Editors Herald: On the way from the Southern District north, I stopped off at Arroyo Grande and visited Bro. C. E. Carpenter and family for a few days. Found them in fair health, and busy caring for the fruit and bean crops. A Methodist camp-meeting was in session at the time, so we contented ourselves with a service on Sunday evening, August 21, at Bro. Carpenter's house. Leaving Arroyo Grande, I visited Cayucas, on the coast, twenty miles above San Louis Obispo, where Bro. H. C. Powell resides. Found himself and wife strong in the faith, and ready to do what they might for the cause. Bro. Carpenter is an uncle to Bro. C. I. of the Recorder's office, and his son and daughter-in-law are with him in church relationship.

Bro. Powell and wife are quite alone at Cayucas, as others baptized there have moved away. The Swiss Catholics are taking the town and country there. We could get no audience there to preach to; though Bro. Powell tried faithfully to do so, I assisting him. Saints are much scattered on the coast, and places to preach in hard to get, and, (shall I say it, Mr. Editor?) the Brighamite elders have traveled very extensively through this country, and the actions, past and present, of their leaders and many of their members, have so reproached the name of Latter Day Saint, that it is difficult to get a hearing at all in new places.

Nor could I ever have success in going to a new place and preaching a number of times before the people found out who I was; and, besides, this course always has a bad after effect with the people; at least such is my experience and observation.

When I make a religious fight, I always want my banner, the banner of Christ, at masthead. If I can do any good, I want the author of that flag to have the honor. I do not wish the good I may do to be accredited to any sectarian flag. In that case I would only get a reward here,—none hereafter.

Bro. Luff, our missionary in charge, is wide awake, having an eye to business in his line, and is trying to push the interests of the work. Bro. Parker is well liked here, but thinks of returning to Missouri. Saints at Sacramento feel loath to give him up. He has done a good work there, as at other points, but the state of his health is such that the rainy seasons (winter) here go hard with him.

Much excitement here over the recent landing in the San Francisco harbor of the Lena, an armed Russian cruiser, and declared by her captain to be unseaworthy. Investigation now in process; as a result they may dismantle her and prolong her stay here till the close of hostilities in the far East.

While great uncertainty and disasters, bloodshed and ominous signs becloud the world's skies, may peace like a halo, and good will and divine benediction illumine the courts of Zion.

Your brother,

C. SCOTT.

Editors Herald: Since last writing we have been quite busy in our feeble way, trying to speed the gospel truth.

On the 4th inst. Elder Hale of the Utah church undertook to answer our arguments of the week previous, and he made a strenuous effort to show wherein the Twelve were to succeed Joseph Smith as president of the church, but furnished no proof, and suffice it to say that the church he represented was great in number, and that they were persecuted, and that was sufficient to prove they were right. But he feared some of the young might be led into the wrong, and hence his effort was made to present things fairly (?) before them. He then told us that the works of President Young would prove him, (quite an admission,) and further said that he never heard of President Young teaching false doctrine, and asked if any one had ever heard of such. However, he admitted that polygamy was taught by him, and that they "proved it by the law and the testimony (?), section 132 of the Utah Doctrine and Covenants."

He also said he did not think the good he would accomplish by having been there would justify him for coming. Of course there were a great many more things said, and we were there taking notes of all his strongest points.

Finally his argument was concluded, and the bishop got up and indorsed all that had been said and bore a strong (?) testimony to it.

We then asked for an opportunity to review him, but were denied the privilege of occupying the house further, as he thought the people had now heard both sides. And further, he said, "We don't want any litigation." They then sang the hymn entitled, "My mountain home," and all were dismissed to meet at the church for a ball the following Friday.

Of course we arranged for the town hall for the following Sunday evening in which to review his remarks, and were greeted with a fair attendance, notwithstanding they had been counseled to avoid the "Josephites."

Well, we touched them up a little on their positions, and especially on the false doctrine proposition, as that brought in polygamy, Adam-god worship, blood-atonement, and other abominable heresies.

During the meantime we visited Rudy, Rigby, Salem, and Lorenzo, and told them the gospel story.

The bishop at Teton City denied us his pulpit, and said we only made them trouble when we occupied their houses, as the people got all worked up and were reading and discussing the question continually.

We have an appointment out at Annis for Monday night, and at this place for Tuesday night; we have the advantage of them here as far as a house is concerned, as Bro. Jennings has a vacant house that we are now occupying. We can seat about fifty in it. We are getting the people worked up and some of them are studying the standard books. Our members are all in the harness, and defend the faith valiantly.

Those who have recently been baptized stand firm in the faith and defend it manfully, and are an honor to the cause.

May the good cause advance until all the honest-hearted are gathered into the fold of Christ, and we are privileged to enter the heavenly rest.

In the true gospel,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Patriarchal Blessings.

In a letter from St. Louis to a friend of mine in the church, there appears this item of news: "Bro. Alexander Smith was there, kept busy all the time giving blessings. Everybody I believe went for their blessing, or I should say a blessing. Some appreciate what it means, and some it is feared do not." Would not a statement of this kind start a train of thought in the mind of any Latter Day Saint? Now what I offer is a plea for our patriarchs. Are the conditions at St. Louis just now as favorable as they should be for the Saints to force these duties upon our patriarch while there to see the wonders of the "World's Fair"? Are not the numerous attractions there, so diversified, so wonderful, claiming the admiration and thought of the observer, sufficient to absorb about all the mental and physical resources of any human being?

Are the results in some instances as beneficial and satisfactory as they would be were more time given for preparation, for the instrument used by our heavenly Father to convey the blessing, as well as for the one seeking the blessing? Is it right, is it fair, to take advantage of a patriarch at such a time and occasion for a number of Saints who have come ostensibly to enjoy the World's Fair to say, "Now is the time to get my blessing while the patriarch is here"? The Lord has well named us,—sheep,—for we are very liable to follow the one who jumps the fence.

Under such conditions as these, are we not liable to go home with a document that lacks the essential features or promises, and spiritual illumination that should in our judgment constitute a patriarchal blessing.

And, we may look in vain for that which otherwise might bring us hope and comfort. There are those among the Saints who can attend all the conferences and reunions as well as the World's Fair. They have the means to do so, and it may be right they should do so. There are those who, equally as faithful and self-sacrificing, can not attend either, therefore have fewer opportunities of receiving what others receive. Provision must some day be made for them along these lines of blessing.

A brother now in the Quorum of Twelve was in doubt as to how the patriarchal blessing should come to him. He could not feel that he should go to the patriarch and request of him a blessing, and so he made it a matter of prayer; and when upon a certain occasion he was where blessings were being given, the patriarch called him to the chair to receive his blessing, and with the blessing a witness that his prayer and desire was recognized of God. I know of a similar instance, and perhaps there may be many where this desire is honored of God. Which is the right way? Are both ways right? In Genesis 48:13-15, Inspired Translation, we read, "And Israel beheld Joseph's sons, and said, Who are these? And Joseph said unto his father, They are my sons, whom God hath given me in this land. And he said, Bring them, I pray thee, unto me, and I will bless them."

This is in harmony with the foregoing experience, and the results have proven that the Lord respects the desire of the one seeking his blessing, even along the line of the ancient patriarchs. It is evident the Lord has honored both ways of approaching him. I trust however we may get more light upon this matter.

There is much could be written upon this subject, but I now forbear, for I may be trespassing upon ground outside my territory, and may be called to account. Let us be wise and considerate along these lines.

PROVIDENCE, Rhode Island.

Speckled Arkansas.

Editors Herald: The writer's voice had long since become monotonous to his own ears; he was ardently desiring to listen to other notes. With others he had arranged a program for a small reunion, a river excursion, a fish and frog fry on Cane Island. Precious souls who had long known their duty had agreed to avail themselves of this opportunity and be baptized. The assistance of Elder H. E. Moler had been secured. The time came, Elder Moler was on hand, and that which is characteristic of fickle Arkansas came also—sickness kept some faithful souls away. A sickening lukewarmness (see Revelation 3:16) hatched for others whole broods of excuses; so it was that the meeting turned out like a summer thunder-shower on the Ozarks; i. e., a local affair, but none the less valuable for that locality. Those present were not disappointed. They enjoyed a genuine treat.

Cane Island is on the eastern bank of the great lagoon known as St. Francis River, which is from one to five miles wide, shallow, with devious channels, mostly filled with a mixed but interesting growth. Here are great fields of rank flags with sharp, cutting edges, keen and hard at the point, and so dense that no experienced boatman attempts a passage. There are many acres of smart-weed, standing two feet and more above the water, which is from three to six feet deep, some stalks of which are an inch in diameter, and some of their leaves twelve inches long. Several varieties of pond-lily, fragrant and interesting at this season, are in full bloom: the mule's foot, so called from the shape of their leaves; the small, yellow, single bloom, common in all our waters; then a larger kind with a beautiful, pure white, double bloom, petals slim, pointed, and from two to three inches long, as pure as the prayer of a sinless heart, in contrast with the dark waters from which they sprang, affording a splendid object-lesson, compared to character, to a skiff-load of children who took me out to secure a bouquet. We had to pick them with great care, for if we splashed the water on one, or run our boat over one we could in no wise get it to look so pure again. Another gigantic lily beautifies whole sections of this great, slow-moving stream. It is called "Yankee-pin" or "Yongue-pin." (I can not find the name in print.) In measuring some of these imposing, creamy-white flowers they were found to be more than twelve inches across, resembling the bloom of the magnolia. Some of their leaves by fall attain to thirty-six inches across, in a perfect circle, and flat on the surface of the water; nearly all of the leaves, however, contract at the edges, or augment in the center, or both, until they form so many great, green bowls. I thought of a thousand parasols turned wrong side out; for as the water recedes they continue to stand erect, large enough to hold six or eight quarts of water. But if we put a teacupful into one it will sway over and spill,—another opportunity to teach the children. Dipping a little water from the dark stream (typifying the sinful world) and elevating it into one of these great receptacles, Oh what a wonder transformation! That which appeared so black a minute ago now takes on the sparkling, silvery aspect of mercury or quicksilver. How could I help comparing it to the mystic cleansing of the gospel? and what evenly balanced lives we must now live else "the emptiers" will empty us out, as Jacob and Israel. (See Nahum 2:2.)

The "Yongue-pin" is more than a thing of beauty. Swine thrive well, when the water is low, on the great tubers that form on the roots, and fatten splendidly on the nuts which look very like small acorns. Do you wish me to send you some of the seed? If you plant them you will wait and watch, as long as Jacob did for Rachel, before they sprout. It is interesting to watch cattle and swine gathering them when the water is still up.

We reach the channel of this stream in many places by boat through a thick growth of cypress, remarkable for its straight, tall, slim growth. I said to the children: "Surely Thompson's colt is not the only animal that has swam the river to get a drink. Stereoscopists have traveled from Beersheba to Dan, from the sea to the end of the rivers, searching for picturesque scenery; but who has given us the grotesque picture of a cypress swamp? Echo answers, who? A pen picture can not do it justice. The larger trees grow great warts on their roots, pyramidal in shape, attaining a height of four feet,—occasionally six and eight feet. They are called "knees." Sometimes twenty or more may be found from the roots of one tree. Cypress and tupelo gum grow funnel shaped, probably from standing in water. A tree, two feet in diameter ten feet from the ground, will sometimes measure thirty feet in circumference at the ground. Lumbering, hunting, trapping, fishing, and frogging are some of the paying industries followed on this great lagoon.

Do not think that I was the teacher all the time, with these prospective Hopes of Cane Island. They taught me more about the habits of some fish and frogs and turtles than I had learned in my previous life. I was interested by girls ten and eleven years old, standing erect, paddle in hand, defying the quick lurch of the treacherous canoe. This is in what is known as the "sunk lands," said to have sunk in 1812. One may see, in some of the bayous, the old timber lying in every direction just as it went down, over ninety years ago. A trysting-place for turtles indeed.

Elder Moler left for Memphis on the 18th, and the tears that sparkled in the eyes of some as they bade him good-bye convinced the writer that their hearts were touched by the fire of God's love. From thence I went to O'Bear, in the same county of Creghead, but there found myself in a prairie country. Standing in the center of the cotton belt track, facing south, and viewing a faint, flickering light, we are informed it is a headlight twenty miles away.

At present I am at my mountain home, en route to various points in Sharp, IZard, Howell, and other counties. The Ozarks are rather tame affairs compared with our snow-clad skyscrapers of the Northwest, but they are sufficiently rocky and abrupt to form a sharp contrast to adjacent prairies and dense swamps, reminding the writer of the speckled aspect of Jacob's flock and Joseph's coat.

What of the spiritual status? It is drought-stricken in the extreme. The masses have eyes and ears, but they neither see nor hear. It will take more than the thunders of Sinai to arouse this people. The percentage of church members in Arkansas is probably above any other State, but they are blind, and deaf, and without repentance. Why should they repent? No matter what their crimes, they believe they have the happy faculty of dropping from the gallows, right into the loving arms of Jesus. This doctrine is a permanent fixture in this State. A recent illustration of this fact occurred in Paragould. Two men confessed to premeditated murder. Neither were sorry for their crimes, and both, while standing on the gallows, avowed their crimes were pardoned, and that they were going up yonder to a brighter and better home. It is the legitimate sequel of the creeds that God told the young Palmyra seer were an abomination in his sight. And while the public mind continues to be so thoroughly inoculated with this abominable decoction, they will slumber on until shaken out of their shells by the vibrations of Gabriel's horn.

Calamity of no uncertain character has speedily overtaken a heavy majority of those who have fought this work since I came to this State. I find but little satisfaction in this, however, for I have prayed God to deal gently with them, and lead them into the light. I had entertained hope that they were blind, rather than vicious. I forgave them and asked God to do likewise, but it seems that he required atonement. I sometimes feel like the boy who was sent to saw off a three inch steel shaft with a short hack-saw. "I never saw a saw saw as slow as this saw saws."

But an occasional ray of God's sunlight reveals a glitter of dust, and I bear down and saw the harder, praying the while, God sharpen the saw and strengthen my arm.

Northern California Reunion.

The Saints' reunion of the Northern and Central California Districts, held at Sacramento, ended after a very pleasant session, on Sunday evening, September 11. It was not so well attended for some reason as former ones, but Saints present were cheerful and happy. They were cheered and encouraged by the voice of the Spirit, and its enjoyment in the various services. The committee of arrangements, with Bro. R. J. Parker as chairman, did well, and no difficulties arose to mar the peace of any. Unity of purpose and a desire for the well-being of all characterized all in their efforts. Brn. Parker, J. M. Terry, and the writer were chosen to have charge of service arrangements. Most of the sermons were spiritual and instructive, and the prayer services were earnest, hopeful, and edifying.

A number were signally blessed through the ordinance of administration as enjoined by the Apostle James. The coöperative table was a success at this reunion also. Five young persons were baptized by Bro. R. J. Parker.

All appointments in the different departments of the reunion were willingly accepted and carried out. The best of feeling prevailed throughout the entire session so far as we could discern, and the reunion of 1905 was voted, almost unanimously, to be held at Oakland. God's blessing was on the camp,—Saints encouraged, and a goodly number of outsiders instructed. The California reunions of 1904 have been sanctified to the good of the Saints of the coast,—also the ministry. The word of revelation, exhortation and prophecy through Apostle Joseph Luff, was at once to the Saints, encouraging, and indicative of God's intention to be glorified on this coast.

Saints should be watchful in this, "the hour" of God's judgments, in this, "the day of his preparation," for the gathering of his Saints, the punishment of the nations for their sins, and the coming of his Son, Jesus Christ, in glory.

Spring River Reunion.

Dear Herald: The Spring River District reunion held August 20 to 30 at Berry's Ferry, Indian Territory, was a series of spiritual services of a high order; the preaching was excellent, the social prayer services were grand. The reunion proved to be a spiritual feast from commencement to finish. It was presided over by Brn. W. H. Garrett, F. M. Slover, and our faithful missionary, F. C. Keck. On account of serious sickness, our beloved district president, John T. Davis, was unable to be present, and several others, also, and many were hindered on account of rain and swollen streams. The health of the Saints attending the reunion was excellent.

The Religio and Sunday-school departments were ably presided over by Bro. Ammon White. Bro. J. D. Erwin and Sr. Edna McCall acted as secretaries for the reunion. Sr. Sherwin was chosen chorister pro tem. Bro. and Sr. James and Bro. and Sr. Robertson from Tulsa, Indian Territory, were in attendance and gave able assistance in the musical and Sunday-school departments.

Twelve were baptized during the reunion. Many blessings were conferred through Patriarch Henry Kemp, and recorded by his stenographer, Sr. Morgan. The gift of tongues and revelation was enjoyed; the Holy Spirit gave words of comfort and encouragement to the Saints, filling them with gladness and peace, such as none but a true child of God can fully appreciate and enjoy. It was truly a time of rejoicing and blessing long to be remembered by many of the Saints of the Spring River District.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Mary (Barnes) Rogers, 627 Villa Street, Elgin, Illinois, writes: "Seeing by the church papers that some of the elders have passed through this place from time to time without stopping I thought it might be because they did not know there were Saints living here. There are several families, or parts of families here, and a visit from the ministry would be a treat to us, and give us renewed energy and strength to struggle on alone without church privileges. Elders stopping will receive a hearty welcome from us."

Elder L. M. Sollenberger writes from Youngstown, Ohio: "Had a splendid conference at Sharon, Pennsylvania. Bro. Fred, Bro. Greene, and Bro. Briggs did the preaching. I have preached once here to a small congregation. The Saints here seem to be united."

Abner Anthony, Falls Creek, Pennsylvania: "We expect Bro. Baldwin to come here at any time,—soon, I hope. My home is always ready and open for any of the brethren to stay. Remember me in your supplications for the comforting presence of the divine Spirit."

Keeler's expense to General Conference, not used however, and conference was unanimous in bestowing this amount upon Bro. Keeler, and so ordered. Resolution to extend an expression of sympathy to the relatives of the late David Hyrum Smith was unanimously sustained, and agreeably thereto President Terry appointed Brn. Joseph Luff, Columbus Scott, and J. C. Foss, a committee to act upon the matter. Adjourned to meet in San Francisco last Saturday and Sunday in February, 1905.

Convention Minutes.

Pottawattamie.—Convention convened at Crescent, Iowa, August 27, at 1.30 p. m. Meeting in charge of Superintendent G. F. Hough. Business was transacted in a quiet and peaceful manner. Adjourned to meet at 10.30 a. m., on day previous to, and at same place as the next district conference. E. H. Carlile, secretary.

Southern Wisconsin.—The first meeting of those interested in the Sunday-school association work convened in the tent at Madison, Wisconsin, September 2, 1904, at 3.30 p. m. Bro. W. A. McDowell in charge; Charles B. Woodstock secretary. They then proceeded to organize the district association. Sr. Ava Dutton was chosen superintendent, Bro. C. E. Gaylord assistant superintendent, Sr. Laura Ball secretary, and Bro. Ezra Dutton treasurer. Remarks by J. W. Wight and Sr. Ava Dutton on home class work. Adjourned to meet at conclusion of business of next conference.

Eastern Colorado.—The Sunday-school convention convened at Colorado Springs, Colorado, Friday, September 2, at 10 a. m., Mrs. L. A. Schmutz, superintendent, presiding. Reports from all district officers. Motion prevailed that the secretary instruct the local schools to elect their secretaries annually beginning with January, 1905. Resolution adopted that the circulating library system be established by the district. Miss Eva Powers elected district librarian; A. B. Hanson, Eva powers, Minnie Woolsey, and Louisa Fishburn to constitute library committee. An interesting program was given by the Sunday-school and Religio in the evening. Adjourned to meet at the same place the day previous to the next district conference. Mrs. L. Fishburn, secretary.

Society Islands.—Convened at Anaa, April 2, 1904, Tapu in the chair, Emma Burton and Louis Bellais associates, Taataroa secretary, E. Burton corresponding secretary. President Tapu and the first associate gave reports, after which reports of the following schools were read: Tiputa 58, Takapoto 15, Niau 47, Manihi 66, Arutua 40, Anaa 40, Raroia 20, Avatoru 46, Tikahau 35, Makatea 49, Taronia 55, Tiona 34, Kaukura 84, Apataki 22, Hereheretue 20; also reports of the officers of the above-named schools. Resolved that the remaining two of the committee on Sunday-school books, namely, Joseph and Emma Burton, prepare more lessons. The indebtedness of the schools for the mimeograph supplies and for the last lesson books was collected. Joseph Burton and Emma Burton were appointed delegates to the next General Convention, should they return to America during the year. Officers for the mission association were Tapu president, Emma Burton first assistant and Louis Bellais second assistant, Taataroa secretary, Emma Burton foreign secretary. In regard to Christmas offerings, I as foreign secretary send the names and a list of the money, but the money is given to Bishop Metuaore.

The convention was well attended, and although the report is brief the sessions were noted for interest, good feeling, and dispatch, showing that the people here are yearly increasing in the knowledge of convention work. It will be seen that the number of schools reporting this year is much larger than heretofore, yet there are five schools that did not report, namely, Taenga, Amanu, and the three schools on Tubuai. We were agreeably surprised to learn that there has been a school on the island of Hereheretue for several years, and since I have never heard directly from the Saints of that island until this year, that school has not been reported heretofore, at least by me.

The "Mahana oaoa" or song and class exercises (which did not take place until the close of conference, on account of the dedication of the new chapel and attendant feast), was good, unusually good. The opening song was the best that I have ever heard in this mission; it was not one branch only, as is their custom, but the whole singing portion of the convention sang as one voice, led by Tapuni, who moved slowly up and down the narrow gap between the solid mass of singers on each side and across the end which well nigh filled that spacious building, turning from side to side, guiding them by the motions of his cane high above his head. It was an accomplishment of which he may be justly proud.

Another pleasing feature attained was, that all the classes of children were first on the program. As the first class of children took their places in the arena, a banner with the word Jesus printed in large letters, was so arranged, that by pressing the staff in the fork of a brace, it would float just above their heads, and just as they said the last word of their recitation, the end of the staff began to settle, and lowered itself away as the children turned and went to their seats, attracting the attention of many. The classes of Taronia and Tiona had their exercises represented in gay colors and large maps, over which the teachers moved their long pointers in a lively manner and the classes kept pace with it. I think there was not a single "matutu" but that had the subject represented by a painting. Those of Tikahau not having any other available material, used the head-board of a bedstead on which to paint a representation of the different scenes of Noah's ark and the flood, and the foot-board for another "matutu." Their "matutus" draw a much larger crowd than a sermon would, and the subjects they choose are very clearly set forth, therefore all the evenings were given to "matutus" and "himenes." Emma Burton, secretary.

New York and Philadelphia.—The New York and Philadelphia Sunday-school associations met en masse in Brooklyn, New York, September 5, 1904. Meeting called to order by Benjamin R. McGuire. O. T. Christy was chosen temporary chairman and E. B. Hull clerk. Motion prevailed that the New York and Philadelphia Districts combine under name of the New York and Philadelphia District Sunday-school association. The following officers were elected to serve till the next convention. Superintendent, O. T. Christy; assistant superintendent, A. Stone; secretary and treasurer, E. B. Hull; librarian, V. Haun. The following committee was appointed to compare the rules of the two districts and report at the next convention. F. G. Pitt, E. B. Hull, and Ephraim Squire. Motion prevailed to adopt the laws of the General Sunday-school Association. Adjourned to meet in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in about three months, when a more complete organization will be effected, the date left to district superintendent.

Pittsburg.—Sunday-school association convened at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, September 2, at 2 p. m., with Superintendent Joseph Ebeling in charge. Secretaries, A. M. Thomas and James Raisbeck. Schools reporting: Unity, Pioneer, and River View. Written reports from superintendent, secretary, and treasurer, approved. District officers were sustained until next convention, September, 1904. At 7.30 p. m., an entertainment was rendered which was instructive to Sunday-school workers. Adjourned to meet at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, September next.

Addresses.

Elder E. Keeler, Myrtle Point, Oregon.

In the September Twentieth Century Home, Miss Laura Drake Gill, dean of Barnard College, discusses the ethics and the means of "Self-support for college girls." Modern business initiative has metamorphosed every walk of life, and whereas in former times the chances of college education to those of small means were obtained along the path of renunciation, nowadays there are many ways in which the enterprising girl student may earn sufficient money to largely defray the expenses of a collegiate course. "What can a poor girl do for her education?" Miss Gill asks, and answering it she indicates the means for student money-earning which the various women's colleges of the country afford.

Country Life in America for October is the annual House-Building Number, a complete manual with about two hundred superb pictures which are practical and suggestive as well as beautiful. The opening feature, entitled, "Representative Country Homes," illustrates many types for the home-maker of moderate means, what the designers charge, and rules for estimating what a house will cost. Important articles deal with "Building a House off the Land," the story of a Long Island house built of chestnut logs with local labor and from the owner's own drawings; "A New England Country Home in Ohio;" "The Philosopher who Built," which shows the success that may come of a calm foresight; "Frugal, Frivolous, and Final Floor Coverings;" "Windows and Window Motives;" and "The Finest California Patio House." While a great many other articles cover almost every feature of house-building, including such subjects as "The House and the Garden," "The Ideal Farmhouse"—for real farmers, "How to Light the Country House," "How to Fit up the Bathroom," "Remodeling Old Houses," "The Ideal Stable," and "Window Gardens." Walter J. Travis continues his series of articles on "Golfing Odds and Ends," and altogether this is one of the most wonderful and attractive numbers of this large and beautiful magazine for those who love the country.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

1. If a court of elders should be illegally appointed, who shall decide that matter and how?
  2. If a court of elders should be composed of disqualified parties, how shall that matter be decided—who shall determine that fact?
  3. If the court of elders should render an illegal decision, does either the prosecution or the defendant have the right to determine that point for themselves and ignore the court?
1. A question as to the legality of the appointment of a court of elders may be determined upon appeal to the Bishop's court. The party desiring to make appeal on such ground should make his plea at the time of the trial, and should proceed to trial under protest, presenting his evidences the same as if the court were legal, reserving his right to his appeal and providing against the decision being in favor of the legality of the appointment of the court.
2. The disqualified parties should not sit on an elders' court, and a plea as to qualification of persons to act as a court should be plead at the opening of the elders' court or at the time of their appointment, and the branch or officer appointing should take notice of the reason of disqualification if presented, and should not appoint such persons. However, if a person disqualified should sit on a court, it may be made grounds for an appeal, and the court of appeal would determine whether the plea was sufficient to vitiate the finding of the court.
3. Neither the prosecution nor the defendant in any case before a court of elders has a right to determine that the decision rendered by the court is illegal; neither has either the right to ignore the decision of the court. The legality or illegality of the decision must be tested on appeal to proper authorities in a regular way.

DRIFT OF PUBLIC SENTIMENT—A STRAW.

It will be remembered by many of the Saints that some few years ago a prediction was made amounting to a prophecy that the present President of the church would live long enough to see the name of Latter Day Saint made honorable. At the time the prediction was uttered, and for a long time previous, conditions did not seem to favor the fulfillment of such prediction. Since that time, however, circumstances have been transpiring both in the church and out of it which have resulted to a great extent in removing the cloud of opprobrium under which the church known as the Reorganized Church has suffered and labored for the spread of original, primitive Latter Day Saintism.

As a significant straw denoting the fulfillment of the prediction referred to we give the following document presented by W. C. Rolls, mayor of Dow City, Iowa, the place where the late reunion of the Gal-lands Grove and Little Sioux Districts was held, to President Joseph Smith, who was present at said reunion. The document speaks for itself. It was published in the Dow City Enterprise, and doubtless will be copied into other papers and thus be spread pretty widely in the regions round about the place where the reunion was held:

Council Chamber, Dow City, Iowa, Sept. 21, 1904.

To the Honorable Board of Managers of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; Greeting:

Whereas the annual "Reunion" of the said church in this district has for the last five years been held in "Logan" park at Dow City, Iowa, and

Whereas the conduct of the visitors at such "reunions" has been worthy of the highest praise and commendation, and

Whereas we appreciate in the highest degree the moral value of such conventions and assemblies to the town and community, now therefore be it

Resolved that we, the city council of Dow City, Iowa, in special session assembled, do hereby extend to the said "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" a cordial invitation to continue to make our city and park the scene of their annual "reunions" that we may continue to draw lessons of right and justice from the earnest teachings of their chosen leaders and be inspired to a higher sense of duty by the examples of right living set by their resident and visiting clergy, and be it

Resolved that this resolution shall be inscribed on the minute-book and a copy of same placed in the hands of the Reverend Joseph Smith, president of the said "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

[Signed],

Mayor,	W. C. ROLLS.
Councilmen,	C. O. MILLER.
	J. P. KIDDLE.
	R. WILDER.
	J. F. WILEY.
	A. JACKSON.
	B. B. KEITH.
Clerk,	S. E. RUDD.

We presume that those who had charge of the literary part of the reunion will give such general write-up of it as may be needed. In the meantime we content ourselves with saying that the spiritual character of the meeting was most excellent. It is in a prosperous region of country where the Saints have been living for many years and have won the esteem and standing accorded them by dint of their good behavior. Many of the old veterans who used to meet with the conferences when held semiannually and the reunions held since that time, have passed to their final rest. Such men as Uncle John A. McIntosh, Roundy, Alexander McCord, John Hunt, Jonas W. Chatburn, Holcombe, and Hawley, can not be replaced, but their descendants and neighbors of the faith will carry the work successfully on.

There is a noble band of young men coming into the work upon whom must necessarily rest a portion of the work to which their fathers and grandfathers have been devoted.

Bro. Joseph Clapp, writing from 1634 Grover Street, Los Angeles, California, September 10, says: "I tell you, Bro. Joseph, while I believe in progression, I think it dangerous to get ahead of the truth. We may have 'more elaborate ideas on the gospel economy,' but if the Book of Mormon was true when we first began to preach it, it is true now, and I am glad to say that it is and ever will be true."

This expression of Bro. Clapp was called out by a correspondence with the Editor in reference to some views expressed by writers for the HERALD and Ensign, in which some advanced ideas and theories had been propounded which look somewhat queer to old-fashioned "Mormonism." Bro. Clapp may be in the right, and is so far as the truth of the Book of Mormon is concerned. The truth has nothing to fear from error if truth be left free to defend itself, and hence those possessing old-fashioned theories based upon the direct teachings of the books have their remedy against progressive philosophy. There is more potency in a well-chosen scriptural text of close and direct application fired direct at a false theory than in any amount of moralizing to get rid of its result.

Bro. John W. Rushton, writing from Lydney, England, offers the sympathy of himself and others upon the loss of Bro. David H. Smith from the ranks of the living. We have received several similar expressions from ministers and others in the field and local, and appreciate the kindness in which they have been written. It may not be amiss for us to assure these brethren that the sorrow and grief of the mother and brothers of Bro. David had its chief poignancy at the time it became apparent that his mentality had been disturbed to the extent that it was. All the bitterness of grief was endured then, and the rest of the time has been spent in anticipation of the final event, which was looked forward to in a sort of dull expectancy very difficult to describe. To his mother while she lived, and to his brothers who survive her, the hope of his release from his bondage of mind was not strong, and therefore the event of his death when it occurred was not accompanied by acute sorrow by them. The blow fell most heavily upon his wife and son, especially upon the wife, who had kept herself faithfully ready to greet him should he emerge from the gloom of his mind unto the sunlight of full and free consciousness of spirit and comprehension. The church lost a brilliant defender of the faith, his relatives a brother loved and a friend esteemed.

Selected Poetry.

THE following poem by Sir Edward Dyer is one of the shortest and best digests of life's requirements we know of:

CONTENTMENT.

My mind to me a kingdom is,
Such present joys therein I find
That it excels all other bliss
That earth affords, or grows by kind;
Tho' much I want which most would have,
Yet still my mind forbids to crave.

No princely pomp, no wealthy store,
No force to win the victory,
No wily wit to salve a sore,
No shape to feed a loving eye;
To none of these I yield as thrall;
For why? My mind does serve for all.

I see how plenty surfeits oft,
And hasty climbers soonest fall,
I see that those which are aloft
Mishap doth threaten most of all;
They get with toil, they keep with fear,
Such cares my mind could never bear.

Content to live, this is my stay;
I seek no more than may suffice;
I press to bear no haughty sway;
Look, what I lack my mind supplies;
Lo, thus I triumph like a king,
Content with that my mind doth bring.

Some have too much, yet still do crave,
I little have, and seek no more.
I loathe not life, nor dread mine end,
And I am rich with little store;
They poor, I rich; they beg, I give;
They lack, I have; they pine, I live.

I laugh not at another's loss;
I grudge not at another's gain;
No worldly waves my mind can toss;
My state at one doth still remain;
I fear no foe, I fawn no friend;
They are but poor, though much they have.

Some weigh their pleasure by their lust,
Their wisdom by their rage of will;
Their treasure is their only trust;
A cloaked craft their store of skill;
But all the treasure that I find
Is to maintain a quiet mind.

My wealth is health and perfect ease;
My conscience clear my chief defense;
I neither seek by bribes to please,
Nor by deceit to breed offense;
Thus do I live; thus will I die;
Would all did so as well as I.

We give a fugitive piece below, which, though simple and quaint, has measure and ring quite pleasing and suggestive. We do not know who the author is, but a postscript at the close to some one is signed William Harris:

DIALOGUE BETWEEN A REVEREND AND A BOY.

R. Come hither, boy, and now confess.
Art thou a saint indeed?

Hast thou been duped and led astray,
By that old Mormon creed?

B. The truth I'll say, my reverend sir,
I am a "Mormon" bold.
And this, because the "Mormon" faith,
Is just the faith of old.

R. What knows a little boy like you
About the faith of old?
The "Mormons" lead all men to hell,
If true what I am told.

B. 'Tis true, that I but little know,
Yet know so much as this:
That God revealed this faith to me
To be the way to bliss.

R. No one in these enlightened days
Should dare believe such stuff;
God did reveal in ancient times,
And then revealed enough.

B. No, sir, he also now reveals;
I know of God 'tis so.
Whoever does his holy will,
This for himself shall know.

R. Come, hold thy peace, thou foolish boy,
Thou art presumptuous,
Dost thou pretend to teach what I,
God's servant, do not know?

B. You may be learned, sir, and wise,
Like many sons of men;
But mind, before you'll know the truth,
You must be born again.

R. Is it the Saints who teach thee thus
To treat a man of God?
Good child, repent, and turn away
From that deluded lot.

B. Where can I go, and learn the whole
Of Christ revealed to man?
I find that all your sects don't half
Believe the gospel plan.

R. Believe no word the Mormons say,
They are despised by all,
Join such as are respectable,
And don't remain in thrall.

B. Nay, false religions, my good sir,
Respected are by men;
But if we do the will of God
We shall be hated then.

R. Don't lose thy soul, my dearest boy,
By following fools to hell.
If thou wilt only leave the Saints
I'll promise to thee well.

B. 'Twas said by Christ, that woe to him
Who'd hinder one like me;
It would be better for his sake
To drown him in the sea.

R. Thou little rascal, now I'll go;
I'll talk no more with thee.
Believe the Saints, and go to hell,
Where Mormons all shall be.

B. The tempter's gone, and, O, my God,
To thee all thanks I owe;
For thou didst give the strength to me
To triumph o'er my foe.

THE PRESIDENCY OF THE HIGH PRIESTHOOD.

In the revelations given to the church, since the inauguration of this latter-day work, one often reads of "the presidency of the high priesthood"; and, until within the past year, I understood that all were agreed as to who was meant, when the Lord referred to this presidency. But it now appears that there is not an agreement; that leading men of the church differ as to the meaning of "the presidency of the high priesthood." I have no desire to take sides in any controversy concerning the presidency of the church in the first century, as that has already been thoroughly discussed in the HERALD'S pages by much abler pens than mine. It matters not to me whether Peter was the first president of the church or not; neither am I specially concerned as to whether James presided or not; but I believe that, in order to properly understand the revelations which the Lord has given to the church, it is necessary for us to understand what the Lord means when he speaks to us of "the presidency of the high priesthood"; and hence I am interested, specially too, in knowing whom the Lord has in mind when he speaks of this presidency. That I have already fully decided, in my own mind, regarding this matter, I shall not attempt to conceal; but I have many times found myself in error, even after I had fully made up my mind that I was in the right; hence I readily concede that I may be in error regarding "the presidency of the high priesthood." And, if I am in error, it is necessary for me, and all others holding similar views, to be set right; for "the truth shall make you free." Let us go "to the law and to the testimony," therefore, and see what we can find regarding this presidency:

Of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

In the foregoing are some thoughts presented to which I wish to call special attention:

1. There are "presiding offices" in the church.
2. The "presidents" who are appointed to occupy in those "presiding offices" must be appointed "from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods."
3. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests must be "chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office."
4. Those "three presiding high priests," when they have been chosen by the body and "ordained to that office," form a "quorum of the presidency of the church."

And this "quorum of the presidency of the church" is the presidency of the high priesthood:

And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:42.

The Twelve hold "the office of the high priesthood," and they are "presiding high priests"; high priests hold "the office of the high priesthood," and they, too, may be "presiding high priests"; but there is a "presiding office" growing out of this Melchisedec priesthood, just as there is a "presiding office" growing out of the Aaronic priesthood; and the one who is called to occupy the chief place in this "presiding office" is the one who is here called "the president of the office of the high priesthood." He presides over all the other "presiding high priests" of the church, and is "like unto Moses."

Joseph Smith was appointed and "ordained to that office," hence he was "president of the office of the high priesthood," and did "preside over the whole church." Of his ordination, and its acknowledgment by the church, the history says:

On the 26th [April, 1832] I called a general council of the church, and was acknowledged as the president of the high priesthood, according to a previous ordination at a conference of high priests, elders, and members, held at Amherst, Ohio, on the 25th of January, 1832.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 244.

He was "chosen by the body," and was "ordained to that office." But to what office? The history says he was acknowledged by a general council of the church as "the president of the high priesthood."

But he was not to preside alone. This presidency consists of "three presiding high priests"; hence, he must have two other presiding high priests to assist him. And of the calling, duties, authority, and ordination of the other two, we have the following:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, my servant, Frederick G. Williams, Listen to the voice of him who speaketh, to the word of the Lord your God, and hearken to the calling wherewith you are called, even to be a high priest in my church, and to be a counselor to my servant, Joseph Smith, Jr., unto whom I have given the keys of the kingdom, which belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood; therefore, verily I acknowledge him and will bless him, and also thee, inasmuch as thou art faithful in council, in the office which I have appointed unto you.—Doctrine and Covenants 80: 1.

And again, verily I say unto thy brethren Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams, Their sins are forgiven them also, and they are accounted as equal with thee in holding the keys of this last kingdom; as also through your administration the keys of the school of the prophets, which I have commanded to be organized, that thereby they may be perfected in their ministry for the salvation of Zion, and of the nations of Israel, and of the Gentiles, as many as will believe, that through your administration, they may receive the word, and through their administration, the word may go forth unto the ends of the earth, unto the Gentiles first, and then, behold, and lo, they shall turn unto the Jews.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3.

On the 18th of March [1833] the high priests assembled in the schoolroom of the prophets and were organized according to revelation, in prayer, by S. Rigdon. Doctor Hurlbut was ordained an elder; after which Elder Rigdon expressed a desire that himself and Bro. F. G. Williams should be ordained to the office, to which they had been called; viz., that of presidents of the high priesthood, and to be equal in holding the keys of the kingdom with Bro. Joseph Smith, Jr., according to the revelation given on the 8th of March, 1833. Accordingly I laid my hands on Ern. Sidney and Frederick and ordained them to take part with me in holding the keys of this last kingdom, and to assist in the presidency of the high priesthood, as my counselors.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 282, 283.

F. G. Williams and S. Rigdon had been called to some "office" previous to this assembling of high priests, and the Prophet Joseph says that the office to which they had been called was "that of presidents of the high priesthood." And when he ordained them he says he ordained them to take part with him "in holding the keys of this last kingdom," and also "to assist in the presidency of the high priesthood," as his counselors.

Were those two men "presidents of the high priesthood" before they were called and "ordained to that office"? If so, why were they called and ordained? Did they have any part in holding "the keys of the kingdom" before they were ordained to the office of "presidents of the high priesthood"? If so, why does he say that he "ordained them to take part with me in holding the keys of this last kingdom"? Did they have any right to "assist in the presidency of the high priesthood" before they were ordained to the office of "presidents of the high priesthood"? If so, why were they ordained to "assist" in that presidency?

It may be argued that they did have part in holding the keys of the kingdom, before this ordination, and that they may have assisted in the presidency of the high priesthood, too; but that, in order for them to assist and take part in these things as counselors to the first president it was necessary for them to be "ordained to that office": that they might have had part in holding the keys of the kingdom and assisting in the presidency of the high priesthood, in some other capacity than that of counselors to the first president, previous to this ordination. But such an interpretation would conflict with this: "My servant Joseph Smith, Jr., unto whom I have given the keys of the kingdom, which belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood."—Doctrine and Covenants 80: 1.

Joseph Smith, Jr., had been called of God, ordained to that office, and acknowledged by a general council of the church, as we have already seen, "as the president of the high priesthood"; the Lord had "given the keys of the kingdom" unto him; and, as the keys of the kingdom "belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood," F. G. Williams and S. Rigdon had to be ordained to the office of "presidents of the high priesthood" before they could "take part" with Joseph "in holding the keys of this last kingdom." And they were no part of "the presidency of the high priesthood," either, until they were thus called and "ordained to that office."

They may have been presiding high priests, and may have presided over quorums, districts, branches, or stakes, previous to this ordination; but they never presided over the high priesthood until they were ordained to the office of "presidents of the high priesthood." Presidents are presidents of that over which they preside. The president of the Twelve is president of the Twelve because he has been chosen and ordained to preside over the Twelve; the presidents of the Seventies are presidents of the Seventies because they have been chosen and ordained to preside over the Seventies; and the presidents of the high priesthood are presidents of the high priesthood because they have been called and ordained to preside over the high priesthood of the church, as witnessed by the following:

Then comes the high priesthood, which is the greatest of all; wherefore, it must needs be that one be appointed, of the high priesthood, to preside over the priesthood; and he shall be called president of the high priesthood of the church, or, in other words, the presiding high priest over the high priesthood of the church. From the same comes the administering of ordinances and blessings on the church, by the laying on of hands.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 31.

The president of the high priesthood, according to the definition given here, is "the presiding high priest over the high priesthood of the church"; and he is "called the president of the high priesthood of the church," because he is the one who has been "appointed, of the high priesthood, to preside over the priesthood." He is president of that over which he has been called to preside: the high priesthood. The Twelve are called a "presiding high council," (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12,) and also a "second presidency" (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9); but a presidency of what? Of the high priesthood? Well, if they were "appointed, of the high priesthood, to preside over the priesthood," they are certainly a "presidency of the high priesthood"; but were they so appointed? The Twelve, like any other presidency in the church, are the presidency of that over which they preside. And even if the Twelve, in the absence of the first presidency, should become "the presidency of the church," would they then be "the presidency of the high priesthood"? I think not. The president of the church presides over the church by virtue of his being the president of the high priesthood; but he does not preside over the high priesthood by virtue of his being president of the church. Presiding over the church is only one of the duties of the president of the high priesthood. There are other duties and other responsibilities resting upon, and other keys or authority given to, the presidency of the high priesthood: duties, responsibilities, and keys, which distinguished this quorum from all other quorums in the church, just as the duties, responsibilities, and keys placed upon and given to the Twelve distinguish them from all other quorums in the church. Please read this once more:

And again, the duty of the president of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42.

I give unto you my servant Joseph, to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer, and prophet. I give unto him for counselors my servant Sidney Rigdon and my servant William Law, that these may constitute a quorum and first presidency, to receive the oracles for the whole church.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 39.

Joseph had been ordained to the office of “president of the high priesthood” on January 25, 1832, and so acknowledged by “a general council of the church” on April 26, 1832, and was president of the church when the above was given.

The president of the high priesthood is made “a presiding elder over all my church”; and the burden of the care of the church is also laid on him:

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 2.

And with this agrees what the Lord said to the martyred seer. After telling him that “the keys of this kingdom shall never be taken from you,” and after giving to him F. G. Williams and S. Rigdon for counselors, to be “accounted as equal with thee in holding the keys of this last kingdom,” he said:

And now, verily I say unto you, I give unto you a commandment, that you continue in the ministry and presidency, and when you have finished the translation of the prophets, you shall from henceforth preside over the affairs of the church and the school; and from time to time, as shall be manifest by the Comforter, receive revelations to unfold the mysteries of the kingdom, and set in order the churches, . . . and this shall be your business and mission in all your lives to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

And again it is said:

The presidency of the high priesthood, after the order of Melchisedec, have a right to officiate in all the offices in the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 4.

Is there any quorum of the church, besides the first presidency of the church, who “have a right to officiate”? Or is there any person in the church, besides those “three presiding high priests,” who has “a right to officiate in all the offices of the church”? I confess that my mind is not sufficiently clear, on this point, to attempt an answer; but I shall ask you to read this, and then answer for yourself:

The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged, in his administration, by the voice of the church; and it is according to the dignity of his office, that he should preside over the high council of the church; and it is his privilege to be assisted by two other presidents, appointed after the same manner that he himself was appointed; and in case of the absence of one or both of those who are appointed to assist him, he has power to preside over the council without an assistant; and in case that he himself is absent, the other presidents have power to preside in his stead, both or either of them.—Doctrine and Covenants 99: 6.

Again, verily, I say unto you: The most important business of the church, and the most difficult cases of the church, inasmuch as there is not satisfaction upon the decision of the bishop, or judges, it shall be handed over and carried up unto the council of the church, before the presidency of the high priesthood; and the presidency of the council of the high priesthood shall have power to call other high priests, even twelve, to assist as counselors; and thus the presidency of the high priesthood, and its counselors shall have power to decide upon testimony according to the laws of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 35.

Now, does any one, besides those three “presidents of the high priesthood,” have a right to officiate in the office of president of the high council? If so, who is it? Or would that be considered one of the “presiding offices” in the church? To my mind that is one of the “presiding offices growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who have been ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods”; and I know of no one who has “a right to officiate” in that capacity, except those who have been “chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office”: the presidency of the high priesthood, consisting of three presiding high priests. If there are others, who?

Of the Aaronic priesthood it is said:

The bishopric is the presidency of this priesthood, and holds the keys or authority of the same. No man has a legal right to this office, to hold the keys of this priesthood, except he be a literal descendant of Aaron.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 8. For unless he is a literal descendant of Aaron he can not hold the keys of this priesthood.—Paragraph 32. But a literal descendant of Aaron has a legal right to the presidency of this priesthood, to hold the keys of this ministry, to act in the office of bishop independently.—Paragraph 34.

For the first-born holds the right of the presidency over this priesthood, and the keys or authority of the same. No man has a legal right to this office, to hold the keys of this priesthood, except he be a literal descendant and the first-born of Aaron.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 2.

No one holds “the keys or authority” of the Aaronic priesthood, except “the presidency” of that priesthood; and the presidency of that priesthood is the bishopric. And no one holds “the keys of the Melchisedec priesthood,” or in other words, “the keys of the kingdom,” except “the presidency of the high priesthood”; and the presidency of the high priesthood are “three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office.” No other quorum in the church is ever called “the presidency of the high priesthood,” so far as I know; neither is any other quorum in the church ever recognized or included as being part of “the presidency of the high priesthood.” That presidency is a quorum of “three presiding high priests,” chosen and ordained “to preside over the high priesthood of the church,” and is separate and distinct from any other quorum in the church. And, as the quorum of Twelve is sometimes called “the Twelve,” “the apostles," "the twelve apostles," "the traveling high council," "a traveling, presiding high council," "the twelve traveling council," so the quorum of the presidency is sometimes called "the presidency," "the first presidency," "the presidency of the church," "the first presidency of the church," "the presidency of the high priesthood," and "the first presidency of the high priesthood"; but none of these terms or names are ever applied to any other quorum than that of the first presidency of the church; unless they are so qualified as to show that some other presidency is meant—as the presidency of a stake, the presidency of the seventy, etc., etc.

"The presidency of the high priesthood" is the name of the chief quorum in the church; and to say that that term or name includes all the presiding high priests in the church, or any of them, other than this chief quorum, is to say that which is not warranted by the revelations. When you speak of the presidency of the Lamoni Stake, you do not include all the presidents of the different branches in that stake; and yet they are presidents, and presidents within the Lamoni Stake, too. And all those branch presidents, taken as a whole, preside over the entire stake; but they preside over it as branches, under the stake presidency: the presidency of the stake are three presiding high priests, chosen and ordained to preside over the stake as a whole. And when you speak of the presidency of the stake, you mean those three presidents; you do not include all the presidents of branches within the stake, who are under them. And it is just the same when we speak of "the presidency of the high priesthood": that is the name given to the quorum of three presiding high priests, who have been chosen and ordained to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and over the church as a whole. And wherever that name is used in the revelations given to the church, it refers to that quorum, and to that quorum alone. If there is any exception, a single text where it refers to any one else, or where any others are included, I can not now call it to mind. "To the law and to the testimony."

Hoping and believing in the final triumph of truth,
I am, as ever,
FREMONT, Indiana, July 8, 1904.

ISAAC M. SMITH.

"I WILL BUILD MY CHURCH."

Three elements are necessary to constitute the church of Jesus Christ. First, the covenant which was sealed unto man and made effectual, through the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ, but which was ordained from the foundation of the world. (See Revelation 13:8.) This covenant includes the first principles of the gospel; viz., faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment. These principles are always within the reach of man, when he wills to be obedient. They can not be changed nor broken on the part of God; they are eternal.

To execute these among men, and make them effectual for man's salvation, the second element of the church here becomes manifest; viz., organization. Therefore, there are offices to be occupied by man. The offices also belong to the covenant, they are continuous. As stated in the New Testament Scriptures, these offices are occupied by apostles, prophets, sevens, evangelists, bishops, elders, pastors, teachers, and deacons. The office being continuous with the covenant, the death or expulsion of the occupant does not destroy the office. (See Acts 1:25.) Matthias was chosen to "take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell." Thus Judas had no power over the office after his removal; he could not destroy the office. And this establishes for us a precedence which certainly remains for continuous generations. What is true of the apostolic office is also true of the other offices.

The third element of the church is the power of God. As soon as man fulfilled the covenant, the third element was sent from heaven, making harmony between God and man. Through man's obedience to the covenant a change was to take place in the earth, and the revelator, John, states that a power would arise "to make war with the Saints, and to overcome them." (Revelation 13:7.) Not the church, but only man; the people are only one element of the church. So when the Saints were overcome it did not break the everlasting covenant nor destroy the offices. Man ceased to perform his duty; he broke the covenant only as far as he was concerned, and had so far departed that about the year 570, A. D., God removed his power, and authority from the earth. (See Revelation 12:5, 6.) Certainly no man need expect pay unless he does the work assigned him. From 570 A. D. for twelve hundred and sixty years men would not keep the covenant. As soon as one could be found that would say, "Father, I will keep the covenant," then the Lord speaks in a "revelation to Joseph Smith, Jr., Oliver Cowdery, and David Whitmer, making known the calling of twelve apostles in these last days, and also, instructions relative to building up the Church of Christ according to the fullness of the gospel." (Doctrine and Covenants 16, introduction.) Thus when Joseph Smith said "Father, I will," and, through teaching, persuaded others, the revelation came calling them to the offices already extant, awaiting the occupant. When the offices were filled, the covenant also obeyed, then the power of God in authoritative manner was once more among men,—the three elements once more associated.

During the great apostasy, the power mentioned by Daniel and Revelation did not destroy the church, it only overcame the people as a body, similarly as individuals are overcome now. Had the everlasting covenant been broken, or disannulled, another Son of God would have been necessary: but Jesus had said, "I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." He knew his mission work; that through his death he would obtain the keys of hell. (See Revelation 1:18.) Its gates could not prevail. Thus was the covenant not only secure to man here, but the gates of hell opened to admit of the principles being preached in the prison house, "and the gates of hell shall not prevail."

ARE WE PERFECT WHEN WE COME UP OUT OF THE WATERS OF BAPTISM?

Will you kindly give space in your valuable columns for a few remarks upon the above question? I can not do justice to it myself but am raising the question in hopes that should it appear in print some one may see it who perhaps would write more fully and make it more intelligible than I am able to do. Why I raise the question is that I came across a portion of scripture one day found in Hebrews 10:14 which reads: "He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." I had heard on several occasions some of the brethren speaking from the platform, that they had never seen a perfect man or a perfect woman, and in pondering over the above passage of scripture the thought came to me, Are we not in a sanctified and perfect condition when we come up out of the waters of baptism, providing of course that we went under with a pure motive? I mention this because it is just possible that some are baptized for some other purpose than what baptism is intended for, which would not be a proper baptism. Peter said, "Repent, and be baptized" for the remission of sins. (Acts 2:38.) When we were born by the natural birth I believe we were then in a perfect condition. "Every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy."—Luke 2:23. If we were born holy I take that to mean also that we are perfect, and I believe we remain in a perfect state until sin enters our hearts; for we all become sinners more or less. This sin then is the cause of our imperfection. I believe also that we can be brought back to a perfect state by becoming obedient to the gospel. The first principles of the gospel are faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, etc. Now Peter says baptism will remit sins, and as it was sin that made us unholy, and imperfect, are we not then brought back to a state of holiness, perfection, etc., when that which made us unholy and imperfect is remitted? Peter in speaking of those who were saved at the time of the flood said, "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us."—1 Peter 3:20, 21.

Jesus said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."—Mark 16:16. Is it possible to be saved when we are in an imperfect condition? If Jesus said we shall be saved if we believe and are baptized, and Peter said baptism will remit our sins, is not that an evidence that we are brought back to perfection again by baptism? If so then I believe I have seen a perfect man and a perfect woman. I spoke a little upon the above subject from the stand one Sunday morning, and in conversation afterwards upon the same with a brother, who is an elder, (and I say this with all due respect and with no intention whatever to try to belittle our brother,) he said that though we did go under the waters of baptism with a pure motive we were not perfect or in a saved condition when we came up out of the water. And to confirm his statement quoted that passage of scripture found in Hebrews 6:1: "Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection." This scripture so far as I understand would have no reference whatever to our condition when we just came up out of the water, but would refer to those who, having become obedient to the gospel, would more or less be mixed up with the world and have to meet the stern realities of the same, as our good old Bro. Caffall used to say, and so become more or less imperfect. My ideas upon this subject may be wrong. Our brother's idea may be right; but as I understand at present his opinion does not seem to harmonize with above scripture. It should be understood that I am referring to those who have come up out of the water. I am not following them any farther than the waterside.

THE ATONEMENT.

[Used by Permission.]

Brother Lambert: I have read with much interest the little controversy between yourself and Bro. Young on "The atonement," and I am impressed with the thought that I ought to write you on a subject that has occupied my mind at times for years, but that I have hesitated to put in permanent form lest I might be thought to be presumptuous and unorthodox. But it now seems to me that my theory, while not necessarily coming in conflict with either of yours, may harmonize them. This is not written as a criticism on either, nor in a spirit of dogmatism, as I will confess I am not wholly sure of my grounds, but as a suggestion of a conviction that has been growing on me for years that one very important phase of Christian thought if not of the gospel itself has not been given the thought and consideration it ought to have received.

It seems to me that Jesus offered himself as a sacrifice, not as an atonement for our individual sins, but to atone for the sin of Adam in partaking of the fruit of the forbidden tree.

The church has taught, and rightly, that the gospel was taught before Christ. But obedience to the gospel before the death of Jesus would not have availed had his death not followed. His death was necessary to remove the penalty of death pronounced upon Adam and his posterity, and thus Jesus became the "first-fruits of the resurrection."

I understand that the gospel was preached in the Garden of Eden, and that the permission given to partake of the fruit of the tree of life was only a symbol of an invitation to render obedience to its principles. But Satan was on the alert and deceived our first parents before they fully understood their duty, and by disobedience brought about a condition that inaugurated a great war between the powers of good and evil that culminated in the meridian of time in the great atonement by which the death penalty was remitted and all mankind "saved" from the effects of Adam's transgression. This was the first salvation; the one referred to by Paul in Ephesians 2:8, 9. This was the part of the gospel referred to when the Lord said to the serpent that the seed of the woman should bruise its head. This was the burden of the preaching of Enoch, Noah, and Abraham, though they might have understood and proclaimed something of the fullness of the gospel, but I opine not much, inasmuch as John the Baptist, a man especially commissioned as the forerunner of the Christ, seemed to be deficient in its full knowledge.

Now comes the Christ. His first work was to atone; not for his own sins, not for yours or mine, but for the universal sin. But he was also to remove the flaming swords that barred the way to the tree of life,—the gospel. This was the second salvation, salvation from our own sins; not a free gift as was the first salvation, but one in which we must "work out our own salvation in fear and trembling." The first was salvation by grace, the second by faith and works. So James was right when he said, "Faith without works is dead," and Paul was right when he said, "By grace are ye saved and that not by works," since the latter referred to salvation from Adam's sin, and the first referred to salvation from our own sins.

Where there is no sin there is no condemnation. Had Adam not sinned the Christ would not have come; there would have been no necessity. For the same reason little children, having been freed from the effects of Adam's sins, and being too young to be conscious of sins of their own, would be entitled to full and complete salvation without further act on their part.

Now we can better understand John when he said of Jesus, speaking to the Jews, that he gave them "power to become the sons of God." (John 1:12.) He did not give them full salvation, still he gave them something. He gave them the first salvation by his atoning blood, through which they were granted the power to obtain the second.

Much more might be said, but with your acumen and knowledge of the Scriptures it seems to me that I have said enough.

To my mind a correct understanding of the view so imperfectly expressed above would do much to clear up the confusion and misunderstanding that many times exist with reference to the atonement.

Your brother,

WM. C. CADWELL.

LEROY, Kansas, September 18, 1904.

P. S.—Of course it will be seen that the second salvation as I have called it would not have benefited any one, even if he had earned it by obedience to the principles of the gospel, inasmuch as, had no atonement been made, we would all have been resting under the death penalty pronounced upon Adam and there could be no resurrection so that we could enjoy the fruits of obedience.

WHY IS IT BETTER FOR OUR YOUNG PEOPLE TO MARRY IN THE CHURCH?

In order to obtain a true and clear understanding of this subject, it is necessary for us to consider not merely the advantages to be had by the contracting parties themselves, but also the effects that may reach beyond their lives. We must first take into consideration the object which God had in view in instituting marriage. This is a very sacred subject, and one which bears a very close relation to the progress and spiritual development of the church, and should not be thought of, or spoken of, in a trifling or jesting way.

The chief purpose in view in the mind of a wise Creator, in this provision, was the peopling of this world with the spirits which are waiting elsewhere to come here and take up their abode in the bodies here assigned them. In a late revelation the Lord has told us that the earth must be filled with the measure of man according to his creation before the world was. The Lord has also instructed his saints that they must bring their children up in righteousness, and teach them the gospel, so that they will be ready to enter the church when eight years old, and if they do not do so, the Lord will hold the parents responsible. All these thoughts belong essentially to the subject we are considering. When young people begin to think of marrying, then is the time to begin to think of all the conditions and responsibilities that will follow. If they desire to continue to keep the commands of God during their married life, now is the time, in making their choice of a companion, to lay such a foundation as may make it more possible for them to implicitly obey his instructions regarding their families. You may think you can teach your children just the same even if your companion is not a member of the church; but if your companion also added his teaching and example, would not the united influence of both be much stronger than that of one? "In unity is strength" is true of this condition as of any other; and the house that is divided has in it the elements of opposition to the principles of love, obedience, and unity. If you can alone prepare your children for baptism at the appointed time, even then your unbelieving companion may prevent their obedience, and so God's will be frustrated because you failed away back there to make preparation for this necessity.

The farther the church of God advances, the more there is required of the Saints. And the young Saints have the privilege of stepping out of the darkness and ignorance of the past, and living on a higher and more intelligent plane of life than the older generation. If the church advances it must be because the young bring themselves more perfectly in harmony with the wisdom and intelligence of the Spirit of light and truth, by which the will of God has been revealed to his church, and will be revealed, according as we conform to that which has been given. In thinking of marriage the young Saint should say, "How should I choose in order to most nearly conform to the design of God, to help most to bring about the working out of his righteous purposes?" If they keep this thought in view, they will marry in that way in which they may set in motion the greatest influence for the cause of Christ. They will look ahead and try to prepare the way for future obedience and usefulness. They will ask God for guidance and wisdom, and be sure he will crown with happiness a union entered into under such conditions.

Our young people should be educated to bring wisdom to bear on their choice of a life companion. Of great consequence to themselves also is the blessing of having a companion with whom they can talk freely of their spiritual experiences, and of the gospel work. The soul develops by expression, and the Saint who is united to an unbeliever can not develop spiritually as fast as the one who has the continual association of one who is also advancing in the knowledge of God. The natural mind can not comprehend the things of God; the unbeliever can not understand them; consequently if you wed an unbeliever you must either fail to advance yourself, or you must suffer that inexpressible sorrow of realizing that, as you advance, the distance between you is growing greater, and that you must be separated when Jesus gathers his own; while your companion goes on unthinkingly, his natural mind not realizing the distance growing between you, as your mind, illuminated by the Spirit of God, will realize it. You may think your companion will come into the church. Do you know it? Many have wrecked their lives on that hope. We can but feel that it is unsafe to deal in uncertainties.

There are many other reasons why our young people should marry in the church, many other advantages to be gained by doing so, but I believe that those we have spoken of are sufficient to cause any one to pause and be sure he is doing just right in choosing a wife or a husband. Saints are called to make sacrifice whenever and wherever it will be for the upbuilding of the work, and it is just as possible that we may need to sacrifice our own will in marrying as in anything else, if our will is not in line with God's will. If we can not be strong enough to crucify our own will that we may do nearest right, we will suffer loss which we can not now comprehend. There is much truth in the remark I heard this morning, that sometimes a young man or a young woman may think a certain person is all he or she wants in this world, but the time will come when they will learn that they want a great deal more. May God help the young Saints to be strong enough, and faithful enough to all the interests of the work, and their own best interests, that when they come to marry, they will not marry out of the church, and thus cripple their own possibilities for usefulness, and deprive future generations of their just rights and needs.

EDUCATION.

To educate, according to Webster, is to secure instruction, "enlightening the understanding, and forming the manners." "Education," he says, "comprehends all that series of instruction and discipline which is intended to enlighten the understanding, correct the temper, and form the habits of youth, and fit them for usefulness in their future stations." "To give children," he says, "a good education in manners, arts, and science, is important; to give them a religious education, is indispensable." "To educate children well, is one of the most important duties of parents and guardians." The phrase, "well educated," according to popular, or worldly standards, has the same relation to facts as that of another phrase: "a well-dressed woman," or a "well-dressed man," etc.

The fashion of an education, like the fashion of our clothing or wearing-apparel, has been, in the history of mankind, subject to change, and is full of uncertainties. There is the permanent, the lasting, and the eternal; and the imperfect and the superficial that will pass away. A modern philosopher has wisely said: "That man that does not know the things that are necessary for him to know is but an ignorant man, no matter what else he may know besides."

To find out the necessary and the permanent thing in education should be the first object of attainment by those who seek for allignment or arrangement of their lives according to the eternal purposes of God. Professor Gilman, of Johns Hopkins University, once said: "The end of education is the development of character;" and it was Socrates who said: "The end of life is to be like God, and the soul, following after him, would be like him." "Wisdom," said Solomon, "is the principal thing;" but the difference between wisdom and an education may be of vast proportions. With God, is wisdom; absolute, eternal, changeless, because it is perfect. "Wisdom and might are his," said the prophet, Daniel. And of Jesus Christ, his best authoritative representative, Saint Paul has said: "In him are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

What are the sources of a man's education? This seems to us an important question. The first, and all important inquiry of the true people of God, and of those who claim to be followers of Jesus Christ, should be to so regulate our affairs in life, direct our time and energies in that channel, as will bring us nearer to that fountain of all absolute, permanent wisdom and knowledge; and the best education is to be had only when we are able to "draw nigh unto God" in a practical and saving sense, and to "learn of him." The opinions and counsel of men, who have succeeded in this regard, and have won prominent place in the history of God's people by lives conformed to this idea, are worth noting in this connection.

In the twelfth chapter of second Nephi, Book of Mormon, we have a forecast of the conditions in which the modern idea of education has seemed to have blinded rather than to have enlightened mankind, and where earthly wisdom, education, and learning are made the plea for denial of the need of God's counsel and instruction:

And they shall contend one with another; and their priests shall contend one with another; and they shall teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance . . . and they say unto the people, Hearken unto us, and hear ye our precept; for behold, there is no God to-day, for the Lord and the Redeemer hath done his work, and he hath given his power unto men. Behold, hearken ye unto my precept; if they shall say there is a miracle wrought, by the hand of the Lord, believe it not; for this day he is not a God of miracles; he hath done his work. . . . They have all gone astray, save it be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err, because they are taught by the precepts of men. O the wise, and the learned, and the rich, that are puffed up in the pride of their hearts, and all those who preach false doctrines, . . . and pervert the right way of the Lord; wo, wo, wo unto them, saith the Lord God Almighty, for they shall be thrust down to hell. . . . But behold, if the inhabitants of the earth will repent . . . , they shall not be destroyed, saith the Lord of hosts.

"Say nothing but repentance unto this generation."
—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 4.

The tremendous task of meeting this world-wide onslaught in their attempt at destruction of the wholesome teachings of the Book of Mormon, upon these important issues, is committed to us as a people,—a small, insignificant handful of people.

If illiteracy as regards secular education has been a bar to our success in gospel or church work that reveals God's plans, to the extent that some may have feared, then its importance should be fairly and candidly considered so that, as a factor in our work which God has particularly designated for us to accomplish, its importance may be assigned a proper place.

To begin at the head (and we have said as a body, that Jesus Christ is the head of this church) we note something of testimony as to his "secular education."

Now about the midst of the feast Jesus went up into the temple, and taught. And the Jews marveled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?—John 7: 14, 15.

For you see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called. But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty. But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption.—1 Corinthians 1: 26, 27, 30.

Wherefore, I have called upon the weak things of the world, those who are unlearned and despised, to thresh the nations by the power of my spirit; and their arm shall be my arm, . . . and I will gird up their loins, and they shall fight manfully for me; and their enemies shall be under their feet; and I will let fall the sword in their behalf, etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 34: 4.

Not long ago we read of the public utterances in a lecture on education by a prominent educator, in which, in the course of his remarks, he referred to "the imbecility of our public institutes for learning," and the impracticability of use, or application of much that was taught therein. The president of Ann Arbor University, in a late lecture, talks of "educated fools," in a trenchant and forcible manner; and the world seems to have come to some kind of an idea of change in methods and kind of instruction, in order to meet present conditions. And while we would certainly be foolish to ignore the advantages that might accrue in scholastic attainment to be had in the schools of our land, we should never forget that the sources of education that may be employed to minister to success in life are manifold; and that our best and safest education can not be had outside of moral and spiritual forces and lines of life; and that any education that ignores or discounts a true moral and spiritual life may, as Young in his "Night thoughts" has expressed it, only serve to—

"Finish faults illustrious—
And give to infamy, renown."

In the year 1833, the Lord said to this people: "Ye shall live by every word which proceedeth forth out of the mouth of God; for he will give unto the faithful, line upon line, precept upon precept; and I will try you, and prove you herewith."—Doctrine and Covenants 95:3. God's counsel should be sought by us as individuals or as a church in all matters of importance; and in the detail of life we are not likely to be over careful, I apprehend.

In 1863 the Lord said to this church: "As I have spoken to you in times past, so will I speak to you as my friends, inasmuch as you speak in my name."—Doctrine and Covenants 115. And as I have faith enough in the spiritual machinery of this church to believe that there will be no contradiction in the future as to what has been said in the past, and believing that what is proper and safe, desirable or necessary, along educational lines, for the ministry especially, has not been altogether neglected by our heavenly Father, we call attention to statements or revelation given in the past to the church of God.

Therefore, verily I say unto you, my friends, call your solemn assembly, as I have commanded you; and as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith. Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of hearing, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God; that your incomings may be in the name of the Lord; that your outgoings may be in the name of the Lord. . . . And again, the order of the house prepared for the presidency of the school of the prophets, established for their instruction in all things that are expedient for them, even for all the officers of the church, beginning at the high priests, even down to the deacons," etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36, 39.

Here is set forth the order and mind of God for an education of the whole ministry of the church, from president to deacon, and I do not understand that, up to date, any substitute has been offered by the Almighty for preparation for ministerial work.

Here, to my mind, is a solemn adjuration and counsel from the infinite source of wisdom upon these matters; a school conducted upon lines relevant to the great and particular work of God; a house prepared of God, for the ministry, by study of the best books, by faith, by prayer, by fasting; a house of glory, that can only come where the spiritual forces are combined with the heavenly powers, to properly and successfully educate and equip teachers to be sent to the nations of the earth. How much more, or better, can the world do for us in this direction?

The importance of this matter is further indicated in a revelation given in March following, section 87, paragraph 3, where the Lord closely connects the spiritual functions of the presidency with this question of education and preparation for ministerial labor and success, thus:

As also through your administration the keys of the school of the prophets, which I have commanded to be organized, that thereby they may be perfected in their ministry for the salvation of Zion, and the nations of Israel, and of the Gentiles, as many as will believe, etc. (See also paragraph 5.)

And in June following this the church was given this reminder:

Wherefore, ye must needs be chastened, and stand rebuked before my face, for ye have sinned against me a very grievous sin, in that ye have not considered the great commandment in all things, that I have given unto you, concerning the building of mine house, for the preparation wherewith I design to prepare mine apostles to prune my vineyard for the last time, etc.—Section 92: 1.

In the catechism of the church of Rome we have the following questions and answers: "Q. How shall we know the things which we are to believe?" "A. By the holy catholic church, that subsists in all ages; maintains all truth," etc. "Q. Can she err in matters of faith?" "A. No, she can not err in matters of faith." This church is a church preëminent in erudition and scholastic attainment; a church of schools, and of scholars. What are commonly called by the Protestant churches, and by us, the Apocryphal books of the Bible, are declared by this church to be "canonical," or "inspired." In counsel with God upon this point, we have received through one of those instrumentalities called by him, "the weak things of this world," the "unlearned, and despised," this simple, and yet to my mind wonderful, and truthfully complete statement:

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, concerning the Apocrypha, There are many things contained therein that are true, and it is mostly translated correctly; there are many things contained therein that are not true, which are interpolations by the hands of men. Verily, I say unto you, that it is not needful that the Apocrypha should be translated. Therefore, whoso readeth it let him understand, for the Spirit manifesteth truth; and whoso is enlightened by the Spirit shall obtain benefit therefrom; and whoso receiveth not by the Spirit, can not be benefited; therefore, it is not needful that it should be translated. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants, section 88.

"There is a spirit in man," says the friend of Job, (Job 32:8,) and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding. And without this inspiration to enlighten the soul, no Bible or sacred book, no education or scholaristic attainment in worldly wisdom can ever become truly "canonical" or "authoritative" with rational or godly minds,—a fact which can not by this church be too strongly emphasized, or too clearly understood. Hence the necessity, first, of a school of God, where education is regulated according to saving and gospel appointment for a people to whom has been committed the peculiar and particular work of a restored gospel proclamation to all the world.

The attainment of spiritual conditions secures to us the promise that "our whole body shall be full of light." What are the practical means to this end? For the ministry it would seem that the question has been practicably answered. For the laity, unless some particular avocation from a financial point of view is to be acquired, the common or ordinary branches of education as a supplement to a fair-witted and godly-minded, gospel-educated boy or girl ought to encompass success. And the land is full of local and inexpensive opportunities for those whose parents or friends are able to dispense with their services as breadwinners, or self-providers.

Gospel culture, gospel learning, and education at home, at church, by study of the "best books"; (the three standards first,) church literature, and along these lines, and under the Spirit's influence and explanation, will occupy the time to be spared from necessary mental or physical toil, or healthful recreation for ninety per cent of those whom God is calling to be his saints.

I know that extremes are to be met with upon this question; but I am obliged to note the fact that God has, for some reason, called men whose minds, while devoid very largely of worldly learning in the aggregate, were saved from the evils and errors that have, in past history, always been associated with it; and fallow ground is oftentimes more profitable as a start toward success, than a mixed crop of grain, thorns, and thistles.

If Saint Paul's record as a gospel minister is appealed to, as argument against our position, I have only this now to say: that I do not know, really and truly, how much of success in gospel ministry I am to attribute to his former scholastic attainments, or what he might have done with his natural abilities without them. I know that the record reports him as saying that he "had to become a fool, that he might be wise," and that his former educational attainments did not prevent him from the persecution and slaughter of those who had different religious opinions from himself, neither the Lord from having to knock him down physically, and blind him naturally, before he could open his eyes to spiritual facts and necessities.

If Peter and John, who were "ignorant, and unlearned" were given "all things that pertain to life and godliness," through and by "him who called them to glory and to virtue," and by and through which they obtained "a wisdom that their adversaries were not able to gainsay, nor resist," outside of worldly scholastic attainment, and history up to date seems only to have confirmed and repeated itself in this direction, may we have not fallen into the danger of carelessness as regards the attainment of spiritual wisdom and counsel direct from God, and upon the other hand, drifted toward an overestimate of the aggregate value of the world's methods of education?

Our last quotation, and the last counsel from the Lord upon this point, may be found in Doctrine and Covenants 119:2: "There is a great work to be done by mine elders, and that they may be fitted to do this work and the accomplishment thereof be not prevented, it is enjoined upon them that they shall not only be kind of heart and of a lowly spirit, that their wisdom may be the wisdom of the Lord and their strength the strength of the Spirit," etc. We can hardly suppose that God has seen fit to choose "the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty," because all the educated men and women were naturally either flat-headed or dishonest; rather must we infer, I think, that "the natural man" can not "know or discern the things of God," no matter what else he knows; and the awful demand there was, and is, to-day, for men and women to be "taught of God" along gospel lines, makes it clearly the first and foremost duty to learn by study and mastery of God's school-books and methods the lessons of self-denial of "fleshly lusts that war against the soul" and educate the children, and all to rise to the point of courage and intelligence, that will enable them to forsake all for the cause which God is willing to demonstrate to the willing brain and heart to be his power to save the nations from impending woe and disaster.

Who shall teach and warn the liar, the hypocrite, the pharisaical teacher of thousands of churches, millions of people; or who shall warn the world of the things that are necessary to be known and most important? How much time or money have we got for anything else? and what is our particular business and mission as a church, anyway? If we are to have schools and institutions of learning, it would seem that a school, whose character has already been referred to, and as provided for in the the revelations given under the conditions that have been, and are prevailing, should have received our first attention.

The work intrusted to our care is of a unique and peculiar character. It is an interruption of the ordinary facts of history, a shock, and a challenge to a world entrenched in false theological positions, affirmation, and belief. Warfare, successful warfare against this world-combination of opposing forces, must, in order to succeed, have leader, counsel, and direction other than the wisdom that lies in the enemies' intrenchments; and any undertaking that threatens hindrance to this work should be, by us, avoided. And when a school of God is organized, and a ministry thus prepared shall have borne their testimony, we are forewarned of God's terrible indorsement of such preaching; for, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the son of man." And in Doctrine and Covenants 85:25, we read: "And after your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunderings, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds. And all things shall be in commotion; and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people," etc. Paragraphs 21 and 23, of this same section, are but an indorsement of the methods of God for ministerial education, as referred to, as also the revelation given in June following, and which for emphasis, we again quote in part: "For ye have sinned against me a very grievous sin, in that ye have not considered the great commandment in all things, that I have given you, concerning the building of mine house, for the preparation wherewith I design to prepare mine apostles to prune my vineyard for the last time," etc.

As we have before said, the sources for obtaining a practical education, and a saving knowledge of the things that are necessary to know, are manifold. When King Solomon, who was about to, or had assumed the rulership over a great and mighty nation and people, was asked of the Lord what choice of gifts he would make, he replied: "Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good people and bad; for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?"—1 Kings, 3:9, I. T.

What are the principal factors for success for a boy in business, church, or ministerial work? I do not believe that the principal trouble, or hindrance to successful or acceptable work lies in the lack of a voluminous book education. There is a great deal to be learned in reading and knowing people,—who, and what they really are. And in the church of God, and among laity, as well as the ministry particularly, it is a necessity to successful church-work and harmonious relations, that these unembodied spiritual forces that intrench themselves in human organisms,—and who, unwittingly, perhaps, lend themselves to the subtle schemes of the enemy for the overthrow of lawful procedure and good government,—should be known. There is a necessity for education of this kind, locally and generally; and a prayerful and careful reading of the law contained in the books will assist in remedying present evil conditions in many places.

"Get wisdom," said the wise man, "And with all thy getting, get understanding." "The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil, is understanding." Where are the efficient teachers, or scholars, that are willing or able to teach, and be taught, in this greatest of schools? Shall we seek first to depreciate, or augment their number?

All kinds of pets love children to such an extent that even cruel torture may be inflicted by those children and the animal still refuse to use its natural means of defense, or do more than strive to run away to escape the torment. Many children, in spite of the bands of mercy and humane societies, are thoughtless, if not cruel; many are easily led, and join in the fun (?) of tying tin cans to the tails of animals, when they see the other children engaged in this cruel sport. Therefore, parents should see that the precepts of kindness to animals, taught universally in school and church, should be carried out in daily life.

Children should thoroughly understand from the first that pets placed in their care must receive food and drink at certain hours each day; that the food must be properly prepared, and that the water for drinking is of the right temperature.—October Woman's Home Companion.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

SCHOOLCRAFT, Michigan.

Dear Mothers of the Home Column: I remember when I first took the HERALD, how I looked at the Home Column about the first of any part of it. I was a mother of five children then, four at home, one married but living near. How much I enjoyed its teachings! I now think I could have written more interesting letters then than now, but like many others I was afraid I could not write anything worth reading and so did not write. I can write now of a happy home in remembrance, of good, kind children; and I am sure I have a great many pleasant memories of the past. And I would say to you, mothers, Lay up for yourselves and your dear children as many pleasant memories as possible; for we live this life but once, save in memory. Take a little time, dear mothers, to write. You may say something that will help other mothers. I would say, Let the children enjoy their innocent childhood as best they can; let them have many pleasant memories stored away to tell their children and grandchildren if they should be blessed with such treasures.

The Sunday-School Lesson for October 9, 1904.

GOOD STEWARDS OF GOD.

Golden Text.—"Have fervent charity among yourselves."—1 Peter 4:8.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

In order to make an attractive lesson for primaries, it is necessary when we can do so to make a story of the lesson. Our second primary lesson for to-day is, therefore, a story drawn from the parable of the stewards whom a certain man intrusted with the care of his property during his absence.

After the story is told, the application of the principles involved is made to our own lives.

The lesson for the first intermediates is also based upon this parable, but the lesson is not written for them in a story. The text of the parable is cited and questions are asked such as the younger intermediates may be expected to answer.

The Test Exercise for the second primaries and for the intermediates is just alike in this lesson, so that, if desired, they can read together in a general exercise.

It is intended that the advanced intermediates shall cover the first division of the lesson, but in addition there are some questions based on the text of Peter's letter as in the senior lesson.

The senior lesson makes no reference to the parable that is introduced into the lower grades of the lessons. As its outline indicates, it is devoted to consideration of various ways in which Saints may manifest that fervent charity which Peter admonished the church in his day to have for one another.

CHARITY SHALL COVER THE MULTITUDE OF SINS.

This is the rendering of the King James Version of the latter part of verse 8 of our lesson text. The Inspired Version, however, renders it, "Charity preventeth a multitude of sins."

It is true that we do not wish to expose those whom we love to public humiliation, but it is also true that, if we have charity, we will not desire to let evil exist under cover in the church, knowing that secret evils threaten the purity of the church and that the purity of the church is its life.

The rendering of the Inspired Version seems, therefore, to be preferred. The charity to be cultivated is the charity that prevents sin, the charity that deals with sin, not the charity that covers sin and permits it to remain.

The lesson points out a very important principle, however, and that is, that any action to preserve the purity of the church and to honor the law of God must be taken with love in the heart for those who may be in error.

In section 64, paragraph 2, of the Doctrine and Covenants, we read that he who refuses to forgive his brother's trespasses stands condemned before the Lord, for there remains in him the greater sin.

IN THE PARABLE OF THE PRODIGAL SON

we have an illustration of this principle. The wayward son who went far astray from the father's house and the father's teachings returned humbled and repentant and was freely forgiven by the father. But the elder son, whose coldly correct life was in outward harmony with the requirements of his father's home, was angry and jealous of the welcome received by his erring brother.

Was there not in him the greater sin, the sin of a selfish, unforgiving, unloving heart?

STEWARDS OF THE MANIFOLD GRACE OF GOD.

Peter touched upon this topic also in the lesson of this week, saying that men ought to minister to others of the gifts bestowed on them by the Lord.

The blessings of God to us are, indeed, manifold. To some are given bodily strength and vigor; to others is given mental power; to others is given temporal wealth; to others various of the good gifts of God. And every man should use his gift, not selfishly but generously for the good of his fellow creatures. The strong man should give of his strength, the wise man of his wisdom, the rich man of his wealth, all laboring together to bring in the time of unity and peace on the earth.

LET GOD BE GLORIFIED.

Whether or not Peter so intended it, there is a suggestion to us in verse 11 of the text to let God have the glory for that which is accomplished through the exercise of the gifts he endows us with. The recognition of our dependence upon God for ability to accomplish good should make us humble. There should be no disposition on our part to take honor to ourselves. It is steady there should be the cordial desire to benefit our fellow men, and that deep love to God that says in the language of One who spoke long ago, "Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine for ever."

Instead of a desire to outshine others, or to be praised and lauded above others, let us seek to cultivate the simple desire to do good in that meek and quiet spirit that God loves in his saints.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL INCIDENT.

In illustration of the need teachers of children have to be careful to make themselves understood in what they say, we relate the following incident that occurred in one of our primary classes during the last quarter.

It was on that Sunday when the lesson taught that we ought to cultivate the virtues that adorn the inner man rather than to spend our efforts in outward adornment. The teacher told her class incidentally of the remarks of a stranger who once spoke in the prayer-meeting of the branch and exhorted the Saints to shine their souls.

After telling her story, she added, "So we must remember, when we shine our shoes for church, that we ought to shine our souls, too." One little boy looked at her very straight with a pair of surprised blue eyes and asked with perplexity in his tones, "The bottoms of them?"

There was a moment of mutual perplexity and then teacher and class laughed a little when it dawned upon them that the boy understood the teacher to be urging them all to shine the soles of their shoes. No wonder he was perplexed.

Perhaps our teaching is as unintelligible on other points at times when it is not discovered. We ought to see the necessity of the children's feeling free to talk and ask questions about what they do not understand.

SYDNEY, New South Wales, August, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have spent some three months visiting among the different branches in this district, and am pleased to report things in general are slowly improving in all departments of church work. I held special priesthood meetings with far better results, than any before held in past years. The call, "onward and upward," has not been uttered in vain, but is ever present in the minds of God's children. I set sail to-day for Victoria, and other parts of the mission. My health has improved very much of late, for which I am very grateful.

I intend to urge the Saints to do their part towards paying off the college debt, as the Lord instructed.

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

CLINTON, Prince Edward Island, September 18, 1904.

Dear Herald: Now as I am about to leave this part of my mission-field for a season it may be proper to write a little concerning the work here, although nothing of a special nature has occurred. I came here three months ago according to direction, to follow up and enlarge upon an opening made by S. O. Foss last season. On account of misunderstanding of our faith it was a little difficult to get started in, but since that time I have been successful above my expectations as to getting places to preach in, and also good audiences to hear. The usual obstacles and opposition have to be encountered here as elsewhere. I have tried to be perfectly willing for the Lord to direct in this field, and have tried to follow in all things so far as I know. I feel safe in saying that I can see the hand of the One who orders circumstances at work in our favor, and friends have been raised up in many places, and there is quite a disposition to investigate our claims fairly. The gospel must gain prestige upon its merits, for nothing but bad has been said about it as a rule.

One instance I would like to mention, however, to the contrary. After I had been preaching in this place about three weeks, a farming implement man, from Ontario, came into the neighborhood and put up at the home of one of the hall committee, who told him about me and the meetings, saying "I was the hardest against him getting into the hall but finally consented, but am not now clear as to whether I did right or not." The Ontario man said "You did right. They are a good people. I know around in Canada they are a good people, and their doctrine makes good men out of bad ones," etc.

This got through the neighborhood and they seemed to warm up to me better than before. This speaks well for the Canadian Saints. I am reaping some of their good fruit. I have labored at Founds Mills, Fredricton, Bradalbane, and Winslow Road. The last opening was made through Sr. Anna Salyards corresponding with me concerning some of her relatives, and sending me the wherewith to reach them. I was used well among them, while I told them the gospel story for two solid weeks, in a large hall to good and attentive crowds. I speak here to-night for the last time, and to-morrow I go to Nova Scotia, where I will attend the conference at South Randon, September 24 and 25.

Hopefully,

H. J. DAVISON.

BROOKLYN, New York.

Editors Herald: As several of my brethren and sisters in Birmingham, England, desired that I should write them when I arrived on this land, I now ask the liberty of complying with their request through the medium of your columns.

Sr. Matthews and sister-in-law and myself sailed from Liverpool on the Oceanic at five o'clock in the evening, on July 13, arriving at New York at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, July 20. The sea was rough while passing through the Irish Channel, but after this little experience the voyage was grand.

Sr. Matthews was very sick for two days, but my sister-in-law and myself kept up fine. Upon our arrival at New York we quite unexpectedly met our worthy Bro. Pitt who gave us a very kind reception.

After a little rough experience with the government officials at New York we went to the home of Bro. and Sr. Pitt, and thence to the home of our beloved Bro. and Sr. Joseph Squire, where we were treated with very great kindness and love, as though we were members of their own family. The Saints here have given us an exceedingly warm welcome, and have cheered us along far beyond all expectations.

I may say that this country is far, far better than I expected to find it and I feel very thankful I came. The manners and customs in the majority of things I very highly appreciate. The Saints here have a splendid little church of their own, capable of seating two or three hundred people. We have experienced some good spiritual feasts. Our beloved Bro. R. C. Evans was here a few weeks ago, and he preached two sermons, which were most enjoyable.

At the district conference, September 3, 4, and 5, we had the pleasure of seeing and hearing F. M. Sheehy and Walter Smith. I have found employment with Bro. Guilfoyl of this branch, who has been very kind, for which I am thankful.

I feel stronger and better in the work of the Master, and am determined by his help to do all I can to spread the gospel.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

J. E. MATTHEWS.

CROOKES, Sheffield, England, September 9, 1904.

Editors Herald: You will no doubt be in receipt of the knowledge of my release from general church appointment for the present conference year.

I wish to say that in requesting President Rushton to release me from said appointment, it is not from lack of interest in my work, nor yet the lack of understanding of the responsibility resting upon me as a member of the Second Quorum of Seventy. I have been compelled to take this course for the following reason: When the church invited me to take the field, I left my business in order to do so. The church in turn undertook the support of my family. Now the fact is that the church has not fulfilled her part of the contract, and in consequence my family has known what it is to want; and had I not been at home with them I do not know what they would have done at times. We have had to trouble our friends for loans of money, and at the present time we are heavily in debt in consequence of not receiving our allowance regularly. This matter has caused me much anxiety of mind, not knowing when we should be able to pay our debts.

This being the state of things I decided that I would try to help the mission (at least financially) for the present conference year by relieving them of the support of my family, as I am a tradesman and can earn my living and support my family almost anywhere in times of good trade.

Now I do not wish to be misunderstood in this matter, and for that reason I pen these lines. I am delighted with my calling and the work assigned me, and though I do not think I could have had a harder mission to start with, I am quite satisfied with my experience, and when the church can resume the responsibility of the support of my family I am quite willing to stand in my office as a Seventy and do the bidding of the Lord through his church.

I have endeavored to do my part faithfully up to the present time, and witness to the church and to the world that there was a living power manifest in the everlasting gospel, that is able to restore all that was lost, and bring into being that true life, namely, eternal life, which is the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Still in gospel bonds,

Editors Herald: I will ask you to give room in the HERALD for this inclosed letter, which has been sent to me from Bro. P. Muceus, as I wish my Scandinavian brothers and sisters will remember how much reward they shall have when they but give a servant of the Lord a drink of cold water, and how much more reward they shall have if they give a servant only a few cents to help build up the work of the Lord among our poor landmen of Scandinavia. I subscribe myself for a dollar, and will send it to Bro. Peter Anderson.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

CHRISTIANIA, September 8, 1904.

MR. ANDREW JOHNSON, Magnolia, Iowa.

Dear Brother: Your letter of August 21 received containing money-order. Glad to hear from you and know you are interested in the work of the Master. I shall discontinue the Banner as you request and use the money for subscriptions here. We are in much need of means to carry on our work in this mission, as well as in the publication of the Banner. I would like to see the Scandinavian Saints in America take more interest in our work here and give us a little of their means, which the Lord has so abundantly blessed many of them with; it would be a blessing to themselves, and to the people here, where their money might be to the salvation of many souls. We are doing quite a good work here, and much more could be done if we were able to get out more literature, and support more workers. But we are glad and thankful for what we, as instruments in the hands of God, have been able to accomplish, and we are hopeful of a grand future, a rich harvest-field.

I have now a missionary in Sweden and one in Denmark, and also one in Germany, so I hope in time we may have a number of Saints in all these countries. The Lord has blessed us here and we have felt to rejoice in his goodness. May God bless you and all the dear Saints.

Yours in bonds of love,

P. MUCEUS.

HOAG, Nebraska, September 24, 1904.

Editors Herald: I came to this place on the 22d, and expected to commence a series of meetings in what is called the Dolan schoolhouse. But I found two elders of the Utah church here and they had already arranged for meetings to commence last evening.

I held a short conversation with the elders to ascertain as to how long they intended to continue meetings and they said, "Just over Sunday." So I announced that I would begin a series of meetings on Monday evening, September 26, and also I would speak at eleven o'clock in the forenoon on Sunday, the 25th, since these men's appointments were at half past two in the afternoon and half past seven in the evening on Sunday.

I went to hear these Utah elders last evening and if I am any judge, their efforts were very spiritless; but they took a bold stand in respect to their legal and rightful successorship to the presidency of the church, as established by Christ through Joseph the Seer. And they said boldly that Joseph F. Smith was Christ's anointed prophet to lead the church at this time. On Sunday I expect to make an effort to show the inconsistencies of their claims to true successorship in church presidency, and other matters that are issues between the two churches, and these elders said they would be there to hear me.

One lady last evening gave me her name for baptism, which will be performed some day next week, and from present prospects there will be more baptisms here in the near future.

Our conference held at Fairfield, Nebraska, from September 16 to 19, was one of the most spiritual conferences it has ever been my privilege to attend. The meetings from first to last were attended by an unusual degree of the Spirit. But Sunday morning's prayer service was a feast for the Saints indeed. The gifts were manifest, and even those of the world who were in attendance, were melted to tears. I am sure that the conference will result in much good to the work in that part of the field. Considering the limited missionary force of this field, I feel that the work is moving along fairly well, and can say that the brethren are working hard to push the work along. Bro. Waldsmith is doing his best along the line of his bishop's duties, and preaching whenever opportunities are afforded him. He is a tried and true servant indeed.

I desire the brethren to address me at Tecumseh, Nebraska.

Your humble servant,

J. R. SUTTON.

A Word About Graceland College.

Since it has been ascertained that the resolution to close Graceland College as presented at General Conference was not in harmony with the articles of incorporation, I find quite a number of districts have contributed toward the payment of that great debt. For some reason Southern Illinois District has not (so far as I know) been called on to contribute her part toward payment of said debt. As a missionary I do not wish to unduly urge this matter, but should our district be called on to assist, and it be in harmony with the wishes of the district, I would like us to do our part. Some get tired of this matter being presented before them. This being true let us pay it off and thus get rid of it. I know of no other proper way to do it. I for one am proud of Graceland and the Saints' Home. Some may say, "I have so many other things to look after, I have no time or money to spend on Graceland." When we look after the Lord's work we will prosper financially more than we otherwise would. May the Lord help us to do our whole duty not only in regard to Graceland, but in all other things as well, is my prayer, in Jesus' name.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

BROOKSVILLE, Maine, September 22, 1904.

Editor Herald: It was nine years ago this month that I was born into the Church of Jesus Christ, Bro. U. W. Greene baptizing me, and since that time I have contemplated a letter for the HERALD, but this is the first materialization of that intention.

I began missionary work when holding the office of priest, and the first sermon was preached in a church I had traveled sixty miles to obtain. Purchasing one foot of wood from a Christian and paying fifty cents, and having it hauled by a non-Christian for nothing, was my first lesson. And to-day I can affirm, holding one hand toward heaven, that since I relinquished all worldly aspirations to devote my life to preach the glad tidings of a risen Savior, the bitterest, most unrelenting persecution has been received from men and women who claim to be followers of that meek and lowly One who taught, "love your enemies." Surely the golden rule is no part of their practice.

In those days the Devil tried to kill me. That night, after the meeting, I rode home on my wheel. Speeding along in the dark I turned to enter a by-path, but, alas, the darkness deceived me and I plunged head foremost from the end of a bridge,—a somersault that would call forth a look of envy from the world's famous acrobats. The bicycle and I landed on our feet, and when I got home there was not a spot on my clothes. The next week Satan made a more successful attempt. I left home to hold services twenty miles away. At twelve o'clock, as I was descending a hill, the chain caught, and I fell. The next thing I knew I was looking at my hands, cut by the rocks, face likewise, and the watch said four o'clock. I had been unconscious four hours. Consulting my diary, I got my bearings and in due season reached the end of my journey. That night two awful shakings passed through me, jarring the bed. In the morning "Richard was himself again."

I think Bro. Phillips will not forget the howling rain-storm we weathered in a tent at Quidnick, Rhode Island. After retiring in our damp sheets (we possessed that luxury) and damper quilts, (the power of God must have protected us from rheumatism and pneumonia,) the rain came on in torrents. Soon the ropes tightened, and pop, pop, out came the pegs, letting in one side of the tent. We rushed out in our night-ropes and trousers (it was no time to don dress suits) and secured the ropes, receiving a shower-bath free. Trouble had just begun. It was a night of horror. Every moment we expected to hear the tent tear from top to bottom, but instead the Devil tried his hand again to kill me. I had placed my cot on the settees directly under the ridge-pole. In the midst of our greatest suspense, a swish was heard and down came one end of that iron-capped pole. This hovered about one foot above my head, and had it struck me, I should now be a part of, (as Ingersoll says,) "silent and pathetic dust."

A few miles below this place we were nightly disturbed by a mob of bigoted Christians (?), whose highest pleasure was to throw stones, and shout, and show their bringing up. Bro. Luff will remember. He preached one night in the midst of great confusion. At this time, however, four souls were receiving the words of life, for subsequently we baptized Bro. and Sr. Carroll, and Sr. McCormick and daughter. I verily believe that Pawtuxet Valley is ripe for the cleansing fire of God. The streets are lined with barrooms, and vice reigns in nearly every home.

At Norwich, Connecticut, we spent several days in searching for a spot of God's earth on which to pitch his tent. Unfortunately, we set up in a Catholic community. The smallest of children seemed possessed with the thought that they must persecute the Protestants. One morning we returned after buying some bread and butter, which was our principal diet in that place, and discovered that the children had made large rents in the tent-roof where they had slid down it. The first night our audience was composed of about one hundred and fifty of "Young America," ranging from four to fifteen. They thought it was a show. Catholics have a superstitious dread of the Bible, and though they upset everything else in the tent, at times, my book was never disturbed.

Closing the tent in September, I went to Massachusetts. At the beginning of my labors in Dartmouth, or Freetown, I had a peculiar experience that is worth relating. It began one night after I had retired. An old man, who had some claim on the house in which I stayed, said he would burn it if I did not go. I went. Then I opened meeting in a schoolhouse. After closing my service no one invited me home, so I accepted the hospitality of a dusty floor in the school building. Having read a French History, I went to bed on a piece of cloth that I had spread on the floor. About three o'clock I felt something drawing this cloth from under me. I clutched it and opened my eyes. Before me there seemed to be a large, black image which I rebuked in the Lord's name and saw it fade away. The interpretation of this experience came to me at once: Satan was to try to wrest from me the work that God had for me to accomplish, but a perfect use of divine power would defeat the evil one. Noble-hearted Saints in that vicinity to-day, who are rejoicing in the gospel of Christ the blessed, know that I was one of the weak instruments in his hands to plant the standard of righteousness in their midst. It was here I reasoned with the people that the "seventh-day question" was a sophistry of Satan, held out to keep them from obeying the truth. Poor souls, if I could only help them to know that Jesus is the Christ!

At Center Groton, near where the Friends and others are making such a foolish demonstration over "peace on earth," we preached twice in a union church. A Baptist minister got a sneak to crawl in and nail the door. I am sorry that preaching could not have been continued there. Three souls were near the kingdom.

Till I met them, I did not know there are so many good Saints in the world. Truly the kindest people on earth are in this church. I wish I could mention all that befriended me. Space will not permit. Many were willing to share the last crust with me. The riches of this life may not be theirs (the Lord knows best), but on the sanctified earth I know there will be many an untarnished gem given to those whom the Father loves. "By this you may know my disciples: they will clothe you and feed you and give you money."

In my work in Maine this year I have learned that if we reach some people we must not be afraid to preach on the street and in groves. I have done so with good success, and set one town in an uproar, telling the gospel story to a hundred persons, one half of whom would never have entered a building. Since I left, after baptizing two, they got five ministers to come and patch up the holes in the sectarian breastwork, made by the rapid firing of gospel artillery.

I have made new openings and preached in old places that first heard the powerful testimonies of Fathers Landers, Gurley, and Ells. Bro. Thomas Smith did a mighty work in the East many years ago. Prayers are yet heard under the roofs that sheltered Bro. Greene and Bro. Sheehy when they were young men preaching in Maine. Many who refused the gospel then are as bitter as death now. They will not speak to me. And, strange to say, in some hearts the seed is just bursting above the ground. I have hopes of a large ingathering in these parts. Old Bro. Ed. Brown, known to many of the western elders, is longing to crush their fingers with his big hand.

In Maine, Satan is scoring a big victory over the heads of a lazy priesthood. Many a person here holding the sacred office of elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, is not doing as much to help roll on this great work as those who hold no office. It is just awful! If they think they can pass through the portals of glory by virtue of an old rusty talent folded in a worm-eaten napkin, a mighty disappointment awaits them. To-day there are dead branches in this State that might be powers for good, were their heads not dead. When the officers work the bodies revive. The work in Maine is just about holding its own; and to my mind, that earthquake we had here last winter, extending as it did through the New England States, means something, and I expect to live to see the day when God will seal up his work in some of these self-righteous towns, as he did in Sodom and Gomorrah.

But I think the compositor thinks it about time I was closing. I know what fun it is (not) to set from a half-filled case. The worthy Editor is glancing towards the waste-basket as he reads this letter. However, only one letter in nine years is not extravagant—but I will stop by saying, In this great work for the redemption of Zion, I am hopefully and prayerfully engaged.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

MINDEN CITY, Michigan, September 25, 1904.

Dear Herald: The past summer was a pleasant one and we greatly appreciate it. Being confined at home for the greater part of three years, we have reason to be thankful for seasons when we can enjoy outdoor life, which is so invigorating and inspiring. The pictures of nature are truly beautiful, they are typical of higher beauty; therefore inspire our souls. At times, in beholding nature, we have felt the very atmosphere filled with a holy calm and everything seemed to droop with richness. What peace and happiness we enjoy as we silently behold such beauty. We are thankful for such gifts. We have felt some better physically this summer than in past years; have not suffered so much pain, therefore were more able to enjoy life; although some stronger, yet we can endure but very little excitement. We feel best when quietly living at home, following regular habits; striving to enjoy the blessings that are for us daily. The rest we leave in God's hands to direct as seemeth best. We have not been led otherwise thus far, although we have striven to know and do our part wisely. Some would try to discourage; but we are thankful for that which we feel assuredly man can not take it from us. Fearless trust in God brings peace.

We are learning the lesson: "Never to try to force in that over which we have no power;" it only exasperates. Learn to leave it with God, for:

"There is never a path so hidden,
But God will lead the way;
If we seek for the Spirit's guidance,
And patiently wait and pray."

The Father has been a very near and dear friend to us, and has taught us many things by his Spirit. What a wonderful teacher the Holy Spirit is. But, to enable it to do its office work we must work with it, with our might, mind, and strength. We can not express in words our thankfulness for blessings received. We feel, truly, that trials are sometimes permitted to come and serve as stepping-stones to a higher life in Christ Jesus.

At first when we were crossed in our earthly plans we could not see the reason. Since then we have been made to more fully realize that God never permits our plans to be changed unless it is for our eternal good. He knows what will best bring out our capabilities and make us more useful, enabling us to use our powers and faculties for a righteous purpose. We can see more clearly each day the hand of the Lord, protecting and directing, in our past life. How thankful we are to be thus cared for; and, without a doubt, our affliction has been the means to loosening our hold on earthly interests, giving more time and room for the development in spiritual lines. How lovingly God works with each of us, trying to teach us those things that will fit us for the celestial world. Each must learn our own lessons and there is but one right way to learn them, by meeting and overcoming that which opposes.

We begin to see how God leads but one step at a time. We hope to follow where he leads, and to occupy in the line of duty which he designates; but to seek to accomplish anything in this work without God's Spirit is in vain. Daily duties performed in a mechanical way are only an empty form. To make our efforts successful we must be progressive, living our religion every day and every moment so as to have God's spirit always. We feel the importance of living very near to God so as to feel secure in his protecting power in this day of wickedness, when opposing powers are trying to gain a foothold through every nook and crevice,—if we watch not continually,—and trying to keep us from gaining in true intelligence.

The higher we rise in true spirituality the more beauty and perfection we detect in the gospel plan. How grand it is to feel ourselves developing under such a perfect law. Though slow it may be,—it is a slow growth at any rate,—by continuous effort it is a sure one. There is power in the gospel and when its pure principles are applied to life daily, it can not fail to make noble men and women. We realize that it is refining and purifying; making a person more thoughtful and firm, yet comely and gen-file, so that the very presence brings peace and rest to those who find beauty in true nobility. It has rightly been said: "Grand purposes, noble resolves, and high aspirations clothe the form and actions with dignity and power." "True attainments come slowly." When starting out in this growth we know not always what lies before us; greater tests may be required of us than we thought. But if we are willing to learn in the humble way we will succeed. The more the heart is engaged with God the less we are disturbed by the trials of earth; we seem prepared for whatever may come when we keep in touch with the Master. But to live that way means constant effort on our part; it takes thought, study, and prayer,—a "conscious life," not letting the cares of earth burden the mind unnecessarily, but thinking pure and holy thoughts as much as possible. This prepares the mind for the reception of greater light and truth, bringing about the conditions which make it possible for God to unfold to us the riches of heaven, the knowledge of which is worth more than earth's joys and treasures, which will soon pass away.

There is much to learn in this work and we are thankful that the ways for obtaining knowledge are provided. We are told to "seek learning by study and prayer," and we realize in thus seeking we are truly blessed. All learning, if used as a means to a higher end, is beneficial; it enlarges the comprehension and enables us to render a more intelligent obedience to God, when the Spirit attends. The work of the gospel is one of development, there is no place in it for standing still; and if we would be saviors of men we must be progressive, living up to our rights and privileges, otherwise we are as salt that has lost its savor. The seasoning qualities will be lacking.

While meditating we sometimes wonder, "What impressions for good are we making on the lives of those with whom we come in contact?" When we see no direct results we might sometimes feel dissatisfied, but the thought comes as a reality. "Do your part regardless of what the result may be."

God beholds our works and our faithfulness in his service, no matter if the seed sown does partly fall on barren ground and yields no fruit. True efforts are never lost.

Sowing the seed of truth,
Patiently on we go,
Sowing it here and there,
Knowing not which will grow;
Jesus beholds it fall,
He will the deed record;
Patiently sow the seed,
Leaving it with the Lord.

Having faith in God brings the assurance which enables us to stand. So, when earth in weakness misunderstands us and misrepresents our motives, we need not fear when striving to do our best. God knows our true worth and rewards us accordingly.

"We, who doeth the works of righteousness, shall receive his reward, even peace in this world and eternal life in the world to come." This peace truly passeth all understanding and shall keep our hearts and minds through Jesus Christ.

May we all strive, by perseverent efforts, to retain this peace, is my prayer.

Your sister in Christ,

EMMA VOLZ.

BAYARD, Nebraska, September 23, 1904.

Dear Herald: While seated in our little canvas missionary home this afternoon, I thought a few words, telling the Saints of our whereabouts, and what we are trying to do for the advancement of the grand and glorious latter-day work, would be of interest. The summer has been spent in traveling with the gospel tent. We have a twelve by fourteen tent which has been our home all summer, and though tired and worn we would feel at a loss to give up our little canvas home. The weather is getting cool and tent-work will soon be at an end for this year. We have visited and opened up several new openings this summer, and made many friends to the cause of Christ. While at Readington we expected a debate to begin between Bro. S. D. Payne (who has traveled with us all summer) and a Mr. Summers of the Church of Christ, a branch of the Christian Church. When the time came for the propositions to be signed, he could not produce his elder's license. Thus not being properly indorsed the debate fell through. At the close of the meeting a long, warm discussion continued, only to cause the people to have warmer feelings towards us. There were several members of the Church of Christ who were very warm, and ready to say most anything to bemean us, yet through the coolness of the brethren, and the readiness to explain to them, they all left feeling quite calm. Bro. C. H. Prettyman joined us there, and was one in the conflict with us. We left a good feeling there, and several are interested.

From there we drove to Bridgeport. Found prejudice very high. Showers of rock were sent on the tent several times each evening, but no harm done. Our mission work this summer, in many respects, has been very gratifying to us. We have endeavored to do all we could for the advancement of the work. As one expressed himself to us, "You do not know how you have set the people to thinking; they are studying their Bibles more." We have met some rebukes from the clergy of the day, yet we always feel strengthened when persecutions come, for we know that the truth never was looked upon with favor, and it was always those who professed to be so religious who stood ready to stab the truth whenever they could.

While at Heath we visited a United Brethren Sunday-school. They invited Bro. Self to speak as their pastor was not at home, and Bro. Self spoke about thirty minutes. At the close of the meeting a very pious old man, of about sixty years, hit Bro. Self, and, with fist doubled up, bemeaned the church to a great extent. He said old Joe Smith was hung, for a Baptist preacher told him so, and that the preacher's father helped to hang him. His unchristianlike conduct was not approved by the thinking class of people. Some came to our tent-meeting in the afternoon and apologized for the old man's conduct.

September 25. Large crowds greeted us last night. The United Brethren and Methodist Churches closed their meetings, and the congregations greeted us. Tent full to overflowing. Elder C. W. Prettyman preached a fine sermon on the Book of Mormon.

The summer is ended; autumn is here. We see the dead leaves and dying grass, and we wonder, when the autumn of our lives comes, will we be prepared to meet our Redeemer? Ever praying for the cause of Christ,

MRS. R. O. SELF.

BOTTINEAU, North Dakota, September 14, 1904.

Dear Herald: My husband and I are here in Bottineau, the only Saints here that we know of, but I am giving the HERALDS and Ensign to any that will read them. Bro. Sparling and other of our elders have preached here, and a year ago this summer our reunion was held here. The seed has been sown, the result we must leave with our Master.

I want to tell of a case of healing, for the good of Saints especially that are away from a branch or an elder. The first part of August my daughter was sick. She had been in bed some days, and was getting along as well as we could expect. About noon the fourth or fifth day she was taken in a dreadful pain. Her husband, J. E. Stowell, went in haste for mother, Sr. Hannah Stowell, who was staying with her daughter some sixty rods away. When she came and saw the condition of the girl she turned to her son and said, "Oh, go for a doctor at once." But my daughter says, "No, go for the elder of the church." But the elder was four miles away. She was in such agony that Sr. Stowell says, "Give me the oil." We gave it to her. She anointed her with oil, and told us all to pray. We knelt down by the bed, our prayers united to God. Her pain stopped immediately and has never come back since. To God be the praise; but I tell you this to strengthen your faith. Jesus said to the woman, "Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace."

Editors Herald: I believe I have not written anything for the HERALD this conference year, and will now pen a few lines. Although I can not write in glowing terms of work done, yet I can write that progress is being made in gospel work in this State. Neither can we write as the poet has said, "Like doves to their windows in clouds see them come," but by ones, twos, and threes, they are obeying the gospel. In my visits among the branches and membership, I find that spiritual growth is being made, and a growing desire to "come up higher." While this is true in the main, yet there are exceptions to the rule. Some are careless and indifferent, and violators of the law. Some of these last, unless they repent and change their ways, will soon find themselves outside of the church. To keep an open violator of the law in the church I believe is not only an injury to the church, but to the individual himself. I believe that they should be given to understand that in order to retain membership in the body they must keep the law. I believe that it is mistaken charity to not enforce the law against such. One of the great needs of the work at present is local officers to look after the members, and to also see that the law is kept. Improvement in this respect is being made here in this district. Some have been ordained this last year that if faithful will do much good in the work. I was invited to attend a social gathering the 25th inst. at the home of Bro. and Sr. H. T. Hawkes, of the town of Edina, and there to make Bro. John M. Johnson and Sr. May Hawkes one, which I did I think to the satisfaction of all, perhaps with one exception. Bro. Johnson thought the preacher got the start of him in that he, (the preacher,) got the first kiss from the bride. But everything passed off pleasantly, and some who have been bitter opposers of our faith admitted, after it was over, that it was the nicest wedding they ever attended, and especially the ceremony they thought was the best they had ever heard. One young man present was so delighted with it that he said when he got married he would send for me to do the job for him. If he does I will go if I am three hundred miles away.

The next day, the 26th, I had the pleasure of baptizing Bro. Charles Larch, who has believed the gospel for some time but who had let time slip by till now; and seems to be very thankful that he now has made the start. He is energetic and will be of help to the work. I expect to go to the north part of the State soon to see what can be done up there. I think now that I will go to Bemidji first, and shall try to make some new openings there. As the season changes to fall I am feeling better, and shall try to push the work ahead. To make progress in this north land it means work, work, and then work for all we get. I have been it seems especially blessed of late in preaching the word, for which I am truly thankful to my heavenly Father. I hope to be able to continue to the end and finish the work intrusted to my care.

Yours in the conflict,

LEXINGTON, Nebraska, September 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: When I heard that the college was to be closed I felt badly, and prayed earnestly that it would not be. I see it was not, and there are many that are willing to try to do as the Lord has said, pay their debts. I was among those who signed for the first call that was made. I thought it was a sacrifice, but I paid it, and I believe that those that oppose it are those who have not paid much. Before it should close I will pay as much more, and if all in my circumstances will do that it will not be closed.

I believe the Lord called Joseph Smith to bring forth this work, and all that come into it are to pay tithes and offerings. If we do so we will get the reward; and if it is not rightly used that will not be our fault. In 1897 I began to pay tithing, and it seemed hard for me to do it; but the Lord has blessed me, and my whole desire is to do his will. If I do any one a wrong I will make it right if I can, according to the law that God has given. May all try the Lord, and see if he will not bless as he has promised, if you do his will.

Your brother,

F. T. DOBIE.

WHEELING, West Virginia, September 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: To-day I will contribute a few lines for your valuable paper. Bright and early Sunday morning in company with our worthy branch president, O. J. Tary, we wended our way to McClainsville, Ohio.

After a four-mile walk we reached our destination. As arrangements had been made for preaching the writer occupied the morning hour, after which he had the pleasure of leading two precious souls into the water of baptism,—Maria Youcom and her brother Alpheus Yost. Others will follow later. About a year ago when the work was opened there this sister was prejudiced, but now is rejoicing in the work of the Master, having been convinced of the error of her way. Bro. O. J. occupied in the afternoon. The Lord truly blessed us with liberty of speech and with the divine influence from on high. After partaking of the bounties which were prepared by dear grandmamma Yost our faces were set homeward. After a brisk walk we came to our chapel. Myron Thomas, our young missionary, was reading his text for the evening discourse. At the conclusion of his remarks Bro. Tary was invited forward to confirm a Mr. Yost from Lansing, Ohio, whom Bro. Myron baptized in the afternoon. Bro. U. W. Greene and J. A. Becker please take notice. The efforts at Lansing have not been in vain, if our men were closed out of the schoolhouse.

Bro. Yost's wife and daughter are interested also, and no doubt will follow in the near future.

The angel of death has visited the home of Bro. Jesse Winship and taken the spirit of their only child, Evert J., to the haven of rest. While we sympathize with the bereaved, we know our Father doeth all things well.

We are glad to report that there is an improvement in Bro. O. J. Tary's health and it is possible that he will not be required to leave for the West as he had intended. Surely the Lord is good. We hope the relief will be permanent and that he will be permitted to remain with us as our leader and spiritual adviser.

Your brother in the work of the Master,

LOUIS A. SERIG.

FORT DODGE, Kansas, September 19, 1904.

Editors Herald: The HERALD's visits to us weekly are highly appreciated, as it is the only preacher, with the exception of a very few times, that we ever hear. Wife and I were baptized by Elder I. P. Baggerly the second Sunday in June, 1895, near Oakland City, Indiana, and can say, since that time have received many blessings from our heavenly Father, and many times felt the influence of the Holy Spirit when reading the letters and sermons in the HERALD. Sister Eliza Welch says that she has a brother, Isaac Ross, who formerly belonged to the Ross Grove Branch in Missouri, and if he is yet living she would be glad to hear from him. Her address is Fort Dodge, Kansas. We have a nice church-building here at the home near Fort Dodge, and it is open to all and any one to preach in, so if any of our elders come this way we would be glad to have them stop and favor us with a few sermons. Hoping to learn of more Saints in this part, I remain as ever a firm believer in the restored gospel,

W. J. BALDWIN.

HAMBURG, Germany, September 15, 1904.

Editors Herald: Not forgetful of the promise which I made to some of the Saints, to write once in a while, I essay to write a few lines. After General Conference I visited a few places in the United States to see friends, and also in the interest of the church. The 11th of June, the Cunard Line twin-screw steamship, Ivernia, left Boston for Liverpool, England. I had previously secured passage on it for Hamburg via England. Bidding farewell to the good Saints of Boston who had so kindly cared for us during our stay there, and in company with Brn. H. J. Davison and F. P. Busiel went to the Cunard Line docks, and through the kindness of Bro. Busiel soon had our baggage arranged. About five o'clock in the evening, the great ship began to move and we soon lost sight of the country we had learned to love so well; in it we had learned of political freedom and liberty which is more prevailing in a republic than a monarchy. And above all we had heard the restored gospel, had rendered obedience to its principles, and been permitted to take part in this great work of latter days; thanks and praise to Him who rules all things well. June 18, early in the morning, we landed at Hamburg, Germany. The trip over the great deep was pleasant so far as the writer was concerned, although there were many who were seasick.

Hamburg has changed wonderfully since we left here twenty years ago. Electric street-cars are running through the principal streets, and stores and houses are lighted up with electric lights; advancement and progress can be seen on every hand. With it have come higher wages, and the cost of living has greatly increased. Four dollars per week is the lowest hotel rate, fifteen and twenty cents a single meal in cheap restaurants. It was formerly about half that price.

I was soon searching for a furnished room, as four dollars per week is too much for a missionary to pay. Through the kindness of Frau J. Hamann, sister-in-law to our generous Bro. William Hamann of Stewartville, Missouri, I was able to find one for about one dollar per week. And now we have to go to the police bureau to tell them where we came from, and what we were going to do here; in fact they wanted to know everything. The police in Germany have to keep track of every one who comes here. We had to go to the American Consul to get a certificate from him that we were the right party and my passport was all right. I went to six different places to find out if we were permitted to preach the gospel here. In Hamburg we have the same privilege as any other church.

Street-preaching is not allowed by any one. We were informed that our Utah friends are not permitted to preach here in Hamburg, but they have a branch here, notwithstanding. I have been to their meeting once. I think they work very quietly. It took about two weeks to get matters straightened out so we could go and visit my relatives, who are living quite a distance from Hamburg. Of course they were glad to see me. We visited Rendsburg, Keil, Neumünster, and Gustrow, in Mecklenburg; shall visit other places when better opportunity presents. Have talked to about one hundred people on the gospel, and have given them tracts; have tried to sow the good seed whenever I could. Returned to Hamburg, rented a small room from Frau Litan, a friend of Sr. A. Feldhahn, Hay Springs, Sheridan County, Nebraska, paying seventy-five cents per week for it. Shall make an effort here in Hamburg and vicinity; any one who has relatives or friends here please let me know. They very much like to hear from America, and it gives opportunity to talk the gospel to them. I wish to thank the Saints who have contributed to the German tract fund and those who have assisted me financially. I am sure the good Lord will bless you for it. Any one who is interested in the German mission, and can assist financially, may send money by postal money-order. We will then get the full value of the money. We hope to get assistance from some of the Saints, as we have no members here, and have to pay our way. We must sow the seed first, ere we can expect to gather in, and that may take some time. Address care of J. Hamann, A. B. C. Strasse No. 44, Haus No. 13, Hamburg, Germany.

C. C. JOEHNK.

Extracts from Letters.

James M. Blood, Porcupine, Wisconsin: "Apostle J. W. Wight arrived here last Friday, and while here delivered a series of nine spiritual sermons. It is probable that some would have come in, had it been possible for the brother to stay a few days longer."

A bill of $3.35 for postage and home class supplies used in the district was presented, and ordered paid. A paper "Some excellent auxiliaries in Sunday-school work," written by Superintendent M. A. Saxe, and read by William Dawson, gave much credit to the writer. Papers on "How I conduct my Sunday-school," by each local superintendent were read and discussed, many good points were gained. A paper on the "Object and aim of home class work," was prepared and read by Mrs. Lizzie Day, superintendent of that department. Music and recitations interspersed the papers. The next feature of the convention was institute work in charge of Bro. Terry. A motion that the district secretary be empowered to receive credentials from all local schools prevailed. Adjourned to meet in conjunction with next district conference.

Fourth Quorum of Priests.

Dear Brethren: Circumstances over which we have had no control have prevented me from writing you this conference year. Considering the brevity of time, the fulfilling of prophecy, war and commotion on the earth, the love of many waxing cold because of iniquity, and men's hearts failing them for fear of the things coming on the earth, we have no time to lose, and what must be done must be done quickly, therefore the necessity of presenting the law of life and salvation for the consideration of mankind. Our responsibilities are very great. We have just as important a work to do as any other quorum or officer in the church. We have no right to accept the priesthood if we are going to sit idly by with folded hands and do nothing. Many an elder's cheeks have blushed with shame because of the unfaithfulness of some Saints. The priest and the teacher did not do their duty and hence the sad results. Dear brethren, let us be earnest in the advocacy of the gospel of Christ, courageous in this marvelous work, and the eternal Father will use us for the accomplishment of his purposes, and crown our work with success. It is the work of God, for it has the stamp of divine approval. May the Lord help us to be humble, prayerful, and faithful, is the prayer of your brother in the true gospel.

JAMES D. SCHOFIELD.

The "Omaha Bee's" New Color Magazine.

For real, genuine enterprise the Omaha Bee leads the procession. It has just added new color magazine features to the Sunday Bee which compare favorably with the best New York and Chicago papers. The enormous expense involved in giving its readers the benefit of the latest innovations in artistic color press-work may not be fully understood, but it should be richly rewarded with greatly increased patronage. It is certainly gratifying to know that we have such an enterprising newspaper in the West, and it must be equally gratifying to the Bee to know that it is recognized as the only really metropolitan paper published in this section. If you have not seen the new feature, buy a Bee next Sunday.

"The Privileges of Parenthood" and the joys and trials of childhood provide substance for a story by Marion Hill in the October McClure's called "A Fruit of the Fair." The fruit of the dissipation of the "Fair" and its consequent demoralization for the twins is their first visit to Sunday-school. What they said, what they did, and how they did it there make pages of rare entertainment. The experiences of "little son" and "little daughter" will stir up the dust in many a memory chamber. F. Y. Cory illustrates the story in the real spirit of it, giving a clue to its catching humor.

Among the other articles promised for this number is a discussion of "The Open Shop," the crux of the whole labor question, and its immediate political bearing.

The electrification of the suburban service makes it necessary to construct a new terminal in New York City, and work on this is under way. It will be underground, immediately behind the Grand Central station. Here trains will whizz back and forth without the aid of panting and smoking steam-engines. The depressed station will reclaim all the yard-space from Forty-fifth to Fifty-sixth Streets now covered by tracks, and will permit the streets, now cut off, to be continued. This underground terminal will be connected with the rapid-transit subway, and thus will add to the links of underground railway communication in New York.—The World's Work.

PREJUDICE.

Prejudice and principle begin with the same letter, but there is a wide difference in their definitions. Prejudice means "a judgment or opinion formed without due examination of the facts or reasons that are essential to a just and impartial determination; a mental decision based on other grounds than reason or justice; a premature opinion favorable or unfavorable to some person or thing." One meaning of principle is "a settled law or rule of action. Especially a rule conscientiously and resolutely adopted as a guide to action when unqualified; a determined rule of right action, or habitual devotion to right as right."

Prejudice has been one of the weapons most constantly used by the adversary in his opposition to this latter-day work. Prejudice, not principle, has governed the world largely in its attitude toward this "marvelous work and a wonder," instituted by the hand of the Lord in this last dispensation. Prejudice has closed schoolhouses and churches against our missionaries, has kept the people from coming out to hear the word of God as dispensed by an authorized ministry, and has hindered many from receiving the truth, who have been "almost persuaded."

Mortal man is apt to be hasty in forming an opinion, humanity is naturally inclined to render decisions not based upon reason and justice. An example of how easy it is to form a hasty conclusion is afforded us in the last chapter of Acts, at the time Paul was shipwrecked upon the island of Melita. The natives received him, and those with him, in kindness, and kindled a fire because of the rain and cold. "And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand. And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live." They were somewhat hasty in their judgment. Superstition helped to form a premature opinion in their minds, and thus they became prejudiced against Paul. "Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly: but after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and said that he was a god." Thus they jumped at another conclusion. Although they were now prejudiced in Paul's favor, yet they were prejudiced nevertheless, because their opinion was not based upon reason, and must necessarily be changed and modified when they should come to a correct understanding of Paul and his mission. While this latter form of prejudice would apparently be a benefit to Paul during his sojourn among them, unless it was supplanted by something more substantial, the first time some one came along with the story that Paul was in a league with the Devil, and that it was through this power he performed his miracles, their minds would be in just about the proper condition to be more strongly prejudiced than ever before against him.

ELDER GOMER R. WELLS writes from Australia for a place for a young man to attend Graceland College who desires to come at once, providing the college will continue at least three years, his mother being a widow and not willing to send him away where he must attend institutions which would give him a false conception of our work and he would be led into worldly and evil ways.

Latter Day Saints, who have suffered so much from the effects of prejudice in the world should be very careful that they do not allow opinions based upon something besides reason and justice to create prejudice in their minds, and cause them to form their judgment without due examination of the facts and reasons that are essential to a just and impartial determination. Principle (correct principle) is better than prejudice any day.

A SON OF SIDNEY RIGDON.

In the Deseret Semi-Weekly News, September 26, 1904, we notice an account of the baptism of John W. Rigdon, the only surviving son of Sidney Rigdon, on September 8, 1904, by Elder John M. Macfarlane, of the Utah church. Mr. Rigdon was born June 11, 1830, at Mentor, about five miles from Kirtland, Ohio. During the years that have intervened since the death of the Prophet he has devoted a part of his time to the practice of law, and has made no profession of religion until recently. He says that his father's testimony in favor of the Book of Mormon was a leading factor toward his final acceptance of the doctrine taught by the Utah church. Considering all the circumstances it is a peculiar position for a man to take, i. e., that his belief in the Book of Mormon led him to unite with a people who believe and practice contrary to the teachings of the book. We quote from the News as follows:

"Being prejudiced against plural marriage he began to think of uniting with the 'Josephites,' having been a boyhood companion of young Joseph. But in 1900 he read of a sermon delivered by him. Of this Mr. Rigdon said, 'I was prejudiced in his favor until I read an assertion he made near Kansas City to the effect that, as some people had undertaken to say his father was the originator of the doctrine of plural marriage, he was there to declare that his father was not a polygamist or a lawbreaker. This turned me against him, for I knew better.'"

ward course in refusing to believe his father a "polygamist or a lawbreaker" until satisfactory evidence that he was such should be produced. The evidence has not been forthcoming. He has also taken the position that no error upon the part of his father could destroy the truth of the message which God commissioned him to declare.

The Reorganization is not based upon any error supposed to have been committed by Joseph the Seer. Unfortunately for the Utah church their hope is based upon that one error which they have assiduously sought to lay at the feet of the Prophet. The books have been discarded as "but the ashes of a rye-straw" or an "outgrown jacket," the Prophet's teachings of purity and virtue and respect for the laws of the land have been thrust aside by them, and they have tenaciously clung to this one supposed departure as their guiding star. Joseph, they say, was a polygamist and a lawbreaker; and whatever else he may have been of virtue, honor, and holiness counts for but little in their estimation. The Utah church disregarded the teachings of the books, and chose rather to accept the claim that Joseph was a lawbreaker, and that in order to obtain the highest salvation they must all become, like him, lawbreakers. They have continued in that line until the present day, and stand self-condemned, by their own testimony before the authorities of the United States, as lawbreakers, violaters of both the laws of God and the laws of man.

It does not speak well for Mr. Rigdon that he chooses to reject one who stands by the books and the written testimony of his father, and to cast his lot with those whom, according to his own testimony, he knows to be lawbreakers.

Mr. Rigdon continues: "In regard to the doctrine of polygamy I know that Joseph Smith, Jr., was the author of it, and introduced it into the Mormon church in the year 1843, and had his brother Hyrum Smith take the revelation to the High Council at Nauvoo, and tell them that Joseph Smith, his brother, received the same while he was present. At the time it was introduced it created quite an excitement in the church and a great many did not believe it, and denounced it as a false revelation."

This testimony may be accepted for what it is worth; but sober inquiry should be made into its real character before its worth is determined. There have been two classes of witnesses in this matter. One class, to which Mr. Rigdon belongs, has strenuously declared that Joseph Smith was the author of polygamy; the other class has as strenuously declared that Joseph Smith by his life and religious teaching stood in unflinching opposition to it, and denounced those who sought to fasten it upon the church. Among this latter class of witnesses are William Marks, Hyrum Smith, Emma Smith, and the sons of the prophet.

As to the statement of the revelation being received in 1843 and taken by Hyrum Smith before the High Council at Nauvoo, is it not a bit strange that the same falsehood had been told about Joseph Smith and the church years prior to 1843, yet the supposed revelation was not received, and consequently nobody knew anything about it until that year? Similar reports were denied by William Marks in a letter dated July 26, 1842, in which he says, "I would further state that I know of no order in the church which admits of a plurality of wives, and do not believe that Joseph Smith ever taught such a doctrine."—Millennial Star, October, 1842. Marks, being a president of the Nauvoo Stake, was in a position to know whether these reports were true or not. These false reports continued to circulate, and some began to teach the doctrine of polygamy; and Joseph and Hyrum Smith denounced "polygamy, and other false and corrupt doctrines" taught by Hiram Brown, in a notice published in Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 423, February 1, 1844.

Hyrum Smith, in a letter dated March 15, 1844, wrote to the the Saints at China Creek, Hancock County, as follows: "Whereas Bro. Richard Hewitt has called on me to-day, . . . and states to me that some of your elders say, that a man having a certain priesthood, may have as many wives as he pleases, and that doctrine is taught here; I say unto you that that man teaches false doctrine, for there is no such doctrine taught here; neither is there any such thing practiced here."—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 474.

Shall we take the testimony of Mr. Rigdon in preference to the testimony of these men? These men were in a position to know. Mr. Rigdon never was. He was a boy, never had been a member of the High Council as William Marks had been. He had simply listened to the reports peddled around by his associates, which was the sole source of his information. He moved away from Nauvoo in 1844 and was in a position to know absolutely nothing about it except from hearsay.

A WIDE-AWAKE LATTER DAY SAINT.

The following extract from a letter written by one of the brethren indicates that the Saints are not asleep. We are glad to see that Saints are using their faculties for discovering error without waiting for some one to point it out to them. The brother writes as follows: "I am very sorry to see the piece in the HERALD of September 28, 'Subsidence of Great Salt Lake,' with the map of Palestine so turned about and distorted and twisted to make it look like the map of Utah that it would make a school-girl laugh; for it carries with it the idea that Utah is the holy land of this continent, and that we are circulating and holding up Mormon or Brighamite ideas. I think this poor food for persons seeking after truth."

The article in question, with the cuts representing Utah and Palestine in comparison, was taken from one of the leading daily papers, and shows to what extent exaggeration serves in furnishing matter for the daily press. As the brother says, the cut of Palestine is twisted and distorted to make it appear something like Utah. On a correct map of Palestine the Dead Sea lies directly south of the Sea of Tiberias, while in the cut spoken of it is represented as lying to the northwest. The comparison is very far-fetched, as any wide-awake reader may see; for Palestine is no more like Utah than is any other country containing two similar bodies of water with a few surrounding hills.

GRACELAND NOTES.

Bro. Myron E. Thomas, who has been actively engaged in the missionary field in Pennsylvania and West Virginia since General Conference, arrived Saturday to enter upon his studies in Graceland College.

Bro. A. B. Klar of Canal Dover, Ohio, writes: "Inclosed find check for six dollars to help pay the indebtedness of our Graceland College, which I feel is every brother's duty to assist in, as it is the most necessary thing in our church, so the young army of men and women can stand up for the truth and defend it with wisdom and knowledge gained in Graceland."

Sr. Margaret Neville, of Hemlock, Ohio, sends in her offering and that of two others, and writes: "I saw some time ago a request in the Ensign for the Saints to send a dollar each. Indeed I think if all the Saints would comply with the request the debt would soon be paid. I do not think there are very many who could not if they would only make the effort and I am sure the Lord would bless them."

Elder S. W. Tomlinson, writing from Gilbert Plains, Manitoba, incloses a donation handed him by a brother and states: "I hope the Graceland College debt will soon be lifted and success attend it in the future. I can see the wisdom of God counseling his people to that effect. If the church would allow the college debt to remain and the college to be closed, the world would have a good chance to throw reflection upon the church and its inspiration in taking in hand that which they were not able to carry through. I was pleased when the Bishopric took it in hand to lift the debt and save the church from further reproach; since they had taken it in hand to build it. My prayer is that God's blessings will attend its use to the good of the cause we all love. The work is onward here, two have been added to the church by baptism lately."

The Daughters of Zion of Lamoni, Iowa, show their desire to see the debt canceled by placing ten dollars in the hands of the treasurer, for that purpose.

TIME'S VINDICATION.

It was in the early twenties of the nineteenth century that Joseph Smith, a youth of tender years, announced to the world that he had been visited by heavenly personages who enlightened him concerning a religious question that had long agitated his mind, owing to a protracted revival meeting of several churches, held in the vicinity of Palmyra, New York. Being greatly confused over the conflicting creeds then taught as the expression of the will of a changeless and merciful God; and not understanding how a professor or teacher of religion could consistently preach that one church is as good as another, while privately teaching his way to be the best simply to make converts to his views, also wakened inquiry in the mind of this lad that human tact could not satisfactorily answer. It was this reason, coupled with the cheerful promise in James, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God," that encouraged him to place his case before a higher court than existed on earth. Concerning this Joseph Smith says:

My object in going to inquire of the Lord was to know which of all the sects was right, that I might know which to join. . . . I asked the personages who stood above me in the light, which of all the sects was right, (for at that time it had never entered my head that all were wrong,) and which I should join. I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong, and the personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight, that those professors were all corrupt; "they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof." He again forbade me to join with any of them.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 9. (Published in Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 727.)

This statement startled the religious world, coming at the time when enthusiastic "peace conferences" were being held in many places, and "divines" were advocating the speedy ushering in of the millennium—that condition of oneness spoken of by prophets of former days. There was no uncertain sound, but a positive declaration that the "sects" "were wrong," the "creeds were an abomination in his sight," "that those professors were all corrupt," that they had "a form of godliness, but denied the power."

I have no apology to make for these statements; they are clear and to the point. If false, Divinity never spoke them, and they are cruel and unjust; if true, (and I can and shall prove them to be so,) we have an instance of God's mercy in warning the inhabitants of this earth of the dangerous chasm yawning at their feet.

We can hardly expect so appalling a fact as this to pass unnoticed by the religious teachers, notwithstanding it was presented by a young country boy, scarcely seventeen years of age; and from the first, Joseph's portion was the odium theologium (the hatred of divines). Those from whom he expected better treatment denounced his message, branding it as deadly as the hell-broth brewed by the witches of Macbeth. Let the dark pages of history tell how eagerly these "professors" of Christianity grabbed up the club of persecution, even resorting to tar and feathers.

The question forces itself upon us, Does the Bible teach that when one claiming to be a prophet arises among us, we are to silence his voice with the tar-brush and answer his arguments by shouting, "delusion," "all of the Devil"? Rather does Jesus Christ teach, "Love your enemies," and Paul, "Prove all things." Surely the golden rule was not in the Bible that those professors of religion taught the people seventy years ago. And, apparently, they made little use of Isaiah's inspired statement that we are to test a matter by "the law and the testimony." How much more Christlike to prove from the Scriptures (if possible) that the "creeds" were not wrong, than to indulge in the unholy method of slander and personal violence: a method introduced by bloody Cain, and since desperately resorted to by all opponents of truth. These venomous reptiles have always stood in the pathway of spiritual advancement. The waves of persecution were white with foam in the days of Christ, and large patches were constantly on the lips of "Moses' disciples," who too eagerly cried out, "He hath a devil." The old sound reëchoed up to the Dark Ages, as pagan writers testify; and even during that period when ignorance like a vast cowl covered the brain of the world, so-called followers of the meek and lowly Jesus were constantly hurling malignant arrows of hate at one another.

Luther steps on the scene, after the "morning star of the reformation" rises, and a new era dawns; the world begins another epoch in its history. A man not afraid to speak his mind is before us. He utters that which is not in harmony with the opinions of the age. The sword of persecution, yet streaming with the blood of countless martyrs, is placed at his breast. "Recant or die!" is thundered from the Vatican. "Here I stand; I can not do otherwise, so help me God," is the reply from this fearless reformer of a fearful time.

What if Luther had been frightened into silence, would not the work of God have moved on? Would not another have been raised in his place? Had Joseph Smith refused to deliver his message, one who was obedient would have been called to perform this stupendous work. In our reference to it, we do not depreciate the labors of other reformers, but know that they performed a work in their day that will ever redound to their honor and glory, and the writer of this simple sketch believes that no Baptist or Methodist loves Roger Williams or John Wesley better than he, even though he is a Latter Day Saint. They were earth's noblemen. Peace to their ashes!

That as a church we are narrow and look through a reversed telescope at the good performed by others, is a point not well taken. Buildd on the foundation of "all truth," we are as liberal as the doctrine of Christ will permit; beyond this we have no aspirations, and would rather be right than popular. As the exponents of "more light," we meet the same arguments and obstacles that have ever been raised against "new truths." It is but necessary to read the book of Acts to learn of the opposition met by the early disciples, and of the "sect everywhere spoken against."

Very pertinently can I quote the words of O. F. Cook, in Popular Science Monthly, March, 1904:

It is a misfortune frequently lamented that new truth, the most precious attainment of each generation, is also the most unwelcome. We do not hasten to sweep out our stock of laboriously collected ideas, even after the worthlessness of the assortment has been declared.

What new truth, or boon to humanity, ever met the favor of the populace? Not one. Was not Columbus called an idiot and Samuel Morse a knave, Wesley a jackdaw, and Williams a traitor? Who lived and struggled almost alone in enlightened Boston, and published a little paper against slavery? Who hooted at the statement of man riding twelve miles an hour and "keeping his head"? Every one, nearly. What did popular opinion say about iron ships floating? the first Atlantic cable? the phonograph? the telephone? In fact we might mention everything that has been a bit out of harmony with preconceived ideas.

Well did J. Hunt Cooke say in the March number of Biblia:

The recent discovery of radium has introduced a new disposition into the world of physical science, and shaken the throne of some autocratic notions which have long held thought in bondage. Is it not possible that some day some such revolution may occur in the domain of religious science?

Had Mr. Cooke been familiar with our position he would have known that such a revolution had been operating these seventy years, and the end is not yet.

Being much interested in these "sects," now so popular, once so obscure, I glance over the books of history and take down J. M. Cramp's Baptist History, and on page 155, I read:

The Baptists of the sixteenth century, generally, were a goodly, upright, honorable race. They hated no man, but all men hated them, and why? Because they testified against the abominations of the times, and wished to accomplish changes which would indeed have revolutionized society, because it was constructed on antichristian principles, but which were in accordance with the word of God. An outcry was raised against them, as if they were "the offscourings of all things," and their blood was poured out like water. Reformers wrote and acted against them. The writers of that age searched out the most degrading and insulting epithets that the language afforded, and applied them with malignant gratification. Latimer speaks of the "pernicious" and "devilish" opinions of the Baptists. Hooper calls those opinions "damnable." Bacon inveighs against the "wicked," "apish Anabaptists," "foxish hypocrites," that "damnable sect," "liars," "bloody murderers both of soul and body," whose religious system he denounces as a "pestiferous plague," with many other foul-mouthed expressions which I will not copy. Bullinger designates them as "obstinate," "rebellious," "brain-sick," "fanatic," "filthy knaves." Zwingli speaks of the "pestiferous seed of their doctrine," their "hypocritical humility," their speech "more bitter than gall."

Alas, how soon the Baptists forget that they were once poor and despised, with every man's hand raised against them, and at their door laid every charge that Latter Day Saints have been obliged to meet. Yes, they forget, but we remember still, and from hearts made sore by constant scoffing and jeering from such, we cry, "O Popularity, thou curse of the world!"

Be it far from my purpose to deepen old scars by referring to these historical facts. To introduce the thought that slander is not the proper tribunal before which to try any case, and that because every man is against you does not signify you are wrong, is my object. And, to this end, the following from Dictionary of National Biography, edited by Stephen, vol. 7, p. 57, will be of interest to congregationalists:

Browne, Robert (1550? 1633?), the earliest separatist from the Church of England after the Reformation, and now claimed as the first exponent of their principle of church government by the modern congregationalist in England and America, was born at Tolethorpe in Rutland. . . . Edmund Freake was bishop of Norwich at this time, and it was not long before he took action against the new sect. On 19 April 1581 he forwarded certain articles of complaint "against one Robert Browne" to Lord Burghley, in which he set forth that "the said party had been lately apprehended on complaint of many godly preachers, for delivering unto the people corrupt and contentious doctrine," and further that he was seducing "the vulgar sort of people, who greatly depended on him, assembling themselves together to the number of one hundred at a time in private houses and conventicles to hear him, not without danger of some evil effect." . . . To Northampton gaol [jail] he is sent, where, soon after, he sickened, died. . . . His burial-place is unknown. . . . The hateful story that he ill-treated his wife in her old age is in all probability an infamous slander.

And I take up volume 3, same set, and read this, on page 297:

Barrow or Barrowe, Henry (d. 1593.), church reformer. . . . At this time he lived, according to many reformers, a careless life about the court. John Cotton (of New England) states, on the authority of John Dod the Decalogist, that "Mr. Barrow, whilst he lived in court, was wont to be a great gamester and dicer, and after getting much to play would boast vivo de die in spemnoctis, not being ashamed to boast of his night's lodgings in the bosoms of his courtizens" (Ath. Cant. 2151.) . . . Burrow and Greenwood were ultimately "arraigned." . . . Seven days later, however, they were again huddled out of prison to Tyburn and there hanged on 6 April 1593 (Harleian Ms. 6848). Modern "Congregationalists" or "Independents" have put an exclusive claim to Barrow as one of the main founders of Congregationalism."

Whether there was cause for this barbarous treatment, we will let that "great day" decide; the fact is before us that one of the fathers of the Congregationalist sect died in prison, stating that he had been cast into twenty others, whilst the other individual was hanged. With some people it is easy to forget these things, whenever reference is made to the assassination of Joseph Smith in Carthage jail; but we remember, and believe that the fact of a man's death in prison (whence he had been delivered by enemies of truth), or the flying reports of bigots, is not sufficient evidence to justify in condemning any message.

As a matter of curiosity, and with a desire to enlighten myself along this line, I obtain The Heart of John Wesley's Journal, published by Fleming H. Revell Company, London and Edinburg. On page 18 I read the following, which will be of interest to Methodists:

Georgia, Savannah ss. To all constables, tithingmen, and others to whom these may come: You, and each of you, are hereby required to take the body of John Wesley, clerk, and bring him before one of the bailiffs of the said town to answer the complaint of William Williamson and Sophia, his wife, for defaming the said Sophia, and refusing to administer to her the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

a list of grievances, presented by the grand jury for Savannah, this — day of August, 1737." . . . Herein they assert, upon oath, "That John Wesley, clerk, had broken the laws of the realm, contrary to the peace of our Sovereign Lord and King, his crown and dignity,—

"1. By speaking and writing to Mrs. Williamson, against her husband's consent. . . . 5. By refusing to baptize Mr. Parker's child, other than by dipping, except the parents would certify it was weak, and not able to bear it."

Mr. Wesley would be called a "weak Methodist," if he lived nowadays.

These words on page 222 are from Wesley:

That they were so fierce ten years ago is no wonder, since their minister told them, from the pulpit (seven years before I resigned my fellowship), that "John Wesley was expelled the college for a base child, and had been quite mazed ever since; that all the Methodists, at their private societies, put out the lights," etc., with abundance more of the same kind.

However, sufficient has been written on this line to establish the fact that every church in its infancy has been the object of most brutal persecution from its more popular and powerful sisters. Whether the churches or members that indulge in this unholy practice have the Spirit of the Savior, the reader may decide for himself.

Now, I want to emphasize, strongly so, the following fact: If the churches of eighty years ago (when Joseph Smith startled the world) were right and their creeds were in harmony with God's word, then any change whatever in their teachings would make them wrong and out of harmony with the Bible. Consequently, if the churches have changed since, they were wrong then. Time, that mighty corrector of mistakes, has vindicated the position occupied by the young seer, as the following extracts show:

Despite the agitation for unity, the lines between churches are growing sharper. Organization, that is, despotism, in each is becoming more perfect. . . . It is not simply the Episcopal Church, with its incense, altar-lights, and colored vestments, that has turned its face toward the Middle Ages. Such churches as the Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Baptist, and Methodist, the offspring of the democratic protest against robes, genuflections, liturgies, and printed prayers, have returned to the use of these instruments of "order, discipline, system, and respect for position and authority."—The Conservative Review, September, 1901, pp. 201, 203.

Surely the dust of our old conservative grandfathers would groan in the grave if able to behold this turning to the mother church, this shaking hands with Rome. What is this we read in the Literary Digest, April 25, 1903?

A new "Roman" party in the Episcopal Church is also making its influence felt, and publishes a monthly organ, the Lamp, at Garrison-on-Hudson, New York . . . in an editorial entitled "Who is the author of division?" We quote as follows: "Protestants who glory in their sectarian divisions, yes, and Anglicans who glory in their separation from the Apostolic See, glory in their shame! . . . Wherein lies the remedy save to acknowledge the error our fathers made four hundred years ago and by concerted action to take the necessary measures which will in due time heal our schisms and make us Catholics indeed by reconciling us to the Universal Father of Christendom and reuniting us to the Holy Roman Church! the mother and mistress of all churches, in which resides the seat of supreme authority." . . . With the same issue of the Lamp, is given a "Rosary League Leaflet," telling "how to say the rosary." . . . A correspondent of the New York Sun writes of the new movement: "This Roman party is no insignificant or negligible quantity, but is fast growing in adherents all over the world."

Not wishing to be half-read on this subject, I consult another authority, Encyclopedia Britannica, volume 28, article "Church of England":

There has been much change in the constitutional statutes of the English church. . . . From 1898 there has been renewed agitation of the subject of ritual excesses . . . the case of the Reverend W. J. E. Bennett (1870-72) vindicated for English churchmen the right to hold and to teach the ancient doctrine of the Real Presence in the Eucharist. Naturally, changes such as these have not come about without much party feeling. . . . The Society of the Sacred Mission . . . was begun in 1891 . . . each applicant for a admission declares his intention . . . to remain unmarried.

Why all this turning about face? this changing of opinions? As Hubbard says, "open the window," let us have more air. What is the trouble? Here we have that prodigal church, which so madly and gladly ran away from its mother, reaching out hands of entreaty and begging forgiveness (in many instances) for having so long taught transubstantiation (or the change of the substance of bread and wine) in the Supper of the Lord, can not be proved by Holy Writ; but it is repugnant to the plain words of Scripture, overthrowing the nature of a sacrament, and hath given occasion to many superstitions. . . . Bishops, priests, and deacons are not commanded by God's law either to vow the estate of single life, or to abstain from marriage. (Articles 28 and 32, of the Thirty-nine Articles.)

Remember, my dear reader, the Episcopal Church was most strenuously upholding every one of the "thirty-nine articles" in the year Joseph Smith announced that the "sects" were wrong. Verily, time will vindicate every truth, even though it be given to the world by a youth of seventeen.

This statement from the Literary Digest, April 18, 1903, would have caused the Episcopalians of eighty years ago to hold up their hands in horror:

During the course of parliamentary debate on the "church discipline bill," it developed that incense is used in three hundred and ninety-three English churches, and that various forms of extreme ritualism are practiced in seventy-one more.

This "revising," "changing" bacillus has found its way into every corner of modern Christendom, and to speak mildly, it adds very little to the glory of an allwise and unchangeable God to revise his work. "Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever;" and surely this applies to the plan of salvation. It is evident, then,—however painful and humiliating the fact may be to the sects—that the creeds are wholly of human invention, and if they were not right in the days of Calvin, Fox, Luther, Williams, and the rest, how can we tell when they are free from error? Each decade demands a change. Talmage wanted to "put the creeds aside and get a brand new one." But this would not settle the matter. If the founders of the sects could not formulate correct creeds, can any of the modern divines do better?

God, through Mr. Smith, told the world that the sects were wrong, that they were teaching abominable creeds. The very acts of the churches are corroborating this statement.

Take, for example, the attempt of the Presbyterian Church to rid itself of that statement in article three of its creed, a statement that, if true, would make of God a heartless monster:

By the decree of God for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life and others foreordained to everlasting death. These angels and men thus predestinated and foreordained are particularly and unchangeably designed and their number is so certain and definite that it can not be either increased or diminished, neither are any other redeemed by Christ or effectually called, justified, adopted, sanctified, and saved, but the elect only.

Now will the reader kindly bear in mind that this hideous declaration was no silent factor in the creeds of the Congregationalist, Calvinist, Baptist, and Presbyterian Churches of Joseph Smith's day. While Jonathan Edwards and thousands of other "professors" were teaching that "God holds the unconverted over the pit of hell, as much as one holds a spider or a loathsome insect over the fire, and from time to time the generations in darkened lands, without temple, without Bible, without religious teacher, are swept into the future as the housewife lifts the lid from the glowing coals and sweeps flies into the flames"; and our Catholic brethren were—and are to-day—comparing the sound of boiling water in a kettle to the boiling of a child's brains in hell; at the same time our more humane members of the orthodox (?) churches were singing, to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne," these words from Watt's hymn: "For hell is crammed with infants damned without a day of grace." Is it strange that thousands of men are throwing off this monstrous yoke, and saying with Doctor Hillis, "I would rather shake my fist in the face of the Eternal, and fling every vile epithet toward his stainless throne, where eternal mercy sits with the world's atoning Savior, than lift my hand with that creed toward God's throne and affirm that I taught or believed it"?

For over three hundred years the church has been hugging this hydra to her bosom, but the American Almanac, of 1903, informs us that,— Presbyterianism yielded, during the year 1902, to pressure from within the body of the church which demanded certain changes in the creed of the denomination. The sentiment in favor of revision had been growing for years. . . . That which men have formulated they may revise, and this was practically the ground upon which the Presbyterian General Assembly, gathered in New York City during the month of May, 1902, stood in discussing and acting upon the question of revising the Westminster Confession of Faith, which constitutes the body of doctrine held by the Presbyterian Church.

Listen! As before stated, these changes are not confined to any one sect:

Congregationalism as a designation of a Christian denomination has of late in some respects modified its significance. In Great Britain there is to be observed among the Congregationalists a growing tendency towards a mutual connection or combination of churches, as distinguished from bare independency. . . . But as early as 1865, Armenians were welcome to Congregational fellowship. In the last few decades, with the spread in the community of innovations in doctrinal and critical opinions, a wider diversity of beliefs has come to prevail.—Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 27, p. 207.

And this statement in Zion's Herald, February 11, 1903, speaks louder than thunder:

We are not a little surprised to find in the Congregationalist of last week an editorial, "Will Congregationalists unite?" making a long and unquestioned plea for the union of Congregational and Unitarian Churches. . . . "Another sign of this approach is the modification of theological dogmas going on in both bodies. Unitarians are growing more positive in their emphasis on doctrine which both denominations hold. Congregationalists are asserting less positively the doctrines concerning which the two bodies differ."

What is this we have? The church that in Joseph Smith's day was denouncing the Unitarians as tending to infidelity and denying them fellowship, is now shaking compromising hands with them, over the denied divinity of the Son of God. The world moves. Time is vindicating truth. After all, the young seer was right; the churches themselves being witnesses.

The iconoclastic hammer has been tinkering away on the old, long-cherished Methodist "Discipline." The Boston Daily Advertiser, March 21, 1904, speaks to the point here:

The ironclad paragraph in the disciplinary rules of the Methodist Episcopal Church relative to proscribed amusements are dead letters in the opinion of the Reverend E. M. Antrim, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church [Springfield, Massachusetts] who openly advocates their repeal. . . . "I frankly and earnestly desire to have these paragraphs expunged from the discipline."

The Springfield Daily Republican, August 29, 1901, in referring to changes in Methodism, remarks:

It is a fact, of course, that the old fashion of Methodist meetings with their loud appeals to sensation, their explosive "Amens" and "Bless the Lords" is almost wholly of the past, and shows no signs of renewal. . . . Reverend Doctor James Mudge says: "I see more and more clearly that the old ideas are untenable." . . . Reverend George S. Butters, of Somerville, says: "Ten years ago I was strictly Wesleyan on the question of entire sanctification. To-day I do not regard that theory either scriptural or practical."

Even that church so long distinguished by "thee" and "thou" is waking up to the fact that it has been promulgating wrong theories; consequently a change is in order. The following from the Literary Digest, June 20, 1903:

Quakers, "the people called Friends," have been greatly changed by time, according to Edward Gardner, himself a Quaker, who writes in the American Friend (Philadelphia). This transformation, according to him, is one of the significant religious phenomena of the day, and it should not be overlooked by those who would understand the moral forces now at work in their republic. A great future is predicted for the transforming movement. . . . For a century or more, Friends were known by their peculiar dress. . . . The Quaker of to-day is not known by his dress. . . . Music, painting, and literature are now taking their rightful place among Friends. Congregational singing is recognized as being a part of true worship, and in many places instrumental music is also made a part of the devotional service. In the Quaker home of a century ago the sweet influence of song was unknown. The Bible and the writings of early Friends were the only books; no pictures adorned the walls, and Puritan austerity was the rule of life.

And be it remembered that eighty years ago the creed of this church taught (as it teaches to-day) that baptism is not only nonessential, but also anti-christian.

I seldom read a paper without finding something corroborative of our position. Truth is pressing to the front. The "sects were wrong," and it is important to know that all these changes have not been for the best. The belief in hell is hardly up to date, and the fact of a personal devil is considered a huge joke in the so-called modern sects. The Bible is being torn into shreds by "higher critics," and essential parts of Christ's doctrine are as carelessly waived (brushed aside) as one would write his name in the sand and kick it out with his foot.

Five years ago scarcely a minister in the land would have dared mention the theater from the pulpit save in denunciation, now the chaplains of the alliance visit the best plays and publicly commend them to their congregation.—Munsey, March, 1904.

The Christian Work and Evangelist calls attention to the fact that only within the last few years has "Good Friday" been observed by nonliturgical churches, and that now "Ash Wednesday" is added to the list.—Public Opinion, February 25, 1904.

Mr. Verschoyle states that "the assailants of liberalism get no support from the orthodox critics and teachers who represent the learning and power of the church." He says further (in the Contemporary Review, August): "I will now briefly examine the apostles' creed as a fair example of the changes the new knowledge has brought, which sufficiently dispose of the theory of immutable dogmas. . . . As a matter of fact, it may be safely said that no well-informed layman recites it in the sense it bore fifty years ago."—The Literary Digest, September 19, 1903.

And so it is patent that the "sects" have taken the bits and are blindly running hither and thither, not knowing where to go or when to stop. Methinks a deplorable "smash-up" will be their fate unless a speedy return to "thus saith the Lord" is preached and practiced by them. These wild and vain efforts to reanimate fossilized creeds will never remedy matters, but make them worse; demonstrating to the world, as they do, that some one blundered. These uninspired things so long upheld as expressions of God's mind, are going down before the advancement of spiritual enlightenment, and the heaven-inspired statement that "the sects are wrong," "their creeds an abomination in his sight," stands out as the handwriting on the wall. Thus surrounded by a cloud of witnesses, I bow my head before the inevitable, and say, Amen! and Amen!

BOOK OF MORMON ITS OWN VINDICATOR.

In the year of our Lord 1829 the Book of Mormon was published to the world through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, purporting to give a true history of the aborigines of America, tracing them from the descendents of Joseph, who was sold into Egypt, giving an account of their travels through the great wilderness, the building of vessels and embarking upon the mighty deep toward the choice land where God should lead by their prophet, Nephi, landing in South America. Concerning the beginning of this mighty civilization, of which so much incontrovertible proof abounds, which began six hundred years before Christ, continuing through various stages of unhappy vicissitudes incident to the rise and fall of nations until their national extinction about four hundred years after Christ, the Book of Mormon deals in full particulars.

It is a book claiming to account for a long lost and unknown race of people whose awe-inspiring remains of prehistoric works, covering the vast domain of Mexico, South and Central America have ever been the dreamless wonder of scientific research, and should be considered with more seriousness than simply the pastime of a charlatan; neither can such stupendous claims be brushed aside by merely a formal denial.

Not many books have gained as much notoriety in the same length of time as has the Book of Mormon. One of two things is true of this book: It is either true or false. If true it makes Joseph Smith, who claimed to have discovered and translated it by the power of God, a true prophet; if false, it makes him one of the most astounding and remarkable intellectual phenomena the world has yet produced. Yet no one unaided by the inscrutable wisdom of God could stagger upon a theory far in advance of the combined wisdom of all ages, which modern research has demonstrated to be a fact, and he too, absolutely deprived of means or education. It is infinitely more easy to believe that he was inspired by divine wisdom in sending forth a book so perfectly harmonizing with biblical, historical, archæological, and anthropological demonstration, than to believe he just happened to hit it by accident. The opponents of this book unwittingly make him do greater miracles than his friends claim. The biblical and scientific features have been fully discussed by others, hence I will confine myself mostly to the merits of the book itself.

All we ask of you, dear reader, is to judge this book as you would any other, viz., by its contents and not by popular prejudice. Were the doctrine and practice of our Methodist, Presbyterian, or Baptist friends to be put before the public for examination, they would ask that they be judged by their books of discipline, and not what their enemies may say.

In all matters of controversy there are certain accepted rules for ascertaining the truth or falsity of the question at issue. Nor can a contention be determined by the numerical strength of its opponents. If so the mission of Jesus Christ would have been defeated in its infancy, for the greater majority thought him an impostor unfit to live among them. In the midst of the great contention for and against him, he gave one grand rule by which the truth or deception of his mission could be clearly determined; it was this, "Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"—Matthew 7:16. To suppose such good, pure, and morally elevating philosophy could emanate from such a wicked, degraded character as the majority of the people regarded Christ, would be just as inconsistent as to go out on the hills and expect from the thorn bushes to pluck the luscious grapes. This is absolutely contrary to the nature of things. Or to think the sweet waters of the pure gospel of Christ could flow from such a corrupt fountain as the Jews thought Christ to be, is as unreasonable and unnatural as to dip into the lake of salt-water of Utah, expecting to bring up fresh water. These weighty arguments had but little effect upon the Jews who were drunken with religious prejudice and clamoring for his life; but with the heinous blunders of the benighted past before us, and living in the age of unsurpassed intellectual advancement, in an age of free thought, in a Christian land bedecked with churches doing homage to the persecuted Christ, one would surely believe an altogether different course of procedure would be adopted to antagonize a religious rival.

The divinity of the Book of Mormon is said by our opponents to stand or fall on the character of Joseph Smith, and, instead of applying the rule given by Jesus Christ, they content themselves by hurling all manner of vile epithets at him and his parentage.

The Book of Mormon depends upon the reputation of no man, but by its fruits it must stand or fall.

The most plethoric source from which the enemies draw their inspiration in attacking the Book of Mormon is the old Spalding Romance story, but a comparison of the Book of Mormon with the Spalding Romance clearly reveals the duplicity of those fabricators.

Had the writings of Solomon Spalding never been discovered, as they were in 1835 at Honolulu, completely overthrowing the only quibble ever used against the origin of the Book of Mormon, the book itself would do it, and thus we shall now do.

Solomon Spalding was a Presbyterian minister, and entertaining the same views of that body would never think of writing a religious book holding such vastly different views as the Book of Mormon does. One is diametrically contrary to the other. Had it been written by a Presbyterian clergyman some resemblance would inevitably crop out, but the following comparison will be sufficient to forever controvert the idea that Solomon Spalding had a hand in its creation.

Had Solomon Spalding written the Book of Mormon, or any other religious book for that matter, he would have denied the presence of miracles in these days, but the Book of Mormon says:

For it shall come to pass in that day, that the churches which are built up, and not unto the Lord, when the one shall say unto the other, Behold, I, I am the Lord's; and the other shall say, I, I am the Lord's, and thus shall every one say, . . . and they shall teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance. And they deny the power of God, the Holy One of Israel; and they say unto the people, Harken unto us, and hear ye our precept; for behold, there is no God to-day, for the Lord and the Redeemer hath done his work, and he hath given his power unto men. Behold, hearken ye unto my precept; if they shall say there is a miracle wrought, by the hand of the Lord, believe it not; for this day he is not a God of miracles.—Page 102.

And again I speak unto you, who deny the revelations of God, and say that they are done away, that there are no revelations, nor prophecies, nor gifts, nor healing, nor speaking with tongues, and the interpretation of tongues. Behold, I say unto you, he that denieth these things, knoweth not the gospel of Christ, yea, he has not read the scriptures; if so, he does not understand them. For do we not read that God is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever; and in him there is no variableness neither shadow of changing. And now, if ye have imagined up unto yourselves a god who doth vary, and in him there is shadow of changing, then have ye imagined up unto yourselves a god who is not a God of miracles.—Page 498.

This is a stinging rebuke to the Presbyterian idea of God, and one who was taught in their schools would not tolerate the idea of God working miracles in these days. This has been the bone of contention of many.

Spalding would have denied there were any prophets since the days of Christ, but the Book of Mormon had them in actual existence till four hundred years after that time, and spoke of them and their work in the very day in which Spalding lived.

He would have advocated a church without apostles, but the Book of Mormon had them and gives their names. (See page 459.) He would have no other apostles save the twelve Jesus selected at Jerusalem; the Book of Mormon had successors. He would have taught that the gospel was given for a few elect—foreordained of God, but the Book of Mormon says:

And because of the redemption of man, which came by Jesus Christ, they are brought back into the presence of the Lord; yea, this is wherein all men are redeemed, because the death of Christ bringeth to pass the resurrection, which bringeth to pass a redemption from an endless sleep, from which sleep all men shall be awoke by the power of God, when the trump shall sound.—Page 498.

He would have taught that sprinkling was just as good as immersion for Christian baptism, but the Book of Mormon says:

Verily I say unto you, that whoso repenteth of his sins through your words, and desireth to be baptized in my name, on this wise shall ye baptize them: Behold, ye shall go down and stand in the water, and in my name shall ye baptize them.—Page 444.

He would have taught that remission of sins cometh by faith and prayer, but the Book of Mormon says:

And the first-fruits of repentance is baptism; and baptism cometh by faith, unto the fulfilling the commandments; and the fulfilling the commandments bringeth remission of sins.—Page 541.

He would have contended that anybody had the authority to perform this ordinance, but the Book of Mormon says:

And it came to pass that King Limhi and many of his people were desirous to be baptized; but there was none in the land that had the authority from God.—Page 185.

He would have thought that little infants should be sprinkled, or, as he would have termed, baptized, but the Book of Mormon strongly proclaims against this doctrine and says:

Behold, I say unto you, that this thing shall ye teach, repentance and baptism unto those who are accountable and capable of committing sin; yea, teach parents that they must repent and be baptized, and humble themselves as their little children, and they shall all be saved with their little children: and their little children need no repentance, neither baptism. . . . Behold I say unto you, that he that supposeth that little children need baptism, is in the gall of bitterness, and in the bonds of iniquity; for he hath neither faith, hope, nor charity.—Page 540.

He would have opposed the principle of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but the Book of Mormon says:

Ye shall have power that on him whom ye shall lay your hands, ye shall give the Holy Ghost.—Page 533.

He would have taught that the preachers were to be supported by the congregations with a princely salary, but the Book of Mormon says:

And when the priests left their labor, to impart the word of God unto the people, the people also left their labors to hear the word of God. And when the priest had imparted unto them the word of God, they all returned again diligently unto their labors; and the priest, not esteeming himself above his hearers; for the preacher was no better than the hearer, neither was the teacher any better than the learner; and thus they were all equal and they did all labor, every man according to his strength.—Page 207.

This does not sound anything like the belief of a modern preacher, does it?

He would have ridiculed the idea of angels coming from God and revealing his will unto man, but the Book of Mormon says:

Or have angels ceased to appear unto the children of men? Or has he withheld the power of the Holy Ghost from them? Or will he, so long as time shall last, or the earth shall stand, or there shall be one man upon the face thereof to be saved? Behold I say unto you, Nay, for it is by faith that miracles are wrought, and it is by faith that angels minister unto men, wherefore if these things have ceased, wo be unto the children of men.—Page 538.

After noting the extreme difference in the comparison, and Reverend Spalding being prejudicial in favor of the doctrine of the Presbyterian faith, does any one still suppose he would write a work so profoundly adverse to the faith of his choice? I could as easily believe Shakespeare wrote Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea. Suppose there should arise a controversy as to the authorship of the above novel, some holding it was written by Shakespeare, others by Jules Verne, its author, the best and most honorable way of determining the question would be to compare it with the spirit and style of Hamlet or some other masterpiece of the famous poet.

The numerous prophecies, in the Book of Mormon, and their complete fulfillment, is infallible proof of its authenticity and should challenge the attention of the most skeptical. Man can make predictions, but he can not always make them come to pass.

1. The Book of Mormon says:

And my words shall hiss forth unto the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people, which are of the house of Israel. And because my words shall hiss forth, many of the Gentiles shall say, A bible, a bible, we have got a bible, and there can not be any more bible.—Page 105.

Almost every day since the coming forth of the Book of Mormon is this prophecy literally fulfilled, many of its opponents using the exact words of the prophecy. How could Joseph Smith, or any other man, tell just what many would say in opposing the book? They could predict some opposition, but to foretell the precise words many should use in their opposition is beyond their prescience.

2. It was to come forth in the day when the people should deny the power of miracles, as the prophet Nephi declares:

Behold, hearken ye unto my [man's] precept: if they say there is a miracle wrought, by the hand of the Lord, believe it not; for this day he is not a God of miracles.—Page 102.

3. The deaf should "hear the words of the book." (Page 102.) This would have been the last thing a person would think of predicting with the least expectation of it ever being fulfilled unaided by the help of God. The fulfilling of this is absolutely dependent upon God, hence bears no resemblance to the work of an impostor. Many are the witnesses who can testify to the fact that their ears have been unstopped by the power of God to hear the words of the Book of Mormon.

4. And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles: and there shall be no kings upon the land who shall raise up unto the Gentiles. And I will fortify this land against all other nations; and he that fighteth against Zion shall perish, saith God; for he that raiseth up a king against me, shall perish.—Page 76.

Who can read of the terrible conflict of the Revolutionary War, where a mere handful of raw, undisciplined plowmen, without money, war-implements, or friend, in a new country, harrassed on all sides by the savages and Hessians, besides their internal troubles, threw off the yoke of the mightiest empire that ever marshaled soldiers for war, without seeing the hand of God in the cause of the colonies? Several other attempts have been made to disrupt our union, but failed. Had the fortunes of war gone southward in 1865, doubtless our nation would now be subservient to the European powers. The smoke of battle had scarcely cleared away from the fearful war of the rebellion when the French Government sought to establish Maximilian, an Austrian archduke, emperor of Mexico, until the United States was again called upon to vindicate this divine prediction that whosoever "raiseth up a king against me shall perish," and demanded the withdrawal of the French troops, which was done; and on June 19, 1867, Maximilian, with two of his generals, was shot to death.

Had Joseph Smith or any one else the power to control the tide of war to agree with their human predictions? Nothing but the foreknowledge of God could foretell this.

5. For after the book of which I have spoken shall come forth, and be written unto the Gentiles, and sealed up again unto the Lord, there shall be many which shall believe the words which are written, and they shall carry them forth unto the remnant of our seed.—Page 106.

A failure of this prophecy alone would be sufficient to brand the book a fraud, but since this prophecy has been literally fulfilled by hundreds of thousands believing and accepting it as a divine record, among whom are some of the most intelligent, it is given the stamp of divine approval.

Moreover, since the "remnant," the American Indians, have believed it and some among them have preached it, added assurance is given that it had its origin from a higher source than a Presbyterian preacher. In the day when the Book of Mormon came forth the realizing of the above prophecy was as remote as the antipodes of the earth. At that time, and until within a few years ago, the American Indian was "sorely vexing the nation," until many of our leading men in public affairs thought the only way to subjugate them was to exterminate them. In volume 1, pages 179 to 181 of the Church History a full account is given by P. P. Pratt of the Book of Mormon going to the Shawnee and Delaware tribes of Indians, and many of them including their chief, Mr. Pool their interpreter, and other influential Lamanites were so delighted with those missionaries that they built them a house and insisted that they remain all winter and teach them more about this book.

6. Behold, the Lord hath shown unto me great and marvelous things concerning that which must shortly come at that day when these things shall come forth among you. . . . Behold the sword of vengeance hangeth over you; and the time soon cometh that he avengeth the blood of the saints upon you, for he will not suffer their cries any longer.—Page 497.

At the time God set his hand to do this marvelous work, the pride and wickedness among the professed believers in Christ should result in persecuting the saints of God, until their blood would be shed, is clearly set forth by reading the entire page. In this boasted land of liberty where its constitution guarantees to each individual the right of religious dictates, the person who at that time should have asked protection from sanguinary persecution would have been branded as a religious fanatic; however, not since the days of the burning of the nineteen witches (?) at Salem, Massachusetts, has there been a more disgraceful page of American history than the terrible massacre of those innocent men, women, and children at Haun's Mill, Missouri, in 1838, followed six years later by the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith at Carthage jail, Illinois, June 27, 1844. No one with sufficient intelligence to write any kind of a book would think to make a prediction like the above, with the remotest idea of ever lending his influence for the fulfillment of the same in a civilized country like the United States.

7. And after the house of Israel should be scattered, they should be gathered together again, or, in fine, after the Gentiles had received the fullness of the gospel, the natural branches of the olive-tree, or the remnants of the house of Israel, should be grafted in, or come to the knowledge of the true Messiah, their Lord and their Redeemer.—Page 18.

And it came to pass that I, Nephi, spake much unto them concerning these things; yea, I spake unto them concerning the restoration of the Jews, in the latter days; and I did rehearse unto them the words of Isaiah, who spake concerning the restoration of the Jews, or of the house of Israel; and after they were restored, they should no more be confounded, neither should they be scattered again.—Page 31.

It has been eighty years since this prophecy came to light, at which time the idea of the Jews ever gathering to Jerusalem was ridiculed; but note the wonderful change since those days. The question of returning and rebuilding the Holy Land is engaging the minds of some of the most influential Jews from all over the world, while tens of thousands are already gathered there.

8. By the prophetic searchlight of the Book of Mormon are we told the very time when this great change of sentiment shall take place. In speaking of the condition of the people at the time the book shall come forth, the prophet, among other things, says:

But behold, saith the Lord of hosts, I will show unto the children of men, that it is not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field; and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest.—Page 102.

Aside from the coming of Jesus Christ to earth this is one of the most remarkable fulfillments of prophecy. The Book of Mormon was published to the world in 1830, at the time Lebanon, or Jerusalem, was still smoldering under the wreck and ruin of ages. No refreshing rains had fallen upon her parched soil for eighteen hundred years. A few wandering Arabs were the only signs of life, the curse of God still hanging over it. But, lo and behold, in 1852, just twenty-two years after the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, the "former and latter rains" were restored to this land of desolation. Vegetation and fruits and grain of all kinds began to spring forth; men and money began gravitating that way; the smiles of heaven rested upon it; and at the present time it bids fair to become a sharp rival in the commercial affairs of the world. Not wishing to leave this subject upon my bare assertion, I shall give a few extracts from men who ought to know whereof they speak. In speaking of Jerusalem, Chambers' Encyclopedia says:

It has the same bright sun and unclouded sky, as well as the early and latter rain, which, however, is diminished in quantity, owing to the destruction of trees.—Vol. 7, p. 11.

The botany of Syria and Palestine differs but little from that of Asia Minor, which is one of the most rich and varied on the globe. Of the vegetables there are many varieties, as the egg-plant, pumpkin, asparagus, lettuce, melon, and cucumber. Palestine is especially distinguished for its wild flowers, of which there are more than five hundred varieties. The geranium, pink, poppy, narcissus, honeysuckle, oleander, Jessamine, tulip, and iris are abundant. The various grains are also very largely cultivated.—Smith's Bible Dictionary, revised and edited by Reverend F. N. and M. A. Peloubet, pp. 478, 479.

I have seen much good country in Europe and America, but none to compare with Palestine; its fruitfulness is uncommon, and the climate the most delightful; even in winter I did not see the least sort of frost, and vegetables of every sort were growing in perfection in gardens. It is a fact that the rain and dew are restored; recently, in 1853, the former and latter rains were restored, to the astonishment of the natives.

This is an account given by Louis Van Buren, who was there and published his observations November 14, 1867. (See From Palmyra to Independence, p. 125.) All this is in perfect harmony with the prophet Isaiah:

And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.—Isaiah 61: 4.

Joseph Smith, Solomon Spalding, or most anybody could write a book and in it make all sorts of wild predictions; but to control the elements, restoring the rains to Palestine, turning the hearts of scattered Israel toward their promised land, influencing the nations of earth to remove the restrictions which had bound them so long to abject servitude, the God of Jacob alone can do. O how wonderful are the ways of God in consummating his holy purposes! If Joseph Smith was such a base impostor as many say he was, how does it come that conditions over which he or no one else had power to control, all so marvelously conspire to accentuate his work? Is it possible the gods are angry with the inhabitants of earth, and they have employed him to help them wreak vengeance by leading them to deception? Verily, no, but the God of heaven has "set his hand again the second time" to gather downtrodden Israel back to their beloved land of blessed memory, that the gospel of their long looked for Messiah may go to them, as well as to the Gentiles, in the "dispensation of the fullness of times when all things shall be gathered in one."

But behold, it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall say unto him to whom he shall deliver the book, Take these words which are not sealed, and deliver them to another, that he may show them unto the learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee. And the learned shall say, Bring hither the book and I will read them: And now, because of the glory of the world, and to get gain, will they say this, and not for the glory of God. And the man shall say, I can not bring the book, for it is sealed. Then shall the learned say, I can not read it.—Page 101.

Every single detail in this prophetic utterance was verified when Martin Harris took some of the characters to Professor Anthon of New York City. We could give Martin Harris' full account of his visit to this professor of Greek language, but the testimony of one who had no sympathy with the work of Joseph Smith will have decidedly more weight. In replying to a letter written to him by E. D. Howe, who was engaged in writing a book against the Saints, the Professor says:

Some years ago a plain, apparently simple-hearted farmer, called on me with a note from Doctor Mitchell of our city, now dead, requesting me to decipher, if possible, a paper which the farmer would hand me and which Doctor Mitchell confessed he had been unable to understand. . . . This paper was in fact a singular scroll. It consisted of all kinds of crooked characters, disposed in columns, and had evidently been prepared by some person who had before him at the time a book containing various alphabets, Greek and Hebrew letters, crosses and flourishes. Roman letters inverted or placed sideways, were ranged in perpendicular columns, and the whole ended in a rude delineation of a circle, decked with various strange marks, and evidently copied after the Mexican calendar given by Humboldt.—From Palmyra to Independence, p. 136.

While it is very possible Joseph Smith, Harris, and others could concoct a scheme to agree with the Book of Mormon relative to the visit to Professor Anthon, it is hardly probable they would have selected a learned man in dead languages to examine a fraud. A deceiver will always maneuver to prevent his work going to a competent connoisseur. Another thing worthy of note is Professor Anthon's statement, corroborating the position of the Book of Mormon, where he says the one preparing the characters had "evidently copied after the Mexican calendar given by Humboldt." The reason for this similarity is in the fact, the people of whom the Book of Mormon purports to give a history and the Mexicans had a common origin.

10. And the Gentiles are lifted up in the pride of their eyes, and have stumbled, because of the greatness of their stumbling-block, that they have built up many churches; nevertheless they put down the power and the miracles of God, and preach up unto themselves their own wisdom, and their own learning, that they may get gain, and grind upon the face of the poor; and there are many churches built up which cause envyings, and strife, and malice.—Page 98.

The Prophet Nephi plainly sets forth the confused and conglomerated condition of the religious world in the last days, or at the time of the coming forth of a book. All those churches are of human origin, built up by the wisdom of men, hence susceptible to constant change, or in the words of the angel to Joseph Smith when revealing to him the place of hiding of the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, "their creeds are all wrong." This statement was made at the very introduction of this latter-day work, and for which Joseph Smith called down upon himself and family the combined and unrelenting hatred of the world. The plain and straightforward way in which he condemned the creeds of the churches is strong proof of his divine mission. A deceiver would have used flattery to first secure their favor. A false prophet most always prophesies good things.

That the angel and Book of Mormon told the truth in regard to the insufficiency of the creeds, we shall call on their friends to testify and thus confirm the truthfulness of this inspired record.

Our first witness is Reverend T. DeWitt Talmage, of world-wide reputation. While preaching from the text, 2 Timothy 3: 1-5, he said:

I simply state a fact when I say that in many places the church is surrendering and the world conquering. Where there is one brought into the kingdom of God through Christian instrumentality, there are ten men dragged down to dissipation.

Mr. Spurgeon:

Those of whom we thought better things are turning aside one by one from the fundamentals of the faith. Through and through, I believe the very heart of England is honeycombed with a damnable infidelity which dares still to go into the pulpit and call itself Christianity.

Reverend Passmore, among the most eminent of Methodist divines, says in discoursing from the text "Feed my sheep":

Studying the ministry of our church from the standpoint of the above scripture, I am impressed with the fact that the greatest failure of the age is the ministry. I find the ministry in our church, as a class, the most worldly, unfaithful, and cowardly that it has ever been. The church is worldly, formal, and unspiritual, and has lost her power for good; yet the church is on as high a plane as her leaders.

For making the very same statement, Joseph Smith was shamefully persecuted. But seventy-five years have passed away since he alarmed the religious world by telling them they were all wrong, and their creeds an abomination. With considerable humiliation they now come forward and acknowledge the same thing. The only difference, the one claimed to receive his knowledge from on high, and the other from man.

Hear the scathing criticism of Reverend Lewis T. Watson (Episcopalian) in an address before the Omaha clergy:

Do we not know the major part of the American people are but pagans, veneered over with a thin coating of Christianity? Truly they need converting as much as the heathen of old, and what is more, it is just as hard to convert American pagans as it was Greek epicureans or Roman politicians. The preaching that is to bring America into the fellowship of the apostolic church must be accompanied by a revival of apostolic gifts, and I believe it will be.

Reverend Watson is here pleading for the very thing Joseph Smith gave to the world three quarters of a century ago, viz., "apostolic gifts."

The Christian Leader, November 23, 1897, in speaking of the weakness of the creeds says:

They have changed the order of heaven. They have changed baptism to the sprinkling of water. They have substituted feelings for faith, dreams, and all such as evidence of pardon. They have made unbelieving sinners members of a living body. These churches never can take the world for Christ until they return to the simplicity of the gospel, both in preaching and practice.

Latter Day Saints have been advocating a "return to the simplicity of the gospel" for seventy-five years.

Hear the straightforward confession of Reverend Charles W. Savage in speaking upon the subject, "Is modern Christianity a fraud?"

What is modern Christianity? It is not that divine system of religion foretold by the prophets and established by Jesus of Nazareth. Modern Christianity is no more like the faith that Jesus taught than the paste diamond is like the real stone, but the sham is not really deceiving many, for the soul detects the false and cries out for the Christ of the New Testament who was born in a manger, who went about doing good, and died on the cross for sinful men. Modern Christianity is a faith which has been manufactured to suit the unchanged hearts of a vast multitude in the present day. The modern church is the church of prophecy. (See 2 Timothy 3: 1-5.)

In concluding this array of witnesses we add no less than the celebrated Doctor Philip Schaff, D. D., LL. D.

We need a theology and a confession that is more human than Calvinism, more divine than Armenianism, and more Christian and Catholic than either; a confession that will prepare the way for the great work of the future—the reunion of Christendom in the creed of Christ.—Presidency and Priesthood, p. 211.

Now, dear reader, we will present to you some of the fruits of the book under consideration, and kindly ask you to examine them in the light of the rule given by Jesus Christ. True this book came to the world in a very marvelous way, as foretold by the Heaven-favored Prophet Isaiah in the twenty-ninth chapter, but do not discard its beautiful teachings because of this. Do you not know this was the only reason the Jews rejected Jesus Christ? Not that they could detect the least flaw with the doctrine he taught, but simply because he claimed to have come into the world by the express will of God. Had he made no claim to the power of God by which he perfected his marvelous mission he would have received the commendations of the world. The reason for the death of Jesus Christ is found in Mark 14: 61-63:

Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? . . . I am: and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. Then the high priest rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any further witnesses? Ye have heard the blasphemy: what think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death.

Because God was with him he was condemned to death! And because God had something to do in bringing forth the long lost record of a branch of the house of Israel, the world has pronounced it unfit to be read, and not unlike those who so shamefully condemned Christ, have never examined into the merits of the book! To all those who would like to know something of its true purpose and merit, we excerpt the following:

An abridgment taken from the book of Ether: also, which is a record of the people of Jared; who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, when they were building a tower to get to heaven: which is to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off for ever; and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations.—Quotation taken from Moroni's preface found on fly-leaf.

And it came to pass that I beheld the remnant of the seed of my brethren, and also the book of the Lamb of God, which had proceeded forth from the mouth of the Jews, [the Bible,] that it came forth from the Gentiles, unto the remnant of the seed of my brethren; and after it had come forth unto them, I beheld other books, which come forth by the power of the Lamb, from the Gentiles unto them, unto the convincing of the Gentiles, and the remnant of the seed of my brethren, and also the Jews, who were scattered upon all the face of the earth, that the records of the prophets and of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, are true.—Page 26.

The object, then, of the book so much misunderstood is an excellent one, and is worthy of the utmost respect of all believers in the divine mission of Jesus Christ and his apostles. A book, the sole object of its mission being to convince the unbelieving of the word and works of Jesus Christ, should have a place among all Christian people.

Wherefore, if ye shall be obedient to the commandments, and endure to the end, ye shall be saved at the last day.—Page 52.

Behold, my beloved brethren, remember the words of your God, and pray unto him continually by day, and give thanks unto his holy name by night. Let your hearts rejoice, and behold how great the covenants of the Lord, and how great his condescensions unto the children of men; and because of his greatness, and his grace and mercy, he has promised unto us that our seed shall not utterly be destroyed, according to the flesh, but that he would preserve them and in future generations, they shall become a righteous branch unto the house of Israel.—Page 75.

Righteousness, prayer, and rejoicing are taught. No one should object to this:

And now, my beloved brethren, I would that ye should come unto Christ, who is the Holy One of Israel, and partake of his salvation, and the power of his redemption. Yea, come unto him and offer your whole souls as an offering unto him, and continue in fasting and praying, and endure to the end, and as the Lord liveth, ye will be saved.—Page 138.

That any one should object to any book earnestly inviting all to come to Christ and be saved, is either due to ignorance or mischief. Is it not much nobler to encourage everything that is calculated to do good? Hear the grand counsel given in the following:

And again: Believe that ye must repent of your sins and forsake them, and humble yourselves before God; and ask in sincerity of heart that he would forgive you. And now, if you believe all these things, see that ye do them. . . . And ye will not have a mind to injure one another, but to live peaceably, and to render to every man according to that which is his due. And ye will not suffer your children, that they go hungry, or naked; neither will ye suffer that they transgress the laws of God, and fight and quarrel one with another, and serve the devil, who is the master of sin, or who is the evil spirit which hath been spoken of by our fathers; he being an enemy to all righteousness; but ye will teach them to walk in the ways of truth and soberness; ye will teach them to love one another, and to serve one another; and also, ye yourselves, will succor those that stand in need of your succor; ye will administer of your substance unto him that standeth in need; and ye will not suffer that the beggar putteth up his petition to you in vain, and turn him out to perish.—Pages 150, 151.

Can not all Christian people indorse a book that teaches repentance from all sins; that teaches truth, love, and soberness, and to avoid injuring one another; to provide for your dear children, and suffer them not to transgress the laws of God by fighting or quarreling with one another; that teaches you to feed the hungry and succor the needy? If this kind of doctrine makes a "Mormon" out of you, then every one who expresses a belief in the Bible must also be one, for the Bible teaches nothing superior to this. Is there a book extant to-day teaching anything better than the following?

And now my beloved brethren, I have said these things unto you, that I might awaken you to a sense of your duty to God, that ye may walk blameless before him; that ye may walk after the holy order of God, after which ye have been received. And now I would that ye should be humble, and be submissive, and gentle; easy to be entreated; full of patience and long-suffering; being temperate in all things; being diligent in keeping the commandments of God at all times; asking for whatsoever things ye stand in need, both spiritual and temporal; always returning thanks unto God for whatsoever things ye do receive, and see that ye have faith, hope, and charity, and then ye will always abound in good works; and may the Lord bless you, and keep your garments spotless, that ye may at last be brought to sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the holy prophets who have ever been since the world began, having your garments spotless, even as their garments are spotless in the kingdom of heaven, to go no more out.—Page 224.

We could multiply text upon text of similar character but apprehend this will be sufficient for the fair-minded reader. Will close this topic with several quotations touching the sanctity of the marriage covenant. Many have thought the Book of Mormon sanctioned polygamy, but let the book speak for itself:

And now it came to pass that the people of Nephi, under the reign of the second king, began to grow hard in their hearts and indulge themselves somewhat in wicked practices, such as like unto David of old, desiring many wives and concubines.—Page 113.

Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts.—Page 116.

For behold, he [Noah] did not keep the commandments of God, but he did walk after the desires of his own heart, and he had many wives and concubines.—Page 163.

And it came to pass that Riplakish did not do that which was right in the sight of the Lord, for he did have many wives and concubines.—Page 519.

The above are plain and explicit touching the evil practice of polygamy, rightly calling it an “abominable” and “wicked practice.” No one can be an honest believer in the Book of Mormon and believe in polygamy.

With the teaching of the Book of Mormon so pure, ennobling, and morally elevating, so unstintedly opposed to all that is evil and degrading, as these quotations, as well as the entire book unreservedly reveal, why can it not be accepted by all Christian people? Thousands answer, Because it claims to have emanated from God, and we do not believe God reveals his mind and will to man in these days, nor do we believe any good thing could come from such an ignoramus as “Joe Smith.” Just so it was with Jesus Christ; they overlooked the grand doctrine he brought to the world, and in their blindness asked, “Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?” and because he persistently affirmed that his work was from God, “judged him guilty of death.” “By their fruits ye shall know them.” This is the only true and honorable rule of knowing.

If there still remains a doubt as to the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, it can be fully settled by honestly complying with the closing words of the book:

And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost; and by the power of the Holy Ghost, ye may know the truth of all things.—Page 544.

Can any one read these solemn words without discerning the sincerity and honesty of the human instrumentalities at least? Does this look like the work of a deceiver?

Is it likely a counterfeiter, if caught in the act of coining spurious money, would insist upon the officer taking the coin to an expert assayer for examination? Not much. But on the other hand he would try his very best to keep it from going there, knowing his deception would be revealed. If Joseph Smith was such a base impostor as thousands believe him to be, and for deceptive purposes fabricated the Book of Mormon, is it any more likely he would so earnestly urge upon all who may read it to take the matter to the highest source of all truth, by the very rule that unlocks the heavens, even prayer in the name of Jesus Christ? If Joseph Smith, or any other person, was shrewd enough to palm off such a wonderful book as is the Book of Mormon on the world, he would not be fool enough to recommend the rule by which his wicked scheme of deception could so easily be detected.

Now, dear reader, we leave the matter with you, and before you pass judgment upon this much misunderstood book, go to your God in prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ, with no other desire than to know the truth, and as truly as the Lord liveth, he will make known unto you whether it be true or false. This is your grand privilege. No one can hinder you from going to your secret chamber in prayer. Will you let these glorious privileges go by which are so graciously offered you on such easy terms, and pander to an unbelieving and prejudiced world?

We gladly rest the merits of the Book of Mormon on these two divinely recommended rules: “If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God” (James 1:5), and “Ye shall know them by their fruits” (Matthew 7:16).

AS IT IS WRITTEN.

The Bible has been much abused by scientists. All that men are pleased to call science is believed by some to be true, and if the Bible does not accord with science then the Bible is in error, for surely the wise men of this wise age can not be mistaken. There is the evolution of the earth in the story of geology, and the evolution of life. True the scientists are not really satisfied, as there are still a few missing links, and one of them is spontaneous generation. God has spoken and caused it to be written, so that men may know,—mark you, not man, but God, said, “Let there be light, and there was light.” So the first thing created belonging to this earth was light. “God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day.” Do we understand that this day was a day of twenty-four hours, as we now know it? We all know when the sun sets in the west that evening has come; when the sun rises in the east it is morning, so the evening and the morning is a day.

The infidel and the learned among men have long laughed at the story of the flood—that the windows of heaven were opened and it rained forty days and forty nights, and the whole earth was covered with water. But one thing is sure, the waters are here to this day, and there is as yet only one fourth of the earth out of the water. The other three fourths is still under the waters and in some places from five to seven miles under the waters. Then surely there was a flood. The earth to-day, as men know it, has great deserts, rocky mountains, and barren plains, and only in spots does it produce the food that enables man and beast to sustain life. Surely it is the wreck of some former grandeur. "And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters. And God made the firmament and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament: and it was so. And God called the firmament Heaven. And the evening and the morning were the second day." Taking this as it reads we learn that the waters were divided, and far above the fleecy clouds stood those waters. The earth enjoyed a greenhouse climate, and brought forth in abundance with but little toil; but because of the wickedness of men the windows of heaven were opened and the waters above the firmament fell to the earth. God now made a new covenant with men and set his bow in the cloud. It is true this is not the way the learned scientists have it, for they tell us the earth was once star-dust. Yes, a mass of star-dust once upon a time got to whirling, spinning, and twisting, and shook itself into what is now our old Mother Earth. Ask who made the star-dust? Ah, but do not ask questions of a scientist, or say you do not believe his story. It makes him angry.

Let any person make good use of his reasoning faculties a few minutes and he will find the story of creation as told by the Bible is much more in accord with common sense, than the story of creation as the learned men have it; for the learned man not only makes the thing create itself, but it also creates its own substance,—the old story of something out of nothing in a new dress. The Bible story tells of a great Almighty Power far above the knowledge of men, who made all things by his own power and wisdom.

The sun was made to rule the day. Then there was a day before the sun, and the sun is not the day, but the ruler of the day; and that day is the bright light we see known as twilight. The sun is a great light, and a ruler, and coöperates with the earth to bring the things that grow thereon to perfection. The earth has power to bring forth the grass, herbs, fruit-trees, and all things that grow thereon. Then the earth must have life; for it takes life not only to beget life but to bring forth life. Enoch writes that he heard the earth mourn, and say, "Woe, woe is me, the mother of men"; and we read that the earth will die, nevertheless it shall be quickened again. Truth is eternal. Truth alone shall stand. The word of God shall stand when the wisdom of the wise shall perish.

TRAINING A CHILD IN COURAGE.

Among the ancient Greeks much attention was given to training the young in such principles of conduct as were held in high esteem by the people of that day and time, and among these the principle of courage was included.

The lack of courage and of resolution is a very grave defect in the character of either a man or woman, and it is one from which the most serious consequences may result. Especially is this the case if we include that other virtue so closely allied to courage as to seemingly constitute a very part of it, namely: Presence of mind.

The awful tragedy of the New York excursion boat, General Slocum, in which over one thousand people met a sudden and terrible death, it is now held might have been entirely averted by courage and presence of mind upon the part of one individual. This man whose name was Oakley, saw the fire while it was yet confined to the barrel of oil in which the flames originated and which could have been thrown into the river before they had time to spread. Instead of doing this, however, the frightened man in his confusion knocked over the barrel, thus spreading the flames, and rushing out left the door open behind him, through which the wind entered, fanning them into a fiercer blaze.

It is not always that loss of presence of mind and want of courage result in such terrible disaster, but they seldom, if ever, result in good. If we, as parents, fully realized the extent to which, all through the journey of life, demands will be made upon our children for the exercise of this quality, do you not think we would be more careful in training them in it? The lives of our children are not always to be passed within the sheltering walls of home, neither are they always to be surrounded by home environments. They are born into the home but are in reality a part of the world, and sooner or later they must enter into its strife, and take part in its ceaseless action and conflicts. Here in a thousand ways they will constantly be called upon to exercise this virtue, and if they have never been trained in its use life will often become a discouraging battle to them, even if they do not faint and fall by the way. As with many other things of importance in life, so it often is with this. Parents, through want of proper forethought, often allow their children to form injurious habits—habits which in after-years it becomes almost impossible for them to correct or their children to overcome, and sometimes they even go so far as not only to allow, but themselves aid, in the formation of these habits.

To illustrate: The child suddenly falls and hurts himself, his head coming in contact with the floor. He screams and the fond but injudicious mother hastens to him and in order to quiet his cries, she stamps her foot upon the naughty floor, scolding it vigorously for hurting her precious darling. In time the child ceases his cries. The seed planted has already germinated and soon slipping from his mother's lap he strikes at the floor, repeating the words of his mother: "Nauty foor! hurt Bobby."

The mother returns to her work and the incident is forgotten, but its impression is stamped upon the memory of her child, and when a few years later she finds herself wondering why it is that her boy shows so little fortitude—is ready to cry upon the least occasion and always lays upon others the blame for mischances which most often he alone is responsible for, it never once enters her mind that she sowed the first seed for the production of this harvest and that all along she has helped in many ways to cultivate the crop which is being so abundantly produced. We all know that pain is not lessened by giving way to the utterance of shrieks and cries. This can and should be taught to the child very early in life. Not by denying him our sympathy, for in genuine sympathy is found the cure of half the ills of life, but by teaching him that the best way to bear pain is to be brave and have the courage to endure it silently, if possible, and if not possible then with just as little crying or moaning as possible. Encourage him to be manly. Say to him "Yes, dear, I know it hurts, I know it is hard to bear, but crying won't help it one bit. Now be a little man, stop crying, and just see how much better you can bear it." Encourage him to be brave to restrain his feelings—lead his mind to other thoughts and in nine cases out of ten you will have helped him to gain a victory.

All through life our children will not only have painful and unpleasant things to bear, but they will have many things of a like nature to do and these too they should be taught to do with promptness; and courage is demanded for doing as much as for bearing. An unpleasant task is demanded of the child, and he is allowed to wait and complain of its hardship instead of being given to understand that it simply must be done, and that too, done quickly.

To many parents this might, upon a first glance, appear harsh; but in reality it is the greatest kindness. By doing this you are training the child both in courage and decision of character. You are also proving to him that many of the things which he holds back from doing because he dreads the pain or hardship which they cost, are really not hard, not painful, if only he has the courage to take right hold and do them, instead of waiting, dreading, and holding back because he is too cowardly to grasp right hold and do.

Nor is this all which he will discover. He will find not only that the thing he dreaded was not half as hard or painful as he had expected, but that the sense of manliness, of satisfaction which comes as a result of its accomplishment, is a sufficient reward for any labor or pain it may have cost, and in time he will know that the pain one suffers in imagination who stands back dreading that which at last must be done, is far more than is felt in the actual doing of the thing itself. Promptness and cheerfulness in the doing of anything, especially of that which is painful or disagreeable, lead to courage and self-reliance—two grand factors of success in life.

But if the physical were the only kind of courage upon which life makes demands, while the question of the necessity of cultivating it would still be an important one, it would be far less grave than it becomes when we take into account the great demands made upon moral courage. It often requires more courage upon the part of our children and ourselves to stand in the defense of that which is right, as opposed to that which is wrong, than is demanded to stand in the way of flying bullets, or before the cannon's mouth. Scarcely a day of life passes in which a demand is not made upon the moral courage of both ourselves and the children God has given us.

Especially is this true of the age in which we are living, for many things which were once condemned as wrong by any one professing to be a Christian are now not only tolerated but indulged in to such an extent that one must have a good share of moral courage to enable him at all times to call things by their right names and stand for the principles of truth and righteousness as taught by Christ and his disciples. Upon every hand there are temptations to which it requires much courage upon our part to say, No. And if it be so with us, how much more is it true of our children, and how does it stand us in hand to strengthen their powers of resistance by training them in the virtue of courage which will fortify them against temptation, by the strengthening of their powers to resist it?

Hymn, No. 179 Saints' Hymnal; roll-call of members; response, a quotation having reference to courage; paper, "Instances of the courage of Scripture characters, with lessons drawn therefrom"; paper to be followed by discussion; discussion of "Half hours with parents," No. 12, with the aid of questions given below; business; hymn, No. 14; dismissal prayer.

Questions on paper, "Half hours with parents," No. 12: Is courage necessary for a woman as well as for a man? What virtue is closely allied to courage? What act of courage might have averted the General Slocum disaster? Give instances of your own experience or observation where lack of courage has resulted in disaster. Is it of any advantage to children to be courageous? Can parents do anything to develop that virtue in their children? Give some illustrations of ways in which they may be trained to be cowardly. What ancient nation took especial care to train its children in courage? Give some examples of the ways in which they used to train them in courage. In what way does courage help us in our labors? When are our duties and tasks easy for us? Is the satisfaction of accomplishing a difficult task worth anything to us? Tell how courage may be necessary in helping us to stand for the right. Does it require more courage to stand for our religious conviction now than it used to? If so, why?

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

SR. AVA E. DUTTON, Milton Junction, Wisconsin, writes to the general home department superintendent under date of September 26: "They say the unexpected always happens and I certainly think it has in the case of this district, for we now have a district Sunday-school association, two schools organized, a third will be in a few weeks, and there are the best of prospects for another school or a very large home class. So we feel pretty well over the start. And now the task comes to keep things moving, and with the Master's help we will do our best with the matters. . . ."

"We had a splendid reunion at Madison. More of the district were brought together than ever before at our reunions; splendid prayer-meetings and good sermons. . . . One afternoon was given to Sunday-school and Religio work. The last Saturday evening the young people gave an entertainment which was pronounced good. . . . The Daughters of Zion held two sessions, one of which was a business session. Sr. Hield is in charge of the Daughters of Zion district work."

This is the new district organization of which we made mention a short time ago. We are indeed glad to learn of the success and seeming strong determination to put forth effort to make the work a permanent success. Our prayers and our best wishes are for their continued prosperity and blessing.

OUR worthy associate worker and first assistant superintendent, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, wrote under date of September 29. It was not intended for the public eye but we believe all will be glad to read it as we were: "My work has been more successful and more appreciated, and more enjoyable at reunions this year than ever before, indicating an awakening along educational lines, betokening better work and more lasting training.

"The demand and necessity for a course in normal training peculiar to our needs is increasing and more realized. Who will be our Comenius?"

Reunion Tour of the Second Assistant Superintendent.

From Des Moines, after a day at home and a short stop at St. Joseph, I went to Stewartville, Missouri, to be in attendance at the reunion of the Far West District, or rather of "North Missouri," as Charley would have us say.

Arrangements had been made at the business-meeting of the reunion the previous year for the auxiliary societies to have one session each day, i. e., instead of having three preaching services, to have two preaching services and one session of either Religio or Sunday-school. While this was an experiment, it was very gratifying indeed to see how it was appreciated by those in attendance. So well pleased were the people with an afternoon session at four o'clock that it was arranged with the committee in charge to occupy every afternoon in like manner, thus making two sessions daily for auxiliary work, at fifteen minutes to eleven in the forenoon and at four in the afternoon. And did the people tire of it? And was it a success? Well, the enthusiasm held up to the last session, and in the business meeting to make arrangements for next year it was voted that the same arrangements be made, and we did not have to ask for it even. It was good indeed, to enjoy the interest and good feeling and to realize that so many have a desire to learn more and to do their work better. I should not fail to note that on Sunday only one session was held of auxiliary work, and that at four o'clock, Sunday-school.

The nature of the work done was holding regular sessions of both Sunday-school and Religio, endeavoring to make them model sessions so that those living in the small branches and those isolated and little acquainted with the method of carrying on the work, might be especially helped, and also to furnish instruction to the numerous children upon the camp-ground; also institute work for the purpose of educating in the various phases of both Sunday-school and Religio work. Some of the subjects discussed at the institute sessions were: "Home department," "Special days," "Records and reports," "Program work," "How to interest those not interested," "What constitutes a Sunday-school," "What constitutes a Religio," "Teachers and teaching."

While I was placed in charge of the work of both auxiliaries by the district officers of the Far West District, I was ably assisted by Carrie Lewis, David Schmidt, Ben Constance, Zilla Moore, Arch McCord, and many others; in fact, every one asked to do something to help did the best they could, and it would be impossible to name all. The reunion committee did all they could to make the meetings of the auxiliaries a success, believing as they did that they are an essential part of a reunion.

This was the third time I had attended the meeting at this place, and I feel sure that a long step ahead had been taken since our first work of this kind done there. The home department especially deserves mention as being in quite good condition and having advanced beyond what it is in many places.

Trusting the good work so well begun may continue to improve and that much good may be accomplished, and that a more profitable season even may be had next year, I subscribe myself,

In bonds,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

A Word to the Wise.

Do you have a Sunday-school paper in your school? A superintendent who was asked this question said in reply, "No, because there is so much other reading to be had in these days of free libraries and cheap periodicals in such wide circulation that the children do not need Sunday-school papers, as they once did." It might be well for those who feel this way to inquire into the matter of this abundance of "other reading." A clean, well-edited, attractive-looking Sunday-school paper has a spiritual influence and value that a great deal of this "other reading" does not have. The day has not yet come when the Sunday-school periodical can be dispensed with on the plea that the children have so much "other reading" that they do not need it.—Selected.

The Precentor.

Some people have the impression that "any one" can lead the singing in the Sunday-school, if only that person can "beat time" and "lead off" in the singing. Those who have had wide experiences with Sunday-school music and who know upon what good singing depends are well aware of the fact that is a great fallacy. Just "any one" can not make the singing in the Sunday-school "go," even though that person can "beat time" with accuracy and "lead off" correctly. The leader should have a personality, a certain peculiar magnetism given only to those who love music with a genuine and hearty enthusiasm, and who also love the children they are trying to lead. This is even more important than the possession of a good voice, although the value of a clear, sympathetic and properly trained voice is not to be underestimated. The leader should be a man capable of fully appreciating the sentiment of the hymn. He will then be able to choose hymns adapted to the lesson of the day. I remember visiting a Sunday-school in which ten or twelve of the best singers stood around the piano and helped to lead the singing. Whatever else the music in a Sunday-school lacks, it should not lack enthusiasm, and it takes a good leader to create this.—Selected.

SAINTS SHOULD PURIFY THEMSELVES.

Golden Text.—"The time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?"—1 Peter 4: 17.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

The Golden Text for the intermediate and primary lessons is shortened to the question, "What shall be the end of them that obey not the gospel of God?"

The second primary lesson is a narrative of the destruction of Jerusalem six hundred years before Christ, when the Jews were carried to Babylon to undergo there the seventy years' captivity. This was a punishment upon them for not obeying the word of God given to them through the prophets.

The primary lesson also tells of the destruction of Jerusalem seventy years after Christ; this destruction came as a consequence of rejecting what Peter calls "the gospel of God."

These two stories from history make up the second primary lesson.

The intermediate lesson makes prominent the thought expressed by Peter in the statement in the last line of chapter 4 of his first letter, in which he speaks of God as "a faithful Creator."

As shown in the outline of the intermediate lesson, the prominent topics in this lesson are that the faithful Creator loves us, that he seeks to save us, that he warns us of danger, that he gives us opportunity to escape.

The questions of the first intermediate lesson are based upon the text in Peter's letter. The destruction of Jerusalem which took place seventy years after Christ is mentioned, in connection with Peter's warning of impending trial, but no mention is made in this lesson of the destruction which preceded the seventy years captivity six hundred years before Christ.

The advanced intermediate lesson is based on the statements of certain sections of the Doctrine and Covenants which speak of conditions in the world in this period of time and warn us of impending woe that is to come upon those who obey not the gospel of God.

The matter presented in the intermediate and second primary lessons is enlarged upon in the senior lesson.

This sketch of the lesson may be of some benefit to you in arranging your general review for the school, if you conduct one.

ONE OF THE EVILS OF JERUSALEM.

We have pointed out in the senior lesson that the letters of James and Peter were evidently written about the same time warning the saints of the impending destruction of the city which Jesus had prophesied before his death.

One of the evils James charged upon the rich inhabitants of Jerusalem was the oppression of the poor. He said the cries of those who were defrauded and oppressed had entered into the ears of the Lord.

In the twenty-third chapter of Matthew, where Jesus denounces the sins of the doomed city, we find one of the charges to be that heavy burdens were laid upon men's shoulders by those in authority.

When Jerusalem was in the corrupt condition that preceded its destruction at the time when its people were carried to Babylon, one of the evils against which Ezekiel and Jeremiah proclaimed was the enslavement of the poor by their more powerful brethren contrary to the law of Moses.

Jesus also taught contrary to this in the chapter in which he denounced the corruption of Jerusalem in his day. He bade his disciples remember that they had one master, Christ, and that they were all brethren.

THE GENERAL CONDITION.

In both instances of destruction named in the lesson to-day Jerusalem was in a condition of general corruption. Jesus shows in Matthew 23 that, in that day, the Jewish church was full of pride, high-mindedness, covetousness, hypocrisy, though coupled with much attention to the observance of outward forms of religion.

He said they made long prayers to cover up the seizing of widows' houses, and that they scrupulously paid tithes even of such small things as the garden herbs while they forgot to be merciful and just in their dealings with their brethren. He said they strove to impress men with the belief that they had an abhorrence of committing the least sin while they were in fact guilty of breaking the whole law of God.

Such was the condition of the Jewish church in the time when destruction of Jerusalem was about to come upon it.

Josephus tells us that, at the time when the Romans advanced finally upon the city, it was in the throes of civil war. He says it was engaged in a war on all sides from treacherous crowds of men, and that the people of the city were like a great body torn to pieces. He says the aged men and women were in such distress by their internal calamities, that they wished for the Romans and earnestly hoped for an external war in order to their delivery from their domestic miseries.

The conditions were so bad that even the temple was the scene of bloodshed. Josephus says that "many persons who came hither with great zeal from the ends of the earth, to offer sacrifices at this celebrated place, which was esteemed holy by all mankind, fell down before their own sacrifices themselves, and sprinkled that altar which was venerable among all men, both Greeks and barbarians, with their own blood; till the bodies of strangers were mingled with those of their own country, and those of profane persons with those of the priests, and the blood of all sorts of carcasses stood in lakes in the holy courts themselves."

This is but a glimpse of the turmoil that prevailed throughout the Holy Land at the time when the Roman army came against Jerusalem in its final siege which ended in its destruction. Surely the curse did not come without cause! The internal dissensions of the people were as great a factor in the fall of the city as the outward pressure of the besieging army.

Peter tells us in the lesson of this week that no saint ought to be a busybody in other men's matters.

In connection with the facts of past history which show that the judgment of God has come upon men for sin in the past, the lesson of to-day shows that destruction is predicted concerning the corruption of the world in the last days; and that judgment is predicted to begin first upon those who have blasphemed against the Lord in the midst of his own house.

The Lord is blasphemed against by those who teach abominable things in the name of the Lord, those things which are contrary to the pure gospel of God. Such blasphemy as this has been uttered by people professing to be saints of the latter-days, but, in the Lord's own time, destruction will come upon that giant evil that began in the house of the Lord, and its blasphemous doctrines will be wiped out.

The church of God must be pure; those who will not purify themselves according to the teachings of the gospel will be gathered out of the kingdom before the time of the end shall come.

Editors Herald: Believing that some would like to know of the work in these parts, I write you. I suppose I might write as many do, that it is "onward," but it would require keen sight to see progress.

There seems to be absolutely no interest on the part of the worldly people to hear the gospel, and many of the Saints are in the same condition. It seems to me that the "sleeping-time" has surely come. I am at the home of Bro. and Sr. Morris, formerly of Sweet Home, so well known to all the elders of Oregon, in the first years of our work here. A home and a helping hand they have extended to all. Time seems to deal gently with them; they seem to have failed but little during the last few years. We trust they may remain many days as a landmark of former times.

We laid away the tent at the close of our reunion at Lee. Bro. Keeler and I parted company there, he to go home for awhile, I to Portland for awhile. My association with him was pleasant, but our work was not as profitable as we desired; notwithstanding we tried hard we did not seem to accomplish much, but I am willing to meet the summer's record on the other side, and I doubt not but what he is.

At Portland I had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Crabb and a small band of Saints, who seemed to be trying to let their light shine, but it is a hard thing to do, for a few Saints in a large city like Portland. Bro. Crabb was called to Condon, and I came here to hold some meetings and visit the scattered Saints. Several have passed over to meet their record on the other side, while others have moved away, so that few remain. At Sweet Home Mrs. Watkins, Thomas, Bro. Joe Ames, and Sr. Hester Ames are all that remain; but loss here sometimes means gain on the other side. I shall return to Portland after doing what I can here, when I will be ready to respond to calls for preaching, and shall be pleased to hear from Saints and friends. I felt sad at parting from the Saints and friends of Coos County; a noble, generous lot of Saints they are. Their kindness to me will never be forgotten. Some outside of the church were saints in action towards me, if not by profession. May God keep us all till we meet again. My field address will be Bandon, Oregon.

Editors Herald: Our conference of September last was a spiritual feast to the Saints, God blessing us with the spirit of revelation and exhortation.

Two resolutions were passed by the conference that I desire to speak of to the Saints and friends of the district and mission. One in particular, i. e., a committee of three consisting of J. F. Curtis, D. H. Bellorose, and J. W. Morgan was appointed to solicit and collect funds for the purchase of a team and wagon to be used in mission work, and to so purchase as soon as a sufficient sum was in hand. The other resolution was the appointment of a committee to investigate the advisability of holding a reunion in the summer of 1905, and to report at the Denver conference of next March, first Saturday and Sunday. Now to the mind of the writer the carrying out of these two propositions is very important to our work. It means a cost of dollars and cents to the Saints, but who can tell just how to measure the blessings to be derived by such a meeting by cost of money? The cultivation of a disposition of heart to contribute of our earthly possessions to the building up of God's work is a too widely neglected duty in a general way. But if in the cultivation of our spiritual garden we use the hoe of sacrifice we can annihilate the weed of selfishness and give covetousness a death blow, and place such environments around the more noble yet undeveloped graces that will result in that life more abundant to the faithful. Now the gospel wagon is a much needed accommodation here in this mission, and we hope by the help of God and his Saints to possess and operate it in the summer to come. Bro. Curtis and I have been now for three weeks every night on the street in this city, preaching the gospel, and more people have heard the same during that time, than during a hard effort of three months with the tent and at quite a cost, too. The object of the wagon is to go into the towns where at present we can not go, the wagon to be house with board and bed, and the travelers' coach. Now, dear Saints, called of God to be the light and salt of the world, please respond liberally and cheerfully to this call and help send the gospel in this the hastening time, just preceding the gathering, to all kindreds and peoples so far as this mission is concerned, and lay up treasure in heaven. You know that the books are to be opened and he whose name is not found written on the Lamb's book of life shall have no part in Christ the Lamb's glory. Now it would be sad indeed to just see simply our name and no credits to our account, no treasure laid up for us, for the books of God's keeping do not show it.

Editors Herald: I desire to give your readers a short sketch of the life of Elder George Montague, feeling that many of them—his life-long friends—will appreciate its publication. He was born in New York in 1829, and united with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in his early boyhood. With his father's family he removed to Nauvoo, where they remained until the exodus of the people at the death of the prophet, sharing many of the privations and trials incident to that troubled period. Uniting their fortunes with the colony that followed Lyman Wight, they journeyed to the wilds of Texas, where George was married to Miss Margaret Frances Andrews. Leaving Texas they started northward again, and while on the way he, by some means, obtained the pamphlet, A Word of Consolation to the Scattered Saints. Having been taught to look forward to Joseph's son as his successor this word was received with joy; and upon reaching Western Iowa he with his wife united with the Reorganization. He was soon after ordained an elder, and later a seventy, in which office he labored for many years, his mission work being principally in the south-eastern and southwestern States. In 1898 he was ordained a high priest, which office he held at his death, which was due to perambulating typhoid fever contracted while engaged in missionary work in Northern Texas. He passed away September 19, 1904, being over seventy-five years of age.

Some months previous to his death a comforting vision was shown him, through which he realized the reality of the resurrection of the dead, their condition previous to the resurrection of the body, and a glorious view was given him of those who wait in the paradise of God. His first wife died some years ago and he afterwards married Mrs. Nellie McLain, who survives him.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT CASE.

WESTVILLE, Nova Scotia, September 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am doing a little to spread the gospel. One thing I find among those that profess to serve Christ is that they depend too much on their ministers instead of reading for themselves. I attend the Methodist Sunday-school as there is no school, nor branch, of our own here. The teacher is a very nice man. After the lesson is over we are permitted to ask questions, and I can assure you we have some lively times. I find this a very good way of getting the gospel before the people. In fact the teacher came and thanked me for the lively interest I have in the lessons. We have in Westville a man by the name of King, an ex-priest from the Roman church, who is causing a great deal of excitement among the people, drawing numbers after him, exposing the doings of the Roman church, and charging ten to fifteen cents admission. The Lord said he would send them strong delusion that they might believe a lie and be damned who believed not the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness. This man is after the filthy lucre, and to my mind is a great impostor.

In a short time I expect to have my wife and family here, then I will ask for some of the ministry to call this way, as there is plenty of opportunity for preaching here. I feel very much the loss of the association of the Saints, as I have always had the pleasure of meeting with them, but am glad to learn of the good time they had at the European conference. Wish them great success, and hope they will remember me in their prayers.

In gospel bonds,

THOMAS MILLS.

FULTON, Kentucky, September 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: We have been stirred up somewhat by way of remembrance, of late, by hearing the gospel by our missionaries, Elders T. C. Kelley, W. R. Smith, C. L. Snow, H. E. Moler, S. H. Fields, and Heman C. Smith. And hearing these brethren preach has stimulated my thirst for righteousness, and my general interest in the great work has been aroused, but not as much as I still desire. I love the good work, and all the Saints who evidenced that good, meek spirit of the lowly Nazarene. To my understanding it is quite a task to always possess the right spirit toward those who bear false witness of us, and say all manner of evil of us. How necessary it is for us, who are so few and so despised, to love one another fervently, with a pure heart; and how cautious and orderly should we walk in all things, and all manner of conversation, especially before our enemies; for the same prince and power that inspired the children of the wicked one in former times is still seeking with all his might to overthrow God's people to-day. He is marshaling his children nowadays, as before; only this time it is in the name of Christ, as he said it would be in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, a sign of the end: "and many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many." And Saints, both preacher and lay member, he is trying just as hard now as he ever did to "catch us in our words." Please do not forget that. How cautious we should be in what we say, in teaching the gospel to the people, that we always avoid making any statement that seems to contradict the teachings of Christ or the apostles; and I think it would be well to cry "repentance unto this people," and such things as they are able to bear, and especially such things as we are able to teach. Many of us make a great mistake in getting too zealous without a proper knowledge. Zeal is good, but it should not take the lead. Let knowledge go before. So let me ask about ninety-five per cent of the laity to put in more time acquiring knowledge, and do less talking, and then when we do speak, perhaps we will be able to bring honor instead of reproach. Preachers, also, might consider this a little. I love the work, and it grieves me to hear wild, extreme assertions that bring no good. May the Lord bless all.

J. W. WILLIAMS.

Dear Herald: I am in touch with the Utah people in our town, and, in the course of the discussion, I quoted from the extracts as presented to us by Bro. Peter Anderson in HERALD, volume 49, number 28, July 9, 1902. They indorsed all except the last one, viz. "Providing they have been married for all eternity, to one or more wives, they may commit all manner of sin, excepting the shedding of innocent blood, and still be permitted to enter into their exaltation, and become gods in eternity." Could Bro. Anderson or some other, give me more information on this item,—where it is to be found. The HERALD says "See document on Celestial Marriage."

The Lord's work seems bright here, a unity existing among the members which is indeed inspiring and will be conducive to good results.

A reply through the HERALD as soon as possible would greatly oblige,
Your brother in gospel bounds,
51 Penny Lane. WILLIAM WORTH.

The Lord Makes No Mistakes.

Editors Herald: I desire to make a confession of my ignorance, at the time the revelation was given in April, 1901, directing the organization of two stakes, one at Independence, one at Lamoni, Iowa, "organizing them after the pattern which is found in the law." At the time this statement was made a number of brethren asked me, where the pattern was found in the law for the organization of stakes, and I could not tell. I had read the book of Doctrine and Covenants considerably, but had not seen it. While reading section 107, to-day I discovered the pattern which I presume was referred to. In paragraph 1 we read, "Your prayers are acceptable before me, and in answer to them I say unto you that you are now called immediately to make a solemn proclamation of my gospel, and of this stake which I have planted to be a corner-stone of Zion, which shall be polished with that refinement which is after the similitude of a palace."

We see by the above, Nauvoo was called a stake, and also a corner-stone of Zion. Then after giving general officers, patriarch, president, and twelve, in paragraphs 38, 39 and 40, we find in paragraph 41, it reads, "and again I say unto you, I give unto you a high council, for the corner-stone of Zion [stake]; then follows the names of the high council. Notice this high council was appointed for that "corner-stone" or stake; not for the whole church. Then in paragraph 42 he directs the organization of a quorum of high priests, "for the purpose of qualifying them," for "standing presidents or servants over different stakes scattered abroad." Then in paragraphs 45 and 46, the names of the bishopric, then presiding priest, with his counselors, presiding teacher and his counselors, also the president of the deacons and his counselors, and also the president of the stake and his counselors: Thus giving a perfect stake organization, even selecting the presiding priest, teacher, and deacon; and giving each his counselors. Here we have a perfect "pattern given in the law." While each is not named in this order, yet it is clearly a stake organization, with its presidency, high council, and bishopric.

These are given for the perfecting of the Saints, by carrying out the perfect law, by which all are to be sanctified and perfected in the stake at Nauvoo, and everywhere else, as they become numerous enough to be organized into stakes.

I am a little surprised, having read this revelation so often, that I had not discovered a stake organization in it, when it reads: "the president of the stake and his counselors," also, "I give unto you a high council for the corner-stone," which was the stake.

I congratulate myself with the thought, that as I saw this, I may see something else, and still learn a little, if it is very slowly.
G. H. HILLIARD.

Independence Items.

The weather during the fore part of last month was quite cool, with now and then heavy rains, yet it did not affect unfavorably, to any great extent, the attendance at the several church meetings; but of late we have been enjoying an ideal "green September" in this "the very center of continental United States."

At the closing day of the street fair there was a long list of prizes given on corn, potatoes, apples, pears, beets, onions, tomatoes, pumpkins, melons, grapes, and cabbage.

With the live-stock was classed a fine lot of young Missouri "hee-haws," and the pantry prizes were fine and various.

It appears, from late conclusions of some French savants, that in the choice of food chickens are like men, omnivorous. "They do not have to be driven to eat meat by starvation" they say, and it is found by experiment that it is not meat-eating alone, but the vigor given by the whole dietary that makes men and chickens prone to quarrel and fight, putting an end, they aver, to the "vegetarian delusion."

By way of items, right in the midst of those delightful sunshiny days we were surprised to hear from Sr. May Horton, of Chicago, that on the 25th ult., she experienced at her home, 1506 West Nineteenth Street, a veritable cyclone which played havoc with her roof-tree, tearing off the back porch, throwing it over the house, landing it in front; and also in the kitchen and bedroom was quite a flood. So much for not living nearer the "central state."

Last evening the Religians were treated to a lecture on phrenology by Bro. J. F. Gunsolley.

The charts suspended in front of the audience helped to make his remarks interesting and instructive, which he seasoned well with original spirits of wit. For instance, he told his audience they would, during the evening's lesson, be privileged to study their neighbors' bumps, which privilege we quietly noted was taken advantage of by a lady (?) sitting directly behind us, who gently passed her hand over our cranium, endeavoring no doubt to discover to what class of phrenological anomalies we belonged.

The music consisted of two or three numbers from Zion's Praises and the rest of the evening was occupied by a recitation or two, and a few closing words of counsel by Elder Hulmes, who presented the subject of establishing a reading-room and gymnasium, also other important features in connection with the Religio work.

In a late HERALD we read with interest an article on the subject of establishing a church infirmary or sanitarium, where patients could receive proper care together with such surgical treatment as the necessity of cases might demand.

We have, in this connection, heard of some of the young people being interested in such an institution, as in the case of one of our Religians who is preparing to enter upon a course of study in surgery with the intention of making himself useful in this line of work.

We are glad to note Sr. F. E. Lytle is convalescent from a long spell of illness.

Srs. Eunice and Stella, daughters of Bro. Henry Hart, who not long ago closed a faithful service as elder in the church, are visiting friends in Claud, Cedar County, Missouri. Sr. W. W. Blair has been visiting the Saints here, and has returned to Lamoni.

There is considerable stir among the house-builders, also work of every kind is booming. Bro. R. Warnock is adding his quota, helping to do good among the farmers and nurserymen with his tree-paint, a destructive agent to enemies of the garden and orchard plants.

With others lately come among us he is by active service trying to help in rolling on the glorious work.

During the last quarter, we have been slowly progressing. There have been six baptisms, twenty-five received by letter, one ordination.—Bro. J. J. Luff,—to the presidency of the First Quorum of Priests, and fifteen children have been blessed. We have to record deaths, as follows: Sr. Mary Adams, Sr. Mary Clements, Bro. John McMullin, and a little grandchild of Bro. W. S. Loar, who met death by sad accident in gasoline explosion.

The Utah elders on their way to and from St. Louis have spoken of their coming here of late as "a gathering." They seem like the young cuckoos, to be traveling en famille. We have met John S. Baugh, Cache County, also twelve or more from American Fork, including two young men students,—G. P. Parker from Brigham Young University (to which, we are informed, thirty thousand dollars are annually appropriated by the church,) and J. S. Christenson from Brigham Young College, Logan, Utah, whose father (from Denmark,) crossed the plains in 1857 in a hand-cart company.

Elder Howard gave an interesting account of his travels. He had just arrived from a visit to Nauvoo, the city of vineyards, (from which place he said twelve thousand crates of grapes were now being shipped daily to different points,) and Carthage, with its brick-paved streets, where stands, like a grim, lone monument, a stone building with walls more than three feet in thickness, in which were enacted the tragic scenes of the martyrdom,—Carthage jail.

But the building has been converted into a comfortable dwelling-house and an old gentleman is in charge of it. New windows have taken the place of the old ones and the stairs and two upper rooms have been carpeted, to stay the hands of the vandals who acted as relic-hunters.

The greater part of these visitors to the historic places just "west of Independence" are respectfully reticent concerning their peculiar religious tenets, and with concessionary spirit seem ready to listen to what we may have to say or read to them concerning our own belief.

And while some seem to be grateful for those small favors one generally is ready to offer to strangers, a few will occasionally refute with vigor and self-assertion those testimonies which, to the Latter Day Saint, unbiased by tradition and the precepts of men, stand forth as monuments of the truth.

One Mr. L. Knight, for instance, declared that a Mrs. Nancy Meacham, formerly of Omaha, (whose daughter, Mrs. Fields, is in the Reorganization,) heard the Prophet Joseph preach at Montrose a sermon on polygamy, and asserted that all he had ever heard concerning polygamy had been told him by the Josephite elders!

Many questions which are propounded we find have a ready and comprehensive answer in the little booklet called, The Legal Successor, written by Elder J. W. Wight. Such questions as these are answered: Why did the church become disorganized? What is the essential difference between the Brighamite and Josephite churches? Who were they who never lost their priesthood authority? How did B. Young become president of the church? And many others concerning testimonies, lineage, marriage, appointments, and ordination of the true successor.

In view of this glorious work and the good which has been wrought out, we feel to say, may the faithful sons of its noble prophet-founder live to behold the fruition of patient and righteous service to God, and with all their loyal colaborers may they see many leave the path of error, and accept the pure principles of the fullness of the gospel.

This is the prayer of every true son and daughter of the kingdom.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

DEERING, North Dakota, September 29, 1904.

Dear Herald: We are very glad to have your weekly visits. The HERALD and Autumn Leaves are the only enjoyment we have here in North Dakota. We had the misfortune of losing our barn with eighteen tons of hay, and eight grain-stacks, Tuesday the 27th. Last winter and spring we lost two horses, still we continue to have bad luck. Our summer's work lays in ashes. We had the best crop I have seen around here. We were all away but the little boy. He was cocking some hay half a mile from the house. As he was starting out to his work after dinner he noticed a man coming past but did not think he was coming in. The boy said he went on to his work. As he got a little way past the stacks the man came between the stacks and called the boy back and talked with him and wanted a drink. The man had a pipe in his mouth, and every time he drew on it the sparks would fly from it. He got his drink and went on his way; the boy went to his work, and about two o'clock in the afternoon he said he looked up to see if the cattle were all right, and behold the stacks and barn were enveloped in flames; it is a hard blow on us, as it is coming winter and no barn for our stock, or grain for our horses.

Extracts from Letters.

J. W. Whitley, Bridgeport, Washington, "I have done the best I could to lay the foundation for the gospel work here. I am eighty-four years old, but want to do all I can to help spread the gospel. I have been considerably afflicted, brethren; pray for me that I may be healed, and be the means of bringing souls into the kingdom of God."

Bro. F. C. Warnky wrote from Kansas City, Missouri, October 6: "I am preaching nearly every night in different parts of the city. Many receive the word gladly and some accept it."

J. C. Crabb, writes from Condon, Oregon: "Meetings here have been fairly well attended. Go from here to La Grande, Oregon."

Peter Muceus, Christiania, Norway, in a letter to Bro. H. A. Stebbins, writes: "To be an instrument in God's hand, and under his inspiration be enabled to speak words that have penetrated the hardest heart and converted sinners and scoffers to humble obedience to the mandates of heaven, is indeed a blessing to a poor, erring mortal. I now have baptized eleven grown people, nearly all heads of families. Several more to be baptized later. I wish Bro. David Anderson and wife could come over here. They are both good musicians, and might do a good work here."

Died.

EVANS.—Six miles northwest of Sullivan, Franklin County, Missouri, Sr. Gwennlian Evans died May 3, 1904, after a few days sickness (though she had been afflicted for years). She was born in May, 1821, in South Wales; married Bro. Daniel Evans in 1853. She leaves a husband, daughter, and many friends that mourn their loss. She was baptized by Elder Lewis Jones, June 22, 1864, and lived a noble Christian life. Funeral sermon by Elder Arthur Allen; text, Revelation 14: 13.

DYKES.—Minnie Violet Dykes, in her sweet innocency, was suddenly snatched from the embrace of her parents, Bro. and Sr. George Dykes of Oakland, California, on October 2, 1904, at the age of 2 years, 6 months, and 19 days. The funeral was preached at the home on October 3, by Elder J. M. Terry. The remains were taken to Vacaville, California, for burial. This is the fourth child of these parents to pass over, one son remaining as a comfort.

GAMET.—Emma Gamet, of Inman, Nebraska, was born March 3, 1849, in Trumbull County, Ohio. She was baptized in 1865, and united in marriage with Bro. Levi Gamet, June 10, 1868. Ten children were born to that union. Her husband, and nine children, four boys and five girls, survive her. She was loved by all who knew her, and our little band of Saints at Inman will miss her in church-work there. After several month's sickness she fell asleep in Christ, September 22, 1904, and was laid to rest in Inman cemetery. Funeral sermon by Elder W. A. Smith.

NUTT.—At the home of his daughter, Sr. F. J. Chatburn, Holden, Missouri, September 29, 1904, of old age and general debility, Elder Thomas Nutt; born August 21, 1830, at Gloucester, England. Accepted the gospel in early life, went to Utah only to find that he had been deceived. ### DANCING.

The following from the Open Door appeals to us as presenting the matter in just about the right light:

Church members who attend or indorse dancing parties, are not good for anything to get people converted, and little different from the rest of the world who make no profession.

As members of the church of Christ we are under obligations to hold the name of Christ, and the name of his church, above reproach; and we can not do this by engaging in the vain pleasures of the world that are detrimental to the name and character of a saint. We can not too carefully guard our influence upon those around us. Those who attend dancing parties exert an influence, as certainly as do those who attend the prayer-meetings; but when it comes to leading people to investigate the teaching of the gospel, the influence of the latter class is far, far ahead of that of the former. In fact the majority of people, whether professing Christianity or not, will look with disrespect upon the religion of those who temporarily set their faith aside, while they join hands with the "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God."

To say nothing of the effect upon the spirituality of those who thus give themselves up to the enjoyment of these questionable pleasures, the waste of time that might better be employed, and the unfitting for the every-day duties of life, the influence upon those around us who are investigating our faith is decidedly bad and certainly brings reproach upon the church. How discouraging it must be to a missionary who is endeavoring to unfurl the banner of Christ, to be told by those whom he is seeking to lead to a higher life that "some of your young people here frequent the dance-hall, and such conduct as that is not tolerated in our church, consequently we think we are better off where we are."

Paul says, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."—Romans 12:2. There is absolutely no hope of being transformed from this world by the renewing of our minds in pursuing that which partakes so unmistakably of the things of this world as a dancing party.

The answer given by one of our elders to a sister who inquired of him as to what possible harm could result from dancing seems to us to be worth considering by all who are halting between the promptings of duty to God and the church, and the inclination or desire to attend the dance. In response to her question he replied, "I will answer by asking you a question. How would you feel should the Savior come and find you at a ballroom?" After giving it a little sober thought she was able to choose her course. The command is, "Be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."—Matthew 24: 44.

THE relatives of the deceased wish us to state that owing to misunderstanding upon the part of those who were expected to attend to the matter, the obituary notice of Sr. Dora Mathews was delayed. It will be found in this issue of the HERALD.

The obligation is placed upon us to prepare for his coming; and the ballroom is by no means a necessary factor in completing that preparation. We would never be ready to meet Christ at a dancing party, and if we lend our influence to the world in this way, we most assuredly blight our influence for good so far as the gospel of Christ is concerned.

THE ABUNDANCE.

"Nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."

One brother lately put the question to another in language something like this: "Why is it that of two branches in our city one seems to be enjoying the manifestations of spiritual blessings in a far greater degree than the other?" The answer was, "One branch is poor in this world's goods, and the other branch possesses greater wealth." The answer was acknowledged to be correct. In it a secret was revealed: The first branch being poor in this world's goods, possessed naturally more equality in temporal things, consequently enjoyed greater abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit; the other one lacking this equality to a far greater extent was denied the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit. This is just as God has promised it shall be, and we may always depend upon God to fulfill his promises.

We hear many express themselves in language like this: "Why do we not enjoy the blessings of the gospel to the same extent that we did years ago in the rise of the church?" In some places the same kind of blessings are enjoyed; in some places they are not. Either there is a failure upon the part of the people, or God is a respecter of persons. The latter we can never accept. Where does the trouble lie? May it not be accounted for in the language of the above scripture? One brother laboring in Canada, telling of the great blessings being received by those who yield obedience to the truth, says that it seems that because they are few, and struggling to get the work established in that territory, they are blessed more abundantly than some in other places. Yes, they are more equal in temporal things, and the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit are granted unto them; whereas in other places where this equality is lacking to a great extent, the abundance is withheld, and they receive only a meager portion, comparatively. Under present existing conditions may we expect anything else? Are there any reasonable grounds for hoping that it will be otherwise until we are willing to become equal in temporal things?

"Equal in temporal things!" What does it mean? What shall govern in the application of the law of equality? These are questions that have puzzled the minds of many. Is its application governed by position, birth, caste, and acquired tastes, or by the needs and circumstances? We may learn much by studying the law of equality as taught to the people of Enoch, given for our guidance in this dispensation. It was by putting in practice this law that they were made of one heart and mind, and became the pure in heart. "And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them."—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2. Can anything less than a full compliance with the same law place the church, to-day, in a position to be called Zion?

To the people of Enoch the Lord said: "You are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea even an hundredfold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.

From this we gather that each one is to be supplied according to his wants and needs, inasmuch as his wants are just, therefore when each one shall be thus supplied, equality shall have been reached. How can it be reached otherwise?

"And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one, even as I have commanded you."—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 2.

Upon whom is the law of equality binding; upon the ministry alone, or the whole church? Let the word of God answer. Turn to Doctrine and Covenants 71: 3: "Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God." That includes every member; leaves none out; gives no one a chance to dodge the issue. "Yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things." A man's stewardship in temporal things may mean the oversight of some special temporal work required of him by the church, or it may mean his avocation and calling in life. Any man's daily avocation is his stewardship, and he is expected to use it to the benefit of the work of God, as the Lord blesses him in it. "He who is appointed to administer in spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."

Has any one authority to change this, and say that it applies only to the ministry? "What man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou here, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just? Behold, this I have given unto you a parable, and it is even as I am: I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine."—Doctrine and Covenants 38:5, 6. There must not be one law pertaining to temporalities as applied to the minister, and another law as applied to the lay member. They must be one. What one shares the other must share. What one complies with the other must comply with, else how can they be equal? True, the ministry has set the example, which is right. The ministry has been doing its part; and only God knows (apart from themselves) how much the families of missionaries have suffered at times; not only for want of the necessaries of life, but by reason of the unkind criticisms of brothers and sisters. How has the laity done its part? Has more been exacted of the missionary than the individual members of the church, excluding none, are willing to subscribe to, themselves? If so, is it just, according to the law?

"All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.

How does the minister labor? He gives his time and talent to the church, and in return the church undertakes to supply the wants and needs of himself and family. How may those who toil in the affairs of the men of business labor, together with the minister and with God, for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all? By doing as the minister does; using his time and talent for the good of the work, and being supplied with what his needs and wants require, inasmuch as they are just; not with twice as much. Is there any other ministerial basis taught in the law? We have never been able to find it. Those who labor in the ministry are to be supplied according to their needs and wants. Those who labor in the literary concerns of the church are to be supplied according to their needs and wants. Those who are appointed to labor in the temporal affairs of the church should receive according to their needs and wants. Not only these, but the "whole church" is subject to the same law. How can it be done? That is easy. Are you using seventy-five, a hundred, or a hundred and twenty-five dollars a month for your family of two, three, or four? Limit your expenses to the amount allowed to ministers in your town, and send the balance to the Bishop. If every family in the church will do that, no one will suffer this winter, for the lack of food, fuel, or clothing. And we venture the assertion, that if every Latter Day Saint family confines itself strictly to a ministerial basis, just as the missionaries' families are required to do, from now until next General Conference, there will be a resolution passed, by an overwhelming majority, raising the ministerial allowance by a large per cent.

Not many years ago a farmer's wife said to a minister's wife, who lived in town and was allowed fifteen dollars a month by the church for her support, out of which she must rent a house, and buy everything she used: "You ought to get along real well on fifteen dollars. That's more than we use for our whole family." There were six or seven in the family. She was asked to make an estimate of the cost of living, including wood, milk, butter, eggs, meat, flour, etc., all taken from the farm. When she had passed the ninety dollar mark she got discouraged,—never finished the estimate. But she changed her mind in regard to the missionary's family allowance. Even with her large family, a strict compliance with the rule established for the church, according to their needs and wants, as interpreted by the "ministerial basis," would have left quite a large portion of the ninety dollars, to be turned over to the Bishop, to say nothing of the unestimated amount.

The Lord said unto the people of Enoch, "All moneys that you receive in your stewardships, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses or in lands, or in cattle, or in all things save it be the holy sacred writings, which I have reserved unto myself for holy and sacred purposes, shall be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives, . . . and let not any man among you say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it; and there shall not any part of it be used, or taken out of the treasury, only by the voice of common consent of the order. And this shall be the voice and common consent of the order: that any man among you, say unto the treasurer, I have need of this to help me in my stewardship; if it be five talents, or if it be ten talents, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, the treasurer shall give unto him the sum which he requires, to help him in his stewardship, until he be found a transgressor."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.

"It is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

Would we allow selfishness to rule? Would we allow greed to interfere with the fulfilling of the law? Would we, in the use of our agency, say, What I have is my own, and I intend to use it as I see fit? Then it will do us good to read the following: "Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2. "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:8.

Is it right, Saints, according to the law of equality, that a minister's family should be required to live on half as much as a lay member's family of the same size, surrounded by the same conditions? Are not the minister and lay member under equal responsibility? "For if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye cannot be equal in obtaining heavenly things; for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you."—Doctrine and Covenants 77:1.

In the face of all this shall we not conclude that there is a crying need for a more uniform compliance with the law of temporalities, before we can hope to receive the abundance of spiritual blessings that we crave? Can we gain the spiritual blessings, and ignore the Lord's way of providing for his Saints? No, indeed. "Faith without works is dead," and there was never a wider opportunity for "works," than is afforded by the demands of the law of equality.

HUMAN SACRIFICES.

Bro. Robert M. Elvin sends the following, which will be of interest to many, especially among the Religians:

To the student of Nephite history, and their religion, the following from the pen of Robert E. Anderson, M. A., F. A. S., in his, The Story of Extinct Civilization of the West, page 61, published by D. Appleton & Company, New York, 1904, will be interesting.

"Human sacrifice had not originally been a feature of the Aztec worship. But about two hundred years before the arrival of the Spanish invaders was the beginning of this religious atrocity, and at last no public festival was considered complete without some human bloodshed."

The above is a most fortunate statement, if true, and I know of no good reason why it should not be true.

GRACELAND NOTES.

Those interested in the department of education in Graceland feel that its many friends throughout the coöperating territory would be glad to donate public school text-books to the special library which Professor Stewart is seeking to provide for the department. In the study of "methods" these text-books are needed if the work is to be carried on most advantageously. He desires books of all grades by any author: readers, spellers, arithmetics, geographies, histories, etc. If you have them about your home and desire to make a donation which will be greatly appreciated, and be serviceable as well, hunt them up and send them to Professor Stewart, in care of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Bro. J. P. Carlile, Bishop's agent, of the Pottawattamie, Iowa, District, sends in three hundred and thirty-five dollars and twenty cents, the full amount of the college debt apportionment for that district.

PIONEERS OF OTTERTAIL.

THE Corresponding Editor while laboring in Minnesota during the early part of the summer was furnished with a copy of this article, which will doubtless be of interest to many of our readers. In this and succeeding chapters a short sketch will be given of the history of a faction of the church that wandered away from Nauvoo after the death of the prophet. It was written by Chauncey Whiting, who was the successor of Alpheus Cutler as the leader, or "chief counselor," of what is known as the Cutlerite Church, and was published in the Fergus Falls Journal, in 1885. Although the opening chapters deal to some extent with conditions not directly connected with the church, it is deemed best to publish just what was written by the author.

—EDITOR.

The incidents which have attended the establishment of new colonies along the borders or within the haunts of uncivilized nations have long furnished interesting and almost unbounded matter for the pen of the narrator, as well as real and imaginary traces for the pencil of the artist. Perhaps there are no books, narratives, tales, or adventures which are more attractive to the mind or read with a greater relish than truthful accounts of the perils, dangers, and hardships endured by the most early settlers of our country.

These footprints, made deep and plain by horrible slaughter, suffering, and marks of blood, will never be effaced or lost in forgetfulness. Indeed, the greatest pains have been taken to perpetuate this important history, and as often as new settlements have been formed and new incidents occurred worthy of note, link after link has been added to the chain of events already recorded.

But the present writer, unlike our grandfathers, who in earlier days periled their lives and beheld their fair sons and daughters, friends, and relatives taken captive, burned at the stake, or perchance, struck down by deadly, unerring blows of the tomahawk, has no such thrilling and blood-curdling scenes to relate. However, through a kindly and earnest solicitation of Mr. A. J. Underwood, editor of the Journal, to give some further particular dates and incidents than have heretofore been noticed respecting the first permanent settlement of Ottertail County, he has ventured to pen the following sketch.

It is to be remembered that some time prior to the founding of the above-mentioned settlement an effort had been made to people this country with white inhabitants. To this end a goodly number had already made their mark and erected homes in the wild region. At this time, and directly at the east end of Ottertail Lake, a site was selected for a future city by Major Clitherall, and the erection of both public and private buildings seemed to indicate its development and future growth.

The influx of other settlers not only afforded good cheer and friendly neighbors, but added new strength to the little colony first located, and on all sides toiling numbers could have been seen with broadaxe, hatchet, and carpenter tools, endeavoring to make for themselves new and comfortable homes. Heretofore this wilderness country had been inhabited only by the natives of the forest—a people wild in nature, warlike in disposition and culture, and most unrelenting and cruel in revenge.

Yes, this unbroken region had long been the home and hunting-ground of the red man. Here he had lived on his own native soil, and from childhood fished in the sparkling lakes, chased the buffalo over the prairie, and the elk and bear through the forest, and roamed the broad plains free and unmolested by the white man's tread. Here they had lingered, and here the new settlers found them in their old frequented haunts; and while hewing, shaping, and rearing the first structures which crowned the distant hills, plains, and valleys with marks of enterprise, industry, and civilization, the curling smoke could have been seen slowly rising from hundreds of wigwams along the margins of the lakes, rivulets, and adjacent groves.

As yet no alarm had been sounded, and no disturbance had arisen to ruffle the tranquil scene. The natives appeared friendly, and the general indications of both peace and prosperity were of the most flattering nature. But in 1862 a terrible outbreak of the Sioux Indians took place, in which a small portion of the Chippewa or Ojibwa tribe took some active part. During this war one thousand people or upwards (as reported) were most cruelly massacred in the state of Minnesota. Many buildings belonging to the new settlers were burned, and the families which had escaped the tomahawk and scalping-knife, compelled to flee for their lives, in the most destitute, forlorn, and suffering condition.

This unexpected and bloody outbreak again laid waste the country, and, as we are informed, expelled from more than half the western part of the State every vestige of settlement. All hope was now lost that a peaceable arrangement could be adjusted, and the appalling fear which seized upon the minds of the people caused hundreds and perhaps thousands to believe that these upper counties would never again be safe for settlement by white inhabitants.

Had it not been for the kind and friendly assistance of some of the most influential and prominent men of the Chippewa nation, doubtless the horrible massacres and suffering would have been enhanced a hundredfold. One of these, an Indian by birth, but well educated, and from whose mouth I learned the particulars, was Reverend John Johnson of White Earth Reservation, then living at Crow Wing. So strongly did he remonstrate against the proceedings of a portion of the Chippewa Nation, that they became offended, burned his house, and accused him of being a cowardly friend of the paleface. Others in like manner used their influence in allaying excitement and suppressing further outbreaks by the hostile bands, and all were deserving of much credit for their noble daring and timely aid, exposing their own lives and property in befriending the white settlers. But notwithstanding many of the Chippewa warriors were held in check by these prompt and efficient moves, yet a goodly number, as I was informed, took an active part with the Sioux Indians who first instigated the outbreak, and who were still committing depredations, burning houses, and massacring the inhabitants wherever found, and not until repelled by government troops did they desist or stop the bloody work.

The foregoing is indeed but a faint sketch relating to the most early attempt to establish new settlements and spread the broad folds of civilization over the wide wastes of the North, a full account of which would require volumes. But it is not my purpose at present to dwell at length upon this subject. Suffice it to say the settlers were foiled in the first endeavor, and it became a matter of time to decide its future destiny. To this period we now hasten, hoping to interest the reader with a few matters connected with the establishing of the first permanent settlement in Ottertail County.

From the termination of this bloody outbreak to 1864, the entire depopulated region presented naught save a scene of desolation. During this time no white settlers, either the former or new ones, had ventured to lay their claims in the lonely solitudes, or to throw the lives of families into the hands of a wild foe. If any even mentioned the idea of making such a bold and hazardous attempt, they were immediately disheartened by their neighbors with a recital of the horrible scenes of New Ulm; the heartrending screams of innocent babes nailed to fence-posts, or the uplifted tomahawk and scalping-knife dripping with blood, together with the hideous yelling of painted warriors in pursuit of the frightened inhabitants, and the terrible massacres of women and children.

But notwithstanding all these fears and embarrassments, the country seemed destined to become peopled again by white inhabitants. In 1864 a few venturesome pioneers returned to their homes in McLeod, Meeker, western Stearns, and even to Douglas Counties, on the lines of military occupation. Further to the north, and surrounding the best hunting- and fishing-ground of the Red Man, lay the picturesque and inviting county of Ottertail. Here thickly clustered the wild natives, the braves, and the warriors, among whom the earlier and most venturesome pioneers to the Red River Valley made a most vigorous and daring attempt to open up the unbroken region for settlement. These were the men who turned the first furrows upon the broad plains, and who at the most critical period planted the standard of civilization in the country. It was these who suffered, toiled, and lost; and, indeed, it is to these most worthy veterans and early pioneers that the highest commendation is due.

But the establishment of the first permanent settlement in Ottertail County as a matter of consequence was not attended with many thrilling events. Nevertheless the circumstance has attracted considerable interest, and many have doubtless imagined that something uncommon must have occurred to cause so many families to leave their pleasant homes in Iowa and locate in a cold country, inhabited only by uncivilized races. It is of this settlement and attending incidents to which we next refer, but further on we will give a more full account of the motives that led to the move of the planting of the little colony in Northern Minnesota.

The returning of a few families to the counties before mentioned, and the peaceable indications on the part of the natives, measurably encouraged the first settlers of Ottertail County to follow suit. But a sad remembrance of past horrors and suffering still filled their hearts with fearful apprehensions, and being so soon after the massacre no one had ventured to break the ice or rebuild the walls, and not until after the little colony of Mormons from Iowa had established a settlement on the north bank of Clitherrall Lake, and effected some peaceable arrangements with a number of the chiefs and principal men of the Chippewa nation, did the first pioneers again plant their families upon their own deserted homesteads, or new settlers mark the plains with farmhouses, towns, and villages.

But we do not altogether attribute the returning of the old pioneers, nor the influx of other settlers to the establishing of the colony or effecting of the matters above referred to. Neither do we covet or deserve praise even if any encouragement was derived from our efforts. And from the fact that many believed the Mormons to be equally as wild, savage, and dangerous as the Indians, the condition of affairs, especially in the minds of the people, could not have been very much bettered. Indeed some who were already journeying to Ottertail County, on learning that the road lay through a Mormon settlement, were struck with terrible fear, and tremblingly inquired of a bystander if there was not some other way through which they could reach their place of destination without risking their lives among such a dreadful society of cannibals or dangerous characters. But after being informed that the Mormons looked very much like other people, and that no fear need be entertained, they again resumed their journey, passing through the neighborhood in perfect safety, and at length two of them joined the people whom before they so much dreaded to meet.

The settlement above mentioned was commenced early in the spring of 1865, by a few pioneers, a committee who in the fall of 1864 had been appointed by proper authority, to hunt up a location for the church then living at Manti, Fremont County, Iowa.

A singular coincident attended the choosing of said committee, and the special business in charge which we here relate: Mr. L. O. Denna, an Indian chief, of the Oneida tribe, and of good reputation, also a worthy member of our society, and who for some length of time had been purposing to hunt a location for a portion of the partially civilized Indians of his own nation, and not wishing to go alone, chose F. L. and S. J. Whiting to accompany him. This seemed to meet the minds of the council assembled, and the two latter were then chosen by the body as a committee in selecting, or hunting a location for the church, all, however, acting in unison with the view of settling close together if circumstances favored the enterprise; if not, to select as an opening presented or wisdom dictated. A few others also accompanied the expedition, sharing in the hardships, dangers, and suffering incident to the occasion, and aiding in the establishment of the first permanent settlement in Ottertail County. The names of the men who composed this party of pioneers were as follows: F. L. Whiting, Sylvester J. Whiting, L. O. Denna, Marcus Shaw, Isaac M. Whiting, C. G. Fletcher, J. Burdick, James R. Badham, E. Cutler, and Edmund Whiting, together with their families, numbering in all forty-one souls.

WHERE IS HELL?

In our Religio Quarterly lesson for July, 1903, third week, we are taught that hell, the spiritual prison, etc., is not a place but a condition. This has been the teaching of spiritualism in the past, and I think that is where this theory originated. I was a spiritualist for a time until I learned better, and during this time I, and others, taught, and believed, that heaven and hell were all matters of conscience. Now, we know that conscience is just what we make it, therefore I can not understand the lesson as taught. While this is true I also realize it to be a very delicate matter to criticise the work of my superiors; and to them as to the work in general I am constrained to say, "I could not love thee half so well, loved I not honor more"; and for me to acquiesce in what I honestly believe to be an error does not look honorable to me, though I might be wrong. I do not think any one has more respect for the Religio than I have; for in the Religio work I have been permitted to associate with some of the noblest men and women I have ever met, and hope no one will take offense at what I have to say, for I am aware that it is much easier to be critical than it is to be correct. If I succeed in throwing a bit of light on a very dark subject, I shall feel I have not labored in vain.

I believe that both Bible and Book of Mormon will, when properly understood, make the matter plainer. To err is so much a part of our nature it behooves us to be very watchful lest we might go wrong. Believing that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, there is no good reason why the same warning may not be carried beyond the political arena where man strives with man for temporal preferment, to the higher ground, where man contends with demons for the prize of eternal life.

Then let us briefly notice a few places in the lesson referred to. The lesson tells us that hell and fire are figurative of the second death, of a condition and not a place. And again, "The second death is banishment from God." In another place, same lesson, referring to the state described as a lake of fire and brimstone whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever and has no end, the lesson says, "Our fathers and mothers remember when theologians generally believed this description to be literal, or to have a literal meaning; but ever since the Book of Mormon came forth the religious idea has been changing," etc. Yes, the religious idea has been changing not only since the Book of Mormon came forth; but ever since the Almighty saw fit to reveal his will to man the religious idea has been trying to climb up some other way. But just how a friend to, or a believer in the Book of Mormon can blame the Book of Mormon for this is more than I can fathom. I shall try to show, and I believe I shall succeed in showing, that hell or the pit, spiritual prison, etc., can be located beyond a reasonable doubt. And if I succeed in this it will remove some confusion on this important subject.

Is it not unreasonable to suppose that the majority of the human family will ever get out of his presence? Let us read the one hundred and thirty-ninth Psalm, beginning at verse 7:

Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

Let us now take up the Inspired Translation and read the account of Cain being cast out from the presence of the Lord, bearing in mind the supposition that hell is or consists of being cast out from his presence. While Cain was in this condition we find him in possession of an heir that began its earthly life in the condition known as out from the presence of the Lord. Now what grim and ghastly specter is this that begins to loom up in all its hideous deformity whose mission is blasphemy? It is that old theological nightmare called "infants in hell not a span long." The one must of necessity be true if the other is. To accept this view we would be compelled to lose sight of our Lord's declaration that all will be rewarded according to their works. So much for the banishment-from-his-presence theory.

As to the locality of the prison I shall try to show by the word of God, history, etc., that it is down in the interior of the earth. I may be looked upon as some sort of an iconoclast, but I believe the books will bear me out in this claim. Let us now turn to Numbers 16: 30-35:

But if the Lord make a new thing, and the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the pit; then ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord. And it came to pass, as he had made an end of speaking all these words, that the ground clave asunder that was under them: and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their houses, and all the men that appertained . . . to them, went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them; and they perished from among the congregation. And all Israel that were round about them fled at the cry of them: for they said, Lest the earth swallow us up also. And there came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense.

This shows beyond all question where the pit is. Let us read Luke 10: 15: "And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell." Now, ask any child that can understand common language, which way is down, and see how quickly it will point down to the ground. Well, that was where Capernaum was going. Now read Psalm 63: 9: "But those that seek my soul, to destroy it, shall go into the lower parts of the earth." This is King David's testimony, and Peter at Pentecost tells us that David was a prophet. Now let us read Luke 16: 29: "Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them." In the days that are past people had to be "sighted" if I am permitted to use this word, and it will be well for us if we learn to profit by their blunders.

Let us read 1 Corinthians 10: 11: "Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come." Also Romans 15: 4: "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." What good can that which is written do us unless we permit it to, by accepting it as truth? If we take it as a song that is sung, or a tale that is told, or a dream that passes away, it will do us no good. Then let me repeat that the cause of this change of religious opinion is not to be found in the word of God, but in the awful sin of unbelief. One of our natural inclinations seems to be the seeking out of inventions, the hewing out of broken cisterns that will hold no water, and a determination to climb up some other way rather than to just take God at his word without adding to or taking from. Let us see where this figurative or metaphor finding originated, then we will perhaps be able to judge of its merits or demerits.

Let us turn to Genesis 2: 17: "But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Was that a metaphor? that seems to have been the understanding our first parents had of this statement, for they gave no heed to it, and as a result passed on and were punished.

A similar condition of doubt now prevails in regard to what the Lord said on as important a subject, and in as plain a manner as need be. Now will this similar condition produce a similar result? What caused our first parents to doubt that which had the divine stamp and sanction? Let us now read Genesis 3: 4: "And the serpent said unto the woman, ye shall not surely die." Now I think we have truly found where the religious opinion began to change. We have also found the author of the change; and we have not found Divinity the author of it. The parables we find in the Bible are not intended to confuse the mind of the honest investigator, but rather to make plain some fact that might not be otherwise easily understood. And when parables are used to hinder the truth it must be because we do not apply them properly. God's word has never at any time been anything but truth; and it never will be anything but truth. Let us hear what the great Nazarene has to say in regard to this. "Thy word is truth." But lest we forget, the evil one accomplished all he tried to do with our first parents. How did he manage to deceive them? Simply by inducing them to reject the words of divine origin. He is still at work very much on the same lines; not by plain contradiction, but it amounts to the same thing. The plan that his Satanic Majesty has adopted, it seems, would read about as follows: "The word of God is true all right, but it is almost impossible to understand it; let me twist it and construe it and wrest it. When the book speaks of future rewards and punishments it is so highly figurative that it amounts to nothing. Let others do your reading for you." This is taught by that great church whose foundation is the Devil. Book of Mormon readers are supposed to know what church that is.

Again in regard to what has been said concerning the location of the spiritual prison, let us read Matthew 12: 40: "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." What did he go there for? Peter says he went and preached to the spirits in prison. The plain fact is stated that he would be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. Take up the dictionary and see the definition of the word heart. I think that will make it plain to the intelligent reader that the heart of the earth could not lie within a few feet of the surface of the earth. Take as an illustration the heart of a tree, which is about the same distance from the surface measured from either side.

Let us call one more witness to the stand. Please read Ephesians 4: 9: "Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth?" Where do you suppose Paul obtained his information? He says he received it by the revelation of Jesus Christ. Shall we take his word for it? We probably can not do better. Again the Quarterly says: "It will have been perceived by this time that hell represents a state, a condition, and not a place. This fact established removes much confusion," etc. This might be corrected to read: "This error once established plunges into hopeless confusion the whole redemptory plan." This statement of the Quarterly was nicely predicted by the great prophet Nephi, 2 Nephi 12:3, small edition. It reads about as follows:

And behold, others he flattereth away, and telleth them there is no hell; and he saith unto them, I am no devil, for there is none: and thus he whispereth in their ears, until he grasps them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance. Yea, they are grasped with death and hell; and death, and hell, and the devil, and all that have been seized therewith, must stand before the throne of God and be judged according to their works, whence they must go into the place prepared for them, even a lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment.

It might be asked, do I believe hell to be a lake of fire? I just try to accept what the books teach. The primary object of this article is to show that hell or the prison is actual, real, not a figure of speech, not a metaphor; and that it is not only a condition but also a place; and that it is located in the interior of the earth: "And they that kill the prophets, and the saints, the depths of the earth shall swallow them up."—2 Nephi 11:10.

I do not think that all of the disobedient will receive the same amount of condemnation, and be punished without reference to the extent of their evil deeds. The Savior says of some, "They shall receive the greater damnation;" the inference is that there must certainly be a lesser damnation. We sometimes say of a person or a people, "They have builded wiser than they knew"; but unfortunately our Quarterly has builded less wisely than might have been supposed: for the reason that to say the wicked will be punished nowhere, entirely and absolutely cuts off all punishment. For instance, a very wealthy individual might tell us he would give us his entire fortune if we would meet him nowhere. It would not cost him a penny. Thus starting to reason from a false basis will very naturally bring us to a wrong conclusion. And this kind of reasoning is and has been all along one of the principal causes of the mental or spiritual blindness that stands stubbornly against fact, reason, or argument, and is very largely responsible for the ever-increasing emigration to the ditch. If it be held that the Book of Mormon teaches that the punishment of the wicked is to be cast out from the presence of the Lord, I find numerous references to the place as, "a place of fire," and "brimstone," "lake of fire," etc.

But, says the Quarterly, "Hell is called in one place 'a lake of fire,'" and cites us to Revelation 20:14. Again I beg pardon, I do not so understand it; let us read it: "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire." What was cast into the lake of fire? Death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. Suppose a person was to say, And the Jefferson City penitentiary was cast into the Jefferson City penitentiary, the meaning would appear just a little obscure, would it not? But let us not obscure the passage with misquotation. I do not pretend to know how many degrees of punishment there may be; but I am willing to leave this to him that doeth all things well, and am satisfied that God could not be just and at the same time punish all delinquents equally. If the place called hell, or the pit, is not down in the interior of the earth, where can we find a place that answers all the requirements and descriptions usually applied to it as well as the interior of the earth does? For we have found that science, history, inspiration, and reason all agree on the subject. Every hot spring and every volcano on the face of the earth is an eloquent witness, testifying to the fact that the inner part of the earth has a temperature high enough to at least burn up any metaphor that might try to sojourn in its midst. Observe the prophet Ezekiel in chapters 31 and 32, frequently referring to the nether parts of the earth, when speaking of this place of punishment. It appears to me from reading Revelation 21:8 that many unfortunately take up their abode in this dreadful place. Let us read it: "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." But this is a digression from the subject.

Let us take up the Quarterly once more. It says, "Now a lake of fire does not resemble a pit, and it could not exist in a prison." Why not, please? If the prison were constructed of white pine this might be a reasonable view, but it is pretty certain that it is not constructed of such material. The books have proven that the prison is in the interior of the earth. The geography says at a depth of about twenty-five miles the heat in the earth is sufficient to melt most metals. Josephus, the great Jewish historian, says of this place, it is "a subterraneous region. In this region there is a certain place set apart as a lake of unquenchable fire." Let us see now who has testified, and what they have testified to. First Moses shows by an object-lesson that the pit is down in the interior of the earth. Ezekiel speaking of this place refers to it as being in the "nether parts of the earth." The Psalmist David tells us that those who seek to destroy his soul shall go into the lower parts of the earth. Nephi adds his testimony in about the same manner. He speaks of the place as the "depths of the earth." Saint Paul tells us in Ephesians, chapter 4, speaking of the Savior ascending, that he also first descended into the lower parts of the earth. Have all those witnesses been mistaken? I think not. But let us, last but by no means least, introduce the testimony of the Christ. He said he would be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. If he is wrong, I still believe that fire-walled hell with him is preferable to golden-gated paradise without. I still have confidence in his leadership, and have no doubts but what he will in the future, as in the past, with his sledge-hammer of truth on the anvil of the ages, continue to forge out his divine purposes whether we believe or disbelieve.

It may seem a little paradoxical, but it is a fact none the less, that truth has to be nurtured very carefully within our hearts before we can accept it. The natural conditions existing there do not favor its development, while error springs to life quickly and bears fruit abundantly. Is it possible that we are drifting into the same condition that those people were in, that Isaiah speaks of in his thirtieth chapter, verse 10, "Which say to the seers, See not; and to the prophets, Prophecy not unto us right things: speak unto us smooth things, prophecy deceits"? Let us not lose sight of one solemn truth; that is, Sin and disobedience and unbelief never did and never will purchase anything but sorrow for any one.

Again, the Quarterly says "Take the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, Luke 16: 19-24." Why should we call this a parable? It is rather a simple truth, and as usual clearly stated. Shall we call it a parable because some sectarian wiseacre prefers to so understand it, or is it only for the reason that "Abraham's bosom" is referred to? If the latter is the cause, let either Josephus or the prophet Alma, or both, explain to us that paradise or "Abraham's bosom" is a state of rest, a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles and from all care and sorrow, etc. (See Alma 19: 5, 6, small edition.) For the sake of making plain this supposed parable, I will state I once lived near Cleveland, Oklahoma. Just across the Arkansas River live the Osage Indians. In their native tongue they never speak of Cleveland, but they call it Po-hop-pey. Yet it is all one place. So the reader will find upon examination of the records that "Abraham's bosom" as used by our Savior, and as described by Josephus, is all one and the same place as the paradise described by Alma. Again, if we could succeed in eradicating from the minds of our Lamanite brethren the idea of a happy hunting-ground we would destroy their idea of heaven, yet neither writer nor reader believes that any one will be found hunting wild beasts in the world to come, be it either paradise or Abraham's bosom. Or again, take from the unspeakable Turk their belief in Janet Aiden, their conception of eternal delight, and they at once cease to be interested in the world to come.

May God still bless our beloved Religio; and grant our society, in the future as in the past, an honored place in the front ranks of those who strive for the upbuilding of Zion.

Your brother,

ED. BAIR.

WEBB CITY, Missouri.

UNBELIEF.

I read an article in Home Column of the HERALD recently, on faith, which set forth some very important facts, and asked the very pertinent question, "How could parents expect their children to have faith in God if they were not taught at home to exercise faith in him?" And I thought, How could parents teach their children faith in God when they had none themselves? It is hard to impart to others that which we do not possess. A little girl, ten years old, was visiting at my home, who was subject to colic, very severe at times. The first attack while at my home she asked for some medicine to relieve the pain. I got the oil, and she refused to let me use it. I told her that was all the medicine I had, and she replied very sneeringly that the old oil would not do her any good, that her mamma never used it anyway. She got well, however, and next day boasted about it, but I said nothing. In a few more days she was sick again, and this time very bad, too. She asked me to give her something again, so I got the oil, but she was not willing for me to use it. The pain being very severe, she finally consented. I anointed with the oil, offering silent prayer in my heart; she was soon asleep, and next morning said, "Well, that oil did cure me," and asked me many questions about the use of it, and wanted to know why her mamma did not use it, if it was such a good medicine.

When she returned home she told her mamma all about it and what a good medicine it was, and would insist on the use of the oil when her mamma wanted to give her medicine; but from lack of encouragement she quit its use. Her mamma told me about it with tears in her eyes, and said it just seemed like she could not have faith in so simple a thing as oil; she would take medicine and use oil too. That little girl is to-day attending another church; and who can tell what the result will be? There are many cases similar to this one that I know of. Is it any wonder Jesus said, "Oh, ye of little faith"?

Parents could prove the adage, "Show your faith by your works," in the training of their children, if they would only take time to consider it. Jesus said, "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, . . . how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."—Matthew 23: 37. I wonder if the same could not be applied to Saints in these latter days, and fit just as well as it did then? I wonder too, if that is not the reason we have so many afflicted Saints in our church to-day because "ye would not"?

I heard a brother say once that "every prophecy he heard given, he took particular notice of it and the person who gave it, and if it ever came to pass then he knew it was of God—and he had faith in the person." A long time to wait, brother; why not know from whence it was, when given? This privilege is ours. If we will only have it that way. What is the use of being Saints and children of light, if we still walk in darkness?

I suppose we often make Jesus sad by our inconsistencies. Paul said to the Corinthians, "I have fed you with milk and not with meat, for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able." How long, O Saints, how long will we refuse to be gathered? Once I was sick and one said, "Shall we call Bro. So-and-so?" I replied that I would rather have some one else, as I did not think that brother very spiritually minded. The brother said, "It is God who does the healing; we are his means." I acknowledged the rebuke and said, "Send for him." I was healed, too, just the same as formerly. Satan tried to sow doubt in my heart and but for this fearless brother perhaps would have succeeded. I hope and pray that Satan will always meet an enemy fearless for God when he tries to plant doubts in our hearts.

Jesus said in olden times, that he could not do many mighty works in a certain place because of their unbelief. I think the same could be said of us in these days. Do you know why the world mocks our elders and asks all manner of absurd things of them?

A man said to me after hearing a sermon on "The signs follow the believer," "I like your doctrine, but I don't see that you live up to your claims any more than other religious bodies. Now here is [a member of the writer's family], who would be the happiest man in the world if he was well; why don't your people heal him?" Oh, for the mustard-seed faith! God has given the authority to the priesthood to rebuke all manner of disease. Whose fault is it, then, when our sick are not healed? It is because "ye would not."

You remember when the people wanted to know who had sinned, the blind man, (whom Jesus had healed,) or his parents. Jesus said "Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the works of God should be made manifest in him." Now, is there a better way to make this latter-day gospel more manifest to the world than the healing of our unfortunate? I think not. I verily believe that is the reason there are so many afflicted among us. Because of our unbelief he can not do many mighty works among us. We are in a manner stumbling-blocks to the world because we do not honor the privileges that are ours.

If we were loyal Saints there are enough of us to cause the world to marvel every day at the wonderful power of God and, some might say, "Surely these are the Lord's people; see how he blesses them and hears them when they pray."

A sister once said to me, "I always provide a little tea and crackers on days when I fast, and if I feel faint, as though I could not hold out the whole day, I have a sup of tea handy." Another said she ate a certain kind of candy, so she would not get hungry. Saints, can you not see where the fault is? "Ye would not." I understand that every blessing is ours to enjoy if we will pay the price, and the price is sacrifice of some of our feelings, of our desires, of our likes, of our opinions, of our fault-finding, of our criticising, and our rebelliousness. Give up some of these, Saints, and see if your faith is not strengthened.

My face has been made to burn with shame when reading criticisms in our church papers of how the heads of the church were conducting the affairs of the church,—there to be read by an unbelieving world. Do you not think that God will warn all faithful, humble Saints if the work is in danger? I do. Our duty is to live in a way so that we will be able and willing to receive these warnings or the voice of the Spirit, when they come. But we must live for these things; sacrifice, fast, pray, humble ourselves before God, and watch the results. If we will do this the pen of criticism will for ever be silenced.

Our inconsistency reminds me of our Utah friends when giving their testimony in the Smoot case. See how we have to be urged to pay the debt on Grace-land, after being told by revelation to pay it.

Our duty is to do with our might the work assigned us, and if things go wrong, or not to our understanding, ask of the Lord to keep us posted, and he will do it if it is for our good, and we will have that sense of feeling that God is at the head of this work, and is able to manage it. All he asks of us is faith and works. And if every Saint will put faith and works into practice at once, inside of a month Zion will be made to rejoice, and the world to marvel; and Jesus could soon claim his own, as he has said he is anxious to do. Saints, let us put on the whole armor of faith, and show it by our works. Do not look for wrong in others. Work this out for yourself; it is to your interest, not mine, that you be up and doing while the time is yours. Some of us are hindering the work in one way and another,—and God has promised to remove all hindering causes. Then let us awake and go to work. I know this work is true; and I am going to try to earn my reward, let others do as they choose. I hope and pray we may see the importance of thus living and thus help remove the hindering causes, and not stand in the way of our prayers being answered. May the Lord help us to so live.

A SAINT.

SERMONS SHORT AND LONG.

By a London newspaper an active crusade is being carried on against long sermons. In the judgment of the Daily Express ten minutes ought to suffice for a pulpit address. Many correspondents have discussed the proposal. Some contend that from twenty to thirty minutes would be a fair average. Others resist the idea of any time limit whatever. The latter argue that the movement is an inauguration of the indifference and feverishness of the age. The topic is certainly not a new one. It has been discussed by church-goers nearly as long as there have been churches. On the way home from worship the length, the height, and the depth of the preacher's message have been canvassed for generations. As a rule this is not a healthy sign. When the manner of the discourse is its chief feature it is safe to assume that there is something defective in the matter. But the fault does not always lie with the preacher. Rarely is there a sermon so dull that it does not convey strength and consolation to some listeners who are in the proper frame of mind. The demand for eloquence, brevity, flowery imagery, and brilliancy of diction is natural enough, but it fails to appreciate the fact that the true mission of the pulpit is to tell simply, directly, and sincerely the great truths of all time. We are not invited to church to be entertained, but to be instructed. If it sometimes happens that the sermon does not appeal specially to us it is quite probable that it gets very close to the needs of some one else. Nothing could be further from the spirit of the occasion than for the preacher to be controlled by a stop-watch. There are sermons for which ten minutes are too long, and others for which three-quarters of an hour is too brief. There are sermons which are a weariness to the flesh, and others that change the course of a lifetime. How is it possible to lay down one rule for all? Let the preacher be assured of the sympathy of his listeners, and the congregation of the earnestness of the preacher, and none will know, or care, whether the sermon is short or long. Truth is not measured by quantity, but by quality. We shall have reason to fear for the influence of the pulpit when sermons are scheduled like trains, and required to pull up at "lastly," to the second.—The Mail and Empire, Toronto.

HIS GIFT TO THE LORD.

(From the Open Door.)

Yesterday he wore a rose on the lapel of his coat, and when the plate was passed he gave a nickel to the Lord. He had several bills in his pocket and sundry change, perhaps a dollar's worth, but he hunted about, and, finding this poor little nickel, he laid it on the plate to aid the Church Militant in its fight against the world, the flesh, and the devil. His silk hat was beneath the seat, and his cane and gloves were beside it, and the nickel was on the plate—a whole nickel. On Saturday afternoon he had a gin rickey at the "Queen's" and his friend had a fancy drink, while the cash-register stamped thirty-five cents on the slip the boy presented to him. Peeling off a bill he handed it to the boy, and gave him a nickel tip when he brought back the change. A nickel for the Lord and a nickel for the waiter! And the man had his shoes polished on Saturday afternoon, and handed out a dime without a murmur. He had a shave, and paid fifteen cents with equal alacrity. He took a box of candies home to his wife, and paid forty cents for them, and the box was tied with a dainty bit of ribbon. Yes, but he also gave a nickel to the Lord. Who is this Lord? Who is he? Why, the man worships him as Creator of the universe, the one who puts the stars in order and by whose immutable decree the heavens stand. Yes, he does, and he dropped a nickel in to support the Church Militant. And what is the Church Militant? The Church Militant is the church that represents upon earth the Church Triumphant of the great God the man gave the nickel to. And the man knew that he was but an atom in space, and he knew that the Almighty was without limitations, and knowing this he put his hand in his pocket and picked out the nickel and gave it to the Lord. And the Lord being gracious and slow to anger and knowing our frame, did not slay the man for the meanness of his offering, but gives him this day his daily bread. But the nickel was ashamed if the man wasn't. The nickel hid beneath a quarter that was given by a poor woman who washes for a living.—The Toronto Star.

The Baptism of Children.

For some cause there are a great many people who object to the baptism of children who are not more than eight or nine years old. The principal objection that I have heard is, that a child so young does not understand well enough what it means to be baptized and belong to the church.

It is true that some do not understand and of course are not accountable until they do. But who can say that the child who has been diligently taught by a Christian mother, or other person, and has heard again and again the gospel plan of salvation explained, does not understand, or is not accountable if he manifests no desire to be baptized when he is eight or nine years old? We expect him to understand that it is against the will and law of God to lie, steal, swear, etc. So why can not he understand how to have those sins remitted if he has committed them? And if he does manifest a desire to be baptized, and gives evidence that he does understand what it is for, and what obligations it brings on him, (which I think should be the aim of our teaching,) then what parents could refuse him, and feel that they were doing the will of the heavenly Father? I for one could not bring myself to say "No, wait till you are older," when my own little daughter asked my consent to her baptism.

For when I looked into the future and saw what it might mean, I said in my heart, Yes, daughter; for perhaps there will never be an end of waiting, and it might be my sad lot to one day stand by the lifeless form of my child grown up a servant of sin, and feel the bitter remorse that one word of mine in her childhood might have changed the whole course of her life.

It seems to me a grand thing to devote one's whole life to the service of God. Ecclesiastes 12: 1 says, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them."

Oh, that we all had begun to serve God in our youth before we formed our worldly habits that are so hard to overcome, or become devoted to the world "till the way of the Lord" does not look pleasant! Now, reader, you who object to children being baptized read Proverbs 10: 1, which says, "A wise son maketh a glad father," then as if to tell us what a wise son is, it says again, in Proverbs 23: 7, "Whoso keepeth the law is a wise son." Would you not rather be the glad father of a wise son than the father of a son that is a "heaviness to his mother"?

Of course the world may prove so attractive to a young person, or other things intervene and make him "backslide," but would you refuse him baptism on that account? Older people have that very thing happen with them, but you never hear of any one objecting to them obeying the gospel for fear they may "backslide."

Perhaps, as some say, they are too young to know what church they prefer. That may be; but if when they are older they feel that this is not the church of their choice, what will hinder them from leaving it and joining some other? Nothing but their own judgment, that I know of. On the other hand children should not be coaxed, nor persuaded, nor incited to be baptized just because some one else is.

Just teach them diligently from the time that they can understand, and leave the rest with God who doeth all things well.

And may I add a little more? Do not stop teaching them after they have obeyed, for much depends on us whether they will be an honor to the church or not, not forgetting that example is more than words.

BLANCHE E. CLINE.

Dear Sisters: I feel as though I should like to have a quiet talk this evening with others whose day like mine ended with its round of duties and the little opportunities of doing good, and we sit down with a sense of having done our best or else of wishing we had done better.

Some of us have not much chance of doing good except in our own family, but it seems to me that is a broad field if we are not too blind to see the golden grain to be gathered there.

I think most of the men who every day leave the home nest for the field or desk, feel more like trying to do their best in all things if they left the mother and wife with a cheerful face (though her hands were busy), and the children clean and contented playing about her instead of growling at one another like little bears and mother screaming for them to "behave."

All children have their ups and downs, but they are far more apt to be healthy and therefore happy if their mother took care of her health and strove to cultivate a cheerful spirit before their birth. What father is not gladdened to see his household cheerful and contented, and what mother does not feel herself well repaid who has made effort to have it thus?

Perhaps your boys and girls, though too young to make very melodious music, still love dearly to hear mother play the old organ and often plead for a song. Do not always tell them you are too tired or too busy, or you do not feel like it for some cause. One of these days you will be lamenting that the children are gone somewhere nearly all the time and you think they do not care for mother any more; you will have yourself to thank, for when you might have made home attractive you were too selfish to do so. You wanted to get your precious work done and you did it, and now you have lost your influence over the souls God placed in your care and must take the reward of your work.

The same with books. Some children are fond of hearing a book read before they are able to read much for themselves, and if we form the habit of reading good books to them it is easier to read with them as they grow older and so they are content to stay at home and thus miss many temptations. These are our opportunities; let us not neglect them.

I feel that too much can not be said along these lines, for many of us are paying more attention to the children's clothes and food than to their very souls.

Of course we must have them fed and dressed nicely, and a great deal of thought must be given to these things, but there are a great many fripperies of dress and much indigestible food which could easily be dispensed with, if in order to have them we must neglect the quiet talk or song, book or Sunday-school lesson with the children.

Dear Sr. Hattie, I thank you for your kind, encouraging words; you do not know how much your letter was to me. I am so thankful to be able to help a little in the cause of right.

Ever striving to make the most of my lot in life,

MIGNON.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Mary Johnson, Brooklyn, New York, earnestly desires the prayers of the Prayer Union that God may see fit to extend the hand of healing to her son, Bro. James, who has been afflicted for some time, that he may receive his speech and be healed. Will the Saints try to fast with me on Thursday, the 20th?

Bro. August Monson of Clinton, Iowa, requests the prayers of the Saints in his behalf that he might be relieved of his suffering and restored to health.

Sr. Lofton requests the prayers of the Prayer Union that her daughter, Virgie, may be restored to perfect health again.

Sr. Lizzie May Parker, who is lying very low at her home at Missouri Valley, Iowa, with Bright's disease, asks an interest in your prayers that if it be God's will she may be healed.

Sr. Florence Toover, Weyburn, Canada, solicits the prayers of all Saints and the Prayer Union in behalf of her husband, who is unable to sit up more than a few minutes at a time.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

First Assistant Superintendent at Reunions.

Leaving Stewartsville Saturday evening, I stayed over night with Bro. and Sr. Robert Garlich, partaking of their genial hospitality with thankfulness for the enjoyment, and feeling,

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love."

Bro. G. left me at the Union Station, he going to his charge—a mission Sunday-school—and I to board the train for Fanning, Kansas, where the reunion of the Northeastern Kansas District was in progress.

Alighting from the St. Joseph and Grand Island train at Troy Junction, I found the Burlington train north had passed about fifteen minutes previously. So, tired and hungry, it being a little past noon, I at once set about to find a way out of the dilemma, and soon had the good fortune to find a young man who was willing to take me overland by horse and buggy to Fanning, a distance of about seven or eight miles. We had, to me, a pleasant drive, though warm and dusty, and arrived in good season to fill my appointment at four o'clock, which was to conduct a session of Sunday-school.

The camp here was quite small, but those present were interested and energetic in the Lord's work, and a goodly number assembled at the time appointed. An organization was hastily effected, and I was placed in charge of the auxiliary work of the reunion, assisted by a number of the willing workers as teachers and associate officers. Here we had one of those unexplainable experiences seldom met with—a district association officer in the camp within calling distance of the session, but preferring to spend the time in chatting than to lend a hand, very much needed, to move on the work. The work moved off nicely, however, and announcements were made for Monday, which was institute work at fifteen minutes to eleven o'clock in the forenoon and Sunday-school at four o'clock in the afternoon.

Here, as at other places, the committee appreciated the benefits of the auxiliary societies and were glad to make arrangements for forenoon and afternoon sessions, leaving us free to occupy as we saw fit. We felt blest in the efforts made, though there were but few in attendance, indicating a strong desire of the workers to be better fitted for their sacred duties, and a willingness of our heavenly Father to recognize the efforts of the few when made in humility.

I believe much good was done, and trust fruit may in time appear as a result of the planting and subsequent cultivation.

I closed my stay Thursday evening and came home by way of Atchison, stopping over night in Atchison with Bro. Johnson, whom I called out of bed to receive me. Thank you, dear brother.

The work of the auxiliary societies in this district is badly run down, there being, as I remember, no Religio local, and the District Sunday-school Association almost inactive. When shall we all realize that to accept responsibility in the Lord's work is to accept a sacred trust that should be kept in the fear of God with a consciousness that we must render an account to the Just One?

In bonds,

Letter Department.

HEBER, Utah, September 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: I was requested by a number of the Saints in my home district not to forget, once in a while, to let them hear from me through the HERALD. I have thus far refrained from writing, feeling I had nothing of special interest to communicate. Yet, no doubt, much that transpires here to which we in this Rocky Mountain Zion have become accustomed would, by the uninitiated, be regarded as peculiar and strange.

Just now it is politics that is on the minds of the masses, and we hear it discussed almost everywhere, even from the pulpit on the Sabbath day. Of course the authorities of the dominant church constantly declare that they do not interfere in political matters; but strange and unexpected things happen, now and then, that can not be accounted for except upon the ground that there is a secret undercurrent at work understood only by the faithful. I am informed by several of their members, that their so-called "living oracles" in the councils of the priesthood, advise and dictate in all matters, including politics. Only last Sunday we heard one of the speakers in the tabernacle in this city declare that "the kingdom of God embraces everything, both temporal and spiritual, and hence embraces politics." Another speaker informed us that the "priesthood" of the church or kingdom are the "living oracles," whose counsel must be heeded in all matters and be considered of more importance than the written word. It is no wonder that, as a result, many non-Mormons and liberals are becoming dissatisfied, and are demanding a separation of church and state. Indications are now that the same political conditions that prevailed here before the "Manifesto" in 1890 will obtain again, and what the end will be is difficult to conjecture.

It is strange that professing Latter Day Saints will not learn wisdom. Why should men professing to be prophets and apostles not be content in their spiritual work instead of dabbling in politics, seeking for gubernatorial or senatorial honors, or dictate as to who should be permitted to occupy in such positions? But man in his blinded condition, trusting in man, making flesh his arm, seems not to "see when good cometh." Even the trouble and experience of the past does not, to such, serve as a lesson.

It sounds queer to hear men talk of their loyalty to the Government and of their good citizenship, and almost in their next breath inform us that they are ex-convicts, or tell some story as to how they succeeded in eluding the officers of the law, years ago, when the Government was enforcing the law against polygamy and unlawful cohabitation. Such boasting and tales are heard both publicly and privately, and frequently from the pulpit in their houses of worship. Men who live in open violation of the law both of God and man are acknowledged as apostles and leaders. Joseph F. Smith, though admitting that he is a lawbreaker, and making the statement that he is no prophet, which admission and statement were made before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate, yet many stand ready to testify that they know that both he, his counselors, and all of the Quorum of Twelve are prophets, seers, and revelators. They feast upon their ungodly, boastful claims as upon sweet morsels, and without questioning sustain them as spiritual and temporal guides, singing: "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

The gospel work moves slowly, for people who are satisfied with a religion that embraces all kinds of carnal pleasures, who consider themselves rich and in need of nothing, are not inclined to seek for the eternal riches offered through the message of God's word. There seems to be a spirit of indifference manifested upon every hand as far as religion is concerned, but the dancing-halls, theaters, and all kinds of pleasure-resorts are patronized by both saint and sinner, by both the priest and the laity; and when the chief watchman once in a while is heard from, it is with the soul-sleeping message: "Zion prospers; all is well."

Apostle Clauson, to whom I had the privilege of listening in a stake conference in Provo a short time since, spoke in regard to the greatness of their work, and among other things said: "We own the best and most substantial business houses, the best theaters, the best pleasure-resorts, and the best of everything." These he contended were evidences of their acceptance with God. I was reminded of the word of the Lord, which the revelator was commanded to write to the church of the Laodiceans: "Thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." I was led to believe if the Lord should speak to this people now, it would be somewhat on the same order.

I have labored in this mission for a number of years in the past, and have had an opportunity to observe conditions. I am glad to say that there are some improvements, making our chances a little better, but the apparent friendship that we sometimes meet is only upon the surface, and in their hearts we are considered their worst enemies.

Our efforts are not in vain, however, as by many of those who care to know, our position is becoming better understood, and a few are found who are willing to enlist under the banner of King Immanuel. I am sorry the season for street work is about over as evenings are getting too cool. It seems to be about the only way to reach the people, as houses to preach in are expensive and many will not attend.

I hope to labor on, however, hoping to win the approval of God, if not of man.

H. N. HANSEN.

CAMP CREEK, Iowa, October 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: In this neighborhood, as in most every vicinity where the ministers of Christ have labored for years, new faces are seen and new voices greet the preacher, while many of those known in years that are past have changed their place of residence to distant parts of the country, or have passed to the beyond to try the realities of the eternal world. How true it is that if we did not form new acquaintances and make new friends we would soon be left to wander in this world of sin and death alone. Yet how forcibly fond recollections are pressed upon the mind, and faces and forms once honored and loved reappear before the mind's eye, and for a few moments we live over again days and years that are past and we drink once more at the fountain of friendship and love and look forward with joyful anticipation to the time when we shall meet again on the ever green shores of the river of life where loved ones shall meet to part no more.

In this present life with all its cares, trouble, disappointments, burdens, sickness, sorrow, and death, there are so many good things, and our associations are so pleasant that there comes to us so much peace, joy, fellowship, and love that the heart overflows with gratitude to him who is the "giver of every good and perfect gift," because he has made it possible for us to be contented and happy in this life knowing that he doeth all things well. Thanks are due him for food and drink, raiment and shelter, home and loved ones, church and its relationship, friends and associates, and the powers of body and soul. In harmony with the word, God by his Spirit quickens the perceptions, expands the mind, and enlarges the heart, giving to the "inner man" a flood of divine light that fills it with joy and gladness, and heaven is enjoyed here below, and eternal life in the presence of God seems to be a realized fact, but a step or two in advance.

Is it not true that heaven commences here below? Yes; where love and confidence abide in the hearts of all, and Christ by his Spirit is found an ever-present guest at the hearthstone,—there heaven may be found.

The family is the foundation of all true government, whether of church or state, and the home is its abiding place. The purity of the home and the sacred relationship of the family should be jealously and carefully guarded by every member of the family and every sojourner under its sacred dome. He who would knowingly defile the sacredness of the family, or the purity of the home, no matter what the opportunities might be, is a traitor to his government and an enemy to man and God, whether he knows it or not. If each husband and wife, each father and mother, each son and daughter, each brother and sister would but lovingly, honestly, and properly do their part; how the conditions now existing in this world would change for the better, and soon that glorious time would come when the will of God would be "done on earth as it is done in heaven." Jealousy and hate with all their associate evils would flee away or be consumed in the "lake of fire and brimstone" to live no more for ever and ever. Men would "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks," nation would not "lift up sword against nation," neither would they "learn war any more." Christ would reign as "King of kings and Lord of lords," and the Saints would be in possession of their everlasting inheritance.

Every true child of God knows by the impress of the Spirit that it is a member of "the family of God" on earth, and the rules governing in the divine home should be carefully and fully observed in order that peace and love and confidence may abide in the church of God. When each member is enlightened by the Spirit and directed by the word there is no coveting of position, wealth, or power; but the humblest brother or sister is just as welcome to his or her place in the family and church as the most noted or honored minister; for, with the disciples, as with their Lord, there is no respect to persons. It is character that is acceptable to God and approved of the follower of Christ. It is pleasant to abide in the church of the living God when each member has the same care one for another, and the inspiration of each mind and heart is pure and good, and the words spoken are chaste and true, and the actions are right and proper and testifying of "the pure love of God shed abroad in the heart." How carefully each and every member of the divine family should seek with all the God-given powers in their possession to carefully guard the sacredness of the divine family and the purity of our spiritual home. Any other action does not savor of faith, confidence, or love, and therefore should be studiously and carefully avoided.

Every heart rejoices when the Spirit is with us, and every heart is melted down to contrition by its holy power and the divine calm within the room that is filled with the Spirit's presence. Such times are feasts partaken of by the household of faith, and their rejoicing is heavenly. This is a part of our heritage, and there is more just beyond which we shall receive and enjoy in due time, if we faint not.

Since last writing I have had the pleasure of baptizing five, the daughters of Brn. William and Alexander McCord near Defiance, and I enjoyed the society of my family and the Saints during the annual reunion at Dow City, where all seemed to be happy. Since the reunion I have done some labor at Auburn, and appreciate the kindness of the Saints who attended services. At this writing I am staying with Bro. and Sr. George Steel and family, and holding services in schoolhouse near by.

Hoping that right and truth may ever prevail, I remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

ST. JOSEPH, Missouri, October 5, 1904.

Dear Herald: This is the first time I have ever written to your columns although I have often thought of doing so. I love to read the HERALD and especially the letters. I have often received strength and encouragement from them when I have felt downcast and discouraged. And when I read of the good that others are doing in this great work I feel as though I have not done anything for my Master, whose loving care has always been over me and my family, and who is always ready and willing to hear and answer our prayers and help us in times of sickness and trouble. I feel thankful to my heavenly Father for the many blessings received at his hands, and desire to live faithful and to do something for his cause. I desire to live so that I may set a good example before my children, that they may grow up to obey the gospel and become servants for Christ.

Your sister,

MRS. ELIZABETH BURLINGTON.

DERBY, Indiana, October 6, 1904.

Editors Herald: What is generally regarded as the best conference ever held in Southern Indiana has just adjourned at Byrneville, Harrison County. Quite a crowd of Saints were in attendance. The weather was ideal, the hills and village were bathed in a glorious autumn sunlight, characteristic of Indiana at this time of the year. There was a good representation of the priesthood from all over the district. Measures of importance were discussed and passed, and the most splendid fellowship and unanimity of opinion characterized all the sessions. Bro. J. W. Wight arrived on Friday night, and was made president, and Bro. George Jenkins was chosen to assist. The Sunday services brought out a large crowd of outsiders, and Sunday night the capacity of the church was taxed to hold the great throng who listened to a forceful sermon by Bro. Wight on the fundamentals of the doctrine of Christ.

The Saints and friends at Byrneville know how to entertain in true Southern style, and the physical was just as well nourished as the spiritual. A more progressive spirit has taken possession of the Saints in this district, and greater things are expected from now on. Southern Indiana has been the great battleground between the theological ideas of Campbell and the principles of the everlasting gospel as taught by the missionaries of the Reorganization. This has resulted in a spirit of criticism and discernment which is hard to satisfy, and as a result the people are always glad to welcome advanced ideas, if they are in harmony with God's word.

Elder I. P. Baggerly was chosen president of the district; D. H. Baggerly, secretary. Derby was chosen as the place of next conference, which will convene next February.

Your writer greatly regrets that he has not spent more of his missionary life among the Hoosiers, who are the greatest geniuses on the Western Continent.

In bonds,

JAMES M. BAGGERLY.

LUCAS, Iowa, October 12, 1904.

Editors Herald: On September 17, Bro. W. H. Kephart and I left Lamoni for this part of the field. In the last twenty-four days I have preached twenty-seven times, and been busy almost day and night in assisting the Saints to an understanding of their temporal duties, that each one owes to God. I am pleased to say a number are "making up their accounts," to find out their worth, so they can pay the Lord "the tithe of all their increase." We preached a few times at Cleveland, and then to the Norwood Church for two weeks, baptizing Bro. Jacob C. Cackler, and taking a number of orders for books, HERALDS, and Ensigns. We feel that a good work was done in that section of country.

Bro. Kephart spoke Sunday evening, the 9th, at Lucas, and I at Cleveland. The good sisters of the Mite Society found each of us were in need of a better hat, so made us a present of three dollars each to purchase one. Many thanks to you, sisters. W. H. was called home Monday, the 10th, on account of sickness in his family. I spoke at Lucas Monday and Tuesday nights; and Bro. John R. Evans and I go to-day to Hiteman, holding over Sunday, the 16th.

The missionaries all seem to be busy in the field, and we are hopeful of turning in a good report of work done, at the close of the year. I find many noble Saints down through this part of the stake, and "by their fruits, ye shall know them"—tithes and offerings the fruits. Yours in the gospel,

D. C. WHITE.

PITTSBURG, Pennsylvania, October 9, 1904.

Dear Herald: After an absence of over two years, and nearly a year's time for observation, one can see great changes which have and are taking place in a city like Pittsburg. The most noticeable change which has attracted the writer is the unstinted spending of money for adornment of office buildings, display windows, etc. There is a new department store just completed here; the exterior walls are of some glazed surface which can be washed like a porcelain dish—a commendable feature in this city of mills, although with the large use of natural gas as fuel, the city is not any dirtier than probably the average large manufacturing town. This new department store has the interior wood-work inlaid with ivory, turkish rugs are scattered around in some departments, and other luxuries in harmony. The three million dollar institution which is to be added to the large Carnegie Library, or rather the library is to be a small addition to it, is about to materialize. There is some delay because the most noted architects of the country, so the committee of awards state, failed to grasp the magnitude of the institution and all plans were rejected! Amidst this luxury, extravagance, and bigness, is a little congregation of God's people, living from one half to fifteen miles from the chapel. They are seemingly moving farther and farther away, the reason being to get a reasonable rent or a little pure air, so it is very difficult to get a representative audience out at any of the church services. Last Sunday we had a "rally day," notices having been sent out in time; although the weather was threatening, the largest attendance we had since the opening of the church-building greeted each other, a goodly number of strangers being present. About as nice a social meeting as we have had for a long time comforted and edified the Saints. Two were baptized after the testimony meeting, breaking a long dearth of baptisms; there will be another precious soul born of the water next Sunday. May the good work continue. Sr. Curry, wife of Bro. Lem Curry, and son Earl, are the new members of Christ's church. Some of you elders can't see where your labors count very much; these baptisms are result of work done by old Bro. Brown years ago. This splendid sister has known and believed the work for years but did not take the final and necessary step until last Sabbath. All but one of this family of six are now members, the result of Bro. Brown's labors; he is dead but his light still shines. Like a star in the sky, it may have been obliterated for ages, yet because of its distance we see its light nightly.

The branch here needs replenishing with "good men and true," as death has invaded our ranks, and now two more will move to Zion city, in the persons of Sr. Muse and daughter, Ella. They leave in a week or so. It will undoubtedly be of interest to your readers if an experience of Sr. Muse's is related here. She became dissatisfied with her previous religious experience, and finally joined the church; she is the only member in her family. Her mother, quite aged, was subject to fainting spells; as she was coming down-stairs one day she was taken with one of these spells and fell over the banister, breaking her collar-bone, several ribs, and injuring her very severely. The broken rib pierced the lung, causing hemorrhages. Sr. Muse requested the privilege of sending for the elders to administer to her, but this was positively and emphatically denied by the relatives. The attending physician had set the day and hour when the old lady would die. Sr. Muse had sent for Priest Harry Thomas and the writer; she explained the circumstances, and told us that we would not be allowed in the room, so we three knelt down in another room and there plead for the old mother. After we left, Sr. Muse anointed the afflicted one with oil, which she had been doing previously. During the night a large clot of blood was vomited, the terrible bruise vanished, and the ribs went into place, the collar-bone began to heal, and the old lady recovered completely, much to the astonishment of the physician and the relatives. Now for the result of this: This physician prescribes olive-oil for severe bruises, and the sisters of Sr. Muse send olive-oil down to the church to have us bless it!

We miss the kindly face and the vigorous hand-shake of good Bro. Reese, who met his death from a fall from a step-ladder while making some repairs around his home. He was a stationary engineer by occupation, surrounded by danger daily, yet he met death by an accident at his own home! His spirit, mellowed with age, he has been ushered into the paradise of God, and can mingle with the spirits of those who are arrayed in white; his spirit will become perfect and he will arise in the resurrection of the just. So we are losing by death and removal, and at times matters look discouraging in this great city of churches and—indifference to the truth. We are now making an effort to pay off the debt of twenty-five hundred dollars on our chapel; several hundred dollars was subscribed for this purpose on "rally day."

Bro. Clapp's observation in last HERALD about the tendency of some men to get ahead of the truth as it is in the gospel, reminds one of the two Irishmen who were sitting along the railroad track as a freight-train was passing them. A brakeman was on top of the train, slowly running toward the engine; one of the Irishmen noticing him, said to his companion: "Look, Mike, how thot mon can run, sure and he's gainin' on the igrine!"

The Utah church claims to have made twenty-three converts in the Pittsburg District last year, and are making efforts to increase this number, with what success I do not know. They adopt the house to house plan, leave tracts, etc., and then make engagements for an evening's conversation. This plan seems to be the only way of reaching city people, as they will not regularly attend services where they must go any distance, and as there is such a tremendous amount of attractive reading-matter which can be bought for a song, tracts are not very attractive to the average cityite. So the time seems to be here when, if we want to make any impression in city work, we must go to the mountain (of ignorance, bigotry, and indifference) and have it out face to face, and back of it all there must be the Lord working. The officers of this branch are making special efforts in prayer that the ways may be opened for spreading the gospel. The difficulties of city work require the divine combination of zeal with knowledge, and the directing and convincing power of God's spirit.

C. ED. MILLER.

CASTALIA, South Dakota, October 10, 1904.

Editors Herald: I arrived here September 23; commenced my meetings September 25, to a good crowd; have held fourteen meetings in all, and the end is not yet. One man (a Mr. Phillips) made the statement after meeting last night, "You can not stop now, and with this, but must continue," so we have concluded to hold on yet for a time.

I have been alone; my colaborer, Bro. E. F. Robertson, has not returned from Nebraska as yet. Am in hopes he may soon, as the work here demands it; and there are those here who would be pleased to hear him also.

This place was opened up last summer by Brn. W. W. Whiting, L. Gamet, and R. Wight, who left the matter in good shape for us to follow up. The influence they left with the people was indeed a good one. The Methodist Episcopal pastor here has attended some of my meetings. I always ask him to assist me, and he never refuses, but does it cheerfully, and at the close of last night's services he gave me to understand that their latch-string was on the outside of the door to us as well as all preachers who might come along. The attendance has been very good all along, (the two last Sunday evenings more than the house could seat,) the attention all that could be asked, as also the order. I have been treated with the greatest respect.

Sunday evening, October 2, I spoke on the subject, "The difference between us and the Utah Mormons," to a packed house, and we have reason to believe good was done. I have made it a rule in my work, whenever I have a privilege, in new openings, to hold a series of meetings, to speak one night on this subject, and have always been blessed in so doing.

This summer (or conference year) has been very much the same as other years. Some places a fair interest, and others not so much. Saints are scattered to quite an extent over South Dakota, and it requires a great deal of travel to reach them all. They seem to be trying to live right, to the best of their ability and circumstances.

I have enjoyed the good Spirit in telling the story to the children of men, and feel to thank the Lord for the same. Was called to Illinois to see my wife's parents in July, who were very low, had no hopes of their recovery, but became better; for how long we are unable to tell, as they are old people. Their days are certainly not many here below. While there, preached at old Mission Church, where I was born and raised. It was indeed a pleasure to meet old friends and Saints there. Preached also at Leland, August 7, at three o'clock in the afternoon, and eight in the evening. Good attendance and attention; many invitations to go home with friends and relatives. Had the use of the old Baptist church, where I understand others of our brethren have occupied in the past, including Bro. Joseph.

Last night after reaching home a lively hail-storm struck us, but with very little damage. It could be heard some little distance before reaching us. Some window-panes were broken here. I am now staying with Bro. and Sr. G. H. Williamson, formerly of Arion, Iowa, who know how to make the elders feel at home. May the good Lord reward them for their kindness to the Saints of South Dakota. Write me, if necessary, at my home address, Lamoni, Iowa.

In the conflict and struggle for life,

ADELAIDE, South Australia, Sept. 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am corresponding with a cousin of mine (on my father's side) who is warden of King Hall (a theological college) in Washington, District of Columbia. He is a Church of England clergyman of some notoriety, being an M. A., B. A., LL. B., and I have written him about our faith, also inclosed such pamphlets as Teachings in Contrast, and Latter Day Saints, Who Are They? and other tracts. I bespoken a kindly reception for any of our elders who might call on him, so I would be pleased if you would instruct any of our missionaries who may call that way to make it a point to see him. His name is Reverend William V. Tunnell, and his address, King Hall, Washington, District of Columbia. I should like very much that he get an opportunity to investigate our faith.

Our work in this city is progressing slowly but surely, and we are still hopeful of planting the true gospel banner in this city and State. The Book of Mormon seems to be a most effective proselytizing agency among this people, and to my mind should be the most prominent plank in our platform, as it certainly is a wonderful book and contains the gospel of Christ in purity and fullness, uncorrupted and untouched by the blundering hand of man.

One good sister, our present organist, was convinced we had the truth when she read the Book of Mormon, and another, who is caring for a rich old gentleman, takes it with her and while sitting in the parks and gardens reads it to the old gent, who will sit for hours listening. In my opinion the time is ripe for a greater use of it in public so as to educate the people on its internal teachings. We speak of it considerably from a biblical or external standpoint, but to my mind the most effective method will yet be found in an explanation of its truths from the book itself.

The work as a whole seems to be making its way in these States. Melbourne, Victoria, especially is making great strides of late. We have not yet obtained a thorough foothold in South Australia, though we have labored in this city (Adelaide) for a year and a half.

Faithfully yours in gospel bonds,

J. H. N. JONES.

ARTHUR, Ontario, October 10, 1904.

Editors Herald: The district conference held here last week is now history, and will be long remembered by many of us for what we learned. Others may profit by our experience in the matter of considering the aggregate cost of caring for such gatherings. It has been estimated twenty-five hundred meals were eaten in the five days together. All hands dined in one hall. The branch donated into the hands of a committee the sum of one hundred and forty dollars, besides free-will pastry baking to the amount of thirty-five dollars more or less. Thus meals cost about seven cents per head.

We have now proved that it is easier and cheaper to provide for a conference in this way than in private houses. We count the expense between money donated, and baking offered, about one hundred and seventy-five dollars, and when all bills were paid we had a balance of about forty-five dollars left, to our surprise, which we cheerfully handed over to the Bishop's agent to pay our share of Graceland College debt, as per resolution of district conference. And let me say right here, no matter what our private opinion is of the college, it is our college. We are the church and it is too late now to debate over whether or not it was wisdom to build a college. That is not the question. As for me I would rather it had not been erected, but now since it lives I would consider it as working against the interests of the church to put one straw in its way. If every district in the world will pay its proportionate share it will be an easy matter to unload the great worry which the debt causes our worthy church authorities, and please our Father who said, "The college debt should be paid."

Our town paper speaks very highly of the orderly conduct and general prestige the Saints are commanding. The spiritual part of the conference was not as great as we have witnessed, but it was a profitable and happy time for many. The branch is happy and bright and well paid for their sacrifice. God loves a cheerful giver. When individuals give cheerfully of their substance to further the work of the Lord they will receive of the abundance of the Spirit, which is more than any earthly riches. Success means sacrifice every time, let that be denying ourselves of wealth, pleasure, or selfish desires.

God loves a cheerful giver of service as well as of money, and if our motives are the purest and noblest, to bring honor and glory to God's cause, blessed are we; but if to exalt self, sad will be the disappointment and shame.

G. BUSCHLEN.

SOUTH BRISBANE, Queensland, Australia, Sept. 6, 1904.

Editors Herald: This writing leaves me at the post of duty, and I may add, pleasure as well. This glorious work grows more precious with the passage of time and the advance of years. It is indeed "glad tidings of great joy."

Am very much in need of tracts. It requires much literature to carry on the work I am doing along the literary line. Will all who can do so kindly assist. Religians especially will please take notice of this request. Would be pleased to receive any numbers of Autumn Leaves for the years 1897, 1898, 1900, 1901, and 1902. These I particularly need. Would also like American newspapers. We get very little news from the home land.

The letters received from relatives, friends, and Saints have been a source of great comfort. "'Tis sweet to be remembered." However, such persons must not be too exacting relative to answers. I am one and they are many. As a specimen of epistles received the following is reproduced:

"Dear Brother: I don't expect you remember me any more for you were here so long ago. You were here about May, 1895. I was about five years old and I am now thirteen. I am in the sixth grade in school and am getting along fine in my studies.

"Oh how I wish I could be where you are, and be working for the good cause. I wish I could do as good and be as good as my sister Bertha. I go to Sunday-school and church and intend to be baptized.

"I saw a letter in the HERALD from you, and I got your address. I hope you will enjoy my letter, and may you and I always love God. I hope you remember me and will answer my letter because you were at our house and I always thought so much of you. I always called you my preacher when I was little, and I say so yet."

This letter reminds me, Brother Editor, that there is among us a lack of "the simplicity which is in Christ." Eve is not the only person the serpent has beguiled. (See 2 Corinthians 11.) There is not in the church enough of the above spirit to satisfy the writer. If we would lay aside much of what we have learned from the world we would be better prepared for the endowments God has promised. There is in our midst quite a representation of what God passed by in selecting Joseph the Martyr. Has the Lord's taste changed since then? Are we not falling under the influence of the secular spirit of the times? Having begun in the Spirit, are we now made perfect by the flesh? I find it necessary as a rule to go to the old instead of the new HERALDS for something truly spiritual. Are we depending more upon culture than the power of the Holy Spirit? When we read of the education and other good points a man needs to be a missionary here or there it seems so. However, this is only "tapping the bell," as Bro. T. W. Chatburn would say. Doubtless we need knowledge, but we can not hope for a stronger personality or a better education than others can furnish. Wherein then lies our superiority?

May all diligently "Occupy till I come." Ere long the cry will be: "Behold he cometh, he cometh to judge the world in righteousness, and the people with his truth." "Let the fields be joyful before him." Who is our God? "The Lord, the Lord of hosts, is his name." In gospel bonds,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

Uses His Thinker.

I have a thinker and can not avoid thinking, to save me. My thinker is influenced and made active by what I see, feel, taste, hear, and smell. I sometimes think things I do not want to think, but I will think anyway. And I want to tell you all about some things which I think.

I think we missionaries ought to go and preach the gospel to the people, convert them, baptize them, and organize them, and then leave them to the care of the local ministry and push out and preach to the world, and not go from branch to branch so much, and stay so long. I also think we missionaries ought to preach the gospel in its fullness, and leave the result with God and the people, and let theory alone,—at least much of it. I think we ought to glorify God and not ourselves. I think we ought to blow the gospel horn and not our own horns. I think we ought not to go into branches and kick up a fuss, and array one part of the branch against the other, and thereby tear down more than we can build up in a year or two. I think some of us ought to stay out of branches altogether, for we are not adapted to work in branches; we disorganize instead of organizing them.

I think we ought to represent the Master and the church, if we are able; and if not, we ought to be kept at home, or put at something we can do. I sometimes think I am sick, when I hear a man try to do something he can not do, and seems not to know it. I think that if we missionaries will do just what the Master has told us, and do it just as he has told us to do it, we will come out all right in the end.

Before I quit thinking I want to tell you that I think the worst disease that is annoying us little fellows is the "bighead." It is awful; and I think this disease is mostly confined to us little fellows. I think one thing that helps to give us little fellows the "bighead" is to have some one patting us on the back and occasionally writing a letter to the HERALD, giving a glowing account of what us little fellows have done. But the people are not so much to blame, for I think some of us little preachers tell the folks to write to the HERALD and tell what we have done, for that will give us a toot. I think—well, I will not tell you what else I think now.

E. W. NUNLEY.

A Query Answered.

Editors Herald: In your issue for October 12, page 965, I notice a letter and query from Bro. William Worth, Stockport, England. It appears from his communication that he is in discussion with the Utah elders, and that they have resorted to their usual tactics, i. e., denying their own books. They deny the statement made by Bro. P. Anderson, and quoted by Bro. Worth, to the effect that "Providing they have been married for all eternity, to one or more wives, they may commit all manner of sin, except the shedding of innocent blood, and still be permitted to enter into their exaltation, and become gods in eternity." This—it seems—the elder from Utah denied. I wonder how they would meet the statement as found in the Utah edition of Doctrine and Covenants, (any date from 1876,) section 132, paragraphs 19, 20, and 26, which reads as follows: "And again, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife by my word, which is my law, and by the new and everlasting covenant, and it is sealed unto them by the Holy Spirit of promise, by him who is anointed, unto whom I have appointed this power, and the keys of this Priesthood; and it shall be said unto them, ye shall come forth in the first resurrection; and if it be after the first resurrection, in the next resurrection; and shall inherit thrones, kingdoms, principalities, and powers, dominions, all heights and depths—then shall it be written in the Lamb's Book of Life, that he shall commit no murder whereby to shed innocent blood, and if ye abide in my covenant, and commit no murder whereby to shed innocent blood, it shall be done unto them in all things whatsoever my servant hath put upon them, in time, and through all eternity, and shall be of full force when they are out of the world; and they shall pass by the angels, and the Gods, which are set there, to their exaltation and glory in all things, as hath been sealed upon their heads, which glory shall be a fullness and a continuation of the seeds for ever and ever. Then shall they be Gods, because they have no end. . . . Then shall they be Gods because they have all power, and the angels are subject unto them. . . . Verily, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife according to my word, and they are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, according to mine appointment, and he or she shall commit any sin or transgression of the new and everlasting covenant whatever, and all manner of blasphemies, and if they commit no murder, wherein they shed innocent blood—yet they shall come forth in the first resurrection, and enter into their exaltation; but they shall be destroyed in the flesh, and shall be delivered unto the buffetings of Satan unto the the day of redemption, saith the Lord God."

Of course they may say that paragraph 19 says: "If . . . it shall be said unto them, ye shall come forth in the first resurrection," and it may not be so said." In answer to that possible quibble I would refer you to the ceremony used in this "New and everlasting order of marriage," given by Pratt in his article on "Celestial marriage in Deseret," as given in the Seer and quoted in Millennial Star, volume 15, page 214. There the ceremony (that Messrs Smith, Lyman, Roberts, Cannon, and others could not recall when before the Senate Committee, no matter how muchly married they were) is given as follows: "In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by the authority of the Holy Priesthood, I pronounce you legally and lawfully husband and wife, for time and for all eternity; and I seal upon you the blessings of the holy resurrection, with power to come forth in the morning of the first resurrection, clothed with glory, immortality, and eternal lives; and I seal upon you the blessings of thrones, and dominions, and principalities, and powers, and exaltations, together with the blessings of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and say unto you, be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth, that you may have joy and rejoicing in your posterity in the day of the Lord Jesus. All these blessings, together with all other blessings pertaining to the new and everlasting covenant, I seal upon your heads, through your faithfulness unto the end, by the authority of the Holy Priesthood, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen."

Please notice that all these promises are "Through your faithfulness unto the end," and when we turn to the quotation given from the Doctrine and Covenants to determine the measure of that faithfulness, we find the only limitation to be, That ye "commit no murders whereby to shed innocent blood." In fact your devilry may become so pronounced that it is necessary to destroy you in the flesh (for the good of the community and those so destroyed) still your exaltation is sure. And why? simple because you are supposed to be in a position to go on reproducing your species ad infinitum. Surely Isaiah saw something of this kind when he said, "Your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand."—Isaiah 28: 18. This system surely professes to make a covenant with death and an agreement with hell, and it can not stand but must be destroyed together with all of the works of the evil one.

A. M. CHASE.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, September 19, 1904.

Editors Herald: As it has been some time since I have seen anything in the HERALD from this place, will write a line to say that the work here is still alive, and, while there is not so much interest manifested in church work by the Saints as there should be, we are praying for the upbuilding of the work here and hopeful that the future will be of a more encouraging nature. Bro. J. N. Ames is still with us helping as best he can and striving earnestly, we believe, to advance the work in this part of the vineyard. Personally, I am glad to be able to say that I am still striving earnestly to live a life pleasing to the Master and do what I can for the upbuilding and advancement of the grand work. There are many discouragements and trials daily, but I believe that if we are faithful, watchful, and prayerful, we will be enabled, through Christ, to overcome, for through him we are assured we can do all things. I can truthfully say that I have had more real lasting comfort and enjoyment in the few years since coming into this blessed church than in my entire life before, for I am confident now as never before that the promises and assurances of the Savior to his followers are now for me.

Saints, let us press on in this blessed work of the Master, and never lay down the sword or take off the armor until we lay them aside at the end of life.

Ever praying for the advancement and prosperity of the Master's work, I remain,

Your brother,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

Independence Items.

At the prayer-meetings of late there have been but a few of the Saints in attendance, but their testimonies are generally interesting and spiritual. Last evening's meeting was conducted by Brn. Layton, H. O. Smith, and A. L. Newton, and we had the pleasure of listening to Father George Hawley, whose mind is stored with reminiscences of scenes passed through in the early days of the church. He has just entered upon his eighty-first year, and often calls to mind his acquaintance of over four years with Prophet Joseph when he heard his inspiring teachings, and he now bears a faithful testimony to his noble and virtuous life, and that of his brother Hyrum.

At a recent prayer-meeting Elder Short paid a heartfelt tribute to the memory of the useful and devoted lives of Brn. J. T. Davis and George Montague not long since passed away.

On last Sunday the prayer-meeting, which was in charge of G. H. Hulmes and J. W. Gunsolley, took the form of a kind of symposium at which various and important topics were discussed, and Brn. Warnock, Bond, Mills, Short, and Kemp spoke at length on the question of sustaining the church authorities.

The preaching services, on the 2d, by W. A. Smith and I. N. White, also on the 9th by M. H. Bond and T. C. Kelley, were all well appreciated by good audiences. Elder Smith discoursed from twenty-ninth chapter of Proverbs: "Where there is no vision the people perish; but he that keepeth the law, happy is he." Reading from The Three Bibles Compared, many thoughts were presented in favor of the Inspired Translation, and he stated that not a word favoring polygamy could be found in the book.

Incidentally we mention the names of Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Reynolds visiting here from Springville, Utah, who were present at the morning service; were much interested and expressed afterward their intention of purchasing the Inspired Translation. Mr. Reynolds is dealing in general merchandise, and is also one of the high council of the Third Ward.

At the afternoon meeting, which was conducted by Bro. I. N. White, two were received into membership from Sharon Branch, Pennsylvania,—Bro. Martin H. C., and Sr. Anna M. Ahlstrom.

I. N. White in the evening preached an interesting, lengthy and wide-awake sermon on the "Reformation and Restoration," and M. H. Bond last Sunday morning spoke concerning man's condition, his growth, and development toward God, even as the plant reaches toward the sun. He talked of the after-life, the hope of Christians, the unchangeable God, and the sure foundation of our hope. As he approached the point of man's return to his Maker, the Spirit that accompanies the gospel and its teachings enthused the speaker, closing with the inspiring assurance of the truth of his text "The foundation of God standeth sure."

T. C. Kelley discoursed on the fall and redemption, and the changes wrought in both man and the brute creation were fully described. The Sunday-school presented its usually bright appearance, there being four hundred present, with a collection of eleven dollars and forty-four cents, including three dollars and twenty-one cents from the home department.

The church choir turned out in less numbers than usual, there being only eighteen present; but the anthems both morning and evening were inspiring and finely rendered.

Broadly speaking, two features objectionable to the more quiet class of church people are the visiting generally going on near the vestibule at the opening of the morning services, and the bustle and rumble from the frequently passing trolleys. They hinder more or less the hearing of the organ voluntary, which is always grateful to the ear and pays well the devout listener.

Most of us may be unacquainted with musical technique or the merits of the composer; but through the skill of the organist we may fancy hearing the murmur of the stream and forest, the clear, shrill notes of songsters, or even the sweet voices of heavenly choirs: and so the Holy Spirit as manifested in all his works may, if we will listen, come near, and the organ help to express our thoughts of praise and thanksgiving. We were reading that some Chicago minister lately has invited the young people especially to come to his church to do their flirting; but our minister prefers that they come in, be quiet, and make themselves comfortable.

Our last business meeting was also poorly attended; but those who came improved the time in discussing several matters of importance, among them the approval of the building of a church for the benefit of the Saints living on the south side.

Several thought the matter had better be deferred until the church we already have is finished and necessary improvements attended to; others are quite satisfied with things as they are, like the Quakers and Primitive Methodists who, we understand, when called upon to subscribe to a Temple to Religion to be built at the Fair preferred the long wooden benches and the plain walls, "avoiding all division in the way of high art, and hindrances to the work of the Spirit by the show of material things." But we think church walls and church chairs, like our clothes, should be neat and comely: as the poet says,

"Clothes do not make a man,
Yet, if he is poor in dress
The world is bound to notice it,
And somehow loves him less."

And probably we will have a new church, too. The number of visitors from the West has been somewhat less than usual the past two weeks; but we have had a few callers,—High Priest R. R. Tanner and wife from Beaver County (he is a cousin of Apostle Lyman), also A. J. Russell, Excelsior Springs, and Daniel Baird, Heber City, who is a sheep-raiser,—shipped one thousand head to Kansas City on his way here.

Quite a bevy of the brethren came with Mr. Russell, who, by the way, gave a very unique account of his conversion. Said he was a Brighamite, was not a member of any branch, and never heard any preaching; but after reading up their faith and doctrine and that of the Josephites, he was led through a vision he had to know which was right.

In the vision he thought he saw an assembly of men running to and fro without heads on and was told by some one that these men represented the Reorganization and to join the Utah church. Mr. Russell appears to be a type, all to himself.

Visitors are somewhat surprised to see the malicious work done by miscreants to the new wire fence around the Temple Lot. They tell us that the vandals trot over Europe as well as our own country with jack-knives and other instruments "gouging holes in the most sacred places, the only remedy of which is a tax upon the pocket-book or the consignment of the mischievous person to jail."

There is not much news to relate, only considerable house-building continues,—Brn. Etzenhouser and Pitt building, also Bro. G. E. Harrington.

Priest J. J. Luff is successful, we are told, in his real estate pursuits, and has lately effected a few sales to some people from the West.

The street on the west of the Swope Tract lately purchased is being improved by the city and the streets called Electric and Short are being made to look quite modern through the erection of some fine dwellings.

Some of our brethren and sisters are preparing to leave for the winter, while others are slowly gathering in.

Those busy, faithful sisters, called Willing Helpers, have by dint of constant efforts of industry made lately another donation of twenty-five dollars to the building committee.

The Daughters of Zion held their regular monthly meeting on the 21st ult., Sr. B. C. Smith in the chair. The subject of lesson for the day was "self-control" on which there was a discussion at length. The usual program was carried out, papers were handed out to be written while others were read and discussed.

Although the all-important work of the society seems to devolve upon a few interested ones, who see the deep significance of noble efforts to be put forth continually in behalf of the betterment of our homes, those few are faithful in purpose and endeavor, and no doubt will reap a good reward.

The work of the society, financially, with benevolent purpose in view as stated in the church papers, merits the careful consideration of every member of the church.

We have been enjoying fine Indian summer weather with now and then a season of refreshing rain.

The gardens and trailing vines, the ash-trees, elms, and box-elders are putting on their russet and yellow garb, and so are the corn-fields, and the grass by the wayside.

"The world is aglow with russet
The air is full of song,
Old earth is in its prime, and so
The heart of man is strong."

Your sister in the work,

Extracts from Letters.

F. C. Keck writing from Joplin, Missouri, October 10, says: "Yesterday the Saints of Webb City and Joplin Branches met at Midway Park and witnessed the baptism of eighteen souls. Bro. L. English baptized eight, and the writer eleven. Bro. W. Peak preached at Webb City last night, and I occupied at Joplin."

Sr. Annie Harris, Salina, Kansas, makes remittance for HERALD, and says: "We are isolated from the church, and no Saints near us at all. Our schoolhouse is open for preaching, and our house is a home for any elders who can come this way."

Alice M. Joslyn, renewing for Autumn Leaves, writes as follows: "The Autumn Leaves is the best magazine for young people (and old) that I have read. Hope to never be without it, as I know it does good for its readers."

E. Gerber, Leavenworth, Kansas, writes: "Would to God that we had some literature written in an authoritative but child-like way of God's will to this generation. If my house were on fire I would not want some one to come and tell me tales of a thousand years ago; but if I were asleep I would want them to come and shake me, or kick me if necessary to wake me, and tell me to get out."

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Des Moines District: Are you interested in this great latter-day work? If so this is for you,—but especially to those holding official positions, who are not under General Conference appointment.

We have quite a number of men holding the priesthood in the Des Moines District, but comparatively very, very little work done by them, as your reports to the conferences show. This state of lethargy is as successful a means for the adversary to prevent the spread of the gospel as he could wish. Brethren of the priesthood, "Unto what were ye ordained?" is the language of the Lord to the elders in 1831. Is this not also applicable to all who accept an ordination, from the deacon up? I think so.

Is it because there is no opportunity that so little work is done by our local men? Certainly not. No one could have better opportunities for good, effectual work than our local men, located as they are in little branches here and there throughout this district, where they can reach out in every direction and occupy schoolhouses, and also churches when such can be had. And if they find more than they can do, notify Elder N. V. Sheldon, Dow City, Iowa, our missionary in charge, and he will send some one to assist.

Having a fair understanding of the conditions of the district, I can safely say that the opportunities for preaching, where our people live righteous and upright lives, were never greater. And as concerning our needs,—well, they are many.

1. "Let us shake off the coals from our garments, and arise in the strength of our Lord," and resolve within ourselves that we will magnify our office and calling, and indeed become collaborators with the Lord in this great work.

2. Let us go to work in earnest and at the same time pray the Lord of the harvest to lend us his assistance that we may become useful laborers in his vineyard, not forgetting to apply ourselves to study, and approve ourselves worthy ministers, rightly dividing the word of truth. We often hear men and women pray for the Lord to send more laborers into the vineyard, but if only those who have already been called, would exert themselves and labor in their calling, our laborers would increase more than double. We do not need to all be under General Conference appointment in order to labor for the Master.

3. We need to examine ourselves to see if we ourselves are in harmony with the law of the Lord, in order that our teaching might be made effectual by our example.

Listen to what the Spirit said to the church in 1887: "Men of God, who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing; let your garments be of a sober character and free from excess of ornamentation. Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3.

How can any man consistently stand in the sacred desk and teach such counsel as this, which he must do if he teaches the whole counsel of God, and yet at the same time be a violater of that divine law himself? What affect would such a man's teaching have upon his hearers?

This would equally apply to all of God's laws. In order for our teaching to be effectual, we must make it so by our example.

4. Having thus examined ourselves, and resolved to work, and set ourselves in harmony with the law, the district needs your service. We are sadly in need of workers, and while some of our local men have done nobly and well, yet that does not merit a reward only to themselves; each man must earn his own reward. Brother, are you ready for the work? The winter's campaign is on us. Other churches will commence holding their revivals and continue all winter. What can you do for the Master's cause? If you are not in a condition yourself to do anything, do all you can to assist some one else. This can apply to lay members as well as the priesthood. Do not delay securing a schoolhouse or a church until some other denomination has secured it; and crowded us out. Let us manifest a business-like energy about the Lord's work, as much so as we would about our own, and push the work. Every Latter Day Saint in the district should endeavor to do all he can to secure openings this winter, and the Lord will bless the efforts. Do not wait until others are on the ground. The general missionary force is very limited for so large a district, therefore we need all the help from the local men that we can get, and for this purpose are they ordained in order that they might work lawfully, and God requires their service. If not, "Unto what are ye ordained?"

The work in this district has suffered in the past from several causes. But, brethren and sisters, whatever have been the causes let them be a thing of the past, and go to with your might and "Arise in the strength of the Lord," to do something for his cause, and thus save your own souls, and be the means of saving others.

The district officers will expect a report from every one holding the priesthood in the district, at each district conference. The conference wants to know what you have been doing in your official duties. We often hear the statement: "I have nothing to report." Well, if you have done nothing it is right the body, whose servants you are, should know it, just the same. Therefore let each one from now on find something to do for the Master, and have something to report at our next conference.

And let all isolated Saints assist the general missionaries in securing places to preach, and thus a great deal of time could be saved, which otherwise would have to be used in looking up locations and getting ready for work. It must be remembered that a missionary is a public servant, and is dependent on the support of the church, hence his time should be utilized to the best possible advantage, and the Saints who contribute to the financial department, and thus assist in supporting him, could also greatly assist in saving time by a little prearrangement.

Let us all labor together for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all, is the voice of the Spirit to us. Will we heed it?

Your servant for Christ's sake,

S. K. SORENSEN, District President.

Home address, Lamoni, Iowa.

The parents brought the body of their darling to Davis City, Iowa, to the home of the grandfather, Bro. H. A. Hartshorn, and the babe was laid by the side of its grandmother, Sr. Anne Hartshorn, who died October 15, 1902. Bro. H. A. Stebbins was summoned to preach the sermon. Bro. James McDiffit offered prayer.

MATHEWS.—Sr. Florella Isadore Mathews, wife of S. N. Mathews, died Saturday, August 20, 1904, at her home in Clinton, Missouri. Deceased was born in Lee County, Iowa, May 21, 1855, and was married in Shenandoah, Iowa, November 26, 1883. She came to Clinton, Missouri, with her husband, in 1890. Sr. Dora was baptized at the age of eight years, was always ready to defend the truth, and by so doing was the means of bringing several into the church. Her suffering during her two years' illness was something terrible; notwithstanding all this she remained firm in the faith. To those who watched by her bedside it was the severest trial of faith they ever had, but they submit themselves to God's will, trusting that he doeth all things for the best. Only the Great Physician can heal the wounded hearts of the devoted husband and the sisters who remain to fight life's battles without the dear one they loved so well. The three sisters who survive are: Mrs. C. N. Stephenson, Red Oak, Iowa; Mrs. E. H. Needham, Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. George W. Craig, Omaha, Nebraska. The remains were taken to Shenandoah, Iowa, for burial. Funeral services were conducted by Fred A. Smith, at residence of J. F. Redfield.

Eight sons and her husband preceded her to the land of rest, and one daughter, Sr. Anna, alone remains to mourn her loss. She was not a member of any church, but lived an upright life and was patient under the severe trials of life. Funeral services at the Saints' chapel in charge of Elder Charles Fry.

MILLER.—Herman Miller was born December 4, 1824, in town of Swanton, Vermont, baptized July 5, 1892, at Necedah Junction, Monroe County, Wisconsin; died September 29, 1904, aged 85 years, 8 months, and 25 days. Funeral sermon preached at his home near Valley Junction, October 2, 1904, by A. L. Whiteaker, from text, Psalms 23: 4. He died in the faith, in hope of the first resurrection. He leaves a large family and many friends to mourn their loss.

GREEN.—Clarence Franklin Green, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Green passed away October 2. Was born September 12, 1904, laid to rest in the Oregon City cemetery October 3, there to await that glad day when parents and child will meet to part no more. Services conducted by J. B. Kinney, of Portland, Oregon.

Silvers, after which the remains were laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery southeast of Appleton City.

TRUMAN.—Holley Truman of Brooklyn, New York, was instantly killed, June 8, by a fall of seventy-four feet, while working on a building in Albany, New York. He was aged 27 years, 4 months, and 14 days. He leaves to mourn their loss, a wife, two children, mother and father, two brothers, two sisters, and a host of friends. He was baptized by Elder George Potts in the year 1890. He was a young man of promise, a dutiful son, an indulgent husband, a kind father, and a man beloved by those who knew him. Funeral sermon by Elder George Potts.

OAKES.—October 7, at St. Charles Hospital, at Aurora, Illinois, Sr. Edith L. Oakes. Sr. Oakes was born at Belleville, Dane County, Wisconsin, February 8, 1867. She was baptized September 28, 1898, by Elder H. A. Stebbins. She was well and widely known at Belleville, and at Plano. She soon gained the respect and friendship of all who formed her acquaintance. Funeral at the home; sermon by Levi Gamet.

An Educated Horse.

At the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, on the famous ten million dollar Pike, where many of the most expensive shows ever built at an exposition are to be seen, a horse has earned the most money. The admission charge, twenty-five cents, is the same as at shows that cost to build $100,000 or over; but in this Silver Horse Shoe Building is the most valuable and costly show of all. The entire show consists of but one horse, but he is the most valuable as well as the most wonderful horse in the world. Beautiful Jim Key, this famous Educated Horse, who is known as the Equine Millionaire, is admitted by all to be the greatest wonder of the Pike.

Mr. A. R. Rogers, of New York City, the owner of this the most wonderful horse in the world, says, "It's a one-horse show," but to the visitors who crowd his theater continuously during the hours he is on exhibition, until standing-room only is a regular thing, Jim Key is the most wonderful exhibition of all on this marvelous Pike of the finest attractions in the world.

To tell what Beautiful Jim Key can do is like reading a fairy tale, for here is a real horse that actually has been educated, marvelous as it may seem, and after watching Jim Key a little while the question comes up at once: How could he be taught it all? For Jim Key reads, writes, spells—not certain set words, but words given him by the audience, though he spells phonetically. His arithmetic is the most astonishing thing of all. The audience do not have to give him simple problems, like three times four, but such problems as three times four plus two minus seven times three, etc., and he will go to his rack full of letters and numbers and get the correct answer.

Jim Key uses a National Cash Register and has a handsome gold-plated one presented him by the National Cash Register Company because Jim has proven it is so simple that even a horse can use it and rings up sales and makes change as easily as any one.

He will go to a post office and get the mail, and file letters in a letter file just as correctly as any clerk.

Dr. William Key, the old colored man to whom all the credit is due for this marvelous performance, for he not only raised Jim Key but taught him all he knows, is a very religious negro and has taught Jim many quotations from the Bible, where the horse is mentioned.

Doctor Key is as interesting a character as the horse himself, for he spent seven years teaching Jim before he was ever willing to put him on public exhibition. Probably as interesting a story as has been printed since Black Beauty was issued is The Wonderful Story of Beautiful Jim Key and How Doctor Key Taught Him, telling how he found out each little thing that led him to teach Jim these most remarkable things. It is illustrated with twenty half-tone photos of Jim and his principal acts; and by sending only fifteen cents addressed to Jim Key, Pike Exposition, St. Louis, a copy will be mailed you.

Mr. A. R. Rogers, who is a New York man and interested in many concessions at the Exposition, bought Jim Key at the Nashville Exposition of Doctor Key. In Pittsburg, Boston, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, and many other large cities, they closed the schools to send the children to see Jim Key, because Jim Key was taught by kindness; and next to the story of Black Beauty, of which several million copies have been issued, this wonderful touching story of Jim Key has been read to the school children by the teachers.

Jim is the Equine Honorary Member of the American Humane Association, and also the Equine Honorary Member of the American Humane Education Society, which numbers over three million members in the United States. In the Jim Key Branch of the Band of Mercy are six hundred thousand members. Jim is admitted by every one to be the most popular attraction on the Pike, and his beautiful theater is crowded at every performance.

OUR CHILDREN.

"Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness."—Doctrine and Covenants 68:4.

This was the word of the Lord to the church seventy-three years ago, and we are led to ask ourselves, Have conditions improved since this language was uttered? If not, could we expect a more approving message, now, should the Lord reveal to us his mind upon the same matter? How many of us really know whether or not our children are growing up in wickedness? It is our duty to know something about it. Are any of us lulling ourselves into security with the thought that our children will grow up in righteousness, with no effort, comparatively, upon our part to instruct them in the way of truth, simply because they are our children? If so we are making one of the biggest mistakes of our lives, and the awakening will be grievous to us.

There is a grave responsibility resting upon parents, which is especially emphasized as a duty binding upon those residing within the stakes of Zion, in the following language: "Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents." The parents then, are in a measure responsible for the course their child chooses; and if they neglect to give proper instruction, and the child, when he reaches the age of accountability, fails to yield obedience to the gospel of Christ, the sin rests upon the parents in a degree equal, at least, to the measure of responsibility under which they are placed.

One of the duties of parents toward their children is clearly expressed in this language: "They shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord." How many young men and women are handicapped in their religious warfare because of a failure upon the part of parents to comply with the command to teach their children to pray! Many, seemingly, have not understood this duty fully. It is not enough to teach the children a formal prayer, and let them say it at the mother's knee for a year or so, then when they are old enough to retire by themselves, pay no further attention to the matter. How many will develop a prayerful heart under treatment of that kind? Some would gradually forget or neglect this important duty, while it would become such a formal thing with others that little or no thought would be given it. It should be a matter of much concern to every father and mother, that as their child grows and develops it shall be taught the necessity of avoiding merely formal repetition, and of expressing just the thoughts and feelings of its own little heart. What simple faith and trust a parent must have to teach his child to pray aright! How near to God must a parent live in order to teach his child to draw near to the Father's throne! Has ever a parent meditated upon this matter without realizing to some extent the necessity of developing the Christ-life in himself before he can hope to develop the Christ-life in his child? Faith can not be taught a child by a faithless parent. Forgiveness can not be taught a child by an unforgiving parent. Would we have our child to be obedient to its earthly parent? Then we must practice obedience to our heavenly Parent. Would we have meekness and humility in our children? Then we must be meek and humble ourselves. Would we rejoice to see our child of a prayerful mind? Then it behooves us to remember the word of the Lord to Zion: "And a commandment I give unto them, that he that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people."

Some were severely reprov'd in the early history of the church for neglecting to properly instruct their children in the way of light and truth. One suffered under affliction because of this neglect, and was told that if he would be delivered he must set his house in order. Others were warned that their families would be moved out of their place unless they gave more diligent heed to the commandments of God, and made an effort to set their families in order. (See section 90.)

So it is our duty to-day to see that order prevails in our house, to observe our prayers in the season thereof, and to teach our children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord. It is our duty to see that they do not grow up in wickedness and idleness. To do this we must have some knowledge of the company they keep, the books they read, and where they spend their time, and how. "Let no one deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me."

GRACELAND NOTES.

Sr. Lyda L. Fike, of Bisbee, Arizona, writes, "I am more than pleased with the report my children give of the college and their home at Lamoni. How are your progressing with the payment of the debt? If it is needed I will send you some more for Graceland in the near future."

The Central Illinois and Northern California Districts are now numbered with those districts which have performed their part in reducing the debt. Which next?

Sr. Flora Reisman, Kirksville, Missouri, writes: "Inclosed find one dollar for Graceland College. Glad to hear it is running, and also pray for it a successful year and hope the Saints may respond to the call that it may never be closed for the want of means to keep up expenses and pay the debt. I would like to do more and will whenever opportunity affords."

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. E. L. KELLEY, Bishop, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother in Christ: Among some of the Saints in this part of the country the paying of tithes has received a little setback from an understanding that some of the church funds were used for speculation, gleaned, I think, from the annual report, which stated that three thousand dollars were invested for stock in the Independence Mercantile and Manufacturing Company, and three thousand four hundred eighty dollars in stock in W. R. M. & D. Co., marked tithe account. It was the understanding with these persons, as with myself, that tithes were to be used to aid the poor; support the dependants of the ministry, and perhaps purchase an inheritance. But we thought if the tithes were used for speculation, which is often risky, it was hardly right.

My object in writing is to find out, if possible, if the tithes and offerings were used for speculation; and, if so, how the persons so directing the investment of the money justify themselves; for I am certainly of the opinion that those at the head of the financial part of the church are just men. It would please me if you should answer this in the HERALD so that others may understand this matter; but please withhold my name and address, for some might misunderstand my motive.

October 15, 1904.

REPLY.

LAMONI, Iowa, October 22, 1904.

Dear Sister in the Truth: I am in receipt of your letter of October 15 in which you state that the financial work in that part is receiving "a little setback," because some had understood that the church funds were used for speculation purposes.

In reply will say that not one dollar of church funds has ever been used for the purpose of "speculation" to my knowledge. The stock in the Independence Mercantile and Manufacturing Company, to which you refer, was donated to the church as a tithe offering by the Saints who owned the stock. They paid their tithes in this stock because this was what they had to tithe. But should the church have had the means to have aided the Independence manufacturing company it would not have been a "speculation" but in aid of a worthy enterprise that is a great help both to the church and many poor people. "The mining stock" to which you refer was the offering of a brother to the church. We have never invested a dollar in mining stock; but if some one comes and offers us shares in mining stock, we take it and keep it the same as we would take a horse or a cow, if offered, until we can properly dispose of it.

It would be quite proper for the church to buy lands and other property and thus advance its interests. Some perhaps would call this speculation, but it would no more be than buying two hundred acres of land for a Saints' Home. We bought it as a home for the aged and poor, and to advance the interests of the church; no speculation whatever about it; it was simply a matter of duty and proper commercial business.

We are urged, and have been for two or three years, to lease some coal lands so that a number of the Saints may be furnished employment without having to engage in "strikes," so common in the country.

If we should do so, some one would start a story, I suppose, that the church was speculating, when in fact it would only be a step to help those who need help.

I hope the Saints will not be moved by evil surmising and the repetition of the same, by those who are doing Satan's work instead of the work of the Lord. The spirit of the Lord never prompts or suggests that which will injure his work. Anything that comes from the Lord will strengthen and aid his work. That which proceeds from Satan gives discouragement to the Saints and acts as a "setback" to the financial and other work of the church. It blights instead of giving life.

It is very easy for the Saints to detect the true from the false if they will but use a little wisdom. The spirit which causes doubt, distrust, lack of interest, or a disposition to withhold our means or slacken our efforts in the Master's work, is from beneath. That which inspires hope and courage, prompts us to aid with our means and faith and prayers, is from above. None need be deceived, nor will they be, unless they have a selfish and evil purpose to serve themselves.

"Mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ." But he tells us that they serve their own selves. This advice of Paul's is well adapted to our own time.

Thanking you for calling attention to the hindering causes in your neighborhood, that the truth might be known, I am,

Very respectfully yours,
E. L. KELLEY.

Lehi.

The word of the Lord to the prophet came,
In a country over the sea:
"Rise up, and to all the land proclaim
Of the things that soon shall be;
And then make haste and get thee gone
To a land I have given thee.

"I gave to my people a royal law,
They have heedlessly passed it by;
The warnings I gave they have laughed to scorn
My word they have dared defy;
While up from the ground for revenge I hear
The blood of my prophets cry.

"Thou hast walked in my statutes and kept my law;
Thou hast kept thy faith in me.
There lieth afar, o'er the oceans' wave,
A land I will give to thee.
My choicest blessings on it I've strewn,
And it all shall thy portion be."

The prophet arose, and the guiding hand
Of Jehovah led the way.
The days went by, and the way was dark,
And the prophet grew old and gray;
Till the days were years, yet his faith failed not,
For his trust in his Master lay.

Through the lonely forest where wild beasts howled,
Over arid plain, 'neath the scorching heat,
'Mid the lightning's flash, and the thunder's crash,
On the pathless sea, when the tempests beat,
Like the needle to pole, his faith in God,
Till his journey's at last complete.

And he saw o'er the waves in the gray of morn
The dark blue haze of the nearing shore;
And his soul rejoiced as he knelt in prayer,
While the fresh'ning breeze his praise-song bore:
" 'Tis the promised land, Thy word's fulfilled;
O Father, I ask no more."

He had breasted rebellion of thankless sons
And their wicked scheming been called to face;
Right well might the faithful heart rejoice—
He had finished the course, he had run the race.
On the shining roll of <sup>the</sup> faithful ones,
When thou shalt the tale of the ages trace,
'Midst those who have fought and have kept the faith
Give the name of the prophet Lehi place.

Let Us Pray.

When all is still, on Zion's hill,
And hushed winds blow, in cadence low,
Let us pray.

When the warm sun shines in happy climes,
The clouds afar—with nought to mar,
Let us pray.

For days will come without the sun,
And dark clouds roll to try the soul—
On its way.

So, child of God, hold fast the rod;
And be our path 'neath smiles or wrath,
Let us pray.

PIONEERS OF OTTERTAIL.—NO. 2.

PROVIDENTIAL INTERVENTION.

Feeling assured that success would follow the undertaking, the committee to seek a location deemed it advisable to take their families with them, at least as far on the journey as prudence or circumstances would admit. On the twenty-ninth day of September, 1864, the little band started upon their mission in the direction of Minnesota. After a tedious journey of about three weeks' travel through storm and mud, arrived at Red Wing, on the 21st of October.

Here they left their families in care of a sufficient number to provide fuel, sustenance, and other comforts for the winter. These arrangements having been properly adjusted the three delegates, viz.: F. L. Whiting, S. J. Whiting, and L. O. Denna, on the 3d of November started for Crow Wing. Their object in so doing was to gain all the information possible respecting the country, and if advisable to continue the journey to Ottertail City. They also wished to confer with Reverend John Johnson, (whose name is mentioned previously,) but on their arrival at the place, found him absent about forty miles north on a fishing excursion. This occurrence caused some delay, but at length they met and held an interview, the result of which was of the most encouraging nature. By this time the snow had greatly increased in depth, and the country beyond Crow Wing being unsettled and the roads unbroken, it was deemed unsafe to proceed further. Hence they returned to their families at Red Wing.

On the 14th of February, 1865, the pioneers again set out upon their journey, in view of completing the business in charge.

A FEW REMARKABLE INCIDENTS

which attended the travels of the pioneers may be proper to notice, but should any of the points to which we refer bear a little upon the marvelous, be not hasty in condemning, but first consider and then judge. On the morning of starting from Red Wing, the weather was warm, cloudy, and somewhat rainy, in the fore part of the day. But during the afternoon a heavy snow-storm set in, and so continued, more or less, for six days. The snow was now about two feet deep on the level, which precluded all possibility of proceeding further with heavily loaded teams. A twenty-mile prairie lay before them to cross and not one track had been made since the storm. The weather by this time had become so intensely cold that the children, and even some of the older persons, came near perishing. Their horses and cattle having no shelter to protect them from the storm and piercing wind, suffered extremely.

In this emergency the question arose as to what should be done. The president of the committee took the matter into consideration, and called the company into his tent, where they expressed their feelings and belief in a God who was willing to hear and answer prayer. Accordingly a asking the Lord to open the way that they might continue their journey. With no apparent prospect of a change for the better, they retired to rest, nevertheless they did not cease to pray in their hearts, and to their joy when they awoke in the morning the snow was gone, consequently they traveled twenty-three miles before the setting of the sun, when they again reached the edge of the snow, but from that on to Crow Wing, save a short distance, the road was broken.

The circumstance of the snow disappearing so suddenly may appear hardly credible, but soon after the weary and anxious pioneers had retired to rest the wind shifted, and a warm rain commenced to fall, and so continued until the snow had almost entirely melted from the ground. But the next evening it turned freezing cold again, and for a short distance before reaching the main broken track the men were compelled to break the road in advance of the teams by jumping upon the crust which had formed upon the surface of the snow during the night. However, after a tedious journey and much suffering they arrived at Crow Wing, where they remained until the roads settled.

After this respite the little company, with nine wagons containing their families, household goods, and scanty outfit of provisions, alone and unprotected by soldiers, started for Ottertail City, a distance of about eighty miles. But how their teams were to live while making the journey, and that, too before the grass had started, looked very dark to the little band of pioneers. However, they must take the chances, and fortune again favored them, and at the end of the first day's travel they came to a logging-camp where they were provided with an abundance of hay. The men told them to help themselves to all they wanted. They also procured enough to last them to the crossing of the Crow Wing River; there they found plenty at Peter Roy's, who informed them that they would find abundance of hay on Leaf River. By this means their teams were amply provided for. This part of the journey (following the old government trail) led them through pine forests and tamarac-swamps which at the time were on fire, and at intervals the heat and smoke from the burning leaves, dry limbs, and pitch was so intense that the pioneers could hardly make their way without suffocation. Their wagon-covers, bedding, etc., were in great danger of taking fire from the sparks and hot cinders driven across the road by whirling gusts of wind, and some of the women and children began to fear lest they might all perish in the flames. However, they made their way without any harm, and after wallowing through marshes and crossing miles of corduroy bridges, half rotted away or deeply imbedded in the mud, at length arrived at the deserted city of Ottertail about the first of May.

There in the heart and home of the red man could have been seen a little cluster of tents erected upon the very ground where only a few months before the assembly of the braves around their council fires, the painted chiefs decked with eagle feathers, and the appalling war-whoop, had frightened the early settlers from their newly-made homes, leaving the entire country a scene of desolation. But apparently as unconcerned as if in the center of civilization, the little company reposed at night without a sentinel to watch the wily foe, or frightful dreams to disturb their slumbers.

The morning dawned brightly upon them, but what steps to take next, or in what direction to travel, they knew not. The location must be searched out and established before information could be forwarded to the company in waiting. As providence had heretofore favored them, and believing in God, they still felt to trust the matter to his wisdom and direction. Hence they as before, and after laboring diligently in this manner for some length of time, gained partial satisfaction as to the course in which they should travel, and on the morning of the first of May, five of the company (leaving their families in camp) started out to take a view of the country southward. They arrived at Battle Lake about noon, and finding a pleasant location returned to camp, and the following day moved to the place. This was a beautiful and pleasant spot, and some were so delighted with the situation and thinking they had found the object of their search, at once commenced to make gardens for early planting. But others (the committee in particular) not feeling satisfied started out on foot, and after traveling some distance again sought the Lord for directions. Here they were informed that the location would not be designated through the minor gifts, but when they came to a place where their feelings were wrought upon in a certain manner described they should again unite in prayer, and the desired information should be given. This encouraged them to continue in the search, and after a tramp of several hours, found themselves upon the north bank of Clitherall Lake, another most inviting and if possible more pleasantly situated location than the former.

Here lay a beautiful plateau of productive land about one mile in width and several miles in length, almost surrounded by water, and properly adapted to the speedy growth and maturity of crops, and well protected from late and early frosts by the warm breezes arising from the lakes on either side. Here was woodland and intervening meadows, and all seemed fashioned by nature's hand to suit the condition and purpose to which it was soon to be subjected. However, we would not dare to claim too much; but we do claim that the Lord directed the move, and in his own way and time pointed out a location for the church.

On the 5th of May, 1865, the pioneers planted themselves and families upon and be not surprised, gentle reader, when I affirm that right here upon the bank of Clitherall Lake, and but a few steps from where your humble servant is seated at his desk endeavoring to pen this feeble sketch, our pioneer committee, while in fervent supplication to God, received information through the gift of prophecy, that this was the place for the location of the church, and for a testimony of the truth of this matter, the people on their arrival at the place would express their feelings of satisfaction, which accordingly took place without their knowing anything of the circumstance.

We afterwards learned that the land where they commenced making gardens had been entered before the outbreak, and hence would not have answered as a location for the church.

Doubtless these singular and providential occurrences will look foolish to many, but simple as it might appear, thousands aside from the Mormon people have testified to the receiving of divine aid in times of need. Then why not grant us the same or a like privilege? Yes, this is the manner, kind friends, that a location for the church was searched out, and here upon the chosen and almost promised land, this little band of weary pilgrims rested from their toilsome journey, while beneath the spreading branches of the forest oak they offered up their dedicating prayers and heart-felt thanks to God, for preserving their lives through past dangers and sufferings, and enabling them, without serious trouble, to consummate the important business confided to their care.

THEY GO TO WORK.

Alone, and far from friends and relations—the country a wilderness, and their neighbors the Indians, this little band of pioneers pitched their tents, and ere the sun had reached the western horizon, laid the foundation of the first permanent settlement in Ottertail County. Miles now intervened between the new settlement and the borders of civilization, and one unfriendly act or indiscreet move upon the part of this little company undoubtedly would have enraged the natives and caused a terrible massacre of the entire community. A single stroke from the warrior's axe and all would have been over, the daring pioneers wiped out of existence, and the earth left to groan once more under the warm blood of inoffensive women and children.

This little handful of only eleven men with their families were indeed a small company to venture alone into the heart of a wilderness country overrun with Indians and attempt to establish a settlement of white people. Nevertheless, without bloodshed or any expense to government in building forts or stationing armies to protect the settlers, the business was accomplished, and from thenceforward a gradual influx of both old and new settlers have contributed to fill up the wide wastes of Ottertail County with civilization.

THE BENEFITS OF A BIBLICAL EDUCATION.

Education is the development of those faculties, powers, or talents with which our Creator has endowed us, but are latent in us until properly developed or brought into exercise. Education in all that tends to benefit humanity is essential to the perfection of our nature, in order that we may fill the measure of our creation. But no branch of education is so well calculated to uplift, ennoble, and enrich the soul of man, as that which treats of divine things,—makes us acquainted with God, with our own selves, our origin, God's purpose in our creation, his gracious will concerning us, and how to obey that will, that we may be approved of him. There is no means by which these things can be made known unto us, except by a revelation from God. It was truly written by Paul, "The world by wisdom knew not God." And Christ has said, "No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and they to whom the Son will reveal himself; they shall see the Father also."—Matthew 11:28, I. T. He further said, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—John 17:3.

God has not left mankind without any means of obtaining this divine knowledge; for, from the beginning he has given revelations of his will unto all who have sought for it, "Hungering and thirsting after righteousness"; for, "of a truth . . . God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."

But while we, as a church, recognize and accept other records as expressions of his divine will, and records of his dealings with peoples in different lands and at different times, the Bible, containing the Old and New Testaments, stands first, because from that we first learned the great truths concerning God and his Christ, the great plan of salvation; and from its records have received evidence of the great work to be accomplished in the latter days. And it is of the benefits to be received from an education in its glorious truths that we now are specially called upon to treat.

The Bible, including the New Testament, contains revelations which our Creator, in his love, has made to mankind, and as the creature is of necessity dependent upon his creator, and as it is evident that the Creator had a purpose in our creation, and that purpose must be fulfilled in and by us, it becomes imperatively necessary that we should be acquainted with his will concerning us, that we may know how to fulfill the purpose intended in our existence.

Man is endowed with higher intelligence than any other creature under heaven. In fact, the Scriptures tell us: "Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crownest him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of thy hands."—Hebrews 2:7. And we are taught that "The glory of God is intelligence," and man is clothed upon with a degree of that intelligence, and as we employ the talents conferred upon us, our intelligence becomes developed and enlarged.

The very nature of God's word is purifying to the student, obedience to it makes us holy, hence Jesus prayed, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." The Psalmist says, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." "The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver." "Through thy precepts I get understanding." "Thy word is very pure; therefore thy servant loveth it." "The righteousness of thy testimonies is everlasting." The testimony of the Psalmist is the testimony of every true child of God. The study of God's word develops our intellectual powers and directs them in the right way. It makes us acquainted with the Divine Character, whom to know is to love and adore. It begets in our hearts desires to become like Christ, who was, and is, the embodiment of all good. It leads us to clothe ourselves with those divine excellencies, faith, hope, and love, by the possession of which we approximate nearer to the Divine Character, until we shall become like him.

The study of the Bible teaches us to know ourselves, our relation to him and to each other, which, next to the knowledge of God and Christ, is the most beneficial to humanity of all the knowledge we can attain unto. By this knowledge we are enabled to govern ourselves, and by his grace subdue all our evil propensities, cultivate all the excellencies that marked the life of our Redeemer among men, and like him become a blessing to our fellow men; and thus fit ourselves for a higher, grander, and more glorious sphere.

In conclusion: The Bible contains a revelation of his will,—it declares the purpose of his work in the creation, it reveals to us the part we are to perform in the divine economy,—the great work of redemption wrought out for us by Jesus Christ, in obedience to his Father's will—how we can become coworkers with him in carrying out his eternal purpose. It presents to us an all-wise, kind, and loving Father, full of compassion, and infinitely just and merciful. It reveals a tender and loving Savior, who bore our sorrows, endured our shame, that he might redeem us from the thralldom of death and hell. It tells us of the great plan of salvation that all must obey in order to be fitted for eternal life. A Bible education exalts our manhood, ennobles our whole nature, enlarges our sphere of usefulness, tends to the purifying of our thoughts, teaches us to be meek and lowly of heart, makes us better men, purer women, more dutiful children, nobler citizens, more faithful followers of Christ, and more devoted children of God, inasmuch as we apply the lessons taught us there. Then search the Scriptures, seek the Holy Spirit as your teacher. Follow his lead and eternal life is yours to enjoy.

CHARLES DERRY.

“ARE WE PERFECT WHEN WE COME UP OUT OF THE WATERS OF BAPTISM?”

Under the above heading we noticed an article in a late HERALD in which it seems that the writer conveys the idea that we are perfect, to which we do not agree.

We desire to present a few thoughts relative to the above heading, to see if the Scriptures will bear us out in the positions presented by our brother. The language quoted by him was as follows: “For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified.”—Hebrews 10: 14.

The thought seemed to be conveyed that we were perfect when we came up out of the waters of baptism, but we do not so understand the teachings of Christ and his apostles of old.

Christ has said, “Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.”—Matthew 5: 48. Then, according to that, perfection is to be sought for, and it does not seem reasonable that we are perfected in an instant when we are baptized, and have made a covenant with God to serve him and keep his commandments.

John, the beloved disciple, in writing to those who had received like precious faith, expressed the thought as follows: “Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.”—1 John 3: 2, 3. This seems to be very plain on the subject. John was speaking to those who had been baptized, because he says “we” are now “the sons of God,” etc.

Question: How did they become sons? By adoption; by having been initiated into the kingdom of God by baptism, at the hands of those having authority to act in that capacity. If we have thus become the sons of God by obedience to his laws, we are then in a condition that we can perfect ourselves by making the proper effort. Paul understood the matter perfectly when he wrote the Ephesian letter and voiced the thought thus: “Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.”—Ephesians 4: 13. We must then reach the stature of Christ before we are perfect.

Again we read: “Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.”—2 Corinthians 7: 1. It occurs to our mind that we are not perfect until we have gained a perfect knowledge of God, and then we are ready to go to paradise. We have then reached our goal.

Paul after having been baptized, after having entered the ministry, and after having been an apostle of Jesus Christ for years, expressed himself in these words: “Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, . . . forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize.”—Philippians 3: 12–14.

Then as we understand it, to be perfect is to be sinless, and to be sinless we must become as Christ, and that means advancement on our part. We now have but a faint idea of the perfect ideal that is found only in him who dwells on high. “For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.”—1 Corinthians 13: 9, 10.

Enoch walked and talked with God and he was translated and taken to heaven. (See Genesis 7: 27, I. T.; Hebrews 11: 5.) We see by this that when Enoch became perfect enough to walk and talk with God he was taken from this vile world to dwell in the paradise of God. Then in order to be perfect we must be sinless, and that condition does not exist on earth among men. John voiced the thought in these words, “If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.”—1 John 1: 8.

We therefore believe that we are to grow in grace and a knowledge of God and perfect ourselves by keeping his whole law after we have come up out of the waters of baptism. (See Hebrews 6: 1–6.)

We are not perfect then until we have gained all the virtues. 1. We must go on to perfection. 2. We must become Christlike in our characters. 3. We must cease from sin and gain a perfect knowledge of God. 4. We must hold out faithful to the end. And by so doing we will be perfected and sanctified through Christ.

A REASON WHY.

Science and common reason say that something can not be made out of nothing; neither can an inanimate object or substance be moved without a seen or unseen force or power. Why should some say that some things can not be, because they are against the known laws of nature? Who can say what the law or power is that moves and keeps the planets in their orbits? If we are so ignorant that we can not know these things, do not say that God does not, and that miracles, such as the resurrection, can not be performed. The wise men, and others, a few years ago confidently said the steamboat would never prove a success. Did it? God possesses, among other attributes, those of power and knowledge. With these experimenting would be unnecessary and repentance uncalled for. God never did repent that he made man. Man should repent that he is at times a mistranslator. When it is said God repents, his attributes are made to appear null and void. If God made the earth and put man upon it there was a very good reason for it. It is said that in this life the spirit of man finds its first existence. If this be true why should God have made us? For the same reason that a child makes mud dolls? If this is the case would it not be more just for God to completely blot us out of existence than to place punishment upon us?

Jesus Christ had the same beginning and ending in this life as any other man; that is, birth and death. He did, however, have a preëxistence:

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men.—John 1: 1-4.

Or as the Inspired Translation reads:

In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made which was made. In him was the gospel, and the gospel was the life, and the life was the light of men.

From this we glean the thought that Christ was in the beginning with God; that Christ made all things and through him is the hope of man.

Paul writes to the Ephesians, previously speaking of God, "who created all things by Jesus Christ." To the Colossians he writes: "all things were created by him, and for him." When the earth was made and herbs and animals put upon it, it was done through the commandments of God. "And God said, Let there be light." He did not say, Space, form thyself into light. Did we not read that Christ created all things? It is evident that God formed the plans and Christ acted upon them. God was the architect and Christ the builder. Christ, however, did not make the spirit of man. Therefore, the spirit of man must have had a previous state of existence. "And without him was not anything made that was made." As Christ did not make the spirit of man it was not made. Paul again says of Christ: "who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature." This was written after the resurrection. Whatever form Jesus possessed at this time the Father possessed a like one. The young man in the tomb said unto Mary and her companions, "He is not here! Behold the place where they laid him." If the body of Christ became spiritualized and was in the image of the Father, he was not in the image of the Father before his advent. Did he bring the body with him? Was it not translated? Some deny that God possesses such a form, but what say the Scriptures? God is a "person" (Hebrews 1:3), having "shape" (John 5:37), and "form" (Philippians 2:5, 6), composed of "parts" (Exodus 33:21-23). He possesses also a "face" (Genesis 32:30), "eyes" (2 Chronicles 16:9), "hands" (Isaiah 62:8), "fingers" (Exodus 31:18), and "feet" (Exodus 24:9, 10). Men have conversed with him, and he moves from place to place (see Genesis 17:22), and is not everywhere and in everything at once (see 1 Kings 19:11-13), as some suppose. It is the Holy Ghost that is in many places at once. God is one, in one place at one time. Supposed evidence is brought against all this by that which is written in Genesis, "Let us make man in our image." It is reasoned that God and Christ were alike in image. That is, they had no shape or form, an unshaped spirit only. "In our image," means intelligence, inventive powers of the brain, etc. Moses must have lacked the proper word. However, if God had a form and Christ did not, what would our image have been? Would it not have been the one they possessed, God's image? They must have known the kind of body Christ would some day possess. Therefore he said, "our image."

Christ having a preëxistence, it is not unreasonable, neither a heresy, to believe that man did also, when some evidence can be adduced from the word. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."—Ecclesiastes 12:7. Some at times have believed that the spirit in man was born, composed by God to find its first stage of existence in this life because of the following: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." They say that the breath became spirit. The breath was therefore made into spirit. But did not we read that all things that were made were made by Christ? If the body returns to the earth at death (dust to dust) the spirit returns to God (breath to breath). The Lord breathed the breath of life (not of air) into the body.

Jeremiah gives us a thought when he writes, "Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations." Was the breath of God ordained? Whatever it was that received the ordination, it was ordained before the life entered the physical body. Does the Lord change a portion of his breath into spirit and then ordain the spiritual breath, or is all of his breath spirit? If the spirits of men are portions and semi-portions of the first spirit that was given to Adam, descended down through the race, how could the Lord then ordain this prophet? It falls to common sense and reason that the spirit of this prophet had a previous existence.

The Lord with his knowledge glanced along the future path of this spirit. He recognized the fact that this individual would accept the gospel. He knew his character by being in contact with him. Therefore in the spirit world was this man ordained a prophet.

"There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe."—John 1:6, 7. The Jews expected such a one to come from God. "Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?"

Now we have the spirits of men existing before the world was. These spirits were of different stages of perfection. We have Lucifer and Christ represented as two leading spirits. When the Lord was questioning Job he said, "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? . . . or who laid the corner-stone thereof: when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?" We of to-day call ourselves sons of God, but unless we were present when all the sons of God shouted for joy we have not much claim to sonship.

There was, then, two elements in heaven: good and evil. The spirits were not perfect. They knew not good from evil. For example, we have Adam and Eve. But the Lord devised a plan by which they might become perfect. This plan was evidently submitted to the leading spirits. Now, a man in prison is not liable to steal while he continues there, but let him out and then what? So with these spirits in heaven.

There was sin in their nature undeveloped. There was nothing to bring forth sin that we know of until Lucifer saw a chance to beget honor and power and exaltation. He said, I will go, but give me the honor. He might have been an upright spirit before this. It must be, however, that the Lord knew he was an evil of evils. The Lord could not, conscientiously, have put him out of heaven without an act on Lucifer's part to justify the deed. This commission of the plan was evidently Lucifer's apple-tree. Of course, Lucifer's evil desire, being a ruling element now, if it was not before, caused him to rebel, and a third of the angels of heaven, who were likewise evil, rebelled with him. All of these rebellious ones were cast out of heaven. We have here the first great beginning of the separation of good and evil. The others left in heaven, excepting Christ, were a strange mixture of both elements. So the Lord gave man a body and placed him upon earth. He was taken out of jail and given a chance to steal. Lucifer performs an important part in the great play being enacted. He and his angels are to men like magnets to iron. Water seeks water and oil seeks oil. By Lucifer tempting us our evil comes forth, if it does not of its own accord, since the veil has been taken away. But as all have an enemy in Lucifer, all have a Savior in Jesus Christ. He inaugurated a plan whereby men might overcome evil and climb back to God, not as they came, but as fit companions of God. If a man will not accept this plan he will never attain perfection. It is asked, Why should the Savior lay down a narrow path as the only way to glory?

One reason was to command obedience. If we learned not obedience here and should attain to heaven, we might become disobedient, and be cast out as nuisances. Some say that man would have remained in Eden if he had not fallen. I suppose he would if the apple-tree had not been there. God could not conscientiously have placed man in the condition he is in unless there was a transgression on man's part to justify the act. God knew it was best for man to be tried. Iron is never the best until tried. So it is with everything. Would you make of God an unjust tyrant? He put an innocent man in Eden who fell through the temptations of a devil. The Lord had told him not to eat. But he did and he and all of his children have to die. Did Adam know the full consequences of the fall? Why did the Lord put this tree in Eden if he did not wish what came to pass? Why should the death have been entailed upon all men unless there was a greater reason than that of revenge? As Satan now possessed the keys of death and hell and all men were in his power, all men having, or having had evil in them were enabled to overcome this power,—thus the sacrifice of Christ. Christ being sinless, it was unnecessary for him to come to earth. He had no sinful nature to overcome. But he said, I will go and take the persecutions of Satan, suffer death, and then, being sinless, Satan can not hold me, and I will take the keys of death and hell so that man may be liberated. As God formed man of the dust of the ground, and he goes back to dust, has God not lost power if the same dust can not be retransformed? So on resurrection day all men come forth as spiritual beings like unto the reanimated body of Christ. All will be judged; and we find there will be four divisions: First, those who have accepted Christ and become like unto him in deed as well as name. They receive the highest reward, a habitation in the celestial glory, the kingdom of God. Then there is a lesser glory for those who come next in rank, and still a lesser one for some of the others. Then we have Satan and his sons, and those who commit the sin against the Holy Ghost, who receive no reward but entail disgrace.

"In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14: 2, 3. Read also 1 Corinthians 15: 40-42.

MEDITATIONS.

A thought that man has not filled the measure of his creation is to me a sad thought. Eight thousand years have elapsed since God spake to Adam and Eve in the garden and said, Go forth, multiply, replenish, and subdue the earth, and have dominion. And in consequence of their disobedience they were, as a matter of course, rejected; and, as the promise was upon conditions, and they chose to follow the advice of Satan, they did not obtain dominion. How heedless the teeming millions of the sons of earth to-day in regard to the promises of God! So much being said about the promises, and so little being said or thought of the conditions. In all my researches in the word of God I have never been able to find one promise to man without conditions on the part of man. It would be well for the infidel to give this thought place, when he makes the assertion that the book is not divine because of those failures. If he would study the book closely he would, I think, invariably find the failure on the part of man.

An infidel friend once said to me, "If you are right in regard to the resurrection, there will not be standing-room on the earth for them." I remarked that God had made provisions for this emergency, in that according to the vision of John the Revelator there was to be a new heaven and a new earth and a new Jerusalem. Thus it is in all of the work of God. If we look at both sides of the question we will find a perfect harmony in all his work. This is why I am able to make the declaration that the books are divine; and I am able to testify that so far as I have complied with the command of my Maker his promises have been verified. I think this will be the testimony of every true follower of Christ.

We read from the word of God: "that which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past."—Ecclesiastes 3: 15. According to this there is no other way to obtain his approval, except to follow his instructions; thus by strict obedience to the commandments of God we may enter into the straight and narrow gate.

A member of the Latter Day Saint Church once said to me that he did not believe that God would answer prayer in regard to the weather; for instance, prayer for dry or wet weather, or that disastrous storms be stayed or turned in their course; that God had fixed those things in the beginning through and by the laws of nature that could not now be changed. I told him that was my plea when I was an infidel and did not want people to know what I was. I look back now and see myself as I was down in that dark valley of sin, trying to cover my face with shades of sin, listening to the voice of Satan making the declaration: In the day thou eatest thereof "thou shalt not surely die." There I sat on an old, dry limb, in the darkest corner I could find, hooting like an owl; and it is a common thing to find men to-day sitting on the same old, dry limb hooting the same old hoot that I hooted twenty years ago:—that in the first chapter of the Bible God had promised dominion to man, and yet man did not have dominion, hence the book is a lie. O, foolish man, sitting in the low, dark valleys of sin without making an effort to rise higher, and, like the eagle, trying to reach the highest pinnacle of the mountain through the law of liberty that is able to convert the soul and save the sinner from death. He who led the way to dominion and life eternal, whose voice hushed the winds, calmed the seas, opened the eyes of the blind, unstopped the ears of the deaf, loosed the tongue of the dumb, and spake to the dead and they lived, his voice rings loud and clear to-day, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." This to my mind is dominion; and if we ever attain to it, it will be through obedience to the gospel of the Son of God.

Not long ago I quoted these last words of our Savior to a very wise man of the Baptist Church. He is a surgeon, and when he put the knife into the eye and took from it a piece the size of an English pea and restored the sight to the blind, the mental pressure drove the sweat to every pore, and that in a cool day. He declared to me that it was a mystery to him why it was. I reminded him of the time the Savior prayed so earnestly that the sweat stood out like drops of blood. He said he never saw so plain before the cause of the agony of that prayer.

This man said to me those last words of the Savior were spurious, declared so by very eminent ministers. I then asked him what they were doing with the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, the doctrine of Saint James, and many sayings of the Savior like "faith as a grain of mustard-seed," and so forth. The infidel along these lines can have all he wants to work on if he does not consider conditions.

He who walked on the face of the water, and told Peter to put his sword away, did not establish the gospel of salvation in blood, but in love. Who but he could experience the vision that passed before him while in the agony of that prayer? He saw the city he loved besieged. He saw the women tearing the flesh from their babes to appease their hunger; and the army mount the walls of the city, cast the stones down until there was left not one stone upon another; the temple in like manner destroyed. Then it is no wonder he could turn to those weeping ones who loved him so dearly and tell them to "weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and your children." From the prayer to the cross, from the cross to the grave, from the grave to the right hand of the Father.

Thirteen others I believe claimed to be the Son of God, and were crucified. Every one of the thirteen the grave was their final destiny; but our Jerusalem Christ burst the bands of death, wended his way to heaven, and sits on the right hand of the Father. He is our Redeemer, our Christ, and our salvation, if we will accept of the conditions; for Peter says, "the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Who will be the first to say he is not calling now? The angel said, "Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

Christ has said, "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14:2, 3. Christ did not say this to the disobedient world, but to his disciples, those to my mind, that had entered into the covenant with him. He had given them a new commandment: "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13:34, 35. Here again we are reminded of conditions. Then in the consideration of our destiny, and the consummation of the work we are engaged in, in the Spirit of the Master strive to reach the highest pinnacle; and, as the eagle on the summit of the highest mountain basks in the sunshine, so let us strive for the crown, that we may bask in the smiles of eternal heaven. And if we do not attain dominion in this life, let us be diligent and with patience wait until the glory of the Lord shall be revealed in the clouds of heaven, and he shall descend with a shout, and those that are asleep shall awake, and those that are awake shall strike hands beneath the shining of his glory.

Then we will no longer sing,

"When I can read my title clear,
To mansions in the sky,
I'll bid farewell to every fear,
And wipe my weeping eyes," but will shout glory to God and the lamb, peace on earth, good will to man. Then the lion will roar no longer in the forest, or crouch for his prey, but the beasts of the field will be at peace, and man will have dominion over the fowls of the air, the beasts of the forest, and the finny nations of the deep, and everything that moves and creeps upon the earth.

I long for that time to come. Paul says when that time comes, or as he pleases to say, that perfect thing shall come, we will no longer see through a glass darkly, but face to face, and know as we are known. What a joy will be there! no more death, no more sorrow, no more crying, no longer will the funeral-bell toll in our ears, nor will we see the mourners going about our streets; but we will see the one hundred and forty-four thousand standing on Mount Sion, and the thronging procession of Israel,—in reality that which John saw in vision, their robes made white in the blood of the lamb.

May the little camps of modern Israel be diligent in the things that God has trusted to their care, and be able to join the sacred band that has gone before, and with them be able to enter into his rest, is my prayer in the name of Jesus.

Your brother in Christ,

THEATERS AND DANCING.

I am aware that considerable has been said and written on the subject of dancing and theater-going, and by this time we ought to be decided as to the propriety or impropriety of indulging in these things, but we are just as far from the point as ever. It is like the question of unchristianlike conduct. We have never yet been able to draw the line and decide where Christianlike conduct ends and unchristianlike conduct begins. In my experience in the church I been on two church trials where the charges have been unchristianlike conduct. One of them was for being at a horse-race and the other was for being at a dance; but I am satisfied that if the charges had been made in other localities they would not have been sustained, for while the specifications in one locality would appear unchristianlike, in another they would not so appear. So the command to "shun the appearance of evil" is not definite enough to satisfy all the Saints; for to one a certain thing may have the appearance of evil, and to another it would look different, and this would prevent harmony in the church, and make confusion. (See 1 Corinthians 14:33.)

I was asked by a lady not long ago what I thought of a Saint attending such places; whether I thought it sinful or not. And in my blunt way I readily gave my disapproval of it and referred to quite a number of passages of scripture that I thought justified me in the stand I took against those things. And I confess I was a little taken back when the sister called the name of a high official in the church and said, "he goes to theaters and thinks it is all right." Well, of course that did not convince me that it was all right, but it was an evidence that we, as elders, were not as united as we ought to be and that I, at present, was on the weak side.

In the last HERALD the editor says: "We are asked is there any harm in a saint going into a dance-hall and watching the people dance?" The answer is that it is a waste of time that might be better employed. To me this answer does not seem definite enough to meet all the demands; for there are a great many things that we may do that are not really sinful and yet we may say with propriety that the time could be more profitably employed. It seems the answer to the question ought to state whether that waste of time is sinful or not.

I can call to mind quite a number of young Saints that have left the church and gone off hopelessly into the world, as I regard it, for the lack of a little restraint at the proper time. They now can find more pleasure in those things than in the services of the church. This to me seems sad; but it is sadder to think that the flock will be required at the watchman's hands.

For my own part I am not moved by these things, for many years ago I decided what was, and what was not right for me to do in regard to these matters, so I am not influenced in the least by what some of the elders do, but it does seem that there should be more harmony in regard to what is proper or what is improper, and we would be glad if the church would take action on these things and take a definite stand and then stick to it, so that an elder answering the question in California would answer the same as one in Missouri or in any other part of the world.

I was talking to an elder a few days ago on this line and he said "Oh, these are small things and we have things of great importance before us." That is true, but Job says it is "the little foxes that spoil the vines." And if we are not able to correct the little things how shall we cope with the great ones?

These little things are big enough for the adversary to use as weapons against the truth. My own opinion is that we as a people are not gaining strength as we ought to, and that we can not gain much strength until we are better united; and we will not be united till we arrive at a more definite conclusion as to what is right or wrong.

If God would give a revelation and take back all that he has said about coming out from the world, "Be ye separate from sinners," "Shun the appearance of evil" etc., I might look at such things in a different light.

EQUALITY? ARE WE IN EARNEST?

Much has been said and written on the subject of consecration. The Bishop has sent out a proclamation that he is ready to receive assignments under the conditions of this law. Very little if any fault can be found with what the different departments of the Bishopric have taught along this line. Latter Day Saints believe in the law and look forward towards the full inauguration of it as one of the crowning features of the great work of the restoration. Have we as Latter Day Saints complied with the call? Or probably better said, have we, and are we improving the opportunity to aid in the establishing of Zion? Have any inheritances been apporportioned?

I might go into detail and quote scripture setting forth the conditions pertaining to the subject, but this has been done so often that a sermon on the temporal law is received by a congregation of Saints more as a matter to be endured rather than appreciated. This much is certainly conceded by all: The law of consecration provides that Saints shall be "equal in temporal things, else how can they be equal in spiritual things." To make this concession is not so hard if we do not look ahead too far and discover what it means to us individually. It is very inspiring to think of the widows and orphans, the sick and destitute, being supplied with the necessities, not to mention the comforts of life, by the hand of charity, especially if we have contributed from our surplus earnings to relieve their wants, and we feel that it is indeed "more blessed to give than to receive." But does this kind of charitable dispensation bring about that condition of equality contemplated in the law? Does the widow feel herself placed upon a level with her brethren and sisters when they bring in a basket of good things and graciously express their sympathy for her misfortune? Imagine yourself in her condition for a while and think how humiliated you would feel if such an experience were yours, and consider how long you would go without those necessities before you would even hint to any of your brethren that you were in need.

How then shall her condition be relieved, if this does not satisfy the requirements of the case? Let us make a comparison. On the opposite side of the street lives a family in ordinary circumstances, the husband is employed in a factory which pays him a salary of five to ten hundred dollars per year. This he finds is sufficient for the necessities of his small family, with a small amount left at the end of the year which he can place on interest at the savings bank. Now what change must take place before these two families can be said to be equal? In one case there is the father and mother, the father to labor for their support, the mother to care for the children and look after the home comforts. On the other hand, the widow, with her small children who are unable to care for themselves and can not be left alone while she goes out seeking employment elsewhere, must stay at home and subsist upon such scanty fare as she may be able to secure by taking in washings, etc. In the one case the mother is required to do the same service as in the other, viz., care for the home, and if this is properly looked after there is not much time left for doing a couple of washings each day. Now it certainly does not require a telescope to enable one to see that the widow is entitled to as much remuneration for her efforts as the more fortunate one across the way. How shall we adjust the difficulty? Shall we give her an income equal to her needs, or shall we take away from the other family its income and let each be supplied by the charitable donations?

If it is a violation of the principles of justice for one to be compelled to subsist upon "charity," so called, while another is provided with an income equal to or greater than his necessities, then something is wrong with the system we are supporting. In solving a question in mathematics, if I find one side of my equation to be greater than the other to bring about a balance I must either add to the one and take from the other, or both. Which shall we do in this case? Let the law of consecration answer.

But let us bring the matter a little closer home. We are not all widows and orphans, nor are half of us. We do not need to walk one block in either of the center stakes of Zion to behold striking exhibitions of the inequality existing among those who read in their standard church books and see gilded on Sunday-school banners, "Saints Should be Equal."

What shall we say, when right in the shadow almost of one of the church institutions we see one, or if we go farther away, more than one, occupying high official position, receiving the ministerial allowance from the Bishop, and at the same time receiving from time to time twenty-five, fifty, or a hundred dollars, as the case may be in interest from money loaned to this same institution? This brings to mind a chapter from the Scriptures, (fifteenth Psalm,) which our Sunday-school superintendent (Star of Bethlehem Sunday-school, too) taught us to recite some years ago. The first verse propounds the question; "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle, who shall dwell in thy holy hill of Zion?" One verse replies: "He that putteth not out his money to usury nor taketh reward against the innocent."

Do these persons who occupy positions as teachers in Zion believe in the principle of consecration? Have they complied? Whence comes their bank account if they have turned over their surplus to the Bishop? Compare the condition of one of these with his luxuriant home furnished with modern conveniences, hot air furnace, water-works, velvet carpets, silk tapestries, elegant furniture, and costly pictures, with that of one of the missionary force who has given up all, refused offers of one hundred dollars per month for his services, yes, even resigned a position that was paying him that amount, and although he has scarcely anything accumulated, chooses to refuse this opportunity of providing all the comforts and conveniences that his wife could wish, and the education of his children require in whatsoever line of activity to which they were adapted. Look about some of these homes and listen to the remarks of some of the children who are getting old enough to notice the difference between their home and the homes of some of their companions.

It is not so surprising when we notice some of these contrasts, that these young people almost curse the fate that placed them in a missionary's family and tell you how they hate the name "Latter Day Saint" and declare with fire in their eyes that they will never marry a missionary, and that they leave their names on the church record now because they must, but as soon as they are old enough and able to support themselves, they will have it removed.

But, you say, "The person who will talk like that doesn't have the faintest conception of the grandeur and final glory that is involved in this great latter-day work." This is too sadly true no doubt, and I fear that it will continue to be the sad state of affairs so long as we of the priesthood, and we of the laity who have money hoarded up continue to preach one thing and practice another. To my mind consecration means to consecrate; and to turn over our surplus into the hands of the Bishop means to turn it over and quit hanging to it and putting it out at interest. And when the Lord says I am merely a steward over the property in my hands, then it is not mine, and I have no business to be spending the profits from it, satisfying the appetites of my carnal soul. It makes no difference whether it is a bank or a grocery store. The Lord says "all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made with me are broken." (Section 101:10.) "For according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion."—Section 72:3.

I have called attention to the statement in one of the latter-day revelations which emphasizes the principle of equality by saying that unless Saints are equal in temporal things they can not be equal in spiritual things. It seems to me that if we profess to believe this is a principle of gospel truth we ought to try to put it into execution wherever there is an opportunity. A reference to the minutes of our last General Conference will reveal the fact that this matter received some attention there and when the payroll from the two publishing houses was presented for examination a sorry contrast between preaching and practice was brought to light. It seems that some of the sluggish(?) minds there could not see why it was that some of the employes although they have small families, some only one child, require from three to five dollars more per week than half a dozen others who put in just as many hours, work just as hard, and some of them have much larger families. Of course I am aware of the prevailing favoritism that is paid to the "skilled workman," or the "professional in his line." But did you ever stop to think from whence comes the "natural genius" that some persons seem to possess? If you have, did you ever compare that thought with the parable of the talents? To whose credit belongs the fact that my parents were able to give me a good college education, thus fitting me to occupy responsible positions in the world or the church? And who is to blame if your parents are poor and you have not had the opportunity of an education to develop your latent powers? It is naught but egotism, pure and simple, that prompts a man to claim that he is entitled to better pay than his brother simply because he had the money to pay for a good education, or because he has natural talent in a certain line. The man who works hard to equip himself in a special line, works no harder than the man who is compelled by force of circumstances to labor in an avocation for which he is not adapted. If these statements are not true then there is no justice in the law of equality which provides that each man shall receive according to his needs.

One of two things is certainly true: either this latter-day Zionistic movement is the grandest enterprise that can occupy the minds of men and women to-day, or else it is the most magnificent humbug that the world has to contend with, with the possible exception of Salt Lake Mormonism. Few of us would admit the latter. If the former position be true, then methinks something needs to be done to stir us up to a proper conception of the importance of the hour. For measuring our interest in the work by our activity in it, a large majority of us must be classed among those who are found asleep. I have said some things no doubt that will be considered harsh and unkind criticism. My only apology is that I am interested in seeing Zion established in her glory so that the incredulous Gentile and the unbelieving Jew of every land will be compelled to admit the Kingship of Him whom we acknowledge to be our rightful ruler. And I am admonished by our Lord's revelations to the modern Seer that Zion can not be built up except by the principles of righteousness, and since we must all be one, and to be one we must be on an equality in temporal things as well as spiritual, before we can participate in the final ceremonies of the enthronement of the King in the New Jerusalem, why do we delay the beginning of that which we all admit must finally be required of us all to entitle us to a place in this great scheme?

I have spoken sharply and made almost personal application in some points, not because I hold enmity against any that I think are not doing what is their opportunity to do but because I recognize the fact that sometimes rough handling is necessary to awaken us to a consciousness of our true condition. How can we complain about the slowness of the progress we are making when we refuse to comply with the very fundamental principles of our doctrine? Are we in earnest? Do we desire the realization of our dreams of the glory of Zion with sufficient earnestness to make the necessary sacrifice? But is it a sacrifice? Is it not rather an opportunity?

Will There Be any Gems for My Crown?

[Tune:—Will there be any stars for my crown?]

How oft, as I walk down the pathway of life
With its cares and its snares, round me thrown,
I wonder if bravely I battle the strife
Will it make any gems for my crown?

Chorus:

Will there be any gems, any gems for my crown,
When the sun of my life goeth down;
Shall I enter the rest, that's prepared for the blest,
Will there be any gems for my crown?

If I tell the grand story to children of men,
Of the Christ, who for us laid life down,
Of commands that were given, to point us to heaven,
Will it make any gems for my crown?

Yes, I know if I walk in the straight, narrow way,
Though the world should with scorn on me frown,
I shall gain blissful rest, if I'm true to the last,
And there'll be many gems for my crown.

Yes there'll be many gems, many gems for my crown,
When the sun of my life goeth down;
I shall enter the rest He's prepared for the blest,
And there'll be many gems for my crown.

Drags down the bellowing monarch of the fields!

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

I would live nearer, Lord,
Nearer to Thee;
Safe from the pathway broad,
Nearer to Thee:
Teach me the truths I need,
To make me free indeed,
All that will upward lead
Nearer to Thee.

I would live nearer, Lord,
Nearer to Thee;
Ever a sweet reward
Nearer to Thee.
Teach me to live for Thee,
Never from duty flee,
Then will I surely be
Nearer to Thee!

EARNEST WEBBE.

Dear Sisters: While lying on a bed of sickness for the last few weeks I had plenty of time to think over our lot as wives and mothers, and the question comes to me, Do we make as good wives as mothers? or do we in the interest of our children forget the companion of our joys and sorrows? I heard a husband say not long ago that "you women with children have no interest above your children, and we men receive more attention if there are no little ones in the home."

This thought has troubled me considerably, and I wonder if this is true. It surely is sad to think it true. I know there is a great deal depending on the mother, and I am sure a good deal depends on the wife, for men largely are what their wives make them. True, sometimes we see the husband rising far above his wife, but it is a pitiful condition and should not be. It is our duty as wives to climb with them the ladder of fame, and to help them by words of encouragement and love; and be assured they will gladly help us, too.

No one should be more happy or interested in the husband's success in life, let him be a farmer, carpenter, or minister, than the wife of his youth. What a satisfaction to the elder's wife to listen to a good sermon filled with God's Spirit and love, and feel that at least she had given him encouragement to devote his life to the Master's work, and how comforting to this man of God to return to his cozy home after a hard battle with the world and hear the dear one say, "Your sermons are such a help to me, dear." Try to see what magic a smile and loving caress will do with the weary look on the face of the loved one as he comes home, tired, discouraged, and perhaps heart-sick with the perplexities of business life, or the worries of the farm, or perhaps the endless work of gathering souls for the kingdom of God. See how the face will lighten and the smile come to the tired eyes; and be sure when your time comes and the burden of the home is more than your frail form can bear, the kindly smile and caress will be returned with interest, for as a rule the husband is more than willing to meet his wife half way. We as husbands and wives have no right to neglect each other, whom we have vowed before God to love. We have no right to build a home and rear little children in this home, under an influence of indifference, (and what child will not soon feel this in the home?) God help us to be better wives, and better husbands, then we will be better fathers and mothers and have better homes.

A MOTHER.

Dear Home Column: With pleasure after so long a silence I come to you again. Bro. L. G. Gurwell spoke briefly of his and Bro. Ebert's visit here in February. It was timely and a great joy to us, and a feast to most all that heard. Those gospel sermons were pronounced the best sermons people ever heard, and they were well received by the people here, and many inquires were made to know when the elders would return.

Bro. Ebert returned in August, stayed nine days, and preached twelve sermons with as large crowds as could be expected, there being sickness and death in our midst. Bro. Ebert was sent for to say the words to comfort and cheer the bereaved. Now Bro. G., you will please remember my statement, made several times, that that girl is an instrument in God's hands to bring the people to a knowledge of this pure gospel, to bring them to him. I firmly believe in the same. I was in hopes it would be through administration, but it was not. I told Bro. Ebert several times he would be sent for to go there, and to be ready.

Some way he doubted, but all at once all doubts were removed. Just about one o'clock Mr. Johns came to me, requesting me to return home and get our minister to preach the funeral sermon of their daughter, Effie Grace Johns, born in Sumner County, April 2, 1886; died August 16, 1904, aged eighteen years, four months, and fourteen days.

I said, "Do you want Bro. Ebert to preach?" he said "Certainly or I should not have requested it." Said he did not know one of our faith was here until a few minutes ago, and he knew that he would preach something comforting to them. He was so absorbed in poor Effie's sickness he did not understand one of our faith was here then, thought it was when they were here in the winter.

Some perhaps will read this who will remember Effie in Sumner County, and her great afflictions and of her people coming here for her health. Sadie said as she sat upon her papa's knee, "Dear Effie's spirit has taken its flight. She is cured now."

She passed away so easily and looked so sweet and peaceful.

The words of blessed assurance came to my mind; Bro. Ebert did say the words of greatest comfort. I do not think words could have been more cheering and it was pronounced the best sermon, by some, they ever heard. Bro. E. said he was sent for this occasion. He was admonished several times to come, to hurry, and he wondered why it was so, but when sent for the 17th of August he knew then it was God's will—his way to more fully open the way for his work. We praise his name.

We had a feast both times the brethren were in our midst. I know all will rejoice with us. For over eighteen years our only preachers were the HERALD, Hope, and Autumn Leaves, except the pamphlets of sermons we used to get.

Bro. Ebert is the one I used to see always in a hurry every time, just a trotting in such a hurry to come and preach. When he came he came afoot from Leoti, part way. He rode about twelve miles then walked the rest. I was out and heard some one call. I listened, he called again. I said "Who is it, and what is wanting?" It was dark, but I could see it was a man, and a strange voice. He just came trotting up to me, and asked if Mrs. Turner lived here. I said, "I am Mrs. Turner." So he told who he was. I was in a hurry to see that face, to see if it was the one. There he stood, but not Cousin Martin A. Butterfield, as I had figured him out to be, and dear cousin never writes since I wrote him I was a Saint and sent him the epitome of our faith. I do hope some of our faith will see them before long. They live at Montrose, South Dakota. Has or did have a State office at Salem.

We hope when the brethren come next time some will be added. David and self are all that are here now.

I always rejoice in God's goodness and mercy towards us.

May we always trust him. Pray for us.

When Bro. Gurwell administered to me I received instant relief, but not entirely cured. He said my ailments were such I could not be instantly cured. I was free from pain until I took the "grip" in April; seldom use my crutches.

The Rise of the Sunday-school.

How interesting it would be if we could have a large chart up here, showing the relation of the Sunday-school, the home, the Religio, the Mite Society, the church, and all the other organizations, and the interrelation of all of them; a sort of a family tree, you know, so then if any one should ask us the relation of the Prayer Union to the Sunday-school, we should be able to look at our chart, and then say definitely, "Great Aunt."

But there is a real affinity between the Sunday-school and the church. Briefly, the idea now is, instead of theorizing, to sketch the connection between the two, and show the interrelation in the past. As far back as 1869 we find a General Conference resolution recommending the issuing of a Sunday-school paper. In April, 1871, it was resolved, "That as the Sunday-school cause forms an important feature in the great work of the last days, the officers and teachers thereof are hereby sustained in their calling to care for the lamb's of Israel's fold."

Again in October, 1876, at another General Conference of the whole church, the above resolution was reaffirmed and a further resolution adopted to request the presidents of branches, throughout the world, to use their utmost endeavors to organize the Sunday-schools, in their respective branches, and report regularly the condition of said schools to their district conferences, and the districts should report to the annual conference of the whole church; still further, the presidents of districts and the traveling ministry were also requested to use their influence to establish Sunday-schools. Truly, if we are to ask the relationship, the Sunday-school seems to have been then, and still is, a very dear child of the church.

Other mention is made of the Sunday-school from time to time, showing ever a watchful eye over its growth, but not to grow too tedious, we shall only quote one more. At the General Conference of April, 1890, it was resolved, "Whereas the Sunday-school movement in the church, which is becoming an important part of the work of the body of Christ, has now arrived at that period of its existence that it invites and needs assistance and encouragement as well as recognition in a more general and definite way, therefore be it

"Resolved that this conference appoint a committee whose duty shall be to devise ways and means towards the further establishment of the Sunday-school work, with a view to making it a department of regular church work and care."

And now the child has grown up and must do something itself to support the family. It is to be a regular department of church work and care—and, what is that part? Look at the head of your Sunday-school paper, at this beautiful banner, and you will see "Feed my Lambs."

It was pursuant to this resolution that the General Sunday-school Association was formed. It was pursuant to this resolution that the district organizations were formed. It is in accordance with this resolution that we meet to-night.

But pardon me if I ask you to go back once more to the time of the reorganization of the church. Bro. Joseph, "Young Joseph" as he was familiarly called then, came forward to lead the church in 1860, but news traveled slowly then, so it was 1863 before the people of St. Louis knew of this important event. Elders were sent, and in February, 1864, a branch was organized in St. Louis. That same spring the Sunday-school work commenced here. The branch president, Charles Hall, was superintendent. That Sunday-school, the Zion's Hope, is still with us. It was this Sunday-school which gave name to the Sunday-school paper in 1869,—Zion's Hope. This Sunday-school was probably the first in the Reorganization. Query. Mr. Superintendent, is this Sunday-school still doing all it can to keep its high estate,—the first Sunday-school of the church?

But the other Sunday-schools need not feel badly, for, as early as 1867, Bro. William O. Thomas was superintendent of a Sunday-school at Cheltenham, although then it was called the Dry Hill Sunday-school, so you Cheltenham people have a very high standard also to uphold. Other Sunday-schools quickly followed, and, in June, 1879, the first district association was formed, of St. Louis, Belleville, Cheltenham, Alma, and Caseyville Sunday-schools. William Jaques was district superintendent; Joseph E. Betts, Jr., was district secretary. Was this the first district Sunday-school association? Truly those early workers placed our standard high,—first. Are we doing our share to keep it first?

Then, the Sunday-school work was directly in charge of the branch officers, so greatly was it esteemed as a part of the church-work. Later, the work grew too large and was divided, but to-night it is a part of the church-work, as then.

There is one noted feature of the Sunday-school work in this district, and that is, when the Sunday-school prospered, the church grew rapidly and was more spiritual; when the Sunday-school lapsed, the church went into temporary darkness, until at one time only one fourth were reported in good standing. It is something the history of the district shows in no unmistakable terms: like father, like child. When the church was prosperous the Sunday-school was large and successful; when the Sunday-school was successful, the church was in a better spiritual condition. For the Sunday-school is the nursery of the church, and quickly responds to the moods and temper of the parent. It is the kindergarten of the church. I like that word,—"Der Kindergarten," the children's garden, the garden where the children grow, where the child-mind is cared for and the sunshine is let in to make it grow and blossom and develop into beautiful flowers. By and perhaps the wind will come, and the fair flower-leaves fall, perhaps even be nipped by chilling frosts; but that time is not now. Now, it is the garden of the children, a fair, summery place. (I trust all of you will appreciate my mentioning a "fair summery place," for the thermometer, as all of us know, to our sorrow, has been staring us in the face with zero weather.)

How many have ever gone to one of the great nurseries where young trees are set out and cared for during the first few years of their life? Then they are transplanted and set out to grow by themselves in somebody's orchard. At first they need great care, or else they may die out, or perhaps be hindered so much by the effort of growing and existing at all, that they will not have as fine fruit.

A noted Catholic has said, "Give me a child during the first eight years of his life, and I do not care who has it after that." That is what the Sunday-school is—the nursery, where the tender plants are watched and tended in those early years, taught to grow in the "more perfect way," so they may bring forth fruit more abundantly, rich, fine fruit for the Master and his church.

But we would not have you to think this means only those young in years of earth life. Paul told the saints of his day, that when they should have been grown up, they were yet babes. The Sunday-school offers to church-members a chance, which neither preaching nor prayer-meetings offer, of a better personal acquaintance with the word of God. It teaches us to add to our faith, knowledge.

All of us are familiar with the words of the song:

"Surely the Captain may depend on me, Though but an armor-bearer I may be."

This, rightly meant, is a noble self-commitment. Dependable people—their price is above rubies. This world would indeed be a dreary place if there were not some few Christians who need no prodding or watching, who can be told, and then trusted.

That is what the Sunday-school is for,—to make more dependable people. The preaching services are profitable in a very large part, but the Sunday-school work also occupies an important place, to develop our weak child-spirits into stronger, more dependable men and women.

There is much in this statement, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Also in the words of our Master: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." And in these words of Solomon there is more than we understand in our young days, yet so much of wisdom: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." But not to leave you with a sad thought, let me quote in conclusion:

"Thank the Lord for the plan he has given,
That will render us pure as a child,
That will change this cold world into heaven,
By his Spirit so holy and mild."

ETTA HITCHCOCK.

Letter Department.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, October 12, 1904.

Editors Herald: For about five weeks I have been in this city, except a visit made to Ogden, and one to Union and Bingham. The usual services are held here, though the interest is not great. The same is true of Ogden. While at the latter place the feature of the week was the marriage of Sr. Genevieve Chase and Mr. John M. Durkin. Genevieve is the youngest daughter of Bro. and Sr. Wells Chase, and is well known to all of the missionaries who have labored here for years past, as the Chase home was open for all elders to stay, either for a long or short period. Hence they will be interested in learning of the venture of the baby daughter. Genevieve is well favored and popular, and if one can safely judge by appearances Mr. Durkin is an excellent companion for her. It will be interesting to note how a Catholic and Latter Day Saint will behave themselves together. They were married September 28, at four o'clock, after which refreshments were served and a pleasant social time had until seven o'clock, when the happy pair took the train over the Rio Grand Railroad for Denver, Colorado. Success and happiness attend them.

Sunday, October 2, I joined Bro. Swen Swenson at a meeting at Bingham. A pleasant and profitable time was had. Bro. Swenson is laboring in that vicinity among the Scandinavians, and doing a good work. A good interest is manifest there.

Political speakers having begun to invade the community, on the evening of the 5th we went to hear the Socialist leader, Eugene V. Debs, at the Salt Palace. He was greeted with an audience of about fifteen hundred and acquitted himself well as a speaker,—knows how to make points. He appears to think that he has the panacea that will settle the social question and stop the conflict between labor and capital. It occurred to us that while his ideal is an admirable one he was striking to inaugurate the millennium before the Devil is bound, or man becomes regenerate, a thing that Christ would not even promise to do; hence he has a big undertaking before him, and much to overcome ere he succeeds.

Salt Lake City seems to have been in the swim during the last week. The State Fair was in operation, which was attractive, and made a financial success, ten thousand dollars being taken the afternoon of the opening. Then the American political party, formed avowedly to strike for the separation of church and state in Utah, has held several meetings with large audiences present. Senators Cannon and Kearns have joined this party. Cannon is a fine talker and strikes hard, and this pleases, so this organization is growing—moving with much enthusiasm.

On the 7th came the visit of Senators Fairbank, Doliver, and Judge Smith. They received a magnificent welcome in the Salt Lake Theater. The speeches were of a high order and inspired great enthusiasm.

Monday evening, the 10th, the Democrats had a rally in the Salt Lake Theater, a large audience being present, Senator Parker of Colorado being the speaker. More enthusiasm!

The big Mormon conference convened on the 6th and closed on the 9th. There was a large attendance, and the usual trend was followed in conducting its business. As to numbers it was a great success. A few extracts from the initiative of Joseph F., the president, will give a cue as to how they succeed in blinding and misleading their followers. "I find that we have now in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, fifty-five organized stakes of Zion." In the light of the fact that these organizations are not within a thousand miles of Zion proper as known and specifically pointed out in the revelations, and no divine commandment authorized the establishment of either of them, (for Joseph F. swore down at Washington that there had not been a revelation for twenty-one years except the Manifesto, and Brigham Roberts characterized that as but a "kind" of revelation,) it is amazing the people can not see through the deception. Speaking of the ministry, he says, "It is expected that these quorums of priesthood in the various stakes . . . will look after the moral condition of the people; that they will teach righteousness; that they will see that those who are acting in authority, in presiding authority in the stakes of Zion, are upright, honest, pure, humble men." Now, in view of the fact that this is the identical man that took oath at Washington that he had five wives and forty-one children, which relation the Book of Mormon denounces as "whoredom" (page 116) and that he knew that he was living in a relation that was contrary to the law of God and the law of the land, and it is he that is exhorting to purity and "righteousness," it is enough to make the man in the moon sneeze. But it fools the people.

Again, "It is our mission to save men from error, and from wickedness, and from apostatizing from truth and righteousness, and that man might believe in the true and living God." In view of the fact that President Young taught that "Adam is our god and all the god with whom we have to do," which has never been repudiated by this people, this is another calculated to mislead and blind. The elders of the Reorganized Church have been and are constantly urging upon this same people a belief in the true God, the God that made the world and all in it, Adam as well, but their Adam-god belief stands out in bold letters in their books, uncontradicted. All of this and much more was done, with the climax of sustaining this same polygamous Joseph F. and his twelve apostles, with the chief patriarch, as prophets, seers, and revelators.

The opening speech of the conference was made by a polygamist with five wives, and the last by a polygamist with three wives. And this is the people that are to set the world an example of "purity" and "righteousness," who claim to be filled with the Holy Spirit and to speak under inspiration, going out to evangelize the world. They may succeed in fooling some of the people all of the time, but they will not be able to fool all of the people all of the time. It has the appearance of burlesque rather than sincere talk. The people act as if they really believed these men's utterances were inspired, and that this Rocky Mountain church is the church that, under God, was organized by Joseph Smith the seer. They have it now in view to celebrate the birthday of Joseph Smith on the 23d of December next, and keep it in memorial; also erect a statue to his memory upon the temple grounds.

The above questions are taken from the Deseret Evening News of Thursday, the 6th of October.

Bro. H. N. Hansen is in the city and looking well. He expects to go south soon. Night before last a rain set in and continued during the day yesterday, so the ground here is wet again. The Saints are well and cheerful so far as known. We are trying to get the people to hold on to the good and let go the evil they are adhering to.

WM. H. KELLEY.

BRICE HILL, Ontario, October 13, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am pleased to inform you that the work of the Lord is still onward in Canada. It is true that the people in many places in this part of Joseph's land have had the gospel preached to them, and while the many have refused to obey, yet we are gathering the few into the true fold and kingdom of God. I find it very pleasant when receiving letters from the young in the faith, learning of their joy in the work of the Lord, and their love and appreciation for the same. This gives us courage to go forward; and while it does not seem to be a day of much gathering in, it is still a day of warning. However, we are baptizing as well as teaching, and we live in hopes that when the Master returns we may hear him say, because of our faithfulness over the few things intrusted to our care: "Enter into the joys of your Lord." While at some places there is practically no interest, at others there is good interest. I am looking for an ingathering before I get through, at a place called Brice Hill. Other places are calling for preaching. Hope to be faithful to the mission, till the end of the race, that I may be saved in the kingdom of God.

Your brother in Christ,

R. B. HOWLETT.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, September 24, 1904.

Editors Herald: There have been quite hard times here on account of the storm which destroyed so many cocoanut-trees and property of the traders, and the insect destroying the cocoanuts, and the very low prices of pearl-shell; and for awhile there were very many diving-machines getting the pearl-shell from the natives, but by reason of a very strong opposition by all the natives and some of the best of the French people here they have all been stopped, at least for awhile. It is generally thought that times and business are getting better; I am sure I hope so, but the organ of hope is very large in some persons—smaller in others.

On account of not being able by reason of the hard times to settle up with the printer, we do not expect to get off for home before the December boat, and perhaps not then, for we wish to have everything settled and running smoothly before we leave.

A few weeks ago a minister of the "Church of God" came to our town from New Zealand, and wished to present his views to the people of Papeete, and not being able to get any other chapel he asked for the use of ours, which request was of course granted; he then wished to know if I put any restrictions upon him. I answered him that he might feel himself as free as in his own chapel; but if he attacked our faith, or presented views antagonistic to our belief, he might expect me to reply.

He began his services on Friday, September 9, and continued them on Sunday morning and Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings. He advertised his subjects as follows: "The end of the world—is it near? or the second coming of Christ;" "Russian policy and Bible prophecy;" "The Millennium a fable, earth desolated, harvest reaped;" "The anti-Christ;" "The gospel that Paul preached, that Christ died on Wednesday and rose on Saturday; the trinity a popish dogma."

His statements of these were as near as I could gather them: The end of the world is near, but there is no second coming of Christ, except as he came to his disciples, especially to John on Patmos in fulfillment of his statement to Peter. "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" Russia is the Gog and Magog of Revelation 21:8, and is to fight the battle of Armageddon of Revelation 16:16. The millennium is to last for ever in heaven or somewhere in the sky; the earth is to be desolated, and destroyed by fire. The antichrist are all those who believe that there is a spirit in man and consequently do not believe that Christ came in the flesh. His sole argument (if it could be called such) concerning the crucifixion was drawn from the statement of Matthew 28:1. "In the end of the Sabbath," meant Saturday evening before sundown, which rendering was established by the following statement: "As it began to dawn toward the first day of the week," (which means that it began to be near the Saturday evening before sundown; the word dawn meant to approach,) the Marys came and found the Savior had risen, therefore he rose on Saturday; consequently we ought to keep the seventh day as a Sabbath; Mark, Luke, and John are wrong. The Trinity was ridiculed rather than anything stated about it except that Jesus was not divine, for if he was we ought to recognize his divinity, but we can not do that because the word of God forbids it, saying "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

I listened to him patiently, and when he was through with all his lectures I asked the people to come and hear me in reply; and on Thursday and Friday evenings I replied to his efforts as best I could, and when I was through the people wished me to continue in the English language. So, now we have services in English every Sunday evening.

His main theory is that the Sinai law is the gospel, and is the only word of God, among men, and if men obey that law and are baptized by immersion and partake of the Sacrament once a year (the passover) they will be saved, but unless they keep that law they will not be resurrected; or if they are they will be annihilated immediately after. He made no followers here as far as I am informed, and left for New Zealand on Friday.

He has an Eden's initial day-line for the beginning of the Sabbath at sundown there, and as there are four rivers which have their source in Armenia that must be the district of Eden, and in the Eastern part of that land is located Lake Van, about two hundred and forty miles in circumference, "which undoubtedly covers the very place where the garden was planted by the Lord," therefore about forty-three degrees east of Greenwich, England, would be the place from whence "Eden's initial day-line" should be reckoned. And as the Sabbath comes to us from Eden we should keep the Sabbath according to that initial day-line, and as Sunday in New Zealand is at the same time as the Sabbath is in Eden (otherwise Lake Van) in Armenia, it is the right thing to keep Sunday holy there, not because it is Sunday, but because it is the true Sabbath day, therefore Sunday is the seventh day in New Zealand and Australia.

Being born of water and of the Spirit means that when a man is born of water, which means the word of God, or the ten commandments, he then is prepared for the spirit birth which only takes place at the first resurrection, and he receives his spiritual body. He says "we can not be born anew unless we are begotten, and we can not be begotten unless we receive with meekness the implanted word, the ten words of God," and although the ten commandments were the only words of God for him in the Bible, he yet had a Seventh-day Adventist's chart with several images on it, and likenesses of things in the heavens above and in the earth beneath, contrary to the second word; but as one said he has not violated the second word, for the things on his chart are not in the likeness of anything in the heavens, on earth, or elsewhere.

He thought everybody ought to hear for themselves, but although he was almost within stone's throw of our chapel he would not come to hear my reply to his darkening words; for I never in all my travels met or heard such a continuous darkening of counsel, by words without wisdom or often good sense, and I sometimes thought that the man was not right in his mind. However, through that, we have the privilege which we have long sought, to present the truth to the people of Papeete, or to a few of them, and we seek for wisdom to present the truth as it is in Christ our Lord, in the English language as near as we can speak it.

We are well and will be glad when we can feel it right to go home; when all things will be prepared for us to thus go we will return to Joseph's land, if the Lord will.

May peace abide upon all the Israel of God.

Editors Herald: Our conference which convened the 1st and 2d inst. passed off quietly, and the good Spirit was with us to quite a degree, and everybody apparently enjoyed themselves. Bro. Wight was here as per appointment and was a source of comfort, we feel, to all, in presiding, setting in order, and preaching the word, and such an interest was created by Bro. Wight's able and instructive sermons that ten were added; Bro. Wight baptized eight while here; the writer baptizing two afterwards.

Bro. Wight comes as near filling his calling as any elder that ever went through this "neck o' woods," adjusting matters that all others failed to do. Our branch continues to grow slowly, numbering now eighty-seven, and others very near the door. May the good Master inspire us with his blessed Spirit, that we may be qualified to magnify our calling, that we may not hinder this work in any particular, but on the other hand, that we may be as a polished shaft in his hand to work for the best good of all.

Yours in the one faith,

JAMES P. SAPPENFIELD.

BLAINE, Washington, October 10, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am still in the battle-field, just as determined for the victory now as at any time of my life. The work moves slowly on in this part. Since closing the tent-work at Vancouver, British Columbia, I went to Chilliwack, and out in the country six or seven miles I held meetings at two different points. A few besides the Saints came to hear the old gospel story. I lost no time while there, as I held some thirteen meetings, visiting some fourteen families, also attending the fair one day. There I was pleased to hear the address of Charles Monroe (their member of parliament) to the ten schools that listened very attentively to him as he addressed them along the lines of their educational work.

On my return to Vancouver I had thought of holding some street-meetings, but found the city in an uproar,—carnival week on hand. Only preached twice the following Sunday, and held sacrament meeting at Bro. Clark's, which was of much interest to the Saints, a marked degree of the Spirit present. I am pleased to give some added testimony to the work in the Westminster Branch for the encouragement of others at a distance. God has been pleased through my administrations to the sick and afflicted to bless with health and cure. This has been a source of comfort to establish some more fully in the faith of this grand work. Two cases I want to speak of especially. First, a young man that was taken with blood-poison in his right hand and arm, caused from a cut from a bone while working in butcher business. This had afflicted him for some two or three weeks with quite an anxiety on the part of the family and friends. It seems he had done what he could but the disease continued to work. He came to meeting as he usually did, and at the afternoon service he asked to be administered to, and I told him if he had faith in God I would. He was blessed to his heart's desire and was fully restored. He is not a member, but I am in hopes he soon will be.

The other case I refer to is Sr. Emily McMullen of Vancouver. Just about one year ago she went to the hospital and submitted to an operation, having four tumors taken away from her that she had been afflicted with some four years or more. She had to wear a truss ever since the operation until about one month ago. Through all her efforts the inward incision had never healed, while the outer one had for some time. At this administration referred to, she left off the truss and unwisely overworked herself two days after, and for three days could scarcely be up around the house. I was again called in to administer to her and all present were made to praise the Lord for his power so made manifest that the pain under which she fainted away ceased, she was healed immediately. In these things I feel I have not words to express gratitude to God for his goodness as I would like to do. I would say, Saints be faithful and true to your obligations, and by this we will prove our God, and witness what blessings he will give to us.

I came here by request of Bro. and Sr. J. O. Hower to see what could be done for the work, to bless their only child, and to encourage them what I could in their isolated condition, not having heard a sermon for nearly two years. We advertised for meeting in a hall, for the use of which the brother is to pay seventy-five cents per night. Only a few have been present yet. There seems to be but little interest taken in religious matters in this country,—so many attractions to lead the people astray.

All who wish to write please direct, for the present, New Westminster, British Columbia, in care of J. S. Rainey. May God speed the work.

ROCKWELL CITY, Iowa, October 18, 1904.

Dear Herald: It has been said that in this life we must take the bitter with the sweet and this surely can be applied to the Latter Day Saint missionary. After having spoken to good crowds all summer, we had the privilege of attending the Dow City reunion and enjoying the pleasant associations found only at a reunion of God's people. Leaving the reunion at its close we went home to attend to some business which was demanding attention, then in a few days on to the field of action again, the first point being at a schoolhouse five miles south of Rockwell City. Was met at the train by Bro. John Renyolds, who had the meetings well announced, and taken to the home of his father. We began, with only a few out the first few nights, (besides Bro. Renyold's family,) and they were mostly noisy boys and young men. Saturday night, after having preached to a few with good liberty and announcing that we would show the difference between the church in Utah and the Reorganization, we with Bro. Renyolds' family started for home. We had gone but a short distance when from a corn-field by the roadside came ears of corn thick and fast and with good force too, but "Mormon" preachers are hard to hit and the rest were so lucky as to escape unharmed owing to the bad aim of the throwers; so we went our way, thinking it was just some boys trying to have some fun, and at the same time show their bringing up. But the next morning when going to the schoolhouse again we found some egg-shells in among the corn that had been thrown. Sunday afternoon while I was preaching to a small congregation on the eternal judgment they were on the outside trying to throw the sunlight into my eyes by means of a small mirror, when they discovered Bro. Renyolds watching them and left. They have been somewhat quiet since; as they think we know them. Sunday night a fair crowd was out to hear the difference and as Sr. Renyolds put it, "the boys become so interested they forgot their meanness." Monday night no one came and to-night will close the effort here, the most bitter part of it being that the people would rather go to dances and drinking bouts than hear the gospel, both men and women being in the habit of doing both. I go to Jolley there to gain forces with Bro. Hunt to-morrow. Still in the conflict, I am,

PARIS, Ontario, October 16, 1904.

Dear Herald: Have thought for some time I should like to let you know what we are doing in this part of the country. Myself and two children are the only Saints living here. We feel the want of church privileges; the HERALD and Messenger are the only preachers we enjoy, as the others seem to have no depth and not the proper ring. I have my Book of Mormon Quarterly also Sunday-school Quarterly, and take great pleasure in studying. I belong to the home class of both departments. I try in my weakness to tell my friends and neighbors the beautiful news by giving and distributing the literature, also the Book of Mormon, which greatly surprised them. One lady said to me, "I am no Mormon, Mrs. Likins, so do not give me that book to read"; but she took it and was more than pleased, and exclaimed, "Why, you do not belong to the Salt Lake people at all." This book seemed to convince them more than I could tell.

We had a call from Elder B. S. John last summer for a few weeks. He preached in the park, also at our house; but the people did not seem to want any more religion than they already had. We were sorry to see him go.

My son is married and lives by himself. His wife is not of the faith, but would be pleased to entertain any one of our faith. She is of the Methodist belief. They have a dear little boy two weeks old. May he grow up to be a great blessing to his parents.

I should dearly love to see the beautiful gospel established here. We would do all we could to help any of the elders that may come. Pray for us that we may prove faithful, and my prayers are for all God's chosen people.

Yours for the love of the gospel,
SR. S. W. LIKINS.

STOCKPORT, England, October 12, 1904.

Dear Herald: With great pleasure I write to you to acquaint you of the joys which we have received, that all our brothers and sisters may be glad with us. Saturday and Sunday, October 1 and 2, was our quarterly conference of the Manchester District. Apostle J. W. Rushton was with us, and presided over the business-meeting of Saturday, and cheered and enthused the Saints at the morning and evening services.

The afternoon testimony-meeting was fine indeed, and was wonderfully helpful and cheering. The conference was held in the "gospel tent," a frame structure, situated in James Street, Bradford. Through the strenuous efforts of the Saints, it has recently become the property of the Northeast Branch of this district, they having purchased it from the Plymouth Brethren. Many were the testimonies and experiences related in connection with the edifice which we were worshipping in, telling of deep experiences, sorrowful hearts, dark passions, oppressions, and persecutions through a few Latter Day Saints being invited into the midst of the Plymouth brethren, who brought in "heresies (?)" and "dissensions (?)," and were at last told to get outside, that their room was better than their company. Fancy Bro. Dewsnup, esteemed father of the president of "our Graceland," being, along with several others, ordered outside. They went but part of that congregation went with them, and some of our stalwarts of to-day once formed part of the few that objected to the Latter Day Saints being so badly treated. May the true gospel that now rings forth in that room be effective to many, many precious souls.

On Monday Bro. Rushton came to our branch in Stockport and held forth for four evenings with splendid liberty. We had a good attendance of friends, and feel satisfied with the results. The Lord has worked with us since the opening of our room about two years ago, and I feel it a privilege to be associated with the church of Jesus Christ, and to partake of the brotherly love which is manifested to a marked degree. Branch presidents, pray earnestly for guidance and grace to win the hearts of the flock intrusted to your care, and lead them tenderly and wisely, that it may raise a debt of gratitude such as I now owe.

I desire to go on in the work, to give diligence to present "myself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." I am,

Editors Herald: I wish to say a word or two about the efforts put forth in this city lately by two of our elders, and their wives, namely, Elder Gowell and Bro. Booker. They opened the district tent on September 8, and, except two days, continued until Sunday, October 8, having beautiful weather, calm and pleasant all through. We set the tent in a central part, on one of the main streets, and continued there for three weeks (or near that time), had circulars printed, also advertised in the daily paper. The brethren distributed the same with our tracts, extensively, and we had at one of the meetings five strangers, at other times one, two, or three out to hear. There are fifteen Saints here, and some nights only one would be there, at some meetings three or four would come. At the second place we put up tent there was fair attendance, from five to fifteen would come; but many Catholics lived near the tent, and the young folks were very rough, so much so that we called on the chief of police for protection, and they sent a policeman twice. We had order when they were there.

Bro. Gowell with his wife left for Kansas City, and on to World's Fair, two weeks before closing the efforts. Bro. and Sr. Booker left for home October 9. The prospects are poor; nothing draws here as well as the Salvation Army and the Catholic Church.

Yours in bonds of Christ,
JAMES BUCKLEY.

HIGGINSVILLE, Missouri.

Dear Herald: I am still in the faith but it is a war continually with the enemy. I would not have it otherwise, however, for, unless we are perfect, peace is stagnation and death. Although I may have more defeats than victories I am not discouraged, for I am learning the enemy's tactics, and hope to yet wrest the victory from defeat.

I can now truly say this gospel is the truth, and that I received not the knowledge from man, but from God. I realize how necessary it is for a Saint to cultivate and develop the sense of responsibility that we may continually realize the obligation resting upon us to do the right thing under all circumstances, and at all times; and also how necessary it is that we retain the simplicity of life and mind, and the humility that characterizes the true Saint, not being dazzled by the glory for which we are striving, so that we despise those who are not so fortunate as to believe as we do.

There is a justice that is according to the spirit of the law of love and mercy, wherein the person who has committed a great sin can not be fully pardoned until the death of the "old man." And no matter how much the man may suffer, it is boundless love and mercy only that makes his pardon possible. The letter of the law, as you know, does not pardon. Such a sin I have committed, and the "old man" of my human nature dies very hard. He is very stubborn and tenacious of opinion,—good qualities if in submission to the will of Christ, but a terrible incubus if more or less opposed to his will. I feel sometimes as a person feels who is chained to a weight that he must lift but can not. And I give up sometimes, but always try again. I believe that the cleanliness Paul meant, that he said was next to godliness, is the keeping of the law, more particularly chastity, which cleanness of body, helps. It is true cleanliness of soul that is next to godliness; but we may be clean enough of soul to restrain our uncleanness so that we commit no overt act of sin, and yet be filthy, and take some pleasure in the thoughts of sin. If this is the best a person can do he is counted as godly, for, says David: "Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin." But I think, how much more blessed is he that has no sin,—none of the greater sins, I mean; for we all have more or less to contend with. I remain

Editors Herald: Inclosed please find two dollars, a year's subscription to the HERALD, and fifty cents for tracts, that I may distribute them here among those that have never heard the gospel preached. This is a small town on the railroad. I would be so glad if any elders passing would stop and preach a few sermons. I have not heard a sermon preached for more than thirty years. Just think of this, brothers and sisters, and pray for me and my family, that they may all obey the gospel when they hear it preached, and go to work for the Lord, and help to bring souls to him. It does my soul good to read the HERALD. I always look for the sermons, and rejoice to read them. My desire is to do right in all things, praying the Lord to lead me by his Holy Spirit.

Dear Herald: I can say with others of the faith that I enjoy reading the HERALD,—the letters of my brothers and sisters, and especially the Mothers' Home Column. There are some grand pieces there worthy of being put into practice. I have felt the Spirit many times, which has brought tears to my eyes, when reading those pieces; and have thought that if more mothers could realize the sacred trust placed in their care, when those little ones are given them, they would be more careful in their training of them, feeling that they are responsible for what kind of men and women they will be when grown. It makes my heart ache to see many of those little ones raised in sin and evil-doing, taught it as soon as they begin to take notice. Oh, if parents only realized that they will be held accountable in the day of judgment for blighting that little one's life. It is surely a blight to one's life to be raised in sin and among contention, one that is hard to remove in after-years, for it is so impressed that it becomes a part of their nature. We should be careful what we say and do before little ones, for they learn by imitating older ones. And if we set them a good example, they will become noble men and women, such as will be an honor to the church and community where they reside.

There are many noble men and women in the church, for which I feel thankful. It makes my heart rejoice to see them trying to emulate the Savior in their every-day life. I hope I will be able to continue faithful in this work that I may accomplish some good and be a light to those about me, which is the desire of my heart.

A SISTER.

The fruit of the Spirit is not criticism, faultfinding, and the like. There are too many filled with this spirit.

Kansas City News.

The weather is delightful; politics running high.

We have now six branches and nearly all the meetings last Sunday were well attended.

Brn. F. C. Warnky and R. Etzenhouser are preaching at the gospel tent which is located at Chelsea Park Station; tent full of interested listeners every night.

Elder G. H. Hulmes, president of the stake, preached at the First Kansas City Branch at eleven o'clock in the forenoon. He came unexpectedly, but received a royal welcome, as he had not been there for some time. At the close of meeting Elder R. Winning baptized Mr. and Mrs. Wofford, son and daughter-in-law of Bro. and Sr. Bonnett. They were confirmed by Brn. R. Winning and F. C. Warnky at the evening prayer-meeting, at which a most excellent spirit prevailed.

Elder F. C. Warnky preached Thursday evening at Ivanhoe Mission, Fortieth and Highland Avenue, where he preaches every Thursday evening, and has lately baptized six persons.

Sr. Brink, who has been afflicted with a tumor, went to the hospital to have it removed. When the surgeon made the incision he found that it was grown fast to the inner lining and it could not be removed; that nothing could be done for her, and that she could not live long in that condition. Then her only hope was in God. Elders W. R. Pickering, R. Winning, and F. C. Warnky administered to her a number of times, and God has blessed her so that she is able to walk. Her waist measure is reduced ten inches, and she is apparently getting well. The expression of the hearts of the Saints is, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The hall where the Chelsea Branch held their meetings burned down, and they are now holding all their meetings in the gospel tent.

Western Nebraska Reunion.

During the reunion held at this place from September 30 to October 9, I was frequently reminded of my early associations with the church at the reunion at Garners Grove in Western Iowa twenty years ago, when I was led down into the liquid stream by the hand of J. S. Roth, at which time some forty-eight others took upon themselves the name of Christ. I wonder to-night: Where are they all; and have all proved faithful to the covenant so solemnly made before God, men, and angels?

Judging from past history we are constrained to think, alas! no, no. The tempter has lured some into the regions of darkness only to reap the penalty of their folly; while others have gone to their sweet rest in the paradise of God. My mind vividly recalls the testimonies, with the manifestations of the Spirit in the gift of tongues, etc., which was strange to me indeed; but which I was made to recognize as the power of God unto salvation, and that the church was the only church on earth well pleasing in his sight; for thus did the Spirit bear witness to my soul. Nor have the years removed this assurance, but rather confirmed; hence we still mingle with this chosen people and feel impressed that here we must end our earthly career, as it seems impossible to attribute the accumulated evidence to any other than the great God.

Well, I will say that the same hallowed influence that accompanied the ministration of the word was with us, thus giving testimony that the Father's sleepless eye is upon us; although it is many years since the youth, "Joseph," conversed with God and angels. Surely the word of the Lord abideth for ever and his promises are yea and amen.

The weather was all that could be expected, the attendance and interest good, and the influence has by no means died out. Some have been unable to decide who was the best speaker, but have said, "Well, that is the best sermon I ever heard," and if I ever join any church it will be the Latter Day Saint Church. There seems to be a feeling that Minatare, on the Platte River, should again have the reunion; but this will be left for S. D.

Payne, J. L. Detrick, and Sanford Barkdoll to decide. Sr. Dick Knapp was baptized by Bro. D. M. Rudd. A district Sunday-school association was organized with S. D. Payne superintendent. We feel that the many Saints who attended were benefited, the work more firmly grounded, and the Evergreen Branch enters upon its duties with renewed energy and strength. I tender my humble and sincere thanks to all who helped to make the reunion a success. May God ever abide with his church. Amen.

Central Nebraska Reunion.

No doubt you would be pleased to hear something from our Central Nebraska reunion which began October 1 and closed October 9. While but few nonmembers were in attendance, and the attendance of Saints was not large, those who did attend, almost without exception, voted the meetings a success. Elders Levi Gamet and J. F. Mintun were placed in charge; but the largest part of the burden fell on Bro. Mintun, while Bro. Gamet looked more after the musical feature of the services. The preaching was listened to with interest and attention. The prayer and testimony services were exceptionally good, and were seasons of real, spiritual feasting.

In the afternoon of October 8 a business session was held at which it was decided to hold another reunion in 1905; not a dissenting voice was heard. A committee consisting of Brn. Levi Gamet, E. Downey, W. W. Whiting, N. S. Butler, and J. H. Logeman was chosen for 1905 reunion, to have power to arrange for time and place of meeting. Twenty-five dollars and ninety-five cents was easily raised to meet expenses.

Elder Charles Derry administered in his office as patriarch to quite a number of Saints who were cheered and strengthened thereby.

At the parting all felt that it had been good for them to be there and to feel the sweet peace which is born of the Holy Spirit. Our secretary, Miss Myrtle Manchester, kept a minute of each meeting, but this would be too lengthy to publish, hence I hand you this instead.

In gospel bonds,

LEVI GAMET.

A Word About Babies.

Too much food and too little nourishment is doing a great deal of harm to many little ones. For infants who must be "bottled," milk diluted with barley-water, a grain of salt and a pinch of sugar added, given lukewarm from an absolutely clean bottle and nipple every two hours (never oftener), is, I consider, a perfect food, and a fat, jolly baby will result. But common sense must be used. A mother can soon tell whether her baby cries from hunger or from overfeeding. Don't ask any one; judge for yourself.

For children the simpler the meals, the fewer sweets, candies, and unnecessary, the better. For breakfast in the summer give them bread and butter, milk, sliced tomatoes, or any fresh fruit but oranges, which would not agree with milk. Pineapple is indigestible, though the juice is good.

In winter give porridge, and be sure it is well boiled, and that too much sugar is not added. The porridge may be made from oatmeal, rolled wheat, cracked wheat, hominy, corn-meal, bread and milk, or sliced bananas (no purgative medicine is ever needed if fruit be given in mornings when necessary). On Sunday an egg, poached or boiled.

For dinner give any meat but pork, soup, or fish, all vegetables (except corn), a plain pudding, no pie or boiled paste.

For tea give bread and butter, milk or cocoa, occasionally preserve, maple-syrup, rhubarb, or honey.

The more moderation is exercised in eating, the better. The food should be plain, good and appetizing, and the children should be given all they want.

If children's appetites are not spoiled by sweets they will enjoy everything put before them.—October Woman's Home Companion.

The New Agriculture.

Agriculture has always been the slowest of human industries, as well as the oldest and most fundamental, says Country Life in America; and, although it is a giant beside which manufactures is a pigmy (though a most lively and quick-witted one), it has always been a lumbering and sleepy giant. At last it is wide awake, and has swung into the march of progress at no uncertain gait. Most of the half a hundred improvements of the first magnitude during the last ten years represent millions of dollars, and some of them are as significant and revolutionary as the invention of the cotton-gin.

The Future of the South.

"If cotton brings about ten cents for the next ten years," said a thoughtful business man in North Carolina, the other day, "the South will again become, as it was before the war, the most prosperous section of our country. I know of no industry in the world which will yield larger returns, in proportion to the capital and the intelligence required, than cotton-growing at ten cents per pound."—The World's Work.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Any one attempting to describe a visit to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition being held at St. Louis, Missouri, and familiarly termed, "The World's Fair," will largely reproduce what some one else has written about it. The first impression is that it is in a certain sense inferior to the exposition held at Chicago in 1893, but one or two days' familiarity with the grounds and the general features of the great show disabuses the mind of that impression; for like the Niagara Falls, "it grows upon one."

The grounds themselves are much larger, the buildings greater, the architecture of them being equally good, if not superior, and the general result a great improvement. As a matter of fact there have been ten years of active advancement in the commercial, mechanical, inventive, and industrial world, a far wider spread of the influence of the United States, a greater acquaintance with the different nationalities, and these have resulted necessarily in marked improvement in many of the arts and sciences and an increased knowledge of those things making for national development and success.

The increased facilities for intercourse between states and nations have given a better disposition to make use of such a vehicle as the Fair afforded for advertisement of those things which are relied upon to attract attention to the various quarters whence the exhibits come. The scenic display surpassed that of the World's Fair at Chicago, for the reason that the grounds were better fitted for such display and the area covered was much greater, which necessarily increased the artists' facilities for making the best of things. The discoveries of the inventive genius of the country and of the world and the improvement upon those things already known increased the value of the various exhibits marking the improvements, and these were readily discernible to one who had seen both fairs. Of course there was much that was old and which had already been seen, but in many instances alongside of these the new developments marked the care and energy of the researches after that which was attainable.

A visit to the Fair is an educational one, and he who chooses to avail himself of the opportunities to see must come away with marked impressions as to the grandeur of human achievement and the effectiveness of human skill and energy. When one can see under one roof the evolution in the means of transportation of goods, wares, merchandise, and human beings, from the pack carried on the back of the human and the beast to the finished carriage, automobile, and railway car, he is led to wonder how long the world lived without modern conveniences. And when one sees the small atom through the microscope and the heavenly bodies through the telescope, he does not wonder at the immensity of space, but he does at man's power to overcome the relative proportions of size and distance.

The general features of the Fair, the public buildings containing exhibits open to the sightseer and the investigator at the price of the one admission fee, does not fail to give general satisfaction. Some features of the exhibits, however, are not so satisfactory, for the reason that when one proposes to see the late additions to the wards of the nation found in the Philippine addition, he is met constantly by an additional tax, which is at the most aggravating, and prevents many from undertaking the necessary journeys to and fro to see these various tribes at their representative side-shows within the general inclosure. It may not be a fair criticism, but nevertheless it suggested to the visitor that there has been more care taken to make money out of the Fair than to give it its full educational effect. Enough is seen, however, to satisfy the average American that the government of the United States has done and is doing its duty so far as the men who represent the Government can see it within the province of their respective administration; and we write this without any thought of political bias whatever.

Of the various features of the Fair we have but a mixed recollection, and when asked the question which we enjoyed the most, we must answer, the Agricultural and the Transportation buildings. It may be that these were more in keeping with the tendency of our thoughts at the time, or that when endeavoring to take in the varied industries of the world, the liberal and the fine arts, there was an appeal to pleasing the eye or the æsthetical side of the nature, rather than to the practical. The ability of man to weave into fabric the finest spun thread of either fiber or glass and make it serve for the adornment of the human frame, and also to compound material so intricate that in action it seemed to be almost human, and others so ponderous that pounds and tons of pounds mean nothing, for both are handled with like facility, give a strange comprehension of man's versatility and the necessities of civilization.

The Agricultural building brings man face to face with his primitive wants and shows him how completely invention and the adaptation of means to ways and the accomplishment of effects have kept pace with the advancement from the Stone Age to the Golden Age and the height of civilization so far as it has now been reached. An inspection of the Government building tries the heart of the peace-lover; for therein he sees the enginery of war carried to such apparent perfection that it gives a shock to one's idea of the value of human life and suggests the happifying results that must come when he rules who is the God of peace and not the God of war. But in this same building one is led to notice how carefully the men of science have measured the seas and the lands and plotted their services under and above the water with the purpose to enhance and insure the safety of human life; for here we find the harbors mapped, the currents of the seas and oceans marked, lighthouses on dangerous points, and safe channels pointed out by marks and buoys, insuring the safe sailing of the oceans and the safety of the vessels when they are moored in the harbor. But why undertake to tell of all the achievements of man and the wonders of nature which have been gathered together to be seen and so far as possible to be known and understood of him who visits the World's Fair?

Of the famous Pike we have only this to say: A moving, heaving sea of people in a wide street a mile and a half long, stirring constantly and apparently without object and without aim under the light from thousands upon thousands of electric lamps, is a show that will live in the memory as long as one thinks of the World's Fair.

Of the side-shows, it must be said that many of them while possibly entertaining for the time being, are simply spectacular affairs intended to catch the inevitable quarter and half dollar which form the staple charges to these as side attractions of the great Fair. That the prices charged for admission may be commensurate with the cost of production, is probably true, and in this sense the managers of the Fair may be said to have been wise, and those holding concessions are but asking the public to refund their portion of the expense to which said entertainers have been put to entertain them. We saw but a few of these with friends, and can but pay the tribute which is their due, that we saw nothing immodest or immoral in them, while some of them are both entertaining and instructive. Chief among them is Jerusalem, an arrangement of houses and streets illustrating actual scenes in the holy city. We spent three hours in this village, and listening to the lecture of the guide from point to point, from wailing place to Zion, Moriah, and the scene of the crucifixion, we were both pleased and received instruction which fully covered the expense of admission. A model of the Tabernacle, illustrated by a well-informed lecturer, gave us a better comprehension of that wonderful structure and the arrangement of the tribal camping-ground and the pillar of a cloud and of fire than we could have had without seeing it.

Models of the Temple of Solomon and the ancient city of Jerusalem were full of subject for thought, and we could but remember what the Book of Mormon says, that "Jerusalem should be inhabited as a city without walls," when we were told that there are from forty thousand to fifty thousand Jews now resident at Jerusalem, perhaps not more than this number within the walls, and the remainder of the population of eighty thousand outside the walls, including Jews and Gentiles of almost every race, and that for thirty-seven years the gates of Jerusalem have not been shut by night or day.

We had the pleasure of occupying with the Saints in their church on Glasgow Avenue, near Dickson Street, at the Religio, prayer- and preaching-services, speaking twice for them on Sunday, the 16th. We were kindly cared for by Sr. Roberts and her family, of No. 2906 Dickson Street, during our stay.

Further reminiscences of our trip to Pana, Taylorville, St. Louis, Independence, and Kansas City, and what occurred on our route, reserved for another issue.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

The reports from the different fields, so far as received, are quite encouraging. Bro. Peter Anderson reports seventeen baptisms in the Scandinavian mission and five by himself while laboring in the home field. Of his home field he says: "I am very much encouraged relative to the field in Scandinavia, and believe that if properly cared for, for a time, it will soon become one of our most prosperous fields; and I hope that satisfactory arrangements can be made to increase our force there." This will be good news to our Scandinavian brethren, and will possibly encourage them to give more substantial aid to the mission as heretofore requested by Bro. Anderson.

Bro. C. A. Butterworth, reporting the Australian Mission, reports some progress, with sixteen baptisms. The work has met a kind of setback in New Zealand, owing to conditions which have resulted from the departure of Bro. D. E. Tucker from the field and other things not necessary to mention.

Bro. W. H. Kelley's report shows seventeen baptisms, with his missionary force doing nobly all along the line. The political situation, however, is absorbing pretty much all the attention of the people.

Bro. Heman C. Smith reports that the conditions of those parts of the field in the South are good; his men are doing the best they can, and the quarter shows ninety-one baptisms.

Bro. J. W. Wight reports one hundred and seventeen baptisms. He says of his mission: "I have now been in every State of my mission and find as a rule a splendid spiritual condition prevailing. Have never attended better spiritual meetings than I have found in most parts of the mission in a social-service capacity."

Bro. I. N. White's report shows eighty-three baptisms, branches usually in good condition, local ministry occupied and doing well. He has succeeded in establishing a system of reporting that seems to be effective and encouraging, though it entails some amount of labor upon presidents of districts and branches as well as upon himself.

Bro. Joseph Luff's report is but brief. He has lost some of his laborers from his field from sickness and the death of relatives; has but few effective men, and these are doing the best they can. It must be remembered that California is a vast pleasure-field and conditions are more unfavorable there than in almost any other field occupied by our laborers, so far as additions to the church may be concerned.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths reports pretty fully of his field—the Northwestern Mission—Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia. The elders in his field are usually active and twenty-seven baptisms are reported for the quarter.

Bro. F. A. Smith reports one hundred and twenty-nine baptisms in his field. He speaks well of his missionary workers and thinks the work will progress more rapidly.

Bro. J. W. Rushton reports but two baptisms, but with the exception of the work in London and Lydney, reports rather favorably. He is under the necessity of losing some of his laborers, owing to the stringency of the times, and from what he says and from what appears in public print there will be much suffering among the working classes this coming winter.

Bro. J. F. Burton, reporting from Papeete, Tahiti, September 29, indicates that there has been some unfriendliness upon the part of the government authorities in reference to our people holding conference. What the outcome will be it is a little difficult to determine, though he and we hope for the best.

Bro. J. W. Morgan reports the Colorado Mission with fifteen baptisms for the quarter. Those active doing the best they can.

Bro. E. A. Stedman, Minnesota, reports one baptism.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

While at Independence, Missouri, on Monday, the 25th, we were met by a Mr. Williams, of Utah, with his wife and daughter, who were on their way home from the World's Fair. Mrs. Williams is a daughter of Joel J. Smith, son of Uncle John Smith, as we understood her, who treated us very cordially while visiting at the house of Bro. Alexander McCallum, son-in-law to the Editor of the HERALD. They expressed a degree of warmth towards us that we were pleased to see; for it indicated possibly the dawn of an era of better feeling.

The readers of the HERALD will be pleased to learn the following received from Bro. Fred M. Smith, from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, October 25: "Have been here since the 24th ult. Have occupied on Sundays, and have been present at two priesthood meetings. On Sunday afternoon, October 2, Bro. Walter W. Smith spoke before the 'Liberal League' on the subject, 'The Book of Mormon; who wrote it?' He spoke for about forty-five minutes, then there were a number of ten-minute speeches in the way of debate. I was called upon for one speech, and then recalled and given another ten minutes. Bro. Walter was given ten minutes again, so altogether we had about one hour and fifteen minutes of the time. We had a lively time. We were told it was one of the best attended and most interesting meetings the 'League' had held for some time. Some good was undoubtedly done."

We are asked this question: "Who is eligible to sit on elders' courts?" To this we reply, Any officer holding the Melchisedec priesthood in good standing in the church and against whom no charges are pending for immorality or crime, and who is not a party in interest in the matter under trial, may sit as an elder on an elders' court. There might be impropriety in an elder sitting on an elders' court who may be related to either of the parties to the controversy, but such person could sit if the parties should agree to that effect.

In our notice of our visit to Holden reunion we stated that the branch was under the care of Bro. W. R. Odell. We were under the impression and were so informed while at Holden. Our attention has been called to it and we hasten to rectify the mistake. Bro. C. F. Scarcliff is in charge there.

Bro. A. J. Epling, Amador City, California, desires the prayers of the Saints. Let him be remembered.

Bro. J. B. Watson, 43 Sagamore Street, Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "Inclosed find check for three dollars—a dollar and a half for subscription to HERALD and a dollar and a half for Graceland College. A journal and institution which stand for culture and character-building, and the dissemination of truth and knowledge, as they do, should be sustained promptly and tangibly."

Professor E. R. Dewsnup, president of Graceland College, has recently consented to give a course of lectures, on the subject of railway economics, before the University of Chicago. We understand that he is to deliver three lectures each week for a number of weeks.

PROOF AND EVIDENCE.

What is meant by "the teaching of the church"? Can you tell us? Is it that which is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, or is it the ideas that may exist in a set number of heads in reference to them? I am told that it is what the majority of the church teach.

Then if thirty thousand of the church teach that Peter was president of the Jerusalem church and twenty thousand teach that it was James, we are to understand that the teaching of the church is that Peter was president?

It is a very nice creep-out some have when they are licked to say, "Well, it is the teaching of the church," or, "It is not the teaching of the church," as the case may be, the church, of course, being all who agree with them.

Was there any one who read the articles a few months ago endeavoring to prove that James was president of the primitive church but that said to himself after he was through, "I wish I knew whether or not James really was president of the ancient church at Jerusalem"? Was there any one who read the articles endeavoring to prove that Peter was president of the primitive church but that said to himself afterward, "I wish I knew whether or not Peter was really president"? Doubtful.

It must be borne in mind that some things will always have to remain in doubt,—at least till the dawn of eternal day. It will not do to say that it is so because we wish it to be so; that we know because it ought to be known. Sometimes the very best answer to make is to say frankly, "I don't know." It will leave a thinker with a better impression of one who is always trying to prove the unprovable, and who tries to make out that he knows when he does not know.

It is better to state that "Nicodemus came to Jesus by night probably because he was ashamed to come to him in the day-time," than to allege that such was the case without qualifying your allegation. I rather believe that Nicodemus came to Jesus for the very reason suggested; but possibly it is not true.

It is not proper to assert that the thief on the cross had or had not received baptism because neither can be proven. Whenever I hear a man attempt it, it lessens my estimation of him as a logician. Proof is not synonymous with evidence; but is the effect of evidence. There is evidence in favor of the truthfulness of many things that are not true; but there is no proof for that which is not true.

Objector.—But do you mean to say that the thief was saved without baptism?

Answer.—No; but I say that it can not be proven that he was baptized.

O.—It might not as a matter of history—we have not the history of his baptism—but—may it not be proven by circumstances?

A.—It may be if the circumstances are of such a nature as that it can not be otherwise than true. I am not aware of any such a combination of circumstances.

O.—Well, tell us how he could be saved without baptism.

A.—Tell us first where it says he was saved.

O.—It says he went to paradise.

A.—Yes, paradise is the intermediate state, a place of waiting. I know of no place between it and hell, and think none has been revealed. Where will the many occupy till the resurrection who are to have part in the first resurrection and yet not be partakers of celestial glory? Joseph Smith in a vision saw his brother in this state of happiness (see Church History) who had not in earth life been baptized. He said, "This caused me to marvel for I remembered that he had not been baptized." Paradise is not final, by any means. I know of no scripture to support the idea that baptism is of necessity a stepping-stone to the gate of paradise and that all but the baptized are excluded.

O.—Is not paradise the kingdom of God?

A.—Possibly.

O.—Very well; Jesus said except a man be born of water and the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God.

A.—That is the final, celestial kingdom of God.

O.—But how do you know? It does not say so.

A.—On a parity I ask, Is not the glory of the moon a kingdom of God?

O.—Yes.

A.—We read in Doctrine and Covenants 76:6 who the heirs of that glory are to be, that they are the "honorable men of the earth," those "who received not the testimony of Jesus in the flesh," etc. In Doctrine and Covenants 76:7 it is said that they of the terrestrial world will be "heirs of salvation," whether it means as they are or as they will be; as they are when they come forth, or as they will be after the gospel is ministered to them by the celestial and they receive it. We read again that those who knew no law are to have part in the first resurrection. Can it be proven that all who have part in the glories of the sun and of the moon must have previously received baptism either in the flesh or by proxy? I think not. Section 76 teaches us that the superior are to administer to the inferior; that through the superior the inferior are to receive of the Spirit, which will evidently be by the gospel which will be taken by one to the other. If it is a fact, then, that the unbaptized will inherit either of those glories, how will our objector reconcile it with his quotation which says, "except a man be born of water and the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God"?

O.—But is it not possible that all who come forth in all those glories have—if they received not the gospel in the flesh—received it by proxy before the time of their resurrection? Upon the admissibility of this your argument is greatly slackened in its force.

A.—It seems quite unnecessary to argue the immediate problem for the settlement of the primary question which to my judgment can be easily settled without. Here it is: you can not avoid the admission that many enter a condition of happiness, of comfort, of rest, who die, not having been baptized, like Alvin Smith, in the dawn of this great restoration. If it is known to be true, then, that nonbaptism does not disqualify them for intermediate happiness, why would it disqualify the thief? If it is not paradise in which Joseph Smith saw Alvin and in which those who die under like conditions exist, then what is it? At any rate they inherit a glory, which, paradise or not, is as much of a kingdom as paradise; and that simply proves that when Jesus said "except a man be born of water he can not enter the kingdom of God," he meant the real heaven, the final, celestial glory.

O.—I could desire still further to inquire how the thief could have acquired his extraordinary information with reference to the innocence and the character of Christ's kingdom without an intimate acquaintance with them both, such as he could get by no other means than by having received the gospel ordinances in the past.

A.—Oh dear! How could Lawyer Browning in Illinois pronounce Joseph Smith innocent with a pathetic flourish of oratory that even caused the judge to shed tears and he be not a member of the church? You may say he was a lawyer. Yes, but hundreds of cases can be cited where the sympathizers were not lawyers, and had no pecuniary interest, who stood for the right and innocence of the downtrodden.

As for his acquaintance with the kingdom of Christ I can produce you different men, who are not Latter Day Saints, who can defend our doctrines abler than many who are; who know more about our church, its history, polity, etc.

O.—Then you take the position that the thief was not baptized?

A.—I beg your pardon. I do not. I simply say that it can not be proven that he was; and he who says so advertises his ignorance of the rules that have been agreed upon by the greatest authorities to govern controversy and to weigh evidence. I do not deny that the thief was a baptized believer,—I gravely doubt it.

I would have no doubt that Peter and John went down to Samaria to confirm the converts of Philip because the latter did not have the authority to act in that function himself, if it was not for the barrier which has an existence in the fact that Philip wrought miracles and healings which I should say would require the higher priesthood. It is often affirmed that the two apostles went down to do what Philip was unable to do himself. As I have pointed out, there is evidence—perhaps amounting to proof—to the contrary. But suppose there were none. Suppose nothing were recorded by which we might be able to determine that Philip held the priesthood of Melchisedec, might he not have held said priesthood all the same; and would the fact—the mere fact, I say—that the writer had failed to record it prove that he held it not?

NO MAN KNOWETH.

Jesus said that neither he nor men nor angels knew the day or hour of his second coming. I have known it to be said that though they did not then, they may shortly before he comes. Let us see. In Doctrine and Covenants 49:2 we read: "But the hour and the day no man knoweth, neither the angels in heaven, nor shall they know until he comes."

SUGGESTIONS.

I would like to see the Book of Mormon printed with the concordance and pronouncing vocabulary in the back of it, headings at the top of each page like the Bible, and marginal references. Why not, even if it does cost a few cents more?

Some of our books are dead which I sometimes think we might do well to resurrect. And there are a few living, I have thought we might lose without a loss. I don't care a rap for the unpopularity that followed Orson Pratt's championship of the cause of polygamy; if his pamphlets are wholesome, if they have no substitute, if they will do incalculable good, why not publish them? I suppose the objection is that his writings would be without influence since he had such an extraordinary prominence in the field of polygamy. So far as authorship is concerned they could be published without any, under the auspices of the Reorganized Church, the same as many tracts we have sent forth. Why not do the best that is to be done? Men do not detect coins by the character of the men who made them; nor would a lapidary pronounce a diamond an imitation simply because he happened to learn that the one who cut it was a villain. Some people are always straining to be modern. For some reason the Utah people have eliminated Pratt's works from their latest price-list, and I suppose it is because they do not publish it any more. They must be modernizing.

MORE THAN THE BIBLE.

O.—You people claim that your Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are equally inspired with the Bible. Can you tell one single truth either contains that the Bible does not; for, certainly if they do not contain anything aside from or more than the Bible they could be easily dispensed with?

A.—They do. As for the Doctrine and Covenants it declares this which you can not find out by the entire Bible: that there are other worlds and that they are inhabited. Again,—the Bible makes indefinite intimations with reference to John tarrying, not seeing death; the Doctrine and Covenants declares that he did tarry.

As to the Book of Mormon it brings to light an important history before unknown to man; adds light to the doctrine of the resurrection, says explicitly that baptism is to be performed by immersion, and that infant baptism is of the Devil. The greater portion of it, however, is historical.

O.—What do we want with it if it is historical?

A.—What do we want with the portion of the Bible that is historical, viz., Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, etc.? Much of the history of the Bible is repetition, a repetition of what is contained in other books. Take for example the Kings and Chronicles of the Old Testament, and the gospels in the New.

PIONEERS OF OTTERTAIL.—NO. 3.

A VILLAGE OF LOG CABINS—THE MAIN COLONY ARRIVES.

The location of the pioneers on the north shore of Clitherall Lake being made, their journey was over, but the obtaining of a livelihood was the next business at hand. Being unable to bring sufficient supplies they must raise something the first season or suffer with hunger, and as destitution stared them in the face, they were compelled to live on half or quarter rations while laboring to make a start in this wild country.

A log and brush fence was constructed, reaching from one lake to the other, a distance of about one mile. This protected their fields, gardens, etc., from the ravages of the stock. Their teams subsisted entirely upon the short, dry grass while performing their part of the labor. Sixty acres of prairie was broken, and at once sown and planted to different kinds of grain, vegetables, etc.

The providing of shelters for the families was the next matter in hand. The men worked together like a band of brothers, and almost daily the body of a log cabin was erected. These, after being properly fitted, were covered with long shingles or shakes, as some call them. The floors, doors, and even window-casings all had to be hewn out with the broadaxe. This required time and much hard labor, nevertheless, fourteen of these simple structures were erected, and they gave the place somewhat the appearance of a frontier village. But after being thickly plastered with clay, some seemed to think it difficult to decide whether they were mud hovels or Indian wigwams. However, it mattered but little so long as there were none more beautiful or better in the country. There being no lumber or sawmills within a reasonable distance, the settlers were compelled to make them answer the end of their creation, and it would almost appear that to the present day a few are loth to part with old friends.

THE COLONY INCREASED.

Leaving this little band of pioneers snugly sheltered in their log huts, we turn to the removal of the main body of the church from Iowa to Ottertail County.

After the departure of the pioneer company from Manti, steps were immediately taken to make ready for the move. This business consumed the greater share of the time during the following winter and spring and so continued until the first day of May, 1865, when twenty-three families started on the journey; eight having gone the fall before, making thirty-one in all. After a few days travel, six of the twenty-three stopped by the wayside, but the remainder being determined to set their feet upon the place which our committee and their comrades had waded through snow and endured privations, hardships, and suffering, and even imperiled their lives to search out, continued their journey.

Many kind and feeling friends along the road, although entire strangers, most earnestly entreated us to abandon the idea of settling in Ottertail County without an army to protect us. Otherwise, they said, the entire company, men, women, and children, would be massacred by the Indians. They cited us to the horrible scenes at New Ulm, and elsewhere, and indeed, we could not blame them for being so dreadfully scared. To their kind entreaties we listened with due respect and feelings of sympathy, but meantime endeavored to allay their fears by expressing our belief that all would be right and no dreadful calamity befall the people. Nevertheless our move seems to have been watched with considerable interest, and many have wondered how we managed to live so peaceably among the wild natives. This matter I will explain in its place.

On the last day of July, 1865, the main body of the church arrived at Clitherall Lake. The meeting with friends and relatives, after about ten months separation, was indeed most pleasant and joyful, and we were greatly cheered and comforted at finding the little company one and all in good spirits and on friendly terms with the Indians, who had been their only neighbors. We were also delighted with the location, being pleasantly situated between two lakes, bordering on the north and south and extending the entire length of the beautiful landscape, which had been chosen by the community as a place of settlement for the new colony. But amid our joy we had our sorrows and disappointments. Soon after our arrival, five families more went back to Iowa, and subsequently others moved to Deer Creek, which reduced our settlement to sixteen families. Nevertheless we were not disheartened or swayed from our purpose. We had come to this land in view of making homes for ourselves and families, and if possible, to a little in regard to the promises made to their forefathers, and to encourage them to lay down their weapons of war and live peaceably with all men. And now, kind reader, be not startled when I inform you that our first business, after preparing shelter for the families, was to procure a good interpreter of their own nation, visit the chiefs, and make known our mission and how we desired to live together as neighbors. Many of the tribe were also instructed in like manner, and all appeared to be well pleased with our ideas, proposals, and manner of proceeding, and that we had shown such respect to so many of the chiefs and principal men of the Chippewa nation. One chief remarked that if all the white people would follow our example and carry it out in actions, they never would have cause to fear or apprehend danger or trouble from the red man, and I am inclined to believe that he told the truth. Indeed, from that time forward, they used every endeavor to prevent trespass or acts of injustice being committed by their people upon the settlers, and whenever these bounds were overreached and the chiefs informed, they would invariably come and order such offenders to desist or immediately march on. They even offered to pay all damages where any losses were sustained.

These arrangements, stipulations, and friendly treaties being respected by both parties, kind reader, is one and a very good and grand reason why the Indians and our people so long dwelt together in harmony. Even to this day, when or wherever we meet, the friendly hand is always extended.

A gentleman from St. Paul who, some years ago, visited our settlement, after an inquiry into and a brief relation of these matters, remarked that our manner of dealing with the Indians was a safe and judicious course, and if all new settlers along the frontiers would do likewise there would be no need of armies to protect them. And here I might add that the soldiers, who, up to this date, had been stationed at Fort Ripley, Alexandria, and Pomme de Terre, were very soon discharged or moved further to the west, leaving ample opportunity for the Indians, if forts, guards, and soldiers had hitherto kept them at bay, to now fall upon, murder, and massacre the inhabitants as before, or perpetrate any act of barbarity they desired, or which in their estimate would distinguish them as important and daring braves. But returning to the history.

TRADERS COME NEAR.

Soon after our settlement was established Mr. William McArthur, an Indian trader, brought a small stock of goods to Ottertail City. These he sold to the Indians for furs, deer-skins, etc. Many of these articles the natives exchanged with the settlers for provisions and such things as they had to spare. At length Mr. Giles Peak filled up one of the old, deserted buildings at the same place with dry-goods, groceries, etc., which afforded a chance to get some articles of merchandise without a journey to Alexandria, Sauk Center, or St. Cloud, which heretofore had been our nearest posts.

In making our trips to and from the above named places we generally traveled like the Israelites of old—pitching our tents by the way, but frequently we stopped for the night at Mr. Frank C. Darling's, an early pioneer of this country, and a most worthy and respectable gentleman, and accommodating neighbor; indeed he was about as near a neighbor as we had at that period, living only about forty [?] miles distant. But his friendly acts and neighborly kindness in times of need, established him, in the minds of the people, about twenty-five or thirty miles closer to our settlement. We ever found a welcome to his door, and his board was ever spread with plenty, prepared by his kind, cheerful, and amiable wife, who entertained and made happy her guests with sacred hymns and songs of praise. Under his hospitable roof the weary traveler could find rest and refreshment to the body. But to the subject.

OUR MAIL.

The mail-route having been extended from Brandon, then called Chippewa, to Ottertail City, our mail was carried in the winter time on a singularly constructed sled, drawn by two or three dogs harnessed to the same and attended by a half-breed driver on snow-shoes. In this manner not only the mail but a lone passenger, or sack of flour, or other article if occasion required, was conveyed from point to point.

A BLIZZARD.

About this time an old gentleman by the name of Pierce established a settlement at Rush Lake. This little colony were mostly Germans, of the Catholic order, and in general an honest, industrious, and enterprising people.

The following winter a few of their number, who had been in Sauk Center for provisions, came near perishing while crossing a ten-mile prairie between Leaf Mountain and Clitherall Lake. The snow being very deep, and drifted, they had wandered some distance from the track, but having made their way within sight of the settlement, two or three of our men with fresh teams went to their rescue and helped them into camp.

One of our own members, Mr. William Mason, was frozen to death upon the same prairie, almost within sight of home, and in a blinding snow-storm which occurred before the country had become thickly settled many others also perished.

The two settlements already noticed, with an addition of a few families, who had recently returned to their former homes, composed the entire white population of Ottertail County. Aside from these, and to every point of the compass, we beheld a vast region which had been sacked, marred, and left desolate.

EVIDENCES OF THE MASSACRE.

But a few deserted cabins yet marked the track of the early pioneers. These vacant buildings only tended to make the surroundings appear still more lonely and desolate.

Here we could read the sad tale of the first settlers of Ottertail County. But most sorrowful to relate, many of these are now sleeping in the silent grave, while many others who suffered not, are plowing their fields, and reaping rich harvests from a land which drank the blood of many of the early pioneers, and we sometimes feared that we may have reared our recent and humble structures over the obliterated graves and sacred dust of some poor pilgrim, who in the terrible outbreak had been smitten down by the tomahawk and scalping-knife.

Farther down the Red River Valley could have been seen an isolated building, which had escaped the torch in the time of the raid, and which seems to have been the only cipher left to mark the place where since has been reared the renowned and flourishing city of Fergus Falls.

THEN AND NOW.

But what a contrast. Twenty years ago Ottertail County was a wilderness region, the home and hunting-ground of the red man. No enterprise or advancement in science, no hum of industry, no spacious fields and golden harvests to crown each year as it rolled, no stately mansions to mark the distant plains with rich and tasty architecture, no joyful tokens of civilization throughout the wide expanse, no lowing herds or rattling bell to direct the steps of the weary traveler to the white man's door. All was desolation and loneliness.

But time has wrought wonders and indeed brought many unlooked for changes. The natives have fallen back to their wooded homes; cities, towns, and villages have long since been reared upon their old frequented haunts, the wilderness has become a fruitful field, and the distant plains and fertile valleys, like a well watered garden, yield forth abundant harvests, while enterprise and industry have penetrated the unbroken wilds, and civilization has extended its borders to the far western hills.

THE DECLINING BIRTH-RATE OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

The report of the Royal Commission appointed to report on the decline of the birth-rate in New South Wales is now before us. The commission began its sittings some five or six months ago, and after having examined a large number of witnesses, including doctors, nurses, clergymen, police officers, and statisticians, reports voluminously on the matter.

As there has been, in recent years, a decline in the birth-rate of nearly all the countries of the world, not excepting the United States of America, it may be well to become acquainted with, at least, a partial synopsis of the Royal Commission's report.

It is at once seen that they took in hand an important question. Their inquiry showed at the outset that there had been in the past twenty years an appalling decrease in the birth-rate of the State, and that the decline was still going on. Their investigations narrowed the causes of the decline down to matters over which the people had control. After relating the causes, the report speaks of the effects of the present practices on the well-being of the community as follows:

Having this before us, we caused inquiry to be made unto the statistics of insanity between the years 1870 and 1900. In this remarkable diagram the birth- and insanity-rates for New South Wales and New Zealand are compared; and it will be observed that— 1. There was a continuous slight decline of birth-rate between 1884 and 1889, when a further sudden decline of a very pronounced character, which has continued to the present time, became apparent. 2. The insanity-rate (the rate per one thousand of population who have been legally certified to be insane) was practically constant up to 1893, and since then has been continuously rising. 3. The rise in the insanity-rate did not commence until some four years after the decline in the birth-rate had become strikingly evident.

In New Zealand— 1. The birth-rate has fallen almost continuously since 1878. 2. The insanity-rate has had a slight but uniformly upward tendency since 1874; and this tendency became pronounced in 1878. 3. The pronounced tendency to increase of insanity became evident in the same year as the fall in the birth-rate began. On comparing New Zealand with New South Wales, however, it is seen that both the fall in the birth-rate and the rise in the insanity-rate have been of greater intensity in New Zealand than in New South Wales.

It would seem at first sight that both in New South Wales and New Zealand the movement of the insanity-rate is in some measure related to the decline of the birth-rate. . . . Though the increase of insanity may be to a large extent due to the mental stress of business troubles, there is such a remarkable correspondence between the increase of insanity and the decrease of births that it can not be lightly ignored.

According to the report, insanity follows the willful and unlawful limitation of offspring. Nature wreaks terrible revenge for her outraged laws. Not only is the population diminished, but its physical and moral health is undermined. Nature seems to forget nothing and forgive nothing that is done in opposition to her decrees—she bides her time, sometimes for generations.

A TILT WITH A SABBATARIAN.—No. 1.

BY A. R. CORSON.

I recently received a little roll of reading-matter from a lady in New York, consisting of tracts, and the paper Signs of the Times, published by the Seventh-day Adventists, which was followed by another the next week. I thought "here is an opening; if I do not avail myself of it, I may be condemned for unfaithfulness," so I wrote her a letter, telling her I thanked her for her papers, and found much that was interesting and helpful in them. I told her my faith, and that I was well acquainted with their faith, having read many of their books, tracts, and papers; at one time had the reading of Signs of the Times for two years, but I must say I could not agree with them on all points, especially that we were still under the old Sabbath law given to the Jews; and that I would be glad to exchange literature with her, and I hoped she would give mine as careful a perusal, as she wished me to give hers.

"You asked me," I wrote, "to pass on your tracts 'in the name of Jesus.' My friend, I can not do it 'in the name of Jesus,' as he has given me no authority to so do. If I 'pass them on,' it must be in my own name, unless the Spirit of Christ moves me to do it. Then, and then only, could I pass them on 'in Jesus' name.'" This I intended for a seed-thought and not as a criticism of the tracts.

I soon received a card from her, saying she had fallen and broken her ankle, was suffering much, but as soon as she was able, she would answer my letter fully. She found my letter very interesting, and believed I was sincere, but "tested by the word, the tracts were false in their teaching."

I also received another roll of tracts from her, with a slip of paper on which she had marked some references. So I replied, and furnished her with references, too. She referred to the sixth verse of 1 Corinthians as the only sign of the true church.

I have sent her the following, and hoping that it might reach others who are in danger of being led astray by the sophistry of legalism, I venture to send it abroad. I am not competent, I know, to cope with such great questions; but I have the promise of help, and am trusting the Spirit of truth to guide my pen:

"My Dear Miss Levy: You say 'tested by the word the tracts are false in many ways.' Now, 'tested by the word' I find them true; but not when tested by man's interpretations of the word, that is, if man's interpretations are true, which you know is not always the case. But the living word also speaks, and testifies of this latter-day gospel. We are not confined to the written word alone, for Christ promised that the Comforter, the Spirit of truth should come, and should lead us into all truth, should take of the things of the Father and show them unto us; thus the testimony of Christ is confirmed in us, as it was in the saints of old. He even speaks to us. (Read John 16; notice verse 13.) And I can testify that I have heard the voice of the Spirit, and was directed in a plain, though wonderful way, to cast my lot with these people, who are the true church of God.

"You may, if you will be so kind, mark those passages in the tracts you think false, and send them back to me, unless you wish to keep them. If you care to keep them you may tell me what you consider false.

"You think I am sincere. My friend, I learned long ago that sincerity is not sufficient. Paul was sincere while persecuting the Saints. Christ said the time should come when men should kill the disciples, and think they were doing God service; truth and truth alone truly sanctifies, sincerity in error never saves.

"I did not say I could not pass your tracts along [she so understanding what I wrote], only that I could not do it 'in Jesus' name.' For how can I act in the name of another, without the authority from that other to so do? I can give tracts to others, even of our own publications, with a true desire that they may do good, yet without this is done by the command of Christ dwelling in me by his Spirit, how is it in his name? I do not believe that one word that he directs me to write or to speak, or to give, shall be in vain. The trouble is we (everybody) are too apt to speak, write, and give out tracts on our own responsibility. May God help me to wait for his command before I do anything 'in his name' or claim to do so.

"I love the word of God. His law (not the old Mosaic law which was only the schoolmaster to bring us to Christ; but Christ's perfect law that converts the soul) is my delight day and night. 'The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.' And since I have received the testimony of the Lord concerning his church, I am not afraid to examine all 'proofs' that any one can bring from the word or elsewhere. Though heaven and earth pass away his word shall endure for ever.

"Let me ask you, in all kindness, have you received the Holy Ghost since you believed? Does your gospel of Sabbath-keeping, and soul-sleeping, receive the confirmation which Christ promised should attend the preaching of his gospel,—the gospel of the kingdom? You know that these signs did follow the preaching of this gospel by the apostles whom God sent, in former days. If not with you, what evidence have you that yours is the same gospel? Christ verifies the words of his servants to-day with the same signs when they preach the same gospel.

"Signs alone, though, are not enough, since some of these signs follow false teachers. The magicians worked miracles as well as Moses.

"Since writing the above another roll of tracts has been received; have not yet had time to read them all, but I am interested in the slip of paper you sent with references, and hope you will examine those I send.

"I believe such interchange of opinion is good and helpful, if conducted in the right spirit, even though it may not change either one's views. It certainly ought to promote charity, and disarm prejudice, that 'thief of justice.' The trouble with most so-called Christians is that they will not examine our articles of faith; or if they do, they do so with the intent only of finding fault, just as the infidel attacks the Scriptures. And when infidelity succeeds in destroying God's word, then you may look for this restored gospel to go down under the attacks of orthodoxy, or of other man-made systems, or of all combined.

"I have a brother who is a minister in the Christian Church; he lives in New York State. While I was on a visit to my parents in Pennsylvania this summer he came to see me, but it seemed as if he was very careful to steer the conversation away from religious subjects. He knew my change of faith, as we had corresponded with regard to it, until he failed to reply to my arguments, and finally ceased writing. But in speaking of the Latter Day Saints to my mother he said, 'One thing is certain: the Latter Day Saints have a positive message to deliver, and I wish the orthodox churches all had one as positive.' To which I replied 'Well, they would have, if God had sent them.'

"That is the trouble with orthodoxy, and also with many of the newer sects that have sprung up since the gospel has been restored. They have no commission from God. They get hold of some of these restored truths, as William Miller did, but not accepting them, God permits them to receive strange and strong delusions, that they may believe a lie. There is a case right here in Fulton. A man saw more truth than he was preaching in the Baptist Church, so he withdrew and set up a church of his own, and preached such truths as had been revealed to him, praying for more light, claiming to be willing to accept it from any source. At last one of our apostles came here, and this man rejected him and his message with scorn. The elder said his church would not stand five years; and since he had rejected the truth, he would soon begin to preach strange delusions. This is the fourth year. From an average attendance of three hundred or three hundred and fifty his audience has dwindled down to forty or fifty. Of these there is always a number of outsiders and curiosity seekers. And he is now chasing first one strange delusion then another. He says himself his church is dying, sometimes owns it is dead. And the Spirit that was in it seems entirely to be withdrawn.

"I have worshiped with them for over four years, have watched all these changes, and noted the fulfillment of these prophecies and others by our elders. This preacher was led to see the necessity of authority to baptize other than he received in Babylon, claiming, and claiming truly, that his ordination and baptism received in the Baptist Church was all wrong, since she was as much a daughter of the 'harlot' as any of the other churches; but he refused to listen to those who have the authority, and finally went to one of his own converts, one whom he had himself baptized and ordained while, as he owned, he had no authority to so baptize and ordain, and requested baptism. After thus being rebaptized, he now claims the authority, and insists that all his following must be rebaptized by him or he will refuse to administer the ordinance of the Lord's Supper to them. He so stated in his sermon Sunday morning. At the communion-service that night a large part of his ever small audience was absent. So he said something must be done to further separate them, and spoke of calling a meeting of the few that were there after service, to decide what to do. So I presume they have split again. If so, this throws out all but about twenty-five.

"It saddens me to see it, yet it confirms me in my faith, too, for I see all these things that were predicted by our elders coming true, and I rejoice that we have the Spirit of prophecy, which is the testimony of Jesus.

"Communion with Christ, our head! How, as a body, we should and do rejoice in it, yet we realize that we must walk carefully and abide in the doctrine of Christ, else we shall be cut off. That was what was the matter with the followers of B. Young. He and his associates in that movement ceased to abide in the doctrine of Christ, and were cut off; not by man but by God. They received the strong delusions, and B. Young baptized his following over again into what he called 'the new and everlasting covenant'; a covenant embracing the teachings of polygamy and other evils, all contrary to the doctrine of Christ, and also contrary to the teachings of Joseph Smith, since he taught nothing of the sort, of which fact I have plenty of proof to convince any one who is honestly in search of the truth concerning this.

"But I never could have joined this church, knowing I must suffer reproach, and be separated from the fellowship of all my friends, had not God in his mercy revealed unto me that this was his way. Praise be to his name!

"The gospel comes not to us in 'word only, but in power, in much assurance, and in the Holy Ghost,' and I bless his name more and more that he has called me out of darkness into light, out of bondage into liberty, (not license to do wrong,) out of error into the 'way of truth,' out of the broad road into the straight and narrow one, (that is found by so few,) out of doubt into certainty, out of fear into hope and trust, out of the laborious trying to be a child of God into the actual state of being his child.

"What need I care for the scoffs and sneers of men? The 'way of truth' was the way that should be 'evil spoken of' on the account of some who should depart from it, and 'bring in damnable heresies privily.' Just what B. Young did. He was once in 'the way of truth,' but departed from it. Better for him had he never known it. (See 2 Peter, chapter 2.) You see therein a perfect history, told beforehand, of this church in the last days.

"No other people are spoken evil of on the account of the wrong-doing of some other body. The 'way of truth' was to be 'spoken evil of,' on the account of just such teachings as B. Young and J. C. Bennett and others brought into the church 'privily.'

"I will not say anything about your last tracts, as I have not yet had time to read them. I will say, though, that the Sabbath of the Jews was never commanded to be kept by the Gentiles. Paul the apostle to the Gentiles said that he 'shunned not to declare the whole council of God,' as he was taught it 'by revelation' and not 'of man.' (See Galatians 1:12.) And he also says, 'By the works of the law shall no man be justified.' 'If righteousness comes by the law then Christ is dead in vain.'—Galatians 2:21. 'Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law.'—Galatians 3:13. A law without a penalty is of no worth.

"The law belongs not to the gospel, but was 'added because of transgression' till the seed should come to whom the promise was made. Now this seed was Christ, and the law was but the harsh, stern schoolmaster, to bring us to Christ, and having brought us to Christ, we are free from the law. 'Before faith came,' Paul writes, 'we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed,' which faith frees us from the law, since 'the law is not of faith.' Being baptized into Christ I have put on Christ, (if my baptism or yours is not into Christ then we would not be free from the law,) and having put on Christ, 'as he is, so are we in this world.' He is the Lord of the Sabbath, not the Sabbath lord of him; 'Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath.' If we recognize allegiance to the law, we deny our freedom in Christ, and own that we are still 'children of the bondwoman.'

"'Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?' Oh! with what harsh and severe tones it thunders down the ages. No fires to be built on the Sabbath day; whose should do any work should be cut off from among the people. (See Exodus 31:14, 15.) To pick up a few sticks on the Sabbath day was punishable with death. (See Numbers 25:32-36.) I do thank God we are not under so hard a schoolmaster.

"But the Lord says 'My Sabbaths ye [the Israelites] shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you [the Israelites] throughout your generation, [not the generations of the Gentiles,] that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you [the Israelites].' Sanctify—to set apart, for service, etc. Now the Spirit of truth sanctifies the Christian and sets him apart, (and not the works of the law,) which spirit I pray you may soon receive, but which is not given to them that are under the law but to them who embrace and 'obey the gospel.'

"Note again Exodus 31:17, 'It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever.'

"Now I add some references to the true church as pictured in the word. First, its gifts and blessings, truth as it is in Christ, the Holy Spirit with the gifts of love, joy, peace, temperance, charity, faith, assurance, power, wisdom, and knowledge of God, and many others to the individual member.

"To the church collectively: Word of wisdom, of knowledge, faith that leads to working of miracles, prophecy (which is the testimony of Jesus), discerning of spirits, divers kinds of tongues, interpretations of tongues, helps and governments.

"Pattern of church organization: Christ and his revealed truth, the foundation-rock on which are 'set' the timbers,—the apostles first, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that, (that is, after the church has been built up this far,) miracles, gifts of healing, helps, governments, tongues, etc. And other officers are added as the structure grows. (See ordination of Stephen.)

"God 'sets' these officers and helps in the church; thus a church without them can not be the true church. (See 1 Corinthians 12; Ephesians 4:8-14.)

"Impossible for a church to keep from being 'tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine' unless thus guided by heaven-taught men.

"Ministers of the true church must have a definite call; they can not go out on the commission to the first disciples. Paul did not. Barnabas did not. Timothy did not. Even way back there, so close to the time of that commission, they recognized the need of the individual call.

"The true church will also have the ministering of angels. Paul, and Silas, and Peter, and many others are examples of this. God is no respecter of persons. He did not set the gospel table nineteen hundred years ago, and place all his precious gifts and blessings on it, and let them all be consumed by the early church, leaving nothing for his children in the last days but empty dishes—forms and ceremonies without any power. In his church he keeps the table full.

"I have written much more than I thought to write when I set out, but I never can exhaust the subject, and never tire of it. It is my delight and I rejoice in the goodness of God to make the way of life so clear.

"May his blessing attend this is my prayer, (I believe,) 'in Jesus' name.'

"Yours in the love of truth,

"ALICE R. CORSON."

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Should Latter Day Saints seek to promote their spiritual or temporal welfare by becoming members of secret societies? The writer is emphatically of the opinion that they should not. The teachings of the Bible and the Book of Mormon are opposed to anything of the kind, especially when an oath of allegiance involving the death penalty is administered.

We Latter Day Saints inveigh against the Mormons, or followers of Brigham Young for their secretism, and condemn their institution as apostate because of their polygamy, Adam-god, blood-atonement, and other heretical doctrines culminating in the administration of the death oath by the throat, and yet some are so inconsistent as to subscribe to the same, or a similar oath when becoming Freemasons, Orangemen, or what not.

In this short paper I do not propose to discuss the merits or demerits of the above-mentioned societies further than to prove from the standard books of the church that secret combinations and death oaths are of the Devil and therefore should not be taken or entered into by the free children of God.

"And Satan said unto Cain, Swear unto me by thy throat, and if thou tell it thou shalt die; and swear thy brethren by their heads, and by their living God, that they tell it not; for if they tell it they shall surely die."—Genesis 5:14, Inspired Translation. And Cain said, "Truly I am Mahan, the master of this great secret."—Verse 16. Lamech, the first polygamist, was a member of this secret throat-cutting order, "For, Lamech having entered into a covenant with Satan, after the manner of Cain, wherein he became Master Mahan, master of that great secret, which was administered unto Cain by Satan."—Genesis 5:35, Inspired Translation.

Does that not sound like Master Mason? However, a reference to verse forty will show masonic proclivities: "And among the daughters of men these things were not spoken."—Genesis 5:40. When a covenant is made with death it necessarily and logically follows that machinery to enforce the execution of the penalty exists, if not the oath would be farcical. It was so in the days of Cain and Lamech. "Irad the son of Enoch, having known their secret, began to reveal it unto the sons of Adam; wherefore, Lamech, being angry, slew him, not like unto Cain, his brother Abel for the sake of getting gain, but he slew him for the oath's sake."

Take notice the oath administered was by the "living God" (Genesis 5:14), showing that Satan uses God's name hypocritically for the purpose of giving it (the oath) the appearance of sanctity and thereby deceiving the unwary.

Secret societies of modern times profess to uphold the Bible, but the death oath shows the serpent's trail, and proves that God is not the origin, but Satan. Any disinterested person making a study of the Brighamite apostasy, especially in relation to its secretism, can not fail to see the same hand at work as in Abel and Lamech's time; and pursuing your studies still further you will find it at the back of all secret orders. Turning to the Book of Mormon we find Satan, secretism, whoredom, and murder in close affinity. "But behold, Satan did stir up the hearts of the more part of the Nephites. . . . And it came to pass that they did have their signs, yea, their secret signs, and their secret words; and this that they might distinguish a brother who had entered into the covenant, that whatsoever wickedness his brother should do, he should not be injured by his brother, nor by those who did belong to his band, who had taken this covenant; and thus they might murder, and plunder, and steal, and commit whoredoms, and all manner of wickedness, contrary to the laws of their country, and also the laws of their God; and whosoever of those who belonged to their band, should reveal unto the world of their wickedness and their abominations, should be tried, not according to the laws of their country, but according to the laws of their wickedness."—Book of Mormon, p. 395, small edition.

What a scathing indictment of secretism is found in the above, showing its primary objects are to get gain in an unlawful way and subvert justice by protecting guilty members of the cult.

Any Latter Day Saint who has taken a secret oath which makes him a brother, in or out the lodge room, with infidels, pagans, or what not, and binds him so by virtue of holding some secret in common with them that he may not divulge (even to a brother in Christ) under pain of death, is just as much in apostasy from the true principles of Christ as are the followers of Brigham Young; and should upon discovery of it renounce such as coming from Satan, for consistency demands it and our souls' salvation depends upon it.

The writer recently delivered a discourse on "Brighamite secrets," and a gentleman who is an ex-Freemason was present and subsequently admitted that his knowledge of one gave him the key to the other.

That there is an affinity the writer has no doubt whatever; in proof of which I offer the following points of identity: There are degrees in Mormonism;

so there are in Freemasonry. There are secret signs and grips in Mormonism; so there are in masonry. There is a secret death oath, sworn by the throat, in Mormonism; so there is in masonry. Mormons deny the existence of death penalties and of machinery to execute them; so do Masons.

All who enter into covenant relationship with Christ should be bound together by the strongest of ties, viz., love. But suppose a case where a Saint and a Mason, who is not a Saint, are both in dire distress, and one who is both a Saint and a Mason, has power to succor one and one only; which one will he save, the one whom he is supposed to love as a brother in Christ—a part of Christ's body—or the one he is bound to by oath, who is perhaps an infidel or something worse? If pledges count for anything it would be a sorry predicament for the Saint. Many, no doubt, take this oath innocently, not recognizing the enormity of it, and once committed to it think themselves in honor bound to keep it. The writer does not see it that way, as there can be no sin in breaking faith with the Devil; and who would argue that Herod did rightly in fulfilling his pledges when it involved the heinous sin of decapitating the man of God, John?

Old Saints who have made such covenant should break it, and the shepherds should warn the young against taking any such oath; no matter what inducement may be held out. The Book of Mormon further says: "And now my son, we see that they did not repent; therefore they have been destroyed; and thus far the word of God has been fulfilled; yea, their secret abominations have been brought out of darkness, and made known to us. And now my son, I command you that ye retain all their oaths, and their covenants, and their agreements in their secret abominations; yea, and all their signs . . . ye shall retain from this people, that they know them not, lest peradventure they should fall into darkness also, and be destroyed."—Book of Mormon, p. 305, small edition.

Christ's teaching is light, and is all sufficient for both our temporal and spiritual well-being. "For there is nothing covered which shall not be revealed; neither hid which shall not be known. Therefore, whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light."—Luke 12:2, 3, Inspired Translation. Further: "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret. But all things that are reprov'd are made manifest by the light."—Ephesians 5:11-13. Reader, if you have sought light at the shrine of secretism, beware! for though it may have the appearance of right, it is in reality of satanic origin, and will, with its votaries, be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming.

Much more might be said, but for the present let this suffice: "Walk as children of light."—Ephesians 5: 8.

THE PARENTS' RESPONSIBILITY.

Who will question the assertion of Judge Lindsay of Denver that the fathers and mothers of the nation are responsible for the crowded reformatories and jails? Who will doubt the justice of his proposed remedy—hold the parents responsible for the errors and crimes of the delinquent child?

Judge Lindsay, after showing by statistics that criminality among boys—American-born boys—is increasing at an alarming rate, attributed the condition to the following causes: Incompetent parents; bad surroundings in home neighborhoods; dirty politics in the city police departments, which deprives children of protection; desertion; divorce.

The child is not in any measure responsible for any of these causes. Then why should he alone be punished for the effects? If "the rich boys are debauched by luxury and money," and "the poor boys are often neglected to the extent that they do not get enough nourishment to keep their courage strong," and consequently both classes recruit the criminal ranks, the parents are to blame.

The trouble with the boy of to-day, as pointed out by Judge Lindsay, is that he does not know how to obey. It is the duty of the home, the state, and the church to teach him this fundamental thing. But the first and most pressing duty rests with the parents. And where the parent fails, the state steps in and undertakes the training of the boy.

It would be most interesting to see Judge Lindsay's theory applied. Would he fine or imprison the father or mother who sends a child to the saloon for beer or whisky? Would he punish the father who neglects his boys so that the state has to send him to the parental school or reformatory?

The boy problem is a most serious one. Upon its solution depends the welfare of the nation. But it never will be solved by punishing the boy and letting the really guilty, incompetent parent go scot-free.—Chicago Evening Post, May 14, 1904.

VALUE OF MENTAL TRAINING.

"The young man that improves his time; that improves his mind; that does everything in his power to make himself a larger man, is the man that is going to get elevated. You can hire muscle for nine dollars per week. The average man below his ears is worth nine dollars per week, and I tell you competition in that class is tremendous, every nationality on the face of the globe is in it, and you are likely to be out of a job, but every time you develop that man above his ears, you are elevating him for a higher position, and the higher you get, the less competition. If the average man is seventy per cent, you get up to seventy-five per cent and you are so much farther out of competition. Get up to eighty-five per cent and you are pretty much alone. The farther along, the less competition."

There is certainly no question but that mental training is an important element in the path of success. If young men are willing to exchange a portion of their leisure evenings plus a small amount of money for the mind development that comes from such exchange, the results will certainly prove that it was well worth all the sacrifice involved.—Selected.

DESIRE FOR KNOWLEDGE.

"A desire for knowledge is the natural feeling of mankind, and every human being who seeks to advance will be willing to give all that he has to get knowledge."

It is better for a man to work hard and sacrifice time, energy, and pleasure to get a practical education than to spend his days in aimless toil and debaucheries, and complaining because fortune has turned her back upon him.

Thirty minutes each day, or three hours a week, spent in self-culture on any practical line of business will increase one's earning capacity a hundredfold; in a few years give him a place in the affairs of men that can never be attained by the man who, with no aim in life but to receive his small pittance each week, toils on in the old way, sits at the same old bench that was used by past generations.

Many a man is disappointed and resigns or sulks because he fails to receive what he believes to be a merited promotion, while, as a matter of fact, he has made no effort to fit himself for a better position. It is making one's services indispensable to his employer and being always prepared to assume the responsibilities of a higher position that brings promotion, and these qualities can only be acquired by hard study. There never was a time when, in a business sense, the survival of the fittest prevailed to such an extent as it does now, nor has there ever been a time when the opportunities for a young man to acquire knowledge upon any particular subject were so abundant. In our own country, with the greatest system of free schools in the world, and with colleges and universities second to none, in almost every city and town of any importance there are night schools where men and boys may pursue almost any line of study at a very small cost.—The Railway Signal.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

One and One Make Two.

A very simple statement—a self-evident fact—but how many of us realize it in its fullness?

I wish I were able to help each one who reads this brief article to understand it in its height, length, and breadth; and, understanding it, to feel so deeply the importance of its simple truth as to be constrained to act upon it.

The first thought it suggests is unity, and what a grand, far-reaching thought this is, strength, power, success, and the assurance of final triumph, all are embraced in unity, while their opposites, weakness, failure, and the assurance of final and utter defeat are sure to follow where unity is lacking.

Again it suggests the thought of addition. Think for a moment how infinitely may be multiplied the resources which are constantly added to. The addition may indeed be small, but if unity prevails the one and one which makes two, will as surely increase as the drops of dew multiply or the first flake of snow which falls will be followed by another and yet another, until mountain, plain, and valley are covered, and preparation is made for overflowing reservoirs to water, beautify, and make fertile the land.

By the opposite of addition; the subtraction of resources to which nothing is being added, the opposite of all this follows.

For some years past (as our Advisory Board has stated to you) the desire has existed to establish a home for children. A home in which those deprived of the care of fathers and mothers of their own may be sheltered and cared for, brought up in the faith of the restored gospel, educated and fitted to become honorable and useful men and women, and from which they shall be sent out not only to occupy places of usefulness, but to carry out the principle that "one and one make two."

By this I mean that they shall be fitted to take their places in the ranks, fighting the battles of King Immanuel and exerting for God and truth every atom of influence they possess.

Oh, how the church has suffered herself to be robbed of her children in the years that are gone! Many of her fairest and brightest have wandered from the fold because their environments were of such an opposing nature that they did not have the strength of will sufficient to withstand them.

But of late years she is bestirring herself in this direction. She now has not only her own Sabbath-schools, but her own literature in those schools, and an effort is being made—which we pray God to crown with success—to bring about a more thorough preparation of her Sabbath-school teachers for the faithful and intelligent discharge of the great responsibility resting upon them.

In her Religion she is teaching the young to help roll away the condemnation which rests upon Zion by remembering to study the Book of Mormon, and to conform their lives to its teachings. Not only this, she has her institution of higher learning in which may be obtained all such advantages as thoughtful parents desire their children to possess. She has also her home for the aged, but as yet no provision has been made for gathering in of the children who are homeless, and providing for both their spiritual and temporal wants. This work seems to have been left for the Daughters of Zion, and this, after taking counsel with and obtaining the cordial indorsement of the proper church authorities, they have now undertaken.

At the present time, however, their effort is to be confined to "gathering up the fragments," for these other works we have just enumerated must have the precedence until such times as they are free and unencumbered. But this fact so far from proving a discouragement will, if we rightly regard it, be rather an incentive to action.

Dear Readers of the Column: Fearing lest our expected return to America may prevent some from writing, I will say that at present we have no knowledge of when we can go, on account of business matters of the church here, as well as lack of means to purchase our tickets. At present our church financial affairs out here seem to be at a strange standstill, but it will not always be so.

We had been delighting ourselves, as well as those at home, with the expectation of a joyful family reunion during the coming holidays, a treat that we have looked forward to for many years, but only once have we enjoyed such, and that was the first Christmas after our arrival from Australia fifteen years ago. Therefore I have been improving my spare moments in making little notions for a family tree, knowing there would not be an opportunity to do so after we got home. And the children and grandchildren were in joyful expectation, hoping each month that we would surprise them by coming sooner than we anticipated. Then again, I had become so weary of the mental strain of trying to write and talk in this language; it tires me more than my work. And tired, also, of going to these foreign meetings, hearing only inarticulate sounds, and native singing that to me quenches, rather than draws the Spirit except upon rare occasions. And when feeling well, spiritually, I am as a caged bird that wants to soar above its cage, upward, upward, as far as its tiny wings have power to bear it in God's pure air of liberty, but could only beat against the bars that restrained it and drop to the floor again. In like manner I have so often wanted the liberty of my mother tongue to speak of the goodness of God, to speak of things as deep, as high as my understanding comprehended in things divine, but find myself continuously hedged about, by the lack of knowledge of words in this language to express my thoughts; they must be suppressed, and swallowed down again, until I have almost lost the desire to bear testimony. So in that respect, also, I looked longingly towards our native land and home folks. Yet when we saw that we could not soon go, that we must give up once more the anticipated joys of the Christmas-tide, what was the effect! A feeling so peaceful rested upon me that I really felt pleased, felt that for some reason it was best. And the days since that time have seemed more bright, and been more pleasantly spent, with the exception of about two when our troubles here seemed to press heavily upon us; and again yesterday when the mail came, the letters from our children made us wish to be with them. I believe I was more homesick than I have been since we came here, but it will pass away again, and as far as possible we will resist the feeling of depression and embrace faith instead, knowing that man's necessity is still God's opportunity. And we have very much to be thankful for, both in regard to ourselves here and our children at home. All are spared to us, and all are well, and I am confident that when our work is done here the way will be open to us to return. I am not weary of all things here, neither in the work nor in the surroundings. I have not lost any of my former appreciation of the natural scenery. The island is beautiful, as is also the deep blue ocean. There is much of the inanimate that I shall be sorry to leave, never to feast my eyes on again; and many of the Saints also that I shall be sorry to leave.

Of late, or during the past month, there has been very much sickness in and around Papeete,—a fever, they call it typhoid fever; very many have died because of it. Our people here at Tarona have nearly all been seized with it, one after another, but through the blessing of God, both in administrations and other efforts, it was broken up within twenty-four hours with all except one little boy of Alfred Sanford's. His lasted eight days, went to his brain, and he was very low; but no doctor was called. We nursed him through; and contrary to the expectations of many, he lived. None, yet, of the Saints here have died, for which we feel so thankful. A young sister of Teiona was brought to us in the night, not a week ago, for administration and nursing. She was then very sick and had been for several days. To-day she returned home all right again. I think the epidemic is about over now; since the unnatural coldness has gone out of the air, and it is more like its Tahitian self.

Whew! Hard on the Visitor.

The home department can provide for a real need in the lives of many aged ones who by long and faithful service have earned the right to some consideration and attention from the church which they can no longer attend. In an elegant home I met a lovely old lady. She said to me: "I attended Sunday-school regularly for fifty-nine years, and when I became too feeble to go, I joined the home department because I wanted to keep in touch with the school. I thought it would be pleasant to have a visitor call on me and tell me all the news of the church and Sunday-school, and bring me the Quarterly but I have been so disappointed. The visitor usually sends the Quarterly by some one else, and I rarely ever see her face. I should appreciate it so much if she would come and sit with me a few minutes each quarter." Here was a rich woman, surrounded by all the luxuries that money could buy, yet longing for a call from a Christian woman.—Baptist Superintendent.

The Teacher's Reward.

Reward, according to Webster, may be defined as "the fruit of one's labor or works." It is with this special meaning that the word is used here.

What then is the fruit of the labor or works of the Sunday-school teacher?

Often it may seem discouraging enough. To give of one's best thought in order to make a lesson interesting and helpful, and to meet with apparent lack of appreciation, and to continue in the same course week after week, without any apparent results—this is perhaps a not uncommon experience with the average Sunday-school teacher.

But to conclude at once, or at all, from such apparent lack of results, that the work is without reward, is surely a great mistake.

The result of the teacher's work is not something that can be tabulated by any of us at the close of a given lesson, or at the close of a given quarter's lessons. We are engaged in the work of forming and molding character—the one possession that is of the greatest possible value in this world, and the only possession that can be taken into the next. We are, in fact, helping our scholars to lay up for themselves treasure in heaven. And just because this treasure is to abide for ever, it must of necessity, be built up very slowly and very surely.

The beautiful buildings which adorn our world expositions of the present age, are erected in a very short time, and easily made to resemble permanent structures. Then, as soon as the special purpose for which they were erected has been accomplished, they are taken down and destroyed. But the great pyramids of Egypt, which were intended to be as nearly everlasting as man could make them, must have been reared up very slowly, for each of the great blocks of stone had to be carefully fitted for its own particular place in the structure. No doubt the onlookers, and probably the workmen themselves, thought that very little was being accomplished from week to week; but the master builder knew, and carried the work steadily forward to its completion. And now after thousands of years they remain standing to-day, in just as permanent a form as when first completed.

The Sunday-school teacher also, is engaged in a work which is to be not only as permanent as man can make it, but what is much more important for all of us to remember, as permanent as God can make it. He is the Master builder, and we are the workmen. We may not be able to see the end from the beginning; but assuredly he does, and therefore, although our work may seem to us, at times, to count for little or nothing, every smallest portion which is done according to his plan must have its permanent place in helping to bring about the desired results. There can be no doubt whatever about this. "There shall never be one lost good." "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—The Teacher's Monthly.

To the Home Department Superintendent.

The following letter from Bro. Charles A. Gurwell to the home department superintendent was intended as a private report or letter but we think all will be interested in the progress the work is making in his district, and hope that it may tend to stimulate others to more and better work.—EDITOR.

745 West Adams Street, CHICAGO, Illinois, October 21, 1904.

MRS. EMMA HOUGAS,

Superintendent Home Department.

Henderson, Iowa.

Dear Sister Hougas: Since the close of our reunion at Plano, Illinois, in September, I have been so extremely busy that I have not reported to "headquarters." I requested the secretary to send report for publication, but as the papers of this week contain the conference minutes and not our Sunday-school report I fear she failed to do so, or it has been laid over or lost. Hence, I send you a report of what has been accomplished thus far.

A greater interest has been aroused in the work of the Sunday-school and especially in the study of the word. The home department is in excellent condition for the short time that I have been working along that line. I took every occasion to speak of it that presented, and made occasion if none was afforded. Bro. James C. Page, of 618 Main Street, Dekalb, Illinois, agreed to take up the work and I appointed him superintendent of the home department for this district, (the North-eastern Illinois.) I saw him last Sunday and learned that in addition to what I had accomplished he has added to the number enrolled until I think there must be nearly sixty, now, studying in the district. Visitors are appointed in Plano, (Sr. F. M. Cooper,) Wilmington, (Bro. Elmer Kahlor,) and I shall act for Chicago. There are three schools here, and I intend visiting one next Sunday, and will try to secure a visitor for the Central Sunday-school, and, as soon as I can, do the same for the West Pullman Sunday-school.

You will have read in the conference minutes that we were able to secure for the next reunion, which is to be held at Plano, the afternoons of Wednesday and Friday and Friday evening. This is a gain of one afternoon, and was secured largely by the aid of our Bro. Gunsolley, who was with us and rendered valuable assistance in the cause.

Our next conference meets in Chicago, in February, with the Central Branch, and instead of Friday afternoon and evening for the Sunday-school and Religio, as has always been the custom, we are to meet at ten o'clock Friday.

In my previous Sunday-school work I have been accustomed to a two-day and evening session, and the idea of simply meeting in the afternoon and electing officers to hold the next election with, seemed ridiculous to me. The finest machine in the world will accomplish nothing unless it is put to work; so with an organization. What is the use of any organization unless it accomplishes something? The church of Jesus Christ is one of the finest organizations in the universe. It is perfect, for it was made by a perfect workman. It is so constituted as to provide labor for many. There is work to be done, the weak to be strengthened, the poor to be fed, and all are provided for in his church.

As the Sunday-school is a "school," it is intended as a place of instruction where all may learn, and as "iron sharpeneth iron, so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend," we ought to meet to sharpen each other's countenances as often as possible; for every one knows that none of us are any too "sharp." Besides if we have such, they should be permitted an opportunity to impart to their less keen fellows.

So for our next district convention it is hoped that we may have some institute work that will help us all on the way.

The "Programs" for "Parents' Day" and also for the three conventions, sent out recently by Bro. Hougas, have been received, and I have written the secretary for the list of superintendents in the district with a view to having the plan carried out by as many as can, or may be induced to try to do so. We shall do so here at First Branch. I shall also try to have at least one convention of the three Sunday-schools here in the city.

Please ask Bro. Hougas to send me a dozen more of the convention programs, and I should like a half dozen of the letter to the district superintendent, if he has them to spare.

The leaflets on Daughters of Zion work, I turned over to Sr. C. J. Clark, general treasurer, whom I learned was such after reaching the grounds. I rendered her such assistance as I could, by arranging for a meeting at which she presented the work to a small number, and the seed is sown. But as this is the first reunion ever held in the district, and the "whole business" was new to most all of the Saints, it will take some time to educate them to the needs of other people, and many of them to their own needs, and the means of supplying them.

I am greatly encouraged by the outlook in this district. There has been a great awakening and I look for great things to be done by the instruments at work in the district now. The Religio is likely to take on new life. And with a live home department, in both Sunday-school and Religio, there is sure to be results that will make to the glory of God and the upbuilding of his cause in our midst. "The entrance of thy words giveth light," says the Psalmist. And the Lord says, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." No one can study the word carefully and prayerfully without being strengthened and made more zealous in the Master's service. My whole purpose in this work is to secure a more earnest study of his word, that all may be able to say "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee."

I ask you that as he has given me this work to do in this field as a colaborer with you, that you will remember me in prayer that I may be found worthy at the last day to enter in through the gates into the city, and sit down at the marriage supper of the Lamb. I pray for you as our leader, and also Bro. Hougas.

Your brother in the hope of the gospel,

CHARLES A. GURWELL.

The Sunday-School Lesson for November 6, 1904.

SAINTS SHOULD PARTAKE OF THE DIVINE NATURE.

Golden Text.—"If ye do these things, ye shall never fall."—2 Peter 1: 10.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

The writer of this column of the Sunday-school Department recently received a letter from a distant worker asking that we continue to sketch the contents of the lessons of the week.

The senior lesson of this week is based on the first eleven verses of the second letter of Peter. The most prominent thought in it is found in verse 4, where we read that saints are required to become partakers of the divine nature. Verses 5, 6, and 7 make special mention of the qualities of character that must be cultivated to make us Christlike. In verse 10 we are assured that, if we do these things, we shall never fall. This is the language of the golden text. Verse 11 promises us that the cultivation of the virtues of good character shall entitle us to an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God.

These are the thoughts enlarged upon in the senior lesson. The memory verse warns us to give diligence to make our calling and election sure. We are to be diligent in working out the spiritual perfection suggested in the lesson text.

The first intermediate lesson contains the statement in its introduction that Peter taught that saints must become like Christ. The questions begin with verse 5 and call attention to the virtues we must seek to cultivate. The notes are to assist the children in understanding the meaning of the scriptural language.

The advanced intermediate work cites us to a passage in the Book of Mormon in which Nephi assures us that, after we have entered into the straight and narrow way, it is necessary for us to press forward. Not many questions are asked in this division of the lesson, but opportunity is given the teacher to talk with the pupils on the necessity of our going forward after having entered into the church and of developing in the truth.

If you will read the verses of the lesson text, you will see at once that it would be difficult to make anything like a story out of the material offered us in the verses. We were compelled, therefore, to introduce into the lesson the picture of a path, straight and narrow, which leads to the home of the great King. From this we show the necessity of continuing to the end of that path in order to enter into the glory of the King's home.

The latter part of the lesson introduces the thought found in the higher lessons, that we must become like God; it also tells us how to become like him.

The test exercises are not alike in the intermediate and primary lessons this week.

In your closing exercises, perhaps you have some bright intermediate pupil who can read the test exercise before the school. And you may have a primary teacher and class who can read together the Children's Review in the second primary lesson, the teacher reading the printed words and the children filling in the missing words. If you follow this with a few pointed questions on the leading thoughts of the lesson, call attention to the subject of the lesson, the golden text and memory verse, you will have brought out the leading points in the lesson.

A VISIT TO JERUSALEM.

At St. Louis last week the writer visited the city of Jerusalem, and the readers of this column may be interested in some of the things that were seen there.

Once inside the wall surrounding the city, we were in what the guides and some returned travelers from the Holy Land tell us is a quite faithful representation of the present Jerusalem.

Some visitors to the great fair who went through the city of Jerusalem pronounced it not good, and we must admit that, if one is looking for beauty, for that which will please the eye or gladden the heart with a sense of satisfaction, he will not find it in the crowded, unprogressive city, with its narrow, dirty streets in which the people have room to go only on foot.

But, if one is interested in the past history of the city, if he is looking forward to a better future for it, he may feel himself repaid at the end of a dusty and somewhat hurried tour of Jerusalem and may pronounce it good, and afterward, when he is again outside the walls, surrounded by the wonders of the world's achievements to-day in those buildings where the nations have brought together for comparison their best productions, he may find himself thinking again of the downtrodden city and wondering how long it will be until the summons shall come to it, "Shake thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem; loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion."

He may find himself wondering what changes must yet take place in the world before the message shall come, "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city; for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean."

But they are there now, and apparently with one thought, to make money. In this respect, however, they may not be out of harmony with the rest of the great world.

We were guided through the uneven streets of the city to the wailing place of the Jews, a stone wall where the people assemble to weep for the destruction of the temple, the dispersion of their nation, and the subjugation of their city. There they pray to Jehovah for the deliverance that, in the Lord's time, will come.

We were conducted to the spot where the temple is said to have stood. A Turkish mosque stands there now, a representation of which we saw. We followed at a rapid pace through the street called Via Dolorosa, the street of sorrows, where Christ bore his heavy cross and fainted beneath its weight. We hurried along the dusty way to keep in sight of the red fez of our guide, but we thought of the rabble that went down that way centuries ago in the wake of the Man of Sorrows following from curiosity and of the faithful ones who followed him from love. And afterwards we remembered the saying of Jesus, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me. And now for a man to take up his cross, is to deny himself all ungodliness, and every worldly lust, and keep my commandments."

We followed to Calvary and the art of man enabled us to look upon a scene conceived to be like that great one when he was lifted up who, according to his own word, will draw all men to him.

And that scene upon which we looked, was it a scene of defeat? No, but of victory; for those silent lips seemed still to say, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." He who is drawing mankind to himself is lifting our thoughts and aspirations higher than the things of this world and is helping us to see that he is always the victor who abides in the truth. No man is ever defeated until he is overcome of evil. To the worldly throng he may seem to be defeated when humiliation is heaped upon him, or he may seem to be a victor when he is crowned with honors at the hands of men, but, in reality, he is always a victor while he abides in the truth; he is never a victor when he falls away from the truth, even though men should be loud in proclaiming his praises.

The Victor who hung upon Calvary's cross prized loyalty to truth above his own life; he left also to his disciples the warning, "Break not my commandments for to save your lives."

MALAD CITY, Idaho, October 20, 1904.

Editors Herald: While reading the valuable letters and articles in the HERALD I thought possibly it might interest some to hear a word from this part of the world. While we have nothing of a very encouraging nature to report, yet we have this consolation: If we are faithful the Lord will bless us. Therefore I desire to be a follower of Jesus. While I realize that it means the putting aside of the things of this world, I count it all joy. I desire the prayers of the Saints that I may continue faithful.

In gospel bonds,

ELIAS E. RICHARDS.

IONE, California, October 19, 1904.

Editors Herald: I was thankful to see in the HERALD, October 5 and the Ensign, October 6, that the Saints in the reunions in Iowa are not slow, but that their actions are appreciated and praised by the citizens of Missouri Valley, Iowa, and by both the citizens and mayor of Dow City. This is very encouraging to us, and I think it will be to those seeking the right way. It gives me much happiness to attend such reunions or camp-meetings.

I am also thankful that Sr. Lillie E. Smith has written as she did in the HERALD of October 5. Please let her and others write more. I knew a sister that married out of the church, and her husband would not let her take the HERALD or Ensign; he burned them up. She lives about twenty-five miles from Sacramento Branch, and never gets to meeting. I think none of the ministry know her. I called several times to see them when I worked in that part; she told me to not mention the church to him, that he would not let an elder come there; that she had to do a good many things to keep peace in the family. When she married she prayed that she might never have any children of her own. This was wrong. It happened that she never had any, and never had any health either. Later in life they adopted a girl, who is an old maid now, and just as bitter against the church or religion as her stepfather is. Although we are all friends, and the sister loves to chat on church matters, she is the most sober and sad-looking woman I ever saw. I am a member far from the branch also, and the question often comes up in my mind, "Will the branch officers ever visit all the members of the branch and teach them to pray, etc." I know some that never pray. May God help such to see their duty and do it; and obey him better.

Yours in the gospel,

EDWIN T. DAWSON.

BEVIER, Missouri, October 24, 1904.

Dear Herald: It has been quite a long time since a letter appeared in your precious pages from us, nevertheless our silence is no evidence that we are dead spiritually; for we are still battling in the conflict, and desire to continue the fight until the victory is won. I wish to inform you of that which we are doing at Bevier. One of our chief efforts at present is the erection of a new chapel of the modern style, which from present appearance will excel in beauty all the other churches in our little city. One more day's work will square up the walls. Much credit is due to the building committee, consisting of W. B. Richards, president; J. L. Williams, secretary; and F. T. Mussell. Suffice it to say that they are three hustlers, doing their work well, to the satisfaction of those appointing them. We are also indebted to Elder Arthur Allen, of Holden, Missouri, as our architect to help us in drawing up the plans, formulated by the committee, besides saving between two and three hundred dollars in our lumber bill. The Bevier Saints appreciate his good service. May God bless him for his faithful work.

The saints of Bevier Branch have done well financially, with much sacrifice on their part. It seems that all are interested, and pulling together with little exception. We think God is blessing the efforts put forth. Several of the brethren have donated labor, and they were not afraid to work either, and considering everything we have done well so far; but the pressure is felt more at present as our funds are being exhausted. We agree with Bishop E. L. Kelley, to be cautious in not going beyond our means. As our building is nearing its completion more sacrifice is demanded of the Bevier Saints, and in their behalf I appeal to the Saints in general to help us out financially. A little mite from many will not be a burden on any one; and when added together will amount to quite a large sum of money. Donations may be sent to the building committee as above named; either one of them will receipt promptly. Before I close I venture to say that Bevier will have a church-building of which Latter Day Saints may be proud; and the traveling missionaries will not have it to say, (as they always did of the old church-building,) "Why not change your location, and build in a more suitable place"; for we have done it, and God will surely bless our efforts. Wishing the good work God-speed, I remain as ever,

Your brother in the gospel,
J. T. WILLIAMS.

Editors Herald: I believe this latter-day work is attributed to our Father which is in heaven. The work is spreading fast and the missionaries are at work in this district. Many calls for preaching in Indiana, but few places to hold meeting. The people shut the schoolhouses against us as a religious body, they say, because our doctrine is spurious. If we had churches of our own we would soon gather out the people who belong to the Lord. The world is asleep in regard to the coming of Christ to reign on the earth, and the Saints are not as active in some of the branches as they ought to be. Saints, let us get down to business and do all we can to advance this latter-day work. The enemy is trying to hinder the progress in this Southern Indiana District. Saints, where there is union there is strength. Let us humble ourselves. That is the safest place for us to occupy in this life. God wants tried people. Shutting doors against the Saints is one way of trying their faith and patience. There is too much indolence among the officers in the different branches.

P. A. FLINN.

COTTAGE GROVE, Oregon.

Editors Herald: I can not forbear writing a few words as a tribute to the rarely beautiful life of Grandma Oliver. She was a living object-lesson in faith and holy living to all with whom she came in contact, and especially unto them which are of the "household of faith." With one hand crippled from infancy by a terrible burn, she yet lived a life of active labor and reared a family to call her blessed; reminded on every side by mementos of her busy hands, even into her last illness; throughout which her greatest regret was that she could no longer engage in the activities of her lifetime.

Having been for many years almost totally deaf, conversation with her was very difficult, and I never learned many things which I greatly desired to know; but she has been to me a marvel ever since I knew her because of her faith in the latter-day work, which never faltered all through the years of church disorganization, though living part of the time in Utah. She did not learn of the Reorganization for several years, but her faith never wavered though entirely isolated, as she was after coming to Oregon; and with what joy she learned of it can only be realized by those similarly situated. The exact date of her baptism I can not give, but I know her membership was "as old as the church," and from that time till she folded her busy hands for ever she was instant in every good word and work.

When she lived in the country she used to make up her church papers into bundles and drop them in the public road (when she could not give them personally to any one) hoping and praying that they might be found by some one who would read and heed their message. Who shall say how much good they may have done?

A few nights before she died she talked for over an hour to her grandson, who was watching with her, upon the supreme importance of obtaining eternal life; and during the day she sat up and sang all of that song so dear to the Saints, "How firm a foundation."

Cut off by her deafness from much communication with others, she gave much time to meditation, which left its imprint in her countenance, until as she lay in her casket, the frequent comment was, "She looks like an innocent child."

Her greatest trial was her isolation, and her dear old eyes grew dim with longing to "see an elder"; and whenever I went in to see her, the first question would be, "Have you heard anything from the elders?" And when I was obliged to answer, "No," a look of patient resignation would come over her face as she replied, "Well, maybe they'll come sometime; but we must be faithful and learn all we can so that we will be ready when the Master calls us."

Two nights before she died I was watching with her and twice while preparing for the night she said, "Now I don't hear even as well as I used to; and if I make an improper answer to-night don't be offended, because I do not always understand what is said and I may not answer right,"—so careful not to give offense that in the midst of her age and pain and weakness she yet apologized for an unintentional offense before it was committed.

This was a sample incident in a life which has been and will continue to be a benediction to all who knew her.

Thus, full of years and honor she awaits in peace the trumpet-sound which shall call to life "the dead who die in the Lord." "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

Yours in hope,
LOUISE A. DESPAIN.

FANNING, Kansas, October 27, 1904.

Editors Herald: Master Time in his onward march brings varied scenes and changes to us all, more to some than to others. Elder J. D. McClure, of Christian fame, recently gave three lectures against the Latter Day Saints, and their belief, three miles from Fanning. He has printed, to post, challenges to meet any Latter Day Saint minister. The challenges are unfair, worded to catch the public sympathy, but when critically examined so unfair that it really shows cowardice on the part of the representatives of the Christian (Campbellite) Church. We are not asleep while he is working.

He who doeth all things well gave us a sweet little girl babe, born August 3, to remain with us until October 15, when we could only bow and say with one of old, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord"; and thus we travel on in hopes of again being with our little Norma Lucile.

I performed a ceremony October 5 in which Mr. Thomas Hennis and Miss Mary Hale were united in wedlock; then was called to Western Kansas and on the 18th inst., a similar ceremony in triplet number, which informed, alternately, Mr. Albert Phares and Miss Hermedia Kueffer, Bro. Herman Kueffer and Miss Emma Dowacker, Bro. Otto Kueffer and Miss Islettie Gish, that they were husband and wife. They all are to attend the Exposition at St. Louis together, then locate here and there to assist in shaping the destiny of a nation.

Though tried in our sad loss we press on in the great latter-day work with perfect confidence of its final accomplishment as foretold by the prophets, therefore rest in hope, and labor for glory, immortality, and eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Hopefully,
L. G. GURWELL.

ZEARING, Illinois, October 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: As we are of isolated ones, we never have the opportunity of hearing any preaching, except through the Ensign and HERALD. Thank the Master that we are able to take these and to keep ourselves posted through them as to how the church and members are prospering in these latter days. I was made to rejoice when I read the article in the last HERALD from Bro. Gunsolley in regard to consecration. I do not possess much of this world's goods, but what little I earn I rejoice to give what I possibly can to the church, as I feel the church is my home here on earth, and it is my heart's desire to see all of my brothers and sisters have just as much as myself; for what comfort is there to me to have plenty and see my brother and sister have nothing? I think I would not enjoy it very much as I read in the records God means for his people to be in unity temporally as well as spiritually; and if Zion is to be built up according to the pattern that God has laid down, we as a people will have to sacrifice, ourselves, to build it up according to the pattern that God has formed for us. For one, when I have one dollar besides my living that I can spare, it goes to the church, and I do not want anything extra that my brother and sister have not, for they are my people here on the earth, and I pray that I may be with them over on the other side. My desire is to see this gospel preached to all, and that the elders may be able to go forth and preach the glad tidings of great joy to those that know not God. For the gospel is a joy unto me, and my desire is that others may have a chance to partake of the same, as well as myself. Hoping that we may be visited by some of the elders soon, and that God will bless his people wherever they may be, and that we may all stand before the just Judge and obtain that glorious reward that is promised to the faithful, I am,

Your brother in bonds,
Z. M. SANTEE.

DOWN, Kansas, October 25, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am still in the faith and trying to do my Master's will. I know this is the true work of God. I intend to try to do more for the gospel work than I ever have before. We have preaching and prayer-meeting about nine miles from here once a month. I try to attend all the meetings. It is hard for the Saints to get out to meeting here,—they live so far apart, and it seems to me as though the Saints are not interested enough in the church-work, and do not care enough about going to church and trying to do their part; then, if others go and make a mistake are ready to talk about them. Saints, we should be careful about what we do or say; none of us are free from mistakes. Let us all try to do better. I want to try to live better than I have. Pray for me, dear Saints.

Your sister in Christ,
MISS MYRTLE COOP.

SAWYER, Indian Territory, October 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: This leaves me in my field hard at work. I have been preaching the gospel now so many years that it seems a rest would be glorious, awhile, at home with my wife and two boys. But, oh, when will the rest come? In the by and by. This Indian Territory is a new field and affords splendid opportunities for gospel-work. Doors are open in many places for preaching; but other churches are trying hard to get established here, therefore we have plenty of opposition.

I have just closed a fine meeting at Swink, Indian Territory; fine interest to the close. I treated the people kindly, said nothing about their churches, but held up Christ and the truth to them. The last Sunday two preachers were with me, a Free-will Baptist, who treated me nicely and kindly; also a Holiness who tried to demur against me, but failed. I warned him that the latter-day work was a message from heaven, and left him.

The Christian or Campbellite people at Swink challenged me for a debate. I told them I had assailed no one, but was ready to defend the truth. I left them trying to get a man to meet me later. I have held two debates this year in my field.

I came to this place Monday, found a Baptist brother here preaching in our house. We preached Monday night on adding to and taking from the Bible, which drew the fire. Bro. Potts, Baptist, replied to me next night, and personally attacked us. I did not hesitate to skin him with the truth. He challenged me for a debate to take place in January, 1905.

I have held forty debates and would like some one to give me a rest. I can feel my constitution giving way under hard debating; but as long as God gives me strength to preach it, I will stand by it when assailed. When I received thirty-five lashes on my back at the hands of an infuriated mob several years ago in Arkansas, I determined then and there to preach it the rest of my life, and to defend it when called upon to do so.

I have been thinking of writing a tract on the relationship of the Indians to the Book of Mormon. Some have urged me to do so. Do not know whether it is opportune yet or not. I can hardly get time to write much, so many calls for preaching. Do not see how I am going to get out of debates unless I quit the field. I believe the Lord will direct for the best.

In bonds,

Independence Items.

The secretary of the branch reception committee has personally to report for the last two weeks many visitors, among them professors, patriarchs, and presidents; also bishops and missionaries from abroad. They are George E. Woolley, high priest, Salt Lake, Mrs. G. E. Woolley, first counselor Mutual Improvement Association of Forest Dale Ward, which meets weekly and in which courses in theology and other work are taken up by the students and workers. Elder Woolley's father, Edwin D. Woolley, who was bishop of the Thirteenth Ward for thirty-five years, made the statement to his son that he heard the prophet Joseph say, "I am going as a lamb to the slaughter"; and this occurred just prior to the martyrdom as he was leaving Mr. Woolley's home.

We entertained, also, Nymphas C. Murdock, high priest and patriarch, who at ten years of age was blessed by the patriarch Hyrum Smith. During his short stay, being accompanied by his wife and a lady friend, he made many interesting remarks which showed him to be quite an outspoken man, sanguine and self-assertive. While speaking of the advocacy of principle, and the foolish following after the traditions of our fathers, he said: "Brigham Young was as liable to err as any other man, and Brighamism will damn more than it will ever save, because it has been abused." He said also: "I have ever advocated the principle that the legal successor ought rightfully to be found in the posterity of the prophet Joseph Smith, and I still believe it, and many, yea thousands in Utah believe it to-day." He mentioned having seen President Joseph Smith at Logan, Utah, and he told us of a little episode which occurred, as he alleged, in reference to sealing, which was in vogue at Nauvoo. Mrs. Lucy Kimball was present at Logan and testified, he said, with these words:—"You have been preaching about your father, Mr. Smith, but I want to say to you that I was his wife, and lived with him as his wife!"

Mrs. Murdock's father, Royal Barney, is a son of Edson Barney, baptized in 1831, who with Freeman Turner, baptized in 1833, were the only two remaining in the Utah church who "came up in Zion's camp." E. Barney, the oldest man living in that church, is nearly in his ninety-ninth year and is living in Provo, being cared for by the bishop, receiving ten dollars per month. Bishop Murdock spoke of John W. Rigdon's conversion to Brighamism with considerable eclat and stated that the old gentleman, now in his seventy-fourth year, had received a strong testimony from his father in his last moments concerning the divinity of the Book of Mormon; but mature age seems to be no guaranty against the evils of tradition, and he, like others of his erring brethren, believes that the prophet Joseph indorsed polygamy.

These are busy days with the Saints here. The approaching cold weather, although we have been enjoying sunshiny days to the full, of late, is a reminder to the sisters to expedite their household work, fall cleaning, pickling and preserving, and remember the poor and the infirm. The Prayer Union and Daughters of Zion, in the absence of their leaders, who have been taking an outing, have continued their meetings as usual, and the church services have been usually well attended.

New faces continually appear, and we now and then hear the voices of the returning elders. We did not, however, hear from President Smith and his good wife as they passed through here a few days ago. Bro. Alexander McCallum is still alive in the work and expressed love for it and desires to accomplish much good. Father Hawley, who has returned to Holden, left with us a short sketch of his earlier days in the church which we will send for your columns later on.

Our faithful and aged brother, A. B. Herman, was called home at three o'clock Saturday, the 15th, and on the following Monday the funeral services were held at the church. He had been a devoted member and always had led an industrious, useful life, having practiced as a physician over thirty years. He leaves a widow who mourns the loss of a kind husband to whom she had been a help and comfort in his declining years. The remains of our young and beloved Sr. Mamie, daughter of Bro. and Sr. J. C. Foss, who died in Santa Cruz, California, was brought home on Tuesday, the 18th, and buried in Mound Grove Cemetery. The funeral sermon was preached by Apostle I. N. White, which was full of sympathy for the bereaved parents and friends and listened to by a large number of the Saints. Mound Grove Cemetery is a fine, high, rolling piece of ground, fringed on the north and west by beautiful wooded lands, the Missouri River flowing at a short distance westward; and on the south and east may be seen the quiet city and its suburban farms, rich with fields of wheat, corn, and other products. It is a lovely spot where our dead may rest in peaceful repose.

On Sunday, the 23d, three hundred and fifty-three, including five visitors, were present at Sunday-school; primaries, one hundred and thirty-five; total collection, six dollars and fifty-seven cents.

The church services and prayer-meeting were well attended, Elders H. O. Smith and J. C. Foss conducting the morning and evening services.

In the afternoon we had a spiritual and comforting prayer-session. Harold Bullard, a young brother from Boston Branch, has been received into membership and a little infant son of Bro. and Sr. S. Roberts, named Paul Nolan, was blessed. A few of the Saints are still under the hand of affliction; but we are happy to hear that some who have been sick have recovered. May the spirit of love fill our hearts and minds and ever prompt us to let our light shine, while being engaged in the Master's service.

Extracts from Letters.

Rillie Moore writes from Necedah, Wisconsin: "Our branch is flourishing. Elders W. A. McDowell and Robinson are holding meetings here, with a good crowd, who seem to be interested."

Elder E. A. Stedman, Bemidji, Minnesota: "Have been here twelve days and preached twelve times, so am not losing much time. Am now eight miles north of Bemidji in the pine-woods. Am feeling better than during the summer months, and shall endeavor to keep busy and do what good I can. Thirty-five years to-day since I was baptized."

Original Poetry.

Thou knowest, O Father.

Another Sabbath passed and gone,
The evening shade comes on.
O Father, have I sought this day,
To glorify thy son?

Have I been pure and undefiled,
In thought and word and deed,
And, meditating on thy truth,
To thy commands paid heed?

Have I fulfilled the covenant made,
At brink of watery grave;

And learned of thee in humble trust,
Thy mighty power to save?

Or have I, heedless of thy love,
And thoughtless of thy care,
Spent all this day in foolish jest
Without one word of prayer?

Thou knowest, Father, every thought,
And all my deeds this day.
Approve the right; forgive the wrong;
For this I humbly pray.

Be One.

Gird up yourselves and be ye strong,
Ye people of the Lord,
Let unity for e'er prevail,
And be of one accord.

"When you are one, then you are mine,
And you shall then receive
The blessing that I have in store
For those that do perceive—

"To keep my laws and honor me,"
The King of heaven has said;
That we may be for ever pure,
And by his Spirit led.

Why should we not the Lord obey,
And his commandments keep;
That when we stand before his throne
There'll be no cause to weep?

Our strength now lies in unity,
And in the power of God,
That we may truly walk the path
Which Christ in meekness trod.

Bishop's Agent's Notice.

To the Saints in Southern Missouri District: As it will be impossible for me to visit each isolated Saint in the district, and the time is drawing to a close when we are expected to pay our proportion of college indebtedness, and our proportion is about 45 cents each member, let us try to raise this amount and prove to Bro. Hilliard that this country has some noble Latter Day Saints, who are not only able to pay their proportions, but will. I shall also be glad to see every Latter Day Saint's name on my tithing-book for this year. Many have responded freely both to tithe and college, yet there are many who are well able to help both in tithing and for Graceland. May each remember the blessing of a good grain and fruit crop, and as Bro. Hilliard thinks the country is not able to grow such crops, then we know God has blessed this part of Zion for the good of the poor and needy. May we each come to the front. Remember my Bishop's agent's book closes the last of December, for the present year. If there are any isolated Saints wanting preaching let me hear from them. H. SPARLING.

R. F. D. 10, SPRINGFIELD, Mo., October 23, 1904.

Tribute to Mrs. Fannie Grenawalt.

Bending to a will that is higher and better than ours, we, the Society of Patronesses of Graceland College, as a body of Christian women seeking the promotion of the good and beautiful in our homes, community, and country, do keenly feel the loss of our sister, Fannie Grenawalt, as a mother, a friend, and a member of this society.

Because of her sudden removal from us we are impressed with the nearness of death unto life and shall seek to be more earnest in our words and work, hoping to be prepared, as was she, should such a call come for us.

Knowing that the hearts who loved her best are bleeding and sore, we tender them our sincere regret that she is gone from us, offering such consolation as words may carry from friend to friend, and resolve to bear them in loving remembrance before the throne of grace.

May they not forget that bright above all shines the hope secured by promise, "We shall meet again."

VIDA E. SMITH.

"MODERN TENDENCIES" is a new department in Autumn Leaves devoted to those phases of modern life that are of especial interest to Latter Day Saints. The three topics treated on in the November number are: "Presidential elections," "A change in the American diet," and "The increase of crime." In this department you get the best thought gleaned from the periodicals of the day, touching subjects of vital interest.

ELDER JAMES MCKIERNAN has written two articles on "Seventies" which have appeared in the November and December Autumn Leaves. They are very interesting and instructive.

DEDICATIONS AT PANA AND TAYLORVILLE, ILLINOIS.

We reached home from the Dow City reunion on the morning of Tuesday, September 27, and on the evening of the 29th were en route for Pana, Illinois. We stayed over night at Burlington, Iowa, and on Friday, the 30th, we made the run from Burlington to Pana via Beardstown, where we were permitted to partake of a dinner provided especially for us by Sr. M. R. Shoemaker, whose husband is in charge of the little flock at Beardstown, but who was at Pana attending the Sunday-school convention, and whom we subsequently met there.

We reached Pana in the afternoon and were met at the train by Brn. R. T. Walters and E. E. Stonger, and Srs. Price and Lily, the sisters being from the Taylorville Branch. Bro. Stonger took us to his residence, 506 South Sheridan Street, where we found our home during our stay at Pana. There was an entertainment of the Religio, at which we were a guest, and witnessed a very nice presentation of the study which had been before the society, with a very nice chart-talk from Bro. Shoemaker, who is quite an adept at chalk-talks. On the morning of Saturday, October 1, we met with the Saints of the district in conference and were of some assistance to them in their deliberations. The minutes have been published and convey all the news of the business portion necessary to mention. By invitation we occupied on Saturday evening, Bro. R. T. Walters having charge of the meeting.

The dedication services were held on Sunday at eleven o'clock. The building is nicely located and is a very neat and tidy structure built by the Saints of the branch, with some little help from their neighbors, at a cost of something less than seven hundred dollars, volunteer and personal labor not estimated. The services were well attended and we took great pleasure in being with the Saints at the splendid consummation of their labors. We here met Brn. F. M. Sharrock, in charge of the branch, J. E. Wildermuth, and W. H. Mannering, the last two named being, with Bro. Walters, the missionary force at work in the Central Illinois District. We spoke again in the evening of Sunday to a fair audience and continued until Wednesday evening, Bro. Wildermuth occupying Monday evening. We left the Saints feeling well and were satisfied that our visit had been productive of good.

Some three or four years ago there were but few Saints in that region, a Sr. Johnson being the oldest resident Saint and one of the most faithful workers the church had. By the efforts of Brn. Luff, Bell, Walters, and others there has been an increase until they have quite a fair branch. So far they have labored together nobly, and from a statement made by a citizen with whom we conversed we learned that the membership were in good repute with their neighbors and with the business men of the city. It is a mining town, and we learned by the late statement in regard to the strike of the hoisting engineers of Illinois that there are some thousand miners employed in the mines of the place; for this number was thrown out of employment by the strike referred to. They are deserving of great credit both for the condition of the branch and for the erection of the little building in which they now worship. Sr. Johnson has five sons and a daughter, who hold allegiance to the faith; and the Stonger family, numbering we do not know how many, make a strong addition to the membership. The elder Bro. and Sr. Stonger insist upon entertaining the eldership who visit the town for either a short or long stay.

From Pana we went to Taylorville on Thursday, October 6; opened meeting that evening and continued until Sunday night, dedication services included. The branch at Taylorville is quite strong and is in charge of Bro. Luther Simpson, a quiet, persistent-spirited man, who believes that men should be seen for what they do rather than for what they say. He has a helpful number of assistants, and together they have built a very comfortable, pleasantly-situated house of worship, easily accessible to the greater number of the brethren of the branch. There are a number of Saints in the branch who have been in the church for a number of years: Bro. Ephraim Jones, Joseph Boswell, Brn. Davis, Stanley, and Lily. Taylorville is also a mining town, there being some five hundred miners at work in the mines there. The vein is some seven to nine feet thick and the miners are fairly paid for their work, subject of course to the fluctuation of loss of labor by strikes, lockouts, etc., resulting from connection of the miners with the unions, which in a sense control not only the mines but the miners.

The city is a thriving, beautiful place. It is the county-seat of Christian County, and they have an excellent-appearing and well-appointed court-house situated in the middle of a block, around which the square forming the business portion of the city is situated. They pride themselves on being an up-to-date city. The Big Four and the Wabash roads give the town a good outlet in every direction. The town is but eighty-five miles from St. Louis and is situated in a fertile region as well as one rich in minerals. The Saints were much pleased with their success in building, which cost them something more than the building at Pana did, but the Saints here as well as the Saints at Pana had their building free from debt.

We have never left a locality where we have been permitted to visit and preach with a better consciousness of leaving the people in good spirit and feeling than we left Pana and Taylorville. We have seldom enjoyed more of the Spirit in the preaching of the word than we did at these places. Though the number of outside attendants was small, those that were present paid excellent attention and we are quite satisfied that good was done at both places. We were the guest of Bro. George L. Hartsell, secretary of the district, who with his young wife lives in their new home adjoining the church on the south and opposite to the home of Bro. Luther Simpson, the acting president of the branch.

In company with Bro. R. T. Walters we left Taylorville for St. Louis on Monday, October 10, and reached our place of temporary abode, being met at the train by Brn. Willard J. Smith and John Lloyd.

Returning from St. Louis we made a stop at Independence, lasting from Thursday, the 20th, until Tuesday, the 25th of October. By agreement with Bro. W. H. Pease, who is looking after the interests of the Armstrong Branch, we visited that branch on Sunday, accompanied by Bro. Rudolph Etzenhouser, who kindly took us in charge to prevent our being lost in the purlieus of the great city, sometimes called Kansas City, U. S. A. We spoke at Armstrong both morning and evening, being privileged to meet a number from the different stations in the city and some few from Independence, Missouri. We here renewed a number of our former acquaintances whom we had met at different times both at Armstrong and elsewhere, and were pleased to meet so cordial a reception as awaited us among them. Bro. Pease has an interesting branch and we believe all are striving earnestly to conduct themselves properly that they may bring no reproach upon the name of Christ which they bear.

We reached home on Tuesday, October 25, feeling quite strengthened and encouraged by our visit. We must not omit having occupied the pulpit at St. Louis the morning and evening of Sunday, the 16th, to large and very attentive congregations. The brethren had taken special pains to advertise our visit, with a result that we had an excellent hearing. The branch is under the efficient presidency of Bro. Russell Archibald, ably assisted by a number of young men of excellent promise and ability. We found Bro. Willard J. Smith, missionary in the city, doing pastoral work, in fair health and excellent spirits, who kindly took us in charge, visited the Fair with us a couple days, and piloted us about the city that we should not get lost; for though we have been more or less familiar with St. Louis from 1864, the rapid and great increase which has taken place with the spread of the city and the revising of their street-car system had taken much of it out of our recollection. The church, nicely located at the conjunction of Glasgow Avenue with Dickson Street, is in an excellent neighborhood and the Saints have taken great pains to embellish the vacant lot lying north of the church-building, so that instead of being a depository for the offal and refuse of the neighborhood, it is a beautiful grass-plot and flower-garden. The building itself is well cared for, and Bro. Willard Smith occupies a room adjoining the main auditorium as his study and living-room, where he is in attendance and at the service of any who may need him, from early morning until midday, after which he is busy with his pastoral duties. He was in charge of the services of Sunday, both morning and evening, by concurrence of the president of the branch. We were pleased to meet a number of visiting brethren from distant localities, among them Brn. Charley Jones, of Pawnee, Missouri, and Bro. John Smith, of Lamoni, who by request offered prayer at the respective services. Bro. Edward C. Bell has a number of young people in his choir service, and the music is an attractive feature of the services. Altogether our visit from home between September 29 and October 25 was to us a pleasant and profitable one, and we trust was of benefit to others.

SEVENTY-SECOND ANNIVERSARY.

Liberty Hall, the home of President Joseph Smith, was the scene of a pleasant gathering on the evening of Monday, the 7th inst., when the children and grandchildren of the immediate family of President Smith gathered themselves together at the family home to celebrate his seventy-second birthday. The date, November 6, coming on Sunday, and he having expected to be absent, the day following was fixed for the celebration.

It is difficult to describe the general and enjoyable features of family gatherings at Liberty Hall—a sort of old-time New England home-coming and feasting with western hospitality combined.

From five to nine o'clock the hours were spent in greetings, reminiscences, music, and song, intermingled with romps and varied programs by the children large and small. A substantial and comfortable lounging jacket was presented to "Father Smith" as a memento, and which he accepted as a well-fitting addition conducive to comfort in general.

This large family has remained unbroken by death during the year, and ere the gathering dispersed, due thanks were rendered to the Father of all mercies for his preserving and loving care. Others besides the immediate family have sent congratulations and good wishes to President Smith, and all Saints will join in the hope and prayer that his life may be greatly lengthened in service to the church and the race.

GRACELAND NOTES.

Bro. J. W. Waldsmith of Nebraska City, Nebraska, Bishop's agent for the Southern Nebraska District, sends in a draft for one hundred and forty-two dollars and fifty cents, final payment of the proportion of that district.

St. Louis, Missouri, District, Bro. R. Archibald, agent, reports having raised its full proportion of college debt, and ten dollars in addition.

Sr. J. Gibbs, of Hiawatha, Kansas, sends an offering for herself and Sr. R. Gibbs and writes: "I hope you will succeed in getting sufficient money. I have not heard a sermon in ten years. There has never been one of our elders here as far as I can learn and I do not see why. Hiawatha has about five thousand inhabitants."

Elder F. M. Slover writes from his field: "I send you one dollar to assist in paying off the college debt as I have a great desire to have my name put on record as having done something to cancel this great debt. If all would do their part right now Graceland would soon be free. Hope that this burden will be removed before the next General Conference.

Bro. Levi Phelps, Farwell, Michigan, writes: "Inclosed find five dollars and fifty cents for Graceland College. This is sent by our family. The children worked and earned that which they send. We never want to see the college closed and hope that it will always be sustained."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In the items from Independence, Missouri, sent in by Sr. Abbie A. Horton, published in HERALD for November 2, 1904, she states that Nymphas C. Murdock, of the Utah church, lately visited Independence, Missouri, and while there "made many interesting remarks." Among these remarks she gives the following: "He mentioned having seen President Joseph Smith at Logan, Utah, and he told us of a little episode which occurred, as he alleged, in reference to sealing, which was in vogue at Nauvoo. Mrs. Lucy Kimball was present at Logan and testified, he said, with these words—'You have been preaching about your father, Mr. Smith, but I want to say to you that I was his wife, and lived with him as his wife.'"

The only things true in the foregoing statement are, that President Joseph Smith was at Logan and preached there, and that Mrs. Lucy Kimball was present at one of those meetings, if not more. The statement that she testified as this Mr. Murdock states, is absolutely untrue. The only conversation that occurred between Mrs. Lucy Kimball and President Joseph Smith was at the close of the last meeting, and was in the presence of Bro. R. J. Anthony, who presented Mrs. Kimball by request. There was no conversation in regard to sealing, or plural marriage, or the wives of Joseph Smith.

On the morning after this meeting, before leaving Logan, in company with Bro. R. J. Anthony, we visited the home of Mrs. Kimball with the intention of having an interview, if she should be willing, but found that she had already gone to her work in the temple, and for that reason we did not see her. It is passing strange that these people will persistently make such assertions, in which there is positively no truth and which a moment's thought would give assurance that the untruth must necessarily be detected. A lie told by a hoary-headed man or woman is no better than one told by a man whose locks are dark as the night. If anything, the one told by the man with the hoary head is worse, because he has less time to repent than the younger man.

Our neighbor of Independence, Missouri, the Evening and Morning Star, seems to find fault with the fact that the city council of Dow City, Iowa, saw fit to pass a commendatory resolution with regard to the Reorganized Church and the reunion lately held in that little burg. Reference to this resolution passed by the Dow City council is published in the Evening and Morning Star for October 15, 1904. It appears in an editorial headed, "Beware of the leaven." In the course of this editorial the following occurs: "Granting that this little handful of 'city fathers' of a little Iowa town reflected public sentiment, what is proven? Is the self-avowed opinion of the city council of Dow City anything for Saints to value? Does the love of the world portend good or evil for those upon whom it bestows itself? It is a danger sign when any church becomes popular with the world. The moment opposition ceases, that moment the church loses its spiritual power."

We regret to see this little reference in the Evening and Morning Star, and believe the space could have been better occupied, for the reason that it betrays an unfortunate animus and defeats its own intention. The fact is, Dow City is situated in a locality originally settled by Latter Day Saints escaping from Nauvoo and other settlements east of the Mississippi River who refused to go farther west and accept the regime of President Young and his associates. There has always been more or less of opposition and continued opprobrium thrown upon the name of Utah Mormon or Latter Day Saint. The Reorganization has labored faithfully by its ministry and its members in all that region of country to overcome the spirit of animosity to the faith, secure the attention of the people, and make the faith honorable in the eyes of honest people. The resolution referred to was accepted by the Reorganized Church in the spirit in which it was offered as a token that the efforts put forth had been at least partially successful. It was a recognition of the good the church had been striving to do and had largely succeeded in doing through that region of country. It was prized by us assembled on the ground and it is prized by the general membership of the church wherever it has gone, for just what it expressed and just what it is worth; nothing more and nothing less.

The Star also says: "It is a danger sign when any church or people responds to flattery, and woe to the church or individual, who feels that 'all is well in Zion.'"

We did not give the resolution as a sign or with the claim that all was well in Zion; and from this evidence of disturbance on the part of the Star, we conclude that the editor feels that all is not well in Zion; for he at least seems to be seriously disgruntled. So far as the Reorganized Church is concerned, there is no fear that either the church itself or the faith which it presents will become popular; and surely we are in no particular danger from the cessation of opposition so long as the Star and its supporters continue in the spirit manifested in this reference to the publication in the HERALD of that Dow City resolution.

On Saturday, October 29, the Editor of the HERALD was thrown from his buggy, lighting upon his head and shoulders, rather roughly shaking him up. The news of this accident has been pretty well scattered and the Editor is receiving cards and letters of commiseration and inquiry expressing hopes that the hurt is not serious. We publish this that the minds of the Saints may be set at rest; for while the Editor was somewhat hurt, he has been able to attend to the most of his duties, though declining to preach on the Sunday after his fall, from necessity, and also declining to visit St. Joseph, where we were expected to be present, for the reason that he thought it not best. However, we beg to assure the Saints that the Editor was able to occupy the local pulpit at Lamoni on the morning of the 6th, and though he had temporarily joined the ranks of the stiffnecked, he was neither hard-hearted nor rebellious, but was quite thankful that he was steadily recovering from the effects of said fall, and is in no special danger of any permanent injury. He thanks the Saints for their solicitude and their prayers in his behalf, and is pleased to know that their friendship in the gospel is of such a character that they are solicitous for his welfare.

IN THE November Autumn Leaves Elder D. R. Baldwin portrays a thunder-storm in the Ozarks during the great drought of 1901. His article is immediately followed by one from Elder W. J. Haworth setting forth the almost indescribable horrors of an Australian drought.

HOPE FOR THE CONDEMNED.

SERMON BY ELDER J. W. WIGHT, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
OCTOBER 30, 1904.

I can not say to-night as I have heard a good many ministers say from this stand, that I am pleased to be here; for if there is any place in the world that frightens me it is before a Lamoni audience, so that from that standpoint it is not a very great pleasure. I do not say that by way of reflection, but you are great critics here, and while I am willing to confess that I like criticism of the proper kind, still it frightens me to be criticised.

The eighteenth chapter of Matthew, eleventh to fourteenth verses inclusive, reads:

For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost. How think ye? if a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray? And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray. Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.

In the parts of my mission where I have been of late they were not satisfied if I quit under an hour, and sometimes an hour and a quarter; but I will make this promise, to-night: It is now half past seven, and I will not keep you longer than four hours. Bro. Gunsolley says I may have all the time I want, but I remember that Paul preached until midnight once, and got a man asleep and he fell out of the window, so I will stop a half hour before that at least.

Now we are told in the eleventh verse here, that Christ came to save that which was lost; and in the fourteenth it says, "Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish."

Men have sought out many inventions; and upon this question of religion they have a great variety of opinions. These opinions differ as men differ; but basing what we may present to-night upon the text that we have taken, we want, from a biblical standpoint, to relieve our Father in heaven, and his Son, of some of the terrible odium that has been placed upon them by good-meaning people from the standpoint of religion.

Some people have told us (and at one time their number was almost legion) that

"Hell is crammed
With infants damned,
Without a day of grace."

And they sung that in so-called sacred song. In contradistinction to that thought I want to call your attention to the statement of the Christ as found recorded in the nineteenth chapter of Matthew, the tenth chapter of Mark, and the eighteenth chapter of Luke, where it is recorded that the mothers brought their little ones to Jesus that he might put his hands upon them and bless them. The disciples not understanding this matter rebuked these mothers, when Jesus in turn rebuked them and said, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Now the hearers to-night may take their choice between the teaching of so-called orthodoxy and the teaching of Christ. As an individual I purpose standing where I understand that Christ stood; and when he said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," it can not be possible that within the realm of the condemned, where it was, and too largely is, said the fires filled with sulphur continue to burn day and night eternally,—that within that realm these little infants not a span long are consigned to remain throughout all eternity, under such conditions as that. I leave you to take your choice between the teaching of the Christ when he said, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven," and the story sung in song.

But I cite you once more to a statement made by Jesus as found recorded in the same chapter from which we have taken our lesson, where it is recorded that the apostles came to him and said, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" Ah! here was ambition manifesting itself; and if you will excuse me for the digression I want to say that wherever you see the manifestation of that kind of ambition there is danger to the well-being of the church. For it is not a question of who is greatest; it is a question of obtaining eternal life. "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm." And I presume it is safe to conclude to-night that as the disciples came to him with this question, Peter felt in his heart, "When they hear him say, Peter, then they will know." Possibly Bartholomew had the same thought flitting through his mind; and maybe Matthew, and possibly all of them had. But it is not probable that John had. He was of that lowly, meek disposition that should characterize the follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. Jesus instead of naming any of them, called a little child and placed it in their midst, and said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children [that is so far as purity is concerned; so far as humility is concerned; so far as meekness is concerned], ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Consequently there is danger when we begin to exalt ourselves, when we begin to talk about being able to lead the people. There is danger there, and we want to beware of that kind of danger. It seems to have entered into the minds of the apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, and they came to him to settle the question, and it ought to settle it for all time.

But how can any one from the standpoint of theology, be he whomsoever he may be, on the contrary say that hell is crammed with infants damned without a day of grace?

Now I am going to call your attention to another thought. In the third chapter of John, in the sixteenth and seventeenth verses you will find some of the most beautiful language in all holy writ, and I will venture to assert that if you search from the first chapter of Genesis to the concluding chapter of the Apocalypse, you can not find the antithesis of this thought anywhere:

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

Now mark, that was the purpose of God in sending his Son into the world; that the world through him (the Son) might be saved. That Son declares, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." You who heard the beautiful sermon (I think one of the finest efforts that I ever heard in my life) upon the question of life, and that more abundantly, as presented at Kirtland last spring, remember something of what is meant as presented by the speaker on that occasion, Elder Heman C. Smith, upon this question of life, and that more abundantly. Now, that is what Christ came for; that was his purpose in coming into the world; and as a consequence thereof, either in time or in eternity, his purposes will have been accomplished. For in the sixteenth chapter and eighteenth verse of Matthew he says, "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Against the church. I am satisfied that any grammarian from any part of the world will say that church is the proper antecedent of the pronoun it. And Jesus declares that his church is not to be prevailed against by the gates of hell. The Psalmist seems to have had a sufficient burst of inspiration, and to have had the curtains of futurity thrown athwart, to permit him to look down into time yet unborn and say, in the ecstasy of his joy, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in," depicting inspirationally the beautiful picture of a specific event that is to transpire future to his day. The gates of hell are to be lifted up, and the King of glory shall come in. Let us not forget that important thought, and the further thought in connection with it, that Jesus made the declaration, "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Let us not forget these two thoughts as we put them together to-night.

But somebody says, "Oh, Bro. Wight, don't preach that way; don't preach as we think you are going to to-night. Don't tell us that there is to be an opportunity after death; that Jesus is going to preach to those that are dead. Don't tell us that, for as certainly as you tell our young people that you will have them reach this conclusion: 'If that be true then I will go on [shall I use slang to-night and say what young people so often say?] and have my fling.'" Ah, young people, do not say that; do not talk about sowing your wild oats; "for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap;" and if you sow to the wind you shall reap of the whirlwinds. There is no question about that. It is the logic of the fact, and can not be gotten around. If you are willing to take your chances, all right.

But wait a moment! If it be dangerous to teach our young people anything like that, and it gives them an opportunity of too much license, what about the opportunity on the other hand as taught by the dogmatist who believes in what we may call the hell-fire theory or doctrine, who teaches that the wicked, or those who fail to make what they prescribe as the right profession, are going to be consigned to this lake of fire burning with sulphur, and be kept there continuously burning, without being consumed, in all the torture and agony and writhing incident to so fearful a condition? On the other hand they tell you that if you make the prescribed profession or confession, even though it be in the hour of death, when separation is upon you, you will be wafted away to the courts of glory. Over yonder in Australia last year, two men in cold blood took the life of a constable, or policeman as we call him; and two ministers went into the cells where these condemned men awaited the fatal day when the noose was to do its work, and prayed them into heaven. At least the papers told us that they found Christ—after they got behind the bars, within the confines of the cell of the condemned! A few years ago, so the story goes, up here in Canada, a young man courted a girl, married her, and in after-time took her life, was tried, found guilty, condemned to hang by the neck until dead, and a man with a long coat on and a white "choker" went in to pray him into heaven; but no, sir, he would have nothing to do with him. Why? He had sought the governor for a reprieve. The fatal day came, and the word with it that no reprieve was to be granted; and then he sends for this man with the clerical garb on, and he prays him into heaven. At least, upon that fatal trap, with that noose dangling over his head, the last words to which he gave utterance in this life were, that so far as she whose life-blood he had taken was concerned, he regretted that she was then "weltering in hell"; but so far as he was concerned he expected, as soon as the fatal noose had accomplished its purpose, to be wafted away to the arms of Jesus!

Friends, where is the greater danger to the young people? That dogma that teaches that no matter how heinous the crime, just so you make the prescribed confession and profession, even though it be in the hour of demise, you will be wafted away to the courts of glory; whereas on the other hand if you fail, no matter how good a moral life you might have lived, you will be consigned to an eternal flame which is so terribly hot (as described by one minister) that if you were taken out and placed in a caldron of boiling potash you would freeze to death in a moment of time, (I am perfectly willing to make this public confession to you to-night, that I have no desire to freeze in that way!) or the teaching of the repentance-after-death theory?

But Jesus said that the gates of hell should not prevail against it (the church). Let us have a mathematical calculation for the time being. There have been since the days of Adam until now, (there is not a particle of use now in your trying to count it, you could not do it if you lived to be five hundred years old,) there have been one hundred and forty-three billion of human souls upon the earth from that time until now. And out of that one hundred and forty-three billion, one billion has made the prescribed profession, so that according to that dogma every time that Christ obtains one soul, Satan obtains one hundred and forty-two. And it does seem to me that that would be a very large prevailing, to say the least of it. For you know we are told that so sure as you get in there, you will have no opportunity to get out again; so that every time these one hundred and forty-two go in there and have to smell sulphur all through eternity, one goes up yonder, which certainly presents a very large prevailing.

Again we are confronted with the thought, Will we take the statement of Jesus Christ, or will we take the statement of orthodoxy, so called? Your speaker prefers to stand on the side of the Christ. One word of inspiration from his lips is worth all the language and the wisdom of the world combined, if that language be contrary to that one word; and he made the declaration that "the gates of hell shall not prevail."

Again, in this same chapter I read of an unwise steward. And Jesus tells us of the wickedness of this steward, and that he was delivered over to his tormentor, and kept there until he paid all that was due. "Oh," somebody says, "that is only talking about what we do in this life. If you become a wicked person, if you steal, are apprehended, and found guilty, you will be delivered over to the jailer and the jailer will keep you there until you have paid all that is due. What has that to do with our future condition?" Just this, my friend. Jesus goes right on in the next verse and says, "So likewise [in the same manner or way] shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." The trespass is committed against Him. What will he do? Deliver you over to the tormentor. Who is the tormentor? Satan. No question about that. He will deliver you over to the tormentor, and how long will that tormentor be permitted to keep you? Till (if there is to be no end why use the word till?) you have paid all that is due. And when you have paid all that is due that tormentor will have no power to keep you there any longer. Justice will prescribe that; love will demand it; and mercy will say that it must be done; that after you have paid all that is due, there can be no law in heaven, there can possibly be no law in hell, then, (if there should be any justice there,) that would hold you any longer, after you have paid all that is due.

I do not expect to tell all the vital thought concerning the duration of this punishment, further than that when you have paid all that is due, Jesus here positively declares that that is as long as you are to be kept. I confess that I believe that the torment will be terrible; that it will be sufficient; and I believe that any one who may have the opportunity to go there will want to get out as soon as he can, unless he is so hardened, his conscience so calloused that it would be impossible for any manner of treatment to touch the calloused conscience.

I want to call attention to the eleventh chapter of Matthew. Christ is upbraiding the cities, and he says, beginning with the twentieth verse, "Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not: woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes." Now, that was the disposition of those people. If these mighty works had been done in their midst they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. "But I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you."

Ah! here is shown, as clearly as it is possible for language to show, degree of punishment. "It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you." Why was the comparative used here? It is impossible to have a comparative without a positive and a superlative. And here he says it shall be more tolerable. It is going to be tolerable for somebody; more tolerable for somebody else; and most tolerable of all for somebody else, or else there is no meaning whatever in that language. And the same thought is used concerning Sodom; and you know that there is no more heinous crime in the catalogue of crimes than that of sodomy. Those people were so terribly wicked that fire and sulphur were rained down from heaven, and they were burned up, consumed. And yet Jesus says of them that had the mighty works which had been done in Capernaum been done in their midst they would have remained until this day. And then he uses exactly the same thought in conclusion, that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for Capernaum. Now, if those people had that disposition that they would have repented, if those mighty works had been done in their midst, are they to be held so responsible for a failure under such conditions that they will never have an opportunity to be removed therefrom? It seems to me that justice, mercy, and love would at once combine and cry out against so unfortunate a thought as that. Yes, that thought that we are to be consigned to a flame so terribly hot and kept there throughout all eternity,—your own loved ones, your own offspring put there, and you stand yonder looking over the embattlements of heaven down into the region of the damned, are to adore and give glory to God, though your own child may be reaching toward you its arms, and crying, "Papa, mamma, have mercy. Come and relieve me from this place."

There is one thought I want to present right here, that never yet in my experience have I found an individual willing to believe in so fearful a dogma, (because it is nothing less, and nothing more,) that ever felt that he or she was going there! Oh, no; it was always the other fellow, you know! If it were somebody else that was to be consigned they were quite willing to believe in so fearful a punishment as that.

But why do I ask you the question to-night concerning your own children? I do not do it to appeal to your sympathy. But I do it because it is in harmony with the spirit of that marvelous statement of Jesus as found recorded in the seventh chapter of Matthew: "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?" Ah! that merciful Father that so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life; who sent that Son into the world, not to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved! Are you going to tell me to-night, will your reason, will your rationalism say that that Father is going to consign a great majority of his children to this awful place and keep them there throughout all eternity? You can not say it from a scriptural standpoint. But we are told that we have no right to reason upon these things; that God knoweth best. But what does the prophet say? "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord." "Bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob."

But let us follow out that thought of the gates of hell being lifted up to let the King of glory in. I want to call attention to the song the angels sang. They sang to the shepherds, you know, by night, as they herded their sheep on Bethlehem's plains. He was to come down—what for? Ah! for peace on earth, good will to men. And he was to preach—what? Glad tidings of great joy which shall be to a part—"Oh no," somebody says, "that is not the way it reads"—which shall be to all people. Glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. We are told that the Father loved the Son, and gave all things into his hands; and that the Son says, Of all that thou hast given me, I have lost nothing, but the son of perdition.

Now let us see. That Son died when he was upon the cross. And here in the third chapter of Peter's first epistle, beginning with the eighteenth verse, we read, "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just [that is Christ] for the unjust [man], that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit; by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometimes were disobedient, [When, Peter?] when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing." That was when they were disobedient. Now these spirits of those who were disobedient in the days of Noah while the ark was preparing, Christ after being put to death on the cross in the flesh, you know, quickened by the Spirit, went and preached to them. And remember the angels sang that he was to preach glad tidings of great joy which should be to all people. So Christ goes down there; the gates of hell are lifted up; they stand there lifted up, and the King of glory passes in. Ah! he tells John on the Isle of Patmos that he had obtained the keys of death, hell, and the grave. He had obtained the victory over these. He had obtained the keys and unlocked the door; the gates of hell stood up, they stood ajar: and the King of glory passed in and preaches to the spirits of those who have been shut up, from the time yonder when they were swept from the earth by the flood, in the prison house. (The words prison, pit, and hell, are synonymous terms.) Christ goes in and preaches to them; and he says, "I have come to tell you people of the mercy of God, the love of God, and the justice of God. I have come because God so loved the world that he gave me to the world, that through suffering I might be made perfect. I have passed through that suffering; and as a result of passing through I am here now to tell you of the mercy, the justice, and the love of God. I have come here to tell you what he has determined to do with you. I have been sent to preach glad tidings of great joy." Oh, how their hearts are drawn to that which he is about to present. They begin to have hope, now, stirred within their bosoms. "Preaching glad tidings to us? That means that we may get out of here, if you are going to preach glad tidings to us." He goes on and discourses, and finally in conclusion tells them of the great mercy of God; that he is so merciful that he has concluded that it will be in harmony with his love and mercy to keep them in the confines of this flame throughout all eternity! Do you believe that? No. That great heart that throbbed for humanity never could go and add insult to injury; that great heart could never go and say such a thing as that. He could never picture to them the sublimity of God, of his love, and his mercy and justice, and then in the next breath say that he had condemned them to this eternal flame never to have opportunity to be removed therefrom.

But somebody says, "Wait, Bro. Wight, there is that parable of Dives and Lazarus." It came to pass, Jesus said, that this rich man, that was so very bad that he would not let Lazarus have anything but the crumbs as they fell from his table, died, and lifted up his eyes in hell, being in torment. He sees father Abraham afar off with Lazarus in his bosom, and calls to him to let Lazarus put even his finger in water, and come and put it upon his tongue, because of his torment in this flame. Abraham said, No, it can not be done, because between us and thee there is a great gulf fixed, so that they that would come can not do so, and they that would go can not do so; it is impossible. "Now," somebody says, "you have upset the whole thing that you have presented." Wait. Not so fast, please. Do not anticipate. I believe that Christ fitly described the condition at that time; but that was before he had obtained the keys of death, hell, and the grave; that was before the gates had been lifted up; that was before the King of glory had gone in. But after that time let us see what was done. You remember that these prisoners were shut up in this prison. Turn with me to the ninth chapter of Zechariah and see what is said of those same people, those who were shut up in the pit. I read in this ninth chapter of the wonderful reign of Christ; how that his dominion is to be from sea to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth. Ah! we are looking forward to that glorious time, when the reign shall take place, when he shall be King of kings and Lord of lords. And following that: "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent [perfected present tense used here, following the statement of his glorious reign and dominion] forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." That is about where Dives was, is it not? "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." Listen: "Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope." How much hope would they have had, had Christ gone down there and told them they were consigned to that flame eternally with no opportunity to be removed therefrom? How much hope could have been in their minds? Ah! no, he went to preach "deliverance to the captives," as the prophet tells us; and as a result of the shedding of his blood and their repentance, they had an opportunity to get out of that pit, out of that prison, out of that hell. Thank God for so glorious a fact as presented in the Scriptures; though it may be contrary to the dogma that was born in the Dark Ages, cradled in the lap of superstition, and nurtured along the lines of darkness, spiritual darkness incident to what we call the Dark Ages. And coming forth from so untimely a birth and condition, what wonder that it was evil in its nature and teaching!

Turn to the picture of Christ yonder on the cross. See them pierce his side with the spear. See them give him gall and vinegar. See his brow pierced with the crown of thorns. Hear him groan. See them stand around the foot of that cross and say, "He saved others, himself he can not save"; "If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross." Think of him as they spat upon him; think how that prior to that time they had suborned witnesses, hired men to tell deliberate falsehoods that he might be condemned; for they knew that he could not otherwise be condemned. And now see him in the very crowning act of the agony that was heaped upon him, the awful suffering that made him perfect. As they stood around and wagged their heads and said, "If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross"; hear him, in the extreme moment of the awful agony, as they heaped upon him the contumely incident to those stirring times, oh, hear him say, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," and then tell me, if you can, that that Christ could find it in his heart to condemn the major part of the human family to the confines of the lake of fire burning with sulphur!

PIONEERS OF OTTERTAIL.—NO. 4.

REASONS LEADING TO THE MORMON SETTLEMENT AND THE CHURCH ORGANIZATION SET FORTH.

Soon after the establishing of our settlement and when a few neighbors had gathered around us, a proposition was made to have some kind of county organization effected. There being so few inhabitants at the time, this district was attached to Douglas County for judicial purposes, three commissioners were appointed, viz., Chauncey Whiting, Sr., of Clitheral, E. J. Lacey and Andrew Johnson, of St. Olaf; Mr. Marcus Shaw was appointed clerk, and Mr. Charles Sperry (in course of time) was appointed probate judge. Mr. William Corliss, of Clitheral, was subsequently made school superintendent. This looked like a small beginning for the new country, nevertheless it seemed to be about as much as we were able to endure, and having no guide, books, blanks, or anything better than birch-bark upon which to keep our records, I dare say an exhibition of the same would be as diverting as a circus.

Receiving no tax or public funds, our schools for a time were kept up by subscription. Miss Zeruah M. Sherman had the honor of being the first school-teacher in our district, where she continued to teach for three terms.

As the county increased in population the organization became more perfect, and soon we were better provided for in public matters, schools, supplies, etc.

THE COLONISTS WERE PATRIOTIC.

On the Fourth of July, 1867, we held our first celebration, and perhaps it was the first observance of the kind in Ottertail County. A goodly number from St. Olaf, Silver Lake, and even some of our old friends from Oak Lake, assembled with us and joined in the exercises of the day. We had no accomplished orator to set forth in lively colors the oppression of the colonies, and speak of the general causes which led to the framing and signing of the declaration of our national independence, and the sacrifice required in maintaining the rights of freedom, but we used the liberty of the day and did our own speaking as best we could. Several short orations were delivered, and at intervals national songs, attended with music, helped to make the occasion more impressive. Indeed, we had a grand time, not because of our wonderful exercises, but grand for the very reason the cause itself is grand; because we could sit beneath the bright folds of our nation's flag, speak, sing, and rejoice together with none to molest or make us afraid, and doubly grand because thousands and even millions aside from ourselves could enjoy the precious boon of freedom and find peace and safety under the banner of liberty. The exercises at the stand being concluded, the people were formed in procession and with music marched to a table spread with abundant refreshments for the assembly. Thanks were offered by Father Charles Sperry, after which the rich bounty was heartily partaken of, and all seemed to rejoice together, as citizens of a free republic ought to do. The day passed off in perfect harmony, and the people retired to their respective homes well satisfied.

THE FIRST HOUSE OF WORSHIP

in Ottertail County, if I mistake not, was built by the Mormons in the spring of 1870, upon the same plat of ground selected by our pioneers for the settlement of the church. This building has two apartments, an upper and a lower story. The latter is for preaching, praying, exhortation, singing, councils, etc., while the upper room is more particularly for holding our solemn assemblies and secret prayers in conformity to the sixth chapter of Matthew, verses one to six inclusive, which please read.

WHY THE COLONY CAME TO MINNESOTA.

I must now endeavor to redeem my promise made at the outset by giving some account of the motives and special causes which encouraged our society to dispose of their homes in Iowa and settle in Minnesota. But in opening the subject before us we must turn back to the dissolution of the church, which took place immediately after the martyrdom of the prophet Joseph Smith and the patriarch Hyrum Smith.

This terrible occurrence not only cast a gloom over the minds of the people, but opened a door for aspirants to step up and claim the leadership of the church, and it was not long before several put in their appearance and asserted their right, some under one plea and some under another. But to cut the matter short, Brigham Young, president of the twelve apostles, at length gained a preëminence, and by a large majority of the people was sustained as leader of the church. However, the remainder of the claimants had their influence, and each one succeeded in getting many followers.

These moves caused a subdivision of the church, nevertheless they did not at once scatter abroad. But at length the mob (who had quieted down a little after the death of the Prophet) again commenced hostilities and the church was finally compelled to abandon the state of Illinois. This affected a final separation of the different parties who up to this period had arisen.

In the spring of 1846 Brigham Young with his followers started for the Rocky Mountains. The first companies made their way to Council Bluffs, crossed the Missouri River and established a town called Winter Quarters, where seven hundred log cabins and one hundred and fifty dugouts (cabins half under ground) were built upon the site of what is now known as Florence, Nebraska. Several thousand wagons were also encamped on the east side of the river, where the Saints began to build up a place subsequently named Kanessville (now Bluff City) in honor of Thomas L. Kane, of Philadelphia, whose kindness had endeared him to them.

In the spring of 1847 President Brigham Young with one hundred and forty-three pioneers started in search of a place of settlement, arriving at the Great Salt Lake Valley on the twenty-fourth day of July, and on the 15th of August following, having completed the business, started in company with one hundred and seven of the pioneers on their return to Winter Quarters. Soon after their arrival at the place, which was late in the fall of 1847, a matter was taken into consideration in the council respecting a mission which the prophet Joseph Smith, prior to his death, had assigned to Alpheus Cutler, a man of great respectability, and who had filled high and responsible offices in the church. He was a member of the High Council, the grand architect of the Lord's houses, and had been ordained under Joseph Smith to the office of prophet, seer, and revelator, with all the rights, keys, powers, privileges, and blessings belonging to that condition, the same as Joseph himself held, and to be in force upon the whole world from that very hour. This ordination gave him an undisputed right to act in building up the church.

he was at liberty to go and attend to the work which had been placed upon him by the Prophet. A portion of this mission was to the partially civilized Indians of Kansas. After performing that part of the business, he returned to Iowa, and in process of time reorganized the church agreeably to the pattern given, at least as circumstances would admit. And in view of rejecting the church (the particulars of which I have not space to relate) he required baptism of all old or new members who united with him. This move entirely separated him and his followers from all the present factions of the church. He was the man who had brought forward living witness to prove an ordination and rights of authority according to the pattern above mentioned.

In 1853 a partial organization of the church was affected in the following manner: First, Alpheus Cutler (having heretofore received proper authority) was chosen by the body assembled, as head or chief counselor of the church of Jesus Christ. The vote was unanimous. He then chose his two counselors, viz., Thaddeus Cutler his first, and Chauncey Whiting his second. Bro. Edmund Fisher was appointed president of the church. He selected for counselors Almon W. Sherman and F. L. Whiting. C. Whiting was also appointed clerk; and in due time other offices were filled and different quorums organized. For several years matters moved quietly along and many members were added to the church. But at length some difficulty occurred in which Alpheus Cutler's first counselor became disappointed and turned away, leaving a vacancy which was filled by Bro. Charles Sperry. Soon after this occurrence, some of our people united with other parties of the latter-day church, which opened a door for contention and disagreeable feelings to arise, and unmistakable tokens of a dissolution of our hitherto peaceable and happy society could easily be seen. But a harder trial was at hand. In August, 1864, our leader, Alpheus Cutler, was taken away by death. This occurrence not only brought a time of sorrow and mourning among relatives and friends, but the loss of our first or chief counselor was deeply felt by those who were yet desirous of continuing in the principles adopted, and in keeping up the organization in the manner above described. But the embarrassing circumstances, divisions, etc., seemed to preclude all possibility of filling the vacancy at the time, hence the matter was postponed for a season. And to live amid a scene of confusion we were not willing, indeed we would rather (if no other opening presented) retire to the lonely solitudes of the wild natives. Some even expressed a desire to find a secluded place where they could enjoy a peaceable and quiet life, and where they could worship God unmolested. But in this way they were upbraided through the gift of prophecy and tongues, and informed that wherever the church might locate, people from other parts of the land would gather around them, the truth of which we soon realized after our settlement was established in Ottertail County, which at that period was only inhabited by the Indians.

Through the same channel we were often instructed and encouraged in our anticipated move to the north, and at one period we were informed that the church would go to a land of many waters, and where could we find a country better fitted to the purpose than Minnesota with its numerous lakes, ponds, and rivulets. Another reason for selecting a location in a new country, where homesteads might eventually be taken, was that we were poor, having hardly recovered from the losses sustained by the mob in the state of Illinois, the time spent in journeying, building and making new homes both in Iowa and Nebraska. Indeed we were not able to purchase improved farms, and having received encouraging information respecting the northern country we immediately set ourselves about to prepare for the move, an account of which has already been given.

But as the period arrived for the setting in order the affairs of our church, the matter which had been postponed (as noticed in the foregoing) was at length considered and disposed of in the following manner:

The order of the work being something like military, the burden after the death of the first president rested upon his two commanders, viz., Charles Sperry and Chauncey Whiting, and so continued for a time. But at length a meeting was called and the matter of choosing a first president of the church was presented. Considerable discussion followed concerning former rights, offices, ordination, etc. Counselor Charles Sperry asked a little time to satisfy his mind before voting, which was freely granted. At the next meeting he stated to the congregation, that he had gained an evidence that the right of presidency rested upon Alpheus Cutler's second counselor, and he would relinquish his former claim to the office. C. Whiting was then chosen and sustained by a unanimous vote, and ordained first president of the Church of Jesus Christ, under the hands of Bro. Charles Sperry and Almon W. Sherman. He then chose his two counselors, viz: Isaac M. Whiting and Lyman Murdock. Bro. A. W. Sherman acted for a time as president of the church, but at length resigned his office, recommending his first counselor, viz., F. L. Whiting, as a suitable person to fill the vacancy, who was accepted and properly appointed and sustained in the office, after which he selected for counselors S. J. Whiting and Hyrum Murdock. Father Charles Sperry was eventually appointed patriarch of the church, and Lurett Whiting, clerk.

It is to be remembered that the two presidents above mentioned fill different offices in the church, the particulars of which I will not consume space to notice. Indeed I have already overreached my space, but for the reason that several have requested an explanation of our church organization, standing, etc., I have used more freedom in noticing the order as it has previously existed. Hence, from the foregoing relation the reader will learn something of the position which we have heretofore occupied, and which we still endeavor to hold forth and maintain, and that we are a society by ourselves, striving to act under the same order, principles, and doctrine set forth in an early day of the church.

The incidents noticed in the foregoing account I have endeavored to give as near as memory served and as related to me from time to time. And as twenty years or upwards have elapsed since the greater share of things have transpired, I beg the reader to pardon should there be a mistake or error in the same.

Having according to the best of my recollection answered the desired questions, and noticed the main incidents which attended the moving and establishment of the first permanent settlement in Ottertail County, I will conclude the subject, hoping that the reader may derive a little benefit for the time spent in pursuing the old pioneer's feeble account of these matters.

BY RODERICK MAY, INDEPENDENCE STAKE BISHOP.

Having had about twenty-five years' experience in what is termed by us as the "Land of Zion," and being somewhat acquainted with the conditions and the gathering of the people of God into this land for the time mentioned, I believe I can give some few pointers to those who are here, and especially to those who expect to come.

The special object of each Saint gathering to Zion, if he gathers to Zion according to the commands of God, must be, to keep his law in all things that he has commanded.

And Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doeth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 16.

And again, every person who belongeth to this Church of Christ shall observe to keep all the commandments and covenants of the church.

From those mandates none are exempt, no, not one. In 1831 when the first elders came to this land the Lord gave them very instructive revelations to the church concerning this land, the gathering, and what would be expected of the Saints and the blessing that would follow all those who would do his perfect will; but some will say, "The conditions are changed now, therefore we are not expected to do just, in every particular, as was commanded of them." Let us hear just what the Lord said about this and be converted in our own minds:

And further the Spirit saith unto you, that "with the Lord one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as a day;" therefore, the law given to the church in section forty-two, over the meaning of some parts of which there has been so much controversy is as if it were given to-day; and the bishop and his counselors, and the high council, and the bishop and his council, and the storehouse and the temple and the salvation of my people, are the same to me now that they were in that day when I gave the revelation.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.

This being the case we are required to do all in our ability to fulfill the commands of God and we should not think for one moment, because the land is high and a great city is building up on this land, that the work of God will be frustrated. My faith is that God permitted this for a wise purpose. The facts remain that this land, the land of Zion, was consecrated for the gathering of God's people, and they will gather and are gathering, but how?

I find commencing on page 305, volume 1, Church History, an article to the churches abroad, copied from the Evening and Morning Star, published in Independence, Missouri, July, 1833. Those elders stationed in Zion and in charge of the work speak our sentiments; in many respects they found the same experience that we now find in many cases.

One of the very necessary things for the Saints to do when coming to this land is to get a certificate from the bishop in your locality or from three elders. "Why," says somebody, "explain this to us. Won't a letter of removal do?" We say, No. This certificate is altogether another thing. Bishops do not give letters of removal, but this certificate ought to certify that you have complied with the law of tithes, consecrations, and offerings; that you have done your full duty in all departments of the church-work; that you are an industrious, energetic man or woman as the case may be, and state the business you are best adapted for and your ability, giving the stake officers assurance that you are worthy of their confidence. Saints coming to the stakes of Zion without those certificates, or on arrival giving no evidence of their loyalty to the church, should not expect the right hand of full fellowship and protection of the church in looking after their interests on arrival or in times of trouble.

We believe that God saw fit for his own wise purpose to command stakes to be organized and for the government of those stakes he commanded officers appointed, and for a purpose,—a high council for its work, and a bishop and his counselors for their work; and if the Saints do not honor those men in their offices and calling they do not honor God who appointed them; and if they are not ready to honor God's law and his appointment, they better stay away until they are converted; whether they are rich or poor, it matters not.

Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days; and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land; for, verily, I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim, wherefore they shall be plucked out.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7.

We have known of Saints coming within the confines of this stake and before getting counsel of the bishop, see almost every real estate agent in the country and bargain for property and get into trouble before they got through with them and lose money, and then they seek the bishop's advice when it is too late. The Independence Stake bishop is not in the real estate business, nor has he ever been except for the church, nor has the stake bishop ever charged commission, nor ever received any compensation for any advices ever given to the Saints or any one else, nor does he ever expect to be in the real estate or any other kind of speculation to make money by reason of his office in the church.

Saints move in here who are poor and when they get here have nothing to help themselves with, and sometimes become a burden to others. This is not in accordance with the revelation which says, "Let all things be prepared before you"; not that we should despise the poor, (for the poor and the friendless and the downtrodden have the warmest place in my heart,) but the poor who have nothing had better stay where they are until the church can make some provision for them. Unwise movements of this kind are a hindrance to the work. I could relate very many instances where such unwise movements have been uncomfortable to the parties themselves and quite an expense to the church. A poor man who is willing to work and take any kind of employment if he can not at once get the particular kind of business he may be used to, need not fear coming here; but the man who comes here "dead broke," and crowds himself on the Saints or the church, and is so particular that nothing he finds suits him, and finally when he wears everybody and everything threadbare pulls out, we would advise that such persons give Independence Stake a wide berth.

Saints who have means are also too particular about locations. They want to live where there is a large branch of the church. While that is very nice and commendable, the main object of the gathering is to build up Zion. Somebody must pioneer and build up the waste places on the outer posts, and if everything is not in apple-pie order just go to work with a will and build up and beautify and make your own surroundings pleasant, love God and your neighbors, and be industrious, and you will be successful.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

One and One Makes Two.—No. 2.

In my last I spoke of the fact that the church already having various obligations of a financial character to meet ought not by any means to discourage the Daughters of Zion from undertaking the work of establishing a home for children, but that it should rather be an incentive to action. In writing me recently a sister (after she had enumerated various objects which the Saints of the branch of which she was a member had on hand and for which they were working) said: "My own observation leads me to think that it is always those who do the most who generally find the time and means to do a little more. This work of providing a home for children appeals strongly to my heart, and we of this branch are going to find ways and means of helping it."

Now this is true. The real, hard, earnest work of the world and the church has always been, and in all probability always will be, done by the few. There are always plenty to come in at the last, willing to share in benefits or honors, but those who bind all their energies to the building, launching, and equipping these vessels of venture, are always in the minority.

This is no small undertaking upon which the Daughters of Zion have entered, but is a work which demands the expenditure of great energy, perseverance, and at times even self-sacrifice. It is well, then, that the cost be counted from the beginning; and what will better enable us to do this than to realize from the first that the enterprise we have so much at heart is not the only enterprise demanding the support of the Saints at large, but is simply one among many worthy ones? But it is one which the church can not afford to neglect unless she is willing in the day of final reckoning to hear the Master say: "This ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

The Saints are abundantly able to build and sustain more than one home for children, and I expect to live to see the time when it will be done. Other churches no larger, no wealthier than our own have done this, and such homes if properly conducted become not only a blessing to the children they shelter, but they become, as it were, mission-fields for the spreading of the gospel.

"I am not a member of your organization," said another sister in writing me, "but when it comes to a work like this are we not all daughters of Zion, and may not each mother whose heart is stirred by the condition and needs of the many little motherless ones out in a cold and wicked world, join in helping on this good work?"

"Yes, indeed, they may" was my hearty response. And just here is where "one and one makes two" in the most effectual manner. Every individual has his influence, and if each one interested in this work can just interest one other, it is not hard to see how rapidly its friends would multiply and the circle of its influence spread. Those who are gathering up the fragments need not only to be diligent, but to be careful that "they despise not the day of small things" as well.

Much will depend upon our efforts in the next few months. If our diligence and zeal as well as the wisdom which we have exercised in conducting this matter commend us to the church, when they meet in General Conference, then we may expect not only their cordial support but that our opportunities will be enlarged and that where we now ask only fragments it may be deemed advisable that we then ask for a share of the loaves and fishes also.

There is another thought in this connection. All are not like-minded, and that which most strongly appeals to one individual will often not interest his neighbor in the least. Now we all know that we are inclined to work for that which interests us most. If, then, there are those willing to work for a home for children, to whom other objects do not so strongly appeal and for which they are not willing to work, why may we not accept it, since none can say the cause is not a good one? Let us, then, improve every opportunity, adding one to one until from a small number we become a host.

THE NEW EARTH.

Golden Text.—“After it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory.”—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

In the opening verses of the senior lesson to-day, Peter speaks of his death, and the Quarterly cites the reader to the predictions of Jesus concerning the manner of Peter's death. Incidental mention is made of the calmness with which Peter wrote of his death in contrast with the weakness once manifested by him when he denied his Lord, evidently through fear of suffering and death with Christ.

Peter expressed the desire to impress upon the Saints before his death the necessity of cultivating those qualities of character which fit men to enter into the presence of God and Christ; and he assured them that he had not been deceived in believing that which he presented to them as the truth. He spoke of his experience on the mount of transfiguration when he saw not only Christ transfigured before him but also the earth as it will be when it has been made new and has become the abode of the celestial kingdom of God.

This is in brief the ground covered by the senior lesson.

The first intermediate lesson is based upon the account in the Scriptures of the vision witnessed on the mount of transfiguration by Peter, James, and John. The second intermediate classes are cited, in addition to this, to what Isaiah has written concerning the new earth.

The second primary lesson covers the same ground as the intermediate lessons, but it is in a story form, while the intermediate lessons consist of questions on the text with explanatory notes.

The first primary lesson is based on the parable of the foolish rich man, who was too selfish to be willing to part with the surplus produce of his fields, that which he could not store away until he had first built larger barns than he then had. According to the teaching of the Scriptures, no man with such a heart of selfishness will be in that celestial kingdom of which the other lessons tell us.

Notice the Golden Text of the first primary lesson.

The outlines of the lessons of this week are worthy of a little attention.

IN THE CITY OF JERUSALEM.

Before mentioning our walk down Via Dolorosa, the Way of the Cross, we should have told you that our guide halted us just after we had passed an arched way called Ecce Homo, from a Latin sentence which in English is, Behold the man.

The arch bears this name because it is said to be a representation of that spot on which Pilate stood when he brought Jesus out in the sight of the multitude wearing the purple robe and the crown of thorns that must have pierced his brow. As the suffering victim of their persecution stood before them, Pilate, doubtless to awaken their pity, if possible, bade them behold the man. When they cried out that Jesus should be crucified, Pilate took water and washed his hands saying, “I am innocent of the blood of this just person.”

But was he innocent of the blood of that just person concerning whom he repeatedly said to the people, “I find no fault in him”? Could anything justify his permitting an innocent person to suffer to satisfy the demands of those who hated him without cause? Can anything justify any of us in deserting any cause of truth to its enemies, because they are many and clamor loud against it? It is better for us to go down with the truth in the hour of its apparent humiliation that we may rise again with it in its resurrection, for the truth is never permanently defeated; it rises again.

Our guide told us something concerning the gates of Jerusalem. He spoke of the ancient custom of closing the gates at night, so that the only way of leaving or of entering the city was by means of a little gate beside the great one. It was this little gate, he said, of which Jesus spoke when he said it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to go into heaven. He told us the little gate was called the needle's eye, and that a camel, without a load, could pass in.

We have heard this explanation before, but the thought has also occurred more than once when thinking upon it that the explanation does not help the rich man to indulge himself in the thought that he can cling to his riches and still enter into the kingdom of God. Like the camel, he must leave his burden outside, and, if we read the word of God aright, he must not retain it until the last moment of his earth life, when he is compelled to leave it behind, but there must be a voluntary giving up of the riches of this world which we have in excess of our needs when we enter into the kingdom of God on earth, his church.

We read in the Inspired Version that the disciples who heard Jesus say it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God asked him in amazement, “Who can be saved?” Evidently they knew it to be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, for a camel to go through the needle's eye (notwithstanding the explanation of our guide), and they wondered who can be able to enter into the kingdom of God.

Jesus answered, “It is impossible for them who trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God; but he who forsaketh the things which are of this world, it is possible with God that he should enter in.”

We entered a synagogue, a bare room, unfurnished except with rude benches, and a young man there told us it was a counterpart of the synagogues of the real city at the present time, with the exception that a pulpit customarily stands where we saw a curtain for moving pictures. We sat down while the young man entertained us by singing “The Holy City,” his singing being accompanied by moving pictures thrown on the screen. As we sat in that cheerless room and remembered the squalor outside, the singer's voice rose with the words, “Jerusalem, Jerusalem, sing for the night is o'er,” and we thought, “Not yet; perhaps in a little while, but not yet is the night fully o'er.”

And memory reverts now to a quiet Sabbath afternoon in our church in Lamoni some years ago when a sister rose and, under the inspiration of heaven that carried conviction of its truth to every heart, sang in tongues,

“It is even now as daybreak,
And the night not fully gone,
When the sky is tinged with crimson
Ere the coming of the morn;

Then awake, ye Saints, and labor,
 Labor while in life you may;
 Gather out the honest-hearted,
 Bring them in the narrow way.

"Yes, the clouds are fast dispersing,
 And the darkness well-nigh spent,
 Then go forth, ye faithful workers,
 Saying unto all, Repent;
 For the work is all majestic,
 And the Spirit is divine;
 Then arise and work together
 And, behold, the sun will shine."

At the close of our first day at the World's Fair, we sat in the open air looking upon the scene of wonderful beauty presented by the illumination of the immense white buildings outlined and ornamented with their thousands of lights that looked like great golden beads.

Everywhere, all about us, were light, brightness, and beauty; everywhere, except in one little dark corner away off at our left. There gleamed a pale crescent. That was Jerusalem, with the symbol of Turkish rule over it.

My companion remarked, "That is the only dark spot within our view," and I answered, "Her light has not yet come."

A Missionary's Autumn Tour.

Late in the month of August I kissed a tear from the cheek of God's handmaid, and boarded my own special train, the Ozark Flyer, (my saddle pony,) over the Pocahontas and Salem route at Ravenden Springs, and sped away toward the setting of the sun. (For be it known that by the kindness of Bro. Holton I no longer ride a knot-headed mule and carry my baggage in a gunny sack.) A few hours' pleasant ride and we side-tracked at H. I was soon enjoying the warm hospitality of Bro. W. Russell (who had been confined to his bed all summer by some mysterious affliction that I would call spasmodic paralysis), and his noble wife who has so tenderly cared for him and supported a family of small children by raising chickens, picking berries, and marketing them, with other fruit.

What a lesson of patience and fortitude I learned during that brief visit. Not a complaint did I hear, but every word was richly seasoned with cheer, resignation, and trust. I was reminded of the faith of the grains of mustard-seed, buried forty feet beneath the surface in California, probably at the time of the crucifixion of Christ, which still retain their vitality. I was surprised when they handed me their portion of the Grace-land College Fund—tears of joy sparkled in their eyes—a short silence—a wave of God's love—I was asked to pray with them before going. The ceremony was short and impressively pointed.

I again stepped aboard and glided smoothly on over a level stretch of woodland, and then down, and still on down the mountain to Martin's Creek, where I was confronted by what seemed to be a runaway engine coming wildly down the track. Now, the road-master had given me the right of way, but seeing that an ugly collision was inevitable I quickly side-tracked. As the machine went bellowing past, I sighted Engineer Curry, who was madly driving it; nor was he satisfied with one crazy "sashay," but he roared his threats and savagely slashed at me on a return run. Convinced that my only alternative was to "derail the critter," I adroitly covered the entire ground of his attack with eight propositions, which I read to his congregation. He exultantly tooted his acceptance; but ere ever I got his signature to any one of them he informed me thus: "My brethren don't want any more debate here." I was not surprised, as this is the vicinity where Elder Bynum Black has twice met our representatives on church propositions.

My way being clear I steamed away to the west, over a mountain range where the shining sun was my only guide. After noon, as we commenced ascending the range, we were confronted by a thunder-shower. Every bush was loaded with water. Bro. Yates once said, "The brush is so thick that you can't stick a butcher-knife into it." I was reminded of this when I had to dismount and cautiously survey the way for my steaming steed. Up, up we climbed, and still on up for miles, and I stood on the heights, among the irregular, rocky knobs: no moss on any certain side of the trees; no lofty hemlocks with tips faithfully pointing the confused traveler toward the rising sun; no compass in the top of my head like the one possessed by my little "saddler"; no steady breeze from any quarter; no rays of light to show if the sun is this way or that. Too bewildered to be sure which way was straight up, scrambling and climbing, descending and ascending, riding and then walking, steaming and dripping, stumbling and sliding I went until I found myself back where I left the beaten track. God's plowman looketh not backward. I spoke encouraging words and patted the dripping neck of my companion, and again we commenced the ascent. It was late when we reached the summit. A broken place in the heavens revealed my course, and before bed-time I side-tracked on Sugar Creek, at the hallowed little cabin of Sr. Davis.

The next day I was gliding over river and dale, through mountain passes, and down rocky steeps, enamored with the wonders of the oak-clad Ozarks. We slowed up, and I asked an intelligent man my way to Turkey Pen, where I had been invited to preach. "At the end of the next lane you want to keep the straight-forward road." Thank you, sir. On we flew. Reaching the end of the lane I was in doubt; the main-traveled, three-notched country road made a sharp angle to the left, while an unmarked plain road lay "straight-forward." I remembered the treacherous Arkansaw "straight-forward" that had before led me astray, but I reasoned thus: That man knows "straight-forward," and I can't go as he directed and make a forty-five degree angle to the left. So I went "straight-forward" on and on, for miles, over a lonely road. Then I met one who said, "You are going the wrong way for Turkey Pen." I quickly repented, but long ere I could retrace my steps and find shelter another thunder-shower soaked into my porous skin; it was dark when I reached the home of Sr. Wilson. There was another appointment at T., so the next day I returned to Cabin Creek, where I preached for a week each evening at seven o'clock, spending the most of my daylight hours in the courthouse at Hardy, reading up on the various translations of the Bible.

I now made a flying trip home and side-tracked long enough to repair my baggage-cars (saddle-bags, pockets, or cases). An ungodly man was heard to say, "Ef thot thar doctor's pill-boxes tell the truth, he shoo gives ungodly doses uv medicine." "You are mistaken, sir, for while my doses do frequently choke to death the ungodly, they are compounded by God himself out of the honeydews of heaven, and given as prescribed in his dispensary, the Bible."

I was soon being borne rapidly to the South over the Callamine Southern. I was flagged down at a few points, but on the 9th was sitting close to the altar at the last days of the great Holiness camp-meeting. I was there for a twofold purpose; to scatter out the epitome of our faith, and to study the altar work of these people. I was collared by one of their great ones and commanded to "get down, sir, into the straw and get sanctification." I answered, "I have been preaching genuine sanctification for thirty years." He grew clamorous; a crowd gathered around; I arose, and asked, "Have you ever enjoyed or seen manifested through your people the exact gifts of the Holy Ghost as promised by our Saviour in Mark 16?"

He claimed Mark 16: 17, 18 was an interpolation. I offered ten dollars for the privilege of their rostrum one hour; "and I will not tear a shingle from your roof; I will only apply the gospel lever and lift you a notch higher." It was no temptation to them. The next morning as thousands were listening, and the leader clamored for some one to testify, saying, "This is for everybody," I arose on the rostrum and commenced turning on the light by quoting scripture. I had spoken about ninety seconds when I was compared to a dog, and commanded to sit down. I obeyed saying, "Well that is good; the dogs do get the genuine crumbs from the Master's table." It aroused a sensation, and I was invited to come back into that vicinity and preach.

I have studied hypnotic suggestion, and have heard it ingeniously plied for many purposes, good, bad, and indifferent; but the most abominable of all hypnotic mongering that I ever witnessed was among these holiness howlers where the results of human suggestion are palmed onto the unwary for the great power of God.

There is much truth mixed with very much more error, ingeniously injected into the pliant minds at the altar: "Why! you can live above sin; God pity the poor shriveled souls that say they can't live above willful sin. You are made in the express image of God; you don't have to sin willfully and knowingly. God's power is coming; it is surely coming; he is going to sanctify you wholly, and help you live above sin. O, bless God, it is coming! You can begin to feel its warming influence coming. Now, just relax and give your whole soul right into the loving arms of Jesus! That is right. Bless God, it is coming!"

The confusion of a hundred voices, groaning, pleading, begging, and shouting, naturally bewilders their expectant minds. Pretty soon the clear, ringing voice of the preacher shouts into their ears, "Bless God, it's coming!" Another shouts, "BLESS GOD, IT'S HERE!!" Gradually they are "brought through," (brought out of the stupor,) and if there has been no awkward work done, you will witness wild, frantic, straddling gestures, and hear the most piercing screams, "I'm sanctified, I'm sanctified. Bless God—I'm sanctified," etc., until exhausted. This is called a "genuine case of sanctification." They could not explain to me the complications that arise. For instance, two altar workers who were not in touch, had been plying one subject, and the result was a "genuine case of" cross-hypnotism; the subject jumped and shrieked: "Oh Bless God I've got two Jesuses." "Hallelujah to my two Jesuses," etc. There was no one to help her hold this mixed suggestion, so the delusive influence soon died away; but the tenacity with which a community will positively affirm and assume with a genuine subject works miracles at times; will often lift them out of the thralldom of vice, and enables some to resist great temptations. But their fear of the fullness of the gospel gives the whole matter away. If the devils have not held another special convention since the one we read of in September Autumn Leaves then I am badly mistaken. In the emergency of the hour he does not care how clean and honorable their lives may be, if he may only befool their minds with the infatuation, "I am sanctified wholly."

I am more than ever convinced that it is our duty to teach our children the far-reaching effect of human suggestion. It will arm them against one class of false impression, and enable them to overcome oppressive and wicked hallucinations for themselves and others.

I next visited Bro. and Sr. William H. Davis of Evening Shade; poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith; comparatively no education, yet having a rich knowledge of God, who visits them oft in visions and dreams that might well provoke the philosophical to envy. Here again I found the Graceland College Fund awaiting my arrival. I learned that Sr. Davis had carried her baby to the berry-patch and picked wild berries to secure her portion of the "great" (?) debt.

I wish here to note a special inspiration of this latter-day work. The hardships of war are responsible for thousands in the South not being able to read or write. They live in other churches satisfied to let others do for them their reading, writing, and thinking; but when becoming members of "Christ's body" it awakens a new life, and against great odds they make a brave, strong push for the front. They begin at once to do their own thinking, and it is not long until they read for themselves also.

My next point was Glasgo Schoolhouse, where the pirates uncoupled and stole my "caboose," so the Ozark Flyer is now a bob-tailed train. (The Campbellites cut off my pony's tail.) About October 7, I commenced preaching in the court-house at Salem. Here I awakened the best element of the town. Honorable Joseph Short, who has twice been elected to the legislature, entertained me on Sunday. He said, "You furnished me more light on that subject to-day than I have been able to find before, and I have made it a study." Doctor Thomas called me aside after the Methodist reverend had threatened me with personal violence on the street and said, "I want you to know that you have made many friends in Salem; the people generally like your preaching. We all know that you preach more Bible every sermon than he does in a year." He gave me a dollar. Doctor Sanders grasped my hand, gave me money, and invited me back, saying, "I can't help believing what you have told us. I believe Joseph Smith was a prophet of God." Professor Hutchinson greeted me warmly and invited me to Mammoth Springs.

The "smith" invited me to his shop where he presented my pony with new shoes. I rode away from Salem feeling that in one place in Northern Arkansas my work had been appreciated by those not members of the church.

I pushed on to Wiseman, Elizabeth, Henderson, and finally to Mountain Home, where I preached to just a few during the week, in the Christian Church. I found interesting things in the office of "The land man," Elder Joseph Ward, at this place; but too numerous to mention. I rode from here to Cotter, on White River, along which lays the most abrupt portion of the Ozarks that I have witnessed. Pressing invitations now came for preaching at Harrisburg and Cane Island, so on the 16th I commenced my home-run, which is midway between these points; but invitation to preach near home, and necessary preparation for winter will hold me for a time.

What a monstrous field to be plowed! All thick-set with great rocks, and roots, and stumps,—and only one little, old, two-by-four preacher for a doubletree. Oh me!

And am I yet confronted by the brazen statement that we no longer need the power of God to strengthen?

D. R. BALDWIN.

RAVENDEN SPRINGS, Arkansas, October 30, 1904.

BEAR RIVER, Nova Scotia, October 29, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am here with my husband on his vessel. We have met no Saints here,—in fact the people here seem to know nothing about them. Some, however, are very willing, and seemingly anxious to have us explain the truth to them, Mrs. Thaddeus Harris, who lives up the hill a little west of the post-office, asked me to write to the paper and ask if there was any church, Saint, or minister of our faith near here; also to say they would gladly welcome any one that could come to this place. They are Methodists, and are great church workers. They can, and I think will make any Saint, who may call, very comfortable; and will give a willing ear to the gospel.

We expect to be here some three or four weeks and will take a cargo from here to New York City, and expect to meet the Saints there. We are feeling the same deep interest in the gospel, but our privileges are very few. Hoping you will remember our new friends in your prayers, and ever praying for his people and all of the honest in heart, I remain,

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. GEORGIA A. KNOWLTON.

SPICKARDS, Missouri, October 31, 1904.

Dear Herald: As it has been a long time since I wrote you, I will now pencil a few lines. I am still in the faith and doing what I can to help the work along. The people of the world seem hard to move so far as obedience to the gospel is concerned. I am blessed in speaking to the people and they seem to like to hear, but get no further. We had a good conference on the 22d and 23d with the Pleasant Grove Branch. The good Spirit was with us and our hearts did rejoice in God. The conference was well entertained by the Saints of the above-named branch, and much good was done. I left my home and loved ones for this place last Thursday morning, and arrived here that evening. Bro. Beebe met me at the depot, and soon we were on our way to his home, some three miles out. After supper we went to the church to begin work. A small crowd soon gathered, and I began my work, being blessed with good liberty. From that time on the crowd has increased until at this writing the church is well filled with attentive hearers. I am sorry to say that a number of the Saints are very indifferent and do not come out at all. I shall try to visit all at their homes and advise with them in religious matters. I shall visit each branch in the district, if my health will permit. I have suffered severely from rheumatism in my left knee, but have not given up. I was administered to for it before I left home, and am feeling better ever since. My prayer is that I may be healed entirely; if not I shall bear it with patience, and do what I can to build up the cause we love so well.

Eighteen years ago I visited this place with Bro. John T. Kinnaman. I made some friends then and am pleased to meet them again and renew acquaintance. Bro. J. R. Lambert was at our late conference, and at eleven o'clock Sunday gave us a fine discourse. All seemed to enjoy it much. He also did labor prior to conference at Stewartsville and Cameron. I hear him complimented by the Saints at both places. I am to continue here over another Sunday and then I go home to cast a good, big vote for Roosevelt. Will leave home again on the 10th for Kingston, Missouri, where I did some labor before conference. Presidents of branches will please address me at the above-named place, in care A. J. Seeley. I want to hear from all of you. Ever praying for Zion's weal, I am,

Yours in the faith,

I. N. ROBERTS.

BATTLE CREEK, Michigan, October 23, 1904.

Editors Herald: In reading your columns I feel like penning a few lines which may be of comfort to some one who is trying against odds to battle for the right. I have felt for some time past a great interest in each and every Latter Day Saint, and have been wonderfully blessed in trying to teach them their duty, and that which they must become interested in, if ever they become saints in very deed. When we have been inducted into the kingdom by obedience to the ordinance of baptism, we have done a very small part of the work; as an old brother who has passed on to try the realities of the unseen world used to say, "It is a grand work to bring men and women into the kingdom, but it is a grander work to prepare them to meet God." So let us take into consideration what it is to become a saint in deed and in truth. Every blessing we receive must be bought with a sacrifice in some way or other. For instance, in regard to affliction, the apostle James says, King James' Version, "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations." And in the Inspired Translation he has said, "Count it all joy when you fall into many afflictions." The fourth verse says, "But let patience have its perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." I find couched within those two verses a meaning beyond my comprehension, and I believe many of the Saints do not stop to think what it means to be a saint, and to my mind there is a beautiful thought expressed in the Scripture wherein it says that "godliness with contentment is great gain." We are also told by James: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God can not be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man." How many Saints seem to think that when affliction overtakes them, it is not their fault!

But when we look at it as the apostle looked at it, it would make no difference how sorely we were afflicted if we could only say, Thy will be done, not mine. Not long since I was taken with the typhoid fever, and had no desire to call a physician, or to resort to any other plan outside of calling for the elders, so I called for them and received no relief, and I could but understand why, as I had all the faith in the administration I thought I could have. But finally the words come to me, Are you willing to be patient in the affliction? I certainly answered, Yes, Lord, if it will make me better, I am willing to be sick, and so soon as I made up my mind to let patience have her perfect work, I was restored and immediately went to the shop and went to work. It taught me this one thing: To be content under all circumstances, and I felt it would not be faith in God to ask him to heal me just because I was in misery and wanted to get out, although I believe we should go often and not get weary in calling for the elders, (for Jesus spoke a parable to this end, that men ought always to pray and not to faint, and we most all know the purport of the parable). And shall not God avenge his own elect that cry unto him day and night, though he bear long with them? I tell you he will avenge them speedily. "Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"—Luke 18: 8. Last winter I was sorely afflicted with the smallpox and I called for the elders, and they administered to me; but no relief, and I was also administered to the next day, and the next until the fourth day came, when I awoke in the morning having faith that God would remove the affliction, so I prayed that he would send his servant that way and before one half hour had passed he came and as soon as he entered the room (he said afterwards) he knew that the faith existed in the room to rebuke the disease, and he was given power as soon as he placed his hands on my head to rebuke the disease. How many there seem to be who, when they are not healed immediately resort to some other way and thereby lose the blessing. God will not mix things up. He is a jealous God, and he wants us to put our trust and confidence in him; and should we get relief through some other way than that he has laid down, the blessing must come from him at any rate, because the book says all good and perfect gifts come from God. How necessary it is that we as the husbandmen must be first partakers of the fruit. If I want to impart charity unto my brethren and sisters, I must be strong myself. Jesus said to Peter, "If you love me, feed my sheep." If we could only realize that that means us. If we say we love God and love not our brother we are liars; God knows it, whether our brethren do or not. Then to those of the priesthood I would say, Let us so live that we can say to those under our care, come up. That means we have trodden the road and can invite them to come up, and not have to tell them to go on up, and we, of the priesthood will come along. My experience in teaching the Saints is not as many others I have heard of. I never feel impressed to preach the principles of the gospel to a congregation of Saints, but have always been impressed to teach them their duty. I consider I would be out of my place to stand before a multitude of Saints and preach faith, repentance, and baptism. And above all things let us study the ingrafted word which is able to save our souls, which I believe means the book of Covenants, realizing that there is the direct word of God to us in these last days. Let us receive it with meekness, that we may be benefited thereby; for I read that he that inherits a celestial glory must abide a celestial law, and so he may be able to live with Christ on a celestial earth. This is the desire and aim of your brother, and I pray that the Saints may rise above the things that seem to hold them down and keep from them the blessings that God has in store for his people. It is our faithfulness that will hasten the redemption of Zion and when the Lord's will may be done on earth as it is now done in heaven, is my prayer in Jesus name. Amen.

CUCUMONGA, California, October 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: The Southern California fall conference for 1904 has passed into history. Nothing eventful to record, yet worthy of notice. Peace and harmony prevailed throughout. Brn. Luff and Clapp delivered logical and forceful discourses. Every part of the district was represented save Santa Maria. Joseph Luff, J. C. Clapp, A. Carmichael, A. E. Jones, and William Gibson, of the missionary force, were present; more of the local priesthood reported than heretofore. Adjourned to meet at Newport, February 18, 1905. Measures obtained providing for the consolidation of fall conference and reunion; to effectually silence all those who refuse to perform the functions of their office and calling; to inaugurate preparatory measures for securing a new tent. Former district officials sustained. The report of the High Council in relation to the appeal of Barney W. Pock, sustaining the decision of the two lower courts on a charge of immoral conduct, was read. The defendant was excommunicated from the church on this charge over two years ago. An effort is now being made to raise the full amount of our district assessment on college debt at once: The Los Angeles Branch has contributed more than its assessment. Financial stringency is apparent everywhere. One hundred and fifty of Joseph Luff's latest books have been presented by one of the brethren to the district for circulation among nonmembers. We hope to keep them moving. The move in Lamoni to devise means for securing a home for children merits my unqualified support. To provide for the widow and orphan is pure religion. In fact my religious devotion is more and more present and practical in its application rather than deferred and utopian. I will not detract any from the possibilities of the millennium nor what Christ will do when he comes; but I am at present absorbed as to present limitations and possible expansion,—and what I can do. It is almost suicidal to church expansion, whenever a call for execution is made now, for the membership to for ever cry, "Oh, we can't do anything now. We must wait until Jesus comes"; or for another branch to say, "You can't have that until you change man's nature." If you want good crops you must have good soil. If you want good men you must institute good conditions. Environment determines character—change environment, change character.

There would be no slum children if there were no slums. Abolish slums and the slum atmosphere is dissipated. Avarice and depraved appetite are the source of all intemperance. The remedy lies in the elimination of the cause.

Prostitution is more an economic crime than lustful sin. We should teach our children to marry for pure love and affinity, rather than for money, home, or position. Better to marry a man out of the church whom you love than one in the church whom you do not love. If we devote as much energy and attention in preparing our young people for marital responsibility as we do in decrying the result of ignorance and folly when it is too late to effect a remedy, it would be far better for all concerned. The church and state may decree divorce, but stringent enactments will not effect a remedy. The cause of the trouble is farther back.

Provision for the dependent and helpless young and old is the first duty of the church. I wish our college was industrial rather than academic. Our Saints' Home should be enlarged to accommodate every needy dependent Saint.

The gospel in its results is practical and material as well as ideal and spiritual. Zion will come when we bring it, not before.

Yours consecrated to every good cause,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Dear Herald: I feel that there are some Saints that would be glad to hear from this little branch. I can say our experiences in this city have been various, some pleasant and encouraging, others of an unpleasant and discouraging nature; but they have all been for our good in that they have made our faith and confidence in God and his work stronger, and brightened the horizon of our hope; and where, before, there were clouds and darkness, the sun of righteousness now shines brighter. We are striving to manifest our gratitude by following more closely the footsteps of him who was the light of the world, so that our lives may reflect, in a degree, at least, the light and truth that was in him. I understand that we should be the light of the world in his place, and only when we walk as he walked, in purity, holiness, and love, manifesting in our association with our fellow beings, those divine characteristics, which in him were perfectly embodied, we can thus be his light. Thus we see there is much for us to reach; much for each one to come up to; and yet it is within the reach of all who accept the gospel, for that is the power of God unto salvation, which I understand is to become like Christ. In this city we are striving to hold forth the message of truth to the people, and have no intention to cease our efforts, whatever, but have become more determined to press onward and, if possible, make a stronger and more effectual attack upon the enemy, and rescue the captives from the chains of sin, unrighteousness, and error. I am glad to say our work has not been in vain.

"Cast your bread upon the water,
Ye who have but scant supply;
Angels fair will watch above it,
You shall find it by and by.

"He who in his righteous balance,
Doth each human action weigh,
Will your sacrifice remember,
Will your loving deeds repay."

We can begin to see the fruits of our labor. It has been three years, or nearly so, since we moved to this city. Our numbers have been ranging from six to ten the most of the time, till at last they number from ten to seventeen, and we feel to praise our heavenly Father for the increase. Two have been added by baptism of late, Bro. and Sr. Leonard, who are making noble workers, and we feel that they will be an honor to the cause. They drive eight miles every Sunday if it is not too stormy.

"O for a faith that will not shrink,
Tho' pressed by every foe,
That will not tremble on the brink,
Of any earthly woe."

I would to God that every Saint would rise to a higher and better standard before God and the world. "Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul; having your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, whereas they speak evil against you," it may be false. I believe that is just the example that a Saint should set, for "whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God."

Saints, "if ye love me, keep my commandments," for "he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

Think of it: both the Father and the Son. Shall we pass it by as an idle tale, or shall we press toward the mark of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus? We can not serve two masters at the same time. Doth a fountain send forth sweet water and bitter? Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olives or the vine, figs? So can no fountain yield both salt water and fresh; so can no child serve Christ and Satan at the same time. Which shall we accept? Now is the time to take our choice; for as sure as there is a God you and I have the opportunity to make our choice now in this life. We must go with the one we serve here on earth; for God will never accept salt water for fresh nor will he accept a wicked child for a good one. As for me, I prefer Christ. I want to so live that when the blessed Christ comes he can say, You have fought a good fight, you have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for you a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give you at that day, when he shall come to judge the world in righteousness.

I was told in my blessing to "use the talents God has give thee, and those that thou hast acquired by study and labor, for the good of thy fellows; doing good to those that are around thee. For thus in doing good, in filling thy life with good deeds, thou art making the record that when the book shall be opened, it shall be found that thy name has been written in the Lamb's Book of Life in letters of light; that the angels may see and readily recognize, when thou shalt stand before God who shall sit upon the throne, and the Son, even Jesus Christ, shall claim thee as his own, one who hath served him faithfully, who hath done what she could." Dear Saints, it is good to be a saint in latter-days.

I feel to say:

"My times are in thy hand;
My God! I wish them there;
My life, my friends, my soul, I leave Entirely to thy care."

As ever, your sister in the one faith,
MRS. A. R. CRIPPEN.

CLIFFSIDE, New Jersey, October 30, 1904.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have written anything for the HERALD. My last letter was from Peoria, Illinois, during the summer of 1895. During the time elapsing since writing I have not given up the ship of Zion, neither have I been entirely idle. Since that time I have passed through very bitter trials, but have no fault to find or complaint to make as I find that God does all things well, far better than does man. I am still in the faith, battling for the right, and hope to continue. Am endeavoring by example to demonstrate the truth of the restored gospel to the public, with which I come in contact. I have distributed some tracts here; what the results will be, is impossible to tell as yet.

For the benefit of the brethren in Brooklyn, where I am a member, I will say that I am still at my place of employment on the Hudson. I have not been over for some time neither have they been here, as I am working nights continually, full time, seven nights a week, or eighty-four hours. Have not much time to cross the great American metropolis to meet with the Saints in Brooklyn.

Let us press on; for the work is divine beyond all shadow of a doubt, and is worthy our every effort and sacrifice, even of life if needs be.

I would like to open a correspondence with three young brethren who have the welfare of Zion at heart,—one who is a good attorney, another, a good civil engineer, and the third a good business manager. If brethren understanding these lines of work will write me at my address, Cliffside, New Jersey, Box 106, I will give them my reasons for this request. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds,
A. G. YOUNG.

PLYMOUTH, Massachusetts, October 30, 1904.

Editors Herald: I feel somewhat interested in the work and would like a little space in your columns that I might speak about this latter-day work that has been restored in these days. I was at Haverhill the 23d of this month, and a more earnest set of Saints it has not been my lot to fall in with; not because I think there are no others, but the way they conducted themselves. I love to be with earnest Saints. It does my soul good. I still believe that the Saints in Plymouth would like to be in step with the church in general. I know they are sacrificing for the work, and are interested in the same; but it is an old saying that "you never miss the water until the well runs dry." It was told me that the Haverhill Branch did not have an elder to call upon them at one time for six months, and they have learned how to take advantage of one when he comes; and if an elder does not feel at home among them, then I think he has lost the idea of what good-meaning people are.

If the way is open I shall try to be with them again, and I want to be well prepared to feed the church of God that he has purchased with his own blood. This work requires an earnest effort and a living sacrifice to meet the demands. And I earnestly believe that he can use men to-day to bless humanity as he did Peter or Paul. I also believe that the same God has spoken from the high heavens to-day to men as he did unto them; and I can say to the church in general that all he requires of us is to live humble and devoted lives to him, and that same faith that crept into hearts of Abraham and Joshua, Peter and Paul, will creep into our hearts to-day, and may we all continue in his word, that we may be his disciples indeed; and we shall know the truth, and it will be confirmed through miracles. May God bless us all through the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Your brother,
N. R. NICKER.

MENARD, Illinois, October 31, 1904.

Dear Herald: I take the Epworth Herald, and the Literary Digest comes to me also, but I am going to write a few lines to my own favorite paper, which suits me better than the others, although I am alone here in my preference. I answered a letter two weeks ago which I received from a young minister in New Jersey, and as I always say something about the work, I just sent him the supplement to the HERALD of October 12, in order to be doing what I can to keep the ball rolling. It occurred that there will be a good deal published now as soon as Congress comes in session, about the latter-day work, and as some of the members of the Reorganized Church may be subpoenaed and the little paper would be of some service in explaining to him. I told him that Elder Elvin said in a letter in the SAINTS' HERALD last May that he believed that the animus behind the Smoot investigation was not so much about the doctrine of polygamy, as a determination on the part of some to strike a death-blow at the angel's message, and everything that was Mormon.

I was in a bad state of mind for a few days last week, but was helped some when my papers came Friday, by reading the experience of the followers of Alpheus Cutler in Minnesota in 1865, also a splendid letter from Taylorville, Illinois, in the letter department. I wish success to the great cause; and that in some way the eyes of all people may be opened to its truth and divinity.

Yours truly,
JOS. L. GILES.

Dear Herald: A lack of diligence on our part will place us in a frame of mind that will allow skepticism to creep in; and we try to study out the mysteries of God through human wisdom, and the result is fatal; the sublimity of God's work fades before us and we become discouraged; everybody is doing wrong; the church is not what it ought to be, and backward, downward we go, into the beggarly elements of the world, becoming blind we can not see afar off, forgetting that we were once "purged from our old sins."

If we are on duty we will be on guard against the enemy, and there will be no danger of dissatisfaction. God will give us of his Spirit, and we can see clearly. Our own little wisdom will be superseded by the divine.

The fact is that what God has said shall be, will be, regardless of all the scientific views we may throw on it; and some day these people that look at God's promises from a scientific standpoint—can't see just how it is going to be done, because everything appears to be against it—will be wonderfully surprised. But that has been and is the fate of many, history repeating itself. If people that died fifty years ago, could open their eyes in this the twentieth century, they would be mightily surprised. And many of us of to-day, if we are permitted to live will be convinced that one jot and one tittle of that which has been spoken shall not pass away, but all will be fulfilled. "Watch therefore," is the instruction given by the Savior.

Duty is that that brings to pass all things. When we do our duty God is bound. Our Savior knew this, hence he said: "I do always those things that please him [the father]." Duty is to do the will of God. To obey the gospel is life; indifference to that brings disappointment to those out or in the church.

Many a calamity would have been avoided if people had done their duty; so it is in political affairs, in the business of life's pursuits, and spiritually in our dealings with God. Israel of old found that out. Paul in his writings says, "These things things happened unto them for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition." Latter-day Israel found it out. God said: "They might have been redeemed even now, but, behold they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I required at their hands." Even at the present day, duty is neglected, indifference is so great, notwithstanding we stand on a firmer foundation, because of the experiences of the past.

The five wise virgins were dutiful, hence they had oil in their lamps; the foolish were indifferent and were left out. Reader, let us measure our standing with this, and let us remember duty.

I well remember a narrative of an incident in Bro. M. M. Turpen's work while in the South. He said, "I got in some hard places; they ordered me to leave and threatened my life. I told them that I came to preach the gospel, and if they killed me, there were plenty of young men where I came from who were not afraid to die, and they would have the gospel preached to them just the same." If I understood him right, Bro. Turpen did not leave, and I know that they did not kill him, for he is still sounding the trumpet.

Well, the gospel will be preached for a witness, and the great latter-day work will roll on. If we are diligent we will share the benefit, and stand in our lot at the last day. It is an honor to suffer and die for the sake of the gospel, though they may hurl their epithets, and speak evil of us falsely.

George Washington said: "The best answer to calumny, is to keep silence and persevere." In our case we go right ahead with our work and leave the results with God. We need not be dissatisfied with our Christian experience if we do our duty. God is true, but we must do our part. God carries on this work through human instrumentality, and it will be our glory ultimately if we take a part, and in no other way. Some have told me of their dissatisfaction in the latter-day work. I am satisfied that they are at fault. While they may have grown in knowledge, they have lost their zeal, and that means their love. The only way to bring satisfaction is to get back into duty, and put their shoulders to the wheel.

The work in the Southern Nebraska District is moving along nicely. Some have been gathered into the fold. A good many of the Saints are trying to live their religion, which makes it better for the missionaries. With God's help we are determined to push on and accomplish what we can. And while the missionary can not recompense according to his gratefulness and appreciation of what the Saints do for him, there is a day coming when God will reward all with measure trodden down and running over.

With an interest in the prayers of the Saints, I am,
Your brother in gospel bonds,

ADOLPH E. MADISON.

CUE, Western Australia, September 18, 1904.

Dear Herald: Please print a line of warning to Saints not to leave their homes and come to the Western Australia gold-fields, because there is nothing for them if they come. Most of the golden reports we read in the papers are false and are only to get a number of people out here. I have written a lot of warning letters to people, but still they come. The Saints, however, will believe me. It is better to stay at home and make a quiet living than to give up all and come out here. The country is very hot; sometimes a hundred and twenty degrees in the shade. Most of the mines are very poor, and no money to work them deeper. There are a few good mines on the Murchison; the best is the Great Fengall, at Day Dawn, and mostly foreigners are employed there. There is good land along the coast, and the Government offers an opportunity for settlers with families to take up land. There are some very good farms, but I think you have much better land in the United States. The water on the gold-fields is full of mineral, and it is difficult to get useful plants to grow. I have wasted ten years of my life out here, and I hope to leave the fields in about three months. I would have left years ago if I could have made a few hundred pounds to take up some land on the coast. I shall leave poorer and with less good health than when I came; but I have found the restored gospel (on the fields) and it is the richest mine the earth can give. If I live I hope to see the land of Zion. If I die I hope to die in Christ. These are riches that last for all time. In my hard times I have found my books and papers a great comfort. I believe I was called for this work when I was fourteen years of age, but I was too fond of life and the things of this world to give my heart to God, so I lost a life of usefulness for him. I am nearly fifty years of age now, but I feel sure if I live faithful to him in my last days, I will find a rest in him at last. There are seven or eight Saints in Western Australia, but they are scattered about the field, and are hundreds of miles apart. Elder Clark is at the Black Range. It was he who brought me to a knowledge of the restored gospel, and baptized me in a little brook in Mount Magnet. Bro. Brodway and family and Sr. Clark are in Perth. I must now conclude with a prayer for the redemption of Zion, and the final gathering of the Saints of God. Address me at Mount Magnet.

Yours in the restored gospel.

Independence Items.

On Sunday, the 30th ult., the weather was delightful. The rich tints of autumn's foliage, with here and there flowers still blooming in the garden-beds seemed to enhance the beauty of the scene as we met the happy groups of children going to Sunday-school. Bro. and Sr. J. A. Robinson, Jr., who have been members of the orchestra, are about to remove to a farm of forty acres, situated five miles from Tulsa, Indian Territory.

We were glad to greet Bro. W. H. Garrett, who returned from a trip to Batesville, Arkansas, where he visited Bro. and Sr. L. P. Caldwell. Our brother has charge of the electric plant there.

After the organ offertory, Salome's Introduction in b flat, the congregation sang a hymn, Bishop May offered prayer, the choir of twenty voices sang "Like as a father pitieth his children," and Bishop G. H. Hilliard was announced as speaker. The first verse of the twenty-fourth Psalm was his text. His effort was an exhortation to the Saints to keep the law, and prepare for the work the Lord has for them to do. They should not seek to work independently of those who have been appointed to give counsel, and he wanted to impress them with the thoughts contained in the Scriptures he had read both from the New Testament and the book of Covenants. In the evening T. C. Kelley also delivered a good discourse. Many favorable comments were made on these sermons, and some who had become indifferent of late were by the morning's talk awakened to a renewed interest in the latter-day work, while others with some misgivings, because of slight peculiarities of speech, would fain turn away with "invincible repugnance."

Such people as these declare that in this highly educational age, the survival of the fittest obtains in the literary and religious as well as in the animal world; and the Latter Day Saint elder, they say, who can use the name of the Deity, not in vain, and without repetition, who is not given to egotism, or the use of ungrammatical and slang phrases, is the most powerful for good, and, in his counsel, most likely to be heeded.

The prayer-meeting of Wednesday evening was replete with good, strong testimonies, Bro. Warnock leading, in regard to experiences in the Utah church; and many evidences he and his progenitors have received are valuable, because they are concerning the divine calling of both the prophet Joseph and his legal successor.

The unwritten history given in the testimonies of the Saints of the Reorganization is corroborative of what our historians have already written and compiled, and almost every day something interesting is related. Among the rest is a short sketch of some of Father Hawley's church experience. Thirty-seven years ago he was baptized into the faith in Caldwell County. His father, Pierce Hawley, who died at the age of sixty-seven in Missouri in 1867, having in 1839 been appointed on a committee to move the poor, conveyed with his own team fourteen families out of Missouri to Quincy, Illinois, and from there fifty miles up the river to Nauvoo. George, his son, our aged brother, at that time was a young man of fifteen.

From the spring of 1839 to July, 1843, he was acquainted with the prophet Joseph, and heard him preach frequently. To use his own words, he "never heard him preach a hint of such a thing as polygamy." George's mother was a member of the Aid Society and Emma Smith was the president,—“a noble woman and highly respected by all.” In commenting on matters at Nauvoo, he said that General Joseph Smith, at that time, a smart, intelligent, bright man in the prime of life, although having been appointed to the position of commander-in-chief, never gave a word of command, but this duty (he being a religious man, the head of the church) devolved upon Doctor J. C. Bennett, who was general in command of the Nauvoo Legion. This was a body yielding obedience to the laws of the country and was required to muster and be drilled as minute men.

Bro. Hawley belonged to Captain Davis's company of Dragoons. His father and mother heard not a word about polygamy at that time.

They joined Lyman Wight's colony in 1843, went to Black River, and afterward to Texas, where a few were, in time, made aware of the doctrine.

He said, "In 1843 we brought a raft of lumber that we sawed on Black River to help build the Temple and Nauvoo House. We ran the raft through the Mississippi, and Brigham Young received it in 1844, about two months after the martyrdom."

Speaking of Elder Sydney Rigdon, he had an appointment to preach, at Nauvoo shortly after Joseph's death, and a delegate from Brigham Young was sent to notify Lyman to meet with the Twelve; but Lyman refused to go, "because it was a wrong done Sydney to take his congregation away."

At the same time, Brigham Young called this meeting in order to make his claim before Sydney had opportunity, and sent word to Lyman to meet him there. And this is only a small part of the testimony: "The half has never been told."

We find the church papers to be very useful literature to present to our visitors on account of the editorials, sermons, and articles contained therein.

May the good work of ministering with the excellent word of truth go on, and prosper, is our earnest wish.

Extracts from Letters.

William Chapman, Higbee, Missouri: "This place is taking quite a boom. One of the largest coal deals in the State has been effected; twenty thousand acres of coal have been purchased by one company. There is plenty of work here at present; and if brethren, who are carpenters, miners, or farmers who desire to change their location, will write me, I will give them what information I can."

Elder Richard Baldwin, writes from Eremson Hill, somewhere in one of the eastern fields: "I have just closed a series of meetings in this place. While here I baptized four fine people, and expect to organize a branch here this month."

Sr. L. B. Davison, 704 North A Street, Arkansas City, Kansas, writes: "Of the large population here only four of us are members of the church in this city. Bro. Vickery, who lives about nine miles from town, visits us the first Sunday each month, and his preaching is strengthening to our faith. I wonder why some of the elders do not come here; we could take care of them."

Conference Minutes.

British Isles.—Annual conference met in our North Manchester room at 6 p. m., July 30, 1904. Apostle J. W. Rushton occupied the chair, assisted by Elders C. H. Cato and Joseph Dawson of the bishopric. In his introductory remarks Bro. Rushton said he hoped we should have a spiritual time. He regretted the absence of Bishop Thomas Taylor not because of his forensic ability but for his influence. He hoped we had come together for the advancement of the work and that we should have a holy time more than a holy day. He spoke of some valiant workers who would soon have to leave us. We were all growing older. He hoped there would be no struggle for masteries as we are all servants. "Ours is the gospel of love," he said. We largely got what we looked for. Our work is retrospective and introspective. It makes us enthusiastic. He hoped our enthusiasm would be intelligent for uncontrolled enthusiasm was the harbinger of disaster. He called our attention to the fact that we are in a church not "playing at church." He wanted to learn from the mistakes of the past, and rejoice in success if scientifically obtained. If we have failed we want to ascertain the reasons for failure. He thought we had failed to keep up the interest of people who had entered the work. Modern indifference is the result of failure to satisfy the people's demands. There is a reaction now. The people want something satisfying. Now is the time to show that there is a God in our religion. Our chief fault is we do not keep up an intelligent enthusiasm. We ought to go from this conference determined to learn more about this work. God manifest in us, is what we want. This power to represent God in the flesh is lacking. Bro. Rushton said he felt grateful that God had given this work to us. There is a crying-out for the work. The people wanted something to satisfy their needs. He hoped that all would ultimately sing the "new song" and be redeemed not only from sin but unto God.

Bro. Simon Clark was chosen conference deacon with power to call to his assistance helpers. Bro. J. Foden was elected chorister and Sr. Ada Green organist of the conference. The order of the Sunday services was left in the hands of the president. The minutes of the 1903 conference were now read. The mission president's report being read it was resolved that it be read again on Monday morning. Missionary reports were read from Elders J. W. Rushton, E. B. Morgon, W. H. Greenwood, T. J. Sheldon baptized one, and F. J. Pierce.

The Hamilton (Scotland) Branch was reported by Elder R. W. Munro, as in a pretty fair condition. Some appear to be interested in our work and there are hopes for the future.

Districts: Manchester was reported by Elder H. Greenwood, who said he believed the Saints were desirous of living their religion and keeping the commandments of God. The branches are growing in numbers and faith. The ministry are credited with striving to do their best.

Birmingham was reported by Bro. W. Ecclestone as in fairly good condition. Branches were doing nicely, adding to their numbers, and are striving to walk harmoniously and peaceably.

Eastern Wales was reported by Thomas Gould as not flourishing. They were doing their best. Five have been added during the year. It seems harder to reach the people now. The majority appear to be indifferent to religion. The greater part of the ministry are active.

Elder Thomas Taylor reported the spiritual condition of Leeds as good. The Saints were doing nobly. There is a commendable spirit of sacrifice amongst them. The interest has increased during the past two months. Twenty have been added since last conference. London, Elder R. Clift reports in fair condition spiritually. The branch has passed through a crisis during this past year. Things are now improving. The ministry are working faithfully. Elder W. H. Greenwood could wish that a brighter report of Sheffield could be given. He has expended much time in trying to revive those who have lost their first love. Elder James Baty, patriarch, reported labor in South Manchester. He had only officiated once or twice. He wanted to labor as the Lord directed. Elder Joseph Greenwood, patriarch, Stafford, reëchoed Bro. James Baty's statements. He did not want to presume. He desired to be directed by the Holy Spirit in officiating. He had been led out to the advantage and good of those concerned. He thought there was some misunderstanding. The Father stands ready to give to his children. Some may desire what might not be good. We should ask for what may be righteous, for our good, and for the good of the church. We should not ask in order to consume it upon our lusts.

The Bishopric's interim report was next read. It showed cash in hand, June 30, 1904, £5 10s 1½d. Elder Thomas Taylor (Leeds) reported laboring as missionary to the best of his ability. Elder William Newton reported (verbally) as a missionary, baptized seven. The book agent's report was now read. An appeal from the Bishopric respecting the college debt was next read, also a report from the locating committee.

The correspondence respecting Bro. Broadway and the New South Wales District was read. The report on the same was by resolution received and spread upon the minutes. Bro. W. K. Armstrong stated that he regretted to say that he had been unable to prepare the illuminated addresses asked of him at our 1903 conferences to be presented to Presidents Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans owing to lack of time. A letter written by Bro. Rushton to Bro. Salyards respecting district boundaries was read; also the reply to the same, after which it was resolved that a committee be appointed consisting of the presidents of the branches and districts to investigate the question of boundaries and report to the next conference. The matter of the illuminated addresses was considered with the result that it was resolved that Bro. Armstrong be tendered a vote of thanks for his efforts and that we relieve him from the responsibility of fulfilling the request of the 1903 conference, viz., to prepare the illuminated addresses. It was resolved that a committee be appointed to devise ways and means of getting the illuminated addresses to the presidents of the church completed, if it be possible to get the work done. The following brethren were then appointed by the chair: Elders George Baty, J. E. Meredith, and J. W. Taylor. Report of the Seventh Quorum of Elders and of the Sixth Quorum of Priests was read. Resolved that we sustain Bro. J. W. Rushton, with our faith and prayers, as mission president. The absence of Bishop Taylor for the first time for over forty years owing to infirmity, caused profound regret and sorrow. Elder C. H. Caton, one of his counselors, being present from Birmingham, was asked to convey to the respected, much loved, and aged veteran of the work in the British Isles, expressions of our sympathy. The resignation of Elder Mather, assistant secretary of the mission, was accepted and a vote of thanks for past services tendered to him. The mission secretary and local historian was sustained by vote. Elder J. D. Howell was chosen assistant secretary of the mission by vote, vice Elder Mather retired. The mission treasurer, Bishop Taylor, also the Bishopric as a body, were sustained by vote. The patriarchs, Elders J. Baty and Joseph Greenwood, and the general church authorities were sustained. Bro. J. W. Rushton was chosen by vote to be our representative at the next General Conference. Bro. Alfred Fysh of 18 Sharp Street, Warrington, was supported as the British Isles book-agent. The Isles missionaries were sustained by vote. The retiring auditor of mission accounts, Elder J. D. Howell, was now elected for three years. It was then stated that all accounts of every kind pertaining to the mission would be audited. Votes of thanks were awarded the catering and locating committees and all workers of the conference. The secretary's expenses were next ordered to be paid. This concluded the business-sessions of the conference. The meeting now adjourned for tea, after which a joint-meeting of the mission officers, branch and district officers, and elders was held to consider in what way we could best advance the spiritual needs of the mission. We feel sure much good was done in this joint-assembly. Plain talk was indulged in and we are hopeful for future good results from the same.

Leeds England.—The quarterly conference convened on July 8 and 9. The business-session was held at the Burley Room on Saturday evening, 7 o'clock. Apostle J. W. Rushton was chosen to preside. The spiritual reports of the two branches were read: Leeds reported a good condition; Burley was unable to give so good a report as at the last conference. Bishop's agent's report showed that a total amount of £11 14s 3d had been received from January to September. District treasurer, Bro. S. Horton, reported: Previous balance and receipts for the quarter, £5 1s ½d; expenditures, 11s 9d; balance, £4 9s 3½d. The committee of the Leeds district missionary fund reported: Previous balance and receipts for the quarter, £3 10s 1d; expenditure, £3 5s 11d; balance, 4s 2d. The district secretary, Bro. W. R. Roberts, resigned and Bro. Hammond was appointed his successor. The usual resolution was passed sustaining general and local church authorities. W. R. Roberts, retiring secretary.

Western Wales.—Conference convened with the Llanelly Branch on Saturday and Sunday, October 1 and 2. Elder E. B. Morgan, district president, in charge; Henry Ellis, secretary. Spiritual reports of Llansamlet, Penegraig, and Llanelly. Officers reporting: Elders E. B. Morgan, J. G. Jenkins, David Lewis, David Thomas, J. O. Evans, Gwitym Davies, and Henry Ellis; Priests William T. Cox, John Morris, and David Edmunds; Teacher A. Edwards. Book agent's report: Receipts, £4 6s 8½d; paid over to Bishop Taylor and postage expenses, £3 12s 8d; in hands of agent, 14s. Bro. Evan Miles was recommended by the Penegraig Branch for ordination to the office of priest, and was duly ordained on the 2d inst. under the hands of Elders E. B. Morgan, David Lewis, and Henry Ellis. A collection was taken up for repairing the chapel at Llanelly, and the secretary was instructed to write, asking the branches to assist in this worthy object. Brn. E. B. Morgan, Evan Davies, and Arthur Edwards were appointed as a committee for this matter. The committee report on re-collecting the Welsh Hymn Book was given and received, and the committee continued. Resolved that the district president be allowed the whole of his traveling expenses in the district, other officers of the district to receive half. A very favorable statistical report came to hand from Sr. Evans, secretary of the late Aberaman Branch (now suspended) known as Aberaman Mission. The secretary was instructed to write requesting all parties in the district in possession of bundles of tracts and parts of unbound hymn-books, (such property not being their own,) to deliver them up, to be kept in the chapel at Llanelly. Officers were elected as follows: David Lewis, district president; Henry Ellis, secretary, also sustained as book-agent. The President and all the authorities of the church were sustained in their respective order, and the conference adjourned to meet at Llanelly the first Saturday and Sunday in March, 1905.

Corrections.

For the word services in line 11, from the top of page, second column, on page 1013, read surfaces, referring to the earth's surface under the waters of the rivers, lakes, bays, seas, and oceans, which men have surveyed and platted for use in the occupation of harbors, roadsteads, and for the purposes of navigation generally.

Also, the conference of the Southeastern Illinois District adjourned to meet "second Saturday in February, 1905," instead of 1904.

In the poem entitled, "Will there be any gems for my crown," in second stanza the word point should read direct. It should also be observed that the first chorus is for first and second stanzas; second chorus for last stanza only.

On page 1059 (this issue), first signature on second column should be N. R. Nickerson.

Pastoral.

To the Saints in Southeastern Illinois District, Greeting: It having been revealed to the church that the college debt should be paid, and our part of it as advised by the Bishop being $280, we voted in our last district conference to pay it off. The amount to be paid per member is 36 cents. Some should pay more as some are scattered; none should pay less, that the amount may be raised in due time. Hand the money to the branch treasurer or president, that it may be sent to the Bishop's agent, F. M. Davis, Thompsonville, Illinois, R. F. D. No. 2, who will send it to Bishop Kelley. Those who wish may send to F. M. Davis direct; but in all cases, whether the money is sent by branch officers or others to Bro. Davis, please give the name or names of those sending, and the branch, of which they are members, that a correct account may be kept. We desire the amount paid within six weeks, or sooner if possible. Should there be over the amount designated put into the hands of the Bishop's agent the surplus can be applied either on the running expenses of the college or on the tithing fund as conference may direct. Let none be uneasy as to that, but let us have confidence in each other and in the Lord and all will be well. Let us do this willingly and not grudgingly, and the Lord will bless us.

I. A. MORRIS, District President.
C. J. SPURLOCK, Missionary.

Report of the Committee on Merging the Sunday-School and the Religio.

To the General Conventions of Zion's Religio-Literary Society and the Sunday-school Association; Greeting: We, your joint committee, to whom was referred the proposition to unite the two organizations into one, report as follows:

1. Owing to the widely scattered condition of the members of the committee, we have failed to publish our report six months before convention, but present it at the earliest practical time, hoping to be excused for failure to comply with this part of our instructions, and trusting the purpose in our appointment may not materially suffer by the delay.

2. After giving the matter a thorough canvass; securing written expressions from those foremost in moving and advocating the proposition, as well as from the various members of the committee, each independent of the others, we find as follows: a. While some good general reasons favoring merging have been presented, those offering them have failed to prepare a plan, except in a very brief and incomplete way, of carrying same into effect. b. The reasons against merging outnumber at least two to one those for it, and some of them so far outweigh in importance those for it as to render the question practically one-sided. c. To publish the pros and cons would be unnecessary as well as unprofitable.

3. We recommend, therefore, that the proposition be respectfully laid upon the table.

Respectfully submitted,
Committee, { J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Chairman,

National Reform Convention.

A conference on the Christian Principles of Civil Government will be held in the First United Presbyterian Church, Washington, Iowa, on November 15 and 16. This convention is under the auspices of the National Reform Association, which has its headquarters at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and is composed of people from perhaps all of the evangelical denominations. Reverend Sylvester F. Scovel, D. D., recently president of Wooster University, Ohio, has been the president of the Association for some years.

Similar conventions are being held this fall in Kansas, Pennsylvania, and Vermont.

The Association aims to bring to the front such topics as the Bible in the Schools, the Liquor Traffic, the Divorce Problem, the Mormon Menace, Legislation Concerning the Sabbath, and kindred topics. The struggle concerning the Bible in the schools is going forward in different places. The Bible has been ruled out recently in California, and before that in Minnesota, Washington, and other States. The question of whether a Mormon apostle shall continue to sit in the United States Senate, is before the American people.

At the approaching convention, Reverend Winthrop Allison, of Albia, will discuss "Polygamy," Reverend D. W. Yllie, of Iowa City, will speak on "The quickening of the national conscience"; Reverend W. G. Hubbard of Cedar Rapids, presents an address on "The best solution of the liquor question"; Reverend Alex. Corkey, of Fairfield, speaks on "Modern forms of Sabbath profanation"; President C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, Illinois, discusses the theme, "Make Jesus king," and Reverend T. H. Acheson, of Denver, Colorado, will speak on "Christianity and the state." Reverend C. L. Tennant, of Burlington, will discuss "The Bible in the schools." There will be other speakers and topics.

THE LATE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

The Republic of the United States composed of forty five independent sovereignties called States having a common center of government consisting of a President and Vice President, a Senate and House of Representatives, passes through a season of political agitation every four years, in which the people of the several States select by ballot the chief officers, President and Vice President, who shall be the national representatives in the executive government for the following period of four years.

On November 8 of this year the general election for President and Vice President took place. It is remarkable that an election of so much importance should have passed off so quietly and with so little general and local disturbance as characterized this election. The two great parties, the Republican and Democratic, made their respective campaigns earnestly, but without so much fuss and noise as usual, and the result has been decisive. Theodore Roosevelt, the present incumbent of the presidential office, has been chosen by an overwhelming majority and will occupy the White House at Washington as the nation's Chief Executive for the four years beginning March 4, 1905, unless such term of office be broken by death from natural causes, assassination by some lawless fanatic, or by impeachment for malfeasance in office. Either of these causes is possible of occurrence, but we sincerely hope that there will no one be found sufficiently depraved to cut short the life of the President and throw the nation into gloom, as has thrice occurred already in the deaths of Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley.

The occupant of the White House should be a representative American, thoroughly imbued with the love of country and acquainted with its needs and its laws and possess sufficient courage to perform his duty fairly and honestly without truckling to partisan dictation, or fearing possible political disaster to the party by which he may have been chosen. The Electoral College consists of four hundred and seventy-six electors chosen by the respective States in accordance with prevailing politics in each, and of these Mr. Roosevelt has three hundred and forty-three and Mr. Parker one hundred and thirty-three, a remarkable showing, and one for which it is difficult to account upon the ordinary division of the two great parties. Of this we have nothing to say, further than this: We regret to see charges of speculation and corruption and dishonesty of purpose and un-Americanism in spirit charged by either party against the other, as it should be conceded by all that the masses of either party, including their chosen leaders, have and can only have the best interests of the country at large at heart. The membership of each of the parties, though there may be many in the field, is composed of American citizens, who at the polls officially declare their preferences in regard to the policies which should shape the public administration of the nation's affairs. It is in our judgment a mistake to charge dishonesty and want of patriotism upon these American citizens. Whatever may have been their initial nationality, they have by adoption accepted American citizenship and have become parts and parcels of the nation which they represent at the polls, and there may be small choice between the patriotism of those but lately removed from their allegiance to other national governments and those whose possible progenitors may have been here prior to the Declaration of Independence and the formation of the United States Government. This has been proved on too many battle-fields upon which devotion to the Government has been an issue both at home and abroad. This must apply to the two great parties between which the contest at the polls was more immediately waged and the fractional parties represented by Eugene V. Debs for the Socialists, Thomas Watson for the Populists, and Doctor Swallow for the Prohibitionists. Each represented its own peculiar demand for the suffrages of the people, and each must concede his allegiance to the choice which has been made. There was an increase in the volume of votes for the Socialist ticket, a possible decrease for the Populist, and a comparatively small representation for the Prohibitionist. Whether this may forecast the merging of any considerable portion of the contending parties under the Socialist banner hereafter remains to be seen.

A reorganization of the Democratic party is already talked of and allegiance to the leading men who managed the last campaign from the convention at St. Louis unto the closing of the polls November 8 is likely to be renounced and other leaders representing other policies be chosen. There was great similarity between the platforms of the two leading parties. Whether this similarity will continue to exist or will be seriously changed, will remain for the politicians to determine, and citizens may certainly confidently wait for the development that time may bring. It is the duty of all to maintain the dignity of American citizenship and uphold the constituted authorities in the righteous discharge of the duties devolving upon them and leave the great national issues between this Government and others to the arbitrament of the powers that have determined this land to be the arena of conflict between despotism and liberty.

John Morley, an eminent English statesman, a member of the British Parliament, was visiting in this country at Chicago on the day of the election. It was to him an extraordinary thing that an election of the whole assembly of States could be held all on the same day and the result be known within twenty-four hours after the closing of the polls. And it also seemed to be an astonishing thing to him that so great good nature should characterize the contending elements in the political contest. This evidently results from the consideration of the fact that the rule of the majority is universally acquiesced in. When the matter is put to the test and the question decided, there is but the one thing to do, and that is to accept the verdict of the people and lend every proper and possible aid to a carrying out of the proper enforcement of the law. The Chicago Tribune has a characteristic editorial in regard to this visit of Mr. Morley and its possible results. We give it in connection with this editorial:

An election in Chicago, witnessed by a British member of parliament, may be the means of causing a radical change in English election laws.

John Morley, English statesman, left last night for Washington after a four days' visit in Chicago, so impressed with what he had seen of an American election that he could scarcely talk of anything else, and of what an excellent thing it would be if Great Britain also could have a general election "all on the same day."

"I'll never be satisfied until we conduct our election all on the same day, as you do in the United States," Mr. Morley said. "It's a needed reform. There will be traditions to overcome, but I am hopeful of bringing about the desired reform."

"I was impressed, too, with the good nature of the losing side. There seemed to be absolutely no ill feeling."

Mr. Morley will return to England with a large bundle of election matter, including samples of ballots and instructions to voters.

He will be the guest of President Roosevelt in Washington for a few days and then will go to New York, where he will remain ten days before sailing. He gave a luncheon yesterday at the Chicago Club. The guests were Franklin MacVeagh, Charles L. Hutchinson, Frank K. Jones, A. L. Baker, Charles D. Norton, and Graeme Stewart.

SHALL WE KNOW EACH OTHER BEYOND THE GRAVE?

This question is a prevalent source of thought among all classes of religious believers. Perhaps by no other people is the question asked with more intensity of feeling than by the Latter Day Saints. We do not propose to attempt to answer this question categorically or at any great length. However, it seems fair to state that our belief is unmistakably to the effect that those who have been acquainted with each other on the earth will renew such acquaintance and knowledge of each other on the other side.

In confirmation of this belief we quote from the words of the Savior, Matthew 8: 11: "And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven." Also the statement made by the Savior in reference to marriage, referring to those who are privileged to rise in the resurrection, they "are as the angels which are in heaven. . . . I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living." Also the statement made by the Master, "Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. . . . For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him."

Of the same character is the statement made by the Master when children were brought unto him and the disciples rebuked those who brought them: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." (See also Mark 10:14; Luke 18:16.)

These testimonies are singular if they do not mean that there shall be an interdependent knowledge of identities and personalities in the world to come; for if many shall come from the east and the west and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God, these worthies must necessarily be recognizable, or there is no value in the promise. And if little children are without sin and their angels do always behold the face of their Father who is in heaven, they also must retain their conscious identity and be recognized.

At the time of universal peace prophesied of by Micah (4:4) when strong nations shall be rebuked and the Lord shall judge among many people, swords shall be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks, the sword shall not be lifted up against any nation and the art of war shall not be studied nor learned, "They shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

At the time the Savior rebuked his disciples and the children of Zebedee with their mother besought a favor of the Savior to the effect that he should grant that her two sons should sit the one on his right hand and the other on his left in his kingdom, he answered her thus: "Ye know not what ye ask. . . . Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on my right hand and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father."

The Book of Mormon tells us that the greatest gift of God is eternal life; and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants 6:21 informs us that certain parties shall dwell with Jesus in glory; and we are also informed by Paul in 2 Thessalonians 4:17 that those who are caught up into the air to be with Jesus shall ever be with him. This is confirmed in Doctrine and Covenants 85:27; 98:5.

We conclude from all these testimonies that we shall know each other beyond the mists of death and in the light and life of the Lord.

PREHISTORIC PEOPLE.

Sr. Blanche Lewis, Denver, Colorado, sends a clipping from the Denver Post, in which Doctor Baum makes the following statement:

Between Denver and Salt Lake City and the Mexican boundary there are over fifteen thousand Pueblo and cliff ruins that we may claim as prehistoric. They vary from two-room dwellings to structures containing over two thousand rooms. In central New Mexico I saw, this summer, stonework in Pueblo ruins worthy of our own time. I believe this region maintained a population of over ten millions of people. The time and the cause of their disappearance is the problem we are trying to solve.

Sr. Lewis asks, "Why do they not read the Book of Mormon?" It would certainly throw some light upon the subject. The incident of the three days of darkness is brought vividly to mind, and we are led to ponder upon the time when the whole face of the land was changed, mountains being cast up in places, rocks rent in twain, etc., by a consideration of the following statement made by Doctor Baum:

One of the objects of my expedition this summer was to examine the great lava beds of New Mexico, to see if there were any evidences of human habitation before some of them took place. I am firmly convinced that the Southwest was occupied by this prehistoric people before some of the great volcanoes were active, and that most of the buildings were destroyed by seismic action. There are several extinct volcanoes in New Mexico that Vesuvius in comparison is a mere toy. From these, streams of lava flowed for over one hundred miles and sometimes to a width of thirty miles.

When these volcanoes were active, the Southwest was a seething furnace. What we need, and I believe Congress will authorize, is an archaeological survey of the Southwest. With it can be combined other work, similar to what Russia has done in Siberia, that will be of vast benefit to the agricultural interests of this vast region. Before the volcanic eruptions took place the climatic conditions were surely different from those of the present time.

GRACELAND NOTES.

"I think the debt should be paid by all means," writes Bro. L. M. Herrick, of Zuni, West Virginia, and to emphasize his statement he incloses an express order for five dollars.

Bro. D. S. Palmer, San Antonio, Texas, agent for the Southwestern Texas District, forwards a portion of their assessment, showing that some of the Saints there are striving to conform to the divine injunction.

Sr. Helen Ackley, Hill City, Kansas, sends her offering and writes: "I hope the college will not be closed, for it is an institution which has long been needed in the church. I am satisfied it will prove a power through which great good will be accomplished. Now it is young and needs the united support of the Saints, both brethren and sisters. It is the duty of all to help nourish and strengthen it, and soon it will become strong and powerful. It was shown me in a dream in which the college was represented as a young child almost famished, and that it was the duty of the Saints to nourish it, and it would live and become strong and powerful."

The Society of Patronesses gave a dinner at Lamoni on election day and cleared about ninety-five dollars.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Brooklyn Eagle for October 30, 1904, has a three-quarter column report of an interview with Bro. F. M. Smith, with reference to the work of the church, with fair comments by the reporter.

In giving credit for the receipt of catalogues and pamphlets descriptive of the beauties and facilities of Hawaii we credited them to Bro. G. J. Waller, of Honolulu; we should have given credit to Bro. John Mahuka. We are informed of our mistake by Bro. Waller, and cheerfully correct. We hope Bro. Mahuka will pardon us our error.

Bro. Columbus Scott, writing from Sacramento, California, November 2, sends notice of death of Sr. Mahala Moor, aged nearly ninety-nine years. And further says: "I was up at Chico, Butte County, and held meetings for two weeks and left the Saints hopeful. Saints here are rather lonesome since Bro. R. J. Parker left them for his home at Independence, Missouri. I think to leave here this week for Santa Rosa and other points, before returning to Southern California. Yourself, Alexander H., and others there are remembered by Saints here, and also in their prayers. An almost absolute indifference to the work here seems to prevail with all except the Saints. It is hard pushing under the circumstances. We need the faith and prayers of the Saints there.

Life.

A little dreaming by the way,
A little toiling day by day;
A little pain, a little strife,
A little joy—and that is life.

A little short-lived summer's morn,
When joy seems all so newly born,
When one day's sky is blue above,
And one bird sings—and that is love.

A little sickening of the years,
The tribute of a few hot tears;
Two folded hands, the failing breath,
And peace at last—and that is death.

Just dreaming, loving, dying so,
The actors in the drama go—
A flitting picture on a wall,
Love, Death, the themes; but is that all?

An Acrostic.

Jesus Christ, the joy of heaven
Earth's strong hope, the only given;
Sacred name and blessed for ever,
Unto all the world the Savior.
So through him the great salvation

Comes to all by ordination.
Hail him earth! he's God's anointed;
Ransom for thy sons appointed,
Inthrilled man. behold thy freedom;
Sealed by Christ, What glorious wisdom!
Tensive was the pain and anguish

Suffered he lest man should perish,
On him all the burden rested,
None but him could thus be trusted;

Other means could not deliver Fallen man from Satan's power.

God through him made all creation;
On him then rests man's salvation.
Down to earth he came so lowly,

Silenced Satan's claim to glory.
Amid shouts of angels hailing
Victor from the grave arising;
Into hell he went victorious,
Offered there the gospel glorious,
Until man's complete redemption,
Reign! O Christ, in exaltation!

Obsequent to God, the Father,
Filling all demands for ever;

To his throne he went triumphant
Hailed by heav'nly hosts obeisant.
Enter, joy of heaven, enter!

Welcome Christ, the great Redeemer!
O, thou earth! Behold thy Savior
Reigns on high and lives for ever!
Life to all decreed, accomplished,
Death subdued and Satan vanquished.

We Forget.

Years pass on—are gone for ever,
And we stand and view the past,
Thinking of its joys and shadows,
Of its dreams which could not last.

While we plan our future living,
As we oft are apt to do,
We forget that God our Father,
Ruling earth, is planning, too.

We forget that, in his wisdom,
Our weak plans are foolish play;
We forget to ask his guidance
On our pathway day by day.

Trust his wisdom; trust his guidance,
And our path will then be blest,
And when life on earth is ended,
We will merit lasting rest.

THE NEW LIFE.

It is both logical and scriptural to believe the disciples of Christ can and should live a new and purer life after they are converted to him, and have applied the cleansing and saving powers of the gospel of God's dear Son than they did before. For this purpose Jesus "came down from heaven" to teach the sin-cleansing and soul-encouraging principles of the grandest law known to mankind. His precepts were practical and easy to be understood and their efficacy was enforced by a godly walk and conversation equaled by none. To make his work efficacious he, through the eternal Spirit, made the last official sacrifice for sin, "once for all and once for ever." And this work was the offering up of himself to his Father as the great High Priest over the house of God.

Writing of the condition of the unbeliever Paul says: "That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world."—Ephesians 2: 12.

But when the truth was accepted and the gospel obeyed Paul speaks of their changed condition in these encouraging words: "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God."—Ephesians 2: 19.

The constitutional law of God's universal kingdom is love to God and love to mankind and is proved by the words of Jesus when he said: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart; and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

When Christ came the old law was fulfilled, and at the cross abrogated, and the new law containing the laws of naturalization took the place of the old. By faith, repentance, baptism, and the birth of the Spirit through the laying on of hands, any and all who wished might become citizens of God's spiritual and universal kingdom.

This obedience, if rendered in faith, secures for the sinner a remission of all past sins and entitles him to the light, inspiration, and guiding influence of the Holy Spirit. By this sacred and holy power the true disciples of Christ become "partakers of the divine nature" as the seal of their adoption unto God's kingdom. Therefore Paul says: "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."—Philippians 2: 13. The last citation teaches that God so strengthens the will-powers by the grace given that the disciples are enabled to detect the evil and discern the right and resolve to accept the truth and do good. By divine favor there is also given to the disciples force of character so that like Christ they can do that which they know to be right and good.

This "hungering and thirsting after righteousness" brings us, because of the obedience rendered and the favor conferred, so closely in touch with God that we are filled with the Spirit. (See Acts 2: 4; 4: 8, 31; 7: 55; 9: 17.) Thus God imparts to the disciples extraordinary faith, and extraordinary wisdom, together with all the other manifestations of the Spirit. Jesus says: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples." Among the fruits born by the disciples because of the divine nature within are the following: Charity, which is the pure love of God shed abroad in the heart. (See Alma.) "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."—Paul.

Peter refers to the Christian graces as follows: Faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity. If the disciples are characterized by these graces they are humble, meek, righteous, merciful, "peacemakers," "pure in heart," and can reduce to practice the divine precept: "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven."

That the new life of the Christian might bless the world, Jesus said: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Jesus evidently meant to be understood as teaching: God is perfect in his sphere as God and his love is universally manifest for the good of all. As my followers, try to imitate the divine character as you see it manifest in me and be perfect men and women in your sphere. God is too wise and good to give to his children commandments which they can not obey. And if the disciples of Christ in this day and age of the world do the will of God by keeping all his commandments and following the example of Christ they stand upon the high and holy platform occupied by men of old, to whom God has referred as being perfect in their generation. They saw God and talked with him face to face.

Because one urges that such a high standard can and should be reached, in God's way and by his help, he is not necessarily affirming that he has reached that condition or is better than others. The teacher, if preaching under the influence and power of the Holy Spirit, may and should instruct and edify himself as well as others.

Paul says: "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." He does not say he ought to be, he may be, or, I hope he may be; but, "he is a new creature." It will do the disciples no harm to test themselves in harmony with Paul's rule. If they have changed their faith and practice, having discarded all evil and accepted all good, and have stepped out of darkness into the marvelous light of God, they can say with Paul: "Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed?" Our lives are hid with Christ in God.

"For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."—Galatians 3: 27.

This work is only commenced when we are baptized, for the long path of eternal life and everlasting progression is yet before us; for we have but entered in at the gate and the mansions of light and glory are in the far distance on the opposite side of the ever green field. Shall we persevere and reach our eternal abiding place?

In writing to the early disciples Peter said: "As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." After baptism our natures must be subdued and made to harmonize with that of Christ's. A mental and spiritual and moral development is to be made. To succeed we must believe it is possible with the help and favor of God. Jesus prayed: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." That is, make them pure and holy, and set them apart for thy holy service, and keep them from the evil that is in the world. "And for their sakes I sanctify myself that they also might be sanctified through the truth." As much as to say, I have taught them the truth, and they have seen and know my labor of love, and how I have been tempted and tried and have successfully resisted and remained pure. They have seen the power of God manifest through me, and know of the development I have made in the divine life; they shall see my suffering and witness my death and burial; they shall know of my resurrection and see my ascension and know of a certainty that eternal life is a realized fact. The truths which I have presented, the gospel of Christ and the law of God, are the means ordained of God by which the work can be done. They are the means by which I have sanctified myself; and what they have done for one, with the help of God they will do for you.

The following scriptural citations point out some things to be observed in order to reach the grand condition of life referred to which is the climax of the Christian's hope: "Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good." "Abstain from all appearance of evil." "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." "And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

The disciple who will devote much of his time in trying to store his mind with the things mentioned above will find his words and actions harmonizing therewith, and will be recognized of God as a new and altered being.

Love gives the hearth a brighter glow;
The Christian's life a deeper flow;
Love makes this earth a blessed place,
And shows to us God's smiling face.

It helps to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

Paul desired that God would grant unto the disciples these special favors: "That he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God."—Ephesians 3: 16-19.

We will perhaps not reach that high and glorious condition until Christ comes in his glory with "all the holy angels" and the Spirit of God is poured out "upon all flesh," though we are justified by the word when we approach as near thereto as possible and the Spirit bears record that the work will finally be accomplished.

In my travels as a minister I have found members of this church who have stumbled and fallen because of a professed deeper and higher work of grace known as sanctification and justification, or the deeper work of the Spirit. In trying to reclaim such I have met some things unlooked for, whether they are true or not. I have been asked: "Does your church believe in and teach justification and sanctification? I have had the ministers and members of your church deride and scoff at me for so believing, yet I know there is something in it." To such questions I have invariably answered in substance, Yes, our church both believes and teaches justification and sanctification as conditions that may and should be reached, though this can only be accomplished in God's own appointed way and by his divine help. Christ taught it and put it into practice. The apostles and early ministers taught it as that which may be realized in the new and holy lives of the followers of Christ. The Bible teaches it and so do the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. The church when organized on the sixth day of April, 1830, declared its faith in sanctification and justification in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, though they believed that it is possible for a disciple to fall from grace and depart from the true and living God.

A TILT WITH A SABBATARIAN.—No. 2.

BY A. R. CORSON.

In answer to my letter, my Sabbatarian friend sent me a card containing some points for which she was contending. You will discover them as you read my reply:

Kind Friend: You ask me if 'I know who are the true Israelites?' I think I can answer to your satisfaction: They are the true seed of Abraham to whom the promise is made; they are the body of Christ, which is the church, not merely the descendants in the flesh; for 'he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly' by circumcision, (or by Sabbath-keeping,) 'but he is a Jew, which is one inwardly,' whose 'circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter.' 'Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham,' or the true Israel. The promise, or covenant, made to Abraham was before the law was given, and depends not on that law.

'Paul tells us faith was reckoned unto Abraham for righteousness, for which faith he received the sign of circumcision, not having been circumcised at all, at that time, that he might be the 'father of all them that believe,' though they be not circumcised; 'but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had, being yet uncircumcised.'

'Now Abraham had no Sabbath given to him. It was a part of the law that was given to his descendants, as Paul says added to the gospel which was preached before unto Abraham, because of transgression, till the seed (Christ) should come. (See Galatians 3:8, 19.) Paul says, 'Before faith came, we were kept under the law. . . . But after faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster.'—Galatians 3:23, 25.

'You refer me 'to the law and to the testimony,' and say 'no one can do away with the Old Testament Scriptures.'

'No, but we must try to rightly divide the word of truth, giving to each his portion in due season. To the Jew his, and to the Gentile or Christian his. Jesus said, 'Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me.' Jesus did not by this say that those Scriptures held eternal life, only that they thought so. 'In him was life; and the life was the light of men.' They were rejecting him, and he refers them to the Scriptures, for they would testify of him. That is not in any sense a command to make those Scriptures our guide for living. But we will gladly search them, because they do testify of him, and in them we find there is to come a time when God says, 'Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths,—the things he had commanded them to do and observe. You know God commanded other sabbaths to be kept besides the weekly one. But you Sabbath-keepers do not keep those, neither do you keep the Sabbath as God required. You build fires and do some work; you have dispensed with the penalty attached to the law. And this same law or testimony to which you refer says, 'Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.' Micah tells us that, Out of Zion shall go forth the law. The Mosaic law had already gone forth when God promises that a law shall go forth out 'of Zion.' 'Hearken unto me, my people; and give ear unto me, O my nation: for a law shall [future tense] proceed from me, and I will make my judgment to rest for a light of the people. My righteousness is near; my salvation is gone forth.'—Isaiah 51:4, 5. 'My salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed.'—Isaiah 56:1. And he speaks again: 'Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them.'—Isaiah 42:9. He is preparing the way for the disannulling of the old covenant, and bringing in the new, with a new law written, 'not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart.' And Jeremiah says, 'Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of Egypt. . . . But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel. After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.'—Jeremiah 31:31, 32. Not the law that pertained to the old covenant, but the law that goes with the new covenant, the perfect law that converts the soul.

'You say 'One Lord, there can be but one law,' but will you please remember that Abraham was counted righteous before the Mosaic law was given, for he 'believed the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness,' and it is the first step or principle in the gospel law now. Paul tells us the 'gospel was preached before unto Abraham,' and remember, Paul says the law was added to that gospel only till the 'seed should come.' Now, whoever receives the Spirit, which is the seal of this new covenant, receives this perfect law of the Lord, that converts the soul, a living law of life in Christ written in the heart. Paul asks, 'Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? . . . He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? . . . As many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.'—Galatians 3:2-10. 'If righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain.'—Galatians 2:21. If it were possible for righteousness to come by the law, then Christ offered up, and the Father accepted, a useless sacrifice. Would that be in accordance with the wisdom and mercy of God?

"One Lord can give one law, to one people, for a certain length of time, and can repeal that law when it has answered its purpose. That is just what God did. He added the law to the gospel covenant made with Abraham four hundred and thirty years before. When Christ (the seed referred to) came, he confirmed that covenant; the law had not disannulled it, but now, being no more needed it was done away. Paul asks the Galatians how they can turn again to the 'weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage'; and he enumerates some of them: 'Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years.'—Galatians 4:9, 10. He says the law could not do certain things in that it was weak in the flesh. (See Romans 8:3.) And he also says that a man is justified by faith without the works of the law.

"The old priesthood being done away, 'there is made of necessity a change also of the law.' (Hebrews 7:12.) For if perfection could have come by the Levitical priesthood what need of the other or the Melchisedec priesthood? (See verse 11.) It is the law that accompanies this Melchisedec priesthood that is perfect, for the law of the Levitical priesthood made nothing perfect, 'but the bringing in of a better hope did.'

"This letter is long enough. I have given you my reasons, or some of them, for my belief that we are in no way bound by the law of the old covenant, for to as many as are justified by that law Christ is become of no effect.

"I trust you may soon know what the liberty of the gospel—yes, what the gospel itself truly is, and be free from the yoke of the law of bondage, and live according to the law of the Spirit of life, in Christ Jesus; and become dead to the law, but wedded to Christ, when his indwelling Spirit will enable you to keep all his law; that is, the new covenant law.

"I am looking for your promised letter, and hope this will find you recovered from your injury.

"Your friend for the truth's sake,

"A. R. CORSON."

DIVORCE EVIL—A WHIRLPOOL.

That the growing importance of the divorce question or evil is pressing itself with increasing weight on the attention of well-wishers of society at large is plainly evidenced by the serious and prolonged attention given the subject by the bishops and other ecclesiasts of the Episcopal Church of America, at its convention just concluded at Boston, Massachusetts, October, 1904. After giving their most serious and prayerful attention, discussing this growing evil in its various phases, a canon or church law or rule was formulated, looking to the ultimate lessening of the evil among the church membership and others, by making remarriages among the divorced more difficult, and further restricting the ministry in marrying again, the divorced. Considering the way the old creeds have been crumbling lately before the light of reason and advancing thought, it may be difficult to determine the degree of authority that may be attached by the public to this humanly contrived canon. Five hundred years ago a church law or canon could not be broken and the penalty therefor be passed by. But the world has grown since then, and nothing short of the conviction that a law is of divine origin and comes with divine sanction, is to be acknowledged as absolutely binding on the religious consciences of the people.

Does the canon as adopted embody a means of enforcing the law relating to marriage and divorce as given by the Savior? Surely it will be left as other enactments of like character and nature, as to its worth, and what it may effect on the subject to which it relates. We know the human can not add to or improve on any divine enactment. The finite can not change or improve on any work of the infinite.

The canon reads:

No minister knowingly, after due consideration, shall solemnize the marriage of any person who has been or is the husband or wife of any other person then living from whom he or she has been divorced for any cause arising after marriage. But this canon shall not be held to apply to the innocent party in a divorce for adultery, provided, that before the application for such marriage, a period of not less than one year shall have elapsed after the granting of such divorce, and that satisfactory evidence touching the facts in the case, including a copy of the court's decree and record if practicable, with such proof that the defendant was personally served or appeared in the action, be laid before the ecclesiastical authority, [who] having taken advice thereon shall have declared in writing that in his judgment the case of the applicant conforms to the requirements of this canon; and provided further that it shall be within the discretion of any minister to decline to solemnize any marriage.

We think that no serious objections ought to be urged, by any minister of Christ, who is required to be diligent in his inquiries in such cases, to the course suggested by this canon, especially regarding the innocent parties supplying the necessary evidence to justify them in seeking to be married again.

It was declared by the convention that there have been some thirty-five thousand divorces in the last year all told. Elsewhere it has been declared that there have been three hundred thousand divorces granted in a small portion of the civilized world in the last twenty-five years. This is appalling! Divorce threatens to an extent hardly conceivable, the safety of the American home. There is no reasonable doubt of this to the closely observing; and the number of divorces is annually increasing.

It is conceded by every New Testament believer that there is but one justifiable cause in reality for divorcement of husband and wife; that is infidelity or adultery. This one cause is a crime against both the laws of God and man. The increase and the danger of the divorce evil is admitted on all sides.

In a pastoral letter issued by this triennial convention on the closing day of its sessions, and read by Bishop Potter, it is stated:

It is a question which we in this republic may wisely consider, whether with greater freedom we have always won a greater purity of righteousness. The facility by which the marriage relation may be taken on and put off is one of the menaces of our American civilization, to the possible perils of which Christian people are as yet very imperfectly aroused.

Whether the Bishop meant to use the great divorce evil as a club with which to give our republic a blow, we are not at liberty to say. Whether some other form of government would cure the evil is also a question to consider. But there are two questions that may be carefully considered in their relation to the divorce evil. They are the standard of morals prevalent in any given government, and the moral education—and consequently the moral conscience—of those living under such given code. Will the enactment of human canons or church laws additional to those given in the divine code heal the evil of divorce? Individually we doubt it. Why try to shield your children merely from the attacks of a rattlesnake; so long as the snake is allowed to range at liberty over the premises? Why treat the slight symptoms of a disease, so long as its roots remain imbedded in the blood, and the food on which the disease thrives is fed unstintedly to the patient? Why not slay the serpent? Why not prohibit the food creating the disease?

I once, in conversation with an aged man who had a long time been a justice of the peace, asked him what he would propose as the best legal preventive of divorce. He replied, with emphasis, "The law enacted by Jesus Christ." I was astonished, for he was a skeptic. He said it was the best law on the subject he had ever seen. Divorce from the marriage bond, when once entered into, was not intended originally by the great Designer of the marriage institution. (See Malachi 2: 14-16; Matthew 19: 8.) Why not educate the people to see the heinousness, the criminality of divorce? The cause of the people's inability to realize the dignity and divinity and binding force with God of the marriage bond, ignorance, is at the root of this evil. How many elements enter into and constitute the food that feeds this ignorance, —ignorance of the nature and character and divinity of the institution of marriage? This is due in part to the ministry of the age. They do not ventilate this subject to the extent that its infinite importance demands. Parents do not instruct the young people of their families as they ought, as their obligation to their children demands. It is a crime against God and ourselves to be mismated in marriage, and then try to remedy the mistake by divorce. Two or three evils put together never make a right, nor blot out a crime. But there are two additional evils that further complex this problem, that parents are not always responsible for. First, many of our young people refuse to listen to the counsel and instruction of parents along this line. Second, much of the fictitious literature that makes up the libraries of our young people create false and corrupt ideas in their minds, and thus aid the divorce evil.

Some may object to our charges, thinking they are too severe. But we invite an open discussion along these suggestions. Go after these matters right in your own homes, and revealments will justify our statements.

If people would study the law of human adaptability, or suffer themselves to be taught these laws, tempers not compatible may to a great extent be forever kept separated, and incompatibility of temper in multitudes of cases would cease to be a factor in divorce. The complete perfection of the character of the hero and heroine in very much of the fiction read, creates absolutely, in the minds of thousands of its young readers, false ideas of life. This is the truth. Many are so confiding in what they read, that when the tug of war comes to them later along in life they become so bewildered with human imperfections and faults and weaknesses, things unanticipated by them, that forbearance ceases to be a virtue; and release is sought through the door of divorce. People, many of them, in their reckless career in life, forget that divinity is a party to the compact, on the same principle that the State or general Government is a party to any reasonable business contract that may be entered into by any two individual citizens, and that he will hold them to a strict account for the responsible obligations of the marriage contract and its results. They seem not to realize that those responsibilities if not faithfully carried out in this life are to be answered for in the life to come, at the eternal judgment. No divine or just law can be broken and the penalties therefor fail of their execution. Justice is never forgotten, will never fail, can not be evaded or turned aside. Justice is an eternal principle; it can not be changed, vitiated, or bribed. No mercy will ever rob or condone it. Just as well try to turn or reverse the course of the sun and not disturb the ordinances of day and night.

The disobedience of children to their parents is a matter of Bible prophecy, to characterize the last days. (See 2 Timothy 3:2, 3.) And the state of affairs is so significant in this regard now, that it is one of the signs of the times. Think of this seriously, parents,—also ye children. Those who would point out the dangers that beset you are your best friends.

Can the strictest of honesty be left out of the problem of marriage by those entering that state? Can there be reliance and trust by both parties to the contract without honesty and honor? Can there be a strictly manly young man and honesty be lacking? Can a woman be a womanly woman and the strictest kind of honesty be not resident in the heart? Honesty is the foundation of all action in the transaction of marriage. Money, fashion, or undue ambition have no part or consideration in this matter. It is successfully solved alone by the coöperation of honest, confiding hearts. This lacking and marriage is a farce, as it proves to be in so many cases,—a sad, sorrowful, dismal failure!

It is not a mere sentimental romance. Counsel and instruction are all-essential to success in matrimonial calling. No persons should be better prepared to give this instruction so much needed than parents. None are more deeply interested in our young than are the parents. No persons should be more earnestly and fully heeded by them. "Oh, no one shall choose for me. No one chose for our parents but themselves." It is not so much a matter of who is to be chosen, but of being able to choose intelligently. People of intelligence and experience can teach those without experience some things. Children should not wantonly cast aside the instructions of parents, or treat lightly parental authority given them of God in this matter. Children do this, and go their own way, many times, and when, through their ignorance, they get into inextricable entanglements, they, with sorrow and anguish of heart, turn to their fathers and mothers for aid and consolation, and this, too, when it is too late to amend the evil done. When they find no place of repentance, no escape from their folly, they not infrequently lay their trouble at the feet of the Almighty, or to Fate, instead of rightly to their own ignorance, and this because they were heady, disobedient, and refused the instructions they might have had before, and been saved from their sad predicament. Such mistakes never can be remedied, neither in time nor eternity! Like Banquo's ghost, it will never down. It is a cloud that bedims life's sunlight for ever. Changes of time or place can never remedy it. The work is done. The die is cast. Consider then, be informed as to how, under what circumstances, the character of person, before moving. "With all thy getting get understanding." "Wisdom is the principle thing." Life is not all smiles and flowers, even if that cheap literature did make you think so. It is not all sunshine and a gentle gliding adown the river, where banks are ornamented with all that is pleasant to sight and in odor. Human weaknesses, defects, imperfections, and incompatibilities are to be endured. There is hard work to be done. Surprising difficulties are to be met and overcome. Why, in abject ignorance of human nature and all the laws of being, rush blindly with all the heart into measures that may have to be abandoned hopelessly, with nothing in life as a reward but regret and sorrow?

Ignorance is one of the chief causes of divorce. Ignorance leaves the mind devoid of the ability to appreciate the importance, divinity, and sacredness of the marriage institution. Failing to appreciate the height of this holy calling we are left to look at it as one of the adventures of life, like investing in a lottery. Hence the expression: "Marriage is a lottery." "And if you do not like the investment, get out!" And the divorce to such is just as high a concept as the marriage. "The law married me, it can unmarry me." The law does not choose your partner in married life for you. The law can not therefore "unchoose" him for you. The ceremony required by the law, is the public confirmation of the contract entered into by the parties. It is the duty of the law to see that society is rightly based, constituted, and then kept so. The law can be invoked to enable the married parties to separate, and they so remain; but the law can not in justice be invoked to extend to the parties, or either of them, the right to marry again unless the cause for the separation was justifiable by the divine law. When the parties once separate, unless the cause for their divorcing themselves is a justifiable one, (infidelity,) their only justifiable course is to be reconciled to each other or remain unmarried. The divorce law is too plain and positive here to need comment. (See Matthew 19:8, 10.) And the Savior's reasoning in verses eleven and twelve goes to show that the penalty of this law when once invited forbids its transgressors an entrance into the kingdom of God on the other side of the resurrection.

The ignorance that unfits so many for properly entering the marriage relation, and who therefore are inveighed into the snare of divorce, is fed by the drink and other dissipating habits. The degree of intelligence belonging to such forbids their appreciation of the dignity and sacredness of the marriage condition and relation, or its purpose.

The emotions or passions of the human soul,—esteem, pity, sympathy, adoration, and reverence,—must be intelligently directed and governed, or mankind are liable to use their energies and life for naught but vanity and trouble. The intelligence so all-essential to a proper, holy, happy marriage, must be sought, and welcomed from every and any properly available source. It can not be found at the rumshop, the gaming-table, or the dance; at the theater, nor in books of fiction. These all tend to unfit people indulging in them for the responsibilities of honorable, happy life. They add in every way to the miseries of life. All tend to ignorance of the laws of well-being, and to impoverish them. All unfit the mind for the solid business ideas of life. They never have added to the real happiness of life. I have not tried any of them, but observation of their effects upon others is enough. Thousands of object-lessons exist all around us. Many, in their ignorance, call it pleasure to indulge these things, endure the suffering they bring, and kiss the chains that gall them as they bind them closer.

Many now say, "We would never have bowed to idols as the Romans and other heathens did." "We would never have taken the sword as did the followers of Mohammed to propagate his religion." "We never could have been induced to follow the fortunes of the crusaders of the eleventh to the thirteenth centuries,—no, not for all the glory given General William Embriaco on his return to Genoa after rescuing the holy land from the hands of the oriental conquerors." Perhaps you would not; but why? "We see the results," you reply. "It was all caused by ignorance. And see the condition of those people. It is all sadness, sorrow, fruitless labor, death!" So, too, do we see the sorrow and disgrace flowing from the ignorance of thousands all around us,—and divorce is the result,—the passions of the human soul moving out in the battles of life blindfolded, blinded by ignorance, devoid of the necessary intelligence to direct them to success and happiness. Do not be guilty of saying again that marriage is a failure, just because you preferred to go it blindly, because you refused to cultivate your best friend's company—intelligence—and be governed accordingly. Wealth is no substitute for eyesight in this great tragedy of life. You do not know with whom to link your fortune for life, because you do not know how to choose or select. You did not see deeper than that gauze of hypocrisy, that all don, when out making your selection. The exterior was lovely, but did you turn on the searchlight of intelligence, and note whether there was the foundation—honesty, that jewel that always sparkles in the light? Did you look for nobility of character? the lofty ideals of life? manhood in principle, or womanhood in principle? or did you lose your head over wit, sprightliness, and vivacity, and a great bump of pretense?

Our position that ignorance is at the base of this evil is the basis of the statement made recently by the English philosopher, Mr. George Meredith, that so startled society, and that, in the estimation of some, places him outside the pale of civilized society. Only he attributes the ignorance all to young women, without including the men. He says:

It is a question to my mind whether a young girl married, say, at eighteen, utterly ignorant of life, knowing little as such a girl would, of the man she is marrying, or of any other man, or of the world at all, should be condemned to live with him for the rest of her life. She falls out of sympathy with him, say, has no common taste with him, nothing to share with him, no real communication with him, except a physical one. The life is nearly intolerable. . . . Certainly, however, one day these present conditions of marriage will be changed. Marriage will be allowed for a certain period, say ten years, or—well, I do not want to specify any particular time.

This is not quite all his comment lately going the rounds of the press, but is sufficient for the purpose of this paper. The idea here stated is a heathen one, however, as may be seen by reading Plato's Republic. While the statement offers no remedy for the divorce evil it affords additional reason why this issue presented by it should be seriously considered and the causes of it brought out, and removed, so far as possible. The watchman on Zion's walls should see the invader, should he come, or be coming, and warn the sleeping inhabitants, else his blood will be the forfeit.

This philosopher across the ocean does not offer any palliation for the man so ignorant of the woman he marries, and whom he afterwards finds so incompatible! Such a dilemma can, largely at least, be avoided. Remove the cause. The flood-lights are, by present conditions of society, turned on in such a way as to show the awful extent of the lack of parental duty toward children. May we not in truth conclude that many, very many parents are to blame for the ignorance of their offspring regarding life or the world. God said of Abraham, "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment."—Genesis 18:19. There have been but few like Abraham in this regard; and when in ages after him his descendants refused to "do justice" in respect to the marriage relation, it was because of their unreasoning obstinacy, or hardness of heart, begotten of their primal ignorance.

Children refuse to be taught and enlightened by their parents, and consequently the parents are under the painful necessity of allowing their children to learn obedience (?) by the things they must, in many, many instances in the marital relation, suffer.

In many instances of divorce, marriage is almost immediately resumed in other relations. In most of these instances companion and children are ruthlessly cast aside by either or both husband and wife. Where, in these cases, is sympathy, love, or parental instinct? Where is the "natural affection"? Is there not found in such transactions one of the powerful elements that fulfill Paul's prophecy in relation to the events of latter days,—those events and days that strongly indicate that the end of the world is at hand? Is not this astounding increase of the divorce evil one of the perils he, by the Holy Spirit's power, prophesied should characterize the last days? We need not guess about these matters. We are told, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come," when men will be money-lovers, selfish, proud, blasphemers, disobedient, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce- or covenant-breakers,—the marriage covenant along with the balance. Of course when men and women become "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," it will not stretch their consciences any to break the holy bond of matrimony whenever it is their pleasure to do so. And these perils are to come like great waves, reach the highest moral peaks, and roll heavily over the church or churches, for the perils are to be brought about largely by religious people, those "having a form of Godliness, but denying the power thereof." (2 Timothy 3:5.)

We have before said there were two things it were well to consider in the discussion of this subject. The one we have briefly touched upon—the relation of parents and children—the other, What is the duty of the church in relation to this perilous problem as it now confronts society? Should it be an issue with the ministry, as they seek to fulfill their mission to the world under the gospel? What proper measures can the church inaugurate to stay the tide of divorce among its membership? Shall it be palliated by suffering the infringement of the laws governing the marriage relation as laid down in the gospel? What can be done to forestall the evil and save suffering and wrong? It may be replied: "The church has spoken quite emphatically on this question, and as recently as 1896." True, but is this all we are required to do? "What more can we do?" asks one. How many of our young people learn their lesson from that conference enactment? To what extent is the light and truth of that declaration shed on the world outside of the church? It seems to me that all should be done that can be done prudently to canvass the subject in such a way as to let the divine light be shed abroad among the rising generation. Let the great sin of divorce for trivial causes—really not legitimate causes—be made apparent to the understanding and conscience.

Only a short time since a young man under age ran away from his home in Chicago, so the public press reported, went to San Francisco, California, met a young lady, also under age, and dissuaded her from home. (Their names are given.) They were too young to procure a license to be married without consent of their parents. The young man felt very bad of course, when the judge before whom they were arraigned informed the young man that he was guilty of felony, and his only escape from the prison was to get his parents' consent to a marriage with the lady in the case. In all such cases of ignorance and premature action, what is to be expected but divorce a little later along? What conceptions have those children of the exalted obligations of holy matrimony?

There is but little difference, if any, between the criminal condition of the man living at one time with two or more women called wives, and a man or woman who has been divorced from one to three times (and there are many such cases) and married as often, where the cause for the divorce was not the one specified in the divine law. God has said by word and act: "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women."—Book of Mormon, p. 116.

God's will in respect to his purposes is just as definitely declared, by his acts as by words, on marriage and divorce, as other matters of divine importance. See Genesis 2:18-24 respecting our first parents; and Genesis 8:15-18 respecting Noah and his three sons, with one wife each, eight souls in all (see Peter 3:20), that the earth might be reseeded in righteousness after the flood. Also in the case of Lehi and his sons, in coming to the land of ancient America, to raise up a righteous nation to the Lord on this land. (See Book of Mormon, chapter 1.) Men may honestly differ about some doctrinal word of God, but when they see his will expressed by his own great, divine, infinite act, as in the three cases cited above, controversy vanishes, except it may be with the willfully blind.

God has said to the people of his church in these last days: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else," in as plain words as can be used in the English language, and as early as 1831. (Doctrine and Covenants 42:7, edition of 1897.) And that he might not in any reasonable way be misapprehended by any one, and as a forewarning that he would never change from his purposes and will, in his expressed words he again says: "For God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round."—Doctrine and Covenants 2:1. God's path is straight from Adam's day to ours, on this question of marriage and divorce; but man's ways have been, in numberless instances, wicked, criminal, devious, and very deceitful.

That the question of divorce is a living issue with the church is evident from the following:

Behold, verily I say unto you, that whatever persons among you having put away their companions for the cause of fornication, or in other words, if they shall testify before you in all lowliness of heart that this is the case, ye shall not cast them out from among you; but if ye shall find that any persons have left their companions for the sake of adultery, and they themselves are the offenders, and their companions are living, they shall be cast out from among you. And again I say unto you, that ye shall be watchful and careful, with all inquiry, that ye receive none such among you if they are married, and if they are not married, they shall repent of all their sins, or ye shall not receive them.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 20.

This is a plain statement. There is no room for controversy here as to who may or may not have and maintain a standing in the church, as relating to their marriage relations. According to this scripture the innocent party to a divorce for the crime of adultery, and who belongs to the church, is not to be disfellowshipped therefor; but the guilty party is to be disfellowshipped if the divorced husband or wife be living. "They shall be cast out from among you." So the law reads; and "the elders are to see" that the "law is kept," is God's requirement. And diligent inquiry must be made, that "none such be received among you"; that is, where divorce has been obtained with the justifiable reason—adultery—and they have married again. None such are to either be retained in, or baptized into the church; and if divorce is obtained by any one for any other cause than adultery, they have no right to marry again to other parties so long as both are alive. If they, or either of them do, they go into a condition of continuous adultery. (See Matthew 5: 27, 28; 19: 9; Romans 7: 1-3.) By these statements of law we can easily see that God holds the marriage covenant, when once entered into by any two parties, to be binding until the death of one, unless broken by the crime of adultery or fornication. We can not misread or misunderstand this. There is absolutely no excuse for ignorance on this infinitely important subject.

It is the duty of our ministry to be prepared to rightly instruct upon this, and decide when necessary, that our young people may be saved from ignorance and the dire results of the increasing divorce evil. Parents, as they love their youthful children and long for their temporal and eternal welfare, must not shirk duty relating to this supreme question, this question now of supreme moment to the church, and to society in general.

Marriage is the honorable condition for man, when entered into rightly, intelligently, with all conditions of the law governing rightly applied and observed. "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife." "The wife is bound by the law [or covenant of her husband with her] so long as her husband liveth," says the Bible.

A quiet home; vines of our own planting; a few books full of the inspiration of genius; a few friends worthy of being loved and able to love us in turn; a hundred innocent pleasures that bring no pain or remorse; a devotion to the right that will never swerve; a simple religion empty of all bigotry, full of trust and hope and love—and to such a philosophy this world will give up all the empty joys it has.—David Swing.

"Courage, the highest gift that scorns to bend
To mean devices for a sordid end.
Courage—an independent spark from heaven's bright throne
By which the soul stands raised, triumphant, high, alone.
Great in itself, not praises of the crowd,
Above all vice, it stoops not to be proud."

—George Farquhar.

This virtue of courage is far too important to be dismissed with the brief glance which one chapter enabled us to give it, hence we resume it for the December reading.

No one likes to be thought a coward. In every age cowardice has been held in contempt, and yet unfortunately for themselves and the communities in which they live many moral cowards are found,—individuals who are so much in dread of doing wrong as really to be afraid to do right. Things which are so unlikely to happen that a wise man or woman leaves them entirely out of sight, the moral or physical coward drags into the question and gives them great and undue prominence. A man or woman of this disposition will lose many an opportunity of doing good in the world and the wise parent who discovers a tendency of this kind in his child will surely do all in his power to help the child to overcome it.

Cowardice often implies a lack of common sense as well as of manliness and fortitude. The coward not only thinks the evil will surely come but he also thinks he will not be able to bear it when it does come. The brave man or woman, while he does not court danger, having once decided that an act is right and needful to be done, not only has the courage to do it, but to accept the consequences of so doing and bear them with fortitude. He believes with the poet:

"That right is right, since God is God
And right the day must win.
To question is disloyalty
To doubt it, would be sin."

Can it be a difficult matter for parents whose own souls are fully imbued with this truth to train their children in it? It would seem that it ought not to be, for the soul that is itself fully convinced will manifest that conviction in acts as well as words, and the two combined make a most powerful teacher.

Just one word in this connection lest we be misunderstood as confounding courage with recklessness. Courage is governed by principle, and while always willing, if necessary, to accept a dangerous mission and bear with fortitude the results, even when those results may mean pain, long-suffering, or even death itself, it carefully counts the cost and goes only at the call of duty. The reckless person acts from want of thought or at the promptings of vanity, and such acts are as far removed from courage as night is from day.

Courage manifested in a good cause makes heroes, and can we ever estimate what we owe to the heroes and heroines—the truly brave men and women who lived, struggled, and died before we were born? Here too there exists the necessity of a very careful distinction, lest we confound the truly great with those who while they have done many hard things—many wonderful works—yet are not heroes, because they have wrought for self and selfish aims and not for the good of others. Heroic men (and women too) should be measured by an infallible standard. Especially should we do this before we commend them to the admiration, love, and veneration of our children. Swift has said:

"Who'er excels in what we prize, Becomes a hero in our eyes."

This is very natural, and it is all right provided we prize right and truth as God prizes them; but how careful we should be that our standard is the right one. If only assured upon this point, then there is no reading more helpful—none that will be more conducive to the formation of noble characters in our boys and girls, than the history of lives such as these, whether they be found in sacred or profane history.

It is very important that we understand that history is history, whether it be sacred or profane. It records acts and events just as they transpired (or should do so). Let us not make the grave mistake of supposing that all which is recorded of men in the Bible—even of such men as were servants of God—was right or approved of God. Far from it. It is given to us as history, and given, as Paul says, for our admonition. Some of the acts of David border on the sublime, while for other things which he did we would have to search far in profane history before finding anything more to be condemned—more unworthy an honorable man of the world, much less a servant of God. Every wrong act recorded in sacred history is just as wrong, just as inexcusable as those recorded in profane history, and they have, too, this added element of condemnation that these people were sinning against greater light than the others; and we know—for God has said it—that they will have severer punishment meted out to them.

There is one danger which parents need to guard their children closely against in reading and admiring the lives of heroic men and women of history. They sometimes have a tendency to make the reader feel that he too is a hero. He imagines what he would do if only the occasion offered, and perhaps sighs for occasions which never come. This is the great mistake he makes, for occasions are all around him.

They meet him every day. But because they come in humble garb and commonplace manner, he passes them by and so proves himself a coward while really believing himself a hero.

"A boy," says Everett, "walks along the street thinking of the knights of whose exploits he has been reading. He wishes he could have lived in those old times and thinks what a brave knight he would have been, how he would have protected oppressed ladies and would have fought the cruel and false knights in the face of any odds. As he thinks of all this he sees a boy tip over the table of a poor apple-woman by the sidewalk and then run away and jeer at her from a little distance. Now the boy that was dreaming about the knights errant pities the poor woman and would like to stop and help her pick up the apples; but he does not, for he is afraid he shall be laughed at. He feels very angry with the boy who played the cruel trick on her and would like to punish him; but he is afraid that the other might be the stronger. So he passes on and gives no sign of the anger that he feels. I hope, however, that he does not any longer imagine himself to be a brave knight of the olden times, for he has shown that he is nothing but a sneak and a coward." Oh, that parents would early and persistently train their children to notice and embrace the real opportunities for displaying moral courage—for being heroes indeed, as they come to them almost every day! This heroism is required at times to keep from doing wrong and at other times to do right—to defend the weak when beset by the strong—the unfortunate from those who would wrong and oppress them. To manifest kindly interest in those who are slighted or overlooked because of any misfortune or perchance of poverty which debars them from dressing as well as their companions.

In conclusion let us say to you, dear parents, that there are hundreds of names which should be household words—whose characters we should teach our children to reverence next to the name of Jesus the Christ whose divine love inspired them to imitate his example. There is Florence Nightingale, the pioneer evangel of mercy to wounded soldiers, in whose footsteps tens of thousands to-day are following. There is Dorothy Dix, the evangel of the shamefully and cruelly treated insane of our own and other lands. Without money, at first, and in delicate health, so intense was the pity their condition excited in her heart, that she traveled from State to State and from country to country until she aroused such an interest as led to a complete change in their treatment.

To contemplate this side of humanity is not only ennobling but inspiring as well, and as wise parents ought we not to familiarize our children with such noble examples of heroism and to encourage them to emulation by training them to notice the various opportunities offered them for displaying the same spirit in small ways which heroic men and women have been called in the providence of God to manifest upon a larger scale? Teach them that true courage and heroism are the same, whether manifested in the eyes of the entire world or in darkness and silence where no eye save that of God beholds.

Questions on Reading for December.

What is said of the importance of courage? How is cowardice regarded? In what things is cowardice most likely to show itself? Is a tendency to cowardice likely to manifest itself in very small children? Is it possible for parents to supplant it by courage? How does the courageous man or woman meet trouble or danger? What is gained by such a course? What is the difference between courage and recklessness? Are all courageous persons entitled to be called heroes? What does Swift say about heroes? Are we always right in making heroes of such? Is it possible for a person to believe himself to be more courageous than he really is? Relate the little incident which shows how one may be mistaken in this respect. If we have courage in the small things of life are we likely to be wanting in it when we meet the greater exigencies? How may we encourage our children to courageous lives?

FALSE TEACHERS.

Golden Text.—"There were false prophets among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you."—2 Peter 2: 1.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

The senior lesson for this week shows that the rise of false teachers was predicted by Christ, Paul, Peter, and Jude; and to these predictions it adds the testimony of history and of latter-day revelations that false teachers did arise and lead the church into apostasy.

There are but three verses in the lesson text; the first intermediate lesson asks questions and offers notes upon these verses. The advanced intermediate lesson contains no questions at all, but offers a simple statement concerning the apostasy of the church organized by Jesus Christ. It shows the contrast between the teachings of Christ and the things taught by the false teachers who arose.

The first primary lesson calls the attention of the children to the fact that there are many different churches in the present day; it tells them that there is but one church of Jesus Christ, though there are many good people in the different churches; it states briefly the doctrine of the church of Jesus Christ, and mentions the necessity of our being careful to find the one true church which Jesus acknowledges as his by the presence of the Holy Spirit with those who comply with the requirements of his doctrine.

These thoughts are stated simply in such a way that the children may grasp their meaning.

The first primary lesson is the story of the man who owned a hundred sheep, one of which he went out to seek because it was lost, and over which he rejoiced when he had found it and had brought it safely home again.

THE SIMPLICITY THAT IS IN CHRIST.

The senior lesson calls attention to the fear expressed by Paul in his second letter to the saints of Corinth, the fear that they might become corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.

"The simplicity that is in Christ!" What a depth of meaning is contained in those words! How simple, how true, how pure, how free from duplicity, from display, from exaggerations of all kinds was the example Christ has given to us in his life! How prone is man to wander from the simplicity manifested to us in that divine life!

Christ warned his immediate disciples to be careful to speak with simplicity. He taught them that their simple affirmation or denial of a thing should be sufficient. He said, "Let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." But we seek sometimes to make our assertions strong and vigorous by the use of expressions foolish and extreme, which, upon close analysis, prove to be not perfectly true. The language used by many to-day is corrupted from the simplicity of truth and is marred by the common, rude slang that has no tendency to refine the users.

Christ teaches us in latter-day instruction that our dress should be characterized by simplicity, that it should be "free from excess of ornamentation." But we often disregard this counsel.

But it was probably not of such comparatively trivial departures as these that Paul spoke when he said he feared the saints might be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. He referred to a departure from the simplicity of the doctrine of Christ and of the worship of God that characterized the church when first it was organized among the humble fisherfolks of Galilee.

In his history of the church, Mosheim mentions the beautiful simplicity that was in it in the beginning which was soon marred by the introduction into its worship of many unnecessary rites and ceremonies. He remarks that the gross multitude are usually attracted more by those things that strike their outward senses than they are by the native charms of real piety, and that to them the addition of pomp and magnificent ceremony in religious service was pleasing.

He gives it as his opinion that those things were added in the beginning to remove in some measure the prejudice held by both Jews and heathen who looked with contempt upon the simplicity of the Christian worship. Both Jews and heathen had temples, altars, victims, priests, and a great variety of ceremonies; the worship taught by Christ was very simple compared with this, and false leaders who rose in the church conceived the thought of making the church more pleasing to the world by adopting into it some of those outward ceremonies with which the worldly mind is pleased.

The effect of this was not to convert the worldly-minded to the church, but to convert the church into a thing like the institutions of the world. Instead of raising the world to the plane of the gospel, it lowered the gospel standard; the policy was a mistaken one.

And the historian tells us that by imperceptible steps the government of the church was changed and degenerated toward the form of a religious monarchy, new doctrines being taught to cover the greed of men for power and distinction above their fellow men. He says that, in many places, men assumed princely authority, particularly those having a large number of churches in their charge and presiding over wealthy congregations of the people. He says they took to themselves the splendid trappings of kings, that, upon thrones surrounded with ministers, exalted above their equals, were the servants of the meek and humble Jesus.

And, as we read, we pause for a moment to reflect that Jesus had taught expressly upon this subject, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." What a plain, clear statement of a beautiful principle which, when it becomes the rule of men's actions, will transform the world!

In time, the fundamental principles of the gospel were undermined in the church, and a great train of superstitions took their place. Then began those pilgrimages to Palestine and the tombs of the martyrs, as if some spiritual development were thus to be acquired. Many, returning from places of supposed sanctity, carried with them quantities of dust and earth which were handed about and sold at enormous prices, being regarded as powerful remedies against the violence of wicked spirits. Unprincipled men were not slow to improve their opportunity to enrich themselves by imposing upon the credulity of the people. Rumors artfully given out of wonders or miracles to be seen in certain places drew multitudes to those spots; certain tombs were falsely given out to be the resting-places of holy men; fictitious relics were sold even by the monks.

We have already referred to that mistaken policy which had much to do with corrupting the saints from the simplicity of the gospel of Christ. Mosheim mentions it again in his history and says that men whose zeal outran their candor and integrity imagined that the nations would receive Christianity more readily when they saw the rites and ceremonies to which they were accustomed adopted into the church and the same worship offered to Christ and his martyrs which they had formerly offered to their idol deities. And he says, "Hence it happened that, in these times, the religion of the Greeks and Romans differed very little, in its external appearance, from that of the Christians. They had both a most pompous and splendid ritual. Gorgeous robes, mitres, tiaras, wax-tapers, crosiers, processions, images, gold and silver vases, and many such circumstances of pageantry, were equally to be seen in the heathen temples and in the Christian churches."

We have filled the space allowed us and can not write more on this interesting subject, but it will be well for us to take to ourselves the warning of Paul written to the saints of long ago and to have a care, that we be not corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. Let us keep before our eyes the standard of the pure gospel; let us not be beguiled into setting up the standard of the world in its place. Let us not be enticed by the beauty of the world or by the display it makes in material things, but let us look closely into the doctrine of Christ that we may find the beauty hidden in its simplicity.

ANNA SALYARDS.

I freely admit salvation is worth looking for. It is worth a man's going round the world on his hands and knees, climbing its mountains, crossing its valleys, swimming its rivers, going through all manner of hardship in order to attain it. But we do not get it in that way. It is to him that believeth.—D. L. Moody.

Letter Department.

DES MOINES, Iowa, November 8, 1904.

Editors Herald: We are now in the midst of a series of meetings which began last Wednesday night in the Saints' Chapel. What it may result in we can not foretell, but we labor in hope, and can see some little interest already. Bro. F. A. Smith stopped in the city on his way to his home, and gave us a discourse that had in it much of interest.

The branch members, with the assistance of some who are not members of the church, are meeting their payments so far, although some have made considerable sacrifice to bear what they felt was their share, and there are but very few but what have made some sacrifice, and yet willing to make more if it seems to be necessary. I do not know that I have any right to mention any one individually, but I assume the right to make mention of the noble effort the Sisters' Aid Society has been and is now making to cancel the indebtedness that is on the chapel, and to beautify it and make it comfortable. With the expense of paying balance due on the church, it became necessary to have a new furnace put in, which cost one hundred dollars, half of which has been paid and a part of the balance due on the purchase price already in sight. Besides these expenses the branch has assisted in supporting the poor we have among us, as well as doing something toward the support of the city missionary. As yet five hundred dollars with interest remains to be paid, and if any one has an interest in assisting to bear the burden of the Saints in order to honor and promote the work of God in the capital of the state of Iowa, privilege is yet granted.

The elders of the Brighamite church are doing missionary work in the city, and I see by the daily papers that they are to hold a conference here next Saturday and Sunday. I learn that one of the elders represented himself to be a member of the Reorganized Church to a lady in the west part of the city, and everywhere they are denying their belief in polygamy. The following action was taken by the branch and put into the hands of Representative Hull, who sent to the president of the branch a very appropriate reply:

"Memorial to the Senators and Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled at Washington, District of Columbia.

"Honorable Sirs: Our attention is called to the fact that in the testimony of Joseph F. Smith and others before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections proof is conclusive that a state of criminality exists in Utah, condoned and upheld by the church of which Joseph F. Smith is president, and not dealt with by the administration of justice in that State, either because of the insufficiency of the law against polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, or because the duties of such officers have not been fulfilled, which shows that the United States Government should now act.

"We, therefore, the members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in the city of Des Moines, Iowa, petition you and each of you through our representative, Honorable J. A. T. Hull, to use your best endeavors to have enacted an amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America prohibiting the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation in all the States and Territories under its jurisdiction."

Mr. Hull in his reply says among other things, "There is a very serious question whether we can secure an amendment to the Constitution on the subject of polygamy at the coming session of Congress. I think it would be well, however, if such could be done, as Congress loses jurisdiction over local laws as soon as a Territory is admitted as a State. I will see what I can do on the line suggested, and thank you and your associates for sending me so full a statement of the matter."

The work of the church in this city is moving onward with considerable satisfaction. This includes the Sunday-school and the Religio. The young people of the branch with but few exceptions are devoted and zealous in spiritual duties.

This is the quietest election day I think I ever witnessed.

J. F. MINTUN.

P. S. I am contemplating when I close the services in the city to occupy at the suburban towns and in the country within the limits of the city mission. The first place we expect to occupy is at Hastie, where regular appointments are kept up every two weeks. At this place the nonprogressive Christians have made quite an effort to overthrow our work, but now and then one sees the kingdom, and enters therein by the narrow way. I believe four have been baptized in the branch within the last month, one of them at Hastie.

Mr. Roberts with whom I debated at Marshalltown is anxious for another debate, but he does not want it at Marshalltown, but any place in the United States or Canada outside of Marshalltown. This time he wants me to affirm the divinity of the Book of Mormon, and he will affirm the all-sufficiency of the Bible, and that it is the perfect revelation of God to man essential to his salvation. Whether it is to be or not to be is the question to be decided now, and it all depends upon a place to hold it, proper indorsements from him, and people to attend.

BIRDSEYE, Indiana, November 6, 1904.

Dear Herald: On the third day of April, 1902, I left Zenith, Illinois, for Birdseye, Indiana, remaining away until the 10th of June, 1904. I found the Saints there spiritually improved, making progress in Religio work, and in other ways. Sr. Martha Bing, the organist and music-teacher, seeing that the church needed a bell, started a quilt, asking each to give ten cents and have his name put on it. I understand that, with the assistance of others, she has succeeded in raising sufficient to pay for the bell. This shows what one sister can accomplish. On the other hand those who had always heard the gospel, and rejected it, were fifty per cent worse off than when I went away.

In Indiana, near Birdseye, where a few Saints have lived for years, they have had to suffer all manner of persecution, and scarcely ever hear any preaching. My daughter, Mrs. I. N. Baggerly, undertook to start a Saints' Sunday-school, notwithstanding all sorts of persecution and talk of closing the schoolhouse. She organized, sent and got literature, and is making a success. Seems to have the confidence of the people, having been raised there. Persecution seems to be dying out to some extent. As soon as election is over, and the people quiet down, I believe they will listen to the preaching of the gospel. May the Lord be with us is my prayer.

JAMES A. FERGUSON.

NEW WESTMINSTER, British Columbia, November 2, 1904.

Editor Herald: For the last three weeks I have been laboring in British Columbia, and am pleased with the fair prospects that seem to be before the church in British Columbia providing the church will do its part by the work here. I was indeed very much surprised to find so many active, live Saints in these parts. I have felt greatly blessed ever since I came into King Edward's realm. Have spent a number of years in missionary work under the British flag, hence it is that I feel quite at home within the King's dominion.

Many years ago I used to think that freedom of speech was only enjoyed in the United States; but I have found out through years of experience that there is just as much freedom of speech enjoyed, also as much protection afforded the ministry, under the Union Jack as there is under the Stars and Stripes. I sincerely hope and pray that the people under those two grand flags will be on friendly terms, or, in other words, prove to be true cousins to each other.

Week before last I held seven preaching-services in the house of Bro. Clark. He and his excellent wife have kept an open house to the Saints ever since they came to British Columbia. The Saints in this city and Vancouver belong to the one branch and nearly all of the meetings are held at the latter place. However, I have preached three times in this place with fair interest.

Bro. J. S. Rainey and Bro. Isaac McMullen were ordained to the office of elder and priest respectively since I came. Both of these men are young, but, if they are faithful, will make able and useful servants in the hands of the Lord. Bro. Clark is teacher and is well fitted for the office. They have a Sunday-school and Sr. Mabel Clark is at the head of it. She and many others are alive to the interests of this department of God's work. I have spent eight days at Chilliwack, seventy-two miles up the Frazer River.

We have quite a number of good Saints up there. Bro. Henry Stade was ordained an elder. This brother has the confidence of all the Saints and the outsiders. He and his wife keep a home for the ministry, and meetings have been held in their house for four years.

Bro. William Johnson lives here, but he and family will move away soon. This brother ought to be appointed to labor as a missionary in British Columbia. They need a man who knows the conditions here, and who can stay here all through the year. Bro. Johnson is the man to meet this demand. Bro. Bell has done a good work in these parts; however, he is needed the remainder of the conference year in the Washington end of the district, as he is president of the district.

We have two branches in British Columbia, and if the church would keep one able minister here all the time, and one other to help during the tent season, I feel confident that we would have or realize good returns for the money spent and labor done. New Westminster and Vancouver are both fine and enterprising cities, and both have a bright future before them. The Chilliwack Valley is the best section in all British Columbia for farming, and the country is filling up very fast with people from all parts of the world. They are blessed with about seven or eight months of rain during the year.

On the way here I stopped for a few days at La Conner and Bay View, Washington, and preached five times at the former place and once at the latter place. Brn. Gladwin and Reed and their families were strong in the faith, also Sr. Clark and Bro. McMullin and wife at Bay View. The Saints in the mission are not paying their tithes and freewill offerings as they should. Unless they do better in the near future some of the ministry may have to go home.

Yours in haste,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

LIMA, Ohio, November 3, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have thought for some time of writing to let some inquiring friends know how I am feeling in regard to the gospel and its work. I want to reaffirm its truth, and power to save, no matter what men may say or do. This is why I am here away from home and all its interests. How long I may be able to endure I can not say, as we are creatures of circumstances to a great extent; but I hope and expect to endure to the end, for only such can be saved. Certainly I feel the force of the Savior's statement: "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." I do not expect to ever have my love for the gospel grow cold, for we know of its power to save. Even should our confidence in humanity be shaken to some extent, our confidence in the church and God is established, and the ultimate triumph of the church is certain, even though we have to learn obedience by the things we suffer. It is not all sunshine to be out proclaiming the gospel to the world, especially in this our day when the people are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, seeking for the honors bestowed by men whether they have the approval of God or not.

I opened up the work twelve miles south of here some three or four years since. Later on I again told the people the gospel story as I understood it, and baptized a very fine lady (married) and her mother and one sister. The work has been followed by others, and just now there are mutterings of a discussion coming from the Disciples or Christian (so called); to what extent I know not, only from hearsay; but hope it is only report as we need all our time to preach the word to the people. Discussions are expensive and take time, valuable time. None have more confidence in victory in discussion than has your writer, but I am not in favor of always assuming the aggressive. I would rather be on-the defensive.

The work here has the same old objections to meet. I do hope and pray that something may cause the people to read the results of the Smoot investigation before the United States Senate Committee, so that it will be understood by the public, and be an exhibition of ignorance for any one to say we are in company with Brighamism. I tell the folks whom I come in contact with, touching this question, that they ought to know different if they would but read the daily papers.

I am alone now. Bro. V. M. Goodrich was with me, but his presence was needed elsewhere in the district, as he is district president. I have not yet come in contact with any branch in this district, and do not expect to unless called there by the missionary in charge during this conference year. Of course it is very pleasant to visit and preach to the branches, and receive their hospitality; but will some one tell what the duty of a seventy or missionary is, also the duty of local or presiding officers? When will we learn to sacrifice our own desires, and keep the law given to govern the church? These are questions of vital importance, and will affect the advance of the church. I wish the proper officials of the church would constantly keep this matter before the ministry.

How careful we should be in opening up the work in new places. I think it very unwise to preach on tithing or the authenticity of the Book of Mormon the first thing. Tell the people that if they abide in the doctrine of Christ, they will have both Christ and God, if not they have not God; or in other words, preach the word, the principles of the doctrine of Christ, or first principles of the oracles of God. They have need of the sincere milk of the word. Strong meat belongs to those of gospel age. When will we be wise servants? "Lord, hasten the time," is my prayer for the church's sake.

Your brother in the battle for eternal life,

G. A. SMITH.

COALVILLE, Iowa, November 8, 1904.

Editors Herald: Occasionally in our wanderings, as a missionary, we find something that might be considered worthy a place in your columns, and so we report now. The conference of the Little Sioux District was a pleasant and, we believe, a profitable one, together with the conventions that preceded it. There are some able workers in this district and others that are able if they would but put forth the necessary effort to become workers in either Sunday-school or Religio. There are likewise a number of local elders and priests; some of them are trying to do what they can by pressing out into unoccupied places and holding meetings. Some are not. It would indeed be pleasant to be able to report that all were occupying in harmony with their calling, but under present conditions we can not do so. We are glad, however, to be able to report that the missionary force, together with some of the local ministry, are doing what they can. In the Gallands Grove District there are but few local officers who could devote much or any of their time outside their respective branches, and still do justice to the branch of which they are officers.

Last Sunday the Saints here had their little church dedicated. It is twenty-four by thirty-six feet in size with an entryway ten by ten feet with a belfry over it. The building committee reported a cost of seven hundred and eighty-three dollars and twenty-two cents for material and three hundred and ten dollars labor. The labor was all performed by those who contributed it. The building is neat in appearance both from the outside and within. Elder Frederick A. Smith preached the dedicatory-sermon and it was very favorably commented on by all who heard it so far I have learned. The building was begun about April 1, 1902, and was practically completed in the fall of that year. There was a small indebtedness that was not removed until about the middle of last February. At the dedication the church was full to the outer door, and a number were compelled to remain on the outside. Some of the visitors seemed surprised that a church dedication could take place without a collection being taken. The Saints here, however, preferred to bear the expense incidental to the dedication than to take a collection. The work throughout these districts seems to be in fair condition except in a few localities. With full hope of ultimate success,

COCKBURN ISLAND, Ontario, November 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am still on Manitoulin and adjacent islands and North Shore mission-field. Since October 1, at Scotland, Manitoulin, I baptized two, at Silverwater one, and here seven on Saturday last,—three men and their wives and a young man. I also baptized four here in August, and organized a Sunday-school, which has increased in number from eighteen to twenty-eight. Yesterday the school report showed thirty-eight present. The preaching of Brn. William and James Gerrie, when they were here, has helped to prepare the way for us.

Yours in bonds,

JNO. SHIELDS.

HAILEYVILLE, Indian Territory, Nov. 6, 1904.

Dear Herald: We are still in the gospel work. Conference is just over, and I think all went home pleased with the spiritual strength received. We also had a debate between one Mr. C. Stutson of the Freewill Baptists, and Elder J. D. Erwin, which I think was good for our people and the gospel cause here, as the people were formerly so prejudiced against our church. Many say that they want to hear more of the gospel preached here. If any of the elders pass this way please do not forget us. We have a new branch. It was just organized a little while back. We are all young Saints and need spiritual strength, and would like to see some of the elders come this way. We have thirty-three members and four officers in our branch.

About a year ago an angel came to a sister here and gave us a warning against the evil of this place. The messenger came in the daytime about twelve o'clock. She is a very weakly woman. She was told to go and tell a lady friend of hers to accept the gospel, and if she would her burdens would be lighter; if she would not her burdens would be greater than she could bear, that the back of the Lord's hand would be turned against her. The messenger told her, also, to tell the Latter Day Saints to sweep all obstacles from their door, cover up all unsightly objects, put their houses in order; and if they would do this perhaps he would leave them a blessing.

Elder S. W. Simmons' family is located here at present. I feel that this gospel came here with power and much assurance, and many honest hearts have received the same. Like many others I am not a very well learned man; but Paul said the poor and unlearned have the gospel preached unto them.

Missionaries have received evidence that this place would become a large branch. One elder in particular had a dream in which he saw a peach-tree full of blossoms, which he saw turn to fine, large peaches. I believe this will come to pass in the future.

May God, our Creator and Preserver, keep us, that we may be a light to this world. If we will read and pray, God will bless us; but if on the perch we sit like a bird, what are we to the church? God wants his people to be vigorous and active in this work. Remember, Saints, the race is not yet run. The Lord has told us to come up higher. Why do we not heed his warning voice, now, that we may escape the evil of this world. May God prosper his people and his work.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. S. WHITE.

SCAMMON, Kansas, November 4, 1904.

Editors Herald: This leaves me at the post of duty, and faithfully and diligently working to advance the Lord's work. It is a great pleasure to me to preach this gospel, and I find plenty of room for work in this large field, where the calls for preaching are many, and I have been preaching every night and about twice on Sunday and attending Sunday-school and other meetings.

I am neither dead in the work nor dying, and I take great consolation in the thought that I have made a strong effort to fill the duties of a seventy, and the Lord has blessed me with the spirit of the office, and I have received an increase of spiritual endowment by a constant effort on my part. We will have much to be thankful for when the Master says, "Well done."

This is an excellent field, and I have found the ministry, both general and local, very congenial, and it has been a great pleasure to meet and labor with them. Our worthy brother, J. T. Davis, has passed over on the other side, and his works will stand as a monument to his worth and greatness for many years to come. He crossed the great Atlantic Ocean seven times in the interest of the angel's message. His was a life of faithful service to the work and he is esteemed as a man of excellent principles by his neighbors. I am glad that I have been associated with him in gospel work, for his long experience and counsel has been a benefit to me.

The reunions and conferences attended by me this year have been a great blessing to me in more ways than one, and I find the more I get acquainted with the workers and their methods of advancing the cause, the greater my love for this marvelous work. I find all the ministry, as a rule, from the president down, very humble, kind-hearted, and faithful men; and I long for the time when the Lord in his goodness may see fit to give further instructions concerning the temple, baptism for the dead, and the school of the prophets, etc. These are questions often pondered in the mind of the faithful.

In the field,

F. M. SLOVER.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, Ohio, November 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: I notice a letter of protest and criticism from Sr. Weed in HERALD of September 7, also one from Sr. Alice R. Corson in HERALD of September 28, relative to a letter (over my name) in HERALD of August 24. I wish to say to the good sister or sisters who have been so terribly "grieved," that I wrote a letter to Bro. Joseph Smith as a private individual, and not to the HERALD for publication, and in the letter simply chronicled events as I saw them transpiring here. What may have been the motive or purpose of the Editor in giving publicity through the paper, I am not able to say. One thing is evident, to my mind at least, he must have thought it a worthy news item, and another thing is, that he did not look at the matter as do the sisters, or else I should have heard from him and the letter would not have had place in the HERALD. I wish to call the attention of the protester to the answer in HERALD of July 20 under the caption of "Questions and Answers"; viz.: "Do you consider it right for Saints to sell by ticket articles to raise money? Is there any difference in principle between that and the Louisiana lottery?"

"Following this query the writer, a sister, adds:

"If you think it wrong, please answer through the HERALD. I have noticed that those who are trying by such methods to raise money for their chapel do not seem to prosper very well, and I wondered if the Lord would accept such money. If wrong is done I think it is thoughtlessly, not intentionally.'

"We are not informed in regard to the Louisiana lottery, only as we have noticed the contest in regard to the exclusion of its circulars from the mails. We, however, gather the idea that this lottery referred to offers a 'grand money prize' to the fortunate holder of the 'lucky ticket.' Tickets are sold by the thousands everywhere, and every means employed to arouse the cupidity of those who desire to 'get rich quick'; as a consequence many hundreds spend all their earnings buying the chances for the fortunes.

"No such result follows where efforts to build are made among the Saints. The article to be sold is plainly seen, a fair price is set for it, and everybody knows what the money collected by the sale of tickets is to be used for; and usually only those who choose to give to the cause the sum paid for a ticket or tickets buy them, and that, too, without any anxiety to 'win' the article so sold.

"Personally we have always preferred the raising of means for incidental branch or church work by direct methods, but we have watched the bazaars, suppers, teas, dinners, sociables, fish-ponds, and sales of articles (which by the way are usually articles made among the Saints), with a good deal of care, and confess, so far, we have not seen any serious ill result to follow. Nor have we noticed that those trying to raise money by the method have fallen into ill luck by it.

"It is a local affair usually, and must come under the rule and lead of the majority in branch or locality; those who think it wrong being permitted not to take part, but giving their moneys directly; the others to do as they choose about it."

In view of the last clause of the answer and advice, viz, "It is a local affair usually, and must come under the rule and lead of the majority in the branch or locality; those who think it wrong being permitted not to take part, but giving their moneys directly; the others to do as they choose about it," (italics mine,) shall we still continue to sing:

"We thank thee, O God, for a Prophet
To guide us in these latter days,"

Or shall we sing henceforth:

We thank thee, O God, for good sisters
To point out the error (?) of our ways?

Some, perhaps, might read with profit, 1 Timothy 2:9-14; Ephesians 4:11-13. Also, "If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they can not expect the riches of gifts and blessings of direction."—Doctrine and Covenants 125:14. "Wherefore, now let every man [male or female] learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:44.

Weighing carefully that which is contained in the references and quotations, I wonder who has been guilty of the greatest blunder, the Daughters of Zion in making a quilt, with their own hands, in love and unity and good faith, to be sold by numbers at ten cents each to their friends, or those who sit in judgment, (not much short of a thousand miles distant,) find fault, condemn, and denounce, counter to the opinion and advice of the "chief shepherd" on earth, whose duty it is to have watch, and to preside over the "whole body"?

One of the sisters says, "I . . . do not set myself up as a judge, but feel it is my duty, and also my privilege, to condemn what I believe is wrong, for the good of the whole body."

Query: If the sister does not set herself up as a judge, how will she be enabled to condemn justly? Will she have us understand that she condemns without judging? Curious way, indeed; and if otherwise, who hath made her a judge, or who hath made it her "duty" and also her "privilege to condemn" what she "believes to be wrong," for the good of the "whole body"?

"High priests and elders holding the same priesthood are the standing ministers to the church, having the watchcare of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them, under the direction and instruction of the presidency and the twelve."—Doctrine and Covenants 120:3.

BE CAREFUL WHAT YOU SAY.

"In speaking of a person's faults
Pray don't forget your own.
Remember, those in house of glass,
Should never throw a stone.
If we have nothing else to do
But talk of those in sin,
'Tis better we commence at home
And at that point begin.

"We have no right to judge a man
Until he's fairly tried,
Should we not like his company
We know the world is wide.
Some may have faults—and who has none?
The old as well as young;
We may, perhaps, for ought we know,
Have fifty of our own.

"I'll tell you of a better plan,
And find it works full well,
To try my own defects to cure
Before of others' tell.
And though I sometimes hoped to be
No worse than some I know,
My own shortcomings bid me let
The faults of others go.

"Then let us all when we commence
To slander friend or foe,
Think of the harm one word may do
To those we little know.
Remember curses sometimes like
Our chickens, 'roost at home.'
Don't speak of others' faults until
We have none of our own."

V. M. GOODRICH.

HAMILTON, Scotland, October 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: It is some time since I wrote to you, and doubtless many will be interested to learn how the work is progressing in great Britain. During the months of May, June, and July the writer labored in Scotland, holding open-air services in Glasgow and other places, besides the usual services in Hamilton. We had excellent audiences. A good interest was aroused, and many appeared to be pleased with the gospel message as restored in the latter days. Of course we had opposition, but that is the spice of life. As a result a few are investigating, and two families express themselves as being satisfied with the claims made by the church. I was pleased to find that, though under trying circumstances, yet Brn. Wilson and Anderson of Glasgow still were earnest in the work. Bro. Murray has proved himself quite a valiant and useful servant of the church, who, since his ordination to the office of priest, and subsequent election as branch priest of Hamilton, has been active and successful in his work.

The Hamilton Branch is now fully equipped with officers, and for the first time has a complete organization. The branch in Glasgow has again resumed meetings in Bro. Hepburn's house. Bro. Hepburn's wife has also joined him in church association, being baptized a few weeks ago, so that things look a little more hopeful in Scotland. There is some dissatisfaction in that no missionary was appointed to Scotland last conference, and personally my opinion is that Scotland should not be left without missionary help. If at all practical the church ought to appoint a missionary next conference.

In August we were present at the annual mission conference, which convened at six o'clock in the evening, July 31, in Manchester. There was quite a representative gathering from all parts of the mission. The business-sessions were characterized by peace and unity and general good feeling. The spiritual exercises were refreshing and inspirational in a high degree. There were some slight innovations, which, while not provided for by precedent, resulted in much good. The missionaries met together in council, and reported their personal experiences and difficulties, and in the joint consideration of these matters unanimity of opinion was obtained. We also had united meetings of all the ministry, local and general, in order to remove the suspicions and difficulties which have existed for some time, and believe that generally a better united understanding was arrived at. It was indeed gratifying to note the high moral tone and expression of earnestness that seemed to imbue all who participated in the meetings. As a result there have been drawn up circulars addressed to the district and branch presidents, outlining a policy which it is hoped will adequately meet the existing conditions. Also a circular has been addressed, through the respective quorums, to the elders and priests. We confidently anticipate the earnest cooperation of all in putting into practice the counsel which is based upon the expressions of the conference. We were sorry to note the absence of our much-esteemed and loved brother, Bishop Taylor. This I think is the first time I remember our brother to have been absent, in spite of his advanced years. Time is now making heavy drafts upon the strength and vitality of our brother, but we trust it may please God to lengthen his days.

After conference, in company with Bro. Newton and William Armstrong, the faithful and efficient mission secretary, we returned to Scotland to fill some appointments. Then on August 15, Bro. Newton and your correspondent left Glasgow for Plymouth via Belfast. Of that voyage we will not speak. It simply was unspeakable. The Irish Channel, beyond all doubt, maintained its world-wide reputation. We had a series of successful meetings in Plymouth, and found the Saints very warm in their kind sympathy and zeal for the work. We had two successful open-air meetings, at which very large crowds listened appreciatively and sympathetically. We concluded that the Saints in Plymouth were worth every effort to strengthen, so we appointed Bro. Pierce, who has for awhile labored successfully and acceptably in Leeds, to proceed to Plymouth, instructing Bro. Newton to reorganize the branch there as soon as convenient. This has been effected with Bro. Pierce as president. Plymouth is quite a fine town, and is rich in historic lore, a cradle in which her present navy has been nurtured and trained, and still is one of our greatest naval and military depots. The Hoe is a very pleasing place, and beautifully laid out with pleasure gardens and walks, while from its high eminence many beautiful landscapes and marine views ravish the senses. We left Plymouth regretfully, but will always remember the pleasurable experiences of our first visit. I trust the Saints will prove faithful and steadfast, and under the careful and wise jurisdiction of Bro. Pierce develop into a strong branch.

From Plymouth we proceeded to Torquay, where through the generosity of Bro. Newton we were privileged to spend two days in this beauty-spot of South England. To describe Torquay would take too much time. Suffice it to say it is simply an artist's dream. There are not simply patches of beautiful scenes, but the whole is one vast and continuous panorama. It deserves the title of "The Naples of England." We preached to the old-fashioned city of Exeter, where in one of the suburban districts we have a small branch of faithful Saints, who are gently and kindly shepherded by Bro. Wilson, who while crippled with rheumatism still is a capable and fatherly president. We enjoyed good meetings, and were well cared for by the Saints. We found all earnest and steadfast in their testimony of the truth of this latter-day evangel. Bro. Pierce will also keep in touch with the Saints of Exeter. Here we bade adieu to Bro. Newton, with whom we had been associated for about a month. We were sorry to part, for he proves to be a splendid companion, and the writer will not forget the many incidents of generosity which ungrudgingly were arranged to conduce to the comfort and happiness of the tour. It was also a splendid testimony to the integrity and worth of our aged missionary to hear the Saints in the south of England speak so affectionately and appreciatively of him who has been the spiritual father. God will surely reward our brother for his faithful, sacrificing labor.

From Exeter the writer proceeded to Cardiff via Bristol. In Wales, in company with Bro. E. B. Morgan, we had our work laid out, visiting several places. The work in Wales is not very encouraging at present. The emigration of many Saints from the various branches has depleted them so much that the work is much enervated and in some instances is scarcely maintaining an existence. We were sorry that circumstances made it necessary that an elders' court had to investigate charges preferred against two brethren. We trust that they will see their way clear to put matters right. Bro. Morgan has done his work under many discouraging circumstances, and in the spirit of kindness has faithfully discharged his duties. We found in Wales a disposition to criticize missionary methods; well, we are willing to consider any suggestion that any feel capable of presenting, in order to attain better results. We are, first and foremost, interested in the advance of the work, and if the methods which have been adopted and have been in vogue all these years are inadequate we shall be pleased and anxious to adopt any reasonable and proper suggestions that may be presented. But, I suggest, that it is not encouraging nor beneficial to simply adversely criticize without being able to offer any better suggestion. The work in Cardiff is faithfully cared for by Bro. Gould, who for many years has been a stalwart minister, and still is as faithful as of yore. He is assisted by Brn. Green and Trapp. In Lydney the work is at a very low ebb, and I agree with Bro. Griffiths that it would be better if a missionary could be located there to build up the work in this locality. Here we have a very clean and neat chapel, capable of holding two hundred and fifty people, and a few faithful Saints who are willing to support a missionary. Who will go? Missionary work in this land means continuous work in open-air preaching, tracting, and house to house visitation.

From Lydney we proceeded to Birmingham, held a series of good meetings in Ieknield Port Road Branch presided over by Bro. J. E. Meredith; also at Priestley Road Branch, presided over by Bishop Taylor. We were pleased to meet with the Saints in Birmingham and to note the spirit of kindness and earnestness which was in evidence among those in attendance. We had good meetings and enjoyed our associations in the city of Birmingham. While there we were privileged to attend a meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Anti-Cigarette League, in which several of our members are actively engaged. The Reverend F. Gould, a Congregational minister, is president of the Birmingham District, and Bro. Swan is the secretary. This movement had its origin in America by one, Willis Brown, of Chicago, whose splendid effort to stem the growing habit of cigarette-smoking among boys and even girls has resulted in over one million pledges. The movement has obtained a hold in this land, and is gaining headway. It deserves to succeed, for beyond all question this pernicious habit is one of the initial steps to dishonor, and physical, mental, moral, and spiritual degeneracy. May God bless every agency which has for its end the destruction of the work of the Devil.

From Birmingham to Leicester is about an hour's run. Here we were met by Bro. Eccleston, who is capable as president of the Leicester Branch. A faithful band of Saints are actively engaged in maintaining the cause of truth. We came across the Mormons, who were holding forth in the main street. We had quite an interesting time, which was enjoyed by all but the coterie of Utah elders.

We proceeded to Manchester to be in attendance at the quarterly conference of this district. We were called upon to officiate at the funeral of little John Foden, youngest child of Bro. and Sr. John Foden, president of North Manchester Branch, and also conference musical director. Just five years had the little one been permitted to bring sunshine into the home, and in a cruel moment of agonizing pain the little spirit was wrenched from the earthly environment to commune with God under brighter and purer conditions; but the separation left sore and lacerated hearts. May God bless the bereaved family and comfort them in the assurance of a coming reunion.

The district conference was a very happy time; it was refreshing to see such a large congregation so spontaneously happy in relating their experience with God. The gospel tent recently purchased by the Saints of the Northeast Manchester Branch was crowded.

From Manchester we proceeded to Stockport; had a splendid time with the Saints at this place; had good meetings which were well attended. Bro. G. Baty is a capable president, and enjoys the confidence of the Saints, which is given ungrudgingly. He is aided by two splendid assistants. From Stockport we went to Leeds, in company with Bro. James Baty, the patriarch in the North of England, and Bro. J. W. Green. The district conference was very inspiring and it was a pleasure to renew acquaintance with the Saints and friends of our native town. We were sorry to find Bro. H. Sharp very feeble, feeling the weight of his seventy-eight years very heavily. Yet he was happy, and rejoicing, and found the gospel promises equally as precious in the hour of death as in the heyday of life and vigor. He, with Bro. James Moir, another veteran whose fidelity and worth have long been proved, who is also rapidly drawing near to the time when his spirit shall cast off the pursuits of the shores of time to enter the realms of eternity, desired now in the evening of their earth-life to have their patriarchal blessings. Bro. Baty, with the quiet, calm dignity and humble reverence of a true servant of God, dispensed this comfort to the brethren under the influence of God's Spirit, which filled our hearts with joy and peace.

From Leeds we went home, and Providence permitting, we shall arrange to move from Scotland to Leeds in November. I rejoice in the work of God despite all difficulties, and feel hopeful of a triumphant ending to all our cares and conflicts. I wish in conclusion to thank all the Saints in the various towns to which duty called me for their kind hospitality and ministrations, which are always so pleasant and gratifying to the missionaries who are made the recipients of these kindly expressions. Surely it is a safe and profitable investment, which, if the Savior is to be believed, will bring its reward in the world of eternal bliss and contentment.

Praying that peace and prosperity may attend Zion's cause everywhere,
In gospel love,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, November 5, 1904.

Editor Herald: Noting Alvin Knisley's "Suggestions" in last week's HERALD as to the Book of Mormon being printed with the concordance and pronouncing vocabulary in the back, headings at the top of each page like the Bible and marginal references, beg to advise such a work is under way, and in addition, archæological data will be placed in parallel columns with the Book of Mormon notes for the reference of the student, and the entire matter arranged alphabetically, as Architecture, Art, etc., under "A," with everything in the Book of Mormon pertaining to them under that heading, accompanied by archæological notes referring to that period of time. There will be marginal references, and a great deal that will be of interest to the student not mentioned by Bro. Knisley. The work is slow, and arduous.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. A. Baity, Chrisman, Illinois, writes: "We live about six miles northwest of Chrisman, and only a few steps from a little station named Martamore on the Clover Leaf Railroad, west of Ridgeform. We would be glad to have the elders visit us soon, as we have never had an elder visit us yet. I believe with all my heart that Joseph Smith was a true prophet, and I want to be a follower of Christ's teachings."

The hour previous to the one opened for business was taken up in a very encouraging prayer-meeting. All officers reported, and all schools but one; names of schools reporting were as follows: Veve, Walker, Richhill, Nevada, Coal Hill, Wheatland, Eldorado Springs, and Fort Scott. The convention ordered to grant the Religio association part of their convention day, according to request, to hold their conventions, such time to be determined by Sunday-school officers. The association adopted the programs furnished by general superintendent. The next convention will be held at Richhill, Missouri. Sadie Dempsey, secretary.

Reports from Clear Lake, Hartford, and Galien Schools were read. Home class work was discussed, also several other topics of interest to Sunday-school workers. Several papers were read in the afternoon session during which an excellent spirit prevailed, manifested by the gifts of the gospel in tongues and interpretation. The district officers were all sustained. Adjournment was made to meet one day previous to district conference at Galien, Michigan. Mrs. Elsie Lockerby, secretary.

In the evening there was a joint Sunday-school and Religio entertainment, which was very instructive. Two very interesting papers were given, one on general progression in the Religio work, the other on marriage and divorce. Convention adjourned subject to call of the district officers.

Change of Field.

To Whom It May Concern: For the reason the Kewanee District has been depleted in its missionary force, Elder George Thorburn is hereby transferred to that field and recommended to all where he may labor.

J. W. WIGHT, Missionary in Charge.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

Saints of Little Sioux District; Greeting: To the Saints, whose hope the Lord is, the gospel, the salvation of humanity, the redemption of Zion, and the care of the poor should be our delight. Are you doing your duty in tithes and offerings? Are you making a sacrifice? Answer, knowing that God knows your heart; hence be true to yourselves. We preach an unchangeable God, and an everlasting gospel, hence in every age and dispensation the law of tithes is taught. The very first revelation to the church reorganized (section 114) begins: "In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, . . . to execute the law of tithing." And in paragraph 2: "As I live, saith the Lord, in the manner ye execute this matter, so shall ye be judged in the day of judgment." So it is for gospel extension we plead, that we may comply with God's law, and by obedience thereto stand acquitted, rewarded, blessed, victorious in the day of judgment. How the "little stone would roll," how the gospel sound would reverberate, how Christ would be honored, how the poor would rejoice and the Saints be blessed if you would do your full duty, not paying one dollar or ten, if you owe a hundred, or a thousand dollars to the Lord, but by the rich making sacrifice, as well as the poor. "He that knoweth his Master's will and doeth it not shall be beaten with many stripes." We hope you will come to the rescue of the work. You may make excuses to self, to the Bishop, or his agents; but are you excusable to God? Examine yourselves, whether you are in the faith. Is your faith in, and love for God and his work sufficient to move you to obedience? If not, your "faith without works is dead, being alone." You are of those who say, "Lord, Lord," but do not the things he hath spoken. At this date, (November 10,) I have one hundred and fifty-two names enrolled on the Bishop's agent's book for 1904, out of a membership of more than sixteen hundred. We should have one thousand. "Is your name written there?" Or even if it is, is it written for the amounts due your Creator and Savior? "If you love me keep my commandments," is the test of loyalty, and love to God and his work. So as this year will soon close, let us have our "lamps trimmed and burning," our lives devoted to his service, our heart-strings and purse-strings open for the good of the work which, if we love, we will support. We have efficient assistant agents in each branch, and a supply of receipts at our home office. Thanking the few who have so nobly assisted, praying for those who have not, asking your prayers that it may please God to soon set us free from physical bondage that we may meet you to plead face to face, I remain,

In gospel love,

MAGNOLIA, Iowa.

ALMA M. FYRANDO.

Seventh Quorum of Elders.

Dear Brethren: We are forwarding you shortly, a circular letter from the missionary in charge, (Bro. J. W. Rushton,) and the annual blank report form. The report form will you kindly fill in as early as possible after December 31, 1904, and forward as directed to the secretary? With heartiest gospel greetings,

Your brethren and fellow laborers,

GEORGE BATY, President.

SAMUEL F. MATHER, Secretary.

Convention Notices.

She died as peacefully as going to sleep. At rest,—a well-matured sheaf.

Addresses.

Isaac M. Smith, Galien, Berrien County, Michigan.
J. F. Mintun, 2500 Logan Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa.

In the Review of Reviews for November, Professor P. G. Holden, of the Iowa State College of Agriculture, tells what has been accomplished in that State, with the cooperation of the railroads, in the matter of educating the farmers in corn-planting. Tours of the State have been made and lectures given in "corn-gospel" trians, so called. The result is a greatly increased yield of Iowa's staple product.

Rafford Pyke has not much use for the mannish type of girl that is so much in evidence to-day, and he has written a very clever essay in the November Cosmopolitan to uphold his opinion. "When a woman seeks to cultivate them," he says, speaking of audacity, self-confidence, aggressiveness, push, and other masculine traits, "just because she likes them in a man, she does so at the expense of other and, to her, far more valuable elements of character, and even they fail her and defeat her purpose. Each sex has its own gifts, and each should be content with what it has and should give over borrowing from the other." And then the author proceeds to a most interesting analysis of the chief characteristics of a woman's features, indicating wherein lies strength and wherein weakness. Another "woman's article" in this same issue is Mrs. Flora McDonald Thompson's "How to live within your income," in which some sound economic horse-sense is expressed in the most entertaining of epigrammatic styles.

The Twentieth Century Home realizes that the training of the young is the most important problem of the modern home. It has already published several articles bearing directly on this subject, but none has been more valuable than "The treatment of evil in the training of children," by Professor M. V. O'Shea, in the October number. The author shows very clearly how disastrous is the result of instructing the young in what not to do and what to avoid without showing what might be done in their places. His plea for positive teaching of the wholesome pleasures of life rather than negative instruction in the effects of evil is put forward with a wealth of common-sense argument that will not fail of good results.

Doing Farm Work by Electricity.

Electricity has at last been applied successfully to agriculture, says the November World's Work. Already, on farms in Southern France, horses are replaced by motors. The farmers of the province of Aisne have discarded their horses, and are threshing their grain, grinding their flour, cutting roots, and pumping water by electricity. The owners of large farms have their own motors. The smaller proprietors club together to buy a motor, which is moved from farm to farm as each farmer needs it.

The power to run the motors is supplied from a central station, over high-tension lines, to sixteen substations, which distribute it at the proper pressure to the adjacent farms.

Other experiments have been made in Germany. The results show that it is cheaper for a small farmer to pay his share of the cost of a motor, which he may use when he wishes, than to keep a horse for farm work. And it has been found cheaper for the larger farmer to own motors, which do his work quickly and with little care, than to maintain a large stable continuously.

An even more remarkable application of electricity is the use of an electric current to make plants grow. Experiments have been carried on at the Hatch Experiment Station, Amherst, Massachusetts, which show that electricity has very marked effects on the growth of both seeds and plants. Seeds of several kinds of vegetables were planted in insulated boxes, where subjected to electrical currents of various kinds and intensities. The results showed that an alternating current of rather low intensity was the most effective stimulant, increasing the growth in some cases as much as thirty-seven per cent.

Sheep Without Wool.

The Department of Agriculture has recently imported five woolless sheep—four ewes and a buck—for use in the extreme Southern States, says Country Life in America. A heavy crop of wool is a burden in hot, dry districts, resulting in a direct ill effect on the quality of the mutton. These sheep are being experimented with by the Bureau of Animal Industry. They are hardy and are easy keepers. They were brought from the Barbadoes, where they proved profitable.

The Secret of Popularity.

Some people think that personal popularity is the result of a natural gift. Emily Holt brings out a book through McClure-Philips under the title of "The secret of popularity," in which she takes quite the opposite point of view. In her preface she declares that unpopularity is the result of a disregard of certain obvious rules of behavior and an overlooking of opportunities for kindness, etc. The book aims to put the reader on the right track in these regards. It is a rational and straightforward treatment of a subject of universal interest.

What Is Your Child Reading?

Ask yourselves a few pertinent questions, such as, Do I know what my child is reading? Do I supervise his reading? Is what he is reading worth while, or better, is it of most worth? Is it varied enough to make him an all-round man? Has my child a library-card? "Yes," you say, "he has one, and gets what he pleases on it." May your guardian angel preserve you from your just dues if such be the case!

Mothers, are you letting teachers take your place in guiding your children's reading? If so, you are simply letting slip out of your hands one of the most potent means of governing your flock. Go to the teacher and ask her to make out a list of books that she thinks best suited to your child. Make out a list of your own, compare them, weigh them, and call in a third list to help decide which is of most worth. "Much ado about nothing," some one will say. Not at all.

Pray do not misunderstand me when I speak of books of most worth, and think that I mean those that give most information. Far from it. Let the child revel in good fiction, dream in fairyland, wander among the fables and myths, and dance and sing with the poets. But let it not stop there. See that he lives over again the lives of our great and good men and women, fights again the world's battles, knows intimately the "creepin', crawlin' things," the birds of the air and the plants of field and highway. But whatever he reads, guide it yourself.—November Woman's Home Companion.

Impractical Reformers and Practical Thinkers.

Do crank reformers ever try to work with their hands? Do they never strive to mend or regulate domestic timepieces, or sewing-machines, window-shade rollers, or what not? If they do how can they fail to appreciate the wise old adage, "Facts are stubborn things"? How often does the domestic tinker concentrate the logical power of his intellect upon some simple mechanical problem, triumphantly solve the puzzle—in his mind—and then tackle the more material obstacles, only to find that "the thing won't go." Suppose him to be setting right an obstinate clock. The spring pushes, the wheels are in place, the escapement is adjusted, all is ready. Theoretically the clock should go. The amateur goes, step by step, mentally, over the whole process, and convinces himself that his logic is flawless. The clock should go. And meanwhile the clock offers no arguments to overthrow his conclusions, gives no sign of unwillingness, but simply offers for the reasoner's observation the fact that it can not go.

Such is the training offered by handiwork to its practitioners. Perhaps we may find here the reason why practical men are not at once converted by theoretical arguments. Their attitude may seem like obstinacy, but it is merely caution resulting from experience in practical matters.—From "The school of facts," by Tudor Jenks, in the Chautauquan for November.

I am authorized to announce the opportunity to purchase some cheap lands in Central California, with perpetual water-rights. Deed for land includes deed for water-rights. The supply of the latter is unbanded, the land is level and of a nice sandy loam, producing abundantly all kinds of fruits, grains, and vegetables. The price per acre varies from $15 to $35 per acre and some even higher than that. Prices vary owing to location and distance from railroads. Terms are one-fourth down, the balance in four annual payments, with six per cent interest. These chances are fast going out, so that people who want homes in the land of perpetual flowers and large, sweet Oranges (at ten cents a basket full), will have to hurry up. ### WOMEN PROTEST AGAINST SUFFRAGE RESTRICTIONS.

We have received from Daisy S. Deighton, Chairman of the Legislative Committee, State of Iowa, a branch of the National Women's Protest Committee, dated November 16, Shenandoah, Iowa, a copy of a protest against a bill now pending in Congress which it is claimed by the protesting committee is an insult to the women of the Southwest directly, and to the women of the United States indirectly. The part of the bill referred to, and against which strong protest is made, is as follows:

Fifth—That said State shall never enact any law restricting or abridging the right of suffrage on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, or on account of any other conditions or qualifications, save and except on account of illiteracy, minority, sex, conviction of felony, mental condition, or residence; provided, however, that any such restrictions shall be made uniform and applicable alike to all citizens.

This section occurs in a bill pending in Congress proposing the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territories as a State, under the name of Oklahoma, and of New Mexico and Arizona Territories as a State under the name of Arizona. It has passed the lower house, been read twice in the Senate, and is now before the Senate committee on Territories and is now subject to amendment while being considered in committee.

We are requested to give this protest editorial comment. Perhaps the least said the soonest mended will be true in this regard. We have never been opposed to granting suffrage to woman. We have been ready at any time for the last forty years to vote to grant woman the ballot. We have done this from the consideration that the ballot is not a natural, but a political right, and a matter within the jurisdiction of the State, and should be controlled by State legislation. We think so now as we have thought heretofore.

We notice that Mrs. Mary A. Livermore is among those who are agitating this question. We remember meeting this lady at a convention held at Plano, Illinois, many years ago, when she was traveling through the States of the Northwest in advocacy of woman suffrage. We were reported to her as being opposed to woman's right to vote. It was a mistake upon the part of those so reporting.

We do not see that the clause referred to, section 5 of the bill, which forms the basis of this protest, is so dangerous as the protestants seem to regard it. If there is any restriction in the section it is to be construed as preventing to the States the abridging the right of those already recognized by the nation as entitled to the elective franchise. It does not restrict the States from granting the suffrage to woman; and the only pith there is in the protestation is the sentimental part objecting to classing of women with the illiterate, those under age, those restricted from the ballot by conviction for felony, those from mental alienation, and those non-residents in the State. While there may be force in this objection, it is based purely upon sentiment.

In many respects the exercise of suffrage on the part of woman would relieve the situation so far as morals may be involved, possibly no further. The experiment is being tried in different States, and we have been looking for good results to follow. It may be that the present agitation will turn the lime-light upon the subject.

LETTER AND EVIDENCE FROM OLIVER COWDERY.

Last year there was a published reference by Bishop E. L. Kelley to a letter which had fallen into his hands, written by Oliver Cowdery to Daniel S. Jackson. It has been thought that the letter would have a better effect and the matter stated in it be better understood if the whole letter were published. The letter came into possession of Bro. Kelley through a correspondence between him and Mrs. Adelia K. Quigley, who was the natural custodian of the letter, being a niece of Oliver Cowdery. We give below Bro. Richard Ferris' letter to the Bishop sending the letter of Mrs. Quigley and the letter of Oliver Cowdery, feeling an assurance that the letter with its attendant correspondence will meet the pleasure of the readers of the HERALD:

630 Chestnut St.,
OAKLAND, Cal., Sept., 23, 1903.

BISHOP E. L. KELLEY;—
Dear Sir and Bro.:—

I enclose the letter for your perusal and copying, photographing or the best use you can make of it, returning it as soon as possible or as can be done, giving time of course to accomplish what you desire to.

Truly your bro. in the gospel,

R. FERRIS.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Sept. 5th, 03.

MR. RICHARD FERRIS,
Dear Sir:

You will pardon the delay in answering yours of the 1st inst. I have a position at the State Fair and it takes all of my time, so this is the first opportunity I have had to write.

I can appreciate what the Bishop, Mr. Kelley, says with regard to using only a part of the letter, although the rest of the letter is only regarding private matters. Still, I know it would have more weight if the entire letter were shown to the people.

I know that you and your people hold this sacred epistle as highly as we, therefore I again send it to you, to send to your Bishop, that he may see the entire of the original.

We are as anxious as any that Uncle Oliver's true religion should be known.

I trust that after sufficient time for the Bishop to use it to establish the Truth, it will be safely returned.

I hope that sending the letter will save the expense of photographing the rest.

Yours for Truth

ADELIA K. QUIGLEY.

Brother Daniel and Sister Phebe:

Phebe's letter mailed at Montrose on the 2nd of this month, was received in due time, and would have been replied to immediately, but it came in the midst of the toil and business of Court, which has just closed: and I take the earliest moment to answer. It is needless to say, that we had long looked for, and long expected, a letter from you or Sister Lucy.

Now, brother Daniel and sister Phebe, what will you do? Has sister Phebe written us the truth? And if so, will you venture with your little ones, into the toil and fateague of a long journey, and that for the sake of finding a resting place when you know of miseries of such magnitude, as have, as will, and as must, rend asunder the tenderest and holiest ties of domestic life? I can hardly think it possible, that you have written us the truth—that though there may be individuals who are guilty of the iniquities spoken of,—yet no such practice can be preached or adheared to, as a public doctrine. Such may do for the followers of Mahomet; it may have done some thousands of years ago; but no people, professing to be governed by the pure and holy principles of the Lord Jesus, can hold up their heads before the world at this distance of time, and be guilty of such folly—such wrong—such abomination. It will blast, like a mill-dew, their fairest prospects, and lay the axe at the root of their future happiness.

You would like to know whether we are calculating to come on, and emigrate to California: On this subject everything depends upon circumstances—and of those circumstances, it is not necessary for me here to speak. We do not feel to say or do anything to discourage you from going, if you think it best to do so. We know, in part, how you are situated—Out of the Church, you have few, or no friends, and very little, or no society—in it you have both. So far as going west is concerned, I have thought it a wise move—indeed, I could see no other; and though the journey is long and attended with toil, yet a bright future has been seen in the distance if right counsels were given, and a departure, in no way, from the original faith, in no instance countenanced. Of what that doctrine and faith is, and was, I ought to know, and further it does not become me now to speak.

On the 27th of May we had an addition to our little family, of another daughter, who died on the 3rd of this month. So we are left again, with Maria, and Maria only.—We have lost five children.

Brother Lyman visited us on the 15th of May, and brother Warren and sister Patience, on the 25th of June. They were well, and as we learn by letters, our friends in Kirtland are well. Father and Mother, enjoy good health, and hold out well, for persons of their age. Lawrence is post Master. Lyman has recently moved from the Wm. Smith house to the [Name illegible.—Copyist.] house, up near by Russels. Warren still lives on the Bosley farm. Franklin is clerk in the stage office of Neil, Moore & Co. at Wheeling, Virginia, and he often complains, in his letters to us, that he has written you, but gets no reply. You ought to write to him.

Now, brother Daniel, I shall expect, on the receipt of this, that you will write to us—indeed we don't see why you do not write oftener.

When you see Lucy, give our love to her. I shall write Phineas, and direct to Nauvoo. I have not written any of you for a long time, thinking it doubtful whether you would receive letters, when excited, persecuted, &c.

Now, don't forget to write to us. May the Lord have mercy on you, and protect and spare you.

Truly your brother and friend,

OLIVER COWDERY.

P. S. Elizabeth and Maria send love.

[Note: The letter was written and mailed before envelopes had come into use. It was folded, and addressed, on the back of it, "Daniel S. Jackson, Esq., Montrose, Lee County, Iowa Territory." Written across the corner was the word, "Wheeling." It bears two postal stamps: "Tiffin Jul 28, O." "10."]

Copied from original letters, copies correct, as verified:

ARTICLES OF FAITH PUBLISHED BY JOSEPH SMITH BEFORE HIS DEATH.

We give below an extract from the Deseret Evening News, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for November 12, 1904, which may have a familiar look to our readers, and for the insertion of which we apologize, upon the hypothesis that all do not know why the name of Joseph Smith should be signed to this epitome at the present juncture. These Articles of Faith were first published in the Times and Seasons for 1842 at the direction of Joseph Smith, and were made a part of a chapter for I. Daniel Rupp's "History of the Religious Denominations in the United States," published in 1844, furnished by Joseph Smith to said Daniel Rupp. They were also furnished to Honorable John Wentworth, of Chicago, for publication in his newspaper, called the Chicago Democrat, in 1842, by Joseph Smith, and were so published. We are not displeased to see these Articles of Faith in print with the name of Joseph Smith signed to them, for the reason that it is beyond question the declaration of the faith of the church, and the only faith of the church up to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in 1844, well understood and published to the people within and without the church. Whatever addition was made after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, was made to the disparagement of this public declaration. So let it be published and sent broadcast as the faith of the church before the introduction of those noxious heresies which have brought the name of Joseph Smith into controversy and thrown so much obloquy upon his work.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Deseret News for November 12, 1904, states that for the week ending November 12 there were in the city of Salt Lake thirty-two births of which fifteen were males and seventeen were females; that the deaths for the same week were thirteen males and seven females, leaving a proportion of ten females to two males, for the week; rather an unfortunate showing for child-life.

The Register and Leader of Des Moines, Iowa, for November 7, 1904, reports quite a controversy between Bro. J. F. Mintun and elders from the Utah church, in which it makes a very fair statement as given by Bro. Mintun.

J. W. Wight and F. A. Smith began a series of meetings at the brick church, Sunday, the 20th. Bro. Wight was the speaker in the morning, and Bro. Smith in the evening. Services will be continued during the week and over next Sunday.

ARTICLES OF FAITH,

Of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

1. We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.

3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.

4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, repentance; third, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, fourth, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.

6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church, namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.

7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.

8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.

9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the ten tribes. That Zion will be built upon this continent. That Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisaical glory.

11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where or what they may.

12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers and magistrates, in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.

13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to ALL MEN; indeed we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—Joseph Smith.

THANKSGIVING.

AN ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA.

NOVEMBER 26, 1903.

O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth; O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, show thyself. Lift up thyself, thou Judge of the earth: render a reward to the proud. Lord, how long shall the wicked, how long shall the wicked triumph? How long shall they utter and speak hard things? and all the workers of iniquity boast themselves? They break in pieces thy people, O Lord, and afflict thine heritage. They slay the widow and the stranger, and murder the fatherless. Yet they say, The Lord shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it. Understand, ye brutish among the people: and ye fools, when will ye be wise? He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? he that formed the eye, shall he not see? He that chastiseth the heathen, shall not he correct? he that teacheth man knowledge, shall not he know? The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity. Blessed is the man whom thou chastisest, O Lord, and teachest him out of thy law; that thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity, until the pit be digged for the wicked. For the Lord will not cast off his people, neither will he forsake his inheritance. But judgment shall return unto righteousness: and all the upright in heart shall follow it. Who will rise up for me against the evil-doers? or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity? Unless the Lord had been my help, my soul had almost dwelt in silence. When I said, My foot slippeth; thy mercy, O Lord, held me up. In the multitude of my thoughts within me thy comforts delight my soul. Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law? They gather themselves together against the soul of the righteous, and condemn the innocent blood. But the Lord is my defence; and my God is the rock of my refuge. And he shall bring upon them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness; yea, the Lord our God shall cut them off.—Psalm 94.

The occasion upon which we are assembled is a national one. The holiday which we thus represent was born before the Government was, and fixed under the influence of the patriotism and the love of freedom that inspired this band of men when they sought, from oppression, a place where they could plant their hearthstones and erect their family altars and worship God according to the dictates of their conscience. No man can stand upon the shores where those men landed, who has a love of country in his heart, whether he is a native of this land or born abroad and has but a temporary sojourn in the place, under the American flag, but what would feel his heart moved with patriotic emotions; and in spite of himself the patriotism that is within him will be stirred. When we think of the history that led up to the planting of that colony on the shores of that inhospitable bay, the season of the year in which it occurred, the following experiences, and the indomitable spirit that moved those men, not so much for the peculiar blessings of the country, for at that time they knew nothing of the illimitable ways, the unsearchable riches of the country, and the almost supernatural wealth of the land from east to west, and from north to south; there was no promise in the soil nor in the forests where they landed that could give them a competent thought as to what lay beyond, yet when we read the history of their courage, the sacrifices that they made, witness the exhibition of their charity, one for another, we wonder. And we meet to-day under circumstances wonderfully different. We can almost feel the chill of that wintry air, and take cognizance by those things which surround us of the peculiar conditions which we know must have surrounded them. And our hearts go out in thankfulness that those men and women had the courage of their convictions. While we deplore the apparent ingratitude, and the sore persecutions with which some of them visited others of different faiths than themselves, we can not but bless God for the fact that under it all there was that dominant spirit, that dominant thought, This country is for the free. Here no religious hierarchy should take rule of the state; and persecution for religion's sake must stop. Though it may have cropped out here and there since that, the day, as we think, is past when it can obtain any considerable hold, long continued, in the land in which we dwell.

It would take a more masterly mind than mine, one whose brain is more elastic than mine, even to approximate a short list of the things for which we ought to be grateful to God, to-day. And, as a people, of all people we have, beyond question, a more profound reason to be grateful and thankful for national conditions as a whole than any other people that we know anything about. For while others may have a conception born within that this land was intended for the development of political thought and religious freedom, it has come to us by the voice of inspiration. And almost every line of that inspiration, which has been reduced to such language that we, ourselves, comprehend it, is full of the thought that this land and the institutions upon it, under the influence of which we rejoice to-day, was designed of the Almighty. And it is a wonder to us, many of us, how it happens that anybody can not see that the hand of God has been over this nation from its inception. I do not speak now, necessarily, of the governmental portion of it, (though I believe that it, too, was designed of God,) but the material nation, the land, and the people who occupied it as the result of that pilgrim manifestation, were designed of God. And we as descendants, though some of us may not be able to trace our parentage in the lists of those Puritan fathers, nor yet into the ranks of the veterans who subsequently defended it against modern tyranny, yet we have had in the past our parentage that we may trace to the mother country; and however much we may have felt the sadness of national separation, we can but rejoice that the result which followed this separation was the planting of a nation in this Western world, from the influence of which the teaching and inspiration, (I may rightly say the inspiration of the soul,) should go abroad to every nationality under the whole heavens and beget within the breasts of those to whom this influence should commend itself a desire to be free. And to-day as a part of the nation we rejoice.

We think of the wondrous struggle that took place when we were but few, when for eight long years the struggle went on, when it seemed as if tyranny and oppression must ultimately prevail. And while we do this we trace an infinite reliance upon an infinite God. We follow with Washington at Valley Forge, and with Patrick Henry in the House of Representatives, and with them we lift our hearts to God in praise that the struggle was decided in favor of the few, an illustration again of the sentiment that the battle is not always to the strong, nor the race to the swift, but in that instance right prevailed. And when, subsequently, not quite a hundred years ago, the necessity arose for resistance against tyranny, and the battle was renewed, there came again triumph to the few. It was a triumph of principle. And though we may regret that the battle of New Orleans was fought after the signing of the treaty of peace, it was but the echo of the spirit that had fought against oppression up to that hour. And the dread destruction that took place upon that eighth day of January, 1812, when weapons in the hands of the few, the few from the agricultural walks of life with their home-made weapons, against the armies of the strong, brings to us that persistent thought that God's hand was over the nation. And while we trace prosperity as the nation opened her doors to the incoming of the oppressed of every land, until such time occurred as the persistent encroachment on the liberty of free men made slavery hateful, and the inevitable conflict took place that resulted in the emancipation of the race from the bonds of slavery, we can but think, even now, that the hand of God was in that struggle. Though there may have been fanaticism on both sides of the controversy, that which could not be brought to pass by peaceable means must necessarily be accomplished by the strong arm of force. And as it was once remarked, "The tree of liberty has ever been watered by the blood of the free," so it was upon that occasion. It was a trial of principle. And as we look around us to-day, and take cognizance of the conditions which are extant in the world, we can almost see, and some of us fear, that those conditions are again forcing principle into a conflict; that again armed men will stand arrayed against each other as antagonists, and the principles of the right of men to be free must again be fought out on different battle-fields, and from different standpoints: on the one hand the perpetuity of what we may justly call tyranny and oppression, and on the other side the right of free men to exercise their liberties and their conscience. Personally, I do not look for a religious war; but possibly a war for the triumph of political principles, or economic principles may occur. Some men, far more conversant with the political world than I, fear that; and some have even gone so far as to point out conditions that must exist as a result of conditions now existing, if they continue, that will bring the conflict. What the result may be, no man can foresee. It is in the mind of God, and unless he vouchsafes to make it manifest unto some one whom he might choose, it must result to the world as the day of the coming of the Son of Man: there will be eating, and drinking, there will be marrying and giving in marriage, there will be joy, and there will be sorrow, until the storm of war shall flood the plains of the earth with blood.

But I am not an alarmist. I do not take any fear to myself of the result to the nation. While I may not be able to see all the peculiar ramifications of it, I believe that the principles which have been announced at the opening of the Government, at its incipency, will continue until the Son of Man shall come, and that the nation of principle shall triumph from the river to the ends of the earth, when there will be a universal recognition of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God, when these lines of denominational existence and partition between classes will be broken down, when the prejudices which have given rise to them will be overcome by broader philanthropy, and men will love their neighbors more like the statement, "thy neighbor as thyself," than they have ever done.

We are thankful for material prosperity, and yet as we look around us we see, underlying this apparent degree of prosperity, conditions that are hard to bear, and among our fellowmen are those who are suffering for the things by which their lives are kept in comfort. We see unrighteousness in many places prevailing. And he who takes any paper, and reads this ninety-fourth Psalm, can see that there is a necessity for the intervention of the hand of God, that judgment shall return unto righteousness, and the broad degradation in political and municipal affairs shall be relegated into oblivion. It is simply astonishing the height to which speculation is running in this world, and in this Government of ours. It is literally astonishing that a nation so wise in merchantile affairs as the United States has shown herself to be, a nation so wise in diplomacy, should suffer the long reign of corruption of its principles as it has done, that the nation so long suffers corruption to rule over it, or the people themselves submit to it so long as they do. It but exercises in the material world, or in the political world, precisely what it is said has been accorded to mankind in the religious world, that there never will be a complete ascendancy of that which is right until there shall come a wave of reformation over the world in this regard, and injustice and wrong shall hide their heads, when corruption shall be overruled by righteousness, when unrighteous administrators shall be overcome. I hope that time will come. I may not live to see it, but younger men than I may, and I believe will, unless the Son of man shall come before the final accomplishment of it in the hands of men on the earth, and enforce by the principle of power that which he has designed through the principle of love, a complete overturning of that which is upon the earth in the conditions of wrong, and follow them by conditions that are favorable to the conditions of right. And we may place ourselves in the position of the Psalmist, and as a body, in ourselves representative of the nation, we may say, "Unless the Lord shall be our help, our souls shall all dwell in silence. When I said, My foot slippeth; thy mercy, O Lord, held me up." As we believe the Lord's hand has been over the nation in the past in its incipency, may we believe that the same divine providence is watching over its development now. And it would be a hard thought to me, (I trust it would be to all of us,) to think that that which he has taken so much pains to suffer to be developed, or who has inaugurated the laws by which it has been developed, should suffer it to come to an untimely end, before the great object which he had in view at the start shall have been accomplished.

When I came upon the stand this morning I sat down between the representatives of two branches of the military defenders of the nation, the army and the navy. And do you know I thought there was something significant in that, upon the right hand the navy, upon the left the army, men of our faith, who recognized the call of patriotism, put themselves at the disposition of the Government, and went out with others to maintain the proposition of a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, and against the idea of a divided nationality. And yet I may be asked, if the nation is true to its principles, has the Government maintained its integrity? And my only answer to that can be this: That if in the divine providence things which are conspiring are necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose which God had in view in the planting of this Government upon this land, every action of the Government shall be recognized by him, and in his divine providence shall be successful for the accomplishment of the design. And as Patrick Henry said, "If that be treason, make the most of it."

We live in a State in which there are no great mineral fields of wealth. From the bowels of the earth we get the fuel that we use; but we have neither copper, nor gold, nor silver, nor lead, to any great extent, yet the State of which we are citizens stands almost first in the products of those agricultural things that make a pastoral people, things which they need to sustain human life. While we may not minister to their luxury, fine clothing, or jewels, or the wealth of the mine, we can give to them the things by which their bodies are sustained, and their spirits strengthened. And in this abundance of food, and the things which are calculated to make home a choice place to stay, we have a grand State to live in. The boast of Governor Sherman may be reiterated to-day: "On every hill a church; in every valley a schoolhouse." Our laws are munificent laws. The administration of the public affairs of the State is excellent in this regard, and our children are growing up under the munificent provisions by which they may secure sufficient education to train them for the active walks of life, and in such degree that no one of them, who may have the courage and the persistence, can not secure a good education. We have the best code of laws of any State in the United States, so far as I have any knowledge of. I knew some of the men that were appointed by the Legislature for the recodifying of the laws of Iowa. I remember one of them told me that he and his companions took the laws of the various States as shown in their statutes, and from them they selected what they thought were the best, in their judgment, (and they were men of good judgment in this respect,) and so formulated the laws of the State in which we live. These wild prairies of ours were at the time pretty well covered with speculators' claims. Money from the East had been sent in here, and they had plastered their obligations over these wide prairies under the idea that nonresident land should not be taxed. But those legislators of the incipient State that has now grown to such a lusty existence, saw fit to impose a tax upon nonresident land for school purposes, until it was possible to build good schoolhouses where there were hardly inhabitants enough to pay the teacher. And it was a good thing, for it had the result of causing these men who had covered so much of this land to sell out to actual settlers. And I am thankful in thinking about it, that no man can secure an amount of land, here, and throw around it his police protection, as I understand it is done in the East, to prevent people trespassing upon his rights. How long the American government is going to suffer that kind of corruption I do not know. I trust they will not permit the thing to culminate in this country as it has in the Old Country. I hope anyway that the men of the present generation, and the coming generation, will be sufficiently wise to take such measures as will prevent such an aggregation of selfishness as that shows. I believe in some way it will be done. And I read a notice in the paper, I think yesterday or the day before, that looks to me significant, stating that the Vanderbilts were parting with their accumulated real estate in the state of New York, and offering it upon the market, as the result of conditions which they could not withstand. I wish it would be so elsewhere.

Expressing these thoughts I state that this republic is one whose forebears came from over the water;

we trace our kinship right back into the English nation, how far back I do not care; that is far enough for the consideration of Thanksgiving day. And as a citizen I take pleasure in remembering that we have wherewithal to be clothed upon, that we have wherewithal to feed ourselves, and that we at least have a sufficient degree of fellowship in our citizenship to stand together as a unit, as a people, though we may differ widely in our opinions concerning this or that or the other condition of things, or the laws which may be governing us; while we keep ourselves within the right precincts occupied by citizenship, we are all free people. I am thankful as an individual, for health, for strength; so are we all who may be gathered here to-day. And we remember that near by the life of one of our prominent citizens lies upon the verge of the other world. And also one of the veterans of this work lies shrouded in the white canopy that marks the successful approach of death: Bro. Winthrop Blair, one of the earliest members of the Reorganization, his body lies in his home, robed preparatory to his burial. And when I visited him last night and found that he could not recognize me, or could not make it known if he did, I remembered how that forty odd years ago he was among the few that stood together at Amboy, Illinois, to raise up the standard against the incoming flood of iniquity as against an enemy. I said to his daughters assembled there: "It would be a good thing if all of us, when we reach his condition, nigh unto death, could reflect, as we must reflect concerning him, that he had by all that lay in man's power, approved himself unto God." And as I thought concerning him, I knew his past history so far as his life had been in public for over forty years, and no man whom he may meet over on the other side can accuse Winthrop Blair of having done him wrong. So I think that as citizens it would be well for us, while we are thankful for the things that we have, the material blessings which we are enjoying, to think of the spiritual abundance, and of the light that shineth down upon us from far, and of what shall be the future if we keep our hopes steadfast, and our lives pure. We will take cognizance of those by whom we are surrounded, and weep when they weep, sorrow when they sorrow, be thankful for the things that give them joy. It is perhaps a sad thought that we all must die. But it is a joyful thought besides. And while we take up the thought touching that which is said in the book, that the Lord taketh no pleasure in the death of the wicked, yet he taketh pleasure in the death of his saints, the principle that lies there is this: that in the death of his saints he sees the transition from this condition of untoward things into that which is better, and he rejoices that the individual, as a saint, has accomplished the object of his living in this world. He taketh no pleasure in the death of the wicked because the transition from this to the other side is of such a character that misfortune must follow. Therefore let us be thankful to-day for the influence that brought to pass the landing of the Pilgrims in Massachusetts Bay, for the building up of Plymouth, for the enlargement of the Colony, for the sturdy independence of these men, for the standard that was lifted by Roger Williams against a unity of church and state; thankful that in the struggle of 1776, culminating as it did in our independence, and the declaration of the principles upon which the Constitution of the country is founded, and the successful defence of 1812, and the lifting up of a successful hand again in 1860 and 1861, that principle has triumphed, and we trust will continue.

We are thankful for the wonderful things of this land; and as we think of those things which are produced in the North and the South, and that come from the West and from the East, we can lift up our heads in thankfulness to Almighty God, who has planted us as a people in the center of this wonderful country.

And we rejoice not in war, but in the results of peace; and that this peace may continue, whether it be in prosperity or in adversity, that there still may be peace among us as a people, with us as a State, and peace with us as a Nation; that this may transpire let us keep our hearts true to God, true to the principles of righteousness which he has given us. That, as we realize that we may be as a city set upon a hill, even as individuals, we are prepared for the scrutiny that others may pass upon us. And when you think of this Thanksgiving day that you gathered here to hear me, think that it is open for all of us to so express ourselves before God, that we may render to him that better part of praise that makes us thankful, above all, for the gospel of the Son of God, by which our souls have comfort and joy; that looking forward over the lapse of time, the passing of material things, into that great realm beyond, from which we can see shining lights that light up the pathway we are striving to tread, that it may be of a character to strengthen us, that our feet may not slip, but that we may walk safely that narrow way, until like those who have gone before us we can pass in and feel successful as a child of our Father who is in heaven.

PIONEERS OF OTTERTAIL.—NO. 5.
POLYGAMY AND ONENESS.

To the preceding sketch of the first settlements of Ottertail County we add the following supplementary chapter, giving as requested, some reasons for adopting a principle of equality, or oneness in temporal things, and also our disapproval of polygamy, which seems to have been advocated and practiced to considerable extent by Brigham Young and others at Salt Lake.

POLYGAMY.

In regard to the last-named question, we do not find anything in the law and order of God given for the salvation of mankind that will justify such a proceeding, and to make the matter more plain we will copy from the one hundred and eleventh section of Doctrine and Covenants, which book purports to set forth some rules, laws, and commandments to the church. It reads as follows:

According to the custom of all civilized nations, marriage is regulated by laws and ceremonies: therefore we believe, that all marriages in this Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints should be solemnized in a public meeting, or feast, prepared for that purpose: and that the solemnization should be performed by a presiding high priest, high priest, bishop, elder, or priest, not even prohibiting those persons who are desirous to get married, of being married by other authority. We believe that it is not right to prohibit members of this church from marrying out of the church, if it be their determination so to do, but such persons will be considered weak in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Marriage should be celebrated with prayer and thanksgiving; and at the solemnization, the persons to be married, standing together, the man on the right, and the woman on the left, shall be addressed, by the person officiating, as he shall be directed by the Holy Spirit; and if there be no legal objections, he shall say, calling each by their names: "You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives." And when they have answered "Yes," he shall pronounce them "husband and wife" in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by virtue of the laws of the country and the authority vested in him: "May God add his blessing and keep you to fulfill your covenants from henceforth and for ever. Amen."

The clerk of every church should keep a record of all marriages solemnized in his branch.

All legal contracts of marriage made before a person is baptized into this church, should be held sacred and fulfilled. Inasmuch as this Church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy: we declare that we believe one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again. It is not right to persuade a woman to be baptized contrary to the will of her husband, neither is it lawful to influence her to leave her husband. All children are bound by law to obey their parents; and to influence them to embrace any religious faith, or be baptized, or leave their parents without their consent, is unlawful and unjust. We believe that husbands, parents, and masters who exercise control over their wives, children, and servants, and prevent them from embracing the truth, will have to answer for that sin.

I have copied the section in full. And now, under these considerations, and being assured that we had no need to break the laws of the land to keep the laws of God, we could not fellowship with or follow a people who encouraged or practiced such things. Indeed, some of the Salt Lake elders say that our little society is among the hardest opposers to the polygamy question of any people they had conversed with.

ONENESS.

In noticing our reasons for adopting or endeavoring to act for a time in a principle of oneness, as we sometimes call it, I must refer to some passages which we understand to be the word and will of God to man, but time and space will not permit of a lengthy explanation, and perhaps it is not necessary to present. However, I will call the mind to the subject by copying the following paragraphs, viz., Saint Matthew 22: 36-40:

Master, which is the great commandment in the law? Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

But what have these passages to do with the principle of oneness? First, it enables us to have all confidence in God and his word, and if his word seems to set forth an order of this kind, and we love our neighbors as ourselves, it removes selfishness from our minds and hence it becomes more easy to divide or impart of our substance and be equal with our neighbor in the enjoyment of temporal things. In Acts 2: 44-47 we find the following:

And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favor with all people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.

It would appear from the above, that while the people were acting by a principle of obedience and love in the parting of their goods as every man had need, the Lord had respect to their offering and consequently favored them with some of the greatest manifestations of his power.

We next copy a few paragraphs from Doctrine and Covenants, (above mentioned). Speaking of earthly blessings, that man should have an abundance, etc., it says:

But it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another.—Section 49.

But verily I say unto you, Teach one another according to the office wherewith I have appointed you, and let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me. And again I say unto you, Let every man esteem his brother as himself; for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just. Behold, this I have given unto you a parable, and it is even as I am. I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one ye are not mine.—Section 58, paragraph 5.

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me; and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose.—Section 42, paragraph 8.

And let that which belongs to this people be appointed unto this people; and the money which is left unto this people, let there be an agent appointed unto this people to take the money, to provide food and raiment, according to the wants of this people. And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one, even as I have commanded you.—Section 51, paragraph 2.

In the last clause of the first paragraph of the seventy-seventh section, speaking of establishing the affairs of the storehouse, it says:

For a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church, to advance the cause which ye have espoused, to the salvation of man, and to the glory of your Father who is in heaven, that ye may be equal in the bands of heavenly things; yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things; for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you.

Many other items I might refer to, but the foregoing is sufficient to show some of the reasons why we endeavored to act on a principle of equality or oneness, and that we had some foundation, and that it was not a matter of our own getting up, as we have been accused.

In regard to the matter of equality or oneness, many wrong ideas have been gathered, but I have not space for explanation, and will only add that whoever may act in any degree upon matters of this nature will learn that a perfect order attends the whole business.

The space of time in which we were endeavoring to act and advance in these principles, if I mistake not, was some five or six years, when some became a little dissatisfied and hence the matter was at length discontinued. Our crops at this period having been cut short by the drought and locust, seemed to discourage some, but in this time of scarcity, by acting in a measure upon the principle of dividing our substance one with another, even if it was but little, was indeed a benefit to the people and no family was left to suffer. Other instances and matters might be noticed, but there is not room in this short chapter.

CHAUNCEY WHITING.

ADDENDUM.

It seems fitting that a few words should be written concerning the changes that have occurred since 1885, (when the above account was written,) and the present status of the "Cutlerites," as they are familiarly known by the citizens of Clitherall and vicinity.

Chauncey Whiting died June 7, 1902, and no one has yet been chosen to take his place as "chief counselor" to the church. Isaac M. Whiting, his first counselor, is living, and nominally occupying that position still, but we understand that he has not consented to occupy his father's place as chief counselor to the church. Lyman Murdock died August 3, 1880, and Abner Tucker was finally chosen to fill his place as second counselor, which position he still occupies.

F. L. Whiting and S. J. Whiting still hold their former positions in the church. Hyrum Murdock passed the portals of the tomb a number of years ago, and Charles Sperry has long since been gathered to his fathers, since which time the church has been without a patriarch.

Apostasy (looking from their standpoint) has wrought havoc with the little band. Of Chauncey Whiting's children, three sons and one daughter have joined the Reorganization, two of them being elders. Eleven of his grandchildren, also, are found in the ranks of the Reorganization. Six of F. L. Whiting's children (one being now a teacher) and twenty-six grandchildren are members of the Reorganization. Five of these grandchildren are also the grandchildren of Hyrum Murdock, four of whose children, and about nine of whose grandchildren belong to the Reorganized Church; as does also one of S. W. Whiting's sons.

Altogether forty-nine, not including the grandchildren mentioned above, have apostatized from the "Cutlerites," and joined the "Josephites." Two or three, perhaps, have become identified with some of the sectarian churches, while a number of the descendants of these early pioneers have failed, so far, to manifest a lively interest in the faith of their fathers, but are engaged in the business affairs of the world with little thought apparently for religion of any kind. Twenty-three or four may yet be counted as members of the little flock, although a number of these are very indifferent.

From the standpoint of those who have transferred their faith from Father Cutler to "Young Joseph" as the rightful successor to Joseph the Seer, heartfelt thanks are due to those early pioneers who, by their faith and integrity in the angel's message and the great restoration of these latter days, have implanted in the hearts of their descendants a love for the latter-day work, and an inborn faith in the divinity of the calling of the prophet Joseph Smith.

Who shall say that those venerable fathers, whose hearts have been sorely smitten and grieved by the seeming perversity of their children, yet who have stood steadfast, under all this sorrow, as well as through the dark day of apostasy, in their faith in the "marvelous work and a wonder" brought forth through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, and have kept themselves unspotted from the world and the evils thereof,—who shall say that they and their children, (when the mists of latter-day apostasy shall have been entirely swept away, and their minds are left unfettered by the chains of darkness and they shall see as they are seen and know as they are known,) may not rejoice together as defenders of a common cause?

In 1887 the Lord spoke as follows:

That the work of restoration to which the people of my church are looking forward may be hastened in its time, the elders must cease to be overcareful concerning the return of those who were once of the faith but were overcome in the dark and cloudy day, fearing lest they should bring in hidden heresies to the overthrowing of the work; for verily, there are some who are chosen vessels to do good, who have been estranged by the hindering snares which are in the world and who will in due time return unto the Lord if they be not hindered by the men of the church. The Spirit says "Come"; let not the ministers for Christ prevent their coming.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 4.

Looking at it from the standpoint of those who have accepted the Reorganization, the Lord has watched over this faction of the church, and there were some among them who were chosen vessels to do good. Some have returned and engaged in that good work. And whose fault is it if others have not? The Lord said they would return if not hindered by the men of the church. In the beginning of the work of the Reorganization among this little band of people many unwise things were said and done which have had a blighting influence to this day, and hindered some from a proper, unprejudiced examination of the claims of the Reorganization. Now, in the day of judgment who will stand highest? those who were chosen vessels, and would have returned, but have been hindered, or those who have hindered them? We are assured, however, that the Lord's judgment will be just, and that each will reap a reward commensurate with his works of righteousness.

As to the every-day life of the staunch members of this little church we would say that we have never been among a people who practiced humility and kindness in the treatment of their "neighbor" to a greater extent than this people. Their hands have been ever ready to help the needy, the poor, the sick; whether of the world, the "Josephites," or their own number; whether worthy or unworthy of their help.

It will be noticed in the recital by Chauncey Whiting that Father Cutler, and also Chauncey Whiting, as chief counselors of the church, chose their first and second counselors; while all who are acquainted with the Doctrine and Covenants must admit that they should be appointed by revelation:

The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged, in his administration, by the voice of the church; and it is according to the dignity of his office, that he should preside over the high council of the church; and it is his privilege to be assisted by two other presidents, appointed after the same manner that he himself was appointed.—Doctrine and Covenants 99: 6, Lamoni edition.

LEON A. GOULD.

THE END.

Believe me when I tell you that thrift of time will repay you in after-life, with a usury of profit beyond your most sanguine dreams, and that waste of it will make you dwindle alike in intellectual and moral stature, beyond your darkest reckoning.—Gladstone.

SCIENCE AND THE BIBLE.

The HERALD for October 12 is duly and promptly to hand, and it is no exaggeration to say that it fairly teems with golden thoughts, and flashes with scintillating gems of moral worth and of intellectual significance. Such articles as "Time's vindication," and "Book of Mormon its own vindication," for instance, contain many stirring paragraphs and startling points; and are, in my opinion, well worthy, in their intellectual refulgence, of being printed and scattered broadcast over the land. I heartily wish that it were within my power to say the same thing sincerely about every article in the columns of this issue.

It is very rarely indeed that I enter the polemical field or feel myself called upon to comment adversely upon any article or letter in your valued pages. There is, however, one article in the week's issue mentioned to which I feel I must conscientiously take exception; the more so as it is simply one of a numerous family of similar lucubrations which appear from time to time, and afflict harm upon a large, studious, and particularly quiet and inoffensive class of the world's community. I refer to the article entitled, "As it is written."

The writer is, of course, as freely and fully entitled to his own opinion as I am to mine; but he starts out with a proposition which I can not by any means find it within my power or conscience to indorse, namely, that "the Bible has been much abused by scientists." What scientists have much abused the Bible? I humbly and respectfully beg to inquire. I myself know of none at all. I have been, in my humble way, a student of science for twenty-nine years and more; and I know of no scientist who has abused the Bible; though I do know of a considerable number of scientists who have protested, even in vigorous terms, against the dogmatism of creeds, and the assumption that the Christian pastor and Bible interpreter is better informed as to what is meant than the actual writers of the Bible themselves. The learned Professor Huxley, when lecturing at the great hall of the Royal Society, in London, England, some years ago, stated that he had been strongly urged by certain persons to say that the Bible and science were at hopeless variance; and at an irreconcilable antagonism; but he declined to become the mouthpiece of any such section of the community, for while there was much in the Bible that was apparently at variance with what certain persons claimed that the Bible really taught, there was nothing inherently and intrinsically antagonistic between the Bible and the newest, the greatest, and the grandest revelations and achievements of modern science.

"The Bible deals (in its essence) with the works and ways of the 'great Unknown,' and the 'great Unknowable.' How, then, can I,—or indeed, any man standing upon the platform of this great scientific society,—pretend to say that this fact or that achievement recorded in the Bible, is, from its very nature, impossible? seeing that Science demonstrates to us in all its ramifications, and upon every hand, the presence of the unbelievable, the mysterious, the unknown, and the unaccountable. Does it follow that a recorded fact is necessarily unvarnished because I have never seen a similar exhibition of power, or a similar phenomenon of nature? Certainly not."

Professor Henry Drummond, the learned and deep-thinking author of Natural Law in the Spiritual World, in that inimitable and world-renowned volume, produces proof upon proof, testimony upon testimony of the actual and unimpeachable truthfulness and veracity of the Holy Scriptures, drawn from the allied sciences of biology and natural history, whilst John Stuart Mills and Ralph Waldo Emerson's published writings teem with implied confirmations of holy writ, though both are chary of accepting the hypotheses of dogmatic theology as taught in colleges belonging to certain churches and creeds. And yet the brother says that the Bible has been "much abused by scientists."

The Bible has, I freely admit, been pretty roundly abused and assailed by infidels and self-constituted critics; but I respectfully beg to earnestly protest against either infidels or critics being classed and denominated as scientists; for they are not scientists, nor are they acknowledged as such within the pale of any scientific society in the world. The brother has (doubtless with the best intentions in the world) been betrayed by the published speeches and writings of others, into a somewhat sweeping assertion which is not demonstrable by the facts of the case. Sweeping assertions and "hashy" generalizations are almost invariably unjust, because they are inaccurate, and are inaccurate because they are untrue.

For example: We are having it more or less perpetually dinned into our ears that "all Latter Day Saints are Mormons, and all Mormons are polygamists." This is a "hashy" generalization which is a good type of the very class I am alluding to; and is, in fact, no more founded upon truth than the other generalization I so often heard while in the old country, viz., that "all Church of England people are ritualists; and all ritualists are Roman Catholics," (which is very far from being the case).

However, I am very pleased to be able to say that the writer's "bark is worse than his bite," for after seeming to belabor all science and scientific authors in the first part of his communication, he turns around and, towards the end, himself utters the most truly scientific statement that I ever heard or ever read in any book of the world, not even the Bible itself excepted! He stated that "the earth is truly and actually alive," (or language to that effect,) and says, "How could a dead body produce or bring forth living creatures?" Then he very truthfully and very appropriately backs up this truly scientific hypothesis by a clinching appeal to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, where this point is distinctly proved beyond cavil or successful contradiction.

After this I am in the mood to forgive Bro. Cairns a fling here and there at "science" and the "scientists"; though by the by, the Bible nowhere condemns either science or scientists, as such; it only condemns "the oppositions of science falsely so called." (1 Timothy 6: 20.)

Here, when the learned and venerable apostle to the Gentiles sets us so wholesome and markedly distinct a lesson of discrimination, lest we condemn (in our "hashy" generalizations) the innocent with the guilty, surely it behooves us, as followers of the same great and glorious gospel covenant, to "go thou and do likewise."

Science, pure and simple, is of its nature and essence nothing more or less than the systematical collection or collation and classification of proved and ascertained facts in the natural and spiritual world of investigation. Science does not herself make deductions from these facts, and say, ex cathedra, that because such and such things are proved and tested, and ascertained facts, that therefore such and such other things must be the case. Science simply says, "We do not know for certain anything beyond the ascertained and demonstrated facts in the case."

Deductions may be drawn from those ascertained and demonstrated facts, of course, but science does not inaugurate or include these deductions into her archives and records until they are supported and sustained by such an accumulated and solid weight of evidence, and such a mass of unimpeachable and incontrovertible testimony that their weight is impossible of resistance.

Writers there are upon science (as upon every other subject under the sun) who put forth their own deductions and inferences, with all the weight and all the authority of truth itself; but until these men have something stronger and more tangible than mere hypotheses or deductions to offer, as pleas, science does not recognize or accept these deductions or generalizations, as facts. Few persons outside of the inner circle, indeed, have any accurate or adequate idea of the tremendous scrutiny, and the searching examination which are brought to bear upon all scientific theories publicly produced or announced; no matter from what quarter, or by the weight of what great and popular names or titles these theories may be supported and sustained.

It has been well and beautifully said (or sung) that,

"The mills of God grind slowly;
But they grind exceedingly small;

Though with patience stands he waiting,
With exactness grinds he all!"

and it might with equal truth and equal propriety be asserted that the mills of science grind slowly, too; but they grind exceedingly small. And this sternly rigid examination is our surest and truest safeguard against the empiricism of those who would have us swallow either their spiritual or intellectual isms or schisms without a "Thus saith the Lord," or without a shred of solid fact or a scintilla of evidence to support their assertions and conclusions.

This we have an inalienable and indisputable right to demand at their hands; and the greatest and best of all scientific demonstrators has himself commanded us to "prove all things," and to "hold fast that which is good," or true. (1 Thessalonians 5: 21.) Stated in plain terms, this is the exact attitude of true science the entire world over.

I do not wish to be understood as meaning to imply that no scientific writers at all have attacked the Bible, as such; for some certainly have done so; but others, who in their earlier years exhibited a certain bitterness of criticism, and even invective, against certain of the biblical apologists, have, in their declining years, materially receded from that attitude; and have in many cases entirely reversed their earlier judgments and objections.

But from the recorded writings and lectures of some few writers in the scientific world, to hold or to infer that science and scientific writers are, as a whole, inherently antagonistic to religion, and to the Bible, is to say that which can not be proved or demonstrated by the facts of the case. Indeed, I am most happy to admit that the writer of the article I have under review makes no such claim; though there are many writers who have done so, and, indeed, still do so. Nevertheless, it is no more in accordance with strict accuracy and veracity to say that all scientists are averse to the Bible, than it is to state that all pedo-baptists are antinomians, or that all immersionists are Socinians.

The simple fact, (as might have been suspected from the first,) is that there are both white and black sheep in every flock, whether we consider the religious or the scientific world. I need, indeed, go no farther than our own church to prove that there are divergent views, and that, too, of a very pronounced character, between the elders and ministry of even the highest rank and file; nor do I allude to this fact in any tone or sense of condemnation. Each enjoys the inalienable right and liberty of his own private reason, and of his own individual judgment and conviction.

Let me therefore say, in conclusion, with one of the ablest philosophers of ancient Greece, who, when asked for a brief and apposite sentence or aphorism to be emblazoned upon the portico of the magnificent and lordly edifice of the great Parthenon at Athens, wrote the following:

"In things essential,—unity.

"In things doubtful,—liberty.

"In all things,—charity."

POINTERS.—NO. 2.

BY RODERICK MAY, INDEPENDENCE STAKE BISHOP.

We receive numerous letters from Saints from this and other lands asking many questions about Independence, Kansas City, and the regions round about. I will endeavor to answer some of those questions for the general benefit of all.

Independence is a city of from ten to eleven thousand population, is well built considering that it is one of the first frontier towns in the United States. The center or Public Square is the highest point in many hundreds of miles of the surrounding country. The drainage is very fine. The land is rolling and so is the country from twelve to twenty-five miles around.

The morals and religion of the population will compare favorably with other cities of the same size. There are about twenty different denominations, the Latter Day Saints being the largest, and having the largest church-building, which cost about thirty thousand dollars, and will seat about fourteen hundred people in the upper auditorium, and about nine hundred in the lower auditorium. The Latter Day Saint church is built just across the street from the Temple Lot. The Saints own nearly all the land in that section of the city. The schools are free and about all that could be desired, and can be classed with the best in the state of Missouri.

Business and business enterprises, labor unions and capital combinations are about the same as in other cities of the same size and class.

Independence is the county-seat of Jackson County and this makes quite a stir. Wages for skilled and unskilled labor are good, and the demand has been great in the last year, especially since spring opened up. Climate is good, yet it is subject to sudden changes, but not so much as it used to be ten or fifteen years ago. We have real hot weather for a few months in the summer, and real cold weather for a few months in the winter. Independence has all the modern improvements common with the times, such as electric lights, telephones galore, electric street-cars, gas- and water-works. City property is high, also rents, especially in the western portion. The city has been building up fast in the last two years. Numerous new buildings are noticeable. Persons with small means need not expect to buy property cheap near the church; vacant lots fifty by one hundred and fifty feet, are worth from four hundred to fifteen hundred dollars; in other parts of the city lots are much cheaper, from one hundred and fifty to five hundred dollars. Acre property near the city is high and hard to get. The best way to secure acre property is for a number of Saints, who want acre property, to put their small means together and purchase twenty, forty, or eighty acres and divide it in one or more acres as may suit their convenience and in this way get acre property cheap.

Kansas City is one of the best towns in the West, and is building very fast, having a population of about two hundred and fifty thousand. It is a very busy place. The majority of it is built on the high lands overlooking the Missouri River, about one fourth of it is on the lowlands and subject to floods from the Missouri and Kansas Rivers. Kansas City is gradually coming towards Independence. The city limits are about five and one half miles apart. Very many of the people of Independence do business there.

Car service is good. The country round about Independence is rolling, with timber, streams, and prairies, and is a beautiful country to look upon. The soil is the very best. Farm land is worth from fifty to one hundred dollars per acre according to improvements. The products of this country are mainly potatoes, apples, peaches, small fruits, corn, wheat, oats, etc.

There is quite a gathering of Saints at Holden, also small branches at Knobnoster, Post Oak, Burtville, and Warrensburg, all in Johnson County, Missouri. Those who are moving into the above-named places most of them are poor; some have from forty to one hundred acres of land, and some have town property; and if an individual or collective effort could be so inaugurated by which the products of the land could be so taken care of and placed on the market to the best possible advantage it would be of great advantage to the Saints. For instance, suppose that in one community of Saints they organize a company with as much capital as could be gotten together, and build a creamery and cheese factory, raise and dry early sweet-corn, raising and preserving fruits, pickles, and numerous other things that could be done; that would give employment to the farm-hand and also to the town man, boy, and girl. This would be an easy matter if the Saints will have the same interest in their brothers as they have in themselves; and if Saints are gathering with the sole purpose of building up Zion there would be no selfishness. We can see what the Independence Manufacturing and Mercantile Company has done in the last two years, by putting the small individual sums together that could not be used to any advantage except by a united effort, and contributing and adding dollar to dollar, and in this way thousands of dollars put together have made a good showing; and under proper management success is assured.

There has been quite a change in the population of this country in the last few years and the conditions are now more favorable than ever before, as the people coming in are more liberal-minded than is and was the old stock of Missourians. In all my experience for the last twenty-five years it is a fact that only two of the citizens of the original stocks of Missouri have come into the church, at Independence, which now numbers over fourteen hundred in Independence and twenty-five hundred in the stake.

The writer has been desiring for many years to see certain changes come about for the best interest of the church in this land, and with a jealous eye he has watched; and now he is happy to say that he has seen many, yes, very many, changes, and some very important ones, that have been looked for. Many of those changes have come so sudden that he could hardly realize what had happened, and he trusts he will see the balance of his hopes, and many more changes, that have not been thought of, for the benefit of the work of God in the land before many years; and as time goes on we expect them to come thicker and faster, and this according to the faithfulness of the Saints. He has also seen troubles brewing, time and again, and they would pass by so that they were compared with a sea-bird on the ocean, sitting on the water, the waves rolling high with their raging whitecaps ready to engulf the little bird, but to the astonishment of the looker on the little bird would slide over the mighty waves without the least harm, or even a wet feather on its breast or back. And so it has been with the church. We give God the praise.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

OMAHA, Nebraska, November 3, 1904.

Dear Sister Walker: "The Lord knows why," was the sweetly solemn words sung by Bro. Hale Smith, at the funeral of our daughter Frances. He alone knows why my dear, sweet child was taken away from me; she was my constant companion, my close friend in the absence of my husband in his missionary work. She said she did not want to leave me; it was her wish to live so that "she could work for God in church and Sunday-school." So young, so pure, so full of hope, a sunlight in our home, so anxious to do good! Such faith in God I never saw; while her suffering was intense, she did not complain, and constantly sought the administration of the elders, that her life might be spared and she be relieved of her suffering. There is a vacant chair in our home; the organ is closed; I hear no more her sweet voice. There is a deep wound in my heart, which it seems will not be healed, until I meet her in the paradise of God. When we realized that she must leave us, our constant prayer was that God would relieve her of suffering and give assurance that it was his will for her to go from us. About ten o'clock in the evening she extended her thin, weak arms toward me and said, "Come, mamma, quick, and kiss me; I am dying." She put her loving arms around my neck, and pressed her sweet lips to my cheek, oh so sweetly and tenderly. She kissed her papa, her two uncles, and two aunts good-bye. Later her uncle asked her how she felt and if she had any pain. Her answer was, "Oh, if you only knew how good I feel! I feel just lovely." Still later, clear and distinct: "It is God's will. Thy will be done." This was repeated several times. I said, "Frances, do you mean it is God's will that you should go to your heavenly Father?" Her answer was, "Yes." So passed away my darling child. May God give me grace to bear my loss, until I can be with her again.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. EDWARD RANNIE.

Home-makers or Housekeepers?

Which are we? and which will we be? You know the old poem reads: "A seamstress and cook you can hire with but little to pay," but what about the home-makers?

Is not this one of the sacred duties that as wives and mothers we should feel rests upon us? Of course we can not do it alone, or if the husband and father fail on his part. But usually no man can withstand a loving, faithful wife, and if we are faithful in our duty as a wife and home-maker he will nearly always respond to the loving appeal of the wife. First, the two must be united in the determination to make their home a haven of rest, to which the children will and can flee for security and safety; where the tired husband and father feels sure a loving welcome awaits him when weary and heart-sick he returns from his day's labor, let that be what it may; and the mother and wife feels she has a strong arm and a brave heart to lean on when worn with the perplexities of the home life.

Now as to our duty as home-makers. Let me tell you of a home (or shall I say house?) I once visited, and you shall judge if this woman was a home-maker or housekeeper. The lady (a niece of mine) was an intelligent, well-educated, well-bred woman, an old music-teacher, and well fitted to make a home what it should be. Two little ones, one six months and the other two years old, were in the home. The little two-year-old tot had plenty of playthings but she must sit in a chair to play with them so as not to litter the floor. Her clothes were spotlessly clean, and she must not go out in the pure, bright sunshine, that children love so well, for fear of soiling them. Mud-pies were an unknown thing to her. The mother had no time to fondle or caress her, and when she crept into my arms, after two days' acquaintance, for the love and caresses that the mother should gladly have given her, I felt (do not let me shock you, for I love cleanliness too) like turning the tidy, luxurious room topsyturvy and making a playhouse of it, where the little one might be a child and play childish plays; and when at tea-time she must have her own table for fear of soiling the spotless cloth, I felt how much happier the child that sits at the table with papa and mamma if even an oil-cloth were all the table-cover afforded!

I believe we should teach our children neatness just as early as they can comprehend it,—teach it lovingly, patiently, but firmly; but do not banish them from you. In after-years you will find that you did not have one moment too much of their company. Let them have their childish play, and, better still, play with them. One can never know how dear the mother is as a playmate, and she has a better chance to study them as she enters into all of their joys and sorrows.

Another mistake we home-makers make (and I plead guilty) is in not teaching our girls how to make a home. Perhaps they may know how to sweep, dust, tidy the room, play the piano, do fancy-work, and all these dainty things, but are we teaching them to do the important part of home-making, cooking and baking? You know the old saying that "the way to a man's heart is through his stomach" sometimes proves true; and if we are able to fill that want successfully perhaps we may be able to inspire him to do greater things than he could do otherwise, besides making home more like a home.

One more thought. As home-makers are we taking all the little things that so perplex us to God in secret prayer? He cares for all the little trials of our every-day life as well as the great ones of our life. Tell him all the little things that have been so hard for you to bear. No one but has known just how a little neglect on the part of some one else has hurt you. The loving husband forgot this morning the farewell kiss, and the burdened heart, already full of the little trials of home-making, is nearly ready to faint. Go to your room and tell Him, the dear Friend and Father, all about it. He is glad to have you do so, and he will take you in his loving arms and comfort you as he only can. When we do this be assured we then will make a successful home-maker—not housekeeper.

Thanksgiving Day.

Yet now is the time for Thanksgiving,
For music and greetings and mirth;
A song for the old folk we honor,—
A song for the little one's birth.
In the home as we joyfully gather,
As gayly we sit at the board,
We lift up our prayers to the Father:
Accept our Thanksgiving, O Lord!

For the land of our love and our freedom,
For harvests in byre and bin,
For the flag on the school and the steeple,
For fruits in their wealth garnered in.
Dear Lord, when we count up thy mercies,
Bewildered we pause in the task,
So swift and so large is thy goodness,
Out-running the favors we ask.

The kindred comes home for Thanksgiving;
Sweet children, old men with grey hair,
And sometimes the poor and the stranger
The love and the tenderness share.
God make us like him in our giving,
Like him in our grace and our love,
And so shall the light of our living,
Be caught from his temple above.

A New Book.

Before us lies a new book, the fifth in the series of birth offering books, entitled The Gospel Story. On the title page is "The Gospel Story, by Frances" and "Footsteps of Jesus, by Hester S. E. Young."

This, as its name indicates, is the gospel story told in a very interesting way and in language suitable to the small children and appreciated by the older ones as well. It tells the story in very short chapters such as will be read and understood and retained by the children. It consists chiefly of the incidents in the life of Christ, his teachings, his miracles, and other circumstances immediately connected therewith. There are also chapters on incidents in the history of the Israelites, as "Joseph taken to Egypt," "Joseph made ruler in Egypt," "Benjamin goes to Egypt," etc., etc. The author is in sympathy with the subject and this is felt in reading the stories. It is a book well worthy a place in every private and Sunday-school library among Latter Day Saints. Parents should see that it is in the hands of their children to read. It will give them a clear, correct, and appreciative idea of the incidents of the life of Christ and the gospel story; an idea that will be of value to them not only in their living but in their study of the Sunday-school lessons and other lessons from the Scriptures. Better to have this book than many other books they come in contact with and employ their time upon.

It is a neat cloth-bound book of more than one hundred pages about seven by ten inches, and contains many illustrations. It is for sale at the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, at fifty cents per copy prepaid.

The book contains a list of the names, birthdays, and addresses of all the children whose birth offerings have contributed to the publishing of this book. It would be nice indeed if each child could have a copy of the book to keep.

The business manager of the Herald Publishing House informs us that if each school in the association would put a copy of this book in their library, (and they could make no better purchase,) that the sixth of the birthday offering series could be issued at once. Will you help us out? Librarians, library committees, and all heads of families, please look into the matter, and see if the book is not well worthy the patronage and the special effort to get it into every library and home. Christmas is coming. Why not make it a Christmas present to one of the children? Why not make just a very small effort and place it in the Sunday-school library? Five cents each from ten persons, or ten cents each from five persons, or a penny apiece from fifty, will secure the volume. Let us do one thing and accomplish two objects, viz: to place a good book in the reach of the children, and to assist in the financial part of the matter.

We fully indorse the book and hope for its large circulation.

The Sunday-School Lesson for November 27, 1904.

GOD PUNISHES EVIL.

Golden Text.—“God spared not the angels that sinned.”
—2 Peter 2: 4.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

In the intermediate and second primary lessons, the outlines are exactly alike. There are three topics, the fall of the angels who sinned in heaven, the disobedience of men in Noah's time, and the destruction of the wicked in Sodom and Gomorrah.

This is the subject-matter of the intermediate and second primary lessons, the primary lesson being in story form, the intermediate being made up of questions on the Bible text with explanatory notes.

The senior lesson covers this ground and goes on, following Peter's text to show an evil that sometimes appears in the church. We read in our last lesson that Peter warned the saints of the danger of false teachers rising in the church, but we may observe that he also warned them against another evil, the spirit of rebellion against those in authority in the church.

The lesson tells us that the angels bring no railing accusation even against the wicked, and warns us not to permit in ourselves a disposition to be presumptuous or self-willed, or to speak evil of the “dignities” of the church, those whom God has appointed to their places of usefulness.

Notice the teaching points of the senior lesson.

GOD IS LOVE.

Notice as you study this lesson that the pure angels of heaven wept over the fall of Lucifer and those who were cast out with him because of rebellion, and notice also that the heavens, including God himself, wept over those disobedient ones who perished in the great flood of Noah's time. For verification of these statements see the latter part of Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3 and Genesis 7: 35-44 in the Inspired Version.

God is here revealed to us as a God of love, even though he finds it necessary to send severe punishments upon the wicked who do despite to his law.

And it is to be observed that the greatest violations of the law of God are those that grow out of the lack of love for one another in the hearts of men.

God wept over those who perished in the flood; he said to Enoch that his command to them had been that they should love one another, and that they had not heeded the command but had been filled with hatred toward their own blood. The lack of holiness, the lack of love brought upon those people their destruction.

SAINTS ARE REQUIRED TO LOVE ONE ANOTHER.

The heart of God is full of love for all his creatures; if we partake of his divine nature, as we are required to do, we also will have in us a spirit of love for all mankind.

God wept over the sufferings of his fallen creatures; if we have his Spirit in us, we shall not rejoice in the fall of any of our brethren, but we shall be grieved when they suffer spiritual loss instead of feeling angry against them.

God wept over the people upon whom he brought severe punishment; we are warned to deal with transgressors in the church in the spirit of love and not in a spirit of hardness.

NOTICE THESE POINTS IN THE LESSON.

That even angels do not indulge in railing accusations against the evil.

That the Lord rebuked Aaron and Miriam when they railed against Moses.

That we should not have in us an inclination to rail against any of our brethren.

That, as children of God, we should be disposed to seek peace with one another.

The following poem by Joaquin Miller is in harmony with this lesson, and we ask you to read it with thoughtfulness:

“IS IT WORTH WHILE?”

“Is it worth while that we jostle a brother,
Bearing his load on the rough road of life?
Is it worth while that we jeer at each other
In blackness of heart?—that we war to the knife?
God pity us all in our pitiful strife.

“God pity us all as we jostle each other;
God pardon us all for the triumphs we feel
When a fellow goes down 'neath his load on the heather,
Pierced to the heart—words are keener than steel,
And mightier far for woe or for weal.

“Were it not well in this brief little journey
On over isthmus, down into the tide,
We give him a fish instead of a serpent,
Ere folding the hands to be and abide
For ever and aye in dust at his side?

“Look at the roses saluting each other;
Look at the herds all in peace on the plain;
Man, and man only, makes war on his brother,
And laughs in his heart at his peril and pain,
Shamed by the beasts that go down on the plain.

“Is it worth while that we battle to humble
Some poor fellow soldier down into the dust?
God pity us all! Time shortly will tumble
All of us together, like leaves in the dust,
Humble indeed down into the dust.”

PAUL'S TEACHING.

“Let all bitterness, and wrath, and clamor, and evil-speaking, be put away from you, with all malice;

“And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake, hath forgiven you.”
—Ephesians 4: 31, 32.

TEACHING A GOLDEN TEXT.

Two weeks ago the Golden Text of our second primary lesson was, "If ye do these things, ye shall never fall."

Standing detached in this way from the rest of the text, those words convey no meaning to the child's mind. A teacher at the blackboard asked the children to tell her some things the lesson of the day had taught to be necessary on the part of those who wish to be admitted to the presence of God.

Here are four things the children answered, and this is the way the teacher wrote them on the board:

Be good.

Be kind.

Be loving.

Be like Christ.

Then the teacher asked the children to tell her the golden text of the lesson. When they had done so, she said, "Now I will write the golden text here," and suiting action to the words, she wrote it thus:

If ye do these things, ye shall never fall	}	Be good. Be kind. Be loving. Be like Christ.
--	---	---

She told them this was the meaning of the text, that it is by doing the deeds of goodness, kindness, and love, by being like Christ that we are able to walk without falling in the straight, narrow path that leads to God.

On the following Sunday, the teacher was surprised but greatly pleased when, upon asking how many could tell her what she had written the Sunday before, the hands went up quickly and the children repeated to her the topics of the outline given above.

They had understood and had remembered.

MOUNT HOPE, West Virginia, November 12, 1904.

Dear Herald: I herein send a money-order in payment for another year's subscription for the SAINTS' HERALD. I am but a small schoolboy; my mother and father say it and the Ensign are the best papers published in the world. I am not a member of the church, but my little sister, Lolla, and I have been blessed by an elder of the church, and father says the God of heaven will watch over us in this present evil world. Send us a copy of your Sunday-school lessons for the present quarter. My sisters and I go to the union Sunday-school here. With best of wishes to the little ones of the Saints' Sunday-school at Lamoni, and success for the HERALD.

Yours respectfully,

EVERETT E. VERNON.

TROUT LAKE, Michigan, November 15, 1904.

Dear Herald: It has been a long time since I have written anything for the HERALD; not because I have not been doing anything for the Master, but because I am always busy at such work as falls to my lot to perform, and for the further reason that there are so many more and much better writers than I am; and if I said much through the HERALD'S columns, some one else would be crowded out.

The work in Michigan is gaining, so far as the Northern and Eastern Districts are concerned at least, and I believe all of the missionaries are alive to the work.

For the past eight or ten years I have not spent as much time in new fields as in former years, and as a consequence I have not been enabled to bring so many into the church.

I was just thinking how, in the years past, I spent the most of my time in principally new places, and was the means in the hands of our heavenly Father of bringing many into the church, reporting to the annual conference numbers ranging from thirty to as high as one hundred and six persons, until about twelve hundred all told, have been baptized into the church by my hands. And now to think that for the last eight or ten years, while presiding over districts and fields, looking up and preparing matter for history, (being local historian for the Northern and Eastern Districts,) and attending to the Bishop's agent's work for the Northern District, (which is now the largest district in Michigan, yet the youngest,) my reports of baptisms have only been from six to about sixteen or eighteen per year, and it looks as though I have not been doing much.

Yet during all of this time, it looked to me as though I was in my right place at the time; and, whatever part of the church-work I was endeavoring to perform, I felt it was prospering under my administration.

But I believe the time has come, or is very near when the most of my time will be spent in breaking up new ground,—opening up new fields, and broadening the fields under my mission and in my field.

A brother baptized by me in Bay Port, Elder J. A. Grant, is now the president of Northern Michigan District, and is doing fine; hence, that is off my hands and in the historical work of the church in Michigan, I have pretty well caught up, and my daughter Bertha is doing all of the Bishop's work at home, except my assistance in making up reports, etc., so, I feel I can take care of the field missionary work no matter what part of the field I may be in, and thus be more free to sound the gospel trumpet to those who are without the light of this beautiful gospel.

I look over the work of the past with joy and gladness to see so many of my children in the gospel ministering for Christ. I believe there is not a quorum in the church but one or more of its members have been baptized by me; and nearly all of the men laboring in the Northern and Eastern Michigan Districts are my children or grandchildren in the gospel, beside others who are sent out into other fields, who are doing a good work for the Master.

I also see men who attend my meetings in some new places I have of late been opening up, whom I feel will take hold of the work,—obey the gospel, and do a work for the Master; and to that end I "labor, and watch, and fight, and pray."

At present I am in the upper peninsula of Michigan. Some six years since, I opened up in a place or two and baptized a few. I have just got through with a series of ten sermons at Gulliver, and baptized two more in that place, and have left others who look with favor on the work, some of whom said they would investigate the same, and if they could understand it more perfectly they would obey when I should return in the spring.

Upper Michigan is still a wild, rough place; and on my first attempt to open up there, six years ago, I was much opposed. This time I found things more favorable. Some who were then very bitter have moved away. The depot agent who put me out of the house, and said many hard things about me and my brethren, especially those to whom the heavenly messenger came, two weeks after I left, had his house burned down, it having been struck by lightning; some time afterwards he was removed from the office, hence no persecution from that quarter.

The agent who is there now, a Catholic, seems to be an honest man and treated me very kindly; and although we were to have the use of the Presbyterian Church, by consent of those there in charge, yet the Reverend(?) man at Manistique wrote the trustees not to let me in it, (although any other faith who wished would have been permitted to occupy). This agent then with others hurried around and fitted up a nice dining-hall; he furnishing a stove, etc., and doing the janitor work. He attended the ten discourses, and stated when I left that it was between the Catholics and Latter Day Saints, and he almost thought we had it. He is investigating our claims, and I believe he is coming our way. May God's blessings be upon him, and all others who love our Lord and his gospel and people.

We are now right in the deer-hunting season here, and many hunters are here from the lower part of Michigan. Many deer have been killed, and some men; other men and deer have been wounded. At Corinne, where I had to wait a few hours for train, "deer" was all the talk; and smoking, spitting, and swearing, etc., were all the go. It being rather cold outside I had to remain in the waiting-room where I had to take a second-hand smoke,—the room was blue! Oh, the smoke of their comfort! and my torment!! Well, did I use tobacco?

The weather has been fine for our work this fall. I see good prospects ahead in many places for us. Our late conferences in the Eastern and Northern Michigan Districts, were well attended,—much of the Spirit was enjoyed. Six were baptized in the Northern District, and four in the Eastern District; and others are coming. If this finds its way into the waste-basket, and its contents do not appear in the HERALD, I will write again next year.

J. J. CORNISH.

LIMA, Indiana, November 12, 1904.

Editors Herald: Blanks, sent out to the elders by the Bishop, upon which the elders in the field are to report receipts and expenditures of money given them for personal expenses, are now before me. And, heading one of those blanks, I read the following:

"It will be noticed that no balance has been brought down as due the elder at last report. By turning to the last published report you will see that all accounts were balanced. Elders will please not overrun their accounts this year. Unless the case is an exceptional one it is quite improper for the elder to go in debt for expenses of travel. This is not 'going without purse or scrip,' and hence not after the pattern. Let us not run the church in debt."

Now, Mr. Editor, I have no objection to the elders "going without purse or scrip," "after the pattern," but I wish to call attention to the fact that the same God who said for the elders to go "without purse or scrip" also said, "nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70:3. And yet, only about seven months ago, when a resolution was presented in General Conference to put the elders in the HERALD Office, who were receiving from fifty to ninety dollars a month, on the same financial basis as the elders in the field, the Bishop opposed it. And some of us have not forgotten the means resorted to in order to defeat that resolution.

Are we to understand from this that the elders in the field must follow "after the pattern," while others, including the elders in the HERALD Office, are under no obligation to obey the law of God?

And when I read, in the heading of this blank: "Let us not run the church in debt," I could not help thinking of how the church has been plunged in debt thousands of dollars, for other purposes than that of preaching the gospel; neither could I help thinking of how the church is being run in debt this year, against the expressed wish of the body, for other purposes than that of preaching the gospel. And yet it is "quite improper for the elder to go in debt for expenses of travel." The elders must "not overrun their accounts." And what are we to understand by an elder's account? what the Saints and friends where he labors may give him? Well, the Saints of this district during this conference year have given me, all told, fourteen dollars and forty-five cents in money, one hat, and two handkerchiefs; and a friend gave me twenty-five cents to subscribe for a paper. I do not wish to convey the idea that this is all the money I have received; but it is all that the Saints of this district have given me this conference year. And, although I have used eight dollars and seventy cents more than I have received—"run the church in debt," that much—I am still wearing my summer underwear, near the middle of November, and have no money to buy any others. And yet the same law that says for the elder to "go without purse or scrip" also says, "for the church shall give unto thee in the very hour what thou needest for food, and for raiment, and for shoes, and for money, and for scrip."—Doctrine and Covenants 23:7. Now, if "the church" will do what the Lord says it shall do, then there will be no cause for the elders overrunning their accounts, or running the church in debt. So please remember that it is just as binding on "the church" to give unto the elder, "in the very hour," what he needs for money and scrip, as it is on the elder to "go without purse or scrip."

That the church has been imposed upon, by elders leaving their fields of labor and running home, four, five, or six times during the conference year, I admit; and it is the duty of those in authority to see that it is stopped. And that some elders, whose families are located in their fields of labor, have fallen into the habit of going out into their fields and laboring a week or ten days and then running in home again, thus greatly increasing expenses and lessening labor, I also admit; and those in authority should see that that is stopped, too. But you can never touch either of those two classes of elders by general rules thrown at the entire missionary force. The ministers in charge know whether their men stay in their fields or not, and the Saints where those elders live know, too, and so does the Bishop; and every case should be dealt with according to its merits.

And now, in conclusion, permit me to say: If "the church" will give me "in the very hour" what I need "for food, and for raiment, and for shoes, and for money, and for scrip," then I, for one, will "go without purse or scrip"; and I will not overrun my account nor "run the church in debt," either.

My field address is Galien, Michigan. I am still in the faith of the gospel, as it is written in the books, and am still willing to labor for the Master.

ISAAC M. SMITH.

SUGGESTIONS ON THE FOREGOING LETTER.

To avoid a misunderstanding as to what the "Elder's account" is, the reader is cited to a paragraph in article by the Bishop, entitled, "Facts and suggestions relating to the law in church temporal work. For member and minister," HERALD, 1902, page 695, which reads as follows:

"Lest the thought may be overlooked, I repeat, that the order of the minister should be that of the law, to travel 'without purse or scrip,' and where his necessary expenses are not met he should stop where he is until the reasons are fully determined and not proceed to the incurring of further expense to be paid by the Bishop subsequently. It will be much better to settle as we go along, and if it can not be done then, we can wait and take our bearings. Possibly the new expense should not be incurred. Sometimes there is entirely too much haste in the missionary going from place to place. At least no missionary in the ordinary case should go beyond the rule, and bring in a claim against the church at the end of the year. Where the settlement of the balance is to be made by the Bishop we prefer that it be done at the time that it is made, so that we may reasonably know where we stand financially. If a debt is incurred that the church is to be held for let it be reported at once. The reasons for this rule are so self-evident it will not be necessary, I trust, to dwell upon it."

If an elder does not receive sufficient from those among whom he labors and he is in need, he should notify the Bishops at once, "in the very hour"; not wait till the end of the year. The thought is, Do not create an indebtedness without the knowledge and concurrence of those in charge of the finances, so that arrangements may be made to meet the obligation. If it is a necessary expense the Bishop will meet it at once, if he has the means to do so; and if he has not, will arrange to meet it at the earliest time practicable.

It is said that, "The church is being run in debt this year, against the expressed wish of the body, for other purposes than preaching the gospel." If it is the Bishop should know it. There is no indebtedness being incurred by the Bishopric, nor to my knowledge by any one else, unless it is in these matters referred to for immediate necessities. The Bishopric has never run the church into debt. It has borrowed money and sustained the elders and their families and the poor, and carried out the orders of the body, but has not created the indebtedness. We have tried simply to meet the obligations properly incurred without complaining.

The reference made of the attitude of the Bishop to the resolution introduced at last General Conference, to place elders working in HERALD Office on the same financial basis as the elders in missionary work misrepresents him in the matter. I opposed the resolution for the reason that a resolution to this effect was already upon the records and that the Board of Publication were and had been carrying out its terms, so far as practicable, and that the resolution if passed would unjustly reflect upon the Board of Publication and could in no way help the church or the office.

In the HERALD Office it has been a question of where to get competent help, and if we can not get competent and trustworthy men for the wages of an apprentice, then we must pay more for the skilled laborer or stop the publication work.

We do not forget that the Saints everywhere demand the best printing and the best work of the Publishing House. We can not supply this without the best workmen; neither should a workman be discriminated against because he is an elder. If the board is compelled to pay the amount asked to a nonmember, if the elder can not meet his obligations and accept the position at the wages offered, is it wise or just for the board to say it will not employ the elder because he is an elder, but pay the same or more wages to some one who is not an elder? The board does not employ the party because he is an elder, it simply asks for a competent and responsible workman. There is not a member of the Board of Publication to my knowledge who does not firmly and unequivocally believe in the "equality" referred to in the law, and they have each year made an earnest effort to carry this out and have succeeded, too, much better than many suppose, or have given them credit for doing; but they find that until the question of "equality" is also observed to some extent among all classes, and each member has been duly allotted the "stewardship," that it is impracticable to carry out some measures the board desires to do in the publication department.

The "equality" relates to the merchant, the farmer, the banker, the mechanic, and tradesman outside of, as well as in the publishing house. In this last it has already been introduced and we are urging such a compliance with the law as shall put the law in force in the church, and not simply in one small department of the church, and shall be glad when all are ready for it.

It has been my special effort in my work to carry out the law of Christ, not to violate it; nor do I know of a single instance in my official work where I have violated the law.

I know that I have the unstinted criticism of some because I stand for a faithful compliance with the law both by individuals and the body. The act of either, when in disregard of the rules governing is a violation, and the act null and void and of no binding force upon others. The reverse of this rule opened the way for the passage of the polygamy act under Brigham Young, in 1852, and it is calculated to work evil any time because it is not God's way of working. He violates no rules of his realm neither disregards one of his laws; why should we?

We are glad to note that Bro. Smith does not find that the note cited in instructions to elders is out of harmony with the law. It is very embarrassing to the Bishop to find, at the end of the year when the reports come in, five to eight thousand dollars indebtedness, of which he had no knowledge before.

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

A Touch of Application.

ELDON, Iowa, September 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: I once had an argument with a Campbellite upon the eleventh chapter of Revelation, concerning God's two prophets, which shall stand on the earth and prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

He said that these prophets were the Old and the New Testaments which gave testimony to the inhabitants of the earth. "Well," I then said, "the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit will make war against the Old and the New Testaments, and kill the Old and the New Testaments, and the dead bodies of the Old and the New Testaments shall lie in the street, and the nations shall see these dead bodies of the Old and the New Testaments three days and a half, and they shall not suffer the dead bodies of the Old and the New Testaments to be put in graves, because the Old and the New Testaments tormented them; and after three days and a half the Spirit of life shall enter into the Old and the New Testaments, and the Old and the New Testaments shall stand upon their feet, and they shall hear a great voice out of heaven saying unto them, Old and New Testaments, 'Come up hither,' and the Old and the New Testaments shall ascend up to heaven in a cloud, and the enemies of the Old and the New Testaments shall behold them going up to heaven."

"Stop, stop," said he, "let me talk." He buzzed away for a few moments like a mosquito after blood in his babblings. Then I asked him if the Old and the New Testaments had feet. He said, "No." "Then that lets you out," says I. "The word says, 'their feet.' Now, my friend, when did the Old and the New Testaments get back from heaven?"

I have many controversies about the Bible, and I am led to believe that the teachers of creedology have gone stone-blind on foolish, doted, rotten questions, led by those that they hire to teach them. They are run down like an old shoe, and have to go to their teachers to patch up their doctrines in place of taking God's word, which needs no patching.

Editors Herald: After a severe attack of lung fever last spring, I fitted up a hack, and wife and I have traveled in that since, preaching in various places in Oklahoma. Left home August 16 for reunion at Stillwater in eastern part of territory. The 29th left there for Parsons, Kansas, traveling through the Osage and Cherokee country, reaching Parsons September 3. Preached eight times there on the streets to large and interested audiences; five different preachers showing opposition, giving me a chance to explain the Scriptures more fully. One of them was Elder Fore, of the First Day Adventists, who was pastor of a church of his people some eighteen miles east of Parsons, in 1880 I think, who brought from another State their greatest debater, as they said, to disprove our faith in regard to the nature of man, who after a week's discussion said, "I am beat; it is either Joe Smith or Ingersoll, one or the other, with me now." Bro. Walter Taylor, of Columbus, Kansas, and Alexander Cato, will remember it, as Bro. Cato led seven of their best members into the water the next day as a result of the discussion. And upon Elder Fore telling the people he could disprove what I was teaching I told him (as I heard they had a church-building there) that I would talk the matter over with him at the church or on the street. But he did not come back again.

I went to Weir City September 12 and preached six times in the Saints' church. Found good interest there. Went to Pittsburg the 20th, and preached on the streets there through the week, and twice in the Saints' hall on Sunday, they having the use of it only on Sundays. Have been preaching on the streets in Chitwood this week. Have an appointment for morning and evening at Webb City to-morrow. Want to preach in Chitwood Monday and Tuesday evenings, then start for our home in Oklahoma. Have preached twenty-one times in three weeks, mostly on the streets.

As ever in the faith,

DECATUR, Michigan, November 15, 1904.

Editors Herald: We came to this point the 9th inst., and opened the campaign on gospel lines at a schoolhouse three and one half miles distant, known as the William Lee. The audiences have been fair to large. Last Sunday evening we repaired to beautiful Prospect Lake in Lawrence Township and baptized Mrs. Winnie Marks and Mrs. Maude Crawford into the fold of the Good Shepherd. A very commendable trait was the courage manifested by these two sisters, as the wind was raging cold from the north, and lashing the waves into rolling whitecaps. Another magnanimous scene was, that on returning to the water's edge, the husbands of the two sisters met and received them with embraces and kisses. We think it only a question of time when both husbands and wives will rejoice in the prospect set before them. I think the interest quite fair as some are attending a distance of five and one half miles. Bro. Granger is with us lending courage and assistance to the work. These regions seem historic. The Nauvoo schoolhouse, Lawrence, and Decatur seem associated with the names of E. C. Briggs, David H. Smith, Henry Stebbins, William H. Kelley, C. Scott, H. C. Smith, and others. Grandpa Bass, David Bentley, and Bro. Hulse, are kindly in memory.

Hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

SUMAS, Washington, November 11, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am glad I am alive and still able to do something for the work. I came here near this place last Tuesday to visit a Bro. and Sr. Lade. I had been informed by Bro. Walter Dancer of Bellingham that they were here in this brushy country. I had meeting at his house the first night; but few came out. The next day Bro. Lade went into the town to secure one of the churches for me to preach in; but could gain no admittance there in either church. In the afternoon he secured the school-building in this neighborhood, and we are tramping two and one half miles to and fro, night after night, to tell the old gospel story. I had been holding services in the little town of Goshen, eleven miles from Bellingham. I had some interest there among the Mennonites and Catholics, who are in the majority there.

It seems very strange to me to find so many of the Saints scattered around in this country. Some are like sheep, strayed and stolen, fleece nearly all gone, and have become so wild I am afraid we can not get them to see the mistakes they have made by being so careless and unconcerned. Oh, I hope they may return to their first love for the work when I shall sound again to them the gospel story. I want to make my best effort for them; yes, I want to try to save what we have.

Many places in this mission, in the larger cities, it is hard to secure a place in which to preach, for the reason that hall-rent is so high that the twos and threes that live in these places can not afford to pay the rent; but to do the best we can is our endeavor. Bro. Dancer will make arrangements at his ranch for me to hold meetings, perhaps the most of next week, as he has a large house on the farm, about seventeen miles from Bellingham. It does not matter much to me where I preach, whether in private houses, halls, churches, streets, or public highways; or whether it is to one or many. Last Sunday I was invited by a friend and his wife that attended my meetings at Goshen to go home with them and take dinner. I took my Bible in hand and for two and one half hours I taught them the word of God. And when they bade me good-bye after the evening service they said they thought it would not be long before they would make the start.

When I left Blaine, from where I last wrote, I went back to New Westminster, and the following Saturday went to Vancouver; and the young man spoken of, who was so miraculously healed of blood-poison, made application for baptism; and it was attended to on Sunday. The following Tuesday night, October 18, we had arrangements made for Bro. G. T. Griffiths, and we continued over Sunday; and I want to say, His labors there were gladly received, and much enjoyed by all present. We left the branch in good condition. On the 25th inst. we separated, Bro. Griffiths going to the Chilliwack Branch, and I to Blaine and the places named in this letter. May the work move on to victory.

Hastily,

T. J. BELL.

Editors Herald: We could not do without the HERALD and Ensign, for they are the only preachers we have. We eagerly wait the coming of both. We are thankful that we were privileged to embrace the gospel in the latter days. We are both old, and have no privilege of going to church. Pray for us that we may be faithful to the end.

Your brother and sister,

P. V. AND D. BROWN.

LONDON, Ontario, November 14, 1904.

Dear Herald: November 6, 1904, will long live in the memory of the Saints of this part for the way and manner in which we enjoyed gospel blessings. As our brother, Elder R. C. Evans, was to leave us to attend the Lord's work in parts of the great Northwest, we invited him by resolution of the branch to remain over Sunday with us. We also sent invitations to our brothers and sisters in St. Thomas to meet with us, they having to drive about nineteen miles. About two bus-loads came over, reaching our church in time for prayer-service; and what a glorious time was had! Visions and tongues, with interpretation, were had. One of our young men, prominent in Religious work, was called to care for God's house as a deacon; also the superintendent of Sunday-school in St. Thomas was called to the office of priest, along with much instruction to God's people. And as London has been putting forth some extra effort for some time back we felt cheered in the thought, "I have seen thy efforts." Our Bro. Evans was talking about Zion and the future greatness of our cause, showing the need of all classes of workmen for the upbuilding of Zion. We were told that "Zion was coming, not in buildings and palaces, but in people," and consecration was asked of mind, body, and heart. This was in line with Jesus' instructions, Mark 12:30. Our brother was giving us counsel along lines of association. God confirmed his counsel by saying that by evil association some of his people were tending toward apostasy.

Our Sunday-school service was well attended, and at night a full house greeted our brother as he spoke of faith, hope, and charity.

In closing would say that I have had one round of pleasure in God's work this fall, having visited both our fall conferences, and being much with God's children, hearing and seeing the great work that is being done in our fair dominion, I hope to be able to be in the fighting line and enjoy the fruits of many victories yet.

We are going to have an "at home" on Thanksgiving afternoon, with an entertainment in the evening in honor of the visit of our district president of the Religio,—Sr. F. Miller,—and as we have just about raised our assessment of the college debt a box social is to be held later, hopeful of the balance.

WM. FLIGG.

GLENEASTON, West Virginia, November 10, 1904.

Dear Herald: Since the April conference my labors have been in Ohio, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania. Opened up some new fields in Ohio and West Virginia, and from there went to Monongahela City, Pennsylvania, where I preached a short time with very good interest. From there I went to Northwestern Pennsylvania, and worked in the tent with Bro. Becker one month. Sr. Becker managed the kitchen part, and our meals were always on the dot and well prepared. The people were very friendly, but the prospect for gathering into the fold did not look very bright in the path of the tent. We packed it away for the winter, and I left for my old field; preached a few times by request in the Universalist church near my home, and was treated very kindly.

From there I went to the Fairview Branch and preached over Sunday, then made my way to Belmont County, Ohio, and began preaching in a new opening where I had preached a few times before. Preached eleven sermons, and on Sunday evening of the 23d of October a young man requested baptism, and on the 25th we went to the water three miles away and performed the sacred ordinance. A large crowd gathered to witness the baptism, and a great number at the confirmation. The young man has a good reputation, and the prospect looks fair in that region.

I can observe that the church is gaining prestige, and can notice a great change in that direction in my field of labor. We looked for Bro. Fred M. Smith to pay our place a visit, and had made all arrangements, the people being anxious to see and hear him preach; but we were disappointed.

Preached the funeral of Sr. Logsdon, Monday. On the 8th I went to the polls and cast my vote; joined a happy couple in holy wedlock; and will join another couple in a few days. The good work goes on. Hope for the work of God to prosper.

As ever in the one faith,

JAMES CRAIG.

Independence Items.

The good, growing condition of the Book of Mormon home department work is attested by the fact that it maintains a half dozen classes in different parts of the city, and they are well attended. The Union Home class met in the upper auditorium on the 7th and some one thought it had partaken of the spirit of the federal election about to take place, for a part of the meeting was as informal and lively as an old-fashioned political campaign.

The fore part consisted of prayers and testimonies also orderly readings and comments; but when the nineteen interested sisters came to the subject of the priesthood of Aaron and Alma, the house became divided and the issue was as to sustaining the views presented by the Quarterly or not. But the classes are evidently doing much good, and several sisters bore testimony as to the excellent results accruing to the study of the Book of Mormon among the young men especially, both at home and in the Religio.

On Sunday, the 6th, the morning discourse by President Hulmes consisted of instruction to the Saints, exhorting them not to set up their own standards independent of the commandments of God, speaking particularly in regard to teaching and keeping the word of wisdom.

On the 13th Elder I. N. White and S. F. Cushman of the Far West District held forth, the latter in the evening service taking for his subject "The coöperation of the human and divine." His text was 1 Corinthians 3: 9: "For we are laborers together with God." He called attention to the beauty and economy of the arrangement of the church and gave a complete view of the colabor of man with the Father from youth to old age in all the avocations of life.

But it is in church-work that man excels because of the promise, "I am with you always." While speaking of helpfulness, he made a pleasing comment, at the sight of the many upturned faces before him, this being, he said, a help and an inspiration. As instances of colabor he mentioned that of Philip and the Eunuch, Saul and Ananias, and Peter and Cornelius. In the church we ought to grow more and more like each other, and cultivate the spirit of fellowship. But with God, we have no equality of rights: to be subordinate also is a true principle. Our Father has good to bestow, so have we. Our labor includes visiting the sick, engaging in humble work for each other,—scrubbing, washing, or doing anything of needful service. A lively interest was apparent at both morning and evening services.

Elder I. N. White in the morning brought before the Saints the testimonies contained in several documents showing that five of the popular denominational religionists of to-day are indorsing principles which Latter Day Saints have always advocated,—tithing, consecration, present revelation (one of their followers even stating he believed Joseph Smith to be a prophet of God), a doing away with selfishness and instituting a system of organization after the pattern of apostolic teaching and practice, and not overlooking the fact "we must restore the gifts," they say, "to their proper place." Using an up-to-date metaphor, the speaker gave us to understand that these principles advocated by the Saints, this ancient faith, the gospel ushered in by the Spirit, the Holy Ghost, was the "drawing-card" which was directing and enlightening and revealing the truth to these twentieth century reformers. At the close of the sermon favorable comments were made, but there must be one or two criticisms of course.

"Drawing-card!" said a stoical old gentleman with peevish expression as he passed out of the edifice, "why, we Saints don't have anything to do with drawing-cards!"

"Drawing-cards, indeed!" whispered one of those same finical critics who are always carping at trifles. "Our young folks," continued the old lady, "last winter about wore me out with their flinch parties and talks about 'jokers, and jacks, and the trump-card and drawing-card.' I would really delight in our elders keeping all worldly and slangy expressions out of their sermons." Just then some one under a high, big picture hat tripped out and exclaimed, "There's always some one to find fault; drawing-cards are all right!"

The attendance of the Sunday afternoon prayer-meetings has been excellent the past two weeks, and among those whom we seldom or never see were Elder A. V. Closson, Bro. Matthews of Birmingham, England, who with his family are about locating here, also Bro. and Sr. Hedrick and Bro. Stratton of Kansas City, Sr. Frank of Arizona, and Bro. and Sr. Parker, who are also located here. On the 6th three little ones were blessed under the hands of Elders T. C. Kelley, W. H. Garrett, and H. O. Smith, namely, Clarence W. Wolfe, Lillian M. Green, and Gladys May Page. Sr. Salina L. Beck was received by letter from Ava Branch, Douglas County, Missouri.

On last Sunday afternoon we were glad to meet Sr. Huff of Omaha, Nebraska, also, at the morning service, Bro. and Sr. D. F. Nicholson of Lamoni, and Bro. and Sr. A. J. Himan of Central Illinois, who have taken up their abode here.

The prayer-meeting last Wednesday evening, which was conducted by Elders Hulmes and Etzenhouser, was rather poorly attended, but the instructive and spiritual character of the testimonies made up for all discrepancies. The vigorous, hearty singing of the young people "in the upper chamber" somewhat interferes with the worship down stairs, especially when prayers are being quietly offered or some low-voiced brother or sister attempts to bear testimony. Otherwise, we all enjoy the melodious harmony of distant music and feel to rejoice in the worthy efforts of the young people at worship above us. Among the visitors was Bro. James C. Page, priest, grandson of Elder John E. Page of early history. Our young brother bore a faithful testimony; he has an appointment to preach next Sabbath at St. Louis.

The Saints here have lately been called to attend the obsequies of several of our number: On the 12th Mable, the nine-year-old daughter of Bro. and Sr. C. H. Woodford, who died of diptheria, also Sr. J. R. Inman being taken away in her early womanhood, the mother of five small children, left us after a long illness from consumption. She was much loved and esteemed by a large number of friends; also on the 17th we were called by death, to lay away the remains of our beloved brother, Gustav Gabrielson, a young man of twenty-one, who was the first one in the Reorganization to come here from Norway. Baptized in the ocean by Bro. Enge, he henceforth lived an humble, faithful life, and at its close greeted the messenger of death with resignation, so that his dying prayer, "Lord Jesus, come and take me!" was answered and he could exultingly cry "Thank God!" as his pure spirit passed to a happy beyond. The few loving companions of his daily toil while in health, assembled to pay their last tribute of friendship and respect; also many of the Saints.

After many days of cold and rainy weather the sun shines out brightly again; but the crumpled mums and marigolds, and the bare fields and orchards around us all tell of the blight of autumn's winds and frosts. The shaded hill-slopes of "Zion" have been stripped of their verdure, but the azure glory of her skies still hovers over all, and many a token yet remains of a loving Father's care and protection.

Extracts from Letters.

J. M. Stubbart writes from Underwood, Iowa: "By request of Bro. Turpen I am laboring in Pottawattamie District, assisting in a number of two-day meetings in several of the branches. I find most of the Saints, where I have been, energetic and alive in the work. There are some differences that hinder; but I hope, by the love of the Master, they may be overcome."

Bro. J. E. Vanderwood, of Lorenzo, Idaho, reports having of late been laboring in connection with Bro. S. D. Condit at La Belle and other places in Idaho, working up some interest and arousing investigation on the part of the people where they are laboring. He says: "One of their bishops asked us what we intended to do; he said, 'You are stirring the people all up and making them read and we can not do anything with them.' But he conceded it was a good thing to have them read and all that, but said we 'could not have his house to preach in because the people got all worked up over it and they (the bishops) could not do any thing with them.'

"We have a fair interest here on the part of the people and hope to be able to continue until we have accomplished some good, by our meager efforts.

"The majority of the people do not seem to approve of their closing the meeting-house against us, and I have had the privilege of comparing the old Doctrine and Covenants with their late editions and all who have seen the comparison agree that there is something wrong, and that there must be a nigger in the fence somewhere.

"Well, some are reading and investigating our claims and that is a good indication of their being in earnest; and as soon as they begin to read the books and believe what is therein, they are soon what the people are pleased to call 'Josephites' out here. May the good work go on is my prayer."

E. Mortimer of London. The 3 p. m. service on Sunday was exceptionally well attended. President R. C. stood in the door of the hall, which was full, and not one half the people were inside; and as one party said, everybody "got their medicine" which though bitter at first tasting to some, yet generally speaking well-relished by all. #### Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Southern Indiana District: Knowing that you are or ought to be interested in this great latter-day work, I take this means of asking for your hearty coöperation.

On January 1, and March 1, we want a report from each one holding an official position. I have sent to the president of each branch blanks to make such reports on; if any have failed to receive such blanks, and will notify me, I will send them at once so each one may have a blank to report on, as well as to see what is needed to be reported. In order to get up a good report first do all you can and keep an itemized account of all the work done. I received reports from some of the brethren last quarter, which were splendid. We hope to hear from all the locals this quarter.

"Behold, I sent you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor; therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:22. All are laborers together in this great work, and each one will receive a reward for the work he does; therefore each one has a work to do that no one can do for him. "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill can not be hid."—Matthew 5:14. A branch in a community is the light of that community; the territory surrounding the branch must of necessity get its light from the branch. Each one, then, holding the priesthood, should seek the opportunity to take the gospel to those that are within his reach: and Saints that are not living near a branch can aid these brethren greatly by securing a place for them to preach in. How often is it the case that a branch has from four to twelve or more officers in it that could do a great work this way, if the effort were made, and many precious souls brought into the fold of God, and the light of the branch no longer be confined to such a small territory as often the case is?

We do not expect that each ordained member will go out to preach. While we are all laborers together, it is not understood that all are to stand behind the desk and expound the scriptures, I do not believe that is the only way to preach; for the best sermons to my mind are the ones preached by daily walk before our neighbors. Be sure to make out your reports as requested and send them to me so I can report the same to Bro. J. W. Wight, the president of the mission, then he can report the same to the Presidency of the church. This will put you in close touch with these brethren, so they will know just what each is doing. Heretofore some local workers have in some places done more work than some of the church appointees,—and their work never reported; we think they should have (and they do have) the same privilege to report their work as the other officers.

To those under church appointment, let us see that we do all we can to push the work forward, remembering that God will require of us, at the day of judgment, an account of our stewardship. A diligent effort to spread the gospel will encourage the members to do all they can, by tithes and offering, as well as trying to secure places for preaching. I fear that oftentimes members become discouraged on account of elders not pushing forward with more zeal. Let us not forget Bro. J. J. Boswell, the Bishop's agent, and make his heart glad by sending in our tithes and offerings; he is to the missionaries, as you are to your family; but you have only one family to look after while he has four or more missionaries' families to look after. You know how hard it is for you to turn your children away when they ask you for sustenance; so it is with him. We are not complaining. You have done well in the past, and the Lord has blessed you in so doing. I will be glad to hear from any of the Saints, as to your wants and needs in your part of the vineyard; we will render you all the assistance we can from the eldership.

Your humble servant in the Master's vineyard,
GEORGE JENKINS.

The Christmas Delineator.

The December Delineator, with its message of good cheer and helpfulness, will be welcomed in every home. The fashion pages are unusually attractive, illustrating and describing the very latest modes in a way to make their construction during the busy festive season a pleasure instead of a task, and the literary and pictorial features are of rare excellence. A selection of Love Songs from the Wagner Operas, rendered into English by Richard de Gallienne and beautifully illustrated in colors by J. C. Leyendecker, occupies a prominent place, and a chapter in the Composers' Series, relating the Romance of Wagner and Cosima, is an interesting supplement to the lyric. A very clever paper entitled "The Court Circles of the Republic," describes some unique phases of Washington social life, is from an unnamed contributor, who is said to write from the inner circles of society. There are short stories from the pens of F. Hopkinson Smith, Robert Grant, Alice Brown, Mary Stewart Cutting and Elmore Elliott Peake, and such interesting writers as Julia Magruder, L. Frank Baum, and Grace MacGowan Cooke hold the attention of the children. Many Christmas suggestions are given in needlework and the Cookery pages are redolent of the Christmas feast. In addition, there are the regular departments of the magazine, with many special articles on topics relating to woman's interests within and without the home.

The November number of the Arena is the strongest and ablest issue of this review that has appeared in years, and this is saying much, as the magazine since Mr. Brandt purchased it and Mr. Flower has again become the editor has taken its old place among the foremost reviews in the English-speaking world. The last four issues have been conspicuous for strength, variety and interest of content matter, but the November number is exceptionally strong. There are no less than a half a dozen timely topics ably discussed in which the general reading public of America is interested. First among these is the masterly plea for "The election of federal judges by the people," by Chief-Justice Walter Clark, LL. D., of the Supreme Bench of North Carolina. "The United States of South America: a dream of empire," by Doctor Charles Frederick Holder, LL. D., is a brilliant and fascinating speculative paper. "Our legal machinery and its victims," by Doctor G. W. Galvin, physician-in-chief to the Emergency Hospital, Boston, Massachusetts, contains some startling facts and statistics as well as a thoughtful plea for reform if not revolution in the treatment of society's poor and of her criminals. "Glasgow's great record" is a complete historical presentation of the results of municipal ownership of street railways during the last fourteen years. The facts, tables, and authoritative data contained in this paper have been obtained from official sources and are presented in an able, exhaustive, and convincing manner. "The Philippine insurrection: Why?" by Arthur Llewellyn Griffiths, A. B., founder of the Moro System of Industrial Training of the Sulu Archipelago, is a clear and strong presentation of the Philippine situation from an imperialistic view-point. There are many other interesting features in this issue. "Arnold Daly and Bernard Shaw: A bit of dramatic history," is a most charming and suggestive piece of literary criticism by Archibald Henderson, Ph. D. This last paper is handsomely illustrated and is one of a series of seven papers to be prepared by Mr. Henderson dealing with the great dramatists of the present time that will be features of the Arena for the ensuing year. Among other papers of general interest are the following: "How the stage can help the church," "The coffee-club movement in California," "Saint-Simon: the first American," and a diplomatic history of the Russo-Japanese War, by Professor Edwin Maxey, LL. D., M. Dip. The story of the month has been contributed by Dan. Beard, and is entitled "The Ban-Dogge." It is a Hal-lowe'en phantasy, a quaint and highly imaginative sketch illustrated by the author. The frontispiece is a finely executed portrait of Justice Clark made from a recent photograph.

Cheerfulness is not always spontaneous; it is greatly a matter of habit, and bears cultivation. One who can contrive to bear a smiling face through a world where there are so many troubled hearts, may unconsciously be a public benefactor.

 I am authorized to announce the opportunity to purchase some cheap lands in Central California, with perpetual water-rights. Deed for land includes deed for water-rights. The supply of the latter is unbounded, the land is level and of a nice sandy loam, producing abundantly all kinds of fruits, grains, and vegetables. The price per acre varies from $15 to $35 per acre and some even higher than that. Prices vary owing to location and distance from railroads. Terms are one-fourth down, the balance in four annual payments, with six per cent interest. These chances are fast going out, so that people who want homes in the land of perpetual flowers and large, sweet Oranges (at ten cents a basket full), will have to hurry up. THERE is gain in well-doing, even beyond all that accrues to him who does his best. A high standard in thought or act is an irresistible appeal to others to struggle in that direction. No invitation or counter-warning can be so effective with man as is a worthy example in its attractiveness. What we are appeals in louder tones to our surrounding fellows than what we say. This, then, is the power that all of us who wish to do our best work should exercise. As Lowell says:

"Be noble and the nobleness which lies
 In other men, sleeping, but never dead
 Will rise in majesty to meet thine own."

JOSEPH SMITH THE MORMON AS SEEN BY HIS FATHER-IN-LAW.

The New York Herald for Sunday, November 13, 1904, in its magazine section contains the following, which we insert mainly for the purpose of correcting some of the misrepresentations it contains and as one of the latest efforts to throw discredit upon Joseph Smith, who under the ministrations of an angel founded the church April 6, 1830.

The writer of the article was not sufficiently informed in matters of history and facts as even to state the names of the parties correctly. From what has been said of Joseph Smith, if it were true, he might have had many fathers-in-law, but we never before heard that an Isaac Hall was numbered among them.

Among some old papers which have recently come to light is one which gives an account of the every-day life of Joseph Smith, the leader of the Mormons. The facts are given by Smith's father-in-law, and their accuracy is sworn to by a justice of the peace and two judges of the county.

Isaac Hall says:—"I first became acquainted with Joseph Smith, Jr., in November, 1825. He was at that time in the employ of a set of men who were called money-diggers, and his occupation was that of seeing, or pretending to see, by means of a stone placed in his hat and the hat placed over his face. In this way he pretended to discover minerals and hidden treasures. His appearance at that time was that of a careless young man, not very well educated, and very saucy to his father. Smith and his father, with several other money-diggers, boarded at my house while they were employed in digging for a mine that they supposed had been opened and worked by the Spaniards many years since. Young Smith gave the money-diggers great encouragement at first, but when they had arrived, in digging, to the place where he had stated an immense treasure would be found, he said that the enchantment was so powerful that he could not see. They then became discouraged and soon after dispersed.

"After these occurrences young Smith made several visits to my house and at length asked my consent to marry my daughter Emma. This I refused, and gave my reasons for so doing, some of which were that he was a stranger and followed a business that I could not approve of. He then left the place. Not long after this he returned, and while I was absent from home he carried off my daughter to the state of New York, where they were married without my consent. After they had arrived in New York Emma wrote to me inquiring whether she could have her property, consisting of clothing, etc. I replied that her property was safe and at her disposal. In a short time they returned, bringing with them a man, Peter Ingersoll, and they subsequently came to the conclusion that they would move out and reside upon a place near my residence.

"Smith stated to me that he had given up what he called 'glass-looking,' and that he expected to work for a living and was willing to do so. Soon after this I was informed that they had brought a wonderful book of plates down with them. I was shown a box in which it was said they were contained, which had, to all appearances, been used as a glass-box of the common size window-glass. I was allowed to feel the weight of the box, and they gave me to understand that the book of plates was there in the box, into which, however, I was not allowed to look. I inquired of Joseph Smith who was to be the first to be allowed to look at the book of plates. He replied that it was a young child. After this I became dissatisfied and informed him that if there was anything in my house of that description which I could not be allowed to see he must take it away. If he did not I was determined to see it. After that the plates were said to be hid in the woods.

"About this time Martin Harris made his appearance upon the stage and Smith began to interpret the characters or hieroglyphics which he said were engraved upon the plates. Harris wrote down the interpretation. It was said that Harris wrote down one hundred and sixteen pages and lost them.

"Soon after this happened Martin Harris informed me that he must have a greater witness. He said that he had talked with Joseph about it, and that Joseph informed him that he could not or durst not show him the plates. But he, Joseph, would go into the woods where the book of plates was, and that after he came back Harris should follow his tracks in the snow and find the book and examine it for himself. Harris informed me afterward that he followed the directions and could not find the plates and was still dissatisfied.

"The next day after this happened I went to the house where Joseph Smith lived and where he and Harris were engaged upon their translation of the book. Each of them had a written piece of paper which they were comparing, and some of the words were: 'My servant seeketh a greater witness, but no greater witness can be given to him.' There was also something said about three that were to see the thing, meaning the book of plates, and that if they did not go exactly according to orders the thing would be taken from them. I inquired whose words they were and was informed by Joseph or Emma, I rather think it was the former, that they were the words of Jesus Christ. I told them then that I considered the whole of it a delusion and advised them to abandon it. The manner in which Joseph pretended to read and interpret was the same as when he looked for the money-diggers with the stone in his hat and the hat over his face. The book of plates was at this time hidden in the woods.

"After this Martin Harris went away and Oliver Cowdy came and wrote for Smith. This is the same Oliver Cowdy whose name may be found in the Book of Mormons. Cowdy continued as scribe for Smith till the Book of Mormons was completed, as I supposed and understood.

"Joseph Smith resided with me for some time after this and I had a good opportunity of becoming acquainted with him and somewhat acquainted with his associates. I conscientiously believe, from facts I have detailed and from many others which I do not deem it necessary to retail, that the whole Book of Mormons (so-called) is a silly fabrication of falsehood and wickedness, got up for speculation and with the design to dupe the credulous and unwary, and also in order that its fabricators might live upon the spoils of those who swallow the deception.

"ISAAC HALL."

At the end of this document is added proof of the accuracy of the statements contained in it:

"HARMONY TOWNSHIP, Susquehannah County, Pennsylvania, March 21, 1824.—We, the subscriber's associates, judges of the Court of Common Pleas in and for said county, do certify that we have for many years been personally acquainted with Isaac Hall, of Harmony Township, in this county, who has attested the following statement, and that he is a man of excellent moral character and of undoubted veracity. Witness our hands,

"WILLIAM THOMPSON.

"DAVIS DIMOCK."

It is simply astounding the pertinacity with which the enemies and quasi-enemies of Mormonism so persistently vamp and revamp the absurd stories of the past. They misrepresent men and events connected with the life of Joseph Smith, upon which they rely to prove him to have been a bad man. In the first place, Joseph Smith never had a father-in-law by the name of "Isaac Hall," therefore this account is false on its face. In the second place, the judges of the Court of Common Pleas, William Thompson and Davis Dimock, never certified that Isaac Hall testified as the foregoing statement makes him to have done. In the third place, there was no man connected with Joseph Smith in translating the Book of Mormon by the name of "Cowdy." In the fourth place the attestation of the judges makes Isaac Hall to testify to the "following statement," instead of the foregoing statement. These four items mark the article as a fabrication by some one who desires to occupy his time and get his pay as a penny-a-liner.

We notice other statements as follows: From the statement of this Isaac Hall when he became acquainted with Joseph Smith he was not figuring nor divining for money, Spanish mines, or otherwise on his own account, but was at work for other men. This agrees with Joseph Smith's own statement with reference to the matter of his laboring in the pursuit of supposed lost mines once worked by the Spaniards. He was not the only person engaged in the enterprise; nor was he alone in the suppositious divining by rod or peepstone as the case may be, as those arts were practiced before, and long afterwards in the mines of California and adjacent States of the West.

Again, this Mr. Hall states that the appearance of Joseph Smith was that of a careless young man not very well educated and saucy to his father. He may have had the appearance of being saucy, but how did Isaac Hall know anything about his conduct towards his father, when he had no acquaintance with the said father? This suppositious boarding of Joseph Smith's father with the other diggers for mines is not corroborated by other history.

It is reasonable to conclude that the arts employed by Joseph Smith were acceptable to his employers, or they would not have retained him in their employment, even so long as this man Hall states, until they became discouraged and dispersed. It may be true that Joseph Smith did make several visits to the house of his father-in-law, and possibly for the purpose of seeing his daughter. The reasons for the refusal to allow Joseph Smith to marry the daughter as stated by this Mr. Hall would not weigh very heavily in a similar case now-a-days, especially that he followed a business that he could not approve of; and this reason is overshadowed by the fact that Mr. Hall states that these visits to his house were after the digging for moneys had ceased and the parties had dispersed.

Mr. Hall further states that Joseph Smith then left the place, but that subsequently he returned and carried off his daughter to New York, where they were married and that without his consent. The plain facts in the case are that Emma Hale, not "Hall," was of age; was something over a year older than Joseph Smith whom she married; that he did not go near her father's house immediately preceding the marriage, nor did he carry her off. She was visiting at the house of a Squire Tarbell, at South Bainbridge, and Joseph Smith visited her there, and by agreement they were married by this same justice of the peace with the consent of both parties to the contract and without the consent of her father, who no longer had legal jurisdiction over her and had no justifiable reason for interfering authoritatively to prevent said marriage. It was just what any young man and young woman of spirit would have done under like circumstances at that time and would do now. What crime could possibly attach to the fact of his having married the daughter of Isaac Hale, not "Hall," without her father's consent? Is it not done now, every day? And by what rule of right is wrongdoing or crime ascribed to Joseph Smith for marrying the woman of his choice, she being of full age under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania? Suppose that he should have "carried her off," or have stolen her, as some have asserted, would you not do the same, reader, under similar circumstances?

It appears from this statement of Mr. Hall that Joseph Smith subsequently returned with his wife to his home and that they took up their home near his residence. It is a fact that he built a house upon the premises of Isaac Hale, his father-in-law, and went to work for a living, doing anything he could find to secure employment, including working for his father-in-law.

Of what Mr. Hall states as to what took place when he visited Joseph Smith's house at the time Martin Harris was present, we can say nothing; nor is it a matter of surprise that he should have supposed the whole thing was a delusion and to have advised them to abandon it. It would have been natural for him to do so.

The statement made by Mr. Hall that he was shown a box in which it was said the plates were, and that he felt the weight of the box, is tantamount to some proof that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery (not "Cowdy") and Martin Harris had something of the kind while they were at work at the home of Joseph Smith near the home of his father-in-law in Pennsylvania. The statement that Martin Harris was to follow the footsteps of Joseph Smith in the snow and find the book of plates, is too silly for any one blessed with a tithe of common sense to credit, and Martin Harris was no fool. He may have been overcredulous, but he was not so easily imposed upon as that.

This Isaac Hall could not have known personally the manner in which Joseph Smith translated; he was not present at any time when the translation was going on. He regarded it as a piece of foolishness and in a sort of dignified way kept away from the house of his son-in-law, providing that this man Hall is intended to be Isaac Hale.

The writer of this article makes this man Hall to say that Oliver Cowdy continued as scribe for Smith until the "Book of Mormons" was completed "as I supposed and understood." This is about the character of much that has been written as evidence against Joseph Smith and his work; and plenty of men have testified to what they "supposed." And the understanding of a great many who have undertaken to talk and write in reference to what Joseph Smith did, have written from an understanding obtained by them from imperfect or false data upon which no man should venture an affirmation, no matter how learned he may be in other regards.

The further statement made by this writer that he "conscientiously believes" that the whole "Book of Mormons (so-called) is a silly fabrication of falsehood and wickedness," may be true as to the belief of the party represented; but suppose he did believe so, he has stated nothing in this article that can possibly convict Joseph Smith of having been a bad, immoral man at the time of his acquaintance with him.

Besides the errors in names made by this writer, providing it was intended that "Isaac Hall" should be understood as Isaac Hale, and "Oliver Cowdy" should be Oliver Cowdery, and the "Book of Mormons" should be the Book of Mormon, the writer and compiler of the article from which we have quoted claiming it to have been an old paper lately or recently come to light, has prefaced his purported statements of Joseph Smith's father-in-law with the assurance that they were "sworn to by a justice of the peace and two judges of the county." There appears no jurat of any justice of the peace, nor do the justices, William Thompson and Davis Dimock, swear to the accuracy or truthfulness of the statements made by Isaac Hall, but simply certify that they were acquainted with the man, that he was of excellent moral character and of undoubted veracity. This they might do as officers without affirming one thing with regard to the truthfulness of the statements made by the individual.

We expect that these old-time productions will continue to be presented by modern pencil-shovers writing for such papers as the New York Herald, seeking for sensationalism, and, ghoulish-like, pouncing upon every moldy, musty untruth and misstatement out of which they can possibly manufacture opprobrium to darken the fame and memory of Joseph Smith the Palmyra Seer. But the cunning of the Devil has never yet been a match for the wisdom of God, and these efforts will one by one come to naught as foolish weapons forged against the word of God, which can not prosper.

We thank Bro. George A. McGuire, of West End, New York, for the copy of the Herald from which we have quoted the article herein commented upon.

RIGHT OF DEACONS TO PREACH.

The question whether deacons may preach has come up again. It seems that nearly every deacon must have a special answer to this question, whereas if they would read, and take pains to remember what they read, there would be no necessity for such inquiry.

At the conference for April, 1898, the following resolution was adopted. It was formulated by the Twelve, the leading quorum of preachers in the church, and by them presented to conference and indorsed:

Resolved, that in our judgment teachers and deacons are authorized by the law to labor as preachers within branches to which they belong, when they are presidents thereof, or with the advice and consent of the chief presiding officer.

We therefore answer the question, that deacons have the right and authority to preach, and should be permitted to exercise that right by the authorities of the branches of which they are members, when occasion may demand or opportunity occur. Why should there be any jealousy on the part of local officers when such opportunity for a deacon to occupy is presented? It is a sign of weakness on the part of a superior to be jealous of or afraid that the inferior in the church may be blessed with talents and can occupy successfully.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We give elsewhere in our columns a sermon on "Love and life," by Doctor R. A. White, published in the Chicago Sunday Tribune for November 20, 1904, which we commend to the readers of the HERALD as worthy of careful and sober consideration.

Bro. G. J. Waller was a candidate for a senatorship in the late election in Hawaii, as the nominee of the Democratic party. We have not as yet noted the result.

Bro. E. B. Morgan, laboring in Wales, sent us a copy of the London, England, Express for November 10, containing a marked article written by Theodore Feilden, of the Electric Magazine, quite eulogistic of President Theodore Roosevelt, and congratulating the United States on his election to succeed himself in the president's office. Thanks, Bro. Evan.

THE LOGIC OF PRAYER.

SYNOPSIS OF A SERMON PREACHED BY ELDER ELBERT A. SMITH, AT BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not.—Jeremiah 33: 3.

I wonder how many believe this text. Probably we will find many who believe the first part of it; yet when we go to them with some of the mighty things that have been shown us in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, in answer to prayer, they tell us that the day of revelation is past. If so, better draw a blue pencil through the whole of this text. No use to call if the day of answers is ended.

Our subject to-night is, "The logic of prayer." Some people tell us there is no logic in prayer, that it is illogical and unreasonable. Perhaps so at first glance; perhaps always to some. Many of our best impulses seem illogical to the casual eye, and will always seem so to those who do not cherish good impulses.

Love seems unreasonable, at times. Why should the parent love his child more than all else in the world? Why should it seem to him the embodiment of beauty and wit? To the coldly critical observer it is neither. By looking around, the parent might find in other families children more attractive to an impartial taste upon which to bestow his affection. Yet we would not have him do so. We do not stop to reason with love or question it why. After all, love is a deeply logical and beneficent provision for the perpetuation of the race, and that each succeeding helpless generation might have the protection, fostering care, and teaching of its progenitors, that the wisdom and culture of a century might not die with it but go on with cumulative power from generation to generation.

The impulse to give may seem illogical. Why should one man give that for which he has labored to another less fortunate man? Better save it for himself! Yet giving brings its own reward in a pleasure that is sufficient argument for the impulse.

If you doubt that, try it. Take two dollars. Spend one as you choose, on yourself. Buy candy, go to the theater, or treat yourself to a good dinner. Take the other dollar and hunt up some poor woman who is supporting her family by washing, and give that dollar to her to help her buy a Thanksgiving dinner. Then come and tell us which did you the most good. You need not answer the first day, or the first week, or the first month; wait a year and then give your answer. To which do you look back with the greater pleasure? The one is a permanent investment; the other is gone. It is still more blessed to give than to receive. I think we discover some logic in giving.

But how about prayer? Is it logical in a mother to pray for her boy, out in the world alone? Is it reasonable in her to expect the great God of heaven to discriminate in his favor among all the myriad sons of earth? Shall he leave his ponderings in the midst of the blue deeps? Shall he forsake his administration of the universe to save one boy from accident?

Yet, tell me, what would you think of a mother who would not pray for her boy under those conditions? For six thousand years mothers have prayed and they will continue to pray so long as the world stands. And say what we will there is not one logician who would silence one of those prayers if he could; nor could he if he would.

Undoubtedly there is much prayer that is illogical. Many Christians by a perversion of sense cling to the thought that they should pray, but have abandoned the thought that they should expect a reply. For instance, we go to them and tell them that God heals the sick. They tell us that he does so no more. We say to them, When your child is sick unto death, do you pray for it? They are ashamed to say no, or can not truthfully, so they say yes. Well, why pray if God no longer heals? And if you expect him to heal your child, why tell us he does not heal?

Prayer may be divided into two parts—supplication and thanksgiving.

“Well,” the inquisitor says, “is it reasonable to thank God for anything? He knows you are thankful, if he knows all that you claim; then why thank him?”

When I give my boy a stick of candy I know he is thankful, I can tell by the look in his eye, and by the way he reaches for it, and yet I teach him to say, “Thank you.” We all do that. Why? Why is it less reasonable in God to teach us to say thanks even though he knows the feeling of our inner hearts?

If nothing more, it teaches us good manners. We thank people for the slightest service rendered us in public, and take pride in our good breeding; yet take the greatest gifts from God with covered head and silent lips.

But there is still another reason. Ingratitude is one of the basest crimes. Shakespeare tells us that it is sharper than a serpent's tooth. The man who has freely and repeatedly enjoyed the hospitality of a friend who then turns that friend from his own door and gives a paying boarder the preference is an unlovely spectacle. The child who forgets the fostering care of its parents, the long night's vigil and the hard day's labor, and refuses that parent a sheltering roof for his old age,—what words shall describe him?

Now then, the child that takes a gift so hastily that he has no time to say thanks, need make but one little step and he will take a gift so hastily that he will not even feel thanks. So it is but a step from the taking of things from God without thanksgiving to the taking of them without feeling gratitude, and lo, we are guilty of the crime that we despise in others.

Pleasing God is not the only province of thanksgiving; it also saves the one who stops to say thanks. He has the company of the one leper who sought Jesus out to thank him, and he is saved the company of the nine ungrateful ones.

But why ask God for things? He knows that we need them. Well, we give our children a great many things; but some things we think if they want very badly they may ask for them, even though we know that they want them. The child who is granted every wish ere it is uttered appreciates none of the toys with which he is burdened. God gives us many things freely. They are bestowed upon all without asking, yet many things he thinks if we want very badly we will ask for them. Sometimes we must ask repeatedly ere we learn to appreciate and rightly appraise their value.

Again, it is natural to pray. We do not think it illogical to eat when we are hungry or sleep when weary; why unreasonable to pray when so prompted, and all races of men have ever been so prompted? All the way from the naked savage, carving in wood his rude presentiment of God, up to the most enlightened white men, such as Gladstone in England, Bismark in Germany, and Lincoln in America, all prayed as best they knew to the best they could conceive.

As it is with races, so is it with individuals. The chances are that there will come a time in the life of every man when he will be glad to pray. Better pray now! Don't wait until disaster forces you to your knees!

The impulse to pray is so strong that it has conquered some of the most bitter skeptics. It is said of Thomas Paine that he prayed when on his death-bed. Whether this be true or not, certain it is that as he lay there on his bed suffering, forsaken except for a few kind Quakers, old, face to face with death, the books that he had written must have been poor consolation. They would do to read in the flush of health, but not there.

Ingersoll's speech at the graveside of his brother is in effect a prayer. His theology would do to lecture on, but it was a poor support when it came to bidding a loved brother good-bye. He practically fell back on the Christian's support at such times and his “listening love heard the rustle of a wing.”

I, myself, knew one man who was an infidel. He scoffed at all religion. To him prayer had no logic. Yet when drowning, while attempting to swim a certain river, he prayed. His last breath, that he could illy spare, was consecrated to that purpose. He did exactly as the Christian Peter did under like conditions. His professions were forgotten, as were Peter's. Both men fell back on the old primal instinct to pray.

Is it illogical in Christians to forestall the inevitable? Shall we delay piping water into the city until the houses are all on fire? Shall we put off paying the note until the mortgage on the old home is foreclosed?

A quite remarkable incident occurred in the history of Minnesota, in 1877. For four years the State had suffered more or less from grasshoppers. By the close of 1875 they had spread over most of the southern part of the State, and their ravages during 1876 were fearful. They seemed an ever increasing plague from which there was no escape. The spring of 1877 opened amid deep gloom. The earth was filled with the larvæ of grasshoppers, ready to come forth for another season of destruction. Under these conditions the thought occurred to some to pray. So Governor Pillsbury appointed the twenty-sixth day of April as a day for general prayer. Probably many prayed that day who had sometimes questioned the logic of prayer.

The next day dawned clear and hot, and so the next, until millions on millions of the young grasshoppers, in swarms to far exceed those of preceding years, came to the surface of the earth. Then it suddenly turned cold and froze them all to death. The people were never troubled with grasshoppers in such numbers again.

Perhaps it was a coincident; but it looked remarkably like an answer to prayer. It may have been a coincident that the insects came out when it was warm and froze when it turned cold; but we prefer to look at it as a natural result of natural causes, something that would happen every time under like conditions. It may have been a coincident that all this followed the prayers of so many; we prefer to look at it as the natural result of earnest prayer, something that would be repeated again under exactly similar conditions.

Yet I suppose that one might go up through Minnesota and preach on the latter-day work and he would find many who would tell him the day of miracles is past. The above incident was related by Rollin E. Smith in the Saturday Evening Post, during 1900, and was reprinted in the Christian Science Sentinel, March 21, 1901.

You see prayer does not ask God to violate law but to save in harmony with law. One says that God orders all by law and then permits law to take its course without interference. That is true to an extent. Yet he has made an exception by which faith and prayer bring deliverance as naturally as water extinguishes fire.

Another thinks that we can not expect God to take recognition of details. The mind that is engineering the universe can not stop to hear the woes of John Jones. Now the idea should not be that God is too great to attend to little things; but that he is great enough to attend to them. It is said that genius is the capacity for taking infinite pains. And certain it is that some one is looking after the little details in this big world. John Jones burns his little finger if he puts it in the fire, and the sun does not stop shining either. If John Jones has a sick child and he prays for it with great faith the child may be instantly healed, and we will not notice any variation in the planets as a result.

Let us now proceed to discover some more of the philosophy of prayer. We will presume the case of a man who has just begun the habit of prayer. What does he pray for first? Himself! He has not broadened out much yet. He has not rid himself of much selfishness yet. He is afraid of the future, so he prays for forgiveness. He does not pray long until the words of the Master flash into his mind, "If ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses," and a lesson is borne in upon him touching his duty toward men that he never would have learned had he not prayed. There was some logic in God's demanding that prayer.

What does he pray for next? He broadens out a little and includes his wife in his supplication. He does not pray for her long until the thought comes to him, "Am I true to her, in thought as well as deed?" He can't pray long if he is not. If we had more men praying for their wives we would have less domestic trouble; we would have fewer men troubling other people's wives.

Next he prays for his children, but he does not pray long until the question occurs to him, "What kind of an example am I setting them? Will it do me any good to pray for that boy to grow up a good man, if he sees me intoxicated? Will it do him any good for me to pray that he may be an honest man if he hears me lie and sees me steal?" That prayer has brought its own answer.

He broadens out still more and prays for others. The man who has reached that stage has made some progress. He is rid of considerable selfishness. Often one gets the greatest blessings in praying for others. He begins to pray for the poor, but he does not pray long until he thinks, "Why should I pray longer for that poor woman on the hill that she should be fed, when I have potatoes in the cellar and good credit at the store?" The logic of prayer is that we learn while praying things we can learn in no other way. God takes this man and makes him answer his own prayer.

There is logic in prayer, because we are commanded to pray. Christ tells us to pray always. We do not need to do like the priests in Thibet. They believe in praying always. Yet it is hard to repeat prayers over and over, so they have invented a machine. They have a wheel on the end of a stick, like a toy windmill. On the rim of the wheel is inscribed their prayers, and as they walk along the street they twirl the wheel and the prayer goes round and round, so they pray always. Just as reasonable as repeating prayers when the mind is on something else, or repeating Latin prayers that we do not understand.

Yet there is a sense in which one's whole life is a supplication. This man is praying when he goes to the grocery store to order a sack of flour for the poor woman. His prayer did not end when he arose from his knees.

Now in conclusion, let us look at this little diagram on the board, not entirely original. Simply a circle with GOD written at the top and MAN written at the bottom. You see it does not take many letters to spell God; if we spell it right, only three. It does not take many words to reach God if we pray right. It does not take many letters to spell man. It does not take many years to number the life of man or many words to recount his wisdom, as contrasted with God's wisdom.

Now we might use this circle to represent prayer,—a never-ending circle. It starts with God. God comes to man in a desire to pray,—a desire so strong that most men at some time yield to it, even the most skeptical. Man goes to God in fear and trembling. God comes to man in revelation, commanding through the written word that he should pray. He comes to him with the Spirit. Man goes to God and prays with the Spirit and with the understanding, and that means much. It is a higher prayer than that which is wrung from him in agony or fear or sorrow. God comes to man with blessings, and man returns with thanks. So it goes on, and the circle grows smaller as we draw nearer to God, and we reach a point where we get what we ask for or else are given the reason why it is withheld.

That is the logic of prayer,—that we may learn God, that we may know God. That is life, and it can come only through communing with him.

PERFECTION.

Can we attain to it in this life? The writer believes that God has never given commandments to men that they could not live up to while in this life; or that would require time and eternity to accomplish the thing we are now commanded to do. Laws given to mortals are to govern mortals. Angels no doubt will have laws to govern them as angels. They are not subject to our laws, neither are we subject to theirs, only as the laws of love, etc., may be applicable to both conditions.

When God said, "Be thou perfect" (Genesis 17: 1), "Be ye therefore perfect" (Matthew 5: 48), "Be ye holy" (1 Peter 1: 16), "Ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy, for I am holy" (Leviticus 11: 44), he was commanding men, not angels. If perfection can only be attained among the angels, why did God command us to be perfect and holy? Why not reserve such commandments for the angels instead of giving them to us?

Since he has given us the law, we must live up to it, or fail to "live . . . by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." (Matthew 4: 4.) But the objector says that is beyond human attainment, or if one should attain to it he would be translated at once; he would be fit for heaven and go there bodily, as did Enoch. Were Enoch and his people the only ones who were accounted perfect? Let us see. "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God."—Genesis 6: 9. That is as much or more than was said of Enoch, yet he was not translated. Neither do I think he was perfect in later years when he got drunk. God said that Job was, "a perfect and an upright man" (Job 2: 3), even after Satan had stripped him of all he possessed,—children and all, except a rebellious wife who would have him "curse God and die." Yet, "In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly."—Job 1: 22. His would-be "comforters" tried hard to convince him that his sufferings and privation were because of great wickedness and asked him, "Is not thy wickedness great? and thine iniquities infinite?"—Job 22: 5. Job, like Paul in Philippians 3: 12, would not boast of his own perfection, but viewed himself in this light: "If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me: if I say, I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse."—Job 9: 20. Yet God had a higher estimate of Job than he had of himself. He said Job was perfect. Job was not competent to judge himself, but said, "If I be wicked, woe unto me; and if I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head. I am full of confusion; therefore see thou mine affliction."—Job 10: 15. He admitted he may have been at fault, but could not detect wherein, so he asked of God, "Show me wherefore thou contendest with me."—Job 10: 2. Yet he was able to say, "Thou knowest that I am not wicked."—Verse 7.

Job's "comforters" seem to have had the same idea that some have to-day, when they said: "What is man, that he should be clean? And he which is born of a woman, that he should be righteous? Behold, he putteth no trust in his Saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight."—Job 15: 14, 15. The statement that "the heavens are not clean in his sight," as well as "man," may be true in the extreme sense; for Paul has said they shall be "shaken" and moved, but we receive "a kingdom which can not be moved." (Hebrews 12: 26–28.) If we are worthy to stand in that kingdom, we will be more pure than the heavens and earth; for they shall pass away, while we shall stand for ever.

We should not take the extreme view of perfection, when applied to the commandment, "Be thou perfect," that the individual that is perfect has reached an absolutely unchangeable condition wherein there is no possibility to fall. John said, "We know we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."—1 John 3: 14. Christ said, "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, . . . is passed from death unto life."—John 5: 24. "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."—John 11: 26. These statements and our perfection only hold good while we are faithful: if you "fall from your own steadfastness" (2 Peter 3: 17) you are neither perfect nor have "life."

There is a sense in which Christ himself was not perfect while in this life; but was made "perfect through suffering." (Hebrews 2: 10; 5: 9.) His work was not completed, hence he was not perfect in that sense, till he had suffered on the cross, preached to the spirits in prison, preached to and instructed his disciples after his resurrection, and ascended on high. In this sense we will not be perfect till after the resurrection; but that is not the sense in which we are commanded to be perfect. We can not bring about our resurrection. That is in God's hands. Yet there is a perfection that we by our own efforts can attain to in this life. Noah had reached that perfection and God said Job was perfect, and Paul said "We speak wisdom among them that are perfect."—1 Corinthians 2: 6. He did not speak wisdom to resurrected beings, but living saints, here, in this life; and he evidently affirmed that they were then perfect. He says again, "In malice be children, but in understanding be men" ("perfect,"—margin.)—1 Corinthians 14: 20. "But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age" ("perfect,"—margin.)—Hebrews 5: 14. "Till we all come . . . unto a perfect man" [not angel or God.]—Ephesians 4: 13. "We all" then must reach that condition or we will be found wanting. Again, "Warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus."—Colossians 1: 28. These were men (not angels), and perfect men, for he spoke wisdom to "them that are perfect," and he did so that he might "present every man [not one or two] perfect in Christ Jesus." Still the objector may say, How can any one claim to be perfect when Paul said that even he had not "attained . . . perfection." Paul, like Job, did not assume to declare his own perfection, lest as Job said, "If I say I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse."—Job 9: 20. He would not boast of perfection, yet he said, "Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded; if in anything we be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you."—Philippians 3: 15.

Paul here evidently included himself in the number, "As many as be perfect," but still left room for a doubt or "be otherwise minded": and if such should be the case, God would reveal to them wherein they lacked perfection.

There is another objection that is often urged against the possibility of men attaining to perfection here; and that is, "There is none good but one, that is, God."—Matthew 19: 17. This is in the extreme sense of being in an absolutely perfect and unchangeable condition, which Christ himself only attained "through suffering," the resurrection, and completion of his work,—the divine sense, if you please; while in the human sense he said, "I: thine eye evil, because I am good" (Matthew 20: 15), and, "I am the good shepherd" (John 10: 11).

How and when do we arrive at this perfection? Whenever we have learned and fully complied with every requirement that God has placed on us in our several conditions in life; as children, as men and women or lay members in his church, as deacons, teachers, priests, elders, or the president of the church; having lived by every word of God that applies to us. Whenever we fail to comply with all the requirements governing in our respective spheres, or fail to take up new requirements as we advance from stage to stage, we fall from our "steadfastness," as Peter would say.

THE WAY OF LIFE.

For as the father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself.—John 5: 26. And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day.—John 6: 40. Not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.—2 Corinthians 5: 4.

"No mortal ever drew the breath,
That ever truly longed for death;
'Tis life for which our nerves are scant,
'Tis life, more life, for which we pant,
More life, not death, is what we want."

The origin of life in nature is a problem as old as the human mind. What life is, has been a question asked in every age, and still is yet unanswered. From the days of the ancient alchemist; from Pythagoras and Plato to Thomas Huxley, for a "spontaneous generation" men have searched, and searched in vain.

Professor Huxley, perhaps the keenest and most profound of scientists, just before his passing away declared that "not one of the innumerable attempts to create life out of nonliving matter had succeeded."

Life, consciousness, is our great possession and fact. Of its method we are all naturally in profound ignorance. A great preacher with agnostic tendencies has said that "life will always be a mystery to the dwellers on this planet."

The theory of the theologian, or his past assumption, has, up to date, however, met with no successful denial, or scientific disproof that biogenesis, or life from life only, is the most believable assumption; and that life from death, after persistent scientific experiment, has proved a failure.

If the statement of Saint Paul is a true one, that "life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel,"—if a disclosure or revelation of life has been made based on evidence satisfactory to minds that have been in the past assaulted (and perhaps all too successfully) through the lack of evidence of a continuous life after the death (or dissolution) of the natural body, then it becomes the moral and humane obligation of every lover of his kind to endeavor to make exposition to his fellows,—if he has it,—of the plot and plan of this "light of life," as it relates to the present or the future estate of man.

Having been "delivered from the fear of death" by processes which I am aware are neither popular nor common to our generation of men and women, in the lifting of my voice against the doctrines of death, I would like to be able to furnish such introductory methods of evidence as shall find warrant and support in the legitimate exercise of the functions belonging to man's highest capabilities of test relating to questions where rational doubts are entertained.

For the father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself.—John 5: 26. And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand.—John 10: 28. Earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven. . . . Not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.—2 Corinthians 5: 2, 4.

Mortality means simply death. Having become identified with a mortal estate, we are simply and naturally subject to death. And having been persuaded that Jesus Christ not only will be, but as Saint Paul has said, "is, our life," it has become my principal desire that men, especially those who doubt as I once did, may become possessors of that which of all things I know of in this world seems now to me to be most valuable. "But I fear," once said Saint Paul, "lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ."—2 Corinthians 11: 3.

The complexity of a profound scholarship, according to "the wisdom of this world," and its unattainability by the masses of humanity, as must have been foreknown by the author of life, would naturally prevent the permissibility of logic, except along the lines of natural and simple lines of induction, analogy, or reason. And for this reason the Master of the system has followed the simple order of nature's lessons, which are far safer reading for permanent lessons than are the theories or books of men oftentimes. Shall we try, as best we can, to present consecutively, and along simple lines, the order of life, "in Christ Jesus our Lord"?

"By his own will," says the apostle James, "begat he us with the word of truth." This "word of life" was committed to men by his call and authority. "As my father hath sent me, even so send I you," was his declaration. "Our hands have handled of the word of life," says the "beloved disciple." "For in Christ Jesus have I begotten you in the gospel," says Saint Paul.

The authorized and heaven-commissioned man, then, or now, boldly, intelligently, and yet simply offers to men the message of the new order of life. And as he "reasons of righteousness, temperance," and the "judgment to come," and, under the influence of a heavenly unction and force, persuades men that repentance and reform from wrongs that reason and experience confirm as disastrous, as the evidences multiply that God is, and that by a special dispensation, and unanswerable testimonies of a "cloud of witnesses" in our day; by the voice of heavenly angels; by the voice of all of the divine harmonies of virtue, goodness, and truth, calling men to repentance and salvation; as he heeds, and listens, and a new order of evidences are awakening in his mind, the new life begins to dawn; he is begotten "by the word of God that liveth and abideth for ever," and he begins to move forward along utterly safe lines of procedure and reasoning; and as he comes to the "new birth," the birth of God,—of "water and the Spirit," being born again, "not of corruptible seed," or of the natural man, but the new child, of a perfect parenthood, a divine Father, he begins to grow, begins to "be a partaker of the divine nature," as he begins the process of sloughing off the human and enters into the plan of a divine assimilation of a perfect nature and character. Biogenesis, life from life only, is the first fundamental proposition. Hetrogenesis, or abiogenesis, or the production of a species different from itself, never has been, and we believe, never will be demonstrated. It is an unanswerable law of logic, that reproduction is as exact a term in meaning as generation or regeneration.

If there be an existent order of intelligence called angels, and man has been "created a little lower" than these, and if we find that it is a primordial instinct and part of his nature to aspire to a better nature and order of life, we must look for an intelligent and practical law and process by which the evolution is to be accomplished.

"And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people. . . . He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son."—Revelation 21: 3, 7. That part of man that aspires to the different and better estate than the natural limitations of associations and experiences that history affirms as his boundary of possibilities, calls for a revelation whose full and complete answer must and can be found only in his Designer, his Creator,—God. This side of that the “divine discontent” must naturally and logically urge him on, until he finds rest and peace eternal through coöperation with, and in the law and plan and order of things of which he is not the architect or builder, save as he is called to coöperate.

“And he shall be my son.” Biogenesis, life from life, and only in its own order and kind through the processes of law! “Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these [promises] ye might be partakers of the divine nature.”—2 Peter 1:4. That which your parents and mine have bequeathed to us has not proven an altogether satisfactory inheritance. Something left for somebody else to do for us. Our nature seems to be largely like theirs, better or worse, but never perfect, never satisfying, altogether too limited in powers to accomplish even our poor ideals of the way of life, or the better ways of living.

The process of being begotten “by the word”; the first motions of a life that was not natural or human; the “birth” of another kind, for me suggests or offers strong and analogous evidence of another kind of parenthood. The growth and development in understanding of things important, that I know are not after the law and order of natural processes of education, and which by the new forces operating have given me a new vision, new eyes, so to speak, “the eyes” of an “understanding,” certainly affirm to me the presence of a “new creature”; “a new man.”

“Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God.” The fact that I am measurably able to “see” a kingdom or order of government “restored,” after the letter of the New Testament pattern, and through agencies that could not to my mind have originated in the minds of illiterate or corrupt men, springing forth in our time and century, and in opposition to every purpose and plan with which the world were groping in darkness, error, and doubt, as regards intelligent and permanent satisfaction of religious questions, a kingdom which all, no matter how learned or wise, “can not” and do not “see” are tangible evidences to my mind that the contentions of the early Christian fathers were and are correct.

“We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren,” says the apostle John. Where or who are these “brethren”? Why do I love or affiliate with the people called Latter Day Saints? The answer is at once easy and logical to my mind. It is because that, if there are any such a people in existence, they are the “brethren” of the Lord Jesus Christ, children of the covenant, fashioned after a mind and a will other than that of man, because that in my passing “from death unto life,” I find myself, by a law of sequence, unavoidably associated with, and persistently forced, by the logic of facts, (the law of intellectual safety and of rational scriptural warrant and authority, into a school of moral and spiritual forces and methods of training, whose results upon human character are seen in their defensible and rationally religious character,—because I find myself associated with, and a member of, the only church existent whose scriptural positions and assumptions are intellectually unassailable,—because I find myself surrounded with a “cloud of witnesses,” which time will not allow of enumeration, but which, and in the summing up of which, amounts to an aggregation of evidence that warrants to me the rational and glorious privilege of saying that I know that I have been “born of God,” and have “seen,” and that I am a member of the kingdom of God, and of the church of his Son, Jesus Christ.

Is it a wonder then that I am persuaded to remain among those influences where I have learned to know something of the real character of God, whose existence I once strongly doubted, and to believe and trust that, notwithstanding the natural leaning toward doubt caused by our limited powers of vision, he “is love,” and that love is after a perfect order and kind? Is it a wonder that I should revere this wonderful latter-day work, or the memory of the man, or men, who in suffering and life trial, were the instruments in the hands of God of its revelation unto me? “IF.”

Oh God, if there be a God, hear my prayer.
If sinners yet should repent and prepare,
If for a sinful world you still have care,
If you have a message which I should bear,
If I must sow the seed to grow among the tares,
If you have called and sent me, Lord, show me how, and where.

If the writer’s article under the caption of “Let us have no ifs” in HERALD for August 31 is the one to which Bro. Ebeling replies under the head-line of “What about these ‘ifs’?” in HERALD for September 28, and I have seen no other “in the HERALD recently,” then of course the writer is the “wiseacre,” the pretentious simpleton, the silly person with a weak intellect, whom Bro. Ebeling warns you not to be debauched by: (See definitions of “pander” and “wiseacre.”)

Well, I have learned not to make “a man an offender for a word.” And I have learned that with thinking people neither harsh, bitter, nor thoughtless epithets give force or weight to argument.

I discover that the pronouns I and me are the only ones used in the body of the article first referred to, and that us and we occur only in the closing sentences, which are carefully qualified by the words "such doubtful phraseology," referring exclusively to what precedes it, namely, "When I have used such terms," and, "If I say," etc.

Did I lower myself in Bro. Ebeling's estimation by referring to myself so much? Or was it because I had discovered one of my mistakes and resolved to correct it? Or has he always considered me a "wise-acre"? He has written nothing that has in any way changed my mind.

I was taught when a child that the way a thing is said is considered fully as much if not more than what is said.

Could the brother know that the congregations to which the writer preaches contain many sensible people who not only have no knowledge of "Genung" and "his outlines of rhetoric," but who can not read or write, he might see a fact that he has apparently overlooked, namely, many people with good sense do not and can not stop to reason out if a speaker "simply frames the language from the ideas entertained by his opponent," or whether it is "used with reference to the doubt in the minds to whom the language is directed," or otherwise. I have discovered that a large majority expect the speaker to frame his own ideas, and present them plainly, without interblending them with what he may suppose to be the ideas of a mixed congregation. The word if has, like many other words, different definitions, and is used with reference to different bearings; and what the brother has written makes the point that I was driving at still clearer to my mind. And I think others, too, can see that when a speaker is affirming things which he claims to have a knowledge of, if he bases his argument upon suppositions, clothes them with deductions and allowances, and buttons them with doubtful "ifs," the points of his argument will not be so clearly drawn, nor will the congregation be so deeply moved as they would if the speaker told his story in a plain, straightforward, and densely positive way.

God has truly given us a great and glorious message to bear to the world; and while he imbues me with a knowledge of his will, I do not propose to longer tell the glad story in a halting, half-hearted manner. I will cut out the unnecessary "ifs" and present the God-given message in as compact a manner as I know how. But I have not asked Bro. Ebeling or any one else to copy after me. Every metal has its own ring, and every instrument its peculiar tone. I would not have the great pipe-organs of the day brought down to the level of my jews'-harp, nor shall the harmony of my humble harp be lowered to the uncertain squeak of the cricket.

LOVE AND LIFE.

The greatest of these is Love.—1 Corinthians 13: 13.

Life moves under a variety of impulses. Many dynamic forces mingle in apparent confusion in every act and thought of our being. Any attempt therefore to define one motive as predominately superior to another, or to seek to measure the activities of life by one or more motives to the exclusion of all others, is an injustice to the truth of our human nature. Life is a unity in diversity, and only the impact of the totality of human motives and impulses explains life as it really is.

Remembering this, we are still permitted to select from the mass of human impulses and motives those which seem to predominate. Generally speaking, the dynamic forces of life fall into three great classes or impulses—fear, ambition, and love. Now we are told in the ancient book that the greatest of these virtues is love. We can easily agree with the book. Fear and ambition have played and still play an important part in the drama of life. But neither apart nor together do they yield the supremest results.

Love has ever completed and sanctified whatever ambition or fear wrought which was worthy. Fear sent the ancient Venetians to build their first rude huts on the restless bosom of the Adriatic, but love created the matchless architecture of Torcello and Murano. Fear and ambition chained the shifting sands of the sea with deep-driven piles and bordered the sea-swept isles with stately palaces. But love reared Saint Mark's—set it with priceless columns of porphyry and alabaster, filled its domes with deathless mosaics, its spandrills with richest traceries, and crowned its gables with gentle angles.

Fear and ambition set ancient Florence within ramparts of invulnerable stone, but love created the masterpieces of Angelo, the singing boys of Della Robbia, the Gothic shaft of immortal Giotto, and the heavenly dome of Brunelleschi. Ambition and no little of malice winged the stiletto like the verse of a Dante, but the longing and love of a homesick exile gave them immortality and a universal message. No really enduring creation of the highest order exists except love has been the master hand in its creation.

The hope of the modern home is love. Fear never made a home. Show me a home governed by fear and you show me a home barren and cheerless as the winter earth under gray winter skies. Show me a home ruled by love and you show me a home soft as a summer dream, beautiful as sunset skies, lovelier and sweeter than a summer twilight when the birds twitter their soft good-night and the departing day hangs poised on the rim of night.

Fear never made an abiding church or religion. Love alone makes religion inspirational. Fear or ambition never made a really great religious leader. Love tips the tongue with persuasive eloquence and fashions the stuff that religious heroes and martyrs are made of. Love alone is the measure of events. Is a thing right or wrong? Does love sit supreme at the heart of the deed? is the searching counter question.

Is war ever justifiable? We are in the midst of war. Titanic forces are massing for war. Grim, savage faces leer upon us from behind our Christian pretensions of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Behind the priest stands half concealed the armed soldier. Ill-concealed by the temple of religion stands the grim lines and embattlements of war. The smoke of cannon in the far East obscures the smoke of incense from the altars of religion. Followers of the gentle Nazarene let loose the hounds of war the earth over, and with pious prayers to the god of battle feed countless cannons with the choicest sons of battle-frenzied nations.

Is war ever justified? Is it, can it ever be, Christian to fight? Lay the measure of love upon the question. Is war waged from pure love of country, in defense of home and fireside, to strike the shackles from limbs that are bound, to set the face of the slave toward freedom's holy light? Then war, I should say, is justified. For love can be fierce and dauntless and demand the sacrifice of life in certain great crises of human history when the welfare and rights of people are at a hazard and weakness writhes helpless under the feet of tyranny.

Life itself is a struggle and a battle, and the rightfulness or wrongfulness of it all is measured by the better things won for mankind.

And once more the measure of men is love. Has a great hero been a lover of men? Has he toiled for them, died for them? Then his benign face shines upon us from the fading years. Generations come and go, each loving tenderly the lover of men. Why does Jesus hold so lastingly a place in the world's memory? Chiefly because the one universal and undying virtue with which believer and unbeliever have alike invested him is the virtue of love. Compared to Plato he was ignorant, his death was no more sublime than the death of Socrates. Yet Plato is a syllogism, Socrates a fragrant memory, Jesus an inspiration. Jesus was one of the supremest embodiments of love the world has witnessed. Other great men the world remembers.

Alexander, Cæsar, Napoleon. The world will not forget these. They scarred it too deeply, they wounded it too sore, and, withal, benefited it no little without doubt. They were earthquakes and the tremor of their convulsions has not yet died out of the affairs of men. They were volcanoes and the light of their deeds still crimson the skies of history. They are curiosities, but not inspirations.

Never a study of Cæsar or Napoleon sent a soul headlong toward some great deed of unselfishness. When men want inspiration, courage to sacrifice and suffer, they seek the companionship of those who have loved. It is not Solomon or David whose light illumines with rarest splendor the history of incomparable Israel, but Jonathan, the lover and tried friend. Loyola, the Jesuit, is the largest figure in Catholic history. But Catholic and Protestant alike recall with devotion the hero of love in the monk's habit, Francis of Assisi.

England rears masterful monuments to her great soldiers and statesmen, and with good cause. But the richest inheritance England has is the memory of John Howard and Elizabeth Fry, and her noblest matron lingers between the twilight and the darkness by the soft flowing Derwent. Love, then, is the supreme vitalizing element in life. Because it is the best it is the latest born. The best wine at the feast of life is kept for the last. Love holds the secret of all great life. Art is made immortal by it, and literature glorified by love burns with an undying splendor.

Above all, love lays its hand upon the restless self within us and curbs and calms it into high service, bends it to great tasks. Angelo, the prince of artists, wore, it is said, a small lamp fastened to the rim of his cap that no shadow of himself might fall upon his work. Self and self-interests are the black beasts whose shadow darkens our effort.

Love took up the harp of life, and Smote on all the chords with might;
Smote the chord of self
That trembling, pass'd in music out of sight.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE following letter from an earnest worker is probably representative of what many would like to know about. There is some misunderstanding concerning the privileges of the home class members in the regular sessions of the school or in the business-meetings of the school. We give such parts of the letter as are necessary under this subject.

"In HERALD of some weeks ago there was a letter from you in the Sunday-school Department on the privileges of home department members. Some of your remarks have called forth considerable discussion. . . .

1. "You state that the home department members should have no voice or vote in the business-sessions of the main school. This seems to me to be a little out of harmony with the thought presented in the 'Leaflet of instruction' No. 2, and the same thought seems to be in the minds of others.

"I want to get a clear understanding of just what relation and what privileges exist between the home department and the Sunday-school proper.

2. "In the Leaflet under the heading of representation we find that the home department members are included in the total enrollment of the school and the representation shall be based thereon the same as for any other department of the school.

Now it does not seem to me to be just exactly proper for a school to have a large home department, and by it strengthen their representation in the district conventions, furthering their own interests, and at the same time prohibiting those (who by their membership make this possible) from a voice and vote in their home business-meetings.

3. "Again, this article in 'Leaflet' states 'home department members may be sent as delegates to district or general conventions.' If they are sent to the district conventions as delegates, they are sent to represent the locals sending them, and must be authorized by the business-meeting of that body from which they came, hence the necessity of their being acquainted with the business department of the local.

4. "In 'Leaflet' under the heading, 'Visitors,' we find that the work of the visitors as outlined is as follows: 'They shall endeavor to keep the home class members informed about the doings of the Sunday-school, special days, programs, picnics, resolutions, orders, decisions, elections, etc.'

"Now the interpretation I have put on this, and others likewise is, that the home class should be informed about these things so that they may be present and by their voice and vote make a selection of their officers, and assist in the general business of the school.

"It does indeed seem peculiar that they can be put in by a school to represent them at a convention, and have a voice and vote in selecting the district officers, and at the same time be barred out in the elections of the school of which they are a part, and to which their support is given both financially and numerically, by reason of which the school has a greater delegate power in the conventions."

1. The by-laws for Sunday-schools says in article 3: "Persons may become members of the Sunday-school by enrollment, but they shall have no voice or vote in the affairs of the school until they shall have been in attendance four consecutive sessions of the school except in the organization of new schools. All members of the school under eight years of age are prohibited from voting." You will note that a person may become a member of the school at once, "by enrollment," but he is not a voter for at least four weeks and it may be longer if he fails to attend the required "four consecutive sessions." He might be a member for years and not gain the right to vote. Note also that there are many children under eight years of age who are "prohibited from voting." So it is quite plain that there are many members of the school who are not voters of the school.

2. Yes, the home department members are counted in enumerating for your representation. So, also, are the little primaries who are "under eight years of age" and who are "prohibited from voting." In both cases they are members of the school but are not voters, the one because he has not been connected with the school long and regularly enough, and the other because he is not old enough. But they are as certainly members of the school as are the voters. It would seem just as proper for a school to count a large home department in its total enrollment as to count a large primary department,—and they are always counted.

3. Home department members may be sent as delegates to district of general conventions. So, also, may persons not members of the school or district. Often we select missionaries as delegates to represent districts or schools of which they are not members. And we know of nothing to prohibit it. The same is done in case of delegates to General Conference. And we know of nothing in the rules of representation to prohibit it. We grant that a home department member may not be sufficiently acquainted with the work of the school or district to properly represent it. And in such case the school or district should not appoint him. There are many members that are not fit to represent the school, and such should not be appointed.

4. The visitors are to keep the home class members informed about the affairs of the school. This for their convenience and encouragement. We want them to enjoy the special days, the regular sessions, the conventions, or even the business-meetings. But this does not give them any right to vote. And we know of nothing in the constitution or in the 'Leaflet' on the home department, which, by the way, is not a part of the constitution as adopted in the regular way, that would give them the right to vote. The right to vote is defined in article 3 on page 13 of the constitution and we can not change it except in the regular course through which all amendments must pass, however much we may desire, or may think it wrong.

It may seem peculiar that one could be sent as a delegate to a general or district convention and there vote while he could not vote in the school he represented, but such is the case. And as long as it is permitted in General Convention and General Conference, it would seem unwise to try to correct it in the local school. If there be a wrong anywhere, we believe it lies in the appointing of the wrong ones for delegates and not in prohibiting them from voting in the school. If there be errors in the constitution, and there may be, they should be corrected. But we believe this to be the meaning of the constitution as it now is.

"Can Ye not Watch with Me One Hour?"

"O, man, how long will ye be careless and negligent of gifts divinely given?" Nature in her work is seemingly more faithful. She reaches forth her boughs to be kissed by morning sun or to catch the last gleam of fading light. She puts forth her leaf, bud, and blossom, and finally her work is finished, she has earned her needed rest, and reluctantly gives back to Mother Earth a portion of her treasure. She speaks with thunder voice to humanity; and if we do our work as well, we shall have earned our rest. While Nature gives to others her fruits, man with all greedy selfishness reaches out his hand for more, more. He pushes to the right, to the left, just so he stands at the top and grasps all. We in our selfishness desire all, but the divine One has placed us in charge of one another. "Bear ye one another's burdens," "prefer one another, in honor," etc.

Wearry and sorrowful with the knowledge of his coming betrayal by one who should have been a firm friend of this "Prince of Peace," we see our Savior teaching the disciples, and partaking of the sacrament with them, and saying they should be offended because of him that night. We hear Peter's firm denial, "though all should be offended, yet I will never be offended." He would remain loyal, would stand persecutions, sneers, and trials, and even die with him if necessary. We all know the story of that trying hour,—one of the most trying hours in the history of our Lord before his crucifixion,—of his departure into Gethsemane with his disciples, and of his prayers. He had taken Peter, James, and John apart from the others, and his cross was so heavy he cried aloud, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death. Tarry ye here and watch with me;" and we can partially enter into the spirit of that trying hour, that sorrow, when he fell on his face praying, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me, nevertheless, not my will, but thine, be done." Returning he found the three men asleep. It seems to be with astonishment, for he exclaims, "What, could ye not watch with me one hour?" He returns the second and even the third time and still his disciples sleep on. Oh, that last peaceful though bitter hour of our Redeemer! Peaceful, for angels ministered to him; trying, because he desired the Father's will above all else and his agony was so great he sweat great drops of blood, and alone. But not long afterwards these men were to learn to watch, and not only watch but suffer.

A dear friend had asked for prayer and fasting in her behalf. She was young, and a lover of the gospel work. She craved the blessing of health that naturally belongs to youth. The day was long, it seemed, and as we went forth to our meal, a little hurriedly, a still, not so very small, voice caused us to exclaim aloud, "Could ye not watch with me one hour?" We felt almost condemned. Had our prayers and fasting then been of no avail, had our minds dwelt on temporal things of life to that extent we had hungered more for the food that perishes than the meat and drink of which Jesus spoke: "I have meat to eat that ye know not of?" Our heavenly Father does not demand more of one than another, surely not if we are to help bear other burdens than our own.

And so we start out in gospel life with this intent, but alas! we soon found it was so easy to sleep, while others watched. Our time of probation is not so long that we can afford to say, "By and by we will work for the Master." If you have been asked to help in this convention, it was because you were needed. Why may you say, "No," while others work? What right have you to say, "Ask some one else," and you sleep? This morning when you voted for our superintendent you virtually promised to assist in the Sunday-school work, and why? Because you believe she will do all in her power to promote and strengthen the work you so love. Then when she thinks it best to invite you to lend a hand, "to watch," as it were, do not let her find you asleep, but ready to respond to the call with all the vigor of your God-given talents; or, if dreaming, arouse yourself and respond with all cheerfulness. You have not been asked to do all the work, but God demands you to do your part; and when the last great convention shall be called, we will be awake and rejoicing, if we are so fortunate as to be asked to take a part then, and ready to respond to the call.

THE WAY OF BALAAM.

Golden Text.—"Keep yourselves in the love of God."—Jude 21.

In the second chapter of Peter's letter to the saints of his time, we have been reading his warning concerning false teachers who would rise in the church and lead many astray. In the verses upon which this lesson is based, Peter said those false teachers would follow in the way of one who had lived long before in the time of Moses. That man was Balaam.

Balaam presents to us a mixture of faith in Jehovah and of heathen superstition. He was not one of Israel, though living in the time when Moses led the people of Israel to the promised land. His home was near the Euphrates.

We may remember in this connection that Abraham, the founder of the Hebrew nation, had his early home by the Euphrates, and that the true faith in Jehovah had been known there before his time, that the cloud of apostasy had obscured it and had made it necessary for Abraham to be called out and led to a far land where he might raise up a nation to whom God might again reveal himself and his truth.

It is not surprising, therefore, that in Balaam we find some knowledge of God, but mingled with superstition suggested by the minds of men. In his worship we find an illustration of the condition of those who are drawn away from the simplicity that is in the gospel as God has given it to men in various ages of the world. This was what Peter, Paul, and others foresaw would come upon the church personally founded by Christ. They foresaw the time when the church would be corrupted "from the simplicity that is in Christ" and would present in its worship a mixture of faith and superstition as was found in the worship of Balaam. This was, doubtless, Peter's reason for referring to Balaam in the assertion that those false teachers, whose rise in the church he foresaw, would follow in the way of Balaam.

THE STORY OF BALAAM.

Briefly it is this: He one day received a visit in his home by the Euphrates, from messengers sent from the king of Moab, on whose borders the people of Israel were then encamped. The kings of that region feared the people of Israel would overrun their lands and bring the inhabitants into subjection, and this fear, though unfounded, led them to send messengers to Balaam with presents and a request that he come and pronounce a curse upon Israel; for it was a belief universal among the heathen nations that magic spells and the incantations of soothsayers had power to affect those against whom they were pronounced.

The account in Numbers tells us that Balaam sought the Lord and was forbidden to go with the messengers or to curse Israel. He was told they were a people whom the Lord would bless.

Balaam refused to go with the messengers, assigning his reason. Then the king of Moab sent other messengers of higher rank with promises of great honors to be bestowed upon Balaam if he would come and curse Israel. And here is where we have a glimpse of the desires of Balaam. He besought the Lord again to know what he should do.

He must have desired to go and to receive the reward offered him by the king of Moab, and Josephus says he did express to the messengers his willingness to go and stated to them that the only reason for his refusal to go was that the Lord would not permit him and he dared not go beyond the word of the Lord.

When Balaam approached the Lord the second time, the Lord removed the barrier to his going, not by sanctioning his going, but by making it necessary for him to decide whether he would stand for or against the light he had received concerning Israel. It was the same principle of action on the Lord's part as that expressed in his words to our first parents in the garden when he said to them that they must choose for themselves whether or not they would take of the fruit of the forbidden tree. He said to them, "Thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee; but remember that I forbid it."

Balaam found himself in the same position before the Lord; he had to use his agency in deciding whether or not he would go with the messengers of the king, after the Lord had told him he ought not to go against a people whom the Lord had blessed. But his moral weakness is shown in the fact that, as soon as the Lord left it with him to decide whether or not he would go, he rose and went. When he was met on the way by the angel of the Lord who told him his way was perverse before the Lord, he servilely said he would go back to his home.

This was evidently not from a change in the desires in his heart, but from fear that he would bring destruction upon himself by openly disobeying the Lord.

He was permitted to act in accordance with his desires, and, if we observe closely the things that come within our own experience, we may find that, as a rule, we have the sincere desires of our hearts.

Balaam was bidden to go on his way, but was strictly commanded as he had been twice before to speak concerning Israel only the word the Lord would give him.

In this he obeyed the letter of the command. He proceeded on his way, and was met with tokens of honor by the king. Josephus says he was treated with royal magnificence. We observe in the account in Numbers that he went to the places where the idols of the heathen were worshiped when he sought the Lord for the word he should speak concerning Israel, and he offered sacrifices, not in the simple manner that Abraham and others did according to the word of the Lord, but he directed the king to have built seven altars and to offer sacrifices upon each of them.

Yet, despite the surroundings of idolatry and the presence of superstition in the worship offered him, the Lord deigned to answer the appeal of Balaam for the word he should speak in the presence of the king of Moab. And words of blessing upon Israel were given, not once only but three times in the different places to which the king took Balaam.

When the king was displeased with Balaam for the words he had spoken, Balaam answered him that he could not speak anything different from what the Lord had given him to speak. He stoutly protested that, if the king should give him his house full of silver and gold, he could not go beyond the word of the Lord.

But, though he was so careful in not altering the word of the Lord, he was not careful to act in accordance with the light he had received. He did not dare to change the word of the Lord in transmitting it, but he gave advice to the king that did not harmonize with the blessing he had pronounced in the name of the Lord. In his own name, he suggested an evil plan that brought death to thousands of Israel. In the Lord's name he pronounced blessing; in his own name, he suggested that which he knew would curse Israel.

Josephus informs us that Balaam regretted that he could not please the king in the words he spoke from the Lord and suggested a way in which to weaken Israel by tempting them to sin against the commands of the Lord. He told the king that the men of Israel were strong only when they were in favor with the Lord. He suggested to him to tempt them with the beauty of the fairest daughters of the Moabites and Midianites, until the young men, fascinated by the beauty of the women, were ready to renounce even their worship for idolatry.

This information from Josephus is supported by the words of Moses in Numbers 31: 16, and by the words of Jesus in Revelation 2: 14. Balaam is spoken of as one who taught the king of Moab to cast a stumbling-block before Israel, and the temptation he employed was the beauty of the idolatrous women. Peter said he did this because he loved the wages of unrighteousness, and Jude coupled his name with greed for reward. He probably was covetous for the reward offered by the king of Moab. He tried to serve both God and mammon.

He tempted others through the lusts of the flesh, and those who yielded fell, and the curse came on twenty-four thousand of Israel. He was himself tempted through his worldly lusts and he fell in the war that followed between Israel and the Midianites, in which he fought on the side of the enemies of Israel, those people upon whom he knew the Lord had pronounced blessing through him.

His story is one of folly, of superstition, of inconsistency, of spiritual darkness, through which there struggled a few rays of the glorious light of God, that light which grows brighter and brighter in those who act in harmony with what they receive but which fades out from hearts that prefer darkness.

ANNA SALYARDS.

Letter Department.

Editors Herald: Having been appointed to labor in the Rocky Mountain Mission this conference year, I have tried to do my duty, laboring in Northeastern Utah, Western Wyoming, and Eastern Idaho. Have visited many places and people, but owing to unfavorable conditions, caused by contagious diseases, busy times, and a failure in obtaining houses to preach in, I have not preached as many public discourses as I would like to have done. However, I have not been idle but have visited many people in their homes and preached many sermons privately that will no doubt result in good to some. I have tried to preach the gospel of salvation, rather than of condemnation. I have distributed many tracts this year, and believe that this also will result in good in the near future. Besides the work that usually falls to the lot of a missionary I have written a sermon tract, entitled The True Prophet of God, and had a thousand copies printed for distribution among the Mormon people. In the early part of the summer I traveled with team instead of riding in one of Nahum's chariots, believing I could reach more people by so doing, and at a less cash outlay, for the Saints who want to help the missionary can often give some oats to feed a team when they could not give money to help pay carfare. My experience this year is a repetition of former years in this mission, that is, traveling from place to place with team or on foot as the case may be, asking for permission to preach in houses that have been built and dedicated to God, only to be refused, or, if permission be given and all necessary arrangements be made, and the preacher strives against all kinds of weather to fill his appointment, he is greeted by a whole house of empty seats to speak to. At other places, I have had no trouble to get houses to preach in, and fair-sized audiences to speak to.

After the district conference it was thought best by those in charge to send Elder J. H. Condit and the writer to the Teton Basin. So after the conference we hitched Teddy Roosevelt and Judge Parker (our mission team) to the gospel wagon and drove to the Basin, where we labored together for a while at Cedrine, Driggs, and Badger, preaching and performing such other duties as we found necessary. At Cedrine Bro. Condit and I each baptized one, and at Badger Bro. Condit baptized two. While laboring at Driggs we were cared for by the Brn. Fausetts and John F. Allen, making our home most of the time with Bro. Allen and wife, who live about five miles from Driggs. To reach their home we had to pass through a swamp. One dark night (no moon) as we were traveling through said swamp, the brethren declared that we were off the road, and as it was too dark for me to be sure of being right, I yielded to their better (?) judgment, and pulled the horses to the left, and,—well, notwithstanding Bro. Condit is a good Democrat, and Bro. Allen is a staunch Republican, and each had the utmost confidence in their presidential candidates, and we were being drawn by a pair of horses bearing the names of the presidential candidates, we soon came to a sudden standstill; the horses wallowing in the mire, with the rear end of the gospel wagon pointing toward the Teton Peaks, while the front end was pointing toward China. To make a long story short, we with the aid of the gospel lantern (which I usually carry with me for street preaching) managed to get Teddy and the Judge out of the mud, and taking up our line of march, the brethren (Condit and Allen) wading, and one of them carrying the gospel lantern, piloted us through the swamp for at least a quarter of a mile, leaving the gospel wagon in the swamp. We arrived at Bro. Allen's home about midnight, muddy, wet, and cold. But we soon got warmed through by the cheerful fire which Sr. Allen had kept for us. But Bro. John H. Condit (who by the way is considerable of a kicker when he thinks he has good reason to kick) declared that he would write to the HERALD and call the attention of Brn. Peter Anderson, H. N. Hansen, and Swen Swenson to my reckless driving, and his woeful experience with me in Teton Basin. I told him that two could play at that game, and if he did not withdraw his threat to write to the HERALD, that I would write the whole story myself. He did not relent, and you have my version of our experience in the swamp.

On the 9th of September Bro. John H. Condit left me to labor alone in the Teton Basin, he going to Hagerman and other points down the Snake River Valley. I missed his assistance very much, but we can not always have our own wishes gratified. So I continued to labor in the basin, preaching in Victor, Cedrine, and near Driggs. At the latter place I baptized three precious souls.

On the 29th of September I bade them good-bye and drove to Rexburg, distant about forty-five miles, where I expected to get the Mormon meeting-house to preach in, but when I got an answer to my request, the bishop would not consent to let me have the house unless he had the consent of the stake president; so I drove to LaBelle and preached near there a few times, after which I went to Rigby, but conditions there were not favorable for preaching, so I drove on the next day to Ammon, but could not get a house to preach in, then on to Idaho Falls with the same result. But at all these places I visited with Saints and friends and did what I could among them to assist them spiritually. At Thomas, I assisted Bro. W. S. Pender a few times, also visited Saints at Bryan and Blackfoot; but did no preaching. I preached a few times at a schoolhouse nine miles north of Blackfoot, visited with Saints and friends, and baptized two. From there I came over into the Bear River Valley and stayed with Bro. Simon Dike and family at Soda Springs (conditions not being favorable for gospel work there) over night, and came on to Montpelier, where I visited with friends who are favorable to the true faith, and did what I could to enlighten their minds concerning the truth. From there I went to my home in Wyoming, where I remained for about two weeks, or until after the election, doing what I could to advance the cause of Christ, and also looking after some temporal matters at home.

On the 10th of November I left Wyoming, and came to Montpelier, but did no preaching there. Also visited Paris, Bloomington, St. Charles, Dingle, and the Hot Springs, doing what I could to get the gospel before the people by private talks and distributing tracts. At Hot Springs, Idaho, I baptized two into Christ. I then came on to Logan, Utah, to meet Elder S. D. Condit, and arrange for our winter campaign, which we contemplate making in the lower Snake River country, including Oneida and Cassia Counties, Idaho, on our route. We expect to leave Logan to-day en route to Malad City, Malta, Albion, Hagerman, and other points to be reached as soon as the work to be done will permit.

As ever in the true faith,

A. J. LAYLAND.

BAY CITY, Michigan, November 19, 1904.

Dear Herald: My wife and myself have just returned from the conference of the Eastern Michigan District where we had a good time, for it seemed so good to meet with so many of the dear Saints that we have known ever since we came into the church, and to form new acquaintances. We visited our son, David E. He is working near Crosswell. We felt pleased to see him doing something for the Master. Bro. William Grice, a young elder of the Fremont Branch, is helping him. They are holding meeting in the union church in Crosswell, with quite good attendance, and the few Saints there are trying to encourage them all they can. I spoke five times. The attendance was not very large owing to the busy time,—everybody afraid of a freeze-up.

I wish to tell about David being healed through prayer. The same day we left him, intending to go on our way to see other relatives, he took suddenly sick with cramps in his limbs and then in his back and jaws; so he sent for us to come back. We were at Bro. Andrew Barr's, at Applegate, Michigan. It was such a cold and windy night, I said to Bro. Barr, "We will have prayer for David." When we arose from prayer Bro. Barr said he felt David would be all right, and next morning when we went over to see him he dressed himself and came down-stairs, but was quite weak. We thank the Lord for his goodness in answering our prayer. But our trouble was not ended. On returning to Applegate, we received word that our daughter, Ray, was sick, so we made our way homeward and found her suffering, and unable to be up. We administered, but she did not get relief at once; but is now some better. The word says we should pray for one another that we might be healed, and I now ask the Saints who may read this to kindly remember our daughter in your prayers, as she has been a great sufferer. You see our path is not all roses; but we look forward to the time when God will wipe tears from all faces.

The height of my ambition is to assist in the work of redeeming the world.

Your brother in bonds,

WM. DOWKER.

POND CREEK, Oklahoma, November 18, 1904.

Dear Herald: We would not like to do without the Autumn Leaves or any of the church papers. They are indeed food to the hungry soul. I love all the different departments, but if there is one thing I love more than the others; it is to see the bold stand the noble youth of the church take in the spread of the gospel, and in trying to live lives so pure that no one can justly cast reproach on the church because of their example.

I did enjoy the dialogue: "Another problem solved," in the last number. It shows the different methods of approaching a person in trying to get the gospel before the people. I thought of the many experiences I have had in trying to explain the gospel since I have been in the church, five years the sixteenth of last June. I have been general agent for a company for over three years, therefore I have met and become acquainted with a great many people, and I always carry church literature with me, and when I become acquainted and feel so led I explain the gospel, give proof from the Bible, give them church literature, call again sometime, take that up and leave more. I set a resolution from the first that if people, knowing I was a Latter Day Saint, would injure my business, I did not care, I would leave that with the Lord, and do the most important thing first; and the consequence is, nearly all of my best customers are those to whom I have given literature, and explained the gospel; and many say they wish our elders would come and preach. I always teach them the apostasy, and restoration by the hand of an angel according to Revelation 14: 6, 7, and show them the difference between us and the Utah people. I hope others will write and give the best methods to approach people. I have never been treated unkindly yet, and sometimes they sit with tears in their eyes while I quote them Scripture, and I have met many ladies, and some men, who have had visions and dreams verified, and are eager for literature. Hoping for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your sister in the restored gospel,

Editors Herald: We closed our series of meetings at the William Lee Schoolhouse Sunday night, having held fourteen services. Came to this place yesterday, and by a little hustling the Saints got out a fine crowd at their chapel. Some "outsiders" were present, including the Congregational minister. There is strong talk of debate, and we trust it will amount to more than rumor. The Baptists have written to a reverend in Buchanan who declines, but advises them to furnish one of their own denomination, or send for D. H. Bays. We can hardly hold the Adventists responsible for not taking in Baptist washings, and blame not Bays to decline. A polemic tilt would do both Saint and sinner good. A properly conducted debate serves to awaken the slumbering, and gives animus to the work all along the line. I never could wed myself to the theory of crushing down investigation. A discussion calls a class of people that would never otherwise hear the truth, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the returns double the expense, time, and effort invested in the way of the establishment of truth, the spread of light, and the dissipating of prejudicial clouds. The life of Jesus Christ was one continual scene of stormy debate. Truth, like its author, is aggressive. It must plow up the old ruts in which the gems are buried. It must tear up the deeply rooted weeds of prejudice, the storm-tossed oaks of superstition. The gospel plow must stir the soil, and true gospel seed must be sown. Paul debated two years in a house hired for the purpose, and his defense of Christianity, and attacks on error, paganism, idolatry, superstition, and organized antichristian confederations made the Roman Empire tremble. He advised to "give a reason for the hope entertained," and his apostolic colleague "exhorted" to "contend for the faith once delivered to the saints." In the restoration of the work of God in the latter days, the Lord commands: "Wherefore, confound your enemies; call upon them to meet you, both in public and in private; and inasmuch as ye are faithful, their shame shall be made manifest."—Doctrine and Covenants 71: 2. The Lord demands their strong reasons against him, and no weapon that is formed shall prosper. The prophet Isaiah speaking for God says: "Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the king of Jacob. Let them bring them forth, and show us what shall happen. Let them show the former things, what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter end of them."—Isaiah 41: 21, 22. It is the test of truth, and lies at the base of progress: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." No, we are not spoiling for debate. 'Tis an unpleasant duty betimes, our physical is weak, for the strain, but we see a sentiment being built up (small, however) that it is not just the thing to engage in discussion. The Brighamite hierarchy molded that sentiment a little while ago, and in attacking that position it favored the Reorganized Church, and wrought havoc for the Brighamites. As to time, it is more profitably spent in theological combat, than hunting a place for preaching, and failing, or being "closed out." It ought to be a matter of eagerness to present, for dissection, every principle avowed, when opportunity offers, and in every honorable and legitimate way. The world, for a long time, has said: "You are afraid to submit your system to public investigation," and shall we educate to the sentiment that it is true, and by so doing overturn the record made by the church in the past of a splendid triumph in the field of biblical discussion?

Hopefully,
S. W. L. SCOTT.

Editors Herald: Please allow me to say a few words in reply to Bro. V. M. Goodrich's letter in HERALD for November 16.

It appears to me as if Bro. Goodrich has misunderstood my motive in writing the letter referred to in HERALD, September 28. I have looked over the letter and do not see, as long as my views regarding these methods of raising money remained unchanged, anything to apologize for except it be that I dared to express an opinion as to what was right or wrong, being only a lay member.

I will quote all of the paragraph of which Bro. Goodrich quoted a part. "I love the church, and I love all the Saints, and do not set myself up as a judge, but feel it is my duty, and also my privilege, to condemn what I believe is wrong for the good of the whole body." Now what I have said and written regarding this is before the church, and if I have overstepped the boundry line of my duties and privileges I hope all of the officials who think so will freely tell me so. And if Bro. Goodrich will remember, I said in my letter: "I do not know exactly by what method they were selling those numbers [for the quilt] but it seemed very much to me like raffling, which is only a polite name for gambling." Then I condemned those methods, not merely in that one instance but everywhere, and every time, that to my mind appear to partake too much of the nature of gambling.

Now it remains for those who practice this method of selling by numbers "at ten cents each to their friends" to tell me either through the paper or privately wherein it differs from raffling. I would never allow my children to buy numbers on anything, although it is much practiced here, for to my mind it partakes so closely of the nature of gambling that I can not see the difference; if there is a difference I will be glad to be able to see it.

I would not willingly write one word to wound Bro. Goodrich nor any of the Saints who helped on the quilt, and am sorry he thinks I was striking at them. As to my judging—I think there is a vast difference between judging a person, and condemning a practice. To judge a person one should understand something of his motives, and I do not doubt in the least that the motive of every one engaged in that work was good and pure, nevertheless a wrong method may be employed to do a good work, and He who will judge us at last will look to the motives as well as the work, and he will know that my only motive in writing as I did was that Zion may be watchful, and keep herself "unspotted from the world."

No, I do not condemn without judging; I do judge those methods to be wrong, as I have seen them practiced here, therefore I condemn them; and things that I condemn in the orthodox churches and the so-called religious societies, can I condone in the church of Jesus Christ?

As to who hath made me a judge. Please remember I do not set myself to judge individuals; but the one who gave me his Spirit to guide me, hath also given me the right to judge whether a thing be right or wrong, and I have yet to learn that I have no right or no privilege to express my condemnation of what I think wrong. It seems to me I have as good a right to condemn what I think wrong as I have to approve of what I may think right. My judgment might be at fault in either case.

As to singing:

"We thank thee, O God, for a Prophet,
To guide us in these latter days,"

I hope always to be able to sing it, and I also hope to have enough of humility to be able to thank God for "good sisters" or "good brothers" either to point out the errors of my ways.

In what I wrote I did not mean any disrespect to the priesthood, which Bro. Goodrich seems to think I did by the quotation from Doctrine and Covenants. What was said in reply to "Questions and answers" in regard to these methods of raising money, viz.: "It is a local affair usually, and must come under the rule and lead of the majority in the branch or locality," etc., I do not consider that a prophetic statement, or as being given by inspiration, and can but feel it were better if there were no uncertain sound in regard to this matter. Had that been given by revelation it might have made a difference, but until I can know that God is well pleased with these methods, that to my way of looking at them seem wrong, I must still be of the same opinion.

I admire the poem Bro. Goodrich closes his letter with, and accept just as much of it as fits me. But if that was literally carried out, there would be no one left to point out errors, not even among the ministry, since none are free from faults or defects of some kind.

I sincerely hope all who may have been hurt by what I wrote will believe me when I say I meant to hurt no one's feelings, and that my prayer for all Saints as well as for myself, is that in all things we may be guided by the "wisdom from above," and be one indeed in Christ.

Yours for Zion's weal,
ALICE R. CORSON.

FAYETTE CITY, Pennsylvania, November 16, 1904.

Dear Herald: From memory I can not tell when nor where my last communication was prepared for your Letter Department. To be obsolete among the active participants of the restored gospel by angelic ministration, is no more desirable than to flow to the other extreme, and fulfill the trait, and the pungency of the adage: "Egot's names, like ugly faces are always seen in public places."

However, extremes are never safe ground to occupy, and lest we again fall under the reminder: "My servants have been harsh one with another," the better path to pursue is that of kindness and conservatism, yielding to every man his rightful place and honor, that the law of God provides.

I have a vivid recollection of attending the General Conference at Kirtland, and was of the thirty-eight to speak on the Graceland College resolution that occupied so much of the time of the quorums and the conference; and although with the majority of the speakers, I was with the minority of the voters, time will demonstrate if the proposed proposition was a wise one or not, and with Christian resignation I desire to truthfully say: "May that prevail which shall meet with the divine approval."

The severe attack of la grippe contracted while at Kirtland has left a monition of aches and ills that will not shake off, and while upon this topic, permit me to drop a word of advice to the Lamonians: Do not take down your heating-stoves until after the close of next General Conference.

Passing westward I saw in Ohio one plowman in the field, but in Indiana there were several at work, and in the Illinois fields the workmen seemed to be quite numerous, and still later, in Iowa, it had the appearance that the whole farming population had swarmed out to do the spring work. Having wearied myself in reading a daily newspaper and a Utah Mormon tract, I lapsed into a cogitative mood: The farmer is the primary producer of all wealth! the success of all other industries pivot upon the tillers of the soil! Yea! our continuance in mortality depends upon the supplies coming directly or indirectly from the rich storehouse of Mother Earth, as furnished to the hungry multitude by those whom our city cousins are pleased to call the "hay-seed aggregation."

Ah! when the farmer fails, stagnation spreads its blighting miasma over all other occupations and business. Without a doubt it was the wisest of counsel, both in spiritual and temporal concerns: "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." This scripture has proved an anchor to me amid trial, temptation, and loss, for many long years.

Not as a writer of new scripture, but upon the all-absorbing topic of our life—the gospel, we might freely translate: There is a time to plow, a time to plant, a time to nurture, and a time to gather into the fold. Have sought to be diligent and faithful in every way possible, but in watering I have had little success during the past few years.

Changes inevitable seem to come in all things earthly, and perhaps the same rule obtains in our ministerial labors. The time was with me once that so far as number of sermons, I was permitted to accomplish twice as much as at present, and as for baptizing, it will take a century at present rate to equal an annual report. I cogitate with a severe criticism: Am I in a state of deterioration, or has the work of gathering the acceptable out of the world been so near completed that there are few yet out of the ark of safety? At marriages I was master of ceremonies occasionally, but on that score it is now—nit. In bygone years when the HERALD published birth notices free, my blessing of children, earned for me the sobriquet: "The baby blessing!" Something however along that line has transpired—I have either lost my talent in that direction, or else my lot of late years has been cast where the crop is a little short.

On my home trip I stopped off for a short visit with the Saints of Burlington, found that the pastor, Elbert A. Smith, was absent, so at the urgent request of the Giesch family, and others, remained and occupied on the Lord's day. It was cheering to meet those kind-hearted Saints and friends once more, the greeting was such as loving children bestow upon a respected father upon his return from a far country. There is solid comfort and real satisfaction to possess the respect and confidence of the household of faith—those with whom we have labored and associated while seeking to plant gospel principles, to the uplifting and establishing the law of righteousness among the people. Sweet indeed is the bond that unites in one family, and in one purpose, those that love the Lord, and the evangel restored.

My abiding at Lamoni, in the discharge of necessary church duties, was prolonged far beyond my expectation. While waiting upon the motion of others, I attempted to be useful to the cause in whatever I was permitted to do. Spent about a week with my daughter at Cleveland, Iowa, and while there preached seven times to small congregations, also held forth the means and invitation of the Master to the erring to return to the fold and find rest and peace to their souls. Most of the brethren were absent on account of slackness of work in the mines.

Ill state of health, and frequent storm, and bad condition of roads, hindered a much-desired visit to Lucas and Norwood. I was also much disappointed in not having the privilege of visiting the Saints of Davis City, Ellston, and Evergreen, and several other places as per request. I hope that next spring it shall be more propitious for us.

With dear ones I spent a short time at Independence—"center spot" of Zion,—and while there, at the request of the stake authorities, occupied their pulpit one hot evening, as also assisting otherwise.

Spent a week at St. Louis, and on Sunday was at five meetings—Brn. Gomer T. Griffiths and Alexander H. Smith doing the preaching. Time forbade that I should gratify the numerous and urgent requests that I stop over and preach for them after an absence of more than thirty-six years. First missionary experience that required an absence from home and family was to St. Louis and vicinity, and the greeting by not a few was cordial and saintly. In company with Elder John Baird, went to the corner of Ninth and Market Streets, my old home, but oh what changes—the only object in that whole neighborhood that appeared natural was the old door, and the stone step that I spent many an hour upon away back in 1850. Those were the happy days of childhood, days of peace and pleasure departed for aye.

Spent two and a half days at the great exposition. I dare not intrude upon your space to enter into a detailed description of what I saw, and my chief regret was the lack of time and money, that I might have seen more, for to me it was indeed educational.

By reason of the Saints attending the World's Fair that I met, and observing the list of visitors furnished by the St. Louis correspondent of the Ensign, the thought came to my mind, if all the Saints who indulged themselves with the pleasure of attending the exposition would set apart an equal amount to that of their St. Louis exposition expenses to an endowment fund for the benefit of Graceland College, that church institution of education would soon be upon a stronger basis than ever before—and who is the true Saint that would be unwilling to sacrifice an amount for the Lord's work equal to that which they freely spend for personal pleasure?

Sickness, the summer's hot wave, and disappointment deprived me of much of my anticipated sight-seeing while at St. Louis.

Arrived in my field of labor July 23, and found change in the Pittsburg Branch! death and removal had been at work, and no Sunday evening services.

Spent a month up the Monongahela Valley, and at Fayette City, where the Saints have erected a neat little chapel, which was consecrated unto the worship of the Lord. Held the Sunday-school convention and the district conference there September 2 to 4, Brn. Fred M. Smith, U. W. Greene, L. D. Ullom, and the undersigned, of the General Conference appointees were present; also, a large delegation of visiting Saints.

Last February I baptized a sister from the Methodist church. The Smoot case was under investigation at the time. The newspapers were full of reports of the examination, and the ever ready opposer of the truth whispered to this new convert, "You have been misled and deceived. Your president has confessed to having five wives." Oh, the cunning and subtlety of the Devil! and the artfulness of his willing imps in using every means of deceit against the truth. In the closing sermon of the conference, Bro. Fred M. Smith told who he was, and gave a clear statement of the Smith family, setting forth the difference between the Utah church over which polygamous Joseph Fielding Smith presides, and our church over which monogamous Joseph Smith presides, and the sermon was a nail driven in a sure place, and resulted in good to our cause.

In company with Elder Robert Perrie, visited scattered Saints at Speers, Riverview, Bell Vernon, Naomi, Allenport, Hopwood, Highhouse, and Leith, preaching the word and instructing the Saints as best we could. At the latter place we held service at the home of Bro. Barnes, a colored member of the church, and following the sermon we had prayer-meeting; most all took an active part, and one statement by the brother of the house was to me both unique and attractive, namely: "I want to so live and behave myself, that at the uprising day I shall be worthy to remain with the Lord." That was a simple form of expressing confidence in the resurrection.

Returned here to look after necessary district work, and to help in the city as opportunity and privilege permitted. Was present at the "rally-day" exercises. Bro. U. W. Greene was not present as provided on the program. Uncle Sam neglected to safely carry the communication to him, so his absence was a disappointment to many, and caused the undersigned to be the Jonah of the occasion, and take part in each of the five services of the day. The audience for the morning was the largest we have had for more than a year, and was addressed by Bro. Charles E. Miller, who, at the close of the sermon, opened the water-gate and admitted two into the fold of the Christ. This is the first baptizing in the branch for eighteen months.

Notwithstanding that the branch has not held Sunday evening preaching for the past several months, I was richly blest with the Holy Spirit as I spake the word of the gospel, at fifteen minutes to eight in the evening, to the congregation of thirty-eight who gave the closest of attention.

There was raised, and promised, the sum of one hundred and eighty-four dollars upon the church debt. The raising of finance for any church purpose seems to be fraught with considerable hesitancy.

October 16, the baptismal font was again used, and Elder Charles E. Miller buried in the wave Bro. John E. Murdock. This young man is taking hold of the work with a commendable zeal and fervency of spirit.

District and branch authorities are constantly upon the anxious-seat as to how to keep the membership in the line of duty, and faithful to their covenant with the Lord.

In my humble opinion, a faithful, intelligent compliance of the following would relieve us of many troubles, and unify the Saints and grant the fruit of increased usefulness: "Wherefore I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Thou shalt not steal; neither commit adultery, nor kill, nor do anything like unto it. Thou shalt thank the Lord thy God in all things. Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness; even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit. And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord."

Were there a diligent observance of the above instruction by all upon whom it is binding, the millenium reign would soon displace strife and sin. As early as 1832, there obtained in the church a condition that was injurious to the body and displeasing unto God, so he counseled: "See that ye love one another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires; cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; cease to find fault one with another; cease to sleep longer than is needful; retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated; and above all things, clothe yourselves with the bonds of charity, as with a mantle, which is the bond of perfectness and peace; pray always, that you may not faint until I come; behold, and lo, I will come quickly, and receive you unto myself."

Never was instruction given to the church more fitting, and more applicable to existing conditions at the present time, than the above word of the Lord.

In large cities more than any place else is the practice of retiring late to bed, on Sunday not getting up in time to attend church; and this prevails among the young people to an alarming extent, and even ministers are guilty.

A reminder reads: "Be clean, be frugal, cease to complain of sin and sickness and distress of body; take sleep in the hours set apart by God for the rebuilding and strengthening of the body and mind; for even now there are some, even among the elders, who are suffering in mind and body, who have disregarded the advice of the Spirit to retire early and to rise early that vigor of mind and body should be retained."

To me it is surprisingly strange that those who possess the books of the church, and have a partial knowledge of their teaching, and from time to time confess a love for the cause of truth, should still continue to live contrary to the instruction of inspiration.

During my labors in the Nauvoo District, I visited one neighborhood where there was an organized Sunday social society, and their meetings and dinners were reciprocal, alternating every Sunday from one farmhouse to another. In that community it was well-nigh impracticable to hold religious services on the Lord's day, for they could not miss the dinner, and were too tired in the evening to attend church. But Iowa does not hold a proprietary right upon the Sunday visiting business. Perhaps this same thing is of ancient origin, and militated against the gospel in the days of Paul, for he wrote: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is;" and we would adopt as our own view and expression: "but exhorting one another: and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." This is penned for good, notwithstanding the possibility of being misunderstood; for I call to mind a brother who gave an offence unintentionally, and in apologizing he stated: "I have a mean way of saying mean things." And methought perhaps when I see that which is unbecoming, I do not employ the wisest and most euphonic language to express my disapprobation, to win the erring to the path of duty and divine acceptance.

Since the clash of arms betwixt Japan and Russia, I have tried to keep apace with the history of events, and there is one thing that has not escaped my notice: Russia is considered a Christian nation, and the general trend of the newspapers of Christian, liberty-loving America is to strongly sympathize with the "little brown" heathen. Many of the Russian people are blaming the Jews, as causing their lack of success against the Japs, and perhaps it is true; but the poor Jew has suffered fearfully on account of the harsh treatment and cruelty received in the land of the czars.

There is a theory entertained by a few writers that the Japanese are the house or tribe of Ephraim, and that they are now fulfilling: "Thou art my battle-ax and weapons of war: for with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms."

Whether the theories of men be chimerical, or true, the safest thing for Saints is to comply with: "But my disciples shall stand in holy places, and shall not be moved." Without doubt we are living in a time that God is at work in the whole earth, and we are nearing the end.

Of late I have been sensitively impressed, and have so exhorted the Saints, that we should have our life hid with Christ in God.

Sunday, the 6th, we had five meetings in Pittsburg, and three youths put on Christ in baptism. In time may they be useful to the cause, and ultimately win the crown that fadeth not away.

District work brought me here, and I assisted in the branch services as I could.

My correspondents will please be patient with me; the "all-needful" is a little low, and, notwithstanding the late political landslide, the postmasters continue to tax us face value for stamps.

Say! but that must have been a record-breaking "big" vote that Isaac cast down in Missouri,—the echo reached here!

Since my majority, this was the first presidential election that I did not vote. In fact, I did not see a parade, listen to a speech, or hear a man hurrah for his favorite candidate; and I neither murmur, nor am I displeased with the result.

Editors Herald: In company with A. E. Madison, we came to this place yesterday from Tecumseh, where in company with J. W. Waldsmith we held some very profitable meetings. During our stay there we baptized three, and also made arrangements to hold our next district conference at that place, also the Sunday-school convention.

We have a very enthusiastic little band of Saints at Tecumseh, and I feel sure they will do all they can to make our coming conference a success. And by holding the conference there I feel sure that our work will be more prominently brought before the people. Bro. W. F. D. Brandon, in behalf of the Saints, at Tecumseh, extends a hearty invitation to all the Saints to attend.

From here Bro. Madison and myself will go to Wilber, Nebraska, and from there I will go westward toward Fairfield and Franklin. The work at this place, South Auburn, is moving along nicely and there are prospects of more uniting with the church. Bro. Madison is doing good work here, and I believe that a permanent foundation has been laid here for the work.

Bro. C. H. Porter has been busily engaged in the work at a place called Cairo, north of Shelton, Nebraska, and, from what we can learn, has been sowing the gospel seed with a liberal hand. We pray that God may give the desired increase. Bro. Waldsmith has been busily engaged in the duties of his office, and has done well.

The work in this field seems to be moving along reasonably well, considering the limited missionary force we have here. The policy we have pursued this year has been to break up new ground only so much as we thought we could keep properly cultivated. And we now feel somewhat gratified to realize that our policy has proved a good one. But this field certainly offers the greatest amount of inducement to the missionary in the way of new openings of any field that I have ever labored in. And I hope that the missionary force for this field will be much increased another year.

I trust that the ministry and all the Saints everywhere will be blessed much, that soon the long-looked-for Zion will be a realization.

HANNIBAL, Missouri, November 18, 1904.

Editors Herald: Hannibal is situated on the "Father of Waters" in Marion County, about nineteen miles south of Quincy, Illinois, being on the west bank of the river. Its population is rated at twelve thousand, seven hundred and eighty, and out of this number about fifteen are Latter Day Saints. They still have the name of a branch organization, but are in a disorganized condition, not having any meetings only when a missionary calls on them; and at no time all of them attending. They have not had a meeting in five months, and the thought arises, "Does it pay to let Saints in a disorganized condition go so long without spiritual food, in trying to get the gospel before those of the world?" But very little can be done here in a missionary way, but there certainly is a necessity for pastoral work; and where there are no officers in a branch to do the work—who should do it? One of the unfortunate features of the work in the district is that half of the branches are in a disorganized condition, and Satan is taking advantage of the condition in each branch and causing trouble, with baneful effects, detrimental to the work in general to that extent that it is very difficult to get any one not of the church interested in the gospel. One of the worst features is that some of the evil is condoned by false manifestations which are misleading the ones involved and weakening the faith and confidence of other Saints. Much of this could be avoided by prompt pastoral work, good judgment, and proper discernment. The 6th inst. we closed a two weeks' meeting held in the Methodist church three miles southwest of Shelby, —Bro. G. G. Laughlin and wife, and mother, residing in the locality, secured the church and cared for it, and assisted in other ways which were appreciated by your writer. They are good, practical Saints, and interested in the work, and in the salvation of their fellowmen. They came from Mahaska County, Iowa. May they prosper in their new home is my hope for them. They pronounced the meeting a success, and said the attendance and interest and feelings of the people were all they could ask for at the first hearing.

Our district conference held at Higbee in October was in some respects a very good conference, a fine spirit prevailing all the way through. However, I could not help thinking of a statement made by the President of the church at the opening of a General Conference a few years ago, when he said, "We are here to do business, and not to make business." Saints, is that not applicable to our district conferences too? If we have no business to transact then our time should be spent more profitably than trying to make business.

On Sunday evening I will say the words which will make the hearts of Bro. Henry Huddleson and Miss Ollie Turner beat as one. Bro. Henry is a model young man and will get a fine girl, of which he is worthy. May the dove of peace continually abide with them.

Next week I will leave here to join Bro. D. E. Tucker at Bevier, from where we will go to the north part of the district to work in Putnam and Sullivan Counties. The Saints of Bevier are getting along nicely with their new church, and while it has been suggested in a letter to HERALD, some time ago, from there, that help from others would be appreciated, as one member of that branch permit me to say that I believe the Saints there will be able in the time figured on by the building committee to meet every financial obligation, whether those of other branches help or not; and if memory does not fail me there were ten of the committee instead of just a "hustling three" mentioned, and if seven of them are not working and hustling it is no fault of theirs. Honor to all is fair.

The weather down this way is exceedingly fine, and the roads are dry and very dusty; and notwithstanding so much rain the past summer, some are complaining of empty cisterns. I see there are a few families of Saints moving into this district. We are glad to see them come, and the eighteen counties of the district will hold many more. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Yours in the gospel bonds,

J. A. TANNER.

GOTEBORG, Sweden, November 7, 1904.

Editor Herald: No doubt many of my brethren and friends are waiting to hear from me, and from this part of the Lord's work. I have not had much of interest to write about before. I had a very nice trip across the ocean, and half of the way over the North Sea. I had the privilege of preaching on deck of the steamer, Calypso, on Sunday forenoon, July 10, to one hundred and fifty or two hundred Swedish-Americans, and was invited to talk in the afternoon again, but a storm prevented. I am laboring at present in the city of Goteborg, from house to house, wherever I am invited. If I had the means to rent a hall I am satisfied of success, for the people want to learn, when they find out that we preach against polygamy and such things. They who have heard the Mormons are curious to find out how we can get out of it, because they have books and tracts that apparently show from the Bible that it was original. I have purchased their books and use them, and the Lord blesses me in defending the Seer. I also got a copy of their Doctrine and Covenants in the Danish language, of the fourth edition, 1864, and there is no revelation on polygamy in it but it has the marriage covenant as found in the Lamoni edition, and it helps a good deal to clear up their evils.

Before I left the States I promised to go up in Wermland. That part of the country joins Norway. I was well received there. Several who heard me in Michigan had advertised ahead, so the people gathered from miles around to hear, and, with few exceptions, were well pleased, and invited me to come again. From there I went to the south part of Sweden where Bro. C. A. Swanson lives. There I was very well cared for. May the good Lord reward them for their kindness to me. It will take longer to work up an interest there than in the other places I have been. We held seventeen meetings there, baptized Sr. Swanson, blessed the baby, and ordained Bro. Swanson to the office of priest by direction of Bro. Peter Anderson, missionary in charge.

Having a chance to visit some of the Mormons in Helsingborg we got the address of one who had been a member of our church but had been converted to the Mormons. I found him and we had a good talk, and I believe there will be another apostate family of Mormons. He is going to the States in the spring, and wants to attend General Conference at Lamoni.

Brethren and sisters in America, you who have been acquainted with me and have known my anxiety for my nationality, that the gospel may be preached all over this country, here are many good people who are hungering and thirsting for righteousness; but on account of lack of missionaries and means are not permitted to hear the fullness of the gospel. We have to use the Mormons' books because we have none translated into the Swedish language, and it is not pleasant to preach about the Book of Mormon, and not be able to produce the book. You who feel like helping this mission, Bro. Peter Anderson's address is Stanberry, Missouri.

I have held sixty meetings and baptized and confirmed nine, and others are near the door. We have organized a Sabbath-school of seventeen members, and expect more for next Sunday. We hold it in a private house, but as soon as we are able and strong enough we will rent a hall. Rent is high, and we are all poor, but we hope and pray for better times to come.

To the Saints at Boardman Branch I would say we are having such meetings as we used to have at home in days gone by. Please remember me when you feel you are very near the throne of God, that I may have strength to overcome the trials and temptations of life, and to God be all the praise. Ever praying for the advancement of the Master's work, I remain,

Your brother in bonds,

JOHN H. HANSON.

MINDEN CITY, Michigan, November 14, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have felt that we, as mothers, should strive more than we do to refrain from using useless and idle words, in our every-day lives. I have in mind a time, when I used an idle word, one I had not been in the habit of using; and one of my boys, then quite young, has often referred to it; and I have been reminded of the mistake many times. Let us, brothers and sisters, strive to refrain from it altogether; for of what use is it? When I was a girl my mother used to tell me to always keep good company. So let us refrain from keeping company with idle words and slang phrases; and let us be found following that Spirit that leadeth us to do good continually. Let us strive to take Jesus for our example, and to live very near to him; and we will have no use for such things. Let us cleanse the temples of our bodies that we may have his Spirit as an abiding comforter; for we are told that his Spirit will not dwell in unholy temples. Jesus said, "If you love me, keep my commandments." I would say to all fathers and mothers in the church, Teach your children the way of truth and life while they are young and of tender years and are more easily taught. And I would ask my brothers and sisters in the church to pray for me and mine that our feet may be found walking that narrow path that leads to life everlasting, and that I may set an example that will be worthy of imitation; and that I may be enabled to teach my little ones to become loyal citizens of the kingdom of Jesus Christ. I can say that I have been wonderfully helped in reading the HERALD and I thought perhaps I might write something that would be a help to others, hence this effort.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. L. M. YEAGER.

UBLY, Michigan, November 16, 1904.

Dear Herald: We appreciate your weekly visits and enjoyed so much the sermon that was in the last HERALD, preached by Elder J. W. Wight. We belong to the St. Gideon Branch, which has fifty-three members; have meeting every Sunday at Elder William Davis' house. Not as many of the Saints of the branch attend as we would like to see; but those that do attend are well paid for their effort from time to time; as our kind Savior does own and bless us by his Holy Spirit, which causes us to rejoice. How nice it would be if all the Saints would put forth as great an effort as possible to meet together often, as we are commanded to do, that by so doing we might gain greater strength. Truly I can say God does own and bless his children richly when they try with all their might, mind, and strength to serve him. It will be thirteen years the 16th of next March since I obeyed the gospel. Never since then have I regretted the step I took. I have tried to live the best I could, and am very thankful for the many blessings I have received since then, although, in looking back over my past life, I can see where I could have improved much. Last August my husband and I had our patriarchal blessings given by Elder J. J. Bailey; they are indeed a great comfort to us.

Dear Saints, let us not neglect secret prayer, as I think it is one of the greatest duties we owe to God, as in that way we gain strength from day to day that we can not otherwise gain. In the time past I have been a little slack in that regard, not willingly, but it crept in unawares and many blessings have been lost. But I am thankful that when we come to God with a true heart he will forgive, and own us by his Spirit, which will help us to bear the trials of this life.

How glorious it will be when all the faithful shall meet where all trials will be over. Ever praying for all the Saints, and all of the honest in heart, I remain,

Your sister in bonds,

MRS. JOSEPH W. O'BRIEN.

Extracts from Letters.

Advices from Bro. R. C. Evans, Treherne, Manitoba, show him at work in that Province and in Assiniboia. He wrote November 17: "I spent my last Sunday in London; St. Thomas Saints down to the number of twenty-one; church full all day, and we had an excellent time. Early Monday I started for Toronto, met with the presiding elder and the teacher of the branch, blessed one child, and administered to some of the sick people; then with Bro. J. L. Mortimer was off for Winnipeg. After leaving Gravenhurst we saw little but rocks, mountains of stone hundreds of feet high; then on the level places the land covered with flat rock, the country dotted with small lakes, several rivers, and many creeks; timber scarce, scrub-oak, white-birch, and jack-pine. The first town of note was Fort William, incorporated in 1892. Here elevators store the millions of bushels of wheat from this granary of the world; here all the oils, coal, and other eastern products are stored as supplies for the great Northwest. Reached Winnipeg after two nights' sleep in our seats, fed by the good lunch prepared by Sr. Faulds. We found a few Saints with whom we enjoyed rest and welcome. Winnipeg is a city of thirty-six thousand people, wide streets, the main ones of which are paved with either cedar blocks, or asphaltum, the sidewalks granolithic, or cement; the public buildings large and beautiful; banks, stores, and many residences equal to those in eastern cities. Reaching Treherne we found thirty-five Saints, twenty of whom had been baptized by Bro. Knisley since his arrival, several of them in fair circumstances, most of them from Ontario, a few from the States. We organized a branch last Sunday, the 13th, held prayer- and testimony- and sacrament-meeting. I preached twice that day, then ferried the Assiniboin River through the floating ice. Did not get to bed till half past one in the morning, tired but happy. Have preached to full houses each night this week. I seem to fit here. The wealthiest Methodist in the settlement, a trustee of their church, decided that I should preach in their building. I consented to do so; some of the Methodists roared and locked the church, but my friend found a key, opened the door, and I preached on the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith for two hours. Several outsiders gave me money, and things look bright. I baptize to-day at ten o'clock. We leave here Friday morning; shall visit five more places and do all the good I can. Expect to return home December 24. Bro. J. L. Mortimer is well liked. His influence is good. He is a plain talker and is willing to labor and make the sacrifices necessary. I expect to be at Weyburn, Assiniboia, from November 29 to December 26."

W. H. Mannering, Beardstown, Illinois, writes: "Bro. M. R. Shoemaker baptized three persons in Beardstown last Sunday, two of whom are children belonging to the Sunday-school."

J. Wahlstrom, Deering, North Dakota, writes: "Please mention in the HERALD that a brother in Chicago wrote me about shipping of stock, but the letter was lost so I can not answer."

Bro. I. N. White writing November 21, 1904: "I am at Scranton, Kansas, attending the Northeastern Kansas District conference. Things going pleasantly. Reports show the work in fair condition in some localities. Much lethargy found among some of the branches. It seems to be a sleepy time with some. I have great hopes of reviving interest in some places ere I go east. I go further west Tuesday, contemplating organizing two branches, one in Northeastern and one in Northwestern Kansas District if I find it wise to do so when on the grounds where organization is asked for. Have been much blessed in preaching the word, and advising the Saints how to live the better life.

Convention Minutes.

Northwestern Kansas.—Sunday-school met at Gaylord, Kansas, November 18, 1904, at 3.15 p. m. Bro. S. J. Madden chairman, Sr. Cora Cook secretary. Secretary and treasurer's report read. Amount of money on hand $1.88. Reports from three Sunday-schools, Rural Dale, Mount Hope, and Zion's Hope read, also report of program committee, Sr. Cora Cook. At 7.30 an interesting program was rendered. Adjourned till the Friday before next conference at 2.30 p. m.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry of the New York and Philadelphia District; Greeting: Inasmuch as the district has placed the presidency of the same upon me, I desire to reach all of the brethren of the priesthood, and the best means of doing so seems to be through the medium of the SAINTS HERALD, and other periodicals of the church, as I presume each member of the ministry is in touch with at least one of the church papers, and consequently will receive this message through its instrumentality. At the present time I am not personally known to all my brethren in this corner of the Lord's vineyard, but I feel an intense desire to get in communication with all whether branch or district officers, and especially with those of the ministry who do not report direct to any branch or district within our jurisdiction, irrespective of whether they are actively engaged in the work at present or not; so that a better understanding may prevail in the future, and all may work in harmony and be collaborators with God in the salvation of the honest in heart.

Since the New York and Philadelphia Districts have been joined, the field is large, and there is room enough for every minister to labor according to his ability and calling, especially those who seek earnestly for the spirit of their calling which I earnestly urge every one to do; and I feel sure that the way will be opened for usefulness in the Master's cause. Personally, I feel very hopeful for the future of the district. Bro. F. M. Smith's recent visit to Brooklyn was very much needed; he made it quite interesting to a number of the priesthood, the writer included, during his short sojourn with us; and the extent of his important work probably will never be known until the books are opened.

The best way to show our appreciation of his kind and brotherly advice is to heed the same. We thank our heavenly Father for men like Bro. Smith. May the angels go before him in his mission, and the Spirit of his office continue to be with him, is my prayer. To that part of the district Bro. Smith has visited I have no need to advise priesthood meetings, but those who have not been so privileged, I ask you for the works' sake and for the salvation of souls to meet in council at least every month to save misunderstandings and damage to the church, and to obtain a concert of action. Please let me hear from all of the branches if possible, so that I may know of your welfare and also your need of help. If such conditions prevail we have Elder F. G. Pitt as our missionary in the district, and he has expressed himself as being willing to help us all he possibly can. If the branches, or the brethren living away from branches could make proper appointments for him to labor amongst them he will be pleased to do so as far as possible.

And how, dear brethren, that we may have heart-cheering reports at next conference, let us labor together as God's servants, so that the blessing of heaven may attend our labors. I would suggest to the brethren not laboring in branch work, and especially those living where there is no branch, to open up the work by the distribution of tracts and other publications, and make openings for preaching the gospel by those who have expressed themselves willing to help you. Please write as soon as possible, and I can assure you there will be no lack of effort on my part to render all the assistance I possibly can.

Bro. H. H. Bacon, of Philadelphia, is my associate president, and every one living nearer to him may write him and I am sure he will assist them all he can. I am sure you have the full consent and coöperation of both of us. May the good Spirit assist us in our united effort is my prayer.

Your collaborator and brother in the gospel of peace,

GEORGE POTTS.

167 Cooper Street, BROOKLYN, New York, Nov. 12, 1904.

To the Saints in the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District; greeting: I have a great desire to visit all parts of the district, and more especially all the branches, this fall and winter, giving all assistance I possibly can in forwarding and building up the work of the Master in these parts. The district is a very large one, covering all of the Indian Territory south of Arkansas River, several counties in Southwest Arkansas, and the greater part of Northeast Texas, extending as far west as Wise and Hood Counties.

Bro. A. Z. Rudd, my associate in district work, will be with me, a part of the time at least, and we want to visit the branches in Northeast Texas about the first of December, and continue our journey into Arkansas. I would be pleased to hear from presidents of branches throughout the district, as to their need of ministerial work. My home address is Holdenville, Indian Territory, where a letter will reach me at any time.

I also wish to notify the Saints that I am acting for Bro. Ellis Short, bishop of our district, in the capacity of agent, and will gladly receive and receipt for any moneys you wish to pay in as tithing or free-will offering, etc. I am aware of the fact that the whole district has been blessed with good crops this year, and numbers have told me that they intend to honor the financial law of the church this fall, which we are all convinced is just as essential as any other principle of the gospel. Send by money order or bank check to me at Holdenville, Indian Territory, and a receipt to you will be forthcoming.

Yours for truth,

T. J. SHEPPARD, District President.

RELEASE OF MISSIONARY.

By agreement between Bro. I. N. White, missionary in charge, and Elder J. C. Vaughn, and upon reasons assigned by Bro. Vaughn which Bro. White deems sufficient, Elder Vaughn is released from appointment to labor in the Nodaway, Missouri, District. Release concurred in by the Presidency.

JOSEPH SMITH, for the Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, November 22, 1904.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Western Nebraska and Black Hills Mission: As it is impossible for me to see you all I take this method of asking you to remit to me in tithes and offerings as the Lord has blessed you. You know the elders' families must have something to live on, as well as ourselves, and they must be supplied with means to do so from the tithe receipts. So please, dear Saints, do not forget to send in to me your much or little as it may be. Remember every little helps. By the time you read this I will be two months behind on the elders families' allowance in this field, so please let me hear from you. Address me at Nebraska City, Nebraska.

Yours in bonds,

R. O. SELF, Bishop's Agent.

Bazaar Notice.

Will the sisters who have been working for the Christmas bazaar, to be given by the Daughters of Zion connected with the local organization at Lamoni, please notice that the same will be held on Friday and Saturday, December 16 and 17, and kindly forward all donations at an early day to Mrs. M. B. Nicholson, Lamoni, Iowa.

Notices.

To the Members of the Northern California District: A number of copies of The Old Jerusalem Gospel, Bro. Luff's book of twenty-nine sermons, have been placed at my disposal to be distributed for missionary purposes. You can preach twenty-nine eloquent sermons, without being ordained, by procuring one or more copies of this book to loan to your inquiring neighbor. Branches may obtain a number and place them in charge of a committee. These books can be obtained by sending cost of freight and expressage—about eight cents per copy; or a number at some less rate. Send at once for as many as you can use.

J. M. TERRY.

1219 Chestnut Street, OAKLAND, California.

Convention Notices.

The convention of the Southern Nebraska District Sunday-school will convene January 13, 1905, at Tecumseh, Nebraska. We ask those interested in Sunday-school work to make an effort to attend. And Saints will please take notice to call for W. F. D. Branden; ask Mr. Brock, the ticket agent, he will inform you. Adolph E. Madison, superintendent.

Died.

GARNER.—Rollin Wrymarion, youngest child of Bro. J. P. and Sr. Hattie Garner, "passed beyond" November 12, after an illness of two years. Funeral-services from the Magnolia, Iowa, chapel. Sermon by Elder Alma M. Fyrando, assisted by R. C. Chambers, on Sunday the 13th. The church decorations, floral tributes, and large concourse of friends, bespoke deep sympathy for the bereaved parents, who have thus surrendered up three of their four children. They are treasures in the paradise of God.

New Timber Seasoning Stations.

The Bureau of Forestry has recently signed an agreement to make extensive timber seasoning tests in two Western States, in cooperation with two telegraph and telephone companies. Experimental stations will be located at Marinette, Wisconsin, and Escanaba, Michigan; and probably a third station will be established at Ashland, Wisconsin. The expense of the experiments will be borne jointly by the Bureau and the companies. Cedar and tamarack telephone and telegraph poles will be furnished by the state of Wisconsin free of cost, and two railroad companies have agreed to haul them to the experiment stations without charge for freight.

The object of the experiments is to determine how many years can be added to the life of each pole by proper seasoning. Since millions upon millions of poles are used along telegraph and telephone lines, even one year's extra service for each pole will amount to a tremendous saving in expense. Unseasoned cedar poles last from twelve to fifteen years. Seasoning experiments have shown how to increase this time by three or four years, and it is now expected to improve on this increase. Past methods of seasoning have effected a drying out of twenty per cent of the original weight of the poles. The better seasoned the pole, the less chance there is for decay, which is promoted by moisture.

Such experiments are of large importance not only to telegraph and telephone companies, but to all users of heavy timbers which come in contact with the ground, at which line decay gets in its most deadly work. It is believed that still greater economies can be secured by the use of proper methods of preservative treatment. The latter is a subject which the Bureau of Forestry has for some time been investigating, as set forth in its Bulletin No. 41, "Seasoning of Timber," and other publications. Further bulletins dealing with different aspects of the same problem will be issued later.

The December Arena is a superb number, strong, varied, and interesting, with several art features which will be a delight to the readers. It appears in a new and striking cover, and contains four full-page illustrations, giving the portraits of Secretary Tregear, Joaquin Miller, Professor Edwin Maxey and B. O. Flower. There is also a full-page original drawing by Dan. Beard, some half-tone pictures of Joaquin Miller, and a number of reproductions of the best current cartoons. Perhaps the papers that will attract the most attention are "How New Zealand is solving the problem of popular government," by the Honorable Edward Tregear, Secretary of Labor for New Zealand. This is the opening paper in the Arena's series of international contributions on progressive democratic movements in foreign lands by eminent statesmen, economists, and educators. "Inhuman treatment of prisoners in Massachusetts," by Doctor G. W. Galvin, physician-in-chief of the Boston Emergency Hospital, is a startling arraignment supported by numerous affidavits by former officials and prisoners. "The phychoogy of the lynching mob," by Dean Richmond Babbitt, LL. D., is a profoundly interesting and valuable paper, and "A public servant discharged," a detailed description of what we believe to be the first instance of the exercise of the Imperative Mandate or Popular Recall in America, is a contribution of special interest. Another paper that will call forth much discussion is a strong plea for the union between the Freemasons and the Knights of Columbus written by M. F. O'Donoghue and L. J. Young, Withee. "Christ and the world to-day" is a thoughtful, religious contribution by Professor Leon C. Prince of Dickinson College. "The immigration bugbear," by Ernest Crosby, "The strategical history of the Russo-Japanese War to date," by Professor Edwin Maxey, and "The assertiveness of self," by Doctor Charles C. Abbott, are also papers of more than ordinary interest. The general readers will be interested in Mr. Flower's life of Joaquin Miller which is illustrated and is probably the most complete sketch of the "Poet of the Sierras" that has ever appeared, while Doctor Herman E. Kittredge's exceptionally beautiful prose poem entitled "The seasons" will delight alike lovers of Nature and those who enjoy the beautiful in literature. One of the strong and interesting features of this issue is the opening chapter of Joaquin Miller's serial story, "The building of the city beautiful." It is a romance in which the love element is very strong, though subordinated to high ethical ideals, and a prose poem which is deeply religious in the broadest and best sense of the term. The story interest is strong throughout, and as literature it is superior to most of the social visions.

Terms are one-fourth down, the balance in four annual payments, with six per cent interest. ### FALSEHOODS AND MISREPRESENTATIONS BY THE "GOSPEL MESSENGER."

Bro. W. E. Messenger, of Prescott, Iowa, sends us copies of the Gospel Messenger for November 5, 12, 19, and 26, 1904, in which is a series of articles on Mormonism by one Charles M. Yearout, of Christiansburg, Virginia. The Gospel Messenger is a periodical published at Elgin, Illinois, by the German Baptist Brethren, the Brethren Church, or the Dunkards, as they may respectively be called, bearing across its front page the motto: "Set for the defense of the gospel," Philippians 1: 17.

The following is its declaration of beliefs as taken from the number for November 26:

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER.

A weekly religious journal, sixteen large pages, is published in the interest of the Brethren Church, and is the only church paper published by the authority of the conference. Price one dollar and fifty cents per annum.

It most earnestly pleads for a return to the apostolic order of worship and practice.

It holds that the Bible is a divinely-inspired book, and recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice for the people of God.

It also holds to the doctrine of the Trinity; teaches future rewards and punishment, and emphasizes the importance of a pure, holy, and upright life before God and man.

It maintains that only those who remain faithful until death have the promise of eternal life;

That Faith, Repentance, and Baptism are conditions of pardon, and hence for the remission of sins;

That Trine Immersion or dipping the candidate three times face-forward is Christian Baptism;

That Feet-washing, as taught in John 13, is a divine command to be observed in the church;

That the Lord's Supper is a meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening, or after the close of the day;

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ;

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ;

That a Nonconformity to the world in daily walk, dress, customs and conversation is essential to true holiness and Christian piety.

It maintains that in public worship, or religious exercises, Christians should appear as directed in 1 Corinthians 11: 4, 5.

It also advocates the scriptural duty of Anointing the sick with oil in the name of the Lord.

In short, it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe. Send for sample copy.

ATTENTION is called to a page of "Christmas gifts" in this issue. What could be more appropriate to give to a friend or loved one than some of the church publications?

"I HAVE told you," says Southey, in one of his letters, "of the Spaniard who always put on his spectacles when about to eat cherries, that they might look bigger and more tempting. In like manner, I make the most of my enjoyments, and pack away my troubles in as small a compass as I can." I should like to read this letter of Southey's to the society girl who worried because she had forgotten what she was to worry about. "I'm awfully worried this morning," she said to a friend. "Why, what is the matter?" asked the latter, in sympathetic tones. "Oh, I thought of something to worry about last night, and now I can't remember what it is!"

In his letter accompanying the papers and calling attention to the articles, Bro. Messenger says:

Not that anything new was brought out, but because I do not remember of ever seeing, since I have been in the church, any article of the same length with more lies and misrepresentations crowded into it and more venom and general cussedness expressed—Braden may be more vulgar, but I think not more vicious.

It is because of this comment and the fact that upon examination of the articles referred to there is good ground to believe Bro. Messenger's estimate is correct, that we call attention of the HERALD readers to what this writer has to state. To show the caliber of the writer we have only to state that he says Joseph Smith was born at Sharon, "Windham" County, Vermont. It shows that his reading has been only desultory and his memory not to be relied upon, as Sharon is in Windsor County, not "Windham" County. He gives the statement respecting the vision of the Seer and his finding the plates and the translation of them very fairly, with the exception that he states that during the three years after the vision the Seer lived a wicked life, associating with evil companions and gratifying carnal lusts and appetites. In the statement he at least does the Seer justice in this respect, that he does not charge him with idleness.

In making the statement of the opposing element as history, he brings into the account that worn-out prevarication, the Spalding romance. He does it in the following words:

Solomon Spaulding, a broken-down Presbyterian preacher, wrote a romance of the aborigines of this country during the years 1810 to 1816, called "Manuscript Found." The above manuscript is taken to Patterson's printing office for publication. Said manuscript gets into Sidney Rigdon's hands, who with Joseph Smith makes certain changes in the Spaulding manuscript, and Smith has it published as a divine revelation from God, and palmed it off on the people as the everlasting gospel. Rigdon foretold much of the new order of things in his preaching while a Disciple minister before the Book of Mormon was published. It is a demonstrated fact that the Spaulding "Manuscript Found" is identical in many respects with the Book of Mormon.

The damaging clause in this statement is the very clever assumption that "it is a demonstrated fact that the Spaulding 'Manuscript Found' is identical in many respects with the Book of Mormon." This brands the statement as false and entirely unworthy of credence and shows the temper and misinformation of the writer, as no such demonstration has ever occurred, and is, besides, entirely and utterly impossible, as may be ascertained by the officers of this self-appointed guardian "set for the defense of the gospel," if they will but take the pains to visit the archives of Oberlin College, Ohio, and there examine the only Solomon Spaulding Manuscript ever brought to the light of publicity and identified.

It is passing strange that men of the pious character assumed by and for these German Baptist Brethren or Dunkards should so far forget the characteristics of the profession they have chosen as to be guilty of such falsehood and misrepresentation.

Of this Spalding Manuscript idea, the writer, Mr. Yearout, says:

I have given a brief history of both sides as to how the Book of Mormon was brought into existence. And I am confident that the latter position is the correct one.

He further states that in 1831 Smith received a revelation that the church should remove to Kirtland, Ohio, and some time afterward received another revelation that the Mormon Zion should be located in Jackson County, Missouri; that the Mormon Temple was to be built in Independence and dedicated by Joseph Smith; and that the Mormons were driven out of Missouri after much trouble and bloodshed, notwithstanding Mr. Smith's prophecies to the contrary. He next states that the Mormon God led his people into Illinois, where they founded Nauvoo and built a temple, and that here the Prophet, Hiram the Patriarch, his brother, and other leading Mormons were imprisoned and all, except perhaps one, were killed in jail.

This Mr. Yearout seems to have read to little purpose, or he would not have made such a mistake as this, when the history shows that there were but two killed in jail, those two being the Prophet and Hyrum, his brother, and that there were but two others in the jail at the time.

Mr. Yearout crowds the history of the succession of President Brigham Young, the exodus from Illinois, the settlement in Utah, and the organization of the Reorganized Church all into a single paragraph, and confounding the Reorganization with the Utah people, says of the whole:

The Mormons are a great missionary people. Their growth in numbers is owing to their untiring efforts in missionary fields. Most of their additions come from dissatisfied members of other churches.

This is the first installment of the articles as given by the writer under the head of "Origin and history of Mormonism."

In his second article Mr. Yearout treats of the faith and practice of the people whom he styles "Mormons." In his opening paragraph he makes a very fair presentation of a portion of the belief and organization, missing it in this wise: He places the official body as President and Vice-president when no such officer as Vice-president is known to either body of which he is attempting to write. He further states: "If an officer incurs the displeasure of the President he is deposed and his office is given to another." This is a mistake, as no person properly called and installed in office can be broken of such office except upon cause properly presented before a tribunal of his peers and a conviction upon proper charge for transgression or offense against the body politic sufficient to warrant his deposition.

He presumes to state further as follows:

Every Mormon is required to accept Joseph Smith as a divinely-appointed prophet of God, and must believe in and accept the Book of Mormon as the everlasting gospel, and believe in the Mormon church as the only true church on the face of the earth.

He adroitly uses a partial quotation from the Book of Covenants section 1:30 (paragraph 5 in Lamoni edition), the part chosen by him being the portion in the middle of the fifth paragraph, as follows:

The only true and living church on the face of the whole earth, with which I, the Lord, am well pleased.

Here the writer closes his quotation at a comma, in our book, but fails to add what follows after the semicolon, viz.:

Speaking unto the church collectively and not individually; for I, the Lord, can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; nevertheless, he that repents and does the commands of the Lord shall be forgiven; and he that repents not, from him shall be taken even the light which he has received, for my Spirit shall not always strive with man, saith the Lord of hosts.

If this reverend gentleman were as honest as from his profession of being one of the Primitive Brethren Church would warrant the readers of the Gospel Messenger in believing, he would not thus have misrepresented what is as clear a truth as was ever uttered by human lips or penned by human pen, and being such, is the truth of God. But if he had quoted the whole, it would have taken the sting out of his flippant statement that every Mormon is required to accept Joseph Smith as a divinely-appointed prophet of God. This the spirit of misrepresentation would not allow him to do, and it seems to us a foregone conclusion that whenever and wherever any of these reverend gentlemen who have set themselves as defenders of the faith make any reference whatever to Mormonism, the spirit of untruth, misrepresentation, and bigoted hatred stands by to prevent them from giving opponents their just due, and will not let them tell the truth. We regret this in the instance before us, for the reason that we have ever been impressed with the strong sense of righteousness which has characterized so many of these Dunkard Brethren. We long have known that what are recognized as Protestant denominations were so vitiated by the bigotry of long-established opinion and dogma that they would not give credit to newer classes of believers, however honest they might be; but we have looked for these self-denying, rather ascetic believers to be fair and to give room for those who might honestly differ from them in religious conclusions.

Here is another instance in which Mr. Yearout disfigures the words of a revelation and by garbling to change what was written into a statement which would carry the meaning which he would endeavor to make damaging to the positions occupied by the Latter Day-Saints:

Behold, I [the Lord] say unto you that all old covenants [churches and their faith] have I caused to be done away in this thing, and this is a new and everlasting covenant [Mormon church as organized in the faith of the Book of Mormon].—Ibid., 22: 1.

Mr. Yearout used the Brighamite edition of the book of Doctrine and Covenants in his citations, and the section from which the above quotation is taken is section 20 in the edition issued by the Reorganized Church. That any one may see the dishonesty of the writer whom we are reviewing he needs only to take up the book and read the revelation quoted from. He will then discover that the subject considered is the principle of baptism, by which sins are remitted. He will also discover that Mr. Yearout ended his quotation before the sentence was finished in the revelation from which he apparently quoted; for the words which he thus left out would have denied the effort he was making. The quotation as it appears in both editions of the Doctrine and Covenants mentioned reads thus:

Behold, I say unto you, that all old covenants have I caused to be done away in this thing, and this is a new and an everlasting covenant; even that which was from the beginning.

Whatever else may have been fraudulent in the claims made by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and others who may have been associated with them in the organization of the church in April, 1830, one thing must be apparent from a proper consideration of the revelation which this Dunkard writer garbles so mischievously, and that is, that whether the revelation really came from the Lord or was the result of the religious piety of Sidney Rigdon or the wild vagary of an unlearned youth, that which was revealed had direct regard to and respect for that which was had at the beginning; and that which is referred to as being from the beginning has no more relation to the Book of Mormon than does the statement made by Luke in the opening portion of his gospel, in which he says:

Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eyewitnesses, and ministers of the word; it seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus, that thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed.—Luke 1: 1-4.

This agrees also substantially with what John the beloved disciple has stated in his second epistle in the following terms:

This is the commandment, That, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it.

It was this beginning of the gospel economy to which reference is made in this revelation which this reverend gentlemen so grossly misrepresents.

In order to make his point appear to be plausible he again quotes from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as follows:

And there are none that doeth good except those who are ready to receive the fullness of my gospel, which I have sent forth unto this generation.

But in order to make his point he quotes it in this form:

And there are none that doeth good, except those who receive the fullness of my gospel [Book of Mormon] which I have sent forth unto this generation.—Ibid., 35: 12.

This is section 34, latter part of paragraph 3 of our edition. We have quoted these citations from this writer as he has given them, and he has not even had the grace to say that the interpolations in brackets are his. There is nothing in the quotation itself nor in the context in the revelation to show that any reference whatever was intended to apply to the Book of Mormon.

Another instance of the mischievous tendency in the mind of this writer is found in the third paragraph of his article, as follows:

All people are under condemnation.

To support the statement made by him he quotes as follows:

And they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the New Covenant, even the Book of Mormon, and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written.—Ibid., 84: 57.

This quotation from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is from the revelation given September, 1832, directly to the church and made applicable to the church, and only to the church, as will be seen by the completed quotation as follows:

And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, Nay.

There is no possible construction of this language that can be made legitimately to apply to those not of the church, as this writer has tried to do. It distinctly affirms that the church itself had treated lightly that which they should have held sacred; that this brought condemnation upon them, and that this condemnation would remain until such time as they remembered the teaching of the book to do it rather than to say it. How any one could have read the revelation itself and so unwisely have made an application to those outside as this writer has done, is a mystery, and can only be accounted for upon the hypothesis that it is a misrepresentation, and a gross one at that, and made purposely to avoid giving to fellow believers a credit which was properly due them. Further than this, the commandment is that the condemnation should continue to rest upon them until they remembered the former commandments. The former commandments were those which were couched in the Scriptures, and it is passing strange that any one inclined to be religious should find fault with men for having written an article like the revelation, which clearly teaches reverence for and adherence to the word of God. Surely this writer was hard pressed for an argument thus to distort what he must have known could be so easily detected.

(To be concluded.)

A THANKSGIVING DAY EXERCISE AT LAMONI.

At half past ten o'clock, November 24, the day set apart as the national Thanksgiving day, a large audience assembled at the Brick Church to participate in the devotional exercises. The choir did its part well, as usual. Elder J. M. Stubbart offered the opening prayer. There were two speakers, Professor R. M. Stewart, of Graceland College, and President Joseph Smith. We believe their remarks will be appreciated by those outside of Lamoni:

ADDRESS BY PROFESSOR R. M. STEWART.

In the first place I wish to express my thanks to the committee who have felt that they would like to invite me to speak in this church; but at the same time I feel that they might have done better in their speaker this morning.

I come to you simply as a servant, that I might be doing some good in the world. I have nothing within myself to commend me, except as it comes through God, and through Christ his representative. We are here this morning upon a glad occasion. It is one which demands that our hearts, for a few moments at least, be turned aside from the purely worldly to the things that be of God. If God has in any way been good unto you, this is the appointed day that you should approach him in the true spirit of thankfulness.

We often think of Thanksgiving day as originating back on the coast when the Pilgrim Fathers first made settlement. But did Thanksgiving day originate in America? No, that is not true. There were generous and thankful people living in ancient nations; their hearts were as truly thankful as were the hearts of those early fathers who sought to find a home upon this continent. Going to the legends we find manifested the spirit of thankfulness in all of those ancient nations. They celebrated special days. I note at this time the Phenicians, that nation which has brought so much to us. Though but a little strip of country, not very large, the people manifested an activity which is known to the world. They, after the harvest season, had their special day of thanksgiving. This day was celebrated by them when sunshine first came after the longest night; it was the twenty-first day of December. They expected at this time a change in the tides which would mean to them better fishing. They expected to be free from plague. They expected victory in battle. They expected triumph in school, in education in general, and in religion. That is what thanksgiving meant to the Phenicians.

Coming now to the American Thanksgiving day, first founded in the autumn of 1621, we note these facts leading up to its institution: It had been a custom among those people, the few months that they lived upon our shore, to keep days which they called "days of humiliation,"—days of prayer, days of fasting, days of short rations,—springing out of the troubles which they had had, and the conscious realization of the troubles which they were bound to endure. By and by there came a sore trouble to them. I know not what it was. But sometimes in your life and in mine we find that there are troubles that come and pass over our lives which the world outside does not know. This little group, seeking to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences, had been looking upon the evils that had come into their lives. And I imagine that they sat one day talking in a very simple manner over their hard times. Each one had said his part, telling how hard God had dealt with them. But I look across the company, and there on the farther side I see a man who apparently is not taking in what they are saying. He is in meditative thought and mood. He speaks up: "Have you noticed," he says, "that our lives are not full of evil? There are blessings as well as misfortunes. Do you not know that our colony is stronger than it was a few months ago? Do you not know that our corn-fields have been enlarging in dimensions? Do you not know that our wives are obedient? that our children are very dutiful? Do you not know that the air here is salubrious? Do you not know that the woods are full of game, and the rivers full of fish? And above all, do you not know what we came here for? Do you not know that we came for liberty of conscience, where we might worship God according to the dictates of that conscience; and we have that in all its fullness?" And this man moved an amendment to the motion, That they have a day of humiliation, embodying the thought that instead of having a day of humiliation they might have a day of rejoicing. And Governor William Bradford on account of that meeting declared that the colonists should join in this day of thanksgiving, which should be continued as long as the colony lasted. To-day you and I are following up the same custom established by Governor William Bradford. And we come here to meet God to-day to tell him that we are thankful for all the blessings that we have received, on this hand and on that; and above all, for the Spirit that he has implanted within our lives, and for the freedom to worship him according to the dictates of our consciences.

What is the meaning of thanksgiving, or thankfulness? I wish to say this: That in thanksgiving one is impressed with the sense of kindness received, and is in readiness to acknowledge it. Not simply a tacit assent that you are thankful is required, but a readiness on your part to acknowledge the favor. Now you may be called upon to acknowledge it in many ways. In its highest significance it is the attitude which you hold toward God, and toward Christ who is his representative.

Plato, looking down through the dim spectacle of Nature, was thankful. He expressed himself as being thankful for three things; First, that God had created him a man, not a beast; in the second place, that he was born a Grecian, and not a barbarian; in the third place, that he was not only a man, but a philosopher. But the Christian goes deeper, or should go deeper, than Plato went. We, as Christians this morning, if we are thankful in the truest sense, must say that God created man in his own image, instead of saying that God created him man and not beast. God created man in his own image. In the second place, we must be thankful because God called us from darkness into the marvelous light and liberty of the Sun of Righteousness. In the third place, that Christ makes us faithful if we turn to him for help.

Mr. Holmes has said, somewhere, that if iron filings were placed in some sand, one would have great difficulty in picking from the sand the iron filings if he were to run his fingers through it; but if he should take a magnet and sweep it across the pile of sand, the magnet would be full of the iron filings. So he says the unthankful person is like the man who tries to get out of this life benefits, by passing his fingers through, as if he were getting iron out of sand; but the thankful man is the one who sweeps across the day the magnet of a thankful heart, and draws out of life and its activity heavenly blessings. The only difference is that the iron filings this time are gold, the gold of God. The man who promotes gratitude and thanksgiving serves not only man, but he serves God and man, for without them we can not be sociable, nor can we be religious. The thankful man is the man who enjoys life. He is the man who gets the best out of life. He is the man who is able to meet life. His character is able to be tested. Gratitude is a test of character. Did you ever think of that?

I say this: That the qualifications making a man worthy of favor also make that man ready to acknowledge a favor. Not all people are of that kind. Not all people acknowledge the favors they receive. Many, manifesting a general gratitude, having received some blessing from God, are not willing to acknowledge it, but rather do they use the blessing or benefit as simply the stepping-stone to some other benefit. I need but turn your attention to the parable of the ten lepers. They all felt grateful that such a person as Jesus Christ should condescend to speak to them. They were hopeful now that through Christ they might obtain some blessing which would "make them whole," give new life. All of them seemed to exhibit the same degree of gratitude. The blessing came. And one only,—in the eyes of the world to-day, perhaps was so foolish, was so absorbed in Christ that he could let his work go,—he had no ambition to use the blessing that he had just received to get further gain,—but he was foolish enough to go back and tell Christ that he was thankful for it. Is not that about the way the world looks at things to-day? We are too busy; we have the gratitude, but it is an imaginary gratitude,—the gratitude of the lepers. It is characteristic of men that satisfactions of present desires or wants simply prepare them to want something else. In the spirit of the times there is competition on every hand, competition in individual enterprise and endeavor, competition in corporative organization, competition in politics, competition in education, and (were I able to say it reverently) competition in religion. I would write in large letters upon the wall where all might see: MAN IS SELFISH. But I would also like to write below it, MAN, NOT SELFISH ANY LONGER, having lost his selfhood once gained in love.

Human nature is selfish. Men have not refused to obey God because they have anything particularly against God, but because they feel that they are equal to God when it comes to the ordering of a life. I need but point you back to Eve. She wanted to obey God; she told Satan that she wanted to obey God. She said, God hath said so and so, and I intend to obey. Satan told her, You had better not; you might just as well be equal with God yourself. You might just as well make yourself of more importance. God was not speaking the truth, and if you will simply partake of the forbidden fruit your eyes will be opened and you will know good and evil, you will be as gods. It was a case where the individual put himself before God. I am reminded at this time of the quotation from Mr. Shakespeare:

"The instruments of darkness sometimes tell us truths
Win us with honest trifles,
To betray us into deepest consequences."

This leads me up to the text that I have chosen for a few further remarks. I have had this in mind for some time. I have had this in mind as I have led up to it this morning. I read from Colossians, chapter 1, beginning with the sixteenth verse and closing with the nineteenth:

For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist: and he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preëminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell.

I wish to use the last clause of the eighteenth verse for a few further remarks. "That in all things he [Christ] might have the preëminence," which would be the true spirit of thanksgiving, as I see it. Father Time, with his scrutinizing eyes, has been peering through the hypotheses of religions, and he has seen fit to leave us the Christian religion, the one preëminently full of truth, the one championed by Christ, in whom we have the promise of the fullness of all things.

Some people say, Away with the Bible; away with Christ, the myth; they are for the simple and foolish. But I say unto you that the time has not yet come when you and I, as humble strugglers in this world trying to make the best out of life,—the time has not yet come, I say, when we can do away with the Bible and with Christ.

A few years ago the discussion was rife as to the proper place for the Bible: whether or not the Bible should be read in the public school. It was decided, because of sectarian differences, that it would be better for us to take the Bible out of the school. A few generations have passed since that was considered by the various States throughout the country, and what has two generations brought us? It has brought us children who disrespect their parents, who disrespect their teachers, who disrespect God, simply because the homes and the schools have been destitute of Bible instruction,—the only means that we have before the people to-day to uplift them. Perhaps this is not all of the reason for such conditions, but certainly it is a great part of it. In the last few months you have noticed teachers' associations, all over the country, saying, We must do something; we must put the Bible back in the school, or, with the cry of the St. Louis superintendent, we must speak of the "godless public school." I come with these words in urging you into the truest thanksgiving spirit as manifested in the text "that in all things he [Christ] might have the preëminence." In the second chapter of Colossians, and the ninth verse, we have this promise: "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." What are the "all things" then? Well, he says the "all things" are the things visible and invisible. They are thrones (visible), dominions (visible or invisible), principalities (visible or invisible), and powers (invisible). What else is there in the world? What is there in the world that could not be classed under these four heads? And I believe that Christ should be preëminent in the "all things" of to-day.

There has been an attempt throughout her history to take away from the church this office and that, and perhaps it is all right; but we must not forget, however, in this change, that Christ stands for true morals; that Christ stands for true spirit behind the morals; and even if we should have the opportunity of looking in upon the centuries and centuries of the future we would still find Christ the embodiment of the "all truth" of that day. "In him all things consist;" in him does the law of fullness dwell. What is fullness? The word used in Greek is pleroma. Pleroma means totality of all divine power.

Reference is made here to angel-worship, to the Eastern speculation of magic, to the Western wisdom—represented in gnosticism; all revealed in angelology as it was called. Magic as we understand it seems to be that which comes about through the supernatural, illustrated in soothsaying and in sorcery. And you will find that one of the great difficulties that confronted the other apostles as well as Paul, was that some men preached in Christ's name or performed wonderful things which they attributed to God. And in the eighth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, and the ninth verse we have this: "But there was a certain man, called Simon, which before-time in the same city used sorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one." So you see what was prevalent at the time Paul wrote this. They believed that the ghosts of the dead were called to give oracles, or discover hidden treasures, controlling the will of the subject. We have not gotten away from that yet. People outside of the church believe that. These believers in magic read the future in the aspect of the stars. They studied the conditions of the heart and liver to discover their prospects, and likewise the auguries of birds. The great characteristic of magic at that time was its unreality. It was propagated by faithful, but stupid tradition. Time sweeps away the supernatural of magic, with his natural science. Gnosticism was in the air also, and we have reference to this in the Apocalypse; in the second chapter of Revelation, verses 5 and 6, you have a discussion concerning the followers of Nicholas, formerly one of the seven deacons [?], who had received in himself the seed of the new thought which had sprung up, and he had become a gnostic. The general name, gnosticism, is simply speculation in the early church of the second century. Why did it come about? Simply because of the diverse religious forms, and of speculative culture incident to Christianity, reaching its height in the second century. They believed that God was separated from the world, and that between God and his world there must be angels ministering, called intermediary angels, in the Greek, Daimones, those supernatural beings which took upon themselves the nature of God and man. The great trouble with these people was that they mingled old thought and new thought; they mingled tradition and philosophy; they mingled religion and speculation. This is the time which marks the rise of intellectual tendency. One theory of these people was: Two worlds, one intelligible, the other sensible,—God manifested in divine substance; and at the advent of Christianity they added to their category of statement, Redemption. It was the impulse of Christianity which originated it, which constituted the vital form of thought that made it the strongest significant phenomenon of early Christian history. It is only in connection with Christianity that it is interesting at all now. It was again a question of leaving out Christ.

I might turn for a few moments to the pleroma, "the all things," of to-day: Business and its cares, society and its demands, philosophy and its high intellectual systems. I can not deal with all of the great list that I might name in particularizing. I would in the few moments that I have but suggest a few things, in which Christ should have the preëminence as growing out of a thankful heart.

First, that Christ might be preëminent in your life, your individual life. Christ stands for character; though, as I have often said, the word character is not mentioned in the Bible, yet nothing in the Bible stands for anything else than the truest character. In the world man means, usually, something different by character than what Christ meant when he tried to have the people be good. The lawyer is honest for policy's sake; the business man may be honest for the sake of his business; the teacher may be honest for the sake of his teaching. But if there is not beyond this the true spirit of honesty, as emanating from Christ, the embodiment of all truth, then is there not true character. Christ taught this truth in simple language, that a wayfaring man though a fool might see it. And because it is in such simple language many of those who can deal with abstractions have been caused to stumble over it, and see not the truth in him. He says, Watch, therefore, for you will have an opportunity for doing good; you will have an opportunity of being somebody in the world. You will have these opportunities; they will come day by day, day by day, in your lives; but you must be watchful that you improve them; for it is in the improving of the things that come to your hands, which be for good, that you are to prepare for any future work. Men who obey him are ready to carry out his purpose in the earth, of building up men in righteousness. Every man's life is what his past life has made it; and your future life, to a greater or less degree, will depend upon your past life. Now I know that you may receive an initiative in another direction; I know you may have another principle guiding you through this life, upward, in contradiction to the earlier one which tended downward; but at the same time you know, you who are older, and you who are younger as well, that you are hindered in doing good to-day because you have done some wrong in the past. You can not get away from your past life; it goes with you, whatever your purpose. Christ explained all that. If you want to do good you would better improve the little opportunities in your life day after day, day after day; and then when the opportunity comes sometime for doing some great thing which you would like to do, you will be prepared to do it. Christ did not have any James' Psychology; but he understood human nature. He understood the workings of the mind. He understood what he might expect, just the same as you and I understand many of the experiences of human nature. I say with emphasis that there is a testing time for our characters. If you are called upon to make a decision this afternoon, it will depend not so much upon the opportunity that you have for doing some good, but it will depend upon the stored up energy, the stored up righteous energy in your body, in your mind. The individual must be prepared, equipped, "thoroughly furnished unto every good work." The opportunity for making character is passing. Let Christ be preëminent in your life, as you seek to make character.

Again. Oh, that in government Christ might have the preëminence! Isaiah centuries before Christ's advent had prophesied that the government should be upon his shoulders; and while we do not believe that the church and state should be combined, yet we do believe that Christ was right when he said that government should be in the church. Men of morals, men of virtue, men of the church should be the rulers of our nation.

I can not speak at length upon this. I need but refer you to the governor-elect, Douglas, of Massachusetts, who expended for his election to the gubernatorial chair in the last presidential contest, twenty thousand dollars; to the governor-elect of New York who spent over twenty-two thousand dollars to be elected governor of New York. I say unto you, that the reason for all of this is that Christ is left out of men's lives, as far at least as they combine in politics to make government for the people.

Again. That Christ might have preëminence in education! Education primarily grew out of the church. Education should be the work of the church to-day—a continuation of the work earlier begun by Christ. Christ was not a preacher; Christ was a teacher. The St. Louis superintendent to whom I referred a few moments ago, declared in an address that I heard, that the public schools of St. Louis were godless; that the crime that existed in St. Louis was in a large measure due to the godless public school. I believe that this superintendent was radical. I do not believe that the facts bear out the case that he tries to establish; I believe that crime exists in the world to-day in spite of the public school; but, as I lamented a few moments ago, the Bible and Christ have been taken out of the public school, and there has been nothing installed as a substitute. The Bible gone; nothing to take its place! The students of philosophy may say that we want nothing but principles of truth, those principles which we can establish. Why not put these principles there? We can not. The teachers who have charge of the public schools are not very much interested, not very much interested, I say, in the morals of the pupil; it is a silent or tacit interest; and only so far as the teacher has partaken of the Spirit of Christ which all people might enjoy, and no farther, are we to hope for anything better in our education.

Some people would do away with the denominational colleges which arise, almost innumerable, throughout our country. They say that the state has provided for education. That is true. But the great mission of the denominational college is to emphasize not only learning, not only those things which pertain to the development of life, but those things which be eternal, those things which contribute to the highest happiness of the people. It is our aim in public school, high school, college, and university to get at truth. We are woefully weak. Many of us might know more of the truth if we would seek to know it. All of us are after it. We study chemistry because we do not know. We study physics because we do not know. And sometimes we are not satisfied that we have the truth, yet we seek after it in these. The biologist is seeking after truth, yet he feels that his theories are weak. In ethics we seek after truth; in sociology we seek after truth; in economics we seek after truth; in religion we seek after truth.

Education is in harmony with Christ, who is the embodiment of all truth. "And in him all things consist." And why remove him from our lives when we come to educate ourselves? Education in its broadest sense means the best living; complete living; best in morals; best in everything. And Christ prepares us the way for this human possibility. Through Christ as the medium are we to know truth. He embodies qualities which, in abstraction, would be unnoticed by the common people. He came to minister unto the people, not unto the philosopher alone, as Plato held. Plato, you know, said that no one was worthy to be saved who was not a philosopher. I believe that no one is worthy to be saved who has not enough in him to make him reach up. But every man may reach up. Every man has reached up. Therefore, every man is worthy to be saved; and Christ came to present to you the truth, to point the way, and to give you the life.

Again. That Christ might be preëminent in religion! Has there been religion without Christ? Yes. (I have but a few moments to speak of this.) Religions of the world which have arisen and decayed! Christianity stands preëminent for one reason; and that is that it helps mankind. Whenever you take the Spirit of Christ from your religion you have nothing left better than the religion of Confucius, or the religion of the Taoists, or any other of these religions. It is because Christ stands for all truth, and that we may get all truth from him; and we who study may see this in Christ, as he lived among men.

Let us not err, in our service, by trying to carry on the church of Christ, trying to carry on the religion we espouse, without his Spirit. Let us come to him in the true spirit of thankfulness, glad that he has told us so many things, and not only glad that he told us these things, but willing to render the best service for all his benefits.

Christ, then, I say in closing, embodies all truth, who knew all, and from whom we may expect all;

and when we shall rise to such a degree of perfection that we need not Christ, then Christ will say, Come and sit down at my right hand, and rule with me. We shall be equal with him then, joint heirs with him to the great gifts promised by God to his people. My prayer is, this morning, that we may be interested in those things which be of God, those things which contribute to the highest happiness of fellow mortals. I thank you.

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

The man who stands near the apex of things modern may state to his fellows what he sees; and what he does see will be presented in the lights and shades of their nearness to him or remoteness from him. But he, who in a long life, has been a party in the activities, and has seen things as they have passed, will be able to present them as he has become acquainted with them, and as he now sees them in the light of their significance to the life of the man, the state, and the nation.

It has been my fortune to live in what may be called an age of transition, and I carry on my left hand the mark of the sickle, the earliest reaping-hook, such as was used by Abraham and his retainers, and from him until modern invention has changed the method of cutting the grain, from the reaping-hook to the reaper and the binder, and from that to the implement that gathers and thrashes it, sacks it, and prepares it for the mill. I have lived to see the transition from the taper, (and I am sure that some present may not know what this may mean. But we used to buy them—a small bit of some kind of wax fixed in a little wooden float to put on the top of melted lard or oil and set burning during the watches of the night,) from the lamp made by the careful housewife with the saucer and the rag and lard or mutton-tallow, and from the dip-candle. And I remember well sitting up till midnight more times than I have fingers and toes to help my mother dip candles; and what relief it was when we got candle-molds. And now at night the streets of the cities are lighted with electric lights, and the cars move in the light of the electric lamps; and even our own buildings are lighted by lights in comparison with which—well, there is no comparison, but simply a contrast. And none of us would consent to walk by the light of those old-time tapers now. And let us be thankful that we are not compelled to do so.

I have lived in the time of the transition, almost, from the time of the caravels, or other types of ships in which men crossed the ocean and navigated the longest rivers, to the magnificent floating palaces which now sweep the waves, and instead of taking from five to six or eight months to cross the great ocean, we may now breakfast in our own nation, and the next recurring day of the week take our breakfast in foreign lands; and in such a degree of magnificence that men transplanted from these western plains and forests are almost afraid to tread on the magnificent carpets, and sit down on the sofas, and gather themselves to the tables and eat in the presence of those who are accustomed to such kinds of luxuries. And yet, man, by his spirit of adaptation, becomes by second nature accustomed to whatever his fellows may have had, or now have, and be so much the creatures of imitation that they do as others do, upon the principle that when we are in Rome we must do as Romans do. He who passes through this world with his eyes open, and has sufficient activity of brain, need not be ashamed to show himself unacquainted with the customs to which he has not come in contact; for there is a spirit of good-fellowship among men everywhere; that men now, whose judgments are worth having or listening to, do not deride a fellow-being for not knowing what they know, for they are conscious of the fact that he has never been placed in a position to become acquainted with things as they have been.

The transition from the caravel to the grand steamships, the Plymouth and the Kroonland, is a wonderful one; but no more wonderful than many other things which have transpired within the memory of men who now listen to me, and in my own.

I was born about the time that the first railway was built, the first railway trains operated; and from that time I am permitted to contrast the ox-cart with these wonderful means of travel that are spanning the country every day—palaces on wheels, fitted with every modern convenience, and in which a man may compass the entire breadth of the land. And I do not doubt that he who may live the next two decades, possibly less time than that, will be able to ride from Hudson Bay on the North to the Straits of Magellan in the far South on one continuous system of railway transportation. He who, like myself, can remember how he transported his bag of corn on horseback to the horse-mill or to the mill run by the little stream, and carried it home again, may to-day lift up his hands in thanksgiving and rejoicing that the day of such transportation as that is past. And while there may have been no rebates at that time by public carriers who sought for public patronage, and there may have been less corruption, some men used to be thankful when they got their sacks back from the mill; and the tolls were larger than they are now; and we have reason to be thankful.

I was pleased when I was in England. I discovered that they sold flour from Minnesota wheat and Kansas wheat and British Columbian wheat as cheaply as you and I can buy our flour that we eat to-day. And I was thankful then, as I am thankful to-day, that in this wondrous transition, the good of humanity everywhere has been conserved, and I join with all heartiness in the significant expression of the speaker who has preceded me that this has been done under the good auspices of Him who is all in all, and who has undertaken to lift man out of conditions that were low, and place him, by and by, upon conditions that are higher, and has persistently put his hand under him when he has striven to rise and has made use of those things which have been created by his wisdom and his power for the purpose of sustaining him in the height to which he might aspire. And all that we have to do in this regard is to mind the admonition of the speaker, and to remember that the apostle Paul has said, He that runs, let him run lawfully; all may run, but all must run lawfully.

I have lived in the days of transition from the horse-ferry, and the ferry propelled by poles across the streams, until there is not a river of any prominence in the world, around the shores of which men may have gathered to live, but that is spanned by magnificent bridges; and I have walked across the gorge at Niagara upon the swaying bridge, and I have walked across the river at New York on that magnificent bridge which is said to be the wonder of the world. And I believe that he who has taken cognizance of such activities as these may to-day rise up and thank God for the transition. While we may have had some things which characterized our boyhoods' days and gave us privileges that our sons do not have, (and I can look back and see many of them that I regret the passing of,) there have come in their places opportunities that we never had, conditions which have placed humanity beyond comparison with the days in which we lived. And as a consequence with you I am thankful to-day.

Who of us who have passed three-score years, possibly three-score years and ten, but can look back and remember the doctor's gig, and what a thing it was to travel through the country? And now even in so small a place as this we have what the irreverent have styled "devil-wagons" that move with the velocity of the winds. And while there may be danger in them, they are made to serve the better interests of men everywhere. And when in London and New York, I saw those heavy freight-vans moved by the same principle that runs the automobile I could but take cognizance of the fact that God had designed to put within the brain of man that which should meet his continued necessities. And when at the World's Fair—I beg pardon, the fair of the Louisiana Purchase, at St. Louis, and I saw a model of those coal-mines being worked in the far East, I could but reflect that after the forests had been taken off where God had caused them to thrive and grow for the use of man, he had so worked his scheme of salvation for the good of man that he had placed in the earth everywhere treasures that would take the place of the forests that had built our houses, and that we used so lavishly to put in the wide fire-places, around which we might gather at night, because wood was cheap. And were it not for this wonderful munificence to man, how could we so far away from those Plymouth brethren and the place where they gathered to meet as stated by our brother in his discourse,—how could we meet so far away with such a degree of comfort as we now enjoy? And how could we lift up our hearts in thankfulness to Him, if by the continued wastefulness of man we had destroyed the resources and God had not given us others by which we had been warmed?

From the worship in the primeval forest and in the lowly places where men were compelled to worship, unto the magnificent structures; from those which are plain and simple unto those that are gorgeous in their appointments, men have gathered to worship God. While we can not be thankful for the things against which our brother has warned us in his discourse; for the increase of pride and haughtiness, and all this continued bending to the fashions of the times by which we forget the poor and the needy, and those that are at work at hard service, we can rejoice that the opportunity has come to us to meet the necessities, the apparent necessities of our constantly increasing labor and demand.

As we look out of the windows to-day some of us may reflect that it is but almost since yesterday only that this was—I will not say a howling wilderness, for there were no wild animals here that frightened the people—but, when the blue-joint grass grew on the hills and in the vales here, we came into this region with a desire to escape paying tribute to two or three men who held the grass of our surroundings, and to get within a region where we might have liberty to breathe; and now the forest and the prairie have given place to the homestead and the city, and yet we are thankful that we form a part and parcel of this great transition scene.

At Plymouth I have stood where the first building in which to worship was erected, stood within the confines of the first cemetery or burying-ground, have read the marks that were left by the survivors of those who perished, and I have drunk of the waters of Elder Brewster's spring, and read the log or the history written by Governor William Bradford; and I drank in of the spirit of those Plymouth men as I gazed upon Plymouth Rock. But the region round about where Plymouth stood is now going back to a primitive wilderness, and constant encroachments have been made upon the farms that these and their immediate successors made. And their successors have gone where? Out upon the wide-spreading prairies, and into the valleys of the greater rivers, until now there is scarcely a place in the world where a stranger who desires to make a homestead can find the farm of which we used to sing fifty years ago: "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm." Uncle Sam has become poverty-stricken in this regard; and his sons can no longer find such places as are eligible, upon which to settle, And what is the result? We are compelled to go to Saskatchewan and Assiniboia, British Columbia, and the regions there to get a homestead, or out upon the plains. And we ought to pray earnestly that God might prosper our present President and put it within his busy brain to see to it, if it be practicable at all, to conserve the interests of the great American Republic in that the western countries may be made fertile by irrigation; pray that he may live; that it may come within his term of office.

Many of you, and myself, have lived to see the transition between the plain mortar in which we pounded the husks off our corn, and the magnificent mills of which those at Minneapolis and St. Paul are now a type; and ought we not to be thankful? I have sometimes been sufficiently thankful in my thought concerning these things to even ask God to bless the trusts; and while it may be thought by some to be political heresy, I know full well that for the first lamp I ever bought I paid seventy-five cents, for which I gathered cherries; and I broke it the second morning and gathered more cherries and bought another at the same price. And the glass trust has put the lamps within the reach of all men, everybody; and coal-oil is scattered all over the country by virtue of the trust; whereas if it had been left to private enterprise we should have been compelled to pay more. But I must not take this too far into the realms of politics, or somebody will get after me, if it is Thanksgiving day.

We have lived to see the transition (I say lived; I identify myself in the spirit with those who preceded me) from thirteen original States, twelve of which were striving to conserve the principle of African slavery, until we have forty-five States and some four Territories, and the major part of them free, if we are to credit the voice of the people at the polls in the last election.

We have lived to see—I have lived to see England lift the shackles from the slaves over in the countries which she has conquered. I have lived to see Russia emancipate her serfs; and I have lived to see that moving among the Russians to-day, that if the Czar does not take proper cognizance of his opportunity under God there will be such a revolution sweep through Russia as will come near to making it a counterpart of the American Republic. Were it possible for me to whisper in the ear of the Czar with sufficient significance and with sufficient prestige, I would tell him, Now is your opportunity to build a monument that will exceed the monument of the great Peter whom you are striving to imitate, by setting the people free and putting around them conservative guards that they might be thankful when Thanksgiving day comes. I do not forget that under that regime of religion, whatever may be said about the advancement of Christianity, that when they meet together on Christmas Eve, and when the hour of midnight strikes, peasant and men of landed estate, prince and serf spring to their feet and embrace the man that may be nearest to them, crying with one voice, "He is risen," rejoicing in the fact that Christ has been, and is, to them (though we may think they worship in ignorance) supreme in all things.

We have lived—I have—through a condition in which the state required every man to bear arms, and provide firearms for himself and those dependent in the households, and to meet in public drill, and hold themselves subject to call. And I am not right sure but that there are now upon the state's statutes that which would require every able-bodied man to present himself at some stated place prepared for such review and for such drill. But we have lived to see these laws pass into dead letters. And why? Because that peace has been so universal, and there has been such a strength of development, and such a love of liberty and freedom in the hearts of those who have made this Republic what it is, that no such regime is now needed; but when necessity occurs every man is a soldier ready to defend his country if need be; but you and I are earnestly praying that as this condition has passed, that better conditions must follow, and that the time must soon come when there will be no need for war, when swords shall be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning-hooks; and men shall not learn the art of war any more.

Let us pray then that God may speed the time when arbitration by peaceful means shall be the only settlement of national controversies, that we may no longer be under the bloody rule of war.

We have lived to pass from Carpenter's Hall to the Auditorium of Chicago. Now it may seem to you at first that it is a strange thing to link these two buildings together; but let me tell you that Carpenter's Hall at Philadelphia, Faneuil Hall and the Old South Church at Boston were the cradles in which this stalwart republic was cradled, and we are partaking of the benefits of that cradling which has culminated in the appointing of a man at the Auditorium in Chicago last June who met the favor and the support of the suffrages of the American people, and who has become dear to the hearts of those who voted for him; and hundreds and thousands not of his party must have voted for him because of his stalwart Americanism, the fact that he was a representative man. And now you and I may link these two buildings together, with the principles that have been conserved by both, and give thanks to God to-day that we live under the beneficent rules that were born in the mind of Jehovah for the purpose of developing in a place like the Western Continent political and religious freedom. Chicago, the center of a nation that sprung from a handful of patriots. There were but scarcely three millions of people when the great contest took place by which it was possible for the American Republic to come into being,—not many more than now occupy Canada. And what has the result been? A nation has sprung from that handful of patriots to occupy a place in the forefront of the nations of the world,—a nation of which no subject need be ashamed, a nation which if it but continues to conserve the principles of righteousness and peace which should obtain among men, even men of the world so called, must be an arbiter in the fate of many, possibly heretofore mightier than she has been or is. But let us understand what we are about. The nation must rest in the hearts of the people; for in this land the people are sovereign. You and I have no place in our republicanism for kingly rule. It has been certified that there shall, in this land, be no king in time, and this guarantees unto us a continuation of this republican idea. I do not use the word republican in reference to the party itself; I use it in application to the institutions of the country as a whole. And I do not belong to the dark side of politics that conceives that because somebody for whom I may not have voted occupies a place conspicuous in the Government, that therefore God shall have forgotten the realm. I do not belong to that class of men. I belong to that class of men that when we have made the controversy at the polls and have decided what it should be, who are heart and hand together with the ruling powers in everything which conserves the good of the nation, with a willingness and determination, if such things obtain as we can not sanction, when the next time comes for us to exercise the elective franchise, to put our foot upon that which is evil and wrong by registering our vote in regard to it.

Now I have but spoken as a citizen, a citizen of the Republic. I have spoken to people, many of them, who took cognizance of the things that I have witnessed in the passing of time. They know as well as I do the things through which the people have passed. They know what the transmission I have spoken of means to us. And to-day we enjoy a degree of personal and of united liberty such as has been made possible by the divine interposition of God's hand in a political and in an economic sense, in permitting the nation to become what it has been. We have passed from one condition unto another, until as a state, as a nation, we occupy an enviable position in the regard of all men. Let us not forget as enjoined upon us by him who spoke to us first, let us not forget that Christ is all in all; and by virtue of his design, by virtue of his interposition, we enjoy that which makes us thankful to-day to gather at this place and under the principle of thanksgiving give praise to God.

A SYMPHONY.

Lately there appeared in the HERALD several articles under the heading "A symposium," and as the articles dealt somewhat strongly with us who believe it inexpedient, if not unlawful, to sustain life at the cost of that belonging to other creatures, I looked the word up in Webster's, according to which a symposium means a "drinking bout; a merry feast." This might account for the gainsaying and sarcastic vein here and there so evident were it from the world instead of from a brother in the church.

I am glad to repeat that I am attacking a system and not a person or persons, a system of bloodshed and cruelty described better by the prophet that Paul is quoting in Romans 3: 10-18; attacking it with the weapons provided by the Master in the beatitudes, Matthew 5: 1-10. Read them in comparison, and I will stand by your decision.

The next two verses (11 and 12) in that grand old sermon on the mount are especially comforting after having some one try to fasten upon us Paul's warning to Timothy: "Giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils," "speaking lies in hypocrisy," "conscience seared with a hot iron!" We have to take all this from the pulpit and the press when none would dare charge it to us in open meeting because of the next sentences "forbidding to marry and commanding to abstain from meats."

Perhaps I can be of assistance to one of your contributors who wishes to diligently inquire after the old paths: Christ directs you in Matthew 19: 4 to "the beginning"; eighth verse also. Now let us read about the "beginning," and especially about meats (nutmeats, grainmeats, and greenmeats, not flesh. See Genesis 1: 29; 3: 17-19.)

That is the oldest path we have record of. God himself walked in it and said it was very good, so my brother need not fear to tread therein, especially as our Savior directed us to it. Isaiah foretells of our coming to it again. (See chapters 11 and 65.) Christ teaching his disciples to pray told them to repeat less and meditate more upon it, and thus make possible the coming of his kingdom, when his Father's will shall be done on earth again as it is now in heaven; and John the Revelator recorded in the first three verses of the twenty-second chapter the same promise; Daniel and the three Hebrew children were also living witnesses of the beauty and power of the original and perfect plan of sustaining the divine gift of life which Christ promises us more abundantly. Does Paul differ then with these? Nay. Read the twenty-first verse of his letter to the Romans (chapter 14) overlooked by one writer who quotes the verses preceding: "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak." When we divide the word of truth we should do it rightly or it will return to us.

Thus in searching the scriptures I find that all these "good and intelligent people" also are in perfect harmony with the same view, though it be impossible to prove it to one who has already reached a conclusion,—a prejudicial view.

Did it ever occur to the brethren that the oft quoted Word of Wisdom reads, "He that forbids to abstain," etc? Now your construction of the words would indicate that a man who prefers to follow the old path is not of God, whereas it is just possible that it is he who forbids me abstaining that is not of God, otherwise where is the consistency of my being accepted a member of the church and then later called to the priesthood when my practice and teaching is so well known? Further, to be sure that my position would not hurt the work I wrote the First Presidency as to whether I would be justified in holding office in the priesthood in view of my conception of gospel requirements; I was advised to go on and my right to teach the theme of perfect peace was indorsed.

I have since continued to live as close to the Lord as environments would suffer me, have seldom failed to help a brother or sister to a more humane idea of our loving Father, and do not believe I have really offended one by so doing, though I have gained many warm friends thereto. . . . One thing I would particularly mention, though it may be peculiar to the Cleveland Branch, (and by the way our branch stands well in the tithing list,) that is, that I have always had the best consideration and warmest support from those whose tithing has been forthcoming when needed, which goes to prove that the Lord blesses with that hidden wisdom he has promised those who heed; or that the absence of butcher's and doctor's bills leaves a decent margin for the Lord—probably both!

Again I would oppose the use of flesh for food because God does not indorse works of darkness, and that is where slaughtering is done; how many real Saints would partake of the thing if they saw the whole panorama of the shambles? No! shut your eyes and ask no question for your conscience' sake. Truly, "Their feet are swift to shed blood: destruction and misery are in their ways: and the path of peace they have not known." Then compare, "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things." I have on file a clipping from Commercial Bulletin—an editorial comment on the strange situation presented by the thousands of striking butchers waiting for their fearful and bloody jobs again while the western farmers cried out in vain for help to harvest God's more than bountiful supply of grain for his children. Yes, "Wheat for man," and, "Woe be unto man that sheddeth blood or that wasteth flesh and hath no need."

Another clipping giving an account of that strike has an item tucked away in a corner telling of a four-year-old boy smashing his baby brother's head in with a hammer! Was it inherited instinct, you who are so ready to believe that musical, mechanical, or artistic talent is inherited? What is the birthright these butchers give their offspring? Paul says, "If meat make my brother to offend I will eat no flesh while the world standeth." He also says it is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine and that is also what Daniel thought; I am so often reminded of this on my way to work and back to see the signs on the saloon-windows: "Hot roast beef all day," "Free soup lunch," "Hot wienerwurst with every drink," "Hot liver to-day," etc., I never yet found a saloon-keeper advertizing hygienic lunches, but I do notice they never neglect to hang a barbecue bill in the window, and do not doubt but that they have one back of the bar. At the butchers' picnic and barbecue in Cleveland there was a greater attendance than any other two picnics of the year, notwithstanding the charge for admission was double that of others. The reason is obvious.

"And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" Let us not be unequally yoked together with unbelievers; let us take His yoke upon us; it is easy, and the burden is light, though it looks like a cross—the cross is the scoffs of your brothers and jeers of the world.

So I advocate the disuse of flesh because in so doing the ax is laid to the root of the liquor evil and other acquired and depraved habits. The drunkard is hard to reform even though he be willing to. Get him to discard the use of flesh gently, and he will lose his appetite for liquor, tobacco, and drugs in general. There is a scientific reason for it: The work of the blood is to cast off the poisons taken into the body, when life stops the body quickly decomposes through their office. This is true of man or beast and therefore when we eat flesh we are taking in more than our share of certain poisons and the system craves a counter-irritant and antitoxin so called.

Permission was given to man in Noah's time to eat flesh—with a certain proviso, "But the blood thereof ye shall not eat," for the above reason, was it? and are we as careful to-day after being tenacious as Shylock for our pound of flesh?

Something else was said at this agreement, something overlooked by the one-sided inquirer, "And surely your blood of your lives will I require: at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man."—Genesis 9:5. Daniel, again, was a man to whom the "old path" was the right one. When he was cast into the den of lions they knew that he was not as other men; they may not have thought of that day coming when they shall again eat straw like the ox, but they did know they were not justified in seeking this man's life, nor did God require it of them.

Now a word in regard to the Mosaical law, so often entirely obliterated as to any bearing on latter-day Israel: In John's beautiful vision it had a place, and Christ said he did not come to destroy it, so perhaps we should be careful in belittling its importance. The fleshpots had wrought havoc with the spirituality of the chosen seed during their sojourn in the land of bondage; the Father in heaven who desired to have his will done on earth as it is in heaven, forgave them their trespasses, gave them daily bread from heaven and led them—not into temptation, but into deliverance from the evil influences they had been subject to; all day long he held out his hands to a gainsaying and disobedient people; he gave them a law that should be a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ's dispensation when a higher one (not a retrograde one, brother!) would become operative. John saw standing upon the moon the church clothed with the brighter glory of the sun; so the church with its purer gospel law was built upon and above the Mosaical law which formed a foundation for it to bring man back to the level from which he once fell.

The Israelites were forbidden to eat indiscriminately, as they had done in Egypt; they had to bring their flesh-foods to their spiritual advisers who saw that it was without blemish and without blood before they were permitted to eat the same. To-day we eat anything the butcher sells and ask no question for our conscience' sake; then wonder why we feel so bad, and call in the elders, only to do the same thing over again, till one day the Lord reminds us that we have the permission we sought, we have been warned of the consequences, and we have our free-agency, "Wherefore trouble me no more concerning this matter."

A month since a stock remedy concern sent in a repeat order to our firm for seventy-five thousand five pound labels for hog-cholera remedy. What becomes of all the stuff, and what becomes of the poor, sick creatures so soon as the thrifty stockman sees they will stand the trip to market?

The Cleveland health officer says this point is a dumping-ground for diseased cattle, and ordered more than three hundred calves thrown into the fertilizing pit. Inspector Choate, of Columbus, Ohio, where there is a branch of Latter Day Saints, found numerous specimens of diseased and spoiled meat (flesh) on sale in open market, and the dealers claim that it was sold them so by the packers. No wonder "It is pleasing to me that it should be used sparingly," then under exceptional conditions.

Are we going forward, brother? or are we kicking against the pricks? "Ye can not drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils; ye can not be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the tables of devils." "All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not." "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace and things where-with one may edify another."

I want to demonstrate one little incident to a brother who "does not believe in extremes," he says; but who chides us for wearing shoes of leather or even riding behind leather harness. Benjamin Franklin, whose mind receptive to the divine will above evolved the majestic language of the Declaration of Independence, was an advocate of the purer diet from the time he was sixteen years old. He says that his vegetarian diet saved him half his board-money, and it became "a valuable fund with which to buy books, besides that he was better able to master them because of the greater clearness of head from so temperate a diet." Now see the great treasures of wisdom: this man Franklin (vegetarians generally are folk of lofty ideals, it would seem) conceived the idea of harnessing the power he saw burning up in the thunder-cloud! He flew a kite and conducted that energy to a battery and stored it away; think of that when you see the smoothly gliding automobile of electricity! I love the horse, but the day of his abuse I hope is drawing near to a close.

And if all the thought and study that has been given the fleshly appetite had been likewise applied in lines conducive to man's uplifting, we might even now be enjoying the millennium my brother hesitates about inviting. Franklin got good books and studied them; latter-day revelation tells us to do so. Paul says, "knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth;" also, "If any man thinks he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know," and James, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not,"—unless you have already reached a conclusion and thereby closed the receiving station!

May the truth make you free indeed.

The Great Helper.

"The little sharp vexations,
And the briars that catch and fret,
Why not take them to the Helper
Who has never failed us yet?
Tell him about the heart-ache,
Tell him the longings, too;
Tell him the baffled purpose,
When we scarce know what to do.
Then leaving all our weakness
With the one divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the burden,
And carry away the song."—Brooks.

My heart echoes the poet's words and I so often wonder why it is so hard for Christians to learn this lesson,—that God is our strong and willing helper, so willing to help us bear all our burdens, trials, disappointments, and the heart-aches of life. I know it is so hard to believe and know that "He knoweth best," that he has a place for each to fill. "You in your small corner, and I in mine," let it be where or what it may be, let the cross be heavy, the way full of briars and thorns.

Let us tell him all our heart-aches, and let us drink the cup with all its bitterness, sustained by the thought that he, too, drank it for us on Calvary. Surely we can do this for him, when he has done so much for us. We truly must be in the best place; for some reason we may be unable to see just why, but in his own due time, "sometime, somewhere," we will understand what looks so dark and cruel to us now.

It may be to teach patience, hope, forbearance, or faith in him for our own soul's salvation, or to help some other weak, struggling soul along life's rough path, who has not strength to stand alone, and not faith to cling to God, but must have human help and encouragement, and by help may at last grasp and understand God's infinite love; and at the same time we may lay up treasure for ourselves! Shall we shrink this task because the way looks dark and dreary? God forbid.

The nearest to an angel was a little, frail, educated, refined Christian woman that circumstances over which she had no control had placed in a position in which by culture she surely did not belong, and while shame by her own act could not touch her the disgrace of those with whom by law she was bound to, weighed heavily on her. Did she despair? By no means, but she went to work at what lay nearest at hand, and, though unappreciated by those who should so tenderly have cared for her, her life was not lived in vain, and in the great day when God shall reward us for all our good work, there will be many souls, bright stars in her crown, that here in life she has snatched as it were from the very gate of hell; and surely her crown will be all the brighter for the heavy cross that she bore so patiently and bravely here.

So many of us look on the dark side of life, with all its gloom, sorrow, disappointment, and vexation, and forget the bright things, and that we have so very many things to be thankful for, forget to "count our blessings." Suppose that our own desert us? God will not. Suppose we are betrayed by false friends? Christ was also; but he will not betray us. If heart-aches, trials, and deep sorrow are our lot we have him, our great Helper, to go to. When the cross gets so heavy our fainting form can not support it, earthly friends fail us, and no comfort can we find, then remember to and be sure after a time we will

"Tell Him about the heartache
Tell him the longings, too,"

"Forget that we bore the burden,
And carry away the song."

Some may say the writer knows nothing of heartache, but I too have been through the deep waters when I truly thought there was no God or he could not be so cruel as to let me suffer so; and for two terrible years was nearly if not quite a skeptic; and oh, such rebellion! I could not breathe that holy name in prayer, and it seemed all had gone from me, and I was "alone." I would think truly there could be no God, or if so he must be cruel and unjust to let me suffer so. But by loving, prayerful, patient friends God showed himself to me, and in after-years while doing penance for my wickedness, I feared he never could forgive me. But I know now, though even yet the old rebellious feeling will come by spells. I know he is helping me to overcome day by day, and he has been very patient and tender with me. And I find my faith grows stronger and I depend more on him each day. And only by the help of this Great Helper and his strong arm to help me, am I able to bear the terrible trial and sorrow of my life.

Would to God that all suffering humanity would

"Tell him about the heartache, Tell him the longing, too."

and be sure at last they would

"Forget that they bore the burden,
And carry away the song."

The Longing of Thirty-four Christmas-Tides.

As Christmas draws near I am thinking of Sr. Emma Burton's disappointment, and of expressions of regret that I have heard some of our missionaries make in regard to being deprived of home companionship at such times. These thoughts bring vividly to my mind my life's experience, and I believe I know how they feel. Over thirty-four years a wife and in all that time not one Christmas with the husband.

Married in the May-time of the year and of my life, I left my girlhood home for one in the beautiful city by the river. Ere the summer was gone the young husband was called to leave for a distant State on his mission, and though he said, as I tearfully clung to him at parting, "If you say so I will tell them I can not go this time," I did not say the word, for I knew full well when I married him what his life-work was expected to be, and had decided to never hinder in that work if possible to avoid it. So the coming Christmas found me without his presence, far from father and mother; but with the new mother, ever kind and true, and the dear sister whose little ones made Christmas merry in the old Mansion House. I was young and hopeful, life looked bright, then, and I thought, "He will soon be home again."

The next Christmas I had my baby boy to comfort me, but the husband was again far away. The fathers among the missionaries will know how much harder it was for him to leave this time.

Home for a fleeting visit and the next Christmas-tide found him away in the "salt land"; but those times were as nothing compared with what followed.

Nearly every Saint knows where his years have been spent since that time.

What a blessed Christmas this coming one will be for him, and yet I can not be with him unless God wills it; but he will be happy. While the heart is heavy with thoughts of unfulfilled hopes, this thought brings comfort, and I still have the son, now teaching the same doctrine that the father left home to take to the world.

I feel to thank the heavenly Father that through all the years of trial he has helped me to keep the faith with never a doubt of its truth, and in the final separation, so far as this life is, while the heart is heavy with anguish I am still trusting, and am just as firm in the faith as ever in my life, knowing that God doeth all things well, and praying for strength and wisdom to make my life worthy to be with the loved one gone on before.

Yours in the one faith,

SR. DAVID H. SMITH.

MYSTIC, Connecticut, October 10, 1904.

Dear Home Column: I have been helped and encouraged so many, many times in reading the letters and articles in your columns, that I feel as though I ought to write to you also. I do not want to be of the nature to take in all that I enjoy and give out nothing for the enjoyment of others.

I have felt so many times since I have had a number of little ones to sacrifice for and endure privations on account of, that I should try to be just as patient and happy as though everything went along as I would like to have it. I believe in this way we shall be able to look back after our children are grown up and feel satisfied, not wishing we could live that part of our lives over again.

Why should we fill our lives with vain regret, and longings for what it seems is not best for us at the present? I think with the poet, "Our lives are what we make them," to a great extent. I know it is hard for us to bear some things that are placed upon us, but I think it is harder because we can not say from the heart, "Thy will, O Lord, not mine, be done." When we look around us and see so much beauty, and realize the handiwork of God in every flower and tree and beautiful landscape, in the rippling brook, the broad ocean heaping its mountains of foam, and know that he made everything for man, to "please the eye and gladden the heart," and wills that his children should be cheerful in their warfare, is it right that we should give way to a sad heart, thereby increasing discouragement? But rather let us be hopeful, looking for the silvery lining to every cloud, expecting a joyous triumph if we faint not.

Hopefully,

LILLIAN P. WHIPPLE.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

A SISTER asks: "Is it necessary for the district superintendent to call upon the superintendent of each local school to give a report of the school at the district convention in addition to the report sent in by the local secretary? If so, what should that report be?"

It would be difficult to say whether or not it was "necessary" to make such a report, not knowing the conditions. There is nothing in the Constitution and By-laws to require such a report. But it may be one of the very best things that can be done by the district superintendent to require reports from local superintendents of their schools. It is one of the ways he has of acquainting himself and the district of the various conditions existing among the several schools. It is one of the best ways to create an interest in the work and arouse enthusiasm therefor. It is one of the means to be employed to get local officers to do more and better work in their schools. It stimulates them to work. If they know their work will be reported to convention, they will endeavor to make it as good as they can. It is a phase of convention work that I would like to see more universally adopted than it is now. Considerable good will come from it.

Just what that report should be would be governed by what there was to tell. Briefly, tell what condition the work is in; what you are doing to improve it; some of your difficulties that you have to overcome; what you are going to do, if known. Also something of your hope and faith.

This or any other work directed by the district superintendent to be done should be done promptly, cheerfully, and in no half-hearted way.

The secretary's report is statistical and contains about what is necessary in that line. But it does not nor can not have in it the true ring of inspiration and work that may be in a report, written or verbal, from the one in charge of the school. The district superintendent, having the oversight of the work in the district and its interests at heart, can best determine what is "necessary" in way of reporting to make the work of the district effectual for good. When your district officers call upon you for work, do it with a will and God will bless you all.

BRO. W. B. TORRENCE, superintendent of the Nodaway, Missouri, District Sunday-school association, writes that they have arranged for a two-day convention in January and will use the outline of work sent out by the General Sunday-school Association as a portion of the convention program. They have gone at it in a very businesslike way, and it seems that nothing but success and an enjoyable time can reasonably be expected. We hope to be with them but can not determine sure till the date is set. Bro. Torrence also reports at length the condition of the work in the district and what they are trying to accomplish, which gives an accurate understanding of the conditions there. Would that all district superintendents would do likewise.

BRO. F. J. EBELING reports three new schools organized in the Ohio district. This is a good showing and we hope for a revival of the work in that section. Keep the good work moving.

ALL Sunday-school workers please take notice that the lessons for the first primaries or smallest scholars are to be published separately beginning January, 1904. They have heretofore been published with the Primary Quarterly. But now that they are revised and to be put into permanent form, it is necessary to publish them separately. It will be necessary to order what you want of these same as you would of any other grade of Quarterly. It simply makes a fourth grade of Quarterly. The announcement of prices, changes, etc., will be made soon. Watch for it. But do not overlook the fact that they will not be included in the Primary Quarterly as heretofore.

Is YOUR school running as well as it can? Are the teachers all doing nicely with their classes? Do the officers all do their part well, cheerfully, and promptly? Is your membership increasing or diminishing? Do your offerings keep up expenses? Do you have Quarterlies enough to supply all? Do you have Bibles enough to furnish the entire school? Do you begin exactly on time? Do you close on time? Is the school a genuine help to the branch and church work? Are there any Saints who do not send or bring their children to the school? Are you all growing and doing better? If not, why not? All these are important points to be considered. And they are points that every school should be able to answer in the affirmative. If your school is short in any of these matters it is time you were looking into the matter and trying to remedy it. Let us never be contented to slacken our speed or relax our energy till we can say there is no place to improve, and that will not be this side the great judgment-bar of God.

The Sunday-School Lesson for December 11, 1904.

THE COMING OF THE LORD.

Golden Text.—“The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night.”—2 Peter 3: 10.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

The outline of our lesson is quite simple. It follows the leading points of Peter's second letter in the first ten verses of the third chapter.

He refers us there to the great flood in Noah's time and warns us that another destruction will come upon the earth but not by water; he says it will come by fire.

The destruction of Noah's time and the destruction that will attend the second coming of Christ are the leading topics of the lesson to-day. In connection with them it is shown that the Lord warns the world in ample time to escape impending destruction, if men are willing to follow his counsel. In Noah's time, men were warned; in our time they are being warned; in Noah's time a place of safety was provided, and in our time this is also the case.

This is the outline of the lesson as it is contained in the lessons of the senior, intermediate, and second primary grades. The primary lesson tells the story quite simply; the intermediate enlarges upon it, and the senior amplifies still more, especially in calling our attention to many statements in the Doctrine and Covenants concerning the coming of our Lord.

It is in harmony with the prediction of Christ to his disciples that his second coming is preceded by the rise of pretenders to authority from heaven, that false Christs and false prophets have risen. The faithful Shepherd warns his flock against being deceived by these religious fanatics or knaves, whichever they be, and tells us that the Son of Man will not come in the form of a woman or of a man traveling on the earth.

His coming will be “a great day,” in which the heavens and the earth shall feel the master hand of their Creator; it will not be the coming of an obscure individual with doubtful claims.

When Jesus sat upon the Mount of Olives and taught his disciples concerning the destruction of Jerusalem and the scattering of its people, he told them also that, before his second coming, the “remnant” of the Jews that had been scattered among all nations should be gathered again to Jerusalem. His words are these: “And the remnant shall be gathered unto this place: and then shall they look for me, and behold I will come.”

We may expect to see indications of the gathering of the Jews to the land of their fathers.

It is the anticipation of the Saints that in time, according to the instruction of the Lord, they will gather together to a place appointed by him and will there build up a city. Jesus talked to his disciples of this also, as they sat on the Mount of Olives; he described it to them as a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the most high God, a city in which there shall be the glory of the Lord, a city into which the wicked will not desire to come, because of the power of the Lord which shall be felt there. He said the city should be called Zion.

In modern revelation to the people of God, we find the warning to prepare ourselves for the coming of the Lord, for that great day when he shall stand again on the earth. And a part of the Lord's instruction is this: “Let them, therefore, who are among the Gentiles, flee unto Zion. And let them who are of Judah, flee unto Jerusalem, unto the mountains of the Lord's house. Go ye out from the nations, even from Babylon, from the midst of wickedness, which is spiritual Babylon.”

Again, we read in the word of the Lord to us that “he shall utter his voice out of Zion, and he shall speak from Jerusalem.”

This harmonizes with the statement of Jesus to his disciples, that the remnant shall be gathered to Jerusalem before his coming.

And when Jesus sat on the Mount of Olives and taught his disciples concerning his second coming to earth, he said, “And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out of all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy.”

And, speaking of things that will transpire at his coming, he said, “Then shall the heathen nations be redeemed.”

When we read such utterances as the Youth's Companion quotes from the editorial of a recent Japanese paper, we find that in some, at least, of those who have been called heathen, because they “follow not with us,” there is the fundamental principle of the doctrine of Christ, the great principle of love, and that even toward enemies.

This is the quotation to which we refer: “Revenge is a sin. It is barbarous. We are living under a new law of universal brotherhood.”

Are there not righteous, even in the heathen nations, worthy of being spared in the time of destruction which is coming on the wicked in the day that is soon at hand? Is not God speaking in their hearts? Is he not writing his law on the fleshy tables of their hearts?

In the preceding paragraph, we quoted the prophecy that, before the coming of Christ, the righteous will be gathered out of all nations and come to Zion singing with songs of everlasting joy.

There is another gathering predicted by Jesus; it is the gathering out of his kingdom of all those who offend and those who do iniquity; this gathering also is to take place before his coming.

So we have prophesied in the word of God a gathering into the kingdom of the good, and a gathering out of the kingdom of those who are not good.

We are not safe simply because we may have membership in the church; we are safe only so long as we abide in the principles of the gospel of Christ.

When Peter cited the destruction that came on the world in the days of Noah in connection with his teaching concerning the coming of the Lord, he followed the teaching of Jesus who predicted to his disciples that, in the days of the coming of the Son of Man, it shall be as it was in the days of Noah, when they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, heedless of the warning of Noah, the preacher of righteousness.

In the parable of the sower, also, Jesus has left his people a warning not to permit the care of the world or the deceitfulness of riches to choke the word out of their hearts and to render them unfruitful in the works required by the gospel.

It may be well for us to examine ourselves sometimes and discover whether or not we are permitting either the cares or the pleasures of the world to occupy so much of our time as to crowd out the gospel.

Are we so busy or so careless that we do not attend church services, that we do not send our children to Sunday-school, that we do not teach them at home?

Are we so busy or so careless that we are not studying into the word of God, and that, too, with a view to improve ourselves and others? If so, it may be well for us to answer the question, if we can, which the Lord has put into the mouths of his servants to proclaim to those who are slow to heed his word: "If I, who am a man, do lift up my voice and call upon you to repent, and ye hate me, what will ye say when the day cometh when the thunders shall utter their voices from the ends of the earth, speaking to the ears of all that live, saying: Repent, and prepare for the great day of the Lord; yea, and again, when the lightnings shall streak forth from the east unto the west, and shall utter their voices unto all that live, and make the ears of all to tingle, that hear, saying these words: Repent ye, for the great day of the Lord is come."

ALMA'S TEACHING.

"Behold, are ye stripped of pride? I say unto you, if ye are not, ye are not prepared to meet God. Behold ye must prepare quickly, for the kingdom of heaven is soon at hand, and such an one hath not eternal life. Behold, I say, is there one among you who is not stripped of envy? I say unto you that such an one is not prepared, and I would that he should prepare quickly. . . . And again I say unto you, is there one among you that doth make a mock of his brother, or that heapeth upon him persecutions? Woe unto such an one, for he is not prepared, and the time is at hand that he must repent, or he can not be saved."

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, November 24, 1904.

Editors Herald: In harmony with the authority of the officials of this district, and request of the Saints, I have been privileged to visit a few of the branches, and can truly say the Lord has been with me. My soul has been greatly made to rejoice with the dear ones with whom I have labored in the interest of this glorious work so many years in the past. We traveled and preached, in this district, (when we had no churches of our own,) in schoolhouses and in the homes of the Saints; and often we went afoot and alone. Now there are five churches owned by the Saints, and reunions have been held in the district for twenty years in succession, which have greatly aided the work, and many have been added to the church, such as shall be saved.

The Sunday-school work has been vigorously pushed to the front through efforts of the efficient and zealous workers of the different branches under the supervision of the general superintendent and wife, and other able workers who have not grown weary, nor fainted by the way. May the God of our fathers still be with them is our prayer.

In the Tabor Branch we found all rejoicing in the truth, and had the privilege of occupying in their neat little church over two Sabbaths; also in Henderson Branch, formerly known as Farm Creek, where Bro. Blair and E. C. Briggs first preached and where the Spirit testified through some of the old-timers, who were striving to serve the Lord as best they knew, that these men were true servants of God.

We stayed in the Keystone Branch two nights, and all came out to hear, with quite a number of our old friends. Came to this place for last Sabbath. God has been with us here and we were made glad by the presence of a good audience that greeted us both morning and evening. To-night will be our last with the good folks here. To-morrow we go to Riverton for two nights, and on to Hamburg for next Sunday.

These dear ones have not forgotten to minister to the wants of the servants of God. May they long live to labor in this grand and glorious work.

We have preached all that we felt able to, and visited as many as possible at their homes, giving them all the cheer and encouragement we could, and have labored in our patriarchal line of work, and felt the presence of the Spirit in all of our labors.

We have attended the Spring River District conference, also Clinton District, by request, and quite a number of the branches of the districts. The reunion at Eldorado Springs, one at Berry's Ferry near Fairland, Indian Territory, and one at Holden in Independence Stake. In all these places as an evangelist God has blessed me. Ever working and praying for Zion's weal, I am,

Editors Herald: Pardon a very brief intrusion upon the HERALD's valuable space to correct just two typographical errors which have crept into my article on "Science and the Bible," in the current issue. The first is on page 1098, second column, where it says "afflict harm upon a large and studious class of the world's community," etc. This should read "inflict harm," etc. The second case is on page 1099, first and second columns, where the phrase, "'hashy' generalizations," is repeated three times in the two columns. This should read, "'hasty generalizations."

May I also be permitted to modify one sentence; though it is not erroneous as it stands? (See page 1099, center of second column.) It reads thus:

"Science, pure and simple, is of its nature and essence nothing more or less than the systematical collection or collation and classification of proved and ascertained facts in the natural and spiritual world of investigation." I would prefer this sentence to read as follows:

"Science, pure and simple, is essentially nothing more or less than the systematic collation, classification, and recording of proved and demonstrated facts in the natural and spiritual world."

Thanking you in anticipation, for the courtesy you have ever shown me, I remain, SYKESTON, North Dakota, November 27, 1904.

Dear Herald: I have been isolated from church privileges since September 4. At that time I left Pleasant View Branch, of the Independence Stake. And I want to say I never have realized the value of church and Sunday-school before as I have since I came up here, and I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be enabled through the goodness and mercy of God extended to his children to again return to the land of Zion and to do the work assigned me in a right and acceptable manner before God. Let me say a word to those who have the privilege of attending church and Sunday-school, especially in the Pleasant View Branch, to improve it, and never let an opportunity slip to say a word in defense of this latter-day work, that it may roll on, and that the Lord may hasten the time when the knowledge of truth will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

I would be glad if I could hear of some of the Saints living in this part of the country, and while I am here, if any of the elders can make us a visit I am sure I will do all in my power to make them comfortable. I live two and one half miles west of Sykeston. I do not think there has ever been any preaching done here, for all with whom I have talked say they have never heard anything about us. Hoping that an elder may come and give us a call, if possible, and praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. PEEK.

FULTON, Iowa, November 30, 1904.

Editors Herald: Last spring Elder Case set up the district tent in Fulton and held services for five weeks, Bro. Burr helping him most of the time; then they held forth at Emeline about five weeks, at Crabtown about the same length of time, and at Canton for about three weeks. At all these places there was a very good interest. Four were baptized as a result of the effort. All the meetings were held within fifteen miles of here. What good was done the Lord knows. There has been other preaching done besides these tent-meetings by Bro. McKiernan, and I try to hold what has been gained, yet there are discouraging features here that seem hard to overcome. Six years ago we built a nice church in the center of the branch, but time works many changes. Some have gone to their reward, others have moved away, so there are only a few left to meet together. The Saints seem to be asleep; we hold meetings at Fulton, near three miles from the church, but the Saints do not attend, only a few that live there, yet we have a fair interest. Our Wednesday prayer-meetings are small. Oh! that the Saints would be more energetic, for they lose many blessings by being so careless and easy. We have some that are trying to do all they can for the work.

I would like to say to the Saints of this the Eastern Iowa District that the families of the elders are behind since August with their allowance; winter is here; coal or wood must be bought, also winter clothing. The elders' families must eat as well as others. I will have to make out my annual report December 31. I have already received means from Bro. Kelley to help the families along. Come Saints, one and all, let us each do our part and respond at once. If each only does a little we will soon be in good shape again. Do not wait until you can send a large amount, but send what you can spare now. Do not wait until the first of January, for the year closes December 31. I will gladly send receipts for all moneys sent me.

As ever your brother,
JOHN HEIDE.

LEXINGTON, Nebraska, November 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: As I read the address of President Joseph Smith on Thanksgiving day of 1903 my heart was filled with gratitude to God that I was a citizen of such a country. I verily believe that this is the best country in the world, and that God has a better place for them that serve him faithfully and keep his law.

While I would be glad to have things different at times, I think that the Father has guided me from earliest memory, and that the Spirit that led me from evils has led me into the church, and given me evidence that this is God's work, in which I have been engaged for twenty years. I have been afflicted with deafness; and now for two months I have been unable to walk or stand on my feet, except for a short time, without great pain; but these things do not discourage me. I have only a few years to serve; and I want the same kind of a discharge from the army of the Lord that I got when I served my country. If I have taken anything from any one and not paid for it, or done anything for which the law will condemn me, I want to make it right now.

When I think of what others have passed through for this work I feel to breathe a prayer of thanksgiving to my heavenly Father that he has kept me through dangers seen and unseen. I cast all my care on Jesus, and forget not to pray that he will lead and guide me into all truth; and in all things I say, O Lord, thy will be done, not mine.

Your brother,
F. T. DOBIE.

SEBASTOPOL, California, November 22, 1904.

Dear Herald: I love to read the HERALD, and I think it is especially dear to those shut off from their church privileges. I attend the Methodist Church with my grandmother, but of course it is not like attending one's own church, although I am well acquainted here. I was brought up a Methodist, lived here from about my eleventh to my eighteenth year. I then returned to Colorado with my parents when they were out on a visit and there near Wray I heard the gospel in all its fullness, and thank God was led into the light. Oh! it is wonderful, this gospel of Christ! How thankful we should be for it.

My husband is in Oakland working, so he has church privileges and enjoys them accordingly. He feels much at home among the Saints there, attended their Sunday-school convention not long since, and had a very enjoyable time. Thanksgiving day is almost here once again, and oh! how much we all have to be thankful for. Our blessings can not be counted. I for one thank Him for my restored health, for the beautiful sunshine, flowers, friends, and last and the best, the privilege of being his child, a latter-day saint.

How ashamed we should be to grumble because of too much rain, such warm weather, poor crops, or anything else our all-wise heaven y Father sees fit to send. Oh! let us thank Him for our manifold blessings and overlook the disagreeable things of life. I am so happy in his love, I have been studying His word more lately and already I feel the difference. God forgive me for neglecting it. It was brought forcibly to my mind by a letter from a Saint in Wray, Sr. Wolfe. She wrote me that I would be blessed with much freer speech in telling of his gospel to others if I studied and prayed over his word more.

I was talking yesterday morning to a woman who has many trials, a member of no church row. I told her as best I could of His teachings as taught by the Reorganized Church. She seemed real interested; had never heard it before and asked me lots of questions, some I could not answer. I am sending for some tracts to help me out on those questions. Pray with me, dear Saints, that she may be led to give obedience to the gospel.

"Oh!" she says, "Mrs. Weller, I want the truth; I have been fooled so many times I feel like being careful, and it makes no difference to me if I know God directs me to do a thing, I do not care what people say." God grant she is sincere and when the test comes may she stand firm.

I do not suppose our Methodist friends will thank me for what I am doing; but we must do God's will regardless of people. Many are so prejudiced; oh! may their eyes be opened.

We are having delightful weather here, no frost yet, but lots of sunshine and fog. My grandfather brought in some black-berries the other day, ripe ones, green ones, and blossoms all on the same branch. We have had some apple-trees in bloom this fall, cherry-trees also blooming on some places. We suppose the trees that bloom this fall will not bloom next year.

Ever praying that God's truth may advance, I am,

MRS. E. U. T. WELLER.

HOLDEN, Missouri, November 24, 1904.

Editors Herald: So many write us to learn our opinion in regard to this town as a residing place, and in regard to the country as a farming country, etc., that if allowed a little space we will give "our opinion" and make one answer do for all, although better writers than I have given their opinions. Holden is a nice place to live, a little more expensive possibly than towns of its size in our part of Iowa, although both seasons we have been here have been bad years for farmers, so everything is extra high. It is a good town for people who have means to live on; but we would call it a poor town for one who needs to make a living. Men in business do fairly well, I think, and I believe enterprising men with some capital could do well; but for laboring men the chances are poor compared to Iowa. Wages are low; slavery used to exist here and of course help was cheap then, and even after emancipation fifty cents a day looked big to one who had been working for his "keep"; as one old settler said though, "These people from the North are just ruining this country. A few years ago I could get all the help I needed for fifty cents a day and now they want a dollar and even more." But wages are improving and methods of farming also. We believe that with proper rotation of crops, and looking after all the fine points, this country, for farming, is up to the average.

One man telling me about his farm said he had sold the grain off the same piece of land for each year for over twenty years, and I believed it, for it was the most worn-out looking piece of land I ever saw. There were a few cockle-burrs growing on it, but they looked delicate. What land will stand such farming?

As to the branch here we have a nice branch, well presided over, and finer Saints could not be found. Of course we have some vexations and we are not all perfect, but are striving for better things. No one seems to want to leave after they locate here, unless they fail to find work. I know if anything should arise that it would seem necessary for me to leave, I should feel more deeply affected than over any change of location I ever made.

School advantages are good, and seem to be improving. Property is increasing in value, but is still much cheaper than in Northern Iowa.

We hope this will satisfy many who desired to hear from us. We are rejoicing in the work and feel that it has been good for us spiritually, at least, to live here.

MRS. J. R. SUTTON.

Independence Items.

On the 27th, it being a fine day, there was a fairly good attendance at the Sunday-school and at the orchestra, in which there are generally eight present. Bro. Alva M. Merrill, located at No. 421 West Mill Street, in this place, who has lived a long time in Africa, gave a very interesting talk to the Sunday-school concerning the natives of that country, and stated that he had many curios which he intended to present to Graceland. He thought the pioneer missionaries who had been preaching there had done much good by opening the way for others more enlightened in regard to the gospel.

The afternoon prayer-meeting was conducted by Brn. Arber, Moxon, and Layton, the last mentioned exhorting, in a special manner, the Saints to be brief and confine their testimonies to those concerning God's dealings with them. Many had received evidences of his goodness and the Spirit flowed from heart to heart bringing light and comfort. One brother, however, soon forgot the injunction of the presiding priest and gave a lengthy talk concerning the practice of finding fault with the "heads of the church," and a sister also thought it opportune to speak at length in reference to the Book of Mormon home class work, and closed her remarks by exhorting all the sisters to attend on the following Monday the classes which were to meet in different parts of the city.

The church services were well attended. At the opening of the morning exercises the choir of thirty-two voices sang "As the voice of many waters, so Jehovah speaks to me." Bro. R. J. Parker in the evening spoke before an appreciative audience, and in the morning Bro. G. H. Hilliard held forth, taking for his text, "And upon this rock will I build my Church." The speaker said the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ is the rock upon which the hope of the church rests. This knowledge was given to Peter, and Joseph and Sydney also testified that they had the knowledge that the gospel was true and the power of God unto salvation.

He referred to the advancement made among the leading men of the nations and those who had tired of the kingly form of government. The latter part of his sermon assumed a sudden change in thought. He did not pretend to be a scholar and with much earnestness he declared he should go right on in spite of all the critics and flatterers, even mentioning the HERALD.

There were a few comments in disfavor made of the discourse, one speaking of "the sacred pulpit converted into the coward's castle," and all that sort, (because no one could answer back,) while others we gladly noted called the sermon an "excellent one."

On the 23d Bro. Clarence and Sr. Henrietta Millard, lately from Kingfisher, Oklahoma, were baptized in the font by Elder Hilliard. On Thursday morning about eighty of the Saints, ten of whom were choir singers, repaired to the church to hear President G. H. Hulmes preach a Thanksgiving-sermon. He took for his text, "Let your moderation be known unto all men. . . . Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. The meeting was opened by singing, and prayer by Bro. W. H. Garrett. The speaker referred to the dreadful carnage going on in the East, and in contrast to the present peaceful condition in our own country; also to the enlarging of constitutional liberty which is bringing about conditions more favorable for the Saints. He said it sometimes looks as though we had not the least conception of the life which God intended for us to live. Our Father's intention is to lift up the poor and debase the rich through the principle of tithing and consecration, thus showing by our works that we are thankful.

In Book of Covenants 61: 6, we discover a startling expression which we should heed in the midst of our thanksgiving: "Gird up your loins and be watchful, and be sober, looking forth for the coming of the Son of Man, for he cometh in an hour you think not." "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," was sung at the close, and the congregation hastened to the dining-hall, which had been prepared for their reception and entertainment. They hurried eastward to Ensign Hall thinking to be on time for the choice dinner which had been so fondly anticipated, and which had been the subject of great anxiety; but to their surprise the Saints on arriving found at the five long tables, laden with good things, that every chair was occupied. Knives and forks were being plied with vigor, platters and trays filled with steaming drumsticks and luscious winglets, hot vegetables, and plum-puddings, with pies of every hue and flavor,—were all being conveyed with joy by those faithful caterers to the Saints. On entering the door nearly every countenance fell. A plenty of patience, however, was in evidence in the case of those sitting on the side benches, who, like wilted wall-flowers, began to wither in spirit at the sight of the fading from view of the promised turkeys and chickens, roast beef, pumpkin pies, cakes, puddings, etc.

What with the unexpected incoming of crowds at the door, lack of system in taking care of them by the hustling, overworked sisters, bebies of young waitresses "new at the business," and last though not least, the scarcity of edibles, hearts began to fail lest little or nothing of the things that tend to satisfy the inner man would be left for them.

Alas! this crushing fact stared scores of poor, hungry, mortal Saints fully in the face! The gentleman at the stand by the entrance on which the shining dollars, halves, and quarters glistened, and his weary wife, the busy, bustling chairman of the committee, offered to compromise by returning the tickets or reducing the price of the scanty menu; but although another feast, an oyster supper by the Gleaners on the 6th of December, was announced amid the clatter and clamor of the crowd, not one relented; they refused to be comforted, but after a light refreshment finally moved slowly out of the building,—"one by one."

"It's a perfect swindle!" mumbled out a toothless old gentleman on the street corner, who had gathered a few disgruntled ones about him. "Didn't have a bite of turkey, nor pudding, nor pie, nor a knife to eat with, only had a spoon and a little dab of cold potato and squash." "It's a swindle!" echoed his thin-faced lady companion; and, as one of our number looked pitifully at the aged couple and inquired if they were members of the Latter Day Saints' Church,—"No! we aint!" snapped out the nonmember, "and if we was, we'd leave and get baptized into another too quick!" And they too passed on.

As a result accruing from our Thanksgiving dinner the chairman of the committee on soliciting donations and arrangements handed to the chairman of the building committee a good, round, fifty-dollar donation, and the society, after hearing the report of the committee, will ratify all action by a show of hands. And the committee will not be "jostled out of its comfortable routine" either, if the critics do say there is "unwisdom and futility" in such hustling and unbusinesslike methods. They go so far as to quote scripture and tell us that everything in the church, auxiliary work and all, should be done in order, and by common consent. Meetings should be called, they say, by due notice, not members invited over the phone; and all business should be acted upon by the body and duly recorded. "Yes," say the critics, "there's lots of red tape; but if you will have societies, you must have order."

The free entertainment in the evening by the Religio was excellent. Sr. Josie Islieb's song was fine, and the cantata selections were well rendered, only we missed Bro. O. L. James and Sr. W. N. Robinson in some of the solos.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Extracts from Letters.

C. N. Maymon, Byrneville, Indiana, writes: "I love to read the letters from Saints in different parts of the world, bearing the same testimony, which satisfies the writer's mind that the testimonies are all given by the same spirit. The gospel work is getting on higher planes in parts of Southern Indiana. Bro. Wight's visit in October resulted in good. Eight were baptized, and two more shortly after his departure. We look for him back in December."

Bro. R. C. Russell, writing from Arthur, Ontario, November 22: "I am preaching in the Zone Branch near Bothwell to good-sized congregations. I baptized eleven, October 30, and have some others ready for November 24. We have ideal weather for Autumn; no snow yet; heavy dust on roads."

D. R. Jones, Sheridan, Nevada: "A few of us meet at Carson City the first Sunday in the month for social service. The members are scattered a great distance apart, and only a few can meet. But we have good meetings, and the Lord by his Spirit blesses us, and encourages us to be faithful and do our duty to him and to all men, that by our walk and conversation we may glorify our Father in heaven."

Country Life in America's Christmas Annual.

Country Life in America's Christmas Annual is even larger, with more sumptuously printed color pages and illustrations, this year than last, and it is certainly one of the most striking magazine publications of the month. A leading feature, "Christmas in the open," by Hamilton Wright Mabie, is illustrated with four frontispieces in color, to show the spirit of Christmas in the North, East, South, and West. Other important features include "A Christmas house party," by Arthur Huntington Gleason, a practically suggestive, as well as delightfully interesting story; "The joyous sport of skate-sailing," an illustrated account that will win new enthusiasts for this thrilling sport; and "The Christmas dinner," a thorough consideration that will have as much interest for those who are to eat as for those who are going to plan one. "An amateur Santa Claus" is a charming story by Harry Leon Wilson, author of that successful new novel, The Seeker. A most elaborate feature of the number is "Christmas fruits—Where they grow," by J. Horace McFarland, illustrating the rare and common fruits of every clime on many pages in superb color. One of unusual human interest is the story of "Caldwell, the woodsman" and the gathering of Southern evergreen decorations for the Northern Christmas. A great many other articles deal with widely varying subjects; for instance, "Christmas on an orchard farm" is a true story of an agricultural success by L. H. Bailey; "Christmas for the birds and animals," by A. Radclyffe Dugmore, is the photographically illustrated story of queer little birds and beasts that come to the winter crumb table; and "House plants for Christmas" suggests beautiful home-grown gifts; while "A wild flower in the snow" is one of the many articles of nature and out-door interest during the winter months. Innumerable shorter articles are concerned with advice and things one should consider for the comfort and joy of the holiday season. Even the advertisements have taken an uncommon holiday aspect and the large pages of Country Life in America contain beautiful pictures and announcements such as have not been produced in any other but this superb magazine.

Those not taking Autumn Leaves should begin their subscription with the first of the year. A splendid series of Book of Mormon illustrations will run throughout the year. These drawings are by Bro. Clare Sherman, of Chicago, and begin with the vision of Lehi. They are well worth your money.

The Trust and the Railroads.

The first published review of Ida M. Tarbell's "History of the Standard Oil Company," which is just published by McClure, Phillips & Company, appears in McClure's Magazine for December, written by George W. Alger, a thorough student of the trust question, who speaks with authority upon it. He discusses Miss Tarbell's remarkable work with thorough understanding and appreciation, his review in itself making an intensely interesting résumé of Standard Oil history, as well as a pointed presentation of the whole trust problem. Mr. Alger describes in detail, building his argument on Miss Tarbell's marvelous collection of facts, just "how the railroad makes the trust." He traces the growth of the Standard Oil Company through railroad discriminations, and states his conviction that the same influences which made it are operative to-day, and that the problem they involve is a present menace to the country.

He writes of this phase of the subject:

"Prince Metternich once said to George Ticknor: 'You Americans must first suffer from an evil before you can apply the remedy; you have no preventive legislation.' Miss Tarbell, as she tells us the story of the birth, growth, and present power of the oil monopoly, is really giving the history of such an evil—one from which we are still suffering, and for which we are yet groping for a remedy. It is impossible for us to read this story and miss its meaning. It is not merely a study of, perhaps, the blackest page in the history of American commerce; it is not simply a study of what men of immense business capacity can do when actuated by an unscrupulous and almost incredible selfishness. The enormous evil which finds graphic illustration in her book is the power which the transportation companies have been given over the accumulation and distribution of wealth in this country, and how that power has been abused."

Is Russia Becoming Liberal?

Prince Sviatopolk-Mirsky, the new Russian minister of the interior, has begun his administration under very favorable auspices. His accession has apparently brought to a head a Russian liberal movement of a constructive, moderate sort, not supported by the radicals or the revolutionists, but by the great body of liberal-minded Russians, who, while they have no sympathy with violence, reverence the Czar and detest the bureaucracy. The relaxation of the censorship over the newspapers of the empire, a privilege which has been taken advantage of to the full; a more humane policy toward Finland; the abolition of punishment by administrative order, and promise of greater tolerance toward the Jews,—these, astonishing as it may seem, are actual accomplishments of the past few weeks in the empire, and largely, if not wholly, due to the influence of Prince Mirsky. True, he has had much to contend against. The entire bureaucracy has opposed him violently, and the powerful Procurator of the Holy Synod, Pobiedonostseff, had gone to the extent of warning the Czar that autocracy and orthodoxy would be in peril if the new régime were permitted to continue its liberalizing work. The Czar, however, appears to support his minister, and in the attitude toward the zemstvos, or provincial assemblies (the nearest approach in Russia to representative government), may be seen the influence of Prince Mirsky's new, broad, and liberalizing policy, the best feature of which is that it is divorced from any radical revolutionary propaganda.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for December.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1904, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" ### ARTICLES OF FAITH—ATTENTION.

We published in the HERALD for November 23, 1904, page 1091, the Articles of Faith as the same were published in the Deseret News for November 12. We now call attention to the fact that article 4 as published is not identical with the same article as it appears in the Times and Seasons for March 1, 1842, page 709, and in I. Daniel Rupp's work, History of Religious Denominations in the United States, page 410.

As given in those two publications the article is as follows:

We believe that these ordinances are 1st, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; 2d, Repentance; 3d, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; 4th, Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

The Utah authorities, or the News for them, inserted at the beginning of the article the words, "We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the gospel are, etc."

At first view this may look innocent and of no special import; but the name of Joseph Smith appearing attached to the whole as its author, or as the one by whom it was formulated, would make any change in the original document a forgery so far. Besides this, as there is no mention made in article 3 of principles, either primary or secondary, the sense of the article is materially changed and it does not so completely harmonize with the article preceding it as the one given in the Times and Seasons, of 1842; and Rupp's History, of 1844.

The News may protest against the HERALD saying anything about the Articles of Faith published by it, as it is the right of every church to formulate its own creed, and define its own faith. Should it do this, we admit beforehand that the church in Utah has the right to determine and publish to the membership and the world its own faith and define its own rules; but at the same time neither that church nor any other has the right to change a statement of beliefs formulated and published by Joseph Smith, the Seer, in his lifetime, and publish the changed articles over his signature as the ones authorized by him. When they do this it bears the marks of an intentional deception.

Whatever the object for the introduction of that innocent-looking clause, "We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the gospel are," may have been or now may be, we protest decidedly against making the dead prophet responsible for it, and hope every Latter Day Saint will take notice of our protest.

Bro. Hans N. Hansen, writing from Elsinore, Utah, November 30, noticed this addition and wrote us about it. He, too, is not sure what was intended by the change; but recognized danger in it.

The articles as given in the Times and Seasons, and signed, Joseph Smith, were written at the request of Mr. John Wentworth, editor, and proprietor of the Chicago Democrat for the use of Mr. Wentworth and for a Mr. Bastow a friend of his, who was writing a history of New Hampshire.

Article 3 reads, "We believe that through the atonement of Christ all mankind may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel." Article 4 follows naturally, "We believe that these ordinances are." Then, faith in the Lord, repentance, baptism by immersion, and laying on of hands are named, without a hint that these several ordinances are to be followed by others though naming these as the first principles. The Seer had no such reservation in mind when he wrote the Articles of Faith which he published. We therefore ask these Utah religionists to take the name of Joseph Smith from this published declaration of their faith, or make it conform to the one published by the Seer himself in 1842. Or, if they must have an Articles of Faith for their tracts, elders' cards, etc., with the name of a man attached to it, that they attach the name of Joseph Fielding Smith. They have no right to put the Palmyra Seer's name to any changed declaration of faith, however slight the change may be.

FALSEHOODS AND MISREPRESENTATIONS BY THE "GOSPEL MESSENGER,"—NO. 2.

Again. Mr. Yearout endeavors to connect Joseph Smith, the President of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, with his contention against Mormonism, by quoting from a reply to L. O. Littlefield, of Utah, published in SAINTS' HERALD for November 3, 1883, but for which he erroneously cites HERALD for September 12. There was no issue of the HERALD on September 12, 1883. He gives the citation as from page 705, whereas there is but a part of the quotation referred to on that page; and, as usual, he garbles, by giving a portion of one paragraph and a portion of another under quotation marks; and by leaving out words he vitiates the meaning and makes an application entirely foreign to the matter in issue between Joseph Smith and L. O. Littlefield. The quotation as given by Mr. Yearout is as follows:

I am not surprised that you do not like the continued reiteration of the word of God from the Book of Mormon. That book is one of the essential features of Mormonism. It should be to you, and all Mormons, what the Koran is to Mohammedans, the Bible to Christians, the end of dispute. Without it the Mormon church had not been born. It is the Golden Bible to the devout Mormon. I have the undoubted right to select portions of the text that sustain my faith in Christ as primitive Mormonism has revealed him. While I do not accept your proofs as conclusive that my father was a pluralist or polygamist, I repeat that whether he was or was not, the gospel recommitted through Joseph Smith is COMPLETE AND SUFFICIENT FOR THE SALVATION OF MAN.—Saints' Herald, p. 705, September 12, 1883.

To show the apparent trickery of the writer we quote from the letter in reply to Mr. Littlefield as it was published at the time:

I am not surprised that you do not like the continued reiteration of the word of God from the Book of Mormon. That book is one of the essential features of Mormonism. It should be to you and all other Mormons what the Koran is to Mahammed, the Bible to Christians—the end of dispute. Without it the Mormon church had not been born. It is the Golden Bible to the devout Mormon. From it I have the undoubted right to select those portions of the text that confirm and sustain my faith in Christ as primitive Mormonism has revealed him. The word of God to the church, in the revelation charging the church to remember the Book of Mormon to "do according to that which I have written," is directly applicable to the matter in dispute between us.

Instead of quoting this citation from the reply to Littlefield for the intent and purpose for which it was written, to serve the purposes of a controversy between the theories of the Reorganized Church and the theory and practice of the Utah Mormon church in regard to the disputed doctrine of plural marriage and its practice, Mr. Yearout has attempted to make the application of the language to them that are without, and has done so by leaving out from his quotation nine columns of closely printed matter, without marking the omission, as required by all rules of courtesy and grammar. He has closed the quotation by a portion taken from the closing paragraph of said reply to Littlefield found on page 708 of the HERALD for November 3, 1883. The paragraph is as follows:

As before, while I do not accept the proof offered by you that my father was a pluralist or polygamist, as conclusive, I repeat that whether he was, or was not, the gospel of Christ as it was taught by Christ and as recommitted through Joseph Smith, is complete and sufficient for the salvation of man. Nor is it essential to the divinity of that gospel that my father be proved to be a polygamist, or that I be compelled to believe that he was.

Mr. Yearout dishonestly leaves out in his quotation from the reply to Littlefield the words, "of Christ as it was taught by Christ." This vitiates the sense and makes Joseph Smith of the Reorganized Church testify as this Mr. Yearout wishes him to do, that there is a distinction between the gospel of Christ and the gospel committed to Joseph Smith. No such admission has been made by the President of the Reorganized Church, nor by any of his cotemporary missionaries. The contention of the Reorganization is that the gospel of Jesus Christ was the identical gospel recommitted to Joseph Smith and his associates by angelic ministration, and that they were repeatedly commanded to teach it. Mr. Yearout says:

The Mormon church is founded on the Book of Mormon, and other revelations they claim to have received from time to time. They place the Book of Mormon above the Bible and believe and teach that no one can be saved without accepting and believing the Mormon production.

In an attempt to prove this he quotes as follows:

I spent the day in council with the Twelve Apostles. I told the brethren that the Book of Mormon was the most correct of any book on earth, and the keystone of our religion, and a man would get nearer to God by abiding in its precepts than by any other book.

He makes the application and his argument after the foregoing quotation by adding in brackets:

[Bible not excepted].—History of Joseph Smith, Millennial Star, vol. 18, p. 790.

The statements made by Mr. Yearout as above quoted are distinctly false. The church was not founded upon the Book of Mormon, nor does any branch or any portion of the so-called Mormon churches place the Book of Mormon above the Bible; nor do they teach that no one can be saved without accepting and believing the Mormon productions. They teach that salvation is based upon a belief in the gospel of Jesus Christ and obedience to the commandments found in that gospel; and this Mr. Yearout should have known had he taken as much pains to discover the good there was in what he has read as he was anxious to discover something upon which to base an objection. The morals of the Book of Mormon are absolutely above reproach. It teaches Christ and him crucified, the Savior of men. It distinctly affirms that no person can be saved except he have faith in Jesus Christ. There is no claim made that belief in Joseph Smith or the Book of Mormon alone will save any man. Mr. Yearout never heard such teaching and never saw such teaching by accredited ministers of the faith which he calls Mormonism.

The further statement credited to Joseph Smith, that a man would get nearer to God by abiding in the precepts of the Book of Mormon than by any other book, is not only harmless in itself, but taken in connection with the fact above stated, that the gospel of Jesus Christ and faith in him is absolutely taught and insisted on in the book as essential to salvation, makes the statement a commendable one. Those who make a fight against the book upon the ground of its being a fraud and Joseph Smith an impostor, have not yet gone so far as to attempt to prove that the teaching of the book is evil or immoral. Mr. Yearout should have known that the Reorganization has used the Book of Mormon constantly in the contention between itself and the Utah church to prove plural marriage and polygamy to be evil and wrong and contrary to the will of God. He should have known further that Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah Mormon church, admitted before the Senatorial Committee last winter that the Book of Mormon denounced polygamy.

Mr. Yearout further attempts to maintain his statement disparaging the faith of the Mormon church by quoting the following language:

Every spirit that confesses that Joseph Smith is a prophet, that he lived and died a prophet, and that the Book of Mormon is true, is of God, and every spirit that does not is of anti-christ.—Ibid., vol. 5, p. 118.

This statement occurs in a report of the minutes of a conference held at Nauvoo, Illinois, October 6, 1844, four months after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Over this conference Brigham Young presided, and that which Yearout has quoted is from the speech made by Brigham Young at the opening of the conference in outlining the business which was to be attended to by the conference. And he uses this language in the spirit of the rest of his article to bring into disrepute the faith of the church, and, by innuendo, to draw a contrast to the statement made by the beloved disciple in his second epistle:

For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist.—2 John 7.

This attempt is a mischievous one and is unworthy the character of one who professes to belong to a body who are set to defend the faith. By his adroit manner of writing he has confounded the two churches together—the Utah church and the Reorganization—and uses the words “Mormons” and “Mormon churches” with evident intention to put them both into the category of his criticism. He uses a paragraph in making a statement in regard to the Mormon churches teaching that God and Christ are material beings. To do this he quotes from a sermon by Brigham Young, Journal of Discourses, volume 1, page 50.

He also uses a quotation from a reputed sermon by Joseph Smith published in the same journal, volume 6, page 3. And also from the Utah Doctrine and Covenants section 130: 22, which does not appear in any edition of the book of Doctrine and Covenants prior to the fall of 1876. It is preceded by the caption:

Important Items of Instruction, given by Joseph, the Prophet, April 2, 1843.

Of its authenticity we are not informed, neither are we sure. It comes to us from a doubtful source, and we are not bound by it. The quotation is as follows:

The Father has a body of flesh and bones as tangible as man's; the Son also: but the Holy Ghost has not a body of flesh and bones, but is a personage of Spirit. Were it not so, the Holy Ghost could not dwell in us.

While we may not credit the source whence this quotation comes, and may be pardoned for our doubts, we would like to know what this reverend quibbler would do with the statement made by the Master to the disciples as recorded in Luke 24: 36-40:

Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as you see me have. And when he had thus spoken, he showed them his hands and his feet.

What will he do further with the language of Paul, Hebrews 1:3:

Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high; being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they.

The Mormon churches have taught just as the Scriptures teach:

God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.—John 4:24.

Mr. Yearout spends some effort in attempting to show that Mormonism teaches the plurality of Gods, and to do this quotes from the disputed revelation authorizing plural marriage, but as the most of the evidences relied upon by him are taken from this disputed revelation, we shall pay no attention to his attempted proofs, for the reason that they are from a document that is to say the least apocryphal, and which there are just reasons for believing is in itself a fraudulent article and can have no standing in the tribunals before which this question of difference in religious belief is to be tried and tested. He asserts that the doctrine of celestial or plural marriage was advocated and talked of on the sly while the church was yet at Kirtland, Ohio. This we have time and again shown to be utterly false, and that too by evidences which are entitled to credence and would be heard by any court in the land where witnesses would be compelled to state the truth. His closing claim in this second division of his article is the most brazen and barren of truth of almost any of his statements. He says:

Mormonism believes in and accepts of the Bible as a revelation as far as it suits them; but contends that the plan of salvation—the New Testament—as delivered by Christ and his holy apostles is an imperfect work, and all those who live up to its teachings will be lost unless they swallow Mormonism with all its inconsistencies and contradictions of God's revealed will. . . . Everything is subject to change with them by direct revelation.

This is false in statement and false in evidence. In fact, true Mormonism teaches that the plan of salvation as delivered by Christ and his holy apostles is "the perfect law of liberty," and that those who live up to its teachings will be saved. There is no iron-clad declaration that men must believe in any inconsistencies or contradictions against God's revealed will. We are surprised that a man of his apparent research should have made such a statement as this.

You can not flee from the wrath to come until you forsake the sin you love.—Ram's Horn.

MOVEMENT FOR POLITICAL REFORM IN RUSSIA.

On Sunday, December 4, there was an assembly of four hundred, largely composed of lawyers and influential men of the city, assembled in the town hall of St. Petersburg, Russia, after having been denied admission to the courts of justice by the Procurator General. Every well-known member of the bar was present. After being refused a room in the courts of justice they demanded and received the use of a room in the town hall.

At this meeting a resolution was passed requesting the Emperor to establish the right of habeas corpus, the allegation being made that by lack of such provision prisoners were left untried for long periods.

Further, it was asserted that justice was impossible without freedom of religion and conscience, liberty of the press, and freedom of meeting. These measures, it was asserted, were the only guarantees for the right development of the country. It was urged as necessary that representatives of the people should take part in legislation, control of the budget, and the exercise of supervision over all government departments. Other resolutions were added recommending amnesty for all political and religious offenders.

Contempt for the action taken by the minister of justice in preventing the meeting was expressed. Nothing so important in the way of demands for reforms has taken place before.

The foregoing is from the dispatches published in the Chicago Tribune for December 8, together with the following;

In the meantime, the revolutionary organizations have promulgated their idea of a constitution, which has been circulated by tens of thousands throughout Russia. It is composed of forty-two articles, and is modeled partly upon the American and partly upon the British systems.

Supreme authority is vested in the emperor and a congress of two houses, called the imperial douma.

The upper house, or landhouse, is to consist of representatives elected by provincial zemstvos and doumas of the larger cities, one representative for every five hundred thousand of population, and the lower, or town, house, to consist of representatives elected by secret ballot from districts having two hundred thousand population, by manhood suffrage, except persons in the military, naval, or police service or disqualified by crime.

The proposed constitution provides for responsible ministers to sit under the presidency of the imperial chancellor, all subject to impeachment.

The empire is to be divided for self-governing movements into districts, or communes, called zemstvos.

The administration of law is incumbent upon judges who may not be removed except by court sentence. A supreme court is provided to safeguard and interpret the constitution. Finland is held to be autonomous, except as to foreign relations.

The imperial authority is vested in the reigning house, but on the accession of each new emperor he must take an oath to defend the constitution.

The emperor has all the power granted a monarch, but the prerogatives of the imperial douma are carefully hedged. The emperor may prorogue the imperial douma, but elections must occur within four months and the body must be reconvened within six months. Imperial grants will be fixed at the beginning of each reign by the douma.

The document includes a bill of rights, among other things, making all Russians equal before the law, irrespective of race or religion; guarantees of personal liberty; exemption from arrest without process of law; inviolability of domicile and letters; freedom of conscience, of speech, of association, of residence, of occupation, of ownership of land, and of travel, except abroad to avoid military service.

It has taken the people of Russia a long time to wake up to the privilege of questioning the divine right of kings to rule, but as revolutions never go backward, we are pleased to note that there is an element at work among those who are capable of weighing the privileges of political liberty to secure the constitutional rights which the people ought to have. It would seem that these men who are asking recognition and relief from political oppression are willing to concede to the Czar his inherited right to rule. They are not, however, willing to continue longer under the rule of despotism as such, and they have seen and now represent what they have seen: that while the ruler himself may be friendly to his people, the administrators of the laws under him are the real oppressors, and from the acts of these men they want protection. We believe it will come and that speedily; which may God grant, should be the prayer of every free man.

GRACELAND NOTES.

Elder Gomer Reese, Bishop's agent, Montana District, sends in the entire proportion for that district and an additional twenty dollars. This with individuals' subscriptions sent direct to the Bishop will put that district near the front.

Bro. Samuel Stroh, agent of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, makes report showing that district fully answers the call made upon it.

The Oklahoma District was among the first to send in their proportion of the debt but the Saints there were not content upon doing that only, as the following letter from Bro. W. W. Budworth shows: "The Saints of Oak Grove Branch send you bank draft for twelve dollars and twenty-five cents to be used for the benefit of Graceland, on the debt, or for running expenses, as you see fit;" also the following from Sr. Alice M. Case, of Redmoon, Oklahoma Territory, in which she forwards Christmas and college offerings for her children and others and states: "The little girls earned the money they send to the college, and their Christmas offering too, by picking cotton. Some day they hope to enter Graceland as students."

Bro. and Sr. S. B. Kreibel and daughter, Union Furnace, Ohio, write: "We have been waiting for the Ohio District to do something toward paying the Graceland debt and have held our money ready to apply on call of agent, but guess they are not ready or have forgotten our college, so we will remit direct as we feel that when the Lord speaks, it is our duty as his Saints to obey, and he has said that the college debt should be paid. Just wish we had enough of this world's goods to pay it in full, but as we are poor we will send in our mite and pray God's blessings to accompany it, that we may yet see Graceland shine as a bright and morning star with her great influence for good."

Mrs. Nelson Taylor, of Ames, Iowa, while not a member of the church is interested in the college. In a letter to Elder H. A. Stebbins, she sends subscription and writes as follows: "I want to cast in my mite for the college debt. I only wish it were enough to cancel the debt. That the dollars may come so fast that the debt will be paid in a short time is the wish of one who will advocate the work you are engaged in."

Bro. and Sr. Samuel Sloan, of Knife River, Minnesota, write: "It is quite a while since we saw in the Glad Tidings the amount of the college debt that was apportioned to the Alcona Branch in Northern Michigan District, and, as we are members of that branch, we think it time that we were doing our part; therefore we inclose five dollars for the college, and hope that the debt will soon be paid. We are interested in the college and hope that all the Saints may feel it their duty to help lift the burden from it."

WATER BAPTISM.

SERMON BY ELDER FREDERICK A. SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
NOVEMBER 23, 1904.

In taking up the discussion of this question as announced last night we have one of the "old ones" as it is sometimes expressed; and possibly no principle of the gospel has had more controversy over it than this one. And while it may not be possible that we shall bring anything new, still we may refresh your minds, and it may be that we can urge the necessity a little (upon some who may not have seen it before) of complying with this principle of Christ's teaching. I will read a few verses found in the third chapter of John:

There was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews: the same came to Jesus by night, and said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him. Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God. Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born? Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God.

These are the words of Jesus. And I presume of all the teachers that we have ever had, none of them were in better condition, or better qualified to say what was necessary to enter the kingdom of God than he was. And I have sometimes wondered why, with the positive declaration of Jesus Christ himself, as expressed in the last verse that we read in your hearing, there should be such constant controversy over this one question. For, if there were no others, it seems to me that we ought to be satisfied with the declaration made here. And as we contemplate the great array that has been given us of evidences and teachings as touching the question of baptism, it seems to me that we ought by all means to agree upon this one principle, as believers in God, it matters not of what character or name. But it is not so; and we must deal with facts as we find them, and not as we would like to have them. And because of this difference of opinion that exists in the world, it becomes necessary at times to take up this subject and discuss it, trying to impress upon the minds of the hearers, who are seeking to learn of the teaching of Jesus Christ, that this one is just as essential to the salvation of the individual as faith and repentance. It is just as necessary to his perfection as either of these. And as the work of salvation contemplates an entrance into the kingdom of God it brings the matter squarely before us in the statement that the Master has given us here, in which he presents the thought that we can not drop either of them, but "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

And when I begin to look around me to ascertain what has been taught along the line, in order to get some idea of the importance of it, I begin to ask the question: Has there been any teaching besides that of Jesus Christ that would indicate that it was God's divine plan? And I turn right back to the first chapter of John, and there we are informed that there was a man sent from God whose name was John; and he was sent to bear witness, to testify of that light that was the true light that should lighten every man that cometh into the world. And in that man's testimony we discover along about the thirty-first or the thirty-second verse of the Inspired Version, and the thirty-third of the King James Translation, that he begins to make his testimony heard; and I am going to read just a portion to-night, in order to get his own language upon the question.

And John bear record, saying: When he was baptized of me, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him; and I knew him; for he who sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me: Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he who baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. (Inspired Translation.)

Now the thought that I want to get prominently before you is, that this individual, testifying here, is this same John that was sent of God. And he makes the declaration "he who sent me to baptize with water," clearly giving us to understand that in the message that he had to bear, in the work that he had to perform, in the obligation that had been laid upon him when God sent him to mankind, was that especial duty of baptizing with water. That ordinance came from God then. We have here the testimony of this individual indicating that baptism by water has been commanded of God. It stands before us then as one of the especial commandments that God has given. It has God himself behind it. It has Jesus Christ also.

Now why there should be so much controversy, we can not go into details and examine to-night. But I am going to ask you to think of the situation. There is a question that I want to get before you and ask you to think of. Why is it that of all the principles that God has given to the human family, as the requirements placed upon them that shall give them an entrance into his kingdom, and bring them into favor with God,—why is it that this one should be the one that seems to have been picked out the most prominently, and has been fought the hardest, and the world has seemingly sought to evade it all the way through? It has been one of the things that they have sought to get around if they possibly could. They have offered all sorts of excuses, all sorts of apologies, and all kinds of dodges to escape the actual consequences placed upon us here, and have tried to get some plan that will suit them better than that which God has given to them. And the more I have studied upon the question and thought it over, and wondered if it were possible that there could be any other way in which God could give unto us that which we have sought, without compliance with this peculiar ordinance, it has drawn me all the time back to the thought that is expressed by the Master, the Christ. He came as the Son of God; he came without transgression or sin upon his part. And so far as any record that we have, or have ever heard of, there is no one that can impute to him the first transgression or sin of his own making, his own transgression. He stood before the world without sin, without transgressions. He came and took upon him the nature of men; and yet, while he held that condition here in this world, he lived a perfect life. And we find this Christ himself, as described in Matthew 3: 41-46, (Inspired Translation,) coming to this individual, John, the man sent of God, as he was baptizing in the river Jordan, and asking at his hands the ordinance of baptism. Now if there ever was an individual, or possibly could have been, who might be excused from complying with this special requirement that God has given us, it seems to me it would be that individual. If there ever was one that possibly could have set aside that command which God had given and placed there as an obligation, that we must comply with, it was Christ himself. And when John looked upon him and recognized him with the statement, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" we hear the answer that that individual gives, and it comes ringing down into the ages in which we live: "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness."

As I think of that declaration, and make a comparison between that and the conditions that we find so often surrounding us when we begin to talk along this line, I can not help but come to the conclusion that men, in their mortal weakness, have lost sight of the importance of God's command, of the great importance there is attaching to what he has given to us. And we have even gone so far, it seems, sometimes, as to assume to ourselves a prerogative and a right that Jesus Christ never thought of doing; or if he thought of it he put it away from him immediately, and would not comply with such a thought; for his answer, when the proposition was made to him in such a way as to bring the possible thought to his mind, was, "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." Baptism was a part, then, of the righteousness of God. It was a part of the plan that he had given; and Jesus recognized it as such. And though he might not have one solitary sin that could be washed away by the compliance with that ordinance, not one transgression that could be remitted from his stainless character by a compliance with an ordinance of this character, there was the principle that demanded of him (if he would remain pure and spotless, free from the transgression of any law that God had given) compliance with this command which God had given. Otherwise the transgression or omission would have come to him, at least, if no more than that.

Now, are we better than God? Are we greater than Christ? Dare we set ourselves up in a position to make it appear that we can afford to set to one side this especial command that God has given, that has been recognized of the Christ and has been complied with by him? And I have always been glad that he did do it. I am glad that we can point to him with the thought that as a teacher of the people, holding before them this command, and requiring it at their hands, in sending out his apostles to the world to teach the plan of redemption and salvation, and giving them a special command to comply with this part of the great plan of redemption that had been given to the world, Jesus Christ himself had set the example and complied with it, thus placing it before us as one of the divine principles that he himself would not dare to set aside. But man can set it aside, seemingly, without any thought of its great importance. In the Inspired Translation there is just a trivial difference here; possibly we better read it in this third chapter of Matthew: "And then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan, unto John, to be baptized of him; but John refused him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and why comest thou to me? and Jesus, answering, said unto him, Suffer me to be baptized of thee, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him."

We have the commission given in two places, in Mark and in Matthew, especially, in which this particular ordinance is commanded and enjoined upon those that he sent out into the world, that they should teach it to all nations, to every creature in the world. And there comes the declaration in Mark that you are so familiar with, in which he says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." The natural conclusion would be that the individual that did not believe would not comply with the ordinance of baptism, and consequently we could make the statement: He that believeth not and is not baptized, shall not be saved. And when I turn to the Book of Mormon, pages 444 and 445 (small edition) I discover that he places it exactly that way. "Whoso believeth not in me [Jesus Christ], and is not baptized, shall be damned," is the declaration that is used there, making the negative clearly and distinctly set forth so that we can fully understand it.

I do not think it is necessary for us to dwell to any great length of time upon the importance of complying with this command of God, because when we begin to make our examination we discover that every one that went out for the purpose of baptizing had that right, every one of them was commissioned of Jesus Christ and received authority from him.

Now, there is a difference between the simple act of immersion and baptism. The difference may not be in its outward appearance, so far as the outward appearance is concerned. Any individual may take another down into the water and go through the very act that the minister of Christ has gone through; but it does not make it baptism. Unless that individual has been authorized of God, and recognized of him, to act in his name, in performing this ordinance that has been commanded by him, it does not become a baptism in the sense in which it is used in the scriptural application of the term. It is simply an immersion in water, and that is all that can be made out of it. The authority of God attending the administration, the authority of God vested in the administration that will be recognized of him, is the part that is essential and necessary in order to make it effective, and open the gates of the great kingdom of God to let the individual enter there.

Now, God recognized this; and not only did he recognize that this was necessary, but we discover that he so instructed those who were honest and sincere, who were devout in their belief in God. And when one individual, in his endeavor to find favor with God, had reached that condition that he appealed to him, God went so far as to send his angel down to the individual and tell him to send certain men for one, Simon Peter, known as a disciple of Christ, and he would tell him what he should do along that line. In the tenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles you will find that; most of you are familiar with it.

Now when the individual had done it, and this Simon Peter had come down as he had been commanded to do, he was made to see the wonderful things that were received there, after he had instructed those people concerning Christ and the gospel and the things that belong to it, for he had to be convinced that the Gentile could receive the kingdom of God, or an ordinance of the kingdom as well as anybody else, and the divine favor of God as well as the Jew. But when he had been convinced of it, and saw the evidence of God's acceptance manifest before him, he commanded that they should be baptized in water. That was the command of the servant of Christ.

Over in the twenty-second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles we discover another one. Paul, the apostle that has been loved by almost all Bible students, was brought to conviction under the power of God, and in that conversion was sent down to the city; and there one of the servants of God was sent to him, according to Paul's declaration, and coming in and speaking unto him he said, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." And this brings in another phase of this question, or this ordinance. God recognizes his servants, and authorizes them, and expects them to perform this ordinance, and commands them along the line all the way through; and in this instance there was a special object mentioned in connection with it, that it should wash away his sins. That was the point and the object that he seemed to have in mind with the apostle Paul. In our examination of this phase of the question we shall only relate a circumstance briefly touching along the line, enough to show you that the declaration is plainly stated by the scripture as to what it is for. This seems so simple, so plain, and so clear, so far as the Scriptures themselves are concerned, that there ought not to be any controversy over it; but there is.

This individual told the apostle Paul when he came in (and Paul says he was a Jew of good repute among all the people down there) that he should arise and be baptized and wash away his sins. Then we turn back to the first chapter of Mark, and, reading the first four verses, we discover that there was preached "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Luke also, the third chapter, second and third verses, gives us to understand the same thing, that baptism is for the remission of sins. Then we go over to Acts the second chapter and thirty-eighth verse where, on that memorable occasion, the Holy Ghost was poured out upon the apostles as they were gathered together with many people before them. As they were preaching to them upon this occasion, these individuals, being under the conviction of what was preached to them as the truth of God, and recognizing their condition, and desiring to know what must be done in order that they might get out from under this condition, cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

That was the cry. It seems that Peter gave answer to the inquiry that was made, and in that answer he says, that they should be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of their sins. That was the thought that Peter held out; it was what he taught them. And when I pick up the Doctrine and Covenants, and begin to read some of the things that are revealed to us in that, by the prophet of these latter days, (and this is one of the strong reasons why we as a people have held so tenaciously to that which has been taught in the Bible of old, because that which God has given to us in the latter days has come in confirmation of what was given of old,) we are told, as you will find in Doctrine and Covenants 60: 1, plainly and distinctly, that we should be baptized for the remission of our sins. And when we turn to section eighty-three, paragraph twelve, we are again informed that it is for the remission of sins—making a plain declaration along this line, and stating the object and purpose that may have been had in this especial ordinance so clear and distinct that it does not seem that there ought to be any special amount of argument along the line. Yet there is. People do not believe that. I heard a brother tell about a debate that he once heard. The debaters were to have half-hour speeches each, and the Bible was the standard of evidence. The question was the object of baptism. One was an elderly man, and the other a young man, a scholarly man. The statement is made that the old gentleman took the position that it was for the remission of sins; and he read these evidences that we have found here; and when he had read them he sat down; the young man was surprised, but he got up and tried to put in his time. And when he got through, after all the argument he had made, and a long exegesis on the meaning of the word, and all that sort of thing, the old man got up and said, "The Bible is the standard of evidence, and, brother, it is there yet." In spite of all that has been said and done, and in spite of all the efforts that have been put forth to get rid of that peculiar teaching and that peculiar doctrine of Jesus Christ, it is there yet, plain and simple.

Just a word or two on the mode. I am going to treat this briefly if I can. I do not expect to be able to cover all the ground this evening. I do not expect to go away out into some distant field and bring in some mysterious historical declaration on this matter this evening. We want to take the plain teachings of Jesus Christ that are given unto us; and if we can not understand them we never will be able to understand the labyrinth of definitions that has been given to us by men in the world. The Bible evidences are peculiar upon the question of mode; and right here we meet one of the greatest differences of opinion that we have. For when we come to the question of how we shall administer this ordinance which seems to have been so essential that Jesus Christ himself recognized and complied with it, we are struck forcibly with the thought that those of the world, all around us, are differing upon this question; and they have spent weeks and months, and years almost we might say, in an effort to get to some kind of an understanding, where they could agree. And it is a notable fact that in the King James Translation and the Revised Version there is no definite statement in the Scriptures that would say exactly how it ought to be done. It is nearly all inferential, and yet it is plain enough, it seems to me, as inferential evidence, to satisfy any one. But I am glad that way down in the age of the world in which we are living, there has come to us these peculiar revealments of God's divine will in which there have been set forth the teachings that make plain this part also; but we will use some of the Bible evidences first.

I am going right back now to Matthew, chapter 3, and call your attention to it. For when we begin to look around us for the circumstances we will have to be governed by what happened there. "And John went down into the water and baptized him. And Jesus when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water; and John saw, and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and light upon Jesus. And lo, he heard a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye him." (Inspired Translation.) In the declaration that we have read in your hearing it is plain to my mind at least, (and I discover that the King James Translation teaches practically the same thing, although not quite so fully,) that John and Jesus went down into the water, and when Jesus came up out of the water there came the divine sanction of Almighty God to the act that he had performed. It seems to me that that would be sufficient evidence. It would indicate clearly to us that they both went down into the water. They would not need to do that if pouring were the mode; they would not need to do that if sprinkling were the mode.

We will not attempt to inquire into all the different modes, but we are going to bring out, so far as we can, any thought that would indicate clearly just what was done. And when we take this evidence and present it we do it with the thought that John understood, because he had been commanded of God, what was essential and necessary. Jesus evidently understood what the will of God was along the line, and how these things should be done. Farther than that, we are convinced from an examination of history, as far as we are able to get it, that the people living in that day and age of the world understood the mode also; and there was no great controversy among them as to what was the manner in which it should be performed. And we believe that this would indicate clearly to us that it was immersion that was performed there, not sprinkling or pouring. But we will look to another conversion. Over in the eighth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles we have another; and in this one there is the statement that is to me interesting; and we want to read the statement carefully, and then call your attention to a little point or two. I will commence at the thirty-sixth verse:

And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.

Here is an instance in which Philip under the direction of the Spirit of God went and joined the eunuch who was traveling in his chariot, and explained the scriptures that he read unto him. They both got out of the chariot, and went down into the water, both of them. The scripture is quite explicit and clear upon this point.

Right here I have a little instance I want to relate. It illustrates the disposition upon the part of the world around us, in many instances, (though they may profess to believe in God,) to try to find some way of entrance by a kind of baptism to suit their peculiar notions.

While I was working down near Carthage, Missouri, in a mill several years ago, I used to preach on Sundays, but was not in the general ministry. An individual came to a church near by and held meetings every Sunday afternoon. He was an elderly gentleman, very pleasant man to listen to, generally speaking. The neighborhood knew that I was a preacher, although I was working in the mill. Some worked with me who belonged to other churches, and they were very anxious to have me hear the old gentleman, and have a talk with him. So one Sunday afternoon the opportunity offered; I had no appointment out, so I went and listened to him. It happened that on that Sunday afternoon the old man made quite a lengthy argument in behalf of sprinkling as the mode of baptism; and among other things that he used was this instance that I have read from Acts. His explanation of that I never have forgotten; and I suppose I never will. I do not know whether he will or not. "Here," he says, "is one of these passages that quite a number stumble over and think it a very hard thing to explain; but it is simple enough. In those days when they traveled in chariots through a desert country they always carried a great jug of water with them for their beasts, and for themselves. And when the eunuch reached that certain point in the argument concerning the Scriptures he said, 'See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?' Philip says, 'If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest.' And it was very simple and easy; no trouble at all; they had their water with them." And he made his argument, and made a lengthy one. After the meeting he came down where I was; some of his friends were gathered around him, and some of those who were acquainted with me wanted me to meet him. And one of the first questions that he asked me was, "Well, how did you enjoy my sermon?" I told him I enjoyed some of it first rate; but some was quite puzzling. "Puzzling," says he, "how is that?" "Well, you left me in a quandary, and I haven't got it straightened out." "Let me explain," says he, "it may be that I can straighten it out." "All right," I says, "If I remember rightly you read from the eighth chapter of Acts relating to Philip and the eunuch and the baptism, did you not? And if I remember rightly it says 'they came to a certain water,' does it not?" "Well," he said, "I believe it does read that way." "And then," said I, "you read a little farther, and if I remember correctly it says that they 'went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch.'" "Yes," he says, "I believe you are right." I answered, "Well, the quandary with me is, How did they both get down into that large jug, and both come out again as the book states?"

Well, he got red in the face, a kind of titter went around among the people, and he said, "Brother, I would like to have a talk with you some day, but I have another appointment just now." I have not got out of the quandary yet so far as his explanation is concerned.

I only relate this as an illustration. This circumstance I heard, therefore I know it. Why, I ask again, will individuals who are seeking to follow the teachings of Jesus Christ—and we must believe that many of them are honest, and conscientious—why will they resort to such positions as this in order to bolster up a theory that the Bible does not justify them in? Why will they resort to tactics of this description, and explanations so far-fetched as that, when the easier explanation, the plainer and simpler one would have been to admit everything on the face of it; that he came to a certain water, and both went down into the water, and Philip immersed him in the water? What is the use of all the quibble? I ask you to think over it. These are some of the things we are confronted with. I have sometimes thought of the great reformation movement. In some respects I am inclined to favor the old church. I think they take a more honorable view in regard to the matter, and I will tell you why. They come to us frankly and flat-footed and state, "We have changed that ordinance; because we believed as the vicegerent of Christ on earth we had a right to change it," while the others do not. But they perpetuate the tradition that comes from the old church, keeping it along and hugging it close to their bosoms, and seeking to justify themselves in it without endeavoring to go back and present the Bible in defense of it. On that position I am inclined to favor the old mother church, for they take the more honorable ground, as I believe. I have not found anywhere in the Scriptures the evidence that sprinkling is baptism. And I am satisfied that if you turn to Romans, sixth chapter, and read carefully the declaration that is made there, in which the apostle gives us to definitely understand that we are "buried with him [Christ] by baptism," it would explain the inferential statements that are made in other places sufficiently to make it clear to every thinking mind that if you are buried in baptism you would have to be immersed in the water. Sprinkling would not answer the purpose; pouring would not accomplish the work. If you turn to Colossians, you will discover there in the second chapter another declaration that indicates clearly and distinctly to us that baptism, so far as the method was concerned with those individuals, was a burial. Turn to the Book of Mormon, page 445 (small edition), and you will find the mode given to us clearly and distinctly; turn to the Inspired Translation, Genesis 6:67, and you will find the mode given as to how this ordinance is to be performed in the house of God. We have it clearly outlined before us, and distinctly set forth, and new light comes to us along the line of the revelations of God, that have come to us in the day in which we are living, to confirm that which has been stated, and to open our understanding, enlarge our comprehension, and make plain the statements of Christ to the world. And when I contemplate it from that standpoint it presents to me a clear, distinct thought that in the ordinance of baptism by water we are under obligations so far as we as individuals are concerned to recognize it as one of the divine commands of God; and as such, if we want to be obedient to God, we must comply with it. We are also, as mortals, under the necessity of recognizing that we are sinful and weak, and that we need all the means that God has given whereby there shall come to us a remission of sins that we may have committed and that may stand against us upon the great book that God is keeping. Looking along the line of Christ's teachings I discover that he made the statement: "Follow me." "Follow me" has been his admonition; it has been one of the cries that he has sent ringing down the ages. If we follow Jesus Christ he will lead us right down through the depths and humility of the waters of baptism for the remission of sins. And if we want to be a follower of Jesus Christ, if we want to put on the name of Jesus, and take up the cross that seems to have been given as a part of the great burden that must be carried in the world here, in living a Christian life, we might as well get right down at the bottom. And if we commence there it will be easier for us all the way along. But if we seek to excuse and seek to justify ourselves in setting aside one of the commands of God, then there will be the disposition cropping out all the way through that will have a tendency to set aside some other command that God has given. And we see it manifested around us in the world everywhere.

I remember one little incident, now, touching upon this point, and I am going to call your attention to it. I was laboring, the first year that I labored as a general missionary, in a little town called Smithland, and this question had been agitated by us in our tent-meetings, and one of the parties who had attended the meeting wanted to join one of the other churches there. The minister had been to the meetings, and had talked with us. And when this lady made up her mind that it was time to obey the commands of God and enter into the church, she went to the minister and demanded baptism. He said, "All right, we will make arrangements for it next Sunday, and have it done at the church." "No," says she, "you won't; we have got to go to the river." And the man began to work at once to set aside that notion. He told us, "You men have taught that principle, and emphasized it until you are going to compel me to go down to the river and administer the rite of baptism by immersion. Now there is no earthly use of that." And the lady came to us and asked us if we could baptize her and let her join the other church. She said the minister made complaint to her that he did not want to go down there because he would have to get wet, and he would get in the mud; and that they could go down to the church and be baptized and it would not inconvenience anybody. He told her that baptism did not amount to anything, that it was only the outward manifestation of an inward grace and not really essential to her salvation. When we asked the minister in regard to the matter he said he thought anybody was a fool that would advocate the necessity of an individual coming down to a thing of that kind, and he thought it would be better for us, by far, when we went around preaching the gospel of Christ if we would just let these things alone, and let the old work roll along without any trouble along that line. It may be that would suit him better; but so far as I am concerned I stand right by the books. Jesus says, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." I prefer to take the humiliation that must come to us in going into the water and mud if necessary, rather than to take the chance of not entering into the kingdom of God. I prefer to accept the ordinance of baptism, and that by immersion as outlined in the sacred books that have been given to us in the revelations of God in these latter days, than to accept all the nice definitions and distinctions and philosophies that may come through men. I prefer to take the statements of the Lord Jesus Christ, and render obedience to them, recognizing the ordinance of baptism for what God has given it to us for, and be obedient thereto. It is taught in the Bible; it is taught in the Book of Mormon; it is taught in the Doctrine and Covenants. It is one of the fundamental principles of the gospel.

PARENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.

This question is so great and far-reaching that it quite overwhelms thought by its vastness, and in so brief a paper we can no more than touch upon the subject. It seems of little need to urge upon the parents before whom this paper will appear those duties which nature imposes upon us of providing food and clothing for our children, though much, perhaps, might be said on the suitability of the things provided. But we will confine ourselves to the special duties which devolve upon us as Christian parents.

Nature teaches even the heathen and the savage to provide for the physical wants of their offspring, but to the Christian there are other duties of far more importance which he owes both to God and to the children granted to his care, one of which is the duty of educating them. I will not here refer to the education of the schools, though to provide that too is a Christian duty; for my observation has shown me that many parents while striving with might and means to give their children all the advantages that schools can impart, do not realize the infinitely greater importance of home education. No teacher can relieve the parents of this moral watchcare and training, though they may second and assist their efforts.

Many a youth and maiden gone astray from paths of rectitude can trace their downfall to the lack of parental vigilance; for vigilance is the price of many things besides liberty. It is a parental duty to acquaint yourself with all that enters into your children's lives and forms their habits; and this watchcare must begin with their first consciousness. It is far less trouble to begin early to form, or to guide the formation of the child's habits, than it is to break them of wrong ones which they ignorantly form. The children must attend the public schools and it is not possible to exclude them from all undesirable associates; but we can and should make ourselves acquainted with those whom they make their intimate companions in order that we may meet the traits of character against which we would guard our own.

The aim of our teaching should be to fortify them against the evils that they are bound to meet in the world, rather than to seclude them, or keep them in ignorance. Teach them that all the habits that they acquire in childhood will grow with their growth and strength, until those habits control their whole lives, making those lives righteous or unrighteous, according as they become addicted to habits that are good or evil.

Much successful teaching can be done by object-lessons, from the lives of the real people around them, those who have risen to honor because of the strict observance of right living and right doing, inspiring trust and confidence from others. Point them to others who show the awful effects of sin in any of its phases, and ask them which they will elect to follow, reminding them that, "as the twig is bent, the tree is inclined."

Insist on truth in all their statements. Never pass over untruthfulness in matters however small; little lies become great ones in time. Do not make promises where the ability to perform is doubtful; nor threaten them with that which you never mean to perform, such as breaking their heads, or whipping within an inch of their lives.

Such threats are wicked untruths that the child soon learns to detect and because of them loses confidence in your statements at other times. It betrays a weakness in the parents that unfits them to correct a child, who, however great its fault, is many times better than they.

Education, whether at home or abroad, can not be carried on without books. They are a modern necessity. Most children love to read, and most parents think it right to encourage them in doing so. But in all earnestness I affirm that reading is as frequently a curse as a blessing. It is sure to be more the former than the latter where careful oversight is not given to make sure that the reading is such as shall expand and develop the mind in right directions. Here is where some make the mistake of their lives.

I recall a fond mother who told with pride how her boy loved to read, saying that he spent all his spare time up in the hay-loft reading. She was so thankful that he preferred books to the companionship of boys who might lead him astray. Chance threw the boy in my way, and I spoke to him about his love of reading, telling him that I also loved to read; asking him to do me the favor to show me one of his favorite books. Doubtfully, hesitatingly, he drew one from his pocket, and gave it to me. Clearly he seemed aware that the character of the book was open to question. I forget its title, but it concerned the exploits of brigands, robbers, murderers, and their secret rendezvous. I ask you, parents, if that mother had properly interested herself in her boy's reading, could she have felt so complacent in regard to the company he was in?

We become the companions of the heroes and heroines of our reading whether in history or fiction. We enter far more intimately into their thoughts and feelings than it is possible to do with human companions of flesh and blood; and the persistent association of our minds with unholy thought, speeches, and deeds will leave their impure impress upon our own souls. Be not deceived, for "evil communications corrupt good manners" as oft in books as in life.

My soul sickens as there opens to my spirit eyes a vision of the countless ills that spring from the unguided reading of the young—ills of body and of mind. Shall I name them? It hinders the intellectual development, and over-stimulates the development of the animal instincts. Young girls given to poring over tragic love-scenes often become victims of hysterical and other nervous diseases, whose friends are at an utter loss to understand the cause.

I have known instances of complete nervous prostration from this unrestrained and pernicious reading, night after night, in the secret of their sleeping-rooms. There can be no such thing as purity of heart or mind in these undisciplined children. Sunday-school and church become distasteful to them, lacking as they are in the morbid excitement which their lives crave. Understand then that the spiritual instruction of the Sunday-school can never take the place of home education and parental vigilance; and those parents make a great mistake who surrender their responsibility to the school instead of making the Sunday-school the supplement and aid to home training.

Do we plead lack of time? Why then have we shouldered this gravest responsibility—the care of immortals? Can we hope for success in any secular business to which we are unable to devote our time and best talents? And can you say that the accumulation of property, household or social duties, or any other worldly pursuits, shall stand before this in importance? The Lord does not so regard it. Hear what he says of Abraham: "For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he has spoken of him." Do you think that if Abraham had suffered his children to become alienated from the ways and service of God, that the blessings pronounced upon him, in which all the faithful are included, would or could be fulfilled? How this thought overshadows all the cares of this life, and emphasizes our spiritual responsibility to our children, if we would be blessed with the blessings of Abraham, and of his posterity, which were greater than his, for they concerned Zion.

It is true that many parents are themselves so lacking in the necessary training, that they are not capable of selecting proper reading for their children. Right here comes in the work that the Daughters of Zion are trying to do: aiding the inexperienced parent in the intellectual and moral education of children; and the wise parent with the interest of the children at heart should take advantage of all helps.

There is still more involved in this home education, that all parents called to be Saints must take heed to;—the care and usage of the body as a part of their moral and spiritual instruction committed to your hands. Few are aware of the very early age at which immoral practices begin. The only safety is in being ahead of the Devil in your teaching, as the Lord commanded Israel: "Rising up early, and teaching them."

Teach them that all functions of the body have their proper and ordained uses, and that the abuse of them will deprive them of such usages, by preventing the physical and mental development of manhood and womanhood, and causing disease and decay. This teaching can be accomplished without any gross references, or violence to modesty.

Make it your business to know their private habits and teach them the meaning of repentance as well as faith; for it is a farce and a fraud upon the church to admit children to baptism so long as they are victims to secret immoralities. There would not be so many children and youths who are a reproach to their baptism and church membership if these things were more carefully heeded by parents.

As God was manifested to his children through Christ—manifest in the flesh—so Christ must be made manifest to our children through us, in our flesh, his life, his character demonstrated in us.

Teach them reverence for, and faith in, the Scriptures. Let them understand that they are your guide, and authority for all the doings of your life. I remember a mother who to all the questions of her child of "why?" and "wherefore?" answered, "Bring me the Bible, we will see what God says about it"; and no labor was too urgent to prevent turning to chapter and verse and reading what God had to say about it, from creation to any question of right and wrong, as well as of doctrine. And truly on all subjects of knowledge and of moral training the Bible far exceeds any treatise of human origin.

Is your child of a violent or hasty temper? Get your Bible and see what God says about it. Teach it to your child as his word, and show your faith by trying to govern your own spirit. Is your girl of careless habits, or ungoverned tongue? teach her from Scripture what God says about it. You will be surprised to find what light in your perplexities, and help to your hand, there is provided in God's word. He has commanded you to "search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life." "All scripture given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" in the home as well as in the church. But, alas; how few profit by it!

In making use of the Scriptures as an instruction book, do it reverently, not to sustain your side in a contention with the child, to beat him at an argument, but as the basis of your life, your habits, and your faith; because you accept it as given by divine inspiration—God's word; and to you, like the decision of the supreme court, it is not appealable.

There is far too little Bible reading in the homes of Saints. Memory brings to me the picture of a gray-haired father calling his household about him to hear a portion of scripture profitable to the occasion and the day, ere that day was closed by family prayer, not in a perfunctory manner, as a duty to be performed, but as one seeking help and counsel from on high. Memory recalls the reverent voice and tear-moist eyes as he read from the one hundred and thirtieth Psalm: "If thou, Lord, shouldst mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared." And the culprit child who listened to the lesson and the prayer that followed went to bed to think holy thoughts that remain to this day.

We are charged to watch and pray that we enter not into temptation. We who so strenuously maintain his word, that without baptism we can not enter his kingdom, should be strong enough in the faith to also believe that watchfulness, prayer, and obedience to his revealed word are the means appointed to reach moral perfection, ourselves, and to raise our children to perfect manhood and womanhood.

Questions on Reading for January.

What duty has nature imposed upon all parents? Is this an important duty? Are there others of higher importance? What term may cover the whole range of these higher duties? Is school education a necessary part of this? What part of a child's education should be held of first importance? What loss is there in case the parent does not keep close to the child in sympathy and knowledge of all that enters into his life? Is it best to seclude a child in order to keep him from evil? What is said in the reading in regard to truthfulness in children? What oversight of children's reading is necessary? What influence do books have upon our characters? Can the Sunday-school do the work of the home as well as its own? Should success in business be counted of more importance than conscientious rearing of children? What teaching should be given to children in regard to the care of their bodies? Should right doing in all these matters be taught to them as of equal importance with baptism in their service to God? What should be the example of parents? What help may be gained by frequent reference to the Bible in teaching a child? Should there be more Bible reading in our homes?

A Model Report.

"Nothing succeeds like success," and this applies to home department work as well as to any other work in the world.

"The editor of this page is always looking out for good reports of successful work, for the encouragement of others, and the fact that he has found the best report from a visitor that he ever saw, very, very 'near home,' is no good reason why he should keep it all to himself.

"The report in question is made by a lady who has been a visitor almost continuously for at least six years. The editor knows her personally, quite well, having lived in the same home with her for more than a quarter of a century and called her names entirely too affectionate to be made public, so of course they are withheld. Suffice it to say that when we call her 'wife' she always comes.

"Well, about her home department class. She has twenty-one members on her list including her husband, whom she fetches to time on the lessons with commendable regularity, and when she recently came in with the report of the third quarter, 1904, and had it all made out to send to the home department superintendent, her husband, i. e., the writer, was fortunate enough to get his eye on it just as she was fixing it up to send away. She did not think to show it to him because she has gotten so used to good reports that she has quit mentioning them.

"The report showed that twenty of the twenty-one members had studied every one of the thirteen lessons during the quarter, while one had missed seven.

"When attention was called to that the visitor said, 'Yes, but she said she would study them yet. She gave her fifty cents as she always does and I think this is the first time she ever missed a lesson since she began, about four years ago. She said she would study all these lessons and that means that she will.'

"Suppose you see her and show her this report and ask her if you may count them all studied.'

"This was done, and the lady, who never fails, said she had already studied some of them and the others would be surely brought up, and so the other seven lessons were added, and that made two hundred and seventy-two lessons studied out of a possible two hundred and seventy-two! or, just one hundred per cent.

"The total contributions amounted to three dollars and eighty-seven cents, or an average of eighteen and three sevenths cents each. If any visitor with twenty-one or more members has ever made as good a showing at the end of a quarter, we would like to have a copy of the report very much indeed.

"The visitor who made this report takes no credit to herself for the fine work done by her members. She 'lays all the blame' on them for it, and declares that they are the best lot of home department members, for faithfulness, in the town, and that most any visitor could get a good report from such people as they are.

"This story is told to show that home department members often study their lessons as faithfully as the members who attend the main school."—Selected.

The Sunday-School Text-Book,—The Bible.

"There is but one such book in the world."—Joseph Cook.

"Give the Bible the place in your families to which it is entitled; and then, though the unsearchable riches of Christ, many a household among you may hereafter realize that most blessed consummation, and appear a whole family in heaven."—H. A. Boardman.

"There are dark and mysterious things in the Bible now, but when you begin to trust Christ your eyes will be opened and the Bible will be a new book to you. It will become the book of books to you."—Moody.

"Few books can stand three readings. But the word of God is solid; it will stand a thousand readings, and the man who has gone over it the most frequently and the most carefully is surest to find new wonders there."—Hamilton.

"It is the wonderful property of the Bible, though the authorship is spread over a long list of centuries, that it never withdraws any truth once advanced, and never adds new without giving fresh force to the old."—Melvill.

"While the works of once famous skeptics are left to rot on book-shelves, every year sees the Bible translated into some new tongue, acquire a greater influence, and receive a wider circulation."—Guthrie.

"The new movement for the study of the Bible, as the finest of English classics, introducing it into colleges and seminaries of the highest grade, is full of possibilities for Christian progress and development. The marvel is that Christian scholars should ever have permitted the heathen classics to outrank the Psalms of David, the visions of Isaiah and the wonderful philosophy of the four gospels."—Francis E. Willard.

"When the modern critics, in the church and out of it, are enlarging upon the 'Mistakes of Moses' and upon the historical childishness of the Bible, they should not forget to tell us that there ran through the whole Bible period a something that was no mistake, a something whose history rises up before us as real as the earth itself and as beautiful as its four seasons, as magnificent as its June. That something was worship! Theology came and went; fables were told and forgotten; Paul and Apollos differed; James and John were unlike—but in worship all seemed to meet, and the Jacob who saw angels on the night ladder is beautifully akin to Saint John and Paul. All are wonderfully akin to our age, which sings the one hymn of the whole race, 'Nearer, my God, to thee.'"—Swing.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Golden Text.—"Oh, let the nations be glad and sing for joy; for thou shalt judge the people righteously."—Psalm 67: 4.

Your attention is called for a moment to the language of the golden text given above. If we consider it in connection with the statement of Peter that the gospel is preached to those who are dead, to those in the prison prepared for the unrighteous dead, and with other statements of the word of God given through different ones of his inspired servants, we must realize in some degree that we have great reason to exclaim with the Psalmist, "Oh, let the nations be glad and sing for joy; for thou shalt judge the people righteously."

We have great reason to love the Savior of men, who loves all the workmanship of his hands, and has decreed that even the prison doors shall not close for ever on those consigned to that condition. What more glorious promise can greet our ears than the promise that there will come a time when the prisoners shall go free?

We can not study deeply into the plan of salvation devised by the wisdom and love of God without realizing that Christ is a wonderful Savior, and that the work he has done and is doing for us is worthy of better service on our part than the majority of us are giving. Is that not true?

Are not some of us so occupied with the passing things about us that we do not think much of the great work that is engaging the attention of the angels, more than that, of the Father and the Son?

But the man who wrote, "Oh, let the nations be glad and sing for joy," wrote from an overflowing joy in his own soul that could never have been awakened by things that please the physical senses. His spirit sang within him for joy in the realization of what God is, and a portion of this deep joy will enter into your soul and mine as we intelligently cooperate with God in his work of good to men.

GATHER UP THE FRAGMENTS.

Jesus bade his disciples to gather up the fragments of food that were left from the feeding of the multitude; we have fragments of time left after we have done the multitude of things that need our attention, the necessary things that ought to have our attention.

What are we doing with our fragments of time? There is so much worthy of being done, so many things that will add to our usefulness and happiness, if we do them, that it is a loss to have valuable moments wasted in unworthy things.

No time to study the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants! Is that excuse not made many times? But how are those who make the excuse using their fragments of time?

No time to study the gospel means no time to develop in spiritual understanding. Many of the evils that have not yet been eradicated from among us would disappear, were we a more studious people, more earnestly applied to be informed concerning the work which the Master tells us is "intrusted" to our care.

It is a very precious thing intrusted to us, and it may be we are like the man who yesterday picked up a packet of rare jewels and, without examining what he had found, put it into his pocket and straightway forgot he had found anything until he read in the paper of the loss some one had sustained. Then, remembering that he had something in his pocket, he examined the packet and learned for the first time the value of what he had found and had carelessly held.

That priceless thing, the gospel of the Son of God, is committed to us and the work of making it known to the children of men is "intrusted" to us. How are we holding it? Do we even faintly realize its value? Have we ever studied it closely enough to know very much about it? Have we been saying we have not time? If so, how are we using our fragments of time?

A FRAGMENT OF TIME.

A morning caller at the door of a cottage heard voices within in animated conversation and thought there must be a visitor earlier than herself. But, upon entering the little kitchen, this was what she saw: the mother seated by the window working busily and at the table a little girl with a big Bible spread out before her from which she was learning her Sunday-school lesson. It was their voices in conversation about the lesson that the caller heard.

She speedily transacted her business with the mother and went her way to let the good work go on.

Do you not think it would have been a mistake for the mother and the caller to have taken that time to discuss the latest neighborhood news? Do you not think that fragment of time was used in a better way?

Gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost, the fragments of time as well as of other things.

SOME THINGS OUR LITTLE ONES KNOW.

On the day when we studied Lesson 6 of this quarter, I stood by the blackboard as I was about to review the seven classes that compose our second primary room.

I said, "Now, if I could draw quickly and well, I would draw a picture of something that is mentioned in our lesson. Then, when they hesitated, I said, "I will tell you what I would draw. It would be a gate."

Immediately a little hand flew up, and when permission to speak was given, a little girl said, "You mean the gate into the straight, narrow path."

I assented that that was what I had in mind, and then I said, "And I would write a name on the gate." Another little hand was up instantly, and the owner of it told me the name I would write on the gate was baptism.

"And," said I, "I would draw the straight, narrow path, too, and I would give it a name. What do you think the name would be that I would write?" A boy suggested that I could call it the way of the gospel or the way of life, and I told him he was right; but a little girl said I could call it the way of right-doing, and I told her I liked her name for the path, because it was so easy for them to understand.

Then we talked about some of the things we must do as we walk in the straight, narrow path that leads to our Father's house, to which we all hope to come at last.

How many of you have been to Sunday-school every Sunday this quarter? Could you have gone some days when you did not go?

Some of the lessons of this quarter have touched on the second coming of Christ and the introduction of his millennial reign on the earth. With these thoughts in mind, read the following poem, and note that the thought of the brotherhood of man is finding lodgment in many minds; for light is in the world and there are those in what we are wont to term "the outside world" who love light rather than darkness and who are looking with us for the coming of a better day.

A PROPHECY.

(J. A. Symonds, in New Century Path.)

These things shall be: A loftier race
Than e'er the world has known shall rise,
With flame of freedom in their souls,
And light of knowledge in their eyes.

They shall be gentle, brave, and strong
To spill no drop of blood, but dare
All that they may plant man's lordship firm,
O'er earth and fire, and sea and air.

Nation with nation, land with land,
Unarmed shall live as comrades free,
In every heart and brain shall throb
The pulse of one fraternity.

Great minds shall rise, with ampler powers,
A loftier wisdom to impart;
And arts shall bloom of nobler mould
And mightier music thrill the heart.

Then want and woe, and sin and shame
No more shall triumph 'neath the skies
But every life shall be a song,
And earth be more like paradise.

ANNA SALYARDS.

Letter Department.

SPOKANE, Washington.

Dear Herald: As a matter of record we wish to submit the following: On the first of July, current year, we came to Spokane, Washington, on our mission, as assigned by the Kirtland conference. On arriving here we found a small branch of Saints anxiously awaiting our coming, we having charge of the mission by appointment of Bro. G. T. Griffiths. We found the Saints in the throes of church-building.

The church had been started last year after some serious conflict as to size and location. Finally it was fully launched on a beautiful spot overlooking a large portion of the city, on East Third Avenue and Smith Streets. The building's dimensions are thirty-six by eighty feet, divided into alcove, vestry rooms, auditorium, baptistry, etc.

The skeleton frame was up without siding, roof, cornice, or floors,—money was gone and a period was reached when, as is usually the case, a "white elephant" was very conspicuous. A loan was in progress of fourteen hundred dollars to finish the building as the only remedy or means to save the property. A meeting was called at which we presided. After canvassing the grounds thoroughly, Bro. Griffiths suggested with a degree of the Spirit that I be placed in charge of the building to contrive for its completion, or get it into a preservable condition. I was not in harmony with the borrowing of fourteen hundred dollars. My experience and observation was in revolt to such a procedure. So it was abandoned in faith, believing that some other door would open. Debts had been piling up for work, lumber, etc. Liens were in progress and threatening. The Fordham Brothers from Michigan had located here, and had given to the church enterprise as much as all others combined; blessings had come to them financially and otherwise, and as the church was largely their child they felt anxious in regard to it.

Finally they agreed to pay four or five hundred dollars tithing if it could be applied on the church. They would sacrifice some of their property at a low price to raise the money. The good Spirit was working and a door was opening. We began a correspondence with E. L., our large-hearted Bishop, who always has an eye to the church's interests. After we had written him the strenuous condition we were in, and the probabilities of losing all that had been done, he consented to allow it under the peculiar situation.

We then donned the garb of a carpenter, marshaled our helpers, and with vim and energy we all worked for the good of the cause intrusted to our care; and for more than a month the hammer and saw kept time to the songs of Zion, then a short breathing spell, and at it again.

The following number of days' work were cheerfully donated by our brethren: T. W. Chatburn 35 days, F. J. Chatburn 25, George Winegar 21, Watson Fordham 25, M. Fordham 23, William Atkinson 12, Dana Tolmonsan 10, Robert Tolmonsan 9, A. J. Smith 10, W. H. Hooker 4. Most of these brethren had donated much hard labor in the former work of hauling stone and working on the splendid foundation on which the church stands. The Woman's Aid and other soliciting parties were called into requisition, and all worked cheerfully and successfully. To-day the building stands as a monument of the faithful energies of the little band of Saints here. We should not forget especially to mention Bro. and Sr. O. L. Ferguson, who cheerfully and sumptuously boarded us, which was no little thing when the grocer's bill was met.

We have the building all boxed, roofed, and floored, windows all in, and the baptistry room is finished and nicely papered, in which we are now holding our services. Seventy-five people, however, will fill the room, and we are in need of more room. We have all the siding and lumber inside the church for its final completion; and we do not owe any man a dollar, with a small balance still in the treasury. I do not believe any one man can be complimented over another; all have worked cheerfully and sacrificed of their scanty means to accomplish results. The missionaries have worked hard and kept up appointments in city and country. The writer has fallen off in weight twenty-five pounds since coming here and we are yet in fair condition for a fight. We tackled two of the Brighamites on the streets, and the last we heard of them they were at Sagle, forty miles to the northeast, going towards Salt Lake. We are informed, however, that reinforcements are here, and a Bro. Pratt is in charge. We shall no doubt find them again.

We feel worked-down, and our health is not so good. Many things we are thankful for. Some things are very mysterious indeed; others which we can not be grateful for, because we do not understand them. Yet we are in the fight to remain.

Yours in bonds,

T. W. CHATBURN.

WEYBURN, Assiniboia, Canada.

Editors Herald: My oldest brother, James, is now attending Graceland College. There are nine in our family, all in the church except baby Willie. He was blessed by Bro. Alvin Knisley; and we were all baptized by Bro. Knisley. We still keep up prayer-meetings and Sunday-school. Bro. Alvin was here lately and preached a few encouraging sermons; baptized one of Bro. James McMichen's daughters. We are looking for Brn. J. L. Mortimore and R. C. Evans. We hope more will come into the kingdom of our Lord while they are with us. Bro. William Fisher's family expect to visit relatives in Ontario, and we will miss them very much in our meetings. Bro. Fisher is assistant superintendent, and Bro. W. C. Toovey is superintendent. We are looking for more Saints soon; several have taken claims west of us some twenty miles. We expect Bro. Benjamin Berge to be with us this winter. He is a teacher in the church.

Your sister in one faith,

LIZZIE NEILL.

LEE, Oregon, November 18, 1904.

Editors Herald: While we have nothing of a very encouraging nature to report, yet I would like to tell how much we all enjoyed the reunion held here this year, beginning on the 19th of August and continuing till the 29th. We had three very able speakers during the reunion; namely, Brn. H. L. Holt, G. T. Griffiths, and E. Keeler, and how we did miss them when they were gone, especially, Bro. Holt. We have known him for several years; met him the first time he and Bro. Chase were in Coos County about seven years ago. Bro. Holt preached the farewell sermon, and there were but very few in the tent that were not weeping when he had finished. How sad it makes us feel when we part with friends and think perhaps we will never meet again in this world. Yet we have this consolation: If we are faithful we will meet in that grand reunion where parting is no more. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may ever live nearer to God.

Editor Herald: I am thankful to the Lord that he has kept me in the faith so far, and am trying to press onward to the mark. I find many obstacles in the way to overcome, but by the help of God I will persevere. I am living here in the farthest point west in the United States, a few miles from the Pacific Ocean, on a homestead which I entered about eighteen months ago. The people around here are mostly Seventh-day Adventists, and the only people here that have any public service. Only one or two families living here belong to the Church of Christ (Campbellites, anti-organists). The object of writing this letter is this: If you can furnish me with tracts that will suit those people to read I will see to it that every person has something to read on the subject. I would like to get some tracts concerning the seventh day, and also concerning the millennial reign on this earth, and Christ dwelling here with his people during the millennium; also, what is man, mortal or immortal? and other tracts that you think would do those Seventh-day Adventists any good. I am at present so situated that I can not send you any money for tracts, or I would do so. The gospel has not been preached here at any time, and it would do these people some good to know something of the truth.

Yours in Christ,

OLIVER JOHNSON.

Editors Herald: I am still striving to keep the Master's command. I have had many burdens, but have found a friend, which is Jesus our Savior. He had done much for me, having healed me when I called for the elders of the church, and I know that he will heal all that have faith, and obey the gospel, and do his work here on earth.

I will now tell what he has done for me in regard to healing. After an attack of the measles I was left in a poor state and with other ailments had what the doctors called a growing wen in my eye. Four doctors told me nothing would remove it but an operation. It went on five years, growing larger continually, making me very uncomfortable, as it took my eyesight away at times, and I was compelled to wear glasses. One day, after learning of the power of the Master to heal, I called for Bro. J. N. Ames to administer to me, and my eye kept growing better all the time until one night the trouble entirely disappeared without the use of medicines or any other aid, save that of the great Physician. Dear Saints, God can and will do much for us if we will only do our part and work for him, keep his laws, and trust and obey and keep on working till the end. He has done much for me, giving me light in darkness. I am trying to obey his law, and ask the Saints' prayers, praying for you in return.

Your sister in the one faith,

Dear Herald: To-day is Thanksgiving day, and as a nation I feel that we have good reason for being thankful to God for his goodness to us upon this the land of Joseph, for peace and plenty; and in fact it seems to me that we are almost to the fullest extent enjoying that which God through Moses promised as recorded in Deuteronomy 13: 13-17.

A few days ago I returned from a town through the eastern part of the stake in company with Sr. D. H. Blair, superintendent of the Sunday-school association of this stake (I as her assistant) in the interest of the Sunday-school; we visited not only some of the schools but also places where the work has gone down, because of workers having moved away; I also preached four sermons at Henrietta to interested hearers, and also tried hard to help those who stood in need of help (socially). It is indeed sad to see how sometimes Saints will consent for the enemy of their souls to lead them from the right; if we would manifest a humble and godly spirit the evil one would leave us, and then we would be a power for good in the hands of God, and have a good foundation laid for the elders, when they come, to build upon. May God help the erring ones that they may profit by what they have suffered. A most excellent spirit prevailed in all our meetings there. The Saints were edified, sinners were instructed; one gave her name for baptism. At Warrensburg we found everything seasoned with love, joy, and good will. The branch holds meetings at Pleasant View Schoolhouse, six miles north of town. They have now established a mission in town. I preached for them three times, enjoyed good liberty, assisted Bro. Abrahams in baptizing two precious souls, Mr. and Mrs. Davison. The confirmation was at the home of Bro. John Bailey, who is in charge of the mission; a good spirit prevailed. Bro. D. H. Blair met us there and rendered good assistance in the song-service. He and Sr. Blair went home Sunday night. I received word on Monday from Mr. J. P. Gillespie and Sr. Tessie Johnson that my services were needed, and to come without fail; so yesterday their hands and hearts and souls were blended in one; Sr. Johnson is one of our faithful Sunday-school workers, and teacher of a class; and one of God's noble ones. Mr. Gillespie is a young man of promise, an electrician, and has a good business. They were married in their new home, 3900 Central Avenue. May God crown their lives with all that their hearts desire. Other marriage bells are ringing for next Sunday evening.

Editors Herald: I will endeavor to write a few lines from this part of God's moral vineyard. A few of the Saints gathered at our home on Thanksgiving day, held prayer- and testimony-meeting, and had an enjoyable time. The Lord blessed us in our meeting. Since wife and I have started in this work we have been blessed many times, knowing that it is the power of God unto salvation.

HOLDEN, Missouri, November 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: It is a great pleasure to me to address your columns again, and to think that we have such grand literature as HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, not forgetting the Hope, as there are such grand lessons in it. If we would only let them be manifested in our lives, I dare say the work would roll on much faster.

We are living in the day when every department of this great work is being looked after, the education of our children, home for the aged, and industries being operated for the benefit of the Saints who need employment. Oh, what a grand work, and how progressive! Will we keep pace? While this is all of great importance I feel that there is something of more importance that should be looked after. That is a home for the motherless children, that they might be cared for, and brought up in the ways of the Lord. How can we convert the world quicker than by bringing up the rising generation in the shadow of the church? There are many homeless children left to wander from place to place, with no dear parent's care; many motherless children left to battle with the evils of life before them while the father is trying to gain a livelihood, not knowing till night comes whether he is really loser by being absent for the day or not, many having no place of shelter, no sympathizing hand to care for them, only places of ill-fame and the free lunch-counters in the saloon. No wonder the world is rushing so speedily down the broad way to destruction. The children of to-day are not being trained as they should be, and each generation there is a darker cloud rolled in between them and the beautiful sunlight of the glorious gospel principles which should teach us to be the light of the world.

What a grand and noble work might be done. Christ said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." Just think of it, dear Saints. If the kingdom is made up of such pure minds as that of a child, can we afford to let them be surrounded by the bad influences that are in the world to-day? Can we afford to give part of the kingdom, as it were, over to the powers of darkness? I am afraid that there will be more to answer for than many of us anticipate.

Fathers and mothers, do not let these few lines be fruitless, for you do not know when, nor how soon your little ones will be left without your care; and oh, how sad it is for many of them! I know whereof I am speaking, as in just a few short hours, so to speak, I was left with four little ones without a mother's care. What comfort it would be to me to know if I were called upon to go that there was a place prepared for the buds of manhood and womanhood where they would be cared for and protected, that they would finally bloom, in years of maturity, as the rose in its perfection.

This was the desire of the one that was laid to rest, that she might be able to take as many of the homeless as she could get into our own home, but instead she was called away from her own. But God's will be done. Think earnestly of this matter, dear Saints, and I would like to hear from others. In conclusion, if my work would be acceptable, the remaining days of my life would be given to help carry on this great work.

May the Lord bless you all is my prayer in Jesus' name.

Editors Herald: The fall conference and Sunday-school convention just held was a success from first to last. The Sunday-school convention was to my mind the best of any held, and the officers of the district association are entitled to much credit for work done. The program was good and well-rendered, and some fine papers were read treating on Sunday-school work. The attendance was good, especially Sunday, when the Saints' church was just packed full. The preaching was good, and all seemed to feel pleased over the result of the meetings. The weather was fine, and I thought best to continue the meetings during the week, which I did with a good attendance, baptizing one, and leaving others believing. The last Sunday night, the 27th, before meeting, one of the prosperous farmers living near the church called me one side and wanted to know if I could marry people, and answering that I could, he requested me to stop at his house after service as there were two couple that wished to be married that night. Of course I did as requested and had the pleasure of making four two, or performing the double ceremony, and all seemed well pleased, the preacher, too, as he got enough out of it to get some needed supplies for winter use. The last two months have been busy ones for me, and I have averaged twenty discourses a month. I am now holding a series here, and go from here to Clitherall, thence to Minneapolis for the holidays, and to see what can be done there to advance gospel work. I have been especially blessed of late in preaching the word, and my heart goes out in gratitude to God for his goodness to me. My subject last night was, "The second coming of Christ, and a young Jewess girl was present. I should judge she is about twenty years of age. And she told some after meeting that what I said went direct to her heart. I noticed while I was speaking that she paid good attention, and that my remarks were affecting her, and I trust that good will result from it. I am to continue over Sunday and hope she will continue to come. Winter has finally struck Minnesota and that means about five months of cold weather, and some severe cold too.

Yours for the right,

E. A. STEDMAN.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, November 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: I left Brooklyn October 22, arriving here October 26, after a stay there of about three months, feeling assured that I could better my condition in this place. Sr. Matthews arrived here also on November 11. I was very kindly received and well cared for at the home of our Bro. and Sr. R. May, where I stayed for ten days. I sincerely appreciate their kindness shown toward me. I was also very agreeably surprised to meet with our Bro. and Sr. Joseph Arber, who also treated me with great kindness, which I shall ever remember. We have received a most hearty and cordial welcome by the Saints here. We are truly thankful that we can observe the same good feeling and brotherly love made manifest here among God's children as in our native land. The majority of the conditions and surroundings here are better than I have ever experienced, and we feel glad that our heavenly Father has so lovingly watched over us and directed us to this, the land of Zion. He has poured out his blessings upon us in abundance, for which words can not express our gratitude. To us it seems a grand privilege to assemble with such a large body of Saints. The church is a nice building. It has a fine pipe-organ and a good choir. The attendance at the preaching-services seems to average about one thousand members. The membership I believe is over fourteen hundred.

I can not but help admire the Sunday-school, as the way it is conducted reflects great credit on its officers and teachers. The attention given to the lessons is excellent. The attendance seems to average over four hundred members. The Religio here seems very attractive and is, I believe, doing good work.

It seems that the gathering to Zion is quietly going on, and practically unnoticed by the outside world. There seems plenty of scope for all willing workers to help this work along.

We had great pleasure in meeting Bishop E. L. Kelley last Sabbath, who showed great kindness unto us. I sincerely trust that as we each tread through the path of life we may each strive to fulfill our part in this glorious work. May we ever keep in the line of duty that when our heavenly Father comes to number up his jewels we may be fitted and qualified to enter that celestial glory which is promised to his faithful children.

Your humble brother in Christ,

JOHN EDWARD MATTHEWS.

Editors Herald: In HERALD of November 16 there is quite a lengthy letter from V. M. Goodrich, replying to a "protest" and "criticism" from two sisters in regard to whether it is right to sell tickets on articles to raise money for church purposes. He does not bring any proofs to show us whether it is right or wrong; but tries to sustain his position by saying that Bro. Joseph did not look at it as the sisters do or he would not have given it place in the HERALD, and then quotes from "Questions and answers" in HERALD of July 20.

In the third paragraph of "Answers," the Editor (or whoever gave the answers), says, "Personally we have always preferred the raising of means for incidental branch or church work by direct methods." I do not think he finds much support in that for selling tickets on articles to be disposed of.

Then Bro. Goodrich says: "Some might read with profit 1 Timothy 2:9-14." Bro. Goodrich, what is Paul writing to Timothy about, think you? Selling tickets on quilts to be disposed of? If not, I do not think that reference fits the case in question.

Bro. Goodrich then refers to Doctrine and Covenants 104:44 "Wherefore, now let every man" [and inserts "male and female"] "learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed," etc. Then he says, "Weighing carefully that which is contained in references and quotations, I wonder who has been guilty of the greatest blunder, the Daughters of Zion in making a quilt, with their own hands, in love, and unity, and good faith, to be sold by number, at ten cents each, to their friends, or those who sit in judgment, (not much short of a thousand miles distant,) find fault, condemn, and denounce, counter to the opinion and advice of the 'chief shepherd' on earth, whose duty it is to have watch, and to preside over the 'whole body.'"

Now if an act is right, it is right, and if it is wrong it is wrong; no matter whether it is committed one mile away or a thousand, and if I have made so great a "blunder" as the brother seems to think I have in condemning what I think to be wrong, I am willing to bear the blame myself and not try to shift it onto the Editor for publishing my letter.

Please read Doctrine and Covenants 17:24, which says: "Any member of the church of Christ transgressing, or being overtaken in a fault, shall be dealt with as the scriptures direct." It does not say any member shall be dealt with by misapplying a few scripture quotations, and then holding the offenders up to ridicule before the whole church, in a whole column of the HERALD.

Yours in search of truth and right,

SARAH L. WEED.

FAIRLAND, Indian Territory, November 28, 1904.

Dear Herald: I have never written a letter to the HERALD before but thought as to-day was my seventeenth birthday it would be a good time to begin.

I was baptized four years and six months ago by Bro. William H. Kelley and am glad to-day that I am a Latter Day Saint. Not because of any earthly honor it brings, but because of the brilliant prospects it gives me in the world to come.

We have a small church-building here and a good Sunday-school attendance. Of course we are called Mormons and are occasionally reminded of the "evil doings of Joe Smith," but by the help of God we mean to stand.

Father had, very recently, a serious illness which almost deprived him of his speech and I would ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that he may again stand in defense of the gospel.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

GIVEN, Iowa, November 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: I closed a splendid meeting in the Sand Ridge Schoolhouse yesterday. I was here over three Sundays, I had intended to stay about two weeks more, but I took a terrible cold on my lungs, so I had to stop for the present at least. The first night the house was well filled, the second night it was crowded, then some of the near-by neighbors brought some chairs, and set them between the seats, but the people kept coming, till all the seats, all the chairs, and the desks were all full, about two hundred or more inside of the house; and thirty or forty around the door and windows that could not get inside at all. But notwithstanding the immense crowd, we had fine order and splendid attention. And all seemed sorry that I was compelled to close so soon, and they made me promise to come back again. The first night, four different ones asked me to go home with them.

There were two organists, and a splendid lot of good singers, who furnished the music. I have not been in a place for ten years where the people seemed so hungry for the gospel. I dreamed before I went there that I found a herd of starving sheep running in the wilds, and they were so nearly starved that they staggered; and when I began to feed them they crowded around me so close that I could not step; and some were so hungry that they began to eat the clothes from my body. But I fed them with a liberal hand; and I am sure that was the place, for the people were starving for the truth, and the Lord blessed me in telling them the gospel story. One old lady one night after I got through preaching, came to the stand, and said, "I want to shake hands with you, for I know that you are a man of God," and her very soul was rejoicing in what she had heard. One man, who belongs to the Christian (Campbellite) Church I believe, and his wife brought their baby to me and asked me to lay my hands on it, and bless it. Rather a damper on the so-called Christian Church. About twenty-five, who range from thirty to sixty years of age, are very much interested in our work here. One man gave me one dollar and a half when I left his place and said, "Now we will look for you back again." Bro. D. H. Whitsel and his noble wife live close to the schoolhouse, and they do their very best to make the missionary feel at home with them. Bro. Kephart opened the work here several years ago, and I was proud to hear my son in the gospel so well spoken of, for he left a clean track behind him, and made some warm friends for the cause. They would be glad to see him again. I had a call from some "outsiders" at Hastie, Polk County, to come and preach for them. I promised that I would be with them as soon as I was able, but I see by the HERALD that Bro. Mintun was going there soon, so go on, Bro. Mintun, and I will go north. I have a letter from Bro. Sheldon, asking me to come to his aid. As soon as I get over my cold I will be with him. May the Lord bless his work and his people. I remain, Your colaborer for Christ. J. S. ROTH.

Is it Right for Saints to Dance?

Dear Herald: As I have felt directed to-night to write a few lines on the subject of dancing, I will endeavor to do so with the assisting grace of God. I ask the question, Is it right for the children of God to dance? I believe the majority, with myself, will answer in the negative. In the first place, will the Spirit of God go with us into a ballroom? Dare we trust to our own strength to go there? We are told we can do nothing without Christ. Now if we trust to our own strength, are we able to have a good influence over others? And if the Spirit of God will not go with us into the ballroom, can we do good there as children of our Master? God's children must become pure; and can we become pure and like our Master, if we wish to follow worldly amusements? If Christ were on earth to-day, would we find him in a ballroom? And if we wish to follow in the footsteps of Jesus, we must be led by his Holy Spirit. For without him we can do no good.

And our presence in a ballroom, is it for good or evil? We all have an influence over some one, and can we, as children of God, set a good example before others in allowing ourselves to go there?

There are all kinds of people classed together at a ballroom; some good, honest people, while others of the lower class are found there also. They are all mingling together, and when outside of the ballroom, those who are respectable will feel themselves above those whom they believe are not, and with whom they danced in the ballroom. Dear Saints, we all have an influence over some one, let us use it for good. Let us not go any place where we would be ashamed to have Jesus see us were he here. And remember, although we do not see him, he sees us. And let us so live that, while he watches us from his throne on high, we may feel that he is well pleased with us. At all times try to exercise an influence that will be for good, for when good seed is sown on fertile ground, it will bring forth fruit in its season. So let us live that Christ will not be ashamed of us, when he comes to claim his own. For he will gather the wheat into the garner, and the tares he will scatter away.

DELOIT, Iowa, November 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: The Gallands Grove District conference held in Dow City, Iowa, concluded its sessions last night and was, I believe, a real record breaker for unanimity in the business transactions. Chairman D. M. Rudd stated that there had not been a negative vote during all the legislative work. Will the annual conference at Lamoni in April be so nearly of one heart and one mind in its work?

The Religio and Sunday-school conventions which preceded the conference were not as well attended and the time as enthusiastically occupied as we would liked to have seen.

This district is looking forward to the time when it can successfully equip and operate a gospel-wagon, which work has been ably commented on in the columns by Bro. J. W. Morgan of Colorado. J. L. Butterworth and the writer have been appointed a committee to ascertain the cost of a suitable wagon, and report to the next district conference. We would be glad to receive photographs, drawings, or printed descriptions of gospel-wagons, also addresses of builders of such wagons.

Before I close this letter, permit me to request every member of this district, who have not sent me their donation to Grace-land College, to do so before New Year's day. Do not neglect to send in your tithes and offerings also. The district is large and I can not well call on every member.

Hastily and sincerely,

C. J. HUNT.

COVINGTON, Kentucky, November 30, 1904.

Editors Herald: I thought I would like to write a short letter to the HERALD to let the Saints know that the little band of Saints in Covington are still trying to serve the Master in whatever way they are the most able. We have had several good sermons since my last letter. Elder Metcalf of Louisville was here for about two weeks and we had a good sermon almost every night; and after he had gone Elders Kelley of New Albany, Indiana, and Long and Schmidt of Ohio have been with us, so we have not wanted for some one to preach the blessed word.

Bro. Hanner comes over from Cincinnati and is with us in our little Sunday-school and prayer-meeting. We are trying to become stronger and learn more of our dear Lord, so that we may be more able to do his good will. I ask those that are of this precious faith to pray for my old mother, who is in very poor health.

Your sister in the one faith,

HESTER DAMON.

LAMONI, Iowa, December 2, 1904.

Editors Herald: Sr. Mary S. Potter, at Saloam Springs, Arkansas, is desirous that gospel ministers should come to that place and see what can be done in the way of preaching there. Although her husband is not a member of the church, yet, from my acquaintance with him in Kansas, I know that he was, and likely still is, a friendly man. Sr. Potter says:

"We have a good home and can take good care of the elders. Whether we can get a church for them to preach in I do not know, but we can try."

Feeling her isolated state she asks for the prayers of the Saints, that she may be fed and comforted by the Holy Spirit.

Your brother in Christ,

H. A. STEBBINS.

TRYON, Nebraska, November 30, 1904.

Editor Herald: During the summer season the writer took his team and wagon to move one of the gospel tents belonging to the Western Nebraska and Black Hills division.

Bro. and Sr. R. O. Self traveled with me. We visited new points most of the time and made new openings. This is quite an independent way for missionaries to work as they do not have to depend on some one else to furnish them a place to preach in. We think we made quite a good many friends to the cause of truth, and opened up the way for further missionary work. We visited Harrisburg in Banner County, and preached there about two weeks. Bro. Sutton and wife live near this place. They did all they could to assist us, giving us money and other needed things. Others in Harrisburg were very good to us. We moved from this point into the neighborhood of Gary postoffice near the Wyoming line.

Here we met those that were friendly and willing to help us. We were happily surprised here to meet members of the church, Bro. and Sr. Cowley, and Sr. Burns. They came to our meetings and invited us to go home with them to dinner before they let us know they were members of the church.

We moved from this point to the little town of Kimball. This is the home of Bro. Frank Lympus. Bro. Frank is a wide-awake Latter Day Saint, and is a good musician and rendered us valuable assistance in our services. He also took photos of our tents. And when we were ready to move on to another point he was very liberal in giving us money to help pay expenses.

We visited other points and made friends to the cause we love so well and were well treated in all places but one. That was Bridgeport, on the North Platte River. Here they threw rocks on the tent several times.

S. D. PAYNE.

ST. THOMAS, Ontario, November, 1904.

Dear Herald: At each weekly visit of the HERALD to our little home my husband and I eagerly scan its Letter Department for some letter from some one with whom we have associated in the past. When we saw by the HERALD that conference would convene at Buel Center we wished we could be back at Buel for a short time.

On November 6, 1904, quite a number of St. Thomas Saints drove over to London by invitation of the London Saints, and a glorious time was had. It was a day of gospel blessings long to be remembered by us all. Our hearts were made glad as one of our faithful brothers was called to the office of priest. Our branch is a good deal like some others. A goodly number of names are enrolled on the branch book, but so many have grown cold.

As for myself I can say I love this work more and more as the days go by, and my heart's desire is to be faithful.

Hoping and praying for the advancement of the truth I remain,

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. FLORA SPORE.

NEBO, Illinois, November 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: We dedicated our little church-building down in what is known as Howl Hollow, Calhoun County, Sunday, November 13, Elder Willard J. Smith preaching the sermon. Notwithstanding the day was quite cool, we were greeted with a fair crowd, most every part of the country being represented. Bro. Smith seemed to be equal to the occasion, taking for his text Psalm 127: 1: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain." He showed first the inherent principle in men to worship, and how that had been manifested in the patriarchal worship, the worship in the tabernacle in the wilderness, and in the temple, observing the types and figures of the church or kingdom well enough to make it understood to the satisfaction of those who so attentively listened. Next the speaker observed the organization of the church of Christ, calling attention to the fact that no church could be the Church of Christ that was not organized after the same pattern, in organization, doctrine, and practice; also contrasting us and the people out in Utah so plainly that none need go away and accuse us of being of the same stripe, closing with an invitation to other denominations to come and occupy our pulpit when not in use by us. Dedicatory prayer by the writer.

Bro. Smith continued services over the following Sunday with such interest that we were sorry to see him leave; but as his previous arrangements made it necessary for him to go at this time of course we must submit, leaving the matter with Him who doeth all things well. People came out during the meetings that never were out before. Among them were my parents who have so long fought the work.

We are expecting Bro. Arthur Allen to come any day, and hope the work will be taken up and successfully carried on, Hoping and praying for Zion's triumph, I am,

Yours in faith,

W. A. GUTHRIE.

Extracts from Letters.

A letter from Bro. R. C. Evans, Spy Hill, Assiniboia, November 25: "It is cold and snowing. The snow here is not deep enough for sleighing and the cold is intense, but I find prospects grand in this country for gospel work. Money ready, zeal great, knowledge fair, more openings than ten elders could fill. The country is fast filling up, and this is the time to plant the work, while preachers are scarce, people are honest, poor but willing and in fair way to prosper in this world's goods. Bro. Mortimer and I arrived at Millwood last Wednesday night; had to go to hotel. In the morning the ground was covered with three inches of snow. We arranged with a farmer to take us fifteen miles on our way to Spy Hill, we to ride on top of his flour bags. We started over the valley, but had to walk up the mountain, and this we did; but it took our man over two hours to climb the hill. It was slippery. We built a fire in the snow. Bro. Mortimer went back to help the man; I kept Jack Frost and wolves off with the fire. They came, but still lucky, a boy with a democrat wagon came along and we jumped in, paid him an extra dollar and had an eighteen mile ride, only when we walked to keep from freezing. I am well and hope to visit each place and be home by December 23."

Bro. Joseph Clapp, writing from 1634 Grover Street, Los Angeles, California, November 30, says: "Bro. Kelley: Your reply to Bro. I. M. Smith is all right. I never saw so plainly the impropriety of the elders running the church in debt. I believe it was shown me by the Spirit that when the elder has no funds to move on with that the Lord wants him to stop right there and work, and when the work is done and the Lord wants him to move on, he will open the way for him. Paul wanted to go one time and the Lord told him to tarry, for he had yet much people in that city. If I had understood this many years ago I would have been better off to-day than I am, and so would the church. I got the idea that I ought to go, and I did not wait for means, but took it on foot and by hardship and exposure brought on premature old age. I can now call to mind that I made long and wearisome journeys that I ought not, and both myself and the church suffered in consequence. Oh, I wish I had it all to do over again! I know I could do better next time. Your reply is so plain that I think it can not fail in doing good."

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Southern Dakota Mission: As the winter season is coming on and the crops throughout our territory generally have been good, let us remember our obligations in tithes and offerings to help along the Lord's work. As yet we have received only about half our apportionment on the college debt. As it will be impossible for me to visit all of you personally have arranged with our missionary, Bro. Eli Hayer, to receive money from any of the Saints he may see and receipt them for it; others can send directly to me as formerly. We have a large field, and at present only two missionaries, but with diligence on our part, in contributing to their temporal support, the force might be increased. Thanking you for past efforts in this direction, and believing you will do your duty in the present emergency, I am,

Your colaborer in the blessed gospel of Christ,

W. W. WHITING.

BONESTEEL, South Dakota, December 2, 1904.

To the Saints of the Des Moines District: Having moved my family to Lamoni, Iowa, my permanent address will be there instead of Dallas Center, Iowa. All communications so addressed will reach me without delay.

In sending remittances please bear in mind that a bank draft on a Des Moines bank is much more convenient than post-office orders as the draft can be used in any part of the field at any bank. And, dear Saints, do not neglect your duty in regard to the financial needs of the district. When I was appointed to act as Bishop's agent for the district on the sixth day of January, 1904, those so appointing and in charge of the financial interests of the church stated that "they would consider that I had made a success of the work if I succeeded in getting the name of every member of the district upon the tithing record if the amount be only five cents for those from whom no more was due." Up to this date, seventy-eight out of a membership of over eight hundred have rallied to the support of the work of the district. May God bless the few and encourage the many to put their shoulder to the wheel and unite in a determined effort to roll on the great cause of righteousness in the earth.

I will take this opportunity to inform the Saints of the fact that we have over two hundred dollars to raise to meet our portion of the college indebtedness. Our report must be made up January 1, 1905. Shall we be compelled to report failure for the Des Moines District when fifty cents per capita would exceed our amount.

Your first duty is to the tithing fund of the church, but stop and consider, and see if you have done your whole duty in this regard; and if in the investigation you find you have, ask yourself the question: Can I spare something to meet the debt that exists on the college?

One more matter I must mention and that is that we are compelled to report to the conference the fact that the missionaries of the Des Moines District have drawn the major part of their actual expenses of preaching the gospel from the tithing fund of the district. I wonder how those in charge will feel in regard to sending missionaries among us another year. Please do not forget that a missionary can not travel and clothe himself without funds. I mention these matters in this notice because the HERALD will reach many that I will not be able to see personally.

May God bless his people and may we put forth a more persistent effort to do his will that we may inherit greater blessings, is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,

W. CHRISTY, Bishop's Agent.

LAMONI, Iowa, December 4, 1904.

To the Saints of the Kentucky and Tennessee District; greeting. As the year is drawing to a close, and it will be impossible for me to visit each member, I take this means of informing those who desire to have their names entered on the tithing book for 1904 to please send your tithes and offerings to me at Fulton, Kentucky, before December 31. Yours in the Master's work,

J. R. McCLAIN, Bishop's agent.

Died.

CHAPMAN.—At Scranton, Kansas, November 21, 1904, at home of her parents, Bro. and Sr. John Chapman, little Amelia E. Chapman passed peacefully away after suffering ten weeks with something like rheumatism or dropsy of the heart. Amelia was a bright, little, Sunday-school scholar. Nothing would keep her away when well. She had great faith in God. She was born at Coal Creek, Colorado, November 9, 1893. Funeral was from Saint's church, sermon by Alma Booker.

GEARY.—At Oak Harbor, Ohio, November 16, 1904, of heart disease, Sr. Richard Geary; was born on Amherst Island, Canada, March 31, 1828. Seven children survive her. She was baptized into the church September 3, 1903, by Elder George D. Washburn, her son-in-law. The remains were brought to North Bradley, Michigan, for interment. Elder U. W. Greene preached the sermon in the presence of a large concourse of friends who sympathized with the bereaved ones in their loss. Sr. Geary greatly enjoyed her religious experience and the Holy Spirit's presence attested her acceptance with God.

LYTLE.—At Independence, Missouri, November 27, 1904, Bro. Omer G. Lytle, aged 65 years; born in Adams County, Indiana, October 19, 1839; baptized May 28, 1862 at Belvidere, Iowa, by "Uncle" John A. McIntosh. Was later ordained teacher, diligently filling his office while strength remained. February, 1860, he married Miss Fannie Lane, who, with two sons and two daughters in California, and one daughter in Independence, survives him. One son deceased. Always cheerful and industrious, he had the esteem of all. Funeral from the church November 29, in charge of Elder Hulmes. Sermon by Elder Garrett. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

We shall greet him at home we shall greet him
Though now he is hid from our sight;
We think of the time we shall meet him,
And it fills our hearts with delight.

We have laid him away in deep sadness,
Yet not without hope in our breast;
For again he will join us with gladness,
And enter the heavenly rest.

The Christmas Opportunity.

The poor are especially to be commiserated in midwinter, when their penury is in sharp contrast with the affluence of their neighbors. Whether they are "worthy" poor or not, if they are cold, suffering, and forlorn, Christmas is a good time for extending them a warm hand-clasp and giving them a substantial lift, not mere charity, but something more—a loving human kindness. If possible, Christmas should bring our unfortunate friends something that is not mere almsgiving, that partakes rather of that large tenderness which prompted her who broke her jar of precious perfume over the head of our Lord.—December Woman's Home Companion.

A New Timber Seasoning Process.

The Bureau of Forestry, at its new experiment stations in Wisconsin and Michigan, will make seasoning tests of cedar and tamarack telephone and telegraph poles which have been submerged in water for varying lengths of time. This is an entirely new line of experiment. That immersion in water seems to affect the rate of seasoning has often been noticed. Rafting is said by many lumbermen to improve timber, and logs which have lain for a long time in swamps are in some places eagerly sought for their superiority for certain uses. But just why this should be true, and what practical use can be made of the fact in seasoning generally, are matters which have never been thoroughly ascertained.

It is known that the sap of green wood contains certain soluble substances—albumen, starch, sugars, tannin, etc.—which undoubtedly are leached out of timber immersed in water to a greater or less extent. In ordinary seasoning these substances are left behind as the water evaporates and are deposited on the cell walls. As seasoning begins on the outside these deposits must act as clogs which virtually bottle up to a certain degree the water in the interior. It is possible also that chemical or physical changes in the wood cells are produced by soaking.

In these new tests the poles will be submerged in water for different periods, from one week up, to decide what length of time will give the best results. They will then be placed on skids about two feet above the ground and left to dry. They will touch each other, but will be laid only one layer deep. At the expiration of every thirty days each pole will be weighed, and also measured to ascertain any shrinkage of its circumference. Unsoaked poles have furnished a circumference shrinkage of one sixteenth to one eighth inch in thirty days, and of one fourth inch in six months.

An important matter in seasoning is the loss in weight. Past experiments with white cedar poles have shown a loss in weight of about one third after sixty days of drying. In the case of chestnut poles the same length of time showed a ten per cent loss. These poles are long and very heavy, and such a large weight reduction means a decided saving in freight charges, and increased ease in handling. But this advantage, though important, is small in comparison with the gain in lengthened service. Further, with greater resistance to decay it will be possible to lower the present butt diameter requirement, which is now based on the certainty that rot will soon weaken the power of the pole to withstand strain at the surface of the ground. Altogether, if the soaking process fulfills what it seems to promise, it will have a notable bearing on one of the large branches of timber consumption, as a moment's thought of the number of poles in use in the entire country will show.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1901, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-b-c,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" Three boxes Quit-to-bac postpaid only $1.50 guaranteed to cure or money refunded for the asking. Address, (Bro.) E. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

IS IT LAWFUL TO LEAVE ONE'S BODY BY WILL TO A MEDICAL INSTITUTE.

Is it lawful for any man or woman whether a Saint or not, to state in his will a desire that at his death his body be given over to some medical institution, for the benefit of medical and surgical science, or in other words for the benefit of suffering humanity?

This question is asked with a view to the law of the church, we assume. This being the case we can only say that there is not to our knowledge any law upon the subject. It may be a subject of statute enactment in the Province of Ontario, whence the query comes, or of some of the United States, but of this we are not aware. Upon the hypothesis that whatever is not forbidden in law may be performed if wisdom or necessity demand, or if the act be innocent in itself, it is lawful; a person may by will dispose of his body for the medical fraternity or for any specific purpose connected with surgery by which good may be done to the living. We therefore are of the opinion that such a disposal would be lawful. It is possible that relatives might intervene and prevent the devisees from carrying out the bequest upon the part of the testator on the ground that it was an unnatural thing and the person must be partially of unsound mind who should make such a bequest. We think we have read somewhere of such a case.

When a mission is opened and certain of the priesthood placed in charge by the president of the branch, and the president appointed over the mission requires the services of a brother (who is able and willing) to assist him on the street corners but the brother is not in the priesthood, and the president of the mission calls upon him to speak or pray, is it lawful for him to do so?

We are of the opinion that such a procedure would not be unlawful, but might be permissible from the nature of the circumstances mentioned. It is provided, however, that the church could not send the men out to preach, build up the work, organize branches, etc., who had not been properly ordained and who were not known to the church as having proper authority. We should therefore answer this question, Yes, subject, however, to reference to the mission and district authorities where such occurrence might take place.

When a brother, not in the priesthood, is traveling and is invited to preach, give an address, or lecture on our church, is it

EVERY young life has its disadvantages. Every young man or woman makes mistakes. These are part of the fortunes of war. The brave soul does not retreat because of them. It faces disadvantage and mistake, and makes the best of them. "He is not the best Christian nor the best general," said that soldierly soul, Frederick Robertson, "who makes the fewest false steps. He is the best who wins the most splendid victories by the retrieval of mistakes. Forget mistakes; organize victory out of mistakes." Never be discouraged by temporary failures. —Northwestern Christian Advocate.

lawful for him to do so, except he is duly called and ordained in the priesthood?

We answer this as in the question going before it, that such a case might not be contrary to law, as it would be determined upon the nature of the circumstance under which the action took place; as before, in the question just answered, the church could not send a person out to do that kind of work who was not ordained. Any member of the church, however, in case conditions of the kind mentioned occurred, certainly would not be taken very severely to task if he defended the faith and presented the matter in as good light as he knew how, and would probably receive a portion of the Spirit to help him if he were a faithful man. This answer is also subject to inspection by the missionary in charge and district authorities where the case might arise.

Will you please oblige me by giving information as to the duties and rights of an honorary president of a Religio? How do you harmonize Luke 22: 36, with Doctrine and Covenants 83: 13?

The rights of an honorary president of a Religio would largely depend upon the courtesy of any Religio association at which he might be present. He might preside if requested to do so in person, or he might be associated with the president by request or by vote of the Religio as an act of courtesy; or by request of the acting president, he might be so associated, unless objected to, in which case it would be necessary to be put to vote. He could not claim the right to preside at any Religio at which he might be present and such claim be accorded as his absolute right. His being an honorary president of a Religio would entitle him to be received at any Religio association and be granted voice in said association.

We do not undertake to harmonize Luke 22: 36 with Doctrine and Covenants 83: 13. The commandment to the disciples given at the time involved a present action, and was in accordance with the right of the Master to give any command for the benefit of his work which he saw at the time to be necessary. At one time he commanded them not to go into the ways of the Gentiles, but to go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. After this he commanded them to preach the gospel to every creature, and enforced the command upon Peter by virtue of a vision, which showed him that the Gentiles were entitled to receive the benefits of the gospel. He had commanded them not to strike or smite, and yet at this time he commanded them to procure warlike weapons; and when two swords were shown him he said, "It is enough." As to the commandment in section 83: 13, at the time it was given the conditions were decidedly different to what they are now, and subsequent revelations to the church show clearly that we may now prosecute missionary labor according to the climate and conditions in which the church and its missionary force may be found. We do not think any effort is necessary to endeavor to harmonize these passages.

CONCERNING GRACELAND COLLEGE.

The following questions and answers have been asked of and answered by the Bishop:

Would not the objection that no notice was given as required under the rules, prior to action by last General Conference on the college question, be overcome by a suspension of the Articles of Incorporation?

No. First, there was no attempt made to suspend the Articles of Incorporation or any rule therein by the conference. Second, the church could no more suspend the Articles of Incorporation of the college, than a State or National Bank can suspend their charters and appropriate the bank funds to some other purpose than the legitimate business for which the bank is incorporated.

Is not the college a creature of the church and is the thing created greater than the body that created it?

The college is a creature of the church by virtue of and under the law, the college being duly incorporated, and the law of incorporation of such institutions in the State made a part and portion of its Articles, and the church in order to destroy, change, vary, or in any way modify the same, must proceed according to the law and rules of the incorporation. In this, as in the kingdom of God, or church, the law is paramount, and must be followed or death and evil is the result.

Why was it not proper for the conference to pass a vote expressing its opinion upon stopping the college and turning the property over to other uses, without notice being given?

Because of prior adhering rights guaranteed to the body by a resolution of the body passed by a prior General Conference by unanimous consent and which the conference could not in justice ignore. The church can not afford to set the example of violating its laws.

If due notice had been given as required under the rule before any such "opinion" was asked for it is likely the vote would have been the reverse of what it was, and a contrary "opinion" obtained. If not, why was the notice not given? It is a wrong against the college and one calculated to do it great injury, and a wrong to each absent member of the church, to pretend to take, and publish, an "opinion" which has been obtained in violation of the rules governing. It is not necessary for the church or an individual to do wrong in order to be right.

Is the action of the Board of Trustees in not following this "opinion" of the conference an attempt of the creature to rise above its creator?

No. The Board of Trustees were duly and legally appointed by proper action of the body and were a creature of the body to perform the duties of their office. The attempted act of the body to instruct the trustees to go contrary to their obligations as trustees under the incorporation, and divert the property to some other use, was done contrary to the law and without any authority or right, and the trustees at their peril were bound in their office to follow the law.

It is no uncommon thing for a trustee who diverts property, of which he is trustee, to other uses than that lawfully declared in the trust, to land in the toils of the law, and it requires more than an illegal church resolution to make the wrong right.

STUDY OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

The Chicago Tribune is publishing a series of short studies of different governments, the first of which appeared in the issue of December 15, 1904, on the subject of Great Britain. We reproduce this, as it is short, concise, and will give those who may be desirous of becoming familiar with that government, the duties and privileges of the king and the powers of the two houses of parliament in contrast with the government of the United States. It is very readable and instructive:

Russia, the most despotically governed of the great monarchies of our time, and Great Britain, the monarchy whose people enjoy the largest measure of freedom and self-government, resemble each other in one important particular. Neither has a written constitution. The constitution of England, like that of Russia, consists of law, precedent, and custom.

The United States has a written constitution, and when one wants to learn what are the powers of the president and congress or the rights of the citizen, the state, or the nation he can open a book containing this document and it will tell him. The constitution of England, on the other hand, is "unwritten," that is, is diffused through royal ordinances such as Magna Charta and parliamentary enactments such as the Bill of Rights, and through countless decisions of the courts and numberless customs.

Another wide difference between the constitutions of the United States and of England is that our constitution can be changed only after a proposed amendment to it has been submitted by congress to the people and indorsed by legislatures or conventions of three fourths of the states, while parliament, which has supreme legislative power, could, by a majority vote of both houses, make any changes it pleased, no matter how radical and sweeping, in the constitution of England. It would be a great mistake, however, to infer from what has been said that the principles of the English constitution are doubtful or fluctuating. They are as certainly known and as stable as are the provisions of the constitution of the United States.

In theory the king is the chief executive of Great Britain. In theory the king, and the king alone, sends and receives ambassadors, makes treaties, declares war and makes peace, creates peers, vetoes legislation of which he disapproves, and is the supreme fountain of justice, just as he was in the time of the Tudors. But the practice of the English constitution is widely different from its theory. In practice the executive authority of the nation is wielded by the cabinet. When a cabinet is overthrown—that is, when, by a majority vote, the house of commons rejects one of its principal measures—the ministers resign and the king sends for the parliamentary leader, or one of the parliamentary leaders, of the party by which the cabinet has been overthrown, and asks him to form a new ministry. This leader, after consultation with the prominent members of his party, sends the sovereign a list of the men whom he wishes appointed to the chief offices of state, and the king forthwith appoints them. The man on whose recommendation the appointments are made then becomes prime minister and the real chief executive of the nation. The other appointees, while nominally they become the advisers of the king, become really the advisers of the prime minister.

The king is constantly consulted by the ministers, he occupies the most conspicuous and dignified position in the kingdom, and of course he exerts some influence on public affairs. But in the main he is only an exalted and handsomely paid figurehead. He no longer exercises his power of vetoing legislation. He does nothing, in fact, of which his ministers disapprove. On the other hand, they care little what he thinks about what they do, so long as they are backed by the nation. The cabinet initiates all important legislation, it declares war and makes peace, it makes treaties, it shapes the policy of the mother country in her dealings with colonies—it performs or supervises, in short, all the duties of the executive department of the government at home, in the colonies, and abroad. The cabinet consists of eleven or more officials.

The prime minister usually holds the office of first lord of the treasury. The principal other great officers are the chancellor of the exchequer, the secretaries of state for the colonies, for home affairs, for India, and for war, and the chief secretary for Ireland. The members of the cabinet must all be members of parliament. The supreme legislature of England, the parliament, is divided into two chambers, the house of lords and the house of commons. The house of lords is composed of about five hundred English hereditary peers (dukes, earls, marquises, viscounts, and barons), two archbishops, twenty-four bishops, sixteen Scottish peers elected by the whole peerage of Scotland, twenty-eight Irish peers, elected by the whole peerage of Ireland, and four judges, known as the lords of appeal in ordinary. In legal theory the house of lords has the same power to initiate, modify, or reject legislation as the house of commons. In practice, however, the house of commons has become the controlling factor in lawmaking, and, while the house of lords may for awhile resist the passage of measures proposed by the house of commons, it always yields if the commons are persistent and it becomes evident they are backed by the public opinion of the nation.

The house of commons is the most interesting and the most powerful legislative body in the world. By slow but steady, unremitting encroachments upon the prerogatives of the king and house of lords it has constituted itself the supreme power in the British government. It is the controlling factor in the executive as well as in the legislative department, for it makes and unmakes cabinets as well as laws. Nominally the ministers are the ministers of the king, but in fact they are the agents of the omnipotent house of commons.

Down the middle of the historic hall where the house meets runs a broad aisle. At the farther end of this aisle sits the speaker. A short distance below the speaker's desk is a table. On one side of this table is the "treasury bench," on which sit the cabinet ministers, and on the benches back of them are their supporters. Just across from the ministers, on the other side of the table, sit the "leaders of the opposition," and back of them are their supporters.

Here, face to face, with only a table between them, the leaders of the party in power and the leaders of the party in opposition do daily battle during sessions of parliament for possession of the government, and nowhere in the world can finer debates be heard. The prime minister leads his party in the house of commons if he belongs to this house. If he belongs to the house of lords, leadership in the house of commons is intrusted to one of his lieutenants, usually the chancellor of the exchequer, who is called "leader of the house of commons." A large majority of the measures considered by the house of commons are prepared and introduced by the ministers. If an important measure advocated by the minister be rejected by a decisive majority, or the house of commons pass a vote of "want of confidence" in them, the ministers must either resign and turn the government over to the leaders of the opposition or dissolve parliament and appeal to the voters; and of course they must resign if, after a dissolution, they are condemned at the polls.

The house of commons is composed of six hundred and seventy members, four hundred and ninety-five of whom are chosen by the people of England, one hundred and three by the people of Ireland, and seventy-two by the people of Scotland. They are elected for a seven years' term. In practice, however, parliament has always been dissolved and the constituencies appealed to before the term of the members of the house of commons had expired. Members receive no pay. All citizens of the realm are eligible to election except ministers of the gospel, election officials, and English and Scotch peers. Many Irish peers have been members of the house, Lord Palmerston being the most conspicuous example.

England and Scotland are divided, for purposes of local government, into counties, districts, parishes, etc. Parliament and the ministers have as complete control over the affairs of these divisions and subdivisions as they have over the country at large. As a matter of fact, however, the people of Great Britain enjoy a larger measure of real local self-government than any people in Europe.

The English judicial system has long been much centralized, most important cases being tried in London. The house of lords is technically the supreme court of appeal, but its judicial functions are performed by its ex officio president, the lord chancellor, and the four lords of appeal in ordinary, who are always learned lawyers. #### EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Paul M. Hansen sends us a picture postal card of the botanical gardens, Sydney, Australia, writing from Wallsend, New South Wales, November 15, 1904, giving us a brother's hale, "A merry Christmas and a happy New Year." We reciprocate the greeting.

We have received from the Open Court Publishing Co., 1322 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, sample pages from My Little Book of Prayer, by Muriel Strode. The first prayer is as follows: "Give me not, O God, that blind, fool faith in my friend, that sees no evil where evil is, but give me, O God, that sublime belief, that seeing evil I yet have faith." It is worthy of thought, especially the closing clause.

Bro. Frederick M. Smith is in Washington, District of Columbia, with Bro. F. M. Sheehy, visiting the National Capital and attending to some church business made necessary by the action of the French Governor of the South Sea Islands in forbidding the church membership to meet in conference next April at their annual meeting. By the advice of American Consul Doty we have sent documentary statement and evidence to Bro. Fred. M. Smith, of the Presidency, to be presented to the Iowa senators to call attention of the proper officers to the action of the Governor in discriminating against the Reorganized Church forbidding them to assemble in conference, while allowing other churches to hold their sessions without interruption. Bro. Smith is authorized to exercise discretionary powers with regard to presenting the papers referred to. We presume that he and Bro. Sheehy will be in attendance more or less of the time of their stay in the capital at the sessions of the senatorial committee on the Smoot case. We await reception of documentary evidence in regard to what the witnesses in said case testify to.

Bro. E. B. Morgan, our missionary in Wales, is an all round man who keeps in touch with current events among the nations and the societies, so far as public information concerning them is concerned, especially that which in its nature applies to, or is of relative value to the latter-day work. He has sent us from time to time since his work began in Wales copies of the news journals in which items of news and articles of information have occurred which he was inclined to think we might be interested in, or that would be of interest to the readers of the HERALD. The last two sent us are copies of the South Wales Echo, for November 28 and 29. In these are marked articles concerning the alleged miracles said to have been wrought through the instrumentality of a Catholic father, Ignatius by name, also accounts of the wonderful revival work of one Evan Davis, a Welshman who is preaching in various places in Wales. It reads like an old-time religious wave, like those of the early days of the nineteenth century. It is not an epidemic but a sporadic recurrence. Undoubtedly some good will come out of it, as it may rouse religious thought among many of the people. Bro. Morgan also sent us clippings from the current journals concerning the Church Congress at Liverpool, England, for insertion. We do not find space for them as a whole though they might be of interest. We may select some of the more pungent. They occur in the daily Telegraph, one of London's greatest papers.

GRACELAND NOTES.

Bro. and Sr. J. A. Snodgrass, Bates City, Missouri, send in their offering on college debt account and write: "We want to see Graceland prosper, and feel it our duty to make some sacrifice to help clear the debt."

Bro. L. F. Ferguson, Hardin, Missouri, writes: "I have been waiting for some time to hear of the agent of the Far West District making an effort to collect our portion of the college debt, and as this district seems slow in paying its portion, I will send five dollars direct to you; and if the agent should try to make up his portion I will try to help a little more, for I would not like to see the report from the next General Conference, that the college would be closed for lack of funds.

THE CHRIST.

SERMON BY ALEXANDER H. SMITH, AT BURLINGTON, IOWA, DECEMBER 20, 1903.

I have selected this morning for our reading lesson a portion of the third chapter of the book of Acts, found in the New Testament, the record or history of the acts of the apostles, as they labored in the name of the Lord Jesus:

Now Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour. And a certain man lame from his mother's womb was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple; who, seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple, asked an alms. And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John, said, Look on us. And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something of them. Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk. And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up: and immediately his feet and ankle-bones received strength. And he leaping up stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God. And all the people saw him walking and praising God: And they knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. And as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering. And when Peter saw it, he answered unto the people, Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk? The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers hath glorified his Son Jesus; whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go. But ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you; and killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses. And this name, through faith in his name, hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know: yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all. And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers. But those things which God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled. Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you.

I believe I may justly say it affords me a certain amount of pleasure to stand before you to-day and speak relative to the character represented in our reading lesson, and endeavor to tell the story, the old, old story of Christ and his mission. I have not thought of anything that is new that would be nearly so interesting as to pass in review some of the events of the life of him of whom we have read, even Christ Jesus.

The world is getting old; that is, the earth; and there are events transpiring that are of a character to lead us to look backward in the history of the world; for in looking backward and reading the history of the world carefully we may judge much of that which shall occur in the future, we may be made wise relative to the intents and purposes of God the creator, who hath made the world, and hath held it in his hands, by his decree and by the laws understood by him, all the ages of its existence.

To-day, and this coming week, the name of the Lord Jesus will be heard throughout all civilized nations, all over the world. I may say also that his name will be heard in praise not only among the civilized peoples, but will also be heard among the heathen. For we are living in the age when the prophetic statements made by this man, Jesus, are being fulfilled. The one relative to the plan of redemption, which we call the gospel, is fast being fulfilled. That is the statement made: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

Did you ever let your thoughts, for a moment, go back over the physical history of the world? not so much really the religious or spiritual history of it, yet at the same time we can scarcely study the physical history of this world without studying its spiritual relations and the history of those spiritual works which have been done in the world. I remark, Did you ever let your thoughts go back over the history of the world and see how wonderfully it has been brought to its present state, and the habitations of men as they have been spread over the wide surface of this earth? Did you ever let your thoughts go back to the little principality known as Palestine, in the Eastern Hemisphere, one of the smallest, almost, of those represented among the nations of men at the time when this man Jesus entered in upon the arena of earth's career, and realize, since the time of his advent and his teaching among the children of men, how wide-spread had become the knowledge of him; and how political changes have passed over the world's history; how like a wave, produced by the dropping of a pebble in the water, the circles have widened out, spreading, and gradually receding from the center, until the waves have reached the utmost confines and bounds of the world and its continents? This gospel of the Lord Jesus has spread until it has reached the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills, and, like those waves, has beaten upon the rocks and started in its return, as the waters will. And now that which is returning from the utmost bounds of this world, (using Palestine as the center,) the waves of light, the waves of truth are beating backward until they shall reach the center from which they emanated. And all the world is feeling the influences of those principles taught by this man, Jesus. Principalities and powers, kingdoms and republics, all political nations to-day are feeling the impulse of power that went out from this man of whom we have read, of whom Peter says the heaven must retain until the restitution of all things. And there is a time, in that which is promised, that he will come. He will not, then, when he comes, come as the babe in the manger, to which we have reference made so frequently in the representation of the birth-time of our Lord and Savior. There is a time when he will not come that way; and the object of our gathering to-day, the object of the gathering of those that believe upon the Lord Jesus all over this broad land, and in all the nations of the earth, where they gather together under the name of the Lord Jesus, is in memorium of the birth of that man.

Now, how shall we receive him? How shall we answer the question that Pontius Pilate called upon the people to answer in the day when he was placed in position where he was expected to pronounce sentence upon this man, Jesus, when he would have escaped the responsibility of passing judgment, when he sought the people, and asked them if he might release Jesus unto them, according as the custom was, but they asked for Barabbas? Pilate asked them: "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?"

It is a momentous question. And when I ask this question in my conversation with you I recognize that our surroundings are not like the surroundings that Pontius Pilate found around him when he asked the question. I recognize that you are not called upon to pass judgment upon a man who has been brought before you, with witnesses brought to bear testimony concerning him, who seemed to have condemned him by the laws that then existed. And yet we have to answer this question just as truly as did the people to whom Pontius Pilate addressed the language, when he said: "What shall I do then with this Jesus which is called Christ?" We have to answer it not with the peculiar circumstances that surrounded them at that time under the influence of his wonderful teachings, the wonderful healings that he wrought, and the miraculous works that were fresh in their minds then, but we have to answer the question after the lapse of nearly two thousand years since he advocated the principles of the gospel of redemption. For nearly two thousand years men have taught the principles of freedom that are found couched in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Let me say to you right here that there has been no law established, no law taught among the children of men, no provision that has been made which in any sense can bring the great amount of freedom that the application of the principles of the gospel can bring. And when we live above the laws that surround us for our protection, we are made free men in the community in which we live; free men so far as the law is concerned. There can be no judgment brought against us. The application of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ not only preserves from the execution of laws among men, (because if the gospel has its operation in us there is no offense against the law,) but it preserves us from ourselves, from our own evil inclinations, and the doing of those things that would bring us into condemnation before the throne of God. It does not give us license. It makes us free and independent, so far as any judgment is concerned. And under its influence, if we yield to its teaching, and live by its rules, as those rules have been laid down by this man, Jesus, we can stand before the judgment bar of God without fear; we can stand before the judgment bar of God without trembling; we can stand before that great bar of justice and say to him who sits upon the throne: I have kept the law and the conditions which thou didst give me. I have been true to my covenant to thee; now, Father, give me my inheritance.

The teachings of that man away yonder, in that little principality on the Eastern Continent, have gone out until those principles are permeating all the societies of the world. We may think that this is an expression that is too broad; but read the history of the world, read the history of the political conditions of the world and you will discover that the principles taught by that man, whose birth we commemorate in rejoicing this coming week, (the best that is presented for the consideration of the human family,) have not been lost upon the governments of the world; but that gradually, by degrees, the condition of the world is being brought to that state that when Jesus the Lord shall come there shall be no puny reigning monarchs among the children of men to make his advent anything but that that it should be, represented as glorious.

This thought was forcibly brought to my attention when, in my wanderings in the islands of the Pacific, I witnessed there the operation of the same Spirit that brought you together here to-day. I witnessed there the operation of that spirit that makes men free, among those whom we have been accustomed to esteem, in the past, as barbarians. I witnessed there men, clasped hands with men, who in years ago had so little of the love and liberty of the human being that they made their fellow man their food. They were cannibals. But the office-work and the influence of the principles of right, revealed through the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, have had their effect upon them. I found warm-hearted people there among those islanders, who are just as surely looking for the coming of Christ, as you are who believe upon his name and are looking for his coming. I found there among those children of the sea, the operation of this principle that makes men free, bringing them up, elevating them, making them higher in the scale of humanity, and in the moral tenor of their lives; making it so plain to be seen that the prophecy of the Lord Jesus is being fulfilled, that my heart was warmed anew towards the principles of my faith in Christ Jesus.

But what are the evidences that we may think of in the consideration of this character? We look back over the history of the world, and we find in the beginning that God was dissatisfied with the actions of those whom he planted upon the earth, and gave it to them as their home. They sought wickedness rather than righteousness. The world became filled with wickedness to that extent that God destroyed the people who dwelt thereon. He saved enough to repopulate the earth. He promised them that he would never destroy the world again by water. And we find in reading the history, the best that we have, that men were moved upon, and guided in their lives by that revealed unto them from God. And we also read of that which he promised to give them.

One peculiar feature of the history we want you to note. That is that he made selection, among the families of men, of a family to whom he gave protection, gave power, gave authority; and he made that family a wonderful promise: that the seed of that family should multiply until it should become as numerous as the sands of the sea. And we read, in the history of this family, of the promises of God so wonderfully being fulfilled that we can not say that that which has been promised, and has not yet been fulfilled, will not be fulfilled. For we must judge the future by the past; and if we judge the future by the past we must look forward to the time when this world shall have answered the end of its creation. We must look forward to the time when those promises which have been made of God to the children of men will all be fulfilled; not only that part which has been, but that it will all be fulfilled.

Just think for a moment how the earnest, restless, ambitious minds of men have prompted them to push themselves into every corner of the world, into every known land; and every land that is unknown they are seeking to discover. Just think of this for a moment, and the causes that have brought it to pass. It has not been because there has not been room for them to dwell side by side; for there is an abundance of territory upon which they might have lived, and lived in peace if they would. But the decrees of God, who hath given the earth to the human family as their home, have been such that they have been pushed forward by that restless spirit that has been found in them until they have sought out and peopled, and are peopling, every known land where the human family can live. Both the temperate zones have been, and are being, filled. Even the torrid zone is interesting the human family now, and in the frigid zones men are trying to break down the barriers of ice, they are trying to penetrate into the north and into the south; and wherever they go, now, bear in mind, they are carrying this message, this message that was brought from the courts of heaven by this man, Jesus. It matters not how he is looked upon, so far as the history is concerned, but as to the fulfilling of that which has been declared for the benefit of the human family it does matter. It matters not so far as history is concerned, men are working to the establishment of his name almost in every phase of opposition that is presented to him; and every phase of representation that is supporting and maintaining his rights are all being made to answer one end, making the preparation for the coming of Jesus.

If we ask the question, "How does the world receive him?" I have but to call your attention to the fact that they have been receiving him for years as being the Lord of lords and King of kings. Not all, mind you, but those that do not receive him as such, by reason of their education, are receiving him in a manner that is justifying the representation of his name, and forcing those who study carefully that which is represented in him to accept the final judgment which has been rendered: that he has been, and is, the master mind that has ruled, and is ruling to-day, for the accomplishment of that which has been declared of his Father shall be the result of his life. There are those that receive him, who do not fully believe in that which he taught as being essential for them in their rule of life. There are those who look upon him as being a great philosopher, one of the wisest and most influential that ever lived. I say influential—they are forced to acknowledge, from the facts that present themselves, that his name has been the name that has moved the civilized world to the accomplishment of its present condition. I care not where you go, in civilized communities, you will find houses raised like this, and larger, to his name. I care not where you go, in civilized communities, you will find houses of retreat for the maimed and the sick. You will find asylums for those whose minds have become deranged. You will find all this work going on in his name; and men are working in his name who do not accept and recognize the fact that there is a God, who do not recognize that they have anything to do with God. They are recognizing in him a force, and giving him, to a certain extent, credit for that force, as you can readily comprehend when you ask those that believe differently from that represented in the gospel relative to the future life,—when you ask those that believe in what is called modern spiritualism, relative to this man and his work, and what he did and what he taught. Ask them carefully, and they will admit that he is, and has been, the grandest and the noblest teacher that ever dwelt on the earth. They will admit that he is the best medium that stands between this life and the life that is beyond, the spiritual life. They will admit, and have admitted that he stood nearest the fountain of light, (not recognizing the Deity as he has been represented to us, as the ruler of the universe, as God; but recognizing that power that is supreme,) they tell you that this man Jesus stood nearer the center of light than any other man that has ever lived, thus placing him upon a pedestal that they are not willing to allow him to stand upon in the name of God the Father; and yet they are thus placing his name in the forefront of the influences that are bringing the world to a condition when he shall come as King of kings and Lord of lords.

There are those, too, who recognize in him a wonderful philosopher, and speak of him as a man of great wisdom and knowledge, and yet deny any divinity in his character, deny any divinity in his religion, deny any divinity so far as God is concerned relative to the man. There are those who have their associations, who build their houses, but who do not recognize God in the man, yet they recognize the principles that he taught. He led men to a higher plane of morality, to a better condition of life in this world, if there is no other. There are those who are teaching this.

Again, there are those who look upon him as an individual, half divine and half human; half divine because of his parentage in the Father, half human because of his parentage in the mother; and because of the divinity in his organization, because the Father was divine, even God, he was possessed of power different from that held by the human family at the present time. They look upon him in this light, and they worship him in this light.

But how shall we look upon him? How shall we worship him, if we choose to worship him? Where shall we stand? Shall we stand among those who look upon him as being endowed simply with the organization of humanity? or shall we look upon him as with those who look upon him as being spiritually superior in every respect to the human family, otherwise, without the consideration of the Father, even God? or shall we accept him as he has been represented to us with a halo of glory around his head, making him different by reason of his divinity to any other of the human race?

The story that will be told this day, and this coming week, will tell us that he came as a babe in the manger. That is the true history. He came as a babe in the manger. His immaculate conception was declared and prophesied of. God, who gave a sign to the world, gave it through the prophet Isaiah. You will read it in the seventh chapter. He would interfere with natural laws as they were understood by the human family, and he would bring to pass such a miracle that it could not be reasoned away by all the sophistry of latter-day wisdom. And those who would treat slightly the conception of the Lord Jesus Christ must ignore the fact that God foretold through his prophet that he would do just such a thing. He told the world, through his chosen people, Israel, that he would do this. If it had been simply the work of man it would long since have been forgotten. The testimony comes to us, recorded in the archives of old Israel, that seven hundred and forty-odd years before the birth of this man, Jesus, God through his prophet told the world he would bring to pass just such an event; told it just as surely as he told it away up yonder in the morn of time, when he was talking to Israel through Moses, and telling the children of Israel that he would raise up a prophet from among their brethren like unto him, told it just as truly as he told it when he made the statement through Isaiah, as found recorded in the fifty-fifth chapter, that he would present a character who should become a witness to the people, a leader, and a commander to the people. God foresaw that which would be in the world in the latter day; and he made provision for his work, that it should be carried on; and that it should receive such evidences that men would bring honor to his name, though they did it with the evident intent and purpose of opposing that which he had declared,—yet he would make use of that as honoring his name and proving his work true, in the latter day.

Jesus was born as other babes. He grew from infancy, through childhood to youth. And in his youth, even at twelve years, he demonstrated his mission. That is, he spoke in such a way that his words, being recorded, come to us with the import that at that time, as early as twelve years of age, he understood something of the nature of that which he was to accomplish in the world when he answered his mother, who had sought long to find him: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" He understood to a certain extent the work that was upon him. Take the history; follow it if you please, you Sunday-school pupils, and you young people; follow the history of the Lord Jesus as found revealed in the New Testament, and tell me where, in all that history, there was one event in his youth that was calculated to encourage him in that which he was doing. Take the conditions that surrounded him; take the strict, stringent, and severe laws of the children of Israel against the iniquities that might be represented in the supposed parentage of our Savior and his birth. Take these things into consideration, and see how, during his youth, he wrought, from his childhood to his manhood, at the labor of a carpenter. His hands oftentimes were calloused no doubt, and hardened by the use of the temporal tools of labor. Working among those who looked upon his birth as a disgrace, working among those who evidently pointed him out as one that was a disgrace in Israel, working under the contumely and the hatred and the pointing of the finger of scorn, through his childhood, though his young manhood, until he reached his recognized year of majority among his people, you will find not one word, apparently, to encourage him. He lived through these conditions in life, that you and I might receive encouragement. He became acquainted with the conditions that we have to pass through. He has known how others have struggled to do right. He has known how the circumstances have been around us in a manner forcing us to do those things that otherwise we would not do. He knows the aching in the heart of those who have to labor, sometimes under peculiarly distressing circumstances, to obtain the bread that perisheth. He knows it, because he passed through it; he endured it; and enduring it he wrought for himself the right of recognition. I say, as a man, he worked from infancy, through childhood, into manhood. As a man, he so wrought that he could force the recognition of the Father that came to him, when the years of his manhood came, when he moved out into the arena of life. And the first thing he did, so far as the record is concerned, was to go down into the waters of baptism. Coming up out of the waters of baptism, the voice of God was heard: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Take the history of his life; recollect how tender his heart was for the suffering of others; walk with him in the streets of Jerusalem as he sees the funeral coming down the street, a lone mother following her one boy to the tomb. Stand by him when, moved with compassion, he stretches forth his hand, takes hold of the young man, tells him to arise, and gives that boy, returned to health, to the mother. Go with him as he returns to the home of Lazarus, the beloved brother of Mary and Martha. How the sisters came forth weeping and saying to him: "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Oh, the faith that those women had in the man. Recollect that he is not recognized by the world at this time as being Jesus, the Christ; he is simply recognized as Jesus of Nazareth, a great teacher. These sisters came forth weeping because he was not here. He told them: "Thy brother shall rise again." "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." They had been taught the principles of the gospel, and that which should be brought into the world at the coming of the Lord Jesus. They had been taught that there would be a time when their brother should live again. Yet it might be after a long life of care, of sorrow, of weeping, of contention with the cares of life; a long life of service in the world might stare them in the face between that time and the time when their brother should live, and their hearts were moved with sorrow. And it is said that Jesus was moved with sorrow and wept because the brother was taken away,—one he loved was taken from him. We sometimes think of it that way. At other times we think that he was moved upon, and his tender heart was touched by what he saw was being suffered by those sisters, and in the comprehension of their suffering he wept, joining in their sorrow. But he said to them: "Where have you laid him?" They said, "Lord, come and see," and when they had shown him he simply said, "Take ye away the stone." How typical that is! Did you ever think of it? Previous to his death and burial he pictured the power that should roll the rock away. They rolled the stone away. He looked into the tomb where Lazarus was laid. He called: "Lazarus, Lazarus, come forth." And Lazarus arose and came forth. He said to them: "Unbind him, and let him go." And Mary and Martha were comforted. Their brother was given to them. Did you ever reason along these lines? How he entered into the very life of those around him? how he not only entered into the very life as they lived it, but he comprehended that death was in their midst? How, by reason of the loving heart that was in him, he could stay the ravages of death, he could bring the dead to life? Where gained he his power?

Oh, how the loving heart of this man must have leaped with joy, and burned within him, when he heard the voice of his God and Father say, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." The first words of encouragement so far as we know, that he had ever received.

After nearly two thousand years have passed, this record, we discover, has never been successfully contradicted. It lives like letters of light, and will grow, and become brighter and brighter, as the days shall pass, until the clouds shall reveal him, and we shall see him coming,—we who have faith in him, we who recognize in him that he wrought in this mortal life until he received the power over it, until he received control, and receiving control he can give you and I the right to enter in. Controlling, making ourselves fitted to enter into the presence of those that surround the throne of God, fitting ourselves to associate with the holy beings that go out from the presence of God, he has made it possible for you and I to become acquainted with the highest circle of association that exists, even that which surrounds the throne of God. And by reason of this power he told his disciples, "Go ye therefore, [or because I hold all power on earth and in heaven,] and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." He authorized that the principles of life should be taught to everybody. He it was who said: "This gospel of the kingdom [this gospel of life, this gospel of light, this power of God, this power to overcome mortality, this power to take the sting of the grave away, this power that he commissioned to be taught to all men, and the forces that are being used that are pushing men into all corners of the earth; that Jesus, the Son of God may be known] shall be preached in all the world as a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

The evidences are multiplying, year after year they multiply, that he is the Son of God; that he is pleading, now, for us; that he is making the preparation; and the times are full of the evidences of the power of this man, this Jesus of Nazareth. He overcame; he passed through death and the grave; he broke the bars; he came forth rejoicing, and telling the human family, "I . . . have the keys of hell and of death."

How shall we receive this man, who made himself to us Lord of lords and King of kings? Will you say, "Away with him, away with him, we will have none of him," or will you accept him, and accept the rule of life that he has given that will make you better here, —better men, better women, better citizens, better fathers, better mothers, better children?

Accept the means that he has given and rejoice not alone in the thought that he was born nineteen centuries ago, but that he still lives; that he is the Christ, the Lord of all. Rejoice not only that he is, but that he has promised (and his promises are yea and amen) that he will come again, and that he is coming to live and reign on this earth. And whether you die and are laid away in the tomb, or whether you live to see him coming, it matters not; when he comes, if you have slept in death, the tomb will be opened as the tomb of Lazarus was opened, and you will be brought forth from the tomb, and be permitted to join the holy throng that will go to meet him, singing and rejoicing—IF you keep his commandments.

He asks you to enter into that line of study, that line of work that shall fit you to enter into his presence, and the presence of the redeemed and holy ones. He asks you to make use of the means that will break the bars of death and the tomb—break them in your case, and move away the stone from your tomb as the stone was moved away from his tomb, that you may come forth from death unto life and light.

This man, Jesus, this man that grew from the holy babe of Bethlehem, this man will come as Lord of lords and King of kings. He asks you to make yourself ready to meet and dwell with him. Will you do it?

December.

With whisper and rustle and start and hush,
The dry leaves murmur on tree and bush.
On sombre pines, with bows bent low,
Forsaken nests are piled with snow.
The chickades, alert for seeds,
Chatter and cling to the swaying weeds.
The snow drifts deep in the country ways,
And short and cold are the cheerless days.
Yet, fair on the brow of the frozen night,
The Christmas stars shine, large and bright.

Christmas Holly.

With December comes the beautiful consummation of the year. Behind us lie Autumn, with her varied splendor of coloring and her rich fruitage; Summer, with her pomp of bloom and wealth of golden grain; Spring, with her sweetness of blossoms and tender atmosphere of hope and love. Before us, as December's doors swing wide, are days of cold and storm, frost, snow, sleet, wild winds by sea and shore, but there also stretches invitingly a procession of happy mornings and evenings at home, and, best of all, December brings us Christmas. Christmas, the world's great festival, gathering to itself, as the months and years go by, the sacred associations which cluster around the incarnation, is our gladdest anniversary because we keep it as Christ's birthday. It does not matter in the least whether December 25 is, or is not, the precise day on which Mary first held her baby in her arms while shepherds and wise men worshiped him. On some day in the long history of this earth the fullness of time came and God sent into it his only begotten Son on a mission of redemption. By common consent this day we keep as Christmas has been selected as that anniversary and all nations are joining in the acclaim which arises in its hallowed dawning to praise Immanuel's name.

Still let us joyfully listen on Christmas Eve, as the midnight hour passes, for the echoes of the angels' song, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will to men." Still let us watch with the wise men of old and see the star, "Brightest and best of the sons of the morning." Still let us bring to the manger our gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh. For now, as when Christ came to Bethlehem, he comes to be born again in human hearts, and evermore we may sing:

"Thy home is with the humble, Lord,
The simple are thy best;
Thy lodging is in childlike hearts,
And there thou mak'st thy nest."

There is special fitness in that observance of Christmas which centralizes the happiness of childhood. To those of us who love children, they constantly reveal surprises of trust and possibilities of rare development. We understand why our Lord set a child in the midst of the disciples and said, "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein." Jesus in the Yule-tide days is once more among us as a child. No mere mortal child so pure, so docile, so wonderful as he, yet in very deed a child, subject to his parents and living beside his fair, young mother in her little home in Nazareth. Looking at him, as the child in the midst of us, we are led to look more carefully and with gentler thoughtfulness at our own children and at the hosts of children outside our own households.

What is our first impulse toward the little ones in the home? Most of us, without an instant's hesitation answer that we desire the best for them, the best in education, in training, in companionship, and that we earnestly long to make them as happy as we can. Realizing how brief a period in life childhood must be and how soon our dear boys and girls must be pushed out into life with its trials and conflicts, it is natural and right that we should make the children happy. We do this most effectually when we early impress them with Christ's beauty, when we teach them unselfishness and lead them in the straight and narrow pathway of love.

When we load the Christmas-tree with pretty gifts for John and Jean and induce them for weeks beforehand to tell us what they want and what they hope to receive, entirely overlooking their part in Christmas giving, we do them a wrong. A one-sided Christmas can not be joyful, even to a little child. The true Christmas spirit fosters self-denial and bestowal and the child who makes no small or large sacrifice, that he may send a present to some one outside, or give something to his mother or sister, loses a precious opportunity and is in peril of being morally dwarfed.

Come with me to a social settlement on the east side of the bustling city of New York on Christmas Eve. Up-stairs and down children are thronging, for the house belongs to them, and is more a home in their eyes than the tenements where they sleep, and snatch such meals as poverty can give them. Here they are, fair-haired Germans, dark-eyed Hebrews, blue-eyed Danes, oval-faced Italians, the proportion of whatever nationality is uppermost in the locality indicated by the type most numerous among the children. They have no fine clothes, though few of them are in rags, for the tenement mother has her own decent pride and does her best to send her offspring forth whole, if not clean, from her hands. But how cheerful they are, how beatific is their rapture, how charming is the look of motherhood in the faces of little girls, as they lovingly brood over their new dolls, and how delighted are the boys with skates, balls, or sleds! When they sing, their whole hearts are poured out in the hymns and few hearts in the round world are more intensely joyful.

My point is this, that not only we, who are grown up, should add to our Christmas felicity by making some asylum or working girls' club, or settlement, able to cheer its beneficiaries at Christmas, but that we should bring up our children in the habit of good will. Every little one in a home replete with comfort should early learn that he or she can help to brighten the lot of a child who is less well off, of a child whose little feet are treading stormy pathways. The Sunday-school that foregoes its own annual treat, in order that it may provide one for a school elsewhere, will, on the whole, have a more delightful and satisfactory Christmas than the one which simply absorbs all that the fathers and mothers of the church and its short-sighted teachers will give it.

Let us broaden out a little more. Christmas to some of us brings great store of useful and beautiful souvenirs, some of them very costly, others inexpensive. To give away what has been given to us is usually regarded as exceedingly ungracious, and there are many friendly tokens so personal and so exclusively designed for their recipients, that they pass into the realm of sweet happenings and dear memories and belong to our treasured things. But of the lovely, even exquisite cards and leaflets and books which we receive, a large number might well be enjoyed and passed on. To the children in a mission school far across the sea, to the parsonage home on our western frontier, to the children in a mountain cabin in Tennessee, our superfluities of Christmas gladness and gifts might bring great pleasure. Keep this hint in mind for another year, and let the children know that if they do not abuse or destroy their own gifts, but keep them in measurably good order, they may be sent by and by, when they have outgrown them, to give another lease of delight to other children, perhaps under another sky.

Leaving this phase of Christmas, in this discursive talk, suppose we glance at Christmas ornamentation. Not now is the hour of the frail anemone, of the white lily, of the fragrant rose. Not even the hollyhock, the gentian, the chrysanthemum, or any of the magnificent flowers of the fall, belong of right to Christmas. No, we decorate our homes and churches in December with the strong, deep green of the cedar, fir, and pine, with the glossy leaf and the shining, scarlet berry of the holly, with the beaded whiteness of the mistletoe peeping out from sheltering leaves, with the spoils of the woods and the unfading glory of the evergreen.

Ages ago it was written of the good man: "His leaf also shall not wither, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." In the deep, dark green of Christmas wreaths and the spicy scent of Christmas garlands, there is the renewal in our minds of this assurance of the ultimate success and prosperity of the man who lives to do God's will. True, to such a one there may come ups and downs and many strange reverses and vicissitudes. The cedar of Lebanon was not raised in a hothouse. The tree that is strong and tough and fair and full of fadeless leaves on sturdy boughs was nurtured under the stars and sun, rocked by the tempest, powdered by the snow, and tried by the fierceness of the north wind. But as nothing can permanently hurt "the tree God plants," so, if we love God, nothing can harm us, but all things shall work together for our good.

Choosing our Christmas presents is one of the most exciting and, on the whole, delightful occupations of the year. Women get much more satisfaction out of this than men, the latter being too busy, as a rule, to give it the time and thought which it requires. On the other hand, men often have a legitimate occasion for complaint, in the fact that the gifts to them of their wives and daughters are frequently far from individual. A man is given something that fills a long-felt want in his wife's mind—a piece of furniture, or a picture, or some bric-a-brac which helps to furnish the parlor or dining-room. He amiably accepts it, but it has contributed little to his real pleasure. Both men and women, if they enlist in the campaign of Christmas giving, should select their offerings with discretion, judgment, and adaptation to the tastes and needs of the one whom they desire to please.

"A merry Christmas unto all
Who open wide the door,
That Jesus Christ may enter in
And dwell for evermore.
Exalted be his wondrous name,
And glory be his own;
Who conquered sin and death for us,
And sits upon the throne."

—Margaret E. Sangster in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Christmas Carol.

O night of nights! Crown of the gathered ages:
The glorious dream of long, prophetic years:
The ancient seers, the hoary saints and sages,
Watched for thy coming through their patient tears.

O holy night! Celestial bells are ringing,
And heaven bends down the waiting earth to greet;
From airy heights the angel bands are singing,
And Bethlehem's hills the echoing strains repeat.

O silent night! The quiet dews are falling,
And moonlight broods o'er vale and mountain steep;
The wakeful shepherds, each to other calling,
Guard through the midnight hours the gentle sheep.

O wondrous night! Yon moving star is tracing
It's lordly pathway through the eastern skies;
And now it stands with heavenly splendor gracing
The lowly dwelling where the young child lies.

O night of joys! The years to come shall brighten;
Beneath the radiant beams of Bethlehem's star
A prince is born whose gentle sway shall lighten
The burdened race and still the noise of war.

Prayer Union.

KNOX, Indiana, December 1, 1904.

Dear Saints: Believing that we are worshiping a living and true God, and that he is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, and that he will hear his children now as he has in time past, when we come before him in a right manner, I humbly ask an interest in behalf of my family that they may see the truth and accept the same.

Your sister,

MOLLIE PIERSON.

Mrs. Thaddeus Harris desires the prayers of the sisters, that her neck may be healed of scrofula; and that God may help her to see which way is his way. This is the lady mentioned in Sr. Knowlton's letter in a recent HERALD. She is still investigating, and believes in healing.

PIEDMONT, Missouri, December 9, 1904.

Dear Friends: I sincerely request the prayers of the Prayer Union that, if it is our heavenly Father's will, I may be healed of heart, stomach, and liver trouble, realizing that if it is his will I can be healed by his way, when all other remedies fail.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. WM. HARTRUP.

The grandmother of a little girl six years old requests the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of the child, who is afflicted with bronchitis, that she may be made well and strong. Sr. A. R. Taylor sends this request.

"This universal joy of Christmas is certainly wonderful. We ring the bells when princes are born or toll a mournful dirge when great men pass away. Nations have their red-letter days, their carnivals and festivals; but once in the year, and only once, the whole world stands still to celebrate the advent of a life. Only Jesus of Nazareth claims this world-wide, undying remembrance. You can not cut Christmas out of the calendar, nor out of the heart of the world."—Elmo.

Oh! to have dwelt in Bethlehem,
When the Star of the Lord shone bright,
To have sheltered the holy wanderers
On that blessed Christmas night;
To have kissed the tender way-worn feet
Of the mother undefiled,
And with reverent wonder and deep delight,
To have tended the Holy Child.

Hush! Such a glory was not for thee;
But that care may still be thine;
For are there not little ones still to aid,
For the sake of the child divine?
Are there no wondering pilgrims now,
To thy heart and thy homes to take?
And are there no mothers whose weary hearts
You can comfort for Jesus' sake?

—Adelaide Proctor.

A hundred years ago Voltaire, the French philosopher, predicted that within a century the Bible would be an unheard-of book. Not only has this prediction failed but the Bible has the "largest paid circulation" of any book printed, and is translated into and read in more languages and dialects than any other book that was ever written. The babe that was born at Bethlehem and whose birth we celebrate at the Christmas-time finds a warm place in the hearts of more people, affords more comfort to sad and sorrowing souls than any other personage or book the world has ever known.

"But peaceful was the night
Wherein the Prince of Light
His reign of peace upon the earth began;
The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kissed,
Whispering new joys to the wild ocean,

Who now hath quite forgot to rave;
While birds of calm sit brooding on the wave.
No war nor battle's sound
Was heard the world around;
The idle spear and shield were high up hung;
The hooked chariot stood
Unstained with hostile blood;
The trumpet spake not to the armed throng;
And kings sat still with awful eye,
As if they surely knew their sovereign Lord was by."—John Milton.

"But warm, sweet, tender even yet
A present life is He,
And faith hath yet its Olivet
And love its Galilee."—Whittier.

"I have always thought of Christmas-time, when it has come round, as a good time; a kind, forgiving, charitable time; the only time I know of, in the long calendar of the year, when men and women seem by one consent to open their shut-up hearts freely, and to think of people below them as if they really were fellow passengers to the grave, and not another race of creatures bound on other journeys. . . . And so as Tiny Tim said: A merry Christmas to us all, my dears. God bless us, every one."
—Charles Dickens.

Notice to Sunday-School Officers.

All Sunday-school officers and primary teachers will please take notice that beginning with the first of January, 1905, the lessons for the first primaries or the smallest primaries will be published separately, that is, not in the same Quarterly with the other primary lessons. Heretofore they have been published with the regular Primary Quarterly and sent to all without extra cost. This was to get the work introduced. But with the first quarter of next year there will be a separate grade or fourth grade of Quarterly issued. Send for it the same as for any other grade. Price five cents per quarter or fifteen cents per year in advance. Schools should see to ordering their supply of First Primary Lessons at once that no lessons may be missed.

In bonds,

The Sunday-School Lesson for December 25, 1904.

WHAT MANNER OF PERSONS OUGHT WE TO BE?

Golden Text.—"We look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."—2 Peter 3: 13, Inspired Translation.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

The lessons in all the grades to-day touch upon the second coming of Christ.

The first primaries have a simple little statement concerning the return of Jesus; it is based on the text, "I will come again." In this lesson the parable of the ten virgins is referred to in illustration of the condition of those who are not ready when the Lord comes.

The second primary lesson opens with some questions concerning the first coming of Christ, with which narrative the children are supposed to be familiar, and the story then tells of the promise of Jesus to come to earth again, of his reign of peace on the earth during the thousand years, of the renewal of the earth after that time, and of the celestial city of God that will come to it.

The intermediate lesson has a statement in its introduction concerning the Christmas of nineteen hundred years ago; the lesson itself has two leading topics, the coming of Christ, and the new earth.

This is the ground covered also by the senior lesson which cites us to passages in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants for information on the topics mentioned.

With this lesson we complete our study of the letters of Peter, and it is the closing verses of his second letter that have led us to consider in this lesson the setting up of the celestial kingdom on the earth; the topic, however, is well suited to the occasion.

The most earnest thought in the lesson for us is that expressed in the subject. It is a variation of the question asked by Peter of the saints of his time, "What manner of persons ought ye to be in holy conduct and godliness, looking unto and preparing for the day of the coming of the Lord, wherein the corruptible things of the heavens being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the mountains shall melt with fervent heat?"

What manner of persons ought we to be? is the question we may well ask of ourselves to-day. What manner of persons ought we to be? What manner of persons are we?

The angel who first came to Joseph Smith and communicated to him many things connected with the restoration of the gospel, quoted to him from the third chapter of the writings of Malachi. In the beginning of that chapter we read, "The Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver," etc.

What manner of persons ought we to be to be able to stand in that searching day when the corrupt things of the earth shall pass away?

The angel spoke of that day also, quoting the words written by Malachi in the long ago, "Behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall burn as stubble."

Perhaps we ought to turn our thoughts inward and study ourselves a little to discover if there be pride in our hearts, pride of any kind, error of any kind; for how shall we stand when the great Refiner shall appear, if we humor ourselves in the indulgence of things that are condemned in his word, if we neglect to fill our hearts with the good treasures that shall commend us to him, if we do not heed the counsel he gives us?

But should we sing in this serious strain, when the Christmas music is in the air, when the Christmas rush is in the city streets, when the Christmas greetings are on our lips and in the written messages we send to those far away?

Should we sing in this serious strain, when the angels that descended over Bethlehem's fields on the first Christmas morning sang a joyous song of peace on earth, good will to men, and glory to God in the highest? when they told of a little child born that day in the city of David, Christ the Lord? Should not we, too, enter into that song, partaking of that deep joy that came into the world with the birth of Jesus Christ?

Truly, our hearts ought to sing within us when we contemplate the wonderful work of God manifested that Christmas day in the dim past when the Son of the Highest came to earth and took a most lowly place among men, but our hearts will never sing within us for joy in the realization of what Christ is until we have heeded the warning of the angel who came not so long ago to restore to the earth the gospel that is to prepare us for the second advent of our Lord. We can not rejoice in the humility of Christ, if our own hearts are not humble; we can not appreciate his consecration to us, if we do not know what a life of consecration is; we can not be glad that Christ has brought joy into the world for all people until we also are interested in the welfare of our fellow creatures.

Christmas should be a time not only for light-heartedness but also for earnestness. It should be more of a happy Christmas than a merry Christmas. Many a one makes it a selfishly merry time, or a carelessly merry time, who does not enter into the joy that arises from sympathy with the work of Christ.

Christ was born in Bethlehem long ago, but has the divine nature been born in us, and is it developing in us as the years circle away into the past?

What manner of persons ought we to be?

We ought to be humble people, not given to seeking greatness in the way the world seeks it, but in the way the Master manifested it.

We ought to be trustful people who believe the Lord cares for us and for his great work.

We ought to be cheerful people in this the time of our warfare, that we may be joyous in the time of the triumph of righteousness.

We ought to be forbearing people, kind one toward another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us.

We ought to be people who sustain each other in peace.

We ought to be industrious in works of blessing to others.

We ought to be people who live together in love.

We ought above all things to be clothed with charity as with a mantle.

These are the things the commandments of God require of us. They describe to us the manner of people the Lord would have us be.

If we are doing these things, we are entering into the work of Christ; but if we are not doing these things, are we not drawing near with our lips while we fail to honor the Master in our lives?

ANNA SALYARDS.

LOS ANGELES, California, November 30, 1904.

Editor Herald: I suppose you have heard ere this of the accident which befell Bro. Joseph Luff in this city last week. He was riding around with Bro. Peter Kaufman visiting the sick. While passing an engine at work on the street the horse took fright and ran for several blocks. Bro. Luff was thrown out, striking in all probability on one foot and hand, dislocating the former and spraining the latter, and then falling heavily on his back. He has been confined to his bed ever since. The accident is not a dangerous one. It is serious in that he may be compelled to remain quiet for a number of weeks owing to his age and the serious wrenching of his ankle. The doctor in attendance says it will be a long time before he will be able to use his foot. We have importuned our Great Physician in his behalf and believe that he will soon be around again. Bro. Luff is cheerful and resigned even though he yearns to be about his duties in the mission. He is stopping at the home of Bro. William Crumley, 964 Court Circle. Spiritual apathy is apparent everywhere in this western land. Opportunity for missionary work is quite limited. We hope for a change when conditions will force a consideration of the gospel claims. Until then we will endeavor to do the best we can. Still no sign of rain and the farmers are becoming pessimistic. The church finances evidence the effect of the dry weather on the purse-strings of the Saints. There is much to discourage and perplex. May we so occupy that we may be worthy of every blessing which our heavenly Father has in store for us. No true Latter Day Saint can consistently be pessimistic. Well did Christ say, "Have faith in God." I note what Bro. I. M. Smith has to say relative to finances and financial reports, also Bro. Kelley's reply. This very thing which Bro. Smith referred to necessitated me leaving the active ministry for a time last year and going to work. During the year before and the first part of last year I had spent a hundred dollars more for personal expenses than I had received, thus involving me in debt which I was unable to meet. Had the Saints where I labored supplied my wants "in the very hour when I had need" I would have been free to wait upon my ministry. When, as a last resort, I made known my conditions to the Bishop he was unable to help me. What could I do but strive in an honorable way to meet my obligations? The Saints had not supplied my needs; the Bishop could not. This year also finds my personal expenses in excess of my receipts. In fact I have received but barely enough to pay postage and laundry. I am not saying this to censure any one. The Saints have been kind to me in more ways than one and I am sure whatever neglect there is is due more to thoughtlessness than premeditation. Never has the Bishop refused to help me when I have called upon him save this once and then I was informed it was due to his inability rather than disinclination.

I have never felt above doing secular or manual work whenever necessity required to relieve financial embarrassment, and if the Saints can afford to see their missionary working in order to make ends meet I can not see why he needs to feel any compunction of conscience. Paul did it. It was the rule rather than the exception in Book of Mormon times. Unless I materially change my mind will do so again whenever necessity demands, and should the brethren learn at any time that I am engaged in secular work they need never fear that "Tommy" has given up the ministry, but rather remember that it is an enforced diversion and just so soon as I can get my head above water I will be at the helm again.

God helping me I will never go around among the Saints throwing out a hint here and a suggestion there to remind them of my needs. I will not wear old clothes and appear as shabbily as I can in order to have them purchase me new ones. I have no sympathy with the minister who reminds the Saints of his needs and less with the Saint who must be reminded of his duty.

Until the membership come to learn that God does not expect the ministry to make any more sacrifice than the membership these discrepancies will continue to occur.

I propose for my own peace of mind and the honor of the church to keep out of debt. Whenever I find myself unable to do so I will roll up my sleeves and go to work, liquidate the indebtedness and then into the field again feeling perfectly satisfied that I will not have to answer to God for my enforced withdrawal from church-work even though some one else will have to.

I can not help but feel that there are a number of egregious blunders being made, and chargeable somewhere. I can best hasten the day of their correction, however, by holding on, and seeing to it that I am in no sense responsible therefor, and using every means at my command to acquit myself so when the time comes I may be able to assist in establishing a better order. We can not afford to allow real or imaginary wrongs to force us from the ranks. It is God that has called us; we are amenable only to him and if we can conscientiously meet him and pass muster we have nothing to fear from any other source. All I am I owe to this latter-day work. What little talent I now possess, latent though it may have been when the gospel found me, has been fully accentuated under the guidance and direction of the Holy Spirit.

It may be only fancy, but it seems to me the time is fast approaching when the church must take the place designed by the Almighty for her to occupy. She should lead and never follow in every good work. The potency of her cause should consist more in practical demonstration than theoretical analysis. When I referred to the college in a late letter I should have said "I wish the college course was industrial as well as academie." Yours working and praying for the establishment of Zion and the salvation of man,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

CASTLE ROCK, Washington, November 30, 1904.

Dear Herald: The evening of the 24th closed a discussion, of eleven sessions, with Reverend Yancy Wilson of the Advent Christian Church, embracing four propositions, two on the soul question, one worded each way; his theory that man is wholly mortal and unconscious from death to the resurrection; and ours, that man is a dual being, spirit and body; and that the spirit is immortal and conscious from death to the resurrection; also propositions requiring each disputant to affirm the church he represents to be in harmony with the apostolic church, in faith, doctrine, organization, practice, and name.

On the soul question the public sentiment was in our favor, both before and after the contest, many declaring the victory ours. A few believing the soul-sleeping theory, of course, could see only one side of the question, no matter what the evidence or argument might be.

When the church propositions came on (ours first), our opponent paid very little attention to our evidence or argument, more than to admit that we had presented the Bible pattern, but for us to prove that our church was in harmony, was quite another thing. He made his attack at once on Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Inspired Translation, making the claim that if he proves that Joseph Smith was a false prophet, and the Book of Mormon a fraud, he will have proven the church he established to be out of harmony with the apostolic church.

A point of order being raised that the question was not "Was Joseph a prophet of God," nor, "Is the Book of Mormon of divine origin," and that it was the duty of the negative, according to the rules of debate, to follow the affirmative argument before introducing counter affirmative evidence, the majority of the board of moderators ruling that he was in order, we had double duty on hand, to answer his charges of error and maintain our proposition, both of which all the Saints and some friends think were successfully done.

To show the tricky and dishonest mode of argument used by our opponent, we present two or three instances. In a desperate effort to make a statement in the Doctrine and Covenants 5:3, where the Lord said, "And to none else will I grant this power," to contradict the preface of the Book of Mormon, showing that eight others saw the plates, with the book in hand, section and paragraph given, he read, "And none else shall look upon them." No one need doubt that the deceit was thoroughly exposed. In an effort to harmonize the statement in Matthew 27:44; "The thieves also, which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth," with the one in Luke 23:39, 40: "And one of the malefactors which were hanged, railed on him, saying, If thou be the Christ, save thyself and us," he took the ground that when, "The other answering, rebuked him saying, Dost thou not fear God; . . . Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," it was only mock solemnity, hence, casting the same in his teeth. Reply was made, "Did Jesus not know that the thief last speaking was mocking him? If he did, why should he say, 'To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise?'"

He had previously used the Advent punctuation, as follows: "Verily I say unto thee to-day, Shalt thou be with me in paradise," (sometime,) but now, for the first time, gave the rising inflection, making Jesus' statement a question: "Shalt thou be with me in paradise?" To this reply was made: Did Jesus not know whether that thief would be with him in paradise or not, without asking him about it? With this query (?) we arrayed, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return?" which he had used with great emphasis, on the death of man; also from Isaiah 26:19: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise?" The gross inconsistency of making two of these positive declarations, as he had done, and the other a question, just to suit his theory, was clearly shown.

One thing, however, must be accredited to our opponent in spite of his crafty, deceitful course, viz.: That during the whole contest, he only twice said, "Joe Smith," and only once, "The Mormon Bible," both of which he quickly corrected, saying, "Joseph Smith," and "The Book of Mormon." Neither did he present a single one of the many current stories and falsehoods, such as "The Spalding romance," "Walking on the water," "Money-digger," etc., commonly used by our opponents, but made his attack in the way already spoken of, by trying to make the "writings" of Joseph Smith disagree with themselves and the Bible, the replies to which were satisfactory to the Saints and our friends. In fact, one Baptist lady who expected and hoped to hear our church torn all to pieces, said to me, afterward, that she was mad because he did not do a better job.

On the question of polygamy he made only one assertion, which, being duly met, he did not even repeat, viz.: That "Joseph Smith indorsed polygamy."

He also made the statement that, "If Joseph Smith organized a church the one in Salt Lake City is that church, and Brigham Young the head." The historical fact that at "Winter Quarters," near Council Bluffs, enroute from Nauvoo to Utah, Brigham Young ordered the baptism of every member, and the reordination of every one holding the priesthood, among his followers, followed by a reorganization, together with the further fact that our church was organized of those who, not following Brigham Young, nor imbibing any of his corrupt doctrines, still held their authority, made ours the church established by Joseph Smith, not the one in Salt Lake City at all. To this argument he only replied that we ought not to use the word reorganized.

When defending his church on the fourth proposition, he spent nearly all his time on what they believe, dwelling again on the question already discussed, the mortality of the entire man, and did not at all touch the doctrine of his church, further than the one truth accepted by all, that Jesus is the Savior of men, and that he died and rose again. When pressed to tell the audience whether or not his church teaches and practices the laying on of hands for the blessing of little children, as Jesus gave the pattern, found also in Genesis 48 to be the practice long before "the law"; or for the gift of the Holy Ghost or baptism of the Spirit; also for the healing of the sick as practiced by the apostolic church; when demanded, was his church organized with apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, bishops and deacons, seventies and elders, and high priests as well, (which organization we had clearly shown in the former proposition,) he only replied that he had not time at this late hour in the contest to answer all these questions, forgetting that he had agreed to affirm his church identical with the apostolic church in all the points before mentioned. He likewise forgot that the debate was shortened one night by agreement, upon his request to make the last two sessions three hours long each, so that he could reach Los Angeles, California, for Sunday, to which we objected for the sake of the people. Besides he had plenty of time to reply to those questions after they were pressed. We had waited expecting him to present the organization of his church, as we had done in our church propositions.

It is quite safe to say that nothing was lost in the debate, while, in the minds of a few, a little may have been gained. To say the least, the Saints were strengthened and confirmed in the faith, some more firmly grounded than before.

Our opponent threw out a challenge in public to debate here again, with any man in the church, on any point of difference. We could do no less than to accept it, and promise to meet him, or furnish an able man to do so, at some future time. Owing to the fact that Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Inspired Translation were forced into our church proposition, it is evident that at least the two questions: "Was Joseph Smith a true prophet," and, "Is the Book of Mormon of divine origin," ought to be discussed at this place; and the Doctrine and Covenants and Inspired Translation defended.

The only way to get those things before the people is in debate, because they simply will not come out to hear our preaching, no matter what the announcements are.

On Sunday the 27th the eleven o'clock service was devoted to the dedication of the very nice, commodious, and comfortable church of the Saints. While the little band of Saints were happy in the work they had accomplished for the Lord (every dollar being paid), very few others paid any attention to the announcement, though more than once made near the close of the discussion, the last two sessions of which were held in the church, the hall previously used being otherwise occupied. But the Lord was with us all the day long, and his word given in the afternoon prayer-meeting.

Prior to the debate, a brief series of meetings was held, which we all enjoyed. A few others attended, but we were again reminded of the words of Paul to Timothy, "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine."

Our summer's work has assured us that it is much more difficult to secure a fair hearing in this mission than in the "Middle East and West"; and, from reports, previous efforts here have met a much better reception than those now made. While some of the causes are very evident, all the reasons for the manifest retrograde are not so easily divined. It is no marvel that Jesus said, "When the Son of man shall come will he find faith on the earth."

Yours at work,

O. B. THOMAS.

COALGATE, Indian Territory, December 3, 1904.

Editors Herald: I write for general information of the Saints, and those wishing a safe investment. We have just finished burning three hundred and fifteen thousand of our shale brick, and will send you one to judge for yourself. They are the finest I ever saw outside of the pressed brick, and beat any pressed brick made in this country. We think we have a bonanza, but we lack about two or three thousand dollars of enough to speed the plant, and are skimmed to some degree for means. This shale will also make fine tiling and pottery, and as this is a new country, just opening up, there will be good sale for them. We have stood the brunt of getting it started, and it is a success. Now those who put in stock can secure work, and also interest on money invested. The shale costs nothing, coal is mined right here, and wood can be bought at two dollars per cord. We have a church to hold one hundred and twenty people, and about fifty members. Would like two or three elders; wish one of the White brothers would locate here. This would be a good place for a No. 99 store.

W. C. CUMMINGS.

ST. LOUIS, Missouri, December 2, 1904.

Editors Herald: The fair, said to have exceeded all others, is past. The world in which it occurred remains to furnish similar and other achievements, as time still moves on. Our own and other writers have written up the fair. I do not essay the task. Much has been written; much remains unwritten. President Roosevelt saw the fair in one day; others in periods of different lengths. Those connected with its development wrought at it seven years. None saw it in detail. Neither would a lifetime afford sufficient opportunity. It was magnificently grand, amazingly extensive, bewilderingly interesting, and delightfully instructive. To others as well as myself, while exceeding in many ways the one of Chicago it was not so world representative. Chicago's mayor said: "We must admit that in many essentials it was beyond ours." The Globe Democrat to-day says: "To have held one and that the best, is honor enough just now as well as an indication of what St. Louis is and is to be."

Roosevelt day was so well devoted to him all else and everybody were eclipsed. A surging mass of humanity, rushing hither and thither to see the President, to be headed off ever and anon by rope, Jefferson guard, or police.

The closing or Francis day was somewhat similar; less danger to him as a personality made correspondingly more comfort for the multitude. The concluding exercises, of which Francis, Mayor Wells, Governor Dockery, and Doctor Niccolls were principals, were befitting to the occasion in letter and spirit.

Among the closing fireworks' display was the personation of President Francis. Farewell and good-night, the button touched, the curtain of darkness fell dissolving—shall we say the world's best show?

It may be significant that it occurred within the Zion-land. The resources of Missouri, agricultural and mineral, as also otherwise, attest it is befittingly supplied with products and power to produce all that Zion means. The palace adorned in corn principally, embellished in rare touches by other seeds, ranked Missouri in the forefront as to cereals and artistic effect.

The eagle, so real as to almost attune the ear to catch the scream, ox, sheep, pig, wrought in like precision; among the rest, two ladies attired gorgeously with corn-husk and other seed-product trimmings. Should these not be stored away in glass cases it would be opportunity lost.

The injunction to the Palmyra Seer to study all good books, countries, and nations, etc., suggests attendance at the fair as an especial educational privilege, and, under favorable conditions, duty. It is true,

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

Besides all the general educational opportunity, there was some of special interest relating to the restored gospel. In the Government Building in its Smithsonian exhibit, was the reproduction of six Central American ruins, a feature of value and deep interest to us as a people. The Government has, in a way, spoken, bearing testimony to the divinity of the Book of Mormon. Why not sing:

"Rejoice ye Saints of latter days Lift up your heads and sing?"

The accompanying descriptive statements said in part:

"Model of ruined Temple of Xoehicalco, Mexico. The pyramid for most part well preserved and presents entirely unique architectural features."

"Model of the Palace at Uxmal, Yucatan. It is built of hewn limestone, three hundred and twenty feet long by forty wide, and twenty-eight feet high, on a pyramid covering several acres."

"Model of the Palace at Mitla, Mexico. The building . . . front part one hundred and twenty-eight by thirty feet . . . back building sixty feet square, walls four to five feet thick, sixteen feet high. The facing is of beautifully cut and fitted stone with elaborate and tasteful moldings and panelings, the latter ornamented with geometric mosaic fret-work."

Model of the Castle Chichen Itza, Yucatan; one hundred and ninety by sixty feet."

"Aztec Deity, supposed weight twelve tons."

"Temple of the Cross; two hundred and fifty by one hundred and seventy-five feet at base."

The many accounts of these ruins and their architectural splendor has by this exhibit been attested. Thousands who have listened to our ministry in their defense of the Book of Mormon (school children with the rest) have here witnessed this confirmation of our evidence. Thank God from whom all blessings flow.

"His purposes will ripen fast,
Unfolding every hour,
The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower."

That bitter bud, the Book of Mormon, is fast blooming to the enlightening of thousands.

I was thankful for an opportunity to attend the fair and to drink from its fountain of instruction. Nobler resolve and better achievement, or "Onward and upward" should be the resultant conviction of the many of our people who were so fortunate as to have witnessed this demonstration of the world's progress.

In the faith and at work,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

BUFFALOVILLE, Indiana, December 2, 1904.

Dear Herald: We do so love to read good, interesting letters, especially the more spiritual ones. It seems that so many letters of late are merely business letters pertaining to the financial affairs of the church altogether. Of course this is an important subject, one which should receive proper attention from each and every member of the church; but let us not neglect our spiritual condition. We are promised in God's word that through right living many gifts and blessings shall be enjoyed by the church of God. If our spiritual condition is all right we will have a strong desire to do what we know to be our duty, pay our tithes and offerings, as well as attend to other duties. I do not doubt that the financial affairs of the church are greatly neglected by many; but what is the real cause of this? Is it because the members do not know they should pay tithes? I do not believe this is the case. They know their duty but lack proper zeal in the work which, if they had, would make them willing to do their duty, even if they had to make considerable sacrifice to that end. Or in other words there seems to be a lack of spirituality in the majority to-day. Too much worldliness! It seems sometimes that a great many are thinking more about the fine paper, carpets, etc., they are going to get for their new church-building than they are about the blessings they should enjoy and the benefits they should derive from meeting together to worship God in spirit and in truth. While it is right to make the place of worship comfortable and attractive, I think it is wrong to spend more money than is necessary to make it so. Our church is poor financially, and it takes a great deal to spread the gospel throughout the world. So let us look more to the spiritual condition of the church. Instead of adorning our church-buildings, unnecessarily, let us adorn ourselves, not with gold and silver and costly apparel, as some do, but with the many virtues which should be possessed by the true child of God. Then we can make our influence felt and will have the approval of God and the respect of men.

Saints, did you ever notice how spiritual the old HERALDS are, those which date back quite a number of years? To me they seem so different from those of the present. I do not mean that there is no spirituality in the HERALDS of to-day, but that there seems to be a great deal less than that manifested in the old ones.

God has not changed, nor do I believe he blessed those of that day more than he will bless us if we be as worthy as they. I fear that a great many of us "new" Saints would never go through the fiery trials, as did those who laid the foundation of our church, without fainting by the wayside.

I love to read the letters from the old "fathers" and "mothers" in the church. They seem so spiritual.

We have been very anxious to get the work started at this place, but as yet not a great deal has been done. Only one elder has come to preach for us, and circumstances prevented him from preaching but one sermon. The people were well pleased with what they heard. We have looked for other elders, but they have not come. I hope that in the near future God will see fit to help us in opening up a work here, by sending some one to preach for us. We wish to extend our sympathy to the family of Sr. Nancy Ramsey, who has lately gone from us. She was a member of the Derby Branch, and has borne her testimony to the truthfulness of this work. I remember her acts of kindness as a neighbor and friend as I lived near her two years.

Wishing success to all, I remain,

ANNA M. CUMMINGS.

WOODBINE, Iowa, December 4, 1904.

Dear Herald: Ere the year 1904 passes into eternity I want to inscribe my name in the pages of the HERALD, to let you know that I still live and am trying to cling to the "rod of iron that leads to the tree of life." Sixty years ago I heard the "joyful sound"; I recognized it as the voice of the Good Shepherd, although I was not just then ready to follow in his steps. But the sound followed me and rang in my ears until I was ready to obey, which I did about two years from the time it first saluted my ears, and I have never regretted yielding my life as a sacrifice to God, being "buried with Christ in baptism." Nor have I regretted putting on the gospel armor; and though my physical strength has waned, my spiritual has not decreased, nor my desire to aid in building up the kingdom of God.

I still love to stand as a humble mouthpiece for his truth.

Soon after the reunion at Dow City I went to Inman, Nebraska, to a reunion there. It was held in the little church amply large for the gathering, for I do not think there were more than sixty souls present at any meeting. The bread of life was broken by Elders Caffall, Gamet, Mintun, Self, Whiting, and the writer. The prayer-meetings were seasons of blessedness, and all felt that we were in the divine presence, and surely the divine Spirit inspired each soul. Most of the preaching bore no uncertain sound; and the testimonies borne were calm, intelligent experiences of those who delivered them, and were given under the divine influence, and not in wild, rhapsodic utterances, as we hear among other religionists. In fact, we had evidence of the truthfulness of the promise, "where two or three are gathered together in my name, there will I be in the midst of them."

After a season of prayer in the house of Bro. Downie, Elder Mintun and myself returned home on the 10th of October, where I found a summons to go to Magnolia and give words of comfort to Bro. and Sr. David Chambers, whose only son had been called to his rest in the paradise of God, he having closed a life of usefulness well worthy the imitation of all, both young and old. It was said by some not of our faith: "His life has been a benefit to me." I afterwards visited the Logan Saints, where I found a progressive spirit, especially among the younger ones. I then attended the district conference at Moorhead. No one would be able to see any evidence of the Braden raid against the church there. Saints seemed calm and content in the enjoyment of the blessed truths he came to destroy, and the only evidence that he had been there, was regret on the part of those who hired him to perform the unholy but fruitless task. We had an excellent conference under the supervision of Elder Sidney Pitt and F. A. Smith. I returned to Woodbine, where I endeavored to encourage the Saints to stand firm in the narrow way. From thence to Magnolia, where I trust I did no injury, then to Sioux City, calling at Mondamin, where I enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. and Sr. William Stuart. On the 10th of November I went to Sioux City, where I was kindly met by Elder J. M. Baker, who forwarded me to his home, where I was kindly received by his family. With him I visited a number of the Saints, and was pleased to find that while they were few in number, and not heavily laden with this world's wealth, yet there was evidence of love for the truth, and a desire to let the light of truth shine for the benefit of the inhabitants of that city, and the glory of God. But they have been hindered in their efforts by the lack of a suitable place to which they can invite the public to hear the angel's message.

A church-house had been offered them. Quite a fair building, formerly occupied by the "Mayflower Congregational body." The price of the building and lot, fifteen hundred dollars, payable in five years, in payments of two hundred and fifty dollars per year, without interest. They have about one month from date of sale to make first payment. They need help and need it now! Those among the Saints who are desirous of helping in so good a cause, can send offerings for that purpose to Elder James M. Baker, Kansas Street, Sioux City, Iowa. The building is a commodious one and in fair condition. I think the population of Sioux City numbers some thirty thousand or thirty-five thousand,—one of the principal cities of Iowa. It is of little use to keep a missionary there, when his hands are tied for want of a place in which to deliver his message. Street-preaching has closed. House to house preaching is a slow method. Shall they be permitted to occupy while an open door is offered? In order to do so they must have help. We are told, "God loves a cheerful giver"; who is willing to receive a manifestation of his love? The few Saints there are doing what they can, and the cause is well worthy of our help.

Yours for the gospel of Christ,

CHARLES DERRY.

ANAMOSA, Iowa, December 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: I came here on November 11 to be associated with the district president, Elder Warren E. Turner. On the 13th we began services in the O. K. schoolhouse about three miles from this place and continued six nights. The attendance was from small to fair; gave some tracts and loaned to two families Joseph Luff's The Old Jerusalem Gospel, so that in addition to what they heard from us they had the privilege of reading twenty-nine sermons.

By the request of some of the citizens we went to Fairview, an old-time village three and one half miles southwest of this city. The old Baptist church, which was erected in 1850 and unoccupied for past four years, was offered us in which to hold meetings. Several of the ladies and Mr. Leeper, the old-time junior, and his son, took charge of cleaning the church and also the taking care of it during the services. The attendance has been from twenty to sixty, and we have held fifteen meetings. Both places are new openings. We delivered the message in plainness. The people treated us kindly and listened attentively.

A few observations on missionary work may not be out of place, notwithstanding they may have been told oftentimes before. After being eighteen months alone in missionary work I realize the great benefit of two being together in new places; and while to some it might appear like diminishing the effective fighting force because of this, my observations, in this particular instance, would indicate an increase of power in effective work. This rule would not apply to missionaries within the confines of a branch, where local help was obtainable.

The wisdom is apparent of keeping some of the missionaries for a long period of time, especially if in their home district, in one field. Bro. Turner's wide acquaintance, and so many personal friends in the district, makes it possible for him and an associate to spend the entire year in opening up new places; but his duties as district president will not permit of it. We find ourselves handicapped some because of our lack of musical talent; the young and old did their part well, but could not make it as pleasant as with a good leader. Bro. Turner was from "fair to middling," but the writer was from "bad to worse," and often we wished for the trio from old Kewanee District,

"That stood upon Peoria's dreary street Without a friend on earth to greet,"

to give us a helping hand.

It is pleasant to note that the public are gradually learning that the Reorganization has nothing to do with those who have caused that "the way of truth shall be evil spoken of." One merchant in this city made the expression, "that people who kept posted on the current events of the day knew that there were two distinct organizations." Reverend DeWitt White, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of this city, treats us with marked kindness whenever present in Sunday-school or church, always asking myself or Bro. Turner to offer prayer, and giving us ample opportunity in Sunday-school to express our views. One Sunday when present in Sunday-school he taught the law of tithing as at present binding; persons not knowing him could have easily taken him for a bishop of our church expounding the law.

The following conversation occurred between two neighbors of the village:

"I hear that you are having good meetings at the church."

"Yes, why don't you come over?"

"I would like to awfully well, but I can't. Do they use the same kind of Bible as ours, or have they one of their own?"

"Why, our Bible of course, the one that we have had in the church for years; and they tell us to take notes and look in our Bibles at home, and see that the things they tell us are there."

We have felt the peaceful influence of God's Spirit aiding us in our work, and so realize that he is mindful of our needs. Sr. Turner has been as a kind mother, caring for the two missionaries for twenty-four days. What would we do were it not for kind-hearted Saints? If all sacrificed as do some of the missionaries' wives, soon the gospel would be heard "to earth's remotest bounds."

In going to and from meetings we have each walked sixty miles, and if the good Saints that believe the missionaries should not ride on the cars will only pay us at the rate of three cents per mile, we will invest it in new shoes; but as it was a matter of necessity and not of choice it may not be counted for righteousness.

In gospel bonds,

EDWARD RANNIE.

LAMONI, Iowa, December 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: October 5, I left home for a little missionary tour, the time to be spent and places visited to be governed, largely, by the degree of health afforded me. My first stopping-place was St. Joseph, Missouri, where I spent one week. Had lots of running to do in order to arrange my work. Spoke once on Sunday, attended three other branch meetings, and gave seventeen patriarchal blessings. We found a very good and pleasant home with Bro. and Sr. McNut.

October 12, we reached Stewartsville, twenty-two miles east of St. Joseph, where we remained till the 19th. Spoke five times and gave fifteen blessings. The congregations were small, except on Sunday, but the attention and interest were good, (with but one exception) and I felt, very sensibly, that the weak efforts made were not in vain. Here we found good homes at Bro. and Sr. I. McCord's, and Bro. and Sr. A. W. Head's. We were also made welcome to hold our blessing meetings at Bro. McCord's. By the way, I had a new experience in the McCord family, giving seven blessings. That is, to Bro. and Sr. McCord, three sons and two daughters.

Our next point was Cameron, a few miles east of Stewartsville. Here is a young branch composed of old and new Saints, carefully watched over by Bro. J. C. Elvert. Bro. Daniels met us at the train, took us to his cozy little home, where he and Sr. Daniels made us comfortable and welcome. Our stay here was brief—only two days—for we were already billed for the Far West District conference, to be held at the Pleasant Grove Branch on Saturday and Sunday. Spoke once, in a private house, and gave four blessings.

Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, found us at Pleasant Grove, attending the convention meetings, to some extent, and the conference. Bro. John Davis spoke Saturday night, and Bro. I. N. Roberts Sunday night. I did not hear either of these brethren, but heard good reports of both efforts. I was in poor health and could only attend part of the meetings. I spoke on Sunday morning and the good Lord graciously answered my prayers. I had earnestly prayed that I might be able to leave a gospel testimony with the Saints, some of whom I might never see again. How good it is that we can always depend upon God and call upon him for needed help.

October 25, I returned home, since which time we have visited Evergreen Branch (six miles southwest of Lamoni,) where I spoke twice and gave eight blessings; also Cleveland, Iowa, where I gave twenty-one blessings and spoke twice.

Sr. Estella Wight did my stenographic work at all these places, and she did it faithfully and well. She is getting to be quite a missionary.

I omitted to say that while at Pleasant Grove I gave two blessings, and we were made royally welcome at the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. John Hovenga. Sr. Hovenga is a daughter of Bro. and Sr. F. Palfrey of Macon, Missouri.

The branches in the Far West District are not in as good condition as they should be, so far as I was able to determine; and while this statement may be humiliating to some, it is, nevertheless, a mild statement of fact, as I see it. There is too much carnality, selfishness, and blindness, to insure success. Too little confidence in the real and true, and too much confidence in appearances. In a word, a great lack of "faith in God." Nevertheless, there are noble, intelligent, unselfish Saints to be found in all the branches. May God have mercy on the erring ones. "Come up higher," is the loving invitation which is still in demand; "and whosoever will" may come, thank God. It may be that some one of that class which believes it is wrong to criticise, will take me to task for saying these things for publication in the HERALD. My answer is, that if the HERALD does not present, to the church and the world, both sides of the picture, the light and the dark, through its editors and contributors, then it ceases to be a correct representative. Is it right to pander to man's pride and vanity, at the expense of truth and reliability? More than this, from the law ground of expediency alone, a one-sided representation is a failure. The whole truth will come to light, sooner or later, and when it does, there comes with it a loss to the cause of truth, and to the people, which can not be told.

"Nothing but the right can ever be expedient, since that can never be true expediency which would sacrifice a greater good to a less."—Whately.

As years are added to my experience I am, through the grace of God, enabled to see, more and more clearly, the weakness and imperfection of man, on the one hand, and on the other, the strength and perfection of God. Is this gospel development?

With confidence in the truth, and a bright hope of its ultimate and complete victory, I subscribe myself,

Your brother in the warfare,

J. R. LAMBERT.

NECEDAH, Wisconsin.

Editors Herald: I have belonged to the church for about twenty-five years. We live ten miles north of Necedah, and belong to what is known as the Searles Prairie Branch. We started with eleven members, three years ago, and by constantly keeping the wheels moving we have made many friends and have added to our number till now the branch numbers forty-five. Nine have been baptized since our last conference in October, making eighteen in six months. Those recently baptized were the hardest fighters against us. One brother told me that in the past he could not look us in the face, he was so mean, and that he knew we were trying to do good to others. But thank the Lord that he now, with others, can stand as a witness for Christ. We are all as poor as "Job's turkey," but are trying to build a house of worship; we have the building up, rough floor laid, all sheathed and shingled, windows and frames ready to put in. We want to put on steel brick siding. Our building is twenty-two by thirty-six with twelve foot posts; ceiling will be fifteen and one half feet in the clear. We want to have it ready for Easter services. As I have been appointed as solicitor for means I will ask all my brothers and sisters, all over this broad land, to donate as God has prospered them. Even twenty-five cents will be thankfully received. We would not make this appeal but we have had a hard year. August 8 the frost came and ruined thirty-five acres of corn and potato crop for me, and damaged the crops of my brethren here also.

Bro. A. L. Whiteaker came over and gave us twelve days' work and preached at night in the schoolhouse. Bro. Auten Johnson, also of Valley Junction, came and donated ten days' work, which we appreciated. We are always glad to have the missionaries stop and see us, especially those who do not find fault with the country. If there is a brother or sister who can spare a few dimes, we will be glad. We hope the "jots man" will see this, also Bro. I. N. Roberts, who baptized me at Blue Rapids, Kansas. I would like to hear his small voice once more. My address is R. F. D. No. 2, Necedah, Wisconsin.

JOHN MOORE.

AVERY, Texas, December 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: November 10 I left Knobnoster, Missouri, went down to Sedalia, met Bro. H. E. Moler there, and together we came on to Texas. The first place we stopped was at Midway, near Detroit, Texas, where I held a debate in September with a Mr. Campbell of the Baptist faith. Found everything very quiet. Some were very uneasy before the debate came off, thinking it would make enemies out of neighbors; but I am sure that the people of that community have acted wisely, and have not been contending over the matter, but were willing for the matter to rest after the discussion. We preached there, and at Manchester, some. Visited the Saints and cheered them the best we could. On the 25th of the month we came to this place (Avery) where Bro. J. F. Grimes and I held tent-meetings last summer. We have not been able to get a public building in Avery, to preach in, for three years; therefore, have not been able to do much. Last summer we took the tent there, had two weeks' meeting with very good attendance.

On coming back this fall, Baptists brought their man, Reverend Hicks, of Mississippi, on the night of the 25th of November, to Bro. John Down's, where we were preaching, and challenged us for debate. Of course we accepted, and as his time was very precious we had to enter into the fray at once. We commenced the debate Monday night, the 28th, Bro. Moler standing in defense of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. He acquitted himself nobly as a servant of God. Allow me to say, here, I never have been forced to sit under as much abuse and misrepresentation. I believe during the eight sessions he said more hard things about our people than any other man could. There was nothing he could think of that was too low and vulgar for him to compare the Latter Day Saints to. He went so far as to say that all the Saints that did not quit the church after he got through exposing Mormonism at Avery were scabs and idiots. His whole fight was on Joseph Smith and the character of the Saints. He pretended to read a statement from a book he had that Bro. E. L. Kelley had to sign a libel in Minnesota to keep out of prison. When he read the book I asked him for page and he would not tell me what page he read from. When the session closed I went to him again about it but he would not let me see the book, and got mad. We crowded him so close on it that it was very apparent that the statement was not in the book. In the next session he brought up the same accusation and claimed to read it from a manuscript that he had received from the Anti-Mormon League, but he would not let us examine the manuscript. Then Bro. Moler dared him to write out the charge and sign his name to it, but he declined. He knew it was a lie.

The debate closed Friday at noon. I am satisfied that we have not lost anything, but in the future we will realize that good has been done.

We commence another debate with Baptists on the 10th, at Lydia, Texas. This field has been very quiet for some years till recently, and it seems like the adversary has been aroused to diligence. I hope we will have the Spirit of the Master in the defense of the work in the future, as we have in the past. It is very dry here, and the people are wishing for rain.

The Lord is merciful and we feel that he will do all things for our good. I am still Bishop's agent in Northeastern Texas. Saints, do not forget your duty. I have not collected anything up to the present time.

In bonds,

E. L. HENSON.

Independence Items.

Our regular quarterly business-meeting was held on the 5th inst. and it was stated by report that eighteen had been received by letter, two by certificate of baptism, five had been baptized, three expelled, and seven of our number were recorded as having died. The net gain was fifteen; marriages solemnized, six; and number of children blessed, thirteen. The branch accepted with thanks a bequest from John McKenzie, late of Jefferson City, Missouri, deceased, of his entire collection of books and periodicals. Among other business matters it was ordered that a directory be arranged for the benefit of the branch, and a complete list of the membership with addresses be placed in some convenient location for use. A former resolution passed restricting the auxiliaries in regard to finances (and in lieu thereof supporting their present system) was rescinded. Many believe that unanimity ought to be achieved in regard to the uses of money obtained by entertainments of the different societies, while a few, as in the case of the Protestant Episcopal Church and Reverend H. C. Potter, in which it was decided that for a bishop to do what he is doing is out of place "because to do such things is not the function of the church," believe that the public attention should be drawn toward the private parlor or public hall and not to the Latter Day Saint Church for the presentation among us of what is in the line of entertainments or amusements.

That the societies will be able to concede something more than the objects for which they are now working is the reason expressed by some why they should be allowed and encouraged in their present pursuits, while others aver that so long as some of them have seemed to fail to be interested in the purpose for which they were organized, with their membership depleted, they should be allowed to enter into other schemes for holding them together and other good objects, as in the case of the Gleaners, who have lately been enabled to place, by means of a doll bazaar and oyster-supper, about fifty dollars in the orphans' home fund, and also the Daughters of Zion, who are making strenuous efforts in this direction.

So far as the Willing Helpers are concerned the record of 1904 shows that the year was chiefly remarkable for the small proportion of poor in the branch needing their help—a work for which the society was organized; so they very properly turned almost their entire attention to that much needed object, church improvements, and they have prospered.

The following were received into the branch, namely: Bro. and Sr. John E. Matthews of Birmingham, England, Bro. and Sr. George F. Weston of Walker, Missouri, also William J. and Donald G., children of Bro. and Sr. L. P. Caldwell, on certificate of baptism, making our total membership fourteen hundred and seventeen.

On the evening of the 27th ult. our beloved brother, Omer Lytle, son of Hugh Lytle, passed calmly away and on the following Tuesday the funeral took place from the church, Bro. W. H. Garrett preaching the sermon; also on the 10th inst. the obsequies of Sr. Robinson, the beloved mother of Sr. Ella Whitehead, were performed at their residence, Bro. Hilliard delivering proper eulogy and a comforting and instructive discourse.

Sunday, the 4th, was a cloudy day and in the evening there was a light fall of snow, the first of the season, which, melting, made it unpleasant for pedestrians, and there were only about one hundred and fifty present to hear Bro. R. May, who preached on the subject of the antiquity of the gospel, taking for his text Malachi 3:6: "For I am the Lord, I change not." Excellent interest was manifest at both morning and evening services, at the former of which Bro. M. H. Bond held forth, who also conducted the afternoon sacrament-service, assisted by Brn. H. R. Mills and W. H. Garrett.

The organ offertory in the evening was particularly effective, the soft vibrations seeming to float in sweetest cadences of melody, and after this was sung by the few who were in the choir the solemn, sweet anthem "Softly fades the twilight ray."

There was quite a heavy fall of snow yesterday morning as evidenced by the diminished attendance at the meetings, although at the Sunday-school one hundred of the little folks—the primaries—braved the storm and there were three hundred and twenty-six in total attendance, four teachers being absent. Bro. Alfred White preached a good discourse in the morning, and the afternoon prayer-meeting also was, as some one said, "a grand meeting." The time was fully occupied with testimonies of gratitude, and the Spirit's presence was attested by many, also through the gift of prophesy, commending the Saints, and urging on to a life of obedience and further continuance in faithful service to God.

Bro. W. E. Peak was announced as speaker for the evening. Bro. and Sr. Millard's little son Luther was blessed by Brn. Hilliard, Bond, and Short.

The choir sang in the morning the prayerful anthem:

"In the hour of trial Jesus plead for me,
Lest by base denial I depart from thee;
When thou seest me waver, with a look recall,
Nor through fear or favor suffer me to fall."

Extracts from Letters.

J. W. Waldsmith writes from Wilbur, Nebraska: "I am here on church business. Expect to hold forth at Dolan School-house next Sunday. Bro. Sutton baptized three or four there some six weeks ago, and he and Bro. Madison have baptized several at Tecumseh and at Auburn. We hold our district conference at Tecumseh, January 15 and 16."

George H. Shearer, Little Sioux, Iowa: "Moving along here as usual. Baptized two last Sunday. Looked for Bro. D. M. Rudd last night; had an appointment for him, and a very good audience, but for some reason he did not come."

Ed Jackson, Floresville, Texas: "Our hearts were made glad by a visit from our worthy brother, John Harp. Preached one sermon to a small crowd. We should consider it a blessing to all here if he could be sent to Southwestern Texas another conference year. I gave the HERALD containing the sermon by Elder J. W. Wight, "Hope for the condemned," to a Campbellite neighbor to read. He said it was the best effort he ever heard put forth."

Elder J. W. Quinly, Springfield, Missouri: "We are gaining in numbers slowly. The writer has baptized five. We have many reasons to rejoice because of the blessings received in our prayer- and testimony-meetings, and we are living witnesses to the fact that the signs do follow the believer. The way grows brighter as we humble ourselves and earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints."

Wilbert Short, Lancaster, Wisconsin: "I herewith subscribe for HERALD and Ensign, as I realize it is quite impossible to get along without them, as they are of great benefit in enabling us to drop a word of instruction to our fellow men."

W. R. Rush, Stillwater, Oklahoma: "If we as Saints of the Most High do not let our light shine, we will soon be counted as no better than the world. The time has come when we must have the meek and quiet Spirit, which it is our duty to cultivate. This is a hastening time, and we should strive to accomplish some good. If I had a few sermon tracts or pamphlets I could use them to good advantage. May God bless and prosper the righteous and honest in heart."

Sr. Rosetta Thompson, Minden City, Michigan: "I can truly say that I love this latter-day work, and have had many testimonies in regard to it. I realize that if we would abide the celestial kingdom we must keep the celestial law. Obeying the first principles is but a part of the obligation placed upon us. We must then go on to perfection."

F. L. Sawley, Springerton, Illinois: "Bro. Amos T. Higdon, who is my colaborer in this Southeastern Illinois District, has been very sick with typhoid fever, but is now convalescent, though not yet able to preach. I lost about three weeks' time, but am now busy again. Held a two-week meeting at Akin; had nice crowds and good interest. We rejoice in the grand work, and are anxious to do our humble part fully."

Mrs. K. Green, Appledore, Ontario: "Elders R. C. Evans, J. L. Mortimer, and A. Knisley are making a permanent footing in the West. We wish them success. A number of our brethren and sisters have moved out to Alberta, and we are interested in their welfare. Our branch misses all its scattered members. We miss Bro. Rony Traxler and family who moved away a year ago, and Bro. Ferris Atkins who is at the Saints' Home, and all the brethren and sisters. May God bless you is my earnest prayer."

F. D. system during the past year. Any members having been ordained to higher quorums will please advise us, so that their names may be dropped from our list. Any other information relative to deaths, expulsions, etc., will be gladly received.

Born.

Died.

THRUTCHLEY.—At his home in Macon County, Missouri, Bro. Robert Thutchley passed peacefully away, November 16, 1904, at 8 a. m. He was born October 10, 1849, at St. Louis, Missouri. The brother professed faith in Christ in the year 1877, was ordained to the office of priest, June 27, 1897. Bro. Thutchley was married to Emma Gibson, January 1, 1873, who, with two sisters, one brother, and a number of relatives and friends, survive him. He was preceded to the other side by his parents, five brothers, and one sister. Bro. Thutchley was loved and respected by all who knew him. He lived an honest, upright life. As a brother in gospel bonds he was faithful to the duties which he had been called to assume, and endeavored at all times to live a consistent life. Up to the time of his death he was held in high esteem by all of his friends and acquaintances, who were many, he having spent forty-two years of his life in the one township. His reputation as a citizen was all that could be desired, and his departure is keenly felt. It is truly said of him that the community is much better for his having lived in it. The funeral-services were conducted by Elder F. T. Mussell. The home of our brother not being adequate to accommodate the vast number of people who came to pay their last tribute to their departed brother and friend, the services were conducted at the cemetery. There were no families who were not there, in whole or in part, for miles around the home of our departed brother.

They who die in Christ are blest,
Ours be, then, no thought of grieving,
Sweetly with their God they rest
All their toils and troubles leaving.

WETHERAL.—Sr. M. A. Wetheral, aged 55, passed away after an illness of two years. She was a faithful member of the church. A husband and three sons are left to mourn. Though isolated from the presence of Saints she was faithful and exemplary in her life, the light of the gospel radiating through her acts, which made for her many friends, a great number of whom attended the funeral. SAINT'S HERALD and Ensign were her spiritual companions and in them she had great joy. Funeral discourse by Elder E. A. Davis to a very large assembly not of our faith.

GOODE.—William Henry Goode was born August 14, 1855, at Chester, Geauga County, Ohio. He became identified with the Reorganized Church August 14, 1896. On March 12, 1892, he was united in marriage to Sr. Emma Hershey. To this union four children were born. He was taken sick sometime during the summer with cancer of stomach which caused his death November 24, 1904. He leaves a loving wife, an aged mother, four brothers, and five sisters. The funeral was on Saturday, November 26, at 2.30, from the new church near Tabor. Sermon by Elder D. R. Chambers, assisted by Elder Charles Fry.

MIDGORDON.—At the home of her son, Bro. Ole H. Midgordon, Lamoni, Iowa, December 4, 1904, Mrs. Martha Midgordon, aged 77 years, 10 months, and 3 days. Her husband, aged 80 years, and two children besides Ole H. survive her, being Mrs. Mary Nelson, of Hills, Minnesota, and Bro. John Midgordon of Lasalle County, Illinois. The family came from Norway to Lasalle County, in 1871, and the parents continued strictly in the Lutheran faith, living pure and honorable lives. The funeral-service was held at Bro. Midgordon's, sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins and prayer by Bro. David Keown.

LANE.—Alice Carrie Syres was born September 11, 1877, at Springfield, Illinois. Died November 25, 1904, aged 27 years, 2 months, 14 days. Married to Harold G. Lane January 9, 1899. To this union one little girl was born, who preceded her about three years. She leaves husband, mother, (Mrs. Mary Syres,) six sisters, and two brothers. She was baptized into the Latter Day Saint Church August 23, 1903, by Elder W. A. Smith. Funeral-service at Latter Day Saint church at Little Sioux, Iowa, Sunday, at 1 o'clock, by Elder G. H. Shearer.

December 6, 1904. Bro. Moore was born in Upper Canada, December 27, 1836. He was married to Miss Lydia Kimberland. Two daughters were born to them, both of whom are living. He and his wife were baptized December 5, 1864. The death-angel visited their home January 5, 1898, and carried his companion to the home Christ is preparing for the faithful. Services at the Latter Day Saint church at Montrose, in charge of Elder F. M. McDonald, and he was laid beside his wife.

LEYTHAM.—Near Portsmouth, Shelby County, Iowa, December 6, 1904, Carmen, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Richard Leytham, Jr., aged 3 years, 1 month, and 3 days. Funeral-services in charge of J. H. Bullard; sermon by Sidney Pitt from Matthew 18:10. A large number of friends and neighbors were in attendance.

UNCAFER.—At Apollo, Pennsylvania, December 4, 1904, Mr. Henry Uncafer, husband of our worthy Sr. Juliet Uncafer. He was born December 16, 1845, at Adamsburg, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania. He was a kind, thoughtful, amiable man, and highly respected; leaves a wife and invalid son. Funeral-services at the home, in charge of, and sermon by Elder Robert M. Elvin, assisted by Reverend W. E. Ruch, of the Baptist Church.

Erwin, November 26, 1896; was ordained to the office of priest January 23, 1900. He was true till death to the covenant he made with God. ## Why Not Preach?

In an article in the December World's Work on "The Decline of the Ministry," Everett T. Tomlinson raises the question, "What deters men from entering the ministerial profession?" Mr. Tomlinson gives the result of his correspondence:

The replies and explanation of twenty successful ministers, condensed and classified, are as follows:

1. The lack of freedom. The minister is looked upon too much as one who is hired or employed. If he deviates from the theological position he assumed when in his inexperience and immaturity he declared his views, then he is certain to feel the force of the opposition often shutting him out even from opportunities of labor and service. He is looked upon not as the minister of Christ but as the minister of the church. He is expected to be a defender of the faith rather than a teacher or a student.

2. The short and shortening period of service. The reasonable certainty that after he is forty years of age his service will be less in demand, and the dead-line of fifty no imaginary bogie.

3. The difficulty of maintaining a home on the meager salaries given. That a clergyman's salary usually was a little less than what was expected of him.

4. The continual shifting of his home and field.

5. His subjection to the pettiness of the attacks and demands of petty people.

6. The present "beneficiary system," which degraded the entire body.

These twenty men, every one of whom is a successful pastor, were asked if they had their lives to live over again if they would select the work they were now doing. Seven replied, "Yes" enthusiastically, three were somewhat undecided, nine replied "No" positively, and one declared that if he could avoid being "ordained" he would be only too glad to take up the work. And every man of the twenty declared that "preaching" in itself was the highest pleasure of his life.

A Country Home for Everybody.

McClure-Phillips have just published a book by E. P. Powell, one of New York State's prize fruit-farmers, entitled The Country Home. More than thirty years ago the author was forced by ill health to leave the pulpit. With a limited capital and nine acres he found it necessary to make a living. Out of his property he has made a beautiful home, an abundant income, and become an authority throughout the country on rural matters. The book is written to supply the needs of that large body of people who are deserting the crowded metropolitan districts, and establishing themselves in the country. It is a practical book on making the first essential of the country home, the homestead, and gives detailed information about choosing the land, the house, the water supply, the lawns, the orchards, how to save money and where not to save it, merits and demerits of ornamental trees, truck gardens, etc. It is not a book of theory, but a common-sense volume founded on the experience of the author.

Can You Hold an Audience?

Doctor J. Berg Esenwein, of the Pennsylvania Military College, has written a book entitled, How to Attract and Hold an Audience. It reveals the secret of success in public speaking. If one is already a good speaker it will make him more effective; and to a beginner it is almost invaluable. It is a systematic work and will aid any one who wishes to become a public speaker. Published by Hinds & Noble, 4 Cooper Institute, New York; price one dollar.

Co-operation in Finland.

Finland is the latest convert to coöperation and has adopted it with almost religious fervor and bids fair to rival the growth in other countries having much older societies. When the Finnish people saw that their political independence had been taken from them they determined to put forth every effort for economic and intellectual advancement. Here as nowhere else has coöperation had such general support from the very beginning. Small and great have banded themselves together for coöperative success, special lectures being given at the University and attended by hundreds. Students during their vacation spread the coöperative gospel through the length and breadth of the land. The Finnish Co-operative Review has a circulation of 28,000, greater than that of any other periodical in the country, not even excepting newspapers. Two poets of national reputation have written poems concerned with the ideals of the movement which have been set to music and are sung in all parts of Finland.—From "Coöperative Industries," by Mary Rankin Cranston, in the Chautauquan for December.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1901, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" Three boxes Quit-to-bac postpaid only $1.50 guaranteed to cure or money refunded for the asking. Address, (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois.

ELDER FREDERICK M. SMITH returned to Lamoni, Iowa, Saturday, December 24, after an absence of several months in the East, having visited the Saints in various places in the New England and Atlantic States.

SR. EMILY PHILLIPS, St. Thomas, Ontario, sends a donation on the college debt, and writes: "I think it will be our family share. I obtained this money by getting up a little program with my family and a few friends, at home, and made a charge of ten cents, (five cents for children,) and in that way raised $3.75. I send it trusting that it may help a little."

A GODLY and diligent schoolmaster shall gather such flowers out of the Holy Bible for his scholars, from time to time, as occasion shall serve, with the sweet and strong savor whereof they may repel and put away the pestiferous and mortal odors of the errors and heresies, not only of the papists, but also of all other sectaries.—Thomas Becon.

THE MASONIC OATH SACRED FROM INQUIRY.

Bro. E. B. Morgan, writing from Cardiff, Wales, November 29, sent us a clipping from the South Wales Echo for November 18, 1904, which is a report of an incident which occurred in Paris, France:

BOUND BY MASONIC OATH; FRENCH WITNESS' DECLARATION.

An extraordinary incident took place yesterday in Paris during the hearing of a case at the Palais de Justice. M. Gustave Thery, who was called upon to give evidence, said that he was prepared to swear to tell the truth, but could not swear to tell the whole truth. "The case you are trying now," he said, "has already been tried before the Grand Orient. One of the principal persons in the case has been declared innocent before that court, and every brother has been enjoined to proclaim that fact. Whatever I might think or know, unless I am released by this person from my Masonic oath, I must obey this order, I therefore can not swear to tell the whole truth."

Me. Labori, in a fiery speech, protested with great indignation, and, turning to the judge, said, "So above your jurisdiction there is an occult jurisdiction more powerful than legal justice: and we have now arrived at a state of affairs that when witnesses come into court this jurisdiction weighs on their consciences and prevents them from telling the truth. I admit my emotion is profound, for it is the whole future of France which is at stake, and all the honor of justice will fall."

Thunders of applause broke out in court, and M. Lescouve, substitute of the Procureur, said, "I share your emotion. There is only one justice here—the truth—and only one oath—that of the code."

This incident, following on the revelations regarding the spy system in the army, has aroused great indignation.

We present this from the fact that the question of the inviolability of secret oath, like the one referred to in this court of justice in France, has lately come up in the United States for a possible inquiry and solution by the public and by the courts. It may be said to be one of the questions which has arisen from the inquiry pending before the senatorial committee in the Smoot case. In this inquiry the question as to the nature of the oath which has been imposed and taken in the endowment ceremonies in the Utah Mormon church is presented. Whether the persons who have taken such oath are justified in refusing to state what the oath was, or whether it is of such a character as to warrant the senate committee in punishing the party who declines to reveal the nature of the oath, remains to be determined. It would seem from the action of the French court that there is danger in such secret oaths, so far as the state is concerned. We await developments.

HAS A PRIEST THE RIGHT TO CONSECRATE THE OIL?

We are asked the question whether a priest may properly officiate in the blessing and consecration of oil to be used in administering to the sick. We are not aware of any written law governing the matter of consecration of oil. There is, however, a traditional teaching to the effect that Joseph the Martyr should have said that this right and privilege belonged to the Melchisedec priesthood under the common head that it was their right to administer in the laying on of hands and blessing of the people, which is restricted from the priest in the clause of the law which says, "Neither teachers nor deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands." By a special provision the priest may baptize and administer the sacrament, which would seem to limit these privileges with the others mentioned as the priest's duty, so far as duties in common attach to both the Melchisedec and the Aaronic priesthood. We conclude therefore that it is not the right of the priest to consecrate oil as a ceremony.

 "CONCERNING GRACELAND COLLEGE."

Since the Bishop under the above caption has raised the issue relating to the college by virtue of the resolution passed by the General Conference last spring and the subsequent action of the committee and board of trustees, and as I, as one of both said committee and board, did not then and do not now agree with the action in continuing the running of the said college contrary to the expressed will of the church as shown in said resolution, it is but proper that I be heard, and more especially so since the Bishop has been permitted the editorial place in the HERALD in which to make his argument in favor of the running of the college.

1. The first question and its reply I shall not notice since "there was no attempt made to suspend the Articles of Incorporation or any rule therein by the conference."

2. That the college is a "creature of the church" is admitted by the Bishop; and that "the law is paramount, and must be followed or death and evil is the result," I most certainly agree with. And thereby hangs a tale. Not only is the college a creature but the articles of its incorporation as well. These articles may be amended by either a General Conference or the board of trustees. The board being a creature of the conference should seek to fulfill the expressed wishes of said conference—its creator—if it can do so legitimately.

The 1904 General Conference said, "we favor a discontinuance of Graceland College," until such time as the conference shall say to reopen. Since the General Conference so favored, and since there is no resolution on record requiring a sixty-day notice before the conference can declare what it favors, the resolution declaring that it so favored was a legal one. Therefore it was the duty of the trustees, as a creature of the conference, to execute that which the conference favored. And since "These articles may be amended . . . at any meeting of the board of Trustees herein named, providing sixty days' published notice of said amendment and the nature of the same be given through the SAINTS' HERALD prior to the time of such . . . meeting," the board of trustees should have given such notice and at the meeting provided for and made such amendment as would have been necessary to the execution of that which the General Conference said it favored.

3. Will the Bishop kindly point out what resolution, "passed by a prior General Conference," prohibits the right of a conference to pass a vote expressive of its opinion as to the closing of the college?

The assumption as to a likelihood of contrary "opinion" obtaining had notice been given partakes too much of the man-of-straw argument to be worthy a reply. "If not why was the notice not given?" The question is as weak as its basis, and the two are bound to totter to an ignominious fall through their own weakness. It will be well for those who favor the running of the college contrary to the expressed wish of a majority in General Conference to fully consider the closing sentence of this paragraph: "It is not necessary for the church or an individual to do wrong in order to be right."

4. To this last question the answer can only be, Yes, while the Bishop says, "No." The Bishop's own reasoning proves his answer wrong! Yes, "the board of trustees were duly and legally appointed by proper action and were a creature of the body to perform the duties of "their office," and as the conference had said it favored the closing of the college, and this board was indeed but a "creature," one of its specific duties was to comply with what the conference (its creator) had declared it favored. There was no "attempted act of the body to instruct the trustees to go contrary to their obligations as trustees under the incorporation," for said incorporation gave to these trustees the right to amend the articles under the sixty days' notice clause, all of which they not only could but should have done, and still have remained within the legitimate bounds of their expressed privileges and duties. Refusing to do this they openly rebelled against their creator (the conference) and did that on the other hand which was "contrary to the law and without any authority or right." The concluding sentence of the Bishop's answer is all right in its place but so foreign to the question at issue that it is unworthy of notice under the present discussion.

Yours for the right,
J. W. WIGHT.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The reports which have reached the papers, at least the Ensign and HERALD, respecting Bro. Luff's accident, carry with them a misunderstanding. In a note dated December 13, Bro. Luff corrects the misunderstanding. He says: "The ankle was not dislocated, but it was wrenched, the ligaments torn, muscles contused, and the tibia cracked transversely about midway between the ankle and knee; my back was bruised and left wrist sprained." This is his own statement as to the injury. He says he is gaining quite encouragingly; that he had hoped to be out on crutches by the time he wrote, but that nature pleads for a few more days extension, and he is yielding as gracefully as he can. Bro. Luff is very restless, but is submitting as philosophically as he can to the confinement necessary to recovery. He and Bro. J. C. Clapp wrote us humorous letters deploring the tendency in leaders to make unnecessary breaks in personal conduct; the one declining peremptorily to follow any such lead as that set by us when we tumbled out of our buggy, and the other regretting very sincerely and seriously that he had followed such a lead, though it may have been inadvertently done, both referring to the misfortune which happened to the Editor about three or four weeks ago. We forgave these brethren for the stricture passed upon us as a leader upon the hypothesis that we did not ask others to follow us to their personal detriment.

Correct Quotations.—Many of the elders both in their preaching services and in the articles which they write for publication make quotations from the sayings of President Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Jedediah M. Grant, and others of the Utah church, which quotations are challenged by the elders who are now being sent out from the Utah church, and the proof of their correctness is demanded. This demand for proof of correctness is sometimes coupled with the statements made by these elders that the quotations are the work of the Reorganized Church, manufactured to suit the occasion, and are not true quotations. Our elders should bear in mind to be very careful in their statements of proposed fact, and to be sure of their evidence; as for instance: Bro. J. W. Morgan writes us from Freedom, Colorado, December 15, that in a late discourse he quoted from Bro. H. O. Smith's tract, The Necessity for a Reorganization of the Church, etc., in which Bro. Smith quotes from the language of Brigham Young in the course of remarks made in the Bowery, Great Salt Lake City, October 8, 1860, and found on page 202, first column, of the Journal of Discourses, volume 8; reported by George D. Watt. The language quoted occurs in said Journal as follows: "The teasers who come all the time after women, and soon get tired of them and want to divorce them, I make pay ten dollars for each divorce, and that is my private bank." We have quoted this language from the Journal of Discourses itself, and we know that it is correctly taken from said book. If President Brigham Young did not say it, then the fault lies with the church in Utah itself for having had the remarks of President Young reported and for publishing them so that everybody who wished could read them; and these men who deny the correctness of the quotation do so without knowledge, which is easily within their reach if they will but take the pains to look up the matter in their own works. They ought to know that we are not foolish enough to make and publish a false quotation from President Brigham Young's language or from the language of any other speaker of the past or present.

Word from Bro. Frederick M. Smith from Washington, District of Columbia, December 15, reports that he had had interviews with the men with whom his business lay touching the South Sea Islands mission and the action of the French governor there in trying to prevent the attendance of the native brethren at the conference of the mission, that he was pleasantly received and had had an opportunity to present the matter to Secretary Hay, who stated that he would do all that he could do according to diplomatic usage and courtesy in the premises. He also wrote that he hoped to have an opportunity to meet the French minister, M. Jusserand, from which he thought possibly something might result to our benefit. He adds, however, kind of humorously, "I am not building great hopes in the matter, for this diplomacy is a peculiar something which covers a multitude of things which may not be exactly right. At least so I judge." He also writes that the Smoot investigation is progressing, that the prosecution expects to have all their witnesses examined in time for adjournment for the holidays. He seems to be feeling well. Bro. Sheehy is with him and they are doing what they can for the cause. Both are safe men; no fears need be entertained that they will compromise the cause.

Bro. Herbert S. Salisbury, of Ferris, Hancock County, Illinois, was at the late election chosen surveyor of the county. Of him the local Hancock County Journal had this to say: "Professor Herbert Salisbury, the new county surveyor, succeeding J. R. Crabill, is well qualified for the duties of the position and will give the people careful and capable service."

Elder N. S. Dunnington, closed a ten-day meeting at Buffalo City, West Virginia, of late, and is now holding forth at Herald. He reports attentive hearers and feels confident great good will be done in that mission the coming year. He also reports the illness of Elder J. L. Williams. We trust the Lord will remember Bro. Williams and his family and bring comfort to all.

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING?

Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. —Revelation 18: 4.

This passage evidently refers to the wickedness of the world, her ways, customs, and practices. Both in professing religion and in conducting the business affairs of this life the question with intelligent Latter Day Saints is not the divinity of the work, but it is: Are we, as ministers and laity, practicing what we profess to believe and advocate to the world? This is the most serious and vital question that we have to deal with in this life, because not only our present but our future eternal happiness depends upon our understanding and practice of it.

No intelligent Latter Day Saint will question the absolute necessity of obeying all that God has or may command; but, on the other hand, there is no intelligent Latter Day Saint but what will question the necessity of trying to obey all that has been taught as being the commands of God to the people. Our teachers have not always agreed, hence the necessity of men and women judging for themselves what commands are divine and what are or may be of man. We can not make truth that is of salvation, but our salvation depends upon a proper conception of God's truths as he has revealed them, or may reveal them. We should not forget that the infallible test is that they will always agree. Jesus said to the believing Jews, "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 32.

It is not safe to take the position that if God calls a man to any particular part of his work, that he will always qualify him, because the history of the past teaches too plainly that God has called many that have faltered or failed to do the work intrusted to them. If ever we make a success in gospel work, we will have to seek earnestly to qualify ourselves according to our opportunities and the natural abilities that God has endowed, or may endow us with. We are safe in assuming that our heavenly Father will do his part.

For Latter Day Saints in business affairs to adopt the ways of the world in catchy advertising, or for our papers or periodicals that claim to represent the faith of the Saints to indulge in giving puffs to ministers in their work or business men in their business enterprises, is certainly reprehensible and is not coming out from the world, but rather going into it. Proper appreciation in commendable, flattery or misrepresentation is condemnable. Plenipotentiaries who are called to represent the different governments of the world frequently indulge in what is called diplomacy, and sometimes practice for the benefit of their respective governments what the common people would call deception or hypocrisy. Have we diplomats in the church? Diplomacy, as it is usually practiced in the world, will never build up Zion. "Zion can not be built up unless it be by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2. We can not deceive God and we do not always deceive our fellow men half as much as we think we do. The people often see much that they do know how to correct. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Galatians 6: 7. We are sowing now; the reaping time will come by and by.

It does not always follow that because men do wrong, or adopt wrong methods, that they are willful in their work of wrong doing. The apostle Paul in his lifework should satisfy every thinking mind on that point. He was just as earnest and zealous in persecuting the saints as he was in the after part of his life in protecting them. But as men and women called to represent in our lifework God's ways and his saving truth, there is only one pattern for us to follow. As far as the financial part of gospel work is concerned, men and women ought not only to be willing, but they should be anxious to comply with what God has commanded, or may command in that line, and never be satisfied until they know their duty and have done it, and they should continue to do it unto the end, for it is only he that endures to the end who has the promise.

It is what we do ourselves, as well as what we teach others to do, that will make our work complete. We can not justify ourselves, from a gospel standpoint, in withholding our means from supporting the church because we are not satisfied with the way the financial part of the work is conducted. The money we pay as taxes is not always wisely or judiciously expended, still we never think of refusing to pay our taxes because of that; but as true citizens, when election day comes, we try to get the best men we can to administer the laws. If we fail to do this we are not loyal to our country. Where the office is an elective one we should do the same for the church; if one that is appointed by the Almighty, we should be sure to exercise our best intelligence to know that God has done the selecting, and even if those who may be properly selected do not magnify the office as the revealed law directs, we are not under obligations to support them. "If they approve themselves as righteous ministers they shall be blessed; if they be found transgressors, or idle servants, ye shall not uphold them. But be not hasty in withdrawing your support from them, peradventure ye shall injure my work. Let no one deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me."—Doctrine and Covenants 118: 4. So you can see that it is a very serious thing for us to judge others, but, while this is true, we should not be so afraid to do wrong that we can not or will not do right. We should so live that we will have the influence and guidance of God's Holy Spirit, and know we are right, then go ahead and do our duty as we understand it, and have faith to trust God that he will do the rest, even if we encounter things that we can not understand or control.

The writer believes that inasmuch as God commenced the work, he will make a success of it in the end, no matter who may be unfaithful or fall by the way. As a church we are making history, and as individuals we are making our record, and we will all have to meet it; and, oh, may it be one that we can defend!

We are being earnestly urged to support the church with our tithes, offerings, surplus, and consecrations. Let us suppose for a moment that we have fifty thousand membership and they are only able to pay two dollars per capita, which would make one hundred thousand dollars. You may increase this amount or decrease it, the principle involved in this question is just the same. Whatever the Saints may do there is certainly a limit to what they can do.

If forty per cent is for supporting missionaries' families, twenty per cent missionaries' expenses, ten per cent building churches, ten per cent branch expenses, ten per cent for our worthy poor, five per cent general church officers, five per cent Sunday-school and incidental expenses or any other societies that may now exist in the church, how does the law direct how and to whom this hundred thousand dollars shall be paid? Are we educating the people to pay their moneys as the law directs, or are we keeping up with the world in multiplying societies in the church to gather this hundred thousand dollars in every or any way they can? Or have we accepted the policy of the old Quaker, who, when he sent his son out in the world, gave him instructions to make money honestly if he could, but be sure and make it any way? Are we coming out from the world, or are we going into her more and more? Who can answer?

WM. ANDERSON.

LAMONI, Iowa, December 22, 1904.

ETERNAL LIFE.

I understand the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants to teach that when an individual obeys the gospel and receives the Holy Ghost, he is a saved individual in this life, and will continue to be in a saved condition as long as he continues faithful in the truth, and will be permitted to come forth in the first resurrection, and finally receive the great reward, or a crown of eternal life. I also understand these books to teach that when a person obeys the gospel, and receives the witness of the Holy Spirit, and keeps the faith, he is a possessor of eternal life before the death of the mortal body.

I cite the following scriptures in evidence of my position. In regard to salvation in this life:

For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved, it is the power of God.—1 Corinthians 1: 18. Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain.—1 Corinthians 15: 1, 2. But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.—Matthew 24: 13.

I understand the above citations teach present as well as future salvation for man, which, of course, depends upon his obedience; and, that he is placed in a saved condition here and that he will not lose that salvation if he endures to the end.

I cite the following, as to why I believe that the true saint has eternal life before the death of the body:

We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren—1 John 3: 14. These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.—1 John 5: 13. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day.—John 6: 54. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent.—John 17: 3.

From this it seems clear that eternal life can be obtained before the separation of the inward man from the outward man. And we are told in Revelation 14: 13: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth," and Jesus says, "Verily, verily I say unto you, If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death."—John 8: 51.

This shows that those who are made alive in Christ will never die the spiritual death if they are faithful; because they are in possession of eternal life and that life will remain with them for ever, notwithstanding they leave this house of clay or mortal body.

Christ says: "This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever."—John 6: 50, 51. And he said to Martha, "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."—John 11: 26.

The Christ himself suffered the physical death or separation of body and spirit after he uttered the above, which makes it plain that he meant that the true saint would never die the spiritual death, but would be in possession of eternal life before and after the natural death.

In order to throw more light upon this great subject I quote from 2 Nephi 6: 13: "Remember, to be carnally minded, is death, and to be spiritually minded, is life eternal." This shows we may have eternal life here; and that we get a crown of eternal life hereafter is plain in Doctrine and Covenants 66: 5: "Continue in these things, even unto the end, and you shall have a crown of eternal life at the right hand of my Father, who is full of grace and truth."

Now I have been comforted in teaching the above, which I understand to be the teaching of the three books, and if I have taught an error I am willing to be corrected through the paper or in any way you may choose, so that others may have more light on the subject as well as myself.

Your brother in the faith,

F. M. SLOVER.

HUMAN SACRIFICE AND CANNIBALISM.

The citation about human sacrifice among the Aztecs in your issue of October 19, 1904, from the story of extinct civilization of the West, viz., "that human sacrifice had not originally been a feature of the Aztec worship farther back than two hundred years before the Spanish era," should, the writer thinks, be taken with caution, so far at least as locating the origin and extent of the practice in America. With the same item it is stated that this, if true, will be of interest to many, especially among the Religians, and students of Nephite history and religion.

Now why is this item of such interest to the Saints? Were the Aztecs the only natives with such practice? Does the writer of it mean to say that this custom was unknown to the Nephites, and for this reason out of harmony with their "history," and an addition to the native religion after the close of the Nephite era? This question of human sacrifice, and by whom introduced into that extinct civilization, has worried others, and is debatable ground even among the authorities.

Anti-Book of Mormon writers cite this custom among the ancient Americans, together with the monuments and paintings, as evidence against the Nephite record, by way of impeaching it. They say that this custom and idol-worship is very old in Central America and Mexico, and overlaps the Nephite era, and proves that those ancient people were heathens—idol-worshippers and cannibals, and not Christians as set forth in the Nephite record.

Lucian Biart in his work, The Aztec, page 56, cites cases of human sacrifice among the Aztecs while they were yet a subject tribe to the Alcolhuas, who were then the dominant tribe in Mexico, and as appears over two hundred years before the Spanish era, and with no intimation that this was the beginning of the practice with the Aztecs, and this custom was not confined to them alone.

Leplongeon says,

We are told, and the bas-reliefs of Chaacmols Mousleum prove it, that the Mayas devoured the hearts of their fallen enemies. It is said that on certain grand occasions after offering the hearts of their victims to the idols they abandoned the bodies to the people, who feasted upon them. But this last custom seems to have been introduced in the country by the Nahuatlts and Aztecs, since as yet we have found nothing in the mural paintings to cause us to believe that the Mayas indulged in such barbaric repasts beyond the eating of their enemies' hearts.—Vestiges of the Mayas, p. 70.

Bancroft says,

The gods of the Yucatecs required far fewer human lives at the hand of their worshipers than those of the Nahuatlts. . . . Nevertheless, the Yucatec religion was not free from human sacrifice, and although captives taken in war were used for this purpose, yet it is said that such was their devotion, that should a victim be wanting they would dedicate their children to the altar rather than let their gods be deprived of their dues.—Native Races, vol. 2, p. 704. "The custom of eating the flesh of human victims who were sacrificed to the gods was probably practiced more or less in all the Maya regions."

Bancroft says again that sun-worship and human sacrifice were practiced in that remote "pre-Toltec period." (Ibid. p. 203.)

We see then by the above that the Yucatecs, Nahuatlts, Mayas, and Aztecs all practiced human sacrifice. The Toltec period referred to by Bancroft is of uncertain date. Baldwin thinks it commenced one thousand years before Christ. (See Ancient America, p. 198.) Biart says, "We have seen the civilizing power pass from the hand of the Toltecs to the Chichimecs, then to the Alcolhuas, and finally to the Aztec."—The Aztec, p. 84. Nadaillac says, "There were three distinct periods of Nahuatl rule, that of the Toltecs, that of the Chichimecs, and that of the Aztecs."—Prehistoric America, p. 271. Nadaillac we see leaves out the Alcolhuas era, as a distinct period, but the Aztecs served them as subjects on their arrival in Mexico. (See The Aztec, p. 56.)

About three centuries before the arrival of Cortes, the Aztecs arrived in Mexico. (See Prehistoric America, p. 11.) "For many years," Mexico was left "deserted" after the Toltec "departure." (The Aztec, p. 41.) The Alcolhuas were the ruling tribe for a time in Mexico between the Chichimec invasion and the Aztec era. However, we see that there is a long time between the Aztec era and pre-Toltec times. The Aztec era commenced about 1325 A. D. (see The Aztec, p. 57,) and the Toltec era about 1000 B. C. (See Ancient America, p. 198.) And we see that the principal tribes in Mexico and Central America, viz., the Aztecs, Mayas, Nahuatlts, and Yucatecs, not only offered human victims for a sacrifice to their idols, but they also ate part or all of the victims' flesh. And these were not the only cannibal tribes in the new world.

Recently it was estimated that there were ten cannibal tribes in Brazil numbering about seventy or eighty thousand souls (see Prehistoric America, p. 50); and the Algonquins, Iroquois, Maumes, Kickapoos, Apaches, Amazons, Onitotes, Guianians, Floridas, Peruvians on the coasts, Orinocos, Mound-builders, Caribes, and Fijians also. Thus we see cannibalism nearly all over America; not in every tribe to be sure, but among the principal races. And one shud-ders with horror at the stories related about American cannibalism and human sacrifice, and we have reason to be justly thankful to God for a better civilization now.

It is strange what practices may be justified by custom and religion, the cannibal often imagining that in eating the flesh or drinking the blood he imbibed the strength and courage of his victims, and some American tribes even did what was unknown or unheard of in the old world, and were more cruel than any old world race; for they would torture their victims until dead and then gorge themselves with their horrible flesh. (See Prehistoric America, p. 62.) "The death of the man to be eaten was very often accompanied by horrible tortures, unknown among the natives of the other continent."—Prehistoric America, p. 61.

The reader will please notice that statement of Nadaillac's, for the reason that Mormon in writing to his son Moroni mentions this custom among the Nephites away back yonder, that Nephites tortured the Lamanite captives until dead and then ate their flesh. (See page 560, Liverpool edition.)

Cannibalism in many cases was not a mere devotion to a diet of human flesh, but a rite of a religious character. (See Prehistoric America, p. 64.)

Sad as the facts are for humanity, they show us in what degradation man may exist, and what efforts must still be made to raise to a state of civilization so many miserable native races, for whom their ancestors prayed, and to whom the Nephites wrote. But in the golden age of Rome the courtiers of the Roman Emperor Commodus, who lived from 161 to 192 A. D., ate human flesh in a refinement of gluttony; and Adam, of Brenen, represents the Danes of the eleventh century as devouring their fellow creatures. Herodotus tells us that the Scythians were cannibals. Aristotle relates the same of the people on the borders of the Euxine Sea. Diodorus Siculus mentions cannibalism among the Galatians. And Strabo says of the people of Ireland: "They are more savage than the Britons, feeding on human flesh . . . and deeming it commendable to devour their deceased parents." St. Jerome in the fourth century after Christ asserts that in Gaul he saw some Attacotes descended from a savage Scotch tribe eat human flesh although they had herds of swine, oxen, and sheep. (See Prehistoric America, pp. 53, 61-64.)

So that when we look back at the history of our own ancestors, and compare them with the American cannibal we confess that our feathers drop.

The American cannibalism was largely a religious custom (see ibid., p. 64) though very often brutal and sensual (see The Aztec, p. 175).

Most animals show a singular repugnance, we are told, to eating the flesh of one of their own specie; but man with more intelligence, and made in the image of his Creator, a little lower than the angels, is yet more brutal than other animals, and would eat his own specie, out of revenge, or in a refinement of gluttony, or as an act of worship, and praise his idol while doing so.

But we need not be surprised if antiquarians trace back human sacrifice and cannibalism to Lamanite and Nephite times. They were very degraded in their latter history, especially the Nephite; and I do not think the credit is due to the Aztecs for inventing these customs two centuries before the Spanish era. They no doubt had records regulating this custom from Nephite times, or rituals for the priest to go by in his official duties. "Aztec records were abundant at the time of the conquest." They had free schools, and to a certain extent made the attendance upon them obligatory. But the Spaniards destroyed their books and paintings. They had them gathered and piled up in the public places and "burnt." (The Aztec, p. 315; and Ancient America, p. 187.) The Spanish believed that they contained nothing but the work of the Devil. Their object was to give them a new start and wipe out the past.

The Toltequera in Mexico was called the "golden age" there. (See Prehistoric America, p. 275; The Aztec, p. 120.) These Toltecs were white people. The Mexican historian says, "The old legends asserted that all the Toltecs were white."—Myths of the New World, p. 215, footnote. These "white" people the writer thinks were the Nephites. They were subjugated and nearly exterminated by the Chichimecs. (See Prehistoric America, p. 282.) It may appear strange for Bancroft to assert that human sacrifices were practiced as far back as Toltec or pre-Toltec times, because this era was the most civilized among all the Nahua stock, and their era is called the "golden age" in Mexico.

The native races are a mixture of what was the Nephites and Lamanites; they were a white race but the Lamanites became "dark." (Book of Mormon, pp. 216, 505.) Of the Lamanite religion we know but little, but at one time in their early history it was better than the Nephites'. Jacob commends the Lamanites for their observance of the commandment of the Lord forbidding polygamy. He tells the Nephites that the Lamanites had not broken the hearts of their wives by disobedience like them. The Lamanites were filthy in their daily life, but the Nephites were filthy on account of their polygamy. The Nephites thought that the Lamanites were a bad people, but Jacob tells them that they "are more righteous than you." (Book of Mormon, p. 119.)

In their later history we know but little about the Lamanite religion. They withdrew from the church of Christ and "rejected the gospel" by the year 231 A. D. (Page 485.) This is nearly two hundred years before the close of the Nephite record. By the year 327 A. D. blood and carnage filled all the land, both with Nephites and Lamanites, and it was one complete "revolution" throughout all the face of the land. (Page 498.)

But in the year 366 A. D. we get a view of the Lamanite religion. That year they drove the Nephites out of the city of Teancum, and after the battle they offered prisoners (women and children) as human "sacrifice to their idol gods." (Page 503.) This was one hundred and fifteen years after the Lamanites had "rejected the gospel," and by this item we see what direction they had taken after they became anti-Christian; and here at Teancum we see the very custom among the Lamanites as found with the Aztecs, the origin of which the authors have tried to locate. How long this had been their custom prior to this battle we are not informed; but a little later on they had another battle with the Nephites at Boaz; the Nephites were defeated, and their women and children were taken prisoners of war, and again as at Teancum, the Lamanites offered their captives as an offering "to their idol gods." (Page 503.)

These two citations give us a clear view of their worship in the fourth century after Christ, and show them to us, just about as they were found in the sixteenth century by Europeans. Soon after the battle at Boaz the curtain drops over these people, but when raised again they are just about the same kind of Lamanites as they were away back yonder. For we are told that the Indians who joined the Spanish army as their allies, after the battle and siege of Mexico, ate the flesh of their enemies; and on the other hand the besieged Aztecs sacrificed in honor of the god of war numerous victims, among whom Cortes often recognized one of his own soldiers by the whiteness of the skin. After the sacrifice the bodies were cut up, and the flesh distributed to the people. (See Prehistoric America, p. 61.)

The Nephite historian says:

The Lamanites have many prisoners which they took from the tower of Sherrizah; and they were men, women, and children. And the husbands and fathers of those women and children they have slain; and they feed the women upon the flesh of their husbands, and the children upon the flesh of their fathers; and no water, save a little, do they give unto them. And notwithstanding this great abomination of the Lamanites, it doth not exceed that of our people in Moriantum.—Book of Mormon, p. 559.

The Nephites at that place took some of the Lamanite maidens prisoners:

And after depriving them of that which is most dear and precious above all things, which is chastity and virtue; and after they had done this thing, they did murder them in a most cruel manner, torturing their bodies even unto death; and after they had done this, they devour their flesh like unto wild beasts, because of the hardness of their hearts; and they do it for a token of bravery.—Pages 559, 560.

Mormon says to his son Moroni:

Behold, thou knowest the wickedness of this people; thou knowest that they are without principle, and past feeling: and their wickedness doth exceed that of the Lamanites.—Book of Mormon, p. 560.

The above are terrible and brutal stories to be sure, but such is the narrative before me. Now, what might we expect antiquities to show? We see here with those ancient people, the very customs as found with the Aztecs and other races. The native races are the descendants of the Lamanites and Nephites, and after the close of their record, what can we expect them to do but to keep right on offering human sacrifice to their idols? That was a part of their religion. The gods of these warlike people, though made of wood or stone, must not be robbed of their just dues. This custom could not be stopped at the close of our record for the want of Nephites. They must have some one for a sacrifice, and if the gods are not satisfied the people to pacify them would offer "their own children as victims to their idols." (Native Races, vol. 2, p. 704.)

The fact that the mural paintings show human sacrifice, and the monuments idol-worship, is but a confirmation of the Nephite narrative. They were destroyed because of their wickedness, which exceeded that of any other branch of the house of Israel.

The last battles of the Nephites and Lamanites seem to have been a religious war. Moroni says that the Lamanites put to death every Nephite who would not deny Christ. (See page 550.) That is, a Nephite must not only surrender, if he wants quarter, but he must "deny Christ."

The Lamanites had rejected Christ nearly two hundred years before this. They had no use for Christ, no use for a Christian. With them it was deny Christ or be killed. They gloried in their idols; their religion was anti-Christian unto death; their religious feelings clustered around their idols and their human victims. No wonder that "twenty thousand idols were destroyed in Mexico in eight years." No wonder that idols "as hideous in form and feature as have ever been found upon earth" were found in Central America and Mexico. No wonder that the paintings represent the ancient priests with the victim's heart in their hands making the offering to their gods. These were the worst people of all the house of Israel. Eastern Israel would worship around calves, but there was no human sacrifice, no brutal, sensual cannibalism, no torture until death, no feeding wives and children upon the flesh of husbands and fathers, no devouring one another like wild beasts. These Americans were "past feeling," "without principle," and "without civilization." Their historian says, "Tongue could not describe nor man write a perfect description of the horrible scene of blood and carnage which was among the people; both of the Nephites and Lamanites; and every heart was hardened, so that they delighted in the shedding of blood continually."

Such is the closing act of the Nephite drama, and here the curtain drops. And now come anti-Book of Mormon writers trying to impeach their record, by this kind of evidence. What else could they expect to find? They have found nothing out of harmony with the Nephite history, but many things that confirm it. And Aztec worship and practice were in line with their ancestors, of the same vicious kind.

Mormon writing to his son, Moroni, says that many of the Nephites had "dissented over to the Lamanites, and many more will also dissent over unto them." (Page 560.) Likely some communities, or tribes of Nephites, submitted to Lamanite terms of peace, and become Lamanites themselves, or their subjects, and this will account for the scattering Toltecs who were left in Mexico and Central America, after the Chichimec invasion, or Toltec era. (See Ancient America, p. 219.) The Mayas are believed to have been originally Toltec. (See The Aztec, p. 33.) Some Toltecs left in Mexico. (See Prehistoric America, p. 12; and The Aztec, pp. 42, 43.)

Customs, usages, and daily life of the ancients are found in facts written in stone, and paintings, or even in heaps of ashes, shells, or cinders, each layer of which is a page where the drama of life is retraced, and by this means the Nephite record is put on trial. These are the witnesses for or against—let them speak. We have nothing to fear along this line but our lack of information.

REPLY TO "A SYMPHONY."

In justice to the writers of the articles under the head of "A symposium," (referred to by the writer of "A symphony,") it ought to be stated this heading was not chosen by any of the writers of the articles, but by the Assistant Editor. Hence whatever meaning the word may have, it could in no way account for "the gainsaying and sarcastic vein" our brother finds here and there so evident. Turning to our dictionary we find this, in addition to the definition mentioned by the brother: "A symposium was the intellectual side of the feast. Hence, a collection of comments or opinions brought together; especially, several brief essays or articles on the same subject by different writers." And I am sure that any one, whose brain might even be beclouded (?) by eating meat occasionally, could see, without any serious symptoms of brain-fag, that the Assistant Editor was justified in using "symposium" as a heading, according to the common usage of the word.

On turning to the word symphony in the dictionary we discover that one of the definitions is, "A bag-pipe," and we might be pardoned if we suggested that this may account for the "windy" nature of the article under that heading, were it not that our mind is still clear enough, even if we do eat a wee little piece of meat now and then, to comprehend that the brother wished to use the heading in the sense of meaning "a harmonious commingling of sounds; a concord, harmony, or agreeable blending of any kind." Of course we have our opinion as to the fitness of the heading for the article.

We were somewhat astonished upon looking up the citations of scripture in support of his theory, to find that scarcely one of them had direct reference (if indeed they had any reference at all) to the subject under discussion. Those that could be applied at all harmonize nicely with the Word of Wisdom, and only strengthen our position. We were especially astonished when we looked up Matthew 19:4, which the brother cites us to in support of his non-meat-eating theory, to find that it is simply Christ's statement in regard to marriage and divorce.

I quote from the article the following language: "Did it ever occur to the brethren that the oft-quoted Word of Wisdom reads, 'He that forbids to abstain,' etc.? The truth is that these words are found in another revelation, and not in the Word of Wisdom at all. It reads like this: "And whoso forbiddeth to abstain from meats, that a man should not eat the same, is not of God." You will notice that he quotes only a part of the language, and makes an argument upon that which is untenable in the light of the phrase following, or of the sentence as a whole. The brother would better turn back to his article and read these words: "When we divide the word of truth we should do it rightly or it will return to us." Good advice to give; equally as good to follow. Toward the latter part of the article a similar inconsistency occurs. The brother quotes from Paul's writings as follows: "All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not." Equally as good advice is found in the next two verses, coming from the same authority. Why not quote it all? "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth. [Inspired Translation says, "another's good."] Whatsoever is sold in the shambles, that eat, asking no questions for conscience' sake." Whatsoever is sold in the shambles—what is sold in the shambles? Turnips? We hardly think so.

We can not concede that because the First Presidency indorse or recommend an ordination, that thereby they indorse all the peculiar theories held by the individual to be ordained. And a person is not accepted as a member of the church with the understanding that his ideals have already become perfect, but with the understanding that he will conform to the gospel law by making a daily growth, and by discarding all peculiar views he may have as soon as he discovers they are in conflict with the gospel. While the First Presidency may approve an ordination and concede the right to teach "the theme of perfect peace," (which is the gospel,) they undoubtedly do it with the hope that the individual will not betray his trust by preaching his own peculiar ideas in lieu of the gospel of peace. What an unenviable position it would place the First Presidency in to make them responsible for all the peculiar notions that have been taught by men whose ordinations they may have approved during the last sixty years! A man's agency is not taken from him when he is called into the priesthood, and he may use that agency in teaching truth or error as he chooses, but of course the consequences of teaching error must fall upon him, not upon those who ordain him at the call of God, or who indorse his ordination.

"The theme of perfect peace" is the gospel law; and we have no record of God calling any man in this generation to teach anything contrary to the gospel law, (sometimes called the celestial law,) which is given to educate the Saints for the celestial kingdom, and will prepare all who comply with it, without the necessity of accepting any so-called higher law introduced by man. The Lord has repeatedly called us to "Come up higher,"—not to a higher law than is revealed in the gospel, but to a higher plane of living in the gospel law, for the majority of us have scarcely made a beginning. It is vain for us to set aside or ignore the things revealed in the law which we might comply with now, and seek to introduce something that we consider better, or some higher law that we imagine will be given us during the millennium. The thing for us to do is to live the law as we have it revealed to us, and when we have done that we will be fully prepared for the higher law when it comes. But let us wait until God gives it. It is proper to let him state his own laws, and it is our duty to try to understand those laws, and comply with them as given, not seeking to distort or twist in any way whatever.

God has given a law for our guidance until he comes; let us follow that. Speaking of this law he says:

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doeth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 16. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

It seems very improbable that those lions knew that Daniel was not as other men, or that they reasoned very much as to whether he ate beef or cucumbers, or as to whether they would be justified or not in taking his life. The record states clearly the reason why they did not touch Daniel. An angel of the Lord came down and shut their mouths.

The little four-year-old spoken of might have inherited the instinct to pound if he were a carpenter's son, or a blacksmith's son (and the article does not state but that he was, although the inference is made that he was a butcher's son), and in striking his baby brother he did only what any child of that age might do if allowed a hammer as a plaything. If a moral were drawn from an instance of that kind it would be that children of that age should not be permitted to play with a hammer, it seems to me, instead of inferring that we should not eat meat. We could name a town in which there once were a half dozen saloons, each with a piano or a band to furnish music for its customers; but we would not think of using that as an argument against allowing music in church or in the home. Simply because a saloon has roast-beef or hot soup advertized in its window, or furnishes music to entice customers, is no reason why we should think the Lord made a mistake when he advised the use of instruments in public service, or made the statement that he created the fowls of the air and the beasts of the field for food and for raiment, to be used sparingly with thanksgiving. Neither is a recital of the acts of unscrupulous persons, in selling diseased stock or spoiled meat, an argument against using meat as the Lord directs. The same class of people who sell tainted meat would sell stale and decaying vegetables, just as injurious to health as spoiled meat.

Benjamin Franklin was no doubt a wise man; we all believe that. It is probably a fact that he ate meat sparingly, which was right. But history states that it was Thomas Jefferson who "evolved the majestic language of the Declaration of Independence," subject to a few minor changes by Franklin and Adams. Although "it would seem" that "vegetarians generally are folk of lofty ideals," it would also seem that their memories are not always as keen as they might be; and possibly a little meat would do them good. I believe it would, unless they ate "doubting."

So far as I am concerned I do not wish to carry on a lengthy controversy over the matter, and have simply presented the arguments made by the brother as they appear to me, with only the kindest feelings toward Bro. Webbe. I still believe that the Doctrine and Covenants is right, (having no faith in any imaginary higher law than the gospel law,) and that if we will put away our preconceived notions and stand by the books we will be perfectly safe. And if we are willing to take the books as they read there is only one conclusion we can reach.

IS THERE A CONTRADICTION?

In HERALD for September 23, 1904, page 904, I note in an article, "Adam's grave," a quotation from the book of Jasher which to my mind conflicts with the Scriptures:

And the Lord God drove them that day from the Garden of Eden to till the ground from which they were taken, and they went and dwelt at the east of the Garden of Eden; and Adam knew his wife and she conceived and she bore two sons and three daughters, and she called the name of the first-born Cain, saying, I have obtained a man from the Lord; and the name of the other she called Abel, for she said, In vanity we came into the earth, and in vanity we shall be taken from it.—Jasher 1: 12, 13.

I read in the Inspired Translation:

And Adam knew his wife, and she bare unto him sons and daughters, and they began to multiply and to replenish the earth. And from that time forth, the sons and daughters of Adam began to divide, two and two, in the land, and to till the land, and to tend flocks; and they also begat sons and daughters.—Genesis 4: 2, 3.

And Adam knew Eve his wife, and she conceived and bare Cain, and said, I have gotten a man from the Lord; wherefore he may not reject his words. But, behold, also Cain harkened not, saying, Who is the Lord, that I should know him?—Genesis 5: 4.

I wish to emphasize the words also and he may not reject his words. Why should this language occur if there was but one son, Cain, at this time? (See Jasher 1-13.) The word also here in this connection means that some of the children of Adam had already rejected the word of the Lord. I can not understand how two sons and three daughters could be many sons and daughters, especially when one son killed the other. The understanding that I have is that "Adam and Eve had many sons and daughters, but the first to do any important deed to call forth their names was Cain and Abel, and that Seth's name was mentioned to let it be known that the next one born was righteous, who should hold the priesthood, and though whom the geneology should come.

Coming Across.

Every sail is full set, and the sky
And the sea blaze with light,
And the moon mid her virgins glides on
As St. Ursula might.
And the throb of the pulse never stops
In the heart of the ship,
As her measures of water and fire
She drinks down at a sip.
Yet I never can think as I lie
And so wearily toss,
That by saint or by star or by ship,
I am coming across.
But by light which I know in dear eyes
That are bent on the sea

And the touch I remember of hands
That are waiting for me.
By the light of the eyes I could come
If the stars should all fail;
And I think if the ship should go down
That the hands would prevail.—Helen Hunt.

Dear Sister: In the Home Column I read so much good instruction on the training of children, as well as trying to set a good example ourselves. I feel that I can learn much from wiser, if not older ones than myself, though in my weakness I have striven hard to raise a family of seven, and teach them the way of the Lord. All of my children were raised outside of the church but one; now all belong to the church. None have what we would call bad habits. Now mothers in Zion, with the marvelous light of the gospel and the understanding we gain thereby, we should not neglect so great a duty. I, for one, feel that God has only loaned these little ones to us that we might raise them up in that way that they may be brought back into his presence in his own due time. The Lord has said that they should be taught the principles of the gospel so at the age of eight years they might be baptized. Now we have no right to question why the Lord said this, but let us do as he has commanded and leave the rest with him. We surely know that he does all things well. With the different dispositions in children we must take different ways of training. Some love reading, some love singing, some love to hear a nice story. Let us be careful as to the kind of reading we put in their hands, as they get old enough to read for themselves. Too much fiction may poison the young mind, and unfit it to receive something that would be better for the lasting welfare of the boy or girl. Mignon, I think I hear you say, "Too many Marthas." Well that is true to a great degree. Mother must wash, scrub, bake, and hustle around, and prepare a nice meal for the family, and is then too tired to smile or carry on a pleasant conversation. Then the question: "Mother what makes you so cranky?" Now, young mothers, be careful how you live before you bring the little ones into this world. It will be better for mother and child. I have learned many things in the light of the gospel that we can not learn in the light of the world. Let us be patient, faithful, putting forth every effort in our power for good in our family, and great will be our reward in heaven.

BRO. EDGAR H. SMITH of San Francisco, California, sent us the report of the special district convention of the Northern California District held for the purpose of using the special work sent out by the General Association. The convention was held at Oakland, November 13, 1904. From his report we clip the following: "The first number of this very interesting and instructive program was a paper by Bro. Fred A. Severy on 'Work.' The paper was an excellent one and running over with practical thoughts and timely suggestions. He dwelt upon the necessity of honest work by the boys. 'The child should be taught to work and his first lessons should be at home.' The duties of the boys were enumerated,—spiritual, temporal, and physical. 'Parents must be honest and sincere Christians themselves to teach the children successfully.'

"Girls should be taught to sew, to wash, to iron, to cook, and to do all kinds of domestic work. Instruction in domestic duties is imperative.' The necessity for the study of the three books was urged and the importance of lessons from these books clearly shown.

"Parents should ask God for wisdom in teaching girls. . . . Honest labor should not be despised by girls. It has been despised and pride is the enemy to labor. . . . The grandest truths and the greatest blessings to the world had come through honest labor by the boys and girls.'

"The next was a paper, 'Recreations and amusements,' by Sr. R. C. Davis. We gleaned a few of the thoughts as follows: 'Reading is one of the best amusements. It is an education in language. . . . The Bible is a literary gem, a pure piece of literature and excels because words of inspiration and eternal life are penned upon its pages. . . . Bad and vulgar literature have a harmful effect upon the mind and character of those who read it. . . . Fiction should be selected and read with great care. Do not encourage too much of this class of reading. Historical fiction is beneficial. . . . Avoid that kind of literature that paints life in false colors.

"Revelation from God is scarcely necessary to show us the necessity of cultivating our musical talents, as nature all about us teaches us the beauty and power of music. The pleasure and real worth of evenings at home are enhanced by music and song.'

"Parental responsibility' was the subject of the last paper. The writer and reader, Bro. J. M. Terry, handled his subject in an earnest manner. The subject was ably handled and the paper much enjoyed. No synopsis will be given here as the paper will be sent for publication.

"The special convention was deemed a decided success.

Increased zeal, wiser action, greater knowledge, better system, happier homes, and a more complete harmony in the bonds of love and labor are expected as a result. That such may be is our earnest prayer.

Bro. Terry's paper will appear in the Home Column in SAINTS' HERALD in due course. Watch for it and read it thoughtfully. It is worthy your attention.

We make quite full report of this convention from the fact that it is the first to make full report of the work being carried out. Many others have reported the work assigned for forthcoming conventions. We will hear from them later, no doubt. We sincerely trust that every district will endeavor to use the programs in substance at least that the good sought, and that will surely follow, may be enjoyed by them.

BRO. JOSEPH EBELING, superintendent of the Pittsburg District association, wrote December 14: "There are three schools in our district that have observed parents' day. And I must say that in our school we never witnessed more of the Spirit in our Sunday-school work than we did that day. Everybody expressed themselves so." And we are glad. And hope the remaining schools will yet prepare to have a parents' day program. They can not afford to miss it. And there is no school so small or so weak that it can not do something at it. Most people think that it takes a large school and many workers to hold a parents' day exercise. But that is a mistake. Try it and see. You can do something, and will feel much repaid for any or all effort required.

SR. JULIA CONDIT reports, for the Idaho District, twenty-six home classes with a total membership of sixty-three. This is a very good showing for a small district and one that is very much scattered. The home class work is making rapid strides in most places and seems to have come to stay with the most of those. We hope to see the districts that have not yet taken it up, do so ere next General Convention.

RUMSEY, Minnesota, November 26, 1904.

Editor Sunday-school Department: Since the organizing of our Minnesota schools into a district association in June, 1903, we have held three conventions with good results. The last one held the 18th of November was a marked improvement over the others, showing that we are adding to our faith, knowledge. And the earnest workers, with the Master's help, are putting forth their best efforts to keep things moving and help to build up the cause of Zion.

At our last convention the officers and teachers of the Star of Hope Sunday-school at Clitherall presented the association with a banner bearing the motto "I will be your Shepherd." The banner was presented by little Genevieve Whiting with these words: "Please accept this as a token from the officers and teachers of the Star of Hope Sunday-school to show that they are willing to work in harmony with the association, and for him who said, I will be your Shepherd." The district superintendent, Bro. T. J. Martin, accepted the banner with the following words: "My dear Genevieve, as a representative of the Minnesota District Sunday-school convention, and in behalf of the convention, I accept this beautiful banner as a token of love and esteem from the Star of Hope Sunday-school. It is pleasing to me to see the young engage in this work. We realize that we are growing old and that the young are studying and preparing to take our places. Please convey the thanks of the association, and my thanks, to the officers and teachers of your school for this most beautiful present."

Wishing that more news would come from our Minnesota Saints, and ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. EVA B. ELLIOTT.

Notice to Sunday-School Officers.

All Sunday-school officers and primary teachers will please take notice that beginning with the first of January, 1905, the lessons for the first primaries or the smallest primaries will be published separately, that is, not in the same Quarterly with the other primary lessons. Heretofore they have been published with the regular Primary Quarterly and sent to all without extra cost. This was to get the work introduced. But with the first quarter of next year there will be a separate grade or fourth grade of Quarterly issued. Send for it the same as for any other grade. Price five cents per quarter or fifteen cents per year in advance. Schools should see to ordering their supply of First Primary Lessons at once that no lessons may be missed.

In bonds,

T. A. HUGAS, General Superintendent.

Letter Department.

MANITOWANING, Manitoulin Island, Ontario,
December 6, 1904.

Editors Herald: After a strenuous effort on the part of a small band of Saints for the last few months, a very commodious little church-building, twenty-one by thirty-six, has been completed, and yesterday, the 4th inst., it was opened to the public. Yes, to the public, for the announcement was made that we offered a free pulpit and an open Bible to any who were desirous of occupying. Elder Shields, of the Seventy, and myself were the only missionaries present, being the only ones on the Island.

Sacrament was administered at ten o'clock in the forenoon and a goodly measure of the Spirit was present to cheer and encourage. The other services were preaching at eleven, Sabbath-school at two, and preaching at three and half past seven in the evening. This made quite a busy day, after being up till near midnight of the previous night putting on the finishing preparatory touches. Elder Shields being in charge placed the burden of two services on the writer while he filled the third appointment, so I tried to tell the sweet old story morning and evening, Elder Shields occupying at three o'clock in the afternoon. There was a good attendance of outsiders at all the services, and we trust the prejudice that prevents so many from investigating our claims has, in a measure, been allayed.

Bro. Shields concluded that as the writer had done considerable of the construction work on the church, he should offer the first prayer and preach the first sermon in it,—this was his excuse, or reason, rather for working me in for the morning appointment, and of course the evening service fell upon me in turn,—but he little dreamed, at the time, that I would be tying the first matrimonial knot in the new church. Such was the case however. Early this morning a young man could have been seen hustling around the house and outbuildings of the Corbett property with keen and anxious mien. "Who was it, pray?" Why, James, the younger Corbett. "And what might be the cause of his anxiety, may I ask?" Oh, certainly. You see it was about like this: Both preachers, Elders Shields and Bennett, were to leave the locality that day and while Jimmie was not just ready to use them that day, he did not care to be beaten, and instead of waiting until the 21st ult. (the day of choice) he concluded to give the wedding-bells a good shaking while a chance remained. Accordingly, about half past eight o'clock a cutter containing a young couple, and drawn by a fine dappled gray, pulled into the barn-yard of Bro. W. R. Smith, where the preachers were domiciled. The household were just at family worship and at its conclusion, when asked to put in his horse, James replied "No, I have to go down town and just came to see Walter a few minutes before going," etc. Retiring from the room, James and Walter soon had arrangements made for a quiet little wedding to take place at three o'clock in the afternoon, in the new church, and James and Ida were soon off to extend "hurry-up" invitations and complete "hurry-up" arrangements. At the appointed hour in the presence of immediate relatives and intimate friends Bro. James F. Corbett and Sr. Ida May Aelick listened to those mystic words, upon the utterance of which hung the happiness of their lives.

On Monday night, the 5th, a concert was given—following the opening—and eighteen dollars and sixty-five cents was taken at the door which goes in support of the building fund.

An able effort was shown in the program and an enjoyable time was had. The Saints are to be highly commended for their successful and sacrificing effort as they are meeting all expenses themselves (excepting these concert receipts) and they may boast of having the first Latter Day Saint church on the Island. Bro. William R. Smith is insurance agent, and considers one thousand dollars a fair valuation.

Yours in the faith,

WALTER L. BENNETT.

WASHBURN, Maine, December 6, 1904.

Dear Herald: Nothing having appeared over my signature this year for our paper I thought a little news from us might not be amiss. At the close of the Massachusetts reunion I spent a few weeks with Elder R. Bullard in district tent at Shawmut, Massachusetts. My associations with him have always been pleasant, but this year more so than usual. I trust our work there was effectual for good. By advice of missionary in charge I then started for this section, Aroostook, Eastern Maine, and as I expected to stay all winter, brought my wife and little one along. This has been a very prosperous year for this county, as the potato crop was abundant, most of the farmers averaging more than one hundred barrels to the acre. The price is very good, too, so all is well. Wheat is being raised, too, which is fortunate, as flour is now eight dollars a barrel.

Excitement on religious questions runs high, here, just now; I have held series of meetings in the surrounding schoolhouses, with good attendance and interest, ably assisted by Bro. H. D. Simpson and wife, A. C. Duncan and wife, and others. Last year Elder H. J. Davison held a debate with a Mr. Cheney of the Methodist Church here. Mr. Cheney used Bro. Davison very unfairly, introducing new matter and hanging up a new chart the last evening of the discussion. Bro. Davison had no chance to reply to the chart affair, as he was called away. Mr. Cheney was invited last week, by an Advent minister, to lecture in a new chapel near a schoolhouse where our meetings had been held. His reasons for inviting the lecturer were that we were breaking up the Advent Church. The lecture was held and we were on hand with others. In the course of his remarks he said, "I am not here to say that Joseph Smith ever had more than one wife." I said, "Thank you," to which he replied, "You're welcome." When about half through his two and one half hour talk I asked if I might occupy a little time at the close of his meeting. He said, "Yes, if there is any time." When he was through it was very late, so I asked the Advent minister for the use of the chapel one evening, in which to reply. His answer was, "No, sir." I then told the audience that what they had heard was largely false, and asked Mr. Cheney if he would discuss, publicly, church propositions. He said, "No, for I know my church is not right." This was heard distinctly by all in the house, as he was standing on the platform and I was half way back in the audience. He made lots of friends for us. Last Sunday evening I held a service in the schoolhouse, announced as a reply. The house was crowded, many coming from long distances. We had good liberty for an hour and a half, using his chart and one of mine. I then asked if there was any one in the room who would like to speak or ask any questions, if so they could have as much time as they wanted. All seemed perfectly satisfied. Mr. Cheney says he will follow us all over this section, and I sincerely hope he will if he does us as much good as he did there. A gentleman told me after the service that he knew of quite a few who intended to be baptized.

The new attendants have been very kind, with others, giving my family chickens, butter, and vegetables, showing an interest in our welfare. May the Lord reward them.

We have plenty of places to preach in here. The Saints have erected a new chapel in a fine location. It is all finished on the outside, and we hope it will be ready for meetings in a few weeks. This is a very cold country in winter, the mercury registering at times forty degrees or more below zero. Ice is now fourteen inches thick on the river.

We are all well and rejoicing at the outlook for getting our work before the people. May success attend the ministrations of the Saints everywhere.

In gospel bonds,

CALVIN H. RICH.

LANESBORO, Iowa, December 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: With a thankful heart for the blessings received from the Divine One I pen a few lines this beautiful winter's day, which seems to impress upon the mind the peace, joy, and happiness of the aged and infirm whose days have been well spent in the service of Christ. The radiance of the setting sun of life casts its mellow glare of divine light over the memories of the past and testifies, to the soul of the disciple who has so lived and labored as to have a conscience void of offense toward God and man, that they have "fought a good fight, and have kept the faith," and as the face turns westward the setting sun gives evidence of the grander and purer life beyond in the presence of God and the redeemed ones. And while it is true our conscience is largely a creature of education it is written: For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. Because, if our heart condemn us not, then we have confidence toward God.

As the year 1904 draws toward a close the mind reverts back to the days and months that have passed away, and mentally we live them over again. Once more we feel the pain, experience the disappointments, know the heartaches and sorrow, and we feel once more the press of our burden, and meet our temptations; and we really wonder that we have succeeded as well as we have, and that we are still in the land of the living and enjoy the light, glory, and favor of God as it is known and enjoyed in the church of the living and true God to-day.

Had it not been for the divine hand beneath the yoke, lifting up and making it rest more lightly upon the shoulders, and making our burden at least bearable, we surely must have failed. How comforting the words: Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time: casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you.—1 Peter 5: 6, 7.

"E'en down to old age, all my people shall prove My sov'reign, eternal, unchangeable love;
And then, when gray hairs shall their temples adorn,
Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be borne.

"The soul that on Jesus still leans for repose,
I will not, I can not, desert to his foes:
That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never—no NEVER, no NEVER forsake!"

To err is human, and an ever-present consciousness that one has made mistakes brings pangs of sorrow with an earnest desire to lift one's hands heavenward until they are grasped by the divine hand, and more of the vital force of the divine nature is felt, that fewer mistakes may be made during the year 1905 than were made during the past year. How this may be accomplished God knows best, but it is safe to conclude that with fastings and prayers more of the Holy Spirit may be received and the good work of preparing for that grander and higher life may go on while we labor and toil for the salvation of souls.

It is well to remember "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good," that we may follow in his footsteps so far as possible, that we may share his glory when our work is done.

True Latter Day Saints, of all people that we know, have the greatest cause to rejoice because of the favor of God they enjoy, and their knowledge "of the present truth," and the blessed assurance given by the Spirit that the work is divine, and salvation may be secured by all who will comply with the conditions laid down by the Teacher sent from heaven.

How pleasant it is to dwell with brethren in the house of God where all is peace, love, and good will one for the other, and every one esteems his brother as himself. There we find no hypocrisy, chicanery, or jealousy; but every man rejoices to see his brother develop, advance, and succeed financially, intellectually, and spiritually; and every one is sustained by the earnest faith and heartfelt prayers of his fellows.

Where such conditions obtain and prevail how easy to succeed as individuals, as families, and as a church. No wonder that we become akin to the angels and that God recognizes us as his own peculiar, chosen people. Then let the pure in heart "arise in the strength of the Lord" and put on their "beautiful garments," that they in purity and love and everlasting righteousness, may welcome their coming Lord.

To this end we hope to labor and watch and pray, and hope to be there when the Lord shall say, "Well done."

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Editors Herald: When I wrote last I was at Lima, Ohio. I am about twelve miles south of Lima, at this writing, and am feeling considerably better now than then, as I have secured a schoolhouse in which to hold meetings. Some here are deeply interested, and if nothing interferes with their investigations I think will sometime obey the gospel. I called their attention to the Reed Smoot investigation, and to the evidence already given by Joseph F. Smith and others, and, I think, disabused their minds of the continuous reports of our connection with the Utah church.

The people (some of them) treat us very kindly, and our friends would believe us on anything but the gospel plan. They are shy on that. However, one good Disciple or Christian of the old school of Discipleship said, "Amen," while I was touching on church organization, and adoption by the spirit of adoption into the one body; and after services he took my hand and said, "Bro. Smith, they can't get around that." My text was, "If any man or angel preach any other gospel," etc.

Well, it cheers us a little when we contemplate the solidity of the gospel, and its unchangeability. How easy it is to tell the gospel story if we can only get a place and audience.

If not specially needed by our missionary in charge, we will spend Christmas at home with our family we so much love. We trust many happy greetings may be enjoyed by the Saints and others on that day. Remember us in your devotions at the office. My mission address while in this part is Uniopolis, Ohio, care of Jacob Hardin, R. F. D. No. 1.

Editors Herald: It may interest some of your readers to learn of the condition of the work in this locality. While there is always room for improvement, yet the condition of the branch spiritually is good, and the members as a rule are trying to live their religion. Peace and good will prevails so far as I know. The branch officers have been improving their opportunities in looking after church work as their circumstances permit. I am pleased to report that good has resulted from their labors. Last spring the building committee was instructed to get estimates and other information relative to the cost of a new chapel, and later was authorized to get plans and proceed with the work of securing the new building. After considerable preliminary work the contract has been let for the erection of a new chapel on the lot purchased a few years ago. This will be a great improvement over our present location, as well as an improvement over the building we have which is now old and out of repair. But the most important part is the location. Railroads and mills have injured our present place, and made it undesirable as a place of worship, and being in an out-of-way place it was very difficult to get outsiders to our meetings. These difficulties will be overcome by our new chapel, which we hope to have ready for use by the last of June. The cost of the building when complete will be a little over four thousand dollars. We hope the Saints of this branch who are scattered from here, as well as those of any other branch who may feel an interest in the progress of the Lord's work, will contribute as liberally as they can for this worthy object. Donations may be sent to the writer, or to the secretary and treasurer of the committee, L. A. Serig, 4024 Eoff Street, Wheeling, West Virginia. May the cause of Zion prosper everywhere is the prayer of

Your brother in the Master's work,
O. J. TARY.

Editors Herald: As there has been much said about our Southern Missouri country, I thought I would pen a few lines for your columns. I am not a real estate man neither have I a grist in the hopper to grind, but I am interested in the spread of the gospel, and also in all who are converted to it. I would just say to the poor Saints who have no home, like myself, and who want a home in the land of Zion, here is the place to get one. I know it is thought by some that this country is good for nothing; but that is a mistake. I came to Shannon County the first of April. The best way to judge a country is by the farmers, and I have a very good chance to find out, for I am sowing the seed of the kingdom, and see many homes; and most all seem to have plenty. If you want to know more about the country send a stamped envelope.

ELDER C. QUICK.

[Saints, who contemplate moving to Zion or the "regions round about," can not do better than to follow the instruction the Lord has given: "Let not your gathering be in haste, nor by flight; but let all things be prepared before you." This means something more than meager information gathered from here or there regarding this or that place. It means that they should know, before they start, just where they are going to locate, and just what they are going to do for a livelihood when they get there. It would be well to get all the information practicable by correspondence. It would be better to make a personal visit if possible and look the ground over for one's self.—ED.]

MOUNT VERNON, December 5, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am still a stranger among strangers looking up the strayed and lost sheep scattered far away from some of the branches eastward, where they were lively members, enjoying much spirituality; but now with many of them it is the opposite. Many of them are so sorry, as they express themselves to me; if they could only have known then what they know now they never would have left their former homes. Think of it, fathers and mothers that have been members for years, came into the wilds of the West, and have families of children, not one of whom are in the church; and when we talk to the children concerning the duty they owe to the Master, they often turn away and answer, "I haven't had fun enough yet," or remark, "I have a few more wild oats to sow." Yet others say, "If we were among the Saints we would come into the church, but judging by the example of the few we know, we are as good as they." This is to a degree discouraging to the missionary, especially to one who has an interest in the young, as I have. I wish to impress upon the minds of other fathers and mothers to see the necessity of trying to keep their children in the association of the Saints rather than throwing them out in company with the world. I am sorry to say my observations are that too many of these parents do not seem to be concerned about the welfare of their children in spiritual things in the least. Oh, if they could but learn that they are to answer to God to a large degree for the environments thrown around their children, and for the many excuses they have made, (unlawful ones, too,) to excuse themselves and their children for not doing their duty. It is a very solemn thing, to my mind, to contemplate. At Bay View I held sixteen meetings in twelve days. Four or five are very much interested. Had some opposition, and, like other places, Madam Rumor said I ought to be driven out of town, and it is known that some said they would help do it. But as one of old said, "The wicked flee when no man pursueth," so they did. I feel well in the work though there are many things to confront us in the work that are not very pleasant; but we hope to move onward, meriting God's favor.

A Correction.

Editors Herald: I find in reading your issue of December 7, an article entitled, "A symphony," in which the statement is made that from the receptive mind of Benjamin Franklin "evolved the majestic language of the Declaration of Independence." In June, 1776, Richard Henry Lee introduced a resolution into Congress declaring that the United Colonies are and ought to be free and independent States, that they be absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, that their connection with Great Britain is and ought to be totally absolved. Seven of the thirteen colonies voted in favor of the resolution. A committee was appointed to draw up a declaration in harmony with the resolution. The committee consisted of Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman, and Robert Livingstone. Thomas Jefferson was chosen chairman of the committee and to him was assigned the task of preparing the declaration, a task more far reaching and stupendous in its consequences to millions then unborn than he ever dreamed of, and which William E. Gladstone, the "Grand Old Man," declared to be the greatest instrument ever evolved from the brain of man at one stroke. Correct historical dates, figures, etc., are easily obtained, if one cares to take the trouble; and certainly writers who aspire to enlighten the readers of the church papers should make accurate statements.

LAWTON, Michigan, December 8, 1904.

Editors Herald: We closed our series of meetings at Hartford Monday evening last, having given a course of thirteen discourses. The attendance was quite large and orderly throughout. We are informed that a greater attendance of outsiders graced these services than ever before at that place. The seed was sown unsparingly, and we await harvest. Other churches in town were reviving, and the gospel leaven thrown into their midst caused a shaking among the dry bones of popular sectarianism. There is a nice branch resident at Hartford, and the Saints are endeavoring to keep the ensign above the fog. We made our home with Bro. and Sr. Robertson, who may be complimented on their kindness and hospitality, plus the blessing of a model family. Their eldest daughter—Sr. Maude—departed for North Dakota last week, which left a sadness in their circle, as well as that of friends. The branch is presided over by Elder Earl, and Bro. Robertson is acting priest. Valuable additions to the Hartford are Bro. Harris' family, Sr. Miller, and Bro. Earl, all of Chicago. The Baptists and Methodists were concerned quite a little over the Saints' services. By prearrangement, we met the Baptist pastor in an interview at the jewelry-shop of Bro. Harry Robertson. We discussed "baptism for the remission of sins." Elders Omans, Granger, Earl, Bro. Robertson, and Sr. Lena, with some Baptist and Methodist friends were present. Well, the time passed pleasantly, and the summing up developed the fact that Bible is not authority with our Baptist friend, and we hope he may catch himself adrift ere he reaches the falls. The Hartford Branch is a part of the old Lawrence Branch.

Last evening, by invitation, the Saints assembled at Bro. Robertson's, and we proceeded to organize a Religio, with Sr. Robertson as president, Elder Earl vice-president, Sr. Amie Harris secretary, Bro. Harry Robertson treasurer, with corresponding secretary, organist, and chorister. May it move off with the interest and enthusiasm which actuated the beginning. Bro. Granger is still in the harness with good will to do all he can, assisting, preaching publicly and privately. Our next point is Bronson, Michigan, where a recent letter states: "the Maccabee Hall is open, and the people are waiting for meetings to open." So moves the right.

Hopefully,

Dear Herald: After contending for the faith at Hastie, a small place four miles east of the city for about four years with some success, and of late Bro. J. F. Mintun has been preaching some, we are glad to report that prospects are good for more additions to the church. This is in a Campbellite settlement, and we have had great opposition all along, and of late the adversary has redoubled his efforts against us, in peddling stories through the country, that Bro. J. F. Mintun did not believe the Bible essential to salvation; also that he did not believe Luke to have been inspired, and many things about "poor old Joe," and the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. Those fabrications were easily answered to their shame. Those self-appointed guardians of the people never go to hear us only to pick flaws, and to try to make a man an offender for a word. One of them now threatens to "show us up" as soon as the debate is over between Bro. J. F. Mintun and their champion, which begins at Runnells the 12th of this month. There are a few here who are very favorable to us.

W. F. CLARK.

FANSHAW, Indian Territory, December 8, 1904.

Saints Herald: I am still engaged in this great latter-day work. I came to this place to meet one, C. Stetson, in debate, to begin December 5; but C. Stetson failed to come, and I have it all to myself.

C. Stetson, Freewill Baptist, waged war on our people in these parts over a year ago. Bro. H. O. Smith requested me to meet him shortly after General Conference, and I met him the first time at Wilburton, the 14th of May. The Lord was with me, and enabled me to gain a victory for the truth. At the close of our debate I told him he would not last to exceed five years. C. Stetson made his boast he would last to skin every Mormon preacher in the Indian Territory. We agreed to meet in debate at Hartshorn and Fanshaw. We met in the Baptist Church in Hartshorn, in September, eight nights, which no doubt resulted in much good. C. Stetson came to Fanshaw, October 20, and lectured against our people, succeeded in raising a row, defied God or Jesus Christ or hell to stop him in his career. One Bro. Yandell, a Freewill Baptist preacher, who has been assisting C. Stetson in his warfare against the Saints, got into a fuss with one young man of the town, started to whip him but got his face beat up in bad shape, and a black eye.

Our able young brother, Jesse Simons, was here and announced a reply at the close of C. Stetson's lectures against us, and the people tell me that Bro. Simons completely knocked him out.

The Missionary Baptist challenged me at Sawyer, and secured one C. A. Worley of Texas to meet me. This debate will begin at Sawyer, January 23, 1905, if no change takes place. The Campbellite people at Swink challenged me, and secured one C. R. Nichal, of Texas fame, to meet me. This debate is agreed upon by all parties, and will begin at Swink, February 7, 1905.

I am in the fight to defend this marvelous work until the Savior comes or says, "Enough." God has been with me in forty-one hard battles. The work still goes on, and will continue until Babylon falls, and all the creeds of men crumble.

J. D. ERWIN.

LEE, Oregon, December 8, 1904.

Editor Herald: I am the only missionary in the southwestern part of Oregon, and while there are complaints by others of not being able to find places to preach, and people to preach to, I have no such complaint. There are more places than I can possibly occupy, and the people seem anxious to hear. Bro. H. L. Holt and I were at Camas Valley last summer and had what I think was good attention and at times quite large audiences. I returned there last month and preached two weeks, reaping some of the fruits of our labors, promising the people that I would return in January, but the calls from other places may make my visit to them later. I have letters from Humboldt County, California, offering to pay my expenses if I will return there and preach for them again, as there are some there now that are ready for baptism. If some of those elders that can find nothing to do will come here I will give them a winter's job, for I can not comply with all the requests for ministerial labor. I hope the appointing authorities of the church will see their way clear to double the missionary force next year, and that those in the field will not wait for opportunities but go out and make them. I no longer write to people asking what they think about my coming to preach in their neighborhood, but go and look for myself. I have often been asked, "Why did you not write and let us know you were coming?" I tell them that I was afraid they would tell me not to come. This gospel is aggressive, and the bearer of it should not wait for an invitation to come and tell it to the people. Christ's commandment was, "go," and if we wait for invitations we may stay at home a good part of the time, and souls that are starving for the bread of life may perish from our neglect of duty. I feel more and more the responsibility of my calling; and as age creeps on my desire to discharge that responsibility in the fear of God increases, realizing that where my responsibility ends, my hearers' begins. My prayer is that we may all rise to meet the conditions that confront us, for in my judgment the time of the Gentiles is nearly fulfilled and the hastening time is at hand, when the Gentiles as a people will reject this gospel. Then it will go to the Jews again. And that our skirts may be clean from the blood of this generation let us labor and pray.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

E. KEELER.

Extracts from Letters.

W. S. Jenkins, Cleveland, Ohio: "D. C. White preached here a number of evenings, and as I had not heard a sermon for five months they gave me much joy. Am thankful that we are once more with the Saints where we can meet together and enjoy a portion of God's Holy Spirit. We ask an interest in your prayers that we may continue faithful to the end."

Bro. E. A. Stedman, Minneapolis, Minnesota, December 19: "I am feeling well in the work and have preached more sermons than in any other year of my ministry."

Alvin Knisley, Halbrite, Assiniboia, Northwest Territory: "Merry Christmas to the Editors and HERALD readers. I baptized four last Saturday, 17th; expect more before I leave. All goes well. The Spirit has thrilled me in preaching and confirming."

NOTICE TO HERALD READERS!

I am authorized to announce the opportunity to purchase some cheap lands in Central California, with perpetual water-rights. Deed for land includes deed for water-rights. The supply of the latter is unbounded, the land is level and of a nice sandy loam, producing abundantly all kinds of fruits, grains, and vegetables. The price per acre varies from $15 to $35 per acre and some even higher than that. Prices vary owing to location and distance from railroads. Terms are one-fourth down, the balance in four annual payments, with six per cent interest. These chances are fast going out, so that people who want homes in the land of perpetual flowers and large, sweet Oranges (at ten cents a basket full), will have to hurry up. For further information; write to the undersigned, at 347 San Pedro Street, Los Angeles, California.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1901, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" Three boxes Quit-to-bac postpaid only $1.50 guaranteed to cure or money refunded for the asking. Address, (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Ill nois.
