,
I pluck you out of the crannies—
Hold you here, root and all, in my hand,
Little flower—but if I could understand
What you are, root and all, and all in all,
I would know what God and man is.
—Alfred Tennyson.
