Depressing as it is to think that there were on our visit to the Fergus Falls Hospital nearly fourteen hundred inmates, yet it was pleasing to see with what kindness they were treated. Kindness seemed to be the dominating power. When we were passing through one of the wards we heard a violent patient pacing his room, bellowing and snorting like an enraged animal. He was a man so powerful that he had on one occasion with his bare hands alone torn a steam radiator to pieces, and on another occasion had torn the grating from his window, a feat almost incredible. As we were passing his room the male nurses had brought his supper, and the question, "Do you want your supper, John?" was addressed to him by one of the nurses in a tone so kind and mild that the contrast to the man's violent snorts at once challenged my attention. The nurses opened the door, and calmly and without one sign of fear took the poor unfortunate's supper to him. The sight led me to ask questions as to whether it was often necessary to use force to control some of the violent patients. We were told that it was, but when force was necessary, the greatest care was used to avoid subjecting the unfortunate to bodily injury. If perchance a patient is bruised, we were told, an investigation at once follows, and if it proves to be the fault of an attendant he is at once dismissed. Poor, unfortunate mortals, to be afflicted with so depressing and repulsive disease; yet how fortunate that mankind has progressed to such a condition that such unfortunates are treated with the uniform kindness so necessary to recovery. On every hand this kindness was apparent at this institution, and everywhere was evidence of the great care taken to keep everything wholesomely clean. At suppertime we saw hundreds of the patients assembled in the congregate dining-room, partaking of an abundance of clean, wholesome food. The dining-room was orderly, too.

But why try to tell all we saw? We were glad of the opportunity to visit the institution under Bro. Sherman's guidance, and while it saddened us to see so many hundreds of unfortunate (what condition can be more so?) mortals, yet we were pleased to see how well the State cares for them.

On Tuesday we went to Clitheral, to spend a couple of days with the Saints there. On Tuesday night, the 21st, Bro. H. A. McCoy preached, and on Wednesday night Bro. F. A. addressed them. Early Thursday morning F. A. and I, accompanied by Bro. Charles H. Pierce, left Clitheral, bound for Dunseith, North Dakota, to be in attendance on the North Dakota District reunion. We reached Dunseith about eleven o'clock Friday night, driving from Bottineau, about twenty miles away.

The camp of the North Dakota reunion is on the farm of Bro. John Spaulding, a little south and west of the town, and is pleasantly located. A goodly number of the Saints are in attendance. On Saturday afternoon Bro. William Sparling, the well-beloved president of the district, called the Saints together in the tent and held a prayer-meeting. At the close an organization was effected by choosing the writer, F. A. Smith, and William Sparling, presidents, Bro. McElvain secretary, Sr. Minnie Morrison organist and chorister, and Bro. William Oaks janitor.

The order of meetings is the same as observed at the Minnesota reunion, and the sessions yesterday (Sunday) were well attended by both Saints and nonmembers. The weather so far is good, and prospects are good for a pleasant and profitable reunion. The Saints of North Dakota seem to be an earnest, liberal-minded body of people, and we are glad to meet with them. Scattered as they are on their big ranches, they gather under difficulties; but that they enjoy getting together in these annual reunions is evidenced by the zeal with which they enter into the spirit of the meetings.

ON THE PRESERVATION OF FRUITS.

We are frequently assailed by questions involving the inquiry in regard to the canning of fruit and vegetables for preservation and use during the period when there are no green fruits to be taken from vine and tree. Section 86:2 Doctrine and Covenants suggests that all wholesome herbs have been ordained of God for the constitution, nature, and use of man, and every herb and every fruit in the season thereof. It is well understood that medicinal herbs are almost universally used in their dried and preserved state, and we are not aware that anybody ever questioned the propriety of using sage, pennyroyal, catnip, boneset, lobelia, or any other medicinal herb after the same had been dried and kept for use in cases of sickness, or extracts from them productive of the same medicinal effect. In the same beneficent revelation all grain is recommended to be used as the staff of life, and the season for the use of grain is during the time it can be kept free from weevil, rust, mold, and mildew, or the insect life that spoils it; and it would appear from the example of Joseph in Egypt that grain might be kept for seven years. Of meats, the revelation commands restriction, except in times of cold or famine. Meats are heat-producing, especially the fat, and we can easily see the propriety of abstaining from these heat producers in the warm or hot season.

Fruits are intended evidently for medicinal rectification by food of some of the ordinary evils which produce disease in the human body, and of these fruits we have an infinite variety. It is necessary, however, for some of them to be carefully cared for and preserved in order that they may be eaten with safety. They are largely corrective in their tendency, and in what may be called the first season of them, may be eaten unsparingly if obtainable. We see no reason why we may not secure for the winter season, and the long, turbulent springs we have frequently to endure in these temperate climates, the beneficent health-preservers found in the fruits carefully preserved against decay by the means which have been discovered by men; hence fruits that are perishable may be preserved by canning in proper receptacles and used during the interval between their gathering and their returning again the next season. To a strenuous objector against the use of canned foods we once made reply to his question, "What season do you call that in which we eat canned fruit?" "The season of canned fruit, sir." We believe it to be just as legitimate to preserve our strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, currants, gooseberries, cherries, and apples, etc., as nearly in the natural state as it is practicable to do by putting them in receptacles excluding them from the air, as it is to preserve our vegetables by taking them up in the fall and putting them in receptacles where they will keep as long as possible. We are not prepared to believe that we are disregarding the Word of Wisdom by "putting up fruit" and subsequently using it as we may require.

"WELL DONE, NODAWAY."

The following letter of Bro. R. K. Ross, Bishop's agent for the Nodaway, Missouri, District, shows what united work on the part of the Saints will do in the discharge of duty. The Saints of the Nodaway District have promptly responded to the call to pay the college debt, and, as will be seen, have furnished their proportion and placed it in the hands of the Bishop one day in advance of date named.

MOUND CITY, Missouri, June 27, 1904.

E. L. KELLEY, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir and Brother: Inclosed you will please find the offerings of the Nodaway District, which amount to one hundred and thirty-four dollars and fifty-five cents ($134.55).

We surely are proud of our district in coming out ahead of the amount apportioned to them and we do hope and pray that the whole church will do likewise; then our little college will move on. It makes us feel sad to think some of our head men of the church talk against Graceland, but would be glad to school their children there. Brethren, let your influence be for the college. If you can't speak for it, hold your peace!

The offerings of our branches are as follows:

Ross Grove Branch.....	$ 51.75
Bedison Branch.....	39.30
Guilford Branch.....	18.50
Sweet Home Branch.....	16.00
Rising Hope Branch.....	10.00
.....	$134.55

I have sent two of my boys to Graceland College and they are proud of the college and wouldn't exchange what they got for two thousand dollars apiece.

R. K. Ross.

GRACELAND COLLEGE NOTES.

J. M. and S. F. Hooker, Spokane, Washington, with their offering state: "We do not wish to see the college closed, for thereby we think the Lord's work would be injured. We have no children to send but others have."

Bro. and Sr. John and Grace Crawford, from Emerson, Iowa, not living in any branch, forward ten dollars to help the college.

Bishop C. A. Parkin, of the Northern California District, shows his faith and that of the Saints in his district by their works. One half of their apportionment is in hand before the first of July.

Sr. Emily A. Hall and Mrs. Hudson, of Lebanon, Oregon, sent offerings with goodwill.

Bro. and Sr. S. Korf, of Yuma, Colorado, send in check and say: "We hope and pray the college may soon be free from debt and that it may never be closed. We have four children who when old enough we wish to send to Graceland."

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Rockwood, Mayfield, Michigan, say: "We have concluded that we have a duty to perform and thought we would tax our little family of three for fifty cents a head and send the same for Graceland, but when we considered what a privilege it was to become laborers together with the Lord we thought five dollars would more properly express our thoughts and feelings, so inclosed you will find fifteen dollars. We are poor in this world's goods, but if we prove faithful shall be rich in the kingdom of God."

Mrs. Ruth Wilfrey, eighty-seven years of age, from Windsor, California, wishes to see the college work succeed and sends one dollar offering.

Agent John Heide of the Eastern Iowa District forwards a good part of the district apportionment on the college account and expects to forward in full in due time.

Agent George O. Sellers sends part of the Alabama District apportionment and hopes to complete the account.

Bishop William Leeka sends encouragement from the Fremont, Iowa, District. His district list was headed by fifty dollars by Sr. Leeka who, in addition, is circulating the list. The sisters are truly laborers also with the Lord in his great work. As the great admiral of the British navy said at the battle of Trafalgar, "Now let every man do his duty," and the college question will be for ever and rightly settled, and the Lord's work will proceed, as a "city set upon a hill."

James Cairns writes from Olpe, Kansas, June 24, 1904: "The action of last General Conference regarding Graceland displeased me very much and was glad to note in a later issue of HERALD that it was invalid. I have ever been in sympathy with Graceland and hoped it would be a success. I have been unable to send the amount I wanted to for its support and kept deferring the matter, thinking a little later I could make it. I will defer no longer and herewith send you money order for five dollars for its support, praying it may soon be placed on a firm financial basis that it may attain the end for which it was designed."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. George Potts forwards a copy of the Bedford Record of Brooklyn, New York, in which appears a notice of meetings in the Saints' church and a two-column letter "calling attention to another branch of the Mormon church, viz., the Latter Day Saints," signed by F. M. S. It is a reply to an article in a former issue on "Mormons and Mormonism."

We are informed by statisticians that the period of longevity has been materially lengthened within the last seventy-five years, and we are inclined to accept it as a truth. There may be many reasons for this, and we believe that among them is the fact that fruits are more freely indulged in for hygienic purposes and methods of preserving them have been discovered and become generally known so that almost practically we have fresh fruits the year round.

ON THE WORD OF WISDOM AND MEAT QUESTION.

About twenty years ago, when I first became a student of the word of God—a searcher after truth, I was somewhat puzzled over the Word of Wisdom, thinking it a little peculiar in its construction. I so expressed myself to my dear mother, who answered, "Go and open the Bible, Minnie, and you may find something that will give you light on the subject."

I opened our large family Bible, and looking down to where my finger rested, read the following passage:

Even as he turned the waters into a dry land, and the earth was made dry; and his ways were made plain for their journey: so to sinners they are stumbling-blocks in his wrath. Good things were created for the good from the beginning, so for the wicked, good and evil things. The principal things necessary for the life of men are water, fire and iron, salt, milk, and bread of flour, and honey, and the cluster of the grape, and oil, and clothing. All these things shall be for good to the holy, so to the sinners and the ungodly they shall be turned into evil.—Ecclesiasticus, Apa., 39: 29-32.

Then my eyes glanced to the top of the page and I read: "For in many meats bringeth sickness, and greediness will turn to choler."—Ibid., 37: 33.

I felt that I was shown that the word of wisdom was nothing new, but was taught by the wise ones of old; and was made thankful for this testimony. Since that day I have ever had great pleasure in meditating upon, and striving to live up to, those precepts through which are promised temporal salvation and other great blessings. At one time I had it copied in large plain hand on cardboards and hung in convenient places where those who ran might read.

The Word of Wisdom is given to the Saints as the first stepping-stone to a higher, stronger, purer moral and physical development; to place them in a position wherein they may be able to comprehend and live the higher or celestial law. It meets them in their lowly condition, being "adapted to the capacity of the weak and the weakest of all Saints and all who are or can be called Saints." (Doctrine and Covenants 86.) It gently leads them along, away from evil habits, unto ways of "prudence and thanksgiving," up to conditions of health.

This comfortable state of the body, attained by obedience to God's will, would naturally be accompanied by a bright, cheerful mind and heart, thus assuring one of success in his search for wisdom and hidden treasures of knowledge.

Saints should not be satisfied in simply obeying the first principles of the gospel and keeping or partially keeping the Word of Wisdom, but should go on and upward to those more glorious realms of thought and faith. They should be diligent treasure seekers. The Lord has provided broad and rich fields for research in the three sacred books; he has also given eyes to see, ears to hear, hearts to feel, and a glorious guide and companion—the Holy Spirit. Why should not Saints progress and "come up higher?" Why should they not enjoy in this life a goodly portion of the celestial glory and be sanctified in fact? They can well afford to sacrifice many of the foolish and time-consuming fashions and customs of the day.

It is the fond hope of every true Saint, to be prepared to receive an inheritance in the earth for the millennium. According to the Scriptures, the millennium will be a restoration of the conditions that obtained in happy Eden, when man and beast were at peace, when kindness and love prevailed, and all God's works were "very good."

And I, God, said unto man, Behold, I have given you every herb, bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth; and every tree in which there shall be the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat. And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to everything that creepeth upon the earth, wherein I grant life there shall be given every clean herb for meat; and it was so, even as I spake.—Genesis 1: 31, 32, Inspired Translation.

By this we see they did not devour one another as they do now, but were strictly vegetarians.

That man and beast did not continue in that happy condition, was not due to any change on God's part, but to the fact that man began to love Satan more than God: "And men began from that time forth to be carnal, sensual, and devilish."—Genesis 4: 13, I. T.

God could direct and control, in a measure, only a few of the less rebellious ones. He did not wish to interfere with man's agency which he had given him in the beginning.

Noah was commanded to provide food for the occupants of the ark as follows: "And take thou unto thee of all food that is eaten, and thou shalt gather fruit of every kind unto thee in the ark, and it shall be for food for thee, and for them."—Genesis 8: 27, I. T.

Later on, after the flood was over, he said to them: "And surely, blood shall not be shed, only for meat, to save your lives; and the blood of every beast will I require at your hands."—Genesis 9: 11, I. T. "To save your lives"—think of that! When there was nothing else to eat, they would be allowed to shed the blood of beasts.

During Israel's sojourn in the land of Egypt, they learned to love the Egyptian fleshpots. This meat-eating habit got many of them into serious trouble later on, as the eleventh chapter of Numbers shows. God was leading them up out of bondage, not only from the Egyptians, but from their own gross appetites and habits. He was feeding them on a daily allowance of divine health-food. This manna was, no doubt, a food perfectly adapted to all the needs and demands of the human body. But they had been living high in Egypt, so were not satisfied with this plain food. "There is nothing at all, besides this manna, before our eyes."

Though the Lord was demonstrating a great lesson to mankind—to trust him for their daily bread—they evidently did not take to the "hand to mouth" style of living very well. There were those, as in this day, who were overanxious to gather more than they needed, more than the others; but when it was measured up, they were found to have no more than those who had gathered just enough, or too little. Here was a lesson on equality. (See Exodus 16: 18.) Their cooking and eating business was reduced to a minimum. If they were like some of the folks in this age of whom we read, a change of this kind would be viewed with consternation. "Our mothers' ways of cooking were good enough for us." They would rather have stayed in dark Egypt than have their stomachs interfered with. And so they remembered the good things that they used to have, and lusted after flesh.

"Then Moses heard the people weep throughout their families, every man in the door of his tent; and the anger of the Lord was kindled greatly; Moses also was displeased."—Numbers 11: 10.

O, ye sisters of latter days, do you think that the womenfolk were complaining very much? Were they not enjoying a well-earned and much-needed rest from the cookery business? So God sent them flesh in the form of quails, and told them they could eat meat until it ran out at their nostrils. So they were on foot two days and one night gathering and stacking them up around the edge of the camp. But his wrath was kindled and he smote them with a very great plague. "And there they buried the people that lusted."

How does God Almighty regard modern Israel on this flesh question? If he was angry then, he surely would be angry now for the same cause, being "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," and "his course one eternal round." It can at least be said for modern Israel that they do not lust after meat; for they, and their fathers before them for many, many generations, have been filled to the neck with the flesh of all manner of beasts, and of fowls, and of creeping things, both clean and unclean.

No, surely, they do not lust after meat in this age when the blood of the slain creatures is as an ever-flowing river, and their innumerable and ghastly carcasses everywhere present!

Why was God so harsh with ancient Israel? Why is he so lenient with Latter-day Saints on the same question? Is he a "respector of persons"? Has he altered or annulled the decrees that went forth from him in the beginning? Has the human body changed in its needs, or has the flesh of animals become better adapted for food than in the beginning? God pronounced the swine to be an unclean beast, and commanded his people neither to eat, nor to touch the dead body of one. It was considered important enough to be strictly adhered to. We call to mind an instance, recorded in the Bible, of a mother and her seven sons being put to death because they refused to obey a wicked decree and eat swine's flesh. That truly was a touching example of divine courage. The word swine is a synonym for that which is low and gross, and is used many times in the scriptures to illustrate depraved character.

The swine is an "unappreciative hog," as the parable of the pearls shows. Why eat his body and partake of that nature? There is a saying, more or less true, to the effect that a man is what he eats. God says swine are unclean and not to be eaten, and has never retracted his statement. Man tastes of it and says, It is good! I will eat all I can get. If he would read the last chapter of Isaiah, a most beautiful and glorious account of the Lord's coming in the last day, he might decide it was not yet too late to turn from the error of his way:

For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword, will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many. They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens behind one tree in the midst, eating swine's flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the Lord.—Verses 15-17.

The Doctrine and Covenants agrees with the Bible on the meat question. In section 49 it says: "Woe be unto man that sheddeth blood or that wasteth flesh and hath no need." A visit to one of our stores ought to be enough to satisfy one that the need does not exist. What an array of delightful foods—pure good things that God has created for the use of man. Every fruit and every herb (vegetable) in the season thereof; all kinds of grains beautifully prepared; butter, honey, oil, and nuts, and numerous other good things; all valuable and precious and worth the price asked for them. This can not be said of meat. It is costly. The money spent for meat would load the poor man's table with wholesome and delicious foods that would otherwise be counted luxuries and out of reach. Think how healthy, happy, and delighted his children would be!

Scientists say there is very little nourishment in meat after all. Why spend money on the meat habit? Why should Saints not get rid of all unsaintly and unprofitable habits?

Let us view this subject from another standpoint—the humane standpoint. All good and decent people teach their children to be kind to animals—not to hurt or kill them. The fact that their own hands are dripping with the blood of God's innocent creatures, makes their teaching appear inconsistent, to say the least. Many people naturally have a compassionate regard for dumb animals. They would not take the life of one for anything. The sight of the slaughter-house makes them shudder, and the death-cry of the slain creature sends a pang of anguish through their hearts. They look upon the butcher with feelings akin to horror. Why not let these beautiful millennial sentiments shape their lives into ways of consistency and justness along this line if they have these tender feelings? And why should they not have them? They ought not to encourage nor abet, by a demand for meat, this unhappy work. With all their delicate, refined feelings, how much better are they than the butcher when by their use of meats they demand that such things should be? Why not be more consistent and less selfish in this matter and be willing to exchange places with the poor butcher occasionally, and give him a chance to develop some refined feelings?

When a child (and since that time for that matter) I was very fond of chicken, but could not bear to be near when they were killed. Some one remarked one day, "If you can't kill them you shouldn't eat them." This remark troubled my mind nearly every time I ate chicken after that, and caused me to do considerable thinking unto this day:

"The lamb and the lion shall be together,
When the righteous reign it does commence."

The lion will be all right, but how will man disport himself toward the little lamb? God will do a great work for the lion in changing his carnivorous nature back to its original docility. Man is expected to do this for himself—to subdue his carnal appetites and become a wise servant and as harmless as a dove; and to do it on this side of glory, too.

The appetite for flesh is not compatible with the millennial character. Do Saints believe they are going to be able to leave their meat-eating habit in the bottom of their graves, and come forth fit and safe associates for the peaceable and harmless animals which will inhabit the earth in that day? The history of God's dealings with mankind in the beginning, his laws and commandments unto them, have been marvelously preserved. This record has been translated by the gift and power of God and placed in our hands for our deep and prayerful inspection and acceptance. It might not be expedient, or wise, or necessary for us to try to do all that ancient Israel were commanded to do, but we surely ought to refrain from doing those things that brought down upon them the wrath of an offended God. We ought to profit by their sufferings, and avoid the evils that led many of them to destruction.

The Ten Commandments are as good to-day as when God's holy finger impressed upon the tables of stone those gleaming words. His decree as to what should be the food for man, was given long before that glorious event, not to the children of Israel, but to all mankind, and is as binding to-day as it was in the morn of creation. But man has changed his ordinances and broken his everlasting covenant.

"Know then that ev'ry soul is free
To choose his life and what he'll be."

Why tamper with our soul's salvation by allowing our appetites to lead us contrary to the known will of God? All the philosophizing, all the spiritualizing by all the reputed wise ones since the days of Adam can not change those eternal words uttered in the beginning, prefaced by "And I, God, said unto man," etc. Let us enquire diligently after the old paths if by so doing we may be enabled to walk "Nearer, my God, to thee."

PREACHING.

After that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save the world.—1 Corinthians 1: 21.

The apostle makes a very correct statement of the attitude of worldly men toward the preaching of the gospel. The professors of certain forms of religion may look with disfavor on the preacher and regard him as a dangerous and heretical person, one to be frowned down; but to the man of the world it is simply foolishness, and that is the end of it. The Jews recognized that Jesus had power and they feared and hated that power; but the godless Romans, the typical men of the world, looked on in lofty indifference—it was all foolishness to them. They would have taken no notice of it if the Jews had not dragged them into it.

It is not to be wondered at that it sounds foolish to the worldly man, because until the Spirit opens his mind he only hears a part of the message. He is among those who "hearing hear not." He is like a deaf man who seeing one's gestures and missing the words can make no sense of the conversation. The ablest presentation of sublime truth conveys no meaning to his mind—it is foolishness. When, however, the Spirit touches his mind at the same time that the preacher presents his message he sees the beauty of it and is convinced.

WHY BY PREACHING?

Sometimes we wonder why God chose to save the world by preaching. It would seem that more adequate means were at his disposal. Why not convert each individual as he did Paul, by a miracle and a personal revelation? Paul, however, had to listen to the preaching of the word by Ananias, after all. He had to weigh the message just as you and I did, and it seems that he hesitated just as you and I did; for Ananias said to him, "And now why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized."

Paul was wanted for a special work, and he had a peculiar experience; it is very doubtful if it would be wise to submit many men to the test that Paul underwent successfully. God has chosen to save most men by a less spectacular process.

He has chosen to make man, as far as possible, the instrument of man's salvation; to make his the voice by which the message is carried to his fellow men. The great means used is the oral presentation of the word by men ordained for that work.

In the prosecution of this work, tracts, fireside talks, and acts of piety are great and some of the indispensable factors; but still the chief means that has always been used and always will be used is oral preaching by men of God.

IT IS GOD'S WORK.

You will notice that while God uses men as instruments in the prosecution of his work, so far as they are usable, still it is his work and it is he who has "chosen" to save the world. We can not do less, then, than to accord to him the right to choose his preachers. It is not enough that some congregation shall choose them or that they shall choose themselves—"Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you." The man must know by a personal revelation that he is called, and the church must know in a similar manner that they are justified in sending him.

Then, also, it being God's message, he must have some share in the voicing of it. His ministry must be an inspired ministry. It can not be otherwise, because the things of God are only understood by the Spirit of God. The minister must prepare himself in every possible way by study and thought and prayer to make his pulpit work effective; and then having done all he can do, God will supply the deficiencies that will surely exist. Man's extremity is God's opportunity.

This dependence upon inspiration places its peculiar burden on the preacher. It makes his every effort an experiment that depends on the congregation and his own spiritual condition, and not till the effort is made will he know whether or not it is successful—perhaps not then.

At some little country schoolhouse, with but two or three present, to his surprise the Spirit is poured out and he has splendid liberty. In some larger building, where every seat has its occupant and he expects great things of himself, lo, he is left to struggle as best he may. It is distressing to his pride. He may not remember the admonition that he that hath not the Spirit shall not teach; but that law is operative, nevertheless, and he that has not the Spirit does not and can not teach. There is not that spiritual direction in the pulpit that indicates the needs of the audience. Something is wrong, either with himself or with his audience. The man feels badly; but, after all, his experience in the schoolhouse, when every nerve of his being was attuned in sweet accord, responsive to the kindly touch of the Holy Spirit, more than makes up for his momentary humiliation.

HOW SHALL THE PREACHER PREACH?

It is evident that the preacher may adapt himself, within certain lines, to his congregation and to the time in which he lives. There was a time when the people would listen to one who talked till midnight, and if one went to sleep and fell out of the window they simply restored him and went on with the service till morning came. That time is past. This is a busy age, and the man who would talk two hours on an ordinary occasion would kill the first half of his sermon with the last half. Indeed that may be done in an hour's effort.

Many times an hour is devoted to what might better occupy but thirty-five minutes. One says, "Why, I can not get started on a subject in thirty-five minutes." Well, if we can not get started in that time better not start at all. That is too long a time to spend getting up momentum for the remaining twenty-five minutes' run. Better confine ourselves strictly to thirty-five minutes until we can say something and say it definitely in much less than thirty-five minutes. Take off the trimmings and let the idea stand out in all its native ruggedness. If we have but one thought, let us not smother it; give it air.

A witty story will often drive a point home, but let us not make the mistake of stringing a lot of funny stories together in the guise of a sermon. The work of the preacher is to preach that which saves, and he should not compete with the daily paper in the matter of the sensational, or with the Sunday supplement in the matter of the funny. His first aim should be to instruct; after that he is at liberty to entertain if he can.

Of course he will never use that which is intended to convey a vulgar meaning; that is one of the things he is sent out to preach against.

WHAT SHOULD HE PREACH?

Many preachers are preaching many conflicting theories. That simply illustrates the need that God should choose the preacher and inspire him. There ought to be but one side to this question: To find the gospel and then preach it. Unfortunately there are other motives at work. An Iowa preacher recently said to his congregation, "Do not blame the preachers because they do not preach more Bible; they have to preach what the people want to hear or they would not find any one to listen." Many men adopt this policy who would hardly state it publicly.

Now the preacher for Christ has to preach what the people do not want to hear. Paul sent Timothy to Ephesus and to Corinth to preach against the heresies of some who claimed to believe in Christ—he went to preach that which the people did not want to hear. It was his business to preach it whether they listened or not. The voice of the people is not the voice of God in the matter of what a man shall preach.

Paul adapted himself to the people among whom he labored, he strove in every lawful way to hold their attention; but he preached the same old gospel all the time. He never changed it to draw a crowd. His is a good example.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

PERSECUTION.

Persecution assumes to be the attempt of offended truth to stamp out an error. But the assumption is ridiculous. The position that right can not prevail without doing wrong is inconsistent to say the least. It might with far more safety be assumed that persecution is an evidence of something wrong with the persecutors, and that there is some truth at least in the claims of the persecuted, even though it may not be proof positive that the suffering cause is one of eternal truth. The records of the past show the motives for persecution to have been of a general similarity and that every movement which was for the common good has from the beginning had to bear its burden of suffering, because every such movement comes to attack and overthrow the established customs of the times. In every case the supposed new idea is merely a long dishonored principle of old, and even though the society of the day fails to recognize it, if it be eternal truth it must prevail; and because its enemies are quick to recognize the fact that its triumph means loss of position, money, influence, and power, all of which men so dearly love, and because the error has no reasonable answer for truth, the way of fairness is forsaken that the dawning light may be smothered, and the awakening hushed. History speaks of this oft-repeated evil in no uncertain way, and the careful student will manifest the disposition to "be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath; for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." (James 1: 19, 20.)

The violent outbreaking of anger is neither the most terrible nor the most sinful manner of oppressing a minority class of people, for the insidious whisperings of slander are more far-reaching and more lasting. When violent, the sufferings of the despised are of such a character as to draw the sympathy of those who love fair play, even from some whom the tormentors count as friends; and when it is all over and the mob has dispersed, the respect of some of the best people has been won for the hated principle. But the cowardly individuals who speak the lie where no opportunity can be obtained to reply, prove their allegiance to satanic influences even more positively than they who in anger do bodily injury. Knowing they can not meet the faith or doctrine, they attack the reputation of those who believe that which they hate to think of as ever gaining a footing in society, and by misrepresentation educate society to think both people and doctrine are corrupt. When this sort of persecution becomes the plan of many, it cultivates a public opinion. The press is captured because they are in the majority and the minority find its columns open only to their enemies. The pulpit tells its onesided story and the injured may not reply; and so an innocent people is compelled to bear the reproach of a vicious reputation.

This is constant persecution, for it has no healing. It is insidious and brings no sympathy. It does not pass with the time of the healing of a flesh-wound, but remains to cloud the life with the gloom of misunderstanding, to injure the prospects, destroy the friendships, and weaken the influence of an honorable people whose only transgression against society or law has been that they have dared to believe and confess their faith.

Suppose the leaders of society do not like it;—does that prove anything? Christ introduced a system of religion that meant the downfall of Jewish sectarianism with all its pride and self-exaltation. The chief priests, scribes, rulers, and all the many professions and classes depending upon them, saw in this despised Jesus their temporal ruin and debasement unless his influence could be arrested. The priestly craft could not meet him fairly, for he came with truth. But something had to be done, and so these pious professionals became mobocrats and led on the people. Not because investigation made it impossible for them to believe in Christ, but they were afraid of him. Their profession, their living, their influence, and all their established customs were at stake. They hated him, for they could neither silence nor control him. John records something of the influence the Pharisees had even over the chief rulers. He says: "Nevertheless among the chief rulers also many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him."—John 12: 42. They dared not confess him, but were compelled to hate him because the common people were flocking around him to believe the truth, and the man was dangerous to the conditions of high-class society, and so the priesthood clamored for his death. It was the same motive actuating the persecutors of Jeremiah and the other prophets: "Then spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes and to all the people, saying, This man is worthy to die; for he hath prophesied against this city, as ye have heard with your own ears."—Jeremiah 26: 11.

The New Testament writers show some of the motives governing their persecutors. Paul and Silas suffered because they cast an evil spirit out of a damsel. "And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market place unto the rulers, and brought them to the magistrates, saying, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city."—

Acts 16:19. False accusation and slander. Was it the city that was disturbed by this good work of the Lord, or was it the pocketbook of these professional soothsayers? Another instance was the extreme zeal of the silversmiths at Ephesus for their religion when they saw the business of making silver shrines of Diana was likely to suffer. The endangering of the pocketbook caused so much piety among them that a mob was collected and for the space of two hours worshiped Diana and strengthened their unholy faith by crying as with one voice: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians."

How completely the misrepresentations of the Christians had misled the best emperors and writers of the times is seen in the oft-quoted passage from Tacitus, a very conservative and fair-minded writer in other matters, in which he says:

Men whom the common people call Christians, men hated for their enormities . . . after the condemnation of Christ by Pontius Pilate, the deadly superstition after having been repressed for a time was again breaking out not only throughout Judea where the curse originated but even throughout the city, which is the common metropolis and sewer for all things repulsive or shameful.—Ann. 15: 14.

Professor John W. Moncrief, of the University of Chicago, in a recent book entitled A Short History of the Christian Church, says:

But it was not long until opposition from the scribes and Pharisees arose against him . . . his doctrines were in harmony with the Judaism of the past but they were radically antagonistic to the Pharisaism of the present.—Page 42.

Its doctrines opposed both the trend of custom and the strongest natural tendencies of the human heart. These doctrines have never been agreeable to human nature, nor can they ever be.—Page 56.

The history of the present age is now being written, and the application of all that has gone before is easy. Any people or class who are engaged in the business of maintaining a cause so weak that it can not be defended by argument and fair play when all of the prestige of established customs are on its side, must prove the weakness of their cause when they resort to dishonorable means. The clergy of to-day are as human as any priesthood ever was. They have a right to desire influence and a good living, but the individual who can without protest see the influence of society prostituted to the unjust scheme of disrespecting a minority so far as to refuse a fair hearing, line for line in the press, or hour for hour from the stand, and especially when the reputation of that minority as a good and law-abiding class of citizens is attacked, as well as their faith, prove themselves to be either regardless of the principle of fairness or to be lacking in moral courage to speak in defense of the rights of a minority.

We do not beg for this consideration on our own account so much as for the good of those who are hindered from the examination of the message we bring. The blessing of a good conscience with peace and contentment of mind are ours if we never get justice at the hands of men. The comforts of the word of God are written for us as well. Gamaliel spoke wisely when he reminded the Sanhedrin of the fact that "If it be of God ye can not overthrow it." We do not fear the outcome, and there is peace for the oppressed in:

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you.—Matthew 5: 10-12.

While the following contains comfort because of the blessing, it also brings anxiety because of the woe pronounced upon the scorner:

Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of Man's sake. Rejoice in that day, and leap for joy: for, behold, your reward is great in heaven: . . . Woe unto you that laugh now! for ye shall mourn and weep. Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.—Luke 6: 22-26.

So while we may not complain because of our burden, we can not but be sad to realize that many whom we desire to see enjoying the blessings of God's peculiar people are stumbling because of slanderous reports from high places, which do not answer our message but merely keep those who need the message in such a condition of mind that fair examination is impossible.

THE PHILIPPINE EXPOSITION.

Take up the White Man's Burden,
Send forth the best ye breed.—Kipling.

The one thing that has stood in the way of the proper development of any colonial possession by its governing country, has been the fact that a lack of knowledge of the real conditions and affairs of their colonies has blocked the way of the legislation most necessary for such development and exploitation.

Every American resident of the Philippine Islands has had this truth thrust upon him, and realizes just what is meant by the "White Man's Burden," but as yet there is not one to be heard who advocates abandonment, or one who agrees "That east is east and west is west, and never the two shall meet."

A healthy tone of optimism is the keynote of our national character, and those conversant with affairs Philippine hope to see the meeting of Orient and Occident within the present century.

To this end a spirit of kindly tolerance has pervaded the general scheme of Philippine reconstruction since the days of the first peace commission. A paternal hand has attempted to guide these primitive people along the road of progress, and a fraternal greeting has met them at every milestone on the way.

This benevolent assimilation has proved itself a strong feature in the settlement of vexed questions in our far-away possessions; race antipathy is nearly a thing of the past, and there has been a visible, palpable improvement along all lines, until to-day the one thing that seems most needful to insure a continued peace and prosperity in the Philippines is a clearer understanding by the people of the United States of the duties thrust upon them with their assumption of the sovereignty of the Philippine Islands.

When, with the other foreign countries, the Philippine government was invited to participate in the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, Governor Taft saw an opportunity to present to the people of the United States a vivid outline picture of the Philippine Islands and their eight million inhabitants.

For the purpose of securing, organizing and making an exhibit of Philippine products, manufactures, art, ethnology, education, and the customs and habits of the Philippine people at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, Governor Taft induced the Philippine Commission to take up the matter and they, by an act dated November 11, 1902, appointed an Exposition Board, consisting of the following gentlemen: Doctor W. P. Wilson, director of the Philadelphia Commercial Museum; Doctor Gustavo Niedelein, an expert in World's Fair matters, and Senor Don Pedro A. Paterno, president of the Philippine Senate under Aguinaldo, with Dr. Leon Guerrero as secretary.

The total appropriation for the purpose of gathering and installing the Philippine Exposition at the World's Fair, St. Louis, reaches the sum of one million dollars, of which all but two hundred thousand comes from the Philippine insular government. This sum does not include the value of the postal, telegraphic, and transportation facilities placed at the disposal of the board by the insular government.

The Philippine Exposition consists of nearly one hundred buildings, ranging in size and construction from the "Taos" nipa casa to the palatial Spanish Administration Building, occupying forty-seven acres of rolling woodland, in which are housed some seventy-five thousand catalogued exhibits, as well as eleven hundred representatives of the different peoples, showing clearly all the gradations of the civilization of the islands. The Philippine Exposition is the largest single exhibit at the Fair, the most interesting, and is the garden spot of the entire Exposition.

The ground, which is situated at the west end of the World's Fair, and is a beautiful tract of rolling woodland, whose sylvan beauty makes a picturesque background for its Oriental setting, was ceremoniously delivered to Doctor Wilson, the chairman of the Philippine Exposition Board on October 1, 1902, but it was not until his return from the Philippine Islands in June, 1903, that ground was broken and work actively commenced. Early in October, 1903, the first Filipino carpenters and builders began to arrive, and commenced the work of building their native houses and camps. The first building was the Cuartel, an immense two-story building with thirty-seven thousand square feet of floor space. This was used for the purpose of storing the Exposition material until such time as the other buildings might be ready to receive it. From that time on, more exhibits have been received and more laborers have been put to work, until to-day the Philippine Exposition stands a monument to Secretary Taft and his able assistants, the Philippine Exposition Board.—The Philippine Exposition, St. Louis World's Fair.

Lest We Forget.

A PRAYER FOR EVERY CHRISTIAN IN THIS YEAR OF OUR LORD 1903.

God of our fathers, known of old—
Lord of our far-flung battle line,
Beneath Whose awful Hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

The tumult and the shouting dies—
The captains and the kings depart;
Still stands Thine ancient Sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

Far-called our navies melt away—
On dune and headland sinks the fire—
Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!
Judge of the Nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget.

If drunk with sight of power we loose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe—
Such boasting as the Gentiles use,
Or lesser breeds without the law—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget.

—Rudyard Kipling.

The Father's Awakening for Hope.

Doctor L— was a young man with only an education for means of support. But he had graduated from a good medical college and was working up a good practice. He had bought a home as near the business portion of the town as he could and kept his office in the front room of his dwelling, while the family occupied the other rooms. One day coming in late for dinner he left the door open between the office and sitting-room. There were three chubby little boys in the home and no sooner had their father got comfortably seated at the table and busy talking to his wife than the boys went into the office to see what they might find. There was a case of bottles which the doctor had just opened when called away that morning; and when the little fellows spied this they were delighted and one ran quickly out and got a small tin pail of water and came back and they began to play "drunk." They filled the bottles and drank and fell down and rolled over and laughed and shouted with glee, and tried to vomit, and while all this was going on the parents hearing such a noise came and watched through the door which was still ajar.

The scene made a lasting impression upon the father. After a few moments he turned a pale face towards his wife, and with voice choking with emotion and tears streaming down his face he said, "As long as I live I will never sell a drop of liquor nor write a prescription for any other drugstore to sell any."

And to-day his office is in a large brick drugstore with another containing groceries beside it, all the property of the Doctor. The residence has been remodeled until it is one among the nicest homes in town. One son is a partner with his father; the other two are good energetic men filling responsible positions, and it is a known fact by the community that he has kept his word. It has been said "a little child shall lead them" and truly the little ones did lead him in the path of temperance, and to-day there is no greater temperance worker in the county where he lives than is Doctor L——.

Novel Reading.

I am glad to see the effort made to put good literature in the hands of our youth and children, for I know how detrimental bad or trashy literature is. But thinking that some others may be like myself when I was young and not know wherein the harm lies in reading everything that comes along, I will try to tell what I have learned by experience, and by observation.

I commenced reading novels, or continued stories in the papers, when but eleven years old. Not being in book form I don't believe my mother thought of them as novels, for she never said anything to me about them. It may be that she did not know I read them. Be that as it may, I read all I could get hold of, and grew fond of such reading and by the time I was twenty I had read so many that I can not even estimate the number. Once in a while I would run across a person who would not read such stuff. When asked why they would give the very unsatisfactory answer, that it was harmful.

When I met such persons I always felt a decrease in my self-respect. But the majority of my associates could discuss the stories with me, and my momentary humility would be forgotten. But we did not discuss the quality, however. It was which book or story we liked, and speculated on how it was going to turn out. Not until I was old enough to judge for myself did I find out how to tell good from harmful literature.

The first ill effect was on my eyesight, which lamplight reading brought on; this of itself is no small matter for one who has most of life before him. The next I noticed was the time I wasted that I ought to have used to some profit. Oh, how I have noticed this in others also! The neglected housework, and little children. I have felt the guilty flush in my own cheek when some one did the work I should have done, just because I wanted to finish "that chapter." Oh, if I only had improved the time I wasted on those useless books and papers, it would probably be a wiser and better woman who writes this to-day. But then, there is no profit in vain regrets. It is past now and I must try to keep others out of the same path, by kindly telling them what I have learned.

Another effect was my memory impaired. That has caused more trouble than I can tell. For it is the very things that I ought to remember that slip my mind in spite of all efforts to retain them. Imagine my mortification when asked to do a favor to forget it entirely and never recall it until it is too late. This last effect was the result of believing it was the words contained, that made bad literature harmful. So when people told me it was harmful, I hastened to assure them that I made it a point to forget everything I read, which seemed to satisfy them, and it did me, too, at the time.

And now for the morality of the books themselves. A book is a companion while we peruse it. And we are warned in holy writ not to have evil companions. A book in which revenge is the principal thing aimed at is no fit companion for any boy or girl. Even if you forget every word, the impression that revenge is right and just still remains stamped on the mind, unless some stronger influence overcomes it.

The climax with the majority of trash is the obtaining of wealth, and that not by labor, but by inheritance or some other easy way. How many girls will overestimate the value of money and aspire to be wealthy simply for the fine clothes, easy life, and display, pictured out as the climax of happiness in these companions.

Another feature let me mention. In a great many of these books, the heroine is pictured as so beautiful of form and feature, usually extremely sensitive, very delicate and altogether a creature not fit for work nor for any use in life except to teach men gallantry, by having to be waited on continually. Is that the kind of companion for your girl, or the model wife to hold up before your boy? The men are usually of a more practical quality, but still they make the men of one's acquaintance seem commonplace in comparison. And as I said before, you may forget the words but impressions will remain unless overcome by stronger, better influence.

Now for good books. One writer said that a good book was one that would make one wish to be better than he now is. And I will add: That makes common work and honesty seem noble. One that teaches to do right because it is right; one that teaches reverence to parents; one that teaches kindness to, and love for all of God's creatures; one that teaches that happiness comes from your own actions, and cultivation of a contented disposition; and not wealth. These are good books, safe and helpful companions. I can not do this subject justice, but hope some one else will take it up. For I verily believe that the quality of books placed in the hands of the present generation will influence the world by and by. I might add that when God for Christ's sake washed away my sins, for his dear sake I gave up novel reading, and how glad I am that I did.

"What Shall We Eat?"

Every day the same old question, What shall we eat for breakfast, for luncheon, for dinner? assails with monotonous regularity the patient housewife who seeks to provide good living for the family in agreeable variety at a moderate cost. There is a daily department in the Chicago Record-Herald which is intended to answer this question satisfactorily every day in the year. It is entitled "Meals for a Day," and provides menus for the three meals every day, with the necessary recipes. These menus and recipes are carefully selected by the Record-Herald's household editor, and cash prizes are awarded to the best that are received. Housewives everywhere are invited to participate in the competition. For full particulars see the "Meals for a Day" department in the Chicago Record-Herald.

The victory won by Joseph Folk in the democratic primaries of Missouri, in his candidacy for the nomination for governor, furnishes a striking instance of the influence of magazine publicity. The startling articles by Lincoln Steffens in McClure's Magazine, exposing corruption in Missouri, were largely instrumental in arousing the public conscience of that State and furnishing a response to Mr. Folk's appeal for civic honesty.

"Pray Ye Therefore."

Believing prayer is fittingly accompanied by works of faith. If we are praying for laborers, we will, first of all, go to work ourselves. Then, we will invite others into the field. We will be helpful to them, patient with their mistakes, and generous in our estimation of their efforts. We will try to train them to better service. We will be humble toward fellow workers, "in honor preferring one another."—E. E. Hewitt.

The Child Critic.

A little boy in California wrote in answer to the question why he considered his teacher a good teacher, "She makes things interesting, so you feel like working." And another child, when given the question, "Why do you like your teacher?" wrote "Because she means what she says."

Records or Class Books.

On the subject of using class books and records in the Sunday-school we have often spoken and always in their favor. But at the same time we are aware that many a teacher has made a frank failure with them. This is not the fault of the book or of the system. Both these are good, very good. They might be better but are now too good to leave unused. Have you not seen some very good machine or instrument condemned and all because some one did not use it properly? We have many times. So it is with our class books and Sunday-school records. Sr. Burton, of the Fremont District, relates an experience that is right in this line. But she has done what all ought to do, and that is to try it as it is intended to be used and in no half-hearted way. Do this and you will find as she has found that the fault was not with the system but with the way in which it was handled. We give a portion of the paper as illustrative on this point. Read and reflect:

"HOW TO INTEREST A SABBATH-SCHOOL CLASS TO GET THEIR LESSONS.

"This has always been quite a problem, to my mind. No doubt we all have experienced as teachers, especially of teaching children of the ages from about eleven to fourteen or fifteen that of all ages they are the most unsettled and unsteady, hard to interest, the age when they scarcely understand themselves. I have nine in my class at present, their ages ranging from eleven to thirteen. I have had this grade about one year and a half. I have tried every method I could devise, of course very kindly, to interest them both in the the class, and persuade them while at home to look over their lessons preparatory to the next Sunday's work.

"I thought and could readily see that unless they could be reached some way as a class to study more I could interest them but very little, because they knew nothing about what I was trying to impress upon them, and the class service was not mutual between teacher and pupil, or not as much so as it should be to be beneficial to all concerned. Of course in most every class there will be the pupils who are ready to respond with an intelligent answer, and others who are somewhat listless unless there is more or less effort, and I may say strategy, used by the teacher, as no one method will reach all; we deal with each one separately.

"But to conclude with this matter of trying to interest my class, as I can not definitely speak of the class of another, the class record was introduced in our whole school. The thoughts of it did not very favorably meet with my approval, although I said nothing. My great objection was the time it would call for.

"Well, I began with my record. They saw right away that I was pretty lenient with them, and the record failed to bring about much improvement. But I studied the matter over very seriously, and next lesson day opened it and read it to them and told them I intended to keep it just as I had been requested, and told them everywhere it would go and they seemed very much impressed and interested in it. And the result is very gratifying to me. They separately tell me just what they have done on their lesson for that day and I grade them accordingly, and of course as long as they have looked the lesson up, no matter how little, they are more or less interested and consequently their department is very good, as idle minds must do something, and, while they keep interested, the time soon goes and they reap a benefit which we hope some day may develop many-fold and become fruit for the kingdom of the Master. So I say "Success to the class books and records." Use them and you will find one 'way to interest a Sunday-school class to get their lessons.' "

The Sunday-School Lesson

For July 3, 1904.

A FEW NOTES ON THE LESSON.

(Through a misunderstanding this was omitted from last week's issue.)

John the Baptist was baptizing in Bethabara beyond Jordan when Jesus went to him and was baptized.

Among those who gathered there at that time were John, afterwards called the beloved disciple, Andrew, and his brother Peter.

Bethabara is only a short distance from Jerusalem, perhaps ten or twelve miles from it, on the Jordan opposite Jericho.

It was in this vicinity therefore that Peter first met Jesus.

His home, however, was in Galilee, and it was while at work by the Sea of Galilee that Jesus called him and his brother, Andrew, to follow him and become his disciples in the gospel work.

Jesus was thirty years of age at this time. From the fact that Peter was a married man when called to the ministry and that his martyrdom seems to have occurred late in the sixties, it is probable that he was in the vigor of early manhood when he became an associate of Christ in his work.

THE EFFORT OF THE SENIOR LESSON

is to show the prominent place in the church held by Peter, preparatory to studying his letters to the Saints. It is not necessary to enter into all the details of the events referred to in order to show the place held by Peter and the work done by him.

It is not designed that classes shall discuss the principle of revelation in connection with Peter's declaration, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

When reference is made to Peter's experience on the mount of transfiguration, it is not necessary to go into the details of what transpired there.

It is not necessary to discuss the resurrection of Christ when you talk of Peter at the empty sepulcher, or to enter deeply into the question before the Jerusalem Council when you mention the fact that Peter was prominent on that occasion.

Touch lightly upon these topics, for the object of the lesson is to show the part had by Peter in the work of the church and to give an outline of his life after his call to the ministry. The short time you have for class work will not permit you to spend much of it on any one topic of the lesson.

If you follow the review questions, or use the lesson outline to suggest original questions to you, you will be more likely to cover the lesson and to have a brief look at the whole life of Peter than if you read and discuss the study of the text in class.

It is the intent of the Quarterly that the study of the text shall be gone over at home.

STUDY AT HOME.

The study of the lesson at home is greatly neglected at the present time. Sunday-school teachers should encourage it, and the help of the parents should be sought, if necessary, to accomplish it.

The Sunday-school is doing but a small part of the good it would accomplish, if the habit of earnest study of the lessons at home could be established.

Nothing does the scholar so much good as that which comes to him as the result of his own effort.

How is study upon the part of Sunday-school scholars to be accomplished?

ONE OF THE FIRST THINGS

is to awaken teachers and parents to the necessity of it.

It is a sad fact that there are some teachers who do not really study at home. No teacher will make a success who goes to his class expecting to find out what is in the lesson after he begins to teach.

The Sunday-school teacher should be a student of the word of God. How can he teach it, if he does not know it?

What real good do we do by going through the form of teaching, if we do not impart knowledge?

Will the teacher who neglects to prepare himself to teach the lesson be likely to stimulate the children to study at home? Will he be in condition to teach them in class?

Do we continue teachers in our employ in the public schools who do not give to their work the attention it needs?

Are the things our children learn in the public schools more important than the things contained in the word of God?

If it is important that our children shall know the law of God, why do we parents and teachers think so little about it? Why do we do so little about it? Why do we let other things crowd it out from our attention?

If we believe it to be of supreme worth, why do we not give it our chief attention? Why do we put it off until the last thing and then forget it?

EVEN THE PRIMARY CHILDREN

should be encouraged to do what they can to prepare the lesson at home. If they can read, they should read the lesson story and learn the golden text at home.

A certain little girl entered the second primary room of our Lamoni Sunday-school when she was eight years old. She could read some, but many of the words in the second primary lessons were hard for her.

Often on Monday morning I have happened to stop to speak to her mother a moment and have found the child beginning to read the Lesson Story in the Primary Quarterly. Her mother explained to me that it was her habit to read a little each day until she knew her lesson. At first she could read but a little each day, but she worked away cheerfully, and during the two years she spent in the second primary room she never failed at the end of the quarter to recite the full list of golden texts for the quarter.

What this one little girl could do, many others should be doing. Perhaps some are doing so, but it should be a universal custom among our Sunday-school scholars to do regular study of the lesson at home.

Parents, teachers, superintendents, all should unite to foster this habit of study among the children of the church.

BREVITIES.

We can not make a success of Sunday-school work any more than we can of any other work without giving it the time and attention it needs.

We do not free ourselves from responsibility by shirking it.

One of a teacher's most important duties is to study his lesson thoroughly.

The teacher who succeeds in getting his class to study accomplishes a great work. He does them more good than if he talked volumes of wise things to them.

ANNA SALYARDS.

Letter Department.

MINATARE, Nebraska, June 24, 1904.

Dear Herald: This evening while comfortably located at Sr. Rutter's I thought the time would be well spent, in writing a few lines to your pages, to let you know we are still trying in our weakness to get the gospel before the people. We left home in April, stopping at Nebraska City for a week, visiting with Saints and relatives, then on to Omaha, where we had a very pleasant visit.

At the Sandhills, north of the Platte, we baptized six precious ones into the kingdom, all members of the South Tryon Sunday-school. At Rasco, near Ogallala, we visited Sr. Armstrong, and found her still rejoicing in the cause of Christ, although having to suffer much persecution. With some the gospel law is all right, but why still neglect to take the step which will make them heirs of the kingdom. In Antelope Valley, near Oshkosh, the waters of the Blue Creek were disturbed again, and three adults, members from the Methodist Church, were initiated into the fold. Thus they are gathered in one by one. We found Bro. Prettyman anxiously waiting for us here. We hope to start out with the tent as soon as the weather will permit. The field is large and the laborers are few, and unless we find another man that will volunteer to aid us we fear that one of the gospel tents can not be used. We trust some one may lend a helping hand. To the Saints throughout Western Nebraska and Black Hills I wish to say that I have been informed by the Bishop that we are expected to make up forty-five dollars and twenty cents for Graceland, to help lift the debt. Not being able to see you all, I trust you who read this will make the effort and send your mite to me, that by the first of September I can send the above amount to the Bishop. The debt must be paid, so let all make a good, strong effort once more, and see if the debt may not be paid, and the church freed from the strain.

With a desire to see the work advance, in bonds,

R. O. SELF.

A Word From Wales.

June 11, 1904.

Editors Herald: We held our Western Wales District conference on May 21 to 23 at Gilfach Goch, with good attendance and splendid interest. The Saints of the Penygraig Branch had rented the schoolhouse and made ample provision for the visiting brethren. Our Eastern Wales District conference was held on the 4th and 5th inst., at this place. Quite a number of the Western District Saints attended and added greatly to the force and strength of the conference. Brn. J. W. Rushton and William Newton were present. Bro. Rushton presided at both conferences. Did some visiting among branches. On the 25th ult. he had to go home on account of his wife's severe sickness. However on the 3rd inst. he returned to attend the conference held here. He felt under obligation to attend the conference, being it was possibly a special at his suggestion. Having procured a week-end excursion ticket he returned Tuesday the 7th to his home and sick wife. We trust she may have a speedy recovery.

Bro. Rushton had intended visiting Nantyglo, Llanelly, Pont Yates, and Llansamlet. However, his wife's sickness made a longer stay in Wales impractical at this time. Bro. Newton went to his field the same day as Bro. R. left for Scotland. Though he has had much to discourage him he is hopeful and tries to be cheerful and pleasant. He was well received at the different places we visited. We trust the Lord may bless him richly and reward him for the great sacrifice he is making and has made for the work. I greatly appreciated the pleasant and altogether too short visit those two brethren gave us.

The work in Wales is slowly making growth both spiritually and numerically. One man was baptized at Pont Yates a month ago; two men were baptized at Aberaman, one two months ago, and another two weeks ago and there are others to follow in that place if the Saints will do right and keep united. Another good man was baptized last Wednesday evening at Abertysswg. So we labor with hope and faith for a continued increase. May the Lord give us increase and much encouragement. I leave for Abertysswg to-day.

I subjoin one of the old Welsh poems as I promised in my last letter. This will be enjoyed by many. I have made no changes else I would change the second word. If the printers will get the ll's, dd's, small o's and u's correct, it will be a success.

Editors Herald: After I came here and preached a few times for the Baptist—Reverend H. H. Milburn, he liked me so very much that he begged of me to stay here and preach for him about ten days while he went to St. Louis. I was very glad to get the chance to preach the doctrine of Christ to the people. To date he has been gone four weeks,—a very long ten days indeed. So I still hold the fort. Some of his members say I am the best preacher they ever heard in their lives. This is pretty good to start out on. The same people started to build a Baptist church here just before the minister left for St. Louis; have done very well. I expect to preach in it this coming Sunday. I am working very carefully with the people. I received a letter a few days ago from Bro. T. C. Kelley which cheered me up very much. He said in his letter: "Bro. Graves, when you are received among the people and get a good chance to preach among them, do not be in too big a hurry to get away. Stay by them as long as you see one spark of light." I think that to be true; for the longer I stay, the better the people can see the light. Pray for me, dear Saints; that God may bless me while here in Hickman. Should the elders see this letter in the HERALD and desire to write to me I will be very glad to receive their letter.

In gospel bonds,

G. H. GRAVES.

LLANSAMLET, South Wales, June 6, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am glad to be able to say there are still left in Wales a few who are earnestly contending for the message delivered by the angel. Our district conference recently held at Gilfach Goch was productive of good. Brn. Rushton, Newton, and E. B. Morgan were present; and the first named delivered a most instructive address on Sunday, May 22, his theme being "Righteousness and how to build up Zion in the hills of Wales." The prayer services were characterized by a marked degree of the good spirit and the best of feeling prevailed throughout the conference.

The brethren at Gilfach Goch and Penygraig are to be congratulated for their success in securing the use of the county council schoolroom for six months and for the hearty reception accorded to the visitors. One man of good repute has recently been added to our number at Pontyeates and he is already aware that there is a financial aspect to this work if carried on successfully and consequently has commenced paying his tithes. We trust the day is at hand when many shall hear and heed the voice of the Good Shepherd. With best wishes to all,

HENRY ELLIS.

CRESTON, Iowa, June 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: About May 4 I received a letter from Bro. W. M. Kephart asking if I thought it advisable for him to come to Creston to hold some meetings. I am now sure that Bro. Kephart was led by the Spirit to come to Creston, for through his faithful work he has broken down a great wall of prejudice. He held meetings at our house, at Bro. Hall's, and at South Park, where he held open-air meetings, making three places of meeting, about one mile apart.

We would ask that Bro. Kephart be left to continue his work in Creston, for it looks to me that the right man was in the right place. He has gone home for a few days to rest, while there is a big Chautauqua Association going on here, which will last until July 4.

Some good people here, ready for the water when Bro. Kephart comes back, and others who are favorable.

Your brother,

Editors Herald: I wish to express my thanks to our heavenly Father for his blessing towards us last Thursday evening, the 23d, in healing our dear little child of pneumonia fever. I feel so thankful that God is so willing to bless us if we only trust him. I feel assured that this gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation. How beautiful it is to know that the Lord restored the child to its normal health. It is such a comfort to us to know that there is strength given from on high so that we may be able to exercise unwavering faith. We are weak creatures if left to our own strength. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may hold out faithful to the end.

W. R. RUSH.

Dear Herald: For the first time in my life I will pen you a few lines. I am so anxious every week for the HERALD and Ensign, that I may read of the progress of this grand and glorious work of God, not having been to church for about ten months. When I enlisted in the army of the Lord I did so to try to be a true soldier, wide awake, and doing all that I could to help aid in this glorious work; but when I look over my past life I find that I have made a very crooked path through my weakness. I feel assured, however, that God knows the most secret thoughts of my heart at all times. My greatest desire is to please God.

I will relate a dream I had over a year ago. I dreamed that I started out to walk and all at once I raised to fly and when I had gone quite a distance in the air, and was going quite rapidly and making many quick turns, I discovered that I had a large lamp in my hand, apparently my own lamp that I use now, and it was burning very brightly. I felt fearful of breaking it, and laid it on my left arm, holding it close to my breast, holding it pretty well on its side, yet it was burning brightly. All at once I was standing again, holding it in my hand still burning, and a voice said to me, "You go and sing and pray." I thought it meant to just keep going all the time, and I began to prepare to go when all at once I thought "I can not go for that would leave the two boys alone," and I awoke.

Above everything on this earth I want a clear conscience before God. Ever praying for the cause, I remain

Sketch No. 3.—A Dream.

Dear Herald: While hierarchies and oligarchies of the Far East are being opened up in intercourse with the world through the cruel acts of war, the olive-branch of peace is still fresh and green and fragrant in old Missouri; and, since spring first greeted us, Independence has shared her gifts, and field and orchard, hill and meadow teem with bounties that make the heart full of thanksgiving.

Attuned to the songs of birds and harmonious nature, her esoteric ear has lately caught the music of Children's Day which, with decorations of canopy, of choicest flowers and rare foliage, presented a garden of beauty filled with melody. It was a royal occasion to all who attended it. The faithful, earnest Saints gathering in, the ministrations of the elders at home and from abroad who present our faith in argument clear and incisive, a continuance of the promised grace and favor from without and of increased activity within the fold, all add to the onward progress of the work.

In reference to the children, we believe that what success has come to us as a people thus far is due largely to the fact that, added to the benefits of excellent secular school advantages here, and the instruction of ministers and Sunday-school teachers, the responsibility of the parents has not as a general thing been shaken off, and the good influences of home been neglected,

"But when the children whom we love
The good we missed fulfill,
Thank God, our hearts prevail to prove
The hearts of children still."

It has been said that "no doubt an ignorant man may be a strong, brave, and upright character, but it will be as a rule because of certain native qualities; and it is safe to assume that with intellectual training added, he would have developed into manhood just as strong, just as upright, and brave, and more efficient as a citizen of the state." In the words of the first elders who felt the weight of this responsibility, "our children are to perform the duties which not only appertain to this world, but to the second coming of the Savior, even preparing for the Sabbath of creation and for eternity."

All honor be to their memory, and may the word of command which we have received through them be heeded, for the Master has said "He who receiveth all things with thankfulness shall be made glorious, and the things of this earth shall be added unto him, even an hundredfold."

How can we read the stirring words of our earliest workers in the church in favor of a higher education and not feel a thrill of joy in the thought of trying to help carry on with united voice and hand such a strong and salutary institution as a "Grace-land," already established in our midst.

We note in our grand history of the church that as early as 1834 Prophet Joseph and Elder Oliver Cowdery entered into a covenant with the Lord that of all the Lord would give them, they would give a tenth "to be bestowed upon the poor in his church or as he shall command, and that our children after us shall remember to observe this sacred, holy covenant."

To be taught the law of tithing then, so fraught with blessings, was to be a part of the education of the youth of the church: and, as much is being said and written concerning it, we will narrate a dream as given by our Sr. Miller at one of the Saints' meetings, not long ago, and which narrative some desired to see in print.

Our sister, whose name is Loduska Evelina Louise Melvina Nancy Alzina Marilla Serene Spedie Fitzella Phoebe Jane Miller, was the second daughter of Don Juan Leach, deceased, one of the elders of the church in Prophet Joseph's day, and who was very helpful to the Saints during the time of their great persecution in Nauvoo. To relate the dreadful scenes passed through by our sister and her parents and family during those days of terror, would fill a volume; but ever since embracing the gospel she has continued steadfast and endured patiently, although amid trial and discouragements. Besides being blessed with a plenty of name (having been named for her four aunts and two grandmothers), it was her fortune to receive much spiritual instruction and many blessings through dreams, one of which is the following:

To use her own words, This dream is in three parts; I was standing by the roadside, and it led up a hill; and right in front of me stood a white horse hitched to the fork of a tree hewn out in the form of a little bob-sled. Upon this sled sat a woman dressed in pure white, and she had the reins in her hand which were white also. Her white robes trailed on the ground, but did not seem to be soiled: my eyes were fastened on her robes and I was much concerned to know why they were not soiled, and they were beautiful in appearance. She urged the horse with the reins, and had no whip. The horse was very thin in flesh, and it was all he could do to pull the sled along: he labored so hard, and yet could progress a very little at a time and would slip back at every step. Right ahead were two railway tracks and I could not see how the horse would ever get across them, and as I looked, being much excited over the dilemma, the scene before me disappeared for a moment and when I looked again the horse was standing at the top of the hill, and I was surprised, and when I went up there, he had pulled so hard that blood ran out of his mouth at the corners where the bits had been held. Then the scene was again taken away from my gaze.

The next I knew, I was at my own home and I looked out and saw a team of horses, beautifully white, coming up the hill toward my house hitched to a large transfer wagon. This wagon was loaded with square, white boxes: the load was extremely high, [and on the seat, which was high also, sat the same woman whom I had seen upon the sled. The horses were in excellent physical condition and they pranced along, exultant in power and beauty. The great load seemed but a feather's weight. As they stopped in front of the house, I exclaimed, "What great load of goods is that?" And some one [a personage] at my right shoulder spoke and said, "These are tithes and offerings of the saints." And I asked, "Where are they taking them?" And he said, "To the storehouse of the Lord."

All at once the woman I saw was sitting by the side of the door. The personage said, "The poor of the saints say they have no tithes nor offerings: come with me and I will show thee." In the places where he took me were about two dozen of poor Saint's homes, and the woman accompanied us. At every house as I stepped in over the threshold, he would say, "They say there are no tithes nor offerings here." Under his influence I was led to look for them, and in every house I found one of the white boxes which represented to me tithes or offering; but they were hid,—some under the beds concealed by curtains and some under stands curtained around. At every house we went into he would repeat what he had said, and though they were extremely poor, I always found the white box,—most of them of the smaller size. At several of these places he would exclaim, "They say, 'we are poor!'; but why, O my people, why will ye be poor? Why not trust me, that I may bless you that you may not be poor, for if my Saints will keep my law, there need be no poor among you." Then he took me back to my own home again, and again the messenger repeated what he had said in entering the others. I knew the tithes and offerings were there and so did not look for them. The personage began to talk again and said, "You have wanted to know how a little could benefit the church from the poor. You have thought fifty cents here and fifty cents there from the poor, to send out missionaries with, and carry on the expenses of the church, would be nothing, when a good many you knew, rich, in the church, having plenty, whom you thought were the ones to pay in, had not paid their tithing. Knew ye not that it is the poor who are helping this work along? The gospel is to be preached to the poor, and the poor shall inherit the earth. It is not the money that I want from my Saints, for I could bring money from all sources. I do not need money of my people; what I require is obedience. Now I will tell you how fifty cents will do as much good as one hundred dollars in the hands of the Lord. If the poor Saint pays but fifty cents, and that is his just due, and another pays his, and it is one hundred dollars, they both have fulfilled the law, and paid what they honestly owe to the Lord, and the fifty cents does as great a work for the church as the one hundred dollars will do, for it is in the Lord's hands, and he has all power to finish his work. When the Saints all do their duty, money will not be wanting. Now, make an offering, and I will show thee how it will grow in the hands of the Lord." So I looked around to see what to give as an offering. I saw a basket about half full of small potatoes and took about three of them, and laid them at the feet of the woman who sat there. "Now watch," said he, and we stood looking a very short time, and they began to grow, until each one was as large as a quart cup and they were very white. "Now look at your basket," he said, and I looked, and it was full. "Now," he said, "why will ye be poor?"

Many are deceiving themselves in this way, and many in the day when they shall enter into their reward will be disappointed in this. Some who think because they have had abundance, and suppose they have given liberally to the church, will say,

"Where is all that I thought was laid up to my credit here?" (and behold! as I looked, I saw just a few of the white boxes,) "while others will think they haven't given anything, only a penny, or a nickel, or a dime, but in their small amount given they were doing their whole duty, because they were doing all they could." (I saw the faces of these beaming with joy, and the boxes piled up to their credit, and they said in surprise, "When did I give all this?") "Now do you understand how these things grow in the hands of the Lord, and how ye are not rewarded according to the amount ye have given; but I require a willing and obedient mind?" The vision was opened unto me and I saw the Saints entering into their reward.

This was the dream of our sister and it has made an impression that can never be effaced from her memory. The convincing power that attended the message presented to her surpassed all human expression, and neither tongue nor pen can describe the beauty and grandeur portrayed with plainness to her vision.

It was evidently a presentation of that which will ultimately help to bring about, through the consecration of the Saints and the favor of God, the redemption of Zion. Will some one please send us the full interpretation.

Your sister in the gospel covenant,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Editors Herald: It is with a feeling of gladness that we note by your pages that so many of the Saints are rallying to the support of Graceland. We think it would be a sin for the college to close when there are so many that could help a little. We have only a small membership of ten or twelve here, and some of them, I am sorry to say, are not interested in the work. But out of that number nine gave their mite for the support of Graceland, which amounted to the sum of ten dollars, and was sent in by Bro. Shafer two or three weeks ago. Now that of itself would do nothing, but let every town or city according to its membership do the same, Graceland would have no need to close.

Trusting that the Saints everywhere will see the need of help—both the church and Graceland in the future,

Your brother in the faith,

BENJAMIN CROSHAW.

BOONE, Iowa, June 17, 1904.

Dear Herald: My heart has been made to rejoice in the last few days while Bro. Roth has been preaching here, that I am a Latter Day Saint, and know that God has accepted me as one of his children. It was through the preaching of Bro. Roth that I was brought to accept the truth of the blessed gospel of Christ twenty years ago. I desire to press onward and upward in this work, knowing it is of God. And while Bro. Roth was explaining the different degrees of glory, I felt that I knew what the glory of the sun was for. Dear Saints, when I received a knowledge of the truth, heaven in all its glory was shown to me; and it was while an awful storm was raging. The wind was blowing, trees were bending to the ground, and dust filled the air so that I could scarcely see. I was coming home from Boone, when all at once it seemed to me that I was in heaven. It was so calm, so peaceful, and so holy, and everything looked so beautiful. The whole earth seemed changed, and I was so happy. Tongue can not express the sweet comfort and peace of that moment.

When I got home some of my neighbors were wringing their hands and crying. I asked, "What is the matter?" They said, "Oh, we will all be blown away; we are going to have a cyclone." I told them not to be afraid, to put their trust in God and he would take care of them. I used to be so fearful of a storm before that, but God took all fear away from me.

Before joining the Latter Day Saint Church I had been a member of the Baptist, and also the Christian Church, but never felt satisfied, not receiving any knowledge of the truth of the work. The Scriptures say if you will obey that form of doctrine that was once delivered to the saints, from the heart you shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or of man. And, dear Saints, I have obeyed that form of doctrine from the heart, and have received a knowledge that the work is of God, and do know that God has accepted me as one of his children. Without this blessed hope my soul would not be at rest. Pray for me that I may enter into that rest that God has prepared for his children, that I may have a part in the glory of the sun.

ARMINDA BIXBY.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 16, 1904.

Dear Herald: When Bro. F. J. Ebeling wrote me asking if there was an opening here, I wrote him to come right away, saying that there were some to obey the truth here. Bro. Ebeling came and was pleased with the place and the work that we had done. He stayed here about a week, then went to Middletown, Ohio, and came back May 16, also Bro. W. H. Kelley and J. W. Metcalf. And Tuesday, the 17th of May, Bro. Ebeling baptized three mothers of families, and one sister's husband will soon be baptized; and Bro. Daman's noble companion will soon obey the truth. Trust we will have a branch here before long. May the Spirit of God rest upon the dear brethren who labored here, and may they soon come back and help in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

If any of the Saints have tracts to donate they will be gratefully received. We can put them to good use here.

Yours in the truth,

532 West Liberty Street.

WM. N. HANNER.

HIGBEE, Missouri, June 14, 1904.

Editors Herald: Our conference was a very pleasant one. The Saints enjoyed the visit of Bro. F. M. Smith and J. R. Lambert.

One pleasant feature of our conference was the kind invitation of the trustees and members of the First Congregational Church to hold our Sunday evening service in their fine new church which had been dedicated just one week before. The Saints at Bevier have disposed of their old church property and are now taking active measures towards the erection of a fine new church in a much more desirable location than the old one.

Srs. L. M. Lilly and M. A. Richards, and daughter Maggie, left Higbee on the 9th for Colorado Springs in search of better health. We trust that they may be successful in their search, for they are all active workers in our branch and Sabbath-school.

I trust that the Bishop will be successful in raising funds enough to pay off Graceland and I will try to perform the part that has been allotted me, and more.

Your brother in Christ,

WM. CHAPMAN.

JOPLIN, Missouri, June 24, 1904.

Dear Herald: I write a few lines to let God's people know that I am still pressing onward in this great latter-day work, it being about four months since I was ordained an elder under the hands of Bro. J. T. Davis and Bro. Short. I have been greatly blessed in my efforts; preached three sermons, and assisted three times. I can see God's work moving along. The little stone that was cut out of the mountains without hands is still rolling along until the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord. But none can assist in this work except he be humble and full of love.

My prayers are that the servants of God may be more humble.

Your brother in Christ,

A. C. GREER.

YALE, Oklahoma, June 19, 1904.

Editors Herald: I left home May 11 for my field, since then have been very busy. I had a fine interest at Terlton, and while there was challenged for debate, by Evangelist A. Foster. I accepted and we agreed on propositions. It is to be right after July 4, and last twelve days. The people will erect an arbor for the Fourth, and we expect to use it for the debate. Terlton is on the 'Frisco railroad about thirty-six miles west of Tulsa, Indian Territory. We would be glad to have all the Saints who can, attend. There are only a few Saints to take care of us, so I would advise to come prepared to camp. There will be plenty of pasture. Have been preaching in new places altogether so far this year.

My address will be Terlton, Oklahoma, until July 17.

W. M. AYLOR.

BALDKNOB, Arkansas, June 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: Having been transferred to the Southern Mission, I reached this place May 25, and, notwithstanding the busy time of the year, I have succeeded in holding about five meetings each week, with some interest manifested. Have preached at four different points. Expect to go to an entirely new opening on next Sunday night. The people are so busy cultivating their corn and cotton crops that it is a very unfavorable time to conduct a series of meetings; yet we really hope to accomplish some good as it is.

The Saints and friends are made very sad by the unexpected death of Elder Hugh Sands. He was president of the branch here; had moved to Independence the first of the year, but was thinking of returning to this place, and was here when I arrived. But it seems that by excessive worry over some financial movements, and as to what was best for him to do (and probably superinduced by some brain disease or affection) his mind became seriously impaired. He was finally committed to the hospital for the insane at Little Rock, but after two weeks death released him from the terrible suffering. Bro. Sands seemed to have stood well in this vicinity in the minds of all who knew him. The only fault they could find with him was on account of his religion. I have understood that some doctors and others had said that "his religion was responsible for his demented condition." It seems strangely inconsistent that Bro. Sands could hold to a religion for nearly fifteen years, and be a "good man," "a Christian," a "strong-minded man," "an excellent man," so many thus expressing their appreciation of the brother to me, and then all at once "his religion set him crazy." Very strange indeed! Well, this is a pretty fair sample of the best objections opposers and persecutors of the faith can bring against it. I believe Bro. Sands was a good man, but he was just what faith and obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ made him.

We expect to continue in this State for a few weeks yet, and then cross over into Tennessee and Kentucky. I may join Bro. Baldwin a little later on.

Yours in faith,

H. E. MOLER.

BLACKFOOT, Idaho, June 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am here at Blackfoot doing street preaching. I applied for the Mormon church here, but was denied it on the grounds that it would cause contention and that they might lose some of their converts if we were privileged to speak in their house; and their bishop further stated that they would have to go over the whole ground after we had left and disabuse the minds of the people of what I would say and for that reason he would not feel like letting me use the house. I thanked him for the courtesies (?) and told him we would occupy on the street. He then advised me not to say anything against them, but I did not consent to that.

I then went to the mayor of the town and got permission to occupy on the streets, and so far our efforts have been successful, as we have had an increase in hearers each night and a good interest seems to be manifested.

Our first effort was briefly the restoration, and then we took up the departure, and that brings in the doctrine of "polygamy," "Adam-god worship" and other abominable heresies which they have instituted as tenets of their faith. I first called attention to the unchangeability of the gospel, as is made plain throughout all scriptures, and then continued by putting the people of Utah and their teachings in comparison with the books they profess to believe in.

The business men of the town are elated with our efforts and say it is time those evils were put down.

In the mind of the writer, street preaching is the most successful method to adopt in this part of the world, as we can reach more people by this method than by any other the writer has yet tried.

During questions after our discourse last evening, I was asked to explain who was the man to succeed the Prophet Joseph if it was not Brigham Young, and I announced that I would do so the next evening. Then one of the business men of town asked me if I would prove in connection therewith why Joseph F. Smith was not the man to lead the people, and we told him we would, and he exclaimed, "I'll be here to hear it."

We have created a warm feeling with the people of this town who are not identified with the Utah church. There are some here who are investigating the work and we hope to have some ready for the water ere long.

Awaiting further results and praying God that his cause may prosper in the land,

At the battle's front,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

SANTA ANA, California, June 19, 1904.

Editor Herald: On the morning of May 17, at half past four, after bidding my weeping wife and children good-bye, I left Lamoni for my California field of labor, the Southern District. Arriving at Kansas City at twenty minutes to twelve in the forenoon, I parted company with Bro. Oscar Anderson and Mr. Mumma, who were on their way to Indian Territory, and went to Independence.

I met Bro. Joseph Luff, our general missionary in charge, and after a greeting, found Bro. A. Carmichael, with whom I had arranged to accompany over the mountain trip. He was being kindly cared for at Bro. Thoman J. Chatburn's, having just arrived from St. Louis. Was rapidly convalescing from the illness he had passed through while at St. Louis. He speaks very feelingly of the kindly care of the Saints there manifested to him during his illness and stay among them. It makes the heart rejoice to see or hear of the manifestations of the Christ life and love, as developed in the lives of Saints anywhere. Bro. Carmichael was as anxious to get home as I was to reach the field of labor; and after a night at Independence, and the greeting of a few at the Ensign Office, on the 18th, we hurried to Kansas City and arranged to be off on the way to the Pacific Coast. The evening at Bro. G. H. Hilliard's was rendered very pleasant, as his wife and he, as host and hostess, served a number of Saints who had gathered for an evening's social communion, and the cream, cake, and oranges were enjoyed by all, and the divine blessing was earnestly besought on all at the dissolving for respective homes. We shall long remember the evening.

We left at three o'clock in the afternoon, and soon were sweeping along the Kaw River, which was flushed with recent heavy rains, and then gliding over the Kansas prairies, toward Ottawa and Emporia. Region very wet,—little, if any, corn planted. But one field was planted and coming up. The sun, as it sets, seems to roll along on the earth as a great ball of fire. A clear sunset in a level land, as the train rushes along, is a beautiful sight.

As we neared Newton City the moon was gleaming softly yet beautifully from her starry realm, and we think of Great Bend, and sad thoughts come to us. A musical instrument is sending forth on the balmy vespers the sad strains of "I'm dreaming now of Halley, sweet Halley," and the scene so enchanting is invaded by the tragedy of August 29, 1903, and the shadow only, as one of its results that is left to our little home, of a manly form now gone from us behind the mystic vale for ever. A reverie! And we glide on.

Night goes by, and morning brings Western Kansas, dry, desolate, and dusty. Eastern Colorado is announced, and the "sage brush." To us it resembles a specie of grass or weeds. It don't look like "brush" to a man brought up among trees!

But here comes the mountains in the distance, looming up like a great black cloud in the west, up mountain ascent, and then down, one after another. An arid plain, occasionally, and one wonders what those piles and crags, and rough and stately boulders mean. What earthly purpose do those mountain chains and peaks serve? And so we pass on in amazement till the evening of the 20th, we cross the Colorado River, which there forms the line between Arizona and California, and we leave The Needles, a station on its west bank, for an all night's ride through a California desert of sand.

We sleep, and rise to see a sunrise in the Golden State bordering on the placid Pacific. The usual morning fog hangs on the ether, and we see but little of the sun for about two hours. A sandy waste stretches out in all directions, far as sight carries. Our heart is lifted to that Being whose almighty hand reared all these strange wonders that demonstrate his infinite power, wisdom, and love. Why are we here eighteen hundred miles from home and loved ones known to us? Our mission? The church, the great latter-day work. Its great mission in the great world in the last days! Is the Great Being of love near us? Is he with us? Our chariot rolls on over this waste, and while our "fellow travelers" sleep our heart goes up to "our Father," and a halo of peace comes to us. A joy, a message of gladness,—and we have rest and satisfaction. But would we always revere and seek him if he always stood so close to us, making his presence felt and realized? Would we not lapse into a too-satisfied and passive state? His peace, love, glory, blessings, and salvation must be sought—faithfully, urgently, humbly sought. Saints, everywhere, "seek ye the Lord, while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near." His hand will be withdrawn soon. How soon? "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh."—James 5.

But let us go back; God is in the desert as well as on the flowery lawn. Breakfast at Barstow, change cars for San Bernardino and Los Angeles! On we go. Here is an oasis, grass, flowers, trees, water, a station, a village, and the San Bernardino Mountains are up against us. From one of the peaks the snow is reflected to our vision like veins of silver in the sunlight. Our train finds its way through the mountain pass and soon the plains and fruits of the San Bernardino region are before us, a continual wonderment to one visiting here for the first time. Passing San Bernardino we arrive at eleven in the forenoon in Los Angeles, a busy, stirring city of one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, and rapidly growing every day.

Bro. Carmichael had rapidly convalesced as he neared home. We were glad. We went to the home of Bro. William Crumley, where we were heartily welcomed; and here we remained till the 31st of May, being received kindly by all the Los Angeles Saints. I preached four times during my stay, attended Sunday-school and Religio twice. Bro. T. W. Williams presides over the branch, also the Southern California District. Several Saints reside there whom we knew before. Bro. Hatson superintends the Sunday-school and Bro. Robert Cooper has charge of the Religio and leads the choir. Some have lately been baptized there and the Saints are expecting brighter days for the work.

On May 31st I came to Anaheim, to the Garden Grove Branch.

Have sojourned with brethren here and been blessed while ministering among them. It is just about impossible to arrest the attention of those not of our faith here. A mania for the world and its pleasures seems to have enchained the people on the coast, and they seem absolutely disinclined to resist it. They are going blindly to their doom. The days predicted by Jesus in Matthew 24: 37-39; Luke 17: 28-32, and by Paul in 2 Timothy 3: 1-9, are here. I wish we could all realize it. Those days are upon us. Let Saints everywhere be awake. "Darkness covers the earth and gross [fleshly] darkness the people."

Bro. Carmichael is going about the work intrusted to him with a will. Graceland College, too, is being remembered out here. Bro. C. E. Crumley makes friends for the cause. Bro. J. C. Clapp is known—a veteran in the work in all the coast. Bro. T. W. Williams will take the field in July, and it seems that by divine help and direction we ought to do something for the work in this district. We need the prayers of the Lord's people and earnestly request it. May the Lord bless his people everywhere is our earnest desire.

The reunion of the district will be held near Santa Ana beginning July 22, and we hope for good to be accomplished, and the Saints to be greatly blessed in the effort.

I desire hereby to offer an apology to Brn. A. E. Jones and William Gibson, both of San Bernardino, California, for omitting their names from those appointed by the General Conference to labor in the Southern California District, in my notice given of my presence in the field as assistant minister in charge. It was unintentional, an oversight, I beg pardon, and hope no offense will be taken by the brethren named.

Hoping that Zion may arise and shine, and that her children may walk in the light, having on righteousness as a robe,

Hopefully,
C. SCOTT.

Extracts from Letters.

E. H. Porter, writing from Nebraska City, Nebraska, says: "We have been holding service with the Saints at this place each night this week. The attendance has been about eighteen since Sunday. This is as good as we expected owing to other attractions. There are a few good Saints here."

John G. Hodges, Hazelton, Iowa, renewing for the HERALD gives expression to a few thoughts suggested by Paul's language as found in 2 Corinthians, chapter 6, verses 14 to 17, beginning thus, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." He refers in connection with it to a statement found in the Doctrine and Covenants which says that those who marry unbelievers shall be considered weak in the faith, and comments as follows: "I think every Saint who contemplates marrying an unbeliever should consider these things before taking so important a step. Let them ask themselves the question, What shall I do when the time of gathering has fully come? Shall I stay and take the scourgings with the unbelievers, or must I be separated from my companion, and from my children perhaps? Not only time, but also eternity may be involved in the act, as your companion may influence you to do or live contrary to the commandments of God."

S. D. Condit writing from Malad City, Idaho, reports that Bro. Pender and himself have baptized seven at Oxford and Malad City, with more to follow. He also adds: "Bishop's agent here has gathered near twenty dollars for Graceland. Hope to hear good reports from other parts of the district soon."

Bro. J. J. Cornish, Coleman, Michigan, June 21: "Conference of Northern Michigan District was a good one. Bro. Phelps baptized seven, and one more was baptized last evening. Most everything is moving on nicely."

Bro. F. M. Smith writing from Fergus Falls, Minnesota, June 21: "Reunion closed Sunday evening. Saints seemed to be pleased, and nearly all expressed themselves as feeling repaid for their trouble and expense. There were two baptisms, one a child of about eight or nine, the other a young woman of about thirty-two who was a Catholic. She had been investigating for some time, and reached the decision Sunday afternoon. We go to Clitheral to-day. Thursday we start for Dunseith, and will reach there Friday. Reunion begins Saturday. After Dunseith reunion, I will spend some days with Fred A. visiting places in Minnesota. On the 23d and 24th of July we will be in Packard, Iowa, to attend to the dedication there. From there I think I shall go home for a few days before starting for Massachusetts."

Bro. J. S. Roth writes from Nevada: "Brn. Sheldon, Christy, and I am here holding tent meetings. Sr. Christy plays the organ. Crowds are small, but some are interested. We go next to Marshalltown."

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Northwestern Kansas District: Having been placed in charge of this mission under Bro. I. N. White, I would be pleased to get all the information and help from the ministry and Saints possible, and so ask that all who see places where openings can be made, or where it is thought good can be done, or where there are calls for preaching that the local men can not fill, please notify me and we will do the best we can to supply the demand. My home address is Holden, Missouri. Hoping the Lord will bless you all, that we may work together in love.

Your brother and coworker,
GAYLORD, Kansas, June 27, 1904.

S. J. MADDEN.

Conference Notices.

Texas Central District conference will meet at Cooks Point on Saturday, July 23. We want every body to come. Let every branch and every one of the priesthood who belong to the district report. Send report to the secretary, C. M. Mitchell, Cooks Point, Texas. E. W. Nunley, president.

The Seattle and British Columbia District conference will be held at Seattle, Washington, August 6 and 7, at 10 a. m. Brn. G. T. Griffiths, O. B. Thomas, T. J. Bell, and E. F. Mengel, of the mission are expected. Branch clerks are especially requested to mail reports and delegate credentials one week prior to date to Bro. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 1202½ Seventh Avenue, Seattle, Washington. D. A. Anderson, president.

Reunion Notices.

The reunion of the Des Moines District will be held August 5 to 14 inclusive, in Oak Park in the city of Des Moines. This is one of the most convenient and pleasant places in the city for reunion purposes, there being plenty of shade; the ground is high and dry, the Highland Park street-cars run along by the side of the ground to be used, and here are a nice class of residents. Mr. Henry Lehman, who has charge of the ground, has granted the use of it free, and secured the good-will of all the residents near the ground. Plenty of good water will be on the grounds. A coöperative boarding tent will furnish board for all comers at very reasonable rates. Arrangements for caring for horses will be made. Tents will be furnished at the following rates: 10x12, $1.50; 12x14, $2.00; 14x16, $2.50; for the time of the meeting: Cots, single, 25 cents; double, 50 cents; mattresses, chairs, and other things according. Representative ministers will be in attendance to dispense the word and have charge of the services. E. O. Clark, secretary.

The seventh annual reunion of the Kentucky and Tennessee District will convene at Crossland, Kentucky, July 30. Owing to the lateness of the crops the time for the reunion has been changed from July 23. We hope the change will meet with the approval of the Saints, and that a goodly number will be present. If any one wants board, write me at Fulton, Kentucky. W. L. McClain, secretary.

The Southeastern Illinois District reunion will be held from August 5 to August 14, at Bungay, three miles west of Springerton. The Springerton Saints are doing all possible to make this reunion a grand success. Bro. James Ellis will meet all at the depot and convey them in surreys to the grounds. Those who can bring tents, bedding, etc. Board can be procured at fifteen cents a meal on the grounds. There will be plenty of good water, straw to fill ticks, and wood to cook with. We hope to have tents to rent for those who want to camp on the ground. I. N. White and other good speakers will be present. Prepare to come at the beginning and remain during the ten days. The Religio and Sunday-school work will be given special attention. Please bring your Quarterlies, Winnowed Songs, and Zion's Praises. For further information address, Elder F. L. Sawley, Box 115, Springerton, Illinois. I. A. Morris, F. M. Davis, F. L. Sawley, committee.

Two-Day Meetings.

Two-day meetings will be held in the Southern Indiana District as follows: Millstone, July 23, 24; Derby, July 30, 31; Leavenworth, August 13, 14; Rezo, August 20, 21; Oatsville, 27, 28; Union, September 3, 4; New Trenton, September 10, 11. Other meetings will be arranged in time. All meetings will be basket meetings. The minister in charge will furnish the speakers. James P. Sappenfield, president.

Notices.

GERMAN TRACTS.

The following brethren have contributed to a fund for the translation and publication of German tracts: T. T. Hinderks $1; William Hamann $5.30; Casper Hinderks $5; John Davies $7; Frank Weitlich $1; Fred Ehless 25 cents; George Ehless $1; M. H. Hinderks $5; T. Hovenga $1; J. E. Hovenga 50 cents; A. C. Hinderks 25 cents; H. T. Hinderks 25 cents; O. Johnson $5; H. E. Hamann $1; C. P. Faul $1; C. C. Hamann $1; John Peters $1; B. O. Johnson 50 cents; Henry Johnson $1; Fred Uphoff $2; E. Marks $3; Mary Dobie 20 cents; Henry Hinderks $1; Bettie Hamann $1; T. H. Hinderks 50 cents; George Piepergirdes 25 cents.

TO SCATTERED SAINTS.

Inasmuch as we find by examination of the Boone Branch record, that only about one fourth of the entire membership is living within the limits of the branch and the other three fourths have removed, and most of them, as to their whereabouts, are unknown to the branch, therefore we have thought best to publish the names of those unknown and request them to report their whereabouts to the branch president, Samuel McBirnie, or to the undersigned, accompanied with a request for a letter of removal to the branch they are nearest to, so that each branch and district may be properly represented as to their actual membership and also to comply with the rules governing the church in this regard. The names are as follows: Joseph Kincaide, Louisa C. Duncan, Cora F. Russell, John McBurney, Martha J. McBurney, Maggie Spiers, Cede Sharp (or Clark), John Linguist, Janet Briles, James Penman, Bell Thomas, Margaret McClure, Walter Russell, Elizabeth E. Adey, Eva M. Knox, Jennie Permelia Dotson, Uriah Rufus Dotson, Helen B. Russell, Blanche E. Russell, Carrie D. Russell. This is only an example of the condition of several of the branch records of this district, known as the Des Moines District, and it is hoped that if any one knows himself to be a member of this district and is located elsewhere he will not delay making application to the branch where his name is recorded for a letter of removal; and the same rule holds good with those who are located within this district and who hold membership elsewhere. Your colaborer for Christ's sake, S. K. Sorensen, District President. Boone, Iowa, June 23, 1904.

Correction.

In the issue for June 29, page 587, 2d column, line 21, "immortality" should read "immorality."

Married.

BECK—GRIFFITHS.—At the home of the bride's parents, Bro. and Sr. Gomer T. Griffiths, Kirtland, Ohio, June 22, 1904, at 8 p. m., Mr. Edwin Long Beck and Sr. M. Lula Griffiths were united in marriage, Elder D. A. Anderson officiating. A large number of guests witnessed the ceremony. The toothsome repast and genial hospitality of the home were heartily enjoyed by all; while the number and quality of well selected gifts attest the widespread popularity of the contracting parties. They will be at home to their friends after September 1, 1904, at Kirtland, Ohio.

Addresses.

T. J. Bell, care of Carrier No. 35, Seattle, Washington.

Died.

STEBBINS.—In Berlin, Germany, June 16, 1904, Mr. Charles M. Stebbins, aged 75 years, 3 months, and 5 days. He was born near Kirtland, Ohio, in 1829, and was the oldest of six children (Bro. H. A. Stebbins being the youngest) that were born to Charles and Julia E. Stebbins. He was not a member of any church, but was an honorable man and did much good with his wealth in caring for and educating orphan children.

FARMER.—At Lamoni, Iowa, June 27, 1904, Bro. John T. Farmer, aged 70 years, 10 months, and 9 days. He was born in Hampshire, England, and at the age of twenty-three went to Australia. For nine years he was a sailor in the East India trade and on a British warship. Bro. and Sr. Farmer were baptized in Australia in 1874 by Bro. Glaud Rodger, and came to America in 1886. She died in Lamoni in 1894. He has been an inmate of the Saints' Home since its establishment. Service in charge of Bro. John Smith, with sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

BEADLE.—Bro. Joshua Beadle was born June 13, 1839; served three years in the Rebellion; married Miss Hannah J. Shafer in 1871, to whom were born two boys and two girls. He was baptized into the church on June 8, 1892, by Elder Samuel Jordison; died June 20, 1904, at Coalville, Iowa. Funeral sermon in the Saints' church by J. S. Roth, assisted by William Jordison, to a good-sized crowd.

HOWES.—Sarah a Hawley was born March 11, 1862, in Shelby County, Iowa, and was baptized into the church September 1, 1872, by John Hawley; was married to Doctor J. C. Howes September 1, 1885, and died June 21, 1904. She leaves husband, two sons, three brothers, and one sister to mourn. Funeral from the residence, 2760 Grant Street, Omaha, Nebraska; sermon by James Huff, assisted by Charles Fry.

LANKFORD.—Iny, wife of Charles Lankford, at Palmyra, Missouri, June 22, 1904. Deceased was born March 6, 1861. Married Bro. Lankford January 13, 1887. To them were born five sons and one daughter. Her husband, four sons, one daughter, a brother, and a sister remain to mourn their loss. She united with the church November 26, 1896, and has lived a faithful Christian life to the end. She was laid away in Green Tree Cemetery. Funeral conducted by Bro. George Hicklin. Bro. Lankford asks the prayers of the Saints that he may be aided in caring for his five children.

Degeneracy Disproved.

There are people who declare that the country is going to materialism and degradation. There are even people who prove this awful condition by isolated examples of individual degeneracy. But at last we have the final word on the other side. The World's Work devotes itself in July to showing the finer side of American life, and to proving, by most interesting articles and interesting pictures, that the conditions are becoming better every day; that our schools are better; that our appreciation of art is better; that we buy more pictures and books than any other people in the world; that our charities are conducted with more skill and judgment than they ever were before; that there is less dishonesty, and that the cultivation of the arts and of the higher life is making rapid strides—keeping pace, in fact, with the great increase in the material advance of the people. This helpful review has been worked out with success, and the pictures add very greatly to the interest of the number.

An Open Letter to Clergymen.

We are told in the Bible that "God created every winged fowl after his kind; and God saw that it was good. And God blessed them, saying, Be fruitful, and let fowl multiply in the earth."

It is a sad fact that man is not permitting the birds of the air to multiply as God directs; they are wantonly killed for sport by men, and boys destroy thousands of eggs and nestlings each year. Fashion decrees that women must wear the plumage of wild birds for ornaments. Glance at the bonnets worn at any church service and note the large number of graceful plumes known as "Aigrettes." There is not a woman that does not know that these plumes are obtained only by the most cruel and barbarous methods. How can she kneel and partake of the holy communion while wearing them?

Can the children of the Sunday-schools grow to be good men and women unless they are taught that kindness to all God's wild creatures is a part of Christian life? The Savior says a sparrow "shall not fall on the ground without your Father." This certainly means that human beings will be held responsible for all acts of cruelty to even the most humble of God's creatures.

Birds are a check on insect life and so lessen the labor of the tiller of the soil. Scientific study during the past two decades has demonstrated the fact that birds are the most valuable friends the agriculturist has; they destroy insect pests and noxious vermin; they also eat thousands of tons of weed-seeds which if left to propagate would soon overrun the land.

Birds require no pay for their labors, they only ask to be let alone to enjoy in peace and safety the life the Creator gave them, the same right that every good citizen enjoys.

Are clergymen doing their duty if they do not call the attention of the people to the rights of the birds?

WILLIAM DUTCHER, Chairman.

National Committee of Audubon Societies, 525 Manhattan Avenue, New York.

The Government Forestry Exhibit.

The Bureau of Forestry of the United States Department of Agriculture has prepared for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition the most extensive display it has ever made. The purchase is both to illustrate the work which the Bureau is doing and to show actual forest conditions in all parts of the country. The visitor will see there the most impressive evidence of what practical forestry is, and also its great present and future importance as a means of promoting the national welfare. Lumbering ranks fourth among the industries of the country, and it is a matter of hopeful promise for the permanence of the industry and for the cause of forestry that lumbermen are adopting conservative forest management in their lumber operations. That agriculture, incomparably the most important of our national sources of wealth, also depends in no small degree on forestry, is not, however, so well understood. Under intensive methods of farming, and with the enlargement of the cultivable area made possible by irrigation, this dependence will become increasingly close. Mining and grazing, too, materially depend on forestry, for mines demand cheap and abundant timber, and the forage which feeds most of the western stock is one of the important indirect products which under proper restrictions, the forest may be made to yield. All of these relationships are strikingly displayed in the Forestry exhibit at St. Louis.

Every lover of art should see the reproductions in the June Cosmopolitan of the wonderful paintings in the Paris Panthéon. For many years the first painters of France have been at work on an historical series to adorn this building, and the best of their endeavors form the illustrative material for an article on the French Westminster Abbey.

Gossip after all, is fairly harmless, provided it is sensible and innocent. The chief thing is that you receive it for what it is worth, and not magnify your friend's prattle or give idle words a terrible significance. All of us like to talk about our friends; all of us do talk about them, and we will to the end of time; but that doesn't mean that we like them less or have the less confidence in them. You must take into consideration the spirit of gossip, not the letter. I tell you in privacy that my Uncle Joseph is a cranky old gentleman, very pernickety in his ways. Are you justified then in going to Uncle Joseph and telling him that I said he was a crank? If you have a bit of sense you know very well that his crankiness is what particularly endears him to me, and that he has a thousand other virtues which outweigh that fault. Uncle Joseph, on the other hand, might tell you that I am a thoughtless fellow, given to taking the world lightly. Is it just to repeat to me that Uncle Joseph thinks me light-minded and brainless? You forget that Uncle Joseph would be the first to combat you if you said aught against me, and that down in his heart he thinks I am one of the most promising lads of his acquaintance. Gossip, then, is rarely evil in intention when it deals with friends. We speak of faults, but in our hearts are a thousand reservations and the memory of many virtues. Knowing our own feelings, we hesitate less to criticize. The great thing we must learn is that gossip is to be heard in the same kindly spirit, and that it is not to be repeated. Whoever hears wrongly, or whoever carries ill words willfully, is in the devil's service. Gossip you will if you are human, but be above carrying it, and be above misinterpreting a thing that has been said about yourself. Laugh at the criticisms of your friends if they meet your ears; smile indulgently and be nice to your critics for you can assure yourself that if they talk of your faults, they also appreciate your virtues. Gossip so received is robbed of chance venom, and the person who receives it cheerfully is doubly armed against the stings of fortune.—June Woman's Home Companion.

LOST—A KING.

In the scramble for everything loose, which followed the death of Joseph, the zealous elders caring for the interests of the rightful heir seemed to have overlooked an important matter, which is nothing short of a kingship. All Latter Day Saints, perhaps, are not aware that in addition to the many offices already filled by him, he was ordained a king.

William Marks, president of the stake at Nauvoo, said he witnessed the secret introduction of a kingly form of government, with Joseph as king. He neglected to give a list of the earls, dukes, lords, and sir knights of the court, but that perhaps, is not of great consequence, since the kingdom has been left to another, who might want the list changed.

Of course the present Joseph Smith, according to "lineal rights" doctrine, would have a right to the king's job, along with the other things it is alleged he fell heir to. Is he king, or do we look for another? Why is it that we have had no information on this important subject, and why has that rare historian, Heman C. Smith, failed in producing a few pages (to order), that an anxious public may learn the illustrious personnel of the present potentate. We may be unreasonable in asking for details, for it is barely possible the present successor of King Joseph is observing tradition, and is conducting his kingdom secretly. If so, there are two burning questions which must be answered. First, Does King J. J. Strang count in the dynasty? Second, Did Strang make an attempt to ordain "Young Joseph" as his successor to the throne?

In the revelations which have been given to the church we are admonished that the Redeemer, the Messiah, is "the King of Zion." And in 1831, a period in which the revelations given to Joseph Smith are not subject to suspicion by any believers in the latter-day message, section 38, paragraph 5, we have the following:

But verily I say unto you, that, in time, ye shall have no king or ruler, for I will be your king and watch over you. Wherefore, hear my voice and follow me, and you shall be a free people, and ye shall have no laws but my laws, when I come, for I am your lawgiver, and what can stay my hand?

It is well known that from the first of our connection with the church we have persistently taught that there were to be no kings on this land until Christ came; and one of the objections made to the claims of James J. Strang was his claim to kingship; and we have not changed our opinion in regard to this subject. We regret sincerely that our neighbors of the Church of Christ should have indulged in so careless and senseless a fling as the foregoing quotation from the Evening and Morning Star undoubtedly is. We have tried to treat the editor and publishers of the Evening and Morning Star courteously in our journalistic intercourse with and in reference to them. Our people, many of them, are subscribers to the Star, and some portion of the support of that paper comes from the membership of the Reorganized Church. The article which we quote can not fail to elicit surprise and in many disgust and contempt for so unwarranted an attack. We have but one comment, and that is, when the editor of the Star dies, whether it be soon or late, wisdom will remain and be found doing business at the old stand.

THE very reputation of being strong-willed, plucky, and indefatigable, is of priceless value. It cowes enemies, and dispels opposition to our undertakings.—Darwin.

A MISUNDERSTANDING.

We are in receipt of the following communication from a brother:

I have read your "Instruction—Leaving the church, etc.," in the HERALD of June 15, and I can not harmonize it with the report of the committee in the Burlington case, as found on page 594, paragraph 3, of Minutes of General Conference, 1903: "This persistent claim to withdraw, in the opinion of the committee, is the only specific charge necessary, as referred to in conference resolution 284." I brought my minutes from Davenport to show a brother here the position of the church on the question; he said that when the conference took action as reported in minutes referred to, one of the Muscatine papers printed in a somewhat sensational manner that "Latter Day Saints of Muscatine could now leave their church without being expelled." Before I got an opportunity to show him the report I read your article and now I am in a dilemma. There seems to be a conflict. I only want light so I will not misrepresent the church.

There was an action of the council quite early in the history of the Reorganization in which the provision occurred, as stated or referred to in our article to which the brother refers, which specifically stated that "A persistent request to withdraw should be taken as apostasy," or words to this effect.

Resolution No. 284 is this:

Resolved, that in the opinion of this council, no person's name should be stricken from the church record until specific charges have been preferred against them, and lawful action had in the case, and that the cause or causes of action and expulsion should be stated upon the church record.

It was a modification of this that the report of the committee adopted April 8, 1903, and which our brother referred to, was enacted. Now wherein is the instruction given mystifying or at fault?

The resolution of 1903 to which our brother refers, still requires that "due and diligent labor" should be performed by the officers of the church and an effort made to reclaim the members who may ask to withdraw, and in case the claim to withdraw is persisted in, it becomes a specific charge, and not until then can the permission to withdraw be granted, and then it must be by a court duly called. But the cause or causes for this persistent claim should appear upon the record. Now suppose the cause or causes is a change of opinion or an apostasy from the faith, the result of either new light as the individual may say, a misconception of the position of the church, or alleged bad treatment by individuals in the church with which the individual may have come in contact, will this not also be included in the record?

We may say, however, that we had no thought of the action of the conference on the report of the committee of 1903 on the Burlington case, but did have special reference to Resolution No. 284, which we had sought to have modified, and especially with our understanding that persons who had experienced a change of opinion or who had lost faith in the church, but who were not otherwise guilty of wrongdoing or evil conduct, should be charged or tried for apostasy, and that the persistent request to withdraw should be construed or understood to be apostasy or evidence of apostasy.

The brother who wrote us certainly overlooked the following clause of our instructions:

We have stated the rule, and like it is in other cases, we are not at liberty to disregard our own accepted and adopted rules of procedure, however much we may think the rule should not have been adopted.

Now, if there can be any other fair construction put upon the two resolutions by which the action of branches concerning persons desiring to withdraw from membership because of loss of faith or change of opinion, without the intervention of a court or the charge of apostasy, thereby making the parties guilty of a constructive wrong, we have no possible objection and shall be pleased with such modification. If nothing else results from our writing as we did than the calling attention to the subject, we shall not be sorry.

A GOOD LETTER.

The following letter from Bro. I. N. White about the things of his field will be interesting and appreciated by our readers; albeit was not written for publication. It bears date of July 2:

Yours of June 29 to hand. Glad you saw fit to answer mine of some time ago, about the practicability of reporting. Your answer is very indefinite in some things. In regard to reporting becoming "monotonous and irksome," none probably have felt that more than have the Quorum of Twelve. I have to furnish about fifty ministers with blanks; drum a few of them up to report; read over all of these reports when in; write each member that fails in making them out correctly; then answer all objections raised against the system of reporting; wait from ten to twenty days on delinquents; then write them at the last moment, only to receive an answer, "that I had forgotten all about my report." This has to be apologized for to the First Presidency, or the Twelve be thought unreasonable in their "system of reporting," etc. As late as yesterday, while I was making out my report, I wished that the system of reporting was done away with altogether, and let men go out to their fields upon merit. The "tricky" and "lazy" ones will soon be found out, and should be sent to their homes as not being eligible for the field. There should be no respect of persons shown, even from the priest to the Twelve. The "idler" should have no place among the missionary force.

Just returned from my "southern trip." The exposure was considerable, which caused me to take a severe cold, and for a few days had a struggle to keep on my feet; yet kept going and am feeling much better at this time. Held and presided at a quarterly conference on the 18th and 19th of June, just east of Thayer, Missouri, where I met Elder Braden in debate two years ago. On Sunday, 19th, I organized a branch there, consisting of eighteen members, Elder H. J. Bootman president, W. P. Bootman presiding priest, John F. Cunningham teacher, and Philamon Frisby deacon. The last two named I ordained, Bro. H. J. Bootman assisting. The organization was named the Thayer Branch.

Since the debate, the Brn. Bootman have been called and ordained, and have kept up a lively interest in the regions round about Thayer, holding preaching services here and there and baptizing a number and organizing a Sunday-school (union) in the house where we held the conference and organized the branch. Sr. John F. Cunningham is the wideawake superintendent of the Sunday-school.

After seeing the work established there, I called at Springfield, and preached in the tent for a few nights, relieving Bro. Henry Sparling, while he pounded nails, putting on the "finishing touches" of a new house, which he hastily moved his family into, before we left, in order to better his condition, and give room to another family who came in at one door while he moved out at the other. Henry is a worker, and we will be glad to know his hands are loose so his whole time can be given to the work that he and his good wife have manifested so much love for in the years past.

On the morning of 24th at the early hour of three, Bro. Charles E. Bootman called me to make ready for the early train. I hastened away, carrying with me a box filled with the dainties that cured hunger at later hours. "Belle," the good wife, had been the thoughtful one of the things mostly needed on that occasion. She is good, but will be more good when obeying the gospel, which she has commenced to express a desire to do. Hope now soon. At fifteen minutes to noon I pulled in at Nevada, and Elder F. C. Keck met me, and we lunched with Bro. and Sr. Jake Andes. Here we met Sr. Swen Swenson, and had happy greetings all around. Learned that Swen was feeling a little "blue" over towards Salt Lake; but as the "darkest hour is just before day," was hopeful that something would soon turn up to relieve the worried mind. Swen is one of my children in the gospel, and I am sure he will not leave a stone unturned if he thinks turning it will be good for the work. I had just three minutes to glance at the "big HERALD" which contained the Bishop's report. The "toot" of the Eldorado engine said go! Keck and I were soon on our way to the closing exercises of the Sunday-school convention at Eldorado. Met others on the way. Exercises were good. The next day the conference convened at ten; but at half past eight met for prayer, and seldom have I met such an overflow of the good Spirit. People wept.

The conference was a good one. Here I met Bro. Henry Kemp and Sr. Morgan, his stenographer; also Brn. Moler, Silvers, Beebe, T. R. White, R. T. Walters, A. T. Higdon of the general appointees, besides a number of the local ministry. All seemed to be alive in the work. We had rain during the conference, but that kept but few from attending that had gotten into the city.

The Clinton District reunion was changed from Taberville to the "East Park," in Eldorado Springs; but the same date, August 12 to 21. The proprietor of the park attended some of our meetings, and offered the use of his park free to hold our reunion in. Hence the committee thought it wise to make the change, since the park is right in the city of Eldorado, and the city accessible to the railroad.

I forgot to say that I met Brn. A. M. Baker and James T. Davis of the missionary force while at Thayer. They seemed to be alive in the work. Bro. Baker is district president and has been taking Priest Joseph Emsley with him to assist him in his work. Bro. Emsley is a young man of worth and very earnest in the work. He was desirous to do work for the Master during the remaining part of the conference year, so I appointed him to labor with Bro. Baker.

A thing of some note transpired while I was at Eldorado. As a goodly number of our Sunday-school workers were coming on train to the convention, they made things lively by singing some of the beautiful songs of Zion. The genial postmaster of Eldorado was on the train, and he asked the Saints to close up by singing McKinley's favorite "Nearer, my God, to Thee." This they did, the postmaster joining in. The next morning before daybreak, the postmaster was a corpse,—heart trouble the cause of his death. He was a man highly respected and a friend to the Saints.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. V. M. Goodrich, writing from New Philadelphia, Ohio, July 6: "I think our branch is in the best spiritual and working condition it has been in for years. One was added on last Sunday by confirmation, having been baptized a few days previously. Two more gave me their names for baptism next Sunday. These are children of the Saints, and largely results of the auxiliaries. We are hopeful and feel a determination to 'push the fight unto victory.'" This is a good word for the auxiliaries, and we are pleased to record that this is not an isolated instance of the good work being done by these auxiliaries.

Bro. J. T. Davis, president of the Spring River District, Kansas, Missouri, and Indian Territory, July 4, reports that Webb City, Joplin, Galena, Columbus, Pleasant View, Pittsburg, Kansas, and Miami, Indian Territory, have been officially visited during the quarter ended July 4, and that the district is in good condition, never better: "Last conference was the best we ever had—finances in better shape than ever before in the history of the district (so the Bishop says). We have a lively Sunday-school and Religio in nearly every branch. Patriarch Kemp lately made a tour of a part of the district and was well received."

We call attention to the letter of Bro. John Hawley in the letter department and suggest that the thought expressed by him, that the interdiction respecting the use of tithing in reference to Graceland should be removed, ought to receive consideration. Every one should know that in case it would be necessary to submit to the collection of the debt at law the Bishop would necessarily have to pay the amount out of the general funds of the church. The commanding of a work to be done by the church and then restricting the means by which the work should be done and paid for to the voluntary contributions of the people over and above the amounts they should pay to the general church fund, and at the same time to expect those payments to the general use of the church to reach the extent of their ability, was a good deal like the ancient task of making bricks without straw. Give it a consideration.

A card from Bro. C. C. Joehnk announces his arrival at Hamburg, Germany, June 18, in good health after a pleasant voyage.

W. D. Kettner, Black Gum, Indian Territory, writes that there are two families of Saints at that place who are trying to do the Master's will. He also says that it has been about two years and a half since they have heard a gospel sermon. Some of our missionaries in that locality might find an opening there.

We have received a prospectus of the Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas Railroad Company with general offices at Chanute, Kansas. Bro. Albert N. Hoxie's name appears in the list of officers as president and also among list of directors. The road when completed will have for its eastern and southern terminus Memphis, Tennessee, and will extend to new and undeveloped territory in Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas. We trust the brother will be successful in this undertaking.

Bro. S. K. Sorensen forwards a copy of the Boone News for July 6, in which appears an article entitled "Latter Day Saints, who are they?" over his signature. Our brethren have been quite successful of late in getting into print, and it is an excellent way to get our work before the public.

Reverend Clark Braden has come to notice again and is billed to lecture on "Mormonism unmasked" at Moorhead, Iowa. The handbill includes a list of debates held by Mr. Braden with "Josephites" and states that "Mormons honor him by calling him 'the arch enemy of the faith,' and confessing that he has done the faith more harm than all men living, or that have lived. Their standing formula in making and accepting challenges is, 'Any man except Clark Braden.'"

Attention is called to a request, in other columns, from the president of Graceland College. Those of the Saints who have the ability and have had experience in such work will do well to communicate with President Dewsnup. The work in Graceland will prove especially pleasant to persons of our faith because of the association with Saints in and around Lamoni, and they will be assisting in a really great and good work.

At Blackfoot, Idaho, Bro. J. E. Vanderwood has challenged the Utah Mormons to meet him in a public discussion. He writes that he expects Bro. Condit to join him and that he "is trying to keep the gospel flag waving."

GRACELAND NOTES.

Mrs. Sarah M. Sullivan of Biddeford, Maine, sends one dollar for Graceland, saying, "The light from Graceland will shine abroad to the isolated ones, making their hearts glad. How can Zion arise and shine without an institution of learning? Blessed be Zion!"

A brother from Persia, Iowa, writes as follows: "Inclosed find five dollars for Graceland College. I do not belong to your church, but have belonged to the Latter Day Saints since 1854. I believe in progression."

"It contributes greatly towards a man's moral and intellectual health to be brought into habits of companionship with individuals unlike himself, who care little for his pursuits, and whose sphere and abilities he must go out of himself to appreciate."—Nathaniel Hawthorne.

DISTRICT AND BRANCH REPORTING.

We call attention to the letter of Bro. I. N. White, in charge of Missouri, Kansas, and Southern Illinois, and commend a careful reading of it for the following reasons:

It is a fact that considerable carelessness or inattention upon the part of those having the work in charge in different places has resulted in an inadequate system or rather lack of an adequate system of reporting. Possibly there may have been a misunderstanding in places in reference to the subject of reporting. It is understood that the Presidency and the Twelve are to exercise a kind of central supervision over the different fields, districts, and branches, comprised in the work; the Twelve with reference to the missionary efforts being carried on; the Presidency in regard to branch and district welfare. It may appear to be a hardship in some instances that constant surveillance is exercised with regard to the mission-fields and the local work, but how can those having charge form a proper conception of what is being done or what may be needed to be done unless they are kept informed in regard to the matters not passing under their immediate personal observation, and how will they obtain this information unless those who are upon the ground and actively in charge and have personal knowledge shall take the pains to repeatedly and continually keep them advised as to how things stand and are going?

It surely can not matter to branch or district presidents what office in the priesthood the man in charge of the field may hold, so long as he has been put in charge by the church through the authority of conference, the appointing power. There should be no technical objection on the part of branch presidents reporting to the district conferences, or to the district president in case of neglect to report to the conferences; nor can we see why it should make any difference to the president of the district to whom he should report if directed so to do by the member of the Twelve who is the missionary in charge, it being well understood that the law provides that the Traveling High Council are an active presiding body in charge of the missionary work everywhere, and incidentally holding the right of interference in case of discovered wrong-doing, evil, or inadequate labor, either local or at large.

The presidency at the spring session of conference decided that for the benefit of the work intrusted to them it was necessary for them to be brought more directly in touch with the principal men in the field, and also the local district authorities, if by any possibility this could be reached. There is no other or more satisfactory method for the accomplishment of this purpose than that both those in missionary charge, whether general or local, and those in local district and branch charge, should keep the presidency posted in regard to what is going on in their localities and within their jurisdiction. We call attention to Bro. White's letter for the purpose of emphasizing to some extent the difficulty lying in the way of a complete understanding. Bro. White is endeavoring to systematize his efforts and those of his coworkers by securing reports of conditions and necessities at stated intervals. It may seem to some that these intervals are too frequent, involving an unnecessary amount of writing, but we think not. It would be very easy if furnished blanks for any man in local or missionary charge to state at once upon such blank in case no change had occurred requiring a different report from his last that there was no additional report to make, but if anything had occurred which it would be necessary for the missionary in charge or the presidency to know, it should be stated. Our organization can never be fully perfected until this matter of mutual interdependence is recognized, appreciated, and acquiesced in. It is not wise to trust to the idea that there must be a continued intervention of the spirit of revelation keeping tab upon current events transpiring within the observation and knowledge of living men who are associated together for the accomplishment of a mutual object and for mutual interdependent benefit. These living entities should work together without friction, without jealousy, keeping self and technicalities out of sight and accomplishing good together, as the law compacting their association certainly demands. So far Bro. White is the first in the field to bring this matter of reporting into a completed system; but even he confesses that he has not yet reached perfection, but is willing to continue in an understanding with his brethren to reach the desired end.

Those who may have objections to the frequency of the reports requested will do well to place themselves in the position of those having charge in their contemplation, and see if they would not prefer that something of the kind should obtain to which they now object. If it is an experiment, let it be tried until the determination whether for benefit or otherwise. If not effective, it may easily be dropped; if partial, it may be completed; if of advantage, it should be continued. Let us not be afraid of each other, but recollect that while we recognize the brotherhood of man and respect personal independence, we also recognize the rule of the Master and the Fatherhood of God, both of which require a partial renunciation of personal liberty to the obligations imposed by association with the body, which may require a recognition of and obedience to the self-adopted rules acquiesced in by us all as being the act of common consent. It may be true that a full common consent which means the absolute consent of each and every member personally obtained to any and every measure presented for the development and accomplishment of the work is that which may by some technicality be called common consent. This is an impossibility, and in a body formed like the church, by command of God, subject to rules and regulations which are necessarily adopted by representatives properly chosen and acknowledged, there must be the acceptance of the principle that what is accomplished by the majority of these representatives necessarily secures the common consent of all. In no other sense can there be reached the common consent of the people of the church. It was the case at Sinai when the law was read and the people acknowledged it by their voice; it was the case in the days of the Messiah himself when he chose and sent his ministers abroad; it is the case now, and will ever remain the case while the church exists as a propagandizing power, active, operative, and waiting for the coming of the Son of God. Until then, subject to his will as expressed in his revelations, let us labor together and so far as we can keep each other informed of what we are striving to do and the conditions by which we are surrounded, by a proper system of reporting. The things of which we can not take personal and material cognizance and which it may be essential for us to have a knowledge of will be revealed to us in their time, but the things which transpire within our consciousness we should be manly and courageous to take notice of and share the knowledge thereof with our fellows in labor.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER—KNOW THYSELF, O MAN.

SERMON BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
FEBRUARY 28, 1904.

One of the English poets has said, "The noblest study of mankind is man." And I believe that one of the apostles has written this statement, "Know thyself, O man." And perhaps the same apostle has written, "Study to approve thyself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

Two weeks ago I came with a message. I had previously thought of what I ought to say in reference to what was upon my mind; but I obeyed the scriptural injunction in reference to this morning's service, after hearing it announced yesterday afternoon that Joseph Smith would address the congregation at the morning hour—I have taken no thought as to what I should say until reaching the desk. And as I reflect upon the statement in which we are charged to take no thought as to what we should say, this having been given to the ministry a good many years ago, when they were expected to stand before kings and princes and give an account of the faith that was in them, and while we might think it would be an easy matter to face a king and answer there for any message that may have been intrusted to us by the King of kings, in some sense I would a good deal rather face a convocation of earthly kings than to face a convocation of stubborn rulers in an American republic, in which every man is stubborn in his own right.

These three texts that I have presented (however I am not going to tell you where they are; I tried to find one of them and failed) suggest this thought: that we really ought to know ourselves as individuals. And while I do not accept the popular theory in regard to conscience being the only safe guide to human conduct, from its faulty character, I am nevertheless pledged to take it in a limited or qualified sense. And while I do not accept Henry Ward Beecher's statement concerning it, that his conscience was a secondary affair, his judgment being first, and whatever his judgment decided his conscience approved, I believe nevertheless it is largely true; for it is evident that if we move from human predilections alone, we must necessarily be largely biased by our desires; and our conduct will partake to a greater or lesser extent of the nature of our desires; and we may be unfortunately constituted (or it may be fortunate for us in the human existence) that in the prosecution of what we desire our conscience does not always stand in the way. If it did I am afraid, speaking in reference to myself, that I might not always do exactly right. For my conscience would necessarily be more or less pliable, and lean me to this side in approval or in favor of that which I might desire, or to the other side in disapproval of that which might not meet my desire. And life being such a medley of contradictions to the most of us, it is a difficult thing always to determine just what a man ought to do. It is not always so difficult to determine what a man ought to say, as it is to understand what he ought not to say, especially a public man, in public places, to public audiences.

This apostle writing unto the brethren treats of some things respecting human conduct; that, notwithstanding we have been urged over and over again, from this pulpit, to the strictest observance of the things that are taught in the law, I must not in pursuing the thought that is in my mind omit to present: "Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art, that judgest thyself; for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself. For thou that judgest, doest the same things." Here is a plain human thought, a plain human judgment in reference to the conduct of others that ought to be well thought of by ourselves. If I, in looking out upon my neighbors, condemn certain lines of thought and speech and conduct, and by virtue of the imperfections within or the pressure without I suffer myself to drift into the same line of thought, the same line of speech, and the same line of conduct, I come under my own condemnation; whether that condemnation is just or not, it may not be my province to state. But sooner or later, whatever is thought, whatever is said, whatever is done, I must come under a judgment not subject to bias from those things which govern us in humanity. And it seems to me, when I feel most under the better influences of the gospel of the Son of God, that it is a wise thing for a man to withhold judgment in regard to his fellow men. And however much he may possibly think they are going astray, however widely they may differ from him in his opinions, it would be better for him to examine closely both them and himself, and then refrain from judgment; unless it so happens that he is necessarily placed in the seat of judgment before whom the culprit may be brought for examination, trial, and the verdict is to be given.

Let me read some of the things which the apostle has written, following the words, "For thou that judgest doest the same things": "But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth, against them which commit such things." The basis of all judgment; to be just, must be truth. It does not rest in the supposition of my mind to condemn my neighbor for any act that I think he has done, unless there is that in what he has done that is true, so far as the act itself is concerned. I may assume the judgment seat without justification. And nine tenths of the scandal moving in the neighborhood, nine tenths of the mean things that are said in the neighborhood are precisely without that character of justification. And I venture a proposition now, and I do it deliberately, in the language of the law, "with purpose and intent," and if that makes me a criminal, I am a criminal; if that makes me guilty, I am guilty and ready for judgment: that if the one who hears the scandal and the fault-finding, and the stricture upon personal speech and judgment, would offer to the individual making it, or uttering it, a white, clean sheet of paper, and pen and ink, or pencil, and demand that the person making the statement should put it in black and white, and sign his name to it, he would suddenly close his lips and would not put it in writing. I think that this is one of the tests that the apostle has given us in his statement, "Thou who judgest, doest the same things." And let me tell you, a reiteration of that which we hear against our fellow men is one of the easiest things to be repeated in all our experience, according to the history of the society in which we live.

It seems to me while we are enjoined to pay heed unto the law, that we ought to be just as diligent in doing the little things of the law as we are in seeking to do the great things of the law. For if we miss these smaller things, we are paying tithes of mint and rue and cummin, and leaving undone those things which may possibly prove to be the weightier ones after a while, when God judgeth according to the truth. And people who have fought so long against unjust recrimination from fellow believers in the mission of Jesus Christ, who have stood up so earnestly against misrepresentation, who have listened to, and been obliged to listen to, the most insidious, underlying, traducing lies against the foundation and principles of the church to which we belong, ought by all means to cultivate the fairest spirit that is possible for men to attain unto, and to keep clear of recrimination and retaliation, and those things that go to show that within our breasts rests resentment. One reason why we may possibly have so much of church contention here and there, amounting in some places to a division drawn so sharply that those upon that side will not venture upon this, and those upon this side will not venture upon that, results from the persistent fostering, within, the spirit of resentment. While I am not in favor of physical pugilism, I dislike mental pugilism just as much; I dislike to see any of my spiritual-minded brethren always ready to throw up their spiritual fists ready for a fight. I mean among themselves. I know that these missionaries that have been laboring in the world have been under the necessity of standing upon the defensive, not for themselves, but for the faith which they have espoused; for the faith which these men represent is dear to them, and they can not afford, as members of the church, as those who have been sent out as ministers, to remain silent when an opportunity occurs for them to put themselves and their faith right before the people. But they may do that and go about without having a philosophical and theological chip on their shoulders challenging somebody to strike it off.

We are gathered here this morning from the different parts of the stake, and I was a little surprised yesterday at listening to the number that is comprised in the stake. If I remember it rightly something like twenty-four hundred souls. I confess that I was surprised at the number. I wondered where they have all come from, and where they are all going, and what is to be the final result of this development. And as I look out around me, as you all do, and see the commotion that is in the world, I discover that there must be somewhere a spiritual resting-place for them who will serve God and Jesus Christ. And they must so represent within themselves, individually, the philosophy by which they are collected, and by which they expect finally to triumph as a collective body, that it shall reflect out from them. And while they sit in judgment upon themselves, they must do it with the understanding that by and by they shall stand before the august Judge, and they will be judged by the truth that is in them. And so I reason with you this morning, Do you think that you who judge your fellow men of the things of every-day life, and the things which you hear whispered in regard to them, you doing the same, do you think you will escape the judgment of God?

I may fail, myself, in judgment. I may judge myself more leniently than I ought to do. I may pass over with light sentence things in my thoughts, in my speech, in my conduct, which I might reprove in another, and do so because my conscience is at rest by false reasoning, by something that has put me off my guard, by something that holds my judgment biased. And until I am prepared by close study of the heart by the inspiration of the Spirit to sit in judgment with my conscience quiescent, or in the language of Henry Ward Beecher, approving what my judgment demands, I have not the right kind of a conscience, and I must get another.

This presentation of the gospel holds up a high standard for us. And as I once told a clergyman in discussing this proposition, whether conscience was the only safe guide to human conduct (and he was preparing himself to go on a mission to the heathen), I said to him, I am sorry for the heathen man. You take to him your Christianized conscience, or standard of conscience rather, and you propose to change his standard, but you can not change his conscience. You must bring his conscience to accord with the standard which you present before him, and you know that you yourself do not live in accordance with that standard which you go to the heathen to erect before him by which he is to be tried.

How is it with us this morning? Are our consciences heathenized? Do we rest secure in that quiescence of conscience that makes us approve what our desires are, or makes us disapprove of the things that our desires do not covet? I do not know what effect this position had upon this clergyman to which I refer; but one thing is certain, that immediately after, he quit preaching and went to selling goods, and did not take his contemplated mission.

It is a fact that the best conscience is that which is the best educated. It may be possible that in the discussion of the gospel economy, and in the contemplation of it, we lose the faculty of conscience, and secure in its place a definite character of judgment, highly active and acute, by virtue of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. If that be true we can afford to discard the conscience that we may have had in the world and accept this secondary nature, complete in itself, as a better guide to human conduct.

We take the Savior as the supreme standard. We can not say what his conscience was; but he intimates to us clearly that whatever the father's conscience was that was his conscience; and he has exhorted us to be like him, as he was like the Father. And if we take that to its conclusion, we must reach this position: that the Savior's conscience is our conscience, and his conscience is the conscience of the Father; and as a consequence we are one with both the Son and the Father.

But you will say to me, Now, Bro. Smith, that is a pretty difficult thing to attain unto. Well, it is no more difficult, it is no higher condition than I heard one of our brethren advocate here not a great while ago upon the subject, "Be ye perfect, as your Father in heaven is perfect." And he distinctly told us that until we did become perfect we would not reap the highest and best that is within the reach of man; that there must be an absolute perfection. Well, I knew then that I was not absolutely perfect, and I know that now. And according to my philosophy I can not be absolutely perfect until I have so far succeeded in bringing these fleshly desires into subjection that I may be a spiritual man, spiritualized according to the ethics of Christ as shown forth in the gospel of the Son of God. Well, are we reaching that? I believe there is an earnest effort on every side to accomplish that. It is true that we have spots in our vesture of charity. It is true that we have, I will not say malicious-minded persons, both men and women, who are more or less indifferent to the judgments they pass upon their fellow men and their surroundings, but there are those who are so awrapt with the peculiar incidents, or the peculiar qualifications incident to their own existence, that they are absolutely unable to see clearly and fairly what their neighbors are. They do not know themselves. And I have almost been inclined now and then to ask people what is the matter with their liver. That may be a homely phrase you may think, but it is a fact that a man with a diseased liver has diseased thoughts, unfortunately; and if his spiritual liver is diseased, he is worse off; and as a consequence he ought to be very careful how he lives. And I believe that is one of the reasons why God gave the Word of Wisdom, that we may have clearer, unjaundiced perception of our own qualifications and the conduct of our fellow men, the desires of our fellow men.

I believe that there are not five persons in this congregation—I may reduce it even to one, and I may reduce it further than that, for I do not know of one—who do not prefer to do right than to do wrong, if they know what right is. My experience with my fellow men, my observation, has taught me that one of the reasons why there is so much wrong-doing in the world is because there is so much ignorance in the world, and that men prefer to do right rather than wrong; and the reason why they do wrong is because they do not know exactly what right is. It is a difficult question. I remember a homely phrase expressed by a brother a few years ago in reference to the things which blind the eyesight of humanity, He took out of his pocket a silver dollar, held it up before his one eye, shut the other, and said, "I can not see." He said, That is emblematic; it is the almighty dollar that blinds the sight. It is reported that when Admiral Nelson had his great fight with the Spanish Armada the signal was flying from the signal ship for him to do something, and he having but one good eye shut that eye and looking abroad said, "I can not see the signal." The man who deliberately shuts his spiritual eye unto himself, and condemns his fellow men, according to the teachings of the apostle Paul, is doing precisely the same things. And if he holds before him the almighty dollar, and looking out upon the things of this world says, I can not see, in my judgment he is worse off, because, without knowing the truth, he deliberately shuts his eyes to its contemplation.

I may not have been preaching the gospel this morning; I did not two weeks ago,—I mean the first principles; but I believe that these things underlie the spiritual character of the Saint who has obeyed the first principles of the gospel. They are characteristic of the inner life of the man within the arch of the gospel of the Son of God, which is to be the grand, supreme test by and by, as I used to hear when I attended the Methodist Church when I was fifteen years old, when the Bible was shaken at the congregation and they were told that all men should be judged according to that gospel and condemned according to it, and I knew in my heart that neither the preacher who was presenting it then, nor hundreds and thousands like him, were preaching the gospel of the Son of God to the world, and yet they were thundering it out to me and a great many others, that we were to be brought into judgment and condemned by that gospel. You and I can not say that, because unto us has come the unspeakable light of the gospel of the Son of God, reflected from him by virtue of revelation, and unto us has come a better light, and we know, better than that man knew, what the gospel requires of us. It throws a different light upon human conduct. It lights up the world with a different kind of brightness than that old philosophy did. And you know, and I know, that God never will judge and condemn a man and consign him to that awful condition that used to be thundered at us years and years ago, until he has put within his reach the gospel by which he is to be educated, the law by which he is to be tried. And when he has done that his office-work has ceased. And when we obey it our office-work, so far as obedience to the principles is concerned, is done. Afterwards the living and walking in accordance with that light is another and a different thing. And these things that are spoken of which I have tried to bring to your minds this morning, are those within the line of human thought and human conduct by which we may acquire characteristics that will be considered grand in the world hereafter; and they ought to be considered grand while we are here.

Let us try it. Let me admonish you, especially you who are teachers, officers in the church, those who make light of the truth, those who make light of the characters of their neighbors, those who are anxiously condemning some portion of our efforts because they, through jaundiced eyes, see that that is not right among men, I charge you, if they make mention of these things in your hearing, ask them to write down the conduct spoken of, and of whom it is spoken, who it is that is guilty, and demand that they put their sign manual to it, in order that they may be dealt with according to the laws of our church organization. It will stop much of the scandal that may otherwise be sent abroad. You can not stop all of it. You can not control the tongues of the people, all of them. But there is one thing you can do, you can disarm the malicious intents and purposes, and the result that may be wrought by the circulation of such things, by just that simple rule.

I thank you for the kindness with which you have listened to me. I feel it a tribute, at least, to be listened to, after having preached to a congregation as long as I have in this place, with the quietude, and the attention you have paid, young and old. I have said that I had no reason to complain of the young people of Lamoni. I thank you for this token of respect. I feel that I am growing older; while I have the same intent and purpose of serving God as I always had, while under the inspiration of the Spirit I may feel as young as I ever did, I must put myself in the same crucible that I ask others to put themselves in, and avoid peevishness that comes with old age, and learn to grow old gracefully, and submit to the inevitable, going out of the spheres of usefulness in which I have had a standing, and allow the younger element, more active, more elastic in mind and in body, to come forward upon the stage of action and take the places designated by the fact that they are younger, and to do it without the feeling of malice or envy or the desire to stop those who are disposed to do good. I welcome every man who is finding a place in the ranks, and I do it with thanks to God that when the time shall come that I will be forced to quit, there are men in the ranks who are not only willing, but are strong and able, to maintain the fight unto the bitter end. And so we live, and grow better and wiser, and thank God while we are doing it.

MAILABLE PRINTED MATTER FROM 1800 TO 1845.

In a masterly discourse on the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith by Bro. J. F. McDowell, the speaker said that the opposers of the church had been loud in their claims that Joseph Smith was a very illiterate man, but in recent years some of the same enemies were energetically at work trying to persuade their auditors to believe that the reason the productions of this prophet, found in the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, as well as the Holy Scriptures commonly called the Inspired Translation, were in advance of the world religiously and scientifically, was not due to his being inspired of God to bring about the work accredited to him, but because he was a bright, energetic student of various scientific, literary, theological, and archæological works, and that it was from these books his profound wisdom and knowledge was gained. How wonderful the changes of our enemies! We welcome their new line of attack.

Elder McDowell was correct when he said it was very questionable if printed books were transmitted through the United States mails during those early times. Under those circumstances will the "antis" inform us how the young prophet kept in constant touch with the literary world, living, as he did, in the western wilds of New York State? Who will even attempt to answer?

I sent the following question to the postmaster-general which was answered April 15, 1904, by Honorable R. J. Wynne, acting postmaster-general: "Will you kindly inform me the year that printed books were allowed to be transmitted through the United States mails?"

The answer:

I find the first reference to magazines in the mails, in the Act of March 2, 1799, section 20, which is as follows: "Magazines and pamphlets, one cent a sheet, for not exceeding fifty miles; one and a half cents for over fifty miles and not exceeding one hundred miles; and two cents for any greater distance."

Under date of March 3, 1825, the following law was enacted: "Unbound journals of legislatures of the several States liable to the same postage as pamphlets. Memorandum written on a newspaper or other printed paper, pamphlet, or magazine and transmitted by mail to be charged with letter postage."

Section 30 of the same Act is, in part, as follows: "When mode of conveyance and size of mail will admit, magazines and pamphlets published periodically may be transported in the mail to subscribers, at one and a half cents a sheet for any distance not exceeding one hundred miles, and two and a half cents for any greater distance. And such magazines and pamphlets as are not published periodically, if sent in the mail, shall be charged four cents on each sheet for any distance not exceeding one hundred miles, and six cents for any greater distance. (Section 13 of this act defines a sheet to be four folio pages, eight quarto pages, sixteen octavo pages, or twenty-four duodecimo pages, or pages less than that of a pamphlet size or magazine, whatever be the size of the paper of which it is formed. The surplus pages of any pamphlet or magazine shall also be considered a sheet.)"

While there were several laws affecting the rate of postage on magazines and pamphlets, I do not find the word "book" in any of them, but on March 3, 1845, the following law was enacted, which, of course, includes unbound books: "Pamphlets, magazines, periodicals, and all other printed or other matter (except newspapers) unconnected with any writing, shall be charged with postage at the rate of two and a half cents for each copy sent, not exceeding one ounce in weight; and one cent additional for each additional ounce without regard to distance; and any fractional excess of not less than one half ounce above one or more ounces shall be charged for as if said excess amounted to a full ounce."

No, dear reader, the Seer of Palmyra did not produce the sacred books of this church by his own wisdom or from the wisdom and knowledge obtained from productions of mortal man. We claim they were indited by the Spirit of the blessed Lord; and every effort to throw discredit upon them and upon the great fundamental truths of this "marvelous work and a wonder," this church of the living God, will eventually bring shame and discontent to the opposer.

THE COMING OF CHRIST.

But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only. But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.—Matthew 24: 36, 37.

In regard to the above statement there are many of our Christian friends who use this text as a funeral sermon; and that it is in reference to death. But it is a mistake. It was or has been predicted from the beginning, since Adam fell, that man should die. Therefore, we know that we have to die sooner or later. In Adam all die; and in Christ all are made alive. Men very often know when they are about to die, especially in the midst of some disease, or when sentence of death is passed upon any individual. So we can see that the above text has nothing to do with death. We are told that some events are to happen at the coming of the Son of Man, exactly the same as in the days of poor old Noah. In the days of Noah they were getting married and giving in marriage; and we are told that is the way affairs are going to happen at the coming of Christ. So we can see at a glance that people are going to live when he comes.

We are told that Christ is coming to reign on the earth a thousand years; but when that reign will commence no one knows except the Father. Even the angels do not know the hour or the day. Therefore the quotation has no reference to death, but to his coming.

We are commanded to watch for the hour when our Lord shall come, but if people die they can not watch, so the idea in regard to death is erroneous. When our Lord does come there will be some peculiar circumstances to happen. We are told that two will be in a field, one taken and the other left. Two women, also, shall be grinding at the mill, the one taken and the other left. Our Savior illustrates with "the good man of the house." If he had watched, the thief would not have come to the house and his house would not have been broken up. Therefore, if it refers to death, how could the good man watch if death were to happen to him?

The Savior also commanded to be ready, "Because in an hour ye think not the Son of man cometh"; another proof that the coming of the Son of man has no reference to death.

We are told that Noah preached the gospel for one hundred and twenty years. He constructed an ark; and after telling the people of the destruction that would happen, they hearkened not unto him, except those of his own family, eight souls, who were saved by means of the ark. Undoubtedly they thought him foolish for building it, especially in a place so far from water. In like manner things are to occur at the coming of our Lord. He will even come unexpectedly to some of the Saints, as the flood came in the days of Noah. So our duty is to be alive in the work of God, for we are living in some of the perilous times that the Apostle Paul predicted should be, when men would love the pleasures of this world rather than God. Dear Saints, this is one of the greatest evils that can befall Latter Day Saints, especially after having the knowledge concerning the work.

THE SNOWY HERON.

Description—Snowy Heron (Egretta candidissima.) There is no difference in the plumage of the sexes, both of which are always pure white. Occipital (top of head) and jugular (lower throat) region with plumes. From the interscapular region (between the shoulders) grow a large number of "aigrette" plumes which extend to or beyond the tail and, when in perfect condition, are recurved at tip; lores (front of eye), eyes and feet yellow. Bill black, except at base, which is yellow; legs black, except lower portion behind, which is yellow. The adults after the breeding season and the immature birds do not have the aigrette plumes. Length from tip of bill to end of tail, not including plumes, varies from twenty to twenty-seven inches.

The Snowy Heron always breeds in colonies. Nest, a closely built platform of sticks, in rushes, bushes, or trees in swamps. Eggs, three to five in number, of a light greenish blue color.

Distribution. — All of temperate and tropical America between forty-one degrees north latitude on the Atlantic coast; forty-five degrees north latitude on the Pacific coast, and thirty-five degrees south latitude. After the breeding season, stragglers from the Southern States sometimes wander as far north as Nova Scotia and Ontario.

The American Egret (Herodias egretta) is almost twice the size of the Snowy Heron, its length being from thirty-seven to forty-one inches; it is also pure white, and both sexes have during the breeding season only a large number of interscapular plumes which extend beyond the tail. These plumes are straight, and not recurved as are those of its smaller relative.

The White Herons of the other parts of the world are very similar to those found on the American continent, even to the difference in size. Corresponding to the Snowy Heron in America, Garzetta garzetta is found in Southern Europe, across to China and Japan, south to the Burmese countries and the Indian Peninsula and Ceylon, Philippine Islands, Malay Peninsula, and the whole of Africa. A second small form, Garzetta nigripes, is found from Java throughout the Moluccas to Australia. The large forms, corresponding to the American Egret, are Herodias alba of Southern Europe, east to Central Asia, and south to Africa, the Indian Peninsula and the Burmese countries; and Herodias timoriensis, which is found from Japan and North China, south through the Malayan Archipelago to Australia.

The food of Herons consists of shrimp, small fish, aquatic insects, crayfish, and life found along the shores and in swamps. Economically, so far as known, they are neutral or harmless, but may prove to be highly beneficial when a scientific study of their food has been made.

The recent history of the White Herons is pathetic in the extreme, as it is a tale of persecution and rapid extermination. It was a sad day when fashion decreed that the nuptial plumes of these birds should be worn as millinery ornaments. Feathers and scalps, rapine and blood are the accompaniments of savage life, but better things are expected of civilization.

It is hardly possible that any women of the present day are unacquainted with all the horrible details of plume-hunting. The following pen picture of the horrors of the plume trade, drawn by Professor T. Gilbert Pearson, secretary of the North Carolina

Audubon Society, shows the work in all its bloody reality:

"In the tall bushes, growing in a secluded pond in a swamp, a small colony of Herons had their nesting home. I accompanied a squirrel-hunter one day to the spot, and the scene which met our eyes was not a pleasant one. I had expected to see some of the beautiful Herons about their nests, or standing on the trees near by, but not a living one could be found, while here and there in the mud lay the lifeless forms of eight of the birds. They had been shot down and the skin bearing the plumes stripped from their backs. Flies were busily at work, and they swarmed up with hideous buzzings as we approached each spot where a victim lay. This was not the worst; in four of the nests young orphan birds could be seen who were clamoring piteously for food which their dead parents could never again bring to them. A little one was discovered lying with its head and neck hanging out of the nest, happily now past suffering. On higher ground the embers of a fire gave evidence of the plume-hunters' camp.

"The next spring I visited this nesting site, but found only the old nests fast falling to decay.

"When man comes, slaughters and exterminates, Nature does not restore."

This story of a single Florida colony is the story of what has happened in all of Florida, the Gulf coast of the United States, along the Mexican and Central American coast, both on the Atlantic and Pacific sides, and has extended into South America. From the enormous numbers of Herons' plumes that are annually sold in the London feather market there is no doubt that plume-hunters are at work wherever the White Herons are found.

That Herons are rapidly becoming scarce and more difficult to obtain by the plume-hunters is shown by the difference in price in the raw material. Twenty years since, the cost per ounce was only a few dollars, now it is more than quadrupled. In circulars sent by New York feather dealers to plume-hunters in Florida during 1903, thirty-two dollars per ounce was offered for fine plumes. This not only indicates the rapidly increasing scarcity of the White Herons but also that some dealers are willing, in order to obtain the plumes, to offer special inducements to hunters to violate laws enacted for the protection of these birds.

The much-sought-after plumes are worn by the Herons only for a very limited period during the year, that is, in the breeding season. Unfortunately, during that time the Herons gather in colonies; whether this is for protection or is merely social is not known. During the remainder of the year they are wild and wander over large districts, when it is impossible for plume-hunters to kill them in quantities that would afford pecuniary returns. However, during the breeding season the habits of these unfortunate birds change entirely, and with the growth of the parental instinct they lose all sense of fear or wildness and the hunter has little trouble in securing his victims. The death of the parent birds entails the destruction of the helpless nestlings by the painful and lingering method of starvation.

Mr. Chapman says, in his Birds of Eastern North America, "The destruction of these birds is an unpleasant subject. It is a blot on Florida's history." The blood-stain is not on Florida alone but may be found in every part of the world. A few years more of reckless slaughter during the breeding season and the White Herons will be classed among the extinct birds, the number of which is far too rapidly increasing.

Dealers often state that aigrettes are manufactured, but this is not so; man has never yet been able to imitate successfully these beautiful plumes; all that are offered for sale have been torn from the backs of the smaller White Herons. Even the stiff plumes, or "stubs," are not manufactured but are the plumes of the larger species of White Herons.

Heron's plumes are often sold as "ospreys"; this is simply another trade name used to disguise the fact that they are Heron's plumes: the Osprey of science is the Fish Hawk, which produces no plumes of any kind.

Both aigrettes and stubs are dyed various colors, especially black; however, no matter what is the tint of the plume, its original color when on the back of the Heron was white; the artificial color is merely in response to the dictates of fashion.

It is conceded that the sale of aigrettes from American birds is prohibited, but it is claimed that there are no laws that prevent the sale of imported goods. Granting that this may be the case, how is the buyer to tell whether the goods are from American or Old World Herons? The most expert ornithologists can not separate the plumes after they are taken from the birds.

The wearing of aigrettes, or plumes from the White Herons, whether native or foreign, has now become a question of ethics which every woman must decide for herself. It matters not a whit where the plume comes from, the fact remains the same that the woman who wears one is party to a cruel wrong and the plume itself becomes a badge of inhumanity and is no longer a thing of beauty.

"Mark how the mother lulls to slumber
Her new-born babe with tend'rous love
And guards her treasure from above!"

The word mother is the most sacred of all names, and motherhood is the closest of all human ties. Oh, mother! when you nestle your little one to your loving breast and look into the eyes that reflect the mother-love shining from your own, do you not sometimes think with an involuntary shudder of the sorrow and grief it would be were the child to be taken from you? Or, still worse, if your tender care were to be removed from the helpless infant? While this thought is still with you, extend it to the bird-mother, for she surely has for her offspring the same tender love that you have for yours; she has the same affection, the same willingness to face danger to protect what is to all mothers dearer than life itself. Oh, mother! will you again wear for personal adornment a plume taken from the dead body of a bird-mother, the plume that is the emblem of her married life as the golden circlet is of your own, the plume that was taken from her bleeding body because her motherhood was so strong that she was willing to give up life itself rather than to abandon her helpless infants? Whenever you are tempted in the future to wear a Heron's plume, think for a moment of your own motherhood, and spare the bird-mother and her little ones.—William Dutcher, Chairman National Committee of Audubon Societies, in Bird-Lore, official organ.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Program for August Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

THEME, THE HOME.

Hymn, No. 108, Saints' Hymnal; roll-call of members; response, a scripture text referring to the subject of marriage; five-minute papers, "Opportunities for imparting religious instruction in the home;" "Oversight and direction of children's reading;" "The relation of the home to society and the state;" each paper to be followed by brief discussion; discussion of papers from Home Column with the aid of questions given below; (preparation for answering these questions to be made at home;) business; hymn, No. 81; dismissal prayer.

Questions on papers, "Half hours with parents," (to follow in Home Column):

Is the home of human or divine origin? By whom and for what purpose was it instituted? What was the origin of the Sunday-school? Is a command from the Lord always necessary for every good work? (Doctrine and Covenants, section 58, paragraph 6.) What did the Lord reveal to Moses in regard to his glory? (Doctrine and Covenants, section 22, paragraph 9.) What can be said of the agency of the home in bringing this to pass? What reason does the Lord give for choosing Abraham as the father of the family in which all the nations of the earth should be blessed? What commandment was given to Israel through Moses concerning the imparting of religious instruction to the children? For what cause did the Lord judge the house of Eli?

What statement is made by well-informed persons concerning the extent of religious instruction in the homes of our land? Have we any cause to fear a similar lack in the church? Where, then, are our children receiving religious instruction? What is the most important qualification for a Sunday-school teacher? In what regard should the Sunday-school and its faithful workers be held? What is the relation of the home to the Sunday-school? What ought it to be? What help is the home in duty bound to extend to the Sunday-school?

Half Hours With Parents and Teachers.—No. 7.

A SERIES OF FAMILIAR TALKS INTENDED FOR USE IN LOCALS AND HOME CLASSES.

THE RELATION OF THE HOME TO THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

To the casual observer this subject may appear a very simple, perhaps unimportant one. We are so accustomed to seeing our own, and the children of our neighbors, flocking to the Sunday-school upon each returning Sabbath day, as scarcely, if ever, to give a thought to the relationship existing between the homes from which they come and the school to which they go.

In order, therefore, to an intelligent understanding of this subject, it becomes necessary to consider the origin of each, also the authority by which each was established, and the purpose had in view in the establishment. It is only by doing this that we can fully understand their relationship to each other and the measure of responsibility resting upon each.

In examining the origin of the home, it becomes necessary to assume that the home embraces the marriage relation and is to all intents and purposes synonymous with the family. This being true, we find that the home or family was not created by man, neither were its relationships or obligations of human origin. In brief, to use the words of another, "The family is not created by the voluntary act of those who live in this relationship. It was given us, not made by us. And even those who found a new family are rightly said to enter into the marriage relation, not to constitute it between themselves. It is something which already existed for them—by the creative will of God, and is thus established in the very nature of things."

This proposition is so self-evident, at least with those familiar with the word of God, that quotations are almost superfluous, hence I will refer you to but two: "And I God created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them. And I blessed them and said unto them, Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth."—Genesis 1: 29, 30, I. T.

Here we find the origin of the home.

But the work of God, which was perfect in the beginning, was soon corrupted by fallen man. Therefore, when Jesus came in the authority of the Father, and enunciated such doctrines and principles as condemned the scribes and Pharisees, they thought to entangle him and find a shelter for themselves behind changes which Moses had wrought; and they asked him, "Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?" Jesus answered, "Have ye not read that he who made man at the beginning, made him male and female, and said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother and cleave unto his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? Wherefore they are no more twain but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together let not man put asunder."—Matthew 19: 3-6, I. T.

Words are not necessary after this to show the divine origin of the home and its existence from the very beginning. Not only this, but that it is an institution so powerful, so far-reaching in its scope and influences, either for good or evil, that its God-ordained and laid foundation is eternal and unchangeable so long as the earth endures.

I have not time in a brief paper such as this necessarily must be, nor indeed do I deem it necessary to the purpose had in view, to enter into the history of the modern Sunday-school. It is claimed by some writers that at an early day schools of a similar character existed among the Jews, but while this is most likely true, the modern Sunday-school is the outgrowth of philanthropy, and traces its origin to Robert Raikes, a printer of Gloucester, England, born in 1735.

His heart was touched by the condition of the children of the poor of his native town, and he used a portion of his own small income to hire a few women to gather some of these children into their homes on the Sabbath day and there instruct them in the Bible. This man was moved upon by the Spirit of God, which influences all to a greater or less extent, according to the desires of their hearts, to do right in the sight of the Lord, and who dares answer the amount of good his work has accomplished? It will never be known, until eternity reveals it.

Our own Sunday-school came into existence in much the same way. Men and women, moved upon by God's Spirit to do good, not waiting for a commandment from the Lord or the church, gathered the children together in private houses, or places of public worship, and there undertook to instruct them in the word of God.

In time the Lord, through his prophet, acknowledged their efforts and promised a blessing to those who continued faithful therein.

Our inquiry, then, as to the origin of the home and the Sunday-school reveals to us this difference: the home came into existence by the direct creative act of God himself, the Sunday-school through the desire implanted in the heart of man, by the Spirit of God, to do good.

Having now, very briefly, but I trust sufficiently for my purpose, examined the origin and the authority by which the home and the Sunday-school were established, it is necessary to ask as to the purpose had in view in founding the home, as well as the laws and responsibility of those who have entered into the family relationship and established homes of their own. When I come to inquire the purpose had in view, I find the question as deep as eternity and as far-reaching as the utmost limits of its endless cycles. And for this reason I prefer God should answer in his own words.

In the revelation given to Joseph Smith in June, 1830,—the same used as a preface to the Inspired Translation,—the Lord in talking with Moses says: "The heavens they are many and they can not be numbered unto man, but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine; and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words, for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."

And just here—here where a faint conception dawns upon my soul of the purpose for which man was created, the destiny stretching out before him, the knowledge which this declaration reveals to me, that this ultimate destiny of man is to constitute the glory of God himself—I feel like ceasing any further investigation into this question and saying, Who is equal to this matter? This home, this family relationship which is as one of the pillars of eternity itself and the laws of which are coexistent with the very beginning of all things, who shall define or analyze its relationship, its responsibility? Who shall trace to its constantly violated and broken laws, the sin, suffering, and misery from which obedience to those laws alone can free and save it? For the Lord has said to his people in this last dispensation: "That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself—can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8.

By the term law we understand the expression of God's will in regard to any matter. The matter now under consideration is his will in regard to the home, and the language used is so plain that it is not possible for any one to misunderstand it.

The family having been established, in time, God chose from all the nations of the earth one man to become the father of a family and the founder of a nation in whom all the nations of the earth should be blessed; and the angel of the Lord said concerning this man, Abraham: "For I know him that he will command his children and his household after him and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he has spoken of him."

When Abraham had passed away the Lord spake to Moses concerning the law which he had given to his descendants, saying: "These words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house and when thou walkest by the way and when thou liest down and when thou sittest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thine house and upon thy gates."—Deuteronomy 6: 6-10.

Time passed on, and Eli arose in Israel to minister as a priest at God's altar. But the sons of Eli did great evil in the sight of the Lord, and their father, though he reproved them for their wickedness, failed to restrain them. Then the Lord spake to Samuel saying: "I will perform against Eli, all things which I have spoken concerning his house. When I begin I will also make an end. For I have told him that I will judge his house for ever for the iniquity which he knoweth; because his sons made themselves vile and he restrained them not. And therefore I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifices nor offering for ever."—1 Samuel 3: 12-15.

Here, then, we find the law governing the imparting of religious instruction, also the obligations of positive restraint in evil-doing, and connected with this, as with all other law, the penalty for violation. God made choice of Abraham to do the work which he did because he knew that he would command his children and his household after him and when that family had multiplied into a mighty host, he gave strict commandment through Moses to the people concerning the instruction of their children in the law of the Lord, and when this law was violated, though the violator was a priest at God's altar, the Lord swore that neither by sacrifice nor offering should the transgression be purged, but the house of Eli should be judged for ever for the sin which the father knew, and while he had rebuked it he had not restrained.

That no such purpose, laws, or responsibility have any existence for the Sunday-school must be self-evident to the most casual observer. What, then, is its relationship to the home? This, however, I think will be better appreciated after a brief glance at the condition of things as they exist to-day in our own country and church. From our public schools, which have intrusted to their care some sixteen million boys and girls, the Bible, as well as all religious instruction, is excluded. There are a comparatively few denominational schools scattered here and there throughout the country, in which religious instruction is given, but these are rapidly being displaced by the larger universities and colleges in whose curriculum no place is found for the Bible or religious instruction. The church, the home, and the Sunday-school, then, are almost the entire dependence of our country for the means of imparting religious training to the young.

Ruts in Sunday-School.

That ruts exist is a fact, but what are the causes; to what extent do they exist, and what remedy shall we offer?

Numerous causes are found by looking. Among them are idleness, tardiness, indifference, and, last but not least, sameness. Idleness causes deep ruts, sameness causes deeper ones. That it is much easier to get into-ruts than to get out of them is another fact. We are sometimes too easily satisfied; too willing to smoothly glide along the same old way one year after another simply because it is easier.

Do we derive the benefit we should from attendance at these conventions? Is not that teacher voted a failure who never has any change of thought or expression to present to the class other than that presented in the Quarterly? Do you not think those officers deep in ruts of "sameness" who never have any new features or plans for the advancement of the school? Do we put forth the proper effort "to come up higher before him"?

The plan of salvation was given that man might be fitted to dwell with God and angels; hence every power should be used to present it in the most truthful and pleasant manner. This gospel contains sufficient for the advancement of the most exacting through countless ages. While willing and anxious to be taught by the influence of the Holy Spirit, abundance will be given for all progress we are able to make during this life; and if true that a record is kept, will we not be rewarded accordingly?

We must advance if we live up to the privileges in the gospel. Paul says, "Let us go on to perfection." And to attain that condition requires action on our part. Effort brings success.

We sometimes forget the proper requirements for the spiritual development of the minds of the children. We should observe the "law of variety" and "avoid routine work—opening and closing the school in the same way—using the same illustrations—and making the same applications, grow tedious however good they may be."

Too much heavy food becomes repulsive and retards bodily growth. Excess of solid study dulls the mental powers, and dwarfs in a measure the spiritual development. The mind needs recreation. Diversion sharpens the "wits," causing greater activity of mind, though it is just possible too many changes may be had and we fall in one of the numerous ruts.

All know the study hour in Sunday-school is all too short for the live teacher. And, by diligent study, we should make the most of that hour. A few facts clearly stated prove of more lasting good than a skimming over of many. Review frequently; indeed one can scarcely review too frequently. We sometimes let our lessons pass, as do the days, never to be recalled.

Since "the children of to-day are the church of to-morrow" no effort should be spared to fit them to occupy successfully. We trust we express the sentiment of all, when we say we need better teachers, and that we can and will improve. Sometimes teachers are chosen not because they are fitted for the work, but to fill vacancies.

Should the district adopt the plan of normal work, and each school should organize a normal class better equipped teachers could be chosen. And the dignity and importance of the work in Sunday-school demand that its teachers shall be well informed in the word which they impart. We believe that this would lead us out of old ruts on lines of advancement, and we would then recognize it as one of the "helps."

We should exert our mental faculties after coupling them with much prayer for inspiration, and that the "Holy Spirit will take the things of the Father and show them unto us."

May we that attend this convention be enthused, and carry back to our respective schools ideas that shall enable us to pass out of the old ruts and travel in new and progressive paths dotted with flowers of truth and purity. LOU G. MANN.

For Little Sioux convention.

Choice, Not Force.

Count on God's wisdom and faithfulness. He will do what must be done. This is sometimes far less than his children think ought to be done. In their haste they would like to see bad men made good by force, made to do right in spite of inclination. God values too highly right choice on the part of men to find any such "must" useful to his purposes.—Selected.

"I have gathered me a posey of other men's flowers, and only the thread that binds them together is mine own."

"It is a parent's privilege, and it is a parent's duty, to make his children, by God's blessing, to be and to do what they should be and do, rather than what they would like to be and do."—Trumbull.

Honor Rightly Viewed.

Ambition is a God-given attribute, and is not to be repressed, only to be rightly directed and love-inspired. The desire merely to be seen occupying some conspicuous place is selfishness. Only when one can see the honor of the high place, not in the fame it will give him, but in the perfection of the service he can render in that place—only when he can take it or leave it, saying, "Not my will, but thine, be done,"—is his ambition worthy. Ambition exalted into aspiration and then laid on the altar of love, love for God and love for man, makes one fit to be king or president or teacher or preacher or leader of any kind.—Selected.

Simple Truths for Children.

Children are naturally teachable and naturally practical in applying what they learn. Simple truth is best for them. To exaggerate or to put before them the impossible as the desirable or as the only standard of good, is to bring them to discouragement as they try to live up to their beliefs. . . . That teaching which bears upon things within the range of children's ability is a prop and a support. . . . Only that teaching which is applicable to actual situations can be helpful to the young.—Selected.

The Sunday-School Lesson for July 17, 1904.

THE SENIOR LESSON SKETCHED.

It is based upon 1 Peter 1: 3-7.

In connection with Peter's statement in verse 3 that the saints had been begotten again, the teaching of Jesus to Nicodemus is cited to show that we must be born of water and of the Spirit of God. Peter's own teaching on the day of Pentecost is also cited.

The language of the memory verse is introduced to show that to be born of the Holy Spirit is equivalent to receiving the promise of entering into the celestial kingdom of God. This, of course, is upon the condition that we follow the Spirit as our guide in the way of truth that leads to God.

Peter writes in the lesson text of a lively hope had by the saints of an entrance into an incorruptible inheritance, that is now being reserved in heaven but which will be revealed in the last time.

In connection with this, the lesson shows that John the Revelator saw a holy city come down from heaven after the earth was made new; it also shows that the Doctrine and Covenants declares that, in a future time, the earth will be crowned with celestial glory and will be the home of those entitled to enter into the celestial kingdom.

These are the central thoughts of the lesson, and we suggest that, in class, the time should not be so spent as to prevent reaching the latter part of the lesson, for many good points of the lesson are there.

Notice in particular the comments on verse 5; it is important that we should realize the necessity of exerting ourselves in order to gain the undefiled inheritance of which Peter wrote.

MEMORIZING.

There was a time in Sunday-school history when memorizing was, perhaps, carried to an extreme, when the time in Sunday-school was nearly, if not quite all, spent in reciting verses or even chapters of scripture, so that little remained for explanation of that which had been memorized.

It is possible now that many of us are going to another extreme in not requiring anything to be memorized.

It is a good thing to know the exact wording of important passages of scripture, and it is possible to acquire much of this exact knowledge of the word of God without undue effort.

It will require, however, a steady effort and time. If the golden texts and memory verses were memorized each Sunday by senior and intermediate scholars it would be a small task compared with what was common in many Sunday-schools of the past, but at the end of a year, the scholar would find himself possessed of a goodly number of choice passages of scripture, worth knowing accurately.

How many schools are doing anything of this kind?

SECOND PRIMARIES

can easily memorize their golden texts. They have no memory verses given with their lessons.

In our second primary room in Lamoni we have adopted the following plan which works quite successfully: On the first Sunday of this quarter, the superintendent wrote on the board the golden text of the day. This is the way it appeared on the board:

1. "Thou — I — thee."

On the second Sunday, the board contained the following:

1. "Thou — I — thee."

2. "Mine elect — my — and — not their —."

Next Sunday the following will appear:

1. "Thou — I — thee."

2. "Mine elect — my — and — not their —."

3. "I, John, saw the — —, New —, coming down — — out of —."

Each Sunday the children read the golden texts from the board, and some are permitted to try to say them alone. This drill is kept up all through the quarter, and at the end, on review day, a list is made of the names of those children who are able to say the texts of the quarter.

The list is tacked up on the wall until the end of the next quarter when a new one is prepared. A child receives a star for each quarter that he knows his golden texts, and when he has four stars his name is written on a lithograph Roll of Honor that hangs on the wall.

Many children take a keen interest in learning their golden texts. The number who do not try is very small.

One little girl who spent seven quarters in the second primary room did not fail in all that time to have her golden texts, and there are many others who have done remarkably well for little children.

Many children are very willing to do such things as this, but they need direction.

Do not spend much time in reading in class. Talk to the pupils and encourage them to talk to you.

Mother, has your boy learned his Sunday-school lesson yet this week? If not, see that he does it before Sunday comes.

Second primary teachers, encourage your older pupils to memorize the lesson theme. In it is the gist of the lesson.

Some schools introduce the intermediate test exercise in their review of the lesson. What do you do with it?

A certain teacher had a restless little boy in her class. As she sat down one morning to begin the lesson, she cast about in her mind how to proceed. She knew that, if she held the attention of the restless lad, she would not have trouble in teaching the lesson. She knew also that, if she did not interest him, his restlessness would seriously disturb the peace of the whole class.

She had hardly mentioned the subject of the lesson when he burst out, "O, I know the whole story. I can tell it all."

Seizing the opportunity, she said, "Well, that is just what you may do. You tell the story, and we will all listen, and when you tell it wrong or leave anything out, we will tell you of it."

In that way the lesson began, and as the story proceeded, the teacher and other boys talked with the story-teller, correcting his version or adding to it as became necessary. All took part in the lesson, and the restless boy was kept busy.

Graceland College.

Editors Herald: We will for talk's sake call Graceland a child that had an untimely birth. Why I think it untimely is, It was in the womb but one hour or less, which I think would be untimely.

When this subject was sprung in conference we did not sit down and count the cost, but we said, by our resolution, that we would build. The moment the child was born a resolution was framed by a man, that the Bishop should not feed the child a mouthful of tithing. We knew all the money of the church was the tithing and freewill offering; but we said by our vote that the Bishop should not pay a cent to that child. When we said he should not pay tithing to that baby we virtually said we would not build, because the church money was cut off by that act. It was not long till the child had a big load on his back. We saw at once the church was unable to take it off, because our money as a church was cut off. Then the people were solicited and committees were appointed to collect means.

I hope the last suggestion of the Bishop will take the load off that child's back; and should we succeed in unloading the poor boy, I am ready to help do away with that resolution that the Bishop should not pay to Graceland any tithing. Let us as a church next spring put that resolution out of the way and let the Bishop feed that child. I think the baby has been fed by individuals long enough. It has not tasted a mouthful of its parent food yet.

I want to see that debt cancelled; then I want to see the church take its offspring from the people and feed it, then all will be well.

I think it will be some time before we all see eye to eye on all points of law as well as the building of colleges. When the Lord said to us, The college debt should be paid, we knew that before he said it, but our money as a church was cut off. I think there are some who stand where I do, but they will be few, and we may be wrong; but I want the church to see where I stand.

I am glad to say I am grounded firmly upon what is written by inspiration.

JOHN HAWLEY.

RAVENSWOOD, Missouri, June 26, 1904.

DOW CITY, Iowa, July 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: While laboring at Lanesboro, Auburn, and other points recently I was pleased to note the disposition of the Saints to attend and assist in services, though they are few in number and badly scattered. Surely the Lord will bless those who are willing to sacrifice for the good of his cause, and the salvation of souls; and the consistent and persistent efforts of those who labor to establish his righteousness in the earth will be recognized and blessed of God. "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."—Revelation 14: 12.

The effects of example preaching as manifest on the part of those who are "called to be saints" is easily deserved by those who labor as officers and ministers in the church of Christ. No preaching reaches farther or has a more lasting effect upon the hearts and minds of the children of men. It is that which helps to make us "living epistles read and known of all men," testifying to their souls that we are the disciples of Christ indeed. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." Love makes us good and kind and true, gentle and forbearing, yet courageous and brave. True love is manifested by "a meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of God, of great price." Those who know the gentleness, long-suffering, and patience of Christ know in part at least what was meant by Christ when he said: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

As we look up to the example of the great Teacher "sent down from heaven" we wonder how it is possible for us to follow in his footsteps and are led to say, Without divine help it is impossible. But as the Holy Spirit expands the mind and enlarges the heart and inspires new hope it seems to be possible and the heart overflows with gratitude to God. And as God by his Spirit shows us the glory of the celestial world the yoke rests lightly upon our shoulders, and we feel the divine hand helping us to bear our loads, and victory seems certain and salvation a realized fact.

This sunshine of the Spirit
Is in my soul to-day
It bears its testimony,
And leads me on the way.

It parts the veil asunder
And heaven comes in view;
It helps me follow Jesus,
And love his will to do.

I hear the angels singing,
Their songs both rich and rare;
I see the crown of glory
That may be mine to wear.

I have been informed that a number were baptized by Elder D. M. Rudd at Gallands Grove last Sunday, though I did not learn how many. Yesterday, by request of Bro. J. L. Butterworth, I baptized Sr. Maggie Lyman who came down from Dennison for that purpose, but it was nearly a case of watering, so far as the writer was concerned. She is a granddaughter of Uncle John Rudd, and we feel that the Lord has given the increase, both here and at the "Grove." Mr. Lyman was kind enough to drive down with his wife in order that she might follow the dictates of her conscience by obeying the gospel and we trust the good Spirit may lead him to follow in the near future.

The Fourth was very quiet at Dow City as the neighboring towns celebrated, and the most of our citizens were entertained at Denison.

In gospel bonds,

PACKARD, Iowa, July 4, 1904.

Dear Herald: The Saints of Packard are rejoicing. They have a new church building twenty-four by thirty-six nicely furnished and seated with chairs, which they are to dedicate July 24. Dedicatory services will be in charge of Brn. F. A. and F. M. Smith. That is one thing that makes us rejoice. Another is that the Saints are in such good spiritual condition, that brotherly love is so manifest among us, now, that there is a prospect of addition to our number in the near future, and of greater blessings in store for us if we are but faithful and diligent. We wish to ask all the Saints who can, to come and worship with us on dedication day. We will have an all-day meeting with a picnic dinner in the grove near church. Packard is in Butler County on the Rock Island Road.

Yours in the one faith,

FRED B. FARR.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, June 29, 1904.

Saints' Herald: I have returned home from a two month's labor in the Indian Territory. One C. Stetson, Baptist, came to Wilburton in May and assailed the work. I had been called there to see after him. We had six nights lively debate, the conference immediately following the debate. We had Bro. A. H. Smith with us to aid and assist, which resulted in great good. Since the debate and conference several baptisms occurred. Two Baptists were baptized just a few days before I left. The Wilburton Branch is growing.

According to agreement with C. Stetson I went to Haileyville, Indian Territory, June 13, to be ready for our debate to begin on June 16, in the Baptist Church. My opponent failed to come, but wrote me he was in a flood of water, his farm partly washed away, and he could not get there. He asked me to postpone to some future time. I returned to Wilburton, after a series of meetings at Haileyville. I preached twice on Sunday for Bro. George Montague, who is presiding over the Wilburton Branch and the district. He is getting quite aged, but wants to be active and do all he can for the work.

I aimed to make it to Miami by the 25th of June to begin my debate with the True Followers on June 27, but received a telegram from wife to come home at once. I took first train I could get north, and arriving home found Mrs. Erwin very poorly, needing me very much at home. I sent Bro. Briggs a letter stating I could not meet my debate at Miami and to get Bro. Smart or some one to meet it.

Indian Territory is a fine field for work at present—a great demand for preaching. Would like to be in my field at work, but can not leave home and family now; will as soon as I can.

In bonds,

Editors Herald: On my arrival home from General Conference, I found our rooms rented, which only gave us till the first of May to vacate. I immediately began packing our household goods preparatory to moving East. In order to properly close up my work in the district, I stored our goods till I was ready to start. I was permitted to visit all the branches, to whom I tried to administer counsel and encouragement, and was blessed in return. On account of district conference convening a little earlier than usual, I also had the pleasure of attending this, and enjoyed the peaceful influence of God's Spirit that prevailed to such a marked degree at this gathering. The branches were well represented. The spirit of love and unity manifest was certainly encouraging, and bespeaks, for the district, better times ahead.

We had the pleasure, too, of leading six precious souls down into the waters of baptism. May the Good Spirit be theirs, and enable them to endure. I have spent so many years in the Northeastern Illinois District that in parting in seemed almost like parting with my own family. In fact some of them appear as dear to me as my own children. I was glad, therefore, to leave them in charge of so able and good a shepherd as Elder F. M. Cooper, their district president.

I arrived in Brooklyn on Saturday evening, June 4. Stopped off two days on my way at Niagara Falls, where I was made welcome by the Saints and had the pleasure of administering the word to a number who gathered at the house of Sr. Wahl's. Only a small body of Saints here, but they are in earnest and full of zeal, which speaks well for the future work in this place. I met with the Saints in Brooklyn, Sunday, June 5, and was pleased to observe a marked improvement in conditions and surroundings since the last time I was here. They now have a neat church of their own, capable of seating about two hundred, located in a good neighborhood and of easy access to street-cars from different parts of the city. The church is carpeted with fine brussels carpet, and handsomely seated with pews. The ventilation is about as near perfect as any church I have seen. And then, too, there is a sense of order, neatness, and cleanliness about the entire building that speaks well for those who have it in charge. They have a nice company of young people and a good choir, but best of all they have some good workers. No doubt there are some drones, as there are in all branches, and there are doubtless many things that can be improved; but thus far we have been looking for the good things and have not been disappointed in finding them, and sufficient to encourage us in outlook. The congregations have not been very large, and but few strangers attend. Some tell me there has been a falling off since I came. I console myself, however, that it is not my preaching that has driven them away, for they have not been out to hear me. In large cities there seems to be a tendency to drop off in attending meetings during the summer months. I am led to wonder, sometimes, whether it is really the hot weather or the many Sunday attractions. I do not want to hurt any one's feelings, but it seems to some of us that a person's spirituality is not very much alive when he spends the Sunday at Coney Island in preference to the Lord's house. We trust none of our members do that, but we have been led to wonder what so many members do with themselves on Sunday, when so few come out to meeting except in the evening. There is a wonderful power in habit. We can form either good or bad habits. A bad habit to fall into is staying away from meeting. I rather doubt the propriety of expecting every member to spend all day Sunday in church, but all should try to spend a part of the day there, because our happiness depends upon our spiritual as well as our physical wants being supplied. Otherwise we can not grow.

We seem to be favored in securing pleasant living apartments. We have rented three rooms in a nice, clean neighborhood, only ten-minute car ride to the church. We have been so busy since we arrived getting our household things together and properly arranged, that we have hardly had time to get our hearings yet. But thus far we have only met with kindness, and think we shall like our mission. It is a large and important field. May the Lord enable us to make our work a success.

Editors Herald: The weekly visits of your valuable paper are hailed with delight by me. Being isolated from branch privileges and not having the company of the Saints to enjoy, I appreciate its pages much more than I would otherwise, and by reading the many letters from those of like precious faith I can keep posted as to the onward march of this great latter-day work. For truly this is a marvelous work and a wonder compared with the many institutions of men. When we take into consideration the dealings of God with the people in days past and gone, how he invariably kept them posted as to their duty, and led them on, preparing their hearts and minds in order that they could enjoy the many blessings that should flow through obedience to his mandates; and again when we compare the work of God in the material universe with that wonderful plan of human redemption perfected by our Lord and Master while on earth, I am content in the belief that the one is just as fixed and as eternal as the other, and that all will serve the purpose intended by the all-wise Creator. Reasoning from a hypothesis of this kind, I am of the opinion that it does not lay within the power of finite mind to change or improve upon the production of the infinite. Therefore if sowing of the gospel seed nineteen hundred years ago produced certain kinds of fruit, we are forced to the conclusion that the same kind of seed sown to-day will produce the same results.

Having these thoughts pass through our mind, with the many evidences I have had since embracing the gospel as restored by the angel, I am confirmed when I read the statement made use of by the Apostle Peter, when at the house of Cornelius, wherein he says, "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but that in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him."

Well, if I am not careful I will be writing a discourse in defense of this latter-day work, instead of telling the Saints of the Southern Indiana District and those of my acquaintances elsewhere, that I am trying to keep the camp-fires blazing. Wife and I took advantage of the courtesy of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company in April, by getting round-trip passes to Cincinnati and return, and attended General Conference at the old historic city of Kirtland, and are pleased to say that we not only enjoyed the trip but also the good Spirit that was present in the social sessions, and met Cousin C. Scott and many others we had not seen for some time. We returned home with strength renewed in Israel's God, and are trying in our weak way to teach the gospel to the people of this community.

I have made two new openings, and have occupied several times at both places with good liberty. I lectured one evening at a Presbyterian chapel on the need of a Sabbath-school and there happened to be one Presbyterian and two Baptist ministers present. So on the second Sunday in this month one of the Baptist ministers invited me to occupy his pulpit at Moulton Heights, which I did with good liberty. At the conclusion of my discourse the pastor spoke in such touching words about the simplicity of the gospel as I had presented it, with tears in his eyes, that the deacons with many of the members, gave me a special invitation back. So on last Sunday I talked awhile after Sunday-school, and again at night to a crowded house, and left an appointment for the first Sunday in July, at eleven o'clock. So from the effort made at Moulton Heights I was invited to come over to Trinity and twelve miles east at a place I do not remember. I am impressed that there are many honest people in this country who do not know anything about the gospel.

I desire to live in such a way that if any should follow where I have been that they will have nothing to clean up, left by wrong actions. Firm in the one faith,

JOHN T. SCOTT.

FLOYLER, Iowa, June 14, 1904.

Editors Herald: After enjoying the pleasant associations of the Saints and the blessings of the conference of the Des Moines District on the 4th and 5th of June, I left the capital city on the 8th and came to the little mining town of Hamilton.

We procured the use of the Friends' church here which stands idle, only a few of this denomination being left. We had just got well started in our meeting when the Friends' preacher came over from Oskaloosa and forbade the people letting us use the church. To whom he was a "friend" I did not learn, but I think of him who is spoken of in Isaiah, 14: 12-14.

Here at Hamilton we found the Aids, Brn. S. L. and Marion Aids, also Bro. and Sr. J. T. Barnett and their estimable family of boys and girls, who have all entered into gospel covenant, those who are old enough to understand. Such a family of children will surely bring joy and gladness to their father and mother in their declining years. There being nothing more we could do there, we came to Floyler where once was a small but thriving branch of Saints, but now all gone except Bro. and Sr. Morgan Davis, Sr. James, and Sr. Oldham, whose fires have not gone out, but are still zealous for the faith, though they almost all have nearly lived out their allotted time in this sphere.

Domiciled with Sr. James we find old Sr. Hannah Jones, of Crescent City, Iowa, now ninety years of age, who will be remembered by very many of the Saints as a mother in Israel. While she is very feeble from age, she has a bright hope and is full of love and kind words for everybody. She has had a varied experience since she first heard the angel's message in 1849, at Liverpool, England, the Lord guiding her footsteps until she finally found rest for her soul with the Reorganization. Yesterday she showed us her receipts received from Bishop Kelley and surely she shall be gathered with those who have made a covenant by sacrifice.

We submit the following in her memory:

Years have come and passed away,
Her jet locks have turned to gray;
Shiny ringlets once so fair
Time has changed to silvery hair.
Yes, she's neared the riverside,
Soon her boat with noiseless oar
Safe will pass to yonder shore.
Soon she'll be among the blessed
Where the weary are at rest;
Soon her boat will be on the stream,
And she'll see its water's gleam;
Soon she'll be where angels roam
Dear old mother's going home.

We are holding forth at the Miners' Chapel with increasing interest and hope to accomplish some good. May our heavenly Father bless all Israel is my prayer.

In gospel bonds,

C. J. PETERS.

SEILING, Oklahoma, June 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: In looking over the HERALD of the 22d I was pleased to read the account of the conference held at Argyle, Iowa, that the work was still remembered in that part of the Lord's vineyard. My parents were among the first members of the String Prairie Branch and I think Father Dungan was the first president, and as memory goes back to those early days, and I think of the sacrifice, energy, and zeal manifested by those early Saints, such acts as those of Bro. F. M. McDonald were not the exception by any means, as the writer well remembers making the trip in company with Father Dungan, I. Shupe, and others on foot from String Prairie to Montrose, to a conference; and we think of the grand and glorious manifestations of the Spirit, as well as the love manifested for each other, and the work then. I feel, like Bro. Smith, to ask, Are we less zealous now? And I feel to answer, Yes, or so it seems to me.

The name of C. W. Newberry brings to my mind the scenes of my childhood days, crowding back to memory, and I wonder if it is the same Charley with whom I spent so many happy hours in boyish sports in those early days. Then I have one sister still in that country, although I have not heard from her for years. My aged father and mother, one sister, and the wife of my early youth, with her golden-haired babe, all lie sleeping in the old Meeks graveyard near the Des Moines River; and I think of the changes that have taken place and the miles that intervene. I wonder if we will ever meet again, and the answer comes back, Yes, if faithful to the gospel covenant.

I, too, am growing old. My hair is almost white; my children are around me, and my grandchildren love to climb on grandpa's knee. And with failing health I am reminded that perhaps the meeting with those who have passed on is not far away. May God grant that we may be faithful.

The work in these parts is moving steadily forward. We are still trying to answer the calls for the preaching of the gospel as much as the care of the little flock over which I preside and other duties will permit, though some calls have to go neglected for want of time.

We have had our trials here as well as the Saints do elsewhere, but we still struggle on, trusting for better things in the future. We expect to hold a ten-day camp-meeting near Richmond, seven miles northwest of Seiling, beginning July 22, when we hope to see some of the fruit of our labors, with those of our brethren, gathered in.

May God ever bless and prosper the good cause is the prayer of

H. F. DURFEY.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, June 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: I find this "Letter Department" my opportunity to write to many of my friends, who are more or less pleased to hear even from me.

That last number on the program of the conference came at last with its many surprises. Bro. J. W. Peterson, my traveling companion, had been troubled many times by his ministerial disciple with the question as to where he thought we would be sent. He thought it would be the Nauvoo District for one more year anyway. I could only hope and fear. When I heard J. W. Peterson, Nauvoo District, I felt somewhat assured, for if the brother was half right he might be fully right. But finally I heard Bro. Salyards' distinct voice saying "J. G. Munsell, Eastern Mission." No sleep that night until near the morning's light. Eastern Mission, Eastern Mission, all night long. Why was it necessary?

Bro. Peterson had become more than a friend and brother to me. In our travels I had depended upon him for everything. He was district president and well known among the Saints, so I had come to look to him to make appointments, provide entertainment, and everything else. I had gladly submitted to his leadership for I found him unselfish and humble in all things, and in the time of severe trial a wise counselor. Now I stood alone, instructed to go to Scranton, Pennsylvania, and become a stranger in a strange city. I will never be found criticising poor Jonah again.

I did not succeed in swallowing the lump in my throat until the next morning, when either good fortune or else our kind and ever tender elder brother, the Christ, out of pity for my loneliness, arranged matters so that Bro. J. B. Lentz, eastward bound also, missed his train and was thrown into my company. And so I found myself for a little while longer, not alone.

Arriving at Buffalo we remained for a two-day visit with Bro. William Brothers and family, and then went on to the falls of Niagara. Here we enjoyed a most excellent visit with the Saints, and we found it absolutely impossible to accept all of the kind invitations extended. As to the falls I can only say, Description is impossible. When the very best writers and artists have done their best they have done nothing.

Just after arriving at Scranton, and when we thought the year's work was really to begin, the dread of every missionary away from home found me. A telegram was placed in my hands which said "Your wife very sick. Doctors give no hope of recovery." Under this necessity, and nearly sick with anxiety, I hurried home. But the doctors can only acknowledge their limitations, and we gratefully give credit where credit is due, for we were spared that trial, and we are again in the field hoping to have my companion with me before the summer has passed.

And at last the gospel is being proclaimed on the streets of Scranton. After vainly trying to get the people to attend our place of meeting, we have concluded the duty of "one sent" is not done until the restored gospel has been carried even to those who heed not our invitation. The Spirit will sustain the street preacher for he will have proved his loyalty and won the confidence even of his God. I have heard brethren tell of preaching on the street one and one half and two hours, and then answer questions for another hour or two and have wondered how it could be. I had found it impossible to keep an audience so interested even when they were comfortably seated. How could it be that they would stand for so long on a curb-stone? I understand it better now, for I have preached under the power of the Spirit until physical exhaustion compelled me to close, and that without seeing any one trouble himself about his watch-pocket; have given opportunity for questions, distributed tracts, and although no meetings have been extended to any great length, still I have been touched almost to a point of weeping to see that when I myself could continue no longer and have been forced to dismiss the crowd with a prayer, that they would linger, quietly, respectfully, and evidently with serious thoughts watch my departure.

The work is too hard for one man. I have wondered if Bro. Peterson has heard my cry "Oh, if John were only here." The local brethren, although earnest men, are hard at work every day and can not help as they would like. We are wondering what and when the harvest will be; but it seems to me that the joy of seeing some of the manly looking men who have listened so respectfully and with such seriousness accept the gospel would be too great. I have seen the temptation to speak movingly, in a way to hurry men by means of warning; but have felt impressed that no good can come from forcing men's minds, and this can be partially drawn from the statement in 1 Corinthians 1: 17: "For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel." A premature baptism I hope I shall never make.

This work is truly a marvelous work and a wonder. And yet how often we see the experience: The greater the joy the greater the trial. The power of the adversary is yet in the world and who is exempt from attack? Who can feel that he fully realizes the inmost feelings of Paul when he said "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast-away."—1 Corinthians 9: 27. "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."—1 Corinthians 10: 12. "For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel."—1 Corinthians 9: 16.

Yours in bonds,

Editors Herald: It is a long time since I wrote you my valuable paper, but I have not been idle. I was not able financially to attend the Kirtland conference, but my desires were there, and when I read in the HERALD that the conference voted to close our Graceland, I felt sad indeed. I paid five hundred and thirty-one dollars in to Graceland College,—not to see it closed, but that it might be perpetuated as an honor to the church. So you may judge how I felt when I read that it would be closed soon. If I was able, or could spare the money, I would willingly pay five hundred more rather than to see it closed. Keep right on, Bro. Elvin, hammer away till the debt is paid. We can not afford to give it up now. I think Sr. J. T. Riley's letter in the last HERALD, pages 582, should awaken new interest in the Saints on the college question. Onward and forward, let the watchword be.

After the Des Moines conference I was called to Coalville, Webster County, to unite in marriage Bro. Alexander Ray and Sr. Nellie Jordison, eldest daughter of Elder Samuel Jordison. They are a couple of fine, energetic young Saints who are always found at their post.

The noble Saints of Coalville insisted on my staying to preach for them over Sunday, which I did with good liberty, good interest, and a good crowd. There is a fine branch of Saints there. Yet it is the same as in many other places; some are asleep to their duty and interest, and have not quite reached the verge of perfection yet. I had the pleasure of baptizing and confirming six while there, which made me rejoice.

On Tuesday I was called on to preach the funeral sermon for Bro. Joshua Beadle. Then on the 22d I came here and found Brn. Sheldon and Christy busy with the tent. Sr. Christy is also with them. She is in charge of the organ, which is a great help in tent work, and I believe helps to draw a crowd. There seem to be some interested here, but time will tell what the harvest will be. Bro. and Sr. W. C. Hidy, and Bro. and Sr. W. E. Hardy are doing all that lies in their power to make the meetings a success, and are caring nobly for the tent workers. Also some of the outsiders are helping in that line, and have been very kind to us so far. One man gives the preacher a quarter every night that he is there. He says he makes that a rule. May God bless them all for their kindness.

I am beginning to feel like my old self again in the field. I preached seventeen sermons, baptized and confirmed six, married one couple, and preached one funeral sermon in twelve days.

When we close here, we will go to Marshalltown, about the first of July, and stay there a month, then to Des Moines for the reunion on the 4th of August. Some have requested to be rebaptized, although they have never been cut off. They do not feel satisfied with their past life, and desire to renew their covenant. They think best to be rebaptized, which seems to be permissible now. I feel well in body and spirit. May the work prosper to final victory, is my desire.

Your colaborer in the gospel field,
J. S. ROTH.

APATAKI, Tuamotu, April 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: The Anaa conference of April 6 to 11 is past with its cares, work, and responsibilities, and upon all of us who assisted in its duties rests our share of the responsibilities. It was a most peaceful conference. Bro. Hawkins said it was the best conference he ever attended. Whatever criticisms or objections were made to matters presented were all made in good spirits with an evident desire upon the part of all to understand the matters and then to act in accordance with wisdom and for the best interests of the church here, and in meekness and humility of manner. The two rules of conduct (mentioned in the minutes) caused quite a flutter and considerable discussion when read, until their import and importance were fully seen, then without a dissenting vote they were received, all voting so far as I could see. The missionaries for the coming year are very hopeful, and readily consented to their appointments with a few exceptions, as they were consulted previous to their appointments. Food was quite scarce and we had to adjourn the conference on Saturday at eleven o'clock in the forenoon to let the brethren go to other places for coconuts and fish; for this reason also the business of the conference was disposed of with as little delay as was consistent with a proper understanding of the matters under consideration.

On the morning of April 13 Emma and I with about fifty other persons left Anaa on the Hitinui and that evening about nine o'clock we anchored in Tamanu in Fakarava and remained there until Monday when, with Metuaore on board, we went up the lake to Rotoava, the city of Fakarava, where Bro. A. H. Smith and party rested a while on the trip to Kaukura from Raroia. Here Brn. Metuaore and Hotu received the gift of a piece of land from Kehauri and his wife, upon which to build a chapel. After all those matters were arranged we left on the 19th for Apataki and arrived there on the early morning of the 20th. We expect to leave to-day for Manihi. We are well and are enjoying the trip among the Saints in the various islands. We have not yet received our March mail. Peace be with all the Israel of God.

Your brother in faith and hope,
JOSEPH F. BURTON.

KAULURA, Tuamotu, June 1, 1904.

Editors Herald: I last wrote from Apataki, from whence we sent the conference minutes and letters on April 22. Two young persons were baptized in Apataki by Elder Tapu and confirmed on Sunday; on Tuesday, April 26, we left the village of Apataki and went up to the upper end of the lake, about sixteen miles, and anchored there, the brethren and sisters going ashore there for gull's eggs. We left there on the 27th, and arrived at Manihi on the 28th. Emma and I were located in Hotu's house where Bro. William Newton dwelt and who is very highly spoken of by all the people here.

Sunday was election day and the people gathered in from the various motus to elect their governor or chief. The services at the chapel were as follows: Preaching at seven o'clock in the morning, and also at ten o'clock in the forenoon, Sunday-school at half past eleven o'clock in the forenoon, testimony-meeting at half past two o'clock in the afternoon, at four o'clock in the evening priesthood school, at half past six o'clock in the evening preaching, at half past seven o'clock in the evening Religio, this society having been established here by Bro. and Sr. Peterson.

At the testimony-meeting Bro. Tupakake was ordained deacon, and it transpired that when the polls were closed at five o'clock in the evening it was found that he had been elected governor.

On Thursday, May 12, I left Manihi on the Hitinui for Takaroa, Emma remaining in Manihi. We arrived on Friday and tarried over Sunday in Metuaaro's house, in which we lived during the conference of 1898, which was probably the largest conference of the Reorganization in this mission, as there was some expectations of Bro. Joseph being present with us. On Tuesday, May 17, we left Takaroa, and as this is the farthest island which we contemplate visiting, we from this place begin our return trip to—America, perhaps. We got ashore at Takapoto at one o'clock in the afternoon, riding in on the breakers in our little boat, for there is no inlet here. Here we received our March mail, good news from home, from the church and friends and children, bundles of papers from Brn. Elvin, Anthony, Keeler, and others who have so kindly remembered us during the time we have spent here, and have been highly appreciated, with the Patriot of Lamoni, and we have been kept somewhat in touch with the outside world, and the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign have kept us somewhat in touch with the news of the church.

From Kakapoto we returned to Manihi, and while here I was called upon to baptize fifteen young persons; six or eight others wished baptism, but they will have to straighten out their marriage relationship before they are eligible. One of them speaks English fairly well, he belongs to Manureva, and I rather expect that after he gets married and baptized he will accompany Elder Tetaku there on a mission after next conference, a new field. In these islands the former missionaries are all kindly remembered, from Bro. T. W. Smith to Bro. J. W. Peterson.

We left at Manihi, Takaroa, and Takapoto, one hundred and thirteen copies of the Doctrine and Covenants and on Wednesday, the 25th of May, we left Manihi for Apataki at half past nine in the morning. I took the wheel or rather tiller then and steered here until half past two in the afternoon, when we made the land again. About noon they brought me hard bread which I ate with a relish, and after a good drink of water I felt quite refreshed. We had a fresh breeze on the beam which kept us going along nicely, but towards evening it moderated, and we shook the reef out of the mainsail; but we anchored in Apataki that evening, having ran about seventy-three miles from morning till nine o'clock in the evening. Here we left the Hitinui and Captain Hotu who so kindly entreated us on all of these trips. May the God of latter-day Israel bless him and his kind wife, Puahi, and all his household for their kindness to the two pilgrims whom they used so well both on the sea and on the land.

We shifted our traps from the Hitinui to the boat of Faathu, the son of Bro. George Richmond, and left Apataki on Saturday, May 28, at eight o'clock in the morning, and saw the Hitinui leaving a half hour later, she going north to Manihi, we south to Kaukura, and the wind being well easterly we both had a fair wind.

At noon we arrived at Moturaa, where we met several of the Saints who came on board to meet us, among them being Elder Neri, a missionary, who was lately elected governor of Apataki and Arutua. At one o'clock we got under weigh and ran up to Panau, and are now domiciled in the house in which we lived when Bro. A. H. Smith was here, and in which he gave so many blessings to the brethren here, Bro. Teehu's house.

We are hoping to receive our mail soon from home with the conference news; yet we are inclined to the belief that our request is granted, and we will be permitted to return to America again, for in a clear dream we met Bro. Joseph who said to me, after a short conversation, "I will meet you in Northern California."

We expect to visit several islands yet, as I am very anxious to pay the printer for the Doctrine and Covenants before I leave here, and we take some along with us everywhere we go and of course sell some, but there have not been such hard times here for many years as now.

We are fairly well and hopeful and continuously pray for Zion's redemption, and for peace upon the Israel of God.

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

Extracts From Letters.

Bro. Fred M. Smith reports from Dunseith, North Dakota, June 25: "Reunion organized this afternoon by choosing me to preside and associating with me Fred A. and Bro. William Sparling. Quite a few are on the grounds, others on the road. Camp pleasantly located on Bro. John Spaulding's place. Dunseith is about twenty miles from the nearest railway point, hence the Saints gather under difficulties. At present roads are bad because of an abundance of rain. Saints are anticipating a pleasant and spiritually profitable time. Am feeling well and glad of the opportunity to visit the Saints in this part of the land."

Bro. J. E. Wildermuth writes from Taylorville, Illinois, July 5: "The work seems to be progressing in the Central Illinois District. I left my colaborer, Bro. W. H. Mannering, to fill the remainder of our appointment at Bluff Springs where we were having good attendance. The Saints of this district seem to be willing to pay their proportion of the college debt."

Bro. A. S. Cochran, Dowagiac, Michigan, June 28: "The conference of this district held with the Clear Lake, Indiana Branch passed off pleasantly. The attendance was not large, and there was considerable disappointment that Bro. J. W. Wight was not able to be present. The preaching was by Brn. S. W. Scott, Isaac M. Smith, and George W. Thorburn. Preaching services were well attended. A letter from this place to Bro. Isaac M. Smith stated that some elders from Utah were here preaching on the streets and that the few Saints here wished some one would come and if opportunity offered show up the difference. I came last week; found Elder Hyrum Peterson, of Lehi, and Elder John I. Gabbott, of Salt Lake City, here. They are making a house to house canvass in town and country. I called on them Friday and spent two hours talking over the situation, and yesterday I visited them again, talking with them from eight o'clock in the morning till noon. They have in print the purported interview of Spencer with you at Bro. Luff's. Now as I expect to meet more or less of their elders, I would like to have Bro. Luff's statement if it is in print, also your own statement in regard to the interview, if there is one in print, aside from your letter to the Deseret News, which they publish. I enclose a letter from Senator Burrows, showing that supply of proceedings of committee in Smoot case is exhausted. I suggest that steps be taken to secure such copies as the brethren have that they do not especially need and that none be destroyed, also HERALDS containing your editorial be kept if they have them in the office and not used for wrappers."

Elder H. A. Stebbins has long served the Church as General Church Recorder. He has developed a very thorough system of records so that in some cases he probably has data regarding members that they themselves have forgotten. His article in the Autumn Leaves entitled, "General Church Records, and Work of the Recorder", can not fail to interest you. It is in two parts and began in the July number.

Miscellaneous Department.

Conference Minutes.

Society Islands Mission.—Met in Tuuhora on Anaa, April 6, 1904, at 8. a. m., and continued till April 11. The following officers were chosen: J. F. Burton president and John Hawkins assistant, D. M. Pohemiti secretary, and Turatahi assistant secretary, and J. F. Burton foreign secretary, Temere, Purara, Tihani, and Takehu deacons, and Kaheke leader of the singing. Minutes of the last conference were read and reports from the following ministry from April, 1903, to April, 1904: J. F. Burton baptized 1, John Hawkins, J. W. Gilbert (reporting up to October, 1903) baptized 4, D. M. Pohemiti, Taneterau baptized 2, Pou Haroatea, Metuaore, Varoa, Temarei, Tehani, Maruake, Vaiarea, Tepava baptized 1, Teihoarii, Tepoaitu baptized 3, Tehakeke of Hereheretue (two years report) baptized 6, Tefaito, Tufaunui, Wiriamu baptized 6, Teotahi, Tapuni, Tauruhua, Tuteirihia baptized 1, Marau, Teahi, Teura, Tuteirihia a Tehopea baptized 1, Pori, Kehauri, Tarua baptized 6, Turatahi baptized 2, Ru, Teganahau. A request from the branches of Avatoru, Tuuhora, Apataki, Niau, Takapoto, Raroia, and Arutua for the ordination of several to offices in the priesthood was read and placed in the hands of the following committee for investigation: Kehauri, Teura, and Wiriamu. Reports were read from the priests', teachers', and deacons' quorum. Report of Tearii of Raiatea read requesting the return of Teihoarii and Omita as missionaries. The committee on publication, J. F. Burton, Metuaore, D. M. Pohemiti, Hotu, and Pori, reported as follows: The conference in Taronia of April, 1903, ordered the printing of one thousand copies of the Doctrine and Covenants and the selling price was then fixed at $1.50 French or $3.40 Chili. The books are printed, but it was found necessary to borrow $200 French to assist the printer, which they did for two years at eight per cent interest. Up to the present they had received from the sale of the books $301.20 Chili, and $20 French which with the $200 French was paid to the printer, the receipts for which were presented.

Priests reported: Titi baptized 10, Tanenui, Maro of Niau, and Tepiki of Apataki. Branch reports: Tiputa 26, Avatoru 53, Arutua 57, Niau 45, Tikahau 48, Kaukura 120. A report was read of the money received from the Religio of Des Moines, Iowa, and of its disbursements. The following elders were appointed a court of elders to examine into such cases as may be presented to them: Louis Bellais, Tapu, and Pou Haroatea. Reports of branches continued: Anaa 33, Tiona 20. Metuaore and Teato were appointed a committee to buy a piece of land at Tautira for a chapel, but were not to give more than $200 French for it, and the price of it they were to obtain from the branches according to their numbers, excepting Rairoa District, which was taxed to help pay for the chapel in Tiputa. Reports of branches continued: Manihi 62, Raroia 51, Makatea 63. Report read of money sent to the Bishop in America for the Kirtland Temple repairs and for Graceland College debt, and the receipts therefor, with the names of those contributing the $32.64. D. M. Pohemiti spoke concerning the propriety of the mission uniting in collecting funds for the purpose of buying lands, building chapels, and for other necessary purposes, and not use the tithing for such purposes and thus honor the counsel of Bishop Kelley. Tetuarere, Tufaunui, and Neri were appointed a committee to examine the bishop's books and report to this conference as soon as convenient. Metuaore stated the proper method of making out the papers conveying lands to the church for church purposes, and to be in the name of E. L. Kelley, and a copy of his instruction to be given to each branch in the mission. The committee on ordinations reported, recommending the ordinations of the following brethren: Puhiri, Taihia, and Tefau, as elders; Niuarai and Tiho as priests; Tai and Temere teachers; Irea, Taataroa, and Tavi, deacons. Report of Hotu of money paid on the debt of Taronia, $225.50. Report of J. F. Burton of money amounting to $100.50 which was put in his hands for the debt of Taronia, with the names of the givers, and the paying of $100 to Hotu for the interest, and the balance, fifty cents, was put on the table and added to other money put into Hotu's hands toward paying off the debt; the balance of the debt was distributed among the branches to be paid this year.

The elders' quorum reported, and the priests' quorum reported as having chosen Haorea president, and Tiho assistant president. Court of elders reported, recommending cutting off of Opuia for living in adultery, and referring the case of Huri to his branch in Hereheretue for action; conference ratified their recommendations. The committee of the assembly reported the number who came to conference; members of the church, 407 adults and 156 children, and 104 neighbors, who came on thirty-two boats and two vessels; money spent for food for the two-day feast was $1,606.60; 17 branches represented; there were nine long tables at the feast; and there were 21 matulus. The following officers were ordained: As elders, Puhiri by Pohemiti, Tefau by J. F. Burton, Taihia by Metuaore; as priests, Tiho by John Hawkins, and Niuarai by Pohemiti; as teachers, Tai by J. F. Burton, and Temere by Metuaore; as deacons, Tavi by John Hawkins, and Taataroa by Pohemiti. The president of the district of Rairoa was at attend to the ordination of Irea. The following rules were read, and after some explanations and discussion were received by a unanimous vote, a copy given to each branch president: "Rule 1. No person will be permitted to retain any office in the church who sanctions his child living with a companion unmarried. Rule 2. Parents who uphold their children living in whoredom should be dealt with by the branch officers, and tried for their membership, and unless they truly repent should be cut off." Metuaore reported the following names as his agents in the places named as successors to those hitherto appointed; Tahua in Avatoru, Tapu in Arutua, Maruake in Raroia, and Teehu in Kaukura. Names of missionaries for the ensuing conference year were read as follows: Pohemiti, president of the Tahiti Division, and Wiriamu, his assistant; Pou Haroatea, president Fakarava Division, and Taneterau his assistant; John Hawkins, president of Kaukura District, with Pori, Vaiarea, and Tuterihia as missionaries; Tuteirihia a Pamanu, president of Raiatea District, with Tarua and Omira and missionaries; Tufanuui, president of Anaa District, with Rere, Maruake, and Teihoarii as missionaries; Tehakeke, president of the district comprising Takoto, Fakahina, and Hereheretue, and Neri as missionaries with him; Tapuni Aporo, president of Tubuai District, with Teariiorotahi and Araiaiti as missionaries; Teahio, president of Makemo District, with Tehau as missionary; Varoa, president of Tahiti District; Teuira, president of Rairoa District, with Kehauri and Titi, missionaries; Pinga, president of Hao District. The committee on the Bishop's books reported as follows: On hand last report, April 8, 1903, $126.65, received $1,089.40, paid out $1,040.90, on hand $175.15. The branches agreed to pay 40 cents each to pay the printer for the blank branch reports. The quorums of the First Presidency, the Twelve, Seventies, High Priests Bishops, and all other officers of the church in America were sustained by unanimous vote, as were also the officers of the mission, the missionaries, and all the quorums here, and the governors and other officers of the land who, without exception, have treated the visiting brethren very kindly, the old residents giving to the visiting brethren, through the governors, sixty-three roasted pigs and a great lot of flour, taro, and potatoes, on the dedication day, when the governors met at the house of the president of the mission and escorted him with a small body of soldiers to the new chapel, and listened to the sermon of the occasion, and afterwards the whole neighborhood gathered outside the chapel and gave three cheers for the Saints, the governors, and the other officers. Appointment was made to attend to the ordination of the newly appointed quorum officers, and the conference adjourned to meet at 8 a. m., April 6, 1905, with the Saints of Rairoa, according to a former resolution. Joseph F. Burton, foreign secretary, Apataki, April 26, 1904.

Elders reporting: Amos Berve, Edward Rannie; by letter D. S. Holmes, J. S. Patterson, M. H. Cook, O. H. Bailey, F. A. Russell, J. F. Jones, M. D. Murdock, J. L. Terry. Bishop's agent reported on hand and collected since last report, $694.26; disbursed, $238.82. Bro. J. F. Adams demanded of the conference, in writing, the reason for not renewing his license at the February conference. Motion made and passed to appoint the district president and missionary in charge to investigate. The committee appointed to sell the Henderson Grove church reported that they had sold the church to Thomas Junk of Henderson for $200 and would turn the money over to Bishop E. L. Kelley as instructed. On motion the money was to be forwarded to Bishop E. L. Kelley, his receipt filed with the district clerk, and committee discharged. Communication from Bishop E. L. Kelley to W. R. Norris was read in regard to the college debt, and on motion the district will use its best endeavor to pay their proportion of the debt. Bro. M. H. Cook was granted the privilege of using the district tent. A two-day meeting was appointed to be held at the Millersburg Branch, August 13 and 14, 1904. Adjourned to meet with the Buffalo Prairie Branch on Saturday, September 17, 1904, at 10.30 a. m. J. L. Terry, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana.—Met in convention at Clear Lake, Indiana, June 10, at 1 p. m., Assistant superintendent, Ella Davis in charge. Of the four schools holding Sunday-school through the winter three reported, viz.: Clear Lake, Galien, and Hartford. The evening session was occupied by

G. W. Thorburn, late of Scotland, who spoke to a large and appreciative audience, along the line of Sunday-school work. Adjourned to meet at Coldwater the day previous to district conference. Mrs. Elsie Lockerby, secretary.

Nodaway.—Sunday-school association convened Saturday at 2 p. m., June 25, with the Bedison school. Few present at the opening session, but an enjoyable time was had. Superintendent W. B. Torrance was in the chair, James Schofield secretary pro tem. Superintendent, treasurer, and librarian reported. Superintendents of Sweet Home and Bedison schools reported good interest in their schools. Sunday at 9.30 a prayer and testimony meeting was enjoyed by all who participated. The Sunday-school was the main subject of prayer. Librarian appointed a finance committee of three in each school to solicit means to build up a local library in each school. Next convention is to meet with Ross Grove school in October on Friday before district conference.

Reunion Notices.

The Northern Illinois reunion will be held at Stewarts Park, Plano, Illinois, commencing Friday, September 16, and ending Monday, 26. These grounds are situated in one of the finest groves in the State, one half mile from town and the railroad station; three or four trains each way, east and west, from and toward Chicago, and also from north and south from Aurora. The grounds are well watered, with well and a fine brook running through; and good place for teams; plenty of room,—about forty acres; fine shade, yet open enough for health and sunshine. Cheap rates can be had for stabling in town. Meals will be furnished at the boarding-tent for fifteen cents. Tents can be had at usual rates by notifying any of the committee ten days prior to the commencement. Rates will be given later on. Missionary in charge, Bro. J. W. Wight, and, it is hoped, President Joseph Smith, or one or more of the Presidency, will meet with us. Able speakers will be there. Sunday-school and Religio interests will have attention and notice of date of meetings will be had. We are hoping to make this an occasion for recreation, social enjoyment, spiritual profit, and education for all, and extend a cordial invitation to all to be present and help themselves and the work in this field, by giving the gospel cause as large and successful advertisement as possible. F. M. Cooper, Doctor D. R. Pomeroy, Plano, Illinois, M. H. Bond, 798 West Adams Street, Chicago, Illinois, committee.

The Spring River District reunion to be held at Berrys Ferry, Indian Territory, will commence on August 19 and hold ten days. We expect to have one of the best reunions ever held in the district. There will be plenty of free pasture and plenty of good water and free wood, and a boarding tent large enough to feed all, the price to be small as possible. All who want tents will notify me or Bro. G. M. Rhonemus by the first of August, otherwise you will have to look out for yourselves. Tents as follows: 10x10 $1.50, 10x12 $1.75. We would like to hear from the presidents of branches about the number coming from their branches. J. T. Riley, of the committee, Fairland, Indian Territory.

The Massachusetts District reunion convenes August 6 to 15 at Silver Lake, Plympton, Massachusetts. Tents 10x12 $2.75, 12x15 $3.25. Board at the commissary at $3.50 per week. Those of the ministry expected to be present are: F. M. Smith, and R. C. Evans of the First Presidency, F. G. Pitt, W. E. LaRue, W. W. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, R. Bullard, G. H. Smith, R. W. Farrell, G. W. Robley. Those having Zion's Praises will please bring them along; Bro. F. G. Pitt will be on hand to instruct us in the singing. Those from outside districts should notify the committee at once, that provision may be made for them. All should have baggage shipped to Silver Lake, Plympton, Massachusetts, but, remember that all mail should be addressed to Silver Lake post office, Massachusetts. O. L. Newcomb, 78 Chandler Street, West Somerville, Massachusetts, Harry Wood, Arlington, Massachusetts, A. J. Leckney, Providence, Rhode Island, George W. York, Haverhill, Massachusetts, Machiel Barns, Copicut, Massachusetts, N. H. Nickerson, Plymouth, Massachusetts, W. A. Sinclair, 1439 Pleasant Street, Fall River, Massachusetts, committee.

Conference Notices.

Annual conference of the British Isles Mission will meet on July 30 and the two succeeding days. Business sessions will commence at 6 p. m. on July 30 in our North Manchester room, 412 Collyhurst Road. For information respecting reports please refer to Nos. 7 and 8 of the Mission Rules. The Sunday services will be held in the Coöperative Assembly Hall, Downing Street. The Seventh Quorum of Elders will meet during conference. Apostle J. W. Rushton and other members of the missionary staff are expected to be present. Wm. R. Armstrong, Saml. F. Mather, secretaries.

Notices.

To the Scattered Saints in Southeastern Illinois District: Will you please get the Sunday-school and Religio Quarterlies and study them at home and report to me before the next district convention? C. J. Spurlock, superintendent Home Department.

This is to notify those who have subscribed towards the Southern Missouri District gospel missionary tent, that we are now ready to receive and give receipts. Please act at once, as we shall need the tent at our coming district reunion. Any one knowing of a good second-hand, fair-sized tent for sale, will confer a favor by corresponding with the undersigned, giving name, address, and price, also the address of reliable tent firms. J. C. Chrestensen, of the tent committee, 1928 Vernon Avenue, Springfield, Missouri.

Mr. Dooley's thousands of readers and admirers will be glad to learn of his return. His delightful and inimitable letters upon topics of the times, which have now gained for him a world-wide fame, will begin in the Sunday Record-Herald of July 10 and will appear every Sunday thereafter.

There is but one Dooley. A Chicago product, his quaint and humorous philosophy is now known wherever the English language is spoken. The coming presidential campaign and other current events will afford a wealth of material for his pen.

It is a noted fact that almost every land, the world over, has one or more famous dishes which have been perfected through long centuries of culinary practice. Virginia, for instance, has more than fifty ways of cooking corn. Some of these, like the soft corn bread, are not known outside of a small radius, yet they are among the most delicious of the world's dishes. No attempt has ever been made to get together the best dishes of all lands. The Twentieth Century Home is proceeding to accomplish this most desirable result, by selecting some one in each country who has a good knowledge of the best dishes of the land to prepare papers for the pages of that magazine.

Country Life in America offers some interesting figures on the comparative cost of keeping horses and automobiles. Summing up the expense, this writer says a large touring-car, considering depreciation and the chauffeur's salary, could and would cost $2,405 a year as against $1,257 for a team of horses with coachman; while a small machine of the "second class" might cost $525 as against $448 for one horse. As for efficiency and use around a country place, the machines are given the preference.

"The triumph of national irrigation" is the subject of an important article in the July Review of Reviews by William E. Smythe. The work done by the Government in the first two years under the Reclamation Act is summarized by Mr. Smythe, who, eleven years ago, wrote for the Review the first article that ever appeared in an American magazine explaining and supporting the national irrigation idea, as an organized cause.

The Outlook's July Magazine Number.

This issue of the Outlook contains a special article on the National Republican Convention at Chicago, written by Mr. Francis E. Leupp, perhaps the best known and certainly one of the ablest—if not the ablest—of the Washington correspondents for New York papers. The article is accompanied by portraits of the Republican candidates for the presidency and vice-presidency, and in the same issue an elaborate editorial discusses the policy and platform of the Republican party. Among other features of special note in this number may be mentioned a singular collection of pictures by Japanese artists, relating to the war, sent to the Outlook by its correspondent in the far East, Mr. George Kennan, whose letters are now almost weekly appearing in the Outlook.

Writing, in the July-September Forum, of "Applied science," Henry Harrison Supplee considers the use of the turbine in Atlantic liners, oil fuel for steamships, the testing of steam locomotives, the relation of engineering to war, improvements in reinforced concrete, the scientific value of the St. Louis Fair, rapid-cutting tool steels, the Chicago subway for freight, and other interesting topics.

Editorial.

A STEP IN ADVANCE FOR RUSSIA.

This does not refer to the war now raging between the Russians and the Japanese in Manchuria and around Port Arthur. It has reference to the late action of the Czar in abolishing the long-prevailing governmental system of banishing offenders of several kinds, including political offenders, to Siberia. It is a far-reaching measure, and clearly indicates the influence that the civilization of the countries with which Russia has come into contact in later years has had over its policies.

Russia being an autocracy, the day was when it was a bitter despotism, and in a period in which historical statistics have been kept there has been a record of nearly one million of victims who have been banished for real or alleged offenses. Many of these have been by officials without any sort of trial after months and years of imprisonment without even the excuse of a charge, and sometimes not even permitting the victim to know for what offense he is suffering, and without the knowledge of relatives or friends, just simply whisked off and deported into banishment into Siberia.

It was a step in advance when serfdom was abolished by the Czar, and this later movement is another step in advance. It is to be hoped that the newspaper reports of this movement are correct and that the long effort made by humanitarians within and without the dominion of the Czar may give finally to the Russians the full rights of good citizenship. Whatever the result of the war between Russia and Japan may be, such revolution resulting in the mitigation of the austere rule of an autocrat will not likely go backward. It may be that Count Tolstoi's course, together with those who may think as he thinks, may have had a beneficial effect upon his majesty the Czar, which taken together with contact with the higher civilization and development of the nations, may have resulted in thus bringing to pass this humanitarian measure.

A good many years ago one of the brethren of the Reorganization, Elder John Gaylord, wrote a book called The Future of Russia. The author in elucidating the prophecies seemed to be of the opinion that Russia would be one of the great contending parties in the battle of Armageddon. We have nothing to say about this, as to the correctness of his exegesis, but it is to be hoped that before that final event the processes of civilization may project a different estimate of the Czar and his dependencies upon the nations of the world.

A COPY of the Wheeling, West Virginia, Daily News reaches us, in which we find a communication from Bro. O. J. Tary, which is a reply to something Reverend Ira C. Moore had written for the News columns a few day previous. Reverend Moore is the party with whom Bro. R. M. Elvin held a debate last winter. Bro. Tary never fails to notice anything inimical to the work, and having the confidence of the Wheeling papers, always manages to have something appear in defense of the faith. Watchcare over work established is as necessary as the pioneer work of proselyting.

We add the news as it appears in the Chicago Tribune for July 12:

The system of condemning political prisoners by administrative order has been abolished by imperial decree and persons accused of political crimes henceforth will be tried by the courts under the regular procedure.

This reform is far-reaching, ending for ever the arbitrary condemnation to exile of political suspects without the intervention of the courts.

It is considered one of the most sweeping reforms of this generation, and it is understood that it was recommended by the council of the empire, with the acquiescence and approval of the minister of the interior, M. Plehve.

"Exile by administrative process" has been the dark spot in the Russian governmental system for many decades. Exile under this process means the banishment of an obnoxious person from one part of the empire to another without the observance of any legal formalities.

The obnoxious person may not be guilty of any crime, but if in the opinion of the local authorities his presence in a particular place is "prejudicial to public order," or "incompatible with public tranquility," he may be arrested without a warrant, may be held for two weeks to two years in prison, and may then be exiled by force. He may or may not be informed of the charges against him.

He has no right to demand a trial or even a hearing. He can not ask for a writ of habeas corpus. He can not appeal to his fellow citizens through the press. He may be exiled so suddenly and so secretly that even members of his own family do not know what has become of him. He is literally and absolutely without any means of defense.

The Czar's decree abolishing political exile to Siberia without trial marks the beginning of the downfall of a political system that had its origin in the barbarities of the seventeenth century. Singularly enough, the exile system, even with all its horrors, was introduced in the seventeenth century as a reform movement.

The Russian criminal code of that age was almost incredible, cruel, and barbarous. Men were impaled on sharp stakes, hanged, and beheaded by hundreds for crimes that would now be regarded as trivial in any country on the globe. Lesser offenders were flogged, branded with hot irons, mutilated, deprived of their tongues, or suspended in the air by hooks passed under their ribs until they died a lingering death.

The first move for reform adopted the exile system as an amelioration from the cruel barbarities of the criminal code. And then the exile system swung to the other extreme. Men were exiled to Siberia for such minor offenses as fortune-telling, prize-fighting, snuff-taking, driving horses with reins, begging, and setting fire to property accidentally.

Then in the reign of Catherine II the demand for laborers in Siberia became more and more imperative and the list of crimes and offenses punishable by exile grew larger and larger.

Jews were exiled for refusing or neglecting to pay their taxes. Serfs were sent to Siberia for cutting down trees without permission. Soldiers were exiled for bad conduct. In Catherine's reign the exiles were driven to Siberia in herds like cattle.

In 1811 another reform wave set in and new rules were adopted. In 1823 Russia began for the first time to register the number of exiles. Here are some of the official figures, secured by George Kennan:

From 1823 to 1832.....	98,725
From 1832 to 1842.....	86,550
From 1843 to 1852.....	69,764

From 1853 to 1862.....	101,238
From 1863 to 1872.....	146,380
From 1873 to 1877.....	91,257
In 1878.....	17,790
In 1879.....	18,255
In 1880.....	17,660
In 1881.....	17,183
In 1882.....	16,945
In 1883.....	19,314
In 1884.....	17,824
In 1885.....	18,843
In 1886.....	17,477
In 1887.....	17,774

Total.....772,979

The figures for the years since 1887 are not at hand, but doubtless they would swell the grand total to more than one million.

Of course, not all of the seven hundred and seventy-two thousand, nine hundred and seventy-nine exiles referred to in Kennan's table were political. Many of them were exiled by "administrative order," and it is this process that the Czar's imperial decree, just issued, is designed to abolish.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Under the caption of "666" of Ensign for May 19, 1904, appears to me a little mysticism. I never could understand under what hypothesis 666 constituted the number of a man. How does it apply to produce those numericals and why? The numericals and letters add up all right, in effect, but there never was effect without a cause; the cause is what we are after in this question. Can you supply it?

No. We have seen just as ingenious and logical a summing up of the name of Napoleon III to fill the type 666, the "number of a man." We think we have also seen an application of the same sort of mystical numbers to the name Apollyon.

Personally we believe that the prophecy refers to some power which is to have more or less universal sway, which has not yet developed, but will be revealed in due time, that is, when it is needful in God's purposes that it shall be known.

Perhaps the Ensign can rise and make plain.

If the action of a branch upon the recommendation of a court of elders results in the branch lifting their hands against the offender that he be expelled, is such member considered as excommunicated from the church, or simply expelled from the branch, and therefore may at his pleasure join another branch that might take him in?

Rule (c) section 161, article 5, page 136, Rules of Order, provides "In cases where a member has been adjudged guilty of an offense, for which the penalty has been suspension from church fellowship or church privileges, such person shall so remain as affected by the decision until a rehearing and reversal of the decision shall have been had upon the appeal." Therefore, we answer, yes, such person, if expelled by the branch, is expelled from the church. Such person can not be received by baptism in another branch without having made proper restitution to the branch which excommunicated him and securing from such branch a vote permitting a baptism elsewhere, if it be asked for.

Do you consider it right for Saints to sell by ticket articles to raise money? Is there any difference in principle between that and the Louisiana lottery?

Following this query the writer, a sister, adds:

If you think it wrong, please answer through the HERALD. I have noticed that those who are trying by such methods to raise money for their chapel do not seem to prosper very well, and I wondered if the Lord would accept such money. If wrong is done I think it is thoughtlessly, not intentionally.

We are not informed in regard to the Louisiana lottery, only as we have noticed the contest in regard to the exclusion of its circulars from the mails. We, however, gather the idea that this lottery referred to offers a "grand money prize" to the fortunate holder of the "lucky ticket." Tickets are sold by the thousands everywhere, and every means employed to arouse the cupidity of those who desire to "get rich quick"; as a consequence many hundreds spend all their earnings buying the chances for the fortunes.

No such result follows where efforts to build are made among the Saints. The article to be sold is plainly seen, a fair price is set for it, and everybody knows what the money collected by the sale of tickets is to be used for; and usually only those who choose to give to the cause the sum paid for a ticket or tickets buy them, and that, too, without any anxiety to "win" the article so sold.

Personally we have always preferred the raising of means for incidental branch or church work by direct methods, but we have watched the bazaars, suppers, teas, dinners, sociables, fish-ponds, and sales of articles (which by the way are usually articles made among the Saints), with a good deal of care, and confess, so far, we have not seen any serious ill result to follow. Nor have we noticed that those trying to raise money by the method have fallen into ill luck by it.

It is a local affair usually, and must come under the rule and lead of the majority in branch or locality; those who think it wrong being permitted not to take part, but giving their moneys directly; the others to do as they choose about it.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We have been shocked by the news that Sr. Elizabeth Hearn Graham, wife of Bro. William Graham, formerly living at Lamoni with their children, had been shot to death in her home, and that her husband was missing. Bro. Graham and his family removed from Lamoni a few years ago to make settlement in North Dakota, settling on a farm near Lansford. They lived on a homestead filed upon by their son, Morgan Graham, while Bro. William himself filed upon another, the family living on the one of the son. Two of the children, son and daughter, attended a party on Friday night, returning to the home on Saturday morning, June 25. They found their mother dead, shot through the head. A jury was impanned by the coroner, Doctor Crockett, who found a verdict that Sr. Graham came to her death as the result of a gunshot from the hand of an unknown person. Search was made for Bro. William Graham, but up to July 1 no trace of him has been found. It appears that Bro. Graham had been hurt in an accident some time ago, since which he apparently has never been fully recovered. He left the house on Friday night to go over to his own homestead. He took nothing with him, not even his coat. Bro. Graham was fifty-four years old. Sr. Elizabeth was born in Washington County, Ohio, February 5, 1853. They were married in December, 1870. There are two sons, Charles and Morgan, and two daughters, Ellen and Birdie. Bro. and Sr. Graham joined the church in August, 1880. Sr. Graham was buried on Monday, June 27, by a concourse of citizens which was large enough to testify to the regard of the community. It is a sad blow to the family. They were well known at Lamoni, which is our excuse for giving this notice. We hope Bro. Graham will be found and that it will be discovered that he was not at fault for this awful tragedy.

Zion's Ensign presents a very different appearance, a change having been made from a five column to a three column page. We are glad to note the improvement in the mechanical make-up of our sister paper.

Mr. Walter Maunder, an English astronomer, believes he has evidence that the inhabitants of Mars are engaged in a gigantic fight for life against conditions terrible to contemplate, and appalling in their result. Mars is surrounded by such atmospheric conditions that there can be no rains, and consequently no springs or rivers to furnish its inhabitants with water so necessary to existence. This learned man believes that the Martians are struggling for life by an immense system of canals by which water, produced by the melting of snow, is carried from the polar regions to sustain life and for the purposes of agriculture—a system of irrigation in comparison with which our own efforts in irrigation seem infantile indeed. The shaded bands on Mar's surface, which are supposed to be the appearance of vegetation, come at the time of the year when the polar snows are known to be melting, and disappear with the coming of winter.

Astronomers believe that evolution will finally bring a world to such a condition, and such a battle against thirst and starvation must ensue in case inhabitants thereof should continue existence into such a period. There may be a great deal of imagination in this belief concerning Mars; but it should certainly cause an intense interest if it were known for sure that fellow beings of the universe are engaged in such a struggle with a doom inevitable and world-wide in its extent.

WHAT AN ELDER SEES BY THE WAYSIDE.

It is a well-established fact among well-informed Latter Day Saints, that that which we call the latter-day work is a "marvelous work and a wonder," and that its divinity is established by marvelous manifestations of God's power and that so far as evidence is concerned it is established beyond the possibility of successful contradiction.

With this evidence before the mind of many the question is often asked, Why does this grand and glorious work move so slowly? Is it God's will to have it thus? or is it man that impedes its onward march? The moral ideal to which the church points us is a very high one.

Can it be possible that in the common affairs of life in our daily intercourse with our neighbors our sins have separated us from God and caused him to withhold many of his blessings, and cause many to speak evil of us, not because of our righteousness, but because of our sins?

During a visit to a certain branch we heard that one would cheat, lie, and steal, of a second one that he would swear, of a third one that his word in business was no good. All these held the priesthood and at some time were officers of the branch; also learned that all the little, petty, mean things that man or the Devil could think of was of daily occurrence among the members. It could not be said that these statements were made because of prejudice towards the Saints, for the reason that some of them were pointed out as models of an upright and honest life and they were held in the highest respect by their neighbors. These conditions existed with but little variation for twenty-five years and the best efforts the church could make with the aid of the general ministry accomplished very little.

When the writer compares notes with his colaborers it is discovered that similar conditions exist elsewhere and that all the opposition from without by our bitterest enemies does but very little to impede the work as compared with the unrighteousness of the Saints, and that the foes we need most to fear are within the body.

The church as organized by Christ is perfect. Every officer is useful, none are intended to be ornaments. Can the work of perfecting the Saints be accomplished when only a part of its officers are "laborers together with God"? Are the priests, teachers, and deacons honored in their office? Do the Saints respect them as representatives of Christ? Will they dare to go into the homes of the Saints and teach them their duties, as pointed out in the law? Would they be welcomed or would they be curtly told to leave and mind their own business? Those officers feel it keenly that they are ignored and that the local elders and traveling ministry are given preference over them in duties that belong to them only, and we see the sad result of such conditions that that arm of the service is almost eliminated, in a practical way, from the church, and but a few care to accept the office, and of that number only a small percentage act, because they are not welcomed nor is their labor appreciated in the homes of the Saints.

My children are approaching maturity and they are members of the church, and not more than twice have they ever seen any of these officers visit our home. One branch I know of with nearly one hundred members has neither priest, teacher, or deacon. The Saints are spiritually starving and none to feed them. The missionaries and local elders can never fill these God-appointed stations. I do not wish it to be understood that no progress is being made, because much has been; but the condition contemplated in the law can only be attained through God's own appointed way. How and when will things be changed so that we will come near to what God would have us be? How long will it be until the missionary can go about his work and not feel the blush of shame upon his cheek because of the unrighteousness of many of the Saints?

Will it be necessary for the chastening hand of God to afflict us and that we feel his displeasure visited upon us, or will we learn by the experience of others and escape his just wrath that overtakes the disobedient and rebellious?

BRADEN IN CANADA.

For years past the Disciples of Grand Valley have manifested considerable bitterness toward the Saints. Several times they have conducted special meetings for the purpose of exposing the so-called fallacies of the Latter Day Saint philosophy, but as one lecturer followed the other it was apparent the effort was never a success. The last of these lecturers was no other than the great self-praised hero of "progressive" Discipleism, the boasted victor in so many battles with his "Anti"-Disciple brethren, infidels and others. Mr. Braden, a little above one year ago visited Meaford, Ontario, just after Elder Russell had closed a series of meetings in a schoolhouse, probably a mile out of town, and while there Mr. Braden thought to show his greatness by an expose of "Mormonism," using the same schoolhouse, but having to pay two dollars a night for the pleasure, whereas Elder Russell and the writer had it free. Braden made no hit and his pleasure was cut short. As usual, he was ready to debate with any representative of the church from the President down, but after all his bluff Mr. Braden left Meaford in the face of a fair challenge from R. C. Evans published at the time in one of the Meaford papers. About the same time Grand Valley Disciples imported a new parson by the name of Chapman. He saw the printed challence of Bro. Evans and at once set about the task of bringing Mr. Braden to the front, but we are informed that he, who by this time was on American soil, "hadn't time." Then Mr. Chapman studied "Mormonism" from the pages of the Helper, etc., and concluded he knew enough to get into the fighting arena. He knew nothing of the Saints' teaching before coming to Grand Valley and in a few months time thought he knew it all from the Helper. When he first commenced to get big notions he challenged the writer to debate stated questions, which was accepted, but a few days later, having seen some of his brother preachers he wished to be excused, and would not debate unless I insisted upon it. Unwilling to force any man into discussion the debate never matured. Still Mr. Chapman studied hard until he got so full of hatred to the faith that he openly attacked the church through the columns of the Dufferin Post, a paper printed in Orangeville. The matter was placed in the hands of President Evans and he replied. After three letters Mr. Chapman acknowledged himself down and out, and called upon Mr. Braden, who in the meanwhile had reached Grand Valley upon invitation of some kind, to come to the rescue.

Mr. Braden took up the cudgels at Chapman's request, but did not enter into any newspaper controversy. He proceeded to deliver a number of lectures in Grand Valley against the church, giving six in all. The Saints of that neighborhood attended some of them, taking notes. These lectures were given during and between the London and Chatham District conferences, making it impracticable for President Evans to attend. Whether or not it was arranged purposely that these lectures come in between the two conferences, we can not say. Braden was reported weak in argument but up to his old-time reputation for vulgarity and abuse. He said he was the biggest bugbear in the world to the Saints, that no one would meet him, etc. He refused Saints the privilege of asking any questions at the close of lecture, calmly telling some to "shut your mouth" and others "you are a liar." As neither Chapman nor Braden would meet the propositions submitted by Bro. Evans in the paper controversy, the only course open was to go to Grand Valley and reply to Braden's abuse. Accordingly six lectures were arranged and delivered by Bro. Evans, commencing June 20, in the same hall used by Braden and to larger audiences. The first lecture, "Campbellite frauds," was a hot number for Disciple ears. Braden was severely criticized. Between Chapman, who in his writing to the Post had unconsciously lowered Braden's standing to that of a dishonest, mean trickster, when trying to excuse himself from debating and to work in Braden as a substitute, and quotations from Braden-Kelley debate, Underwood's pamphlet, The Kind of a Man Braden Is, and the Inter-Ocean, together with the lies Braden told in regard to the Saints being afraid to meet him and his being indorsed by the people of Grand Valley, he made his case pitiable. The Meaford challenge of R. C. Evans and also I. N. White's standing challenge, and the signed statement of Grand Valley ministers and elders that they had nothing whatever to do with Braden coming to lecture against the Saints, were referred to as evidence of willful deception by Disciples. With such a reputation of Braden, R. C. pressed so hard for substantial indorsement that Mr. B. had a sheet circulated to show what a power he was, how many debates held, Christian, etc., but lo! this sheet was a clear give-away on himself and church. It showed Discipleism was divided into "antis" and "progressives" and that the "antis" would not meet Mr. Braden, the leading representative of the "progressives," in debate unless very much indorsed by his own side as a Christian debater. What a wonderful recommend to Braden to advertise that one half of Discipleism will not meet him in discussion unless the "progressives" promise that he will act the part of an honorable man. When half of the Disciple Church wants Braden well indorsed, no wonder that others should.

Then to make matters worse for themselves, in their anxiety to offset the charge that Braden would not have come to Grand Valley had it not been for Disciple money, the following was printed by the treasurer and clerk of the Disciple Church and circulated freely among the people.

To whom it may concern: Whereas I hear it has been said by R. C. Evans on main street, Grand Valley, and in the Chatfield Hall that but for "Campbellite" money paid or promised to him, Clarke Braden would not have come to Grand Valley, I have this to say, the Disciple (Campbellite) Church had nothing to do with Bro. Braden's coming here, have not paid or promised to pay him any money, or any other consideration to induce him to come to Grand Valley. [Signed] GEORGE TOUGH, Clerk and Treasurer Disciple Church, Grand Valley.

This capped the climax as an indorsement. The Disciples had said first the citizens had indorsed Braden's presence and work, which was proven false by the signed and oral statements of several; then comes this circular from the Disciples themselves to say they had nothing to do with Mr. Braden coming, that they had not paid or promised to pay him any money or offered him any inducement to come. Who did send for him? Will no one stand by him? were questions natural to ask. Poor Braden! even the Disciples refused to acknowledge they had anything to do with his coming.

Altogether the meetings were a success. We have reason to think some people heard our position for the first time. The general impression is that the Saints gained another victory. Braden never showed up, but had one or more scribes present to take notes. Had we not chanced to meet him on the street we would not have even seen this big so-called terror of the Saints. Braden announced reply to Bro. Evans' lectures for evenings of June 27 and 28. We have no report of his efforts. Braden's first lectures were made up of the usual worn-out objections and miserable misrepresentations of the books. He is hired to Grand Valley for a season. No doubt he feels content to settle down in a quiet little village and become a pastor to the few disciples there after so illustrious a past, and with it thrown in his face that he was not sent for by them. What a recommend this last call and pastorate for this College Professor! He is as near to nothing as can be. What shall we hear next?

FRED GREGORY.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN ARE SYNONYMOUS AND INTERCHANGABLE.

To be too positive on a speculative question, all sides of which are lacking in proof, is unwise; but to affirm in a positive or dogmatic way, when the proof is against us, is not only unwise and dangerous, but it would seem unnecessary. We are all liable to be wrong, of course; but it is much better to hold a question in abeyance for a long time, than to quickly assume a position which can not be defended with success.

My position is that the phrases "kingdom of God" and "kingdom of heaven," are used synonymously and interchangeably in the New Testament; not always, possibly, but they are so used, as the evidence plainly and abundantly shows. And why not? Is not the phrase, "kingdom of God," just as expressive of that which is divine and heavenly as "kingdom of heaven"?

It will be noticed that Matthew generally, though not always, uses the terms "kingdom of heaven"; while Mark and Luke always, I believe, use "kingdom of God" to express the same thing. I can see no good ground for the position that the "kingdom of God" always refers to the church militant, and the "kingdom of heaven" to the church triumphant. A fair and consistent inference is that Jesus used both forms to express the same thing; hence Matthew, preferring one of these forms, used it, as a rule, that is, "kingdom of heaven"; while Mark and Luke preferred the other, that is, "kingdom of God."

The biographers of Christ use the two different phrases, "kingdom of God" and "kingdom of heaven," to represent precisely the same thing. "In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea, and saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matthew 3: 1, 2.

Soon after this, Jesus commenced his ministerial work with the same proclamation: "From that time Jesus began to preach and to say, Repent; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matthew 41: 17.

Mark shows that John's preaching was the opening up of a gospel dispensation, (see Mark 1: 1-4,) while Luke shows that Jesus was engaged in the same work, (see Luke 4: 18, 19). And of the preaching of Jesus Mark says: "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: Repent, ye, and believe the gospel."—Mark 1: 14, 15.

Speaking of the cessation of the law, by limitation, Matthew gives it as follows: "And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John."—Matthew 11: 12, 13.

Luke presents this same teaching of the Master in the following language: "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it."—Luke 16: 16.

In Matthew, chapter 13, we have a record of seven parables, most of which, if not all, refer more or less to the church militant, while some of them plainly refer to the church militant and triumphant. These are the parables: the sower who went forth to sow, the wheat and the tares, the mustard-tree, the leaven hid in three measures of meal, the treasure hid in a field, the merchantman seeking goodly pearls, and the net cast into the sea. In connection with every one of these parables we find the phrase "kingdom of heaven" used; but not once the "kingdom of God." Now, if they are always separate and distinct what will we do with this mass of evidence? The parables of the sower who went forth to sow, the mustard seed, and the leaven hid in three measures of meal, are given by Luke, and the mustard-tree parable is given by Mark; but both of these writers, as before observed, use the words "kingdom of God," and not "kingdom of heaven." (See Luke 8: 5-15; 13: 18, 19; 13: 20, 21; Mark 4: 30-32.)

The parables of the mustard seed, and the leaven hid in three measures of meal, seem to plainly illustrate the kingdom from its incipency to its triumph in glory and perfection; and yet Matthew says they illustrate the "kingdom of heaven," while Mark and Luke say it is the "kingdom of God."

An argument is worthless unless it is found to be in harmony with the facts. Therefore, the argument that the "kingdom of God" and the "kingdom of heaven" are not the same, because both good and bad find place in the former, but only the good and pure in the latter, is not a valid one.

As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom [the "kingdom of heaven"] all things that offend, and them which do iniquity.—Matthew 13: 40, 41.

So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.—Verses 49, 50.

I may be told that the parable of the wheat and tares takes a very wide range, and that the tares are the children of the apostate church. (See Doctrine and Covenants, section 84.) Well, suppose we admit this, it still remains a fact that these wicked ones are found in the "kingdom of heaven." Moreover, it is broad enough to include all the righteous and wicked, found in the church of God, at the coming of Christ.

In Matthew, chapter 22, verses 1-14, the "kingdom of heaven" is likened unto a certain king who made a marriage for his son.

And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment: and he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless. Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outward darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.—Verses 11-13.

In Matthew, chapter 25, verses 1-30, we have a record of two parables illustrative of the "kingdom of heaven." One is the parable of the ten virgins, five of whom were foolish and were not permitted to enter into the marriage feast when the bridegroom came. The other is the parable of a man traveling into a far country and delivering unto his servants his goods. When he came to reckon with them, on his return, he found an unfaithful one whom he ordered to be cast "into outer darkness."

Nor is it true that the impure and the hypocrite can always find place in the "kingdom of God." They may get in and become members, in a nominal sense, while the kingdom is militant, but they can not when it becomes triumphant. In this respect, it is just the same as the kingdom of heaven. "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out."—Luke 13: 28.

Matthew, giving this same teaching of the Master, calls it the "kingdom of heaven." (See Matthew 8: 11, 12.)

"Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God."—1 Corinthians 6: 9, 10.

This shows plainly that there is a triumphant and perfect kingdom of God, where the unrighteous can not dwell, as well as a triumphant and perfect kingdom of heaven. "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood can not inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption."—1 Corinthians 15: 50. Here is the kingdom of God in such a perfect condition that only the pure and immortal can dwell therein. In Galatians chapter 5, verses 19 to 25, Paul contrasts the works of the flesh with the works of the Spirit; and after naming the things which the carnal and sensual man will do, he says: "Of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things can not inherit the kingdom of God."—Verse 21.

Section 65 of the Doctrine and Covenants has often been quoted to sustain an opposite position. Now suppose it does, is there much consolation in finding that this section is in conflict with the New Testament? But, as I understand it, it does not sustain an opposite position from the one assumed in this article, and it is in complete harmony with the teachings of the New Testament. If the Lord had reversed the phrases and said: "Wherefore, may the kingdom of heaven go forth, that the kingdom of God may come," it would have been equally true. Why? Because the expressions are synonymous and interchangeable. In Doctrine and Covenants section 56, paragraph 6, we have the following:

Blessed are the poor, who are pure in heart, whose hearts are broken, and whose spirits are contrite, for they shall see the kingdom of God coming in power and great glory unto their deliverance; for, the fatness of the earth shall be theirs; for, behold, the Lord shall come, and his recompense shall be with him, and he shall reward every man, and the poor shall rejoice; and their generations shall inherit the earth from generation to generation, for ever and ever.

This agrees with the precious promises made by Jesus to his disciples nineteen hundred years ago. "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 5: 3. "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."—Verse 8. It also agrees with what Jesus says in section 65, of the coming of the "kingdom of heaven." The proper distinction is not between the "kingdom of God" and the "kingdom of heaven," but between the kingdom militant and the kingdom triumphant; or the kingdom in this world and in the world to come.

In Doctrine and Covenants, section 65, we read that "The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on earth," etc. Jesus referred to these same keys of authority when talking to Peter, but he called them "the keys of the kingdom of heaven." (Matthew 16: 19.) So, the keys of the "kingdom of God," and the keys of the "kingdom of heaven," are nothing more or less than the keys of the church, just as expressed in Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, verse 18: "Lift up your hearts and rejoice, for unto you the kingdom, or in other words, the keys of the church, have been given." In Doctrine and Covenants, section 94, last part of paragraph 3, we read: "In all things pertaining to the kingdom of God on earth, the keys of which kingdom have been conferred upon you."

Why say "the kingdom of God on earth," if it has no existence anywhere else? Who will say that these are not the same keys given to Peter, that is, "the keys of the kingdom of heaven"?

It is evident, too, that the phrase, "the kingdom of heaven," is used in precisely the same sense in the Doctrine and Covenants that it is in the New Testament:

Yea, open your mouths and they shall be filled, saying, Repent, repent and prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand; yea, repent and be baptized every one of you, for the remission of your sins; yea, be baptized even by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost.—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2.

Wherefore, go forth, crying with a loud voice, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand; crying, Hosanna! blessed be the name of the most high God. Go forth baptizing with water, preparing the way before my face, for the time of my coming, etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 39: 5.

The kingdom, or church, which has been committed unto us, should be constantly increasing in wisdom (the wisdom of God), faith, purity, and power. Increase of membership is not enough, for, of itself, this is no indication of progress. The kingdom which God has committed into our care will either be rejected by him, or become a part of the kingdom triumphant. "We are laborers together with God"; therefore, if our work and the kingdom committed to us are accepted by the Master when he comes, it will be because the work has been done according to the will of God. And that we might not fail in this, God has given us his word, and we have constant and proper claim upon him for his Spirit, if we keep his commandments.

I contend that we must build for eternity, and not simply to become a "world power." The methods and policies which are not in harmony with the gospel, should be discarded. "My kingdom is not of this world," said Jesus; and he knew.

We must not excuse ourselves from duty because we are finite in wisdom and power. God requires us to trust in him and do his work. He has promised to help us. Can we not trust him? If it be true that "every plant," which God "hath not planted, shall be rooted up," and that "we are laborers together with God," then is it not important that we should bear the responsibilities and duties that devolve upon us, as the children of faith, doing all our work, as far as possible, according to the will of God?

It is true that we will be imposed upon, more or less, for a time, when we do the best we can; but because of this, we are not justified in shunning any responsibility, or work, which the law of God imposes upon us. There is only one proper way in which persons can become members of the church, and only one in which they can properly retain their membership therein, namely, by a sincere and intelligent obedience to the gospel. We should do all within our power to promote this condition, dealing with the people as the law of God directs, both before and after they come into the church.

All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto a remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7.

This manner of receiving members into the church comes to us by way of commandment.

We also have the following instructions concerning a certain class of sinners:

And again I say unto you, that ye shall be watchful and careful with all inquiry, that ye receive none such among you if they are married, and if they are not married, they shall repent of their sins or ye shall not receive them.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 20.

These scriptures unmistakably teach that we should be watchful and diligent to keep all improper persons out of the church. Not only this, but under certain conditions, designated by the Lord himself, we are to cast out those who are found to be unworthy.

And he that repenteth not of his sins, and confesseth them not, then ye shall bring him before the church, and do with him as the scriptures saith unto you, either by commandment, or by revelation. And this ye shall do that God might be glorified, not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that you may not offend him who is your Lawgiver.—Doctrine and Covenants 64:2.

In Doctrine and Covenants 42:7, we are told that he who steals, or lies, "and will not repent, shall be cast out." We are also told, in the same paragraph, that if any one commits adultery and repents not, he "shall be cast out; but he that has committed adultery and repents with all his heart, and forsaketh it, and doeth it no more, thou shalt forgive; but if he doeth it again, he shall not be forgiven, but shall be cast out." In the closing words of paragraph 22, we have the following: "If he or she do any manner of iniquity, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law, even that of God."

Hearken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called: behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, and by the prayer of your faith ye shall receive my law, that ye may know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me. And I will be your ruler when I come; and, behold, I come quickly; and ye shall see that my law is kept. He that receiveth my law and doeth it, the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you; for it is not meet that the things which belong to the children of the kingdom, should be given to them that are not worthy, or to dogs, or the pearls to be cast before swine.

Now, in the light of the above, is it not putting it too strongly to say that "any one can enter into the church. Its doors are wide open to all. Come saint, come sinner, enter in and partake of the things of the kingdom of God. It is free to all, and none are denied admission"?

The truth is that all are denied admission, and that too by the authority of God, except those who come in harmony with the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is our work to represent God, by precept and example; and it will not do for us to virtually toss back some of the commandments and revelations into the face of our blessed Lord, with the statement that we can not tell who is worthy or unworthy; who has repented, or who has not repented. We leave all to be settled by him when he comes in glory.

WHO SHOULD COME UP UNTO THE LAND OF ZION?

Endeavoring to express a few thoughts under the above caption, I trust I may not entirely fail to present at least that which may interest some who feel inclined Zionward, and I will endeavor to present conditions under two heads: First, those whom the Lord would permit and be pleased with their coming; and, Second, those who should remain in their present location.

Those who may, or should come, must feel that their coming should be with an eye single to the glory of God, and the betterment of his work, themselves, and mankind (see Doctrine and Covenants, section 59, paragraph 1), not forgetting the counsel of God which enjoins upon every one the duty of seeing that all things are prepared beforehand. To do this they should thoroughly acquaint themselves with the privileges of the land and the opportunities for obtaining the necessities of life, purchasing homes, etc., and whether or not they may be more able to assist in doing what God requires of his children as well or better here than elsewhere, not forgetting that God has declared that all who gather up unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties. (See Doctrine and Covenants, section 106.) Also not neglecting to invite the directing hand of God to be with them, neither ignoring the General or Presiding Bishopric. Also bearing in mind that the Saints here, as elsewhere, are mainly in very moderate circumstances, willing, but have not in abundance.

As one who has had some experience in both the spiritual and the temporal affairs of life, I will say that the opportunities for engaging in some of the business affairs of men are certainly good, but being in the suburbs of a great city, capital is required to make a success. A good department store would do an excellent business; but few better opportunities for one could be found anywhere. A good shoe house would have an excellent trade; also a furniture store and wagon and buggy house. These industries, if under the proper management, could be handled in a coöperative way, or under a stock company, as one of the best vacant business blocks in the city now belongs to the Saints. A large amount of building is being done by both Saints and outsiders, and large and extensive oil refineries, where several hundred men will find labor, are being built about two and a half miles from the public square. Property values, everything considered, are not high. Still they will seem high to those coming from rural districts or small places. Labor is in demand at prices ranging from one dollar and fifty cents to three dollars per day. Rents are rather high and houses not plentiful. There is a noble assembly of Saints here, and with few exceptions they are endeavoring to merit the favor, blessings, and salvation of God, officered by wise, willing, God-loving men, not only striving to do their duty, but doing it, who are faithful to that which has been intrusted to their care; being loved and prayerfully supported in their several offices and callings, as the servants of God should be everywhere; neither officers nor members being perfect, although striving to attain to a high standard of excellence of character in Christ, our Lord.

To those who may feel that the conditions as herein suggested would warrant them in making a personal investigation (without doing so they would act unwisely), we would suggest, Take your time, visit the city and country, consult local bishop and stake officers; then decide as wisdom directs.

There are those whom we believe should not come for the present. If you have a home and the necessities of life, and your leaving would directly hinder the progress of your branch by taking out a lively officer or member, that is, a faithful support in the branch, the leaving of which would hinder, weaken, and discourage and probably cause fewer meetings to be held and some of the membership would be weakened thereby to the extent that they would attend fewer times or would cause some few outsiders who may be attending and who show at least an interest to not attend or lose interest in what you may have been laboring to interest them in, then we believe you should remain, as we are commanded to labor together with God for the accomplishment of his work intrusted to all. (See Doctrine and Covenants, section 119, paragraph 9.) And as we are thus commanded, we should feel that where we can most successfully labor with God is where God would be most pleased we should labor.

If you are residing outside of a branch where some outsiders seem interested, and where, when our elders have presented the gospel, the attendance has been reasonably good, and your leaving would almost certainly debar an elder from receiving the necessary support which you have afforded him by your assistance, which may have been in many ways, such as procuring a house, inviting your neighbors, assisting by your godly walk and conversation, as well as caring for the elder at your home, then we certainly believe your duty is to remain, at least until conditions may change, seeking by every available opportunity to accomplish that which is certain to be pleasing unto Him who called us into his work.

Every one is commanded to warn his neighbor, and thus become lively stones in God's building, and thus assist in the establishment of his marvelous work in the land. That peace, redemption, and his salvation may come to the greatest number of his lively children possible, and that it may do so, let us labor, hope, and pray.

In regard to the home, then, it becomes a question of vital interest, not only to every lover of humanity, but of stable government as well, to know how this matter stands. How are the homes of our land meeting this responsibility? President Salisbury of the Wisconsin State Normal School is held by a recent writer in the February Educational Review, to give a very conservative estimate when he says that "there is not one home in ten that is doing anything in definite religious education of children." "This would be true," he continues, "according to estimates of those extensively acquainted with our city and country life, even if it were limited to homes of educated people." A suggestive illustration is just now before me. It is a list of books used by a father for the home reading of his children for each year of their lives up to the sixteenth. It was prepared by a gentleman of culture connected with a prominent firm of book publishers. He says, "It seems to me to contain all the great books which every child should love to read." But the only volume mentioned which directly suggests religious truth is Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, and that is assigned to one of the earlier years with the explanation that it may safely be included because the theology in it will make no impression. Multitudes of children, however, are not only outside of Christian homes, but practically are without all educating influences of home life. The church reaches directly a decreasing number of children every year through any other service than the Sunday-school.

This then is the appalling answer which meets us, "One only in ten of the homes of our land is acknowledging the responsibility laid upon it." In view of these facts, what is the relationship of the home to the Sunday-school—to this noble, self-sacrificing body of men and women, as well as youths, whose hearts have been touched by the needs of others and have been moved upon by the Holy Spirit to enter into this work for the redemption of the human race—this work which parents are to a great extent repudiating and ignoring? Ought it not to be a relation in which a deep and abiding sense of gratitude should permeate every fiber of the heart's beating, within homes that become recipients of such gratuitous labors of love? And this too not the emotional, shapeless gratitude which expends itself in words, but of that abiding, practical kind which manifests itself by a most hearty and cordial coöperation upon the part of the home with the Sunday-school, its officers, and teachers, and pupils. Surely the most unconcerned and indifferent who are receiving from week to week and from year to year such benefits as these from those whom the Lord by the moving of his Holy Spirit has sent to their aid, can not help but feel that duty and gratitude alike bind them to do all in their power to further, and to coöperate with the workers therein to secure the best interests of the school. Between school and home there should exist a perfect understanding of principles and methods, for if this is not the case it will happen only too frequently that one will undo the work of the other. It becomes the duty of parents to see to it that their children are prompt and regular in their attendance, and that they go with their lessons fully prepared, and that at all times respect for the teacher is inculcated in the child. This can not be done if parents themselves indulge in criticism and fault-finding or encourage it in their children. Veneration is a virtue which can not be too highly commended in both young and old and it is sad to think that it will, if things continue as they now are, soon be numbered with the lost arts. If, however, it is taught at home it will be manifested in Sunday-school, and surely all must admit that this is a duty the home owes the school. And just here let me assert that if the home is faithful in the performance of all its obligations, the Sunday-school will be successful to an extent to which it never can be otherwise. The converse of this proposition, however, is not equally true, for the school in the first place has not the same authority as the home, and it has the child but one hour or at most one hour and a half out of one hundred and sixty-eight hours during the week.

A disposition has been manifested upon the part of some educators skilled in the art of pedagogy, to treat lightly the efforts of those men and women not trained in the art of teaching. To such I commend a careful reading of the following which is taken from a recent article in the Educational Review from which I have before quoted:

"Give due honor," says this writer, "and a helping hand to the average Sunday-school. Some millions of children meet in Sunday-schools where the superintendent and teachers have known only the rudiments of education. They are not capable of arranging for themselves a system of lessons. They would not be able to use any system selected for them except the simplest. These schools have been made the target of much unsympathetic criticism, especially by professional educators. These teachers are said to have 'no conception of the organic unity and progressive unfolding of divine revelation.' Their efforts are described as 'feeble exhortations based on vague moralizing.' It has been often said that it would be better to have no Sunday-schools, than to put the responsibility for training human souls into the hands of so incompetent persons.

"Such criticism avails to scare away from Sunday-schools some earnest men and women whose impulses are strong to help others to nobler living. But it does nothing to put in their places teachers with expert knowledge. The religious educators of youth can no more be limited to persons who have graduated from normal schools than motherhood can be limited to women who have received scientific training as nurses. Perhaps the first step in popularizing general education is to bring those who know little of it to respect the calling of the teacher by showing them what good teachers have accomplished. Not less important is it to bring the professional teacher to respect the moral influence of good men and women without educational equipment who undertake definitely to inspire noble character in others. A recent volume on religious education has this impressive passage: 'This intangible but very real quality which is imparted to one's teaching by the spirit and motive with which it is undertaken, this atmosphere which is created by the fact that the teacher's work is undertaken with prayer and carried forward with the supreme desire to render his pupils a real religious service, is the most important part of his work.' To demonstrate the value of truth in life so as to make the pupil feel the presence of God as its author, is not an art which can be learned in a training school. It is the exercise of Christian manhood; and it entitles even an ignorant man to the respect of professional teachers and to a fraternity of sympathy."

And now permit me a few words in conclusion, in order that the subject assigned me may have a closer personal application. I have inquired in regard to the homes of our land and the answer has come from those whose intimate knowledge of the subject entitles them to be heard and it has been that "There is not one home in ten that is doing anything in definite religious training." This we must all admit is a condition to be deplored. But as Latter Day Saints how is it with us?

Are we, too, depending upon the Religio and the Sunday-school for the religious instruction of our children? Personally, as you all know, I am not in a position to answer, but when asked to prepare this paper, I was led to make the inquiry of some occupying a position which should cause the answer to carry weight with it and I was told that not only did they believe the estimate of President Salisbury too high in regard to the world at large but it was their candid opinion that not one home in ten in our own church was doing anything in the line of definite religious instruction of the young.

I am certainly very unwilling to accept such an assertion, neither can I disprove it. But if indeed it be true then I ask, how long is such a condition of things to obtain and is it not high time that a remedy was sought?

It was not to Abraham and Moses only that God made known his will in regard to this. When the gospel was restored, with it came definite instructions in regard to this. A commandment was given to "Bring up your children in light and truth." When these instructions were not heeded, God spoke to some of the transgressors, even calling them by name. To Frederick G. Williams he said: "I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth. But verily I say unto you . . . you have continued under this condemnation; you have not taught your children light and truth, according to the commandments, and that wicked one hath power, as yet, over you, and this is the cause of your affliction. . . . If you will be delivered: you shall set in order your own house."

To Joseph Smith he said, "You have not kept the commandments, and must needs stand rebuked before the Lord. Your family must needs repent and forsake some things, and give more earnest heed unto your sayings, or be removed out of their place. What I say unto one I say unto all: Pray always, lest that wicked one have power in you, and remove you out of your place. My servant Newel K. Whitney, also a bishop of my church, hath need to be chastened, and set in order his family;" etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6-10.

Could enunciation of any law be plainer than this? It will not do to say that it was for the beginning of time or yet for its meridian, for the correspondence between the law of the Lord then and now is in perfect harmony as all must admit.

From what has been said, we are forced to the following conclusion, namely: the relationship of the home to the Sunday-school, as it now exists, is just the reverse of what God intended it should be. Instead of a help, to be received with thankfulness by the home, the Sunday-school has had thrown upon it almost the entire duty of the religious instruction of the children of the church. If this be true, need we seek further for an answer to the question, why the vital piety of the Sunday-school is not deeper; why our children drift away from the church and its influence? To me it would seem wiser to inquire for the old paths and to walk in them.

I ask, is there not a remedy for this state of things? Has the church, as a church, no responsibility for its existing? Was the commandment: "If ye love me feed my lambs," given only to the impulsive Peter, or was it intended for a test to other ministers as well?

Our Sunday-schools, I am persuaded, are as a whole doing nobly the work they have undertaken, and to their influence much very much of all the interest now being manifested by the young people of the church in the work of the Lord is due, and yet upon them God never placed the responsibility which he has placed upon the home, and while he promises a blessing to those who labor faithfully therein, there is no curse of a broken law attaching to those who fail.

This can not be said of the home; and what affects the home affects the church, the world, and the pillars of society with an influence bounded only by eternity.

Is there no remedy, then, for the state of things now existing in the world, and in the church, in regard to the religious training of the young? Can Zion ever be redeemed while such a state of things exists? Can the fountain rise above its source or the average of righteousness in the church exceed that of the homes constituting the church? If not, then,—I speak as unto wise men and women,—is it not time a remedy was sought?

The Sunday-School Lesson for July 24, 1904.

THE UNSEEN CHRIST.

"And e'er beside us on the way,
The unseen Christ doth move."

Somewhere we have read those words, and the lesson of to-day recalls them to us.

We look back to the time when Mary of Bethany sat at the feet of Jesus in the little home he loved to visit; and we read of John, the beloved disciple, who leaned upon the breast of Jesus at supper in the upper room in Jerusalem; we think of the disciples who were the companions of Jesus in his ministry for three years. It seems to us that those people of the past had great opportunity to rejoice in the nearness of Christ to them, and that they were greatly blessed in hearing his words of wisdom and in seeing his miracles of power.

Truly, they were blessed, but are we overlooking our own great blessing in the opportunity of having with us the unseen Christ? His parting promise was that he will be with his saints even to the end of the world. Are we conscious of receiving the fulfillment of that promise? We ought to be. Each member of the church of Christ should be conscious of being in living communion with Christ. Each of us should be a living branch of the great Vine. And we, though now we see him not, should have those evidences of his nearness to us that will cause us to rejoice "with joy unspeakable and full of glory."

Our religion should be to us a very practical thing. It should enter into our every-day life. We should live for, hope for, and realize the presence of Christ with us now, though we see him not.

Many Saints have the testimony to bear that "The living Christ is loving,

And the loving Christ is alive."

They bear testimony that they have realized his nearness to them, and that they have had his power manifested in their behalf.

And this testimony should increase among his people. It will increase and not diminish, if the Saints live according to the law of God which he has given to us.

IN WHAT DO WE REJOICE?

Peter wrote in the language of our golden text that the saints of his day were rejoicing with joy unspeakable and full of glory,

His language leads us to understand that this was a result of their faith in him.

Are we rejoicing in Christ as an unseen but dear friend? Are we believing in him? Are we proving our faith in our lives? Are we enjoying the manifestations of his friendship? Or are we loving the world and its pleasures so well that we give little thought to Christ and his gospel? Is it strange that we do not know Christ, that we are not conscious of his nearness to us, if we give no thought to him or to the principles of truth he gave his life to establish in the earth?

The Spirit of Christ is given to those who are just and true. It is written also, "Ye receive the Spirit through prayer." It does not come, except sometimes in warning, to the careless and unconcerned; it does not enter in as a congenial guest with the workers of iniquity. But it does enter in where human souls are seeking to know the truth and to make themselves better in nature.

And where the Spirit of Christ enters in and abides, human hearts become loving and humble, pure and patient.

THE TEACHING POINTS.

Notice that the teaching points are drawn from statements in the lesson.

The first teaching point in this lesson is suggested by verse 8 of the lesson text. Compare them and see.

The second and third points are drawn from verse 9. Read the comments in the Senior Quarterly on that verse, especially the last paragraph of the comments.

The fourth point is based on verse 11. Notice that those men who lived so long ago, under the law of Moses, were inspired by the Spirit of Christ.

The fifth point is taken from the closing line of verse 12. Read carefully the explanation of this language given in the study of the text. It reveals to us a very beautiful significance in the attitude of the cherubim above the mercy-seat.

Do you think we are teaching the word of God as thoroughly as we should in the Sunday-school?

We do not grow in knowledge, either secular or spiritual, without effort on our part. Labor is the price of success everywhere.

Many teachers complain that their classes do not study at home.

A few classes complain that their teachers do not come to class prepared to teach.

A visitor in a certain branch found pupils, teachers, and even the superintendent unprepared on the lesson one Sunday morning. How much good do you think was done that morning in that Sunday-school?

Some one may suggest that, perhaps, they came together to study. The visitor saw but one Quarterly in the school. We do not know whether there were any Bibles there or not.

The indications are that the lambs of that flock were not being carefully tended.

"If thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God."—Proverbs 2: 4.

The language, "If thou criest after knowledge and liftest up thy voice for understanding," implies prayer, a seeking to the source of wisdom, to Him who is able to give liberally without upbraiding.

Whether we are studying the lessons outlined in the Quarterly or in any other scriptural lesson, we make the best progress when we seek to God for the truth, when we realize the necessity and the blessedness of receiving light from him.

Whether we gather together in the teachers' meeting or seat ourselves at home to study the word of God, it should be with the earnest desire to know the truth from him, and there is not the slightest doubt that, when such is the case, the Spirit of truth will do its work and will guide into all truth every honest, earnest heart that cries after the knowledge of God and seeks it as for hidden treasure.

ANNA SALYARDS.

Benefits of a Circulating Library.

The word benefit means to aid, to do good, to gain advantage; and surely this should be the main object in the establishing of a circulating library in our district; to aid in imparting knowledge to the developing mind. Are you willing to take advantage of the opportunity offered if a library can be established? If so, are the schools of this district willing to assist in promoting this work? And remember we can sit down and build air-castles, and picture out how grand it would be to have access to a library of good books; and it may be the desire of our heart to have one, but will that desire ever be gratified if we fold our hands and wish? No! "Faith without works is dead." A library without works and means and books is a myth. With the little aid I have received I am striving hard to establish a circulating library in this district; and believe in time much good can be accomplished along this line if our schools will endeavor to do what they can. Let us see if we can think of a few benefits for your consideration that might be derived had we a circulating library.

WHAT IS A LIBRARY?

Let us not conclude that a bookcase filled up with a promiscuous lot of books constitutes a library. A library should contain books, magazines, and literature that will be helpful to those who read the same; something that will make us better men and women, educators along the line of right, creating that desire to better ourselves, and in so doing better our fellow men. It is not necessary that all the books should be of a sober line of thought. Let us mix joy and pleasure in the building up of our character; it will only make it brighter and more glorious as it develops under the influence of such. It does the mind and body good to have a hearty laugh. Then let us be very careful in the selection of our books that we read; let it be good, wholesome literature, for time is too precious to spend in reading trash. I am led to believe that the character of our reading-matter, whether of books or papers, is doing more to give human life and purpose direction and incentive than any other agency that touches the interests of humanity. With our library we can place good reading in the reach of some who perhaps are not able, financially, to purchase all the reading-matter they desire. Also those who are inclined to neglect their reading will it not help to create that desire for reading? I believe there are many dear friends and Saints who would appreciate this opportunity to enlighten their minds, to better prepare themselves with a knowledge of transpiring events. We are living in an age in which are transpiring great events, issues of great importance. History is being made so rapidly that the mind becomes awe-stricken at its magnitude. "Time or tide waits for no one." We can not afford to be ignorant; let us be up and doing and alive to our surroundings.

NO TIME TO READ.

But some may whisper, "I haven't time to read." Bless you, then drop some of those things that take up time and study and read a little. Do not think it is necessary to devour a book all at one reading; this is a mistake; it is not the number of books we read, it is how we read them. Some of our best and noblest men, who have made their mark in this world, have generally been the men who have in boyhood life formed the habit of reading at every available moment, whether five minutes or five hours.

GETTING KNOWLEDGE.

God has commanded us to get knowledge. It is not pleasing in his sight that we remain ignorant. We only narrow our sphere of usefulness. Improve upon the talent he has given you and if you are worthy and capable he will give you more. It seems to me education is one of the grand principles involved in this life, to have us enjoy more and realize more fully the goodness and mercies of God. Let us all be students together in this great life-school, striving to help each other. And as we study the great principles of life and obtain a better knowledge of their bearing upon humanity, may we use it for the betterment and building up of humanity. Then the true aim of establishing a library in this district should be to place before the Saints and friends reading-matter by which they may obtain light and knowledge, and advance into the field of usefulness.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

And think of our boys and girls: many promising young minds eagerly searching for knowledge and truth in these latter days. Would not a library assist them? Books are like companions, and once more let me impress upon your minds, this: The Scriptures teach us, "Beware of false prophets." Parents should teach their children, beware of false books. Their outward appearance may glitter; but within their lids is imbued poisonous thoughts. It is said that between the age of seven and fourteen years the mind is in its most receptive condition. If so, is this not a golden opportunity? Let us place within the reach of these budding minds healthful, energizing, and pure intellectual food. Some one has said: "Show me the books a man reads and I will tell you the kind of a man he is." There are many parents who are very careful in choosing companions for their children who perhaps never bestow a thought upon the kind of literature they read. And, dear friends, our country is being flooded with literature (so-called) hurtful and unfit to read. How often we see young America with a yellow-back pamphlet, "Diamond Dick," "Nick Carter," or some other blood-curdling narrative. Their longing for them seems to increase, for many times they carry them around tucked away in their pocket ready for instant use; and yes, I have known cases where they read them in school, with one eye on the teacher and the other following the adventures of the hero (?). Is this the kind of knowledge the young mind should be fed on? Let us give them books that will enlighten and ennoble, planting deeply in the heart and mind germs of thought that when developed will produce men and women with a character that will help them withstand the trials and afflictions of this life better.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

I trust that in my feeble efforts I have dropped a word that will encourage and strengthen those who have taken up this work and perhaps made it brighter for some who are doubting. Let us work together faithfully and patiently and I feel sure good will come from our library. It may seem small at first and our efforts feeble, but let us ask aid from the Father, the "giver of all good gifts," and I am sure our work will not be in vain. "United we stand, divided we fall" are words to be impressed upon your minds in this latter-day work.

Now if every school which has taken up this work will keep alive, grasp every opportunity to build up and advance the library work, who dare estimate the results and benefits in days to come? We have no use for drones, we want working bees who will fly forth into their sphere of labor and come back laden with honey to help build the foundation and frame-work of this library, and day by day to help fill the honeycomb with the meats and fruits of this life, so that when the Master comes to gather in the storehouse the fruits of our labors it may be full and overflowing and acceptable in his sight.

Are we going to have a library or not? Remember the librarian can not turn them out by machinery; it will require of each school a little aid. At least four fifths depends upon the schools and I will strive mightily to take care of the other one fifth so long as I am your librarian. We have taken the first step, let us prepare for the next one and may it be forward. Once more let me impress upon your minds and especially the local librarians that there is something to do in this work. Why, bless you, one of the first words in our plan denotes motion. Circulating does not signify to stand still. We might apply it to a backward motion, but let ours be forward and upward. Let us labor in unity for the advancement of this work and ask God's blessings to rest upon our labors; and may the circle of our circulating library ever widen and brighten in days to come is the desire and prayer of,

Your district librarian,

WILL R. ADAMS.

The hot weather brings the subject of cooling drinks to the fore, but alas! very few people know anything about their action or effect on the human system. For that reason Doctor Rusby's discussion of nonalcoholic beverages in the July issue of the Twentieth Century Home is really a valuable contribution. All who indulge freely in summer drinks should make the information here recorded a part of themselves.

Letter Department.

Dear Herald: I have now been in the field as a general missionary four years last month; twenty-seven years, the 14th of last April, in the church. The first sermon arrested me,—I am glad. This gospel has done much for me, and I hope to ever be useful in the work as long as I live. I was at the last general conference at Kirtland; was never at a general conference before. While in the Temple on the fourteenth day of April I thought, Well, now I am twenty-seven years old to-day. J. J. Cornish, of Michigan, baptized wife and I at St. Thomas, Ontario. Another thought occurred. I was twenty-seven years old when on the Atlantic Ocean, thirty-one years ago, coming to St. Thomas, Ontario,—I and dear wife, just married, in England, coming to Canada to spend our honeymoon. We have been trying to do so ever since. Some few incidents of sadness have happened to us along the line. I also thought of my first-born child, Mary Emily. She was twenty-seven years old when taken home to rest with the great majority,—Mrs. M. E. Grover, of Chicago. She is lying in Oakwood Cemetery, South Chicago. Three twenty-sevens I shall not forget for awhile. Some strange things passed through my mind about the history of the wonderful building I was in, its dedication and blessings given there in 1836; and the benefit derived from that endowment given in my native land, England. Proud Preston and Manchester came before my mind, and the river Rible at Preston, where hundreds were baptized.

I felt glad that God did send messengers, and somewhere about thirty thousand souls were brought to the gospel in England and Wales as a result of the endowment of this house. Oh brethren! We need endowment now as then to reach the hearts of the sons and daughters of men. We are, now, what we are largely through our personal effort in this work, not through an endowment as given then. This was the effect of a faithful effort of the faithful few at Kirtland to build the temple as ordered of the Lord. Sacrifice, sacrifice! not picnic and fun! I thought of my dear brethren with whom I have worked in this marvelous work. I saw their dear faces before me looking careworn, wrinkled, and some with the hair gone, some white and ripe to go home, some sturdy and strong yet in the battle like an oak amidst the tempest. I saw the Religians and Sunday-school soldiers, the young lions coming along to fill the places of the old soldiers of the cross. I looked to the dear boys, one each side of our President to support him. The boy Fred I saw playing with the rest of the boys at Plano, Illinois, about twenty-two years ago, and now before the vast assembly at a general conference. And I thought with wonder and amazement about the other boy, R. C. Evans! This is the boy I saw in London, Ontario, thirty-one years ago. First we saw him, I think, with bare feet, selling newspapers, and four years later he came to St. Thomas to help open the work there with Johnny Cornish. I was glad to hear Johnny tell us about better things coming by and by.

The marvelous is in this work; and I noticed that we are living in masked houses, and that we are not always what we appear to be, mental cripples, and mental giants are not known always unless put to the test. I thought of the college, the taking away some of the laborers from the harvest-field, when we need both education and money to carry out this momentous work, and it seemed as if selfishness had the best of us. O Lord, have mercy on us and help us to throw away our idols and do something for this latter-day work, pushing it to the ends of the earth. I looked at the cornered condition of our printing houses, and our houses of instruction. Talk about not wanting colleges. What about the towers that David told some one to count? Marvelous institution! (See chapters 60-62 of Isaiah.) What institution is this? It tells us we will not always live in log huts and common schools. I thought of J. F. McDowell's statement, "The foundation of God standeth sure," and Bro. Heman C. Smith's story of touch and environment. When we keep the law of a proper sacrifice as given us in the three standard books of the church, this will bring us in touch with God.

We are having some nice meetings in Bro. Martin Snell's house. The Lord has called him to the office of priest. He has been holding Sunday-school for years in his house, is an honest man, well thought of, and God thinks well of him, too. I will tell you why: When I came here three weeks ago, he said, "Bro. Phillips, come help me take an inventory of all I am worth, I want to pay the Lord what I owe him." We did so. The amount was five thousand dollars. He had paid two hundred dollars and had one hundred and twenty-five dollars to send to R. C. Evans, the agent of London District, and the rest he will pay as soon as he can. He has a family of nine, and some time ago he sent nine dollars to the call of Graceland College. This is touch, and these are some of the ways we may reach the environment of the high-school teachers, the angels of heaven.

I am holding three meetings weekly and three Sundays. Several outsiders come to our meetings.

T. A. PHILLIPS.

TORONTO, Ontario, June 23, 1904.

Dear Herald: I have recently been made to experience the force and veracity of the proverb that "As iron sharpeneth iron, so the face of a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend."

Owing to adverse circumstances, I had become somewhat discouraged; and had about concluded to resign any future letters or articles for the HERALD's columns into abler and better hands than mine, knowing that many such exist in the church; but my heart has been made glad, and my spirit made to rejoice at what I saw and heard at the recent conference at Humber Bay, Ontario.

Delegates and friends were in force from all parts of the Dominion of Canada; or at least, from the Province of Ontario; and the scene presented to my spiritual, as well as physical vision, by the large tent holding upwards of four hundred persons, (not including the many standing outside to listen,) was one that time will not easily efface from the tablets of my memory.

I had no idea of the number of Saints in this fair and vast dominion until then; and was greatly delighted and surprised to be informed by our esteemed president, Elder R. C. Evans, that the total number of the Canadian membership exceeds two thousand.

The choir, augmented by ladies from London, Ontario, Stratford, St. Marys, Niagara Falls, and other parts, materially contributed to the sweetness and enjoyment of the vast concourse assembled in the large tent, Sr. Minnie Faulds being chorister. The organ, during the morning services, was efficiently presided at by our esteemed young Sr. Phemie Gerrie, of this city; while the writer officiated, by her desire, during the afternoon and evening gatherings. The powerful tones of the organ, mingling with so many sweet young voices, recalled to the writer's mind the sweet language of poetical inspiration in one of our choicest hymns:

"Voice and instrument combining, while the no less beautifully appropriated phraseology of the one hundred and fiftieth psalm seemed to reverberate through the ringing chambers of memory as I played: "Praise ye the Lord. Praise God in his sanctuary: praise him in the firmament of his power. Praise him for his mighty acts: praise him according to his excellent greatness. Praise him with the sound of the trumpet: praise him with the psaltery and harp. Praise him with the timbrel and dance: praise him with the stringed instruments and organs. Praise him upon the loud cymbals: praise him upon the high sounding cymbals. Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord."
All confess that Christ is Lord,"

As the evening shadows fell, there being no lights in the tent, it seemed to bring with it added solemnity, holier thoughts, purer aspirations, God-given and heaven-inspired desires upon all present. The tent borders being raised, allowed the beautiful breezes from the great lake of Ontario to waft in, mingled with the sweet smell of the pure and surrounding country air, laden with the gentle hum of insects, and the odor of many sweet-scented flowers. And my soul exclaimed with David, "O Lord, how manifold are thy works; in wisdom hast thou made them all. The earth also is full of thy riches."

Yet, Zion will be more beautiful even than Ontario! Then it must be fair indeed, and well might the prophet plead "Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities."—Isaiah 33: 20.

To see so many young, bright, eager faces of Zion's young men and maidens gathered there each wearing the Z. R.-L. S. emblem, the badge of one of the most hopeful, progressive, and promising societies in the whole church, was a scene of glad omen to those of us who have reached (perhaps passed) middle life; for who or what shall portend destruction or dissolution to a church whose veins glow and leap and throb with such fresh and happy young life as was these assembled in most gratifying plentitude, and in potentiality for good?

Most gratifying of all to myself and my dear partner was the kindly welcome we received from the Canadians present; many of whom we had never seen before. Last, but not least, as a result of the recent conference, (the first I have attended since the year 1891, I think, when I was sent as delegate from London, England, Branch to Birmingham,) I am more than ever before confirmed, not only in the veracity and authenticity of this latter-day "marvelous work and a wonder," but that I must not lay down my pen while I can work in it. The many kindly and encouraging enconiums from all parts concerning my astronomical articles in the HERALD columns, have simply filled my soul with surprise and gratitude; and make me resolve to continue the good work while the HERALD is willing to admit to its pages my humble effusions. I sent off to-day a short article to Autumn Leaves, entitled "The wonder of astronomy"; and am now finishing a longer article which I commenced for our beloved HERALD some time ago of a most interesting nature but laid aside in the hour of my discouragement and sorrow.

F. R. TUBB.

FAIRLAND, Indian Territory, July 9, 1904.

Editors Herald: On May 7 I left home for my field of labor, viz.: The Spring River District, and since that time I have been constantly engaged in my line of duty as a missionary. It is a great pleasure to me to be found in the path of duty and doing all I can for the work of the Lord; and I realize that there is great danger that one may relax his interest after fully enlisting with all his heart and soul in the army of the Lord. So far as I have become acquainted with the field I like it very well, but it will be some time before I get as fully acquainted as I was in Southern Illinois. The district met in conference June 4 and 5, and it seemed to be a blessing to all.

This place was lately visited by a severe cyclone which killed four persons and destroyed many houses and uprooted many trees. And I judge the hearts of the people are failing them for fear, from the way they run into their cellars when they see a dark cloud coming. The good book says they shall go into the caves of the earth for fear of the Lord when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth. They build those caves for the purpose of hiding from the cyclone, and I saw one that lately had sixteen persons housed in it at the same time. But when we see the great majority of the people running after the pleasures of the world we need not be surprised to see the judgments of God more fearful in the future. I hope to increase in wisdom and knowledge and be able to abide in the truth. There has been an unusual amount of rain all through this region and the rivers have been raging, and the crops are suffering, and notwithstanding the elements seem to be combined against us, yet we have been busy. I labored with Bro. Keek before the conference, but have been laboring with Bro. Riley since.

In the faith,
F. M. SLOVER.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, July 9, 1904.

Dear Herald: I have been here four weeks to-morrow, and we have had good attendance and good interest. I have led thirty-six down into the waters, baptized them beneath the waves, and brought them into the kingdom of God, and others are near the door of the kingdom. Some that have been baptized here did belong to the Christian Church, some of their best members, and there is quite a stir here among the Christians. As one of the servants of God has said, "Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?" Here yesterday morning on the streets, the enemy's flag was unfurled in the form of a bill headed, "Mormonism unmasked," with the name of Clark Braden attached to it. He will begin his work Wednesday the 13th. We expect Bro. J. F. McDowell or Bro. I. N. White here to help us to defend the truth. Bro. F. A. Smith will look after the matter.

Dear Saints, please remember the little band of Saints here, for we have a noble band of Saints, and I do hope and pray that God will bless them, and that they may have the spirit of patience, and that the truth will not suffer loss.

Your brother,
W. A. SMITH.

GLADSTONE, Illinois, July 8, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am glad to be instructed in the way of knowledge and truth as I find it in a good many letters in your columns. I have been expecting some of the elders would call on us and preach some to the people in this place; but for some reason they have not come. The Methodist people offered the use of their church. I think they could not strike a place where they need preaching any more than they do in Gladstone. My house is always open to shelter the messengers of truth.

The idea that is the grandest of all ideas, is that of the resurrection. The apostle said, "If Christ be not risen from the dead then is our preaching vain, and our hope is also vain and we are found false witnesses of God." And it is true that Jesus did lead captivity captive, and said to the prisoners, Go forth. But will they be captivated the second time? It is to be hoped they will not; but the world seems to be very indifferent as to wanting to know the truth. When I think of the love of the Master and his condescension to those that were bound and imprisoned from the presence of God and the glory of his power, it surpasses all understanding. A man may love father, mother, and friends, but who hath loved his enemies even unto death? Death is a great monster; but the love of God is mightier than death. John said, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, for on such the second death hath no power." Brethren, pray for me that I may have part also.

In hope,
J. L. RUST.

BLISS, Idaho, June 30, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have just returned from a month's trip to Payette and Weiser country; attended the Democratic Convention at Weiser on the 6th inst. They passed a resolution against polygamy and unlawful cohabitation and had a warm fight with the Mormons, who claimed that the resolution was a slur on the Mormon church. After the Mormons and their friends had made several speeches against the resolution, a delegate, Mr. Pence, said he understood the Mormons did not believe in polygamy, and if they did not the resolution would not hurt them, and he asked them to declare themselves but they would not say that they did or did not. When the convention saw no answer could be obtained, a delegate arose who had been voting with them and asked that his vote might be changed; said that the Mormons had told him they did not believe in polygamy; that he was now satisfied they did and were dishonest, and he wanted his vote recorded against them from now on. One of the Mormon delegates said the Democratic party in Idaho would lose ten thousand Mormon votes if that resolution passed. It passed and the Mormon church is on record.

I baptized three men near Weiser, and think if I can get back in the fall or winter that I can do more. The people said they wanted to hear, but were too busy now; but if I would come when they were through their fall work they would pay my expenses.

From there I went to Midvale where I left my team last fall, and commenced meetings. Two Campbellite ministers were there and asked me if I would debate. I told them I would debate any fair proposition. So the next evening they were there and when I gave liberty they both aired their knowledge. I finally called them down, told them we were in meeting, and a good example must be set at my meetings. One of them presented two propositions for discussion. I told him I could not affirm one or deny the other without affirming what I did not believe and denying what I did believe. He then told the people that I had refused to affirm the proposition that William H. Kelley, president of the Twelve, had debated with Clark Braden, and said that was the way with our elders: one would deny what another would affirm, etc.

When he sat down I told him he was mistaken; that no representative of our church had ever affirmed such a proposition; that I would affirm the proposition that E. L. Kelley presented to Clark Braden. The first one then said that he had copied that proposition verbatim and I challenged the proof. He produced the Braden-Kelley Debate, but when he had read it, he admitted he had changed it. I then challenged him to discuss the first proposition. He said he would if I would deny his second, which was that the kingdom of God began to be established by John the Baptist and perfected by Christ and the apostles. I told him I could not, for we believed it. He said we did not as a church. I then showed him our compendium, and so there was no discussion. It was Reverend Williams, I think. He made no friends for his cause and I lost none for ours. I am more encouraged than I have ever been in this mission, and the scattered Saints seem to be.

I want to say to the elders that it will pay to travel through that part of the country with a team, as in traveling from valley to valley we have to stop at the road-houses or buy hay of them at one dollar per one hundred pounds. May the Lord bless all.

J. H. CONDIT.

OMAHA, Nebraska.

Editors Herald: The work in the Northern Nebraska District is on the increase, and all is being done that can be done at this time of the year when farmers are so busy. Bro. Wight has been looking up the work at Bonesteel and in Central District. Bro. W. M. Self has been trying to do some street preaching at Blair, assisted by Brn. Fry and Lytle, but Blair is a veritable Sodom, so far as the gospel is concerned. It generally takes about two months for the ministry to reach their fields, and some of them only preach a few times until they hie them home again for various reasons. It seems, to many Saints, that there is too much running home. Of course in case of sickness there is excuse, but while they tarry at home the work is languishing. I have been in the city since conference assisting Bro. Weston, and preaching at South Omaha during Bro. Fry's absence. Bro. W. M. Self and I go the 15th inst. to Decatur to hold a two-day meeting, and may, perhaps, continue for a week if the interest justifies. Bro. Huff is hustling for the college, and he is a hustler of the right sort. Bro. Fry is at home to look after family affairs. No sickness except the case of old Elder Rumell, who is bed-ridden, suffering from senility resulting from old age.

In gospel bonds,

J. SMILEY STRAIN.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 20, 1904.

Editors Herald: Wishing to view personally some of the points of interest engaging the attention of the Saints just now in the regions round about the center place of Zion, Friday morning, the 11th inst., I left Lamoni and at evening was at Holden, Missouri, domiciled at Bro. A. H. Parsons, who is now living happily in this place. Upwards of two hundred Saints are residing here, who seem to be contented and enjoying themselves well. Judging from the casual view it is rather a desirable place in which to live, where many conveniences are at command,—the best place yet seen where homes at reasonable prices may be secured. Prices can not remain a great while as they are in this age of land-grabbing and race for the preferred. The soil is productive and there are stone, timber, water, and railway facilities. Large farms surround the town. Fruits grow in abundance and in variety. Ripe strawberries and cherries were strongly in evidence; apples, peaches, plums, pears, were growing upon the trees; and currants and other smaller fruits seemed to be in abundance. New potatoes were at hand. There are upwards of twenty-five hundred inhabitants residing in Holden, so reported, and there is an abundant opportunity for others to come.

There was a large attendance at the Sunday-school Sunday morning, under the guidance of competent teachers, good order and discipline being observed. At eleven o'clock the writer occupied the pulpit with one of the brothers in charge, a good audience being present. At half past one o'clock in the afternoon six persons were baptized in the font of the Christian church. At half past two o'clock in the afternoon they were confirmed, after which followed a prayer and testimony meeting, an excellent spirit prevailing. I chanced to not be a stranger in Holden as there are many residing there whom I knew years ago in other States, who have come here and made their homes,—names too numerous to mention here. Sr. Devore calls Holden a paradise. Whether it is just this or not, there are a good many inviting things about it,—a place where people of small means may secure comfortable homes. Shade-trees line the streets and there are flowers in profusion. It occurred to us that a more appropriate name than that of Holden would be Forest City. It was not only a pleasure to visit the place but to meet so many whose homes I had visited years ago in other parts and helped to point them to the true way in which lies safety. A pleasing feature that impressed me was, I did not hear a murmur of dissension, discord, or evil speaking and hateful gossip in Holden. The Psalmist exclaimed, "How beautiful it is for brethren to dwell together in unity," which holds good yet.

I left Holden at four o'clock in the afternoon and arrived at Independence about an hour later, in time to attend the evening meeting at the church. The powers in control elected that the visitor should bear the burden of the evening service, which he did with freedom and with what seemed to be interest to the hearers.

I stayed over two days at Independence seeing what was in sight, and meeting friends as opportunity offered. There is a striking contrast between this place and Holden. Property is high here. None but the well-to-do need apply. The city is improving, however, and the business interests of the Saints reported as succeeding. Wednesday the 15th, I spent in Kansas City. The following day I returned to Lamoni, observing that there was but little difference in the growth of vegetation at Holden, Independence, and Lamoni. Excessive rains and the cold, backward spring it is likely had to do with it, as usually it is estimated that things at Holden and Independence are from one to two weeks earlier than at Lamoni.

WM. H. KELLEY.

Editors Herald: I trust that it is not necessary for me to tell the church that I am deeply interested in the work which, as I believe, God has solemnly intrusted to our care. It may be that my humble part of that work is nearly done; but I can truly say that my interest deepens as my years increase. It may be wrong, but is nevertheless true, that I feel, from time to time, a deep regret that I am able to do so little for the upbuilding of so noble a cause.

At the last general conference, I was glad to note, upon the part of so many, a disposition to get at the right. The dispassionate and careful manner in which matters were discussed and disposed of, as a rule, was indeed commendable. This was especially true of that ever recurring College question. If a mistake was made, it is not the first, and, perhaps, will not be the last. The body alone is responsible for its errors, and must correct its own mistakes. To attempt to reverse this order is, in my opinion, an attempt to "steady the ark of God," and is therefore, fraught with the gravest of consequences. Why do I say so? Because we are under the most solemn obligations to be governed by the law of "common consent." (See Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1; 27: 4.)

The Book of Mormon says: "Now it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right; therefore this shall ye observe, and make it your law to do your business by the voice of the people. And if the time comes that the voice of the people doth choose iniquity, then is the time that the judgments of God will come upon you: Yea, then is the time he will visit you with great destruction, even as he hath hitherto visited this land."—Mosiah 13: 4.

Doctrine and Covenants emphasizes the supremacy of an act of the body. Speaking of individual ministers it says: "Their right to free speech, their right to liberty of conscience, does not permit them as individuals to frustrate the commands of the body in conference assembled. They are sent out as ministers to preach the gospel, and their voices if opposed to what may be presented to the conference should be heard in the conferences, and not in the mission fields, to prevent the accomplishment of the object with which the officers of the church have been intrusted." (See Section 125: 16.)

I presume it will be admitted that the above is binding upon all boards and quorums of the church as well as upon all ministers in their individual capacities. Dear Saints, where is our safety? To openly or secretly invade the order which God has established is not an evidence of true faith, but manifests a disposition to have our own way; and when we begin to argue over again matters which have been disposed of by the body, and put them into an official document to show why we do not carry out the expressed wishes or order of the body, it emphasizes that disposition which stands in the way. I am sorry, very sorry, to see this for it will surely tend to destroy confidence and produce schism, as other follies and mistakes have hitherto done.

Last month it was my privilege to attend conferences at Bevier and Stewartville, Missouri, which represented the Far West and Northeastern Missouri Districts. I met many old friends at Bevier, some of whom I had not seen for years. Was glad after the varied experiences of the past, to meet them in mutual friendship and love. While there I spoke three times and gave twenty-eight patriarchal blessings. I could not accommodate all, because my small degree of physical strength gave way; but I enjoyed my work.

At Stewartville I spoke five times, but could give no blessings because I had no stenographer. Sr. Stella Wight of Argentine, Kansas, was my stenographer at Bevier, and she worked faithfully and well.

At Independence (which is now located in my field) I spent a week, spoke once, and gave six blessings. Numbers more applied. I was fortunate in finding Sr. Belle Robinson-James at her mother's, ready and able, as usual, to make good reports.

What is there that brings more solid satisfaction to the soul, than to be able to do something for the Master's cause? O may we learn the simple but important lessons of faith, trust, good will, justice, impartiality, obedience, and love, and then the work will move as never before. I believe if we will confine ourselves to our part of the work, God will take care of his part.

Your brother in the truth,

J. R. LAMBERT.

COLLINWOOD, Ohio, July 11, 1904.

Dear Herald: It is not often that your readers hear from the Cleveland Branch, but I, for one, feel to-night a little wellspring of thankfulness so bubbling up in my heart that I must send you this testimony, one of many happy experiences since coming into the work some two years ago, my consideration and interest first being aroused by the manifest temperance of a visiting elder to our family board. As a teacher in the branch I have always tried to inculcate a greater respect for the original law of dieting these "temples" of the Holy Spirit; have always contended that the horrifying transportation of innocent creatures and their brutal slaughter was a thing apart from our God, who is Love! I have encountered such opposition from those who should know more than myself on this subject that I have been utterly discouraged and felt much like withdrawing from the fight and the faith. However, prayer helped me to this extent: I asked for some little sign of encouragement that my efforts were acceptable to the Lord if not to my brother; and now in answer comes Elder Alvin Knisley's article in the July Leaves and Sr. Warnock's splendid study on the Word of Wisdom in the HERALD of the 6th, also Apostle Greene speaking at our last sacrament meeting voiced the same beautiful sentiment.

Do you not think that the Christ had this on his mind when he impressed upon his disciples the importance of understanding what they prayed for—first, the coming of the kingdom? and who shall deny but that in that kingdom "none shall hurt nor destroy"? But some of your readers may contend that Christ himself ate flesh; well, send me your reason or reasons for so thinking and I will return you three good Bible proofs that he did not for each fair reason advanced—that is three for one!

Now a little news regarding the Cleveland Branch and its work: we are enjoying the comfort of a beautiful little church home on Wade Park Avenue, and also the privilege of holding services each Sunday in Wade Park and thus reach many who are strangers to our greater light, Bro. D. A. Anderson enjoying fine liberty; then again two evenings each week finds the local officers telling of the gospel to street-corner crowds down town, quite a number asking for our booklets and returning same next night for another; a chart of Bro. A. H. Parson's draws us a fine crowd,—on one occasion taking them away from one of those "ism" meetings across the street!

Incidentally I might say that not far from our "pitch" there is erected a great golden calf! It is only the life-size trade mark of a great packing and slaughter-house, but when I look around upon the sin and misery of the neighborhood its shadows, there steals over me the realization of a latter-day Israel that needs a latter-day Isaiah to cry fearlessly to the nations of the abominations indorsed by Christian people!

Thanking God for his grace toward me and for the evidence that a better day is dawning for all phases of his glorious creation, when his will shall be done here as in heaven, I go forward emboldened to help make ready for the coming of that kingdom.

Editors Herald: Your paper is again a welcome visitor in our home. We delayed taking it for a few months, and it seemed as though one of our family were absent during that time. I am glad, while we are isolated, (there being no Saints nearer than thirty-five or forty miles,) that we can have the pleasure of conversing with so many through the HERALD. I do enjoy reading the letters from the Saints, especially those from the elders who tell of the progress of the work, their travels, the meetings they have attended, and how the good Spirit was enjoyed. After reading such letters I solace myself with the thought that our reunion (to be held at Crossland, Kentucky, beginning July 13) will be just such a meeting where the Saints will enjoy the opportunity of communing with each other and the blessed Spirit. The Saints held a reunion last year at the above-named place, which was greatly enjoyed by the writer, thinking all was peace and harmony until after the meeting closed. I then learned there was some backbiting,—glad I did not learn it sooner as it might have interfered with my enjoying the meeting so well. However, I feel our reunion will be a success again this year, as I believe some of the Saints will be better prepared to enjoy it. I, for one, feel stronger, and should I get bit this year I think I would be more able to stand the bite as I have learned the Spirit of the Master is a great healing balm. With love to all the Saints, I ask an interest in your prayers that I may understand and accomplish my duty as a Christian.

Editors Herald: We are encouraged in this blessed latter-day work. One year ago we were all alone among strangers and felt keenly our isolated condition. We were within reach of a Methodist Sunday-school; attended quite regularly, were treated very kindly, helped them as far as conscience would permit, was visited by their minister, and invited to meet with them. When we refused and gave our reasons, we did not receive such kind attention as before, and finally when one of our elders, Bro. Alvin Knisley, came and preached a few sermons they commenced to hoot polygamy at once. The preacher and some of his followers have circulated false literature through the neighborhood, and would not come to hear the gospel in its purity. Finally, after traveling through blizzards and large snow drifts, by faithful, united efforts, ten precious souls were initiated into God's kingdom; seven of them were Methodist, and some of the brightest of their workers. Another family who at one time united with the Honerites or Holiness people, say they studied the Scriptures and could not make the doctrine harmonize with what they taught. They told the leaders they professed to have the Spirit of God, but denied the fruits thereof, as stated in the Bible; and they were too honest to stay with them. When they heard this restored gospel, they said it was as they always thought the gospel should be preached, and practiced; now we are all rejoicing together, and the Methodists are mourning their loss, and persecution is raging. Bro. Knisley organized a Sunday-school, and we have prayer service after Sunday-school, and on Wednesday night; and young and old take up their cross and try to follow Jesus.

Instead of going to town yesterday to celebrate our Dominion Day, we had a home entertainment, ice cream, lemonade, and a good dinner, and a better feast of spiritual food in a real, heartfelt prayer service, and all expressed themselves as having a better time than they could have had in town. So we hope to keep more united in spirit, and more from the world apart. All our new members are good readers, deep thinkers, and gave this work a thorough investigation before uniting; and all say they were never so happy as now. May God keep us all faithful to the covenant we have made. Dear Saints, pray for us that many more may yet rejoice in full salvation, which is so precious to the soul. Bro. Knisley goes from here back to Treherne where he was instrumental also in doing much good.

Editors Herald: As I have read the beautiful letters from week to week, I have received encouragement more than once. It is now a little over two years since I first heard the gospel preached in its fullness by Elder John Schofield, and when I heard it I was much struck with its beautiful harmony with my own thoughts regarding the gospel that I had read about from time to time in my Bible. I was brought up in the Congregational Church, and from the time that I was able to think a little for myself I have always questioned my teachers regarding the Scriptures, to know how it was that God does not do the things now that he used to do, and why do not the signs follow those who believe. But I was always told that these sort of things were only for the apostolic days, and that God does not do such now. I could only come to the conclusion that there was something wrong; and when I looked round about me I could see on every hand that those who ought to be our examples were a long way short of the Bible standard, so I came to the conclusion that religion was an empty farce, being used by a lot of men, whom I knew very well, for nothing but gain, and a good advertisement for their business. I had begun to lose all faith in religion, and had almost begun to wonder if there was any God at all, through not being able to harmonize the teaching I was receiving, with the teaching of the Bible. When I met our Bro. Schofield and learned he was a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, I had a desire to learn something about his religion. I invited him to my home to tell me about it, and what I heard set me hungering for more. Then it began to dawn upon me that at last I had found a people who believed what the Bible taught, and my heart went out towards them, and I felt convinced that if God did live, and was unchangeable, (as my Bible told me he was,) I should very soon know; for I had just about made up my mind to unite with this church, believing that the God of heaven would give me a testimony regarding the truth of the doctrine which was taught by it, which was in perfect harmony with the word of God. I had not long been baptized before I began to receive testimony of the truthfulness of what I had accepted. At the time of my entering the church I was a confirmed smoker, using one ounce of tobacco a day; but I soon became convinced that this had to be cut off, as it seemed a little odd for me, professing to follow after Jesus, and a user of tobacco, when I never once read of him or his followers ever using it. However, it became distasteful to me so I cut it off, and by the grace of God I have never had any desire for it since.

Soon after entering the church I felt it was my duty to go with our Bro. Schofield distributing tracts from door to door, and trying to tell others of the beautiful light I had received, for at this time my Bible began to read as though it was a new book fresh from the printers hands, and I was anxious that others should also have this experience. We went with tracts on Sunday mornings, and attended a Congregational Bible-class in the afternoons, (the nearest branch of the church being twelve miles distant,) and in the evening we had a little meeting in our brother's house,—Elder Schofield, his wife, and myself. And we realized the fulfillment of the Lord's promise more than once, that "where two or three are gathered together in my name, there I will be also." And we induced a friend or two to come and hear the gospel. We continued to take tracts from door to door and bear our testimony in various ways, and yet we did not seem to add any more souls to the kingdom. I asked the Lord in prayer if our labor was in vain, seeing that we had distributed such a lot of matter and seemed to get no returns, and received the following vision which will never fade from my memory and is as clear to me now as the day I received it: One morning I was awakened out of my sleep by hearing my name called at about half past three o'clock in the morning, and I sat up in bed and looked round the room to see who it was that called me, but I could not see any one. I began to wonder who it could be, and while I sat wondering I kept my eyes fixed on the front bedroom window, which gradually seemed to change, and instead of looking out of the front window it appeared to be the back room window. Now from my back room window we look out upon a large railway embankment which carries the Cheshire Lines Railway, and on this bank I saw hundreds of people, some sitting, some standing, but all looking in wonder toward the sky. There were a great many whom I recognized as being Warrington people, and I could not make out what they were doing. Then my eyes wandered towards our yard gate, and then to our back door, and there was Bro. Schofield beckoning me to make haste. I at once asked him what all this meant, and he pointed toward the heavens and said, Do you not see that? Looking up I beheld a personage, with long flowing beard and hair, dressed in a long white gown, with a large watering-can in his hand moving along and descending from the heavens. And he appeared to be pouring the water over the heads of all the people who were gathered together, and who seemed quite unable to move, so awe-stricken were they. I recognized some there as being most callous and depraved, others who went regularly to some place of worship; but these differences seemed for once removed, and they were all subdued and held captive as it were by some power. And all the time I was looking on, the Lord (for something seemed to tell me this personage was Jesus the Christ the Son of the living God) kept on with his work without ceasing, and the water continued to flow from his watering-can. I again looked at Bro. Schofield and he said, "Did I not tell you that if we persevered and kept sowing the seed the Master would give the increase, he would mature the seed sown?" Then the vision was gone and I was again looking round my bedchamber quite wide awake, and felt thankful that the seed sown by us was acceptable to God. I continued to go with tracts, and felt stronger than ever that now I had seen my Savior and realized that I was working for a living God who was faithful to his promises. And now I can say that I know that my Redeemer liveth and the testimony of him whom I now serve is true,—praise be to his holy name,—and there is nothing in the earth nor under the earth that will ever cause me to doubt the divinity of the latter-day work. So go to, my brethren and sisters, with all our might, mind, and strength to spread the glad tidings that God hath spoken from on high and restored his gospel with all the gifts and blessings that were given by his Son nineteen hundred years ago. Let us be humble and active and endeavor to use whatever talents God has given us for his honor and to the glory of his name, and then we can say at the end of race, "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith." Amen. Your brother in gospel bonds,

J. S. GRUNDY.

TRINIDAD, Colorado, July 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: In consultation with the missionaries and elders of this mission, together with a number of the Saints here, we find ourselves pretty well agreed that a gospel wagon properly fitted and put in the field would be of more benefit to us than the present tent work. I would therefore like to state to all concerned in the onward movement of this grand work, especially those of this mission, that we can use a wagon from five to six weeks longer in the season than we can a tent, we can get before more people, and we can reach places that otherwise we would be obliged to pass by. Our idea is to get a wagon large enough to sleep in and carry a cooking outfit, bedding, and other necessary equipage, drive out on the streets, hang out a torch, chart, and blackboard, and, trusting in God, preach the gospel from city to city. And as freight is so high here (about sixty cents per hundred on short distance) a tent together with seats weighs much and is almost constant expense though not extensive, together with car-fare for traveling at the rate of from four to six cents per mile, make the present system of tent mission-work more expensive than the mission-wagon system.

Our tent is old and worn, will soon fail to do us service, and we will have to be looking after the purchase of a new tent or the wagen, else be without the benefit of those things, and sit back only to see the children of this world wiser in their interests than the children of the kingdom of light. Now, dear Saints, let us arouse, and get in earnest. One brother says he will give one horse, and one brother says he will keep a team through the winter season free. Who will give another horse? for here in the mountains we need two. Then we need harness and money enough to buy a suitable wagon, only about one hundred dollars cash. Now all who desire to assist, Saints of this mission or of the church, please send your donations to me and express your will as to what shall be done with it,—purchase a tent or a wagon, and by next district conference (September) let us have enough to do something at the order of conference.

J. W. MORGAN.

727 East Dale Street, COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado.

TECUMSEH, Nebraska, June 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: I came here yesterday and will hold forth at this place, and at Adams, for a couple of weeks.

I held some meetings at De Witt, Nebraska, but not being able to obtain the use of a building, otherwise than a private house, we were not able to get many nonmembers out to the meetings. I enjoyed good liberty in speaking to the few, and the Saints at that place showed a willingness to do all they could to help build up the work, and made my stay among them pleasant.

On last Sunday I baptized two young girls at that place (De Witt) and I hope that having heeded the admonition to remember their "creator in the days of their youth," they will not forget him in the days of their maturity.

Dear Saints, we are admonished that upon fathers and mothers there rests a grave responsibility, the caring for these young, tender plants, after they have once been planted in the house of the Lord.

One thing, especially, that should be impressed upon the mind of the child is, to pray. And that the child may be taught to pray, the parents must themselves be prayerful, and should manifest wisdom in prayer, as they should in everything else. Too many prayers are more lengthy, than they are really expressive of the soul's desire. Prayers, like sermons, should be short and to the point. And a child should not have a form of prayer in just so many words, but they should learn that prayer is the simple expression of the soul's desire, as when they would ask their earthly parents for things they desire to add to their comfort or joy here. I see the necessity among the Saints for more humble, true devotion, and a daily walk consistent with their profession.

Another thing I wish to speak of, and that is, the manifest carelessness among the Saints in respect to the reading of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants.

In Doctrine and Covenants 83:8, we learn that the minds of the Saints were darkened because of unbelief and because they had treated lightly the things they had received, "which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that I have written," etc.

Truly the Saints now can read this revelation with profit, for how can they truly believe and obey these commandments unless they study them? And I am sure that I say truly, that the majority of Saints allow themselves to read newspapers, magazines, etc., to the exclusion of the sacred literature that Christ has given them. And the result is easily seen: lack of spirituality, unbelief, etc. Truly the gathering of God's people is a necessity, that they may be well fed and cared for by Christ's divinely appointed shepherds. Some of the Saints say they are too poor to have these books, or to take the HERALD or Ensign. And yet one may see upon the stand in such homes, a newspaper for which they are expending one dollar or more a year. That sizes up pretty well with a statement of a young married man I saw last winter, who said he could not at that time make enough to keep his wife and two children, and his wife had gone to sponge her bread off from a good-natured relative. But how about the young man? Well, he smoked and chewed tobacco until his presence was so odoriferous that one could easily think of hades, and considerably worse, to be near him,—used fifty cents a week or more for that filthy weed; and yet could not keep the dear wife and children.

The brethren are doing real well, both missionary and local, and I hope to see much good result to the work in consequence of their united effort. Praying that Christ may bless all the Saints,
In gospel bonds,

J. R. SUTTON.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, June 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have been holding meetings at the above place near three weeks, with good attendance and attention, nearly every seat in the church occupied every night. Sunday, the 12th, I led seventeen down into the water and baptized them into the church and kingdom of God. They were nearly all Sunday-school scholars at this place.

On Sunday, the 19th, I baptized eight more, and last Sunday, the 26th, five more. Bro. R. A. Ballantyne is the shepherd over the flock at this place, and he is a noble Saint. His whole soul is in the work of the Lord, and he has the faith and confidence of all the Saints, and all that know him.

I hope and pray that God will bless our efforts in this place, and that many honest souls will see the beautiful gospel and obey before it is too late; not only here but all over the world.

Your brother in Christ,

W. A. SMITH.

Bro. I. N. White, Independence, Missouri, July 11, 1904: "I leave for Illinois on the 15th. Expect to attend the Southeastern District reunion, held near Springerton, from August 5 to 14. Thence to El Dorado Springs' reunion from August 12 to 21; then to Berry Ferry, Indian Territory, from 19th to 28th; then to Fanning, Kansas, reunion, from 26th to September 4; then to Holden, Missouri, reunion from September 2 to 11; then to the Pomona, Southern Missouri, reunion from September 18 to 25. Other reunions that have asked my presence will please take notice. I would be glad to accommodate others, but can not. I am under contract to hold a debate at Centralia, Kansas, with Elder J. M. Martin of the Christian Church. We have not fully agreed as to "time," but October 5 has been suggested by me; I have yet to hear if this date will suit my opponent, though he had suggested July or October. Those who are interested in the debate will please take notice."

The July Woman's Home Companion is a souvenir number of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. It contains nine large pages dealing with the Fair in picture and text, and will serve as a beautiful memento for Fair visitors.

First Presidency.

MISSIONARY TRANSFER.

By agreement between Brn. Heman C. Smith and U. W. Greene, missionaries in charge of the fields named, Bro. G. H. Godbey is transferred from the Southeastern Mission to the West Virginia District. The reason for this transfer is that Bro. Godbey has failed to keep the field assigned him, because of his age and increase in weight which incapacitate him for traveling on foot, as he has hitherto been in the habit of doing. Bro. Godbey is a faithful man and has heretofore labored uncomplainingly. He will be well received in his old field. Transfer concurred in.
JOSEPH SMITH,
July 13, 1904. for Presidency.

MISSIONARY RELEASED.

Bro. John Alfred Davies, appointed to labor in the Southern Kansas field, upon his own request and for reasons properly stated to Bro. I. N. White, missionary in charge, has been released from said field, release to take effect July 6, 1904.
JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

July 13, 1904.

Reunion Notices.

The reunion of the Clinton District will be held at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, beginning August 12, and holding over two Sundays. Those wishing tents please inform E. W. Lloyd or J. C. Budd, Eldorado Springs, Missouri. Pasture and wood will be furnished at reasonable prices. James Moler, for committee.

The Saints are hereby reminded to make arrangement, now, to meet with the Northern Missouri, reunion, which will convene in Bro. B. J. Dice's grove at Stewartville, Missouri, commencing August 19, and continuing over the 28th. The committee is at work to make this twelfth annual gathering as interesting as those held in previous years. Charles P. Paul, secretary.

The reunion of the Southwestern Oregon District will be held August 19 to 28, at Lee, Coos County, Oregon. District conference will convene on Saturday, August 27, at same place. All officers please make written reports. Saints please take notice that the missionaries are in the field, and offerings for missionary service will be appreciated. A number of the ministry are expected. Come one and all and bring your friends with you. R. A. Cribbins, secretary, Bridge, Oregon.

Those wishing tents for use at the Des Moines District reunion will send their requests to E. O. Clark, 2500 Logan Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa, by August 1. The prices of tents, cots, and mattress covers all the expense of delivering them to and taking them from the reunion grounds.

Reduced railroad rates have been secured to those attending the Southern California reunion from July 22 to 31, at Santa Ana, California, providing fifty persons purchase tickets to said reunion, paying the regular price. Each person should obtain a certificate from agent where ticket is purchased and hand in to clerk of reunion. Fifty of these certificates handed in will entitle the holders to one third rates returning home. This includes all lines of Southern Pacific Railroad in Southern California. Two days will be allowed after close of meetings in which to get home. R. R. Dana, of Committee, Los Angeles, California.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Eastern Iowa District: As there is an effort put forth to pay the college debt, I have sent lists to all the branches. Some have collected and sent the list back. Our share for the district is one hundred and fifty dollars. We certainly can raise this amount. There are scattered Saints that can easily help. Send the lists and also the money to me and I will forward to Bro. Kelley. Let us all pull together this time. And I would urge you not to forget to send your tithes and offerings to me, as there was not one cent to pay the elders' families for the month of June. Some sent their means to the Bishop,—that does not give our district full credit for funds paid. Let us not go backward but forward. Your brother, John Heide, Fulton, Iowa.

To the scattered members of the Northeastern Missouri District: As your Bishop's agent can not locate many of the scattered members I take this method of reaching you. The Presiding Bishop, E. L. Kelley, has wisely arranged a plan to clear the college debt which will not be a burden on the few—each district to pay a proportion according to membership. Hence I appeal to you, wherever you are located, to respond at once. Let me hear from you promptly with your portion, not forgetting your duties in paying tithes and offerings. This district's portion is $186.40, the ratio according to our membership being forty cents each, including the many scattered ones. Do not be too exact as to the forty cents, as we do not wish to fall short, and some will not respond. Those who have already responded have not held strictly to the "one pound of flesh" but have donated from fifty cents to five dollars. Members of Bevier Branch send your money to my address; those of Higbee Branch to W. J. Richards, Higbee, Missouri; those of Boonville to Sr. Rose Cochran, Boonville, Missouri; members of other branches will please send to me. May God help us to unite in every good work. J. T. Williams, Bishop's agent, Box 444, Bevier, Missouri.

No Sunday-School in Northeastern Illinois.

At the district convention of the Northeastern Illinois Sunday-school Association held recently at Mission, I was elected superintendent, to complete the unexpired term of Bro. Jerome Wildermuth, who goes from the district.

It is my desire to have every one in the district receive the benefit of the Sunday-school, that they may be prepared for the work to which the Lord has called them; that they should heed the injunction of Paul to Timothy, to "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth"; and also the later command of the Lord himself, "Seek learning, both by study and also by prayer."

The caption at the head of this article does not mean that there are no Sunday-schools in Northeastern Illinois; but there are many in the district who have "no Sunday-school" of the Latter Day Saints that they are able to attend, by reason of age, infirmity, distance, or household cares. It is such that I wish to know of and communicate with.

All members of the Reorganization, or others who are interested in this work, and desiring to learn of it, that are unable to attend a Sunday-school of the Latter Day Saints, are requested to send to me their address, the distance they reside from a Sunday-school, and the location of that school, if they are able to give it. Please send all three items. Should any read this who know of any so situated, who do not take the HERALD or Ensign, they will be doing something to aid in this good work by sending such names and addresses.

Yours in the gospel of peace,

CHARLES A. GURWELL.

244 Ninety-first Street, CHICAGO, Illinois.

Two-Day Meetings.

There will be two-day meetings at the following places: East Fremont, Sanilac County, Michigan, August 6, 7; Five Lakes, Lapeer County, August 20, 21; Shabbona, September 3, 4; Bell River, September 17, 18. William Davis, president.

Died.

ROGERS.—At San Jose, California, June 4, 1904, Sr. Sarah D. Rogers. She was born at Watertown, New York, September 26, 1826. For a number of years has made her home with her nephew, Bro. J. W. Steele. Funeral services by J. B. Carmichael, assisted by Bro. C. W. Hawkins.

STONE.—At Green Bay, Wisconsin, June 9, 1904, Helen Lavina, daughter of Frank J. and Madeline Stone. Was born at Amboy, Illinois, July 19, 1896. She was a beautiful child and is deeply mourned. Was a granddaughter of Stephen J. Stone (deceased) and Abbey S. Stone. Funeral services conducted at Amboy, Illinois, by Elder M. H. Bond, June 12. A large concourse of people was present. We were called by telegram on the 6th, and in company with Elder F. M. Pitt, went to Green Bay. The Spirit was present in power at the several administrations, but no promise, save the one given in Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, paragraph 1 was had; but we know that "it is well with the child."

DURFEE.—On May 25, 1904, at Hagerman, Idaho, of spotted fever, Charley Durfee, born at Preparation, Iowa, June 17, 1864. Funeral sermon by J. H. Condit.

BUTLER.—Charles Van Butler was born at DeSoto, Nebraska, September 10, 1865, and died at Joplin, Missouri, June 8, 1904. Funeral services were held at his residence, 2008 Joplin Street, by Elder George English. His remains were laid at rest in Joplin Cemetery. He was the youngest son of Stephen and Amanda M. Butler. A wife, two sons, an aged mother, one brother, two sisters, and a host of friends mourn his early departure.

PRATT.—Hyrum F., at his residence near Shenandoah, Iowa, on July 2, 1904. He was born in Chautauqua County, New York, May 10, 1832. He united with the church in youth and held to his faith in the angel's message. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his demise. Funeral in Latter Day Saints' church in Shenandoah, by M. M. Turpen.

SIMPSON.—Mrs. Alice Simpson died at her home in Taylorville, Illinois, June 30, 1904. She was born near Freeport, Illinois, January 18, 1862. She, with her husband, Elder Luther Simpson, came to Taylorville in 1890. She came to the knowledge of the gospel in 1896, and has since been a faithful and consistent member of the church, noted for her zeal, and for her hospitality towards God's servants. Funeral services were held in the Saints' church, sermon by Elder Jerome E. Widermuth.

JOY.—Bro. Freeman E. Joy, of Plymouth, Massachusetts, died May 22, 1904, after a long and painful sickness. He was born at Dennisport, Massachusetts, September 6, 1846, and united with the church thirty-five years ago. He leaves a widow and two daughters to mourn his departure. He was greatly afflicted and suffered continually for a number of years, but always manifested a patience obtained through faith in God and his overruling providence through all his afflictions. Funeral May 26 at the home. Services in charge of Elder N. R. Nickerson.

EMMONS.—Bro. James M. Emmons departed this life at his late residence near Anaconda, Montana, June 16, 1904. Bro. Emmons was born in Calloway County, Missouri, in 1830, where his early life was spent. He joined the tide of emigration to California in 1862, where he joined the Morrisites. He moved his family to Deer Lodge Valley in 1881, and, some time after his arrival, he united with the Reorganization, in which organization he remained a faithful member till death. Funeral services conducted by Elder J. D. Stead, and the remains laid to rest in the Hill Cemetery, Anaconda, Montana.

HUTCHINSON.—Sr. Charlotte Hutchinson, at Little Deer Isle, Maine, June 14, 1904; aged 83 years. She was baptized April 20, 1871, by Elder George W. Eaton. Funeral services by J. N. Ames.

EATON.—Peter Eaton, Jr., born in Deer Isle, Maine, August 25, 1823, died July 3, 1904. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church March 9, 1866, by Elder George W. Eaton; was ordained a teacher by Elder T. W. Smith, June 1, 1869. He lived a consistent life, and was held in much esteem by the Saints. He leaves three sons, two brothers, and one sister, also a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren to mourn. Funeral services by Elder S. O. Foss.

GERARDY.—At Nebraska City, Nebraska, Mr. John C. Gerardy, Yardmaster of Burlington and Missouri River Railroad, by falling from an engine. Deceased was son-in-law to Elder J. W. Waldsmith. He died July 7, 1904, aged 35 years, 1 month, and 15 days. Funeral was held at the residence. A brief service was conducted by Elder C. H. Porter; at the close, the Masons took charge, and laid their brother to rest according to the ritual of their order. It was a very impressive funeral, and hundreds of people, by their presence, testified to the esteem in which the deceased was held.

SHED.—Sallie Shed died at her home in Frankfort, Pepin County, Wisconsin, July 6, 1904, being at the time of her death 61 years, 5 months, and 13 days old. She was baptized March 4, 1894, by W. A. McDowell. She lived a devoted Christian life. She leaves to mourn their loss five sons, four daughters, two brothers, two sisters, a number of grandchildren, and many friends,—her husband having passed to the other shore about eleven years ago. Funeral held in the Saint's church at Porcupine, in charge of Elder A. V. Closson. Sermon by Elder W. A. McDowell.

DOTY.—Lois Agnes, daughter of Bro. John and Sr. Katherine Doty, born June 25, 1901, at Winfield, Kansas. She was a child of sweet, clinging nature, sensitive and full of tenderness,—too tender for the roughness of this life. Her death was caused by the accidental discharge of a gun, June 20, 1904. It seems peculiarly sad that the victim of such an accident should be one so young and tender. Funeral services conducted at the Saints' church, Holden, Missouri, by Elder A. H. Parsons, assisted by Elder C. F. Scarcliff. The little form laid to rest in Holden Cemetery.

MANSFIELD.—At Jonesport, Maine, November, 12, 1903, Sr. Lois Sawyer Mansfield, relict of Captain Edward A. Mansfield. She was born in Jonesport, June 6, 1821. Her maternal instincts were among her prominent traits. She raised a large family, over whom she reigned with loving dignity and skill. The religious impulse was very marked. When the religious movement, inaugurated by G. J. Adams, had a being, she was active in it. Later she joined the Saints and was loyal in her allegiance to Christ until the end. Funeral was held in the Congregational church. Sermon by Elder F. M. Sheehy.

The Arena for July appears in an entirely new make-up, and contains twice the amount of reading matter given in its monthly issues during recent years. It is now one of the very few magazines in the English-speaking world printed on all-rag paper and sewed. The cover is printed in colors.

Under the new management the Arena has become one of the most artistic of the world's great magazines of opinion. The contents-matter shows improvements quite as great as those that mark the mechanical work. Mr. Flower discusses briefly the leading events and happenings of importance throughout the world. There are a score or more of these brief and pungent editorials, dealing with progressive movements and important events. Book-studies and reviews are also a strong feature. In this issue we have a study of the life and work of Thomas Carlyle, in which, in addition to the extended review of "The new letters of Carlyle," Mr. Flower vigorously defends the character of the great Scotchman, though pointing out his limitations as a thinker.

Among the contributors to this issue are Edwin Markham, Joaquin Miller, Professor Edwin Maxey, F. Edwin Elwell, the curator of ancient and modern statuary in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, F. F. Mackay, the well-known actor and director of the National Conservatory of Dramatic Art, Hamlin Garland, Albert Bigelow Paine, Irving Bacheller, Will Allen Dromgole, Captain W. E. P. French, U. S. A., Daniel L. Cruice, Frederick W. Nicolls, and Mr. Dan Beard. The paper which will cause the most discussion is "The confessions of a dipsomaniac," the author of which is said to be a prominent American novelist. Certainly the paper is more than a clever piece of writing, possessing a fascination akin to Stevenson's Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. It has been edited by the eminent authority on dipsomania and allied morbid phenomena, Doctor William Lee Howard, and therefore possesses the merit of being an accurate scientific study. Among the literary papers which call for special notice are "The little brown men of Nippon," by Joaquin Miller, in which is depicted Japanese life as Mr. Miller knows it from personal observations. "The tendencies of recent fiction," by Frederick W. Nicolls, is an essay marked for exceptional ability and discrimination.

Among the timely social and political discussions are "The Chicago election," a record of one of the greatest popular municipal victories of recent years, written by the eminent lawyer and direct legislation leader, Daniel L. Cruice, of Chicago; "Tibet, Russia, and England on the international chess-board," written by Professor Maxey, LL. D., of the University of West Virginia; "A national art theater for America," and "A socialism in our midst." The latter is by an army officer, and is a most interesting and instructive description of the United States Army on its economic and social sides. Altogether, the July Arena, which opens the thirty-second volume, vindicates its claims to be a review of opinion indispensable to thoughtful men and women.

The Wizards of the Painted Desert.

Three hundred Mokis and Zunis are at the World's Fair in St. Louis and this is the first time in their history, extending over thousands of years, that these so-called Cliff Dwellers were persuaded to leave their mountain homes in the Painted Desert, in Arizona and New Mexico, to show the whites assembled at the world's Fair their strangely fascinating mode of daily life.

For this contingent of highly capable redmen a special exhibit has been arranged which enables them to conduct themselves precisely as in the far-off homes. The Cliff Dwellers' Exhibit, as its name indicates, is in the form of a mountain, several hundred feet high, into which the Mokis and Zunis have carved their homes. They are fond of getting as far away from the ground-level as possible, and to see them perched almost in mid-air or moving about in their rooms, reached by winding foot-paths, far above the surrounding country, is a sight at once diverting and instructive.

In a sort of court-yard, back of the Cliff, is a duplication of the Pueblo of Taos, a famous place in Mokiland. Beyond this is the Teatro Moki, or Moki Theatre, in which they perform their many dances, now for the first time to be seen within the pale of civilization. The eagle-dance, the war-dance, the peace-dance and the world-famous snake-dance are here performed by chiefs and medicine men in a way to cause the average onlooker to stare in open-eyed wonder. The dance first became known to Caucasians in 1897 and since then, every other year, hundreds of travelers and scientific men gather from all parts of the globe in Mokiland to witness this strange spectacle. The Mokis charm venomous snakes in full sight of the audience. They handle them with blood-curdling sang froid, even carrying them about in their mouths. This is a mysterious process that baffles the knowledge of white men. There are snakes in this collection whose bite would cause death in thirty seconds. The reptiles are lulled into quiescence by the Mokis and made apparently harmless.

In other parts of the complete exhibit are shown the burial customs of the Zunis, who, like the Egyptians of Holy Writ, have a way of embalming their dead to withstand the ravages of all times. Mummies five thousand years old are to be seen in this strange exhibit with faces so well preserved as to reveal the features of the dead in true outline. The Cliff Dwellers' Exhibit commends itself to all who desire to inform themselves of a phase of aboriginal life on this continent, the very existence of which very few even well-read persons have had cause to suspect. The collection of aboriginal pottery, thousands of years old, is very complete. Here may also be seen, in full operation, the manufacture of the world-famous Navajo blankets. Over fifty little Indian children, Mokis, Zunis, and Navajos perform hourly in the Teatro Moki.

The Battle-Ground of Modern Thought.

The Chicago Record-Herald has conceived the unique idea of assigning a page of its Sunday edition to the public for the free discussion of important questions of the day. Under the head, "The Battle-Ground of Modern Thought," an opportunity is offered to the public for the sane discussion of all problems engaging the attention of the American people. Writers of ability present their views on subjects not generally treated in the daily press, and Record-Herald readers generally are invited to join the debate. The fairest, most forceful and original contributions are published. The following are a few of the subjects which have been discussed since this department was first established: "Is Blacklisting Within the Law?" "Trusts and the Proper Way to Regulate Them." "Great Peril That Besets Pagan China." "Liquor Trade and Its Evil Consequences." "Are Free Books Wanted in Public Schools?" "Inhumanity to Animals." "New Struggles for the Negro."

The Record-Herald disclaims any responsibilities for the dogmas upheld, the theories advanced, or the panaceas advocated. It reserves the right only to preserve order, to keep out personalities and rancor and to see that good temper and candor characterize the discussions.

Is Woman the Equal of Man?

Dr. Lyman Abbott, in the July World's Work says that doubtless the enlargement of women's educational and industrial opportunities has been accompanied by some intellectual errors and some practical evils. The most serious of these errors is the opinion that equality of character involves identity of function; that because woman is the equal of man, therefore she is to do the same things which he does. Those of us who have been interested in claiming and pressing for woman this larger life, do not deny there are distinctive feminine and masculine spheres of activity, and that each sex renders the best service to society within its appropriate sphere. What we object to is the endeavor of the male philosopher to evolve woman's sphere out of his own consciousness, and shut her up within it; what we insist on is that both sexes shall have equal liberty and equal largeness of life, and that each shall find its appropriate sphere for itself.

Forest Resources of Texas.

Of all the States in the Union Texas has the largest wooded area. Nor does this include the chaparral growth extending throughout the Rio Grande country, but only the vast timber section of east Texas and the central and far western woodlands. These are estimated at 64,000 square miles. Much of this territory has been cut over, especially in the shortleaf and longleaf pine sections, but conservative estimates still place the merchantable forest area of Texas at 27,000 square miles. There is now annually cut about 125,000 acres of timberland, yielding about a billion board feet. The lumber industry is exceeded in value only by the cotton and cattle industries. In its forests Texas has 61 species and varieties of trees of commercial importance.

For the last two years the Bureau of Forestry has been engaged in a careful study of forest conditions in Texas. Its collaborator in that work, Professor William L. Bray, has now prepared a bulletin entitled "Forest Resources of Texas." This bulletin describes and classifies the forests of the State, deals with the determining causes of their distribution, and discusses fully both private and State management. It will be issued soon, when it can be obtained by applying to the Forester, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

The magazine that is indispensable in a Presidential year, the American Monthly Review of Reviews, is living up to its well-earned reputation. The issue for July is strong in political articles of wide and timely interest. "Theodore Roosevelt as a Presidential Candidate" is considered in graphic, trenchant style, yet with dignity, as befits the subject, by one of the delegates to the Chicago convention. The article is profusely illustrated with pictures of the President and his family. Then there is the major part of the speech of the Honorable Elihu Root, of New York, temporary chairman of the convention, presenting the record of the Republican party from 1901 to 1904. In "The Progress of the World," Doctor Albert Shaw reviews the political history of the past four years in the United States, discusses men and policies, and "rounds up" the situation in his own convincing and informing style, bringing the reader up to the Democratic Convention at St. Louis—which will be handled in the August number of the Review. This department is copiously illustrated. A group of three short, well-illustrated articles show what the national government is doing in the way of health and sanitation on a large scale. Colonel William C. Gorgas, of the Medical Corps, U. S. A., who will have charge of the Government's sanitary work on the Isthmus of Panama during the construction of the canal, writes on "Solving the Health Problem at Panama." "The Porto Rican Government's Fight with Anemia" is described by Adam C. Heselbarth, and "Government Care of Consumptives" (at Fort Stanton, New Mexico) is told by Oliver P. Newman. William E. Smythe, author of "The Conquest of Arid America" and other works on irrigation, considers the entire problem of the reclamation of arid lands, under the title "The Triumph of National Irrigation." The war situation in the far East is presented interpretatively in "The Progress of the World" and in many "Leading Articles," and interesting side-lights are thrown upon it by Park Benjamin's discussion of "Battleships, Mines, and Torpedoes," helpfully illustrated with diagrams, by the sketch and portrait of Prince Esper Ukhtomsky, the Russian editor-statesman who has just made a tour of the United States, and by the illustrated article on "What the People Read in Poland and Finland." Many Americans will be surprised at Canada's commercial expansion, as outlined by Mr. P. T. McGrath, who presents a graphic picture, which is supplemented by a railroad map. Besides these, there are the regular departments—the "Record of Current Events," "Current History in Cartoons," "Leading Articles of the Month," and "New Books." The noteworthy features of the cartoons for July are pages of Japanese and Russian popular cartoons, from original sources. The book department is also very full and copiously illustrated with portraits of authors of "Summer Reading."

Journalism and Business Morals.

It may be said that nothing has done more to lift the moral tone of business than the healthful criticism of the press. Twenty years ago, the state of financial journalism—not merely the purely financial press, but also that portion of the daily press devoted to finance—was not extremely good. Such journalism was marked by much ignorance, with, unfortunately, at least, some dishonesty. Apart from this, the theory upon which it was mainly based was not sound. The people who "made" most of the financial news seemed to think that they were entitled to control, in large measure, its publication, both as to matter, time, and manner. Even at this day, it is difficult to convince some otherwise highly intelligent bankers, directors, and managers, that the public has a right to knowledge. A case occurred within a month that illustrates very well the point of view obtaining in some circles of the financial community. A certain corporation undertook to make an issue of securities. This fact was developed and published. A financial writer called on one of the directors, showed him the news as published, and asked if it were true.

"Yes," said the director, "it is true, but it is pretty hard that two or three gentlemen can not discuss their private affairs without a reporter breaking in."—The July World's Work.

American fruit-growers and market-gardeners have been experimenting with many varieties of fruits and vegetables in Cuba, to learn what may be most profitably produced there for the American markets. One result of this has been fine Cuban cantaloupes in the New York market the last week in April of the present year, and more all through May. They are of good quality, and the business is likely to be developed, thus adding another month to the cantaloupe season.—Country Life in America.

UNCHRISTIANLIKE WORK.

There is a paper being published at Morehead, Kentucky, called the Helper, of which R. B. Neal is the ostensible editor. It is called the official organ of the National Anti-Mormon Missionary Organization of the Churches of Christ.

The number for June and July, 1904, is especially devoted to misrepresentation of the doctrine, history, and attitude of Mormonism in general, and of the Reorganization specifically. There are two matters in said paper that we notice for reasons which are obvious. The New York Sun published in its columns December 9, 1845, a letter purporting to be from Emma Smith, the widow of Joseph Smith the Prophet. In this letter she is made to say that she had not believed what her husband called his apparitions or revelations, as she thought him "laboring under a diseased mind, yet they may all be true, as a prophet is seldom without credence or honor excepting in his own family or country; but as my conviction is to the contrary, I shall educate my children in a different faith, and teach them to obey and reverence the laws and institutions of their country."

This is an extract from this purported letter published in the Helper. Bro. Heman C. Smith sent to this paper a denial of this letter from which this quotation is taken, in terms as follows:

NAUVOO, December 30, 1845.

To the Editor of the New York Sun:

Sir: I wish to inform you, and the public through your paper that the letter published Tuesday morning, December 9, is a forgery, the whole of it, and I hope that this notice will put a stop to all such communications.
 EMMA SMITH.

This denial was published in the Times and Seasons January 20, 1846. There were but two more numbers of this paper, the Times and Seasons, published, the breakup occurring that spring.

The Helper comments unfavorably upon the fact that the Sun did not publish the denial. This may be true, but we have reason to believe that the denial was sent to the Sun, and if it was not published it was not the fault of Emma Smith. Though not published in the Sun, the fact that it was published in the official paper of the church is evidence of its genuineness. The statement of Emma Smith to the effect that the letter published in the Sun was a forgery is a sufficient denial of the statements made in the forged letter. No specification was necessary.

July.

Beneath the full midsummer heat
 Are stores of golden, garnered wheat;
 Are billows of unripe oats, gray-green;
 Are armies of corn-blades, trenchant, keen.
 The killdeer flutes his mournful cries;
 The hawk in charmed circle flies.
 Berries ripen beneath the leaves,
 And warm and still are the musky eves.
 The moon shines bright in the cloudless sky,
 The crickets sing and the soft winds sigh.
 —Sara Andrew Shafer in the Outlook.

One of the leading features in the July Cosmopolitan is found in its series, "The Great Industries of the United States," this article treating of cotton from its plant-life all the way through the mills to the finished product—elaborately illustrated with twenty-eight photo-engravings. This series in the Cosmopolitan should be read by every schoolboy. It is an easy means of getting a thorough knowledge of the great industries of the country for both young and old.

This effort upon the part of the Helper is with a view to sustain the statement that Emma Smith was not a member of the church over which her husband was presiding. The fact that the Prophet's wife was a member of the church is too well established by the additional fact that she remained with her children at Nauvoo without becoming identified with any other body and was universally known as a member of the church. Emma Smith was a member of the church October 1, 1845, when she with eighteen other members of the Ladies' Relief Society signed a certificate to the effect that there was no secret wife system known to the church so far as they had knowledge. This certificate was preceded by a statement of twelve members of the church, men of families, showing that they were members of the church. In the same official organ, the Times and Seasons, in the number for January 15, 1845, the editor, John Taylor, afterwards president of the Utah church, succeeding Brigham Young, has this to state with regard to Emma Smith, in an editorial:

Suppose we say a word concerning the "prophet's wife," Mrs. Emma Smith: She honored her husband while living, and she will never knowingly dishonor his good name while his martyred blood mingles with Mother Earth! Mrs. Smith is an honorable woman, and if we are not deceived, is as far from the corrupt insinuation of this ninety-ninth expose of Mormonism, as a fixed star is from the gambler's lamp at midnight . . . . The fact is, the story must have been put in circulation to injure the Latter Day Saints; and as Mrs. Smith was one of them, to destroy or murder her reputation and create division in the church.

The fact of her membership is further attested by her uniting with the Reorganized Church at the same time that her son Joseph did, April 6, 1860, at Amboy, Illinois, on her original baptism into the church, and she remained in this fellowship until her death. It is true that she married a Gentile, in 1847, after her husband's death, but she was a member of the branch of the Reorganized Church at Nauvoo during the existence of that branch, and her name remains upon the record of the church unto this day.

The effort made by the Helper to disparage the memory of this woman is contemptible, but fully worthy of the men who are engaged in this anti-Mormon crusade.

As a basis from which to estimate the animus of the Helper and its helper, we notice in this same issue of the Helper, page 6, middle column, the following:

It appears that an association of Southern Methodist ministers, held at Huntington, West Virginia, passed a resolution as follows:

"Whereas, the purity of our homes and the peace of our Zion are in danger from the insidious attacks of Mormon elders; and

"Whereas, we are hindered in our efforts to combat their nefarious work, from lack of information; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we indorse the strong anti-Mormon literature being published by R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Kentucky."

We take pleasure in informing Mr. Neal that Emma Smith did make a "selection of sacred hymns" and that it was for the use of the church of which she was a member, and that the same was in use for many years. Copies of it are yet extant and plentiful. Furthermore, she did subsequently make a selection for the use of the Reorganized Church, of which she was a member. Therefore the Helper is in error when it states that if this was done by her there is no record of it, as is found in this editorial to which we have been replying.

We call attention to the fact that the letter appearing in the New York Sun December 9, 1845, was succeeded by a denial in the Times and Seasons of January 20, 1846. This would barely allow time for a letter to New York and the writing of the denial and publishing it in the issue for January 15, of which number the page dated January 20 is a part. We suggest that Mrs. Smith was the best judge as to whether the letter to the New York Sun was or was not a forgery. We know personally that she stated frequently while living that she wrote no such letter; that it was a forgery.

The Helper publishes on its last page the caption of an effort declaring that the Josephites reject the old family Bible; and in this effort quotes from the General Conference Minutes for September 15, 1878. The caption reads, "The Josephites reject the old family Bible." The resolution upon which the Helper bases its conclusion came up on controversy arising from what is known as the Decatur District Resolutions. When this matter was presented for consideration two resolutions were presented, which appear in our compiled General Conference resolutions on page 48, Nos. 214, 215. The first is an indorsement of what is known by us as the Inspired Version, and is as follows:

That this body, representing the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, does hereby authoritatively indorse the Holy Scriptures as revised, corrected, and translated by the Spirit of revelation, by Joseph Smith, Jr., the Seer, and as published by the church we represent.

The second is like this:

That this body, representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, recognize the Holy Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, the revelations of God contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and all other revelations which have been or shall be revealed through God's appointed prophet, which have been or may be hereafter accepted by the church as the standard of authority on all matters of church government and doctrine, and the final standard of reference on appeal in all controversies arising, or which may arise in this church of Christ.

The Helper in order to misrepresent the scope of this last resolution, quotes the words, "Holy Scriptures." This is an error, or a mischievous and willful misrepresentation. The words, "Holy Scriptures," in this resolution refer to the Bible, the Old and New Testaments of the King James Version, and incidentally all other versions of the Bible which may be used under the title "Holy Scriptures," but refers more specifically to the King James Version.

To show that this is correct we present from the revelations given to the church that which should be conclusive. In section 17, Book of Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 2, the Holy Scriptures are referred to as true, and that the Book of Mormon was intended to prove this fact to the world.

Revelation given in 1831, the next year after the church was organized, section 42, paragraph 5, the following instruction is given:

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in which is the fullness of the gospel.

Again in paragraph sixteen of the same section:

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doeth according to these things shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.

At this time, in 1831, they had no other Scriptures but the King James Translation.

In pursuance of the spirit of these statements a resolution was adopted at the Conference held by the Reorganized Church June 12, 1852, as follows:

That the whole law of the church of Jesus Christ is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants.—Resolution No. 6, General Conference minutes.

This was followed by another:

That this conference believe it the duty of the elders of this church, who have been legally ordained, to cry repentance and remission of sins to this generation through obedience to the gospel as revealed in the record of the Jews, the Book of Mormon, and book of Doctrine and Covenants.

The record of the Jews referred to was then understood to be and is yet the Bible.

In April, 1885, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved that it is the sense of this body, that any man who accepts appointment and ordination as a representative of the church is under obligations to teach, sustain, and seek to establish the faith of the church; and no one, be he whosoever he may be, has any right to attack the divinity of the faith in part, or as a whole, as set forth in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.—General Conference Resolution No. 298, par. 6.

In 1892, April 15, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved that we recognize the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants as the only standard works of the church; and it is our opinion that every other book, pamphlet, or other publication, should simply rest upon its own merits, the church being responsible only for that which it authorizes to be done, or which it accepts after it is done.—General Conference Resolution No. 368.

This resolution was presented by the Quorum of Twelve and adopted by the church. With these constant affirmations made by the body in conference assembled, together with the fact that the Epitome of Faith put out by the church persistently states that we believe in the Bible, of what value is the captious reasoning of this avowed enemy to Mormonism, whose object in maintaining his paper is to destroy Mormonism and to fight intemperance or the saloon element? In the last-named conflict the Helper can not possibly be stronger than the Reorganized Church, which is universally known as an uncompromising foe to the sale of intoxicants as a beverage. What reliability can be placed upon such efforts to destroy Mormonism as we have noted in this article? We can but think that if the Helper is rightly named, it has an animus behind it that is not the spirit of true Christianity.

PAUL KRUGER DEAD.

The telegraph brings the news of the death of Stephanus Johannes Paulus Kruger, the last president of the Transvaal Republic, South Africa. He was born in Cape Colony in 1825. He took part in the great exodus from Cape Colony in 1834-36, when more than six thousand Boers left that country after its conquest by the British. These were Dutch and Huguenot farmers who made an effort to establish a new colony in the interior of Africa. Kruger became the executive of the Raad under President Burgers in 1872. In 1880-81 he held a post in the civil service and began his plotting for the overthrow of British supremacy. He was one of three with Pretorius and Joubert when the Transvaal gained its independence at the battle of Majuba Hill. He was elected president of the republic in 1882, and after the adoption of the constitution was in 1883 elected for five years, and successively elected to succeed himself in 1888, 1893, and 1898.

Kruger foresaw the contest with England, and during the five years preceding it bought rifles and cannon in France and Germany and succeeded in arming his people to a great extent for the struggle which he believed would ensue and which he declared would be so serious that the cost to suppress the republic would be of such a character as to stagger humanity. After the defeat of the Boers, Kruger left Africa and took up his abode in Switzerland, where, in exile, he saw the Boer republics fully absorbed in the British Empire. He was an old man, broken-hearted, waiting for death, and at three o'clock on the morning of July 14 he died. The only relatives with him at the time of his death were his daughter and her husband. So passes one of the unique characters of the century; a shrewd diplomat, a stern religionist, a lover of his people and of their liberty, a man of wonderful virility, agility, and physical strength. He was a hero to his people. The history of his life will read like a romance, and he takes his place among the heroes with an undisputed right thereto.

"SALOME; or the unbroken vow," is the title of an interesting Book of Mormon story, by Julia N. Dutton, beginning in the August Autumn Leaves.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. J. W. Wight, writing from Williamsburg, Illinois, July 16, gives a total of one hundred and six baptisms in his field during the last quarter. Pretty good showing under the circumstances. There have been sixteen marriages in the same period.

Bro. J. W. Rushton, writing from Hamilton, Scotland, reports six baptisms, four of them by Bro. William Newton in the south of England. He feels hopeful of the work, though prevented by lack of means.

Bro. I. N. White sends a branch and district report from all the branches and districts in his field except Spring River, which is reported by Bro. J. T. Davis to Presidency.

Bro. W. H. Kelley, writing from Salt Lake City, reports from the force in his field except one and we believe he has not yet reached his station. Brn. Stead and Peak are having good audiences in Montana. The missionaries seem to be in good spirits.

Bro. C. A. Butterworth writes from Sidney, New South Wales, June 7, that he has baptized seven. He states that the work is steadily onward and all are doing well. "There appears to be an advancement along spiritual lines, which indicates a brighter day ahead."

Bro. J. W. Morgan, Colorado mission, reports seven baptisms, not including Bro. Petre's report; two not reporting.

By advices from Bro. Ellis Short, Independence, Missouri, July 16, we learn that the Manufacturing and Mercantile Company has done an excellent business during the last six months. See notice in miscellany.

WE ARE asked, "Is there any harm in Saints going into a dance hall to watch the people dance?" We think persons might be better employed. It would be a good deal like going into a gambling den to see people gamble, into saloons to see people drink, or into pugilistic halls to see persons pound each other;—it is a waste of time that might be better employed.

GRACELAND NOTES.

Sr. Lois G. Johnson, Bishop's agent for Nova Scotia, remits for good part of their apportionment of college fund, with South Rawdon Branch still to hear from. This will insure Nova Scotia's quota on this fund, for the South Rawdon Saints will do their duty.

A brother from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, sends twenty dollars for college, and five for tracts to be sent to Llanelly, Wales.

Elder J. D. Stead sends offerings and writes: "Success to Graceland. I am of the opinion that Graceland will have money to loan if every other district has or will do as well as the Montana District."

W. G. Sterrett, of Pleasant Grove, Utah, writes as follows: "As I am in favor of Graceland College being kept open and used for the benefit of the whole church, I herewith inclose five dollars to apply on the college debt, from myself and family."

John Farley, Bizbee, Arizona, June 20, 1904: "Dear Bro. Kelley: You will find inclosed a money order for fifteen dollars to be used for Graceland, as we poor, far-away Arizonians don't want to see her closed. While we may not have any children to send to aid in filling up the class-rooms, we believe in education and lots of it. I think if there was more of it in the world there would be more Latter Day Saints. Sister Fike, of Naco, Arizona, says that she is going to send three scholars to Graceland next term. I hope and trust the debt may be raised and the educational part of the church work may prosper."

Sr. Effie A. Benedict, of Helena, Montana writes: "I have not been unmindful of Graceland's wants while planning for services at Unionville. When I was down at Helena a few days ago, I bought an express order for five dollars, which I inclose, to help lift the college debt. I have a selfish interest in Graceland, as I wish my three children educated within her walls sometime, when they are old enough. I shall do all I can to help 'the beautiful young girl.'"

D. R. Baldwin, Jonesboro, Arkansas, July 6, 1904: "I want to congratulate the church on the wise movements of those handling the college matters. God help us to abhor the thoughts of going back on any church movement having in view enlightenment of the rising generation. It is but little that we can do from this quarter, but that little shall be done gladly. Please forward to me as early as possible a statement of the amount falling upon the members of Martin's Creek Branch, and I will do my best while visiting them in their scattered condition."

Bro. Frank W. Burton, of San Jacinto, California, sends an offering to Graceland for himself and family and writes: "We would like to send more, but times are a little hard this year,—crops and fruit being nearly a failure here; but we wish for the success of Graceland." Bro. Frank is the son of Elder Joseph F. and Sr. Emma Burton, our missionaries in the Society Islands.

O. C. Scagin, Bay Minette, Alabama, July 19: "I see a call for Graceland College. Inclosed you will find a three dollar money order to apply on the debt. I am a poor boy, but I feel like helping what I can. May peace and prosperity be with Graceland!"

H. C. Powell, Cayucas, San Luis Obispo County, California: "I feel interested in Graceland, and felt so bad when I heard there was a likelihood of its doors being closed. So I will add my mite, one dollar and a half. I have a cousin by the name of James Sloan who is not a member of the church, but who is convinced that we have the truth and is ready to be baptized. He wishes to send to the church two dollars and a half and also two and a half to Graceland. Inclosed please find post-office order for same. There is no branch of the church here, so we never get to hear any preaching; but I tell you we would like to. We feel interested in the gospel and are willing and ready to help at all times, and we pray that the good Lord will prosper Graceland and the household of faith."

Bro. S. D. Condit, Blackfoot, Idaho: "Graceland is looked upon with favor among all, and no doubt our district will get her proportion, though it may be a little late owing to scattered conditions of the Saints."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The work of Bro. R. O. Self at Harrisburg, Nebraska, received favorable notice and comment in the Banner County News for Friday, July 15, 1904.

Bro. W. E. LaRue has succeeded in getting a column article in the Madison Bulletin (Maine), his effort being mainly explanatory of the differences between us and the Utah faction.

Bro. W. S. Hankins, priest and also president of the Traverse, Missouri, Branch, a small branch in the southern part of the Spring River District, sends in the following report as a local man: Preached six times, assisted five times; had charge of four prayer-meetings, administered the sacrament twice; helped organize one Sunday-school; held five discussions at five different schoolhouses, one night sessions of two speeches each; four places were new openings; baptized five; married two couples not members of the church; and had spoken at union Sunday-school some four or five times; time covered by report from January 1 to July 1, 1904. This is an excellent report for a new local man in a region where they have not had an official visit for many months.

A report from the Terlton, Oklahoma, discussion, held by Elder W. M. Aylor, shows that the victory was clearly in favor of the Saints, and much good done for the cause of truth during the debate. Bro. Aylor's opponent in behalf of his side seems to have relied upon the works of R. B. Neal. This of itself would show the turn the discussion would take if we had nothing else to go by. Mr. Neal writes and talks a great deal about the Latter Day Saints and the work of our elders. The trouble with his writings, however, is that they are wholly unreliable. All our elders have to do is to show up the cunning way in which Mr. Neal tries to conceal the truth, and expose his garbling methods so that an audience will understand the same, and Mr. Neal is down and out. We know of no man who has shown a greater weakness in his opposition to the truth of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ than is shown by Mr. Neal.

He seems to have no proper standard by which he is willing to have the matters tested. He is not willing to abide by a Bible decision; he can not by the facts of history, nor the developments of science; hence his reliance upon "stories told and circulated" and his cunning efforts to combine and weave what has been said by Latter Day Saints who "apostatized from the faith," and make it appear that this is the proper teaching and belief of the true Latter Day Saints. Mr. Neal's little bark must surely go down wherever it comes in contact with the truth and a fair examination is had.

The Dowagiac Herald (Michigan) for July 1, 1904, makes favorable mention of Bro. Asa Cochran's work at Dowagiac. Speaking of the Latter Day Saints it says: "These people believe in having but one living wife, and that we must suffer for our own sins, and not Adam's. They have other beliefs that would make the world better if we all lived up to them, and none that are detrimental to good morals or good religion."

By letter from Bro. Gomer R. Wells, manager of the Australian Standard Publishing House, No. 63 Nelson Street, Rozelle, New South Wales, dated June 27, 1904, he informs us that he is sorry to note that their publishing department in Australia was put in the category of private enterprises, and was not sustained as a church enterprise at the close of General Conference. He states: "Please note that the Gospel Standard is not nor never was a private enterprise. It is as much church property as the HERALD, and managed exactly the same. The Bishop here is the president of the Board of Publication." We think Bro. Wells' intention is to state the matter as he understands it, but the HERALD is a creature of direct organization and authorization of the General Conference, and has been under the management of the Board of Publication chosen by the church and sustained from time to time by the Conferences. We are not aware that the Gospel Standard was originated in this manner, and we know that it is not under the direction of the church Board of Publication. To us it is similar to the Canadian Messenger. The Gospel Standard may not be a private enterprise in the sense that it is run by individuals for individual profit. It is technically a church enterprise, but surely not in the same sense the HERALD is, or even the Ensign. However, we are glad to note what Bro. Wells says in regard to it, and trust that it may become a most excellent auxiliary to the work in Australia, and thus necessarily to the work at large. We surely welcome the Gospel Standard, and so far as the HERALD is concerned, give it the right hand of fellowship. We acknowledge receipt of catalogue of books, pamphlets, etc., from Gospel Standard Publishing House.

MAN'S NATURAL LOSS HIS SPIRITUAL GAIN.

And Jesus answered them, saying, The hour is come that the Son of man should be glorified. Verily, verily I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal. If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve me, him will my Father honor. Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour. Father, glorify thy name.—John 12: 23-28.

In these words of our divine Teacher and Lord, there is a remarkable and apparently abrupt change of thought from himself to the figure of a corn of wheat, and from that to man and then again to himself; but the order of thought is perfectly logical. There was a necessity for the glorification or perfection of the son of man, the humanity the Lord assumed in coming into the world. He states the means by which that perfection is accomplished and some of the changes which must take place in effecting it. There is something to put off, obstructions to be removed, before this great step in life can be taken. The Son of man could not be glorified without undergoing temptations and utterly rejecting all that was not in harmony with his nature. It was a human and not a divine nature the Lord assumed; a nature full of imperfections and hereditary evils. It was a life in this world which he must hate and reject, a life which in some way seemed desirable; for there can be no life without love, and hence his soul was troubled when the hour came for him to take a great step in his perfection; for this could not be taken without the rejection of much that at first constituted the life of the Son of man, as the Lord was the embodiment of all human perfection, both in its principles and in the means and order of its development. He is the way. He has set us a perfect example and we must follow him if we would rise above a merely natural life.

Man is essentially a spiritual being; he has capacities for the reception of life from the Lord which lie folded up in the material body as the germ of the future plant is folded up and hidden in the corn of wheat, and his nature can not be developed, he can not attain the highest possibilities of his being, without rejecting much that in some stage of his progress was necessary, but which, having accomplished its work, becomes useless and an incumbrance in every step of his progress. There is much to put off and leave behind, much that has served its use and for a time has been a part of our life, and that we love; but it must fall into the ground and die. This is a universal and eternal law, founded in divine wisdom, and inherent in the order and nature of man's life.

It is to some illustrations and applications of this law to human life that I desire to invite your attention, and first I wish you to see it as a universal law of the divine operations because it will come home to your understandings and hearts, with much greater force. You will say, If infinite wisdom always works according to this method, if God follows it in attaining his own ends without any exception, it must be an infinitely wise method, and there can be no other way to attain the highest good possible for any created being. It is like the law of heat or gravitation, which no rational man can ever hope to evade or violate with impunity.

If you look at the growth of a plant you will find it proceeds by distinct steps, the prior step being a preparation for the succeeding one, and the means by which it is taken. And when the hour comes for it to advance it always has something which it gradually puts off and leaves behind. The corn of wheat must fall into the ground and die before a new plant can be produced; and further on in its progress the leaves must fall, the blossom fade, the shell or husk must give up its life. They were all useful and necessary in their time and place, but when their work was done they were cast off as an incumbrance.

The same method and order are seen in more or less distinctness in the growth of every animal and insect. The insect is first an egg, then a worm, and then a winged thing of wonderful structure and beauty; and when the hour comes for its transition it leaves behind all that is not essential to its life in its new and more perfect state, all of which were necessary and good in their order.

Man being made to dwell in two worlds, passes through all states from the very lowest; and ever as he rises leaves behind him all that can not be made useful in his onward and upward course. But the lowest material and sensual things are useful and essential in their time and order. To live fully and consciously in this world, man must be clothed in a material body. This body is the mediator between him and the world, in order that he might live a conscious life upon the earth and have freedom and power to make the provisions for his future and real life which can only be made in this world. It was necessary that the material body and the lowest class of mental faculties should be developed first, that they might be used as instruments in collecting the material for the accomplishment of his work in this world, that he should be gifted with senses and sensuous desires and delights, with natural affections, with a love of himself and the world and all things that can minister to his natural wants and delights. The body must be continually supplied with food; and the Lord has provided for our careful attention to its wants in giving us an appetite for it, and making food so savory to the taste. If we were never hungry and had no appetite for our food, would we ever eat?

To insure the perpetuity of the race the Lord has endowed us with the power of loving and the desire to be loved. We are mutually attracted to each other by motives more or less pure and exalted according to our natures. Man and woman are drawn towards each other by mutual attractions and mutual wants. Each one is the complement of the other. The intimate relations of married life would not be possible without such mutual attractions. To provide for our many wants in the helpless period of infancy the Lord has planted the parental affections in the heart. By other affections and wants he gathers us into families and societies, into states and nations.

All our moral and intellectual powers are formed by exercise. Everything in the universe, both great and small, was formed from use, in use, and for use. To insure their use and gradual development the Lord has given the soul a desire for knowledge, as the body, for food; and he has filled the world with beautiful and attractive forms that continually tempt men to examine and possess them, to explore the hidden secrets of their natures, and to gather from them all possible delights. Man is so formed that his life in this world, with all its necessary limitations and imperfections, might still be complete and desirable to a certain extent.

The world is very beautiful and is perfectly adapted to our state here, to call all our natural faculties into exercise and keep us ever on the alert to learn or do something that may be useful for the development of our own life and for the good of others. Many of our relations to others are the medium of pure, deep, and most exquisite delights. So wise and merciful is the Lord that he makes even our cradle, and nursery, and the first rude outlines of life, attractive and beautiful in themselves, as well as prophetic of much better things. He has done all this to secure the preservation of our lives and the development of our various natural faculties, that they in turn might be used as instruments in the formation of our spiritual faculties. Thus in their place and order they are all good; they are all necessary. But they are not a final good, nor the highest good, and when the hour comes to take a step in advance, (a step they have been instrumental in preparing us to take,) they must give way, they must be cast off; and here comes our conflict and trial. The world is so beautiful; and our love for it, and our natural affections have become so strong that they are not willing to give place to any other. We become bound to it by innumerable attractions, and buried in it, and practically we regard it as the only world, and our natural knowledge, relations, and possessions, as the only things desirable. The whole force of thought and affection is directed to the life in this world. Such a state of things can not exist without the loss of our spiritual and eternal good. It is as though the whole power of the plant was spent in the accomplishment of the end.

The man, for example, who gives his whole thought, affection, and energy to supplying the wants and ministering to the gratifications of his appetites and senses does not rise above them; he lives a merely sensual and animal life. He may not be intemperate in the enjoyment of his sensual delights, nor need he be gross and low. On the contrary, he may be very delicate and refined, according to the usual meaning of these terms, and choose the most attractive modes to gratify his tastes; but if he seeks those delights as a final end instead of as the means to a higher, he is loving his life in this world, he is depending upon it for his happiness, he can never take another step in advance, he is bound to that sensual state by innumerable ties; his affection, his life is in it. The same is true of any worldly affections. The man who seeks for riches for any merely worldly good he can obtain by their means, develops nothing in himself higher than what he seeks. He stops as it were, in the beginning of life. He seeks nothing more than the means of living in this world; he desires to live well in a worldly sense, to have the comforts and the elegancies of life, and the freedom which large means would give him, and the power to gratify his tastes in the most desirable manner; but he thinks and cares for no other life than this, his aims and ends are all bounded by this world. The principle applies equally well to those who engage in any of the professions, who devote themselves to literature, science, or art. The man who labors hard to acquire knowledge and power to write a book, or to become an eloquent orator, for the money, fame, or power he may obtain by such means, is living for this world alone; and however much intellectual power, or even genius, he may possess this world bounds all his hopes, his knowledge, and his aims.

Whatever we know or do, whatever we seek or obtain that regards ourselves, or a life in this world alone, falls short of the end for which we were created. No truly spiritual principle is developed by it. However great and good and desirable all knowledge and power, and riches and accomplishment of whatever nature may be, they are only instruments to a higher and an eternal good.

We have nobler faculties within us than any we have yet exercised, though we have risen to the highest pinnacle of fame, or obtained the greatest success—faculties we have not yet called into action, and for which all those other powers are only an instrument and means of development. But more than this, these natural things now becoming an obstruction and hindrance to us they blind us to the true ends of life. The moment we begin to love the things of this world for themselves, and to regard them as a supreme good, they arrest all our progress and all desire for it, and thus they become positively injurious to us. We set our hearts upon them and seek to hold possession of them as ours. We do not use them for the end for which they were given us. They do not fall into the ground and die, and they bear no spiritual fruit, and we are losing all the eternal good we might gain from them; and soon we shall lose them also. Now the Lord, in his infinite love and mercy, desires to lead us on to the highest good possible for us. He seeks to have the inmost forms of life unfolded in the largest degree and fullest measure. He desires to have us rise and move on, hence there arises a conflict between us and the Lord. We seek to live here, we are drawn by all the attractions of our natural affections to this life, and become rooted and buried in the earth. He seeks to lift us up and to unfold those faculties which will enable us to live for ever in Christ's kingdom on the new earth. When he sees it will help us, or remove any hindrance, he takes away the natural good, that he may loosen the hold of our natural affections upon it. One man loses his property, and in the eyes of the world he is lost and ruined. What is it for? It is to show him that he can not rely upon riches. It may have no perceptible effect upon him at first; but, being plunged into grief and despair, his soul is troubled. But the Lord sees that when the estate is gone an obstruction to his spiritual progress is removed, or a weight is lifted from him which was pressing him down to death. Is not his natural loss a spiritual gain?

This is doubtless the experience of every one in some degree. Why is it? Because the Lord has something better for us, but which he can not give us so long as our hearts and hands are full of the things of this life. We often murmur and think the Lord unkind; but he is all the time striving to lead us to something better than we are seeking. We may not see it, for we can not yet perceive the good for which he has removed these obstructions and is preparing us. The greatest afflictions we meet with, in life, arise from the loss of those who are bound to us by the strong and sensitive ties of natural affections. Our children, and parents, and friends die, and we often wonder why it is. They made life so pleasant; they were a comfort and joy to us; our very life was bound up in them, and now it is very desolate. The deserted room, the vacant chair, the unoccupied place at the table, the broken link in the domestic circle are reminders of a terrible void in the soul. The smile and the voice, and the welcome presence, the strong arm and the faithful, loving heart are gone. All seems gone. The charm of life is taken from the earth. Why is it? The greatness and keenness of our sorrow for the death of our children and friends is just in proportion to our natural affection for them, as we regard them as belonging to us in this world. The Lord has endowed us with these natural affections for a most important purpose, to secure a most important end, and to give us delight in securing it; but they are still only a means to a higher end. Our children are the Lord's. He created them to become spiritual beings, and to live for ever in a spiritual world. Mere natural affections would keep them for ever here, would deprive them of their immortal birthright. When the Lord takes them from us it is to show us what we have forgotten, it is to break the force of our merely natural affections and lead us to regard them with a spiritual affection. And we never truly or rationally love our children, or any one else until we love them as spiritual beings; and all natural affection was intended to lead to that spiritual affection. When it does not it becomes perverted, and, like all other worldly and selfish loves perverts our lives and hinders the development of the highest capabilities of our being. When these affections are wounded, and the object in which they centered is removed, it is for the purpose of weakening their force, that a higher and purer love for them may be born within us.

The Lord never takes away from us the slightest natural good except for the purpose of giving us a greater spiritual good, or of preventing us from falling into a greater evil. He never suffers us to be turned aside from any purpose except to lead us to something better. The Lord is not against us, he is for us. He never deprives us of any real and substantial good; but is ever seeking to give us more largely and more richly. Therefore, whenever we are crossed in our purposes, when, having made due exertions, we fail of some natural attainment, when what we already possess of worldly goods is taken from us by no fault of our own, when pain and sickness fall upon us, and we feel that we can neither give nor receive delight, when we are bereaved of our children and friends, or those still dearer to us, when we are tried and tempted, we may know without a doubt that he who regards us with infinite love is permitting these trials to loosen our hold upon the things of this world, that there may be room in our hearts for something better. Every weary step, every disappointed hope, every pang of bereavement tells us, if we will hear it, that our heavenly Father has something better for us than this and tells us as plainly as though an angel from heaven stood by our side and said, Drop these worldly goods from your hands and hearts, that the Lord may fill them with heavenly goods. It may be many are ready to say, But it is very difficult to see it. Why does not the Lord show us the spiritual good, and place it side by side with the earthly, that we may see how much richer and worthier it is? Because he can not give it to us until the worldly good has ceased to fill the heart. The things of this life were designed to be instrumental in introducing a heavenly life; but if they occupy and hold the place of the heavenly, there is no room for them. All earthly and natural affections, and knowledge, and possessions, are as the corn of wheat to the germ within it. Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. The Lord can not give us the higher good until we are willing to give up the lower; and here is where the trial comes,—we see the earthly good, and our own hearts are not willing to trust the Lord for any higher good.

We are like the husbandman, who, having the seed of some precious plant, is unwilling to cast it into the ground for fear it might not grow; but there is no other way to raise fruit from it. So our love of life in this world must fall into the ground and die. That is, it must be kept in subordination to a higher life before that life can come into conscious action. Our life in this world is evil and false. We must keep it in obedience to a truly spiritual life, never suffering them to obstruct it; but it is hard for us to give up what we love, to hate our life in this world, and we can not do it without many struggles and much painful effort, because what we love is our life, and we are bound to it by the most sensitive and powerful ties. It is a part of our very being, and to give it up seems to be the surrendering of everything we have and are; but it is only that we may become something nobler and better. This we do not see, however, and when we find that what we love is fading and passing away from us, our souls are troubled, and we are inclined to pray, "Father, save us from this hour." But we may know, if we will, that for this very cause we have come unto this hour. We have been brought into this state for the very purpose that these obstacles might be removed which prevent our taking another great step in life,—a step from natural to spiritual life.

Our Lord himself came into this state. The nature he assumed was full of evil propensities and obstructions to his divine nature; and this fallen, perverted nature at first constituted his natural life; and this was the life he laid down for his friends. It was in some way so much his life that it cost him many painful struggles, and even the most terrible agony, to put it away; and can we hope to have all our selfish, worldly loves destroyed, and a heavenly nature begotten and developed within us, without any pain or struggle, when those trials come which are to loosen our hold upon a worldly life, that the Lord may give us eternal life instead? Shall we pray, "Father, save us from this hour," when it was for this very purpose that infinite love brought us to this hour? No, let us rather bow our heads and say, "Father, glorify thy name; carry out thy purposes of infinite love and wisdom in regard to me; let the blow fall; let my life in this world fade and die; let all its interests perish if they obstruct thy purposes of love and hinder the attainment of a spiritual and eternal good." When we can sincerely offer this prayer, we shall find that the Lord has never taken from us the slightest earthly good without giving us a greater good. We never can give up a selfish and worldly affection, however strong and precious it may be, without receiving an inconceivably higher and purer life. This is surely a most comforting truth, and will prove a powerful support to us in the trials and temptations of life. We all need it, we need it every day, we need it for comfort and support, we need it to encourage us to let go our hold upon the world, to give up this life, that we may follow the Lord and serve him, and thus move steadily on to the attainment of the highest good possible for us,—the attainment of eternal life in the great immortal glory, and the never ending peace and happiness, when we shall change this mortal body to an immortal body. Then Death can not feed on our immortal souls any more; but we will be like Christ, and share in all of his glory.

"Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth."—John 17:17. "And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth."—Verse 19. "And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one."—Verse 22.

GOD KNOWS US AND OUR WORKS.

SERMON BY ELDER E. L. KELLEY, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
JULY 10, 1904.

In the first chapter of the gospel of Saint John, verse 47, we have the history of an occurrence in the time of the Savior that will furnish the lesson for the hour:

Jesus saw Nathaniel coming unto him, and said of him, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile! Nathaniel said unto him, Whence knowest thou me? Jesus answered and said unto him, Before Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee. Nathaniel answered and said unto him, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel. Jesus answered and said unto him, Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig-tree, believest thou? Thou shalt see greater things than these. (Inspired Translation.)

The incident at least furnishes to the mind, at the beginning, the thought of the nearness of our heavenly Father to his children in this world. And if I shall be able to present to you the nearness of the relationship, and the interest that our heavenly Father has in his children here, possibly you will have some better idea of what true religion is, and what the brotherhood of the race means.

In this instance it was a time when Jesus was in this world working personally. Yet it seems from the historical statement that, though he was not present under the fig-tree with Nathaniel, so far as bodily presence was concerned, yet he knew just what Nathaniel was doing. He was able to comprehend the thoughts of his heart, the reasons for his presence under the fig-tree, the object of his soul, the hopefulness of his life in God and his work. Jesus, in calling his attention to the fact that he knew him before he was called by Philip, while he was under the fig-tree, brought to his mind, doubtless, what had passed through his heart while he was beneath that tree wrestling with God with reference to what he might do in life; and what men and women in this world ought to do. He not only called the attention of Nathaniel to the nature of his own thoughts and feelings while under the tree, but by this showed the further fact that God is cognizant of his children in this world in whatever situation they are placed, whether under the fig-tree, in the closet, in the city, or upon the high sea. Wherever they are, if they but realize the fact that their heavenly Father is not so far away but that he can see and hear, and knows what they are doing, they will be in position to live better in this world than they possibly can without such a thought as this.

This is in harmony, also, with the statement that you will find in the language of the apostle, in Acts 17:27. Referring to the fact that God had made of one blood all nations of men that dwell upon all the face of the earth, and determined the bounds of their habitation, "That they should seek the Lord, if they are willing to find him [I am reading from the Inspired Version; the other reads, "If haply they might feel after him, and find him"], for he is not far from every one of us." "Though he be not far from every one of us," is the reading of the King James Version, as also the Inspired, and this is the thought that I desire especially to call attention to. Is it a fact that in this life we are so related, as the workmanship of Him who is the great architect of all in this probationary state, that all things which surround us, and the bounds of the habitations of men have been fixed, and that he is so near to each and every one that he knows what we do from time to time; and that what we do in this life is to stand to our credit, or to our discredit, in time to come, and by which we must be judged and rewarded, or disapproved, before him? It is stated by Moses with reference to the Lord in his time, that "He is the Rock. His work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and righteous is he. God in his work is right and true all the time. It has been taught by some that men and women were not required to have any particular works on their part, here, in order that they may reach heaven; for heaven was to be reached without works. Would you like to go over on the other side, dwell and receive an inheritance with God whose works are always just and good, whose works are perfect, when you have nothing to stand to your credit in the shape of good works? If any of you will think but for a moment of the doctrine, that men and women can do nothing in the way of good works to bring them commendation in the hereafter, you will discharge the idea from the mind, discard it from your theory of a religious life, and you will enter upon another course, one more in harmony with God as he has revealed himself in the Bible,—and wherever else he may have revealed himself to his children. Instead of coming before him with nothing to commend them, they should come with something to their credit. If they have nothing to their credit, having done nothing, they stand in the attitude of those referred to in Revelation called Laodiceans, of whom it is said, "Because thou art lukewarm, [having no good works for yourselves, nothing to commend you to God,] because thou art neither hot nor cold I will spew thee out of my mouth." God's ways and judgments and dealings with his people are entirely different to the idea that nothing they may do in this world will stand to their commendation when they are to be judged by him. He has given the test beforehand, so that all may know that if we have nothing to commend us, nothing of good that we have done, when we stand before him, we will be cast from his presence instead of having it said to us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

It is stated by the prophet, Daniel, as you will find recorded in chapter 4, verse 37, that King Nebuchadnezzar, after he had undergone trials and tribulations sufficient to show him that God did take cognizance of men in this world, stated in the fullness of his soul, "Now I Nebuchadnezzar praise and extol and honor the King of heaven, all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment." Nebuchadnezzar had not fully comprehended and realized this before. He had to be made acquainted with the fact that God did look after men and women here in this world, and understood what they were doing. And if they wandered so far from him that they thought they were the important ones of the earth, that they need have no allegiance to him, that whatever they did was right because they did it, he still understood their state and situation, and their feelings, and he could bring them down to eat the grass of the field, as he did this great king; or overthrow them in various other ways.

I know that sometimes persons wonder when they think that a great nation, as Russia for illustration, is unable to overcome a heathen nation, as represented by Japan. But when you take the works of the two nations, and compare them with the revelation of Jesus Christ, as furnished here in the New Testament, it is found that to-day Japan, although essaying in a sense to worship idols, is in fact performing more of the works of the Christian as represented in the New Testament, than the Russian, who says that he believes God, but in life and works is far from him. Christianity, true Christianity, is represented by the works of the individual, that which he does and not what he says he believes. It is easy, as Jesus says, to say, "Lord, Lord," but he that doeth "the will of my Father who is in heaven," he is the one who is justified. So the apostle referred to the fact that some who had not the law, when they did by nature the things in the law their consciences accusing or excusing them in the day when God should judge the secrets of men by the gospel. (See Romans 2:14-16.) They would be judged according to their works; while on the other hand you might find a professedly Christian nation with works far below them, not accepted of the Lord. It was in this way that Israel was overthrown in Canaan. They were God's people. He had led them there. He had given them a home there; and even said that they should become the richest of all people, and the head of all nations, if they would but serve him. But he also said that in the day that "you shall turn from me, and serve other gods, I will turn from thee." We understand then that God is so interested in whatever his children do in this world, that he may point out here and there a nation, or an individual as we have seen, and say to the individual, or the nation itself, You have come short: you are "weighed in the balance and found wanting," just as he said to King Belshazzar. Here God, who knows all things and understands the hearts and feelings of men and women in this world, comprehended the situation of the king, so that his judgment was correct. The certainty then exists that God has ordered in this world, that his children might set their hope in God, and not forget his works which is: Keeping his commandments. When we talk with reference to the works of God in this world, as they relate to his children, we soon come to a level where they are comprehensible. The keeping of the commandments is a work that God has directed. So it is stated in the New Testament that if we fail to keep his commandments our works are "reprobate," at variance with him.

It is stated in the gospel, in the letter to Titus, that in the glorification of God in this world we should show forth the same by good works, and he sets forth the contrast between good works and evil works so clearly that you will notice it from the reading. "Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work." Men and women sometimes are not ready to perform every good work. They are apt to think, when such are presented, that they have performed all that God requires at their hands. But the apostle instructs one of his ministers, in teaching the saints, to "put them in mind . . . that they should be ready to every good work." The thought that good works are not required at our hands in this world, is entirely foreign to the Scriptures, or the revelments of God in any of the revelations that he has made. Speaking again with reference to certain classes who had moved out of the way, he says, "They profess that they know God; but in works they do deny him, being abominable, and disobedient." Their works were evil works in that they denied God; but he also mentions what they failed to perform; and this is the part I call to your attention, "And unto every good work reprobate." They were at variance with their profession. Whatever good work belongs to the work of God, they were at variance with that. Would it not be a good thing if we could all get in line and perform what God has called us to do in this world, not being disobedient, but in harmony with the good works that are referred to in the gospel and made binding by commandment? But these individuals to whom the Apostle Paul referred failed to come up to the standard, being abominable in many things in their lives. They were not in harmony with right and truth in anything, "but to every good work reprobate."

It is stated by the Apostle Peter that our heavenly Father is without respect of persons, judging according to every man's works. (See 1 Peter 1:17.) And if God is without respect of persons I need not expect to be commended of him in time to come unless I faithfully carry out the work that he has set me to do. I must not carry out the work that he has placed the apostles to do. That is not my work. He has called others to perform that. I can not fulfill the duties of the president of the church. That is not my work. I am not prepared to perform the work of a seventy, of a pastor, of the presiding officer of a branch or stake. I am to carry out and perform the work of the special office that God has directed me to do, and can not usurp any other place and be acceptable to him. God is to judge every man according to his works; and his works must be in accordance with the duties, the place, the station in which God has placed him. If he undertakes to work outside of this, it is only a question of time when it will be said of him, You have overreached the bounds, you belong to the class who have said that they were apostles, but they were found liars, referred to in the Revelation.

Men and women can not assume that they can perform this work or that work. Each and every one must stand in his or her place. It is a beautiful thought, too, that God has promised to give us the highest reward that is in his power to give, if we shall perform the work that is given us to do, acceptably before him. He has promised it to the sister who fills her proper place in the prayer service, in the Sunday-school. He has promised it to the brother who goes and fills his place in the seventy's office, the priest's office, the deacon's office, or the bishop's office. But he has promised to extend the commendation to no one, unless he does so perform his work.

In Revelation 2: 2 it is stated, in a communication to the church at Ephesus: "I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience." This was after the ascension of Jesus into heaven. While he was here in this world he said to Nathaniel, "When thou wast under the fig-tree, I knew thee." And now in heaven he speaks to one of his churches and says, "I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience." I know what you have done. And you will notice from the reading that he did not simply know the church as a whole or the presiding officer alone; but he knew each individual that was connected with the church; and each one who failed to perform his part in the church was not approved of him. Is it a fact, my friends, that we are in so close relationship with God at the present time, that he in giving communication to us to-day may say, I know thy works at Lamoni; "I know your patience"; "I know your charity"; I know your failures? If it is a truth as the Bible holds it forth, let us not be slow to acknowledge it. Let us be Saints who will live in accordance with the law that is laid down in the books, performing the work that God has directed us to do; not trying to see how little we can do in order that we may keep the commandments, but how much we can do.

Again he writes to the church at Smyrna: "I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty." I know it all: your works, your tribulation, your poverty. "(But thou art rich)," he says. After all, thou art rich. Why? This church at Smyrna, notwithstanding its poverty, notwithstanding its tribulation, had stood for the word of life, had stood for the truth that God had communicated to the world, and they were standing there holding up that truth, urging their brothers and sisters that eventually there would be a rich crown. Jesus looking upon their works said, "I know your works, your tribulation, your poverty, (but thou art rich)." Then he urges them to go on with an exhortation that ought to move every brother and sister, every child of God in this world to more and better deeds.

Again he says to the church in Pergamos: "I know thy works; and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is." God not only knows what his children are doing but he knows what place they are living in. Did you ever consider the temple of the heathen in Pergamos, a city in Mysia, a little country in Northeastern Asia? The temple was built in the form of a serpent, and they were worshipping the serpent instead of God. The message calls it "Satan's seat"; and to-day when we glance back over the history we find that it was the serpent Satan that they were worshipping. Jesus says of this little band of saints that had been established by the preaching of the apostles in Pergamos, "I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth." These faithful saints in Pergamos held fast the name of Christ, although they were in such a terrible place as that. Jesus not only saw the saints there as a church, but he saw them as individuals, and one a martyr who was slain in this wicked city on account of the fact that he held forth the divine name of the Son of God. Jesus observed this; his work was not lost. Then you and I must come to the conclusion that when we are standing against the assaults of the enemy of truth in this world, when we are doing all that we can in this world to sustain that which is true, and upholding the faith of our blessed Lord and Savior, we are under the eyes of the Commander of the greatest army ever known to the world, either in this or any other time. How careful should we be, then, in the performance of our duties. And if sometimes we are permitted to hear from him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant, I saw your tribulations and know your works and that you withstood the enemy, and became a perfect man in Christ, under these conditions, will not that be reward enough for us all? Do you want any more than that? And if any of us are called, as was Antipas, in such a strange, wicked city as he was, to give up life and become a martyr for Him, are there any who would fail to stand for truth? In our works and ways, then, in this world, I hope that if we have accepted the idea that possibly God did not know what we were doing, or that it was indifferent with him, we will change at once. If there is anything true in religion in this world it is this: God is closely connected with his children, and interested in their welfare. If we can realize this and make it as clear and forceful in our lives as when Jesus saw Nathaniel under the fig-tree we will be more careful in our lives and our works that they be such as to commend us to him when passed upon. That is where the religion of the world is so different from the religion of the Bible. The religion of the Bible is to bring God nearer to us. The religion of the world places him further off. Did you ever hear of individuals who did not believe God was very close; that he would not hear them if they cried unto him; that he would not answer if his children called to him? That God was so far away that when trouble came upon them, terror was their portion right away. What is the reason? They did not possess the religion that Jesus Christ brought into the world, because his religion brings the child and the Father near together; and Jesus in this way taught, Enter into the closet and when ye have shut the door, pray to your Father who is in secret, and your Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. I am not afraid of the young men and women, the boys and girls of the church, doing very great wrongs if they will burden their minds with the thought that God knows what they are doing. Honesty and uprightness, virtue in this world, all that is true and good can be brought to the highest state of perfection, and the people brought to that state and standard if they will but realize that our heavenly Father sees and knows what they are doing. But when they begin to think if they are in the dark God does not see them, or if they are far away in some distant city, the brethren do not know, and possibly the angels do not come into that city, then they can be led into divers temptations. Why! it is easy enough for an individual under such surroundings and circumstances as that to learn to begin to smoke or chew the obnoxious weed that God has said it will be pleasing to him if his children shall not do, and which they would not think of doing if they were standing with his children in this world in a sacred place. But he knows them where they are, and his angels know.

A short time ago I was at a conference in a neighboring district to this, and at the Sunday-school service I noticed that the one in charge of the general work, in instructing the little children in religious duty, made this proposition to them. He was urging them to good works, and in a measure the advice was all right. He said, If each one of the Saints in this district would give him the money that is expended for intoxicants, tobacco, tea, and coffee, he would pay the college debt, and not ask a cent from anybody else,—that is, their portion of it. It was all very well to call their attention to it; but there was another thought connected with it. Suppose, for illustration, that district could have taken the money that was expended for these things, and the proportion of the college debt that had been allotted to them had been made, and every other individual in the district had been released from performing his or her part, would you want to have been among the number who were thus released? Where would your good works have come in? When it comes to a proposition of duty among God's children, it is not based on the fact that there are certain ones in this world who have squandered, and if he could receive the part that is squandered God would have sufficient in the treasury. That is not the proposition upon which a single dollar is to come into his treasury. If it is squandered it is only to the condemnation of those who thus squander it. The position we should occupy toward any good work in the church is, I will do my part; God wants us to perform our part in the work. He could furnish the means without our aid if he did not want us to do the work. You take a family and supply the family, giving the children nothing to do in order that they might help supply the family, and you will soon ruin the family. And if God supplies the family (the church), not giving the children anything to do in the work, he would soon destroy the church. There is an excellent reason why we are given something to do. He wants us to thus work in every department of life. Not that we are to work as the slave; that is not the proposition. God does not want us slaves in any sense; but the idea is that men and women should work in this world for their own good and in order that they may show forth in their lives fruits,—their good works, and have something of treasure to their own credit. The apostle says: "This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men."—Titus 3: 8.

In our work in this world, then, the fact that our heavenly Father has asked us to do something ought to be an incentive to perform, whatever the cost. Not only that, but it ought to be a testimony to us that God is watching over us and is conscious of what we are doing.

I heard the statement made a short time ago that our work in paying the college debt would keep money out of the church treasury. Well, if this is true, did not Christ know it when he said, "Pay the college debt"? The objection, if true, makes him place the college the first work. There was never a wider mistake than this. I have yet to find the first individual who has given to the college at the expense of the performance of his duty to the church. If I should find such an individual as that I would turn his money back to him. Why, I would not like to bring a charge against this audience and say that there are some who have not conformed to the law of tithes and offerings as God has commanded. It would be equivalent in a sense to charging them as being "reprobate to every good work." You would not want me to charge you with not having complied with the law, would you? God leaves the responsibility with you of fulfilling the law and the performance of duty to his church. The bishop will not go around preferring charges against you. By and by Christ will judge whether you have conformed to his word or not. He is the one to whom you are paying tithes if you pay in his church. It is stated by the apostle that "there he [Christ] receiveth them [tithes] of whom it is witnessed that he liveth." (Hebrews 7: 8.) Christ receives when they are paid to the bishop, whom he has placed in his church to receive tithes and offerings. I hope you will not misunderstand me this morning. If you should pay one penny or one dime to the college at the expense of your duty to the church, you would be under condemnation rather than approval. You will never find a word from the bishopric asking men and women to perform one duty at the expense of another duty under God's law. First perform the duty to the tithe and offering fund, and after you shall have performed that duty, instead of being less able to perform some other duty you will be more able to do something else. That is the reason, then, that the apostle says, "Put them in mind . . . to be ready to every good work." Put them in mind of that. Just a short time ago the Lord said, "Pay the college debt." That is another good work that he has asked us to do. Let us do it, then, as becometh men and women of faith and confidence, and prove ourselves Saints indeed.

In our efforts, then, let us keep in view the fact that our heavenly Father knows what we are doing.

I will refer to one or two more Bible proofs, then leave the subject with you. "To the church at Thyatira," Jesus says, "write: I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works." "Notwithstanding," he says, "I have a few things against thee." A few things. Simply conforming to one thing is not sufficient then. The church at Thyatira could not fulfill the law by conforming to just a few things. There were a few things with which they were at variance. "I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first." He had measured them and weighed them. "Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not." I refer to it upon this occasion to show that each individual's work in the church is known as well as that of the church itself. Your work is known; so is mine. God knows each of us, and by and by we are to be rewarded, as the apostle says, "every man according to his works." And if there is a beautiful statement in all God's word that our minds should be brought to dwell upon more than others it is that found in Revelation where he says, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth; for their works do follow them." Their works not only commend them upon this side, but on the other side. And if there is anything that will give hope and cheer to the heart in this world, it is the fact that after we have expended our time and opportunities in the service of God, sustaining that which is good and true, the works which we have done will be placed to our credit, and will so appear there on the other side.

But he says of the church at Philadelphia: "I know thy works: behold I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." Then he goes on to show how no man could shut the door as long as they kept the faith that was manifest there in him. No man can shut the door, if we but stand true to the faith. God says to the church at Philadelphia, No man can shut the door; and so he says to the church at Philadelphia in our time, and in New York, and San Francisco, and Chicago, and every great city in this country where he has a church planted: No man can shut the door if the Saints there will engage in good works and honor him and his law. And no man can shut the door in Lamoni either if we so stand. But if we shall fail to perform our part, do our work, then the evil one comes in, and shuts the door.

But again, to the church of the Laodiceans he says: "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot." And because they were lukewarm, neither cold or hot, he would not receive them. God receives or approves men and women who have something to their credit. It is represented by the Savior in his teaching recorded in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, that the one who went and hid his talent in the earth was not commended. Instead of being commended it was stated: "You should have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury." Men and women in this life should perform some good work, and whatever the talent it should not be hid. It was not usury in the way we sometimes use the word, that is, to get more than the money is worth. That is the usual definition of usury. But God wants us to put our talents to use so that we shall have something from a proper use; not more than it was worth. It is not that God indorses unlawful interest in this world, but he urges right-doing with our property if we have it, as anything else. So this one referred to should have placed his talent to proper use, and thus have had something to his credit. But no, he was afraid. He did not do anything. He was not willing to do anything. And because he was lukewarm he did not perform anything. So we read, "because thou art lukewarm, neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth."

In our work, then, let us not forget that the Lord is near and watching over us, and that he is cognizant of what we do. And those of us who are making an effort to keep his laws ought to be willing to be tried and tested here, and now; not wait until we get over on the other side. Here is the time and place. If we can not stand here, how do we know that we shall be able to do so when we pass to the other shore?

May the Lord help us so to work that we shall not be of the class of the Laodiceans, neither those who failed to do their part in any of the other Asiatic churches to which I have referred; but by our good works we may be approved of him, and finally be rewarded with the faithful and true of all ages.

Religians should take note of several new features in the Religio's Arena of Autumn Leaves. Among them, the series of pen and ink cartoons and "The Religian's Dictionary," begun in the August number, and the "Question Box" begun in the July number.

HOW TO BECOME FISHERS OF MEN.

To-night I am to speak to you about preaching, and I want to do it with the utmost simplicity. I do not presume to be a teacher who has secrets to unfold; still less can I claim to be an expert in the great vocation. I suppose it is true of every preacher that as we grow older our sense of the inefficiency of our work becomes intensified. The wonder grows that God can accomplish so much with such inadequate implements. One's satisfaction with the evangel deepens with the years; but one is increasingly discontented with the imperfect way in which we present it. No, I do not speak to you as one who is proficient; I am only a blunderer at the best. But I speak as one who is honestly desirous of better and more useful equipment, and it is in the strength of my desire that I dare to speak to you to-night. I have often been amused by the headline to the preface in Izaak Walton's Compleat Angler. Here is the quaint sentence: "To the reader of this discourse, but especially to the Honest Angler." That is the adjective I will borrow to-night. We are here to confer together, not as expert anglers, or even as successful anglers, but as those who are "honest," and who are sincerely desirous to become proficient in their ministry. More than two hundred years ago there was a young probationer in the Church of Scotland named Thomas Boston. He was about to preach before the parish of Simprin. In contemplation of the eventful visit he sat down to meditate and pray. "Reading in secret my heart was touched with Matthew 4: 19: 'Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men.' My soul cried out for the accomplishing of that to me, and I was very desirous to know how I might follow Christ so as to be a fisher of men, and for my own instruction in that point I addressed myself to the consideration of it in that manner." Out of that honest and serious consideration there came that quaint and spiritually profound and suggestive book: A Soliloquy on the Art of Man-Fishing. All through Thomas Boston's book one feels the fervent intensity of a spirit eager to know the mind of God in the great matter of fishing for souls. Without that passion our inquiry is worthless. "The all-important matter in fishing is to have the desire to learn."

"Now for the art of catching fish, that is to say, how to make a man—that was not—to be an angler by a hook, he that undertakes it shall undertake a harder task than Mr. Hales, a most valiant and excellent fencer, who in the printed book called A Private School of Defence, undertook to teach that art or science, and was laughed at for his labor—not that but many useful things might be learned by that book, but he was laughed at because that art was not to be taught by words." So says Izaak Walton in his famous book on Angling. It is painfully true. If books would make an angler, I should be the most expert fisher in this neighborhood. On one of my shelves there is quite a little collection of fishing books, out of which I have been able to borrow many hints and suggestions in my own particular labor. I think I know them fairly well, and in many of their chapters could pass an examination with honors. But in the practical handling of the rod I should come in the rear of the most incompetent. In angling I am a splendid theorist, but useless in practice. Is it not here that we must begin our consideration of the ministry of Christ? Books can not make a preacher; he may find them full of helps, but they are not creators of gifts. They may teach how to make sermons, but they have nothing to do with the creation of prophets. We are made by Christ. "I will make you." We are fashioned in his presence. Every wealthy and fruitful gift for our work is born directly of his own grace and love. Ring out the music of the changing emphasis in this phrase! The promise reveals its treasure as each word is taken in turn and given distinctive prominence. "I will make you," no one else and nothing else can do it. Neither books nor colleges nor friends! "I will make you." He will make us just in that secret and mysterious way in which true poetry comes into being. The gift will come as a breath, as an inspiration, as a new creature. "When he ascended on high. . . . He gave gifts unto men." He dropped one gift here, and a commonplace man became a pastor. He dropped another gift here, and the undistinguished became a prophet. He dropped a third gift yonder, and an impotent man became a powerful evangelist. "I will make you fishers of men." But even though the germinal gifts of the preacher are Christ-born and Christ-given, our Lord expects us to reverently and diligently use our minds. He will further fashion and enrich his gifts through our own alertness. The incipient capacity will be developed by our own intelligent observation and experience. What can we learn which will foster our heaven-born gift? Let us turn to the fisher in natural waters, and see what hints he may give us for the labors in our own sphere. What, then, does the angler say to fishers of men?

"Keep out of sight!" Mark Guy Pearse is an expert fisher, and rarely does a year pass without his paying a visit to the rivers of Northumberland. And he has more than once laid down what he considers to be the three essential rules for all successful fishing, and concerning which he says, "It is no good trying if you don't mind them." The first rule is this: Keep yourself out of sight. And secondly, keep yourself further out of sight. And thirdly, keep yourself further out of sight! Mr. Pearse's counsel is confirmed by every fisher. A notable angler, writing recently in one of our daily papers, summed up all his advice in what he proclaims a golden maxim: "Let the trout see the angler and the angler will catch no trout." Now this is the first essential in the art of man-fishing: the suppression and eclipse of the preacher. How easily we become obtrusive! How easily we are tempted into self-aggressive prominence! How prone we are to push ourselves to the front of our work in quest of fame and praise and glory! The temptation comes in a hundred ways. It steals upon us in the study and spoils our secret labor. It destroys the efficacy even of the bait that we prepare. It comes upon us in the pulpit and perverts our workmanship even when we are in the very midst of our work. The Devil secretly whispers to us in the most unctuous flattery: "That was a fine point you made." And we readily respond to the suggestion. And so the insidious destruction is wrought. We don't stand aside. If I may vary my figure, let me say that our function is to draw aside the curtain and hide ourselves somewhere in its robes. Let us remember that so soon as our people see the preacher they will not take his bait. As soon as we become prominent our Lord is never seen. Keep out of sight!

"Cultivate a mood of cheeriness and praise." Here is a bit of counsel from an old book whose phraseology and spelling have quite an old-world flavor about them. It is a book on fishing. The writer is recording the requisite virtues of the angler: "He should not be unskillful in musick, that whensoever either melancholy, heaviness of his thoughts, or the perturbations of his own fancies, stirreth up sadness in him, he may remove the same with some godly Hymn or Anthem, of which David gives him ample examples." Is not that rather a far-fetched notion of an angler's equipment? Why should he require the gift of music? Because, says my author, when the angler is depressed he can not throw a light line. When a man is melancholy his throw will be heavy. When his spirits are light and exuberant, he will be able to touch the surface of the water with the exquisite delicacy of a passing feather. Can we not apply the counsel to the ministry of preaching? If we come into our pulpits in a depressed and complaining frame of mind, we shall lack the requisite throw. If we are possessed by melancholy we shall catch no fish. And therefore it is well that we, too, should resort to the service of song. We must sing away our depressions and melancholies before we preach the evangel of grace. We must put on "the garment of praise." I frequently consult a book given to me many years ago, and now out of print,—Earnest Christianity, an account of the life and journal of the Reverend James Caughy. There is much in that journal that reminds me of David Brainerd and John Wesley. One day James Caughy was depressed and melancholy, full of lamentation and complaint. There was no music in his spirit and there was no power upon his tongue. He preached, but ineffectively, because his words were not pervaded by the spirit of praise. And then he took to the corrective of prayer and singing. He adopted William Law's counsel, and chanted himself into lightness and buoyancy of heart.

He exchanged the "spirit of heaviness for the garment of praise." And now mark the change in the diary. "Easy preaching now. The sword has a new edge, more apt to penetrate; more strength in my soul's arm to lay it around me fearlessly." That is the spirit. We must address ourselves to the great act of preaching in the exuberance which belongs to a thankful and praiseful heart.

"Study the fish!" George Eliot was once listening to the complaints of some angling friends as they were describing their fruitless day's work. Looking into their empty creels she said: "You should make a deeper study of the subjectivity of the trout." That is a very suggestive word, and pregnant with significance for the fishers in the world of men. We must study the fish that we may find out what will win them for the Lord. All fish can not be caught with the same bait. We must study the individual prejudices and habits and tastes. We must discover what will catch this man and that man, and address ourselves accordingly. I was once passing through a little village in the Lake District, and there was a card in the shop window which gave me more than a passing thought. On the card were a number of artificial flies with this engaging headline: "Flies with which to catch the fish in this locality." The shop-keeper had nothing to say about the requirements of the midlands. He had studied the characteristics of the fish in his own neighborhood, and he had discovered what bait provided the best allurements. We preachers must do it in our own localities. It was the practice of the Apostle Paul: "To the Jews I became as a Jew that I might gain the Jews." He became "all things to all men that he might gain some." He baited his hook according to the fish he wanted to catch. I don't think we should fish with the same hook for Lydia and the Philippian jailer. It may be that we shall discover that a sermon will never effect the purpose. We may find out that a letter will do infinitely better work. Or it may be that a direct talk may be the requisite constraint. Or, again, it may be that a long conversation, apparently indirect and aimless, but quietly dropping one delicate hint, may win a soul for Christ. Study the fish!

"Learn from other fishermen!" Other men will never make us fishers, but they may make us better fishers. If we have the rudimentary gift their experience may help to enrich it. Let us turn to the expert fishermen and see if their ways and methods can give us helpful counsel. John Wesley was a great fisher, can we learn anything from him? Doctor Alexander Whyte has told us how he has made a patient and laborious study of John Wesley's journals for the purpose of classifying all the texts upon which the great preacher built his evangel. Is not that a splendid discipline for any one who wishes to become skillful in the great ministry? What did Wesley preach about? And how did he fit his message to the changing circumstances of his varying spheres? The Salvation Army has a great body of expert fishers. They lack many things, but they catch fish. How do they do it? We may dislike many of their ways, but what is it in their ministry which enables them to win multitudes for the Lord? What was the secret of Finney and Moody? And what is it about Torrey which constrains the people to become disciples of Christ? Let us set about this investigation like men who wish to do great business for the Lord. Let us eagerly pick up any hints which these highly endowed and experienced men may be able to give us.

"It is a great matter to take a trout early in your trial. It gives one more heart. It seems to keep one about his business. Otherwise you are apt to fall into unproductive reverie." I know no word more closely applicable to the work of the ministry. If we do not catch men we are in great danger of losing even the desire to catch them. Our purposed activity is in peril of becoming a dream. Let me counsel my fellow preachers in the lay ministry to make up their minds to catch one soul, to go about it day and night until the soul is won. And when they have gained one man for the Master I have then no fear as to what will be their resultant mood. The joy of catching a soul is unspeakable! When we have got one soul we become possessed by the passion for souls. Get one and you will want a crowd! And let me say this further word: Keep a list of the names of the souls you win for the King, and if on any day you are apt to be cast down, and the lightness and buoyancy goes out of your spirit, bring out that list and read it over, and let the contemplation of those saved lives set your heart a-singing, and inspire you to fresh and more strenuous work. It is a good thing to have lists of the Lord's mercies by which to drive away the clouds in a day of adversity. Let your labor be directed to the immediate catching of men for the Lord. "It is a great matter to take a trout early in your trial."

And now I will close this meditation by offering a suggestion which I obtained from an advertisement in an anglers' paper some time ago: "Now is the time for your old favorite rods to be overhauled and treated with a steel tonic that will not fail to work wonders in the way of renewing their strength." And following this advertisement came this confirmatory testimonial: "I am glad to acknowledge that a very whippy gig-whip of a rod has been converted into a powerful weapon." My hearers will immediately perceive the spiritual significance of the words. There are times when we need the "steel tonic" in order that our poor ministers may be converted into powerful weapons. And, blessed be God, we have the promise of this redemptive work in the very names in which the Holy Spirit is revealed to us. He is called the Renewer, the Reviver, the Restorer of souls, and by his baptism the poorest, weakest agent can be turned into a powerful weapon. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength." Let us turn to our Lord this very night, and seek for that renewal in the strength of which we shall turn to our work with multiplied possibility, and with perfect assurance of success.—World Wide.

The Sunday-School Lesson for July 31, 1904.

A BIT OF HEBREW HISTORY.

Abraham was the founder of the Hebrew nation. The Lord led him from his home in the East to Canaan and promised that land to him and to his descendants after him.

But the Lord told Abraham on one occasion that his descendants in a strange land would be in bondage for four hundred years.

In the time of Jacob, the grandson of Abraham, eleven of his sons with their families went down into Egypt in a time of famine. The twelfth son, Joseph, was already there and in the high office of prime minister to the king of Egypt. It was to his kind protection that the aged father and his other sons and their families went.

They were treated very kindly upon their entrance into the land of Egypt, but, after they had been long in the land, their increasing numbers gave rise to a fear upon the part of the Egyptians that they would overrun the land and become its owners. This led to the adoption of various harsh methods, intended to keep the Hebrews in subjection, for it was not desired that they should depart from the land on account of the valuable labor they were able to render in public works.

But, in time, the Lord raised up Moses and gave him commands to lead the Hebrews out of the land of their bondage to Canaan, the land promised to Abraham and his descendants after him.

The number of the Hebrews was now very great. There were six hundred thousand men able to bear arms, which is estimated to imply a total of at least two million of men, women, and children.

In speaking of them and of the work of Moses with them, Geike says, "These tens of thousands of freshly emancipated slaves, only a few of whom understood the mighty work that had been done for them, followed their leader, glad to escape from the lash of the drivers; but only to murmur at their first difficulty on the morrow. Such a people, migrating in mass, he had to lead through the desert to the Land of Promise, caring for them and training their minds and hearts! Out of a horde he had to form a nation; conquering a home for it, giving it social and religious laws, and making it fit for noble national life."

If only a few understood the mighty work that was done for them in leading them out of Egypt, how little did they understand of the mighty work that lay before them in which the greatest obstacle to their success would be their own lack of discipline and moral strength. The great, helpless multitude passed out of Egypt by the path through the Red Sea when the mighty hand of the invisible God held back the waters that they might escape, and they sang a great song of rejoicing, esteeming themselves free from Egypt.

But they were free only in a temporal sense. The degradation of Egypt was yet upon them, and they could become free from it only by learning to believe and obey the word of the unseen Jehovah whose unfailing presence with them was manifested by the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night.

How dimly they perceived the light of his presence, how feebly they trusted him, how little they understood him, how often they disobeyed him can only be gathered from a careful study of the history of their long sojourn in the wilderness.

In forty-five days after leaving Egypt, the Hebrews reached Sinai, where God gave them his law through Moses and with it great promises of blessing conditional upon their continuing to obey it. At this place they entered into a formal covenant to serve God and to renounce the idolatry they had learned in Egypt, "the house of bondage."

They stayed at Sinai nearly a year; then they started on again, and in a march of about the same time as that from Egypt to Sinai, they reached the border of the land of Canaan. Here they utterly refused to go into the land, though encouraged by the Lord to do so and to trust him to open the way as he had hitherto done.

They stood on the borders of Canaan, the land of rest, but they were spiritually unprepared to enter in. In spirit, they were yet in bondage to Egypt. They did not enter in; for forty years they wandered in the wilderness; then God bade their children go forward to Canaan, and in time they entered in and possessed the land.

Now, what has this to do with our lesson this week?

It has this to do with it: Those saints to whom Peter wrote were admonished by him to gird up the loins of their minds, to prepare themselves for the toilsome journey before them, not a journey in the physical sense but in a spiritual sense.

As the Hebrews went forward, incited by their hope of reaching the land of rest, so the saints had a hope of "grace" to be brought to them at the revelation of Jesus Christ, at his coming.

As the Hebrews were under the necessity of leaving behind, not only the land of Egypt, but also its sins, so the saints were admonished by Peter to leave behind them the lusts of their ignorance, those evil habits that had characterized their lives before they entered into the gospel covenant to serve God.

And what have these things to do with us, that we should give time and thought to the study of them?

They have this to do with us: There is before us something to be attained which corresponds to the land of rest sought by the people of long ago. We hope for a place with Jesus when he shall come.

Notice the teaching points of the lesson. They will make the application of the lesson to us.

THE TRIBE OF LEVI.

The lesson refers to this tribe's being chosen to serve in the temple instead of the first-born sons of Israel. Some may not be informed upon this topic; we will, therefore, offer the explanation that, on the night before the Israelites left Egypt, the Lord sent upon the households of the Egyptians the last one of the ten plagues. This was the death of the first-born son of each family.

On that night the Israelites ate the passover supper for the first time. By command of the Lord, each family killed a lamb and put some of its blood upon the door-post; the flesh of the lamb was eaten.

When the angel of death went through the land, he passed over every house of the Israelites where the blood of the lamb was on the door. The first-born sons of Israel were saved by the blood of the lamb.

Because they were thus spared, the Lord claimed them as his own, but afterwards he took the tribe of Levi to serve him in the tabernacle in the place of first-born sons out of all the families, and the tribe of Levi, ministering thus in the tabernacle and temple service of God, were supported by the other tribes.

When you study the Sunday-school lesson, study with that sincere desire for understanding of the truth that is prayer in the heart.

It is possible for a pupil to gather an inkling of what is in the lesson from the Quarterly alone, but in order to get the full benefit of the lessons as outlined, it is necessary to use the Bible and other scriptures as suggested in the lesson.

It is a mistake to hurry Sunday-school scholars into the senior grade. The intermediate lessons are of sufficient depth for the average child until he is fifteen or sixteen years of age, and to hurry him or permit him to go into the senior grade before he is able to comprehend the matter presented there is to run the risk of wearying him and of making his study of the scriptures distasteful to him because of his lack of understanding.

"The end of learning is to know God, and out of that knowledge to love and imitate."—Milton.

Discipline in the Sunday-School.

There may be different applications of the word discipline, but our purpose in this paper is to use it in the sense of government; subjection to laws, rules, and regulations; a prescribed form.

We might compare the Sunday-school without discipline to a ship without a rudder. It is not under control, is unmanageable, and drifts with the tide. But when properly equipped with steering apparatus and a well-trained crew, it reaches its destination in safety and on time. So the Sunday-school with a prescribed form as its rudder, must be equipped with officers and teachers who will unitedly stand at the helm and guide their barque over all shoals and rocks of difficulty, that might otherwise cause its overthrow and prevent a safe anchorage.

MUST BE READY.

This band of workers or crew must be ready "at a word" from captain or superintendent to perform cheerfully any duty that will insure the success and promote the welfare of the school. The prescribed form may vary in schools, but whatever is adopted as such form should be honored and closely followed by all, especially by teachers and officers, as they should be examples for the child in all things. It may consist of an opening song by the school, which comprises every member, superintendent, teacher, officer, and pupils. This song service should be entered into with spirit and with understanding as far as possible by all, for "the song of the righteous is a prayer to God," and we should "make melody in our hearts to the Lord," for it is pleasing unto him. The singing should always be led by a chorister, that harmony may obtain. Those who refuse or fail to sing have thus far marred the discipline of the school by failing to perform a duty—a part of the "prescribed form." Especially should the teachers sing if possible, for what "teacher" does has great influence over the child. It were better to feign singing by moving the lips than to appear indifferent. The word of the Lord to the youth of our day is, "Let the young of the church cultivate the gift of music and song." Is not the Sunday-school a good place to put that command into practice?

IN THE OPENING PRAYER

but one can pray vocally. All should kneel or bow the head, and lift the heart to God that there may be unity, for in union there is strength. An earnest, heartfelt prayer by a band of Sunday-school workers would surely be pleasing to the Lord and acceptable. "The prayers of the righteous availeth much with the Lord." Is not this a part of the discipline of the school?

RESPONSIVE READING,

if a part of the exercises, is worthy our best efforts. Let the leader of the response read in a loud, clear tone of voice that all may hear and follow in unison, that this may prove a pleasant and instructive part of the hour.

When the Lord's prayer is repeated in concert let every voice be heard and not a few scattering ones, for that is chaos, not order. "Order is heaven's first law," and why should we not emulate it?

MARCHING.

Perhaps the step our schools have taken in regard to marching to classes, has met with as much opposition as any move we have ventured. Yet, has a reasonable point been made against it as part of the exercises of the school? We believe not. There are those who object as a matter of timidity, but this can soon be overcome, with a desire to be "in line with duty." The child enjoys the march, then can not the older ones "humble themselves as a little child," in this instance, and thus encourage him? To see old and young in the Sunday-school—the army of the Lord—keeping step to good music is a grand sight, and we are sure it is pleasing to the Lord, our General. But like all other features of the school, it must be our best effort; otherwise it savors of confusion rather than order.

BEST EFFORT.

If every member of the Sunday-school, from superintendent to youngest member, could feel that the success of the school depended on his best efforts in the discharge of every duty, what a glorious work the Sunday-school would prove to be! Think you the Lord is pleased with half-hearted labor? No, let us be "true-hearted, whole-hearted, faithful, and loyal," for nothing short of this will be acceptable to him.

BARRIERS TO GOOD DISCIPLINE.

One of the greatest drawbacks in any work is jealousy, and we regret to notice that it is found among Sunday-school workers. If an earnest, ambitious teacher or officer advance a good thought or plan for the improvement of the school, do not let jealousy poison your mind against it because another may receive the praise or glory, as you may term it; but rather encourage and emulate it, and thus gain in wisdom and advance the work. Well may jealousy be termed "the green-eyed monster," for such it proves in the path of our success in every good work. It arises always from selfish motives, and they go hand in hand. "Selfishness has no part in the establishment of Zion," so let us examine ourselves as teachers, as officers, as pupils, lest we harbor such things. Let us be ready also to graciously submit to the majority in all things and not adhere so tenaciously to our personal views as to cause division. "A house divided against itself can not stand." Discipline means due subordination to authority. So let us not take a firm stand against any plan or principle that will cause division and be a detriment or barrier to the good discipline of the school.

ONE MORE THOUGHT.

"What is connected with a wagon, of no material use to it, and yet the wagon can not run without it?" Answer: "Noise." While the Sunday-school can not run without some noise, we think that it could run with much less than it sometimes does. A little thought and attention to this matter would avoid what often proves confusion and babel, rather than a well disciplined school. With Paul we would say, "Let us think on these things."

GRAVELFORD, Oregon, June 27, 1904.

Editors Herald: I take this opportunity, by the request of Bro. Holt, to write to your paper. The brother having started on his summer's work in these parts, wishes to let the readers of your paper know just how the skirmish has commenced. Having been released from his winter quarters, by the good Lord stopping the rain that he has told about, he visited the Saints at Bridge and gave them good words of cheer; from there to Myrtle Point, and I think preached to them; thence to Bandon, holding meetings in that branch, with renewed comfort to the Saints and friends; thence back to Myrtle Point, whither a man like myself was dispatched to bring him to Pleasant Hill. He gave us several good sermons which were gladly received, and did some visiting among the Saints for a day or two, answering all inquiries, and telling of his long visit with Doctor Conover and wife. He also held meetings at Lee, Pleasant Hill, and Bridge; splendid interest at Bridge, a lighted hall being furnished by one Mr. Nosler, who belongs to the Christian Church. On the 4th Brn. Keeler and Holt came back to Myrtle Point to fix up the tent, aiming to be in readiness Tuesday the 14th for the train to Coosbay. They expect to set up the tent at a point called North Bend.

Bro. Holt is a very logical man in his speaking, and Bro. Keeler has made a very good reputation where he has been heard. I have just heard from the elders. From the report given by Bro. Holt the meeting at North Bend was not a success. There was too much wind, afraid it would wreck the tent, so they turned their course to Douglas County. I am sorry to hear this, as all the Saints in this county made their best effort to get a tent so there could be some way to reach other points, and this is one of the best months to do tent work, and the prospects look bad. The news is discouraging, and the likelihood is that nothing can be done. Now I know there are places here that ought to be reached, and it will take a tent to do it as there is no church to get, and all the schoolhouses are being closed to preaching. You can balk the best horse that was ever hitched up, if you tie him down to a stump, and we have been stumped. But let's make another pull, and that for a good reunion and perhaps we can adjust matters there to meet the wants of the people. The Saints of this branch have been doing fairly well, and it makes me glad to see them full of zeal, showing a willingness by taking hold to help. But the Devil is always lurking, and he generally gets hold of those that are shirking, and it keeps those that are true and brave busy fighting him off. Hoping that there will be an increase in good to the work,

A. J. MAYSE.

Dear Herald: While I sit here in the home of our genial Bro. and Sr. Garbutt viewing from the window the distant snowy peaked range of the Olympia Mountains, that look so beautiful as the early morning sun casts its light upon them, I am truly reminded to some extent of the distance from loved ones left for the gospel's sake, also many others that are passing along amid the changes that are taking place as time goes on. And while the mind reaches back in remembrance of those in the different mission fields where I have labored, I am again reminded of the many blessings received and the joyful times had while associated with them. And while our partings were not altogether with joy and gladness, because of our separating, perhaps to meet no more in this present life, I could only say, Lord, thy will be done; send me where thou seest best, and I will go without a murmur, although many preferred I be sent back, not only in Central Illinois District but in other fields as well. So not having the opportunity to attend our late General Conference, I remained in the field until April 12. Bidding the Saints and friends farewell I went to St. Louis for a few days' visit with son Edward and wife, and meeting with the Saints over Sunday in their services, returning home on the 20th. Not much rest, however; many sick to look after, garden to arrange and plant, house-cleaning to be done and affairs to arrange to get away to my appointed field. While at home I preached a few times in Lamoni and vicinity, baptizing three precious ones, and administering to the sick some sixty times. Once more in the early morning of the 24th of May, I bade loved ones good-by, took train via St. Joseph, Denver, Salt Lake City, Portland, arriving at Seattle, the 6th of June, in company with Bro. O. B. Thomas, whom I have known so many years. We were accommodated with thirty-day tickets to stop over at different points, and made our first stop in Salt Lake City. We found Bro. Amos Chase busily engaged in the work. By his kindness we were taken in carriage to different parts of the city, and the views from the belfrey of the city hall, the four state university buildings, Fort Duglass, the temple, the tabernacle, and the beautiful wide streets were all interesting. While there four days we held five meetings, three on the street, and two in the Saints' chapel. Bro. Chase has so pushed the work that it is no trouble to get a large crowd of listeners on the street corners. Notwithstanding the joy and pleasure of being there, two things were not so pleasant. First we found Sr. Chase not able to be up very much of the time, but feeling very poorly, having overdone herself caring for the home, and in her effort to assist Bro. Chase in street work. Second, we learned, in meeting Sr. Ballantyne, of Moorhead, Iowa, the sorrowful news of the death of her husband that had occurred about two months before our arrival there. He had been ailing for some time and it was supposed bringing him West might be of great benefit to him, but so bad was his condition, that in about thirty hours after their arrival he passed away.

Again we hastened on our way, viewing the scenes of the valley, and the Wasatch mountain range along the way, finally reaching the Columbia River, and gliding along its bank, with the Cascade Mountains on the left, with magnificent scenery from their base to their summits. We were made to wonder, From whence came all this grandeur? In a short time we came in sight of the great city of Portland, anxious to see and make the acquaintance of the Saints. The writer tarried with the Saints over Sunday, preaching twice, Bro. Thomas going to Seattle two days before, where I arrived near five o'clock Monday evening, welcomed by Bro. and Sr. D. W. R. Davis and family, formerly of Lucas, Iowa. Found Bro. Thomas had not lost much time after arriving here, but had preached twice on Sunday and made glad the hearts of another couple in uniting them in the bonds of matrimony. Soon after my arrival here I made inquiry for Bro. J. C. Carlisle, the one suggested by Bro. Gomer Griffiths that I labor with in tent work up in British Columbia. No one in the district seems to know anything of his whereabouts at the present, so not satisfied to sit around and do nothing I set about looking up and hunting out of this great city some former acquaintances that had come West. Among these were the family of Bro. Charles Hammer, in what is called Georgetown, in South Seattle. We could not help weeping anew because of their bereavement in the sad loss of the twin sister Girtie, who died the 6th of March with diphtheria. So closely were they confined they had no opportunity for funeral services, this not being permitted under the rules of the board of health. They desired that I should preach her funeral sermon and have secured the Methodist Church building for the funeral sermon, Sunday, July 3. We are in hopes that this meeting will be the means of reaching the hearts of some that will work to us an opening in Georgetown, as a gospel sermon has never been preached there, I am told. Next I sought to find our very much esteemed Bro. George Thorburn's father and mother, and also his brother Walter, who resides in the great city. The father and mother reside in the suburb town of Renton. We were truly glad to meet them at their son Walter's, and we were very socially entertained while there. George will no doubt be glad to know this.

I must tell you that the young lady, the bride of Bro. Frank Pierce for a short time, just one week, was led by Bro. Thomas into the waters of baptism. Many hearts were made glad to witness this act as recognized of God. We held some meetings at Mr. and Sr. Briggs' residence, (where the Saints have held their meetings for some time,) waiting patiently for our tracts to arrive, so we could commence our street services. They finally came and we obtained permission from the mayor and chief of police, commenced our work last Monday night, and are having a goodly degree of interest manifested on the part of quite a number. May our Father give success to the work done, as he knows the necessity of all. T. J. BELL.

Dear Herald: Leaving Inman, Nebraska, my home, May 9, I went by team to Meadville, stopping enroute with Bro. Claus Storejohn near Turner, Mr. Tyler at Newport, Bro. J. J. Davidson, Long Pine, and Mr. and Sr. Hurless, Ainsworth. On the 15th preached twice in Bro Moores' home, Meadville, being joined by Elder W. W. Whiting and his daughter Dolpha with the "Tom Thumb" organ. We remained till the 29th and held meetings. Saints were encouraged, and friends to the cause made. Mrs. Gamet joined us at Meadville on the 28th, and accompanied us to Bonesteel, where we arrived on May 31. June 4 and 5 we had two-day meeting at Bonesteel. These meetings were fairly attended and enjoyed, or so we thought. I continued preaching at intervals at Bonesteel till June 16. Bro. Roman Wight having joined me he did the preaching on the 19th. On the 21st we drove to the home of George Williamson. Of course we were trespassers on the territory of Bro. Eli Hayer, and now that we are safely back to our own side of the river ask his pardon.

George and Roman were schoolmates in the sweet days of boyhood, and enjoyed the visit. There we were joined again by Bro. Whiting and Dolpha, and held in all eleven services in the schoolhouse at Castalia. The story of a restored gospel had not been told at that point and we had a full house and excellent interest.

On Monday Bro. Wight baptized Bro. George Williamson, which will be good news to the Saints of Gallands Grove, Iowa,—his old home.

Grandma Williamson is living in the home of her stepson, George, and was rejoiced to have the elders come. However, she only attended one service, feeling too feeble to make the exertion necessary. We had a pleasant home at George's house and were made welcome in many places where we visited. For all of which the missionary feels grateful.

LEVI GAMET.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, July 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: I arrived here on Wednesday, the 29th of last month, from Lamoni, Iowa. Found friends, and at evening met the Saints in prayer-meeting, Brn. A. M. Chase and Swen Swenson among the number present. Much excitement was going on about the city over the prize inducements offered to those who purchased tickets to Saltair. Money, houses, and lots were to be raffled off, each one holding a ticket having a chance. It was a record-breaking day, over fourteen thousand visiting the pleasure resort. Saturday evening the drawing took place at the Salt Palace.

Sunday, July 3, Sunday-school was held at ten o'clock in the forenoon, and was quite well attended, Sr. Pauline Higgins in charge. At eleven o'clock Bro. H. N. Hansen and the writer were put in charge of the sacrament and prayer service. The meeting was good. At five o'clock in the evening Bro. Swen Swenson preached to the Scandinavian Saints. At six o'clock in the evening Bro. A. M. Chase made some good points, on the street, to attentive listeners. At half past seven in the evening, Bro. H. N. Hansen preached in the chapel with good effect. It was a busy day and everything passed off to edification.

The glorious Fourth was spent in Liberty Park with the Saints. An abundance of refreshments had been supplied, and eating and drinking and conversation occupied the time principally. At two o'clock in the afternoon a program was rendered consisting of patriotic songs, readings, and speeches in honor of our country, after which we returned home tired enough. The evening, until ten o'clock, was spent in counsel with the officials present, talking over matters affecting conditions here. Retired late and slept soundly. July 1, a heavy rain and hail-storm and cloudburst visited the city, which caused much damage. This was a record-breaker for this country. The weather is warm, but crops do not look as well as they do east. However, there is promise of plenty. Our reunion is to be held here, beginning the last Saturday in August. There is a feeling of hopefulness among the Saints, and they are well.

Yours truly,

WM. H. KELLEY.

ARTHUR, Ontario, June 28, 1904.

Dear Herald: It must be years since I asked for space for a letter, and even now if I am too lengthy you may cut it out. Believing as I do that the following kind of items will always be of interest to your readers and help your (our) paper, here goes: It is said if one wants to secure or preserve a hearing in writing or speaking they first must have something to say, then say it, then quit. Sometime in last May, 1904, in the town of Grand Valley, twelve miles from Arthur, there was a pastor of the Disciple Church, Reverend L. A. Chapman, who doubtless seeking for notoriety, or with some other motive (God knows), undertook to belittle the Saints and slandering Joseph Smith by writing a lengthy article in Dufferin Post stating that he could prove that Joseph Smith both taught and practiced polygamy. His attack was uncalled for. No one had given any offense. He certainly knew that there was a wide difference between the Reorganized Saints and the branch of Utah Mormons, so called. His letter was sent to President R. C. Evans who immediately answered it through the Post, asking Mr. Chapman to meet in public debate and affirm his own assertions. Chapman's second letter was headed, "Challenge accepted," but instead of accepting it himself states it would be lowering his dignity to stoop to discuss with R. C. Evans, but that they had men that were of that class, meaning Clark Braden. (What a compliment for the man imported.) He said he never was afraid of any man he had ever met yet, but must confess from what he heard of R. C. Evans he must "quail before this man." Oh! how holy some men get when they are called upon to prove their lies.

But now what? After R. C. Evans answers Chapman's letters to the Post, he feeling the sting of defeat writes for his big brother, Braden. Of course Chapman is too holy to "slander" any man "living or dead," he said in his letters, and in the next breath attacks the character of Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans. Think of it! He is too holy to debate but can engage one of the low class (Braden). Now what? At this epoch Chapman evidently knew R. C. is to be engaged in attending and presiding over our two district conferences, one at Humber Bay, the other Chatham. Braden arrives the very day we begin; advertises widely for six nights lectures against us in Chatfield hall, Grand Valley. Some of our people went to the lectures, and took notes, but were forbidden to ask a question, Braden even calling out, "shut your mouth," "you are a liar," "no Mormon can speak here." The most bitter persecution was used, and I am told from good authority that some of the leading preachers of their own town called the attention of their congregation to the way the Saints were suffering in their own town.

Chapman lowered himself in the minds of the people of Grand Valley, and made matters worse by importing Braden. He then tried to say it was the people of Grand Valley that were responsible for Braden's coming; but none of the preachers of other churches stood by Chapman. In fact they signed a paper saying they had nothing to do with it, and so did some of the most prominent members of the other churches. The Methodist preacher did not care to sign the paper but said "I do not wish to be mixed up in it"; and did not indorse Chapman's position.

By the time R. C. gets through with the conference work, Braden has done his worst, but our turn comes. R. C. announces for a six-night lecture in the same hall, (put out bills with his picture on them,) to commence Monday, June 20. His famous name called forth a packed house, some prominent people driving from our town to hear him. R. C. is greeted with continued applause and a good hearing. The first night he spoke about two hours, and judging from his excellent lecture, the close attention, and hearty applause, I would consider his first night wiped Braden and Chapman off the map. Crowds came, a number driving every night twelve miles, and Braden's stock in trade was like a bubble when the light was turned on; his imaginary shadow-men of straw became annihilated. R. C. examined Braden's attack on the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Inspired Translation, showing it to be but a third-class infidel argument, worn out, and borrowed from such men as Underwood. Braden also asserted Joseph Smith was a polygamist, swindler, forger, and liar; this was all disproved, and Richard gave the decision of three courts and sixty-nine witnesses, showing the charge that Joseph Smith practiced polygamy, or had revelation on the same, was untrue.

He also exposed the "Spalding Romance" in a very plain and forcible manner. If any man can believe the Spalding story was the origin for the Book of Mormon after hearing the evidence produced by R. C. Evans he is easily pleased and ready to gulp down any story or lie so long as it goes against the divine origin of the book. Yet Braden is ever ready to dish up any kind of trash, where he thinks the hearers are not posted,—any kind of lies, any kind of stories, so long as it goes against our claims; but thank God, their folly will be made manifest, and was. R. C. exposed his misrepresentations to the satisfaction of every honest, unprejudiced person. He also exposed "Braden" by the evidence of his own wife and a host of Disciple preachers and editors; showed Braden's indorsements were frauds, read the evidence from the Grand Valley preachers and prominent citizens that show that even in Grand Valley he is not wanted.

But lo, and behold! Bro. Chapman had packed up bag and baggage and left for the States, while R. C. was in the heat of his lectures.

It is the opinion of many that even Chapman was disappointed in his man Braden, and many of the citizens became disgusted with Braden's misrepresentations of our books. The following is a quotation taken from a handbill the Disciples spread around during R. C.'s lectures to say they did not send for him. Of course "they," the church, did not send for him but their preacher and a few that hold spite did. The Disciples are divided over that I understand.

"I have this to say, The Disciple Church had nothing to do with Bro. Braden's coming here, have not paid or promised to pay him any money, or any other consideration to induce him to come to Grand Valley.

GEORGE TOUGH,

"Clerk Disciple Church, Grand Valley."

This shows the church does not indorse him. Poor Braden! where will he get rewarded? Is Chapman going to put up? It seems the people of Grand Valley do not want him. We must give Chapman credit for trying hard to urge the people to give collection for Bro. Braden; but now since the Disciple Church did not send for him and the people of the Valley will not pay him, and Chapman is gone, and Bro. Braden is getting old, what about the money? Surely this wonderful debater will not be left to live on five hundred dollars a year in such a country village as Grand Valley! Thus the lectures ended on Saturday, June 25. So on Sunday, at nine o'clock in the morning, we all assembled with the Grand Valley Saints in their church to enjoy a season of prayer. A number of members of the neighboring branches assembled and a profitable and spiritual meeting was enjoyed.

At eleven o'clock in the forenoon R. C. again spoke, and gave a very feeling and effective sermon, mostly directed to the Saints, which the writer considered a treat. At the close of the meeting privilege was granted for those desiring baptism to make it manifest, and one fine lady stood up. R. C. baptized her by her request. Another gentleman (a Disciple) expressed his opinion to the writer at the close of the prayer-meeting, that he had never been at such a spiritual meeting in his life, this being the first sermon he ever heard us preach except hearing the lectures, and he is almost persuaded.

After these services we were all invited to Elder J. H. Taylor's new mansion to partake of "Bessie's" pastry. The table seemed rather weak to carry the burden, but when the "little Welshman," round and fat, his partner, "Fred," long and thin, "the blacksmith," and many other "star boarders," who never miss a meal nor pay a cent, occupy places, they help the table bear the burden. So after hearing some fine singing, (I was singing,) and an hour's chat, we tried to pack "Napoleon," "Fred," and a buggy full of valises into one buggy. The conclusion was that we must walk, so some fellow took pity and drove "Fred" to Arthur also; there they gave us another parting sermon, and on Monday, the 27th, R. C. and Fred left for other quarters. We indeed enjoyed the week's hard work; but experience has proved to me that when we work hard our spirituality is stronger. Work develops muscle, physically; so with the other.

In the interests of our Lord's great work, I am, and ever hope to be,

Your brother,

GEO. BUSCHLEN.

Extracts from Letters.

M. M. Turpen, Thurman, Iowa: "Bro. J. M. Stubbart is with me and we are holding meetings in tent with fair attendance and good attention by those who come inside of the tent. We are in good health and spirits. Sr. Stubbart is improving in health."

J. D. Stead, Woodside, Montana: "Everything seems to be going all right here. Bro. Peak and I have plenty of work to keep us busy. Our health is good and we are enjoying ourselves generally. Warren is a nice man to labor with."

J. F. Mintun, Des Moines, Iowa, July 16: "The work in the city is moving along without any friction, and the larger number of the Saints are feeling well in the gospel, and are having very spiritual prayer-meetings."

Bro. Fred A. Smith, writing from Osage, Minnesota, July 14: "We are holding a few meetings here and stopping with Bro. Henry and Sr. Jane Way. We went fishing yesterday and caught seventy. Fred M. said he was ashamed to look a fish in the face. We are boys yet, and can hardly resist the temptation to go fishing. We have inherited some things. Reverend Braden has broken out again, this time at Moorhead, Iowa. He has challenged. I have cautioned patience and moderation. May arrange for discussion if I find it needful. Our reunion at Dunseith, North Dakota, was a good one. The people received Bro. Fred M. nicely, and it has been a good thing for him and the people."

William N. Hanner, 532 West Liberty Street, Cincinnati, Ohio: "My heart has been made to rejoice the last few weeks because of blessings received. Bro. J. W. Metcalf has been here since July 3, and Bro. William H. Kelley (of Indiana) came on Tuesday, the 12th, and we are having good interest, presenting the truth to the people on the street corners of Covington, Kentucky. The Spirit has been with us. Bro. Ebeling baptized three June 14; I baptized three, and Bro. J. W. Metcalf confirmed them July 3. On July 10 Bro. Metcalf baptized one more.

The tracts which have been sent me I have taken pleasure in distributing, and if others have tracts to spare and will send them to me I shall be glad to receive and use them in Cincinnati and Covington."

Miss Ina Russell, Marshfield, Wisconsin: "I do not belong to any church, yet I am interested in the Reorganized Church. My father and mother have been members of it for twenty-eight years. We are deprived of church privileges; no branch within forty miles, and we have not seen a Latter Day Saint for two years. Three years ago we had Brn. Gowell and Whiteaker here, and were refused the use of the Methodist church because we were Mormons."

Bro. O. J. Hawn, McGregor, Michigan, July 13: "I baptized eight here last week and expect to baptize more next Sunday. This makes seventeen baptized into this branch this summer."

Bro. W. D. Ellis, Sparta, Washington: "One baptized here and more are interested who, we trust, will obey."

Bro. Fred M. Smith, writing from Bemidji, Minnesota, July 11: "Friday we reached here from Lansford, North Dakota, where we had been to see the Graham children. We were met by Bro. Birch Whiting and driven to his home eight miles north of here, where we stayed over Sunday. Bro. H. A. McCoy was holding meetings in a schoolhouse nearby, and we assisted him, F. A. speaking three times, I once. We came in again this morning, and are now at the home of Porter Nye. We go to-morrow to Osage. Last night I had the to me novel experience of hearing a pack of timber wolves give one of their doleful and hair-raising nocturnal concerts. Oof! I was glad I was indoors."

S. D. Condit, Blackfoot, Idaho, July 19: "Bro. Pender and I held street meetings at Pocatello last week with some interest. He remained to continue for a time, while I will cooperate with Bro. Vanderwood. We began here on the streets last night. Thus far this work seems successful. We had good interest at Malad. Our workers are all hopeful of good results."

Conference Minutes.

Spring River.—Conference convened with the branch at Joplin. June 1 to 5, the first three days being occupied by the auxiliaries of the district. Business session opened 10 a. m., Saturday, with President John T. Davis in the chair, T. S. Hayton, Maud Einstein, and J. A. Davis clerks. Branches reporting: Pittsburg, Pleasant View, Fairland, Columbus, Webb City, Traverse, Galena, Miami, and Joplin. Five branch presidents reported work done in their respective branches. Ministry reporting: General church appointees F. C. Keck, J. T. Riley, John T. Davis, F. M. Slover, J. A. Davis, and W. H. Smart; Elders F. L. English, J. A. Graves, Steven Briggs, T. S. Hayton, J. M. Richards, J. L. Lancaster, W. H. Prewitt, A. C. Greer, and H. J. Thurman; Priests W. S. Hankins, W. B. Hillen, J. B. Warren, and M. T. Beck; Teachers J. C. Powell and George Rhonemus. The treasurer's report showed a balance of $7.67 on hand. The reunion committee was granted all rights necessary for conducting the coming reunion to be held at Berry's Ferry, Indian Territory, beginning August 19, 1904; and was also authorized to operate cooperative boarding house, and to invite speakers for the reunion by first consulting with the district president and missionary in charge. By the unanimous vote of the assembly the District Musical Association was admitted as an auxiliary to the Spring River District. Sunday-school association minutes were read as a report and accepted. High Priest John T. Davis was reelected president of district, Elder F. L. English assistant, and T. S. Hayton secretary and treasurer. It was decided to hold next conference with the Pleasant View Branch, October 22, 1904. Through the patriarchs and others present at the sacrament service the Holy Spirit gave words of counsel, comfort, and cheer to the Saints; it was a grand spiritual service long to be remembered.

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Those Who May be Interested in This Mission: My field address will be Spokane, Washington, and I shall be glad to visit or wait upon any who may need my services. I hope to make the scattered Saints a speciality. I ask their assistance in opening up new places wherever opportunity may offer for preaching the gospel. If Saints or friends who may have relatives or friends in my mission will write me particulars, I will be glad to call on them in the interests of the church or otherwise.

Bro. Griffiths has placed me in charge of this field and I hope to have the cooperation of all the Saints in making a successful effort in spreading the gospel into the new fields, leaving the branches to be cared for by local authority. To this end we shall work and labor.

In gospel bonds,
T. W. CHATBURN.

Reunion Notices.

The Eastern Oklahoma reunion will convene August 19, in S. J. Hinkle's grove, four miles east and three and one half miles south of Stillwater, Payne County, Oklahoma, lasting ten days. Plenty of pasture free. Cooperative boarding tent on the grounds. Come all who can. By order of committee. S. G. Amous, William Budworth, S. J. Hinkle.

Camp-meeting convenes August 19, 1904, in Green's Grove, three miles south of Tabor on the Tabor and Malvern Railroad, eight miles from McPaul on the Kansas City Railroad. Good speakers in attendance. All those wishing tents must order by August 10, giving size. 10x12, 3 foot wall, $1.75; 12x14, 3 foot wall, $2.20; 10x14, 6 foot wall, 2 rooms, $2.50; 12x14, 6 foot wall, 3 rooms, $3.50; this includes freight. J. F. Greene, secretary, Tabor, Iowa.

The reunion of the Saints of Utah will be held at Salt Lake City, August 27 to September 4, inclusive. The committee will make every effort to look after the comfort of visiting Saints and friends. So come and help us make this meeting a success. T. Thoreson, chairman committee.

The Western Nebraska and Black Hills reunion will convene at Minatare, Nebraska, on the North Platte Valley on Friday, September 30, and continue until October 9. Apostle F. A. Smith will be with us and we hope to have Elder D. M. Rudd, of Dow City, Iowa, also R. O. Self, C. W. Prettyman, and S. D. Payne, of missionary force. Come and have your spiritual strength renewed. There will be hay and water for horses; fire-wood will be furnished free to all. Will try and arrange for tents for all. For further information write J. L. Detrick, Bayard, Nebraska.

Conference Notices.

The district conference of Utah will convene at Salt Lake City, September 3, at 10 a. m. Let branch officers see that all reports are in the hands of our secretary, (Sr. Margaret McLane, 163 Center Street, Salt Lake City, Utah,) in time for this meeting. Also let our local force of the ministry remember to place a written report of their labors for the past six months, with her promptly, as we have a resolution to that effect. Trusting that all may cooperate to make this conference our very best and praying that the spirit of Christ may aid us, I am, yours for the cause of Christ, T. Thoreson, president.

The Northwestern Kansas conference will be held on reunion grounds in Bergier's Grove, near Osborne, Kansas, on August 13 and 14. Please send all reports at as early a date as possible to F. E. Taylor, secretary, Beloit, Kansas, Victor Star Route.

The Ohio conference will be held at Vales Mills, August 27 and 28, commencing at 10 a. m. We expect our minister in charge, with others, to be present. Reports expected from all the branches. Send to D. E. Fri, secretary, Creola, Ohio. S. J. Jeffers, president.

The West Virginia conference will convene September 3, 1904, at 10 o'clock, with the Buffalo City Branch, in Jackson County. Saints coming from east or west will come over the Ohio River branch of the B. & O. Railroad to Millwood Junction, thence to Ripley over the R. M. C. V. Railroad where they will be met by the Saints. Write Bro. Henderson or Riley Williams at Marstal, West Virginia and they will meet you. G. H. Godby, president.

Convention Notices.

The Sunday-school convention of the Northwestern Kansas District will convene near Osborne, Kansas, August 12, 1904, at 2.30 p. m. Reports should be sent early, to district clerk, Myrtle Coop, Downs, Kansas. Let us all try to attend, bringing the good Spirit with us. John A. Teeter superintendent.

Program for the afternoon session of the Kirtland District convention to be held Friday, September 16, 1904, at Sharon, Pennsylvania: A short talk on Sunday-school work by superintendent; a paper on the merits of a Sunday-school library by E. The Clinton District association will occupy the time from 8 to 9 a. m., on Friday, Tuesday, and Friday, and from 8 a. m. to 12 m. on Wednesday, at the reunion at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, August 12 to 21. We want to employ the time mostly in normal work, and urge every Sunday-school worker in the district to attend prepared to assist. C. W. Keck, superintendent.

The Religio association of Clinton District will hold their convention at the reunion at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, on the afternoon of August 17, 1904. During the reunion the Religio will occupy one hour each day from 8 to 9 a. m., alternately with the Sunday-school. On Wednesday the Sunday-school occupies in the forenoon, the Religio in the afternoon; in the evening a joint entertainment will be held. The work will instruct and encourage. We wish all workers to come prepared to assist in this work. Election of officers will take place. Secretaries of locals will forward reports and credentials in time for the convention, to Sadie Dempsey, secretary, 521 North Main Street, Nevada, Missouri.

To Saints of Different Sunday-schools in Western Nebraska and Black Hills: At a meeting held July 3, in which there were three Sunday-schools represented, it was decided to convene sometime during our reunion to be held at Minatare, Nebraska, September 30 to October 9, and organize a district association. All superintendents please come or see that your school is represented. Let us organize, for "in union there is strength." J. L. Detrick, for the committee.

GOSPEL TEACHING; A VOICE FROM THE PAST.

Being impressed the other day to write a gospel sketch, and thinking about the subject, a whisper of the Spirit said, "Examine the Times and Seasons which lies on your desk." Opening the book without premeditation the two following articles, written in 1843 and published from the Boston, Massachusetts, Bee, were presented to our attention. The first was written by Elder George J. Adams, one of the most able elders of the later period of the presidency of the Martyr and Patriarch. He was at work in the missionary field at the time of writing of the article and took up the pen in defense of the faith as he was duly entitled and accredited to do by the church, for which task he was amply able. We produce it in its entirety as being as good an article for the purpose as we feel qualified at the time to present. It is a voice from the past, the early portion of the year 1843.

The second article, signed H. R., is evidently from the pen of Henry Rogers, a man who was identified with the work before the death of the Martyr, a quite able man, and one who refused credence or sanction to the revelation of plural marriage, and remained aloof from any connection with the church thereafter. Like many another, believing in the gospel as he heard it preached by the elders of the latter day work, yet declining entirely to give the new and dangerous theories any moral support, he quietly withdrew and remained aloof. We commend the articles to the readers of the HERALD for the value there is in them.

WHAT DO THE MORMONS BELIEVE?

This is a question often asked, and the following sketch from the pen of Elder Adams, the big gun of Mormonism in these parts, will throw some light upon the subject:

A SHORT SKETCH OF THE RISE, PROGRESS, AND FAITH OF THE LATTER DAY SAINTS, OR MORMONS.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was first organized in the state of New York, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty, on the sixth day of April. At its first organization, it consisted of six members. The first instruments of its organization were Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, who received their authority and priesthood, or apostleship, by direct revelation from God—by the voice of God—by the ministering of angels—and by the Holy Ghost. They claim no authority whatever from antiquity, they never received baptism nor ordination from any religious system which had previously existed; but being commissioned from on high, they

Some time ago we received a package of descriptive booklets and pamphlets illustrative of Hawaii and its history, directed in the handwriting of Bro. Gilbert J. Waller, of Honolulu. We were absent at the time they were received, did not examine them until of late, and so neglected to acknowledge their receipt. They are very nice and instructive and we are pleased to get them. Thanks to the brother sending them.

REUNION of the Lamoni Stake will be held at Davis City, Iowa, from the 2d to the 11th of September, inclusive. Notice will appear later.

first baptized each other, and then commenced to minister its ordinances to others. The first principle of theology as held by this church, is faith in God the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, who verily was crucified for the sins of the world, and who rose from the dead on the third day, and is now seated on the right hand of God as a mediator, and in the Holy Ghost who bears record of them the same to-day as yesterday, and for ever. The second principle is repentance towards God; that is, all men who believe in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, are required to turn away from their sins, to cease from their evil deeds, and to come humble before the throne of grace with a broken heart and a contrite spirit. The third principle is baptism by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, for the remission of sins with the promise of the Holy Ghost, to all who believe and obey the gospel. The fourth principle is the laying on of the hands in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. This ordinance is to be administered by the apostles or elder of the church, upon all those who are baptized into the church. Through these several steps of faith and obedience, man is made partaker of the Holy Ghost, and numbered with the children of God. Through this process man is adopted into the church and kingdom of God, as one of his saints; his name is then enrolled in the book of the names of the righteous, and it then becomes his duty to watch, to pray, to deal justly, and to meet together with the saints as oft as circumstances will admit of it; and with them to partake of bread and wine in remembrance of the broken body, and shed blood of Jesus Christ; and in short, to continue faithful unto the end, in all the duties which are enjoined by the law of Christ. Fifth, it is the duty and privilege of the saints thus organized upon the everlasting gospel, to believe in, and enjoy all the gifts, powers, and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit. Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and in short all the gifts as mentioned in scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.

This is a brief outline of the doctrine of this church, and we believe that it is the only system of doctrine which God ever revealed to man in a gospel dispensation, and the only system which can be maintained by the New Testament.

Now as far as all other modern religious systems differ from the foregoing principles, so far we disfellowship them. We neither recognize their priesthood, nor ordinances as divine. But at the same time we wish well to the individuals of all societies; we believe that many of them are sincere, and that they have the right to enjoy their religious opinions in peace. We do not wish to persecute any people for their religion. But we wish to instruct them in those principles which we consider to be right, as far as they are willing to receive instruction, but no farther. We also believe that the scriptures of the Old and New Testament are true: and that they are designed for our profit and learning, and that all mystical and private interpretation of them ought to be done away;—that the prophecies, and doctrine, the covenants and promises contained in them have a literal application, according to the most plain, easy and simple meaning of the language in which they are written. We believe that the Scriptures now extant do not contain all the sacred writings which God ever gave to man, for it is easily demonstrated, that they contain but a small portion indeed of the things which God has made known to our race, for it is evident that a communication has been kept open between God and man from the days of Adam to the present day, among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people; except such communication has been withheld by reason of transgression. Thousands of communications were received during the progress of these writings, besides those which are written in it, and thousands of communications have been received since the Bible was completed. Thousands of communications have also been received among other nations, and in other countries remote from the scenes where the Bible was written. And in short the Holy Ghost is a spirit of revelation and prophecy, and wherever it has been enjoyed by mankind, there communications from God have been received.

We therefore believe in the Book of Mormon, which is an ancient American record lately discovered, containing a sketch of the history, prophecies, and doctrine of the ancient nations who inhabited this country. And we also believe in many communications which God has been pleased to make us in the rise and progress of this church, as he has often revealed his word to us, by visions, by dreams, by angels, by his own voice and by the Holy Spirit of prophecy and revelation; and lastly, we believe that God will continue to reveal himself to us until all things are revealed concerning the past, present, and future; until we have come in possession of all knowledge, intelligence or truth, which is in existence. We believe that the Jews and all the house of Israel will soon be gathered home to their own lands from all the countries where they have been dispersed, and that they will become one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel, nevermore to be divided or overcome, and that they will all be brought to the knowledge of God, and will become a holy nation. We also believe that Jesus Christ will come in person, in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, and all the saints with him to reign on the earth a thousand years, and that he will destroy the wicked from the earth by terrible judgments at the time of his coming. We also believe that the saints will rise from the dead at his second coming, and that they will live and reign on the earth a thousand years. We do not believe that the wicked will rise from the dead until the thousand years are ended, but that their resurrection is after the millennium and connected with the last judgment. We further believe that the restoration of Israel and Judah, and the second advent of Messiah are near at hand, and that the generation now lives who will witness the fulfillment of these great events, and that the Lord has raised up the Church of Latter Day Saints, and has set the truth in order among them as a commencement of the great restoration. For further particulars as to our doctrine and principles, I refer the reader to a work entitled The Voice of Warning, which is particularly designed as an introduction to our faith and doctrine. I must, however, before leaving the subject, contradict certain reports which are in circulation concerning our principles in regard to property. It is a current report, and often credited by those who have no acquaintance with our society, that we hold our property in common. This is a base falsehood without a shadow of truth. The members of this church have ever held their property individually, the same as other societies, with the exception of that which they freely give for the use of the society, to minister to the wants of the poor, and for the building of houses of worship, etc. The property thus given is managed by proper officers, who render a strict account for all their incomes and expenditures, and who have no right to apply one shilling for any other purpose than that for which it is given.

Having given this brief sketch of our religious principles, we will now proceed to our account of the rise and progress of the church until the present time. After the church was organized as stated in the foregoing, they gradually increased in numbers from that time until June, 1831; the whole church numbered near two thousand. A general conference was then held in Kirtland, Ohio; and was attended by something like sixty of our preachers. From this time until 1835 it rapidly spread throughout all the United States of North America, insomuch that in eighteen hundred and thirty-six branches of the church and general conferences had been organized throughout this vast republic, and at the present time the number amounts to over fifty thousand. In the latter part of the same year it was introduced into Toronto, Upper Canada, when it soon spread through that province; and in 1837, several of the elders sailed to England, under the direction of O. Hyde and H. C. Kimball, where they soon baptized between one and two thousand; from that time the work of the Lord has rapidly spread through England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, and we have now flourishing societies in the principal towns and cities of Great Britain; numbering over twenty thousand.<sup>1</sup> This glorious message has also spread into Germany, a part of France, and reached even Constantinople, Jerusalem, the East Indies, and the islands of the seas. It is still spreading in every country where it is known, and we anticipate a time not far distant, when a knowledge of the great work which the Lord has set his hand to do in these last days will be enjoyed by all the nations of the earth, for to this end was it sent into the world. The apostles and elders of this church have a special mission to fulfill to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people under heaven, and this is the gospel of the kingdom which was to be preached for a testimony unto all nations, and then shall the Son of man come. If the people oppose this great mission, it will only injure themselves; it will not hinder the rolling forth of the work of God, or the fulfillment of his purposes, for he has set his hand a second time to bring about the restoration of Israel, with the fullness of the Gentiles.—Volume 4, No. 9, pp. 141-143.

Mr. Editor, Sir: As you have (in justice) given the Mormons a chance to defend their principles from the attacks of those who are ignorant of its true tendency, and some who from self-interest, or what is worse, join in the cry of the hounds and huntsman against the flying and defenseless stag—for no other reason under heaven than because they see others do it. I think if they reflect for an instant on the unmanly, despotic and unjust principle of persecuting the innocent, without knowing the “why and the wherefore”—I say if our calumniators reflect, they will say you have done what justice and honor requires of man—given us a weapon to defend (what is dearer to us than life) “the immortal part of man,” our reputation.

I thought myself (three weeks ago) an unchangeable infidel, and lived with a family that some of its members were of the Mormon faith. I had an opportunity of witnessing their private meetings, and everything connected with them. I have heard General Bennett's lectures, and left not a stone unturned to find its character. I have argued with their elders on the truth of the Bible, and ridiculed their belief with every argument of science, philosophy, and conviction of common sense, and accounted for their revelations and miracles as common effect, from a common cause—the works of “a mind diseased.” Yet I have always given them credit for honesty, from the very fact of their suffering for principle's sake. Show me a Christian denomination in existence that are so liberal in their principles as the “poor deluded Mormons.” They believe that every honest man, who acts up to the principle of reflection, and obeys those dictates of conscience that show him wrong from right, will be saved, no matter what his belief—whether Turk, Jew, or Heathen. And surely if God is just, he will not condemn a man for his belief, when he thinks from his heart he acts right.

The Mormons do not want persons to believe all that they do, as is falsely affirmed—they do not want to ram Joe Smith or revelation down people's throats, without their knowing for themselves: all they want is to obey the words of Christ for the remission of sin. They want to terrify no man into belief. They do not say it is sinful to read Shakespeare or Byron or any book that you can get an exalted idea from, as your judgment (if you have any) will point out the good from the bad. Let those who contend that the writings of these giants of genius have an immoral tendency, remember there never yet was a general good without a partial evil.

We are charged with advocating a plurality of wives, and common property. Now this is as false as the many other ridiculous charges which are brought against us. No sect have a greater reverence for the laws of matrimony, or the rights of private property, and we do what others do not, practice what we preach.

A conversation I had with a friend, soon after joining the Mormons, will strongly illustrate public opinion, and show in what light men ought to be held, who condemn without knowing for what, and have only the same reason to offer as Bardolph had for running away—“faith I ran when I saw others run.”

“Mr. R—, why did you join the Mormons?”

“Because I thought they were right.”

“Well, I never thought you were a fool until now.”

“And why do you think I am a fool now?”

“Because you joined the Mormons.”

“How does that prove me a fool?”

“Because none but fools would join them.”

“Why do you think so?”

“Because every one says so.”

“Do you know any of their principles?”

“No—but I know they can not be good.”

“How do you know?”

“Because every one says so.”

“Do you think I am honest?”

“I know you are not.”

“Well, before I was a Mormon, I did not believe in God or devil; yet I was considered an upright man—and now as I believe as you do, in Christ and the remission of sins, you call me a fool; do you not think I can judge for myself?”

“I know you can.”

“Why then do you blame me for using my judgment?”

“Because every one says they are humbugs, and they are scouted out of every place.”

“Then your reason is this: because you see a dog running down the street, with an appendage to his tail, and people shouting and pelting him with stones, you pick up a stone also and pelt and shout after the poor animal; and you call me a fool, because I know the master of the ill-treated dog, and strive to remove the appendage, and protect the poor brute from such treatment.”

It is thus we are condemned without a hearing, and persecuted without a cause.

As a parting word, I would suggest a sentence which no sophistry can refute; and let our calumniators remember they are the words of Christ. “Judge not, lest ye be judged.”

I remain, sir,

Your obliged servant,

H. R.

THE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN.

By letters received from different portions of the field the elders write that the interest in the political campaign and the discussion of the issues are occupying so much of the attention of the people that they seem to have little interest in religious topics. The Republicans have chosen Theodore Roosevelt, present incumbent of the White House, as the nominee to succeed himself as president of the United States; the Democrats have selected Alton B. Parker, of New York, as their standard bearer and principal contestant against Roosevelt; the Prohibitionists have named Doctor Swallow; and a section of the Socialists have named Mr. Watson; others are to be heard from.

The platforms of the two principal parties have been put before the people and may be read and discussed by those who choose. Every man may read and make choice for himself. In some respects they are alike in sentiment, in others they are strikingly unlike. We trust that the brethren in making their choice will do so without engendering heat and ill will in discussing with each other, the platforms, and the candidates. Evidently the candidates are good, upright, moral men, and so far as known, no one need to be afraid of their not being honest in their convictions and American in sentiment. We make no appeal for either, but think it wise to caution the brethren against allowing political differences to draw them into unwise discussion where things may be said in heat that will cause after regret.

DISTRICT AND BRANCH COURTESY.

It has to some extent become a custom in places for district conferences and branch business meetings in the preliminary motions incident to their convening to pass a motion inviting visiting brethren to take part in their deliberations. One form of the motion thus extending courtesy used is like this: Resolved, that visiting brethren be allowed voice and vote during the deliberations of this session. This is a matter of courtesy on the part of district conference or branch. It is not a right which visiting brethren can demand or require.

In branches, especially if they be large, where questions incident to the working of branch affairs are being considered, it is of doubtful propriety to extend the right of vote to parties who are not members of the branch; for it might easily result that strangers to the local controversies might carry the vote against the better interests of the branch itself. If the branch be small, there is danger of improper interference in branch affairs where such courtesy is extended. It would be perfectly safe for persons to whom such courtesy might be offered to be very careful about availing themselves of the privilege so granted. It might not be amiss to accept the courtesy as to a voice in whatever was before the meeting, but it would be in good form for visiting brethren to decline to vote. No offense should be taken by visiting brethren in either branch meeting or district conference if the courtesy should be overlooked or neglected. It is a kind of custom based on good fellowship; and while it may be extended by branch or district conference, it is liable to abuse in both directions. In matters pertaining to district or branch discipline or local affairs affecting only branch or district, visitors not members of the branch or district should refrain from voting.

In a small branch with other branches contiguous or near by it might be possible for local brethren desirous of carrying measures to secure a majority by enlisting votes of visitors. We do not say that such is the case or would necessarily be the case, but we simply say it is possible. Precaution is the parent of safety.

Courtesy should never be taken advantage of when extended to visiting brethren by either branch or district. No one should become so sensitive in regard to his membership as to feel slighted or hurt or to be resentful in case there should be a failure upon the part of district or branch meeting at which he might be present to extend the courtesy referred to. It is not a matter over which any person should allow any ill feeling to arise should there be a neglect or refusal to grant the courtesy referred to.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. R. M. Elvin is on duty in his field. His field address is Sickles Avenue, 37 Ward, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; home address is Box 224, Lamoni, Iowa, where he wishes all Graceland College communications sent.

A report from the Southern Mission, Bro. Heman C. Smith's field, shows fifty-two baptisms as reported by the elders in occupation. Sixty-five confirmations reported, however, show there must have been thirteen baptisms by local men. It is possible there are others. Bro. Heman reports no special difficulties in his field known to him. This is encouraging at least.

An additional item from Bro. J. W. Wight's field shows three more baptisms reported for the last quarter. Bro. Wight reports the missionaries working energetically. He is still suffering somewhat from rheumatism, but is busy in his field. They are anticipating a reunion at Plano, Illinois, beginning September 17, which it is expected will result in good.

Bro. Peter Anderson writes from his home at Stanberry, Missouri, July 23, having left Christiania, Norway, July 1, reaching home the 20th. There are eight baptisms, four at Christiania, one at Frederickshaven, Denmark, two at Grimstad, and one at Porsgrund. Prospects are good at a place not far from Christiania. Bro. Anderson will travel and address himself to the Scandinavian Saints and people where he may elect to labor. We bespeak for him a good reception. He is anxious to represent the interests of the Scandinavian mission and enlist efficient support for it.

The missionary report of Bro. G. T. Griffiths for the quarter is encouraging. Two baptisms occurred.

Bro. F. M. Sheehy reports twenty-nine baptisms in his field. The officers are busy.

Bro. H. O. Smith wrote from San Antonio, Texas, July 20: "Am well. I go to Cookes Point to-morrow to attend conference of the Central Texas District."

A prospectus of the Graceland Oil & Gas Company, of Wheeling, West Virginia, reaches the office. In list of officers and directors we notice names of Wheeling Saints. May they be successful.

Sr. James Schofield, formerly of Columbus and Dayton, Ohio, now residing at 1129 West Avenue, Buffalo, New York, writes that she will be pleased to have elders stop at her home when in that city.

ARE YOU EXEMPT?

And again, every person who belongeth to the church of Christ shall observe to keep all the commandments and covenants of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 21.

The Saints as a rule are not rich, yet the fact remains that the poor as well as the rich come under the law of tithing. Let us notice what the Lord God has said; "Behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God." Now, you belong to the church, do you not? Then is it not just possible that there are Saints everywhere you go who have been robbing God all the years they have been in the church, and do not realize it nor want to? We came into the world naked, and it is equally true that we shall leave without taking a thing with us. Now, whatever we possess is what our heavenly Father has given us. His blessings cometh anew every day. We depend upon him for breath and for strength; in other words, "In him we live, move, and have our being." Well, what the Lord wants us to do is to take an inventory of all we possess, be it little or much, upon each article set the price we would be willing to pay for it, according to its present value. A tenth then belongs to the Lord. Now that is the beginning of tithing.

If I should discover that I was in debt, then I would deduct that from the amount that I am worth and pay my tithing upon the remainder. Should I not have the money at hand to pay the agent, then I would adopt the installment plan until it was paid; in other words, do the best I could, dealing with the Lord in a businesslike manner, as I would deal with my fellow man. This belongs to the Lord in reality as much as I owe the landlord for my rent or the storekeeper for his goods. Hence treat all alike in a fair, just, and honorable manner.

After thus paying on the principle, it ends that matter for ever, but should I accumulate more property and furniture, then tithe that as well, just as I would if I owned it at the first. This, of course, comes under the title of "increase" or "surplus," together with what money I may have left after paying the cost of living pertaining to family expenses. You see this grand law is a means of discipline in order to teach and educate us to live with economy and frugality, that we may have all the more to pay into the storehouse of the Lord. It is a reasonable, rational, and just law, a law as binding and explicit as is baptism for the remission of sins, notwithstanding that the world misrepresents and treats baptism lightly.

The young as well as the old, the poor as well as the rich have the glorious privilege of complying with this law of tithing. In fact, it should be the first duty after entering into the fold and family of God to get square and right with the Lord. If we do this the blessing and promises of God will follow as a result of obedience to the perfect law of liberty, the law of the Lord which converteth the soul and maketh wise the simple. This, to my understanding, is the common-sense view of tithing as it is taught by the authorities of the church. Would to God that all adhered to it! Then the good old ship of Zion would speed on; more elders would be put out in the field—the world's great harvest-field, the aged, infirm, and destitute of the church could be better looked after; we should get better prepared for the law of consecration, the gathering, the building of the temple, etc. I intend by the help of God to teach tithing as well as first principles, that those who become interested in our work may be properly educated to see the beauty and grandeur of the gospel system as "the whole counsel of God," "the perfect law of liberty," and "to live by every word of God." I know this tithing business knocks hard at selfishness and stinginess, but the law is here and we can not evade it. It hits also the rich, that they may be humbled or forfeit their inheritance in Zion.

The writer knows of persons coming into this church by counting the cost and planning to get in right to get square with the Lord first thing. Please notice what the Lord says again: "He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you."—Doctrine and Covenants 41: 2. Now this is spoken to those of the church. How solemn, impressive, and true are the words! Truly this "is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned [at his coming.]"—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5. The decree has gone forth to "gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalm 50: 5.

It can not be construed that lodging, feeding, and giving the missionaries clothing and money is by any means complying with the law of tithing. This law is for the support of the families consisting of wives and children of the missionary force, and for the maintenance of the worthy infirm and helpless among us. It is also the duty of the Saints to look after the welfare of the traveling ministry as far as circumstances will allow; in fine, treating them as brothers indeed, and sharing with them to the last piece of bread. What a grand exhibition of love for the cause that must be: being united together in one grand effort to get the beautiful gospel of Christ before the people that the world may be warned, the honest in heart gathered into the gospel net, and the righteous people be prepared for the second advent of Jesus Christ our Master!

SOME VITAL QUESTIONS TO AND ANSWERS FROM PROMINENT SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS.

As ministers for Christ we dislike to have the faith, doctrine, and history of his church misrepresented, nor do we like to hear the faith of other churches incorrectly stated. All should be very careful in speaking of the doctrine of his religious neighbors. With this thought in mind, and with a desire to know the true position of the Seventh-day Adventist Church on certain points, the following questions were sent to some of their leading ministers:

1. Does the Adventist Church accept people into their church who have been baptized by immersion by other religious societies without being baptized by Adventist ministers?
2. Who was the first ordained minister of the Adventist Church? Who ordained him?
3. Is the fourth commandment of the Decalogue binding on all nations of men in all ages of the world?
4. Does the Adventist Church claim that Mrs. Ellen G. White is a prophetess of God?
5. Is Mrs. Ellen G. White regarded as a prophet to and for the Adventist Church in the same sense the Bible claims Moses was to the church of God in his (Moses') day, and in the same sense as John the Baptist was a prophet in New Testament times?
6. Is there an apostolic quorum in the Adventist Church known as a quorum of twelve apostles? If so, name them.

W. W. Prescott, president of the Review and Herald Publishing Association, and editor of the Advent Review and Sabbath Herald, Washington, District of Columbia, wrote on April 12, 1904, as follows:

1. So far as my knowledge goes, it has been the custom of the Seventh-day Adventist Church to receive people who have already been baptized by immersion without rebaptism, in case the candidate for admission is satisfied with the previous baptism.
2. I do not know who was the first ordained minister of this denomination, and, of course, I can not tell you who ordained him.
3. It would seem clear that every precept of the eternal law of God was intended for all peoples of all time.
4. It is the generally accepted belief of Seventh-day Adventists that the gift of the spirit of prophecy is exercised for the benefit of this church through Mrs. Ellen G. White.
5. Mrs. White defines her work as that of a messenger with a message. I do not know that I can profitably add anything to this brief statement.
6. I do not know of any such thing as an apostolic quorum in this denomination.

It will be noticed by the above that the headquarters and principal publishing department of the Seventh-day Adventist Church has been moved from Battle Creek, Michigan, to our national capital.

On April 7, 1904, Elder M. C. Wilcox, editor of the Signs of the Times, Oakland, California, kindly answered the six questions in the following manner:

1. The Adventist people do accept people into their church who have been baptized by immersion in other Christian religious societies without being baptized by Adventist ministers. Usually, however, converts desire re-baptism. That is very common, but it is not required.
2. . . . I have not time to look it up. . . .
3. The fourth commandment of the Decalogue stands in the same relation to mankind as do all the other precepts of that law.

"The Sabbath was made for man" and God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." Mark 2: 27, Acts 17: 26-31, and Exodus 28: 11 ought to settle the Sabbath question with all.

4. Mrs. White is considered one through whom God has given precious instruction to his church in these last days, and especially along the line of bringing them to the word of God and to its more earnest study.

5. There may have been those who have compared Mrs. White to Moses, but there has been no statement or action in the church which has placed her in any such position at all, neither has she ever given utterance to anything which would seem to indicate that. We believe in the restoration of the gifts of the Spirit as Christ gave them. Mrs. White has one or more of these gifts. Others have other gifts. The Lord has placed them in the church for the benefit of the church and to make the church more effectual in winning souls for Christ.

6. Was there ever a time since the gospel was preached to the Gentiles when there were just twelve apostles?

It is utterly impossible to answer these questions in so brief a way and do it satisfactorily. If you will obtain the little tract on the Spirit of Prophecy by Elder Loughborough, you will get much more definite information concerning the spirit of prophecy among the Seventh-day Adventists.

In a letter dated at Eufola, North Carolina, May 10, 1904, Mr. J. O. Johnston, president of North and South Carolina Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, replied to question number 5, from which we extract the following:

Seventh-day Adventists regard Mrs. White as a prophetess or "mouthpiece for God," just as truly as the church in the wilderness regarded Moses, but she is not in any sense a leader of the church as was Moses. Her work corresponds more to the work of John the Baptist than it does to Moses, though we do not claim that she is that "Elijah that was to come" or anything of that kind. We believe that God has given a work to our denomination that corresponds exactly to the work of John the Baptist. . . . Mrs. White is recognized among us, and has been for fifty years, as one to whom God has given divine revelations for the guidance of his work here upon earth.

From Lone Oak, Texas, May 16, 1904, Andrew Nelson, a missionary and son of Elder N. P. Nelson, president of the Southwestern Union Conference, answered question number 3 regarding the Sabbath of the Decalogue being binding on all nations of men in all ages of the world, in these strong words: "No other answer can truthfully be given but 'yes.'" Mr. Nelson also answers question number 4 as to the belief of the Adventists claiming Mrs. White as a prophetess of God. He says, "Yes, so they believe and teach."

We now come to the real question with a direct answer, giving information regarding the first ordination of a minister in the Adventist Church. The answer is from the pen of Elder J. N. Loughborough, acting church historian, Oakland, California. He wrote on May 12, 1904:

Some of our earliest ministers were those who had been ordained to the gospel ministry in other denominations, and went forward under that ordination. . . .

The first one ordained as a Seventh-day Adventist minister by Seventh-day Adventists was myself. This ordination was at Grand Rapids, Michigan, in the month of June, 1854.

Mr. W. N. Glenn, of the Signs of the Times, Oakland, California, presents some interesting history in the following account:

William Miller was a member of the Baptist Church, . . . and was licensed to preach in 1833. I believe he was not an ordained minister. Elder James White was a member of the Disciple Church, and Mrs. White (then Ellen G. Harmon) was a member of the Methodist Church. They were both interested in the movement conducted by Mr. Miller.

Hardly any one who has heard the Adventists present their uncompromising belief on the Sabbath question would suppose that they come into possession of the doctrine by the accidental presence and unauthorized teaching of one Mrs. Preston, a Seventh-day Baptist; but such is the history of the introduction of that part of their faith, as will be seen by the following:

From the Adventist Camp Meeting Journal, Sparta, Wisconsin, June, 1898, under the caption of "A brief sketch of their origin, progress, and position," we extract the following from page 3:

"SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH.

"But how did the observance of the seventh day become a cardinal feature of their faith and practice? The primary causes of this change were the following: Late in the autumn of 1844, the time of which we have been speaking, Mrs. Rachel D. Preston, a Seventh-day Baptist, removed from the state of New York to Washington, New Hampshire, where there was a flourishing company of Adventists. All parties were zealous to give and receive new light, and a mutual exchange of views took place, she adopting their views of the soon coming of the Savior; and they, by faith seeing the ark containing the ten commandments in the temple in heaven, as a part of their views of prophecy, were all ready to accept her views of the binding obligation of the Sabbath of the Decalogue, and to begin its observance. Thus the doctrine of the observance of the seventh day, and the doctrine of the soon coming of Christ, came together; and those in whom these views were united, thus became Seventh-day Adventists. The first church of Seventh-day Adventists was thus developed in Washington, New Hampshire, in the last three months of 1844.

"DATE OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS.

"These views of the sanctuary modified and enlarged their views of prophecy to a great extent; but their doctrines did not become sufficiently formulated to begin to constitute a settled system of belief till the following year, or 1845; which may therefore be set down as the year in which the Seventh-day Adventist denomination began."

The above item of history would, we believe, serve as a real surprise to the greater number of Adventists as to how and when the observance of Saturday was first held sacred among them as the day for sacred worship; for it is plainly stated that after Mrs. Preston arrived in their midst "a mutual exchange of views took place, she adopting their belief of the soon coming of the Savior," and they accepted "her views of the binding obligation of the Sabbath of the Decalogue" and began its observance.

With the foregoing account before us we are led to inquire, Did the Lord or his angels have any part in that "mutual exchange of views" which took place when Mesdames Preston, White, and Company so suddenly and completely evolved (?) from Seventh-day Baptists and Adventists (Millerites) to Seventh-day Adventists? Who can tell us by what authority such purely accidental views of "the binding obligation of the Sabbath" should cause their so-called soul-destroying "mark of the beast" to be so perceptibly prominent on all Sunday observers from the days of Adam to the present? We are persuaded that the principal promoters were just two women named Preston and White.

Adventists ought to be able to see why the Lord did not come to earth to accept them in 1843 or 1844 and usher in the millennial reign of peace, as was predicted by their honored leader, William Miller, for they were wearing that offensive "mark of the beast" until Mrs. Preston, a Sabbatarian, removed the "mark" from the "elect." Surely the day of miracles (?) was restored, but the venerable Mr. Miller never allowed that "mark" to be removed from him and went down to his grave in 1849 without being identified with the Seventh-day Adventist movement.

In an editorial in the Advent Review and Sabbath Herald, Washington, District of Columbia, May 5, 1904, there appears an article entitled "It will come," which expresses kindly consideration for the work of William Miller, one of the prime movers of their faith, also declaring the soon coming of Christ. A portion of the article reads:

The day of the Lord will come. It has been long delayed, but it will come. It is now almost exactly threescore years since the definite time passed which it was thought would usher in that day, and although the believers of that time were sorely disappointed, yet it will come, and it is threescore years nearer now than it was then. The scoffers may mock, and may ask, "Where is the promise of his coming?" but "the day of the Lord will come." The evil servant may say in his heart, "My Lord tarrieth," and he may "begin to beat his fellow servants," and he may "eat and drink with the drunken," but the day of the Lord will not always be delayed. It will come. And we have reached the time when we may with assurance take up the promise, "There shall be delay no longer," and we may declare by the word of the Lord that those now living, even some who are already crowned with the snowy crown of threescore and more years, will "remain unto the coming of the Lord."

In connection with the above we take the liberty of inserting a few extracts from an old work entitled Memoirs of William Miller, furnished us in a letter by Mr. Charles A. Shook, of Buchanan, Michigan, who is a member of the Advent Christian denomination and speaks of Mr. Miller as having been the "morning star of the Advent movement." He copies the following from page 77:

"LOW HAMPTON, September 5, 1822.

"I hereby acknowledge that I have long believed it my duty . . . to leave for the instruction of my brethren, friends and children a brief statement of my faith (and which ought to be my practice); and I pray God to forgive me where I go astray. I made it a subject of prayer and meditation, and therefore have the following as my faith,—reserving the privilege of correction.

"(Signed) WM. MILLER."

Article 15 of this declaration reads: "I believe that the second coming of Jesus Christ is near, even at the door, even within twenty-one years,—on, or before, 1843.”

Yes, Mr. Miller went “astray” in his teaching and needed to “reserve the privilege of correction,” and what was true of the “morning star of the Advent movement” is a safe warning to all his admirers.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints offers to them and to all mankind the everlasting gospel, restored to earth in fulfillment of Revelation 14:6, 7, and we say to seekers after the “old paths where is the good way,” that if you will carefully investigate the message and humbly obey it, you will find sweet rest for your troubled souls.

SUMMARY.

1. Their first leader, William Miller, a Baptist, predicted the second advent of Christ would be on, or before, 1843.

2. Mrs. E. G. White and others would not follow Miller after the autumn of 1844.

3. Mrs. Preston, a Seventh-day Baptist, introduced the Sabbath of the Decalogue to Mrs. White and company in the fall of 1844 and they began its observance at once.

4. The Seventh-day Adventist denomination “formulated” their “settled system of belief” in 1845 whose faith and doctrine were an outgrowth of Miller’s false teaching and dismal failures, together with the accidental presence, persuasions, and practice of Mrs. Preston.

5. Seventh-day Adventists did accept ordained ministers from other Christian societies who preached and administered in all the sacred ordinances of their church.

6. J. N. Loughborough was the first man ordained to the ministry in their church, which was in June 1854; about ten years after their organization.

7. Adventists recognize water baptism by immersion by Christian anti-Sabbatarians as being legally signed passports to heaven.

8. They affirm that the fourth commandment of the Decalogue is binding on all nations of men in all ages of the world, and they should be required to maintain it in debates.

9. Claims are made for Mrs. White that she is a prophetess of God, and that as truly as Moses and John the Baptist had specific works to perform as prophets, so has Mrs. White a special message from heaven for earth’s children.

10. Later developments, however, indicate that Mrs. White’s extraordinary (?) messages were from Mr. Miller and Mrs. Preston instead of being angelic.

11. No quorum of twelve apostles in their church.

12. Adventists should be forced to affirm, in debates with Latter Day Saints, that Mrs. White is a prophetess of God, which is only fair. The Saints affirm that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and do it willingly.

CONCERNING THE SMOOT CASE.

I think a slight synopsis of my visit to the investigation of the Smoot matter is due your readers. The reports of what was said in that investigation concerning our church are largely taken from the public press, which gave only brief and disconnected statements of it. I here submit the matter in full, taken from the Proceedings before the Committee on Privileges and Election of the United States Senate in the Matter of Protestants against the Right of Honorable Reed Smoot, a Senator from the State of Utah, to Hold His Seat, a government publication. The committee was composed of Senator J. C. Burrows, chairman; Senators George F. Hoar, J. B. Foraker, A. J. Beveridge, Albert J. Hopkins, Fred T. Dubois, Lee S. Overman, Louis E. McComas, Chauncey M. Depew, W. P. Dillingham, Edmund W. Pettus, Joseph W. Bailey, James T. Clark; George M. Buck, clerk.

The protestants are W. M. Paden and eighteen others and also a protest by John L. Leilich. The latter protest is not being considered by the committee at present. At least, no one was at hand to represent it. The former are represented by Counsellors J. G. Carlisle and Robert W. Tayler. Mr. Smoot was represented by A. S. Worthington and Waldemar Van Cott. Franklin S. Richard was in the interest of Joseph F. Smith and others. Thomas F. Stevenson appeared for the National Reform Association, “composed of Christian citizens, men and women of all branches of the church whose object is to maintain and promote the Christian features of the American government.” He does not appear in the present investigation of witnesses, but was told by the chairman he might be heard later on.

There has already been published in the HERALD a testimony of Joseph F. Smith and others wherein they admit that they are living in violation of the laws of God and laws of the land. So I need not comment on that further than to state that I was present and heard B. H. Roberts and Angus M. Cannon make those statements. One could not help but feel sorrowful to hear a man of Cannon’s age (and he seemed to be sincere in his convictions) make such fatal admissions. At his age in life one expects to see the fruits of a good character formed through a long series of years under religious influences supposedly from the right source, and it seems anomalous that one bearing the name of Latter Day Saint should make such admissions before the civilized world. One did not feel the same sympathy for Roberts, as in his testimony he showed very clearly that he was hedging for all he was worth. As to honesty and integrity he does not impress one as does Cannon.

As I have indicated elsewhere in the public press it seems that Senator Burrows is unusually well qualified to conduct this investigation, he having previously served on committee work relating to Mormonism in his congressional career.

The following questions put by Senator Burrows to President Smith and Apostle Lyman show that the senator is well posted and knows the difference between true and pseudo Latter Day Saintism:

The Chairman.—Is there a denomination or a portion of the Mormon faith called the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints?

Mr. Lyman.—There is such a church; yes, sir.

The Chairman.—There is such a church?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—Do you know where is its headquarters; who is at the head of that church?

Mr. Lyman.—Joseph Smith.

The Chairman.—Joseph Smith?

Mr. Lyman.—A son of the prophet.

The Chairman.—And he is a son of the original prophet?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—He is at the head of that church?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—Do you know where he resides?

Mr. Lyman.—At Lamoni.

The Chairman.—How does that organization differ from yours?

Senator Dubois.—In what State is that?

The Chairman.—In what State?

Mr. Lyman.—In many particulars.

The Chairman.—No. In what State does he reside?

Mr. Lyman.—In Iowa.

The Chairman.—He is the president of that church now?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—Without going into it generally, in what respect does that organization differ from yours upon the question of polygamy?

Mr. Lyman.—In what respect?

The Chairman.—Yes.

Mr. Lyman.—Why, in every respect.

The Chairman.—They denounce it, do they not?

Mr. Lyman.—Oh, they denounce it; yes, sir, in strong terms, and almost provoke us to defend it sometimes. [Laughter.]

The Chairman.—Yes; they almost provoke you to defend it. That is all.

Senator Dubois.—Also, they do not teach absolute obedience to the leaders, do they?

Mr. Lyman.—How is that?

Senator Dubois.—They do not teach absolute obedience to their leaders?

Mr. Lyman.—I think not. I think they are not very strenuous. Still, I am not very much of a judge of their doctrines. . . .

Senator Overman.—Do I understand you to say the difference between the Reorganized Mormon Church and yours is that they are not required to obey their leaders and your people are required to obey their leaders?

Mr. Lyman.—No, I did not say that. Somebody suggested that. I do not criticise them in that regard. I believe they do not gather. We gather. I know of no other religious people that gather. They do not gather.

Mr. Worthington.—What do you mean by "gather"?

Mr. Lyman.—Gather together.

Mr. Worthington.—In conference?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, from Europe to the United States and to the land of Zion. We gather together and they do not. We build temples and they do not. We marry for eternity and they do not, as I understand. I would not like to be taken to task. I may be mistaken in some of these ideas, but I believe those things make us differ. On the first principles of the gospel I think they agree pretty well with us, but they do not believe in the endowments, I understand, nor temple building, nor the gathering. I do not think they engage in the doctrine of salvation for the dead, which we do.

Mr. Worthington.—Mr. Chairman, might I ask what the question of the Reorganized Church and the difference between that and this church has to do with the question we have here?

The Chairman.—The question I propounded was simply to ascertain whether there was another organization than the Mormon church of which we have been speaking, so that we could know whether there were two organizations.

Senator Hoar.—Mr. Chairman, I think the counsel should understand that while the committee will preserve carefully the right of his client so that he should not be affected by evidence that ought not to affect him—and being a committee of lawyers, they ought to be able to do that—the committee are engaged not only in trying an ordinary case, but to some extent are engaged in an investigation. A committee of the Senate is in part like a grand jury who would inquire into some fact not of itself bearing on the question to see whether it might demand a further investigation, and would do so. That is, we might ask for a hearsay answer in order to see where we can get other testimony.

We are not simply controlled by agreements of the parties or by the narrow issue. While of course they are subject to the possible effect on any human mind, and such proceedings might bias them a little, yet, as I understand it, that is always the rule in legislative inquiries, and I suppose—I certainly have put questions myself which I should not have put if I had been a judge in an ordinary court of justice, trying simply the one issue.

Mr. Worthington.—Mr. Senator, I should say that I understood that perfectly, and therefore I have made no objection to a great many things that I thought the Senators who asked them would not think of considering as against Senator Smoot; but this seems to me to be getting away so far from any possibility that could, either under the charges that are here or any charges that might arise, affect Senator Smoot that I felt justified in making the inquiry.

It is a question about the doctrines of another organization to which he does not belong and never has belonged, and I did not see how it could be pertinent to the inquiry here, either under the charges as they stand or any other against him. I therefore asked the question, not for the reason of suggesting any obstruction to the inquiry, but for the purpose of finding out whether it was supposed to have any bearing upon Senator Smoot, so that, if it was thought it might, we might pursue it.

Senator Overman.—I think my question was proper along that line. If they have to obey the orders of the president and the orders of the twelve apostles I think it bears directly upon this issue; and I had understood the witness to state, and he did state, that that was one of the differences between the Reorganized Church and his church; that the Reorganized Church did not believe in obeying their leaders. Now he says he did not intend to say that. You see how important that question would be. If Mr. Smoot has to obey the orders of that church we have a hierarchy greater than the government.

Mr. Worthington.—I understand it was perfectly competent, Mr. Chairman, to inquire whether Senator Smoot was bound to obey the orders of his church, but I did not see what the fact that somebody belonging to another organization would not be bound to obey it would have to do with the question.

The Chairman.—I suppose the main point to be reached was the power. Did he answer that question?

Senator Overman.—I think he answered it.

Mr. Worthington.—Yes; he answered it.

Senator Overman.—And then counsel objected.

Mr. Worthington.—I objected to the general line of inquiry, Senator.

Mr. Tayler.—Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be foreclosed by the fact that this informal discussion has taken place from taking a different ground when the juncture comes than that which is stated by Mr. Worthington, for we shall argue that here are two branches, said to be branches of the same church, in which the only difference is that one believes in the doctrine of plural marriages and in the subordination of its people. That is only the distinction between the two. One of them has a history with which we are all familiar. I do not comment on that now at all. It has made great trouble in this country. The other is composed, so far as history tells us anything about it, of a peaceable, law-abiding, orderly people; and it is in respect of those two things around which all of this ease gathers—polygamy and the direction of the people by the apostolate—and if those two were eliminated this hearing would not be going on here.

Senator Dillingham.—That being so, what does the other church have to do with this question? The Methodist Church, the Congregational Church, the Episcopal Church do not believe in the authority of the church nor do they believe in polygamy. Therefore, what has the other branch, as you call it, to do with this investigation?

Mr. Tayler.—I will not argue about the Methodist Church and the Congregational Church. The argument would be analogous, but not forcible. But now we have undertaken to distinguish between these two church organizations and what they stand for, and we discover why it is that one of them is a menace, as it is claimed, to good government and to society and to civilization, and the other is not, both claiming under the same prophet and believing in the same thing save only those two items and elements of faith.

Senator Dillingham.—It is not claimed, I suppose, that Reed Smoot is connected with the other branch?

Mr. Tayler.—No; unfortunately he is not.

Senator Dillingham.—I was asking you how you made that apply to the issue in this case. That is what I did not understand. But you have made your explanation, and I am satisfied with it.—Pages 460-464.

The Chairman.—Now Mr. Smith, one word more. I hold in my hand the Book of Mormon. I should like to have you look at it to see if it is the book. I want you to identify the book.

Mr. Smith (after examining the book).—I recognize the book.

The Chairman.—That is the Book of Mormon?

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir; that is the Book of Mormon.

The Chairman.—One of your—

Mr. Smith.—One of our editions.

The Chairman.—One of your authorized publications?

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir; authorized publications.

The Chairman.—It is the revelation of Joseph Smith?

Mr. Smith.—Sir?

The Chairman.—A revelation to Joseph Smith?

Mr. Smith.—It was translated by Joseph Smith.

The Chairman.—Is the doctrine of polygamy taught in that revelation?

Mr. Smith.—Taught in it?

The Chairman.—Yes.

Mr. Smith.—It is emphatically forbidden in that book.

The Chairman.—In this book it is emphatically forbidden?

Mr. Smith.—It is.

The Chairman.—Do you recognize these words? I read from page 132, verse 24:

“24. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord.”

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—(Reading:)

“25. Wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph.

“26. Wherefore, I the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old.

“27. Wherefore, my brethren hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord, for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none.”

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—You recognize that?

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—You recognize it as the teaching of your church?

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir. Will the Chairman please read a little further?

The Chairman.—Yes; I will be very glad to read the next verse:

“28. For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women.”

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—(Reading:)

“And whoredoms are an abomination before me; thus saith the Lord of hosts.”

Mr. Smith.—A little further, please. There is still more in connection with that.

The Chairman.—(Reading:)

“29. Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of hosts—.”

Mr. Smith.—That is right.

The Chairman.—(Reading:)

“Or cursed be the land for their sakes.”

Mr. Smith.—Still further, if you please.

The Chairman.—I do not want to read the whole book.

Mr. Smith.—You have to read the context to find out what it means.

The Chairman.—I will allow you to read it in explanation.

Mr. Smith.—If you will be kind enough to pass me the book I will do so.

The Chairman.—Yes; in a moment. Was that doctrine overruled by the revelation of polygamy?

Mr. Smith.—No, sir.

The Chairman.—It was not?

Mr. Smith.—No, sir. If you will be kind enough to let me have the book I will show you.

The Chairman.—I want to know when that doctrine of the Mormon bible was repudiated.

Mr. Smith.—It is not the Mormon bible. It is the Book of Mormon.

The Chairman.—Well, the Book of Mormon. You know what I mean. When was that repudiated or modified in any way, and by whom?

Mr. Smith.—If you will permit me, I will read a little further.

The Chairman.—Certainly.

Mr. Smith.—It is this:

“29. Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of Hosts, or cursed be the land for their sakes.

“30. For if I will, saith the Lord of Hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people; otherwise they shall hearken unto these things.”

All you need to do, sir, is to read the whole thing, and it explains itself. The revelation to Joseph Smith does not repeal this. It is simply a commandment of the Lord to him, and received by him and accepted by him to enter into plural marriage by his law and by his commandment and not by their own volition.

The Chairman.—Then you construe that which you have read as the commandment of the Lord to practice polygamy when —

Mr. Smith.—He commands it.

The Chairman.—When he commands it.

Mr. Smith.—That is exactly what the words say.—Pages 480, 481.

There was anxiety manifested on the part of some while I was there, wondering if I should go upon the stand in the interests of the Reorganization. I was told by one party of Brighamite friends that they hoped this investigation would not degenerate into a controversy between the two churches. It is a little strange how they dread a conflict of that kind while we are anxious to turn on the light and let the public see what the differences are, being fearless as to results and willing to content ourselves with the verdict. We do not know what turn this investigation may take before it is ended, and we may be called upon to testify. The committee has now adjourned until next fall. It might be said that the charge of Reed Smoot being a polygamist is now abandoned. The question hangs largely on the hierarchy being the dominant power in the State and in the church, as well as condoning violators of the law in relation to plural marriages. It will be seen in the preceding testimony that the committee wrung from Apostle Lyman that we are separate and distinct in organization and practice, while Joseph F. Smith allowed the force of the teachings of the Book of Mormon against polygamy.

It will be a part of wisdom for those who have been classing us as being identical with the Mormon church in Utah to abandon such policy, for in the face of such evidence as appears in this investigation, it will be needless.

I have given the names of the different senators above. If any who read this are in touch with any of these senators they may call on and discuss the matter with them, if, perchance, they have influence enough to gain their presence.

THE SONG OF THE RIGHTEOUS.

In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants (24:3) we find these words: "The song of the righteous is a prayer unto me." These are words of inspiration from God, and our Lord Jesus Christ, in this last dispensation. We are told in holy writ that some should sing with the spirit and with the understanding, also. I believe that God intends for us as his people to make special effort in this line, equally as much as in prayer, etc., because he has said that the song of the righteous is a prayer unto him. It is of great importance to my mind that those who can sing, and also understand singing, should push forward, so that the singing in the assemblies of the Lord may be more perfect and intelligent. To my mind, also, some of the Saints do not take sufficient interest in singing; for I believe that we will be held responsible before God for this duty, because he has told us that it is a prayer unto him. There is much good to be done in singing. It has charms that will draw people outside of our church in to hear the gospel. The Christian denominations, for example, encourage singing in order to draw crowds to their churches. And why not we, as Saints, to draw people to hear the everlasting gospel? Let us remember that the angels sing praises to the Most High, and we believe that they certainly do his will. So, dear Saints, let us try to pay more attention to this duty in the future, that we may be blessed. We have superior chances, because if we can sing well with the understanding, and have the Spirit of our God in connection with it, we will feel most glorious and never regret the step we have taken. So let us be diligent in all our duties, neglecting none of them; that we may have a right to the tree of life.

A SIMPLE SOLUTION OF SLEEP AND ITS MYSTERIES.

Not many months ago there appeared in HERALD columns an article under the caption, "Sleep and its mysteries," in which it seems that the learned doctors have overlooked a very simple solution and have become mystified in their self-woven tangles. The writer is led to ask, Is sleep more or less than mental rest, or a relaxation of the sensorial nerve, or does not a complete relaxation of the nerve centers invariably cause sound, unconscious slumber? Can one think independent of nerve vibration? Since the act of thinking requires an action of the nerve center I wish to inquire again, Is not the one who ceases to think the one who is asleep?

Has there been a fact proven, or a phenomenal appearance discovered by all the speculations of the scientific world that can not be reconciled along this line? I think that much of the chemical phenomena observed by the professors very naturally accrue from a perfect relaxation or rest. For instance: the fact is observed by Howell, "that in sleep the amount of blood in the brain is reduced." This is the most natural result of rest or sleep. Why do we violently whip and exercise our hands when they are cold? To increase the circulation of blood. Why do our feet get cold sooner when riding than when we walk? Because relaxation permits an "ebb-tide of blood from" the feet, of course. I quote: "His theory supposes that this ebb-tide of blood from the brain is the immediate cause of sleep through exhaustion of the vasomotor center."

Has not the learned doctor got his supposition theory harnessed in wrong end ahead? Since an ebb-tide of blood from any part of the body is known to be the result of relaxation or rest, why should he reverse matters and suppose this "ebb-tide of blood from the brain is the immediate cause of sleep"?

This exhaustion theory, and the accumulation theory offered by Preyer, as also the fatigue theory of Doctor Stiles, seem to the writer not only to be contradictory to each other but to themselves, and leave the average mind more mystified than before they spun their fine theories. The old saying that "sleep knits up the raveled sleeve of toil and care" throws as much light on the subject as anything I have read recently, and this leaves us entirely to speculation as to how or by what means this wonderful rebuilding process occurs.

The whole matter will doubtless be more easily solved if we view them separately, viewing sleep as nothing but a relaxation of nerve centers, having nothing to do with accumulation, only to remain passive while the more mysterious, infinite, hidden forces within do the knitting and renewing. This disposes of the mysteries of sleep and brings us in touch with the accumulation process where the true mystery lies. Let us allegorically view man, including the vasomotor center, as a machine in motion; it is all the time running down, wearing out, needs renewing from day to day; but the repairer, he who renews the machine (whom we understand to be the spirit of man whom God formed within the man), must wait until the machine goes to sleep or stops before he can successfully repair, refill the oil-cups, and renew the worn parts. The more passive the body the more profound the sleep and the more perfect the work of the silent repairer. This silent repairer, this spirit, is the infinite part of man; it is he who conducts the infinite process of supply, increase, or accumulation, and he does his best work along this line when the body, including the soul or reasoning, thinking part is relaxed, passive, silent,—asleep. Therefore the mysteries of sleep are solved by one little word of four letters, r-e-s-t.

The writer is reasonably well satisfied that it is the mental, thinking process, the conscious, objective mind, termed by Paul the inner man, that is renewed from day to day, and that this is what the sacred writers many times called the soul of man, instead of referring, as we have been wont to think, to the spirit; that the spirit of man is an infinite personage, an immortal being, the God part of man that is always new, never grows old, never wears out, never runs down, and is therefore not susceptible of renewal. God may and does bear witness with our spirits; he does stir up our spirits mightily at times, as he did the spirit of Cyrus, but not in the sense of reparation, or making anew, or renewal.

So it is that we reach the conclusion that the great mysteries that appear in the process of sleep are unified to a separate process of the spirit performed on sentient beings whenever their mental machinery becomes motionless, or so nearly motionless that they are susceptible of renewal.

ENGLISH.

There can be no more important movement in education than the present demand that more attention shall be devoted in the schools to the study of the English language. It, of course, raises the question whether there is any such thing as pure English. Those continental languages, the Italian, the French, and the Spanish, which were taken possession of at their mediæval birth by organizations called academies, charged with determining what should and what should not be good form in the language, and which have been similarly cared for since, have at least an authority to which to bring every question for settlement, and those who use them are duly told how they are to speak and write. Those languages had each a phonetic spelling conferred upon them by the same authority, which spelling, as it represented the existing pronunciation, has done much towards preserving that pronunciation. This is a service which English spelling can not render, as English spelling is under no obligation to represent the facts of pronunciation. German, as it is to-day, was made a written language at the time of Luther, and largely by Luther. It has also the advantage of a phonetic spelling. A German child who was the pride of his school in Germany emigrated with his parents to the United States. Having got the idea of spelling representing pronunciation firmly into his mind, he balked at the English spelling so much that he had to be taken from school and put to a handicraft. He could not get to understand it. His experience is an exaggerated illustration of the handicap that we place on the world's acquisition of the English language by adhering to a spelling almost as arbitrary as are the Chinese word signs. If a lad learning English could be taught to read by learning the sounds of the letters, as a German or Italian boy can, the number who would learn English would be very much greater, and the advantage to those who have to learn it would be that the biggest obstacle could be removed from intellectual development by the removal of the almost unscalable first rung in the ladder of learning. This mischief was bad enough in Shakespeare's time when everybody spelt as he chose, and the same word in as many ways as he chose; but it is a question whether that was not better than the pedantry which has prevailed since Johnson's time by which it has been attempted to fix the prevalent misrepresentations of sound and to hold every man illiterate who does not conform to spelling-book spelling.

Apart, however, from this conventionalizing of spelling, the English language has, very much to the furtherance of its robustness, grown up untrammelled by authoritative form. It has been free to grow as it chose, adopting words greedily from every language under the sun till it has become an easy vehicle for all manner of ideas, and has, for this reason, among others, gained rapidly on all other languages. Just as the names of a chance audience in Chicago, while they reveal a people gathered from everywhere, prove the main stock of the people to be Anglo-Celtic, so, still more do the variegated words of the English language prove the main stock to be Anglo-Celtic with a large admixture of French brought in by the Normans, and of Latin and Greek derived through the schools, Latin having been during the formation of the speech the vehicle of all learning. But though the foundations of the structure are thus obvious there is no source from which materials have not been drawn for material to build upon them. The fact that the English speech is not like other tongues, the Chinese especially, a conventional language bound by its classics, makes it all the better fitted from artistic as well as utilitarian purposes. Shakespeare, who used the language when in the making, and Burns, who had two vocabularies in indiscriminate use, did unsurpassed work with these plastic materials. It is, however, to be noted that this liberty calls all the more for ability, if not genius, in the using of it. Almost any architect can do respectable work in classic architecture by adhering to rules; but when it comes to the application of the free Romanesque, which has been so much in use of late, the scope for meaningless imbecilities is infinite. For like reason the training required for the good use of English is of a different sort from that which takes the form of an infinitude of precise rules and precise exceptions. To know English and use it well requires rather a knowledge of the meaning and history of words, a grasp of the rhetorical principles of expression, a rich study of models, and abundant and progressive practice in composition. To counteract the vulgarizing effect of the newspaper, the best models should be made familiar to all school children. There is nothing more unfair to the growing child than to supply him with poor rhymes, poor music, and poor reading for declamation, such as it is the practice to provide for school and Sunday-school exhibitions and special occasions. The rubbish which is yearly sent forth to supply the demand in this direction is, though well meant, a positive wrong to the young people, who will have those cheap things as models impressed on their memory for life.

But still more important than good written models are good spoken models; and here is a matter in which our Canadian schools of the present day, like the English board schools, are at a disadvantage. Teachers who used to be largely derived from the educated classes, are necessarily under a systematic school organization, largely derived from homes where the most slovenly speech prevails, and often offer the most undesirable examples. The cockney speech is not English. Neither is Montrealish. Still less is our rural speech, where it has had its fountains in the overflowings of the United States. We have localities where the distinctively American language is developed in its extreme form, and we have every variation from that and from an accent which to outsiders more resembles Irish than good English. There are points in which the educated Canadian's use of the language is almost demonstrably superior to what is common in England. The vowels have a purer sound and the "r" is more articulate. There are those who insist that it is good English to pronounce the "o" like ow and to elide the "r" using it only to modify the adjoining vowel. For ourselves we think pure "o's" and "a's" better than diphthongs and we think "r" is an elegant and useful sound that we should not lose, and that though every district in the world seems to have its own "r," there is none superior to ours. While holding this, we are certain that wherever possible good English models of speech from England should be introduced into our schools, and that slovenly speech should condemn a teacher. There have, we are told, been cases in which the opposite has been done, and where an English teacher for rebuking false pronunciations has raised a revolt which has resulted in the departure of the teacher.—The Montreal Weekly Witness, March 8, 1904.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Just to be tender, just to be true,
 Just to be glad the whole day through,
 Just to be merciful, just to be mild,
 Just to be trustful as a child.
 Just to be gentle and kind and sweet,
 Just to be helpful with willing feet,
 Just to be cheery when things go wrong,
 Just to drive sadness away with a song,
 Whether the hour is dark or bright,
 Just to be loyal to God and right,
 Just to believe that God knows best,
 Just in his promises ever to rest,
 Just to let love be our daily key,
 This is God's will for you and for me.

We Thank Thee, Lord.

Dear Home Column: Although tired with the work of the day (not that I work very hard, but still there are many little things for mother to do even though her big girls do the hard work), now at its close I send greeting to you, a few of the thoughts crowding my busy brain. First, then,

I thank thee, Lord, for the beautiful flowers,
 That blossom and bloom mid the sunny hours,
 A gift of thy love to all.

I thank thee, Lord, for the clouds and rain,
 For the beautiful fields of growing grain,
 And the brook that is rippling by.

I thank thee, Lord, for the birds that fly
 And sing 'mong the trees 'neath the summer sky
 To gladden the heart of man.

Yes, these are some of God's gifts to us and I thank him for them. If we could always be mindful of the many blessings we receive from God, we would see very much to be thankful for, and it would make us happy many times, although we may be tired or even sick. No doubt but what we desire to be uncomplaining and happy always, but there are times that the flesh with its craving desires overcomes our better judgment, and we begin to feel discouraged and thus we stumble and fall short of doing as we had wished to do. Let us remember that we are to be a tried people. Satan is always setting a trap for us if we get a little negligent, so let us be careful and prayerful.

It is by our mistakes that we learn, that is, if we are willing to admit we have made mistakes and are humble enough to try to do better. I am sorry to say that some either can not or will not see their faults and are the cause of others doing wrong because they stubbornly justify themselves in error, or use a polish to cover it up. When we all stand before the great Judge I think there are some who are counted unworthy here who will at least be admitted and given a low seat if nothing more.

Let us not be discouraged, but keep on trying. That is what I intend to do, regardless of what others may think of me. I mean to struggle on as long as God implants within me the desire to overcome.

I want to follow Jesus,
I strive to do his will,
I try with patience all day long,
My duties to fulfill.

And should I err while trying
To do my humble part,
God knows the weakness of the flesh,
He also knows the heart.

He knows our silent musings,
He knows our fond desire,
He sees the barriers round our way,
And whispers, Come up higher.

Yes, let us strive to live above the cares and crosses. If in no other way let us live above them in our thought, and if we can not do just as we desire let us do what we can and leave the remainder in the hands of God, and wait and trust. He will surely help us in his own good time. Perhaps the things which come our way and appear so different from what we desire, may be the very things that the Lord requires us to do cheerfully. Then let us press onward, dear Saints, and be thankful to our Father in heaven.

With good wishes to all,                      Your sister, MRS. JANE HEATON.

Our Mission.

"Though we can not cross the ocean, or the heathen land explore," we all have a mission, and it is our duty before God and our fellow men to see to it that this mission is performed as God would have it, for we are in a sense "our brother's keeper"; and if we try to do our duty we will have strength given us to perform it.

Our missions are not all alike, and sometimes I fear we think it such a humble one that it is hardly worth doing it, but be it small or great we should do it well, for God has promised that if only one talent is given not so much would be expected if we do our very best with the one. It may be some of us have missions as home-makers and in training of the little ones intrusted to our care. I fear too often mothers value this work too lightly and feel that they are doing but little for the Master in training the little one for God's kingdom. Do not undervalue this God-given privilege. It is easy to "cross the ocean and heathen lands explore." Nearly all could do that, but how few are fit to train the dear little hearts for their God! To me it is the holiest and most sacred responsibility we can have; and I believe those who have this mission should thank God that he found them worthy and has chosen the mother to do it.

It is the childless mothers who must seek a place to do some little good for the world and their Savior, and with a longing heart for their dear ones whom God is tenderly caring for, ask, Where, O where can I find something to do, and leave the world some better for having lived? Still, even they have a mission. On all sides there is a call for help. There are motherless children to love and care for, sick and aged to cheer and brighten, the dying to point to the Lamb of God who taketh our sins away, and the poor erring soul to lead patiently, tenderly, and lovingly back to the palace of the King.

The Sunday-School Lesson for August 7, 1904.

The subject of the lesson is The New Birth.

The second primary lesson opens with a brief account of the visit of Nicodemus to Christ, on which occasion he was taught by the Lord that, "except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

This statement of Jesus is the golden text of the lesson, and is our authority, as it was Peter's, for teaching the necessity of the new birth.

The Advanced Intermediate lesson refers us to the teaching of Peter on the Day of Pentecost, when he taught a multitude of the Jews that, in order to be saved, men must repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of their sins.

This is like his teaching in the letter we are now reading where he asserts that the saints to whom he wrote had purified their souls, being born again.

Having repented and been baptized, their sins were remitted; they were purified from the sins of the past.

But Peter went on in his letter to tell the saints that they were as little, weak babes, and that they had need to grow.

As an infant has need to be fed with suitable food that it may gradually grow, so saints have need of being fed spiritual food, that they may grow. This is the thought expressed in the hymn so often sung by us, in which we implore the Holy Spirit to feed us till the Savior comes.

THE MOST PRACTICAL THOUGHT IN THE LESSON

for us is that suggested in Peter's admonition to the saints to lay aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings and to desire the sincere milk of the word, that they might grow.

If we have been baptized in water and have received the Holy Spirit, we have been born in spiritual life. But we have need to grow into spiritual greatness, into spiritual perfection. We have need to go on and reach what Paul calls "the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

The little babe, properly nourished, grows into the physical stature of manhood or womanhood, and those saints who receive the instruction of the Spirit of truth and apply it to their conduct in life, will be changed gradually into the likeness of Christ; they will acquire his characteristics of greatness; if they continue to grow in those things, they will at some time attain the measure of his stature.

ARE WE GROWING?

We measure the baby of the household to see if it is growing. We stand the little one up against the wall or beside some other tiny toddler, and we all look on with pleased interest to note the physical growth of the child.

Our boys and girls measure themselves to see if they are growing as rapidly as they would like to do. They measure their strength, too, and boys especially are apt to note with satisfaction, if not with pride, when they perceive that they are growing into the proportions of tall, strong men. The time comes with many when they tower above the little mother who stooped to lead them in infancy, and when their muscular strength exceeds that of the father who toiled for them when they were helpless.

It is well for us occasionally to take our measure in another way. It is well for us to note whether or not we are growing into the stature of Christ, whether or not we are growing into his greatness.

If we measure ourselves to-day by Peter's rule, as found in the lesson, it will be necessary for us to ask ourselves such questions as these:

Are we laying aside all malice, and envies, and evil-speakings? If we are doing so, we are overcoming our tendency to be angry, to be jealous, to indulge in unkind gossip against others.

Are we laying aside hypocrisies and guile? If we are doing so, we are striving to be honest and true in words and deeds.

Are we loving the saints with pure hearts fervently? If we are doing so, we are showing it in the practical things of life.

By this measure, we may learn whether or not we are growing into the greatness of Christ.

It is a serious thing for us, if we are not making some growth of this kind.

On Children's Day in Lamoni, Bro. J. W. Wight gave an address to those assembled, and, in the course of his remarks, he related an incident which, by request, he afterwards wrote for publication in this column.

What he related was as follows:

In the Balmain Sunday-school, one of the largest in Australia, was a senior class of boys and girls whose ages ranged from twelve to twenty. There were from twelve to sixteen in the class.

The boys had previously been in a class composed entirely of boys very difficult to manage. While in that class, they had selected for their teacher, a person who had gained their respect and affection, but a certain class of girls wished the same teacher. With the consent of the superintendent of the school, the two classes united.

Prizes had been offered to induce thorough acquaintance with the lessons, and the teacher and scholars entered heartily into the competition, so much so that more than half of the class answered every question at recitation nearly every Sabbath.

In the class were a boy of sixteen and a girl of seventeen.

At a reunion held at Wallsend, about one hundred miles from Balmain, these two were present and took part in the quarterly review of the Sunday-school lessons.

This review took place on Sunday. The two scholars mentioned learned on Saturday that the lesson was to be the general review; their own school was four lessons behind, but late as it was, they set about preparing themselves for the review, and so diligently did they apply themselves that the boy answered every question asked him and the girl all but one. They were the only ones of the entire class with lessons so thoroughly prepared.

Their teacher had instilled into their minds the idea of their feeling free to speak to him of anything they believed to be a mistake, and on the occasion of the review the girl called his attention to a mistake he had made. The teacher took this opportunity to impress upon the other teachers present the necessity of this kind of freedom between pupils and teacher.

We are strongly impressed with a sense of the necessity of diligence in study upon the part of both teachers and scholars in order to make the Sunday-school work a success, and because of this, we asked Bro. Wight for the account he has given of the incident he has related to us.

If any others can give us such reports of diligence, we shall be glad to receive them.

At the end of last quarter, a little girl's name was written for the second time on the roll of honor that hangs in the second primary room in Lamoni. That means that she has memorized her golden texts for the last two years. Her name is Janette Sprague. She is not expecting to see her name here, or to have what she has done told, but I think she will be pleased to know her diligence is recognized.

Sometimes boys are unruly in Sunday-school because they have not enough to do.

Sometimes there is enough to do, but the boys can not be induced to do it by coaxing alone.

Sometimes they need to understand that their promotion will depend upon their application to their lessons.

ANNA SALYARDS.

A Letter.

The following letter from Sr. Nettie Heavener is suggested in two ways, one the subject matter it contains and again because it is just exactly what we would like for all our workers to do. We now have added space for the Sunday-school Department and we would like to fill it at times with letters or short, spicy articles or paragraphs from the workers over the field. Sr. Heavener has told us in a brief but very comprehensive way how they managed the quarterly review. It may be, as she suggested, that some one has done the same thing before, but that does not matter. Many will read this letter who will be indeed glad to get the suggestions it contains. Let us all set about and see if we can not write a short paragraph or page describing some feature of our work in the local school, in the district, in the home class, or elsewhere. Some one will certainly be benefited thereby. Workers are coming into the ranks constantly and they need this help and need it badly. Who will be next to respond? Send items of news of a general interest. If you organize a new school, a home class, a district association, or do anything else of an interesting character to Sunday-school workers, let us hear from you. District workers, local workers, missionaries, and all others, please take notice!

"Brother Hougas: Just before our last quarterly review we wondered what could be done out of the usual routine. We wanted something new, interesting, helpful, and instructive. What should it be? Our school is very small, most of the classes have but three or four members. At last we thought of the following plan. It may have been used by many other schools, and many perhaps have not used it:

"On the Sunday before the review we assigned lessons to each one. There were just enough to go around, so you will know our number for that day. Each one was to prepare especially on the lesson assigned. On the review Sunday each one told the subject of his lesson and the golden text, then proceeded to tell all that had been learned from the lesson. Then the school was given the liberty of asking questions, or of giving any additional thoughts gleaned. Some very good thoughts were given and in this way the whole school received the benefit.

"As I said before, many may have tried this. Some of those who have not may not care to do so or may find it not suited to their work. It may, however, help you in thinking out some other plan. Then give us the benefit of your plans. None of us can carry out very successfully the exact methods of another, but by reading and studying over the plans of others, new ideas may be brought to our mind. We may work over these same methods, make them our own, let them become a part of ourselves, so to speak, then we can use them.

"Praying for success to crown the efforts of all Sunday-school workers,

The new Sunday-school song-book, Zion's Praises, is meeting with great favor wherever introduced. We understand that the first edition of five thousand has long since been exhausted. Many of our choir leaders are loud in their commendations for it. We are pleased to see it so generally introduced, as that means better music at all of our public gatherings.

We note in a letter of Bro. R. T. Cooper, Los Angeles, California, that the Sunday-school at that place made a net gain of thirty-seven in the month just passed. Bro. John H. Haxton, their wide-awake and newly elected superintendent, is now putting his ever present energy and zeal to use. This push and go is characteristic of the brother. When we visited the school last winter he was teaching a class of young boys whom he had gone out and persuaded to attend the school. They were not previously members of any school, but attended regularly and worked well. May the Lord bless him and every other tireless worker in this great cause. Would that we had more as willing as he.

Bro. H. W. Howlett, of Fall River, Massachusetts, in a letter to the General Home Department Superintendent, says: "We instituted the Home Department in our school the first of the year and the blessing of the Master has been with it so that we now have a membership of over fifty, making the total membership of the school about two hundred." This is what can be done in a large city.

The following is from a letter to the Home Department Superintendent. We give it as it is representative of many. There are in every district, if not in every branch, persons like this sister, who would gladly undertake the work of the Home Department if it was presented to them. They are anxious to study and teach their children and this is their best opportunity. District workers should take hold of this more than they have and look after their isolated saints as well as many right in their own vicinity who do not attend the Sunday-school. Here is a part of the letter: "We live ten miles from the — Branch and Sunday-school. I have a family of five children all the way from eight months to eight years of age. And what I want to know is, is the Home Department work suitable to children of these ages? I mean of those old enough to understand. My greatest desire is to raise them up aright. I thought I could teach them at home on Sunday morning as we can not or rather do not go to — very often. There is another sister here with eight children. And if you will write and explain the matter to us, and tell us what we need, we shall be very thankful." And so it is. There are many anxious to take up the work if some one will explain it to them. It is adapted to the needs and uses of all ages and in all conditions. Rapid progress is being made in this department now and we hope that all will take hold and help in the good work.

Another worker writes: "The work is new to us and we are at a loss to know exactly how to proceed. I notice in the leaflet that provision is made for a visitor whose duty it is to visit the members once each month. But our branch is so scattered that it would be impossible to follow out this plan. For instance, there is one family of four which would take up the work, who live forty-five miles from us. They are members of our branch, also members of the Religio Home Department. Would it be practical to carry on the work by correspondence or should their names be sent to the district superintendent as scattered members?" We know of nothing in the leaflet that requires the visitor to visit once each month. It is necessary to go or send at the close of each quarter, to take up the record envelopes and to give out new ones and new Quarterlies. They may, however, visit as often as they can or think proper. Yes, it is a very good way to keep up the work by correspondence. We know of many who are doing the work in that way. Even should he refer them to the district officers as suggested, the chances are that it will have to be done by correspondence by him. Better to keep it in their own branch or school.

Further he writes: "And, again, we have three or four families who live about ten miles from here, and near enough together to meet to study the lesson. Would it be practical to appoint one of them visitor and let him report to the school by mail at the proper time?" Yes, it would be the proper thing to do. There is provision in the leaflet for a class to "meet at a convenient place for study and may choose one of their own number or other suitable individual to lead and instruct them in their work." This is done quite often. And at times it is very difficult to tell whether they should be called a home class or a small school, so well do they conduct their work.

Letter Department.

OREGON, Missouri, July 19, 1904.

Editors Herald: We moved the tent here last Thursday and began meetings Friday night with an attendance of about sixty-five. Attendance is increasing—Sunday night a big crowd out—a great many more than could get in the tent. Monday night is considered the poorest meeting night in the week, yet we had over a hundred present last night. This is practically a new place, there having been no preaching here for a long time, —perhaps twenty-five years. As elsewhere there is much prejudice, especially among the leading churches. Some of the clergy are very rank against us, and others are trying to influence the people to not come to our meetings. Saturday night just as the people were coming to the tent, an old man, Sunday-school superintendent, who should have been in better business, pulled some wagons and buggies across the walk leading to the tent and blocked the walk so those coming from that way had to go around out in the street or turn back. Some of the most prominent people came as far as the obstruction and turned back, going home. We knew nothing of this till next day. The marshal heard of it and said he would be at hand hereafter and see that nothing of this kind happened again, saying it would not be healthy if anything was attempted, calculated to interrupt or disturb our meetings. I suspect that soon the church bells will begin to ring each evening—preachers trying to keep the people from coming to hear us. This will influence some, but usually it has the effect of advertising our meetings and brings us larger attendance. Bro. Haden and I were located with tent at Mound City before coming here. There we met with much opposition, but had good meetings and good attendance. Made many friends, and some are seemingly very much interested in the work, but have not come to that point where they can stem the tide of opposition and accept the gospel. One preacher there told the people to stay away from our meetings as we were hypnotists, and would get them under our influence and they would have to go our way,—they just couldn't help themselves. He also went into a store where we had some of our bills stuck up in the windows, and tore them down and hid them behind some candy buckets.

Now isn't that smallness? However, he went so far beyond the bounds of reason, that many of his own people lost confidence in him and came to our meetings toward the last.

While there we stayed part of the time with Mr. William Sloniker. Mrs. Sloniker told us she used to belong to the Brighamites, but never believed in polygamy. Mr. Sloniker clerks in a store there, but because of the kindness he manifested toward us, he will lose his position. This same preacher worked up such a feeling against him with the other clerks and his employers that they decided to turn him off the first of September. By accident he learned their intentions, and headed them off by offering his resignation to take effect August first, or as soon as they could secure a man in his place. He told them he was ready to turn over his keys any time, and that he did not want to work for a firm who would discriminate against him, just because of his religious preferences. He and wife are both very favorable to our work. So we see how the world goes and how the honest ones must suffer for the truth's sake. We began tent work at Bolckow, also a new place. The Saints helped us much while there by supplying us with eatables, etc. I am confident much good was done there also, especially in the way of removing prejudice. The weather has been unfavorable part of the time, yet we have had good meetings. I hope the honest ones in these places will soon obey the gospel. At times have felt greatly blessed in presenting the gospel to the people, and while preaching have seen many moved by the Spirit of the Lord to believe and almost persuaded to obey, but lacked courage to do so. It is easy to get the unbiased mind to see we have more truth than all others, but obedience is quite another thing; so much said and done against our work—so unpopular. While here we are staying with our genial and hospitable Bro. A. A. Richardson, who is a member of the First Kansas City Branch. Sunday I was called five miles north, Mound City, to preach funeral of Sr. Margaret Fleener. Services were in the Liberty Baptist church. Large crowd present.

So the work moves on in Nodaway.

GALLANDS GROVE, Iowa, July 20, 1904.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure I pen a few lines this morning, feeling inspired with the hope of the gospel of Christ, which evidently contains a portion of the hidden manna and the water of life intended for the present and eternal good of the Saints. It is akin to the fruits of that Spirit which enables us to rejoice in the truth while we love God and Christ, and are kind to our fellows. And notwithstanding we are yet in this vale of tears we can sympathize with those who are under trial and in our weakness endeavor to "lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; and make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed." And it enables us to "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." A knowledge of the truth inspires us with a desire to see the "will of God done on earth as it is done in heaven" which will perhaps never be fully realized until Christ shall come in his power and glory and the "Spirit of God shall be poured out upon all flesh."

When that glorious time shall come and that holy condition shall obtain we shall no longer "know in part" but partial knowledge will be swallowed up by perfection and we shall see as we are seen and know as we are known. "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

To reach such a condition of spiritual life it is necessary to keep constantly before the mental vision and in the mind the ideal character of Christ and upon gospel principles try to approach thereto. The ideal is perfect and high and the distance between our present condition and the one beyond us may not be reached "at a single bound" but little by little with our hands firmly grasped by the divine One he can help us, in patience, to surmount every obstacle, resist every temptation, bear every needful burden, and step by step "march steadily forward" unto victory and the crown.

By the kindness of Bro. D. A. Holcumb and Bro. Joseph Greenwood the writer was furnished a team, harness, and buggy, while he traveled over a hundred miles, performing work pertaining to our office and calling as the writer understands it. I called on a number of Saints who are so situated that they can not often attend religious meetings or enjoy the spiritual blessings so often enjoyed by the pure and the good. Among this number is Sr. Brown, now in her ninety-sixth year, who is confined to her bed, seemingly nearing the celestial shore. She is living with her son, Charles Reed, and is fortunate in having so good a home, and the kindness of her daughter-in-law will be rewarded by the "Judge of all the earth." I had a pleasant visit with old Sr. Crandall of Panama, Iowa, who is in her ninety-second year, and though feeble in body seems to be rich in faith. She was among those who were driven from Independence, Missouri, in the early days of the church, and it is pleasant to note how distinctly she can remember Kirtland, Ohio, and the work there before the temple was erected.

Mrs. Clebe and daughter made me welcome, as did all others called upon, and we found those who are members of the church in the faith, and interested in the work of the church. Sr. Kirns, who is aged and feeble, with her family, was glad to receive a call, and bade the writer God-speed with an invitation to return. The work done was in harmony with and at the request of branch officers and we trust was beneficial in its way. A number of blessings could have been given if a scribe had been at hand. Meetings at the "Grove" were well attended and good attention given to the word spoken. Saints are looking forward to the Dow City reunion, which convenes September 16, with a degree of pleasure, and the general impression seems to be that the attendance will be better this year than last. The committee is trying to procure rates over railroads to reunion, and will report later if we are successful.

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

ANTONITO, Colorado, July 23, 1904.

Dear Herald: We have not seen your shining face for two weeks; this seems a long time after seeing you every week when at home. The Saints of this locality have neglected to renew their subscriptions to HERALD and Ensign, not because they have lost interest in the latter-day work, but some for the lack of means. Others probably have been a little careless. We have been stirring them up along this line and hope our labor may bear fruit in renewed subscriptions to the church publications.

Having been elected district president at the last conference, we left Denver June 30, for an extended trip over the Eastern Colorado District. Arrived at Salida the morning of the 1st, where we had to wait for a change of cars. The inward man feeling the need of refreshment we repaired to a restaurant where we were served with a sirloin steak off the shoulder of what seemed to be one of the cows which,—well, to say the least, she was not a yearling.

At half past one took train for Delta over the wonderful Marshall Pass. Words fail to describe the scenery, which must be seen to be appreciated. Arrived at Delta, in due time; met by Brn. Kemp and Howery and conveyed to the latter's home, a few miles below the town on the banks of the Gunnison River. Visited with the Saints of the Fairview Branch for a week assisting in preaching, priesthood, business, and other meetings.

At Durango we found Bro. Farley had arranged for service the evening of our arrival at the home of our worthy Sr. Barbier. The writer spoke to a small but attentive audience. Sunday attended the Sunday-school and sacrament service; and preached in Woodman Hall in the evening. The three following evenings had the use of the colored people's place of worship. The Saints of Durango are presided over by Elder W. B. Farley, than whom a better man would be hard to find. He is esteemed very highly outside as well as inside of the church.

The evening of the 14th found us at this place. Was met by Elder C. B. Moyers and taken to his beautiful home which is a welcome headquarters for the weary missionary at all times. Held services Friday night at the home of Bro. Webb. On Sunday Bro. Moyers hitched Frank, his twenty-year old colt, to the surrey and took the writer fourteen miles up the Conejos River to the Fox Creek schoolhouse, where we attended the Sunday-school and service of the Utah church. At the close of their services we announced our services at the home of Bro. W. L. King who lives near. The presiding elder of the Utah branch then offered us the use of the schoolhouse whenever they were not using it, but as we had made our appointment previously, we thought best not to change it. At three o'clock a large congregation assembled, filling two rooms and quite a number out in the yard. After prayer and the administering of the sacrament the writer was called to address the audience. Elder Mortenson of the Utah church requested that we present some of the differences between us and them, and for an hour and a quarter we presented the doctrine of the Reorganized Church in contradistinction to the Utah church. The people paid close attention from start to finish. At the close the Utah elders surrounded Bro. Moyers and the speaker and offered objections to the sermon to the extent that the meeting became almost a bedlam. We finally got their attention long enough to propose that we meet in public discussion on the existing differences. They agreed to reply to what we had said on Monday night, we to use the next night and so on.

Knowing that Bro. J. F. Curtis was at Montevista we telephoned him to come on Monday, which he did. At the close of the Monday night services they tried to shut off farther debate but we would not have it that way. So Bro. Curtis replied Tuesday night from Penrose's tract on Blood Atonement. This was too much for them and they were again ready to quit, but the people wanted to hear their reply. Wednesday night they gave notice that they had to prepare for their conference at Mannasses and would not carry the discussion farther. They proposed to give us thirty minutes to present the succession in the presidency, but we insisted on more time, which they finally granted, extending to forty-five minutes. Bro. Curtis took the stand and used the time to good advantage, firmly establishing our position on the succession and showing that Brigham Young usurped authority that did not belong to him. Elder Mortenson followed with an hour-and-a-half speech, but at the close our work stood out as firm as Gibraltar. He bore a wonderful testimony, calling on us to repent and obey the gospel. He became very much excited and we were afraid that they would use force, but things finally cooled down. We announced services for the following evening. The president of the branch would have closed the schoolhouse against us if he could have done so consistently; but we insisted that they had offered it to us without solicitation on our part, and that they keep their word.

Thursday night we came again, but the members of the Utah church were conspicuous by their absence. The writer opened by summing up what had been presented, but there seemed such a spirit of depression that we gave way for Bro. Curtis to close. We knew that there were eavesdroppers on the outside, and at the close we proceeded very carefully when going to the door, rather expecting trouble.

As we came out Elder James W. Hartley called Bro. Curtis around the corner of the house and accused him of misrepresenting and lying. Bro. Curtis seeing that he was angry started to walk away, when he seized a green cottonwood club about four feet long which he had previously secreted and struck at Bro. Curtis with all vengeance. Bro. Curtis dodged, receiving the weight of the blow on the left shoulder. He then threw the club at him, but missed him. Bro. Curtis picked it up and walked over to where the writer was standing, about fifty feet. I turned to meet Elder Hartley, who was still following Bro. Curtis, Bro. King and Elder Hartley's son following trying to dissuade him from further assault. As I stepped up also to persuade him to desist and use fair means to settle the differences he said, "Oh, you are one of them," and dealt me a blow in the face with his fist. I stepped back and he continued on after

Bro. Curtis who, seeing that we were in for it, dealt him a blow on the head with the same club. We then got between them and got hold of Elder Hartley and let Bro. Curtis get away from him. He followed cursing and calling us names, but we refused to have anything further to do with him and finally got into the wagon and drove away, leaving Bro. King and Hartley's son to pacify the fighter, which they finally succeeded in doing. As we drove home we were very uneasy, not knowing what minute we might be assaulted from the roadside. This is a sample of blood-atonement. They are desperate. Because they can not meet us in fair debate they try something stronger. The main cause of their enmity was because the son of Elder Hartley had signified his intention to be baptized into the Reorganized Church the following day, which we did two hours before the appointed time, fearing interruption from these people. The young man is a fine young man, and though his father gave him notice that he would cast him off he said, I will do what I believe to be right. We confirmed him at the house of Bro. King and came to this place. Satan races but truth is triumphing. We learn to-day that Hartley is circulating reports entirely at variance with the facts. If it were not for consideration for the son we would enforce the law, and send him to the penitentiary. We will hold services here for a few days and then the writer will go to Montevista and Bro. Curtis to Durango. We are slightly disfigured but still in the ring. The Spirit of the Lord has been with us beyond our fondest expectations on this trip.

More anon.

E. F. SHUPE.

PERSIA, Iowa, July 22, 1904.

Dear Herald: After considerable delay I took the district tent known as the "Stoker tent" and went over on the Missouri bottom to a district known as Sandy Point, about four miles southwest of the church of that name; and on the 16th with the assistance of Bro. J. W. Pratt pitched and seated the tent in a grove belonging to Mr. James Wilkinson whose wife is a member of the church.

Sunday night, the 17th, we commenced; Elder Charles F. Pratt of the Missouri Valley Branch being present led off with a very good talk to a good sized audience. Elder James Emerson of Magnolia is with me. To-day Elders Robert Chambers and Asa Hight, of Magnolia, came to take our places until Monday, the 25th, when Bro. Emerson and I will again resume the work.

We have good attendance and interest, although there are not many Saints in that immediate neighborhood. Elder W. A. Smith has labored in a schoolhouse in sight of where the tent is located and is lovingly remembered by the Saints and friends there. The prospect for doing good is very bright and we hope the good seed sown will bear abundant fruitage.

To the priesthood of the Little Sioux District I desire to say: The Lord expects each of you to use the talents which he has given you, and not be content to stay on your farms and in your shops and stores making the gospel a secondary matter. When you consented to be ordained you covenanted with the Lord to perform the duties of your office. Are you so doing or are you depending upon the missionary force to do all the work? If you are you will not enjoy the degree of the Spirit you otherwise would, neither will you rejoice in the Lord as you would if you were doing all you could to build up the kingdom. Within your reach are schoolhouses where you may gather a few together and tell them the blessed story. This is the case nearly all over this district. You sometimes feel impelled to move out and occupy. If you will obey this prompting you will be made to rejoice and your growth and development will be in proportion to your determination to overcome the difficulties that beset your pathway. Soon you will see the way opening up before you and you will find your chief delight in this service. There are in this district one hundred and twenty-five members of the priesthood including deacons who are "standing ministers unto the church." Eight of this number are in the missionary field. Now deduct say fifty more for branch officers and those who can not engage in the ministry by reason of age and infirmity, this leaves sixty-seven of the local ministry. What a work they ought to do! Brethren, the work is the Lord's; he has called you to perform it; the responsibility is yours. May you "be strong and acquit yourselves like men, and may God bless your every effort and fill your souls with his love and a full determination to do his will and to occupy wherever called is the prayer of

Your brother,

SYDNEY PITT, District President.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, July 26, 1904.

Saints' Herald: I am a daughter of Doctor Levi Cheney. We moved to Independence about ten years ago. Papa died three years ago. In the HERALD, a few numbers back, you published the receipt that papa gave you to publish when we were still at Kent, Illinois. It was the "Cancer receipt." I have received several letters, forwarded from Kent, to papa. Now I am married, have two small children, and I have not the time to answer all of these letters. Some want medical advice about cancers they have, while others want the receipt for the "Black or all healing salve." Now, I know nothing about a cancer, I am unable to give medical advice to persons so desiring; but I know the "Cancer plaster" if used according to directions will remove a cancer, but it is very painful for the time it is on.

Now I will give you the receipt for the "Black salve," and you can publish it and those who have written for it can in this way get it. But those that have asked for medical advice, I can not give it to them.

Here is the receipt:

"Black or All Healing Salve. Take resin and beeswax, of each two ounces, sweet oil, eight ounces, melt together. To the above add slowly, while near the boiling point, four ounces of red lead, stirring; and when nearly cold, two drachmes of pulverized camphor, stirring well.

Hoping this will be satisfactory, and all those that have written will receive the receipt, I remain

Your sister,

1320 Short Street.

MRS. G. F. THOMPSON.

OAKLAND, California, July 18, 1904.

Dear Herald: In eternity we expect to dwell in peace in the midst of beautiful surroundings, to enjoy the association of the pure, the peaceful and the true. But in this life we have but a mental picture of this, for the real is sadly marred by that which is dark, miserable, and corrupt. So as "art is long and time is fleeting" I desire to write a few lines, giving some observations I have made of the people who love polygamy, for notwithstanding the time is very short in which these people may work, yet working they are, and working earnestly. About seven weeks ago I engaged in conversation with a missionary of the Utah church, a Mr. Robinson, who is president of a mission here in California. He was surrounded by a large number of his people. Although he became very insulting near the close of our talk, yet I did not retaliate, but kept my head, that is, remained calm. As space in the HERALD is valuable I shall not write all the statements that this President Robinson made, but here are a few:

1. Jesus Christ was condemned by the laws of the land. (He compared Joseph F. Smith with the Savior.)
2. He believes and hopes polygamy will again flourish before the end of the world comes.
3. The Lord commanded Abraham through Sarah to practice polygamy.
4. The words of the Savior justify polygamy. (I gave him plenty of time but he could not find them.)

5. In the Book of Mormon times the Lord blessed people in polygamy, when there was no law against it.

6. The laws which condemn polygamy are unconstitutional.

7. Because of the majority of children born being girls, polygamy is natural and right. These are about half of his wild and foolish assertions.

I told him that by judging from the signs of the times and the word of God, polygamy was a failure and would not be tolerated any more. This caused him to get very angry. He said to me: "I'll preach to you in hell!" I told him I had conversed in the past with some of his fellow missionaries (who were standing near by listening) and had never been insulted like that. I asked him how he knew he would preach to me in hell, if he was a prophet or a son of a prophet?

He said he was a prophet but not sustained as one. I had not intended to write this letter but one of our number attended a Mormon prayer-meeting lately and this man Robinson said something which is of interest, thus the reason for my writing. He told the saints to cheer up that they could go, he thought, in the near future to a colony in Mexico and there practice polygamy. I wonder how this would sound if stated during the Smoot investigation?

Yours in the beautiful gospel of Jesus Christ,

JOSEPH FERRIS.

YELLOWSTONE, Wisconsin, July 21, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am at present in the immediate neighborhood where the first steps were taken which culminated in what is now known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. There are only a little handful of Saints here now. Some of them are almost overcome with the things of this world. Nearly two months ago I started from home accompanied by Bro. Gregory who started out with horse and buggy, intending to travel through Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin on a missionary tour. We visited the scattered Saints and opened up two new places for preaching in North-eastern Illinois, then moved up into Southern Wisconsin. Last Sunday while on my way to Bro. John Frank's intending to preach to a little gathering of the Saints there, I was suddenly overcome by heat and acute stomach trouble. I became unconscious—the brethren say I had a spasm. This left me very weak and nervous, and now after four days I am scarcely able to sit up and pen these lines. I hope soon to be able to prosecute my missionary work,—God knows.

In gospel bonds,

ELI M. WILDERMUTH.

DELOIT, Iowa, July 12, 1904.

Dear Herald: We read so many good, spiritual letters in your columns; and we would like to say to all who read these few lines that we also have truly received a witness of the Father, that this work is true, and he does speak to his children. For we have heard his voice unto us, saying, It is your place to forgive all men. I will forgive whom I will. Vengeance is mine. I will repay. I the Lord suffer these things that their condemnation may be just, if they will not repent. It pierced to the center. It was a still small voice that brought understanding, that showed us our nothingness, and what a frail creature we were in God's sight. We know if we do his will that he does bless us; and we know that many times we are left to ourselves, and then it seems dark and gloomy, and fears arise that we may have grieved his holy Spirit, and we try again harder to overcome, and are blessed. Just as we live we get the reward of our labor. If we do but little, darkness comes upon us; but if we keep his commands we are not idle. Our time of prayer is observed in its season, we search God's word for more light, we try to live by it, and then our example is worthy. I fear many times lest I may yet fall; and I would like to say that while parents have the control of their little children they should not allow them to leave the church, but should train them to love to stay in the prayer-meeting, and encourage them while they are young to take part in singing, and that God likes to have them own him as their friend. Those who are small, who seem to love to answer the question their teacher asks them, and seem to understand what they mean, those children could learn the gospel law so they would want to obey when eight years old; but to have them baptized and then not to teach them to do their part, and not even stay in meeting, is wrong. Would not this be good for the rising generation? I ask the prayers of all God's people.

Yours for the truth,

WILBURTON, Indian Territory, July 8, 1904.

Editors Herald: I will write and let you know how I came to be in this church. I joined the Campbellites when seventeen years old, then went to the United Baptists. I read the Scriptures and saw that the churches all came short in some things. I am forty-one years of age now. This spring I gave Elder Peter Adamson permission to hold a meeting in my house. As soon as I heard he had the Book of Mormon I began to fight the doctrine. Being acquainted with the Scriptures I soon saw that this man was in harmony with the Bible, and after investigating the difference between the Reorganized Church and the church in Utah, I learned that they were not connected at all. I promised God I would accept the truth wherever I found it, and prayed for wisdom, which he gave; and I found the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to be the true church of God. I live in a Baptist settlement and have had several warm arguments.

Yours in gospel bonds,
J. W. MAXWELL.

COVINGTON, Kentucky, July 14, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am preaching here on the streets, and in the homes of the Saints. Bro. F. J. Ebeling has labored some here, and has done a good work, having baptized three. Bro. Hanner baptized three on the 3d of July, and on Sunday, the 10th, I baptized Bro. W. A. Daman's wife. What the work needs here is good local care, and it will grow. In Covington we are having a little fun on the streets from the attacks of men. Bro. W. H. Kelley joined me at this place on the night of the 12th and he had a big round the same night answering questions. I will have to go home on the 17th and move my family, and put up screens to the house, then to Rock Castle County. Bro. Kelley will remain here. The Utah elders are preaching here also. They hold one corner and we the next. I preached on the differences last Monday night, and they listened to it but made no reply. It was well taken by the people. On the 19th of June I baptized a Utah elder and his wife at Heaton, Kentucky. Received a letter this morning telling me that N. M. Cantrell was dead. He died on the 27th of June. He was a man that I found to be well liked through that country.

I had a little ripple with the Utah elders at Louisville, just before I came here. It does look like it falls to my lot to get mixed up with them right along. It is real tiresome to hear those elders twisting the law to defend their old shattered craft. I have no confidence in the God of the Utah church. If I did know him to-day, to-morrow he would change, and his law would not amount to anything. In a tract entitled Interview on Mormon Faith, by Elder Ben E. Rich, on page 5, you will find this language: "The Book of Mormon is therefore a great aid to the understanding of Christian truth. But we do not depend upon any book for the gospel which we preach or the order of the church to which we belong." This does not seem to be dictated by the Spirit that directed in giving section 42, paragraph 5, of the Doctrine and Covenants, which reads as follows: "And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach. And all this ye shall observe to do as I have commanded concerning your teaching." I was talking with the elders here the other night on this tract and they said, We believe in revelations. Yes, I said, but you don't get any, for Brigham gave them the last one that they have in their book, and they have to set that aside.

Your brother in the gospel conflict,
J. W. METCALF.

MORRISON, Oklahoma, July 22, 1904.

Editors Herald: The members of Oak Grove Branch seem to be alive to the work that is before them, in that all take an active part (those that are close enough) in Sunday-school work. Prayer-meeting last night was well attended, and all present took an active part. Last week wife and I and Sr. Dale took a trip to Pawnee County, visiting the home of Bro. and Sr. McGeorge, who are nicely located on a farm near Terilton; and while enjoying the hospitality of our worthy brother and sister, we in company with other Saints from a distance attended the debate between Bro. W. M. Aylor and Evangelist Al Foster of the Church of Christ. Weather was perfect, and good crowds in attendance. It was a new place where the gospel had never been preached. It was Bro. Aylor's first debate, and he proved himself a power as he stood in defense of the true gospel, and its light now shines with a greater brilliancy in Terilton than the fondest hopes of the Saints ever imagined it could. At close of debate Bro. Aylor baptized nine precious souls, with many more near the kingdom, and all prejudice removed from the minds of the people.

The debate was brought about by Evangelist Al Foster publicly challenging Bro. Aylor, so that put us on the defensive. Debate lasted eleven nights. Foster's main effort was to fasten polygamy on Joseph Smith, and find fault with the Inspired Translation. He used R. B. Neal's line of procedure, but when it was shown his witnesses had been before the courts, and had been impeached, his argument was all lost.

We had on hand HERALDS, Ensigns, tracts, and replies to R. B. Neal and company to give out every night. People took them eagerly, and much good was done; we think there can be a branch raised up there soon.

The debate brought to light another family of Saints, that had lately come from Iowa and bought a farm near Terilton—Bro. Partridge, nephew of Israel L. Rogers. I am satisfied he will be of great worth to the cause. We now have fifteen members there.

At present Bro. Aylor is in Morrison, and to-morrow night will commence a series of meetings in the Christian church.

Yours in the one faith,
W. W. BUDWORTH.

DELTA, Colorado, July 23, 1904.

Editors Herald: Bro. E. F. Shupe, the district president, made a visit here on July 1, which resulted in much good, and I believe the work will move along all right in this part of the vineyard of the Lord. I have been preaching here and at two other points since June, but now I expect to move on to other parts where the few scattering Saints are awaiting my arrival, expecting to reach Colorado Springs in time to attend our district conference which convenes the first Saturday in September.

I am feeling well in the Master's work, and am trying to push it along, as fast as I can, in my feeble way. Two have been baptized, and I believe others will follow soon.

Ever praying for the prosperity of Zion's cause,
JAMES KEMP.

DIXON, Nebraska, July 12, 1904.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since I have had opportunity to read the HERALD, or any other of our church papers. I feel lonely when I can not be with any of our faith or read any of the papers. I am spending the summer here with my sister who is not a church member, although a firm believer in the latter-day work. I think there are no people of our belief near here; for I have been here for some time and have heard of none. The people here are mostly Quakers. There is Sabbath-school, prayer and class-meeting, and sometimes preaching. I have attended some and find them to be good, sociable folks, and probably some would be willing to hear one of our ministers should he come here. I should be very glad for tracts, books, or church papers to read myself, and give to others. Were I able to do so would send and get some, but can not. Being very young in years, as in the church, I have found it very difficult to follow the teachings of Christ, and I have gone far away at times. I can only ask to be forgiven, and hope to live a more steadfast life in the future. I ask all of my sisters and brothers in the church (many of whom may know me) to pray for me that I may see my duty, and draw near to Christ. I feel very weak and sinful, still I hope to do better, and be more faithful. Ever praying and hoping for the best, I am,

Your sister,
KATIE L. NEWBERRY.

CAMERON, Missouri, July 21, 1904.

Editors Herald: Bro. John Davis and the writer are sounding the glad tidings on the streets of this town, amid the rumbling noise of heavy dray wagons and carriages tearing past. Some people standing in the rear of speaker would complain because they could not hear, and thought the speaker, like B. Young, could assume the voice of Joseph Smith. This made him somewhat downhearted; but he was encouraged when, at close of meeting, he talked with people who heard plainly what was said more than a block distant.

Cameron is a growing town, very beautifully situated, and will in a few years be a noted city. An energetic band of Saints located here is working hard to build or buy a house of worship. They have a well-attended Sunday-school. The young people (though a little timid at first, in taking the stand with preachers on the street) are all eager to forward the cause; they have a nice Religio. The Prayer Union is doing the right kind of work. The Saints here are very hospitable; Bro. Austin's latchstring is always out and he will entertain you with the news of former days. Bro. Davis and the writer, with the coöperation of willing workers, are trying to interest the thoughtful people in Cameron with the gospel story. We have been here two weeks, and though as yet no definite results are in sight, we firmly believe that "the bread cast upon the water" will be found in due time; let the Saints watch for objects floating on the surface, with the tide of events. It is only by patience and perseverance that we will be successful in the main. It is my intention, though new difficulties confront us every day, to continue the struggle "till the summons home be heard." The continued reports of wars, rumors of wars, and disasters on sea and land, ought to sober every Saint and cause him to prepare for the inevitable testing time; when the Saints will be tried to the uttermost.

Hoping while tossed to and fro upon the billows, I may outride the tempest and with you reach the harbor of safety, I remain as ever,

N. C. ENGE.

ELDON, Iowa, July 24, 1904.

Dear Saints: When you get puzzled over any scriptural passage you do not understand, go to the Chief Engineer who directs all things after his grandly supreme councils of the vast universe in which mortals of this world live. It is needful that you humble yourselves low in the dust by fasting and prayer—that neither bread nor water come into your mouth while seeking for light. If you do not obtain the answer sought, go again and again; prove God by casting all the world behind you and the answer will come.

I was puzzled to understand how one beast could heal the deadly wound of another beast, so I said, I will go fasting and praying to God and he will tell me, and then the answer came. It seemed and was so plain I felt the keen shock of profound ignorance of man or woman in this finite state with all their minds trusting in the wisdom of man; for the natural man can not know the things of God, for they are spiritually discerned. (See Revelation 13: 3.) "And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death, and his deadly wound was healed. And all the world wondered after the beast, the second beast."—Verse 12. "And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast whose deadly wound was healed."

Here is the answer: The first beast goes out and makes a declaration of war and his live subjects are killed off; the other beast with his live subjects joins the first beast and adds these live subjects in the place of the dead soldiers, and that heals the deadly wound; and thus saith God to me, The man that joins this beastly power shall lose the reward in heaven, for they are fighting against God. If there was a man that was sorely persecuted, it was I. All kinds of lies were heaped up against me, even to swearing to those falsehoods charging me with base and slanderous things and evil reports; but I thank God that he gave me strength and courage to put my body, soul, and spirit to beat my way onward to join that celestial choir in the angelic state. I am now seventy-eight and am strong for a man of my age, after passing through two wars—the Mexican War and late Rebellion; and lastly, I enlisted in the war for eternity beyond. When I joined the church I quit tobacco, tea, coffee, hog meat, and swearing, and in their place adopted fasting and praying.

Extracts from Letters.

Amos Berve, Kewanee, Illinois: "Baptized five here July 3."

A. G. Young, Box 106, Cliffside, New Jersey, remitting for six dozen tracts, says: "If any brother has tracts or literature suitable for distribution, and will send them to my address, I can use them here where the gospel is not preached. Some German tracts can be used; and Italian if we had them."

BRANCH REPORTS.

This is to give notice about branch reports that have not been received up to July 23, some of them a long time due. If any have been sent of those here mentioned (unless on the way at this writing), then they have been lost in transit. If so please send statement and help us with copies of loss and gain that were on missing reports. Where district clerks have kept reports in order to obtain corrections will they kindly write as to prospects, and send reports as soon as can be arranged for. It is not best to withhold reports too long. This office may give aid and information in correcting. Please note the following:

Since the organization of Oregon into two districts last fall copies arrived of the branches in the Portland District, but not of those in the Southwestern Oregon District. Its first conference was held in November, and we hope that the reports will not be delayed much longer, for in the least busy time of the year such back work can be attended to better than in the rush times.

Of the two districts formed in Washington the Seattle and British Columbia Branch reports have been corrected to January, but no copies of those in the Spokane District have arrived, although their conference was held in February. Please correspond or send information, that we may know what to expect.

Eastern Maine reports for February, Idaho reports for March, and Northwestern Texas reports for October and March are not yet received.

Northern California and Central California adjourned in February to meet "on call," but whether conferences have been held by them has not appeared in HERALD or Ensign.

May reports are due from Idaho, Northeastern Illinois, Western Maine, Nodaway, and Northeastern Texas and Choctaw.

June reports not yet come are: Chatham, London, Eastern Iowa, Eastern Michigan, Northern Michigan, Northern Minnesota, Northeastern Missouri, Clinton (Missouri), Southern Missouri, North Dakota, Portland (Oregon), and Spokane, Washington.

Last October Southern Indiana adjourned without setting time for next session. Have received no reports nor seen any notice that a conference has been held.

Oklahoma and Central Texas have been held this month (July), and other districts hold in August, September, and October, many in the latter month. We will be glad to have all reports as promptly as may be, after good efforts are made to have errors rectified by branch clerks, where items are found wrong, either as to numbers, or in dates, places, or names of persons officiating in baptism, confirmation, and ordination, or in other ways. H. A. STEBBINS, Church Recorder.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 23, 1804.

Notices.

TENTS FOR RENT.

The following prices will prevail for the use of tents during the reunion at Dow City, Iowa, which begins September 16: 10x12, $1.85; 12x14, $2.20; 14x16, $2.60. If they are to be set up add 25 cents to above prices. Send all orders and remittances to A. H. Rudd, at Dow City, Iowa.

QUARTERLIES WANTED.

Bro. John Haxton, 315 Winston Street, Los Angeles, California, particularly desires Primary Quarterly for April, 1897, and will be glad to receive any old Quarterlies. He wishes to distribute them among Book of Mormon readers.

Correction.

On page 684, first paragraph, first line in HERALD for July 27, read Millersburg, instead of Williamsburg.

Reunion Notices.

Reunion of the Southern Wisconsin District will be held at Greenbush, Madison, Wisconsin, beginning August 26, and continuing over Sunday, September 4. All are cordially invited to attend. We expect to have Patriarch John H. Lake in attendance. Meals will be served and furnished to all who desire at fifteen cents per meal. All who wish board and tents will please notify one of the committee in ample time to make arrangements for their accommodations. Committee, J. O. Dutton, Milton Junction; Frank Richards, Madison; W. P. Robinson, Oregon, Wisconsin.

The Northeastern Kansas District reunion will convene at Fanning, Kansas, August 26, holding ten days. Those desiring tents will please write F. G. Hedrick at Fanning. The price for a 10x12 tent erected on grounds will be $2. Straw and fuel will be free. Pasturage and feed for horses will be furnished at reasonable prices. We have cool, shady grounds with an abundance of clear, sparkling, spring water close to the camp. Apostle I. N. White, Patriarch Alexander H. Smith, President J. A. Gun-solly, of the Religio, and visiting and local ministry will make this reunion one long to be remembered. Come and partake of the spiritual feast. Samuel Twombly, M. F. Gowell, Frank G. Hedrick, committee.

Conference Notices.

Northeastern Kansas District will meet on the reunion grounds at Fanning Kansas, August 27, at 10.30 a. m. We would like to have a written report from every member of the priesthood in the district. Branch clerks will please mail their reports to me at Fanning Kansas, a week before conference. Frank G. Hedrick, clerk.

The Seattle and British Columbia District conference, previously announced, will be held in the Acme Business College rooms at corner of Second Avenue and Pike Street, entrance on Pike Street. Fred'k W. Holman.

Convention Notices.

Pittsburg District association will convene at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, Friday, September 2, 1904. Business session 2 p. m., entertainment 7.30 p. m. Bring Zion's Praises with you. Louis A. Serig, secretary.

Two-Day Meetings.

There will be a two-day meeting of the Kewanee District held at Millersburg, Illinois, on August 13 and 14, to which all are invited. Conveyance will be furnished from Aledo by notifying Bro. Joseph Terry, of Millersburg, of the time of your arrival at Aledo. John S. Patterson, president.

Died.

MURRAY.—Sr. Martha A., died in Bangor, Maine, June 25, 1904. She was baptized by J. C. Foss about thirty years ago. She was a strong believer in the gospel, although a great sufferer before her death.

LUNDEEN.—By drowning, July 9, 1904, at Newburg, New York, Carl E., oldest son of Bro. Charles Lundeen and wife, of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Carl had promise of a useful life and was well thought of by all who knew him. A large congregation was in attendance at the funeral, which was held at the home of his parents, the body having been sent home for burial. Sermon by Elder E. A. Stedman, from Job 14: 14, and John 11: 25.

JENKINS.—John Lewis Jenkins, at the hospital in Salt Lake City, after an operation for appendicitis. He was born at Malad, Idaho, April 21, 1880. He would have completed his education from the Agricultural College, Logan, Utah, in another year. Respected by all, and idolized by his father, his death was a heavy blow to him, also his sister Mary Jenkins. Funeral services held from the porch of the Lewis residence, from which his mother, and grandparents, had been buried. Over five hundred people attended the services, which were conducted by W. S. Pender. Sermon by S. D. Condit.

LOGSDON.—Sr. Emily A. Logsdon died July 16, 1904. Born August 22, 1843; united with the church March, 1887. She was married December 31, 1863, to Bro. Levi Logsdon. She leaves a husband, five sons, and four daughters. Sr. Logsdon was a kind and industrious wife, and a good mother, loved by her children and all that were acquainted with her. She was a credit to the church. We truly can say, The angels will welcome her home, for she is worthy. Interment in the Fairview Cemetery, West Virginia. Funeral in the Saints' chapel. Sermon by Elder James Craig.

SALISBURY.—At Lamoni, Iowa, July 19, 1904, Sr. Lenora Salisbury, aged 15 years, 3 months, and 25 days. Cause of death was the pouring of kerosene into the stove, the can exploding and the flames enveloping her. She lived six hours, in great agony most of the time. Her mother died two months previously, thus this second loss, and by such awful circumstance, leaves the father and five children, the oldest a daughter of seventeen, inconsolable. Lenora was baptized August 11, 1902, by Bro. W. T. Shakespear. Funeral service in charge of Bro. John Smith, sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

HODGES.—James, born February 22, 1832, at Aston, Oxford, England, united with the church in his youth and came to America, reaching Florence in 1856, shortly after removing to Omaha where he resided until his death. While in Omaha he found in the Reorganization the church of his youth and became a strong advocate of its doctrines. He died in the faith July 21, after a short illness, leaving a wife, one son, and two daughters, funeral services at the Saints' chapel by Elder Charles Fry. Interment at Fremont, Nebraska.

WIMER.—Hattie R. Randall was born at New Plymouth, Ohio, July 23, 1844. She was married to William Wimer in 1867. In 1870 they moved to Algans Township in this county, where they lived until 1883 when they moved to their farm in Coldwater Township which has since been their home. She died very suddenly on July 31. Was the mother of two children. Her daughter, Miss Ida Wimer, died June 8, 1903. Her son, Milton W. Wimer, is left with his father and many friends, to mourn.

MCADON.—Ida May Bishop was born in Cass County, Iowa, May 2, 1886; baptized by T. W. Chatburn at Council Bluffs, September 5, 1881. Came to Little Sioux in 1881. Married to B. O. McAdon July 15, 1886. To them three children were born, two boys and one girl, Vard S., Nola, and Arl. She died July 15, 1904, on her eighteenth wedding anniversary. Funeral at house, by W. A. Smith, Sunday, July 17, 1904. She was a true Christian.

Addresses.

J. W. Metcalf, 1719 Seventh Street, Louisville, Kentucky.

The photographic contests held monthly by the Woman's Home Companion are of interest to all amateur photographers. The Woman's Home Companion gives prizes for photos illustrating special subjects, which are announced from month to month.

The July-September Forum contains an article by Herbert W. Horwill on "Literature: The art of letter-writing." The requirements of this art are discussed with reference to the new Carlyle Letters, Lord Acton's Letters, and other correspondence recently published.

An important literary event will mark the August McClure's in the appearance of the opening installments of the first story of childhood from the pen of Frances Hodgson Burnett, since the days of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," which has been, by general consent, voted the best book of child-life ever published. In her new story Mrs. Burnett makes a little girl the central character and idealizes her charming heroine quite as she did the hero who preceded her.

Seldom has there been a month before the opening day a brighter prospect for an entirely satisfactory State fair in Iowa than at this time, and interest in the golden anniversary, or semi-centennial, of the Iowa State Fair, has been growing steadily since the first announcement of the Department of Agriculture that this was to be made a notable event in special recognition of the anniversary. The preparations are being made rapidly. The members of the executive committee—President W. W. Morrow, Vice-president C. E. Cameron, and Secretary J. C. Simpson—have been untiring in their efforts to perfect the plans for the fair in good season. They have been putting the grounds in the best possible condition—cleaning up, making repairs, adding to the sidewalks, arranging new seats, completing a new sewer and general drains and making over the old horticultural hall for use as a women's building. The new main building, or Hall of Agriculture, Horticulture, and Dairy Industries, is nearly completed. A new walk is being built to connect the great live stock pavilion and the new main building, and this will make it possible for one to see a large part of the fair with very little walking and no discomfort. In fact the tendency to concentrate the features about the central part of the fair ground is one that will commend itself to all State fair visitors. The advantage of having the two main buildings near each other on the hillside will be appreciated.

National Prosperity and Public Expenditure.

The question of prosperity promises to be one which will be brought closely to the attention of the voters. The Republicans claim that it is a genuine, beneficial, permanent prosperity; the Democrats assert that it is a myth. They claim that the cost of living has grown in larger ratio than the increase in wages—assertions which the Bureau of Statistics and the Bureau of Labor will endeavor to controvert. There is no doubt that the Republicans look upon a long dull summer as the most serious factor with which they have to contend. They must know that the crest of the wave of prosperity has passed; that business is sagging; and that there is a decrease in traffic and consequent discharge of railroad employees. The Republicans are, in fact, more concerned over untoward business conditions, possible strikes, and general labor disturbances than they are over the local differences in their party. These are not fundamental, such as those which disrupted the Democratic party in 1896; and, while unfortunate, they are not vitally dangerous. All during the summer the business barometer will be watched with most observant care, and the slightest indication of a storm will cause the Republicans unconcealed anxiety. . . .

The Republican managers appreciate that the appeal for official honesty and economy will be a factor in the campaign. This explains the prompt appearance of a document from the Department of Commerce and Labor, giving the cost of administration per capita in various countries. According to this presentation, each man, woman, and child in the United States contributes $7.97 per year to run the Government, as against $9.30 for Canada, $9.45 for the German Empire, $9.54 for Sweden, $10.09 for Spain, $11.45 for Portugal, $11.40 for the Netherlands, $12.40 for Cuba, $12.68 for Argentina, $14.27 for Austria-Hungary, $17.30 for Paraguay, $17.40 for Belgium, $17.84 for France, $21.39 for the United Kingdom, $37.69 for Australia, and $38.38 for New Zealand. Russia's per capita expenditure is approximately the same as that of the United States. Statistics for Japan are not given. It should be stated, however, that these figures, while very gratifying, may not be altogether accurate, inasmuch as a larger proportion of public expenditures is borne by State and local governments in the United States than in many of the more centralized governments of Europe. In fact, the effort which has been made to arrive at a true basis of comparison has only resulted in making the situation more complex. For campaign purposes, however, the figures will, no doubt, have a large circulation.—Henry Litchfield West in the July-September Forum.

The Twentieth Century Home is retaining the typographical excellence and artistic make-up that won such universal praise for the initial number six months ago. Its popularity proves it to be a giant among the woman's magazines. The August number is excellent in every detail and is beautifully illustrated.

ITEMS FROM A WANDERER.

At the time of last writing we were in the midst of the North Dakota reunion at Dunseith. The regular routine of meetings was carried out with two exceptions. On Thursday forenoon, June 30, the business session of the reunion was held. The vote to have a reunion again next year was carried almost unanimously,—a pretty good evidence that those interested considered the present one a success. At this meeting Bro. Sparling, Bishop's agent for the district, presented the matter of Graceland debt, and stated the amount which had been apportioned to the North Dakota District, which was about sixty-six dollars. He said he would like to see the amount raised speedily. It was pleasing to see the hearty response to his request. Something over thirty dollars in cash was at once brought forward by a number of people, and more was subscribed, to be paid when needed. They kept Bro. Sparling very busy for a few moments, and when the attack was over he smilingly turned to us and said that North Dakota would be on hand with more than her share. We were glad to hear it, and we saw by the look on Bro. Sparling's face that he was not only pleased but proud that the North Dakota Saints should respond so liberally to Bishop Kelley's call. The same promptness of the North Dakota Saints to respond to the financial demands of their agent was manifested at the same meeting when Bro. Sparling, as treasurer of the reunion committee, stated that a certain amount was needed to defray the expenses of the reunion. In a few minutes the money was raised. We mention this to show that the North Dakota Saints are alive and ready to do their part. They have learned that all laws of God are spiritual in their import, and that living up to the financial laws of the church is followed by spiritual blessings. According to a statement of their Bishop's agent the district last year paid in over fifteen hundred dollars in tithing, besides raising over two hundred dollars for Graceland. In 1894 Bro. Sparling was appointed financial agent for the church for South and North Dakota and for the year the receipts were one hundred and fifty dollars. In 1902 he was relieved from South Dakota, and the figures quoted for the last year were for the one State. Surely it represents a goodly growth.

The other exception to the regular routine was on

A LITTLE sixty-two page pamphlet of dialogues and recitations issued by Bro. W. W. Kearney, of Lowry City, Missouri, adapted to use in Sunday-school and Religio entertainments, has been placed on our desk by Sr. Kearney. They are offered for sale to those who may wish to purchase. Contents are good and may profitably be used. See ad elsewhere.

BRO. J. W. WIGHT secured a half column in the Peoria Star for July 25, for the purpose of explaining church differences called up by the Smoot investigation.

THE leaves and a shell of soft wood are all that the vegetation of this summer has made, but the solid columnar stem, which lifts that bank of foliage into the air to draw the eye and to cool us with its shade, is the gift and legacy of dead and buried years.—Emerson.

Saturday afternoon, when the district conference was held, in charge of F. A. Smith and William Sparling. The district holds but one a year,—at reunion time. The business was accomplished by votes which were pleasingly unanimous. All the retiring officers were reelected, there being no others placed in nomination. Bro. William Oaks was recommended for ordination as elder and he was appointed vice-president of the district. His ordination was attended to on Sunday morning by F. A. Smith and William Sparling. At the same time John Stowell was ordained teacher. Bro. John Thompson was ordained an elder on Thursday by F. A. Smith and the writer. Following the conference was a business meeting of the Bottineau Branch. It, too, holds but one session a year, owing to the fact that it is very difficult to get the members, or a goodly portion of them, together. The members are scattered over a wide territory, extending from Bottineau on the west to St. John or farther on the east.

On Sunday morning, July 3, the rite of baptism was administered to three, Leonard Houghton officiating.

The preaching at the reunion was done by the following brethren: F. A. Smith, William Sparling, James Wagener, Leonard Houghton, Charles Howery, John Spaulding, and the writer. The efforts of the brethren were well received. The appointing of speakers and assistants was left with the presidency of the reunion, and every one of the brethren called upon responded cheerfully and did his work without excuses.

It will be noticed that no time was used at this reunion by either Sunday-school or Religio. As presiding officer I made inquiry at beginning of the reunion as to what days these organizations would be likely to want time for exercises, and was surprised to learn that neither of the auxiliary societies had organized North Dakota. We learned that Bro. McElwain had charge of the home class work for the Religio, and that there were seven Sunday-schools in the district.

The attendance by nonmembers at this reunion was better than at Fergus Falls. Prejudice, however, is quite strong. We were surprised to what extent. One woman who had attended the meetings once or twice was subject to severe criticism for even going to hear the Latter Day Saint preachers. She told me this on July 4 in a short conversation we had with her at the celebration. Her critics said it was quite a disgrace even to go to the meetings. We trust, however, that at least some of the prejudice was removed by the meetings.

One incident occurred which saddened the Saints in attendance at the reunion much. Sr. William Graham and daughter Birdie, well known to Lamoni Saints, were expected at the reunion, expecting to come with Bro. McElwain and family. They did not come. A letter was received about the middle of the reunion from Bro. McElwain stating that on the evening before they were expecting to start for the reunion Sr. Graham was killed. It seems the children had been away from home for the evening, leaving father and mother home. On returning late the children found Sr. Graham lying on the couch dead, with a bullet hole through her head. Their father was missing. The sad news threw gloom over the camp.

This reunion is the third held by the North Dakota Saints. The district was organized on July 2, 1903, at Bottineau, at the reunion there. The first of the reunions was held where this year's one was, on the farm of Bro. John Spaulding. Bro. William Sparling has been intimately associated with the work in North Dakota, and from him we gathered a few historical items which may be of interest to our readers. He united with the church in Iowa, in 1882. He was baptized on Monday, and on the following Sunday he was ordained a priest and the next day he was sent on a mission to Dakota. He was probably the first one to present the work in Dakota, being closely seconded by Brn. Charles Howery and John Spaulding. They met with much opposition from the first. He could not get a house to preach in on his first attempt, and was even told that he would not be permitted to speak on the streets. Some of the opposition was gradually overcome, and branches were built up. The first branch in Dakota (now South Dakota) was organized in 1883, the year following his first preaching. The only church building owned by our people in North Dakota is owned by the Richburg Branch, about ten miles west of West Hope. It is only a small building, but it is home for the branch in their meetings.

The day following the close of the reunion was Independence Day, and Dunseith celebrated in what was supposed to be fitting style. The town is a small one of about three hundred inhabitants, though it is not at all a young town. For about twenty years it has existed as a village, but is not yet incorporated, we were told. It is one of the oldest towns in that part of the country. When the railroads come into the country, Dunseith fared badly, branches of the Great Northern went on the east and west sides, about twenty miles to the west and about thirty to the east. Thriving towns sprang up on all sides. Dunseith's chief industry now, outside of what little trading of a general nature is done there, is to serve as a vast wood-yard for the settlers on the prairie around there. Hundreds of cords of wood, mostly poplar and other soft woods, are brought down from the so-called Turtle Mountains on the north and stored in great piles at Dunseith. Coal is scarce and high priced, so the chief fuel is wood; and after harvest the great piles of wood rapidly disappear as the farmers come to Dunseith to lay in a supply of fuel for the rigorous winter. And so long as the supply of timber in the Turtle Mountains lasts, Dunseith will do fairly well as a trading point; but the wood supply is disappearing. Fires out of control destroy much, and the settlers are clearing off much. Unless coal is found in the hills Dunseith as a fuel center will not enjoy prestige long.

The so-called Turtle Mountains comprise a range of hills for some forty or fifty miles along the Northern border of North Dakota. We had no opportunity of making anything in the way of a careful study of them; but on Thursday, June 30, we went with Bro. William Oaks to his home in the mountains, about eight miles north from Dunseith. Once up into the "mountains" the country looks quite familiar to one raised in a country covered with glacial drift. The name given the hills is probably due to the number of round-topped hills bearing crude resemblances to turtles' backs. We saw no stratified rock, and should judge there is none except at a considerable depth. The great number of boulders which can be seen, and which are so familiar in the glacial drift of Iowa, would indicate glacial agency in the formation of the Turtle Mountains. This indication is strengthened by the general appearance of the hills, which are piled up in heaps in promiscuous order, or rather disorder. Hollows or depressions frequently occur which have no outlet for drainage. These give rise to "sloughs" or "swales," in local parlance, when small, and lakes when larger. Two branches of Willow Creek drain the mountains immediately to the north of Dunseith, and are rather small but swiftly running streams furnishing lots of cool water. The water storage possibilities of the Turtle Mountains are great.

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

From present indications, there seems likely to be a good attendance of students at Graceland College upon the reopening of its doors for the fall term's work on September 13 next. Several who are either teaching or intend to teach have signified their intention to take advantage of the privileges offered by the normal department of Graceland, the course of which has been broadened and extended until it is representative of the most up-to-date educational ideas of the country. We commend the attention not only of regular teachers, but also of Sunday-school teachers to this very helpful course.

The business and shorthand and typewriting courses have also been strengthened: the fees of these departments are considerably lower than the majority of commercial schools, yet the course of instruction is of the highest grade.

A pleasing feature of next year's work is the promise of a Freshman collegiate class better in quality and stronger in numbers than has been the case for some years. We should like to draw attention to the fact that the entrance requirements of the Collegiate department are now of the same character as those required for admission to the great universities, such as Michigan, Chicago, Iowa, etc., and the requirements for graduation require the completion of similar studies and the attainment of an equal degree of scholastic knowledge.

In view of these facts, we invite every parent to consider the practicability of sending their children to Graceland College. All students from sixteen years of age to sixty are welcome. A catalogue will be gladly sent to every inquirer—send for one to-day. President Dewsnup will be glad to enter into correspondence with you.

GRACELAND NOTES.

That the Saints are striving to perform their duty and discharge all obligations as shown by the apportionment of the college debt is fully demonstrated by reports from the following districts and officers the past week:

F. J. Updike, Western New York; Samuel Stroh, Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District; Albert Page, Central California District; Bishop C. A. Parkin, Northern California District; Elder T. W. Williams, Southern California District; Bishop Thomas Taylor, England; J. W. Waldsmith, Southern Nebraska District; A. Barr, Eastern Michigan District; John Cairns, Northeastern Kansas District; J. C. Constance, Millersburg, Illinois; Bishop George P. Lambert, Nauvoo District; Mrs. Predetta Wilson, Sunday-school, at Treherne, Manitoba; W. W. Whiting, South Dakota District.

Elder Joseph F. Burton of the Society Islands, reports that when the apportionment was read to a general gathering of the native Saints, showing that their apportionment had been reduced to twelve cents each, Chilian money, they promptly voted to raise it to fifty cents each so as to perform a commensurate part with their brothers and sisters in America. Certainly this is praiseworthy on the part of the Saints in the Society Islands. Would that every member in the body of Christ, the church, would thus resolve to fulfill his part in the work and do it. Then we would have less criticism and fault-finding of the work of others and soon bring about the possibility of true equality and unity of faith among the Saints.

Mrs. Emma Muceus, wife of Elder Peter Muceus, Porsgrund, Norway, sends to the Patronesses of the college two beautiful pieces of fine harbinger work made by herself and valued at five dollars apiece, for the benefit of Graceland.

Bro. Coleman Snider, of Hamilton, Missouri, sends nine dollars to college and says: "Please let me know if Graceland will be running this year. If so we will move there and go to school. If not we will go somewhere else. Send us a catalogue." This is a true and proper thought. If the church does not furnish a good school of instruction of this kind we must send our children where there is one. The money is not saved to the church by neglecting our own school. It is turned to some other, and even more, for it costs more to attend schools elsewhere that are performing the grade of work that Graceland College is doing than it does at Graceland, and the evils and miseducation the students are thrown in contact with are very much greater.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A letter from Bro. J. F. Burton, dated Papeete, Tahiti, July 19, reached us on August 5, containing some good news. Bro. and Sr. Burton returned to Papeete from a four-month trip among the branches of the Tuamotus. They visited ten branches, including Anaa, where the conference was held. With the exception of the islands of Niau, Rairoa, and Tikahau the Saints were in rather straightened circumstances because of injury to the cocconut crop through insects eating and destroying the leaves. The French have also invaded their pearl-shell industry by bringing in diving-machines. The people of Manihi had an understanding through a treaty arrangement between their last king, Pomare, and France, that the pearl-shells of Manihi were reserved for the natives; they therefore resented the introduction of the machines, took possession of some portions thereof, and thus prevented their diving for shells. Several were arrested and punished by imprisonment. It is hard on the natives, but Bro. Burton insisted that they should be amenable to the law and that they did wrong in taking the remedy into their own hands. Bro. Burton says: "I baptized nineteen young people on the trip, and was made to know that the Lord is so far watching over his people here, and that there are several young people who hereafter will be a power for good in these islands in church work. Bro. Hawkins is in Kaukura and is quite active for one so old. He is president of Kaukura District and is translating the Book of Mormon in his leisure hours. He distributed upwards of three hundred copies of the Doctrine and Covenants in the Tuamotus for sale and sold one hundred and thirteen copies."

The Windsor Herald, (California,) for July 22 contains the following notice of the work of Bro. John M. Terry: "Reverend J. M. Terry, of Oakland, an elder and a missionary for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has been delivering a series of sermons at the Luther Bell residence, to which the public has been invited. Elder Terry is a follower of what is commonly termed the Mormon Church. His sermon Wednesday night was a masterpiece of theological reasoning, complete almost to perfection, dignified and fair. In it he took occasion to explain that polygamy was not a doctrine of the original Mormon Church, is not now practiced, taught, or believed in by true followers of Joseph Smith, and he asserted that 'God despised the theory and practice of plural marriages, as is proven by his word.' Elder Terry is a distinctly able minister."

The following taken from the Chicago Daily Tribune will prove interesting to Latter Day Saints, although the report has not been confirmed: "Mus-kogee, Indian Territory, August 3.—[Special.]—Mrs. Edward C. Merrick, the official interpreter of the Creek Indian nation for the Dawes commission, talked to an Igorrote for an hour at the Philippine village at the St. Louis exposition last Saturday. He could not understand a word of English, but could carry on a conversation in Creek readily enough. Mrs. Merrick did not ask a question he could not answer. Neither did she do all the talking, the Igorrote asking her many questions. She says they carried the conversation almost as easily as if he was a Creek Indian."

Bishop Kelley has just received one hundred and sixty-three dollars and sixty-four cents cash dividend paid by the Independence Manufacturing and Mercantile Company on stock which the church holds in the company, this being but a part of the dividend declared on the business for the past six months. Four per cent of the dividend was put in "surplus fund" for further working capital. This shows the substantial character of the Independence Manufacturing and Mercantile Company and that it is also aiding the church work.

Bro. U. W. Greene reports a good work being done at Covington, Kentucky, across the river from Cincinnati; also a good work being done at Elmville, Ohio. Brn. J. W. Metcalf and W. H. Kelley (of Indiana) have been doing good work, of which Bro. Greene has had good report. Not many baptisms reported; ministers active.

Somebody forwards a copy of the Knobnoster Gem for July 29, in which appears a notice signed by Latter Day Saints, denying the report that our people "had placed their names to a saloon petition recently circulated" in that community. They are to be commended for the position they have taken in the matter.

There are fifty-nine missionaries in Bro. F. A. Smith's field. His July report shows activity and a hundred and fourteen baptisms. He says his men are doing well with few exceptions.

SPIRITUAL, PHYSICAL, AND MENTAL DEVELOPMENT.

SERMON BY ELDER E. R. DEWSNUP, PRESIDENT OF GRACELAND COLLEGE, AT LAMONI, IOWA, JULY 31, 1904.

We shall read as our text this morning the second to the fifth verses of the first chapter of Proverbs:

To know wisdom and instruction; to perceive the words of understanding; to receive the instruction of wisdom, justice, and judgment, and equity; to give subtilty to the simple, to the young man knowledge and discretion. A wise man will hear, and will increase learning; and a man of understanding shall attain unto wise counsels.

I wish to call the attention of this congregation to the tendency manifested by the greater part of the human race towards a belief in the hereafter, and in the rewards and punishments accompanying that state. One of the great inducements for men and women to live upon this earth a life of uprightness and circumspection has been the hope and confidence that, when this earth life has come to a close and they have been transported into the hereafter, in return for their strivings, their toilings, and their moilings here they would receive a degree of happiness and exist in a state of pleasure beyond the mind of man to conceive or his tongue to describe.

One can not study the philosophy of the Buddhists, of the Confucians, of the Mohammedans, or—to come to those who believe not only in God, but also in Christ—of the Christians, without realizing the truth of this statement. We can read further than this, and, penetrating the misty mazziness of savagery, find that among those who neither know God as he is nor even possess the civilization common to such as the Buddhists and Confucians there oftentimes (more often than not) exists a belief in the hereafter—in its rewards and punishments: they regard those rewards as an inducement to overcome the difficulties of present existence viewed according to their manner of life and according to their knowledge.

When we come to consider the supreme happiness promised in the Christian system of theology to those that follow out the Christ-life, we can not be surprised that men and women feel themselves constrained to live in harmony with its precepts in order that they may be deserving to obtain its promises. It is not necessary to expatiate upon the pleasures and glories outlined by Isaiah in his wonderful prophecies, or by that later Isaiah, John the Revelator, who, according to the Oriental manner of expression, it is true, but nevertheless with power and force, depicted the happiness that should be the lot of those that lived in obedience unto the law of God, as well as the punishment of those that broke that law, not choosing to honor its injunctions. There is no one, professing the name of Christian, and having a hope in the hereafter, who has not made himself acquainted with the prospects of those that live godly in Christ Jesus. We are told by Paul, writing to the Corinthian church, that a day will come when the limitations that at present oppress us shall pass away, when we shall no longer be in the condition of misunderstanding one another, because we shall not see through a glass darkly, but face to face. Therefore, in that day, we shall not be liable to accuse one another of unjustifiable motives, because we shall realize the true inward meaning of one another's actions, and the true intent of one another's hearts. We shall feel then that we have no reason to be suspicious of our brother because what he will seem to be on the surface, so will he be in the heart. We shall feel then that our aspirations after knowledge, our aspirations after closeness of intimacy with God, are no longer limited, because the limitations of earthly knowledge will have passed away, and we shall have arrived at that fullness and completion of divine knowledge that will enable us to comprehend all things and to understand all things. Not only shall we have this wonderful development of intellect or mind; but there will also be that development of spirit that will enable us to be gods, because we shall be partakers of the Almighty God's influence and power. He partakes of—in fact, is the source of—that spirit and power, upon which the ruling of the universe rests, so we in our measure, shall partake of the same, and shall be brought into closer rapport with him than we conceived it to be possible here in life. And along with that we are promised that there shall be no sorrow nor weeping, for God shall wipe away the tears from every eye. We are given to understand that, in so far as we have lived in accordance with God's law, we shall have the chance of resuming that intercourse and acquaintanceship, which has been (and will be in the future) so abruptly broken upon this earth, with those who have gone before us, those of our immediate kin, our flesh and blood whom we have lost. We are promised more. That with all the worthy and admirable characters from the foundation of the earth—aye, with the most admirable character of all, so far as those who have lived this earth-life are concerned, Jesus Christ, we shall have the privilege of association and communion.

The picture as portrayed, then, in the Christian religion is a very beautiful one, and, as I have already said, it is no wonder that man's mind is directed towards it, and that he should desire to live a life of rectitude, in harmony with the precepts delivered by the founder of that religion, so that he may obtain the rewards of happiness and glory promised as the result of living in accord with those precepts.

In fact, the hearts and minds of many of those professing Christianity have been so enrapt by the attractions of this future existence that they have wished to bestow their whole attention upon it, to center their minds so fully upon its promises as to give little attention, or, at any rate, as little attention as possible, to any other consideration. In connection with such an attitude, this inquiry—a rather peculiar one, perhaps—has to be made by us this morning: whether we are justified in so centering our attention upon the glories of the hereafter as to neglect the present.

The answer to the question must be based upon a careful analysis of the situation. Let us consider what we expect life in the hereafter to be. Are we hoping as some of the older theologians were pleased to anticipate, to sit upon the banks of pleasant streams, strumming golden harps, and enjoying a smooth, undisturbed, and uneventful existence? When we are wearied and perplexed by the toils and turmoils of this life, it may be pleasant sometimes to contemplate such a change; we feel that we should be glad to isolate ourselves from all earthly difficulties, rejoicing in the pleasures of a serene career, by rippling waters, amid the sounds of sweet music, and surrounded by all the æsthetic delights of idyllic ease. Is this going to be the real hereafter, though? I trow not. It would be inconsistent with God's own nature that it should be so. Wherever you find the hand of God in nature, wherever you find the revelation of his actions in men's lives, you there find, every time, on every occasion, evidence of development. Therefore it seems to me illogical to presume that the hereafter will be anything else but a scene of constant activity and development. We have to acknowledge that, so far as the present is concerned, active development is essential, if we are to make the most of the nature that has been bestowed upon us. We realize that unless we have active development in this life we stagnate. Yet, are we willing to make such a gulf between the present and the hereafter, as to suppose that all the activity and development must be here, and that none of it must occur in the hereafter? That would be contrary to the fundamental law of nature. Why, one of the old heathen philosophers makes a statement, which translated reads as follows: "Nature does not make a leap." He recognized the impossibility of such a condition. "Nature" (and what is nature but the manifestation of God?) "does not make a leap." It can not. We may not always understand its processes; but nevertheless if we could we should see that there was a development; from one stage of development it passes to the succeeding stage of development. Thus we can not suppose that we are going to leap from a low condition of development to a much higher one (in the beyond) without taking in the connecting stages. The logical mind can not accept the idea of the Almighty breaking his own law of continuity; it is obliged to admit that there must be a continuity between the life of the hereafter and the life of the present, that the development to be attained in the hereafter must follow upon the development achieved here. In other words, the hereafter will be the logical sequence, will be the completion of the development here. Now, granting that premise, this religious paradox follows—I do not wish you to be startled by it: That so far as we are concerned, the present is more important to us than the hereafter. Why? For the reason that I have just stated; that the hereafter should follow as the logical result or sequence or completion of the present, and, consequently, if we do not look after the development of the present, the development of the future will not follow. But if we do look after the development of the present, then the future must follow as a matter of course, taking for granted of course, as we do in this argument, the fundamental conceptions of our religion.

Allowing this, it makes it very desirable for us to continue our analysis further, and to endeavor to understand what are the component elements of our life here. If our future life and its development is to be the logical sequence of our present life here, it is of great importance to us that we should obtain the utmost development here in order that we may have a greater development, a higher condition of development, to continue from in the hereafter. It is important for us, then, to study our life here.

It seems to me that so far as this present life is concerned, it has three aspects. You can see whether you agree with me or not. They are: The spiritual, the physical, and the intellectual, corresponding to the spirit, the body, and the mind. Now in what way are these three aspects regarded in the divine law? If we examine both ancient and modern laws given of God we shall come to the conclusion that his law, both then and now, teaches his people to develop along each of these lines: a spiritual development, a physical development, and an intellectual development. None of us will dispute the spiritual. And I think, when we remember the constant exhortations found in the sacred scripture, and in the book of Doctrine and Covenants, especially in the Word of Wisdom, but not in that alone, that we will not dispute the fact that God also ordains development along physical lines. And if we further refer to them, both ancient and modern scriptures, we must come to the further conclusion that God has ordained, by direct instruction as well as inferentially, that men and women shall develop along intellectual lines.

All form part of the law of God, which is not merely spiritual in its application. It is a law that takes in every aspect of life; if we wish to interpret the word spiritual in a broad sense, so as to include all these varied aspects, I am quite willing. But when we limit the meaning of the word spiritual to what may be termed the purely devotional exercises of religion, then I am at issue. We require not only a development along this line, not only a development of the spiritual side of human nature, but a development of the body, and also of the mind.

I do not think that the condition of the mind is dependent entirely upon the body; but there is no one that has studied the physiology of the body and the psychology of the mind that will not come to the conclusion that the maxim, "Sound mind in a sound body," is one that has a good deal of truth in it. Those of you who have attempted, as I have, to give long hours to mental work and study, will agree with me that at times when our body has been out of proper condition we have been materially hindered in our mental work. So it is with reference to the mental development that we are striving to obtain. We may be able to overcome to a large degree the inherent weaknesses of our body; but we can not help but allow when we have those physical weaknesses, that if we were without them, our intellectual development would be greater, and the mental problems that we have to face more easily solved. The point that I wish to emphasize upon you is, then, that God's law demands from you and from me attention to spirit, to body, and to mind; and that unless we are prepared to take this care of the three component parts of our human individuality, we are found offenders of God's law. And what is the statement made? If I remember rightly it is found in James 2:10: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." I should like to disabuse our minds, if that conception remains in them, of the thought that we are limited to the application of the first principles of the gospel: faith, repentance, baptism, and confirmation of the Holy Spirit; after that attendance at Sabbath and week-day services, the utterance of prayers, the bearing of testimonies, the preaching of sermons, the distribution of tracts, etc., regarding these as composing the whole of our life in God. I deny it. I believe that a man might do all this, and yet not be saved. I believe that he might do all this and yet be out of harmony with God's law. Find me a man that fully realizes his relationship to God, and the responsibility that He has placed upon him, and I will show you one, (it matters not whether he is ignorant in this world's learning, weakly in his physical strength, or undeveloped so far as spiritual knowledge is concerned,) that is endeavoring as fast as he can to remove these hindrances and deficiencies. He may not attain to perfection in this life, but the attempt is there to attain to it. God realizes that such a man is endeavoring to make the most use of his opportunities; and, seeing this attempt to honor the bounties that are given, can not help but respect and add his aid to the efforts of that person, so as to produce the grand result that we understand will be arrived at in the hereafter, viz., perfection.

Now let me call your attention to the word perfection. Its literal meaning is completion. And therefore when you speak of perfection and its attainment, remember that it means attaining the completion of the life that God has given unto us; that under present conditions, we are incomplete spiritually, physically, and mentally, and that we are called upon to do our utmost, by the aid of God, to attain to that completion, and then the promise is ours that, if human weaknesses render our striving more or less ineffective, as we expect it will be in the majority of cases, God will complete the process.

How is it that, in describing the hereafter, the prophets and inspired speakers of old laid emphasis upon the fact that, if we are but faithful to the divine law, the imperfection of our earthly bodies shall be removed, and that we shall have granted unto us perfect bodies? Clearly, their inspired intelligence comprehended that the nearer we bring our bodies to perfection, the more are we honoring God in whom, we understand, is perfection of form. Man, it is stated, was made in God's likeness and was pronounced good. And so it is that the inspired ones of old, as well as of the present, have declared that we, with all our physical defects, of one kind or another, shall once more, if we are faithful to God's law, be uplifted in the hereafter to the same perfection of human form that was granted to the first man, Adam.

Now we can not expect that we are going to have all this done for us if in this life we are not going to take care of the body that God has given us; if we are not going to remember that we have certain laws of health, certain laws of physical decency to observe in our homes, in our bodies. It is necessary for us to endeavor, so far as it lies within our power, (and we know that our power is but limited,) to pay strict heed unto those laws of life with which we are acquainted, in order that we may preserve, in as fit a condition as possible, that human tabernacle which God has condescended to make the home of his Spirit.

The same thing applies to the development of our minds. Is there one present here, who has arrived at the years of understanding, that can conceive that God does not call upon us here, individually, to develop the mind which, no matter in how crude a state its development may be, is the channel through which we are able to understand the gospel?

We are constantly told that "The testimony of the Lord makes wise the simple." We are also told that the way of the Lord is so plain, "that a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein." But he will err therein if he continues a fool. It does not say the wayfaring man shall continue a fool and not err therein. But though he be a fool, a fool so far as the knowledge of the material learning of man is concerned, he need NOT err therein. At the same time if he continues in that path, which I take for the moment as typifying the heavenly path, the path that leads to the eternal hereafter, he must of necessity obtain mental development.

I have heard men and women in the social meetings of the Saints, whose proudest testimony has been, "Brethren and sisters, when I came to this church I could not read or write. I could not even read the good old book for myself; but now, thanks to the Lord, I am able to read the good old Bible; I am able to take the works of the church and read for myself, and see what God has sent unto the people." If this is not education, I will confess that I am puzzled.

I am satisfied that if we were to ask for every hand to be uplifted that was opposed to the idea that we are required, even in our religion, to make mental development, there is not a hand that would be uplifted. Because there is no man that even has the slightest claim to reason that can help but accept the theorem, that in so far as God has ordained that there shall be a development of this individuality, a development of spirit, a development of body, there must be a development of mind along with it. The three should work together. And then when they do work together in their highest form the result is perfection of human life. Now, so far as this question of mental development is concerned, it does not necessarily mean that none can have mental development without going to school. Life itself is a development, an education. It is as possible for a man, who, like the ancient Cato has arrived at eighty years of age, to obtain mental development, (if not in Cato's way, at least in some other way,) as it is for a child of eight or ten years of age. Because of the burden of years it may not be possible for some to develop in the same way as others; but all can obtain a measure of development. God is not so much concerned, perhaps as to where we start, as the progress that we make when we do start. It is the desire and the attempt to develop; so long as he realizes that the intent and purpose are there, he can do the rest of it.

And now let me ask the older people here, those who have gone through their three score years or more, and feel that the mental development they have so often heard talked about is a thing that they do not desire to have much to do with, especially in its form of education as so termed. Let me ask this question, whether, when they are fulfilling their duty towards God, when they are trying to do it before God and their fellow creatures, when they are trying to study the revealments of God's will both in ancient and in present times; every week that they do that, do they not feel that during that week they are better in mind, as well as in spirit. Do you not know that the study of the Bible requires mental development? When you read the prophecies of Isaiah do you arrive by intuition at a knowledge that those prophecies have in many ways been fulfilled? Does it come to you by revelation? God does not reveal in that way as a rule. If his prophecies are there on the one hand, and the information respecting their fulfillment on the other, he expects you to put both together; and while the sources of information are at your disposal God is not going to reveal what you are able to find out for yourself. Such is not his way. The consequence is that even in the study of the holy book there is of necessity, a mental element requisite to the proper understanding of God's relationship to humanity.

I do not wish to dwell upon this topic, as my time is short, but I wish to ask some pertinent questions. The statement has been made right here in town, as well as in many other places, that the acquisition of an educational or mental development is contrary and naturally opposed to the acquisition and retention of the Spirit of God; that when people acquire education they do not get as much of the Spirit of God as they ought to have; the Spirit of God goes out as education comes in. Let me ask you, Does the Holy Spirit of God place a premium upon ignorance? I might ask the question in another way, How is it that in many branches I have been in, where they are not so favored as this branch is, the constant cry is, "We can not get a suitable clerk of the branch. We need somebody that is able to keep the books." You ask Bro. Stebbins what he thinks of the records sent here, and see whether he agrees with education or not. Statements along the same line have been made with reference to branch presidents. One does not need a learned man for branch president, or, for that matter, one who has much book knowledge. But you do want a man who, when placed in that position, will seek to acquire as much knowledge as he can. I am unable to think that there is soundness at all in the idea that the possession of education is opposed to the possession of the Spirit of God. You must remember that mere reading and writing are education. It is a case of degree. And the question is, Where are you going to draw the line? Are you going to say that you should have so much education, and no more? What shall that education be, then? Shall it be the ability to read and not to write? Shall it be the ability to read and write, and not to figure? Shall it be the ability to read, write, and figure, and nothing else? Is it not desirable that we should have a knowledge of history, if for no other purpose than to understand the fulfillment of God's wonderful prophecies? Is it not desirable that we should have a knowledge of our own language in order that we can understand the statements made in the language of the scriptures, and in order that we may present our thoughts in grammatical language? Occasionally, we come across uneducated and ungrammatical speakers evincing much more originality of mind and of thought than some educated persons, yet, as a general rule, give the education and mental development to the man possessing the grander thoughts, and his effectiveness will be vastly increased.

A further thought suggests itself. The teaching of Christ was based upon a sense of the dual responsibility of man towards his Creator and towards his neighbor. In pursuance of the duties arising out of this latter responsibility, we regard it as incumbent upon us to attempt to uplift our neighbor as high as we can. But we can not uplift him without we, first of all, uplift ourselves. And if we are prepared to take a position which infers that ignorance is a pre-requisite to the entertaining of the Spirit of God, then, of course, we must expect that the world, in so far as it is in harmony with us, will remain in a state of ignorance. If we are not prepared to accept that position, but agree that some degree of mental and educational development is advantageous, how wise are we that we should ordain limits to knowledge and set up an artificial barrier separating the education that is desirable from the education that is not. The only line of demarcation that I shall draw is this: The education that is true from the education that is false. Let us have knowledge wherever it is, whether it is in the earth, or above the earth, in the sciences, in history, or wherever it may be. Let us penetrate into the governments of men in order that we may see the development of humanity, and the exposition of God's purposes, even in the uprearing, the fall, and the uprearing again of nations. Let us endeavor to realize, that we as a people, if we are going to build up a community of our own, a Zion of our own, shall have to build it up by working in harmony with natural laws, as God himself works. It is necessary that we should realize this responsibility and develop our respective abilities, so that when Zion is established, (if his people will allow Zion to be established,) it shall have at its command the best thinkers, the best workers, the best liver. Let us endeavor, as I have exhorted, to develop body, mind, and spirit, so as to be in accord with Christ and his holy law; for as James says, (I will recall it to you again,) "whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

God's law covers the whole of our life. There is no portion which it does not cover, even in temporal concerns. The saints of Paul's time were enjoined by him to work faithfully, to endeavor to fulfill the righteous injunctions of masters, "not with eye-service as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart, fearing God. And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men; knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of inheritance: for ye serve the Lord Christ. But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done; and there is no respect of persons."—Colossians 3: 22-25. (Also see Titus 2: 9, 10; and Ephesians 6: 5-8.) The connection between our secular duties and our heavenly reward is a closer one than we sometimes imagine.

Our life in Christ is our life in the world. We live here a life that calls for attention to the every-day affairs of life, for honesty, for integrity, for development spiritually, physically, and mentally—in every aspect of our humanity; and as we daily progress in this direction, the time will surely come when, step by step, we shall have risen from one development to another, and, finally, shall have attained to that glorious harmony, when in a far more complete sense than we understand now, we shall be in Christ, and Christ in us, and both in God the Father.

POLYGAMY NOT A WHITE MAN'S VICE.

[BY EX-ATTACHE.]

That polygamy exercises a debasing and brutalizing influence has been recognized since the most ancient times, as it was on this account that a plurality of wives was so strictly forbidden by the laws of heathen Rome hundreds of years before the Christian era. While, therefore, the moral and material welfare of the commonwealth demands that everything possible should be done to arrest its pernicious growth on American soil, and no valid excuse whatsoever can be found for the adoption of such doctrines as those of Mormonism by people who have enjoyed the advantages of American birth and education, yet there are several points bearing upon the subject that are deserving of attention just at the present moment, when the question of the admission of Reed Smoot to the Senate of the United States is exciting so much discussion and such widespread interest.

During the war of 1870 the people of Algeria refrained from taking advantage of Germany's victories to recover their freedom from France's rule which had at times been characterized by much severity. On the restoration of peace and the constitution of a republican form of government at Paris, it was resolved to reward Algeria's loyalty by granting to her inhabitants the rights and prerogatives of French citizenship. This, however, could only be done on the condition that the people conformed to the laws of France, which are quite as strict as those of all other civilized countries on the subject of polygamy. Only the Jewish element, which in Algeria, as in other Mohammedan countries of the Orient, was patriarchal in its matrimonial relations, agreed to this stipulation, and received in consequence the full franchise of French citizens, which they hold to this day, whereas the Moslem population, which is ten times as large, and which declined to give up its plurality of wives, was refused civic rights.

Sooner than give way on the subject the government of the republic, although still staggering from the crushing disasters of the war with Germany, preferred to confront the most fierce and extensive native insurrection that has ever taken place in Algeria, and which was only suppressed after the expenditure of an immense amount of blood and of treasure. It was the Mohammedans fighting for the same franchise and rights that had been accorded to the Jews of Algeria, the French government preferring to resort to arms rather than to yield in a matter where principle was concerned, and to confer the prerogatives of citizenship upon people who would not conform to the French laws on the subject of polygamy.

It is a matter of history that after a sanguinary campaign, which lasted months, the insurgents were finally beaten, and to this day the entire Moslem population, numbering about four million, remains without representation in the French legislature, and without any voice in the affairs of the French nation, the electorate of the constituencies into which Algeria is divided being restricted almost exclusively to about four hundred thousand Jews, whose families in the majority of cases have made their homes in Africa for hundreds of years past.

POLYGAMY IN CHRISTIAN EUROPE.

Polygamy is tolerated in several Christian countries in Europe. This is, however, due to exceptional causes. Thus it is permitted by the government of Austria-Hungary in the two provinces of Herzegovina and Bosnia, which theoretically form part and parcel of the Ottoman Empire, and which were confided by the congress of Berlin of 1878 to the administration of Francis Joseph with the object of remedying the chaotic conditions resulting from Turkish misrule, which had, indeed, converted that particular portion of Southeastern Europe into a veritable storm-center. The provinces in question are inhabited to-day by a large and prosperous Mohammedan population. But, although the Austrian governor-general may occasionally consult the principal Moslem landowners and ecclesiastical dignitaries, yet the people have no legislative representation whatsoever, nor any means of influencing in the slightest degree the government.

In Bulgaria, of course, it is different. Its sovereign, though a Christian prince, is vassal to the suzerainty of the sultan. Indeed, as far as the southern portion of his dominions is concerned, he stands in the relation of a governor-general to the sublime porte. It is therefore not altogether surprising that his lieges—all of them, like himself, subject to the suzerainty of the padishah—should enjoy full rights of franchise irrespective to any question of faith or polygamy. In fact, there are quite a large number of Moslems, including several full-fledged pashas in the sobranje or national parliament at Sofia who have the full number of wives allowed by the prophet, Mahomet, and who maintain full-fledged seraglios.

Nor does the fact of being a Moslem, and being blessed with several consorts, constitute any disqualification in Greece from voting at parliamentary elections, or from occupying a seat in the boule or national legislature at Athens. It must be remembered, however, that less than a hundred years have elapsed since that portion of Europe now ruled by the scepter of King George formed part and parcel of the empire of the sultan.

MANY IN RUSSIAN EMPIRE.

Russia has a large Mohammedan population, numbering many millions of followers of the prophet, in her European as well as Asiatic provinces, and permits them to practice without let or hindrance a polygamy which her authorities would be quick to punish with severity among any of the Christian or Jewish subjects of the czar. It is likewise tolerated on the part of the natives, who have no legislative representation, and none of the rights of citizenship, by the British Government in India and in other of her Asiatic and African dependencies; by Germany, Italy, Portugal, and King Leopold in their African possessions, and by Queen Wilhelmina in the Dutch Indies. And while I can not recall any other penalty than that of severe ostracism to have been meted out to those European renegades in the Orient who have adopted along with the Moslem faith the customs of the latter in the matter of plurality of wives, yet there is no doubt in my mind that any ordinary white citizen settled in the African or Asiatic colonies who was to believe himself warranted by the polygamous conditions of the native life around him to marry a second wife before having been freed either by death or divorce from the first would speedily find out his mistake and render himself liable to the pains and penalties reserved for the crime of bigamy.

CAN NOT SUPPRESS IN COLONIES.

That polygamy should be allowed by civilized and Christian powers among the native inhabitants of their colonies will doubtless be condemned by those who are unaware of the extent to which it has prevailed for centuries among the African and Asiatic races, and how utterly hopeless it is to dream of suppressing by compulsion and in any other way than by conversion to Christianity, by force of example, and by gradual discouragement, an institution which has since ages past constituted the basis of the entire fabric of the social system in the Orient and in the Dark Continent.

Nor is it only the governments that have been obliged to display in the colonies a tolerance in the matter that has not always been understood at home. Several of the great missionary societies have been forced in the past to adopt a similar policy. Thus in 1834, at the great congress held at Calcutta of the American Presbyterian, the London, the Church Missionary, and the Baptist Missionary societies, it was, after a long discussion and mature deliberation, agreed that "if a convert before becoming a Christian had married more wives than one he shall be permitted to keep them all, though he shall not be eligible to any office in the church. In no other case is polygamy to be tolerated among Christians." (Brown, History of Missions, vol. 3, pp. 365, 366.) Doctor Colenso, the celebrated Church of England bishop, who spent the last thirty years of his life busily engaged in missionary work in South Africa, particularly among the Zulus, held analogous views, and permitted native polygamists to retain their wives after baptism, though forbidding them to add to their number subsequent to their conversion to Christianity. Nor are these instances of ecclesiastical tolerance dictated by motives of expediency without precedent in the Protestant as well as in the Catholic churches.

POPE SANCTIONED ONE CASE.

Every student of history will recall how Martin Luther, the father of the Reformation, gave permission to his friend, Landgrave Philip of Hesse, to marry a second wife during the lifetime of his first consort, while in the cathedral of the German city of Erfurt there is the ancient tomb of a Count Gleichen of the once sovereign house of Hohenlohe, who received from the Catholic Church the privilege of being married to and living with two wives at the same time. The Count had been a crusader, and, having been taken prisoner, was set at liberty by the Saracen sultan's daughter on the condition that he would take her with him in his flight and marry her according to the rites of his own religion. Beggars can not be choosers, so the Count consented, and on reaching Europe went straight to Rome to consult with the pope as to what he was to do, having already a wife in Germany. The holy father, after due consideration, decided that the Count must fulfill his pledges, all the more as the Turkish princess had promised to become a Christian if the Count married her. The union was celebrated by the pontiff in person at Rome, and together the couple proceeded to Germany, where the German countess, realizing that but for the Saracen princess she would never have seen her beloved husband again, consented to the tripartite union sanctioned by the pope, the three living happily ever afterwards, and on their death being laid to rest in the Erfurt cathedral in the same tomb on which the Count is represented kneeling between his two wives.

No less than six foreign monarchs, with whom the United States and other Christian great powers maintain diplomatic relations, accrediting ministers plenipotentiary to their course, practice polygamy. They are the Moslem sultan of Turkey and shah of Persia, the Buddhist king of Siam, the Shintoist mikado, the Confucian emperor of China, and the emperor of Corea. True, the rulers of Japan, Siam, and China have each but one wife who figures officially as empress or queen, but as they maintain large seraglios, the children born to them by the inmates of which are recognized as legitimate, and as princes and princesses of the blood, they can not be regarded as monogamous. So far as I am aware, none of these oriental potentates has ever been represented abroad by diplomats possessed of more than one wife. At any rate, if the envoys had others they left them at home from a feeling of regard for occidental prejudices, and so far, we have been spared in Western capitals the spectacle of a whole bevy of ambassadors claiming one ambassador as husband and representing a single power.

The late Queen Victoria, although sovereign of the greatest Moslem empire of the universe—namely, that of India, and having Mohammedans among the members of her household, was keenly alive to the embarrassment that might arise from the presence of polygamous envoys at the court of St. James, and for the last sixty years or more the Turkish padishah, who claims, as caliph, spiritual supremacy over the entire Mohammedan world, has been represented in London by a Christian.—Chicago Tribune, March 27, 1904.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Program for September Meetings of the Daughters of Zion.

THEME, HOME TRAINING.

Hymn No. 80, Saints Hymnal; roll-call of members; response, a quotation from the Scriptures or elsewhere referring to honor; five minute paper, "Illustrations of the example of parents in honor"; discussion of papers from Home Column with the aid of questions given below (preparation for answering these questions to be made at home); business; Hymn No. 23; dismissal prayer.

Questions on papers, "Half hours with parents" (to follow in Home Column):

Does the term honor always convey the same meaning? What has often regulated the meaning of the term? What should regulate our standard of honor? What is Webster's definition of the term? Where should children be taught the principles of honor?

Are children likely to acquire "a nice sense of what is right," if their home-training is neglected? How may a "strict sense of duty" become an anchor to the soul? If not properly directed, what evil trait of character may take the place of self-respect? What will self-respect enable one to overcome?

Can you reproduce the illustration given in the reading? Of what can not one be guilty who has self-respect? What are some of the demands that self-respect makes upon us? What is self-respect, according to one writer? What virtue necessary to self-respect, is given a prominent place in the Jewish Talmud, and in the laws given to Israel?

What do we mean when we speak of dignity as a part of honor? Can one be honorable if he is not loyal to his duty or obligations to others? Does a child readily recognize these obligations? Will the teaching of these by precept alone suffice? With what should we endeavor to fill the minds of our children while young? What was Saul's admonition in Philipians, chapter 4, verse 8?

TRAINING A CHILD IN HONOR.

"Honor and shame from no condition rise, Act well your part, there all the honor lies."—Young.

"Act well your part." Yes, but what is this part? What is the place which you wish your child to take in the world and what is the part you would have him act? For here, as in the solution of every problem, the answering of every question of right and wrong, it becomes absolutely necessary that we have a standard to which our actions may be referred and by which they may be judged. Honor is a term which has been understood as conveying a very different meaning when used by different peoples in different ages of the world's history.

To illustrate: It has not been so very many years since in the Southern States of our own land it was considered honorable to challenge and fight to the death any man who had in any way insulted or wronged one, and many injuries, it was held, could be atoned for only by shedding with one's own hand the blood of the person who had insulted or injured one. And this code of honor, as it was called, was taught to Southern boys from their earliest years. Indeed, without such teaching, combined with practice, it is safe to say such a relic of barbarism could hardly have existed in the eighteenth century and have been practiced as it was by those calling themselves Christians. But we are assuming that you wish your boys and girls to take the place of honorable men and women in the world, acting well their part and measuring their actions by the only infallible standard of right and wrong, the word of God.

Honor, as defined by Webster, embraces self-respect, dignity, fidelity, virtue, chastity; a nice sense of duty. And, parents, will you listen to us when we assert: In order that your children should go out into the world fully equipped to take their part with the honorable men and women who to-day are fighting the Lord's battle of truth and right, they must be trained in the home in every and each one of these principles, both by precept and example; for without such training they can not acquire that "nice sense of what is right" and more especially will they fail in governing their actions by a strict sense of duty. And it is this strict sense of duty which becomes a very anchor to the soul in every hour of trial and temptation.

We say they must have this training in the home and we base our positive assertion upon the fact that so delicate and fine are many of the shadings at the beginning between that which is right and that which is wrong that young, untried feet will be just as apt to take the one path as the other. Especially will this be the case when strong inclination, unrestrained by a disciplined will, leads them to the wrong.

Take, for instance, the first element of honor as given by Webster, namely, self-respect. In the beginning, how closely this virtue blends with traits of character which are not virtues, but on the contrary if encouraged, develop into inordinate self-esteem or vanity. And yet, wisely taught and wisely directed, the child or man possessing in himself the element of self-respect will not only have a safeguard against vanity, but will have the stamina which will enable him to endure with equanimity the unjust criticism, slights and neglects of others, for however much he may desire and value the good opinion and respect of others, he values his own self-respect more, and cultivating this by a pure and noble life he patiently bides his time, knowing that the respect of others must in time surely come to him who truly respects himself.

Courage, energy, fortitude, and self-control are all underlying virtues of self-respect. Let us teach our children that it is a good thing to have the respect of all good men, but it is far better to live and die without it, than to forfeit their own self-respect to gain it. Reputation is what I seem to be to others; character is what I really am. If I am worthy of my own respect I will not feel the slights or indifference of others, even when they are intended, as I should if I were wanting in respect for myself, and above all, I will have too much sincere respect for myself to accept slights or insinuations which perhaps never were intended for me and which, if intended, have failed of their mark, because I have no vanity to wound.

In a little volume entitled Ethics for the Young, the author, under the heading of self-respect, cites a very apt illustration taken from a French work, Le petit Chose, by the famous French writer, Alphonse Daudet, to show how self-respect enables even a child or youth to meet and overcome envy and jealousy, two of the worst and most powerful enemies that man or child has to encounter in this life. In this volume, you must bear in mind, the author is telling the story of his own boyhood. "The hero of the story is a poor boy who lived in the city of Lyons, in France. He obtained an opportunity to attend, without expense, a school made up mostly of boys from rich families. He went wearing a blouse, such as is often worn by the poorer men and boys of France. When he entered the schoolroom, his first glance showed that his was the only blouse there. He saw the boys tittering and from every side he heard whispered, 'He has come in a blouse!' As days went on even the master was mean enough to take part against him because he was poor. When he spoke to him it was 'Come here, What's-your-name,' or 'What are you about, What's-your-name?' Another boy might have become discouraged, envious and jealous and very unhappy. But see what this boy who respected himself did. He said to himself, 'If I am to take a position in this school I must work twice as hard as the other boys'; this he did. Later when he was a great man, we may imagine with what pleasure and pride he placed, as the title of the book which was the story of his life, the words which the master had so often addressed to him in contempt. The title we may translate freely into 'Little What's-his-name.'"

May we not call self-respect a proper kind of pride? The man or boy who properly respects himself can not do a mean act; hence self-respect becomes a part and that, too, an important part of honor.

But just here and before we leave this first definition of honor, let us not forget that other definition: "A nice sense of what is right," etc. Self-respect makes many demands upon the individual. Among these is what Booker T. Washington calls "the gospel of personal cleanliness." It tolerates no slovenly habits either in person, personal belongings, or personal surroundings. If parents only realized the intimate relation existing between the inward and the outward, with how much greater care would children be trained in habits of personal cleanliness and in careful attention to all those little courtesies of life which mean so much to the self-respecting man or woman, because they can not be violated without interfering with the rights and happiness of others. The parent who would train his child in honor (through self-respect), can not allow his child to form habits or constantly indulge in actions which are offensive to others because they really trespass upon the feelings and rights of others. Want of personal cleanliness, unkempt hair, dirty hands, uncleaned finger-nails, bad manners—especially at the table, undue handling of the personal belongings of others; in short, all undue familiarity with either the person or possessions of another, is an offense against self-respect and consequently against honor. It is possible we are putting this in a strong light, but is it not true? Children are not expected to know these things until wise and thoughtful parents have instructed them.

Self-respect, the first definition of honor, is, in the words of another, "The enemy of all the vices and the encourager of all the virtues, as it is the heart and soul of manliness." In the Jewish Talmud cleanliness is placed on the list of virtues next to godliness and the laws given to ancient Israel in regard to personal cleanliness have never yet been excelled, if indeed they have been equaled, by any modern sanitary commission. May we not safely infer from this the high estimate God himself places upon this virtue? We have seen how it becomes a part of honor, being a part of self-respect, and if we have used carefully our powers of observation we have not failed to see that it demands the respect of others as well as our own. Indeed, the time has passed when the young man or woman not scrupulously neat in personal appearance need expect to obtain or even be eligible to places of trust and preferment.

The Sunday-School Lesson for August 14, 1904.

THE THEME OF THE LESSON.

The theme of the lesson for next Sunday is consecration to the service of God. The temple of the Jews in Jerusalem was consecrated to the worship of Jehovah. It was a type of the living temple of God, his consecrated people.

It was a beautiful and holy house; so were the people who worshiped in it required to be beautiful and holy in spirit.

Its interior was of pure gold; so were the people who worshiped in it required to become purified in heart as gold that is tried in the fire.

On the golden altar in the temple was burned sweet incense; and Israel was required to offer to God the incense of prayer and praise and thanksgiving.

Out in the court, on an altar of brass, were offered sacrifices that were types of the sacrifice of the Lamb of God; and Israel was taught that the spiritual sacrifices God required of them were contrition and humility of heart and obedience to the divine law.

THE TEMPLE SERVICE

was intended to teach the things mentioned above and many other things we can not refer to in so brief an article.

It was a series of object-lessons intended to impress principles of truth upon the minds of those who conform to the requirements of the service.

The mistake made by the great majority of the people of Israel was in fastening their attention upon the material objects rather than in perceiving the underlying principles in the service. They fancied themselves justified by the doing of the outward ordinances; they made their worship the mechanical performance of the things prescribed by the law; they consecrated their temple to Jehovah; they consecrated of their lambs, their wine, oil, and grain; they tithed themselves scrupulously in these material things, but they did not consecrate themselves in heart, and it is the love of our hearts that makes our outward service acceptable to God.

THE LORD REPROVED ISRAEL

through Isaiah, as we may read in the first chapter of his writings. He said to them: "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord; I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats.

"When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I can not away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting. Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth; they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them."

From the remainder of the chapter, we gather that, though Israel was thus zealous in observing the outward forms of religion, they were not in heart what the Lord required them to be; they were not consecrated in spirit. They were evil in their deeds; they were covetous for wealth; they were unjust in their treatment of the helpless, as the widows and orphans. It was these things that made their service displeasing to God.

JESUS WARNED THE JEWS

of his day that they were under condemnation. He said they paid tithes of mint, anise, and cummin, and omitted the weightier things of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith. And he added, "These ought ye to have done, and not leave the other undone."

We understand from this that the condemnation of the Jews consisted in that which they left undone. It was right for them to tithe themselves as scrupulously as they did of material things, but they should have been so consecrated in spirit to the service of God and their fellow men that they would have exercised faith in God and justice and mercy toward men.

THE SAINTS OF MACEDONIA

furnish us an example of true consecration to God and man. Paul tells of them in 2 Corinthians 8: 5, that those people upon embracing the gospel, first gave their own selves to the Lord, and afterwards they gave of their temporal possessions according to the will of God.

GOD REQUIRES OF US

something more than outward conformance to the service of the church and the offering of material things, though he does require those things.

We read in Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7, "Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days; and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land."

When the temple at Jerusalem was dedicated to God, he accepted it, upon the condition that his people should obey his law. When they utterly failed to do this, the temple was destroyed. When the hearts of the people were turned from him, the outward forms of worship were of no worth.

And though we should offer ourselves to the Lord in the outward act of baptism, though we should attend the services of the church, and should do the material things that pertain to membership in the church, we must be consecrated to him in spirit or we can not be to him a living temple into which his Holy Spirit will enter and bring the light of wisdom.

The law to us is as it was to ancient Israel, that we shall love the Lord our God, and man, our brother. If we are the consecrated people of God, we are striving to do this.

If this love to God and man is in our hearts, it will not fail to find expression in the outward works required by the law of God.

TEACHERS.

Was it possible for you to attend teachers' meeting this week?
Did you go?
Have you prepared your lesson at home?

If not, have you a stated time when you intend to do so?
Do the members of your class study their lessons at home?
Do you ever talk to them about doing so?

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL IS ONLY A HELPER.

The burden of the teaching and training of the children of the church must necessarily rest upon the shoulders of the parents. The Sunday-school and Religio can only supplement the work of the home. They can not do what should be done there.

The Sunday-school has the children only once a week and but for a short time then, but the fathers and mothers have them under their care day after day and night after night. They have the greater opportunities and, therefore, the greater responsibilities with regard to the religious teaching of their children.

THE CLASS-BOOK.

We were interested a few weeks ago to see some discussion given to the use of the much misused or unused class-book, and, because of its relation to the Sunday-school lesson, we mention the subject again.

Too many teachers use the book merely to record the fact of attendance or absence, but it should record the marks given for conduct and lessons as well as those given for attendance.

The book should be carefully marked every Sunday; at the end of the quarter, it should be footed up, and promotions should not be made without reference to what this book records.

There is a teacher who grades her class every quarter according to the rank their marks entitle them to.

If the class-book be regularly and carefully marked, the tendency of the class will be toward good grades.

Teachers, do not neglect to use your class-book. Let the scholars see you mark them, and when you do not give them perfect marks explain to them why you can not do so. They will thus learn what to avoid.

The lessons taught in a Sunday-school are likely to be in harmony with the general order or disorder of the school. It is the duty of the officers of the school and of the teachers as well to study how to maintain the best order in their schoolroom. Good lessons usually accompany good order.

ANNA SALYARDS.

Order in the Class.

[The following clippings are from the World Evangel and are some very nicely pointed paragraphs on the subject of order in the class. It will be interesting to read and reread. Note that the points most strongly emphasized are that employment and interest is the best remedy for disorder or lack of order. Also another point nicely made is that silence is not necessarily order, or that willing obedience is the obedience necessary to good order.—ED.]

Every one recognizes that order in the class is essential to helpful teaching, though sometimes sadly lacking. Occasionally classes remind us of the chaotic condition of things which existed before government was perfected, when self-control was yet a thing of the future, and for the time being every man's hand was against his neighbor. In every possible way the children then seemed to have the determined purpose of doing the one thing the teacher has requested them not to do. They do not care for the teacher, nor for each other; there is no binding together of childish aims and purposes. They are in Sunday-school, in such a class, because they "have to be."

Of course there are often extenuating circumstances, but frequently the spirit of anarchy in the class is the teacher's fault. We see this extreme lack of government less in Sunday-school than in schoolrooms during the week, because more children are compelled to go through the daily routine of secular study than are required to attend Sunday-school.

Often children are disorderly simply because no opportunity has been given them to expend their self-activity; their nerve force has accumulated, with no outlet, until an explosion is inevitable.

On the other hand there may be a dead inactivity, a listless silence, which some inexperienced teacher may mistake for order; but so long as the very nature of consciousness is motor, the best order must be the result of self-activity directed rather than merely repressed.

Order includes obedience to law, expressed or understood, and is the result of coöperation on the part of both teacher and pupil.

The child is "concrete minded," and concrete illustrations awaken his interest and rivet his attention. The little child's attention is flitting, and is only held by the strength of the impression or the attractiveness of the object presented.

Physiologists tell us that a little child under six years of age does not have and can not have an abstract idea; therefore when we give him the truth in a concrete form, the spirit of which he can understand and apply, we are following a law of the child's nature, substituting "interest for compulsion." With older children, the will comes into play; what seems willfulness on the part of the small child is often really a lack of will.

NOT MERELY REPRESSION.

It is the willing obedience, the chosen order, which is of value in character building, though we may have order in a way similar to that in which a child tamed a fly. After pulling off all the legs and wings the child exclaimed, as the fly lay still, robbed of its self-activity, "Just see how tame it is!"

ORDER BEFORE CLASS.

From the time that she enters the Sunday-school room the primary teacher should see that the children are properly occupied. Romping children can be easily quieted with picture-books, and will often be delighted to discover pictures illustrating the line of thought of the previous Sunday's lesson. These books of pictures from old magazines pasted on colored cambric can be made on Sunday afternoons at their homes by the larger children, for the especial use of the early comers to the primary class.

A box of shells or different seeds to be sorted is another help in keeping the children orderly and interested before the class has assembled; and other children may see that the chairs are arranged, the papers folded, the pictures pinned on the wall for that Sunday's illustrations, and may help in various ways.

HOW TO PREVENT DISORDER.

Keep the children busy. It is much easier to prevent disorder than to restore order when it has once been lost, and it is prevented when the children are kept rightly occupied. The child must do something; if you do not occupy his attention he will find something to do, it may be kicking on the floor, singing to himself, pinching his neighbor, or pulling the hair of the child in front. The right occupation of the child's activities before class, an orderly initiative, is a great help in preventing disorder.

VARY THE PROGRAM.

Do not have every lesson begin in the same way; monotony is fatal to the child's interest. Dodd voices the child sentiment in not being interested in "what he has always knowed." Let the opening exercises be varied with pictures, songs, and stories, all strengthening the thought of the lesson for the day. When old songs and stories and pictures are used, frequently the child's attention can be called to an added meaning or new significance in them that he missed at first.

VENTILATION.

Plenty of fresh air is a great help in all church or Sunday-school work. See that the children have a well-ventilated, well-lighted room. If for any cause in winter the primary room becomes overheated and unavoidably close and hot, the windows may be thrown open while the children march around the room singing a marching song, and perhaps keeping time with their hands by clapping.

PHYSICAL COMFORT.

Physical weariness is fatal to attention or order. If we place little children in large chairs, can we blame them for kicking their swinging feet against the rounds? The chairs and benches should be small enough for the children's feet to touch the floor; consideration should be had for the children's bodies as well as for their minds.

MUSIC A FACTOR IN RESTORING ORDER.

When the class has become restless, it is frequently wise to have all the children rise and silently take some rhythmical exercise to music which they are accustomed to associate with that particular movement. The exercises may illustrate the falling rain, or the drifting leaves, or the flying birds; and the class will become soothed by the music, rested by the physical exercise, unified by the concerted movement.

SOMETIMES IGNORE.

It is sometimes wise to ignore a small disorder, at the same time increasing the interest of the work in hand so as to hold the rest of the class and attract even the culprit.

THE TEACHER.

The teacher must be ever on the alert, and as Froebel puts it, "Firm yet yielding, leading and following." She must be gentle, and at the same time cause the children to feel her poise and her reserve force.

Letter Department.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, July 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: It has been a long while since we wrote you, but we have not been idle. What with weddings, funerals, and street preaching we have kept quite busy. Let us see. The last two weddings,—no, three weddings, were—one at Plain City, April 6, Bro. Albert Coy to a Miss — (I have really forgotten her maiden name but it's Coy now all right); Union Fort, April 20, Bro. Charles Wardle to Miss Elizabeth Smith; and Ogden, June 15, where Bro. Guy L. M. Brokaw and Sr. May Hardy were made one. I shall not enumerate all the funerals in the interim as some of the death notices have been sent to you and there is always more pleasure in reading of a wedding. However, there are two that I do wish to mention. One is the funeral of Willie Stone at Ogden, Utah. This was June 16, 1904. While we were at the wedding of Bro. Brokaw, at the home of Bro. and Sr. Hardy, we were notified that we were wanted to preach the funeral sermon the next day for Willie Stone, son of Sr. Stone of Ogden. So we stayed over the next day and at what is known as the Mound Lot Ward house took part with two other speakers in the funeral services. The father of the young man is a member of the dominant faith here, while Sr. Stone is a member of our Ogden Branch. The young man, I think, held membership with neither church. The circumstances of his demise were such as to make the grief of his parents more than usually acute. Sr. Stone feels that her cup of grief "runneth over." Pray for her. The other funeral that we wish to mention is that of Mr. Edward J. Evans, of Malad City, Idaho. Many of our people will remember him as one of the sturdy pioneers of Malad City and one of the early members of the Reorganization there. For many years he was one of the working ones there, then came a separation from the body. This he has always held might have been avoided, but was one of the pieces of hasty work that in years past have sometimes obtained among some of our branches. He never left the faith and his many friends and neighbors who assembled at the funeral held at Malad City, July 16, 1904, bore ample testimony of the esteem that they had learned to bear for him. His death, which occurred July 14, was (partly at least) the result of an injury received by being jammed, or bruised by a horse or span of horses that he was leading to water. He leaves a wife and five children who mourn the loss of a good husband and father.

We have been holding the usual number of street services here, with good interest. In addition to this we have, by courtesy of Bishop Barton, held two services in the Nineteenth Ward meeting-house here. "The succession in the presidency" was our theme, and we were replied to by Judge Tanner of this city. As to the details of these meetings and points made, we will leave others to write. We will only say that it seemed to us that those who were really looking for truth could see the consistency of our position and the claims of the Reorganization. We think good was done for our cause. At present our son, Charley, is convalescing from an attack of fever and we (Bro. Swenson and I) expect to start on the morrow for a trip to Brigham City and back, speaking in the streets of the towns between here and there, returning in time for our reunion which will convene here the last Saturday in August and continue until the first Sunday in September.

As ever in the cause of Zion,

A. M. CHASE.

HUBBARD, Iowa, July 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: With your permission I will endeavor to give an account of myself, not that I have anything of special interest to present, but thoughts and reflections are sometimes caused by what we hear and see around us, and sometimes we feel like giving expression to them either verbally or written.

The experiences of missionary life are so varied and multiplied that one is naturally led to wonder, what will be the next? After a week's stay at Nevada, associated with my worthy colaborer, N. V. Sheldon, in tent work, I left Brn. Sheldon and Christy with the tent, and proceeded to Boone. Upon my arrival, I was requested to speak on the following Sunday, at the Young Men's Christian Association building. But the secretary, who had the building in charge, desired of me to state the subject upon which I would speak, in order that he might announce it. Accordingly I stated that I would speak on "The final destiny of men." This he objected to, stating that it was contrary to their rules to speak on anything which might conflict with the ideas and opinions of others, and this would necessarily bring about a conflict. He also stated that he wanted no doctrine preached, and when I asked him what he understood by the term "doctrine" I got this very intelligent (?) answer: "Anything that conflicts with the ideas of others." After somewhat hastily considering the prescribed bounds and limitations, I told him that I would prefer not to speak under such restrictions; but as that did not seem to satisfy him, I promised to consider the matter and let him know the following day. I concluded to try and so informed him and in the concluding remarks of my sermon on Sunday, I took occasion to call their attention to the fact that salvation was promised only on conditions of keeping God's commandments, and cited several passages as proofs, including this: "Whoso transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God," to which I called special attention. As far as I was able to learn it was well received, and many came to me and expressed their appreciation. I understand this was the first time any of our elders were ever permitted to speak there. After doing some labor in and around Boone, I went to Eagle Grove, endeavoring also there to "preach Christ and him crucified." While there I assisted the Saints in papering and fixing up their church building, located at Head Grove, six miles from town, after which the Saints and friends met in a social way one evening to partake of ice cream and cake, served by the sisters at ten cents per dish in order to raise funds to defray the expense incurred in the repair of the house. The social was well attended, both by members and nonmembers, and a sufficient amount was raised to defray all expenses with a small balance on hand. Some are very near the kingdom there, and I had hoped to be able to bring them in while there; had performed considerable labor with them occasionally for two or three years, and as they are of my own nationality I was particularly anxious, for the reason that they might assist the work in our native land, but think it only a question of time ere they will enter, as they had had under consideration the blessing of their children, four in number.

Taking our leave of the noble Saints and friends there, we came to Radcliff, where resides old Bro. Odin Jacobs, whom many of the Illinois Saints will remember. He is quite feeble, not able to be out of his bed much of the time, but having a bright hope for the future, which seems to be very consoling to him. I also visited his daughter, Mrs. Ivorson. She is not in the church, but believes it with all her heart, and is only waiting to get the consent of her husband, who is quite popular in all town and church movements and is mayor of the town, and to all appearances a noble man, though somewhat opposed to our work.

While there I called upon the several pastors of the town with the view of securing a church building for holding services, which in every case resulted in a refusal. And as there was no other suitable building in town I made my stay short,—just one day. This is what is termed “freedom of speech” and “religious liberty” in this the land of the free and the home of the brave. Yes, Bro. Editor, it is termed so, but where do we find this much boasted of freedom? They (I mean the several ministers for Christ, so called) virtually say, if not in words, they do by their actions: My friends, so far as we are concerned, there is no freedom of speech for you, and so far as my power and influence goes you shall not be permitted to speak. Suppose all would adopt this same motto, wherein would our freedom consist? I am glad, yes, proud I might say, that we stand upon a broader platform than that, that our churches are open, that we are not afraid of having our faith investigated, but rather court investigation; that we can say to the world: “Come, let us reason together,” let the light come in, instead of saying as do others: “Stay out, we don’t want any more light.”

East of Radcliff about four miles lives Mr. Lage and family, who will be remembered by many of our Lamoni readers, with whom I am at present visiting on my way to Tama County. While at his place last year I made an effort to get a church building in Hubbard, but was refused, but secured a country schoolhouse. After going three evenings in succession, with no turnout, we concluded to adopt the advice of the Savior, “if they will not receive you in one place, go to another.” Many hindrances are placed in the way of those who are trying to break up new ground, hence I can fully indorse the sentiments as expressed by Bro. I. N. White in reference to reporting. The present method of reporting is inadequate to do justice to all under the varied conditions under which they labor. It would naturally be judged by those not acquainted with missionary work nor conditions under which they labor, that the man who has preached the most sermons is the one who has done the most work, while others who are compelled because of circumstances to do a good deal of their preaching in a private way to the “ones” and “twos” and sit down to it, without due formality, and hence are not able to report such, have not done much, because there is nothing on the record to show for it. Or, if one has to canvass a town all over trying to secure a building and then be refused by all, there is no column on report blanks to report such work, hence I fail to see how any one system of reporting will do justice to all. But rather let each man stand or fall upon his merits and he that is “accounted worthy to stand” let him stand.

While I am at the desk I desire to refer to one thing to which my attention has lately been called by one not of our church, but who believes the work to be true, and is a noble-hearted woman and would be an honor to the cause of Christ. She said: “I attended a conference once (naming the place) of your church but oh how disappointed I was. My heart fairly sunk within me, when I saw all the style and worldliness there. I had gone hoping to have a good time and enjoy the manifestations of the gifts of the Spirit. But no, there were none there, and I did not wonder when I saw the style and worldliness. I believe that is one reason that there is not the spirituality in the church that there used to be.”

This is the statement of one who would like to come in. Saints, think over it. Let us not prevent the honest from coming in, by our pride and worldliness. It brought condemnation and destruction from the Almighty anciently; it will bring it now, unless we repent of it. We can not serve God and mammon.

“Beware of pride, lest ye become as the Nephites of old.”—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 9.

“Nevertheless thou hast seen great sorrow, for thou hast rejected me many times because of pride, and the cares of the world.”—39: 3.

“Therefore cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and light-mindedness, and from all your wicked doings.”—85: 37.

“Behold, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with many who are in the church at Kirtland, for they do not forsake their sins, and their wicked ways, the pride of their hearts, and their covetousness, and all their detestable things, and observe the words of wisdom and eternal life which I have given unto them.”—95: 4.

These are some of the things with which God has been displeased in all ages and condemned the people who were guilty, and did not repent. Will he condone and overlook such now? Is it not rather a cause of spiritual death in the land? Let us therefore beware lest we become as they of old. Rather let us become “as obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance.”—1 Peter 1: 14. Let us put on our beautiful garments, the robes of righteousness, the “fine linen clean and white,” and when thus arrayed we are ready to meet the bridegroom and enter into the marriage of the Lamb. Are we ready?

In hope,

S. K. SORENSON.

SAGLE, Idaho, July 20, 1904.

Editors Herald: We have a branch of twenty-one members, which is in fair working order, considering the circumstances. My husband is superintendent of the Sunday-school, which seems to have a growing interest, averaging about forty in attendance. Prejudice seems to be disappearing some, especially since the Fourth of July. Bro. Frank Chatburn was with us for about ten days before the Fourth, preaching each evening for nearly a week, which was much appreciated. He also delivered the oration at a picnic we had on the Fourth, which task he performed admirably, surprising a good many that had never heard any of our people speak, and they were led to ask, “Is that a Mormon preacher?”

To those who are isolated from church privileges we can not help but extend our sympathy. Let us not complain, but try to feel thankful to our heavenly Father for the present; for we feel that sometime, if we do his will, our desires shall be granted, as all our “present afflictions” must be for the best. Nevertheless when I read a letter from one of the brethren, in a late HERALD, it brought tears to my eyes, when I thought of a sweet baby girl of fourteen months, and a dear mother now resting from the cares that so often overtake us. Then comes the thought, We might weep for joy could we see the terrible trial that might have come to them, but which they have escaped, since we have an All-wise Father. And when we look at the child that we now have, which is so near the image of the first, and watch the growing devotion of her papa, I wonder, Can a person become too much attached to a dear one? It may be so.

Dear Saints, how necessary it is for us to become more patient, and more merciful in all things; that we might be shown mercy; and also to become as little innocent children, putting from us that spirit of trying to rule others.

Your sister in gospel devotion,
MRS. LILLIE OSBORN.

KANSAS CITY, July 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: The heart is gladdened by the refreshing news of the onward march of the restored gospel contained in your columns week after week. And feeling it would be selfish to withhold my mite, I beg space in your valuable paper.

As the result of what might be termed a phenomenal combination of circumstances, and a pass over the "Rock Island System" from Northern Iowa, the long wished for opportunity to live in Zion was granted. The past seven months have been pleasant associations with the Armstrong Saints. Here we meet men and women endowed with spiritual graces, such as characterized the work of God centuries ago. 'Tis pleasant to listen to their testimonies relative to their patriarchal blessings. Our next door neighbor, believing in the supernatural, brought in her horoscope—an astrological production which is somewhat similar to our patriarchal blessings—and requested a perusal of our blessing. I called her attention to the fact that hers only related to this life and her possible promotion in society, while ours invariably exhorted us to a complete consecration to God, and hence promises of a glorious life in the hereafter. While I was reading the latter portion of my blessing, in which these words were used, those who were present were moved to tears: "God has brought thee safely through all the trials of life which thou hast been encompassed with, and so will he be with thee in thy future life. I feel that he will lengthen out thy days here on earth sufficiently to enable thee to perform all that is required of thee until thou hast completed thy work, notwithstanding there are trials before thee that will be hard to endure, difficulties peculiar to surmount, yet he will come to thy help; his angels will sustain thee; his power will be round about thee. Trust thou, therefore, in the Lord, doubt not, nor fear, nor faint by the way, and God will give thee strength to endure faithfully to the end, until thou hast completed thy work. And when thy work is finished here, thou shalt meet the change, shall be able to pass over with joy and rejoicing in God, and thus on the other shore mingle in song and praise and thanksgiving with the redeemed of earth,—with the redeemed of all nations, having a name and a place in the kingdom of God, and being permitted to dwell in the presence of Jesus thy Redeemer, and attain to his fullness, moving along in the line of duty as marked out by God for his faithful ones from before the foundation of the world; and, with those who have waded through great tribulations and washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, thou shalt dwell.

"Oh, then, dear brother, be thou faithful, stand thou firm and steadfast in this truth, ever bearing in mind that the prize of eternal life which is before thee, and the privilege of dwelling in the presence of Christ thy Redeemer, is thine; and that thou mayest, if thou art faithful be crowned with his glory and the glory of God.

"These blessings and privileges are beyond the conception of mortals; and this world with all of its riches, with all of its glory and pomp and display, can not in the least degree compare with what God has in reserve for his faithful ones.

"These blessings are for thee to receive. Thus, on these conditions thou shalt attain to the resurrection of the just, and dwell in the presence of the redeemed, which blessings I feel to seal upon thy head, with the gift of eternal life, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen."

While I felt my unworthiness it seemed that God was fulfilling in a measure a promise made in the fore part of the blessing: "Thou shalt be blessed and prospered and thy soul shall be filled with joy and rejoicing in God." At least, I am not responsible for the promise, neither am I responsible for the action of Bro. W. H. Pease, president of Armstrong Branch, when, introducing the writer as speaker, he said in part: "It may appear that I am showing partiality toward Bro. Carlson for calling upon him three times in succession, but I have been led to do so." Neither am I altogether responsible for a brother writing me a few days later who came in a few moments after services began from another branch in which (if memory serves me right) he said: "Your sermon inspired within me a desire to be more faithful to God. . . . You preached just right for a lady baptized after meeting who had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church."

One passage of scripture came to mind on that occasion, and, what I underscore, with peculiar emphasis: "Behold I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door [remove the barriers that would shut out the spiritual blessings we might otherwise receive] I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me."—Revelation 3: 20.

With a desire that the Saints may all be prospered in the divine life and do only those things which please God, I am,

Yours in bonds,

JOSEPH CARLSON.

Editors Herald: Last April I dreamed that Bro. Hanner and a strange man were fishing, in a stream that seemed to be near where I was living. As I looked up I saw a great fish coming down from the sky; it was bright like fire, and I wondered who got that fish. When they came to the house I asked them which one got the fish, and Bro. Hanner said he got it.

The next night after I dreamed this, I went to my sister's where we expected to hear Bro. Ebeling preach; and there was that strange man. It was Bro. Kelley of Indiana. I never had seen him before, but knew him to be the strange man I saw with Bro. Hanner fishing. He ordained Bro. Hanner to the priest's office that night.

I have been in the work three years this August, having been baptized by Bro. H. J. Thurman, at Fairland, Indian Territory. I am always ready to work for the cause of the Master.

Editors Herald: As I was just reading in the HERALD the letter of "Mignon" I found it just suited me. It seems I could say, Amen, to each line. I was greatly encouraged so thought I would write a few lines too. Please write again, Mignon. You seem to have a great gift that way. I get very lonely sometimes for a talk with the Saints. I have two children and can not get out to meeting often as they are both young. I live near the Saints but would never know it as I hardly ever see any of them. I think as a rule we are all too much taken up with the cares of life to bother to see how another is. Is it right to do this? As one sister said, We hardly find time to read our HERALD. How I miss the Sunday-school too. I used to love it so when I could attend. I would advise any that can attend to try and do so, especially while they are young, for it is such a good place to get a knowledge of the work. I owe a lot of my interest in the work to what I got from the Sunday-school. I still love it dearly. I wish there was some one who had time to go around and visit each Sunday in each branch and study the lessons over together; some one that understands the Bible well and can explain the lessons, so we that have children and can not attend might never lose an interest. I love the work I am engaged in and I hope soon to be able to attend every meeting in my branch, also Sunday-school and Religio. I miss them very much indeed. I would rather be there with the people of God than in any other place. So let us be faithful and live so that some day we will meet with Paul and Peter and the rest of the faithful ones that have kept the covenant. HATTIE.

Editors Herald: I was called home last winter to care for my wife who was very sick. Her ill health detained me at home till the latter part of May; when, by agreement with the officers in charge, I began labors in Southwestern Iowa, in the Fremont District, my wife going with me for her health.

I took my wife to Independence, Missouri, where she stayed and visited with my sister, Mrs. T. J. Watkins, for a while and then joined me here in the mission field. My labors took us into several localities and gave us an opportunity to meet many of our old friends whom we knew twenty years ago, when we lived in this district.

The Saints were very kind to us, for which we are very thankful, and she enjoyed her stay in the district very much. Her health improved while away from home. After a stay of about two months she returned home, expecting to meet our married daughter, Effie Z. Stackhouse, who expected to return from the West about that time.

For nearly a month, I have had the pleasure of being associated with our genial sub-missionary in charge, M. M. Turpen. We held meeting in the district tent at Thurman till the mosquitoes, in their nocturnal raids, drove away our auditors. On the 23d of July we set up our canvas tabernacle here and so far have been having very good attendance, and splendid attention and order. How much good we may do here perhaps never will be known in life, but there are some indications that the waters will be "troubled."

Yours in the faith,

J. M. STUBBART.

BOWYER, Illinois, July 16, 1904.

Dear Herald: This beautiful morning I am going to add my testimony to your grand columns. I have often thought I would write, but when I read the many dear letters from the brothers and sisters it seemed to me I ought not to take up space. But if all would think the same way the isolated Saints like ourselves would not be permitted to hear of the many blessings which our heavenly Father is bestowing upon his faithful followers. It does my heart good to know how the Saints are blessed who are permitted to enjoy church privileges. My earnest prayer is that there may be a time in the near future when all the honest in heart may have lived so near to our heavenly Father that each and every one may be partakers of the divine nature, and enter into a closer relationship with God. I am young in this work, but feel to know that it is of God; and the nearer we draw to him, and the more we try to live in obedience to his most holy will, the more we will be permitted to know of him and his works. Myself and husband were baptized August 20, 1902, by our worthy Bro. F. M. Slover, and confirmed into this grand and glorious work, since which time we have tried in our weakness to let our light shine. When we look back over the path we have made we find it to be a very crooked one; but are determined by the help of the Master to do better in the future. I have been healed of a terrible stomach trouble and again of something like heart failure by the prayer of faith and administration of Bro. Slover, and feel to thank our heavenly Father greatly, as it seemed as if my life hung by a brittle thread. But what is this life compared to the eternal and everlasting life where God and Christ are, where there will be no more trouble, neither sorrow nor crying, there to walk in the beautiful light of the city?

I want all the Saints to pray for me and my family, and for all the Saints in this community that we may increase in faith, and live nearer to the throne of grace than we have in our past lives. And let us pray for our enemies if we have any, those that revile and persecute us, that they may soon be led out of darkness into this marvelous light of God. My heart is made to rejoice when I see how the people are blessed who are permitted to enjoy church privileges, and believe in God's own appointed time that we will also be permitted to meet oftener with the Saints, if we live true and faithful as the dear old song tells us:

"When through fiery trials

Thy pathway shall lie

My grace all sufficient

Shall be thy supply.

I'll strengthen thee, help thee,

And cause thee to stand,

Upheld by my righteous, omnipotent hand."

MRS. VENIE LANE.

Editor Herald: The brief notice of our reunion in the columns of the HERALD while good, I am glad to say the effects still continue with us in many ways, and to my mind the increased fervency, zeal, and spirituality of the Saints is the most commendable feature. Since breaking camp, July 3, I have remained within a radius of ten miles and the increased attendance of both members and outsiders is a noticeable feature.

During the past week Bro. Houghton led four, and the writer three,—sixteen in all the past month added to the kingdom in these parts. The other churches are getting a little scared, and are a trifle venomous in their attacks. I reply this week in a column article in the Dunseith Magnet, on the "Life and character of Joseph Smith." I would much prefer a Bible discussion but our enemies for some cause or other prefer to "bark at the dead lion," and so we reply as best we can, as you will see below. The enemy dared us to interview certain persons who knew all about "Old Joe." Having been at that same kind of thing before, nothing daunted we started off with pencil and note book, and obtained the following:

Question.—"How old are you, Mrs. Wynkoop?"

Answer.—"I was eighty-seven years old last October."

Q.—"I have been referred to you as one that knows something of the early history of the Latter Day Saints around Nauvoo. What do you know about it?"

A.—"I don't care to say much about it? I have heard a great deal but I won't repeat only what I know for myself. My father came to Hancock County, Illinois, when I was nine years old; his name was Yates; he was a surveyor, and at one time owned a part of the townsite of Commerce, afterwards called Nauvoo. My home has been at Augusta, same county, most of the time since; and I am well acquainted with the events transpiring."

Q.—"What is your opinion of the Latter Day Saints as you knew them?"

A.—"Those that I knew personally were quiet, industrious, and law-abiding citizens, and good neighbors."

Q.—"I suppose you know the Saints were charged with theft? What do you know about it?"

A.—"I heard of such things being done; but I do not know it. In fact I do not believe it; they certainly did not steal from us. I have strong reasons to believe that the actual thieves used the Mormons as scapegoats."

Q.—"Did you know Joseph Smith, personally?"

A.—"Yes, and all his family."

Q.—"What was his character?"

A.—"He was certainly a good man."

Q.—“Did you know Joseph Smith to have more than one wife?”

A.—“No. I knew his wife well, and she was as kind and good a lady as I ever knew; a good woman in every respect.”

Q.—“Was the doctrine of polygamy known or talked of at that time?”

A.—“No.”

Q.—“When did you first hear of that doctrine?”

A.—“I am not certain of the exact year, but am quite sure it was after 1853. My husband went to California in 1849, and returned in 1853, and it was after he came home.”

After further conversation in which Mrs. Wynkoop deplored the report that she had spoken evil of the Saints, she said, “I am a member of the Presbyterian Church, and have been for over seventy years. I do not believe in making reckless statements reflecting on people’s characters. I have stated only what I know to be true.” (Signed) LYDIA WYNKOOP.

Editors Herald: Having been appointed by our worthy general missionary in charge to labor in the Northeastern Kansas District, will say I am feeling well in the work we claim to love so well. Left my dear companion at home in Stewartville, June 28, and have labored in Fanning, Atchison, and Blue Rapids, am now seventy miles west of Atchison at Vermilion, on the central branch of the Missouri Pacific Railroad. Bro. Twombly and myself with Bro. S. C. Cox, who assists us and kindly cares for us while here, are operating the district tent, with a growing congregation, good attention, and fine liberty in preaching the word. May the good Lord bless his people, and may we all see the necessity of coming up higher.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
ALMA BOOKER.

WARRENSBURG, Missouri, July 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: It is some time since I contributed anything to your interesting columns. Having been appointed to labor chiefly in this stake of Zion, I have reported what little I have done to Zion’s Ensign.

I am still in the faith, and rejoicing in the truth, and hopeful for Zion’s weal, and confident of her final triumph; for the God of our fathers is still at the head of the work, and it must move in harmony with his divine will to victory.

I have labored in harmony with those in charge of the field I have been appointed to work in, and surely the Lord has been with me and his divine blessing has been in attendance, both in preaching the word and other duties imposed upon me.

By request of presidents of districts, and advice of missionary in charge, I have labored in the Spring River and Clinton Districts with pleasure, and I think profit, according to the testimony of many good, honest souls. My competent and ever faithful stenographer has nobly done her work, cheerfully and satisfactorily.—Sr. Maria Clark Morgan; known by so many of the Saints where she has lived and labored. We were more than pleased to meet with so many faithful, true, persevering, and energetic Latter Day Saints, both in Missouri and Kansas, who are willing to sacrifice for the work, and the building up of Zion’s cause.

Who shall say the work will not be accomplished, and the purposes of our God brought about for the good of his people and to the honor and glory of his holy name? God has spoken; his word has gone forth; it can not fail.

To all my old fellow laborers, and Saints, and friends, let me say, Let us be true to our trust; do the work assigned us faithfully, and we shall gain the victory.

We are booked for the Eldorado Springs reunion, to commence August 12, also our stake reunion and conference, to be held at Holden, September 2 to 12; and the Pomona reunion of Howell County, September 18; and a part of the time of the Fremont District reunion, Iowa, where we hope to meet with many of our dear old friends, with whom we labored and toiled in the interest of this work for twenty-nine years. May God help us to stand for the right, and endure to the end, and be saved in the kingdom of our Lord, is my earnest prayer for all.

Dear Saints: In Christ I do greatly rejoice to see so much work being done, as we read of in the HERALD. We are on a mountain; no town here and the country is not thickly settled yet. We never hear any preaching. There are several other creeds, but no Latter Day Saint but ourselves, and we need the help of a good man full of the Holy Ghost and power to come and preach for us. We are acquainted with Brn. J. D. Erwin and F. C. Keck. Would love to have them come. We are interested in the work of Christ and want to see it progress for there are great and glorious things ahead for those that love him, who are waiting for that glorious time when Christ shall come in the clouds and gather all nations to himself.

Oh, how we long to see the day
When Christ shall come again,
And build his kingdom here on earth,—
In loving kindness reign.
All nations to him then shall come,
They will not need to hear;
All shall know that he is Christ,
For he will be so near.

We know that Christ will come again,
We’ve read it in his word;
And John the Revelator says,
He’ll bring a grand reward,
And all who’ve lived for Jesus’ sake,
In that great day shall know,
The blessedness of Jesus’ name,
For he will love them so.

With his own hand he’ll lead the just,
In that great glorious day,
So great will be his love for them,
Man’s words can not convey.
Then, hallelujahs will arise,
To Jesus on his throne;
He then shall be the Conqueror,
And rule the world alone.

STANTON, Michigan, July 24, 1904.

Editors Herald: Perhaps it will interest some of your readers to hear something from this little branch out here in Michigan. The Crystal Branch was organized August 30, 1903, with fourteen members. Since then two have moved, and one has been laid to rest to wait the resurrection. The 6th of July two were baptized. One, an aged sister eighty years old, mother of F. D. Omans, was baptized by her son, W. S. Omans, priest of the branch. There were present at the baptism four generations of the family, all in the church. The other candidate was eleven years old. They were confirmed that afternoon by Elder S. Stroh. The 10th of July Elder W. D. Ellis came and preached one sermon for us at Maple Grove schoolhouse. So we have some seasons of refreshing; and encouragement to still strive to serve the Lord. We try to meet together at the different homes, once in two weeks, for prayer and testimony meeting. We are in hopes the Lord will move upon the hearts of the people, and the pure in heart be gathered and the branch be built up, so that we will be able to build a church, and have an elder with us. Ever praying for the upbuilding of Zion,

Your sister in Christ,
MARY DUNSHEE.

PACKARD, Iowa, July 27, 1904.

Dear Herald: We are encouraged in this latter-day work. Though there are but few of us, we have been blessed wonderfully since our branch was organized about one year ago. Although we have had difficulties and trials to endure within that time, the good Lord has stood by us and brought us through thus far. He is ever willing and ready to help those that put their trust in him. We have a neat little church here which was dedicated July 24, Brn. F. A. and F. M. Smith in charge; very good attendance considering the prejudice that lies in the neighborhood. I do hope and pray that the words that were spoken by the brethren will clear the minds of the outside world and that this work will be built up here and elsewhere. And as our Bro. Fred B. Farr has gone out in the field to help sow the gospel seed, may he as he stands before the world be endowed with power from on high, and may precious souls be born into the kingdom. And may those of us who are left here work together for the good of the cause; may we live lives that will be pleasing and acceptable in God's sight, and in the sight of the world, is the prayer of

Your sister.

Editors Herald: After two month's sickness I am again able to write a few lines to your columns. I have been confined to my bed about two months, very low part of the time. Had it not been for the testimony I had concerning my labors I would have thought my earthly career was about done. Almost daily I receive letters from different parts of Indian Territory, Texas, and Arkansas, asking me to come and hold meetings. In fact, I never heard such a cry for the preaching of the gospel; and to think I was on the bed of affliction and could not respond was indeed saddening. But with a humble heart I was willing to submit to my condition. During my sickness I have learned a grand lesson; and that is that man may plan, but God executes. When I left General Conference last spring, I anticipated one of the greatest year's work that I had ever done, especially among the Indians. And the first meeting I held it looked as if it would be that way. One of the most prominent Indians in that part of the Territory with his wife drove twelve miles one morning to hear us preach, but got there too late for preaching, and had to leave before the evening service. He and his wife ate dinner at Bro. Ed. Craven's, and after dinner I took the Bible and preached to them about two hours, during which time the Indian bowed his head and wept, and said he would give all that he had to be ready to meet Christ when he comes. I promised to go to his town to hold meetings, and he gave me to understand that he and his wife would obey. Should they come into the church no doubt a great many more would join, as they have a large connection.

I take this method of replying to my many friends who have written to me desiring to know how I was getting along. God greatly blessed me during my sickness, and my faith is as strong as ever, if not stronger in this great latter-day work. And I feel that God's work will be done in due time, Zion built up, and Jesus Christ come to his Saints. So whate'er my lot may be I will bow my head and say, God's will be done, and pray that when the end comes I may be found discharging my duties. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be restored.

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

Independence Items.

Dear Saints: We have been enjoying excellent discourses of late from some of the younger elders: the sermons of Brn. Ammon White and Russell were particularly noteworthy, having been very appropriate to the occasion, considering the impressions made upon readers of Bro. E. L. Kelley's baccalaureate sermon at Graceland, as published in the church papers.

The Bishopric also have been instructing the Saints in regard to Graceland College debt, which has had a good and practical effect. The services have been inspiring in both preaching and prayer meetings.

The sisters of the Willing Helpers' Society have been exerting themselves in the way of helping along the work, and have donated recently fifty dollars toward the Church Improvement Fund. The young ladies also are furthering the interests of the cause by their noble efforts in a "social" way.

Last evening, while the church choir was practicing, preparatory to tent work in this city, to begin in a few days, there was a pleasant little gathering of Saints on Elder Luff's lawn also engaged for good.

The glimmer from Japanese lanterns suspended at every part of the grounds, the groups of happy Saints, young and old, in pleasant conversation while partaking of delectable refreshment, made up a brilliant background to passers-by on the moderately-lighted streets.

All this likewise will be turned to good account for the benefit of the church.

Day before yesterday, the 25th, was Pioneer Day. About thirty people, young folk mostly, gathered on the elevated slope of what has been called "Swope's pasture" for an annual holiday. Singing, amusements, athletics, recitations, essay reading, addresses by the president of "the Mission," and lastly, though not by any means the least feature of the day, was the generous "spread" about noonday. A kindly invitation had been extended which, we believe, was accepted by a few of our own flock: theirs was called "the Brighamites," ours was spoken of as "the Reorganization."

In the afternoon during a lively conversation engaged in by a few on both sides we noticed they could both quote scripture, and it evidently would have been of no effect had we quoted to their elders those words of burning import, as expressed by Prophet Joseph while oppressed with deep solicitude and the weight of chains and imprisonment, "Let our covenants be that of the everlasting covenant, as it is contained in the holy writ, and the things which God has revealed unto us."

And again, as early as 1838 he saw the necessity of reminding the saints of the possibility of some "creeping in unawares to destroy the flock."

While on our part, under the ban of pity and regret that our brethren and neighbors should continue to rest under the stigma "Brighamism" had brought upon them, on theirs was joy and satisfaction; and they could still exclaim:

"No sad songs for the brave!
But rather jubilation—peal on peal
Of joy-bells—Hope's white lilies neath the sun
Because they died with sacrificial zeal
Their patriot duty done!"

Bro. Hulmes a short time ago discussed the subject of matters connected with the coming of the Utah people with the authority and weight of argument of one who has this work at heart, and who has surely been called to be an instructor in Israel. Said he, "We must closely discriminate, for the safety of the church."

On Thursday, the 28th ult., the annual Sunday-school picnic was held at Hill's Grove on Rock Creek, a romantic spot about three miles southwest of Independence, and parents, teachers, and children met by means of wagons, trolley, and private conveyance, and enjoyed the occasion in the good old-fashioned way. Everything passed smoothly to those well prepared for jiggers, jolting rides, and nice long walks in the country. Some of the sisters deserve the credit of having done a great stunt in walking with their little ones from the station to the grounds, a distance of about a mile, through the weeds and dust beneath a broiling hot sun. The day was ideal, the noon-day repast abundant and refreshing, and the young people had a fine time roaming the woods, playing their games on the green, or wading in the creek.

While this was going on the sisters of the Prayer Union were holding their usual meeting in the afternoon at Sr. Eaton's, and, although they were few in number, it was a very enjoyable occasion. Our sister's health is improving and she continues faithful in her testimony concerning the divinity of the work and the noble character of Prophet Joseph. Sr. Henry Kemp related some of the experiences of her eventful life during the cloudy day of the church. Every heart was made to rejoice because of the Spirit's presence and prayers were offered for the sick and also in behalf of the coming tent meetings, that the Lord would bless the efforts of the ministry and that much good might be done. According to the testimony of our sister F. E. Lytle, who is a constant attendant, another witness is added to the many who have testified like our sister first spoken of.

Sr. Matilda Lane, whose name is mentioned in volume 3 of the Church History, long since gone to a restful beyond, left with her daughter an undying testimony concerning the Prophet Joseph. Sr. Lytle says, "My beloved mother attended the sister's prayer-meetings at Nauvoo at which Sr. Emma Smith, the wife of the prophet, was generally present. Not long before the martyrdom, while standing up to bear her testimony, and referring to certain rumors afloat, she heard Emma say her beloved husband neither believed in nor practiced celestial wifery or polygamy. He had no secret relations with any woman but herself: she was his only wife, and he was a pure and noble man." Sr. Lytle tenderly cared for her mother many years until her death, heard her tell this concerning Sr. Emma several times, and to her it will ever remain a lasting and indisputable testimony concerning the pure character of Prophet Joseph. His home life and that of his family were well known to Sister Lane, who lived at that time at the next door, and the two families were intimate friends. Sister Lane and her family continued steadfast in the original faith of the church, although amid much persecution and the enemy's attempts to deceive.

Sunday, the 31st, was a day long to be remembered because of the excellent and instructive discourses, in the morning at the church, by President G. H. Hulmes, and by Bishop Hilliard in the evening at the tent, near the city square, where services are announced for two weeks, and perhaps longer.

There were from seven to eight hundred present, and the bishop held the attention of the large audience by an introductory sermon, evidently well appreciated by all present.

On Monday evening his subject was the restoration of the gospel, and on Tuesday, the unchangeability of God and the unity of the gospel. On Wednesday evening our brother still held the attention of a large assembly and good order and excellent interest were manifested.

The weather continues fine and the city and suburbs are putting on a somewhat brighter aspect, partly through the efforts of Commissioner Sinclair, who says, "We are expecting a considerable company from now on for a while and so we are cutting down the weeds, cleaning up generally."

The Hedrickite brethren have put up a good, substantial steel wire fence around the Temple Lot which is also an improvement in the public eye, and our church janitor and Bro. Horton have been intrusted with keys to the entrance gate for the benefit of visitors who may wish to walk through the grounds.

Bro. Hulmes, a few Sundays ago, while speaking on the subject of the effect of recent land purchases here upon the future, said there was apparent some anxiety and distress, but there were no reasons for feeling any doubts as to the promises given of God in the past. "Under the ban of slavery this country had suffered for many years, and the scourge of war swept over the land because of this; and do we suppose that God is going to suffer that an incubus shall be placed here upon the people which is directly opposed to the law and commandments to his church? God will not permit it." Abraham Lincoln, in one of his famous speeches on slavery said, "The framers of the organic law believed that the constitution would outlast slavery and they did not want a word there to tell future generations that slavery had ever been legalized in America."

Bro. Hilliard referring in his Wednesday evening's address to the change of conditions here, spoke of the mobbings and bad policies adopted by some in the past in their vain endeavors to suppress the message of the everlasting truth; but, unlike slavery in the constitution, the dark annals pertaining to mob law in Missouri must for ever blot the pages of her history.

He spoke of the lofty motives and pure character of the Saints, although they had been accounted by some, who were blinded by tradition, as the off-scourings of creation, of the necessity of receiving the Holy Spirit to govern our lives and of revelation from God that the gospel might be made plain to the understanding of those desirous to live according to his law.

If forceful argument and scriptural texts can prove effective, much good must surely be done by this tent movement, this shaking of the grasp of tradition and error by an advocacy of the teachings of our elders of "the gentle ways of peace."

Your sister in the gospel,

August 4, 1904.

Reunion Notices.

REDUCED RATES TO THE ANNUAL REUNION, DOW CITY, IOWA.

By the kindness of Eben E. MacLeod, chairman Western Passenger Association, and the officers of the lines concerned, we are authorized to state for the benefit of all, that reduced rates to the annual reunion which will be held at Dow City, Iowa, from September 16 to 25, 1904, are secured upon the most liberal terms ever granted.

Ticket agents of lines under the above named association in Iowa, Illinois, Nebraska, and Missouri, will issue certificates with the sale of tickets to the Dow City, Iowa, reunion from "September 13 to 25, inclusive, and for return tickets if presented not later than September 23, 1904."

Procure certificates of agents over each line so that your certificates will cover the entire distance from place of starting to Dow City. Certificates are to be issued to each individual purchasing tickets otherwise they will not be honored. Please be particular about this matter. Pay full fare for going tickets, and when we have procured one hundred certificates, and they have been properly signed by the secretary of reunion, A. H. Rudd, and joint-agent, D. P. Hall, of the Chicago and North-Western Railway, you will be entitled to purchase return tickets for one third full fare. Certificates should not be procured where going fare is fifty cents or less as there is no reduction of fare in such cases, and such certificates will not be counted. As we have three days before and the full time of meeting in which to procure the required one hundred certificates, there can be no doubt that if reasonable care is exercised all may enjoy the benefits of the reduced rates granted this year.

The grounds are in first-class condition; the shade is ample, and camping room all that will be required. An adequate supply of pure, fresh water will be on the grounds and other accommodations will be good.

President Joseph Smith, minister in charge Fredrick A. Smith, Patriarchs Alexander H. Smith, and Charles Derry, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and other prominent ministers of the church are expected to be present. Come with the Spirit, and in the bonds of true Christian love let us rejoice together, while we "worship God in spirit and in truth."

Will branch officers oblige our reunion committee by reading this notice in their meetings? Charles E. Butterworth, for committee.

The reunion of the Lamoni Stake will be held at Davis City, Iowa, September 2 to 11 inclusive. The grounds are at the edge of town, about five minutes walk from the depot. Plenty of good water will be available. Tents 10x12 will cost $2 for the ten days. Meals in a restaurant under our own management will be served for fifteen cents each or a little less to regular attendants. Pasture for horses can be had for sixty cents a team for the entire time. Plenty of good straw on the grounds. We have arranged for several of our ablest ministers to be in attendance and we are assured of a good time if the Saints will come praying for a blessing from on high. Those desiring tents please notify the committee at once. F. B. Blair, Duncan Campbell, Price McPeak, committee.

As has already been announced Southern Wisconsin District reunion will convene at Madison (Greenbush) August 26, and close September 4. In behalf of the committee we wish to say, that we are making all arrangements that it may be a success. We expect Patriarch J. H. Lake and missionary in charge J. W. Wight. We wish to call especial attention to the work of the patriarchs, as we believe that many of our people do not fully comprehend this department of the Lord's work. Tents will be $2.00 to $2.25, according to size; folding single cots twenty-five cents each; meals at fifteen cents. Those notifying the committee in time will find tents and cots in readiness. We extend a cordial invitation to the Saints and friends of Northern Wisconsin to join us. For further information address W. P. Robinson, Oregon, Wisconsin, or J. O. Dutton, Milton Junction, Wisconsin, until August 22. Then our address will be Chandler Street, Madison, care of H. D. Stevens. Street-car service can be secured from depot to within one fourth of a mile of grounds. If necessary to be met at depot inform committee of time and road on which you arrive. Jasper O. Dutton, for committee.

The twelfth annual Northern Missouri reunion will convene August 19 to 28, in Bro. B. J. Dice's beautiful grove at Stewartsville, Missouri. Prices of tents for the 10 days: 10 by 12, 3 foot walls, set up ready to occupy $1.75; 12 by 14, 3 foot walls, $2.00; 12 by 19, 6 foot walls, 3 rooms, $4.50. The latter will have to be ordered specially. Sr. Lehman and her two daughters will have charge of the boarding tents. Seven meals for $1.00. This is as cheap as you can board at home. Carrie M. Lewis of Osborne, Missouri, will have charge of the song services; let all the young and old come prepared to assist. We have the promise of several missionaries to be present to preach the word. One half of each day will be devoted for Sunday-school and Religio work. Bro. Joseph R. Lambert will be present if nothing prevents, to help make the reunion a success. Make your arrangements to attend these meetings. Charles P. Faul, secretary.

The Spring River District reunion will begin August 19. The following brethren are expected to be present: I. N. White, of the Twelve, Bro. Short of the Bishopric, J. T. Davis, F. C. Keek, F. M. Slower, and others; also Ammon White, vice-president of the Religio society, to represent that department of the work. We hope the Religio workers will give us their attendance, as Bro. Ammon is an able worker, and will make it interesting for you. All that come by rail will get off at Fairland, as that is the nearest place that you can have your baggage checked to. Some one will be there to meet the trains. Those coming from the north will change cars at Afton, Indian Territory, then to Fairland. Let everybody come and have a grand good time. In bonds, J. T. Riley.

Shupe, president.

Conference of the Idaho District will be held in Jennings Grove, seven miles east of Idaho Falls, August 20 and 21, 1904. Resolution was passed at our last district conference providing for delegate conference. Branches will be entitled to one delegate for each six members. (Section 180 Rules of Order.) President Kelley and other missionaries from abroad are expected in attendance. Bro. Jennings will provide hay, fuel, and shelter for those who come; also provide for the missionaries. Others should bring bedding and provisions. Those coming by train will be met if notice is sent in time to S. D. Condit, Idaho Falls, care of James Jennings.

Conference will be held at Jonesport, Maine, in the union church, August 27 and 28. E. W. Wilson.

The conference of the Florida District will convene with the Coldwater Branch, September 24 and 25, 1904. E. Powell, president.

The Western Maine District conference will convene at Little Deer Isle, August 20 and 21. All communications and reports forwarded to Little Deer Isle, care J. J. Billings, Eugene Braun, secretary.

Lamoni Stake conference will convene at the reunion grounds at Davis City, Iowa, Saturday, September 3, 1904, at 10 a. m. Please send all branch and ministerial reports to D. J. Krahl, secretary, Lamoni, Iowa.

Convention Notices.

The convention of the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District Sunday-school association will convene at Haileyville, Indian Territory, Thursday, September 22, 1904, at 10 a. m. A. Z. Rudd, secretary.

There will be a convention of Sunday-schools of the Ohio District at Vales Mills, Friday, August 26, at 2 p. m. An organization was effected two years ago, but for want of support, was permitted to relapse. Let us revive the work, and carry it to a successful issue. A program has been arranged, we expect Presidents Fred M. Smith and R. C. Evans with us, and a pleasant time is anticipated. Everybody come. E. E. Long.

The joint convention of the Utah District Sunday-school and Religio associations will meet at Salt Lake City, September 2, 1904, at 10 a. m., just previous to district conference. Business and class work during the day. We expect an interesting program in the evening by the two societies. Come all who can, and be sure and send or bring in all reports in time. Mrs. A. M. Chase, superintendent district association; Charles Wardle, president Religio association.

The Sunday-school convention of the Idaho District will convene previous to the district conference, in Jennings Grove, August 19, 1904, at 10.30 a. m. We desire all Sunday-school secretaries who have failed to send in their quarterly reports since last convention to send them in at once to the district secretary, Elias Richard, Malad, Idaho. It is hoped that all schools in the district will be fully represented, and enjoy the spiritual blessings. Julia A. Condit, superintendent, Pocatello, Idaho.

The Western Maine Sunday-school convention, will convene at Little Deer Isle, Friday, at 2 p. m., August 19. Sunday-schools of this district are requested to send in their reports so they may be in the hands of our president at least three days before the convention convenes. Address Joseph H. Eaton, Stonington, Maine.

Notices.

"SHUT-INS" and "SHUT-OUTS."

"Shut-ins" are persons who by reason of long-continued illness, other bodily infirmity or great household cares are compelled to abide at home, and have not the privilege of meeting with the Lord's people to worship. "Shut-outs" are those who by reason of their distance from the place of meeting, are likewise deprived of attending public worship, or the Sunday-school. To both these classes, the Lord himself will come, and abide with them, and they may join in the study of his word with all the church, through the medium of the home class department of the Sunday-school. I will send a Quarterly, study-record envelope, and leaflet explaining the plan of the department and enroll them as members of the home department of the North-eastern Illinois District Sunday-school association, to all who will send me their names and addresses. This quarter is nearly half gone already. Please send to-day, so as not to forget it. Yours in love, Charles A. Gurwell, superintendent, 244 Ninety-first Street, Chicago, Illinois.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

Central Texas District. The Saints and friends of the Central Texas District please take notice that Bro. S. R. Hay of Central Texas District has resigned the office of agent in the said district and that at the last conference of said district Bro. J. M. Nunley, of Hearne, Texas, was recommended for appointment. Bro. Nunley has been duly authorized to act as agent in and for said district and we hope and trust that every member will strive to assist the brother in his duties as agent and help move along the work of the Master.

The Bishopric extend special thanks to Bro. S. R. Hay for his faithful work in the office hitherto and trust that he may be able to do much good in whatever other line of church work in which he may engage.

In behalf of the Bishopric, I am,

Very truly and respectfully,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, August 8, 1904.

What the Government is Doing for Irrigation.

The entire western half of the United States has been studied by experienced men and their assistants, and all available data concerning water-supply and the possibility of reclaiming the arid lands of the West have been considered. The reclamation law is very far-reaching, and has many important ramifications. Much must be taken into account besides water and land. It is not sufficient merely to build storage works and turn the water into the stream. The land must actually be reclaimed and the capital returned to the fund, to be used over and over again in similar enterprises. The land must be subdivided into areas of sufficient size to support a family. The Secretary of the Interior may fix the unit as low as forty acres, and it must not exceed one hundred and sixty. The larger figure is the maximum amount of water rights which may be sold to land in private ownership. In all cases, the beneficiary of national irrigation must be an actual occupant of the soil, living on the soil or in its immediate vicinity.

The central idea of the new policy is to assist real home-makers in getting a foothold upon the land. The Government does not pretend to aid speculators, but only to assist settlers in getting the amount of irrigated land reasonably necessary to the support of their families. The new law aims not only at the storage of water, but at the intensive cultivation of the soil by a multitude of landed proprietors.

If only one State were to be considered, a thorough study of its resources and opportunities would be a great task; but when thirteen States and three Territories must be examined, and selections made which will stand the test of future judgment, the burden becomes one of enormous proportions. Often the projects which have been generally regarded as the most attractive, and which have been discussed with glittering generalities in the public press, are found to have fatal defects, and have been consequently abandoned, with resulting disappointment to large numbers of people.—From "The triumph of national irrigation," by William E. Smythe, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for July.

The Astoria and Columbia River Railroad has recently issued a neat little thirty-two page booklet descriptive of some of the attractions along the line. It is profusely illustrated by well-executed half-tones, and is issued from the office of J. G. Mayo, general passenger agent, at Astoria, Oregon.

The World's Fair has been injured more or less by the publication of grossly erroneous statements regarding the cost of living in St. Louis. Gradually these false reports are being refuted in the press and by word of mouth, as visitors from far and near come to St. Louis and find that living accommodations are remarkably reasonable. There are scores of restaurants where an abundant and wholesome meal may be had for twenty-five cents, and there are scores of hotels where lodging at one dollar a day is the prevailing rate. Thousands of private families, in the best residential districts of the city, have opened their homes for the entertainment of World's Fair visitors, at rates for lodgings ranging from fifty cents up per day. For one dollar an excellent room may be had in a most respectable neighborhood, and there are many boarding-houses and private dwellings where lodgings and breakfast may be obtained at from one dollar to one dollar and twenty-five cents. Rooms taken by the week, or occupied by two or more persons, are rented at still lower figures. Naturally, one may find hotels in St. Louis where the rates are as high as those usually prevailing in New York, Chicago, or any other large city; but the fact remains that in view of the great Exposition that is now running in full swing the average rate of living in St. Louis is surprisingly low. Any report to the contrary is made either willfully or through ignorance. That the Exposition is already a splendid success is attested by the unqualified words of praise which it receives from distinguished visitors hailing from all parts of the world, and from the fact that the attendance is doubling with each month of the Fair.

We are used to criticism of fashionable society from those who distinctly do not belong to it, but rarely does an opportunity occur to obtain the frank opinion of one who is really, so to speak, behind the scenes. That brilliant American woman, Mrs. George Cornwallis-West, born Miss Jerome and formerly Lady Randolph Churchill, contributes to the August Cosmopolitan an article on "Modern manners and the unmannerly age" in which she does not hesitate to score the degenerate tendencies of her own social set.

Mr. Flower seems determined to realize his expressed purpose of making each issue of the Arena superior to its predecessor. The July number seemed to reach the high-water mark of excellence, but the August number will prove, we think, even more attractive to the general reader. Among the leading social, political, and economic questions discussed are the following: "An open letter to President Roosevelt"; "The operation of the initiative and referendum in Oregon"; "Why we favor Japan in the present war"; "The progress of the Negro: A study in the last census"; "The political situation in the Australian Federal Parliament"; "The dragon in America," a discussion of the Chinese question. Among other important essays in the body of the magazine are "The poetry of Poe," "Judaism and the American spirit," and "A golden day in Boston's history." The latter paper is handsomely illustrated, carrying sixteen portraits of men and women who rendered the last century in Boston for ever memorable. Among the contributors are such well-known writers as Doctor Charles Frederick Holder, Edwin Markham, Professor Frank Parsons, Professor Edwin Maxey, and Charles Malloy.

Making Butter and Cheese.

A generation ago, the making of butter and cheese was a home industry. These familiar occupations have lately developed into special manufacturing industries conducted in establishments known as creameries and cheese-factories; and the effect of this development has been to change the character of dairy farming as well as of dairy manufacture. They have also raised the quality of the manufactured product, and have produced such a uniformity of grade and continuity of supply as to establish the products as important commodities in the general market and to make the factorymen prominent on boards of trade.

Of all the butter, cheese, and condensed milk factories there are in New York State,—which is the leading dairy State,—more than two thousand one hundred establishments. They constitute the most important market-establishment enterprise in the agriculture of the Empire State.—Country Life in America.

A feature of the Iowa State Fairs becoming more popular every year is the camping park in the fair-grounds. The men who planned for these fairs wisely secured a beautifully wooded tract of land lying back upon the hills where there is room for a thousand campers and their outfits. Annually many farmers drive to the fairs from long distances and camp out with their families on the ground, where there is shade and water in abundance, and camping space is free to all.

A VISIT TO ST. JOSEPH AND INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

It sometimes happens that when we elders are privileged to accomplish anything, we like others of the brethren to share with us in the good we receive and appreciate. The Saints of the St. Joseph Branch had an opportunity to secure a pipe-organ, which they installed in the church, corner of Seventeenth and Faraon Streets. They invited the Senior Editor to be present with them on Sunday, July 31, to assist them in the installation of their purchase. The music-lovers of the branch under the supervision of Bro. Carl Kinnaman arranged a song program, which with the aid of their new organ proved to be a very acceptable service. Bro. William Lewis, president of the branch, made a successful effort to advertise the meeting which resulted in good congregations both morning and evening, the Editor preaching at both services. This is but a simple recital, but it has significance in this: that it required considerable energy and an appreciable outlay of money by a few to secure the organ. These few proceeded on behalf of the branch, advancing the amount required to purchase the organ and remove and install it. It filled the recess behind the pulpit and perceptibly increased the acoustic qualities of the room.

We were much pleased to address them for the reason that they had been struggling to pay off the debt on their church-building, and the assuming of a new obligation for the organ required an additional sacrifice, which we were pleased to note was gladly made. The branch has about five hundred dollars yet to be raised on their church debt, when they will have their building free. It is nicely located and amply justifies the wisdom of those under whose management it was built.

There has been a perceptible increase in spirituality and the influence of the membership is good. Bro. Carl Kinnaman invited a notable solo singer, a Mr. Williams, to sing for us, which he did at the evening service, rendering "The Holy City" in a highly creditable manner, bringing his own accompanist from the church choir where he is in the habit of singing. It was a kindly act, and shows the estimate of worth in position occupied by Bro. Kinnaman and his associate singers.

Bro. Lewis, the president of the branch since his return from Wales, has regained his health and is GRACELAND COLLEGE is to be congratulated upon the success which has attended its efforts to secure a competent faculty for the coming year's work. The indications are that in every branch, the corps of instruction will be abler and stronger than ever before. Appointments have been made to the chairs of Accountancy and Commercial Law, Greek and Education, Latin and German. History and English have been provided for, as also Biology, and the board is now seeking a competent professor of Mathematics, Physics, and Chemistry, who shall possess university qualifications combined with a real enthusiasm for his work. A really competent instructor in Shorthand and Typewriting has been secured, a late instructor in one of the leading commercial colleges of the West. The board has good hopes of securing a very competent instructor in Instrumental and Vocal Music, a graduate of one of our leading conservatories.

the same practical, energetic presiding officer he has ever been. He says, "Were it not for the careless and somewhat disreputable actions of a few who have standing among the Saints, the work in the city would be easy. These create an occasional turmoil and are something of a reproach." However, he is pleased with the advance as a whole.

AT INDEPENDENCE.

The Presidency of the stake arranged for a series of meetings in a tent pitched on a vacant lot across the street north from Zion's Ensign office, said series to continue so long as public interest would warrant. Bro. George H. Hilliard was secured to open the series. This he did acceptably, preaching the opening discourse Sunday evening, July 31, continuing until Thursday evening. He was followed on Friday evening by Bro. Rudolph Etzenhouser. By invitation from Bro. Hulmes the Editor visited Independence on Saturday, the 6th of August, and preached the evening discourse for Sunday, the 7th, in the tent, Bro. J. D. White occupying at the morning service in the church. The Editor occupied again on Monday night and on the following Wednesday night. At the Tuesday evening service Reverend J. J. Martin, pastor of the Watson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, preached the sermon, from 1 Timothy 3: 16:

And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.

By an agreement among the officers of the branch a special invitation had been issued to the respective pastors of the several churches in the city to occupy during the series of meetings. Reverend Martin was the only one who had up to the date of the visit of the Editor accepted this invitation. After the opening exercises and Reverend Martin had risen to address the congregation, he stated that he had been criticized for accepting the invitation to speak in the tabernacle. Some of this criticism had been unfriendly, some of it friendly and commendatory. He gave three reasons why he accepted the invitation to occupy; the first of these was, that he was a preacher, that it was his business to preach and improve every opportunity to address the people on the subject of the gospel; that in reflecting upon the invitation it occurred to him that in the uncertainties of life it might be the last opportunity and the last time he should be permitted to speak a word in defense of the gospel; that if he failed to accept and it should prove to be the last opportunity of his life, he did not know what excuse he should make on the other side for failing. His second reason was, that when the Methodist Episcopal Church found itself without a roof under which to worship, the Latter Day Saints permitted them to occupy a room in which to worship so long as they needed without cost to them. The third reason which he gave was that while he was not so well acquainted with the doctrine and faith of the people who were holding the meetings as he should like to be, and probably would be, he had long been observant of them as a people in their course of conduct and was pleased to say that he found them honest, upright, and industrious; and he added, significantly, that not many of their names were found on petitions for licenses to sell intoxicating drinks. For these reasons he decided to occupy, and should stand by his decision. He then proceeded to give the audience an excellent and spirited exegesis of the text. Taken as a whole it could be safely indorsed by the eldership, the difference possibly being a few minor applications as the Latter Day Saints read the word. He showed himself to be friendly in spirit and kindly in disposition, and we were pleased to be privileged to hear him. He had an excellent audience and they gave him good attention.

An extra large congregation greeted the Editor on Wednesday evening, the tent being filled and many seated and standing around the outside. We do not ask for or expect to receive a more kindly reception, a more attentive interest, or a clearer perception of the truth and better liberty of presentation than we enjoyed on this occasion. What the result of the visit may be is for others to state. Whether the Editor presented the subject matter with sufficient clearness to be appreciated by those who heard, he will not pretend to state. Suffice it to say that he endeavored to do the Master's will as he saw it, and will be content if it was acceptable to the Master and to his people.

PERSECUTION.

It has been said that the Reorganized Church could not be the church because they did not suffer persecution. How is this? At Park Rapids, Minnesota, Brn. F. M. and F. A. Smith held a few meetings during the latter part of June or first of July and baptized two, one of them a Miss Myrtle Sanderson, who was a member of the Baptist fold at the time. On July 21 she received from the pastor of the Baptist Church, W. D. Millikin, a letter worded as follows:

I have been informed that you have joined the Mormons. As you are aware, the Mormons and the Christian churches of all denominations have no fellowship. Mormon doctrines are contrary to the Bible teachings; so you will understand that no Latter Day Saints so called can hold office in any Baptist Church. Accordingly your resignation of all offices in Osage Baptist Sunday-school is respectfully requested. Sincerely yours.

We presume that Sr. Sanderson wrote the resignation. This is accentuated by the following: Bro. Henry Way, at Osage, Minnesota, received a letter postmarked at Osage, July 27, five o'clock in the evening, 1904, in words as follows:

We, the citizens of this vicinity ask you Mr. Mormons to move on and avoid trouble unless you are a friend to tar and eggs. This Mr. Elders means you.

By order of Citizens Committee now organized.

On the back was this note: "Please hand to Mormon elders newly arrived."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By a letter from Bro. Joseph Luff we learn that the reunion of the Southern California District closed on Sunday, the 7th, and is pronounced the best reunion ever held in the district. Ten were baptized, making a total of twenty baptized in the field to date, so far as heard from. The brethren seem to feel well and are active. Bro. Luff says: "I feel happy, very happy in the work and greatly blessed in preaching; health improved some." We are pleased to learn that they have had an excellent session and that the brethren are busy. Southern California is not a fruitful field for proselyting, but Bro. Luff and his confreres will strive to awaken those of the faith who are sleeping and keep them in line if it is possible to do so.

Bro. J. C. Vaughn, writing from Skidmore, Missouri, says: "Bro. Haden and myself are here with tent holding meetings. Have held three services with good attendance—over one hundred. Much prejudice exists. One man by name of Linville, whose father was killed during the trouble in Jackson County, has offered one hundred dollars to any one who would run us out of town and burn the tent. Seems to hold us all responsible for his father's death. Haven't much fear. Feel well in the work and trust we may be able to do much good for the cause of Christ." We hope this information to Bro. Vaughn is incorrect. If true and any one should accept the offer, it would make the one making the offer particeps criminis before the fact and liable to severe punishment.

In last week's issue we quoted a dispatch to the Chicago Tribune concerning a certain woman conversing in the Creek Indian language with an Igorrote at the World's Fair in St. Louis. When this item was first noticed Bro. E. L. Kelley wrote to Mrs. Merrick, asking as to the truthfulness of the report, and received the following reply: "Dear Sir: Your letter of the 5th inst., addressed to my wife, Mrs. Edward Merrick, relative to clipping from Chicago Tribune, is received, and in the absence of Mrs. Merrick, I will answer the same. The facts relative to the Igorrote incident are these: Mrs. Merrick propounded quite a number of questions in the Creek Indian language to this particular Igorrote, and strange to say he understood her perfectly; there can not be the slightest doubt of this fact. His answers were in the main given very briefly and in broken English mixed with Spanish and Igorrote. However, the fact remains that the Igorrote understood the Creek language; his replies were always made without hesitating a moment and were all responsive to the questions asked. I considered the incident as something remarkable. Yours very truly, Edward Merrick."

Bro. J. M. Baker writes from Sioux City, Iowa, the principal features of his letter being that what with the strike, of which Sioux City is one of the storm-centers, the increasing interest in the presidential campaign, the political and economic disturbances, pretty nearly everywhere observable, keep the people—the ordinary people—from taking much interest in the gospel economy.

Bro. M. M. Turpen wrote August 5 that they would close their meetings at Hamburg on the 7th and move the tent to a grove near Riverton, Iowa. They would labor there until the reunion at Thurman on the 19th.

Bro. E. A. Goodwin, Cadillac, Michigan, forwards clipping from the Evening News of that place. It is devoted to the condition of the local branch and differences between the Reorganized and Utah churches.

We are indebted to Brn. W. P. and H. J. Bootman, of Thayer, Missouri, for a basket of Oregon County peaches. They were distributed among the Herald Office force and were enjoyed by all.

The Kansas City World noted the visit of the Senior Editor in Independence, Missouri, and the tent-meetings being held there. It says: "This present meeting is highly significant from the fact that for the first time in the history of this community there is beginning to be coöperation between the other churches and this one. The sermon to-night will be by the Reverend J. J. Martin, pastor of the Watson Memorial Methodist Church."

Patriarch Alexander H. Smith preached to Lamoni Saints on Sunday morning (14th). His sermon was reported and will appear in our next issue.

President Dewsnup is very busy at present in securing faculty for Graceland. He reports progress and looks forward to a successful year in college work. Notice will appear next week.

THE ATONEMENT.

The following correspondence between Bro. D. P. Young and myself represents two distinct and conflicting views on a very important subject, both of which (I have reason to believe) are entertained, more or less, by those in the church. So far as Bro. Young is concerned, he informs me it was not written for publication; but so far as I am concerned, the second reply was written with the thought that it might be published.

Each writer avows his confidence in the position he advocates, rather than in his ability to do justice to its defense. Our purpose is not mastery, but truth; therefore the two conflicting positions are submitted to the reader in juxtaposition, believing, as we do, that this will be a means of helping him to reach proper conclusions.

With the Saints, there should be no feeling, or thought, against proper criticism, thorough investigation, and friendly controversy. And, by the way, when opposite views are held, a friendly, full, and free interchange of thought is indispensable to a thorough investigation, and is a leading means of protection and safety to the people. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good," is old, but sound, and should never be permitted to become obsolete.

Carefully read, think, pray, and search the sacred books of the church, and you will be amply repaid for the effort.

J. R. LAMBERT.

HOLDEN, Missouri, March 29, 1904.

MR. J. R. LAMBERT, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: I have just read your sermon as published in the Ensign of March 24. The subject of man's redemption, through the atonement of Christ, is always one of interest to me, considering it as I do, the summum bonum of the Christian religion.

There is very much in your sermon that is good, and will give inspiration to the cause in which we all are engaged; but there are some thoughts presented, also, to which I take exceptions. But you will not consider this strange, however, as it would be too much to expect, while looking "through a glass darkly," to "see eye to eye" upon all points.

I am quite certain you would much rather hear what I have to say relative to that portion of your sermon with which I do not agree, than listen to anything I might feel disposed to offer in the way of praise for the many good points contained in it. And with this thought in mind, I have no apology to offer for what is herein presented, except to state that my only desire is to be found standing on the side of truth.

I firmly believe, where a difference of opinion exists, there is no better way of coming together than through a discussion of the matter; provided it is done in a calm, dispassionate manner, and with a view to obtaining truth.

Before calling your attention to the particular portion of your sermon to which exceptions are taken, I wish to lay down a rule which shall serve as a basis from which to reason, and which to my mind is a safe one by which to try all questions of this kind which are of sufficient importance to engage our attention at all. Here is the rule: To test the truth or falsity of any position which one may take relating to the Christian philosophy, or any statement of scripture which may be used in defense of a position, one must show the relationship existing between his respective theories and some foundation principle. Let me state the above in another form: In the gospel of Christ are certain well-defined, fixed, and eternal principles, which are fundamental in their character; hence any thought which may be presented, relative to the Christian religion, that in any way does violence to those foundation principles, can not be true.

That there may be exceptional cases, where the above rule for judging the merits of scripture statements will not apply, I am willing to admit; but they are the exceptions and not the rule; and because such exceptions do exist is no argument against the necessity for some rule by which to test all matters, where it will apply; and is needful to an intelligent understanding of any question under dispute. With the above I am sure you will agree, so will proceed and try to show wherein some of your presentments in the sermon referred to, are found wanting, when measured by the above rule.

You say: "There is a technical difference between Christ's being a Redeemer and a Savior." I fail to see how this can be true, since to be saved would be to be redeemed, and redemption to me is salvation. However, this is not the particular point in your sermon with which I am concerned.

In speaking of the sin of our foreparents, you say: "The sin was of that character that after it had been committed and the penalty was applied, man had no power to reinstate himself in favor with God; that is, he had no power to reinstate himself before God in a condition that would secure to him eternal life, until something was done for him. You then discuss, throughout your sermon, and try to show what particular thing was done for man, by Christ, that was the means of reinstating him in a condition whereby his salvation became a possibility. And it is this something that you say was done for man, by Christ, that I object to; not that I do not think what was done by Christ, and all that he did, was in the interests of man's salvation; but I object to the thought that any personal act of his in any way changed man's condition, so as to make his works of righteousness any more "meritorious" in the sight of God, with, and since Christ's work, than it would have been, had the same works of righteousness been done before, or since, without the Christ.

When you take the position that Christ's death, or any number of his personal acts, had anything to do with changing the mind and will of God towards man, or making his individual acts a means whereby man's obedience would be more acceptable in the sight of God, than if done without Christ or his works, you are doing violence to the foundation principles of Christ's doctrine; for he taught that obedience to the doctrine he brought, and which he claimed was not his, but the Father's, would secure to man eternal life; and this agrees with Paul where he says: "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation."

The scriptures abound with statements such as: "That without the death of Christ man could not be saved;" "there is no other name given under heaven whereby man can be saved, but by Jesus Christ," etc. All of which I accept as not only being in the scriptures, but I accept it as being true, that without the Christ and all that he did, man could not have secured salvation. But when I ask what did Christ do, that made it possible for man to obtain salvation, I am compelled, if I would hold the principles of his doctrine inviolate, to answer, his work was to reveal to man the plan of salvation. And right here I wish to suggest the thought, that with this view of the mission-work of Christ being accepted as true, is all that is needful to defend every scripture statement concerning the necessity of Christ, as a Redeemer of the world.

With the plan of life and salvation revealed as it was through Jesus Christ, man could avail himself of its benefits by obeying it; and who would say that had it been possible for man to have found the plan of salvation without Christ, that obedience to its principles would not have redeemed him? Neither the scriptures nor Christ so teach. For where in all of his teaching do we find him saying it would add anything to the plan of salvation for him to suffer death upon the cross?

Why, an acceptance of his doctrine would have precluded the possibility of such a tragedy, and shall we say that Christ was not in earnest in his pleading for the world of mankind to accept him with his doctrine? Of course we hear him saying to his disciples that it was needful for him to die in order to man's salvation; but never did he intimate that obedience to his doctrine would not save the world, without his death; surely the redemption of man would have been wrought out as effectually by the perfect life of righteousness which Christ lived, had all men received him with his doctrine, without his death upon the cross. If not, Christ was making strange pretensions in telling the world that obedience to his doctrine as he was obedient to it, would save them, if indeed it was necessary to man's salvation to have the tragedy of the cross enacted.

Ah! Bro. Lambert, such a thought does violence to every principle of Christ's doctrine. Stop and think a moment, and ask yourself the question: Is it possible that the mission-work of Christ would have been a failure if all the world had received him in the same manner as some did? According to your position, to which I am objecting, it certainly would.

Now I believe in the necessity of Jesus Christ as a redeemer of the world; I believe it was absolutely necessary, and without him man could not have been saved. But this is not equivalent to saying that the suffering of Christ and his final death upon the cross was any part of his work. All of that was incidental and might have been averted by an acceptance of him as the Savior, by the world of mankind; but God, foreseeing that the world would not accept him with the plan of salvation, spoke through his inspired prophets and foretold what would take place.

It is often said that what happened, and all that happened in the mission-work of Christ, had to be, to fulfill the scriptures concerning it. Now while this is true, let us remember that the prophetic statements concerning the Christ were not all based upon the fact of their being necessary, and consequently must happen. But the prophetic statements were based upon the facts that such things would be, and would have occurred independent of any prophecy concerning them. Hence the thought that they were needed to fulfill prophecy is not the best side to take in the consideration of this question.

Now I have written lengthily, perhaps too much so. In all probability you will feel justified in considering much, if not all that I have said, as being irrelevant and of little importance. But what I have said was not for the purpose of criticising for the sake of it, but rather for showing the necessity of reaching all our conclusions relative to the principles of salvation by a consideration of them, by their relationship to some fixed and eternal principle of truth.

I believe that Christ went through the process of atonement for the purpose of showing man how to do it; and because of his doing so, the scriptures say, he atoned for (because of) the sins of the world. He atoned, that we might know how to atone for sin. And just as Christ lived a perfect life of righteousness so we must do before we can get salvation. And if we only get a partial salvation it will be determined by the extent to which we approximate to the life of righteousness which Christ lived.

Salvation full and complete can only be claimed by those who are willing and able to make any sacrifice which Christ made, even though it be not demanded of them. It adds nothing to the man who is able and willing to give his life for a principle, to take that life from him. Christ was not better for doing so; but in giving his life for truth he demonstrated to man, not only his loyalty, but set an example that would be a source of inspiration to him without which, as you say, "man never could have nerved himself to accomplish."

The world of thinkers, for the past thousands of years, have been going astray on the atonement of Christ, in mistaking God's means of revealing the plan of salvation, for the plan itself. It would be reflecting too much upon God's wisdom to say, or even intimate, that he did not choose the very best way for the accomplishment of his purposes in man's redemption. And while I could admit of the possibility for God to have chosen some other means for revealing the plan of salvation, other than through the Christ, I am in no sense willing to believe that God, with all of his infinite wisdom, could have chosen any other plan. But I hold that so far as Christ's personal acts were concerned, they had no more to do with the plan of salvation, or in making it more effectual, than the act of making an arithmetic has to do with adding anything to the principles the book teaches, or the death of our colonial fathers had in making the principles for which they gave their lives, better, or more effectual to us.

Whatever you may think of my theory of the atonement of Christ, you will be able to see that I hold to the principal thing, namely, obedience to Christ's doctrine, or the gospel, in order to obtain life eternal.

The above view of this matter of the atonement, to me, puts the scriptures and Christ's teaching in full harmony, whereas any other veils the whole in mystery.

Very truly yours, etc.,

D. P. YOUNG.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 17, 1904.

Dear Brother: Your communication of March 29 has already been acknowledged by card. I regret that I am not able to give it that extended notice that its character demands, but will undertake a brief reply.

As I have already said, "I may be wrong." You may be right. It is fitting that we fallible mortals make this concession always. Nevertheless, I do not believe I am wrong. I believe that my position is in complete harmony with the teachings of the three books, Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. I further believe that your position can not be made to appear to harmonize with all the authoritative declarations contained in said books, without resorting to a doubtful system of interpretation. I notice you claim that your position is in harmony with all scripture and mine is not; but no quotation is given or cited in support of either assertion.

You give a rule by which, it is claimed, we may properly test any and every claim made concerning the Christian religion. That is, as I understand you, the claim made or theory held must be in harmony with "some foundation principle." Now, suppose the claim made is itself a foundation principle. What then? I do not oppose the rule, but bare presumption as to what is fundamental and what is not, is altogether another thing. More than this, when a fundamental is cited with which I am said to be in conflict, it must be shown that there can exist no proper relationship between my position and the "foundation principle" referred to.

Allow me to illustrate: You claim that my position on the atonement, and the promise of salvation to the obedient, made by Jesus Christ, are in conflict with each other. Are they? Let us see. What are we required to obey? Doubtless we will agree that we are required to obey the gospel. Very well, then what is the gospel? You have said, "It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

So we see, from this scripture and many others, that salvation is offered to those who believe just as much as to those who obey. There is no conflict between faith and obedience. Now I hold that the atonement made by Jesus Christ, which includes his death, is a part of the gospel plan and is extremely fundamental in its character. Is it not true that the gospel contains facts and principles which we are required to believe? ordinances which we are required to obey? promises which we are required to secure? I think so.

I am sure you will not require me to prove that the promise of salvation is made only to those who believe in Jesus Christ; but you will, without doubt, require me to furnish you with what I regard as proof that the death of Christ is a part of the gospel plan. In Luke 24: 45-47, we learn that it behooved Christ to suffer (die) just in the same sense that it behooved him to rise from the dead. He died on the cross as a voluntary act in obedience to the commandment of his father (John 10: 11, 15, 17, 18); and in John 12: 50, we learn that his father's commandment "is life everlasting."

When Paul preached the plan of salvation to the people at Corinth, he taught the death and resurrection of Christ. (1 Corinthians 15: 1-3.) Why? Because they are a part of "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." (Romans 1: 16.)

Nephi 4: 8, last three lines, read six or seven lines beginning with the word behold, and you will find that here, as elsewhere, it is stated that Christ died for the people, not merely and exclusively for the truth, as you put it. The fact is, Bro. Young, that many of these statements are much stronger than my sermon on the very point where you think I am wrong. Mosiah 8: 5: In the midst of this paragraph, you will find the words, "having redeemed them and satisfied the demands of justice." Justice is a fundamental principle and one of the leading attributes of the divine character. The Book of Mormon teaches that without it "God would cease to be God." Was it necessary that Christ should satisfy the demands of justice? 2 Nephi 6:9: This is in complete harmony with Mosiah 8:5, and is exceedingly strong and plain. Surely, my position as announced in the sermon objected to is no stronger than this, nor is it in conflict with this. Helaman 5:6: "For behold, he surely must die, that salvation may come," etc. This shows plainly that his death is a part of the plan of redemption. Doctrine and Covenants 76:4, beginning with the words, "And this is the gospel": This passage is too plain to be misunderstood. It settles the question in harmony with my position; viz., that the atonement, which includes the death of Christ, is an important part of the divine plan. "And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus, to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world," etc.

The resurrection of the dead is one of the most important principles of the gospel. Without it the plan of redemption would be a failure. This, I think, you will admit. Now the Book of Mormon teaches that one purpose of Christ's death was to bring about the resurrection of the dead. (2 Nephi 6:9; 1:6.) From the last citation we learn that the Messiah was to lay down his life that he might take it again "by the power of the Spirit, that he may bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, being the first that should rise." Notice, also, the first words of the paragraph, "Behold, he offereth himself a sacrifice for sin, to answer the ends of the law, unto all those who have a broken heart and a contrite spirit; and unto none else can the ends of the law be answered."

Alma 8:10: Notice, "the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death;" etc.

Helaman 5:6: The prophet, Samuel, herein furnishes us with a statement of three very important purposes for which Christ died. First, "That salvation may come." Second, "And it becometh expedient that he dieth, to bring to pass the resurrection of the dead." Third, and by means of the resurrection, as herein stated, "Men may be brought into the presence of the Lord." Fourth, "Behold, this death bringeth to pass the resurrection, and redeemeth all mankind from the first death," etc.

I am aware that your claim is that the atonement is only the means by which the divine plan was established. My answer is, I have already shown by irrefutable proof that the atonement is a very important part of the plan of salvation. It is not simply the making of the arithmetic, but is a part of the perfect science contained therein. Moreover, if it was necessary for Christ to die in order that the truth might be "revealed" to the people, then was not his death important and essential? You have not only taken the position that the atonement of Christ is no part of the divine plan, but you have also affirmed that his death and sufferings were no part of his work as a redeemer, and that all this might have been averted had all the people received his doctrine. But as herein stated, I claim that the atonement is a part of his doctrine. Christ and the apostles never presented a plan to the people, obedience to which would save them, separate and apart from the atonement. The atonement and the principles of the gospel are inseparably connected. "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." Further, we are not dealing with conditions as they might have been, but as they were.

If your claim is correct, then Christ did not die for those who received his doctrine, for you affirm that had all received it there would have been no necessity for his death; yet it is a fact that the scriptures teach that he died for all men, but especially for those who would receive the truth. I make no citations here, for I take it for granted that you will concede the truth of this assertion.

It may be that I misunderstand you, but it seems to me that some of your positions are in conflict with each other. For instance, on page 9 of your article you say: "Now I believe in the necessity of Jesus Christ as a redeemer of the world. I believe it was absolutely [mark the word] necessary, and without him man could not have been saved." On pages 12 and 13 we have the following: "It would be reflecting too much upon God's wisdom to say, or even intimate, that he did not choose the very best way for the accomplishment of his purposes in man's salvation; and while I could admit the possibility for God to have chosen some other means for revealing the plan of salvation, other than through the Christ, I am in no sense willing to believe that God, with all of his infinite wisdom, could have chosen any other plan."

To me these passages are contradictory. Furthermore, I do not believe that it was possible for God to have secured the same grand results, without the Christ, any more than without the truth separate and apart from Christ. Again I say they are inseparably connected.

Will you please explain to me how it is that little children who are not capable of believing the gospel are "sanctified through the atonement of Jesus Christ"? (See Doctrine and Covenants 74:3; Moroni 8:2.)

My remark concerning the technical difference between a redeemer and a savior was an incidental one. What I meant was this: as a redeemer Christ delivered from bondage of sin and its penalties; but as a savior he did much more than this. I admit that redemption is salvation, but salvation is sometimes more than redemption. However, I am aware that the two words are often used synonymously and interchangeably, and it may be that so far as the Bible use is concerned, I was not warranted in making even that technical difference. It is not a material point.

There is much, very much, in your article that I can heartily commend. My view of the atonement does not detract from the importance of the truth as taught by Jesus and his apostles, nor from personal righteousness and obedience to God. Paul, who taught all these, was a model minister of the gospel, and in his preaching made an effort to confine himself to the divine plan, said: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified."—1 Corinthians 2:2. "For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks [Gentiles] seek after wisdom, but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block and unto the Greeks foolishness, but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God."—1 Corinthians 1:22-24.

Your brother,
J. R. LAMBERT.

HOLDEN, Missouri, July 9, 1904.

J. R. LAMBERT, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: Your reply to my letter of criticism upon your sermon as published in Ensign, was received in due time. I immediately sent postal card acknowledgment, stating that I would make reply at some future time; and also stated that from what you said you had misapprehended me somewhat; I thought you had failed to comprehend my position.

Have just reread your letter and am still of the opinion that you are laboring under a mistake as to what my claim really is, in regard to the atonement, or redemptive work of Christ.

So far as your position is concerned I am quite certain I understand it, and will endeavor in the following to make myself so clear that the question as to where I stand can not be misunderstood.

You mistake my position sadly, when on page 8 of your letter you say: "I am aware that your claim is that the atonement is only the means by which the divine plan was established." Evidently from the above and what follows as to what you say my claim is, your mistake as to my position arises from your idea of the atonement; for you say that you have clearly shown that the atonement is a very important part of the plan of salvation; meaning by the term atonement (as I understand you) the death of Christ.

My position is that the death of Christ is no part of the atonement; but the atonement results from, and was secured through, the perfect life of righteousness which Christ lived, his death being necessary only to evidence in the highest possible way his loyalty to the principles of righteousness, which principles are couched in his gospel; and according to Paul is the power of God unto salvation, etc. I further believe that all men under similar conditions must give their lives for the principles of truth, and would be equally necessary to their salvation; by this (life of righteousness) atonement is made for all sin. To the above I might add that the divinity of the atonement does not attach as a result of having been made by the Christ as a divine, infinite being, but is within itself, an infinite thing; atonement must, and would result through such a life as Christ lived, let it be lived by whomsoever it would.

I object to the idea that Christ's death is any part of the plan of salvation, for as I have said in order to bring it about would necessitate a violation of the principles of love and justice; for how could Christ have been crucified had all men dealt justly with him, or had a kindly feeling toward him as the principle of love enjoins?

If your position be right then the thought as expressed in Acts 4:27, 28 is correct; and Pilate together with the rest of Christ's persecutors were there to do what God predetermined to be done. Do you accept this scripture as it reads, or are you willing to examine it in the light of other scriptures, and say as it reads it must be wrong? So far as I am concerned, I examine it in the same way as I would a statement of yours or any other man, that is by some principle of truth. If the scripture contained in those two verses is to remain in the Bible for my profit, it must be transposed something like this: For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together.

They were gathered together against the Christ, but to say God foreordained such a thing, to my mind is contrary to both reason and the principles of truth as taught throughout the word of God.

The above may be taken as my system of interpreting the scriptures. Is it what you would call a "doubtful system"? I ask this question, because in your reply to my first letter you say my position can not be made to appear to harmonize with the standard books, without resorting to a doubtful system of interpretation.

In the rule I gave in my first communication for reaching conclusions as to the truth or falsity of any thought or idea which might be presented, either in the scriptures or elsewhere, I thought I clearly defined my position regarding that point.

I think you in error when you say: "The death of Christ is itself a foundation principle of the divine plan." Now is there no way for us to determine what is or what is not a foundation principle of the gospel of Christ? I think there is.

My understanding is, that before anything can take rank as a principle in any science, it must be shown to be of such character as to be in perfect accord with every other principle of the science. Now, as before said, the Christian philosophy is composed of certain well-defined, fixed, and eternal principles, and whatever claims to be a principle in that science must be in perfect accord with those principles which the science contains, which are well defined, fixed, and eternal.

Now if the death of Christ be a part of, or a principle in that science, we will expect it to take its place without interfering with any of the rest of the principles contained therein; or in other words, before we can accept it as a principle of the divine plan we must be able to see a direct relationship to the other principles. Can this be done? Let us see: Repentance is a principle of Christ's doctrine, so are justice and love. All of these are among the fundamental principles of the Christian religion. Let us see if we can make the death of Christ a principle of the same, without doing violence to the other principles. For surely if the death of Christ was necessary to complete the plan of salvation, there must of necessity have been some lawful means whereby it might be brought about. And since according to the doctrine of Christ this could not have been done without violating the principles of love and justice, we conclude as before, his death was not a principle of the plan.

You may not consider the above good philosophy, but to me it is the only logical deduction possible.

In support of your position you have given rather an extensive scripture reference; none of which was new to me, and the most of them I had marked in my books as a result of former study of this question.

There is no doubt but that the scriptures teach the necessity of Christ's death; they teach plainly that without it man could not be saved. This you believe and so do I. Now: I hold when I make a claim of this kind I am in duty bound to give a reason why the death of Christ was necessary; and so must the scriptures be its interpreter as to why it makes such claim. All of this is necessary to an intelligent understanding of the matter.

Man is an intelligent being, and as such, has the right to demand good evidence and sound reasons for his belief in anything, and especially for his belief in what concerns him most in the life that now is, and which is supposed to affect his future destiny.

I understand the books teach the necessity of Christ's death; they also teach that it was for the purpose of bringing about the resurrection, without which (the resurrection) man could not be redeemed; but nowhere in the scriptures do I find where it states upon what principle his death does bring about the resurrection, and neither have you explained this matter. You and the scriptures both say it was for that purpose. Alma in the Book of Mormon does say, however, (in his words to Corianton,) the atonement brought to pass the resurrection. The atonement, (not the death of Christ). I hold (and it agrees with Alma, and I know of no scripture against the position) that the resurrection was conditional upon the atonement, which atonement required such a life of righteousness as Christ lived.

Before man could settle in full for his resurrection he must either before or after subscribe to such a life as Christ lived; and I further hold that God could not in justice to man have resurrected him upon any other terms, for without such a life of righteousness man could not reach the highest and best that his soul yearns for. And for man to be denied any good thing that he desires when he is willing to pay for it would be unjust; and God would be held liable in that he made man with his good desires, and hence must make a way of escape for him from any and every environment surrounding him for which he is not personally responsible, that in any way militates against his reaching the highest and best that is possible.

No, I am not objecting to the thought that the death of Christ was necessary to man's salvation, for I believe it was; but I do object to the thought that his death was of such a nature as would make man's works of righteousness more "meritorious" in the sight of God than the same works would have been if done without his death. I hold that the works of righteousness are the things that God wants man to do. And it was for the purpose of getting man to do them that he sent his Son: Man was lost and could not find himself; the way back from whence he had strayed existed, but he could not find it; so Christ was sent for the purpose of revealing it to him.

So long as I can not devise a better way for revealing the plan of salvation than the one God used, I shall not complain of his method; notwithstanding as I have said, possibly God might have chosen some other. But the plan itself, that which requires man to repent of his works of evil and turn from them to works of righteousness, is immutable, hence God himself is powerless to change or institute another that would answer the purpose.

Yes, the gospel of Christ is indeed the power of God unto salvation, for therein is the righteousness of God revealed. Even those who were instigators of the persecution against the Christ, may have salvation by complying with its terms. The gospel of Christ, what is it? To me it embodies every righteous principle known, obedience to which conduces to man's moral betterment. You may see and understand more of the gospel than I do, I may be able to see more, or less, than others.

You say: "We are not dealing with things as they might have been, but as they were." Just so. But is this any argument against the thought that things might have been different from what they were? According to your theory things could not have been different, and the idea as expressed in Acts 4 is correct, if indeed it takes the death of Christ to help make the plan of salvation.

Liberty and the right of self-government are principles of the highest type of human government; for these principles and others our Revolutionary fathers gave their lives. Without this sacrifice neither they nor we could have secured these rights. Why? Because our mother country would not allow it. Not that the death of our fathers gave these principles their value, but through their death we are made partakers of the blessing.

And just as our colonial fathers might have been partakers of their rights and transmitted the same to us without their death, had conditions been different, so the world of mankind through obedience to Christ's doctrine might have life eternal without the death of Christ.

Let me here contrast my views of this matter with yours: What would be the result if after Christ has died the world of mankind should fail to obey his doctrine? Let the prophet, Abinadi, answer: "But remember, he that persists in his own carnal nature, and goes on in the way of sin and rebellion against God, remaineth in his own fallen state, and the devil hath all power over him, therefore he is as though there was no redemption made, being an enemy to God and also is the devil an enemy to God." Suppose Christ now to have been successful in getting the world of mankind to obey his doctrine without giving his life, what would have been the result? I would not like you to answer the question for me, but I think I could trust Abinadi if he were here, for methinks I hear him say: Salvation full and complete.

You complain of me charging you with being out of harmony with some of the foundation principles of the gospel, without giving any citation to prove the assertion. I trust in the foregoing you will be able to see that your position would be at variance with the principles of justice and love, for certainly it would be unjust for the Father to require the death of his innocent Son to satisfy any demand against his sinful children.

And as I have shown: To bring about the death of Christ would necessitate the violating of the principle of love, and of breaking the commandment, Thou shalt not kill.

You think also, that my belief in the absolute necessity of Christ as a redeemer, and my admission that possibly God might have chosen some way for revealing the gospel, or plan of salvation, other than through the Christ, are contradictory.

Let me explain: God had the right to choose his own way for doing his work. My belief is based upon the hypothesis that God had chosen to do his work through the Christ, and notwithstanding he might have chosen some other means, yet after he made choice, it became absolutely necessary. I think you see my position.

You ask me to explain how it is that little children who are not capable of believing the gospel are sanctified through the atonement of Jesus Christ. My answer is, If little children are ever to be sanctified (using the word to mean to be made purified, clean, holy, etc., as applied in the scriptures to man, redeemed), it will be done in the same way that big children are to become sanctified; through obedience to the gospel. Of course such obedience can not take place until such time as they are able to obey intelligently and this will not be until after the resurrection to those who die in childhood. According to the scriptures (and this is just) all is restored to them through Christ that was lost through the sin of Adam.

Yes, through the atonement all men are to be redeemed, brought back into the presence of God. If you think that the scriptures teach that children are to be sanctified, or redeemed in any other way than indicated above, (and I think you do,) then it will be my time to ask you to explain how it can be done. Evidently little children will not be very far behind the most of us at the beginning, after the resurrection; so there will be no serious injustice in their having all to do in the next life.

Well, Bro. Lambert, after all that has been said in your sermon, together with all that has been said by me, or that can be said concerning this subject, it has little to do with our obtaining salvation; for that will depend upon our righteousness. But I do think it well for us to have an intelligent understanding of whatever we profess to believe. Whether the death of Christ be a principle of the plan of salvation as you believe, and must have occurred in order to man's redemption, or whether his death was a mere incident because of conditions which prevailed and might have been different as I believe, will neither stand for or against our chances for salvation.

If in all that has been said in this long (too long, perhaps) letter, and notwithstanding I would very much like to hear what you have to offer in reply, yet I feel to say: Should you consider yourself unable either by reason of poor health or for want of time from other duties, to give it sufficient notice to make such reply, you may consider whatever disposition you may see fit to make of it will be satisfactory with me.

Trusting that some good at least may result from our effort, I am,

Yours in bonds of brotherly love,

D. P. YOUNG.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 25, 1904.

D. P. YOUNG, Holden, Missouri.

Dear Brother: Your second letter, in reply to my first, was received a short time ago.

I regret to learn that I unwittingly misstated your position, to some extent, but I think I understand it better now, and will exercise all possible care to avoid misrepresenting you. To me some of your positions are inconsistent with and contradictory to each other; and it is no great wonder that, to some extent, I should misapprehend your meaning.

I took it for granted that you would be willing to concede that the death of Christ is a part of the atonement which he made for sin; for, as I understand it, this claim is fully and plainly sustained by the testimony of the scriptures. But I see now (what perhaps I should have seen before) that your position is, "that the death of Christ is no part of the atonement"—no "part of the plan of salvation." And yet, strange to say, on page 7 of your letter, you make the following strong statements: "There is no doubt but what the scriptures teach the necessity of Christ's death; they teach plainly that without it, man could not be saved."

How is this? If man could not be saved without Christ's death, then it performed an indispensable part in securing for him eternal salvation. Strange, that it saves man and yet is no part of the plan of salvation! Right here I present two pertinent questions: Does it require more than the plan of salvation to save man? If so, what and how much more is required? Please do not forget your own quotation that the gospel "is the power of God unto salvation."

Allow me to say, in this connection, that I have never claimed that the death of Christ was the entire atonement made by him. Notwithstanding the fact that you think you understand my position on this point so well, you have, unwittingly, of course, misrepresented my position, as stated in my first reply. I do not accept Jesus Christ at any discount whatever, but in the comprehensive sense set forth in 1 Corinthians 1:30: "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."

Christ's important work as a teacher who came from God, and who lived a pure and righteous life, as an example for all men, was set forth in the sermon to which you object. My position on this point was also indicated in the following statements of my first reply:

Now I hold that the atonement made by Jesus Christ, which includes his death, is a part of the gospel plan, and is extremely fundamental in its character. . . .

It settles the question in harmony with my position; viz., that the atonement, which includes the death of Christ, is an important part of the divine plan.

So, when you represent me as merely meaning the death of Christ, when I refer to the atonement, you are mistaken. To me the atonement means all that it does to you, and more.

I notice, briefly, your remarks on the character of the atonement as set forth on pages 2 and 3 of your last letter. If I understand you correctly, any human being can atone for sin, just as well as Christ did, if he lives as well. This statement contains truth, but as I see it, is not sufficiently broad, and is therefore misleading and contrary, in part, to the testimony of the scriptures. As you put it, Jesus only atoned for his own sins and thereby revealed the way in which we can, in like manner, atone for ours; but the scriptures teach that he atoned for the sins of all men, and that no sacrifice which was wholly human would do:

If so, woe shall come upon you; but if not so, then cast about your eyes and begin to believe in the Son of God, that he will come to redeem his people, and that he shall suffer and die to atone for their sins.—Alma 16: 26.

Following this testimony of Alma, we have the words of Amulek on the same subject:

And now behold, I will testify unto you myself, that these things are true. Behold, I say unto you, that I do know that Christ shall come among the children of men, to take upon him the transgressions of his people, and that he shall atone for the sins of the world; for the Lord God has spoken it; for it is expedient that an atonement should be made; for according to the great plan of the eternal God, there must be an atonement made, or else all mankind must unavoidably perish; yea, all are hardened; yea, all are fallen, and are lost, and must perish except it be through the atonement which it is expedient should be made; for it is expedient that there should be a great and last sacrifice; yea, not a sacrifice of man, neither of beast, neither of any manner of fowl; for it shall not be a human sacrifice; but it must be an infinite and eternal sacrifice."

Now there is not any man that can sacrifice his own blood, which will atone for the sins of another. Now if a man murdereth, behold, will our law, which is just, take the life of his brother? I say unto you, nay. But the law requireth the life of him who hath murdered; therefore there can be nothing, which is short of an infinite atonement, which will suffice for the sins of the world; therefore it is expedient that there should be a great and last sacrifice; and then shall there be, or it is expedient there should be, a stop to the shedding of blood; then shall the law of Moses be fulfilled; yea, it shall be fulfilled; every jot and every tittle, and none shall have passed away. And behold, this is the whole meaning of the law; every whit pointing to that great and last sacrifice; and that great and last sacrifice will be the Son of God; yea, infinite and eternal; and thus he shall bring salvation to all those who shall believe on his name; this being the intent of the last sacrifice, to bring about the bowels of mercy, which overpowereth justice and bringeth about means unto men that they may have faith unto repentance. And thus mercy can satisfy the demands of justice, and encircles them in the arms of safety, while he that exercises no faith unto repentance, is exposed to the whole law of the demands of justice; therefore, only unto him that has faith unto repentance, is brought about the great and eternal plan of redemption.—Alma 16: 27, 28.

I have purposely quoted at length from one of the most spiritual sermons recorded in the Book of Mormon. This effectually settles the questions as to whether the death of Christ is any part of the atonement, or any part of the plan of salvation; and they are settled too in complete harmony with the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants. It settles the question as to the character of the atonement. The blood of man, beast, or fowl would not suffice. You see, I run against no snag in the scriptures, while advocating the view to which you object; but I do not know of any scripture which is conclusive proof of your position.

In my last, I quoted from the vision of Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, Doctrine and Covenants, section 76, to show that the death of Christ on the cross is an important part of the gospel plan. To this you made no reply. In paragraph 3 we have the following:

We, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, being in the Spirit on the sixteenth of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, by the power of the Spirit our eyes were opened, and our understandings were enlightened, so as to see and understand the things of God; even those things which were from the beginning before the world was, which were ordained of the Father, through his only begotten Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, even from the beginning, of whom we bear record, and the record which we bear is the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the Son, whom we saw, and with whom we conversed in the heavenly vision. . . . And now after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God.

Now connect the above grand and significant testimony with what is found in the midst of paragraph 4, as given and referred to in my last:

And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness, that through him all might be saved, whom the Father had put in his power, and made by him.

One more testimony from the Doctrine and Covenants:

For, behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer, if they would repent; but if they would not repent, they must suffer even as I; which suffering caused myself, even God the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit, and would that I might not drink the bitter cup, and shrink; nevertheless, glory be to the Father, and I partook and finished my preparations unto the children of men.—Sec. 18, par. 2.

This agrees with the testimony of Paul, as referred to in my last, where he makes the death and resurrection of Christ not only a part of the gospel, but a fundamental part.

Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures.—1 Corinthians 15: 1-4.

My position on this scripture, and many others, you have failed to notice. Surely you are not going to ignore or seek to impeach the testimony of Paul, Peter, Alma, Amulek, Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Jesus Christ, are you?

In the past, in my controversies with ministers of other churches, I have ever refused to place myself in the attitude of an apologist for the Bible, for they were equally bound by its statements. Now this little interchange of thought is between professed Latter Day Saints. Therefore, I am under no obligations (and I find no necessity) to apologize for what I find written in the sacred books of the church. It is one thing to interpret what a man says, but it is a very different thing to ignore or seek to impeach his testimony.

You admit "that without the Christ and all that he did, man could not have secured salvation." Why, then, do you refuse to admit that which I have proven by the testimony of the scriptures, namely, that Christ's death is a part of the divine plan?

You illustrate your claim by reference to the colonial fathers who gave their lives that we might receive and enjoy the precious boon of political freedom. Now, while the cases are not parallel in one important consideration, the illustration is not without its benefits. Through the lifework and death of these noble sires, the principles of political liberty were made operative, and the knowledge of self-government (the only perfect government in existence) was brought to the people. Then I aver that their death was a part of the plan, divine plan, by which we were politically saved.

But this is not all: For while the killing of them was unjust and wicked, upon the part of their enemies, yet, through the hands of the infinite One, there has come to us a wondrous salvation, as set forth in Doctrine and Covenants, section 98, paragraph 10.

So, you see, political redemption has come to us through the shedding of blood. Now it is in order for me to ask you the following question: Were not the principles of love and justice violated in the killing of the colonial fathers?

But Christ died, as was plainly proven in my first letter, to satisfy the demands of justice and bring to pass the resurrection of the dead. No matter upon what principle it was done, the vital point is that it was done, and has become a leading fact of the gospel we are required to believe.

My argument, that Christ died to satisfy the demands of justice, you have ignored, unless your attempt to show that his death was in violation of the principles of love and justice is meant for a reply; and if it is, then you have succeeded in impeaching the testimony of leading Book of Mormon witnesses.

Man was laboring under the penalty of a just law which left him in the eternal embrace of death, and without the power to extricate himself from this terrible bondage. God's justice demanded the application of this penalty, which left man in a helpless and hopeless condition. Jesus Christ says, I will change this condition by offering myself as a "ransom for all." It was an offering of mercy and love, which overcame the demand of justice, not by opposing it, but by furnishing the equivalent of what was demanded, that all men might be freed from the Adamic sin, and if they would repent and obey the gospel, receive eternal life and peace as a reward; while all those who refuse to repent and obey, are delivered from temporal death, and are permitted to go into judgment and answer to God for their own individual sins, but are not required to answer for Adam's transgression.

More than this, justice required that the posterity of Adam, who are not individually guilty of his sin, should have as good an opportunity to secure eternal life as he had. Thus justice made a proper demand on God himself. He could not ignore this demand, because he is just. He found a ransom in the person of Jesus Christ, the second person in the Godhead. It was the Father's will that he should come and make the last great sacrifice for sin, and Jesus was willing to undertake this important mission. (See Genesis 3:3, I. T.; Hebrews 10:7, 10.)

Thus we see that instead of violating the principle of justice, its demands were met fully and grandly; and at the same time, there was such an exhibition of love and mercy, upon the part of God and Christ, as to challenge our admiration.

Now all this was predetermined or foreordained of God. (See Acts 4:27, 28; 2:23.) This predetermination was based on the foreknowledge of God and the agency which he has given to man. He foreknew just what the conditions would be, and worked with a view to these conditions. It was his will that man should have full latitude to his agency. The Book of Mormon tells us that the Jews are the only people who would have crucified their Redeemer and Savior. They could not, then, have had full latitude to their agency without the privilege of crucifying him. They were responsible for their own work. Jesus was not compelled to submit to this order of things, but he submitted from choice. He says:

Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I may take it again. No man taketh it from me; but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father.—John 10:17, 18.

Now, sacrifices which required the shedding of blood, under the law of Moses, were only temporary, and as the Book of Mormon teaches, pointed to the great and last sacrifice which should be made by the Lamb of God, who was, because God had ordained it, "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." (Revelation 13:8.)

Peter says we are "not redeemed with corruptible things, . . . but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot." (1 Peter 1:18, 19.)

The Jews were not commanded of God to offer this Lamb, but Christ, as God's great high priest, offered himself;

For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God.—Hebrews 9:13, 14.

The above passages show that Jesus was not compelled to submit to the demands of the Jews. The offering was wholly voluntary. "I lay down my life." "No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself." It was an offering of love and mercy which met the demands of justice, set every soul free, made the principles of the gospel operative, and, through faith and obedience (not obedience alone) brought every soul into a condition of reconciliation to and harmony with God.

When Jesus took the cup and gave it to his disciples, he said: "For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Immediately after this he took his disciples unto Gethsemane. It was a trying hour! The supreme moment had come!

"Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." He prayed: "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." He prayed again, saying: "O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink of it, thy will be done." (Matthew 26:28, 38, 39, 42.)

Now his enemies come upon him and impetuous Peter begins to fight. But Jesus tells him to put up his sword, adding these significant words: "Thinkest thou that I can not now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels? But how then shall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?"—Verses 53, 54.

So far as the part of Pilate and the Jews was concerned, God determined beforehand that it should be done, in the same sense that he determined to "send strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." (2 Thessalonians 2:11, 12.)

You say, if my "position be right, then the thought as expressed in Acts 4:27, 28 is correct." Exactly. Also Acts 2:23: "Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." These are not the only passages of scripture which prove my position to be right. I do not know of a single passage that stands in the way of my claim. Do you? I should judge from your frequent use of a part of Romans 1:16, "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation," that this is regarded by you as one of the strongest scripture evidences against my contention; but I have proven the death of Christ to be an important part of the atonement and plan of salvation. Paul says that "the gospel of Christ . . . is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

John says that Christ is the propitiation for our sins, and the sins of the whole world. (See 1 John 2:2; 3:10.) Paul says that he "gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified of in due time." (1 Timothy 2:6.) Paul also says, when treating on the offering of Jesus Christ, by himself, for sin, that "without shedding of blood is no remission." (Hebrews 9:22.)

I call attention to what is written in Revelation, chapter 5. Here we have a sealed book. The angel said: "Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?" "A lamb as it had been slain," took the book,

And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and the four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of the Saints. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation.

In your first letter you define what you think to be the purpose of God, or Christ, in the atonement. It was to show us how to atone for sin. "And because of doing so, the scriptures say, he atoned for [because of] the sins of the world."

Certainly he atoned because of the sins of the world, but the statement is too limited, and hence is misleading. Christ atoned for sin in his life, sufferings, and death, by doing for man what no other one, before or since, could do; that is, he made an infinite and eternal sacrifice.

"For" has a great variety of meanings as used in the Bible, and in many passages relating to Christ's sufferings and death the original from which we get the word for literally means "in behalf of," as defined by Young in his Analytical Concordance. Example: "This is my body which is given for [in behalf of] you."—Luke 22:19. Your parenthetical phrase is not sufficient to explain away my position.

Yes, I am willing to examine any passage of scripture in the light of other passages bearing on the same point, and this confirms me in the belief that Acts 4:27, 28 is correct. It agrees with Acts 2:23, with other scriptures, and is the same in the Inspired Version. The Revised Version contains precisely the same sentiment, though couched in somewhat different language.

Yes, I still adhere to what I said. In my opinion, in order to support your view by the scriptures, you are compelled to reject what is plainly revealed, that the atonement, including the sufferings and death of Jesus Christ, is a part of the plan of salvation, and then try it by your understanding of what you believe to be "fixed and eternal principles." Is not this a doubtful, and even dangerous, system of interpretation?

I want to call your attention to what I regard as a bad flaw in your reasoning. You have stated several times that the death of Christ can not be any part of the divine plan, because if the people had been good enough to have received his doctrine, there would have been no necessity for his death, and nobody to kill him! Now this is simply stating that if conditions had been radically different from what they were, Christ's death would neither have been necessary nor possible. Suppose I admit this to be true? I am writing about what was necessary and what God did, under existing conditions, and under no others. Again, I have already shown that if your contention be true, then Christ did not die for those who received his doctrine, but you must surely know that the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants teach that he died for all men.

You assume, contrary to the evidence, that the atonement, as I hold it, is no part of the doctrine of Christ. And yet you talk about fixed and eternal principles, such as repentance and baptism for the remission of sins. Suppose the people had commenced and continued to stop sinning, would repentance and baptism have remained fixed and eternal? Would they have not become obsolete at once? Then, too, we may truly say, that if the people had been sufficiently righteous and wise, they would have needed no Christ, or Savior, at all. God was dealing with conditions among the people as they existed, and not as he would have them to be.

You state that none of the many scripture passages to which I referred, were new to you. You had noticed them before and had most of them marked in your book, etc. It would have been much more satisfactory to me had you taken them up, one by one, and shown me how you get them out of the way.

You admit that one purpose of Christ's death, as set forth in the scriptures, was to bring about the resurrection of the dead, without which man can not be redeemed. This being true, is it not a part of the divine plan? No matter whether the scriptures reveal the principle upon which it is done, or not, it is a great gospel fact which we can not ignore. Why, my brother, will you deny that that which brings about the resurrection of the dead, and without which no man can be saved, is a part of the atonement?

But, you say, it was "the atonement"—not the death of Christ—which accomplished this. I have shown from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, that the death of Christ was and is an important part of the atonement, and now you undertake to prove that it is not by a passage from Alma, wherein he does not commit himself on this point either one way or the other! More than this, Alma explains his position in Alma 16:26, by saying that the Son of God will come "to redeem his people, and that he shall suffer and die to atone for their sins."

It seems to me, Bro. Young, you will have to throw away your view on the atonement, or the scriptures, for they are in direct antagonism on this point. It is easy to tell what Alma taught his son, in Alma 19: 12, in the light of the above quotation.

In this connection you present the speculative claim that each man brings about his own resurrection by his own atonement. In this you are justly entitled to credit (which credit you claim) for not only being ahead of me (for that would be a little thing), but ahead of the scriptures! The truth is, the scriptures teach that Jesus Christ brought to pass, or made possible, the resurrection of all men, and our condition in the resurrection will depend upon our works. (See John 5: 28, 29; 1 Corinthians 15: 22, 23, 28; Revelation 20: 5, 6, 12.)

The resurrection is unconditional, so far as we are concerned, but it is true, nevertheless, that it was brought to pass through the atonement of Jesus Christ.

You say, "Man was lost and could not find himself." "Christ was sent" to show him the way, etc. True, and what is the way? Let the Christ himself answer:

I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.—John 14: 6.

He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.—John 3: 36.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life.—John 5: 24.

One of the leading errors of the past has been the doctrine of salvation by faith only. Now shall we be found guilty of the folly of teaching salvation by works only? In the past the people have been too credulous. They believed what they were taught, namely, that Jesus did it all. Now, the trend of belief is to the opposite extreme, that is, "we can do it all; Jesus was simply and only a revealer of truth. We atone for ourselves and thus bring about our own resurrection," etc., etc. History repeats itself,—one extreme follows another. But if we will be wise enough to intelligently accept Jesus Christ as he is presented to us in the sacred books of the church, not forgetting that he is now, as well as in the past, a revealer of truth, we will not go far wrong.

The way existed, but man "could not find it." Yes, thank God, Jesus Christ is "the same, yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." (Hebrews 13: 8.) He was "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." (Revelations 13: 8.) Paul and his brethren preached Christ "and him crucified," though to the Jews it was "a stumbling block," and to the Greeks, "foolishness."

When you say that "according to your theory things could not have been different" from what they were, you greatly misrepresent my position. My position is, that considering the conditions, as they were, no other Christ and no other gospel would bring the same grand results. I am not at all concerned about what might have been under different conditions.

You quote from the teachings of Abinadi, as contained in the Book of Mormon, but, as in a number of other cases, you fail to give the reference. This places me in the awkward position of being unable to verify your quotations, or of being under the necessity of spending much time in looking them up. But I am confident that Abinadi did not teach in opposition to Nephi, Alma, Amulek, and a host of other worthies both of Book of Mormon and Bible fame. Speaking of the work of Christ for the salvation of the people, Abinadi says: "Being filled with compassion towards the children of men; standing betwixt them and justice; having broken the bands of death, taken upon himself their iniquity and their transgressions; having redeemed them and satisfied the demands of justice."—Mosiah 8: 5.

He also says in the same paragraph, speaking of Christ's seed: "I say unto you, that these are his seed, or they are heirs of the kingdom of God: for these are they whose sins he has borne; these are they for whom he has died, to redeem them from their transgressions." In succeeding paragraphs, Abinadi teaches that through Christ all men will be redeemed from temporal death; that little children have eternal life, etc., etc.

In your quotation, found in paragraph 8, Abinadi simply teaches that so far as future and eternal happiness is concerned, the atonement will not secure it for any, except they repent and live righteous and pure lives. But he does not teach that the atonement did nothing for the unrepentant. It brought within their reach all the privileges of the gospel, including deliverance from temporal death. Is it a safe way to interpret in such a manner as to place the leading witnesses in conflict with each other?

Amulek says (Alma 8: 10):

And he shall come into the world to redeem his people; and he shall take upon him the transgressions of those that believe upon his name; and these are they that shall have eternal life, and salvation cometh to none else; therefore the wicked remain as though there had been no redemption made, except it be the loosing of the bands of death; for behold, the day cometh that all shall rise from the dead, and stand before God, and be judged according to their works. Now there is a death which is called a temporal death; and the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death, that all flesh shall be raised from this temporal death.

This holy and inspired man goes on to say that this restoration "shall come to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous." And, after the resurrection, all are to stand before God in judgment. So there is a salvation which comes to all men, without any obedience upon their part. As Paul says: "For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, especially of those that believe."—1 Timothy 4: 10.

Contrasting your claim with mine, you say you would not like to trust me to answer your question, but you think you could trust Abinadi. Then you presume, in the absence of evidence, what his answer would be. But you are mistaken. Abinadi is against you also. In the light of what I have already adduced, I ask your thoughtful attention to the following words of Abinadi:

For were it not for the redemption which he hath made for his people, which was prepared from the foundation of the world; I say unto you, were it not for this, all mankind must have perished. But behold the bands of death shall be broken, and the Son reigneth and hath power over the dead; therefore, he bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead.—Mosiah 8: 6.

In my first reply I presented what appeared to me a contradiction. In your reply to this you kindly inform me what you meant. I am glad to understand your position, in full, but until you eliminate from your statement the word absolutely, the contradiction remains. Please look up the definition of the word absolute, and you will see that your statement implies that no other than the Christ under any circumstances whatever, would do.

Your answer to my question concerning the salvation of little children is not satisfactory. No matter what may occur after the resurrection, it is safe to believe that little children, who have not reached the years of accountability, are saved through the atonement, and this proves your theory to be wrong. However, you have no proof for your claim that they will be required to obey the first principles of the gospel after the resurrection. To say the most of it, it may or may not be true. Jesus said of these little ones, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 19: 14. "Of such is the kingdom of God."—Mark 10: 14. Luke makes the same statement as Mark. (See Luke 18: 16.) In Matthew 18: 3, we have the following: "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Verse 4 reads, "Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven." In verse 10 we have a statement which certainly implies celestial glory: "For I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." In the same chapter we read that "the Son of man is come to save that which is lost." Also, that "it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish."

If it is not the Father's will that these little ones should perish, and they are not old enough to make it necessary or possible for them to obey the gospel, what is the result? Salvation, of course. You almost conceded this in your own statement.

Abinadi, when speaking of redemption through Christ says: "And little children also have eternal life."—Mosiah 8: 6.

Mormon says that "little children are alive in Christ, even from the foundation of the world." He also says that parents should be taught to "repent and be baptized, and humble themselves as their little children, and they shall be saved with their little children; and their little children need no repentance, neither baptism."

Further: "And he that saith little children need baptism, denieth the mercies of Christ, and setteth at naught the atonement of him and the power of his redemption."—Moroni 8: 2, 3. "But little children are holy, being sanctified through the atonement of Jesus Christ."—Doctrine and Covenants 74: 3.

From the above passages you will see, I trust, why I asked the question, and that your speculative presumptions are a weak offset to the mass of evidence which sustains the view I advocate.

Mormon says that Jesus Christ spake to him on this subject, by the power of the Holy Ghost, saying among other things, "Wherefore the curse of Adam is taken from them in me, that it hath no power over them." To deny vicarious atonement is to deny the books. Little children are not in the same condition that we are, hence not subject to the same law; and whether they will be exposed to temptation, sometime after the resurrection, I neither admit nor deny, for it does not affect my argument in the least.

While this investigation has been a real task for me, on account of physical conditions, nevertheless, it has done me good. I am confirmed and strengthened in the belief that the Book of Mormon came forth at the right time, and those ancient worthies, whom it represents, enjoyed much light and inspiration. My effort has been weak and imperfect, I know; but my position, I believe, is strong and defensible. To meet an opponent who is a thinker, and at the same time honorable in his warfare, from the beginning to the end, is indeed a treat. May the truth march grandly on, as I believe it will, and find us ever ready to fall in line with its movements, is the prayer of,

Your brother in Christ,

J. R. LAMBERT.

Wireless Telegraphy in the Far East.

The recent successful employment of wireless telegraphy in the far East in affording a means of communication from the beleaguered Port Arthur, and especially in the transmission of war news from the war zone, has renewed attention to its potential utility. It is known that a wireless station was established at Golden Hill, at least as long ago as the spring of 1903, for regular communication between Port Arthur and the Russian warships in the Gulf of Pe-chi-li. In the waters of the far East there are at least five different systems of wireless telegraphy on the various warships and in the forts. The British have more than twenty vessels in those waters equipped with the Marconi system in which the filings coherer is used. The Italians, also, employ the Marconi system with the Solari coherer. The Germans are using the Slaby-Arco or the Braun system. The French vessels are equipped with the Braun system. The Japanese are employing a system which, it is asserted, is a modification of Marconi's; but this is denied by the Japanese. It is known that wireless experiments have been carried on by the Japanese Department of Communications and the Japanese navy since 1896.—From "Wireless telegraphy to-day," by William Maver, Jr., in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for August.

The Children.

There are many subjects upon which one may write, but none are dearer to me than the children. There is nothing I love better than children. The dear little, romping, laughing darlings with all their joys and sorrows! Who can be very lonely when there is a child in the house? Not many mothers, I assure you. There are some natures so selfish they do not respond to the open, loving, fearless natures of the little ones, but look upon them as intruders. Such are to be pitied, for they do not realize how much of the brightness of life they miss. "A babe in the house is a well-spring of pleasure," as it grasps each day new ideas, thus imparting new joys to those around it, who watch with loving admiration each act the little man or woman may choose to play in the drama of baby life. We may stand appalled before some great edifice or work of art, yet how tamely does it compare with the human body which the Great Architect has so wonderfully fashioned. Whenever I see little children, whether decked in ribbons, lace, and jewelry, or playing in the highway, making footprints in the dust along the roadside, I realize that life is before them. Their possibilities are as great as have ever been attained by man or woman, for our great people of to-day were all children but a few years since. Treat them not lightly, for 'twas said by him who spake as one having authority, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Small wonder then that they should impart so much brightness to the homes that are blessed with their presence! Sometimes tired and weary mothers do not reflect with gladness upon the coming of another little one into the family circle, as they would perhaps were they stronger, or their time not almost wholly occupied by other duties and cares. But judging from actual observation, I feel safe in asserting that wealth, position, nor aught else can bring that true pleasure to man or woman that comes when in companionship with their children.

Children who have been properly taught by their parents seldom fail to grow up good and useful. "As the twig is bent the tree is inclined," is an old proverb, and "Bring up the child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it," is another, and one which is often disputed, but nevertheless quite true. Yet there are exceptions to most rules; but there is more truth in the above than many like to admit. Many a good man or woman was lost to the world by spoiling the child, allowing it to become selfish and unreasonable. As the twig was bent so it continued through life. Some people consider life a failure because blinded by selfishness. Because they loved self so much they could not reach out and grasp any of the pleasures of life, they go through life bemoaning their misfortunes, when really a selfish disposition in childhood, which was not properly guarded against by parents and the child itself, was the one great misfortune of its life. This was the keynote to many other misfortunes which it naturally seemed were a part of life for it.

A picture comes before my mind which is drawn from life, of two sisters-in-law. One, the youngest of a family of children, spoiled and petted, and taught to believe she must have her own way about affairs; the other the eldest of six children. They married brothers and sometimes visited each other. The one did not like children—could not bear their noise, and did not wish to be bothered with squalling babies. The other loved them and did not consider life complete without them. But sometimes as one little visitor after another came until half a dozen romping children called her mother, she thought, Surely sister is a happy woman with no caps, hats, or bonnets to hunt and her house a model of neatness; and then she has so much time to do any kind of work she chooses, read, write, and improve her mind, as pleases her best.

The other cared for her aged mother, and she often remarked that it was such a pleasure to have her with her and visit in quietness with nothing to disturb. She did think it was awful to be bothered by so many children as were in the other home. But time passed on and the sons and daughters of one family grew to mature years and filled good positions in life with honor to themselves and parents, while the aged mother in the other home grew weary of life and passed over the river of death full of years and lamented by her children. Now note the change: The one a happy mother whose sons and daughters often said as they stroked her silvery hair, "Oh, I am so proud of my mother!" The husband when his day's work was done hastened homeward that he might join the happy home-circle where he was met with outstretched hands by happy, joyous children. But in the other home a gray-haired woman finds herself alone. Mother is dead; husband seems indifferent to his home. He was a great lover of children and has never been satisfied without their presence there. He is kind to her when there, but mills, mines, and other things engross his time and the home is run by hired help which is about the only companionship the lonely woman has. What would she not give for one child of her own? She realizes that none are so lonely as the aged who have no children to lean upon in their declining days! But none will come to her now, for she has grown so old she must abide by the choice of her younger days. Many times I have heard mothers remark, "I'll be glad when they get big," but to all such I would say, Be careful, for the day will come when you will wish them back again! Enjoy them while they are all your own, for too soon that dear boy will be a man, perhaps a soldier to fall in a foreign land, or choose a vocation which will call him from you; the daughters, perhaps, become brides to adorn other homes; while yet other forms may be sweetly sleeping the sleep "from which none ever wake to weep." Soon enough they will learn the hard stripes of life and bear what we have borne, and maybe more. Then let us keep them children while we can, and let us say with the poet:

"God bless the little children, darlings of our hearth,
The buds upon the trees of hope that thrill us with their mirth;
They bring us all our sunshine, and half our comforts bring,
The world is full of melody when the children sing.

"God keep the little children in the safe and narrow way,
For the little dancing feet go easily astray!
God bless them, yes, God bless them; may they never lack for love,
Till they meet the Friend of children in the beautiful above."

TRAINING A CHILD IN HONOR.

(Concluded from last week.)

We pass with a brief mention the second definition of honor, namely, "dignity." Not because we deem it of slight importance, but rather that it can not, to any great extent at least, be absent from the self-respecting man or woman, because it is so closely allied to this virtue. We have no reference whatever to a stilted kind of manners misnamed dignity by pretentious individuals assuming them, but to the quiet, unassuming manner, the restful ease and grace which is the natural accompaniment of self-respect—the knowledge that one does not seem to be but really is worthy the respect of others.

The third definition given of honor, we find to be loyalty. Loyalty in this connection means fidelity to duty, for to be a man or woman of honor, one must be true not only to himself but to all others with whom he is even in the most remote degree associated. Loyalty to the trust reposed in us by others at all times demands faithfulness and promptness in discharging our duty without reference to the fact of its being pleasant or otherwise. Loyalty in their childhood is in some ways natural to most children, but in others it demands watchful care and judicious training in order to its development. For instance, the child is naturally loyal to father, mother, brothers, and sisters, and stands ready to defend them in their absence as well as in their presence. They are loyal to their pets of all kinds, not willing to see them abused or appropriated by any one. But this does not cover the whole ground. There is here, as there is running through all time and all the relations of life, a condition of duty, of obligation, and this the child is often very far from recognizing. That loyalty to parents demands obedience; to brothers and sisters loving service; to his pets that he provide for their physical wants and at all times treat them kindly, the child as a rule needs to be taught. As he grows older he also needs to be taught that fidelity in friendship and also in love still holds this element of duty. Friendship demands that we not only defend our friend from all unjust acts or aspersions of others in his absence, but it also demands that, if need be, we defend him from himself. No true friend will see the object of his friendship indulging in that which is wrong without striving with him to desist, and friendship has no right to demand being upheld in wrong.

Of course the child needs to be taught all this and teaching to be successful must be both by precept and example. Not only this, it must be so constant that it amounts to training. And just here we wish to notice what Doctor Trumbull says in regard to this word training: "It is a noteworthy fact, that this word," says Doctor Trumbull, "occurs only twice in the Old Testament, and it has no equivalent in the New. Those who were brought up in the household of Abraham, 'the father of the faithful,' are said to have been 'trained.' (Genesis 14: 14.) A proverb of the ages gives emphasis to a parent's duty to 'train up' his child."

Virtue and chastity conclude the list of virtues we have been examining as used by Webster to define the word honor. These words standing as they do to represent the various elements entering into the character of the honorable men and women of the earth, comprehensive as they are in their scope and power, yet fail to convey the full meaning of the word. Truly Webster needed to add: "A nice sense of what is right, with strict conformity to duty." And Paul, after lengthily enumerating the duties of saints, must have felt much in the same way when he exclaimed: "And finally, brethren, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Philippians 4: 8.

"Think on these things!" O the height and depth of this wise injunction of Paul! "As a man thinketh so is he," said the wise man. "It is not that which goeth into a man which defileth him," said Jesus, "but that which cometh out of a man defileth the man. For out of the hearts of men proceed evil thoughts . . . these defile the man." The mind of the honorable, self-respecting man or woman is filled with pure thoughts. How important, then, it becomes for those who would train their children in honor, to guard them from the contamination of low and vicious companions and to early fill their minds with love of the pure and beautiful. Paul well knew the power exerted by thoughts. The mind which is filled with pure thoughts must have these thoughts displaced before evil ones can enter. This is not a work to be accomplished in a day; but it is possible to so guard and train the minds of our children as in time to lead them to abhor evil in all its forms, because they have learned to love its opposite, purity.

How many organized districts in the church? How many branches? What has been our rate of increase? These and other questions are answered by the Church Recorder, in the August Autumn Leaves, in the closing number of his article on "The Work of the Recorder."

Co-operation of Parents With Sunday-School Teachers.

I write upon this subject because having been a teacher in the Sunday-school for a number of years, I have been led to see the necessity of more effective coöperation between the parents of the Sunday-school scholars and their teachers. Having had experience with children who have been taught their Sunday-school lessons and their other religious duties in their homes, and those whose entire training was apparently left to the Sunday-school teacher, I can say that it is an easy matter to distinguish them, one kind from the other. The training in the home is of vast importance, as the impressions made early in the life of the child are those which will have the greatest effect in the molding of its character, a great deal more important than any teaching it will receive elsewhere.

It will be a great help to the teacher when the parents will from the very earliest possible time, implant in the mind of the child the necessity of its being courteous, studious, and obedient, as it is a difficult matter to curb natures that in a measure have become set, as it were, when you have to try to interest children whose parents have neglected to use those golden opportunities in the child's life to teach it those very essential lessons that it must learn sooner or later. Another thing that parents should not neglect is that of studying the lessons with the children, and seeing that they go to Sunday-school with the lesson properly prepared, so that they will be able to answer any of the questions that may be asked them. When this rule is followed by parents it will not be so hard for the teacher to hold the attention of the class, and then the Sunday-school will more readily accomplish the great and good purpose for which it is striving, that of training the little ones to grow up in the ways of usefulness in the cause of our blessed Master. When children come to Sunday-school without their lessons studied beforehand, they are restless, and when a question is asked them they are afraid to answer lest they make a mistake and be laughed at by the others, and in a few moments after class is opened for study they will begin to play and visit with their neighbors and pay no attention to what the teacher is trying to teach them. On the other hand, let the pupil enter the class with the lesson prepared at home with the assistance of his parents, and the opposite condition prevails; instead of being fearful of making mistakes in answering, he will be eager to give answers to the questions asked him and will not care to visit or play during the study hour. It is impossible for the teacher to accomplish the training of children in the short time allowed them for class study; they are with her but one hour during the week, and if the parents or those in charge of them the remainder of the time should neglect to improve every opportunity to teach them the necessary lessons of how to live and act in life, it is a sad fact that this most important teaching will be left out, and the child will be the loser for not having had this most useful instruction.

In Proverbs 1: 8 we read: "My son, hear the instruction of thy father and forget not the law of thy mother." This statement from the wise man clearly shows the necessity of parents teaching their children the right way, and he counsels the children to give heed to the teachings they receive. Solomon also said: "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old he will not depart from it." And I doubt very much if the Lord will hold parents guiltless for neglecting to do their duty toward their children. I should think there would be no greater joy to parents, than to see their children grow up in the gospel and become useful men and women in the service of the Lord. It seems to me that they would be more than paid for all the labor they had put forth in properly bringing up their children, and is it not time to awaken to a full sense of the responsibility that rests upon us as teachers and parents and work hand in hand more fully than we have in the past for the accomplishment of this great work? Inasmuch as it is very important to get the little ones started right, parents should lose no opportunity while they are young, to instruct in the fear of the Lord and awaken more faith in their children, both by precept and example, teaching them to have faith in God while they are young and they will not forget it when they grow older. It is indeed a sublime sight to behold a little child kneeling in prayer to its dear Father in heaven for the blessing and protection that it needs. The simple faith of childhood, so beautiful of itself, should be cultivated so that when the child gets older it will continue in the fear and service of the Lord. As I look about me I am often led to wonder if the Saints as parents and Sunday-school teachers fully realize the responsibility that is resting upon them in training the children in the fear of the Lord; if they ever stop to think that they are training those who will in the future comprise the church of Christ. And let us remember that as we train them so will they be; therefore let us, realizing what responsibility is resting upon us as parents and teachers, strive and pray more earnestly that in this important work we may be assisted and guided by our heavenly Father, that we may be successful in the labors given us to do.

I fancy that some mother having a large family will say: "Where is the time for training the little ones when there is so much to be done in the home that we may be comfortable and clean?" Dear sister, better neglect some of the home duties of temporal nature for a few hours each week and devote the time trying to prepare the little ones for that blessed and glorious home in the future.

"Blest mother! who, in wisdom's path,
By her own parents trod,
Thus taught her son to flee the wrath
And know the fear of God.
Oh! youth like him enjoy your prime;
Begin eternity in time
Taught by a mother's love."

The Sunday-School Lesson for August 21, 1904.

THE LESSON TO-DAY CONTAINS A WARNING

written by Peter to the saints of his time, but applicable as well to those of our own day. The warning is couched in the words of the golden text, "Abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul."

The lesson calls attention to the fact that Israel on the march to Canaan lusted for the fleshpots of Egypt, for the cucumbers and melons, the leeks and onions and garlic they had enjoyed in the land of their bondage; it shows that they lacked in appreciation of blessings God was bestowing upon them and murmured because of the privations they had to endure incident to the journey to the land of freedom and rest.

They mourned over the light afflictions that were but for a moment compared with the lasting peace and pleasures of the home in Canaan, and they even wept for the things of Egypt that would have perished with the using had they possessed them.

And this murmuring and unrest among them did war against their souls and prevented the development of their faith and obedience toward God and their leader, Moses.

ONE OF THE PREDICTIONS CONCERNING THE LAST DAYS

is that men shall be lovers of their own selves; that is, they will be selfish, disposed to gratify themselves in the things they desire; they will not be disposed to abstain from fleshly lusts. Because of this, we have especial reason to look to our ways, to examine ourselves and learn whether we be in the faith.

If we find that we are covetous, proud, boastful, disobedient to parents or others having rightful control over us, if we despise those who are good, if we love pleasures better than we love God and his service, if we are giving more attention to pleasures than we are to the building up of the kingdom of God in the earth and to the establishment of his righteousness in it, then we are not in the faith.

THE WORLD IS NOT SEEKING THE LORD

to establish his righteousness. The Lord himself tells us so in the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants. He says every man is walking in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol. He warns us in his word to come out from the world and be separate from its evils. Are we doing so, or are we loving the same things the world loves? If so, are we in the faith, are we abstaining from the lusts of the flesh?

IDOLATRY.

The idols of the heathen of ancient times were, some of them, very crude, rough images, while others were of delicate, exquisite workmanship, but he who knelt before the rude image was an idolator in heart as well as the devotee who knelt in a costly temple before an image of gold or of ivory.

Those in poverty may be idolaters as great as those who roll in wealth, if the thoughts and affections of the heart are set on material things. A recent issue of a prominent daily paper gave an article concerning the expenditures of the society women of one of our great cities. Many of those women are estimated to spend ten thousand dollars a year in dress. Is it not possible for a woman with far less to spend to bow at the same shrine and to refrain from lavish expenditure of money in dress simply because she must? Is she not, then, an idolater equally with her more favored sister?

The Lord says to us in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4, "Care not for the body, neither for the life of the body; but care for the soul, and for the life of the soul, and seek the face of the Lord always, that in patience ye may possess your souls, and ye shall have eternal life."

We are not to understand from this that the Lord does not wish us to take proper care of our bodies, but we are to give the greatest care to the life of the soul. Few people are doing so to-day; the great majority are concerned in securing physical pleasures; they are pleasing the flesh and thinking little of the welfare of their souls.

We all have need to think of Peter's earnest warning which has come down to us through the years, "Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul."

OUR CONDUCT AMONG THE GENTILES.

Jesus said to his disciples, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

This teaching of Jesus shows that we are required by the Lord to represent him to the world. Peter exhorted the saints to be honest in their conduct among the Gentiles.

The Lord admonishes his elders in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3 that they should make their counsel to the people effectual by their example; all saints should do this.

The most powerful of all preachers is a good life. Where the Saints live righteous lives, they commend the gospel to the Gentiles.

TWO-MINUTE PAPERS.

Many of us do not exert the powers we have until necessity is laid upon us. Would it be a good plan in senior classes for the teacher to ask members to write two-minute papers on certain verses of the lesson text, on chosen topics of the lesson, or on some of the teaching points? Would the plan claim attention for subjects too often dismissed without being understood, and, perhaps, without any attempt to understand them?

By meeting and surmounting difficulties, we grow stronger; by evading them, we remain in our weakness and often we deteriorate in strength. It would be well for us all, if, by force of circumstances, we could be compelled to meet and at least attempt to answer every difficult question that arises in our study.

There is a law that holds us relentlessly to the task of meeting and conquering difficulties; it is the law that governs our spiritual growth. There is only one way for us to grow in the knowledge of God and in the mastery of self; it is by diligent application of our powers to that work. If we ever enter the courts of glory, it will be after we have exerted all our powers to attain them. "Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."

Senior scholars, do not forget to read the teaching points in the lesson. What foundation is there in the lesson text for those statements?

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, August 11, 1904.

Editors Herald: June 20 I left my home ones, and boarded the swift-winged traveler for Western Iowa. Arriving at Chicago, the committee to have been there was a strange one, or conspicuously absent. Not knowing as to certainty of appointment, thinking it might, like the committee, have evaporated, and being attracted by the appearance of "The Rocky Mountain Limited," which departs from Chicago fifteen minutes to six in the evening, I was soon whirling over "the Rock Island" toward Council Bluffs, where I was met by our good Bro. Harding, at ten minutes to seven the next morning. Wednesday evening, fifteen minutes to eight, attended prayer service, got acquainted with a number of the Saints, and renewed some old time acquaintances. Sunday, half past ten, and fifteen minutes to eight, a goodly audience was present, and we tried to interest our auditors by themes of the gospel work.

June 29, I ran up to Mondamin to see my little darling Fern, whom I had not seen for eleven years, then a wee babe of three months on mamma's bosom, and so soon afterward, bereft of maternal care, now a girl four feet tall, weighing eighty-seven pounds. I will not attempt to describe our meeting. On returning to the Bluffs, a telegram was brought me announcing the death of Sr. Wimer, at Coldwater, Michigan, and asking me to come and offer funeral remarks. I reached Coldwater, Sunday, twenty-three minutes to seven in the morning, the funeral occurring at two o'clock in the afternoon. A large gathering. Sr. Wimer, like Sr. Dancer of blessed memory, was a humanitarian—"good deeds ascend as a memorial." Returning to Council Bluffs occupied Sunday, and evening, to a fine audience. Tuesday eve found me at Crescent City discoursing with fair liberty and quite a large audience. At this point, the choir is large, and rendered cheering music. Sunday following was at the same place, and preached in the forenoon to a large audience. Was the guest of Bro. McIntosh and Bro. Adams. Hurrying along, and dining at Bro. Evans' we reached the Bluffs, and again tried to break the bread of life at fifteen minutes to eight in the evening. We rode out to Boomer, and Hazel Dell, with Bro. Parish, who indeed is a hustler, for he made good use of us,—attended two Sabbath-schools and preached three times and did other incidental work, involving about nine miles' ride between the afternoon and evening sessions—all in one day. But we didn't get any supper until after the evening service. The joke is on Bro. Parish and myself.

Last Sunday we occupied here in the Bluffs. Strangers were present and expressed themselves as well pleased. The church-building has recently donned new attire. Decoration is beautiful—walls, felt crepe paper, dark green, with ingrain ceiling, sectional border with gold heading. Cost, seventy-three dollars. Hard pine flooring laid over the old, with heavy paper and lattice wood between. Cost, forty dollars. But the brethren, under direction of Bro. Harding, laid the flooring, after their day's work was done, and with windows refrosted, wood-work painted and varnished, what is there to stand in the way of beauty? And with a band of Saints in line of duty, the "beauty of holiness" will blend. The brethren are oiling the floor this week. Bro. Harding is quite proud of the work, and well he may be. So you note they are really alive out here. I must not omit the Religio. That is also doing good work, both here and at Crescent. The society here will give a lawn fête at residence of Bro. Harding, 418 Stutsman Street, on the eve of August 19. Tickets on sale by Srs. Hanson and Harding at ten cents. Ye Lamonians, and all others, can come over, if you have ten cents apiece to spare! Proceeds to be applied to the great work of the last days. One hundred tickets are sold up to date.

Well, the times are ominous! Strikes, riots, hold ups, thefts, robberies, murders, elopements, divorces, and wars, are inaugurating a reign of terror, both in "foreign lands" and at home! Society is rendered unsafe, scandals are being unearthed, and the voice of inspiration will be vindicated, that "the abominations of the Gentiles will be made manifest—revealed," and "all things shall be in commotion." (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4.) To-day's Chicago papers state, that in connection with the stealing of two hundred thousand dollars' worth of jewels, methods are to be applied which "will lift the lid off a scandal that will shake the social world of America to the very foundation." The greed of gold—the guilt of graft, all remind one of the "woe" pronounced on those who can not keep from "laying hold on other men's goods." (Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5.)

The insecurity of despotic rulers is seen in the unusual temperament of a man who hurls the bomb, and at the same time swallows a poisonous capsule, thus entering his soul against that of his victim in a race to the judgment-seat. Men who care nothing for their own lives, care little for the lives of others,—this among the wicked, plainly manifests the withdrawing of "God's Spirit from the inhabitants of the earth," and the power Satan exercises over his own. Are these the latter days? Where are we? What the instruments of reckoning, the degree of longitude and latitude to us poor mariners on the ocean of time? I'll conclude ere I sermonize. Hopefully,
S. W. L. SCOTT.

Editors Herald: My mind and thoughts now are turning toward the home of the free and the brave.

Bro. Rennie will continue the meetings at the Greenhythe Schoolhouse, where we hope in time some may be led to see the light. We have a prospect for an opening at the village of Albany for the fifth Sunday in a month at least. But the weather and roads so far have been unfavorable.

I have been rained out of two or three appointments this winter. Generally a great deal of rain here in winter season. I have been housed in a great deal this season; and been somewhat afflicted in back; either from shot which lodged in or near kidney received from wound while in the Southern States, or from some other cause. Am still in my rented room buying my own food, and have not had the privilege of sitting by the fire this winter, save a time or two, and then for a short time only.

We are growing somewhat tired living on bread and butter principally and long to be where we can get warm meals and vegetables.

We have a chance for another opening in a small church a long distance away. But it will take all day to go and come from Bro. Rennie's; and I am seven miles from there. This mission needs an able-bodied man who can preach on the street if necessary. My voice failed me, and now almost fails me sometimes in a room. Hard climate on voice in open night air. Some voices may hold up, mine won't.

Would be pleased to get off the 12th of August if I could, but if not want to get off not later than September 2, any way. It will be two years to a day August 12, since we anchored in Auckland harbor.

Bro. Hall writes he has been speaking on the street of late in Kaitangata; very good hearing and attention.

No other news of importance. Ere this appears in HERALD hope to be on my way on the broad ocean. Would be pleased so meet some of the Saints at wharf in Frisco.

Very truly,

D. E. TUCKER.

That Promised Article.

Editors Herald: Some of the elders have sustained disappointment that an article promised by me on Book of Mormon characters has not appeared in HERALD. One was prepared and passed upon favorably for insertion. At my request it was returned for improvement and is not as yet ready for return to office. If it be a good thing when completed, as we may hope, we can afford to wait—if not, no loss will be sustained. So there is nothing to lose. In the meantime others may furnish better. Some are at work on the problem.

It is a matter that can not be rushed.

The Committee on Archæology is disposed to move slowly and cautiously on this feature of work. Such help as I can afford any one I will cheerfully perform and as promptly as possible.

In bonds,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

Dear Herald: On the evening of the 5th inst., Bishop Hilliard discoursed on the atonement.

Audiences continue large, the tent being well filled and many sitting on the outside. The subjects, original sin, spirits in prison, the judgment, and the different glories, were also discussed in characteristic plainness, and the usual good attention and interest were in evidence.

The choir singing, in charge of Brn. A. H. Mills and R. G. Smith, as advertised, was excellent, and at the close Elder Hulmes announced the following evening service would be in charge of Elder R. Etzenhouser.

The elder chose for his text, "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets."

Bro. Hilliard had impressed the audience by his plain, outspoken manner, the present speaker, by his choice vocabulary and profound reasoning, while he preached upon the antiquity of the gospel, the message sent to Moses, to Enoch, to Elijah, and the prophets, the same gospel of salvation brought to us and which was proclaimed upon the plains of Bethlehem, bringing peace, good will to men of every age, every country, and every kind.

The closing prayer was offered, also suitable words commendatory of the attention paid the speaker, and the dismissal hymn was sung, "This God is the God we adore." In this rapid-transit dispensation the echoes from the loud doxology scarcely died away ere the nightly circuit of the tent-goers was well-nigh completed.

Sunday was a beautiful day, and the Sunday-school, also the morning and afternoon services were well attended. There were four hundred and thirty present at Sunday-school, with eight dollars as a collection. Elder J. D. White was the speaker in the morning, and President Smith occupied the stand at the tent in the evening and all seemed pleased with the sermon, the basic theme being the old Jerusalem gospel and the progress of the work. There was an immense throng in attendance, there being as many as nine or ten hundred present.

Brother White's sermon was directed mostly to the young people, exhorting them to live true to the light received, to "buckle on the armor of righteousness and stand firm and steadfast in the testimony of the truth of God."

About thirty Brighamites from England visited Independence on the 8th inst., at the places interesting to them, the Temple lot and vicinity, taking kodak views and interviewing new acquaintances. Some of them seemed very enthusiastic over the changes wrought in Jackson County and the younger element still cling to the traditions of their elders.

On Monday evening the crowd began to gather at the tent and the singers to arrange for the song service, at fifteen minutes to eight; Elder A. H. Parsons led in the opening prayer, old Coronation was sung, and President Smith was introduced as the speaker. He wore a becoming gray suit with short top-coat, which added to his apparent weight and height. With a clear eyesight, a face lighted up by the Spirit, whitened locks and beard, broad shoulders and generous palms, he bore gracefully the weight of more than seventy winters, and "showed" to a Missourian assembly as noble and hardy a personnel of a full-fledged American as ever stepped upon a ministerial rostrum. As the occasion demanded, he was emphatic and outspoken. Many of our town's people were present, and surely they were not disappointed in coming to hear a concise, forceful, and comprehensive exposition of the faith and doctrine of the Latter Day Saints.

To Luther, thundering at the walls of the Vatican, Calvin and Wesley and Knox and other brave men of the Reformation, his tribute was magnanimous; and for the adoption of principles, the best in religion by those of the church, as in politics by men of the state, his argument was incisive and logical. Priestly succession, revelations, churchly ordinances, inspired men and youth, divine records, ministering angels, and lastly the apostasy of the latter days were all embraced in the ultimatum of this great sermon.

On Wednesday evening President Smith closed his part of the tent services by a penetrative discourse, taking for his text "Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God": and again, "Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God." From many passages quoted from the New Testament scriptures he deduced some wonderful thoughts on the gospel, not unfamiliar to the Saints, but which he presented and clothed with clearest light and significance. The intense interest in the tent services continues, and speakers well supported are announced for the future.

On Tuesday evening, Reverend J. J. Martin, pastor of the Watson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, preached before the Saints and a large number of those outside the fold. His theme was, the necessity of a Savior, the efficacy of the atonement, and he rose to heights of eloquence seldom surpassed by any of the sectarian ministers, and scarcely ever reached by the Latter Day Saint elders. He had a deep respect for the Saints, had read much of their literature, yet was not as well acquainted with their doctrine as he desired to be and he was striving to go on to perfection. Elder Martin's sermon was highly commended and an excellent feeling prevailed among his attentive hearers.

Yours in the interest of the latter-day gospel,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

DES MOINES, Iowa, August 8, 1904.

Editors Herald: After Fred M. left me I visited Waterloo, Oelwein, Arlington, Center Junction, and Emaline. At the last-named place I found Bro. Case and family, tenting out and holding tent-meetings to an interested congregation, with Bro. Burr assisting him. I remained over Sunday, doing the preaching for them. The tent was full and overflowing, all day, although it was in the midst of harvest. It is in the country and a new place, and the attendance is almost altogether outsiders. It was refreshing to find a place where there was a lively interest, and some lively workers to care for it. I met the Green Valley and Fulton Saints there on Sunday and enjoyed the visit with them. Went from there to Muscatine for a few days and then to this place to be in attendance at their reunion. We are nicely situated in the north part of the city in a little grove on the street-car line, but the attendance of Saints has been light so far. Yesterday meetings were well attended all day; many outsiders, and a very fine day was enjoyed, the weather lovely. One was baptized, a boy. The nights are rather cool, too much so for comfort.

Brn. Hilliard, Derry, and myself are the only ones of the speakers outside of the district force. Mintun, Sheldon, Peters, Roth, and Christy, of the missionaries of the district, are here; Bro. Sorensen is still in the field at work.

The Baptists are mad at Osage, Minnesota, where Fred M. and I held that week's meetings and baptized the two sisters, and the good preacher handed a note to the young sister we baptized who had been a worker in their Sunday-school, requesting her resignation from all the offices she held in the school. I inclose the note to you to read and return, also one of warning for the elders to move on. Well, yes, we will move on at once to storm their castle. We sent Brn. McCoy and Wood in there at once and they are no doubt on the ground and after them long ere this. They wrote me they would go at once.

It shows the disposition of the so-called Christian world. If they dared do it they would put us off the earth, but they will find us stayers, and if need be scrappers too, especially if our rights to free speech and the enjoyment of personal liberty in the worship of God are called in question.

We are all well in camp save some little minor complaints, and all is moving smoothly. F. A. Smith, J. F. Mintun, and N. V. Sheldon were chosen to preside; E. O. Clark clerk, J. F. Mintun assistant, Ward Christy chorister, and Sr. Reiste organist.

With best wishes for the progress of the work, I am,

Yours in bonds,

FREDERICK A. SMITH.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. William H. Kelley, Broadhead, Kentucky, writing to Bishop E. L. Kelley, says, "Yesterday I baptized four, two ladies and two men. Bro. Metcalf also has names for baptism. We have been holding forth in a grove about five miles west of Broadhead, and can say that the interest is all that can be asked for,—one hundred and fifty to two hundred every evening. At our afternoon services we have twenty-five to fifty, mostly ladies. The young folks have organized a choir, and are very prompt, doing all our singing. We are requested to preach on the Book of Mormon, and will comply, beginning to-morrow eve on that subject, and expect large crowds. One evening last week after a rain nobody came out but about thirty young men, and we both gave a talk to men only. It spread like wild-fire, and was appreciated by the older ones who learned of the drift of the talk."

Bro. William C. Cummings, writing from Coalgate, Indian Territory, says, "We have just put in a one thousand dollar brick plant to be owned and controlled by our church people, and we hope to have all, who work in it, as stock-holders, so each one will work to make it a success, and one tenth of the profits will go to the support of the gospel. The plant will be ready to start in a few days. Shares are twenty-five dollars each; and as the shale costs nothing, and as we have coal and wood right at hand, the plant can not help but be a paying investment. We want two or three elders to preach in the surrounding towns and country. My team and carriage is always ready to carry the preacher, and I will aid in any way I can."

Bro. James E. Entekin, Biloxi, Mississippi, gives a sad account of the drowning of his sister's fifteen months' old girl Virgie, who got outside of the yard and toddled out into the bay unobserved by its parents, and desires the prayers of the Saints for his sister in her trouble. He also says, "We are in a very desolate place, where we seldom enjoy a good sermon. There are other churches here that we could attend; but when we do go we can not feel that we are hearing the true doctrine of Christ. But we hope there is a day coming when we may hear the true gospel being preached regularly in this wicked place."

Bro. E. W. Nunley, Cookes Point, Texas: "Baptized two at our late conference, a lady and a gentleman, both married people. We are waiting and watching for an opportunity to preach. In this country at this season there are lots of preachers who occupy every schoolhouse and church in the land, so we have to wait till they try their hand, then we thrust in our sickle."

Bro. D. C. White writes from Hatfield, Missouri: "On July 31 we closed our tent-meeting at Kellerton, Iowa. We were there twenty days in all. Fairly good hearing and interest all the way through. On Sundays from three to four hundred out. We have been here just a week. Tent crowded at night and the gospel is being preached. Thankful to God we are to be of those who are sent as a witness for the Master and his work of these last days."

Bro. C. J. Cady, San Jose, California, August 4: "I was brought up in the Roman Catholic communion, but at an early age showed evidences of an inquiring mind. Becoming well acquainted with the belief of the 'mother' church, I naturally turned my eyes towards Protestantism, but failed to find of the modern churches an organization agreeing in every respect with the apostolic faith. Four years ago met Bro. A. M. Chase; but despite his reasonings on gospel topics he seemed to have made no impression on me. After a lapse of over a year I met Bro. F. H. Lawn, through the instrumentality of Bro. J. B. Carmichael. His reasonings were apparently of no avail. A little over two years ago, having been guided by the Spirit, I announced my conversion and desired baptism, which I soon had the happiness of receiving under the hands of Bro. F. H. Lawn, and was confirmed by Bro. C. W. Hawkins. May God bless us all."

Sr. Nellie I. McCulley, Newberg, Oregon, August 4: "Will you please ask the Saints to go and call on my sister, Mrs. J. R. Kinyon, 115 South First Street, San Jose, California. She lives close to the Salt Lake Mormon church, and she did not know the difference, so has been going there; but has now found out she was wrong. She was interested in the church and I am anxious for the Saints to call on her, as she feels so discouraged that she made such a mistake. As she is a stranger there they could do her lots of good. She is very lonely. Her husband is not a believer. He tries to think he is an infidel; he was once a Methodist. He met Elder J. C. Clapp at our home and he likes him very much. I really think if the right one could go to see him he might accept the truth; so please call and invite them to church."

Sr. Albertie Neal, Batson, Texas, July 29: "I am in an isolated town without a Saint that I know of; came from our branch in San Antonio, Texas, to my husband here. I am trying to live my best and God is ever with me in all trials. Would like to get samples of our literature, as I do not know which of our papers is best for a young member. I wish to get all the good and no bad if possible out of this world. I realize that God's people help each other very much by their prayers, and I desire to be remembered by all who read this. Would appreciate very much letters, papers, or tracts from any one who desires to send same."

Bro. J. W. Waldsmith, Nebraska City, Nebraska, August 4: "I have of late visited Wilber, Dewitt, Hoag, Beatrice, Tecumseh, and Adams. Three were baptized at Tecumseh last Sunday. The good work is moving along there under the care of Brn. Sutton and Madison. I now have promised ten dollars more than our quota for college debt for Southern Nebraska. I expect to send to-day to Bishop Kelley enough to make up one hundred dollars for this district, and expect to send one hundred and forty dollars later on. I have now promised two hundred and fifty dollars and took up about two hundred dollars two years ago. I think that we have done pretty well."

Bro. W. P. Bootman, Thayer, Missouri, August 9: "The Saints here as a rule are striving very earnestly to live up to the law and are receiving the gifts of the gospel in return. Elder J. T. Davis was here and preached Saturday and Sunday for us. He is an energetic laborer for the Master."

Bro. E. E. Long, Middletown, Ohio, August 5: "Things are looking better at present. We are having good crowds here with fine interest. Have baptized five and are hopeful of others."

Bro. J. R. Lambert wrote on August 7: "I go to St. Joseph Tuesday morning, if able, and from there to Stewartville, to be gone till the last of the month, at least, if my health will permit."

Bro. S. K. Sorensen, Tama, Iowa, August 8: "Will commence services in the city park to-morrow evening. The park is located half way between Tama and Toledo, and street-cars running past the grounds, so it affords both cities an opportunity. Will try also to hold day-meetings. This is a new place. Nights are very cold. If it continues it may spoil our evening meeting. Electric lights will be furnished on the grounds free of charge."

RELEASE OF MISSIONARY.

For reasons stated by himself that circumstances and conditions which he can not control, he finds himself under the necessity to request that he be released from the missionary field for the remainder of the conference year, Bro. J. Guy Munsell, appointed to labor in the Eastern Mission, is released from said appointment. We regret that Bro. Munsell is under this necessity and trust that the disabilities may be finally removed and he be permitted yet to accomplish good in the field.

The World's Fair as a Teacher.

In an interesting and richly illustrated article on "The World's Fair as an educational force," President W. F. Slocum of Colorado College says, in the Outlook's Magazine Number for August: "It is interesting to note that some of the most valuable exhibits are those of processes as well as results, very often the greatest effort being made to show the former rather than the latter. In many instances these processes are shown so well, are explained so patiently, that glimpses are given into whole departments of knowledge that must awaken an interest which will not be content till wide reading has made the subject a familiar one. Much may justly be said of the unwisdom of superficial work in sightseeing as well as in the class-room and laboratory, and there is danger in thinking 'a ramble through a World's Fair is an equivalent for a liberal education.' But too much emphasis can not be laid on the value of such a ramble to the open-eyed and open-souled thousands who have waited for this event to gain their first vital knowledge of the way other workers do their work. In one sense the influence of a great fair can never be spoken of as local; but its special and direct influence on its immediate locality must inevitably be a marked one. The great value of this to the Southwest can not be measured; this section has already passed through various stages in which its rural home life was represented by the dug-out, the log cabin, and frame dwelling-house. It now is ready to pass rapidly into a more fully developed life into which the arts and sciences, as the older communities know them, are to play their part."

How Locomotives Have Increased in Weight.

At the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition, the Baltimore and Ohio showed an engine weighing fifty tons. This locomotive at the St. Louis fair looks very small alongside the locomotive called the "Director General," weighing one hundred tons, exhibited at Chicago. But the "Director General" is dwarfed by the monster Mallet-type Baltimore and Ohio freight locomotive, which weighs two hundred and thirty-three tons and which is the largest and heaviest locomotive ever built. It was especially constructed for heavy mountain grades in West Virginia. It towers above every engine about it, and looks like an iron citadel.—The World's Work.

SPLENETIC ATTACK BY DESERET NEWS.

The Deseret Evening News, of Salt Lake City, for August 13, 1904, has an attack upon the Reorganized Church of a very peculiar character. It is an editorial which opens in the following manner:

We have received a copy of a pamphlet which is being circulated in Australia by the emissaries of the "Reorganized" Church, commonly, but improperly called "Josephites"; for there are no more virulent opponents of many of the teachings of Joseph the Seer than those professed disciples of the Prophet. They are to-day among the most malignant assailants of our missionaries, and do more to foment hostility and provoke mob-ocracy that almost any other agency of that kind.

Without attempting to defend the pamphlet referred to, leaving that to the Australian brethren, we join issue decidedly with the News on three of the points in the paragraph quoted from this leader. The first is the claim to the right of being called "Josephites." This name was given to the elders of the Reorganized Church first in Utah and by the members of the Utah church themselves. We do not claim it as a distinctive title any more than the church in Utah claims the word "Mormons" or "Brighamites" as its distinctive title. But when the News charges that the appellation is improper upon the ground that elders of the Reorganized Church are virulent opponents of the teachings of Joseph the Seer, the assertion is wide of the mark. It is not true. The teachings of the Reorganized Church are emphatically those of Joseph the Seer, as found in the standard works of the church, the public journals and writings of Joseph the Seer himself and his coworkers, including the acknowledged organs of the church up to the time of the martyrdom.

We specifically challenge the News to name "many of the teachings of Joseph the Seer" which are virulently opposed by the elders of the Reorganized or "Josephite" Church. It will not do to make a general charge and thus sum up what may be held as mental reservations on the part of those who make these charges, for the reason that one accused in such form can not plead to so evasive a charge. In making this charge the News is strikingly discourteous in using the word "emissaries" as applied to the elders and ministers of the Reorganized Church. These elders are not sent out in a covert manner, neither do they make their attack upon the things which they denounce in any secret

August.

Over the blue sea broods the heat,
 In faintest pulses the tired tides beat;
 Over the sands, with the sun aglow,
 Silent the cloud-shades come and go;
 A white-winged sail on the water gleams
 Faint and far, like a Ship-o'-Dreams.
 The year's great Sabbath fills the air—
 And languor and slumber are everywhere.
 Then storm-winds rise: then breakers roar:
 Then wrecks are tossed on the rocky shore!
 —Sarah Andrew Shafer in the Outlook.

or covert manner. They do it fairly, squarely, and specifically. Their opposition is not a warfare upon men, but upon the doctrines and principles of faith which in their judgment Joseph Smith did not teach, and which are subversive of truth and right if it could be proved that he did teach them.

The second point we notice is this: The members of the Reorganized Church are professed disciples of Christ Jesus, and their adherence to the teachings of Joseph Smith is with them a secondary matter; the teachings of Christ as laid down in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations given to the church through the instrumentality of the Seer, are of first and paramount importance. Are the doctrines and faith of the church found in or based upon the declarations of Jesus, or are they of human origin? is the first inquiry on the part of the "Josephite" believer. The question is not, Did Joseph Smith teach this or that? in any inquiry which the believer may make; but, Is the teaching in accordance with scripture—the word of God? In the sense in which the News uses the words "professed disciples of the Prophet," no such profession is made.

Third: The charge made that the "Josephites" are among the most malignant assailants of the missionaries from Utah, is a gratuitous insult and the result of an unworthy animus on the part of the News. It is true that the elders of the Reorganized Church do most emphatically oppose the elders of the church in Utah wherever they are met in the mission fields occupied by the "Josephite" elders, but we have yet to learn from authentic sources that these attacks have been malignant or have been intended to "foment hostility or provoke mobocracy" or have resulted in anything of this kind. If the authorities who control the missionaries sent out from Utah would relax their inhibition against discussion, which they have imposed upon their elders, and permit a fair and frank discussion of the differences that exist between these bodies of believers, it would, we believe, remove much of the apparent hostility which the News seems to find engendered by Josephite opposition. It is a fact that there are important questions of difference between the two bodies of worshiping believers who are called by the world "Mormons." This fact might just as well be recognized by the News first as last, and by those for whom the News speaks. These questions, like Banquo's ghost, will not down. They are more or less vital either for good or for ill to those who believe or deny. They can not be disposed of by calling the advocates of either part "emissaries" or charging them with malignancy and intention to provoke mobocracy.

If as the News states the contents of the pamphlet "consists largely of garbled extracts from remarks alleged to have been made many years ago by prominent men in this church, which, separated from the context, are made to appear in an improper light"; and were but the "ideas advanced" by those who "argued in their favor" and "are to be so understood"; then the simplest and safest method of getting rid of the unfortunate position into which these extracts always put the church in Utah in the controversy which is being urged against the things referred to would be a specific renunciation of the theories advanced and argued in favor of; this renunciation to be made by the leading men in the church occupying similar positions to those who made these damaging statements, and an official declaration by the church itself that the doctrines couched in the statements complained of are not the beliefs of the church at the present time.

If the public statements made by Brigham Young in regard to the birth of the Savior, Adam being the god with which men have to deal, and others of like nature upon which issue is joined between these contending elders, are not correct and do not form the faith of the church in Utah now, let their successors so state. If the statements of Jedediah M. Grant, Orson Pratt, and others of like note, which statements reinforced the statements of Brigham Young on the topics complained of, let the men of the present time say so, not in an ambiguous manner, but plainly and specifically. Wilford Woodruff and George Q. Cannon presumed to charge upon those who had gone before them the improper practice of the patriarchal order of adoption which had been at that time practiced for nearly forty years by them, and urged a reversal of the order which had been pursued in such a way as to render almost nugatory that which had been done before under the old order in Utah. Why then may not President Joseph F. Smith and his associates reverse the teaching complained of in a similar way?

The editor closes thus:

"Mormonism" means the doctrines of Mormon. That is easy to understand. There is nothing in Mormon's writings that inculcates polygamy. There is nothing in the root meaning of the word that makes it a synonym for polygamy. The assertion of the Australian "reorganizer" is a palpable falsehood, and his whole pamphlet is of the same nature and spirit. But we advise our elders there not to enter into any contention with him or his ilk, but to preach the pure gospel of the Son of God, which is the essence of "Mormonism," and leave the would-be inciters of strife and excitors of wrath entirely alone.

This is pitifully weak. It will be quite impractical for the News to disabuse the mind of the common public of the impression that Mormonism in the ordinary does mean polygamy, however unjust the impression may be; and however strong the aversion of the editor to the conclusion, it is nevertheless true, to which the Editor of the HERALD can bear ample testimony after a public experience of over forty years in the United States and abroad, for the "Josephites" have constantly been met with the charge just in this way. It is true that Mormon's writings do not inculcate polygamy; it is further true that no writer in the Book of Mormon inculcates polygamy. Polygamy must look elsewhere for its origin and support, and we believe that one of the witnesses before the Senatorial Committee frankly admitted that the Book of Mormon did not teach polygamy. The Utah elders have insisted that it did provide for polygamy; Joseph F. Smith took that pitiable ground in his article in the Arena and also before the Senatorial Committee. The assumption will not hold; it is false in inception and false in argument; and the pitiful charge to the elders not to enter into any discussion or contention with the Australian writer reiterated to those in America and elsewhere, is but a subterfuge to prevent the turning on of the light.

Let the News disavow in specific terms the teaching, charged as false, by these "Josephite" elders, which he improperly calls "emissaries," or let there be a public action of the church on the topics referred to, and it may be possible that there may be less contention between these respective bands of believers. The advice of the editor of the News to preach the pure gospel of the Son of God is good. We indorse it emphatically; but we call the attention of the editor to the fact that in the pure gospel of the Son of God as taught in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants as left by Joseph and Hyrum Smith, there is not a line providing for, or justifying either the dogma or the practice of plural marriage.

We leave the brethren of the Gospel Standard and the author of the pamphlet complained of by the News to settle the controversy as to the intent and purpose of the pamphlet, between them and that journal; but we protest now, as we have done for many, many years, against any body of believers in the angel's message keeping out of the fire of investigation by advising the supporters of their faith to avoid discussion. This is contrary to the advice of the Savior in the revelations given to the church; it is contrary to the custom of the elders of the church under the régime of Joseph and Hyrum Smith; it is contrary to the spirit of the age; and we believe it to be contrary to the best methods for the advancement of truth and the elimination of error.

GRACELAND COLLEGE AND TEACHING ARRANGEMENTS FOR SESSION OF 1904-5.

The following will be the disposition of teaching duties among the faculty of Graceland College, for the coming year:

President, and Professor of Economics: E. R. Dewsnup, M. A.; F. R. G. S.; F. S. S. (Victoria University of Manchester, England).

Professor of Greek and Education: R. M. Stuart, B. A. (State University of Iowa).

Professor of Latin and German: Bertha Kriechbaum, Ph. B. (State University of Iowa).

Professor of Mathematics, Physics, and Chemistry. Appointment not yet completed.

Professor of Accountancy and Commercial Law, and Principal of the Commercial School: J. A. Gunsolley, B. A.; B. S.

Instructor in Biology: J. P. Anderson, (State University of Nebraska).

Instructor in Shorthand and Typewriting in the Commercial School: Clara M. Johnson, of the faculty of Brown's Business College, Davenport, Iowa.

Instructors in History: Bertha Kriechbaum, Ph. B.; E. R. Dewsnup, M. A.

Instructor in English: R. M. Stuart, B. A.

Instructor in Instrumental and Vocal Music. Appointment not yet completed.

Instructor in Elocution and Physical Culture. Appointment not yet completed.

Librarian and Curator of Museum, etc.: J. P. Anderson.

The Board has delayed appointment in Science and Music because its desire has been to secure the very best instructors within its financial reach, but the appointments are now likely to be made within a few days. Graceland has never had an abler faculty, and we expect a first-class record for the coming year's work in all departments, Collegiate, Normal, Commercial, Music, and Elocution.

All that feel the desirability of improving their educational position (how few of us are there that feel otherwise!) and have the shadow of an opportunity, should try to share in the benefits of the facilities placed at their disposal. Those that are debarred from doing so, simply by financial inability, should write at once to President Dewsnup, making a candid statement of their position and wishes, and every consideration will be given to their case by the Board of Trustees. If it is possible to help them, help will be given.

GRACELAND NOTES.

Receipts for payment of college debt are coming in nicely.

The past week we have received good contributions from L. D. Ullom, agent Pittsburg District; Luther Simpson, agent Central Illinois; A. M. Fyrando, agent Little Sioux District; Charles E. Everett, agent Colorado District; who report good prospects of raising the total amount assigned their respective districts.

Also Elder Hubert Case writes that the Oklahoma District will pay its share and more by September 1.

The young ladies' Cooking Club of Lamoni, with the view of assisting the work of the college, gave an ice-cream social in the town park, and as a result the college debt is forty dollars less.

The Patronesses have lately turned over the hundred dollars on college debt for which they have been working the last few weeks.

T. S. Brown, Hemet, California, writes as follows: "Let us nail the flag of Graceland to the very mast-head and keep it there. The fact that the Latter Day Saints maintain a college is the best evidence we have ever given that we stand for education, light, and truth. I inclose five dollars, and shall help again. Yours for advance."

Here are two more from California, written to Bro. E. L. Kelley. Mrs. E. J. Roseberry, Pope Valley, California, says: "It would be a misfortune to every member of the church, to have our college close, even if we have no children to send. Yours for the education of our young men and women."

Bro. and Sr. R. W. Journey, Merced, California: "Inclosed find two dollars to help liquidate the debt of Graceland College." We felt very sorry when we heard that it was to be closed, but rejoiced when we heard it was to be opened this term. We are among the isolated Saints, but keep up with the work the best we can by taking the HERALD and Ensign."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We frequently get inquiries concerning manuscripts sent to us for publication. Brethren should remember that we receive a large amount of matter from week to week, all requiring time to look over and to prepare for the printers. Some, unfortunately, we have to lay aside because of lack of merit or because it can not be prepared for use without a great amount of labor. On the other hand, some is good copy and is available almost without preparation. So please bear in mind that we are doing the best we can, showing favors to no one further than merit and good manuscript demand.

The latest number of the Birth Offering series has been completed and is now on sale. Notice concerning the same will be found in Home Column.

Bro. Fred M. Smith writes from Boston. He was there during opening days of the Grand Army encampment. He was going from there to Little Deer Isle, Maine.

Foreman Lambert, of the HERALD force, left Tuesday (23d) for a week's visit at the World's Fair in St. Louis.

President Joseph Smith occupied the morning hour at Lamoni on the 21st, and Secretary R. S. Salyards in the evening.

REDEMPTION OF ZION.

SERMON BY ALEXANDER H. SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
AUGUST 14, 1904.

For my reading lesson this morning I have selected a portion of Section 98, Doctrine and Covenants.

Verily, I say unto you, concerning your brethren who have been afflicted, and persecuted, and cast out from the land of their inheritance, I, the Lord, have suffered the affliction to come upon them, wherewith they have been afflicted in consequence of their transgressions; yet, I will own them, and they shall be mine in that day when I shall come to make up my jewels. Therefore, they must needs be chastened, and tried, even as Abraham, who was commanded to offer up his only son; for all those who will not endure chastening, but deny me, can not be sanctified. Behold, I say unto you, there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances. They were slow to hearken unto the voice of the Lord their God; therefore, the Lord their God is slow to hearken unto their prayers, to answer them in the day of their trouble. In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my counsel; but in the day of their trouble, of necessity they feel after me. Verily, I say unto you, Notwithstanding their sins, my bowels are filled with compassion toward them; I will not utterly cast them off; and in the day of wrath I will remember mercy. I have sworn, and the decree hath gone forth by a former commandment which I have given unto you, that I would let fall the sword of mine indignation in the behalf of my people; and even as I have said, it shall come to pass. Mine indignation is soon to be poured out without measure upon all nations, and this will I do when the cup of their iniquity is full. And in that day, all who are found upon the watchtower, or in other words, all mine Israel shall be saved. And they that have been scattered shall be gathered; and all they who have mourned shall be comforted; and all they who have given their lives for my name shall be crowned. Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands: be still, and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion. And all these things, that the prophets might be fulfilled. And, behold, there is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the work of the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or strength of Zion. Behold, it is my will, that all they who call on my name, and worship me according to mine everlasting gospel, should gather together and stand in holy places, and prepare for the revelation which is to come when the veil of the covering of my temple, in my tabernacle, which hideth the earth, shall be taken off, and all flesh shall see me together. And every corruptible thing, both of man, or of the beasts of the field, or of the fowls of heaven, or of the fish of the sea, that dwell upon all the face of the earth, shall be consumed; and also, that of element shall melt with fervent heat; and all things shall become new, that my knowledge and glory may dwell upon all the earth. And in that day the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before my face. And in that day whatsoever any man shall ask it shall be given unto him. And in that day Satan shall not have power to tempt any man. And there shall be no sorrow because there is no death. In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep (that is to say in the earth), but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious. Yea, verily, I say unto you, In that day when the Lord shall come he shall reveal all things; things which have passed, and hidden things which no man knew; things of the earth by which it was made, and the purpose and the end thereof; things most precious; things that are above, and things that are beneath; things that are in the earth, and upon the earth, and in heaven. And all they who suffer persecution for my name, and endure in faith, though they are called to lay down their lives for my sake, yet shall they partake of all this glory. Wherefore, fear not even unto death; for in this world your joy is not full, but in me your joy is full. Therefore care not for the body, neither the life of the body; but care for the soul, and for the life of the soul, and seek the face of the Lord always, that in patience ye may possess your souls, and ye shall have eternal life. When men are called unto mine everlasting gospel, and covenant with an everlasting covenant, they are accounted as the salt of the earth, and the savor of men. They are called to be the savor of men. Therefore, if that salt of the earth lose its savor, behold, it is thenceforth good for nothing, only to be cast out and trodden under the feet of men. Behold, here is wisdom concerning the children of Zion; even many, but not all; they were found transgressors, therefore they must needs be chastened. He that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that abaseth himself shall be exalted.

The object of this reading lesson is that we may have prominently fixed in our minds that which has been promised of God as the fulfillment of his work, and also that we may have the reminder which may be found in this lesson brought so prominently before us that we may consider our surroundings. For it is said "history repeats itself," oftentimes, and if such be the case then our anticipations and hopes which have been builded upon our understanding of that which has been promised of God through the operation of the gospel, may be postponed, if not lost. My object for this expression is that you may let your minds go back over the history of the past, even the history that has been made by the introduction of the gospel, and the organization of the church under the immediate direction of Christ our Lord, the work performed by his apostles, and take into consideration the hope that filled their hearts, take into consideration that which is evidenced by all the writings of the apostles relative to the anticipation that they would live, that they would participate, that they would enjoy and receive that which was promised through Christ in the redemption of the word. Go with those disciples in conversation with our Lord relative to the signs of his coming, and the end of the earth. How anxious they were to learn, how anxious were they to receive confirmation of their hope. And how sad they must have felt upon the occasion when our Lord upon the mountain lifted up his hands and blessed them, and was taken away. How sorrowful must have been their hearts when they realized that the hopes which they had accepted in the recognition of the Messiah in Christ our Lord was for the moment dashed to the ground; and they saw him leaving them. They had expected, and built the hope, that he would remain with them; that he would fight their battles; that he would redeem Israel, and make Israel again the ruling nation of the earth. In their hearts they had pictured, evidently, that the Lord had come as the Messiah, to take the reins of government, and that he would sit upon the throne of David and rule righteously, and Israel would be again restored to the zenith of her glory. But it was not to be so. They had cherished hopes of an early fulfillment of that which had been represented in spiritual promises, and their hopes were not fulfilled, nor granted unto them; but the time passed, and the promises were not made to them present, that they might enjoy them as in their then present life.

And after the organization of the church, and the work of the ministry, of those men, after they made such a record which has been left for others to build that hope upon, the world seems to have drifted away from the central conditions which were denominated in the law of the Lord, holding upon the idea, cherishing still the thought and the hope that men would be redeemed and brought into the presence of God freed from everything that made this life unendurable, brought into the presence of God and filled with everything that makes this life joyous and glad, and multiplied blessings should be given them. And yet all that which has been promised has been promised upon conditions. And those conditions have been of that character that those that wish the promise must comply with the conditions; and complying with the conditions, implicitly, they would be in a condition to hold God the Father to his part of the contract, and claim at his hands that which is represented as in his gift to be given to them as an inheritance.

I had forgotten that it was usual to give a text. I expect none better could be found at this present time than the words, "Thou shalt not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God."

There are things surrounding us in life that are natural, and we witness them every day, almost, of our existence; and yet we do not learn the lesson that might be learned from them, from the witnesses that are speaking. Though it may seem to us that their voice is still and small and scarcely heard, oftentimes neglected entirely, yet they are bearing testimony of the forces that are at work in this great world of ours, bearing testimony of the strength and power and knowledge of him who hath created them; and if we would listen, and learn of them the testimony which they bear, we might approach nearer and nearer to him who hath been the creator of all things that are presented unto us in our lives, and in our fulfillment of the conditions that are imposed upon us in this life.

We see the trees in the springtime put forth their buds. In the winter time they have been shorn of the beauty of their green foliage. In nature, it appears, provision has been made for them; and in the springtime when the warmth of the sun comes, when the rain falls upon the earth, and the dews of heaven come, those trees put forth their buds, forcing into growth the leaves, clothing the trees in green and beauty. The blossoms come forth, and those blossoms culminate into fruit; the fruit ripens and becomes fitted for the use of men.

The earth puts forth its verdure; the carpet of green comes upon it; the grasses grow, the grains spring forth, come to maturity, and furnish food for all who dwell upon the earth, both man and beast. Yet there is a relative condition between that which grows upon the surface and that which is underneath the surface. There is a reaching down by that which is recognized upon the earth in the verdure and in the vegetables, and in the trees that bear fruit; there is a reaching down and gathering little by little, by the roots that feel their way in the earth to gather from the earth strength to grow and produce, and bring to maturity. Without the light and the warmth that comes from the sun, without the dew and the rain, there would be no putting forth of these roots, there would be no gathering from the soil that which enters into the strength and brings to maturity the seed of its kind. Without all these things that are brought to bear to clothe the earth with beauty, without this light and warmth that comes from above, there would be none of this growth. There is a relative condition existing between that which is presented in life,—there must be, to bring about the spiritual fruit requisite to enable us to enter into the society of those that surround the throne of God; and these conditions must be complied with just as literally as must the conditions be fixed that bring the grand result that we see in the development of the fruit and the grain that are produced upon the earth.

There seems to be all that is necessary for the production of this that is ordained of God to sustain life in the world, in the light of the sun, in the moisture of heaven, and in the strength that is gathered from the soil. There seems to be all that is necessary for their growth. There seems to be all that is necessary for the growth of the animals that roam upon the earth, the fowls of the air, and for the human family, so far as their growth and their life as an animal is concerned. There are conditions that surround each and every department, every form of life. There are conditions that surround the insects that are so troublesome to us. They perform their part in the great economy of God. There are conditions around all life that are calculated to sustain and bring the best results in that which is presented, when the conditions surrounding are lived up to by all things that do exist.

Now we know that there is a reaching down by the roots of the grasses, and the grain, and the trees. There is a reaching down, and there is a corresponding reaching up. There is a growth hidden from the eye; there is a growth exposed to the eye. There is a secret force behind this growth that is pushing it upward. We say it is the law of nature; we say that by reason of the seasons, as they have been ordained, this production is kept up year after year, year after year. But there was a beginning. There was a mind that ordained it. There was a mind that organized it, that studied it out, that created it from the beginning; and that mind has ordained the laws by which it should be brought to perfection in every sphere that we enter into in our investigation. There should be the conditions that bring it to perfection. When these conditions are interfered with then we discover there is destruction in any department that we may enter into in the investigation.

There is this difference between the human family, and that which is presented to us for our consideration in the animal kingdom. There is the same difference existing, so far as we can tell, between the human and the vegetable representation of the kingdoms of the earth. There is the same difference existing all through the ramifications of nature as we look upon it; and that is this: God hath created the human being with aspirations and powers that are superior, that are grander, that are higher, that are far-reaching above all the rest of his creations. And because he has created the human family and endowed them with this greater power, this greater understanding of the things that surround them in life, he demands of them more responsibility; he demands of them more implicit confidence in him, he demands of them more strictly to obey the commandments which he has issued relative to the laws of their being. They can grow and become specimens of the highest development of men in their nature and in their character; they can grow, by reason of the development of the body that is given them, and develop the powers and the uses of the powers that are granted unto them, that are magnificent, and represent the human family as the grandest animal that dwells upon the face of the earth. But that development may be only of the physical or of the mental, and not of the spiritual, but it partakes of the earth; it is that that is reaching down, that is holding down. They have the power, by reason of their organization, of developing their minds, and becoming mentally superior and grander to anything that was ever represented anywhere else in all the realms of nature. They can become higher in their civilization, higher and more cultured in their knowledge of literature, in their knowledge of science: but this is all for the use of this world only. There is that principle in man's organization that prompts him to reach above those things; he is reaching up, constantly reaching up, and without that that cometh down from above to make his nature full and complete, he never, no never can come to perfection. He may perfect the corporeal man, he may make himself grand in the use of the power of the animal; but he never comes to the height of the glory that he may reach in perfection, until that influence comes from above that has been ordained of God to make him perfect. As necessary as the sunlight is to the vegetation that grows on the earth to make that perfect, is that demand found in the character and organization of man that asks for the influences that come from above to make him that which he ought to be, that which he was ordained of the Master to be,—to make him fitted to dwell in the presence of God. And that is why God has commanded men to gather together and stand in holy places; that they may receive that which he has promised unto them.

Men may read. Men may study. Men may fill their minds with that which is written, which has been the history of the world; but men never come to an understanding of that which has been written under the influences of the Spirit of God, until they receive of the influences of that Spirit themselves. For this reason we preach and tell men to believe in God, believe in him whom they have not seen; believe on his Son Jesus Christ also, whom they have not seen, but of whom those who have seen him have testified. And their testimony is of that character that they can believe; they can believe the testimony of those who have seen, who have heard him, who have felt him. They can believe; they do believe; but they never arrive at that state of perfection and knowledge that is promised to them of God until they receive of the influences of the Spirit of God which bring to them the knowledge, and they see him by the eye of faith, they see him by the power and the influence of the Holy Ghost, and they become acquainted with him, and they then are putting in use the means which God has ordained to develop them along the higher lines of culture, fitting and leading them, and qualifying to enter into the glory that surrounds the throne of God.

Hence we preach and call men to repentance. Repentance is the putting away of that that stands between them and God. Repentance means to cease to do that that bars out the presence of this Holy Spirit. Repentance means the cleansing of the tabernacle. Repentance and baptism are the preparation necessary. We teach them because they are necessary. They are just as necessary to bring about in the individual the grand result that is designed of God, as it is to sow the seed and put it in the earth, and cultivate it, and keep the noxious weeds from gathering around it and choking it. It is just as necessary that these conditions be complied with as it is that the sun should send its heat upon the earth to warm the seed, and that the moisture should come to moisten it, and cause it to sprout and grow. I say it is just as necessary for the spiritual development of man that he should be planted in the likeness of Christ, which is in baptism,—it is just as necessary in order for him to make the development requisite for him to come into the presence of God as it is for the seed to be put in the earth, and the sun to shine upon it, and the dew and the rain to moisten it. And it is just as natural, too. And when he has complied with that condition, which was ordained of God and commanded of him, he stands then in a position where his reaching upward will have some effect; he is in position where that divine influence of the Spirit may come down and rest upon him, and quicken the powers of life in him, may give him life more abundantly. But he must not think to live by bread alone. He must live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God. He must not think because the rains came last summer, and caused the vegetation and the grain to grow last summer, that it will grow this summer without rain. We may just as well expect a result of this kind as to think that the commandments that were given to the children of Israel will be given to us, or that we can build upon those commandments, and enter into the paradise of God by reason of those commandments. We might just as well expect the commandments that were given to the apostles for their especial government are all that is necessary to be revealed of God. We may just as well expect to enter into the light and glory of the paradise of God and to prepare ourselves for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ by the application of those laws to those men then, as to expect the fruit to grow to-day from the rain that fell last season. We must have the influence of the words of God to us as we shall live in the generation in which we live, applicable upon us, while the words that were given to Moses upon the mountain were applicable to Israel, and in a general sense applicable to us. We must have the word of God to us, else there is no communion between the powers of God and the powers here, no communion between that life, and this life here. We must receive the words of God in our day, as well as the words of God that have been spoken anciently. The earth must have had the rain and the dew heretofore; it must have it now. The world must have had the commandments and powers of God heretofore, it must have them now to prepare them for the great day spoken of, in the reading lesson that I called your attention to this morning.

The last few weeks I have been in the fair city, the city of St. Louis, and I visited the fair. It can not be expected that I will preach a sermon immediately afterward, without saying something about it. Do you know the lesson I learned? At least it seemed to me that I gathered from it the lesson that I read this morning, in the statement that the people of God must gather together and stand in holy places. I learned this lesson, or think I did at least. It was so accepted by me. That God is causing the people of the present generation, irrespective, if you please, of the people called the people of God, to make preparation; and to show what can be done in that preparation for the establishment of the city of Zion.

In Genesis 7:28, Inspired Translation, we find the Lord saying to Enoch, "Behold mine abode for ever." And he was shown the city of Zion. And in chapter 9, verse 22, the Lord makes the statement that "when thy posterity shall embrace the truth, and look upward, then shall Zion look downward," and the city of Enoch shall return to the earth; and when that takes place then it will be time for the angel to sound his trump, and declare, "The tabernacle of God is with men."

In the beautifying of the grounds in that World's Fair, I witnessed what man could do—uninspired; and as I walked around amidst the beautiful buildings, and the beautiful grounds, and viewed the scenes there, all the time there was presented to me a city far more wonderful, far, far beyond that which is represented there. And while I was there in the midst of the people, and on the pike, where there was a babel of sounds, where people gave themselves up to making noise, I was in their midst but not of them. I could not feel that I was of them. I was as separate from them there in the midst, really, as I would have been if I had been thousands of miles from them, so far as any mingling was concerned, more than to see. And I understood, too, something of the nature of the feelings of Bro. Metuaore, who came from the South Pacific Islands, when Bro. Burton wanted to take him up to the dome of the Chronicle building, on Market Street, San Francisco, twenty stories high. He says, "What for, Bro. Joseph?" "Why, to show you the city and the beautiful surroundings." "Oh, Bro. Joseph, my eyes are full now; I will never live to tell all that I have seen in America." I am not going to tell all I saw down there, because I am like Metuaore, my eyes are full of the wonderful things that were brought to pass by the ingenuity, and the science, and the skill of men. I saw in them not simply the skill and ingenuity of the human being to make such things, I saw in them the preparation that was taking place, I saw in them the fact that God was preparing the earth for the time when Christ Jesus shall reign, when all these things shall be made use of in perfection. I saw in them the testimony of the Lord, the witness of the Lord, that the earth was getting ready, was preparing itself for the time of the coming of the Lord.

It may be that I saw things that others did not see. I have been accused of being visionary. I am glad that I am. I want to say to my hearers this morning that the World's Fair is a good thing. All that can take it in, and see it, I would advise them to do so.

That is strange advice perhaps; but if they take it in the right spirit they will learn things there that will be lessons to them through all coming time.

What has all this to do with our hopes, our aspirations? The world was in an apostate condition; the gospel was not preached in its purity, and the crisis came. The Lord sent an angel with the gospel, with authority to ordain and organize and establish his church. And do you not know that in the morn of the establishment of the church, those men who heard the voice and received their teaching from the angel of God entertained and cherished the same hope, the same aspiration? They expected the Lord Jesus Christ would come; they looked for his coming while they were yet alive. They expected to enter in with the ransomed and redeemed when Jesus the Son of God did come. They expected to meet him in glory in this life. They fully expected that the application of the laws of the gospel was of that character that would bring salvation here in this life. And they were seeking to make the preparation. What has been the result? Did they receive their hopes? No more than did the apostles that followed immediately in the teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ. Why? In the lesson that I read to you this morning the statement is made: "Because of their transgressions, they must needs be chastened and scattered." The day of the fulfillment of the hope seems to have been postponed. When the Reorganization was effected nearly forty years ago, your speaker went out with his satchel in his hand, and his Bible, to begin in the work of the ministry as a young man. He expected to live to see the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. In his heart was the same hope, in his mind was the same fixed thought that when the Lord would come he would be among those that would receive and welcome him. History is of such a character that he will not live to see the coming of the Lord Jesus. Will history repeat itself; will we live and pass off from the stage of action, another generation come with the same hope and pass off from the stage of action, another and another, and so go on countless ages in the same way? Do you think this will be? I do not.

I will tell you what called this to my mind. Something like eighteen years ago I visited St. Louis, the last time. It was in my charge at one time as a minister. And when I went back this time I could count every one that I knew eighteen years ago alive at present in the work in St. Louis on the fingers of one hand, as I met with them in their place of worship there. I wonder, eighteen years more, what will be the condition of St. Louis? In eighteen years more what will be the condition here? I wonder, when these young men, entering in upon the ministry, get to be sixty-six or sixty-eight, if they will have the same hopes, look back over the same scenes that I ook back over,—cherish the same hope that I cherished.

What is it that can prevent the repetition of that which is in the past? - What is it that can prevent the loss of the hope? What is there that will put away from us, farther and farther away, the gathering of the people of God? What is there that can prevent the redemption that has been promised? What is there that can so move generation after generation from it? I will tell you what there is. God has revealed it in his revelations. It will be the failure of men to keep his commandments. Men seek the riches of the world, the pride of the world, allow the passions of the flesh to govern them. They seek not the glory of God. They seek not to build themselves up in righteousness and purity. They seek not to fit the temple for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, making it the central and the only thought. They are building themselves up in the riches, surrounding themselves by the comforts of this life, irrespective of that which may be represented in the life to come. They are cultivating themselves and their gratifications for the present life, and the present life only,—too much so. I do not say altogether, but too much so. There are too many that are developing themselves, only for this life, not enough that are developing themselves for the life to come.

Remember this: God has placed no limit on the knowledge that you may acquire. God has placed no limit upon the information that may be given you by reaching upward and partaking of the influence that comes down from God, by living so that the Spirit may come into the tabernacle and dwell with you. Not come to you once a week in your prayer-meetings, or in your preaching meetings, but be with you every day, all the time, in your communion with yourself and your surroundings, in your thoughts, in your studies, in your readings; be with you there and counsel you, and enable you to reach to the heights of knowledge and wisdom that a child of God should reach, qualifying you, should you be called upon to change from this present life into the life to come, that you may enter right into the glories of those that are found in the paradise of God, and move right along in the great economy of God, in the coming to that degree of perfection that you may be entitled to dwell with God and Christ for ever.

That is what we are here for. That is the object of to-day's lesson; that we shall qualify ourselves to enter into the higher and better and nobler society of those found in the presence of God.

“Great occasions do not make heroes or cowards—they simply unveil them to the eyes of men. Silently and imperceptibly, as we wake or sleep, we grow and wax strong, or we grow and wax weak, and at last some crisis shows us what we have become.”

BE CONSISTENT.

To be consistent, I apprehend that the practical life should be all that the espoused theory of the exegete represents, to render that theory conducive of the highest and best good to man. This thought Jesus comprehensively expressed in the following words: “Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, [not hear your theory only] and glorify your Father which is in heaven.”—Matthew 5: 16.

This light, which is the spiritual life of man, will shine so that man can see it as really good works, only when there is compatibility of practical life with a never-changing theoretical life.

The adequacy of this required unanimity of a never-changing faith and works, is the esophagus through which spiritual food is conveyed to the mental and spiritual man, to the satisfaction of a hungry and thirsty soul. “Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled [satisfied].”—Matthew 5: 6.

A failure, in the practical life of religious exponents, to be consistent with the theory they advocate is, to the sense and judgment of many, a sufficient excuse to brand the theory a delusion, and a snare. This is done by a class of people, however, who will not make an honest effort to practice a good theory, because of the duplicity of its advocate, but who might be induced to do so by the persuasive power of consistency. This is inconsistent upon the part of any such persons; but, inevitably, with a multitude of people this is a lamentable conclusion. And it ought to be an incentive to all incongruous teachers, to reform, and remove the stones of inconsistencies over which, it is quite obvious to the perceptive mind, thousands are stumbling and falling.

Surely one of the grossest and most diabolical inconsistencies, most detrimental to the spiritual growth and development of Christianity, is a professed belief in Christ, orally and loudly proclaimed, and at the same time a positive, practical rejection of his divine law,—his doctrine. The Apostle Paul knew some such conditions, cotemporaneous with his ministry: “They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate.”—Titus 1: 16.

Doctors of divinity who, with the wisdom of modern theological sages, diagnose the case of the sin-sick, and prescribe a dose consistent with their school, if nothing else, and who from mercenary motives, put their accomplishments into the commercial balance to be sold out to the highest bidder, and as quacks peddle broken and diseased extracts from the great panacea, (God's law,) so distorted and mutilated as to be almost beyond the possibility of recognition, refuse to take the dose they so sanctimoniously prescribe for others, even when they are possessed of the same abnormal conditions, or worse, being too Pharisaical and not enough Samaritan in demeanor. This is one of the many inconsistencies afloat, a parasite right in the very heart of religion, and a sure index to ultimate ruin, chanting in advance a requiem for the dead.

One of those parasitical and licentious inconsistencies is very tersely illustrated in the following anecdote: A minister who always taught, "Remember the Sabbath-day, to keep it holy," quite frequently called Sambo, a servant of his, to do some work on Sabbath mornings. When calling early one day for Sambo to arise, and come to breakfast, Sambo replied, "Don't eat on the Sabbath-day, Massa," evidently knowing what would follow from past experiences. After waiting a reasonable time for Sambo's appearance, the minister called again, when the same reply greeted him as before. This time "Massa" thought he would reason the case, and said, "Sambo, do you not know that you ought to be out shaking the dew off that newly cut hay?" A firm reply came in line with "Massa's" favorite theme, "I don't work on the Sabbath-day, Massa." But nothing daunted "Massa" still argued the case and firmly said in the most reverent tone, "Now, Sambo, look here, if you had an ox to fall in the mire, would you not pull him out on the Sabbath-day?" "Yes sah," was the quick response, "but he could just stay there all day, if I shoved him in the night before."

Do nothing on the evening before, for an excuse to work on the Lord's day. These excuses are not justifiable causes. Be wise and consistent. The most illiterate will discover you, as well as the more wise. The Jews professed to believe in Moses and the prophets; but the fallacy of their profession was discovered; and Christ said, "Had you believed in Moses, you would have believed in me, for Moses wrote of me." Inconsistencies often bear the spirit of persecution. So they persecuted a man who had told them the truth, unto death, but have faced inimical and militating conditions ever since.

James say in an interrogatory statement yet in the sense of the positive, no, "Does a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?"—James 3:11. The sweet words of conciliating truth are made to the taste of the observer bitter as gall by the nonconformity of its advocate. Inconsistencies put a false face on Christianity, and a leech upon the unconverted which saps the life-blood of undeveloped religious energies, as the tentacles of the octopus draws the life-blood of its doomed victims. The natural and true face being marred and disfigured many are deceived, and the leech divests them of all desires to investigate.

The true face of restored Christianity represented the Church of Jesus Christ from the year 1830 to 1844 as being strictly and absolutely monogamous, knowing and practicing the one wife system only.

But this divine law given of God to govern latter-day Israel was, in the year of 1852, veneered with a false face by the paint-brush of deception in the hands of inconsistent daubers. And polygamy, the veneering material of seceders, now arrayed in the garb of holy law, appeared, sword in hand, to damn the world of monogamous principle; and with the audacity of Goliath's assumption, asserted its superiority over little David (monogamy). But like Goliath doomed to fall a victim of little David's stone of consistency, the giant carcass of Goliath (polygamy) who once so majestically perched upon the top of the mountains, has been given unto the vultures, that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel.

Wilford Woodruff, on March 16, 1892, being produced, sworn, and examined, in the Temple Lot case, to the question, why the church (Utah church in Salt Lake) of which he was president, in the publication of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in the edition of 1876 eliminated from that edition the section on marriage, as found in the 1835 edition, and in all the editions published up to 1876, and inserted in lieu of that section on marriage, the revelation on polygamy dated July 12, 1843, answered, "I do not know why it was done."—Abstract of Evidence, Temple Lot Case, p. 309.

That section referred to as the one eliminated from the 1876 edition, published at Salt Lake, Utah, reads in part as follows: "Inasmuch as this Church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy: we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again."—Doctrine and Covenants 111:4, (Lamoni edition). Had Woodruff, speaking for his church as he did, really believed in the story of Brigham Young, that that polygamous revelation was given to Joseph Smith, July 12, 1843, he could at least have given that as a reason for its insertion in the Doctrine and Covenants.

Lorenzo Snow, president of the twelve apostles in the Utah church at the time, and for over a half-century a church official, testified in the above case as follows: "Before the giving of that revelation in 1843, [the one inserted in lieu of the one eliminated from 1876 edition,] if a man married more wives than one, who were living at the same time, he would have been cut off from the church. It would have been adultery under the laws of the church, and under the laws of the State too."—Ibid., p. 320. Yet on page 321 he testifies that Joseph was sealed or married to his (Snow's) sister some three months prior to the giving of that polygamous revelation. Shame! And then he continues on page 322 to say in substance that that purported revelation of 1843 was never given to the church until 1852 in Salt Lake, and not until then was it binding on the church. And again in the intoxication of polygamous rum he says on page 324, that the church in Utah permitting a man to have as many wives as he wants, is the same church that allowed but one wife in the days of Joseph Smith. Consistency, thou art belied; and the Sampson of Delilah's flattery has trampled thee under foot, and blasphemed the word of God. "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book."—Revelation 22:18. This will apply to the man or set of men who added polygamy to God's law, and who at the same time eliminated, took away, his word. "If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, he is proud, knowing nothing."—1 Timothy 6:3.

The one wife system was the word of our Lord Jesus Christ to his church in 1831; and the doctrine as found therein, viz.: "Thou shalt love thy wife [not wives] with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else," (Doctrine and Covenants 42:7,) is according to godliness and therefore wholesome words. But behold they changed to the vice of polygamy, in the year 1852, and tacitly acknowledged themselves opposed to the law of the State. Again by the mouth of duplicity and apostasy they charge Joseph Smith with secretly practicing polygamy as early as 1841, and brand themselves as being parties to a lawbreaking element, not loyal and true to the obligations imposed by virtue of ordination, viz., to teach the law of God, to see that it is honored and kept by officials as well as the laity.

What! A prophet of God teaching the celestial law of God's restored kingdom, which law condemns polygamy and calls it an abomination, yet he himself violating that sacred and divine law by actual practice? Such is the picture you paint under the brilliant headlines of your profession, viz.: God changes not, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. Shame, ye perpetrators of infamy! So inimical and militating against the restoration work of God, by the man of his choice, are you, that outraged justice long since arose and unmasked the ghastly face of your inconsistencies. The immutable word of God: "Behold I change not," gives the most uncouth exaggeration to your professed authority to put God on the gospel bulletin absolutely on the side of polygamy for thirty-eight years.

When you profess to believe in the revelations given to the church up to 1844, as contained in Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, as in favor of monogamy, what apology can you offer for going back to the works of David, and Solomon, to make an effort to prove the validity of polygamy? Dare you say that God changed his law as then practiced in old Bible times, to put an inferior one on the infancy of the church, as it was struggling out of the wilderness? And what explanation can you offer in reconciliation of your professed belief in the law as given to the church from 1830 to 1844, the culmination of that period denominated the restoration period, and so acknowledged by you as a church, wherein the fullness of the everlasting covenant was committed to man? As in the language of a revelation given March, 1831, to Sidney Rigdon, Parley P. Pratt, and Lemon Copley, "Wherefore I say unto you, that I have sent unto you mine everlasting covenant, even that which was from the beginning. . . . Wherefore it is lawful that he [man] should have one wife, and they twain [two] shall be one flesh, and all this [no more] that the earth might answer the end of its creation." You believe, or profess to believe all this, so now reconcile that with your avowed belief, that Jesus Christ was a polygamist, and so published to the world in Journal of Discourses, volume 4, page 259. If as they now admit, and always have, that that period of fourteen years witnessed the restoration of that which was from the beginning as stated to S. Rigdon, P. P. Pratt, and L. Copley in 1831, and in that revelation, and in one preceeding it to Joseph, he (Christ) said cleave to one wife and none else;—lawful that man should have one, inferring that more than this would be unlawful,—then in the absence of any evidence in the foregoing revelation that Jesus sanctioned in any way the practice of polygamy, the charge of Brighamites, or the claim that he was a polygamist, is a malignant form of inconsistency. "Let God be true, though every man a liar."

This charge does more than make Christ inconsistent; it brands him as a liar and a hypocrite, and that too just at a time when the church needed a full administration of his law, love, and power. O thou child of the Devil, when wilt thou cease to pervert the way of the Lord? Thou hast said, "If plural marriage be unlawful, then is the whole plan of salvation through the house of Israel a failure, and the entire fabric of Christianity without foundation."—Brighamite Compendium, p. 125.

The church, then, of Joseph's day of fourteen years was a failure, and its fabric of Christianity without foundation. For Joseph (in harmony with the law of the church) declared polygamy a false doctrine when on February 1, 1844, in the notice to Hyrum Brown of his excision from the church, he says, "for teaching polygamy and other false doctrine." (Signed by Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Presidents of the church.) (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 423.)

President John Taylor, Brigham's successor, denied the doctrine and practice of polygamy on July 11, 1850, while in a public discussion in France, and declared it unlawful by reading that section on marriage.

Orson Hyde said Jesus Christ was a polygamist. Taylor said polygamy was unlawful. Therefore Jesus was unlawful by the highest Brighamite authority of that day. Such is the logical conclusion else they must confess duplicity and deception.

Consistency, where art thou? Thou jewel that sparkles as the most precious diamond in the sunlight of truth, arise from the debris of fallen Babylon, and from the opaqueness of hypocrisy and deceit, shine out, that in the effulgence of thy brightness the way of truth may be kept and God, its author, glorified.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Our Birth Offering Series.

We are pleased to be able to announce to parents, as well as all interested in children, that the fifth volume of our Birth Offering series is now in the hands of the binder and will soon be on sale. This volume comprises, and puts into a permanent form, The Gospel Story and Footsteps of Jesus. It is profusely illustrated and upon inserted leaves will be found a list of the names of those whose birth offerings have contributed to aid in its publication. It is hoped that fathers and mothers will avail themselves at an early day of placing this book in the hands of their children and thus enable the church to furnish others of a similar character. We also hope that it may be a reminder to mothers and other near relatives to send in an offering for the little ones God intrusts to their care, that this work may not be hindered for the want of means to carry it on.

Let your children's names appear in these volumes and by every means in your power bind them to the cause of Christ—the cause you yourself have espoused and for which you are willing to labor and sacrifice. Other volumes will follow in the near future and among them will be the story of the restoration of the gospel, together with instances of the great power by which it was attended. Such books are greatly needed in our homes and in our Sunday-schools and we are looking to you, fathers and mothers, to help us in placing them there. Will you do it?

Send all orders to F. B. Blair, business manager; price fifty cents.

If each Sunday-school in the association would order one volume we would be prepared to issue others immediately. Will superintendents of schools please notice this?

God Knoweth Best.

Sometime, when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars for evermore have set,
The things which our weak judgments here have spurned,
The things on which we grieved with lashes wet,
Will flash before us, out of life's dark night,
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue,
And we shall see how all God's plans are right,
And how what seemed reproof was love most true.

And we shall see how, while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me;
How when we called He heeded not our cry,
Because His wisdom to the end could see;
And even as wise parents disallow
Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So God, perhaps, is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things because it seemeth good.

And if, sometimes, commingled with life's wine,
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
Pours out this portion for our lips to drink.

And if some friend we love is lying low,
Where human kisses can not reach his face,
Oh, do not blame the loving Father so,
But wear your sorrow with abundant grace.

And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God sends his friend.
And that sometimes the sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon His love can send.

If we could push ajar the gates of life,
And stand within, and all God's working see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery could find a key.—

But not to-day. Then be content, poor heart!
God's plans like lilies pure and white unfold.
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart,
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold.
And if through patient toil we reach the land
Where tired feet, with sandals loosed, may rest,
When we shall clearly see and understand,
I think we then shall say, God knows the best.

MAY RILEY SMITH.

GULFORD, Missouri, June 18, 1904.

Dear Sister Frances:—As I have never written to your pages before, I will try and contribute a few thoughts. I always look with great joy to the coming of the HERALD, hoping each time to read of the good done by many of our noble missionaries. It fills my heart with gladness whenever I hear of noble, honest-hearted people uniting with the Saints. Seeing so many cheering letters in the "Home Column," and such good instruction to the sisters, makes me feel that each and every one in the fold of God can do something for the advancement of his work. He says, "Work while it is called to-day." He wants us to be diligent, faithful workers.

"Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days." Are we striving to help do this? I believe we can help in many ways to send God's light and truth to the perishing. I love this work, my whole heart and soul are in it; the older I grow, the more beauty and grandeur I can see in it. I have a desire to let my light shine before the world, and bear testimony to this latter-day work. We all should know that it is the gospel of Christ, and it is the power of God unto salvation; so let us not be weary in well-doing, but ever ready to stand in our place and to give a reason for the hope that is within us. It is not every one that saith Lord, Lord, that is acceptable, but it is the doer of the work. I am looking down to the end of this journey of life, when we, if faithful, with all the redeemed ones, will be gathered home to that beautiful world where Jesus has gone to prepare a place for those who love his appearing. My desire and determination is to live and prepare myself, that I may be ever ready.

Your sister,

MARY E. NELSON.

My Mistake.

One bright October morning I started for my school. Everything in nature was suggestive of Helen Hunt Jackson's beautiful poem, "October's Bright Blue Weather." I went part way on the car and then had to walk a mile and a quarter. When I began my walk I thought I would see how soon I could reach the end of my journey. The sky was so very blue, the trees looked so gorgeous in their holiday attire, and the air was so cool and everything tended to inspire one with life and determination. I walked very fast, till at last I came to a rise of ground; it was a constant up grade for some distance. I found that I could not keep going at the pace I had been, in fact could not go at a steady pace; I was tired, out of breath, and where I needed the most of my strength, I was without it.

I thought how much that is like our life. When everything is going smoothly, and it is easy going, we expend our surplus strength, and then when we encounter some of the difficulties, we find that our forces are weakened, and we have to rest when we should be going steadily onward. Well might we be advised to not grow weary in well-doing, and if we are not to grow weary we must be wise in the use of our strength, and not run well for a season, and then give up the battle. We must not use our strength needlessly as I did in the first of my trip, but work steadily, slowly and the victory will be won with less trouble, and at the end of the journey we will rejoice that by patient continuance in well-doing we were enabled to be crowned victors.

A Dream.

On the night of April 1, 1904, I dreamed that Joseph and I, together with a company of Saints, though not a large gathering, were waiting the coming of Christ. I know not how we came in possession of the knowledge that his coming was so near at hand, but we knew it, and all worldly work and cares were laid aside. And we were all standing together in the open air, looking with a solemn, wistful sort of feeling, first to one part of the heavens, and then to another, not knowing from which direction he would come. All one day and one night we continued steadfastly watching and waiting. In the morning of the second day, a change came over us, a feeling of peace, slight at first, but nevertheless distinct. It was daylight, but in the midst of the daylight, there came another light whiter than that of day. And like as the feeling of peace, it was just perceptible at first, but both gradually increased as does the light of the morning, the peace filling our hearts, and the light filling the atmosphere where we were, until neither could contain more. Then out from that brightness burst forth the Son of Man standing upon the earth directly in front of us. It was as though this light had been to him for a covering which shielded him from view until he stood upon the earth; then he threw it off as a garment, revealing himself to our view, smiling pleasantly and genially. In appearance there was nothing that would distinguish him from other men; the distinguishing feature was the exquisite happiness his presence imparted.

While the light was increasing, and the feeling of awe also, for we knew he was drawing near, I began to tremble and fear within myself lest I should be rejected of him. I recounted my many imperfections, aye downright faults, and felt unworthy, yet I said within myself, I will not put myself away, but will stay right here by Joseph until he comes and puts me away. And O the joy, when he extended his hand to me also. How I wished in my heart it might never be withdrawn.

After shaking hands with the people, he spoke concerning the delay and slowness of his coming, that it was needful for us, that we might have our thoughts withdrawn entirely from all other things and fixed upon him, and his coming, otherwise we could not receive him. And as if in answer to the thought of my heart of how different was his appearance to what I had thought it would be, he said, "This is not the final coming, but to help the Saints prepare for it, for without such help they would not be ready."

"A commonplace life," we say and we sigh,

But why should we sigh as we say?

The commonplace sun in the commonplace sky
Makes up the commonplace day;

The moon and the stars are commonplace things,
And the flower that blooms, and the bird that sings;
But dark were the world, and sad our lot,
If the flowers should fail and the sun shine not,—
And God, who studies each separate soul,
Out of commonplace lives makes his beautiful whole.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

BRO. J. W. HAXTON, of Los Angeles, California, in a letter to the general home department superintendent says: "The home class of Los Angeles, California, is young and not very strong yet, but we are alive and growing, and we are thankful for that. And we expect to stick to it till the blessed sunshine comes in and makes us strong enough to run alone. Then we will march on and on till the hills and dales of Los Angeles ring with the joyful sound. . . . We are growing in numbers and in wisdom. We are adding members to the main school and are self-supporting. We are organizing new classes. We have some excellent teachers who are carrying on the work with great courage and success. . . . We have ordered one hundred each of the home class membership cards and envelopes and expect to find use for a large number of them." This is as it should be. What they can do in Los Angeles can be done in almost any large city, or small one too for that matter, or even in the rural districts. It can be done if there is some one who will do as this brother has done, go at it with your will and keep at it till you have accomplished the work. Many schools are now doing well at this work and many more can and will when once fully understood and appreciated.

BRO. CHARLES A. GURWELL, superintendent of the Northeastern Illinois District, makes a call through the HERALD for all isolated members to correspond with him with a view to introducing the home class work. We hope he will meet with ready coöperation with all members and workers of the district who can help in this work. Other district workers could with great profit to the movement do likewise.

WE HAVE from our beloved brother and missionary in charge, Frederick A. Smith, a report in which he mentions that four schools were organized in his mission during the last quarter. One was organized in the Des Moines, Iowa, District by Bro. S. K. Sorensen, one in the Little Sioux, Iowa, District by Bro. J. M. Baker, and two in the Southern Nebraska District, one by Bro. E. A. Madison and one by Bro. W. M. Self. We are appreciative of Bro. Smith's kindness in reporting the work and the other brethren for the interest taken therein while in the field.

BRO. EDWARD RANNIE, laboring in the Eastern Iowa District, sends in the names of several isolated members who are interested in the home class work. Our general home department superintendent appreciates this kind of assistance as it is just what is needed to reach those who need the home class work. All or any missionaries or others will confer a great favor by sending to the home department superintendent, Mrs. T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa, the names of any church members who could and should be regular students of the Sunday-school lesson and are not in any Sunday-school. Those in well organized districts may be sent to the district superintendent, and if in a school should be looked after by that school. If in doubt, send as above and they will be looked after.

The Sunday-School Army.

"The modern school is indeed a product of the nineteenth century, almost entirely of the latter half of it. We look upon Robert Raikes as the founder of the Sunday-school, yet not one of his own nine children ever attended the Sunday-school which their father founded. It was originally intended only as a means of reaching the boys and girls of the slums. But it now presents the largest army in the world under one banner—twenty-six million. It is the common meeting-place of all denominations, the discoverer and developer of Christian workers."—Selected.

You Can if You Will.

"I can not make a pretty blackboard; there's not a bit of the artist in me," said a primary teacher. One does not need to be an artist to make straight and curved lines and help children to see what they stand for, nor does it require artistic ability to cut pictures from papers and lesson helps to brighten the board and hold little eyes."

And such helping truth into a little soul by the path of the eye is worth the doing. Be willing to make even queer lines for a child's sake; only let your lines have some real meaning, and thoughtfully tell forth the truth.—Selected.

"How to Behave."

I have knowledge of a superintendent who took charge of a Sunday-school at a time when it was in a pretty low state so far as discipline was concerned. The children were unruly and the teachers seemed unable or unwilling to make their scholars "behave." But the new superintendent was not in the least discouraged, and he was wise enough to maintain his self-poise, to hold himself well in hand. He did not scold nor threaten nor complain. He did not even rebuke the unruly ones. At the close of the second session of his reign as superintendent he held up a handsome book and said:

"I will give this book as a prize to the boy or girl in this Sunday-school who will write the best essay on the topic 'How to behave in Sunday-school.' Now put your wits to work, boys and girls, and let us know just what you think the conduct of a person should be in Sunday-school. I will give another prize for the second best essay, and we will have both essays read from this platform by the writers, or I will read them if their authors are unwilling to do so."

Nineteen essays were offered in competition for the prizes, and those essays revealed the fact that the writers knew perfectly well how they should behave in the house of God, and in the Sunday-school. The first prize essay was so good that the superintendent had it printed at small expense and each scholar was given a copy. The boy who wrote it read it from the platform, and when he was through with it the superintendent said:

"Now is there any reason in the world why we should not behave just as John says we should in Sunday-school? How many of you think that it is our duty to do just as John says we should in Sunday-school?"

Nearly every hand in the room went up, and the superintendent "had them," as some one said afterward. He certainly had a "long head" and he knew what he wanted to bring to pass when he had those essays written. From that hour the conduct of the scholars changed, and this bit of strategy accomplished more than a year of scolding or threatening or half-tearful pleading would have accomplished. It might be profitable to try this method in your school if the children do not "behave" as they should.—New Century Teachers' Monthly.

Wanted.

We want a complete list of the names and addresses of district Sunday-school association officers. This we need prior to sending out some work we have prepared. Will district superintendents and secretaries please furnish me with such list of your district officers? Will you kindly see that this is attended to carefully and promptly?

Hopefully,

T. A. HOUGAS, General Superintendent.

The Sunday-School Lesson for August 28, 1904.

CLOTH, NOT COBWEBS.

A sentence from a gifted writer suggests to us that it is possible for us to be weavers of cobwebs and not of cloth. It is possible for us to spend our time in weaving finespun theories concerning conditions in the eternity from which we came into this life and the eternity into which we shall go after we leave this phase of existence, and concerning other subjects. We may compare this to weaving cobwebs.

But the practical thing for us to do is to give thought to the things that pertain to our duties here, to the weaving of that fine linen which John says is the righteousness of Saints.

God has said little to us concerning the future upon which we enter after this life; he has spoken to us chiefly concerning our duties in this life. If our life-work is done well, our condition in the future will be satisfactory to us. To act our part well in the present is the practical thing for us to do.

ONE OF THE STRONG THREADS

One of the threads which we must weave into our character is patience. No life can be really strong and good without this thread of patience in it. James teaches in the opening of his letter that Saints should welcome the hard experiences of life that give opportunity for the cultivation of patience. How else can we grow strong in patience but by passing through those experiences that make it necessary for us to be patient?

WITH WHOM SHOULD WE BE PATIENT?

Christ was patient with all men and under all circumstances.

Paul taught Timothy to be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient.

Peter taught the saints to be patient, not only with the good and gentle, but also with the froward.

If we follow the teaching of Jesus, we must be patient even with our enemies.

WHAT IS PATIENCE?

Indifference is not patience. We are not patient under circumstances to which we are indifferent. That is carelessness, or, perhaps, slothfulness, or disregard of conditions, but it is not patience.

It is often quite a tax upon our patience to maintain silence under great provocation, but a quiet demeanor is not necessarily an evidence of patience; patience is something more than mere silence; it is not sullen endurance or the still planning or waiting for revenge; it is something better and more ennobling than these.

Patience is not always accompanied by sadness of countenance, though often it is. Doubtless we have all seen persons whose patient waiting for something longed for gave a wistful expression to the face, or whose submission to some great sorrow gave a look of resignation that stirred us with sympathy mingled with pain.

There is a patience, brave, strong, and cheerful, that we are called upon by the gospel to cultivate, for we are bidden to be cheerful in our warfare that we may be joyous in our triumph. This does not mean that we shall be indifferent or hard of heart, but it means that we shall be wise, brave, sensible, cheerful under the things that press hard upon us, not sinking down under them in despair but bearing up under them as those who have faith in God and in the preservation of that which is good and the final triumph of all that is true.

Many of us are patient under heavy burdens which we must bear long, but are impatient over the trifles of very little importance and of short duration. We increase our peace, as we learn to be patient with the little annoyances of life.

PATIENCE IN SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

We need a good supply of it, but we need some other things with it, lest it cease to be a virtue.

We should be patient with unruly boys. We should manifest it in our steady attention to them, being always in our places ready to teach them. We should be pleasant with them; we should prepare ourselves to make the lessons interesting to them. We should do all we can to make the work of the class a success.

But we should not go to the extreme of thinking we must permit them to be disorderly and rude in the class. That is not patience; that is a lack of firmness. If the officers, teachers, and parents of the children are united as they should be in the proper discipline and training of the children of our Sunday-schools, there is no necessity for disorder in our schools, and there should be none.

Too often this disorder results from the lack of energy, a lack of attention to the small things of Sunday-school work, to a mistaken idea of what patience and kindness are. It is not patience or kindness to our children to let them run riot.

Patience does not demand, either, that the officers and pupils of a school shall continue as teachers those who are habitually neglectful of their duties to the class of which they are said to be in charge. And it does not demand that the school shall continue to sustain officers in their places, if they do not attend to their duties, or if they are found to be unable to do those duties.

We should all exercise kind good will toward one another, but we should all labor for the general good, sinking personalities out of sight.

Did you ever see a mother or father patiently walking along at the slow pace of a little child whom he led by the hand?

Must not Sunday-school teachers be patient enough to plod along where the little ones are able to understand?

Intermediate teachers, do you not sometimes find it slow work teaching children just promoted from the primary grade to use the Bible? And yet it is very good practice for them, and work that needs to be done. We should be very helpful and patient with children at this stage of their Sunday-school education.

I once read the suggestion that, if we would sympathize with a child just learning to read, we should try to read backwards. If it seems to us that the little intermediate boys and girls are slow in finding the places and in reading the verses of scripture, let us peer over the top of their books and see how much sooner we will find the place in that way.

Be very patient with the slow boys and girls.

The following is an extract from a poem called the "Loom of life":

"When shall this wonderful web be done?

In a thousand years, perhaps, or one;
Or to-morrow. Who knoweth? Not you or I,
But the wheels turn on and the shuttles fly.

"Are we spinners of wool for this life-web—say?

Do we furnish the weaver a thread each day?
It were better, then, O my friend, to spin
A beautiful thread than a thread of sin.

"Ah, sad-eyed weaver, the years are slow,
But each one is nearer the end, I know;
And some day the last thread will be woven in.
God grant it be love instead of sin."

ANNA SALYARDS.

WALLSEND, New South Wales, July, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am reminded that it is a long time since I contributed a word of any description from this field of labor, and as all truth-loving Saints are anxiously watching, and waiting the fulfillment of prophecies, both ancient and modern, in connection with this great latter-day work; I wish to state that we are steadily moving onward, with omens of a brighter and more prosperous day ahead. We are longing for suitable high priests and elders to be raised up to minister to the needs and wants of the little flocks here and there, so that the missionaries may have their hands loosed to push the work into new fields. As it is at present, one missionary is occupied with our mission paper, another acting as district president, and another as branch president; but seemingly it can not be helped under present conditions.

There is a vast field of labor in this part of the world, and a bounteous harvest to be gathered in, and we trust that no laborers will leave these sunny shores until their task is fully done, not only because of the great expense incurred in taking these long voyages, but because we are so short-handed at present that the work begun often suffers loss in consequence thereof. Missionaries sent to foreign missions should try to labor diligently and contentedly until their labor is required, and course directed, to other fields. We have all for life enlisted in the Lord's great army, and as soldiers should not be like wandering stars floating here and there with no fixed course; but keep in line with the directing power, both in heaven and in earth. At present the missionaries are pushing our claims to the front with commendable zeal, and are meeting with fair success. May the good work prosper mightily until the Lord shall say it is enough.

I am now on a trip through the New South Wales District, visiting the different branches, and assisting the officers of branches and district to set matters as much in order as possible.

On my arrival in Sydney I had three weeks of influenza; but have recovered sufficiently to be out again, for which I am very grateful.

The Saints are beginning to realize more forcibly that the day of sacrifice is upon us, and that consecrations, tithing, and offerings, are some of the essential features necessary to be complied with in order to lay up treasures in heaven and secure an inheritance on earth with the redeemed.

My faith in this work is unshaken, and I feel that when all the projects and schemes of men have failed and passed away, the truth as restored in these latter days will bloom and blossom as the rose.

Faternally,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

SANTA ANA, California, August 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: The Southern California reunion is now a matter of history,—a season of pleasant memories, a season of rejoicing to Saints present, a time of spiritual encouragement. The weather was warm and dry, interspersed with cool evenings and mornings, as is usual to this region of California at this time of the year. It was held some two miles west of Santa Ana, in a willow grove, near the Santa Ana River, the waters of which are "dried up" at this season of the year. It is believed to have been the largest Saints' reunion so far held in this district.

The committee appointed to arrange for the reunion had ample arrangements for the convenience and entertainment of all; and unity and good feeling on the part of all present characterized its sessions to the end. Elders Joseph Luff, T. W. Williams, A. Carmichael, and C. Scott were appointed in charge.

Many of the children were present, and two services were held for them, in which they especially participated, and nine of them were baptized by Elder Crumley the last day of the reunion, and confirmed. One adult was also baptized.

I may safely say the preaching was timely, appropriate, and spiritual, and was appreciated. Most of the services were attended by some not members of the church, the evening sessions more particularly. And during the closing day a goodly number not of our faith came and heard the word as dispensed by Brn. Luff and Williams.

Sunday-school and Religio work came in for consideration, though no regularly organized efforts were made in their behalf. The prayer-meetings were not composed of time to spare but were seasons of time well improved with song, prayer, and encouraging testimony.

The reunion for August, 1905, is to be held at San Bernardino, so we may safely conclude the Saints of Southern California are determined to move "onward and upward" in this great latter-day work. Individually, the writer never enjoyed a district reunion better. He realized that the divine favor and Spirit pervaded the services and accompanied the preached word to a goodly degree.

May the Saints everywhere grow in strength, unity, and holiness of heart and life. Our Father is drawing very near to his faithful Saints in these trying days. I must not forget to pay due respect to the coöperative table conducted in the interests of the reunion by Bro. Peter Kaufmann, of Los Angeles, at which meals were served at ten cents each to regular boarders and at fifteen cents for transients, and meals were free to the missionaries. A number of hearty helpers joined in the work, everything was tidy, and meals served on time. Sr. Nellie Holt was in charge of the table arrangements, and while the table was conducted in the interests of the reunion, and Brn. Kaufmann and Schade labored free of charge, the seven dollars left over from the table service was turned over to the general committee. This but illustrates what may be done by coöperation willingly and freely carried out. Coöperation and proportional equality practically carried out is the solution of the economic problems of to-day. But at the foundation of these must be: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, might, mind, and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself," in all religious and business relations, together with the rule: "All things therefore, whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Any ideal below this will fail, because below the Christ ideal, and aside from Christ's way of the solution of these problems in this relation there is no successful solution. The world has tried every device so far, imaginable, and presents as results, bold failures only!

Can any one show us a success aside from Christ's proposition? Then can the world succeed without him?

The less of the Christ fundamental there is in national (or man's effort), the greater the confusion and failure,—as witness existing conditions in the religious and economic world. If, therefore, our assertion is not correct, the sooner the world gets rid of the Christ the better. A people can not be one spiritually and religiously, while not proportionally one or equal temporally, "And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them."—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2. "Nevertheless in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3. "Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his."—Romans 8: 9. I care not whether the word Spirit in this text be construed, to mean Holy Spirit, or the Savior's disposition. Christ loved not only his brother as himself, but poor sinners so ungrudgingly that he gave his life for them. (See Romans 5: 6-8.) Zion will be Zion "because" of three things; viz., her children are of "one heart and one mind," they "dwell together in righteousness," and there are "no poor among them."

Believest thou this? "Show me thy faith by thy works."

Who that reads the late revelations carefully, and discerns the events coming, can fail to see that God was preparing his people against unequal, unrighteous conditions? He has given us the solution, the remedy. Will we apply it?

The cold, unregenerate, skeptical socialism of the world will never bring the ideal because it does not, can not solve the problem. It can not solve, because it does not change and regenerate the heart. The heart must go with the head.

The object and purpose of God in developing in his children this love for himself and man's neighbor, by sacrifice, tithing, and consecration, is, that such condition or disposition of heart and soul can be developed in no other way. The selfish side of human nature is by this allowed to die; and unselfish spirituality takes its place, and man's whole soul, mind, and spirit carries his energies with it, so his energies are rightly directed. God does not wish the energies of his children misdirected. Are we right here? If not, give us the correct ideal.

Hopefully,

C. SCOTT.

LIMERICK, Ohio, August 9, 1904.

Editors Herald: The day following the adjournment of the General Conference I started for my new mission-field, Southern Ohio. The following Sunday I entered upon my year's work, and have been quite busy ever since. With considerable reluctance I assumed the newly imposed duties, but realizing that the same God who has watched over me all the days of my life would continue the same toward me in other fields if I but trusted him. So far nothing but success has followed my efforts, and the burden of my prayers is that it may continue. I find so much to do in the many urgent demands for the preaching of the word in the places where I have visited that I feel to fervently pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the vineyard and give additional strength of body and mind to those whom he has called and sent forth.

About the middle of May Bro. Jeffers, district president, joined me at the Highland County Branch and with him labored and set the branch in good order, with a full complement of officers. While there I baptized three precious souls.

About the first of June I went to Cincinnati and began operations in that big city and across the river in Covington, Kentucky, and together with the labors of Brn. W. H. Kelley, J. W. Metcalf, and William Hanner seven were baptized. While there last week I organized a flourishing little Sunday-school, with Bro. William Damond superintendent. Bro. Damond followed his country's flag to the far-off Philippines in troublesome times, and while thousands of miles of land and water separated him and his own land, found joy and comfort in being a Latter Day Saint. Bro. Hanner is working faithfully to get the work before the people of those big cities, and is well liked by all with whom he has labored.

From Cincinnati I went to Middletown, and preached in the homes of the Saints. I was not long discovering this fact: if we expected to do any special missionary work at Middletown we must have a public place to which we could invite the people; consequently, in a few hours time fifty-five dollars were subscribed, and with the help of others of the district a tent twenty-six by forty is now being operated there with excellent interest. As a result five have been baptized thus far, two by Bro. E. E. Long and three by myself,—all grown people of good reputation among their fellows. Bro. Greene stopped off and rendered valuable service, ordaining Bro. Long to the eldership.

Sr. Edith Wren has started a subscription for the purpose of erecting a new church. All who know Sr. Edith have every reason to believe she will succeed. This shall be our earnest hope, for no branch can ever expect to have the influence they should without a public place of worship. The families of Brn. Wren and Countryman look well after the needs of those laboring among them, while the young people add additional interest to the meetings with the song and music.

Bro. Greene and myself held a week's grove meeting at Elmville; good crowds and the best of interest. The elders who know Mr. James Stultz of that place will be glad to know that while there I baptized him, and he is now rejoicing in the truth. He has been a staunch friend of the Saints for some years.

While there we availed ourselves of the opportunity to visit the famous serpent mound five miles distant, so securing wheels, and taking luncheon for an all day's outing we started. All went lovely till we came to the bend of the smooth pike within full view of the high eminence on which the huge old serpent has silently rested for ages. In his eagerness to get there, my fellow wheelsman insisted we take "short cuts," much as I preferred to keep the pike leading directly to the object of our visit. I yielded to his leadership, but this "short cut" demonstrated the fact that his ability to direct matters in a snake hunt is not to be taken with the same complacency as in some other matters. However, after climbing barb wire fences, through stubble-fields, through acres of tall corn, over ditches, fording creeks, and over mountain cliffs, part the time carrying our wheels, and part the time leading them, we finally reached this imposing sight, counting it all joy.

Stretched out before our eyes for thirteen hundred and thirty-eight feet in graceful undulations upon a most beautiful promontory overlooking French Creek, lay this huge monster of ancient degeneracy, making uncanny feelings creep over us. The serpent from head to tail with all its coils is as perfect a representation of the real thing as man could invent with all his modern accuracy. Its large mouth standing wide open, and in its distended jaws in the act of swallowing an oval-shaped pile of earthwork fifty feet wide gives one the impression it may have been used for a sacrificial altar. The scene is very awe-inspiring, and forces one's mind back to the long-forgotten ages when some people were giving expressions to their worshipful natures after the manner of that old serpent in Eden, and who tried hard to induce Moses and Christ to fall down and do homage to him. As to who those people were the world is at a loss to account for, but to Latter Day Saints the mystery is greatly lessened. We also visited Fort Hill, another ancient land-mark of a prehistoric people. The earthworks with the thirty-six gates at regular intervals are plainly visible. The Fort covers sixty acres.

Limerick is the pioneer branch of the district. Years ago glorious experiences were enjoyed here by the many happy Saints. An organization is still maintained, mainly through the untiring efforts of the Beatty families, Rockwell and J. L. Vance. This place for a long time was the sequestered home of the Molers and Devores. The little church still stands as a monument of prophecy dedicated by old Father Ells many years ago, whose body we saw laid beside his saintly wife, when but a boy. For me there are undying charms clinging around old Limerick. I look out of my window now and see the spot, where nine years ago I first met the one who afterwards gave me her heart and hand as a life's companion, to share the joys and cares of life's rugged road. Those days will be remembered by I. M. Smith, R. Etzenhouser, the Molers and Goodriches. Many since those days, with whom we clasped the hand in holy salutation, are now chilled in death, others have moved away perhaps never to return, while others saddest of all, have made shipwrecks of their faith. However, the clouds are silver lined; some have recently returned to their Father's house and renewed their covenant. May God be their constant stay.

Saturday, the 14th inst., we begin a series of meetings in Electric Park at Wellston. Bro. Durand has it well advertised for three meetings a day, and a successful time is hoped for. From there will go to the district conference at Vales Mills, followed immediately by some more grove meetings which will practically bring to end the summer's campaign.

Mr. Bridwell, a leading factor of the Anti-Mormon League, has received the nomination on the Democratic ticket for Congress. Quite a step from back-woods country school-teacher at thirty-two dollars per month direct to the halls of Congress. His chances will be very slim if he succeeds no better in this fight than his fight against the Latter Day Saints. The anti-Mormon scare-crow is like a bird with a broken wing, falls to the ground every time it tries to fly. It's done us no harm here.

I understand Mr. Bridwell has been among the Saints (who control no mean number of votes in his district) trying to make peace with them. Could we be made to believe he is converted to the fact that the Saints against whom he and his associates have been carrying on an unrelenting warfare, have as much right to live and enjoy their right of worshipping according to conscience as himself, unmolested by unscrupulous bigots, we would feel perfectly free to let his selection to this high office rest with the fortunes of political choice. But in the absence of such conversion, Latter Day Saints have a degree of legal interest to which they look to the lawmaker of our land to support. Can we securely commit our interest into the hands of this aspirant for political honor? is a serious question for each one to take into consideration. I am no politician, but I have learned by the late Smoot investigation that it is a very good thing to have good, liberal-minded men in those high offices. This has given us a standing before the world no other combination of circumstances could have done.

This church has no interest in politics any further than that good men should be placed at the head of the government, let that be of whatever party they may spring from. I expect to be in the district this fall from which Mr. Bridwell expects to be sent to Washington, on the peaceful errand of spreading truth and righteousness, but shall watch the developments of the issue with a degree of interest. The man who is reported to have said, "I shall give my whole life to down the work of the Latter Day Saints," for no other crime than honestly and humbly worshipping their God according to conscience, is not the man to whom we may look for the least degree of assistance, let our cause be ever so just.

With hopeful feelings, and encouraged to continue the fight as long as God gives me strength of body and mind,

Your coworker,

F. J. EBELING.

VERNON, Texas, May 22, 1904.

Editors Herald: Since first hearing the gospel preached by Bro. Bays I have been deeply interested in the redemption of Zion, where the pure in heart are to be gathered, and I feel impressed to relate what was given me in a dream, or vision, in 1889.

I was sorely oppressed in spirit and wondered when the time would come for the invitation to come up and possess the land of Zion. Under this condition of mind the following was shown to me, since which time it has been vividly before me:

I saw a large war-vessel, in appearance like the Iowa, rise up out of the earth. I understood that all the inhabitants of the earth beheld it, and great fear came upon all the people, inasmuch that they began to run in all directions. I said, "It is useless to run, we can not escape it, for there is no power that can withstand it." When it had reached a height of about one half mile, it disappeared, and I saw the vessel no more. The scene changed.

Where the vessel had been there appeared facing me a man mounted upon a large horse and wearing a crown, similar to those worn by ancient kings. The breast of the horse was large and full, across which there appeared lettering of the Roman capital style. There was great excitement and I was anxious to read what was written that I might understand the meaning of it all. I was only permitted to read one letter at a time, however, as there was a constant changing of letters, so that I could not associate enough of them together at a time to make any words of them. Finally all passed away for a moment and then seven letters appeared at once. I was more anxious now than ever to understand it and exclaimed, "Oh, I must read this," but the same changing of letters occurred as before and I was still unable to read. When the lettering appeared the third time I exclaimed, "O Lord, help me to read this!" but as before I was disappointed, being prevented by the changing of the letters. Then I heard a voice say, "This is all conjecture." Then lower on the breast of the horse appeared the number 1930, in figures which seemed to me to be about twelve inches high.

Now I wish to say that I have been on the plains of Texas since my childhood, growing up like a weed among the long-horned cattle, and I never knew there was such a word as conjecture, and when I asked Bro. Amend to tell me the meaning of the word, and he turned to the dictionary and read, I felt like taking off my hat and thanking God that he had hidden some things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto his ignorant children. Now to the aged, the fathers and mothers in Israel, I wish to say that the time when we shall reach that beautiful Zion is more distant than many suspect; but thanks to his holy name, the trumpet must sound. So to the young,—keep your spirits pure and your robes will be clean for the wedding-feast.

A BROTHER.

OREGON, Missouri, August 6, 1904.

Editors Herald: Our tent-meetings are now over, which were conducted by Brn. Haden and Vaughn, two faithful and ambitious workers for the cause of Christ. These brothers seem to be especially fitted for tent work and were always able to meet the opposing arguments so often urged against the work. And they, so faithfully and with such brotherly kindness, answered so many questions of differences in conversation and from the pulpit that the people who attended those nineteen discourses are with but two or three exceptions completely swallowed up in "the faith." The charity shown by the brethren for the positions maintained by the popular ministry of to-day in contrast with the restored gospel was simply remarkable.

There seemed to be an amusing sameness among the Christians or Campbellites here, with regard to this latter-day work exactly harmonizing in faith, practice, and organization with their church of thirty-five years ago, admitting that their ministry had been educated and bred out of the faith by college formality and modern dogmas. They seem much more willing to give ear to the truth than do the membership of other denominations. The Presbyterians did not attend except two or three parties, one of whom looked at his watch about five or six times while Elder Haden was preaching with all of the power of speech and splendid voice which held in silence every adult, and the children were even hushed by it. Yet the tiny little blue lacquered hands of this watch had more attraction for him than all the truth put forth by our brother. But alas, no truth was wanted by him, if the nonsprinkling of infants was our position. "Ah, I will just go home and tell my wife to stay away from such a place where such unkindness toward our babies is taught or intimated. You can go, dear wife, while I keep store if you insist, but you won't hear that which amounts to anything." She said, "Well, if that's so I won't go to hear them." And she did not. In another case two Methodist ladies attended one evening when Bro. Vaughn preached, and after services one said to the other, "I would rather hear our old dog bark than to hear that man try to preach." The other lady, with a rebuking kind of spirit, like the thief on the cross, said, "I would rather hear your old dog howl than to hear our preacher undertake to preach." This was quite an abrupt tilt but was heard by a number near by. The Methodist minister, at the close of his morn-ing's discourse, told his people that the Mormons were holding a series of talks in a small tent here in town, and the theory they held out as the gospel was the result of some writing dug up in Vermont on a sheet or two of brass, which was purported to be read by some boy or other, and believed by a few ignorant down-easterners to contain a history of the Indians. "Now," says he, "I only want to say to the membership, I can only advise you to stay away from their services; but I will certainly insist on my wife and children staying away." But they went anyway, and one lady told me, who was a Methodist and was present when her minister gave the warning cry to stay away, that if our elders had sang an invitation song any night after that she would have gone up and joined us and been baptized right then and there, because of the truth the elders told would probably occur: that some of the ministry would advise people to stay away, and when they did they virtually said, "I am smarter than you, thus you must obey me."

The colored Baptists were good to attend. They came in such crowds that there was some talk that "their preaching draws too many 'niggers.'" The Methodist and Presbyterian leaders say, "Oh yes, you preach against polygamy, but it is the strong arm of law that compels you to do so." I will see them and hand them tracts as soon as I can get to it.

Your brother in Christ,

A. A. RICHARDSON.

NEW WESTMINSTER, British Columbia, August 1, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am still doing what I can for the work in this far off field. I will call attention to the street work commenced in the city of Seattle, as stated in the latter part of my letter in HERALD of July 27. Bro. Thomas and I continued the street work there four and five nights a week up to the 11th of July. Had pretty good interest. During this time I solemnized one marriage; and two more were baptized by Bro. Thomas. In company with Bro. I. F. Mengel, we then bade the Saints goodbye and came to New Westminister to look after the tent-work in this part of the mission-field. After arriving here we got the tent set up, and on Sunday we commenced our meeting, several of the Saints coming out from the city of Vancouver some twelve miles distant. Among those that came were Bro. and Sr. Clark, with son and daughter. These are the parents and brother and sister to Bro. Joseph's wife at Lamoni. We did not have a very large attendance at the tent at any time. A few were interested, and at the last of the week I had three names given me for baptism,—two adults, and a little girl, who were baptized in the Frazer River on Sunday the 24th. This was indeed one of the busy days of my life. I held four meetings, preached twice, baptized three, confirmed them, administered the sacrament, blessed two children, administered to two, Bro. Mengel preaching once. The tiresome part was the walking during the day of eight or nine miles to accomplish the work. During the next three nights, as had been previously announced, I had the opportunity of showing up the difference between the two churches, as there had been a few crying, "Mormons all the same; no difference; we don't want any Mormons here." One man said, "We'll drive them into the river." We thought it best to go on the streets, so we held services five nights, and we had a larger and more interesting crowd than we would at the tent. As the most of the Saints had come over here two Sundays and assisted so well in singing and taking part with us, we thought it no more than right to hold meetings in Vancouver on Sunday, the writer speaking twice, then returned here to the tent and preached again at night, which closed our tent-meetings until we return from our district conference, which convenes Saturday and Sunday at Seattle, Washington. We expect then to do work in the city of Vancouver for a time. From my acquaintance and what I have observed among those Saints, they seem to be making effort to make their example worthy to commend them to God. I hear no complaint or fault-finding or hardness among them. This should be practiced everywhere, then the Saints would be at peace with one another. May each of us endeavor to look after the present personal duties of life as they daily come to us is my prayer.

T. J. BELL.

SOLDIER, Iowa, August 4, 1904.

Editor Herald: I commenced holding meetings here last night. Quite a storm came up and we had a small attendance. Just closed a series of meetings at Moorhead, Iowa, July 31, where I had been for seven weeks. After I had been there near five weeks and had baptized quite a number, taking some from the best people there in the Christian Church, they began to get uneasy, and sent for Elder Clark Braden, who arrived July 13, in his fighting spirit. He abused Joseph Smith and the church for eight nights, and Bro. J. F. McDowell replied to him, but only a few of the Christians came out to hear the reply. Elder Braden would not meet Bro. J. F. in debate but presented some unfair propositions, and then went off crowing cowards; and they would not meet him. But I do not think he hurt the work of the Lord there. I baptized forty-four at Moorhead and left the Saints rejoicing, and the spirit of unity with them. I enjoyed my stay with them and it seemed like leaving home to leave them. Several more were near the door of the kingdom and I think that I ought to have stayed another week. I have baptized fifty-three this year. So the good work is moving on and honest souls are being gathered out, and are coming over on the Lord's side.

Dear Saints, please remember me that I may be faithful, and that the good Lord will bless my labor, and not only mine but all the servants of the Lord, and that many souls may be gathered into the fold of God. May God speed the right.

Your brother,

W. A. SMITH.

BURLINGTON, Iowa.

Editors Herald: A line from this place may interest some of your readers. I have been located here now a little over one year. The work moved along fairly well, with good feeling among the Saints and a good spirit present at the meetings, so that we began the conference year with bright hopes; these have been somewhat dimmed by the removal of so many of our active members to other fields. We have certainly paid tithing to Zion, as probably one tenth of our active membership has removed to Independence, and others expect to go. You know what that means to a small branch. We especially feel the loss of our singers; we were justly proud of our song service. Bro. Giesch's family departed for Independence Saturday last. Bro. Giesch has been a faithful worker here for years, one with whom it was a pleasure to associate and counsel, and Srs. Lulu and Mamie were leading spirits in singing, so that the entire family will be missed. We hope, however, that they will find congenial fields of usefulness in their new home. We who remain will endeavor to hold aloft the banner. There are some here who we trust are nearly ready to obey the gospel. It was our sad lot to preach the funeral sermon of Sr. Henry Kaestner, Sunday last. She was a faithful Saint.

We have looked long for a visit from our missionary in charge, Fred A. Apparently the only way to get him here will be to stir up a family quarrel and invite him in to settle it. How about it, Fred?

Sincerely,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

CHICAGO, Illinois, August 18, 1904.

Editors Herald: I inclose notice of reunion for publication in HERALD; I sent one some time ago, but do not think it has been printed, have not seen it at least. Frederick M. Smith writes me that Bro. R. C. Evans can and will be with us. Expect him in Chicago next Sunday, and will return from a trip to St. Louis in time for our reunion.

Chicago is looking up, and interest and attendance at meetings is improving. We are to have a church booth, for the sale of articles, on and during the Madison Street Business Men's Carnival, which promises to be a grand affair, and will continue for three weeks, commencing Monday next. Alderman Scully, president of the carnival, has made an exception in our favor, in granting us a free permit, in a prominent place, for our booth, and we are hoping to give our church-building fund a big "boost," as a result.

We are expecting Professor Dewsnup, possibly the Bishop, and John H. Lake to be here next Sunday.

Fraternally,

M. H. BOND.

AVERY, Texas, August 15, 1904.

Editors Herald: I started from home in company with Bro. Grimes, May 20. We stopped in Barry County, Missouri, the 21st, and preached a few times and confirmed five that were baptized by Bro. Hankins. We resumed our journey the 25th; after having some trouble getting over the railroad we reached Wilburton, Indian Territory, where the conference of the North-eastern Texas and Choctaw District convened the 27th. We had a fine conference. We departed for Texas the 30th, reaching our destination the same day. On account of rain we did not do much preaching for a while. We baptized one lady near Detroit. Visited Manchester; while there Bro. Grimes baptized a young man and his wife. I rejoiced to see them starting in their pursuit of eternal life together. The tent was shipped to us and we commenced with it July 6 at Detroit. Could not see that much good was done. Went from there to Rosalie. Had large crowds to hear us preach; made some friends. Made somebody mad, too. They cut a hole in our tent and cut some ropes. We are to commence to-night at this place and will continue till September 1, then go to Midway six miles north of Detroit to hold a debate with the Baptists, commencing September 5, half past eight in the evening. Would like all the Saints in reach to attend. Before starting the tent we made a visit to Bowie County; labored there ten days and baptized seven. While there I married a couple and baptized them the same day. Judging from the results manifested from my labor this summer, I have not been very successful, but we sow and the Lord gives the increase. I am willing to trust it in his hands.

The Saints and friends have supported the tent work well here. May the Lord bless them for it.

Yours in bonds,

E. L. HENSON.

SENIOR, Texas, August 9, 1904.

Editors Herald: The HERALD and Autumn Leaves are a great comfort to me, it would seem very hard to have to get along without them. Have been taking them both for a long time. Our home is about nineteen miles from San Antonio, and that being the nearest branch we seldom get to meet with the Saints or hear any of our elders preach. However, we were privileged to attend conference at Pipe Creek last June, which I enjoyed very much. I have been a member of the church for about eighteen years and I can say my hope gets brighter in the gospel each succeeding year. About three years ago I was made happy by my husband uniting with the church. We are both very anxious now to locate somewhere near a good branch, as I am almost starving for more church privileges and our children are growing up and need to be in a good Sunday-school. We have thought several times of moving to San Antonio on account of being near the church, but as my husband has always followed farming for a living he seems to think he would not be satisfied anywhere but on a farm. As we have lately read a letter in the HERALD from Bro. William H. Kelley concerning the town of Holden, Missouri, my husband wishes me to inquire through the HERALD if any one can give us information as to the prices of lands near Holden. I see by Bro. Kelley's letter that Sr. Devore lives at Holden. Perhaps she would write and tell us what land can be bought, improved and also unimproved. We are anxious to sell here and procure a farm near a good branch as soon as possible. From Bro. Kelley's description of Holden and the surrounding country I think it a very desirable place to live. My husband's address is J. D. Edwards, Senior, Texas.

Your sister in the one faith,

[We suggest that you inquire of Bishop R. May, Independence, Missouri, concerning the prices of lands at Holden.—Ed.]

TECUMSEH, Nebraska, August 12, 1904.

Editors Herald: The work is prospering in this place. A series of meetings by Brn. Sutton and Madison just closed. Four baptisms. More soon. The Advent Christian minister was out to two of the meetings to hear Bro. Sutton discourse on the Book of Mormon. One evening a little Latter Day Saint brother from Liberty, Nebraska, spoke to the people here. He is only nine years of age. Most people here thought it wonderful, notwithstanding a few made the remarks that "most likely he had his speech learned before," or that they "would have to hear before they could believe that he could preach." Wishing you all success in the gospel work, I am,

Your sister in bonds,

BERTHA E. BRANDON.

NEBO, Illinois, August 13, 1904.

Editors Herald: Like most every other place in the United States the Smoot case caused considerable talk here. On looking in the Church History at the portrait of President Joseph Smith, my brother who was visiting at my home remarked that this was the likeness of Joseph F. Smith of Utah. I informed him there was no likeness that I could see more than might be expected as they were cousins. He insisted that he had seen in a copy of the British Whig a likeness purporting to be that of President Smith of Utah that resembled the one in Church History. After comparing the profiles of both men as I had them, and seeing the difference, he was not satisfied, so got the copy and brought it to the writer to confirm him that he had not been mistaken. I recognized at once that this was the Joseph Smith's (of Lamoni) profile that had been used by some either unscrupulous or ignorant person. By permission I sent this copy of the British Whig to conference to Joseph Smith. The rest of the circumstance the HERALD readers are perhaps familiar with: That a correction was sought and had.

As to prospects, the work here is nothing to brag about. Spirituality is at a very low ebb. We expect to finish and have dedicated in the near future, our church building which was begun some three years ago. Some time early last spring a local paper in noticing our meetings referred to us as "Mormons." I took exception and wrote a correction which the editor cheerfully published. The next week the correspondent apologized, but at the same time set up what he thought to be justifiable reasons for calling us "Mormons," so a controversy begun through that paper, lasting all the spring and part of the summer, and ended by the editor refusing to publish his last article because of lack of information and proof, and lack of space, so I was informed.

I attended at Nebo a discussion between a Baptist (J. M. Bandy of Aurora, Missouri) and a Campbellite or Christian (Claud Witty of Marshalltown, Iowa). Well, it was amusing and interesting when of course I thought neither maintained his proposition. It is said that there were thirty-five Baptist preacher attendants at the debate in the little town of Nebo.

One of those professedly know-it-all about "Mormonism," and I, collided on the streets on the guilt or innocence of Joseph Smith in regard to polygamy, etc.

Out of pity, I suppose, one tall, lengthy divine of that persuasion upon which the writer had emerged, interrogated him if he had ever read anything about "Mormonism." Of course that was a reasonable question. From this a lively controversy issued and as the town was full of people we soon had quite a hearing on the subject of whether Smith was a polygamist or not. His first witness was an old man that used to be acquainted with Smith, and in fact a boy with him, knew him to be lazy, good-for-nothing, fraud, etc. But on cross-examination he was compelled to stretch the old man's age ten years older than he had said he was in the outset, because when I showed what a memory the old man would have to have if he was only ninety as he said he recanted and said he was mistaken—that the man was one hundred years old. So you see if they fail to make a point by using one misrepresentation they use another. I challenged him for one statement that Joseph had made or one quotation from the Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants that sanctioned polygamy. The old grandmother stories of what somebody said that somebody said was about all the proof he introduced, save trying to tell us that when the Temple Lot case came up that the court decisions were that Joseph Smith actually practiced polygamy. Of course all informed Latter Day Saints know about how strong this silly position would be in the face of fact and evidence.

While all this was getting its airing Mr. Roberts, Mr. Witty's moderator, the man who has, he says, debated thirty times, has debated our people, and will begin a discussion with Bro. J. F. Mintun, at Marshalltown, Iowa, beginning August 23, 1904, came upon the scene to inform the people that they could by court decisions, together with history, prove that Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy. I presented the Kirtland Temple and Temple Lot cases in the usual way. When asked to bring his decisions forward, Mr. Roberts invited me to Marshalltown to hear the discussion with Bro. Mintun, and there he would produce court decisions to prove Joseph guilty, (take notice, Bro. Mintun, and see that he keeps his word,) but no, did not have them now, was in a hurry, time to go to the debate. How is it they quarrel and debate among themselves, but when a Latter Day Saint comes along they bury the hatchet quickly and join hands and hearts equal to that of scribes and Pharisees of old to quash what they term "Monster Mormons." Indeed 'tis a conflict, and I hope by the help of the Lord to continue true to the cause so beautiful, so full of truth invincible, so practical in every hour of trouble, and with the final victory of heaven, as an eternal seal upon it, till in fact the conflict's over.

Yours in the faith,

W. A. GUTHRIE.

HARLAN, Iowa, August 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: Since writing my last letter I have been busy with ministerial duties and have preached at Dow City, Deloit, Salem, and Harlan, in all of which places I have found the Saints and friends kind and seemingly anxious to make the minister welcome. The writer appreciates the kindness of each and all and has been made glad on departing from the places mentioned by the indications given that his return would be welcomed. This is, perhaps, no more true of the writer than of his fellow ministers, who are each and all kindly referred to by those among whom he has labored. So far as I am acquainted with the writer he claims no prominence over his brethren in these things, even if our work in many ways differs. Our hope is the same, and "to every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ." For this divine assistance received in every time of need our hearts go out in gratitude to the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

When we think about the truths of the restored gospel, and the Spirit that accompanies its reception, we do not wonder that the Lord by his Spirit at various times in conferences and reunions has invited the Saints to "come up higher." Just how far the invitation thus given, which harmonizes with the tenor of the word, may have been appreciated and heeded, is a question which interests all, though it may not be satisfactorily answered only as it is done in harmony with the light and inspiration of the Holy Spirit. If we make an earnest, consistent, and persistent effort to discharge every known duty in the fear of God we may enjoy the Spirit which reveals the things of God to the understanding of the honest in heart. "The Spirit itself bears witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." But care should be taken to satisfy one's self that the testimony of the spirit is in harmony with the word. So long as the spirit and the word agree in their testimony we are safe, but should the spirit not agree with the word we should reject it as not being of God. "And now, verily, verily I say unto thee, put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good; yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit." It is indeed encouraging to know that the Spirit of God brings light and truth and always leads in the path of righteousness.

An earnest effort to do right, and in humility to walk to the best of one's ability in the path of truth, honesty, virtue, goodness, and faith, brings the satisfaction to the soul that God approves of one's walk and conversation and will reward for the good done. It is written of Enoch that "he had this testimony, that he pleased God." But his was a high attainment that has seldom been reached by mortal man, though the writer is of the opinion that with the same desire for righteousness, similar faith, and the same kind of obedience, with the same degree of divine help, what has been done may be done again, if it is God's will that it should obtain or be done. To say the least, it is right and proper for each and all to live as near to God as possible without the least disposition to be self-righteous, or to walk in the way of the Pharisee.

The truth will finally triumph and the right will prevail and the truly righteous ones will be crowned.

Therefore while the battle rages and the "enemy is combined" let us in love and kindness grasp each other's hands and with unwavering faith in God and Christ and the means ordained of the just One unitedly march on to victory. The battle may be fierce and our enemies may be numerous, and may rage, but so long as we can hear "the still small voice" testifying within that God reigns, and Jesus our advocate leads us on to victory, there is no such thing as failure. True the battle-ground may be stained with the blood of the Saints, and we may number among the martyrs such noble men as Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley, yet in their way they have but been partakers of the same cross with Jesus and for the encouragement of all it is self-evident that they died not in vain. To appreciate the liberty vouchsafed to us by the shedding of the blood of the righteous is one of the duties of the loyal citizen and the true Christian.

"In the light of God" may the work of God "move steadily onward" to victory and eternal life. May our hope "grow brighter and brighter until the dawning of the perfect day."

In gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, Ohio, July 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: The work here seems to be onward and upward. The past month found our chapel under a new slate cover; movements are afoot for a general overhauling inside, including papering, etc. The Daughters of Zion are particularly active. They have a quilt with numbers sold nearing three hundred, so I am told, also will give a dime social on Saturday night which will net quite a sum if present indications do not fail, all of which proceeds will go toward helping the Master's cause. I must not forget to tell you of our Religio Society, which is doing so grandly now under the presidency of Brn. Albert McMillen and Charles Cramer. The Sunday-school, too, is prospering under the careful supervision of Bro. T. H. Darst.

On last Sunday a week, just as the sun was sinking behind the western horizon, I baptized seven in the waters of the Tuscarawas River; and on last Sunday at the same hour of the day I again administered the ordinance of baptism to a young lady of sixteen summers; others say they will follow soon. So if Satan does not hinder, the prospect is bright for the future of New Philadelphia Branch.

V. M. GOODRICH.

Independence Items.

Dear Herald: On the 11th and 12th there was the usually interested number out at the evening meetings, although a slight waning of zeal for tent-work on the part of the aged and those living at a distance began to be manifest, and our neighbors who had generally occupied seats outside the clean, white canvas we began to miss from their wonted places.

President Hulmes discoursed eloquently on the gift and principle of revelation, and pointed with clearness to many passages in the Old and New Testament Scriptures concerning the truth that God has been, is, and ever will be a God of revelation, as saith the prophet Amos, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants, the prophets."

On Friday night Elder Hyrum O. Smith presented the subject of the Book of Mormon; and what had, in the estimation of men, been attached by impostors to the gospel,—vile barnacles of myths and fables, were changed by the inspired missionary into diamonds of light, priceless gems of thought gathered from the ancient prophets, Nephi and Alma and Mosiah, which had been set in their writings for the cherishing of all honest inquirers of the truth. The speaker, who had never believed any other doctrine than that of the Latter Day Saints, who was a product of this work, and who had been taught that "to examine, and weigh, and consider any code of belief could hurt no man," thought it a strange thing that people would not take the trouble to look into the Book of Mormon, and that they would refuse to investigate any doctrine presented.

He accepted the defense of Paul, and Paul's appeal was his own,—that whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, or of good report, "if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

At the opening, a most inspiring, duet, "My faith looks up to thee," was sung by Brn. H. Bullard and E. C. Harrington.

On Sunday evening Bishop E. L. Kelley took up the gospel burden, laying his basis for the lesson of the hour in the words, "Behold I lay in Zion a stumbling-stone and rock of offense, whosoever believeth on him, shall not be ashamed." He recommended a life in harmony with the word of God, a life of faith that does not stumble at the word, a life in which to observe all things whatsoever the Lord has told us. The speaker said the thought expressed in the text was intended for universal application, and we had better "be with the few who believe than with those who stumble at the word." Bro. Kelley enjoyed the liberty of the Spirit.

The attendance and interest continued to be excellent, and at the close of a two-week tent service in the work of presenting our claims as a church, the Saints and their friends apparently felt well repaid for the effort put forth.

This sentiment was expressed also at the Sunday afternoon meeting by Bishop May, who thought "the step taken had been an important one and an opportunity had been afforded us of heeding the command in the book of Covenants for the Saints who had been warned to warn their neighbors; and when cooler weather shall come, we will invite them to the church." "We are here," said he, "to be saviors of men, and upon us rest great responsibilities." "The Lord has been well pleased with our efforts, with the preaching of the word, and the manner in which it has been presented."

It made his heart to rejoice; and "that the light may continue to shine, and deliverance come to God's people" was his earnest prayer.

Elder H. O. Smith again preached to the Saints on Sunday morning, and his sermon was instructive and comforting.

Since August 7 fifteen have been received by letter into our number. Sr. A. L. Blackman, from Iowa, Bro. J. L. Booker of Wilburton, Indian Territory, Bro. J. W. Steele of San Jose, California, and Bro. J. F. Gunsolley of Shenandoah, Iowa, with their families.

Visitors from their missions still continue to call on us on their way to Utah, "The land of grief, of broken vows, of disloyalty to the covenant of youth."

Your sister in the gospel covenant,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Extracts from Letters.

Samuel Twombly, writing from Vermillion, Kansas, says: "Bro. Alma Booker and myself closed an eighteen-day meeting this evening that has had gratifying results, as Sunday, the 7th, Bro. Booker led three into the waters of baptism, and this afternoon two more were baptized by the writer."

Sr. V. A. McAlister, Story, Indian Territory: "I am isolated, but want to let the Saints know that I am still alive in the work. I am among people that never heard of the gospel, so I have the pleasure of telling them of the marvelous work. They seem to like it, and want our literature. Saints who have some to spare, send it to me, and I will put it to good use."

Sr. Sophia Seaman, Blanchard, Michigan: "I am the only Saint in this part. I believe some good might be done if an elder or priest should be sent down here. My companion is gone to the other shore, and for some cause I am left to mourn alone, but my prayer is that God will give me strength to overcome, make heaven my home, and meet Christ and the loved ones gone before."

S. W. Tomlinson, Delhi, Ontario: "The work is onward here. Two were baptized last Sabbath, and the branch organized last night. Spirituality among the members is on the increase."

James D. Porter, Dupont, Indiana: "Have opened up five new places with good attendance and good interest, also visited two of the branches. In my travels have baptized sixteen precious souls."

Sr. Dora Brooks, Bond, Mississippi: "I feel like one born out of due season, as I have not heard a Latter Day Saint elder preach in ten years, though I am yet sticking to the one faith. I have been tossed to and fro, but every time the high water goes down I am yet on the rock."

G. H. Godby, Talleyho, West Virginia: "There are four Saints here. One young sister working for a dollar and fifty cents a week saved fifty cents for the debt on Graceland. Another that has neither father or mother, picked and sold blackberries, and saved a dollar for Graceland, and a dollar to pay for the Ensign. Such sacrifices on the part of young sisters ought to put to shame the brethren and sisters who have their thousands and are doing nothing, comparatively, to lift the debt off Graceland. I will send three dollars and a half from four poor members, and I have received letters from other parts, asking to know what their part of Graceland debt is, saying that they want to do their share."

A sum approximating $50,000,000 is sent from the United States in small sums each year to assist those left behind in the Old World, or to enable them to emigrate. It has been predicted that the number of emigrants would soon decrease be reason of the exhaustion of the supply; but no such promise is warranted by the facts. Last year, 230,622 Italians, 206,011 Austrians, and 136,093, Russians successfully passed the immigration barriers of the United States.—The World's Work.

Miscellaneous Department.

Conference Notices.

Pittsburg District will meet in conference at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, September 3, 1904. Trust all the branches will report promptly, and I should be pleased to receive report from every member of the priesthood, and a letter from the scattered membership as to their spiritual condition, and demands of the work in their locality. Bring with you the Spirit, and let us worship God in the beauty of holiness. Your servant, Robt. M. Elvin, president.

The St. Louis District conference will convene at Belleville, Illinois, Saturday and Sunday, September 17 and 18, 1904. Branch secretaries please have your reports ready and in my hands not later than September 15. We desire a full attendance, as matters of interest will be brought up. Come with the spirit of the work with you. C. J. Remington, secretary.

The Southern Nebraska conference will convene at the Lone-tree schoolhouse, near Fairfield, Nebraska, September 18 and 19, 1904. All who go will be met at Fairfield. Those of the ministry who will not be in attendance will please send reports to Elder J. W. Waldsmith, or H. A. Higgins, secretary, Nebraska City, Nebraska.

The Southern Indiana conference will convene with Byrneville Branch, first Saturday in October at 10.30 a. m. All branch secretaries are requested to send statistical reports to district secretary, so all mistakes may be corrected if any occur. Bro. J. W. Wight is expected to be in attendance. James P. Sappenfield, president.

Seventh semiannual conference of the Independence Stake will convene Saturday, September 10, 1904, holding over Sunday, the 11th, at Holden, Missouri. A complete report from every member of the priesthood is desired, no matter the extent of work done by any member. Branch presidents and clerks please send your statistical reports without fail. Under head of "Branches reporting" in book of rules you will see this is imperative. Your delegate list must be made upon your exact membership. Reports must be in my hands not later than September 1, that I may have my work ready for the conference. Any resolutions you may have to come before this conference should be sent to me, that they may be disposed of in their order. Remember, beginning with September 2, 1904, there will be held the reunion at Holden, previously advertised in the HERALD and Ensign, continuing until Sunday night the 11th. This will furnish an opportunity for all the Saints in the stake to have a good outing as well as a spiritual feast. W. S. Brown, secretary, 2143 Bellview Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

Convention Notices.

The Sunday-school convention of the Eastern Colorado District will convene at Colorado Springs, at 10 o'clock a. m., Friday, September 2, 1904. Mrs. Louisa Fishburn, secretary, 1228 Cook Street, Denver.

The Sunday-school convention of the Kirtland, Ohio, District will convene at 10 a. m., Friday, September 9, at Sharon, Pennsylvania. A notice of program for the afternoon session of the convention was published in HERALD of July 27, in which the date was given as September 16. This was an error. It should have been the 9th. Yours respectfully, E. P. Schmidt, superintendent.

The convention of the New York District Sunday-school association will convene at Brooklyn, New York, September 5, 1904, at 10 a. m. All officers are requested to report in writing. Benj. R. McGuire, superintendent.

The following program for the Northeastern Illinois convention will be carried out as far as can be, at the reunion to be held at Plano, Illinois, from the 15th to the 25th of September: Monday evening, from four to five o'clock, "The Inspired Version in the Sunday-school," Elder C. H. Burr, of Plano; Wednesday evening, same hour, "The district circulating library," by Sr. Bessie Clark, of Chicago, district librarian; Friday afternoon, the entire time to be used by the Sunday-school and the Religio, viz, first, business meeting of the Sunday-school association; second, "The home department of the Sunday-school," Elder J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni. The remainder of the session will be used by district Religio for their business meeting. The evening session will be given, principally, to an address on the importance of the Sunday-school and the Religio, and their relation to the work of the church, by Bro. Gunsolley; this will be preceded by a half-hour musical program. "Normal work" will be presented at some of the sessions of the convention, if time will allow. The Sunday following, being the last of the quarter, Bro. Gunsolley will have charge of the Sunday-school, and conduct the general review for the quarter. Bring your Quarterlies and Bibles. The Zion's Praises will be used as the song book for all sessions of the convention; bring your books. Charles A. Gurwell, superintendent.

Reunion Notices.

The Northeastern Illinois reunion and camp-meeting will be held in Stewart's Grove, Plano, Illinois, commencing September 16, continuing until the 25th. The Grove is one half mile from Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy railroad station, and its use has been kindly donated free of charge by the Stewart Brothers and is one of the finest in the State, ample room, finely watered, both by well and nice stream flowing through the grounds. Price of water-proof tents, 10 by 12, for the time of encampment, $2.50. Wire-wove cots, forty cents. Straw will not be available, practical, nor really the cheapest, or most clean or comfortable. There is ample room for teams, also. Bro. R. C. Evans, of the presidency, J. W. Wight, in charge of the mission; W. A. McDowell, F. M. Cooper, John H. Lake, and other speakers, Religio and Sunday-school workers from Southern Wisconsin and Kewanee Districts, will be present, and we are expecting a spiritual, social, and profitable time; and it should not only be deemed a privilege but a duty for our people of the district to make every reasonable effort to attend, and to assist in giving the reunion, and our work in this district, an impetus, and advertisement. Parties desiring tents should and must apply ten days before meeting or by September 6, to F. M. Cooper, D. R. Pomeroy, M. H. Bond, committee.

Parties coming to the Dow City reunion from points in Illinois covered by the Central Passenger Association, take notice that arrangements have been made whereby they also may obtain reduced rates for the return trip, by taking a certificate from the ticket agent. Ask for a certificate each time you buy a ticket.

Dedication at Coalville.

The Saints at Coalville, Iowa, will dedicate their church on Sunday, September 11, 1904. They desire President Joseph Smith to be present and expect Bro. F. A. Smith to be there. All will be welcome. Saints attending will go to Otho, on the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railway, or Carbon, on the Illinois Central, and if they will notify William Jordison he will meet them and convey them to Coalville.

D. M. RUDD, President.

Married.

KELLEY—BARR.—At the home of the bride's parents, Lamoni, August 13, 1904, Edmund L. Kelley, Jr., and Verna L. Barr were united in marriage, Bishop E. L. Kelley performing the ceremony. The gathering consisted of the relatives of the two families. After the ceremony the wedding-feast was served at the home of Mrs. Velva Barr-Nicholson. The young people improved the opportunity to take in the St. Louis Fair in connection with the ceremony that made them one for life. The best wishes of their friends follow.

Died.

WILCOX.—At Hunter, Belmont County, Ohio, June 15, 1904, little Sarah Ettie Wilcox passed peacefully away from earth to rest in the blessed arms of Jesus. She was born April 1, 1900, near Morristown, Ohio, and was the oldest daughter of Bro. Charles and Sr. Ida M. Wilcox. Father, mother, two brothers, and one sister are left to mourn her loss. Funeral services were conducted by Reverend Moore of the Baptist Church, and the remains were taken to Bethesda and laid to rest to wait the coming of the blessed Master.

SMITH.—Sr. Mary S. Smith passed from years of suffering to the rest of the children of faith, on Sunday morning, July 24, at the age of 49 years, 2 months, 22 days. She was buried from the residence of her sister, where she died, in Oakland, California. The remains were interred at the LaFayette Cemetery eighteen miles east. She leaves a husband, two sons, a mother and brother and two sisters to mourn. Sermon at house by J. M. Terry assisted by J. M. Cockerton with remarks at the grave.

BATTEN.—At East Cleveland, Iowa, July 31, 1904, Bro. Ammon Batten. He was born in Pittsburg, Illinois, August 13, 1871. Baptized by J. W. Thorpe, May 30, 1880. Elder John R. Evans preached funeral sermon to a large number of people. He suffered much for two months with dropsy, and at the last prayed earnestly that he might be taken to rest.

MOORE.—Sr. Julia Moore, wife of Elder A. J. Moore, Vernon, Texas, and daughter of Lewis Gaulter, of Lamoni, Iowa, died on July 20, 1904, after a protracted sickness of over five months. She was born at Salt Lake City, Utah, July 2, 1853. She leaves her husband and one daughter to mourn their loss. Sr. Moore was a faithful Latter Day Saint from early childhood. During her long sickness she frequently spoke of her willingness to die and of her hope in Christ. A short funeral service was held at her grave by Doctor J. H. Hansen, of Vernon, Texas.

WILLIS.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, by drowning August 14, 1904, Bro. George Willis, aged 30 years, 5 months, and 27 days. He was the second son of Bro. and Sr. Joseph Willis. On October 13, 1897, he married Sr. Carrie Scott, daughter of Bro. John Scott. She survives him with two children, one six years and the other sixteen months old, both girls. He was a kind husband and father. Was baptized April 14, 1890, by Bro. A. S. Cochran. Funeral sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, Bro. John Smith assisting.

SHEPHARDSON.—Maryland J., born July 25, 1828, at Lyden, Franklin County, Massachusetts; died August 10, 1904, at his home in Tabor, Iowa, after a long illness, leaving a wife, and an only daughter by a former wife, and two aged sisters to mourn his loss. He united with the Reorganized Church about thirty years ago and prized his membership until his death. Funeral services at the Baptist church in Tabor, in charge of Elder Charles Fry, assisted by Reverend Cable of Malvern. Interment in Tabor cemetery.

VARDAMAN.—David Edward Vardaman was born in Randolph County, Indiana, February 24, 1871. Died August 3, 1904. He was married to Lizzie Barber, April 28, 1895. To this union were born two children, Maggie Lucille and Orpha Gazelle. Father, mother, five sisters preceeded him to the spirit world. He joined the Latter Day Saint Church April 15, 1900, in which he lived a faithful Christian until death. He leaves a wife, two children, three brothers, one sister, one half-brother, four half-sisters, and many friends to mourn. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

BALLINGER.—William H. Ballinger, son of Sr. Martha E. Ballinger, accidentally shot himself and died almost instantly, August 7, 1904, at Corral, Idaho. Was born July 21, 1879. Leaves a young wife, mother, two brothers, and three sisters, who reside at Boise, Idaho, where they had but recently gone from Woodbine, Iowa. On account of the distance and condition of the country was unable to get an elder to conduct the funeral service. Although a believer in the church was never baptized.

KAESTNER.—At her home in Burlington, Iowa, August 11, 1904, at 5 p. m., Augusta Kaestner, wife of Henry Kaestner. She was born at Brome, Germany, April 19, 1850. She came to America in 1869 and was married to Bro. Kaestner in 1872. Theirs was a happy union, blessed with seven children, who still live. She united with the church in 1872 and was ever a faithful, industrious, virtuous member, a good wife and mother. The funeral was from the home, August 14; sermon by Elbert A. Smith. Bro. Kaestner has our sympathy and prayers in his bereavement.

MCDUGAL.—Joseph McDougal passed away at his home in Centralia, Kansas, Tuesday morning at six o'clock, August 2, 1904. He was born in Ardrickshire, Scotland, March 21, 1826. He came to America in 1855, was married to Miss Matilda Stewart, January 14, 1858, at Alton, Illinois, and finally located in Nemaha County, Kansas, as one of the pioneers of the county which has been his home ever since. To this union eleven children were born. The mother and eight children survive him. He united with the church in 1876. Sermon by Elder Samuel Twombly in the Congregational church.

SMITH.—After one year's confinement to bed Bro. James H. Smith, on August 4, 1904, calmly folded his arms in death at his home in Walnut Creek, California, at the age of 59 years, 11 months, 9 days. The Methodist people kindly offered the use of their church for the services, the minister, Reverend Stanley, assisting in the service, which was held on Saturday, August 6. Bro. Smith was a model of patience and died as he had lived, at peace with God and all men. Sermon to an audience of some two hundred by Elder J. M. Terry. He leaves to mourn a wife, son, and daughter, one brother and two sisters, with other relatives. We knew him but to love him.

In the children's "freak garden," we grow monstrosities and curiosities, from pear-shaped tomatoes to Sandwich Island pumpkins, and from serpent gourds to garden lemons, and from Spanish peanuts to staghorn potatoes, says a writer in Country Life in America. The seed-catalogues abound in novelties, the growing of which certainly serves to interest others besides the children.

DAVID H. SMITH DEAD.

By telegram message from Doctor Whitman, of the Northern Illinois Hospital for the Insane, at Elgin, dated the afternoon of August 29, we learn that Bro. David H. Smith, youngest son of the Martyr Joseph, had departed this life at about fifteen minutes to four in the afternoon.

It will be remembered by the Saints that Bro. David has been for many years an inmate of the hospital for melancholia dementia, or that form of dementia known as melancholia. He has been in the Lord's hand, and so far as this life is concerned the end is reached. Particulars will be given when known to us.

FOLLIES, VICES, CRIMES.

It is understood that the average preacher is engaged in a crusade against the follies, vices, and crimes which prevent men from making a success in seeking after life and salvation. We have not space to enumerate all the follies, nor all the vices, nor all the crimes of which men are guilty categorically. We sum up our comment upon the first in this wise: Whatever is in its nature calculated to withdraw the minds of men from a proper consideration of their moral duty to God and their fellow men, which has its chief injury to the individual guilty of it, and in which no element of criminality is found, may be couched under the common head of folly. Of these we are warned in the revelations of God to the church and in the New Testament Scriptures to beware. These may consist of excesses in eating, drinking, dressing, and disorderly conduct by which the fair name of the individual is injured and the church to which he belongs injuriously reproached.

We may class under the head of the second those follies of conduct which result in injury to others as well as ourselves in which no criminal intent is found to be the animus and motive. These are selfish indulgences to the exclusion of care and thought for others, improper uses of what God has given us of personal strength and the good things of this world. All habits of person, by which disease is fastened upon the body and possibly upon those who follow after are vices.

There's to me
 A daintiness about these early flowers
 That touches me like poetry.

—N. P. Willis.

Under the third head we have those things which are forbidden by law human and divine; among these for the purposes of the present article we class the vice of gambling, of which we find in the Philistine for July, 1904, the following from the pastor of the Philistine flock. We insert it because it is a business man's statement from a business man's point of view, and for that reason it is outside of the realm of sentimental religion and should challenge the attention of every fair-minded, common-sense reader:

As a cold business proposition, let me give you this: I would not trust an amateur gambler as far as you could fling Taurus by the tail.

I will not do business with a man who plays cards for money if I can help it.

No individual in my employ—or anybody else's—who plays cards for money can ever hope for promotion.

A professional gambler may be honest, but your clerk or business man who indulges in a quiet game of draw, is a rogue, a liar, and a cheat.

And the man he cheats most is himself.

And the only man he really deceives is himself.

And the man who deceives himself and cheats himself will get no chance to cheat me if the matter can be avoided.

Beware of the white face, the soft hands and the impassive smile of the poker-player!

The amateur gambler is not necessarily a bad man—primarily his intentions are honest. He plays first simply for recreation; then to add interest, the game transforms itself into penny-ante. From this to betting all the money he has, is a very easy evolution when the fever is on. He wins.

But to quit when you have won, and not give your opponents a chance to win their money back, is more or less of a disgrace.

He plays again—and loses.

Then he wants a chance to get his money back.

He plays first only in the evening—an hour after supper.

Then if he can get away from work at four o'clock and play until supper time, he will do so, just as scores of government clerks do at Washington. In the evening he plays again—excitement is in the air—challenge is abroad—he will come out even and then quit. Men who have work to do can not play all night and do business the next day, so midnight may end the game.

But Saturday night the game goes on until daylight.

Of the "morality" of gambling, nothing need be said—all I affirm is, that it is simply absurd to enter on a habit where success is defeat, and to win is a calamity.

The successful amateur gambler graduates into a professional; he has to, for business men shun him.

No man who plays cards for money can keep his position long. The fact is, none of us have a surplus of brains, and if you are going to succeed in business, all the power you have to your credit is demanded. The man who can play cards at night and do business in the daytime, hasn't yet been born.

Life is a bank-account, with so much divine energy at your disposal. What are you going to do with it? If you draw your checks for this, you can not for that—take your choice. And above all, do not draw on the Bank of Futurity by breathing bad air, keeping bad hours and bad company.

The man who succeeds in business is the one who goes to bed before ten o'clock at night; and only one thing is he jealous of, and that is outdoor exercise.

Gambling robs a man of rest; and the keen edge of his life is lost in shuffling the pasteboards. All he gives to his employer or the world is the discard. Outside of his play he is a weak, inefficient person, and his weakness is very apt to manifest itself in burdening his friends. The curse of gambling does not fall on the gambler alone, any more than does the drunkard alone suffer for his fault. Suffering falls upon every one within the radius of the gambler.

If your gambler is on a salary, he very often comes around for his wages before pay day; then he gets to discounting his salary to a money shark; then, if he can, he will "borrow" his pay before he earns it, without first consulting you. He intends to pay it back—oh, yes! He wins and pays it back.

This encourages him to borrow more the next time. He takes more in order to win more. He is now obliged to play heavily because his debts are accumulating. It is an old story, and dozens of men in Sing Sing can tell you all about it.

One bad feature of the poker game is the poker face—the impassive, white face with its cold smile. It reveals nothing—nothing but untruth. And the principal reason it reveals nothing is because there is nothing back of it to reveal: it does not token truth, talent, sympathy, kindness, love, nor intellect.

Our actions and thoughts are building brain cells, and the gambler is building cells of folly. His face is astute as the face of David Harum. It gives nothing away. In time, the habit of the man becomes fixed—he is a living lie. He lies to friends, family, employer, and business associates. He for ever plays a part. Life to him is a game of bluff. And get it out of your head that the liar does not look you squarely in the eye. The poker-player is a scientific liar, running on the low gear, and his eyes look calmly into yours. He is astute.

Astuteness is only valuable in protecting us from astute people. It adds nothing of value to the community. Astuteness adds no beauty to the world, nor does it make life for any man happier.

In strict scientific economics the gambler is a parasite and a thief. He consumes but does not produce. If four men start in to play poker with ten dollars each, or a thousand dollars each, it is just a matter of mathematical calculation before all of them will have nothing. All they have will go to the rake-off and for cigars and drink, and the midnight lunch, which they would not need if they went to bed at a reasonable hour.

No man can play the races continually and win. John E. Madden, who has made a million dollars out of horse-racing, says that defeat and nothing but defeat awaits the bettor on cards or horses. And of all the fools, the biggest is the man who bets on "a sure thing." Madden has followed the business for a quarter of a century, and says: "I quit betting years ago, and if ever I bet again, it will be because the disease has got the better of my business judgment." The bookmaker gets it all—he has but to wait and the whole thing is his. It is just like the game of stud poker, where the dealer takes care of the bets, and gives the first booster an ace in the hole. If the boosters do not get the "live one's" money, the dealer will—he gets all the others have, as sure as death, if they continue to play.

Do not imagine that all the gambling is done in the cities—"man made the cities, God the country—but the Devil made the small towns." Hardly a village in America is free from the scourge.

Gambling means blurred vision, weak muscles, shaky nerves. Loss of sleep, lack of physical exercise, irregular meals, bad air, excitement, form a devil's monopoly of bad things—and the end is disgrace, madness, death, and the grave.

I am not a member of the Christian Endeavor Society, the Epworth League, the Baptist Union, the Knights of Columbus, or the Society for the Suppression of Vice, and all I say here is simply a little plain talk by one business man to others, with all soft sentiment omitted.

Boys, we need all the brains we have, in our work. If by concentration, and cutting out folly, we succeed in degree, we do well. But I do not believe we can reasonably hope for success unless we eliminate the pasteboard proclivities—this is a cold business proposition! I am done.

ITEMS FROM A WANDERER.

For some time past there has been trouble to some extent over the occupancy of a portion of the Turtle Mountains. Some of the Indians who originally owned the hills claim they have not been duly settled with. "Indian scares" have therefore been quite periodical at Dunseith for some time past.

But be that as it may, and the Turtle Mountains of origin certain or uncertain, Dunseith, as an American village, celebrated. And what a heterogeneous mass participated! As we stood on the outskirts of the little village in the forenoon of the Fourth, we could see teams and vehicles of every sort bring their contingents along the many roads leading into the town from every direction. They came from across the broad, open prairie, from out the hills; they came, and came, till the little town was full to overflowing. There were whole Indians, half Indians, and those not Indians. One could hear the people chattering in many different languages. There were Indians in the crude but fantastic garbs of the "original American"; there were Indians garbed in the habiliments of the white man. The Indian women, and half-breed women, showed as much or more variety in dress than the men. Mostly in colors, though, and the bright colors at that.

And as for the white men, it was a cosmopolitan crowd. Short conversations with various persons (people in a new country are not so difficult to draw into conversation as in older places) revealed the fact that very many parts of the United States were represented. But Dunseith celebrated. They had horse-races, foot-races, bicycle-races, ball-games, shooting-galleries, dancing-bowery, etc., etc., and a brass band, too. The small boys had firecrackers, cap-pistols, torpedoes, and were just as noisy as any other crowd of American boys of their numbers.

We saw how Dunseith celebrated,—saw it all,—because—well, everybody seemed to be busy, and as Nahum's chariots did not reach the place we were dependent upon horse-flesh to get us to a railway station, so we waited till the 5th to leave town.

At exactly the hour he had promised to meet us on the morning of the 5th, Bro. James Carson met us, and in a lumber wagon took us up to Bottineau. Bro. Fred A. and I had decided we would go a little out of our way and go to the home of the Graham children, to whom fate had recently been so unkind. We thought a visit, even if short, from home folks, would be acceptable to them. So at Bottineau we went to the home of Bro. and Sr. Frank Howery to wait for the evening train. We there saw what was to us an unusual sight. In a neighbor's well just a little way from Bro. Howery's we saw ice still clinging to the sides of the well down eight or ten feet. It had been there since winter, and we were told it would probably be another two weeks before it would thaw out. There was a wagon load or more of it.

Our train was late about two hours. From Bottineau we went north and west about thirty miles to West Hope, the present terminus of the road. There Bro. John Gordon met us and his aged father who was with us, and we soon started for his home ten or twelve miles to the west. It was eight o'clock or after when we started, but we expected to make most of the distance before dark. At this time of the year the sun shines many hours of the day on the pretty green fields of that great North Dakota prairie. Rising far to the north of east, smiling old Sol sweeps his shining circle through the heavens in a long arc which carries him far into the northwest before he takes his last lingering look over the western rim of that wide expanse of level land. Those great fields of growing grain must look good to genial Sol, for at night he hurries past the grim north, and the western sky has scarcely ceased to glow at his going down before the sky in the east brightens at his coming. On that night it was nearly nine o'clock when we got our last glimpse of the sun as it sank to rest, and then for a long time into the night the twilight lingered in its long good-night caress. How beautiful it was as the "lingering shadows" softly came and went, and the great western expanse of sky gradually changed from the pale light of day into the deepening rich red of a glorious sunset!

We had expected to have supper at Bro. Gordon's and then hasten on ten miles farther west to the home of Bro. William Sparling for the night. But when Bro. Gordon's home was reached, the long, lingering shadows of twilight had quite flitted into darkness and we were admonished to tarry. The universal hospitality of those pioneer prairie homes greeted us, and we were made comfortable for the night.

By about nine or ten o'clock the next morning Bro. Gordon and his team had landed us at the home of Bro. William Sparling, some ten or twelve miles farther west. Here we "changed wagons and teams," and James Sparling drove us to Mohall, where about noon we pulled up at the home of Bro. and Sr. Martin Spaulding. After refreshing the physical man by something to eat and a rest, we resumed the journey, this time accompanied by Bro. Martin and his wife. About twelve miles south and east from Mohall we passed through Lansford. As we entered the town, in the northwest outskirts the road took us past a newly made mound on the prairie, and we recognized a grave. It looked so lonely out there on the open prairie, with no fence to mark the spot as being in a cemetery, that it impressed us. A hush, the one that always comes in the presence of the dead, fell upon us as we passed the lonely grave. We conjectured as to who might be resting there.

About nine miles south and just a little west of Lansford we found the Graham residence, and reached it about the time the boys, Charles and Morgan, were working at the chores. We found a welcome at the grief-stricken home. Not a noisy or "happy" one; but by the warm pressure of clasped hands, we knew those bereft children were very glad to see home folks and fellow Latter Day Saints.

We stayed over night, giving such comfort as we could, though we felt it was little we could do on such occasion other than to show by our presence that we sympathized with them. We learned that few particulars other than what have already appeared in the HERALD had been learned. On Friday night, June 24, the blow fell, and the happy children returned from their pleasure to find their happiness gone,—their mother was dead, their father nowhere to be found. In vain the search. Scores of men scoured the country, but not the slightest clew was found. The mystery remains unsolved.<sup>1</sup> On the Tuesday following the tragedy, Sr. Graham's body was interred in the new cemetery at Lansford, the third person to go to the city of the dead there. Our wonderings as to who was the occupant of the lonely grave were answered.

On the next morning, July 7, we bade the Grahams good-bye and left early for Lansford where we bade good-bye to the Martins and boarded train for Bemidji, Minnesota.

Bemidji, located by a pretty body of fresh water known as Bemidji Lake, is in the midst of the pine woods, and is a lumbering center. In and around the town but few trees of the big pines now stand. The axman has long since laid them low; but farther back the axman has gone, and the monarchs as they fall are cut up into logs and "driven" down the runs. At the south end of Bemidji Lake stands a noisy and very busy mill, which at this season of the year runs day and night, ripping the logs into lumber at a rate which to a prairie-raised person is indeed astonishing.

North from Bemidji we have a few families of Saints living in the midst of the dense jack-pine forest. They maintain a branch organization, sometimes holding in a schoolhouse about eight miles from Bemidji, sometimes at one about four. This scheme does not compel certain ones to go the long distance all the time,—the hard task of getting to church is shared.

We found Bro. McCoy holding meetings in the schoolhouse about eight miles north from town, so Bro. Birch Whiting took us to his home near by and we stayed over Sunday, assisting Bro. McCoy in his meetings. On Sunday morning the first meeting was set for about half past ten, and the Saints came from over quite a scope of country. Bro. Ed Anderson came from about four miles to the south with a wagon so full of people that some took turns in walking. Mr. and Sr. Porter Nye drove from Bemidji, eight miles away. Probably the most striking example of zeal in attending that day was that of Bro. Reuben Oaks, who is janitor of the high-school building at Bemidji. Though he had put in a week of hard work on the school-yard and building, yet when meeting opened he was there. He had walked the eight miles from Bemidji, and returned after the night meeting. He traveled sixteen miles to be with the Saints at three preaching services. A worthy example.

Monday, the 11th of July, we went to Bemidji, to the home of Mr. and Sr. Porter Nye, and that night Bro. F. A. preached at Nyemore, near Bemidji. On Tuesday morning we started for Osage, going by rail to Park Rapids, where Bro. Henry Way met us and by wagon took us to his home at Osage. On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday nights we held meetings in the schoolhouse, and again on Sunday afternoon and evening. Interest grew, but there was much prejudice manifest. Threats of tar and feathers and bad eggs reached us, but no open opposition met us. We expected to close meetings Sunday night, but at the close of that meeting Myrtle Sanderson, daughter of Bro. Sanderson, requested us to remain over Monday and baptize her. We promised to do so, and on Monday afternoon had the pleasure of seeing Bro. F. A. lead into the water not only her but her mother also. Bro. Sanderson rejoiced much. On Monday night we held another meeting, leaving on Tuesday. Other appointments necessitated leaving. We went to Minneapolis, where we held preaching services on Wednesday and Friday nights, Thursday being prayer-meeting night.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A copy of the Butler County Press reaches us in which we note mention of the dedication of the church-building at Packard, Iowa. Brn. F. A. and F. M. Smith were there to assist and were commented on favorably. In regard to the claim that Joseph Smith, Jr., did not practice polygamy the paper concludes by stating that "his grandsons, who were present, certainly do not look to be the descendants of a polygamist." The members at Packard were spoken of as "a good class of citizens," and the wish that "they continue as they have begun" was expressed.

LOTTERY TICKETS AND MINING STOCKS.

Have you ever purchased a lottery ticket? If you have and are still doing so, then this article is written for you. Not only for you, however, but for all who would do so had they the opportunity. There are many places where it is hard to secure lottery tickets, but not so in California, especially San Francisco and Oakland, where they are even peddled from door to door.

Thirty-seven hundred and fifty dollars for twenty-five cents! The thought naturally presents itself: Just think of the good I could accomplish with that amount. But before purchasing our ticket or tickets, let us consider what the step means. By investing our money in lottery tickets we are committing sin; we are gambling! Oh no! some may say, that is not gambling. "But be assured, dear reader, that it is. It is against the law of the land and also the law of God.

The grand jury of San Francisco, in March, 1904, by its foreman, charged the courts with being too lenient with lottery ticket holders and other gamblers, such as pool-sellers, etc. This is what Police Judge Conlan says in defense to the charges made: "Now, with regard to the allegation that white men arrested for having lottery tickets in their possession are let off too leniently, I will say that I can not make any distinction between them and the Chinese. We fine Chinese arrested for having lottery tickets five dollars apiece and we fix that sum on the recommendation of the district attorney."

The grand jury claims the penalty is too light. Gamblers of all kinds are difficult to convict. As a rule they are hard to catch,—that is, those who are lawbreakers. But we will not dwell upon the laws of the land, which, however, would be profitable, but consider for a moment the commandments of God.

"God doth not walk in crooked paths." Then he is not with his children when they turn aside from the straight and narrow way.

In regard to our performances in this life Nephi says: "In the first place ye shall pray unto the Father in the name of Christ, that he will consecrate thy performance unto thee, that thy performance may be for the welfare of thy soul."—Book of Mormon, p. 110.

Fancy Saints praying for the Lord's blessing in a gambling venture! We should not do evil that good might come.

In the machine-shop where I am employed there is a blacksmith who won eleven hundred dollars not long ago in a Chinese lottery. During the noon hour this man and others were discussing the chances of winning, etc. I ventured the opinion that not one man in a thousand would out in a lottery investment, with other remarks of a discouraging nature.

The winner of the eleven hundred dollars replied.—"Say, don't you know, Joseph, that a man has to have something to hope for? If a man has nothing to expect or hope for he might just as well be dead." I will admit that hope should be in every breast; not the hope of the gambler, but the blessed hope which is obtained by obeying God's commandments and living by them.

Many thousands in the past (including Saints) have brought upon themselves disappointment, guilt, and regret by speculating in lotteries. So shall it be in the future, for every one shall certainly reap what he has sown.

In regard to mining investments there are many views taken by men of to-day. The question is this: Is buying mining stocks gambling, or is it a legitimate investment? We present the opinions of a few, none of whom are Saints:

A gambler: "It surely is gambling."

An editor: "Speculating in stocks is gambling."

Church member No 1: "I own stocks and do not consider it gambling."

Church member No. 2: "It can not be gambling."

Church member No. 3. "It depends upon circumstances whether it is gambling or not."

A lawyer: "Buying mining stocks is a legitimate investment unless you invest in a wildcat mine—then it is robbery."

A miner: "It is the worst kind of gambling because of failures and fakirs."

If the history of the past is a criterion for the future, there will be many whose investments shall bring to them, disappointment and sorrow. JOSEPH FERRIS.

THE PRESENT NEED.

In reference to the article under the above head which appeared in HERALD of May 4, would you permit me to say a few words? Doubtless the views as expressed by the brother may not be in harmony with those held by others equally interested in the "latter-day work." In matters affecting the earth-life of humanity from a political and social standpoint we find much diversity of opinion exists, quot homines, tot sententiæ; even the domain of religious life and thought presents an equally varied aspect in this regard. However, the fact remains that at the present period in human history, despite the unbelief of men, the "gospel restoration" has taken place, and as in past dispensations so in this, it has pleased the Creator to cause obedience to revealed conditions to be the basis or governing principle of man's acceptance with himself; hence we find also that in the means of this redemptive plan God becomes a coworker with his creatures and success therefore in his work is assured, if full compliance is rendered. In reviewing the "work" in this the English mission during early past years we find that the local "standing ministry" were the pioneers of the Reorganization in propagating the gospel message, and that the organization and building up of both branches and districts in a successful manner was the result only of careful and lawful administration; therefore it is also reasonable to assume that had these conditions remained, there would have been progress and development to record from time to time.

The Lord in 1890 and also in 1894 impressed upon the church the necessity of honoring the law in reference to branches and districts, also other duties, thus clearly evincing that there existed a tendency on the part of some to evade these heaven-imposed conditions, and substitute other methods instead; the results of which would be disintegration and disaster if followed to their legitimate conclusion, yet we still find that there exists a desire on the part of some to neglect their own line of duty by right of ordination, in order to invade a sphere of action appertaining to others and thus create disunity and suspicion. (See Romans 15: 20.)

The spirit and action of Saint Paul in meeting with the elders at Miletus is worthy of all emulation, (see Acts 20: 17-36,) and realizing the forces both temporal and spiritual that are arrayed against God's truth and its ultimate success, we are led to understand that the "need of the hour" is loyalty to the "Word of God," and while the use of eloquent and metaphorical speech may please the multitude yet far more to be accepted and honored by God and man is the gospel declaration and testimony blessed and hallowed by the Holy Spirit's influence; and for such many honest souls are anxiously seeking and waiting.

How unlike the complete works of man
Heaven's easy, artless, unencumbered plan,
No meretricious graces to beguile,
No clustering ornaments to clog the pile,
From ostentation as from weakness free
It stands like the cerulean arch we see
Majestic in its own simplicity.—Cowper.

LET US HAVE NO IFS.

This is the caption of a brief, pointed article that appeared in the HERALD some years ago. As a reader at that time I failed to see the point: but since that article appeared, the point has been forcibly driven home to my senses many times, and I am made to feel in my soul that the time is here when I must be more positive in my attitude as a minister for Christ if I would see success attend my work. The little word if always leaves room for a doubt. I have noticed that when I have used such terms as, if the Bible is true, if the apostle was not mistaken, if we are to believe the words of Christ, if our theology is correct, etc., etc., it has always left room for a doubt, and not only so, but with some minds it always implies a doubt. Such expressions are much more to the point when we leave off the doubtful little if. Again, when speaking of the Doctrine and Covenants if I say these purported revelations, or of the Book of Mormon a purported history, etc., or of Joseph Smith who claimed that an angel revealed this or that to him, or if I say I believe God knew, or if our profession has been correct, or since we claim to believe thus and so,—when I have used these and other doubtful expressions, some of my audience have always been ready to judge me insincere. Others have thought me doubtful or not fully persuaded, and I discern that the effect with the masses has by no means been as satisfactory as when I have expunged these doubtful expressions from my vocabulary. Therefore I have resolved to educate myself in this direction henceforth.

I have sometimes wondered if I have been able to reason this whole gospel economy out by the aid of the preachers, with probably very little of the spirit of revelation. Is this the reason why I have been fearful of compromising myself by being unduly positive?

If I have been doubtful and unbelieving in the past relative to the glorious claims of this most glorious latter-day work, I will wage a persistent campaign against my scruples by a well-ordered system of prayer and fasting until I see the beauty of a more positive coöperation with God—until I become not only a willing and obedient servant, but a "friend of Christ," that whatsoever his Father had revealed unto him may be made known unto me.

God has given us authority, and it is dangerous and sinful for us to boast of the same. Nor is it the part of wisdom for us to go to the other extreme and hide it in a napkin by the use of so much doubtful phraseology. Christ spake as one having authority and we are commanded to follow him.

May God anoint us with a lively sense of the authority with which we are clothed, and give us wisdom to use the same discreetly, is my humble prayer.

D. R. BALDWIN.

RAVENDEN SPRINGS, Arkansas, July 5, 1904.

"TERRIBLE AS AN ARMY WITH BANNERS."

The above thought, so beautiful in its suggestiveness when read with its connecting language, as found in our sacred treasure of latter-day commandments, covenants, and promises, (section 102: 9,) is worthy of consideration.

The Lord here in speaking of the condition which he desires his people to attain to, says:

Let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, that it may become fair as the sun, and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations, that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject to her laws.

We observe that when God's people meet these requirements, they will not be in obscurity in the world; neither will they be widely known because of the excellent work of their ministry, or their winning way of presenting a perfect plan of life in word, but rather by a brilliant example,—a pattern for the world.

A practical test of the gospel entire, in actual living operation before all men, speaking in thunder tones to the nations, saying, Look! ye wandering sons of men, groping for the royal highway of life; ye who are bound by the cruel chains of error, and the fetters of man-made institutions, ye who are weary of seeking light where shadows are dense; behold, ye, the light radiating from the city of God's own planting.

The light whose rays will flood the weary souls of men, and illuminate the darkest dungeon in all the habitation of despair, if allowed to enter, will, with its divine flash, strike off the shackles of uncertainty, unbelief, crime, disease, poverty, and misery, and even rob the monster, death, of its terror, by an assurance of the life beyond. Yes, all this, and more, will the voice of a living example proclaim to a needy world, when we live the whole law.

Then will the honest-hearted among the "kingdoms of this world" be willing to say: "Let us become subject unto her laws."

The picture is not overdrawn; the lessons to learn in order to reach this height, not impossible; but how hard to learn; and how slow we ascend the hill of wisdom. What care we must exercise,—what vigilance! But what others have accomplished may we not do?

"Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill can not be hid."—Matthew 5:14. The story of Enoch and his people is not a myth, but a chapter from real life.

The light from their example has enveloped the earth, and shined down through the ages, and will never fade, but will continue to furnish a standard of excellence for thousands to emulate. Their plane of action was this same old world of ours. Their opposition, from the same source as ours,—the evil one. They had to contend with all the evils which flesh is heir to, as do we. And happiest of all, the same God who led and taught them, rules to-day. The same perfect, unchangeable plan of life revealed to them, and through which they wrought their name, fame, and glory, is again unveiled from darkness, and presented in all its grandeur. They were victorious, then why not we?

Again, we have another beautiful picture presented in the footprints of the nations who wrought before us. On the favored land of Joseph, among the Nephites of old, after the Savior had visited them in love, established his same universal, perfect system of government, viz: the gospel entire, we find, in the result of this planting, as fair a vision of the growth of the gospel-tree as the pages of history anywhere disclose.

Who can read that happy story, covering a period of two hundred years after Christ, without the deepest feeling of awe, and admiration, and a yearning to participate in such blessings? Think of it!

The people were all converted to the Lord, upon all the face of the land, both Nephites and Lamanites, and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another; and they had all things common among them; therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free and partakers of the heavenly gift.—4 Nephi 1:2.

On all this broad land of America the people were all converted to the Lord.

No wonder the Lord did heal their sick, and raise the dead, and cause the lame to walk, the deaf to hear, and the blind to receive their sight. For they were obedient to the law of the Lord; and he was bound to bless them. Therefore, "the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit" were not withheld, as they are with us to a great extent; and for reasons which are apparent. They were prosperous in all their undertakings. Riches were heaped upon them in abundance:

And it came to pass that there was no contention in all the land, because of the love of God which did dwell in the hearts of the people. And there were no envyings, nor strifes, nor tumults, nor whoredoms, nor lyings, nor murders, nor any manner of lasciviousness; and surely there could not be a happier people among all the people who had been created by the hand of God.

And thus for two hundred years this people enjoyed a heaven on earth, which began to be broken up only when some were beguiled back into the ways of man, in that they wished to possess more wealth than their brethren.

The great law of the universal brotherhood of man was broken. Pride and vanity entered, and a decline in all the blessings ensued. Pride, selfishness, and wickedness, with all the wretchedness and misery of their making, entered the church—entered the heavenly earth-home of that happy people, and all too soon it wrought their ruin. "Pride goeth before a fall." They were no exception to the rule—are we?

But may we expect a people to ever again attain to such heights of righteousness, as those worthies of bygone ages? We say with confidence, Yes, why not, under the same gospel, the same rules, the same God, with the mistakes of former nations before us to profit by? And God's word is given that he will prepare a bride, to meet the bridegroom, whose coming is near,—a people to meet those ancients of former Zion; and not one "jot or tittle" shall fail of fulfillment.

When shall this be accomplished? When shall this work move forward? When we as his people accept the simple conditions of our promotion; or reject, only to be cast aside as chaff, making room for those whom God will choose, and who will accept the conditions required by which Zion may become as "a city set on an hill."

Chief among those conditions are: a union of, and an adherence to the law of temporalities and spiritualities combined and not to disregard either.

To partially disregard one or the other of these two great divisions of the gospel, and lay great stress upon the keeping of the other, has been a frequent mistake of the past.

Christ reproved some in his time for overlooking the weightier parts of the law: faith, judgment, etc., while they prided themselves on strict observance of tithes. Is it not possible that we in this age may be led to the opposite extreme?

It would indeed be a strange position to take to make the claim that when the gospel plan was formulated, and its originator provided for the spiritual welfare of man therein, that he overlooked the need for a wise code of laws regulating the temporal affairs of this life. We believe our Lawgiver too wise to make such a vital mistake,—our Master-builder too skilled to erect such a tottering castle. But rather that his wisdom foresaw that among men unchecked monopoly and greed, selfishness and ill-regulated governments would cause poverty, wretchedness, misery, and want, where the natural ample supply was hoarded by some who by shrewdness or chance had managed to get the advantage of his fellow man. And when men choose to trample under foot his counsel they must suffer for it. The Lord foresaw all, and placed within his gospel plan a provision wherein man, when tired of the ways of man, may avail himself of the blessing of a supreme God, through obedience to a perfect law, which embraces all the details of life.

How our hearts should rejoice when by these facts we see more fully the justice of God, and the divinity of this latter-day call upon the nations, in that no other people ever makes the claim that the Lord has revealed a definite, explicit law, in detail, governing the property holding of his Saints. And those who know not the peace and assurance of the great faith-anchor, continued revelation, must depend upon the broken and uncertain records of the past alone for their rules of life in the history of the gospel; hence the mists of error are dense, and the conflicting winds of doctrine toss many about. Oh, that we could as a unit say: all I have and all I am is thine, O Lord; thy ways are superior to all; lead me, and I murmur not.

We dare not stop with the A B C of the gospel, lest we be pushed out to make room for the more progressive. Then let us move right on, using the other letters of the gospel alphabet until finally in this great high school we shall be able in the thousand years' reign of the greatest of teachers, to enter His class of perfection.

We have been taught by the Scriptures that the Lord wishes his Saints to be perfect finally; and he required the young man who had kept the law from his youth, if he would be perfect, to make a sacrifice which seemed to him to be too great, and he went away sorrowing. Likewise if we heed not our standing, and lose our golden opportunity, we may be found sorrowing—sorrowing in the realization of what we have missed by neglecting a duty and losing a privilege.

I would not infer by this that any would be urged to sell their possessions and distribute them promiscuously. But only that the law be learned by each of us and honored.

But how easy it is to hesitate! how easy to linger in the old rut of division, selfishness, and greed, into which the world seems to be plunging deeper and deeper, instead of keeping on the highway of union, equity, equality, liberty, and happiness, the simple plan of which lies buried in the rich depths of our records, unread, and nearly unknown by some, while the world itself is blindly clamoring for something better than its present system of division and oppression; and restless minds are scanning the future for relief, and delving in false theories, vain and delusive methods, each with zealous ardor trying to impress his following with his own misguided solution of the problem; shall we stand idly by, with the God-given key within our hand, and fail to unlock the door? Let us unlock the door, raise the standard to the "kingdoms of this world" who are fast coming to a condition in which they would welcome a system offering relief to the cramped situation, and they will surely say of Zion, "Let us become subject to her laws."

It can not be denied that the sacred books are replete with promises to the Saints of prosperity in all the necessities of this life. Are we now enjoying this blessing to a very marked degree? If not, who is at fault? Certainly not God, or his plan. The many calls for funds to assist in maintaining our institutions of learning, to furnish the necessary means for spreading the gospel abroad, and our ability, seemingly, to only partially meet these requirements, would seem to indicate that our financial prosperity is very limited. We recall a statement made by our worthy President, under the caption of "And now what do you think of England," to the effect that rapid growth of the work, in some of the foreign lands, is much retarded because of cramped conditions of finance. And is it not a lamentable fact that poverty and dire necessity is to-day throttling the spiritual growth of its thousands? What chance for the development of the higher nature has the serf who must toil from daylight till dark, in order to barely eke out an existence? The only hope that remains for the breaking of this pall of darkness, is through the perfect law of the Lord—

Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.—Malachi 3: 10.

How much useless labor is annually expended, because of the lack of the Lord's favor and blessing upon our work?

For instance, in raising corn, how many fields of worm-eaten nubbins, where bushels of well filled corn should have been, but for lack of rain or some other condition over which we have no control! The same with every product of the soil upon which man must subsist.

Also in every line of business pursuit, profits are curtailed, and hours and months of labor wasted, for want of being more fully in harmony with the Lord, and his wisdom. And yet we have not time to serve the Lord fully, to get in harmony with his perfect law, with its happy results! We think we must make a living, therefore keep right on to work, whether we get returns or not. Like the man who complained that he was losing money every day in his business—had lost several thousand last year, and when asked why he did not quit, said, "Well, I must do something to make a living."

As tillers of the soil our crops are blighted, our fruit-trees infested with the wood-bore, many insect pests run riot, chintz bug, etc., cotton-boll weevil, which Congress has appropriated a quarter of a million dollars to fight against, and last but not least, the monopoly, which accumulates what is produced, all speak plainly the fact, that we are not fully in harmony with the law of God yet.

"And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground," is a promise which is for us, as well as for those to whom it was addressed by Malachi. For God is unchangeable and just with all.

"Oh, but I have paid my tithing," some of us may say, "and therefore am keeping that part of the law." Yes, but is it not possible that some of us have just leaned very cautiously toward the law of tithing, and, in a very reserved way, may have paid something,—even thousands of dollars,—to the Bishop at different times, and then flatter ourselves that we have obeyed the requirements of the law, when the fact is, we have never, first, made a conscientious consecration of all (every dollar) of our surplus? We think it is a very easy mistake to make, and therefore possibly one of the important reasons why the abundance of the Lord's blessings is withheld. Remember it is easy for the man who possesses only ten dollars to say: "I have no surplus," and the man of a hundred dollars: "I have none," and on up to the man with the large business interests with his thousands invested, to say "Well, I have no surplus, for I need it all and more, to carry on my business." And so a loophole for escape from the whole law is easy to form, but when the final reckoning shall come, will our flimsy excuses stand?

If we are at fault in this we need not be surprised to find, upon close examination, that we are wasting our lives in a vain effort to secure God's blessing upon our work, when he does not sanction our half-hearted service; and though he may pity our blinded condition, he can not reach us but through his loving law. Saints, let us gird ourselves for the work of hastening the time when his army on earth shall again become "fair as the sun, and clear as the moon."

ARE WE A PECULIAR PEOPLE?

In Latter Day Saint prayer-meetings we often hear the expression, "we are a peculiar people," and many seem to take great delight in the name. The writer seldom if ever hears the expression used but he wonders if they comprehend the meaning of that thought. To our understanding it means a great deal. We may be peculiar in trying to make ourselves appear odd or different before the world, as there seems to be such an idea prevalent, with a class, that all Latter Day Saints must look differently and act differently from other people, quoting Matthew 5: 20: "For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Thus in our misconception and mistaken foolishness and weakness we make ourselves a peculiar people in the eyes of the world; but are we peculiar in the sense the inspired teacher intended, in that we are separate and distinct in a righteous sense, in following in the Master's footsteps and example so closely that we are keeping all of his commandments?

John 14: 15: "If ye love me, keep my commandments." John 14: 23: "If a man love me, he will keep my word." 1 John 2: 4: "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar and the truth is not in him."

This is our understanding of what will make us the peculiar people this great Teacher spoke of; not a premeditated or forced condition, but a natural one, which is the result of a proper and intelligent obedience to the principles of the gospel of Christ, a character that is Christlike; one that has overcome selfishness to such an extent that he can truly love the Lord with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his mind, and love his neighbor as himself.

Well, says one, that is just as I tried to be when I joined the church. I tried to be just as good as I could be, never said anything evil of any one, never harbored evil thoughts, never misrepresented anything or tried to deceive or take advantage of any one, always attended church, took part, paid my tithing, established my family altar; taught my children the principles of the gospel, the necessity of obedience, and the necessity of being temperate in all things, and did everything in my power to do good to the best of my understanding.

Were you blessed in so doing? Yes.

Why then the change? Has Christ or the gospel changed? No. Are not your prayers answered? Well, y-e-s, but not in the way they used to be. Why! What is wrong? Oh; I do not know. Do you keep up your secret prayers as you used to do? W-e-l-l, n-o. Do you still keep your family altar? Not all the time. Do you attend church as regularly? N-o. Do you take part when you do go? Not very often. Do you harbor evil thoughts or enmity towards any? W-e-l-l, I don't know as I do feel just right. Do you remember, my brother, what Christ says in Luke 6:31-39? Y-e-s; well! but who can help it?

Last fall when Bro. Johnson, and I traded horses I supposed I was getting a good, sound horse, and now this spring I find he has the heaves.

Well, I am sorry to hear your horse has the heaves, but did Bro. Johnson tell you the horse was sound? No. I did not ask him, as I did not think he could know much about it as it was a colt running in his pasture a year ago, and when poor Bro. Jones lost one of his horses with the distemper last spring and the neighbors were talking of taking up a subscription to get him another horse, but failed as such efforts sometimes do, Bro. Johnson told him to go and take this colt and use it until he could get another, as he would not need it for a year or two. Had the colt ever been worked? No; Bro. Jones had to break it. Well, this was kind in Bro. Johnson, was it not? Yes; Bro. Johnson is good that way; he let Widow Smith take the best cow he had last fall to milk, and it was the only thing that kept her from being supported by the county all winter. Well, that shows a good heart in Bro. Johnson, does it not? Yes.

Now, my good brother, let us look at this matter carefully and see if there is not something overlooked. You say you traded horses with Bro Johnson? Yes. Well, who first mentioned trading? Oh; I did; I drove over to Bro. Johnson's and asked him how he would trade that colt Bro. Jones was working, for old Nig, and he stopped and thought a moment, and said, You ought to have that colt to match yours, and if Bro. Jones is willing to use Nig instead of the colt I will trade. Was Nig all right and sound? W-e-l-l, not exactly. Did you tell Bro. Johnson? No, he did not ask me any questions. What was the matter with Nig? He was balky. Was Bro. Johnson acquainted with the horse? Yes; but that horse used to be as true as steel, until a year ago last winter, when the hired man used him to grub stumps; he spoiled him. Has the horse balked since Bro. Jones has had him? Oh; I guess not, I think he will not give him any trouble until he gives him a rest, or gets into a tight place. Brother, I am glad you have been so frank in stating your troubles; it shows to me that in your heart you desire to do right. But let us see. You step in one side of the balances and let Bro. Johnson get into the other side and I will raise the beam and we will see which is found wanting (most to blame.)

Now, you say you proposed the trade? Yes. And that Bro. Johnson did not know Nig was balky? Yes. Well now, do you not see you have done not only Bro. Johnson but poor Bro. Jones a great wrong, and you have no evidence whatever but that Bro. Johnson is entirely innocent in the matter? First, you proposed the trade and Bro. Johnson, in the goodness of his heart, was willing that you might be benefited by having a nicely matched team, judging of course by his former acquaintance with old Nig that he was all right, and that he would be as well for poor Bro. Jones to use; and you all the time knew the horse was not as Bro. Johnson had known him, thus deceiving Bro. Johnson and Bro. Jones. Was this right? Did the gospel teach you to do thus? Is this doing unto others as you would have them do unto you? Again, on the other hand, you said Bro. Johnson had never worked the colt and you have had him now ever since last fall and fed him on rather musty hay, have you not? Yes. Well then, is it not fair to presume that the colt was all right when you got him, and contracted his trouble since you have had him? W-e-l-l, I never thought of that.

Now, my good brother, do you think this should not be a good lesson for you to watch and see in the future if there is not a beam in your own eye, before you try to get the mote out of your brother's eye? Yes, I do, and I can now see that Bro. Johnson is a good man and tried to do me a favor, and I have been talking about him all around the neighborhood. With God's help I will ask his forgiveness and try not to repeat it, and will make it right as far as it is in my power. I am very glad to hear you make such a good resolution, and if you carry it out that will be true repentance. But, let us see if this is all we can learn from this experience. You remember that you said you did not keep up your secret prayers as you used to? Yes. And that you neglected your family altar? Yes. That you were careless about going to church and seldom took part? Yes. Well, my dear brother, does it not begin to dawn upon your mind that this was all a trick of the adversary of souls to destroy you; and that the spirit of carelessness or indifference that you permitted to take possession of you soon after you came into the church was only the first step to your getting where you are?

First, you began to neglect secret prayer, then became careless about teaching your family and keeping the family altar, then losing your influence with your family by not living an exemplary life and attending church and failing to do your duty when there, and a whole lot of other things that you will remember if you will but stop and think. Am I not right? Yes, I must confess you are.

Dear reader, is not this too often the case after we lose our first love for the work, we let a spirit of indifference take control of us and we go down, step by step, as this brother did? Perhaps our pace backward at first is scarcely perceptible, but the adversary is very cunning and crafty and works in the dark, and will overcome the strongest if they do not take God at his word and work by the plan he has given, whereby we can be successful. True, we may not all have gone back in just the order of the above illustration, but let me ask all who read this, to take a retrospective view of their own lives and see if it was not the neglect of duty that always placed them in that lukewarm or indifferent condition; and to think back and see if they did not know at the time they were doing wrong, but simply did not put forth the effort to overcome, by the power that was lying dormant within them, as no one is permitted to be tried greater than he can bear if he is honest. This power is withdrawn from us in the same degree that we permit ourselves to go back; and the farther we get away from the path of duty the weaker we become, and the harder it is for us to stop sliding down the hill of sin and get stated up the road to righteousness again.

Of course, if any one were to try to act the part of a friend and tell us of our faults we would be up in arms at once, but is this the right spirit? Surely Latter Day Saints are not guilty of this; especially when we teach that our example and influence must be good, and that we should support good under all circumstances. While this may be our teaching in theory, still there seems to be too much of a tendency to pattern after the ways of the world, and it may be said that our preachers preach too much to suit the whims of the people, possibly to court favor or flattery, instead of sticking close to the solid, plain truth and practical workings of the gospel. Theory is good in its place, but the day has come when the Saints must be taught more of the practical parts of the gospel. It is works that will save us, not our belief or even our understanding alone, but a practical application of the principles of the gospel to our lives, a close observance of all of God's commandments.

In this day of critics there seems to be a spirit of indifference or carelessness taking hold of the people everywhere, and you will meet people nearly every day that have their names on church records, but by their acts you would not know they ever made any profession of religion whatever. Surely no Latter Day Saint should so far forget his covenant that he could not be recognized as a professor by his acts? The writer can remember the time when to him it seemed that all who had taken upon themselves the name of Latter Day Saint tried to honor the name by a godly life. But oh, what a contrast we see to-day. We know individuals who belong to the church that ran well for a while, and to-day claim to be strong in the faith, but by their actions, we can see no difference between them and the world, and if there is any, it is in favor of the world, as the world does seem to have a little shame and sense of propriety. Think of a person being recognized in good standing in the church who spends a good share of his time sitting around on the street-corners on boxes, telling wicked, vulgar stories, and laughing at his own smartness; and not stopping with this he does not hesitate to use the Creator's name in vain. We are sorry to say we know individuals in (so-called) good standing, who have engaged in business or some of the professions, who make no pretense to do differently from the world's people. They seem to think they can not be honest and succeed in business or in a profession now. And their religion must not be mentioned; especially where they are not known, for that would be a disgrace, and out among the world they would not recognize another Latter Day Saint, and would even frown upon the faith, and in some cases denounce it. But again, when they want the influence of the Saints they are very good, and deny they ever did the like. Is this not hypocrisy of the worst type? Do you remember what the Savior said about the fate of the hypocrite?

Did you, when you first obeyed the gospel, think about ever doing as you are now doing? Did the spirit of the gospel teach you to swear, drink, gamble, tell coarse, vulgar stories, idle away your time on the street corners tattling about your neighbors, stirring up contention among your brethren, trying to find fault with everything that is not done just as you want it, claiming that such and such ones had lost the Spirit, when in fact you are the one in fault, a willing tool in the hands of the evil one? Does the spirit of the gospel have a tendency to keep you away from church? Does it teach you to be proud and extravagant in your manners and dress? Does it teach you that the Saints should form in classes and cliques? Stop and think, before it is too late. Ah! No, the gospel is all right, but it is the people, you say.

Now is it the people? Is it not you? Have you not been careless in keeping up your family altar; neglected your secret prayers, absented yourself from church, and permitted yourself to partake of a fault-finding spirit, instead of being prompt in duty as you used to be?

We venture the statement that every member of the church who has been or is dissatisfied with the work and has permitted himself to let the weaknesses of men disturb him, can trace the whole trouble to neglect of duty, resulting in a gradual decline in spirituality. Am I not right? Take a careful retrospective view, be honest with yourself and your God, and retrace your steps by performing your duty, and ask God to give you again that Spirit of peace and freedom of heart you used to enjoy, and you will again see the beauties of this great latter-day work. And thus we can become that "peculiar people" in fact.

Hoping that I may have dropped some thoughts that will start some lukewarm Saint to thinking, and ever praying for all of God's covenant children, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

F. M. WELD.

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD.

It is known to many not of our faith that the above was practiced in the early days of the church; some have objected that it is unscriptural and unreasonable for a living person to act for and in the name and stead of the dead, and that those who have for any reason failed to fully comply with the divine requirements in this life are doomed to damnation through all eternity. Why all of man's hope should be confined to "threescore years and ten," when conditions in this life are so fearfully varied and uneven, they have never clearly explained; nor why God's love for the sinner, which is infinitely greater than we can comprehend, continuing as long as he lives, even to the hour of his death, should, regardless of the varied environments of this life, be instantly converted into eternal hate the moment he passes from this life, to pursue him with awful vengeance throughout countless billions of ages of exquisite torments. If God is so terribly changeable, how can we know but his love for us may at any moment change to ceaseless hate, even after we reach the portals of celestial bliss?

That the effects of the work done in this world by a servant of God extend outside of this sphere, is shown by Jesus saying to his disciples: "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."—Matthew 18:18. The disciples could not only "bind" and "loose" on earth and in heaven, but their power also extended into the estate of Satan, enabling them to cast out devils, and in other cases to deliver men into the hands of Satan for a specified time, (1 Timothy 1:20; 1 Corinthians 5:5,) or "for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." The disciples therefore could "loose" the spirit after the flesh had been delivered to Satan for destruction. When Jesus showed to man the way of salvation, he gave him laws to obey, by which he could enter the kingdom of God. These laws were to be inviolate throughout man's probation life, and in force to all mankind; a knowledge of this caused some who lived several hundreds of years after Christ, to sprinkle or pour water on those dying, who were unbaptized but desired baptism. This act, having no warrant from the word of God, was a violation of the gospel law of immersion. In the primitive church, however, a relative or friend of one who died unbaptized, could be baptized in the stead of the deceased, as referred to by Paul: "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?"—1 Corinthians 15:29. Wycliffe's version of 1380, the oldest in existence, renders it: "Else what schulen thei do that ben baptized for deede men? if in no wise deede men risen aghen, wherto ben thei baptized for hem?" Calmet's Dictionary of the Bible, eighth edition, revised by Robinson, says: "The most ancient interpretation which we have of the passage follows the simple and literal meaning of the words, (Greek is here inserted,) to be baptized for, instead of, the dead. In this it is assumed, that at the time when Paul wrote, many Christians . . . had adopted a vicarious mode by which they might still receive the benefit of the rite, viz.: the relatives or friends of such deceased persons were baptized in their stead."—Article "Baptism for the dead."

The fact that Paul did not condemn vicarious baptisms, but used instead, an argument in its favor, shows it to have been an approved rite of the primitive church; furthermore it is admitted by Olhansen, Ruckert, De Wette, and others, that Paul believed in, or approved of the ordinance, (see Kitto's Cyclopaedia,) and Jamieson, Faussett, and Brown, who show that it was practiced by at least the Corinthians and Marcionites, acknowledge that if Paul had been simply using an ad hominem argument, he probably would have censured its practice. (See Com., vol. 2.) Not only is this sacred rite historically and scripturally sustained, but it is in perfect harmony with God's dealings with mankind; the entire plan of human redemption is founded on a work of substitution. The sins of man were to be atoned for by another, (Christ). Isaiah 53:6 says: "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." The law of atonement by a lamb was instituted from Adam's day. By the Mosaic covenant, the sins of all Israel were placed on the head of a goat. (See Leviticus 16:21.) God's law forbids sin; its consequence is death. Hence an auxiliary law was given by which sin could be pardoned and the transgressed primary law be satisfied. The great redemptive work of Christ is based upon this principle, hence, the principle is a divine one, and also extends to man, by which those holding authority (priesthood) from God are "coworkers together with God," and are given power to act both for Himself and for man; and Jesus says: "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain they are retained."—John 20:23. God brings man into his kingdom through these ambassadors for Christ, who are sent to baptize in water all who desire to enter that kingdom. The water is one of those "three that bear witness in earth." (1 John 5:8.) Jesus gave a fundamental law when he said: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3:5. Hence one dying without complying with this law is eternally lost unless there is a provisional law to reach him. Jesus preached the gospel to the spirits in prison. (See 1 Peter 3:19.) What for? To tantalize them? No! Peter says it was, "that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit." (1 Peter 4:6.) How could they be judged according to men in the flesh, except by the divine law which was given to men in the flesh? How could they live according to God in the spirit, if they had no desire to obey the divine law?

As there was provided a way for those ancients in prison, "some of whom were disobedient in the days of Noah," to live according to God in the spirit, we have reason to believe that a way is also provided for some of those who have not obeyed the gospel since the Savior's time that they also might "live," who desire to obey the law of Christ, by which deliverance from the prison is to be had. Of this deliverance the prophet says: "I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water."—Zechariah 9:11. Therefore the law which commands them to "be born of water" could not be obeyed in "the pit wherein is no water" except by the subsidiary law which provides that another may be baptized in their stead. In this dispensation of the fullness of times Elijah the prophet appeared to "turn the hearts of the fathers to the children and the hearts of the children to the fathers." (Malachi 4:6.) Of this work the latter-day seer said: "These are principles in relation to the dead and the living that can not be lightly passed over, as pertaining to our salvation. For their salvation is necessary and essential to our salvation, as Paul says concerning the fathers, . . . neither can we without our dead be made perfect."—Doctrine and Covenants 110:15. Here is the law revealed by which the dear ones who have passed over the dark river of death shall be united with us when, on this glorified earth, we shall receive the fruition of our hope, while the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, and perfect love and bliss be ours,—united for eternity. With this sublime hope, we say, as in the language of the inspired prophet: "Should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?"—Isaiah 8:19.

Southwestern Iowa Reunion.

The annual reunion of Southwestern Iowa convened at Green's Grove, three miles south of Tabor, Iowa, Friday, August 19. The organization was effected at the night session. Brn. F. A. Smith and M. M. Turpen were placed in charge of services and C. Fry and T. A. Hougas in charge of music. The meeting opened up with an average attendance in camp; but up to present writing, Tuesday morning, the camp has been steadily growing, till now it is quite well approaching the normal size. The weather has been very favorable excepting that Sunday afternoon a cold rain set in, lasting till nearly night. The health of the camp is as good as could be expected and all seem to be enjoying the meetings. Of the missionary force, there are present: Brn. F. A. Smith, G. H. Hilliard, M. M. Turpen, Charles Fry, J. M. Stubbart, and J. W. Waldsmith.

The Sunday-school work is in charge of General Superintendent T. A. Hougas, and the district officers, Sr. T. A. Hougas, superintendent; Joseph Roberts, assistant superintendent, and Sr. Agnes Dundson-McClenahan, secretary. The Religio work will be in charge of the district officers, Sr. Emily Fry, president.

The attendance of citizens at night services is good. Meetings will continue till Sunday night, August 28.

Another Letter.

The following is from a letter to the General Superintendent. It is so full of excellent thought and suggestions that we give it herewith, withholding the names of persons and places as we do not think they would like their names in any way paraded for such earnest work. What we hope is that others may be inspired to try to do likewise.

"A MODEL SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

"On a certain Sabbath in the balmy month of —, in the year —, we visited a Sunday-school in one of the districts on the borders of the land of Zion. The events of that day were vividly impressed upon our mind and we note the following account of the Sunday-school work, feeling that in many ways we had been present at a model Sunday-school session.

"At fifteen minutes before the hour appointed for the opening of the school the superintendent was in his place and his manner of conduct was noticable. He was interested in the work of the hour before him, kindly greeting the incoming pupils, and the hearty handshake was certainly from the heart. The pupils, both old and young, gathered in, and at the hour for the service all, except a very few, were in their places. The officers were all present, as were the teachers. Upon the faces of these officers and teachers shone that smile of earnestness that indicated they were prepared for the work of the session. Upon inquiry we learned that during the week in the teachers' meeting they had counseled together and were a unit in the manner of taking up the work of the hour.

"As the hour struck the superintendent announced the opening hymn, his assistant being at his side, and offered the opening prayer in such an earnest, pleading manner that we believe it was heard in heaven and accepted, the prayer closing with the Lord's prayer in concert. A few words of welcome from the superintendent and the roll-call by the secretary. A second hymn was sung and scripture memory verses given by a majority of the members of the school. A solo followed by one of the members of the primary class. The review of the previous lesson was taken up by the assistant superintendent, and the present lesson referred to. The classes occupied their accustomed places with the teachers in charge, who assisted the younger members to find the responsive reading in the Bible. The reading was brief and well rendered, the difference between the King James Version and the Inspired Translation being mentioned.

"In the classes we noticed the teachers using the class-books, receiving the collection, and then taking up the lesson. The superintendent had general oversight of the work during the hour, and spent a few minutes in counsel with his assistant. The assistant superintendent spent a few minutes at the secretary's desk, welcomed some visitors who came in and invited them to a place in the proper class. One teacher had a large chart of his own preparation which covered the lesson of the day in a comprehensive manner and we did not notice that he used the Quarterly at all during the recitation, but his manner of presenting the subject showed that he had studied it from both the Quarterly and the Bible. The time allotted for the lesson study passed quickly and at the tap of the bell the hum of class-work ceased.

"In the review a few principal points of the lesson were recalled, the new lesson outlined, using the Quarterly outline from a large chart. The report of the school for the day was read by the secretary, the birthday offering asked for, Sunday-school announcements made and the work of the hour ended with a closing hymn and benediction.

"We were led to inquire as to the work of the Sunday-school which we could not see during the hour's observation, as to what brought about such harmony of action and earnestness in the work. Nothing special was mentioned, only the desire on the part of all to labor for the success of the Sunday-school. We were impressed with the fact that the entire corps of officers and teachers were active in their several duties, and were persons well suited to their respective places. As is the officer so is the school; as is the teacher so is the class.

"We especially noticed the oneness which existed between the superintendent and the assistant. Men of about the same age, yet so different by nature, disposition, temperament, and personality, that we wondered what could bring them together, yet in the Sunday-school work laboring in union and love, with the one purpose in view—the success and advancement of the Sunday-school cause. We were deeply cognizant of the oneness of heart and spirit in the Sunday-school work, and upon further inquiry we were assured that the superintendent and assistant were thoroughly Christian young men, the superintendent being given to seasons of fasting and prayer, and with his assistant frequently retired alone to seek the divine Father for help and strength and guidance in the work allotted to them."

HUMILITY.

"The bird that soars on highest wing
Builds on the ground her lowly nest;
And she that doth most sweetly sing
Sings in the shade when all things rest:—
In lark and nightingale we see
What honor hath humility.

"When Mary chose the better part,
She meekly sat at Jesus' feet:
And Lydia's gently opened heart
Was made for God's own temple meet:—
Fairest and best adorned is she
Whose clothing is humility."—Montgomery.

Several days ago, when thinking over this lesson and what to write concerning it, the above stanzas in the Saints' Harp came to mind. They set forth in beautiful language the sentiment of the lesson.

Upon seating myself this morning to prepare the matter for the Sunday-school column, I turned first to the poem to copy it. With the words lingering in my mind,

"Fairest and best adorned is she Whose clothing is humility,"

I turned to the lesson text and read Peter's words of admonition to the women of the church in his day, in which he bade them not to let their adorning be "that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel"; but to let it be "the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

And Peter said, "For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection to their own husbands, even as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him Lord: whose daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement."

The substance of Peter's words here is that, in God's sight, humility is a quality of character that is of great price, and that the women of the church should make it their effort to adorn themselves with this beautiful ornament. This should occupy their attention more than the question of outward adornment, though it is compatible with true humility in women to be "neat and comely" in dress.

OUR LAST RELIGIO LESSON

called our attention to this subject also, telling us in Alma 1:6 of the condition of the church at Zarahemla during a period of prosperity both spiritual and temporal. It is to be noted that, at that time, the people of the church were not given to wearing costly apparel, though they were neat and comely, and that their liberality was great toward the needy whether in the church or out of it.

But there was another class of people at that time. They did not belong to the church, and they were not so wealthy as the people of the church; they were lifted up in pride, and they wore costly apparel; they indulged themselves in sorceries, in idleness, in babblings, in envyings and strifes, in lying, robbing, thieving, and extreme evils.

ARE THERE NOT SIMILAR CONDITIONS IN THE WORLD NOW?

Last week we mentioned the fact that there are women in society in our land who spend yearly what would be fortunes to multitudes of the toiling masses of humanity, as much entitled to the blessings of temporal things as those who monopolize them. Those women spend thousands of dollars every year in the adornment of their persons, five hundred for a dress, several hundred for a hat, a thousand for hosiery and gloves, we are told.

Think of it! We don't know how to think of it. It is not in our experience, or anything approaching it; and we need not wish it to be, since they are clothed fairest and best who wear the priceless garment of humility. Our attention should be centered upon weaving for ourselves this garment of beauty and enduring worth.

"THE CANADIAN MESSENGER"

for August 15 contains a letter from Bro. R. C. Evans in which he describes some of the seaside residences of the wealthy at Newport. Elsewhere I have seen those residences called cottages, but he describes them as immense mansions of marble. He mentions a social gathering of those humble "cottagers," which cost the cool sum of fifty-five thousand dollars.

A Chicago paper a few days ago mentioned another social event at one of those villas of Newport, "which was attended by nearly all the cottagers." The paper says that "the scene at its height reminded one of court gatherings. The women appeared in white costumes with powdered hair, while the men, as a rule, wore pink hunting-coats, white satin breeches with rhinestone buckles, and white stockings and slippers, while even the attendants were dressed in white."

This is one of the extremes of social conditions. There is another extreme, the striking multitudes of the laboring people. The one is an extreme of gaiety, of merriment, of beauty, of pleasure; the other extreme is mixed with scenes of violence, of suffering, of need.

There come to us the words of the prophet, Amos, whom the Lord sent to reprove Israel when it had gone to the extreme of luxurious living coupled with oppression of the poor, "And I will smite the winter house with the summer house; and the houses of ivory shall perish, and the great houses shall have an end, saith the Lord."

WHAT HAS THIS TO DO WITH OUR SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON?

It shows conditions in the world that are the opposite of what would exist, if men were possessed of the true spirit of humility.

People in the world are seeking to lift themselves up into what are considered the higher circles by means of wealth, but Jesus has defined to us what greatness is as God esteems it. He says the truly great humble themselves to serve others, and Paul has written of Jesus in the Philippian letter that, though he was equal with God in heaven, he made himself of no reputation when he came to earth and took upon him the form of a servant and was made in the likeness of men.

He took upon him the form of a servant; he ministered to the poorest and humblest of earth's needy children, and he taught his disciples that he who would be greatest among them should be the servant of all.

It is this example and teaching we should follow, and not the example of those devotees of pleasure who clothe themselves in purple and fine linen and fare sumptuously every day, hardly knowing that the poor cry for necessities, so far is want removed from their sphere of existence.

THE SERVANT OF ALL.

Jesus taught his disciples that they should minister to others, that they should seek to serve others, even as the Son of Man came to earth to minister to others and to give his life a ransom for many.

In our lesson text to-day, the necessity of humility in the wife and mother is especially alluded to by Peter. She is called upon by her position in the family to minister to others, to do a service peculiarly her own. She is intended to be, not the drudge for all, but the benefactor of all her household. If her duties sometimes press hard, there may be comfort for her in the thought that she is permitted to walk in the steps of Him who came to earth, not to be ministered unto but to minister to others.

Verse 7 of the lesson text contains still another thought, that the husband should give honor to his wife. In God's justice, he that humbleth himself shall be exalted, and in the home, she who humbles herself to serve her household faithfully, should receive from her husband and children the honor due her, and it should be manifested in loving support and helpfulness afforded her in her labors.

Teachers, in connection with this lesson, teach the boys and girls to honor the mother who renders them such cheerful service; remind them of their duties to her.

ANNA SALYARDS.

Wanted.

We want a complete list of the names and addresses of district Sunday-school association officers. This we need prior to sending out some work we have prepared. Will district superintendents and secretaries please furnish me with such list of your district officers? Will you kindly see that this is attended to carefully and promptly?

Hopefully,

T. A. HOUGAS, General Superintendent,

HENDERSON, Iowa, August 15, 1904.

Letter Department.

BARRACKVILLE, West Virginia, April 29, 1904.

MR. D. L. SHINN, Adamston, West Virginia;

Dear Sir: On looking over my papers yesterday on my arrival home from a stay lasting from February 22, I was delighted to find three copies of your Watchman. Had I been connected editorially with any religious paper, I would have complied with your request made long ago for exchange. Not being thus connected, I inclose you twenty-five cents for the Watchman. If either issue had a report of the Washburn debate in it, please send me a copy.

With mingled emotions I read your dissertation on "truth and fact." Have just read what Mr. Campbell said, and am seriously questioning in my mind whether it would not be a violation of the injunction in Matthew 7:6 for me to attempt to set you right on a matter so plain that the merest tyro in the use of our English and in logic should make no mistake; and, without an "ax to grind," a theory to support, a mistake of a stubborn heart to maintain and defend, could not make. You are maliciously trying to make out that Mr. Campbell teaches there is no God—that "God is a myth,"—as you once wrote to me. Indeed, Mr. Shinn, you ought to be ashamed of yourself and hide your face in shame. You do not need to be told that Mr. Campbell was discussing the difference between truth and fact in the abstract. If you can not see this, I can no longer censure you for believing the low-grade, clumsy, illiterate, self-contradictory, God-dishonoring, Bible-contradictory, plagiaristic, silly Book of Mormon. Crabb in his matchless work on "English Synonyms," says: "Circumstance, in Latin circumstantia, from circum and sto, signifies what stands about a thing or belongs to it as its accident; incident signifies the same as before; fact, in Latin factum, participle of facio, to do, signifies the thing done." "Circumstance is a general term; incident and fact are species of circumstances. Incident is what happens; fact is what is done."

He does not give "truth" as a synonym of "fact." Mr. Campbell says: "Fact means something done. The term deed, so common in the reign of James I, is equivalent to our term fact. Truth and fact, though often confounded, are not the same. All facts are truths, but all truths are not facts. That God exists is a truth, but not a fact; that he created the heavens and the earth is a truth and a fact." Is Mr. Campbell in this arguing against the idea that there is a God—that "God is a myth?" Or, is he not simply showing the difference in the use of the words? I read the C. S. about 1880—24 years ago—when I had only heard of Mormons, and when I never had a thought that anyone could mistake Mr. Campbell's meaning, and tyro as I was in language, I could see that he was discovering the difference between the two words. Mr. Campbell further says: "The simple agreement of the terms of our proposition with the subject of that proposition, or the representation of anything as it exists, is a truth. But something must be done or effected before we have a fact." Facts are things, not words—something done or effected. When I or any one else tells what was done or effected, we state facts and tell the truth. When I say there is such a man as D. L. Shinn, I tell a truth, not a fact. But when I say that Mr. Shinn published the Watchman, I state a fact and tell a truth. Truth is the agreement of the words used or idea expressed thereby to the thing spoken of, while a fact is the thing done or accomplished. To say there is a God, is to tell a truth, not a fact. There is nothing done—nothing referred to as done or effected. To say that God created the heavens and the earth, is to tell the truth and state a fact—is to tell of something having been done or effected. To say that Joseph Smith was a miserable impostor and the Book of Mormon a low-grade fraud, is to state or tell a truth that I am willing to undertake to prove to Mr. D. L. Shinn or to any man of the Mormon faith in the West Virginia District, allowing him half the time to reply to and destroy my proof. To say that the snakes constructed themselves into a fence and herded the cattle, and that the war between Shiz and Coriantumr was so great and lasting that there were none left to bury the dead, yet the stink from the dead strewed over the whole face of the land arose and greatly troubled the people of the land," is to state neither a truth nor a fact, but a lie out of the whole cloth—it is to "tie the rent on the end of a pole thereof" and run through the civilized world, allowing the sensible "people to read what is written on the rent," viz: that the believer of such silly nonsense is not capable of grasping the difference between truth and fact, or of comprehending Mr. Campbell's language on any subject, saying nothing of the truths and facts taught in the Bible.

Indeed, indeed, Mr. Shinn, I am amazed at you! For G. H. Godbey to be so indiscriminating and illogical; or for Robert M. Elvin, the "nobody" of the Washburn debate, to be so, and argue as you do, would not surprise me. But for you to, does actually amaze me.

But I must desist from further comment or my homeopathic counter-irritant may become an allopathic dose and produce an unpleasant blister. I don't know but what you need blistering real severely,—perhaps it would increase your "gumption."

Amazed but in kindness I remain, Yours for the old paths,

IRA C. MOORE.

BARRACKSVILLE, West Virginia.

Editors Herald: Elder Ira C. Moore of "the Church of Christ"—the disciples of A. Campbell—writes us an article for the Watchman in April, 1904. On June 6, he writes again to inquire about his first letter and "the quarter" inclosed to pay for the Watchman. The money was returned to him with information that the Watchman had been temporarily suspended. I will here give you an extract from his last letter and the whole of the first one with some comments, asking you to print the letter as we think it would be interesting to the readers of the HERALD.

"Did you see Mr. Elvin's acrobatic performance on the kingdom question? At one time he said the kingdom or government had not apostatized. Seeing this was as fatal as strychnine would be to a sheep-killing dog, he made the grand tumble, and declared that the kingdom or government established by Christ and his apostles on Pentecost and adjacent days completely apostatized.

"You see this was necessary in order to get a place and work for old imposter Josy." (Extract from second letter.)

This sickly little piece is simply a characteristic misrepresentation. Bro. Elvin never said that the kingdom or government of God had apostatized.

In the foregoing letter you will notice Mr. Moore chides us for our criticism in the Watchman on Mr. Campbell's discussion of the difference between the words truth and fact, (Christian System, p. 110,) in the characteristic style of the said evangelist, viz:

"I am seriously questioning in my mind whether it would not be a violation of the injunction in Matthew 7:6, for me to attempt to set you right," etc.

Of this let me say, that Mr. Moore is mistaken in the injunction. The one just preceding is the one he is likely to violate. He could not violate the one he refers to (Matthew 7:6) because he has nothing too holy for dogs nor any pearls to cast before swine. But he can, and does violate the injunction in Matthew 7:5, which speaks as follows: "Thou hypocrite! first cast out the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." Again, Mr. Moore charges us with "maliciously trying to make out that Mr. Campbell teaches there is no God," etc.

Now this, excepting the word maliciously, comes near being a true bill. Mr. Campbell reasons God out of the church, sets up human power for the work of the ministry, and "builds upon the Bible and nothing but the Bible." He denies the right, or the need of the Holy Ghost in the church, the necessity for living, inspired apostles and prophets, thus setting aside God and his word. God hath set in the church "first apostles, secondarily prophets," etc. (1 Corinthians 12:28.) Setting up a man of sin in the place of God! Then to cap the climax he declares: "That God exists is not a fact." Mr. Moore's excuse for him is that "he was discussing the words truth and fact in the abstract." But if this be true, why did he not keep out of theology? How can one teach the real existence of God if it is not a fact; and if it be a truth that the Father manifested himself through "the person of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit," as Mr. Campbell says in his theology, why will he yet deny his real existence? I am here told that I ought to "hide my face in shame" because I quote his words, and teach that he meant what he said!

Our dictionaries define the word fact as follows: "Anything that is, or happens, an act, deed, truth, reality." (See the Standard.) If in the discussion of these words we wish to illustrate from our theology let us say truthfully, Anything that is, is a fact. God is, and therefore "that God exists is a truth and a fact." If the Scriptures be true it is not only a revealed and a demonstrated fact that God exists, but that he dwells in his church—"ye are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." (Ephesians 2:22.) But Campbellism would have a church without God, and leave God without a church in the world. They do not permit God to add anything to the New Testament—(the book so called); they say, "Nothing ought to be received into the faith or worship of the church or be made a term of communion among Christians that is not as old as the New Testament." (American Church History, p. 51, vol. 12, by B. B. Tyler and others.)

Not knowing what the Lord may yet reveal unto his people they have decided not to receive it,—the canon is full and closed for ever. Mr. Campbell, however, is at liberty to "discover new truth" and make whatever improvement he might think necessary in the Christian System, and even translate, revise, and correctly interpret "The Living Oracles."

D. L. SHINN.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, August 14, 1904.

Editors Herald: I would like to tell how the Second Kansas City branch is moving along, not having seen anything in your paper for over a year concerning this place. The work is moving forward under the leadership of President J. J. Emmett. The house of worship is just a little humble place, but always kept neat and clean, and every one is welcome. Some times when the Lord does so wonderfully bless us we almost think it is about the grandest place we ever attended meeting in.

I will try to tell you how the weeks are occupied. Monday the Aid Society meets to do what work their hands find to do, and the money they earn goes to help defray the expenses of the church. In the evening is a study of the Book of Mormon. Some of the Saints meet at the home of Sr. Van Brunt to study with her as she is not able to get out to the Religio. Tuesday evening is the home class of the Religio. Wednesday afternoon is another home class at Sr. Grainger's. She also is unable to get out in the evening on account of her little ones. Sr. Maggie Cleveland is our teacher; but this is not all she has to do through the week. Her time is occupied every day. Wednesday evening, prayer-meetings. Thursday night is teachers' meeting at Bro. Brown's, and at Sr. Van Brunt's home class of the Sunday-school work. Also preaching services at Priest Kenworthy's. Friday night is the night for Religio, and we are certainly proud of our young people. Saturday, and evening, in all that is left out, so you see we are kept very busy. The sisters have an extra prayer-meeting every month, and very often family or private prayer-meetings from house to house, and the Lord often blesses us with the gifts of the gospel, in tongues and prophecy, and often some of our sick are healed through the diligence in fasting and prayer, and I often think it is no wonder. Visiting Saints make the remark that they enjoy the Spirit so much, and they feel it rest upon them as soon as they step through the door of the church. Last Sunday was sacrament day. The little church was pretty full, the services continuing two hours.

There are over a hundred members in the branch and quite often we find our little church almost too small to accommodate the congregations. The choir is improving under the leadership of their new chorister. Sometimes our hearts are made to rejoice by some of the household of faith from afar, remembering us, and taking a little time and coming to visit us; and then when they are gone we feel sad and we are made to wish for the time to come when we, if faithful, will meet to part no more.

Your sister in Christ,

CARRIE BARRON.

2034 Belleview Avenue.

WOODBINE, Iowa.

Dear Herald: It is some time since I appeared in your pages. Perhaps you may think I am spiritually dead, but I am glad to say that I am trying to keep alive and rendering what aid I can to others. I can not boast of accomplishing much, in adding numbers to the church, but I keep on telling the gospel story in my humble way, and thus prepare the way for others to water the seed I have sown. The man that does the watering is generally the only one seen in the work; his name stands out in bold relief, while those who have grubbed up the roots, plowed the ground, and largely sown the seed, are seldom seen on the records as being effective workers in the vineyard, but I rejoice to know that there are other records which bear on their pages truthful reports of the toil and care endured and obstacles overcome by those who have been pioneers, and who have made possible the success of their fellow laborers who have followed after. Thus "we are laborers together in God's vineyard," and each faithful laborer will receive his penny, though no earthly trumpeter sounds his praises in earthly records.

I attended the conference of the Pottawattamie District in the latter part of May, and was pleased to note the improvements made and the increase in numbers, and, which is better, spirituality.

I also assisted in a two-day meeting in Carson, E. Luff and M. M. Turpen rendering very effective aid. The Saints from Farm Creek and Henderson helped by their presence and spiritual influence to make the meetings a success. The Crescent Saints desired my labors, and manifested their appreciation by their kindness, as was the case wherever I went. I was pleased to know that my labors for more than forty years among the Western Iowa Saints were appreciated.

Humanly speaking, it was sad to realize that so many who had stood shoulder to shoulder with me in the past, had been called to the beyond, but from a higher standpoint it is joyous to know that they are enjoying the rest prepared for the faithful, and if I can only prove myself worthy to share with them "that beloved peace," I shall be content. It was good to see unmistakable evidences of the firm faith of those who remain, and also the faith of the younger generation. It is evident that God is preparing others to take the places of the weary and worn ones "who have borne the heat and the burden of the day" thus far.

I also attended the Little Sioux District conference, and found there was life in both the officials and membership. Here, as everywhere else, could be seen the younger elements in the front of the battle, male and female, contributing to the success of the work in the various departments thereof.

When Bro. Sidney Pitt was nominated for district president, there were those who testified to me that the Holy Spirit bore witness to the wisdom of the choice, and I trust that his efforts may be so blessed as to demonstrate that fact. If wisdom and knowledge keep pace with our zeal then our labors will indeed be successful for good.

I was kindly invited to visit the Pisgah Saints, which I did and broke to them the bread of life also. There are many faithful Saints there, and some of recent birth whose zeal seems on the wane, but they have a faithful shepherd who is diligent in feeding the sheep and the lambs and looking after the lame and the halters by the wayside. It is one eternal truth, "Ye can not serve God and mammon."

While I was there our inveterate foe, but unconscious helper, Clark Braden, was at Moorhead raving like a mad bull in a net, trying to tear down the rock of eternal truth. After I had finished my four efforts at Pisgah, I went to see how far this Goliath had succeeded in destroying the foundations of our cause. I found those alert watchmen, Smith and McDowell, right on the walls of our citadel, the foundation unmoved, not a stone misplaced, and the standard of truth waving proudly as ever. Poor Braden, he had been butting his head against an immovable rock; and in his rage he had driven the Saints closer together, unconsciously aiding to strengthen the cause he aimed to destroy, and thus, "God causes the wrath of men to praise him."

I received an invitation from the Des Moines Saints to attend their reunion. I did so, and was made welcome to the hospitality of the Saints. No doubt you will have an account of the doings there. I was pleased to find quite an intelligent, energetic class of workers, male and female, in the various departments of church work, and it seemed to me that there was material there by which a great work can be accomplished if their efforts are wisely directed. The attendance was not large. Farmers were busy who lived out in various parts of the district, and many of the citizens could only attend in the evenings; but we had good meetings, and the prayer-meetings were especially good. Excellent order prevailed. If there was any disorder, I neither saw nor heard of it. The secret was, the Saints presided over themselves, individually, and those who were placed in charge had simply to take the lead, and all worked harmoniously. There were some instances of sickness, whether from excessive heat, or the water, I know not. The writer had to lose one appointment, from temporary sickness. I was kindly treated by all, and was enabled to meet a few dear old friends and also a good many new ones.

I hope to stand, having on the whole armor of God, and fighting the good fight of faith until the victory is won; then the prize is sure.

CHARLES DERRY.

HELENA, Montana, August 12, 1904.

Editors Herald: In July, while the thermometer was hovering up in the nineties in Utah, the heat intense, I concluded to take a kind of jaunt trip up into Idaho and Montana into a more congenial clime and get more closely in touch with friends and conditions in those parts, while Brn. Chase, Hansen, and Swensen were active about Salt Lake City and Provo. Saturday, the 23d, Bro. Swensen saw me safely on the train in Salt Lake City, and evening found me in Blackfoot, Idaho, in company with Bro. S. D. Condit, where we held a meeting on the street, a small audience of listeners being present. We had neither organ, clarinet, drum, or fife to call the people together, so had to be content to talk to those who chanced to come our way. After service we rode three miles out to Sr. Christensen's where we rested for the night. Sr. Christensen had the misfortune of losing her husband, but she is acting very wisely in keeping her family of boys and girls together and successfully running the ranch—a very worthy sister.

Next morning being Sunday, in company with Sr. Christensen and little ones, we drove out ten miles to Bro. L. P. Larsen's, where there is a new settlement being made, held a meeting, talked up the Sunday-school interest, arranged for future meetings, and returned to Sr. Christensen's for the night.

On Monday, Bro. Condit conveyed me back to Blackfoot just in time to take the morning train, and at four o'clock in the afternoon I was at Butte, Montana, where I tarried twenty-four hours, stopping with Bro. and Sr. Schraeder, Lund, Haskill, and Burmese. Also called on Sr. Dempsey and son and Bro. and Sr. Babcock, who are interested in the faith, but just now are deprived of regular church privileges.

On Wednesday I arrived at Helena, and it has been my good fortune to remain here and at contiguous places for nearly a fortnight, most of the time out at Unionville, four miles from the city, up in the mountains, climbing rugged heights, breathing the mountain air, meeting with friends and making acquaintances. In the meantime have held meeting nearly every evening and twice on Sundays, with attendance fair for the place. James E. joined me here at Helena, and occupied in his turn in preaching at Unionville with good effect.

We were aided in our meetings by Miss Frederika Scene and Miss Lucie Carpenter, who were kind enough to conduct the song service at all of our meetings. We reciprocated by aiding them in the Sunday-school which they are in charge of in Unionville. They are bright and promising young ladies, of excellent families, and we appreciated their aid and sympathy manifest for the success of our meetings, and trust that some day they, with others, may see the beauty and truth in the latter-day message known and felt by earnest Saints. We met with a kind reception from a number of the villages, made friends, and feel encouraged in the thought that good will result from our efforts at Unionville. We are under obligations to Messrs. Loggerquist and Longstaff for material assistance. Thanks.

It was through the solicitation and manipulation of our excellent Sr. Benedict that the opportunity was afforded us to occupy at Unionville. We have been pleasantly entertained at her mountain home, where she is spending the summer away from the city with her three little buds of promise, Esther, Platt, and John. Unionville is an old-time mining camp, located in a gulch from which it is said millions were taken from the native soil at one time, now being transformed as a place for summer outings where people resort to spend the warm days out from the city. We had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Benedict here for the first time; his business takes him from home much of the time, belongs to no church, but possesses manhood and good sense sufficient to permit his wife to follow her convictions in the choice and practice of her religion, and knowing something of the intrinsic worth of Effie's faith, encourages her in working for its success. Mr. Fargerson, a friend of the family, is very companionable.

We had the pleasure also of meeting again Sr. Mary H. Raymond in East Helena, at whose home I stayed twenty-nine years ago, in Draperville, Utah, and baptized some of her family in the Jordan. Sr. Raymond has passed through much for her religious belief, is seventy-three years of age, but moves about the house with an ease and sprightliness of a well-preserved woman of fifty, one of those kind of well-grounded Saints that keep the gospel flag floating to the breeze all the time. We also spent a pleasant hour at the home of Srs. Smith and Stranahan, long-time members of the church. Was entertained at Mr. and Mrs. Wiseman's, young couple who but recently ventured out on the stormy sea of matrimonial life. They appear to be very happy in their new relations. Mrs. Wiseman was Miss Minnie Kelley, one time identified with the young people of Lamoni. Also had the pleasure of meeting again Mr. and Mrs. Hawk and family, worthy and interesting folks. Spent a few days at the home of Mr. Wilson, business man, one-time resident of Omaha. Mr. Wilson is one of those rounded-out big men every way you take him, avoirdupois, head, and heart. Sr. Wilson is a Saint, and knows just how to be one, and likes to be it. Harry and Forest contribute to the interest of the home.

So our visit to Helena has been both profitable and pleasant, the credit being largely due to our energetic and gospel-loving Sr. Benedict. May she live many years to use her gifts in the interest of the cause. Some have been encouraged and comforted, some set thinking and reading who knew nothing of our faith, and we are improved physically; so go on in the conflict.
WM. H. KELLEY.

FAIRMOUNT, Colorado, August 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: It is just two months since I went to Trinidad to relieve Bro. Frank Curtis from tent-work that he might go over to Durango where they were calling for him. Since that time I have done the best I could in the interest of the mission and directing the missionaries in this field, all of whom have done well. The labor of Bro. E. F. Shupe, of Denver, has been appreciated by me and by all, or nearly so, where he has preached. Business has called him home.

I have baptized eight at Trinidad during the two months and leave a good interest in the hearts of some three or four more there and in a mining camp about fifteen miles north. I have also secured the promise of two good horses and twenty-five dollars for the purpose of putting on the road the gospel wagon that I spoke of in a former letter. Now, dear Saints, we need this kind of accommodation. I know that if the good Saints of the district and mission were just out in the field a while they would see the need of this, and such a response would be made that before the close of this season the needed outfit would materialize. Now at our conference of September 3 and 4 to be held at Colorado Springs this matter will be up for consideration, and the offer that we now have and the need of such a work will be put into a definite shape for immediate action. So come, send in your offerings in promise only, now, but let us know at that conference just what you can do. This twenty-five dollars has been promised by one sister alone. Do not let the sisters beat you in this.

Elder J. F. Petre, of this place, has done a most acceptable work during the last three months. In bonds,
J. W. MORGAN.

ALTON, Missouri, August 7, 1904.

Dear Herald: Having arrived home a few days ago from a missionary trip, will endeavor to tell how I enjoyed my trip. It was great pleasure to travel and to hear the gospel preached as I am isolated and hear no preaching only as I go with Bro. Davis in his field of labor. We opened up a new place where we held forth for one week. No Saints living there, we were cared for by those who were non-Christians. At the close of the meeting we received three subscriptions, six months each, for the Ensign. We did not want for food or shelter. Several are interested, although the Baptists closed their doors against us, and we occupied an old store-building with seats made of rough lumber. The house was full most all the time, the speaker had good liberty, and the best of attention was given him. Many friends were made for the cause. One lady came out to hear polygamy, so she said, and when meeting was over she turned to another lady and said, "They told me if I would come I would hear polygamy, and he never said anything about it." How little some people know about the word of God. Another thing that took place was a lecture on Mormonism. We were classed with the Utah people in the morning, yet a different meaning was held out in the afternoon, which was much enjoyed. Reverend Mackmurtory is feeling bad over the attempt to explode Mormonism.

Ever praying for the upbuilding of Zion, I am,
Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. JAMES T. DAVIS.

FALL RIVER, Massachusetts, August 19, 1904.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines from this part of the world as to what we have been and are doing. Since the General Conference, things have been very quiet here in the church work, until we heard that President R. C. Evans was to pay us a visit. Then the Religio social committee, knowing that Bro. R. C. is honorary president of the Canadian Religio societies, decided that a reception be given to him. This was arranged for July 21, the day he arrived. The basement of the church was very prettily and tastefully decorated with bunting and flags of the two nations intertwined.

Our superintendent being a Canadian, did his very best and was surely well rewarded for his trouble, for the school certainly looked beautiful. National songs and addresses, and a miscellaneous concert, with refreshments served afterwards, filled up the evening. It was a delightful time. We not only enjoyed ourselves sociably but learned many things from our Canadian brother that will encourage us on in this great Religio work.

Bro. Evans preached six sermons for us to a full house each time.

His visit has benefited not only the Saints but has done more to awaken the indifferent and outsider than anything that has happened hitherto.

He left here on Thursday, July 28, to go to the tent at Shawmut, ten miles from here, preaching there three nights. On Saturday night a party of Saints rode out in a barge to the tent to attend his service and at its close brought him back with them to preach for us Sunday morning. It was a delightful moonlight night and the ride was made most pleasant by singing and telling of stories.

Bro. Evans left us Sunday afternoon for Providence, Rhode Island, then on to Attleboro and Boston. The Fall River people began to depart for the reunion grounds at Silver Lake as early as Tuesday, August 2, so by August 5, opening day of reunion, there was quite a gathering already on hand. Shall not tell particulars of reunion, since the corresponding editor of the HERALD was in attendance, and you may get items from him, but will say, that Fall River has every cause to rejoice at the results of this gathering, for out of the twenty baptized, seven will be members of our branch, making a gain of thirty-two since last district conference. Besides this, there seems to have been, through the influence and advice of our Brn. F. M. Smith and R. C. Evans, an awakening, especially among the young, that we hope foretells a bright and happy future for us. So we are encouraged to again put forth our efforts to accomplish good and help in the work of redemption.

May we now work together so that by the time of next reunion we shall have "come up higher" not in numbers alone, but in unity as well. This work is surely "Onward and upward" with no such word as fail. Let us then be watchful, looking only for the bright things, but always willing to do our little part, and with God's help, we are sure of success. Wishing God's blessing for all, I am, 1439 Pleasant Street.

Your sister,

SUSIE E. GILBERT.

DES MOINES, Iowa, August 12, 1904.

Dear Herald: The district reunion has been in session here during the week and closes its session Sunday the 14th. The order of service each day has been about as usual, except that Sunday-school or Religio services have been held at fifteen minutes to eleven in the forenoon, instead of preaching. The prayer-meetings have been well attended by the Saints present. The Sunday-school and Religio work has been under the supervision of J. A. Gunsolley. The regular lessons in the Quarterlies have been studied, the different departments of these auxiliaries have been considered and institute work taken up.

The preaching has been by the different elders present, F. A. Smith of the Twelve has spoken several times, and G. H. Hilliard of the Bishopric has spoken to the Saints on the temporal law and also delivered some gospel sermons that were strong and convincing to those not of our faith who were present.

The camp-ground is beautifully located and the camping season has been fully enjoyed by those present. No serious sickness has occurred during the week.

Bro. Charles Derry of the patriarch's quorum has been present during the week and a number have received their blessings and this has been a source of strength and comfort to the Saints.

In bonds,

A. A. REAMS.

HITEMAN, Iowa, August 21, 1904.

Editors Herald: After reading so many letters in the columns of your paper, and so many of them saying that they rejoice in reading of the progress the church is making everywhere, it may be of interest to some to know how the work is progressing in this part of the Lord's vineyard. The Hiteman Branch claims a membership of about fifty. The chief occupation is coal-mining, and every one knows that coal-miners as a rule are a drifting people going from one place to another. The Saints have followed suit by moving here and there until the total membership has been cut down about half. But of those that are left I am glad to say that the majority are faithful and zealous workers for the gospel's sake, trying to live up to the light which they have received, as nearly as circumstances will allow them to. This branch, as near as I can learn, is twelve years old, and, no doubt after much sacrifice, it has succeeded in building a nice little house of worship. But trials, troubles, and difficulties have been many. And even Clark Braden with his misrepresentations has tried to destroy God's work, which he has said shall stand for ever. Much prejudice has been aroused and thus it was hard to get many to come out to our church; but God has promised us that he will come to our rescue in every time of need. And who should come along but our wide-awake missionary, W. H. Kephart, with his strong street-preaching voice which people say can be heard a mile away?

The average attendance was from three to four hundred, with the best order and attention I have witnessed for street preaching. Often I could look down the sidewalks, where they were sitting, and see them nod their heads at certain remarks made as if to say "That is all right." But one thing I am sorry for, and that is that those who are not associated with any religious society have made the remark that he has given them a club to fight the other denominations. But the brother's work did not end there, as his efforts were crowned by leading nine into the liquid grave, four of them being children. Many I am sure are near the kingdom. The husband of one of the sisters who was baptized expressed himself by saying that he would himself take the step shortly, as soon as he feels he can do right and live his religion.

Services are held regularly, Sunday-school at ten, and preaching at eleven in the forenoon and eight in the evening. Missionaries are always made welcome and so the work grows and prospers in spite of adverse surroundings.

May God bless all of his Saints to accomplish good for his cause.

Your brother,

HARRY KOZMAN.

RED RIVER, New Mexico, August 16, 1904.

Editors Herald: The people of Red River seem to be honest, zealous of good works, striving to serve the Master. The writer was invited to attend Sunday-school and class-meeting, which they have every Sunday evening. The first night I was present I told of the blessings which came to those who were earnestly seeking after truth, and when I had finished was called on to lead next Sunday night. I chose for the subject "The kingdom of God, and the church of Christ in the ninth hour." Explained what the church consisted of: officers, gifts, principles, etc., and how the church fled into the wilderness. Then they wanted me to lead the following Sunday night. I took up the same subject in the eleventh hour, telling how the church came out of the wilderness, having the same officers, gifts, principles, as it had when it departed into the wilderness. At the close I told them I had some tracts, which I took from my pocket, ("The Latter Day Saints, who are they?" and "Why I became a Latter Day Saint.") They were all interested and wanted tracts. I was sorry that I did not have quite enough to go around. When about to leave the building one said, "I don't believe in Joseph Smith, for my mother when a girl knew Joseph well. The way he got up the Book of Mormon was this: A Methodist minister wrote a book and after getting tired of it threw it in the waste basket, and Joseph Smith took it out, and with Oliver Cowdery fixed up what is now called the Book of Mormon." I wish I had a few extra books to loan, as the people are somewhat interested. One man after reading Bro. William's tract said he had no idea he could get so much information from that small tract. I think there is now a good opening here for an elder.

Yours in the truth,

A. L. HARTLEY.

NEWARK, South Dakota, August 22, 1904.

Editors Herald: As it has been a long time since anything has appeared in your columns from this field will say that the missionaries, Bro. Eli Hayer and the writer, are in the field endeavoring to do what we can, though at this particular time of the year when farmers are busy harvesting and threshing it is impossible to get a hearing in the country, and in town the people seem to be so taken up with the pleasures of the world they have no time to hear the gospel. I have recently made efforts at Forman, North Dakota, and Millbank, South Dakota, but there would be a lawn social one evening and a rowing party the next, and some other kind of entertainment the next, so after making three efforts at Forman with no attendance was obliged to quit. I have spent a good deal of time at this place since coming into the field. Quite a number of Saints living here. Two have been added to their number by baptism since I came, and I hope to see others who are now investigating take steps toward obedience when I return later in the fall. I should like very much to see a branch organization effected here. The Saints have a nice Sunday-school and all appear to be interested in it. May it prosper and accomplish much good.

At last accounts from Bro. Hayer he was at Brookings; had published bills and advertised meetings in the court-room but attendance was very light. Truly it begins to appear that people are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

After services last night I bade good-bye to the noble band of Saints here, expecting to start for home to-day to spend a few days during the busiest part of the season. While I may spend a little time outside my appointed field, I hope to be able to accomplish more in the Master's service than I could by staying here.

In gospel bonds,

E. F. ROBERTSON.

THORNTON, Rhode Island, August 20, 1904.

Editors Herald: The Massachusetts reunion is a thing of the past, but the spiritual force and food still remains with us. The preaching was excellent, the prayer-meetings helpful and spiritual, the social relationship on the camp-ground all that could be asked for. Bro. Fred M. Smith proved himself to be eminently fitted for the great burden placed upon him by God and the church; while R. C. was in his happiest mood, and in humbleness, with power, held the large audiences under the magic of the gospel theme. There was a large increase in the attendance over last year, and the committee deserve much credit for their efficiency. We can preach and pray, and sing the songs of Moses and the Lamb, but it is evident when we are arrayed against each other as cities and field, that we can not play ball quite as smoothly as they do in the National League. However, there is the divine possibility held out to us by the Bible, (as interpreted by some of the brethren,) of becoming absolutely perfect, in spiritual things of course, so we have hope that sometime, somewhere, we may be able to climb the sunlit ladder of pure desire, and knock at the door of perfection. Whether this state will come about before next reunion or not of course is an open question. Yesterday, with a number of Saints the writer attended the funeral of Bro. Ralph Abercrombie who was struck with a rock from a blast and died soon after. He was well and favorably known to all of the Saints in this section of the country. Bro. Frank M. Sheehy preached the funeral sermon and left directly afterwards for Maine. The strike of the mill operatives in Fall River is still on, affecting many of the Saints in that city. The opening of the new church in New Bedford will take place to-morrow. The writer is requested to preach the sermon.

Hopefully,

GEO. W. ROBLEY.

AKIN, Illinois, August 16, 1904.

Editors Herald: The reunion of the Southeastern Illinois District is past. It was a spiritual feast to those who had the privilege of attending it.

The Sunday-school and Religio were not forgotten. There were two sessions of each, conducted by Elder F. L. Sawley.

Two gave their names for baptism at the close of the reunion. The prayer-meetings were marked with a goodly degree of the Spirit, which was encouraging to the Saints.

Having been transferred from Southern Kansas to this district I arrived in Springerton, Monday evening, August 1.

At present I am associated with C. J. Spurlock, with whom I expect to travel for a time. So far I am well pleased with my new field. I hope to prove faithful and do what I can for the cause of Christ.

Your brother,

AMOS T. HIGDON.

Independence Items.

On Wednesday, the 17th inst. while the busy Willing Helpers were plying their needles in the interest of church work, and the Daughters of Zion were in session, discussing subjects of practical value to the mothers,—those presented in the Home Column of the HERALD, a gentleman called at the church to make a few inquiries concerning the old Latter Day Saint settlers here, and he had with him a list of names, some of which we had noticed on the pages of volume 1 Church History,—about one hundred and fifty. The caller was Mr. John Shannon, brother of Joseph Shannon, a wellknown figure in Kansas City political circles. Mr. Shannon's series of newspaper articles, which he is about to write for the Kansas City Star will no doubt be interesting to the Saints, as he intends writing on the subject of the early days of Jackson County.

He has formerly been connected with the city treasurer's office, but has taken up newspaper work, and his intention is to obtain true statements if possible and make a credible record, leaving out the prejudices and mistakes of the historical outputs of the past.

The first name on Mr. Shannon's list of old settlers in this town which he obtained at the court-house was Roland Flournoy, his locating here dating in 1828, seven years after Missouri was admitted into the Union, and five years prior to "the quiet removal" of the Blackhawks, Creeks, and Cherokees to lands beyond the Mississippi and of the Saints to "No Man's Land." The true, ancient records of both Indians and Saints have by the popular historian been repudiated; but we hope Mr. Shannon's future history of this country will contain the discovery that they were, though at different periods, some of the real pioneers of a higher civilization here.

An interesting coincidence is found in testimonies of our Church History and in those of some of the Saints who lived in those disastrous times.

From the History we learn the Western Messenger published the causes of the persecutions to be beside "blind prejudice," "multiplied suspicions," etc., that the Saints were "withal prosperous." Mr. Shannon was of the opinion that the sole object of our enemies was to gain possession of lands and property and on examining abstracts he found breaks in the transfers which seem unexplainable; but he thought also that the slavery question might have been the source of enmity between the people. This idea is not borne out by history or living witnesses. While suffering imprisonment and also on other occasions Prophet Joseph wrote to the Saints many stirring words of counsel, and it would be a serious wrong inflicted on the founder of this work to forget or withhold them.

"We ought," said he "to be aware of those prejudices which are so congenial to human nature, against our neighbors, friends, and brethren, of the world, who choose to differ with us in opinion, and in matters of faith."

And as early as 1832 the prospectus of the Evening and Morning Star stated that the purpose of the Saints was "to promulgate religious and moral principles, and not as has been asserted, to interfere with political conditions, or agitate political issues."

Among the Saints referred to above, now living, is our Sr. Anna C. Smith of Lamoni, Iowa, (residing with her son Apostle Heman C. Smith,) who is the senior daughter of Elder Lyman Wight, whose interesting career in these troublous times is well known to the student of history.

In company with several of the older Saints we enjoyed a pleasant visit with this genial, aged sister, now in her eightieth year, at her son's residence, Elder H. O. Smith's, and received from her valuable testimony concerning what to some are unsettled questions of the past.

In reference to interfering with the slave-holding power she said: "In those days we were much less friendly to the idea of receiving any of the colored race among our number than we are now." And as to corroborative historical witness she seemed to take pride in stating: "My father would not take money for his inheritance, and would not sell the lands which he had purchased, and I believe the family must still be in rightful possession of land near the temple lot."

It seemed to be a dearly cherished thought to her that she could locate even now, had she the opportunity, some of the loved places that were familiar to her in her early life.

History tells us her father staunchly opposed the selling of the Saints' lands and he thought it to be a sinful act. We read, page 141, volume 2 concerning Elder Wight's accusation against two of the brethren for selling their land in Jackson County. They had "flatly denied the faith," he said, by so doing.

His daughter, like many others who are still living, passed through an almost unceasing flow of the waters of adversity; but the faithful friendship of the Saints and the Spirit and blessing of the gospel have been hers to enjoy, and in the dear memory of the loved and devoted ones of the past she can say,

"Short tho' bitter was their pain, Everlasting is their joy."

On Sunday, the 21st, the weather was warm and showery toward evening when there were a very few out to hear Elder Hulmes who preached for the benefit of the young people.

The morning service was in charge of Elder H. O. Smith who instructed the Saints concerning the gift of the Holy Spirit and its effect in changing the real character of the one who receives it, taking for his text a reading from Ephesians, chapter 4.

The afternoon meeting was conducted by Brn. White, Resch and Morgan. Four children were blessed by Elders Hulmes and Alfred White, and one little one objected to the ordinance as strenuously as did Alexes, a day or two ago, the autocrat of all the Russians, who rebelled when it came to immersion, showing its humanity by a lusty yell that shook the corridors.

This evening the Saints will again "coöperate with the church people" here by our choir rendering the Baptist friends assistance in a concert to be held at their chapel, and so we continue in the work.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Extracts from Letters.

Elder J. A. Gunsolley, writing from Stewartsville, Missouri, August 8, says: "The Stewartsville reunion is in full blast, with about thirty tents on the ground, occupied, and some more to be occupied. A good interest is manifested in the meetings. The attendance at evening sessions is somewhere from four to five hundred. A big rain Sunday afternoon caused some discomfiture, but all were feeling bright, though chilly, Monday morning. The people are not tired yet of these reunions in Northern Missouri."

Sr. Florence Toovey, Weyburn, Assainiboia, North West Territory, writes: "Bro. J. L. Mortimer is with us and is preaching nightly, and Satan is raging. We now have fourteen members. One year ago four, of our own family, were all the Saints that lived in this place. We have worked faithfully for the Master, and are thankful that his servants were directed to come here. We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints."

Hughes was recommended to Bishop Kelley for appointment. Court appointed at last conference to inquire into charges against John Hagan reported finding the charges not sustained. Report accepted. Committee appointed to audit bishop's agent's account reported an error of eighty cents in favor of the agent. Matter of raising amount apportioned to the district on Graceland debt taken up and quite a liberal subscription made to be paid September 1. Adjourned to meet with the Oak Grove Branch in the light of the moon, February, 1905. H. F. Durfy, secretary.

Leeds.—The semiannual conference was held at Wortley on July 9 and 10, 1904. Elder Thomas Taylor presided. A letter from Bishop Kelley was read reporting the work of himself and Apostle Griffiths as delegates of the Leeds District to the last General Conference. Report accepted. Ministerial reports: Elders T. Taylor, F. J. Pierce, J. T. Girdham, T. J. Sheldon, T. Paxton, W. R. Roberts, Priest F. Harper. The report of financial auditing committee showed a balance in hand of £3. 14s. 2½d. The committee of the Leeds District Missionary Fund reported showing a balance of £1d. 3s. 11½d. Their report was audited and found correct. Resolved that the best thanks be given the Burley Branch for their kindness in handling over their copy of the Book of Mormon which Elder T. Taylor presented to the Leeds library committee and further that when the committee accepted it, another copy be bought for the Burley Branch to replace it. Elder Taylor explained that there was a demand for the book which had arisen out of outdoor preaching and that there was not a copy in the Leeds public libraries. Resolved that the missionaries of the Leeds District confer together with reference to the class of literature they need and that they shall state to the tract committee their decision and further that 30s. be placed in the hands of the committee to carry out the recommendations of the missionaries in this respect. Resolved that all former resolutions respecting the place of holding conferences be rescinded and that the place of holding future conferences be left entirely in the hands of the district presidency. Resolved that one hundred hymn booklets be purchased for conference use. Resolved that the church authorities be sustained. The district president announced that the business session of next conference would be held at the Burley Branch room. On Sunday, July 10, the usual services were held. W. R. Roberts, secretary, 9 Alcester Terrace, Shepherds Lane, Leeds.

Seattle and British Columbia.—First semiannual conference convened with the Seattle Branch August 6 and 7, G. T. Griffiths chosen to preside, O. B. Thomas and William Johnson assisting. Branches reporting: Seattle 50, Roslyn 39, Chilliwack 39, Tacoma 24, and New Westminster 17. No report from Castle-rock. Bishop's agent's report: On hand last report, $489.44; receipts, $94.00; expenditures, $565.44. Reports of ministry: O. B. Thomas, T. J. Bell, W. S. Gladwin, William Johnson, D. W. Davis, John Holmes, Frank Holmes; Priests Irvin F. Mengel, Frederick W. Holman, William E. Clark; Teachers A. W. Gorbitt and J. S. Rainey; Deacons Thomas Holmes and J. N. Sanders. The following officers were elected: T. J. Bell, president; William Johnson, vice-president; Frederick W. Holman, secretary and treasurer. Frank Holmes of Roslyn, Washington, sustained as Bishop's agent. A district Sunday-school association was organized, making choice of O. B. Thomas, superintendent; William E. Clark, assistant superintendent; Sr. Bertha E. McCulloch secretary, and Sr. Lorena Van Eaton treasurer. Conference adjourned to meet at Seattle the first Saturday and Sunday in February, 1905. Frederick W. Holman secretary, 1202½ Seventh Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Conference Notices.

The Northern Wisconsin District conference will convene with the Searles Prairie Branch, near Necedah, Wisconsin, October 15 and 16, 1904, 10.30, a. m. Please send all reports to district secretary Ed Moore, Necedah, Wisconsin, R. F. D. We hope to see a good attendance from all parts of the district, as well as of the missionary force. A. V. Northern Wisconsin District association will convene with Searles Prairie school near Necedah, Wisconsin, Monday, October 17. We hope to hear good reports from each school and see delegates also and make this a profitable session. Our district superintendent intends to be present. Rillie Moore secretary.

The Northeastern Illinois, Religio association will convene at Plano, at 3.30 p. m., September 23, 1904. We hope to have a large attendance and see a renewed interest in this part of the Lord's work. Locals will please send in reports to the undersigned not later than September 10. Election of officers at this convention. Clare A. Sherman, president, 1494 Van Buren Street, Chicago.

Officers and members of the Philadelphia District and of the New York District Sunday-school association, will please take notice that in accordance with the action of the New York District Sunday-school association, February 22, 1904, and of the Philadelphia District Sunday-school association, May 7-8, 1904, the superintendants of these districts mutually call a joint convention of the New York and of the Philadelphia District associations to convene in the Saints' church, corner Eastern Parkway Boulevard and Prospect Place, Brooklyn, New York, on Monday September 5, 1904, at 11 a. m. for the purpose of formally effecting the consolidation of the two districts, to be hereafter known as the New York and Philadelphia District Sunday-school association; and for election of officers. All members of the two districts should make a special effort to be present. Those who are in attendance at the joint convention will be considered as delegates of their respective districts, as now constituted, having full power to cast the full district vote, and in case of a division, the majority and minority vote. Ogden T. Christy, superintendent Philadelphia District association. George H. Box, superintendent New York District association.

Died.

NORTON.—Jeremiah B., at his home at Jonesport, Maine, August 20, 1904, after a lingering illness of several months' duration. Deceased was born April 4, 1828, and resided at Jonesport all his life. He was baptized July 6, 1873. He was a veteran of the Civil War and a member of the G. A. R. His faith and hope was a constant and abiding comfort to his soul. He was well and favorably known as a citizen and much respected by all his acquaintances. The funeral service was held at his late residence, August 22, conducted by Elder W. E. LaRue.

Cox.—At her home in Wilburton, Indian Territory, Sr. Mary M. Cox, August 5, 1904. She was born November 17, 1889, near Lydia, Red River County, Texas. Was baptized and confirmed a member of the church, August 5, 1903. Funeral service by E. A. Erwin, at the Saints' church, in the presence of a large crowd which came to pay their last tribute to such a noble little girl. Her home was made sad while paradise received a noble soul.

BARTHOLOMEW.—George Albert Bartholomew was born February 9, 1869, at Greensburg, Indiana. After a long spell of sickness with dropsy, he fell asleep in Jesus August 18, 1904, at his home in Moorhead, Iowa. During his illness he said, up to the last, God's will be done. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Elder J. F. Mintun. He was loved by all who knew him. He leaves a loving wife and five darling children to mourn their loss. Funeral at the Methodist Episcopal church at Moorhead, Iowa, August 19, in charge of Mark Jenson. Sermon by Elder W. A. Smith.

BALLANTYNE.—Henry A. Ballantyne was born July 29, 1871, at Little Sioux, Iowa. He was a member of the Moorhead Branch. He was kind, and loved by all that knew him. United in marriage with Dora J. Coffman, June 7, 1890. To this union were born five children. He was a loving husband and a kind father. He fell asleep in Christ August 20, 1904. Funeral services held in the Moorhead church. Sermon by Elder W. A. Smith.

JONES.—Sr. Elizabeth Jones died at Canton, Illinois, August 14, 1904. She was born at Llangadock, Glamorganshire, South Wales, November 1, 1826, and was baptized at Blue Ridge, near St. Louis, Missouri, 1864. In her death, the branch loses one of the noblest women this world ever produced, beloved by all who knew her. She leaves six children, nine grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren, to lament her departure; but she has entered the rest prepared for the people of God. Funeral services conducted by Elder John S. Patterson, assisted by Elder T. F. Stafford.

MOORE.—On August 15, 1904, Sr. Lettice Moore passed peacefully away at her home in Oakland, California, at the ripe age of 80 years, 10 months, 3 days. She was born in England, came to America in 1850, crossed the plains to Utah in 1852, came to California in 1859. Fifty years of her life were spent as an earnest Latter Day Saint. She leaves a record of a life well spent. She was buried at Lockeford, where rests her husband. Many relatives and friends mourn the departure of a dear one. Funeral sermon from Job 5: 26, by J. M. Terry. Services also at the grave. She labored hard, but now rests in peace. An aged sister and five children remain.

Mother's safe at home beyond life's cares:
Where angels dwell in robes of white,
Where every soul hath its requite,
Within the book of love and light,
Her name is written there.

WILLE.—Sr. Delia A. Wille, wife of Bro. F. W. Wille, passed away at her home in Oakland, California, August 14, 1904, at the age of seventy years. She came to America from London, England, in 1853, and to California, 1861. She was baptized into the church in 1891. Funeral service at the church in Oakland. Sermon by J. M. Terry, assisted by J. M. Cockerton from Psalm 146: 5, 6. Interment in Mountain View Cemetery. Thus the boatman passes, with his well-laden craft, from the shores of time to the shores of eternity.

Addresses.

I have changed my home address from Alton, Missouri, to West Plains, Missouri. Elder James T. Davis.

Prayer Union.

Bro. C. M. and Sr. Mary Fulks request the prayers of Saints and the Prayer Union that both may regain health and strength.

Sr. Dora Brooks, Bond, Mississippi, asks the Prayer Union to pray for the recovery of her little daughter and that she may regain her speech.

Daughters of Zion.

Having been appointed by the stake historian to prepare the history of the Daughters of Zion to date, also having in charge the books of the general recording secretary, it is necessary that I should receive at once the reports which were due me six months ago, namely: Reports of general officers, and of local societies not reported since March 1903, also names of all members of disorganized societies wishing to be identified with the general society and to be enrolled as scattered members.

Your sister, in this glorious work,
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI. MRS. ABBIE A. HORTON.

The Movement Toward Honesty.

William Allen White analyzes some of the opposition to the reelection of President Roosevelt in an article on the Postal Frauds in the September McClure's. Roosevelt's "unreasonableness" in dealing with crimes against the state, his prosecution of thieves and lawbreakers, has organized against him dishonest forces in high circles and in low circles. The appearance of one honest man in a group of thieves produces the instant crystallization of the group.

Mr. White finds a homely and practical meaning in Roosevelt's action in the post-office business, namely, that when a thief steals from the American government, if there is a law to punish him he must prepare for trial, and if guilty go to jail. That is why Roosevelt is regarded as an unsafe man in certain business circles, where business methods and traditions license acts which, scraped off the veneer of high finance, are mere stealing.

The encouraging conclusion is reached by Mr. White that "the movement toward common, old-fashioned honesty seems to be a general movement. It seems to be springing from the people, and to be making itself manifest through men like Roosevelt and Bristow and Folk and Jerome and the Chicago crowd headed by 'Billy' Kent, and hundreds of lesser lights known to the people of every community; this movement is using the party system to its ends with much practical skill; and also the movement towards political decency is clearly growing strong in the great newspapers and magazines of the country."

Memories of the Confederacy.

One of the most interesting contributions yet made to the literature of the Civil War appears in the September McClure's in an article entitled "Memories of the beginning and end of the Southern Confederacy," being unpublished chapters of history from the reminiscences of Louise Wigfall Wright, daughter of Louis T. Wigfall, senator from Texas to the United States Senate, and later to the Confederate Senate and also an officer on the staff of Jefferson Davis. The article consists of a series of letters written at the outbreak and close of the war, which reflect with remarkable accuracy and interest the thought and spirit of the times. They reveal the inside life of the Southern people and reflect all the tragedy of high hope and bitter disappointment in their dear lost cause.

The letters are written by members of the Wigfall family and others high in the councils of the Confederacy, so speak with authority. A number of interesting contemporary portraits as well as drawings, by W. R. Leigh, illustrate the article.

The publishers of "I wait alone for you," the most popular, sympathetic ballad of the day, by the late W. Wesley Wells, have sent us a copy of his last song, "My Mercedes" which has just been published and which he composed a few weeks before his death. We predict for it a larger sale than "I wait alone for you." It is simply beautiful, easy to play, melodious, and a perfect adaptation of exquisite words to a beautiful melody. The publishers, J. W. Jenkins' Sons of Kansas City, Missouri, are making a special price of twenty-five cents per copy. To our readers who have not already gotten "I wait alone for you," they will send both for fifty cents.

The one eternal lesson for us all is how better we can live.—Henry Drummond.

DAVID H. SMITH.

David H. Smith was born November 17, 1844, at Nauvoo, Illinois, and died at Eligin, Illinois, August 29, 1904, aged fifty-nine years, nine months, and twelve days.

He was baptized at Montrose, Iowa, October 27, 1861, by Elder John Shippy. He was ordained to the office of Priest March 21, 1863, at Nauvoo, by Joseph Smith, A. H. Smith, and Benjamin Austin; and on October 8, 1863, was ordained an elder, by Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. In 1871 he was chosen president of the Second Quorum of Elders with Phineas Cadwell as counselor. He was chosen second counselor to the President of the church, and was ordained as such at Plano, Illinois, April 10, 1873, by J. W. Briggs, I. L. Rogers, Isaac Sheen, and E. C. Briggs. He was released from the responsibility of this office by command of God and action of the church April 11, 1885.

He was sent by the church on a mission to Utah and the Pacific Slope twice; the first time in 1869, when he and his brother Alexander H. Smith went together; and the second time in 1872. Upon his return from the last-named mission he was taken sick, recovered partially, so far as bodily health was concerned, but gave evidence of disturbed mentality. He made his home for a time with his brother Alexander near Lamoni, Iowa, and in the fall of 1876 was taken to Plano, Illinois, by his brother Joseph, and was cared for by him until his mental derangement became so marked that it was deemed dangerous to the family, and by notification of the citizens making demand that he be restrained, his brother Joseph was compelled to take him to the Hospital for the Insane located at Eligin, Illinois. This he did January 19, 1877, upon an inquiry at Yorkville, the county seat of Kendall County, by a proper jury and by order of commitment from the county authorities.

From the date of his being taken to the hospital up to his death there was no marked improvement in his mental condition, but so far as the work in this life was concerned, he has during the years of his confinement been as one removed from its activities by a fate more cruel than death. What were the causes leading to such a condition will probably not be known until the great judgment day.

He was joined in marriage to Clara C., daughter of

"If we only had the time" is our frequent thought. But we do have time. The Indian chief was correct when he said, "We have all the time there is." We have all the time there is and we have time enough for the doing of whatever we have to do. It is not our lack of time, but our neglect of time or our failure to use time wisely, that is the cause of trouble. Let us value and rightly use the time we have and neither we nor others shall have cause for regret.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

William Hartshorn, at Sandwich, Illinois, May 10, 1870. He lived for a time at Plano and at Nauvoo, Illinois. At the last-named place a son, Elbert A., was born March 8, 1871, and with his mother survives him.

Bro. David's body was brought from Elgin by his son and Bro. R. S. Salyards, reaching Lamoni on Wednesday, August 31, and was buried from the Saints' church September 1, services in charge of Bro. John Smith, prayer by Henry A. Stebbins, sermon by Bishop E. L. Kelley, prayer at the grave by Bro. R. S. Salyards. The attendance was large, the ceremonies peaceful and beautiful. The spirit attending seemed to indicate that whatever the life of our brother had been for thirty years, he was accepted by the Master.

Thus ends the somewhat checkered and troubled life of one of earth's fairest and noblest sons. Through a period of thirty years, half of his lifetime, his mentalities were under a cloud, from what cause or causes it is not our province to say, not being able to estimate the unseen forces which may have been at work and which were successful in darkening the life of our brother. Great hopes were entertained by many that sooner or later there would be an interposition of divine providence which would release Bro. David from his trouble and permit him to assume the position in the church for which he was so eminently qualified. This hope was not shared by his brother, President Smith, who seemed to foresee but one ending, which would be the final release of death. We trust that the assurance given to the church that he was in the Lord's hands and that the Lord would do his will in due time, will be accepted by the Saints in good faith; and while the church may mourn the loss of so brilliant a man, it will be with chastened hearts and unshaken faith that we go forward.

A CORRECTION.

Bro. John W. Rushton, writing from Plymouth, England, August 23, kindly corrects our error in regard to Admiral Nelson made by us in our reference to his being in the fight against the Spanish Armada. We give the correction below and thank Bro. John for giving it notice.

The incident to which we referred occurred in the harbor of Copenhagen, Denmark, April 2, 1801. Sir Hyde Parker was in command, Nelson was vice-admiral. "The action began about ten o'clock in the forenoon, April 2, and lasted five hours. About one o'clock Sir Hyde Parker made the signal for discontinuing. Nelson ordered it to be acknowledged, but, putting the glass to his blind eye, exclaimed: 'I really don't see the signal. Keep nine for closer battle still flying. That's the way I answer such signals. Nail nine to the mast.'"—American Encyclopedia, vol. 12, p. 221.

I notice HERALD of July 13, 1904, reports you as saying that "Nelson fought his great fight with the Spanish Armada," etc. Pardon me for reminding you that "the Spanish Armada" was fitted out by Philip I of Spain, consisting of one hundred and thirty battle-ships and thirty thousand soldiers, in 1588. During the reign of Queen Elizabeth was met just out of Plymouth Harbor by one hundred and forty English under Lords Howard, Drake, and Grobisher and severely defeated.

Nelson lived and died in the reign of George III, 1761-1820. The sea-fights of his time were against the Danish and the French and the united French and Spanish fleets. The principal sea-fights were the battle of the Nile, 1798, when Nelson gained a complete victory over the French fleet. The battle of Copenhagen was in 1801. The Danish fleet was destroyed. In 1805 Nelson met the united forces of France and Spain off Cape Trafalgar, and completely reduced the French navy for many years. In this exploit Nelson was killed.

MUSIC AND GRACELAND COLLEGE.

There is no branch of man's skill that has more effect upon the human emotions than the art of music. Of recent years, music, both vocal and instrumental, has been so intimately and pleasantly associated with our church and Sabbath-school and other services that every Saint should be interested in learning of any movement that promises improvement and added pleasure along this line. Hence, it is with satisfaction that we note the good fortune of Graceland College in securing an instructor in vocal and instrumental music, who possesses musical qualifications of the greatest brilliancy.

Miss Stemmer, Bachelor of Music, the new professor of vocal and instrumental music at Graceland College, is enthusiastically praised and recommended by one of the most famous conservatories of the land, the Chicago Musical College. Professor Stemmer holds the teacher's certificate, the full diploma, and the coveted post-graduate diploma of that institution. She has studied under the most celebrated musicians of the country—Von Schiller and Carl Ziegfeld in piano, Falls and Barowski in theory, Mrs. Fox and others in vocal. Professor Stemmer has also had considerable experience in teaching.

Our young people, who are seriously studying music, will certainly have no need to go to the larger cities when they can find right in the heart of the church instruction of such high standard. We expect to find an exceptional music enrollment at Graceland this fall. It goes without saying that every music student should take additional courses in languages, history, or literature so as to base the special skill and knowledge acquired upon a broad foundation of culture.

THE GRAVE OF ADAM.

Bro. Robert Nelson, of Guilford, Missouri, sends us the following clipping from the St. Joseph, Missouri, News and Press, for August 26, 1904:

ADAM'S GRAVE LOCATED BY JOSEPH SMITH IN A REVELATION AND HOW HE CAME TO FIND THE SITE.

Five miles to the northeast of Gallatin, Missouri, says a correspondent of the Evansville Courier, on a high knoll that commands a view of the surrounding country and the sweep of the Grand river, is the grave of Adam, the first settler of the universe. Joseph Smith, prophet of the Mormon church, discovered the site and proclaimed the fact. He got his information, he claimed, in a special revelation from on high. So, the authenticity of the revelation being admitted, the chain of testimony is complete.

The place is visited every year by many Mormon pilgrims and curiosity seekers. It would have been difficult to find a more fitting place for the burial place of our first parents. The adjacent landscape in every direction presents a scene of rare beauty. The hillock that is said to be crowned as to its summit with the grave is terraced, seemingly by nature, perhaps by man, the gradations being regular from the water line of the Grand River to the crest, one hundred and fifty feet above. On the top there is an indentation, showing where relic-hunting vandals have dug into the earth.

When the Mormons were driven out of Jackson County in the '30s, they scattered to Daviess, Ray, Carroll, Clay and Caldwell counties. It was intended that the settlement of Far West in Caldwell County should be the seat of the religion, but the Daviess County contingent, enamored of the fruitful soil and delicious climate, refused to be transplanted. They were getting along very well here, thank you, and determined to remain. The head of the church decided that there must be a central spot, a local governing head in Daviess County. So Joseph Smith had a revelation. Whenever an emergency arose, Joe was always delivered of a revelation.

In his vision he was commanded to take his compass and Jacob staff; to start from the city of Far West and travel due north until he came to "a river, an ancient river, but now called the Grand"; to descend this river to where it was crossed by the center line running north and south through Daviess County; to follow this center line for a certain number of furlongs, when he would come to a point of upland. On this point he would find the resting-place of Father Adam. "For here he died and was gathered to his Father, and here shalt thou locate the stake to Zion and call the name thereof 'Adam-on-di-Amon,' meaning 'the grave of the first man, Adam.'"

Joseph found the place and, when he had done so, he called the people together and made known his revelation. The spot was made consecrate and on it was laid off a town, "Adam-on-di-Amon," which, for the sake of brevity, was shortened to "Di-Amon."

What became of Eve no one in Daviess County pretends to have knowledge. A diligent search has failed to reveal the whereabouts of her resting-place. The exact spot might have been pointed out had not Joseph been run out of Daviess County before he ran out of revelations.

The world's people seem to get a great amount of amusement, wise and otherwise, out of "Mormonism" and every item of peculiarity in idea, theory, tradition, statement, or conduct and act, of which the current history or rumor has taken any notice. The foregoing is one of them.

It is unfortunate for the benefit of the researchers into the things of the past that the authorities of the state of Missouri suffered the Saints to be driven from the State. Had they remained, as suggested by the News and Press, the bones of Mother Eve might have been found, or located. For if Joseph Smith was the "knave," "fool," "mountebank," "adventurer," "swindler," that the pious enemies of his work have alleged that he was, he might have found the grave of Eve as well as Adam, and put their bones on exhibition to enrich himself. Why not?

It is almost impossible to resist the temptation to laugh when such stories are told of the Saints, and one can not refrain from the comment of Puck, "Lord, what fools these mortals be!"

We are not under obligation to affirm that Adam-ondi-ahman, or Diahmon, is the place where Adam was buried. It is something not susceptible of proof, nor does the fact that men say, "Nonsense, we don't believe any such foolishness," disprove the assertion if it is made. It is a matter that does not affect our work or faith in the gospel message. We need neither assert belief in the traditionary fable, nor deny connection with it in any form. Personally the Editor of HERALD has no belief to express in regard to it further that there is a place in Missouri which the Saints settled in the stormy times and called it Adam-ondi-ahman. It may have been believed then that it was the spot where Adam was buried; the belief carries no prestige with it now.

It is also said that the site of the Garden of Eden was found and located in Missouri; but of that we neither know nor care—our business lies in different directions than standing in support of possible traditional beliefs for which we have no legitimate proofs. Let them pass.

 QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is it necessary under the law of the church for a vote of the branch to permit any one who has been baptized by the presiding elder of the branch, or by his consent, and who is well known to the branch and a permanent resident of the same, to become a member of the branch?

There is no rule of the general church in regard to it. The branches regulate the manner of receiving their members. The Lamoni Branch holds that all persons baptized in the branch by or with the knowledge and consent of branch officers are members of right of the branch and their names are entered of record without a vote. If they live away from the branch certificates of baptism are given them and they are instructed to join the branch nearest or most convenient to their place of residence. We believe this is the rule observed by most all the branches and is quite consistent and correct action.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. F. A. Smith wrote from Tabor, Iowa, August 26: "The reunion is in session. The grounds are in fine condition, and the little white city soon assumed the usual size and we entered into the work of the reunion in dead earnest. Our Sunday was spoiled to some extent by a shower of rain about noon, but the rest of the time has been fine. Health of the camp good, and the meetings are well attended and a good spiritual time is being enjoyed. Of the ministry present are the following: F. A. Smith, M. M. Turpen, G. H. Hilliard, James Caffall, J. W. Waldsmith, Charles Fry, J. M. Stubbart. Brn. D. R. Chambers and S. W. L. Scott, of the missionary force to this district, are not present on account of sickness, and the Saints are disappointed in not having Bro. Henry Kemp with them; this brother has endeared himself to the Saints of this field by his wise, patient, and faithful labors with them for so many long years, until they miss him as they would a father. It is a pleasure to follow such a laborer who has labored so wisely and so well that the effect of his labor and the memory of his name must remain for good long after he has left that field. Brn. Leeka, Badham, Kemp, Gaylord, Comstock, and many others of the younger ones are here and are doing their share to make the reunion a success. One feature is particularly noticeable and that is the unity manifest in the working of the committee, and the cheerfulness with which every one seems to take hold and help in the work. The auxiliary societies were given the fifteen minutes to eleven morning hour for their work for the first four days of the week, and they were used with profit to all, it seems; at least general satisfaction has been expressed at the time given and the work done so far as I have been able to learn.

"Bro. Caffall seems to be enjoying himself very well; is some better than he has been in health. He gave us a very good talk yesterday."

Bro. F. M. Smith wrote from Little Deer Isle, Maine, August 23, 1904: "Bro. Sheehy and I reached Little Deer Isle on Saturday morning, on the steamer Frank Jones. Conference of the Western Maine District convened at two o'clock in the afternoon. A goodly number were in attendance, and the business passed off pleasantly. We held preaching services on Saturday night, three times on Sunday, and last night. Bro. R. W. Farrell will continue the meetings the rest of the week. We go to-day to Mountainville, where we have appointments for to-morrow night."

He wrote from Mountainville the 24th: "We hold meeting here to-night, and move on to-morrow to Stonington. Stonington is the present-day name of what was in former days Green's Landing. We will hold meetings there over Sunday, then return to Boston, then I will go on to Fayette City, Pennsylvania, to be present at conference of Kirtland District, September 2 and 3. Following that will be with Bro. Greene at several conferences in West Virginia, Pennsylvania, etc. Am well, and hope we are doing good."

Sr. Jennie H. Holt, writing from Leroy, Ohio, asks the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her oldest son, Charles, who was hurt by being run over by a wagon several years ago, spinal injury resulting. She earnestly desires the Saints to pray for him.

The record of marital mistakes in Indiana presents a very bad showing. The Bureau of Statistics presents the following from the Chicago Tribune, August 19, 1904, respecting marriage and divorce in the State since 1899: "In 1899 there were 24,824 marriages in Indiana and 3,444 divorces; in 1900, 27,460 marriages and 3,557 divorces; in 1901, 26,851 marriages and 3,585 divorces; in 1902, 26,914 marriages and 3,552 divorces; and in 1903, 28,005 marriages and 3,763 divorces. There are in Indiana seven statutory causes for divorce, and in 1903 cruel treatment led, with 1,070 cases. There were 1,019 cases of abandonment and consequent failure to provide, and 401 cases where infidelity was alleged in divorce complaints. The allegation of drunkenness comes next with 344 cases."

Bro. William H. Garrett, editor of the Ensign, was in Lamoni, Thursday, attending funeral services of Bro. David Smith.

The reunion of the Lamoni Stake, now being held at Davis City, is a pronounced success. A large attendance was had on Sunday (3d) and the order is good under charge of Bro. Lorenzo Hayer. Attendance at the meetings in Lamoni was light and Bro. David Krahl was very strenuous in an attempt to keep up choir service.

The Milwaukee Sentinel of August 29 gave an account of the reunion at Madison, Wisconsin, and commented favorably on the appearance of the Saints and their camp, and reference to the Smoot case and the Utah church was made. The Madison Democrat also filled a column with a report of this reunion under the heading, "Anti-Mormons hold meetings," giving a correct account of church conditions, church differences, and a short biography of Bro. J. H. Lake.

We have received also the Bedford Record, Brooklyn, New York, for September 2, in which we note a synopsis of Bro. F. G. Pitt's sermon of the preceding day, Sunday.

THE CHURCH EXISTENT.—NO. 1.

SERMON BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
AUGUST 21, 1904.

The text for the morning's service will be found in the first chapter of Paul's letter to the Ephesians, verses 9 to 11 inclusive:

Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: That in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him: in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will.

The thought that I desire to call your attention to is found couched in the term, "That in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth." I do not intend to attempt a learned disquisition upon the question as to whether or not this period in which we live is to be characterized as the dispensation of the fullness of times. But we are all interested in the subject of the gathering; and it would appear from this that the apostle was impressed also that at some time after his day there would be a gathering, and that it would be of such a character that it would be notable; and it would be in the fullness of times.

This text has been abused, like a great many others of the New Testament Scriptures,—used in our own time. Possibly it has, to some extent, been abused by our own people. It does not signify that all things are to be gathered into Jesus; but that all things in him are to be gathered together in one. The question with us is the process by which this gathering in one is either presaged or accomplished. That is the intention of the morning's lesson.

I turn over to the the sixteenth chapter of Matthew, and there I find a statement made by the Master that he would build his church. The all-important question with us is whether or not that work has been done, is being done, or will be done. And, if so, when and how.

It is a fact that when he came he called certain persons and gave them authority to preach, and told them what to preach, and it presaged and included what we commonly understand to be the kingdom of God. And in several places in the New Testament Scriptures, both by himself and by the apostles, the church is reckoned as the kingdom, and the gospel which is the gospel of the church, the gospel of Christ, is also the gospel of the kingdom, which Jesus preached.

Every time that we think of it, it is an astonishing thing that in our own time ignorant men should have risen up, and should have, either directly or indirectly, assailed the learning of men and established institutions long based and built, and insist that there was a restoration prefigured and taking place. The more I think of it the more I am astounded, not only at the apparent hardihood, (for in a spiritual sense it was a hardihood,) but the peculiar success that attended it. For not long after it had been promulgated, or to use a forcible expression, had been broached in the world, it gathered to itself bright minds, learned men, equally learned with those outside,—and some of the most persistent spirits that the world has ever seen since the days of the apostles.

One chief characteristic of these later men was this: They simply said to themselves and all others, There is no necessity for us to maintain the errors of our fathers; no reason why we should be burdened by those things which are erroneous because our forefathers were burdened by them. And they used a very homely phrase to mark and emphasize this: Our fathers may have carried their grist of grain to the mill in one end of the sack, balancing it by a stone in the other; and if they did, it is no reason why we should perpetuate the same foolish measure. They presumed also upon what the Apostle Paul had left upon record, that by the foolishness of preaching God proposed to save them that believe. And so they set to preaching. They assumed another thing; and it is that which I want to call your attention especially to this morning; and that is that the church must necessarily exist upon the earth, if it was intended as a beneficial matter, instrumental in the saving of the human family, or any portion of it; and that it existed authoritatively. What I mean by that, is that the church existed, and there were accredited ministers who were authorized to represent it, chosen of Christ, and accepted by his people.

Every master of theology, every preacher, every exhorter, every local elder, every church officer of every denomination, (I am not going to except any,) virtually tells the people that the church with which he is allied is the church of Christ, in full existent power for the accomplishment of the purpose for which he instituted his church, while as a minister he labored, and as the Savior of mankind he instituted the work. One of the differences between some of these men and ourselves is this: they either tacitly make the statement, or allow men to infer it, that they are legal representatives of that institution, while we tell the people simply and freely, We are authorized to represent it.

There are three ways in which this church may have become existent at this present time, and that men may have been authorized to represent it, empowered of Christ, and that power recognized of the people who are constituted members of the church. One of these is by

CONTINUOUS REPRESENTATION

from the apostolic church until now. That involves the proposition that there is a body authoritatively representing Jesus Christ as the mediator of the new covenant, who are diligently engaged in preaching the theories found in the New Testament as the last will and testament of Christ; and that they can successfully trace their origin back to Christ Jesus. Some have essayed to say they can trace farther back than that, even to John the Baptist; but they must at least trace it back to Jesus. Whether man can do this or not is questionable. And these first elders seriously questioned that; and those of us who have followed in their footsteps are continuing to question it.

We have in Missouri, (and that is a representative State, and we are sufficiently close to Missouri to take advantage of that proposition that when we make an inquiry we give as a reason that we are from Missouri, and reasons must be given us; if we are expected to believe there must be some reason presented to us by which our belief shall be challenged,)—in that State there is a representative body calling itself the Church of Christ. And I once heard one of its members say that “while other churches were of the church of Christ, the church which I represent is preëminently the Church of Christ.” One half of the membership of this body ostensibly think that they can trace the origin of their church back to John the Baptist, or to primitive Christianity, the church under the apostles. The other half, led by some of their preachers, the best and most learned men, assert that any man who believes he can trace the origin of that church back to Christ is a fool. That is a quarrel between themselves. I have nothing to say about it. But it simply represents existent things, and the difficulties of men who think they can fully trace back into the primitive church, the doctrines and theories and beliefs which they espouse, and the authority with which they administer. If it can be done, then there is the church of Christ beyond question. But until it is done, every inquiring man has a right to challenge it, and demand proofs for its assertion. And the avenues of research are so abundantly open now that if it could have been done, or if it can now be done, there are plenty of men who are continually asking the reason for existent things, to enter into these avenues, and to traverse the past back successfully, step by step, and determine the channels in which this wondrous continuance has been accomplished.

The second manner in which it may have been done is by

EVOLUTION.

It is a historical fact that somewhere about four hundred and seventy, not far from the five hundredth year, there was a sufficient departure from primitive methods to mark an almost new era, and to institute a period in which many of those characteristics which fundamentally belonged to the era of Christ and his immediate disciples had departed; and after which one of the most eloquent, and one of the sincerest of modern reformers distinctly affirms, “I doubt if any one of you hath ever seen a Christian.” And he gives as the reason that those things which marked the Christian church, fundamentally as I have stated, did not cease to exist because God was no longer willing to bless his people, but from the consideration that the Christian had turned heathen, and had turned his back upon his God.

Now, assuming that that was true, as stated by me, (for I have no specific desire this morning, nor shall I attempt, if I were able, to trace back to the apostasy, and give you all the characteristics of it as some of the brethren have done eloquently in the past, and may do hereafter,)—but simply take it as assumed, and that the subsequent efforts of the reformers were in favor of this idea of evolving from the existent chaos the things that should characterize the church of Christ and reinstate it as it once was, then I may make inquiry, Who, of all of them, has done this? There was a mighty quarrel between the old papal church, now recognized as the Roman church, representing itself in the western part, and the other in the eastern part; one having its seat at Rome, and the other at Constantinople; one presided over by a Pope, and the other by a Patriarch. And when the final conflict came between these, others intervening to prevent another conquest of the world in any sense of the word in subjection to the papal idea, won on the plains of battle at least a victory for free thought, and marked a continuation of two bodies of people from that time until now, one known as the Roman, and the other as the Greek church.

The reformers undertook to create out of this, in some form, a new church. And while we concede that it may have originated because of supposed corruption within the body politic of the church, against which the righteous minds of these men revolted, and they sought to purify, the fact remains the same that they protested against the innovancy of crime and corruption within the church, but not one of them, nor all of them put together, succeeded in producing through this principle of evolution that which can be clearly identified as the church which the Master said in the sixteenth chapter of Matthew, “I will build.”

Martin Luther protested against the idea of indulgence for sins peddled to the people. That is done yet in Rome. He built up a strong following; but in many respects the doctrines are the same. And had it not been for Melancthon and men like himself, the Luther movement would have gone under because of the peculiar excesses of those reformers, and only by the exercise of his strong common sense, aided and assisted by others, was this prevented.

We trace the matter along still farther—Calvin, Knox, and others; and while some of these may have introduced portions of the original belief, their organization, and many portions of that which they preached can not be identified as that of the New Testament gospel and philosophy. But we are in the midst of the blaze of light, and the illumination that has been going on for many, many years, in which there has been an incessant demand made by thinkers, from Erasmus clear down, to turn on the light, and if it could be by any possibility shown that these successive reformers had succeeded in reproducing, by the process of evolution, (though it may have been step by step, here a little and there a little,) the original church in its beauty of teaching and construction, then there is the church, the means of life and salvation intended by the Master when he said, "I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Many of those who oppose the Christ idea in religion, assume that hell has prevailed against the church of Christ, and that the Christ idea in the church has been a failure. It has been only a few days since I read a learned disquisition based upon that thought; that there must be something else that shall come that shall renew or revive the religious idea among the people, ere there can be a sufficient degree of unity brought to pass by which that idea may again become prevalent.

We, as a people, are fully and strongly in favor of the Christ idea; that that is the real and central basis upon which rests our entire hope of life and salvation; and we have accepted the church by which, and through which much of the salvation that comes to man can be obtained. That in it is offered an opportunity to attain unto the highest and the best of a spiritual character to which the human race may aspire, either in this life or the life which is to come. And if men ever succeed by evolution in reproducing that means, offering it to us as the arena in which we may fight out the conflict of good against evil, of right against wrong, the unseen forces of good on our part in favor, and the unseen forces of evil against us, that work around us, then that church, if it exists, ought to enlist our sympathy, and receive our active support.

Now, if there be anybody who may be hesitating upon the banks of unbelief, so far as this church is concerned, if there be anybody who may have gathered unto themselves the clouds of doubt and fear, let me ask them to take into consideration these two propositions. First, that there has been a succession, that it can be successfully traced; and that there can be now found a body known as the church of Christ existent in the same kind of sense that the church existed in the days of Christ and his immediate disciples, authoritatively ministering among men for the benefit and behoof of the children of men. And the other that it shall have been evolved by slow processes out of the chaos of the past,—the doctrine and philosophy, everything of that kind now existent by reason of this evolution. And just as surely as you exist, you will come to the conclusion that it does not exist through either of these sources. And I fancy that it will change your sentiment of doubt, possibly fear; and drive you to the proposition that you must necessarily accept some things by reason of the faith that is within you, though you may not, possibly, altogether fully understand them.

Now there is another manner or way in which this church may exist, and that is by

RESTORATION.

Restoration could not possibly come except by revelation. The word restoration means a recovery of that which has been lost sight of, that which has become covered, obscured, or in some sense lost to the family of men. The church being a divine institution at the start, it having been instituted by Jesus Christ for a specific purpose, if that purpose has not yet been fully conserved, then there must have been a mistake made by Jesus Christ, or he must have reserved unto himself the right at some time future from the time when the church became covered, obscured, and lost, to reproduce it, restore it. And he could not do it effectually by any possibility except it should be by revelation. And by this operation he could not only reinstate the church as a whole, but every peculiar doctrine attaching to it in the times when Jesus Christ and his immediate disciples preached, of which the apostle wrote that when man failed to find out God, he chose by the foolishness of preaching to save them that would believe.

I ask you this morning, Are you predisposed to believe? I ask you if you are prepared to admit the idea that God reserved to himself the right to reinstate, or restore that that should prove to be the means of life and salvation unto men, and do it in an authoritative way, so that when men claimed that they were in the church of Christ they might be prepared to show by precept and by example, by proofs absolutely irrefragable that the church was existent, authoritatively?

I have small patience with a man who allows a congregation to infer that he is called of Christ and authorized to minister in its rights, who when you ask him plainly the question, Has he been commissioned of Jesus Christ by revelation, says, No, there is no revelation. And when you ask him if the gospel was to be restored by the visitation of an angel, says, No, there are no angels. I think of the answer that was given by Bro. R. C. Evans to the man who challenged a representative of the church upon the idea that Joseph Smith received the ministration of the angel, when raising himself to his theological height, he says, "There are no angels. The idea of an angel revealing himself to Joseph Smith. Preposterous! Absurd! There are no such things as angels." Bro. Evans very coolly asked, when it came his turn, "What has become of the angels? I read in the Old Testament about them. I read in the New Testament something about them, and Christ said to one of his disciples, 'Put up thy sword. Know ye not that I could pray to my Father, and he would send me more than twelve legions of angels?'" And he remarked that a Roman legion at that time was something about six thousand men, and twelve legions, would be seventy-two thousand angels. Bro. Evans says, "I wonder what has become of these? Has there been an epidemic in heaven, and the angels all died off?" That was sufficient answer to the whole inquiry. But we who believe in the ministration of angels do not have to answer that proposition. When the question comes home to you, Are you in the church of Christ? you have the great guide which has been left, the charter of man's liberty, speaking in a spiritual sense, those things which marked the existence of the church at the time that Christ said, "I will build my church," when he said to his apostles, "Go ye into all the world," "As my Father hath sent me, so send I you." And this commission meant nothing more or less than the fact that as he had been sent as an authoritative representative from God on high, (his Father,) to preach the doctrine that he should be able to say "is not mine, but his that sent me"; so you whom I have chosen and sent out I send as he sent me, with authority to represent the doctrine of my Father, "and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

I once heard a reverend gentlemen make use of this expression: "If Christ meant what he said, then he is with men now." I answered, "Yes; but he is not with those who misrepresent him. He is with those who represent him faithfully; but is not with those who misrepresent him. For if he sent men out to misrepresent him, what guarantee have we that he is an unchangeable being?"

The fact that we can not trace in the world existent now, the church existing by virtue of the evolution out of the chaos of the past in a spiritual sense; the fact that we can not trace successfully back to the disciples and their church, is significant that if it exists at all in the world it must be by virtue of restoration. And we call it the restoration simply because that which has been restored was once in existence.

I turn to the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, and I find one of these apostles standing up to tell the people what they should do. A great many of you do not ask that question this morning, although it is persistently dinned into your ears what you ought to do as your personal duty with reference to the church, and your duty to God. But aside from exhorting you to prove yourselves to be upright and worthy citizens of the community in which you dwell, worthy representatives of the government in which you live, by virtue of which you have your political liberty; aside from exhorting you to prove yourselves honest, upright, courteous, and kind in disposition; aside from that I have no intention of exhorting you to any special personal duty.

But in this second chapter of Acts of the Apostles, men asked, "What shall we do?" Peter did not tell them what they should believe. I am not trying to tell you that. I am trying to tell you facts, existent things, and reason from them as to the position we may and should occupy in regard to this great church question.

"Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" They had been shown that they were in want. They had been moved as to the falsity of their position, as to the unsafety that surrounded them, as to the peculiar, shaken condition of the things upon which they had trusted. But he simply said to them, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

There is the secret of the whole process, of what God told these men, through Jesus Christ, to preach to the world. And at the close of the chapter is this historical fact:

And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles. And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.

Does such a condition of things as that exist to-day? Is there anywhere, in any place, a body of people, believers in God, believers in Jesus Christ, believers in those things which he commissioned his disciples to preach, believers in the continued existence of that by which men might reach unto the spiritual heights of everlasting life, filling those missions in this life, to be culminated by and by in all that pertains to the glories of the life to come? Is there such a condition of things to-day, existent? If there is then the Lord must be there, and he must be at work, "adding to the church such as should be saved." I would not dare to read that if I believed as some men do. I should feel my words coming back to me, as if they had been striking against an adamant wall. I could not use that expression if I did not forcibly believe, if my soul was not fully convinced that there is now existent, somewhere, by virtue of divine revelation from God, a body of people, constituting a church, having a constitution indorsed of the Almighty, characterized by doctrine, by philosophy, fortified by past history, and possessing in its official membership authority to represent Jesus Christ as he represented himself and as the disciples represented him. I would not dare to read that declaration if I did not fully believe in such a proposition as that.

Now, have you forgotten the text? It occurs in the first chapter of Ephesians, verses 9 to 11: "That in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him." You see I have worked right back to my text. There must be such a state of existent things in the world, now, prior to the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, in which there are at work the processes of unification bringing things in Christ into such condition that they may be gathered unto him, that there may be a unity, a oneness when he shall come.

On behalf of myself and my brethren; for them and for myself, I admit; nay, more, I concede; nay, more, I fully confess that Jesus hath come in the flesh. And for them and myself I confess still further, He will come again in the flesh when there shall be completed this great process of gathering. But he will not gather unto him those things which are not in him. But those things which are in him he will gather together. Those things which are outside of him must continue to be outside. Those things which may be in the body politic, which are not honest and upright, but which are corrupt, will be gathered out as tares, and they shall be gathered into bundles and burned. And they who shall be approved of him, members of his church, at the time that this great church shall be recognized before the Father who is in heaven, and he shall be able to say, These men, these women are mine. Thou gavest me them out of the world. They were not ashamed of me nor of my words while in the world. I am not ashamed to acknowledge before you and the angels that they were mine. Give unto them that which thou hast promised, everlasting life; that where I am, where you are, they may be also, evermore.

Is not such a condition of things as that worthy our attention? Is it not within easy reach to test and to test clearly by every one of us that there must be such a thing as the church of Christ upon the earth now, into which you and I, and all who will have everlasting life, may press, that we may have the help of the divine One to live lives of purity and uprightness and peace here, that we may reap the benefits of life everlasting,—joy and glory in the world to come?

Doctor J. M. Rice's series of investigations of educational results is continued in the July September Forum, to which he contributes a discussion of the question: "Why our improved educational machinery fails to yield a better product." He points out, step by step, how we have failed to take advantage of our opportunities to improve the educational product, and argues against the theory which bids us improve the machinery but beware of testing the results of its operation.

A SYMPOSIUM.

REPLY TO "WORD OF WISDOM AND MEAT QUESTION."

"Let us inquire diligently after the old paths." Yes that is what we want. Then let us turn to 1 Timothy 4: 1-3:

Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth.

In the Doctrine and Covenants we find similar statements:

And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made. And whoso forbiddeth to abstain from meats, that man should not eat the same, is not ordained of God; for, behold, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

We see the harmony there is in these two scriptures. Paul said that some would depart from the faith, commanding to abstain from meats, which God had created to be received with thanksgiving. And the Lord says that whoso forbiddeth that man should not eat the same is not ordained of God. Paul says further:

Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another. For meat destroy not the work of God. All things indeed are pure; but it is evil for that man who eateth with offense.—Romans 14: 19, 20. (Read the balance of the chapter.)

Let us reason a little further. When Jesus stood on the shore he inquired for meat; and he also dined with the disciples after he was risen. (See John 21; Luke 24.) "He said unto them, Have ye here any meat? And they gave him a piece of broiled fish, and of an honeycomb. And he took it, and did eat before them." Jesus, then, did eat meat after his resurrection. And before this "he called the multitude, and said unto them, Hear, and understand: not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man." (Matthew 15: 10, 11.)

We were referred to the swine, where the Lord told Moses that swine's flesh was not good for old Israel. But we also find that there were other commands given besides that. On one occasion while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man that gathered sticks upon the Sabbath day. And they that found him gathering sticks brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation. And they put him in ward, because it was not declared what should be done to him. And the Lord said unto Moses, The man shall be surely put to death: all the congregation shall stone him with stones without the camp."—Numbers 15: 32-35.

We must be liberal, so if one of these commandments is binding on us to-day, surely the other must be. In the twelfth chapter of Revelation we read: "There appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars." The stars typify the twelve apostles. What about the moon that was under her feet? Does it not represent the Mosaic Law? And if the Law of Moses was nailed to the cross, what about the prohibited eating of swine's flesh?

In giving the Word of Wisdom to his people the Lord says:

Yea, flesh also, of beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine.

We can see that God did not intend that we should abstain from meat, when it was received with thanksgiving. Did he not include the swine, too? He surely counted the swine with the rest of the beasts of the field, for he said, "Wheat for man, and corn for the ox, and oats for the horse, and rye for fowls, and for swine, and for all beasts of the field, and barley for all useful animals." You see that swine is not counted with the useful animals,—useful as beasts of burden.

Referring to Doctrine and Covenants, 49:3, this language is used: "Woe be unto man that sheddeth blood or that wasteth flesh and hath no need." Notice that this revelation was given in 1831, when there was an abundance of wild game, deer, elk, and buffalo, and you can see why these words were given. About that time two men put thirty-five hundred buffalo hides at a shipping-point in Montana, in one winter, and left their carcasses scattered over the range.

Let us reason together, and do as our Savior said, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."

MEAT-EATING.

I have been interested in letters written by some of the brethren and sisters of late on the subject of meat-eating, and have earnestly considered the subject from every view-point available to me, and have reached the conclusion that it is best to be temperate in this matter as in all others. To my mind very extreme or radical views are not profitable.

One writer says that the horrifying transportation of innocent creatures, and their brutal slaughter, is a thing apart from God. But it appears that the brother's mind was still unsettled after viewing this horrifying spectacle, for he says, "Prayer helped me." He then explains how he was helped. Bro.

Alvin Knisley, Apostle Green, and Sr. Warnock had each either spoken or written in harmony with his views. To be sure it does help us to find good and intelligent people who agree with us; but it does not always prove that we are right.

Looking at this question from the humane side, it would look to the tender-hearted (and all Saints should be tender-hearted) as a thing to be regretted,—the slaughter of innocent creatures; but if it can be shown that that was the object of their creation, it should silence all cavil. Paul said of a certain class that they should depart from the faith in the latter day, forbidding to marry and commanding to abstain from meats, which God had created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. If this means anything at all it means that they who know the truth know that God created the animal that produced the meat for that purpose, to be received with thanksgiving.

One writer said if we ate meat we encouraged the butcher business, and we become a party to the wrong by patronizing the butchers. I wondered what kind of shoes the writer of that article wears. I have never yet seen a person who held such extreme views on meat-eating, and the slaughter of animals, but that they wore leather shoes, and frequently kid gloves that their hands might be white and soft. Did you ever stop to think, (you who would usher in the millennium at once by your supposed great reform on the meat question,) where this would lead us to as a people, were these extreme views carried out? If it is wrong to kill these creatures, it is wrong to raise them to be killed, so the Saints who are farmers could find no further use at all for hogs; and for cattle only as milch cows. What could they do with the increase? Then again, should we agree not to kill or sell stock to those who would kill them, would it not be wrong to raise corn and sell it to those who would use it to fatten stock for the market? Did you ever think of the thousands and tens of thousands of people who would be left in a starving condition if such ideas should obtain the ascendancy in the world? I believe we ought to be consistent, and practice what we preach. Every person who taboos meat-eating because of the cruelty of the slaughter-house, in order to be consistent, should wear wooden or rubber shoes, they should never ride in a vehicle drawn by horses wearing leather harness, for by so doing they encourage the slaughter of the animal quite as much as he who eats meat.

Again, they must admit that it is as wrong to kill one kind of animal as another; yet Jesus ate fish, and instructed the disciples in the fishing business. And in the Word of Wisdom, which is made to do service for all who hold extreme views on the meat question, we find: "Yea, flesh also, of beasts and of fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving." He also says,

"Rye for the swine." Why did the Lord intend his people to feed swine if it is wrong to eat them? They could not be utilized in any other way. Why could he not have said, It is wrong to slay them? He has said it is wrong to kill when we have no need, and that he would require of man an account for wanton slaughter of any kind.

One writer quotes Isaiah 63: 15-17, which tells how God will come with fire and will consume those who purify themselves behind one tree in the gardens, eating swine's flesh, and the mouse, etc. To my mind this refers to a false system of worship, or a hypocritical people; and their offense is more in their sin of hypocrisy and false worship than in what they eat. The language, "Purifying themselves behind one tree," certainly has reference to worship. As the Jewish people had several forms and ways in connection with their custom of purifying themselves under the Law of Moses, and as they were forbidden to eat swine's flesh, is it not reasonable to suppose that Isaiah referred to those Jews who would continue in their forms of worship, which included purifying of the flesh, and which forbade eating swine's flesh; at the same time rejecting the Christ who gave Peter the vision of all manner of four footed beasts which he thought to be unclean, declaring them to have been cleansed and fit for use? Now, there are Jews to-day who hold to the Law of Moses, and yet eat swine's flesh. And if they would be consistent, and want to be saved by the Law of Moses, they must refrain from swine's flesh, or be consumed. Or if they will eat swine's flesh they must forsake the Law of Moses and accept the Christ who has given us these things, and has even told us what we must feed our swine in order that they may be healthy. Some will no doubt regard me as an excessive meat-eater, but the fact is I eat very little meat, especially in warm weather, and try to be temperate in all things, and to avoid extremes.

Yours for the spread of the truth,

C. E. GUINAND.

THE MEAT QUESTION.

And the children of Israel also wept again, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat? We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic; but now our soul is dried away; there is nothing at all besides this manna before our eyes.—Numbers 11: 4-6.

We see from this language that their minds turned to the gardens of Egypt, and they craved again the vegetables to which they had been accustomed: the cucumbers, melons, leeks, onions, and garlic. A few years before they had murmured and cried for bread, saying that in Egypt they had been filled with bread. I might go on and make quite an argument upon the utter wickedness of the Israelitish host in crying for bread and vegetables, by going to an extreme opposite to that which has been lately aired in both HERALD and Autumn Leaves. But this is not my purpose. I do not enjoy extreme, one-sided views, neither do I think it is fair to hold up one idea before the people and expect them to form their judgment from that, in order to have things go our way. Such extravagant sayings as are used, often only create a feeling of disgust even in the minds of those who are firm believers in the Word of Wisdom, and are conscientiously striving to live in harmony with its teachings, while I fail to see how they can in the least degree convert those who are indifferent or opposed to its teachings. For instance, what effect does an expression such as "their innumerable and ghastly carcasses everywhere present," have upon us? Our streets are not lined with carcasses, nor are they everywhere present in our vicinity, nor in any place the majority of the people ever visit, and the reader is apt to think the language is imaginative and somewhat strained.

The Israelites were hurried out of Egypt by the Egyptians, who feared lest they should be smitten as their first-born had been. They did not have time to gather much food, but taking their flocks and herds they departed. They left in such haste that they had no time to bake their bread, but took their bread-dough before it was leavened, and their kneading-troughs bound in their clothes upon their shoulders, and baked their bread in the wilderness. Ere a month had passed their bread had been eaten up, and they had undoubtedly lived for a number of days upon meat from their flocks and herds. It is unreasonable to suppose that they murmured for meat at this time, as some would try to make us believe. They had their flocks and herds,—all the meat they wanted. But they wished a change—

And the whole congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron in the wilderness: and the children of Israel said unto them, Would to God we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the flesh-pots, and when we did eat bread to the full; for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness to kill this whole assembly with hunger. Then said the Lord unto Moses, Behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day, that I may prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no.—Exodus 16: 2-4.

If they murmured for meat at this time it must have been for a different variety than their flocks and herds furnished. But the language shows that it was bread they craved. The Lord sent them a change of flesh that night in the form of quails, but promised them bread in the morning to the full; and the next morning they discovered the manna on the grass, and the Lord's promise was fulfilled, and for forty years they were supplied with manna from heaven, and had "bread to the full." In two years they were more than satisfied. Then the mixed multitude which had gone up out of Egypt with the children of Israel "fell a lusting." The Israelites became affected also, and wept, "every man in the door of his tent." (Numbers 11:10.) They lusted not only for fish but for cucumbers, melons, leeks, onions, and garlic. The manna together with a temperate use of meat from their flocks and herds should have been sufficient, and was without doubt all they required. But they thought of the good things in Egypt, not only fish, but a variety of vegetables, and fell to lusting after those things. That was where they sinned, in lusting after the good things of the world when they really had plenty for their present needs. The Lord punished them by giving them an opportunity to satisfy their lust, and the punishment proved severe. Why did not the Lord send fish or melons instead of quails? I do not know. He possibly could have punished them as severely by confining them to a diet of melons for a month, but the Lord always uses the simplest means to accomplish his designs. The reason he chose quails may lie in the fact that quails fly easier than melons or fish.

It is strange, sometimes, what erroneous ideas are impressed upon our minds, oftentimes by those who should know better. We perhaps all remember seeing pictures made by some ignorant or unscrupulous person representing the manna as being in the shape of wafers, the size of a half-dollar, or larger, and we get the idea that all the people had to do was to pick up the cookies and eat them. This may account for the language found in a late HERALD, as follows: "Oh, ye sisters of latter days, do you think that the women folk were complaining very much? Were they not enjoying a well-earned and much-needed rest from the cookery business?" I can not help but notice it, it seems so out of harmony with the real facts of the case, when we get a correct understanding of it. The manna was: "A small round thing, small like the hoar frost on the grass, like a coriander seed." If you would like to know how much rest those women folk were enjoying, just scatter a quantity of parsley seed out upon the grass, and then get down on your hands and knees and pick up an omer for each man, (or head, as the margin reads,) three quarts and a half of these small seeds,—what back-breaking work it would be. And they could not lie abed till ten or eleven o'clock either, for "When the sun waxed hot the manna melted." After they had picked up their portion they had to grind it, or pound it with a pestle. We can imagine what a job it would be to put a handful at a time of small seeds on a flat stone, and pound them with another stone until sufficiently pulverized to be used as flour. After it was finally ground it was then baked in cakes and loaves. Some women now-a-days would almost faint away at the thought of baking biscuit each morning for breakfast, even though the wheat was gathered, ground, and ready for use, but these poor people had to pick up these small seed-like particles, pound or grind them, and then bake their bread before breakfast, not only one day, or a month, but six days in a week for forty years. I fail to see where the much-needed and well-earned rest from the cookery business came in. Not only did they bake the manna, but it is not unreasonable to believe that they boiled meat from their flocks and herds, for the very first Sabbath after the manna came they were commanded, in making preparation for it, to "bake that which ye will bake to-day, and seethe [boil] that which ye will seethe." (Exodus 16:22.)

The work of the majority of women of the present day is not more onerous than the work of those Israelitish women. Of course I am willing to admit that the men may have assisted some in picking up and grinding the manna; yet if we were to judge from the usual habits of wandering tribes, (the women doing the work, and the men hunting for game,) we should be inclined to think that the men spent their time catching badgers in order to get the skins necessary for the covering of the tabernacle, which was built of fine-twined linen, with a few boards, and the necessary sockets and taches, then covered with a tent of goat's hair, over this a covering of red-dyed ram's skins, and still above this a cover of badger skins, requiring dozens and perhaps hundreds of skins to complete. We wonder that they were not awe-stricken at the ghastly carcasses of those rams and badgers. And what shall we say when we read that the glory of the Lord actually came down and filled this tabernacle covered with these ram skins and these badger skins?

One dear brother is very anxious to have somebody say that Jesus ate flesh while here, so that he may have the opportunity of proving that he did not. He may present as many proofs (to him) as he chooses, the fact remains that every child almost knows that Jesus asked for food after his resurrection, and the disciples "gave him a piece of broiled fish, and a honeycomb. And he took it and did eat before them." (Luke 24:41.) Some would like to have us believe; no doubt, that fish is vegetable; but Paul says fish is flesh. There is one kind of "flesh, of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds." Not only did the Savior eat fish himself, according to the account, but John says that he took bread and gave to his disciples, and fish also. (See John 21:13.) He also blessed bread and fish and gave to the multitude on two occasions during his ministry. Using fish for food involves the taking of life, and is it not strange that if catching fish is sinful the Savior would have encouraged it after his resurrection by teaching his disciples to fish on the shady side of the boat, and afterwards partaking of fish himself, instead of pointing out the ghastly carcasses everywhere present, and the fish-bones lying round? To prove that Christ did not eat flesh it must be proven that fish is not flesh. Paul says it is. Tradition handed down from the Dark Ages, springing from religious hypocrites who lusted after flesh and sought an excuse to avoid going without flesh for even a day or two, or a little season, says it is not. We are permitted to choose the part that appeals to our intelligence most. One may say fish is vegetable; another may say beef is vegetable. One is exactly the same kind of lie as the other. Fish have life, and red blood as other animals. They have nerves, and feel pain as do other animals. Moreover they are cannibals, devouring minnows after their own kind, as well as insects, worms, and frogs, while the majority of other animals used for food by civilized man are herbivorous. "But," says one, "the flesh of fish is different from the flesh of an ox." Yes, so it is; but the flesh of an ox is different from the flesh of a fish; and if such a statement is an argument in favor of eating one kind of flesh, it is as good an argument in favor of eating the other kind.

The Lord speaking to the people in Zion, giving certain commandments which they were to observe, said:

Inasmuch as ye do this the fullness of the earth is yours: the beasts of the fields, and the fowls of the air, and that which climbth upon the trees, and walketh upon the earth; yea, and the herb, and the good things that cometh of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, or for houses or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens, or for vineyards; yea all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, and for taste, and for smell, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul.— Doctrine and Covenants 59: 4.

We should be willing to let the Lord state the object for which these things were created; and if the animal is included with the vegetable for food and for raiment to be used in temperance, wisdom, and thanksgiving, we should not find fault with those who are using them. For "in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments," which includes those "forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats." (1 Timothy 4: 3.)

We have all, no doubt, seen occasionally a real consistent (?) Latter Day Saint (and possibly you, dear reader, are one yourself) who would not, under any circumstances, eat swine's flesh, still they would keep several fine porkers out in the pen or in the field,—not to eat, but just for the fat and lard to be used in cooking. Some are so very consistent that they will boil or bake beans, putting in liberal chunks of fat pork, and after they have cooked all the fat, juice, and "disposition" of the "unappreciative hog" out into the beans, they will throw the few tissues that remain which were once the receptacles of the "good" to the dogs, while they absorb beans, fat, juice, "disposition," and all, and straightway are offended if they behold their neighbor fry a small slice of ham, and use the fat to season gravy or other food. I sometimes feel that we all ought to shut ourselves in our closets and lift our voices mightily to heaven, crying, O Lord, "what fools we mortals be." For we are all more or less contaminated with that kind of consistency. As to absorbing the disposition of the "unappreciative hog," if he gets his disposition from the corn he eats, what is the difference whether man eats corn or pork, he will get the disposition anyway. While I would not wish to specially argue in favor of eating pork, the fact remains that the Lord took enough interest in the "unappreciative hog" to tell what food would be best for him, and it is not clear to me just what good would be accomplished by keeping hogs around to eat rye were they of no use in any way except possibly to have a few bristles stolen from their backs, or one here and there be trained to perform in a circus.

I hope that our brothers and sisters who are so horrified at the slaughter of animals for the use of man, will be consistent and cease to use anything that involves the taking of animal life. Let them use tooth-brushes with wood handles and without bristles. Do not under any circumstances use a piece of furniture put together with glue. Discard your shoes at once, and go barefooted, or wear wooden shoes, for what numbers of animals are slain annually to provide the fine shoes we wear. Avoid leather upholstered couches and chairs,—and horror of horrors! do not be seen holding a Holy Bible in your hands bound in flexible leather.

A Latter Day Saint who really believes that it is absolutely sinful to eat meat is inconsistent if he raises hogs, cattle, or sheep for the market, selling them for others to butcher and eat. He is inconsistent, also, when he hands out to his customers over the counter, smoked ham, bacon, and dried beef.

Is it wrong to use animal products for garments? If it is, why did God himself teach the first man and woman to use skins for clothing, when he might have shorn the wool from a few sheep and woven them garments from that? We are sometimes puzzled as to what he did with the ghastly carcasses from which he obtained the skins, since we are told by some who know, of course, that no one ate meat until after the flood. Perhaps he just made the skin grow without the animal,—or skinned the poor beast alive and let it go without a covering.

In some of our northern States it is almost impossible to endure the icy blasts of winter without furs to keep out the cold. And we read that God has ordained the beasts of the field not only for food, but for raiment. "And whoso forbiddeth to abstain from meats, that a man should not eat the same, is not of God; for, behold, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for raiment."— Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3. We can understand that language if we will. We are also taught that we should be extremely careful in the use of animals for food or for raiment, for he says, "Woe be unto man that sheddeth blood or that wasteth flesh and hath no need." The taking of animal life merely for sport, can not be too severely condemned. But in supplying the demand for animal food there is, to-day, very little waste. Nearly every particle of the animal is put to use,—for food, for glue, for clothing, and in many other useful ways. To my mind it is a mistake, extreme, unwarranted, and not upheld by the word of God, to anathematize our brethren because they happen to be using that which God has ordained for their use. While he requires us to exercise wisdom in the use of animal as well as vegetable food, he also requires us to exercise wisdom in teaching the people his word. We are not warranted in overreaching ourselves and God, and going beyond that which he has given for our government. We should avoid going to extremes. Because we see a brother stooping forward it is not advisable for us to stand up so straight that we lean over backwards, and it looks far more ridiculous.

I have not written this to uphold myself or any of my brethren in the unlimited use of meat. I have always been an admirer of the Word of Wisdom as found in the word of God; but not always as found in the writings of men. In looking over my accounts for the last two months I discover that we have used in our house: fish, thirty cents, and meat seventy cents.

I would we all could live in complete harmony with the wisdom of God as portrayed in his word. But I do not believe we will ever be brought to that condition by having unwarranted statements, calculated to harrow up our souls, hurled at us by those who have allowed their imaginations to run away with them, and worked themselves into a frenzy. Rather will it be accomplished by showing that it is "pleasing" unto God for us to live in harmony with his wishes.

Yea, flesh also, of the beasts of the fields, and the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine. . . . These hath God made for the use of man only in times of famine and excess of hunger."—Word of Wisdom.

This was given not by commandment nor even by constraint, but to show us the wisdom of God, and what will please him. Let us then try to teach our brethren that it is pleasing to God that flesh should be used for food sparingly, and only in times of winter, or of cold, or of famine, or excess of hunger, at the same time remembering that he that commandeth to abstain from meat is not of God.

The "humane" plea is a strong one, and however much we may regret the slaughter of animals, it is yet true that it is as humane to slay a beast for food as it is to slay one for raiment. It is as humane to slay animals for food and clothing as it is to butcher them for sacrifices and burnt offerings, as was done by ancient Israel. And which is more humane, to slay the animals necessary for food, or to doom half the human race to sudden extinction by decreeing that no animal shall be slain for any purpose whatever? a calamity that would certainly befall us if all animals were spared and allowed to multiply upon the face of the earth. It would be but a few years comparatively until they would be so numerous that every morsel of vegetation would be required to feed them. Man would have nothing but butter and milk.

May we be enabled to cling to the word of God, and not be led into the mazes of Catholicism or Shakerism, nor be found among those who shall yet depart from the faith, "commanding to abstain from meats."

Your brother,

LEON A. GOULD.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Notice to Daughters of Zion.

For some years past the question of undertaking some special work of benevolence, in connection with other work heretofore done by us, has been under the consideration of the Advisory Board; but because of the many pressing demands being made upon the Saints in the way of finance, it has seemed wiser to wait a more opportune time.

Now, however, having taken counsel with Bishop E. L. Kelley and receiving his most cordial approval as well as assurances of his hearty coöperation, it is deemed advisable by us to notify all local societies as well as all members not connected with local organizations that such a work is contemplated and they are most earnestly invited to join in the same.

The establishment of a Children's Home has been mentioned as a worthy and much needed work; but we deem it wiser that the matter of discussion as to what we shall work for, be left to the voice of the general society, when they meet in convention during the session of the General Conference of the church in April, 1905. This, however, will not prevent the sisters from going to work now to raise a fund and at that time deciding for what purpose this fund shall be used. It seems best that each local organization should decide upon its own plan for raising means to contribute to this fund and where no local organization exists, individual members can send their contributions to the treasure of the general society, Mrs. C. J. Clark, 1038 West Electric Street, Independence, Missouri.

We trust that every member of the society will enter with whole-souled activity into this work and that by the time of our General Conference each will be able not only to report the successful results of efforts already made, but also their determination to persevere until success crowns our labors.

By order of the Advisory Board,

MRS. M. E. HULMES, President.

MRS. EMMA HOU GAS, Secretary.

Our Boys.

Not long ago I attended a union Sunday-school convention in company with a Congregationalist minister and his wife (very dear friends of mine) and I wish I could tell you all about it. I apprehend I was the only Latter Day Saint there, but I enjoyed every moment of the time (two days), for all seemed so happy and determined to make others so; and under all was such a deep love and interest in the Sunday-school work that I resolved then and there to do better and more work in the future. Alas for human resolutions, they are not always kept as they should be. One grand talk that impressed me (I wish I could give to you but memory fails) was on "Our boys and how to keep them." I believe that is, or should be, a question which confronts every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. The future of our nation depends on just how we keep our boys, and if we can only find the way to keep them in the path of righteousness our nation is safe. Several years ago while a teacher of a large class of boys ranging in age from twelve to fourteen this question of "how to keep them" perplexed me very much. I could usually get them to attend for a few Sundays, perhaps out of curiosity, but I must make it so interesting that they would care to stay; and this to an untrained teacher was hard to do. But there was one thing I learned,—that they must feel and know that you love them and that they are as much to you as you to them. They must feel that they are a necessity to the school and then they will feel there is a responsibility resting on them also. I have not been a teacher or a very prompt attendant at the Sunday-school for three years, but I still feel that we should consider very carefully this question, "How to keep our boys." We all know just how much depends on our boys. The church, home, and our government; and surely to fit them for discharging these duties is worthy of our best efforts. I believe that as teacher we do not realize just how much depends on us. My first desire to do something for the Lord was implanted in my heart by a Sunday-school teacher. I had good Christian parents, but sometimes a child will get inspiration from a teacher that he does not get at home, be he ever so carefully trained. It seems that all the reward I should crave when the final day comes would be to be a teacher of a class of boys and be able to take my class complete and say, "Here, Lord, is my sheaf." My heart yearns for the boys; and every mother's boy is precious to her and to the Savior.

Let us pray that God may give us wisdom to know the right way to win our boys and keep them.

A Quarrel on Paper.

They were sitting at the tea-table and were on the very verge of that dreadful "first quarrel" which the young wife had prayed might never come. The husband had uttered a criticism which she thought unkind and undeserved.

"I can find fault with many things, too," she flashed out.

"Oh, indeed," he said coldly; "and what are they, pray?"

She paused a moment. If she gave utterance to the sharp speech trembling on her lips, she knew that the opening wedge of discord would have entered. On the other hand, it was a severe trial to curb her impetuous spirit and receive the husband's rebuke meekly. But her good angel triumphed. After a short silence, she said, frankly:

"I'm not sure that I ought to say what I thought. I believe I'll keep it till to-morrow and see how it looks by the light of day. Then if I think it worth while, I'll write it and leave the note on your plate."

He smiled at her whimsical answer and the cloud disappeared. After tea she came to her place on his knee and said, coaxingly:

"I have a proposition to make."

"What is it?" he asked, gayly.

"We nearly had a quarrel and, of course, it must not happen again. Hereafter, if either has any criticism to make on the other let us wait a day; and then, if we still wish to make it, write it out, instead of saying it. I believe petty anger would evaporate in the mere act of reducing it to writing and then some heartaches would be spared."

He laughed, but in his heart he acknowledged the wisdom of her plan and so agreed to it. They have been married three years now and both are still waiting for the first letter of criticism. The quarrel on paper has never begun.

Most of us might use the bride's plan with profit. If we could wait and write the unkind speeches, I wonder how many of them would ever be delivered, to wound loving hearts. Of course, some people would quarrel by telegraph, if there were no other way, but doubtless they are very few; and three fourths of our vexing, undignified, and unloving disputes might be avoided if we would wait to quarrel on paper.—Margaret Zella Walters, in Everywhere.

Trust God and Keep Your Powder Dry.

Darkness was coming down upon the desert. There were no trees to cast lengthening shadows, no hilltop to hold the lingering rays of sunlight; but suddenly, all over the wide extent of level sand, darkness fell like a black robe. Mahomet and his attendants halted on their journey and a tent was pitched.

"Allah's care is over his children," said one of the band. "I will even loose my camel and trust in Allah that I shall find him again in the morning at sunrise."

"Friend," said the prophet, with grave, uplifted finger, "tie thy camel and then trust in Allah."

There is one point of our daily living at which we see men and women continually loosing their camels, with loud protests of trust in Allah and showing presently pious resignation at their loss; I mean the care of their health. Of course, this earthly house of our tabernacle must decay and we must bear its infirmities cheerily and patiently; but there is neither sense nor piety in committing our lives to God and then breaking all the laws of hygiene.

"This is a strange dispensation of Providence," I said, mournfully to my neighbor, as we attended together the third funeral which we had followed from Colonel B——'s house within two years.

"Providence, indeed!" answered my neighbor, with a gruff disrespect which I hope was intended for me, not for Providence. "Humph! The colonel keeps rotting potatoes in his cellar!"

"I am asking God to give me dying grace, that I may be willing to go," said a girl, in the last stages of consumption.

"Ah," said her doctor, in a confidential whisper, "if she had only asked a year ago for common sense to keep her from putting off her flannel shirt in midwinter to go to a party!"

Friend, eat plain, wholesome food, wear sensible clothes, ventilate your house, be temperate, be prudent; in short, tie your camel and then trust in God and take cheerfully the dispensations of his providence.—E. P. Allen.

The Master's Last Call.

The Master hath need of the reapers,
And, idler, he calleth to thee:
Come out from the mansions of pleasure,
From the halls where the careless may be.

Soon the shadows of eve will be falling,
With the mist, and the dew, and the rain;
Oh, what is this world and its follies,
But the mold and the rust to the grain?

The Master hath need of the reapers,
And, worker, he calleth to thee.
Oh, what are the dreams of ambition,
To the joys that hereafter shall be!

There are tokens of storms that are coming,
And summer is fast on the wane,
Then alas! for the hopes of the harvest,
And alas! for the beautiful grain.

The Master hath need of the reapers,
 And he calleth to thee and to me.
 Oh, haste while the winds of the morning
 Are blowing so freshly and free.

Let the sound of the scythe and the sickle
 Re-echo o'er hill-top and plain;
 And gather the sheaves in the garner,
 For golden and ripe is the grain.—Selected.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

A BROTHER writes: "Objection exists on the part of some, myself included, to advertisements of a worldly or mercenary character being inserted in our Sunday-school Quarterlies. . . . Some persons of the other faiths have refused to purchase Quarterlies having advertising matter in them."

We very much regret that the advertisements in the Quarterly should "offend" any one. And, were it possible, we would do as Paul did concerning the eating of meat at the idol's table. He would not abstain from eating the meat because it was wrong to eat it, for it was not, but because it offended the brethren. We would not omit them because wrong to insert them, for it is not wrong, but that no one might be offended.

We give all due consideration to the tastes and feelings of others, but knowing that they have no opportunity to learn the facts in the case we offer the following in explanation: Nothing but strictly reliable advertisements are inserted. In the current issue are the following advertisers: Herald Publishing House; Ensign Publishing House; Graceland College; State Savings Bank, and Commercial Bank, both of Lamoni and of known responsibility and honor; and the general secretary and home department superintendent of the General Sunday-school Association. In previous issues have been others, but none that were not known to the advertising manager to be reliable.

The Quarterlies were formerly sold as follows: Senior for eight cents each, twenty-five cents per year; Intermediate and Primary grades for five cents each, fifteen cents per year. These prices were higher than many other publishing houses asked for their quarterlies, and there was a constant complaint about it both in private and in general convention. Many persons wrote us asking why our Quarterlies were higher in price than others, some stating that our Quarterlies could not be introduced in union schools while higher in price than others. We promised that as soon as our financial condition would warrant it a reduction in price would be made. The time came and prices were reduced twenty per cent. This made them as low in price as any denominational quarterly that I know of. Since this reduction was made the association has just about kept even financially till last year when the Primary Quarterly was about doubled in size by adding the first primary lessons thereto. There being no advance in subscription price, but the cost of production being doubled, made it a losing proposition. Some have asked why we did not make the first primary grade a separate quarterly and let it support itself. The reason was that we had tried that plan with the "Study Hour" and had proved the plan a complete failure. It was introduced into one school in many. It was a complete financial loss. The first primary lessons are now in the Primary Quarterly and are quite extensively introduced and used. But, of course, they produce no revenue.

All these turns have led us up to a place where we must have more income from the Quarterly. Shall we advance the price? Or shall we make our space on the cover of the Quarterly produce us some revenue? It seems to me the only correct answer is to fill it with advertisements of reliable character if we can get them. For to advance the price of a Quarterly would be to take it out of the hands of many poor schools where it now goes. If we could see any legitimate reason for omitting advertisements from the Quarterly, we would certainly do so. But, personally, we see no objection whatever to inserting advertisements of legitimate and honorable business firms, whether of the world or of the church.

Some persons may make the advertisements an excuse for refusing to purchase our Quarterly. We can not help that. However, we look upon that as purely an excuse. But even if they were really offended at the advertisements, all their patronage would not amount to a fraction of the amount paid by advertisers. And they would probably be among the first to complain of an advance in subscription price.

Dear Saints, let us be considerate in all things. Do not forget the necessities in the case. Let us do the best we can whether that be exactly what we like or not, seeking the greatest good to the greatest number. Possibly our tastes are overdrawn. Do not make us "an offender for a word." When we get financially able, we can do many things that we are obliged to leave undone now.

Reunion Tour of the First Assistant Superintendent.

Having accepted a very cordial invitation from the genial and hustling superintendent of the Des Moines District to assist in the Sunday-school work during their reunion, I left home on the 4th of August ticketed for Des Moines. Our train reached the city at about half past six in the evening, and as we pulled into the magnificent union station whom should I see awaiting me, but that very efficient worker in the auxiliaries, Elder J. F. Mintun.

Following his lead we were soon aboard the street-car, and after a short ride and a little walk arrived at the hospitable home of Bro. and Sr. Thomas Cook, 514 Garfield Avenue, where Elder Mintun makes his headquarters as city missionary.

At eight in the evening we enjoyed participating in choir practice with a few of the Saints of the Des Moines Branch in their new and comfortable quarters, the church located on the east side.

After sharing the hospitality of the Cook home during the night, we proceeded to the camp-ground, located in a beautiful little natural grove in Oak Park, on the north side of the city, where preparations had been made through the hard work of a few of the brethren.

By arrangement the quarter to eleven session from Monday to Friday, and the four o'clock session on Sundays were set apart for the work of the auxiliaries.

The first session of Sunday-school was held on Sunday, August 7, with an attendance of upwards of one hundred. A good interest was manifested by all present. The primaries and intermediates occupied tents adjoining the assembly tent for recitation. The lesson was followed by a very interesting blackboard review by the one in charge.

The sessions through the week were not largely attended, there being only enough children present to have one primary class, hence most of the work was in the nature of institute work. Subjects treated were such as home department, and miscellaneous discussion of various phases of Sunday-school work.

Taken as a whole the interest in the work, except upon the part of a few, was not flattering. However, doubtless some good was accomplished. The lack of active interest was due to some extent to sickness which affected nearly all campers. Also some were prevented by their work. Quite a good attendance greeted us again on the last Sunday.

Zion's Praises were used. Sr. Reist presided at the organ, and Wardell Christy acted as chorister. Bro. Christy is also superintendent of the district association, and had charge of the boarding-tent.

I was glad to have the privilege of assisting what I could, and regret that because of ill health more could not have been accomplished. May the cause of Zion prosper.

The Sunday-School Lesson for September 11, 1904.

BE LOVING.

Golden Text.—“Love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous.”—1 Peter 3: 8.

OUR LAST LESSON

suggested to us that there should be unity in the home between husbands and wives, and that this unity must have for its foundation the principle of love. In that lesson we read Peter's admonition to wives to adorn themselves with the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit; in other words, to be clothed with humility. We read also his admonition to husbands to give honor to their wives. Husbands and wives who live together in this manner live together in love, each one unselfishly seeking to bestow honor and respect upon the other, and this is as it should be.

IN THIS LESSON

Peter teaches that the same spirit of love should be among all the saints. He says, “Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another; love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous.”

OUR GOLDEN TEXT OF LAST WEEK

taught us in the language of a modern revelation that “no one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love.” Again, in Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6, we read the word of the Lord to us, “Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine.” There can not be that unity among the saints that is pleasing to the Lord, that unity that characterizes the saints as the people of God without humility and love.

No one is assisting in the building up of Zion who is not seeking to cultivate the spirit of love in himself and among the saints; for Zion is not simply an aggregation of people; it is not simply a collection of houses to form a city, or a number of cities in a populous land. Zion is the pure in heart. (Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5.)

HOW IS ZION TO BE BUILT UP?

The Lord reproved his church in 1834. He told them they had not learned to be obedient to the things he required of them. He said they were full of all manner of evil, that they had not cared for the poor and afflicted among them as it becomes saints to do, and that they were not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom.

And he made a very significant statement to the church at that time. He said, “Zion can not be built up unless it be by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom; otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.” (102: 2.)

Again the Lord warned the church in 1838 that, if the Saints did not sanctify the land of Zion by keeping the commandments of his law upon it, it should not be a land of Zion unto them. And he said, “This shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion.”

It is, therefore, an example to us also who are called his people in these later times, and we shall be mistaken if we suppose that we become a part of Zion by living in the land of Zion. We become a part of Zion by keeping the law of Zion; we are of Zion, if we are pure in heart in the sight of God.

A VISION

was had in 1885 by one of our elders concerning the redemption of Zion. Those who have back numbers of the Autumn Leaves may find an account of the vision in volume 3, page 555.

In the vision the elder saw that the time will come when only those saints will remain in Zion who keep the celestial law. This is in harmony with what has already been shown from the revelations of God to the church.

A reading of this vision will be interesting to those who have access to it. It contains the warning to us that Zion can be built up only by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, and we have need to be reminded of this often that we may not forget a thing of such vast importance to us.

WE MAY SUM UP THE PRINCIPLES OF THE CELESTIAL LAW

as Paul summed up the principles of the law of the gospel, in the command to be loving. He who is full of love to God and man will keep the whole law of the celestial kingdom.

There was a Latter Day Saint who, in the hours of sleep one night, heard the music of the heavenly choirs. At first it sounded faint as if far away, but it came near and nearer, until the words were distinguished, and these were the words, “Sweet bonds that unite all the children of peace,

And thrice precious Jesus whose love can not cease.”

As the music died away again, the sleeper awoke, and knew the interpretation to be that love is the theme in heaven, and love is the music of the celestial world as well as its law, and that it is required of the Saints to be bound together by the bonds of love.

FROM THE BEGINNING OF THE WORLD

the servants of God, whether angels or men, have told this same message to the inhabitants of the earth, that God requires them to love one another.

In Enoch's city they learned that law; the law of Moses taught it; it was repeated by Jesus in his ministrations of the gospel to men; it is given to us now; and the Bible lesson of the Sunday-school for this week tells us that Peter was in harmony with the great theme, for he taught that the saints should all be of one mind, that they should love as brethren, that they should be pitiful toward one another, that they should be courteous.

COURTESY.

There is a good little book called Lessons on Manners, arranged for the use of teachers, from which we select some choice portions. They will suggest good thoughts to those teachers who may wish to spend a part of the Sunday-school hour on the teaching of Peter that saints should be courteous.

Calvert says: “A gentleman may brush his own clothes or shoes, or mend or make them, or roughen his hands with the helve, or foul them with dye-work, but he must not foul his mouth with a lie.”

Another writer says, “A gentleman should be gentle in everything.”

Chaucer said, “He gentil is who doth gentil dedes.”

“Good manners are not simply an external finish, like the polish or veneering on wood; outer graciousness and gracefulness must have its root deep in a noble heart and an upright character.” We can not take them off and put them on at will. If they do not reach down to heart and character, they will be like the varnish that breaks off by hard usage and reveals the common wood beneath.”

A gentleman wrote to his daughter: “I want to tell you a secret. The way to make yourself pleasing to others is to show them that you care for them.”

“A diamond in the rough may possess value, but a diamond after the cutter's tool has brought out its smoothness and beauty will command a much greater price in the market.”—Margaret Sangster.

Silvio Pelico says: "Family intimacy should never make brothers and sisters forget to be polite to each other. Those who contract thoughtless and rude habits toward numbers of their own families will be rude and thoughtless toward all the world. But let your family interest be true, tender, and affectionate, and the manners uniformly gentle and considerate, and the members of the family thus trained will carry into the world and society the habits of their childhood."

Note the contrast in the following story from a sermon of Jacob Abbott:

A poor woman was engaged in washing down the stairs of a hotel. Some travelers from an early train came in. The first one hurrying along, without giving the woman time to remove her pail, said in a rude, surly voice, "Can't you take your pail out of the way?"

Another man coming soon after said to her pleasantly, "Don't move your pail, madam; I can step over it." When she hastened to move the pail, he said, "I am sorry to disturb you at your work," and looked down with a smile and a nod as he passed on.

Which one was the gentleman?

WELLSTON, Ohio, August 22, 1904.

Editors Herald: Soon after conference I went into Pickaway County, Ohio, and made a new opening where Bro. and Sr. Lacy were living; I held meetings only one week on account of the busy season, preaching five times. Those who attended all seemed interested, and nearly every family invited me to their homes. I desire to return in the winter when they have promised me a full house. I visited five families during the week, and believe a good work may be done there. Returning home I assisted Bro. Durand in his efforts at Wellston for a few days, and went to "Old Kentuck" with Bro. Cochran Smith to a place by the name of Hopewell, about twenty miles south of the Ohio River and within six miles of Grayson, the headquarters of the Helper, published by R. B. Neal, the Mormon cannibal, and member of the society of that type of beings. I did not get to see him, but from his reputation in the neighborhood of Hopewell, he would be a fair sample of primitive man.

The people of Hopewell gave me a fair hearing, and but for an accident and the extreme heat I believe some would have united with the church. This was the home of Bro. Smith some fifteen years ago, and we had invitations from a dozen or more places to call on them. After the accident to Mr. Feltz's son, who was hurt by the breaking of a swing, I stopped meetings here for a week and went to a schoolhouse called Wilson, about three miles away. There was not much interest apparent here. On my return to Hopewell, a good audience congregated, (but a little late,) and the house was stoned by some unknown parties, after which the attendance was so small I suspended my efforts. Mr. Feltz, the director, is trying to find the guilty parties and apply the law. Bro. Smith had left me more than a week before. My next place was about six miles from Russell, Kentucky, (opposite Ironton, Ohio,) at a place called "Old Steam Furnace." Bro. Smith was again with me the first three days. We had good order and attendance but did not get to occupy in the daytime on Sunday, as the house was occupied by the United Baptists, (another new Baptist baby). I attended the meeting, and learned the style of the new order (if the preacher represented it) in delivering a sermon. He turned his back to the audience and stood in front of the pulpit, addressing himself to his fellow ministers, occasionally turning around for a few words. He occasionally expressed sympathy for the "poor little Mormons" as he called us. Such men are a travesty upon religion. I held a few services in Lawrence County, Ohio, where we had the tent cut and the mob violence a few years ago, when Bro. Harder was with me. The Saints around there are much scattered but are still in the faith.

From there I came home to attend and assist at the park meeting near Wellston, Ohio. The meetings closed here last evening, and we believe much good was done, and prejudices removed from the minds of many. The interest increased throughout. Mr. Peters, the owner of the park, has our sincere thanks for the free use of the park, and for the good order he preserved throughout the meetings. The electric lighting of the evening meetings, six dollars, and the advertising, three dollars, was the only cost for the eight days. The large pavillion and the beautiful white-oak grove and a fine well of water, with the swings and some other attractions, make this one of the most inviting places of summer resort in Southern Ohio. Mr. Peters made a sacrifice of some twenty dollars from the earnings of the park, to accommodate us.

We have arranged for the grounds for other services in the future, viz.: September 4 and 11, at two o'clock, and for a reunion of the Ohio and West Virginia Districts about the last of August, 1905, unless we are sadly disappointed.

We know the meetings were enjoyable, believe they were profitable, and hope they may be fruitful. Bro. Greene goes to Creola, and Bro. Ebeling to Davisville, to labor.

J. L. GOODRICH.

FANSHAWE, Indian Territory, August 24, 1904.

Dear Saints: In April I attended the General Conference at the grand old temple in Kirtland. I enjoyed my visit to that old temple in Kirtland. I enjoyed my visit to that old historic place. I looked, I listened, I wondered, and truly I felt to say in reality, as never before, this is "a marvelous work and a wonder." The conference to me was a profitable one. I learned many things of importance and interest to me. Was appointed to labor in the Indian Territory for this conference year, hence I began my work immediately on my return home from conference, my family being located at Haileyville, fifteen miles west of Wilburton.

So far this year I have been greatly blessed in my labors. I have preached at Haileyville, Wilburton, Fanshawe, Sawyer, Coalgate, Holdenville, and Ada. At Ada I had quite an experience. Two Utah boys had been there two years ago and the people egged them out, so when I came on the ground they said, "He is a Mormon and we will not let him have a house to preach in." I looked the town over and made up my mind I was going to preach, so I rented a small house for two weeks, borrowed seats, went to a second-hand store, rented lamps, got me a goods box for a pulpit, got everything in readiness, then went upon the street to make an announcement. I talked to several, tried to get a big crowd in town. I stepped up to a man that had a wagon-load of wood standing on the street and asked him if I could have the privilege of using his wagon and load of wood for awhile for a meeting-house. He said, "Yes." I mounted that wagon in the hot sun, and began to preach. The men gathered to hear; many listened carefully. I talked for two hours and then announced meeting at eight o'clock at my church in town. The time came, house nearly full; I spoke to them with good liberty. The next evening again on the street, on another load, and again in my house at night. Next day on the street again, and at the house, and beheld a mob with rocks and clubs, come to run me out. But no. A young man, a friend, discovered their intentions, went to them and told them to pitch in if they felt like it, saying at the same time that he would promptly punish the first to throw a rock or egg, so they left me to tell the gospel story to my heart's content. Sr. McGrow lives at Ada, so she went to the officers of the town, and called on them for protection. The marshal came and watched the house while I preached at night. By this time some of the elect of the town began to complain, saying I was a pestilent fellow, disturbing the peace; and they began to talk about having me arrested, and sent an officer to scare me out. I told them I had come to their town in the interest of the grandest institution on the earth, and that I was going to preach the gospel of my Master on their streets, and if they wanted to arrest me, I was there and the easiest man to be found in the town. When they found they had a white elephant on hand they left me in peace, and hundreds heard me. I showed up the difference between us and Brigham's side of the questions; made lots of friends. Two weeks ago I went to Dallas County, ten miles east of the city of Dallas, to assist Bro. T. J. Sheppard. We had good meetings, baptized three, and left many very near the kingdom. I look for a large branch to be raised up at that place later. I enjoyed the company and acquaintance of Bro. Harp. Found him in the harness with all his soul. A good man he is, for Texas or the South needs no "dudes" down here. My health is good. Am never so happy as when I am busy in my Master's work; and have never been more busy than this year. Would be glad to hear from Saints living in Indian Territory where gospel work is needed.

In gospel bonds,
S. W. SIMMONS.

YARMOUTH, Iowa, September 1, 1904.

Dear Herald: On my return from General Conference I found my daughter sorely afflicted with what has since been pronounced consumption of the bowels. Administration and the skill of the physicians availed but little and we saw her waste away to a skeleton, a mere shadow of her former self. The attending physician suggested that a visit to her former home might prove very beneficial, but as she was too weak to go alone, and my wife could not leave the two boys behind to go with her, and because of this and other important considerations, my family returned to Omaha, August 6. I learn by letters from my wife that the change has been beneficial and she is steadily improving, though not yet strong enough to attend church and Sunday-school. This explanation of the sudden departure of my family from Davenport, to those who may have been concerned in regard to our affairs, will be sufficient, and also inform them of her present condition.

I went to Muscatine, my objective point, on May 7, and with the exception of three short visits to my home in Davenport I remained until August 16. We used all available means to interest the public and to induce them to come to our place of meeting. In this we were generously assisted by Brn. C. G. Dykes and Robert Rankins, officers of the branch. The daily papers have treated us very generously, advertising us extensively by publishing several communications from me and putting them in an attractive way to call attention. We were aided by the Saints in distributing a large amount of literature and cards of invitation. Although we could not induce the people to come and hear, we feel satisfied that several thousand have been given an opportunity to know something concerning our faith and doctrine. The public library board has consented to receive the Book of Mormon and Church History. We can not see at present any results from our labor, but we hope our efforts have been approved by God, for if we are rewarded for results obtained instead of efforts made I will come short.

I came to this place on August 18. The consent of the minister and four trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church was obtained to hold services in their church, the first one to be held on Sunday evening, August 21, and to continue during the week, except Wednesday. About five o'clock it began to rain and continued until nearly nine, so we were prevented from holding meeting. On the 22d the janitor called Bro. Henry Kaestner and told him we could not have the church; and as nearly all the farmers have telephones the meetings were announced to take place in the Hope Schoolhouse and a fair-sized audience greeted us and we continued the meetings all week. The Chautauqua and district fair near by helped to decrease our audience, and on Sunday, the 28th, the elements were against us again.

A borrowed thought in regard to Graceland College may not be inappropriate at this time. It may be a test of our faith to pay that debt. A temple is to be reared in this generation on which the glory of the Lord is to rest. (See Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2, 6.) If we are not faithful in small things will the Lord trust us in greater ones? The church came under God's displeasure in Nauvoo for failing to do as commanded in building the temple. Will he permit us to take part in so glorious a work as building the temple at Independence if we are stubborn and rebellious in regard to the college debt?

In gospel bonds,
EDWARD RANNIE.

DENVER, Colorado, August 23, 1904.

Dear Herald: Leaving Bro. J. F. Curtis at Antonito the writer called at Monte Vista, and spent three days visiting the Saints who are located there. Had a very pleasant visit with our aged Bro. G. O. Kennedy. He is very hard of hearing, and appreciates a visit from one who can talk to him. He understands altogether from the motion of the lips, and there are but few that he can understand. Also visited Sr. Ina Shaul, at Del Norte.

The next stopping-place was Pueblo, where I spent one day and night. Hope to make them a longer visit some time in the future. The work there is being looked after by Priest J. V. Woolsey. He is trying to hold the few Saints together, and is succeeding fairly well. They hold regular meetings.

Next to Lamar, where Priest M. F. Ralston is in charge. There are but two families of Saints here, and they are located on farms about fourteen miles northwest of the town of Lamar. They hold regular Sunday-school and prayer service. Bro. Martin has been doing considerable preaching in the schoolhouses in the surrounding country, and has openings at any time when he can fill appointments. He is farming on quite an extended scale, which hinders his doing much as he otherwise would.

The Dowieites are quite prominent in this neighborhood, and at one time opposed Bro. Ralston very hard, but they have not been very successful of late, and seem anxious to have him join in, and conduct services on alternate Sundays.

The writer preached two sermons in the Enterprise school-house while there, and had large and very attentive congregations. The Dowieites turning out enmasse. There are some fine people among them, and we think if proper effort is put forth in the future some of them may be led to see the true light. We were urged to come again and share their hospitality.

While waiting for the train at Lamar to take us to Fairmount we called on an aged sister by the name of Hinman who was a member of the Amboy, Illinois, Branch in 1860, and well remembers the conference when our present president was chosen to lead the church. She has not heard a sermon in about thirty years, but the old spark still remains, and she is interested in the progress of the Master's cause.

Arriving at Fairmount at three o'clock in the morning we were met at the train by Bro. John Brennan and his brother-in-law, Bro. Jervis, of Keb, Iowa (who is visiting him). Preached Saturday and Sunday nights at the home of Bro. Elmer Petre to a full house. Bro. Fred Petre arrived Sunday afternoon with the district tent from Raton, New Mexico. The brethren put it up in Bro. Fred's yard, and the writer held forth in it until Wednesday night, the 10th instant.

The congregations were large and very attentive. Having now stayed two weeks over the time allotted us by our firm we had to set our face homeward. We returned very much refreshed, both physically and spiritually, and feel if there has been as much benefit derived to those visited as there has been to the visitor, our trip shall not have been in vain.

We may be a little enthusiastic, but it seems to the writer that there is a good work can be done in several places visited if we only had the missionary force to carry it on. In the neighborhood where Bro. Ralston lives there are at least a half dozen schoolhouses that can be had for the asking, and a congregation guaranteed. At Rocky Ford, Reverend Smiley, of Denver, has been conducting revival tent-meetings, and now comes the contrast with, we believe, good effect. Two daughters of Sr. Crowley (fine, sensible young women) are very much interested in their souls' salvation: having attended these revival meetings they wanted to connect themselves with the Christian Church; but the mother not believing that way persuaded them to wait until Christmas before joining. Bro. Brennan and the writer happened in just at the right time, and Bro. B. gave them the gospel in its purity for about two hours, and promised to follow up with reading-matter which they promised to read. If they do so they will be fit for something better than the Christian Church by the time Christmas rolls around. May God bless the good work begun.

The harvest truly is great and the laborers few. May the time be not far distant when there will be more laborers sent into this part of the vineyard.

Yours for truth,

E. F. SHUPE.

DUNNEGAN, Missouri, August 27, 1904.

Editors Herald: We have had a visit from two of the elders (A. C. Silvers and G. W. Beebe) that has resulted in great good to members of the church. For myself I can say that it has strengthened my faith and given me a deeper knowledge of the work. Jesus said, "In whatsoever house ye enter let your peace come upon it."

I have been with some brethren in this church that I could feel the Spirit of God emanating from, and when these two brethren named were in the house there was more of that divine calmness, "which none but he who feels it knows." One reason that I am telling this is, that to me it formed a link with the church that Jesus was with in Palestine. I watched the effect of their kind and forceful sermons, especially on religious people. Some enjoyed them, some were uneasy, some were stirred to persecute. They rang the school-bell, cow-bells, smoked at the windows, threw rocks at schoolhouse, etc. A public school-teacher assumed a false name and under the guise of friendship induced the brethren to go home with him. They were taken about a mile and a half in the timber to an old building supposed to be a stable, where they were told to wait till feed was brought—for the horses. Waiting becoming tedious, after praying, the brethren concluded to return to my house, where they arrived at ten minutes after one in the morning.

The statement has been made since that the object was to whip the brethren, but they did not stay long enough where they were left. And now behold these kidnapers and would-be men-beaters were Baptists. The last Sunday the brethren were here Bro. Beebe preached a sermon that brought son Archie to himself and from that time he has taken his proper place in the church. He has attended the reunion at Eldorado Springs, where, under the hands of Patriarch Henry Kemp, precious promises were repeated, given first by Elder Kendrick in London, England, when he was blessed; only the fulfillment of these promises can make our faith and joy greater. Before I knew of this church of Christ an elder of the church that I belonged to, and myself, fasted and prayed that our children (not yet born) might become the servants of God. I was led to this church, called to preach, and ordained; preached in his neighborhood; he came out in opposition to us in public. It was revealed to wife and I that he should lose his child; we told him, and so it happened. Ours is here preparing for the battle. Surely this is God's church. We are having prayer, testimony, and sacrament meetings in our houses. Last fall I preached here for two weeks; good congregations. Two brought near the kingdom came to our meetings, yet one of them suggested that if all these churches would unite it would surely then be the church of Christ; Sr. Waterman answered, "Might as well say that it would take all the girls of the neighborhood to make one good wife."

We thank God for the visit of his servants because it has done so much for us. A daughter of Bro. Bellville was also baptized.

In hope of eternal life,

WM. WATERMAN.

REDICKVILLE, Ontario, August 29, 1904.

Dear Herald: A few words to let you know how God's work is moving in this part of his vineyard. This place is about twenty-two miles southwest of Collingwood, which is on Georgian Bay. I had the pleasure of baptizing and confirming six yesterday,—three men and three women,—which makes eight since coming here, nine since General Conference. About one hundred people witnessed the baptism. A beautiful day, good order. Thank God for this "marvelous work and a wonder." I have sold over sixty dollars' worth of church books since General Conference, and the dear Saints have paid about three hundred dollars in tithing since I came here, and have not forgotten Little Gracie, either, but are doing their part.

Ever hoping and working for Zion's cause, and ever expecting to be till the grand work is finished,

Yours in hope,

T. A. PHILLIPS.

LAMONI, Iowa, August 25, 1904.

Dear Herald: It is wonderful to think that the Lord is indeed preparing a people for his coming. To-day my companion is going to the Stewartsville reunion for which she has longed so much. It was in a reunion that I had one of the greatest testimonies I ever had, which I will never forget. One night I was prompted to bear my testimony, but did not do it. The next night Bro. M. T. Short was preaching during a hard rain storm. Bro. Short had his overcoat on and the rain was pouring through the tent. Some will remember the time. I was shown that I could not always do as I pleased. That night I was struck blind as could be while listening to Bro. Short, and I wondered and wondered if I would stay blind all my life. I prayed to God, and plead with him that I might receive my sight again, and to know why this great evil had happened to me. All at once the words came to me, You did not bear your testimony when you were told to do so. I then promised I would bear my testimony anywhere the Spirit directed, and I have so far kept my promise. I have written this that it may be a warning to God's people to speak when prompted by the Spirit; for this work is "a marvelous work and a wonder."

A man in our town asked me how I could prove that Joseph Smith had seen the angel? I told him there were three witnesses that the angel did come; and he said they were all dead. I told him David Whitmer had not been dead long, and that I had a letter from him in regard to the angel. He said if I could show him the letter from David Whitmer he could believe. I showed him the letter, which reads: "I did see the angel as it is recorded in my testimony in the Book of Mormon. The book is true." This was given to me February 15, 1837. When the man had read it he said it was wonderful, and if he had it he would not take a good deal of money for it. I do not know what the result will be.

May God grant his Spirit in power to the elders of his church, that they may bring many to a realization of the truth of the gospel of the Son of God, is the wish of

Your unworthy brother in Christ,

ROBERT NELSON.

DALLAS, Texas, August 23, 1904.

Editors Herald: Bro. Simmons and the writer arrived in Dallas the 10th inst. from the Indian Territory and found that ever congenial brother and colaborer, John Harp, who had made arrangements for a two-week meeting; and, finding a good crowd waiting, our meeting began in good shape, and continued to the last with increasing interest. We closed our effort Sunday the 21st after having the pleasure of seeing three noble ones buried beneath the wave Sunday afternoon. This makes ten baptized at this place in all.

The work here is building slow but sure, and we look forward with the assurance of God's Spirit that there will be a grand work accomplished here at no distant day. Many are almost persuaded.

Some howling in the distance, that, "When you come again we will have our man ready to meet you," but as this is an old howl we are not disturbed. We are confident that God will take care of his work.

I leave here to-day for Coalgate, Indian Territory, where arrangements have been made to begin a discussion with one of the Millennial Dawn people on the first day of September. I am glad to say that my heart is in the work of the Master more than ever before, and hope to continue faithful to the end.

Your brother in bonds,
T. J. SHEPPARD.

HOLDEN, Missouri, September 1, 1904.

Editors Herald: The reunion of the Spring River District lately held at Berry Ferry, Indian Territory, was an excellent meeting from first to last. The speakers were blessed in presenting the word and their preaching was very instructive to all. The prayer-meetings were spiritual and edifying, and the gifts of the Spirit were manifested through Patriarch Henry Kemp giving comfort and encouragement, and that great blessings were extended to the Lamanites. Twelve were baptized and some were of the most prominent people of that race. I find many places open for preaching in the Indian country and I never enjoyed myself better since I have been in the ministry. There is no time for idleness on the part of the minister. I found the Saints very willing helpers, and Bro. J. Riley a very congenial colaborer, and very highly esteemed by Saints and outsiders, and there is much work for him to do if he remains faithful. I am at home for a few days to visit family and attend the reunion and conference here.

In the faith,
F. M. SLOVER.

HAMILTON, Ontario, August 30, 1904.

Editors Herald: I feel it a pleasure to write you a few lines, on account of my love for the everlasting gospel, which we hold so dear to our hearts. My faith helps me to search for its hidden treasures, and I discover thereby the searchlight of truth. This work is of God. I know it. I have proven it. Dear Saints, pray for me. I believe in prayer. I love music, reading, and discussion. I am a locomotive engineer on the Toronto, Hamilton & Buffalo Railway. I pull a passenger train daily. I have a dear wife, (one of the world's best,) and five children. Three of them are married. A lovely boy and girl are still at home.

This month my wife, two children, and I went to St. Louis to the World's Fair, and we just had a good time. Our home is nearly eight hundred miles from St. Louis. But we enjoyed the trip, and praised the Lord for his loving kindness. We met with the Saints in their beautiful church at St. Louis, and enjoyed the meetings, the Lord blessing us with his Holy Spirit. How grand it is to be a Latter Day Saint! I distributed tracts from Hamilton to St. Louis, and on the World's Fair ground to the many people I met. A lady told me in Tower Park that the tract I gave her was the only religious literature she had seen since her arrival in St. Louis.

HIRAM DICKHOUT.

BAILEY, Nebraska, August 28, 1904.

Editor Herald: In HERALD of August 24 is a letter from V. M. Goodrich, New Philadelphia, Ohio, telling how the work is progressing in that place; and particularly what the Daughters of Zion are doing to raise money to be used toward "helping the Master's cause." He says "They have a quilt with numbers sold nearing three hundred."

Now I think that is a questionable way of raising means for the Lord's work. It is a lottery, and is in the same line with "fish-ponds," "grab-bags," etc., and ought not to be even thought of as a means of raising funds by the Saints. To my certain knowledge some of the denominations will not sell tickets on articles for church purposes, while some of them will, and do. But I do not think the Saints do as a rule use questionable means of raising money for the benefit of the church or college,—at least I hope not. It is too much like gambling.

I have been giving out our HERALDS to those not of our faith, and I feel sorry to have to apologize for things that the Saints do. One lady that I have been giving the HERALDS, took issue against her own church people for wanting to sell tickets on a quilt to raise funds for their church. This same lady is investigating our claims and is very favorably impressed, and I will be sorry to have her see where the Saints raise funds by this same lottery business.

Respectfully yours for truth,
MRS. SARAH L. WEED.

HENRIETTA, Missouri, August 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since any one has written from this vicinity. I have been a member of the church about eleven years, and have taken both the Ensign and HERALD during that time.

This is very rough ground, yet it has been plowed some. About ten days ago Bro. F. C. Warnky came here. He removed a great deal of rubbish and prejudice, and planted gospel seed that I believe will bring forth fruit. Saints seem to come up higher while the rest of the seed is germinating. Am sorry his time of departure is so near at hand, for he is having big crowds, and good interest. He is the right man in the right place, and I can not express my joy at his coming among us. May he live to wave the gospel banner till all Israel shall be gathered home, or till Jesus comes.

This work brings joy, peace, and comfort to my soul. I know it is divine. Dear Saints, let us not get careless or slothful, nor weary, but keep the camp-fires blazing. Hoping and praying for the advancement of the truth,

Your brother,
G. D. LONDON.

LA BELLE, Idaho, August 27, 1904.

Editors Herald: Since last writing we have done considerable street preaching at Idaho Falls and Blackfoot, and attended a district conference that was held in the grove of Bro. James Jennings. A spiritual feast was enjoyed by all. Three were baptized, and others are searching the Scriptures daily to see if our teachings are in harmony therewith. After the conference Brn. A. J. Layland, S. D. Condit, J. H. Condit, and the writer left by team for the north, and arrived at La Belle in time to hear our Utah friends reply to an effort made by Bro. S. D. Condit the week previous. They bore a strong (?) testimony to their work and stated that but few people realized the great amount of good that had been done by Joseph F. Smith's testimony before the Senate Committee.

However, Bro. Condit was privileged to review their reply the next evening, and I believe good will be the result. The writer speaks to-night at the Lorenzo schoolhouse about two miles west of La Belle. Bro. Jasper Jennings kindly furnishes us a horse and buggy to get about with, which is quite an aid in the work. Hoping for the best, I remain

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

COVINGTON, Kentucky, August 31, 1904.

Editors Herald: I thought I would write a few words to the HERALD as I have only here of late learned to appreciate that good paper. I have only been a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints since the 10th of July, having on that day been baptized by Elder J. W. Metcalf, of Louisville Branch. I am so glad to be able to say that I am at last in the right path. My husband has been a member for eleven years. We hope to have a branch here before long. There are seven families of Saints here now. Bro. William Hanner is doing the best he can for us. We have a Sunday-school now, and prayer-meeting after Sunday-school. The attendance is small as yet, but we hope to have a better attendance soon. Bro. Hanner comes over and preaches to some people on Banklick Street, this city, once a week, and on Orchard Street once. The interest seems to be good. Brn. Metcalf and Kelley have written us that they are coming to preach for us again in the fall. We are glad to have the gospel preached to us whenever we can. We hope to have others brought into the fold here in Covington. I have written enough for this time. Asking the prayers of all the dear Saints for my husband, my little boy, and myself, and wishing success to the HERALD, I am,

Your sister in the one faith,
HESTER DAMON.

Stewartsville Reunion.

The twelfth annual reunion for Northern Missouri was advertised to convene on August 19, but a much-needed rain prevented an organization until the morning of the 20th, though a preaching service was had the evening before. The reunion was organized by choosing T. T. Hinderks as president, John Davis as vice-president, and C. P. Faul as secretary.

All day Saturday the Saints were arriving and taking possession of the tents which were already up. A splendid spirit prevailed from the start. And so far as could be discerned there was not a jar from start to finish. Early Sunday morning teams began to arrive from the surrounding country, bringing in a large number of Saints and nonmembers who came to spend the day. Several who have attended former reunions were heard to say that there was a larger number of nonmembers present than had ever attended a reunion before. While the crowd was large the best of feeling prevailed and good order was the rule. About four o'clock a storm began to threaten, and the people hastened to their homes. A heavy rain fell which prevented the evening service, but which did not seem to dampen the enthusiasm of the campers, though some of them were put to no little inconvenience. The remainder of the time the reunion was remarkably blessed with favorable weather.

The preaching seemed to be thoroughly enjoyed by those present. And while on the last Sunday four preaching services were held, the large crowd which was in attendance was very attentive throughout and seemed to appreciate the efforts made for their enlightenment. The Sunday-school and Religio work was ably represented each day at a quarter to eleven by Elder J. A. Gunsolley. The singing was in charge of Sr. Carrie M. Lewis, and was one of the pleasant features of the reunion. The prayer-meetings were very spiritual and uplifting. The gifts were manifest, to the comfort and edification of those present, entreating them to a closer walk with God, promising them great blessings upon their compliance.

Very little sickness was noticeable, and all were led to "praise God from whom all blessings flow." At the business-meeting at the close of the reunion it was decided to hold a reunion at the same place next year, the time to be decided by the committee. The Saints manifested their appreciation of the former efforts of the committee by unanimously choosing them as their committee for next year. There were eight baptized during the reunion.

The writer has seldom spent ten days that were as full of enjoyment as were the ten days of this reunion. The manifestation of brotherly love was evidenced upon every hand, and a foretaste of Zion in its redeemed condition was realized. We feel sure that if the Saints generally could enjoy ten days' relaxation, and attend a reunion of this character, they would be stronger spiritually, and better prepared for the battles of life.

LAMONI, Iowa.

F. B. BLAIR.

Massachusetts Reunion.

The fifth annual reunion of the Massachusetts District was held at Silver Lake, Plymouth County, Massachusetts, August 6 to 15, and was a decided success in every way. The attendance was larger than ever before and more tents were required than at any other reunion held in this district. Twenty people were baptized and several in that community heard the word. The Plymouth Observer printed a favorable account of the meeting. Saints and friends were present from various parts throughout the East and one and all seemed to heartily enjoy the association of each other and the spiritual refreshment bountifully bestowed. The prayer-meetings were excellent from beginning to end. At one time during the young peoples' prayer service eight testimonies were given in four minutes. They were touching and very edifying. The committee which had been appointed to make all necessary arrangements for the reunion did their work in a satisfactory and commendable manner. The gathering was organized by selecting F. M. Smith, R. C. Evans, and F. M. Sheehy to preside. There was little if any sickness, though the weather was damp and rainy part of the time. The morning was announced by the blowing of the reveille promptly at six o'clock, when all were expected to arise and prepare for breakfast at seven. Prayer-meetings were held every morning at nine o'clock and preaching at a quarter to eleven. The afternoon was spent in recreation, bathing, boating, base-ball, etc. Program of the Sunday-school association was rendered on one afternoon and also one presented under the auspices of the Religio societies upon another occasion. Both were much enjoyed.

The visit of Presidents Smith and Evans was profic of good, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

The general opinion seemed to be that the preaching throughout was of a high order, containing inspiring sentiments and food for thought.

The commissary boarding-tent as managed by the committee was very successful and apparently satisfactory to all.

Silver Lake is a most beautiful and convenient place for holding gatherings of this kind,—an excellent opportunity for the scattered Saints and friends to mingle together to mutual benefit. Also those who plan an "outing" will scarcely find a better place than is to be found in the pine woods on the picturesque shore of Silver Lake. Besides the recreation and rest one can receive helpful encouragement by association with the Saints and friends, and the preaching of the word.

Every one seems to be encouraged with the success of this reunion, and look forward to the gathering next year with eager and joyful anticipation.

W. E. LARUE.

Kentucky and Tennessee Reunion.

The reunion convened July 30, at Crossland, Kentucky, presided over by Elder T. C. Kelley. During the reunion twenty-four sermons were preached, many testimonies and prayers offered, all bidding God-speed to the great work, and we have strong evidence manifested unto us that the good Master was smiling upon the assembly of Saints. The good Spirit seemed to prevail wonderfully. The meetings were the grandest we ever experienced, and the preaching the best we ever heard. Some of the elders, and many of the Saints said the same. This reunion was the means of restoring love and confidence among the Saints. The preaching services each night for some four or five nights were accompanied by a band of music just a little way from the tent, and that music highly seasoned with eggs. But few of the eggs came into our tent, however, and after a while the music ceased, and the boys were left to throw the eggs alone.

We appreciate the many kind favors, and the hospitality shown us by the good people at Crossland. Some are not far from the kingdom of God. May the good Lord bless them and give them light. Four were baptized.

Yours in bonds,
S. H. FIELDS.

Extracts from Letters.

W. R. Rush, Lees Summit, Missouri, August 28, writes, "I highly esteem the weekly visits of the HERALD and Ensign each week. Have been a subscriber of the Ensign since before I joined the church in 1899. We should never lose interest in this great latter-day work. As Saints we are scorned; but Christ says we are blessed when persecuted for his name's sake."

Charles H. Burr, Crabtown, Iowa, August 27: "We are having a fine interest here and a large and interested audience at each service. Three baptized last Sunday, and we are sure that many are believing the gospel and are inclined to accept it."

D. F. Coombs, Shawmut, New Bedford, Massachusetts, renewing subscription, says, "I will never relinquish my church books, but will strive to pay for and read all the church literature that I can, and will endeavor to lead others to see the truth as it should be taught."

J. D. Erwin, Berry's Ferry, Indian Territory, August 24: "The reunion is running full blast, and crowds increasing. The Holy Spirit is with us in the gifts of the gospel. My debate with C. Stetson, Baptist, will begin September 12, at Hartshorn. Bro. Henry Kemp and his stenographer have promised to be with us."

S. J. Madden writing from Osborn, Kansas, August 26, says: "This district is in very good condition, except a few who are out of line of duty. We have a fine church-building at Bazine, Kansas, worth a thousand dollars, which Saints and friends have nearly paid for."

John Kaler, North Chariton County, Missouri, August 25: "I have been preaching in an arbor assisted by Bro. George Essig, who lives here. Have spoken twenty times. Sunday six were baptized, and others are believing. Last month five were baptized in Randolph County, into the Greenleaf Branch. Bro. Tanner and I are the only missionaries in the district, but we hope to see many more obey the good tidings of salvation in the near future. My home address is Knobnoster, Missouri."

Professor Charles Ratchet, a French authority, states that during the nineteenth century 14,000,000 of people died in consequence of war; 8,000,000 died for the glory of Napoleon; the Crimean War cost 300,000; the American Civil War 500,000. Prussia required the death of 800,000 between 1860 and 1871; the Russo-Turkish War 400,000. The wars of the South American republics cost 500,000 lives. To obtain dominion in British India, South Africa, Mexico, the Dutch Indies, China, Japan, and other places, various European powers sacrificed 3,000,000 of men; an awful penalty in blood to pay for the possible supremacy of the few over the many.

We are greeted by the Christian Educator and God's Defender, volume 1, number 9, published at Great Bend, Kansas. It is the advocate of a new church, styled the "Church of Humanity." It is an attack upon faith in God and in Christ and in the Bible as containing the will of God concerning the moral actions of man. It is only a step removed from rank infidelity, though it assumes to call itself God's defender. It states in the headlines, that it is "devoted to teaching the discovery that God is a myth like Santa Claus, and to founding the Church of Humanity." It states that the total enrollment of the church is forty-eight; number of States represented, sixteen.

A LETTER AND A RELIC.

We publish below a letter from Sr. Effie Benedict, accompanied by a copy of an invitation to a ball issued by the managers of a dance to be held at the Mansion House in Keokuk, Iowa, twelve miles below Nauvoo, Illinois, on the Mississippi River at the foot of the lower rapids. As Sr. Benedict remarks, the character of the men may be known from the wording of the notice. We knew the Mr. Orton to whom it was sent for many years. He was an excellent musician; was his own worst enemy, being a victim of the drink habit, a vice then very prevalent. James Orton was a noted player for the parties of the time. His home was at Montrose, Iowa, opposite Nauvoo.

"THE CABIN," Montana, August 24, 1904.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother Joseph: We came to this delightful spot in the mountains July 3, to camp out for a few weeks. We are only four miles south from Helena. The scenery here is grand and the air so pure and fresh it is a luxury to breathe.

The place is called Unionville, and it was once a thriving mining camp. There are still perhaps a dozen families making their home here, and each summer a number of people, like ourselves, come up here from Helena to camp during the months of July and August, and thus avoid the heat and dust, and perhaps sickness, we might encounter in the city.

Most of the Unionville homes are log cabins. We cook and eat in a log cabin and sleep in tents. There is quite a large hall made of logs and equipped with seats, lights, and an organ. All public gatherings are held in this hall, such as school elections, church, Sunday-school, dances, and the like.

We were camping here last summer and I made it my business to get acquainted with the people here, and to show myself friendly for a certain purpose.

I learned they knew nothing of the restored gospel and when it seemed wisdom I talked to them on the subject and loaned them my church papers and books.

This year I invited Bro. W. H. Kelley to visit us and at the same time hold services in the old hall. He came the last week in July and spent a week and a half with us, giving us fine sermons, speaking nearly every evening, and twice on the two Sundays he was here.

While attending to duty and visiting around among the good people here he also received a much-needed rest, for the heat of Utah, where he had lately labored, had nearly prostrated him. It was indeed refreshing to him to get into this cool place, sleep in a tent, "prospect," and feast his eyes on Nature's beauty and grandeur, which is so much in evidence in these mountains.

It happened that his son, Bro. James E. Kelley, arrived in Helena about the same time, so we invited him "to camp" and he occupied the "pulpit" in the old hall in a very acceptable manner on two evenings. It does my heart good to see the young men in our church taking such an active interest in the work. May God bless and help them! Our audience was not large, but very attentive, and there are three families, at least, who seem quite interested, and are now busy reading and investigating our claims.

I have just sent in two orders for the Ensign and for a large copy of the Book of Mormon; and four copies of Bro. W. H. Kelley's book, Presidency and Priesthood, have been received and are being carefully read. My Book of Mormon, Voice of Warning, With the Church in an Early Day, and several tracts are loaned and being read here. I am hopeful that good will result from the effort made.

Two superior young ladies, Miss Sien and Miss Carpenter (the latter played the organ for us), did all they could to make our meetings a success. The two young ladies organized a Sunday-school just before we came, and I have, and shall continue to help them with their good work as long as I am here. I have been teaching the Bible class since Bro. Kelley left us.

The inclosed is an exact copy of something I found tacked on the walls of the Historical and Miscellaneous Society Library which is located in our new State House. I asked Mrs. Howie, the librarian, where she obtained it, and she told me it was donated to the society by a Mr. Orton (an old-time "fiddler"), who received the original invitation to the "ball." I believe he lives in Montana now, but in early days lived near or at Keokuk, Iowa. Orton Bros. (his sons) have a fine large music store in Butte at present. The language used in the invitation (?) is sufficient to make one understand what kind of characters the "manegars" were. Any respectable person would be ashamed to be found in such company. Thought this inclosed copy might be a sort of "curio" for you.

I am thankful you keep so well and active, Bro. Joseph.

With cordial regards for yourself and family, I am, as ever,

Your sister in Christ,

A SANCTIFIED SALOON.

Pishop Potter, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, of New York, not long since lent his ecclesiastical presence and authority to the opening and christening of a saloon at the corner of Bleeker and Mulberry Streets, New York City. It was set apart by singing and prayer, and, we suppose, an address on the part of the Reverend Bishop. The Atlanta, Georgia, Constitution for Sunday, August 13, 1904, has the following stringent criticism on the act of Bishop Potter, which we produce as being not only applicable but a very just as well as pungent rebuke to the folly of the Reverend Bishop:

The whole country seems now to be exercised over the Bishop Potter sanctified saloon incident. This is especially true of New York. When I arrived there from the West last Friday I proceeded at once to the corner of Bleeker and Mulberry Streets to inspect, for myself, this monstrosity in the reform world. It was about nine o'clock at night when Mrs. Broughton, Len, Jr., Miss Holmes and myself walked into the "Tavern." To our surprise it was just like any old saloon, only the ladies had the front. A huge fountain dispensing drinks of all sorts, principally beer and cocktails, was for them. The men have to go back of a screen and step up to the counter and drink just as if the thing had not been dedicated to God by the bishop of a great church.

They were doing a rushing business that night. The clerks could not satisfy the demand. It was just such a sight as one sees in an average Decatur Street saloon on Saturday. A few old books and papers were on a table in the center of the saloon and a few nice chairs sorter gave it the appearance of one of our third-rate clubs. It is a regular groggery of a very low type.

The interesting part of our visit, at least to the other members of the party, was that in spite of my trying to appear like anything else but a parson, one of the managers came up to me and said, "You are the Reverend Doctor Bowden, are you not?" I said, "No, sir, I am down here to test your saloon products." "Oh," said he, "I know you. Those are your ladies seated there at the fountain. I don't exactly get your name, but I know you just the same." There is no telling what we would have done in that sanctified devil trap had our identity not been discovered.

All in all it's the biggest farce of this age of farces. The most influential pulpits of New York yesterday came down upon it with force. Bishop Potter would be regarded as an idiot if he were not at the head of a great church in New York. Surely his act of dedicating a saloon to God and singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" over the most damnable concern the church has to contend with, seems to be the work of a madman rather than a minister of Jesus Christ.

I shall watch it closely during my Sunday engagements in New York, and when I get home I'll inform on it in detail. My, my, what the Devil is up to is a caution! I have been greatly impressed with New York's Sunday. There has been a great improvement in this respect in the last few years. Inside of New York there is a splendid Sunday. It is almost as quiet as Atlanta.

Everywhere I've been I'm more and more convinced that the "open town" policy is a thing of the past. There is a better day dawning for our cities. I hope Atlanta will keep this in mind in the present campaign. We are in the front ranks in this respect; let us keep up our standard.

We are on our way to Northfield, Massachusetts. This letter is written on the White Mountain express.—By Reverend Len G. Broughton.

DEDICATION AT PACKARD, IOWA.

We reached Packard, Iowa, from Minneapolis, on July 23, and were taken to the home of Bro. W. H. Farr. Found Sr. Farr slowly recovering from injuries received in runaway accident a few days previously. No appointments were out for that night, so we rested.

The dedicatory exercises were set for half past ten Sunday morning, July 24. The audience which assembled then quite comfortably filled the newly erected edifice. A goodly number of nonmembers attended. The writer was called upon for the dedicatory sermon, F. A. being in charge of the meeting and delivering the dedicatory prayer. Mrs. Earnest Packard kindly assisted in the exercises, (also in afternoon and evening,) by playing the organ and assisting in the singing. Under the circumstances her services were very acceptable. Services were again held in the afternoon and at evening, F. A. being the speaker. Following the morning service Bro. F. B. Farr baptized his aunt, who has been an earnest member of the Methodist Church.

The little chapel dedicated at Packard is a neat little structure of about the usual style for such buildings. In its erection there was a cash outlay of about four hundred and forty-three dollars, and work donated to about the amount of two hundred and twenty-five dollars. Church members and nonmembers donated money towards its erection. At the time of its erection one hundred and seventy dollars and seventy-five cents had been received on subscriptions, and there was still due on subscriptions one hundred and twenty-five dollars. The indebtedness of about one hundred and forty-eight dollars had been assumed by the committeemen as personal debt in order that the church could be dedicated.

Bro. Fred B. Farr, a young elder just recently entered the missionary force, has for some time past been president of the Packard Branch, and seems to be an energetic and zealous worker. Bro. Sherman has assisted him as teacher, and Bro. W. H. Farr as deacon. The branch numbers now about twenty-three members. We trust they will work unitedly and earnestly toward the upbuilding of the cause.

On Monday we left Packard for Waterloo, where Brn. F. A., Farr, and McKiernan expected to work for a while. In the afternoon I took leave for home, thus separating from Bro. F. A. after a sojourn of several weeks. I found him a very pleasant companion, ready and willing to do his share and more of the ministerial work. He has the work in his field well in hand and is ready to do what he asks his fellow laborers to do, that is, work zealously for the progress of the cause.

F. M. SMITH.

GRACELAND NOTES.

The bishops and agents of most of the districts are zealously working to discharge their duty and also to assist the Saints in the performance of theirs pertaining to the liquidation of the college debt. Some districts have raised their entire pro rata, and others are rapidly reducing. Recently Bro. G. J. Waller, agent for the Sandwich Islands Mission, sent in the complete amount for that mission.

Remittances have recently been received from agents of Central Nebraska, Alabama, Mobile, Central Texas, Eastern Iowa, Little Sioux, Southern California, Idaho, Eastern Michigan, and Kentucky and Tennessee Districts, and Lone Star, Alabama, and Genoa, West Virginia, Branches. Bro. H. B. Thompson, in sending contributions from the latter branch, wrote on August 29, inquiring as to the proportional amount of the college debt for that branch, and writes, "Your favor containing statement of our part of college debt received. Since we wrote last our branch has increased one by baptism, so we are now seventeen in number. Inclosed find seven dollars for the college."

Mrs. Anna Wick, of the Northeastern Illinois District, sends in twenty-one dollars as a contribution towards paying the college debt from the Saints' Sewing Society, of Ladd, Illinois.

Doctor J. Longfield, of Turney, Missouri, in sending in his tithing, also remembers the college debt to the extent of ten dollars.

Mrs. Margaret Bramston, Newcastle, New South Wales, writes: "I see by a late HERALD that Graceland College is about to be closed on account of lack of interest taken by the Saints. I would be sorry if that had to be the case. I wish to contribute towards it by inclosing one pound out of my earnings, and only wish I could afford more. I think every Saint should take an interest in the work and help build it up for our heavenly Father."

James Potter writing from the same place, says: "I am also anxious to fulfill my duty in the matter of assisting Graceland. I think that it is a duty devolving upon all Saints, more especially those who have means. And I am sure that the Lord would not ask for the debt to be paid if it was not possible for the Saints to do it. I have no regular occupation at present, but I am ready to sacrifice. I inclose five shillings, wishing you every success in your good work."

The Sisters' Mite Society of the Newport Branch, Anaheim, California, send in twenty dollars by their secretary, Sr. Maggie C. Carmichael, who writes: "This is not part of the assessment of this district."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Don Alvin, son of Patriarch A. H. Smith, of Lamoni, died at the State Hospital, at Clarinda, Iowa, September 8, of cancer, and was buried from the Saints' Church, Lamoni, on Sunday, the 11th, a large gathering of relatives and friends being present. Exercises at the grave were under the auspices of the order of Odd Fellows, of which the deceased was a member.

Bro. W. E. LaRue forwards a copy of the Observer, Plymouth, Massachusetts, which gives a half column notice of the reunion at Silver Lake.

The recent work at Electric Park, Wellston, Ohio, received considerable attention in the columns of the Daily Sentinel and Transcript of that place. Sermons of Brn. Ebeling and Greene were reviewed. We feel to say, as we have said before, that the press is becoming more and more favorable to our work. The differences between the Reorganized and Utah Churches becoming generally known, it is much easier to secure a proper representation.

THE CHURCH EXISTENT.—NO. 2.

SERMON BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
AUGUST 28, 1904.

It will be remembered by those of you who were here last Sunday morning, that the effort of the preacher was to show that if there was a body recognized as the Church of Christ upon the earth, now, into which men might become members, and of which, when they became members, they should be the mystical body of Christ, it could be found as a result of one of three ways only. One by continuous authority, traced back to Christ and his immediate disciples in an unbroken chain of authority and descent, or it might have been evolved out of the chaos of religious beliefs by slow processes, until it should have attained unto its full proportion as the Church of Christ. If not in one of these two ways there was only one other way left; that was by restoration through the revelation of God. Time did not permit me to cover the entire ground of the discussion between us and others, nor will to-day suffice; but a portion of the time will be taken up in a consideration of whether we may be able to maintain the proposition that the church is existent by virtue of restoration, and how shall we undertake to prove it. For it is useless, entirely so in our opinion, to claim the church existent by either of these methods unless we are prepared to show identity in doctrine, processes of development, and in organization.

It must be evident to you all that if God through Jesus Christ has a church upon the earth, it is subject to identification. I propose to show you some items of identification, which, perhaps, may be known to all of you. If not it will be instructive to some.

It is said of Jesus, that upon one occasion he said in reference to his work, I must preach this gospel of the kingdom in other cities; and he excused himself from going where he was invited upon that occasion.

No matter what may be our denominational name, to-day, all of us agree that faith in God is essential, as a principle, and we accept the reasoning of the Apostle Paul when he says, "without faith it is impossible to please God. For every one that cometh unto him must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them who seek him." We will not attempt to argue the thought that faith must be found in the members, or in the body known as the Church of Christ. It is a foregone conclusion. However, in forming an epitome of faith in 1842 from that which had been given to the church, from the scriptures and by direct revelation, faith in God is put as the first principle of the gospel of the Son of God. This agrees identically with what is written of the Apostle Paul in the sixth chapter of Hebrews. In that portion of scripture the six foundation or fundamental principles of the doctrine of Christ are described. They are explicitly named. Now if the Apostle Paul was right, and we take the ground, to-day, that he was, wherever that church may be found, it must be found in doctrinal form based upon these grand fundamental truths, or principles. I may call them actual facts, to-day. And facts are stubborn things. One of the reasons why we are so persistent in urging this is: that we accede to the thought without controversy, that faith in God, repentance, and remission of sins, are taught almost universally, and constitute a large portion, and in some instances the only real portions of solid belief in some of our antagonistic friends. While we accede this, we do so for this reason: that in the twenty-fourth chapter of Luke, and in the forty-seventh verse, Jesus has said, and left upon record for everybody to read who will, "Repentance and remission of sins shall be preached . . . among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." And further, "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." (Matthew 24: 14.)

With others of adventist belief we believe that Jesus will come and deliver his people, Israel; that the second coming is impending; that he came in the flesh, and will come again in the flesh. But before he can come again, there must be a fulfillment of what he has said in reference to it; and as a consequence when he said that repentance and remission of sins shall be preached in all the world beginning at Jerusalem, it has been done, and is being done, to-day. There is no church organization anywhere but what preaches repentance, and remission of sins. The last development on American soil, Alexander Dowie, teaches these with other things. The Salvation Army teaches it. All the Protestant churches teach it. The mother Catholic Church teaches it. So that everywhere, and always, wherever Christ has been taught as the Redeemer of men, repentance and remission of sins have been taught. We are not alone in this, and we are quite willing to concede our brothers of different faith all that they have, to which they are entitled to make claim.

In order that we can make this identification complete we must show some way by which Jesus is implicated. That is to be the object of the morning lesson. But I hope some of you out-doors men who last Sunday nodded approval with your eyes shut, will keep your eyes open so I will know what you mean.

When Jesus came, as recited in Matthew 3: 2, John says of him, "Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." John was the forerunner, and according to what is stated in Mark and Luke and Matthew, he was to make straight the paths of the Lord. "Make his paths straight," was the commandment which was reiterated by him. That is one thing that we of this latter-day work insist upon, that the ways of the Lord shall be made and kept straight. That is the fault we find with others who differ from us. "He doth not walk in crooked paths."

This might go for the language of John alone, if it was not for the fact that in Matthew 4:17 the same language is used by the Master who says: "Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." This implicates him in the doctrine of repentance. "Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance." We have Christ implicated then in the doctrine of baptism. "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." We have him implicated in the doctrine of faith. Remission of sins,—we have him directly implicated in this doctrine in this form. In the twenty-eighth chapter of Matthew, and in the sixteenth of Mark, he sends out twelve commissioned men. The object of sending them is claimed by every Christian philosopher, no matter what pulpit he reasons from, the object of their being sent was to teach the doctrine of the Lord Jesus Christ. And they were commanded to go, in Matthew, and "teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." It is astonishingly strange that Jesus would command men to go and do a thing that he gave them no authority to do. It is an astonishing thing that he would command them to do a thing that there was no necessity for them to do. It would be an astonishing thing for us, to-day, the thought that he commissioned twelve men, and sent them out to preach and baptize in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, and there was no obligation upon men to be baptized. That would be a foolish kind of commission to give.

I join issue with one of the most remarkable evangelists and revivalists that we have had, because he made the statement controverting the idea that baptism was necessary for salvation. "Why," he says, "if I believed that baptism was essential for salvation, I would get a bucket and a broom and go down Broadway, (New York,) and baptize everybody." What he meant by that was that he would take a bucket of water and a whisk-broom, dip it in the water and sprinkle it upon those that passed. Now that was a travesty upon the subject entirely. It showed beyond controversy that he was not sent to baptize, for the reason that in Mark, when the commission as represented is stated by Jesus, he says, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," in Matthew. But in Mark, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Those masses of men and women passing this revivalist in Broadway, upon whom he would sprinkle water with his whisk-broom from the bucket which he carried in his hand, could not have constituted believers. The rankest infidels, and the meanest of men and women passed him—the gilded courtesan, and those in high life who were wicked, and the poor and the indigent who were careless, and never heard of Christ, they were all passing along Broadway, and he would have baptized the entire mass without reference to the idea whether they knew anything about the gospel of the Son of God, believing in Jesus Christ and having faith in him, or not.

We take it that by these two evidences found in the twenty-eighth of Matthew and sixteenth of Mark, that we conclude Jesus as teaching, authorizing at least, the teaching and performance of baptism, as an essential unto salvation. But as to absolute proof that he was identified in the doctrine, we turn to Matthew 3:13, 17, and read something there that will be of interest, no doubt, to all of you, and might be new to some, who are not Latter Day Saints, especially. And there may be some here who are inquiring. We will turn to it and read it, using the King James Translation as a matter of course.

"Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him." Now mark, the purpose for which he made this journey, from Galilee to Jordan, was to be baptized of John. John was a man sent of God. Jesus recognized it, and he went to him and received of his baptism. According to the record given both by Mark and by Luke, John's baptism was unto the remission of sins,—for the remission of sins. "But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." Here was the lawgiver, the great Christian lawgiver, the one upon whose shoulders the salvation of the human race was laid, upon whom was to be the great burden of lifting the human family from their condition of sinfulness, and to bring them into a condition of righteousness. How was he going to do it? By fulfilling all righteousness. And he, the Son of God, could not do that until he had gone and submitted to the royal law, the ordinance instituted of God, performed by this man who was sent of God, John. "Then he suffered him. And Jesus when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Now, we have Jesus, and so far as it is possible to do, the Spirit, coming down from God in heaven, and abiding upon him, indorsing the theory, the doctrine, the practice of baptism for the remission of sins.

We have our neighbors around us who sometimes some of them say they believe in baptism; but that it is not essential unto salvation. And while I was down at Independence two or three Sundays ago, a reverend gentleman referred to the idea of the Latter Day Saints insisting upon baptism and was so peculearly strenuous in regard to it, as against it, that he said, "This baptism,—I will baptize anybody that wants to be baptized, and I will baptize them any way they want to be baptized." What kind of a position is that for a representative of Jesus Christ to take? We have at the present time a great variety of baptisms. We have a baptism made by dipping the finger into the water which has been already sanctified by blessing for that purpose, and making the sign of the holy cross upon the forehead. We have the method of dipping the fingers in the water and sprinkling upon the face and head of the candidate. We have the lifting of the bowl and pouring the water upon the head of the candidate, or effusion. We have the taking of the candidate down into the water, and standing in the water with the candidate, immersing him in the water face uppermost, and raising him out of the water. We have the going down into the water by the candidate and the one performing the rite, and baptizing him while he kneels on his knees in the water, face foremost, three times, in order that he may be baptized in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost; and he is raised up out of his grave backwards. And of late there has been another innovation. I don't know whether this reverend gentleman would have employed that or not. That is by sprinkling flowers upon the body, beautiful flowers, petals,—might have been roses; might have been pinks, or some other beautiful flowers. This gentleman would have used any of these forms, but Jesus the Son of God was baptized in the waters of Jordan, submerged in the water, brought up out of the water, as argued by the Apostle Paul, in the likeness of his death, and in the likeness of his resurrection. I am not going to spend much time on the method. I just want to show the fact that Jesus was baptized.

Turn over to John's gospel, and in the third chapter (I am not going to make the argumant that Jesus himself baptized in person those that came to him; but you see what the word says) is something like this: "After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea, and there he tarried with them, and baptized." The ordinary reader taking that and reading it, and admitting that the language is just what it was intended to be, and conveys the idea that was intended to be conveyed, would conclude that Jesus tarried with his disciples in this place, and baptized. What follows? "And John also was baptizing in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized." Here are two baptisms taking place, one in the land of Judea, and one in Enon near to Salim. John was down there, and Jesus was up with his disciples in another place baptizing. Taking it for granted that Jesus himself did not perform the rite of baptism, by going down with candidates into the water, he stood right there with his disciples and confirmed their acts by witnessing them, by being privy to that which went before and that which came after. And nobody under the shining sun can avoid the conclusion that Jesus either baptized by himself or by his disciples. And it is a notorious truth that whatever a man does by an agent he does by himself. That confirms the proposition that we assume that men must now be authorized and accredited agents of Jesus Christ before they are prepared to baptize anybody in any form for the remission of their sins.

Have I concluded Jesus in the doctrine of baptism? Mind you we conceded the idea of faith, repentance, and remission of sins, and grant our brethren everywhere that they are assiduously engaged in teaching that; but when it comes to this question of baptism for the remission of sins, they hurl it back at our faces, that it is not for the remission of sins, and absolutely deny the positive proposition made by Luke in his third chapter, and Mark in his first chapter, and Acts second chapter, that it is for the remission of sins. Now let the quarrel be between mankind and Jesus Christ; for the declaration is made by him in the twelfth chapter of John, "The word that I have spoken, the same will judge him at the last day."

I have got three out of six principles, and have identified them as characteristic of the doctrine of Christ in the days of the apostles, and have absolutely implicated Jesus Christ in teaching and practicing every one of them. There are three more. The laying on of hands is one. You know that is a favored objection against the Latter Day Saints. The idea of their practicing the laying on of hands! These men that make fun of us forget that Jesus laid on hands for the healing of the sick. Bible readers all admit that. He absolutely laid on hands for the healing of the sick. And he commissioned his disciples to do it too. In the sixteenth chapter of Mark, the very one that we referred to as authority for preaching the word and baptizing people, says, "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." James understood it when he said, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick." How natural it is to put the hands upon a person's head and pray for him. That is the same kind of a thing that we read was done by the Savior when he laid his hands on his disciples, and breathed upon them, and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." He also laid on hands for ordination to the ministry. He ordained his twelve disciples. He says, Ye have not ordained me; I have ordained you. You have not chosen me, I have chosen you. "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." There is no question but what he was ordained and set apart. He was ordained minister extraordinary. The Father ordained him, evidently, before ever he left the courts of glory. And the fact that the Spirit descended upon him, acknowledging him as the beloved Son, characterizes him as the one who was chosen and ordained and set apart unto this great mission. Now suppose we do not quarrel about the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick. We find it is the plan God has given, and has authorized it to be done. And we have abundant evidence all through the history of our lives to show beyond question that as a doctrine it is believed by us, and as a practice it is practiced by us. And let me tell you that instances are on record in the Reorganized Church in which, where there has been a kind of epidemic, there has been a larger number of recoveries among those who have been sick who have received the laying on of the hands of the ministry alone, than among those who called the physicians and received the laying on of hands, and a great many more than those who were simply treated by the doctors with medicine. I have had a forty-year experience in this work. Bro. John Shippy has had more time in it than I have. And I bear witness to that I know. Well, we will pass that.

The laying on of hands for the blessing of little children. Surely everybody concedes that Jesus took them in his arms and blessed them, laid his hands upon them and conferred spiritual blessings upon them. I am thankful now, so far as this is concerned, that upon one occasion when a man came from the East to fight against us up there at Sandwich to overcome what we were striving to do, he said in a kind of an excusable way, "When Jesus came to his own people and found them sick with spiritual sickness he chose the best method of releasing them, employing the laying on of hands." What a curious thing that was for a man, to undertake to fight the declaration of the doctrine of Jesus Christ and laying on of hands, and admit right at the start that people were spiritually sick, and that Jesus used the best means in his hands, the laying on of hands, to heal their spiritual sickness. I have always thanked that man in my heart for that admission. There is a beautiful statement found in Habakkuk, where it says that "God came from Teman, and the Holy One from Mount Paran." "He had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power." Everybody knows that the Old Testament symbol representing power is horns. We have the beast with one horn, the beast with seven horns, the one with ten horns, and one with two horns, all of them representing power. "He had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power." You do not expect to see horns in the hands of Jesus Christ, and at the same time see the places where the nails pierced them, do you? No, it is but a representation of the spiritual force and power. That is just exactly what we claim in these latter days.

We turn to the resurrection from the dead. We believe that the dead will be resurrected; that hereafter there are two resurrections yet to be. There has been one resurrection in the past, including the resurrection of Jesus Christ, with many who came forth from their graves at the time of the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and were seen by many in the city. However, this is a matter we do not care to emphasize just for the purpose of this argument. How many of you disbelieve that Lazarus was resurrected? All Bible believers believe that Lazarus was resurrected. That he was dead,—Lazarus the brother of Mary and Martha,—and Jesus performed a miracle by raising him from the dead in order to show to those pharisaical Jews, those disobedient Jews, that he had the power to raise the dead; and that when he prophesied touching his own body, calling it the temple, although they did not understand him, he says, I have power to raise it again. And he did raise it. That is equivalent to saying, that he raised one, he can raise all. He exercised that power by obedience to God's commandments, and the subjection of his spirit. He had that within him that conferred upon him the right to rise from the dead; and when the time came, the stone at the door of the sepulcher was rolled away, and he came forth. Men looked within and saw the cerements in which he was clothed; and he came forth and supped with his disciples, and was seen of above five hundred at once. There is no question but what he was resurrected. The Apostle Paul, reasoning from that, says, "If Christ be not risen, then are the dead not raised; and if the dead rise not again, we are of all men most miserable." But he concluded beyond question that the dead would rise again. And let me ask, Is Jesus implicated in the teaching of that doctrine? I think so.

Then answered the Jews and said unto him, What sign shewest thou unto us, seeing that thou doest these things? Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? But he spake of the temple of his body. When therefore he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered that he had said this unto them; and they believed the Scripture, and the word which Jesus had said.—John 2: 18-22.

I will turn to Matthew 25: 31-46, and see what we find there.

When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels: For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not. Then shall they also answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee? Then shall he answer them saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me. And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal.

There are two classes, the righteous and the unrighteous, before the judgement bar after the resurrection. And the teaching of that blessed book, the Book of Mormon, gives us to fully understand that all who have been born into this world, all who have lain in the grave, all who are now living and shall die, all who shall remain at his coming shall stand before that judgment bar by virtue of the power of the resurrection, and they shall answer unto him in the great judgment. Is he implicated in this doctrine of the resurrection?

Let us turn to Revelation and see what we find there.

And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.—Revelation 20: 4, 5.

Where does this language come from? It comes from the Master to John upon the Isle of Patmos, recorded by him for the benefit of mankind, to show them that the righteous men receive from him the promised reward, but that the unrighteous men remain until the time of the general resurrection, when they shall come forth.

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.—Verse 6.

If we had not implicated Jesus before in the doctrine of the resurrection, we have now. But again:

And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever. And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.—Verses 7-15.

We have not only proven by incontrovertible evidence that Jesus is implicated in the doctrine and practice of the resurrection from the dead, he himself being a personal exponent of it, but we have him at the same time implicated in the doctrine of eternal judgment, the final judgment of all men, a thing that we believe in, especially so far as Latter Day Saints are concerned,—that every man must answer. And the controversy in regard to whether the man is worthy and willing to comply, and withstand the things of this evil life, and win his way into being called a child of God, represented in the church at the final and last day, is a controversy between man and God. As individuals we have nothing to say about it, personally. I can not save you; you can not save me. You will never come between the whip and me, to prevent me from getting the stripes that are my due; I will never come between you and your God to prevent judgment coming upon you. Nobody else will take your crown and glory. You shall get what you live for, what you are worthy of getting, as individuals, every one of you. And every man that hears the gospel and rejects it, has one that judgeth him. Jesus said in the twelfth chapter of John's gospel, "The word that I have spoken the same will judge him at the last day." And there is the judgment. "Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come," is the language of Revelation. And Ecclesiastes, the preacher, has it, "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing." That is one of the reasons why this people should be a good people, if they are a good people. And I heard an argument yesterday afternoon at Davis City, at the reunion. Some one happened to be talking about the Mormons or Latter Day Saints. They finally concluded, some of them, that they were a good people, but that they were good in spite of their religion. That is a funny thing. My doctrine is that people are good because their religion makes them good. A man may be a good man morally, that is true. He may be a good man and carry his goodness to the grave; but what will be his reward? He will not get the part known as the first resurrection. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power." These moral men, these good men in the community, these men that do not wrong their neighbors, or anything of that kind, but that keep away from Jesus Christ, they have not wrought for the first resurrection, and they will not get it; it is not promised to them. A man must be born into relationship with Jesus Christ while he is here, and the man who is ashamed of him or his words, and fails or neglects in any way to abide in him, that man has no claim, and the honorable man of the world will not make a claim, neither here nor hereafter. The honorable man will not. If he continues to keep Christ out of his life, he will be honorable enough hereafter to take the judgment that is pronounced upon him, and try to be contented with it. I do not know how good his contentment will be. It would not answer me, I know.

Have I given sufficient identification? Let me try again. Taking it for granted that Jesus spoke the truth when he said, "Repentance and remission of sins shall be preached in all the world, beginning at Jerusalem"—granting that it has been done, these two opening principles of the gospel as stated by the Apostle Paul in the sixth chapter of Hebrews are conceded. And as I turn to what has been written in Hebrews the sixth chapter we have it like this: "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, [plural, baptism of water and of Spirit,] and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." That agrees with what the apostle writer of the New Testament scripture, John, in the third chapter, in his interview with Jesus Christ, makes Jesus to say: "Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God." I heard a man quote that only a little while ago, and he quoted it, "Jesus said, 'You must be born again.'" Jesus did not say that. Jesus said, "except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God." I had a couple of gentlemen tell me down at Davenport upon one occasion when I was preaching there, "If we can get the baptism of the Spirit, we do not care for the baptism of the water." I says, "My dear sirs, that may be all very true, and if you can get the baptism of the Spirit without the baptism of water, that is your privilege. Jesus might save you. But that is not the general way." For when Jesus made the statement there was a wonder in the mind of Nicodemus. "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." Now who says you can? Those two gentlemen told me that they taught that they could. I taught that they could not. I invited them to come in the evening and hear me upon that question; but they did not come near. Now certainly John and Paul agreed on the doctrine of baptisms, plural, the baptism of water and of the Spirit. The six principles enumerated by Paul are: faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. That begins with the morning of creation and ends in eternity, when the final destiny of man is pointed out by the great Master. And every one that hath done righteously shall receive his reward; and every one that has not wrought righteously, unto them it shall be said, "Depart from me." In the King James translation it says, "I never knew you." That is a mistake. Jesus should have said, "Ye never knew me." Some one may say, "Well, now, Bro. Smith, do you propose to correct the language of the Scriptures?" I propose this: that by the spirit of revelation it has been corrected, and stands to us in this form: "Depart from me, ye never knew me." If they had known him they would have done differently. And he certainly knew them, else how could he have judged them, and said, "Depart from me?" He must have known them.

The time is up, and I believe that I have shown distinctly that there must be a church upon the earth at the present time that shall be recognized among men as the church of Christ. It has an authoritative existence, faith, doctrines, philosophies, and organization, and authority to act in the administration of the rites by which men and women are admitted into that church; and in that church they find the arena where they can fight out the great conflict of right against wrong, and good against evil, and receive from the Master that Spirit that will strengthen them unto every good word and every good work; admonish them of that which is evil and wrong, and of the unseen powers and forces of good that surround them to keep their feet within the narrow way, that are contending against the unseen forces of evil by which we are surrounded upon every hand, by day and by night, by temptation, by every device of the adversary to take us out of his hands. And they are to be the ones of whom he shall say, Thou didst give them unto me; I have kept them, not one have I lost, except the son of perdition.

Now, my dear friends, why can we not take this declaration? We can not trace it in unbroken succession from the Master until now, through the history of the past. If we undertake that we shall find ourselves going in lines that lead us into places where we could not sanction the things that were done by man, could never stand by the authority that seems to have ministered, or claimed to have administered the gospel of Christ. If we undertake to say that it has come forth by successive evolutions, first one thing and then another, we shall be swamped before we get back a hundred years. For not one of the reformers has ever gone further in this doctrine of the Son of God than simply remission of sins, and they have invariably differed as to how sins were remitted; and many of the popular churches of the present time absolutely deny that baptism is for the remission of sins, and fight against us strenuously when we say that it is. They deny entirely the idea of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, ridicule the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick, ridicule those things of which God, by the manifestation of his Spirit, has spoken by the Apostle Paul in the sixth chapter of Hebrews and the fourth of Ephesians; denying in some respects the resurrection and the character of the judgment. I have shown you that our philosophy and our doctrine are identical with that which is found in the New Testament scripture, and every single portion of it is indorsed by Jesus Christ, and he is directly or indirectly implicated in the teaching and practice of every one of them. I believe that I have covered the ground, so far as time permits here, to-day, showing that there is a church that has come to us by restoration. And we know it did come. For over seventy years now not a single portion of it has been necessary to be revised. Not a single council has ever been called to revise that which has been given to us as the doctrines of the Son of God, while those by whom we are surrounded have been constantly seeking a revision; and some of them have wondrously improved by it. And we are waiting the time when they shall stand together upon the platform, and unite altogether in the doctrine of Jesus Christ through the restoration by revelation.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH ON BAPTISM.

Does the Disciple or Christian Church believe in baptism by immersion for the remission of sins?

We answer, They do not.

For several years the writer has believed that the ministers of the somewhat aggressive Christian Church are not sincere when they teach baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; for observation and inquiry have developed the fact that about fifty per cent of their followers are received into membership from churches who do not teach or practice baptism for remission of sins.

In proof of their insincerity the following questions were submitted to Elder J. H. Garrison, editor of the Christian Evangelist, St. Louis, Missouri, February 1, 1895:

Can persons who have been baptized by immersion into Baptist, Methodist, or Dunkard Churches, and are in good standing, become members of the Christian or Church of Christ without rebaptism?

He replied:

Most assuredly, I would receive all who have been baptized, whether once or thrice, who are in good standing as Christians. The extra immersions in the case of Dunkards do not nullify their obedience. Persons are not baptized into religious parties, whatever they may think, but into Christ, if so be that they believe in Christ.

Elder B. J. Pinkerton, assistant editor of the Christian Evangelist, replied to a similar set of questions as follows:

As far as my experience and observation extend, it is the universal custom of our preachers to receive such persons without rebaptism, unless they demand it.

On February 8, 1895, Elder D. R. Dungan, chancellor of Cotner University, Nebraska, wrote:

Persons who have believed in the Christ, repented of sin, and confessed the Savior, and obeyed the Lord in baptism, being buried with Christ, whether by Methodist or Baptist, have been scripturally baptized; such is my view.

As to the question, who might administer the sacred ordinance, the following was presented to Elder W. W. Hopkins of the Christian Evangelist, St. Louis, Missouri, February 1, 1895:

If a person has been baptized into the Disciple or Christian Church, by a laymember, is the baptism valid?

To which he replied:—

1. We baptize into Christ and not the church. 2. The validity of baptism depends on the faith of the candidate and not the office of the administrator. For the sake of order it would be better for the preacher or elder to baptize; but a baptism is not invalid because done by a laymember.

The above admissions are strong and conclusive that the Christian Church does not practice what they teach. The statement of D. R. Dungan, LL. D., is that a burial (baptism) administered by Methodist or Baptist is scriptural. Query: If baptisms by Methodists and Baptists are scriptural, would baptisms by Christian ministers be more than scriptural?

In nearly every issue of their popular church papers you may read statements from their evangelists like this:—"Good meeting here, three added by baptism, and four by confession. The Methodist and Baptist preachers are worried about their flock."

"Four by confession" means that they had been immersed, but not for remission of their sins, by some orthodox preacher before the wonderful expounder of the Bible arrived. But now they must "give their hand to the preacher, and their heart to God," which act or "confession" gives the penitent ones a membership in the Christian Church and a passport to heaven with those who have been baptized for the remission of sins.

How different from the above was the teaching of the inspired Apostle Peter. He said:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2: 38, 39.

In an effort to patch up their badly begun work, of teaching one thing and practicing another, a zealous minister of their church said they did not receive into membership those from other churches who did not understand, at the time they were immersed in water, that it was for the remission of their sins. This perversion of their custom was quickly settled by sending the following question to Elder J. H. Garrison, the venerable editor of the Christian Evangelist, St. Louis, Missouri:

Is it required of, or the universal custom of the ministry to ask penitent believers of the Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, or United Brethren churches who have been immersed, and who wish to unite with the Christian Church or Church of Christ, if they understood that when they were baptized it was for the remission of their sins, before accepting them as members in full fellowship?

Editor Garrison replied June 23, 1904, as follows:

Answering your question of June 20, would say that it is not the custom of our ministers to require believers uniting from other churches who have been baptized, whether they understood that when they were baptized, it was for the remission of sins. That would be an utter perversion of our position as to what is the creed or confession of faith on which the church rests. There may be a few schismatics in Texas who have made that sort of a creed, but they do not represent the churches of this reformation.

Mr. Garrison's decision is worthy of record for it is plain and conclusive on that important subject.

We now pass to the history made by Alexander Campbell on the question of water baptism. Read his words carefully:

Now if our baptism is for any other end or purpose than was that to which Paul submitted, it is another baptism, as much as bathing for health is different from a Jewish ablution for legal uncleanness or impurity. The action has a meaning and a design; and it must be received in that meaning and for that design, else it is another baptism.—Campbell-Rice Debate, p. 439. (Quoted from SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 51, p. 501.)

Has the Disciple or Christian Church apostatised from the teachings of Mr. Campbell, their founder? They certainly have. He said: "If our baptism is for any other end or purpose than was that to which Paul submitted, it is another baptism." Paul said the words of Ananias to him were, "Why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."—Acts 22:16.

Paul submitted to that baptism which was for remission of sins, and Alexander Campbell says "The action has a meaning and a design; and it must be received in that meaning and for that design, else it is another baptism."

Do the Methodists, United Brethren, or Baptist churches believe in or baptize for remission of sins as Ananias taught, and "to which Paul submitted"? Verily no, but the Disciple or Christian Church of to-day receive their baptism by immersion, which is contrary to the teaching of Mr. Campbell, as quoted above, who says that any other baptism than the one "to which Paul submitted . . . is another baptism." Hence we conclude from the several testimonies given that the Disciple or Christian Church does not believe in baptism by immersion for remission of sins.

SUCCESSFUL WORK.

It is very necessary that the work of the missionary in the church of Christ be successful. To this end both the missionary and the members of the district where he labors should work harmoniously and wisely together. The Saints in every district throughout the church should, I believe, look first after their own welfare, and secondly, after the needs of those outside the church in whose behalf the missionary is laboring. Unless the wants of the missionary are looked after and supplied he is hampered in his work, and the work hindered to a corresponding degree.

One of the first things a missionary needs to believe, is, that his family, in his absence, will be well cared for. Without this assurance his mind is divided and a consequent loss to the work ensues; hence the necessity of tithing, as provided for in the law. Just so long then as Saints fail to observe this law of tithing and consecration, just so long the work of the Lord abroad will be hindered. Why hinder the Lord's work, especially when by so doing we ourselves are less spiritual?

Then a missionary needs to have the confidence of the Saints where he labors. This he will have, I believe, if he shows himself a workman approved of God. Not only must the missionary, in order to do successful work, have the confidence of the Saints, but they must aid him in every possible way to prosecute the work and make new openings in his field of labor. Sometimes the Saints, instead of keeping themselves right and making new openings for the missionary, grow cold and wait for the missionary to come and revive them and make his own opening for preaching the word. The law is that "he that has been warned, let him warn his neighbor." The Saints should not wait for the missionary to write them to find out if they want preaching, either in or near their locality; but they should write the missionary that he may be informed as to the needs of the field. It only costs about two cents to write the missionary; but it would cost him considerable to ride thirty or forty miles to find out if you want preaching. When the missionary goes some thirty or forty miles to hold service, he may be informed by the Saints that it is such a busy time that but few will attend the meeting. This tends to discourage the missionary. Laboring men are usually busy, of course. While this is true in your locality, you should remember it is also true in others. As the missionary is only around once in three or six months can you not well afford to quit work a little early and go to church and so help, by your presence and prayers?

When a meeting is first started, both the minister and Saints attending may feel fresh and vigorous, not suffering by reason of loss of sleep; then it is easy to carry the meeting on. When, however, the meeting is carried on for some five or six nights, and the Saints have become wearied from hard work and loss of sleep, then it takes faith to run the meeting successfully. That is the time of trial. Although the interest in the meeting may be increasing, Satan is likely to suggest the thought that the Saints are getting tired of the meeting and therefore it should be closed. In fact, Saints are often likely to show, either by word or act, that they would like for the meeting to close, just when it should not. Of course the minister dislikes to carry on a meeting contrary to the wishes of the Saints where the meeting is being held. For a meeting to be successful, all attending it, especially the Saints, should have a deep interest in its progress.

Simple as this subject may appear, there is much in it; for if the various services held in different parts of the field are conducted as they should be, then good results will follow, and the work be built up; but if otherwise, God will be displeased and the work hindered. It takes faith to heal the sick, or to carry on a meeting successfully.

As ministers and members let us learn our duties; and by the help of God let us work harmoniously together to accomplish the work intrusted to us. If we will do this, success will crown our efforts, and life eternal will be our reward.

THE LITERATURE OF THE PEOPLE.

Upon the whole, good literature is more pleasant to read than indifferent literature. That it is more profitable I am not quite sure. Anything that is human is significant, and anything that is popular is important. A man of reasonable taste and intelligence would not get so much pleasure out of reading the Family Herald Supplement as out of reading Pendennis. But there is probably quite as much to be got in the way of philosophy and knowledge of life out of reading the one as of the other. For if Pendennis represents the doings of real people, the Family Herald Supplement represents their dreams. From it one can learn what is just as practical and useful a part of life as anything in great literature; one can learn, that is, what an enormous number of people really picture to themselves as a splendid and desirable life. Pendennis tells us what a great man thinks of ordinary people. The Family Herald Supplement tells us what ordinary people think of great people. It is nothing like so entertaining, perhaps, but it is equally important to know. Therefore I have always found it difficult myself to accept the common statement that such and such a person is wasting his time reading trifling and ephemeral literature. I am not sure that because he reads shilling shockers or the Daily Express he is to be reproached as a person wasting his time. I should rather reproach him, if I did reproach him, with a gloomy and ascetic devotion to science and research, which led him to endure so much toil and tedium for the discovery of truths so dim and so occasional. I should urge on him to leave his studies for a moment, to lay by the yellow novels and the pink newspapers to which a painful conscientiousness held him bound, and have at least one frivolous and boyish half-holiday reading Milton and George Meredith. For though this may seem at the first glance extravagant, it is really the truth. There is much profit, there are many lessons and ideas about life, to be drawn from cheap journalism. But the nuisance is that one has to draw them out oneself from a chaos of the unessential, and this is a very genuinely laborious and stringent mental process; whereas, when we come to deal with a piece of good literature, they have been drawn out already and arranged for us beforehand in such a way that we perceive the essential at a glance, and are not troubled with the unessential at all. It is like the difference between scouring the rocks with a hammer to find fossils, and going to a geological museum where everything is ticketed and arranged. Or it is like the difference between vegetable and animal food: the latter is the concentration of the former. And I admit that from the point of view of succulence and relish there is the same difference between a man's reading Milton and his reading The Pink 'Un that there is between an old gentleman enjoying a mutton cutlet and the same old gentleman on his hands and knees in a field trying to eat grass like a sheep. Such an old gentleman is experiencing the inevitable tragedy of original research.

There are, then, these two kinds of literature: popular literature, which can be made profitable to the studious, and good literature, which is acceptable even to the lazy. But between, or, rather, apart from these two, there is a third class, a class which is, under modern conditions (that is, modern London conditions), rarer than either of them. It is also far more valuable than either. It is the kind of work which is not consciously or artificially literary; it is produced in the same way as the cheap novelettes are produced, that is, carelessly, spontaneously, generally in large quantities, and generally from a dim impulse to be amusing, and a dimmer impulse to realize in some series of rude pictures the imaginary life of gaiety and courage. At the same time, unlike the popular literature, it is really literature. Its main lines are bold and suggestive; it has in it a tradition of good workmanship. It is the thing which in simpler and stronger states of society is called "folk" literature. That is to say, it is a school or class of story-telling, unconnected with any individual name, unreferable to any individual reputation or influence, written by the people for the people about the people, but still literature. Just as a good mediæval guild or modern trade union or Indian trade-caste would retain from generation to generation the right way to build an arch, so these communities retain from generation to generation the right way to build a story. Their tales may be like the novelettes, more or less all the same model. But, unlike the novelettes, they are all on a good model. Their repetition, combined with variation, pleases like the repetition of a line of Gothic columns in a great cathedral; it does not exasperate like the repetition of a line of railings in a long suburban street. And this great traditional literature of tales is the real popular literature of the earth. Wherever there is a People, a thing with a big P, the people have this literature and love it. In modern London they do not love this literature and do not have it; but that is simply because in modern London there is no People—there is only a lower class reading silly books about the upper class, and an upper class reading still sillier books about the lower class, and a middle class that reads both at once and gets melted into a sort of iridescent rainbow of silliness. But wherever, as I say, there is a People, there you will find a great popular literature, a literature which does not describe the life of a class, but does describe the life of mankind, a literature which talks of kings and beggars, and fools and heroes all in the same easy tone, and tells of their plain, familiar talk with each other.

This distinction was set up in my mind to-day merely by staring at a bookstall crowded with sixpenny books. There were the two great classes of London literature, the pompous books written by the few, the futile books written by the many. There was The Riddle of the Universe, by Haeckel, which could be bought for sixpence; and Lady Gwenny's Confession, which could also be bought for sixpence. And I would not have given a tenth of a farthing for either of them; for they were both of exactly the same spirit—a total ignorance of life, as it is dressed up in artificial and threadbare words. The Triumph of Science over Superstition, The Chain of Causation, Evolution, Enlightenment—I knew all these things, and I knew that they were exactly like “languid grace,” “long silken moustaches,” “the dreamy waltz,” “the muffled curse,” “the silver moonlight”—that is, that they never meant anything and never will mean anything to the end of the world to people who work, and eat, and sing, and marry, and are given in marriage. And then, lifting up my eyes, I saw, with a rush of feelings indescribable, upon that sixpenny book-stall something else. I saw literature as it had always been—a human thing. I saw humanity as it had always been—a race of poets. I saw Uncle Remus. And I knew that there was more of human existence and real philosophy in the rabbit with the spotted grandmother and the tortoise that played tug-of-war with the bear than in the whole of raving London and all its journalism, or in all the Haeckels that ever cut off their own noses to investigate the nature of smell.—World Wide.

Notice to Daughters of Zion.

For some years past the question of undertaking some special work of benevolence, in connection with other work heretofore done by us, has been under the consideration of the Advisory Board; but because of the many pressing demands being made upon the Saints in the way of finance, it has seemed wiser to wait a more opportune time.

Now, however, having taken counsel with Bishop E. L. Kelley and receiving his most cordial approval as well as assurances of his hearty coöperation, it is deemed advisable by us to notify all local societies as well as all members not connected with local organizations that such a work is contemplated and they are most earnestly invited to join in the same.

The establishment of a Children's Home has been mentioned as a worthy and much needed work; but we deem it wiser that the matter of discussion as to what we shall work for, be left to the voice of the general society, when they meet in convention during the session of the General Conference of the church in April, 1905. This, however, will not prevent the sisters from going to work now to raise a fund and at that time deciding for what purpose this fund shall be used. It seems best that each local organization should decide upon its own plan for raising means to contribute to this fund and where no local organization exists, individual members can send their contributions to the treasure of the general society, Mrs. C. J. Clark, 1038 West Electric Street, Independence, Missouri.

We trust that every member of the society will enter with whole-souled activity into this work and that by the time of our General Conference each will be able not only to report the successful results of efforts already made, but also their determination to persevere until success crowns our labors.

By order of the Advisory Board,

MRS. M. E. HULMES, President.

A SERIES OF FAMILIAR TALKS INTENDED FOR USE IN LOCALS AND HOME CLASSES.

Training a Child in Self-Control.

It would not be possible for us to draw the attention of parents to a more important virtue in which it is our duty to train our children than that of self-control. The lines of Lowell:

“We rise by the things that are under our feet,
By what we have mastered of greed or gain;
By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
By the vanquished ills that we hourly meet,”

are not only true in their positive sense, but it is equally true that if we have been mastered by these things, instead of gaining the victory over them, we have been defeated as it were at the very bottom—the first round of the ladder of life,—and deprived of the very strength necessary to enable us to climb higher.

Emerson calls “self-trust the essence of heroism,” but how shall self-trust exist where self-control is wanting?

“Self-control,” says a recent writer, “is at the root of all the virtues. Let a man yield to his impulses and passions and from that moment he gives up his moral freedom.” “Teach self-denial and make its practice pleasurable,” says Sir Walter Scott, “and you create for the world a destiny more sublime than ever issued from the brain of the wildest dreamer.”

If then—and we firmly believe it—“self-control is at the root of all the virtues,” how necessary it becomes that we train our children in it; teaching it not only by precept but by example. And parents, it is just here that we beg your earnest attention while we entreat you to believe that with God's help it is possible for you to train your children in this virtue—if you begin sufficiently early and set them the example which God requires.

"A child who is trained to self-control, as a child may be," says H. Clay Trumbull, "is already a true man in his fitness for manly self-mastery. A man who was not trained in childhood to self-control, is hopelessly a child in his combat with himself and he can never regain the vantage-ground which his childhood gave to him, in the battle which then opened before him, and in the thick of which he still finds himself. It is in a child's earlier struggles with himself that help can easiest be given him and it is of the greatest value for his own developing of character. Yet at that time a child has no such sense of his need in this direction as is sure to be his in maturer years; hence it is that it rests with the parent to decide, while the child is still a child, whether the child shall be a slave to himself, or a master of himself; whether his life so far shall be worthy or unworthy of his high possibilities of manhood."

Shall life be to our children defeat or victory, bondage or freedom are questions the answer to which rests largely with parents. It is true that teachers have their influence in this as well as many other principles necessary to the formation of character, but it is subordinate to that of parents. A very young child can be taught to understand that it is not good for him to give way to cries or indulge himself in physical contortions when in pain. For their own sake, for the sake of the physical manhood that parents should be ambitious to develop in their children, it becomes their duty to help them—to train them in acquiring physical self-control, because this may be made the foundation of that higher and better phase of this virtue: moral self-control, and thus become helpful to them in every conflict of life. The child who has never been taught self-control—self-restraint—goes out into the world prepared to fall an easy prey to every temptation which appeals to his desires.

"Give me neither poverty nor riches," prayed the Psalmist, "but feed me with food convenient for me." Riches and poverty both have temptations peculiar to them, from which the happy medium position, as a rule, is exempt. The child accustomed to being overloaded with all manner of toys and playthings soon outgrows his appreciation of any but the most costly and even these amuse or instruct but far the briefest possible time, when they are cast aside and he is ready to try something new. If this something is not forthcoming, then he is restless, annoying to those around him, and just ready for any doubtful enterprise or amusement which may be suggested to him. As he grows older this disposition, if not curbed, is strengthened until all innocent amusements and recreations pall upon his taste, and he finds himself standing by the boundary-line of the Devil's ground looking over the partition-fence at the hundred and one temptations so attractively arranged to charm his dissatisfied spirit.

Upon the other hand poverty and toil have so repressed and hardened the natures of the very poor, that they turn to vice as the only thing which comes to them with any promise of pleasure in its face, and both rich and poor alike find that at last it stingeth like an adder and turns to gall upon their lips. In each class and under each condition, noble exceptions are found, but it is in the middle class where neither riches nor great poverty prevail that the happiest conditions are found, and to the homes of which both church and state are looking for the men and women who are largely to control the destiny of each. And of this latter class our church is largely composed.

It does not, however, follow from this that because as a rule the men and women of truth and probity come largely from the middle class and that of this class our church, as a rule, is composed, that our children will necessarily attain to honorable position in either church or state. Far from it. It simply means that so far as these conditions are concerned they are not handicapped in the race, but start out with equal, if not better chances in favor of their success than either of the others mentioned. But more—far more than this is necessary to their success in life—to their being fitted to take their places among the honorable men and women of the world, much less be accounted worthy to be called Saints, and among the necessary principles few are greater than that of self-control. Are we helping our children to acquire this?

Could the mother who indulges the appetite of her child in partaking of improper food or even of wholesome food at improper times and in improper quantity be made to realize that she is by this means weakening his power to resist that which his appetite craves, and so fitting him to become an easy prey to the liquor habit, should it ever assail him; would she continue to indulge him? Never. No true mother could do that. But the trouble is she does not realize until it is too late, and then the deed is done—the ruin wrought. If only we could impress upon parents the absolute need there is of training their children in all the attributes which go towards making noble men and women, then would the work be done, for love would find the way of accomplishing it.

"Teach self-denial and make its practice pleasurable." Ah, we like these words of Scott, for we remember that a greater than Scott has said, "If any man will be my disciple let him deny himself." Why this self-denial? It is the natural, the carnal man that is to be denied in order that the spiritual may triumph. Shall not we then who brought our children to Christ for a blessing, who have taught them to give themselves to God in the covenant of baptism, see to it that we train them in all those principles of right-doing and right-thinking which will not only fit them to take their places among the honorable men and women of the earth, but to be numbered with those who have overcome and entered into his rest?

"Strength of character consists of two things; power of will, and power of self-restraint. It requires two things, therefore, for its existence: strong feelings, and strong command over them. "The first and best of victories," says Plato, "is for a man to conquer himself."

Shall we not then train our children that they may learn to do this from their childhood?

THEME, HOME TRAINING.

Hymn No. 260, Saints' Hymnal; roll-call of members; response, scripture text referring to self-control; five minute paper, "Illustrations of how to teach self-control to children," followed by discussion; discussion of paper, from Home Column, with the aid of questions given below, (preparation for answering these questions to be made at home); business; hymn No. 32; dismissal prayer.

Questions on paper, "Half hours with parents," given below. Is there any virtue of more importance than the one considered in this paper?

According to the words of Dowell, by what means do we rise? If mastered by the ills of life, what is the effect upon us? How does Emerson speak of "self-trust"? What must precede a proper confidence in self? What is the relation of self-control to other virtues? How does self-control insure moral freedom? How can the practice of self-denial be made pleasurable? What does Sir Walter Scott say of the condition of the world if this were done? Is it possible for parents to train their children in self-control? When should they begin? What should be their own example in regard to self-control? Cite instances of proper example in this virtue.

How does Trumbull compare the person trained in childhood to self-control with the one not so trained? When can help in gaining self-control be easiest given to a child? Does the child realize his need at this time? Then what responsibility rests upon the parent? What may become of the first steps in teaching self-control? What relation has physical self-control to moral self-control? What condition of life is most favorable to the development of good character? Why? Are those thus situated necessarily assured of success? Can our children become worthy to be counted among the honorable ones of the earth without training in self-control? Are we giving them this help? What danger is there in over-indulgence of children in habits of eating? What saying of Jesus is like the one quoted from Scott? Is it necessary for parents to practice self-denial if they would teach it to their children? What must be subdued in order that the spiritual nature may triumph? Will the blessing of our children in infancy, and the teaching which will result in their being baptized prove sufficient for their salvation unless they become established in habits of right-doing? Of what does strength of character consist? What does Plato say of self-control? What Bible saying is similar to it? Do we wish our children to excel in this way?

Prayer Union.

Sr. Emma Ross, Pittsburg, Kansas, earnestly desires the prayers of the Prayer Union and all Saints who feel disposed, in behalf of her husband who is sorely afflicted. She desires that Sunday, September 18, be set apart as a day of fasting and prayer, that her husband, Robert Ross, may regain his health and mental faculties. He is a worthy brother, greatly esteemed by the Saints. Was a deacon, and vice-president of the Religio.

Sr. Albertie Neal, Batson, Texas, desires the prayers of the Saints, as she is isolated, and has lately been called to part with her little six-year-old Evelyn.

Questions and Answers.

Q.—Has a district the right to suspend the delegate system indefinitely?

A.—No. Article X of Constitution for districts, says: "Any district association convention, where the membership of the district is under four hundred, may upon a two thirds vote of the delegates present, change from a delegate to mass convention." Note that the membership of the district must be less than four hundred or this article will not apply to such district. Further, that a two thirds vote is required and that of the delegates present to suspend the delegate system for the convention. Hence it will be necessary to have regularly appointed delegates to meet and organize and then if they see fit, they may resolve into a mass convention. It will be noted, further, that this suspension does not nor can not extend beyond that convention. The delegate system can not be suspended indefinitely. There is no authority anywhere for that. Hence such an action would be "inoperative and void." (See Article IX.)

The question of districts suspending the delegate system was quite thoroughly discussed at the General Convention when the article referred to was adopted and became a rule. And as a matter of compromise between the "radicals" and the "conservatives" upon this question, it was agreed that the delegate rule might be suspended for the convention only, and that it must be done by the regularly appointed delegates and in a regular way. Parliamentary law would also require that a delegate convention could be resolved only by those comprising it,—the delegates.

Q.—Have home department members the right to vote in the Sunday-school?

A.—No, unless they have attended the main school the requisite "four consecutive sessions." Article 3 of By-laws for Sunday-schools says: "Persons may become members of the school by enrollment but they shall have no voice or vote in the affairs of the school until they shall have been in attendance four consecutive sessions, except in the organization of new schools. All members of the school under eight years of age shall be prohibited from voting." It will be noted that any one may by application and enrollment become a member of the school at once, but his right to vote is withheld till after the required four consecutive sessions shall have been passed. This prevents the occasional visitors from dropping in on election day and carrying the election in the way it should not go or in opposition to the wishes of the majority of the regular attendants. It places the responsibility of running the school right where it belongs, in the hands of the regular attendants. Home department members have and enjoy all the rights and privileges that any member of the school may have and enjoy, but his failure to attend four consecutive sessions will debar him from voting as it would any other member. One may be a member of the school and not be a voter. Children under eight years old can not vote. But any member may be appointed and serve as a delegate, or serve the school in any other way, and must be counted in making up the total enrollment as a basis of representation. But no one can vote till he shall have attended four consecutive sessions of the school.

The Sunday-school work at the Southwestern Iowa reunion was in charge of the district superintendency, Sr. T. A. Hougas and Bro. Joseph Roberts, and assisted by the general superintendent. Five sessions of Sunday-school were held with splendid success and interest. The improvement that has been made was very noticeable to one having been associated with the work in the district from before the time of organized effort. Whereas some years ago it was with much difficulty that we could get into a sufficiently well-organized condition on the camp-ground to run a school at all, now we need to but make the announcement that there is to be a session, and call on the several teachers to be prepared to take a class and we are ready for work. The first session was a complete success. As soon as the classes were formed and teachers placed therewith, we were ready to march to designated places and go to work. This is indicative of the work that has been done in the district, by the district and local workers. It is truly gratifying to see. The Lord will not fail to reward his faithful band of workers here.

Bro. P. W. Martin, of Argo, Minnesota, sends us the Convention Intelligencer, the district Sunday-school newspaper or magazine. It is a very unique and interesting paper and shows much painstaking work upon his part, and also upon the part of his assistant editor, Sr. Kate Jepson. We shall quote from it from time to time. But now we quote from a letter from Sr. Eleanor Whiting, the letter being a part of the paper:

"Star of Hope Sunday-school, Clitherall, Minnesota: Having been requested to write something for your paper and always wishing to try to do any duty, I respond.

"I have been connected with our Sunday-school for three years, acting as teacher of the infant class and also as secretary the first two years. At the reunion held here a year ago, the school was by vote connected with the Sunday-school Association. Elder T. A. Hougas was present. We were much pleased with the methods he used; also, knowing that he had been sent out by the General Convention, and had had much experience in Sunday-school work, I wished to see the methods he used introduced into our school. Sunday after the reunion I was chosen superintendent and felt it my duty to introduce these methods into the school. . . .

"Elder Hougas left some leaflets of instruction on home department work with the superintendent requesting him to take up the work and which he turned over to me. I corresponded with some of the isolated Saints. One sister wrote she was glad to be remembered and would gladly take up the work. Another one said she would study with her family who are not members of the church. Another wrote that her children were delighted with the Quarterlies. Some of the persons whose names are enrolled do not belong to the church, but had attended the school here and having moved away wished to continue as members and their names were enrolled in the home classes. One girl living some distance away and who does not belong to the church told me she would keep up the study. She also gave me her subscription for the Hope. Shortly after her mother came and wished to buy Quarterlies for her other three children. I explained to her about the home class and we enrolled their names therein. We now have twenty-four enrolled in the home department and sixty-three in the main school. The average attendance is forty. . . .

"We find in Sunday-school work something for every man, woman, or child to do. And as we can not all preach the blessed gospel, if we willingly do the part that comes to us we will be blessed. I feel that I have made many mistakes, but my desire and prayer have been for the advancement of the school. We feel God's blessing has been over it, and for the good that may come from it, to him we give the praise.

"Hoping that this will be our banner year in the Sunday-school work in this district, let us all pull together and work in harmony and God will bless our efforts."

THE PRISON.

Golden Text.—"He went and preached unto the spirits in prison."—1 Peter 3: 19.

There is a connection between this lesson and that of last week, which taught that saints should be loving. The connection may be seen as we proceed in our study.

The prison to which Peter alluded in his letter to the saints is the prison of departed spirits who at death are not found prepared to enter into paradise.

The question may be asked, Who go to this prison? And it may be answered, Those who have not developed into spiritual freedom through obeying the principles of truth.

It is obedience to the truth that makes men free. Jesus so declared, saying to his disciples that, by continuing to keep his commandments, they should know the truth, and the truth should make them free. (See John 8: 31, 32.)

This suggests to us a thought often repeated in the Scriptures, that there is something more for us to do than to be baptized and confirmed into the church. The baptism, if a perfect one, is a birth into spiritual life; it is an entrance into the path of truth; but we must grow from spiritual babyhood into spiritual manhood; we must follow the path of truth to the end.

WE MUST BE PROGRESSIVE.

In the truest sense of the expression, we must progress. We may not stand still. We must go forward. We must grow better from day to day, wiser in the things of God and more like him in nature.

Some one has said, and very truly, that the world is full of old babies. It is full of people whose bodies have grown from the stature of full-grown men and women, from youth to old age, but whose spirits have not developed into the ripeness of good character. They have grown old in body; in spirit, they have remained undeveloped.

This is not as it should be. We do not become fit for the society of just men made perfect except by traveling the path over which they have trod, the path of progression, that path of truth that grows brighter and brighter until it ends at last in the perfect day.

WE MUST WORK.

There is no salvation for us without work on our part. Effort is the price we must pay for final success. It is the only way in which it is possible for us to develop.

A man died a few days ago and left to his only child fifty millions of dollars, but no parent or friend, however loving, can bequeath to us spiritual freedom. Even the heavenly Father can not give us this freedom without effort on our part. He can only help us as we try to help ourselves. If we sit as prisoners content with our bondage, there is no hope that we shall ever be free.

WHAT MUST WE DO TO BE SAVED?

Peter made answer long ago to this question that men must repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of their sins. We are told in the Scriptures that repentance is not only sorrow for sins but the forsaking of sins. In Isaiah's language, it is ceasing to do evil and learning to do well.

This repentance must be exercised all along through life, so long as there remain in us those things that are not right. It is only by overcoming the evils of our nature that we become free. Not every one who calls Jesus Christ his Lord, not every one who is baptized for the remission of his sins will enter the abode of the free children of God, but he that does the will of God, he that becomes a child of the Highest by partaking of his divine nature.

When John the Revelator had his vision on Patmos he saw a great multitude clothed in white raiment who stood before the Lamb. Did you ever notice that it is said of them that they had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb? They were there because of this effort on their own part; they had made themselves pure in the fountain the Christ had opened for them.

And so it is with us. We must wash our robes, if they are ever made white; we must shake off our fetters, if we are ever made free; we must grow, if we ever reach spiritual manhood; we must overcome our faults, if we ever enter the kingdom of the pure. It is true that we could not have saved ourselves, neither can we save ourselves by our own efforts alone, but we are required to put forth all our powers to accomplish our salvation.

THERE IS A PRISON HOUSE.

The Lord tells us so in Genesis 7 of the Inspired Version. He tells us the reason why some are consigned to it. He says that in the beginning he gave men the command to love one another and to choose him their heavenly Father; but the accusation was made against those of a certain period that they were without affection and that they hated their own blood and were full of wickedness. This was the accusation against them upon which they were committed to the prison.

Jesus went into the prison, Peter says, and preached to those shut up there, and Paul says that, when he ascended up on high, he led a multitude of captives.

What did Jesus preach to the spirits in prison? The same system of true principles he taught to men in the earth, the gospel, of which the fundamental principle is love. They who were consigned to the prison because they were full of hate can become free only by becoming full of love.

JESUS TOLD A PARABLE OF A RICH MAN

who had no pity for the sufferings of a man who lay at his gate, mutely begging for the crumbs that fell from his table. The parable says plainly that the spirit of the rich man went to the prison. It was a spirit bound with the fetters of selfishness which he had not shaken off in his lifetime. He had not improved the years of his opportunity to make himself free from that inordinate love of self which bound him.

THE PEOPLE OF ENOCH'S CITY WERE WARNED

that the prison awaits those who take of the abundance which God places in this world and who do not impart as the gospel requires unto the poor and the needy.

This is in perfect harmony with the teaching of the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. It is a warning to us to free ourselves from the bondage of selfishness and to cultivate that spirit of love that must characterize the free children of God.

LOVE IS MANIFESTED

not only in deeds of charity to the poor. It is manifested in the patience that bears wrongs, in the humility that does not strive for the highest seats or envy those who sit there, in the ready sympathy that enters into the joys of others as well as into their sorrows.

As we make ourselves loving in heart and kind and considerate in actions towards others, we make ourselves free from selfishness, one of the strongest fetters that enslaves mankind.

As we shake off one by one the habits that are not good, as we eliminate from our characters one by one the traits that are unlovely and cultivate in their stead the virtues we perceive in the perfect Christ, as we grow in the knowledge of God, we become free, and it is that we may become free that we are given our years of probation in this life. Let not the years of opportunity go by unused. Let us work to be free by studying the law of Christ and applying it to our lives.

We are told that in the tropical seas there is a little creature called the nautilus, which as it grows, closes up the shell in which he has lived and moves out into the larger one he has built for his occupancy. From this one of the poets has drawn the following beautiful lesson:

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!"

ANNA SALYARDS.

JASPER, Tennessee, August 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am sure no Latter Day Saint can afford to be without at least one of the church papers, although a great many do without them. They are making a bad mistake. The HERALD and Ensign contain food for the Saints which they need badly, and without which they do not grow as they should in spiritual things. If we do not develop in spiritual things, we are not letting our light shine as we should. And if we have no light we can not let it shine.

Some tell me they see much in the papers that is worthless to them, such as letters from elders telling of their travels, taking particular pains to tell what train they went on, and how the mountains looked, and what a lovely time they had on the trip, and how they met Brother So and So, and Sister So and So, and what a nice dinner they enjoyed at Sister So and So's, and a hundred other things like that which they say they do not want to waste their time in reading. But that is not an excuse for not taking the church papers. All will admit that the church papers contain some spiritual food, and we miss that much by not reading the papers. Besides, the papers are your papers, and you should be interested in trying to make them better all the time. As the church advances the papers will increase in value.

When people visit the Saints, as a rule they want to read our church papers, and it is the same with us when we visit them. I have in mind a man that lives in my town. He is not a member of our church, but takes the Ensign, and he has become so greatly interested in it that he not only reads it, but takes it to some of his friends, and keeps it on the move all the time. And it seems to me that all Saints ought to be interested in the work enough to help educate the people in the knowledge of the true gospel of Christ. I know people, where I live, who will come to the sidewalk as I am passing and ask for reading matter; yet they will not come out to hear me preach. And I have heard of those people telling others that the Latter Day Saints are right. How did they learn that the Saints were in harmony with the Bible? From the church papers loaned to them. The bad part is that Saints who do not read the church papers are not in condition to represent the church work, and we need all the help we can get. Every Saint should keep up with the work, and move as it moves.

The church is the light of the world, and the world is dependent upon us for light. The world is in darkness. Oh, what a sad condition they are in! Their minds blinded; walking in gross darkness. Do you want to help them out of it? If so, mount up the hill of righteousness, and let your light shine before men. They will see it. Do not worry about that. So let us not fail to do our part faithfully, and the reward will be sure. Just imagine how a Saint would look standing on a hill with a jug of whisky on one hand, and keg of beer near by, a list of vulgar stories printed in large letters as his stock in trade, with a chew of tobacco in his mouth and a pipe in one corner. Do you say such a one would be a light to the world? Let us avoid the use of tobacco, and be not addicted to strong drink in any form. Let us lay aside lightness of speech; be clean in our bodies and clothing. The people of the world are watching us, and it is right they should. If we reject the church papers because there is something in them not good, should we not reject ourselves because there is so much in us not good? I think so.

I am busy all the time, preaching to good crowds every night. Baptized seven the 26th. Am feeling well in the work. Never felt better; and never felt the need of the Saints coming up higher as I have felt it this year; and I am striving harder than ever to get on higher ground.

Dear Herald: Following the date of my last letter we attended the conference which convened at Seattle the 6th at half past ten in the forenoon, meeting a goodly number of Saints from different parts of the district. On our return the writer and colaborer, with Bro. Rainey and wife, stopped off at Everett, Washington, and held two meetings at the home of Sr. Bertha McCullough, then onward to this city to further look after the tent work. We arranged for a lot, and on the 13th put up the tent and commenced our meeting the next day at eleven o'clock. Have held eight meetings each week to a small, attentive congregation. Have been alone since two weeks ago last Sunday night, my assistant having gone home on account of his farm work. Assistance has been given me part of the time by the two teachers, Brn. Rainey and Clark.

Having been chosen as president of the district it will be necessary for me to visit each branch and look after the isolated Saints, and I request the members as well as officers to give me all the information possible concerning the needs of the work in the localities where they reside. Direct all mail matter for the next thirty days to New Westminster, British Columbia, in care of J. S. Rainey.

LOS ANGELES, California, August 30, 1904.

Editors Herald: We are doing what we can to promote the truth with some evidences of progress. Brn. Luff and Scott spent several weeks among us and the cause lost nothing. They have gone north, ostensibly to attend the Sacramento reunion. The rest of the brethren are working away along lines which to them seem best. Was with Bro. Crumley in San Bernardino last week. He preached on Sunday, and I on Monday night. Weather too hot to allow anything like an ordinary attendance.

We are pained to chronicle the departure of Sr. Gibson, wife of our pioneer and stalwart missionary, Bro. William Gibson. She has been in poor health for many, many years; but Bro. Gibson, noble soul that he is and has been, has proved a ministering angel. God bless and comfort him in his sorrow and loneliness. Bro. Clapp's health is not good, but he cheerfully responds to an invitation to talk of the latter-day work, of which he has grown to be a part. Bro. N. Van Fleet, who was near death's door for many weeks, is now convalescent, and we have hopes that our Father in heaven will spare his life for some time to come. Like granite pillars Bro. and Sr. Van Fleet have ever stood for the cause of truth; no uncertain tone in their testimony; no insincerity in their actions; ever ready to champion the right; ever courageous to resist the wrong.

Rifts have been evident in the material and financial cloud which has enveloped me, and I see daylight ahead. Everything points to a speedy cancellation of our church debt, and the long desired dedication of our chapel.

A number of the Saints have been seriously ill. Srs. Fleming and Luken and Bro. Weltz are still quite poorly. We solicit the prayers of the faithful in their behalf.

The Adventists have just closed a protracted effort of seven weeks in a large tabernacle tent in the heart of the city. Result: one hundred additions to their church membership.

I spent a night recently with E. H. Gurley. He is now preaching for the Christian Church. He treated me very kindly, and while he has renounced the latter-day faith, he spoke kindly of his former brethren. Yours hopefully, 3720 S. Park Avenue. T. W. WILLIAMS.

Dear Herald: We have heard read the inclosed letter of Elder J. F. Mintun, and fully indorse the sentiments expressed by him in reference to the deportment and character of W. G. Roberts as manifest during the debate held here between him and Bro. Mintun from August 23 to September 1.

We consider Mr. Witty and his congregation nice people; and do not believe that they knew of the character of Mr. Roberts before they indorsed him; and do not believe they would indorse him now since they have become better acquainted with him, and the spirit that rules him in his deportment.

Your brethren in behalf of truth,

W. CHRISTY.
S. M. REISTE.

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa, September 2, 1904.

Dear Herald: The debate between myself and W. G. Roberts, a representative of the "Nonprogressive Branch" of the Church of Christ, closed last night very abruptly while Mr. Roberts was making his last speech, just after he had made an argument that the Book of Mormon supported the idea that "if I will, I will command my people" to have more wives than one, otherwise "ye shall have but one wife."

Just after he had closed this misrepresentation the lights were suddenly extinguished, leaving us in total darkness and without a severe storm raging. We thought at first that the wire had been injured by the lightning, but after the people had all gone except a few, and Roberts had his books packed in his valise, the lights as suddenly came on again. Just after the close we learned that a secret prayer had been offered that because of his misrepresentation of the Book of Mormon God would in some way show his disapproval, and in a few moments the event transpired which I have above related. There was also shown to a Mrs. Oleson, that he would never finish his last speech because of his misrepresentation and untruthful statements.

To be honest with myself and my God I feel it my duty to write the following representation of Mr. Roberts: He is the most unreliable man that I ever met within or without any church, Clark Braden not excepted. His whole time was spent in his negative argument in misapplying scriptures, and willfully misrepresenting Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon, and what I should have said. He is a man unworthy the notice of respectable men, and should be considered a being beneath the consideration of any one as a representative of a religious organization. While he was indorsed as a "Christian and gentleman," yet he was found to be anything else but that, and I do not believe that the same people could conscientiously give such an indorsement now.

After returning to my lodging-place and retiring I saw the following open vision: I saw myself standing in defense of the truth and scattering "leaves of truth," and immediately I noticed a hog of large dimension, with stiff, dirty white hair, devouring these leaves, and with the devouring a development took place in the hog by which it was in a few moments converted into a hyena with a fierce expression, and this development continued till it appeared in the form of a man with the appearance of Roberts, whose features were changed from his natural appearance into that of a demoniac, with the most horrid expression of any human being that I have ever seen. This last scene continued before me for a few moments, the human figure growing more horrid until it passed from my sight.

This, dear readers, is a hard scene for me to publish concerning any one living, but it was shown to me so clearly, and I have felt it my duty to pen it for perusal, that I feel that I have done my duty in so doing.

As a result of the debate one has expressed himself fully persuaded, and others are investigating more seriously, and are near the kingdom. We remain here over Sunday, associated with Brn. Christy and Reiste, to minister the word and attend to the baptismal rite.

The Saints have been exceedingly hospitable, and we have been made comfortable through the kindness of Mr. and Sr. Joseph Walters and Bro. William McCoy's family, with those who are friendly to the work, made more fully so by the spirit and utterances of Roberts during the debate.

Bro. Christy did his part as moderator acceptably, and Mr. Waterbury, who was chairman most of the time, was fair and impartial, for which he has merited a reward. Mr. Claude F. Witty, who was Roberts' moderator, was very kind and gentlemanly.

During the entire debate I felt the calm, peaceful, and enlightening influence of the Holy Spirit, but not more so than when I closed my 'summary' last night, when there fell upon me a heavenly peace, which whispered to me Heaven's approval of the effort that I had made. How blessed to serve a God who can be touched by the feelings of our infirmities, and who so lovingly satisfies the longings of the soul. The night before I entered upon the debate I was near the verge of nervous prostration because of anxiety and labor in my mission; but I requested the prayers of the beloved Saints at Des Moines, and soon that condition was removed, the burden of anxiety previously resting upon me was lifted, and since that time I have been free. The prayers of the Saints were effectual.

The Saints at Des Moines, though few, are bearing up under their church debt with cheerfulness, and are trying to meet all the obligations within themselves, but I feel that the Saints of the state of Iowa should feel such a pride in having a comfortable, inviting place in which to worship God in the capital city of our beloved State that they would be glad of the privilege to aid in bearing this, to the Saints in Des Moines, heavy burden. I by this means grant you the privilege of aiding, and whatever contributions you can make send them to me, 514 East Garfield street, Des Moines, Iowa, and you will be promptly credited and receipted for same; and, I believe, such an act will be put to your credit where the treasure is that "moth and rust doth not corrupt." I do not wish it understood by this that any outside of the State are not privileged to help, but on the other hand the helpfulness of all is desired.

Never, by any people, have I been treated more kindly than by the Saints of Des Moines. Never, by any editors, have I been treated with more consideration than by the editors of the three dailies of Des Moines. Never, at any place, have I been treated more friendly than in the city of Des Moines, by those within and without. While I have not been privileged to do much public preaching as yet, still the fruit of the efforts made is seen, and I hope ere long to note a more rapid advancement. The Sunday-school in the city is progressing nicely under the superintendency of Bro. A. A. Reams, assisted by his corps of efficient officials and teachers, and much interested scholars. The Religio is also progressing nicely under the presidency of two noble, earnest brethren, Earl F. Hall and Joseph G. Carpenter.

One very regretful condition prevails in the Des Moines District associated with reunion work, and that is, there is not enough interest on the part of the Saints to make the sacrifice essential to their spiritual growth, and take advantage of the excellent means to this end. The coöperative boarding-tent was not the least successful or profitable, but at two dollars and fifty cents per week good board was furnished with a small gain. The board of eight or nine missionaries was furnished free. This is a custom of the Des Moines District which is highly commendable. They always furnish board and lodging free to all district missionaries, and missionaries living in the district who may be present, and when a coöperative boarding-house or tent is conducted this can be done easily.

I return to my work in the city next Monday. I expect to visit the Dow City reunion, and be with Saints and friends of Western Iowa once more, and give my family the enjoyment of a few days at the reunion, and a visit.

My love for the work of God increases, and my hope of eternity brightens.

My desire to do more, and to see more done for this grand work increases, and my expectation to see the name of Joseph Smith held in high esteem as a man and servant of God has enlarged since beginning the debate with Roberts. To sustain the claim made for Joseph Smith, that he was a prophet of God, and a man of noble and gentlemanly character, is a very easy matter, and I rejoiced in defending his character and his work as a man of God, because of the fact that an abundance of proof was given that he had been taught and supported by the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

With rejoicings that can not be expressed because of the privilege granted me to obey the gospel, and the evidence from the Lord of his willingness to accept of one so weak and unworthy as I, as his child, and honor me as his servant, I subscribe myself

Your brother,

J. F. MINTUN.

LAMONI, Iowa, September 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: According to previous arrangements, on August 9, I commenced ministerial labor at St. Joseph, Missouri. Spoke to a goodly number of the Saints in their commodious chapel, at eight in the evening, on the office and work of the patriarch in the church of God. From Wednesday morning till Saturday evening, was busily engaged in giving blessings, during which time we met with unmistakable evidences of divine approval and direction. The fact that this approval and direction are much more manifest in some cases than in others, is surely no argument against our work; nor is it a condition for which we are necessarily responsible.

During these four days I gave sixteen blessings, which is all I would want to do within the same length of time, if I were a strong man, physically; and as it is, it is too much.

On Sunday I spoke twice in the church, at eleven in the forenoon, and eight in the evening. The attention given to the word spoken was very good, considering the extreme heat. I enjoyed unusually good liberty in the morning, but barely average at night.

Sr. Estella Wight of Argentine, Kansas, my stenographer, and myself made our home with Bro. and Sr. Don C. Kinnaman. Their kindness, liberality to the work, and constant expression of good will are appreciated.

On Monday, the 15th, we took train to Stewartsville, Missouri, where we commenced our work at once, and, with the exception of two days, when I was not able to be on duty, continued it up to and through the reunion.

This reunion was evidently one of the best which has been held in the district. The preaching, so far as I heard, was rather more than average; but when all things are carefully and properly considered, I am sure we can all see room for improvement. Let us remember that as ministers for God, we are required to represent Christ, our blessed Lord, in doctrine, spirit, and motive. Any kind of personal ambition or idiosyncrasy, which in any way interferes with the work we are called to do, should be dispensed with as quickly as possible. The conduct of the Saints in the prayer services showed improvement and an increase of devotion to the good cause.

The committee of arrangements, and those who were chosen to preside over the meetings, did their work faithfully and well.

I gave thirty-eight blessings at Stewartsville, but was under the painful necessity of rejecting many applications. Spoke three times.

Bro. and Sr. Booker kindly cared for us while at Stewartsville, and, at quite a sacrifice, furnished us a room in which to hold our blessing meetings.

Sr. Wight, my stenographer, entered into the true spirit of our work, and she did her work in an able and faithful manner.

I wish to say right here (and say it with real pleasure), that I have read the leading editorial in the HERALD for August 24, with interest and unlimited approval. In my judgment, the positions are sound, and the sentiment and spirit of the article excellent. I refer to the article under the caption of "Splenetic attack by Deseret News."

May the good work roll on and the Saints grow in faith, wisdom, and goodness, is the prayer and ardent desire of one who finds "great peace" in a continued effort to complete his part of the glorious work.

J. R. LAMBERT.

PERSIA, Iowa, September 3, 1904.

Dear Herald: On the 21st ult., I closed tent-meetings at Sandy Point, and on the 24th, with the assistance of Elder S. H. McDonald, set up the tent at Six Mile Grove under the magnificent oaks at the former home of Bro. Edward Houghton, now of Woodbine. Bro. McDonald opened the services with an able effort on the evening of the 25th; Brn. Rudd and Farr were also with us. The veteran Charles Derry was with us from Friday until Monday morning giving us some very able discourses delivered with remarkable vigor for one of his age. The attendance is good, also the interest.

Six Mile Grove is one of the "waste places of Zion," once the home of a good many Saints; but they have moved away, or passed over the river, leaving but few to contend for the faith. It makes one sad to see these old homes of the Saints occupied by others who regard not our faith. Yet there are a few faithful and tried ones whom no change can daunt, whose faces light up with joy when taking the hand of those of like precious faith. May God bless them and their efforts to do good.

In issue for August 31 there is an article from Bro. D. R. Baldwin under the caption, "Let us have no ifs." The article to which he refers I penned, and I desire to thank him for his effort in the same direction. How we love the positive witness to facts within his knowledge, such as, that God and Christ are, that the gospel is true; that it does bless and happify the soul; that it has been restored by the means stated; and that we have received this knowledge. Read Romans 8: 14-16.

Yours in Christ,

SIDNEY PITT.

LEBANON, Kentucky, September 6, 1904.

Editors Herald: Bro. William H. Kelley and myself have just closed a three-weeks meeting at Gravel Switch, Kentucky, and baptized one lady who is sixty-four years old. The second sermon she heard she bore her testimony to the people that she knew that was the true gospel and the only gospel. We had an interesting meeting throughout, and others are favorable to the work, and I think will some time come into the church. We have made many good friends to the work there. I am in Lebanon, Kentucky, now, trying to make an opening in this city, but it looks as though the way is hedged at present. I have been talking to some of the people in their homes, and I find one favorable to the work, and I believe will be brought around all right in the future. So we move on to New Haven, to-day and try to do work in those parts.

Hopefully in the truth,
J. W. METCALF.

LA BELLE, Idaho, September 2, 1904.

Editors Herald: We are still engaged in the great work, and striving to make it clear to the understanding of all.

Bro. S. D. Condit and the writer have been occupying the pulpit of our Utah friends, and have succeeded in arousing quite an interest and excitement among the people in general. We have them in a dilemma and they do not know how to get out of it. After the first effort made by Bro. Condit they undertook to reply to him, and of course we followed the next evening and reviewed them; then again they attempted to reply, and we again applied for the house in which to review them. Of course they dare not refuse, so we occupied again and turned on a little light. At the close of our last effort the bishop announced that there had been a number of meetings held and that the people were in need of a few nights' rest, so there would be no more meetings until Sunday, September 4, and then their elders would take up the subject and present their side. So we have them defending their doctrine, and we can not complain at that. The bishop has opened the controversy, and to close us out would show bad faith on their part, as the sentiment of the people seems to be in favor of having it continue.

However, we will make a strenuous effort to secure the house to present our side of the argument in; but should we fail there is a hall in this place owned by an outsider and it may be possible for us to secure it for a few nights, to present some facts to the people.

We have a good interest manifested here on the part of the people, some of them coming a distance of seven to ten miles, (and that right in the midst of their grain harvest,) which goes to show they have a desire to know the truth.

We held two nights in the Rudy meeting-house about seven miles distant; had a fair attendance.

We have also held a couple of meetings in the Lorenzo school-house with fair interest. At the latter place, on yesterday afternoon, the writer led a lady into the water and buried her in the liquid grave, to come forth again a new creature in the church and kingdom of God, and we hope to have others follow soon. Ever praying for the spread of truth and the redemption of Zion,

In gospel bonds,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

JOPLIN, Missouri, September 7, 1904.

Dear Herald: Though I am not in the missionary work this year, my heart and mind are in the work of the Lord just as strong as ever, and I am doing all I can for the advancement of truth. I had the honor, August 21, of leading a noble man and his wife down into the waters of baptism. They were members of the Christian Union, and had been for some time, but I met them early last spring and had a short talk with them, and they began an investigation at once. And through the aid of other Saints, and Bro. Luff's twenty-nine sermons, they saw that they were wrong, and desired to be put right. The same day Bro. Graves, of Joplin, baptized two young men of Joplin. The baptisms occurred at the same time and place, so we had a nice time, and were all made to rejoice together. Since then I have been talking to a Christian man and his wife, and explaining the gospel to them as best I could, and they have demanded baptism at my hand. It is to be attended to next Sunday. So you see we are gathering in the golden sheaves one by one. We are waiting now for moonlight nights to come, then we are going out in the country about eight miles to hold a series of meetings. I was out there and preached twice, and Bro. Southerland preached once. The majority of the people were well pleased with the preaching and have requested that I come and preach for them. Have been favorably impressed with the place, and hope to do some good, though my business holds me close at home, and I am deprived of doing much preaching. Always praying for the advancement of truth, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

713 East Broadway.

H. J. THURMAN.

CHICAGO, Illinois, September 6, 1904.

Editors Herald: Just returned from DeKalb, where there is some interest, but not as much as there should be. Some signs of improvement, however; Doctor Carter is now helping in the work.

Bro. R. C. Evans was with us for a few days and did good service, but went to St. Louis last week, accompanied by wife and daughter.

We are trying to prepare for, and to make a success of our reunion gathering, but the people are, in some quarters, apparently not as wide awake to the necessity of making the effort necessary to attend, as they will be when they get acquainted, through experience, with its social and helpful spiritual advantages.

Eight persons were baptized in the city last week, and Chicago is more than holding her own in church progress and work. The booth sales during West Side Street Fair did not net as much profit as we hoped, for the church building fund,—about fifteen dollars. Expenses were high; but we did better than the majority, who lost money.

M. H. BOND.

SOLDIER, Iowa, September 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: We live in the locality so lately vacated by Bro. W. A. Smith, and have enjoyed the good things of the gospel as presented by him in tent-meetings at this place. Much good has been done, many prejudiced minds changed, and so many see things with a different light and better spirit. Yet none gave way to come over, but I believe some were fully convinced. We have this Christian spirit to meet, as in so many places, and there has been much preaching here before, but never to any effect. Now, however, I think the day has dawned, the clouds begin to disappear, the seed is sown, and we look for the harvest by and by. One good old man, a Christian by faith, came up and presented an argument, but soon had to turn his back, he got so rattled. I think he hardly knew what he was saying, as he denied some of the very principles they hold to. The last sermon preached was on Sunday eve to a large crowd, and the subject was the resurrection of the dead and the many glories. It must have been for a purpose he was led that way, as there has been much comment over the matter ever since. We were told people were on the streets till midnight conversing over it, most all in favor. Bro. McDowell was here to help some, and gave a splendid lecture on the Book of Mormon just after Bro. Smith had preached two splendid sermons on the same subject. I think the people will surely see there are no secrets left to be learned after coming into the church, as Mr. Braden would have it in his Moorhead lectures. God is in this work, and may it for ever prosper,—for this is our promise.

NETTIE AMUNDSON.

MEADOWGROVE, Nebraska, September 6, 1904.

Editors Herald: The work is moving along very nicely. The conference at Clearwater was well attended, the good Spirit was present with us, and all were cheered and comforted by its influence. The Saints were glad to be together, and thought they were well paid for the sacrifice made.

We have been preaching on the streets of Blair and Omaha, in company with Bro. Charles Fry, with good effect, I think, as we were able to reach some that could not be reached any other way.

Have lately had the pleasure of leading seven into the waters of baptism.

I have labored with Bro. Strain and Bro. Huff, and it has afforded me much pleasure, as I find that they are earnestly engaged in the work of spreading the glad tidings of good things, which should be to all people.

We are required to do our best to reach as many as possible and leave the results with God, who we know will deal with them justly.

With love and best wishes to all my brethren,
Your fellow servant in Christ,
W. M. SELF.

Independence Items.

While in the midst of the ills and sorrows that beset us mortals, pleasures and solid comforts also are strewn over the pathway, and at present we can say the event most interesting to many of the Saints here is the reunion of Independence Stake being held at Holden, Missouri.

Although the newspapers recently reported the departure of all the church dignitaries, there has been no dearth of excellent pulpit service by the elders of late.

Since August 29 three have been received by letter Brn. Warnock, Iowa, W. P. Pickering and son David, Oklahoma, also two by baptism, making a total membership of fourteen hundred and two.

The Religio and Hawthorne Societies have been giving a new and practical lesson in entertainments by way of providing a "Trip around the world" and their preparations, with an eye to financial success, in costumes, refreshments, and special performances were most elaborate.

This, together with the attractions of carnival week,—parades, concerts, merry-go-rounds, Ferris wheels, snake-eaters, acrobats, balloonists, etc., have tested the strenuousness of the young people to the utmost limit; and the pessimists say our little town of nine thousand with its eleven saloons, in so suddenly throwing off its apathy, will become bankrupt through this abominable fake of a street fair. The people from different points, via St. Louis, bound for Utah, still continue their visits to this historic place, and we have met with Salt Lake merchants not a few, also some of the notable ones of their church. Among them were wife and son of Isaac Barton, bishop of the Nineteenth Ward, also R. K. Thomas of the high council, pioneer stake, who with his son attended Sunday afternoon prayer-meeting; also Elders Duffin and George A. Smith, and Mrs. Andrew Jensen, wife of the assistant historian, all of whom hold firmly to the dogma, polygamy.

Our testimonies of living witnesses concerning Prophet Joseph and the pure principles he professed count little with them. They reject not only these testimonies but also, no doubt, the accepted proceedings of the General Conference of 1845 when it was resolved concerning Prophet Joseph by that body "that we are satisfied that he lived according to his profession, and died a martyr to the truth."

We can call their attention to the witness of those faithful ones who lived at that time, and who have handed down their testimony to their posterity.

One of these we heard quite recently from the lips of a beloved sister whose word is held sacred by all who know her.

N. J. Rayner, daughter of Elder Edward Larkey and Sr. Nancy J. Larkey, was with her parents when they and their family were persecuted and driven from place to place,—from Kirtland and Jackson County, and Nauvoo,—yet they remained true and faithful through the dark and cloudy day, and were staunch members of the Reorganization in 1860.

Our Sr. Rayner remembers well her mother's testimony, given in these words, concerning Prophet Joseph, while in her eighth year, and often afterward. While memory lasts, her loved mother's words will remain. "Joseph had returned from Washington, and he and Hyrum being seated together in the pulpit, were engaged in conversation in low tones of voice, and in reply to what Hyrum had said I distinctly heard Bro. Joseph say (for I sat very near by) 'that accursed doctrine if taught will lead the church to hell: Polygamy must be proclaimed against at once!'"

The principles of the gospel were instilled in Bro. and Sr. Larkey's family, and a firm belief in the restoration, and divine mission of Prophet Joseph has been as an abiding faith, and a firm foundation upon which they and their posterity have built their hope of a glorious future.

At the prayer-meeting, Wednesday evening, which was conducted by Brn. Layton, Resch, and Curtis, there were about fifty in attendance. The auxiliary societies continue at their work, although the carnival festivities seem to interfere somewhat with the usual attendance. We miss the kindly ministrations of several of the elders who are generally vigilant in their attendance to sick and afflicted.

Trusting the reunion, at which many of the Saints are in attendance, may be fraught with much good, we remain,

Your sister in gospel work,
September 9. ABBIE A. HORTON.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. Nellie Umland writes from North Coburn, September 1: "When I obeyed the gospel it was the best step I ever took in my life. I desire to be careful in my conduct; not be a Saint in name alone, but in practice also."

Bro. J. W. Rushton wrote late date from South England: "I have been here in Plymouth over a week with Elder Newton, where we have some scattered Saints. Have had good meetings in hall and open air. We shall leave here for Exeter to-morrow. If at all practicable shall arrange for Bro. Pierce to come here and take charge of the work, as the Saints can not maintain the work by themselves."

Bro. Heman C. Smith wrote from Stillwater, Oklahoma, August 30: "We closed a very pleasant and I think profitable reunion here last Sunday night. H. O. Smith, William Aylor, Hubert Case, D. S. Crawley, and S. J. Hinkle, of the general missionary force, were present. One was baptized. I go from here to Piedmont, Oklahoma, for a few days; thence I have not determined."

Advices from Bro. Frederick M. Smith, Somerville, Massachusetts, September 1: "I leave Boston to-day at one o'clock in the afternoon, for Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where I will join Bro. U. W. Greene for a sojourn of several weeks through the districts in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Our first point will be the conference of the Kirtland District at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, September 3 and 4; the next at Sharon, Pennsylvania, September 10 and 11, at conference of Pittsburg District. Tuesday morning Bro. Sheehy and I returned from Deer Isle. We had pleasant trip together among our whole-hearted Maine Saints, and trust we may have done good. We preached at Little Deer Isle, Mountainville, and Stonington." He wrote from Fayette City, Pennsylvania, September 2: "Bro. Greene and I will hold meetings here, probably, till Wednesday, when we go to Pittsburg, but will leave there Friday, the 9th, for Sharon. September 16 to 18 or 20 we will be in Buffalo City, West Virginia. Enroute Sharon to Buffalo we will stop off at Glen Easton, Providence willing. From Buffalo City I will probably go to Philadelphia. My address there will be Southeast Corner Sixteenth and Allegheny Streets, care John Zimmermann."

Bro. Joseph Luff by card, San Francisco, California, August 30: "I spoke at Oakland on Sunday morning last—here at night. Married H. L. Tilton to Rose L. Hornung early Monday morning, on her arrival here from Lamoni. Expect to start for Sacramento in two days to attend reunion beginning on the 2d of September. Things moving at average California gait. Immense preparations developing to welcome the coming Knights Templars in this city."

Bro. William Davis wrote from Ubyly, Michigan, September 6: "The work in the district is moving along nicely. We had some fine two-day meetings. The Lord has wonderfully blessed us. We have had some wonderful gifts of healing in the district this summer, for which we are thankful."

Miscellaneous Department.

Conference Minutes.

Jonesport.—Conference of Eastern Maine District convened at 2.30, August 27, 1904, W. E. LaRue presiding, E. W. Wilson secretary. Reports received: Elders E. C. Foss, U. M. Kelley; Priest Alonzo Beal; Deacon Fred Beal. Bishop's agent reported, audited, found correct. Elder U. M. Kelley chosen president of district, E. W. Wilson sustained as secretary. Organization of branches at Beals and Aroostook to be effected agreeably to the district president, missionary in charge, and the people to compose said branches, was approved, and the secretary of the Olive Branch authorized to issue letters of removal to such members as may become charter members of the Beals and Aroostook Branches. Adjourned to meet at Indian River, February, 1905, date to be arranged by district president.

Convention Minutes.

Mobile.—Convention met with the Bluff Creek Branch at Van-cleave, Mississippi, August 19, 1904. Vice-president G. W. Sherman in chair. G. W. Sherman was the only officer who reported; he had visited each school in the district, except Theodore school. Two schools reported: Three Rivers 48, balance in treasury, $4.72; Bluff Creek 42, balance in treasury $2.61. The following officers were elected for three months: John Mizelle superintendent; W. L. Booker assistant superintendent; and Edna Cochran, secretary. Motion carried to pay secretary's way to and from conventions, also to offer a vote of thanks to officers of the district for their faithfulness during their term of office. An interesting program in charge Bro. W. W. Groves was rendered by the teachers and pupils of the Sunday-school. Convention adjourned to meet with the Theodore school on Friday night, November 11, 1904.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry, both General and Local, of Michigan, Indiana, Northern Illinois, and Wisconsin; Greeting: I expect to get blank reports into your hands so far as possible so that your first of October report can be promptly made out on that date and returned to J. J. Cornish for Northern and Eastern Michigan Districts; I. M. Smith, Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana; George Jenkins, Southern Indiana; F. M. Cooper, Northeastern Illinois and Wisconsin; and F. A. Russell, Kewanee District, Illinois.

After that the Wisconsin laborers will please report to W. A. McDowell, who will have the oversight of that State; and Bro. Cooper will have charge of Northeastern Illinois District. Will be pleased to get a report from every member in the priesthood throughout the entire mission. When you see this notice just note in your memoranda-book that you are asked to report October 1.

Yours in bonds,

J. W. WIGHT.

VALLEY JUNCTION, Wisconsin, September 6, 1904.

Conference Notices.

The Southern California District conference will be held at San Bernardino, California, October 22, 1904. In addition to the resident force Brn. Joseph Luff and Columbus Scott are expected. According to a provision of last conference the ministry of the district are under obligation to report. Blanks are being sent out to all holding license in the district, and we urgently request that you fill in your reports and send to address below not later than October 1, 1904. The Religio and Sunday-school convention will be held on Friday, October 21, 1904. Sunday-school session will convene at 10 a. m. Election of officers and other matters should command your attendance and interest. T. W. Williams, president, 3720 South Park Avenue, Los Angeles; Maggie Pankey, secretary, Santa Ana, California.

The Southern Missouri District quarterly conference will convene in the Saints' church near Pomona, Howell County, Missouri, September 17, 1904, 10 a. m. All reports and communications should be in my hands not later than September 14, at 1928, Vernon Avenue, Springfield, Missouri. J. C. Chrestensen, secretary.

Convention Notices.

The Northern Nebraska Sunday-school association convenes with the Platte Valley Branch October 1, 1904, at 2.30 p. m. It is desired that all schools send delegates. Alice R. Watkins, Columbus, secretary.

Died.

CURTIS.—After a lingering illness, Hickman Thomas Curtis died at his home near Holden, August 3, 1904. He was born March 9, 1857, near Maysville, DeKalb County, Missouri; and was baptized July 4, 1875, near Sedalia, Missouri, by Elder A. J. Cato, remaining a faithful Christian until the end. Married Miss Frances Cato, at Wakenda, Ray County, Missouri, December 1, 1880. To this union nine children were born. The wife, seven children, aged parents, two brothers, and four sisters survive him. Sermon by Bro. G. H. Hulmes. Interment in Holden Cemetery.

HARTNELL.—Sr. Sarah Hartnell, born March 28, 1856, in Elgen County, Ontario. Was united in marriage to Thomas Hartnell, September 14, 1878. Christened in Church of England in infancy, she afterwards united with the Methodist Church and remained in communion with that body for several years. January 28, 1879, she united with the Reorganized Church, and has proved herself a devoted Christian until day of death, August 1, 1904, after a severe sickness. She leaves to mourn their loss, five children, mother, and husband and numerous relatives and friends. Funeral services conducted by Evangelist J. J. Bailey.

MOREY.—Gerald, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. James Morey, living one mile south of the Dolen Schoolhouse, Sunday morning, of what was thought to be stomach trouble, at the age of 1 year, 8 months, and some days. All that loving hands could do was done for the little darling but the kind Father called him home. Services in charge of Elder Samuel Broliar of Wilber, Nebraska. Was laid to rest in the Dolen Cemetery to await the first resurrection.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

DAVIS.—At Arkansas City, Kansas, August 15, 1904, Mr. Albert D. Davis, aged 18 years, 4 months, 13 days. He was hurt by a railway train, and only lived six hours after. He was the only child of Sr. Alice Mortz, and a grandson of Bro. and Sr. R. J. Harmon of Davis City, Iowa, where the body was brought for burial. Elder H. A. Stebbins preached the sermon on the 18th.

RUMEL.—Zenos William Rumel, at Clearwater, Nebraska, August 23, 1904, as the result of being thrown from a horse and dragged. Bro. Zenos was at the time of his death 13 years, 2 months, and 2 weeks old, and was a member of the church, having been baptized June 15, 1902, by Elder Levi Gamet. He was an exceptionally fine boy, loved and respected by all who knew him. He leaves father, mother, two brothers, and a sister to mourn. Bro. Rumel and family have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire neighborhood. Funeral sermon by Levi Gamet.

NEAL.—At Batson, Texas, August 23, 1904, at 2 o'clock, Evelyn Dallas Neal, six-year-old daughter of George and Albertie Neal, died of typhoid fever after ten days' illness. Sermon preached by Reverend W. M. Allison. She was blessed at the San Antonio Branch, by Brn. T. J. Jett and Wyatt, in the early part of the year.

DUNLAP.—Bro. Edward Dunlap was born in Henry County, Tennessee, in 1871, died at the age of 33. Obeyed the gospel and was baptized by Elder P. B. Seaton, March 31, 1890. He leaves a wife, three children, four sisters, seven brothers, father, mother, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. He lived true and faithful till death. Blessed are the Saints who put their trust in the Lord. Funeral sermon by Elder G. H. Graves, August 14, 1904.

LASLEY.—At St. Joseph, Missouri, of tuberculosis, July 28, 1904, Bro. Samuel E. Lasley, aged 47 years and 4 days. He suffered many months from this dread disease, but was very patient and uncomplaining through all of it. He left wife, two daughters, and four sons, the youngest a boy of eleven years. By his request Elder H. A. Stebbins preached his funeral sermon. The body was brought to Lamoni for burial. Besides being a good son, and husband, and father, he was a member of the church, baptized April 4, 1890, by Elder A. S. Cochran.

BOLIO.—Mary Josephine, wife of A. Bolio, died at Carson, Iowa, August 19, 1904, aged thirty-seven years. Funeral services at the Saints' church in Carson conducted by Elder D. Hougas. She leaves a husband and seven children to mourn their loss.

ABBOTT.—At his home in Carsonville, Becker County, Minnesota, August 28, by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of a small boy. Bro. William Abbott was born September 7, 1848, at Eramasa, Ontario. Married to Martha J. Cripps, April 2, 1874. Came to Becker County, April 25, 1888; was baptized September 9, 1888, at Lake View, Minnesota, by A. H. Smith, and confirmed by Elders Martin and Tabbutt. Bro. Abbott was a kind, generous neighbor, and a good citizen. Funeral services were held at the schoolhouse in charge of Elders T. J. Martin and H. Way. A very large congregation was present.

SANDAGE.—In the Lone Rock Branch, Harrison County, Missouri, September 4, 1904, of paralysis, Sr. Clarissa C. Sandage, aged 67 years, 4 months, and 1 day. Her husband, Bro. Thomas Sandage, died ten years ago. Four sons and two daughters survive her; Joshua, Abram, Emanuel, Moses, and Srs. Paul Garver and J. A. Scott. She was baptized November 25, 1883, by C. H. Jones, and lived a consistent and faithful life. By her request Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached the funeral sermon, and Bro. C. H. Jones assisted. The Lone Rock Chapel was filled with sympathetic Saints and other neighbors.

Theodor Herzl, the Father of Modern Zionism.

Under the leadership of Herzl, modern Zionism grew rapidly, particularly in Eastern Europe, where the condition of the Jewish masses is well-nigh hopeless. In the six general Zionist congresses held between 1897 and 1903, his ideas were further formulated in the following: (1) The practical encouragement of colonization in Palestine of Jewish farmers, artisans, and manufacturers; (2) the organization and unification of the Jewish masses, with due regard to local conditions, and in the spirit of the laws of the respective countries; (3) the strengthening and development of a Jewish national sentiment and consciousness; (4) preliminary steps toward the securing of the consent of the powers, indispensable to the accomplishment of the purposes of Zionism. Leaving the work of internal organization to the central committee and its branches, Herzl assigned to himself the diplomatic mission, and was received as the representative of the Jewish nation by rulers and statesmen, among them the Sultan of Turkey. In 1903, he secured from the British colonial secretary, Mr. Chamberlain, the promise of a territorial grant in Uganda, Africa, for purposes of colonization. The Jewish colonies were to be given extensive autonomy in the agricultural and industrial development of the region. The project created stubborn opposition on the part of the Russian Zionists, who would not content themselves with any soil but that of Palestine. A committee is now investigating the feasibility of colonization in Uganda.

The strength of the Zionist movement is evidenced by the rapid increase of the so-called "shekel" fund, derived from annual contributions of one shekel (twenty-five cents) each by the active members of the Zionist organization. In 1897, this had a membership of 78,000, which grew to 122,000 in 1900, and to nearly 400,000 in 1903.—From "Herzl, Leader in Modern Zionism," by Herman Rosenthal, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for August.

Japan's Most Famous Buddhist Temple.

One of the Japanese cruisers bears the old name of Osaka, Naniwa, "wave blossom." It was here that the first emperor, Jimmu Tenno, is said to have landed with his followers, at the mythical date of 660 B. C., and here, quite certainly, the first Buddhist temple was built by Korean missionaries in 522 A. D. The temple was burned in the reaction that followed before Buddhism was finally established; but there is a large and very famous temple on the site of one built by the prince-priest Shotoku Daishi, the real founder of Japanese Buddhism. In one of the buildings they have a peculiar ceremony for the dead. A friend writes the name of the departed on a slip of paper, and throws it into a stream of water that runs through the temple; the water carries the missive straight to Saint Shotoku, who, they believe, accepts it as a sort of letter of introduction, and shows kindness to the new and lonely soul.—From "Kyoto: The Heart of Old Japan," by Anna C. Hartshorne, in the Chautauquan for August.

Some Wondrous Facts About Paper.

The new paper-making machines which make the modern magazine possible are wonderful. There is one paper-mill, for instance, at Rumford Falls, in the woods of Maine, which turns out every day a strip of paper one hundred and forty-four feet wide and one hundred and fifty miles long—long enough to put a sash around the earth every six months.

There are, all told, eleven hundred paper-mills in the United States, producing two hundred million dollars' worth of paper a year. They burn up three million tons of coal yearly, and shred two million five hundred thousand cords of wood into pulp. About twelve million five hundred thousand trees are cut down to feed these paper-mills, every tree being at least nine inches in diameter. One month's issue of the Woman's Home Companion requires as many trees as there are on a good-sized farm. If you tear off a tiny corner of this page, and put it under a strong microscope, you will notice the little splinters of wood of which all magazine paper is made.—September Woman's Home Companion.

Iowa State College Establishes Course in Forestry.

The turning out of skilled foresters is no inconsiderable part of the valuable work of the Bureau of Forestry. No profession is so little crowded, and none offers a more inviting field to the conscientious and zealous student. That forestry, as a science essential to the well-being of the nation, is steadily growing in popular favor is evidenced by the increasing number of schools and professorships of forestry that are established. The latest professorship is that at the agricultural college at Ames, Iowa, called the Iowa State College. To fill this position it has chosen Mr. Hugh P. Baker, of the Bureau of Forestry. Mr. Baker is a graduate of the Michigan Agricultural College and the Yale Forest School, and has had a wide experience in handling problems in forestry in the West. He will lecture at the college half of each year on general forestry in its application to Iowa conditions. The other half of the year he will devote to Bureau work, for the most part investigating forest problems as they concern the State of Iowa.

Timber Cut by Electricity.

A new and interesting method of cutting trees was experimented upon recently in the forests of France, which may prove to be of great commercial value.

A platinum wire is charged with a heavy current of electricity to a white heat, and is then used like a saw. The process takes about one eighth the time of the ordinary saw, no sawdust is produced, and the carbonization caused by the heated wire acts as a slight preservative to the end of the timber.—Country Life in America.

Robert Baker, the well-known congressman from the Sixth District of New York, contributes an able and highly-suggestive paper to the September Arena on "The reign of graft and the remedy." Mr. Baker is a clear-visioned thinker who believes in the old democratic ideals of justice, economy, and rigid honesty. He discusses political questions from the viewpoint of a high-minded statesman who recognizes the fundamental issues involved, and the great perils that confront democratic institutions through the rapid spread of political corruption and venality. This paper will unquestionably occasion much discussion, and will be productive of great good. It is the first of a series of notable contributions which will be a strong feature of the Arena during the ensuing year, dealing with present perils of democracy and how to overcome them.

In the last twenty years the center of population has moved to Indiana, the center of farm values from Eastern Indiana to Western Illinois, and the center of farming area from Eastern Illinois to Central Missouri. Twenty years ago the center of the manufacturing industry was in Western Pennsylvania; to-day it is in Central Ohio. The center of the farm income of the United States now rests on the Mississippi River; and, while land values have declined in New England, they have increased by more than one hundred per cent in the West.—The World's Work.

THE "CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST."

We quote the following from an editorial in the Deseret News of Salt Lake City, Utah, for September 10, 1904, for purposes which we state below, premising that we are in no sense angry, or moved by malice in what we write:

The Church of Jesus Christ, whether of former or of latter days, was and is, and must of necessity be the one church holding his authority. All other organizations are and were of men. That is the only rational and scriptural view of the matter. "Is Christ divided?" pertinently asked the apostle of old. There can be but one "body of Christ," and all that gathereth not therein "scattereth abroad." "In vain they cry Lord, Lord and do not the things he said." The numerous and varied organizations called churches throughout Protestant Christendom can all be traced to human origin. None of them pretend to direct descent of authority from the early apostles or to have received immediate divine communication. This leaves them on their own basis as the systems of men. Why should they become so violently angry at mention of the simple truth?

Of course these facts do not prove that "Mormonism" is of divine origin. That is another matter. That rests upon its own evidences and light and power. That is capable of demonstration in its own behalf. But that is not the subject under this present consideration. Yet its claims are open to fair dispute and its doctrines and ceremonies to the opposition of disbelievers. But however they may dislike or reject the faith of the Saints, they have no right, moral or religious, to abuse, malign, berate, or misrepresent them or to entertain towards them the malice and bitterness that are exhibited in the sayings and doings of the prototypes of the persecutors of Christ and his apostles.

We distinctly agree with the statement that those who dislike or reject the faith and theories of the church in Utah have "no right, moral or religious, to abuse, malign, berate, or misrepresent" them. We agree with this proposition all the more readily for the reason that we hold to the same conviction with regard to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints of which, by the grace of God, we are a member.

That the claims made for the church in Utah are "open to fair dispute, and its doctrines and ceremonies to the oppositions of disbelievers," must necessarily be true, as such claims cover a wide range of questions of value and topics of interest to all who have regard for the truth and the salvation of themselves and others. Whether the contention that the church as it now exists with headquarters in Salt Lake City is of divine origin, and is the Church of

A Hymn of Praise.

Come, O my soul, in tuneful lay,
 Jehovah's praise proclaim;
 And at his feet thy homage pay—
 The honors of his name.

Lord, give to me a humble mind,
 That I might follow thee;
 My will to thine fore'er resigned
 Through all eternity.

Lord, give to me a loving heart,
 From doubt and murmurings free;
 Thy spirit to my soul impart
 That I might love like thee.

Lord, give to me a song of praise,
 That I may laud thy fame;
 And in this vale of tears I'll raise
 Hosannas to thy name.

And when my toils on earth are o'er,
 And all my work is done,
 I'll sing upon a happier shore
 "Through grace the vict'ry's won."

ROBERT SMITH.

Christ as a consequence, can successfully be maintained is open to serious question.

"But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."—Matthew 6:33, King James' Version.

"But seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness."—Matthew 6:33, Inspired Version.

"Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled."—Doctrine and Covenants 1:7.

"And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, Nay."—Doctrine and Covenants, section 83, Lamoni edition; section 84 Utah edition.

These quotations will remind the reader that the object of the restoration of the gospel with authority to preach and officiate in the ordinances of the church by the authority of Jesus Christ contemplated the building up of the church and kingdom in righteousness, or as the Apostle Paul has it, in writing to the Ephesians, fifth chapter, twenty-fifth verse: "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, . . . that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."

Wherever the Church of Jesus Christ is found it must be essential to its continued existence that its ministry and all its officers shall be found laboring for its advancement in the spirit of the quotations which we have made. There can be no question as to this conclusion. If the statement made in the quotation from the Deseret News that "There can be but one body of Christ," is true, it is practicable and pertinent to make the inquiry, Is the church, making the claim as the editorial quoted from does, the Church of Christ? And, Does the history of that church since the choosing of Brigham Young to be its president, and an examination of its faith and doctrines, ceremonies and practices, show that it has been establishing the righteousness of God? Is it well to raise the question as to its righteousness when the practices of its priesthood in a contention with the alleged churches of men, of which the editor writes, must inevitably call to the minds of readers the facts admitted by their leading members, in a just tribunal of the United States, that they have been disregarding the law of the land, which by revelation from the Master they were charged to keep until he came whose right it is to reign, and have been violating its provisions in their lives, were at the time they made the admission doing so, and proposed to continue so doing? Not only this, but the same leaders have before the same tribunal admitted that they were violating what they confessed or understood to be the law of God to them as a people.

We do not make this inquiry in any spirit of animosity or malice toward the men; we are moved by pity in the contemplation of such a condition in the church making the claim to be the Church of Christ, and for the men, though they may be few in number, who have permitted themselves to get into such condition of disobedience, and have been compelled to so confess. Plural marriage is no part of the law of righteousness as found in the New Testament gospel provisions, neither is it any part of the gospel provisions as brought to light in the revelation by which the restoration and the establishment of the Church of Christ was made possible in the last days.

Those who may be seeking for the kingdom of God, or to bring forth that kingdom, have the undoubted right to insist upon the completest liberty of examination into the basis upon which every alleged Church of Christ proposes to rest its claim to such distinction, and demand the fairest and most open opportunities to test every individual tenet, every accepted practice, and every traditional claim and theory advanced in opposition to the alleged churches of men and in support of the claim to be the Church of Christ. The editor well says that the asserted facts in the first paragraph of our quotation from the News do not prove Mormonism to be of divine origin. If by "Mormonism," as used by the editor, he intends to convey the idea that the particular dogma and practice which has been the focusing point for the targets of the opposition from the various churches of men to which he refers, as "the source of the evil," which is the caption of his editorial, it ought to be apparent to every one acquainted with the situation that fair inquiry into the time, place, and circumstances attending the promulgation of the dogma and the adoption of its practice will show clearly that it is not a part of the righteousness of God, but that it is in contravention of the rule of scripture and opposite to that which is made a part and parcel of the things in the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, which by revelation have been pronounced true and faithful, and disregard of which will bring condemnation as being a pollution of the inheritance of the Saints.

The statement made by the editor, referring to the claim as to the divine origin for Mormonism, and that it is capable of demonstration, "is not the subject under this present consideration," is but a handful of rhetorical dust thrown into the air to mystify and hide from investigation and analysis the things alleged. We have heretofore referred to the fact that the inquiries of the Reorganized Church, into the theories and doctrines and practices of the church in the valley with a desire for competitive examination for frank discussion, have been repulsed by the authorities of the church upon the alleged ground that we were apostate and that such discussion was urged by us in the spirit of spite and malevolence. This is not correct. There are many thousands in whom there has been a degree of faith in the mission of Joseph Smith, as conferred by the angel, developed by a consideration of the gospel as taught during the first fourteen years of church existence under the presidency of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, who are intensely interested in knowing the truth in regard to the true church. If the things complained of by the Reorganized Church are not parts and parcels of the original faith and are not the things that tend to the establishing of the righteousness of God, then they should be renounced by those who have taught and are now teaching them, and the practice complained of should cease.

Further than this the few who are said to be practicing plural marriage and who are confessedly doing so contrary to the legal enactments of the United States and the State and to the inspired advice of President Woodruff as acknowledged by the whole church in conference assembled, should be enjoined by action of the great majority upon whom now rests the burden of obloquy and contempt which the introduction and long-continued practice has brought upon all the people. It is high time that the voice of the people should be heard and that the leaders should be made to comprehend that the language of divine writ which we have introduced from the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the book of Doctrine and Covenants should become the rule of faith and conduct of those who profess to be the Church of Christ.

FROM THE REGION ROUND ABOUT.

There has been a constant inflow of Saints into the regions round about, and it was the Editor's pleasure on Saturday, September 10, to be present at a reunion held at Holden, Johnson County, Missouri, forty miles south of Independence on the Missouri Pacific Railway, and to there greet a large number of Saints the result of baptisms in the regions and immigration from nearly all points of the compass. The reunion was held on the fair-grounds by consent of the fair-grounds authorities, was in charge of the missionary in charge and the Independence Stake officers, and at a point where a branch has been raised up through accessions by baptism and by immigration to the number of two hundred and sixty.

The Editor there greeted Saints whom he had baptized in different parts of the country thirty-five years ago, and more recently, aged, middle-aged, and young, all of them striving earnestly to approve themselves as good citizens both of the state and the kingdom. The branch is under the presidency of Bro. William Odell, an energetic business man of the place.

The business of the conference and of the reunion was attended to on Saturday, and the Editor preached to a large congregation on Saturday evening, followed on Sunday morning by Bro. William Aylor, in the afternoon by the Editor, and in the evening by the veteran, Bro. Hilliard. The weather was good throughout with the exception that Sunday afternoon and evening were quite cool. The largest congregation was on Saturday evening when perhaps some twelve hundred listened with attention to the words of the preacher.

This recital is a brief notice of the effort put forth by our people to institute a reunion for the purpose of association and encouragement and spiritual comfort of the Saints in the stake.

Fourteen branches reported at the business session of the conference, the smallest membership being twenty-six in number, the largest being thirteen hundred and ninety-four, but we noticed by an item in the Ensign that later accessions make this number fourteen hundred and two. This is the Independence Branch. There were some branches not reporting. The attendance at this reunion was good and the preaching reported to be good also.

The town is located in a fine, healthy region, the soil good, the inhabitants friendly. The advice to gather into the regions round about, talking not of judgment nor boasting of mighty faith, is having its legitimate effect upon the Saints and those among whom they settle. The persistent continuance in upright conduct, fair dealing, and the exhibition of a disposition to lead sober and honorable lives is having a telling effect in that portion of Missouri. What is true of the neighborhood of Holden is also true of other localities where the Saints have settled. There must be no going back to that which will bring distress and discomfort to the people, and injury and wrong to the Saints. It is quite as easy to live honorable lives as disreputable ones and is far less dangerous both in a political and religious sense. Those who move into the regions round about with the intention of making their homes there, should do so with the understanding that they should make as advantageous settlement as they can, and in doing it should not be in such haste as to embarrass themselves by settling in localities from which afterward it should be desirable that they should remove. They can accomplish this by properly consulting with brethren already there who are acquainted with the situation and the political and economical conditions prevailing. By this advice it is not intended to deprive anybody of their right to go where they may choose or deem it to be best, as we have no such intention, but to give advice that may possibly save individuals from discontent and financial loss.

The brethren at Holden are worshipping in an Episcopal church practically abandoned by the former congregation, which they rented for four years. An effort is being made to dislodge them, which probably will be successful after a time, but they hope soon to be strong enough to build for themselves, which they can do if unity continues to prevail among them. The spirit of unity was with the assembly at the reunion from first to last, and by a careful observation of the rules of courtesy and kindness in the dealing with each other a spirit of unity will be conserved and perpetuated to the benefit of all.

Going from a reunion held at Davis City near to Lamoni, we could not fail to notice the larger spirit of inquiry in the newer locality. There has been persistent preaching done all around Lamoni in the schoolhouses and little churches built by the Saints, so that perhaps there is not the same curiosity to see and hear them that was exhibited in the reunion at Holden. The meetings at Davis City devoted to preaching were quite largely attended, especially in the evening, when people could get from their work for the time required to attend service. We presume that these reunions will be reported by those having charge, but it is pleasing to the Editor to feel the assurance that the gospel forces are at work and that their influence is being appreciated by both those in and those out of the church.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We are asked a question as to whether it would be right for a person desiring to be baptized to go from the branch of the church where he was residing to another branch to have the rite performed, it being understood that the branch where the party was residing has a proper corps of officers ready to officiate. There may be no absolute wrong in such procedure, but it would be better, if such person desired baptism in another branch by other officers than those who were local, that they should consult with the officers of the branch where they are living and if there are no legal objections to the baptism, to get the consent or acquiescence of these officers to their being baptized elsewhere, as a matter of courtesy, thus avoiding the inference that might be drawn that there were personal objections to the local officers administering. This question is answered upon the hypothesis that no such local objections exist or are covered by the question in the mind of the questioner.

There is a proposition on foot to reclaim a portion of the basin of the upper Nile. Sir William Garstin estimates the cost at $17,500,000. To accomplish the object had in view he suggests the cutting of a new course for the White Nile from Fox to Tanfikia two hundred miles at a probable cost of $22,500,000. It is proposed to secure the safe use of eighty per cent in Lakes Victoria and Albert, now lost in swamps. It would mean the reclaiming of 2,650,000 acres in Egypt and the Soudan, resulting in an additional revenue of $6,025,000 to Egypt and $2,500,000 to the Soudan per annum. This is the work of Great Britain. We may safely wish it success.

Sr. Mabel Braden, of Appleton City, Missouri, writes to the HERALD stating Srs. Joannah and Pearl Kennicutt desire the prayers of the Saints in their behalf that they may be restored to health.

Feed My Sheep.

The risen Savior came one morn,
Where sparkling waters lave
The shores of lovely Galilee,
And a charge to Peter gave;
And he is still entreating,
As then beside the deep:
If ye love me, O, my chosen,
Fail not to feed my sheep.

Ye Shepherds of my pasture,
Who are called to do my will;
Are you guarding well my precious ones,
Do you all my law fulfill?
When wolves around them gather,
Do you faithful vigil keep?
Do you recall the charge I gave
To feed my Lambs and Sheep?

The way is rough and thorny,
The Sheep oft go astray:
While weary Watchmen slumber
They leave the narrow way.
Wake up, ye drowsy Shepherds!
Lest you have cause to weep,
For the foe may slyly enter
And make havoc of the Sheep!

Think not your duty ended
When you have brought them in,
But follow, should they wander,
And shield from every sin.
If faithful in your service
A rich reward you'll reap.
I've called you, and ordained you
To feed my hungry Sheep.

Feed my Sheep as loving Shepherds;
You are called to be my own.
Partakers of my cross on earth
Shall share with me my throne.
Press on to glorious victory,
Let the path be e'er so steep;
Remember that I gave my life
To save the Lambs and Sheep.

ARE THEY "CAMPBELLITES"?

In the early days of the nineteenth century there arose a religious movement called by its founders and advocates the "Christian Church," the "Disciple Church," and the "Church of Christ," the name varying as the whim of the individual suggested. Its opponents, however, have been unanimous in denominating it "The Campbellite Church." To this the followers of this movement object, declaring that they are followers of no man, but that they are founded upon Bible teaching alone, and point proudly to the early mottoes put forth by the first advocates of the movement, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent," and that they must have a "Thus saith the Lord, either in express terms, or by approved precedent."—Life of A. Campbell, by Grafton, pp. 51, 54. Thus they boastfully lay claim to the Bible as their creed "without attempting to inculcate anything of human authority, of private opinion, or inventions of men, as having any place in the constitution, faith, or worship of the Christian Church." (Ibid., p. 54.)

But it is one thing to avow a thing, another to carry out that avowal, and it is my purpose in this paper to show that while they made great pretense of teaching the Bible alone, yet their theology is the theology of Alexander Campbell and that his private opinion on Scripture molded and does yet mold the teaching of the so-called "Christian Church" and "Church of Christ," two divisions of the original church founded by Alexander Campbell, called respectively the "Progressive" and "Non-progressive" wings.

It is conceded by all, or nearly all, that the movement originated with Thomas Campbell and his son Alexander. In proof of this I will present a few quotations from the various authors of this Christian Church. On the title-page of Grafton's Life of Alexander Campbell he is called "leader of the great reformation of the nineteenth century." In the preface he says, in speaking of the great men of the past, "First among these worthies must ever be placed that grand man, to whose faith, originality, and genius our religious movement owes its origin, Alexander Campbell, the Sage of Bethany."

In the opening sentences of his work, on page 17, is another candid admission by Mr. Grafton:

The author of a religious movement which within the space of a century can claim a million adherents, is deserving of the consideration of all thoughtful people. When the movement rises, not on the tide of popular favor, but in the face of the most bitter opposition, the genius that could inspire it is doubly deserving of our attention. Such has been the trials and triumphs of the Christian Church, which, with its vast membership, and multiplied agencies for the regeneration of the world, is to-day a monument to the faith and genius of Alexander Campbell, and which assures him an exalted place among the world's religious leaders.

Commenting on the universal agitation on questions that were then disturbing the religious world Mr. Grafton says on page 57:

On this new and rising wave of religious feeling came this young prophet of God, commissioned to speak burning words against the bitter hatred of sectarianism, and to call men's attention to the old landmarks which had been hidden beneath the theological rubbish of centuries. The field was ripe, and the laborer, equal to the task of reaping, was at hand.

And again on page 75:

Thus in an obscure corner of the earth, and in humble occupations Providence was fashioning the mind and heart of a religious leader, who was shortly, like John the Baptist in the wilderness of Judea, to unmask the pharisaism of his time, and to call a world of erring ecclesiasts to true repentance.

Once more on pages 88 and 89 does Mr. Grafton emphasize the fact that Alexander Campbell was and is the recognized leader of the movement the result of which is the so-called "Christian Church." He says:

Up to this point Thomas Campbell had been the recognized and trusted leader. It was his voice that first sounded the call to God's wrangling children to cease from their unseemly strife. It was his pen that marked out a pathway to a broader and holier fellowship. But from the moment Thomas Campbell concluded to follow the example of his son in relation to baptism, the mantle of leadership passed to the latter. Without rivalry or jealousy, and in the same perfect confidence and loving companionship, they continued to share the labors of the cause they had espoused, but it was Alexander who henceforth stood in the forefront, strong, resolute, aggressive, the recognized leader of the reformation, intensely hated by his enemies, ardently admired and loved by his friends.

I now turn to another book issued also by the Christian Publishing Company, of St. Louis, Missouri, 1901, called The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, and quote from a paper written by Charles Louis Loos called the "Introductory period." On page 58 he calls it, "A. Campbell's reformatory enterprise." On pages 64 and 66 he says:

The inceptive thought and first purpose of this movement had their origin with Thomas Campbell. . . . This was the father's task—to project the great reform. But to bring it to full development of purpose and constitution of life and then execute with success, demanded qualities Thomas Campbell did not possess in the fullness of their required strength. This office fell providentially to his son.

Much more might be quoted to show that Alexander Campbell was and is acknowledged to be the leader of the movement, but this will suffice. It will be noticed without doubt by the reader that in the extracts quoted above there is frequent use of the words prophet, Providence, providential, and so forth, used no doubt to carry the idea that God was back of the movement. But these words are of recent invention; and we wish now to show that the movement was of human origin, and that their boasted claim of "Bible and Bible alone" is a fallacy, and from the very inception of the work the "Leader of the Nineteenth Century Reformation" eliminated God from his work and directed him to stand aside.

The Christian Baptist was the first periodical published by Alexander Campbell. Of this periodical Grafton in his life of Campbell says: "To-day no stronger or better statement of the fundamental principles advocated by the Christian Church can be found than in the pages of the Christian Baptist."—Page 116. So we turn to this oracle to see what estimate to put on the origin of the Christian Church, and we read from pages 20 and 21:

But some, unable to resist the evidence of the preceding facts and reasons, will exclaim, What! have we no men among us called and sent by God? Stop, my friend. What use have we for such men? Do we need any new message from the skies? No. Divine messages require divine messengers. If there be no need of a new message from God, or a new revelation of the Spirit, then there is no need of new ambassadors, of new revealers, or new prophets. If the message of the Twelve Apostles, or if the revelation of the New Testament is incomplete, is imperfect, is inadequate, then we have need of a new message and new messengers from the skies. But until some bold genius undertakes to prove that there is need for a new revelation or a new message from God, we shall fearlessly declare, that while we have the writings of the four evangelists, the writings of Paul, of Peter, of James, of Jude, and John, we want no new message from the skies, no ambassadors from Christ. In short, there is no need to have men among us professing to be called and sent by God.

Later the church of which he was the founder reiterated the above. In 1887 there was an attempt of the Episcopal Church to bring the churches into a unity, and an address stating certain points upon which they thought unity might be brought about was presented to the Christian Church. They could not agree, however, only on some points. From the reply of the committee from the Christian Church, consisting of Isaac Errett, J. W. McGarvey, D. R. Dungan, J. H. Garrison, B. J. Radford, C. L. Loos, and A. R. Benton, I extract the following:

We heartily concur in your statement of the first essential to the restoration of unity; the recognition of "the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament as the revealed word of God." In the language of the Westminster Confession of Faith, "The whole counsel of God concerning all things necessary for his own glory, man's salvation, faith, and life, is either expressly set down in the Scripture, or by good and necessary sequence may be deduced from the Scripture, unto which nothing is at any time to be added, whether by new revelation of the Spirit or the traditions of men."—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 362.

In these quotations Mr. Campbell, and his followers as his echo, clearly and in so many words set God and the Holy Spirit aside and say we are capable of running this little institution of ours; we do not need you or your Spirit. The audacity of the men is astounding. Their setting aside of God led them to do many inconsistent and laughable things. I do not see, after such declarations as these, how they could pray for God to direct them, but they did it frequently as the following will show. A convention had been held in St. Louis in May, 1869, and a resolution "that a committee of twenty be appointed to take into consideration the whole question of evangelization and report, if possible, a scriptural and practical plan for raising money and spreading the gospel. Said committee to report at Louisville meeting in October next." (Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 298.)

Twenty men were appointed, "men of strength and wisdom every one of them," says the writer, and met a few days before the convention to formulate the report, and the historian says he will "allow W. K. Pendleton, a member of the committee, to describe the struggles of that brave body":

They were a body of the ablest men among us. I felt strong in the struggles of our chiefs, when I stood among them in council. I think we realized the situation and felt both its responsibility and its difficulty. But we went at the work prayerfully, hopefully, and courageously. The whole theory of the plan was clearly grasped, and every detail was analyzed, criticised, and adjusted, till the whole stood before us clear, consistent, scriptural, and satisfactory. It was an earnest and careful work. I shall never forget the labors of the night which Brn. Errett and Moore and Munnell and myself spent on it. We had talked it all over and agreed about the substance of it in committee of the whole, and it was referred to us to put into proper shape and order and expression. We had only a night in which to do it.

We met in an upper room of the hospitable home of Winthrop H. Hopson, and there wrestled all night for the inspiration and the wisdom and the wit which we needed. Morning came and with its light the end of our toil and counsel. We were satisfied and bore our work back to the committee, and so it went to that convention the grandest we have ever heard.—Pages 299, 300.

This plan was adopted by the convention held at Louisville and hence passed into history as the "Louisville Plan." Successive men tried it and finally after nine years of trial and failure one F. M. Green was chosen secretary and of this plan that had been born of prayer and spiritual travail and was "scriptural, consistent, and satisfactory," the historian continues:

Bro. Green writes of his work as corresponding secretary: "I finally convinced the brethren that an angel of paradise could not make the Louisville Plan a success and succeeded in getting the constitution changed to provide for a more businesslike method of conducting our work."—Ibid., p. 324.

But could they expect anything else? They had gone on record as saying that they did not need God or his Spirit. Where was the consistency in asking him for wisdom? But why could they not agree with their coreligionists?

They had agreed that the Bible was all that they needed but could not agree on what the Bible taught. It seems to me that this very fact emphasizes the fact that no unity could come but through God and his inspiration. But let us go back now to A. Campbell and see how much he depended on the Bible and the Bible alone.

W. T. Moore furnishes a paper on "The turbulent period" of their movement and it is published in the Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. On page 220 he says:

From the beginning of their movement the Disciples had always taken a deep interest in translations of the New Testament. This feeling was strictly logical in view of their religious position. They magnified the word of God as no other people did. It was therefore all-important that they should possess, as far as possible, the exact mind of the Holy Spirit in any translation that might be used. They felt that the authorized version, though incomparable in many respects, was, nevertheless, in some important particulars, far from what it ought to be. Mr. Campbell had himself taught them to discredit King James' Version, as he had published a version made by George Campbell, Philip Doddridge and others. Consequently when it was proposed by the American Bible Union to publish a revised edition of the New Testament, the Disciples at once threw themselves into the proposal with a heartiness which did much to assure success; and as Mr. Campbell had been selected to translate the Acts of the Apostles, this fact gave additional interest to what they already felt in the forthcoming work.

The first edition of this translation was published in 1864. Upon the whole it was not very favorably received by scholars, and especially by those of the brotherhood. Its merits were many, and these were at once distinctly recognized. But it was a disappointment with respect to some important points where better things had been expected.

Campbell himself had taught them to distrust King James' Version and the other translations did not suit all, and hence men were without a standard and were at the mercy of the translator, unless they were fortunate enough to understand the Greek and Hebrew; and then lexicographers differed in regard to Greek and Hebrew definitions. How simple the solution of the difficulty as given in James 1:5: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." But their creed had shut God and the Holy Spirit out.

Campbell's idea of the qualifications of a preacher is given in Grafton's history, pages 64 and 65. I extract his No. 3:

He (the preacher) must be well instructed in morality and religion, and in the original tongues in which the Scriptures are written, for without them he can hardly be qualified to explain scripture or to teach religion or morality.

With this idea he sets about qualifying men to preach his doctrine and so he establishes Bethany College, "where he engaged in his intensest labors, and which deserves ever to be celebrated as the cradle of the Nineteenth Century Reformatian." (Grafton, p. 94.)

Mr. Campbell made a complete change on several important matters connected with the carrying on of his work. In the Christian Baptist, July 7, 1828, page 453, he addresses a letter to Bishop Semple in which I find the following:

And when I see a good and wise man, like yourself, lured from the bishop's office, and severed from the flock, the oversight of which you had committed into your hands, and of which you are one day to give an account; I say, when I see one of your high attainments allured from all these sacred relations and this glorious responsibility, to help to build up a college in the city of Washington, which never did promise any spiritual good, and which the Lord Jesus never stood in need of, not even when he commenced with such fearful odds against him, from all the schools of philosophy in Greece and Rome; I again say, when I see you enticed to abandon your flock for this vain project, for the fashions of this world which pass away, I am at a loss to say what greater mischief can be done to the cause of the humble gospel, than the schemes and projects now in fashion are doing, and with the greater effect too, by the good words and fair speeches which make them go down so well with the good people.

But soon after this arraignment of Bishop Semple he discovered that there was something wrong with his project and Mr. Grafton on page 97 records this interesting bit of history:

The difficulties Mr. Campbell now encountered, convinced him that he had nothing to hope from his brethren in the ministry, and that if his efforts at religious reformation were to succeed, it must be by the aid of young men trained under his direction.

This I think gives the whole case away and justifies us in saying that they were "Campbellites" pure and simple. But we have more important, more sweeping admissions even than this. In chapter eleven of Mr. Grafton's Life of A. Campbell, under the caption of "A wise master builder," he tells of some of the travels of Mr. Campbell in the interests of his reformation, and then comments as follows, page 165:

While these tours, involving great labor and sacrifice on the part of Mr. Campbell, failed of large results, they were connected with an important enterprise that now consumed the thought and energy of the great leader. They had revealed to him the weakness of the cause of reformation. It was lack of men competent to carry forward the work. In the great conflict which fired his heart and brain, he had been compelled to use such material as presented itself to aid in the spread of the gospel. Those who came to his support were, many of them, untrained men from the farms and shops, who had entered the ministry of the word without preparation, other than a study of the New Testament; and by their narrow and superficial conception of Christianity, often hindered rather than aided the progress of truth. Though always the friend of education, he became convinced as at no former period of his life, that if his cause were to continue to prosper and commend itself to thinking people, it must be supported by an educated ministry.

Is it not passing strange that a cause that was founded on the "Bible and the Bible alone" and had for its motto, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent," could not trust men to represent it with nothing but the Bible in their hands? Is it not passing strange that a people of whom it is said in their history as I have already quoted, "They magnified the word of God as no other people did," would admit that those who studied the New Testament would form "narrow and superficial conceptions of Christianity"? And is it not passing strange that this people whose reformatory movement was so weak that it had to be bolstered up by a college and men prepared and educated under their leader's direction, and his name Campbell, will object to being called Campbellites? Again we read:

From the halls of Bethany College he continued, from year to year, to send out an army of young men trained and equipped to carry on the work which he had so auspiciously begun. His hope of the ultimate success of the reformation was, as we have seen, in an educated ministry.—Page 218.

Mr. Campbell's strictures on Bishop Semple were just, in the light of the Scriptures. Christ did not choose the learned rabbis and scribes but the humble fishermen of Galilee. And Paul says:

Ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence. — 1 Corinthians 1:26-29.

The boasted "Primitive Gospel" plea is a misnomer. The movement of Alexander Campbell in its inception and carrying out has nothing in common with the work of Jesus Christ as carried out in the New Testament Scripture. I quote from C. L. Loos again. In speaking of "the influence of A. Campbell, and his colaborers, Thomas Campbell, Walter Scott, and Doctor R. Richardson, upon our Reformation" he says:

The fact that they were men of superior mental endowment; that they were men of liberal education and large literary culture—well versed in the fields of the best knowledge that liberalizes the mind and the heart, gave to their conception of a religious reform wisdom, clearness, breadth, depth, generosity, liberality, dignity, and power. It is an unquestionable historical fact that reforms—any moral and religious movement—conceived and conducted by inferior, ignorant, illiterate men however well intended, are always characterized, in conception and execution, by crudeness, shallowness, narrowness, and weakness. —Nineteenth Century Reformation, p. 80.

And yet Christ was unlearned, speaking from a worldly standpoint. The fishermen of Galilee were not learned. It is true they were not "inferior" men but they were considered so by the people in their day. Alexander Campbell gives the lie to the above statement in the following words:

The Christian religion was established by the personal labors of its founder, who appeared to be no more than a Jewish peasant, and the labors of a few illiterate fishermen. It is the most singular fact on the page of history, sacred or profane, the best established, and most universally admitted, by friends and foes, that a Jewish peasant (as his enemies called him) and a dozen of individuals, without learning, without money, without family, without name, without any kind of human influence, revolutionized, in a few years, the whole world, as the Roman Empire was then called; and that, too, at a crisis the most forbidding in its aspect, the most unfavorable that ever existed.—Christian Baptist, p. 82.

It is not, then, "an unquestionable historical fact" that illiterate men have failed to revolutionize the world, and that the religious movements of the past, inaugurated and carried on by such men, are "characterized by crudeness, shallowness, narrowness, and weakness."

We next quote from Benjamin L. Smith, from the same book, in a paper on "The revival period." I do so to show that according to their own admissions Alexander Campbell, through Bethany College, molded the theology of the so-called Christian Church. (See page 343.)

The Disciples of Christ have been from the beginning of their religious movement, both theoretically and practically, an educational people. The first clear lines of the movement were formed around that splendid institution—Bethany College. The first in the world to make the Bible the basis of its educational scheme, this college is now being unconsciously followed in this feature by many who have never heard even the name of the historic temple on the banks of the Buffalo. It is safe to say that without Bethany College and the other institutions which soon grew up in different parts of the country after her image and likeness, the restoration movement of the nineteenth century would have been a failure.

The term "founded on the Bible" is as much of a misnomer as their other mottoes. A literal rendering of the passage from the original would be "founded on Alexander Campbell's ideas of the Bible and what it taught." Not only is it acknowledged that Bethany College had much to do in molding the faith, but the Christian Baptist and the Millennial Harbinger were mighty factors in the same line, and they were molded by Alexander Campbell. Some of the earlier advocates of the movement were not averse to admitting that their ideas had been received from Campbell, and he was not averse to accepting the honor. A writer who signed himself "Barnabas" in a letter addressed to Mr. Campbell, says:

I do not say that these views originated with you, but certainly they were once denominated yours; and I must confess I never learned them till I saw your writings. . . . I only regret to see so little candor amongst some of our brethren, who, unhappily for themselves and the public, took a stand too soon against what they called "your innovations." I say, I regret to see them not give you credit either in their preaching or writing for views they as certainly learned from you as I received my name from my father.

To this Mr. Campbell replied as follows:

Dear Sir: I have seen many pieces published in several periodicals, without giving me the least credit, which I well know were borrowed from my writings. But I gave myself no concern about it. I was glad to see them in the columns of those who had traduced me. In some instances I saw them neutralized by a preceding or succeeding paragraph, and by some crude mixture of undisciplined minds. Many sentiments in this work are original to me. I dug them out of the mines of revealed truth. But how many more may have dug the same treasures out of the same mines I know not. But one thing I know, that numbers who are now improving themselves and others by them, never dug them out themselves. But so long as they are held up to human view, I rejoice; and in this I will rejoice though all who publish them exhibit them as their own.—Christian Baptist, p. 497.

Alexander Campbell would, no doubt, continue to be indignant if he could live in our day and hear so many of his followers say that he had nothing to do with the molding of their religious philosophy. But even to-day we find men in their ranks who are loyal to their "great leader" and give honor where honor is due. According to Charles V. Segar in a little book entitled Alexander Campbell, His Life and Public Career page 31, Mr. Campbell wrote in all about fifty books. Setting forth his views of those books and their value, W. T. Moore writes:

Let no one suppose from what has been stated that there is now no need for the old literature which was the product of the earlier writers of this movement. This literature ought never to become obsolete. In some respects even the Christian Baptist is needed just as much to-day as it was in the days it was first published. Its able discussions of fundamental principles have never been surpassed in anything that has been written since. Nor is it possible to supercede such works as the Christian System, Baptism, Its Antecedents and Consequents, by any modern books. These works have no equals in the matters they are intended to represent. They are simply without rivals. Nor is it possible for young men who are preparing for the ministry to neglect these books without an irreparable loss in equipment for the great work that is yet to be accomplished. Indeed it would add much to the strength of the present ministry of the Christian Church if these great works of Mr. Campbell should be much more carefully and prayerfully studied than I fear is the case with many who imagine they have found all they need in some of the popular authors of the present day. I certainly do not mean that preachers should not have access to the best religious literature of the living age, but all the same, I would have them become thoroughly grounded in the teachings of such men as Campbell, Scott, Richardson, Pendleton, Errett, etc., before drinking too profusely from the fountains of Doctor Fairburn, Ian Maclaren, and Doctor G. A. Gordon. However, when the well-balanced preacher has made himself familiar with the pioneer writers of our movement, he can then afford to read such books as The Christ in Modern Theology, The Mind of the Master, and The Christ of To-day. These last mentioned are magnificent works, if we have once gained the proper critical point of view from which they may be considered; but whoever rushes into their pages without the necessary antecedent preparation may find out, when it is too late, that he has been building without a scriptural foundation, and consequently has been building in vain.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, pp. 225-227.

Here we have the whole thing in a nutshell. According to Mr. Moore, a young man must put on Mr. Campbell's spectacles and everything he reads must be viewed through them, or he is very likely to unfit himself for the ministry of the so-called Christian Church. For of course it is a foregone conclusion that no writers, except Mr. Campbell and his collaborators, wrote upon a scriptural foundation. And surely the reader can see that it was through the "about fifty volumes" which Mr. Campbell wrote and the "army of young men" he sent out from Bethany College, that his peculiar doctrines have spread abroad in this world; and though we may be met with the statement "We never knew Mr. Campbell and never read any of his works," by men to-day, we may safely conclude that those who, to-day, advocate his theories, either learned directly from him or from one who did. One thing certain, they never learned them from the study of the New Testament Scriptures, for we have seen that those who entered into Mr. Campbell's ministry "without preparation, other than the study of the New Testament" formed "narrow and superficial conceptions of Christianity," that is, of Mr. Campbell's Christianity; hence Mr. Campbell's Christianity could not be the Christianity of the New Testament.

I subjoin a list of eminent men among the Disciples who were teachers or students at Bethany, whose names are found in the Reformation of the Nine-

Bethany was at that time the mecca of the Disciples. Its sage was then in the fullness of his power and reputation. To sit at the feet of Alexander Campbell was thought by his humble followers to be the greatest privilege that a young man could enjoy.—Men of Yesterday, p. 210.

I shall now present a few of the characteristic teachings of Mr. Campbell for which it is impossible for them to show a "thus saith the Lord" either by direct command or approved precedent, and it is strange that throughout all the years of the existence of Mr. Campbell's church the same characteristic teaching is found. I quote from the Christian Baptist, page 20:

Nothing short of divine attestations or miracles can evince that any man is especially called by the Spirit of God to instruct us in the Christian religion. Can those who say they are moved by the Holy Spirit to teach the Christian religion, produce this sort of evidence? No, no. It is then in vain to say they are so moved. Who is called to believe anything without evidence? Does God command any man to believe without evidence? No, most assuredly. When, then, I hear a modern preacher, either with or without his diploma in his pocket, saying that he is an ambassador of Christ, sent by God to preach the gospel, moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon him the work of the ministry, I ask him to work a miracle, or to afford some divine attestation of his being such a character. If he can not do this, I mark him down as a knave or an enthusiast; consequently an impostor, either intentionally or unintentionally.

Surely Mr. Campbell did not get such sentiment as this from the New Testament Scripture, for Christ called the sign-seekers "a wicked and adulterous generation" and refused to satisfy their curiosity. This certainly does not put Mr. Campbell in a very enviable position. But he continues:

From these premises we may conclude, that every one moved by the Holy Spirit, or especially called to the preaching or teaching of Christianity, is possessed of these three requisites:

1. He has heard the voice of God calling him.
2. He is qualified to speak infallibly.
3. He is capable of confirming his testimony by divine attestation or the working of miracles.—Ibid., p. 20.

To show what Mr. Campbell means by "infallibly," "infallible," etc., we will refer the reader to another statement found in the Christian Baptist, page 76. It is a dialogue between a clergyman and Mr. Campbell:

Clergyman.—Yes; I believe I am as much sent as any preacher ever was; and if I did not believe that I was sent I would not preach a word.

Mr. Campbell.—Well, sir, I find myself happy in meeting with a preacher sent from God. I will sit down at your feet and believe everything you say, only remove some few doubts I have respecting your mission.

C.—I do not want you to receive all that I say. Judge for yourself.

Mr. C.—You do not, then, believe you are sent by God; for, assuredly, if you are sent by God, I should be a great sinner not to believe every word you say. For God would not send you to declare falsehoods, nor to deceive mankind. If you will then prove that you are sent I will examine no more for myself.

To prove one's call from God, according to Mr. Campbell's idea, was to perform a miracle, and on page 85 in another dialogue with this same clergyman, he says: "Let any one of them prove that Christ is with him in the common sense of the words, and I will sit down at his feet and open my mouth only to echo his oracles." It will be remembered that Mr. Campbell admits that Paul, Peter, and Barnabas were called of God. It will then be interesting to know how he would have believed "every word" Paul and Barnabas said in the dispute they had, Acts 15:39: "And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other," or how he would have followed both Paul and Peter when Paul "withstood" Peter "to the face, because he was to be blamed." (Galatians 2:11.)

To follow out Mr. Campbell's theory to its logical conclusion one would be placed at the mercy of the miracle-worker. In the light of the following scripture it would be especially hazardous in the last day:

Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; in so much that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.—Matthew 24:23, 24.

And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men. And he deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast.—Revelations 13:13, 14.

Now I affirm that there is no warrant for Mr. Campbell's conclusions either in "a thus saith the Lord, or approved," or unapproved, "precedent." God never told any man to believe because he saw a miracle and hence I reject Mr. Campbell's statement as found on page 108, Christian Baptist:

All the evidences of the marvelous love of Jehovah, exhibited in the salvation of men, are, like itself, superlatively grand and sublime. The evidences which command belief are all miracles; the evidences which corroborate and strengthen that belief, sometimes called the internal evidences of the record, are admirably moral and rational. The evidences on which the faith of the intelligent rests are, in the first instance, all miracle.

Now the facts in the case are that the Bible teaches exactly opposite of Mr. Campbell's dogma as given above. We are to believe the word, accept it because of its moral excellence and then God has given us his promise that the benefits accruing from an intervention of his miraculous power shall be ours. There is no assurance of blessing coming to any man until he first believes except those that are common to all. Those blessings that show distinctively God's special intervention are always contingent on faith, and are never shown as a means of converting the sinner or unbeliever. In the New Testament there is only one kind of miracle that is to be performed for the purpose of convincing people, and they are practiced by the Devil, and are for the purpose of deceiving. Let us read some passages showing how God expects to convert men: "The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going."—Proverbs 14:15. Mr. Campbell says he would believe "every word" and would examine no more for himself. Can the reader classify him by the above passage? "Come now and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land; but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword."—Isaiah 1:18-20. Here the blessing is made contingent on belief and obedience and the reason is appealed to, and a miracle can not be reasoned out. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8:20. Nothing in this that would indicate that men were to be tried by their power to work miracles, and we might go on ad infinitum. But what is the use? The exercise of a little of that which Mr. Campbell is fond of calling "common sense" would teach a man better than to fall into some of the blunders of this man. There is one passage which ought to set at rest in the mind of every thinking person that miracles were not given for the purpose of converting people. It reads as follows: "And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief."—Matthew 13:58. If miracles were for the converting of the people then the greater the unbelief the more and greater should have been the miraculous power manifested; but as the opposite of this was the fact then we are driven to the conclusion that they were for the believers alone. But so thoroughly are the followers of Alexander Campbell imbued with his teaching and spirit that to the remotest bounds of the earth wherever you meet one he will serenely bob up and demand a sign. Yet they are not Campbellites!

One of the favorite doctrines of the church founded by Mr. Campbell is given in his own words, as follows: "The age of those gifts has passed away, and now the influence of the Holy Spirit is only felt in and by the word believed," or, as in a foot-note he says, "But we are taught that since those gifts have ceased, the Holy Spirit now operates upon the minds of sinners only by the word."—Christian Baptist, page 49. "We are taught," he says. It would be pertinent to ask, By whom? but we can never find the answer in "a thus saith the Lord," nor by "approved precedent." It is not in the Bible. "We are taught" by Mr. Campbell's fertile brain, and his echoes, the "army of young men" whom he could not trust with the New Testament, but whom he trained under his own direction and sent them out to prosper his cause.

This doctrine is infidelity, pure and simple. The scientific infidel says, "God made the world, then left it under the government of natural law, and has no interest, neither does he interfere in its management." The Campbellite infidel says, "God established his church by miracle and the abundant influence of his Spirit, and then withdrew and takes no further interest in its management." How do you like the comparison? No wonder that one of the brightest minds in that church has said: "As a result of all this philosophizing, tampering, and trimming, we have an emasculated Christianity, as it is received in the minds of a large number of the professed Christians of to-day."—J. H. Garrison in Christian Evangelist, February 9, 1899. "Emasculated" is without power. The gospel as taught in the New Testament is full of power. Let us read some of this gospel that was too "narrow and superficial" for Mr. Campbell:

He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.—John 14: 21.

Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2: 38, 39.

Precious promise! Let not unbelievers take it from me. And may it go down through the ages as the guiding star of thousands of perishing ones, that the Lord is not slack concerning his promises. The primitive gospel is described by Paul. Do you want it? Then I warn you not to be deceived by the specious pretensions of A. Campbell and his echoes, for their gospel is in word only. But, hear Paul: "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."—1 Thessalonians 1: 5.

There is nothing, absolutely nothing, in the Bible that even intimates that the promised gift of the Holy Ghost was to be limited to the apostolic age, but of course Campbell had told the Lord in the very inception of his work that he did not need him or his Spirit, and he had to do something to eliminate that part of the gospel. He evidently wanted the honor of establishing a church,—and he has it. But in establishing that church he did some strange things, and was driven to adopt some strange measures, in which, I am free to admit, I can see no evidences of God or his wisdom. One of the clear provisions of the gospel law was the "laying on of hands" for various purposes,—four at least, viz., blessing of children, for the gift of the Holy Ghost, healing the sick, and ordination to the ministry. All of these Mr. Campbell repudiated and did not make a part of that system of teaching which was based on "a thus saith the Lord in express terms or approved precedent." To show what Mr. Campbell's idea was in regard to approved precedent, I quote from an article of his on the observance of the first day of the week. Of course he could not find "a thus saith the Lord in express terms" so he had to present "an approved precedent." Hear him:

The apostles were commissioned by the Lord to teach the disciples to observe all things he had commanded them. Now we believe them to have been faithful to their Master, and consequently he gave them to know his will. Whatever the disciples practiced in their meetings with the approbation of the apostles, is an equivalent to an apostolic command to us to do the same. To suppose the contrary, is to make the half of the New Testament of non-effect. For it does not altogether consist of commands, but of approved precedents. Apostolic example is justly esteemed of equal authority with an apostolic precept. Hence, say the Baptists, "Show us where Paul or any apostle sprinkled an infant, and we will not ask you for a command to go and do likewise." It is no derogation from the authority for observing the first day of the week, to admit that Christians are nowhere in this volume commanded to observe it. We are told that the disciples, with the countenance and presence of the apostles, met for worship on this day. And so long as we believe they were honest men, and taught all that was commanded them, so long we must admit that the Lord commanded it to be so done. For if they allowed, and by their presence authorized, the disciples to meet religiously on the first day, without any authority from their King, there is no confidence to be placed in them in other matters. Then it follows that they instituted a system of will worship, and made themselves lords instead of servants. But the thought is inadmissible, consequently the order of worship they gave the churches was given them by their Lord, and their example is of the same force with a broad precept.—Christian Baptist, p. 180.

Let us try the different things for which the laying on of hands was given by this rule laid down by Mr. Campbell. For surely neither myself nor Mr. Campbell has a right to say what is approved precept and what is not. We will take up blessing of children. If apostolic example is good, surely the example of our King would be of equal authority. It is a well-known fact of New Testament history that Christ took little children in his arms and blessed them; but I see more than a mere example in the following:

And they brought young children to him, that he should touch them: and his disciples rebuked those that brought them. But when Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.—Mark 10: 13-16.

The same transaction is recorded in Matthew 19: 13-15, and Luke 18: 15-17. Here is a direct command, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not"; and then an illustration of how they should be received: "and he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them." If, then, the apostles were faithful in following out the command of their Lord in Matthew 28: 20, "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," we must conclude that this, too, was apostolic teaching and practice even though we do not find a record of such teaching in the Acts of the Apostles or their writings. To suppose anything else would be to accuse them of being unfaithful to their trust; and to suppose that Christ practiced something that he did not expect to perpetuate would be to charge him with folly.

Next we take up the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Of course it would not do for Mr. Campbell to observe this ordinance, for he had already declared that the Holy Ghost was no longer needed and only spoke through the word. But we call attention to Mr. Campbell's own words in regard to infant sprinkling. "Hence, say the Baptists, 'Show us when Paul or any apostle sprinkled an infant, and we will not ask you for a command to go and do likewise.'" Why not use the same kind of logic on the question of the laying on of hands in the bestowal of the Holy Ghost? Why, for obvious reasons,—we could show it! Let us read:

Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.—Acts 8: 14-17.

Here we have apostolic example, and to use Mr. Campbell's own words, "their example is of the same force as a broad precept"; and I maintain that it is not only an example, but that God and Christ approved it. It is obvious that a man can not bestow the Holy Ghost any more than he can forgive sin; but he can perform the ordinance through which God has ordained that sins shall be remitted, such as "baptism for the remission of sins," but it is God that forgives the sin. So with the ordinance of laying on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. He can perform the ordinance through which God has ordained that the Holy Ghost shall be given, but it is God that gives the Holy Ghost. And inasmuch as God and Christ responded with the blessing prayed for by the disciples they gave their sanction to the manner of performing that ordinance. And furthermore, when Simon desired to purchase the power to bestow the Holy Ghost through the imposition of hands, Peter called it the "gift of God," showing plainly where the command to lay on hands came from. And besides this we read in John 14: 15-17 that Christ gave them the pattern, at least in part, which they followed here. "If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth." This is the exact program followed by the Apostles Peter and John. The Samaritans had kept the commandments of the Lord so far as faith, repentance, and baptism were concerned; and the apostles prayed to the Father and he sent them the Comforter, even the Spirit of truth. The laying on of hands was evidently a part of the directions though not mentioned here.

In a supposed challenge which it is stated Thomas Campbell issued to Sidney Rigdon I find the faith of the followers of the Campbells on the question of the right to lay on hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost. He says he proposes to show that "the pretension of imparting the Holy Spirit by imposition of hands is an unscriptural intrusion on the exclusive prerogative of the primary apostles." (Hayden's Early History of the Disciples, p. 219.) Now here is another motto of Mr. Campbell's followers: "We use in all important matters the exact words of inspiration."—Grafton, p. 142. But we again ask where in "the exact words of inspiration" is it even intimated that the right to lay on hands was "the exclusive prerogative of the primary apostles"? It is an "important matter." Why, it can not be found! But on the contrary we find in the New Testament that others enjoyed it. "The primary apostles" could apply only to those primarily chosen by Christ before his death and occupying in the church before his crucifixion or at most those who, according to Mr. Campbell's followers, were instrumental in organizing the church on the day of Pentecost. And yet we find Paul, who was called to the apostleship eleven years later, (Acts 13: 1; 14: 14,) practicing the laying on of hands in bestowal of the Holy Ghost. "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied."—Acts 19: 6.

If it be said that Paul was one of the primary apostles (which is not true) then what about Ananias in Acts 9: 17?

And Ananias went his way and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.

"Imparting the Holy Ghost by the imposition of hands" was not "the exclusive prerogative of the primary apostles" then or Christ encroached on their "exclusive right" by giving that right to Ananias. Scriptural precedent did not count for much evidently. Approved precedent meant only that which was approved by Alexander Campbell.

We next take up the laying on hands in healing the sick. For this precept we have a thus saith the Lord in express terms: "They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."—Mark 16: 18. That the apostles practiced this none will deny, hence we have apostolic example again. And Mr. Campbell says "their example is of the same force as a broad precept." Fortunately we have not only the apostolic "example," but we have to strengthen the "example" a "broad precept" as follows: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up."—James 5: 14, 15. Is it not passing strange that in their endeavors to bring about what they were pleased to call, using their own words, "the restoration of pure, primitive, apostolic Christianity, in letter and spirit; in principle and practice," they would overlook such simple examples and precepts as these, especially when their avowed object was "to simply believe in, and implicitly obey Christ"? (Grafton, p. 140.)

Then I subjoin another quotation to show that part of the primitive gospel was the healing of the body as well as the spirit:

And there they preached the gospel. And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked: the same heard Paul speak: who steadfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed, said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked."—Acts 14: 7-10.

It is said by Paul that "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Here the simple statement is that Paul "preached the gospel," and in preaching "the gospel" it produced faith in the mind of this cripple that he could be healed of his infirmity. Ought not the preaching of the gospel produce the same effect to-day? And if it does not, can it be the same gospel? On the contrary this so-called "primitive gospel" taught by "A. Campbell and his collaborators" ridiculed the efforts of those who tried to restore the real, primitive gospel of Christ, and his (Campbell's) followers became imitators of the Pharisees and Saducees of old in their opposition to the Master, and became sign-seekers, and vilifiers of those who taught the truth. Mr. Campbell and his followers, however, claim that these things were to be done away, but the Bible says they are to continue until that which is perfect is come and till we all come to a unity of the faith. (See 1 Corinthians 13: 8-13; Ephesians 4: 8-16.) No one can ever successfully maintain that we have all come to a unity of the faith, and all the arguments to prove that these promises of God were limited to the apostolic times could be with equal power and consistency used to limit the saving power of the gospel to the same age.

Laying on hands for ordination to the ministry. Campbellism says it may be done, but it is not necessary, for anybody has the right to preach the gospel and administer its ordinances. Some amusing things occur and strange, inconsistent positions are taken by this man who was the "leader of the Great Reformation of the Nineteenth Century." (Grafton.) On page 79, Grafton says, "Alexander Campbell, whose great talents were now recognized, was licensed to preach the gospel." This was May 4, 1811. On page 81 he gives us some of Campbell's principles in which I find this: "I speak not against any denomination in particular, but against all." On page 84 I find this: "Having first convinced himself of the scripturalness of his position, he was ordained to the ministry upon the recommendation of the Brush Run Church on the first day of the new year, 1812. He did not regard the ceremony of ordination as conferring any authority which he did not already possess, but as a public testimony that the person ordained possessed the necessary authority." Like the Baptists baptizing as a testimony that their sins are already remitted, so this man was ordained because he already had the authority. But upon further consideration he concluded he had never been baptized and hence he went to a Baptist minister and was baptized "on the twelfth day of June, 1812." He had been preaching for a year or more and performing the ordinances of the church, and was not a member of the church as yet, and then was baptized into a church that he had been denouncing as quoted above where he declares that "I speak not against any denomination in particular, but against all." Walter Scott said of these different churches, they "are not the churches of Jesus Christ, but the legitimate daughters of that mother of harlots, the church of Rome." (Christian Baptist, p. 23.) And Campbell says, "For assuredly every sect that holds a human creed and an ecclesiastical court, is a legitimate daughter of the holy mother, and it is no more than common honesty to own the relationship."—Ibid., p. 34. Again: "They of the present order, they of the sects of the different streets of the great city, deepened my convictions that all sects have drunk of the wine of the cup of the mother of abominations. They are not yet sobered."—Christian Baptist, p. 626. Would it be expected that one who held such loose views on matters of grave importance would ever bring mankind to the unity of the faith? Verily, no.

I quote Mr. Campbell again: "We observe in our last number, that one of those means by which the clergy obtained so complete a dominion over the Bible, the consciences and the religious sentiment of mankind, was a pretence of a divine call to the work of the Christian ministry."—Ibid., p. 25. In consequence of this he concludes, as we have quoted before, there is no need of men having a divine call.

Now, I argue that no man ought to pretend to have a divine call when he has none. But that men did have a divine call to the ministry under the primitive gospel not even Mr. Campbell will deny. Was it dangerous to the liberties of men then? If not, it would not be now. And besides that, if the principle was correct and good then, and served to protect the interest of the gospel, it would operate the same to-day, and no sane man would think of discarding a correct principle because some wicked man had abused it. But the position of Mr. Campbell on this question is consistent with the infidel idea that God established the church by direct intervention of his power, then abandoned it to the care of uninspired men, and concerned himself no more about it. In all candor I would like to ask the advocates of this theory, which would be the more likely to produce bondage and confusion, to have a regularly called and ordained ministry, or to submit the work to every Tom, Dick, or Harry that might take a notion to set himself up for a teacher and leader, and, in imitation of Mr. Campbell, begin preaching, even before he becomes a member of the church? The theory is foolish and inconsistent, and without warrant, either in "a thus saith the Lord in express terms, or approved precedent."

Mr. Campbell, however, was compelled to admit that there was need of some regulation along this line, and said: "Any person appointed by a church to baptize has a right to do it."—Christian Baptist, p. 353. Sure. But I have a question right here: Has that person any right to any blessing from God in consequence of that act? If the individual baptizing was called by a man, or set of men whom God had given no right to make the call by a direct revelation of his will, nor any direct call to himself, has the individual who baptizes or the one baptized any right to ask God to recognize that act? I think not. I have a right to authorize a man to baptize a man into my church, but I have no right by voice or vote to authorize a man to baptize into God's church. That right belongs to God alone. "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5:4.

But these followers of Mr. Campbell say, "Peter says, 'But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light.'—1 Peter 2:9. And John the Revelator has said: 'And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.'"—Revelation 5:10. These passages are made to mean that we are all to be priests, etc. But we will have to interpret these in the light of other passages. Please turn to what the Lord says to Israel, when he begins to give them his law, known as the Mosaic law, Exodus 19:6: "And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." What was the result of this statement? History tells us, "Moses chose able men out of all Israel, and made them heads over the people, rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens."—Exodus 18:25. One tribe was set apart to hold the priestly office. The meaning of the passage quoted from Peter and Revelation is, then, obvious. But I believe enough has been said to prove that Alexander Campbell's movement, call it reformation or restoration, failed in either case to accomplish what it intended, and that, instead of reflecting the teaching of the New Testament, it clearly reflects the teachings of its leader, and is of human origin, and is entirely unlike the church of the New Testament. And I can not conclude this article more appropriately than to show how they have depended entirely upon their own wisdom to perpetuate their church. Paul, speaking of those called into the ministry, as I have quoted before, that not many wise, not many mighty, not many noble, had been called; but that God had chosen the foolish, the weak, the base, and despised, that no flesh should glory in his presence. (See 1 Corinthians 1:26-29.) And Paul, although educated, did not use "enticing words of men's wisdom." That the faith of those who heard him "should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." But in reading the history of the movement led by Mr. Campbell one is almost nauseated by the eulogies pronounced on the ability, learning, and power of these men who were leaders, and one is led to wonder if they are not real men-worshippers. I can only give a tithe, and will begin with Mr. Campbell:

But Alexander Campbell was no ordinary young man. Like Minerva, who stepped full-grown from the brain of Jove, he stepped upon the platform an accomplished speaker, a master of assemblies, already possessed of the power to sway men's hearts.—Grafton, p. 67.

Of Campbell's possibilities had he become a political leader, Grafton quotes on page 129 from Lard's Quarterly:

His inimitable powers of conversation, even sporting and playing in the most easy and graceful way with subjects, from the most abstruse to the simplest, . . . and once high in power, the masterly manner in which he would have handled the great questions of state, would have made him the idol of his own people and the admiration of all civilized nations.

His complete mastery of all possible trains of skeptical thought, and the comprehensiveness and penetrating power of his mind, unequaled in logical acumen.—Ibid., p. 148.

He thought as no other man ever thought, spoke as no other man ever spoke, wrote as no other man ever wrote.—Ibid., p. 180.

Unconsciously sometimes men tell the truth. I believe this statement in regard to Mr. Campbell, but not in the way the writer means it:

In the spring of 1850, while in the vicinity of Washington, District of Columbia, he received a pressing invitation from both houses of Congress to deliver an address in the Capitol on the 2d of June. It is doubtful if such a scene has ever been witnessed in our national capital before or since.—Ibid., p. 200.

Nobody wished to talk in his presence. His themes were so much out of the range of ordinary conversation that but few people could sustain a part in their discussion. A question would sometimes set him a-going, but very soon his vast learning, especially in the department of biblical lore, would lead him into wide fields of discourse all familiar and easy to him, but strange and unknown to his hearers, and it was their pleasure to sit in silence and learn. No matter what the theme of conversation where he entered the circle, or who the company, sooner or later, by the power of his superior genius, all would be hushed into silence, while he talked of the love and mercy of God, as manifested in the gospel.—Ibid., p. 206.

As he one day walked the streets of London, a stranger, impressed by his commanding presence, was heard to remark: "There goes a man who has brains enough to govern all Europe." The following picture from the pen of Moses E. Lard is not overdrawn: "His head I think the finest I ever saw. It was simply faultless. After the first look you never criticised it; you only admired it. You dwelt on it only to wonder how magnificently nature sometimes works. His head never disappointed you. No matter with reference to what you studied it, it always complemented your highest expectations. Was it the abode of a mind of extraordinary strength? Every conformation of it answered, yes."—Ibid., p. 228.

It is yet, perhaps, too soon to assign Mr. Campbell his proper place among the world's religious leaders. A figure so colossal can only be rightly estimated when viewed through the perspective of advancing generations. (Ibid., p. 233.)

In Sigars' Alexander Campbell, His Life and Public Career, I find such expressions as these:

Powerful and shaping intellect of Alexander Campbell.—Page 22. His great learning and his marvelous powers of debate, . . . the profoundest theologian, and most eloquent and able debater of the age.—Page 28. His great mind and heart, . . . even Whitfield, in the zenith of his popularity, never drew together crowds more completely under his influence. . . . His whole presence was commanding—his enunciation was sonorous and magnetizing, his pronunciation was accurate and scholarly in the first degree,—the outward evidences of the highest mental and moral discipline, combined with original greatness, were unmistakable, while his argumentation was as luminous and as grand and as all-sweeping in its comprehensiveness as the sunlight itself. Men of all creeds heard him enraptured, and the tributes that were paid him by the journals of the day, wherever he went, were, perhaps, never accorded to a mere theologian in this country.—Pages 35, 36.

His ideas flowed on in a perpetual strain, majestic in its stately volume, and grand for the width and sweeping magnificence of its current. With a voice that thrilled with the magnetism of great thoughts, and a person imposing and magnetic, as his mind was vigorous and commanding, no one could hear and see him, and fail to discover that he was in the presence of one on whom nature had set the stamp and seal of transcendent greatness.—Page 43.

The colloquial powers of Mr. Campbell were of an unusually high order. In every circle he seemed to be the center of radiance, and as constantly the devoted center of attraction. In conversation, if he be compared with Webster, Chalmers, Calhoun, or old Doctor Beecher, he was their superior.—Page 44.

I will only add a few more to these, and of other men. Of Adamson Bently it is said:

It is our fortune to be acquainted with few persons in a lifetime, who wielded personal influence so supreme. Tall, manly, graceful, with a countenance radiant with good nature, affable and dignified.—Hayden, p. 104.

Of John Henry:

Of commanding form, he stood six feet, two inches. As a preacher of a particular order of preachers, [he] had no equal, no superior.—Page 135. Whose name is a synonym for peerless power.—Page 286.

Of William Hayden:

He made no memoranda of his sermons, yet he could report at any time, promptly and accurately, the number of his discourses, baptisms, and multitudes of incidents, and all without pen or pencil to aid him.—Page 182.

Of Alvin Waite:

He was a man of full size and manly form, a man of superior judgment and great weight of character.—Page 205.

Of Samuel Miller:

Was the peer of these noble men, in all that constitutes broad and generous manhood.—Page 207.

Of Calvin Smith:

I am conscious this sketch will, by some, be regarded as long drawn out. But to thousands, it will be felt to be far too meager, while to one precious circle, where he was vastly more than king, it will seem all imperfection.—Page 293.

Of Harvey Brockett:

All honor to the church that could produce a Brockett! He was a man of attractions. Few men in so short a career have so lasting results to witness for their devotion to Christ.—Page 307. Brockett, the blessed; and Smith, the saint; and Collins, the colleague of the honorable.—Page 460.

It would be difficult to find, and take reams to record, all that is said of the powers, talents, and personal qualifications of these wonderful men with Campbell, the demigod, at their head, and the accusation coming from this church that other men are "men-worshippers" comes with ill grace. "No flesh should glory in his presence," says Paul; and the teaching should not be "with enticing words of man's wisdom"; that our "faith should not stand in the wisdom of men but in the power of God." What shall we say, then, of these men who give all the glory to men? Are they not of that class who are some of Paul, some of Cephas, and some of Apollos? And can not we rightly conclude, These are of Campbell?

H. O. SMITH.

"Take life too seriously, and what is it worth?" asks Goethe. "If the morning wake us to no new joys, if the evening bring us not the hope of new pleasures, is it worth while to dress and undress? Does the sun shine on me to-day that I may reflect on yesterday?—that I may endeavor to foresee and control what can neither be foreseen nor controlled,—the destiny of to-morrow?" It is hard to determine which is most destructive of peace and happiness,—thinking of the mistakes and troubles of yesterday, or anticipating those of the morrow. By keeping our minds riveted on the past, or constantly projected into the future, many of us miss for ever what all are seeking,—happiness. To-day only is ours, for good or ill, to be made glad or sad, as we will.

"Every day is a fresh beginning,
Every morn is the world made new;
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you,—
A hope for me, and a hope for you."

THE VALUE OF SELF-CONTROL.

"If I could teach my children but one thing in the world, it would be self-control," said a thoughtful mother. "Other things children will learn for themselves, but lessons in self-control may come before lessons in arithmetic, lessons on the piano, or lessons in riding a bicycle."

"Surely the child who can be taught to poise himself on two wheels, and to master and manage a senseless machine, can be taught to control himself. But how? He is eager to ride the machine, his heart is in it, he has the motive. But there often seems to be no motive powerful enough to make him use equal effort to get his temper in hand.

"We grown-ups see self-control as something eminently desirable because we have more pride, shame, and remorse sting us after any exhibition of rage; but the child does not feel this. How can we make him see its value and importance? Perhaps by praising it, by ridiculing the lack of it in others, by showing him how everywhere, in every contest, match, or struggle, the one who keeps his head, comes off best and wins the prizes, as well as the approval of all.

"It is said that a violent temper and a warm, tender heart are often found in the same nature, and indeed that one indicates the presence of the other; but there should be no such thing as an ungovernable temper if one begins early enough. The baby who bumps his head on the floor if he can not have what he wants, and the shrieking child who stamps and overthrows the furniture, may be left to themselves till the paroxysm of rage is over; but they will learn to be ashamed of their behavior when soothed or reasoned with.

"To read the riot act to a mob of emotions is valueless, says one writer, and he who is wise will choose a more wholesome hour for his exhortations. When gentle measures have no effect it is really wonderful how well an old-fashioned spanking will work; but we can not believe that every whirlwind calls for punishment. Doctors talk about nerve storms nowadays. Excitable, high-strung children, who are all fire and sparkle, often reach their limit of endurance, and are not wholly responsible for the irritability which shows itself in tears and cries and impatient jerks; witness the little one kept up beyond its usual bedtime or the baby who has accidentally missed its nap, or the four-year-old who has been to a birthday party! But when we say that the lack of self-control is accounted for by any physiological cause, we do not mean that it should be excused or even go wholly unpunished; rather that its provoking cause be avoided in future. The jolly little fellow who is happy and smiling and at peace with the whole world is a pleasant sight for every one, bless his cheery little heart! Look at him! His clothes fit, his shoes are comfortable, he is well fed, he has slept a good twelve hours. Is he the same child when his shoes pinch, or his teeth ache, or some injudicious relative has fed him on doughnuts and mince pie, or he has been out late the night before to a Sunday-school concert or on an excursion—not the same thing necessarily but similar in its effect on the boy's nerves? I am not saying that temper is all nervousness, nor have I any sympathy with the little girl of the present day who goes about saying, practically, if not in so many words, 'You must humor me and give me everything I want because mamma says I am so nervous.'

"Yet I have seen a child who suffered and made every one else in the house suffer during an obstinate case of chorea, or St. Vitus' Dance, develop after the disease was cured into a most serene, composed, and well-poised woman. Such balance and self-control does health give to its fortunate possessor.

"But the lack of self-control is not seen in children alone.

A little girl was once heard saying to her sister—"Don't you care if mamma is cross to-day. It's one of her days." What mother does not blush to remember days when the children's little faults jarred painfully on her nerves and it was so easy to find fault with them? Perhaps you have heard, too, of the naughty boy who was carried, screaming and kicking, up-stairs, and afterwards called over the banisters in the sweetest of tones—"I would like to come down now if my papa is over his tantrum." This particular papa did not happen to deserve the rebuke, but some papas do, and as long as papas have 'tantrums' and mammas have 'days,' so long will the little, sharp eyes who look to us, see their advantage. Listen to these wise words from Amiel's Journal, that mine of quotable reflections:

"Self-government with tenderness! Here you have the condition of all authority over children. The child must discover in us no passion, no weakness of which he can make use; he must feel himself powerless to deceive or to trouble us; then he will recognize in us his natural superiors and he will attach a special value to our kindness because he will respect it. The child who can rouse in us anger, or impatience, or excitement, feels himself stronger than we, and a child only respects strength. The mother should consider herself as her child's sun, a changeless and ever radiant world whither the small, restless creature, quick at tears and laughter, light, fickle, passionate, full of storms, may come for fresh stores of light, warmth, and electricity, of calm and of courage. The mother represents goodness, providence, law, that is to say, the divinity, under that form of it which is accessible to childhood. If she is herself passionate she will inculcate in her child a capricious and despotic God, or even several discordant gods. The religion of a child depends on what its father and mother are and not on what they say. The inner and unconscious ideal which guides their life is precisely what touches the child; their words, their remonstrances, their punishments, their bursts of feeling even, are for him merely thunder and comedy: what they worship, this it is which his instinct divines and reflects. The child sees what we are behind what we wish to be. Hence his reputation as a physiognomist. He extends his power as far as he can with each of us—he is the most subtle of diplomatists. Unconsciously he passes under the influence of each person about him and reflects it while transforming it after his own nature. He is a magnifying mirror. That is why the first principle of education is, Train yourself. And the first rule to follow if you wish to possess yourself of a child's will is, Master your own!"

"But alas! we are only human. We cry with Portia—

"It were easier to teach twenty what were good to be done than to be one of the twenty to follow mine own instruction!"

"How often is the figure used of wax or clay in extolling to us poor mothers the importance of early impressions! I leave it to any candid mother of a wide-awake, lively specimen of child-nature whether wax, on which every impression remains, or clay, which may be molded at will, is a simile which expresses with any fairness the material with which she has to deal! There is a sermon by Phillips Brooks on this subject called 'The mother's wonder,' which some of you may have read.

"In one sense we are God's children and he makes us what we are. In another we are left free to choose the wrong from the right, and our freedom of will is not interfered with. This is true with these children of ours, it seems to me. We can not make them docile, gentle, obedient, sweet-tempered, or devout, as we would mold a lump of wax, any more than we can make them artists or musicians against their inclination and will. I must protest with all vehemence against such a false theory. But on the other hand we may do much by discipline, by influence, by little seeds of truth sown here and there, by a consistent system of rewards and punishments, by patient, every-day leading and guiding when the little feet falter by the way.

"I do not forget that God has given us this advantage,—he has put the children under our care at a time when their con-sciences are strong and their passions weak. Later in life, if self-control is not learned in childhood, the passions become strong and the conscience weak, and life's lessons can only be learned by bitter struggling.

"In the words of another, 'We rob our child of one of the greatest aids of self-government and self-control when, by any means whatsoever, we free him from the consequences of his own wrong-doing. That the way of the transgressor is hard is an important part of his education.'

"'Self-reverence, self-knowledge, self-control, These three alone lead life to sovereign power—' says Tennyson.

"Moreover, the children of whom Christ said, 'Of such is the kingdom of heaven,' are not mere healthy animals like Correggio's cherubs, dear and plump and enchanting though they are; but rather are they the earnest, thoughtful little souls that look out from the sweet, expressive faces of Sir Joshua Reynolds' angels, and it is ours to minister these higher natures in our children. Feed them on stories of heroism and self-sacrifice. Their little hearts will thrill and their souls kindle with enthusiasm over deeds of courage and fortitude. Give them high ideals. Let them hear how Horatius kept the bridge; how Grace Darling saved the ship-wrecked mariners in a dangerous sea; how our own brave Farragut, lashed to the mainmast, gave his orders while the battle raged around his ship, and their hearts, so quick to respond to an appeal, will thrill with admiration and the wish to be heroic too.

"'The thing we long for, that we are
For one transcendent moment,'—says Lowell.

"'What I aspired to be
But was not, comforts me,'—says Browning.

"But let them hear also stories of moral courage, as of the fiery temper which George Washington mastered so well that few people suspected he had one to contend with. 'For he that ruleth his spirit is greater than he that taketh a city.' 'Every man is a tamer of wild beasts and these wild beasts are his passions. To draw their teeth and claws, to muzzle and tame them, to turn them into servants and domestic animals, fuming, perhaps, but submissive, in this consists personal education.'

"Says a wise physician on the cultivation of self-control:

"'Tears for trifling pains, or loud complaints about small annoyances may give at first momentary relief, but soon become a habit which weakens the power of self-control and lessens the possibility of endurance in all forms. There can be no disaster so great but that courage, reason, and the power to use one's head coolly will help us to encounter it, perhaps to conquer, at worst to endure it bravely.'

"'Eagerly do we seize on all the inspiration and help that modern educators can give, but more gladly and trustfully may we cling to the guiding hand of the Master who can help us most in our mission of child-training. The Apostle James has pointed out this well from which troubled parents may drink deep and often, since the supply has never yet been known to fail: 'If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.'"

Prayer Union.

Mrs. Robert Moore requests the prayers of the church in behalf of her son, who is very sick, that the Lord may spare his life.

TORONTO, Ontario, August 19, 1904.

Dear Herald: Feeling that when requests for prayer are sent in to your columns, and are graciously replied to and granted by the "Master of assemblies," that the acknowledgment of God's mercy in granting our petitions should be made as public as the petition itself, I beg to inform the Prayer Union that the sister in Toronto who was recently made a subject of their prayers, received her blessing of healing within two days of the published memorial requesting their prayers. To God, and to him alone, be all praise and glory.

Yours in the truth,

THE SENDER OF THE REQUEST.

Reports and Reporting.

During the past year an effort has been made to introduce into our Sunday-schools the new system of reporting recommended by the general association.

The new method provides for regular quarterly reports from all schools; those in stake or district associations reporting to their secretaries, and those not so connected reporting directly to the general secretary. The advocates of the new system feel confident that when in proper working order it will be a vast improvement over the old, haphazard style of reporting at the call of the district officers, sometimes quarterly, sometimes semiannually, and latterly, in Lamoni Stake, only once during the year. We will now have our Sunday-school year close with the calendar year and thus greatly simplify the work of the general secretary, whose labors may be imagined when it is learned that there have been almost as many dates for the yearly reports as there are district associations. We, in the Lamoni Stake, made our yearly report for the twelve months ending January 31, and Independence Stake, I believe, had March 1 as their time for reporting. So it may readily be seen that to make an accurate report of the total membership of the Sunday-school association, or the total balance on hand in all the treasuries at any given time was almost an impossibility.

Under the new system, however, with all schools reporting regularly at the ends of March, June, September, and December, we can easily tell just where we stand as stake or district organizations, or the association as a whole, whether our numbers are increasing or decreasing, whether the schools are in good condition financially, how the libraries are progressing, and to how great an extent the Quarterlies are being used.

But this very desirable condition of affairs can not be brought about unless we have the intelligent coöperation of the secretaries of all the Sunday-schools in the association. Our general secretary may do his best, and the secretaries of the various associations may be ever so careful, but if they can not secure the interest and help of the secretaries of the schools their efforts will be all in vain, for it is the local secretary, and the local secretary only, who can secure the facts and figures which are absolutely necessary to a complete and accurate report.

It is by no means an easy task to keep an exact record of the membership, attendance, collections, library, and various matters of business, in even a small Sunday-school, and the work increases with the size of the school. But it can be done, though only by patient and persistent care. The secretary must not be absent one Sunday and tardy the next, and so on, but must be a faithful attendant, and should if possible have an equally faithful assistant who will take his place when absence is unavoidable. But the secretary can not do it all,—the treasurer has his part as well. His book should show just what sums have been collected, how much disbursed, and for what purposes, and at the end of each quarter he should prepare a report of these items, that can be incorporated in the report of the school. We young Latter Day Saints need to be accurate in everything, for our own sakes as well as that of the church.

Modern business methods require absolute accuracy and the young treasurer who can not strictly account for every penny given into his charge is not preparing himself for a future position of trust in either the church or the world.

Superintendents also should feel an interest in this department of the work of their schools as well as in all others, and be ready to give help and advice when needed.

It will probably be well for secretaries to occasionally read Article 3 in By-laws for Sunday-schools, and then examine their record and see whether there are the names of any parties enrolled thereon who have been absent for three months without sufficient cause. All such should be stricken off the record promptly. We do not want the credit of members who are members in name only, and no longer feel sufficient interest to attend our schools.

Probably by this time some of our secretaries are saying "Oh, yes, its very easy to preach all these things, but just try to practice them." Well,—your present preacher has a very clear and distinct remembrance of a certain youthful and decidedly inexperienced secretary, whose talent, if she had any, did not lie in the direction of figures, and of the tears of vexation that were shed over the columns that wouldn't "add up" twice alike, and the averages of attendance and collection that were so evidently wrong. But inasmuch as this very unpromising young individual did eventually learn by experience, care, and patience to keep a fairly creditable Sunday-school record, I do not feel that there is any reason to be discouraged over any inexperienced secretaries we may have; for no one is too old to learn, and painstaking care will always bring good results.

Finally, our secretaries should not feel that their work is of less importance than that of the superintendent or the teachers, but work faithfully for the advancement of the cause in which we are all so deeply interested, bearing in mind Paul's admonition: "And the eye can not say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary."

All of us do not possess that peculiar talent which enables one to successfully impart to others that knowledge of spiritual things which he may have gained, and so do a great work as a Sunday-school teacher, but there is always something for each of us to do, if we are only willing, and whether it may be preparing the room for the meeting of the school, teaching a class, or keeping the sometimes monotonous record, let us do it in the best manner of which we are capable, with a hearty good-will, remembering that "Who sweeps a room as for God's laws makes that and the action fine."

JESSIE CAMPBELL,

Secretary Lamoni Stake Association.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.

We should like to know how many primary teachers have drilled their classes on the Golden Texts of this quarter. Just a few minutes devoted each Sunday to such work will result in many of the little ones having stored away in memory those gems of scripture text.

If you have neglected it so far, try it next quarter.

In small schools where all the classes assemble in one room, the whole school should have an exercise in repeating the golden texts of the lessons. It can be done so easily.

How many teachers foot up their class-books at the end of the quarter? How many of you, when you enter the names of your pupils for the next quarter, will enter them according to the rank they are entitled to by their credit marks, placing the highest one first, the next highest second, and so on?

How many of you, when you promote your pupils, are guided by what your class-book tells you of the diligence and good conduct of your scholars?

A class of little boys is about to pass from the second primary room of Lamoni into the intermediate grade. One of the boys has his name already on the roll of honor and is working to place it there again before leaving the room. If he succeeds, and he bids fair to do so, it will mean that he has memorized his golden texts for eight quarters, that is, two years.

At the beginning of this quarter, the teacher of this class, knowing they would be promoted at the end of the term, directed the boys to prepare their lessons as usual at home from the Primary Quarterly, but to bring Bibles with them to class on Sunday, in order that she might prepare them to use the intermediate lessons. This has been done throughout the quarter.

Sometimes the change from the primary lessons to the intermediate has seemed to be quite abrupt. Teachers should seek, in their management of their work, to avoid this.

One of our lessons this quarter told us in the language of Peter that we should walk in the steps of Christ.

A Sunday-school teacher was one day reading the itinerary of a party of tourists who anticipated a journey through the Holy Land. She read with deep interest and contemplated the pleasure in store for those who were so fortunate as to be able to make the tour, but after musing for some time and in thought visiting those places hallowed to all lovers of the Christ, she returned from her beautiful day-dream to the fact that it was not for her to enjoy the reality.

But there came to her another thought swiftly following the realization that she was poor. Her thought was that, though she might not stand by blue Galilee, or walk the streets of Nazareth or Jerusalem, she could walk in the steps of Christ at home.

And she remembered that Christ also was poor when he dwelt among men, and that he had not been one who traveled abroad but that his labors had been quietly, faithfully, and patiently done in the little home-land of Palestine.

Our feet might walk in the very paths trod by the feet of the Master as he walked in Galilee or Judea, and our hearts might be far from him at the same time, and we may follow in his steps as we walk the streets of our own village or city, or in our own stores, or kitchens, or cornfields, if our hearts are in harmony with his precepts.

Another of our lessons of this quarter told us that women of the church whose husbands are not of the church should conduct themselves in such a manner as to win their husbands to obey the gospel.

A teacher was explaining this to her class. One little boy said, "She would be a teacher to her husband."

Is not that what Peter meant? Should not all Saints be teachers of the truth in their example?

One of our lessons called our attention to what our conduct among the Gentiles should be.

A little boy in school who was a Latter Day Saint mischievously blew chalk dust into the air from the eraser. When the teacher noticed the dust and inquired of the boy if he had done it, he answered that he had not, and a little boy not of the church who had seen the act and heard the falsehood told a friend who was trying to teach him the gospel what he had seen the Latter Day Saint boy do. After telling the story he added, "And he has been baptized."

The thought of the little Gentile boy was that the boy who had been baptized should have told the truth, and his thought was a right one.

It is true that this was a little act of a little Saint among little Gentiles, but the principle is a great one.

We should have our conduct honest among the Gentiles.

We have learned also in this quarter that the Lord requires his saints to be courteous. Courtesy is politeness.

Mr. Drummond says that "the one secret of politeness is to love." True politeness springs from love in the heart.

We should be courteous to all people, but especially to the aged and unfortunate.

We quote the following from a reliable work:

"Some time ago a lady who lives in a college town, and who is as remarkable for her dignified bearing as for her personal beauty and elegance, entered a crowded horse-car in which there were a number of students, all of whom rose to offer her a seat. She accepted one with thanks. Presently a poor woman entered with a heavy bundle in her arms. Not a seat was offered. The lady waited a moment, and finding that no notice was taken of the woman, arose and asked her to take her seat. At once a dozen young men sprang up, but she coldly declined the attention and remained standing, greatly to the discomfiture of the collegians. It was a quiet but effective rebuke."

"There is often opportunity to confer some trifling favor on the poor and humble, to brighten up life a little for them, and to lead them to feel that there is still some loving kindness in the world."

"Courtesy does not absolutely require a gentleman to give up his seat to a lady in a crowded car, but it is pleasant to see the fine politeness which prompts its possessor to treat every lady as he would wish his mother or sister to be treated."

"Every kind act should be promptly acknowledged by an expression of thanks."

The writer of this column once found it necessary when traveling to carry a heavy valise up a long flight of stairs. Several men passed her as she slowly toiled upwards. At last some one stopped beside her and a kind voice said to her, "Let me carry that for you." At the same time a hand was put forth and it was black. The gentleman who proffered his help was a negro.

She gave her heavy burden into his hand, and when she reached the landing she thanked him from the genuine appreciation of her heart. She recognized in the courteous, well-dressed man a gentleman of refinement, and it mattered not to her that his skin was black.

One of the poets has written, "Kind hearts are more than coronets," and we shall state a truth, though perhaps in more homely words, if we say that a kind heart is more than a white skin.

ANNA SALYARDS.

Americans who possess a large degree of the spirit of fair-play will be deeply interested in two papers which appear in the August Arena. One is entitled "Judaism and the American spirit." It is a brilliant, eloquent, and scholarly plea for the Hebrew, prepared by Edward M. Baker. The other is entitled "The progress of the negro: A study in the last census," by George W. Forbes. The author of this paper is a colored man, a graduate of Amherst. The facts and data given, which are based on the last census, reveal the surprising advance which has been made by the negro during the past half century. Dan Beard contributes a full-page satirical cartoon taking off the frivolous life of the smart set at Newport. No magazine in the history of recent years has shown the marked improvement in so short a time that has characterized the Arena since it was purchased by Albert Brandt. It is now, artistically considered, a leader among the great reviews of opinion; while for ability in its discussions, for variety in content matter and for timeliness of the topics considered it is not excelled by any of our present-day magazines.

Dear Herald: When there is an elder here we have evening meetings at Bro. Banks', South Auburn. When we were first informed that Latter Day Saint elders were holding meetings here we said it must be Utah elders; but the lady said, "No, they belong to the same church Mr. Lightfoot did." We knew he had lived here several years ago, and had heard several speak of his preaching, but have not found any of the Saints that knew him. The lady came over and piloted us (my daughter, her husband W. J. Weston, and myself) over to the residence of Bro. Banks where Elders W. M. Self and A. E. Madison were holding services. Since then eight have been baptized, and a little Sunday-school organized. I have ten interesting children in my class. It is a pleasure to teach when you have a class that is anxious to learn, and willing to recite. God bless them.

Your sister, MRS. R. S. BROWN.

METAMORA, Ohio, September 3, 1904.

Editors Herald: I came to this place three weeks since and have preached in Bro. Corson's house nights, and on the lawn Sunday afternoons. A number of people seemed interested. There are several calls for preaching in the regions round about. At this writing the outlook seems quite favorable. Have just enjoyed the use of the Dunkard church for three nights in reply to their minister, Elder McKimy, who attacked our position after listening to a discourse on the apostasy, he claiming a continuation from Christ till now. And of course they are the true church, in succession. At the close of our effort a better feeling prevailed, and we think much good was accomplished. They are very zealous in their religion, but how they can be satisfied with some of their peculiar notions is impossible for me to understand. For instance, the feast of the passover in connection with the sacrament; footwashing, as they practice the ordinance, (to all the congregation notwithstanding it only belongs to the twelve. See Matthew 26: 12; Mark 14: 17-20; Luke 22: 8-18; John 13: 1-15.) Also the holy kiss, and their peculiar bonnets. This one thing we learn, that not all lived in the days of Christ who would strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. However, we would bespeak for the German Baptist brethren, (better known as Dunkards,) friendship and hospitality, and use of our places of worship, when possible to do so. Elder D. L. Allen is with me, and assists nicely. Expect to continue here for awhile yet.

As ever in the conflict,

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, September 4, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am rejoicing because of God's mercies to me, although I see disappointment at times. Only a few weeks ago we had to part for a time with our darling baby girl. We are trying to be reconciled to God's will. I just closed a series of eighteen sermons (assisted by Bro. Joseph Ensley) near Prior, Missouri. Years ago the work here had a partial footing; but when we commenced our meeting the other day, we had to begin to build from the ground up. We had good crowds and splendid interest. People came for miles around; and on Sunday nights the people could not begin to get into the house. I never had better liberty in preaching. The Holy Spirit was present with me in delivering the message, and many of the people felt its holy influence. A "Christian" preacher, one Reverend Hale, of Mt. Grove, came out to warn the people against us, but would not stay to hear my reply. One of their members (a sister) complimented me for not having referred to them as "Campbellites." I thanked her; but when their preacher came, he said: "I am surprised to see a young man like you carried away with Mormonism." In replying, I used this point effectively. During our meetings there were three baptized, and more will obey when I return,—at least they have expressed themselves thus. I start with my little family for Pomono reunion, which convenes September 17. We expect to see Brn. I. N. White and Henry Kemp, and have a spiritual time.

A. M. BAKER.

HICKMAN, Kentucky, September 1, 1904.

Editors Herald: Our reunion at Crossland, Kentucky, was a success, and a source of great strength to the Saints who attended. A goodly number was present, there being, among those who camped, five tents and several covered wagons.

Notwithstanding a spirit of persecution was manifested among a few on the outside, it only served to unify the Saints, and the social meetings were especially good. A good degree of the Spirit seemed to be enjoyed by all the speakers. Four precious souls were buried with Christ in baptism. Several others were almost persuaded.

T. C. Kelley and the writer have been holding forth here since last Saturday, August 27. Will continue as long as interest demands. Have had large congregations at night-services, with growing interest. This is a new place, as none of our elders had ever preached here before. We are hopeful of good being accomplished.

A wagon-load of the Fulton Saints came down Sunday and remained with us until to-day, (Thursday,) and rendered us valuable assistance in song service, Sr. Nola Myers acting as organist. Sr. Nola will remain until the meetings close.

We will carry tent from here to Fulton, Kentucky, and hold forth there until about September 17. Crops are excellent in this country. The corn crop is secured, and is better than for years. There are many calls for preaching, so our missionaries find plenty to do.

Yours in the conflict,

J. R. McCLAIN.

MELBOURNE, Victoria, August 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: A few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard may not be amiss, as we do not see letters from Australia very often. The work in Melbourne is progressing very nicely, six more lately having been added to the fold,—all willing workers for the Master's cause, with seven more names in for baptism this month, all being well. The Melbourne Branch was organized by Bro. A. H. Smith when in Australia, and he will certainly be pleased to know that since that time it has grown to be a large branch of nearly one hundred members. When Bro. Smith was here it numbered about twenty. At Geelong the Saints have a neat church building to meet in, and since it was finished the work has made rapid strides, five being added to their number recently, with good prospects of more to follow. The SAINTS' HERALDS for June have all arrived, and we notice in two issues of the early part of June two articles from the pen of Bro. R. C. Evans which I for one certainly take exception to. I loaned those papers to some people who are investigating out work, some of whom are members of the Church of Christ, and I can assure Bro. Evans that those articles have done more harm than good. Our motto has always been, "Do good to those that hate you, and if they revile, revile not again." Now if there is one thing more than another that the Church of Christ objects to, it is being called "Campbellites;" in like manner we take exceptions to being called "Mormons,"—yet Bro. Evans all the way through uses the term "Campbellite." One of the gentlemen that I loaned the HERALD to said he never felt more disgusted with anything that he had read than those articles; and even though it were true he considered it a violation of our teachings which he thinks are splendid. It has given him a decided setback. He says that he looked for something better from us than from any one else as our claims are so high. I trust Bro. Evans will pardon my writing so plain but I just wish to point out the fact that if we want to turn any of those people from error we want to show forth to the world that though others may call names, throw mud, etc., yet we can afford, having truth, to treat all with kindness and consideration. If we follow in the footsteps of our lowly Master, we must win. He said, "Do unto others as ye would that they should do to you." If we object to being called "Mormon," let us remember that they object to being called "Campbellite." I have found some very fine people among them whom I am proud to call friends. There are some of their ministers who have treated us very badly of late, yet we can afford to say, Lord, forgive, they know not what they do. Ever praying that God will grant unto us the spirit of love, towards all, I remain

In bonds of peace,

W. MACKIE.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, September 9, 1904.

Editors Herald: From Helena, Montana, I went to Deer Lodge, August 11, where James E. Kelley had preceded me and was holding meetings. The meetings were continued into the next week, when we were joined by Bro. J. D. Stead from Anacosta, where he and Bro. Warren E. Peak had been conducting tent services; but receiving but little encouragement they had closed the meetings and shipped the tent to White Hall for another trial. Bro. Stead was well and feeling cheerful in his mission work. Thorough-going Saints are supporting the work about Deer Lodge and it is commanding an influence.

Through the kindness of Mr. Whitman a conveyance was provided, and in company with Sr. Whitman we called on a number of families holding the views of Joseph Morris, to be kindly received, and spent the time pleasantly.

On the evening of the 17th, after the prayer service, and long visit with Bro. and Sr. Wykoff while waiting, we took the train for Idaho. Next morning at half past ten found us at Idaho Falls. Soon after met with Brn. J. E. Vanderwood and Joseph Farnsworth, and accompanied them to the home of Bro. Farnsworth five miles to eastward. This proved to be a very fine farming country. Out on the desert—but there is an abundance of water with which to irrigate, taken from the Snake River. So the desert is being rapidly transformed into luxuriantly growing crops, orchards, and pleasant homes. In the afternoon Bro. Farnsworth conveyed us two miles farther to the home of Bro. James Jennings. Bro. Jennings has a good farm, nice apple-orchard laden with fruit now ripening, and an apiary,—the apples as sound and firm as ever grew in Eden, not a worm or insect of any kind infecting them. Here we are booked for a few weeks stay.

We were soon in company with Brn. John and S. D. Condit, Bro. Will S. Pender and Srs. Condit and Pender, together with the homefolks. Bro. John was just fresh from the Democratic State Convention, where a plank against polygamy was adopted and placed in the platform. Our John is something of a politician and was bubbling over with the prospect of the "twin relic" receiving a black eye from the politicians. He could make it plain that all who were opposed to polygamy would or should vote the Democratic ticket, and of course all who favored polygamy would vote the Republican ticket. When politicians get together, shut one eye and open the other they can quickly arrange matters to "Catch de coon a comin' or a goin'." Anyhow the conflict is on in Idaho. Saturday, the 20th, ten o'clock in the forenoon, the district conference for Idaho convened in a grove of Bro. Jennings' near by. The attendance was not large, but the conference was in every way a success. Brn. Jennings and Farnsworth bore the burden of caring for those in attendance, and all were well provided for. Tuesday, the 24th, Brn. Layland and Farnsworth brought us to Idaho Falls where James E. Kelley, W. E. Peak and the writer started for Utah, tarrying over with the Saints at Ogden. Saturday, the 27th, ten o'clock in the forenoon, found us in the reunion at Salt Lake City. Brn. Swen Swenson, H. N. Hansen and A. M. Chase of the general field force being present, also reunion folks were alive to duty. From three to five services were held each day, besides Religio and Sunday-school work. One meeting was held each week day on the street, and two on Sundays. The district conference was held during the reunion, beginning September 3. The business was transacted with unity and satisfaction. The reunion in point of success was all that could have been desired. The Saints united to make it a success and they were not disappointed. All were glad that there was a reunion and unanimously voted to hold another in 1905. The reunion closed on the evening of the 4th inst., and now comes the unpleasant part.

Bro. W. E. Peak was called home on account of sickness in his family. James E. Kelley returned East as previously provided for, and yesterday Bro. A. M. Chase and family started on the return to Lamoni, Iowa, Sr. Ballantyne having started the evening previous. This leaves Brn. Hansen, Swenson, and the writer in Utah, Bro. Stead in Montana, and the usual force in Idaho.

Cooler days have come, the brown and yellow leaf appears. These with many other indications of autumn make one feel just a little gloomy and think of home; but here we are, to do what we can and as cheerfully as conditions will permit. A new political party has just come into being here with the avowed purpose of striking for the separation of church and state and placing political matters from under the dictation of the Mormon church. It is claimed that the church is the dictator and makes either of the great political parties serve its purpose of greed, and cares for neither. Some it is likely are dissatisfied because the Mormons are able to take care of their interests in spite of opposition. Anyhow there is a three-cornered fight on, just now, politically, besides the agitation going on in church matters, and the end not yet.

Hopefully,

WM. H. KELLEY.

WESTON, Iowa, September 6, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am often made glad by the good news you bring us every week of how the gospel is winning souls to Christ. Bro. Anderson visited our branch lately and preached two able sermons which were much enjoyed by the Saints. He looks well and seems happy and joyous in the work after his mission to Scandinavia. It makes us glad to know that some of those baptized are now preaching the gospel in that far off land, and we trust they may be the means of bringing many into the fold.

We are only a small band of Saints here, and sometimes it is a struggle to keep up our meetings, as some of our members do not seem to see the necessity of attending meetings as they should. I feel a strong desire to live so that I may be an honor to the cause of God, and a blessing to those around me. God gives me many encouraging testimonies from time to time. In a dream given me lately the Saints were commanded to meet at the church in the early dawn of the morning to sing praises to God, and we were told it was pleasing to God that we should sing praises to him, and that we should be cheerful and joyous in our hearts, and not suffer ourselves to be saddened and discouraged by the cares of life. God's loving watchcare is over us, and his blessing awaiting us if faithful.

Dear Saints, let us live our religion, and strive to have more love for others. I oftentimes feel sad when I see the pride and selfishness there is among the Saints, because I know these things are not pleasing in the sight of God. When outsiders attend our meetings let us show that we love them, and are interested in them; speak to them and invite them to come again. I think the Saints should be the happiest people on the earth. Let us strive to let our light shine, and do all the good we can to those around us. May the peace and blessings of God be with his people everywhere.

CHRISTINA RASMUSSEN.

Lamoni Stake Reunion.

The first annual reunion of the Lamoni Stake convened in the park at Davis City, Iowa, September 2, 1904, at half past four in the afternoon. The reunion was organized by choosing F. A. Smith, John Smith, and D. C. White as presidents, and Allie Thorburn as secretary, she choosing Gertie Kephart as assistant secretary.

Thursday and Friday were spent in putting up tents and getting ready for the reunion. All seemed to be in good spirits and were joyful and happy, the weather being very delightful throughout the entire reunion, except the last Sunday, it having rained Saturday night and suddenly become very cool; but about noon the sun shone again making all feel cheerful and happy once more. The stake conference met at ten o'clock Saturday, September 3; business passed off very pleasantly and peacefully.

Sunday morning early the people began to arrive from different places and soon there was a large crowd on the grounds. We had excellent sessions all day. The singing, in charge of Srs. May and Etta White, was a special feature of the reunion. The preaching was excellent, instructive, and satisfactory, commendable to Saints and nonmembers. Prayer-meetings were very spiritual and uplifting, there being a marked degree of the Spirit's power present throughout the entire sessions. All seemed to drink deep from the great fountain from whence light, joy, and peace cometh. And we can safely say we were gladdened and strengthened by the sweet communion of the blessed Spirit, which comes to cheer and comfort those who are willing to receive.

The hours at fifteen minutes to eleven in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon were occupied each day of the reunion by the Sunday-school and the Religio, excepting Sunday morning, in charge of J. A. Gunsolley, and was indeed a pleasant feature of the reunion. Quite an interest was manifested in the institute work of both societies. I am sure all were benefited and pleased with the work presented by our worthy president. I trust we may not forget to put the things we learned into practice.

There was little sickness on the grounds, and such saintly love was manifested that all seemed to heartily enjoy the association of each other, and good, spiritual, refreshing times were enjoyed from the presence of the Lord.

There were thirty-five tents on the ground in all, with the dining-tent.

A business session was held Thursday, at which a committee of five was appointed to make arrangements for a reunion next year; time and place left to the committee.

Six were baptized Saturday afternoon after the preaching service.

An invitation from the citizens of Davis City was read at the business session, requesting us to hold our reunion the coming year in the park there.

Thus closed the first reunion of the Lamoni Stake. All seemed highly delighted with it; and we trust that the coming one may be marked with a greater degree of spirituality and earnestness; that light, power, and wisdom may rest upon us from heaven, so that it may be witnessed in every assembly, that the Saints have taken a step in advance; one that will bring us into closer communion with God and his Son Jesus Christ.

ALLIE THORBURN.

Independence Stake Reunion.

The Independence Stake reunion and conference held September 2 to 11, convened at the fair grounds, Holden, Missouri, September 2, at half past three in the afternoon.

Bro. George Hulmes was chosen president of the reunion; I. N. White, J. D. White, and W. H. Garrett were associated with him, Sr. Jessie Allen and A. C. Brewer were chosen secretaries, Ruth Allen and Madge Craig organists, Cordie Hulmes and Dora Young choristers, George Hulmes, W. H. Garrett, F. C. Warnky, J. R. Sutton, and Arthur Allen press committee. On afternoon of the 3d the meeting consisted of five minute speeches which was enjoyed by all present. Sunday-school and Religio held six sessions which were profitable to all who took part. There were eight prayer-meetings, some of which were very good. Twenty sermons were preached, the speakers enjoying the Spirit to the edifying of the hearers.

There were not many camped on the ground, but the Saints round about turned out well, and on Sunday afternoon and each evening a goodly number of the citizens attended. We had splendid order all through the meetings. There was very little sickness in camp, Sr. Morgan being the only one that was seriously afflicted. The cooperative boarding-tent in charge of W. S. Macrae and George Hiles was a decided success, meals being furnished for eight and one half cents each. These brethren and also the sisters who assisted deserve great credit. Bro. Joseph Smith came in Saturday the 10th, and if we mistake not Bro. Joseph enjoyed this his first visit to Holden.

Professor E. R. Dewsnup gave us a fine talk upon educational lines, and showed from the standard books that the Lord desires that we shall become learned.

It was good to see the cheerful countenance of President Hulmes as he mingled with the Saints speaking words of commendation and cheer. At a business-meeting held Saturday the 10th it was unanimously decided that we have a reunion next year, and that the stake presidency and bishopric be a committee to appoint time and place with power to appoint other committees that may be necessary.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard preached the closing sermon, after which a vote of thanks was given to the fair association for the use of the grounds. Thus ended the first Independence Stake reunion, and we think much good will result from it.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. M. Ulmer, Akin, Illinois, writes September 12: "We are looking forward to our district conference to be held October 22, and hope to have Brn. F. L. Sawley and A. Higdon with us. Some are interested. I shall scatter a few hundred church papers in a short time."

H. T. Bush, Wildersville, Tennessee, pleads: "Let us all prove ourselves earnest workers in the gospel truth."

Elder G. H. Graves, Lexington, Tennessee, writes to Bishop E. L. Kelley: "I am preaching in the private house of a man by the name of Smith. A small crowd comes out every night to hear me. Bro. T. C. Kelley and Bro. C. L. Snow preached here about four weeks ago. Quite a number of colored people out to hear them, I am told. I go from here to a settlement called The Pine."

Elder F. C. Keck, Galena, Kansas: "At the close of our meeting, September 6, I baptized five. A few weeks before I baptized four at Weir City, Kansas, making nine added to Weir Branch. About sixty have been baptized in Spring River District since General Conference. The work is on the move all over the district."

Elder J. R. McClain, in a letter to E. L. Kelley, from Hickman, Kentucky, says: "We are still holding forth here, with large crowds in attendance. There seems to be quite an interest manifested. Some are almost persuaded. There are some nice people in Hickman, but it will take a good deal of teaching to reach many of them. Had a fine crowd out last night. The tent would not near hold the people."

Sr. L. Blasdell, Coleman, Michigan: "I am glad that I am a Latter Day Saint, and I want to prove myself worthy the name. Am trying to be humble, and obedient to the teachings of the church books. Pray for me that my faith fail not."

Elder Thomas Mills, Westville, Nova Scotia, having lately arrived there from England, writes: "I am sorry that I can not give such a glowing account of conditions here as I would like. If I have been deceived myself, I do not wish to deceive others. I shall speak the facts as they are. There are hundreds of men in Canada out of employment, as well as in the old country. And should there be any of the brethren thinking to come here, let me say, Stop where you are until things look better than at present."

Advices from Bro. F. M. Smith, September 10, from Fayette City, Pennsylvania: "Bro. Greene and I go from here to Wheeling, to hold meetings there Tuesday and Wednesday nights next, then on to Buffalo City, West Virginia, for conference next Saturday and Sunday. Which way from Buffalo City, we do not yet know definitely."

Bro. G. T. Griffiths, Seattle, Washington, August 10: "Our conference here last Saturday and Sunday was a complete success. The attendance was good, and we were very fairly represented by the press. Brn. O. B. Thomas, T. J. Bell, and E. Mengel have been very successful in their labors since their arrival on Puget Sound. Have baptized seven here and in British Columbia. They are constantly engaged preaching on the streets and operating a tent. They report the prospects quite bright in this part of the mission."

Testimony, Preamble, and Resolutions.

ADOPTED AT REUNION OF NORTHERN AND CENTRAL CALIFORNIA DISTRICTS.

David Hyrum Smith, youngest son of the martyred prophet of this dispensation is dead.

Such is the brief announcement that suddenly and unexpectedly interrupts the current of our reunion and conference experience to-day. Instinctively our minds rush back to the double tragedy of 1844, which doubtless placed a pre-natal impress upon the unborn child. Later we see the infant, the youth, and the man,—the student, the orator, the poet, and the minister chosen of God to grace one of the highest stations within his gift to the church on earth. We enter the fields of his soul-revelry, where planets shine and flowers bloom, where nature shows her prettiest tints and tells in song her sweetest stories. We see him pluck the choicest gems and form a beautiful cluster,—a bouquet of exceptional magnificence, and find ourselves in concert with the melody of his compositions. We sit beneath the sanctuary where drops the unction from his lips whereon the inextinguishable force of law and reason melts into the sweet persuasiveness of love's solicitude. We hear the word that bids him to a place of royal trust and holy honor. We note the humble grace and sweet humility that marks his mien. We listen to the siren notes which seek to intoxicate his brain with aspiration and with vanity of place and power. We catch with joy the answer that he gave and read with gladness the words he penned:

"Joseph's star is bright and shining,
Alexander's more than mine—
Mine is just below the mountain,
Bide its time and it will shine."

We see the man. We note his calling, and we draw upon imagination as we paint a picture glowing with the brilliance of achievements great and grand, in fields as deep and high and broad as God can spread for human occupancy. We hope and calculate, and try to "bide the time" for "shining" and for fruitage rich and rare.

But ere our hopes were fully born we saw the shadows gather and the blossoms fade. The life-song scarce had sounded its one exultant key, till notes of melancholy, sounding like a knell, monopolized the strain, the brightest colors of the picture on the canvas we had traced grew dim and sombre, and our prophecy erased. We saw the fragile texture of the tissue of that pre-natally disturbed brain succumb beneath the pressure of environment and strain. We hoped that 'twas but temporary, and waited long in expectancy and prayer: but still the gloom grew denser, till the inevitable came, and forth they bore our brother unto a living tomb.

For thirty years incarcerated there, he has been the object of our care and hope and fear. Released by God's command from responsibilities of office he scarce ever filled, and left, as Heaven advised, in the Almighty's hand, we still have hoped and waited, and oft have prayed meanwhile, that some day in this life again his service might appear to bless God's holy heritage. But the message which to-day salutes our ears forbids a further indulgence of that desire, and we are once more asked to gaze upon a mystery of Providence too deep for human penetration—to hear a solemn appeal to which faith alone can give an answer.

As Saints of God assembled, let us respond becomingly, and answer now and ever, "Thy will, O God, be done. We trust thee, even though we can not understand."

As a feeble testimony of our love let us place on our record the following:

Whereas in the inscrutable providence of our all-wise and eternal Father, the death of our beloved brother and minister, David Hyrum Smith, has been permitted, after a long series of years wherein the church was bereft of such services as his splendid power of heart and intellect led it to hope would be rendered by him, under divine blessing, and,

Whereas our faith directs us to a realm where the restrictions which bound his intellect here can not be continued and leads us to hope that his unfettered mind may there develop and minister unhindered until the maturing of the divine purpose,

Resolved that we record this expression of our belief and hope, also of our sympathy and love for the widow and son and brothers of the departed, together with the foregoing testimony of admiration and resignation.

Resolved, further, that a copy of this testimony, preamble, and resolution be sent to the SAINTS' HERALD and Zion's Ensign for publication.

Respectfully submitted,

(Signed)

JOSEPH LUFF,

C. SCOTT,

J. C. FOSS,

Committee.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Northwestern Mission; Greeting: I desire to call your attention to the fact, that the treasury in the mission is in a depleted condition, and there is a great demand for financial assistance, and I take this means of calling your attention to the necessity of honoring the law of tithes and offerings. The Bishop has placed several families of the missionaries with the several agents of the mission, to be provided for. Some of those families are away behind in their monthly allowances; so we do sincerely trust that the Saints will cheerfully put forth an effort to place the necessary means in the hands of the agents of the mission to meet the demands made on them. Some of the Saints have been making the mistake of sending their tithes and offerings directly to the Bishop, thus ignoring the agents appointed by him to receive such funds in their own districts. Others have been sending their moneys to the agents of the districts from which they came when moving west. If such Saints intend to make this western country their home, they should get their letters of removal, and help build up the work here. Prospects are bright for the work of the Lord in this western country, but it can not be made a success without temporal means.

Therefore we trust that all will show their interest in the work by sending their means to the respective agents of the different districts of the mission; viz., Frank Holmes, Roslyn, Washington, Sherman Hartshorn, Condon, Oregon, J. M. Puckett, Deep Creek, Washington, and William Smith, Dora, Coos County, Oregon.

With love to all,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENTS.

By arrangement with Bishop E. L. Kelley and Apostle I. N. White, I herewith send for publication the following list of appointments: Southern Missouri District reunion September 16 to 25, at Pomona, Missouri; Springfield, Missouri, September 26 and 27; Webb City, Missouri, September 28 to 30; Joplin, Missouri, October 1 to 3; Galena, Kansas, October 4 and 5; Weir City, Kansas, October 6 and 7; Pleasant View, Kansas, October 8 to 10; Pittsburg, Kansas, October 11 and 12; Fort Scott, Kansas, October 13 and 14; Nevada, Missouri, October 15 to 17; Eldorado Springs, Missouri, October 18 and 19; Coal Hill, Missouri, October 20 and 21; Vevé, Missouri, October 22 and 23; Walker, Missouri, October 24; Richhill, Missouri, October 25 and 26.

Branch authorities please publish the above appointments thoroughly, and let us all come together and have a good time, as well as to learn our duty more fully. All proper questions pertaining to the department of the Bishopric will be considered and answered as best we can.

G. H. HILLIARD.

Release of Missionary.

This is to notify all concerned that owing to the lack of funds Bro. W. H. Greenwood has at his request been released from the mission field; and will labor as circumstances permit in the Sheffield District. It is with deep regret that I make this announcement for Bro. Greenwood has been a very arduous and faithful worker in the cause, and has only reached this conclusion after much actual privation; and finally has reached the point where it is impossible for him to continue longer as missionary owing to the lack of financial support.

JOHN W. RUSHTON,

President British Mission.

LLANELLY, South Wales, September 5, 1904.

Notice of Appointment.

I herewith give notice to the Saints in the Seattle and British Columbia District, that I have appointed Bro. O. B. Thomas of the Seventy in subcharge of said district, and ask that all matters requiring the attention of those in charge be directed to him at 902 Howard Avenue N., Seattle, Washington.

G. T. GRIFFITHS, Minister in Charge.

Card of Thanks.

The family of the late Don A. Smith desire herewith to acknowledge and express their appreciation of the many acts of kindness and aid rendered by friends and neighbors during his long and severe illness, also to express thanks for the continued acts of sympathy and helpfulness manifested on the occasion of his death and funeral.

Respectfully,

ALEXANDER H. SMITH.

LAMONI, Iowa, September 13, 1904.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Northern Michigan District, will convene at Boyne City, Michigan, October 15, at 10.30 a. m. Send all reports to C. B. Joice, South Boardman, Michigan. J. A. Grant, president.

The Eastern Iowa District conference will convene at Muscatine, Iowa, on October 15 and 16, 1904, at 10.30 a. m. Elders, priests, teachers, and deacons are requested to send written reports of their labors since our last conference to C. G. Dykes, Muscatine, Iowa, Box 420. Warren Turner, president.

GRACELAND NOTES.

C. A. Butterworth writing from Tuncurry, New South Wales, Australia, speaks of the college thus: "Sorry of the misunderstanding about closing the college, but am glad it is still running, and hope the debt may soon be wiped out."

In a letter from Bro. C. H. Caton, counselor to Bishop Thomas Taylor of the British Isles Mission, reference is made to Graceland College thus: "We can not say what will be raised in answer to Graceland College appeal, but the unanimous voice of our people is, 'The college must be continued.'" We note also in a letter which the brethren of the bishopric there have forwarded to the Saints of that mission this statement, "We cheerfully commend the above, [the plan adopted by the Presiding Bishopric for raising the debt,] and trust each one will be true to the old cry: 'Let every one do his duty.'"

Another district has performed its whole duty pertaining to the college debt. Elder S. J. Hinkle, Bishop's agent for the Oklahoma District, writes: "We are glad to be able to send you our proportionate amount for Graceland College, one hundred and twenty-two dollars and eighty cents. Please make note of it in the HERALD, as so many have helped, and will be glad to know the required amount has at last been raised."

Sr. Lottie Simmons, Goreville, Illinois, writes: "You will find inclosed two dollars which I send to pay on the college debt. I feel that the Saints should help to pay the debt, for some day we may want to send our children to a college, and I am sure I would rather send mine among the Saints than elsewhere. My brother, H. H. Gold, is at Graceland now, and we all know he has a brotherly love for the people there."

Sr. Bertha E. Day, Stockport, Iowa, sends in contributions as tithe-offering and offering to college and writes: "I only wish I was able to send more and I do hope the college debt will be paid in the near future. I have four little buds of promise whom I hope to see educated at Graceland some day."

Some of the benefits of Graceland are emphasized in a letter from a veteran missionary to Bishop Kelley: "I was overjoyed to read in the Ensign the names of two of Graceland's students. The young man was preparing for the ministry in the Baptist Church. I talked with him a great deal, and predicted that he would yet preach the restored gospel."

SUBSIDENCE OF GREAT SALT LAKE.

By the courtesy of the New York American and Journal Company we are permitted to reproduce from their issue of July 31, 1904, a well-written article touching the gradual wasting of the Great Salt Lake, together with cuts representing the peculiar similarity existing between Palestine and Utah in regard to the Dead Sea and Great Salt Lake. This will be excellent reading for those interested in geographical and topographical studies and conditions.

We publish this article with no intention of reflecting upon the social, economical, or political affairs of Utah, but simply as a fact and as a matter of news:

At the persistent rate of fourteen and a fraction inches every hour, twenty-eight feet five inches per day, or two miles a year, the Great Salt Lake is disappearing. The shore lines of this mysterious, tideless, inland sea, nestling among Utah's hills four thousand feet above the ocean's level, are now contracting day by day to their common centre at a speed visible to the naked eye, and which will mark the lake's total obliteration within the next twenty-five years. Possibly before the year 1930 the last drop of the Great Salt Lake will have evaporated, leaving nothing behind but a huge, barren, salt plain capable of furnishing the whole world's salt supply for many centuries to come.

The agency responsible for the rapid disappearance of the Great Salt Lake is distinctly of human origin. That they may exist and that their rich tracts of land may continue to bear, the Mormon settlers have cut off the sources of fresh water supply from the mountain sea, diverting them for irrigation purposes. And now, stagnant and helpless, the lake is drying up, at the complete mercy of the pitiless sun.

With the retreat of the waters, the famous bathing resorts, the splendid piers and pavilions which once jutted out far into the lake are now being left stranded, one after another, high and dry on the barren shore.

Saltaire, one of the most popular lakeside resorts, is now practically deserted. The magnificent pier erected at the enormous cost of half a million dollars presents the pathetic appearance of having been lifted bodily from the water's edge and set back a mile or two from the shore. Garfield, where another splendid pavilion stands, is doomed in like manner, for within the next year or so there will not be any water within a few miles of the present bathing resort.

Exactly the same fate awaits many other seashore resorts surrounding the lake. Day by day the water is receding from them, leaving the corporations controlling them the option of either closing them up altogether or extending the piers out into the lake at a pace equal to that at which the shore line is retreating.

Without doubt the Great Salt Lake is the most remarkable body of water in the world. It is a lake nearly three thousand square miles in area, lying one thousand miles inland, at an altitude of forty-two hundred and fifty feet, and whose waters are six times as salt as those of the ocean.

The contents of the lake were recently estimated at 1,505,433,600,000 cubic feet, and yet, in the opinion of Professor W. J. McGee, of Washington, all of this vast body of water will have totally disappeared within the next twenty-three years. Other geologists who have made a careful study of Great Salt Lake have estimated that from twenty-seven to thirty years will elapse before the last trace of this once enormous inland sea shall have vanished.

So alarming, in a sense, has the drying up of Great Salt Lake become during the past few years that at the instigation of the Government the United States Geological Survey, Division of Hydrography, has been making a thorough investigation to determine the causes leading to the lake's disappearance, and the possible outcome after the last trace of the big inland sea has been wiped out for ever. A preliminary report of the Geological Survey says:

"The decline in the surface of Great Salt Lake is causing apprehension among the people of Utah. This interesting body of water has been steadily sinking for a number of years.

"The movements in the waters have been thought to be related to the development of agricultural and grazing interests, which divert large quantities of water from the streams which feed the lake for use upon the land. During past years the cutting of the timber on the neighboring mountains has been unusually heavy, practically destroying the forest protection of the head waters of a number of streams whose waters flow into the lake. The cutting of these forests is supposed to have injured the flow of the streams, and thus to have affected the lake level.

"Great Salt Lake is the means of considerable resources to Utah, and the value of property near the lake and certain lines of business are said to be unfavorably affected by its decline."

Although the lake does not average more than twenty feet in depth and nowhere reaches a greater depth than sixty feet, the Southern Pacific Railway has had most tremendous difficulties to overcome while endeavoring to fill in across a neck of Great Salt Lake in order to avoid the present circuitous route along the lake shore. The improvement is known as the "Lucin cut off," and the railroad engineers, when they began the work, considered it only a question of a very short time before trains would be running across the lake by the short route.

Great Salt Lake is one of the shallowest bodies of water in the world, considering its dimensions. In some places a man may wade out a mile from shore without wetting his shoulders.

The railroad contractors decided to take advantage of this shallowness by making a solid road-bed as far as possible out in the water. Material from a deep cut at Little Mountain was hauled out on a temporary track and used for filling.

Then it was discovered that in some places the bottom of the lake was composed of crusted salt and sand extending to a considerable depth. In other places the formation was so loose that the longest piles driven into it would not become firmly imbedded. These were supposed to be depressions in the formation which could be readily filled. To form a permanent road-bed near shore a somewhat novel railway was laid, consisting of planks upon which were placed sandbags to hold them in position. On these ties were placed, to which the rails were spiked.

As fast as this temporary track was laid the cars were run out and dumped over the side. But in spite of the enormous quantity of material used on the section of the road constructed in the shallow water, it was observed that here and there depressions were continually occurring, showing that the foundations were still sinking. For over sixteen months material was dumped into the lake, thousands upon thousands of tons of it being emptied apparently upon one spot before the settling ceased and the engineers had a firm foundation for the road-bed. It seemed as though the lake rested on an artificial bottom, beneath which there was an enormous cavity which had to be filled up flush with the false bottom before the railroad work could proceed.

By far the most serious difficulty, however, has been encountered in the deepest part of the lake crossed by the Southern Pacific cut-off. Here the water ranges in depth from twenty to thirty feet. It was determined to lay the track upon trestle-work. For this purpose piles of the largest size were secured to be driven in for posts to support the framework. Some of these piles were over forty feet long.

After being driven down a few feet, however, most of the piles suddenly disappeared. They had pierced the crust forming the lake bottom and dropped through into whatever is below.

In one instance an engine and two gravel cars which were moving over the trestle so weakened the work that the train crew had just time to detach the locomotive before the piling collapsed, carrying the cars with it.

As the two illustrations on the preceding page readily show, there is a striking similarity between Great Salt Lake and its surroundings and the Dead Sea and its surroundings. Both are in reality dead seas, and both are intensely salty.

On a Friday morning in 1847 two men rode through a canon close to where Fort Douglas now stands, and from the heights of the plateau gazed over the wide expanse of the lake and valley below. One of them threw wide his arms, both bared their heads and the elder of them spoke:

"The Lord be praised," he said. "He has led us to the promised land."

The devotees were Orson Pratt and Erastus Snow, Mormon elders, who had left Brigham Young and his pioneer detachment and ridden a day's march ahead to see what was beyond the mountains at their front. Twenty-four hours later a flag floated from Ensign Peak, the name of Immigrant Canon had been bestowed upon the pass, and the men of Young's detachment were making camp.

The following morning Brigham Young bathed in the lake, and on emerging from the plunge gave it the name of Great Salt Lake.

President Joseph Smith, who was in attendance at the Dow City reunion, returned Tuesday morning, the 27th. Elder F. B. Blair, our business manager, reached home Monday evening.

A few earnest sisters have organized a little band of workers called the Helping Hand, at La Conner, Washington. The object of this society is indicated by its name. The work of the Helping Hand for the first year will be dedicated to the Saints' Home, and Sr. O. A. Anderson has written to the matron touching the needs of the home and its occupants. May success attend their efforts.

The Rigby Star (Idaho) for September 2 gives account of a controversy between S. D. Condit and J. E. Vanderwood, and three elders of the Utah church at Rigby. A representative of the Star was in attendance, and credits the "Josephite" elders with being fair in their arguments, and free from ridicule and abuse, although reports to the contrary had been circulated by their opponents.

Elder John Smith spoke at the Brick Church, Lamoni, Sunday morning. In the evening the speaker at the Saints' Home was Elder John Spaulding, lately of Dunseith, North Dakota, and at the church, Elder D. J. Krahl.

Elder Peter Muceus, missionary in Norway, in a recent letter to Bishop Kelley, announces late additions to the church by baptism, eight at one place and two at another.

The reunion at Dow City, Iowa, lasting from September 16 to 25, inclusive, was an exceptionally good one in quiet, peaceful harmony of spirit and action. The weather was fine to the end. Fifteen were baptized, including some young men of excellent reputation and promise.

PREPARATION FOR CHRIST'S COMING.

SERMON BY ELDER J. R. LAMBERT, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
SEPTEMBER 4, 1904.

I call your attention to a short reading-lesson from the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, verse 36 to the end of the chapter:

But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only. But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, That he shall make him ruler over all his goods. But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

I call your particular attention to verses 42 and 44. "Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

I trust that we will not feel lonely this morning, for I am confident if we approach God in faith, and have our hearts set to do his will, he will meet with us. I need not tell this congregation of people that Jesus Christ, who once walked among men, went about doing good, healing the sick, teaching the truth, living according to his Father's will, raising the dead, and always pointing the people to God, is coming again. Not in humiliation, but in power and in glory.

While there are many things that we would like to know, which are more or less important, there is perhaps nothing so important in its character as the preparation that we are required to make in order that we may meet him in peace, and receive the reward provided for the pure and the good. That he is coming again, personally, literally, to complete his work and make it possible for those who have believed in him, and lived righteous lives, to enjoy the full reward offered in the gospel, is very evident from the Scriptures. In John 14:1-4, we have the following:

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know.

It is very cheering that our blessed Lord should have left on record such a promise as this: "I will come again, and receive you unto myself." And the additional language shows the grand design of God in the consummation of his work: "That where I am, there ye may be also." God has so arranged the affairs of his work that finally the faithful and true shall dwell in his presence in glory, in the presence of the Lord Jesus, where there shall be nothing to hinder them from the enjoyment of the full reward.

We can enjoy a great deal here in this world, but our surroundings forbid the possibility of our enjoying the reward in its fullness. But finally, when we are fully prepared for the enjoyment of that reward, God proposes to classify the inhabitants of the earth and place every individual where he properly belongs; place every individual, who is found worthy of any reward whatever, where he can enjoy that reward without let or hindrance. And hence the conditions surrounding the people of God who have been faithful and true in the service allotted to them, will be grand indeed. "That where I am, there ye may be also."

In connection with this we call your attention to Acts 1:9-11:

And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.

Thus we discover that just as literally as he ascended and disappeared he will come and appear again,—come in glory and in power. Now, the manner in which we are to make preparation to meet him is important; and, if I understand the New Testament correctly, the means of preparation are found in the gospel. No other means will do. No other means have been ordained of God except that which is found in the gospel of Jesus Christ. And what is the gospel? We say, It is the power of God unto salvation; and that is true. But of what does it consist? I believe that every commandment, provision, and promise found in the revelations of God, obedience to which will improve our moral or spiritual condition, is a part of the divine plan. And I am not willing to admit that the gospel is anything less than this. It is just that broad. So while we attach great importance to the fundamentals of this divine plan, as we should, we must not forget that there are many other principles, many other provisions binding upon the people of God; that there are many other blessings in addition to those which we receive when we render obedience to the truth by going down into the water, and being baptized for the remission of sin. There are many other and greater blessings to be received and enjoyed when we are prepared to receive them. The work is progressive in its character, and there are parts of the divine plan, suited to our stage of progress in life, which are always binding upon us; and if, because of an intelligent faith in God, we continue to move forward in obedience to all these provisions of the divine plan, there is nothing that can stay our progress. It may not be rapid, but it will be constant. There is no power that can harm us. We know that the Master taught that there is no power that could pluck the disciples out of his hand. And it is true. God the Father has ordained and prepared the plan, and when we intelligently comply with those requirements, and in sincerity of heart, there is no power on earth or in hell that can move us away from God. We will remain in the Master's hands, and be cared for, no matter what may transpire; and at last we will receive that glory and full reward which he has promised to give to the faithful.

And yet we become agitated sometimes! We become perplexed and unduly disturbed. Why is it? Simply because of human weakness. Simply because our faith is not sufficiently strong, or our understanding is at fault. Or, it may be that we have been weakened because we have not been as diligent in the service of God as we should have been. We know by actual experience that a constant effort to do God's will, especially under what we term adverse conditions, makes us stronger,—stronger in God and in the power of his might. And sometimes we have those blessed experiences, when these powers are arrayed against us, and we have been struggling and struggling to do God's will, and to overcome. We feel that God is coming to the rescue, that he is right near to us. His power is manifest, and our hearts rejoice because we know that we will be successful when he is with us, and by the power of his Spirit is dispelling the clouds and enabling us to push forward and fully perform duty as required. And as we make these efforts we continue to gain strength, and we become more and more fixed in the thought that there is not a thing in this world, or any other world, which should unduly disturb us.

There is no cause for discouragement anywhere, so long as we trust in God and do right, no matter what the conditions are, nor what men do. There is really no cause for discouragement. There was a time in the history of the Latter Day Saints when they felt unduly disturbed, and conditions seemed very unfavorable. They were agitated, and the Lord spoke to them with reference to the redemption of Zion; and among other things he said to them, "Be still, and know that I am God." I have often thought, when I felt agitated and disturbed, of these words of the Master. They are so instructive. They have a tendency to increase our faith, to allay this undue agitation, and to fix our confidence and faith in the One who is mighty and strong, and able to accomplish his work and bring us through safely, if we will but trust in him.

Now it seems to be God's plan that we should make the preparation required without regard to the time when Jesus shall appear. There is some purpose, surely, in the refusal upon the part of God to make known to us the day and hour when Jesus shall come. He wants us to move independently, and enjoy our privileges. He wants us to occupy faithfully and truly till he comes. It is just the same with reference to the redemption of Zion. Sometimes we get our hearts fixed on this matter, that it is to occur at a certain time, and when we see that conditions are not favorable, we are disappointed, and some are almost ready to give up the work because Zion is not going to be redeemed at the time when they hoped it would be redeemed. But the coming of Jesus Christ will occur in God's own time. The redemption of Zion will occur in God's own time. The important thing for us to do is to increase in faith and good works, and to have our feet, as the Apostle Paul said, "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." It is necessary, in a spiritual sense, that we should be shod in order that we may walk safely through, and secure that which God has offered to us in his love. The gospel, then, is the means of preparation, and it will enable us to pass through safely, and secure the full reward at the end of the race.

True, God has given to us the signs of the times that we may know the age in which we live; that we may intelligently understand the kind of work he proposes to accomplish in our day, and in our age, and that we may know in a certain sense when the time is drawing nearer and nearer to the end. But the exact time when Jesus shall come, or the exact time when Zion shall be redeemed, has not been revealed, and we are required to watch, with the knowledge that "in an hour that ye think not, the Son of man cometh." We are required to be ready, for at such a time as we think not Jesus shall come.

Out of pure love to God and love to humanity we should move forward in the accomplishment of this good work which the Father has intrusted to us, and let all these other things come in their time and in their place. They are secondary to say the least. They are not of primary importance; but the preparation is of primary importance. It is indispensable. And God has not left us in ignorance with reference to this. He has told what kind of preparation we must make. And if we would stop and think for a moment we could understand readily what is needed. The purpose of the great God is that we should dwell with him. We must become like him if we are ever permitted to dwell with him. We must become pure as God is pure. We must become holy as God is holy. We must become righteous, because of an adherence to righteous principles contained in the gospel plan. Our thoughts, our deeds, our works must all be in harmony with the gospel of the Son of God; for we are told by John that "it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Now how do we purify ourselves? Through obedience to the truth, or the gospel. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth, . . . see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. . . . And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." So said the Apostle Peter. If there is any additional evidence needed, that the gospel is the means of preparation, I can call your attention to the statement found here in Mark 1:1-4:

The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God: as it is written in the prophets, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.

Even when Jesus came the first time, which was the day of his humiliation, it was necessary that the way should be prepared, and that the people should be prepared to receive him. "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." I remember reading one time, with reference to the question of baptism, in Mr. Abbott's Dictionary of Religious Knowledge, that John got his ideas of baptism from the Jews, and the disciples of Christ got their ideas of baptism from John. So we have it a human institution altogether. All human according to this. But the record says this man was sent from God, and John said, "He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost."

Then he was not only sent of God, but he was sent to baptize by the authority of God. That makes it a divine institution, rather than human.

If it was necessary then that the way should be prepared, and a people prepared through the proclamation of the gospel, and adherence to its principles at that time, to say the least of it, will it not be equally necessary when he comes again, that an authoritative proclamation of the gospel should precede his coming? At that time he came as the humble babe of Bethlehem; he suffered persecution and reproach at the hands of men; he ended his earth career on the cross, and died an ignominious death; but when he comes again, he is coming in power. He is coming with all the holy angels in glory, as the Apostle Paul says, "to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." Surely, then, it will be necessary that an authoritative proclamation of the gospel should precede this coming. And for this very purpose God has sent forth the gospel, restored his work, and commissioned men to preach the truth and build up his kingdom according to the revelations of God; and to all the faithful and true ministers and members, he has freely given the testimony of his Spirit; and in the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants he invites our attention to this test time and again. He presents his word to his servants, and he says, "The Spirit beareth witness." We are invited to take the matter right to God, and by the divine Spirit test the matter, whether it be from God or not. And herein lies the strength of the work, the glorious work, in which you and I are engaged. It stands the test. Here we receive strength and evidence of its divinity, and we push forward under this divine inspiration to the accomplishment of the work he has given us to do.

The gospel places us all in possession of the Spirit of God. This Spirit takes of the things of the Father and shows them to us, and it shows us ourselves as we are. It continues to make manifest its light, the light of God, the love of God, the power of God; all are manifested through the divine Spirit. There is nothing else that will enable us to see ourselves as we should see ourselves, except the Spirit of the living God. We see where we can accomplish good through God's help; we see where we are weak and frail, and need to be carefully guarded. It teaches us that we will fail and fall unless God comes to the rescue. And it teaches us to put our trust in him, and guard our ways, our thoughts, our deeds, our words. It is constantly inciting, moving us to come into more complete harmony with God, through obedience to the gospel which has emanated from him,—the means of reconciliation between man and God, the means by which we are reconciled to God, and prepared to enjoy his blessings in this world, and more fully in the world which is to come. Then it is not difficult to see that the gospel is the means of preparation. It contains all that is necessary for this preparation. The preparation will be thorough and complete, if we intelligently abide in the truth as it has been restored from heaven to man. And I am very thankful that God continues to testify by his Spirit.

You have been troubled, some of you, over conditions that have obtained in the church, and so have I. And I felt when these conditions obtained that I saw some things that were required, that every other individual should see; that the important thing, that which was the most important, was to fully perform duty. There is no condition ever obtains anywhere that justifies an individual in refusing to perform duty; and when the conditions are embarrassing, then is the time when we should be more faithful, more earnest, more true. In these efforts we learn that we can feast on the good things of God no matter what conditions obtain in the church. We may feel disturbed and disappointed, and all that; and in this we may be right, or we may be wrong. We may be partly right and partly wrong; but God has so arranged his work, in his love and wisdom, that we may enjoy it and secure the peace of God in this world, and eternal life in the world which is to come, if we will only be true and faithful.

Is there any other way that will prepare you and me to meet Jesus Christ in glory, when he comes? If I have ill will towards any individual, from whom I differ in opinion, am I prepared to meet Jesus when he comes in glory? Think of the character of God and answer the question to your own souls. Think of it seriously. I am not in favor of the theory that seemingly some would advocate, that we are not to see except one side of the question. You will hardly accuse me of being there. I believe God wants us to see things as they are, just as far as it is possible for us so to do. And we must learn to bear these responsibilities as we should, and if we are in the line of duty, instead of these things disturbing or diminishing our faith, our faith will be constantly increasing. Just as soon as you discover the course that you are pursuing is taking you farther away from God, destroying your love and faith, your love for God, and your love for humanity, you may know that you are making a serious mistake, and it is better to turn about at once and reform,—set yourself right before God.

You have perhaps heard me say, and I will repeat it this morning, the time has come, at different periods in my experience in the church, when I lost confidence in men, to a certain extent. Sometimes my confidence was badly shaken; but there has come with this unpleasant experience, a recompense, a reward; for in connection with this there has come an increase of faith, of confidence in God, an increase of confidence in the provisions that he has made in ancient and modern revelation for the safety of his people, collectively and individually. I thank God for this. We can safely trust him. As Jesus said when he was on the earth, so it is now: "I am the way, the truth and the life. No man cometh unto the Father, but by me." So we must constantly have our eyes fixed on Jesus Christ, the author and finisher of our faith, looking unto him, steadfastly, earnestly, then we are safe, and we can enjoy the work, and secure the eternal salvation promised.

Now with reference to works of righteousness that we are to perform after we obey the gospel, I need not stop to speak at length. We are informed in Galatians 6:7: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." It is necessary then that we sow, as the apostle says, to the Spirit, not to the flesh, not to the carnal mind. And if we sow to the Spirit we will not be disappointed, we will reap those things that are good, enduring, and eternal.

The great need for us to-day, is to overcome the many weaknesses that we have, the ills to which we are subject, and the opposition that is waged against us. God intended that we should overcome; and only to those who overcome is the promise made. We must overcome and endure to the end, and then we shall reap the great salvation.

In 2 Peter 1:5-11, we read of those Christian graces which we are required to add to our faith. "And besides this," says the apostle, "giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins." Then we are told, too, that in this manner an abundant entrance shall be ministered unto us into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

Now this teaching covers a good deal of ground, and it should be the chief delight of every child of God to add these virtues to his faith: temperance, patience, godliness, knowledge, brotherly kindness, and charity, which is the pure love of Christ. Why, we are safe, when we add these to our faith. Then we are living as God intended we should live. That is the proper spiritual condition for every child of God. And we never can be prepared for the accomplishment of the work that God requires us to do, nor be prepared to meet him in peace when he comes, unless we so adorn our faith.

I wish to call your attention, in this connection, to Doctrine and Covenants 45:10. Speaking of the coming of Jesus Christ, his second advent, we read:

And then shall the heathen nations be redeemed, and they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection; and it shall be tolerable for them; and Satan shall be bound that he shall have no place in the hearts of the children of men. And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for they that are wise and have received the truth, [now mark the language,] and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver.

This instruction is given directly to us, informing us how we should live. We should treasure his word up in our minds, make ourselves acquainted with it, take the Holy Spirit for our guide, and if we are careful to not be deceived, and thus have the truth and adhere to it, and live so that we are entitled to the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we shall stand when he comes, we shall not be hewn down, but shall enjoy the great blessings that he has in store for those who are found worthy at that day. In connection with this I call your attention to section 63, paragraph 13:

He that is faithful and endureth shall overcome the world. He that sendeth up treasures unto the land of Zion, shall receive an inheritance in this world, and his works shall follow him; and also a reward in the world to come: yea, and blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, when the Lord shall come, and old things shall pass away, and all things become new, they shall rise from the dead and shall not die after, and shall receive an inheritance before the Lord, in the holy city, and he that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; wherefore, for this cause preached the apostles unto the world the resurrection of the dead: these things are the things that ye must look for, and speaking after the manner of the Lord, they are now nigh at hand; and in a time to come, even in the day of the coming of the Son of Man, and until that hour, there will be foolish virgins among the wise, and at that hour cometh an entire separation of the righteous and the wicked; and in that day will I send mine angels, to pluck out the wicked, and cast them into unquenchable fire.

“At that day there shall come a separation.” Where shall we stand when that separation occurs, with the wicked or the righteous? That is for us to settle, for us to choose. It seems to me that we should live in such a manner that when we are assured that the coming of the Lord is near, very near, that we may have no disposition to defer the day of his coming; but we can say intelligently, with a consciousness that we have made preparation, and that no fear will obtain in our minds when we see the Lord in glory, “Come Lord Jesus, come quickly.” It seems to me that we should be prepared, if we knew he was coming to-night, to stand before him in peace and with confidence, conscious, of course, that we have failed in many things, that we are weak; but that we have been making a constant effort to overcome and do right. And I have often thought this: God has been so good, so loving and kind to me in all the struggles of this life, he will not be less kind and loving over on the other side. And if I keep my thoughts right, have no ill-will toward anybody, and to the best of my knowledge am seeking to do good, why should I fear? I would rather be in his hands than anywhere else. I have no disposition to defer the time of his coming. I can say, I believe, in my heart truly, “Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly.”

In section 90, paragraph 1, we read:

Verily, thus saith the Lord, It shall come to pass that every soul who forsaketh their sins and cometh unto me, and calleth on my name, and obeyeth my voice, and keepeth my commandments, shall see my face, and know that I am, and that I am the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world; and that I am in the Father and the Father in me, and the Father and I are one; the Father because he gave me of his fullness; and the Son because I was in the world and made flesh my tabernacle, and dwelt among the sons of men.

Now let us strive to live according to our profession. In malice and every other evil thing, let us be children. In understanding, in knowledge, let us be men. May the God of heaven so strengthen us by the divine Spirit, that we may enjoy this good work just a little better than we have ever enjoyed it before. That is possible, probable, and sure, if we continue to make progress. And let us see to it that our feet are shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. It is a gospel of peace, and we will never meet any serious nor lasting disappointment so long as we make this kind of an effort. Never. We will pass through seasons of trial and darkness, it is true; but every time we will come out just a little better than we were when we went into those things. We will realize that we are just a little nearer to God than we were before; and thus, like our ancient brethren, we will come up through much tribulation, through trial and affliction, and we will learn to rejoice right in the midst of these trials and afflictions because of the peace of God and the blessings that we enjoy right here.

I am satisfied that there is a necessity for a greater effort upon my part, that I may do more fully the Master's will. Whether there is upon your part or not, you may answer for yourself, answer between you and God. Think of the character of the work in which you are engaged. Think of what God individually requires at your hands, and do that without regard to what surrounding conditions are. Faithfully and truly perform every part of the work, and the blessings of God will be with you in this world, and the great salvation shall be yours in the world which is to come.

ADAM'S GRAVE.

In your issue for September 7, I noticed the article “The grave of Adam,” and it brought to memory an article in the News-Leader of this city that I intended clipping and sending to you.

I can not find anything in the Church History to prove that the Prophet Joseph ever gave such a revelation as is spoken of in the article in the HERALD, taken from the News and Press of Missouri. But mention is made in volume 2, chapter 7, of a town being called Diahman. The locality was named Adam-on-di-ahman, signifying, it is said, the grave of Adam. Now if this place was thus named, and the name had that significance, there must have been some reason for giving it this name. Of course some will say, “If Joseph called this place by a name signifying the ‘grave of Adam’ that is enough to prove him a false prophet." But let us see if it would. In Genesis 5:5 is given the account of Adam's death. Now turn to chapter 10 (King James, Version) and read: "And unto Eber were born two sons: the name of one was Peleg [marginal definition: division]; for in his days was the earth divided."

This Eber was one of the descendants of Shem, and in his day occurred a division of the earth commemorated in the name of his son Peleg. Of what did that division consist? Was it a mere dividing out of portions of the earth for the habitations of the different families? I think not. A careful study of the outline of the two continents seems to indicate that once they were united; for where there is a jutting out from the Western Continent eastward, there is a corresponding indentation on the western coast of the Eastern Continent. I remember having my attention called to this when a child, also of reading an account of legends that existed among some of the island tribes of Indians in the West Indies, of a time when there was a separation from the main land and a portion of the land sank. So it appears according to the legend that the earth was rent in twain and separated into two large parts, that a portion between these larger parts sank, and the higher portions or mountains of this sunken part are the island chains of the West Indies, and the other islands in that section. And I think investigation will prove this theory correct.

Now in the book of Jasher (reference to which is made twice in the Bible) we find the record of Peleg's birth, and in connection these words, "The name of one was Peleg, for in his days the sons of men were divided and in the latter days the earth was divided, and the name of the second was Yoktan [Joktan in the Bible] meaning that in his days the lives of the sons of men were diminished or lessened." As it was so near the time of this great event, the division of the earth, when this record was made, there was no need of giving any explanation of the event. It was commemorated in his name Peleg, and no one would question why, who remembered the occurrence.

Now I have not much doubt in my mind, but that when the secret things are all made manifest, which they will be, when all the hidden truths shall "spring out of the earth" that it will be proven that America was indeed "the cradle of the race." And if Joseph made the claim to having the burial-place of Adam revealed, as being in this country, it may be only a stronger proof of his prophetic calling. I would like to know though where we can find the account of his giving that revelation.

The book of Jasher says Adam was buried in the cave which God had told him. "Enoch and Methusaleh buried him with great pomp, as at the burial of a king, in the cave which God had told him."—Jasher 3:14.

Is there any evidence of any cave near Adam-ondiahman? This article in the HERALD says "The hillock that is said to be crowned as to its summit with the grave is terraced, seemingly by nature, perhaps by man, the gradations being regular," etc. This hillock may only be the accumulations of the soil of centuries, yes, of ages, over what was the pyramidal mound erected in memory of our father Adam.

But as the Editor of the HERALD says, whether this is true or not it does not affect "our work or faith in the gospel message." Yet if proof ever should come to light that here indeed was Adam's grave, how wonderfully clear would it make it, that Joseph's claim was of divine origin, that is, if he ever did claim this spot to be the grave of Adam.

The following is the article clipped from News-Leader, which shows that some one besides a Latter Day Saint is thinking on this line:

A Des Moines (Iowa) telegram printed in the New York Herald says:

That the Garden of Eden was located in Iowa is asserted by Burton E. Sweet, a leading attorney and representative from Bremer County. He has come to the conclusion that Adam and Eve lived between the Mississippi and the Missouri. When Mr. Sweet goes before the voters next time to ask their support it may be on this issue. Certainly he has startled his constituents, as well as all Iowans.

Here is Mr. Sweet's statement on the subject, as given at a meeting of Bremer County old settlers:

"The other day I read in Holy Writ of the Garden of Eden. It is described as being a place where every tree and herb grew that was pleasant to the sight of man and good for food. It is also recorded that a river flowed through it, which was divided into four heads, or sources. It is described as an ideal spot for the abode of men.

"That such a place did exist on the earth at one time the Bible is abundant proof. Where it existed is lost in the night of antiquity. Even tradition can not assist us in finding it. As to where it was located scientists are silent. Theologians long ago abandoned looking for it. They now say: 'We know it did exist, but just when and where it existed we do not know, and neither are we concerned, for when it existed and where it existed does not matter.'

"AMERICA FIRST DRY LAND.

"By strange coincidence a few days ago I picked up a book written by Agassiz, and to my surprise I read the following:

"First-born among the continents, though so much later in culture and civilization than some of more recent birth, America, so far as her physical history is concerned, has been falsely denominated the "new world." Hers was the first dry land lifted out of the water; hers were the first shores washed by the ocean that enveloped all the earth besides, and while Europe was represented only by islands rising here and there above the sea, America is already stretched one unbroken line of land from Nova Scotia to the far West."

"After I read this I began to do a little thinking on my own hook. I reasoned that the Garden of Eden could not have been located in Asia, in Africa, or on the banks of the wandering Nile. Neither could it have been located in Europe or any of the small islands of the sea.

"Then I remembered that it was written in Holy Writ that the waters were gathered in one place, that the dry land appeared and the Garden of Eden was upon that dry land. I reasoned that if the Garden of Eden was upon the first dry land it must have been located upon the North American Continent.

"Having located it upon this Continent, I began to look for evidence to determine if possible just where it was on this Continent. I again glanced in the pages of Holy Writ and I found that a river ran through the Garden of Eden and thence it was parted and became divided into four heads or sources. I also read that one of these rivers compassed a land where there was gold, that one of the rivers branched to the east. I began to study the map of the United States. I saw the Mississippi River. I saw its three great tributaries, the Missouri, the Platte and the Ohio.

"LOCATED NEAR THE MISSISSIPPI.

"The conclusion was irresistible that it was located in the Mississippi Valley. The Missouri, which finds its source in the Rocky Mountains, compasses great gold fields. I knew then it must be in the Mississippi Valley and I asked myself, 'Where in the Mississippi Valley?'

"I knew it must be a place where trees, herbs and vegetation grew in abundance. It must have a healthy and invigorating climate. It must be a place upon which nature had showered the benefits and bounties of heaven. It must be a place lighted by the smile of God.

"I then turned my attention to Iowa—Iowa, bounded by two rivers. Surely if there ever was a spot specially prepared for the abode of man it is right here in our own State and county. We have a soil two to four feet deep which is not excelled in the world. We have less waste land than any other State in the Union. We have building-rock strewn all over our farms in just the right amount to meet the demands of building purposes. Part of our great State is underlaid with coal to supply us with fuel.

"Each season our farms are covered with waving golden grain and with corn-fields as far as the eye can reach. And we behold each season cattle grazing on our thousand hills.

"Is it any wonder then that, standing here in the presence of all these resources, with all these evidences of prosperity, of thrift, of happiness and enterprise about me, I would naturally draw the conclusion that Iowa was the Garden of Eden?"

Now, if this reasoning be true concerning America being the first-born of the continents, then the rest follows as a natural sequence. And it would be reasonable to suppose that Adam would be buried within reach of the garden. He was driven out we know, but of where he went we have no proof other than these words in Jasher: "And the Lord God drove them that day from the Garden of Eden to till the ground from which they were taken, and they went and dwelt at the east of the Garden of Eden; and Adam knew his wife and she conceived and she bore two sons and three daughters, and she called the name of the first-born Cain, saying, 'I have obtained a man from the Lord,' and the name of the other she called Abel, for she said, 'In vanity we came into the earth, and in vanity we shall be taken from it.'"—Jasher 1: 12, 13.

This book of Jasher throws much light on the Scriptures, and at present I am writing an article showing the correspondence with the Bible, and especially with the Inspired Translation, that I believe will be of general interest to the Saints, and shall offer it for publication as soon as ready.

"WHAT ABOUT THESE IFS"?

I have noticed several times in the HERALD recently where objections have been raised to the use of the subjunctive "if." To object to its use in the sense in which the brethren call our attention, is like the man beating the air to defeat his antagonist. Thus using the word by no means reserves a doubt in the mind of the one using it unless otherwise qualified. In the sense objected to, the word is invariably used with reference to the doubt in the minds to whom the language is directed. Scarcely do we address an audience but the majority are unbelievers, on many of the points at least. What is an indisputable fact with us may be an unproven proposition to many of our auditors, hence the color of the "ifs" are reflected toward them in their dubiety, and in no sense does it commit the speaker to any doubt or uncertainty in the correctness of the position.

To take the ground that the employment of this little word expresses a doubt would be to admit Jesus Christ was in doubt on a great many propositions upon which rests the eternal hope and exaltation of his people, and to these "ifs," the caption of this article is directed. Note the following: "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again."—John 14:3.

In the minds of the true believer were, or are there any doubts as to the coming again of Jesus Christ? Or will any suppose there was entertained any doubt in the Christ mind as to his going away or returning to earth? We think not, hence the peculiarity of the expression had reference to those who did entertain doubts of his coming again. "If God be glorified in him."—Ibid., 13:32. Is there any doubt in the mind of the Christian as to whether God was glorified in Christ? If so the preceding verse should for ever clear the matter. "If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet," etc. To all Bible believers there is no doubt as to Christ having washed the disciples' feet, although the doubtful word is here used. "If I, by the power of God, cast out devils," etc. There are positively no doubts in our minds as to the power by which Christ cast out devils, but we find him again using the doubtful term, as some would construe it. The doubt was with the unbelieving Pharisees. "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me." Was there ever a doubt in the minds of the true believer, or Christ himself, that he would not be lifted up? I presume were he down here among the present-day critics he would have been more careful,—perhaps would have said, When I be lifted up, or, When I am lifted up.

The word is often used as a test, to wit: "If ye love me keep my commandments." "If ye therefore have not been faithful in the unrighteous," etc. "If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed." "If thou wilt be perfect go and sell that thou hast and follow me." The two last quotations may be taken as conditional conjunctions.

This error (?) was not corrected by the scholarly Paul. (See 1 Corinthians, chapter 15.) "Now if Christ be preached."—Verse 12. "But if there be no resurrection."—Verse 13. "And if Christ be not risen."—Verse 14. "And if Christ be not raised."—Verse 17. In none of these expressions could it be honestly charged that the apostle was a little shaky in his faith in the risen Christ. He, however, was addressing unbelieving audiences, or writing to those among whom some entertained doubts as to the resurrection of Christ.

Genung, in his outlines of rhetoric, gives the following rule for the use of the subjunctive mode:

The indicative mode, as its name implies, is used to indicate what really is, or what we regard as a fact. We may use it after a conditional conjunction like if or through, but when we do we regard the condition as actual. By this rule that which may seem otherwise doubtful, partakes of the nature of the indicative mode, expressing a positive fact.

He uses this illustration: "If Mr. B is present will he please come forward." His presence is an assured fact by virtue of the latter part of the sentence. So it is with many of the expressions used in reference to the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith, etc. Should I say, if the Book of Mormon is true it proves Jesus Christ to be the Son of God, I simply frame the language from the idea entertained by the opponent. The latter part of the sentence being an established fact changes the first part to the indicative. What is the difference in one using the expression, "If Joseph Smith was a prophet of God," or affirming in public debate the proposition, "Is Joseph Smith a prophet of God?" They are both unproven propositions in the minds of many. Let us not pander too much to wiseacres.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Selecting the Pleasant Things of Life.

One of the secrets of happiness is found in the habitual emphasis of pleasant things and the persistent casting aside of all malign elements. For men make their own world. We have read of a horticulturist who could not walk through a flower garden and see a rose-bush covered with blossoms without searching until he found at least one blighted leaf. There are men who can not look upon a great picture without scrutinizing every inch of the canvas for some light or shade to criticise, and afterward they recall only the blemish. But there never was a tree so beautiful that it did not have one broken bough. There never was a book so wise but that it had one untruth or falsehood. Even Helen's brow held one little blemish; and the scientists think that there is a spot on the sun.

What if a father should send his child into a garden, where every flower bloomed, to bring back roses and lilies and violets. And what if the boy overlooked all the sweet blossoms and peered around the roots until he found some weeds, wild grass, and a toadstool. There are men who go forth in the morning and give all that is best in life and thought to their competitors in business. Returning home at night, they do not bring some incident that represents wit or heroism or justice; or generosity they return jaded, fretful, querulous, critical. They remember only the disagreeable things.

Passing a pasture but yesterday, one saw the horse with mane and tail a solid mass of cockle-burs, collected in passing through the meadow, and, grasping the forelock, the farmer boy's hand must have been pierced with a thousand blood prieks. Strange example of men, who go through the days to return home at night, laden with mental burrs and moral thistles. They have used memory as a kind of bag in which they have collected sticks, toads, bugs, spiders that stand for human frailty and sin. What a misrepresentation of God's world! What skill in selecting malign elements! Surely an enemy hath wrought this injury and lent this black color to the universe. This is God's world and man is saved by hope.—Doctor Hillis.

Love's Work.

Love is not an emotion; it is not a sentiment; it is not a profession. Love is a living, active force; it is the impulse which urges to action and is found only in conscious agents. Man was made to love God and keep his commandments. The test of love is obedience. Indeed, obedience is the counterpart of love and must keep pace with it or the psalm of life will contain many discordant notes. Love which does not produce obedience is a vain delusion; obedience which does not spring from love is only "sounding brass and tinkling cymbal." "Love seeketh not her own." Love is unselfish; it is a principle of self-sacrifice. Love's work is the best.

It is related that a century ago, in the north of Europe, stood an old cathedral, upon one of the arches of which was a sculptured face of wondrous beauty. It was long hidden, until one day the sun's light, striking through a slanted window, revealed its matchless features. And year after year, upon the days when for a brief hour it was illuminated, crowds came and waited eagerly to catch but a glimpse of that face. It had a strange history. When the cathedral was being built an old man, broken with the weight of years and care, came and besought the architect to let him work upon it. Out of pity for his age, but fearful lest his failing sight and trembling touch might mar some fair design, the master set him to work in the shadows of the vaulted roof. One day they found the old man asleep in death. The tools of his craft were laid in order by his side. The cunning of his hand had departed. His face was upturned to the marvelous face which he had wrought there—the face of one whom he had loved. The artists and sculptors and workmen from all parts of the cathedral came and looked upon that face and they said: "This is the grandest work of all; love wrought this."

Beloved, we are aiding in the building of a temple. It is the most wondrous structure of the ages—man and his character. God intends that this temple shall be his habitation. We shall all learn some time that love's work is the grandest of all.—Central Christian Advocate.

A Debt of Gratitude.

How much we owe to the mothers of the world all biography teaches us! In the memoir of every great and good man the first figure which rises before us is that of the mother. We see her watching by the sick-bed, listening to the childish prayer, assisting in the childish games, encouraging the childish studies, moderating youthful ardor by the counsels of experience, inspiring hope and energy in the hour of depression, and ever maintaining—

The constant flow of love that knows no fail.

It is the mother of the family who warns and comforts and commands. It is she whose resources should be equal to any emergency, whose sympathy should unlock the sympathies of every heart. It is she whose self-abnegation must always be forthcoming, whose watchfulness must never fail, whose affection must triumph over every discouragement, and whose patience must be as inexhaustible as her affection. Her character, in a word, must combine all those qualities which the poet attributes to the perfect woman—

"The reason firm, the temperate will, Endurance, foresight, strength, and skill."

It is the mother, as a rule, who in the old house at home supplies the grace, the refinement, the beauty; who provides the element of gentleness; who inspires the sentiment of tranquility and repose. In her sweet, serene presence the father relaxes the gravity of his brow, and the rough boys subdue their waywardness of temper. When death calls her away it deprives the home of its sunshine. Day and night will come as before; spring will follow winter, and summer tread exultant in the footsteps of spring; the lush grass will thickly cover the narrow mound in the still churchyard; on the surface all will seem as before; but, in reality, the space, the blank left by the mother, is never filled up. Husband and son and daughter—all are alike conscious of an aching void; it is her inexhaustible sympathy which they miss—that fond and impartial and perceptive sympathy which drew every heart towards her—which detected every want and responded to every appeal.—W. H. Davenport Adams.

Grave on thy heart each past "red-letter day!"
Forget not all the sunshine of the way
By which the Lord hath led thee; answered prayers,
And joys unasked, strange blessings, lifted cares,
Grand promise-echoes! Thus thy life shall be One record of his love and faithfulness to thee.
—F. R. Havergal.

Contentment.

Content? Why not? When he who rules on earth
And sky my Father is. For what lives he?
As any Father, for his child, and holds all Wealth in fee for me some day—blessed day.

So I am here content—reward of Faith,
And waiting the return of him who said:
"I come again to take you to myself,
That where I am, there ye may also be."
And see in flower, leaf, or shining star—
As the radiance of his robes afar—
The glory of his majesty;
The shadow of his power.

Content? Yes, every hour—waiting, watching
For his coming, whose word shall be: "Enough,
The mansion's ready, prepared for thee
From earth's foundations." Enough for me,
What then were trials, sorrows, bereavement, death,
But "light afflictions" making "Rest" the sweeter
That awaits the saints of God. Content I am,
Biding the coming of his feet.

W. J. L., in Joyce Church Messenger.

The Joy of Living.

O give me the joy of living,
And some glorious work to do;
A spirit of thanksgiving,
With loyal heart and true:
Some pathway to make brighter,
Where tired feet now stray;
Some burdens to make lighter
While 'tis day.

O give me the joy of living
In the world where God lives, too;
And the blessed power of giving,
Where men have so much to do;
Let me strive where men are striving,
And help them up the steep;
May the trees I plant be thriving
While I sleep.

On the fields of the Master gleaning,
May my heart and hands be strong;
Let me know life's deepest meaning,
Let me sing life's sweetest song;
With some faithful hearts to love me,
Let me nobly do my best;
And, at last, with heaven above me,
Let me rest. —Rev.

Prayer Union.

Sr. M. A. Hughes, of Clarinda, Iowa, asks the faith and prayers of the Prayer Union that if it be God's will he may heal her of catarrh.

Bro. and Sr. Rannie of Omaha, Nebraska, request the prayers of the Sisters' Prayer Union, in behalf of their daughter Frances that if it be God's will she may be restored to health. She has all her life been faithful as a Sunday-school scholar, and later years in the Religio. She is only fifteen years of age and desires to live, if God would be pleased to spare her.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

Observations from My Note-book.

I attended a Sunday-school convention in my district some time since. Business occupied the morning. In the afternoon and evening there was institute work, consisting mainly of papers and discussion, the papers forming the basis of discussion.

There were no printed programs, and no previous notification of the subjects had been given. We were expected to do our thinking while we listened to the papers, and be ready to say something as soon as they were finished.

Towards the close of the program I jotted down these observations in my note-book:

This plan is all right for people who do not have to take time to think, but since most of us do, it would be better to give notification beforehand of the subjects to be considered.

Either there should be printed programs distributed among the schools in the district two weeks before the convention, thus giving opportunity to those who attend the convention to come prepared with thoughts on the subjects; or the district superintendent should write to the superintendents of the local schools, asking them to announce the nature and subjects of the program. The local superintendent might be requested to write the subjects on the blackboard that the teachers and workers could copy them off.

No one was appointed or invited to speak on the subjects. The members of the convention were expected to volunteer.

The writer had been a district superintendent, and could sympathize with the present presiding officer in his natural desire to have lively sessions. So feeling we had a share of responsibility in the making of a good convention, we tried to do our part.

At first we did not feel delicate about speaking, felt that it was our duty. But as the program wore on, it became apparent that a few were doing all the talking. If they did not talk, there was that painful silence that is discouraging to the one in the chair, and makes the conscientious member feel uneasy, feel that he is derelict, and—the few speak again and again to save the day.

Now, no matter how earnest a person is, nor how willing, he does not care to appear as liking to hear the sound of his own voice. There flashes before the mind the picture of some obnoxious individual we have known who was always advancing his ideas and opinions, and we are abashed by the memory. However smart or capable a person may be, we know that we admire due modesty and reserve in him, so we began to feel exceedingly uncomfortable between our sense of responsibility on one hand, and our self-respect on the other. We jotted down the following in our note-book:

This plan of leaving it to the members to volunteer in discussions, entirely so, is a mistake, for two reasons.

1. It compels a few to do all the talking, or see the program a failure.

2. There are members who have good thoughts, but will not speak without invitation to do so because they lack confidence in themselves, are inexperienced, or are too modest or timid. I knew this was true, for right in front of me sat two sisters, earnest teachers and workers, who never said a word in the discussions, and yet they proved my idea to be correct by the excellent papers they read in the evening. They had been appointed to write.

I further jotted down in my note-book:

Persons should be appointed to lead out on each subject, or should be invited to speak. This would remove any feeling of delicacy in the matter, and it would save the time that is lost while one is waiting to see if another will not get up. It would also distribute the talking, and bring out the timid ones.

Appointing leaders does not necessarily limit the discussion to only those appointed. After the leaders have spoken, opportunity may be given for others to speak who desire to do so. You make sure of having a general expression of thought, and save embarrassment, while you cut off none who have anything to say.

CRITIC.

Sr. Bertha E. McCulloch of Everett, Washington, reports the organization of a district Sunday-school association known as the Seattle and British Columbia District Sunday-school Association, and wishes to drop in line with the General Sunday-school Association. We are pleased to learn of the movement and gladly welcome them into the work. May God bless and guide them and help them to accomplish the good they have set out to do.

The officers of the association are: superintendent, O. B. Thomas, Carrier 35, Seattle; assistant superintendent, W. E. Clark, Bow; secretary, Sr. Bertha E. McCulloch, Everett; treasurer, Sr. Rena Van Eaton, Tacoma. Librarian not given.

By letter from our beloved brother and missionary, J. W. Wight, then at Porcupine, Wisconsin, we learn of the organization of a district Sunday-school association in the Southern Wisconsin District, with Sr. Ava Dutton as superintendent. The other officers were not given. So the good work goes on. We can heartily bid them God-speed, too. One by one the unorganized districts are getting into line. This we are glad to see as it is for the good of the work that it be so. What district will be the next?

Several persons have written recently asking how to conduct a general review in the Sunday-school to make it interesting and attractive. From the copy of the reply to one of them we clip the following thinking it may be equally interesting to others:

THE GENERAL REVIEW

in the Sunday-school is a very enjoyable and profitable part of the session if conducted in a proper way. And it is not very enjoyable or not very profitable unless it is conducted fairly well and with some definite aim in view. Note that the aim of the review is: 1. To review or reexamine the points in the lesson to make them clear, and to impress them upon the mind. You know we remember some things much longer than we do other things. This is because they were more deeply impressed upon our minds. 2. To stimulate the different pupils and classes to do better work. They get up a sort of good, wholesome rivalry as to who can have the best lessons. 3. It stimulates the teacher to do better work in order that their class may not fall behind. 4. To correct any errors that may have crept into some one's mind.

THE DIFFICULTIES

in the way of making the review as complete a success as it should be are several. 1. Lack of life and proper qualifications in the one conducting the review. 2. Failure to make special preparation for it. 3. There are those who want to tell everything, and those who do not want to talk at all. 4. There are some who always want to enter into a discussion upon the knotty problems, the questions upon which there is not a unity of opinion. 5. Reviews are too long and not the right points brought out.

TO MAKE A SUCCESS.

1. Put life, good cheer, and earnestness into your review. 2. Make special preparation for the review. Think what the main points in the lesson are and ask such questions as will bring these main points out. Never use the review questions found in the Quarterly for general review. They were not intended for that purpose. They are not what you want. What you want is the central truth of the lesson. The lesson or sermon taught by the text or some part of it. Ask such questions as will draw this out and you are done. 3. Do not be tedious or hold them too long. Five to seven minutes is long enough. Keep moving lively. 4. Begin with the smallest children. Give the most of the attention to them. The older ones will get it all from them, but the children will get but little from a review to the older ones. 5. Use a blackboard to write a few words or sentences on to help to impress the points brought out. 6. Do not permit continued discussion. It will do no good and much harm. Discussion before children has a bad influence on them. If there is a point in the lesson upon which there is disagreement, do not allow it to come up in review. Some will want to bring it up there. But do not entertain it. You will not settle the point and the discussion will waste time and make a bad impression on the minds of pupils. It will also kill the effect of what good you may have previously done. Long discussion should never be tolerated in a general review.

Make your work pleasant, full of life, and to the point. Enjoy the work yourself and others will enjoy it too; have a point, make it, then quit and you have done well and done good.

Letter Department.

RUNNELLS, Iowa, September 13, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am holding a series of meetings here in the Saints' church. Have been here over two Sundays, and will remain over next Sunday. Have fine crowds and good attention. I expect to trouble the waters next Sunday. Closed my sixth lecture on the Book of Mormon last night, with a good crowd, notwithstanding there is a free show in town for this week,—free part of the time as a bait. Some are attending our meetings who have never been to our church before. The Saints are taking new life. There are some noble Saints here who are alive to their duty; yet a few others who do not realize that they are asleep, without oil in their vessels. The hastening time is here; the reaping time is coming; are we ready?

On duty for the Master,

J. S. ROTH.

HICKMAN, Kentucky, September 10, 1904.

Editors Herald: The writer and Bro. J. R. McClain are here holding meetings in the district tent. We have held seventeen to date, and have announcements out for three more services. We have some hopes, too, of a baptismal service ere we leave. This is the first effort ever made to get the work of the Reorganization before the people of Hickman, and we are pleased over the degree of success that has attended the effort so far. Much prejudice has been removed and the interest is increasing. No disturbances under the tent, nor outside except a little talking and laughing among the boys. Some of the best citizens are attending regularly, and we have made a number of friends to the cause. We are hopeful that a branch may sometime be raised up here.

Bro. McClain is comparatively a new man in the missionary field, but is quite an able defender of the faith, and bids fair to develop into a splendid worker for the church. His wife, who is an estimable lady, stands by him nobly in making the necessary sacrifices in carrying on the work. May the Lord bless them that they may, in meekness and humility, continue in the good work, and have great success in their labors.

Bro. G. W. McClain and his three daughters, Martha, Emma, and Gertie, attended the meetings the first week. "Uncle Wash" is a good helper, though not an official, and his daughters, with Sr. Nola Myers at the organ, did much to help out in the way of music. This was fortunate, indeed, as we have not yet earned nor received the title of "Sweet singer in Israel." I must not forget to mention the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Sexton, whose hospitality could not have been greater if they had been members of the church. May God reward them abundantly is my prayer.

Sr. Carrie Pickles, a sister of my colaborer, lives here, and only for the fact that her home environments are such that she can not do it, she would be more than willing to aid the gospel cause in the same way as those referred to above. Unfortunately her husband is strongly prejudiced against the work, and objects to her aiding as she would like to do. But God knows the willingness of her heart and will give rewards accordingly.

Brn. W. R. Smith and S. H. Fields report success at India, Tennessee, where four were baptized during the tent-meetings there. Bro. C. L. Snow reports seven baptisms in Eastern Tennessee, with good interest manifest on the part of others. Brn. Metcalf and William H. Kelley were at Broadhead, Kentucky, opening up new fields, at last accounts, while Brn. W. L. and W. J. Booker are battling away in the gulf coast region. I hear that Bro. H. E. Moler is holding open-air meetings on the streets of Fulton. May he have success. We are soon to lose him from this field, at least for a time, for which we are sorry.

Unless otherwise advised, will all the missionaries in the Southeastern Mission please send reports to me at 1116 West Electric Street, Independence, Missouri, promptly on October 1.

May Zion's glory increase, and her peace have no end.

In bonds,

T. C. KELLEY.

GOLDFIELD, Colorado, September 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: It always gives me so much pleasure to read the letters and testimonies of God's children, and I sometimes think even where we are isolated from God's people we still have a chance through the church papers to bear our testimonies.

I feel that I am one of the weakest of God's children. But I am striving harder to do his will than ever in the past. Sometimes the shadow of darkness engulfs our pathway until we almost feel like giving up, but God through his infinite wisdom and mercies has given such promises to his children that when we read them we feel more like pressing on and on that we may reap the reward that God has promised to us on condition of our faithfulness.

I have just returned from the east where I attended one of the best reunions I ever attended since belonging to the church. It was held at Berry's Ferry, Indian Territory, in the Spring River District. I had the pleasure of meeting many of the Saints that I had not seen for years. The reunion proved a grand success not only in encouraging the Saints to press on, but also bringing souls into God's kingdom. The Spirit of the Master was felt at every service in such a degree that it made us think of the good song, "'Tis good to be a saint in latter days."

While there I received my patriarchal blessing, through which I am very much encouraged, as it is a confirmation of things spoken in years gone by; and I thank God that he has been so mindful of us as to grant us such blessings.

As I travel over this beautiful West and through the everlasting hills, as the prophet calls them, I can see the need of more workmen in God's vineyard, and I pray that the time may speedily come when the financial condition of the church will be such as to place many more in the field.

I am a young man and wish to do all for the cause I can; and I feel sure that if I live right before my Master there is something for me to do. And I wish, if it be God's will, when the time comes to be self-supporting,—yes, and even to be so as to help others.

If any of the Saints in the Cripple Creek District should happen to notice this I would be pleased if you would drop me a letter at Goldfield, Colorado. I desire an interest in the prayers of all the Saints.

Your brother in Christ,

COLUMBUS E. JENKINS.

MINATARE, Nebraska, September 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: I desire to extend through the HERALD, as president of the Olive Branch, a special invitation to all the Saints and friends to attend our reunion at Minatare, Nebraska, from September 30 to October 9.

I have had a new experience lately while seated with a Christian minister at a hotel, not knowing him to be such. Presently one of Ingersoll's disciples seated himself near us and made a strong effort to get us into discussion; but failing he challenged us both, and wished to bet five dollars that neither of us knew that there is a God, and demanded proof. My Christian friend went after supper or something else, but he said before leaving that he differed from his brother, Alexander Campbell, in several things. As for me, I had to defend the cause alone, during the little time I had before the train arrived, and I feel confident that I weakened him. I took him right to the word of God: "Hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments;" with a number of others. He did not seem to like so much of the word of God. But I must say I wondered in my heart how many of the Saints of latter days have obtained sufficient evidence to truthfully say, I do know God and his Jesus Christ. Nothing short of revelation can put one in such a position. May God speed his cause.

D. W. SHIRK.

SHAWMUT, Massachusetts, September 10, 1904.

Editors Herald: Our gospel tent has been in service here about six weeks. Sunday, the 12th, will close our efforts in tent work, as the evenings are getting too cool for comfort. Our audiences have been good, never slacking, but increasing; attention about all that could be asked, no disorderly conduct to disturb us. What the results will be the Master alone knows. The leaven is working, and the bread cast upon the waters will be seen after many days, and maybe sooner. There was a very strong feeling against us among our Seventh Day Adventist enemies (for it would be false to call them friends), for they still call us rascals and charge us with disturbing the minds of their best people, which, unfortunately or otherwise, as they or we look at it, is usually the result of the gospel message. Much of this sectarian hate and misunderstanding, however, has been removed, and quite a number who looked askance at us at first, and looked upon us as teachers of strange doctrines, are now very friendly toward us. One noble-hearted woman, A. L. Delano, whom we induced to come to our reunion, was baptized there, who with Sr. Carrie B. Brayton, whom I baptized last winter, and Sr. Florence Faunce, baptized by R. W. Farrell about a year ago, make three Saints in this place. This is a commencement; others will follow.

Two weeks ago, seeing so many young people at our tent at the Sunday afternoon meeting and having a few Sunday-school Quarterlies among us, I proposed we have a session of Sunday-school, which was favored by the majority, the result being most satisfactory. Last Sunday we held another session, between thirty and forty being present at each session. We thought it wise to feel their pulse for an organization. It seemed to meet the favor of all; so we have notified the district superintendent, W. A. Sinclair, who is expected to attend to it on Sunday next.

Associated with me in the work here are: Elder G. H. Smith of Providence, Rhode Island, and C. H. Rich of the Seventy, whose labors have been greatly appreciated, both being able young missionaries. Our associations have been very pleasant.

As auxiliaries we have had the services of Sr. C. H. Rich, with her violin, and Thomas Wilkinson of Fall River,—our reunion bugler and cornetist. These have been a grand help to us and much appreciated. Brn. R. C. Evans and F. M. Sheehy paid us a welcome visit. Bro. F. M., however, being called away at once, left R. C. to occupy for three nights. It was then the crowd came. R. C. is still the talk of the people here, and in the "regions round about." We greatly appreciated his labors and association as we do all spiritually minded Saints.

The kindness of Mr. George H. Brayton, husband of Sr. Carrie, will never be forgotten by us or our heavenly Father. He sent two wagons and his hired man to the depot for the tent, helped put it up, paid the freight-bill from Norwich, Connecticut, and has furnished us with oil for lighting, also quite a number of seats, and has given us a fine home with his family while we have been here. He has carried us to and from meeting, in fact acted the part of a saint to us. The only thing lacking is his surrender to the ordinance of God's house, and I believe the near future will find his name enrolled upon the church record. There is a good opening here, and places to preach in for miles around, and we look for good results if we can only persuade our people to make a greater sacrifice financially, so that more men may be placed in the field to meet the many demands. I must make a tour of the branches to remind the Saints of the great need of funds—and of their duty. Some do not need admonishing; others forget. Some are willful, and do nothing along this line, but obstruct the way for others; such are being buffeted by Satan in some instances.

In my last letter to the HERALD I spoke of two station agents who were very much interested in the work; viz., J. H. Holmes of Halifax and J. E. Owers of Plympton, Massachusetts. I had the pleasure of leading both the promising men into the waters of beautiful Silver Lake at the reunion. They are both rejoicing in the new light which has entered their souls. The companion of Bro. Holmes was also baptized, and the wife of Bro. Owers will follow in time.

This work had its effect upon Bro. Holmes while Bro. C. H. Rich and the writer were holding meeting in Lane's Hall, Plympton, some three years ago. To our Father be all honor.

The sudden and almost tragic death of our Bro. R. W. Abercrombie has cast a cloud over my life that I can not easily shake off. How unfathomable, how mysterious, are some of the experiences of our life. I never knew a more conscientious or honorable man, willing to devote and consecrate to the service and church of God the best he had. He lost his life while trying to promote and bring to a satisfactory issue a project which, when completed, he would lay at the feet of the Bishop of the church to further Zion's cause. We must leave it just here for the present; the future may reveal, even in this stroke, the wisdom of an overruling hand. He leaves a wife and daughter to strive to be reconciled to this sudden bereavement. May the kind Father minister to them strength and comfort.

I find Zion's Praises just the book for the work, as quite a number of the hymns are familiar to outsiders. Have sold eight copies during our services here. I am afraid this epistle takes upon it much of the "sound your own trumpet" tone, but some of us have to sound it, that the church may know we are living. Bro. John Gilbert, M. D., gave us a good gospel talk last Sunday night. May success and ultimate victory attend our work in righteousness.

Yours in bonds,

R. BULLARD.

BATSON, Texas, September 10, 1904.

Editors Herald: Please pardon my intrusion again, but this subject is so very near my heart I can not sleep until I write you. I have already taken it to God in prayer. Have just returned from church; there is only one here in this terrible place, and such a wicked place could not be easily found elsewhere.

The revival of which I speak is the Baptists' and they have a very good congregation, and preach eternal hell, and scare the people as much as possible; still some seem to be in earnest; and good men too. Oh how I long for the truth to be presented to them. It is painful to see them seeking God's ways, and being led in the wrong way. Is there no way to get the gospel before the people here? Our Savior said to preach to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.

Saints, can you imagine the young men and women going down to destruction, and no help? I do not think there is another of our faith in town. Oh, do something if you can for God's glory here. I am trusting God in this as in all else in life, so hoping we can get some one here to lift up the true gospel by God's help, I will leave it all to him.

I very earnestly desire the prayers of Saints in behalf of my husband, who was a member but drifted out into the world again. Since our little Evelyn's death he seems changed, yet will not confess the faith as he once did. Please pray for him. We have two sweet little girls, aged nine and three, and wish well for their future.

Expressing my thanks to God for his kindness to me, I will close.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. ALBERTIE NEAL.

GRANTSBURG, Indiana, September 16, 1904.

Editors Herald: The opportunities for preaching the gospel in Southern Indiana are better than I ever knew them to be before. There are more calls for preaching than can be responded to, by me at least, in the field where I am operating. This must be due in part at least to our ministers who have been laboring here. And I have felt that the "hastening time" is upon us, that the Lord is moving among the people preparatory to his advent in power and glory.

I have been very busy since coming to this field, and my labors have not been confined to branches, but in places where our work was never presented before. I have been treated with kindness. The public press also has treated us respectfully in announcing our appointments, which is quite a help to us. The Crawford County Democrat will publish next week an item in its columns showing the difference between us and the Mormon church. I have been preaching here this week in the Presbyterian church to interested crowds. I appreciate these favors. I just closed a series of meetings at Eckerty, in the opera-hall owned by a leading merchant of the town, Mr. Ott, who tendered us its use free. At our last meeting it was estimated that three hundred were in attendance. I likewise held meetings for a week in the Methodist church east of here three miles, where our work was never presented before.

The branches of the district, however, are not in a flattering condition. They seem sadly neglected where I have been. From Leavenworth, Crawford County, to Cannelton, Perry County, there is no elder. In case of sickness there is no one to help. This seems an unnatural condition for the church. I do not see why a high priest has not been indicated and placed in charge of the district. My address for awhile will be Derby, Indiana.

As ever in the faith,

I. P. BAGGERLY.

Editors Herald: Bro. O. B. Thomas has been appointed by me as subminister in charge of the Seattle and British Columbia District. All matters requiring his attention should be directed to O. B. Thomas, in care of F. W. Holman, 1202½ Seventh Avenue, Seattle, Washington. The work of the Lord is moving on very nicely in Spokane. I found Brn. T. W. and F. J. Chatburn, also George Winegar, busily at work for the Master, and the prospects for an increase in that city are quite bright. The Saints there are erecting a fine church-building which was not completed; however, Bro. W. C. Thomas with the other brethren are doing all within their power to get it ready to hold services in. These brethren with the Saints of Spokane are to be congratulated for the good work they have done together to erect a house of worship in that great city. The building is not out of debt, and if there are any Saints in Washington or elsewhere that feel disposed to give these brethren a helping hand, I can assure you that such aid will be thankfully received and appreciated by them. Send donations to G. W. Winegar, box 690, Spokane, Washington.

The conference held at Seattle, 6th and 7th ult., was in every way a success. There was a large representation of Saints present. Many outsiders attended the preaching services and all the services were graced by the presence of the Spirit. We were given a fair representation through the press of the city, which did our cause much good, as the line of distinction between us and the Utah Mormons, and our position as a church in point of doctrine and organization was made very distinct to the reading public. Brn. O. B. Thomas, T. J. Bell, and D. W. Davis have been holding preaching services on the streets for a number of weeks, and their labor was not in vain, for some were baptized into the church, and doubtless some of the seed that was sown will bring forth fruit in the due time of the Lord. We have quite an interesting branch in that city presided over by Bro. Davis, who is ably assisted by F. W. Holman, Garbitt, and Sanders. Bro. Bell was elected district president, hence he and Bro. Thomas will devote their entire time in said district; therefore we look for good results from that section of the mission, as both of these men are hustlers. At Tacoma the few Saints we have there are striving to keep the camp-fire blazing, and as an evidence of their great faith in this latter-day work Bro. Van Eaton and a few others have builded a commodious little chapel thirty by twenty-four feet. The work has been done principally by themselves. It has been a difficult task in the past to procure a building to hold Sunday-school and meetings in. They are now independent. Such sacrifice and efforts on the part of the Saints will surely bring the blessings of the Lord upon them. I stopped one day and night at Castle Rock as I passed through. Bro. Appleman seemed as jovial and as cheerful as of old. His excellent wife made our sojourn at their home very pleasant indeed. Bro. Crum with others had gone fishing. Bro. Mash, wife, and Sr. Cummings and the Applemans constituted our congregation the night we held forth; however, we felt blessed in our little meeting. I remained in Portland from Friday morning until Monday evening, in the meantime attended four services held in the tent. Not much interest manifested on the part of the outsiders.

The citizens of Portland do not seem much interested in the latter-day message, nevertheless we have some very active members here and some not as active as they should be. Bro. Kenney is president of the branch and has been very faithful but has been laboring under difficulties. I here had the pleasure of meeting with our old-time and faithful brother, J. C. Crabb. Our sojourn together was very short as he left the next day after my arrival for Falls City to look after the interest of the work there. My next move was to Roseburg. Here I was met at the station by Bro. Orson Buell, who took me by team to his house, eleven miles distant. Early next morning we continued our journey, accompanied by Bro. B's family, our destination being Lee, Coos County, about forty-five miles away, where the Southwestern District reunion was to be held, beginning on the 19th and to continue till the 29th. After a whole day's journey and part of another, over mountains and through canyons, we arrived on the Saints' camp-ground safe and sound. We enjoyed the trip, though the roads were rough and dusty. Bro. Buell proved to be an expert in handling horses, as only an expert could drive through those canyons and over those mountains without an accident to the horses or wagon. I have traveled over all kinds of roads in different parts of the world in the last twenty-eight years, but have never traveled over any that would compare with this for roughness. "The rocky road to Dublin" is not in it. These roads are in much better condition now than they were when I crossed over them last November. The reunion passed off pleasantly; quite a goodly number of the Saints of the district were in attendance. On Sundays we had quite a crowd of outsiders, but during the week they were engaged in business that prevented a great many attending meetings. The social meetings were quite good and inspiring. Two were baptized by Bro. Keeler. Many others seemed convinced, but had not the courage to obey. Perhaps they will identify themselves with the church in the near future. We hope so. Sr. Mast and her family, and Sr. Waters, did everything within their power in caring for and looking after the welfare of the Saints and to make the reunion a success; they will ever be remembered for their kindness by the ministry and the Saints who shared their hospitality. On the 29th, in company with the Bandon Saints, I arrived in this place and have labored here ever since, with the exception of two days at Myrtle Point, at which place I organized a branch and Sunday-school on the 9th inst.

By the way, Bro. and Sr. Keeler have bought them a home there and have moved their things there. We believe they will render good service to the church by being located at that point. The interest in Bandon has been fairly good. I baptized Bro. Solomon Culver yesterday. He was one of the first to open his house to the ministry years ago, and has fought many a battle for the church and at last he has become one of us. Our prayer is that he may be strengthened by the Spirit of the Lord to overcome all trials and temptations, and finally gain an inheritance in the kingdom of God. Bro. Stitt is president of this branch and district, and is ably supported by Brn. Harry and Sim Hunt and Amos Corson. We have a noble band of Saints here, also a good Sunday-school and Religio. Bro. Stitt is editor of the Recorder, and wields a great influence among his fellowmen by reason of his Christian zeal and integrity. He is wide-awake to the interest of the cause and keeps in close touch with the flock under his care. God bless and prosper his Saints in this great Northwest mission is my earnest prayer.

Yours in gospel bonds,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

Editors Herald: Like Sr. Weed, whose letter appears in the HERALD for September 7, I wish to voice my feeble protest against the—to my mind—questionable methods of raising money for church purposes. I noticed the letter from Bro. V. M. Goodrich, and what he said concerning the "numbers sold nearly three hundred" on a quilt, and I felt like sitting right down and expressing my views; for such things grieve me. I do not know exactly by what method they were selling these numbers, but it seemed very much to me like raffling, which is only a polite name for gambling after all. Sr. Weed says she feels sorry to apologize for such things. I do not think we ought to apologize. I believe we ought to say right out that we believe they are mistaken on that line, that the method is wrong, and as for us we will not have anything to do with it. Alas! that it should require courage to stand for what is right in the church of Christ; but it does, and always will, until we can see clearly, all of us, and not "through a glass darkly."

Nearly thirty years ago, before I knew much of gospel truth, while a member of the Christian Church, in Bradford County, Pennsylvania, I was one of the few who would not join in these ways of making money. I never did believe in "milking the goats to get food for the sheep," as I once heard it expressed.

Shall I lower my standard now, that I have found the true church of Christ? If what seemed inconsistent with our profession in that church, which can lay no true claim to being the church of Jesus Christ, is adopted and practiced by the church of Christ, will we not be indeed deserving of condemnation?

"Oh," says one, "we are too poor to furnish our church as we would like; we want a carpet, and new chairs for the pulpit," etc. Yes, it is nice, and I believe it is pleasing to God to thus furnish and ornament the house dedicated to his worship, when it can be done by the cheerful free-will offerings of time, labor, and means of his saints. But I do not believe that his saints should resort to such means as are too often done in the orthodox churches, to get the money out of the sinner and the skeptic, who want about a dollar's worth of fun and amusement for every twenty-five cents they may give. Honestly, now, I do not think goats' milk is good for the lambs either. Do you? It is said our characters and dispositions are affected by what we eat. If this be so in regard to our physical diet, will it not be true of our spiritual food? And we do, we can not help but imbibe something of the spirit of our environments.

"Well," some may say, "we never can pay for our organ except in some such way." If that is so I believe it is more pleasing to God to go without the organ. I dearly love music in church, but yet there is no music can excel the human voice, when trained to sing the different parts in concert. And I believe it would be far more acceptable as a "sacrifice of praise," than the notes of organs or harps or of all the sweet-stringed instruments, if they have been brought into his house by questionable means.

I once heard of a little band of Saints worshiping in a poor old building, and they were not even good singers, but they were filled with the spirit of praise, and did the best they could, each one, when all at once there joined in the sweetest, clearest notes of music, yet no one saw the new singers. No, they were some of the "choir invisible" joining their voices with those of these humble, true followers of Christ, in approval and encouragement of their best efforts.

Now, think you, if we resort to wrong means to obtain instruments of music, fine carpets, or other articles for our churches, that these heavenly messengers will honor us with their presence? Nay, verily, but rather will they turn away with sadness. I do not believe there is another grace that will draw the angel bands closer to us than humility; and true humility says, Make the best of what you have,—do nothing for show. It is pride, the very opposite of humility, that moves us to want these things that we may make a better showing among our neighbors.

The Methodist Church here has something on hand nearly all the time, two or three entertainments a week, trying to pay for their parsonage. Last Friday night it was a watermelon feast,—tickets ten cents. Little girls are sent out and taught how to beg of the young men to buy a ticket. It is to help the church;

"of course you will buy, and even if you don't go you won't mind ten cents, will you?" "And won't you please buy one, for if I can sell ten I get my ticket free," etc., and of course very few young men will refuse to purchase, and often many more tickets are sold than are used. Next Monday night it will be a trolley-car party. Any one can go that will buy a ticket; and really it often seems as if the rough and rowdy element are the surest to buy. And of all the noisy, rollicking parties I ever saw I think a trolley party would beat them. It will be nearly midnight when the car returns. About two weeks ago it was a hayride, and they are now planning for another new entertainment. That is all you can hear, almost, among the sisterhood, and they call it church-work. I believe our righteousness in regard to these methods must exceed the righteousness of these orthodox churches, or we shall be condemned. Another Methodist method of raising funds that is being contemplated now is a theatrical performance to be held in the Bijou, the actors being children of the different Methodists. They are to be dressed in fancy theatrical costumes, and be, for the time, "puppets on the stage."

Then these same Methodist preachers will thunder out anathemas against the theaters.

Another way to draw a crowd of goats and get a chance to milk them is to advertise a Tom Thumb wedding, and charge a small admission; and little tots, of five or six years old, are dressed as bride and groom, and other little ones to act as bridesmaids and ushers, and then the marriage takes place, and this mockery of a holy and sacred ordinance is called "church-work." Then there are the tacky parties where the little ones are dressed in all the old, outlandish things they can get, and to see them parading up and down the streets putting on airs as they personate old people, is a sad and sickening sight.

Oh, dear Saints, let us all give this matter due consideration, and resolve by God's help to purge ourselves of everything that detracts from the dignity of the gospel of Christ, from everything that is questionable. If we err at all, let it be in being overstrict, rather than in being so lax and careless that evil things creep in on us before we are aware.

I love the church, and I love all the Saints, and do not set myself up as a judge, but feel it is my duty, and also my privilege, to condemn what I believe is wrong for the good of the whole body, of which I am glad to be a member, though it may be I am one of the least. And I trust no one will take what I have written in any other spirit than I have felt while writing. And I pray that all wrong-doing may be seen in its true light.

May the bride of Christ stop her flirting with the world, and hasten to make herself ready, for the coming of her Lord draweth nigh.
