Editors Herald: It is not often that deaths come so quick and fast as they have among the scattered ones lately. We were glad that we were at hand to comply with the wishes of the bereaved ones, as well as those of the ones taken. In the case of Bro. Wheeler, he had been sick for a few weeks with kidney trouble. When we reached Ogden for the district conference the word was given us that he was very sick and wished to see me as soon as we could come to him at North Ogden. Although I had just ridden five hours in the cold and storm I only waited to eat dinner and at once drove to see him. We found him very weak but suffering no pain. He said to me, "Bro. Chase, since you left Ogden in June, I have never missed the first Sunday of a month, but have always been with the Saints to administer the sacrament to them; but I won't be able to be with you next Sunday." And that was literally true. Although he was one who had reached the allotted age of man, still, when the work of looking after the branch fell upon his shoulders, by reason of our being called to other parts of the field, and although he was at work five miles from the place of meeting, still the Saints knew that he would be in his place on sacrament Sunday, even though it meant a walk of five miles and back.

This was Wednesday, and Saturday we received the word that he was no better. Sunday, with Bro. D. L. Allen, we again visited him and administered the sacrament to him, as well as anointing him with oil and praying for him. Then according to his wish, we promised that if he was taken, we would return and preach the funeral sermon. Saturday last we received word that he was dead. The funeral was Monday last, at noon, from the ward meeting house of North Ogden.

Sunday we were at Pleasant Grove to preach the funeral sermon of the child of Bro. W. Sterritt. This child has had a fight for his life ever since his birth. He seemed to be afflicted with a weakness of the heart, probably resulting from the high altitude of this country. However, he had seemed much better this winter, but the grippe attacked him and he was taken almost before the family realized that he was seriously ill.

Praying that God may comfort the bereaved ones, I am as ever
In the work of the Master,
A. M. CHASE.

AUSTIN, Texas, March 13, 1904.

Editors Herald: On to-day's mail I send you a copy of the Austin Statesman containing "An interview with R. M. Maloney." As the Reed Smoot investigation is now attracting attention of the press, the matter was referred to in the editorial column of the Statesman of March 12 in a brief but comprehensive manner as follows:

"There are two Smiths, leaders of different sects of the Mormon Church. Joseph F. Smith, the head of the polygamist branch of the Church at Salt Lake City, is the Smith who has been before the Senate committee, and is an avowed polygamist. He is a nephew of Joseph Smith, the originator of the Mormon Church. Joseph Smith, the son of its first propagandist, is not a polygamist, and is the head of the Church at Lamoni, Iowa, and Independence, Missouri. This branch of the Church has opposed polygamy and never practices it. Brigham Young, after the death of the elder Smith, usurped the leadership of the Church, and was followed to Salt Lake in the forties by about ten thousand Mormons. It was Brigham Young who established polygamy in 1852 or 1853. Both Churches are flourishing. The anti-polygamist Church at Independence has fifty thousand members."

The foregoing impressed me that the editor of the Statesman justly deserved my thanks. So I went early in the day to the editorial department, where I met him. He received me kindly and we had a very pleasant conversation about the Reed Smoot investigation and about the differences between the two Churches. He requested that I write an article giving the differences between the Utah Church and the Reorganization. It appears just as I wrote it, in the form of "an interview."

I am gratified to have the opportunity of getting the article in the Statesman just at this time. This paper is one of the leading dailies of Texas, having a very large circulation.

I am proud of the work of the Lord as is being done by the Reorganization, and I will be glad when circumstances will permit me to do more for its advancement.

I humbly pray that the coming General Conference may be under the special watchcare of the Master; and that all his servants who take part may receive the guidance of his Spirit, that all may be done in harmony and peace and in accordance with his will.

Yours hopefully and in the faith,
R. M. MALONEY.

LOS ANGELES, California, March 22, 1904.

Dear Brother Joseph: You and I can see through the Smoot trial and see where we can turn the testimony of Joseph F. Smith to good account; but there are many who can not, and it is such that I am working with every moment that I have the opportunity, for I feel that this is a time for especial work, and I am glad that I am still able to defend the truth. And I am glad to say that the Lord has greatly blessed me of late in my work.

Joseph F. Smith's condition is a plain case of what the accursed doctrine of polygamy will do for those who practice it. My recollection of him, as we were boys together, is that he was a nice boy. At those times I could not have believed that he would ever stand up before the chiefs of his nation and confess himself a transgressor of both the laws of God and the laws of his country.

Yes, Bro. Joseph, I have a most vivid recollection of being at the meeting in Salt Lake City, in 1852, and hearing the statement of Brigham Young in regard to the revelation on polygamy. It was a special conference. The reason I recollect it so well is, that Brigham made the statement that it (polygamy) had not been practiced by the elders. I knew that the statement was false. It had been in our family and others that I knew of for a number of years, and it led me always to doubt Brigham's veracity; in fact I had it settled in my heart that Brigham was a liar.

I have no recollection of a vote being taken; but do call to mind some objections being made to the manner the revelation was given to the Church. I recollect my father saying that the revelation ought to have been submitted to the quorums and passed upon as other revelations had been. Although he was in polygamy and heartily endorsed it, he found fault with the way the revelation was received. This discussion of the subject took place in our own house, between my father and Joseph Young. They were both of the seven presidents of the seventy, and Joseph Young was of the same opinion as my father. He was also a polygamist.

In turning to the manuscript of my autobiography, I find that in giving my knowledge of the origin of polygamy, I make the statement that my first knowledge of it ever being preached publicly, was in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, August 29, 1852. Joseph, this may be a case where the Lord is going to make the wrath of man to praise him, for the fact is being wrung out of Mr. Smith that true Latter Day Saintism is not opposed to good government; so let the arrows fly.

I will surely remember you in the coming conference. Love to all who labor for the glory of Zion.

Yours in bonds,

1634 Grover Street.

J. C. CLAPP.

Extracts from Letters.

C. L. Snow, writing from Unity, Tennessee, March 10: "Am being blessed in my work of late. Closed a meeting the 8th with good results. Am making friends to the cause, and am receiving many calls for preaching. Have been quite busy in new places."

Wentworth Vickery, writing from Winfield, Kansas, March 13: "The few Saints in this part of the vineyard are making arrangements to hold meetings in Arkansas City, Kansas. We are still in the faith, or at least we believe we are, and love the restored gospel, and rejoice to hear of its progress in the world."

Sr. Annie Christenson, Rake, Iowa, writes: "I hope we will never have to be without the HERALD in our home. I have received much light in reading it. We do not live near any branch, but hope we can hear the gospel preached some day."

Jay Hoffman, Kansas City, Kansas, March 20, 1904: "Saints here are going through a seige of the grippe. Otherwise all are usually well and enjoying the branch meetings."

Sr. Mary Vinland, South Audubon, Nebraska, writes: "Bro. Madison stopped here when he returned from Wilber conference, and preached a little over a week at the home of Bro. Banks, and a good many were interested. Some gave their names for baptism when Bro. Madison comes again."

Miscellaneous Department.

Conference Minutes.

Far West.—Conference convened with the St. Joseph Branch, March 5, 6, 1904. T. T. Hinderks president, Charles P. Faul and Arch McCord secretaries. The president requested I. N. White and F. A. Smith, who were present, to preside. Secretary's report of delegates' credentials was adopted. Bishop's agent, Charles P. Faul, reported as follows: Amount due Bishop's agent, March 1, 1904, $545.02, cash in Farmers' Bank, Clarksdale, Missouri, $231.98, agent's personal money invested, $700. Chair appointed Gilbert J. Whitehead, J. C. Elvert, C. W. Ethridge as auditing committee and they reported the same to be correct. Elders reporting: J. C. Elvert, F. B. Shumate, A. M. Shaw, H. B. Taddicken, A. McCord, T. T. Hinderks, C. E. Guinand, J. S. Constance, A. Booker, Walter Kinney, W. E. Summerfield, J. Armstrong, W. W. Smith, C. P. Faul, B. J. Dice, G. W. Best, W. Lewis, W. Lawrensen, H. D. Ennis; Priests C. Archibald, A. R. Daniel, J. L. Bear, Jr., S. H. Simons, C. N. Gentry, C. W. Ethridge, C. J. Cravens, J. Middleton, Fred Uphoff, R. Garlish, C. F. Householder; Teachers R. Mc Fee, J. Aggenstein, J. Piepergerdes; Deacons W. L. Vail, L. Furgusen, W. A. Stevenson. Branches reporting: Edgerton Junction 58, Far West (new) 14, Cameron (new) 23, Delano 96, Dekalb 62, Pleasant Grove 80, Kingston 106, Stewartville 225, Alma 38, St. Joseph 578, German Stewartville 79, Wakenda 55. Recommend from the Wakenda Branch for the ordination of Bro. Fayette Booker to the office of priest was referred to president and missionary in charge. 1,000 blank reports of missionaries were ordered printed. The resolution instructing the several branches to instruct delegates in regard to holding our conference semiannually was taken from the table. A substitute was offered and carried to postpone indefinitely the matter of holding our conference as provided in resolution. Religio Society reported to the conference, showing progress. A resolution was offered in regard to the investigation now going on in Washington, District of Columbia, by the Senate committee in the matter of Reed Smoot. The resolution passed the conference and a copy was ordered sent to the First Presidency by the secretary of the conference. Delegates to the General Conference: W. W. Smith, J. Lawton, C. E. Guinand, C. J. Craven, I. N. White, W. Lewis, T. T. Hinderks, C. Bacus, D. E. Powell, John Davis, Sr, Henry Iselib, C. P. Faul, I. N. Roberts, J. W. Roberts Sr. D. E. Powell, Sr. J. W. Roberts, Sr. I. N. Roberts, B. J. Dice, W. E. Haden, Swen Swensen, Arch McCord, W. E. Summerfield, John Bear, G. J. Whitehead, Sr. W. W. Smith. Election of officers: T. T. Hinderks, president, B. J. Dice, vice-president, Charles P. Faul, secretary, B. J. Dice, treasurer. Charles P. Faul sustained Bishop's agent. Moved to petition the General Conference to change the boundary line so as to include Powell County in the district, and that Bro. I. N. White look after the matter, to present the petition to the General Conference. Adjourned to meet with the Stewartville Branch, June 18, 1904.

Independence Stake.—Sixth semiannual conference convened 10 a. m. March 12, 1904, at Independence, Missouri, W. H. Garrett in the chair. Assembly expressed their desire to have the presidency of the stake preside. The present incumbent, W. S. Brown, was chosen secretary, selecting as his assistant, Marie H. Morgan. Credential committee: A. H. Parsons, John Kaler, and William Aylor. Branches reporting: First Kansas City, Pleasant View, North East Kansas City, Argentine, Knobnoster, Post Oak, Second Kansas City, Holden, Armstrong, Independence; showing a net gain of 94. Forty-one members of Melchisedec priesthood reported and forty-two of the Aaronic. Bishop's report: September 1, 1903, balance due bishop, $61.75; collected, $6,271.97; expenditures, $5,810.49; balance, $399.73. Secretary's report adopted. Stake Religio reported eight live locals and several thousand pieces of church literature distributed during past year. A committee consisting of G. H. Hulmes, R. May, Ellis Short, and G. H. Hilliard, were requested to draft a resolution to forward to Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, Washington, District of Columbia, with regard to the Smoot case, protestin gagainst the statement of Joseph F. Smith and others wherein they claim polygamy as an original tenet of the Church; which was done and immediately forwarded. A resolution to petition General Conference to locate Cooper County, Missouri, within boundary of Independence Stake was approved. Stake Sunday-school association reported gain of 119 members during past year. Names of delegates to General Conference: W. H. Garrett, I. N. White, William Aylor and wife, Ellis Short, Arthur Allen, F. C. Warnky, Sr. Ellis Short, J. Huffman, Sallie Spangler, Sr. J. W. Layton, Sr. J. D. White, Alice Garrett, J. J. Schimmel, Sr. Dickenson, G. H. Hilliard, W. S. Brown, W. E. Peak, Bro. and Sr. B. T. Muller, Sr. M. E. Hulmes, Ammon White, Bro. and Sr. W. W. Smith, W. R. Pickering and wife, J. D. White, Eva Bailey, Charles Crayne, Estella Wight, Sr. W. H. Garrett, Carrie Dickenson, Mary McMullen, Minerva Edwards, Sr. Hugh Smith, R. May, Sr. Charles Barron, H. H. Robinson, Orville James, Alfred White and wife, T. W. Chatburn and wife, Joseph J. Luff, H. E. Moler, Bro. and Sr. Devore, G. H. Hulmes, J. R. Sutton, Margaret Cleveland, W. R. Smith, R. B. Trowbridge, Sr. Ward, Sr. R. Etzenhouser, Sr. T. T. Grabske, John C. Grainger, Sr. R. May, A. H. Parsons, W. N. Robinson, E. Etzenhouser and wife, Alma R. White, T. T. Grabske, M. Smith, Robert Warnock, Henry Kemp, Frank Chatburn, Bro. Slover, T. C. Kelley, R. Etzenhouser, John Kaler, W. E. Peak, O. H. Riggs and wife, Frank Criley. Delegates to cast full vote; if divided, a majority and minority report. A resolution by stake bishop stating request of Chelsea Park Branch for house of worship incurring an amount of $600 was referred to stake bishopric. W. S. Brown elected secretary. All members of stake presidency were sustained in their order, together with high council and bishopric. Robert Winning was ordained to office of high council. Adjourned to meet at Holden, Missouri, September 10, 11, 1904.

Ohio.—Conference convened at G. A. R. Hall, Wellston, Ohio, February 27, 1904. President S. J. Jeffers in charge, A. B. Kirkendall and R. Etzenhouser associates, D. E. Fri secretary, E. E. Long assisting. Ministerial reports: Harry E. French, R. Etzenhouser, A. B. Kirkendall, S. J. Jeffers, E. E.

Long, J. L. Goodrich, G. W. Hull, A. W. Kreible; Teachers: J. L. Vance, Jerry Munyan, Harvey McLaughlin. Branch reports: Hocking Valley 82, Byers 68, Creola 59, Vinton 99, North Columbus 52, Limrick 59. Bishop's agent's report: Received for year, $911.35; expenditures, $898.13; balance, $13.22. Report audited and found correct. E. E. Long called to office of elder, ordination awaiting his acceptance. Motion carried that district sustain the missionary and the missionary, the general Church authority in their actions. Delegates to general Conference: S. J. Jeffers, A. B. Kirkendall, D. E. Fri, E. E. Long and wife, U. W. Greene, R. Etzenhouser, J. L. Goodrich, G. W. Hull, T. J. Beatty and wife, A. W. Kreible, A. E. Fitzpatrick, J. L. Vance, Esther Long, H. E. French, T. R. Wren, Edith Wren, Sr. J. W. Thorpe, Sarah Blackford, J. E. Matthews, with authority to fill delegation from those who might be in attendance from the district, and empowered to cast full vote of the district. District officers reelected. Adjourned to meet at place and time named by district officers.

Eastern Colorado.—Convened at Denver, March 5, 1904, J. W. Morgan president, A. E. Tabor secretary. Branches reporting: Denver 163, Rocky Mountain 31, Colorado Springs 53, Pueblo 26, Wray 56, Rocky Ford 15, Alva 7, Cedar 24, Colfax 20, Fairview 91, Valley 28, Enterprise 17, Durango (new) 24, Scattered 61. No report from Highland. Ministry reporting: Missionary in charge, J. M. Stubbart; High Priests J. B. Roush, E. F. Shupe; Seventies J. W. Morgan, J. F. Curtis, W. T. Bozarth; Elders A. B. Hanson, James Kemp, E. D. Bullard, J. Lamb, W. C. Duncan, A. E. Tabor, J. F. Petre, K. Seli, J. E. Lalonde, C. E. Willey, E. Curtis; Priests M. F. Ralston, J. D. Curtis, P. L. Case. Bishop's agent, C. E. Everett, reported: Receipts in tithes and offerings, $1,398.59. J. F. Petre was appointed by the conference to labor as a missionary. Delegates to General Conference: J. M. Stubbart, J. W. Morgan, J. B. Roush, J. F. Curtis, James Kemp, C. E. Willey, K. Seli. Officers elected: E. F. Shupe president, K. Seli vice-president, A. E. Tabor secretary, C. E. Everett was sustained as Bishop's agent. The recommendation of Colorado Springs Branch for the ordination of J. D. Curtis to the office of elder was approved. A resolution protesting against the testimony of Joseph F. Smith which charged Joseph the Seer with being the author of polygamy was adopted, and Bro. George E. McConley sent same by telegraph to Senate committee. Adjourned to meet at Colorado Springs, September 3, 1904.

Pottawattamie.—Conference met at Underwood, Iowa, February 27, 1904, Apostle F. A. Smith in the chair. Secretary being absent, J. A. Hansen and J. B. Lentz were appointed clerks. A report on credentials, prepared by the secretary, was adopted and delegates seated. Nineteen of the ministry reported: High Priests J. Caffall, J. R. Carlile, M. M. Turpen, C. G. McIntosh; Seventy C. Scott, J. B. Lentz; Elders R. McKenzie, D. Parrish, M. F. Elswick, S. Butler, William J. Cook, Joshua Carlile; Priests S. Harding, J. P. Christensen, C. C. Larson, Thomas Scott, J. C. Laymarth; Teachers J. A. Hansen, P. T. Anderson. These gave for the five months a total of 135 sermons, 1 baptism, 2 marriages, 8 children blessed, 57 administered to, 50 official visits. Branches reporting: Boomer 53, Carson 27, Council Bluffs 263, Crescent 152, Fontanelle 37, Hazel Dell 60, North Star 109, Wheeler 51. J. P. Carlile, Bishop's agent, reported: On hand last report, $463.12; received, $540.58; paid out, $935.74; balance, $67.96. Decision of submissionary in charge in a case referred to him by previous conference was read and approved. On request from Boomer G. F. Hough was ordained a priest, and Peter Olsen, Jr., a teacher. Delegates to General Conference: F. A. Smith, H. N. Hansen, C. Scott, M. M. Turpen, J. B. Lentz, C. G. McIntosh, D. R. Chambers, Joshua Carlile, Srs. Angeline and Emma Beebe, those present being authorized to cast full vote, and a majority and minority vote in case of division. Under suspension of rules Elder M. M. Turpen was elected district president who chose by approval of conference, as associates, R. McKenzie and D. Parrish. J. Charles Jensen was sustained secretary, J. P. Carlile was sustained as Bishop's agent. All the local force who wish to labor are referred to the district presidency. Branches are requested to contribute to the expense of delegates. Conference adjourned to meet at Boomer, Iowa, Saturday, May 28, 1904 at 10 a. m.

Utah.—Convened at Ogden, Utah, March, 5, 6, 1904, President T. Thoreson in charge, Sr. A. M. Chase secretary. Ministry reporting: T. Thoreson, G. L. M. Brokaw, A. M. Chase, John Hall; Teacher William Coy. Statistical report from the following branches were read: Salt Lake Mission, Ogden, Provo, and Union Fort. Bishop's agent's report: On hand and received since last report, $214.35; expended, $204.45; balance $9.90. A motion that S. A. Wanberg, of the Salt Lake Branch, be released from his office as an elder, carried. A request from Elder Brokaw, bishop's agent that he be released from office was not granted. Sr. A. M. Chase was appointed financial representative for Graceland College for the district. Delegates to General Conference, with power to add such names as are available, and to cast full vote of district: W. H. Kelley, H. N. Hansen, Swen Swenson, D. L. Allen, T. A. Hougas, Mrs. T. A. Hougas, and Miss Flora Phillips. A motion that time and place of next conference be left in hands of district officers, they to confer with reunion committee and appoint in harmony with time and place of reunion, carried.

Northeastern Illinois.—Conference met at First Chicago Branch, February 27, 1904, at 10.30 a. m. Missionary in charge, Heman C. Smith, and District President F. G. Pitt were chosen to preside; W. E. Williamson and J. E. Wildermuth secretaries. Branches reporting: Mission 116, Unity 23, Wilmington 66, Sandwich 71, Central Chicago 127, West Pullman 40, Plano 164, First Chicago 128, and Dekalb 59. Bishop's agent, J. Midgorden, reported: Due Church last report, $130.62; receipts, $786.45; expenditures, $829.30; balance, $87.77. President and vice-president reported. Branch presidents reporting: F. M. Cooper, J. Midgorden, John L. Cooper, Clarence J. Clark, and M. H. Bond; Elders reporting: J. E. Wildermuth, E. M. Wildermuth, S. C. Good, Philemon Pement, F. M. Cooper, M. H. Bond, R. N. Burwell. Moved that conference presidents investigate boundary line matter and report to the conference. resolved that Ladd Branch be declared disorganized and the district clerk to issue letters of removal to Bro. and Sr. Frank Izatt, and Bro. and Sr. Jacob Stanley. Report of vice-president, F. M. Pitt, read. The committee on boundary line recommended that a committee of two be appointed to confer with the district president and missionary in charge of the Central Illinois district, their agreement to be reported to General Conference. Heman C. Smith and F. G. Pitt were chosen as the committee. Delegates to General Conference: Bro. and Sr. F. G. Pitt, Bro. and Sr. M. H. Bond, Bro. and Sr. F. M. Cooper, J. E. Wildermuth, Elmer Kahler, Heman C. Smith, R. N. Burwell, Bro. and Sr. C. J. Clark, Sr. Fred Johnson, Bro. and Sr. E. J. Lang, Henry Southwick, Sr. Selestia, Sr. Mable Sanderson, E. M. Wildermuth, and W. A. McDowell, in case of division delegates to cast a majority and minority vote.

Idaho.—Conference met at Malad City, March 13, 14, 1904, Elder S. D. Condit presiding, assisted by Elder A. J. Layland. Missionaries reporting: S. D. Condit, A. J. Layland, W. S. Pender, and J. E. Vanderwood. Elders William Richards, W. L. John, Adolphus Hendrickson, C. E. Oldridge, Charles Albertson; Priests E. T. Richards, B. L. Hendrickson, Lars P. Larsen; Teacher Elias E. Richards. Branches reporting: Hagerman, Teton, Dingledeil, Grove City, and Malad. Bishop's agents reporting: Elias E. Richards and James Jennings. Delegates appointed to General Conference: S. D. Condit, A. J. Layland, W. S. Pender and Martha Jones. Delegates present were authorized to cast entire vote of district. Officers elected were S. D. Condit president, A. J. Layland vice-president, J. E. Vanderwood secretary, adjourned to meet at the call of president.

Southwestern Texas.—Conference met at San Antonio, Texas, March 4-6, 1904, Vice-president D. S. Palmer in charge, W. H. Davenport and Ruth Gifford clerks. San Antonio Branch reported 93 members; Bandera 48. No report from Medina City. Elders reporting: Crowfield Jackson, D. S. Palmer, W. H. Davenport, T. J. Jett; Priests W. G. Wallis, D. S. Palmer. Bishop's agent reported; On hand at last report, $53.05; collected, $54.05; paid out, $21; balance, $87. Delegates to General Conference: H. O. Smith, W. S. Macrae, John Harp, E. W. Nunley, S. S. Smith, Charles Harp, and G. H. Hilliard, number present to cast entire vote of district. Pipe Creek was chosen as the place for holding conference in June, date to be announced by the president.

Convention Minutes.

Pittsburg.—Association convened at Wheeling, West Virginia, March 5, 10 a. m., Superintendent James Craig in charge, Louis A. Serig secretary. Reports were received from all schools. Officers elected: Joseph Ebeling superintendent, Myron Thomas assistant superintendent, Louis A. Serig secretary, C. A. Martin treasurer. Delegates to General Convention were instructed to vote and work for amendment to constitution and by-laws. Adjourned to meet Friday at 2 p. m. preceeding and at the same place of district conference.

Places of Worship.

This list of the locations of places of worship of our branches in some of the larger cities may be useful to missionaries, traveling men, and any who are passing through these places. It was compiled, for the most part, by Bro. J. R. Epperson. The list is incomplete, but it will be published from time to time, and any errors, changes of location, additions, or new locations reported to us will be properly entered, so that we may soon have a complete directory.

CALIFORNIA.

Los Angeles, church, 1114 South Wall Street.
Oakland, church, corner 16th and Magnolia Streets.
Sacramento, church, corner 24th and K. Street.
San Bernardino, church, corner 5th and G. Streets.
San Francisco, San Francisco Hall, 1925 Howard Street.

COLORADO.

Colorado, Springs, church, 822 North Prospect Street.
Denver, Saints' chapel, 22d and Arapahoe Streets.
Pueblo, residence, 1632 East 6th Street.

ILLINOIS.

Belleville, church, Weber Avenue, one block and a half south of Main Street.
Chicago, West Side, church, 8 Wood Street. South Side, church, 3615 Cottage Grove Avenue.
Dekalb, hall over old post-office, North 3rd Street.
Plano, stone church, one block and a half east, two blocks and a half south of depot.
Sandwich, church, six blocks southeast of depot.

IOWA.

Centerville, church, Drake Avenue.
Clinton, hall, 235, 5th Street.
Council Bluffs, chapel, Pierce Street, three doors west of Glen Avenue.
Davenport, church, 1329 Harrison Street.
Des Moines, Saints chapel, corner East 14th and Lyon Streets.
Grinnell, G. A. R. Hall, Broad Street.
Shenandoah, East Side Church Street.
Sioux City, church, corner West 3rd and Kansas Streets.

KANSAS.

Kansas City, Argentine Branch, West End, Argentine.
Kansas City, Armstrong Branch, one half block west of 7th and Colorado Streets.
Kansas City, Chelsea Park Branch, corner Newell Street and Spencer Avenue.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Fall River, chapel, Claflin Street.
Haverhill, 146 Groveland Street.
Plymouth, church.
Somerville, chapel, 54 Broadway.

MICHIGAN.

Detroit, chapel, corner Baldwin and Champlain Streets.
Grand Rapids, Barnes Block, 692 South Division Street.

MISSOURI.

Independence, Stone Church, West Electric Street.
Joplin, church, 2510 Annabaxter Street.
Kansas City, last Kansas City Branch, 2324 Wabash Avenue.
Kansas City, Second Kansas City Branch, corner 23d and Holly Streets.
Kansas City, Northeast Branch, corner Rochester and Prospect Avenue.
St. Joseph, church, 417 North 17th Street, one half block north of Farin Street.
St. Louis, Cheltenham, 5731 Manchester Avenue.
St. Louis, Oakhill, Humphrey Street, near Morgan Ford Road.
St. Louis, Rock Church, Glasgow Avenue and Dixon Street.

NEBRASKA.

Nebraska City, chapel.
Omaha, Saints' chapel, 21st between Clark and Grace Streets.

NEW YORK.

Brooklyn, church, Eastern Parkway and Hopkinson Avenue.

OHIO.

Cleveland, church, 180 Wade Park Avenue.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Philadelphia, church, Howard and Ontario Streets.
Pittsburg, church, Miller Street, near Colewell.

RHODE ISLAND.

Providence, Bellevue Avenue Chapel, Bellevue Avenue, off Cranston Street.

UTAH.

Provo, church, 4th South, between 2d and 3d Streets West.
Salt Lake City, chapel, 228 East Second South Street.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Wheeling, chapel, 62 Water Street, south of 48th Street, Benwood.

WASHINGTON.

Seattle, residence, 1602, 8th Avenue West.

ONTARIO, CANADA.

London, church, Maitland Street, between King and York Streets.
Niagra Falls, church, St. Lawrence Avenue, opposite Ellis Street, formerly town of Clifton.
Toronto, church, 21 Camden Street, between King and Queen Streets.
St. Thomas, church, 42 Balaklava Street.

Donations to Graceland College Museum.

Received by the Curator from December to March 16, 1904.
W. W. Whiting, Bonesteel, South Dakota, Sioux Indian war-club.
The Index, Pleasanton, Iowa, an egg within an egg.
Joseph Arber, late of Glasgow, Scotland, a number of coins.
E. J. Lang, 3411 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, a relic of Chicago fire.
R. M. Elvin, 1110 Mill Street, Wilkensburg, Pennsylvania, specimen from deep well near Niagra Falls.
C. F. Church, Lamona, Iowa, leaf of "Written Word" (in Scandanavian), printed early in seventh century.
F. M. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, Ores from Silver King mine, Park City, Utah.
Joseph Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, native fish-hook from South Sea Islands.
R. S. Salyards, Lamoni, Iowa, stamps.
John Harp, fossil from Bandera, Texas.
Received through Mrs. D. W. Wight, Lamoni, Iowa.
Alice Minard, specimen of galena lead.
John Osterhaus, a number of minerals from Cassia County, Idaho.
Mrs. Jane Chase, ore from Utah.

Notices.

The editors of the Cleveland Leader have promised to report the proceedings of the Sunday-school Convention and the General Conference daily. The rate is twelve cents a week to include the Sunday's issue. Send orders direct to the Cleveland Leader, Cleveland, Ohio. I give this notice simply as an accomodation; all responsibility rests with the managers of the Leader.
GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.
KIRTLAND, Ohio, March 17, 1904.

Addresses.

Alma C. Barmore, Fern Street, Thompson Estate, Brisbane, Queensland, Australia.
Elder W. S. Hodson, Leesville, Louisiana.

Died.

JARVIS.—Alma Cecilia Sellon was born in New York City, August 31, 1852, died at her home in Burlington, Iowa, March 13, 1904. She was baptized in November, 1885. October 19, 1875, she married Harry E. Jarvis. Of their five children four are living: Frederic S., Carolyn B., Herbert C., and Edith A. Besides these she leaves a father (Colonel Sellon), two sisters (Sr. H. A. Stebbins and Sr. C. D. Cramer) and one brother (Brodie R. Sellon). Deceased was an active worker in the King's Daughters, and at her death was chairman of the State committee on child labor. She was actively interested in the Y. W. C. A., Woman's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A., and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. At the time of her death she was superintendent of the Burlington Sunday-school and president of the Ladies' Aid Society of her church. Her departure is keenly felt, not alone by her brethren and sisters and family but by all who knew her. Funeral at the home, in charge of Elbert A. Smith. The sermon by Bro. F. G. Pitt was truly beautiful and encouraging, robbing death of its gloom and comforting the family with the kindly touch of the Spirit that inspired it. Memorial services held March 20, at the church, which was well filled with Saints and friends who had learned to respect Sr. Jarvis. They listened to a tender and loving explanation of Sr. Jarvis' faith, and some of them were certainly touched. The faith of the family has not faltered. On the contrary it is stronger than ever before. Great manifestations of God's love were had during her long sickness. We feel that it is well with her.

COLEMAN.—At Chicago, Illinois, January 27, 1904, of consumption, Sr. Charlie Coleman. Was born at Lexington, Rock-bridge County, Virginia, March 15, 1858. Was formerly connected with the Mount Pleasant Baptist Church of Chicago. United with and was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ by W. H. Fuller, in August, 1901. She was a good woman, an intelligent and faithful Saint, and has gone to a good reward. Funeral services conducted by Elders M. H. Bond and E. J. Lang.

COLLIN.—At Gilfach Goch, January 31, 1904, of convulsions, Joseph John, the only son of Mr. William J. and Sr. Margaret Catharine Collin. He was 9 months and 28 days old. Buried February 3, at Glyn Ogwr, Elder Evan B. Morgan officiating, assisted by J. G. Jenkins. Blessed by Elder John Davies. Loving and lovely as he was, yet death claimed him.

ROBERTS.—Sr. Harriet Roberts passed peacefully away at her home, Escondido, California, February 29, 1904. Sr. Roberts was born in Lake County, Ohio, October 25, 1829; was married to John Richards in 1851. Two sons were born to them, Edwin and John. She was among the first to accept the message brought by Brn. Blair and Briggs to Farm Creek in 1859. In 1861 was united in marriage to Mr. Nathaniel Roberts. She leaves four children, two sons, and two daughters. She died, as she had always lived, firm in the faith. Just before the end she expressed a great desire to be at rest.

SMITH.—Bro. Oliver Thompson Smith, died at his home in Idaho Falls, Idaho, February 22, 1904. He was born April 27, 1857, in Monroe County, Mississippi; was baptized by Elder E. C. Brand at Beaver, City, Utah, in 1871. He was married to Emily C. Van Vleet June 13, 1877, and leaves a wife, son, and two married daughters, also his aged mother to mourn. Funeral services held in the Mormon church in Idaho Falls, a large con-course of neighbors and friends attended. Elder S. D. Condit was in charge, sermon by Elder A. J. Layland.

The Traveler
Who contemplates a trip to Colorado, Utah, California or the North west should know that
The Denver & Rio Grande R. R.
widely known as "The Scenic Line of the World," has more scenic attractions than any other route across the continent, traversing as it does the Rocky Mountain Region through Royal Gorge, Canon of the Grand River, Glenwood Springs, Marshall Pass, Black Canon, Castle Gate, and the world-famed Salt Lake City. Its three through daily trains are equipped with the latest improved cars of all classes. Its dining car service is unsurpassed. For illustrated pamphlets address
S. K. HOOPER, G. P. & T. A.
Denver
Colo.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
ABSOLUTELY PURE
 Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

"She Wants to Tell."

Sr. M. E. Webber of Queensboro, Ontario, Canada, writes January 12, 1904, saying: "Dear Brother:—I want to tell you how pleased I am with your Quit-to-bac. My brother used less than two boxes and has not touched tobacco since he began to use it and has gained in flesh and is better in every way." If it cures others, why not you? Three boxes sent post-paid for $1.50 with positive guarantee of cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.
 Address, (Bro.) E. F. Ordway, 228 Hancock St., Peoria, Ill., U. S. A.

INDIAN BEAD WORK.

This fascinating work will be very popular this summer. Neck chains, fobs, belts, and other useful and fancy articles can be made with these beads. The work is very simple and pleasant by following patterns. On receipt of $1.00 will send the following, charges prepaid: One Bead Loom, two bunches beads (about 1,000 beads to bunch), one Pattern Book with 50 designs in colors to book. Extra beads per bunch 20 cents. State color preferred. Remit by post-office order or registered letter to

W. S. MALONEY, STEPPVILLE, KANSAS.
 P. O. Box 3. 11 r4t

BLACKSMITH HELPER WANTED!

One who can do flooring, woodworking, smith helping, and keep shop neat. $2.50 per day for good young Latter Day Saint only—Railroad Co.—steady work. Address,

W. H. YOUNG, BELLFLOWER, MISSOURI.

MANUSCRIPT FOUND

Has just been reprinted, and owing to the heavy expense of publishing it the price has been raised to thirty-five cents. Mark your catalogue accordingly.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 Lamoni, Iowa.

ERRORS AND INCONSISTENCIES CONCERNING THE PRESIDENCY OF THE DOMINANT CHURCH IN UTAH.

207. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100. 60

POLYGAMY NOT A DOCTRINE OF THE TRUE CHURCH OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

203. Per dozen 5 cents; per 100. 35

THE KIRTLAND TEMPLE. Illustrated. The two martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith; Kirtland temple, and President Joseph Smith.

45. Each 5 cents; per dozen. . . . 50

SENT ON APPROVAL
 TO RESPONSIBLE PEOPLE

Laughlin Fountain Pen
 Guaranteed Finest Grade 14k. SOLID GOLD PEN

To test the merits of
'THE SAINTS' HERALD
 as an advertising medium
 we offer your choice of

These Two Popular Styles For Only $1.00

Postpaid to any Address.

(By registered mail 8 cents extra.)

Holder is made of finest quality hard rubber, in four simple parts, fitted with very highest grade, large size 14k, gold pen, any flexibility desired—ink feeding device perfect.

Either style—Richly Gold Mounted for presentation purposes, $1.00 extra.

Grand Special Offer

You may try the pen a week, if you do not find it as represented, fully as fine a value as you can secure for three times the price in any other makes, if not entirely satisfactory in every respect, return it and we will send you $1.10 for it, the extra 10c. is for your trouble in writing us and to show our confidence in the Laughlin Pen—(Not one customer in 5000 have asked for their money back.)

Illustration on left is full size of Ladies' style; on right, Gentlemen's style.

Lay this Paper Down and Write NOW
 Safety Pocket Pen Holder sent free of charge with each Pen.

ADDRESS
Laughlin Mfg. Co.
 153 Griswold St., DETROIT, MICH.

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS, 1852 to 1900.

197. Paper. . . . . 5
 198. Cloth, limp. . . . . 3.

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
 Lamoni, Iowa.

BANKING BY MAIL.

WRITE US AT ONCE

If you have any money deposited on which you are not receiving interest.

WE PAY 5 PER CENT INTEREST.

The COMMERCIAL BANK, Lamoni, Iowa.

DIRT BY MAIL.

Any one wishing to buy residence property at Lamoni, or a good farm of any size near there, write to D. F. NICHOLSON, dealer in dirt
LAMONI - - IOWA

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE. A dictionary and alphabetical index to the Bible, with a concordance to the apocrypha, and a table and concordance of the proper names of the Bible.

206. Cloth . . . . . 1 50

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

White River Mining & Development Company

Mountain Home, Ark.

Photographic Views tell the Story Completely

On receipt of postal card, with name and address written plainly, we will send a copy of our Illustrated Report to any address. This Report shows the entire development of the Company's properties at Graceland, also an inventory of the merchantable goods on hand January 1, 1904.

Joseph Ward, Sec.

Mountain Home, Ark.

MINISTRY BLANK REPORTS.

209. Per dozen . . . . . 10

The Saints' Herald

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1904

Number 14

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
 of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH }
 FRED'K M. SMITH } EDITORS

Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

Editorial.

OUR UTAH TRIP.

At the close of our last article we had reached Denver in the account of our trip. That was about half past four in the afternoon of February 6. Our object being to be in Salt Lake City by the 9th, and already having lost some hours by missing a train at McCook, Nebraska, we thought it best to push on towards our destination, for we could not, of course, tell what we would meet in the way of obstacles. From Denver the mountains appeared to be comparatively free from snow, and very little had fallen on the streets of the city. In fact, the dust would blow in clouds down the streets. Winds are not at all uncommon in Denver. The Denverites expect winds, and duly appreciate the quiet days. Sunshine they enjoy in abundance, cloudy days being agreeably scarce. Altogether, the weather was fine, so warm that we regretted having overcoat and overshoes along. When we left Lamoni the mercury in the thermometer had been hovering persistently around the marks below zero and not far above, for a long time, and we had expected to find our overcoat and overshoes even more in need in the mountains than on the prairies. But we found the Denver weather more like pleasant fall weather. However, not knowing what day Boreas would claim his rights to spend this season of the year sporting in howling glee among the crags and crannies of the Front Range, we thought it inadvisable to remain in Denver over Sunday, so made arrangements to start for Salt Lake City at eight o'clock in the evening, over the Denver & Rio Grande Railway. After making such arrangements there remained some hours before the train would start, so we "looked around" some. By means of the telephone we located the home of Bro. and Sr. F. I. Lewis, and were with them at supper. Soon thereafter we were aboard the "Utah and California Express," known to the Denver & Rio Grand Railway men as simply No. 3, enroute across the mountains. For a while after leaving Denver we passed the time chatting with some of the passengers; but after leaving Pueblo we assumed as comfortable a sleeping attitude as is possible in a day-coach, and went to sleep.

When we awoke about daylight we were high up in the mountains at Malta. Off to the right could be seen the glare from the smelters of Leadville. About

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
Our Utah Trip - - - - -	313
Kirtland Items - - - - -	315
Query and Reply - - - - -	315
News from the Field - - - - -	316
Original Poetry:
Of Christ - - - - -	317
Rock of Refuge - - - - -	317
Original Articles:
The Visiting Officers - - - - -	318
Twists and Twisters - - - - -	322
Selected Articles:
The Separation of Church and State in France.—A
Roman Catholic View - - - - -	323
Growing Toleration of Theological Error - - - - -	325
Mormons Negotiating for Hall - - - - -	325
The Most Deadly Poison Known - - - - -	325
Catch Flying Words - - - - -	326
Mothers' Home Column:
Are We Ready? - - - - -	327
Going Home - - - - -	327
Listen to the Children - - - - -	327
Sunday-School Department:
Field-Work - - - - -	328
What the Sunday-School Has Done for Me, and
What it Can Do for Others - - - - -	328
The Bible the Most Popular Book - - - - -	328
Letter Department:
Letters - - - - -	329
To Homeseekers - - - - -	330
Extracts from Letters - - - - -	333
Miscellaneous Department:
Conference Minutes:
New South Wales - - - - -	333
Spring River - - - - -	333
Convention Minutes:
Idaho - - - - -	334

Both HERALD editors left for Kirtland Monday evening, March 28, and both expected to make short stays in Chicago.

breakfast time the train reached Tennessee Pass, through which we passed over the Continental Divide. The Pass has an altitude of ten thousand four hundred and eighteen feet, the highest point we reached on the trip. To us the difference in the air pressure was noticeable. With us it affected the ears, as though they were subjected to a distressing pressure. This grew worse, until there was a peculiar snap within the ears, and the pressure was gone. They had suddenly adapted themselves to the changed conditions. One other person in the car did not escape so easily. A lady across the aisle from us, as we mounted to the Pass became very restless, and as we reached the summit she fainted. The high altitude affected her heart. A few passengers rushed confusedly around trying to do something for the sufferer. The trainmen seemed comparatively little concerned over the incident; yet they suggested the very best thing to be done, simple as it was, that is, open the window beside her, so she could get plenty of cool, fresh air. The apparent indifference of the trainmen to the incident attracted my attention, and aroused my curiosity as to the reason. I could scarcely attribute it to hard-heartedness, so I began questioning the brakeman when opportunity permitted. He told me that it was a very common occurrence, there being scarcely a trip on which some passenger did not faint. Indeed, he said he had known the effect of the high altitude to prove fatal. Persons with diseased and weak hearts take serious risks in going over high passes. The probable reason is the rapidity with which the changed conditions are brought about. The train passes comparatively quickly from the lower altitudes to the higher, and the human system in striving to accommodate itself to the changes sometimes brings distress to persons. Persons in good general health suffer little or no inconvenience in making the rapid transitions from lower to higher altitudes, and vice versa.

Sunday was passed on the train. The long journey together enabled a number of us on the car to get a speaking acquaintance at least, and so the day wore away in chatting, reading, etc. One of our train acquaintances whom we remember quite well was an aged miner, T. R. Orser by name, who for many years had followed the occupation of prospector. He was direct from Cripple Creek, and had much to tell of the recent labor trouble there. His tales of mining experience were interesting to us, and his recitals helped to pass the time away.

About two hours or so after dark we passed over Soldier's Summit, and then went swiftly down the range into the valley, through Provo, and on into Salt Lake Valley, reaching Salt Lake City about midnight. In company with our miner friend Orser we went to Hotel Wilson and engaged room for the night.

Monday morning friend Orser and I were up betimes, and of course we were both curious to see something of the city so widely known, and so we were soon on the broad streets looking for the chief center of interest to sight-seers,—the Temple Block. Knowing somewhat of the scheme of numbering the streets, we soon located ourselves by means of the plainly-marked street signs, and, without being under the necessity of asking direction, found our way to the Temple Block. Like nearly all other blocks in the city, it has an area of ten acres, being forty rods square. Unlike any other block it contains within its high walls (it is entirely walled in) the Temple, the Tabernacle, the Assembly Hall, the Bureau of Information, the Temple Annex, and some other buildings. Of the latter, not the least deserving of attention is a very small one of adobe, now crumbling after its long exposure to storms and sunshine, in which are kept some of the Government instruments of precision, by means of which the city's exact location and its meridian were determined. It was afterward told us that the early pioneers,—the founders of the city,—had, with the very crude instruments at their disposal, attempted to determine the meridian from astronomical observation, and had computed so carefully that the one they established was within a few feet of the one later established by finer and more correct instruments by employees of the United States Government.

Of course we went to the Bureau of Information, and indicated our desire to see such of the buildings as were open to the public. We were asked to register. We did so, and without looking at our signatures, the man in charge turned us over to "Sister McCune," who would show us through the buildings. Under her guidance we saw the Assembly Hall and the Tabernacle. Of course we "heard the pin drop," as do nearly all who go through the great auditorium. Our guide told us somewhat of the great building, and among other things one that is probably told to many tourists, as we have heard it from various sources. She said the great roof was constructed without the use of a nail, wooden pins and leather thongs being used. Later in our visit we were told this is a mistake, for nails were used. How the story got started is hard to say, but it seems such stories are much more easily started than stopped. Bro. S. Rew, of Lamoni, has told us he helped get the timber from the mountains for the roof, and his memory is that nails were used.

But nails or no nails, the roof is a marvel, and when one thinks of the circumstances under which it was constructed, the zeal and energy of the people building it demands admiration. The Tabernacle has a splendid audience room, with ample accommodations for a choir of four or five hundred voices and the monstrous but sweet-toned organ, which is the source of much just pride.

While sitting in the building chatting with "Sister McCune" we told her our name and the object of our visit. On returning to the "Bureau" she told the keeper who we were, and we were pleased to know she considered it "an honor" to have shown a "grandson of the Prophet Joseph" through the buildings. Our courteous guide interested herself in us further and very kindly showed us the way to the office of President Joseph F. Smith and introduced us to those we found there, and left us in the midst of our kinfolk. The latter took us in charge, and Joseph F. Smith, Jr., a young man of about our own age, began showing us around. We went to the hotel for our grip, etc., and there we took leave of our friend Orser, who was soon going to take train for the far West to visit his children. Our "traps" were taken to the Bee Hive and we were given a room, and made very welcome.

The family reunion, to attend which we had come from Iowa, was scheduled for Tuesday, February 9, so we had a day to look around and get acquainted. If we failed to do so, it was not the fault of our guide, Joseph, for from the time we met him till we left some ten days later, his time and attention were freely given us, and he showed us every courtesy, as did the whole family. Of what we saw and heard under his guidance in the city of the salt valley, we shall try to tell somewhat in our next.

---

KIRTLAND ITEMS.

President Joseph Smith, Senior Editor of the HERALD, reached here on Wednesday last, after staying at Willoughby. He was accompanied by Secretary Salyards. On Tuesday evening President Smith addressed an audience in the meeting place of the South Chicago Branch, on Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago. The house was well filled, and the effort was well received. The speaker plainly set forth the attitude of the Reorganized Church on the questions which have been agitating the public since the Smoot investigation began. Some outsiders were present.

The Associate Editor and wife reached Kirtland Friday about noon, after a delectable (?) ride from Willoughby in the mud. And such mud! Last conference we were told by a Kirtland advocate on the adjournment question that he had seen passing through the streets of Lamoni a four-horse team drawing an empty wagon through the mud. Well, coming here from Willoughby we saw a four-horse team hitched to a wagon on which was a light load. But they were not drawing the wagon; they couldn't. The wagon was about half out of sight, in the mud. Whether it had "reached bottom" or not, we do not know. Let us hear no more "slanders" about Lamoni mud, please.

Last night the sound of the "mud-goers" could be heard until about midnight. A very large delegation (about fifty-seven) from the West over the Nickle Plate reached Willoughby on the evening train and another of about twenty on the Lake Shore, and still another of about twenty-five Canadians from the East. To get these people to Kirtland through the mud was a slow and irksome task. But it was accomplished some way, and this morning all are shaking hands as though everything was of the pleasantest.

This morning the Independence delegation, about twenty strong, reached here. Prospects seem to be good for a very large attendance.

Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, president of the Religio, is on hand for the first session of convention this afternoon, which will be at two o'clock. The Religians are in evidence.

The weather, which was rainy and wet yesterday and before, has turned off cold, and this morning it even threatened snow, a few flakes, as though to remind us that winter had not gone so far that he could not get back. We hope, though, he will not get the notion of coming to conference too. All day yesterday the work of restoring the vails in the Temple progressed. Asbestos has been used in making the new curtains. Time will not permit a complete restoration at present. The manipulation of the vails is somewhat intricate and it will take some time to arrange them completely.

The Quorum of Twelve has been in session daily for some days at the Grand Army of the Republic hall. Nine of the Quorum are present, the three absent being J. W. Rushton in England, Peter Anderson in Norway, and C. A. Butterworth in Australia. The Quorum seems to have its work well up and in hand.

R. C. Evans, of the Presidency, reached here last evening in company with his wife and many others from King Edward's domains. The attendance from Canada promises to be larger this year than for many years past.

This afternoon the First Presidency and Twelve hold a joint session to consider matters demanding the attention of the two quorums.

We shall try to give the HERALD readers a general idea of what is going on at Kirtland for the next few days.

FRED'K. M. SMITH.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, April 2, 1904.

---

QUERY AND REPLY.

On what day was Christ born? You know we keep the 25th of December as his birthday, although we reckon time from January 1, considered A. D. (anno domini), or the Christian era. I claim that if we reckon time from January 1, it must be Christ's birthday, or there is a big mistake somewhere.

There is no way that we have any knowledge of by which to determine in what month, or on what day Jesus was born. It was at a time when shepherds watched their flocks by night, and so it would seem to have been at a season of the year when the pasture was green and available. But as the climate at Jerusalem was of so variable a nature there may have been pasturage as late as December 25, the day fixed in the fourth century as the probable day on which Jesus was born. Scholars have long worked over the problem in various ways, but no decision has been reached or agreement effected, other than the one now observed.

The fixing of the time for beginning the yearly count at January 1 cuts no figure in deciding the natal day of our Lord, as our A. D. style was the result of an official adjustment of the days and months in such a way as to secure uniformity in the count, and to avoid lapsing in the seasons, that is, the lapping over on the one hand, and falling short on the other, creating uncertainty in the business affairs in the regions where winter and summer, seed time and harvest were to keep up the routine of their recurrence.

It seems to us that so long as our Lord was born and wrought for the salvation of man, and as the chronology left on record is of such a character as to preclude a definite settlement as to the calendar day of his birth, we may safely be content to wait the possible discovery of what might be evolved out of the dusty archives of the past to fix the date; or, if it should by divine wisdom be deemed essential to the success of the work of redemption to fix the date by revelation, which would have weight with believers only.

It is one of the things all would like to know just for the sake of knowing, but which is not essential to our salvation to know.

---

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. G. J. Waller, in reporting for the Honolulu Mission for the year, says that while the additions there by baptisms have been few, he thinks those who have been regular attendants at meetings have made a development in a knowledge of the truth and their interest in the work thereby increased. A church building fund has been started for the purpose of purchasing a lot on which a branch meeting house and a home for the missionary can be erected. He wrote encouragingly of the prospects. The lot has been secured, and he hopes a year of time will permit them to have enough for the building. The members are pleased with the prospect as they long to have a building of their own. He has been assisted by two of his daughters to keep up the Japanese Sunday-school.

---

“The old Log Cabin,” a story by Sr. M. Walker in April Autumn Leaves, is interesting.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

There seems to be a general desire to know what the Senate committee will do next in the case of the Senator from Utah. The following comes to hand at an opportune time; therefore, we think it will be of interest to our readers:

“A correspondent asks what has become of the Smoot case. He wishes to know if it has been dropped and the Senator from Utah is to be allowed to hold his seat without further molestation.

“The case is not dead, but sleeping. The Senate committee run out of witnesses. Several Mormon residents of Utah who it was believed could give interesting information had been searched for with subpoenaes but could not be found. Others were found but were unable to go to Washington at once. Therefore the investigation was adjourned to the 12th of this month, when there will be some witnesses on hand.

“The inquiry will go on slowly. Congress will adjourn at the beginning of next month. Then the committee, or some of its members, will go to Utah and listen to the evidence which it is said will be submitted about the celebration of polygamous marriages since the manifesto of 1890 and about the active part taken by the Church in politics.

“Senators are naturally reticent as to the effect which the evidence thus far submitted has had upon their minds, but the impression prevails that a considerable number of them do not think it warrants the expulsion of Senator Smoot. The witnesses yet to be heard may strengthen the case against him. The men who are making the fight on him say that it will.

“A general Mormon conference will be held next week. At these meetings it is the custom to call on Church members to ‘sustain’ their officers—to signify their approval of their conduct by the raising of hands. If a member disapproves of anything that has been done he has a right to stand up and condemn it. If at that conference President Smith and other men prominent in the Church, whose affection for polygamy, frankly avowed before the Senate committee, shocked and disgusted the public, are ‘sustained,’ it will be apparent that Mormons in general believe in polygamy even where they do not practice it.

“If the Mormons stand by President Smith, Senator Smoot’s chances will not be so good as they will be if any considerable number of Mormons publicly repudiate the sentiments of the head of the Church.”
—Editorial in Chicago Tribune, April 1, 1904.

---

The apostacy and restoration is dealt with in a novel manner in story form in the March and April Autumn Leaves,—“The Mysterious Prince.” Do not fail to read it.

In our issue of March 23 we noticed a news item to the effect that several hundred young Mormons had united to demand a fulfillment of pledges made at the time Utah was admitted to statehood, and that unless the practice of polygamy should be abandoned by the leaders of their Church, they would leave that organization. We have watched closely for a confirmation of this press report. In an editorial review of the Smoot case in the Improvement Era (Salt Lake City), we find the following, which makes it appear that the report was correct:

"A few people, who are mostly disappointed politicians (though there are a few fair men among them), and, in the estimation of many, not over-particular in their moral relations, except in theory, have, it is true, professed themselves greatly shocked at the 'revelations,' as if they were just made familiar with the conditions. As a result, they have begun an agitation for a new political party, and demand that 'this law-breaking be given up in all its forms, and that Utah shall keep, in spirit and in letter, the faith it has pledged to the people of the United States.'

"Since moralists differ as to whether the abandonment of the families, in the cases mentioned, is the better plan, and as there was from the beginning a tacit understanding they should not be disturbed; and since Utah, as far as the Church people are concerned, has kept the faith with the nation, the grounds of complaint appear untenable.

"The young men of the Church should therefore carefully weigh the facts and conditions before taking any radical steps in politics, becoming excited, or passing judgment upon affairs with whose significance and import they may not be thoroughly familiar."

Reverend John Alexander Dowie has not been having great success since going to Australia. The Age (Melbourne) for February 29 reaches our desk. It contains quite a lengthy account of Dowie's Sunday afternoon service (28th) which was broken up by disturbance, his evening service being abandoned. Dowie escaped or he would have been mobbed. The people of Melbourne do not accept seriously the "world-wide notoriety" Dowie has gained since he lived there many years ago "in comparative obscurity."

A revision of W. J. Smith's book on Joseph Smith is in course of publication and will be ready for sale at an early date. Bro. Smith has strengthened his defense of the seer by additional argument and proof, and has added materially to the size of the book and to its value as a help in meeting Brighamism, by a complete exposition of polygamy from the standpoints of Christianity, scripture, physiology, and moral ethics. The price in cloth will be seventy-five cents.

Original Poetry.

Of Christ.

The way to God, where is it?
Christ said there's only one
That leadeth to the Father,
The Godhead three in one;
The only way—Christ walked it,
Not all the ways we hear;
Though in that way we're tempted,
We know that Christ is near.

The way to God, where is it?
Through Jordan's watery wave,
And all who follow Jesus
Pass through a similar grave;
'Tis not the water saves you,
As many might suppose;
It simply is the obedience
A child its parent shows.

The signs Christ gave, where are they?
Some tell us they are dead;
Some say, "They're done away with."
Is this what Jesus said?
They who in God believeth
And in his blessed Son,
Christ said they should accomplish
More works than he had done.

The church of Christ, where is it?
'Twas taken from the earth.
Restored in eighteen-thirty
As in its former birth;
For then a mighty angel
Came down to earth from heaven,
And once again the gospel
To humble man was given.

The church of Christ, where is it?
We read there's only one;—
One church of God the Father,
His Son's the corner-stone.
Then we will follow Jesus
While traveling here below,
And not by every doctrine
Be drifted to and fro.

The church of Christ, we've found it,
Thanks to our heavenly King,
The only church of Jesus,
And to that church we'll cling;
Though sin is strong about us
We'll strive to keep his ways,
That we may serve our calling,
Be "Saints in Latter Days."

DOVER ERNEST JUDD.

Rock of Refuge.

Jesus Savior, wilt thou be
A rock of refuge cleft for me?
Lord, I'd put my trust in thee,
Wilt thou my shield and refuge be?

Other refuge there is none,
Other than thee, thou holy one;
O may the water and the blood,
From thy wounded side which flowed,

Be a ransom for my soul;
O guide me to the heavenly home.
O may I from sin be pure;
Thou art my guide, thou art the door.

Thou the Christ, hath made me free;
Savior, I would cleave to thee;
Teach me to serve thee day by day;
Be thou my comfort, staff, and stay.

THOMAS HAMILTON.

Original Articles.

THE VISITING OFFICERS.

BY ELDER J. R. LAMBERT, AT A MEETING OF THE BRANCH VISITING OFFICERS, LAMONI, IOWA, MARCH 22, 1904.

When I was invited by Bro. Gunsolley to address you to-night, the topic named by him, as I remember it, was "House to house visiting."

The first thought that strikes my mind with reference to house to house visiting, as a part of the work belonging to the ministry of Christ, in his church, is, that provision is made for this kind of work in the law. In section 17, paragraphs 10 and 11, of the Doctrine and Covenants, we have the following reading:

The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and to attend to all family duties: and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; and he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties. In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires. The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and to see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest, and is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons, if occasion requires; but neither teachers nor deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ.

I have read the two paragraphs in full in order that you might have the benefit of the connections. I gather from the reading of these paragraphs that the presiding elder, or elders, as the case may be, the priests, teachers, and deacons, are all visiting officers. While it is not directly said that the elder shall visit from house to house, it is stated after the enumeration of the duties of the priest, that in all these duties he shall assist the elder when occasion requires. So I believe that it is not only the privilege, but the duty of the presiding elder, as time and conditions will permit, to visit among the Saints in the branch. The priest is the assistant of the elder. The deacons are the assistants of the teachers. I gather that the teacher is a visiting officer from a consideration of the character of his work as a teacher. It seems to me that that work can not be properly and fully performed without more or less visiting among the members of the branch. And while I do not regard him as the visiting officer in the same sense as I do the priest, yet I think it is impractical for him to accomplish the work that is imposed upon him in the law, without visiting among the members of the Church. When I say I do not regard him as the visiting officer in the same sense that I do the priest, I do not wish to be understood as believing, as some do, that it is wrong for the teacher to visit with the priest. I can see no infraction of the law, or any evil results that may obtain from intelligent work of this kind. If the priest and teacher agree to visit together in the branch, it seems to me that it is all right; but it should be with the understanding that the teacher labors in his own capacity, while the priest labors in his own capacity; that each one occupies independently, so to speak, in his own office and calling. The teacher does not move around with the priest, because he is the assistant of the priest, made so by the law; but he moves around to find out more about the condition of the members of the Church, and to teach and instruct and encourage, or reprove, or whatever may be found necessary for him to do. If there is one officer in the Church that needs a more complete knowledge of the spiritual and moral condition of the members of the branch than another, it is the teacher. And it seems absurd to say that it is wrong for the teacher to do any visiting, with that law before us.

That the deacons are visiting officers, is evident from the statement in the law that they are to assist the teacher when occasion requires. He can call upon them to visit, and do whatever work he may think needs to be done, or that they are fitted and prepared to accomplish for the good of the cause. Hence I conclude, as already stated, that the elder, priest, teacher, and deacon are visiting officers.

The next thought that comes to my mind is this: that if God has imposed this important work upon us, he intended that we should be prepared to accomplish it according to his will. And as it is a part of the work necessary in bringing the Saints up to that high moral and spiritual standard that God intended they should come up to, it follows that every qualification within our reach should be secured in order to accomplish this end. It follows, too, that the same principle which applies to other ministers in the Church will apply to these. Now we know that in order for our labor to be effectual, as ministers of the word, we must be exemplary in our conduct. There should, at least, be a commendable effort, an earnest and constant effort, made by every minister of the Church to practice what he teaches; and if this is necessary in case of the minister who occupies in the pulpit, it is also necessary in the minister who visits from house to house. You may know, to an extent, the effect of sending out a priest, teacher, or deacon to labor among members of the branch, when the masses of the membership there have no confidence in the man. That is, if his example is bad, morally, his practical standard is very low, spiritually and morally, there is but little force in his teachings. In fact it is a real trial for the Saints to put up with it. Frequently they feel very bad when they see him approaching the house. And if it so happens, as it sometimes does, that there are some very peculiar eccentricities about the man, in connection with this, he becomes almost intolerable. So it is necessary that we should be just as free from that which hinders the efficiency of our labors as possible. It is necessary that we should enforce the pure precepts of the gospel, which we are to teach the members of the Church, by a godly example. It is necessary that in our business relations, our social relations, and everything we do, we should be exemplary ministers of Jesus Christ. And this is very important, very important indeed. You remember one time the Apostle Paul undertook to instruct a set of ministers, the elders of the church at Ephesus. We read of it in the Acts of the Apostles, twentieth chapter. And he announced a principle when he said to those elders: "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and unto all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." Now every man who is properly ordained to any office in this Church, in one sense is an overseer. Every man holding ministerial authority in this Church is a leader in his own capacity. The apostle understood that it was necessary that those elders should take heed unto themselves, as well as to the flock. It was not only necessary that they should study the needs or the wants of the Church, and supply them as best they could, but it was necessary that they should take into serious consideration the question of their own fitness to do that work; that they should seriously consider whether they were in a spiritual or moral condition that entitled them to the blessings of God, and the confidence of the people, so that their labors would be effectual, and every man would be a living example of the purity of the work that he represented.

Now I believe that is what is required; and when it becomes more general than it is, we will have better success. And while we are taking heed unto ourselves, we certainly will not escape the thought that if we are going to build up God's work, and bring the people nearer to God, we ourselves must be spiritually minded. Jesus said, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth." That is true in this work, too. It is true all the way through. If we lose the spirit of it, it is a dead letter. It is the Spirit that quickeneth; it is the Spirit that giveth life. And every minister of Jesus Christ, these local ministers right down to the deacon, just as well as anybody else, should enjoy the Spirit; they should be spiritually minded; they should be so enlightened and guided by the Spirit that their labors edify; that there is light in the instructions presented by them. And when the members of the Church are left, by them, they feel a holy thrill of love and power, because of coming in contact with those who are enjoying this Spirit, the Spirit of their office and calling, the Spirit of God that enables them to perform the duties that belong to their calling. That is the only way we can build up this work. When branch officers visit around, and there is nothing to it but dead form, and they happen to be very tedious and lengthy in their ministrations, you can easily see what the effect will be; especially with people that are very busy, and their time seems to be very valuable to them. So it is important that we should study what manner of men we ought to be, as ministers of Jesus Christ, as well as members in his church; and strive to be fitted and qualified for the important duties that devolve upon us; and thus move forward with an understanding of the needs of the flock, the needs of the Saints. And being very conversant with the law which defines our duties and calling, move forward in harmony with that law, and teach and instruct and labor; and then I believe we will build up the work, and we will make a success of it.

Now with reference to particular methods in this house to house visiting, I believe that if we should adopt any iron-clad rules we would fail to make a success of our work. The conditions of those to be visited are so varied, and the dispositions of different members in the Church are so widely different, that iron-clad rules will not do. At the same time there are some general conditions that I believe we can observe whenever it is practical, with profit. For instances, I think when we move into a house and begin our work, the rule should be to request the head of the house, whether it is a man or woman, to call the members of the house together. Have everything done in order. Make a kind request. Then we should take into consideration the condition and disposition of these people. Are they very busy? Have we struck them at a very busy time, when they feel as though they could only spare a little while; or have they plenty of time? If we see that they are very busy, then we should try to be brief. We can accomplish more good then by brevity than we could by being so lengthy. It is well, I think, to open our work with the reading of a short lesson from some one of the sacred books of the Church, and with prayer; sometimes one, and sometimes the other. Prayer is in order always, if the conditions are favorable. And it is a very good idea to call upon the head of the house to pray. And sometimes a branch officer can very quickly discover then whether he is in the habit of praying or not. When he inquires for one of the Church books from which to read a lesson, he is able to discover whether they keep the Church books or not, and by the looks of the books, he may know whether they ever read them or not. He keeps learning; and knowledge is power, you know, and always power for good if rightly used. And as a teacher is to see that all the members do their duty, why, the more knowledge he can get with reference to these things, the better. I do not believe that we should have any set of rules governing this matter. Different conditions should be taken into consideration; and when it is necessary to dispense with prayer, do so. When it is necessary to be very brief, educate ourselves in such a manner that we can be brief and pointed. Try to reach the material points, and accomplish as much good as possible with few words.

It is claimed by some that it is wrong for the teacher to ask any direct questions. I will have to confess to you that I have never been converted to that claim. I do not believe that it is a correct one. I do not see how he can properly and fully do his work without asking questions. I ministered in this office for more than three years, and I asked a good many questions within that time. And I can not call to remembrance now that I ever offended anybody by asking questions. It was my rule to ask them if they observed family services and worship. And when one question is asked, if it is done intelligently and kindly, as a rule, they will tell you more than you asked; and you become acquainted with their conditions. Then you know how to proceed; for the purpose is to correct the wrong; the purpose is to bring the Saints nearer to God, in practice, in faith, in spirit, in everything they do. Hence the necessity, as I said before, of setting proper examples, the necessity of having a proper understanding of the importance of our work.

Now my experience and my observation are that where these provisions of the divine law are largely neglected, the Church is not in a good condition. Where they are intelligently and fully observed, other things being equal, the Church is always ahead; it is a good condition.

And while I have said that the teacher may visit with the priest, (I simply express my opinion,) I think he should by no means be confined to any regular visits. I think he should go and labor where he sees that labor is needed, and when he sees labor is needed. That is the spirit of his work, and the duties that devolve upon him as a teacher are of such a character that when he sees that one member demands an effort upon his part, he should go there and perform that work. This is my experience. I presume I am not telling you anything but what you are acquainted with. Here are men who have accipied many, many years, and some of them much older than I am, and here are missionaries, and I am sure that they will all say that in order to secure success in this work, before we begin it we must humble ourselves before God, and try to keep humble; and we must pray to him with real intent of heart, in faith, and ask him to go with us and qualify us for the work that we are called to do. Sometimes it seems so difficult, that this is the only thing that will give us relief. It is the only thing that will give us sufficient strength to move forward and occupy in a proper manner; but when we get strength in that way, we move forward in the wisdom and strength of God. And our efforts build up the work of God. And if it is possible to reclaim an erring brother or sister, when we go in that spirit, with our hearts full of love, it can be accomplished; and that is the only way it can be accomplished.

I remember in a little branch to which I belonged when I was a teacher, sometimes I would notice that certain persons failed to partake of the sacrament. And I thought it was my duty to find out why they did not partake. I took their names at once, when they did not partake, and on the first good opportunity, (I do not wait long, either,) I approached them and told them in as good a way as I knew how, and as kindly as I could, that I noticed that they did not partake of the sacrament on Sunday; then they would tell me why. And in the large majority of those cases it was simply because they felt weak and unworthy; and they neglected the very means that would give them strength and life. They were qualified to partake, but they thought because they felt so weak and unworthy, they ought not to partake of the emblems. So I believe that the teacher should always be on the alert; and that he is required to do a great deal of visiting in order to honor the law which defines his duties as an officer in the Church. And we will all agree that the priest is a regular visiting officer. I think the elder should visit as much as he can, and the priest is his assistant. And when at this work, we should observe the same general rules that govern us in any other work. We must exercise faith in God, humility of heart, purity of motive, an effort to understand what we are required to do, and a love for the people. We can not accomplish the work unless we have a love for the people. They may seem very low, when we get to understand sometimes what they are doing, and what they are not doing that they ought to be doing. We will see that they are low compared with what they ought to be, or where they ought to occupy. But if we get in possession of the spirit of our calling, we will have a love for them, and it will be a real pleasure to try to lift them up and do them good.

I remember when I was laboring as a missionary, way down South, I had to put up with the peculiarities of the Southern people. And one of those peculiarities is that they always look very much to a leader. They want somebody, the missionary as a rule, if he will, to keep the branch books for them. They want the missionary to do all their praying, and everything of that kind. They are always looking and trusting in some leading man. I thought when I was down there, that it was no wonder that the doctrine of secession obtained as much as it did. The masses are honest; they are good; they are hospitable, and kind; but they are apt to put their trust and confidence in some leading man. And sometimes you know that they lead astray. While I was down there, I was going to say, I not only had these things to confront me, but a great deal of immorality, especially on the coast. The sailors came in there frequently, and they mingled with our people as well as others, and they would marry a number of our young sisters, live with them a little while, then a separation occurred. And sometimes without a divorce these sisters wanted to marry again, and sometimes did. And there was a kind of looseness; and yet when I came to study the situation I could see that, as a rule, it was not intended, but there was weakness and ignorance to contend with. And I discovered that I could not accomplish anything for that people unless I could have a real love for them. I made the effort, and God blessed me in that effort; and when I felt that I really loved them, and labored with that feeling, I had reward every day for my labors. And that is the way it must be with branch officers. We have transgressors, and those that do but little in building up the work, but little for themselves, and a great many things to meet that are very trying in their character. But love, true love, will enable us to overcome all these things. Not to say that it is all right; but it will enable us to fill our respective positions as God intended we should, and if possible to lift them up and help them to occupy higher and better ground.

Now I believe I have said all that is necessary for me to say to-night with reference to this important topic. I trust that in this line of work, as in all others, we will make progress, and that every man who is called to perform any of this kind of work may carefully study the situation, and see that he is fitted and prepared for the work, especially in a moral and spiritual sense.

At the close of the address a number of questions were asked by different ones, and answered by Elder Lambert. A few of the important ones are as follows:

Q.—As a general rule is it wisdom for the priest and teacher to visit together?

A.—It is pretty hard to answer that question, for this reason, that in many of our branches we do not have the full set of officers. Where we have all the officers in the branch I think that the priest and presiding elder should labor together as much as possible; and the teacher and deacons. I think it would be better to make that general than to have the priest and teacher so closely associated, while the elder and priest seem to be further apart. I do not think an extreme position on a point of this kind is a proper one; because the conditions are so varied; and the practice of the elder and priest, or the priest and teacher, visiting together, to my mind is not necessarily in conflict with the law.

Q.—Do I understand that the priest is not to visit except he goes with the elder; that an elder should go with him, and he should assist the elder?

A.—I do not understand the word "assist" just in that sense. I think the elder and priest may go together; I do not think there is anything objectionable in it. But the elder presides over the whole branch, and takes charge of the work. He can not do all of this visiting; but if the priest goes out by himself, without the elder, he is assisting the elder to accomplish that work, which he is unable for want of time or other duties to do. Just as the teacher does. He frequently sends the deacon. I have known of cases where the teacher would say, Now here is a case of this kind (and he describes it), you go there and do what you can. I am busy down here in this part. You go and do all you can and report back to me. That deacon is assisting the teacher, though they do not go together. They may go together; but I do not think that the word "assist" necessarily means that the two should be visiting at the same time. I believe, however, that it would be better for the presiding elder to visit among the members of the branch more than he does.

Q.—The last two lines of paragraph 10, section 17, read: "In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder, if occasion requires." Would you have us understand that the words there, "the elder," refer to the presiding elder of the branch?

A.—Yes, that is my understanding.

Q.—Is it right for a priest to ask questions, in visiting? The reason I ask this question is because I asked a person, one time, whether he attended to his family prayers, and he told me it was a very broad question to ask. For this reason I would like to know whether it is right or not.

A.—If I were a priest in the branch where there was no teacher, I might ask that question sometimes; but where there are teachers, I do not believe I would directly put that question. The law says that the priest is to teach certain things. It does not say that he is to see that they are done. Certainly, every good member, every intelligent member ought to take the hint, when he is taught that he ought to do a certain thing, that if he is not doing it, he is not doing what he ought to, and he ought to reform. The law says the teacher is to see that they attend to all duties. I believe the teacher may question, and ask properly. But if members have a mind to object to questions of that kind, I think if I were a priest I should not ask them. I would confine myself to the work as stated in the law. That is my opinion; I give it for what it is worth.

"Prophets and Revelation" is the title of an article in four numbers, by J. W. Rushton, of the Twelve. The first number appeared in the April Autumn Leaves. It is logical and interesting.

TWISTS AND TWISTERS.

A twister, while twisting, did twist him a twist;
 Seven twists did the twister entwist in his twist.
 Had the twister, while twisting, untwisted one twist,
 The twist he untwisted would untwist the twist.

This old exercise in alliteration kept repeating itself in my mind, and I thought it was a good explanation of modern Christianity.

Twisters have got hold of the grand cables God first entwisted, and have thought to twist them to suit their own ideas; but in their twistings they have untwisted some of the strands, and have thereby so weakened the cable that it is no longer strong enough to draw mankind away from the sins and follies of earth, and anchor him to the Rock, Christ Jesus, and his truth. Neither will it bear the stress and strain of life and its burdens of sorrow, care, and pain, but sooner or later will give way, and let the one clinging thereto sink into deeper depths of doubt and despair, or into abysses of sin and shame.

The rainbow is composed of seven colors, three of which are the primary colors, red, yellow, and blue. The others are formed of combinations of these. It is a beautiful twist of colored light, but untwist one twist, and you have no rainbow, for it is not a rainbow unless the colors are all there. Untwist the blue, and you also take out the green and the purple, as the combination of yellow with blue gives green, and of red with blue gives purple. So with either of the other colors; if you leave out either the red or yellow, you untwist the orange, and unless the colors are all there, and correctly blended, it would not be a rainbow. It might be a pretty imitation, but not the perfect bow.

Christian character is a blending of certain gifts and graces, and to be perfect must consist of all the strands that were in the perfect pattern. If one of these strands is left out or is untwisted, it untwists yet others, as "the twist he untwisted untwisted the twist."

We are to "give diligence," to add certain things together, to entwist them into one grand cable called character, that will hold us securely while the storms rage and the tempests beat. Peter names the strands:

Add to your faith [the first strand], virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.—2 Peter 5-9.

There are eight strands in this beautiful cable, and not one can be untwisted without untwisting some others. What are all the strands without faith? and what are faith and all the others without charity?

Of what use is knowledge unless combined with virtue and temperance and how can one be truly temperate without patience and patient without temperance? And there can be only an outward form of godliness, if any of the other strands are removed, as a rope may retain the semblance of a rope after one strand is untwisted. Yet it is no longer the perfect rope, and soon it will completely untwist. So to form the perfect character, we should be careful that in our twisting we untwist not one of these required strands.

Paul tells us of a beautiful cable of thought, that while properly twisted will be strong enough to hold us firm and steadfast, amid all the waves of evil that would otherwise sweep us from our moorings: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee," and here is the staying cable (what power can break it!): "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things."—Philippians 4:8.

No wave of evil can sweep the mind away from its moorings in the "harbor of peace" while held with this cable; but untwist the strand of truth, or honesty, or justice, or virtue, and our staying cable is weakened and soon may be too weak to resist the pressure, and, giving away, our minds are tossed to and fro at the mercy of wind and wave, no longer kept in "perfect peace."

The principles of the gospel of Christ form a cable that holds the true church from being washed off the rock by the ever turbulent tide of error and sin that is always beating against her; yes, sometimes washes clear over her. Then alas for those whose cables have been untwisted! Here are the God-given strands of this cable, and what God hath joined together, let no man divide: Faith, repentance, obedience, as is shown in submitting to the ordinance of baptism, and laying on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. Dare we trust to a cable which has any of these strands taken out? No, for each twist that has been untwisted has untwisted yet others, until it is ready to fall apart. Besides, it has been cast off the Rock as worthless, and floats hither and yon on the waves of man's caprice. A drowning man clutching at a floating cable finds, alas too late, that it is not fastened to a secure foundation, and it yields him no stay.

And the gifts to the church: "First apostles, secondarily prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, helps, governments, tongues, prophecies," and other signs following. Who dare untwist even one of these? Were they not twisted together by the authority of God, to hold us firm and steadfast, "that we may be henceforth no more children tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine"? Can we do with any weaker cable now than the early saints could? Has the tide of error ebbed so we need no longer fear its force? Have the winds of false doctrine ceased blowing? Nay, verily; so I beseech you who are twisting cables to anchor souls with, trust not even your own soul to a cable lacking any one of these God-given strands.

Here is a cable woven of duties, which, if we cling to it, will lead to our entire sanctification and we shall be "preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." "Faithful is he who calleth you, who also will do it." Notice these strands, shining with a wondrous beauty, woven into a cable of strength. "Rejoice ever more; pray without ceasing; in everything give thanks. Quench not the Spirit; despise not prophecyings. Hold fast that which is good. Abstain from all appearance of evil." O what can harm us if in our twisting we entwist all of these strands and never let one get untwisted! He that hath called us is holding all these ends, and if we hold on firmly to each one nothing can hinder us from being "sanctified wholly," and this is the will of God, "even your sanctification."

Jesus says: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." O what a powerful cable, woven of eternal love, pity, justice and mercy, power, light and truth! Twisted by the Eternal One himself, never a strand shall break, for it is the word of God which endureth for ever, and will not fail to accomplish that whereunto it was sent. Men may resist its power now, but God's word will be fulfilled and all men shall yet be drawn until "unto him every knee shall bow and every tongue confess" that he is King of kings, and Lord of lords.

And this cable that binds the hearts of the Saints together into one body, soft as silk, but so strong nothing can break it, so long as we keep twisted in it all the delicate strands which compose it. They are very fine, some seem so small that we in our careless haste may think the loss of this or that one may not matter, but it is true that each strand depends on its neighbor for strength, as the varied hues of the rainbow depend on the proper blending of the different colors of light. Here are some of these soft, silken strands: Charity that thinketh no evil, courtesy, self-denial, meekness, humility, mutual confidence, patience, compassion, thoughtfulness for the good of others, and consideration of their weakness. And as we study the word we shall discover others. Let us be careful to twist them all in.

We are also warned of some strands whose fibers are rotten, that the enemy often throws in our way; and unless we are watchful will get entangled with ours, and we shall twist in that which will render our cable untrustworthy. Be sure you twist in no pride, nor malice, nor vain glory, nor self-seeking. Strife, contention, envyings, should be guarded against, also evil speaking of others, or even evil surmisings in our own hearts. Any one of these by its corrosiveness or by its rasping coarseness, would wear away the soft, silken strands and thus weaken the bond of communion that binds us all together in Christ Jesus.

And it is well to notice too that the twister in twisting his cord turns the wheel the right way. Should he turn it backward, it would untwist the twist. So we must not only be careful that we twist only the right materials, but also that we turn the wheel in the right direction, else our beautiful strands will all fall apart, and we have all our labor to do over again. May God grant that in all of our twistings, we twist in only that which is pleasing to him. May none of the enemy's cords get entwisted with ours, for although they weaken our hold on the things of God, yet they have wonderful tenacity for the things of this world, and as they draw downward they wear away by their corrosive touch the finer, more delicate fibers of our cables of life, and love, and duty, until one by one the strands are severed and we find ourselves drawn down, down, into worldliness, error, sin, darkness, and destruction, if the "One mighty to save" does not cast his cable of love about us and draw us upward again. But no true Saint wants to risk that, neither is it wise to presume on His mercy.

With a prayer that we all may be drawn together closer and closer by the cords of love and true fellowship and communion of the Spirit, and that in all our twistings we may untwist no twist that is needed, and that we never twist in any harmful thing, I remain,

Your fellow twister,

A. R. CORSON.

604 State Street, Fulton, RICHMOND, Virginia.

Selected Articles.

THE SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE IN FRANCE.—A ROMAN CATHOLIC VIEW.

Two travelers once started out together on the same road. After long and arduous travel and many misunderstandings they began to quarrel. A truce was patched up; but suddenly, when they had arrived at the brink of a precipice, the younger fell upon the other, threw him to the ground, bound and robbed him, pushing him slowly toward the abyss. "Get out quickly," he cried, "you are now free, just as I am."

This story is related by René Lavellée to illustrate the present relation of the Roman Catholic Church to the French Government. The state, he says (in an article in the Paris Correspondent, a clerical review), tells us to be gone—we are free. "It professes a profound spirit of tolerance and respect for the human conscience and freedom for the individual; but its solution of the problem of the church and state in France is an act of spoliation, an act of violence, an act of oppression. It is not satisfied with violating the Concordat: it is really setting a trap in which to strangle the Catholic Church in France."

This writer proceeds to assert that the various measures of the French Government for the disestablishment of the church in France during the present and preceding ministries show "a complete ignorance of the traditions of French history, of the needs of the French race, and of the character of the French church." He declares that Roman Catholics themselves "have complete faith in the principle of liberty and believe that the vitality of the church is such as to insure final triumph; but they claim real liberty, not merely its appearance, not merely a parody of liberty, which reserves for the church nothing but misery and persecution." In short, "they are willing to grant the separation of church and state as it exists in Belgium or in the United States, but not as it is aimed at by modern French Jacobins."

After a detailed consideration of the provisions and intent of the famous Concordat, agreed upon by Napoleon and Pope Pius VII, and an analysis of the different proposed governmental measures for the separation of church and state, M. Lavellée says:

"The Government claims that, by its nature, by its unchangeable, dogmatic character, and by its instruction to the young, Catholicism is, of necessity, hostile to democratic and republican institutions. It also claims that, in order to save its life and all that is most dear to the people, it has become necessary to destroy absolutely—at least in France—the Catholic faith. It does not know, or pretends not to know, that if Catholicism rests upon unchangeable dogmas, it is of all doctrines the most inclusive in the matter of politics. It forgets, or pretends to forget, that the church accepts all forms of government that respect its rights; and that, in our day, it is particularly in the young and free democracies of the New World that the church is growing and prospering."

It is easy to conceive any theory, this writer continues, of a condition in which the church and state are absolutely independent one of the other, and unconscious one of the other, each acting in its own sphere with complete and absolute independence. "This undoubtedly would be the ideal solution of the problem—'A free church, a free state.' Certainly the formula is a beautiful one; but it is only a formula; the dream is generous, but it is only a dream." Such a church and state living completely separate, without connection or relation, is not to be found, he asserts, anywhere in the world to-day, certainly not in France, and certainly not in the rest of the world—not even in the United States of America.

"It is true that in the United States there is no Concordat, no state religion, no dominating faith, no ecclesiastical budget. The federal Constitution, as well as the laws of the individual States of the Union, confine themselves to proclaiming liberty of conscience and liberty of the sects, without granting preference to any one religion, without imposing any restrictions on the free development of all. This could not be otherwise in a new country, where, by their origin, the religious sects have multiplied to an almost infinite number, without any one acquiring a preponderating influence, without any one claiming secular rights or privileges. And yet it would be incorrect to say that the great American republic limits itself to an absolute and systematic indifference in the matter of religious beliefs. The American Constitution begins with an invocation to God; every year the American people observe days of expiation and prayer [it is to be assumed that the writer has Thanksgiving day in mind]; the sessions of Congress are opened with prayer; religious instruction in all cities is the basis of public education; the laws of the States permit the different churches, as well as their congregations, full liberty to possess and acquire all kinds of property, and when, if at all, they limit the exercise of this right, they show very great liberality."

In England, he continues, there is the established church in which the prelates are members of the British House of Lords; in Switzerland, the church and the state are even now engaged in a legislative struggle; in Portugal, Roman Catholicism is the state religion, as it is in Austria; in Russia, there in an orthodox state religion; in Prussia, the most intimate relations exist between the Evangelical Church and the Government; in Belgium, the constitution guarantees the liberty of the sects, and makes other regulations with regard to ecclesiastical status (the Roman Catholic clergy are paid by the state.) Even in Italy, despite the long quarrel between the House of Savoy and the Vatican, Roman Catholicism always occupies a privileged position. It is not sufficient to proclaim a free church and a free state. There are, there must be, reciprocal duties and rights. Perhaps, the writer concludes, "the disorganization of the Catholic Church in France may result, providentially, in the conversion of new lands to the true faith, but for us Frenchmen the loss is beyond compensation, and the malady beyond cure. Prostrated by war, ruined by financial follies such as the world never saw elsewhere, attacked at the very foundations of vigor and health, demoralized by a long train of miserable political scandals, our poor fatherland has no need to add to its afflictions the agitation, the material ruin, and the moral degradation certain to be engendered by the denunciation of the Concordat and the hatred of the church."—Translation made for the Literary Digest, March 5, 1904.

Are you interested in the Word of Wisdom? If so, read "The Flesh-pots of Egypt" in April Leaves.

GROWING TOLERATION OF THEOLOGICAL ERROR.

The student who considers the present status of theological thought in its relation to the religious temper of past ages can hardly fail to be impressed by the changing attitude of educated men toward such opinions and dogmas as they believe to be erroneous. "The majority of thoughtful and conscientious Americans," a recent writer has said, "whatever their private beliefs may be, regard as of the very slightest importance the question whether a particular man holds a particular creed or not." The same writer, Eliza Ritchie, goes on to say (in the International Journal of Ethics, January):

"Heresy-hunting is an out-of-fashion sport. It is only with extreme reluctance that ecclesiastical authorities interfere, even when the most heterodox opinions are uttered from the pulpit or the platform; while all that the layman asks of his spiritual pastor is that he shall have attached himself to some church, the standards of which are not in obvious and flagrant contradiction to his genuine convictions. The really important matter is felt to be the sincerity of the man himself, and his power to give moral uplifting and spiritual consolation to those for whom he labors; what is his doctrine is of trifling interest to the community compared with what his character and his work are. Dogma is indeed little heard from the pulpits of American churches, and there is often an almost apologetic air about a preacher who ventures to give arguments for or against some theological tenet. He knows that his congregation probably care very little as to what views he holds or why he holds them—they do care for any fresh light he can give them on the social or moral problems of every-day life, but even in regard to these they may disagree with the opinions he utters without in the least deprecating or regretting the utterance. For neither preacher nor people look for unanimity of thought in regard to such things. We give, indeed, often a ready welcome to what opposes itself at first sight to the views we have hitherto held, just because the novelty is an attraction and serves as a mental stimulus, and we have come to concede, as though it were a right, to every new idea, however slender its real claim to consideration, the 'liberty of the floor.'

"If it is asked on what grounds this seeming indifference of serious-minded people to the presentation and diffusion of their own religious beliefs can be defended, it may be answered that its justification rests on the existence of the feeling, more or less consciously recognized and avowed, that the conception a man forms in regard to things of the Spirit are of a directly and intimately personal nature, and that, therefore, they can not and ought not to be valued by others by reference to an impersonal and objective standard. Theology, if in any intelligible sense it can be called a science, is certainly at the farthest remove from the exact sciences. Neither Catholic nor Protestant, Unitarian nor Calvinist, Theist nor Pantheist, Supernaturalist nor Atheist, has ever been able to establish on rational grounds or by logical methods the certainty of the fundamental assumptions on which his faith or unfaith rests, though each can readily enough detect the inconclusiveness of the arguments for a rival creed. The spread of knowledge has made it almost impossible for any sensible man to claim that his own or his church's apprehension of things human and divine is 'the truth' for every one. However tenacious his hold on those salient conceptions which seem to him all-important, and which for him may be all-important, yet he has found by experience that his fellow men have avenues of approach to the spiritual which are closed to him. This does not mean that truth is unattainable and the search for it a vain thing, but it does mean that it is no man's exclusive property, nor can one ever exhaust its concrete fullness of manifestation, since each man apprehends it only in his inevitable relation to the nature and development of his own soul."—The Literary Digest, February 13, 1904.

MORMONS NEGOTIATING FOR HALL.

The Mormon Church of Utah is negotiating with John Haas for the purchase of the city hall. John says that he will sell if he gets his price. In view of the fact that the Mormons purchased the old Carthage jail, where Joseph and Hyrum Smith were killed, it is natural to suppose that they also consider the spot where the city hall stands hallowed ground, as the temple stood partly on that ground. It is significant that the Mormons want to become owners of property here—land that they were compelled to almost abandon fifty-seven years ago. If they buy with the intention of improving it they will be doubly welcome.—The Nauvoo Independent, February 27, 1904.

THE MOST DEADLY POISON KNOWN.

For some time past prussic acid has been considered to be the most deadly poison extant. Mr. Lascelles Scott, of Little Ilford, England, however, has now discovered a far more deadly poison—the substance scientifically known as di-methylarsine cyanide, or more familiarly as cyanide of cacodyl. Three grains of this substance diffused in a room full of people would kill all present, so powerful is it. So deadly is this poison, that it is highly dangerous to handle it. It is a white powder melting at 33 degrees and boiling at 140 degrees. When exposed to the air it emits a slight vapor, to inhale which is death. Mr. Lascelles Scott has experienced the deadly nature of this poison, for while he was assisting Sir B. W. Richardson in the compilation of his work "On the causes of the coagulation of the blood," he tried its effect upon animals. One millionth part of cyanide of cacodyl in the atmosphere of an air-tight cage, killed a dog almost instantaneously, and then its power was by no means exhausted, for a second, third, and fourth dog placed in the same cage, instantaneously died from the effect of that single infinitesimal dose. Although so little of the properties of this poison is known, it was first made many years ago. Cadet, the famous French chemist, by combining acetate of potassium with white arsenic, produced a fuming liquid which, although he did not know it, was oxide of cacodyl. The German chemist Bunsen combined this with cyanogen, a radical of prussic acid, and made cyanide of cacodyl, the formula of which is  $AsMe_2Cy$ .—Scientific American, March 5, 1904.

CATCH FLYING WORDS.

Miracles are not within the power of modern man, but the nearest approach to one in this practical age is the system whereby the proceedings of the House of Representatives are daily reported and many pages of printed matter covering every spoken word of the preceding day's work laid upon the desk of each member of the House every morning. System born of experience, together with able and acute stenographic reporters, and a ramified process through which the result of their labors is turned out in almost miraculous time, is what does the work. Few people realize the amount of work involved and only those who have had reason to investigate appreciate the nicety of the system by which it is done.

Upon the shoulders of six men only falls the responsibility of catching and faithfully reporting every spoken word in the daily session of the House of Representatives. These men, of whom David W. Smith, a veteran of forty years' service, is the dean, hold life jobs and draw an annual salary of five thousand dollars. Four of them are lawyers and the other two have studied law as a prerequisite to their position. They are appointed by the speaker on merit and work only during the sessions of the House. Should a member make a speech an hour long, when he takes his seat half of the speech just delivered is awaiting his revision in typewritten form on his desk. How do they do it?

On the floor of the house directly in front of the speaker's rostrum, stands the main cog in the wheel of their system. He holds a little book upon which he keeps a record of each man's work. When the proceedings of the House begin a reporter steps forward upon the floor of the house. All reports are taken by the reporters standing upon the floor close to the speaker, wherever he may be. This reporter takes down twelve hundred words, sometimes in five minutes, sometimes in an hour. This report takes one column in the Congressional Record when printed.

*

The accuracy of these men is wonderful. "I don't question your accuracy—I fear it," said one member of the House recently upon the floor. The feat is all the more wonderful when it is considered that these men take their notes standing, almost invariably, carrying a little ink-stand strapped to their left hands and taking all notes with a steel pen. Emergencies arise in which several men speak at once and the number of words which must be taken reaches over two hundred a minute. Never in the history of the present corps has a record been questioned. Congressmen sometimes revise their speeches as to phraseology but questions of fact as to the accuracy of the reports have never been raised. Within half an hour after their speeches are concluded they have the whole before them for revision.

At seven o'clock each evening the government printing office opens. An hour later hand compositors have the speeches "set up," proofs are taken and when wanted are sent to the residence of the congressmen for further revision. Special messengers do this work. Long before morning the Congressional Records, to the number of several thousand, are struck off the government printing presses and are in the mails ready for the first delivery by carriers in Washington. The Congressional Record is one of the most perfect newspapers published, typographical errors rarely if ever occurring.

An example of the splendid work of the combined departments of publicity in the House occurred during the closing days of the last session. The House convened at ten o'clock in the morning and continued in session until after four o'clock the following morning. One hour before adjournment the Congressional Record went to press with the full report of the proceedings up to that hour. A few minutes after adjournment an "extra" went to press containing the concluding proceedings, and at eight o'clock that morning there lay, in the post-office, ready for distribution by carrier, the complete report of the long session, which had ended only four hours before. No other deliberative body in the world enjoys such a perfect system of reporting as is accorded the House of Representatives.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

---

Japan's Debt to Us.

"What was the greatest service rendered Japan by the United States?" I asked Mr. Takahira, Japanese Minister to the United States, writes I. F. Marcossin in the World's Work.

The Minister leaned forward in his chair, his fingers nervously tapped the top of his desk. He said: "It was the United States, represented by Commodore Perry, that opened the Empire of Japan. No other nation but an Anglo-Saxon nation could have done it so well—so auspiciously—for there is no civilization like the Anglo-Saxon civilization."

Mr. Takahira took a pen from his desk and, pointing to it, said: "The Japanese believe that the civilization represented by the pen is greater than all the civilization represented by the sword. Education and literature were the keynotes in the awakening of Japan."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Are We Ready?

In the Autumn, as we go strolling through the woods, a feeling of peace and sadness steals over us as we see the many leaves lying dead at our feet, which only a few weeks ago were green and alive; and we can not help but think that a few more days, weeks, or years, as the Lord may see fit, and we may lie in death's cold embrace. Life is uncertain, but death is sure. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." We know that we must die sooner or later. Are we fitting ourselves for this great change? I hope so, but am afraid some do not think seriously enough on this subject. If we knew we were to meet our heavenly Father next week would we not make this one of the best weeks of our lives? We would try to live a life worthy of imitation, would we not?

Now why not live every week as though it were the last? Do not prepare to die, but prepare to live, for if we are prepared to live we need not fear to die. Just stop and think how terrible it would be if we should stand before the judgment bar of God, and should hear the words "depart from me, I never knew you." But how grand and glorious it would be to hear him say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter ye into my joy and sit down on my throne!" What greater or grander reward can we ask than he has promised if we but live for it? And he does not ask anything of us but what will make our lives pleasanter and brighter here in this life, if we but look at it in the right light. We are all happier when we are trying to keep God's laws and commandments and living good, pure, honest lives, for then we have clear consciences and can meet anybody face to face.

We do not realize here what it really means to lose eternal life, but when we get there and see what we have missed just for a little pleasure here in this life, we will see too late that we have wasted our lives and therefore can not expect any reward.

What a sad awakening for us. Why not awake now before it is everlastingly too late, and put forth a greater effort and try harder to earn the reward which we all would like to win, and which we will enjoy more knowing that we have earned it? I for one can not think of any better place to prepare ourselves for the new life than in the Religio and Sunday-school. How much there is to be learned there if we but take the interest that we should in the work. If we ever expect to reach perfection now is the time; we must make use of every minute. The Lord says, "My yoke is easy and my burden light," and he also says he will not send upon us more than we can bear. That should encourage us to go on in the work; then when we are gone, we will be remembered by those who knew us as being loving, kind, and charitable, for "to live in the hearts of those we leave behind is not to die."

DANDELION.

Going Home.

What a most comforting thought it is to know that each day we approach nearer and nearer to that beautiful home, the paradise of God, the home he has prepared for all who love him! Is it not grand to contemplate this going home?

Death—there is no death for those who are prepared to go. Only the sleeping here to awaken then to the new and the eternal, where there will be no more weary struggling.

Indeed it is grand, this calling home and the removing of that which prevents our seeing into the future! Why should we regret this passing away when we know we will go to rest, sweet rest, and meet our loved ones who are awaiting our coming? Then shall we see the mysteries of the hereafter; shall see and know the infinite power to whom our prayers have been made. Shall perhaps know of the wondrous plan of Him who rules above.

And then we shall rest as does the infant upon its mother's breast, and with him shall dwell all those who love him. With him will be those who have faith, hope, and love in their hearts, a part of God himself. Then shall "we see as we are seen, shall know as we are known; when the mists have passed away."

We are only passengers here waiting for the coach to take us home, and there we will find a generous welcome. Those who are prepared to go, go rejoicing; and those who are not, go with fear and trembling. God pity such.

And may we when going home leave no memory of wrongdoing; for after we are gone there will be no returning. Give us hearts to do right and eyes to see wherein our duty lies, that dying or going home, our thoughts may be of love and faith instead of vain regrets.

PAULINE.

Listen to the Children.

We must not only be ready to talk to and advise children, but also to listen while they talk, says a writer in Good Housekeeping. Give the same attention as to your most welcome guest. Often some little incident of the day related starts a conversation quite broad and impersonal, and I am amazed at the grasp and reasoning of the mind of my son, not yet six, on the whys and wherefores and right and wrong of things. Have I not reason to hope that the talks we have now, truly "heart to heart," will help him to consider and decide for the right in after-years? The acts and conversation of grown persons seem oftentimes coarse and defective when judged through the eyes and ears of a child. I have to be constantly making excuses to my boy for what he sees and hears. I am trying to develop in him the power to consider the character of people, and right and wrong. Both girls and boys need this equipment.—Selected.

Dear Readers of the Home Column: If I will not be intruding I would like to pen you a few lines. The Column has been and is a comfort to me, giving me strength at the right time and in the right direction. I am not a member of the Daughters of Zion Society and do not know that we have one here in Fall River, though I heartily indorse it and think it is grand.

I feel as though I am a "shut in," having two small girls, one two and a half years old and the other nine months old. I feel as though I am one of the very weakest among the Saints. I delight in reading the Sunshine Column in the Hope and feel that Sr. Fannie I. Morrison is doing a noble work. May the Lord bless and strengthen her.

For some time I have desired to write to the "Fold" in the Hope, but have not found the time. I attended Sunday-school last Sunday while husband was away at conference in Providence, Rhode Island, and went in my little girl's class. The teacher and little tots sang a very pretty song. The chorus is something like this:

"He is always near us
In the night, and in the day.
He will bless and cheer us
When to Him we pray."

To-day the words and music came to my mind and I sang it. My little girl looked at me in a serious way and as I finished she said, "Dat's my lesson." You see, she knew her teacher sang that.

Wishing you God's blessings and praying that I may be faithful to the end, I am
Your sister,

FALL RIVER, Massachusetts.

H. A. SHAW.

Prayer Union.

Mrs. J. S. Carter, of Des Moines, Iowa, desires to be remembered in prayer by the Prayer Union and the people of the Church. Her trials are heavy and she feels a confidence in the prayers of the Saints.

Mrs. Minnie Engstrom, Salina, Kansas, requests prayers for herself and her young baby. Both are quite unwell and are not able to be administered to, there being no Saints there but herself, her father, and mother.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

Field-Work.

After closing our work in California, we went direct to the Utah District where we expected that provisions would be made for work. But circumstances were such that no provisions were made except the opportunity to be had at the district convention. This consisted of one day for both Sunday-school and Religio conventions with an entertainment at night. However, business was put through in time to have an hour in the afternoon for institute work. And this was about all we accomplished in the district, for we were taken suddenly sick and were confined to our room for about ten days. We were very kindly provided for while there and all was done that could be done for our comfort and needs, and we shall not soon forget the thoughtful care of the Saints while there. We had also planned to spend a week in the Idaho District and the Saints there had provided for two two-day conventions in one week which we would have delighted in attending, but it was not to be. We are always willing and even glad to work hard and put in all the time possible where there seems to be a demand for it and an interest shown in it, and thus it was there. They had set their conference and convention dates to suit my convenience, and had arranged for conventions at two points in the district so as to accommodate those who could not attend where the district conference was to be. And besides this there was some local school work arranged for. But we regret to say, we were not able to fill any of them. We trust that the opportunity may yet be afforded us to visit the district and do the work that those in charge are so anxious to have done.

As soon as we were sufficiently recovered we started for home, stopping over Sunday at Salt Lake City, where we endeavored to occupy the pulpit once. We arrived home March 16, thus ending our western tour, in part successful and other parts disappointing. But we are hopeful.

What the Sunday-School has Done for Me, and What it Can Do for Others.

(Read before Little Sioux District Convention.)

Numerous as are the institutions for good, I can think of none having the scope and powers of the Sunday-school. There are lodges and societies for the old and middle-aged, leagues and endeavors for the young, but where is the society for children, the buds of promise? There is none that I know of, save the Sunday-school. That does the work of all, for there you will find white haired veterans and mere babes, youth and maiden, and those in all stages of life. Its lessons are profound enough to interest the old and wise, bright enough to hold the attention and arouse the interest of the young and world-loving, simple enough for the babes who love the story of the Christ child.

In churches and other places of moral training, the class distinction is more noticeable than at Sunday-school. The pews are always occupied by the same inmates, the social position of its occupants being shown by the position and adornments; while the poor sit back nearer the door, feeling out of place indeed, even though in their Father's house. But at Sunday-school the little street urchin in tattered garments may nestle down in his corner of the recitation room, quite unnoticed by all save his vigilant teacher. There their minds may wander from their appearance, as with eager watchfulness they listen to the story of the "Babe in the manger," the "lost sheep" or the "Baby Moses." The brightness of the Sunday-school will draw the street boys, when they dread the thought of church, and they can better understand Bible stories when told by the teacher who brings her ideas down to their immediate need, than they can the sermons however simple.

WHAT HAS THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL DONE FOR ME?

It has taught me the truthfulness of the words just written. When but a child, a minister's child and of course never approaching a shadow of riches, I used to go in my plain little garments to Sunday-school feeling that I had just as good a right there as my other richer little classmates, and I had an idea that I was like the lost sheep,—when absent Jesus was looking for me, and when I returned the angels sang with joy. It was a delightful little fancy, but I loved to indulge in it. And scarcely a Sunday morning came but found me in my place at Sunday-school. But how I dreaded the long sermons, and how I wished they wouldn't talk so loudly! As I grew older the lessons learned at Sunday-school made the sermons more intelligible to me, and I learned to enjoy them too.

THE LESSONS I LEARNED

in those Sabbath hours have proven of inestimable good to me. They fed my soul while young upon the pure, lovable traits of Jesus, instilled within me a never fading picture of the children Jesus loves, taught me how to spend the Sabbath and why it is a sacred day.

What is it doing for me now? It is a part of my very life, now; I live in it and enjoy it as essentially necessary to life. Without it I feel lost, unsatisfied, and the Sabbath day seems misspent. It causes me to study my Bible which it taught me to love. It unfolds to me the things I must do to gain eternal life. I can not imagine how little I would have known, had I not known the blessings of a Sunday-school. It has taught me the attributes of a true Christian and instilled into my heart a longing to add to my faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience. It has filled me with a desire to teach others the gospel story, and to be of usefulness to my God. It has taught me that I can be of usefulness if I try, and that there are duties belonging to me, besides simply attending church and Sunday-school. It has helped me to be kind and charitable to those who are bearing the burden that must rest upon willing shoulders. When the current from the pleasure-loving world seems almost sweeping my flickering sparks of faith away, I go to the house of God, and after spending a quiet hour in the humble performance of the duties that belong to me, I go forth again, strengthened in faith and with renewed hope and trust, and a clearer conception of what I ought to do.

WHAT CAN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL DO FOR YOU?

It can help you just as it helps me, and more, if you apply yourself more to its service than I have done. If you are weak it will give you strength; if you are doubting, it will fill your soul with trust; if you do not know what you ought to do, it will make your path clearly visible. It will create in your heart a deep and tender love for Him who loves and blesses you each day; it will lift you up and make you a brighter, happier boy or girl, a truer, nobler man or woman.

ALICE HYDE.

The Bible the Most Popular Book.

"The two largest Bible societies in America and England put out last year nearly ten million copies. It is a remarkable thing that no concern engaged in printing this book has failed, though there was some agitation a few years ago to form a Bible trust. The prices have been declining for years, and the cost of manufacturing has in some particulars advanced. The output of the Oxford Press is twenty thousand copies a week. This edition is always in great demand; forty thousand sheets of gold are used in lettering the copies, and the skins of one hundred thousand animals for binding are used every year."

No sales of any book approach the yearly sales of the Bible. It sways increasing scepter. It is the Book of God.—Selected.

How Religious Instruction Pays.

Two hundred and fifty years ago Northampton, Massachusetts, was considered away out West. Its settlers had more concern about the training of their children than the disposition of town lots or the beautifying of the place. The first thing they did was to plant a school and church in their midst, and provide the best for their development. They then put a religious impress upon the community which it could never shake off. For seven generations Northampton has borne their mark, and only on the heaven side will all of what those earnest pioneers did be known. Ten years ago an interested investigator found the following inspiring information as he searched the history of the town: "The State and nation have received from Northampton 354 college graduates, besides 56 graduates of other institutions, 114 ministers, 84 minister's wives, 10 missionaries, 25 judges, 102 lawyers, 95 physicians, 101 educators, including 7 college presidents and 30 professors, 24 editors, 6 historians, and 24 authors (among whom are George Bancroft, John Lothrop Motley, Professor W. D. Whitney, and J. G. Holland); 38 officers of state, among them 2 governors, 2 secretaries of commonwealth, 7 senators, 18 representatives; 21 army officers, including 6 colonels and 2 generals; 28 officers of the United States, among them a secretary of the navy, 2 foreign ministers, a treasurer of the United States, 5 senators, 8 members of congress, and one president." How is this for a city which, in 1890, when this matter was looked up, had a population of less than 15,000?—New Century Teachers Monthly.

Letter Department.

YALE, Illinois, March 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: As I have just looked over the list of missionary reports in last HERALD and have seen my name enrolled among the workers, I was made to rejoice because my lot in life is cast with such a noble band of men—all workers in the great army of the Lord and all subject to the rules of the great leader and captain of our salvation. While our names are found in the records here upon earth, we should so walk in this life that they may be retained upon the records kept in the book of life. Christ is our leader and we are called to follow him and to eliminate everything that is not right, and as he is rich with great blessings to bestow upon us we should not become exalted in our own estimation in this warfare, but we should march steadily onward with an eye single to the glory of God and all will get the same reward when this life with its labors is ended.

The Lord says in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38: "See that ye love one another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires, cease to be idle." Dear brother in the ministry, we are commanded to do all these things and if we observe the command to love one another it will be easy for us to do the balance. Love is the fulfilling of the law and I feel this burning principle in my heart for all of my fellow laborers in the vineyard. We are told to walk in love as Christ also hath loved us and he that loveth not his brother abideth in death. If we see a brother who has not this love we should pray for him that he might have life. Our work is a mission of love and by this shall all men know that we are his disciples, "if ye have love one for another," said the great Leader. This principle will increase in the Church as we approach nearer the coming of the redeemer and for that reason we should increase in love for each other that we may be like him. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4 says, "And no man can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."

Our late conference at Springerton was good and the Sunday-school and Religio workers were strengthened and encouraged in their work. The prayer and sacrament service was excellent and uplifting to the Saints, especially to the writer, and I have been greatly blessed during the year. We have many noble Saints in Southern Illinois with whom it is a great pleasure to be associated, and I find them ready and willing to aid the missionary with their means, and I hope they may be prepared to dwell in the land of Zion when it is redeemed. I ask the blessings of the Lord upon all with whom I have labored in the past and that we may be prepared by righteous lives to live together in peace when the Savior comes. May the love of God and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all, is my prayer.

In the faith,

F. M. SLOVER.

BROOKLYN, New York, March 25, 1904.

Bro. Joseph Smith: Since the formal opening of our new church the atmosphere in this "city of churches" has been considerably cleared so far as our position as a church is concerned,—not only in this city, but also in Norwalk, Connecticut, where there is a branch of our Church, as I have just received the Evening Sentinel of South Norwalk, containing an excellent article from the pens of Bro. William Hobson and Elder A. E. Stone, setting forth our position as a church so clearly that "he that readeth may understand." Never before to my knowledge has there been such an opportunity in the East of presenting our claims to the people as now, and we hope to continue the good work until the honest in heart shall hear the angel message.

Apostle F. M. Sheehy was with us at the opening of our new chapel and we had the extreme pleasure of hearing him stand forth and give utterance in the defense of our glorious gospel. He did nobly and made matters clear to the public. Three preaching services were held on the Sabbath day, Apostle Sheehy occupying the pulpit on each occasion. There were reporters from the different papers present at each service and a large advertisement was given in every paper. Some dealt fairly and represented us well while others did not, but as a whole it was fair and we are indeed glad, as we now stand in a better light before the people. We hope it will be the means of bringing some into the Church, and it has surely brought some out to hear what we had to say, who would not have come had it not been published, to such an extent. Some come for curiosity's sake and are so interested that they even want to come again because there seems to be "something to it."

Much has been said regarding our work, "but we are here to stay and do all the good we can," and so we are quoted in the press. May God bless the work and help us to stand strong in defense of the same.

Yours in the work,

227 McDougall Street.

JOSEPH SQUIRE.

PERSIA, Iowa, March 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have just closed a short series of meetings four miles southwest of the above place. I baptized one more yesterday, which makes ninety-seven the past year that I have baptized and many more are near the door of the kingdom in this district. I start home this morning to Independence to see loved ones. This closes my labor in this district for this year.

Bro. J. C. Crab has been with me the past week and I enjoyed his company. He started Thursday for Conference.

I desire to say good-bye to my brethren and sisters of the Little Sioux District for this year, and I pray that God will bless you all. Let us all be faithful to the end, and please except my thanks for your kindness to me the past year.

W. A. SMITH.

To Homeseekers.

March 21, 1904.

Editors Herald: Now and then we receive letters out here from brethren across the lines who desire description of localities and to know where there are Saints that they may come here and accept of the great land offers of the Canadian Government. I am not a land agent exactly whose postage is paid on his correspondence, but I shall state a few facts if permitted through the HERALD which may reach all inquirers within the circle I aim at and save considerable private correspondence.

First, while we have a government over here second to none in the world, I would advise you not to come here if you have a good home in the States. Again, I would advise you to stay where you are if you have nothing and a wife or family to support. If you are a single man and can pay your fare, come on. A homestead costs you ten dollars to begin with and you are required to put up a shack, reside thereon not less than six months in the year for three years, and break ten acres a year. Having executed this faithfully you get your patent, then your land, one hundred and sixty acres, is yours to reside on, sell, or give away at your option.

A man can hire out here for thirty dollars a month, more or less. If you want to homestead the best time to come is in the spring. If you have a family you ought to have several hundred dollars to build a house, buy necessities, and support yourself till you get a crop. Bring your horses with you. Mules are preferable if you have them. Furniture and implements are high-priced, all made far away. So I would say, bring all you can. Take this into consideration, however, that most farm implements are made larger than elsewhere—to cover as much more ground as the people have more land. A man who has a family, unless he has enough money to stay where he is, should come in advance of them, locate, and prepare the way.

There are Saints in different parts of the territories. Any of them would be too glad to have you come and would willingly assist you in all they could. People do not mind a meal here like they do in the starving, avaricious cities, where they always like to come out in the country to smile and eat but do not want you to come back. I must say that I have not been far around in the territories yet and can not speak experimentally. Where I am, are Saints, W. C. Toovey and family. They came last spring. Near here is much land to homestead and land yet unsurveyed. People have to burn coal as there is not a shrub to be seen over a vast plain without trees and fences, unless it be clear, when a ridge is visible twenty or thirty miles away, where there is also homesteading. Prairie here is somewhat undulating, like a petrified sea, when snow-clad. There are also Saints to settle at Disley, near Regina, in Assiniboia, in the spring. A brother there, James Vennard, would answer correspondence. There are a couple of other settlements about thirty miles from where I am of which I can not speak,—unvisited.

Some preachers take up a quarter when they come out here. I do not know that I will submit myself to any such entanglement. I want to preach and baptize and distribute tracts till the job is done—or I am done—and if I behave myself I will always have enough and it is only a hog that wants more. J. L. Mortimer, my colaborer, now in Alberta, if addressed at Owen Sound, Ontario, might furnish addresses of Saints in those regions.

In coming to this virgin, untilled west to till, I should say it is a matter between having no home at all or putting up with some hardships, some discomforts, for a short time, till a few big crops lift you above the surging tide of poverty. There is some risk to run, for sometimes the crops are destroyed by frost or hail. About fifty thousand Americans came over last year who for the most part made good citizens. Boys come here with nothing and in a few years can return and buy their fathers out. Do not expect too much if you come. An Irishman defined homesteading thus: "You put up ten dollars and the Government puts up one hundred and sixty acres against it that you can't make a living on it for three years. If you win you get the one hundred and sixty acres." Many people here have sod houses. Next to me is a house—or a building—with horses, hogs, hens, man and wife, all under one roof. There is nothing like sociability. People have learned to stay where they are when a blizzard comes up, whether in or out. If they're out they can not get in, and if they're in they can not get out. Many have a small variety of food, but lots of it. About all they can do in the winter is to eat, pray, and read, and do a few chores. Some get discouraged at first reversal and leave, others like it better than any they have seen. Suit yourselves, brethren. I have no patriotic anxiety to settle the west of my country.

At present I am storm-bound. So is the Methodist preacher ten miles distant who preaches here, and my finger is in his pie.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

WEYBURN, Assiniboia, North West Territory.

COOKESPOINT, Texas, March 30, 1904.

Saints' Herald: Since the Utah Mormons have been confessing that they were guilty of practicing polygamy for many years, I have read the newspaper reports closely and of course thought much upon the subject. It has occurred to me that from a legal standpoint there is not a polygamist in Utah; at least none of those who confessed they were, are polygamists. The reason I say so is because each has taken but one legal wife. None of them has ever procured a marriage license from a legal officer to marry a second wife; and as the law does not recognize a marriage unless a man procures a license from a legal officer and they (man and woman) be married by a legal officer, I can not see how a man can be convicted by law for having two or more wives, when he has not been married legally to more than one. The law of the land does not consider the marriages that the Utah people enter into in the endowment compartment of their temples as a legal marriage. In fact they are not marriages at all according to the law of the land. So I can not see how they can be convicted and punished for having two or more wives when they have not, from a legal standpoint, but they may be convicted and punished for cohabiting with women as concubines. I would like to hear from others upon this subject.

Yours for truth and justice,

E. W. NUNLEY.

CANBY, California, March 19, 1904.

Editors Herald: We are striving to keep our Lord's commandments as best we can. We have not been to a Lord's meeting for some time, as there is no place of gathering nearer than twenty-five miles. There are two other Saints here on the swale, Sr. Locey and son. We receive the blessings just the same and I want to relate one or two testimonies I have received.

When we were first married I had a sick spell; one night my back hurt very much. I had slept very little all night. So I had my husband get the oil (there were only a few drops in the bottle), warm the bottle over the lamp, had prayer and applied the oil. In a few minutes all pain had left and I was asleep.

I had scarlet fever the following summer, and had two ulcerous sores in my throat. Mamma made a throat-wash, but it hurt so that I quit using it. Another sore appeared, and on Sunday my husband went to Big Valley after Brn. Cannon and Barmore. They came in the afternoon, and administered to me. I was not able to sit up then, but the next morning all sores were gone and I began to get better.

Now is that not enough to make a person believe in this great and marvelous work? What is the use of belonging to a church if there is not a higher power than man at the head? Trusting in the Lord and trying to keep his commandments, and asking the prayers of all the Saints,

Your sister in Christ,

KATIE GUTZMAN.

LENORA, Oklahoma, March 22, 1904.

Editors Herald: While I feel I am not advancing in the work as fast as I would like to, yet I feel a desire to serve my heavenly Father. My prayer is that I may so live as to set an example before those whom I may see and meet. I have had many trials since coming to this country, but am still trying to live worthy of the name Latter Day Saint.

It is a little dry in Oklahoma now, but this is a good country.

There are a good many poisonous reptiles here. I wish to mention a little incident that happened in our home last summer. One evening about eight o'clock, while doing my chores, my little girl came running to me and said my son had been bitten by something. I hastened to the house and found him in much pain and as usual before retiring to my bed we knelt in prayer, and I thought of the blessed promise the Lord had made to his children; and while offering prayer I was wonderfully blessed with the Spirit of the Lord. I asked him to remove this pain from my son and before I arose to my feet I knew the Lord had answered. May his blessings ever attend us.

Your brother in Christ,
C. L. ARNEY.

BELLFLOWER, Missouri, March 22, 1904.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I spoke through the columns of the "dear old HERALD." It is a most welcome visitor. I recollect that about two years ago I was in Oakland, California. It was Sunday and I was a stranger in a strange land. I looked up the Saints' card in the morning papers and found the location of the chapel, and away I went alone. Sad, half doubting, I asked the Lord who was right and to answer me that night.

I knew none and was early at the chapel. Presently a good natured man who was afflicted with goiter came in and sat down. He had a traveling-bag. Therefore he was a man on a mission, and after the announcement was made this man took the stand. His text (how beautiful God's answer to my prayer a few moments before!) was, "Except God build the house they labor in vain who build it." I have never doubted from that day.

I am a very weak vessel at best, but I hope to live to see that eternal city. I can not expect much, because I have not done much. And, dear editor, should you know of a child of God who is sick or who is in doubt through want, I will divide my daily wages with him.

W. H. YOUNG.

SHEFFIELD, England, March 14, 1904.

Editors Herald: It may not be out of place for me to say a word or two of the condition of the work in the Sheffield District. I have not forgotten that it is my privilege, and as a servant of the Church my duty, to write you from time to time, of the progress of the work. But the struggle in this part of the world (especially in the city of Sheffield) has been of such discouraging character that I thought I would refrain. The old adage says, "No news is good news." There is no doubt that we all like to write good news, but there are different kinds of goodness. We may be doing a good work for the Lord, although we may not report many or any baptisms. To baptize souls into the Church is truly a noble work. But to convince and convert either saints or sinners of the error of their ways, and to infuse the Spirit of divine light and life into their hearts and lives is a much better and nobler work still.

One of the signs of latter days, is to be the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom. The duty of the ministry is to preach this gospel, which is God's plan and power of salvation, and calls upon all men everywhere, both inside as well as outside the Church, as follows: "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed, by the renewing of your minds." The gospel will help us to do this; that is why God has revealed it to mankind. Spiritual development is what is most needed, more of the divine and less of the human. We are exhorted to press on to the mark of our high calling, until we attain the measure of the stature of Christ Jesus our Lord in righteousness. May the Lord bless his people with that heavenly wisdom, that they may choose the good, refuse the evil, thus keeping the perfect law, which will preserve us from evil and sin.

Strange as it may appear, it is nevertheless the fact, that the great trouble we have to battle against here is that people have been baptized without having a proper knowledge or understanding of the gospel. I have been told by some who are now numbered with the Church, that they were not baptized because they were converted to, or convinced of, the truth, but because it happened to please some friend or party for the time being. Such being the case, how can we expect a soul to be truly born again under such conditions? Even if they enter into life at all, their existence is short and miserable and full of trouble to themselves, the Church, and everybody else. This condition of things never ought (with proper oversight) to exist in the Church of Jesus Christ. Are we not commanded to observe certain conditions in regard to those who shall submit themselves for baptism? Why, yes, truly. The Lord commanded the Church as follows: "All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins shall be received by baptism into his church."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7.

Thus we are commanded to-day, and it may help us just to refer to the manner in which Jesus commissioned his disciples in sending them forth: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the father, . . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." "Teach them." Yes, disciples, teach all nations. What shall we teach them? Teach "them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded." Then unless we do this we can not fulfill the commandments.

Some of the things that we should observe and teach as recorded in the seventeenth section are as follows: The condition of candidates for baptism: They must be humble before God; must desire to be baptized; must come forth with broken hearts; must witness before the Church; must have truly repented; must be willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ; must have a determination to serve him; must manifest by their works that they have received the spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins. Such shall be received by baptism into the Church. If we (the Church) had been more careful and prayerful in times that are past, we might have seen better fruit. The word says that what we sow we shall reap. We can quite understand the promise of the Master, that so long as we teach the people and help them to observe all things whatsoever Jesus commanded, the promise of being with us until the end of the world will be realized.

We long to see the time come round when it will be the common experience of every member of the Church to receive the gifts and blessings of the gospel. If the spirit in man is the candle of the Lord and man is to receive the light or illuminating power (which is the Spirit of God), then how needful that we should be careful to please the Lord. Jesus said, "He that sent me is with me, for I do always those things which please him." To the rich young man Jesus said, "If thou wilt enter into life keep the commandments," or abide in my word. The Psalmist gives us his testimony in these words: "The entrance of thy word giveth light," and Saint John says, "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ God's son cleanseth us from all sin."

I would like to say that I believe the visit of our worthy Presidents, Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans, was a source of great comfort to all the Saints in this country. Personally, I am pleased to have been privileged to see and hear my brethren. And I firmly believe that the work done by them will be felt for a long time to come; some of the most pressing needs of the mission will be known to them, and thus they will be better able to provide for the furtherance of the work here.

I do think the coming summer will be a brighter one for our work in these lands. I may also say with safety that, God being willing, we shall put forth a stronger effort, so far as our district staff is concerned, and much more of the missionary spirit will be felt and enjoyed, according to the present outlook at least.

On February 28, by invitation, I filled the pulpit in the Free church at Stone Edge, about five miles from Clay Cross, both afternoon and evening. The weather was very wintry, and there were not many out, but we spent a very pleasant season with them, made friends with some, and we hope to pay them the next visit shortly. Thus we sow,—who shall reap? We know not, but labor on.

We pray that you may be blessed in the coming conference at Kirtland. Brethren, remember us. Still hopeful,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

13 Blakeney Road, Crookes.

STONINGTON, Maine, March 22, 1904.

Dear Herald: The Reed Smoot matter is causing a good deal of talk by the Maine people over the religion of the Latter-Day Saints, and quite a number of articles and squibs are published in the papers. While we have to shoulder a good deal of unpleasantness because of a misconception of our position on the part of many, nevertheless it is quite gratifying to note that in quite a number of cases there appears something in our favor in the way of pointing out the difference between the churches. It is to be regretted that the ministers are slow to let the truth get out,—even denying that there is any difference of any account. Some question their honesty and some question their dishonesty. This much is sure: so long as they can make our Church appear disreputable in the eyes of the people they are saved the undesirable job of satisfying the people as to the doctrine from a Bible standpoint. They may save themselves some trouble in this generation, but there is one coming in which their ministry will have to meet the real issue.

The Reverend Russel Conwell in the accompanying clipping from the Bangor Commercial of March 11, says if the church is to live we must come back to the first teachings of Christ. What an acknowledgment to make before the world! What have they been teaching all these years that it is necessary to leave and get back to the teachings of Christ? Joseph Smith told us something like that seventy years ago. I am inclined to think, however, that coming back to the teaching of Christ, while being life to the individual, will work not only death but annihilation to the Baptist Church, which he says is getting smaller all the time. I could sincerely hope that Mr. Conwell and his brethren might get back to the teaching of Christ, but somehow I do not feel very apprehensive of a tremendous influx, right away, of reverend gentlemen into the church where the teaching of Christ is taught and practiced. While his words do not seem to be challenged by his brethren, we must not forget that the Baptist Church is a large body, and, as a rule, large bodies move slowly. It is a good deal easier for Mr. Conwell to say, "We must come back," than to get the great body to do it. He could set them a good example, however. He perhaps could not be convinced just now that coming back to the teaching of Christ would bring him in closer relationship with us, but it is certainly a hopeful sign for the future of the Temple Baptists of Philadelphia that their celebrated teacher has made such an important discovery and has the moral courage to announce it upon the very housetop of their denomination. May the Lord bless him and his flock.

I have succeeded in getting quite a lengthy article into the Bangor Weekly Commercial, one of the largest papers of Maine, explanatory of our attitude in the Smoot matter. Also gave an advertised discourse upon it from a chart arranged for the purpose in the church at this place.

There seems to be a desire in the East that our president should be in Washington at the next investigation that the lines of demarkation may be more clearly drawn. With confidence in the final triumph,

Your coworker,

H. J. DAVISON.

PORT HURON, Michigan, March 16, 1904.

Dear Herald: I rejoice to say that I am still a Saint and striving to be faithful to my covenant which I made about two years ago. I must say that I am truly enjoying this gospel and the blessings which are in it, though I have my trials and weaknesses to overcome. By the grace of God I am daily striving to leave off my sinful ways.

I have been in this city for some time, but I have been able to assemble with God's children's and enjoy his Spirit. I would ask your prayers when it is well with you that I may ever have God's Spirit to lead me and that I may live worthy of the blessings that are in store for me. My prayers are for all God's children that we may work together in love and do all that our Father desires we should. Remember me as one in this glorious gospel.

JENNIE M. CAMPBELL.

REDMOON, Oklahoma, March 20, 1904.

Editors Herald: Our last conference year has been a good one in this mission, but we see brighter prospects for the year just beginning.

To-day will ever be a sunny one in my memory, as I had the pleasure of baptizing my eldest daughter, Cicely, and of blessing my baby girl Ardyce. I also baptized two other little girls, children of the Saints here. We enjoyed a spiritual prayer service at half past three in the afternoon when those baptized were confirmed.

Bro. S. S. Smith and the writer just closed a series of meetings about thirty miles northeast of here. Our Baptist friends tried hard to break up our meeting last Sunday at eleven o'clock in the forenoon by usurping the hour to use in singing. Bro. Smith asked them how long they intended singing. They insultingly replied, "Until we get tired." Turning to the audience Bro. Steve explained that we claimed the hour by previous appointment; whereupon an old Baptist brother arose, flourishing a stick of stove wood in one hand, and grasping a revolver in the other (so we were afterward informed,) and ordered Bro. Smith to sit down. He was seconded with much emphasis, by another man, but Bro. S. still held his ground, and contended that he had the right to occupy. Then the Baptist preacher rose and declared himself an officer of the law, and ordered Bro. Smith to take his seat. He said he had come there expecting trouble. Some one else of their number called out for the ladies to retire and "let us fight it out." They seemed to be having things their own way, when I took out pen and paper and began noting down their names, and, fearing an investigation, the ring leaders hastily left. Their hangers-on soon followed and we were left with a good audience, to whom Bro. Smith preached a good sermon. We held service again there in the evening, the house full and the writer occupying. The episode won friends to our cause among the best people of the community.

I don't wonder that our Baptist friends tell us that the Comforter came only to those of the Apostolic age. They surely are not actuated by it at present.

Bro. Smith and I start Wednesday for a trip by team through Day, Woods, Woodward, and Dewey counties.

I was not a little surprised at Bro. Hilliard's letter in late HERALD, wherein he commends the Seiling Saints for building their little chapel, but discourages church-building when he speaks of the brick church at Guy, which I am credibly informed cost no more money, and the branch there is considerably larger. I think the Saints at both places deserve much credit for their effort to secure a place of worship and I agree with Bro. Hilliard in the matter of expensive houses of worship being built, away from Zion's land.

I am informed that a Campbellite preacher at Freedom, Woodward County, is very eager for a debate. We will therefore call on him, ere visiting any other points on this trip.

We regret not being able financially to attend the Conference at Kirtland. May God abundantly bless those who go, and comfort those who are obliged to remain at home.

HUBERT CASE.

POMONA, Missouri, March 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am still alive and in the field of the Lord, doing all I can to move the great cause of Christ on to victory. I have baptized eleven dear souls into the kingdom of God since my report to the Church Secretary, March 1, and still the calls come for me to the rescue of the work. Five of those baptized were in Wright County and six here at Pomona. The Baptist deacon was among those baptized in Wright County, he and his wife.

I go from here to West Plains to look after the work there. I did not get to attend our district conference this month, but have been busy all the time.

Hoping and praying for the coming General Conference and the onward march of Zion's train,

JAMES DAVIS.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. J. L. Mortimer writes from Namao, Alonta, Canada: "I wish to say to the Saints of Manitoba and the North West Territory that we are in need of more men to help on this great work. Would you be so kind as to send all your tithing to Elder R. C. Evans, Bishop's agent, 474 Adelaide Street, London, Ontario, and show to those in authority that you are doing your part to have the gospel preached in this part of the Lord's vineyard. I find that many of those who come from the States send their tithing back where they came from, and it does not make the right kind of a showing. Let us take the good Lord at his word and pay our tithing, for he says if we will do so, he will rebuke the devourer for our sake. Yes, he can cause the great hail-storms to pass by, also the frosts, which lay so many of our crops low. Come, let us return to God, and he will return to us and will open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing that there will not be room enough to receive it. He also says, 'Prove me now herewith.' Now if we can not trust the Lord with temporal things, how can we trust him for the salvation of our souls? Let us put our shoulders to the wheel of righteousness and do our very best to have the gospel of Christ flourish in this great northwest field."

Miscellaneous Department.

Conference Minutes.

New South Wales.—Conference met at Broadmeadow, Newcastle, December 26. Every branch was represented. Bishop George Lewis presided, W. J. Haworth, assistant; A. H. Ford, secretary; A. A. Ferrett, assistant secretary. Visiting members not delegates were privileged to participate in all business, except voting on yeas and nays. The president read the following mission appointments, made by the missionary in charge: G. R. Wells, Sydney district; A. C. Barmore, Brisbane; P. M. Hanson, North Coast, New South Wales (Tuncurry to Laurieton); Charles Avery, from Laurieton to Nambucca; W. J. Haworth, Newcastle district till March first, then, Geelong, Victoria; D. E. Tucker, in charge of New Zealand, till his return to the United States of America next September; R. W. Hall, New Zealand; J. H. N. Jones, Adelaide; William Mackie, Melbourne District. The following of the ministry reported: C. A. Butterworth, J. W. Wight, G. R. Wells, W. J. Haworth, A. C. Barmore, P. M. Hanson, George Lewis, C. Avery, E. J. Haworth, J. Thompson, A. Seaberg, W. Clark, J. Dickenson, T. Gregory, J. Leberherz, C. A. Davis, S. G. Wright, F. Whaler, G. Stewart, A. Leberherz, and E. Davis. Statistical reports of branches: Hamilton, 94; Balmain, 173; Wallsend, 48; Tuncurry, 111; Wallsend report returned for correction; also the Balmain report. The Gospel Standard report was read: Balance 1902, £9 7s. 2d.; receipts for 1903, £61 11s. 2½d.; total receipts, £70 18s. 4½d.; expenditures, £59 3s. 7½d.; balance 1903, £11 14s. 9d. This report was referred to the auditing committee. Resolved 1st:—That the office of district clerk be now divided into two separate offices, viz. (1) district secretary, and (2) district recorder. Resolved 2d:—That the district secretary's duties shall be those enumerated in the Book of Rules, and the office be filled at the same time as those of district president and vice-president. Resolved 3d:—That the district recorder's duties and term of office shall be the same as the General Recorder's, he being sustained from time to time by the usual vote of confidence, and his tenure of office continuing during good behavior or until relieved by death or resignation. Resolved 4th:—That Bro. C. S. McLaren, of Tuncurry, be elected district recorder under the foregoing provisions. It was then moved that this conference invite the cooperation of the Victoria district and the Brisbane Branch with a view to appointing a mission recorder. Carried. Bishop Lewis nominated the following brethren to act as members of the Board of Publication for the ensuing year: W. J. Haworth, G. R. Wells, John Jones, and William Mackie. These nominations were confirmed. The history of the matters concerning the protest against the rebaptism of H. Broadway in England, and the conditions upon which he was subsequently rebaptized was then presented to the conference and read. This was adopted as a report of the former officers connected with the protest and spread on the minutes as a history of the case. A communication was read from the missionary in charge, presenting on behalf of Bro. H. Broadway, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, a proposition to this district to pay the sum of £3 10s. to settle the matter held against him by the district. This report was received and spread on the minutes, and the secretary was directed to inform Bro. Broadway, through the missionary in charge, that, "When he is willing to recognize the agreement made with Brethren Griffiths and Rushton on the eve of his rebaptism, in which he agreed to pay the sum of £14 10s. if the general church authorities found that he owed it," the district will negotiate with him. Bishop Lewis nominated W. J. Haworth to fill the vacancy made by the death of James Imrie, as his second counselor. This choice was ratified by the conference, subject to the concurrence of the Victoria district. The accounts of the bishop's office and the Gospel Standard were found correct by auditing committee and report was adopted and committee discharged. At Sunday afternoon meeting John Jones, of Dudley, was ordained an elder; A. H. Ford, of Merewether, a priest; and J. Cornelius, of Dudley, a teacher. Bro. G. R. Wells gave notice that at next conference he will move to reconsider the rule requiring two months' notice for certain business. A district tent fund was started, the same to be managed by the bishopric, and the money thus collected to be supplemented by what may be spared from the united building and tent fund, with a view to purchasing and maintaining one or more tents in the district. The election of district officers resulted as follows: C. Avery, president; P. M. Hanson, vice-president; A. H. Ford, secretary; A. A. Ferrett, of Sydney, assistant secretary. The following delegates were chosen to General Conference: John Kaler, J. Luff, A. H. Smith, L. A. Gould, and J. W. Wight, those present to cast the full district vote; and, in case of a division, a majority and minority vote. The next district reunion was set at Easter, beginning with Good Friday, and Balmain was selected as the place. The next district conference was set for December 31, 1904, to January 2, 1905, at Wallsend.

Spring River.—Conference met at Webb City, Missouri, February 26, 1904; I. N. White and J. T. Davis presiding; T. S. Hayton secretary, Maud Einstein and A. H. Herke assistant secretaries. Reports were received from the following district officers, missionaries, and ministry: J. T. Davis president, F. L. English, assistant president, F. C. Keek, missionary, I. P. Baggerley, J. T. Riley, W. E. Westervelt, J. A. Davis, W. H. Smart; branch presidents, J. L. Lancaster, J. T. Riley, T. S. Hayton, W. S. Hawkins, W. S. Taylor, Otto Baumgartel; Elders J. M. Richards, J. W. Thorpe, J. L. Lancaster, T. S. Hayton, O. Baumgartel, W. H. Howitt, Stephen Briggs, F. S.

Christie; Priests William Kirk, W. E. Hillen; Teachers J. L. Powell, G. M. Rhonemus, Charles Kayser. Branch reports: Joplin, Fairland, Angola, Pleasant View, Columbus, Webb City, Pittsburg, Galena, Miami, Traverse. District treasurer's report: Receipts, $20.19; disbursements, $7.15; on hand, $13.04. Committee reported and adopted in favor of ordination of Bro. A. C. Greer to office of elder. It was resolved that we petition the General Conference to be held at Kirtland, Ohio, to include in the Spring River District the following counties in Missouri: Barton, Jasper, Newton, McDonald, Lawrence, and Barry; and also the following counties in Kansas: Crawford, Cherokee, Allen, Neosho, Labette, Woodson, Wilson, Montgomery, Greenwood, Elk, Chautauqua, Butler, and Cowley, and all that part of Oklahoma and Indian Territory lying east of Arkansas River and north of the thirty-sixth parallel of latitude; also Benton, Washington, Carroll, and Madison Counties in the state of Arkansas. It was further resolved that at the time of adopting and ratifying this petition by the General Conference all former resolutions conflicting with these boundary lines be annulled. It was also ordered that Bro. I. N. White present the foregoing resolution to the General Conference. A petition was received from Galena Branch for ordination of Bro. M. T. Beck to office of priest, and it was ordered that district president and missionary in charge consider and attend to the same. The petition of the church auxiliaries department to occupy Friday evenings preceding Saturdays of conferences in future was granted. It was decided to hold the next district reunion at Berrys Ferry, Indian Territory, to begin August 19, 1904. The conference appointed Brn. J. T. Riley, W. B. Hillen, George Rhonemus, Briggs, and Smart to act as committee in charge of arrangements for the reunion. It was decided to hold next conference at Joplin, Missouri, beginning Friday, June 17, 1904. It was also ordered that Bro. George English conduct the singing service of the conference. The following were appointed to act as delegates to General Conference: Brn. Westervelt, J. T. Riley, F. C. Keek, I. N. White, William Kirk, W. S. Taylor. It was ordered that the district purchase the literature and books left by Bro. Frick. District officers were sustained. Bro. A. C. Greer was ordained by J. T. Davis and E. E. Short to the office of elder.

Convention Minutes.

Idaho.—District convention met March 11, 1904, at Malad City, at 8 p. m. and rendered a real interesting temperance program. March 12, at 10 a. m., business session, Sr. J. A. Condit presiding, assisted by Elder S. D. Condit. Sr. Sarah C. Jones was chosen secretary pro tem and as organist, J. E. Vanderwood was chosen chorister. Schools reporting: Malad, New Hope, Cedrine, Badger, and Hagerman. All officers reporting. Officers elected: Sr. J. A. Condit superintendent, Anna E. Vanderwood assistant superintendent, Elias E. Richards secretary, Lars P. Larsen treasurer, Elias E. Richards librarian. Resolution was passed that the funds raised by each school for the purpose of securing a library, be used to purchase books for the school that raised the funds. Delegates appointed to the General Convention at Kirtland: Delia Jones, W. S. Pender, S. D. Condit, A. J. Layland, and Sr. Martha Jones. Resolved that the delegates present be authorized to cast entire vote of district. Papers on different subjects were read, and followed by general discussion. Adjourned to meet at the place and the day previous to the next district conference.

Conference Notices.

Western Maine conference will convene at Stonington, Maine, May 28, 29. All reports and letters for conference should be sent in before conference care of A. S. Colby. It is expected that the officials will report. J. J. Billings, president.

Died.

RICHINS.—Ellis Alexander Richins, born at Pleasant Grove, Utah, March 20, 1903. Died March 17, 1904. Buried in the Pleasant Grove Cemetery on the 20th, Elder A. M. Chase officiating in the funeral.

HALL.—Joseph Clarence Hall, born in Salt Lake City, Utah, March 25, 1903; died March 21, 1904. Buried in the City Cemetery the 23d inst. Funeral from the house, Elder A. M. Chase officiating.

VANBEEK.—At Davis City, Iowa, March 21, 1904, Bro. George D. Vanbeek, aged 89 years, 1 month and 12 days. He was born in Philadelphia, February 9, 1815; united with the Church there about 1840 and continued in the gospel hope and in his integrity. He served in the Second United States Artillery through the Civil War. In 1877 he heard and accepted the Reorganized Church as the successor of the original of 1830. His wife and six sons and daughters survive him. The Davis City Post of the G. A. R. acted as escort and bearers. By his request Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached his funeral sermon.

AHLSTRAND.—Sven Ahlstrand was born in Otustad, Sweden, March 24, 1838, and married to Amelia Charlotte Backland, May 12, 1856; came to America in 1862, and settled in Omaha in 1886. He united with the Church in 1886, lived a Christian life to the end, and died March 15, 1904, and was buried from the Saints' church in Omaha, March 17; sermon by Elder J. F. McDowell, assisted by James Huff. He leaves an aged wife, one son, and friends to mourn.

REESE.—Bro. William Windsor Reese was born September 21, 1859, at St. Louis, Missouri; baptized September 27, 1867, at Dry Hill, St. Louis County, Missouri. He was married to Sr. Jessie Anderson, at Pleasanton, Iowa, in 1882. Five children were born unto them (two boys and three girls), three of whom are living, and with two sisters, left to mourn. He departed this life at Chicago, Illinois, March 15, 1904. Funeral services at the residence of Bro. William Anderson, March 20, in charge of Bro. D. C. White, J. R. Lambert being the preacher. He was laid away in Rose Hill Cemetery by the side of his wife, who preceded him three years.

SCARBOROUGH.—At Magnolia, Iowa, Martha R. Scarborough, born August 9, 1864, in Cecil County, Indiana; married to Elisha Mahony July 17, 1879; died March 14, 1904. This marriage has been blessed with fifteen children, fourteen of whom are still living, the oldest being twenty-three, and the youngest a babe. She leaves father, mother, three sisters, two brothers, husband, and children to mourn. Funeral preached by J. C. Crabb.

HASKIN.—Near Oland, Harrison County, Missouri, March 19, 1904, of erysipelas, the infant son of Bro. and Sr. Ernest Haskins, aged eight months and eleven days; funeral services conducted by Elder Hugh N. Snively. Remains were laid to rest in Andover Cemetery.

EMPEY.—Maria Empey, born in Osnabruck, Canada, June 24, 1816. She married Nicholas W. Empey, September 15, 1834, at Osnabruck, Canada. Died March 13, 1904, buried March 15, 1904. She was a life member of the Church, having been baptized into it before the death of the martyrs, and joining the Reorganized Church at an early date. She died in the faith.

DAVIDSON.—Violet V. Davidson was born January 11, 1903, at St. Joseph, Missouri; was blessed June, 1903, at Blue Rapids, Kansas by Brn. Trombie and Gowell. On February 14, she came with her parents to visit grand-parents, Bro. John Y. T. and Sr. Laure Davidson, at Arkansas City, Kansas, where she contracted measles which turned to pneumonia, and from which she died March 8, 1904. She was buried from the home of her grand-parents, and her grave is in River Side Cemetery. The sermon was by Elder W. Vickery March 9, 1904. A sweet flower taken from the evil to come. Lord, comfort the broken-hearted parents.

HOGUE.—Emma Case Hogue, of consumption, at her home at Blenco, Iowa, December 21, 1903. She was baptized by Hubert Case, July 15, 1894, confirmed by Joseph Seddan and Hubert Case. She was born at Mondamin, Iowa, July 23, 1871. She leaves to mourn Senator E. L. Hogue, her husband, three children from five to twelve years of age, a father, mother, two sisters, and six brothers, among them are Hubert and Oscar Case, missionaries. One child, a little boy of eight years and six months, died two years ago. About that time her health began to fail and she never recovered. All that loving hands and money could do was done. While she was isolated from the Church of her choice, not a member in the town where she lived, her life was such that it gained for her the confidence of her neighbors. Not a complaint was ever heard during her suffering, and when she realized she must go, she calmly made arrangements for her burial and funeral. Her requests were carried out as far as possible. Her remains were laid to rest in the Blenco cemetery to await the resurrection of the just. Funeral preached by J. M. Baker, December 22, in the Advent church to a house packed with sympathizing friends and relatives. Thus ends the life of one of God's dear children.

MORANT.—Hay George Samuel Morant was born December 26, 1862, at Ringwood, Hampshire, England, died at his home in North Platt, Nebraska, March 18, 1904. He came to this country about twenty-one years ago, and was married to Miss Jessie Richards of North Platte, September 17, 1899. Mrs. Morant and one of their two children are left to mourn. He was baptized about seven years ago near Maxwell, Nebraska. Funeral services at the residence, March 20, by Elder C. H. Porter. The elaborate, beautiful, and costly floral tributes testified of the esteem of friends. Beautiful and appropriate music was rendered by a quartet from the Presbyterian choir.

PRICE.—Mrs. Elnina Price was born July 11, 1833, in Date County, Missouri, and died February 20, 1904. When about eleven years old, she with her parents moved to the vicinity of St. Joseph, Missouri, in 1848. She was married to Pleasant Thomas; to them were born twelve children, of whom five remain. In 1893, she was married to J. D. Price, of Troy, Kansas, in this city, by J. M. Terry; was baptized in 1897 by John Arthur Davis at Fanning, Kansas, and has lived a faithful Christian life and beloved by many. Funeral in charge of William Lewis and A. W. Head. Was laid to rest in the beautiful Ashland cemetery.

WILLIAMS.—Infant son of Joseph B. and Mary J. Williams. He was born April 29, 1903, and died January 25, 1904, at Runnels, Iowa, the home of the parents. Sermon by Elder S. F. Cushman.

SANDS.—At Kansas City, Missouri, February 22, 1904, Bro. William S. Sands, aged 63 years. He died at the home of his niece, Mrs. Gertrude Hornes, who cared for him during his sickness. He was a good man and rests in peace. Funeral sermon at Eyer's Hall by Elder F. C. Warnky assisted by Elder R. Winning.

WHEELER.—Joseph Wheeler was born March 9, 1833, at Gravely, Cambridge, England; baptized August 19, 1860, at Gallands Grove, Iowa, by Uriah Roundy; died at North Ogden, Utah, March 9, 1904. As a member and elder of the Reorganization he was faithful unto death.

STERRITT.—Theodore Hosea Sterritt was born September 4, 1902, at Pleasant Grove, Utah; died March 12, 1904. Funeral services were from the home of the parents, Bro. and Sr. William Sterritt, Pleasant Grove, Utah.

CADWELL.—Phineas Cadwell was born in Lenox, New York, April 17, 1824, and died February 26, 1904, at Logan, Iowa. He was the youngest son of Colonel Ebenezer Smith Cadwell and Sarah (Clark) Cadwell, both ancestral lines tracing back to Puritan stock. He attained a common school education and taught one term of school. At the age of eighteen he went to the territory of Wisconsin and settled on a farm in Racine County, west of Racine, and was married October 7, 1845, to Harriet Newell Fiske by whom he had seven children—four of whom survive him, viz., William C. Cadwell, of LeRoy, Kansas, Edgar F. Cadwell, F. Henry Cadwell, and Harriet P. Tyler, all of Logan, Iowa. He likewise was survived by thirteen grandchildren and five great-grandchildren, besides a brother, Barzilla Cadwell, of Crystal Lake, Illinois, aged 83 years, and a sister Mrs. Philinda Adams, of Neosho, Missouri, aged 76. His first wife died September 1, 1891, and on May 15, 1892, he was married to Mrs. Eleanor Snyder, who survives him. He remained in Wisconsin till 1854 when he removed to Harrison County, Iowa, where he lived nearly forty years; then removed to Burlington, Kansas, remaining till 1901 when he returned and settled in Logan where he continued to reside till his death. He was reared in the faith of the Congregational Church, but about the time of Joseph's and Hyrum's death, he investigated the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints, and becoming convinced of its divine claims was baptized by John E. Page at Racine, April 14, 1849. Becoming doubtful later of the standing of Page as an authorized minister of the true Church he was baptized again August 29, 1859, by James M. Adams and confirmed by Elders W. W. Blair and E. C. Briggs; subsequently he was rebaptized by John A. McIntosh into the Reorganized Church. Was ordained an elder March 5, 1870, and chosen counselor to David H. Smith, president of the second quorum. When David was chosen counselor to the First Presidency in 1873, he was elected president of the second quorum which position he continued to fill till 1878, when he was called to the high priests quorum and remained in good standing in the same till his death. He was president of the Magnolia Branch for many years and for several years of the Logan Branch, and was long a counselor to the presidency of the Little Sioux District, and for some time Bishop's agent for the same. He was one of the organizers of the United Order of Enoch and was one of the principal movers in the relocation of the headquarters of the Church at Lamoni, being one of the committee appointed by conference to investigate the claims of the several localities that aspired to become the Church headquarters. With President Joseph Smith and others he visited David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, and saw and examined the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, and was witness to Whitmer's unchangeable testimony to the truth of the latter-day work, the divine mission of Joseph Smith, and of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. He was recognized not only by the Church but by the world as a leader among men. He was for about twenty years a director of the Iowa State Agricultural Society, for about the same length of time president of the Harrison County Agricultural Society and served one term as representative from his county in the Iowa Legislature. On November 13, 1901, he was stricken with paralysis at his home at Burlington, Kansas, and relinquishing his life-long avocation as a farmer he returned to his old Iowa home at Logan, where he gradually declined in strength and vigor with the approach of his fourscore years and passed peacefully away full of years and a consciousness of a well-spent life. The funeral was held at the Logan chapel on Sunday February 28, and the body laid to rest in Silver Prairie Cemetery on one corner of his old homestead, by the side of the wife of his youth and his children gone before. Elder Robert Chambers preached the sermon from Thessalonians 4: 13-17; and Timothy 4: 7, 8, assisted by Elder Charles Derry.

LOWE.—At Plano, Illinois, Thursday, March 24, 1904, Sr. Mary Evans Lowe. She was the daughter of Elizabeth and Riley Marshall, and was born in Randolph County, Indiana, February 14, 1825. Married to Doctor John H. Lowe, October 20, 1859. They moved to Sandwich, Illinois, in 1859, lived there one year, and moved to Plano where they resided till they were called home. They had seven children, one of whom is now living, Mr. William R. Lowe, of Chicago, Illinois. She leaves two brothers. Sr. Lowe united with the Church in the year 1866, and lived and died a faithful and consistent member, and has gone to her rest in the full assurance of a glorious resurrection. Funeral services at the Saints' church by Charles H. Burr, assisted by E. M. Wildermuth. Interment at the Pratt Cemetery by the side of her husband and four children.

CALVIN.—Emma, at Fiskville, Rhode Island, March 6, 1904, of pneumonia, after an illness of ten days. She was born January 30, 1834, at Compton Dands, Somershire, England. Baptized August 8, 1886, by Elder Joseph Burton at North Foster, New South Wales. She moved to the United States about eight months ago. She leaves a husband (Alonzo Calvin) to mourn. Having been faithful to the last her spirit has passed into the realm of the blessed as was her hope and for which she lived in faith. Sermon by Elder George H. Smith assisted by Elder R. Bullard.

FIELDS.—Martin C. Fields was born November 8, 1870, in Marshall County, Kentucky, and while a small boy moved near Fulton, Kentucky. When near manhood he obeyed, the doctrine as taught by the Christian Church, but later, learning by an honest, prayerful investigation, that more light and liberty with all the spiritual gifts and blessings of the gospel as in days of old, was taught by the elders of the Reorganized Church he obeyed the gospel in its purity. Was baptized September 22, 1900, by T. C. Kelley, and confirmed by T. C. Kelley and C. L. Snow; died March 22, 1904, after several years of suffering from consumption. He leaves a wife and three small children. We miss the dear brother, but God knew best. May we all ever say, "Thy will be done."

The Traveler
Who contemplates a trip to Colorado, Utah, California or the North west should know that

The Denver & Rio Grande R. R.
widely known as "The Scenic Line of the World," has more scenic attractions than any other route across the continent, traversing as it does the Rocky Mountain Region through Royal Gorge, Canon of the Grand River, Glenwood Springs, Marshall Pass, Black Canon, Castle Gate, and the world-famed Salt Lake City. Its three through daily trains are equipped with the latest improved cars of all classes. Its dining car service is unsurpassed. For illustrated pamphlets address

S. K. HOOPER, G. P. & T. A.
Denver
Colo.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

"She Wants to Tell."

Sr. M. E. Webber of Queensboro, Ontario, Canada, writes January 12, 1904, saying: "Dear Brother:—I want to tell you how pleased I am with your Quit-to-bac. My brother used less than two boxes and has not touched tobacco since he began to use it and has gained in flesh and is better in every way." If it cures others, why not you? Three boxes sent post-paid for $1.50 with positive guarantee of cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.
Address, (Bro.) E. F. Ordway, 228 Hancock St., Peoria, Ill., U. S. A.

INDIAN BEAD WORK.

This fascinating work will be very popular this summer. Neck chains, fobs, belts, and other useful and fancy articles can be made with these beads. The work is very simple and pleasant by following patterns. On receipt of $1.00 will send the following, charges prepaid: One Bead Loom, two bunches beads (about 1,000 beads to bunch), one Pattern Book with 50 designs in colors to book. Extra beads per bunch 20 cents. State color preferred. Remit by post-office order or registered letter to

W. S. MALONEY, STEPPVILLE, KANSAS.
P. O. Box 3. 11 r4t

MANUSCRIPT FOUND

Has just been reprinted, and owing to the heavy expense of publishing it the price has been raised to thirty-five cents. Mark your catalogue accordingly.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Lamoni, Iowa.

ERRORS AND INCONSISTENCIES CONCERNING THE PRESIDENCY OF THE DOMINANT CHURCH IN UTAH.
207. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100. 60

POLYGAMY NOT A DOCTRINE OF THE TRUE CHURCH OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
203. Per dozen 5 cents; per 100. 35

THE KIRTLAND TEMPLE. Illustrated. The two martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith; Kirtland temple, and President Joseph Smith.
45. Each 5 cents; per dozen. . . . 5

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
LAMONI - - IOWA

SENT ON APPROVAL
TO RESPONSIBLE PEOPLE

Laughlin

Fountain Pen

Guaranteed Finest Grade 14k.
SOLID GOLD PEN

To test the merits of
THE SAINTS' HERALD
as an advertising medium
we offer your choice of

These Two Popular Styles
For Only

$1.00

Postpaid to any Address.

(By registered mail 8 cents extra.)

Holder is made of finest quality hard rubber, in four simple parts, fitted with very highest grade, large size 14k, gold pen, any flexibility desired—ink feeding device perfect.

Either style—Richly Gold Mounted for presentation purposes, $1.00 extra.

Grand Special Offer

You may try the pen a week, if you do not find it as represented, fully as fine a value as you can secure for three times the price in any other makes, if not entirely satisfactory in every respect, return it and we will send you $1.10 for it, the extra 10c. is for your trouble in writing us and to show our confidence in the Laughlin Pen—(Not one customer in 6000 have asked for their money back.)

Illustration on left is full size of Ladies' style; on right, Gentlemen's style.

Lay this Paper Down and Write NOW
Safety Pocket Pen Holder sent free of charge with each Pen.

ADDRESS
Laughlin Mfg. Co.
153 Griswold St., DETROIT, MICH.

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS, 1852 to 1900.
197. Paper. . . . . 5
198. Cloth, limp. . . . . 3

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
Lamoni, Iowa.

BANKING BY MAIL.

WRITE US AT ONCE

If you have any money deposited on which you are not receiving interest.

WE PAY 5 PER CENT INTEREST.

The COMMERCIAL BANK, Lamoni, Iowa.

INFORMATION WANTED

Of John Godin. He was born in Italy, and was last heard of in South Dakota, and went from there to Texas. His family wishes information concerning him. Any of the Saints knowing of his whereabouts, please inform Bro. John Avondet, 1315 California Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE. A dictionary and alphabetical index to the Bible, with a concordance to the apocrypha, and a table and concordance of the proper names of the Bible.
206. Cloth . . . . . 1 50

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.
Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

White River Mining & Development Company

Mountain Home, Ark.

Photographic Views tell the Story Completely

On receipt of postal card, with name and address written plainly, we will send a copy of our Illustrated Report to any address. This Report shows the entire development of the Company's properties at Graceland, also an inventory of the merchantable goods on hand January 1, 1904.

Joseph Ward, Sec.

Mountain Home, Ark.

MINISTRY BLANK REPORTS.
209. Per dozen . . . . . 10

The Saints' Herald

New Book
 B

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, April 13, 1904

Number 15

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH }
 FRED'K M. SMITH } EDITORS
 Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
Kirtland Items - - - - -	337
Selected Articles:
Recent Press Reports - - - - -	338
Religio Convention - - - - -	340
General Sunday-School Convention - - - - -	342
The General Conference - - - - -	344
Mothers' Home Column:
The Children - - - - -	352
An Evening Musing - - - - -	352
Sunday-School Department:
The General Convention - - - - -	354
Letter Department:
Letters - - - - -	356
Miscellaneous Department:
Places of Worship - - - - -	357

Editorial.

KIRTLAND ITEMS.

"Our Utah Trip" gives way this week to General Conference proceedings. It will appear later.

One of the disadvantages of having several standards of time in a community was illustrated at the opening session of the Religio Convention. The time was set for half past two; but owing to the fact that "sun time" is just between Eastern and Central time the watches of the gathering delegates differed greatly, and long before the appointed time people were in the building wondering why the session was not opened. However, the time was not entirely lost, for "Zion's Praises" were distributed among the congregation, and with Sr. Alice Garrett at the organ, and following Bro. F. G. Pitt's capable baton, the audience spent several minutes singing from the new Sunday-school song-book.

Evidently Bishop Kelley's advice to "come early" has been well taken, for when the Religio Convention opened the north and central sections of the main auditorium of the Temple were quite well filled. It was noticeable that many of the ministry were present. They had "come early"; whether they will "stay late" remains to be seen.

The Religio delegates from the London District, Ontario, were conspicuous in the Convention by reason of the red badges worn by them. The badges bore legends announcing the bearers were Religians from Canada, London District.

In the song services of the Religio Convention the selections were all from the new song-book, "Zion's Praises," and its beautiful songs seemed to be enjoyed by the audiences, judging by the hearty zest with which all who could joined in the singing.

The attendance at Conference has exceeded expectations, and the Kirtland homes are taxed nearly to the limit, in caring for the Saints. The hotel is a busy place. Under Bishop Kelley's supervision it has recently been greatly improved in equipment and furnishings, and very little complaint about the accommodations is heard. A large portion of the visitors is eating at the hotel, and though the task of feeding them is an arduous one, especially at the noon hour, yet universal good nature seems to be the rule, and everything goes pleasantly, and every one gets plenty to eat, though at times he may have to wait some time to get it. Waiting in a good-natured crowd is not irksome after all.

So large is the attendance at this Conference that the capacity of the Temple is taxed to accommodate the ministry, delegates, and visiting Saints. It is quite apparent to all that our conferences have grown to such large proportions that it is inadvisable to hold these conferences at other places than at headquarters. Besides, it is not at all businesslike to take our conferences away from the records. To be sure, these disadvantages are put up with good-naturedly, and that is really remarkable when we remember that the times have passed when it is necessary to suffer such disadvantages. We have good accommodations which lie on railway lines, and more commodious buildings. Whether or not the Saints will consent to having the Conference again taken from headquarters, remains to be seen; but we trust that in this and all future conferences the voters when the votes on where to take the conferences shall be taken will vote from business judgment, not from sentiment. In our judgment the only place to hold our General Conferences is at the headquarters. What think you, reader?

One thing which is made objectively clear at this conference is that methods in use when the Church was very much smaller can not be successfully employed to-day. It should teach us that our conferences are too large and too important to be retarded and hampered by perpetuating some of the customs of the days when time was not such a feature.

On yesterday Secretary Salyards informed us one hundred and eighty-five railway certificates had been presented to him. Add to this number the ministry who have come on clergy rates, and quite a large number of others who have come on special rates, and we have some idea of how many are in attendance. Sr. Devore yesterday told us that more than three hundred and sixty had registered in the Temple register, "and not all have yet signed."

This morning several more Saints reached Kirtland, among them being Bro. and Sr. N. C. Enge, just returned from Norway. They appear to be in good health.

A number who have never visited Niagara Falls are trying to arrange an excursion there, to see the hydraulic wonder of the world.

At yesterday's session the table was cleared; but very few quorum reports are in yet, and some of the latter are likely to contain matters which will take much time to dispose of.

One of the most oft-propounded questions heard among the delegates and ministry is, "How do you stand on the College question?" It is apparent there is much opposition to Graceland, and an attempt to close it will undoubtedly be made. So says rumor, anyway. What the outcome will be we can not tell, but we have confidence in the wisdom of the body. Graceland has some earnest and able defenders who will not see the College close without a fight. We trust good will come from the controversy. Graceland's fate will be determined at this conference.

At the close of yesterday's business session Patriarch Smith gave the audience some fatherly advice concerning our conduct in general, and especially cautioned against the appearance of levity within the Temple. When assembling in edifices dedicated to the services of God we should remember where we are and dignify our conduct accordingly. His words of caution were well received by his hearers.

Kirtland is doing nobly in accommodating the crowds of visitors. As we see the daily augmentation we wonder how it is being done. When we remember that the population of the town is temporarily doubled, then we marvel at the ability of the citizens to care for visitors.

When the question arose yesterday as to where conference would go next year, Lamoni was the only place considered. The vote to go to Lamoni was unanimous. We trust it is an indication that the fact is recognized that our conferences should be held at headquarters only.

The various quorums all seem to be busy, nearly all holding sessions in the forenoon. Take it with quorum meetings, committee work, and business sessions, some of our men find much work to do. Conference is to them something more than a pleasure and visiting trip. Indeed, it is quite strenuous.

The prayer-meetings are of a character to please the audiences. Short, concise testimonies seem to be the order, and the tiresome long ones are not heard. We are glad our people are learning to compress their testimonies.

The sermons so far have been well received, being of a general character. The speakers seem to be avoiding controversial subjects. This is wise. There is so much of good, uncontroverted good, that speakers can, if they are so disposed, "feed the flock" in a way to afford general satisfaction.

Mr. A. C. Showalter, and Mr. J. C. McNamara, of the passenger departments of the Nickle Plate and Lake Shore roads, have been among us looking after business connected with the railway certificates of visitors. They seemed satisfied with the way they found things.

"Jim" seems to be one of the busiest men in Kirtland. He is Bishop Kelley's "right hand man" for rustling on errands of importance.

Lamoni and Independence are well represented at this conference, their delegations being quite large.

The attendance from the New England States is the largest in years. They seem to be enjoying themselves, and the opportunity for the Easterners and Westerners to get acquainted is being improved. Latter Day Saints become acquainted easily, and pleasant friendships are soon formed. We are glad to to meet our Eastern brethren.

The Canada contingent is large and enthusiastic.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, April 9, 1904.

Selected Articles.

RECENT PRESS REPORTS.

SALT LAKE MORMONS INDORSE PRESIDENT SMITH'S OFFICIAL DECLARATION. OHIO MORMONS WILL FIGHT THE ISSUE.

SALT LAKE CITY, April 6.—The seventy-fourth annual Conference of the Mormon Church came to a close to-day, with two business meetings, morning and afternoon. At their meetings, according to the custom of the Church, the Church leaders, including the First Presidency, the apostles, presidents of the seventies and patriarchs, who nominally hold their positions only from conference to conference, were sustained by the raising of hands in the great open meetings of the followers of Joseph Smith.

To-day is the seventieth anniversary of the founding of the Church in Fayette, Seneca County, New York. The speaker dwelt on the growth and prosperity of the church, which now claims a following of four hundred thousand, with missions in nearly every country in the world. Between ten and twelve thousand people attended the Conference.

A notable feature of the closing session of the seventy-fourth annual conference of the Mormon Church was the official declaration by President Joseph F. Smith on the subject of polygamy. The statement follows:

"Inasmuch as there are numerous reports in circulation that plural marriages have been entered into contrary to the official declaration of President Woodruff of September 26, 1890, commonly called the Manifesto, which was issued by President Woodruff and adopted by the Church at its General Conference October 6, 1890, which forbids any marriages violative of the law of the land, I, Joseph F. Smith, president of the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, hereby affirm and declare that no such marriages have been solemnized with the sanction, consent, or knowledge of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and,

"I hereby announce that all such marriages are prohibited, and if any officer or member of the Church shall assume to solemnize or enter into any such marriage he will be deemed in transgression against the Church and will be liable to be dealt with according to the rules and regulations thereof and excommunicated therefrom.

"JOSEPH F. SMITH.

"President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

This statement received the full indorsement of the church members assembled, who unanimously adopted the following resolution, introduced by Apostle Francis M. Lyman:

"Resolved that we, the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in General Conference assembled, hereby approve and indorse the statement and declaration of President Joseph F. Smith, just made to this Conference, concerning plural marriages, and will support the courts of the Church in the enforcement thereof."

A committee was authorized to take steps toward the erection of a suitable building as a monument to the memory of the prophet, Joseph Smith. Although Utah abounds with memorials of Brigham Young, there is at present not a single monument or building in honor of the founder of the Church.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, April 6.—The fifty-first General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints began here in the historical Mormon temple to-day, with nearly five hundred delegates in attendance. The Conference promises to be one of the most important ever held in the history of the Church, and as a result unusual interest is manifested in its deliberations. There is a strong sentiment among the delegates in favor of making an active fight on the propagation of polygamy.

Much attention will be devoted by the Conference to missionary work of the Church, which has active missionaries in many foreign countries and in all sections of the United States.—Omaha Bee, April 7, 1904.

MORMONS ARE ASTOUNDED.

SALT LAKE, UTAH, April 7.—[Special.]—Consternation reigns among the Mormons who recently have taken plural wives. This is a result of a pronouncement against polygamy by President Joseph F. Smith and adopted by the Church at its General Conference. A large number of Mormons have taken additional wives recently.

It is charged President Smith gave tacit encouragement to this, even performing one plural marriage himself, that of Abraham H. Cannon to Lillian Hamlin Cannon, his brother's widow, on the high seas between San Pedro, California, and the Catalina Island in 1896.

The general belief has been since he became president that he would not only tolerate but protect men and women entering into new polygamous relations. Pronouncement of yesterday declared any person solemnizing, authorizing, or contracting plural marriage would be liable to excommunication.

President Smith and Apostle Francis M. Lyman and others of the Church leaders expressly stated that this was no new thing, but merely a reaffirmation of the former policy.

To be consistent, it is argued, and to give evidence to the people of the nation of good faith, the Church will be forced to let the law take its course against the polygamists and not to shield them as in the past. Already some who are suspected of recent polygamy have disappeared.—Chicago Tribune, April 8, 1904.

CITIZENS OF UTAH PROTEST.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Senator Burrows presented to the Senate to-day protests from more than six hundred of "the law-abiding people of Utah" against the declaration of President Joseph F. Smith of the Mormon Church that they were broad-minded enough to consent "to the shocking violations of law and public decency which he confesses to have committed."

The protests declare that polygamists have surrounded themselves with an impenetrable wall of secrecy in their perpetration of misdeeds, and that the veil has been lifted in part for the first time in the testimony given by Church leaders during the investigation of the Smoot case before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections. The non-Mormons call for a continuance of the investigation and say that further disclosures equally startling may be expected.—Omaha Bee, April 7, 1904.

Religio Convention.

The tenth General Convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society assembled in the Kirtland Temple, Ohio, on April 2, 1904, at half past two in the afternoon, called to order by President J. A. Gunsolley, who was then formally chosen president of the Convention, and Ammon White associate. Wallace N. Robinson was chosen secretary pro tempore.

Credentials committee previously appointed by the Executive Committee reported the following number of delegates: Clinton district, 18; Coldwater, 3; Des Moines, 12; Eastern Colorado, 9; Far West, 41; Fremont, 9; Gallands Grove, 11; Independence, 49; Kewanee, 9; Millersburg, 1; Lamoni, 44; Massachusetts, 22; Nauvoo, 8; Necedah, 2; Omaha, 1; Portland, 2; Northern California, 18; Theodore, 1; Utah, 10. W. W. Smith and D. A. Anderson formed the committee. It was continued and instructions given to hand credentials not already in to chairman of committee.

Bro. F. G. Pitt was chosen chorister, with authority to choose assistant and organists. Matter of ushers was left with presiding officer.

By motion it was ordered that the time of convening sessions be according to local time, or sun time.

By motion the vice-president was authorized to appoint a committee on resolutions of respect. Another motion provided for the appointment of a press committee.

Report of President Gunsolley was read. Progress of Society had been steady. Earnestness and seriousness had been manifest in the work of the Society. The organization had remained the same as year previous. He had attended Rally Day at Independence, and five reunions. Spoke well of the services of his associate president, Ammon White. The importance of the work of the Quarterly was mentioned, also the book soon to be issued, Divinity of the Book of Mormon Proven by Archæology. The committee on publication had done nothing, and the President took the blame on himself. The Nauvoo District has been organized, with four locals. One local had been organized in Alabama, a favorable aspect. He hoped that at this time the Convention might see fit to release him. He spoke very favorably of Graceland College, and urged the Religio to help that worthy institution. He pointed out, too, the possibility of assisting the Church in issuing and translating tracts. The work of districts was touched upon, and the necessity of having representation upon better days of the week than in the past. The work of the various departments was spoken of in encouraging terms. He thought the Home Class and Gospel Literature departments could be made to cover greater scope, and urged that the work of these departments be more persistently prosecuted.

Vice-president White spoke of the work of the Religio at reunions, and urged Religians to participate more earnestly therein, especially in introducing Religio work into the reunions. He spoke well of the assistance rendered Religio work by the ministry.

Miss Louise Palfry, editor of the Quarterly, made report. She spoke of the necessity of having competent revision committee, and also told of the dearth of space in Arena department of the Autumn Leaves. She thought the Society needed a journal, as the Autumn Leaves did not adequately fill the needs of the Religio. She also spoke enthusiastically of the possibilities of the work of the Home Class and Gospel Literature departments.

Treasurer Will J. Mather reported financial condition of Society. On hand last report, $160.27; received, $517.84; expended, $659.85; on hand, $18.26; HERALD Office account, on hand last report, $300.30; received from the Quarterlies, $920.95; expended, $1,401.89; due HERALD Office, $180.74.

A committee was appointed to audit this report and such other financial reports as might be presented. J. M. Baggerly, R. Baldwin, and C. H. Rich were appointed. Financial reports were then read from J. A. Gunsolley, J. R. Epperson, superintendent of Literature Bureau, and Dora Young, superintendent of Home Class department. These were referred as other reports.

Credentials committee made additional report, stating London District was entitled to seventy-one votes. Committee continued.

A committee, Louise Palfrey, J. F. Mintun, and C. Scott, was appointed by the body, to whom should be referred the matter of written explanation of the Executive Committee on revision of the Constitution, as to why they failed to perfect and publish last year. This committee was instructed to report Monday.

The Lamoni Stake Religio sent in resolution to establish fund to be placed in the hands of the Bishopric of the Church, to assist in translating the Book of Mormon into such foreign languages as the First Presidency and Bishopric shall deem wise. This called forth considerable argument, and after considerable time being consumed a motion to indefinitely postpone was made and carried. Only a few minutes remained for business at this session, and a few matters of routine business were disposed of. Committee on credentials made additional report, stating Southern California District was entitled to seven votes.

Committee on resolutions of respect as appointed by vice-president was announced as being J. F. Mintun, D. A. Anderson, W. W. Smith. F. M. Smith was appointed press committee, with privilege to select assistants.

Announcements of several kinds were made, and adjournment had till evening session.

EVENING SESSION, APRIL 2.

At half past seven business was resumed. After the usual preliminaries President Gunsolley announced that Bro. Pitt had chosen F. A. Russell as assistant chorister, and Alice Garrett and Madge Craig organists; that Fred M. Smith had chosen W. W. Smith as assistant on press committee. The following were appointed ushers: Frank Michigan, C. H. Rich, M. Ahlstrand, and George Carter. Bro. Brockway, of Kirtland, was appointed janitor.

Credentials committee made additional report, permitting Eastern Michigan twenty votes. Auditing committee reported they found everything correct.

Resolution from the Independence Stake convention, asking the General Convention for the establishment of a Religio paper, to be issued semi-monthly, was presented. Motion to adopt resolution was followed by some discussion, when a motion was made to refer to a committee of three to report one year hence. After some discussion a substitute motion was made that the Society express to the Board of Publication through the editor of the "Arena" the desire for more space during the coming year. The previous question was ordered, and the vote resulted in defeating the substitute, the defeat of the motion to refer, and the defeat of the motion to adopt.

Committee on credentials reported Chatham District, Ontario, entitled to twenty-eight votes.

A resolution was introduced looking to the establishment of a week in September each year as a Graceland rally week for the purpose of raising funds for running expenses of the College. Action was deferred till Monday.

Announcements were made, the order for Sunday was read, and adjournment for the day was had.

SUNDAY, APRIL 3.

At half past nine in the forenoon Sunday-school was held, in charge of the General Superintendent, T. A. Hougas. The attendance was good, over two hundred being present.

At eleven o'clock the Religio workers gathered to listen to addresses. Sr. Floralice Miller, of Dunnville, Ontario, had been advertized to make an address; but on account of sickness she was unable to appear, hence sent a paper which was read by Bro. R. C. Evans. She told of the growth of the Religio work in Canada, briefly sketching the history of the Society there.

Sr. W. N. Robinson, of Tulsa, Indian Territory, sang a well-received solo, her rich and well-trained voice showing off the good acoustic properties of the building.

Ammon White, vice-president of the Society, next addressed the audience, telling of the practicability of Religio work, speaking of the necessity for educational development as a preparation for our spiritual warfare.

At two o'clock prayer and sacrament services were held, in charge of F. M. Sheehy and T. A. Hougas. The objects and results of Sunday-school and Religio work were spoken of in the testimonies. The meeting was enjoyed by the participants, many of whom came to the services fasting.

At six o'clock a "regular" Religio session was held, in which a typical evening lesson was had. One of the features was the reading of a paper written by Sr. Fannie I. Morrison, of St. Louis, on "Sunshine work." Sr. Morrison not being present, the paper was read by Sr. Gilbert, of Massachusetts.

At eight o'clock the audience again assembled for addresses. The speakers were Sr. Allie Thorburn and Bro. D. A. Anderson. The former told of the work of the Religio in Scotland; the latter spoke of the necessity of a schooling in charity and the faculty of accepting things as they are and making the best of it, recognizing the fact that not all persons see things alike, because of looking at things from different viewpoints.

Between the addresses Sr. Laura Kelley, of Lamoni, rendered a vocal solo in an acceptable manner.

MONDAY, APRIL 4.

At nine o'clock in the forenoon the Religians again assembled for business, and after the usual preliminaries settled down to work.

Credentials committee asked to make correction in their report concerning Eastern Michigan. The district votes should be nineteen instead of twenty.

Etta M. Hitchcock, general secretary, reported. The growth of the Society had been steadier and stronger than ever before. The work is being extended into new countries, and prospects are generally good.

Report of the superintendent of Gospel Literature Bureau was read. The work in that department had progressed and extended even across the waters. He gave statistics as to the amount of literature which had been distributed.

The report of the superintendent of the Home Class department was read. Work had extended into places where no Religio organization existed. Earnest workers had prosecuted the work, and it was proving a boon to the students of truth. She had been well assisted by her associate officer in the department. She saw the necessity of subdividing the field. Much work was being done in the East.

The committee to which was committed the action of Executive Committee upon special work assigned them at convention of 1903 with explanation for the course of action taken by them, reported that they found no time specified in the resolution creating them in which their work should be done and that the work assigned to them to perfect Constitution and By-laws of locals of 1903 had been done.

A motion was made to adopt report, which prevailed.

A motion to publish the Constitution and By-laws of General, District, and Stake Societies as passed by the convention of 1903 with the Constitution and By-laws of locals as published in Autumn Leaves of March 1904, was carried.

The election of officers was taken up, and resulted in the reelection of J. A. Gunsolley as president; Ammon White reelected vice-president; Etta M. Hitchcock rechosen secretary; Will J. Mather treasurer; S. A. Burgess librarian.

Adjourned till eight o'clock Tuesday morning.

TUESDAY, APRIL 5.

At eight o'clock on Tuesday, April 5, the Religio again met for business session.

Report from Honolulu, Hawaii Territory, was read showing enrollment of thirty-one; G. J. Waller, president.

Credentials committee made additional report, admitting D. A. Anderson as delegate from Honolulu.

Special committee on resolutions of respect reported. The resolutions expressing sympathy to the President on the demise of his companion were adopted by rising vote. "The Lord knows why" was then sung by the audience.

The resolutions concerning the union of the Religio and Sunday-school were called up. The resolutions provided for a committee, of which the President should be chairman to investigate and report one year hence. Resolutions adopted. Srs. Louise Palfrey and Floralice Miller were added to the committee. The committee was instructed to publish its findings six months before next convention, in church papers and "Arena" department of Leaves.

Resolutions providing for methods to aid in the support of Graceland College was called up, and a motion to adopt was followed by one to lay on the table. The motion to table prevailed.

A motion to request delegates at next Convention to wear a button or badge to indicate their connection with the Society, was defeated by tabling it.

Resolution asking the indorsement of the work of the Sunshine Band movement, was called up, and adopted.

Another attempt was made to adopt resolutions looking to the establishment of a Religio organ, but it was again disposed of by indefinite postponement.

President J. A. Gunsolley then stated the table was clear. He congratulated the convention on progress in general ways and especially in parliamentary procedure. He was glad to see the general growth being made. He thought our mission was not for self only, but generally altruistic in its scope and tendency. He thought the time would come when the fight between the church of God and the opposing forces would be made on the Book of Mormon, and our young people are being prepared for the fight. He spoke touchingly of the expressions of sympathy which had been extended to him. His faith in God and his work is not shaken,—he trusts still in his heavenly Father. He appreciates the necessity for a trial of faith, even the functions of a denial of asked blessings. A great work, he thought, was going on on the other side, and he took comfort in the thought that loved ones gone before were at work there in ways which will bear results here.

The Secretary was directed to present to the Sunday-school Association the action of the Convention concerning the committee on merging of the two societies.

Adjourned till next year.

General Sunday-School Convention.

The thirteenth annual convention of the General Sunday-school Association convened in the Temple at Kirtland, Ohio, April 4, at two o'clock in the afternoon, Superintendent Hougas in the chair.

The report of the credentials committee being delayed, the organization was perfected by selecting Bro. F. G. Pitt chorister, Bro. Russell assistant. The chair was authorized to choose the ushers.

D. J. Krahl, secretary, was permitted to choose his assistants. He chose J. F. Mintun and Sr. W. W. Smith.

The chair being authorized to appoint a press committee, he selected Frederick M. Smith and W. W. Smith.

The report of Superintendent Hougas was read by himself. He called attention to the fact that the Association was organized in Kirtland thirteen years ago. Besides his regular routine work he had attended various reunions and district conventions in Iowa, Missouri, the South, California, and Utah. He spoke with satisfaction of the special work done by the missionaries. He urged the establishment of a Sunday-school periodical, to be issued monthly at first, weekly later.

J. A. Gunsolley, assistant superintendent, reported, suggesting that the Association take up a course of normal training for the Sunday-schools.

A report was read from A. Carmichael, second assistant superintendent.

The credentials committee made report, which was adopted.

The Secretary made report. The statistical part was adopted, and the financial part referred to an auditing committee. The statistical part showed a prosperous general condition. While some districts have shown a falling off in membership, others have increased so that there is a gain of five districts (Utah and Idaho districts have been divided), forty-one schools, and six hundred and ninety-six in membership, making a total of 53 districts, 426 schools, and 18,818 members.

Treasurer made report. On hand last report, $1708.73; receipts, $3037.73; expenditures, $3515.62; balance on hand, $477.89.

General Librarian reported that work progressing. There are now eleven circulating libraries in different States.

Committee on primary Quarterly made report that its work was accomplished and Quarterly published.

Committee on revision of Quarterly lessons reported it had done work assigned.

General Superintendent reported having had on hand for incidental and traveling expenses, $419.24; expended, $411.77; due Association, $7.87. Referred to auditing committee, as was also financial report of Assistant J. A. Gunsolley, also of A. Carmichael, second assistant. Financial report of Secretary was also referred.

A resolution from the St. Louis school on Sunshine work was read, asking to have Sunshine work made a part of the general Sunday-school work. No action.

A resolution was read from Glen Easton, West Virginia, protesting against Article 3, in Constitution and By-laws. The resolution provided for making the voting age of scholars twelve years, and an absence of one month to forfeit membership. No action taken.

A resolution was read that hereafter the statistical reports be not read in convention, but published in minutes.

A communication from Sr. Emma Burton, Papeete, Tahiti, was read, giving encouraging report of the work in the Society Islands. G. J. Waller reported the Sunday-school work in Hawaii. F. J. Pierce, Leeds, England, made report of the work in British Isles. He suggested that an invitation be extended to the Sunday-schools in the British Isles to join the Association.

A motion prevailed extending the privileges of the floor to visiting brethren and Sunday-school workers.

Adjourned till evening.

At half past seven in the evening the Association again assembled for business.

After the reading of the minutes, the chair named the following as ushers: James Pycok, David Pycok, Herbert Rowlet.

A resolution was presented that special-day programs be provided and published by the Association, so that each school might have at least two such programs each year. This prevailed.

On the suggestion made previously, the Executive was authorized to extend invitation to the British Isles Sunday-schools to join the Association.

The resolution concerning the reading of the statistical reports was called up, and after several subsidiary motions and much discussion, it was lost.

Auditing committee reported Treasurer's accounts correct. Report was adopted.

The same committee reported on the accounts of the officers. Vouchers were lacking, but thought correct. The Superintendent's report was ordered returned to auditing committee. Rest of report was approved.

Adjourned till April 5, at ten o'clock.

TUESDAY APRIL 5.

At ten o'clock Tuesday forenoon, Association reconvened, A. Carmichael in the chair.

After reading of minutes the auditing committee reported they had examined original entries of the expenses of the Superintendent, and found everything correct. Report approved.

The resolutions concerning the Sunshine work, that the Association approve of the work thereof, were called up, and motion to adopt was followed by a motion to commit with instructions to report at next convention. A substitute was offered to the effect that the Society look with favor upon the work done by the Sunshine Bands, and encourage all who are willing to work in same. Substitute lost, and motion to refer prevailed. The number on committee was determined as three, and the committee chosen.

The resolutions presented by the Glen Easton Sunday-school were called up, and motion made to adopt was followed by one to defer till afternoon session.

Suggestion of the First Assistant Superintendent as to the normal course of training for Sunday-school teachers was taken up, by motion. A motion was made to appoint a committee of three, J. A. Gunsolley to be a member, to formulate a plan and report next year. This prevailed. Srs. Louise Palfrey and D. A. Anderson were added to the committee.

Moved that the Superintendency of the Association be requested to appoint some one as superintendent of the Home Class department. Before vote was taken, adjournment was had till afternoon.

At two o'clock the Convention again assembled, with T. A. Hugas in the chair.

A motion prevailed limiting speeches in discussion to three minutes. Motion pending at adjournment of morning session was put to vote, and carried.

Resolution from the Pittsburg District conference at Glen Easton on constitutional amendment was called up, and by motion was laid upon the table.

The proposed amendment of Rule 3, page 13, of Constitution and By-laws was called up, and motion made to adopt. This was denied.

The suggestion of the primary lessons committee, that they should prepare six quarters of lessons and publish in Quarterly, was called up, and motion made to grant request of the committee. A substitute was offered that the advisability of such be left to the committee, and that approval be expressed of work as already done by the committee. The substitute prevailed.

At three o'clock the special order was taken up and the election of officers resulted as follows: T. A. Hougas, superintendent; J. A. Gunsolley, first assistant superintendent; E. H. Fisher, second assistant superintendent; D. J. Krahl, secretary; John Smith, treasurer; Lucina Etzenhouser, librarian; John Smith, Duncan Campbell, R. S. Salyards, revising committee.

A communication was read from the Religio Society asking for the appointment of a committee to consult with a committee appointed by the Religio, to consider the feasibility of merging the two organizations. T. A. Hougas, F. M. Sheehy, and Anna Salyards were so appointed.

The appointment of the Sunday-school missionary was made the special order for the evening session.

A suggestion was read from the report of the General Librarian concerning circulating libraries. A motion prevailed that we indorse the work of the circulating library that Sr. Etzenhouser has begun, and lend encouragement thereto by this public recognition.

The committee from this body appointed on the merger question was instructed to publish its report six months before next Convention.

Adjourned till evening.

At seven o'clock Convention reconvened. After usual preliminaries a motion was made that it be the sense of this Convention the lessons in the Quarterly should be shortened. This was denied.

The Superintendency submitted a lengthy but well-worded invitation to the schools of the British Isles to unite with the Association in Sunday-school work. It was moved that the report be our invitation. This prevailed.

A request from Bro. Waller that the Quarterlies be mailed sooner to Hawaii. This was referred to the Superintendency.

Moved that we approve of the song-book, "Zion's Praises," published by the Board of Publication, and that we recommend its use in the Sunday-schools. Before the vote was taken the time for the special order was reached, and it was taken up, and a motion was made that we recommend the General Superintendent to Quorum of Twelve for appointment as Sunday-school missionary. Lost by large majority.

The matter interrupted by special order was taken up and carried.

Superintendent Hougas asked that the Convention prescribe rules for the disbursement of the funds of the Association. A motion prevailed that a sum not to exceed two hundred and twenty-five dollars be set apart for contingent expenses of the Association.

A motion was passed that the Executive Committee act as program committee for Convention of 1905, and that when we adjourn we do so to meet at the call of the Executive Committee on April 4, 1905.

The appointment of editors of the Quarterly was referred to the Executive Committee.

By motion the Convention adjourned till time previously designated.

The General Conference.

At ten o'clock on the forenoon of April 6, 1904, President Joseph Smith called to order the fifty-first General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in the Temple, at Kirtland, Ohio. The audience-room of the building was well filled.

Prayer was offered by President Joseph Smith. The formality of choosing the Presidency of the Church to preside over the Conference was gone through with, and R. S. Salyards, church secretary, was selected to act as secretary of the Conference, with privilege of choosing his assistants. He selected Frank Russell and Charles Fry.

By motion Leon Gould was appointed conference stenographer, and F. G. Pitt chorister, with authority to choose assistants and organists. The President nominated A. B. Philips, of Massachusetts, Frederick Gregory, of Canada, and George Wixom, of California, as committee on credentials. The nominations were ratified, and the committee withdrew for their work. W. E. LaRue, W. W. Smith, D. F. Lambert, and James M. Baggerly were appointed as press committee. John Gillespie was appointed janitor.

By motion it was decided that the remainder of the forenoon session be devoted to speeches by various brethren, each speech to be limited to seven minutes. President Joseph Smith spoke as follows:

You will pardon me if what I have to say is more or less personal, but the conditions under which we meet are of such a character as to force this upon me. It will be observed by many of you who have been associated with me in church work for the last twenty-five or thirty years, that I have been constantly urging upon the attention of the brethren the coming of the time sooner or later, when they would be called upon to represent the work by the very best men that it would be practicable for the Church to have; and that so far as I was permitted to do so, I have predicted that such a time would occur; that we had no need to fear the disruption of the Church by virtue of the introduction of a seductive and soul-destroying doctrine, but that the effort of the adversary would be to destroy our unity, by sowing dissension and division among the eldership. I have lived to see that prophecy fulfilled to a large extent.

I have also predicted that sooner or later that which we have been so industriously opposing for over forty years would be forced into the open, and that it must face the great American public and the public of the world (that which was opposing it). That time has arrived, and I am pleased that circumstances, over which I had no control, but which I believe have been directed by the supervising hand of God, carrying out his own design, have brought it about. And whereas we have in the past been charging certain things about our cousins in the West (I use the word cousins as representing a religious body and not the members of the Smith family), what we have been declaring they were doing, and they have been accusing us of misrepresenting, and worse in regard to them; they have now publicly admitted by two of their principal leading men, the President of the Utah Church, Joseph F. Smith (who is sometimes confounded in the papers with myself, and I with him), and the one who is in line of succession, Apostle F. M. Lyman. They have publicly admitted on the stand that they have been and are now doing just precisely what we have charged them with doing; and it affords us an opportunity such as we have never yet had of meeting the issues fairly before the American public. And I tell you frankly this morning, I am glad of it. I would rather fight an enemy in view, than an enemy in the dark. I would rather fight a principle that is an acknowledged one in the open than to fight one under cover. No warfare in this world is so annoying, none so barren of good results, as that which is conducted under cover. The Reorganization has been put into that position. As I stated a good many years ago, the only faction in so-called "Mormonism" in the field that could afford to wait the moving events of time was the Reorganization. I believe that yet.

I believe the time has come when the exercise of the talent and the men that we should have at our disposal, in the meeting of some of these great issues, is upon us. And I am glad to say that I feel that the men are with us, and that these issues will be fairly met.

I sincerely hope that every member, ex officio or by virtue of being a delegate, will constitute himself a committee of one to conserve the general good of the whole, by making himself a good observer of the rules of courtesy, uprightness of conduct, personal example; not only while we are assembled here, but after we separate. Let us thresh out our difficulties, if they occur, right in the field of action, and when we leave, let us not stab our brother in the back, or disarrange the array of workers, by any kind of discourteous comment about what has transpired upon the floor of the Conference.

The chairman then called on William H. Kelley, president of the Twelve, who responded as follows:

I am pleased to meet with the conference here to-day, and that I am enjoying myself physically better than a year ago when we met in another place. I have been laboring in that section of country mentioned in the referencé to the people out West, and was much interested in the remarks. We have been laboring under a cloud, to a great extent, I might say, for years, almost all my life time, and others of my age, by reason of the doings of the people in the West. And it is a source of gratification, evidently to all of us, to know that they are beginning to be forced into the open, where the relative merits of the two organizations may become better known; and that we may be able to pose before the public for just what we are worth, and that is really all we ask. They occupy positions out there, politically and socially, such as hedge them in and bar us out. They have controlled largely in that country; and we have as much difficulty, and more so, to get their attention, as we do the people of the world, as we call them out this way. They hedge in their pulpits, and hedge in everything wherein they have control, and still say that they are the real Latter Day Saints, and call us apostates, of course. So we are glad to see them forced into a condition whereby the real facts may be brought out as they are. I am glad also that through the agitation of our work out there, we are gaining some, and that by the influence of the political grinding that is going on the outlook is good for a better hearing, and a better understanding to be had in the future than has been in the past. It is a hard thing (you men perhaps do not all understand it, but some do) to go into those large congregations out there, where there are hundreds and thousands of individuals, and hear delivered before large congregations where there are thousands of outsiders, the beauties and the excellency of what we call the latter-day work, and hear the gospel plan presented largely from the standpoint that we can indorse all the way through, and then finally the climax put on of all the claims that are made by that people out there, and call it all Latter Day Saint faith, leaving the impression upon those who do not know anything of the Latter Day Saint faith, that it is all the same; get it so mixed up that the real merits of our faith can not be understood, from their very manner of presenting it. They may present it along lines as we do in the main. To illustrate: I heard a very able discourse delivered in which the statement was made that they believed in revelation, direct from heaven, every day, and that was the reason there was such an opposition against them. And when people began to understand them better they would not have any feeling of opposition against them. He kept upon that line for a few minutes, and finally called upon the people that they must come and be baptized by them in order to be saved,—indorse all these things of course that they associate with the faith. You take a person that understands their history, and it seems to take all the force out of the claims of the Latter Day Saints. So that I am really led to appreciate personally, and I think the rest of you do the same, that a favorable opportunity seems to be coming when this distinction will be fully known, and recognized all over this country; not only this country, but the world. And I feel encouraged in this thought. I think I can see an opening that gives us a promise of success in this way. How long before we reach the real goal that we expect we will reach sometime, of course we can not say.

So far as our faith is concerned it remains still the same. I believe in all that is contemplated in what is known as this latter-day dispensation, the angel message that has been introduced into the world for the enlightenment of men; and it is able to take care of itself. We want men imbued with the spirit of it, as referred to by our President, to meet these emergencies. And I believe, to-day, that these emergencies will be met, and that God is providing men of courage of heart, and ability, by the inspiration of God, to meet all these emergencies. So I am encouraged in this thought. From this standpoint I can commend this latter-day work to every young man and every young woman; that they can not engage in a better cause, a better work, and one that they do not need to be ashamed of, when they grow to mature years.

Columbus Scott, president of the Seven Presidents of Seventy, spoke as follows:

I had not anticipated being called upon to say anything this morning, but gathering the ideas from the remarks of the brethren who have preceded me, one of the lessons that I learn is that of patiently waiting and of endurance. The history of the world is such, it is made slowly, and the history of this work, as a part of the history of the world, is made slowly, and so we wait as to the Lord's part of the work. I suppose it is with all Latter Day Saints alike, there are no fears entertained and no unnecessary or troublesome anticipations looked forward to, relating to the Lord's part of it.

I am glad, since in the nature of events it seems to have been necessary, that the dark cloud should have risen upon the horizon in the rear, as reflected from Utah. In the nature of the case, the Reorganized Church stands out distinct, and by the darkness of the cloud, and the light that we believe and hope is reflected from this cause in contrast, this work and our position will be the more distinctly discerned and better understood by the world.

The only fear that I entertain in regard more particularly to myself, is the mistakes I may possibly make, being weak and needing assistance. I have never, from my entrance into the work, slowly growing into some degree of knowledge of it, entertained any doubts of its divinity. I have seen the hand of the Lord manifested at different times indicating to me that he holds the work. That he is anxious, if you will allow me the expression, that all may come up to that standard set forth in the life and principles of his Son, in order that we may have eternal life, and share in the glories of the redeemed. We do not wish to be moved by a blind zeal or simple stubbornness, so to speak, without having the eyes open to what we are endeavoring to accomplish, because, under such circumstances, we might, as Paul says, "give our body to be burned and it would profit us nothing," give all our goods to the cause and "it would profit us nothing." Hence it is right that we should be moved to action, by the right motive, the love of right, because we feel that it pleases God that we do right, because we realize to a degree that it is the will of the Master, the Savior, that we stand for the right.

Individually I stand in the latter-day work with no mental reservations whatever. I see nothing else in all the world that is satisfactory to me to take hold of, that I may trust with reference to the way of life. I speak this that you may know clearly and definitely where I endeavor to stand. I do not propose to be unduly influenced by others, only as their influence as I see it is for good. I shall attempt to emulate that.

I realize further, that to some extent the crisis referred to by our worthy President has come, with reference to development in our relations to the people in the West, that shall develop events which shall clear the atmosphere, which shall distinguish the God part of this latter-day work from the human, that it may be seen clearly and distinctly, and that its merit shall be recognized by all the honest.

Now that we see this, that we have become witnesses to the divinity of this doctrine, we should examine our surroundings and stand ready to move in harmony with divine commands.

William Anderson, bishop of the Lamoni Stake, said:

I am pleased to be here and participate in this gathering. I have been interested in hearing what my brethren have said. Of course the Saints will all understand that my work, my experience, is not with the outside. And while I concede that it may be necessary to keep this question concerning the people in the West so much before us as a people, I regret that there is a necessity for it. It will be forty years this fall since I cast my lot with the Reorganization, though I may say I was cradled, if not born, in this work. But I am conscious that it is not the length of time we go to school, but what we learn, that does us good. But this morning, if I had my choice to make over again, I would make the same choice of religious faith, so you understand somewhat how I feel to-day. I am not especially a man of faith; I like to see my way as I move along, so that I have tried throughout the workings of our profession to move in these lines. I feel as determined to-day to stand by God and his truth, as I understand it, as I ever have, in the ranks of what we call the Reorganization. I notice with a degree of pride that we have our young men who will be able to do what has been referred to. I only trust that the Lord will give them the most essential quality, which I believe is humility, faith in God, notwithstanding they may have the advantage over some of the early men who labored to bring this work to where it is to-day. I would like to see (and believe that it can be demonstrated) that we can separate the divine from the human within ourselves. And I always have believed (I do this morning), that we can not teach more effectually to the world than by that which the people see that we are doing. For this reason I trust that we will have a good time; and that whatever views we may entertain that may not be in harmony with all, we may be able to meet them openly and frankly. So far as I am concerned, I am here for that purpose.

So far as the Saints that I represent in a financial way, the stake of Lamoni, are concerned, no matter what others may do, I believe I can speak advisedly, they have been doing well from a financial standpoint. And I have learned this lesson; that where there are missionaries, and where the elders have been the most successful in helping the Saints to become spiritual, it is an easy matter to attend to the temporal part of this work. We may have not done, in our part of the country, what may have been expected; but as far as I am concerned I am well pleased. I feel grateful; I can truly say this morning, the Saints of the Lamoni Stake have been moving forward and upward. I am not one that would urge the Saints to distress themselves in making sacrifices. While I believe that it is left on record for us where the Lord said, many years ago, "Now is called to-day, and will be to the coming of the Son of Man; and it is a day of sacrifice, and for the tithing of my people," I believe that we should study the law; and that we can not as a body make laws of life and salvation, but that we have enough to do to see that we carry them out as God has revealed unto us.

I think we are making some progress. Of course I would like to live to see the day when younger and abler men than those who have occupied in the past will carry this work forward with greater success. I believe I will be satisfied, and feel that life has not been in vain. I believe the redemption of Zion should be a secondary consideration; spiritual part first, and temporal second, but they must go together.

A. H. Smith, patriarch to the whole Church, spoke as follows:

I am thankful that I have been permitted to meet with you. Some ten days ago prospects were that I would be deprived of the privilege; but I consider the Lord has been good to me to permit me to come and meet with you.

There is one thought that always occupies my mind when I contemplate the work in which we are engaged. And when I see before me so great a number engaged in the one great cause, I rejoice exceedingly. That thought that I speak of is the idea of the day of the coming of the Lord. We are told in the Scriptures that it will come, and overtake many unprepared for its coming. My thought is that the end or the object of the work that we are engaged in is a preparation for the coming of that day. I look out upon the world and see many processions forming, many armies assembling; and I recognize that we are engaged in the forming of a procession. One speaker has said that history is made slowly; the events of the world pass slowly. The Lord hath said the time will come when these events will be hastened, they will move quickly, and he will cut short his work in righteousness. Now I rejoice that I am permitted to be in this procession: the forming of a procession of people that have faith to believe that when the great day of the Lord comes they shall go out to meet the Lord; they shall have prepared themselves, and shall go out to meet him in joy.

I look over this congregation, and I see many vacancies. My mind is called to the fact that many of the banner-bearers in the army of the Lord have fallen by the way; not that they have fallen out of the procession and lost their faith in it, but they have been called to their rest over on the other side. It makes me glad to see so many of the young men that are now springing forward, coming to the front to take the place of these banner-bearers, as they go down, to lift the banner of Prince Immanuel, and carry it proudly that the world may see inscribed on the banner, "The Lord is true; his truth will prevail."

There are some things that have saddened me. I have been made conscious that some of our banner-bearers have dropped out of the procession. This saddens me; for I know that we must keep step with the procession. There is no chance for us to step out, abide a time, and step in again; for the moment that we step out, the procession passes on, we lose our place. We must not do that. Now if you can for a moment let your minds grasp the thought of the coming of the Lord, and the mighty host that shall come with him, those that have gone before us, if you can grasp the thought of the multitude that will be quickened, that will be prepared and standing ready for the call, you can comprehend something of the magnitude of this work, and the object of it, the education and the fitting of a people prepared to meet the Lord at his coming, and all the holy ones that have stood in testimony for the Lord in the ages past, and mingled with joy and gladness on the redeemed earth, and dwell with Christ and God in his presence. This is the object of our gathering together and educating ourselves. This, it seems to me, should be held in view constantly by the members of the army of the Lord, and they should always keep in sight the banner, and keep step, and be prepared to meet the Lord when he shall come to review the army and receive it unto himself.

F. G. Pitt, president of the Quorum of High Priests:

Mr. Chairman, Brethren, and Sisters: I never expect to be able in words to express my appreciation of being connected with you in this glorious work. There was a time when I did not believe it to be of God. Time came when I was forced to believe it; and in fulfillment of the promise of the Lord the time has come when I can say that I know it to be of God. And therefore I appreciate being connected with the people called out in these latter days to prepare for the glorious coming of our Savior. Therefore I am in the faith; and not only in the faith, but I am very hopeful concerning the future. I realize, as doubtless you do, that we are living in trying times. As a brother suggested, we are living in stirring times. The scenes in the political, in the social and the religious world are rapidly shifting; and when all these things are so unsettled, how good it is to feel that one's feet are firmly planted upon the Rock that can not be moved! Therefore I appreciate again the privilege of being connected in this glorious work. It is true the year has been a trying one in many ways, and so far as my experience goes, the greatest difficulty that we have had to contend with is the spirit of indifference. The Lord has called upon us to make sacrifice; and in this, we have to stand in direct opposition to the spirit of the world. The world seems to be losing in spirituality. It is taken up largely with the frivolous things of this life. The ambition is to shine in the eyes of the world, and a tendency to run after amusement; anything that will satisfy for the time being. When we are mingling with this class of people we are apt to be influenced by the same spirit, therefore even the Saints have not altogether escaped the spirit of indifference.

In my field the greatest needs have been the need of pastors to feed the flock, and I am convinced that we have been making missionaries faster than we have been making pastors. It may be that my connection with the Quorum of High Priests causes me to look upon these things somewhat differently from others; but if there is any one thing needed to-day it is shepherds to feed the flock. It is useless to send out missionaries to bring people into the fold, then let them starve. A brother rightly expressed it concerning the finances. There is no trouble about finances, if the people can only receive the spiritual food that they need. I well remember the remark made in an eastern city. I was called to assist in dedicating a church there, and in leaving the people I said to them, "Saints, do not forget that this church is unpaid for, and try to remember to pay for it as soon as you can." A brother standing by said, "Bro. Pitt, never mind the money. Just let them get the Spirit, and the money will come all right." And so I have found out that what we most need to-day are spiritual men, men that are humble, who are wise, men who are diligent, who will not be too impulsive, but who will be careful and prayerful, and hopeful, and thus seek to lead these tender ones and the weak Saints so as to increase their faith. We are living in a time when the adversary is trying to get in to divide and sow discord among the brethren. We need shepherds, fathers, so to speak, who will so work among the Saints as to help them to overcome the evils in these directions. We can afford to trust God, doing our own duty, not being too anxious, but doing the work as it comes to us, faithfully, leaving all the rest in the hands of our heavenly Father. May God help us to endure, is my prayer.

T. A. Hougas, president of the First Quorum of Elders, and superintendent of the Sunday-school Association:

Mr. President: It is with considerable pleasure that we are able to be here this morning. Not particularly for what we can do but for what we can receive. Representing as we do the interest of the younger element of the Church in particular, and having this so much in mind, and so constantly, we are naturally led to think, perhaps, more upon that subject than upon others. But if there is any thought that is more consoling to me than another, it is that the young and rising generation, from the tiny tots to youth and middle aged, are developing along more substantial lines, now at least, than in any time heretofore, so far as my knowledge goes. The Sunday-school and the Religio, though two organizations, are merely one in purpose, taking the child in its infancy, and continuing with it until it has gone into the ministry, perhaps. I believe that as a church, we are going to reap good results from the efforts that we are putting forth in this line. I can well remember when I was but a child, of attending a General Conference when to see a young man preacher was a real curiosity. I remember attending one General Conference where there were two young men, ministers, and it seemed almost odd; the rest were older men. How is it now? Our ranks are full of young men. This seems to me a very encouraging indication. Some of these have come from these lesser organizations. And my hope, my energies so far as is possible to expend them will be to keep these organizations constantly at work, developing the younger element so that they will be better equipped for the work that is to fall upon them in later years. I have a great interest in this work personally. I have been, as an individual, more or less ambitious in other ways; but the interest and love for the work, has, in spite of the other strong influences, drawn my life in that line, and I hope to make it successful. May God bless us; may he bless the work we have in charge; may he bless the Church.

John Smith, president of the Lamoni Stake:

Mr. President: There are many discouraging features on the road to success and noble achievement. This work, or the things that follow in the wake of this work, and that sometimes meet us ahead, have very discouraging characteristics; but we have to meet and overcome if possible these discouragements. The work itself, under divine guidance, is filled with hope; and I do not think this is the time to stand in wonderment as to whether we will cross the stream when we reach it. It is well known to many of our people that man's extremity is God's opportunity, and I stand this morning as a living witness of the truth of that among you. I am here with you to-day because my heart is as full of hope as ever, even though discouragements may be around us in relation to this work. Whatever may be our weaknesses and our failings, there is no question but that God is in it, and he proposes to remain in it. And the saying of Moroni can be repeated with pleasure this morning, that as long as there can be found one soul that has faith in God, God will be there.

I know that our gathering here is looked upon very strangely by those not of us. We come under different conditions than any other organization that exists to-day, because we recognize the leadership of God; and I believe, Mr. President, that so far as possible we should come together, forgetting our discouragements, and strive to get the strength that comes from such association as this.

Seventeen years ago this season I made my first visit here; this is my second. I am as full of hope to-day, in relation to this latter-day work, as I was then; and I do not know that I have in my mind anything to say that would discourage any. God is with his people. He is blessing them; he is helping them. Of course, as referred to by one of the speakers, there is a growing indifference. This has been borrowed largely from the conditions that surround us in the world; but I can see that this spirit of indifference with many of us is on the wane. It would wane if we could come to that condition of confidence and trust in God that makes us acceptable with him. There is nothing that will increase our faith so much as confidence in each other. We know very well, as we sit here to-day, as men and women, that all the promises that God has made to his children concerning this latter-day work can be realized and enjoyed, if we come up to that condition of spirituality which he desires. And while the Church has several crying needs, as referred to by a previous speaker, one of those crying needs is the work of pastoral care. The missionaries can bear witness to that. The people in the branches, especially those that are isolated from the constant visits, can testify to that; and you can frequently hear their testimonies that God has shown to them in vision and in night dream that he would send them help and deliverance from those starved conditions.

Now, brethren, as we go from this place,—and I do not know this morning that any one will hinder us to go from this place at the close of this Conference, with our heart filled with joy, our faith strengthened, our hope confirmed within us,—let us faithfully battle until the end. Anything short of that is not worth the struggle. Let us remember this. Let us not forget, in the joy and gladness that come to us, while we are gathered here, through the influence of the Holy Spirit, let us not forget our prayers to God. Let us not forget our faith in God; so that when we are alone, away from these blissful conditions, we may have strength to help us to endure unto the final end, when God shall give us the victory.

G. H. Hulmes, president of the Independence Stake:

I feel glad this morning to be connected with you, glad from every standpoint of virtue and right motive. I feel glad to have a faith so defensible, with the Bible in our hands, and one that I can go down to the little children with, and ask them to accept it as that which shall govern and rule their lives. I feel glad to be in this place.

In recent years of the past my hope has been transferred from the East to the West, and I am glad to be in the Zion's land, for I see, being there, the wonderful possibilities of the great future.

It has been said, "The course of empire moves westward." Taking the word empire to mean progress I believe it moves westward, and that so far as the Church is concerned, its western limit is the place indicated to us by God as the Zion's land, and to that center people and progress will come, not alone from the east, but from the north, south, and west also.

I feel that as a people we want to be individual standard-bearers.

I believe that one of our greatest duties at the present time is that of accepting God's advice, through Christ, of being non-resistant, in the sense of being courteous, mild, and kind, even to those who oppose us, and to avoid retaliation or reviling again, when reviled.

Recently we have seen one of the great emperors of the earth seeking (whether or not his environments would have permitted it) the disarmament of nations. By the effort he showed a recognition of the fact that the advice of the Nazarine is best for nations as well as for individuals. I believe that it was his honest intent. But the Czar of Russia even is not always master of his surroundings.

I believe that as we move in the midst of our duties it is a cross to bear, to apply the principle individually, but Jesus said, "He that taketh not up his cross is not worthy of me." If there is a people who should learn the lesson of not resisting, when reviled of not reviling again, it is those who profess, as we do, to be the followers of Christ. I believe that it will mean progress to us as a people, and development, and when God, who will bring the recompense, comes to save us, we will find that we stand away forward, by the literal application of this principle.

I feel in relation to the work in the Stake that I have come from, Independence, that it is onward, but I believe there, as well as everywhere else, success depends upon educational development. To be individually governed by the high motives and principles that God has given us to govern us in the family, in the congregations of the Church, in society and wherever we are. We need a kindly manner, as a people, and we will find, when his government is being established in our hearts and when we are showing willingness now to be governed by him, we pray that he will bring his kingdom that men may be governed by it, and that his will may be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Let us show our willingness to be governed by him there, by doing his will now.

I believe that this work has a wonderful future before it and that in the immediate future, the world will recognize that God is with us.

Louise Palfrey, editor of the "Arena" department of the Autumn Leaves:

Mr. President: When I came into the Church one of the first lessons I learned, was that if I desired to make spiritual progress I must try to do my duty, whether it was hard for me or not, so I will try to respond to your call.

I am thankful I am a Latter Day Saint. I have not yet realized all that I desire to realize. There are heights and depths to which I desire to go, and perhaps we shall never be fully satisfied until we sit at the feet of the King and know all things; but I can truthfully say this, that if I should have to go out of this work, if I could not have the hope that I do have through it, the light of life would go out for me. The principal aim of my life is centered in this cause, and I am glad to be a worker in it. I consider I am engaged in the one great work; for though my special duties have so far seemed to lie with one of the auxiliary societies, these organizations have for the end of their aim the one great object, and to advance the latter-day work is their endeavor. They are training our young men and young women that when they shall fill up the ranks of the Church in the future they will be prepared to creditably represent it and carry the grand work onward. I am thankful to have a share in anything that tends to the progress of this work. I desire to continue my usefulness and to increase it as opportunity may offer.

W. S. Pender, of Malad, Idaho:

Brother President: I have been convinced for a long time that this work was a wonderful work; but I have been more convinced of that fact in the past year, in the field that I have been laboring in, out in the Rocky Mountains, among our Mormon friends. I have met no opposition, that I would consider serious opposition, so far as defending and maintaining our cause is concerned; but I have met with opposition from another source. I have discovered the fact that not only is the Spirit of our heavenly Father connected with this work; but I have discovered, at least in my own case, the adversary is also concerned; and I have met opposition along that line that has actually astonished me. But my heavenly Father has sustained me, and I have enjoyed a goodly degree of the Holy Spirit in my work. The evidence of divinity connected with this work, I have never questioned; and the fact that there are two forces at work is evidence to me that this work is from heaven. So far as progress is concerned,—our development out there numerically,—we do not seem to make very much progress. There are certain disadvantages there. And I think like others have expressed themselves this morning, that matters are looking a little more favorable. I think, really, that we have secured some help recently, that we did not look for. We might look for help from our own organization, but we did not look especially for anything from Washington. But I think we have had quite a little help from Uncle Sam lately. Uncle Sam has been doing some good things. They are all right, and I hope he will continue right along that line. We passed a resolution a year ago, and I believe also in years past, favoring a constitutional amendment prohibiting the practice of polygamy; I do not know whether it will carry or not, but I believe that some confessions that have been made by the leaders of the Mormon Church, Joseph F. Smith, and Francis M. Lyman, will aid, possibly, the passage of such an amendment. And I also believe that those confessions will be helpful to us from the standpoint of doctrinal conditions in the Mormon Church. I have been informed, just before I left Utah, that the young people out there are not satisfied with the conditions that exist, as indicated by the testimony of the leaders. One young man told me that his father was one of the "immortal" one hundred and forty-three pioneers that went through to Salt Lake with Brigham. He said that this investigation had convinced him of one thing, and that was that polygamy did not originate with Joseph Smith, but that Brigham Young was the author of the revelation.

I wondered how he arrived at his conclusion, as that matter was not presented very much, but he must have evolved that with the good common sense that he had. That is the way I look at it.

J. W. Gilbert, recently returned from the South Sea Islands:

Mr. President: I believe you would like to hear more about the Islands than anything else. I want to say first that I love this work; and one of the strongest desires of my heart is to see a movement along the temporal line for the salvation of the Latter Day Saints, as well as spiritual. We have got one of the best doctrines in the world, looking to spiritual welfare of the people; but I would like to see the hand of God moving along the line looking toward our temporal salvation. The present condition of the world makes me desire that more than ever.

Now concerning the work in the Society Islands, as I suppose you would like to hear something about that. The work of proselyting in the Society Islands has about come to a close; it is more like gleanings than harvesting there now. The time was when our missionaries could go to an island and all the people on that island would flock to hear what he had to say; but now the circles are tightly drawn, the bundles are bound, and each person goes to his own church, and our work of proselyting is about done. The work now is to build up and strengthen. I heartily indorse what Bro. Pitt said, that there should be shepherds for the flock. I would like to see good shepherds raised up to take care of what we do gain, because I have seen so much go to waste because of the lack of shepherds. This is the case in the Society Islands; and my work there has been nearly altogether along that line, working among the branches, building up and setting in order, instructing the ministry, holding priesthood meetings, etc. And I believe the Spirit has been stronger in our priesthood meetings, wherein I tried to teach the ministry the duty of their office and calling. I believe I have felt the Spirit leading my mind, and helping me in my work in that direction stronger than any other.

I feel that those people are the people of God, descendants of Israel. I think they are a branch of the Lamanites, probably blown off to leeward when the ships were built in Central America, and sent out, and never returned, which the Book of Mormon speaks of. There are many evidences along this line. But when people obey the gospel, all over the world, they drink into that same spirit, and they all become brethren. And those people in the Islands who have obeyed the gospel, and have drunk into the spirit of it, become one with us. I love them, those who are in the spirit of the work; but I am sorry to say there are not so very many that have drunk into the spirit of the latter-day work as they should—they do not understand it. And the conditions can not be much better under the present circumstances. There are a great many conditions that militate against our progress in these Islands, and will be under the present regime I think, which is the French. I shall not enumerate them now; but in my prayers for the progress of those people, I pray the Lord to stir up the powers that be so that conditions may change, that they may have a chance to be educated, and brought up higher. What I think the natives need, now, is schools. They need education. They know about as much as we do about the gospel, along certain lines, of course. They are a little backward in spirituality, but they need education to bring them up a little higher; that was my idea. And I am sorry to say that when I was on my second mission I saw a falling off of schools that they had on my first mission. About ten years ago, on my first mission, there were schools sustained by the Government on nearly every island, but I believe this time I only saw one in progress, elsewhere than on the island of Tahiti.

The natives are eager to learn. They learn to read and write seemingly as they learn to walk; but my desire is to teach them more. I broke away from all restraint along toward the last, and went to teaching school anyhow. They wanted to learn. Young people came together on different islands, and wanted me to teach them reading and writing and arithmetic in their own language. And I did, on several of the islands. My wife and I both taught them. Had school every day in the forenoon. My wife taught the little ones their letters, and some of them to read, and I taught the others. I had the church full of people that wanted to learn their letters, from little ones on up to men and women who had babies and brought them to school with them. The babies played around in the church while the others were learning to read and write, and I could see the progress very rapidly. I think what they need there is a good school.

E. L. Kelley, presiding bishop of the Church:

I am glad to see so many good, merry faces this morning; hope they will all feel as they look for one week at least, then our numbers will begin to decrease; also that no one will get affrighted thinking he will not get a place, because we think there will be places for every one, although they keep coming in. And all will get plenty to eat, too. So much for the introduction.

If we shall undertake to represent the church finances, I will state to begin with, that this is a department in which each and every one should always be interested. While church finances, to-day, are in such condition that I feel easier than I have any time since 1891, yet by slackening our efforts we would soon be where we could not move. If we begin to think that because we were even, now, or where we can feel easy at least, and stop our efforts, we will soon get to where we can not move very much.

The thought is sometimes presented that we hope we shall get through with our financial work some time. Why, this is a part of the gospel life, the same as the physical or the spiritual. Just as certain as we need a meal each day, and a place to lay our heads, we need to make proper effort in the financial work; daily effort; not for one week, one month, or one year; but from the time that we enter the Church until the time that we are called to the church triumphant on the other side. There is no more to be found a stopping-place for performance of duty in this line than there is in the spiritual line. Here is where the Saints have made a mistake in the earlier establishment of the Church. By slackening their efforts they have thought that they could thus better improve themselves and their own interests. This has been a mistake. No one in financial matters is better able to extend his own business than he who helps to extend the Lord's business. It is true of financial matters as it is of spiritual, that the one who brings forth fruit, God blesses, so he may bring forth more fruit. No one then should think of slackening his or her effort in this line of work any more than in the other.

In the financial work of the Church too much of a burden was placed upon us last year in sustaining a long line of missionaries, many of whom might have done just as valuable service at home as abroad. Every missionary who could do more work in the field abroad than at home, God can sustain, and his church will do so now. But those who could do local work, and help on the cause just as much as if they went abroad, because their age and acquirements are such as to unfit them for traveling ministers, should be left at home. I would prefer to undertake to supply them at home, than traveling in missionary fields. When they are not in condition to travel in the field, they become a burden to the Saints where they go, and a burden on the Church. That has been one of the causes why the Bishopric has not been able to build an office where it could transact business the past year. We have not to-day any building adequate for the transaction of the general business of the Church. It would transact the business very well fifteen years ago, but it can not do it now.

I refer to this for the reason that the present year we must either build where we are at Lamoni, or the Bishop must move to some other town where he will have adequate accommodations for his work. It is impossible to perform the work as it should be done without a systematic arrangement of the business of the office; and I want the Saints to understand this at once, that we may not be hampered another year like we have been the past five.

Our work at the present time we are fully satisfied could be better. But the work in every department might be better. Doubtless God would like to have it all better. He would like to have all of us better. By and by we hope we will get up to that proper standard; and we are trusting and hoping that the work of the Bishopric, and all connected therewith, will fully keep on a level with the spiritual authorities and work of the Church so that they may be amply and justly and properly sustained in their efforts.

J. W. Wight, of the Twelve, recently returned from Australia:

This is the first opportunity I have ever had of attending conference in this place, but I have no desire to permit reminiscences to prevent me from striving to do the work of God.

Over in Australia, we have a people that are zealous for the right and among whom opportunity is granted to do an excellent work. The mission field is the best to my mind, so far as I am granted an opportunity to know, that we have, so far as foreign missions are concerned.

But there is one important fact that seems to me so closely allied to the gospel that I want to bring it out. In the years ago, in my boyhood years at our Fourth of July celebrations (I was reared under the idea of tyrannical Britain), the orators seeming to be forgetful of the fact that we had passed away from the days of King George. I was glad, however, having been thus tutored, to be made to realize that within the British realm, among English speaking people, I found just as great freedom as I find in our boasted land of America; just as much desire to do right because it is right to do right as I have found in any place where I have gone. This thought I would like to emphasize, doing right from the standpoint of right, and not from the standpoint of getting gain, not from the standpoint of such influences, but doing right because it is right to do so, though we may stand alone in the effort.

In the thought of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, we are enabled to break down the barriers that are so often found in the way, known as national ones. Standing upon the broad plane of the brotherhood of man, whether that brotherhood shall come from English-speaking people, whether it shall come from the Caucasian race, or whether it shall come from those who are not white, makes no difference, the grand central thought of the Fatherhood of God (though practically speaking, from that standpoint, we are but one race—one humanity) and the brotherhood of man in the true sense, all these seeming barriers are broken down.

It will be remembered, that on the first occasion of my visit to that land, I set an example there that has since been followed by others who have gone to that land—an example which I am thankful that I have found no occasion to be ashamed of, but am glad that I was moved upon in that direction. I sought to help to unify the different nationalities in at least a marital sense, and I believe that along this line there is as much necessity of advancing as there is along spiritual lines—that this barrier may be broken down; not that I would to-day offer an incentive to young men to go to that land, but I offer this thought, that nearly every young man who has gone there has followed the example that was set. I offer the further thought that our worthy President was willing when the opportunity was offered, to follow the example that was set and go to a British speaking people to find a wife.

Over in that land there is just as much opportunity as here to fight what may in some sense be called a hydra-headed monster, the monster that has been reared and nurtured in the valleys of the mountains; and I will tell you one important fact in connection therewith: While I admire the British race as standing for what they claim to be British rights, the right of every man to speak, that has in one sense been against us in our efforts against the Utah people over there because they believed in giving them "fair play," just as much as they believe in doing so for us; but the evidences that have come to light over here in Washington have been cabled to them, and their British fair play will not help them to cover up these evidences, and will give us a better opportunity in that land among the number of Utah elders who are traveling hither and thither. I hope we will not be moved in any impetuous way, but yet stand willing as candid men and women to meet that issue as we should meet every other issue in a fair, upright way. While I believe that they have built around them a great bulwark, known as a refuge of lies, it will not do for us to lower our standard to meet them along that plane, but in a frank, kindly, true, upright gospel sense meet them as we ought to meet every effort that may be opposed to us.

By motion the presidency of the Conference was authorized to fix the time and character of the meetings, and appoint the speakers.

The Chairman then announced the order that would be observed in the seating of the audience, and after some announcements dismissal was had till afternoon.

Benediction by President Smith.

At half past two o'clock in the afternoon the Conference again assembled, President Joseph Smith in the chair. Prayer by Patriarch Smith.

Bro. Gould asked that Sr. W. W. Smith, of Kansas City, be associated with him as stenographer. This was granted by the Conference. After the reading of the minutes the chair announced that Bro. Pitt had selected as his assistant choristers, F. A. Russell and D. A. Anderson, and Srs. Madge Craig and W. N. Robinson organists.

The report of the committee on credentials was read, and a motion to adopt was followed by several motions offered in amendment. One amendment which passed was to the effect that the report be corrected so as to include only such delegates as were appointed in harmony with the provisions of the Book of Rules. This was in effect to prevent delegations adding to their number after coming to Conference, the rule being that only those bearing properly signed credentials could be admitted. The discussion following the offered amendments consumed considerable time, and was stopped on some only by ordering the previous question. Before voting to adopt the report, it was ordered returned to the committee to make correction provided by the amendments.

After the committee had retired, about the usual number of announcemants were made, the closing hymn sung, and benediction pronounced by Fred M. Smith.

At the evening hour Frank M. Sheehy, of the Twelve, was the speaker, being assisted by President Joseph Smith.

THURSDAY, APRIL 7.

Morning prayer-meeting was in charge of Brn. Asa S. Cochran and M. M. Turpen.

At half past ten Richard Baldwin was the speaker, being assisted by C. A. Parkin.

At two o'clock in the afternoon the routine of business was resumed. Prayer was offered by R. C. Evans, and after reading of the minutes, credentials committee made report, stating that they had made the corrections indicated yesterday, also that London District had furnished credentials. It was moved to reconsider the motion of yesterday whereby Brn. Gould and Kaler were not permitted to represent the Victoria District, Australia. The motion to reconsider prevailed, and the brethren mentioned were admitted to the Conference as delegates.

A lengthy report from Church Secretary was read, in which he portrayed the work of the office, and outlined the business to be done at this Conference.

A communication from the High Council was read in which a number of names were presented for temporary appointment for service on the council; those named were R. C. Longhurst, G. A. Smith, Joseph Squires, V. M. Goodrich, and A. E. Mortimer. Their temporary appointment was approved by the Conference. The secretary of the High Council reported that two vacancies had been made in the council by the death of Brn. J. H. Peters and Calvin A. Beebe.

A communication extending greetings to the Conference was read from the Saints of the Grimstad Branch, Norway. A motion prevailed authorizing the president of the Conference to make fitting response thereto, and ordering both the communication and response to be spread on the minutes.

The report of the general Church Recorder was read. It showed the number of baptisms for the year to be 2,532, and a net gain of 1,593; 654 deaths, 136 expulsions. The numerical strength of the Church is now 50,330. Iowa leads in the number of baptisms, 434, Michigan second with 395.

The report of the Church Historian was read, following which the roll of ex officios was called.

Patriarch A. H. Smith made report for the Order of Evangelists.

A report from the Librarian was read, in which the necessity of more shelf room was again noticed. The action of the First Presidency in appointing Israel A. Smith librarian to fill vacancy made by the resignation of F. E. Cochran, was ratified.

Reports were then read from the following quorums: Seventh Quorum of Elders, First Quorum of Priests, Sixth Quorum of Priests, Second Quorum of Teachers, Second Quorum of Deacons, and Fourth Quorum of Deacons.

A report was then read from J. W. Wight and C. A. Butterworth, missionaries in charge of Australian Mission, in regard to the matter of heresy charge against W. J. Haworth, which had been referred to them by last Conference. They reported Bro. Haworth not guilty, and gave reasons therefore. The report contained the following, given as an opinion: "Public expression of private opinion and especially upon matters likely to produce a controversy, should not be practiced." Objection was raised to this when the motion was made to approve, and an amendment to strike out those words was offered. This provoked some discussion, and before coming to a vote, a motion prevailed to adjourn subject to the regular order. The usual number of announcements were made, and the benediction pronounced by Fred M. Smith. At the evening hour F. A. Smith was the speaker, being assisted by C. G. Lewis.

FRIDAY, APRIL 8.

The morning prayer services were in charge of G. H. Hulmes and W. A. McDowell.

At ten o'clock H. O. Smith was the speaker, assisted by W. J. Smith.

At fifteen minutes past two o'clock in the afternoon Conference again assembled for business session, with R. C. Evans in the chair. Prayer was offered by Columbus Scott. The order interrupted by adjournment of yesterday's session was taken up after the reading of the minutes, and an amendment to the motion to amend was offered. Following this a substitute was offered and passed which was in effect that the report of the committee be adopted, except that portion which may be considered as interfering with the right of any one to publicly express his opinion on questions not passed upon by the Church.

A matter from the branch at St. Joseph, Missouri, was presented and referred to a committee of three for consideration. E. L. Kelley, Heman C. Smith, and C. Scott were appointed on the committee.

A resolution passed by the Eastern Colorado District conference concerning the age limit of baptism was read, and was referred to a committee composed of F. M. Sheehy, C. Scott, and T. A. Hougas.

A report from the Religio Society was read, showing progress and development of the Society.

The secretary stated he had a petition and appeal from J. D. Bennett. By motion this was laid on the table.

Several petitions concerning boundary lines of districts were referred to a committee composed of J. W. Gilbert, H. O. Smith, and S. W. Simmons.

An invitation was read from the Lamoni Branch, asking that the next General Conference be held in that place. This brought up the question of fixing the place to which to adjourn. By a unanimous vote it was decided that when this Conference adjourn it do so to meet at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1905. No other place was put in nomination.

A. J. Keck, one of the members of the Board of Auditors appointed at last Conference, had resigned, his resignation had been accepted by the Presidency, and the committee provided for that purpose had appointed Bro. Charles Fry to fill the vacancy. This choice was ratified by the Conference, and by separate motion Bro. Fry was chosen to succeed himself at the expiration of his term this Conference.

The time limit for introduction of new business was fixed as half past three Monday afternoon, April 11.

The question of Librarian was taken up, and several names placed in nomination resulting in the selection of C. I. Carpenter.

The table of the secretary being cleared, the usual closing exercises were had. Benediction by Joseph Smith.

At the evening hour J. W. Wight was the speaker, being assisted by Romanan Wight.

FRIDAY, APRIL 9, 1904.

The morning prayer services were conducted by G. H. Godby and J. C. Crabb.

At fifteen minutes till eleven o'clock George Jenkins was the speaker, his assistant being E. J. Good-enough.

I do not understand that the dead are immovable—that annihilation comes to the dead—but rather that it is the change that ushers in the more glorious perspective; that ushers in the more glorious possibilities; that begins the new life, the greater grandeur, the greater beauty, the greater usefulness; death is the hope and the consolation of him who believes in the doctrine of the lowly Nazarine.—Wm. P. Hepburn.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Children.

When the lessons and tasks are all ended,
And the school for the day is dismissed,
And the little ones gather around me
To bid me good night and be kissed;
Oh, the little white arms that encircle
My neck in a tender embrace!
Oh, the smiles that are halos of heaven,
Shedding sunshine of love on my face!

And when they are gone, I sit dreaming
Of my childhood too lovely to last;
Of love, that my heart will remember
When it wakes to the pulse of the past;
Ere the world and wickedness made me
A partner of sorrow and sin,
When the glory of God was about me,
And the glory of gladness within.

Oh! the heart grows weak as a woman's,
And the fountain of feelings will flow,
When I think of the paths steep and stony
Where the feet of the dear ones must go;
Of the mountains of sin hanging o'er them,
Of the tempest of fate blowing wild;
Oh, there's nothing on earth half so holy
As the innocent heart of a child.

They are idols of hearts and of households,
They are angels of God in disguise,
His sunlight still sleeps in their tresses,
His glory still gleams in their eyes;
Oh, these truants from home and from heaven,
They have made me more manly and mild,
And I know how Jesus could liken
The kingdom of God to a child.

—Charles Dickens.

An Evening Musing.

"The melancholy days are come,
The saddest of the year,
Of wailing winds and naked woods
And meadows brown and sear."

It is even-tide. A warm fire and bright lights glow within, while without the winds shriek and wail, as though the elements were sighing and grieving at the thought of approaching winter.

The older children are gathered around the organ singing first one song, then another, while the babies insist they "play us a song." Presently the older one and the one who presides at the organ strike a chord and sing,

"Here is a ball for baby, large and smooth and round;
Here is baby's hammer, hear him pound and pound."

Then they laugh, and he says, "Pay anuder one." And again she sings,

"Johnnie stole a pumpkin,
Ran up through the town;
Policeman blew his whistle,
Johnnie threw the pumpkin down."

Whereupon they clap their hands and make their little feet patter over the carpet as though keeping time to the music, although they know nothing of dancing.

Then sister says, "Now please run along and play while sister plays and we sing some."

Next she plays a march which they have been learning lately and my mind flies swiftly back to childhood days, when care to me was unknown, with no thought only to laugh, play, go skipping and racing to school, which was the dearest place on earth to me, for study was a pleasure, as lessons were easily learned and were never a task to me. While I thus reflect the music ceases and voices join in. This time I hear the words, “Sweetly, Lord, do we hear thee calling,

Come follow me;
And we see where thy foot-prints falling
Lead us to thee.”

The mental picture changes and another takes its place differing from the first. I see a time when a gray-haired elder and his wife visit the home of my childhood, and as we are isolated to some extent, their coming was considered an event of much pleasure to young as well as old. And one day the family and the visiting sister were all seated in the farm wagon, while the elder and the father, also an elder, walked on before until they came to the field where two hired men were laboring. They, too, are invited to join in this little procession, when they proceed a distance of one mile and a half where they reach a beautiful stream. Here they halt. After a short, fervent prayer is offered the elder goes down to the stream, singing as he goes:

“Let us shake off the coals from our garments,
And arise in the strength of the Lord;
Let us break off the yoke of our bondage,
And be free in the joy of the word.
For the pebble has dropped in the water
And the waves circle round with the shock—
Shall we anchor our barks in the center
Or drift out and be wrecked on the rock?”

When one after another of the family was baptized until three had entered the water, then one of the hired men who had removed hat, shoes, and vest, came forward and presented himself also for baptism. After which, seated on a log by the water's brink, the confirmation was attended to, as the day was very warm. And the song they are singing to-night caused me to recall some of the thoughts which passed through my mind shortly after this scene:

“Foot-prints of Jesus
That make the pathway glow,
I will follow the steps of Jesus
Wherever they go.”

How confident I was in those first days of entrance into the kingdom! I resolved that whatever others might do, I should walk in the path our Savior had laid down for us to walk in. But my mind follows down the stream of time and again the scene changes.

A young wife and away from Saints among those who never spoke the name Latter Day Saint unless sneeringly, and in whose mouth “old Joe Smith” and “Mormon” were sweet morsels. Then I saw how vain were human resolutions. When I thought I was strong, alas, how weak had I been! How oft discouraged and cast down. Yet amid it all I had still tried in weakness to hold to the faith, or near the pathway, if not always following in the footsteps as it had at first seemed so easy to do. Yet I had found it took more prayer and less self to make the pathway glow.

Now they are singing the dear old hymn,

“Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee;
E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me;
Still all my song shall be,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.”

And how distinctly I remember those words falling like a benediction upon me, years ago. One hot, sultry night, when almost a stranger in a village, tired, careworn, and sick, I had put the children to bed and stolen out into the cool night air and sat under some shrubbery which hid me from the view of the villagers who were passing to and fro. Suddenly across the way from my neighbor's home came the sweet old song so low and plaintive. I knew it came from a heart sad and weary and that years before, when a thoughtless girl, the singer, while playing with an old revolver, had playfully pointed it at a dearly beloved brother, a shot rang out, soon the life-blood had ebbed away, and the brother was a lifeless corpse. And since that time she had lived a secluded life, refusing to be comforted. But this night she was alone and I felt that it was a soul's cry to God, for from him only could come peace to the bleeding heart, and as I listened while she sang

“Though like a wanderer
Weary and lone,
Darkness comes over me,
My rest a stone;
Yet in my dreams I'd be
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer, to thee.”

I thought earthly friends fail to comfort, but there is One to whom we can draw near in our troubles. And it awakened a desire within my own heart again to draw nearer to my Father than I was then living, and this cheered and inspired and comforted through many days of great trial which lay only ahead of me at that time; and many times I sang it over to myself and it has never grown less dear to my heart.

And now my little Lyman comes and says, “Takee, takee,” and I take him up on my lap and draw him nearer in a close embrace and soon the little eyes are closed and he is fast asleep and I hope when we have done with the cares of life and when the sun has set at eventide, may it be with the assurance that it is “Asleep in Jesus! Blessed sleep!

From which none ever wake to weep.”

And now again the music changes and I hear them singing,

“When we meet safe at home in the morning
Where as strangers no more we shall roam,
When we stand at the gate of the palace,
And receive the blessed, Welcome home.

“O! the joy that we shall know,
And the songs that we shall sing
When we meet safe at home in the morning,
At the palace of our Lord and King.”

In our Father's house are many mansions, and surely it will be a joy if we be found worthy to enter in and be permitted to occupy with our Father and our Savior.

ADRIA ELLEN.

Dear Home Column: “Bear ye one another's burdens” is the command, and I believe we as a Church should take heed to it, for “When one member suffers all suffer with it.” Do we do this at all times? Do we visit the aged and sick and take a ray of sunlight to brighten their weary life? Are we ever ready to leave the bright and gay pleasures of life and visit the homes of sorrow caused by the cruel hand of death, and take the sorrowing ones to our heart, point them to him who said, “Come unto me all that are heavy laden and I will give you rest”? No matter what the condition in life may be the soul is precious to our Father, and one does not know, unless he have experienced this sorrow, how the poor hearts need human sympathy, for it may be the blow has been so hard for them to bear that they are crushed beneath their load of sorrow and for the time they can not realize that the Lord chasteneth him whom he loveth.

And our Father has left us an example when he wept with the sister in her sorrow at the brother's death.

How should we bear one another's burdens? We should patiently and prayerfully lead the poor crushed hearts back to their Savior. Are we bearing one another's burden? Are we helping that dear mother to hold her wayward son back from ruin and the rum shop? Are we helping fallen woman to rise to a high standard, or do we draw our skirts closer to us as we pass her, for fear of contamination? God forbid; for she one day was pure and innocent, some mother's pride. God only knows what caused her downfall, but our Lord says let them without sin cast the first stone. Are we bearing one another's burdens in sickness, health, poverty, or prosperity, in joy, or sorrow? Are we doing unto others as we would have them do unto us? This is the question I ask myself, and I find I come far short of doing as my heavenly Father would have me do, and I pray that he may show each mother, sister, and the Church just how, when, and where we can all bear one another's burdens.

ASHTON, Illinois.

A MOTHER.

WESTON, Iowa.

Dear Sister: It has been a long time since I have written anything for the Column because I know there are so many able writers and I would like to hear from them. But if God has given us only one talent to labor with let us not hide it, but invest it and perhaps God will give us more. As a mother I realize God's blessings have truly been very great to me and many times when my heart has been sad and discouraged he has given me encouraging dreams and visions that have brought comfort and peace to my heart. I will relate one dream I had many years ago; it has given me encouragement many times.

I saw a large company of Saints standing just below a very large hill about to start on a long journey. Each one was provided with a horse and buggy to travel in and all succeeded in getting up the hill. Then there was a very straight and narrow road upon which we should travel. We all started, but soon many became discouraged and turned back, and as I journeyed on some of those who had turned back told me I might just as well turn back, too, because the wind was blowing so hard against me and so many stumbled in this narrow road I would never be able to get through. But I smiled and told them God had promised to help me and I knew I would get through though all the world was against me, and I proceeded on my journey rejoicing in God, knowing I had nothing to fear.

Dear sisters, I feel there are great responsibilities resting on us in raising our little ones as God has commanded we should, and we can not begin too soon to teach them to love God and keep his commandments. We should teach them to observe the Word of Wisdom, because if they are taught it in infancy it will be no temptation to them when they are grown. This I have experienced in my own children, but we must set the example before them ourselves or our teaching will be in vain. O, if we could only realize how great our influence is over those around us, how careful we would be in our every-day life and in all our doings that they might be pure before God and that we could teach by example as well as by precept. May God's peace and blessings abide with all his people and may our hearts be prepared for his service, is the prayer of your sister,

CHRISTINA RASMUSSEN.

Prayer Union.

Sr. C. F. Rehwald, of Bisbee, Arizona, asks the prayers of the Prayer Union that the Lord will heal her afflicted hand.

The world is a kindergarten of little children, very little children, and the great God is trying to give them his great love and his great life.—Lyman Abbott.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The General Convention.

At two o'clock in the afternoon of April 4, 1904, in the sacred and historic Temple at Kirtland, Ohio, the thirteenth annual convention of General Sunday-school Association was called to order. There was a large representation present considering that the place is so far to one side from the masses of the Saints. There were unusually large delegations from the Canadian and Eastern districts. All seemed happy and business was entered upon with a spirit of unity and a desire to dispatch it as much as could be consistent with safety.

The reports from the officers and committees, and also from those in charge of the work in foreign lands, were read, all of which showed at least a fair growth or improvement. We shall from time to time present the parts of the several reports that may be of general interest. Also will mention such items of business as may be of importance.

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

To our Fellow Workers in General Convention Assembled, Greeting:—It has been just thirteen years since at this Temple the organization of the General Sunday-school Association was effected. There were not so very many districts represented here that day. There were not so very many schools of our faith throughout the land. But there was what we need yet—a very strong and prayerful desire to improve our situation. It was very plain to the minds of many that a united effort was necessary to improve and expand our work. We knew what should be done, but did not know how to go about to do it. And I almost question the statement that we knew what should be done; we simply knew that something should be done, but our ideas as to what that was, were not very definite. But be that as it may, the organization was effected. It began its work at once and has not since ceased for one moment its onward movement. And if we should compare the conditions now with what they were then, we would almost exclaim, "They builded wiser than they knew." And truly they did, but they builded under the divine direction, and the building has stood the test of time.

We are, to-day, like the growing child just emerging from his childhood or youth with approaching manhood in sight, larger than we used to be, stronger than we were, and with a possible overestimate of our importance. But time and experience will make us useful, and as the years roll on we will learn many of the practical lessons of life, those lessons that cause us to love and appreciate the sober realities of life; those lessons that bring us pleasure in duty and in service. We are here to-day to perform a duty and to enjoy the pleasures thereof. We are here to bless and to be blessed by the happy associations of our fellow workers. We are here to do God's bidding and to receive his blessing. And may this convention be one of both pleasure and profit to you, as well as the means of building up this department of the work.

Our report will be fragmentary to a degree, owing to the circumstances under which we have had to labor during the past few weeks. But we shall endeavor to place before you such things as we think should be understood or of which you should have a knowledge.

In addition to the work done at our desk and in the immediate vicinity of home, we mention a few of the points reached and work done there if any more than the regular routine of work. In the latter part of May and former part of June we visited the Northeastern Nebraska, Fremont (Iowa), and Central Michigan Districts, each at their district conventions. A little later in June we attended the reunion of the Minnesota District at Clitherall, Minnesota. The work in Minnesota had hitherto been in an unorganized state, so far as the district was concerned. But there were several nice schools working along. After a week's work with the Saints in the reunion, they decided to organize a district association. This they did and have since been doing some splendid work for the advancement of their schools.

In July we attended the reunion of the Oklahoma District. Opportunity for work was not the best here as the unusually late harvest interfered with the attendance at the meetings seriously. But considerable good was done notwithstanding the obstacles. From July 27 to August 3 we were in attendance at the reunion at Crossland, Kentucky. The work there is in an unorganized condition. There are many promising young people there and a future for the Sunday-school work, but it will require protracted effort upon the part of some one of experience to bring the work up to the conditions they would like to see it. Time and work will accomplish it.

From Crossland we went direct to the reunion of the South-eastern Illinois District near Jeffersonville, Illinois. We remained till the close of the meeting, in the meantime making arrangements for a district organization which the workers there had already been planning. The organization has since been completed.

In the latter half of August we attended the reunion of the Fremont District at Henderson, Iowa, and the Dow City, Iowa, reunion, assisting in my line of work thereat. This concluded the reunion work for the season.

In the latter half of November we began our tour of the "Sunny South." We spent about six weeks in the three districts, working in the McKenzie and Harp, Alabama, schools in the Alabama District; two branches in the Florida District, at each of which schools were organized, Santa Rosa and Berrydale Branches. Prior to our going there, there was not a Sunday-school in the Florida District. The two mentioned were organized with the prospect of a third. We also visited the Bay Minette and Theodore, Alabama, and Three Rivers, Mississippi, schools in the Mobile District. Both the Alabama and Mobile Districts are organized and doing good work, notwithstanding they have some conditions to contend against not found in any other section of the country. Our beloved missionary in charge has spared no pains to make all that could be made of both the Sunday-school and the Religio work. And his efforts for the past three or four years that he has been there have left their mark. At his departure from the territory the last of 1903, Bro. H. R. Smith buckled on the same armor and has kept the same pace set by Bro. Roberts. Several schools and Religios can be counted as a result of their efforts.

About the middle of January we left for the Pacific Slope, and in two months visited and worked with the schools at Los Angeles and San Bernardino, in the Southern California District; met with the Central District in the district convention at San Jose; and in the Northern District worked with the schools at San Francisco, Oakland, and Sacramento.

From there we went to the Utah District where we had planned to spend a week; also a week in the Idaho District. But sickness overtook us so that one day at the Utah District convention concluded our work for the two weeks. This we regretted very much as the Idaho Saints had made preparations for two conventions in different parts of the district besides some local work at other schools. But we failed to get there at all. We can not always do as we would like.

This closed our field-work for the year. Was it a success? In some places it was not. It was not what it could or should have been. We were very much disappointed at the results. While in other localities it was all that could have been expected or desired. In some places where we expected to accomplish but little, there our best work was done. We do not know just what to expect. On the whole we are satisfied with the work.

This missionary work, the work of personal contact, is the only practicable method of improving our schools and increasing their number. There are many obstacles in the way of work. The field is large, the laborers few, and the expense is heavy. Expense not only of cash but of bodily strength. The experience of the past year has taught me that unless better care be taken of this body God has given me, that my days of usefulness will be few. We much regret to be obliged to abandon this work if it is desired that we should continue, but at present it is the only solution we know of for the problem.

THE WORK OF THE MISSIONARIES.

It is with considerable pleasure that we note the splendid work done by many of our Church missionaries in addition to their other duties. The time was when this was not the case, or, if it was, we did not learn of it. But now the most if not all of them do all that they can find time to do. I wish that I had at hand reports from all of them, but have not. A few will serve to represent the work for the rest that I have not heard from. Bro. Frederick A. Smith succeeded in arousing an interest in the Sunday-school work in the thinly-settled prairie countries of the Dakotas and prosperous schools are the result. Bro. D. L. Allen succeeded in bringing about a district organization in the Montana District. Bro. F. L. Sawley was instrumental in doing the same in the Southeastern Illinois District. Bro. W. S. McRae working in the Texas District took hold of the Home Class work in that scattered section of Saints and secured nearly forty members in just a few weeks. Bro. Frank J. Pierce has been persistently working in the interest of the Association in the British Isles Mission. Sr. Emma Burton is managing the work in those far-off South Sea Islands, and, because of the circumstances and conditions, doing it without the aid of counsel or advice from any one. An American not knowing the conditions there could not advise in that work. Many others have worked just as hard and maybe accomplished just as much, but we do not have the data at hand. And even if we had, we fear space would preclude its insertion. But we assure the brethren that we appreciate the efforts just the same and God will not fail to reward every one who has tried to do well.

And it would be unkind in us if we should fail to publicly express our appreciation of the work of our associate officers. And without any particularizing as to person or item, we would say they have done as well as they could do under their circumstances. Our work has been entirely harmonious and enjoyable, and I feel they have entered upon their work conscientiously and earnestly. They have been pleasant associations to me. Nor would we forget our revising committee, our Quarterly editor, and our Primary Lesson committee, all of whom have done their work promptly and so well. The Lord will reward every one according as his works may be.

THE FIRST PRIMARY LESSONS OF THE QUARTERLY.

It will be remembered that at the last General Convention at Independence, a committee of primary workers was appointed to prepare matter for a course of lessons for the very small children. The committee set about preparing for the work at once and in an unexpectedly short time they had ready for the printer matter for the first quarter's lessons. The general officers decided to publish it in connection with the Primary Quarterly. This insured its introduction at once. We congratulate the committee on what they have been able to accomplish. Our observation is that the work is quite extensively used and very satisfactory, meeting the want expressed by the primary workers at the last two conventions.

It would seem then that this should very naturally become a permanent arrangement. But from the committee we learn that there are some insurmountable difficulties in the way of permanency of the matter as it now is. But we leave this part of the matter to the committee to report. Note what they say and let it be a consideration in your disposition of the question.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL PERIODICAL.

For several years we have referred to the subject of a periodical in connection with reference to the work of the department in SAINTS' HERALD, and without public discussion of the points leading up to it, we would say that we are persuaded that the time has come to make a start in that direction, though this may not warrant the launching of a new enterprise. Yet this seems the inevitable end or outcome of the whole matter. It may involve some outlay of cash for a few years, but I think the condition of the treasury will not cause any unrest in that line. The interests of the work in general will never be fully conserved with less than the half at least of a full-fledged monthly publication. A monthly publication at the inception with a view to making it a weekly in time is the logical conclusion of a consideration of the matter based upon observations and experiences of more than three years with this in mind. The lack of available material for editorial staff would be the most serious question to confront us. But time will help to eliminate this difficulty. Shall we investigate the matter?

Letter Department.

FULTON, Kentucky, March 27, 1904.

Dear Herald: I feel impressed this beautiful morn to try to write a few lines to your columns, as I have never written before. I feel it my duty to do so, as some may like to hear from this place. How eagerly I watch each week for the HERALD and Ensign, to read the sweet news from the Saints. It gives me comfort and joy to hear they are all trying to live Christian lives.

I am trying each day to live nearer to God and obey his commandments more perfectly. I am young in the work. I was baptized by Bro. T. C. Kelley three years ago last November and have never regretted the step taken, for I love this work and I know it is of God.

We Saints of this place have a lonely time. Our nearest church is twenty-five miles away. So it is very seldom we get to hear any preaching. It is very hard to be isolated from the Church. The people here are so scornful and prejudiced it is a lonely place to live in, but I know there are others just the same way, and I try to be cheerful, for where there is no cross there is no crown.

Our home was made sad on January 14. Our dear mother passed away. She was sick only a short time and was firm in the faith until the end, and she passed away without a struggle. Our home is very sad and lonely without her. She was such a kind and sweet mother, and we miss her so much.

May God give us strength to say truthfully, "Mother, we will not weep for thee, for thou art now with God on high, and there in the future I long to be." Humbly asking the prayers of the Saints,
Your sister in the one faith,

EMMA McCLAIN.

APPLEDORE, Ontario, March 27, 1904.

Dear Herald: As I am not well enough to attend service with the Saints, and being at home alone, I am thinking of the fast-day and what it is for. I hope all will realize that the Lord knows what is in our hearts and I trust the Spirit's power may be sent during Conference, that all who have fasted may know its power, and that all of those privileged to attend shall feel benefited, strengthened for future struggles for the right.

We still live here at the Lindsley Branch, and meet in the old church, the first Saints' church built in Canada. We feel very lonely at times; we used to drive for miles in heat and cold, but we are getting old and can not do it now. It will soon be forty years since I first heard the gospel, and many familiar faces loom up before me. I trust all may enjoy the Conference, and much good may be done. I have never written to your columns before, though I have perused its pages for years. Wishing you success in your mission in helping to spread the gospel,

I remain your sister,

KEZIA GREEN.

SPRINGERTON, Illinois, April 4, 1904.

Editors Herald: My older sister and I were baptized by Bro. J. W. Paxton over a year ago and I greatly rejoice in the great latter-day work. Our branch is rejoicing now over the noble work of our much esteemed brother, Elder F. L. Sawley, who has recently baptized twenty-four persons and held a three-week effort. His preaching was greatly appreciated by all. He has done a most excellent work here in the past year in reviving the membership, working up a fine interest in Religio and Sunday-school work. Thirty have been baptized into our branch since he came to us less than a year ago, much prejudice removed, and a better understanding had of our work by both Saints and outsiders. He has made many friends for himself and the work, for which we all rejoice. We sincerely hope he may be sent back to this district next year.

Your sister in the beautiful gospel of Christ,

MISS FRANCES ROCKETT.

DES MOINES, Iowa, April 4, 1904.

Dear Herald: On Wednesday evening, March 30, was held the last meeting in the little church in which the Saints of Des Moines have worshiped for many years, it being our regular mid-week prayer-service. Several Saints, and one nonmember, an elderly lady who has been meeting with us quite regularly during the winter, were present. A goodly portion of God's spirit was enjoyed and all present but one bore testimony to the work and the goodness of God, and while each spoke with pleasure of being able to move to larger and more convenient quarters there was a strain of sadness mingled with each testimony as they spoke of leaving the little house of worship where they had so often met together and enjoyed the blessings God had at many times so bounteously bestowed. Even the elderly lady rose and in a trembling voice expressed her thanks to God for the many happy moments she had spent with us, saying the sermons were the best she had ever heard, and that while she was glad to see us go to a better location she regretted to see us leave there as she feared she would not be able to meet with us as often as she had been doing. We hope to have her often with us in the future and pray God may bless her to that end. In departing to our homes it was with the feeling that we were parting from a tried and true friend, and sad indeed would have been the occasion had we not have had the cheering thought, like a child of God must have in the hour of death, that, we were but passing on to something better.

Our next meeting was on Sunday, April 3, and it will be a memorable day in the history of the Church in this city. On that beautiful, holy Sabbath day, the day set apart as commemorative of the resurrection of our Savior, the first service was held in our new house of worship, a service which had been looked forward to in happy anticipation by the Saints. The day came, the usual services of the day were held, the blessing of God attending to the comforting and cheering of the Saints, inasmuch that our noble anticipations were fully realized. The Sunday-school met at the usual hour, ten o'clock in the forenoon, officers and teachers all present, and a total attendance of eighty-eight. The class work was enjoyed much greater than ever before, as we had more freedom, not being crowded so closely together. Having a separate class room for the "Cradle Roll" and primary classes we expect now to give this department special attention and make it one that will be a credit to our school. The seating arrangement of the building will also enable us to have class marching, which, if rightly conducted, we believe to be a means of training and discipline for the children. The sacrament and social meeting was held at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, in charge of branch president and priest. A large assembly of Saints was present and all the testimonies given were of an earnest character, manifesting a desire to press on in the work. The blessing of Heaven rested upon the assembly to a marked degree and the Spirit spoke through one of the priesthood commending the work which had been done by the Saints in that it was the desire of God that his work in this place should spread out and advance, that he had permitted the way to be opened that his desires might be carried out and that it now rested with his children to enter in and occupy. He bade them not to grow discouraged in their efforts to meet their obligation in the purchase of the building, as it was his desire that it might soon be theirs indeed and that it, together with themselves as a body, and many others that should be gathered in, be dedicated to his service. Of the older ones it was said that some had grown weary and fainthearted in the battle they had long since begun. To his younger children was given an exhortation to be faithful, that in his vineyard there was a place for each to labor, bidding them examine themselves to see if they were occupying as they should. Alluring promises, he said, were held out from other sources, but that the reward he promised was greater than any other could give. The message closed with these words, "Come, serve me."

As we look back over the year that is just passed how great has been the blessing of God upon us! The Saints have been united in their efforts, they have been humble in their service, and the result of a closer walk with God has been fully realized in many different ways. The time had come when the work in this place should take a step forward and we have learned that God is able, through the instrumentality of his servants, even though they may be weak, to carry on his work successfully; that he guides and directs his children and causes such changes to be made as will best advance the interests of his great cause. And so we believe that the Church as a whole will take forward steps and advance as the great harvest time draws nearer.

Let us not grow weary and faint in the conflict, but let each enter in and occupy his or her place in the Master's vineyard, remembering that the reward our loving Father has promised none other can give.

J. R. EPPERSON.

Apropos of the centenary of the organization of the British and Foreign Bible Society, which was celebrated in the beginning of March in Great Britain and the United States, Doctor Daniel Coit Gilman, President of the Carnegie Institution, who is also president of the American Bible Society, writes in the March number of The North American Review, of the conditions out of which the British and Foreign Bible Society arose, its constitution and sources of income, the societies modelled upon it in America and elsewhere, the extent of the work done during the past century by these societies and its results, and the prospects of Bible societies for the future. Referring to the world-wide distribution of the Bible effected by the British society, Dr. Gilman says:

"Financial statistics, impressive as they are, are of much less interest than the statements which are given in respect to the versions which have been prepared and issued by the Society. Three hundred and seventy different languages are on the list of publications, and it takes sixty different kinds of alphabets to put these languages into print. From a scrutiny of the list, it is easy to see that, apart from the religious significance of the Society's work, its contributions to comparative philology, especially to the philology of the obscure tongues of uncivilized people, are of great importance. Of no other book are there so many versions. For example, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress has appeared in one hundred versions; the Imitation of Christ in, perhaps, half as many; and the authority of Dragonoff is quoted for saying that writings of Tolstoi have been printed in forty-five languages. In many instances, the representatives of the Bible Society have reduced to writing languages previously confined to oral expressions, and thus much light has been thrown upon the origin of primitive speech. Students of language, like Max Müller or William D. Whitney, have been outspoken in their appreciation of these services."

Miscellaneous Department.

Places of Worship.

This list of the locations of places of worship of our branches in some of the larger cities may be useful to missionaries, traveling men, and any who are passing through these places. It was compiled, for the most part, by Bro. J. R. Epperson. The list is incomplete, but it will be published from time to time, and any errors, changes of location, additions, or new locations reported to us will be properly entered, so that we may soon have a complete directory.

CALIFORNIA.

Los Angeles, church, 1114 South Wall Street.
Oakland, church, corner 16th and Magnolia Streets.
Sacramento, church, corner 24th and K. Street.
San Bernardino, church, corner 5th and G. Streets.
San Francisco, San Francisco Hall, 1925 Howard Street.

COLORADO.

Colorado Springs, church, 745 Willamette Avenue.
Denver, Saints' chapel, 22d and Arapahoe Streets.
Pueblo, residence, 1632 East 6th Street.

ILLINOIS.

Belleville, church, Weber Avenue, one block and a half south of Main Street.
Chicago, West Side, church, 8 Wood Street. South Side, church, 3615 Cottage Grove Avenue.
Dekalb, hall over old post-office, North 3rd Street.
Plano, stone church, one block and a half east, two blocks and a half south of depot.
Sandwich, church, six blocks southeast of depot.

IOWA.

Centerville, church, Drake Avenue.
Clinton, hall, 235, 5th Street.
Council Bluffs, chapel, Pierce Street, three doors west of Glen Avenue.
Davenport, church, 1329 Harrison Street.
Des Moines, Saints chapel, corner East 14th and Lyon Streets.
Grinnell, G. A. R. Hall, Broad Street.
Shenandoah, East Side Church Street.
Sioux City, church, corner West 3rd and Kansas Streets.

KANSAS.

Kansas City, Argentine Branch, West End, Argentine.
Kansas City, Armstrong Branch, one half block west of 7th and Colorado Streets.
Kansas City, Chelsea Park Branch, corner Newell Street and Spencer Avenue.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Fall River, chapel, Claflin Street.
Haverhill, 146 Groveland Street.
Plymouth, church.
Somerville, chapel, 54 Broadway.

MICHIGAN.

Detroit, chapel, corner Baldwin and Champlain Streets.
Grand Rapids, Barnes Block, 692 South Division Street.

MISSOURI.

Independence, Stone Church, West Electric Street.
Joplin, church, 2510 Annabaxter Street.
Kansas City, last Kansas City Branch, 2324 Wabash Avenue.
Kansas City, Second Kansas City Branch, corner 23d and Holly Streets.
Kansas City, Northeast Branch, corner Rochester and Prospect Avenue.
St. Joseph, church, 417 North 17th Street, one half block north of Farin Street.
St. Louis, Cheltenham, 5731 Manchester Avenue.
St. Louis, Oakhill, Humphrey Street, near Morgan Ford Road.
St. Louis, Rock Church, Glasgow Avenue and Dixon Street.

NEBRASKA.

Nebraska City, chapel.
Omaha, Saints' chapel, 21st between Clark and Grace Streets.

NEW YORK.

Brooklyn, church, Eastern Parkway and Hopkinson Avenue.

OHIO.

Cleveland, church, 180 Wade Park Avenue.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Philadelphia, church, Howard and Ontario Streets.
Pittsburg, church, Miller Street, near Colewell.

RHODE ISLAND.

Providence, Bellevue Avenue Chapel, Bellevue Avenue, off Cranston Street.

UTAH.

Provo, church, 4th South, between 2d and 3d Streets West.
Salt Lake City, chapel, 228 East Second South Street.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Wheeling, chapel, 62 Water Street, south of 48th Street, Benwood.

WASHINGTON.

Seattle, residence, 1602, 8th Avenue West.

ONTARIO, CANADA.

London, church, Maitland Street, between King and York Streets.
Niagra Falls, church, St. Lawrence Avenue, opposite Ellis Street, formerly town of Clifton.
Toronto, church, 21 Camden Street, between King and Queen Streets.
St. Thomas, church, 42 Balaklava Street.

Died.

DAVIS.—At Machias, February 25, 1904, Sister Caroline M. Davis, aged 72 years, wife of Bro. Emery L. Davis. Baptized by T. W. Smith.

STOREJOHN—Fredrick Storejohn was born June 10, 1858, at Alvesloe, Holstine, Germany. Baptized into the Church by Levi Gamet, February 25, 1904, and died March 24, 1904. His act of obedience was a source of consolation and hope to him during the few days he remained after his baptism. Funeral sermon by Levi Gamet.

BALLANTYNE.—George Andrew Ballantyne, born at Little Sioux, Iowa, January 1, 1876; baptized in 1883 by Elder Levi Wilson. Married Nellie E. Mouser May 18, 1890. Died March 26, 1904, at Salt Lake City, Utah. Wife, daughter, mother, three brothers, and two sisters survive him. He died as he lived in hope of a glorious resurrection.

JOHN.—James, son of Bro. Thomas A. and Mary John of Lucas, Iowa, died from the effects of bad air in the mines. He had come home a short time before from Des Moines, where he had been working, intending to stay with his parents to help them. Monday night was his first as well as last walk since coming home. He was a good, kind-hearted young man, well thought of by all who knew him. He leaves to mourn father, mother, three brothers, and three sisters. He was 23 years, 3 months, and 13 days of age.

HANSEN.—Christenia Hansen was born August 9, 1831, in Denmark; died at Boomer, February 21, 1904; baptized April 8, 1866, at Goshen, Utah, and remained faithful to the end. She was the mother of ten children, of whom two sons and one daughter are left to mourn the loss of a loving mother. Funeral was from the Boomer church by Elder D. Parish. Interment at Boomer Cemetery.

Squab Raising.

Pigeon-keeping for squabs may fitly be termed a twentieth-century industry, says Country Life in America. It is only during the last five years that it has by its rapid development, attained to the dignity of a special business. Previously a few pigeons were kept in sides of barns, in lofts and similar places; but lately houses have been specially designed and built for the sole purpose of squab raising, and many breeders have a thousand pairs of birds and not a few double that quantity.

The business will surely still more increase during the first decade of this century. Game-birds, for which all seem to have a special hunger, are becoming scarcer each year, and no bird or fowl has yet been discovered which furnishes so complete a substitute for game-birds as the squab of pigeons. Its rapidity of growth is remarkable—in six weeks after the eggs are laid, the squab is of full size and ready for the table. The business furnishes a way by which either men or women can embark in an enterprise which does not call for severe bodily exertion and which if intelligently managed will yield good dividends.

The Yellow Peril.

The yellow peril is a bogie which has terrorized timid statesmen for the last half century, and which has been the stock property of Russia ever since she began her policy of aggrandisement and aggression in the far East. Asia, Europe, and America lived in daily dread of the yellow peril—in mortal terror that the yellow man of the far East was to be to the nineteenth and twentieth centuries what the Goths and Huns were to the fifth, and submerge Europe, and that another Attila would arise and, for the wrongs inflicted upon his people, scourge Christendom with sword and flame.

When Japan made war on China, for a moment the world stood aghast, fearing that the floodgates of the yellow dam were at last to be opened and that the yellow race was to show its power when aroused. China, with her millions, was to subjugate Japan; on those millions Japan could make no more impression than a wave in impotent fury lashing a sea-girt rock. The war was fought, and the yellow peril was found to be of no more substantial reality than the baseless fabric of a dream. China, instead of being powerful, was powerless; Japan, instead of posing as the champion of the yellow race against the white, displayed the moderation of wisdom and the commercial acumen of the most modern and highly civilized of all white people. When China lay in her grasp, and when the Liao-Tung Peninsula, with its stronghold, Port Arthur, rightly belonged to her by the fruits of victory, Japan only demanded absolute equality and freedom of trade for the whole world—not any special privileges for herself, such privileges as Russia and Germany have since asserted, but the right for all nations to compete on level terms.

It is as absurd to talk of the solidarity of Japanese, Chinese, and all the Asiatic races as it is to imagine a social amalgamation of whites and browns and blacks. China may be brought to modern conditions under the political tutelage of Japan, and, if so, Japan will have earned the thanks of all the world and will have immeasurably advanced the cause of civilization; but beyond that Japan can not go. Russia, with her short-sighted policy, the same policy that she pursues in her domestic affairs, does not appear to comprehend that the yellow peril is a menace to the world only so long as there are millions of human beings sunk in the very lowest depths of barbarism, to whom life means nothing, and who are simply a chemical mass, capable of being fired or fused whenever the right element is brought into conjunction.

A Boxer uprising is always possible in China. Rebellion and revolution are dangers never to be overlooked. The remedy for this is civilization. If the Chinese through Japanese or other influences can be lifted in the scale, instead of threatening civilization they may become a factor in the general advancement of the world. Russia's peril is the discontent and the ignorance of her people. If her people were enlightened, if they were better educated, if they were as intelligent, in short, as the masses of the people of the United States, the Russian Government to-day would no more fear rebellion and revolution at home than the United States had cause to fear it when six years ago she went to war with Spain.—A. Maurice Low in the April-June Forum.

The Case Against Smoot.

The interest so widely shown by women's organizations in the Smoot case is plainly due to their moral attitude against polygamy. Many of these good people who have not followed the case closely have continued to assert that Mr. Smoot himself is a polygamist,—a sheer invention, which no one at Washington connected with the case against Smoot has ever thought of bringing forward. Simmered down, the real attack upon Smoot can be stated in this way: Present-day Mormonism is an immoral and quasi-criminal conspiracy, held together, on the part of its leaders, by oaths incompatible with loyalty to the Constitution and Government of the United States; for which reason no professing Mormon, and especially no high ruler of the Mormon organization, ought to be allowed to sit in either House of Congress. If Smoot be excluded, it must be upon some such ground as this. It is not likely that Congress, having admitted a Mormon State to the Union, will now go so far as to hold that Mormons may not represent their State in Congress. Undoubtedly, however, Congress will henceforth, in all cases, exclude men known to be polygamists. Furthermore, whenever it can be unmistakably shown that apostles or rulers in the Mormon Church, even though not polygamists, have been guilty of performing the ceremony in polygamous marriages, or otherwise of encouraging or condoning polygamy, it is scarcely likely that henceforth they will be seated in Congress, even though in their own cases monogamists or celibates.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for April.

Flowers in Waste Places.

You can grow flowers anywhere, if you only know the proper kind for each location, says Country Life in America. There is no portion of the earth's surface that can not be covered by some kind of plant growth, nor a situation so desperate that could not be redeemed with the life and cheer and color that flowers give. You have only to select the right variety of seed and you will find that there is no clay too tough, no sand too hot and dry, no rocks too devoid of soil, no winter too severe. If you have a swamp and are afraid of it, you can transform it into a water-lily pond or a bog garden. If you own a bit of woods you can fill it with wild-flowers. In the heart of the biggest city a ten-inch hole can be made in the pavement, as they do in Boston, to cover the wall of the house with vines. The slums have their window-boxes, and houseleeks grow upon the shingles of a roof. Even the dump-heap that you pass daily need not be an eyesore. Put a package of sunflower, poppy, or morning-glory seed in your pocket, and scatter the seed over the offending spot. And of all the people who enjoy the transformation, you will enjoy it most.

Washington at Mount Vernon.

It was an ideal country life that Washington led at Mt. Vernon, says Country Life in America. Besides his absorption in his farms and his attention to his gardens, he was a lover of the chase. The Mt. Vernon fox-hunts were important events in Fairfax county, until increasing cares and responsibility forced

Graceland College

Lamoni, Iowa

College of Arts, Science, and Commerce
Normal School, Including Preparatory Course
School of Accountancy and Shorthand
School of Music and Oratory

E. R. DEWSNUP, M. A., President

I. W. ALLENDER, Secretary

Apply for Catalogue to the Secretary

Washington to abandon the sport. He had a stable of blooded hunters, whose names—Blueskin, Ajax, Valiant, and the rest—have come down to us. His pack of registered hounds were noted for their speed, keenness, and bottom.

The warrior statesman also as a farmer, became a pastmaster in agricultural economics. His enthusiasm for country life, his delight in agriculture, and his vast industry resulted in his becoming one of the most advanced American farmers of his day. His absence from home during the Revolutionary War, he estimated, cost the estate about $50,000.

At the present time, under the management of a capable superintendent, Mt. Vernon is a thriving country estate. Additional greenhouses have been built near the garden. On the farm land wheat, rye, oats, corn, peas, millet and other grains are raised. Five horses, several cows, and a flock of sheep, as well as a herd of deer, are not like the Pincheon family fowls, the mere ghost of a former prosperity, but contribute to the completeness of a thrifty establishment.

An American Nile Valley.

The Imperial Valley in Southeastern California, up to the summer of 1900, was as true to its name of desert as any stretch of rainless, sun-dried land on the face of the globe. During the year of 1902, crops were produced in this valley that averaged from sixty to eighty dollars for each of the one hundred and sixty-five thousand acres irrigated. This result was obtained, and this unparalleled transformation effected, by running a sixty-mile canal from the Colorado River and distributing its silt-laden waters over the gently sloping valley-floor, where once was the bottom of a great inland sea. The land was settled, as fast as water was available, by farmers from all parts of the country, and in less than two years from the time that water first began to flow upon the land the population of the valley was in excess of ten thousand. Half a dozen prosperous towns sprang at once into existence, several of which now have banks, refrigerating and electrical plants, and all the other conveniences and comforts of old communities.

The great yields in this new desert garden have been obtained from fields of barley, wheat, alfalfa, sorghum, milo maize, and Kaffir and Egyptian corn, but experimental plats of rice, sugar-beets, cotton, vegetables, melons, and many other sub-tropical products have proved each well suited to the conditions prevailing. In fact, the whole imperial enterprise will be of inestimable value to the Government in furnishing a parallel by which to direct its own vaster work of reclamation and colonization.—From "Desert Irrigation in the Far West," by L. R. Freeman, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for March.

The Traveler
Who contemplates a trip to Colorado, Utah, California or the North west should know that

The Denver & Rio Grande R. R.
widely known as "The Scenic Line of the World," has more scenic attractions than any other route across the continent, traversing as it does the Rocky Mountain Region through Royal Gorge, Canon of the Grand River, Glenwood Springs, Marshall Pass, Black Canon, Castle Gate, and the world-famed Salt Lake City. Its three through daily trains are equipped with the latest improved cars of all classes. Its dining car service is unsurpassed. For illustrated pamphlets address

S. K. HOOPER, G. P. & T. A.
Denver
Colo.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

"She Wants to Tell."

Sr. M. E. Webber of Queensboro, Ontario, Canada, writes January 12, 1904, saying: "Dear Brother:—I want to tell you how pleased I am with your Quit-to-bac. My brother used less than two boxes and has not touched tobacco since he began to use it and has gained in flesh and is better in every way." If it cures others, why not you? Three boxes sent post-paid for $1.50 with positive guarantee of cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.
Address, (Bro.) B. F. Ordway, 228 Hancock St., Peoria, Ill., U. S. A.

Real Estate at Independence

Bro. J. J. Luff is now associated with Bro. A. L. Newton in real estate business in Independence, Missouri. If those who desire to purchase property in or near Independence will write to us and tell us what they want, city or acre property, improved or unimproved, how far from public square or L. D. S. church, also how much you wish to invest and how much you wish to pay down and the time you wish on the balance, we will be pleased to assist you all we can. Address all communications to 14-4t

A. L. Newton & Co.
225 West Lexington St.
Independence, Missouri

MANUSCRIPT FOUND

Has just been reprinted, and owing to the heavy expense of publishing it the price has been raised to thirty-five cents. Mark your catalogue accordingly.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Lamoni, Iowa.

ERRORS AND INCONSISTENCIES CONCERNING THE PRESIDENCY OF THE DOMINANT CHURCH IN UTAH.

207. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100. 60

POLYGAMY NOT A DOCTRINE OF THE TRUE CHURCH OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

203. Per dozen 5 cents; per 100. 35

THE KIRTLAND TEMPLE. Illustrated. The two martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith; Kirtland temple, and President Joseph Smith.

45. Each 5 cents; per dozen. . . . 50

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
LAMONI - - IOWA

SENT ON APPROVAL TO RESPONSIBLE PEOPLE

Laughlin Fountain Pen

Guaranteed Finest Grade 14k. SOLID GOLD PEN

To test the merits of THE SAINTS' HERALD as an advertising medium we offer your choice of

These Two Popular Styles For Only $1.00

Postpaid to any Address.

(By registered mail 8 cents extra.)

Holder is made of finest quality hard rubber, in four simple parts, fitted with very highest grade, large size 14k, gold pen, any flexibility desired—ink feeding device perfect.

Either style—Richly Gold Mounted for presentation purposes, $1.00 extra.

Grand Special Offer

You may try the pen a week, if you do not find it as represented, fully as fine a value as you can secure for three times the price in any other makes, if not entirely satisfactory in every respect, return it and we will send you $1.10 for it, the extra 10c. is for your trouble in writing us and to show our confidence in the Laughlin Pen—(Not one customer in 5000 have asked for their money back.)

Illustration on left is full size of Ladies' style; on right, Gentlemen's style.

Lay this Paper Down and Write NOW

Safety Pocket Pen Holder sent free of charge with each Pen.

ADDRESS
Laughlin Mfg. Co.
153 Griswold St., DETROIT, MICH.

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS, 1852 to 1900.

197. Paper. . . . . 5
198. Cloth, limp. . . . . 35

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
Lamoni, Iowa.

BANKING BY MAIL.

WRITE US AT ONCE

If you have any money deposited on which you are not receiving interest.

WE PAY 5 PER CENT INTEREST.

The COMMERCIAL BANK, Lamoni, Iowa.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE. A dictionary and alphabetical index to the Bible, with a concordance to the apocrypha, and a table and concordance of the proper names of the Bible.

206. Cloth . . . . . 1 50

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

White River Mining & Development Company

Mountain Home, Ark.

Photographic Views tell the Story Completely

On receipt of postal card, with name and address written plainly, we will send a copy of our Illustrated Report to any address. This Report shows the entire development of the Company's properties at Graceland, also an inventory of the merchantable goods on hand January 1, 1904.

Joseph Ward, Sec.

Mountain Home, Ark.

TRACTS.

33. Trial of the Witnesses to the Resurrection of Jesus. Each 5 cents; per dozen. . . . . 50

47. The Basis of Brighamite Polygamy. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 . . . . . 60

LECTURES ON FAITH.

220. Limp cloth. . . . . 20
221. Paper 10c each, 12 for. . . . 1 00

The Saints' Herald

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormor, Jacob 2: 6

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, April 20, 1904

Number

Latter Day Truth

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
 of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH
 FRED'K M. SMITH

EDITORS

Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

Editorial.

KIRTLAND ITEMS.

On Thursday the falling off in attendance began to be quite noticeable. The wagons began to be well filled as they departed for the trains through Willoughby. The sorrowful part of Conference is the "good-byes." To meet the Saints from all parts of the country is pleasant indeed; but the separations,—well, "the best of friends must part," it is said, but the knowledge of that fact does not soften the sadness of separation. "Till we meet again;" even if we feel that it will not be in this world. How much this means to Latter Day Saints,—"till we meet again"!

The Fifth Quorum of Elders had an attendance at this Conference in their Quorum sessions of about twenty, the best attendance of any of the quorums of elders, we are told. This quorum is composed largely of young men, and they seem to appreciate the benefits to be derived from quorum associations and work. We are always glad to see earnest, active young men in the eldership. It means they are getting experiences which are fitting them for positions of greater trust and responsibility. We are informed the Fifth this year followed the plan used by the Quorum of High Priests in having a pre-arranged program of papers on subjects worthy of discussion. If good for the High Priests, why not for the Fifth Quorum of Elders, and other quorums of elders?

All the quorums this year seem to have been zealous in the number of sessions held. The College question seems to have been responsible for some of these meetings, several of the quorums spending hours in discussing the question, "Shall we close the College?"

As we predicted in our last notes, the fate of Graceland College has been determined at the Conference. It has been ordered closed. The doors which on September 17, 1895, swung open to the students knocking for admission will swing shut in June next, to respond to that knock no more till the debt is paid. When will it be? A movement is on foot to raise the money by June. Can it be done? Now is the time for Graceland's friends to make their greatest efforts for the institution.

The closeness of the vote on the College question shows the importance of voting. The swinging of

CONTENTS.

Editorial:

Kirtland Items - - - - -	361
The Temple Lot - - - - -	362
The Smith Family in a Better Light - - -	363
The General Conference - - - - -	364
Selected Articles:
Recent Press Reports and Editorial Comments -	370
Education and Religion - - - - -	374
Mothers' Home Column:
Dancing - - - - -	377
A Day Dream - - - - -	377
The Engineer - - - - -	377
Sunday-School Department:
The General Convention - - - - -	378
Letter Department:
Letters - - - - -	379
Extracts from Letters - - - - -	382

THE late Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, had a peculiar gift of oratory, and one expression he used once in speaking of early days in Kansas comes to mind. It was, "When triangles of geese ploughed the blue field of heaven." He has also left us some excellent poetry and we give below his best known sonnet:

OPPORTUNITY.

Master of human destinies am I.
 Fame, love, and fortune on my footsteps wait.
 Cities and fields I walk; I penetrate
 Deserts and seas remote, and passing by Hovel and mart and palace, soon or late
 I knock unbidden once at every gate.
 If sleeping awake; if feasting, rise before
 I turn away. It is the hour of fate,
 And they who follow me reach every state
 Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
 Save death; but those who doubt or hesitate,
 Condemned to failure, penury and woe,
 Seek me in vain and uselessly implore;
 I answer not, and I return no more.

IN many an establishment there are successes who are infinitely inferior to the failures from whom they snatch the laurels.—Success.

thirteen votes on that question would have changed the result. Every delegate and ex officio should be prepared to vote on every question before the Conference. To do so means a close attention to the matters before the assembly and enough of firmness to make prompt decision when the time comes.

Though the weather has been unfavorable, yet there has not been an unusual amount of sickness.

"Zion's Praises," used throughout the two conventions, was used to a large extent in the Conference in the "song services" of several minutes' duration before the separate sessions. The more it is used, the better it is liked, it seems. It contains some excellent music.

The song service at the Conference has been commendable. Bro. Pitt and his willing assistants, Brn. F. A. Russel and D. A. Anderson, rendered good service, and the "sweet singers of Israel" seconded their efforts nobly. Besides the good choral work, some well-received solos were rendered by some of the brethren and sisters who have done special vocal work. The cultivation of musical talents on the part of our young people is commendable.

Though the Twelve began sessions in March, not until last night did the quorum finish its work sufficiently to make report on the appointments. These were read to-day.

Not much discussion occurred on the Book of Rules amendments until the chapter on elder's courts was reached. Here several of the proposed amendments provoked considerable discussion.

Many Conference visitors and delegates are leaving to-day, nearly all expecting that business will be finished to-day. If the appointments are read at this session then the probability is that business will be finished to-day, though Conference may not adjourn formally till to-morrow night.

April 16, 1904.

THE TEMPLE LOT.

Under the caption, "To build a temple," in the Kansas City Journal for April 16, is an account of a real estate transfer by which the Brighamites come into possession of twenty-five acres of the original "temple lot." The deal has been made by Colonel J. G. Southern, "agent for the Hedrickites," and Reverend James G. Duffin, president of the "Southwestern States Utah Mormon Mission." The consideration was twenty-five thousand dollars.

The Journal says:

Several years ago suit was instituted by the Reorganized Church to recover the temple site as it now exists. This suit was brought against the Hedrickite branch of the Church, which up until yesterday's deal, owned the ground. It was said at the time that the money raised to defend the suit was brought from Utah, but this was stoutly denied by the Hedrickites, who claimed that the money was raised by a few members of the church as an individual sacrifice. . . . The plans of the Utah Church—called the Brighamites—call for a magnificent temple to be erected at Independence on the site purchased yesterday.

It appears, then, that the Utah Church is going to "redeem Zion" by purchase. We give below an editorial from the Deseret News for April 16, which gives a pretty good idea of the transaction, but from the language used it would be difficult to connect the Hedrickites in any way with the deal. On the contrary, the implication is that the property was not purchased from the Hedrickites, and in another column of the same issue is a press dispatch from Kansas City, dated April 15, which is an exact copy of the report contained in the Journal except that those portions referring to the Hedrickites and their agent, Colonel J. G. Southern, do not appear, from which it may be inferred that the Journal was incorrect in its report. The following is their editorial report of the matter:

The Latter Day Saints will be pleased with the news that comes by Associated Press dispatch from Kansas City, that negotiations have been consummated, by which the Church comes into full possession of a large portion of the land in Jackson County, Missouri, which was originally owned by the Church and designed for the erection of a temple and the commencement of the New Jerusalem to be built in that locality. Twenty-five and three fourths acres have been purchased with a clear title for the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars. The major portion of this amount had been generously donated by several faithful Latter Day Saints whose gifts are on record, and doubtless there will be others who will desire to aid in the redemption of the land which the Lord commanded his people to obtain "by purchase."

About sixty-three acres were first acquired for the Church by Bishop Edward Partridge and the deeds were made out in his name. Some portions of the real estate were subsequently sold for taxes. It will be remembered that the sect known as the Hedrickites acquired title to one plot of this ground, which they have been able to retain, notwithstanding the litigation instituted by the so-called "Reorganized" or "Josephite" body. That, however, is a comparatively small piece of land but is near to the area now acquired by this Church. It is remarkable that the latter should have remained vacant through all the changes of the years that have intervened since the Saints were driven from that place. We recognize the hand of the Lord in its preservation and its return to his Church, and look for the entire fulfillment of the predictions relating to the redemption of Zion.

The commandment concerning the possession of that spot "by purchase," still holds good and will be observed by his people. The prophecy concerning the scourging of the Saints under certain conditions "from city to city," leaving but "few to stand and receive an inheritance," has been literally fulfilled, and we may confidently look for the fulfillment of the other prediction: "Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered; they that remain, and are pure in heart, shall return and come to their inheritances, they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy to build up the waste places of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 17, 18. Read also sections 57: 1-5; 63: 25-31; 84: 2-6; 101: 99, 100 [Utah edition].

The Lord is true to his promises and faithful to all his covenants. It only remains for his people to observe all things that he has commanded, to secure the blessings predicted upon their obedience. Every word he has spoken will be fulfilled, and not one of them will fail. The step that has been taken for the redemption of Zion is a beginning of things that are at hand, and the Latter Day Saints may sing with new fervor and faith, "Zion prospers, all is well."

THE SMITH FAMILY IN A BETTER LIGHT.

The following from a New York paper will be read by the HERALD patrons with pleasure, as it puts the Smith family in a better light, and from an unbiased writer either for them or against them:

ORIGIN OF THE MORMON SMITHS.

TOPSFIELD, Massachusetts, March 26.—Few of the citizens and residents of this little village are proud of the fact, but the ancestral home of the Smiths of the Mormon Church is still standing here. The structure was built in 1690, is of the ancient style of architecture, one and a half stories high, almost square in shape and shingled all over, with a huge chimney piercing the center of the ridge pole.

In this house lived Asael Smith, grandfather of the founder of the Mormon religion, and his son Joseph, the first convert to the faith and its first presiding patriarch. The Smiths can trace their ancestry to the early colonial settlers. Robert Smith, the first of his line in this country, arrived in 1638, married Mary French and settled in Rowley, near Newburyport. He purchased two hundred and eighty acres of land and was for many years known as a modest, unassuming and honest man, always willing to aid his neighbors.

Asael Smith, son of Samuel and grandson of Robert Smith, was born here on March 7, 1774, and, his mother dying soon after his birth, was brought up by his father's second wife Priscilla. He served with the Continental Army in the Revolutionary War, and after his father's death settled down on the paternal estate. The house stands about a mile north of the center of the village, on the main road. In it was born Joseph, father of the Mormon prophet.

A broad-minded man was Asael Smith, and he preached doctrine which cause sharp comments from his neighbors. All of his children were baptized in the Congregational faith, but he was inclined to the Universalist belief. He had a slightly deformed neck, due to a burn sustained when a child, and so one of his critics remarked that "his religious beliefs are more distorted than his neck."

Asael was quite literary for those days. When the assessors of Topsfield called upon him for a schedule of his possessions, he replied with the following verse:

"I have two poles, tho' one is poor;
I have three cows and want five more;
I have no horse, but fifteen sheep—
No more than these I keep—
Steers that's two years old, one pair;
Two calves I have, all over hair;
Three heiffers, two years old, I own,
One heiffer calf that's poorly grown;
My land is acres eighty-two,
Which sarch the records youle find true,
And this is all I have in store,
I'll thank you if youle tax no more."

In writing to a friend he said: "For my part, I am so willing to trust the government of the world in the hands of the Supreme Ruler of the universal nature that I do not at present wish to wrest it out of His hands, and I have so much confidence in His abilities to reach our Senator's wisdom that I do not think it worth while for me, from the little stock of knowledge that He hath favored me with, to interpose in the affair, either one way or another."

Some time before Asael's death, he wrote a letter of farewell to his wife and children, because, he said, "I know not what leisure I shall have at the hour of my death to speak to you." His advice to his children concerning marriage is the most striking paragraph in the letter, considering the belief of his descendants to-day. He wrote:

"As to your marriages—I do not think it worth while to say much about them, for I believe God hath created the persons for each other and that nature will find its own.

"But for your children—make it your chiefest work to bring them up in the ways of virtue, that they may be useful in their generation. Give them, if possible, a good education; if nature hath made no difference, do you make none in your affections, countenances, nor portions; partiality this way begets envy, strife, and contention."

He advised his wife, if she should marry again, to remember what he had undergone from his stepmother, and not to estrange her husband from his children. He counseled his children to read the Scriptures, to consider them with reason, and "to bless God that you live in a land of liberty and bear yourself dutifully and conscionably toward the authority under which you live. See God's providence in the appointment of the Federal Constitution and hold union and order precious jewels."

Joseph Smith, third son of Asaal, moved with his father to Tunbridge, Vermont, in 1791, and assisted in clearing a large farm of a heavy growth of timber. In 1816 he moved to New York and settled in Manchester, Ontario County. While the family was living in New York State the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized with six members, and Joseph Smith, Jr., revealer of the Book of Mormon, was chosen its president. Joseph Smith, Sr., was the first to accept the testimony of his son, and in 1833 he was called to the office of presiding patriarch of the Church. The prophet Joseph and his brother Hyrum—the latter of whom succeeded his father as patriarch—when under the protection of Govenor Thomas Ford of Illinois and while awaiting trial on the charge of treason, were murdered in Carthage jail on June 24, 1844, by a mob.—New York Sun, March 27, 1904.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Delegates to General Conference are a little slow in returning to Lamoni. A number, we hear, have taken advantage of an excursion to Niagara Falls, others are stopping over at different points. The Senior Editor will spend the present week at Cleveland where he is billed to preach next Sunday (23d). He will then spend a day or two in Chicago on his way home. The Junior Editor is enroute at present and is expected daily. The Business Manager and wife returned Tuesday morning (19th). Of the missionaries Bro. J. W. Wight was the first to return, arriving Saturday the 16th. Elder D. A. Anderson and wife came Tuesday noon.

This issue of the HERALD is the third to be folded by a machine folder, the latest installation at the HERALD office. It is a labor-saver without doubt and its use will demonstrate that it pays to make use of the most modern machinery.

Patrons of the Chariton and Grant City branch of the Burlington railroad system were strongly reminded of the recent retrenchment along business lines when the midday freight trains were reduced in number. Instead of two trains each day we have one and that goes south on three days of the week and north on alternate days.

The General Conference.

Business was resumed at usual hour in the afternoon, Saturday, April 9, F. M. Smith in the chair. Prayer by C. E. Butterworth. A report was received from the committee on credentials, following which reports were read from the First, Second, and Fifth Quorums of Elders, and from the College Board of Trustees. The term of the following members of the Board of Trustees expires at this Conference: W. A. Hopkins, Frederick M. Smith, and John Smith.

A report was read from the committee on revision of the Book of Rules. They sent with their report copy of the Book of Rules with the proposed amendments indicated thereon. A motion was made to refer to a committee of five to complete the revision and publish. A substitute was offered that we take up the revision and act upon it section by section. The substitute prevailed.

We shall not attempt here to give a record of what was done, as that will appear in full in the supplement containing the minutes in full. The remainder of this session was spent on the proposed amendments, and fifty-nine sections were gone over. Adjournment was then had subject to the order.

SUNDAY, APRIL 10.

At fifteen minutes past nine a session of Sunday-school was held in the upper auditorium of the Temple, T. A. Hougas in charge. At nine o'clock the usual prayer-meeting was held in the lower auditorium, in charge of R. M. Elvin and M. H. Bond.

At a quarter to eleven the sermon was by President Joseph Smith. His effort dealt with some of the present phases of our warfare, and will probably be published in the HERALD or Ensign.

At half past two in the afternoon Heman C. Smith was the speaker. His effort was well received, and was reported and will probably appear later.

At the evening hour R. C. Evans was the speaker. At the services this day the capacity of the auditorium was taxed, and the evening hour was no exception. A very large audience listened to Elder Evans as he spoke on gospel topics.

MONDAY, APRIL 11.

The morning prayer service was conducted by W. H. Garrett and Albert Carmichael.

At the morning preaching services the speaker was S. W. L. Scott, assisted by J. W. Metcalf.

Business was resumed at fifteen minutes past two, Joseph Smith in the chair. After prayer by W. H. Kelley and the reading of the minutes, a motion was made to defer further action on the proposed amendments until other business had been disposed of. A substitute was offered that the remainder of the proposed amendments be referred to a committee of five, they to examine, revise, and prepare for publication, with authority to publish. An amendment was offered to the substitute by inserting the words, "except that portion referring to stake organization." The amendment and substitute were denied. The motion to defer prevailed.

A motion prevailed to the effect that the Bishop and business managers of the publishing department be requested to give the names of the employees of the HERALD Office and Ensign, together with the amounts they receive, to this Conference.

A report was read from the First Quorum of Seventy.

Resolutions were then read reaffirming the resolutions of April 14, 1903, relative to placing the HERALD Office employees on ministerial basis. Considerable discussion resulted, and adjournment for the day was had before coming to a vote. Benediction by F. M. Smith.

At the evening hour R. Etzenhouser was the speaker, being assisted by R. B. Howlett and W. N. Robinson.

TUESDAY, APRIL 12.

James Craig and Edward Rannie were in charge of the morning prayer services, and J. F. McDowell was the speaker at the preaching service. He was assisted by S. W. Simmons.

The afternoon business session was presided over by President Joseph Smith. Prayer was offered by W. H. Garrett.

A document from the First Presidency and Twelve relative to stake officers and their appointment was read. The document stated that when stake officers applied for missionary appointment they could be sent where deemed wise; but to send those of the stake presidency or bishopric outside of their stake would be unwise. It also stated that all missionary appointees were subject to direction of general ministers in charge, but local laborers within the stake were to be directed by the stake presidency. No action was taken on the document.

A report was read from the Second Seventy, also from the Third Quorum of Elders and the Fourth Quorum of Priests.

A report from the Bishop and business manager of the HERALD Office, in compliance with the request made yesterday, was read.

A lengthy report from the Presiding Bishop was read, also a summarized statement of the financial affairs of the Church.

The matter interrupted by temporary adjournment yesterday was taken up. A motion was offered to amend by adding the words, "with the understanding that the ministerial basis shall be so arranged as to harmonize with Doctrine and Covenants 81:4." A lengthy discussion was followed by a motion to lay the whole matter on the table. This prevailed.

A motion to take from the table the petition and appeal from J. D. Bennett was lost.

By motion the resolution passed by the Quorum of Twelve, relative to Graceland College, was taken up. The resolution and its preambles read as follows:

Whereas the maintenance of Graceland College is proving to be a serious burden in a financial way and is likely to so continue, and,

Whereas there seems to be but a minority of the members of the Church who favor its continuance, and,

Whereas the operation of a college of its character does not lie within the direct line of our appointed work as a Church, therefore,

Resolved that we favor a discontinuance of Graceland College after the close of its present term, and recommend that the property be turned over to other uses such as may be agreed upon by the Bishopric of the Church and such other councils or persons as may be chosen by the General Conference until such time as a general conference decides to reopen the college.

A motion was made to adopt.

A time limit of five minutes was fixed for speeches on this question. The remainder of the session was spent in debate, temporary adjournment being had before vote was taken.

Benediction by Joseph Smith.

The evening preaching was by R. C. Russell, he being assisted by S. O. Foss.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 13.

At nine o'clock, prayer services were in charge of I. N. Roberts and Alfred White.

At fifteen minutes to eleven, preaching by Walter L. Bennett, assisted by S. W. Simmons.

At a quarter past two in the afternoon, business was resumed. Prayer by R. C. Evans. Reports were read from the Fourth Quorum of Elders, Second Quorum of Priests, and the committee on district boundaries. The latter was adopted after being amended in one instance.

The committee to which was referred the resolutions adopted by the conference at St. Joseph reported adversely to the adoption of the resolutions. The report was adopted.

The Daughters of Zion organization made report. No business session of the society had been held this year, owing to the fact of Conference being so far from headquarters.

The table being thus cleared of routine business, the matter interrupted by adjournment yesterday was taken up, and the discussion of the resolutions presented by the Twelve. For some time the discussions continued, thirty-seven in all taking part. Finally the previous question was ordered, and before the vote was taken five persons rose in their places and demanded the yea and nay vote. This was ordered, and the audience soon broke up into delegations. About six o'clock the audience was again settled and the vote began. As it progressed all saw the vote would be very close. The vote was as follows: Yea, delegate, 755; ex officio, 95; total, 850. Nay, delegate, 741; ex officio, 85; total, 826. By the time the vote was determined it was far past six o'clock, and the doxology was sung and benediction pronounced by President Joseph Smith.

At the evening hour the speaker was Isaac M. Smith, he being assisted by A. B. Phillips.

THURSDAY, APRIL 14.

The morning prayer service was in charge of John Smith and J. Guy Munsell.

At the morning hour F. M. Cooper was the speaker. He was assisted by L. G. Gurwell.

Business was resumed at a quarter past two. session called to order by Joseph Smith. Prayer by T. A. Hougas. R. C. Evans took the chair. After the reading of the minutes, the vote as recorded yesterday was read, and verified. A request from the Fifth Quorum of Elders was read in which the Conference was asked to provide a uniform system of reporting items of ministerial labor. A motion to take up prevailed. Moved to refer to a committee of five to be appointed by chair to report to this body. Those appointed were: R. S. Salyards, D. A. Anderson, J. F. Mintun, R. M. Elvin, Leon Gould.

The following was moved: "Resolved that the writing and publishing of literature as private enterprises by parties whose time belongs to the Church by virtue of ordination or appointment, where the profits of said publication are appropriated to their private ends, is unwise and should be discouraged." This provoked considerable discussion. Several speeches were made against the resolution, and then a motion prevailed that when an equal number of speeches were made in favor of it (if so many desired) the vote should be taken. The speeches having been made, the vote was taken, resulting in the resolution being sustained.

A motion was made to take from the table the petition of J. D. Bennett. This prevailed. It was then ordered referred to a committee of three to be appointed by the chair, H. O. Smith, R. C. Russell, and W. E. Peak were so appointed.

Seven Presidents of Seventy made report recommending the following for ordination as seventy: James F. Grimes, Stephen S. Smith, S. K. Sorensen, and Levi Gamet. A report was also read from the First Quorum of Seventy recommending the same names. A motion was made to adopt the recommendations. This prevailed.

The following resolution was presented by the Quorum of Twelve: "Resolved that as a quorum we favor the continuance of Graceland College just as soon as the original debt, and the entire deficit incident to running expenses has been paid. We are also of the opinion that the committee provided for in the resolution effecting the discontinuance of the College should have authority to open it when above conditions have been complied with."

The question of appointing a council to operate with the Bishopric in the matter of designating to what purposes the college building should be put, was taken up, and a motion was made that a committee of five be appointed to act in cooperation with the Bishopric. A substitute was offered that the Board of Trustees be appointed as committee to act with the Bishopric. The substitute prevailed.

Motion prevailed to take up report of joint council of First Presidency and Twelve regarding the appointment of stake officers. The resolutions are:

First, stake officers when presenting themselves to the appointing powers for appointment may be appointed as missionaries, but to appoint the stake presidency or bishopric outside the limits of the stake, thus interfering with the operation of local organizations, would be unwise.

Second, for stake organizations to choose general church officers or men under General Conference appointment and ordain them stake officers without consent of the general body is improper.

Third, all missionaries under General Conference appointment, whether in stakes or out, are under the general direction of the minister in charge, but the stake presidency has the right to direct local laborers within the stake not under General Conference appointment.

Motion to adopt prevailed without discussion.

By motion the selection of College trustees to succeed the retiring members, W. A. Hopkins, John Smith, and Frederick M. Smith, was as follows: Frederick M. Smith, F. B. Blair, J. W. Wight.

About the usual number of announcements were made, and the benediction was pronounced.

The speaker at the evening session was J. J. Cornish, assisted by A. McMullen.

FRIDAY, APRIL 15.

Brn. J. D. White and J. A. Tanner had charge of the morning prayer services, and at the morning preaching service the speaker was A. B. Phillips, assisted by O. B. Thomas.

At the usual hour the Conference again assembled for business. Called to order by Joseph Smith, who offered prayer.

After reading of minutes, committee to which was referred the petition of J. D. Bennett made majority and minority report. The majority report recommended the calling of a "general assembly" to discuss the principle involved. The minority report recommended returning petition to petitioner.

A motion was made to adopt the minority report. A substitute was offered that the majority report be adopted. A privileged motion was entertained and passed that the President be asked to state reasons why appeal had been denied. He did so, and then a somewhat lengthy discussion followed. An attempt to order the previous question failed, and the discussion proceeded. The discussion was very largely upon the question of whether the First Presidency had the right to determine whether an appealed case should or should not be taken before the High Council. The previous question was again moved, and prevailed. The vote was taken, and resulted in the adoption of the minority report.

Report was read from the committee to whom was referred the question from the Eastern Colorado District as to the age limit before which children could not be baptized. The age of accountability, in their judgment, was of more importance than number of years, hence thought no arbitrary action necessary. A motion to adopt was followed by some discussion, when a motion to lay it on the table was made and sustained.

The reading of a part of one of the reports of the First Seventy concerning the baptism of children to the effect that children not eight years of age were not eligible for baptism was read. A motion to adopt was made and carried.

By motion the amendments to Book of Rules were taken up. A motion was then made to defer the whole matter for another year. It was lost. The proposed amendments were taken up, and a motion made to adopt as far as section one hundred and fifty-two. This was adopted, and the proposed amendments to the sections concerning elders' courts were taken up section by section, as far as the committee had reported.

Reports from the Seven Presidents of Seventy and the First Quorum of Seventy recommending C. H. Rich for ordination as Seventy. The recommendation was approved and the ordination ordered provided for.

The committee on form of report blanks reported, and the report was amended and then adopted. The report as amended provided that no administrations to the sick should be reported, and that only the spokesman in confirmations and ordinations should report items.

A report of progress was read from Committee on American Archaeology. The Committee urged that caution be used in utilizing reports of so-called archaeological discoveries.

Reports were then read from the Quorum of High Priests and from the officers of the Sunday-school Association, and from the Board of Publication. No action was taken on them.

The usual announcements were made, the doxology sung, and the benediction pronounced by Joseph Smith.

Preaching at the evening hour by Arthur Allen, assisted by Jacob Reese.

SATURDAY, APRIL 16.

The morning services were in charge of G. A. Smith and W. A. McDowell.

At the morning preaching services J. W. Peterson was the speaker, being assisted by G. C. Tomlinson.

At the usual hour business was resumed, Joseph Smith in the chair. Prayer by Joseph Luff. After the reading of the minutes, reports were read from the Second Quorum of Seventy and Fifth Quorum of Elders. The report of the Board of Editors was read. Some suggestions for the improvement of the work in the financial department were mentioned. The report generally reflected satisfactory condition.

Bishop Kelley stated Bishop Ellis Short had selected T. J. Sheppard as one of his counselors, and his ordination was asked for. A motion was made that his ordination be provided for. This motion was lost. The reason for the denial was undoubtedly that the Conference objected to one of the seventy being taken from the service.

President Joseph Smith presented the following names for ordination as high priests: O. H. Storey, A. B. Kirkendall, D. C. White, and J. R. McClain, as having been recommended to and concurred in by the Presidency. On separate motions the recommendations were in each instance approved and the ordinations ordered provided for. By motion the ordination of those not present was referred to the respective ministers in charge.

A motion prevailed that in remainder of sessions, speeches be limited to five minutes.

The president stated that G. P. Lambert, who a year or two ago had been indorsed for ordination as bishop, had expressed his willingness to accept the ordination if the body so desired. A motion prevailed ordering his ordination provided for.

The amendments to Book of Rules were then taken up beginning at section 160.

The remainder of the afternoon session was spent on the amendments to the Book of Rules. About half past five adjournment was had till half past seven.

At half past seven business was resumed. Prayer by Joseph Smith. After the reading of the minutes F. A. Russell and O. H. Bailey sang a duet, one they use when doing street work. It was so well received that another was asked for, and F. A. Russell and H. E. Moler responded.

The Book of Rules amendments were taken up and finished, and then adopted as a whole.

After some minor matters were disposed of, the votes on the sustaining of the Church officers were taken. The following were so sustained: The First Presidency, the Twelve, the Church Secretary, Quorums of Seventy, Presiding Bishopric, the other bishops and counselors, the standing High Council, Quorum of High Priests, Order of Evangelists, Seven Presidents of Seventy; the quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, Henry A. Stebbins as Church Recorder, Church Historian and assistant, Committee on Revision of Church History, Board of Publication, Committee on Archæology, the Sunday-school Association, Religio Society, the Daughters of Zion, the Prayer Union, the Patronesses of Grace-land College, the Ladies Auxilliary, the HERALD, the Ensign, Hope, and Autumn Leaves, the Committee on Conference with the Church of Christ, the Board of Auditors, Committee on Railway privileges, the Committee on Tracts, the Committee on Church Organization in Canada. The question of Assistant Church Recorder was referred to First Presidency.

A motion prevailed that the Board of Publication be authorized to issue the Book of Rules as soon as practicable.

The following appointments were then read:

APPOINTMENTS OF THE TWELVE BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

- W. H. Kelley, Rocky Mountain Mission.
- Heman C. Smith, Southern Mission, comprising what was formerly the Southeastern and Southwestern Missions.
- Joseph Luff, California Mission, comprising California, Arizona, Nevada.
- J. W. Wight, Michigan, Indiana, Northern Illinois, and Wisconsin.
- G. T. Griffiths, Northwestern Mission, comprising Oregon, Washington, British Columbia, and what is known as the Panhandle of Idaho.
- I. N. White, Missouri, Kansas, Southern and Central Illinois, and that portion of Arkansas and Indian Territory included in the Spring River District.
- F. M. Sheehy and U. W. Greene, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Eastern and Middle States, District of Columbia, Ohio, West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, and Eastern Kentucky.
- F. A. Smith, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, North and South Dakotas.
- J. W. Rushton, British Isles.
- Peter Anderson, Scandinavia.
- C. A. Butterworth, Australia, and New Zealand.
- The Canada Mission, by joint agreement of First Presidency and Twelve, was left in charge of R. C. Evans.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY AND THE QUORUM OF THE TWELVE.

Evangelical Ministers.

- Bailey, J. J., Northern and Eastern Michigan.
- Butterworth, C. E., Gallands Grove District.
- Derry, Charles, Little Sioux and Pottawattamie Districts.
- Kemp, Henry, Independence Stake.
- Lake, John H., Indiana, Southern Michigan, Northern Illinois, and Wisconsin.
- Lambert, J. R., Southern Iowa and Northern Missouri.

High Priests.

- Baker, J. M., Little Sioux District, Sioux City objective point.
- Bond, Myron H., Northeastern Illinois District, Chicago objective point.
- Bullard, Richard, Massachusetts District.
- Burton, J. F., Northern and Central California.
- Caffall, James, Western Iowa.
- Campbell, Duncan, Lamoni Stake.
- Carmichael, Albert, Southern California.
- Closson, A. V., Northern Wisconsin.
- Cochran, A. S., Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana.
- Cook, M. H., Tri-cities, Davenport, Iowa, Moline and Rock Island, Illinois.
- Crabb, J. C., Eastern Oregon District, Portland objective point.
- Davies, J. T., Spring River District.
- Elvin, R. M., Pittsburg District and West Virginia.
- Evans, John R., Lamoni Stake.
- Godbey, G. H., Southeastern Mission.
- Goodrich, V. M., Kirtland District, Ohio.
- Grant, John A., Northern Michigan.
- Green, George, Canada.

Hulmes, G. H., Independence Stake.
 Hunt, C. J., Gallands Grove District.
 Jeffers, S. J., Ohio.
 Jones, A. E., Southern California.
 Leverton, Arthur, Canada.
 Longhurst, R. C., Canada.
 May, Roderick, Independence Stake.
 McDowell, W. A., Wisconsin.
 Moler, James, Clinton District.
 Montague, George, Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District.
 Mortimer, A. E., Canada.
 Nunley, E. W., Texas.
 Parsons, A. H., Independence Stake.
 Pitt, F. G., New York and Philadelphia District.
 Roberts, I. N., Far West District, Missouri.
 Smith, Elbert A., Burlington, Iowa.
 Smith, George A., Northwestern Ohio.
 Smith, John, Lamoni Stake.
 Stedman, Eli A., Minnesota.
 Tanner, J. A., Northeastern Missouri District.
 Taylor, Thomas, Leeds District, England.
 Terry, J. M., Northern California District, Oakland and San Francisco objective points.
 Turpin, M. M., Fremont and Pottawattamie Districts, Iowa.
 Waldsmith, J. W., Southern Nebraska District.
 Waller, G. J., Hawaii Territory, in charge.
 White, Alfred, Independence Stake.
 Williams, T. W., Southern California.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE QUORUM OF THE TWELVE.

Seventies.

Allen, Arthur, St. Louis District.
 Aylor, W. M., Oklahoma and Indian Territory.
 Baker, A. M., Southern Missouri District.
 Bailey, O. H., Kewanee District, Illinois.
 Baldwin, Richard, Pittsburg District and Western Pennsylvania.
 Barmore, A. C., Australasia.
 Beatty, T. J., Ohio District until October, then Southeastern Mission.
 Beckley, J. R., Kirtland District, Ohio.
 Berve, Amos, Kewanee, Illinois.
 Bozarth, W. T., Colorado Mission.
 Burr, C. H., Eastern Iowa District, Clinton objective point.
 Case, Hubert, Oklahoma.
 Case, Oscar, Eastern Iowa District.
 Chambers, D. R., Fremont and Pottawattamie Districts.
 Chase, A. M., Rocky Mountain Mission.
 Chatburn, F. J., Spokane District.
 Chatburn, T. W., Washington.
 Clapp, J. C., Arizona.
 Condit, S. D., Rocky Mountain Mission.
 Cooper, F. M., Northeastern Illinois District and Wisconsin.
 Cornish, J. J., Northern and Eastern Michigan.
 Crumley, C. E., Southern California.
 Curtis, J. F., Colorado Mission.
 Davies, E. A. Northeastern Illinois District.
 Davies, J. Arthur, Kewanee District, Illinois, to take the field September 1.
 Davis, John, Far West District, Missouri.
 Davis, John Alfred, Southern Kansas.
 Devore, L. R., Kirtland and Ohio District.
 Ebeling, F. J., Eastern Mission.
 Ellis, W. D., Southern Michigan.
 Enge, N. C., Far West District.
 Erwin, E. A., Indian Territory.
 Erwin, J. D., Indian Territory.
 Etzenhouser, Rudolph, St. Louis District.
 Foss, John C., Central California.

Foss, S. O., Ohio and West Virginia.
 Fry, Charles, Omaha, Nebraska, and vicinity.
 Goodrich, J. L., Eastern Kentucky.
 Gowell, M. F., Northeastern Kansas District.
 Greenwood, William H., Sheffield District, England.
 Gregory, Frederick, Canada.
 Hansen, H. N., Rocky Mountain Mission.
 Hanson, P. M., Australasia.
 Haworth, W. J., Australasia.
 Hayer, Eli, South Dakota east of the Missouri River.
 Hensen, E. L., Northeastern Texas.
 Holt, H. L., Oregon.
 Howlett, R. B., Canada.
 Jackson, J. W., Arkansas and Louisiana.
 Jenkins, George, Southern Indiana.
 Kaler, John, Northeastern Missouri District.
 Keck, F. C., Spring River District.
 Kelley, T. C., Southeastern Mission.
 Kephart, W. H., Lamoni Stake.
 Layland, A. J., Rocky Mountain Mission.
 Lentz, J. B., New York.
 Macrae, W. S., Independence Stake.
 Marshall, W. C., Southern Indiana.
 McCoy, H. A., Minnesota.
 McDowell, J. F., Little Sioux District.
 McKiernan, James, Eastern Iowa and Nauvoo District.
 Metcalf, J. W., Kentucky.
 Mintun, J. F., Des Moines District, Des Moines objective point.
 Moler, H. E., Kewanee District, Illinois.
 Morgan, E. B., Wales.
 Morgan, J. W., Colorado Mission, in charge.
 Muceus, Peter, Scandinavian.
 Omans, F. D., Minnesota.
 Payne, S. D., Western Nebraska and Black Hills.
 Peak, Warren E., Rocky Mountain Mission.
 Pender, W. S., Rocky Mountain Mission.
 Peterson, J. W., Nauvoo District.
 Phelps, Levi, Northern Michigan.
 Phillips, A. B., New York.
 Porter, C. H., Southern Nebraska District.
 Renfro, B. F., Northwestern Texas, Southwestern Oklahoma.
 Riley, J. T., Spring River District.
 Roberts, J. W., Virginia and West Virginia.
 Roth, John S., Des Moines District, Iowa.
 Rudd, D. M., Galland's Grove District, Iowa.
 Russel, F. A., Kewanee District, Illinois.
 St. John, Benjamin, Canada.
 Scott, Columbus, Southern California.
 Scott, M. R., Jr., Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan.
 Scott, S. W. L., Fremont and Pottawattamie Districts, Iowa.
 Self, R. O., Western Nebraska and Black Hills.
 Self, Walter M., Central and Northern Nebraska Districts.
 Sheldon, N. V., Des Moines District, Iowa.
 Sheldon, T. J., Far West District.
 Sheppard, T. J., Northeastern Texas and Choctaw Districts.
 Shields, John, Canada.
 Shinn, D. L., West Virginia.
 Simmons, S. W., Indian Territory.
 Slover, F. M., Spring River District.
 Smith, David, Northern Michigan.
 Smith, Hyrum O., Southwestern Mission.
 Smith, Isaac M., Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan.
 Smith, Walter W., New York and Philadelphia District.
 Smith, Willard J., St. Louis District.
 Smith, William A., Little Sioux District, Iowa.
 Smith W. R., Until July Independence Stake, then Southeastern Mission.
 Snow, C. L., Southwestern Mission.

Sparling, Henry, Southern Missouri District.
 Spurlock, C. J., Southeastern Illinois District.
 Stead, J. D., Rocky Mountain Mission.
 Stubbart, J. M., Colorado Mission.
 Sutton, J. R., Southern Nebraska District.
 Swenson, Swen, Rocky Mountain Mission.
 Thomas, O. B., Seattle and British Columbia Districts.
 Thorburn, George W., Southern Michigan, Galien objective point.

Tomlinson, G. C., Canada.
 Tucker, D. E., Australasia with permission to return to America and labor in Northeastern Missouri District September 1, 1904.

Walters, R. T., Central Illinois District.
 Wells, Gomer R., Australasia.
 Whiteaker, A. L., Wisconsin.
 White, D. C., Lamoni Stake.
 Wight, Romanan, Central and Northern Nebraska Districts.
 Wildermuth, E. M., Northeastern Illinois and Wisconsin.
 Wood, Leroy G., Minnesota.

Appointments of Elders.

Allen, D. L., Kirtland District, Ohio.
 Anderson, D. A., Kirtland District, Ohio.
 Avery, C., Australasia.
 Baker, A. A., Colorado Mission.
 Baker, J. H., Northwestern Oklahoma.
 Baldwin, D. R., Arkansas.
 Barr, Andrew, Eastern Michigan.
 Becker, J. A., Pittsburg and Kirtland District.
 Beebe, G. W., Sr., Clinton District, Missouri.
 Belkham, C. F., Southern Texas.
 Bell, T. J., Washington.
 Bennett, W. L., Canada.
 Booker, W. J., Southern Mississippi.
 Booker, W. L., Southeastern Mission.
 Bryan, J. W., Texas.
 Burr, A. E., Northern Michigan.
 Burt, G. W., Northern Michigan.
 Christy, Wardell, Des Moines District, Iowa.
 Cohrt, F. E., Galland's Grove District.
 Condit, J. H., Rocky Mountain Mission.
 Craig, James, Pittsburg and West Virginia Districts.
 Crawley, D. S., Oklahoma.
 Davis, James T., Southern Missouri.
 Davison, H. J., Maritime Provinces.
 Davis, William, Eastern Michigan.
 Dice, B. J., Far West District, Missouri.
 Durand, E. H., Western Ohio.
 Dutton, Jasper O., Wisconsin.
 Fields, S. H., Kentucky and Tennessee.
 Flinn, Peter A., Southern Indiana.
 Gamet, Levi, Northern and Central Nebraska Districts.
 Gibson, William, Southern California.
 Gilbert, J. W., Northern California and Nevada.
 Goodenough, E. J., Eastern Michigan.
 Goodwin, E. A., Northern Michigan.
 Granger, Francis, Southern Michigan.
 Graves, George H., Kentucky and Tennessee.
 Grimes, J. F., Northeastern Texas.
 Haden, W. E., Nodaway District, Missouri.
 Hall, Robert, Australasia.
 Hampshire, George, Canada.
 Hansen, John H., Scandinavia.
 Harder, H. R., Indian Territory.
 Harp, John, Central Texas.
 Hawkins, John, Society Islands.
 Hawn, O. J., Eastern Michigan.
 Hinkle, S. J., Oklahoma.

Houghton, Leonard, North Dakota for nine months.
 Huff, James, Northern Nebraska District.
 Irwin, C. E., Nauvoo District.
 Jenkins, J. G., Wales.
 Jones, J. H. N., Australasia.
 Keeler, E. E., Oregon.
 Kehauri, Society Islands.
 Kelley, J. E., Rocky Mountain Mission.
 Kelley, W. H., Kentucky and Tennessee.
 Kemp, James, Colorado Mission.
 Knisley, Alvin, Canada.
 Kronberg, Nikolai, Scandinavia.
 LaRue, W. E., Eastern Maine.
 Lewis, C. G., Michigan.
 Livingstone, S. E., Wisconsin.
 Mackie, William, Australasia.
 McClain, J. R., Kentucky and Tennessee.
 McMullen, Alexander, Canada.
 Madden, S. J., Northwestern Kansas.
 Madison, A. E., Southern Nebraska District.
 Mannering, W. H., Central Illinois District.
 Mortimer, J. L., Canada.
 Munsell, J. Guy, Eastern Mission.
 Newton, William, Southern England.
 Paxton, Jesse W., Clinton District.
 Peters, C. J., Des Moines District.
 Phillips, T. A., Canada.
 Pickering, W. P., Arkansas.
 Pierce, F. J., Leeds District, England.
 Place, William, Canada.
 Pori, Society Islands.
 Pou Haroatea, Society Islands.
 Prettyman, C. W., Western Nebraska and Black Hills.
 Quick, Lee, Southern Kansas.
 Rannie, Edward, Eastern Iowa District.
 Rich, C. H., Maritime Provinces.
 Robertson, E. F., South Dakota east of Missouri River.
 Robinson, W. P., Wisconsin.
 Russell, R. C., Canada.
 Sawley, F. L., Southeastern Illinois District.
 Schmidt, E. P., Kirtland and Ohio Districts.
 Schreur, John, Northern Michigan.
 Shippy, George M., Detroit, Michigan.
 Silvers, A. C., Clinton District, Missouri.
 Smith, G. H., Massachusetts District.
 Smith, S. S., Oklahoma.
 Sorensen, S. K., Des Moines District.
 Southwick, Henry, Northeastern Illinois District.
 Sparling, William, North Dakota seven months.
 Stroh, Samuel, Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana.
 Summerfield, W. E., Far West District, Missouri.
 Tamia, Society Islands.
 Taueterau, Society Islands.
 Tapuni Aporo, Society Islands.
 Teihoarii, Society Islands.
 Tomlinson, Samuel W., Canada.
 Turner, Warren, Eastern Iowa District.
 Tuteirihia A. Pamanu, Society Islands.
 Tuteirihia A. Tehopea, Society Islands.
 Twombly, Samuel, Northeastern Kansas District.
 Ullum, L. D., Pittsburg District.
 Vanderwood, J. E., Rocky Mountain Mission.
 Varoa A. Moo, Society Islands.
 Vaughn, J. C., Nodaway District.
 Ward, F. S., Northwestern Kansas District.
 Washburn, G. D., Southern Michigan.
 White, Ammon, Independence Stake, Kansas City objective point.
 White, T. R., Clinton District.

Wight, L. L., Texas.
 Wildermuth, J. B., Eastern Iowa District.
 Wildermuth, J. E., Central Illinois District.
 Williams, J. L., West Virginia District.
 Willey, C. E., Minnesota.
 Winegar, George, Spokane District.

Priests.

Baggerly, James M., Eastern Michigan.
 Boswell, J. J., Southern Indiana.
 Brookover, George J., Wisconsin.
 Carlisle, J. C., Seattle and British Columbia District.
 Davis, J. W., Eastern Michigan.
 Ellis, M. G., Southern Michigan.
 Farrell, R. W., Eastern Mission.
 Fuller, W. H., Southern Indiana.
 Harp, Charles E., Southern Indiana.
 Higdon, Amos T., Southern Kansas.
 Jassen, Peter, Scandinavia.
 Joehnk, C. C., Northern Germany.
 Lambkin, B. S., Northern Michigan.
 Long, E. E., Ohio District.
 Mengel, E. F., Western Oregon District.
 Paxton, J. W., Clinton District.
 Teeters, J. A., Northwestern Kansas.
 Thomas, Myron E., Pittsburg District and Western Pennsylvania.
 Titi, Society Islands.

By motion the Secretary was instructed to publish in his minutes the fact that the committee on revision of Book of Rules had reported, the proposed amendments had been acted upon, and the book as amended ordered published.

Adjourned subject to order. Benediction by Joseph Smith.

SUNDAY, APRIL 16.

At the prayer-meeting, which assembled at half past eight, there were three ordinations performed by Brn. U. W. Greene and G. T. Griffiths. C. H. Rich was ordained a seventy, O. H. Storey was ordained a high priest, and Charles E. Harp an elder. The prayer-meeting was in charge of President Joseph Smith and A. E. Mortimer.

At fifteen minutes to eleven o'clock in the forenoon the speaker was Frederick M. Smith. He was assisted by O. H. Bailey.

At half past two Joseph Smith was the speaker, assisted by Bishop Kelley.

The speaker at the evening hour was T. C. Kelley. At the close of this meeting a motion prevailed that the Conference adjourn, and the Conference of 1904 was at an end.

April.

The swallows circle, the robin calls;
 The lark's song rises, faints and falls;
 The peach-boughs blush with rosiest bloom;
 Like ghosts, in the twilight, the pear-trees loom;
 The maples glow, and the daffodils
 Wear the same hue that the west sky fills;
 The moon's young crescent, thin and bright,
 Shines in the blue of the early night;
 And over all, through all, April bears
 A hope that smiles at the Winter's fears.

—Sarah Andrew Shafer, in the Outlook.

Selected Articles.

RECENT PRESS REPORTS AND EDITORIAL COMMENTS.

FOR A JOSEPH SMITH MEMORIAL BUILDING.

Following is the full text of the resolution introduced at this afternoon's session of Conference, by President John R. Winder:

"Whereas nearly sixty years have passed since the martyrdom of the Prophet and Patriarch Joseph and Hyrum Smith and no public building or monument has been erected to their memory,

"Therefore be it resolved by this General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, that a suitable building or monument be erected to their memory; that the trustee-in-trust appoint a committee to prepare plans for the same, which shall be submitted to him, and when approved he will authorize the committee to proceed with the work and will furnish the necessary means from such funds as may be available for that purpose, and that a book be opened at the Presiding Bishop's office to receive voluntary subscriptions from any who wished to donate."

The resolution was adopted and on motion the following committee was named to carry out the provisions of the same: President John R. Winder, President Francis M. Lyman, Bishop W. B. Preston, and Bishop George Romney.—Deseret Evening News, April 6, 1904.

OUR DEAR MORMON FRIENDS.

There is a distinct lull in the storm. Many people are professing to have reached the conclusion that our dear Mormon friends of the Utah valley are perhaps not so bad after all. We note that some of our most esteemed rosewater contemporaries are venturing the opinion that possibly the followers of Brigham Young and Joseph Smith are not as bad as they have been painted.

This perceptible softening of opinion has been especially noticeable since the declaration promulgated by the authorities of the Mormon Church a few days ago to the effect that no plural marriages have been sanctioned since eighteen hundred and ninety and that plural marriages in the future will result in excommunication of those who become party thereto.

Americans are wonderfully slow to become aroused upon some matters. It is a part of their philosophy to always hope for the best. And evil in the body politic seldom attracts any serious attention until it has developed into an ulcerous formation and the blood of the entire system has become more or less contaminated. There is a psychological phase of this question which the majority seem prone to overlook. Everybody who is at all conversant with the subject knows that polygamy in the past has been a part of the Mormon creed. We all know that leaders in the Mormon Church are living with several wives at the present time. Within thirty days leading newspapers have published half page pictures of Joseph Smith, his five wives and forty-three children.

We submit that if the present moral code was handed down by what civilized society is wont to concede to be divine authority, then Joseph Smith and all others of the same stripe are open and notorious criminals. By no standard of reasoning can it be held that it is proper that Mormons may have their conduct regulated by one code of morals and the other forty-four States of the Union regulated by an entirely different one.

Furthermore, if this moral virus is in the Mormon blood any promise which Joseph Smith or any other Mormon apostle may make is subject to an overwhelming discount the moment that it is made. If a man in Polk County known to be maintaining a relationship toward society similar to that of Joseph Smith should be summoned to give testimony in our local district court, and the character of that relationship was known to the attorney of the opposing side, his testimony would be so badly impeached that it would never be considered by the jury except in the light of a joke.

Utah, however, is a sovereign State. She has two United States senators and one representative. She also has three electoral votes. And in view of the fact that elections are sometimes close and voters are badly needed these questions must be handled with extreme delicacy.

It is a cold day for principle when expediency crosses its path.—Des Moines Capital for April 11, 1904.

THE CASE AGAINST SMOOT.

The secular papers published in Salt Lake City sustain President Smith in his testimony to the effect that polygamy is rapidly dying out in Utah. It will be remembered that President Smith swore that the Church census of 1890 disclosed two thousand, four hundred and fifty-one families living in polygamous relations whereas the Church census of last year showed less than one thousand. Speaking of these figures, the Salt Lake papers declare that whether or not the numbers are correct, there can be no doubt of the general statement that polygamy is practiced less and less each year by the adherents of Mormonism.

Such being the case, what could be more ridiculous than the statement of Senator Dubois, of Idaho, before the Senate investigating committee? The Senator, it will be remembered, declared that "the solution of the Mormon question must be made here and now or the whole country will suffer and the foundations of the Government will be weakened." To this he added the dark prediction that unless the Senate "throttled Mormonism" the "terrible curse will spread into the Eastern regions." The Idaho man seems to have copied after some of the hysterical Populists of Kansas who saw flames shooting up, waves of fire and blood coming, the whole population in the grasp of the octopus, and things going to pot generally. The moral sense of the people of the United States will continue to be shocked so long as polygamy exists to any extent anywhere. But what is the use of lying about or exaggerating a condition which is exterminating itself with a surprising degree of rapidity?

We observe in the Literary Digest of the current week selections on this subject from the religious papers of the country. The only one which discusses the Reed Smoot case in the light of constitutional rights or limitations is the New York Independent, which can not see how the Utah senator can be excluded on the charges so far preferred against him. The rest of the list give expression to their sentimental or moral convictions. They charge that Mr. Smoot is intimately associated with a lot of men who practice polygamy; he should be thrown out of the Senate as a protest against the sins of his friends. The nearest any of them comes to giving a sound reason for such an action is in the statement that "he is bound so closely to his religious organization that he will stand for it against the interests of the United States government." This view seems to be predicated on the belief that the people of Utah are in antagonism to the American government; that they wish to impede or destroy it. It assumes that the Mormon Church is in some degree an enemy of our form of government, and that a senator from Utah can not be trusted to stand by the flag of his country. Yet, there is not a scintilla of evidence to sustain such a view of the people of Utah or the church of Mormon. Aside from the matter of polygamy there is nothing in Mormonism to shock the moral sense or to cause it to be regarded as a menace to our form of government. On the contrary, the Mormons are rather above the average of American citizenship in education, intelligence, thrift and uprightness, and they are towers of patriotism when compared to others of the general citizenship who are permitted without question to form themselves into associations for the overthrow of our government or to turn our civilization topsy-turvy.

The point we are trying to come at is that polygamy in Utah has reduced itself to a point where it can rightly be treated as merely an individual crime. President Smith and his fellows who boast of living in adulterous relations with half a dozen women ought to be sent to the penitentiary like common criminals. If Senator Smoot were a polygamist, like Roberts, he should be denied a seat in the Senate on the ground that a criminal is not fit to sit in the highest representative body of the land. But the evidence shows that Senator Smoot has been against polygamy in both practice and teaching, and that it is due to his kind of people in Utah that the practice is disappearing. We can not take stock in the idea that the Mormon Church is a hierarchy antagonistic to the republican forms of government, and that every member of the Church has forfeited the right to political place or honor by the mere fact of his membership. It would have been far more reasonable to have barred the Populist congressmen from Kansas a few years ago, every one of whom was babbling about "bullets instead of ballots" and doing his best to incite a rebellion against the Washington government. Neither in precept nor practice has the Mormon Church arrayed itself against the authority of the United States government, save that in territorial days it disobeyed the statutes against polygamy. To hold those who opposed polygamy and did not practice it equally guilty with those who did would be equivalent to denying every citizen of Leavenworth or Atchison the right to political office because these towns are defying the State laws and the constitution of Kansas by licensing joints.

It seems to us that the only question before the country with respect to Mormonism is how best to blot out polygamy. To sensible thinking men it would seem that the strongest way the Federal Government could exercise an influence in this direction is to seat those from Utah who come clean handed, and to kick out those who come boasting or confessing their crimes.—Kansas City Journal, March 28, 1904.

"REVELATIONS" MADE TO ORDER.

Apparently President Smith of the Mormon Church was indescribably shocked to discover that polygamy is still practiced by some of his followers in defiance of the law of the State and the "revelations" of the Church. At the annual conference he told several thousand of the assembled Saints that the contracting of new polygamous or plural marriages is forbidden and that violation renders the culprit liable to excommunication.

It is reported that his hearers were surprised, and no wonder. This is the second time that the Mormon Church has renounced this article of its faith, but what reason is there to expect that this second renunciation is worth more than the first? It is reported that President Smith was spurred to action by the disclosures already made and in prospect before the Smoot committee. Considering the fact that President Smith himself made the most startling of these disclosures, defiantly justified his action and declared that it was based on a divine "revelation" it is not easy to accept this explanation. Apparently he has had another "revelation," which in due time will doubtless be made obsolete by still another of directly opposite purport. Only the other day Senator Smoot indulged in a bitter tirade against polygamy.

In fact both these utterances bear an unpleasant resemblance to stage thunder, and the Gentiles may be pardoned for suspecting that both were made for the sake of clearing Mr. Smoot's title to his Senate seat. The investigation has already revealed that polygamy is not dead but sleeping, and not very sound asleep at that. If President Smith justifies it on the strength of one "revelation" and then condemns it on the authority of another, what is to prevent an infinite series of "revelations," each made to suit any emergency with which the Church may find itself confronted? These revelations made to order may prove to be a whole armory of two-edged swords.—Cleveland Plain Dealer, April 8, 1904.

A MORMON PROMISE.

In the official declaration on the subject of polygamy made at the conference of the Saints day before yesterday, President Smith affirms that since 1890 no plural marriages have been solemnized with the consent or knowledge of the Church. He prohibits such marriages, and says all who enter into or solemnize them will be dealt with by the Church as transgressors, and may be excommunicated. The members of the Church indorsed the declaration and said they would support its enforcement.

Excommunication is not the serious matter it was in Brigham Young's day. Church punishments for plural marriages, if any there be, may fall lightly on the offenders. It would have been more to the point if President Smith had promised his aid and that of the church organization in supplying the criminal courts with evidence against violators of anti-polygamy laws. Nowadays a penitentiary sentence is worse than excommunication.

The pledges of President Smith and other leading Mormons carry some weight. There are persons who will say that no Mormon can be believed where the polygamy question is concerned, but that is going altogether too far. When a considerable number of men unite in a statement it is wiser to believe that they are telling the truth until they can be proved to be liars.

If the Mormons are now ready permanently and absolutely to abandon polygamy they should be encouraged, not discouraged.—Chicago Tribune, April 8, 1904.

SMOOT IN THE SENATE REPRESENTS CRIME.

The unseating of Smoot would be a staggering blow to polygamous Mormonism. He represents not his State, but the Church whose officer and servant he is.

Nearly half the population of Utah is composed of Gentiles. Many of the younger Mormons that have received a modern education and been brought under the influence of Gentile conditions of life are opposed to polygamy, some openly, but more secretly.

These young Mormons would be greatly gratified by the rejection of Smoot. They would regard it as beneficial to the Church, which they want to see purged of polygamy and out of politics. They rejoiced in the ousting of Roberts.

With Mormonism minus polygamy the American people have no concern. Under our Constitution a man has as clear a right to be a Mormon as to belong to any other religious sect. But while Mormonism means polygamy it is a crime, not only in morals, but under the law of Utah itself. Smoot, who represents the polygamous element, the ruling element, of his Church, comes to Washington asking in effect that this crime be condoned and encouraged by the Senate of the United States.

To give Smoot the seat to which he was chosen by the polygamous masters of the Mormon Church would be to stay progress in Utah, to abandon the Gentiles there to the rule of lawbreakers, and to dishearten the young Mormons that desire to wash from their Church the foul stain of plural marriage, and advance it to the status of a decent religious organization.

Mormonism, as President Smith and Apostle Smoot typify it, is a repulsive anachronism, a dangerous plague-spot, a gross offense to the nation's moral sense. It is shameless in its defiant lawlessness and deserves at the Senate's hands in the case of Smoot exactly the same treatment it received when Roberts was flung from the House of Representatives.—Chicago Examiner, April 6, 1904.

THE ANTI-POLYGAMY EDICT.

"This [the edict] is explicit enough," declares the Washington Times, "but it won't satisfy the politicians. What the latter are after is to break the church's political power. That's the long and short of it." On the other hand, the New York Evening Mail says that this manifesto "is a virtual confession that the similar prohibition issued by Woodruff in 1890, which paved the way for Utah's admission to the Union, was not meant to be obeyed. If that was real, what should be the necessity of another prohibition now? And if that was not obeyed, what assurance is there that this will be?" The Washington Star remarks: "It is feared that the renunciation of polygamy by the Mormons is something similar to the evacuation of Manchuria by the Russians, which never occurred except in theory."

The New York Globe calls this "more Mormon hypocrisy" in that the statement comes from men who are polygamists themselves. To quote: "The literature of hypocrisy was permanently enriched by the remarkable proceedings which occurred in Salt Lake City yesterday. Plural marriages are henceforth forbidden, said Joseph F. Smith, president of the Mormon Church, a man who last month at Washington confessed to five wives and a half hundred children. Plural marriages are henceforth forbidden, said Apostle Francis M. Lyman, vice-president of the Church, a man who acknowledges three wives and a score of children. That Satan may be rebuked by sin—was it ever more cantingly exemplified? What mouthpiece does the Mormon Church use to convince the public that it is sincerely desirous that Utah shall respect the terms of the compact made with the nation?

"It will be noted, however, that in the new Mormon Church declaration there is not one word or syllable of a word in condemnation of polygamous cohabitation. Yet polygamous cohabitation was as much condemned by the Edmunds Law as the contraction of a new polygamous marriage. This Edmunds law was spread on the statute-books of Utah when the State was admitted, and of the law Smith, Lyman, et al., are unblushing violators. As such violators the Mormon Church places them in the seats of the highest honor and authority. They profess no repentance—they make no promises concerning the future. They present themselves in the aspect of the thief who acknowledges his theft, yet refuses to restore the stolen goods.

"Not until Mormon leaders take themselves out of the law-breaking class can decrees they fashion be regarded other than as clumsy attempts to hoodwink the nation into desisting from anti-polygamy measures in order that polygamy itself may again flourish. Such proceedings as those at Salt Lake City are to be regarded as nothing more than as adding the offense of more lying to a catalogue already long."—Literary Digest for April 16, 1904.

WHAT TO DO WITH MORMONISM.

The newspaper plans for dealing with Mormonism and polygamy range all the way from suggestions that Mormonism be "stamped out" or "cut out," to suggestions that the silent but resistless force of American sentiment and civilization advancing into Utah will itself slowly kill polygamy, without any action by Congress. The Richmond Times-Dispatch exclaims that Mormonism "must be stamped out!" and a number of other papers, like the New York Times, the Philadelphia Press, the New Orleans Times-Democrat, and the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, regard the Mormons as lawbreakers and criminals who deserve little or no consideration. Congressman Hearst's New York American is shocked at the revelations of immorality made in the Smoot case, and says that Mormonism "must be cut out." Not to unseat Smoot, it adds, "would be an outrage on morals." The Washington Post, on the other hand, thinks that no progress can be achieved "by advocating revolutionary proceedings," and believes that the evil will be eradicated "by the resistless advance of a civilization that brands it as a thing abhorrent." The St. Louis Globe-Democrat, too, regards extreme measures as unnecessary. It says:

"It is certain in any case that this vice will be extirpated soon by the death of the persons indulging in it. No plural marriages, according to Smith, have been made by the Church or with its knowledge since 1890. The younger element of the Mormons have been against it ever since the railroads abolished the Great American Desert and brought Utah into the current of the world's affairs. More and more Utah will be compelled to conform to the world's ideas. The twin relic will soon be as dead as its old partner, slavery, and, like its partner, there will be no resurrection for it. Let the statutes be enforced against the polygamists. An antipolygamy amendment to the Constitution is not needed, and very likely could not pass the requisite number of States. As Utah could not be turned out of statehood without its own consent, the talk about expulsion is absurd."

It appears that several influences are at work in Utah to end polygamy. One is the increasing public sentiment against it, just referred to. Another is the opposition of the large and growing non-Mormon or "Gentile" population, who are deeply stirred by President Smith's statement in Washington that the Utah people are "broad-minded" and tolerate polygamy, and who are discussing the formation of an anti-Mormon political party in the State. A third, and perhaps the most interesting, influence is the organization of hundreds of the younger Mormons into an antipolygamy movement, which is described in the following dispatch from Salt Lake to the New York Herald:

"Young Mormons throughout the state of Utah have united in a movement to bring about the enforcement of the pledges given to the Government when Utah became a member of the sisterhood of States. They are particularly vehement in their assertion that the law must be observed by the members of the Mormon hierarchy, as well as by other citizens.

"As a result of this movement, which already has about five hundred young men in its ranks, the practice of polygamy must be abandoned by the high officers of the Mormon Church, or these young members, the very flower of the sect, will leave the Church. This is the ultimatum that is to be given to the Mormon hierarchy at the General Conference of the Saints."

The Deseret News, the official organ of the Mormon Church, seems to indorse the view that time is killing polygamy. "That it was a matter of common knowledge and common disposition to let it die out of old age," it says, "is beyond truthful dispute, and the proofs of it are ample and overwhelming. On this point not only local papers have expatiated repeatedly, but journals at a distance have recognized it, and do so now." The same paper treats the objectors to Mormon "Church influence" in politics as follows:

"We know, personally, of men who pretend to be aghast over 'Mormon' Church influence who have sought for it eagerly but in vain. They have imagined that if they could gain the support of some 'high Mormon,' as they termed it, they were sure of the votes of 'the Church.' Now, they yell 'church influence' till they are hoarse. The idea seems to be with them, 'If the Church helps me, it is all right; but if the Church helps the other candidate, or I imagine it does, it is all wrong and un-American and shameful.'

"It should be observed by thinking people that not one particle of proof of the interference of the Church authorities with the freedom of voters has been adduced. It is all suspicion, assertion, generalities, and assumption. We say the 'church influence' stormed about is a myth. 'Mormons' are not told how to vote or required to conform to any political act or doctrine by the Church, and are absolutely free except when they ally themselves with political bosses, and committees, and caucuses, and they are controlled thereby. Then they measurably lose their liberty just the same as 'non-Mormons' lose theirs and thus become slaves to a clique or party.

"We warn the sober-minded, peaceful, and sane people of this city and State not to suffer themselves to be led away by wild-fire agitators into anything that they may afterward regret. We should all be able to live here in peace and amity, each pursuing his own way, so long as we do not interfere with each other's rights, and do all we can to build up the State and to promote peace on earth, good-will to man. In other words, let us be rational."—Literary Digest for April 2, 1904.

EDUCATION AND RELIGION.

There are two extreme views concerning the effects of education upon public morality. One is held by the advocates of secular schools; the other is held by the advocates of church schools. This sharp division of opinion is not peculiar to America. It is felt in every country where modern education and modern thought prevail. It takes one form in England, another form in France, and another in Germany, but the underlying issue is the same in all.

The advocate of secular schools believes that good teaching will itself make good citizens. He holds that a large part of our vice is the result of ignorance; and that if you remove the ignorance you will do away with the vice. He thinks that a large part of our errors and our crimes are due to people's failure to recognize the consequences of their acts; and that if you can inform them of those consequences you can check the tendency to crime in its beginnings. He believes poverty and shiftlessness to be so largely due to want of knowledge that if you provide the knowledge you will do away with most of the shiftlessness and the poverty.

Up to a certain point all this is true. There is a vast quantity of shiftlessness and vice due to ignorance; a large quantity of error and crime which would be prevented if the source of error could be rendered harmless at the outset. But though you can thus remove some of the moral evils under which we suffer, you can not by so simple a means remove them all, or even the major part of them. The root of lawlessness lies deeper than mere ignorance of consequences. The chief source of crime is moral perverseness rather than mental deficiency. If you improve a man's intellectual capacity without correspondingly educating his moral nature, you are likely to change the direction in which his criminal or vicious instincts seek their outlet, rather than destroy those instincts themselves. When you teach a man to write you make him less liable to commit larceny, but you make him much more liable to commit forgery. When you teach a man political economy and law you lessen the temptations and opportunities for acts of violence, but you do not lessen those for acts of fraud. Few of us who have looked into the statistics of education and crime are optimistic enough to deny that they are quite disappointing. The improvement due to the removal of illiteracy amounts to something; but it does not amount to so much as we should like to see, or as was promised by the early advocates of our public school system.

The opponents of that system often point to these statistical results with ill-concealed satisfaction. They say that such consequences are just what you might expect from any system of purely secular education. They would have the training of the intellect supplemented by a special system of religious training, which should teach the pupil to use his knowledge for the service of God and the benefit of his fellow men. If they had to choose between the two, they would regard the religious training as more important than the intellectual, and would prefer schools where the knowledge of the teachers was defective or inaccurate but the religious principles good, to those where the knowledge of the staff was better but their orthodoxy less sound. They look with grave apprehension upon the spectacle of free citizens trained in the knowledge of many things which may prove of use to them individually, but not trained in those ideas of religion and morality which have been rightly regarded as essential to the safety of civilized communities.

I confess that I share some of the apprehensions of these advocates of church schools; but I am very far from agreeing with them as to the proper remedy. I do not believe that improvement is to be sought by substituting religious instruction for secular instruction, or by superadding one to the other as though the two were separate. I do not believe that you can prepare a man for citizenship by teaching a godless knowledge in one part of the school time and a set of religious principles in another part—any more than you can prepare a man for heaven by letting him cheat six days of the week and having him listen to the most orthodox doctrines on the seventh. I believe that both in school life and in after-life the moral training and the secular training must be so interwoven that each becomes a part of the other.

In any good system of education the child learns three or four distinct sets of lessons.

1. He learns a great many facts and principles which he did not know before he went to school. This learning of facts and principles seems to most people who look at the matter superficially to be pretty much the whole of education. It is really only a very small part of it.

2. He learns certain habits of accuracy. Indeed, looking at some of the schools of the present day, I am almost inclined to modify this statement, and say "habits of accuracy or 'inaccuracy'"; for in the effort to put more knowledge into the child and make the process agreeable, the teacher is prone to sacrifice that thoroughness and precision which were perhaps made the too exclusive object in the classical training of an earlier generation. Along with these habits of accuracy I should place those habits of order and regularity which are not learned out of books at all, but from the quiet working of school rules and school discipline.

3. The pupil in a thoroughly good school also learns lessons of public spirit and self-devotion. He can receive these lessons from poetry and history, if properly taught—whether that be the poetry or history of the Americans or of the English, of the Greeks or of the Hebrews. He can receive those lessons from the emulation of school life, not only within the class-room, but on the playground. The good of modern athletic sports is not wholly nor mainly a physical one. Athletics, when rightly managed, give lessons in self-subordination and loyalty as fruitful as those which can be received anywhere in the world. And, wholly apart from either study or athletics, the child can learn these same lessons through his admiration of the older boys and of the masters who are doing their work well. All the moral precepts which are taught, even by those head masters who have the greatest reputation as moral teachers, are of little consequence as compared with the personality of those teachers themselves. As we read the books of Thomas Arnold or Mark Hopkins we wonder at the influence which those men had on generations of English or American boys. It is because we know only the books and not the men. The doctrines put into black and white were as nothing. The personality was everything.

I am convinced that a large proportion of our misunderstandings about our school system arise from our overestimate of the importance of the first of these three elements, and a corresponding underestimate of the second and third. That we should make the wrong estimate is not surprising. The enormous widening of modern knowledge, the recent interest in science and scientific discovery, the development of new means for the pursuit of material wealth, have all contributed to that reaction of which I spoke a moment ago against the narrowness of the old classical curriculum. We have been substituting history for literature, experimental science for deductive. We have been tending to value our teaching by the practical utility of the conclusions learned, to subordinate scientific training to technological ends; and even to say that history should become an account of the habits of the mass of the people rather than of the character and influence of their greatest men. To a certain extent this reaction was justified; but I believe that it has gone much too far, and has made us lose sight of the really excellent elements which the old education contained and which the modern education may be in danger of sacrificing. Knowledge is a good thing, and the more we can get of it the better; but if we obtain a large increase of knowledge at even a moderate sacrifice of the habits of accuracy and regularity, we have made our pupil less efficient instead of more so. Intelligence is a most excellent thing to help a man in the conduct of his own affairs; but if we strive to increase that intelligence at the sacrifice of those things which make for idealism and public spirit we make a man a worse citizen instead of a better one, and run the risk that in the short-sighted pursuit of his own interest he may be led to ruin himself as well as his fellows.

A few years ago this danger seemed to be a very serious one. In the college electives were multiplied without discrimination. In the high school scientific and commercial courses were established on lines which were often rather unwise. Exaggerated importance was given to shop work. Manual training was sometimes used in a way which made it not so much a training as a diversion. The introduction of kindergarten methods in the early stages of school life was guided by enthusiasm rather than by critical judgment. Fortunately, we have come to a point where signs of a strong reaction are manifest. The incompetence of most of the children trained in our kindergartens is leading educators of every stage to see that the acquisition of agreeable facts is a very poor substitute for the habit of pertinacity in dealing with disagreeable ones. The experience of scientific experts proves that when a laboratory degenerates into a shop it loses most of its value. Our college graduates of recent years find that indiscriminate election of studies has meant intellectual dissipation. In short, we have learned that the sugar plums of education do not furnish a strengthening intellectual diet. Under these circumstances we find a tendency to go back to the standard of earlier years. I do not mean that we shall ever go all the way back to the dry bones of learning which constituted so large a part of the education of our fathers; but that we shall see, and are, in fact, already beginning to see, how the discipline which went with that old education made stronger men and women than we are likely to get under teachers and school boards, who, in their pursuit of the pleasures of the new education, forget the necessities of discipline.

If we can really get into our minds the fact that in any system of education, classical, scientific, or manual, accuracy and idealism are far more important than mere knowledge, we shall do away with the force of the objection that our teaching has no effect in character building. For the formation of habits of accuracy and the development of ideals are themselves the very essence of character building. The effect of this training tells in the most unexpected ways. I have known a great many Socialists, but I never knew a single one who was really careful in his arithmetic. I have known a great many shiftless and half-vicious boys who furnished unpromising material for any educational system; but my experience has been that even in these cases regularity and cleanliness were more potent moral influences than any amount of mere knowledge could become. I have seen boys and men who were selfish in all their impulses, who nevertheless responded to the teaching of ideals in the school or college as they responded to nothing else.

But if you can teach in this manner and in this spirit, the antithesis between education and religion disappears. Spelling and arithmetic, poetry and history, games and friendship, become lessons in conduct and helps to the formation of character. Under such a conception sound religious teaching is the outgrowth of good secular teaching. The use of the Bible in the schools justifies itself because it does, in fact, give those lessons in conduct and character which we regard as fundamentally important. Wherever we have tried to make Bible reading a thing apart from the rest of the school work which we used because we thought that the Bible was verbally inspired, we found difficulty in defending our course against those taxpayers who denied that the Bible had any such special authority, and against those others who believed that there was a church authority at least coördinate with the Bible. But when we make our religious and moral aim as broad as our whole field of instruction, and use the Bible as we use any other book of poetry or history, then can we justify our principles in the face of all the world and look forward with confidence to the results which will follow the application of those principles.

*

To sum the whole matter up: The supposed anti-thesis between secular training and religious training arises from a misconception of what is involved in good training of any kind. People see the difference between bad secular education and bad religious education, and they assume that there must be a corresponding difference between good secular education and good religious education. This is by no means the case. When a master of a public school is occupied only with teaching facts and principles, and when a master of a religious institution is occupied only with teaching dogmas and observances, they necessarily work at cross-purposes; but the mere learning of facts and principles is not the vitally important part of secular education, nor is the learning of doctrines and observances the vitally important part of religious education. The formation of habits of discipline and the development of ideals of unselfishness is the essentially important thing in a good education of either kind. When we have grasped this truth we shall see that there is in the field of education the same harmony between the true needs of the world and the true needs of the church which exists in every other department of human life.—Arthur T. Hadley, President of Yale University, in the Independent, New York.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Dancing.

In a recent issue of the HERALD we have an article on the subject of dancing which we fully indorse as viewed from the sister's standpoint. Some years ago we read an article on the same subject from the pen of a sectarian minister, but his effort was confined to that popular dance known as the waltz. He said he did not want to see his wife or daughter participate in that kind of a dance, and he might have added, "I don't want to go, nor do I want my son to go."

Some years later I attended a series of temperance lectures. One evening the speaker spoke at some length on the evils of the dance. He said he had taken pains to inform himself and the result of his investigation proved that there were over one thousand young women in the city of Milwaukee alone who could date their downfall to the dance. This was a surprise to me, but when I consider the disgusting features of the dance above mentioned, I am not so much suprised after all. No doubt it was invented for the purpose which it serves.

In the rural districts where I have lived the young people sometimes get together of an evening where promiscuous kissing seems to be the leading incentive. So far as I am personally concerned I would prefer a respectable cotillion party to a kissing party and yet we seldom hear anything said against the latter.

A brother,

WM. FRANKLIN.

A Day Dream.

'Twas spring and the soft balmy air seemed to lend an enchantment to the scenes around me. I had wandered forth this afternoon with loved ones to view the scenes from the hillside not far distant. There was a grove of large maple-trees standing like sentinels along the slope to the front of the deserted cottage. In the front yard hung large clusters of purple lilac blossoms, and back of the house were large apple, plum, peach, and crab-trees laden with blossoms but showing a lack of care and cultivation. The old paling fence had gone to decay, the cave had fallen in; but the well, which was walled with smooth stones, was still standing as in days of yore. The barns had been removed, and an old hen-house which leaned far to one side was the only building which remained except the cottage itself, which was now in ruins. The windows had disappeared, the shutters to the doors were gone, the plastering hung in patches about the walls. The floor was made of puncheon, and, as the place was now the home of the skunk and other animals, it had been torn up in different places to hide the hunter's trap beneath. On every side were signs of a once prosperous home, where now were only ruin and decay. While husband and little ones were gathering flowers from orchard and garden I sat down to rest a short time, and dream one of those day-dreams I love so well to indulge in.

Everything seemed to speak of the fleeting life in which we are living. Where are they who once inhabited this happy home? When all this material was brought from afar across the country with slow plodding ox-teams, they could drive where they chose, no field or fence to hinder. But now, at the side of grove and orchard the locomotive goes shrieking past, sometimes drawing its freight of human beings, sometimes laden with products from the many beautiful farms which have sprung into existence since first this home was reared. I have heard this family spoken of, and I picture the busy mother surrounded by the happy children, joined at eve by the father, and I know that many happy hours (as the world goes) were spent here within this busy, prosperous home. Standing apart from others as it did made the home companionship so much more enjoyable. But children grow all too soon to years of manhood and womanhood. There were deaths; some were married. The cruel war claimed a part and each and every parting brought a new sorrow to the parents, now well on the sunset side of life, until at last, like sheaves of wheat fully ripe for the harvest, this aged couple lay down to a long sleep. And just over the hillside to the south and west I catch the pearly gleam of marble slabs set as it were in a background of evergreens, which can be seen for a great distance across the rolling prairie.

Ah, here is the end of it all! For has not one of old said, "Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble; he cometh forth like a flower and is cut down. He fleeteth also as a shadow and continueth not"? And looking upon the ruins about me I am constrained to say, "Vanity, vanity, all is vanity." But this is not the end, for hath he not also said, "If a man die shall he live again"? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come; and again one has told us "That it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know we shall be like Him, for we shall see him as he is."

Glorious thought; if we shall be like our Savior what grander thought need we to inspire us to higher, nobler lives? Our Father, evermore help us to be like thou wouldst have us to be!

ADRIA ELLEN.

The Engineer.

"The Engineer within the cab
While sparks fly back in trails
Keeps watch for danger lights ahead
Along the shining rails."

Who has not stood on the platform and watched the engine come steaming in with its freight of human beings? 'Tis a daily occurrence, yes, hourly, in many places. Yet do we ever stop to learn a lesson from it?

There is something that to me is a lesson to be applied to life. I notice ever at the window of the cab with his eye firmly fixed on the narrow road before him the faithful engineer. Although he fully knows every foot of the way his engine is to traverse, the curves, grades, and bridges, yet we do not find him regarding with careless indifference the task assigned him. There are many lives, his own included, which might instantly be hurled to death, or many bodies maimed, crushed, and mangled if he become indifferent or fall asleep on duty. But by daylight or in the darkness of night it is ever the same, gazing intently forward along the track.

It may be there are those on board the train whom he loves, but more often there are only strangers from many lands; but well he knows all are looking to him to take them safely over the road to the desired station.

And thus in life how many are dependent upon us. If we fall asleep at our post of duty or become indifferent to the dangers lurking along our way, we not only endanger our own spiritual lives and those of our loved ones, but the influence will spread and widen until many weak and faltering ones will be caused to stumble and some to fall. Thus we do untold evil because we fell asleep on duty.

A sharp lookout we each should keep
Nor close our eyes; instead,
Watch to escape the dangers placed
Along the rails ahead

ADRIA ELLEN.

ALPENA, Michigan.

Dear Sisters: I was reading the admonition given by the Apostle Peter: "Giving all diligence add to your faith, virtue," and I wondered if we all realize the importance of the admonition. The gospel is sometimes referred to as a seed and when the individual receives the principles of the gospel it is very much like a good seed being placed in the soil. There is an element that is absolutely necessary for that soil to contain in order for this seed to sprout and bring forth fruit. Unless there is that virtue in the soil, sunlight, heat, and moisture are given to it in vain, for though it may spring up it can not flourish and bring forth fruit. As mothers, what responsibility rests upon us, for there is so much in these days to tempt the young; to destroy or take away the element virtue from the soil, that it keeps a mother continually cultivating in order to overcome the wicked influence by which children are daily surrounded. I think city life is so much worse than country life to take the virtue from the soil of a child's heart. If a child is baptized the seed is just planted. If we can possibly keep the heart pure by cultivation, and good literature, we may accomplish much more by so doing, for there is much bad literature that is placed around without money and without price.

Evil habits, evil communications tempt the young, robbing the soil of its virtue. I often wonder to myself why it is that when there are so many good things to enjoy, when there is so much that will make the soul happy, why we will be content to engage in those things that will make us miserable, that will rob us of our happiness and keep us from enjoying those things that God has provided for us. I know for myself there is no limit to a Christian's happiness. Everything that earth or heaven can produce is for God's people and only those things are denied them which will bring evil and distress upon them. All other things are for us to enjoy, therefore if we would enjoy them let us keep from those things that rob us of purity or rob the soil of its virtue, and let us avoid every appetite and every passion and everything that will lead the soul into bondage that will corrupt the mind and debase our thoughts.

Always remember that evil thoughts precede an evil act. We must learn to control our words, thoughts, and actions, for unless we can we are not a free people. If I understand the gospel it is intended to make us free by overcoming or controlling ourselves and bringing ourselves into harmony with the gospel law. The gospel comes to us as a means of life and salvation to liberate us from all those evil influences. But we must not stop here. We are told to add to virtue, knowledge. How are we to obtain knowledge? By study.

If I am to have knowledge of God's word I must read it and study it and also teach it to my children. They must also read it to have a knowledge of it; the same with the Book of Mormon and also the Book of Covenants. We must know what they contain. Then God by his Spirit can enlighten the mind so as to give us an understanding of what is written, and by comprehending or perceiving its truths we know it to be true. That is the way knowledge was given me. My experience may be different from some. If I receive a knowledge of what I read I know it is true; thus I can understand what the scripture means when it says, "add to your faith, virtue, and to virtue, knowledge." We have to add, you see; it is not in the hands of God to give it to us only as he gives us the means of obtaining this knowledge. By the Spirit of God we understand the things of God.

MRS. E. A. LESTER.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The General Convention.

The work of the thirteenth General Annual Convention was finished at the Tuesday night session as per previous arrangement. The Convention was an uneventful one, there being no questions of great import considered, unless, possibly, the dispensing with the missionary feature of the work of the General Superintendent should be considered important. Reference to this movement will be made at another time. The routine work of the Convention was transacted harmoniously and resulted in but few changes being made.

THE OFFICERS.

One change in the officers of the Association was made, wherein Bro. E. H. Fisher, of Boston, Massachusetts, succeeds Bro. A. Carmichael, of California, as second assistant superintendent. We thank Bro. Carmichael for the untiring efforts he has made for the Sunday-school work in the West and for what he has accomplished. His work will continue to bear fruit and we shall hold in memory our pleasant associations with him as an officer in the General Sunday-school Association.

Bro. Fisher enters upon the work as a representative of our eastern constituency. He enjoys the confidence of the workers in his section of the territory and we bespeak for him an abundance of work and success therein. With the one change referred to the officers for the coming year are as follows: T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa, superintendent; J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa, first assistant superintendent; E. H. Fisher, Boston, Massachusetts, second assistant superintendent; D. J. Krahl, Lamoni, Iowa, secretary; John Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, treasurer; Mrs. Lucina Etzenhouser, 2401 East twenty-fourth Street, Kansas City, Missouri, librarian.

REVISING COMMITTEE.

The work of the revising committee for the year was approved unanimously and they were reelected to serve another year. The personnel of the committee is Duncan Campbell, John Smith, and R. S. Salyards. Thus the patrons of the Gospel Quarterly may be assured of continued and competent revision work for the year. They have our appreciation and thanks for their earnest and untiring efforts, all of which work has been done gratuitously.

THE EDITOR OF THE "GOSPEL QUARTERLY."

Sr. Anna Salyards made her report of work done. But all that we could say here would not add to the value of the work done by her or increase our appreciation thereof. The universal favor with which the Quarterlies have been received and the splendid results coming from their use in the Sunday-schools attest very strongly the favor with which they meet both with the patrons of the Quarterlies and with Him in whose work we are all engaged. The Quarterly lessons are wielding an influence for good that is easily seen but not easily measured by human standards. They are doing a work that could not or would not be done in any other way.

THE PRIMARY LESSON COMMITTEE reported having completed one year's lessons, a part of which is now in our hands. They have been published in connection with the Primary Quarterly, beginning with the last quarter of 1903. These lessons have been well received and have filled the demand for such lessons. Another six-months' lessons will be completed, making eighteen months in all. This the committee recommended to be revised and published in permanent form for the use of first primary teachers, which when done, would withdraw this work from the Primary Quarterly. The Convention approved the report of the committee and sustained them for the ensuing year to complete and revise their work in accordance with the recommendation in their report to the Convention.

From the report of the General Secretary we glean a few items that are both interesting and instructive: In the General Association there are fifty-three district associations and thirteen schools not in district associations. This represents a gain of five district associations for the past year. There are now in the association four hundred and twenty-six schools, a gain of forty-one in the year; the total membership is now eighteen thousand, eight hundred and eighteen, a gain of six hundred and ninety-six. Of these about twenty-five hundred are officers and two thousand are teachers. From the reports of forty-five districts we get the total of twelve thousand, six hundred and thirty books in the libraries, but it is quite probable that not all the libraries are heard from, as many reports are blank in this item. Eleven districts have provided or are providing circulating libraries, whereas there were but five last year. Forty-four home classes are reported from thirteen districts. And this does not correctly represent the home class work, as we know of the existence of several classes not included in the reports to the General Secretary. From these statistics we may learn that a very decided advance is being made by the Association as a whole. We note a few of the losses and gains. The greatest gains in membership were Kirtland District, Ohio, one hundred and eleven; Little Sioux, Iowa, one hundred and five; South-eastern Illinois, one hundred. The greatest loss is in London, Ontario, District, two hundred and seventeen; South Sea Islands, one hundred and fifty; Southern California, seventy-five. All the newly organized districts show large numbers in the "gain" column, but this being their first report it would not indicate the correct gain for the year for the individual district. So, also, the figures for the Utah and Idaho Districts will not show the correct status without explaining that last year they were one, but have been divided into two districts.

The largest membership is that of the Independence Stake association, twelve hundred and forty-five; Lamoni Stake, eleven hundred and six; London, Ontario, District, ten hundred and eighty-nine. The London District has thirty-two schools; Northern Michigan twenty-nine, South Sea Islands nineteen, Little Sioux sixteen.

We hope that the districts, especially those indicating a loss, will put forth their best efforts to make the ensuing year even more prosperous than the one just past. Find why the loss occurred and endeavor to retrieve it.

(To be continued.)

Every right action and true thought sets the seal of its beauty on the person and the face.—Ruskin.

Letter Department.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, April 9, 1904.

Editors Herald: The big conference of the dominant church here is now a thing of the past. We had all anticipated attending these meetings, but Bro. Chase was called away to preach a funeral sermon and so could not be with us during the interesting period. However, we were privileged to be present at most of the public sessions of the Conference. It was largely attended, not only by the Mormon but by the Gentile element. Of course we were interested in listening to the speakers as well as the comments of the crowd upon what was spoken.

The principal thought put forth by most of the speakers was their admiration for and their devotion to the leaders of the Church. Admiration for their courage in not only professing but living the principles of their religion, and devotion to the same principles and an assurance that the young men of the Church would walk in their footsteps. Also a denial that the young were in any way drifting from the teachings of their fathers.

Another thought put forth by one speaker which struck us quite forcibly as being in contrast with the accusations of President Taylor (who publicly arraigned the Tabernacle choir upon the charge of immorality) was the high standard of morality shown in the lives of their young people; that they seldom if ever strayed from the path of virtue; that the stranger entering among them could tell at once from the moral atmosphere that this was truly Zion. We are sorry to say that while our experience here has confirmed us in the thought that some of the young are devoted to the principles so prominently put before the world of late by President Joseph F. Smith, we have not been able to so discern Zion. Glad would we be, could we so discern. When we think of this we can not but think of the words of the Prophet Ezekiel as recorded in the thirteenth chapter of his prophecy. Please turn and read the prophet's denouncement of those who say "Peace when there was no peace," and the women who with their "Lies . . . have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad, and strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life." Surely "when they say peace and safety then cometh sudden destruction"! And, brother editor, we could not but think that to keep still and wait with patience the outcome of this controversy might be an easier thing in other fields than this, where one can not help but see things as they are and not as they are represented to be.

One thing is certain: In the art of making a "grand-stand play" for effect upon the public our Mormon brethren are adepts. The most notable event of this character during this Conference was the resolution presented at its close by President Smith and adopted by the vote of the Conference, that "Inasmuch as there are numerous reports in circulation that plural marriages have been entered into contrary to the official declaration of President Woodruff of September 26, 1889, . . . I, Joseph F. Smith, hereby affirm and declare that no such marriages have been solemnized with the sanction, consent, or knowledge of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," etc. Of course this carried unanimously, but we could not help hearing just behind us, in an ironical tone, "Yes, there, that settles it! That covers up their dirt!" Turning to see who it was speaking thus we saw a couple of old gentlemen who looked as though they might have had years of experience in Utah. We felt to say "amen," and wondered if the world at large would not echo the thought. It looks to us a good deal like the case of Sam Weller, who, when asked whether he could see his father who had just disturbed the court, answered while looking straight up at the chandelier, "I don't see him, your honor."

Well, as our preacher was not here to speak to the crowds that gathered upon the streets, and hearing and seeing all this made us long for a proper representation of our work, we tried to improve the time and opportunity by distributing tracts to those who seemed to be approachable. We found many who seemed ready to read and discuss the matter of "Plural Marriage in America."

It was amusing to us, when one was pointed to the fact that they were out of harmony with the books in their "temple work," and he claimed "present revelation" as the authority, to be able to point him to Joseph F. Smith's statement before the Committee at Washington, and to say, "You have not got it." By the way, we were not the only ones amused by the incident.

We met many who had listened to the services upon the street during the past season, who were inquiring as to when we would commence the work again. To such we answered, "As soon as possible." And from the appearance of the weather at present it looks as though that would be pretty soon.

Another amusing "grand-stand play" was made at the closing of the "Manifesto episode," when one of the dignitaries arose and called attention to the fact that "In this Church we do all things by 'common consent.'" We can not help wishing that as a people they would more carefully weigh and consider before consenting.

We notice by this morning's paper that our next General Conference is to be at Lamoni, and we hope to be back to the "land of Zion" by the date of that meeting.

Ever laboring and praying for the welfare of Zion,
Your sister in Christ,

MRS. A. M. CHASE.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, April, 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: We just returned from a trip to Malad City where we were called to preach the funeral sermon for our young sister, Media Sellers. We received a telephone message calling us there last Thursday night while speaking to a few who had gathered at our cottage meeting. We were told to start Friday morning in order to reach there in time. Well, our train reached Collingston, the point from which the stage runs to Malad, about one o'clock in the afternoon on Friday. We found that the stage was gone and that we would either have to wait until the next day at ten in the forenoon or take a saddle-horse. As that alternative was as cheap as the stage, and as the roads were in a fearful condition, we chose the latter course.

When we asked the host of the hotel whether he had a good saddle nag he answered, "We have a world-beater." Of course we ordered out the world-beater and by two o'clock were on our way.

For the first fifteen miles of the thirty-five we found the roads as bad as we ever saw, and our experience has not been small along those lines, as Bro. H. L. Holt will testify. However, the roads improved as we left the low lands and neared the mountains, and we were able to beat the stage into Malad by about an hour or so. We were five and one half hours making the trip. Not very bad time for one not accustomed to equestrian exercise.

We found that the funeral was not to be held until Sunday and so we advertised for meetings Saturday, Sunday, and Monday nights, besides the funeral service for three o'clock on Sunday. We were domiciled with the Sisters Jones. They each live in one lot. Their husbands are not members of the Church, but the one who was at home made me welcome, and they took good care of us.

We do not wish to boast, but our meetings were well attended and the Master's Spirit was there to a very satisfying degree. At the funeral exercises the chapel would not hold half of the crowd and Sunday night there were a good many who could not get in also. Monday night the house was well filled also. We tried to give them something to set them to thinking, and to help them to think along right lines. We presented the "restoration" to them in its light as connected with the establishment of this government, pressing home the thought that as the Lord had established this country to be the fostering power under which his church might be built up, where the pure in heart might find safety, and had given the pledge that "He that keepeth the law of God hath no need to break the law of the land," surely there could be no better citizens than the Latter Day Saints. As the light of the world we were required to be the pattern of all good citizenship; holding up the thought that Christ nor the apostles were ever guilty of infraction of law. "If this Utah Church had taken in that thought there would never have been the spectacle of its leaders confessing in the corridors of our capitol that they were open and unrepentant violators of our civil law." Of course we found some adverse comment, but upon the whole our effort there was well received.

Tuesday we rode our "world-beater" back to Collingston and when we asked for our bill, instead of three dollars as we expected it to be from the price made to us when we took the steed, we were told one dollar and a half,—this for the friendship of the gospel. We were grateful for the favor and for a good dinner furnished us there. The wife of mine host is one of our sisters in the faith. May the Master help him to see the light also as a reward for his kindness to us.

From here we took train for Ogden and from there to Plain City, where we had the pleasure of speaking the words that made of "twain one flesh." This was on April 6. The happy couple was Alfred Coy and Mable Ipsen. Bro. Alfred is the youngest son of Bro. and Sr. Coy. He and his bride start out with good prospects for a happy future. May their prospects be fully realized. Well, we are glad of a wedding once in a while to vary the routine of the many funerals that have come our way of late. This makes the sixth funeral sermon for us in the last four Sundays. It makes us grateful for the consolation of the gospel.

This work coming on we did not get to attend the General Conference of the Mormon people this spring. Of course this was somewhat of a disappointment to us, but Sr. Chase took our place there and reported to us on our return last night. However, we will let her tell of that event as she saw it. Our weather seems to have settled somewhat and we hope for better times for the work. As ever,

Your brother in the faith,

A. M. CHASE.

ATCHISON, Kansas, April 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I asked for space in your columns; knowing how valuable is your space, I have hesitated to do so. It may interest some of my friends to know that after a sojourn of five years with the Saints of St. Joseph, Missouri, we are at home again in Atchison, Kansas, and while we are glad to be again in our own home, and to greet again the Saints of the Atchison Branch, yet we feel that we shall greatly miss the dear Saints of St. Joseph, that we have sustained a loss and that we can not repair by reason of our separation from them. I feel that I have been benefited by my experiences in that branch, and by association with the brethren there. However much may be said about the needs of large branches having men in charge who can devote all their time to the work, the history of the St. Joseph Branch for the last six years will show better and more substantial growth while under the care of the men who labor with their hands. In the opinion of the writer that branch is in safe hands with its present presiding officers, and there are others who are capable of carrying on that work.

We shall never forget the many kind words spoken to us, especially after the Saints learned we were going to leave. We received many hearty handshakes, with "God bless you in your new home," etc. The week before we left for home we were taken completely by surprise by seventy-five or eighty of the Saints, headed by our genial Bro. and Sr. Best, who always like to make the departing Saints feel that they are not forgotten.

Our generous and big hearted Bro. D. C. Kinnaman, who is always ready on every occasion when money is needed to make a gathering more complete, was there with an abundance of ice-cream, the sisters with an abundance of cakes, and our kindly Bro. Lewis with a closing speech in behalf of the Saints. The hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," made it an event never to be forgotten by us; made it hard to leave those Saints whom we pray that our Father may bless abundantly.

C. E. GUINAND.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 8, 1904.

Saints' Herald: I have long felt deeply impressed with the thought that we are living in a time when it not only becomes every man who knows the truth but it is absolutely necessary that every Saint be earnestly engaged in trying to build up the work of the Lord, both by assisting those in the Church both spiritually and temporally if need be and we are able, and to warn our neighbor also. Are we doing it? I do not wish to be considered a crank or yet as one only speaking to be heard, but I feel that I, like many others who have come under my observation, have been resting on my oars altogether too much since I covenanted with the Lord to try to do what I could to help to build up his work here on earth.

When we read of the great disasters of various kinds that are coming upon the people here and there most everywhere, our minds very naturally revert to what the scriptures say in regard to the time of the great preparation when the Lord is preparing a people for his second coming. And the question comes to us. Are we ready? Do I hear some one say, The gospel has not gone to all the nations of the earth yet. Another question: Are we doing all we can to send it to them? Are we doing all we can to build up the work at home as well as abroad? Are you? Am I? It is a personal question.

My neighbor ——— does not keep the whole law. He is able to do a great deal for the work if he would, but he will not, and I am poor and have a hard way of getting along in the world and I do not feel like making such great sacrifices while he is living so easy. Whose reward will I receive when the Savior comes? I believe there are many in the Church who are putting forth a great effort to build up the work of the Lord. And of course they will not lose their reward, but many do not seem to see the necessity of keeping the whole law.

It seems that we either lack faith in God and his promises, or else we are not willing to make the sacrifices that the gospel requires at our hands. But lest I paint too dark a picture will say we can not expect, in the light of the parable of the ten virgins, that all will be wise even in the Church. So let us take courage and try to move out in this great work and put on the shield of faith in order that we may be better able to meet and surmount the difficulties that may be thrown in our way in life, for I have long since come to the conclusion that if we are really chosen of God we will be sorely tried sooner or later.

I want to be among those have oil and light when the Savior comes.

Your brother,

W. A. BROONER.

TONGANOXIE, Kansas, April 10, 1904.

Saints' Herald: I would be very glad for the Saints, at the different railroad towns east of Independence, Missouri, along the Missouri River, to write to me. I think I want to locate somewhere in that region, where there are some Saints, at least, in a few months. I expect to remain here till about the first of July, and until that time, will gladly distribute such church literature as the Saints may send me.

Last winter a year ago I was here, working for the Kansas City Star, and distributed a considerable quantity of tracts and church periodicals, and several people expressed considerable interest in the cause of the Church, which I hope has not yet all died out. But so far, since coming here last fall, I have been so intensely busy that I have not until just now been at liberty to invite the brethren to send me distributing material. If any of the traveling elders of this district, or others at liberty to visit this place will write me, I will see what can be done about securing meeting accommodations. A lady of this place, whose husband has a brother who is a Latter Day Saint (Wells, by name), expressed eager interest to hear some of our elders preach, and although I am an elder, yet under the circumstances I lack confidence in being able to do the cause sufficient justice to warrant making meeting arrangements for myself and inviting them out to hear me. Will some of the brethren who are actively engaged in the work respond? Said lady said that she would willing help to take care of an elder or elders.

Yours in the one faith,

JOHN H. TIBBELS.

TACOMA, Washington, April 4, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am still in the faith and striving to live faithfully from day to day and to press onward and upward, though clouds sometimes are heavy and my soul hungers after righteousness and communion with the Saints.

I never had church privileges since I came into the Church only a short time when I first embraced the gospel. I think I know how to appreciate that privilege. There is no church here in Tacoma. It seems hard since I came here, as I meet with no Saints, but hope I shall as there must be a few here, but they are strangers to me. Let us strive allways to keep his righteous judgements and depart not from his truth, for great peace have they who love the law, and nothing shall offend them.

Your sister in Christ,

MISS MAUD FLETCHER.

THURSTON, Nebraska, April 9, 1904.

Editors Herald: The columns of the dear old HERALD are a comfort and enjoyment to me and my family as we are among the isolated ones. We are alone out here; we have Sunday-school and are using Cook's supplies.

I think if some of our elders would come and preach to us it may be that some would get interested. We can get the use of the schoolhouse as long as we want it so any of the traveling missionaries who should come this way are welcome to share what we put up with. I said we were alone, but Bro. John Cowhick is a member of the Church and also one Sr. Bare who was baptized by W. A. Smith when he was preaching at the Thurston schoolhouse.

We have people of all sects attending our Sunday-school, and I think it will be a good chance for some of our ministry to present the true gospel of Christ. Our superintendent is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but I have found him to be fair in regard to our faith.

We are striving to serve the Master. We feel that the time is near at hand when God will call his children home and we are desirous of being numbered with them. We ask an interest in the prayers of all of God's people that we may be faithful to the end.

S. F. BUTTS.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 15, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am sending in the death notice of Sr. Celestine R. Rush who was buried from the church to-day. Elder H. H. Robinson, who preached the discourse, spoke with calmness and assurance concerning the saving power of Christ's resurrection, and led the minds of his attentive hearers through scenes made sacred by his life of obedience and sacrifice. He also moved them to emotions of praise and thanksgiving for the matchless glory that awaits the people of God by reason of their allegiance to the gospel, and his favor and blessing to all those who should believe on his name.

Many who had been acquainted with our sister and witnessed her apparent composure during the last days of her life, were present to pay their tribute of love for her and sympathy for her loved ones left behind. Flowers bedecked the casket and a few of her brethren in the faith, mature in years and feeling the solemnity of the occasion, tenderly accompanied the remains and helped to consign them to their resting-place. Before the words of consolation spoken to the mourners and those of benefit and instruction to the friends present, prayer was offered by Elder A. H. Parsons, of Holden, Missouri, and the choir sang the plaintive anthem, "I'm going home with Christ to dwell."

Thus another name is added to the list of departed Saints whose love for and faith in the latter-day work led them to a closer fellowship, and with their interests, and their devoted lives—destined to be long or short—to share the fortunes of God's children in this chosen part of his vineyard.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. M. J. Hufford writes from Wilburton, Indian Territory, March 8: "I wish to record the dying testimony of Bro. James Cox, who passed away a few weeks ago. He said he was going to the haven of rest and he had visions of angelic visitors, and thanked God that he was prepared to die. He left a wife and two children, for whom the local Saints are doing what they can."

Miscellaneous Department.

Convention Notices.

The Philadelphia District Sunday-school association will meet in convention at Baldwin, Maryland, May 7, 1904. O. T. Christy, superintendent.

Married.

BIGELOW—WHITE.—At the residence of Bro. Robert White, Wilber, Nebraska, April 3, 1904, at 5 p. m. Mr. Frank E. Bigelow and Sr. Belle White were united in marriage, Elder Wilber Savage officiating. At 7.30 the bride and groom attended service at the Saints' church and listened to a sermon on the true object of marriage, and the mission of man, by Elder C. H. Porter. On the afternoon of April 4, the happy couple started for the state of Washington where they expect to make their home.

SAVAGE—SEAWORTH.—At the Saints' church, Wilber, Nebraska, April 3, 1904, at the evening service, at the close of a sermon on marriage and the mission of man, Elder Wilber Savage and Sr. Emma C. Seaworth were united in the holy bonds of wedlock, Elder C. H. Porter officiating. The groom has served as president of the branch at Wilber for several years. The bride is equally well known in the branch, having united with the Church in her youth. At the close of the service congratulations were profusely showered upon them by relatives and friends present.

KNUTSON—ERICKSON.—At the home of the bride's parents in Miller, LaSalle County, Illinois, March 9, 1904, at 7 p. m. Bro. Knute K. Knutson and Sr. Florence E. Erickson were united in holy bonds of wedlock, Elder J. Midgorden officiating. About thirty guests were in attendance and some useful and beautiful presents were received. The couple enter upon life's journey with bright prospects and the good wishes of all, and may God's blessing attend.

DANIELSON.—PEARSON.—At the home of the bride's parents in Miller, LaSalle County, Illinois, March 30, 1904, at five o'clock p. m., Bro. Thomas A. Danielson, of Rutland, Illinois, and Miss Eleanor Pearson were united in holy bonds of wedlock, Elder J. Midgorden officiating. One hundred and thirty guests were in attendance, many beautiful and useful presents were received, and good wishes from all upon life's journey. May God's blessings ever attend.

Died.

CHICK.—Phœbe Donaldson was born at Blair, Nebraska, December 25, 1884, and united with the Church at Atchison, Kansas, being baptized by Elder Charles Terry. She was married to George Chick August 10, 1901, and died March 29, 1904, at South Omaha, Nebraska. Funeral sermon at the home of her parents at South Omaha by Elder James Huff, assisted by Elder J. S. Strain; burial at Blair, Nebraska, Cemetery.

HOLMES.—Died at his home at Roslyn, Washington, February 19, 1904, Richard Holmes, aged 77 years, 2 months, and 24 days. He was not a member of the Church but a firm believer in its teachings and his home was always open to the traveling ministry. His home paper said of him: "Mr. Holmes was well known to almost every one in the city. He had no enemies, but a host of friends who admired him for his many sterling qualities. He was a valued citizen, a loving father, and a kind husband." He leaves a wife, nine children, twenty-seven grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren to mourn, all of whom reside in Roslyn. Funeral conducted by the Odd Fellows' lodge; sermon by Reverend David Blythe of the Presbyterian Church.

DELONG.—Alma Delong was born July 4, 1886, at Tawas, Michigan; died at his home in Reese, Michigan, March 4, 1904. He was baptized when a young boy by his father, Elder E. Delong. His life and conduct were such that he made friends all with whom he came in contact. There are left to mourn his mother, step-father, one half-brother, and a host of more distant relatives and friends. Funeral service was held in the home, a large concourse of neighbors and friends attending. Elder J. A. Grant was in charge and preached the sermon. He was laid at rest beside his father in Vassar Cemetery.

FARROW.—At Kansas City, Missouri, March 31, 1904, of cholera infantum. Charley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charley Farrow, aged one year, nine months and three days. Thus a little treasure is taken by the angels to the paradise of God, beckoning his parents to come. Funeral sermon by Elder F. C. Warnky at the residence; and buried at Independence.

LOCK.—Maggie Bell, daughter of James and Elsie Lockerly, was born in Butler, Michigan, October 21, 1874. Seventeen years ago the family moved to Quincy, Michigan, where Maggie received her education. She taught school for three years, and was married to Joseph Lock July 10, 1895; to them was born one son, Earl Dudley, who died August 24, 1900. Maggie was baptized into Christ when eighteen years old, and has reflected the character of a true child of God. Her sufferings were borne with fortitude and patience. She died March 13, 1904, of consumption. She passed peacefully to the eternal dawn. She leaves husband, mother, two brothers, Frank J. and Earl D., one sister, Mrs. VanPatten, of Litchfield, Michigan, and a large circle of friends and relatives to mourn her demise. Funeral from Saints' chapel; Elder S. W. L. Scott delivered the remarks to a large audience. Burial in vault at Lake View Cemetery.

PETERSON.—Mrs. Sarah A. Peterson died Sunday morning, April 4; she was born September 27, 1851, in West Bromwich, Staffordshire, England, and emigrated here in her early childhood with her parents, and made her home ever since in Boomer; was married to A. C. Peterson in November, 1888. She leaves her husband and father, Henry Gittins, one brother, Henry W. Gittins, one sister, Mrs. L. H. Hanson, and many other relatives and friends who gave her their love and esteem and deeply mourn their loss. Interment in Boomer Cemetery in charge of Elder C. G. McIntosh.

CHARLTON.—Edward Charlton, for almost forty years a resident of Kewanee, died at his home Sunday, April 3, 1904, having been in poor health for some time. Was born August 7, 1824, at Durham, England; baptized January 26, 1870, at Kewanee by Thomas Weeks; ordained to office of teacher May 4, 1870, and to office of priest August 28, 1887, at Kewanee; he was married about forty years ago to Miss Margaret Robinson who now survives him, but in feeble health. Funeral services at the Saints' church, April 5, by Elder John Chisnall.

SELLERS.—Almedia Sellers, born August 5, 1890, in the Cherokee Nation, the Delaware District; baptized November 27, 1903, by W. S. Pender, died March 31, 1904. Although young in the faith and years she was of an excellent spirit and many sincerely mourn her departure. Funeral from the Malad chapel, Idaho.

RUSH.—Celestine R. Hatcher was born in New Baltimore, Ohio, June 5, 1840; moved with her parents to Brown County, Illinois, about 1858, and was married to Mr. Rush in 1860. She was baptized into the Church by Elder Longbottom about 1887. She leaves two daughters, who live in Oregon, and two brothers, one in Lamon, the other in Nebraska. She died April 9, 1904, at her residence in Independence, Missouri. Funeral at the church April 15; sermon by Elder H. H. Robinson.

SPENCER.—At Chichasha, Indian Territory, Frankie Spencer, only son of Harvey B. and Rosa M. Spencer, died March 7, 1904, with double pneumonia after an illness of thirteen days.

"Precious darling thou hast left us,
Left us, yes, forever more;
But we hope to meet our loved one
On that bright and shining shore."

The Saints' Herald.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance. When payment is made, the date on yellow label always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made, notify us.

The paper will not be sent to persons who are six months in arrears, unless special arrangements are made.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately, as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post-office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for Zion's Ensign, also orders for all Ensign publications

MERRITT.—At Springfield, Missouri, March 15, 1904, Sr. Elizabeth J. Merritt; was born at Platteville, Grant County, Wisconsin, November 7, 1833. She was baptized into the Church, September 25, 1895, at Benner, Christian County, Missouri, by Elder C. W. Cather, and lived as she died, a Saint in very deed. Her aged companion, Elder C. H. Merritt, has been left feeble and alone to mourn her sad departure. Funeral sermon at residence by Elder J. C. Chrestensen.

In the April Chautauquan John R. Commons discusses the problems of "City Life, Crime and Poverty" as they are related to our immigrants. The statements of Mr. Commons in regard to the criminal propensities of immigrants are especially notable. His conclusions, while sometimes rather startling, are sound, for he bases them upon recent government reports.

Labor and Capital in Japan.

The relations of capital and labor are very cordial, says the April World's Work. They are like the relation of fathers and sons. The wages are in general low as compared with those of the United States and the European countries, but after the war there was a remarkable general rise in wages. This should not be taken as the result of strikes. It is the outcome of mutual good will between employers and workmen. Although there are local trade unions—without national organizations—these are in close harmony with the capitalists, for the capitalists themselves help the unions to grow. Among the others, the late T. Sakuma, formerly the head of a large printing office in Tokio, has done much to foster the unions.

The Value of Trees.

In many parts of our country farming would be impossible but for the trees, such is their influence upon the streams. They regulate the water supply, and their tendency is to prevent both floods and drought; they supply fuel, one of the greatest necessities of life, and they furnish the lumber for the building of our cities, railroads, ships, and a thousand other things without which our present state of civilization would not have been possible for ages, if at all. This is why we should be careful of our forests, which are fast dwindling away in many sections; this is why we should legislate against sheep-grazing in the forests, and against all other practices which tend to cause forest fires, and why we should try to protect our trees from their natural enemies, such as landslides, floods, insects, and fungi. And it is well to bear in mind the fact that we can not replace in fifty years a tree which we can destroy in an hour.—April Woman's Home Companion.

The Old Cabildo.

Not the least interesting among the attractions of the St. Louis Exposition will be the State buildings, and of these perhaps the most noteworthy is that of Louisiana, thus described by Mr. C. B. Wells in an illustrated article in the April Magazine Number of the Outlook.

Directly across the avenue from Missouri's stately pile stands completed the building which, by virtue of its historical association, should most command the visitor's attention. It is Louisiana's reproduction of "The Old Cabildo," the New Orleans City Government Building of the Spanish régime, as it existed in 1803 when the representatives of Napoleon and President Jefferson met there to complete the transfer of eight hundred and eighty thousand square miles of territory then known as "Louisiana," to celebrate which event this Exposition is held. The original "Cabildo" is still standing on Jackson Square, New Orleans, where it faces a park glowing with tropical trees and plants, while its duplicate here, at present, stands on frozen ground surrounded with ice and snow. It is built in three stories of typical French architecture, with a Roman arched arcade running the full length of two sides of the building, while surrounding the characteristic interior stone-paved court are balconies jutting out from the two upper floors on all sides, which lead directly to the prison cells. In the courtyard, during the Spanish occupation, criminals were punished with torture and death, and later it served as a public mart of slaves. Here the old Spanish stocks and other instruments of torture will be exhibited. In the council chamber, where the transfer actually took place, will be shown the original treaty between France and the United States. The building will be filled with objects of historical interest, and furnished throughout in the style peculiar to those ancient days.

The Mormon Problem.

There are plenty of men who are by no means sure that Smoot can properly be excluded who are thoroughly convinced that Utah ought not to have been admitted as a State. The Mormon Church is in politics, and its political action is controlled by its president and the group of high officials. What manner of men the president and other leaders of Mormonism are, is now better known to the country than ever before. With the Mormon Church repudiating immoral practices and concerning itself with purely religious affairs, the country could not interfere or find fault. But when an organization such as that which President Smith controls attempts, under the guise of ecclesiastical and religious control, to dominate politics and to nullify law, the people of the United States will not take a very lenient view. The Senate has a full and final right to judge of the qualifications of its own members. If it should decide that, in view of the present character of the Mormon hierarchy and its falsity to the terms upon which Utah was admitted, it prefers not to allow a Mormon apostle to sit as a senator, making laws for the whole people of the United States, nobody can call in question its right to act upon that preference. The hearing will have served a useful end.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Reviews of Reviews for April.

The Traveler
Who contemplates a trip to Colorado, Utah, California or the North west should know that

The Denver & Rio Grande R. R.
widely known as "The Scenic Line of the World," has more scenic attractions than any other route across the continent, traversing as it does the Rocky Mountain Region through Royal Gorge, Canon of the Grand River, Glenwood Springs, Marshall Pass, Black Canon, Castle Gate, and the world-famed Salt Lake City. Its three through daily trains are equipped with the latest improved cars of all classes. Its dining car service is unsurpassed. For illustrated pamphlets address

S. K. HOOPER, G. P. & T. A.
Denver
Colo.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

"She Wants to Tell."

Sr. M. E. Webber of Queensboro, Ontario, Canada, writes January 12, 1904, saying: "Dear Brother:—I want to tell you how pleased I am with your Quit-to-bac. My brother used less than two boxes and has not touched tobacco since he began to use it and has gained in flesh and is better in every way."
 If it cures others, why not you? Three boxes sent post-paid for $1.50 with positive guarantee of cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.
 Address, (Bro.) E. F. Ordway, 228 Hancock St., Peoria, Ill., U. S. A.

Real Estate at Independence

Bro. J. J. Luff is now associated with Bro. A. L. Newton in real estate business in Independence, Missouri. If those who desire to purchase property in or near Independence will write to us and tell us what they want, city or acre property, improved or unimproved, how far from public square or L. D. S. church, also how much you wish to invest and how much you wish to pay down and the time you wish on the balance, we will be pleased to assist you all we can. Address all communications to 14-4t

A. L. Newton & Co.
 225 West Lexington St.
 Independence, Missouri

MANUSCRIPT FOUND

Has just been reprinted, and owing to the heavy expense of publishing it the price has been raised to thirty-five cents. Mark your catalogue accordingly.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 Lamoni, Iowa.

ERRORS AND INCONSISTENCIES CONCERNING THE PRESIDENCY OF THE DOMINANT CHURCH IN UTAH.

207. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100. 60

POLYGAMY NOT A DOCTRINE OF THE TRUE CHURCH OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

203. Per dozen 5 cents; per 100. 35

THE KIRTLAND TEMPLE. Illustrated. The two martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith; Kirtland temple, and President Joseph Smith.

45. Each 5 cents; per dozen. . . . 50

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
 LAMONI - - IOWA

SENT ON APPROVAL TO RESPONSIBLE PEOPLE

Laughlin

Fountain Pen

Guaranteed Finest Grade 14k. SOLID GOLD PEN

To test the merits of THE SAINTS' HERALD as an advertising medium we offer your choice of

These Two Popular Styles For Only

$1.00

Postpaid to any Address.

(By registered mail 8 cents extra.)

Holder is made of finest quality hard rubber, in four simple parts, fitted with very highest grade, large size 14k, gold pen, any flexibility desired—ink feeding device perfect.

Either style—Richly Gold Mounted for presentation purposes, $1.00 extra.

Grand Special Offer

You may try the pen a week, if you do not find it as represented, fully as fine a value as you can secure for three times the price in any other makes, if not entirely satisfactory in every respect, return it and we will send you $1.10 for it, the extra 10c. is for your trouble in writing us and to show our confidence in the Laughlin Pen—(Not one customer in 6000 have asked for their money back.)

Illustration on left is full size of Ladies' style; on right, Gentlemen's style.

Lay this Paper Down and Write NOW

Safety Pocket Pen Holder sent free of charge with each Pen.

ADDRESS

Laughlin Mfg. Co.

153 Griswold St., DETROIT, MICH.

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS, 1852 to 1900.

- 197. Paper. . . . . 5
- 198. Cloth, limp. . . . . 3

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
 Lamoni, Iowa.

BANKING BY MAIL.

WRITE US AT ONCE

If you have any money deposited on which you are not receiving interest.

WE PAY 5 PER CENT INTEREST.

The COMMERCIAL BANK, Lamoni, Iowa.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE. A dictionary and alphabetical index to the Bible, with a concordance to the apocrypha, and a table and concordance of the proper names of the Bible.

206. Cloth . . . . . 1 50

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

White River Mining & Development Company

Mountain Home, Ark.

Photographic Views tell the Story Completely

On receipt of postal card, with name and address written plainly, we will send a copy of our Illustrated Report to any address. This Report shows the entire development of the Company's properties at Graceland, also an inventory of the merchantable goods on hand January 1, 1904. ♡ ♡ ♡ ♡

Joseph Ward, Sec.

Mountain Home, Ark.

TRACTS.

- 33. Trial of the Witnesses to the Resurrection of Jesus. Each 5 cents; per dozen. . . . . 50
- 47. The Basis of Brighamite Polygamy. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 . . . . . 60

LECTURES ON FAITH.

- 220. Limp cloth. . . . . 20
- 221. Paper 10c each, 12 for. . . . 1 00

The Saints' Herald

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, April 27, 1904

Number 17

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
 of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH }
 FRED'K M. SMITH } EDITORS

Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

Editorial.

ANOTHER WALKING ON WATER STORY.

R. S. Salyards

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
Another Walking on Water Story - - - - -	385
Remarks by President Smith - - - - -	386
Death of Ethan Barrows - - - - -	386
Original Articles:
The Standing Ministry - - - - -	388
The Signs of the Times - - - - -	390
The Law of the Lord - - - - -	390
Australian Journalism - - - - -	392
The True Gospel and the True Church - - - - -	393
Selected Articles:
The Pedigree of the Bible—A Roman Catholic View	396
Progress of Christianity in Japan - - - - -	398
A Symposium on the Layman's "Indifference" - - - - -	399
Mothers' Home Column:
The Little Leaf That Died - - - - -	401
Love for the Mother - - - - -	401
"I Gave Them Myself" - - - - -	402
Letter Department:
Letters - - - - -	402
Miscellaneous Department:
Conference Minutes:
Southern Missouri - - - - -	405
Florida - - - - -	405
Birmingham - - - - -	405
Pastoral:
J. M. Terry - - - - -	406
Robert M. Elvin - - - - -	406
High Priests - - - - -	406

WE live by days. They are the leaves folded back each night in the great volume that we write. They are our autobiography. Each day takes us not newly, but as a tale continued. It finds us what yesterday left us; and as we go on, every day is telling to every other day truths about us, showing the kind of being that is to be handed on to it, making of us something better or something worse, as we decide.—J. F. W. Ware.

"Who shall decide when doctors disagree" is a query never yet satisfactorily solved; hence let us wait patiently the arbitrament of time.

It is really astonishing how persistently some "yarns" will stay in "circulation." We have heard several "versions" of Joseph Smith's attempt to walk on water. Some have the attempt made in the waters of the Mississippi River, some in the Chagrin River, and in still other places. The latest version we have seen appeared in the Literary Digest for April 19, 1904, headed "Balked effort to walk on water." We reproduce it as it appeared in the Digest:

Charles H. Cartwell, writing in the Chicago Tribune, repeats this joke as played on the so-called "Prophet" Joseph Smith, Sr., of the Mormon Church:

"Sometime in the thirties Smith and a party of his followers were proselyting in Muskingum County, Ohio. He appointed a certain day when he would show the people his wonderful powers, and that he was a second Christ, by walking on the waters of Mud Creek. The water was always muddy. A day or two before the time set grandmother's brother Robert and a couple of neighbor boys were accidentally attracted to the Mormons working at the creek, and, concealing themselves, watched the Mormons put down stakes and put planks on them from bank to bank, the plank resting about six inches under the water. After the Mormons left the boys went down and took out the center plank, where the water was about ten feet deep. The next day 'Balaam' Smith came down to the creek, and after a long exhortation, started across the creek. He was all right and on top till he came to the center, where his 'powers' seemed to leave him, and he, like McGinty, went to the bottom. This was the end of Mormonism in that old tried and true Presbyterian county."

It is greatly to the discredit of that "old tried and true Presbyterian county" that such a story should originate with one of its people. The story lacks the one great essential element,—truth. It is false, and it is surprising that papers like the Tribune and the Digest would print such a palpable falsehood. Unless the plank were placed near enough to the surface of the water to be seen, one could not, without very much practice, follow it; and of course if it could be seen, the missing plank would have been seen. In fact one version of the story (at another place again) has it that the plank was discovered and the water-walker returned.

We wonder when this silly story, "like McGinty," will go down, never to rise. When will the press quit circulating such palpable untruths about Joseph Smith?

REMARKS BY PRESIDENT SMITH.

At the close of the evening business session, Saturday, April 16, at Kirtland, President Joseph Smith made a few remarks as follows:

"Before parting I have just this word to say: I am very thankful to you, brethren, for the kindly manner in which you have treated me and my colleagues as your presiding officers. I assure you that I appreciate this; for I begin to realize that I am going down hill, though I try to grow old gracefully, and be good natured about it all the same. I trust that the divine providence will watch over us during another year. Notwithstanding that we may feel discouragements, there is only one thing for us to do, and that is, in the language of the immortal hero, 'Stand by our guns, and keep our powder dry,' maintain our cause with courage and fidelity.

"I trust that when the year shall have passed and we meet again, should providence permit it, we will have done nothing, any of us, to disturb the relationship of confidence and trust which ought to be established between us now, and I believe is. I advise you that you take into consideration the fact that in a sense each man is his brother's keeper; and that sense is this: Maintain each other in honor. We have not given each other a pledge, as individuals nor as a body, to sustain any man in unrighteous or evil conduct, nor to shelter a man from just accusation, if he be guilty.

"The conditions before us are peculiar; and I hope that we will be able to maintain our position under the cross-fire that will be brought to bear upon us. I, to-day, got a copy, or portion of the Weekly British Whig, with my picture printed in it, and Joseph F. Smith, his name and his character, and what he is, and who he is, and how rich he was, and what political power he wielded, accompanying it; so you will be confronted with my picture here, as the man who testified before the committee. Now, you know how to answer that."

DEATH OF ETHAN BARROWS.

The Deseret News for April 14 contained an obituary of Ethan Barrows, with portrait accompanying. The News gave the following concise sketch of Bro. Barrows' life:

Ethan Barrows was born at Dalton, Coos County, New Hampshire, January 12, 1817; he was a son of Jacob and Emily Waterman Barrows. He united with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on July 23, 1835, at Dalton, New Hampshire, at the early age of eighteen years. He left his native State on November 8, 1835, for Kirtland, Ohio, where the Church in its early struggles was building a Temple. After a perilous journey of twenty-five days he reached his destination, and was present at the dedication of the Kirtland Temple on March 27, 1836. He also worked on this Temple two months and likewise attended a grammar school held in the attic of the Temple.

He was ordained an elder and a seventy in 1840, at Nauvoo,

Illinois, and shared the struggles, privations, sorrows, and the blessings of this Church in its early days, through the states of Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois. He married Lorena Covey at Far West, Caldwell county, Missouri, in 1837, who died at Salt Lake City in 1869. He arrived at Salt Lake City September 14, 1850, after three months of hardship in crossing the plains; he was one of the sturdy pioneers who helped to build up this city, and shared the hardships and privations of the people of Utah. He went into the boot and shoe business with G. W. Slade, with whom he crossed the plains, they being the first boot and shoe merchants to start in business in Salt Lake City, opening a shop in an adobe house on Main Street. Later on he opened a store of general merchandise on Second South East.

He married Lucy Hardy in 1856. In 1881 he and his wife joined with the Reorganized Church and he became the first president of the Salt Lake Mission branch of that Church after the mission chapel was built, and he has remained a steadfast worker therein up to the time of his death, April 12, 1904. He was eighty-seven years and three months old at the time of his death. He leaves a wife, three sons and two daughters to mourn his death. They are Brigham Y. Barrows of Wyoming, Mrs. T. N. Sacket of Frisco, Utah; Mrs. J. E. Stewart of this city; L. E. Barrows of Charleston, Utah; and Charles H. Barrows of Lamoni, Iowa, and sixteen grandchildren and twenty-one great grandchildren; also one sister—Mrs. Charles Cheney.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. C. B. Brown, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, recently wrote us inclosing some clippings from Oskaloosa newspapers. Some of the Utah elders had been holding a conference at Oskaloosa and the reporters got the "Mormon" Church and the Reorganized Church mixed in their reports. Bro. Brown in an article which appeared in the same organ later corrected some of the errors, and gave the readers of the Oskaloosa papers some of the very marked distinctions between the two churches.

According to a dispatch from London, April 23, the foreign office of the British Government has come to a definite agreement with the Zionists as to the location and extent of the tract of land in East Africa for Zionist colonization. It will consist of five thousand square miles of land northeast of Lake Victoria, Nyanza. It is well watered, well forested, and fertile, and five miles distant from the Uganda railroad. The site will be carefully examined by a committee of Zionists, with a view to colonization.

Secretary Salyards returned home Sunday noon last. After the close of Conference he spent a few days visiting friends and relatives at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and Steubenville, Ohio.

On Thursday, April 21, Patriarch A. H. Smith, his secretary, Leon Gould, and his son Frederick A. Smith, returned to Lamoni from Conference. "Uncle Alex" was still suffering some, but was better than when leaving Kirtland.

Heman C. Smith, of the Twelve, reached home from Kirtland on Monday, April 18. Sickness at home brought him home before the close of Conference. However, he missed but one business session.

Most if not all of the Lamoni visitors to General Conference are now at home, and have taken up the routine of life.

President Smith returned home Tuesday morning (26th), having come direct from Cleveland and without stopping over at Chicago as had been his intention. He reports a steady downpour of rain from Cleveland to Chariton, Iowa. At Burlington he was pleased to see Bro. Elbert A. Smith and wife, who came to Lamoni by same train for a visit among relatives and friends. At Chariton he was greeted by Bro. Charles Barrows who was returning from Salt Lake City, where he had been called by the death of his father, Elder Ethen Barrows, whose demise is noticed elsewhere in this issue.

Truth sometimes appears to be chameleon like in its aspects, for it seems to vary according to the position occupied by the observer. One sees it in one light, another in a different light, and these from the differing lights and shades which they see draw different and sometimes conflicting conclusions. Hence conflicting ideas exist where each disputant believes but one opinion ought to be held.

"What do you think of Kirtland as gathering place?" is frequently asked us. So far as human judgment seems to go there is little to attract immigration to this "ancient land-mark," but that it has its weight in bearing testimony we may well believe. There should be no doubt in the minds of the believers in the angelic message as it was delivered to Joseph Smith, that the faith as promulgated from Kirtland and attested by what attended the building of the Temple and what took place in it after its erection, is emphasized by the faithful, silent testimony borne by this "ancient land-mark." Vandal hands did at times deface the walls and shell of the building, but as the "scent of the rose" remains though the vase be shattered, so does the spirit in the "ancient land-mark."

Canon Henson of Westminster Abbey in a recent article in the Contemporary Review attacked the Bible, especially the Old Testament. He is reported as saying "its incredible, puerile, or demoralizing narratives" are a pack of lies too gross for toleration. He closes his article by asking: "Is the faith of the church in the divine Christ, living, present, and active, really built on an empty tomb?" The attack of Canon Henson on the Bible has caused much amazement in England, and doubtless he will be dealt with by the authorities of the church with which he is affiliated. To add to the excitement caused by Henson's article, there comes a demand from Sir Oliver Lodge, of the University of Birmingham, and one of England's noted scientists, for a "reinterpretation of Christian doctrine." He demands a revised Christianity. He declares that "the doctrine of atonement is a survival from barbarous times," and repudiates the belief in "an angry God appeased by the violent death of Christ."

The quadrennial general conference of the Methodist Church will convene at Los Angeles, California, May 3. It is worthy of note that at this conference women will be admitted as delegates. When the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized at Baltimore, Maryland, December 24, 1874, every minister in the Church was a member of the conference. A rapid increase of ministers necessitated a limitation of conference membership, and in 1812 the conference a delegate body though composed entirely of ministers. In 1872 laymen were admitted as delegates, and in 1898 provisions were made for equal representation of ministry and laity. This year for the first time women are admitted as delegates.

On Friday, April 22, three men in Chicago paid the extreme penalty for crime. They were destroyed by the civil authorities to protect society both by ridding it of three desperate criminals and teaching others, who are criminally inclined, that the laws designed to protect can not be broken with impunity. It has cost the state of Illinois thousands of dollars to capture, convict, and destroy the "car-barn bandits"; but it is to be hoped the money has been well spent, that is we hope that society has not only been benefited directly by the destruction of a dangerous trio, but that the example of stern justice will have a noticeable effect in checking crime. In the great city of Chicago crime has been steadily on the increase, and it will be well if this great step towards better order is followed up in no uncertain way. The good effect of this stern execution of justice should not be lost.

The practices of "criminal lawyers," who are by reason of technicalities and shrewd manipulation enabled to free so many criminals are responsible to a large extent for the increase of bold crimes. The ambition of lawyers ought to be to protect society against criminals, not to shield open criminals from the vengeance of an outraged public. Every man should, of course, have a chance for his life, but there is much in the "practice of law" which is reprehensible. If there were more effort to enforce the law and less to evade it, it would be better for the public. It is better for such miserable degenerates as the "car-barn bandits" to be destroyed than that they should live and continue to infest society with their evil influences.

Original Articles.

THE STANDING MINISTRY.

In your columns for March 16, page 251, the writer says that he can not find any more provision made for supporting the traveling ministry than for the standing, neither can he find that the standing ministry are not under obligations to travel. In section 104, paragraph 43, Book of Covenants, we read:

And these seventy are to be traveling ministers unto the Gentiles, first, and also unto the Jews, whereas other officers of the church who belong not unto the twelve neither to the seventy, are not under the responsibility to travel among all nations, but are to travel as their circumstances shall allow.

The quorum of seventies, which quorum is instituted for traveling elders to bear record of my name in all the world, wherever the traveling high council, my apostles, shall send them to prepare a way before my face. The difference between this quorum and the quorum of elders, is that one is to travel continually, and the other is to preside over the churches from time to time: the one has the responsibility of presiding from time to time, and the other has no responsibility of presiding, saith the Lord your God.—Section 107: 44.

Again the writer says that high priests are under obligations to travel is plainly stated in a revelation given in 1894:

The twelve and the seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible.—Section 122: 7.

From section 105, paragraph 43, we learn first that the twelve and seventy are a traveling ministry and that all other officers are not under the responsibility to travel; second, that they, the standing ministry, are to labor as their circumstances shall allow. Why labor as circumstances shall allow if, as the writer states, there is no more provision to support the traveling than the standing?

In section 107, paragraph 44, we learn that one is to travel continually. Why not the other, if under obligations to travel, as the brother would have us believe? The Lord says the difference between the two is that one is to travel, the other to preside over the churches (branches, districts) and stakes. Again, I ask, Why does the Lord say that one is to travel continually more than the other, if the latter is, as the writer says, under obligations to do so? In this same section we notice that the standing ministry are to preside over the churches and while they are doing this they are to labor as their circumstances will allow. If this saying applies to the standing ministry of to-day as it did in the early days of the work, I ask the question, How can the writer say that there is no provision for the support of the ministry who, by command of the Lord, are to travel continually, while the standing ministry, the Lord says, are not under responsibility to do so, only as their circumstances shall allow?

The brother citing us to the revelation of 1894, section 122, paragraph 7, says that from this the high priests are under obligations to travel. Let us notice: "The Twelve and the seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work." We ask where is the proof that high priests and elders are under obligations to travel, when the Lord says "together with such as can travel and preach"? Why say "as can," or why say "together with such"? Are we not justified in saying, as we did in the HERALD for February 17, that the standing ministry was not under obligations to travel? The reader will please notice that the sayings objected to by the other writer is "standing ministry not under obligations to travel." That not only means high priests, but the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. (See section 122, paragraph 7.) Not less than seventy times in the Book of Covenants do we find the traveling and standing ministry mentioned. Now if the latter is under obligation to travel, why call them the standing ministry?

Our attention is called to the following:

It is my will that my servant, Warren A. Cowdery, should be appointed and ordained a presiding high priest over my church in the land of Freedom, and the regions round about, and should preach my everlasting gospel, and lift up his voice and warn the people, not only in his own place, but in the adjoining countries, and devote his whole time in this high and holy calling which I now give unto him, seeking diligently the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness, and all things necessary shall be added thereunto; for the laborer is worthy of his hire.—Section 103: 1.

The writer says if this was necessary in the land of freedom, why may not the same be necessary in St. Joseph, St. Louis, Chicago, and other places? We answer, Yes, if the conditions and needs of the work are the same. Let us compare them. This land of freedom spoken of in the above revelation, is in the state of New York. The date of this revelation to W. A. Cowdery was November, 1834. There were at that date no apostles or seventy. They were chosen in the early spring of 1835. In this land of freedom were nine small branches. They were several miles apart. The membership ran from six to sixty-five to the branch. The branches had suffered much by false teachings by hypocrites who had come into the Church. The country was new; no railroads, not many highways, and W. A. Cowdery would have to devote his entire time, as contemplated in the revelation, to visit the branches. Besides, he was to preach to the world. The conditions and needs of the work were such that there is no comparison with St. Joseph, St. Louis, and Chicago. And again, laborers were very few, and under the circumstances I see the wisdom in the provisions made and heartily indorse the same and find no fault with the promise that the laborer is worthy of his hire, providing the laborer will work. To appoint a high priest or an elder to take charge of a branch in a town or city and to support him as the pastor so that he does not have to labor with his hands, is not in harmony with the teachings of the Book of Mormon. See Alma 1: 2, 3-6, from which the following are extracts: "And he had gone about among the people, preaching to them that which he termed to be the word of God, . . . declaring unto the people that every priest and teacher ought to become popular; and they ought not to labor with their hands, but that they ought to be supported by the people."

In the third verse Alma speaks against such teachings and calls it priestcraft and says that if such was enforced among the people it would prove their entire destruction. Did Alma mean what he said? The religious world calls him a crank. What do we Latter Day Saints think of him?

In the sixth verse we read: "The priests left their labor, to impart the word of God unto the people, the people also left their labors to hear the word of God." "Well," says one, "that is what we believe. Our pastor should leave his labor and devote his time to study, visit the Saints, be at all meetings, expound the word unto us on the Sabbath." Yes, but you notice that when the priest had imparted the word of God unto the people, they all returned again diligently unto their labors, the priest not esteeming himself above his hearers, for the preacher was no better than the hearers, neither was the teacher any better than the hearer, and thus they were all equal and they did all labor every man according to his strength. The above was the custom in Alma's time. Are the needs and conditions of the work in our day the same? If so, why should one man be placed in charge of the work in one city, one in another, and supported by the Church, when he belongs to that class of ministry that the Lord calls "the standing ministry" and is to labor as his circumstances allow?

We have in our branches the president, priest, teachers, and deacons, and if the branch is large, we can have several priests and teachers. These officers have their line of work to do. Now why should they be expected to do their duty and support their families any more than the one in charge of the branch?

"Well," says one, "there is much to do besides preaching." That is true, and in a perfectly organized branch or district we have many officers to do the work, and if, as some have said, the local men will not or can not for the lack of time attend to the needs of the branch, why not do away with all, and, like many of the churches of men, have only one and he be our pastor, priest, teacher? There is certainly no justice in supporting one to do his duty and look for the others to support themselves and do their duty in church work. Such a course can not be considered equal. It seems to me that the needs of the work in the missionary field are so great that we of the standing ministry who can be at home with our families, should say to the Church: While we are located in one place, we shall do what we can to care for the work and support ourselves so that those who are called to go into the missionary field will be supported, first those of the traveling ministry together with such high priests and elders as can go.

On page 257 of HERALD for March 16 there is, in my judgment, a position taken that has a tendency to encourage the local officials to become discouraged in their duties and is not in harmony with the true spirit of this work, and if the opinion of this writer is given heed to, I fear that many that have been called and ordained will come under condemnation. The writer says: "I think that the local brethren almost everywhere will agree with us that men who must labor every day can not give the work in cities the attention it should have." I ask what about the men who work in the country? They work eight months out of every twelve, from two to four hours a day more than the city men. So, if because they have to labor in the cities they can not give the work the attention it should have and it would be wise to appoint some one who will not need to labor with his hands to care for church work in the cities, would it not be advisable to do so in the country? If this was done, would it be in harmony with what we have already referred to in Alma?

Again the writer says: "Either their employer during six days or their hearers on the seventh will suffer." I ask, How was it with Paul when he worked three years as a tent-maker and preached every Sabbath? Any complaints? How was it with men who had to plow and sow from sunup to sunset, and how was it with elders who worked in the many shops and stores and would attend all branch meetings and go five to ten miles to preach and return home on Sundays? The brother says: "It is simply impossible under present conditions for men to earn their livelihood and find time to keep themselves in good condition to prosecute the work in a large branch." I ask, Are not the conditions in towns and cities in the United States and the British Isles better for the laboring man than it was fifty to seventy years ago, or even thirty years ago? To-day nearly all laboring men work eight to ten hours a day and in most every city half a day on Saturday. When I was a boy, forty years ago, eleven and twelve hours was a day's work. To-day it is eight to nine. I confess I fail to see what there is in labor to-day that will make a man unqualified to care for the church work. You can go to work at seven and some at eight and can come home at four and five and six. You have from two to four hours in the evening to read or visit your friends, and seven to nine hours to sleep, half a day on Saturday, and all day Sunday; and under such conditions we are told that it is simply impossible to earn a living and care for church work. Why call and ordain men if such be the case? How was it with our fathers? Will they not rise up in judgement against us and say, "We worked six days a week, from two to four hours a day more than you, and walked miles on Sundays to preach"? You have your street-cars and bicycles, and fine buggies. You live in a fast age. Surely there is nothing in good honest employment that will disqualify a man for church work, if he will be honest, truthful, obliging, and lead a humble, prayerful life. Let us not deceive ourselves that we can not preach this gospel simply because we have to plow or mine coal, use the saw, pick and shovel, or have to stand behind the counter.

Brethren, honorable labor will never disqualify you for doing your duty in church work in large or small branches, in the city or in the country. Have faith in Him who has called and set you apart to labor in his Church. Do not depend too much on your own ability. Seek earnestly the spirit of your office and move out, doing what you can for the good of the Church and your fellow men and to the honor and glory of God. When you enter the stand to preach, do so in the spirit of humility; have the good of the cause at heart. Do not depend on your notes. Seek for the Spirit and if you receive it, you will not need the notes. If you have not got it, the command is to not teach, notwithstanding you may have notes. Study and inform yourself with all the knowledge you can, but remember that with all of this you need the light and power from above. By the spirit of man we understand the things of man; the things of God by the Spirit of God.

Yours in the gospel,

WM. LEWIS.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

"Let God be true if it proves every man a liar."

When Jesus set up his kingdom on earth, Satan's kingdom appeared also, to sign the death warrant for kings, rulers, magistrates, until fifty thousand fell in death. Three hundred and twenty-seven years Satan's kingdom held the reins of government.

John the Revelator says (16:13): "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet." Who were they who spoke this fourteenth verse? "For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." Nothing is plainer in these latter days. When I see the number of a man is six hundred and threescore, standing with their folded hands, closing the doors of their churches and laughing with a sneer and a scorn at the church of Jesus Christ, I picture the awful scene, like as it was in Christ's time, and as it is now. They had dens of lions, and the gladiatorial combats, fire and sword, and in these latter days they are imitating their examples, crying delusion, educating their members to play games of different kinds to cheer their members by teaching them gamblers' tricks, thereby imitating the false prophets. But many deceivers have gone abroad in the earth, saying, Lo, here is Christ, lo he is in the secret chambers; lo he is in the desert; but thus saith the word of God, I go not after them. In this matter they represent the ten kings that the spirits of devils took bodies in to destroy both God and his laws.

Dear Saints, when we stand alone and gaze upon the gloomy wreck of faith, I wonder why so many thousands dishonor God. (See Micah 3:7.) There is no answer from God. This is the sad condition now. The people perish.

B. S. HAYS.

THE LAW OF THE LORD.

We read in the 19th Psalm: "The Law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul"; "The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple"; "The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart"; "The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes." James said in the first chapter of his epistle, twenty-fifth verse: "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." Again we read in Matthew 5:48: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." By this language we understand that God is perfect, and therefore could not give an imperfect law. If he did, it could not make people perfect if they did obey it. So we must have a perfect law in order to make us perfect, and then we must live up to it, comply with its requirements, or we never will be made perfect beings, and how can we expect to dwell with him unless we are perfect? We can not attain to perfection except we obey his law.

Again James says: "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if ye be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass." So it will not do for Latter Day Saints to be hearers of the word only, but we must come to this understanding that we have to obey the commandments of God because they are right and pure. The Lord said, "Zion is the pure in heart"; so we need a perfect law, and the commandments of the Lord and a desire to live by them to make us pure. And this law is revealed unto us in the gospel.

Way back in the days of Adam and Enoch the gospel was preached, and as the people obeyed it and lived up to its precepts, they became perfect, and "God took them unto himself," and the saying went out, "Zion is fled." The word of the Lord to Enoch was, "Behold mine abode for ever." Therefore, Zion is God's dwelling-place and it will be only the pure and the good that will ever be able to live in Zion.

The Apostle Paul said in his epistle to the Galatian saints: "And the scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." That is, if we do the works of Abraham. It would be well for us to examine some of the works which he did, and turning over to Genesis 14: 18, we read:

And Melchisedec, king of Salem, brought forth bread and wine: and he was the priest of the most high God. And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth: and blessed be the most high God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him tithes of all.

Then we read in Hebrews, seventh chapter: "For this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; to whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all." This is the first account we have about tithing.

Then we read again in Genesis, twenty-eighth chapter, where Jacob made a vow, saying:

If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace; then shall the Lord be my God: and this stone, which I have set for a pillar, shall be God's house: and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee.

So as long as Jacob had even bread to eat and raiment to wear, he was willing to give a tenth unto the Lord, because this was his due, as we read in Leviticus 27: "And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord."

In Deuteronomy 14: 22: "Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year." Then I read in 2 Chronicles 31, where Hezekiah made a call for contributions:

And as soon as the commandment came abroad, the children of Israel brought in abundance the first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey, and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundantly. And concerning the children of Israel and Judah, that dwelt in the cities of Judah, they also brought in the tithe of oxen and sheep, and the tithe of holy things, which were consecrated unto the Lord, their God, and laid them by heaps.

So those people were blessed of the Lord and had plenty when they obeyed the command of the man of God.

Again we read in Nehemiah 10: 37:

And that we should bring the first-fruits of our dough, and our offerings, and the fruit of all manner of trees, of wine, and of oil, unto the priests, to the chambers of the house of our God; and the tithes of our ground unto the Levites, that the same Levites might have the tithes in all the cities of our tillage. And the priest the son of Aaron shall be with the Levites, when the Levites take tithes: and the Levites shall bring up the tithe of the tithes unto the house of our God, to the chambers, unto the treasure house. . . . And we will not forsake the house of our God.

The Lord says in Malachi:

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed; for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts.

O what a grand and a glorious promise is this made by him who never lies! The Prophet Isaiah said, "If ye be willing and obedient ye shall eat the good of the land; but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

Now, dear Saints, we are living in a gospel dispensation, when the Lord has again spoken from the heavens for the salvation of fallen man, and has restored the gospel wherein there is no change from the days of Abraham until now, and never can be, because it is the perfect law of the Lord converting the soul; and what it took to save Abraham, it will take to save us, and he paid tithes to the high priest of the most high God so we ought to pay our tithes to the high priest, Bishop E. L. Kelley, whom God has appointed. "For he that is tithed shall not be burned at His coming." Some may ask me, "Do you think this is a day of tithing for Latter Day Saints?" I answer, Yes, because the Lord has said so, in the Book of Covenants 64: 5: "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people." Are we the people of the Lord? Yes, we claim to be God's children. Then let us heed his voice and come up to the help of the Lord, that there may be enough and to spare in his house.

Again I read in section 106, a revelation given at Far West, Missouri, July 8, 1838:

In answer to the question, O Lord, show unto thy servants, how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing? Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying of the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord. Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather to the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. And I say unto you, If my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold, verily I say unto you, It shall not be a land of Zion unto you; and this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion. Even so. Amen.

And again, "Behold, the Lord requireth the heart, and a willing mind. And the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days." Now, we can see that this law has been given to the Church and the elders are to see that "my law is kept." "He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple." Again we read in section 102, where the Lord was speaking to the Saints in 1834:

But, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.

And now in conclusion, let me ask, Shall we be saints in word only, or in deed? Do we want an inheritance in the land of Zion, or the New Jerusalem when it shall come down from above? If so, then we must keep the celestial law, and obey all of the commandments of the Lord, for, "If we offend in one point, we are guilty of the whole." To give a new impetus to the work we must come up to the help of the Lord, we must not wait till we have an abundance and to spare. "Then will we give to thee, O Lord, and if not thou must wait or go without till we have it to spare." Remember, this is a day of sacrifice. The widow's mites were the greater sacrifice because she gave all that she had, while the others gave from their abundance. This is a day of judgments, a day of warnings, of which the late Chicago disaster was a crushing and fatal reminder; and I am led to wonder at this moment if there were any Latter Day Saints in that building at the time. O how many times hath the Lord warned and forewarned his Saints to "come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues," blood, smoke, fire, etc.

"Yes, I've spoken to you often,
Yet some have me heeded not,
For awhile your hearts did soften
But my words you soon forgot.
Oh! stop and listen to the teaching
Of the spirit's warning voice
As it whispers so beseeching,
Hear, O hear the Savior's voice.

"If you heed what I have spoken,
And observe to do my will,
Keep your covenants unbroken,
I will all my words fulfill.
I will pray unto the father,
That he will not hew you down,
That you may prepare to gather
Up to Zion, with his own."

In gospel bonds,

JAMES KEMP.

AUSTRALIAN JOURNALISM.

In presenting the following journalistic specimen we are not offering it as a sample by which the whole of Australia may be judged. We give it as an instance of what we are sometimes required to meet in this country. It was printed in the Newcastle Morning Herald and Miners' Advocate of October 31, 1903. The writer replied briefly, which reply was printed November 3. It should be stated, however, that said paper had previously and has since been fair to us, having inserted many articles from Brn. G. R. Wells and W. J. Haworth. The article in question was submitted by a chief correspondent in connection with other matter. It was of course published. The writer, who signs himself "Falcon," furnishes matter for nearly or quite every issue under the general caption of "Pen-notes and pencilings." Under such circumstances his writings are credited. The piece referred to was reprinted by other papers. Bro. P. M. Hanson read it and replied to it through a paper printed in his part of the field. Bro. Wells afterward discovered that the article itself was copied, although it was not as near correct as the original. The latter did not go so far in mixing Joseph Smith and Brigham Young:

"THAT OTHER ZION MOVEMENT—MORMONISM.

"The extraordinary career of Doctor Dowie recalls to mind that of an even greater 'prophet'—Brigham Young. There are many who consider that Young was a mere polygamist and vulgar stump preacher, but he was what he was—a polygamist by precept, and perhaps one of the ablest organizers and statesmen that ever lived. Brigham Young was an axman, and as a young man in the state of Ohio spread the story that he had seen the heavens opened, and had conversed with angels. By them he was informed that there was a book in a stone coffer near his home, and that this was the Book of Mormon—'Reformed Egyptian'—which was taken over by some fugitives from Egypt, who, in the fourth century, established their civilization in America. Very soon a stranger appeared on the scene—Joseph Smith, a tall, slim, blue-eyed man, of remarkable personality, who declared that he was the prophet who was to restore Mormonism, with Brigham Young as his lieutenant. On this a settlement was founded at Kirtland, entitled 'The City of Latter Day Saints,' but the sects was soon driven out, and so trekked to Missouri. Here they formed their famous 'Death Society' for the removal of obnoxious persons, and Smith, to cloak his own irregularities, announced polygamy as an article of faith. It was the latter that led to the second expulsion which followed on the arrest of Smith, and his brother, and their lynching by a mob, who broke into the gaol which held them. Brigham Young now became the chief apostle of the sect, and at once showed his extraordinary genius. He sought volunteers, he closed up his ranks when they were full, and emulating Moses he set out at the head of them on that extraordinary pilgrimage, which ended in the discovery of the Great Salt Lake in Utah. When the Lake was sighted the pilgrims fell on their knees, and Brigham Young drew a comparison between the prospect before them and the Dead Sea, Mount of Olives, and River Jordan, the features of which are extraordinarily similar. And then the 'prophet' started to plan out a city, and evolve a code of laws, which he did both quickly and well. Indeed, save for the hideous practice of polygamy, the work was that of a great master, with the result the Vale of Deserat, as it was called, became a land flowing with milk and honey, while a city arose of comparative splendor and undoubted beauty. Regarding polygamy, the practice was for each Mormon to have from two to ten wives, while Brigham Young had nineteen temporal and one hundred and eighty-five spiritual wives, the latter being 'sealed' to him. Very splendid was the Temple the Mormons built for themselves, and which, consecrated to mystic rites, took forty years to build. And very awful was the work of the Death Society, its worst acts being the Mountain Meadow Massacre, when one hundred and twenty men and women and children, immigrants who had trekked into Utah, were slain by Mormons disguised as Red Indians."

"MORMON RECORDS.

"Sir: In your issue of October 31, there is an article entitled, 'That other Zion movement—Mormonism.' The said article contains several historical errors. First, it was Joseph Smith, not Brigham Young, who 'conversed with angels' in New York, and also received the plates, and from them translated the Book of Mormon. The latter was printed, and the Church organized in 1830. Brigham Young did not join the movement until 1832. Second, the Book of Mormon, written in the 'Reformed Egyptian' language, was not 'taken over by some fugitives from Egypt.' Every sentence of it was written in America, and the people who wrote the most of it came from Palestine, not Egypt. An earlier colony, who wrote a small part of it, came over from the Tower of Babel, just after the confusion of tongues. Third, the aforesaid people are represented as coming over and establishing their civilization in the fourth century. This means, I presume, the fourth century of the Christian era. The last of the two colonies we have referred to came over in 600 B. C. The former civilization had at that time become extinct and the latter became extinct in 400 A. D. According to the Book of Mormon, ancient American civilization ended where 'Falcon' says it began. Fourth, it says Smith and his brother were killed in Missouri. They were killed in Illinois. Other events also, which belong either to Illinois or Utah, are located in Missouri. Fifth, it represents Joseph Smith as the author of polygamy. Chamber's Encyclopedia and other authorities teach that Young was its originator. Joseph said, 'Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and cleave unto her, and none else.' And the Reorganized Latter Day Saints, who differ radically from the Utah Church, are strictly monogamic. They have churches at Hamilton, Wallsend, and elsewhere in Australia. Their epitome of faith reads as follows:—'We believe the doctrines of a plurality and community of wives are heresies, and are opposed to the law of God.'

I am, etc.,

"A. C. BARMORE.

"Brunker-road, Hamilton West."

What next?

ALMA C. BARMORE.

BRISBANE, Australia, March 3, 1904.

THE TRUE GOSPEL AND THE TRUE CHURCH.

BY ELDER D. E. TUCKER.

These are very important questions to the human family; and we will briefly consider them, hoping this may lead to a further investigation upon the part of those reading.

The true gospel—what is it? It is a revelation:

For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.—Galatians 1: 12.

Men can not successfully preach it, and authoritatively administer the sacred ordinances thereof, unless called of the Lord and sent with authority from him to do so:

And how shall they preach, except they be sent? As it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things.—Romans 10: 15.

We see it is called the gospel of peace and of glad tidings; because it brings peace, glad tidings, and great joy to every heart and soul who will believe and obey it.

Peace, because we read:

To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet in the way of peace.—Luke 1: 79.

Glad tidings because angels are connected therewith:

And the angel answering said unto him, I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God; and am sent to speak unto thee, and to show thee these glad tidings.—Luke 1: 19.

Joy, because of the statement of our Savior:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, that ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice; and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy.—John 16: 20.

The true gospel is also the power of God unto the salvation of those who obey it:

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.—Romans 1: 16.

The Lord is as willing and as ready to reveal himself to those who obey the true gospel in this day and age as he was to those who obeyed it in Paul's day, for the reason that he is unchangeable and no respecter of persons, and his kindness, love, and mercy are just as true, as deep, as strong, and as far-reaching as they ever were. And he will never turn away any humble soul who will earnestly seek him in the right way. For thus it is written:

I am the Lord, I change not, therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.—Malachi 3: 6.

Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.—Hebrews 13: 8.

Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double minded.—James 4: 8.

How can we draw nigh to God?

For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God.—Hebrews 7: 19.

How are we to obtain that better hope?

He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my father, and I will love him, and will manifest [reveal] myself to him.—John 14: 21.

Hence we see there never was a full and complete salvation in the kingdom of heaven without revelation, and there never will be, for the reason that full and complete salvation in the kingdom of heaven is based upon knowledge of God the Father, and of his Son Jesus Christ; and this knowledge must come to individuals by revelation.

And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent.—John 17: 3.

Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.—1 Corinthians 12: 3.

All things are delivered to me of my father: and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him.—Luke 10: 22.

Dear reader, let us pause a moment and ask, What is required of us that we may place ourselves in a proper condition to receive this knowledge from our Lord and Master that is so essential to our salvation in the kingdom of heaven? We as mortal beings, and as the offspring of God, must obey him in all things whatsoever he has commanded.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.—Ecclesiastes 12: 13, 14.

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.—Matthew 28: 20.

These commandments are just as binding upon the ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ to-day as they ever were. They are to keep his commandments one and all, and to teach people to do so unto the end of the world. And if they do this they need not fear; the Lord will be with them, for he has said so, and his word will never fail.

Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.—Matthew 24: 35.

We will have to go to the record, then, to see what his commandments are, and we will not find them all in one chapter or verse, but throughout the entire scriptures. We will first begin with faith.

And Jesus answering saith unto them, have faith in God.—Mark 11: 22.

Let us ask why it is necessary to have faith in God?

But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.—Hebrews 11: 6.

In order to please God, then, what kind of faith must we have?

Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.—Jude 1: 3.

When we are in possession of this faith we can expect to receive divine communication from the holy church above; without which we can never truly say we know the Lord, whom to know is life eternal.

The next command in order is repentance.

I tell you, nay; but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.—Luke 13: 5.

True and genuine repentance is a turning away from everything that is of a sinful and evil nature, and strictly adhering to those things commanded of the Lord; for if we should turn away from sin and evil, and refuse to adhere to what he taught, it would not be true and genuine repentance; for there are sins of omission as well as commission, and to refuse to obey any one of his commands is a sin of omission.

We read of a certain young man who said he had "observed all these from his youth up." But when informed that he had lacked one thing yet, and when told what that one thing was, he was sad, and went away grieved. This young man, it seems, was debarred from entering the kingdom, because of his refusal to obey this one command of the Lord. How necessary, then, that men should obey all.

The next command is baptism.

Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.—Matthew 28: 19.

This is water baptism, and not the baptism of the Spirit. Let us consider what baptism is, and what are its requirements.

The first requirement is a proper subject,—one who has been begotten by the word of truth.

Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures.—James 1: 18.

One who is begotten with the word of truth, is one who has heard the gospel and believes it, and has truly repented of his sins. This kind of an individual is a proper subject for baptism.

The next requirement is a proper administrator, one who has been called and sent of the Lord to do the work.

The next requirement is a proper place:

And John also was baptizing in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there; and they came, and were baptized.—John 3: 23.

The next is a going down into the water, both the candidate and the administrator, and an administration of the ordinance, while both are yet in the water, and then a coming up out of the water.

And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.—Acts 8: 38, 39.

It also requires a burial in the water, a planting in the water, and a raising of the body from the water, as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father:

Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.—Romans 6: 3-5.

It also requires a washing of the church with water, which signifies that every member must be baptized:

Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word.—Ephesians 5: 25, 26.

It also requires a sprinkling of the heart, and washing of the whole body with water:

Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.—Hebrews 10: 22.

We will now see what form or mode of baptism fulfills these requirements.

Sprinkling does not, for those who thus teach and baptize at the same time teach that it is not essential to salvation. For this reason it is not necessary to repent, neither is it necessary to have a proper administrator, to administer something that is not essential to salvation. Neither does it fulfill the requirements of going unto the water, nor of going down into the water, neither the candidate nor the administrator, nor of administering the ordinance while both are in the water, nor of coming up out of the water, nor of a burial in the water, nor of a planting in the water, nor of raising the body from the water, like as Christ was raised from the dead, neither does it fulfill the requirement of a washing of the church with water, for the reason that it does not fulfill the requirement of having the heart sprinkled from an evil conscience, and the body washed with pure water; for those who thus baptize usually sprinkle the head.

So it is easy to see that baptism by sprinkling fulfills none of the requirements of a legal baptism; and from the same parity of reasoning baptism by pouring is also found wanting.

But baptism by immersion is the only mode that seems to fulfill all the requirements of a legal baptism. In the first place, it fulfills the requirement of a proper subject, one who believes that it is for the remission of sins; and that repentance is necessary upon his part in order that his sins may be remitted:

John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—Mark 1: 4.

Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2: 38, 39.

He will also believe that it requires a proper administrator, one who is called and sent of the Lord as these men were; and being thus called and sent, he will certainly know to preach just what they did.

Immersion also fulfills the requirement of much water, and of going unto the water, and of going down into the water, and of being baptized while both the candidate and the administrator are in the water, and it also fulfills the requirement of a burial in the water, and a planting in the water, and of raising the body from the water, as Christ's body was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, and of coming up out of the water, and of washing the church with water, and also of having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience with the full assurance of faith, and our bodies washed with pure water. Immersion, then, administered by proper authority to a proper subject, fulfills all the requirements of a legal baptism, while other modes do not.

The next important command of our Lord and Master is the laying on of hands. This is another one of the principles of the true gospel, and the one through which the Lord ordained that certain gifts and blessings should come to those obeying him. This is not taught and observed in this day and age as it was by the servants of the Lord in days gone by.

It behooves us to place ourselves in harmony with it, that the blessings to be derived therefrom may accrue to us. We now call attention to some passages of scripture bearing on this subject:

This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success.—Joshua 1: 8.

The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand.—John 3: 35.

Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God.—John 13: 3.

But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.—Matthew 4: 4.

I now call attention to the following:

And the Lord said unto Moses, take thee Joshua the son of Nun, a man in whom is the Spirit, and lay thine hand upon him.—Numbers 27: 18.

And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him: and the children of Israel hearkened unto him, and did as the Lord commanded Moses.—Deuteronomy 34: 9.

And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.—Acts 13: 13.

Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.—1 Timothy 4: 14.

And he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them.—Luke 24: 50.

Mr. Noah Webster, LL. D., in his history of the United States of America, published by himself and entered according to act of Congress in the year 1832 by himself, in the clerk's office of the district court of Connecticut district, and who was one of our great lexicographers, says on pages 151 and 152, paragraph 349, on ecclesiastical affairs of the New England colonies:

The Puritans left England, settled in America, for the purpose of enjoying liberty of conscience, not being willing to conform to the ceremonies of the Church of England. In America they adopted the independent or congregational plan of government; by which each church chooses its own ministers and officers, and submits to no government or censure from another church. They elected pastors and teachers, ruling elders and deacons; and it was the practice at times for the elders or principal men to expound passages of scriptures, or discuss questions, which was called prophesying, in imitation of the primitive churches. No church could be gathered, without the permission of the magistrates. Ordination was performed by the laying on of hands, either of the neighboring ministers or of lay brethren of the church. The former method was the most usual. The office of ruling elder and the custom of prophesying soon went into disuse.

This ordinance was not observed for ordination only, but for other purposes as well, for confirmation, for blessing of little children, and for healing of the sick:

Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.—Acts 8: 14-17.

When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.—Acts 19: 5, 6.

In regard to blessing little children we read:

Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them and pray: and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven. And he laid his hands on them and departed thence.—Matthew 19: 13-15.

And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.—Mark 10: 16.

And for proof that this authority was delegated to his ministry we call attention to the following:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my father.—John 14: 12.

As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world.—John 17: 18.

Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.—John 20: 21.

This shows conclusively that whatsoever our Savior himself taught and did his ministry were also authorized to do and teach.

Then in regard to administering to the sick, we introduce the following evidence:

They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.—Mark 16: 18.

Now when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them.—Luke 4: 40.

The Apostle James, before his departure, gave instruction to the church as follows:

Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms. Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.—James 5: 13-16.

And they cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them.—Mark 6: 13.

(To be continued.)

BRO. J. H. JOHNSON, of Aberdeen, Washington, wishes to hear from some brother who thoroughly understands the tent and awning business, and who would go to Aberdeen for one or two years.

Selected Articles.

THE PEDIGREE OF THE BIBLE—A ROMAN CATHOLIC VIEW.

Miss Helen Gould's prize-offer for the best essays on the origin and history of the different versions of the Bible has given quite a stimulus to Bible study. A "Protestant view" of the questions at issue, from the pen of the Reverend Doctor James Fox, a secretary of the American Bible Society, appeared in a recent issue (December 26) of the Literary Digest. In the Dolphin (January), a Roman Catholic journal published in Philadelphia, Father H. J. Heuser, of Overbrook Seminary, Pennsylvania, presents the Roman Catholic side. He says:

"It is well known to scholars of scriptural bibliography that there were translations of the Bible in the vernacular before either Wyclif or Tyndale attempted such; and that the charge against Wyclif and Tyndale was not the fact that they translated the Bible which would have honored them, but that they used the translated Bible to established a religious socialism akin to the anarchistic socialism in the political order of our day. That is the sole charge for which the Catholic authorities can be held responsible in judicially condemning these men, who were zealous and, perhaps, sincere enough, but whose zeal, like that of most self-constituted reformers, was not according to wisdom. And as a civil government may legislate against and even coerce into submission public fomenters of strife (who claim a direct and uncontrolled mission from God to say and do what they deem just), if they disturb the public order, so will the church, which exercised a more directive power in those times upon the government than it does in a purely secular age like ours, be recognized as having used a legitimate and freely conceded right to censure and to punish. And if any one asks for an explanation of the barbarity that accompanied such enactments, let him study the social conditions of those times and compare them with popular outbursts of wrath against some negro criminal who acts out in a moment of frenzy the animal instinct, which thousands of men follow only in colder blood and more cautiously but no less criminally, in modern society. It is the public sentiment against the principle of wrong which shows itself to-day against the practice of brutal lust, and that vented itself in former days against the corruption of faith which animated every fiber of society, and produced with fewer external means the magnificent result of medieval art and letters, not to speak of public beneficence."

The Roman Catholic Church, we are told further, has "systematically and without interruption fostered the practical study of the Bible by those who teach her children, and those whose intelligent understanding of the Christian doctrine warrants a just appreciation of the written revelation in its entirety"; but she also "realized the one danger that essentially inheres in the indiscriminate exercise of interpretation."

"That danger is not an imagination. It is warning that comes to us from the inspired pages no less than from daily experience of which teachers like Mr. Dowie, and in this case Doctor Fox also, give us object-lessons. St. Peter, whom the Catholic Church honors as her first pontiff and vicar of Christ, and whom the Protestant translators of the New Testament still acknowledge as titular author of the two epistles which bear his name in the English Bibles, admonishes the Christian converts that they should heed what his 'beloved brother Paul' had taught them. But he deems this office likewise to warn them concerning the reading of certain parts of these writings which, though inspired by God, may become a stumbling-block to the unlearned. In these instructions, prompted by the divine wisdom, there are 'some things hard to be understood which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest unto their own destruction.' (I am quoting the words of the Protestant Revised Version, 2 Peter 3: 16, 17.) And lest they misunderstand him as though he referred only to certain writings of the Apostle of the Gentiles, he adds the words, 'as they do also with the other scriptures.' Against this misunderstanding he warns them, and thus stigmatizes the danger of private interpretation by the unlearned."

Proceeding to a consideration of the Preface to the Douai version (1582) of the Bible, which is quoted by Doctor Fox to illustrate his contention that the Roman Catholic Church has never translated the Bible into a "barbarous tongue" (such as English), except when compelled to do so by opponents, Father Heuser intimates that the impression conveyed by such detachment of words from their context is "false" and misleading. He appends his own outline of the contents of this historic Preface, which we summarize as follows:

1. A translation of the scriptures into the vulgar tongues is not absolutely necessary nor indiscriminately profitable. This stands to reason since, except through the interpreters in the synagogal and Christian priesthood, the Bible, except in fragments, was not and could not have been known for centuries after the establishment of Christianity. As to the absolute and indiscriminate reading, the words of Saint Peter and the effect of Protestant divisions prove that it requires check and guidance.

2. "Not for these nor any such like causes doe we translate this sacred booke, but upon special consideration of the present time, state, and condition of of our contrie." And this condition is "the indiscrete zeale of the popular and their factious leaders," who make plausible pretense of giving God's word to the people, whereas they pervert its meaning.

3. These translations are to be used with discretion, for although "a true, faithful, and sincere translation," opposed to the current perversions of the text, is a necessity of the times, it is only they who are "humble, discrete, and devout, and like to take much good, and no harme thereby" who should be encouraged to use it.

4. Confidently the translators set forth their plea of religious care and sincerity observed in the Douai version. They follow the interpretations of the Christian fathers, and give reasons for the annotations by which erroneous reading of the original text is prevented.

5. They follow in the main the old Latin vulgate, however, with due regard to the Greek, and they give excellent reasons for this course; for though the older text was in the Greek tongue, it had greatly suffered by the carelessness or missinformed correctors of a later date who acted as copyists and critics.

6. Finally, certain differences of translation are pointed out by way of exemplifying the introduction of false doctrine on the part of Luther and the reformers who undertook the task of translating.

All of which, in Father Heuser's opinion, goes to show that the Douai translators were actuated "not by a detestation, but a genuine love of Holy Writ, and a necessary desire that its lessons for good should find response in every soul the world over." We quote in conclusion:

"Though the authorized King James version, used for nearly three hundred years in the Protestant churches of England, was greatly amended by comparison with the Douai version, which forced a certain recognition of previous mistranslations by the more zealous but less just reformers—what is the value of the Authorized Version when compared by impartial judges with the original text from which it departed (whilst it professed to follow it more closely) in order to demonstrate the reasons for repudiating the authority of the ancient church?

"The answer is given by the forty-seven revisers of 1880, chosen from among the most learned Protestant divines in England and America. They make nearly twenty thousand corrections in which the revision differs from the Authorized Version; of these probably ten per cent, if not more, are a clear and uncompromising return to the old Douai version with an explicit recognition of the bias that had actuated the translators of the so-called Reformation. Of this any one who honestly wishes may convince himself, and we hope to have occasion for further demonstration of the fact.

"Thus the Douai version stands involuntarily as the model of correction for the two Protestant versions now in use by English-speaking Christians. The first is the Authorized Version of King James which corrected the most glaring errors of the Lutheran imitators; the second is the late Revised Version of 1880, which eliminated several thousand errors from the King James version. Another revision may bring us back entirely to the old Douai version, which in some respects is now to be preferred to Doctor Challoner's revision of it made over a century ago, because the style of language seemed to demand a new version."—The Literary Digest, February 13, 1904.

PROGRESS OF CHRISTIANITY IN JAPAN.

The German missionary, Schiller, who has spent many years in gospel work, has recently published, in the Chronik der Christlichen Welt (Leipsic), a timely account of the status of Christianity in Japan. We condense his article as follows:

"According to reliable statistics, the total number of Japanese Christians in 1902 was 129,134, of whom 46,634 were Protestants, 26,680 Greek Catholics, and 55,824 Roman Catholics. In addition to these, there are thousands of children who are not included in the reports of the Protestant churches, so that the total number will easily be 200,000 for the whole empire. This is, indeed, a small percentage in a total population of about 45,000,000—only four or five Christians to every thousand of the population. Yet it represents a great achievement when we remember that it is only thirty years since the law punishing persons for becoming Christians was abrogated, and the public warnings against Christianity as 'the wicked sect' were taken from the bulletin-boards. The growth in late years has also been satisfactory. The Protestants reported 4,308 baptisms, the Greek Catholics 983, and the Roman Catholics 4,391 in 1901 alone, or a total increase equal to 4.6 per cent, while the average increase in population is only 1.5 per cent. Even if this proportionate growth is maintained, however, it will still be one hundred and fifty years before the outward Christianization of Japan is an assured fact. In the beginning of 1902 there existed in the empire 453 organized Protestant congregations, of which 80 were financially independent and no longer mission-churches; also 171 Greek Catholic bodies and 210 Roman Catholic churches and chapels. These were served by 380 ordained Protestant pastors and by 27 Greek and 34 Roman Catholic priests, assisted by a host of nonordained evangelists, teachers, and other native helpers. The bulk of this work is still dependent on the assistance of the mission societies. But we can boldly claim that the quality of the Japanese Christians and preachers is such that Japanese Christianity would have abiding permanence even if all mission help were withdrawn. In reference to the spread of Christianity, it must be said that the work is still confined to the great centers of population, and is almost unknown to the people in the country districts. The organized congregations are found only in the cities, Tokyo alone reporting 15,000 Christians. It is evident that these centers constitute the best bases for the spread of the church."

The influence of this relatively small body of Christians in the state at large is strikingly brought out in an article by the native preacher, Kozaki Hiromichi, which appears in the same journal. He says:

"Although Christianity in Japan is still in its beginnings, there is abundant evidence to show that, relatively, it exerts remarkable influence and power; and in some departments of thought it has actually assumed the controlling leadership. There are but few of the modern books of Japan, especially of those that have been published during the reign of the present Emperor, that do not show the tendency. Many expressions, now in general usage, such as 'Sambi' (equivalent to 'praise and glory'); 'Jeisei' (equivalent to 'eternal life'); 'Kansha' (as the equivalent of thanks), are Christian expressions. The conception of 'Kami,' or God, has received a new meaning. The modern expressions in moral and ethical spheres show the influence of Christianity more than that of any other religion. Society in general has learned from Christianity that monogamy is the highest type of married life. When some years ago the Mormons began their propaganda in Japan, the great majority of the papers opposed the teaching.

"It is remarkable how many of the prominent men of Japan are Christians. To this creed belong one member of the imperial cabinet, two judges of the supreme court, two presidents in the lower house of parliament, three vice-ministers of state—not to mention a host of officials in lower ranks. In the first parliament, out of a total membership of three hundred, there were, including the president, twelve Christians, or a proportion nine times greater than that in the country at large. In the present parliament the president and thirteen members are Christians, and this number includes some of the most influential men in the assembly. Rather singularly, one of these was elected from a predominantly Buddhist district with an immense majority. In the same way, the Christian, Shimadi, who has been representing the city of Yokohama for ten years, was reelected with a majority greater than ever. In the army there are one hundred and fifty-five Christian officers, or fully three per cent of all, and the two largest battleships are commanded by Christians. In the universities and other schools of advanced grade, both among the teachers and the students, the proportion of Christians is exceptionally large. The same is true of those students who are studying abroad at the expense of the Government. Of the six graduates of the state institutions recently sent abroad, five are Christians. No less than three of the great dailies of Tokyo are edited by Christians. The most successful public and charitable institutions are managed by men of the same faith. The prominence of Christians in charitable work has greatly aided the cause of Christianity in Japan, and has made a strong impression upon the people at large. The outlook for Christianity in the 'Kingdom of the Rising Sun' is most promising."—Translation made for the Literary Digest, March 5, 1904.

A SYMPOSIUM ON THE LAYMAN'S "INDIFFERENCE."

Are laymen, in any real sense, "indifferent" to religion? If so, how can they be won back to an active participation in church life? This topic—a perennially interesting one in religious circles—is discussed in the current Hibbert Journal (London) by three eminent contributors—Sir Oliver Lodge, the scientist, Sir Edward Russell, editor of the Liverpool Daily Post, and Professor J. H. Muirhead, of Birmingham. Each writer views the subject from a different angle, and the editor of the magazine (the Reverend L. P. Jacks) adds a final word of his own.

Sir Oliver Lodge admits that the masses are "indifferent to ecclesiasticism" and "do not in any great number go to church"; but he thinks that serious questions of religion are as widely discussed as they ever were. One reason for apparent apathy he finds in the "overpressure" of modern life and its constant demands upon men. Another reason he thinks is to be found in a church service entirely detached from the atmosphere of twentieth century thought. On this point he writes:

"With all the enthusiasm for religion in the world, I would say to professional churchmen, you really can not continue to expect people to wade continually through so much medieval and ecclesiastical lore. You must free the ship of official religion from incrustation; it is water-logged and overburdened now, and its sails are patched and outworn. I do not ask you to use steam or any new-fangled mode of propulsion. By all means keep your attachment to the past, but study reality and sincerity; strive to say what you really mean, and to say it in such way that others may know that you mean it, and may feel that they mean it too. . . .

"Religion is one thing; church services as often conducted are quite another thing. Modification will be resented and opposed by some singularly minded lay churchmen. Nevertheless, if more eminent ability is to be attracted to the service of the church, if the great body of the laity are to be reached in any serious and effective manner, modifications, excisions, and reforms are necessary. It is not religion to which people are indifferent."

Sir Edward Russell, who confines himself almost entirely to an analysis of existing conditions, is of the opinion that "the workmen of towns have never been normally interested in religion." In regard to the community as a whole, he takes the ground that very much of the latter-day spiritual indifference in England must be attributed to movements generally regarded as religious. The Oxford movement for example, though it may have revived the religious interest of a proportion of the laity, "depressed that interest among a far greater proportion of the laity, by transmuting the dialect and emotion of English religion out of its characteristic subjective condition into the objective condition of sacrament observance and ritual miracle, which, I suggest, is alien from the English religious temperament." The rationalistic influence of Maurice, Robertson, Colenso, and Matthew Arnold is also cited. "The mood of the laity toward religion," says Sir Edward Russell, "must have been affected by the two great agents of change, sacerdotalism and rationalism." He continues:

"The tendency thus resulting, as I submit, from the two great changes of the past century, is increased by several contributory causes—or reflex effects. For example, owing, perhaps, to real improvement in society and a consequent diminution of suffering and grievances in civilized life, things in general are looked at with an easier regard. If this is so with things in general, it is sure, a fortiori, to be so with religion. Mr. Gladstone once said that when a man began to find his income straitened the first thing he retrenched in was his charities; the second was his books. If an average Englishman feels less worried and more at ease, the first thing he slackens is his religion.

"Then there is a fashion of saying—perhaps thinking—that you can worship God quite as well in the fields as at church. There is a discarding of what Longuet Higgins used to call altruistic worship—the observance of religious duties out of consideration for others, and for the magnetism which union in religious exercises brings to bear upon them. There is a considerable falling-off in preaching, and a still greater falling-off in the demand for preaching. There is a vastly prevalent idea that the chief good thing in connection with religions is 'Christian work': this distinctly lessens lay interest in religion, being really a mere patting of religion on the back on the score of its philanthropic appendages. . . .

"I have been asked whether, in my judgment, it is a common state of mind nowadays for religion to be actually rejected as a thing not to be believed. I think not. I am asked whether it is a common attitude just to leave religion on one side, as a thing that never occurs to one. This is very common, but only among persons who are conspicuously votaries of pleasure or of (what to them is pleasure in its most real form) business."

Professor Muirhead lays down three main propositions: (1) While there is no general decay of interest in religion, there is a very widespread decay of orthodoxy; (2) while public worship has ceased to appeal to the intellect, there has been no counterbalancing gain in its power of appealing to the emotions; and (3) while the attractions of public worship have thus failed to keep pace with the time, the resources of ordinary middle-class life to provide recreation and enjoyment have been greatly enlarged. He pleads for "the emotionalizing of public worship," and for a more esthetic church service as first steps toward the revival of intelligent interest in religion.

The editor of the Hibbert Journal presents still another phase of the question. He suggests that average men shrink from identifying themselves with religion to-day because they feel that its tenets are impracticable and impossible of realization:

"The type of plain man we are considering wants a more valid proof than has yet been offered that the world is serious when it professes the Christianity which is a life and not a creed. He doubts, moreover, whether he could seriously and honestly make such a profession himself. He is by all operative standards an honorable man; he deals honestly in trade, is a good husband and father, faithful to his friends (though, perhaps, a little hard on his foes), public-spirited, patriotic, munificent. But to pretend that the ethics of the sermon on the mount are his, even in their spirit, would be a flagrant falsehood. . . . Have we any serious intention of making our international politics, our trade and finance, our criminal codes, our social habits, our personal aims, conformable to that life which our new guides tell us Christianity is? The plain man may or may not think such conformity desirable; but until the attempt is more seriously made, the new Christianity appears to him to be something of a mockery. He is indifferent to a religion which, while interpreted as a life, is yet so remote from the underlying motives and currents of the world where it is professed; and, in the name of honesty, he refuses to be publicly associated with it."

The Christian Commonwealth (London) makes this comment on the whole discussion:

"These able thinkers leave the question they discuss all unsettled. The answer is still lacking. Why do the people care little for religion? Has not that been a perpetual query? Has not religion always been the concern of some, not of all—of a minority in every age, not of the majority? We venture to say that in the days of our forefathers there was even a more massive and stolid apathy than exists to-day, and we would suggest that missionary, evangelistic, and revival efforts were never so determined; and that, as a secondary power resulting from this primary life of religion amongst men, the spirit of philanthropic interest in humanity was never so alive. Sin is still rampant, and this begets indifference to righteousness; but righteousness is to be the great social and applied principle of the age before us."—The Literary Digest, February 13, 1904.

*

STILL ANOTHER RADIUM PUZZLE.

What is becoming of our science of chemistry? Our century-old atomic conceptions have received a rude shock; the law of the conservation of energy, to which everything in this universe was supposed to be subservient, is attacked; and now we seem to be reverting to the dream of the medieval alchemist—actually thinking of the transmutation of metals.

This, at least, is what we have come to, after the announcement made by Sir William Ramsay that radium apparently changes to helium. When he compares the resultant product of radium with helium, Sir William Ramsay is sure of his ground; for in conjunction with Lord Rayleigh he carried on a series of classic experiments which ended in the discovery of argon and helium—a discovery which deserves to be considered one of the most noteworthy achievements in chemical physics of the nineteenth century. Sir William Ramsay caught the heavy gas which radium emanates, a gas so evanescent that it disappears after a time; he found that gradually its spectrum, entirely different from any hitherto recorded, displayed the characteristic yellow line of helium. Day by day the helium line grew brighter. In a word, one element seemed to have changed to another. It is quite necessary to know how fast radium is turned into helium. As yet little that is definite has been furnished. If nothing else occurs but the changing of radium into helium, then, Professor Ramsay figures, it will take two million years to dissolve the gas.

Are we not perhaps on the verge of some great generalization, which will ultimately prove that just as we have many kinds of forces, all manifestations of one great force, so we may have seventy-odd elements, hitherto regarded as simple forms of matter distinct from each other, but in reality mere manifestations of but one matter? This strange, newly-discovered phenomenon certainly tends to show that one element may be changed into another. "What is this?" asked Sir William Ramsay, "but an actual case of that transmutation of one element into another in which the ancient alchemists believed when they painfully sought to change lead into gold and incidentally founded the modern science of chemistry?"

Clearly, there are more things between heaven and earth than are dreamed of in our chemical philosophy. —Scientific American, December 5, 1903.

THOSE Saints who took part in the Westward exodus, and later repudiated the works of darkness that crept into the Church, passed through perilous and thrilling experiences. A short sketch of the life of such a one, Elder William Gibson, appears in the April number of Autumn Leaves, together with an excellent likeness of the elder. This elder made four trips across the plains with ox teams. He hewed rock for the temple. He was converted to the Reorganization by Alexander and David H. Smith, and went out to preach to his old friends that were now his enemies.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Little Leaf That Died.

O little brown leaf in the grass,
Is the sum of your life complete?
Of what are you thinking just now,
Wind-swept from your home to my feet?
Do you dream of that day in the spring
When you waved in the rain-washed air,
A thrill with the wonder of life
That was making the old world fair?

Do you think of the bird that sang
While you nodded time to his tune,
And your comrades all clapped their hands
That beautiful morning in June?
Do you mourn for the colors so gay
That decked you awhile like a queen—
The crimson and gold that surpassed
Your old-fashioned robing of green?

And now, here you are, all undone,
Adrift in the terrible blast;
No trace of your splendor remains,
The day of your triumph is past,
And what was the use of your life?
And where is the promise of spring?
And why was there glory ere death
Swept down on his pitiless wing?

Little leaf in the grass, God knows!
Lie there where his hand let you fall,
Though the hurricane whirl you away,
The snow hide you under its pall.
God watched as you grew on the tree;
He knew how you withered and fell;
He sees you, prone, here at my feet,
And—he doeth everything well!

When spring comes again, little leaf,
I may search for you here in vain;
As well search for last summer's song,
Or the fragrance of last year's rain!
All safe in his great heart of love
God holdeth both fragrance and song,
And there, O my little brown leaf,
You and I for ever belong!

—Ada Meville Shaw.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column: It is with pleasure I read the Home Column each week, but I am sorry the sisters do not write more, giving their experience, which would be read with interest by all and help some poor, discouraged sister to rise with renewed energy and travel on the road of duty. It is an old saying, "One half of the world does not know what the other half is doing." Let me draw you a pen-picture of a sister who has come under my own observation, a young girl whose parents were poor. She was compelled to make her own way in the world. She worked as a cook and house girl for others and at the age of nineteen united with the Church and lived a devoted member, zealous of good works, respected and loved by all who knew her. She kept good company, had many lovers, but rejected all until she found one she thought would prove a congenial companion. He belonged to another church and was seemingly very religious, attending church and Sunday-school, and always talking scripture. She thought it would be very easy to convince him his faith was wrong, and that he would unite with her in her belief and then how happy they would be in the truth! Many were the pictures drawn by imagination of a happy home, but alas, how different it soon became after marriage!

Discussion commenced and grew until both parties were disgusted; one mad, the other almost heartbroken. The breach kept growing wider, relatives meddling and casting slurs when they had a chance. Many tears were shed, many prayers offered for husband, and many heartaches and sleepless nights to see and hear all manner of evil spoken of the Saints.

Four little children were born to them, but still the breach continued as well as the arguing and disputing. Heartbroken and discouraged the wife would toil on from day to day, trying to please her husband, yet standing firm in the faith and trying under these great difficulties to raise her children in the way they should go, knowing that when they are old they will not depart from it. She sat looking in the fire as it burned low while her family was in bed taking their rest, thinking what would become of her family, what the end would be. She almost wished she had never borne a child, when a sweet, cooing voice from the cradle aroused her to her senses. Taking her four month's old babe in her arms, and clasping it to her breast, she thought, Was there ever so lovely a baby? Dimpled and sweet, he seemed to understand by drawing himself up and trying to talk, chewing on both his fists at the same time and cooing in his sweetest voice. Then this passage of scripture came to her mind: "Can a woman forget her sucking child that she should not have compassion upon the son of her womb? Yea they may forget, yet will I not forget thee."

ONE OF THE SAME FAITH.

Love for the Mother.

There are some pictures too sad almost to look upon, and one of these is to see a wife and mother who has laid her life down for her family, when slowly fading out of sight, receiving at last the tenderness—the softened love-tones of those most dear to her, for which she had hungered for many a long year. Still, better even so late than not at all; but do you not think with me, it is better to recognize our angels now? Will you not act on this suggestion? I met a beautiful woman the other day who reminded me of a time when at a seaside resort I gave a talk to young girls—this beautiful girl had just come to remain a week. I talked that day about our mothers, how much they were to us, and how we should miss them when they left us, for, of course, they could not always be with us, and how we should regret the little attentions we had missed giving them. This beautiful girl, an only child, took it all in; she said she could hardly wait for me to get through. She left on the next train for home, and startled her mother by her sudden return. Her mother exclaimed, "What is the matter?" "Oh, mamma," she said, "I have come back to be attentive to you. You won't die, will you, till I am a perfect daughter?" Long after that I met that mother on a train and she said to me, "I always thought L— was about as good as she could be, but from the day she returned from the sea that summer she was absolutely perfect." That mother has gone on and that daughter is now a mother herself, and she has not to regret that she was not everything a daughter could be to a mother. There are too many daughters who act as if their mothers were their servants. I am not talking to mothers just now, or I should say, be careful! What some might call your unselfishness may ruin your daughter, and she, in turn, ruin others. Let your children have the benefit of the thought that they are to care for you instead of you being made to care for them. You did care for them when they could not care for themselves, now let them care for you, and you be the strong angel-mother to your children; and I hope your children will be the angels of your life, but angels down here need training. The angels in heaven are represented as doing the will of the Father—let us be as like them as possible, living glad, obedient, happy lives, and so make this earth more angelic!—Margaret Bottome in Ladies' Home Journal.

"I Gave Them Myself."

Said a mother to me one day: "When my children were young I thought the very best thing I could do for them was to give them myself. So I spared no pains to talk with them, to read to them, to teach them, to pray with them, to be a loving companion and friend to my children. I had to neglect my house often. I had no time to indulge myself in many things, which I should have liked to do. I was so busy adorning their minds and cultivating their hearts' best affections that I could not adorn their bodies in fine clothes, though I kept them neat and comfortable at all times.

"I have my reward now. My sons are ministers of the gospel; my grown-up daughter is a Christian woman. I have plenty of time now to sit down and rest, plenty of time to keep my house in order, plenty of time to indulge myself, besides going about my Master's business wherever he has need of me. I have a thousand beautiful memories of their childhood to comfort me. Now that they have gone out into the world, I have the sweet consciousness of having done all I could to make them ready for whatever work God calls them to do."—Life and Faith.

Letter Department.

FAIRVIEW, Idaho, March 31, 1904.

Dear Saints: I feel moved to contribute a few lines to our valuable paper. I do so enjoy reading letters from the various branches, and often see some from dear friends I would not hear of any other way, not knowing where they are. Can any one tell me where a Wesley Collins is located? I have heard he is an officer in the Church—elder, I think. The last time I heard of him he was somewhere in Oklahoma. I would like so much to find him if he is alive. Perhaps Bro. Cornish or some of the elders can inform me.

We have had a very hard winter here; have not been able to hold meetings for weeks, but expect to assemble next Sabbath (April 3). Bro. George Burt will address us, the Lord willing. The Saints here are all alive to the gospel, and are always ready to give a reason for the way we believe.

Some time ago I attended a meeting conducted by a Church of God minister. He claimed he was sent of God, and they were the only right ones. He kept urging the congregation to ask a question. So I asked him if he believed that the church needed prophets now and he replied, "No, they did not."

I asked him how he was sent.

Well, he said, God spoke to him by the Spirit direct and told him to go out and preach. I asked him what about the passage of scripture where God said he revealed nothing except through his servants, the prophets. Well, he thought a few moments.

"Oh," he said, "that was for the old prophets."

"Well," I said, "what do you think about the passage that says 'No man shall take unto himself this honor (preaching) except he be called as Aaron was?'" I had a Bible with me and turned to the chapter and read it and he was so excited he left the rostrum and came down where I was sitting and talked. Finally he said, "O you talk too much. It says in the Bible that women must not talk in public."

"Well," I said, "Paul says we must always be ready to give a reason for the hope within us and he made no distinction between man or woman in that case."

I had the whole congregation at my back. They were Mennonites. The Mennonite minister came and took me by the hand after the service and said he was so glad he was there, as he had heard some things that were new to him.

The meeting was closed without a blessing or hymn and the Church of God man would not speak to or shake hands with me after. May God bless him and some time enlighten his mind, is my prayer.

Now I have written such a long letter that I shall ask only that you print it when you can.

That God will bless all in this gospel work and arouse them who are sleeping so they may be able to get their lamps trimmed and ready, is my earnest prayer.

Sister to all in gospel bonds,

LIBBIE ALBERTSON.

GALENA, Kansas, April 8, 1904.

Dear Herald: I enjoy this opportunity of writing a few lines in answer to Sr. Julia Field's letter of March 12, in regard to a dream which she had and of which she desired the interpretation. I sought in my weak and unworthy way to get the interpretation thereof and it seems to me that the sunlight was the light of God and the tree that she saw in that light represents the tree of life and cross of Christ and the people thereon represent the people of God, and inasmuch as you saw that there was something in the millennial reign for your husband, it was to cheer and comfort him and cause him to endure to the end and then he would be permitted to live and reign with Christ a thousand years. Those brothers and sisters that were with you at the time of your dream were indications of cheer and comfort to your husband now. Some one more worthy and better learned might make a better explanation of this matter than I have made.

I do enjoy reading those letters so much. I am trying to make preparations to take the HERALD just as soon as I can. I love the Saints and their work; I believe that it is of God. I am five years old in the Church, but have been cumbered with the cares of this life until I have not devoted much time to church work; but my desire is to do more in the future than in the past. I am trying to live in that way and manner that I may live and reign with Christ the thousand years' millennial and then reach the celestial glory and there live with God and his Christ through the ages. I see but little in this life outside of sorrows; temptations are on every hand, and I desire every Saint that will remember me in their prayers to do so and I will endeavor to pray for them.

Your sister in the love and faith of God,

N. E. WILLIAMS.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, March 19, 1904.

Editors Herald: We expect to leave here to-day for Anaa via Makatea to attend our April conference; there will be about fifty persons from here and forty from Makatea including some not members of the Church.

As I will have about three hundred and fifty copies of the Doctrine and Covenants to take up with me I probably will not return immediately after conference, but will have the printer send us up some more after they are bound and we will visit as many of the Tuamotu Islands as we can, which may be my farewell visit to them before returning to America.

Our Doctrine and Covenants are not as well printed and bound as they would have been at the HERALD Office, but for various reasons it was deemed advisable to have that work done here. Several of our neighbors have purchased the book, one Protestant neighbor saying, "It is as nice reading as the Bible." Another read a little in it here and there and said it was no good, but on Monday morning he began reading it from the first page, and on Wednesday when he had finished reading it through, he thought it the best of all books. We hope it will prove a light and a blessing to this people, and we believe it will be especially beneficial to the Saints and the priesthood, and will help them to more fully understand and honor the laws of God given in the former commandments—even the Bible, and lead them to a better understanding of their duties.

Besides the Doctrine and Covenants we are taking up with us new branch books arranged with printed headings as the same are in America, and two hundred blank branch reports, with arranged and printed headings exactly as the headings are in the books, and thus hope to get, after awhile, a fairly good report of the membership here at our annual conferences. We also have Book of Mormon lessons for the Religio prepared by Emma and printed by her with my help, and two hundred licenses for the elders, teachers, priests, and deacons, printed on the mimeograph, so that they will be fairly supplied with printed matter for awhile at least.

This mission was included in the Australian Mission formerly and in 1884 Bro. T. W. Smith was appointed missionary in charge of the Australian and Society Islands Mission, and I was appointed then as a missionary in that mission. That year Bro. Smith came here and I went to Australia, and in 1894 I came here in the Evanelia and have been more or less connected with the mission since then until now, but about three years of that time I spent in California. We expect to return to Papeete about July or August.

Peace be with all the Israel of God. In bonds of gospel love,
Your brother in Christ,

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

SOUTH YARRA, Australia, March 1, 1904.

Editors Herald: Inclosed you will find clippings with reports of Elijah Dowie's visit to Australia and the reception he has got so far. The Age report of February 29, is a correct one, as I was present at the meetings with several other Saints. It is estimated that seven thousand people were present, and the uproar from start to finish was dreadful. The people who came were in for fun and were in a good humor for it. They seem to treat the whole affair as a huge joke. We were disappointed in Mr. Dowie, expecting to see a man of commanding aspect and of magnetic address. There was plenty of pomp and show, but his whole manner and address was rather repulsive than otherwise.

While we did not agree with the public in not giving him a hearing, yet we think that Mr. Dowie could not expect anything less for the reason that for about a year past, Mr. Volma, overseer for Australia, has been promising the Melbourneites a particularly lively time when Mr. Dowie arrived and has been indulging in the practice of running every religion down and using filthy names. On the other hand it has been an open secret that for some time past the public of Melbourne have promised to give Mr. Dowie a little of his own medicine to see how he liked it. However, we did not expect to see it quite so bad as it was.

They simply would not listen, but kept on bursting into snatches of comic songs, and things went fast and furious. The Prophet simply stood like one paralyzed for a time, then frantically appealed to the police, but the police were in the swim just as much as any of the crowd and enjoyed the whole proceedings. We were sorry we could not get the chance to hear Mr. Dowie make his claims and the scriptural proofs for same. He decided to abandon the evening meeting and all evening meetings, being afraid of the consequences; but is holding meetings every afternoon at three o'clock.

Yesterday he got another warm reception. The crowds are determined to have their part in his meetings. Perhaps Mr. Dowie may learn the lesson: Do unto unto others as he wishes them to do unto him.

We think Mr. Dowie's mission a total failure. He has not come up to expectations. His voice is very raspy and he lisps and can not be heard any distance. Mrs. Dowie's voice is very squeaky, also; and their son, Gladstone Dowie, is a miserable speaker. It is hard to understand how he has made such rapid progress.

Our work has made excellent progress the past year and we hope it will continue to grow. We are getting well known in this vast city, and we find the public more willing to recognize the distinction between us and the Utah people. At the time of writing we have quite a circle of interested ones in different suburbs, some quite close to the kingdom, and expect an ingathering at no distant date. As a result of the debate at Footscrag we have made some warm friends there and some are investigating earnestly. The papers there have warmly advocated our cause, especially the Independent, which came out with an article every week during the two months that I have been lecturing there.

We hope to make a start to build a church this year so that we can have a place of our own to meet in. Though our hall is centrally situated and there is a good attendance, yet we believe it would be much better if we had a meeting-house of our own. We have some earnest workers here who are a great help to the work and if all worked in the same way, the work would move ahead much quicker than it does. At present we could do splendidly with another elder here, as there are other openings. However, we know everything will come in due time if we wait the Lord's time and do our duty. May God help all to be faithful in the discharge of their duty, so that the work will not suffer either temporarily or spiritually.

4 Malcolm Street.

In bonds,

W. MACKIE.

AUBURN, Iowa.

Editors Herald: As the results of labor done by us in Auburn I had the pleasure of leading four heads of families into the waters of baptism; others will come soon.

Bro. W. M. Self and the writer are laboring together and find lots more work than we can possibly attend to. How grand if the Saints would all pay their tithing so the Church could send more laborers into the vineyard of our Lord. I find that great success is had by preaching in the homes of Saints wherever opportunity affords. The great latter-day work is slowly but surely rolling onward to accomplish its work as designed by our God, and Satan is working too. By the united effort of Saints, through fasting and prayer, God will hear and answer prayer, and will gather out the righteous from among the people. Remember, dear Saints, God is pleased when we fast and pray for the advance of the work in whatsoever place we live. When we fast and pray the Devil trembles, for he knows that we are getting very near to God, and he will manifest his anger by persecutions and hindrances, but God will accomplish his work; it shall not fail.

I rejoice in the gospel of our Lord Jesus. It has done more for me than anything in the world. Through it all of God's creation, around me are made beautiful and wonderful to my understanding. I learn to love everything that God has a hand in, and harm nothing. How glorious when the day shall come that righteousness and peace shall cover the earth and rule the inhabitants thereof, when the love of him who is the embodiment of love, will fill the hearts of the race of mankind to seek after every good work; when injury to man and animal creation will be removed for ever; when through the exalting teachings of the Christ man will comprehend and be constrained to say with other creatures of God, "The hand that made us is divine."

May we all prove faithful and do our part, that we may stand in our lot with the righteous in Christ.

ADOLPH E. MADISON.

FANSHAW, Indian Territory, April 18, 1904.

Editors Herald: As we rarely see anything in your columns from this part, we thought that probably a few lines would not be out of place. As there has been considerable labor performed here by several of our missionaries we feel sure that they would like to know how the work is progressing. Two years ago there were only two families of Saints located here. Bro. S. W. Simmons visited them, and under somewhat difficult circumstances succeeded in securing the use of the schoolhouse to preach in. The congregations were small but attentive. He also succeeded in arousing considerable opposition, but friends were made for the cause. Since that time the fruits of his labors and of others have matured into five baptisms, three heads of families, and two ladies, all noble people, and the end is not yet. So the good work goes on.

But the opposition seems to be on the increase in the persons of two Freewill Baptist preachers who each have taken their turn in "exposing Mormonism" since Christmas. In the last attack the Utah Doctrine and Covenants was used against us, but we were on the alert, armed with our Doctrine and Covenants and Bro. Etzenhouser's "Books and Utah Mormonism in Contrast." We succeeded in showing in a clear, concise manner that we were not connected with the people out West, also that the Reorganized Church is the legal successor to the Church organized in 1830. The Saints were well pleased with our efforts. He was crowing for a debate when he begun. After I had answered his fourth and last lecture, I told the people if he wanted to debate all he had to do was to write his propositions and I would send them to the missionary in charge. He said he was not particularly wanting a debate, but promised the people afterward that he would write the propositions for us, as the people voted a debate on him. I have not heard from him since.

Reverend D. Crenshaw has made an effort to close the school-house against us, but he has failed so far, as all the people who are interested in the house have taken an active stand for us, except one man. So we are holding services at our regular appointments with good crowds. May the Lord bless his covenant people is the prayer of your brother.

In hope of eternal life,
JESSE M. SIMMONS.

SEMINOLE, Alabama, April 21, 1904.

Dear Herald: I feel it a great pleasure to read the letters in the dear old HERALDS, and it gives me comfort and joy to hear that they are all trying to live nearer to God and obey his commandments. Though we have many trials and temptations we should never be discouraged; thus on to eternal perfection the honest and faithful will go while they who reject this glad message shall never know such happiness.

We as a little band of Saints are doing all we can to hold on to the rod of iron which will lead us to that straight and narrow path to our heavenly Father. We have Sunday-school and prayer and testimony meeting every Sunday. We also have prayer-meeting every Wednesday night. Our good old president, Bro. Jesse Reeder, was with us last night. It being nearly a year since Bro. W. J. Booker was down here, I long to see him come again, for he has done lots of good in this part of the Lord's vineyard. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may raise my three little children in the right way they should go.

Your sister in the gospel,
ROXEY COOPER.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, April 2, 1904.

Dear Herald: It has been nearly a year since I wrote to the HERALD. I see so many letters from isolated ones and I am so thankful for the privilege of attending services. I love them all, but enjoy prayer and testimony most.

I must give a little testimony I had this morning: I have been suffering with an acute attack of rheumatism for five days, had no treatment of any kind. While in so much misery this morning my daughter says, "Mamma, try turpentine. For I heard a brother say he used it for pain like yours." So I said, "I'll try it with the olive oil." I took both down on the stove and anointed the parts and uttered a short prayer and said I would not use a thing but the oil; for I had been instantly healed in like manner of very great pain in the past. So I set turpentine and oil up and went in secret prayer. I felt relief instantly, came from the room rejoicing and singing an old familiar tune. The thought came to me to write the HERALD hence my letter.

While I am not entirely healed, I am not suffering at all now and have not since eight o'clock this morning while praying and using oil. Now it is nearly seven in the evening and I know by the grace of God I will be healed by his holy ministry, and I know this is the true Church of divine origin, for I had testimonies enough to convince me long ago, one of which was a beautiful vision with interpretation immediately following as it faded away. So shall we grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. For fear I will make my letter too long I will not tell of this vision this time.

Dear Saints, pray for me. I am perhaps one of the weakest. I feel the need of prayer and we are taught by the Scriptures to pray for one another. Just now I feel like singing, "O God, give strength to all thy Saints, and courage give them, too."

Bro. and Sr. Baker have moved to Springfield, Missouri, and we live within three and a half blocks of our church. Elder A. M. has bought property here. It is like paradise comparatively speaking, to Howell County hills and rocks. I am truly thankful for the change of residence and I think the Bakers appreciate it equally as much as I do, though I am not thoroughly infatuated with this city yet.

My desire is to be ready to meet my blessed Redeemer when the faded eve is come. Praying for the greater growth toward Zion and wider spread of the true gospel, I remain,

Your sister in gospel bonds,
M. LUCY BRASHEAR.

FERRIS, Illinois, April 18, 1904.

Editors Herald: While visiting over the Nauvoo District as vice-president, I came across the inclosed letter which I induced the writer to let me have for publication in the HERALD and Church History. Mr. A. R. Simmons wrote it to Bro. Peterson, but never sent it, as he did not wish to have it printed in Hancock County. He is a reliable and respectable citizen of this county, and an "old settler" here. Bro. Peterson knows nothing of the letter as yet. Please publish in HERALD and return manuscript to me. It is the truth.

H. S. SALISBURY.

P. S. Simmons says he can give names of scoundrels who participated in bogus cattle raids, and stoned schoolhouses, etc.

FOUNTAIN GREEN, Illinois, December 31, 1903.

Elder J. W. PETERSON, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir: I have just read your article "Joseph Smith and his murderers" published in the Carthage Republican and am surprised that you got a hearing in a Hancock County paper. Your article is simply plain facts, and the half you have not told. I was born here in Hancock County just one year before Joseph and Hyrum Smith were murdered, and have lived here ever since. My father was here before the Mormons came to Nauvoo and consequently knew all about the Mormons and the mob. And what I know I learned from my father, who was an intimate friend of Thomas Brockman, leader of the mob. Brockman was a Christian (Campbellite) preacher and my father belonged to that Church, and used to go with Brockman to hold meetings, and to do the praying. Brockman told my father at one time that he had sent in a treaty of peace to the Mormons that if they would stop preaching their Mormonism he would withdraw the mob. My father said to him: "Bro. Brockman, then this is a religious war? You are persecuting these people for religious belief, and I will have nothing to do with it." Their friendship ceased at this critical time, and my father was branded as a "jack Mormon."

My father's version of the matter was that the Mormons as a class were an industrious, thrifty, peaceable people, but very aggressive in promulgating their religion, always ready to argue and defend their faith. At one time Joseph Smith preached in Fountain Green, Illinois, and in the course of his sermon he said: "Christ said to his disciples, 'Unless your righteousness exceeds that of the scribes and Pharisees, you can not enter the kingdom of heaven'; and I say to you, unless your righteousness exceeds that of the Methodists and Presbyterians you can not enter the kingdom of heaven." Of course such as that aroused their Christian hatred and the next thing was to do something to fire the minds of the people against the Mormons. So a few so-called Christians would appoint a prayer-meeting at some schoolhouse, and during services some of their friends would stone the house, and the leaders would rush out declaring it was Mormons. The offending parties would flee in the direction of Mormon houses; and the dupes would actually believe it was Mormons. The Christian Mormon haters at one time got permission of a cattle-feeder to drive his fat cattle out one night and take them in the direction of Nauvoo, and the owner of the cattle gave the alarm that the Mormons had stolen his cattle, and gathered up a crowd of ignorant dupes and pursued them, overtaking them on the prairie between Carthage and Nauvoo, and at the proper signal the scoundrels left the cattle and fled in the direction of Nauvoo. The word was quickly scattered over the county that the cattle of Mr. — were stolen by the Mormons, but captured on the prairie, and the thieves made good their escape into Nauvoo.

I will venture to say that nine tenths of the stealing done in Hancock County during this period, was done by Gentiles and laid on the Mormons. These are undoubtedly facts.

When the Smiths were murdered the people of Carthage expected that the Mormons would march on to their town and do as was done to the Amalakitites in olden times. So they most all left the town in fear. I have heard it said that there were not enough people left in Carthage to form "a corporal's guard." But instead of violence the "Mormons" claimed their dead, and peaceably mourned the loss of their prophet like a true Christian people.

I could say much more in regard to this Christian mob, but I have already told enough that if it had been told in 1846, it would have been enough to cause a man to cross the river with the Mormons or else lose his life. I am not a Mormon, but have sympathy for all poor, deluded people. I have sympathy for little boys who fish in rainwater barrels with crooked pins, and for black-coated orthodox ministers who look upward and implore vacuity to feed and clothe them; and try to down Mormons and everybody who does not see fit to believe as they do.

Yours for justice and truth,

A. R. SIMMONS.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Maud Fletcher, Tacoma, Washington, requests prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of her sister who is sorely afflicted.

Mrs. Lucy Williams, Oregon, asks the prayers of the Prayer Union for her little ones, who have the whooping cough, and especially for Dale, that he may get strong and be spared to her.

"The Panama commission and its work" is the subject of an article in the Review of Reviews for April, by Walter Wellman. The personnel of the commission is briefly described, portraits of the members accompanying the text, and the program of canal construction is outlined.

$12.25 to Buffalo, New York, and Return

via Nickel Plate Road, May 10, 11, and 12, with return limit of May 23. Also lowest rates to Fort Wayne, Cleveland, Erie, and other Eastern Points. Three trains daily, with first-class modern equipment. Meals in Nickel Plate dining-cars, on American club meal plan, ranging in price from thirty-five cents to one dollar; also service a la carte. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road. When contemplating an eastern trip, write John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago, Illinois. Chicago Depot, corner Van Buren and La Salle Streets,—the only passenger station in Chicago on the Elevated Railroad Loop.

(5)

Miscellaneous Department.

Conference Minutes.

Southern Missouri.—District quarterly conference convened with the Springfield Branch, March 26, 1904, A. M. Baker presiding, J. C. Chrestensen secretary. Ministry reports; Seventy A. M. Baker, H. Sparling; Elders James T. Davis, G. W. Anderson, J. C. Chrestensen, J. W. Quinley, H. J. Bootman, P. W. Premo; Priests W. P. Bootman, P. T. Plumb, Joseph Ensley; Teacher O. E. Ensley. Branch reports: Beaver 52, Ava 105, Grove Springs 27, Pomona 75, West Plains 58. Bishop's agent reported for the three months ending March 25, 1904: Tithing and offerings collected, $28.65; drawn on Bishop Kelley, $82.10; due agent January 1, $2.68; paid to elders' families and poor, $151.00; due agent, $42.93. Financial secretary and treasurer's report: On hand last report, $12.22; amount collected to date, $3.20; expenditures, $2.47; balance on hand, $12.95. Committee on the J. R. Wedlock case reported, and on motion the report was adopted and the committee discharged. On motion J. C. Chrestensen, J. W. Quinley, and C. H. Merritt were appointed as a court of elders on the J. R. Wedlock and Harvey Madden cases. A petition from the Saints of Thayer, Missouri, praying for a branch to be organized there, was read, and on motion same was granted and the district president and submissionary in charge authorized to so organize. District tent soliciting committee reported having made some progress and on motion they were continued and the buying of a tent left with them. On motion Elder H. Sparling and H. J. Bootman were appointed delegates to General Conference. Preaching by Elders P. W. Premo, H. Sparling, and A. M. Baker. Conference adjourned to convene with the Thayer Saints, at King Hill Schoolhouse, June 18, 1904.

Florida.—District conference convened with the Santa Rosa Branch, March 5, 1904, President W. A. West presiding, B. L. Jernigan clerk. The visiting brethren were invited to take part in the conference. Coldwater Branch reported total number 91. The following ministers reported: W. J. Booker, G. T. Chute, F. P. Searcliff, W. A. West, B. L. Jernigan, and W. N. Hawkins. Bishop's agent reported received since last report, $24; paid out, $22; on hand, $2. Elder W. A. West was retained district president and Elder L. F. West was elected vice-president. B. L. Jernigan was retained clerk. Elders I. N. Roberts and F. P. Searcliff were elected delegates to General Conference. Adjourned to meet at Calhoun on Saturday before the full moon in June, 1904.

Birmingham.—Annual conference convened in the Saints' meeting-room, Priestley Road, Sparkbrook, Birmingham, at 6.55 p. m. April 2, 1904, Elder William Ecclestone, district president, in the chair, assisted by Elder J. T. Norton; J. E. Matthews secretary. Bro. Herbert Smith was chosen deacon and Bro. John Hoole organist and chorister. Brn. C. H. Caton, C. Walton, and F. Swan were chosen credential committee and reported as follows: Birmingham, Priestley Road, votes 23; Summerfield 8; Leicester 6; Stafford 6. Statistical reports were read and approved: Birmingham 134; Summerfield 48; Leicester 36; Stafford 32. Spiritual reports read from Birmingham, Summerfield, Leicester, and Stafford branches, all reported as being in a fair spiritual condition. Treasurer's financial account from April, 1903, to March 31, 1904, was read: Income, £3 17s 4d; expenditure, £2 0s 11d; balance in hand, £1 16s 5d. Ministerial reports: High Priests (Bishop) Thomas Taylor and C. H. Caton; Elders W. Ecclestone, C. Walton, J. T. Norton, F. Swan, J. E. Meredith, E. A. Webb, J. D. Davis, G. L. Greenwood, J. Dye, J. Ecclestone, and Priest J. E. Matthews. New business: Elder W. Ecclestone gave notice concerning district boundary. Sunday services were then announced and business session was adjourned till 9.30 Monday morning, April 4. Monday, April 4, meeting opened at 10.25 a. m. by Elder C. Walton. Report of committee on new rules read and accepted; owing to said committee being unable to complete new rules it was moved that we retain present committee to complete rules. Brn. William Kemp and Thomas Norton were presented from the Leicester Branch for ordination to the office of teacher and deacon respectively. The request was acceded to. Elder W. Ecclestone reported Bro. A. Johnson of Summerfield Branch being ordained as teacher during the past year. As the question of district boundaries was to be brought forward at the English Mission Conference it was left over pending their decision. It was moved that the district record be left in the hands of secretary. Moved that the record be started from 1900 and all living members be recorded and all information required previous to this date be referred to Church Recorder in America. The following officers were chosen: District president, Elder William Ecclestone; vice-president, Elder Charles Walton; secretary, John Edward Matthews; treasurer, George L. Greenwood. The authorities of the Church in America and England were sustained. Moved that a hearty vote of thanks be given to the catering committee and the Dorcas Society of the Birmingham Branch for their services to this conference. Moved that a vote of thanks be given to the deacon and organist and chorister for their services. Moved that we now adjourn till Eastertide 1905, place to be left in the hands of district president.

Pastoral.

To the Northern California District: Having been continued at our last conference as district president, and having just at this moment received the list of appointments which determines my continuation as missionary in the district, to our satisfaction, we wish to counsel all the local force of the district, to make this a banner year in a strenuous effort to push the work in your various localities. Do all the preaching you can, and get new openings in your vicinity and fill if possible, yourself, or call on the missionary in charge for help. To the branch officers I feel to say, make the care and advancement of the flock your first object. He examples of promptness and order in the house of the Lord. Ask for wisdom, the choicest of gifts for those dealing with Saints. Acquaint yourselves with the prevailing customs and traditions of the Church and conform thereto, thus producing unity. Keep a strict account of all work done, and each one report to the next conference to be held at Sacramento, during the reunion about September. Do not forget the tithing, the Lord's share of your holdings. Bishop C. A. Parkin, 3010, Sixteenth Street, San Francisco, will gladly receipt you for the same. Let us all pull together, missionaries, locals, and all. Advancement is not so much the strenuous effort of the few, but the moderate effort of the many. Action means progress, stagnation means death. We start the new year with a sense of satisfaction and a burning desire to labor as never before.

Your servant,

J. M. TERRY.

1219 Chestnut Street, OAKLAND, California, April 22, 1904.

To the Saints of Pittsburg District; Greeting: A new conference year now opens before us, and the harvest is white for the sickle, therefore let there be a united effort for the success of the cause of Christ committed to our care; let no opportunity escape you in aiding the work by either word or act.

To the priesthood-bearing members, allow me to urge that you be faithful and active in purview of your calling and ordination, and if laboring as branch officers, seek with a unity of purpose the uplifting of all, that the gospel may prove to be hidden manna to the household of faith. If not engaged as a branch official, seek the privilege of doing gospel labor in your own vicinity, and let all have a good report for July 1.

In gospel bonds,

ROBT. M. ELVIN, President.

High Priests.

To the High Priests, Greeting: By reason of the enrollment of new members, loss by death, and change of address, I am under instruction by vote of the quorum to prepare and send out Circular Letter No. 6. I therefore ask all those whose addresses will be different from those in Circular 5, or their report of March 1, 1904, to send me at once their present address, or the one at which they will receive their mail for the ensuing year. Brethren be prompt.

Your servant,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 22, 1904.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Alabama District will meet with the Flat Rock Branch on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in May at 10 a. m. Missionaries of the Florida and Mobile Districts are invited to attend. Missionary in charge we hope will be present. J. R. Harper, secretary.

Conference of the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw Districts will convene with the Wilburton Branch, Saturday, May 27, 1904. We expect Bro. A. H. Smith or some of his patriarchs to be with us. Will the branch secretaries please bring or send their branch records as there are errors in some of the records that can not be adjusted without comparing books. D. O. Harder, secretary.

Conference of the Nodaway, Missouri, District will meet with the Bedison Branch, on May 28, at 10 a. m. E. S. Fannon, district president.

Convention Notices.

The Southern Nebraska District will meet with the Zion's Hope Sunday-school at Nebraska City, Nebraska, May 27, 28, 1904. Those not able to attend please send in reports to me at Nebraska City. W. M. Self, superintendent.

The Massachusetts District Sunday-school association will convene in Saint's church, Somerville, Massachusetts, May 14, at 2.30 p. m., continuing over Sunday the 15th. Ora Holmes Whipple, secretary.

Married.

WARDLE—SMITH.—Married, April 20, 1904, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Sr. Hyrum Smith, of Union, Utah, Bro. Charles D. Wardle and Miss Elizabeth A. Smith, Elder A. M. Chase officiating. A large number of friends gathered to help celebrate the event and many were the well wishes spoken and the many beautiful presents left as a token of the good will borne to the happy couple by these friends and acquaintances.

Died.

PETERSON.—Josephine Julia Peterson, daughter of Mike and Hattie Peterson, was born November 1, 1903, and died April 18, 1904, of abscess in the head. A short service was held at the home, 2122 North Fifteenth Street, Omaha Nebraska, by Elder J. Hodges, after which the parents brought the body to Inman, Nebraska, their former home. Funeral services were held there on April 19, Elder Levi Gamet officiating. A nice turnout of former neighbors and friends testified their sympathy for the bereaved by their presence.

MAXWELL.—Sr. E. Maxwell, who passed over the mystic river of death, April 13, 1904, was born in Tynan, County of Armagh, Ireland. She has resided in the vicinity of Applegate, Michigan, for many years, being one of the pioneers. She was a consistent member of the Church upwards of twenty-six years. Eight sons, one daughter, forty-one grand-children and thirty-three great-grandchildren survive her. Services were conducted from the home of her son James by Priest R. H. Huston, April 6, 1904.

Addresses.

J. M. Baker, 115 Kansas Street, Sioux City, Iowa.

W. Mackie, 4 Malcolm Street, South Yarra, Australia.

M. L. Fletcher, 1201 Pacific Avenue, Tacoma, Washington.

International Convention, Y. M. C. A.

At Buffalo, New York, May 11 to 15. Tickets on sale via Nickel Plate Road, May 10, 11, and 12, at one fare, plus 25 cents for the round trip. Good returning May 23. For full particulars, call on your nearest agent, or address John Y. Calahan, general agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago, Illinois. (4)

The Silent Devotion of the Japanese.

Writing on "Japan at war," a special correspondent of the Outlook says:

"The Japanese glory in their country and their Emperor. They glory in their army and navy, and do it in such a whole-souled, devoted way that the individual is entirely submerged. To-day in one of the northern provinces of this island there lives (unless he has died within a year or two), and works as a common coolie, a man who, in the war with China in 1894, performed an act of heroic daring hardly equaled in military annals. Across the deadly fire-zone between his own force and the enemy's walls he carried a quantity of gun-cotton to deposit it at the gate which the Japanese were bombarding. The attempt succeeded and he came out unhurt—and now by his own people at least, he and his deed are forgotten. He belongs to no legion of honor, he received no Victoria cross or distinguished service order, and of course he got no pension or berth in the customs or postoffice.

"That kind of devotion is all but universal in the Japanese army and navy, and will carry them far in the war that has now begun.

The Saints' Herald.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance. When payment is made, the date on yellow label always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made, notify us.

The paper will not be sent to persons who are six months in arrears, unless special arrangements are made.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately, as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post-office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for Zion's Ensign, also orders for all Ensign publications

"Nor are the people at home less devoted or ready to sacrifice for their country's sake. As a first step towards providing the sinews of war, the government has decided to tax all government salaries from ten to twenty per cent. This touches every poorly paid public school teacher in the empire, and every one of the many tens of thousands of officials of the central and local governments. Men whose salary is more than eighty yen (forty dollars American) per month will have twenty per cent deducted. Salaries of thirty-one to eighty yen will contribute fifteen per cent, and those of less than thirty yen (fifteen dollars), the vast majority, ten per cent. This regulation goes into effect from March 1. It will be accepted without a murmur."

The Daughters of the American Revolution.

Undoubtedly the Daughters of the American Revolution ranks first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of our countrywomen. This surpassing society of forty thousand members contributed three hundred thousand dollars for relief-work during the Spanish-American War, and in piping times of peace commemorates things Revolutionary, from placing a silver tablet on the old Dutch oven in the Avery homestead at Mount Pleasant, New York, in which Captain Avery's wife was forced by the British to bake bread, to preserving the historic Wallace House at Somerville, New Jersey, wherein Washington made war-maps in 1778-79. That the society possesses national headquarters in Washington, costing twenty thousand dollars a year; the official approval of Uncle Sam, who voluminously prints its reports, and a monthly magazine for publication of Revolutionary data, further makes it distinctive among patriotic societies of American women. As a crowning memorial, moreover, to men and women of the Revolution—"Continentalists in ragged regimentals" and their heroic wives—these fair descendants will build a magnificent three hundred and fifty thousand dollar Continental Hall in the heart of the capital city. It is claimed that this monumental structure—an architectural object-lesson in patriotism—will stand as first in the world to be constructed by women to commemorate a war. That architect's plans were presented to the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, meeting in Washington the week of April 19th, the date of the Battle of Lexington, when was "fired the shot heard round the world," presages the speedy completion of this long-cherished project. One year ago the society celebrated the purchase of a fifty thousand dollar lot fronting the public reservation on Seventieth Street, known as "White House Lot," and in proximity to the White House, Washington Monument, Corcoran Art Gallery and the fashionable speedway. This year the Continental Hall Committee of one hundred and forty representative American women, under the president-general of the society, Mrs. Charles W. Fairbanks, reports one third of the three hundred thousand dollar building-fund in the official pocketbook.—May Woman's Home Companion.

Mr. William H. De Lacy contributes to the April Catholic World an instructive paper on the work of the Department of the Interior. Short stories are contributed to the same number by Georgina Pell Curtis and Joseph F. Wynne; poems by Julian E. Johnstone, S. L. Emery, and Charles Hanson Towne.

Facts About Russia.

Two and a half times as large as the United States and Alaska.

Thirty thousand miles of coast line, half of it ice-bound.

Thirty-six thousand miles of railroad, two thirds of it owned by the Government.

The United States has fifty-three times as many miles of telegraph and sends fifteen times as much mail.

The United States has twenty-three times as many factories.

One twentieth as much coal produced and one sixth as much iron as in the United States.

Total exports three hundred and fifty million dollars.

Next to the United States as a grain-producing country.

Population in 1903, one hundred and forty-one million.

Russians sixty-six per cent, Poles seven per cent, Finns five per cent, Turco Tartars nine per cent, and Jews three per cent.

Average laborer gets one fourth as much wages as in the United States.

Only ninety daily papers.—The World's Work.

A unique contribution to the April-June Forum is a paper by the late Grant Allen, entitled "Personal reminiscences of Herbert Spencer." It was written ten years ago on the understanding that it should not be published until after Mr. Spencer's death. It is particularly noteworthy for the light it casts upon Mr. Spencer's relation to his philosophical disciples.

Market gardening seems to have increased about one hundred per cent in the North and fully two hundred per cent in the South during the ten years preceding the last census. The year before the census there were five million seven hundred and fifty thousand acres planted in vegetables which had a total value of nearly two hundred and forty million dollars.—Country Life in America.

Dr. Bauer, of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, has calculated the earth's magnetic energy. Calculating the total energy of the magnetic field outside the earth's surface in spherical harmonics, Doctor Bauer finds that there has been a loss of three per cent in the total energy between the years 1838 and 1884. That would indicate that the earth's magnetism is dying out. But the results are too uncertain. It is curious that we should be more certain about the earth's potential of fifty years ago than about the present potential.—Scientific American, January 9, 1904.

The Traveler
Who contemplates a trip to Colorado, Utah, California or the North west should know that

The Denver & Rio Grande R. R.
widely known as "The Scenic Line of the World," has more scenic attractions than any other route across the continent, traversing as it does the Rocky Mountain Region through Royal Gorge, Canon of the Grand River, Glenwood Springs, Marshall Pass, Black Canon, Castle Gate, and the world-famed Salt Lake City. Its three through daily trains are equipped with the latest improved cars of all classes. Its dining car service is unsurpassed. For illustrated pamphlets address

S. K. HOOPER, G. P. & T. A.
Denver
Colo.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
ABSOLUTELY PURE
 Makes the food more delicious and wholesome
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

"She Wants to Tell."

Sr. M. E. Webber of Queensboro, Ontario, Canada, writes January 12, 1904, saying: "Dear Brother:—I want to tell you how pleased I am with your Quit-to-bac. My brother used less than two boxes and has not touched tobacco since he began to use it and has gained in flesh and is better in every way." If it cures others, why not you? Three boxes sent post-paid for $1.50 with positive guarantee of cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.
 Address, (Bro.) B. F. Ordway, 228 Hancock St., Peoria, Ill., U. S. A.

Real Estate at Independence

Bro. J. J. Luff is now associated with Bro. A. L. Newton in real estate business in Independence, Missouri. If those who desire to purchase property in or near Independence will write to us and tell us what they want, city or acre property, improved or unimproved, how far from public square or L. D. S. church, also how much you wish to invest and how much you wish to pay down and the time you wish on the balance, we will be pleased to assist you all we can. Address all communications to 14-4t

A. L. Newton & Co.
 225 West Lexington St.
 Independence, Missouri

MANUSCRIPT FOUND

Has just been reprinted, and owing to the heavy expense of publishing it the price has been raised to thirty-five cents. Mark your catalogue accordingly.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 Lamoni, Iowa.

ERRORS AND INCONSISTENCIES CONCERNING THE PRESIDENCY OF THE DOMINANT CHURCH IN UTAH.

207. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100. 60

Business Men, Elders, and Other Latter Day Saint Friends

We buy old typewriters, rebuild them, and make them practically new, and sell from $10 up. Write us for our special bargain list just out

Sherman Art Company
 1224 Congress St., 17r4t Chicago

DIRT BY MAIL.
 Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.
D. F. NICHOLSON,
 LAMONI - - IOWA

LECTURES ON FAITH.
 220. Limp cloth..... 20
 221. Paper 10c each, 12 for..... 1 00

SENT ON APPROVAL
 TO RESPONSIBLE PEOPLE

Laughlin Fountain Pen
 Guaranteed Finest Grade 14k. SOLID GOLD PEN

To test the merits of
 THE SAINTS' HERALD
 as an advertising medium
 we offer you choice of These Two Popular Styles For Only $1.00 Postpaid to any Address.

(By registered mail 8 cents extra.)

Holder is made of finest quality hard rubber, in four simple parts, fitted with very highest grade, large size 14k. gold pen, any flexibility desired—ink feeding device perfect.

Either style—Richly Gold Mounted for presentation purposes, $1.00 extra.

Grand Special Offer

You may try the pen a week, if you do not find it as represented, fully as fine a value as you can secure for three times the price in any other makes, if not entirely satisfactory in every respect, return it and we will send you $1.10 for it, the extra 10c. is for your trouble in writing us and to show our confidence in the Laughlin Pen—(Not one customer in 5000 have asked for their money back.)

Illustration on left is full size of Ladies' style; on right, Gentlemen's style.

Lay this Paper Down and Write NOW
 Safety Pocket Pen Holder sent free of charge with each Pen.

ADDRESS
Laughlin Mfg. Co.
 153 Griswold St., DETROIT, MICH.

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS, 1852 to 1900.
 197. Paper..... 5
 198. Cloth, limp..... 3

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
 Lamoni, Iowa.

BANKING BY MAIL.

WRITE US AT ONCE

If you have any money deposited on which you are not receiving interest.

WE PAY 5 PER CENT INTEREST.

The COMMERCIAL BANK, Lamoni, Iowa.

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

The Nickel Plate Road

will sell tickets to Cleveland, Ohio, and return, account of National Baptist Anniversary, on May 16, 17, 18, at rate of one fare for the round-trip, plus 25 cents. Tickets good going date of sale. By depositing same, extended return limit of June 10 may be secured. Through service to New York City, Boston and other eastern points. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road. Meals on American Club Meal Plan ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00; also service a la Carte. Chicago depot: La Salle and Van Buren Streets, the only passenger station in Chicago on the elevated loop. Chicago city ticket offices, 111 Adams Street and Auditorium Annex. Phone Central 2057. 2

One Fare Round-Trip

plus 25 cents, to Cleveland, Ohio, and return, via Nickel Plate Road, May 16, 17, and 18. Tickets good going date of sale and returning to and including June 10, by depositing same.

Three through daily express trains to Ft. Wayne, Cleveland, Erie, Buffalo, New York, Boston, and New England points, carrying vestibuled sleeping-cars. Meals served in Nickel Plate dining-cars, on American Club meal plan, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00; also service a la Carte. Chicago depot: La Salle and Van Buren Streets. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road. Chicago city ticket offices, 111 Adams Street and Auditorium Annex. Phone Central 2057. 3

REORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

201. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 60

The Saints' Herald

E. L. Scott

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, May 4, 1904

Number 18

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
 of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH }
 FRED'K M. SMITH } EDITORS
 Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
Unfortunate Situation for Utah - - - - -	409
About Those "Five Hundred Young Mormons" - - - - -	410
Original Poetry:
A Leaf on the Vine - - - - -	411
Original Articles:
The True Gospel and the True Church - - - - -	413
The Reconciliation - - - - -	415
The Present Need - - - - -	415
Selected Articles:
The Schools and Religion, Again - - - - -	423
Mothers' Home Column:
Select Reading for Daughters of Zion Locals for May - - - - -	425
Letter Department:
Letters - - - - -	426
Miscellaneous Department:
Pastoral:
G. T. Griffiths - - - - -	430
J. W. Wight - - - - -	430
First Seventy - - - - -	430

B. A. M. SCHAPIRO, editor of a magazine called The People, the Land, and the Book, is a Hebrew who has accepted Christianity. In this issue we have an article over his signature, entitled "The Reconciliation," in which some of his struggles are briefly told. He is asking subscriptions to his magazine to assist him in bringing his family from their dangerous surroundings in Russia.

NOT much danger of the Smith family failing because of race suicide, if the following squib be correct:

"Some delver has ascertained that there are thirteen hundred and twelve members of the Smith family in the employ of the Federal Government, and that of the Smith, Johnson, Williams, Brown, and Jones families collectively there are forty-one hundred and sixty-one enrolled. Moreover, there has been, according to this chronicler, a member of the Smith family in every Congress of the United States with the sole exception of the Forty-ninth."

Editorial.

UNFORTUNATE SITUATION FOR UTAH.

The attitude in which the examination going on before the Senate Committee has placed the Mormon Church in Utah before the public in the United States and abroad is an unfortunate and unenviable one.

The fact that men confess themselves to be living in open disregard of the statute laws of the State in which they are citizens is in itself bad enough; but when the men so confessing are influential members of society in their respective communities, and the spiritual heads and leaders of a large body of religionists making claims to probity of speech, purity of morals, and devoted loyalty to their country and its institutions, it is much worse and more deplorable. The additional fact that the confession of guilt is forced from these men, in an inquiry in the result of which many thousands of people may be found to be constructively criminal and be made to suffer for the wrong-doing of the few thus brought to the bar makes it still worse and of wider import. There must be very many, possibly many thousands, who are not polygamists and who may have had no intention of ever becoming such, and who indeed may have refused to give adherence to belief in the dogmas, or to practice them, who have unintentionally made themselves to be aiders and abettors to the acts of transgression confessed by their leaders, because they have sustained them as their spiritual authorities and have winked at their misdeeds.

It may be asked of us, What business is it of yours, you members of the Reorganization?

To this we reply: We are affected by the attitude of these men in this way: They claim to have been carrying out the policies and measures instituted by the prophet-founder of the Church. If they have been, the courses they have pursued have been of such a devious and deceptive character that it involves the memory of the prophet-leader in a cloud of doubt, mystery, double-dealing, and disregard for the rule of the Church, the law of God and the laws of the land, which it is painful to honest and fair-dealing believers in the gospel message brought by the angel to contemplate. We of the Reorganized Church are engaged in presenting the restored gospel under force of the principle and belief that "God can not lie." That what he gave to the Church during the formative period was his will, his word, and would be continued as his will and word until he had accomplished the object he had in authorizing the restoration.

The position assumed by these leading spiritual officers of the Utah Church as discovered by their own statements under solemn affirmation, which should be more sacred than the common and official legal oath, is that they are not only now living in direct and open violation of statute law, and are also living in known disregard of the rule adopted by the church they represent and the law of God; but have been so living for a long time past. The teaching and measures instituted nowhere provide for so extraordinary exhibition. It is simply incredible to the spiritual mind, and is abhorrent and repulsive to the common sense of the believer, and to the outside barbarian as well. We append a few statements gleaned from the every-day press. The first is an editorial from the evening Chronicle, Manchester, England, for April 9, 1904:

MORMON MARRIAGES.

When a Mormon leader admits that he has so many children that he has lost count of them, and that wives by the dozen or the score live in his house, we perceive at once the unnaturalness of one of the chief doctrines prevailing in Salt Lake City. The Book of Mormon may be true or false, the Prophet Joseph Smith may have been a martyr or a criminal, Utah may be the healthiest or the most depraved of States—these are side issues compared with the fact that polygamy, as justified by the creed of the Latter Day Saints, involves the most abhorrent degradation of women. In Eastern countries the weaker sex is truly the weaker sex, subordinate in every way to her lord and master, a slave, a beast of burden. Mormonism has endeavored to transport to the West the most loathsome ideas of the degenerate East—and why? For reasons so sensual, so base, so infamous, that “the shame that can not be expressed for shame” attaches not only to the men who gratify their passions, but to the creed which they profess. The decent and intelligent man, who may on an impartial examination see much that is worthy, much that is elevating, in abstract Mormonism, can never be but repelled from it when he comes to the realism of the abuse of plural marriages. It is true that some Mormons refuse to practice polygamy. That is to their credit. But the temptation is there, and the license exists. Moreover, if “divine revelations” count for anything, the monogamists are not doing their duty as true believers. Nothing, however, is more odious in this connection than the blasphemous devices resorted to in order alternately to sanction or to abolish the rule at convenience. When polygamy is safe a “divine revelation” encourages it; when it is dangerous a “divine revelation” forbids it. But, whether encouraged or forbidden, the Mormons, as the Smoot case proves, persist in it either openly or secretly. Now the Church has formally renounced it, and pretends to be shocked at the disclosures made during the hearing of Smoot’s claim to enter the Senate. But the disclosures are not new. The facts are not new. The only difference which has come to pass is that the Saints have been made to confess, and that they see the need of direct representation in the American Legislature, and can not get it as long as their record is so foul. Judging, too, from past history, the renunciation of polygamous practices will count for nothing. One might almost conclude that there would be no Mormonism left if white men’s harems were banished. And the very important question is now raised whether, under the pretence of emigration or evangelistic mission, Mormon apostles in England should be permitted the use of public buildings in which to “convert” women and entice deluded slaves into their Utah dens.

The next is from the Cleveland Plain Dealer for April 21, 1904:

MORE MORMON REVELATIONS.

An old friend turns up again and under quite as unlovely an aspect as on his first appearance. Brigham H. Roberts, the Mormon representative who was unseated by the house a few years ago on account of his polygamous practices, appeared yesterday before the Smoot committee in Washington.

Roberts made an avowal marked by the same impudent frankness that characterized the testimony of President Smith and other previous witnesses. He has three wives, the last taken after such marriages had been declared by the State contrary to the law of the land and by the Mormon hierarchy contrary to the law of the Church. He was forced to admit that he was thus living in defiance of the laws of both God and man. He declared that the Mormon official who “sealed” him the third time had previously married him to a second wife, and, more than all, admitted that his third marriage had been kept for years a secret from his other wives. He added, with a “what are you going to do about it” air, “Of course we knew that the marriage was illegal.”

As the Smoot inquiry progresses it becomes more clear that the widely heralded renunciation of polygamy by the Mormon Church was intended to throw dust in the people’s eyes to cover the secret observance of its peculiar institution. The testimony of Roberts and of President Smith himself reveals the fact that the State’s law is defied and that of the Church juggled with, as emergencies render advisable. The specious plea that to abandon polygamy would mean the abandoning of wives and children is no longer raised. It was never, in fact, made plain to the “gentile” world why the discontinuance of doubly forbidden relations with a plural wife should constitute abandonment. The very use of the word marriage, as applied to such conditions as have been revealed by the Smoot inquiry, is offensive and insulting. It is neither more nor less than concubinage, for as Roberts himself said, “We knew the marriage was illegal.”

As to what is to be done about it, the Senate Committee may have suggestions to make in due time. The Smoot investigation has shown the fearful mistake made by Congress in granting statehood to Utah and thus paralyzing the strong arm of the federal law, which alone seems capable of dealing with such a menacing situation.

ABOUT THOSE “FIVE HUNDRED YOUNG MORMONS.”

In a letter to one of the HERALD editors Joseph F. Smith, Jr., wrote from Salt Lake City, Utah, under date of April 13:

Our Conference closed on Wednesday the 6th. It was one of the most successful and best attended Conferences that was ever held. There was a number of sore-headed and disgruntled political office-seekers, who were striving to cause trouble in the Church, but fortunately, they were all nonmembers of the Church and received no sympathy or support from the church members. Of course this class were displeased with our Conference for they could not dictate to it. The reports sent out from this city by over-zealous anti-Mormons are many and not far apart. One of these which appeared in the Chicago Tribune, and, by the way, copied in your HERALD, to the effect that five hundred “young Mormons” were protesting, was the greatest fake. There was, it is true, a movement on foot among a small number of “anti-Mormon” politicians, to revive the old “Liberal" party here, but the respectable Gentiles would not stand for it, and the result was that the movement "died in the shell." Of this movement I have yet to hear of the first member of the Church who aided, or in any way sympathized with the movement. It was the desire of the leaders of the movement to play on the weaknesses of some members of the Church that they might receive their aid, but they even failed among the non-members of the Church, much less the "young men," or "young Utah," as they like to term us. "Young Utah," or at least that part which belongs to the Church, is too wise to receive counsel from such a gang of carpet-baggers, who pay none of the taxes and live on the public. The game has been worked too often in the past, or, at least, they have tried too often to work it.

---

Correction.

In the report of the Conference as found in HERALD for April 20, on page 370, the speaker for Sunday evening was given as T. C. Kelley. Bro. Kelley was appointed, but as he had left Kirtland Bro. C. H. Rich was appointed, and he occupied the pulpit as appointed. On page 367, second line, "Board of Editors" should read "Board of Auditors."

---

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Twice-a-Week News, of Mount Ayr, Iowa, in its issue for April 29, speaks of the probability of Graceland College being closed because of the debt being unpaid. The News says: "The College has a faculty of about eight persons, and an enrollment of about one hundred and twenty-five. It was established in 1895. It occupies a fine brick building erected several years ago at a cost of twenty thousand dollars. Graceland is the college closest to Ringgold County's borders, so that a feeling of neighborliness prompts Ringgold County people to hope that the school may be extricated from its difficulties by next June, so that its doors may reopen to students by next September."

The great World's Fair opened at St. Louis on Saturday, April 30. President Francis, of the Fair, when all was in readiness, touched a button which gave the signal to President Roosevelt in Washington that all was ready. The latter then touched the electric button which opened the Fair. The water began flowing over the beautiful cascades, the gates swung open, and the great Fair was opened. Large numbers were in attendance. Work has been rushed in the last few weeks, getting things ready for the opening day. From now till the close some time in October or November the nations of the world will have their best products on exhibit at St. Louis, and visitors from the whole world over will come to see what the rest of the world can do. Who can measure the extent of the lessons such a fair will inculcate? Who will deny that it will promote the feeling of the brotherhood of man and thereby teach again the fatherhood of God?

Last week we had an item concerning Heman C. Smith to the effect that he reached home Monday, April 18, that he missed one business session of the General Conference, and that sickness called him home. Bro. Smith has informed us that "none of the statements are true." He left Kirtland on Sunday, reached home Tuesday, April 19, sickness did not call him home, and he did not miss one business session.

Bro. James M. Baggerly, laboring for a time of late in Michigan, secured space in the Brown City Banner and the St. Clair Republican for quite lengthy articles in which he ably set the facts of our position before the readers of those journals, and showed clearly why we should not be confounded with the church in Utah under President Joseph F. Smith. Bro. Baggerly is a quite forcible writer, and is quite well informed on Church history.

Bro. James Caffall wrote from Council Bluffs, Iowa, April 30: "Present indisposition will preclude the possibility of performing active ministerial labor for the present." We regret to learn this, but hope the indisposition will speedily be removed. Bro. Caffall has spent many years of honorable and arduous labor for the cause, and we trust he may be spared to us many more years.

---

Original Poetry.

A Leaf on the Vine.

Like weary pilgrims, Mecca bound,
 To Kirtland's heights we upward stroll,
 Slow-treading o'er historic ground
 We reach at length the wished-for goal;
 And there the famous Temple stands,
 A monument of faith and grace;
 A structure reared by God's command
 Bespeaking Art from dome to base.
 A city all in silence wrapped
 Adjoins the Temple's sloping site
 Where slumbering Saints long years have napped
 Neath slabs of marble cold and white.
 But thoughts revert from forms of clay
 To scores of souls alive and well
 Who, thronging in the narrow way,
 Stride Temple-ward at tap of bell.
 O'er pebbled walks, through Temple doors
 We shelter seek from dripping skies,
 And as we tread the time-worn floors
 I gaze around with wondering eyes.
 Eight white carved pillars have been set
 To bear in part the ponderous weight
 Of this quaint house, and never yet
 Have I beheld its duplicate.
 Great Gothic windows, deep encased,
 Both diamond shaped and small square panes;
 Much carving that is not effaced,
 Shows art that skill alone attains.
 Facing eastward, ranged in tiers,
 Four triple pulpits stand arrayed,

And on the front of each appears
 The greater priesthood's place and grade.
 And, facing west, of same design,
 Four triple seats in terraced rows,
 The lesser priesthood's grade and line
 By lettered front distinctly shows.

White fire-proof curtains, hanging furled,
 Recall dark scenes of blood and pain
 When God his blow of triumph hurled
 And rent a temple veil in twain.
 As high-sea pirates black flags flout
 So sable banners now seemed flung,
 And signs that brought me fear and doubt
 Around the spacious Temple hung.

A mystic power within me surged;
 Old tales to mind recurred anew.
 My needs and my desires I urged,
 That I might know if they were true.
 The Temple's northside wall recedes;
 The building seems o'ershadowed quite;
 Enchantment lends her charming meeds—
 A glorious vision meets my sight!

Behold the wondrous work of God!
 His potent hand; his grace divine:
 Like Jonas' gourd and Aaron's rod
 There rose a wide, outspreading vine;
 A stately vine, superbly grand,
 With branches low and branches high;
 In liquid gold it seems to stand,
 Its background is the deep blue sky.

As weeping willows droop and bend
 Till graceful curvings correspond,
 So this fair vine from end to end
 Has reached the same symmetric bond.
 Where interlacing branches suit
 Each tiny tendril twines and weaves,
 And clusters of ripe, luscious fruit
 Hang mid the highly tinted leaves.

Bright beams of light around are shed;
 A voice comes wafted from afar:
 "I am the vine," it sweetly said,
 "And ye the living branches are."
 O why can I not understand?
 The lovely scene begins to shift,
 The drooping boughs on every hand
 Grow straightened as they upward lift.

The curves are gone, but there remains,
 A thing of beauty fair to see;
 A thing where perfect order reigns—
 A leaf-clad, fruitful, well formed tree.
 Its trunk is labeled "The Priesthood."
 Each branch thereof bespeaks its share:
 When God pronounced his garden good,
 This great, grand tree was surely there.

I notice first a rift or cleft
 That opens just above the base;
 And growing outward toward the left
 There Aaron's name I plainly trace.
 The right-hand branch excels by far
 The other in its priestly mien;
 And yet the two together are
 Conjointly formed and ever green.

The two grand trunks, each from its side,
 Sends out a branch with two great prongs,
 Another bough spreads far and wide
 And twelve off-shoots to it belong.
 And thus the tree in grandeur grows,

Its branches all proportioned well;
 Fruit-laden tree, fair as the rose,
 Your gorgeous beauty none can tell.

Again the low sweet words resound:
 "I am the vine, though tree-like here,
 And ye are branches that abound
 In golden fruits. Be of good cheer."
 Again the vine rose clambering high,
 Quite shutting out the tree from sight.
 O how I longed to know if I
 To vine or tree had any right.

Upon the Priesthood tree no place
 To me had surely been assigned;
 And on the vine for me no trace
 As branch or tendril could I find.
 Ah me, from bliss to utter woe!
 No part in all this grand display!
 Could He no gift on me bestow?
 And sorrowing I turned away.

But as the pulpit's front I passed,
 A snow white sheet suspended hung;
 One longing look on it I cast,
 And O my joy! No pen or tongue
 Can e'er portray it as I caught
 A glimpse of that on background thrown.
 'Twas but a leaf grotesquely wrought;
 I quickly claimed it as my own.

Long years ago the Master deigned
 To proffer me this vine-borne leaf,
 By his dear hand outlined and veined;
 My work of filling-in seemed brief.
 But O the oft misguided strokes
 That caused inharmony of hues!
 Discordant tinting still invokes
 The censure that all critics use.

But God a sample leaf has given,
 In unison its colors grew,
 As if the rainbow had been riven
 To furnish us a copy true.
 And when I followed the design,
 The tintings blend with sweet accord,
 Befitting well the dark outline
 As penciled by our loving Lord.

My leaf bears marks of sundry climes,
 Of lines effaced and canvas soiled,
 Assuring me that many times
 The tempter's plotting has been foiled.
 Now o'er my soul there comes a hush;
 Do I the welcome plaudit hear?
 "You wielded well the artist's brush;
 Your leaflet has grown brown and sear."

I moaned: for autumn-tinted leaves
 Decay and scatter far and wide.
 I thought we should be garnered sheaves;
 Not borne away by wind and tide.
 Again may hearts with rapture swell,
 I heard the small voice whisper low,
 Just as it did at Jacob's well
 The same sweet words of long ago:

"The resurrection true am I,
 Drink of the water I shall give;
 Abide in me, ye shall not die;
 Though ye are dead, yet shall ye live."
 Boughs, vines, and leaflets rise and cheer;
 This is God's holy Temple then,
 For He hath kindly met me here,
 And my glad soul responds, "Amen!"

KIRTLAND, Ohio, April, 1904.

A. E. COBB.

Original Articles.

THE TRUE GOSPEL AND THE TRUE CHURCH.

BY ELDER D. E. TUCKER.

(Concluded from last week.)

The next important command of our Lord is prayer:

And he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint.—Luke 18: 1.

And we are not only commanded to pray, but we are told how we should pray:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering: for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord.—James 1: 5-7.

And not only are we commanded to pray, and told how we should pray, but there are certain blessings that can not be obtained except through fasting and prayer:

And he said unto them, this kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting.—Mark 9: 29.

It is just as necessary for God's people to fast and pray now, as it was then: their mission in the world is just the same now as it was then.

Another command is in regard to the washing of feet among his people:

If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.—John 13: 14, 15.

He also gave command in regard to partaking of the emblems of his flesh and blood. (See John 6: 48-71.) The washing of feet, and partaking of the emblems are to his church and people; and not to the world; and are to be observed in their proper time, place, and order.

He gave command also in regard to tithes and offerings:

But rather give alms of such things as ye have; and, behold, all things are clean unto you. But woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.—Luke 11: 41, 42.

Reader, all these holy commands are in force to-day; and no man can annul a single one of them. They will stand for ever:

I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him. That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past.—Ecclesiastes 3: 14, 15.

THE TRUE CHURCH.

Having said so much on the true gospel, we now offer a few thoughts on the true church, the true pattern of which is found in the Scriptures. And any church differing from that pattern in origin, organization, faith, doctrine, or practice, can not be the true church; but is either an offshoot, or a church of men only. It behooves us then in our investigations, and also in our efforts toward church building, to keep close to the pattern. For God is the author and founder of everything true, noble, and good. And if a sparrow can not fall to the ground without his knowing it, it is just as impossible for his church to rise without his concurring aid.

This, of course, implies revelation from time to time. The true church, we might say, is known by different titles and names, such as the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of God, the church of God, the house of God, and the bride, the Lamb's wife.

We will say there are two churches or kingdoms, one on earth and one in heaven. The one on earth is called the church militant, the one in heaven the church triumphant; because she has triumphed over all her enemies, while the church militant is yet engaged in war on earth with her enemies, not with weapons of warfare that men have made, but with the "shield of faith, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." (Ephesians 6: 16, 17.)

When the church is fully organized and established it has the following lines of officers: First a quorum of three men, constituting a leader and his two counselors or assistants:

But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady till the going down of the sun.—Exodus 17: 12.

And he said unto the Elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you: and, behold, Aaron and Hur are with you; if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them.—Exodus 24: 14.

The next was a quorum of twelve men:

And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Send thou men, that they may search the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel: of every tribe of their fathers shall ye send a man, every one a ruler among them. And Moses by the commandment of the Lord sent them from the wilderness of Paran: all those men were heads of the children of Israel.—Numbers 13: 1-3.

There are three things we call attention to, in the choosing of these twelve men:

1. They represented the twelve tribes of Israel.
2. They were rulers among the people.
3. They were heads of the children of Israel.

Then a quorum of seventy:

And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee. And I will come down and talk with thee there: And I will take of the Spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone.—Numbers 11: 16, 17.

There were also other elders in the church as will be seen by reading this same sixteenth verse.

Then priests or pastors. (See Genesis 14: 18; Exodus 28: 1; Jeremiah 3: 15; 17: 16; 23: 4.)

Moses was the forerunner of Christ in Old Testament times, and prophesied of him. (See Deuteronomy 18: 15.) Verses 18 and 19 read as follows:

I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him.

This prophet is to be heard; or the Father will require it of the people. He was the only begotten of the Father. But the Father did not send him till he sent a prophet to prepare the way before him. Then the Son came and entered upon his work, and established the church, after the same pattern it was in the days of Moses; for the pattern remains the same, and the Father will have no other. And while the quorum of three is not so plainly set out in the New Testament as in the Old, yet there is an intimation that there was such a quorum; and as there was not to be found a full and complete record in the Old Testament touching church polity, further revelation was necessary from time to time; for God never has given all of his law to man at any time:

For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little and there a little.—Isaiah 28: 10.

And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve whom he also named apostles.—Luke 6: 12, 13.

And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light, and, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him.—Matthew 17: 1-3.

There were two men in the quorum of twelve at this time by the name of James. This James who went up on the mount with the Savior was the brother of John the revelator, who was the beloved disciple who the other disciples understood was not to die; and this is the James Herod killed, who sought to take Peter's life also, Peter being cast into prison and delivered by an angel. Later on others were chosen to fill vacancies in the quorum of twelve. (See Acts 13: 1-4, 14: 14.)

And still later it seems James, the Lord's brother, was chosen and became the leader:

But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother.—Galatians 1: 19.

And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision.—Galatians 2: 9.

Then in harmony with the pattern of the church given in the days of Moses he chose one or more quorums of seventy:

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come.—Luke 10: 1.

Then other elders, priests, or pastors, teachers, and deacons were chosen; also bishops. (See 1 Corinthians 12; Ephesians 4; Titus 1.) And the three of this quorum were sometimes called prophets, seers, or revelators; if prophets, they would be favored with the gift of prophecy for the benefit of the church; and if revelators, they would be favored with the gift of revelation for the benefit of the church; and if seers, they would be favored with the gift of foresight for the benefit of the church. Hence they might properly be termed the eyes and the leaders of the church, presiding over the church, and directing the conferences of the same. Paul in 1 Corinthians 12, very intelligently compares the church to the body of a man, and refers to some of the different lines of officers in the church, and says God set them in; and that they are all necessary; and one can not say to the other, I have no need of thee. Paul tells us also in Ephesians (chapter 5) that the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ is the head of the church. His church then must have a head of its own, as the wife has a head of her own.

The quorum of three and the quorum of twelve, then, would constitute the head of the church on earth. The bishops answer to the shoulders, as it is their business to look after the financial interests of the church. Priests or pastors answer to that part of the arm next the body. Seventies answer to the fore-arm, as they are to go before and preach the gospel to the world. (See Luke 10.) Then patriarchs, or evangelists (Ephesians 4) answer to the hands. Then other elders, teachers, and deacons answer to the lower limbs of the body and to the feet.

In this church was found also a variety of spiritual gifts, and the whole church was to profit by them. (See 1 Corinthians 12.) In it also was found the true gospel, which made it the "pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Timothy 3: 15.)

These twelve apostles in the New as well as in Old Testament times represented the twelve tribes of Israel:

And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel.—Matthew 19: 28.

This Church was not authorized to preach any other gospel than the one preached by Jesus himself; neither are the true ministry of Christ authorized to preach any other to-day; if they do they will surely come under the curse:

But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.—Galatians 1: 8, 9.

This church also held authority to bind and loose upon earth; and whatever they bound and loosed upon earth was bound and loosed in heaven, because his church is built upon a rock, and that rock is God the eternal Father, the one who revealed to Peter the knowledge that Jesus was the Christ. (See Matthew 16: 17, 18.)

Because I will publish the name of the Lord: ascribe ye greatness unto our God. He is the rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgement: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he.—Dueteronomy 32: 3, 4.

And to build upon this rock we must build upon God's word; then the gates of hell can not prevail against us.

Reader, the true church has again been restored to earth in the nineteenth century, with the true gospel, together with the authority to preach it and administer the ordinances thereof, with the same gifts and blessings following, when people live for them as they should, and it is known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ.

And we come to you, dear friend, and ask you to consider its claims carefully and prayerfully; and if by so doing you should see the light and truth, and will yield obedience to it, we promise you that you "shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," for it has come in fulfillment of the scriptures, and God is at the helm, and the saving power of the true gospel can be felt again among those who obey it. And we testify that we know and have seen and felt its saving and healing influence in our behalf. And we know this is the true church and kingdom of God on earth. Therefore, we say repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

AUCKLAND, New Zealand, February 1, 1904.

THE RECONCILIATION.

I was very desirous to see that wonderful America, so often represented to the Jews in Russia as a veritable "Land of Promise," so, when a mere youth, I made my way to New York. Soon after my arrival here, I was providentially brought under Christian influence, and eventually publicly confessed my faith in Christ, as my own personal Messiah, and united with a Christian church. When this, to him, most appalling news, reached my father's ears, he immediately disowned me. In his opinion, my death would have been a far lighter affliction. For eleven years he held no communication with me. I was utterly alone in the world, so far as my own people were concerned. I did not know of a relative, on this side the Atlantic, until through a chain of circumstances, which abundantly verified the old adage, "Truth is stranger than fiction," I, one day, was brought in contact with my own cousin. At our first meeting, he bitterly upbraided me for my change of faith, but when I justified my position from the Old Testament, to his satisfaction, he became friendly.

Soon after, my cousin wrote to my father, that although his son had become a Christian, he still loved his father's God, his father's Bible, and his father's people, "God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform." Meanwhile, my father had been greatly afflicted. He had lost nearly all his property, and the death of my elder brother had nearly broken his heart. Then his thoughts turned to the discarded son. So when my cousin's letter reached him, he began a correspondence with me, which has continued for the last two years. Through his letters I learned to know much of my people's circumstances.

Two of my sisters, expert needlewomen, were working for a mere pittance. They could do much better here, but there was no money for the journey. Last year I was enabled, by the help of God and his people, to bring them here. They are now self-supporting.

Ever since the Kishineff massacre, I have been very anxious to rescue the remainder of my family from their perilous situation in Russia, where a repetition of this horror is always imminent. God seems to have opened the way for my father and one of my sisters to come here. Mr. John W. Pritchard, editor Christian Nation, Tribune Building, New York, has offered me two steamer tickets at reduced rates. I have paid him a small deposit in order to secure them. After they come, there will be five of us here, and our united efforts will bring the others also. Perhaps, as with Jacob of old, the discarded son may become the Joseph of his family.

I ask your united prayers for God's blessing upon my endeavors to rescue my family, and also that they may learn to know and love their own Messiah.

B. A. M. SCHAPIRO.

Editor of The People, the Land, and the Book, 83 Bible House, New York.

THE PRESENT NEED.

The present age is beyond doubt a very remarkable one, in fact, comparatively speaking it stands out conspicuously unique upon the pages of history. It is a critical, and in general, an epoch-making age. Conditions which have been gradually increasing in acuteness are now assuming alarming proportions. Revision, reformation, and readjustment seem to be the general order in almost every department of life. In fact it is admitted on all hands that there is a need, an urgent need, which demands that if we shall prove adequate in the process of survival in the present struggle for existence then we must (the demand is imperative) place ourselves in proper relation to and with the newly discovered forces and laws which have revolutionized life in all its phases and aspects.

The nineteenth century has been phenomenal, especially the latter half; knowledge has increased by leaps and bounds and we are rapidly verging upon, if we have not already reached, an epoch of iconoclasm. In no realm of thought or action has the disturbance caused so much concern, as in the realm or department of religion. While many have endeavored to ignore or treat with indifference or affected complacency this growing dissatisfaction, it is becoming more and more evident that the modern conceptions of religion are totally inadequate to meet the demands of the times. It seems as though religion was altogether out of joint, so to speak; out of harmony with the rest of our knowledge and discoveries. To-day, as never before, men are looking with grave and increasing suspicion, and in many cases with actual contempt, upon religion, scarcely deeming the matter worthy of more notice than mediæval alchemy or astrology, regarding it largely as one of the remaining relics which connects the present era of practical application of empirical knowledge to modern necessity with the age of speculation and superstition. A careful study and observation of the rapidly transpiring events will warrant the conclusion that we are nearing a religious crisis which may equal if not surpass the crisis of the Reformation or the French Revolution, a crisis which will not involve simply some doctrinal point or some aspect of ecclesiastical polity, but the very existence of religion. One thing is certain: unless religion readjusts itself so as to bring itself into line with modern truth it must either be cast down, if it impedes the progress of science, or be left behind. The revivals movements which are taking place that we have had opportunity to examine and in some cases analyze seem to be but hysterical and spasmodic attempts to escape the inevitable dissolution resultant from internal ineptitude; and the very exertion to maintain its hold will but hasten the coming calamity by bringing into bolder prominence the very defects that fain would be ignored or denied.

As a church we have escaped to a large extent the scrutiny and analysis to which others have been subjected, and our practical worth as a power in conducing to universal utility and happiness, if we possess any, has been overlooked because of our obscurity on one hand and also because of a spirit of supercilious contempt with which we are treated by those who only know of the work through the sensational reports of those who know nothing about us. But, as surely as we have an existence as a church and claim to exercise our influence for good in the molding of character in the unit and consequently in the community, the time is not far distant when we must as a church take our place before the judgment bar of science and prove our claim. If in this struggle for existence in which the "survival of the fittest" only is insured, as an organization we are not efficient in the development of moral, mental, and spiritual character, our doom is written as clearly as though the finger of God wrote, "Mene, mene tekel upharsin" over our portals or across our walls.

Time and statistics are showing the slow but sure process of decay which is proceeding in many churches, and pursues them as relentlessly as Nemesis. It does not require that God shall violently and startlingly manifest his power in some miraculous manner. Time and experience will quietly, unassumingly, but assuredly, discriminate between the genuine and the false, the efficient and the inefficient, the true and the false, the right and the wrong. Nature to a large extent will fulfill the promise of the Savior: "Every tree that my Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."

In view then of this coming and inevitable test, would it not be well to adopt practically the advice of Paul: Examine ourselves and see whether we be in the faith? And so far as possible let us discover the causes which have worked to the decay, degeneracy, and ruin of the churches of past and present. History proves to us that the mere fact of divine origin does not place the church in a state of impeccability nor impregnability, for the simple reason that, like all of God's dealings with human concerns, he adopts the principles of coöperation, and just so long as there remains the human element of which the church is composed just so long will the danger of apostasy or "rejection" by God remain.

Without entering into any elaborate examination it is readily discovered that the most fatal influence which has worked against the churches and even the Church, as evidenced by the history of the past, has been ignorance and unholy ambition. The history of some churches whose history we have read shows very clearly that blind credulity and an implicit, unquestioning trust in the sacerdotalism of the church has been "all" that has been demanded. Too often has it been urged that faith in and submission to the power of the priesthood would comprise all the virtues of their devotees. For centuries the incubus of ignorance was nourished by the church (once the dominant power of the world), and its slimy tentacles gripped the very vitals of the nations. But while the power to enforce this moral and mental slavery was successful in conserving the interests of such a religion, yet there came a time when this very spirit of conservatism and persistent refusal to accept knowledge turned like a viper in its bosom and stung the church to the quick, inoculating her with the virus of a deadly disease.

In thinking of what we often call the latter-day apostasy, which has apparently wrought so much ill to the cause of Christ and caused so much sorrow and regret, one can not help but be struck with the similarity between the policy of the papal Church and that of the Mormon Church in so many respects; especially does this similarity deepen into actual identity in the repugnance both these hierarchies manifest to intelligent investigation, to light and knowledge, demanding servile submission to the "power of the priesthood." Credulity and sacerdotalism are outstanding features of both Catholicism and Mormonism. While the Roman Catholics are flourishing in some communities, yet it is universally recognized that the prevalence and victory of Catholicism is at the expense and sacrifice of liberty, intellectual and moral development, conducing to mental and spiritual degeneracy. How remarkable is this identity in the produce of Catholicism and what is called Mormonism! We can only conclude that such systems are standing menaces to the interests of truth, and some often wonder how long such menaces will be allowed to continue, and what agencies will be employed to remove them.

In a vague way it has been thought probable that some phenomenal display of God's power would effect this result; but it seems to the writer that it is not necessary for God to exert himself in any extraordinary manner to counteract this evil. Such systems contain within themselves the element of disintegration, and in the thoughtful, farseeing wisdom of Gamaliel we can rest assured that only the God-originated truth will and can abide the test of time and utility. That which is not of God and is not truth must inevitably fall and come to nothing. Patience and the cultivation of that faculty of minding our own business will be all that is necessary on our part to effect the final establishment of our policy, provided always our policy is divinely true.

In religion, as in all else, power, worth, and development result from knowledge. "Knowledge is power" is an axiom of world-wide repute, and to its unchanging veracity all history and experience testify. As we have remarked, there seems to be a difference to-day in the general attitude of the world, a difference vast and bewildering in its thoroughness and still it seems to have been inconceivably rapid in its appearance. The cycle of changes has been rapid but still slow: phenomenal yet natural. The same forces which for years, nay, for centuries have been working to this very end are still concentrating and preparing for a mighty upheaval, so that the "end of the world" may be much nearer and may prove a very different kind of an "end" to what many expect. If we think for a moment, however, this is just the way God does all his work: "his kingdom comes not with observation." The lovely efflorescence of summer is the outcome of days, weeks, and months, of work in the dark, unseen chambers of Nature. The marvelous transformation effected in the days of Christ had been preparing long centuries before his actual appearing. The Reformation was not an ephemeral phenomena; it was the natural and irresistible outcome of years and centuries of unseen and almost forgotten agitation.

The English Revolution, the French Revolution likewise, were spontaneous, lawless outbursts of popular fury, but the terrific culmination of years of compressed indignation. Knowledge, intelligence here are the agents, the forces productive of these past changes. Many Christians deplore the increase of knowledge, science, and research because of the spirit of agnosticism; yet the cause and effect are perfectly natural. As knowledge increases, doubt, agnosticism and infidelity to many foolish theories of necessity occur and probably in the exuberance of elation consequent upon newly discovered truth excesses are perpetrated; finally, the ebullition ceases and the crystals of truth are precipitated. If any one is unable to pass successfully the scrutiny of truth religiously, then for your soul's sake get a new religion.

There is a strange and subtle power of coherency and relationship between cause and effect which may and can be distinctly and positively traced in all the events of the past. The cause of yesterday finds expression in some effect of to-day, which effect in time becomes causative of increased effect to a wider and more profound extent. Let us notice briefly some of the events which have conduced to the changes in religion since the Reformation and as we proceed let us endeavor to heed what may have occurred as "an ensample unto us."

What is called "the Reformation" was in reality a revolution resulting from two main causes; the effect has been the increase of light and knowledge. Occasional gleams of the smouldering fire had fitfully been observed in and from the twelfth century in several European countries, but the light was immediately extinguished by the dominant power of papal Rome. When moral suasion failed to accomplish this, then there was available the secular arm of the empire which the church never scrupled to requisition if her influence was threatened. For many centuries ignorance and force were successful in keeping mental liberty and conscience in a state of abject servility, but there was a power working like unseen leaven, and when the church presuming too much upon the ignorance and blind credulity of her devotees violently abused the already much abused intelligence of the people, which she did in the sixteenth century, there was thus provided the second cause. Simultaneously almost a host of forward minds and intrepid souls made a superb and successful effort to burst through the heavy mists of superstition, and treading the newly discovered paths of mental and moral freedom entered into a region of comparative liberty, and scaling the heights of experience delighted themselves in the surpassing grandeur and variety of the landscape opening before them like some verdant land of promise.

The claims of a morbid and arrogant sacerdotalism were flung aside with disdain and men at last claimed their right to commune face to face with God as the great and universal All-father. Quaffing the pure waters of liberty and inhaling deeply the invigorating atmosphere of moral independence, the blood of the generation was aroused from its sluggishness and quickened into activity, and upon the tide of unfettered desire for knowledge the barks of commercial, social, and scientific enterprise were launched and rapidly borne towards the ever-increasing and expanding horizon, radiant with promise.

The benefits were mutual. With the incoming of knowledge and freedom there came, in a degree, the purification of religious sentiment; and with the purification of humanity's conception of God and moral responsibility came still increasing light and power. It may be true, that in the noise and dust of the conflict, obscurity and aberration produced excesses; yet, when the perturbation ceased and the scene is viewed from the eminence of present knowledge, we must admit that the "Monk of Wittenberg" who thundered at the gates of Rome, shook to the foundation not only Germany, not only Europe, but the whole world felt the shock of that impact between the forces of ignorance and the forces of knowledge; that stern figure with his splendid cohort of compeers, stands at the portals opening to a new era, a new power,—a new world.

It is not my purpose to trace the fascinating course of events which were evolved by the Reformation; suffice it to say that as a result of this splendid victory of conscience, the world received a veritable baptism and arose regenerated, born anew. Wherever the new light dawned, it was as though the rays of the sun had penetrated into some low-lying, swampy valley, the home of fungi and the bacilli of disease, a region of eternal gloom, and transformed it into a veritable paradise. The occidental nations of the present owe their vast superiority over the oriental nations, in a large measure, to the salubrious influence of this remarkable event. As we trace the course of events in this great struggle we notice unceasingly the same forces at work. In France and Holland persecution and outrage were the daily enactments on the part of ignorance and superstition against the Huguenots who were the fountain of knowledge, commerce, and moral adequacy. Gradually the violent measures employed by the Jesuits and the king drove the Huguenots out of their homeland to find an asylum in other lands. Many went to Switzerland, some to Germany, some to Ireland, some to America, a few to Scotland, but the largest number came to England. Later some went to South Africa, colonizing Cape Colony, the progenitors of the present Boers of the Transvaal.

It seemed as though for the time ignorance had succeeded in once again establishing its power, at least locally. But while Louis XIV, "the Great," had done his best to exterminate all who would not acknowledge the Catholic supremacy, in this terrible page of French history can be actually identified the force which, but a century later developed with almost volcanic violence the great and awful tragedy of the Revolution which made France the theater of Europe while the tragedy of the Revolution was enacted. The priests, the erstwhile persecutors who had hunted and caused to be exiled or killed the Huguenots, now became the fugitives and the victims of a national eruption. The king, who in the person of Louis XIV a century before had gloated over his victory and congratulated himself on his success as a proselyter, by the aid of dragonnades was dragged to the scaffold and guillotined in the person of Louis XVI. The altar was thrown down, the guillotine took its place. In place of the psalm and Te Deum, the shrieks and groans of the victims and the rancous shout of the frenzied mob. The Days of Terror were the prelude to an age of infidelity which endeavored to blot God out of the national existence of this country, which one time had been the pride of Europe and the flower of her chivalry.

The terrible lesson it taught was, that sooner or later, by fair means or violence, knowledge and liberty will and must succeed, and terrible will be the condition of that nation or community which exerts its power to stay its irresistible progress. In England, Scotland, and Ireland we can trace very easily the same causes and the same effects, only, happily for us, in a modified degree.

Now, I have had an object, a very important and momentous object in calling attention to these facts, and it is this, that any community that will not acquire the power of knowledge must sooner or later be removed. Efficiency (the power to produce results), advancement, utility, and power are inseparably connected with light, intelligence, and knowledge; that ineptitude, servility, and degeneracy are the inevitable outcome of ignorance. In the language of modern inspiration: "The glory of God is intelligence." Ignorance is the glory of the Devil, or, to quote Carlyle, "A thinking man is the Devil's worst enemy."

Is there not a lesson in the past and present oftentimes tragical denunciation of ignorance? I believe there is; and one which in a vague way we are beginning to realize.

Let us examine our attitude and relationship as a church (theoretically at least) to the times and environments of the present.

We make the claim, tacitly, if not directly, to represent exclusively the highest order of religion that has ever been revealed; for we urge our religion is not merely similar to, nor analogous with, the religion of Jesus, but is absolutely identical; that our religion and the religion of Christ is one and the same. We believe in relation to the religion of Christ that it is the highest possible revelation of God to man; no higher nor truer conception of God could be possible. In the language of Renan, "The highest consciousness of God which has existed in the bosom of humanity is that of Jesus." What follows? This: Claiming to be subservient to this law which reveals the God-character in the truest, purest, and holiest sense, our lives individually and collectively should reflect the truest, purest, and holiest assimilation of that divine character. In exactly the proportion that God shall be manifest in us, or, as the "divine nature" shall find expression in the lives of those professing that religion, in that proportion only is it able to prove its claim to a place in science, manifesting its capability of survival as the fittest religion to meet the demands. If it does not mean this, then in what sense is our religion superior to any other? Do we simply value it as a novelty in polemics? Is it simply superior in theory? The time has come when our religion must be of more practical value than a system of "theological logic" or "theological mathematics."

It is not enough to grow eloquent over the impregnable argument on baptism, nor develop ability to present church principles and church organization. How many of us are continually reiterating, "We know this work to be of God"? Yet how many can tell by our individual deportment and comportment that we know anything about God or that God has anything to do with us? What is expected of us, what is demanded, and what we actually owe to the world is the actual production of the Christ-character in our own lives; this is the end, goal, and object of the gospel. Yet, sorrowful to relate, it almost seems as though the zenith of our ambition was obtained when we made converts to baptism, church organization, the Book of Mormon, and the prophetic call of Joseph Smith. Conversion to Christ! This is the great transcendent end, to which all the others are but the means. O the folly of believing that a baptismal certification is a talisman against evil or a life assurance policy for eternity, as though this was the desideratum of our religion! Until we become intelligently acquainted with our duties and splendid privileges and prerogatives in the gospel, we must be content to be classified as "one of the religions." But when the day comes that we can produce the evidence in the form of character we shall then and not till then present to science our passport to our place at the head of all the powers and forces working for emancipation and the redemption of man. And by sheer merit prove ourselves to be the Church of Christ and members of "his body."

Numbers of prayers have been offered and are still presented to God, pleading for "the endowment of God's Spirit" in Pentecostal profusion. Do we think of the significance of the request? Do we simply want that power to go through the world as miracle-working experts? Do we think that miracles are going to convince the world of sin? Surely not! It may be said that God was manifest in Christ by miracle. This is simply a misconception; God was manifest in the life of Christ. In my opinion, and that opinion is based upon the evidence we have of God's character as an economist, God will not place more power in the hands or possession of an individual than he is capable of using. To place at the disposal of an individual or a community a vast power that was not even understood, would be to invite disaster.

In thinking of Zion and of the ineffable glory of the millennium it would seem that we are sometimes guilty of indulging in impractical and superstitious vagaries. Zion will not be produced by extraneous circumstances altogether; geographical location is very secondary contrasted with the essential primary requisite,—character. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." "Zion is the pure in heart." Zion, like heaven, is more of a condition than a place. When we as a people shall have developed in the grace and knowledge and character of our Lord, it will not be necessary to pray God into a willingness to "endow us with a Pentecostal effulgence of the Spirit." God waits for us and not we for God. Spiritual power is regulated by spiritual knowledge and wisdom, knowledge consisting of what a man "knows," wisdom consisting of a proper application of that knowledge. This brings us to the consideration of another feature of this work.

What are the means by which God educates and develops his people? This is made very clear in several portions of God's word especially is Ephesians 4: 11, 12: "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers. For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, and for the edifying of the body of Christ." It will be seen from this and other correlated scriptures that the priesthood, the ministry, are the ones to whom God has committed the work of instruction and education. It follows, very clearly then, that the condition of the Church as a whole, depends very largely upon the efficiency and ability of the ministry. In view of the exceptionally adequate means which God has provided in the organization of a priesthood, which is calculated to meet every emergency and effect spiritual development; and above all else this ministry have placed at their disposal the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, is the Church, as a whole, producing the results that we ought reasonably to expect? It would be sheer affectation to express complacency or satisfaction with the conditions of the Church. I am not contrasting the Church with other churches. This is unfair and not a sufficient guide. Let us contrast our condition with the facilities, agencies, and "power" behind us and then ask the question, "If not as we ought to be, are we at least as we could be?" In many ways there is much to be desired, we are far below the standard we have voluntarily adopted. It appears (at least to me) that our chief weakness consists, generally speaking, in a lack of knowledge, an intelligent, definite conception of our responsibilities touching both duty and privilege which devolve upon us as citizens in the kingdom of God. It is not uncommon to find that converts are attracted by the clear exposition of the gospel principles and carried away by the novelty of this Gibraltar of religious controversy and upon this spasmodic wave of enthusiasm become identified with the Church. The proselyte is converted purely and simply to "doctrine," to "theory," to the "letter of the law"; but not in the highest and truest sense to Christ.

Possibly there is much risk in being so bold, but an impartial weighing of the facts and evidences, which, only too sorrowfully, we meet with too often, will show that this allegation is not groundless. There is a cause for this deplorable weakness. What is it? Our course of procedure, as a rule, is as follows: A missionary is sent to a certain locality, and with more or less success preaches on the usual topics with the result that a sufficient number are baptized to organize a branch, and shortly there is a branch organized. The brethren who are ordained and elected as branch officers have no practical idea of the duties devolving upon them and largely can but reëcho what they have heard. Sabbath after Sabbath the same spiritual diet is prepared and served up in the same way until the soul sickens and languishes; spiritual phthisis precedes mortification.

It is not fair to cast the responsibility altogether upon the branch offices, as it is impossible for them to dispense to others what they do not possess themselves. Generally, if not altogether, our local ministry is composed of men who have to pursue very diligently some laborious occupation which demands their time and energies, and consequently they are not fitted for systematic and continuous study. To answer the question without circumlocution: An inefficient ministry is the cause of much if not all our difficulty. The foregoing is not imagined to work up a theory, but is actual, sorrowful fact, based largely on personal experience. There is not the slightest intention to reflect upon the moral worth and integrity of our ministry at all. It is not a question of character at all, but is simply a question of efficiency. It is often urged that we believe that our ministry are called and chosen by God and consequently inspired more or less to perform the duties devolving upon them.

I am afraid we must hesitate to conscientiously assume the responsibility of such an unqualified affirmation. It is an unfortunate thing, but it would be unfair to ignore the fact, especially when it in itself has been prolific of much disappointment and mischievousness, that many have been selected—"chosen"—to the priesthood out of sympathy and desire to manifest regard or appreciation. Some feel it obligatory that if a good brother full of earnestness and zeal, who takes part in social service and generally shows his love for the work, to ordain that brother, and straightway he is ordained, not infrequently to the hurt of the brother and the Church. The selection in itself might not be so very injurious were it not for the fact that another mistake which could more easily be remedied is made, in that a brother is ordained to an office and left without any clear conception of what is required of him and he is left to "muddle through" as best he can.

It may be argued, "God will qualify; God will equip; God will fill the mouth if only the brother has faith to open it." Such unthinking allegations are simply puerile in the extreme, if not worse, for in fact it throws the responsibility of the many failures upon God. The two very essential features in ordination seem to have very little application in our real polity, namely, "Every elder, priest, teacher, or deacon is ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto him; and he is to be ordained by the Holy Ghost in the one ordaining." The individual is to be called "according to the gifts and callings of God unto him," that is, there must be an adaptability on the part of the one to be ordained, to the office to which it is proposed to ordain him; and secondly, that shall be made manifest by the Holy Ghost. These two very simple and very practical laws governing recommendations and ordinations would, if observed, save much disappointment and trouble. In this as in all else our safety lies in implicit and explicit obedience to God.

It is well known to the students of the Church polity the ministry is divided into the missionary section and the standing or local section; as a general rule the branches and districts are cared for and controlled largely by the standing or local ministry. In the big majority of cases the local brethren are not college graduates, nor retired gentlemen, but "hardy sons of toil" whose every moment is bespoken, and consequently, as before remarked, have very few opportunities for study. To me it appears to amount almost to injustice, to impose the responsibilities of priestly authority upon a man without giving him an adequate and intelligent idea of the duty expected, and yet hold him more or less responsible for the degeneracy or decline of either branch or district, or any portion of the work over which he may have control.

One of the most urgent needs, therefore, of our time, is the need of knowledge and intelligent conception of duty and prerogative which will insure to our local ministry an increase of spiritual power to a very large extent. This lack of adequacy is in itself traceable more or less to inefficiency on the part of the missionary force. (Let me reiterate: I am not fault-finding, nor attacking any individual, nor even speaking of men at all but of principle and method.) To illustrate: I will quote a case in point. This is from personal experience, not a case here and there, but very unfortunately to the embarrassment of many this is but too common. In holding meetings, say a priesthood or business meeting and in some of the business sessions of a conference, questions have been put repeatedly to different officials, necessitating the interpretation of some point of law, or polity, or may be of doctrine. Well, the answer being given, it has occurred that the rendering has been contrasted adversely with the rendering given at another time by another missionary, and that in its turn was contrasted with another rendering of the same point by another missionary, and sometimes in a lugubrious manner the interrogator asks, "Now, what are we to understand; what are we to do?" Of course, it is known that the matter can be referred to the Quorum of Twelve. But such a course is precarious and is bound to reflect to the hurt of somebody's reputation. Confidence is seriously lowered and the "power of the priesthood" is simply a name. Knowledge, it can not too strongly be insisted upon, is the true source of power. I have heard it said, and I confess I sympathize very much with the sentiment, that the Twelve and missionaries had better settle their disputes at home, meaning I presume, in their several quorum capacities.

Another feature of missionary work which gives occasion for serious thought, with a view to finding a remedy, is this: A missionary goes into the various branches and as a rule preaches a series of what is called gospel sermons and then moves on. The vital conditions of the branch are not treated nor even touched upon, unless it be in a casual and unofficial manner, sometimes more injurious than otherwise. Of course, we know that a missionary's business is not to unduly or unnecessarily interfere with branch or district concerns, provided always the branch and district officers are capable and willing to attend to and manage their own concerns, and even then the law touching these points distinctly provides for the missionary quorums exercising advisory and supervisory prerogatives and should be looked up to for counsel, advice, and direction, and the injunction, such advice, etc., should be respected when given. But, in the name of common sense how can these brethren respect the counsel and advice given when there is so much inconsistency and actual contradiction? If the missionaries as a whole do not have a unanimous conception and interpretation of doctrine, law, and polity, it would be worse than useless for the missionary to interfere in branch or district difficulties and simply result in making confusion more confounded.

As we contemplate the beautiful symmetry and perfect adjustment of part to and with part in this divine organization and then contrast the deficiency of the Church one must wonder and think it passing strange that such splendid means for perfect, harmonious work should be so little utilized and possibly little understood. The conclusion, which is inevitable, must be forced upon all who give the matter serious thought, that what we need to-day as the church of Christ, in order to adjust ourselves to the growing demands of the age, is an intelligent, yes, and educated, ministry equipped with the "power of God." In proportion as knowledge is increasing in that proportion will our "power be increased."

In a brief manner we have sketched some of the results of ignorance politically and socially and religiously. Exactly the same disaster overtook this Church from 1845 to 1852. The apostasy of Brigham Young et al never could have been possible had the ministry and members been educated in church law and polity as they should have been. They would have been immovable amid the storm, for, says Paul, consequent upon the edification or education the ministry were to impart, the result would be "that we henceforth be no more tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine and thoughts of men and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive." Again we see that knowledge is power.

Much superstition has arisen regarding what is so often called "inspiration" and very often it has been boasted of that we did not have an "educated" ministry. The boast may have been all right when education was at a premium, but I am not persuaded that ignorance is a qualification to-day to a representative of Christ, nor do I believe it ever was, or will be. While a collegiate curriculum is not necessary by any means to qualify as a servant of God, yet it is a fact of great significance that the servants of God who made progress and accomplished the most effectual work, "studied to show themselves approved of God," and commanded the children of God to grow in the "knowledge" and "grace of God." It is commonly reported that when God called Joseph Smith to his great work he was illiterate, so much so that he could only with great difficulty write his own name, but before he died, if I read the history correctly, he had a fair knowledge of history, countries, and even languages of several nations.

It appears that as a church we are beginning to realize the imperativeness of the demand for educated men of business and commerce and for years have heroically struggled to maintain Graceland College in order to fit and qualify our young men and women for successfully maintaining their part in the struggle of existence. Strange it does not seem to have occurred to us that education is equally, at least, as essential for a servant of God as for a servant of man or nation. I am positive God could accomplish more with a consecrated intelligence, inspired by the Spirit, than with inspired ignorance. May God bless Graceland in its effort to emancipate our people from mental darkness! Surely we know God can do much by his inspiration—he can make the untutored tongue of the illiterate mellifluous with burning eloquence. He also caused a “cuddy” to speak to the shame and confusion of willful and wayward Balaam. But none of us would feel flattered to be made simply into automatic machines or human phonographs. That is not God’s method of working as I understand it. How often do we read and quote: “The glory of God is intelligence!” The word “glory” means “character”—“the bloom of character.” If, then, the character of God is intelligence and he glories in it, how can we be like him or how can he glory in us if we glory in ignorance?

To-day, as never before, the times demand that the ministry “be always ready to give a reason for the hope that is in them.” Much, as never before, depends upon the efficiency with which we discharge our duty in meeting this demand. Yes, we plead for an educated ministry. Says one, “That would be an abandonment of our distinctive claim to have a ministry called of God ‘as was Aaron’ and qualified by the ‘inspiration of the Almighty.’” Not by any means. An educated ministry does not imply the selection of educated men only; but, that those who are called and ordained, especially those brethren who assume the responsibilities of a missionary career, give them a course of training, educate them; for instance, in church doctrine, law, and polity; also in history, grammar, logic, and elementary science; a general education in ordinary every-day concerns and specifically theological. By so doing, money, time, and labor would be saved, the interests of the Church more effectively conserved and much harmful disappointment would be averted.

By education is not meant the usual automatic training according to the stereotyped rules of the old-fashioned and practically useless regime, not simply a delving into the musty speculative vagaries which are advertised very often as “the classics.” Speaking of these notions and ideas Herbert Spencer says:

And this it is which determines the character of our education. Not what knowledge is of most real worth, is the consideration; but what will bring most applause, honor, respect,—what will most conduce to social position and influence—what will be most imposing. As, throughout life, not what we are, but what we shall be thought is the question; so in education, the question is, not the intrinsic value of knowledge, so much as its extrinsic effects on others. And this being our dominant idea, direct utility is scarcely more regarded by the barbarian when filing his teeth and staining his nails.

The education we are pleading for is an education having for its end not ornamentation nor a mere garnishing of ostentatious display, but, an education having for its one and only aim—increased utility (usefulness), insuring, under God’s blessing, increasing efficiency. The following language quoted from Spencer embodies the principle that must govern in this matter. We do not want a band of pedagogues, but a band of devoted men who can be looked up to as intelligent, capable, and above all, practical helpers to the laity:

The question which we contend is of such transcendent moment is, not whether such and such knowledge is of worth, but what is its relative worth? When they have named certain advantages which a given course of study has secured them, persons are apt to assume that they have justified themselves: quite forgetting that the adequateness of the advantages is the point to be judged. . . . And this being the great thing needful for us to learn, is, by consequence, the great thing which education has to teach. To prepare us for complete living is the function which education has to discharge; and the only rational mode of judging of an educational course is, to judge in what degree it discharges such function.

There is much I would like to say upon this point, but not intending to write an essay particularly on education, there is sufficient to prove what kind of instruction—education—we are urging that our representative’s shall receive. When we reflect upon the fact that the Church is estimated and valued in proportion as the individual who represents it is “worthy” of such regard and esteem, we realize the importance of the matter. It is a case of “with all thy getting, get wisdom.” Be not simply satisfied with knowing, but to properly and adequately apply that knowledge is the chief concern. I can see in this thought a mission our Graceland College can fill, a work which she can perform that will bind her to the affections of the Church in a manner that the odious appellations, as “white elephant,” “burden,” and “unceasing strain,” etc., etc., would be altogether inapposite and it would become indeed and in truth a veritable “school of prophets.” As the missionary force becomes more ably equipped in these important, vital matters and move out into various parts of the world, the influence of their efficiency would inoculate the entire body. Unanimity, confidence, harmony, love, and prosperity would abound under God’s blessing with this baptism of knowledge illumined by the inspiration of God. The financial benefit to the Church would accrue in more ways than insuring more proficient labor for money expended,—in tithing and consecration. Proper, authentic interpretations of the law could be ascertained and taught to the embryo missionary, so that accredited and official rendition of the law would take the place of individual opinion and uncertainty.

But that would destroy individuality and imply the abandoning of moral and individual agency. This is not so; we may just as well argue that to insist upon submission to any law of God is suicide of individuality. Salvation is the result of mortification, of suicide, the self-destruction of self and self-will and full surrender to God’s will. It is time that we systematize our work in a practical manner, if we wish to maintain our prestige and influence upon the morals and spiritual interests of the people; this would be a very practical method to produce the oneness of mind, "monism," in teaching and preaching the gospel of Christ.

Some of the branches and districts in the Church are too large to be controlled by the local brethren and it has been decided and very wisely, in my humble opinion, to place the interests of the branches and districts under the charge of competent missionaries. This is a growing need. To simply send out missionaries to proselyte, or, what is really more to the point, to advertise the work, and win converts only to lose them because of inefficiency in branch and district government, is bad management and worse economy. "To feed my sheep," "to feed my lambs," was the burden of Christ's mind and the duty he conferred upon his ministry. We shall be held responsible for the way we discharge this duty of "feeding." How often when they have cried for the "bread of life" the stone of contention, or some abstruse doctrine, or the dried-up, stereotyped arguments, or "first principles," have been dished up! If we have qualified men placed in charge of these districts and large branches who can devote their time to the care of the work and educate the local ministry in "priesthood meetings," "the last behest" of Christ could be more fully complied with.

Let us regard the work more earnestly, more devoutly, and more practically. I have seen some men act in this work just as I remember seeing children act when they "played at keeping school." We are not playing at church, but we are making a life's business of this matter and staking not only time but eternity on the issues. In the name of all we hold dear every nerve should be strained to "study" to show "ourselves approved of God." How do we win God's approval? By studying. "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me," etc., and "ye shall find rest to your souls." Strange but true science and experience echo and re-echo the veracity of Christ's inspiration, rest—harmony—perfect correspondence with our environment results because we "learn" from the "example" we have in Christ the lessons set before us. "Great peace have they that love thy law and nothing shall offend them." But how can they love what they have no acquaintance with?

In conclusion, then, the high road to power, to efficiency in the church of God, in the spiritual realm, is knowledge. Shall we spurn the facilities, the opportunities lying all around us? Shall we ignore the persistent demands and urgent need of our present time? God forbid. While we are weak and puny and have not as yet the capacity for comprehending all the mysteries of godliness, while our vision of some spiritual altitudes may be aberrated, yet the higher we aim, the more noble our purpose, the holier our aspirations, the more nearly and fully will be fulfilled the splendid possibilities of this life. In the language of Wolfgang Goethe, I close: "Man is not born to solve the mystery of existence; he must nevertheless attempt it in order to learn the limits of the knowable." J. W. RUSHTON.

HAMILTON, Scotland, February 22, 1904.

Selected Articles.

THE SCHOOLS AND RELIGION, AGAIN.

The discussion started several weeks ago by the Reverend W. Montague Geer's letter in the New York Sun on religious education and the public schools (see the Literary Digest, October 17) continues to arouse lively interest throughout the country. The San Francisco Monitor (Roman Catholic) devotes a leading article to Mr. Geer's "broadside," and declares that his plea for the revival of the denominational school indicates "the one remedy that suggests itself to sound reason and sober common sense." The New World (Chicago, Roman Catholic) says of the same document: "We do not know when we have read anything so trenchant, logical, and timely." The Sun finds itself deluged with letters on the subject, and remarks that they "are very interesting reading," and "come from men of intellectual acuteness and moral earnestness." The majority of the letters are from Roman Catholics, and represent many points of view. Father McMillan, director of Saint Paul's school, New York, writes expressing the hope that it will be possible in some way to overcome the legal barriers that now forbid the disbursement of state moneys to denominational schools. He says in part:

"The so-called 'prohibition of the constitution of New York' (article 9, section 4) has these words: 'Other than for examination and inspection'; and it is important to state that there is considerable scope for a legal argument on the exact meaning of this expression, which must be taken in conjunction with the discussion that led to their insertion. What was chiefly in the mind of the constitutional convention had for its objective point the prohibition of the use of public money for any form of religious or denominational teaching, and some of the delegates were surprised to find after they had voted on the matter that the choice of language was at least ambiguous, and might be twisted to mean something opposed to their convictions. It would seem that examination and inspection are clearly authorized by the constitution, even for schools 'wholly or in part under the control or direction of any religious denomination.' This examination must necessarily be limited to the secular studies required for intelligent citizenship.

"When the select committee appointed at the close of the last legislature, containing five Senators and seven members of the Assembly, is prepared to listen to suggestions for improving the educational laws of New York State, there will be an excellent opportunity to take up the question here suggested concerning the correct interpretation of article 9, section 4, of the constitution. Mr. Geer and his powerful friends in the Episcopal Church may discover that there is still a way to enlarge the public system of education without discouragement of the advocates of religious training. By removing legal barriers certain antagonisms may be obliterated which are now kept alive by unjust discriminations."

The Reverend John Talbot Smith, chaplain of the Convent of Mercy, New York, writes as follows:

"All theories and arguments aside, we Catholics have been deeply impressed with two incontrovertible facts: First, when the public-school system was Protestant, a quarter of a century back, Catholic pupils were Protestantized more or less by attending it; and, second, now that for ten years the public-school system has been made neutral or colorless, the children suffer from the prevailing indifferentism in religion. Indifferentism is an influence of the hour, affecting all departments of human activity. It may be called the current of the time, and the public-school system runs with the current, not by intention, but simply because all things run that way, and also by making no stand against the prevailing error. It seems the constitution of the State will not permit the system either to oppose religious error or to favor it. Therefore all true Christians must sooner or later remove their children from the public schools. The Catholics are leaving as fast as possible, and would leave in a body to-morrow had they the proper bank surplus. Perhaps the religious schools of the sects already educate a million children. In time this number will grow to far greater proportions. This exodus will then have created a situation with which the state, willy nilly, must deal. In spite of the theorists, and their speeches and arguments, when the state faces a condition and not a theory it must act. . . .

"The vital point is: How many American citizens want religious training for their children in the public schools? Let them stand up and be counted. My own opinion is that one third of our population are in favor of that proposition—that is, about twenty-five millions of believers would vote substantially to rescue a great system of public education from the control of indifferentism or agnosticism. If so many favor the proposition, if they can be organized to make their influence felt, then, all theories to the contrary, and in spite of all opposition from any source, the thing can be done. . . . The vital point for all parties, for the supporters of Mr. Geer, for his opponents, for educators, and for statesmen, is the number of those who desire religious training in the public schools, no matter what form the scheme might take—the separate school of Canada, payment by results, as in England, the adopting of church schools by the state. If one third of our population demand such a reform, and organize effectively to formulate their demand, nothing more need be said; the agnostic and the indifferent, the chronic objector and the would-be patriot, must take a back seat and be quiet while the practical statesman and the competent educator together arrange the details of the scheme."

On the other hand, a Brooklyn priest (vouched for as such editorially by the Sun) who signs himself "Fair Play," contributes a letter warning the American people against any change in the public-school system and attributing the zeal with which a change is advocated to a desire for Roman Catholic domination. He says:

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating. The Catholics of the United States to-day do not begin to average as well in education or morals as do the Protestants and nonreligionists. Visit our prisons and see the great preponderance of Catholic criminals—ninety per cent at least, though if the ratio to population were carried out there would be only about fourteen per cent. That proves that the much-lauded religious training of the Catholics is no good. It does not teach men moral responsibility. It does not lessen crime and criminal tendencies as Protestantism does.

"Then, all this teaching of the superhuman power of the priest is not fit for the twentieth century. Spain is on the verge of a revolution from it. This school question is one of rule and politics of that Church. It belongs to the parents to decide what they want for their children, and not for the priest to intrude himself into the home and order what this or that child shall be taught. That's the parent's business."

Similarly, Jeremiah Quinn, president of the Milwaukee school board and a prominent Roman Catholic, declared recently, in an address before the Milwaukee Teachers' Association, that he could not understand how Cardinal Gibbons could pronounce the public schools "vicious." We quote his remarks:

"Cardinal Gibbons, in an interview broadly published in the press, pronounces the American public schools vicious. How any man can assert that our public schools, directed and controlled and conducted by a body of Christian men and women of unstained character and high moral standing, are vicious is incomprehensible. If the public schools, because of being secular, are vicious, then must our whole theory of government, being secular, be vicious also?

"I very much regret this attack upon the one institution on which, in the minds of all Americans, the future welfare of the republic rests. What would our vast heterogeneous nation be without our public schools? It would be a nation of sectarianism, in acrimonious conflict, each sect fighting for a share of the school tax. Every true American will forever oppose such a movement."

One correspondent of the Sun writes: "I have a wholesome regard for all religious creeds, but if they undertake to demolish the public-school system, by the Eternal, I will take down the old musket and fight as long as there is breath within me." Dr. Buckley, the editor of the Christian Advocate (New York, Methodist Episcopal) is not ready to recommend such violent methods as this, but he says:

"It might as well be understood by the Roman Catholic Church that, if it really raises this issue, the Protestant churches of this country will ally themselves at the polls with Jews and with agnostics—that is, with all classes opposed to denominationalizing the public schools or appropriating public money to the support of denominational schools.

"Conservative men who have never joined in indiscriminating hue and cry against the Catholic Church would contend to the last at the polls and elsewhere to preserve the public schools intact. Politicians who care for the integrity of their parties will do well not to mingle in this discussion, for if the public schools are disturbed a wave which will remand them to obscurity will certainly rise."—The Literary Digest, November 7, 1903.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Select Reading for Daughters of Zion Locals for May.

THE BOY PROBLEM.

The Union of Liberal Sunday-schools, Chicago, met at Hull House, November 10, and listened to an earnest, thoughtful address by Mrs. Lamoreux on the "Boy problem." Mrs. Lamoreux, is superintendent of the primary and junior departments of the Sunday-school Association of Illinois, and speaks from long experience. She confined her attention almost entirely to a consideration of that storm and stress period of adolescence when the boy is a stranger to himself as well as to others with the new experiences, temptations, and inexplicable emotions which assail him at this time. It is this period which usually decides whether the boy is to grow to a strong manhood or to be a wreck of humanity. It is a crisis when he needs the most loving care in the home and thoughtful solicitude of the church. But neither church nor home have solved this problem, being either ignorant or indifferent concerning this critical period. The speaker told the story of two children, a boy and a girl, the girl sick with some dangerous contagious disease, the mother wringing her hands, moaning, "How shall I go through it?" But there was never a word of anxiety concerning the boy, who was on the verge of a far more dangerous crisis. From the ages of fifteen to eighteen is the time when the church usually loses the children. Certain statistics were recently gathered from forty Sunday-schools showing that in three years eighty-five per cent of the children had slipped away from the Sunday-school, and when once away they are rarely gotten hold of again.

Walking through the slums of New York, two serious investigators, one a pastor, asked, of course after tactful introduction, each of the evil-looking people they met if they had ever had Sunday-school advantages, and found that not one but at one time or another had had such influences. Many had sat in the minister's congregation, but, as he expressed, had not been reached during this important crisis. Why is this such a crisis? 1. Because upon entering the teens the boy receives what was contributed by his line a long way back. The teacher needs to know what his inheritance is. 2. Habits now become finally fixed. 3. It is a time of new birth. So great are the mental and physical changes that it seems as if he really were born anew; had come into the world a second time. 4. This is a time when he is most easily influenced under the stress of the changes he is undergoing.

Though the worker with little children can never safely say, "Just this once," an impression being made for all eternity, still young children are not so susceptible to influences as are those children of fifteen, sixteen, and seventeen. At this time when conditions come up which the boy has never known before he needs more than ever, not a teacher, but a mother, friends, a close personal friend.

Just when he is thus confronted with new temptations, the normal boy has a great hunger for books. From the age of eight to fifteen, he will have reading matter. Then the hunger subsides. The speaker told of a boy of fifteen who told her he had decided to read through the Detroit public library. If the boy at this time is not furnished with good reading-matter he will supply himself with what he can get. Alas, for that man who said that at twelve he was given a book which he would give all he had to be able to forget. This is the teacher's opportunity to circulate good magazines and papers. God calls us to grip the whole of the life of the boy and hold on till he is through this crisis.

There is now also a rapid growth on the social side. This constitutes the real problem. The saloon appeals to him and every amusement appeals to him. A pastor passed a confectionery store crowded to the door with boys, smoking and interchanging funny(?) stories, till ten or eleven at night. He censured the proprietor, who turned on him, "Where, then, will they go? There is no church open." The pastor went home determined that there should be some place open, and a boy's club was organized, which met once a week and met the boys on the social side.

There is, Mrs. Lamoreux said, no shyer, wilder thing than the heart of a boy of fourteen. For reaching him nothing is better than camping out. The teacher to reach them must be willing, like Paul, to become all things to all men, and to have won them before they reach the crisis whose peaks are ages of sixteen and seventeen. Happy the mother who, if her boy's heart shuts up, is shut up inside. Remarking the unusually close relation between a father and his little son of three or four, he replied, that he was working to keep the child close to himself, so that "when he needs a father as he never has before, I will be there." A surgeon, he often took his boy on his long drives of perhaps fifteen miles, working in every way "to keep his life one with mine."

Nothing is more searching than the measuring-rod of the boy or girl in their teens. They are very critical of their teacher's statements and attitude, seeking, as they are, their first appreciation of an absolute standard of right and wrong. Psychologists say that the influence of what we say as to what we do is as fifteen to seventy-five. If they do not ring together, if found wanting, the influence is for ever gone.

This is the period, especially with girls, for self-examination—they pick themselves, as well as others to pieces. They are restless; want to leave school. If they can be held over for one or two years they will settle down.

The social and altruistic spirit is born now, and there is a great spiritual hunger—a reaching out toward love. This drops at sixteen, but is up again at eighteen. If the questions of the acceptance of Christ, of relations to God, are not settled in those years, the chances are overwhelmingly against the impulse being again put forward. God put into the heart this hunger for himself. Our part is to seek to follow the command, "Feed my lambs." The most pressing question of our time is, "Is the young man Absolom safe?"

In discussion the question was asked if in Sunday-schools it was safe to mix the sexes. The reply was, that during this period the sexes were mutually repellant, and psychology shows that they ought to be separated for many reasons.

What about lesson helps? was another query. Pencil and paper and outside work assigned along the lines they are interested in, would do in most cases, was the answer. This outside work need not occupy more than ten minutes.

Miss Wilcox, a high-school teacher of long experience, did not agree that boys were very shy during the adolescent period. She thought that they were the frankest, most open things on earth, much depending, of course, on the personality of the teacher. The subject, she said, was worth exactly the personality of the teacher. The teacher must be of the kind to win and deserve their confidence. She thought that a good boy had a tremendous influence. Good was more powerful than evil. This in reply to a statement that even one bad boy was a dangerous companion. Boys were more emotional than girls, more easily reached through the emotional side, through an appeal to sentiment. Sunday-school, like all education, is to fit the child to get along in the world with his fellow men—to help others. The schools must become social centers.

Judge Russell said above all things boys hated pretense. They are master hands at finding out humbug, or affectation. They begin to reason as soon as they are able to judge and inquire. If you wish to recommend religion to boys the first thing to be done is to be honest. If they offer objections to a maxim or doctrine, meet them squarely. If you can not answer say so. They will have more confidence in you and what you believe even if you are unable to answer. That is an argument of no mean force, if some one whom they respect believes in it. It is already recommended. He emphasized the importance of parental authority. Up to a certain time children must be told to do this and that. Europe is ahead of us in teaching children in the home. Apropos of the foregoing address and the discussion evoked by this important question, the following incident recently called to the editor's attention serves to point a moral. The papers of Chicago have been giving much space of late to the arrest of the notorious car-barn murderers, who, for selfish gratification of low pleasures, have been guilty of many robberies and murders. These ruthless, brutal criminals were young men of humble but respectable parentage. Some people have attributed their tendency to criminal life to the influence of dime novels and yellow literature in general. Other thoughtful observers see in their record but a reflection of one too self-evident phase of modern life illustrated in the method of illegitimate corporations, as in the lawless strikes. The desire to get rich quickly, no matter at what expense to others. A complete forgetting of the rule to love your brother as yourself.

Characteristic of this spirit seen in many of our short-sighted citizens and parents is this incident. A lady in one of Chicago's residential quarters was held up by three children of excellent families, the oldest not more than five years old. A four-year-old grasped her knees and so overpowered her with surprise that the two others were enabled to seize her handkerchief and run away with it. To be sure, they soon dropped it, showing they had given her the fright and pain partly out of a spirit of adventure rather than cupidity, but they immediately attacked two other passing ladies in the same way. The point we wish to make is, that one of the fathers did not visit on his child a severe punishment that would have forever cleared his mind of the romantic glamor attached to highway robbery. He laughed at the trick as an evidence of smartness on the child's part. Laughed at the little child's imitation of one of the wickedest crimes of modern times!

Far more wise, though perhaps too severe, was a mother of some years ago. Her three-year-old playing in a neighbor's yard found a useless empty tin can and carried it away. But the can was not his and the mother determined once for all to make clear in the little one's mind the distinction between meum and teum, my things and thy things. She made the child walk back to the house and place the can where he found it, flicking all the time the little bare legs with a slender switch. The sister some years older, was highly angry at her mother at the time, but with mature years she tells that her mother knew best, and the lesson to the boy was an invaluable one. A principle was at stake, and the wise mother estimated the offense by not the value of the article taken, but by the fact of its being taken from some one to whom it belonged.

Which parent will rear the children that will best safeguard the eternal interests of our country?

Dear Readers of the Home Column: I will try again to write a little, use my one talent, "as it were." I do so much enjoy reading the letters from the sisters, that I will try to help, if only a mite. I thought as I sketched a little here and there in Conference notes perhaps the Home Column will be crowded out, but when I came to it, I found such a rare treat there that I felt I must add my mite to its helpful hints to the young mothers.

Not many years ago I had a dear little family gathered in my home. I felt when I read the "evening musings" that the sister who wrote must love children; and I would say to mothers who have all their dear children in the home nest: Enjoy them while you can. It may seem like a distant time when they will leave the home and go for themselves, but the time will seem very short when you look backward.

I love children and I want to see them enjoy all they can while it is in their reach to enjoy without care. I know their little sorrows are as hard for them as greater ones are for us older children.

Do not scold the children. Be firm with them, but I beg of you do not scold and threaten. Make them to understand while young that your commands are to be obeyed; then be careful how and when you command. For their good teach them obedience; then it will be easy in after-life for them to obey the laws of God and man.

April 18, 1904.

Yours in the faith,
SISTER MINERVA HISCOCK.

Letter Department.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, April 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: As I have not seen a letter from this part of God's heritage for some time I will say that we are still in the race, and still contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints. While we as a branch are not making the progress I would like to see, I am glad to know we have many noble Saints here who are doing what they can to move the good work along. At the same time there are some who seem to be rather cold and sleepy, but after all we are thankful that our condition is as well as it is.

We have not gained many the last year by baptism but our numbers have increased several by letter. By the help of Him who rules on high we intend to do more the present conference year than ever before. It is now almost warm enough to begin tent-work and as we have a good tent we expect to make good use of it the coming season. It is the earnest desire of the writer to see all of the honest in heart brought to the light and the knowledge of the truth, for if there ever was a time when the children of men needed the truth it certainly is now, for I am brought face to face with the fact every day that honest-hearted men are groping in darkness on account of so many isms that are being taught by the hirelings of the sectarian world. I find when men begin to read for themselves they read themselves out of the so-called church to which they belong and when this is the case and the true gospel is presented to them, they can readily see the grand truths that stand out so prominently in God's revelation to man. This being the case it should be the earnest desire of every one of God's servants to see the good work move along.

I want to do all I can to spread the soul reviving news and thereby help build up Zion. There is no time to lose; the hastening time is here. God will cut his work short. We are told in God's word that the generation when the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled shall not pass away till all be fulfilled. (See Luke 21: 32, Inspired Translation.) We can all do a little and if we do that little well the reward is such, for the Lord is not slack concerning his promises. I have the testimony and know that this work in which we are engaged is of God. So let us all live so that we may have a greater testimony and be able to come forth in the first resurrection.

Yours in the one hope,

J. W. QUINLY.

GRANT CENTER, Iowa, April 26, 1904.

Dear Herald: I feel impressed to write a few words in behalf of Graceland College. I felt so sad when I read in the last HERALD it was to be closed in June unless the debt was paid. I could not keep back the tears when I was thinking about it, and how I wished I was able to help! I believe every Saint is interested in the College, and wants to see the debt paid, so let me urge each one to help all he can to lift the debt. I do not know at this writing how I am going to help, but I know my earnest desire is to see the debt paid, and to help pay it, so I believe the way will be opened, if I make the effort, which I am determined to do, so I can help with my mite.

Hoping and praying that Graceland will be free from debt,

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. MOLLIE LUKECART.

PLYMOUTH, Massachusetts, April 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: Our business as delegates to General Conference ended on motion to adjourn Sunday, April 17, we, the Massachusetts delegation, decided to move out towards our fields of labor—and home—by boarding the first train going east. We had the three miles between us and the Willoughby depot to pass over. The conveyance used for this purpose I failed to find a name for, but I will say that I would rather risk the dangers of crossing the Atlantic, than put in forty minutes again, sitting upon the side of the —, with no support for the back, no purchase for the feet or hands but the umbrella I held in my hand, and the road so very uneven that we would keel over like a cat-boat in a "thirty knot blow." Like the boy passing through the churchyard at night and whistling to keep up his courage; we started to sing to divert our mind from the perils of the hour. Perhaps this sensation was not felt by all, but there was a sigh of relief almost unanimous when we stood on terra firma. "The trolley-car" is all right.

We arrived at the depot about fifteen minutes past ten at night, and the train was due twenty-five minutes to four in the morning. So we had about five hours to wait in the little waiting-room before we could move out towards Buffalo. The time to midnight was spent in singing, with a few trying to snatch a few minutes sleep, but without much success. After the midnight hour had passed, "Ada" suggested games. This found a ready response and in a few minutes all was animation. The station agent was very kind and agreeable and certainly kept the place warm for us.

The train was a little late and without a sleeper, but after settling down we managed to get an hour's sleep. A refreshing ablution patched us up for the day, for we were in for the mighty Niagara Falls. The sun shone out in splendor and warmed the air so that everything was pleasant, and tell me who would not feel happy among the family of God when in company with good, happy Latter Day Saints.

I will not try to portray the grandeur of the Falls. This has been attempted too many times with more or less success and "the half has never been told." There is an immense body of water passing over at this time of the year, because of the melting snow and ice. There had been quite a snow-storm at Niagara, several inches still on the ground. Considerable ice was under the falls, giving it quite a wintry aspect.

As we crossed the bridge into Canada, we found quite an army of men drilling and blasting out the rocks, to make a bed for a gigantic waterway into which they were placing an immense steel pipe, eighteen feet in diameter, which is to convey the water from the rapids to some immense plant one and three fourths miles distant. I did not learn what the plant was to be, only as I over heard some one say it was an electric plant, but I will not vouch for its truth.

As we stood on the Canadian side, at the head of the great Horseshoe Falls and heard its deafening roar, and felt the rocks vibrate under our feet, we feel how insignificant an atom is man when compared with the mighty works of God in nature. Our mind turned to the time of the crucifixion of the Christ and the terrible groanings of Mother Earth, her convulsions, in the rending of her mighty rocks, the turning of rivers from their courses and the changing of the earth's surface at that time—might not this mighty roar of waters have been caused at that time? "And behold the rocks were rent in twain; they were broken up upon the face of the whole earth, insomuch that they were found in broken fragments and in seams and in cracks upon all the face of the land."—Book of Nephi, chapter 4.

We would fain tarry here, but space forbids. We pass along and leave the reader to picture the rest in his mind with these faint suggestions of the grandeur of the one-day visit to Niagara. Some of us visited the great shreaded wheat plant,—the finest and most complete of its kind in the world. Two years ago, when we visited this wonderful plant, Bro. Winning, of St. Joseph, was there and showed us round, explaining in detail its workings after which we partook of the finest of wheat at his home served up in a very tempting and palatable manner.

We returned to Buffalo in the evening, tired, but more than repaid for our trip and day's experience. We had just time to speak with Bro. Joseph Luff as we spied him at the window of the car heading for Toronto on his trip to visit his mother,—a pleasant surprise to meet him.

We left Buffalo about twenty-five minutes to eight in the evening, for Boston. After singing a few songs of Zion, to the apparent enjoyment of the others on the car, we retired to our sleeping bunk and slept as soundly as though we were safely in our bed at home. Our train was nearly three hours late when arriving at Boston. We parted with Sr. Ada Sanford, Georgie Goff, and Bro. G. H. Smith, at Gardiner, Massachusetts, about one hour from Boston, they having to change for Providence, Rhode Island.

April 19 being Lexington day, we found Massachusetts in her attire of bunting, etc. Smiling faces were at the depot to meet us although somewhat weary of waiting.

I spent two days at home, then off to the old historic Plymouth called to baptize two promising young men, Bro. N. R. Nickerson also baptizing two of his sons. It was certainly an impressive sight to see these four promising young soldiers enlisting in the Lord's army. The waves of the old Atlantic gently bade them welcome as we laid them beneath the waves. May the Father make them strong for good!

On Tuesday evening, by arrangement, I met, at his home, Mr. J. H. Holmes, station agent at Halifax, also Mr. Hower and wife, he being station agent at Plympton, to discuss matters pertaining to the great latter-day work. A Mr. Glass also came in who has attended our meetings and reunion at Silver Lake. It was certainly a profitable time and another meeting was arranged for to-morrow, Friday, evening. Mr. and Mrs. Helmes will be baptized in the near future, they expressing themselves as satisfied, after near four years investigation that the angel message is true. Others will follow.

The outlook for the work in Massachusetts this year is certainly promising. O that we had more men to meet the demands! This is now the most discouraging feature here. We have but three missionaries for nearly three millions of people, and much of our time has to be put in among the branches of the Church. We have promising young men coming to the front, if they will only push out and not become too much engrossed in temporal matters. We need presiding ability coming to the front, but not to be taken away from us just as soon as these qualifications develop in them, as they have been taken from us in the past. I sincerely hope this matter will be more seriously considered and as shepherds develop among us leave them to preside over the flocks. Let eternal vigilance and a willingness to sacrifice be our watchword from now on until the Master appears. Work while the day lasts. Bro. and Sr. Hemmerly are attending to my needs while here. May the Father reward them for their cheerful service to his servants.

Your brother in the work of the Master,

R. BULLARD.

FREEDOM, Oklahoma, April 25, 1904.

Editor Herald: My labor in Texas was ended for the year on the 17th of January. My personal acquaintance and association with the Saints there will ever be remembered. I labored for the good of all and the harm of none. I held meetings at San Antonio, Pipe Creek, Bandera, Senior, Florisville, Verda, Tuff, Horse Valley, and in a district on Sabinal River called Bug-scuffle. The reception in the latter place was cool indeed. This neighborhood was a Baptist stronghold. Necessity, at this place, compelled me to remain in the schoolhouse over night, which I did with good grace. While at Pipe Creek the foolhardy boys of the neighborhood cut the district buggy harness and almost caused a serious accident to ourselves.

I was associated the last month there with Bro. J. F. Grimes and while at San Antonio we had a brush with two Utah elders, who labored to prove we were practically the same church, only differing in a few minor things such as the authority. We urged them to show when, where, and by whom B. Young was ordained to lead the Church. They were valiant in testimony, but we showed their testimony were of little worth when they by their actions as a church was at variance with the teachings of the prophet they were testifying of. Said they had not practiced polygamy for twenty years. Then at this admission we showed from the Utah Doctrine and Covenants on the polygamy revelation (?) they were damned if they did not so practice. They admitted they were not living their law (not God's) when they were not practicing the law they claim was revealed. They said Joseph Smith originated polygamy, but as usual the proof which is so important was lacking. They claimed Joseph F. and John Smith of Utah were half brothers. How strange at this late date such a claim should be made, contrary to the sworn statements of their leaders! I certainly feel gratified to see them forced into a public acknowledgment of their persistent violation of law, and where they stand as a people.

With Bro. Hubert Case we commenced a meeting at Grow, Oklahoma, February 28. We had a fine hearing throughout. The Baptist people of the neighborhood seeing our success determined to break up our meetings. They started singing parties as they called them to attract the people from our services, and each night for over a week they used their utmost to keep the people from hearing. They succeeded in attracting an element I think would have been of no benefit to our service. Nor do I think they would have been benefited by the gospel.

We gained the good will of the best citizens of the community. At this they were more determined than ever to break our influence. Slanderous lies and all kind of foolish and crooked stories were told by them over the neighborhood.

The affair came to a climax Sunday, March 13, when the neighborhood, including the Baptists, met for Sunday-school. We had previously announced the Tuesday before to continue throughout the week and on Sunday at eleven o'clock in the forenoon and also in the evening, and this was so understood by larger portion of the neighborhood. After the Sunday-school the Baptist people concluded (having made it up before) to have a singing. Their leader and singers lined up on the platform and commenced to occupy on our time. After singing several songs I arose and asked the leader how long they intended to sing. He insultingly told me until they got tired. I made a short speech to the audience claiming the hour by previous announcement and this they did not deny. I was insultingly ordered to sit down by a Baptist constable who was also a Baptist deacon and who brandished a stick of stove wood, and some said one hand was on a revolver in his hip pocket. Not knowing he was an officer, I was not to be bluffed by his insulting remarks, so I held the floor. At this time a Baptist preacher by the name of Wyman arose and informed me he was an officer (a justice of the peace) and he came there expecting trouble and if I would not sit down he would have to arrest me. Well, I did so under protest. At this juncture another Baptist requested the ladies to leave the house and they would fight it out to a finish. How Christ-like!

Their singing progressed for about thirty minutes when Bro. Case commenced taking names and noticing this they hastily concluded the singing, and filed out in regular order, feeling elated they had done a good work, leaving us a remaining audience of about fifty that we preached to with good effect. The night service we were greeted with about seventy-five people who were orderly and respectful.

This service concluded our meetings in the neighborhood for the time, having occupied over three Sundays. During our absence in the neighborhood accusation was made by the Baptists against certain parties in the neighborhood who were our friends, claiming they said if we were kept out of the schoolhouse in the future (which the Baptists were trying to do), they would burn it. This was done by the Baptists to injure the reputation of our friends. Failing to settle the affair with any satisfaction our friends without our consent or knowledge swore out a warrant for the arrest of ten of the parties who were concerned in disturbing our meeting of a few days previous. Bro. Case and I arrived the day the arrests were made. Seeing our presence in the neighborhood the Baptists in retaliation arrested me on the charge of disturbing their singing. The case was dropped against the ten parties arrested by the justice of the peace, who was a Baptist sympathizer, because of a slight error occurring in the sworn charges against them, and they were turned loose. I carried my case to the district court to convene in October next. Whether it will ever come to trial I am unable to say. One thing is certain: if it ever does and I get justice I have no fears. My opinion now is, it will be compromised before that time. I am convinced more than ever of the corrupt state of politics, and to get justice in the courts a long pocketbook is necessary. Ere long in that community we expect to baptize some of the best citizens, who to all indications are very near the kingdom.

Bro. Case and I came into this neighborhood about two weeks ago. Elder Baugher, a Church of Christ man, who had been holding a series of meetings in the neighborhood, had challenged our people to a public debate. Being informed of it we arrived in the neighborhood about two weeks afterwards; but finding the man gone and some of his people thinking we were afraid to meet the issue, Bro. Case accepted his challenge and last Monday, the 18th, the battle commenced in earnest.

Necessity compelled us to enter the debate without delay. This debate is notable in several ways. The names "Joe Smith," "Mormon," etc., were never mentioned throughout. Bro. Case signed with him for eight sessions, four on each church proposition and the Bible (King James' translation) the standard of evidence, and no evidence outside of that to be introduced. The usual slush and ridicule were thus avoided.

Bro. Case in maintaining our proposition made clear cut arguments to the point, with proof back of each argument and thus solidly and truthfully was laid a foundation which never was torn down, nor could it possibly be, for that foundation was backed up by the impregnable word of God.

Reverend Baugher, in maintaining his proposition, soon showed the people that assertions were not proof. A comparison of his church to the New Testament revealed many things out of harmony, lacking in many of the general characteristics of the pattern. The more he labored to show harmony the more apparent to the people was the fact that his church was not that church which Christ established. His arguments to show a limitation of the Holy Spirit's power to New Testament times were groundless of proof. His reasoning to show the power was anciently given to establish the church and that only lacked one essential feature, and that was the proof to sustain it. He denied present revelation, authority, laying on of hands, the pattern in organization, complete apostasy, or a restoration in latter days. He lost valuable time over several arguments and passages of scripture.

He took the absurd position that there were anciently two Holy Ghosts. He claimed in preaching he was prophecying, but it was shown even if his conclusions were true he must be a false prophet, for he preached false doctrine.

In his closing speech he unthinkingly committed himself by saying, "Bro. Sommers," the editor of the Review, an organ of the nonprogressive wing of the Campbellite Church, had proven and could prove to Bro. Case that laying on of hands had been done away. Also quoted others who could do so, virtually admitting he had failed to do so before the people. His brethren realized very keenly his total defeat. I am confident they have learned a lesson they never will forget. With few exceptions the debate passed off good naturedly, and a hearty handshake was had between speakers, chairman, and moderators. The people of the neighborhood are now reading their Bibles as never before. We are hopeful of good results in the near future. Some are very near the kingdom.

The work is onward here, and we are very hopeful of good results in Oklahoma. Many opportunities are opening for the work. May God speed the work, and may we do our very best.

Your brother,

S. S. SMITH.

KEYSTONE, Iowa, April 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am here at Keystone, the place where I was eighteen years ago before I went to California, seeing friends and trying to get the addresses of their friends and relatives in Germany. My friends secured the schoolhouse for me and I commenced meetings there last night. Between fifty and sixty came out to listen. Shall continue the meeting for some time, or as long as the people will come out to hear.

In gospel bonds,

C. C. JOEHNK.

WEYBURN, Assinaboia, April 22, 1904.

Dear Herald: I take pleasure in reporting the success of the meetings Bro. Alvin Knisley is holding in our neighborhood. There were four baptisms April 17, and the confirmation was splendid. There are to be more soon; good interest, and deep investigations of the work. Those who were baptized were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church; had been Catholics once, but had always tried to find the light, and now, they said before being baptized, they were sure none other than the Latter Day Saints were right. This makes myself and family rejoice and stronger in the faith, as it is another fulfillment of a vision given us before leaving our old home six miles east of Pleasanton, Iowa. We do feel grateful to our heavenly Father for the success of gathering a few into his kingdom. Our desire is that we may be better instruments in God's hands and help more to see the light in the near future.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

W. C. TOOVEY.

ALEDO, Illinois, April 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: After a somewhat prolonged silence, I will attempt what I consider to be a duty of every General Conference appointee, that is to occasionally give an account of himself.

As to my labor in Pittsburg, from personal knowledge I could not speak with certainty. From statement made to me by resident Saints, there was an increased attendance, the scattered condition of the Saints makes it too irksome and too expensive for them to be present at all services. However, my opinion has been and still is that the discontinuing of any service would be hurtful to our work in that city. Eternity may reveal the good, if any was accomplished by me, and I have no compunction of conscience as to the decision.

In seeking to send out by mail some ten thousand tracts, I became considerably anxious, and perhaps a little discouraged, but relief came to my troubled soul after fasting and prayer, and the voice of the Spirit unto me was: "Your work is acceptable, abide faithful, and continue your labors." With renewed zeal I pushed my work to a happy and satisfactory culmination.

In no former experience have I found kinder, more genial or liberal associates in gospel work, and the handsome, useful token of respect will keep those names long green upon the wall of memory. I return thanks for that and many other evidences of your friendship to the lonesome Western gospel messenger. Have no idea that I filled the anticipation or wish of all, nevertheless with confidence in God and his law I freely spake unto one and all the word of truth.

A pleasant release from the cramped city life and monotony of sameness came to me in a trip to Kirtland on church work under appointment of missionary in charge, F. M. Sheehy, and while there went to the Kirtland District conference, taking part in the labors of the same. At the social meeting on Sunday an aged man asked permission to speak, said he was well acquainted with the early leading men of the Church. One of his statements was as follows: "Your race-horses are on the right track; you have been to headquarters for your light." These words were so odd that I at once jotted them down. May we as a church always be able to go direct to headquarters for our spiritual light and guidance.

In the latter part of November I went to Ritchie County, West Virginia, to fulfill a contract for a public discussion signed by Bro. G. H. Godbey and Mr. Ira C. Moore. The debate was educational and without rancor.

During February I made two visits up the Monongahela valley, which is the greatest manufacturing district I was ever permitted to visit. I called upon the Saints in company with Bro. Robert Perrie at Fayette City, Naomi, Spears, Monongahela City, and Monessen, and on the last day of the conference year I was permitted to baptize one, so if my year's work is to be estimated by the number that I took into the water, I was not a very successful workman. In fact the only thing that seemed large to me in my annual report, was my expense account.

Made a visit up the Allegheny, and Kiskiminitas Rivers. The scenery was quite interesting, and the administration to Sr. Uncafer was blessed of the Lord.

High water in the Ohio River the first of March cut short the attendance at our district conference, at Wheeling, West Virginia, and the only thing out of the usual was the baptism of a man in the cellar of Bro. J. F. A. Smith's house, by J. A. Becker. I continued the meetings for ten days with fair interest, all things considered.

Have taken a deep interest in the investigation of the Smoot case, and I have concluded that the seat in the United States Senate is a mere pretence, and I am of the opinion that the animus back of this investigation is to strike, if possible, a death blow at the restored gospel by angel ministration, and the divine origin of the Book of Mormon, and while I have no disposition to condone the wrongs of Utahism, neither can I perceive immediate helpfulness to our cause by reason of the success of the anti-Smoot people. We can not build acceptably upon the mistakes, errors, and false teachings of others. Our work, to meet the approval of God and good people, must be a clean-cut presentation of the saving principles of salvation as taught by the Master and his ministry of ancient times.

For some time prior to the meeting of the late General Conference, there rested upon me a weight and depression that did not to me augur a spiritual endowment such as some anticipated. I willingly and cheerfully tried to bear and perform my humble portion, and will patiently abide with full confidence that time, the healer of many a heartache, will demonstrate the utility and wisdom of that which was done.

The changeableness of the weather at Kirtland was unpleasant and the cause of contracting severe colds by a number of the Saints; the undersigned is still suffering severely. Many were present at Kirtland in fulfillment of a longing to see and worship in the only temple of this age, that God directed his people to build. Without doubt this building is unique, but on account of its location and size is not suitable for the annual conferences of the Reorganization.

While at Kirtland I met Elders Joseph H. Lake, and Leonidas Fisher, of the Utah Church. These men were about twenty years of age. To my astonishment they affirmed with vim and zeal that the so-called revelation of July 12, 1843, was printed in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in 1843. I informed them that it was never printed in any edition of the Doctrine and Covenants until 1876. They frankly and with considerable warmth told me that they did not believe my statement, and when I informed them that it never was in print prior to August, 1852, they actually hooted at the truth.

It seems to me a shame for the Utah Church to send out as missionaries, young men—mere children—so devoid of knowledge of the facts of their own history, and also to put them under ban not to exchange thought with us in public investigation. Honest men can not always be kept in ignorance and submit to a prohibition for a research after truth and fact. Whenever this Church shall attempt to put shackles upon my mental aspirations, they can then dispense with my service. For one I believe that it would be advantageous and profitable to supply our missionaries, and especially the young men, the means of acquiring knowledge. Surely none should be more intelligent than the standard-bearers of Christ the Light of the world.

For several reasons I prefer doing missionary work in the West, but will cheerfully do my best for the cause of peace among men in my field appointed for the ensuing conference year, and hope for a united effort and results that shall meet with the approval of our heavenly Father.

In bonds,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

WATERFORD, Ontario, April 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: Several weeks ago your writer arrived in this town in the pursuit of usual missionary duties. In the publication of handbills we made mention that in the course of "illustrated lectures over four hundred square feet of paintings, diagrams, and charts" would be used. I am pleased to report that interest has steadily increased until our large edifice is comfortably filled each evening. Everything bids fair to an ingathering. Unfortunately we are obliged to leave in the midst of the boom. We trust, however, that those who may be appointed to this part of the vineyard may not overlook Waterford.

In bonds,

D. MACGREGOR.

Miscellaneous Department.

Pastoral.

To the Officers and Saints of the Northwestern Mission (Oregon, Washington, British Columbia, and the Pan Handle of Idaho); Greeting: Having been reappointed in charge of the above-named mission, I herewith request the ministers in said mission to labor in the following places:

Brn. T. W. and F. J. Chatburn and George Winegar in the Spokane District, T. W. Chatburn in charge. Brn. O. B. Thomas, T. J. Bell, James C. Carlisle in the Seattle and British Columbia District, Brn. Bell and Carlisle to operate a tent in British Columbia as soon as the weather is favorable. Brn. H. L. Holt and E. E. Keeler to operate a tent in Western Oregon District. Brn. J. C. Crabbe and E. F. Mengel in Eastern Oregon District, the former having Portland as objective point.

The ministry are urged to be prompt in reporting quarterly. Mission address after July 1, will be Box 23, Castle Rock, Washington.

We desire to call the special attention of the Saints to the fact that we have four Bishop's agents in the mission. Hence we trust that all will remember the command of God to pay their tithes and offerings. Money will be necessary to prosecute the work successfully. Let us all try and be faithful to the trust committed to our care, and good results will follow as a sequence of our united efforts. Praying that peace may abide with all, I remain,

Your colaborer in Christ,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

Home Address, R. F. D. 2, WILLOUGHBY, Ohio.

To the Ministry and Saints of Michigan, Indiana, Northern Illinois, and Wisconsin Field; Greeting: It is with a sense of some timidity, incident to a nonacquaintance, that I address you. I hope that before the year closes we will be better acquainted and that such acquaintance shall be mutually favorable.

After consultation with Bro. Heman C. Smith I have concluded to appoint "ministers in charge" as follows: Kewanee, Illinois, District, F. A. Russell; Northeastern Illinois District and Wisconsin, F. M. Cooper; Northern and Eastern Michigan Districts, J. J. Cornish; Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, I. M. Smith; Southern Indiana District, George Jenkins. To these brethren the ministry in the several "fields" will please report promptly as follows: July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1; these ministers to thus be able to report to me promptly so that in turn I can report to the First Presidency early.

I trust the brethren will generally push out into new fields. If God had not intended we should he would not have so directed.

The Saints will please remember that while the railways are good enough to permit the elders to ride for half fare the half requires just that amount to convey them from place to place in money and as there is no opportunity to be a continual worker in the ministry and at the same time earn that money, the next best method is by donation. We are "coworkers together," hence all should be actively engaged each in his own place, and thus employed we help in the great work of Zion's redemption. No time for fault-finding or grumbling, but with "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" as the manifestation of our desires to serve God we will truly put on the "robes of righteousness" and by thus continuing finally win the crown.

All matters pertaining to ministerial work or setting in order confer with me or the minister in charge of the field where you reside.

Just as soon as my wife is well I expect to go to my field and will visit the various parts thereof so far as possible. Let us be kindly affectioned one to another, striving to be humble with all.

In bonds,

J. W. WIGHT.

First Seventy.

Dear Brethren: A circular letter is being prepared for the benefit of members of our quorum. Will those whose home or permanent addresses have been changed since last year please send me by postal card their address for the present conference year, just as soon as convenient, if they have not already given or sent in their address. Yours in Christ, Box 384, WOODBINE, IOWA. J. F. MINTUN, Secretary.

Notices.

To the Saints of the Little Sioux District, Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in the Eastern Oregon District for the coming conference year, I hereby give notice that until the coming June district conference (at which time the annual election of district officers will take place), Bro. J. M. Baker, of 116 Bluff Street, Sioux City, Iowa, will look after the interests of the district, he being vice-president. So that should any emergency arise, in which the services of the district president will be needed, call on him. I may not return to the district before going to my field of labor. In gospel bonds, J. C. Crabb.

To the German Saints and All Those Who are Interested in the German Mission, greeting: As I have been appointed with others to North Germany, I think it will greatly help us in securing places to stop and present the gospel, if you will send us the addresses of any friends and relatives you may have in Germany, and as the places of preaching are very rare and will be hard to secure, it will be necessary to go from house to house to put out tracts, and as this will cost money, I appeal to your generosity in helping us to promulgate the gospel in the German Mission. Send money by postal money order. Address Lamoni, Iowa. C. C. Joehnk.

Reunion Notice.

The annual reunion of Western Iowa will convene at Dow City, Iowa, September 16, 1904, at 2.30 p. m. Other announcements will be made later. A. H. Rudd, secretary, Dow City, Iowa.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Kentucky and Tennessee District will convene with the Sedalia Branch at New Bethel, May 28. It is hoped that a good turnout of Saints will be present, especially those of the priesthood. It is expected that the missionary in charge will be present. Send reports to J. J. Adair, secretary, Swan, Kentucky. J. R. McClain, president.

Conference of the Des Moines District will convene in Des Moines, June 4, 5, 1904. Sunday-school and Religio conventions the day previous. A. A. Reams, secretary.

Conference of the Northern Nebraska District will meet at Columbus, Nebraska, May 27, 1904, at 7.30 p. m. Please send all reports and communications to James Huff, 1818 North Twenty-first Street, Omaha, Nebraska, so as to reach there by May 26, 1904. James Huff, secretary.

The Southern Nebraska District, will convene with the Nebraska City Branch, May 29, 30, 1904. Would like to have the ministry and all to be present. Those of the ministry not attending, send your reports to the secretary early. J. W. Waldsmith, president; H. A. Higgins, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Alabama District will convene at Flat Rock Branch, at 4 p. m. May 21, 1904. All are invited to attend. D. T. Parker, secretary.

Married.

THOMAS—COATES.—At the Saints' Church, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, March 8, 1904, Elder Evan H. Thomas and Sr. Ada M. Coates were united in marriage, Elder U. W. Greene officiating. At 8 p. m. the church being filled with guests, the bridal party entered. Bro. Joseph Jaques was best man and Sr. Lizzie Coates bridesmaid. Congratulations were extended to them at the church and the happy couple entered life's journey in their own home previously prepared for occupancy. Very many beautiful presents were received. May the divine blessing ever attend them.

Died.

MILLER.—Sr. Lizzie Miller was born February 7, 1882, at Sanilac Center, Michigan. When a girl of about twelve years, she with her father and sisters moved to Glover, Michigan. She united with the Reorganized Church in April, 1903, since which time she has lived a faithful, consistent follower of the blessed Master. There are left to mourn father and three sisters and a host of friends and acquaintances. Father and sisters were with her during her illness and were at her bedside on the afternoon of April 9, 1904, when she peacefully fell asleep. Sermon by Elder J. A. Grant to a full house of friends. Interment in Bentley Cemetery.

RILEY.—Alice Riley, born November 24, 1840, at Darwin, Lancashire, England; baptized May 22, 1894, at St. Davids, Illinois, by E. E. Wheeler; confirmed by T. F. Stafford and L. L. Jones; died at Breeds Station, Illinois, April 22, 1904. She leaves a son by a previous marriage, also her husband, William Riley, and five step-children to mourn her departure. She died in the faith. Funeral services by Elder John S. Patterson.

International Convention, Y. M. C. A.

At Buffalo, New York, May 11 to 15. Tickets on sale via Nickel Plate Road, May 10, 11, and 12, at one fare, plus 25 cents for the round trip. Good returning May 23. For full particulars, call on your nearest agent, or address John Y. Calahan, general agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago, Illinois. (4)

The Theatrical Music Supply Company, of 46 West Twenty-eighth Street, New York, have recently published a song which is being received with much favor. It is entitled, "It Was Summertime in Dixie Land," written by Edwin Kendall.

$12.25 to Buffalo, New York, and Return

via Nickel Plate Road, May 10, 11, and 12, with return limit of May 23. Also lowest rates to Fort Wayne, Cleveland, Erie, and other eastern points. Three trains daily, with first-class modern equipment. Meals in Nickel Plate dining-cars, on American club meal plan, ranging in price from thirty-five cents to one dollar; also service a la carte. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road. When contemplating an eastern trip, write John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago, Illinois. Chicago Depot, corner Van Buren and La Salle Streets,—the only passenger station in Chicago on the Elevated Railroad Loop. (5)

The Traveler

Who contemplates a trip to Colorado, Utah, California or the North west should know that

The Denver & Rio Grande R. R.

widely known as "The Scenic Line of the World," has more scenic attractions than any other route across the continent, traversing as it does the Rocky Mountain Region through Royal Gorge, Canon of the Grand River, Glenwood Springs, Marshall Pass, Black Canon, Castle Gate, and the world-famed Salt Lake City. Its three through daily trains are equipped with the latest improved cars of all classes. Its dining car service is unsurpassed. For illustrated pamphlets address

S. K. HOOPER, G. P. & T. A.
Denver
Colo.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

"She Wants to Tell."

Sr. M. E. Webber of Queensboro, Ontario, Canada, writes January 12, 1904, saying: "Dear Brother:—I want to tell you how pleased I am with your Quit-to-bac. My brother used less than two boxes and has not touched tobacco since he began to use it and has gained in flesh and is better in every way." If it cures others, why not you? Three boxes sent post-paid for $1.50 with positive guarantee of cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.

Address, (Bro.) B. F. Ordway, 228 Hancock St., Peoria, Ill., U. S. A.

The World's Greatest Newspaper

The Chicago Tribune

Up-to-date farmers read

"PRACTICAL FARMING,"

the best Agriculture Department in the West

---

For Women . . .

Fashions
Beauty Hints
Household Talks
Book Reviews

For Men . . .

Market Reports
Sporting News
Fair Politics

For Children . . .

Cut-Outs
Comics
Stories

McCutcheon's Cartoons

---

$4.00 a Year Daily
$6.50 Daily and Sunday

One Fare Round-Trip

plus 25 cents, to Cleveland, Ohio, and return, via Nickel Plate Road, May 16, 17, and 18. Tickets good going date of sale and returning to and including June 10, by depositing same.

Three through daily express trains to Ft. Wayne, Cleveland, Erie, Buffalo, New York, Boston, and New England points, carrying vestibuled sleeping-cars. Meals served in Nickel Plate dining-cars, on American Club meal plan, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00; also service a la Carte. Chicago depot: La Salle and Van Buren Streets. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road. Chicago city ticket offices, 111 Adams Street and Auditorium Annex. Phone Central 2057.

3

SENT ON APPROVAL
TO RESPONSIBLE PEOPLE

Laughlin

Fountain Pen

Guaranteed Finest Grade 14k.
SOLID GOLD PEN

To test the merits of
THE SAINTS' HERALD
as an advertising medium
we offer your choice of

These
Two Popular Styles
For Only

$1.00

Postpaid
to any Address.

(By registered mail 8 cents extra.)

Holder is made of finest quality hard rubber, in four simple parts, fitted with very highest grade, large size 14k, gold pen, any flexibility desired—ink feeding device perfect.

Either style—Richly Gold Mounted for presentation purposes, $1.00 extra.

Grand Special Offer

You may try the pen a week, if you do not find it as represented, fully as fine a value as you can secure for three times the price in any other makes, if not entirely satisfactory in every respect, return it and we will send you $1.10 for it, the extra 10c. is for your trouble in writing us and to show our confidence in the Laughlin Pen—(Not one customer in 5000 have asked for their money back.)

Illustration on left is full size of Ladies' style; on right, Gentlemen's style.

Lay this Paper Down and Write NOW
Safety Pocket Pen Holder sent free of charge with each Pen.

ADDRESS
Laughlin Mfg. Co.
153 Griswold St., DETROIT, MICH.

REORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

201. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 60

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
Lamoni, Iowa.

BANKING BY MAIL.

WRITE US AT ONCE

If you have any money deposited on which you are not receiving interest.

WE PAY 5 PER CENT INTEREST.

The COMMERCIAL BANK, Lamoni, Iowa.

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

The Nickel Plate Road

will sell tickets to Cleveland, Ohio, and return, account of National Baptist Anniversary, on May 16, 17, 18, at rate of one fare for the round-trip, plus 25 cents. Tickets good going date of sale. By depositing same, extended return limit of June 10 may be secured. Through service to New York City, Boston and other eastern points. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road. Meals on American Club Meal Plan ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00; also service a la Carte. Chicago depot: La Salle and Van Buren Streets, the only passenger station in Chicago on the elevated loop. Chicago city ticket offices, 111 Adams Street and Auditorium Annex. Phone Central 2057. 2

Business Men, Elders, and Other Latter Day Saint Friends

We buy old typewriters, rebuild them, and make them practically new, and sell from $10 up. Write us for our special bargain list just out

Sherman Art Company
1224 Congress St., 17r4t Chicago

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
LAMONI - - IOWA

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS, 1852 to 1900.

197. Paper. . . . . 50
198. Cloth, limp. . . . . 35

The Saints' Herald

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, May 11, 1904

Number 19

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
 of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH }
 FRED'K M. SMITH } EDITORS
 Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
The Iowa Antisaloon League - - - - -	433
Baptism at Fall River, Massachusetts - - - - -	434
A Good Correction - - - - -	434
Young Girls, Beware! - - - - -	435
Original Articles:
Knowledge, Love, and Obedience - - - - -	436
Railroads and Religions - - - - -	439
Mothers' Home Column:
An Open Letter to Mothers - - - - -	440
Sunday-School Department:
About Credits - - - - -	441
Letter Department:
Letters - - - - -	442
Extracts from Letters - - - - -	445
Miscellaneous Department:
Conference Minutes:
Leeds - - - - -	445
Pastoral:
Heman C. Smith - - - - -	446
Frederick A. Smith - - - - -	446
Charles A. Parkin - - - - -	446
Ellis Short - - - - -	447
R. O. Self - - - - -	447

Editorial.

THE IOWA ANTISALOON LEAGUE.

Lamoni had on the 5th inst., a visit from Doctor I. N. McCash, the State superintendent of the Iowa Antisaloon League, who delivered a lecture in the Saints' church upon the subject involved in the question, "Which shall rule our city and State, the Book, or the Barrel?" The chief point of the lecture was the creating of a "civic conscience," that is, educating the people along right lines in the contest for control in civic affairs until public opinion shall be sufficiently strong as to decide "saloons ought not to be continued, therefore as a matter of right saloons must not be permitted to continue."

Doctor McCash lately resigned the charge of the University Place Christian Church, Des Moines, to accept the superintendency of the Iowa Antisaloon League, which has for its object the driving the liquor saloon traffic out of the state of Iowa.

The Doctor followed Reverend Roby, who delivered a temperance lecture in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Lamoni, on Sunday, May 1, but who fell sick at Decatur City, Decatur County, and wrote him in regard to the matter.

Mr. George Judd, who was on November 17 of last year elected president of the Des Moines Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, is reported by the Des Moines Register and Leader, of November 18, 1903, to have said, "If the so-called reformers of Des Moines insist on interfering with our business as we conduct it under the law, or try to drive us out of business, we will see which will go the furthest in the fight—a barrel of whisky or a bushel of Bibles."

This challenge the Iowa Antisaloon League under the leadership of Dr. McCash takes up; and is now in the active campaign, "stumping" the State in the interest of sobriety, decency, law and order, and the general well-being of the community and against the influence of that which has always been a threatening, debasing, and destructive element in the social fabric.

The lecturer showed that every phase of the business of the commercial world, every sociological condition, every corporate body for mechanical, industrial, or commercial pursuits, every individual private enterprise, every family, and every person has a direct interest in the conflict now going on between the saloon and antisaloon elements of the State; and the question, "On which side do you fight?" is both urgent and significant.

Doctor McCash proposes to "mobilize" all the temperance forces, societies, associations, orders, churches, and those not enumerated in organizations of any sort, and unite their efforts under a Board of Direction, composed of leading men of all the foregoing classes, who shall assemble at stated times and take into consideration what measures may be best devised to advance the temperance cause, stop the illegal selling of intoxicants, break up "boot-legging," enforce existing laws providing for and regulating the liquor traffic, prevent the securing of vicious legislation likely to increase the saloon evil, and to obtain such needed legislative action as will in time free the state of Iowa from the moral and financial evils attendant upon and resulting from the licensed, fostered, and protected sale of intoxicants.

It is a move in the right direction. It is intended to take the liquor question out of politics, and to make the fight against the saloon an independent one upon moral, domestic, economic, social, and municipal bases; for the best good of all, free from the discord of political partisanship and the dictation of party leaders, or party machine methods.

Of course, this work will require the employment of means. This will be raised by a well arranged system of card issuing asking for voluntary donations in monthly payments ranging from ten cents to ten dollars, or more, if one chooses to so give. There is no pledge to sign unless one chooses to join the Lincoln Legion, but no obligation, social or monetary, is requisite to become a member of the League. The League publishes the Dial of Progress, subscriptions to which go into the general coffers for campaign purposes and the carrying on of prosecutions for the enforcement of the laws.

As to interfering with the liquor business by the "so-called reformers," it is every man's business to be a conservator of the public peace, to know and keep the provisions of the law himself, and so far as he can, to aid the chosen executors of the law to enforce them. It is also every man's business to know something of what is beneficial to the well-being of society and to advocate whatever his judgment decides is good; and to the contrary, whatever his judgment decides to be detrimental and injurious to the good of the community in which he lives, or the State of which he is a citizen, that he should vigorously and persistently oppose.

The saloon is an element of moral mischief in any community. It is a leech which exists and fattens directly upon the appetites and money of those in whose midst it is located. It is an institution which to thrive makes demands upon the brain and brawn of the bread-winners, the sober, hard-working, as well as the sober, well-to-do classes, for police regulations to protect it in gathering its gains and from the consequences of the evil passions its business provokes in its patrons. It asks and expects society to feed and take care of the victims whom its business condemns to the conditions of poverty. It furnishes inmates for the town calaboose, the county jail, the State penitentiary, and makes these a necessity to the safety of the public. It makes necessary the police, constable, sheriff, the police court, the mayor's court, the criminal side of the law courts, and demands of society that it provide for and keep up all the needful legislation to forbid and punish crime growing out of its business, and all the paraphernalia, stars, clubs, revolvers, stretchers, ambulances, hospitals, morgues, coroners, potter's fields, pauper funerals, and everything else required to keep society clean from the moral leprosy its business entails, and then witness the awful audacity, the "colossal cheek" exhibited by the saloon when it holds up its hands and demands that the reformers do not "interfere in its business."

The "reformers" have the right and it is their business to interfere in the public selling of poisons, deadly weapons, the running at large of dangerous animals or those suffering from infectious diseases, the preventing of persons having dangerous or infectious diseases spreading the virus of those diseases abroad.

Why, then, should not these reformers have the right, why is it not their business, to interfere in the business of that element in society which is responsible for so much that is reprehensible as against the well-being of society? We are of the opinion that the reformers are in the right.

---

BAPTISM AT FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.

A clipping from a Fall River, Massachusetts, daily, reaches our desk via Sr. Bently and Bro John Smith, which contains good news:

FALL RIVER, May 2.—Hundreds of people assembled yesterday afternoon on the shores of the Watuppa pond to witness the baptism of eight men and seven women, who were candidates for membership in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which in this city has a membership of nearly two hundred. Clad in their baptismal robes of black and accompanied by the officiating ministers, the Reverends Horatio Howlett and Alexander Sinclair of this city, the candidates walked into the water and were immersed with the usual ceremony. They were then driven to the church on Claffin Street, where a praise service was held. Last evening the candidates were confirmed and an address was delivered by Elder Richard Bullard of Boston.

---

A GOOD CORRECTION.

The British Whig, a paper published at Kingston, Ontario, in its issue for some date in late March or early April contained the photograph of the Editor of HERALD, and gave it as the representation of Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah Mormon Church, who testified before the Senate Committee, etc.

We wrote the publisher of the Whig requesting a correction of the error, with the result that in the issue for Saturday, April 30, 1904, our letter was published, with a manly editorial notice calling attention to the error and apologizing for it.

Our cousin-president may feel the same objection to our being posed as representing him, for the same cause but not for the same reason. We object to being advertised as a polygamist, while he has boastfully advertised himself as being such, to the disregard of both human and divine law, a record which he may be ostensibly proud of but which we regard as disgraceful.

The editor's note we give below:

On page nine will be found a letter from Joseph Smith, a Mormon, who is not a polygamist. His letter explains itself. The Whig received his portrait from its New York agents, a concern of reliability, and published it as received. We regret that the wrong Mr. Smith was made the victim of the error. His letter, we are glad to say, will set matters right.

YOUNG GIRLS, BEWARE!

The following warning was sounded by the editor of the Burlington Hawk-Eye in the issue for May 7. It is worthy careful reading and consideration:

WARNING FOR YOUNG GIRLS.

Warnings for young girls are coming from all quarters in Iowa, and other States, and from St. Louis itself, telling them of the danger that lurks about them in the advertisements filling the newspapers for girls wanted as domestics, or companions, or for other apparently legitimate purposes in St. Louis during the World's Fair. The warnings are also against agents who are going about the country soliciting the services of young girls for St. Louis employers. These agents are in most cases women who represent themselves to be respectable representatives of legitimate employment agencies.

Young girls are particularly warned against listening to them or making any contract with them. They are nothing more than procuresses for houses of ill fame whose horrible traffic is being increased in enormous degrees by the world's fair patronage.

Innocent girls are lured by plausible stories of good positions and high wages in St. Louis, but when the victims arrive at the world's fair city they find themselves trapped in one of those resorts, unable to get away.

There are many ways in which innocent girlhood is procured for the beast of lust in St. Louis. In many cases the real object of the engagement is placed before the girl in alluring colors. A picture of a life of ease is drawn, with fine clothing, the best of company and an inexhaustible source of spending money always at hand. There are poor, foolish girls who may be caught by this glitter. Their fate is just as bad as that of the girl taken by deceit or force.

This is the menacing horror that hangs over innocent and unsophisticated young women within a radius of three hundred miles of St. Louis. Every effort should be made to give them the warning. The servants of the law should have a watchful eye trained for the creatures who are carrying on the canvass for white slaves, and the identification of one should mean her instant punishment to the fullest extent of the law. There can be no temporizing in such cases. The whipping-post would be none too harsh; summary expulsion from the corporate limits would be unduly mild.

The Hawk-Eye adds its warning to that which is being given over the State. Young women, no matter who they are, should refuse to entertain any proposition from strangers for employment in St. Louis during the World's Fair. They should not go to St. Louis unless accompanied by a friend, and they should only seek lodgings at the known respectable hotels or boarding-houses. In this way only can young women guard themselves from the risk of the great but wicked world's fair city.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Ram's Horn, published in Chicago, Illinois, in its issue for May 7, contains an article from the pen of President Joseph Smith, to which the Ram's Horn editors have given the heading, "The Real Mormon Church." The article clearly and concisely sets forth the characteristic differences between the Utah Church and the Church in true succession to the one founded in 1830 by Joseph Smith and others. The editor of Ram's Horn introduces President Smith's article as follows: "It may not be known by all our readers that there exists to-day a Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints which has no connection with the Utah contingent. This Reorganized Church has no sympathy with the polygamous and other vicious practices of the Utah Mormons. Their headquarters is in Lamoni, Iowa, and the membership is scattered among many self-respecting and law-abiding communities in the different States. While we may not accept their doctrines in some particulars, it will be of interest to learn from their President, Joseph Smith (who must not be confused with the Joseph Smith of Utah), just what they teach and believe. This letter from President Smith was called out by our recent exposition of the errors of Mormonism in Utah."

Bro. D. R. Baldwin wrote for the Ravenden, Arkansas, Hustler for April 14, 1904, a sharp article indicative of the correct status of the Reorganized Church, anent the Smoot investigation.

By letter from Bro. E. A. Blakeslee, Galien, Michigan, May 1, we learn of the death of Bro. Jesse D. White, who died very suddenly, Tuesday, April 26: Bro. White was known to many of the Saints as the workman having charge of the repairing the Kirtland Temple in 1833. So they go, one by one.

The Burlington Railway has issued a neat circular entitled, "Worlds Fair of 1904. What it costs to get there; where to stay, and what it costs; what there is to see, and how to see it." It has been issued for the benefit of Burlington patrons who contemplate visiting the St. Louis Fair. It not only gives the railway rates from principal points, but gives the regular rates for hacks and cabs, chairs and guides, the names of the principal St. Louis hotels, a map of the grounds, and tells how to reach the grounds from the Union depot and down town. It contains much information valuable to World's Fair visitors.

A. M. Chase wrote from Salt Lake City, Utah, April 22, that he had been holding a series of very successful street services from the 10th to the 19th. He expected to commence again soon.

We have received from A. C. Goebelein, of 80 Second Street, New York City, a pamphlet entitled Millennial Dawnism, which is intended as an exposure of "Dawnism." Mr. Goebelein writes us that the pamphlet can be had from him in any quantity, hundreds and thousands, free of charge. Mr. Goebelein is editor of Our Hope, a monthly for Bible study.

Robert Hall was the first convert of Brn. Tucker and Hanson in the New Zealand mission. He is now an elder and his name is in the list of conference appointments. The story of this young man's life and conversion is told by Elder Tucker in the May Autumn Leaves and is accompanied by an excellent picture of Elder Hall.

Original Articles.

KNOWLEDGE, LOVE, AND OBEDIENCE.

In our efforts to serve God we should not lose sight of the fact that he is a God of method. The poet has truly said: "Order is the first law of heaven." Saint Paul says: "Let all things be done decently and in order."—1 Corinthians 14:40. This also: "God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints."—Verse 33. These statements being true we must look for order in the arrangement of the three points of our caption. In stating this arrangement we are not creating nor combining; we are only representing what God has already placed in its proper position. We believe that knowledge, love, and obedience, all of which are essential to salvation, should occur in the order given below. This order is evidently in harmony with "the eternal fitness of things" as arranged by infinite wisdom.

KNOWLEDGE IN THE MIND.

God requires us to worship him intelligently. Jesus says: "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a spirit: And they that worship him must worship him in spirit and truth."—John 4:23, 24. Here the Savior emphasizes the necessity of worshipping God in accordance with the truth which is his word (John 17:17). Israel blundered on this point. They had "a zeal for God but not according to knowledge."—Romans 10:2, 3. With all their earnestness and strictness they ignore "the righteousness of God."

Sometimes we are told it does not matter what we believe if we are only sincere. We freely admit the necessity of being sincere, but sincerity alone will not save. The heathens may be and often are thoroughly sincere. They would always be if left in utter ignorance of anything better than heathenism. But to admit that sincerity will save the heathen is to admit the sufficiency of heathenism. If heathenism is sufficient why did God give Christianity? A person may be sincere and yet be radically wrong. Saul of Tarsus was. (See Acts 26:9-11; 1 Timothy 1:12, 13.)

The first thing required that we may serve God acceptably is faith (Hebrews 11:6). It can not exist without previous instruction. (See Acts 15:7; Romans 10:14-17.) To approach God ignorantly and in unbelief would be palpably absurd. To come to him in doubt would also be useless. No doubt the reader has heard of the man who prayed, "O God, if there is a God, bless my soul, if I have a soul; keep me from hell, if there is a hell; and save me in heaven, if there is a heaven." "There are others." Did God answer that prayer? Verily, no.

The word of God is compared to a seed. This word must be preached or the seed be sowed. It is foolish to say the Holy Spirit can or does convert and develop Christian character in the absence of preaching. No matter how much rain falls, nor how much the sun shines, nothing will grow where no seed has been planted, neither can God's work succeed if the gospel is not proclaimed. At first the word is a seed; it is also a child of the kingdom (Luke 8:11; Matthew 13:38). The latter is so because "the children of the kingdom" are a practical embodiment of the gospel. The gospel contains both converting and nourishing elements in connection with which the Holy Spirit must operate. By it we are born and grow. And both our conversion and spiritual development are miracles. They are matters in which God is directly concerned. But we should not allow the present, direct blessings of the Spirit to depreciate what God has given in the past. In proof of the benefits of the written word we quote as follows:

Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me.—John 5:39.

These [the Jews at Berea] were more noble than those at Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so.—Acts 17:11.

Is it any wonder we read in the next verse: "Therefore many of them believed"? Certainly not; investigation naturally and logically leads to faith.

"Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope."—Romans 15:4. Please read also 2 Timothy 3:14-17.

Theoretical knowledge of the Bible is worth no more than "the dry bones" seen in vision by Ezekiel. (37:1-14.) Those bones, however, though "they were very dry," were worth more than so many sticks or stones, for they were the framework of human beings. So also biblical knowledge is worth more to us than any other kind. When the Spirit of God came the bones "stood upon their feet, an exceeding great army." Likewise when the Spirit comes and vitalizes and vivifies our knowledge we shall joyfully stand erect and confident in the presence of both men and God.

LOVE IN THE HEART.

As previously indicated our knowledge concerning God will be inert without earnestness, the earnestness born of inspiration. All that we know relative to the will of God will do us but little good unless the heart is touched. In Matthew 22:34-40 we are told of a conversation which took place between Jesus and a certain lawyer. This lawyer asked: "Which is the great commandment in the law?" Jesus answered: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." In Luke 10:25-37 there is a similar incident. According to Luke the lawyer asked: "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Jesus replied: "What is written in the law? How readest thou?" The lawyer replied: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind." From this it seems the lawyer knew the way of life as well as Christ. Jesus indorsed his reply by saying: "Thou hast answered right; this do [including, of course, the love of "thy neighbor"], and thou shalt live." In Mark 12:28-34 we have still another incident. In this case a "scribe" appears as the questioner. Jesus answers exactly as the lawyer did in Luke. He adds the word "strength" which is absent from his words as recorded in Matthew. We consider it a very important addition. As to whether or not he learned to add it through the suggestion of the aforesaid lawyer, we are not informed. In sanctioning the Savior's answer the scribe spoke in part as follows: "To love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbor as himself, is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices." At this juncture Mark adds: "And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." Jesus then indorsed the scribe's rendition of his teachings. The latter, it will be noticed, says, "all the understanding" instead of "all the mind"; while in the law itself the word "might" occurs instead of "strength." The meaning, however, is just the same and the consensus of all is that we must worship God with all the soul, mind, body, and heart. Nor must the strength of all these be equal. It would not be so in very many cases. For instance, some have more "mind" and others have more "strength" or more "heart" to expend in God's service.

In any case the person must consecrate all, be it little or much, to God's work. Even "the hewers of wood" or "drawers of water" or those who give a cup of cold water will not go unnoticed. But no matter who we are or what we do, if we leave our "hearts" out of God's service, our efforts will not be acceptable. God said to Ezekiel concerning Israel: "They sit before thee as my people and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness. And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not."—Ezekiel 33:31, 32.

To ancient Israel divine service was entertainment and nothing more; some of modern Israel and others in these days are much the same. We believe Isaiah prophesied of our day when he said: "This people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men."—Isaiah 29:13.

Thus we see that while intellectual knowledge is useful and necessary, yet of itself it will not lead us to love God. Man can not by searching, that is, by study or investigation, find out the Almighty to perfection. (Job 11:7-9). Man by wisdom can not know God, much less love him. (1 Corinthians 1:21). To know and love him requires the agency of the Holy Spirit. (See 1 Corinthians 2:9-14; Romans 5:5). This Spirit creates a hunger and thirst for divine things. Under its guiding and comforting influence God's service will be a pleasure. It has been truly said, "Love lightens labor." God wants us to serve him through love and not from a sense of cold, stern, exacting duty. Christ's "burden is light" and "his yoke is easy," and under the cheering influence of the divine unction we shall find rest to our souls. (Matthew 11:28-30). John says: "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous."—1 John 5:3, that is, not burdensome. Jesus says: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled."—Matthew 5:6.

One ray of light reflected from the dome of our Father's house is worth more than all the "red tape" and the "cut and dried" theological and ethical systems the world ever knew. If we have the Holy Spirit by which we have love for God "in our hearts" (Romans 5:5), it shall be in us "a well of water springing up into everlasting life," and from us shall flow an influence by which others will be brought to the fount of life where they may "wash and be clean" (John 4:14; 7:37-39). This Spirit will energize all our sayings and actions; with its promptings we can not be idle, can not be lazy. Jeremiah had it and all the indifference of Israel could not quench its influence. He says: "The word of the Lord was made a reproach unto me, and a derision, daily. Then I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name. But his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay."—Jeremiah 20:8, 9. How much better it is to use divine instead of artificial agencies? The Holy Spirit can do what would be impossible to men. To illustrate: Suppose the lakes and rivers are covered with ice and the ground with snow. What a task it would be for a man or men to remove all this by the use of the wheelbarrow, shovel, and saw, or any other artificial means! But how quickly and easily "Old Sol" can clear both the land and water!

The first point in our caption does not, in practice, always lead to the second. Men are prone to go to extremes. A certain traveler who once passed through America observed that the ministers there were either intellectual or spiritual. Those who were the former were not the latter and vice versa. We accept the observation but would apply it to other countries as well as America. The weakness of human nature brings about many undesirable conditions. Unfortunately men who are intellectual, in the highest sense known to the world, are not often spiritual. On the other hand the highest spirituality is not often combined with the highest human intelligence. But why refer to this as an American deficiency? Are men elsewhere necessarily balanced in these matters? Possibly the writer referred to judged unfairly. He implies that the preachers elsewhere were more equal in the respects stated. But they may not be the highest intellectually or spiritually as judged by the American standard. Does an equal combination of the two lessen both? To the average observer, yes; to the man of discernment, no. But how can uninspired men judge in such matters? There are some very common and very general mistakes along this line. One is that of separating the intellect and the Spirit. Should and do they not flow into each other? People are often misled in supposing emotional, sympathetic men are spiritual and reasoners unspiritual. Either position is an extreme. Emotion and sympathy as well as reason may be purely human. They are, however, more dangerous than reason, for they are more liable to cause deception. Another thing, we should not accept men from appearances or their own representations. Some are in the habit of blowing their own trumpets while others are not. Some tell all their experiences and magnify them in doing so, while others have not and possibly never will disclose all they have received.

In Alma 12:1 the true standard of excellence is given. There we are told about Alma meeting with the sons of Mosiah. It was a great comfort to be permitted to meet again; it was a time of great rejoicing. The latter were returning from the land of the Lamanites where they had gone as missionaries. Concerning them it is said:

They had waxed strong in the knowledge of the truth; for they were men of a sound understanding, and they had searched the scriptures diligently, that they might know the word of God. But this is not all: they had given themselves to much prayer, and fasting, therefore they had the spirit of prophecy, and the spirit of revelation, and when they taught, they taught with the power and authority of God.

OBEDIENCE IN THE LIFE.

Knowledge does not always result in love, but love, true love, always leads to obedience. We say "true love" because much of the so-called love for God is false. When men pretend to love the Lord and yet will not do what he says, their love is decidedly faulty. Love should be both fervent and practical. But how is it with many to-day? How often we hear Jesus spoken of in that soft, sickly, sentimental way peculiar to a certain class, while at the same time his teachings are openly disregarded. We see a parallel in the natural world. Men often speak to and of their wives and children in affectionate terms and yet at times treat them very harshly and also neglect to provide for them. The same principle applies to the relations that exist between parents and children. I shall never forget a piece of poetry I learned when I was going to school. The title of it is "Which loved her best?" It reads as follows:

"I love you, mother," said little John;
Then forgetting work his cap went on
And he was off to the garden swing,
Leaving his mother the wood to bring.

"I love you, mother," said rosy Nell,
'I love you better than tongue can tell.'
Then she teased and pouted full half the day
Till her mother rejoiced when she went to play.

"I love you, mother," said little Fan,
'Today I'll help you all I can.'
How glad I am that school doesn't keep,
So she rocked the baby till it fell asleep.

"Then stepping softly she took the broom
And swept the floor and dusted the room.
Busy and happy all day was she,
Cheerful and helpful as child could be.

"I love you, mother," again they said,
Three little children going to bed.
Now how do you think that mother guessed
Which of them really loved her best?"

There was not a pupil in the class that could not answer the question. All hands were up in a moment. Teacher: "You may tell us Johnnie." Answer: "Fan." Why does not the same principle apply to religion? Why can not men see that it does? A child can see at once that Fan's love was highest and best; it was both sentimental and practical. Is not the same true of the practical Christian? Some may argue that John and Nell loved their mother, but neglected her through thoughtlessness. Exactly; but still their love was not true. And what does it prove? It proves the necessity of knowledge to balance and guide love. Under proper conditions some knowledge increases love. But "proper conditions" do not always obtain. To know some people means to care less for them. It has been said: "Familiarity breeds contempt." It does only when contemptible people are involved. This is why marriage is sometimes a failure. People can not be married without finding each other out. But to know God and some people means to love them more. Those who know him best love him most. Much, however, depends upon judging from the right standpoint; having the correct standard of appreciation.

Jesus says: "If ye love me, keep my commandments."—John 14:15. Then follows the Savior's promise about the sending of the "Comforter." The connection shows that the reception and retention of the Holy Ghost depends upon keeping the "commandments." For this reason Latter Day Saints deny that the gift of the Holy Ghost may be or is received without baptism and the laying on of hands. It is true, sometimes, that a certain degree of divine light is received without them, but certainly not the baptism of the Spirit. These principles as well as faith and repentance are required for its reception. John says that God's commands are not burdensome. Why then seek to avoid any of the principles of the gospel? On them the blessings of God are contingent.

In praying to the Father concerning his disciples Christ says: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth."—John 17:17. In verse 19 he adds: "And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." Jesus came to set an example; in this way he encouraged his disciples. He did it "for their sakes." Primarily he did not need this sanctification. If he had not come to earth to save men it would not have been required. But he must be the leader; the word "also" conveys the idea that he, as well as his disciples, was sanctified through God's word. This was why he came to John and received baptism at his hands, (See Matthew 3). In what way does truth sanctify? By obedience to it. Proof:

God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth.—2 Thessalonians 2:13.

Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit.—1 Peter 1:22.

Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him.—Hebrews 5:8, 9.

Blessed are they that do his [Christ's] commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.—Revelation 22:14.

What have we learned? Through what agent does sanctification come? Through the Holy Spirit. This Spirit is received by obedience, (Acts 5:32). And the Master says: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."—Matthew 7:21. Some people who pray will be saved, but "not every one." The blessing is promised to him "that doeth." Our conduct in other respects must be equal to our prayers. Otherwise we will not be accepted. The scriptures prove, as we have shown, that purification, sanctification, "eternal salvation," "right to the tree of life," and entrance "into the city," are dependent upon obedience. And all this applies to Christ, who is our witness, leader, and commander (Isaiah 55:4), as well as to the rest of the race. He is the model and we must live by it. What else is required? What more can be done?

ALMA C. BARMORE.

The May Autumn Leaves contains an account of the recent discoveries by Bandelier in Peru.

RAILROADS AND RELIGIONS.

Not long ago I happened to be a passenger in a train that left the rails while running at a high rate of speed.

It had just passed from a deep cut on to a high fill, on a tangent, and was moving at a rate justified by apparent conditions.

There was a sudden application of the emergency brakes, followed by a rapid succession of jarring, grinding tremors, and finally, after what seemed an unnecessary length of time, the train came to a full stop.

When the passengers looked out, they found themselves on a trestle four hundred feet long, sixty feet above a frozen creek and with not a wheel of the entire train upon the rails,—in fact, for a thousand feet there was not a rail in position.

The engine was one of the 2-6-0 type, carried two hundred pounds of steam, and the drivers were as large as possible to make them without sacrificing the necessary tractive force to speed.

The equipment of the train was modern and in good condition; the rail was heavy, of the finest quality, approved as to comparative proportions of web, ball, and base, by competent engineers, and accepted after thorough test; the ties were sound and afforded a firm grip to the spikes, and the latter were not at fault.

The foundation alone was the primary cause of the accident: The fill was high and had settled to some extent at certain places, having been recently constructed; a rolling motion was imparted to the heavy engine, and the lateral strain thus produced upon the track proved too much for even the finest steel, and the rail gave a little, permitting the ponderous driving wheels to strike the ties.

There is a great deal of competition among various transportation companies to get business. This is especially the case with respect to passenger traffic, for the reason that more or less of the people who travel do so for pleasure and may often be influenced to take a longer route than necessary, to get to their destination, if the attractions are great enough.

There are a great many active agents, each trying to secure to his company what is known as "anybody's business," that is to say, traffic that does not originate locally but is obliged to pass over some one local line out of a possible three or four, before reaching its objective point.

On traffic originating at Chicago, for instance, destined for New York, there are a great many combinations of routes possible, and consequently much activity is displayed on the part of each eligible carrier to convince prospective patrons that its particular line is the shortest, safest, and best in all details.

The soliciting agents are not conversant with the rules and regulations of the operating department; that is not required of them. All they desire is to get the passenger, sell him a ticket, and put him on their particular train—the rest they leave to the maintainers of way, structures and equipment—and Providence.

These conditions exist to a certain extent among religious bodies of the present day.

There is much competition among the various churches—each is willing to produce any number of witnesses to prove that its particular line of doctrine reaches from earth to heaven, and all are after the business in sight; willing to sell through tickets at excursion rates and guarantee safe conveyance, and, though the unwary patron sees no visible evidence of a right-of-way, he sees the equipment fitted up with little regard to cost, and is willing to take for granted that there must be some track where there is so much train. He gets aboard without noticing whether his ticket reads “one way” or “round trip,” crawls into his berth or doubles up in a seat—and sleeps.

It is not necessary to suggest that when sufficient time has elapsed to cover the distance, and the traveler awakens and raises his curtain to gaze upon untold glories, he will be somewhat disappointed to find his train off the track on a steep incline, with an engine in the ditch and no wrecking crew on the road! And, further, what will be his state of mind when he ascertains, upon inquiry of those in charge, that the road did not extend much further anyway, and that, for the greater part of the distance, a survey had not even been made for a right-of-way—to be cut and filled and laid with ties and rails and ballasted—over which to run the elegant equipment.

Not all religious bodies however are in that condition: Many of them depend to a greater or less extent upon trackage rights over other spiritual lines, and have their special trains splendidly equipped and brilliantly lighted as an advertisement of their “route” when, in reality, the track owned by the stockholders in their concern may not reach outside the yard limits of the initial station, where they connect with some other line, well advertised and commonly accepted as one of the main thoroughfares for souls en route to the celestial kingdom.

Then there is another class of religious railways, which would be known as “wild cat” among temporal organizations, which attempts by theft, condemnation, and force to secure a line upon which to ply its trade.

These last two classes of spiritual pirates, however, can be readily detected.

Advertisement is not the surest gauge in the world by which to judge men or things. A poor brand of soap, well advertised, will remove the skin from many hands before it is discovered, and the statesman with the greatest reputation is not always the personification of all the Christian attributes. By the same standard, the churches that enjoy the greatest popularity to-day are not necessarily countenanced by the Almighty.

People will buy bad soap, because they see its name everywhere; they will ride on unsafe railroads, because they make widespread claims of being the best, and they impose infinitely greater trust in inconsistent and false religious denominations because they enjoy the reputation—among others as credulous as themselves—of offering the greatest returns at the least personal cost.

There is a line, however, that rejoices in the possession of a charter covering its right-of-way from beginning to end. The title is clear and becomes clearer with investigation. The organization is complete and is recognized by the Government of Things Spiritual. The executive officers are vested with due authority, but are not permitted to make false statements or to gain converts by fraud.

The foundation is well set and the roadbed rock-ballasted; everything that appertains to the safe conduct of passengers is of the best, and the rolling stock is not weakened by excessive decoration.

Those who would patronize this line do so with a full knowledge of what to expect from association therewith. There will be no glare of lights; no liveried attendants; no elegant draperies or resplendent ornamentation, and, above all, no palatial sleeping cars,—as those who travel this way must keep awake, and therein lies the secret of its unpopularity.

F. H. JOHNSON.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

An Open Letter to Mothers.

Dear Mothers of Zion: To very many of you it has long been known that we as a society known as the Daughters of Zion have long been laboring in your midst, together with the other “organizations for good” which God has acknowledged among his people and to which if faithful he has promised his blessing.

A few of the sisters, in the face of many and great discouragements, have labored with untiring zeal to keep the work alive in the hearts of those who once embraced it and to seek out new means for its spread and the promotion of its usefulness. This they have done because convinced of the absolute need of this work in the redemption of Zion.

“The fountain can not rise above its source.” The home is the source of all society—the fountain from which both church and state must receive supplies for filling all vacancies in either, and, in brief, upon which both must draw for all the effective agencies for carrying on the government of men and of God.

We feel sure that not one of you doubts the truth of this, and few but really acknowledge the absolute necessity of work in the home; but many of you are so cumbered with the cares and perplexities of life as to feel that you have not the time for the consultation and study necessary to fit you to discharge the heaven-imposed duties of your homes.

But come, sisters, and let us reason together. If you knew that in many ways such consultation would be so helpful as to make up to you many fold for the time given to it, would you not try to meet with us for just an hour or two each month, or every two weeks, and when not possible to meet with us would you not promise to study the reading-matter furnished you in your homes, meeting with us in public when it was possible for you to do so? Do you ask the character of such reading-matter? It will be the best the committee on literature appointed by the Society is able to furnish for the bringing about of the following purposes: Truer parenthood, better children, happier homes, and purer society.

This is the ladder, is it not, that every mother wants to climb? She desires her child to be honorable, useful, and respected. But do we realize the full extent of our ability to help our children, or, on the other hand, to hinder them from attaining that which we desire they should have?

For the coming year it is the intention of the Daughters of Zion to furnish you with readings prepared especially for you by their committee. It will be prepared with special reference to character-building—such character as God demands and as Saints must possess before they can ever be justly termed, "Zion, the pure in heart." It is the intention of this committee to begin at the very foundation-stone and as far as they may be able to go, to show such things as God has made known are essential to the formation of Christian character. Programs for monthly meetings will be furnished in the Home Column of the SAINTS HERALD, together with readings and suggestions in reference to the same. It is purposed that these shall begin in the issue of May 18,—thus giving ample time for them to reach all in time for the meeting in June.

Committee on Literature for the Daughters of Zion.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

About Credits.

A brother from Canada asks if it would be proper for a scholar attending a session of another Latter Day Saint school not his own to take his credits for the session and be credited with them at his home school or in his own class. We think it would be quite proper for the scholar to do so. In fact it would seem quite commendable that the scholar should feel so much interested that he would care to do so. Some schools and districts have such a system of exchange of credits, so that a scholar desiring to make a whole year without a single missed lesson, as many have done, might be able to attend a district or General Conference and by attending the Sunday-school there and taking his credits back home with him he would not break his record. This can and should be done. If it were done universally, there would be a better interest on the part of some.

But there are some difficulties: The teacher has the scholar marked absent in the class book. The report shows he was absent, and so he was. But when the credits are presented they can be inserted without blotting or erasing anything and the total of credits amended. It is not necessary that he recite in his own class to be entitled to his credits for a well-learned lesson. It is just a little trouble to the secretary. But if I were secretary I would be glad to see the scholar have interest enough in his record to want it done.

Again: The school secretary is required to make out his quarterly report "immediately after the close of the quarter," and if there are credits to come in afterward, perhaps several days, how could he do this? To be sure the credits must be furnished without unnecessary delay. Wait too long and you will lose your right. And if the secretary knows that there are some credits to come in, it would be unkind to hurriedly close up the report and cut out what could have been included after a few days. If one of your scholars attends another Latter Day Saint school and gets his credits there, allow them to him in his own school and class. It will encourage him to try to make his record as nearly perfect as he can.

Notice to Missionaries.

The General Sunday-school Association will continue to furnish the Senior Grade Quarterly free to all missionaries laboring under general conference appointment who apply for them. But as so many addresses are changed after each general conference, we make a new list and must have your application after each conference no matter whether you have been getting the Quarterly or not. Please send us your mission address if you have one, as the Quarterlies can not be forwarded, but if sent from your home will require to be remailed. The Quarterly is for the individual use of the missionary, and if you wish it, drop us a card and we will gladly place your name on the list. Write to the General Superintendent and not to the Herald Publishing House.

Yours for the work.

T. A. HOUGAS, General Superintendent.

HENDERSON, Iowa, May 3, 1904.

"The boy Problem."

It would seem from this assignment that the boy is considered a problem, more or less difficult of solution. In any problem that confronts us, we are prone to apply our individual experience in its solution, hence our paper may be largely from our individual viewpoint. It is presumed to be our purpose to show how the boy may be interested in the Sunday-school. We are not prepared to believe the boy to be more of a problem or prodigal than the sister, only as his masculine tastes appeal more to out-door sports, and not naturally as emotional. Nor yet is he as continually under a mother's watchful care, nor the confidences between mother and son as great as that of the girls, though they should be. The boy "must be shown," hence his peculiarities must be studied and the remedy made to suit the individual needs.

KINDNESS IS THE KEY TO HUMAN HEARTS.

"God is love," hence the parent, superintendent, and teacher must love, and, loving, conquer. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." So you must love every one of your class, looking beyond his present to the eternal future, beyond his body to his immortal spirit; for it may be, if you notice, that the dirty-faced and ragged-coated boy may be your problem, partly because you bestow more abundant honor on the bright, winsome ones. Then another boy may be a problem as he does not seem to comprehend the lesson or your teaching. It may be the solution rests with you. Simplify your talk.

HAVE LESSONS PREPARED.

Talk to him, not over him. Again, see that your boys (and girls, too) have the lessons prepared. The truant, the listless ones, in day or Sunday-school are more often those who have not their lessons. A boy, girl, man, or woman generally loves to tell what he knows, but shrinks from feelings of ignorance, or being unprepared, just as some are apt to remain away from conventions by reason of not having prepared the paper or talk assigned them. To get these lessons, you must secure the coöperation of the parents failing to do so; then get your class or neglected pupils together during the week for lesson study.

KEEP THE QUESTIONS GOING

In your class-work; repeat, encourage, illustrate. Hands up, "Quick, who knows?" Next. Do not allow a drag, not a moment wasted. Do not let the boy have time to yawn and look out the window. A boy loves a foot-race, beating a tin pan, because it is noisy, better than he does a nap. Study the individual boy. One is forward, another backward. One answers all questions, the other none. And yet the latter is not less brilliant, but by nature reserved, or bashful. Develop the latter by individual attention, or he becomes discouraged. A boy generally loves to be helpful and "do things." Give him the chance both in and out of school. The four young men who robbed the car-barns in Chicago and murdered nine men in two months, confess that idleness and lack of home training were principal factors in their ruin. So let the parents by kindness and firmness see that the boy enters your class. Then let the teacher with smiles of proper encouragement apply and implant the lesson, for a future harvest.

THE CHIEF CAUSE.

I remember well one of the "worst boys" I ever saw, and while he was naturally wild, his parents were the chief cause. I oft heard the father scold him and use such expressions as "I'll kill you, you rascal, you dirty brat," etc. Meanwhile the mother would defend the boy. Then next day the mother would scold him, with "I'll skin you alive, you whelp." Any wonder the boy lost respect for parents and home? No. We feel, with Secretary of the Treasury Shaw, there are too many "don'ts" in the home of the boy. Train him by daily teaching, kindly given, not by "get out of here," "don't do this," "don't do that." I have long held that a horse is not worth keeping that will not become docile or yield to kind treatment, and so a boy who will not respond to kindness is a moral degenerate, and I am thankful they are few. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and he will not depart from it," is generally true.

TEACH METHOD.

Did you ever note how punctual a boy is with chores when he knows that he must do them and there is a set time for the doing? When the writer was about eight years of age his mother set him the task of learning six verses each week for Sunday-school. At first he murmured, but soon learned that a gentle, firm will denied him pleasures or play until it was done. He soon learned to do it from force of habit, and desire as well. These verses early learned have been most easily recalled and helpful in our later ministry.

MAKE YOUR CLASS WORK ATTRACTIVE.

The boys love to gaze at a "circus poster" because of its color. Make him feel you count on him, that he is a "prop" in the spiritual house you are building. A boy is rarely a coward. He will fight for his comrades, so he will stand by you, if he feels you depend on him. When your lesson is finished, if a few moments remain, fill it in with a story of a Joseph, David, Samuel, Moses, or "Lincoln the rail-splitter." Point out the ennobling and the useful. Tell how noble boys become honored men. Boys love to anticipate what they will be when "grewed up;" find the aspiration of the boys. If to become a minister, teach how he must "study to show himself approved." "Instant in season and out of season, thoroughly furnished unto good works." If an engineer or conductor, how promptness, sobriety, tend to preserve his own and others' lives.

Pray with him, if need be. Romp with him on lawn, or through field and forest, invite him to your home, visit him in his. Enumerate his good deeds. Add to his faith virtue, temperance, patience, godliness; subtract from his temperament evil tendencies; multiply his blessings, forestall division that he may be numbered with God's elect.

ALMA M. FYRANDO.

For the Little Sioux District convention.

International Convention, Y. M. C. A.

At Buffalo, New, York, May 11 to 15. Tickets on sale via Nickel Plate Road, May 10, 11, and 12, at one fare, plus 25 cents for the round trip. Good returning May 23. For full particulars, call on your nearest agent, or address John Y. Calahan, general agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago, Illinois.

(4)

Letter Department.

RAVENDEN, Arkansas, May 2, 1904.

Editors Herald: After a short season of preaching at the Graceland Mining Camp I had the privilege of baptizing a model family of three yesterday: Bro. and Sr. Holton and their daughter Marie. Bro. Holton has for some years been associated with the People's Church of Omaha, Nebraska. Their little daughter Laura of four summers stoutly persisted that I should also baptize her. She pulled off her shoes and met me at the water's edge, saying, "Put me under the water, too; I want to go into the Church, too." It was a pathetic scene, and affected the crowds who lined the banks of the sparkling Pine Creek.

Respectfully,

D. R. BALDWIN.

MALLARD, Iowa, May 4, 1904.

Editors Herald: Being a believer in the restored gospel as revealed to the Palmyra Seer by the angel of God, I still rejoice in the good news of salvation as taught in the sacred books of the Church and by her ministers when preaching under the influence and power of the "Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." There is something mysterious and yet sublime about the means ordained of God by which sinners are transformed into children of light.

The testimony of the Spirit to the soul, bearing witness of the divinity of the work and the power of God to save, is indeed a precious boon given of God: "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil." It is pleasant to sit and read the word of God as recorded in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, and feel the cheering influence of the Holy Spirit increase until it bears testimony of the divine authenticity of that which is written, much of which has come to us as a revelation of Jesus Christ to his church. Yes; there is something encouraging in the fact that while it is written "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution," yet, "the Lord knoweth them that are his." So long as we are true to God and Christ and abide in the faith there is no power in the universe that can pluck us out of the hands of the divine One. There is also very much assurance found in the revealed fact that "the judge of all the earth" will "do right" for he will "not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears: But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth."

The weary, thirsty soul looks up and pants for the waters of life and for that divine rest which is only found in Christ, who is always a present help in time of need. Christ never forsakes a true disciple nor permits a wandering sheep to be lost so long as he will hear and heed "the voice of the Good Shepherd." In this life we are sometimes misunderstood, and therefore misrepresented, but though the winds may howl, the storm beat, and the billows rage and foam, yet when that "still small voice" of the Spirit is heard, all is calm within and the blessed assurance is enjoyed which whispers to the soul, "All is well." And we know that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

God has carefully guarded the agency of man and will neither permit the Devil nor his agents to rob the children of the covenant of this precious boon.

The greatest liberty that may be enjoyed by mortal man is vouchsafed to all under the gospel of Christ and the law of God. However, we are admonished to "stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled with the yoke of bondage. For, brethren, we have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another." In this liberty we rejoice and thank God for it, though we know full well that license should not be mistaken for liberty.

The writer left home under trying circumstances, owing to sickness of our baby, for the purpose of administering to Bro. Peter Olson's baby that has been very low for some ten or twelve days, and is still very near death. May the Lord bless it according to his own will. Good news from home states that baby is better, and I am holding a few services here at Mallard and making my home with Bro. D. King and wife, while I visit and try to encourage the Saints.

For a few days the weather has been very fine and farmers are almost too busy to attend services, though some are willing to do so.

The Saints here, with the exception of the baby mentioned, are usually well, and so far as we have had time to visit them they are interested in the good work of salvation.

In gospel bonds,
CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

WILLIAMSBURG, Colorado, April 29, 1904.

Dear Herald: I write a few words to say I am still in the faith and because I promised I would either write to the HERALD or to Bro. C. E. Willey, and I know that he will see the HERALD if he is among Saints. I write on account of old Sr. Tate of Coal Creek. Bro. Willey, when he was here, and I called on her and as she is very old, and has a son who is a helpless paralytic, I took with me a little lunch and when the elder visited, read a chapter, and talked with them. I prepared the dinner and it was much enjoyed by each.

Sr. Tate was eighty-two years old on the twenty-fourth day of last December and is still able to attend to her household duties and everything is so clean and nice, and yesterday, April 28, I was very pleased to have her and her daughter visit me. We live nearly ten miles apart and she longs for the companionship of Saints as she is alone of her family in the faith. She was very pleased to see the pictures of the Lamoni church, Saints' Home, and of the Twelve and Seventy, which I am so glad I have. I bought them when I and husband were at the Lamoni General Conference two years ago.

I see by the HERALD that Bro. Willey is not sent here this conference year. I hope that he may be able to do much good in the mission where he is sent. I am here alone, in the faith, only mother is about a mile away, and there is no meeting or Sunday-school held here by any one on account of the coal strike. It is quiet here and in the southern part of the State there has been much trouble.

My family are scattered; I and the youngest ones are here, and husband and one boy in Iowa; another son in Montana, and one son I do not know where, but I place them all in the care of my Lord and Savior. I hold Sunday-school in my own family, studying the Intermediate Quarterly, HERALD, and Hope, and am trying in my weak way to teach my children the gospel in its fullness. Dear Saints, pray for me that I may be wise and faithful unto the end.

Your sister,
MRS. MOSES DAVIES.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 5, 1904.

Dear Herald: The Church here is moving forward, and we are being blessed exceedingly. At the return of spring, clothed in loveliness by the aid of the late refreshing and abundant rains, our hearts are made glad; also we have rejoiced by hearing, since General Conference, many encouraging words from the returning elders, Chatburn, Etzenhouser, Wixom, of California, I. M. Smith, T. C. Kelley, and Bro. Pickering; from Oklahoma. Elder A. H. Parsons made a short visit, also, from Holden. He is, it seems to us, adding to his gift that of boldness of utterance—as also some of the local brethren, in favor of reform in municipal affairs, or, what we hear so much about—civic righteousness.

Our last sacrament meeting was a spiritual feast. Elder Kemp, moved by the Spirit, spoke encouragingly to the Saints and among them to Srs. Warnock and Horton, recognizing their faithfulness and work in the gospel. He also gave the interpretation of a prophecy "in tongues." Bro. H. Sterrett rejoiced in the Spirit; the prayers and influence of a faithful mother were reviewed; and though they had passed, during his earlier life in Utah, through many afflictions and persecutions, they had endured patiently. She had gone to her rest, and he could now feel joyful in the Lord, because of his goodness.

Young and old as well as the middle aged are evincing much interest in church work.
A. A. H.

BOND, Mississippi, April 29, 1904.

Editor Herald: I am glad to say I have been in the latter-day work now for about ten years and I am not yet tired, as my work is not finished. Some may say, "How do you know?" Well, I know by this: The Savior has not called me away yet. I feel at a loss sometimes, as no other one here confesses being a Latter Day Saint but myself and the Holy Spirit. Many and many times I want the bread and wine, but can not get it, and for fear that I will eat at the wrong house, I will wait till my chance comes.

I pray that the day and time will come when I can sit down and partake of His body with other Saints. I desire the prayers of all the Saints to help me that I may live faithful and not faint on the way. I am trusting God. Send a missionary here, so I can enjoy the work once more.

As I prayed that the annual conference would be successful I am happy to know that it was a grand one in the Lord and I am praying, too, that Zion may grow stronger each day. God help us that we may be of one faith though we are far apart. I can say that God has ever blessed me.

Your sister,
DORA BOOKER.

FORT COLLINS, Colorado, May 2, 1904.

Editors Herald: As we have moved out here close to Fort Collins for our health, we would like to know if there are any Saints living in or around Fort Collins. If there are, we would be pleased to know the address of some of them. We live about two miles west of Fort Collins and if the elders ever come through they will find a welcome at our place.

We belonged to the Edgerton Junction Branch, and we have our Sunday-school at our house as a home class. There are twelve in all belonging to our school.

Your brother in Christ,
JEROME MIDDLETON.

LEES SUMMIT, Missouri, April 2, 1904.

Dear Herald: I feel strong in the faith and am so thankful unto my Heavenly Father that I was shown the truth and did accept it as I did. Many long years did I wander blind, had eyes but could not see. How I wish that more could see the truth and obey before it is too late, as we are certainly living in the evening of time, when the great God of heaven will appear, and then the question is, Are you ready?

I am striving to live so that I may be worthy of a home in Zion when the time comes for the gathering of God's people. Still if I could only become able to convert even one, it would be great encouragement.

I would be very glad indeed to have some of the Lees Summit Saints to come out; I live only six miles east, and I do enjoy talking with the Saints. If anybody should happen to see this letter and are in shape to use Ensigns and HERALDS, if they will only write me I would be pleased to send them a bundle of papers. I can get no one out here to read the papers. Still I know two families of Saints, but Ensigns and HERALDS are not to be found in their homes. Dear Saints, how can you be without the church paper? It is a great consolation to me to read the good truths that are found in these papers.

May God bless his servants that are gone forth among the nations of the earth to carry the gospel to the people. May his Spirit be with each one to help him bear the persecution of the world.

Ever praying for the kingdom,

W. R. RUSH.

TORONTO, Ontario, March 24, 1904.

Editor Herald: A few reasons why I wish to subscribe to the SAINTS' HERALD: First, that I may be kept well posted and in touch with headquarters. Second, that I may know more fully how the Lord is blessing, guiding, and leading his people. Third, that I may know how his people are acting and appreciating his mercies towards them. Fourth, that I may be better acquainted with the doctrines and principles of the Church as are set forth from time to time in the columns of the HERALD and other church literature, thus enabling me to become a better and more useful Saint, both in the Church, the Sunday-school, the workshops, and the world at large. Fifth, that I may help to increase the outpour of our printing house, knowing that the more that is issued the cheaper it can be sold, and as this is a reading age therefore it is much better to lend or give a tract, pamphlet, or book, than it is to argue, talk, or try to persuade. Sixth, because the printing house is a gift from God, sanctioned and blessed by him, and providing another way by which we can carry out his commands when he says, "Let every one tell his neighbor."

I shall feel it my duty not only to read the paper for the good it contains, but to contribute to its columns by sending up any clipping from our local papers that I may think will be of interest to the Saints and other readers, subjected to the knowledge, wisdom, and business tact of the editors.

F. M. FREEMAN.

POND CREEK, Oklahoma, April 14, 1904.

Editors Herald: I will relate a dream I had last fall that impressed me greatly:

It seemed I looked up in the heavens. I saw horsemen in battle array. They started in the northeast and were traveling in a southwestern direction. Behind them was a snowstorm. Trees were uprooted and broken off following after them, and all around and above were fowls of the air flying and I thought of the nineteenth chapter of Revelation, about the supper of the great God. I wish some one would write an interpretation of that chapter. I kept studying and praying for an interpretation of the dream, and I had the following dream or vision: I thought I looked out west and saw in the heavens a people marching,—all sizes of people. They were playing band or other music. It seemed my daughter Ethel was sitting by me and I wondered if she was permitted to see the vision. I said "Ethel, do you see the vision." She said, "yes," and looked frightened. I awoke singing, "'Tis a war that calls for valor," etc.

Surely the last battle is now on. I have given out a great deal of literature here. A good many say they would like to hear our elders preach. I tell them they will hear something besides anecdotes, comparisons, or some death-bed scenes to scare people into joining the Church, for it will be the fullness of the everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ. I have talked with the mayor of our city and given him literature. He does not belong to any church, but he is a kind-hearted man and is not too prejudiced to investigate.

All the churches have united together here except the Catholic, and have built a large tabernacle and hired an evangelist to preach for them. They have been holding meetings several weeks and I hear they have had over two hundred conversions. They intend to hold their meetings all summer. I hope our elders will come and bring a tent. Elder W. P. Pickering tried to get the Congregational and Methodist churches, but could not. They had some excuse.

The few families of Saints here are trying to let their light shine, I think. We would like so much to live in a branch of the Church where our children could hear the fullness of the gospel all the time, but we have been hindered every time we tried to move, so I thought the Lord had a work here for us to do before he would permit us to go, and I have been trying to get the gospel before the people in every way I could.

Pray for us that we may be faithful, and that our children may obey the gospel.

Yours in the faith,

MRS EFFIE J. McCULLOUGH.

HOWELL, Michigan, May 2, 1904.

Editors Herald: There are no Saints here but self and children. It is sad to notice week after week, as one reads the death list, how many loved ones have been called home to Father. I feel very sorry for the sisters who have lost kind and loving companions. I know full well how hard it is to be left, and in middle life, with no strong and loving arm to lean upon, and now I am doubly bereft, as my children are married and have left the home nest, which leaves the poor mother all alone. I spend many sad and lonely hours thinking of the past and bygone times, with no voice in the house to speak to me, yet I try to derive comfort from the thought that there are others just as lonely, and also from the silent preachers, the church papers. Each year brings its changes.

May God in loving mercy cheer all lonely hearts. I often wonder where Sr. Thayer, late of Michigan, is, and if she remembers her lone sister in Howell who spent some happy hours with her in Lansing. I would be pleased to hear from her, and in fact any of the Saints.

My heart was saddened when I read that Graceland College was to be closed. I would I had the means to help to keep it open! My prayer is that all Saints may ever press onward and do their best, and that Zion may soon be redeemed.

Your sister in Christ,

A. J. DALEY.

WATERLOO, Iowa, April 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: Seeing the request of Mrs. Lucy Williams, of Oregon, asking the Prayer Union to remember her children who have whooping-cough, I thought I would write and have you forward to her this letter or print the following remedy for whooping-cough. I have used it in my family, and know it often helps when other remedies fail. Mix three parts of strained honey and one part of gin. Give a teaspoonful three or four times a day, and after each hard coughing spell.

Your sister,

MRS. BELLE GOODRICH.

THAYER, Missouri, April 24, 1904.

Dear Herald: I have not been long in the faith, but believe it to be the true gospel with all my heart, and would like to say that I enjoy reading the letters from mothers and sisters, so full of instructions and beautiful thoughts, and am thankful to God and his servants that I am a member of the Latter Day Saint Church, which I am proud of, that I can speak and write a word of praise for them. Being unable to attend Sunday-school this morning on account of wet weather, the thought came to me that I could do nothing better than let our brothers and sisters know how the work is progressing in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

The Saints, though few in number, will not give up the tug of war or let their flag be furled. By God's good pleasure we have the good old gospel preached every first and third Sunday by Elder H. J. Bootman and Priest W. P. Bootman. They also conduct meetings every other Sunday at Barren Hollow to a good, attentive audience, and although young in the work, they have a large circle of friends and are highly respected. No one can say aught against them and the Saints in the Canehill District make it their pleasure to strive to follow their example as true hearted Saints. Feeling my own weakness, and striving hard to do the Master's will, their timely admonitions are a blessing to me. My prayer is that I may ever be faithful to the covenant. May God bless them and all his servants in their great efforts to enlighten the people, so there may be no more children tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine. We meet together on the first Sunday of every month for prayer and testimonial and sacrament services.

On January 31, Bro. W. P. Bootman led to the water for baptism, Bro. J. F. Cunningham and myself; the confirmation took place at the home of Bro. and Sr. Cunningham by Elders James T. Davis and H. J. Bootman, with friends and Saints in attendance. Our prayer is that a branch may be built up in this portion of the Lord's vineyard that all the honest in heart may be gathered in. We, the Saints of this community, have the promise from our heavenly Father through the spirit of prophecy, that there should be added from time to time such as should be saved, and that we should if faithful, be organized into a perfect organization, and there was one designated in due time to preside. Our prayer is that we may be faithful and that our heavenly Father will hasten the time that the promise may be fulfilled according to his will.

At the present we are conducting a union Sunday-school, which was organized by Bro. James T. Davis about eighteen months ago, which progresses satisfactorily under the care of Sr. Cunningham, our amiable superintendent, and Bro. Cunningham, our Bible-class teacher, the writer as assistant superintendent. Our secretary and treasurer is Mr. B. Frisbee, the accomplished son of Bro. and Sr. Frisbee, who for a long time were the only Saints in this community, and who are still firm in the faith, lending a helping hand wherever they can. They have fought a good fight of faith.

Last Sunday Bro. James T. Davis delivered an able and forceful sermon, taking "Charity" for his text (1 Corinthians 13), which was highly appreciated by many present. In the afternoon the Saints and families met at Bro. Cunningham's for special prayer and testimony meeting; Bro. Davis leading. In the evening he preached an able discourse on tithing, which I heartily indorse, and I hope and pray my offering will be ready when Bishop Sparling will be down in this section of Missouri again. We are looking forward with great joy to the time set for the district quarterly conference to be held at Canehill, Thayer, Missouri, and we will be greatly pleased to meet and welcome as many Saints and friends as can come. May God grant us such blessings as we stand in need of, and "May faith and hope, and love abound;

Our sins and errors be forgiven;
And we, from day to day, be found
Children of God and heirs of heaven."

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. L. LUCHSINGER.

CALDWELL, Idaho, April 22, 1904.

Editors Herald: There are a few scattered Saints here, who are deprived of church privileges, as there is no branch near. It has been some over three years since I heard the gospel preached. I have had many trials and have tried in my weakness to live prayerfully, trusting in the Lord for his mercies. He has heard my pleadings and has answered my prayer. My husband who seemed to be drifting away in darkness is now ready to be baptized. He has expressed his desire and we are very anxious for some elder to come and hold a series of meetings. I believe there would also be others gathered in at this place. Any elder passing through here would be welcomed at our home. We live four miles east of Caldwell, Idaho, and if they will drop us a card we will try and meet them at the station. We take the HERALD, which is a great comfort to us.

Your sister,
MARY I. DAVIS.

Extracts from Letters.

Under date of May 4, F. C. Warnky wrote from Kansas City, Missouri: "I am well, never felt better. Bro. Ammon White and I are preaching every week in six different places here in the city, besides the regular places of worship. Many receive the word gladly and some are accepting it."

Bro. J. M. Terry wrote from Oakland, California, April 29: "The general outlook in our district is fully up to the average and a little beyond. There are no discouragements in the atmosphere that we know of. The spiritual condition of the branches of the district is very peaceful, and at many points the work is moving. There will be a goodly garnering of the pure wheat in California yet, with careful handling of the sickle. I was pleased to meet Bro. Parkin filled with good words for the general spirit of the Conference. He intends to arrange his business to the end of spending more time in the field. I am having very satisfactory health at the present time. I go to Stockton on the 8th prox., for a series of meetings, and probably to Chico the latter part of May for a series of meetings and an official act in uniting two hearts as one."

Miscellaneous Department.

Conference Minutes.

Leeds.—The quarterly conference convened at the Burley Branch Room on April 9 and 10. Apostle J. W. Rushton presided, W. R. Roberts, secretary. The privileges of the conference were accorded to Elder T. J. Sheldon and Priest F. Harper. The following officers were elected to act during the sessions: Deacon, E. Abbott; chorister, P. Headlam; organist, W. R. Roberts. Minutes of the last Conference were read. The district's spiritual report, and the Leeds Branch spiritual report were read, and the president of the Burley Branch gave a verbal report. The committee on statistical record reported verbally. A report of the committee of the missionary fund was read. The auditing committee of district finances reported, and they were continued with the addition of Elder T. Taylor. The treasurer gave a report and same was placed in the hands of the auditing committee. Elder J. T. Girdham was appointed vice-president of the district. A recommendation to ordain Bro. Herbert Mason to the office of deacon was presented by the Leeds Branch. The recommendation was indorsed and the ordination was performed on the following day. Resolved that the presidents of the Leeds and Burley Branches be appointed as a committee to purchase tracts, Voice of Warnings, and other suitable literature to be placed in the hands of the missionaries to assist them in their work, and that they have power to receive subscriptions for this end. The Bishop's agent, Bro. Rudd gave in his report. Resolved that the general, missionary, district, and local authorities be sustained. It was resolved to hold the next conference at Wortley. On Sunday the services were held at 10.30 a. m., 2.30 and 6.30 p. m. The preacher in the morning was Elder T. J. Sheldon. Fellowship service in the afternoon. Apostle J. W. Rushton preached to a crowded congregation in the evening.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Southern States; Greeting: It having been determined by the constituted authorities of the Church that my lot should be cast with you during the ensuing conference year, I take this means of greeting you, and soliciting your hearty coöperation and aid in the promulgation of the gospel truth in the South.

My field being so large, embracing the states of Kentucky, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, Indian Territory, and Oklahoma, it will be readily seen that it will be impossible for me to visit each part of the field in person during the year; and probably I will not be able to visit any one place more than once unless urgent demands make it necessary. It will also be recognized that I shall not be able to take the oversight of all this territory in person. I have therefore requested Bro. Thomas C. Kelley to take charge in what was before known as the Southeastern Mission; and Bro. Hyrum O. Smith to take charge in what was formerly the Southwestern Mission.

I trust that they will have hearty support from the ministry, general and local; and that each one, especially of the missionary force, will be ready to respond with any assistance that they may need in their work.

It will be remembered by the missionary force that their quarterly reports are due the first of July, October, January, and March. Please note this particularly and report on the very first day of these months, as a delay in reporting to these brethren will necessitate a delay in their reporting to me, and in my reporting to the Presidency; so that promptness will be essential to the orderly conduct of the work committed to us.

I have not yet determined whether I shall visit the Southeast or the Southwest first; it will depend upon conditions as they may be reported in the future.

My permanent address will be my home address, box 329, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa, as it will be impossible for me to establish a field address, not being in any one place sufficiently long to make it convenient.

I shall always be pleased to hear from my associates in the missionary work and from others; but in advising or counseling regarding labor application should be made to the associate ministers in charge, Brn. Kelley and Smith. The address of both is Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, unless they shall establish and publish field addresses.

With many of the Saints in this extended field I have had pleasant associations in the past; I trust that they may be continued, and that in making new acquaintances with those who have taken up the work since I was in these fields, I may find as pleasant association.

That God may recognize us in our united labors, and through our instrumentality enlighten the minds of many regarding the Christ and his truth, let us ever pray.

Commending you all to the favor and grace of God, I am,
Your colaborer, HEMAN C. SMITH.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Iowa Mission (comprising Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and North and South Dakota); Greeting: Having been appointed in charge of this mission again, it is with pleasure that I, with you, enter upon the work of another year, and thank you one and all for the confidence and assistance given me the past year, and hope to so conduct myself that I may merit your continued confidence and hearty cooperation in the work that now lies before us, to the end that the coming year's work may show better results than the one just closed; and as the urgent necessities of the work make demands on us let every one, whether officer or member, make greater effort and use greater diligence in the performance of whatever duty may fall to his lot, that we may find favor with God to the extent that he may bless us with greater light and wisdom than ever before.

I have chosen the following brethren to assist as missionaries in charge of the fields named below:

D. C. White, in charge of the missionary work in the Lamoni Stake.

James McKiernan, Farmington, Iowa, Eastern Iowa and Nauvoo District.

N. V. Sheldon, Dow City, Iowa, Des Moines District.

D. M. Rudd, Dow City, Iowa, Gallands Grove and Little Sioux Districts.

H. A. McCoy, Perry, Iowa, Minnesota.

William Sparling, Mohall, North Dakota, North Dakota. Romanan Wight, Dow City, Iowa, Northern and Central Nebraska Districts.

J. R. Sutton, Holden, Missouri, Southern Nebraska District. R. O. Self, Nebraska City, Nebraska, Western Nebraska and Black Hills.

M. M. Turpen, Pleasanton, Iowa, Fremont and Pottawattamie Districts.

Elder James Caffall will labor as before, as missionary at large, and report directly to the minister in charge of the field.

Elder J. F. Mintun will labor in the city of Des Moines and suburbs, and report to the minister in charge of the mission.

In order to facilitate the missionary work we have thought it best to transfer Bro. C. E. Irwin from the Nauvoo District to the Lamoni Stake, and Bro. J. B. Wildermuth from the Eastern Iowa District to the Nauvoo District.

I urge those of the ministry to make their reports in full according to the blanks furnished you, and promptly on the first of July, October, January, and March, make out your report and send it to your respective missionaries in charge, and do not forget that on the first of March we want a yearly report as well as a quarterly report. The ministry are all requested to report the spiritual and moral standing of the Saints where they have labored, also the surrounding conditions and the prospects for future labor. These are essential points and should be carefully reported. Please see to it, brethren.

I would also be pleased to have all the local ministry who do any missionary work report it each quarter that we may know what is being done, and give credit to the local as well as the traveling ministry.

Now brethren, push out into the world and lift the warning voice, affirming the truth of this gospel and its power to save, in humility and meekness; always stand ready to give a reason for the hope we have in us, but do not go with a chip on your shoulder hunting for trouble; however, be ready to meet the issues; whenever you are challenged for debate, consult the minister in charge and every assistance will be given you that can be in reason.

Leave the old beaten trails and get out into new localities so far as it is at all possible; leave the branches to themselves for a season and let the local officers care for them as the Lord has directed, and I am assured that the Father above will bless both branch and missionary. Let the local ministry feel the burden of responsibility that God has placed upon them, and, Saints, sustain them well and do not forget to help the missionary with a little means, to use in his work, as well as prayers. If any of you think it is encouraging to try to open the work in a new place where you are not wanted on an empty stomach and an empty pocketbook and no place to sleep, try it! A little means sometimes enables an elder to effectually make an opening where otherwise he would be under the necessity of leaving it. By helping in this way we are workers together in the great cause.

We would be pleased to hear from the scattered members and what the prospects are for opening the work in their locality. This will help us in spreading the good news, especially if you can keep a missionary for a short time while he does some preaching. Write to me at Lamoni, Iowa, Box 225, or to the missionary in charge of the district where you live, and we will strive to improve every such opportunity we can.

Let us go to with our might and render diligent and faithful service to our Lord, and may God bless you, is the prayer of your brother and colaborer in the gospel,

FREDERICK A. SMITH.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 28, 1904.

The Bishopric.

BISHOPS' NOTICES.

To the Saints of Northern California District; Greeting: The General Conference has just closed and we enter upon a new year with the future all untried before us. We have the assurance of God's blessing upon the observance of all his expressed will. Whatever burden rests upon the Church as a whole, is to the extent of personal ability (as a part of it) our individual burden. Whatever hurts the Church hurts us as individuals. Christ has organized his church and placed men as overseers to guide its interests. They are honest men, true men, who would defend its interests at the loss of life. What they have done has been done in good faith.

Now the Church is in a dilemma financially. The members have in their possession the means to relieve it. Will they do it? Graceland is to be closed if the debt is not paid. The Lord said: "The college debt should be paid."—Doctrine and Covenants 125:16. Let every one rid himself of this responsibility and show his fidelity to the "family of God on earth." We ought to respond willingly. We ought to be just as much interested in the growth and advancement of the Church as we are in our own business. We should remember we are "stewards" in the household of God on earth. We should make a proper response to all the demands of the Church to build up the kingdom of God. This is our first duty. Let us put the means in the hands of the Bishop to pay the debt, so at the end of the present term it may continue to do its good work of preparing men to do better work in sending the gospel to the world. If an unlearned man can preach by the help of God's Spirit, how much better can he do it if he has his mind well filled with a knowledge of things in general. "Study all good books." All who are willing, please send the money to me. I would suggest collecting money by the branches and forwarding to me, and I will send to the Presiding Bishop. Trusting to find a hearty response, I am,
Your fellow servant for Christ's sake,

CHARLES A. PARKIN.

3010 Sixteenth Street, SAN FRANCISCO, May 3, 1904.

To the Beloved Saints of the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw, Indian Territory, and Spring River Districts; Greeting: Another conference year has passed and we are now upon the threshold of a new one; and it is with supreme love and confidence that I as your humble servant and district bishop come before you with this epistle, knowing that for the present God has intrusted me with the financial interests of his work in the above territory.

During the past year the Saints have, in the main, been mindful of God's law in their tithes and offering. The indigent widow and those like the one to whom the Master referred as casting in more than they all have not been wanting in the discharge of their duty. In some instances, at least, had I not known that God looks with loving favor and blessings upon such noble sacrifice, I could have felt to say, "I can not take it from you"; but knowing that God requires the heart and a willing mind (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7), I know that by giving, the reward, to them, would be abundant both here and hereafter.

Now, dear Saints, the Lord has declared the hastening time is here.

The world is ripening in sin and indifference, our watchword should be faithfulness and on to victory. Will we heed the call and the warnings? Yes, I believe many will. Why not? There are just as noble men and women in our midst as ever graced the earth, men and women who have sacrificed and are still ready and willing to sacrifice. So let us labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all. (See Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.) To do this we must observe God's commandments pertaining to tithes and offerings. The temporal and spiritual provisions of God's law are so closely interwoven that we can not afford to neglect or lightly consider either.

The gospel of the kingdom must be preached and those desiring salvation must be warned. To accomplish this requires continuous sacrifice, and we must not expect unearned rewards to come to us.

The Conference has given us a goodly number of wise, efficient laborers and the field is white. Will we rally to the support of their loved ones while they go forth freed from the thought of home destitution? Yes. The Saints in the Southwest are most all generous and willing, having faith in God and his marvelous work which he has so marvelously brought to us.

So with renewed determination and unfaltering purpose let us abide in the straight and the narrow way, until victory is ours. Do not defer discharging your duty, thinking the amount too small, or that by and by you will have more to spare. Remember that duty in temporal matters should not be deferred any more than in spiritual. It is the continuous, unceasing, every-day effort that will bring and keep us in favor with God.

Hoping and believing that the blessings of heaven here and hereafter will attend all humble, devoted, and sacrificing Saints, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

ELLIS SHORT.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 2, 1904.

To the Saints of Western Nebraska and Black Hills: Another year has entered in and the servants of God's church are again sent forth to warn those who are in darkness, that the kingdom of God and his Christ is preached to the children of men. To do this work intrusted to our care will take a united effort of all the Saints. To accomplish this the Church will need your financial help to support the families of God's servants who are sent forth to proclaim the angelic message. So please send in your tithes and offerings to me. My address for this year is Nebraska City, Nebraska, and I will receipt you for same. Trusting the Lord will prosper you all, and add his Spirit to cheer and comfort each one, is my prayer in Jesus' name.

In gospel bonds,

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska, April 30, 1904.

R. O. SELF.

Conference Notices.

The Gallands Grove District conference will convene at Deloit, Iowa, May 28, at 9 a. m. for prayer and testimony, and at 10 a. m. for business. Let all reports be sent in in plenty of time to the secretary, Mrs. Helen B. Rudd. D. M. Rudd, president.

The second quarterly conference of the Spokane District will convene in Spokane, Washington, at 2.30 p. m., the first Saturday in June, 1904. All are cordially invited to attend. Any information desired can be had by addressing George W. Winegar, president, or O. L. Ferguson, secretary, 106 Post Street, Spokane, Washington.

The conference of the Pottawattamie District will convene with the Boomer Branch, May 28, at 10 a. m. M. M. Turpen, president.

Pottawattamie District conference convenes May 28, 1904, at 10 a. m., in Boomer. It is requested that all reports and other papers to come before the conference be forwarded to the secretary not later than May 23. J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

The Northeastern Kansas District will convene May 28, 1904, at 10 a. m., with the Idlewild Branch in Clay County, Kansas. We trust the Saints and the priesthood will make an especial effort to attend. Samuel Twombly, president.

Convention Notices.

Sunday-school convention of the Northern Michigan District will be held at Coleman, Michigan, in Saints' church, June 17, 1904, at 1.30 p. m. In the evening, in the place of the regular program, there will be institute work. There will be two papers written on interesting subjects followed by discussion. B. S. Lambkins, superintendent.

The Northern Nebraska District Association will convene at Columbus, Nebraska, Saturday, May 28, 1904. This will be an institute session and an interesting program has been prepared. It is hoped that all schools will send delegates. Alice Watkins, secretary.

The Religio convention of the Des Moines District will convene at Des Moines, Iowa, June 3. Alice Kramer, secretary.

Notices.

There will be a two-day meeting at Beels, Maine, June 4 and 5, 1904. Earnest W. Wilson.

Died.

GILLEN.—Sr. Nancy (Moore) Gillen was born April 22, 1852, at Cainesville, Pottawattamie County, Iowa; was baptized at Provo, Utah, April 7, 1867, by J. W. Morgan, and confirmed by the same and J. S. Lee; was married to Elder J. W. Gillen, at Malad, Idaho, the same year. They moved thence to Alameda County, California, remaining until 1873, thence to Montana, thence in 1876 to Decatur County, Iowa, where they located and made their home, building later in Lamoni, where on Saturday, April 30, she died after but two days of sickness. She leaves three sons, James Arthur, Byron, and Wilber, and three daughters, Mrs. Nora Briggs, Mrs. Edward Ballou, and Lulu. All except Byron and Wilber were at the burial services which were held at the home, Tuesday, May 3, 1904. Her body was taken to Rose Hill Cemetery, where it waits the fulfilling of the days of earth's probation. She was a faithful woman, wife, and mother. No better encomium can be had for any one.

SIMPSON.—Sr. Bessie A. Simpson was born February 18, 1870, at Yuba City, Suttler County, California, and died at the North Pacific Sanitarium, Portland, Oregon, April 13, 1904, after a long illness. She died firm in the faith, with a bright hope of the resurrection. Funeral services conducted by Elder N. T. Chapman. She was laid to rest in the Riverview Cemetery.

HAILEY.—Iva May, daughter of Bro. Alma and Nellie Hailey, Avenue City, Missouri. Born December 15, 1903. Relief from suffering came to the little one April 7, 1904, when her spirit took its flight to the realms above. Funeral services at the home conducted by Elder J. C. Vaughn, who preached the sermon. Interment in the family cemetery.

RUNKLES.—At his home in Allen Township, Harrison County, Iowa, Mr. Daniel Runkles, aged 69 years, 10 months, and 19 days. He was born in Ohio, May 20, 1834; came to Iowa in 1891; was married to Elizabeth Merritt in 1855, to which union thirteen children were born, nine boys and four girls. He leaves a wife, six children, eighteen grandchildren and six great-grandchildren to mourn. Funeral services were held at his home, preaching by Elder J. W. Lane, to a large assembly of friends and relatives. Mr. Runkles had many acquaintances in Harrison and Monona Counties who will regret his death. He lived an honest, honorable life and had a host of friends and no enemies. His body was laid to rest in the Magnolia cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

FENDER.—Bro. A. Fender, of pneumonia April 1, 1904, at Goodland, Kansas. Was born February 16, 1844, near Dixon, Illinois. Was united in marriage to America Myers January 1, 1866, at Dixon, Illinois. To them were born ten children. All are living except one. Was baptized September 27, 1892, at Goodland, Kansas, by S. D. Payne. The Goodland Republic speaks well of him. He was a kind, loving husband and father and died firm in the faith of the gospel. Funeral preached by S. J. Madden.

$12.25 to Buffalo, New York, and Return

via Nickel Plate Road, May 10, 11, and 12, with return limit of May 23. Also lowest rates to Fort Wayne, Cleveland, Erie, and other eastern points. Three trains daily, with first-class modern equipment. Meals in Nickel Plate dining-cars, on American club meal plan, ranging in price from thirty-five cents to one dollar; also service a la carte. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road. When contemplating an eastern trip, write John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago, Illinois. Chicago Depot, corner Van Buren and La Salle Streets,—the only passenger station in Chicago on the Elevated Railroad Loop. (5)

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

"She Wants to Tell."

Sr. M. E. Webber of Queensboro, Ontario, Canada, writes January 12, 1904, saying: "Dear Brother:—I want to tell you how pleased I am with your Quit-to-bac. My brother used less than two boxes and has not touched tobacco since he began to use it and has gained in flesh and is better in every way." If it cures others, why not you? Three boxes sent post-paid for $1.50 with positive guarantee of cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.

Address, (Bro.) E. F. Ordway, 228 Hancock St., Peoria, Ill., U. S. A.

The World's Greatest Newspaper

The Chicago Tribune

---

Up-to-date farmers read

"PRACTICAL FARMING,"

the best Agriculture Department
in the West

---

For Women . . .

Fashions
Beauty Hints
Household Talks
Book Reviews

For Men . . . .

Market Reports
Sporting News
Fair Politics

For Children . . .

Cut-Outs
Comics
Stories

McCutcheon's Cartoons

---

$4.00 a Year Daily
$6.50 Daily and Sunday

One Fare Round-Trip

plus 25 cents, to Cleveland, Ohio, and return, via Nickel Plate Road, May 16, 17, and 18. Tickets good going date of sale and returning to and including June 10, by depositing same.

Three through daily express trains to Ft. Wayne, Cleveland, Erie, Buffalo, New York, Boston, and New England points, carrying vestibuled sleeping-cars. Meals served in Nickel Plate dining-cars, on American Club meal plan, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00; also service a la Carte. Chicago depot: La Salle and Van Buren Streets. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road. Chicago city ticket offices, 111 Adams Street and auditorium Annex. Phone Central 2057. 3

TO the Saints who may feel an interest in the Independence Manufacturing and Mercantile Company, we beg to say that on account of an almost unexpected heavy trade in our planing mill and lumber yard, we have, in order to meet the demand, increased our capital from $25,000 to $50,000 and now offer stock in shares from $10 up.

We certainly think money so invested will earn from ten to fifteen per cent and at the same time aid in building up and establishing permanent industries of our own, also furnish labor to the unemployed.

Shall not the children of the kingdom be as wise as the children of the world?

Send all remittances to A. R. White, Independence, Missouri.

19-4t      ELLIS SHORT, President.
                 A. R. WHITE, Secretary.

Herald Office Publications.

All books are sold by numbers. Send numbers only. Send all orders and make all remittances payable to Herald Publishing House, Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County Iowa.

MINISTRY BLANK REPORTS.
209. Per dozen . . . . . 10

REORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
201. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 60

NEW TRACTS.

- No. 36. Can Belief Alone Save? Per dozen 10C.
- No. 208. Teachings in Contrast. The teachings of the Utah Church and the Reorganization in parallel columns. Per dozen 15C.
- No. 209. The Church of Jesus Christ. Where is it? How shall I know it? There are many churches of men; only the one church of Christ. Price, per dozen 20c., $1.50 per 100
- No. 5. The Latter Day Saints; Who Are They? Dozen 20C.

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
Lamoni, Iowa.

BANKING BY MAIL.

WRITE US AT ONCE

If you have any money deposited on which you are not receiving interest.

WE PAY 5 PER CENT INTEREST.

The COMMERCIAL BANK, Lamoni, Iowa.

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

The Nickel Plate Road

will sell tickets to Cleveland, Ohio, and return, account of National Baptist Anniversary, on May 16, 17, 18, at rate of one fare for the round-trip, plus 25 cents. Tickets good going date of sale. By depositing same, extended return limit of June 10 may be secured. Through service to New York City, Boston and other eastern points. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road. Meals on American Club Meal Plan ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00; also service a la Carte. Chicago depot: La Salle and Van Buren Streets, the only passenger station in Chicago on the elevated loop. Chicago city ticket offices, 111 Adams Street and Auditorium Annex. Phone Central 2057. 2

Business Men, Elders, and Other Latter Day Saint Friends

We buy old typewriters, rebuild them, and make them practically new, and sell from $10 up. Write us for our special bargain list just out

Sherman Art Company
1224 Congress St., 17r4t Chicago

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
LAMONI - - IOWA

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS, 1852 to 1900.

- 197. Paper. . . . . 50
- 198. Cloth, limp. . . . . 35

The Saints' Herald

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, May 18, 1904

Number 20

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
 of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR
 I. A. SMITH . . . . . ASSISTANT EDITOR
 FRED'K M. SMITH . . . . . CORRESPONDING EDITOR
 Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
Replacing the Laborers . . . . .	449
Original Articles:
The House of the Lord as Seen in Vision . . . . .	452
The Apostolic Office . . . . .	454
Honor One Another in Humility . . . . .	462
Mothers' Home Column:
Program for June Meetings of Daughters of Zion . . . . .	463
Half Hours With Parents and Teachers . . . . .	464
Letter Department:
Sketch No. 2 . . . . .	465
Letters . . . . .	466
Extracts from Letters . . . . .	468
Miscellaneous Department:
Conference Minutes:
Kirtland . . . . .	468
Pastoral:
William H. Kelley . . . . .	469
F. M. Sheehy—U. W. Greene . . . . .	469
Isaac M. Smith . . . . .	469
Standing High Council . . . . .	469
The Situation as to Graceland College . . . . .	470

Editorial.

REPLACING THE LABORERS.

I was once young but now I am old.—Proverbs.

It is a great source of comfort when a man realizes that he is growing old and must soon lay down the weapons of his warfare in the flesh and leave the contest he has been waging, to think that by the wise provision of his creation other younger and more able men are waiting, ready and willing to take up the arms his failing strength has caused him to relinquish, take his place in the ranks, and carry on in wisdom and with vigor the conflict from which he is being removed.

He is a fortunate man indeed, who, when advancing years and waning strength warn him to abate his desires for the things of earth and turn his attention towards becoming reconciled to the cessation of earthly being, can feel the assurance that he will be replaced by others as wise and as strong in moral strength as he has been. Such a man can look with cheerful consciousness upon the approach of the time of the end.

We were very forcibly reminded of the foregoing thoughts and the text from which we have drawn them while at the April Conference now past. The personnel of the working membership showed that a large number of the laborers of three or four decades past and gone had dropped out of the ranks and but few, and they aged and worn, were left, like battered oaks guarding the fringes of the forest doing what they might to shelter their comrades within the circle from the winds and the storms. But notwithstanding the apparent sturdiness of many of these elderly ones and the consideration which was given them, the fact was very apparent that the burden was being carried by the middle-aged and the younger element, the latter being a much abler class of men, or at least more advanced than their predecessors of half a century ago were. This is but natural and right. The battle is to the strong, other things being equal, and the multitude of counselors insures the safety of the people. The methods of thought of the present generation admit of a wider range of examination and consideration to questions of importance because of the facilities for research that the advancement in learning and the gathering of statistical information offer to the inquirer. The opportunities for improvement are eagerly seized by the young, and as occasion to use what is gathered presents itself, there is a disposition to enter in and give others the benefit of that which they have acquired.

We were pleased with the fact that the young men who were presented to the Conference to occupy the time of the people had no special excuses to offer, but went into the pulpit and made their efforts earnestly and conscientiously, trusting for guidance of the Spirit which has been with them in their different fields of labor, and apparently profiting by the experience of those with whom they had labored and those whom they accounted as leaders in thought and action.

Whatever the results of the last Conference may be, whether for good or ill, based on the action taken during the session, time must determine. Judged from the character of the sermons preached it was intellectual and spiritual. The majority of the speakers were from the missionary force, many of them young men who have been making their records for the past few years in the various fields to which they have been appointed. It was very gratifying to note that though many of them had little or no previous notice of being called upon to speak, each speaker represented himself and the work in a direct, clear, and logical manner, showing a greater or lesser acquaintance with the subject on which he was speaking, each marshaling his evidences closely and with a confidence born of a satisfaction with the knowledge he had secured and the testimony of the Spirit to himself. With others of the older men of the Church we felt assured that the cause rested in good hands, and that the ranks were being filled with young and strong advocates.

Judged by the prayer-meetings held from time to time, the Conference was less enjoyable to many than some others of the past conferences have been. There was a tendency upon the part of some to occupy more time than they were really entitled to in so large an assembly, in the relating of testimonies that were beautiful and strong to them, but were made more tedious to others by their length and prosiness.

There were no very marked manifestations in tongues or prophecy during the services, and but one of any note, and that one was not profitable to the listeners because of its length and its tediousness and general inappropriateness to the occasion. There were many bright, concise, and strengthening testimonies borne and many earnest prayers offered, both for the good of the Church and for the comfort and strengthening of the membership.

The uncommonly cold weather for the season made it very difficult to obtain proper ventilation for the auditorium, and many suffered thereby. Notwithstanding this, there was considerably less sickness than at any other conference so largely attended, within our recollection. Colds were contracted from drafts blowing in from the windows upon the congregation, the winds being very strong; and both the business and the prayer and preaching services were much disturbed by almost incessant coughing. The saying, "The drafty old Temple," was not uncommon as an expression regarding it as a place of large gathering. It is a fault of the building that it is difficult to ventilate it. It stands upon a hill and is open to all the winds that blow, without shelter, the only method of ventilation being the raising of the windows, and this made it difficult to ventilate without permitting a draft.

The attendance at Conference was very general from all parts of the Middle West and the East, and the delegations from many places were very full and complete.

We here call attention to the fact that some districts in appointing their delegates appointed one or more, and then by a vote authorized those who might be present thus appointed to appoint others of their different districts who might be present to fill up the delegations. This is an error, the Book of Rules providing that delegates are to be appointed and certificates of appointment issued to them. They should be appointed by the districts direct, as neither branch nor district has the right to delegate the appointing power. It is true that in some instances in the past such appointing of delegates has been acquiesced in as an act of courtesy to the districts appointing. We advise that hereafter the branches and districts appointing delegates do so in strict accordance with the rules.

The business of the Conference was conducted in good spirit. There was if possible more directness in speech in the discussions that took place, but the utmost good humor prevailed, with possibly very few exceptions, and things were said in the heat of debate that might perhaps have been better left unsaid.

The principal items of business were the consideration of a resolution declaring in favor of closing Graceland College until the debt incurred for building and deficit in running expenses had been paid. The discussion was earnest, and while it resulted in the resolution to close prevailing, the margin, barely twenty-five majority, was so small that it could hardly be called a very decisive vote. However, all may be for the best, and it is the evident duty of the membership to rise to the appreciation of the condition and pay the debt.

Should Graceland be closed at the close of the present term it will involve the Church in the payment of a sum about equal to the running expenses for a year, as the Church would be under the necessity of meeting obligations incurred by the Board of Trustees in an effort to raise means by scholarship system and the carrying out of contracts which have already been made. It may therefore be a serious question whether it would not be better to at least continue for another year and have the matter understood that the question would be considered at the next Conference, and a sufficient notice given to the different branches and districts, and a more extended notice of the nature of the business to be done may be given, and a more explicit vote had upon the question when finally decided. It is a question also under the Articles of Incorporation under which Graceland is running, whether a declaration to close can legally be made unless sixty days notice of the consideration of the question shall have been given, as provided for by the Articles of Incorporation. No previous notice of the introduction of the resolution favoring the close of the College had been given, hence the possibility of irregularity arising for further consideration.

The other important item of business was the revision of the Book of Rules. The committee who performed this duty of revision presented an excellent report. Opportunity was given for the consideration of the various items sought to be amended, and the Book of Rules as finally adopted and which will be published will be found to be an excellent work, and we presume all we will need for years to come. It certainly seems time to let the matter rest, as there has been a patient effort put forth in the past ten years sufficient to make it all that should be had.

The meeting of the Conference at Kirtland can not be said to have been an experiment, as the efforts of the Bishopric to provide for the exigencies of the occasion were ample, and with the unexampled attendance without notice to those who had been making provision for entertainment, gave cause for wonderment that it was so much of a success as it was.

The Saints in the far West and the Saints in the far East met on historic ground, and the acquaintance and satisfaction of meeting thus together was fraught with good to all. The effort to rehabilitate the old landmark is a laudable one, and we could not help reflecting that possibly the building stood for more than simply a place to meet and hold our spring session of Conference. "Thou shalt not remove the ancient landmarks," was one of the rigid rules of the old covenant and the code founded upon it, from which has evolved the statute enactments of our representative government for the preservation of the rights of the people with the occupation of the places which they inhabit. We believe that the Temple stands as a grand and well-established landmark of the doctrinal and spiritual faith and order of the Church established in 1830. It was here that the School of the Prophets was held; it was here that many of the revelations given during the formative period of the Church were presented to the Church; it was here that the organization of the different orders in the Church were perfected; it was here that the endowment was received which qualified men for the presentation of the spiritual things belonging to the kingdom; it was here that the Solemn Assembly convened, adopted and declared the rules of faith and practice which were given of God and acknowledged by the Church to be the law and ordinances under which the Church was expected to live and thrive.

Notwithstanding a period of time elapsing since the Saints removed from Ohio, carelessness and vandalism had defaced and desecrated the building which had been erected for better things; yet, under the reviving influence of the Spirit which turns the hearts of the fathers to the children and the hearts of the children to the fathers, the ancient landmark has been brightened and the spiritual excellence of the standards of belief, written and oral, are shining with renewed luster under the ministration of the power of truth. We could but agree with others when they stated, "There is a spiritual solemnity and seriousness as of the upper world still felt and recognized within the walls of the ancient Temple built by command of God!" Under the ministration of the Bishopric the four principal curtains had been hung in their places, and though the hanging was not altogether complete, yet it was sufficient to show the visitors how the building must have looked when the original curtains were hung. The benediction pronounced by a brother as he left the precincts of the edifice, "May the divine benediction of the Lord continue to rest with his people, and the Temple stand as a continued monument of the sending of the angel with the restored gospel to enlighten the children of men and save them who believe," be the prayer of all who read these lines and are willing that the truth shall triumph.

---

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In our Original Article column this week we reproduce an article written by Joseph Smith and published in the HERALD in 1878. This is reproduced by request.

We are informed by Bro. Heman C. Smith, secretary of the Quorum of Twelve, that Bro. J. T. Hackett, of Williams Bay, Wisconsin, was appointed at the April Conference to labor in Eastern Pennsylvania, for the conference year, and that by an error in transcribing it was omitted in the report. Certificate has been duly issued to Bro. Hackett.

Bishop Kelley reports a number of letters urging the liquidation of the College debt and continuation of the work. The following will show the tenor of them:

"Dos Palos, California, May 9: Inclosed find money order for three dollars for the Graceland Rescue Fund to be credited as follows. [Following are the names of six of the family at fifty cents each.] If two thirds of the church membership will do likewise the College need not be closed. So may it be! J. W. Steele." "Leeds, North Dakota, May 11: I see by the HERALD that Graceland College is to be closed and that it is possible it may be opened June [September] 1. Now I expected to send two of my children to commence with the September term. Now I will pay their schooling ahead and will agree to pay fifty dollars on the debt this fall. We had no crop here last season and money is very scarce with me at the present. Now I mean business. I will send my note due November 1 for fifty dollars. I would like to hear from the one who has this matter in charge. Very respectfully, F. G. Spaulding." Bro. Charles Albertson of Idaho bespeaks places for his two daughters for the beginning of the September term to remain until they have completed their education. Bro. John Zimmermann of Philadelphia has given direction thus: "The College should not stop. Draw on me any time for five hundred dollars running expenses." These are samples. Who should be discouraged with the educational work of the Church?

Original Articles.

THE HOUSE OF THE LORD AS SEEN IN VISION.

In sleep, or in waking hour, I can not tell, I saw and realized what I shall try to relate; and, though some years have elapsed, what was seen and heard during that eventful hour remains vividly impressed upon my mind, as if heard and seen but yesternight.

I had slept and was consciously awake, and approaching a building apparently eighty feet long by fifty in width, the walls of which were about twenty-five feet high from the top of the foundation, which was raised some five or six feet from the ground, and of stone roughly dressed by the mason's hammer, though jointed and faced at the edges. The front was to the east, and as I approached it from the northeast I had time to note that in the outside of the building no attempt had been made by the builders at ornamentation; except that along the sides were a series of pilasters standing out from the main wall a few inches, though forming a part of the wall, the bases of which were finished in square work, pedestal and pediment; the tops in capitals rich and peculiar in style, but which I can not describe. At the front a flight of nine wide, stone steps reaching nearly across the building, led up to the entrance; this entrance being an open porch about sixteen feet deep and thirty wide. Two finished pillars stood at the outer edge of this porch supporting, with the walls at either side, three arches. These pillars had square and solid finishes at the base, but rose from their bases round and smooth, to their caps, which were very richly carved in square designs; the arches which they supported the inner and outer feet of, were exactly circular, and formed of cut stone, and were only a few feet below the ceiling of the porch. The inner side of the porch formed the outer wall of the assembly-room, and was richly paneled between the open doors, one at either side of the porch opening straight into the building from the front, and apparently three and a half feet wide and nine or ten feet high.

As I passed up the steps I seemed to know that the Saints were assembling for some purpose, and yet I felt no care or responsibility respecting the nature of the assembly, any more than to be there with the rest. I found three or four brothers standing at the right, or north end of the porch, conversing in low and quiet tones together. I joined them for a moment; and while standing there I saw numbers of both brothers and sisters come up the steps and pass across the porch and into the open doors, the brothers to the right, the sisters to the left. Some I knew, some were strangers whom I had never seen before. Some, of both men and women, who came briskly up the steps and walked freely across the porch went no further than the doors; when for some cause that I could not see, they stopped, and either turned immediately round and walked hastily away, or turned hesitatingly, slowly, and sadly and with frequent backward glances, went away as if overcome and distressed.

While standing thus a shadowy fear came over me, that as I saw some turned away, for reasons that I did not know, and as I then supposed by some one standing at the doors, so I might not be permitted to go in; and in my perplexed and doubting frame of mind, I turned from the brethren with whom I was chatting and walked slowly toward the door upon the right, thinking that if I saw the least sign that I was not to go in, I would turn at once away, as if I did not care to enter. As I came near to the doorway, to my surprise I saw neither sentinel nor usher, neither door, shutter, nor bolt, lock nor hinge, nothing but the open doorway with door-jams, lintel and threshold smooth and free from any indication of there ever having been a shutter with which to close the opening. My surprise was increased when, being permitted to pass in, I found no one inside having charge of the door or aisle; nor anything to betray the mystery of turning those back that had gone away.

I went carefully in, taking my hat off as I passed the doorway, and walked about a third of the way up the aisle which led the entire length of the room, ending against the side of the pulpit platform. A dim and mellow light shone in the building, though I saw no windows; nor did it seem as if the light came from the sun shining out of doors, for none came in at the open doors. There were two aisles, one at either side of the room, a trifle wider than the doorway, dividing the seated portion into three parts; the seats were similar to some styles of church pews, or slips, finished in dark, heavy, polished woods, and at the two sides running level from end to end, and across the room, except at the two sides of the pulpit platform where they were placed lengthwise, facing the pulpit. The middle rows of seats were in parallel lines with those at the side, and level with them for about two thirds of the way from pulpit to the door, when they rose in a circle, arc down, until the last one was raised five or six feet. At equal distances apart, and at the outer side of the inner row of seats, were four pillars supporting the roof.

The pulpit platform was very elaborately finished, and contained a seated apartment, richly furnished; two small circular tables, one at either side, chairs at the sides, and an orator's desk, all of a similar material and finished as the seats, only much more exquisitely carved and colored. The walls were, apparently, painted, and finished in pictured designs, that at the back of the platform much more elaborate and complicated than those at the sides; the ceiling, also, was richly decorated; the cornices profusely so, with carven imagery, scroll and counter-scroll, reaching along the sides, and down the corners, and along the walls in places, corresponding to the pilasters upon the outer surface. In suitable niches, and on brackets carved and embellished, were pictures and statuettes, the pictures representing scenes in the life of the Savior, the apostles of the New Testament, and of the Book of Mormon; the statuettes the figures of covenant leaders of both continents, ancient and modern.

I had, however, only time to catch a hasty glimpse of all that is so briefly described, when a sort of metallic, ringing sound from the left-hand door, and a kind of flashing light diverted my attention, and I looked across to the other side, but saw nothing.

I had hardly time to renew my survey of the walls and ceiling when I was fairly startled by a repetition of the sound already referred to, this time at the door on the right through which I had come; I turned in my seat and saw a man standing at the doorway facing it as if to come in, and in the doorway itself, two crossed swords, much like the old-fashioned broadswords, only a trifle broader; the hilts rested against the door-jams, one at either side, about two and a half feet from the floor, and the swords crossed each other, edge down, with their points resting against the opposite door-jam about the height of a man's shoulder from the floor. The hilts were plain, the guards like the common sabre guard, the handle part of dark material; the blades polished till they shone like silver, with a golden tinge. As the man stood for a moment, the swords shook a little, as if held in the hand of a person nervous from excitement, and from them as they shivered, a pale, shimmering yellow light seemed to flash, or flow.

The man turned away with a sigh, and with a sad face; the swords remained just a moment, but before the footsteps of the repulsed man had reached the outer edge of the porch, they were drawn back apparently into the door-jam itself, turning upward as if upon a hinge formed at the hilts. I looked the door-jams all over after the swords were withdrawn; but there was no sign or trace of any opening in which the swords might be hid; nor was there any evidence of the existence of the swords to be seen.

I turned to renew my survey of the room and as my eyes became more accustomed to the peculiar light, I discovered new and wondrous beauty in the workmanship and finish of the whole. I had, as it seemed, come early; for the arrivals were more frequent, the intervals between them shorter and shorter; the room was filling up on both sides, and in the center; the dropping of the swords in either doorway was also more frequent, the light flashing from them more continuous; while now and then, from some cause, the falling of them seemed like a crash, as if they were clashed furiously together, at which the light seemed to blaze throughout the room and corruscate along the emblazoned imagery of cornice and column like yellow lightning. I sat in wonder, but not in fear, for within was complete quiet; I began to contemplate the arrangements of the pulpit, where now a page, a lad of some sixteen years of age, was moving to and fro arranging something upon the stand, the tables, and chairs.

A sudden loud clashing of the swords in the doorway just behind me, together with a vivid flashing of the strange light, caused me to turn my eyes again in that direction; a man was standing outside the doorway, with his teeth shut tightly together, his hands clenched, and eyes blazing with fury and disappointment; before him were the crossed swords, quivering as if instinct with life, and endowed with emotion; the polished blades had changed their hue from the silvery, golden-tinged glitter to the color of a golden flame, while the light that scintillated from them flashed over and filled the room to the remotest corner, flooding seat and pillar, pulpit and alter, niche and statuette, picture and scroll, with its terrible brilliancy. The man turned away, the swords were withdrawn, but in an instant he came towards the door quickly, and was almost in the room with his right foot touching the threshold, when with a crash that sent the blood surging through my veins with the shock, the swords fell before him, sending a flood of flame and light over the room again; he turned again away, and stepping back a few paces, he started toward the door the third time with determination, despair and fierce rage pictured in his face; and again those terrible swords, now white and glowing like molten gold, fell before him, striking fire from their clashing crossing, shaking the building with the fierceness and suddenness of their fall, and filling the doorway from top to bottom and from side to side with their quivering, eager motion, putting before the enraged and desperate man seeking an entrance, a wall of flaming swords and seeming fire. I shall never forget the fearful expression of baffled desire and helpless rage depicted in the face of the man thus barred out.

I watched him depart, and though many came, some coming in, some being prevented and going away, I saw only the one who tried more than once to enter. It seemed that when a person came up who was to come in, no stir, nor change took place at the door; but when some one came who was not to come in, the swords dropped lightly into place across the doorway, striking slightly together as they fell. If the one thus stopped from coming in, at once turned away, the swords were withdrawn, without noise or light; but if they remained standing, as if waiting to come in or to question why they were thus stopped, the blades of the swords would begin to blaze and quiver with motion, and light would begin to emit from them, similar in appearance to the flame from a hot, briskly blazing wood fire; and the longer the person stood there, the more energetic would be the shivering motion of the swords, and the more vivid and intense would be the light flying from them, until in some instances, as in the one described, the room would be illumined with the light, which resembled that which heralds the rising sun seen as it comes unclouded from the shades of night; or like the glow at the setting of the sun.

I saw some enter whom in my waking, every-day hours I knew were deemed not meet for a membership with the faithful; and I saw some rejected who are deemed most worthy.

Some walked briskly in, some slowly; none who entered seemed to take any heed to whether there was anything to stop or hinder them; while some walking slowly and gently would find their way barred with the crossed swords, they having fallen into place gently and noiselessly; others, coming quickly, would be met suddenly by the fall of the swords with a clash and noise, as if sprung into place by the stroke of a nervous and impatient hand; and if entrance were insisted upon, or seemed to be, the crossed swords began to glow, moving up and down, quivering as if with emotion and life, and light would emit from them as from the burnished plowshare set in the sun. My waking eyes have never looked upon workmanship so complete, so fit, so richly elaborate in design and finish, so profuse and yet so grandly harmonious as that of the room I have so poorly described. The outside of the building was massive and solid, a building only impressive because of its solidity and strength; without a spire, and yet perfect in proportion, design, and finish.

It faded from my sight, as sublunary things began to obtrude themselves upon my conscious being; but the impressions made upon my mind will never be effaced. Well may we believe that the "flaming swords that turn every way to guard the way of the tree of life," still stand as prescient sentinels at the open doors of the temple of eternal peace, and dispute with the fierceness of awakened wrath the entrance of human or devilish design and work.—Joseph Smith in SAINTS' HERALD, June 1, 1878.

THE APOSTOLIC OFFICE.

About nineteen hundred years ago a child was born in Bethlehem of Judea who, when he grew older, claimed to be the Son of God. Jesus was the child. He was the Messiah long foretold in song and prophecy. He came doing the will of God—from heaven he came "sent of God." The church he founded (for does not the New Testament give a history of his church?) was well organized, and the glorious gospel he preached strikes the human soul with the splendor of the noon-day sun.

We read of various officers in the church who composed Christ's ministry, and prominent among them were men called apostles. The following lines are devoted especially to the apostles and the office in the church they occupied.

THE CALLING OF THE APOSTLES.

When it was day, he [Jesus] called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles; Simon, (whom he also named Peter,) and Andrew his brother, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew, Matthew and Thomas, James the son of Alpheus, and Simon called Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James, and Judas Iscariot, which also was the traitor—Luke 6: 13-16.

They were named "apostles" after being chosen. This society of twelve men was typified, indeed, in the Mosaic polity. The "seventy" Jesus sent forth were also prefigured in the Mosaic institution, as were the elders and deacons of Christ's church. (Read Joshua 4: 4, 5; Numbers 11: 16, 17; Deuteronomy 32: 7; 2 Chronicles 35: 14, 15.)

In common usage the word "apostle" is sometimes applied to one sent forth to execute important business; so we hear of apostles of infidelity and of socialism. The "twelve" referred to, however, were named "apostles" and occupied, though in the church, a distinct office from others "sent" to do work for the Lord. I wish, therefore, when using the term "apostle" to be understood as referring to a man holding the apostolic office—the same that the "twelve" held. Philip, a servant of the Lord, was not an apostle though he was "one sent." He was an "evangelist." (See Acts 21: 8.) The "seventy" of Luke (see 10: 1) were apostles in the sense of those "sent," but they did not possess the office and dignity of the "twelve" or Jesus would have appointed all "seventies" or all "apostles"—eighty-two seventies or eighty-two apostles; but he "chose twelve whom also he named apostles."

QUALIFICATIONS OF AN APOSTLE.

It has been thought that the twelve apostles were to be only "witnesses" to the resurrection of Christ and, therefore, seeing the Lord was an essential qualification to the apostleship, Paul says, "Am I not an apostle? am I not free? have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? are not ye my work in the Lord?"—1 Corinthians 9: 1.

But one should not gather from it that Paul says, "Am I not an apostle because I have seen Jesus Christ our Lord?" Paul here asks four questions, one like unto another, and if he was an apostle because he had "seen Christ," he was an apostle because the Corinthians were his "work in the Lord"; and the conclusion is, if the Corinthians had not been his "work in the Lord," he would not have been an apostle. We can not admit such a conclusion. Paul did not base his apostleship on what his corporeal eye had seen, for he said, "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Corinthians 12: 3.

The apostles were executive officers as well as witnesses. The following is adduced as evidence:

And he [Christ] gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive.—Ephesians 4: 11-14.

The apostles, together with the other officers, were given for the "perfecting of the saints"; for the "work of the ministry"; for the "edifying of the body of Christ"; "till we all come in the unity of the faith"; and that we "henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine." In other words, to keep hell's artillery and men's false theology from battering or leading away the church of God from truth, which alone can save.

It was not absolutely necessary that one should see the marred body of Christ, after his resurrection, to entitle one to the apostleship. The view is here submitted for thoughtful reflection that Paul saw "Jesus Christ our Lord" in vision. Jesus, forty days after his passion, ascended "into heaven," and Peter speaking of him says,

Whom the heaven must receive [hold] until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.—Acts 3: 21.

Since Paul did not see Christ until after his ascension "into heaven" and Christ was to be "received" or retained in heaven "until the restitution of all things" spoken of by the prophets, could Paul have seen Jesus personally, in the flesh?

But, if Christ did appear to Paul in his real resurrected state subsequently to the "forty days" after his passion, can not he appear to other men as well and thus qualify them for the high and holy calling of an apostle? Otherwise, we limit his power to whom "all power in heaven and in earth is given."

To see Christ after his resurrection was not an indispensable qualification to the apostleship. The "twelve" men Jesus called to his ministry were "apostles" before Christ was resurrected and were "apostles" even before his death; for we read, "Now, the names of the twelve apostles are these."—Matthew 10: 2. This fact, then, proves that men could be apostles without seeing Christ in his resurrected state. Was not Judas an apostle, and did he see Christ in his resurrected state?

The apostles, both before Christ's death and after his resurrection, held their offices by virtue of a call from God: "And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles."—Luke 6:13.

After his resurrection Jesus said to Paul:

I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee.—Acts 26: 16.

Paul, in his epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Colossians, and to Timothy, declared he was "called to be an apostle," "an apostle of Jesus Christ by the commandment of God," "an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God," and nowhere does he base his right to the apostleship on his having seen Christ after he rose from the dead. Since Jesus Christ is the "same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever" (Hebrews 13: 8), can he not now "appear" unto men "for this purpose," to make of them ministers and witnesses of things which he shall reveal?

Must an apostle have seen Christ in order to be a "witness" that he lives? If so, every other officer in God's church should see Christ before they say he lives and is our redeemer. The "comforter, which is the Holy Ghost" was to be given by God to "guide into all truth." "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost," One can then know by the Holy Ghost that Jesus is the Lord. When one knows that Jesus is the Lord, whether apostle or elder, he is competent to be a witness, even a special witness, to that fact. Jesus said to his apostles:

But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.—Acts 1: 8.

When Paul explicated the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead (1 Corinthians 15) much of his exposition was based on what was revealed; not on knowledge acquired by the natural eye. Apostles could testify and bear witness of Christ without seeing him, the same as Paul could unfold the doctrine of the resurrection and testify of its truthfulness without seeing the dead come forth from their graves.

Paul says that Christ after his resurrection, was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve: after that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that, he was seen of James; then of all the apostles. And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time.—1 Corinthians 15: 5-8.

Here Paul says Christ was seen by Cephas, the twelve, by "five hundred brethren at once," James, and himself. If from this we conclude that no one can be an apostle without seeing Christ because those apostles saw him we should conclude that there can be no brethren now without seeing the Lord because those "five hundred brethren" saw him.

The call of God together with the reception of the Holy Ghost qualified men for the apostleship. The apostles of old, both before Christ's death and after, were apostles because God set them in the church as apostles. Who will say that men shall not now be made apostles "by the will of God," or that a call of God together with the reception of the Holy Ghost is not a safe rock upon which may be placed the feet of an apostle—whether in former or in latter days?

THE APOSTLES HELD AN OFFICE.

It seems well here to make clear the fact that the apostles held an office. Judas, the betrayer of Christ, held the apostleship, as is evident from his call by Christ and the following words:

And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen. That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place.—Acts 1: 24, 25.

Peter, in speaking of the transgression of Judas, says:

For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and, his bishopric [marginal rendering is "office"] let another take.—Acts 1: 20.

The quotation in Psalms referred to, reads, "Let his days be few; and let another take his office."—109: 8. Paul says in Romans 11: 13: "Inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office." Therefore, there was established, with the consent of the divine mind (which could not err) the office of an apostle in the church of which Christ was the head and Peter and Paul and others were members.

Judas held the apostleship, for he "fell" from it, and Paul magnified his "office." The oracles of God do, then, show that such an office existed in the church nineteen hundred years ago. In the precincts of Calvary is to be found the pattern for the church in all ages.

SHOULD WE HAVE APOSTLES NOW?

Why should we not have apostles now? There is nothing in the Bible to forbid the welcome thought; they are needed. If an elder is now doing and can do the work once done by the apostles (part of which was preaching the gospel and baptizing, see Mark 16: 15, 16), why can not the elders do the works once done by the deacons and evangelists and the other officers? Why? "I speak as to wise men."

Man as a babe is like the babes of creation; he has two eyes, two feet, one head, etc. Now, if the first babe of creation had never been overtaken by death it would have two eyes, two feet, one head, etc.—the exact counterpart of man to-day. Man is now as he was formed by God in the beginning. Unchangeability is marked on the works of God. Jesus said, "I will build my church."—Matthew 16: 18. We are informed how it was built and likened as then built (with apostles) to a human body. (See 1 Corinthians 12: 12-28.) If death or apostasy has not overtaken the church it is evident as light that it will not have changed in one point. If an apostasy has occurred, it is just as clear that the church should be patterned after the original one as that man is now made like as in the beginning. We do not read that scaffolding was made of the apostles and when the church was completed the apostles were torn away. We find recorded that God set them "in the church" (1 Corinthians 12: 28), not on the outside.

So long as apostolic duties have not ceased, just that long apostles are needed. That proposition is set down on a parallel with the following: So long as there are men to believe that long the gospel is needed. Deacons and elders are in the church now evidently because there are duties for them to perform. Are an elder's duties now different from the duties of the elders of the Bible? No. Should a deacon perform duties higher or of less consequence than his predecessors of Bible times? No. Then who are performing the apostolic duties, or are they neglected? If the elders and deacons of to-day can do the works allotted to the apostles, perfect the saints, carry on the work of the ministry, edify the body of Christ, and keep the church from being blown to pieces by false doctrines, why could not the inspired elders and deacons of old do the same—why had the church apostles besides? Reader, ponder in your mind these stupendous questions.

One office in the church does not need perpetuating more than any other office, for they are all God-appointed, not humanly devised. If all the offices are not to be retained it would be more consistent with our understanding of order to have the lesser (not the greater) offices discarded first. We can better do away with certain municipal offices than with high federal offices. We disagree with the doing away of any office in the church of God. God would not squander his time and perplex his people by having an office in his church not to be filled. Since revelation certifies the apostolic office was set in the church, let revelation from God and that alone declare it has been abrogated.

Since God set in the church apostles, evangelists, teachers, deacons, etc., by what rule of interpretation is one or more offices to be blotted out and one or more retained? If apostolic duties exist now, apostles should execute them. If the office of an apostle was not to be perpetuated, the offices of evangelist and deacon were not to be continued; for it is just as clear that God set apostles as that he set the other offices in the church. The claim that the office of an apostle was not to be continued in the church is not true, for the principle couched in it, when logically reduced, strikes at every office in the church. We contend for the "faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

If the church we read of in the Bible had continued along the ages unchanged to our day, a history of the church now would be like the history of the church then, for it would be the same church; and to be the same church it must not be lacking apostles any more than it must be lacking its doctrine of faith in God. If Christianity taught nineteen hundred years ago was not like what now professes to be Christianity, then what now professes to be Christianity is not Christianity. If the church had a perfect organization in Paul's day (and it surely had, for God meets in his plan of salvation every necessity and indulges in no work of supererogation), the church now should have a like organization, or it is not perfect in organization. There appears to be no room for doubting that a church like the church of the Bible in organization, faith, doctrine, and practice is, in fact, the church of Jesus Christ; for if it is like (exactly corresponding to) that church, it is the thing itself.

THE APOSTOLIC OFFICE WAS CONTINUED IN THE CHURCH.

As when a governor dies he does not take the governorship from the State, so when an apostle is removed from his office by death or transgression the office remains. This the record clearly shows. There was a succession of apostles. The apostles prayed to the Lord to make known who should take part of the "ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell," and they gave "forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles." (Acts 1:26.) If the apostolic office was not to be perpetuated after the death of the twelve apostles, Judas should have had no successor. Here was the time for the "eleven apostles" to make known to all future generations whether the apostolic office should be continued in the church. How did they decide? They chose Matthias and he was numbered with them. One is chosen and again there are twelve apostles. Why did Judas have a successor if there were to be no successors? Should a man who lost his office by transgression, betraying his blessed Lord, have a successor and his brethren who died (many of them by sanguinary means, but all, in the bosom of the true faith) have no successors? If so, one must sin to have an office in the church of God perpetuated.

No doubt the action of the eleven apostles in choosing Matthias was smiled upon by God; no doubt they acted with divine authority, for Jesus had appeared to them "after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." (Acts 1:3.) This rupture in the "twelve" (Judas' fall) was one of the "things pertaining to the kingdom of God" and David had said, "Let another take his office."

Though the apostles selected Matthias, who had "accompanied with them all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among them" (Acts 1:21), yet that fact does not prove one could not be an apostle without being with Christ from the beginning, for Paul was not with him all through his ministry "from the baptism of John to that day that he was taken up," and yet he was "not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles." (2 Corinthians 11:5.)

The kingdom of God, or church, had been set up prior to the choosing of Matthias (read Matthew 11:12; 18:17; 23:13; 12:28); therefore, the apostles showed by their action that they favored the continuance of the apostolic office in the church.

Is it safe to conclude that because we do not know who succeeded each of the other apostles, they had therefore no successors? If so, because we can not find who succeeded Philip the evangelist, or the elders of Ephesus, or the seven so-called deacons, we should conclude they had no successors. We defend the presence of evangelists, elders, and deacons in the church now because we believe they were in the church founded by Christ. Why should we not defend apostles now when we find there were apostles in the church during all that period of time which the New Testament covers in its history of the church?

We read in Acts 13:1-3 of the call by the Holy Ghost of Barnabas and Saul and of their ordination. In the following chapter we read: "Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people." Barnabas is here made equal to Paul in office. Now, neither Paul nor Barnabas was of the "twelve" Jesus called in the beginning of his ministry; so we have now to admit either that Paul and Barnabas were successors to two of the "twelve" or there were fourteen apostles at one time. Either admission will prove the perpetuity of the office and the continuance in the church of apostles.

Matthew 19:28 and Revelation 21:14 have been quoted by some writers as applying against all apostles not of the "twelve" Jesus called as recorded in Luke, chapter 6. If one wishes to have the first "twelve" sit on the "twelve thrones" (but Judas was one of the first "twelve") or inscribed on the "twelve foundations," very well; the others will remain apostles still. If those passages mean that there were no God-sent apostles after the first "twelve," Paul with all his claims to the apostleship must be denounced and Barnabas must be rejected. If there were to be only twelve apostles, why did the church recognize men as apostles who were not of the first "twelve"? Why did they recognize such men as Paul and Barnabas as apostles and fall upon Paul's neck with tears if he was making a false claim all the time?

THE APOSTLES WERE FALLIBLE.

Power was given to the apostles to heal the sick, i. e., the Lord through them would restore the sick to health. But that power was given to the "seventy" (Luke 10:9); to Philip, not an apostle (Acts 8:13); and to the elders (James 5:14). Power was not committed to apostles nor to any of the other officers to heal whomsoever they desired. The apostles disclaimed such prerogative and attributed it to God. Peter said:

Why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk. . . . His [Christ's] name, through faith in his name, hath made this man strong.—Acts 3: 12-16.

Had the power to heal been resident in the apostles, Paul no doubt would have healed Timothy; would not have left Trophimus at Miletum sick, and would have called upon some of his fellow apostles to remove the "thorn" in his own flesh.

The apostles did not claim infallibility for themselves. The Lord's work is perfect, and he is infallible. If the apostles were infallible Paul ought not to have said, "But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed."—Galatians 2: 11.

APOSTLES WERE NOT THE "FOUNDATION" OF THE CHURCH.

An error has lodged in the minds of some believers in the Bible that the apostles were the foundation of the Christian church. This conclusion has been arrived at from reading, or rather from glancing at the words of Paul to the Ephesians, viz.:

Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone.—Ephesians 2: 19, 20.

Is it credible that Peter, who cursed and swore and denied the Lord, together with eleven other fallible men, should be the foundation of God's church? Apostles were of the church and "in the church." The church (in which were apostles) was to rest on a "rock." (See Matthew 16: 18.) The apostles were not the foundation, for "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." (1 Corinthians 3: 11.) He is the "sure foundation." (Isaiah 28: 16.) From the above it is clear that the "saints" were built upon Christ, for Paul, an apostle, says Christ is the foundation. The saints were built upon the same foundation as were the apostles and prophets and that foundation was Christ.

If apostles are the foundation of the church, all, or nearly all churches have no foundation, for they have no apostles; only the writings of a few. It is, then, an egregious error that the twelve apostles were the foundation of the church and that, therefore, no more apostles are needed. If, however, the apostles were the twelve pillars which supported the church, it is obvious that as one pillar was taken out another should take its place, or there would soon be no "pillars." Apostles must build upon the "sure foundation as well as other men, for Barnabas and Paul said, "We are also men of like passions with you."—Acts 14: 15.

PETER WAS NOT THE "ROCK" UPON WHICH THE CHURCH WAS BUILT.

When Jesus came into the coasts of Ceasarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Matthew 16: 13-18.

In Luke 6: 47, 48 Jesus says:

Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like. He is like a man which built a house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock.

The Lord here speaks of a "house" a "foundation," and a "rock." Paul speaks of the "house of God, which is the church of the living God." (1 Timothy 3: 15.) Christ is the "sure foundation." (Isaiah 28: 16.) Peter was not the "rock" upon which the foundation of the church was to rest, for then Christ, the Lord of heaven and earth, would be resting on man. Christ built upon the "rock" of truth revealed by God to him. He "received a commandment, what he should say, and what he should speak" and from that "rock" he never removed his feet. Upon that "rock" (that which came from God) Christ declared he would build his church "and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Christ is the "foundation" between the "rock" and the "church." Christ did not say, "Thou art Peter, and upon thee I will build my church." He did not say, "upon myself I will build my church." He said to Peter, "flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven," and "upon this rock" "I will build my church." Against a church so built the gates of hell can never, never prevail; the cry of "victory" will be heard at last, the kingdom will be delivered to the Father. Our earnest concern should be, Are we in that church?

CHRIST'S CHURCH DID NOT COME DOWN THROUGH THE AGES UNCHANGED.

If the church established by Christ came through the ages, unchanged till now, the church now would have men acting in the apostolic office. The church of Rome claims an unbroken succession to the church established by Christ, but where are Rome's apostles? We read of her archbishops, cardinals, monks and friars, but no apostles. The Romish church supplanted, not succeeded, the true church.

Isaiah 24: 1-6; 60: 2; Daniel 7: 21-25; Amos 8: 11, 12; Acts 20: 28-31; 2 Thessalonians 2: 3-7; Revelation 12: 1-6; 13: 5-8 portray an awful apostasy. God takes no part in iniquities, crimes, or abominations. Holiness, justice, and truth radiate from his throne for ever. When his church drifted from the "rock" (what he revealed) into apostasy, and practiced such enormities as the worship of images, infallibility of popes, indulgences, extermination of heretics, courts of inquisition, and changed the organization of the church, its doctrines and usages, the priesthood, i. e., the right to act for God, could not be retained, for it was given for the building up of the kingdom of God. The apostles received the priesthood personally from Christ and they ordained men to various offices in the church. Without the priesthood no man can officiate acceptably in an office of God's church. With the loss of the priesthood, therefore, the apostolic office must be vacant. How long must it be vacant? Until the priesthood is restored. When it is restored, how beautiful upon the mountains will be the feet of God's messengers—sent of God!

THE REFORMATION.

Did the famous reformers reinstate the apostolic office? No. They could not give what they did not have. If any of these reformers held authority, it was derived from the church they called "mother of harlots," "abomination of the earth," or from God by revelation or an angel. They made no claim to priesthood by virtue of revelation or angelic ministration; therefore, if they possessed authority it was derived from the church they forsook. The church of Rome could revoke, if she chose, what authority she conferred. But even if the reformers possessed all the authority the Romish church had conferred, would that authority be pure—can a corrupt stream send forth sweet water? If we say, no, then Luther, who was a monk of the Augustinian order, Calvin, an apostate from the mother church, Henry VIII, once "defender of the faith" (Roman Catholic), but latterly a dissenter, John Wesley, a member of the Church of England, which sprang from the Catholic Church, and other notable reformers had not the authority to confer the apostleship upon any one. Could they ordain men to any office in the church? Could they lawfully organize churches when the only authority they had (if they had any) came from Rome? Can a society formed without God's command and direction be his church? If it be so formed, in what sense is Christ the builder of it?

The reformers denied revelation and did not pretend to angelic ministration. If men, whether elders, deacons, evangelists, or apostles, have the right to act for God now, they obtained such right through the agency of an angel, by revelation, or it came down from the apostles by a regular set of successors abstract from the Roman Catholic Church; but it is impossible to prove such a succession. It will not do for elders, teachers, and deacons, or other church dignitaries to appropriate to themselves the injunction: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark 16: 15), for that was given to the "eleven" apostles. If that commission authorizes anyone now to act in an office it authorizes them to act in the apostolic office, for it was given to apostles and to them only. It would seem more consistent for an apostle to arise now basing his authority on that commission than for an elder, a teacher, or a deacon to do so.

RESTORATION OF THE LORD'S WORK FORETOLD.

The priesthood was lost in the corruptions of the Middle Ages and until it is restored no man can act in the apostolic office or any other office of the church. The following references point to a restoration of the Lord's work in the last days: Revelation 12: 6; 14: 6, 7; Matthew 20: 1-16; 24: 14; Isaiah 11: 10, 12; Malachi 3: 1-6.

If the church set up by Christ was to be found within the confines of the church of Rome the reformers ought never to have left her. If it existed elsewhere their duty was to unite with it; but the church of God was not on earth. If it was, why did the reformers organize other churches? Oh, why?

Since the church was overtaken by apostasy and the gospel in its purity, unembellished by worldly pomp and ostentation, with all its gifts, powers, and blessings, with the priesthood, faded from human sight, it will require, as in the days of John the Baptist and of Christ, divine revelation, or angelic ministration, to reinstate the ancient order of things. Human wisdom alone can not restore the order of the primitive church. Christendom in her divided state testifies to this.

Revelation declares, "Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things."—Matthew 17: 11. Is not the apostolic office—lost somewhere between Christ's time and now—one of the "things" which needs restoring? When Jesus spoke of "Elias," "then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist." (Verse 13.)

Listen to John the Revelator:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

Such action on the part of an angel makes it certain that just prior to his advent God's church was not on earth, for the officers of God's church would not neglect the preaching of the gospel. If the gospel was on earth, why did the angel come "having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth"? There is but one gospel; men and angels must not preach any other. Therefore, the angel will bring the gospel preached nineteen hundred years ago by Christ and his apostles. No doubt with the restoration of the gospel there will come the restoration of the priesthood, i. e., the right to preach it.

What is lost that God confers only he can restore. God placed the apostolic office in the church and conferred the priesthood upon men; the priesthood was lost and, therefore, prevents the occupancy of the office until the priesthood is restored. Before the apostasy God called his ministry and they were ordained by some one who held authority (otherwise those who ordained were practitioners of an empty form); after the apostasy men should, in the same manner, enter the ministry of God. Where did those men get their authority who ordained others to the ministry before the apostasy? Where did those men get their authority who now ordain their fellow men to clerical offices? The former ones obtained their authority from Christ—he spoke to them, “ordained” them. (See Mark 3:14.) The latter received their authority from the Church of Rome, from an angelic being, by revelation, or else they have none. If one says, “Bro. Jones” ordained him, the next thing to do is to find out who ordained “Bro. Jones”; then trace the authority of his predecessors until the fountain of God is reached, or those claiming authority are “weighed in the balance and found wanting.”

“By what authority doest thou these things?” is a question that should be propounded not only to apostles, but also to elders, teachers, deacons, and evangelists.

PRIESTHOOD RESTORED.

The priesthood being lost, God must restore it. This he has done. Revelation foretold such an action; history now records it. On Tuesday, April 6, 1830, there was organized in Fayette, Seneca County, New York, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The priesthood of the Church is based upon authority conferred upon men who had to do with its founding. Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery have left their record of the commitment of the priesthood to them, in the following words. The former says:

We still continued the work of translation, when in the ensuing month (May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine) we on a certain day went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, “Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.” He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands, for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter; and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterwards that he should baptize me. . . .

The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us, said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us—and that I should be called the first elder, and he the second. It was on the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, that we were baptized and ordained under the hand of the messenger.

Immediately upon our coming up out of the water, after we had been baptized, we experienced great and glorious blessings from our heavenly Father. No sooner had I baptized Oliver Cowdery than the Holy Ghost fell upon him and he stood up and prophesied many things which should shortly come to pass. And again, so soon as I had been baptized by him, I also had the spirit of prophecy, when, standing up, I prophesied concerning the rise of the Church, and many other things connected with the Church, and this generation of the children of men. We were filled with the Holy Ghost, and rejoiced in the God of our salvation.—Church History, L. D. S., vol. 1, pp. 34-36.

Oliver Cowdery says:

This was not long desired before it was realized. The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will. On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us, while the veil was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously looked for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance! What joy! what wonder! what amazement! While the world was racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard! As in the “blaze of day”; yes, more—above the glitter of the May sunbeam, which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature! Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, “I am thy fellow servant,” dispelled every fear. We listened—we gazed—we admired! ’Twas the voice of the angel from glory—’twas a message from the Most High! and as we heard we rejoiced, while his love enkindled upon our souls, and we were rapt in the vision of the Almighty! Where was room for doubt? Nowhere! uncertainty had fled, doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled for ever!

But, dear brother, think, further think for a moment, what joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed, (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hand the holy priesthood, as he said, “Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness!”

I shall not attempt to paint to you the feelings of this heart, nor the majestic beauty and glory which surrounded us on that occasion; but you will believe me when I say, that earth, nor men, with the eloquence of time, can not begin to clothe language in as interesting and sublime a manner as this holy personage. No; nor has this earth power to give the joy, to bestow the peace, or comprehend the wisdom which was contained in each sentence as they were delivered by the power of the Holy Spirit! Man may deceive his fellow man; deception may follow deception, and the children of the wicked one may have power to seduce the foolish and untaught, till naught but fiction feeds the many, and the fruit of falsehood carries in its current the giddy to the grave; but one touch with the finger of his love, yes, one ray of glory from the upper world, or one word from the mouth of the Savior, from the bosom of eternity, strikes it all into insignificance, and blots it for ever from the mind! The assurance that we were in the presence of an angel; the certainty that we heard the voice of Jesus, and the truth unsullied as it flowed from a pure personage, dictated by the will of God, is to me, past description, and I shall ever look upon this expression of the Savior's goodness with wonder and thanksgiving while I am permitted to tarry, and in those mansions where perfection dwells and sin never comes, I hope to adore in that day which shall never cease.—Church History, L. D. S., vol. 1, pp. 37-39.

Malachi says:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. For I am the Lord, I change not.—3: 1-6.

Upon examination it will be found that this prophecy refers to the second coming of Christ, for Jesus did not, nineteen hundred years ago, "suddenly come to his temple." He came as a "babe" in the "city of David"; nor can these quotations: "Who may abide the day of his coming?" "Who shall stand when he appeareth?" "Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord," and "I will come near to you to judgment," be applied to his first coming. Therefore, this "messenger" ("Elias," or restorer) was to make his appearance just prior to the Lord "coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

On pages 60 and 61 of the Church History, Joseph says:

We now became anxious to have that promise realized to us, which the angel that conferred upon us the Aaronic priesthood had given us; viz., that provided we continued faithful we should also have the Melchisedec priesthood, which holds the authority of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. We had for some time made this matter a subject of humble prayer, and at length we got together in the chamber of Mr. Whitmer's house in order more particularly to seek of the Lord what we now so earnestly desired: and here to our unspeakable satisfaction did we realize the truth of the Savior's promise: "Ask, and you shall receive, seek, and you shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you"; for we had not long been engaged in solemn and fervent prayer when the word of the Lord came unto us in the chamber, commanding us that I should ordain Oliver Cowdery to be an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ, and that he also should ordain me to the same office, and then to ordain others as it should be made known unto us, from time to time: we were, however, commanded to defer this our ordination until such times as it should be practicable to have our brethren, who had been and who should be baptized, assembled together, when we must have their sanction to our thus proceeding to ordain each other, and have them decide by vote whether they were willing to accept us as spiritual teachers, or not, when also we were commanded to bless bread and break it with them, and to take wine, bless it, and drink it with them, afterward proceed to ordain each other according to commandment, then call out such men as the Spirit should dictate, and ordain them, and then attend to the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost upon all those whom we had previously baptized; doing all things in the name of the Lord.

It will be noted that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery did not attempt to force themselves as spiritual leaders upon the people. It was for the people to receive or reject these men. The same principle is found in the preaching of the gospel; it should not be forced upon but offered to the world.

Some may doubt the bestowment of the priesthood, by God, upon men in this our age; but, upon reflection, we are led to ask, who else could do it?

At this time (1829) was received a revelation providing for the choosing of twelve apostles. The names of the twelve chosen are:

- |                      |                         |
|----------------------|-------------------------|
| 1. Lyman E. Johnson. | 7. William E. McLellan. |
| 2. Brigham Young.    | 8. John F. Boynton.     |
| 3. Heber C. Kimball. | 9. Orson Pratt.         |
| 4. Orson Hyde.       | 10. William Smith.      |
| 5. David W. Patten.  | 11. Thomas B. Marsh.    |
| 6. Luke Johnson.     | 12. Parley P. Pratt.    |

They were ordained by those in possession of the priesthood recommitted to earth by an angel. All apostles in the Church since that time have held their office by virtue of a call from God and ordination by those holding the "keys of the kingdom."

Shall the Church be condemned because Brigham Young left his high and holy calling and went after "strange doctrine"? If so, the church of nineteen hundred years ago will suffer by Judas' low and heavy fall. The Church having its headquarters at Salt Lake City is not the Church founded by command of God in 1830. Brigham Young was an apostle in the early Church, and after Joseph Smith's death in 1844 he abandoned it and made himself president over the Church now in Utah and presided over it until his death.

The Church of which he was an apostle never taught the doctrines of polygamy, blood-atonement, Adam-god, and the many other unholy principles taught by him and his coadjutors. These doctrines were taught in later years by the institution over which he presided. Had Brigham Young named the church he organized and presided over after himself, the distinction would have prevented many in the past, and many now, from believing he presided over the Church organized in 1830; but he gave it the same name as the early church; viz., the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and as a result the public is partly excusable for believing that the Church organized in 1830, named the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the Church which was presided over by Brigham Young are one and the same church. They are not one and the same church. The Lord called Brigham Young to the apostleship of his church; not to the presidency of a church teaching doctrines obscene and unholy.

The true successor to the original church is known as the Reorganized (which term indicates that the Church fell into disorder by the latter-day apostasy and was restored to order) Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and is presided over by Joseph Smith, son of his martyred father. Its headquarters are at Lamoni, Iowa. It has ever extolled monogamy and denounced polygamy. It teaches doctrines, and doctrines only, that are harmonious with the teachings of the Church founded in 1830, or the church established by Christ and his apostles nineteen hundred years ago. It is the same church revived in these last days.

The Lord, therefore, has his apostles now and the Church and the world their services. Reader, let not fanaticism carry you beyond reasonable bounds, nor let prejudices keep you from examining fairly the momentous claims presented for your consideration. In asking the question, "Shall the apostolic office be now defended?" we are asking a question concerning an office in the church of God—surely we ought to know what to do with the things of God.

PAUL M. HANSON.

Cape Hawke, TUNCURRY, New South Wales.

HONOR ONE ANOTHER IN HUMILITY.

By humility and the fear of the Lord are riches and honor, and life.—Proverbs 22: 4.

The tenor of the word justifies the statement that a wise man will dig sufficiently deep to "build his house upon a rock." This is also true in erecting our spiritual house, or in laying a foundation for the development of the Christ character, without which we shall never be prepared to meet God and behold his face in peace. It is necessary to believe the truth and obey the commandments of God, as they are the only means ordained of God by which we can overcome self, the world, and the power of darkness, while we grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

That humility is essential to a proper start in the divine life may be learned from the following scripture references:

Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.—Philippians 2: 5-8.

Christ's humility was the secret of his obedience and success and it brought to him honor and life and it also enabled him to secure a full and free pardon of the sins of all those who meekly follow in his footsteps.

Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.—Philippians 2: 9-11.

The humility of Christ was sublime and inspires confidence in him as the "teacher sent from God."

He knew what he must suffer and made a special effort to prepare himself for the ordeal by fastings and prayers.

And being in agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.—Luke 22: 44.

Then said he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me. And he went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt.—Matthew 26: 38, 39.

But the cruel mockings and intense pain were so great that the human cried out in despair: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" But the divine character had reached that sublime height that he could say: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." And the battle was ended and the victory won when in triumph the divine nature within cried out, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." Can we follow his worthy example? Not unless we like he shall "do always those things which please him," and shall be in possession of the Holy Spirit, which shall make us able to do the will of God.

The Lord has said for our benefit: "Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness; even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2. This sacrifice offered in humility is the foundation of all others and there are none that are of greater worth to God than this one. The same lesson is further taught by the Savior, as follows:

And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve. For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but I am among you as he that serveth.—Luke 22: 24-27.

Yet the humility manifest in Christ, and so fully taught in the word, and which is so very necessary to our success in the divine life, should not destroy self-respect or make us mere tools in other men's hands. What we do should be done because we believe it is right and for the best good of all, and especially because we believe that God, who requires it at our hands, has the right to command, and he only requires "our reasonable service." There is no sin committed should one hold up his head and feel that he is just as good as any other man so long as he does only that which is right and lives as near to God as the other, even though he may not be equal in ability. Natural and acquired ability should be recognized as well as divine authority given, without the slightest feeling of jealousy in the heart of any; for jealousy and the Spirit of God do not dwell in the same heart at the same time. The one who can do the most to help others to succeed will advance the more rapidly himself, and will "grow in favor with God and man."

In this connection I present the thought that there are individual rights vouchsafed to every individual that no other person has a right to tamper with because they are given of God and he himself will not disturb those who in honor desire to enjoy them. There are official rights belonging to each and every subordinate officer of town, county, and State that even the President of the United States has no right to meddle with, if the writer understands the meaning of "civil government." More than this: there are individual rights belonging to every citizen and every family guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and also by the law of Christ that no living soul has a right to tamper with. They are, however, of such a nature that every one may enjoy them and still remain humble, innocent, and pure, loyal to God, true to Christ and all men, and loyal to the Church of Christ and his own Government.

I write these thoughts because they are the spontaneous products of my mind and gush forth from my soul like the water from an overflowing fountain, and they have no reference to anything that has occurred in the past.

With a sincere prayer for all in authority in Nation, State, and Church, and a kindly feeling for all men, and an earnest desire for the prosperity of the Church and the salvation of souls, I subscribe myself,

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Program for June Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

THEME, FAITH.

Hymn, No. 104, Saints' Hymnal; prayer; roll-call of members, response—a verse of scripture showing the necessity of faith; (Hebrews 11: 6; James 1: 6, 7; Matthew 9: 35; Ephesians 6: 10; Romans 14: 23; Nephi 1: 19.) Five-minute papers: "The necessity of faith," "The objects of faith," "Faith and works inseparable," each paper to be followed by brief discussion; discussion of papers from Home Column with the aid of questions given below; preparation for answering these questions to be made at home; business; Hymn, No. 111; closing prayer.

Questions on papers, "Half hours with parents and teachers," to follow in Home Column: Why is faith absolutely necessary in the work of parents and teachers? Has it any relation to the formation of character, and if so, what is it? Is it natural for children to have faith in their parents? Is it obligatory upon the parent to be worthy of this faith? How may it be strengthened and how betrayed?

What lesson can be learned from the Lord's dealing with the people of Israel in leading them to the promised land? Is not an infallible standard of faith necessary to the perfection of character? As this standard is to be found in the word of God, can parents effectually teach their children without familiarity with this word?

Is there danger of children being lost to the Church where teaching both by precept and by example is lacking? Is the gospel practical? What may be expected of children who have been well taught as to the combining of faith and works?

In presenting the first of our programs to the Society since it has been decided that they be enlarged in scope and to some extent changed in form, the committee having this work in charge feels that a few words of explanation are needed. We trust that in selecting as our first theme the subject of faith, we shall not be misunderstood. Please regard it as the foundation upon which our whole superstructure of work must rest and until you have read carefully in the Home Column the three papers which will follow, do not think us impractical.

These papers are intended for home reading and are not to be used in the meetings, but the questions based upon them found in the program will be used by the one having the meeting in charge.

Some difficulty may be experienced this month because of the late date of receiving the programs in regard to presidents of local societies assigning subjects upon which papers are to be prepared, but if they will do the best in their power to obviate it this time, the committee, as will be seen, has obviated any difficulty arising from this cause in the future.

We do trust the sisters to whom the preparation of papers shall be assigned will be prompt in responding. We have given citation to texts upon the "Necessity of faith" as an aid in the preparation of that paper, and those who have the subject, "Objects of faith," may find the following helpful: Jeremiah 17: 7, 8; 2 Chronicles 20: 20; Psalms 37: 3; John 3: 16; 6: 40; 14: 1; Nephi 11: 3; Heleman 5: 6; Doctrine and Covenants 17: 6; Mark 16: 14-16; Doctrine and Covenants 2: 8; Matthew 5: 19, 20; John 5: 40-47; Romans 4: 20, 21. The citations point us first to God as the object of faith, then to Christ and also to the gospel as well as the writings of Moses and the prophets.

The following will prove helpful on the subject of faith and works: James 1: 25; 2: 14, 17-19, 23, 25; John 14: 21; Deuteronomy 6: 25.

It is very desirable that the sisters discuss these papers. Not at all in the way of criticism, but as a means of help in discovering the bearing they have upon the practical affairs of life and the duties of parents and teachers. It is not the great faith which would pluck up mountains and cast them into the sea that our thoughts are fixed upon or to which we were striving to point weary, overburdened mothers and worn teachers—not that, but the faith we all need as we need our daily bread; the faith which is built upon God and Christ and which after seeking guidance from the law, the prophets, and the gospel, lays hold upon the promises and pleads them at a throne of grace in the name of Christ Jesus. The faith which whispers to the billows of sorrow, "Peace be still"—which says to the heart-broken mother whose eyes have grown dim with weeping for her boy who has gone astray, "Trust in God also, and he shall bring it to pass." The faith which will enable each of us, in the face of trial and discouragement, to press onward and upward because we realize that if God is for us, it matters little who is against us. The faith which will enter our homes and sustain us from day to day, helping us to bear every burden and to say like one of old, "Though he slay me yet will I trust in him." The faith which realizes that it must combine with works; that works is to it the very breath of life, and that trusts to God with folded hands only when all has been done that it is possible for humanity to do.

In order that the subjects of the five-minute papers to be written for the July meeting may be assigned at the meeting in June, they are given herewith. The theme for that meeting will be "The home," and the subjects of the papers as follows: "Work for boys"; "Work for girls"; "Recreation and amusements in the home."

Half Hours With Parents and Teachers.

A SERIES OF FAMILIAR TALKS INTENDED FOR USE IN LOCALS AND HOME CLASSES.

Edited by the Daughters of Zion.

It has been the hope of the child of God in all ages and in every dispensation of the world's history, finally to behold the face of God and dwell in his presence; but Paul assures us that "without holiness no man shall see God."

Now holiness, as we understand it, is the perfection of character, and if this perfection must be attained before we can see God or enter into his rest, does it not behoove each one of us who has this hope in his heart to examine himself closely, and seek to know if indeed we are putting off the old man with his deeds and being transformed into the likeness of Christ. It was this perfection towards which David was struggling and of which he said, "As for me I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness."

Now, if holiness or the perfection of character is to be like God, the question naturally arises, Can this be attained? and we answer, it must be that it can else God never would have required it of us.

But this perfection is not to be attained in a day, neither is it to be put on like a ready-made garment, but is rather to follow as the result of systematic, persistent efforts upon the part of the individual aided by the Lord through the influence of his Holy Spirit. Hence it is to Christian parents and teachers of the young that these half hours will be especially devoted, in the hope and with the earnest prayer that they may prove helpful in the accomplishment of the great work God has intrusted largely to their hands and for the performance or neglect of which he will hold them strictly accountable.

Neither the Church, the Sunday-school, nor the Religio can do the work of the home, and, altogether indispensable as their work is, fathers and mothers must do the work God has assigned to them or the Church and the world must suffer because of their failure to do their part, and their own hearts will often be pierced with sorrow because their children fail to develop such traits of character as will even entitle them to be ranked with the honorable men and women of the earth, much less to mark them as worthy followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. In order that the home be pure and a fit environment for the children intrusted to its care, it is absolutely necessary that parents themselves be pure and in all respects ensamples to their children, and when this is not the case, as a rule we feel safe in saying that in nine cases out of ten failure will result. If the history of ancient Israel teaches us anything, it surely teaches this one lesson. The Lord found it impossible to so train and discipline the rebellious host, tinctured with idolatry and unbelief, which Moses led out of Egypt, that it became absolutely necessary for the accomplishment of his purposes, that he might redeem the promise made to his servant Abraham, to keep them wandering in the wilderness forty years until all who were over twenty years of age when the people were numbered except Caleb and Joshua, were dead. (See Numbers 14: 28-32.)

It was a different set of people who followed Joshua into the promised land, to those whom Moses led out of idolatrous Egypt. During the long forty years of their wanderings the children were separated from all pernicious example save such as was set them by their rebellious parents and against these they saw the fierce anger of the Lord manifested, hence with the combined influences of precept and example God had so wrought with them that Joshua was able to lead them into the land God had promised to give them. How long are we as parents to be in taking this lesson to heart? If we are not all which we desire our children to be, is it not wise that we recognize the fact and earnestly strive to remedy it?

The groundwork of all the trouble in which ancient Israel became involved was unbelief or want of faith in God and his promises. How is it with us? Is there in any who read these lines "an evil heart of unbelief"? Then ought such to realize that they—whether they be parents or teachers—are not qualified for the position they fill.

Parents and teachers must work in harmony in order to obtain the best results. To illustrate this point we will relate an incident told us by a friend under whose personal observation it came. Little Mattie M— was a bright, active child of eight summers and in her class at Sunday-school was under the care of a most faithful, conscientious teacher, one who fully believed the gospel of Jesus and taught her scholars with the earnestness which only strong and intelligent faith can impart. Mattie was an intelligent child and felt the force and influence of Miss W's teaching and upon one occasion, after an earnest talk upon the subject the little girl made up her mind that she would be baptized and upon going home with great earnestness made the request of her father that he give his consent.

Now Mattie's father was a member of the Church, but his faith was not strong enough to enable him to feel that God knew best when he commanded parents in Zion to have their children baptized when eight years old. Neither had he obeyed the other instructions of the Lord in regard to teaching them to pray and to understand the gospel so they would be ready for baptism at that age. And now when this latter duty had been done by a faithful teacher in the Sunday-school and his little daughter came to him for his consent, while he did not absolutely forbid the child, he failed in any measure to encourage her, but talked of her being too young to understand. In short, by indifference to the child's desires he discouraged her and as far as was in his power undid the faithful work of her Sunday-school teacher. We say, "as far as was in his power," for, mark you, the Lord will never suffer any good work to fall to the ground and "his word shall not return unto him void, but shall accomplish that whereunto it was sent." By this action, or indifference, upon his part, the father became responsible for his child and upon him rests the sin.

But he can not bear it alone and later this thought came to us with a stern conviction never realized before. One day this same little girl while playing with some children under my charge, gave way to a most violent fit of temper, even going so far as to strike one of her playmates several blows. In a short time with repentant tears raining down her cheeks she threw her arms around the neck of her injured friend and in a voice choked with sobs exclaimed, "O, I am so sorry I struck you! I am so sorry," she continued in the most pitiful, heart-broken tone, "I almost wish I was dead." Here I interfered and told her how wrong such a wish was and that she must try to govern her temper and make it her servant, compel it to obey her and not be its slave any longer.

"Oh, I do try," she said, still weeping bitterly, "but just in a minute, before I know it, I am so angry I can't help doing naughty things. Indeed I have wished many times I had never been born and I have told my papa so."

This you may say was only a childish outbreak of temper, followed by a like one of remorse, but if you could have seen, as I did, that earnest, tear-stained, appealing face and have heard the pitiful, conscience-stricken wail in this child of only eight summers I think you, like myself, would hear it ringing in your ears long afterwards and I doubt if you would ever forget it. O that God would lead that father to see and realize the cruel wrong and injustice inflicted upon his child. Was it not enough to have bequeathed to his daughter a temper so violent that through his own want of faith—a firm and established faith—he must deprive her of the help God intended to give her through the indwelling of his Holy Spirit? Yet did he not do this when he failed to encourage her openly-expressed wish to be baptized?

Letter Department.

Sketch No. 2.

Editors Herald: It is said an American citizen should do his duty "strenuously, impartially, and fearlessly whenever called upon, and accept every offer of service in the spirit of solemn duty." A similar sentiment was lately expressed, and with earnestness, by Elder I. N. White,—that careful consideration is necessary to the right use of all that is intrusted to us as God's stewards.

When the first elders, of sacred memory, met together to counsel in regard to establishing the church, they evidently felt keenly their solemn responsibility. Their days were full of sacrifice, peril, and persecution. Far more auspicious are ours, although in and near the larger cities, it must be tacitly admitted, the charge needs to be made against pleasure-seeking, extravagance, and violations of Sunday observance. Nowadays much is said and written concerning the "perils of the city." They are dangerous places. The young women vie with each other in elegantly furnished homes and displays of fashionable toggery, and the parks and theatres, the music halls and public parlors are a menace to the welfare of young men on Sunday afternoons. Among us some, however, have grown to be unusually in earnest, and church and society work is controlled by a spirit of consecration to the fundamental principles of the faith, and men of probity and women of honor are more lightly holding in esteem the generally sought for things of the world.

In every place this latter-day work has ever been held as sacred in the hearts and minds of true, honest Saints, although mistakes and many misconceptions have crept in, and the deceiver has done his work. But for the comfort of the deceived let the promise be repeated: "A light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; . . . for they perceive not the light because of the precepts of men."

There is not a branch or isolated corner of the Church in which may not be recorded instances of sacrifice for the gospel's sake or patient endurance amid poverty, affliction, and discouragements. In the light of the scriptures concerning God's dealings with his children in past ages, it is interesting to reveal the lives of many of our brethren and sisters who have passed through similar experience in our time, and some are here among us. One of them is Sr. Ann Hailey.

In the winter of 1854, Bro. Thomas Hailey with his wife and children left England for Utah. They boarded a vessel at Liverpool and via New Orleans, St. Louis, and Kansas City, then a small landing-place, journeyed overland with a six-ox team through the American desert to the salt land. There were forty-five wagons containing families,—a "ten-pound company" which started out from different points for "Zion in the valleys of the mountains."

The aged parents of our brother were obliged to go in the hand-cart company, which was contrary to agreement, and the worn-out sister of sixty years drew a cart six hundred miles across the plains, through rivers and rough places. The father died from extreme exposure, and she, heart-sick, weary, and alone, prepared his body for burial, and laid it in the Platte River. The discomforts of a sea-voyage of over nine weeks,—and there were five hundred in the steamship,—the privations, distress, sickness, and dread disease, and losses by death,—all could hardly be endured; but the disappointment felt on witnessing the deception and dishonorable conduct of the leaders and captains who had been set over the interests of the unwary and credulous Saints was dreadful to bear. They finally reached the valley.

In those days the living oracles uttered forth doctrines, strange indeed,—far different from those contained in "the books"; but many have reached at last "an advanced stage of senile decrepitude," and less frequently, no doubt, may be heard the jocular inspirations of the parodist or the profaner of sacred things. But as the Prophet Joseph has said, "There shall be a great work in the land, even among the Gentiles, for their folly shall be made manifest in the eyes of all people."

Their sojourn in Utah proved to be only about a four-year season of unrest, and then they concluded to set forth for Missouri, the place of which the Lord has said, "My law shall be kept on this land."

A part of the way they were accompanied by a troop of soldiers having in charge sixteen children, saved from the Mountain Meadow Massacre; but they were left eight hundred miles to travel alone without protection, being in constant peril from the Indians who roamed the wilderness. The Pawnees, Sioux, Utes, and other tribes were constantly on the war-path, and when our friends were encamped at night they could often hear in the distance the clattering of their trappings and the horses' hoofs as they approached. But through kindness shown them and the protecting hand of the Lord, their lives were saved.

When plague and pestilence threatened, their trust was in God, and the oft-repeated prayer was answered:

"O guide our footsteps in the wilds
And guard us day and night:
Give signs when enemies appear,
And through us, show thy might."

After arriving in Missouri they lived on a farm in Andrews County for nineteen years, and then came to Independence and lived here thirty-six years, twenty-two of which have been spent in the pleasant home made dear to our sister by the memory of a beloved companion who passed peacefully away six years ago at the ripe age of eighty-three years.

This home has been a resting-place for many a traveler from the West who called to chat with this genial and hospitable couple upon a subject dear to all of us,—Zion, beautiful Zion. It is near the stone church, where she is a constant attendant. Here, peaceful and undisturbed, she is passing her declining days, full of faith and trust in Him who has led her all along the journey of life. Our sister, in her eighty-seventh year, is the mother of nine children and has forty grandchildren and seventy great-grandchildren. She has passed through many trials here as well as in Utah. During the grasshopper plague the family subsisted mainly on a scanty supply of vegetables, for fruit, bread, butter, and meat were "out of the question."

Sr. Hailey's cottage stands on a spot of ground which is a part of the original Temple Lot, which, according to her abstract, was deeded by Bishop Partridge, who was appointed by revelation "to divide the Saints their inheritance," to John, Jane, and Joseph Smith, the children of Oliver Cowdery, in trust to this Church, whose founder and leader was Prophet Joseph Smith. She was born in Aston Rount, a village of Oxfordshire, about thirty-nine miles from London, on September 25, 1817. When about eighteen years of age, she heard the voice of the Spirit indicating to her the scenes which she would be called to pass through in after-life. It said: "Yet a little while I will hide myself from thee, but with everlasting kindness, I will have mercy on thee." This prophecy has truly been fulfilled.

In her earlier life she had been attending the Methodist Church at Kingston, whose pastor, not having lived in the days of "Bible leagues" and "radical religious inquiry," largely directed his remarks to the unbelievers whom, naturally enough, he was wont to consign to a place of punishment. His discourses tended to mystify her pious meditations. Lacking wisdom, she was moved upon to ask of God. On her way home on the banks of

from meeting she stopped in a meadow to rest and pray, and in a lonely spot she knelt and poured forth the earnest desire of her heart that she might find the "old paths" of which she had been reading.

While being engaged in her usual home duties her custom was daily to read a portion of the testament scriptures, and while so engaged, one morning a stranger selling tea knocked at the door. Having been welcomed in and observing the book opened before her, he began to talk about the sacred writings. He asked her if she understood them and on receiving a negative reply he began to explain them in a way never made so plain before. The light dawned on her receptive mind. The "old paths" pondered over opened before her vision clear as the morning, and her prayers for light were answered. The weary, zealous tea agent proved to be a Latter Day Saint missionary, Elder James Nethcott, of Shillingford. By him Bro. and Sr. Hailey were baptized in 1846. After returning from a walk of ten miles through a cold November sleet they began the new life by opening their house for public meetings. They bravely continued the work for many years, although under very adverse conditions, for persecution was rife, and great disturbances were endured for the gospel's sake. The attendance at the cottage meetings increased from three to more than thirty members, some of whom afterward went to unite with "the body of the church."

Shortly after locating in Missouri Sr. Hailey had a dream, and a beautiful river was presented to her view. She was standing on its north bank, and looking, with earnest intent, to cross it, for as she gazed on the scene, there appeared a log stretching across to the opposite side. The waters from the east were turbid and in them was a large number of dead fish, an unpleasant sight; but flowing from the west the river was full of animation. There was a multitude of bright, lively fishes, of every size, so thickly packed together as to present a solid mass. O how briskly they flounced about and with what glee they struck their shining fins over the sparkling water! How eagerly she gazed, and longed to come nearer to them, and, as she bent forward and spread forth her hands to greet their coming, her bosom touched the cool rippling river and she awoke.

The varied experiences she has passed through have strengthened her testimony as to the divineness of this work, and now, as we look on the mild, pleasant face and silvery locks, we lift up our hearts and sing:

"E'en down to old age, all my people shall prove My sov'reign, eternal, unchangeable love;
And then, when gray hairs shall their temples adorn,
Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be borne."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

217 South River Boulevard, INDEPENDENCE, Missouri.

FALL RIVER, Massachusetts, May 6, 1904.

Editors Herald: Sunday, May 1, was a happy day among the Saints of this city, when fifteen candidates for baptism assembled on the shore of South Watuppa Lake to be immersed in the clear, cool waters, and thus put on Christ, after the old Jerusalem gospel plan. Priest H. W. Howlett and Elder Alexander Sinclair were the administrators of that sacred rite. I think one thousand would be a conservative estimate of the number assembled to witness the ordinance; and considering this crowd was largely composed of young men, it was quite orderly. The candidates were all young people, their ages ranging from nine to twenty-eight years. A number of them were the sons and daughters of those not of our faith, but all members of the Sabbath-school and Religio. "And there was great rejoicing in that city," as in the days of the ancient apostles.

The branch here is in a prosperous condition because unity prevails among its officers, and all seem anxious to unite their powers to help put the work upon a basis of righteousness.

This comes as a refreshing fountain to those who have long struggled against the powers of evil that have opposed the progress of the work here, and for a long time seemed determined to cause its overthrow. But we feel thankful to our kind Father for his long-suffering and forbearance towards his children.

A new era seems to have dawned upon the Saints and it is welcomed with thanksgiving and praise. May the good work go on and none be permitted to hinder. The Sabbath-school is the banner school of the district and the results of the earnest workers therein are manifest in the swelling of the numbers being added to the branch membership. The Home Class Department now numbers almost fifty and is growing.

The superintendent of the school, H. W. Howlett, is beloved of the children. He has an able corps of teachers and other officers. Sr. Susie Gilbert has the general oversight of the primary department, which recently has been divided up because of its remarkable growth. She is very efficient in this department of work. Susie is also president of the Religio.

One attractive feature of the work here is the orchestra which takes an active part in all the services, and the excellent singing of the choir.

Bro. D. T. Shaw is the presiding priest of the branch and is well sustained by his fellows officers. May peace and unity prevail, and we feel satisfied the work will grow in numbers and power if these conditions continue. This, with a humble heart and a steadfast faith, will cause God's work to flourish.

Your brother in the faith,

R. BULLARD.

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 10, 1904.

Dear Herald: The new conference year has begun and we of this district are still laboring in the conflict, and the prospects are bright before us. We have six of the general missionaries, the same as last year.

The district conference meets in Des Moines, June 4 and 5, and we look for a large attendance. All parts of the district can easily reach our capital city. There was mention made in the HERALD editorially as to the location of the General Conference, that the proper place for it was at or near the center, and we think the same applies to district meetings. Why should not the district conference be held at the central and most convenient points in the district that the greatest accommodations may be offered to all?

The progress of the work in the district continues and we look for greater advancement this year. There is a noticeable desire on the part of a large majority to occupy where duty calls. The Sunday-school work is moving, and the district convention will be held June 3. The officers have sent out announcement of the convention and the line of work to be taken up. The Religio is endeavoring to occupy in its field. The Book of Mormon lessons increase in interest and the literary work of the society is more and more appreciated. The district officers were chosen at the recent convention, and since then Sr. Mattie Hughes, of Rhodes, has been appointed to continue in the Home Class Department and will endeavor to extend the arm of the home work. Bro. J. R. Epperson, of Des Moines, has been appointed as superintendent of literature department and we hope that all will manifest the same interest in this work as in the past.

At the coming district conference we have election of officers. Bro. H. A. McCoy, who has been our efficient district president for several years, has been moved from the district, and another will have to be chosen to take his place. The twenty years of his life in the Church has been spent in this district; and all these years he has been an active worker. For several years he served as district clerk. In his labor in the priesthood he occupied first as a priest; then as an elder, and served as our district president. During the time of his receiving appointment as a general missionary he has also served as our presiding officer, thus occupying in the double capacity. When he was chosen as a seventy he was then subject to the call of the Church. He has now been taken from our part of the vineyard. His many friends here will miss him very much in many ways.

The church work here in the city continues to advance. Since the last conference twenty-nine names have been added to the church records, but part of these are from the disorganized Perry Branch and will not increase our numbers here except in name. During the past year the Sunday-school has presented to the Church twelve candidates for baptism, and the noble work which the school has done is being continued. The younger ones are being prepared for entrance into the Church, and more are ready to enter in.

The Church here has long desired that a general missionary be assigned to the city. This year Des Moines has been made the objective point for our brother, J. F. Mintun. The Church heartily welcomes him back to the city and will continue to support him in his earnest work for the advancement of the cause.

The Ladies' Aid Society, which we have mentioned before, is actively at work. The recent bazaar held by the Society was a grand success, especially in a financial way, but we leave them to tell of their good work.

A junior self-improvement class is being formed under the direct supervision of the branch president. There is labor in the Master's vineyard for all, and those in charge of the work here seek to have all actively engaged, each in his own field according to the talents given.

Services in the new church are very much appreciated, and the Sunday congregations have increased to a marked extent. Last Sunday Apostle F. A. Smith was with us, speaking in the morning on charity, and in the evening on the temporal law. He also occupied on Monday evening. We were especially pleased to have him with us, and he came, he said, to have a heart to heart talk with the Saints, to help us in our work before our missionary entered upon active work.

The Saints out of the city should remember our location: East Fourteenth and Lyon Streets, four of the east side car lines passing within two blocks of the church.

A. A. REAMS.

TACOMA, Washington, May 9, 1904.

Editors Herald: We saw in the HERALD not long ago a letter from a Sr. Maud Fletcher, of Tacoma, and in that letter she said she did not know of any Saints here nor of any meetings. There are quite a few Saints here and we hold meetings every two weeks at private houses. Now if you can find out her address and send to us, we would be pleased to call on her. It seems she is here in the city taking care of a sick sister. She gave no address in her letter. Please inform me if you can.

Yours truly,

MRS. W. E. EMMERSON.

4105 South "M" Street, Telephone Block 299.

LEICESTER, England, April 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: It is now some time since you heard from me, or had any news about the work of the Lord out here.

I am very pleased to say that we are still in the faith and doing what we can to let our lights shine that others may be drawn into the fold. We experience much difficulty in getting the truth before the people, as very few outsiders attend our meeting. They seem rather to believe the evil reports about the great latter-day work, than to go to any trouble to prove anything about the work we are engaged in.

Still, through it all, we are glad to be able to report some progress. At our district conference just passed we had an increase in baptisms of twenty-seven.

The branch in Leicester is moving along nicely. We hope in the near future to have some ready to pass through the waters of baptism. Though I am not now laboring as a missionary in the field, I am still busy at work for the Master, and hope to remain so till the summons be heard. Whether I labor locally or as a missionary I am always at the call of the Church either way. We were all pleased and glad to see and hear Brn. Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans. Many years we had longed for that visit.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

WM. ECCLESTONE.

Springfield House, Mountcastle Road, Narboro Road.

SHEEDS, Oregon, May 3, 1904.

Dear Herald: It would be impossible almost to do without the HERALD and Ensign, although my eyes are so weak I can hardly read. It is great comfort to read even the letters. As we are isolated Saints it makes me enjoy them much more. I and my husband are the only Saints here. One of our boys thought enough about his salvation this winter to join the Christian Church.

I have not seen a Saint since last November or even heard from one. I never was in a Saints' prayer-meeting or Sunday-school, so I feel like a lost sheep on an outside range. The best I can do is to keep bleating and make use of what outside range I can find.

I have not a relative belonging to the Church that I know of. I came from Polock, Missouri. My mother came from Tennessee, and her name was Halliborton. If I have any relatives there I would be glad to hear from them.

I have not heard a sermon since last summer, when Bro. Allen preached for us. I have partaken of the sacrament but once. So I feel as one of the weakest of Saints. My health is very poor. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that my health may be restored.

Your sister,

MRS. MARY S. MOORE.

SEMINOLE, Alabama, May 3, 1904.

Editor Herald: I feel it a pleasure this beautiful evening to write a few lines to your pages, to let the Saints in different parts of the land and country know how the Saints in this part of the Lord's vineyard are getting along. We had a grand time the first day of this month. About fourteen miles from here Bro. Jesse Beeder baptized eight precious souls, assisted by Bro. Greek. There were about one hundred and twenty-five people in attendance. We also had dinner on the ground and I distributed HERALDS and Ensigns. How sweet to us is the soul-cheering thought, "there is rest for the pure and the good."

We are looking forward to conference on the 28th and 29th of this month. We are expecting a good many to be present.

I long for that time to come when we can enjoy ourselves in singing praise to our Father.

"He has gone, as he said, to prepare
For the tempted, the tried, and the true,
A mansion more glorious and fair
Than the children of earth ever knew."

I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may be healed of rheumatism.

Your sister in the one faith,

T. B. COOPER.

KIRK, California, May 4, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am still in the faith, and I have a desire to see the work go on, as I know it is the Lord's work and this is the true gospel.

We are always glad to see Saturday come, for we get the church papers on that day, and they are always full of good news from other parts to cheer us, and, as we have no preaching, we appreciate them more, I suppose. We have not had an elder in this part for some time, and would be glad to have one come in and preach for us. The people are a little prejudiced and do not come out as they should, and it makes it hard for the elders.

My mother and I take the church papers together.

We have no Sunday-school here now. We had a good school last summer, but some have moved away and it is a little discouraging for the few left.

I would like to have the Saints remember me in their prayers, for I feel sometimes that I am the weakest of all Saints. But it is my desire to so live and press onward that I may be accepted of the Lord in the end, for there is nothing for us in this life to live for but the gospel and eternal life, and if we miss that we have done but very little.

May the Lord be with all his people, and all the honest in heart, is my prayer.

Your sister,

MRS. BERTHA CRAWFORD.

ZENITH, Illinois, May 6, 1904.

Editors Herald: By the assistance of the district officers and all others interested we hope to be able to do a good work in the Southeastern Illinois District this year. Saints, let us each remember the covenants made on entering the Church. Personal purity and righteousness must not be neglected. Let us remember that "it is a day of warning and not a day of many words." Let us be "doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving ourselves."

CHAS. J. SPURLOCK.

Extracts from Letters.

Theodore S. Coffey writes from Gulliver, Michigan: "I am not a member of the Church, but am a firm believer and will be a member at the first opportunity."

Bro. A. E. Mortimer, of Toronto, Ontario, May 9: "Another Disciple from your side of the line is seeking notoriety and distinction along the old lines. They certainly are our inveterate foes, and each one that comes here fancies he is the one and only who is cut out to give the Mormon question its quietus. He has rushed into print over his own name, reviving the old, worn-out, stale questions that have been buried time and time again. R. C. answered through the columns of the Dufferin Post, announcing his perfect willingness to meet this man in public debate, expose the fallacy of Cambellism, and baptize a few more of their deluded followers, as has always followed. The editor said that 'another parson was looking for trouble and evidently was going to find it,' there was no doubt that he had 'woke up the wrong passenger,' and Elder Evans, of London, would not be very long in establishing that fact if the opportunity were but given him. R. C. has written out some propositions in keeping with the 'parson's' claims regarding his own ability to prove, and published them in the Dufferin Post, wherein the preacher's vain boasting appeared."

We extract from a friendly letter from Bro. Charles P. Faul, of Stewartsville, Missouri: "I congratulate you and the Church in having an article published in Ram's Horn, Chicago, Illinois, for May issue, on page 7. The article in question was written by you and is just splendid; also, the explanation by the editor of the paper at head of article. We are now seeing the fruits of labor for which the officials of the Church have been fighting for years. The paper, Ram's Horn, has thousands of subscribers throughout this and other countries, hence the article will be read by thousands of people.

"The weather here is delightful at this writing. Trees all out in leaves and bloom. Fruit will be just right for you to partake of when you visit our reunion, August 19. I just 'tap the bell,' as Bro. T. W. Chatburn says.

"One week ago in company of four hundred excursionists from Clarksdale and Maysville, nearly all Odd Fellows, I went to Liberty, Missouri, where the Odd Fellows have a home for the aged and orphans. I went purposely along. I never had been in Liberty, only in passing through on the train. By going with the excursion, I had the opportunity to visit the historic grounds of the Church, and to see the old jail which held the beloved prophet, your father, and others, who were incarcerated sixty years ago. Only the east end of this wicked prison is now standing. The woodwork is all gone. Why this building should be left standing on one of the main streets of the city in such a deplorable condition I can not tell. My thoughts,—well, Joseph, I can not tell you how I felt. The sufferings of the founders of the Church—and yet this jail was built and set up in a town going by the name of 'Liberty.'"

Solomon Tripp of Ft. Madison, Iowa, writes under date of May 8: "There is a man who is canvassing every house in town and preparing to destroy Mormonism. He says the Mormons are worse than Catholics and he is going to do all he can to overthrow their faith. I have permission to put up a tent here on a good location, and people are anxious to hear. I will do all I can for the cause we love, and I hope some of the elders will come this way and stop over. They will find a hearty welcome and I will keep them as long as they want to stay."

Bro. C. H. Porter wrote on May 9, from North Platte, Nebraska, as follows: "There is much sickness in this field. I have had many calls for administration in the last few weeks. We hope to see a change for the better as spring advances. Nebraska is being blessed with an abundance of rain, consequently the farmer rejoices and nature is coming forth in beautiful garments."

Bro. F. C. Keek wrote from Webb City, Missouri: "I am back in the field having the best of liberty. I administered to Sr. Julia Lloyd, who had not spoken above a whisper for three weeks, and she was restored in half an hour."

Miscellaneous Department.

Conference Minutes.

Kirtland.—Conference convened at 10 a. m., March 12, 1904, at Cleveland, Ohio, with U. W. Greene in charge, assisted by V. M. Goodrich and E. L. Kelley. J. A. Becker was chosen as secretary, selecting as his assistant, J. E. Kelley. Branches reporting: Cleveland, New Philadelphia, Sharon, Toledo, Byesville, Youngstown, Akron, Conneautville, and Temple, showing a gain in each branch save one. Ministry reporting: L. R. Devore, G. T. Griffiths, E. C. Briggs, O. B. Thomas, V. M. Goodrich, E. P. Schmidt, J. E. Kelley, R. Baldwin, F. J. Ebeling, D. L. Allen, J. C. Carlisle, J. A. Becker. Bishop's Agent Eben Miller reported: Balance on hand at last report, $40.18; received from all sources, $810.97; total disbursements, $860.50; balance due the agent, $9.35. Nineteen delegates to General Conference were elected. The elder's court appointed by Elder F. M. Sheehy, president of the Eastern Mission, reported their findings in four cases. The findings were affirmed. Final action was taken in the case of Kirtland District vs. H. I. Holt. By resolution of the conference the defendant, H. I. Holt, was expelled from the Church. Final action upon the remaining cases was deferred until the sitting of the next conference. Elder V. M. Goodrich was sustained as president of the district, who selected as his counselors, Elders Eben Miller and T. U. Thomas. J. A. Becker was sustained as secretary-treasurer, and Eben Miller as Bishop's agent. Two business, three preaching, one prayer, and one sacrament and social service were held. Adjourned to meet at Sharon, Pennsylvania, September 12 and 13, 1904.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission; Greeting: Wisdom seems to have decided in favor of my reappointment to the Rocky Mountain Mission for another year, in view of which a few lines are thus addressed to those interested in our work in that mission. We are to have as associate laborers, Brn. H. N. Hansen, S. D. Condit, A. J. Layland, John Condit, Swen Swenson, J. E. Vanderwood, A. M. Chase, J. D. Stead, W. E. Peak, Will S. Pender, and James E. Kelley. So our working force in point of numbers remains about the same that it was last year, but having become better acquainted with the field and its needs—all things being equal, our efforts should be better directed and made more effective than in the past. The ministry should feel the responsibility resting upon them and the importance of the work lying before them and enter at once industriously upon their respective duties, and put the time in as effectively as possible. None should loiter, as earnest, active, conscientious work is of right expected of every one. Some can do more, some less, but all can make consistent effort.

The division of territory will be left much as it was arranged last year, as to "fields of labor," with Bro. A. M. Chase in direct oversight in the Utah District; H. N. Hansen, Provo and adjacent places and south; S. D. Condit, Idaho and Western Wyoming; and J. D. Stead, Montana. These brethren will be expected to take the lead in advising with and directing the missionary force in their respective fields thus assigned, and labor as advantageously as possible. For the present Bro. W. E. Peak and James E. Kelley will be expected to labor in Montana; Will S. Pender, John Condit, A. J. Layland, and J. E. Vanderwood in Idaho and Western Wyoming; Swen Swenson in Utah and adjacent places. When in the "fields of labor" as assigned above, please advise with the one in direct oversight and report to him promptly once a quarter as per rule.

More than likely it will be necessary to make considerable change in some of these appointments during the summer; so it is advisable to put in the time as effectively as possible where you are now laboring. It is well known that the field is large and laborers are few, so we will have to be neighborly and aid each others' efforts as necessity may require. Of course our work is one of sacrifice, the aim to preach the gospel and thus lead men into a better way of thinking and acting. If faithful we have a right to expect divine aid and sanction in our work, which is glory enough in point of compensation for service rendered, and it insures the rewards laid up as treasure in heaven to be given in the Lord's time. Opposition may be expected, as the wily old adversary is still abroad in the world. The ministry may rely on the sympathy and encouragement of the Saints as in the past, and that support will be more readily given in proportion as laborers are zealous and earnest in their work. The local organizations and ministry should strive to extend an interest in their immediate spheres of action, and secure, when they can, one of the missionaries to aid them. This will arouse and intensify interest.

The late General Conference was well attended and the usual interest manifest in all that was done. An excellent social feeling prevailed and the preaching was to edification. The Spirit's aid was more like the gentle dews of heaven than in extraordinary demonstration, so one's marvelous spiritual ideal may not have been reached, but comfort and encouragement were given and good done, hence we record the Conference of 1904 a success; so let us move on hopefully to the accomplishment of what lies within the sphere of our activities during the present year, to meet again with renewed energy and confidence.

The missionary in charge intends reaching the field as early as practicable. He has already been detained, which will prolong the time some. After June 1, my mission address will be Box 181, Salt Lake City, Utah.

WM. H. KELLEY.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 12, 1904.

To the Department of the East; Greeting: Through the providence of God we are to be associate laborers for another year. Many changes have been made necessary by the changed conditions of the work confronting us to-day. We trust all will accept with cheerfulness those conditions and labor as best they may to advance the interest of the church of Christ.

We regret the loss of several faithful brethren from the mission and trust God's blessing may attend them wherever they labor. The Lord has said, "The work now lying before the missionary quorums of the Church is of such increased magnitude and importance—the field so white unto the harvest, and the need for laborers so great—that the Twelve and seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible; thus freeing these spiritual authorities and leaving them at liberty to push the preaching of the word into the new fields now widening before them; in which work, if they will but now take counsel, saith the Spirit, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past."—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7.

We trust that each brother will seek to labor in harmony with the above instruction. Open new fields and vigorously prosecute the work in those recently opened.

By reason of our position as a church we must expect continued opposition. Let every one be ready to defend the work, especially through the newspapers. We advise that when challenged for public discussion, propositions be submitted to the ministers in charge for consideration and that they be permitted to select experienced disputants to meet the issue.

Let all the Saints contribute to the tract fund in the hands of the Bishop. Will presidents of districts see that every six months a special collection is taken for this fund. We ought to raise enough money to furnish all our missionaries with tracts. Elders ordering tracts must do so through Bishop E. L. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa, specifying that they may be charged to the mission tract fund as arranged for with ministers in charge.

Many have been afraid to go from house to house in the past. Remember, "This is a day of warning, not of many words." Carry this message to the people. Call for helpers among the Saints; sisters make excellent workers. Assign them streets, leave tract with every family; notify them you will call for it in a week and leave additional reading-matter if desired. Use a note-book and enter street and number when tracts are refused. There is no time to be wasted by calling there again. Elders in the field are urged to adopt the system and push the work.

It is desired that reports be received promptly on July 1, January 1, and March 1. Where submissionaries are appointed, send through them, otherwise direct to the minister in charge. We are anxious to keep more fully in touch with all the elders in the field than formerly and shall expect to hear from each one frequently.

We trust our men will get into their fields as soon as convenient. When necessary to leave the fields notify those in charge so that the work may not suffer.

In order to prosecute the work intrusted to our care the following appointments have been made:

Maritime Provinces, H. J. Davison and Calvin H. Rich.

Eastern Maine, W. E. LaRue.

Western Maine, R. W. Farrell.

Massachusetts, R. Bullard and G. H. Smith.

New York and Philadelphia, F. G. Pitt, New York City, and W. W. Smith, Philadelphia.

New York State, A. B. Phillips and J. B. Lentz, J. Guy Munsell, Scranton, Pennsylvania.

Pittsburg District and Western Pennsylvania, Richard Baldwin, 97 Elm Street, in charge, J. A. Becker, James Craig, L. D. Ullum, R. M. Elvin, M. E. Thomas.

Ohio districts, F. J. Ebeling, Sinking Springs, Ohio, in charge, T. J. Beatty, S. J. Jeffers, E. H. Durand, E. P. Schmidt, E. E. Long.

Virginia, J. W. Roberts, who will be assisted by I. N. Roberts for a time.

West Virginia and Eastern Kentucky, J. L. Goodrich, Route 1, Wellston, Ohio, in charge, D. L. Shinn, S. O. Foss, J. L. Williams.

Kirtland District, U. W. Greene will personally direct the work; L. R. Devore in charge of the Temple; J. R. Beckley Lima objective point, assisted by J. E. Kelley for a time; G. A. Smith and D. L. Allen, Western Ohio; D. A. Anderson, Cleveland objective point.

V. M. Goodrich is in charge of tent services, Akron, Ohio, to be assisted by D. A. Anderson. Respectfully,

F. M. SHEEHY.

U. W. GREENE.

To the Ministry and Saints in the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the missionary work in your district for another year, I ask the hearty coöperation of all who are interested in the work of the Master. My field address will be Box 165, Fremont, Steuben County, Indiana. All missionaries in the district will please report to me on July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. Let us strive to accomplish more for the cause than we did last year. And to this end may the Lord give us light and wisdom.

In gospel bonds,
ISAAC M. SMITH.

Standing High Council.

From April 7 to 14, 1904, we held six sessions with the peace and unity of the Holy Spirit guiding. By reason of the death of Counselors James H. Peters and Calvin A. Beebe, and the absence of Counselors John Chisnall, James M. Baker, and Temme T. Hinderks, there existed five vacancies in the Council, which were filled for the trial of the following cases by the choosing of High Priests Robert C. Longhurst, George A. Smith, Joseph Squire, Vinton M. Goodrich, and Arthur E. Mortimer.

"Henry Broadway vs. New South Wales District, Australia.

"On appeal from Bishop's Court to High Council. Charge: Refusal to pay debt.

"This cause came up for adjudication before the High Council convened at Kirtland, Ohio, at the annual session of Conference held beginning April 6, 1904. Case was called April 11, at 8 p. m.

"The High Council took into consideration the testimonies had before the elders from which appeal was taken to the Bishop's Court, together with such new evidence as was duly submitted by the appellant.

"The case was patiently heard, and after due deliberation, the decision of the President was approved by the unanimous vote of the Council.

"Decision: That the action of the Bishop's Court and the Conference of 1903, be affirmed.

"Done at Kirtland, Ohio, April 11, 1904.

"Signed, JOSEPH SMITH, President of Council.

"ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary of Council."

"Maggie Thompson vs. Rachel Portius.

"On appeal from Bishop's Court to High Council. Charges: 1. Lying. 2. Slander.

"This cause came up for adjudication before the High Council convened at Kirtland, Ohio, at the annual session of Conference held beginning April 6, 1904. Case was called April 12, at 8 a. m., Elder John J. Cornish appearing in behalf of defendant.

"The High Council took into consideration the testimonies had before the elder's court from which appeal was taken to the Bishop's Court, together with such new evidence as was duly submitted by the appellant.

"The case was patiently heard, and after due deliberation the opinion of the President was approved by the unanimous vote of the Council.

"Opinion: It appears that in this case there was not a proper labor on the part of the accuser, and that the labor done was hasty and thus failed of effect. That the charge of slander was not sustained before the Bishop's Court and is not revived by evidence before the Council, that on this charge the findings of Bishop's Court are affirmed. And that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the charge of lying, and therefore the finding of Bishop's Court is reversed on this count.

"Done at Kirtland, Ohio, April 12, 1904.

"Signed, JOSEPH SMITH, president of Council.

ROBT. M. ELVIN, secretary for Council."

At the request of the Council the President prepared and presented the following statement and instruction.

"It is considered that in all cases of difficulty arising between members of the Church the officers of the branch who are required by duty to secure a reconciliation, or to take steps to enforce the law, should not only advise members to observe the rules laid down to govern action, but should themselves conform to those rules in the letter and the spirit of them; and thus avoid loss to the Church and injury to the individual; the honoring of the law will prevent both.

"In this instance a due regard to the rules was not had, and inconvenience to the Church, and failure to secure reconciliation on the one hand, and to properly enforce discipline on the other hand resulted.

"We therefore advise that in the future when it is necessary for labor to be done with an erring member, either on the behalf of one who has offended by personal affront or injury from another, or for an offence against the Church, a sufficient time between the first and subsequent efforts to bring about a settlement should be given for anger or resentment to fade, and a due consideration be had by the offending member before prosecution for discipline, or punishment be begun before the courts of the Church."

The unanimous vote of the Council approved the foregoing statement.

"Los Angeles Branch vs. Barney W. Pack.

"On appeal from Bishop's Court to High Council. Charge: Immoral conduct.

"This cause came up for adjudication before the High Council convened at Kirtland, Ohio, at the annual session of Conference held beginning April 6, 1904. Case was called April 13, 8 a. m., A Carmichael appearing for Los Angeles Branch, A. B. Phillips for Barney W. Pack, appellant.

"The High Council took into consideration the testimonies had before the elders' court from which appeal was taken to the Bishop's Court, together with such new evidence as was duly submitted by the appellant. The case was patiently heard, and after due deliberation the findings of the Bishop's Court were affirmed; the evidence presented being not sufficient to justify a reversal of the judgment of the Bishop's Court.

"Decision: The decision of the High Council was that the appellant was guilty as charged in count number 2.

"Signed, JOSEPH SMITH, President of Council.

"ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary of Council.

"Dated Kirtland, Ohio, April 14, 1904."

Memorial ordered to the families of Brn. Peters and Beebe.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

Church Addresses.

San Francisco Branch meets at 800 Guerrero Street, corner of Twentieth Street. Sunday-school at 9.45 a. m.; preaching at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. Sacramento service first Sunday in each month at 11 a. m. Prayer-meetings Wednesday nights.

THE SITUATION AS TO GRACELAND COLLEGE.

On May 12, 1904, the Bishopric of the Church and the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, to whom was referred the matter of the use and disposition of the property of Graceland College by resolution of the General Conference at Kirtland, held a joint meeting in the rooms of the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, and after due and careful consideration of their powers and duties in the premises adopted the following as a basis of work:

First: That the Board of Trustees of Graceland College was by the General Conference at its last session appointed a committee to act with the Bishopric in caring for the property of Graceland College as shown by minutes of said Conference, pages 705 and 706, and following the passage of a resolution of said Conference, page 698 of minutes, to-wit:

"Resolved that we favor a discontinuance of Graceland College after the close of its present term, and recommend that the property be turned over to other uses such as may be agreed upon by the Bishopric of the Church and such other councils or persons as may be chosen by the General Conference until such time as the General Conference decides to reopen the College."

Second: That the resolution favoring the discontinuance of Graceland College was acted upon without any notice whatever having been given that the same would be presented for action, as is required by the Articles of Incorporation of Graceland College which reads as follows:

"These articles may be amended at any General Conference of said Reorganized Church, or at any meeting of the Board of Trustees herein named, providing sixty days published notice of said amendment and the nature of the same be given through the SAINTS' HERALD prior to the time of such Annual Conference or meeting."—Article 15 of Incorporation Act.

Third: That the resolution referred to of the General Conference can not properly be considered an order for the closing of Graceland College, for the same would be contrary to the Articles of Incorporation, and the former action of General Conference requiring sixty days published notice before action upon such a resolution, and therefore absolutely void; but, that it was simply the expression of the sentiment of those present at the Conference upon the question, without the authority of an action to close the College.

Fourth: That this council, after due consideration of the question of closing the College and diverting the property to other uses than that of a college, which is duly provided for in the Articles of Incorporation, believe that it will actually cost less to run the College the ensuing year than to discontinue the running of the same; besides, it will so disturb the educational work, already in operation at great sacrifice and expense, as to make it doubtful if the College could ever recover from the effects of so stopping it.

Therefore after a full and respectful consideration of the feeling and sentiment expressed in the resolution by the General Conference, it is the sense of this council that its members in their respective capacities and duties as members of the Bishopric of the Reorganized Church, and as Trustees of Graceland College, use every legitimate effort practicable to solicit and collect the means to liquidate the full indebtedness now against the College, and, should the means be furnished, continue the running of the College according to its Articles of Incorporation, and the trust reposed by the Church.

E. L. KELLEY, Chairman of Council.

FRED'K M. SMITH, Secretary of Council.

SEPARATE ACTION OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

Upon the adjournment of the joint council, the Board of Trustees of Graceland College at a special meeting, all the members being present, adopted the following:

PREAMBLES AND RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas the Conference in session at Kirtland, Ohio, took action favoring the closing of the College without regard to a provision in the Articles of Incorporation requiring sixty days notice in case of change of said Articles, thereby doing injustice to a number of students and to parties who had purchased scholarships and made donations, when a year's notice would seem none too long to take such action in a matter so important, and

Whereas the sacrifice made in closing the College at this time is entirely too great, both by losing the services of President Dewsnup by reason of his educational standing, together with the extra expense of securing a president who, if his equal, would cost us several thousand dollars more for the term for which he has been engaged, and the discouragement it may cause to the many who have given their aid in many ways, and who have cause to fear the stability of an institution which may be closed with scarcely a moment's notice, and

Whereas a resolution was presented later in the Conference than the foregoing, by the Quorum of Twelve, favoring the running of the College as soon as the debt was paid, the Board believing such to be the sentiment of the Church membership generally, and that the closing of the College at the end of this year will present almost insurmountable obstacles to its reopening, and having an assurance from the Bishopric that active measures will be taken at once looking to the immediate liquidation of the debt,

Therefore be it resolved by the Board of Trustees of Grace-land College in special session assembled on this twelfth day of May, 1904, that we immediately proceed with the work of procuring and electing members of the faculty, the distribution of catalogues, and the performing of such other duties as are prescribed by the Articles of Incorporation to continue the College in session for the next year; it is understood, however, that such action is to be taken contingent upon the debt against the College being paid.

DANIEL ANDERSON, Chairman Board of Trustees.
FRED B. BLAIR, Secretary Board of Trustees.

STATEMENT OF THE BISHOPRIC.

The foregoing, showing the situation and needs of the College, indicates clearly the present duty of the Bishopric in connection therewith, for we are not only to do what we can to forward every proper undertaking for the good of the Church and its membership, but we are instructed by resolution of Conference to carry out the divine injunction to "pay the College debt."

We have therefore arranged to present the work of the payment of the debt in a systematic manner, apportioning the entire undertaking among the districts of the Church so that each shall be called upon to bear but its own burden in this matter, and when the duty shall have been discharged such district membership will have fully performed its part.

Already members in several of the districts have asked us to let them know what would be their part in this undertaking, accompanied with the assurance that they would do their utmost to perform their part at once.

With the foregoing explanatory statement the Bishopric will state to the several bishops and agents of the Church the amount to be raised by their respective districts under the appointment, with instructions to arrange with other officers of the districts and branches to place the matter before the Saints at the earliest practicable time, and report the results to the Bishop of the Church.

In the work then of the liquidation of the entire College debt we ask the help and cooperation of every officer and member of the Church, and trust that the spirit and blessing of the Lord may be with each one in his or her effort, that whatever is pleasing to Him that should be done in the matter may be done speedily and well.

The instructions will be forwarded to each district immediately and notice will be given of the action of each district in the order in which the same is received.

Hopefully in the promises of the gospel, we are in bonds ever,
E. L. KELLEY,
G. H. HILLIARD,
E. A. BLAKESLEE, of the Bishopric.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 13, 1904.

Conference Notices.

The Portland District will convene at Condon, Oregon, at 2.30 p. m., June 4, 1904. Reports of ministry and branches should be sent to the secretary, Sr. Lutie E. Kinney, 631 North Union Avenue, Portland, Oregon. Let all attend. It will be necessary to elect a president; also make some provision for tent-work. It is probable that High Priest J. C. Crabb, missionary for the district, will be present. Arthur Allen, president.

London District Conference will meet at Humber Bay church, on June 4, 5, 1904. All are cordially invited to be present. Hannah Leeder, secretary.

Conference will convene with Perseverance Branch near Seminole, Alabama, May 28, 1904, 10 a. m. F. P. Searcliff, president.

Northeastern Illinois District will convene with the Mission Branch, May 28, 1904, at 10 a. m. Those coming by rail please notify the branch president, J. Midgorden, of the time and place to which you are coming. Those coming on the Rock Island will be met at Seneca and those on the Burlington at Sheridan. W. E. Williamson, secretary.

The Fremont District will convene with the Riverton Branch, May 29, 30, 1904. It is expected that the ministerial reports will reach the secretary not later than May 20. A good attendance is desired. D. R. Chambers, president.

The quarterly conference of the Northwestern Kansas district will be held June 4, 5, 1904, at 10 a. m., as per adjournment, in Union Star Church, Pottersville, Kansas. Please send all branch statistical and ministerial reports to Fernando E. Taylor, Beloit, Kansas, Victor star line, as early as possible, also all other business that any one may desire to come before this conference to insure rapid work during the sessions. Ministerial reports will be mailed to branch clerks for distribution to the priesthood. Apostle I. N. White and the district missionary force are expected to be present. S. J. Madden, president.

Conference of the Northeastern Missouri District will convene June 4, at 10 a. m. at Bevier, Missouri. If possible, President F. M. Smith and Patriarch J. R. Lambert will be with us. Election of officers will take place at this conference. Send all reports to William Chapman, R. F. D. No. 1, Higbee, Missouri. J. A. Tanner, president.

Eastern Iowa District conference will be held at Clinton, Iowa, on June 4, 5, 1904. Send branch reports to D. L. Palsgrove, 110 Second Avenue, Clinton, Iowa. Mrs. R. B. Eckhart, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Gallands Grove Religio association will convene at Deloit, Iowa, May 26, 1904, at 8 p. m. Sunday-school association convenes May 27, at 2.30 p. m. May that energy and zeal that should characterize the children of God be in our midst. Floy Holcomb, secretary.

The Pottawattamie District Sunday-school association will meet at Boomer, Iowa, Friday, May 27, at 10 a. m. E. H. Carlile, secretary.

Sunday-school convention of Little Sioux District will convene at Little Sioux Iowa, June 3, 1904, at 10 a. m. Let all come praying God's Spirit to be with us and we will have a profitable time. Annie Stuart, secretary.

Des Moines District Sunday-school convention will be held at Des Moines, Iowa, June 3, 1904. Come and let us labor together for the advancement of this department of His work. Elsie E. Russell, secretary.

The Central Illinois District Sunday-school convention will be held at Beardstown, Illinois, June 3, 1904. M. R. Shoemaker.

Religio Society of the Nauvoo District will convene at Argyll, Iowa, at 2.30 p. m., June 10, 1904. Clara Seigfreid, secretary.

The London, Ontario, District Religio association will meet in convention at Humber Bay, Ontario, 2.30 p. m., June 2, 1904. James Pycock, secretary.

Died.

JOHNSON.—Sr. Sarah H. Johnson was born in Hampdon, Maine, October 3, 1836, baptized by Elder B. K. Rodgers August 10, 1873, at Jonesport, confirmed by Elders T. W. Smith and J. C. Foss. She was married to Bro. J. Johnson (date not known by the writer) now deceased, to which union twins were born. One died in early life; the other is Sr. Mamie Smith, of Jonesport, with whom she resided and at which place she peacefully passed away on the morning of April 28. Funeral services by Elder S. O. Foss.

STAFFORD.—At Lamoni, Iowa, Sister Fanny Bower Stafford, April 29, 1904, from a complication of diseases, aged 53 years, 7 months, 25 days. Funeral from her late home May 1, sermon by Elder John Smith, assisted by Bishop William Anderson. She patiently bore her sufferings until death brought release to her, for she did not fear death.

CROUSE.—Carl Crouse, at Downs, Kansas. He was born September 7, 1890; died April 15, 1904. He was not a member of the Church but was a good boy. Every body thought well of him. He died with inflammation of the bowels. Funeral in charge of S. A. Madden. He was buried April 16. He leaves a father, mother, and one sister to mourn. His mother is a member of the Church.

GOULD.—At Jonesport, April 17, 1904, Wm. Gould. He was born at Jonesport, February 22, 1862; was baptized December 8, 1895, by Samuel O. Foss. His last illness was of short duration, but he affirmed that he had been admonished by a heavenly messenger that this was his last sickness, that his end was near, and he said he "was ready" to go. His faith in the gospel was firm. Funeral sermon by Elder U. M. Kelley and excellent attention by a large number who came to sympathize with those immediately bereaved.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
ABSOLUTELY PURE
 Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

"She Wants to Tell."

Sr. M. E. Webber of Queensboro, Ontario, Canada, writes January 12, 1904, saying: "Dear Brother:—I want to tell you how pleased I am with your Quit-to-bac. My brother used less than two boxes and has not touched tobacco since he began to use it and has gained in flesh and is better in every way." If it cures others, why not you? Three boxes sent post-paid for $1.50 with positive guarantee of cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.
 Address, (Bro.) B. F. Ordway, 228 Hancock St., Peoria, Ill., U. S. A.

The World's Greatest Newspaper

The Chicago Tribune

Up-to-date farmers read

"PRACTICAL FARMING,"

the best Agriculture Department
in the West

---

For Women . . .
 Fashions
 Beauty Hints
 Household Talks
 Book Reviews

For Men . . . .
 Market Reports
 Sporting News
 Fair Politics.

For Children . . .
 Cut-Outs
 Comics
 Stories

McCutcheon's Cartoons

---

$4.00 a Year Daily
$6.50 Daily and Sunday

To the Saints who may feel an interest in the Independence Manufacturing and Mercantile Company, we beg to say that on account of an almost unexpected heavy trade in our planing mill and lumber yard, we have, in order to meet the demand, increased our capital from $25,000 to $50,000 and now offer stock in shares from $10 up.

We certainly think money so invested will earn from ten to fifteen per cent and at the same time aid in building up and establishing permanent industries of our own, also furnish labor to the unemployed.

Shall not the children of the kingdom be as wise as the children of the world?

Send all remittances to A. R. White, Independence, Missouri.

ELLIS SHORT, President.
A. R. WHITE, Secretary.

19-4t

Herald Office Publications.

All books are sold by numbers. Send numbers only. Send all orders and make all remittances payable to Herald Publishing House, Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

MINISTRY BLANK REPORTS.
 209. Per dozen . . . . . 10

REORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
 201. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 6

NEW TRACTS.

- No. 36. Can Belief Alone Save? Per dozen 10C.
- No. 208. Teachings in Contrast. The teachings of the Utah Church and the Reorganization in parallel columns. Per dozen 15C.
- No. 209. The Church of Jesus Christ. Where is it? How shall I know it? There are many churches of men; only the one church of Christ. Price, per dozen 20c., per 100 $1.50
- No. 5. The Latter Day Saints; Who Are They? Dozen 20C.

KEOKUK & WESTERN R. R. CO.

North—Leave Leon 2: 40 p. m.; arrive at Des Moines 6: 05 p. m.
 South—Leave Des Moines 8: 25 a. m.; arrive at Leon 11: 45 a. m.
 Trains daily except Sunday; connect with C., B. & Q. at Leon.

TRACTS.

- 33. Trial of the Witnesses to the Resurrection of Jesus. Each 5 cents; per dozen . . . . . 5
- 47. The Basis of Brighamite Polygamy. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 . . . . . 6

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
 Lamoni, Iowa.

Interest Never Sleeps.

It works while you sleep like a silent partner.

If you have any money that is not earning interest, write at once to the oldest established bank in Lamoni.

The Commercial Bank,
 D. F. Nicholson, Cashier. LAMONI, IOWA.

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

JUST PUBLISHED

PLURAL MARRIAGE IN AMERICA

President Joseph Smith Discusses the Origin of American Polygamy

Reply to Article by President Joseph F. Smith of the Utah polygamous church in Arena for November, 1902, printed in neat 39 page tract. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $2.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 Lock Box E, Lamoni, Iowa

Business Men, Elders, and Other Latter Day Saint Friends

We buy old typewriters, rebuild them, and make them practically new, and sell from $10 up. Write us for our special bargain list just out

Sherman Art Company
 1224 Congress St., 17r4t Chicago

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
LAMONI - - IOWA

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS, 1852 to 1900.

- 197. Paper. . . . . 50
- 198. Cloth, limp. . . . . 35

EUSEBIUS' ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

- 226. Each. . . . . 1 50

The Saints' Herald

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 27

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, May 25, 1904

Number 21

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
 of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR
 I. A. SMITH . . . . . ASSISTANT EDITOR
 FRED'K M. SMITH . . . . . CORRESPONDING EDITOR
 Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
Is It Slander? - - - - -	473
The Evil of Profanity - - - - -	477
Original Articles:
An Examination of "Campbellism" - - - - -	478
Selected Articles:
An Annual Problem - - - - -	484
Can We Fly at Last? - - - - -	485
Mothers' Home Column:
Half Hours With Parents and Teachers.—No. 2 - - - - -	486
Letter Department:
Letters - - - - -	487
Extracts from Letters - - - - -	490
Miscellaneous Department:
Convention Minutes:
Philadelphia - - - - -	491
Pastoral:
Joseph Luff - - - - -	491
J. D. Stead - - - - -	491
N. V. Sheldon - - - - -	491
J. W. Morgan - - - - -	491

Editorial.

The presiding officers of a branch are the shepherds of the flock, more especially the elder who is chosen or appointed from time to time, to look after the affairs of the Saints in the branch. It is the duty of the shepherd to teach the gospel, the law of the Lord, the rules of the Church by which the members are to be governed, both individually and as a body, including in his teaching all the membership from the time they come into the Church; and it is his special duty to so teach. He should counsel with his fellow elders in the Church in his teaching, if there are any in the branch, and especially with his fellow and associate officers in the branch. Preaching to the world in the presence of the Saints is in a sense feeding the flock; but counseling and instructing the membership in public and in private will come more specifically under the head of feeding the flock.

IS IT SLANDER?

DENIED BY THEIR OWN EVIDENCE.

It will be remembered by the readers of the HERALD that at the Conference for April, 1903, at Independence, Missouri, a resolution was passed favoring an enactment of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the practice of polygamy in all the States and Territories under the jurisdiction of the Republic. This resolution was introduced by two whereases, the first in these words:

It is currently reported that polygamy is still practiced in Utah and adjacent States and Territories in defiance of the laws of God and the laws of the land.

The second was to the effect that the laws enacted by State legislation seem to be inadequate to prevent or prohibit the practice of polygamy without the intervention of Federal enactment.

The Deseret News for Monday, April 27, 1903, copied the whereases and the resolution and referred to them as follows:

We copy this resolution for the purpose of showing the animus of the religious body which poses as an organization of believers in the doctrines promulgated by the Prophet Joseph Smith, and yet disputes and fights against some of his enunciations as the revealed mind and will of God. The first "whereas" in the foregoing resolution repeats a current report and gives it circulation, when it is nothing but rumor and contains a slander that has been rebutted almost as often as it has been published. The "Reorganization" thus places itself upon record as a disseminator of scandal, and joins itself into the army of calumniators of the Saints. It pays no heed to the "current" denials of the report, which in fairness should have been noticed as well as the rumor if there had been any real occasion to mention either. The refutations that have been made are official and positive, while the stories repeated in the resolution are only gossip and malicious assertion without evidence in their support. The second "whereas" asserts a direct falsehood. There is absolutely nothing to show that the laws of Utah are inadequate to the purpose mentioned. On the contrary, it is clear that they are sufficient, because no cases of polygamy as defined by statute have been prosecuted since their enactment.

As evidence that the Reorganization did not, in the resolution referred to, mistake the situation, nor was guilty of slandering, being misled by rumor, we quote the evidence of President Joseph F. Smith, Francis M. Lyman, Angus M. Cannon, and Brigham H. Roberts, before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Reed Smoot case, lately pending in Congress:

President Joseph Smith being interrogated gave answers to questions as follows:

The Chairman.—Mr. Smith, you say you obey the law of the land?

Mr. Smith.—Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, I do not quite understand your statement.

The Chairman.—I understood the Senator from Indiana to put a question, which I will ask the reporter to read.

The reporter read as follows:

“Senator Beveridge.—What I mean is this. Your belief may be one way, which is nobody’s business. You, notwithstanding your belief, obey the law of the land?”

“Mr. Smith.—Yes.”

The Chairman.—You obey the law?

Mr. Smith.—

The Chairman.—Do you obey the law in having five wives at this time, and having them bear to you eleven children since the manifesto of 1890?

Mr. Smith.—Mr. Chairman, I have not claimed that in that case I have obeyed the law of the land.

The Chairman.—That is all.

Mr. Smith.—I do not claim so, and I have said before that I prefer to stand my chances against the law.

The Chairman.—Certainly.

Mr. Smith.—Rather than to abandon my children and their mothers. That is all there is to it.

Senator Beveridge.—That leads necessarily to another question. I understood you yesterday to say why it was you continued that, that you were willing to take the chances as an individual. My question was directed to this: That, as head of the Church, whatever your beliefs may be, it is your practice and the practice of the Church to obey the law of the land, in teaching, notwithstanding what your opinion may be. Is that correct or not?

Mr. Smith.—That is correct, and I wish to assert that the Church has obeyed the law of the land, and that it has kept its pledges with this Government; but I have not as an individual, and I have taken that chance myself.

The Chairman.—I wish to ask you a question right here. You speak of your unwillingness to abandon your children.

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—Why is it necessary, in order to support your children, educate, and clothe them, that you should continue to have children by a multiplicity of wives?

Mr. Smith.—Because my wives are like everybody else’s wife.

The Chairman.—I am not speaking of them.

Mr. Smith.—I understand.

The Chairman.—I am speaking of the children now in existence born to you.

Mr. Smith.—Yes.

Mr. Chairman.—Why is it necessary to continue to have issue by five wives in order to support and educate the children already in existence? Why is it necessary?

Mr. Smith.—It is only to the peace and harmony and good will of myself and my wives; that is all.

The Chairman.—Then you could educate your children and clothe them and feed them without having new issue?

Mr. Smith.—Well, yes; I possibly could, but that is just exactly the kernel in the nut.

The Chairman.—Yes.

Mr. Smith.—I have chosen not to do that, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman.—You have chosen not to do it?

Mr. Smith.—That is it. I am responsible before the law for my action.

The Chairman.—And in not doing it, you are violating the law?

Mr. Smith.—The law of my State?

The Chairman.—Yes.

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir.

Senator Overman.—Is there not a revelation published in the Book of Covenants here that you shall abide by the law of the State?

Mr. Smith.—It includes both unlawful cohabitation and polygamy.

Senator Overman.—Is there not a revelation that you shall abide by the laws of the State and of the land?

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir.

Senator Overman.—If that is a revelation, are you not violating the laws of God?

Mr. Smith.—I have admitted that, Mr. Senator, a great many times here.

Senator Overman.—I did not know that you had.

Mr. Smith.—And I am amenable to the law for it. But I see the point of the Senator’s question. Gentlemen, you have shown a great deal of leniency in permitting me to express my views here, and I do not wish to be offensive and I do not wish to take more time than I need to. But the Church itself—I understand your point, that the Church forbids me to violate the law, certainly it does—but the Church gave me those wives, and the Church can not be consistent with itself and compel me to forsake them and surrender them.

Senator Bailey.—“The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away,” and when the Lord gave this second revelation forbidding it—

Mr. Smith.—He did not forbid it.

Senator Bailey.—Well, he did, if the manifesto is based upon a revelation, because the manifesto declared against it.

Mr. Smith.—The manifesto declares positively the prohibition of plural marriages, and in the examination before the master in chancery the president of the Church and other leading members of the Church agreed before the master in chancery that the spirit and meaning of that revelation applied to unlawful cohabitation as well as to plural marriages.

Senator Bailey.—That is what I was coming to now, Mr. Smith. Then, as I understand you, both plural marriage and unlawful cohabitation are forbidden by the statutes of Utah and by the revelations of God. Is that true?

Mr. Smith.—That is the spirit of it, sir.

Mr. Tayler.—In this prayer for amnesty there is this sentence: “As shepherds of a patient, suffering people we ask amnesty for them and pledge our faith and honor for their future.”

Do you recall that statement?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. Tayler.—Did you interpret that as meaning that you would obey the law respecting polygamous cohabitation?

Mr. Lyman.—I intended to do everything that is right in the observance of the law.

Mr. Tayler.—Do you think it would be right to abstain from polygamous cohabitation with your plural wife?

Mr. Lyman.—I think it would have been right.

Mr. Tayler.—You did not do that, though?

Mr. Lyman.—No, sir.

Mr. Tayler.—Then you did wrong?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir; according to the law.

Mr. Tayler.—According to the law?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

Mr. Tayler.—It was wrong according to the Church law as well?

Mr. Lyman.—It was wrong according to the rule of the Church.

Mr. Tayler.—So you violated both laws?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

Mr. Tayler.—The law of the land and the rule of the Church?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—I wish to ask a question right here. You are now continuing in this polygamous relation?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—And intend to?

Mr. Lyman.—I had thought of nothing else, Mr. Chairman.
The Chairman.—And you are the next in succession to the presidency?
Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

Senator Hoar.—Do you not understand that the revelation requiring you to abstain from polygamy comes from God?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

Senator Hoar.—Do you not understand that you are disobeying the commands of God in disobeying that revelation?

Mr. Lyman.—So far, Mr. Chairman, as my disobeying the law in regard to polygamy is concerned, I have not. I have most earnestly and faithfully, from the adoption of the manifesto, done all in my power to prevent polygamous marriages in the Church.

Senator Hoar.—That is not my question.

Mr. Lyman.—I have been most faithful in that.

Senator Hoar.—I am not asking you about that. You have said more than once that in living in polygamous relations with your wives, which you do and intend to do, you knew that you were disobeying this revelation?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

Senator Hoar.—And that in disobeying this revelation you were disobeying the law of God?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

Senator Hoar.—Very well. So that you say that you, an apostle of your Church, expecting to succeed, if you survive Mr. Smith, to the office in which you will be the person to be the medium of divine revelations, are living and are known to your people to live in disobedience of the law of the land and of the law of God?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—May I ask a question right here?

Mr. Tayler.—Certainly.

The Chairman.—Why did you conceal this third marriage from your other wives?

Mr. Roberts.—Chiefly for the purpose of relieving them from any embarrassment should the discovery of the marriage be made.

Of course we understood that the marriage was illegal.

Senator Beveridge.—Then, how could they be embarrassed?

Mr. Roberts.—If called upon to testify, they would not wish to testify against me.

Senator Beveridge.—Oh!

The Chairman.—You understood at that time that the marriage was illegal?

Mr. Roberts.—I did.

The Chairman.—Just a question before you go to that.

Mr. Tayler.—Very well.

The Chairman.—At the time of your last marriage, did the party who performed the ceremony know you had wives living?

Mr. Roberts.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—Did you tell him?

Mr. Roberts.—He had previously married me to my second wife.

The Chairman.—Did he know you had a wife before that?

Mr. Roberts.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—Living?

Mr. Roberts.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—So that at the time the last ceremony was performed by him as a leading member of the Church he knew you had two living wives?

Mr. Roberts.—He did.

The Chairman.—I wish to ask you a question. You say that you believed that polygamy was a divinely directed institution and you believed in it?

Mr. Roberts.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—And that is the reason why you took the wife?

Mr. Roberts.—It was.

The Chairman.—Do you still believe in that?

Mr. Roberts.—I do.

The Chairman.—Did you understand the manifesto of 1890 to suspend plural marriages?

Mr. Roberts.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—Did you understand it to suspend polygamous cohabitation?

Mr. Roberts.—I did.

The Chairman.—You so understood it. Are you living in polygamous cohabitation?

Mr. Roberts.—I am.

The Chairman.—This revelation or this manifesto of 1890 you think was inspired by God?

Mr. Roberts.—Yes; in a way.

The Chairman.—You are living in defiance of the law—

Mr. Roberts.—I suppose I am.

The Chairman.—Then you are living in defiance of the law both of God and of man?

Mr. Roberts.—I should like to explain in relation to that.

The Chairman.—That is very simple.

Mr. Roberts.—I do not wish to be defiant in the matter, but I found myself in the midst of these obligations and am trying to the best of my ability to meet them according to the dictates of my conscience, and therefore I am continuing the relations I entered into.

The Chairman.—In living in polygamous cohabitation you are living in defiance of the manifesto of 1890, are you not?

Mr. Roberts.—Yes, sir; in defiance of the action of the Church on that subject.

The Chairman.—And that was divinely inspired, as you understand?

Mr. Roberts.—I think so.

The Chairman.—And you are clearly living in defiance of the law of the land?

Mr. Roberts.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—Then you are disregarding both the law of God and of man?

Mr. Roberts.—I suppose I am.

The Chairman.—I want to ask one or two questions upon this subject. You have had three children since the manifesto of 1890?

Mr. Cannon.—I have.

Mr. Tayler.—What was your understanding as to that manifesto? Did it do anything more than prohibit future plural marriages?

Mr. Cannon.—That was the understanding I had of it when it was issued, that it prohibited future plural marriages.

The Chairman.—Was it your understanding, and the understanding of others, that it prohibited polygamous cohabitation?

Mr. Cannon.—I did not so understand it until I read President Woodruff's declaration, on the first day of November, in Logan, in 1891.

The Chairman.—Then you understood that it prohibited polygamous cohabitation?

Mr. Cannon.—I did.

The Chairman.—Since that time, you have cohabited with these wives?

Mr. Cannon.—It has been my practice, if I can not live the law as the Lord gives it to me, I come as near to it as my mortal frailty will enable me to do.

The Chairman.—I understand that from statements. I only want to get at the fact, Mr. Cannon, that you have had three children born to you since the manifesto?

Mr. Cannon.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—And you understood its scope to prohibit polygamous cohabitation since 1891—these children were born to you since that date?

Mr. Cannon.—I have understood so, but—

The Chairman.—Then you were living in violation of the manifesto, were you not?

Mr. Cannon.—I presume I come under the head of those that James spoke of.

The Chairman.—Did you regard the manifesto, and do you regard it as of divine origin?

Mr. Cannon.—I read that all scripture comes as holy men of old were wrought upon to write and speak as dictated of the Holy Ghost, and I believe President Woodruff was dictated of the Holy Ghost.

The Chairman.—When he made this manifesto?

Mr. Cannon.—Yes, sir.

The Chairman.—Therefore you believe it was divine?

Mr. Cannon.—I do.

The Chairman.—Then, in cohabiting with these wives since the manifesto, you have violated the law of God, have you not?

Mr. Cannon.—I know I can not live without violating his laws.

The Chairman.—Answer that question, whether you have violated that particular law we are talking about.

Mr. Cannon.—I presume I did.

The Chairman.—Are you violating the laws of the United States in having children in polygamous cohabitation?

Mr. Cannon.—I presume it is so construed.

The Chairman.—Then you, as a patriarch, are violating both the law of your Church and the law of the land.

Mr. Cannon.—Yes; I am only mortal.

The Chairman.—Why not? Do you intend to continue polygamous cohabitation?

Mr. Cannon.—I will have to improve if I do not.

The Chairman.—Then, in other words, you intend to continue to violate the law of the land and the law of God, as you understand it?

Mr. Cannon.—I intend to try and be true to the mothers of my children until death deprives me of the opportunity.

What was said in the resolution was acknowledged to be rumor, but the evidence we have presented shows that so far as the country understood the term "polygamy," it was being practiced in Utah and has continued to be up to the date of this examination. The public rumor did not recognize the nice distinction in the meaning of the term "polygamy" couched in the language of the Enabling Act and the Constitution of Utah as meaning the act of being married plurally, and it was this common understanding, the practice of polygamy meaning the living with more than one wife; that was referred to in the resolution, and also in the effort being made to secure an amendment to the Constitution of the United States intended to cover both the taking of plural wives in marriage and living with them as wives.

That the statute laws of Utah have not been sufficient to restrain polygamists from living in open violation of the law is conclusively proved by the statements of these four men, not obscure men, but men of note, leaders in society and in the Church. It is not sufficient to say that the absence of prosecution is evidence that the statutes are sufficient to restrict the crime, for the reason that the law is rendered null because of the failure of those who had charge of its execution neglecting or refusing to prosecute men in high position like these men who have thus admitted that they have been and now are living in defiance of the law of God and man. Perhaps the secret of it may be found in the peculiar remark of President Joseph F. Smith that he despised a "spotter," an "informer." This attitude of President Smith toward what he pleases to call a spotter or an informer, may have obtained among his brethren of every class, and they have refused to put themselves in the position of one said to be despised by him, notwithstanding his disobedience to law has been well and widely known among them.

In the issue of the Deseret Evening News for May 4, 1904, an editorial quotes from the Daily Record, of Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, a statement that seems to carry the inference that there would be a welcome to the Utah people at Independence, providing they choose to come in and help build up the city. We call attention of the News to the fact that the proviso upon which any people would be welcomed at Independence is, that their "doors must be open to all comers, especially to those who are inclined to be honorable, honest, law-abiding citizens."

In the light of the evidence which we have given above, where leading men of the Utah Church state distinctly that they have disregarded the laws of the United States, the law of the state of Utah, and the law of God acknowledged as a rule of the Church to which they belong, can such men come within the rule referred to above,—"honorable, honest, law-abiding citizens"?

What guarantee have the citizens of Independence that these same men, together with their followers, would not continue in their practices in disregard of law in Missouri as they have done in Utah? Would not they continue to disregard the law of God, the rule of the Church, and the statute enactments of the state of Missouri, as citizens at Independence, the same as they have done as citizens of Utah since 1862, when laws began to be enacted by Congress against plural marriages and their practice? These men not only acknowledged that they were living in violation of the law of God and the law of the State, but that they intended to continue to do so, upon the hypothesis, as one of them put it, that he was "mortal." Will they not continue to be mortal should they become citizens of Missouri?

Taking the foregoing into consideration, we conclude that in the resolution referred to the Reorganized Church did not slander the Church in Utah known as the Mormon Church.

The News has quoted from one Independence paper. We add the following from another, the Independence News, for April 28, 1904, which we commend to the attention of the News, as well as to our own readers:

Elder Duffin who purchased the Swope tract of ground is back in Kansas City from Utah and confirms the report that the Utah Mormons are coming to Independence. He says that there was a time when it was not safe for them to come to Independence, but since those days that there has been a wonderful change of feeling towards them. Where he ever got the idea that Independence would welcome them with open arms is well known, but in this respect Elder Duffin is badly mistaken and misled. The merchants' meeting called in this city to extend a welcome to Utah Mormons came about in this way. A certain party telephoned Chris Casper, who was sick in bed, asking that his name be used to call a meeting to extend the glad hand. Mr. Casper was not in a position to refuse the public meeting and it was called. Just before the meeting an editorial was published in this paper showing the danger of such a movement upon the part of the citizens of this community and there was no one attended. The meeting was to have been held in the office of Oscar Mindrup, but even Mr. Mindrup did not attend. Such was the way the association was worked. The next day a publication in this city came out with the assertion that all the financiers, bankers, etc., were in favor of the Utah Mormons locating in Independence, but we have not heard of a single even imaginary financier or what not favoring the movement upon the part of the citizens of Independence. Elder Duffin should inform himself if he would act conscientiously towards his people and not be misled or lulled into the belief that Independence will welcome with open arms a people who believe in polygamy as a divine institution and who are kept from practicing it openly by reason of the stern measures of the federal government.

---

THE EVIL OF PROFANITY.

According to Doctor J. B. McClay, of the Gordon Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Cleveland, Ohio, America's greatest sin is profanity. Among other things said by him in a recent sermon occurs the following:

Profanity is one of the most common evils in our country. It is indulged in alike by youth and old age. So common is profanity among American tourists that many foreigners consider us a nation of swearers. It is a habit that becomes complete master and men are profane without being aware of it. It may have its roots in the slang words used about the home or school. A superfluous expletive or adjective used to add emphasis may lead to the use of a strong expression.

Profanity violates the third commandment and destroys the reverence for God and sacred things. "Heavens," "My God," "Good God," are all profanity and are the most unreasonable of all sinful acts. Men steal for gain or lie to gain some advantage. Men murder to cover some previous crime or drink to drown trouble or satiate some awful appetite. But men deliberately swear to satisfy no desire, to get no pleasure, to acquire no gain. It makes no one happier, wiser, or better.

When a man deliberately blasphemes the name of God he hardens his heart against God and becomes more and more a sinner. He offends his friends who do not indulge and if he persists in living in open rebellion and in constant danger of eternal separation from God, the punishment meted out to him will be most severe.

We give place to the expression of Doctor McClay for the purpose of calling attention of the Saints to the fact that the habit of profanity should not only be avoided by the Saints, but should be discouraged in others by both the precept and the example of the Saints. We know that this can be done, from personal experience. We once asked a citizen of Plano, a very prominent man in the town, why it was that he, who was so given to profanity, refrained from profane expressions in the presence of ladies and also in the presence of clergymen, we having noticed that he very seldom used profane language in the presence of ladies or ministers, ourself included. He replied, "It is not polite to swear in the presence of ladies, and it is disrespectful to swear in the presence of ministers." We then asked him if he could restrain himself from profanity in the presence of ladies and the ministry, why could he not do so in the presence of others? He admitted that he could and that he supposed he ought to, as it was both useless and wicked.

---

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. and Sr. John A. Godfrey, of Delta, Colorado, show their faith by their works in forwarding their offerings for the advancement of the cause of truth. Bro. Godfrey writes in connection therewith that he "trusts the Church may be led onward to victory, that the gifts and blessings of God may continue to be poured out more abundantly and that all manner of men may know the gospel in its fullness."

There was an Order of Enoch organized in the Church some years ago, when the settlement at Lamoni was made; but it was closed out after running a few years for the reason that those who organized and attempted to carry it on were misunderstood and criticised and misrepresented. No loss to the stockholders occurred.

Bro. Wilson Teeters, of Ray, Indiana, presents to the church library an old school-book on geography, which bears the date 1820. Bro. I. M. Smith forwards it to the library and calls special attention to the geography of Ethiopia, believing it outlines more specifically the lands "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." The following is an extract: "The following countries, which are little known, are sometimes included in Ethiopia: Biledulgerid, Zanhaga, Fezzan, Zahara or the Desert, Negroland or Nigritia, and other places in the central part of Africa. . . . Lower Ethiopia extends through much of the interior of Africa; but there is great difference of opinion respecting the names, and even the existence of the nations. . . . Zanhaga is a district of Zahara, bordering on the Atlantic. . . . Zahara, or the Desert, comprehends a vast extent, stretching from the Atlantic to Nubia, and from Biledulgerid to Nigritia; it is, excepting a few spots, a mere desert, and so parched, that the caravans from Morocco and Negroland are obliged to carry both water and provisions. . . . Mataman, or Cimbibea, lies on the western coast of Africa, between Guinea and the Cape of Good Hope. It is little visited by Europeans."

Original Articles.

AN EXAMINATION OF "CAMPBELLISM."

BY ELDER R. C. EVANS.

The sect calling itself Disciples, or Christians, but commonly known as Campbellites, has been posing as the guardian angel of the Christian religion since its organization in 1828. Many of its representative ministers have acquired notoriety by a manifestation of egotism and impudence to such an extent that the writer has been called upon, on several occasions, to defend the plain principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ as recorded in the New Testament, against their attack.

From the founder of the sect to its present representative men they have been guilty of making violent and bitter attacks on the cherished principles of the different institutions among men for good. No denomination has escaped the fury of their denunciation. Perhaps the most contemptible matter in all their history is that when it seems good policy they will appear favorable to one denomination in order to wage war upon another church. This method has been adopted by them, as a body, and to prove that they are guilty of this "wolf in sheep's clothing" method of procedure, we submit evidence from their own books, papers, and sermons.

Alexander Campbell is acknowledged by them to have been the founder of the sect that bears his name, hence we shall give special notice to the writings of this prominent disturber.

Alexander Campbell, by his commanding talents, by his great force of character, and by his invincible courage, overshadowed all other reformers, and at once by common consent of all parties, became the acknowledged champion—the admired leader—of the great onslaught upon the sectarian world.—History of Reformatory Movements, Rowe, p. 179.

Campbell, Alexander, founder of the religious sect calling themselves Disciples of Christ, but commonly known as Campbellites. Born in County Antrim, Ireland, in June, 1786, died in Bethany, West Virginia, March 4, 1866.—American Cyclopaedia, vol. 3, p. 662.

Thomas Campbell came from Scotland to the United States in May, 1807, and his son Alexander landed in New York, September 9, 1809. They both settled in Washington County, Pennsylvania. When Thomas Campbell landed in Philadelphia, he found the seceder synod in session, and, upon presenting his credentials, he was cordially received and at once assigned by this synod to the Presbytery of Chartiers in Western Pennsylvania. Both father and son were educated from childhood in the Westminster confession of faith.—History of Reformatory Movements, p. 127.

From the above we learn that Alexander Campbell was early in life connected with Presbyterians, and if we are to believe his own words, he was a bigot from the start:

I have, said he, tried the Pharisaic plan, and the monastic, I was once so straight, that, like the Indian's tree, I leaned a little the other way. . . . I was once so strict a separatist that I would neither pray, nor sing praises with any one who was not as perfect as I supposed myself.—Christian Baptist, p. 238.

I quote from one of their biographers, who will surely give them justice:

When the Campbells landed on the shores of America, they found the various denominations in a deplorable condition, and the Presbyterian "branches" were, if anything, more powerless, as spiritual agencies, than any other branch of the church. All around, as they viewed the religious horizon, . . . they saw nothing but dissension and disunion, bigotry, party intolerance, and sectarian selfishness. . . . The great soul of Thomas Campbell was moved within him when he saw that the whole land was given over to the idolatrous worship of opinions. . . . The various sects were quarreling and fighting over party shibboleths. . . . The denominations were all lost to the apostolic order of things.—History of Reformatory Movements, pp. 127-129.

Just think of it, Alexander, not yet out of his teens! His father, at first sight, took in the entire situation, saw the whole land was given over to idolatrous worship of opinions,—all wrong, the religious world in complete chaos, the Presbyterians worst of all.

Why was it that these statements (I say statements because we are told "that not one Protestant minister among ten thousand would make the least plea for Christian union upon the basis of the Bible; not one, intellectually and morally, in comparison with Thomas Campbell. They are all pigmies."—History Reformatory Movements, p. 161) did not at once denounce the church and start up their own sect? It was because they were not strong enough. From the first, they plotted the downfall and destruction of the churches. They acted as "wolves in sheep's clothing," but their conduct and double dealing were soon discovered and what was the result? At the first session of the Presbytery, specified charges were preferred against Campbell. He apologized soon after. The synod of Pittsburg, assembled at Washington, Pennsylvania, on the second day of October, 1810, refused to receive Thomas Campbell into their body. This action roused the ire of the "young polemic," Alexander. He availed himself of the first opportunity and told that august body what he thought of them.

Then commenced a public tirade upon the sectarian world. This continued till in June, 1812, when Alexander Campbell and his wife, his father, mother, and sister were baptized by Elder Matthias Luse, of the Baptist Church, and soon after Alexander was ordained one of the elders of the Church at Brush Run. He labored for several years as a Christian teacher with that body. For a full history of his baptism, ordination, and service as a minister in the Baptist Church the reader is referred to the History of the Reformatory Movements, by Rowe, and Campbellism Examined, by Jeter.

He became a prominent member of the Redstone Association, "He had now ceased to be a Pharisee—he could sing and pray with his fellow Christians." But the two Campbells soon wearied of the Baptist Church, and again we notice the evidence of hypocrisy and deception. Notwithstanding Campbell had been baptized by a Baptist minister, ordained a Baptist minister, listen to what he has to say of that Church, their ministry, and his connection with that body.

I had no idea of uniting with the Baptist more than with the Moravians or the mere Independents; I had unfortunately formed a very unfavorable opinion of the Baptist preachers as then introduced to my acquaintance, as narrow, contracted, illiberal and uneducated men. This indeed, I am sorry to say, is still my opinion of the ministry of that association at that day; and whether they are yet much improved I am without satisfactory evidence. . . . They were little men in a big office.—Ibid., p. 169.

In August, 1816, Alexander Campbell preached what is called in Campbellite history, "The young polemic's famous sermon on the law, which subsequently created such wonderful excitement in the Baptist community; it was the sudden explosion in the Baptist camp of an apostolic bombshell."—Ibid., p. 172.

The historian relates in full, that during the preaching of this sermon, one woman fainted, jealous preachers caused great disturbance, one preacher rushed into the stand, and we are treated with a long history of the trouble. Suffice it to say, this was the end but not the beginning of the Campbellite rows with their Baptist brethren.

Subsequent to the presentation of this unanswerable address, the Baptist association for several consecutive years by means of self-constituted ecclesiastical courts, brought charges of heretical teachings against Thomas and Alexander Campbell. . . . The two Campbells foreseeing that it was the fixed intention of their mischievous persecutors to gain a majority of votes in favor of their excommunication, severed their connection, and withdrew from the Redstone Baptist Association.—Ibid., p. 173.

Writing of the separation of the Campbells from the Baptist Church, the historian, Hayden, makes the following statement:

They were accordingly immersed, on a confession of faith in the Son of God, and united with the regular Baptists. . . . The prejudice and passion of some excitable and intolerant men who then held a leading influence in the Redstone Association, rendered it prudent for Mr. Campbell to withdraw, after a few years, from that connection; against his own wishes, he was compelled by the force of ecclesiastical opposition to act separately from the Baptists.—Hayden's History of Discipleism in the Western Reserve, p. 46.

It is not my purpose to furnish a complete history of the trouble between the Baptist Church and the Campbells, but the Baptist Church suffered long, and finally in the year 1832, the Dover Association, then the largest association of Baptists in the world, convened, and selected a committee to consider and report what ought to be done in reference to the Campbellite disturbance. The committee reported. They found that the doctrines held and propagated by the Campbells are not according to godliness, but subversive of the true spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ—disorganizing and demoralizing in their tendency; and, therefore, ought to be disavowed and resisted by all the lovers of truth and sound piety. . . . Their views of sin, faith, repentance, regeneration, baptism, the agency of the Holy Spirit, church government, the Christian ministry, and the whole scheme of Christian benevolence, are, we believe, contrary to the plain letter and spirit of the new testament of our Lord and Savior.

By their practical influence, churches long blessed with peace and prosperity have been thrown into wrangling and discord—principles long held sacred by the best and most enlightened men that ever lived or died, are vilified and ridiculed as "school divinity," "sectarian dogmas," etc. Ministers who have counted all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ, are reprobated and denounced as "visionary dreamers," "mystifiers," "blind leaders of the blind," "hiringling priests, etc." The church in which many of them live, and from which they call it persecution to be separated, is held up to public scorn as "Babylon the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth." . . . In fine, the writings of Alexander Campbell and the spirit and manner of those who profess to admire his writings and sentiments, appear to us remarkably destitute of "the mind that was in Jesus Christ." Wherever these writings and sentiments have to any extent been introduced into our churches, the spirit of hypercriticism, "vain janglings and strife about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers," have chilled the spirit of true devotion, and put an end to Christian benevolence and harmony. . . .

We, therefore, the assembled ministers, and delegates of the Dover Association, after much prayer and deliberation, do hereby affectionately recommend to the churches in our connection, to separate from their communion all such persons as are promoting controversy and discord, under the specious name of reformers.—Campbellism Examined, pp. 92-97.

This is the record of the action taken by the Baptist people in regard to Campbell and his associate disturbers of the peace. This gives a pen-picture of the Campbellites in regard to their faith, doctrine, and conduct, also of their cruel, unrelenting persecution of other churches.

Has the Campbellite sect changed in this regard? No, they pursue the same policy where they have the strength and courage to do so, but where they are weak, numerically or otherwise, they adopt a conciliatory policy to effect their purpose of securing converts. This hypocrisy is one of the most prominent features of their history.

Mr. Campbell, in his effort to enlist sympathy, because of the action taken against him by the Baptist people, wrote as follows:

They can do nothing more in Virginia, as yet, than treat a dissentient as they would a murderer or a vile adulterer. The committee, or managers of the bull of excommunication, can neither banish, burn, nor imprison those who differ from their views of sin, faith, and baptism. There is no Patmos, jail, or pillory, known in Virginia law, for those who think differently.—Ibid., p. 105.

Why should Campbell complain, because the Baptist Church had refused to permit him to fellowship with them, when he had denounced the Baptist Church "as a relic of popery"? (Christian Baptist, p. 15.) We have already shown statements he made against the Baptist Church, and we believe the Baptists, as well as the Presbyterians, did the only thing left to be done when they refused to fellowship with those who were constantly slandering them.

The Presbyterian and Baptist Churches were not the only ones to be denounced by this man and his followers. We could fill a volume with his denunciation of all the churches, but will be content for the present by giving one more from his sarcastic pen:

The worshiping establishments now in operation throughout Christendom, increased and cemented by their respective voluminous confessions of faith, and their ecclesiastical constitutions, are not churches of Jesus Christ, but the legitimate daughters of that mother of harlots, the church of Rome.—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 3, p. 362.

In proof that the Campbellites still voice the above sentiment we submit the following:

Protestantism characterizes Romanism as the "great apostasy," and of this fact there can be no doubt according to the language of the Apostle John; but John calls Rome "the mother of harlots." And how can she be a mother without having daughters? And who are the daughters? Answer: The Protestant sects; and the difference between mother and daughters is made manifest in the fact that while the mother of harlots affiliates with paganism in its grosser forms, the daughters, arrayed in meretricious ornaments, and exhaling sweeter perfumes, are found confederating with paganism in its subtler forms.—Christian Leader, October 6, 1896.

Thus far we have traced the Campbells and have found that they, while holding membership first with the Presbyterians and afterward with the Baptists, were reflecting upon those churches till forbearance ceasing to be a virtue, the churches named charged them with heresy and withdrew their fellowship from them.

When the "bull of excommunication," as Mr. Campbell called it, was put into operation, Campbell for a time threw off his mask, and waged a warfare against all the denominations. This seemed to be his chief object in life. As Mr. Rowe says, "Their tocsin of war is the avowed destruction of all sectism."—Page 31.

Again Campbell speaks of the creeds thus:

We must unload all these, and dump them into the mystic stream of Babylon; and let them for ever disappear beneath the waves of dark oblivion. The sects of Christendom are all adrift.—Page 126.

At first the Campbells said they had no idea of organizing a church,—forming a sect. Hear him:

I have no idea of adding to the catalogue of new sects. This game has been played too long.—Christian Baptist, p. 217.

The Christian Baptist was a little paper published by Campbell. His writings and sermons gathered around him men of his own style of thinking, and for a time they thought their work would soon be rewarded with the destruction of every "sectarian church."

At the same time that Campbell was waging his warfare against the churches in Pennsylvania, there was a similar movement being conducted in Kentucky under the management of Barton W. Stone. The followers of Stone called themselves "Christians" (and, if we were to believe them, they were the only Christians on earth at that time), while the adherents of Campbell were called Reformers. Well, after a little labor on the part of Campbell and Company, the "Christians" were reformed by the reformers, or, stated in the language of their own historian, "a union of the 'Christians' and 'Reformers' or between the 'Christian Church' and the Church of the 'Reformers' was secured through the agency of John T. Johnson." (History of Reformatory Movements, p. 176.)

This Johnson was a lawyer, and by some nice work he persuaded both the Christians and Reformers to be good, and combine to overthrow the wicked "sects." This union was effected in 1831. With this double-header came the "holy work" of destruction, death, and burial of the clergy. To destroy the churches, overthrow the power and influence of the popular clergy, and upon the ruins to build up the Campbellite sects, was the dream of Alexander Campbell and confreres. But we will let Mr. Campbell speak on this important matter, lest we be accused of misrepresentation:

In endeavoring to use our feeble efforts for these glorious objects, we have found it necessary, among other things, to attempt to dethrone the reigning popular clergy from their high and lofty seats, which they have for ages been building for themselves. . . . It is not to gratify the avaricious or the licentious; but it is to pull down their Babel, and to emancipate those whom they have enslaved, to free the people from their unrighteous dominion and unmerciful spoliation.—Christian Baptist, p. 32.

Little do men think and indeed little do they know, that the modern clergy are indebted to Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Zeno, Epicurus, and a thousand pagan philosophers, Jewish and Christian theorists, for the order of things which they found ready to their hand, as soon as they put on the sacerdotal robes.—Christian Baptist, p. 54.

Mr. Campbell employed all the resources of his various learning and fertile genius to subvert the influence of the clergy, and bring them into popular contempt. They were stigmatized as "tentuaries," "scrap-doctors," "theoretic doctors," "populars," "priests," "hirelings," and "goat-milkers." "The third epistle of Peter" is an ingeniously written burlesque of the clergy, with just truth enough to make it plausible and biting, and divert attention from its gross exaggeration, and merciless injustice. (Christian Baptist, p. 166.) They were, in Mr. Campbell's estimation, a set of mercenary hirelings, actuated in their labors by no better motive than the love of lucre.—Campbellism Examined, pp. 30, 31.

A hireling is one who prepares for the office of a "preacher" or "minister," as a mechanic learns a trade, and who obtains a license from a congregation, convention, presbytery, pope, or diocesan bishop, as a preacher or minister, and agrees by the day or sermon, month or year, for a stipulated reward.—Christian Baptist, p. 166.

Upon the whole, I do not think we will err very much in making it a general rule, that every man who receives money for preaching the gospel, or for sermons, by the day, month, or year, is a hireling in the language of truth and soberness.—Ibid., pp. 71, 233.

There is one spirit in all the clergy, whether they be Romanists or Protestants, Baptist or Pædobaptist, learned or unlearned, their own workmanship, or the workmanship of others.—Ibid., p. 94.

To show that the Campbellite sect is still busy denouncing the ministers of every denomination but their own, we quote the following from one of their present leading men:

Thomas Campbell speaks like an oracle, as he continues his arraignment of the hypocritical clergy of his day, of whom we find a counterpart in the present day. What was then true of the clerical profession is still true. "Can an Ethiopian change his skin, or a leopard his spots?"—History Reformatory Movements, p. 153.

There is more energy put forth to-day to establish clerical rule, and to again seat the clergy upon the throne of power, than it took in the days of Campbell to dethrone it . . . God save the church from the power of the clergy.—Christian Leader, September 28, 1897.

We could fill a large volume with extracts from Campbellite literature, that denounce with great bitterness the ministers of every church. Campbell seemed to take comfort in the thought that "the Lord Jesus will judge that adulterous brood, and give them over to the burning flames." (Christian System, p. 15.)

Notwithstanding all the bitter denunciation of the "salaried ministry," the Campbellites look after the "nimble nickels" as keenly as any "hireling preacher" ever did. They take pay for sermons and hire out by the day, week, month, or year, and get as large salaries as they can squeeze out of their congregations. One of their own preachers, when feeling a compunctious throb, writes as follows:

Another instance I think of, is in December (1895) the members of the digressive denomination [that is, the larger body of the quarreling and many times divided Campbellite Church] joined in with human societies, at Helix, Oregon, and had a dance to raise money to pay the pastor of said Christian Church.—W. W. Stone in the Gospel Messenger, February, 1896.

Their hypocrisy and vacillating propensities are so apparent in the hireling ministry proposition that we pass it by without further comment.

We have shown briefly in former pages how Campbellites have denounced the Presbyterian and Baptist Churches in particular, but we shall now show how they regarded all churches, as the "legitimate daughters of that Mother of Harlots, the Church of Rome."

The present popular exhibition of the Christian religion is a compound of Judaism, heathen philosophy, and Christianity.—Christian Baptist, p. 9.

The worshiping establishments now in operation throughout Christendom, increased and cemented by their respective voluminous confessions of faith, and their ecclesiastical constitutions, are not churches of Jesus Christ, but the legitimate daughters of that mother of harlots, the church of Rome.—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 3, p. 362.

I read, some time since, of a revival in the state of New York, in which the spirit of God was represented as being abundantly poured out on Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists. I think the converts in the order of the names were about three hundred Presbyterians, three hundred Methodists, and two hundred and eighty Baptists, . . . these being all regenerated without any knowledge of the gospel. . . . I think it would be difficult to prove that the Spirit of God had anything to do with the aforesaid revival.—Christian Baptist, p. 50.

A reformation of popery was attempted in Europe, full three centuries ago. It ended in a Protestant hierarchy, and swarms of dissenters. Protestantism has been reformed into Presbyterianism—that into Congregationalism—and that into Baptistism, etc., etc. Methodism has attempted to reform all, but has reformed itself into many forms of Wesleyism. None of these has begun at the right place. All of them retain in their bosom, in their ecclesiastical organizations, worship, doctrine, and observances, various relics of popery; they are at best but a reformation of popery.—Ibid., p. 15.

For all sects have been originated by false teachers, or by corrupt men. Sectaries, it would appear, occupy the same place under Christ that false prophets filled under Moses. Need we infer, then, the danger of keeping up religious sects, or to go on to prove that every one who builds up a party, is a partaker of the crime with him who sets it up?—Christian System, pp. 102, 103.

Having quoted so much from Mr. Campbell, we now proceed to show that his followers, to this day, indorse and reiterate his statements, in their books, papers, and sermons:

We wish the people of this generation, as well as the people of succeeding generations, to know the reason why we stand apart from all denominations, Papal and Protestant.—History of Reformatory Movements, p. 11.

If not ecclesiastically under the power of the "mother church" they are religiously and spiritually of the same affinities. None of these creeds, whether Catholic or Protestant, tell a man how to be a Christian. They tell a man how he may become a Catholic, a Lutheran, a Reformer, an Episcopalian, a Presbyterian, a Methodist, a Baptist, perchance. There is not a confession of faith in existence that ever saved a soul. . . . They all originated in the councils of men. . . . They have always engendered strife, hatred, malice, bigotry, intolerance, and persecution. . . . There is no Christian love in them. . . . The mind of God is not found in them, and the Spirit of Christ does not breathe through them. . . . They paralyze the power of truth, they make a fable of the gospel, they mock the prayers of the Savior, they make void the law of God. . . . In view of these facts, and many more yet to be produced, let our brethren understand that our mission is not yet ended, but, on the contrary, only fairly begun. . . . All creeds must be crushed under the weight of divine authority.—Ibid., pp. 51, 52.

We quote the following from the creed of the Church of Christ as recorded in Rowe's History of Reformatory Movements, published in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1894.

In the ninth article of said creed, we find these words: "We believe that God only acknowledges one body of believers. . . . We call ourselves the Disciples of Christ, because we learn only from Christ and his apostles."

To make it clear that they believe that all other denominations are on the broad way to ruin, we submit the following from the same page:

We do not believe in sectarian churches, nor in Protestant denominationalism, nor in the Roman Catholic Church, or any other church that has an existence without the sanction of the word of God. . . . We do not believe that persons who have never been immersed into Jesus Christ—into the death of Christ—into the one body, are members of the one body.—Ibid., pp. 192, 193.

Here you have it clearly stated. There is only one church acknowledged of God, and that is the Campbellite Church. There is no salvation in any other. To be saved, you must be immersed into that body.

Here is some more from the creed:

We do not believe in a Roman Church, nor in an Episcopal Church, nor in a Lutheran Church, nor in a Presbyterian Church, nor in a Baptist Church, nor in a Methodist Church, nor in any other church not known in the apostolic age.—Ibid., p. 193.

Query: Was the Campbellite Church, founded by Alexander Campbell and others and acknowledged to be a cross between the Presbyterian and Baptist Churches,—organized by men whom both Presbyterian and Baptist Churches discarded,—we ask was that sect “known in the apostolic age”? Verily, I say unto thee, nay.

We have referred to the creed of the Campbellite sect, and are told by some of them that “they have no creed.” This statement is either a manifestation of ignorance or some more Campbellite deception.

Webster, defines the word “creed” thus: “Belief—summary of the articles of faith.”

The Campbellites say, “The Bible is our creed.” Well, all denominations make the same claim. The truth is, the scriptures, as understood by them, is their creed. Their interpretation of the Bible is their creed. This interpretation is found in the articles from which I have already quoted, and may be found in the writings of Campbell and others. For example, Alexander Campbell and others, when they sought admission into the Redstone Association, presented “a written declaration of their belief,” drawn up, no doubt, by himself. This was their creed. This is only another inconsistency in Campbellism. Again found guilty of having done what they denounce in others!

Having shown that they reject all churches in existence, as being destitute of divine authority, I shall more particularly draw attention to the special targets they have selected to shoot at.

CALVINISM.

He [John Calvin] ruled with a rod of iron in the city of Geneva, where he directed civil as well as ecclesiastical affairs. In 1568, under the stern code which was established under the auspices of Calvin, a child was beheaded for striking its father and mother. A child, sixteen years old, for attempting to strike its mother, was sentenced to death; but, on account of its youth, the sentence was commuted, and having been publicly whipped, with a cord about its neck, it was banished from the city. In 1565 a woman was chastised with rods for singing songs to the melody of the Psalms, and other inflictions are recorded too numerous to mention. The expulsion of Castillio from Geneva, a highly cultivated scholar whom Calvin had brought from Strasburg, to take charge of the Geneva school—an expulsion caused by the influence of Calvin himself—and the death of Servetus, instigated by Calvin, and executed by those directly under his influence, because Servetus wrote a book entitled Errors of the Trinity, which contradicted the opinions of Calvin—these heartless acts indicate the temper of Calvin's spirit. . . . In our opinion, there is nothing in Calvinism but the defeat of Christianity—there is nothing in it on which a sinful and helpless world can lean for support. There is not a gleam of hope in it, it is a death-dealing system.—Ibid., pp. 59, 60.

PRESBYTERIANISM.

At the Pan-Presbyterian convocation, held in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1877, Doctor Bailie declared that there were “forty branches of the Presbyterian family” in existence, but he failed to tell that the trail of the serpent is over them all. We speak of the systems of theology and of the distinct ecclesiastical organizations which these bodies represent, as wickedly sectarian, and as a burning disgrace to the author of Christianity. None of these sects originated under the apostolic teaching. None of them can be dated beyond the sixteenth century, and hence, as misrepresenting the church of Christ, which the apostle founded, we reject them all.—Ibid., pp. 122, 123.

METHODISM.

Like Luther, Zwingle, Calvin, and Knox, Wesley never made any attempt to return to apostolic practice, nor did either of these reformers ever suggest the idea of reproducing the church of Christ as established by the apostles.—Ibid., p. 119.

There are, according to McClintock and Strong's Encyclopedia, about nine subdivisions of the Methodist body in the old country. . . . In the United States [the names of several more are given] they have all originated within a little over a hundred years, as distinct organizations; they are all of the “earth, earthly.” They are all founded upon the opinions and speculations and dreams of men, and the mark of the beast is impressed upon them all.—Ibid., p. 122.

The Methodist Church makes baptism a “nonessential” to salvation, thus directly insulting the author of the plan of salvation, and substituting human expediency for divine law.—Ibid., p. 123.

BAPTISTISM.

The origin of the Baptist Church . . . distinctively can not be traced beyond the sixteenth century.—Ibid., p. 93.

The Baptists of the present day baptize into the Baptist Church, not “into the one body of Christ.” . . . The third article relates to the breaking of bread; in this it is declared that they who break the one bread in commemoration of the broken body of Christ, and drink of the one cup in commemoration of his blood poured out, must first be united together in the one body of Christ, that is, into the church of God—which is not the Baptist Church of the present day.—Ibid., p. 95.

As neither Christ nor the apostles ever founded a Baptist church, nor taught the direct agency of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of sinners, nor appointed “monthly meetings” where converts might give the “experience” of their feelings as an evidence of pardon, nor appointed the celebration of the Lord's supper but once a month, we reject all such theology as unscriptural and nonapostolic. By such dreamy speculations and with no other evidence but the feelings of the misguided sinner, the Baptists contradict (through ignorance of the plan of salvation, it may be) the doctrine that the word of God is the sword of the Spirit, which kills and makes alive. Surely, with such evidence before us, we dare not say that the Baptist Church is identical with the church of Christ, which the apostles founded, and who made immersion into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, essential, to salvation, a doctrine which the Baptist Church ignores.—Ibid., p. 109.

The Baptist churches are not churches of Christ; otherwise we have no right to exist as a separate organization setting up the same claim. At the beginning of this reformation there were Baptist churches all over the land, and if they were churches of Christ, there was no excuse or apology for the pioneers to organize other churches, and invite Baptists to leave one church of Christ and unite with another, which could be no more, than a church of Christ. But this is the very thing they did, and the thing which was necessary to be done in order to inaugurate, institute, or begin what is now known, both in common parlance and in law, as the “Church of Christ,” or “Christian Church," . . . If Baptist churches are not churches of Christ, what are they? Are they "synagogues of Satan"? No, not necessarily. They are the churches of man,—man-made and man-labelled.—The Christian Leader, 1897.

We might continue to submit statements from Mr. Campbell and his followers up to the present time, showing a perpetual denunciation of all the churches as the "relics of popery," "the legitimate daughters of the mother of harlots"; all destitute of divine authority, all man-made, no hope for salvation in them; "an insult to the author of Christianity," and "the trail of the serpent is over them all"; and that Alexander Campbell has organized "the only true church,"—they are "the one body"; outside of that Church, there is no salvation.

Now we shall prove, from their writings, that the only hope for the people, according to their way of thinking, is to denounce the church, accept the Campbellite sect as the only true church, and be immersed for the remission of sins.

There are three births, three kingdoms, and three salvations. One from the womb of your first mother, one from the water, and one from the grave. We enter a new world on, and not before each birth. The present animal life, at the first birth; the spiritual, or the life of God in our souls, at the second birth; and the life eternal in the presence of God, at the third birth. And he who dreams of entering the second kingdom, or coming under the dominion of Jesus Christ without the second birth, may, to complete his error, dream of entering the kingdom of glory without a resurrection from the dead.—Christian System, p. 233.

The Holy Spirit calls nothing personal regeneration except the act of immersion.—Ibid., p. 202.

Now, as soon as, and not before, a disciple, who has been begotten of God, is born of water, he is born of God, or of the spirit.—Christianity Restored, p. 206.

Begotten of God he may be; but born of God, he can not be, until born of water.—Millennial Harbinger Extra, p. 30.

Whatever the act of faith may be, it necessarily becomes the line of discrimination between the two states before described. On this side, and on that, mankind are in quite different states; on the one side, they are pardoned, justified, sanctified, reconciled, adopted, and saved; on the other, they are in the state of condemnation. This act is sometimes called immersion, regeneration, conversion.—Christian System, p. 193.

These expressions (immersed, converted, regenerated) in the apostle's style, denote the same act.—Ibid., p. 203.

For if immersion be equivalent to regeneration, and regeneration be of the same import with being born again, then being born again and being immersed, are the same thing.—Ibid., p. 200.

From the Day of Pentecost, to the final amen in the revelation of Jesus Christ, no person was said to be converted or to turn to God; until he was buried in, and raised up out of the water.—Ibid., p. 209.

Discovering that much depends upon having correct views on this point, we have carefully examined all those passages where conversion either in the common version, or in the new version, or in the original occurs, and have found a uniformity in the use of this term, and its compounds and derivatives, which warrants the conclusion that no person was said to be converted until he was immersed, and that all persons who were immersed were said to be converted.—Christianity Restored, p. 202.

They who gladly received the word were that day immersed; or, in other words, that same day were converted, or regenerated, or obeyed the gospel. These expressions, in the apostolic style, when applied to persons coming into the kingdom, denote the same act.—Ibid., p. 199.

But the grandeur, sublimity, and beauty of the foundation of hope and of ecclesiastical and social union, established by the author and founder of Christianity, consists in this, that the belief of one fact, and that upon the best evidence in the world, is all that is requisite, as far as faith goes, for salvation, the belief of one fact, and submission to one institution expressive of it is all that is required of Heaven for admission into the church.—Ibid., pp. 118, 119.

He tells us that the "one fact" is, "Jesus the Nazarene is the Messiah," and the "one institution" is "baptism into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" Query: If baptism in water is "conversion," "regeneration," "new birth," then Simon Magus was "converted," "regenerated," "pardoned," "born again," "saved," "sanctified," when he was baptized; yet after his baptism, Peter, the inspired apostle of Jesus Christ, said of him, "I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity."—Acts 8: 23.

The boastful statement "where the Scriptures speak we speak, where these are silent we are silent," has long since frittered away. Here again we find Peter and the Bible in direct conflict with Alexander Campbell.

To prove more conclusively that Mr. Campbell and the Campbellites in general did and do yet believe that water baptism is conversion, we submit the following in proof that, according to the Campbellite creed, the unbaptized are not expected to sing songs of praise or even to offer a prayer. Water baptism seems to be the start and the finish of Campbellism:

No man can have a Holy Spirit otherwise than as he possesses a spirit of love, of meekness, of humility; but this he can not have unless he feel himself pardoned and accepted, therefore the promise of such a gift wisely makes the reception of it posterior to the forgiveness of sins. Hence in the moral fitness of things, in the evangelical economy, baptism or immersion is made the first act of a Christian's life, or rather the regenerating act itself, in which the person is properly born again—born of water and Spirit—without which into the kingdom of Jesus he can not enter. No prayers, songs of praise, no acts of devotion in the new economy, are enjoined on the unbaptized.—Christain Baptist, p. 439.

We assert now, as we have ever done, that there is not one passage in the Bible which, during the reign of Christ, makes it the duty of the unbaptized to pray.—Lard's Review of Jeter, p. 172.

Question: Mr. Lard, why is it that you and your chief have failed to "speak where the Scriptures speak"? Saul of Tarsus and Cornelius both prayed before they were baptized, and the Lord heard and answered their prayers. (See Acts 9:11-18; 10:1-48.)

We will now present views regarding immersion in water being for the remission of sins. None may misunderstand these statements:

When a person is immersed for the remission of sins, it is just the same as if expressed, in order to obtain the remission of sins. . . . I am bold, therefore, to affirm that every one of them who, in the belief of what the apostle spoke, was immersed, did, in the very instant in which he was put under water, receive the forgiveness of his sins, and the gift of the Holy Spirit.—Christian Baptist, pp. 416, 417.

I assert that there is but one action ordained or commanded in the New Testament, to which God has promised, or testified, that he will forgive our sins. This action is Christian immersion.—Ibid., p. 520.

(To be concluded.)

Selected Articles.

AN ANNUAL PROBLEM.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

I.

The task of appraising the merits of new books for children is one that can be approached only with considerable diffidence. One does not really know—the standards are so different. There is the feeling of ground more or less secure beneath one's feet when the time comes to judge a novel, or a volume of essays, or a biography, or even a poem; but the book for children is none of these, and the very quality that commends it to a critic of such work as I have named may in the nursery be its most distressing fault, while again a certain crudeness that strikes the older reader like a physical blow may in the same forum be a shining virtue. Hence one walks delicately, seeking rather to be amused than to apportion verdicts. My painful experience has been, and will be, I am sure, that the books which I least admire are those which children like best, and "vice versa." On general principles one may, I think, safely say that there is something (for the nursery) wrong with a children's book when the down-stairs people retain it to laugh over. For, in spite of all that is said about the child-like adult keeping a corner for his old simple raptures, I think it is better when the nursery and the drawing-room can not exchange reading.

II.

It is often said that the right person to review children's books is a child. But I am inclined to disagree with this. I fancy that the right way to review a children's book is more mechanical. It should resolve itself merely into an examination a year or two hence of the nursery shelves, a list subsequently being drawn up of the 1903 books that are still favorites. That list would constitute a perfect if somewhat belated review, since the sole duty of a child's book is to entertain, and the sole test of its quality is its popularity. It is nothing that many thousands have been sold at Christmas, 1903; the point is, how many of those copies will still be actively thumbed in 1905?

My own feeling is that although every Christmas children plunge into the dissipation provided by new books, they return punctually and soberly to the old friends very soon after the new year has dawned. We think we are capturing them with our gilt edges and colored pictures and clever quips; we pass with fat satisfaction from house to house at Christmas and see a fine show of our work; but long before February is here the old grubby leaves of Alice's Adventures and Mrs. Ewing, Robinson Crusoe and Ballantyne, are being turned once more as if they were as new as ourselves.

III.

I believe in my heart that what children love better than new books is new editions. It is rather a terrible dictum, because if logically extended it comes to this: that no new books are needed for children at all; that there are enough old ones already. Probably this is true, for, after all, a child has not much time for reading. Many better employments come first, and only a very few children can exhaust the store of nursery classics before the time comes for an older type of book, to which there need be no limit. But this is a topic on which it were better not to dwell, particularly when one is known in certain quarters as the originator of one very numerous series of children's books, and the editor at the present moment of another, to say nothing of works of one's own compiling. . . . To offer counsels of perfection, however, has ever been an unpopular game.

IV.

One of the best of the children's books of 1903, for the reason I have given as well as for intrinsic merit, is the selection of Miss Edgeworth's stories which Mr. Austin Dobson has edited for Messrs. Gardner, Darton & Company, and which Mr. Hugh Thompson has illustrated. As Mr. Dobson says, quoting another author, Miss Edgeworth's "writing for children was the natural outgrowth of a practical study of their wants and fancies." Given the practical study and genius to fortify it, the tales that follow can not but be immortal. Practically the whole art of writing seriously of real life for children may be learned from these pages. Such trimmings as fun and nonsense can come later, or not at all.

Personally, I doubt if any child really wants book nonsense, or any fun beyond what he can get from life. In his books he wants, first, a story, and, secondly, a story, and thirdly, a story. On the other hand, many a parent wants nonsense; and that is the explanation of the vogue of the nonsense book. Even Lear's Book of Nonsense, which started the convention, although it contains no ideas in advance of nursery intelligence, is more interesting to the parent than the child. Children want books that they can take to their bosoms and live with; the purveyors of nonsense are only triflers.

Such a book, for example, as Mr. Belloc's Bad Child's Book of Beasts, of which Messrs. Duckworth have issued a new edition, delicious as it is, has practically (as Mr. Belloc knows) nothing for the child. It was written not for children, but for Bellocs. Children may find it very funny, but they would never return to it of their own volition; they might to flatter some one who was reading it aloud. One ought really not to mention so exquisite a piece of comic literature here at all (tender, too; the introductory poem is beautiful); but the impression that it is a child's book is certainly abroad.

V.

Exceptions continually confront one, and the exception in this case is Lewis Carroll. But the Alice books are both sense and nonsense: Alice providing the sense, being an absolutely normal child in the midst of divine imbecility, and the rest the nonsense. It is Alice's sense that has carried the books into every house. They are there because of Alice and in spite of the White Knights.

It is similarly, I think, largely the normal character of the Golliwogg and the dutch dolls that has made their adventures so popular. Granted the impossibility of what happens, their behavior is perfectly human. So would all of us behave—though perhaps with less courage and address. The Golliwogg was an invention, in his own sphere, of equal merit to Captain Kettle or even Sherlock Holmes; to the nursery reader he must be quite as real a person as are those exemplars to us. I doubt if the Misses Upton have had enough credit for the creation. The verse in which the annual epic is told may not be impeccable; but I doubt if any country can boast at this moment a historical painter gifted with more vigor than the artist of these books. You will find the true, grand manner in the best of these plates; the Golliwogg becomes Napoleonic.

This year he and his friends start a circus. The events are not perhaps so exciting or amusing as heretofore, but nothing can impair Miss Florence Upton's hand. It is no small achievement to depict two wooden horses on wheels (with fixed perpendicular legs) in the unmistakable act of racing round the ring. Miss Upton's economy of means is very striking; nor does she lavish her tints in a way that seems likely to become too popular.

VI.

Colored pictures, indeed, promise to grow every year more common. The black-and-white artist will soon be a rarity in the Christmas book, though not, I trust, elsewhere. But for chromatic vigor, as for most varieties of intensity just now, one must go to America, and preëminently to Mr. W. W. Denslow, who in Denslow's Night Before Christmas (Heinemann) has put pictures of arresting hues to Clement Moore's well-known poem "The visit of St. Nicholas"—well known, that is, across the Atlantic, where they have a Christmas mythology that differs somewhat from ours. In happy England the filler of stockings on Christmas Eve is Santa Claus; in America Saint Nicholas. What this book may lack in delicacy it makes up for in high spirits and vivid tones.

The vividest colored book from an English press that I have seen is The Children's Book of London (A. and C. Black), by Mr. G. E. Mitton, with city scenes by Mr. John Williamson. I wish that London air were half as clear as Mr. Williamson makes it.

VII.

The mention of Alice above, and the consideration of color, remind me that among the Christmas books this year are abridgments of the two Alice books, which a bold and anonymous editor has prepared for Messrs. Macmillan. I wonder what Lewis Carroll would have thought, and, better still, would have said. As books taken by themselves, without relation to the real thing, they are charming; and, of course, there are thousands of children growing up at this moment who will come to them freshly, only later reaching the real thing, with anticipation hardly impaired. And yet I can not think the abridgments were necessary or wholly wise. There are many books which it is worth while to wait for, and the Alice books are eminently of them. (Why do we display this eagerness to place literature in small infants' hands? A mother with a memory is, for them, better than all the books.)

As a matter of fact, there is no need to abridge or prepare anything for a child, since its mind has a natural power of rejecting dross and retaining only the gold. If one tried the experiment of reading the Alice books throughout to a child of the tender age for which these abridgments were designed, while another child of the same age was listening to the Alice primers (as they might be called)—of the two listeners the former would have much the better time (as well as her lector), and that which had puzzled her would have puzzled her so little as to be negligible. Besides, a little puzzling is good. "One's reach must exceed one's grasp, else what's a heaven for?"

At the same time, these little Alices are to be commended, since Alice can not be too well known, and every child brought up on them will be the better able, later in life, to appreciate the humor of Mr. F. C. Gould.—Mrs. E. Lucas, in the Speaker, London.

CAN WE FLY AT LAST?

The technical journals assure us that the first flying-machine to fly has now made its appearance, and that without blowing of trumpets before or after the event. It was tested successfully in December, 1903, by its makers, Messrs. Orville and Wilbur Wright, and is described in Knowledge and Scientific News (February). Says Nature, commenting on this article:

"That these brothers have been successful in gliding experiments performed under gravity is well known, but they now appear to have succeeded in raising themselves from the ground by a motor-driven machine which, after running along a mono-rail for forty feet, rose into the air, and was driven in the face of a gale blowing at about twenty-five miles an hour, with a velocity of about ten miles an hour relative to the ground, or thirty-five miles an hour relative to the wind. In the last trial the machine flew half a mile relative to the air, or eight hundred and fifty-two feet relative to the ground. It is sincerely to be hoped that this success will not, as in so many previous instances, be followed by a fatal accident."

The Wright experiments are also spoken of by O. Chanute in an article on "Aerial Navigation" in the Popular Science Monthly (February), as the first actual solution of the problem of mechanical flight, unaided by balloons. He ascribes the failures of Langley and others to the lack of practice of those who launched or operated the machines. Paradoxical as it may seem, he says, one must have long experience in flying before attempting to fly. This is just what the Wright Brothers succeeded in getting. Says the writer:

"For three years they experimented with gliding machines . . . and it was only after they had obtained thorough command of their movements in the air that they ventured to add a motor. How they accomplished this must be reserved for them to explain, as they are not yet ready to make known the construction of their machine nor its mode of operation. Too much praise can not be awarded to these gentlemen. Being accomplished mechanics, they designed and built the apparatus, applying thereto a new and effective mode of control of their own. They learned its use at considerable personal risk of accident. They planned and built the motor, having found none in the market deemed suitable. They evolved a novel and superior form of propeller; and all this was done with their own hands, without financial help from anybody. . . . These gentlemen have placed the rudder in front, where it proves more effective than in the rear, and have placed the operator horizontally on the machine, thus diminishing by four fifths the resistance of the man's body from that which obtained with their predecessors. In 1900, 1901, 1902, and 1903 they made thousands of glides without accidents, and even succeeded in hovering in the air for a minute and more at a time.

"They had obtained almost complete mastery over their apparatus before they ventured to add the motor and propeller. This, in the judgment of the present writer, is the only course of training by which others may hope to accomplish success. It is a mistake to undertake too much at once and to design and build a full-sized flying-machine abinitio, for the motor and propeller introduce complications which had best be avoided until in the vicissitudes of the winds bird-craft has been learned with gravity as a motive power."

The results of these experiments are treated with obvious respect by the Scientific American, which refers to a report made by Mr. Wilbur Wright recently before the Western Society of Engineers. His attention was first called to aeronautical problems by Lilienthal's experiments, and the latter's death, in 1896, instead of discouraging Mr. Wright only stimulated his interest.—The Literary Digest, March 12, 1904.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Half Hours With Parents and Teachers.—No. 2.

A SERIES OF FAMILIAR TALKS INTENDED FOR USE IN LOCALS AND HOME CLASSES.

Edited by the Daughters of Zion.

Perhaps the incident narrated in our last talk may have raised the question in the minds of some of our readers as to the responsibility of that father for his unbelief, which would be followed by another, namely, Can faith be acquired? Can it be taught? Without entering into a discussion of these questions here we simply say in the words of another, "Surely faith may be acquired or where is the justice in condemning people for the lack of it? Would people be damned for not believing, unless they could believe if they would?"

That faith is absolutely necessary to the parent who wishes to bring up his child in the Christian religion, is evidenced by the fact that all systems of law and government must have a standard by which actions are measured and judged and this standard must be, to all intents and purposes, infallible. To the Christian this standard is the word of God as found in the Holy Scriptures and to the Holy Scriptures the Latter Day Saints add the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. These books then become the standard of our faith and to them and their teachings every question of doctrine as well as all questions of right and wrong must be referred. But if we doubt these—are lacking in faith in regard to any one of them, what becomes of our standard of evidence and how shall we decide questions of right and wrong?

Now as Latter Day Saints we wish to bring up our children not only in the faith delivered to the saints in centuries long gone, but in the faith of God's revealments to his people in our own day. But how shall we be able to do this unless we know what that faith is and especially unless we ourselves are in possession of it and our lives are governed by it?

Here is where the power and influence of parents come in as no other power or influence in the early years of the child can. This is where environment—the power of precept and example combined—is strong in those years almost to omnipotence, and the question comes with a force which will not suffer it to be set aside: Is it not right here that many parents fail and because of this failure their children are lost to the Church? All that has been said of parents in regard to what is necessary to confirm and make their teachings effectual, may with equal justice be said of teachers as well. Does it not then become the duty of each one of us, but especially of parents and teachers, to examine and prove ourselves and see if we really are in the faith? And if we are, then let us see to it that we teach it to our children by precept, and enforce our precepts by example. Parents and teachers, you may long since have known this to be your duty, but the question is, do you realize its importance as well as the grave responsibilities connected with it? Do you in your inmost soul feel the full force of this truth concerning your influence? Do you feel the absolute necessity of honoring, through obeying, all the commandments of God? As you look upon your little ones and see them developing, growing from day to day, do you realize how precious these moments of childhood are to you—precious as the time of all other times when you may win the hearts of your children and bind them to you, and the faith which you have covenanted with God shall be your faith? Are you teaching them lessons of truth and purity which will, with God's blessing, fit them to become ornaments in his church and a blessing to the world? Have you diligently taught them the gospel of Christ as he has enjoined upon you to do in order that they may be prepared to enter his kingdom through the door of baptism when they are eight years old. Have you taught them to pray—taught them that God will hear and answer their prayers if they pray in faith and at all times subject to the will of God? Do you feel and teach your little ones to feel that God's will at all times is better for us than our own?

Do you realize that in the tender years of your child he is like wax in your hands to be molded at your will and God has ordered it in wisdom and makes known his will concerning this very period of time, which slips away so rapidly and comes back nevermore? But no half faith upon the part of either parent or teacher will suffice. There must be behind all of your teaching the subtle power of absolute conviction, for, account for it as we may, we can not disprove the fact which experience has so often demonstrated, that the child's faith will be almost the exact counterpart of the parents'.

The religion of Christ is intended to govern and control every act of our lives; to bring our bodies into subjection, in short, to transform our entire nature and perfect in us every good word and work, and the child born into an atmosphere such as would exist did the gospel control our lives, and surrounded by it during the early years of his life, would imbibe lessons never to be forgotten and such as would render his heart susceptible to the teachings of those whose lives are living epistles which even he can read.

In this connection stands another thought. It is the mother who is most with her child during his earlier and most impressionable years, hence it can not be denied that her opportunities of influencing him are greater even than those of his father, and far outweigh those of all others. Does it not follow that this fact adds to her responsibility?

We know that as a rule the members of our Church are poor and most of our mothers are cumbered with many cares and much serving and have little time to devote to their children; but if the heart is filled with desire for their good some little portion of time will be found, some means will be devised by which she will find time to teach her little ones the way of life and salvation. Dear mother, is the word of God hidden in your heart? Have you studied it in years when you had more time, committing it to the keeping of your memory? If so, then while your hands are busy with household tasks you can repeat it to them, talking with them about it and explaining what it means.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Etta Lee Thompson, of Dennisport, Massachusetts, asks the prayers of the Prayer Union that she may be healed of the trouble that she has.

Letter Department.

Editors Herald: On the day of the closing of the General Conference, and after the appointments were read, I was impressed with, and find recorded in my diary for that evening, "a sad feeling concerning our return to Chicago." The Tuesday following, after leaving Cleveland, some like influence moved me strongly enough to make the following entry in the diary: "Sad impressions, as though trouble awaited us in Chicago. . . . Do coming events cast their shadows before?"

Tuesday evening our train was late, but ten o'clock found us and our companions in travel, Bro. H. O. Smith, Harold Bullard, and Sr. Wight, at our home in the city, with a cold reception, so far as the temperature of the house was concerned.

Bro. Salyards on his arrival in Chicago, the following Friday, found Sr. Bond in bed where she has been confined for the most part, since that time, with a severe case of la grippe, among other complications, which has reduced her to a poor condition, and in strong contrast to the measure of good health that she has enjoyed for the past year. With the grippe still gripping us since our return, and still hanging on, we had almost begun to feel that a mistake had been made, and that our Chicago appointment had been made once too often.

Sr. Bond has been frequently administered to, but no permanent relief as yet obtained; but we are hopeful, and trusting in all available resources for aid and recovery, and desire to be as reasonable and philosophic under the circumstances as possible. We know people, generally, and in chronic cases, are a long time in getting sick, and too often without consciousness of the fact; but the desire to get well quickly is the ever present and always dominant feeling. Heretofore, my companion has rallied quickly after illness, through the administration of the elders, and of this quick relief and rapid recovery we have in the past almost always invariably and beforehand been assured by the voice of the Spirit; but in this case the facts have persistently followed the forecast of her dreams, amounting to an oracle as to reliability, and there has been no let up or change in the gloomy, not to say disastrous, character of the forecast, until yesterday morning, when something like "a change came over the spirit of her dream," and while I am at it, I may as well attempt an outline of her latest associations with the unseen intelligences spoken of by Joel and Peter; although it may interest myself more particularly than others.

She seemed to be, she told me, in a room that appeared to be in the nature of a "judgment hall" in which they were preparing material for a fire. She saw what appeared to be a fine looking woman, about forty years of age, whom she was called to assist in preparing for the fire. Faggots were being brought into the room for this purpose, she understanding meanwhile that she was also doomed, and that this fate awaited her also, but that while the backs of the men who were preparing for the death were turned, she fled from the room, through a long corridor with pillars on the one side, through a door or entrance at the end, where she was met by a person who was apparently a sentinel guarding the building or place.

Her first thought was that she would be arrested and turned back by him; but instead of this he pointed her to a road which he instructed her to take quickly and which would take her to a boat or steamer landing. Starting to follow this advice, she had to pass through lanes and dirty alleys, intricate places, and through a crowd of dark-skinned people, not negroes, but Italians, evidently, who would peer into her face, with signs of molestation, at times, as she ran. At last, arriving at the wharf or landing, she realized for the first time that she was in a place that was called Canada, and that she would have to cross the water to get back to her home in Chicago where she wanted to go. She got on to the boat and remembers nothing of the crossing save that she landed safely and found herself on an elevated place that was something like a park, and among a lot of Saints whom she knew but of whose faces she had lost memory save that of Sr. Etta Hitchcock, who sprang up exclaiming, "Why, here is Nellie Bond!" and also Bro. John and Sr. Kate Smith who were with Sr. Etta, and, whom, singularly enough, she brought with her to her own home in Chicago, with great rejoicing at her escape.

I could not say that there was anything in it, unless it was that the spirit accompanying its relation to me, reassured us of an ultimate favorable termination of present difficulties and escape from the purging or fire or destructive process as the case may be, or the death sentence naturally speaking, and, assisted by some friendly sentinel on the other side or other country than this, passing through the company of dark-skinned and sometimes threatening people, not negroes—as they are an absolute, and invariable forecast of a sickness, more or less severe, and always indicate proximity, by their attitude and whether they touch, get hold of her, etc. The Italians indicated convalescence and ultimate escape, as I understand it.

"In a multitude of dreams there is vanity," and there are many kinds of inspiration which may provoke them, but for all this I know that God "in the night visions" does "seal instruction" as in the days of old, and has used her as an oracle of education and information, thus far transcending our natural powers of observation or means of information and for which the schools of this world offer no practical substitute. It is entirely demonstrated that it is possible for some of us to learn more while asleep, to use a common term, than when awake, practically demonstrating man's dual nature and one of the notable methods employed by the Almighty as a means of communicating his thought to his people in our as well as in former days.

We have had visits from several of the brethren and elders, returning to their homes or fields of labor, Brn. Luff, Bishop Hilliard, Joseph F. McDowell, and others giving us good sermons both on the South and West Sides. Chicago seems to be on the improve; good attendance and numbers of strangers out at all the services Sunday, as well as at Pullman, where I was on the first. Bro. Clark seems to have matters well in hand on South Side, and the outlook for something of progress in the coming year seems favorable for Chicago.

Working as best we can, and "waiting till the clouds roll by," CHICAGO, Illinois, May 18, 1904. M. H. BOND.

PANA, Illinois, May 15, 1904.

Editor Herald: The Saints here are building a new church. They were organized into a branch the third day of last January, and there are about thirty-two of them. Bro. A. H. Smith was here and assisted in the organization and he will be glad to hear of them building a church so soon. The foundation is being built now, and the carpenters are at work. It is quite a sacrifice for the few Saints to build a new house, but they are not afraid to make it, but are glad that they can work in this cause. When the house is built it will be free from debt and ready for dedication.

In gospel bonds,

R. T. WALTERS.

MARLIN, Texas, May 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: We as Saints are trying to live as the Lord would have us. At the same time we think we have a hard time in holding the fort, but we aim to battle on till the fight is over. We have some warm friends when it comes to business, but not so when it comes to the Lord's work. We are glad to know that we have friends even in a business way. The people say we are good people, but "Your doctrine and old Joe Smith." They can not stand when it comes to the Bible. They say they believe, but the test finds them wanting. So I guess it will be that way when the Lord comes; but we will have to live so that others may see our good works and be constrained to obey the gospel.

We had to withdraw from two of our number, in order to keep the law of the Lord. The rest are gaining ground.

The writer has had some hard trials in the last two years, having lost father and mother and brother,—all in thirteen months. I feel so lonely, as I and my father were not separated until his death. I want to live to meet him on the other side.

I am thirty-seven years of age and have a large family of boys to raise, and I am a cripple. With all of this on me I need your faith and prayers. I want all of the Saints to remember me in their prayers.

Yours in the faith,

B. F. SPICER.

DOWNES, Kansas, May 6, 1904.

Dear Herald:—I love to read church books and papers. There are so many good, encouraging words in them. I have been a member of the Church almost six years, but have not lived as faithful and cared for church work as I should, but I try now by the help of our heavenly Father to live better and the Lord is blessing me more and more. Dear Saints, the better we live the more and greater blessings we will receive, and happier we will be in this life, and then let us think of the next.

We have a little branch here, but it is quite scattered. I think most of the members are striving to do their duty as best they know. We have a good leader, Bro. S. A. Madden.

Elder J. F. McClure was here yesterday. He was called to preach the funeral of Mrs. Francis Anderson, who was ninety-two years old, and who was living with her son, Bro. G. W. Anderson.

Let us always be ready and willing to do our duty. Let us be humble and prayerful, always doing our duty. We do not know when we shall be called home and let us be ready to go when we are called.

Your sister,

MYRTLE COOP.

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 13, 1904.

Editors Herald: The ladies of the Aid Society of Des Moines kindly request a small space in the columns of the HERALD in which they may express their sincere thanks to all who donated to the bazaar recently held here. It is impossible for us to write to all personally, so avail ourselves of this means, and trust you all will accept our hearty thanks. To say we were highly gratified at the result of our effort, expresses it but mildly. The amount realized was beyond the expectation of the most sanguine. We held the bazaar two days, May 5 and 6, in our newly acquired church, and served light refreshments in the little class-room both evenings. The attendance was not what we wished it to be, nor what it should have been considering the size of our city; but popularity has never been a predominating feature of Latter Day Saint work. The result, however, proves the liberality of those who were there, and when we had "figured up" and found we had the snug sum of one hundred and eight dollars clear for our trouble, the smiles on our faces would have reminded you all of the "new moon." This money we intend to apply on our church debt.

Our society in numbers is not very great, but we believe in energy we will rank well with any and our worthy president would head the list. Much credit is due her for her untiring zeal, and the encouragement she gave the rest of us to do our best. Aside from what we accomplished in a financial way the Aid Society has been a great benefit to us in that it has developed in us a deeper sympathy for each other, and has given us to know to some extent the disadvantage some have to labor under, and the environment that surrounds them, and when we know this we can have more charity for their mistakes,—in fact see less of them in others and more in ourselves.

I count it a blessed privilege to meet with those from time to time who labor in the Master's cause, not simply because they feel it a duty so to do, but because of the love they have in their hearts and the desire to do all they can for the spread of the most glorious gospel. I believe I am safe in saying that the Des Moines Saints are "coming up higher" and are awakening to a sense of their duty as they never have before. It is especially noticeable in the interest that has developed in the Sunday-school and our earnest prayer is that it may continue to develop in all lines of the Master's work until we shall again be compelled to seek more commodious quarters.

Again thanking all of our friends who assisted us in our late effort we are, in behalf of the Aid Society,

Lovingly your sister,
MINNIE MATHER.

ROCK ISLAND, Illinois, May 16, 1904.

Editors Herald: I arrived at the Tri-cities as per appointment on Saturday, May 7, and at once began my work. I find the Saints mostly hopeful and willing to do their part of the work. My time has been spent mostly in visiting and getting acquainted with my new work. There were but few attended our service the first Sunday I was here owing to the inclemency of the weather, but yesterday the attendance was encouraging. I expect to preach two evenings this week at Sr. Chapman's at 2702 Fifteenth Street, Moline.

Last Thursday morning I called at the office of the Rock Island Argus, introduced myself to the editor and had a few minutes' chat with him and in the Friday evening edition of the paper there was quite a friendly mention made of me and my work, also a copy of What We Believe, taken from the back of the card I gave him.

I am well and feel well in the work and hope to do a work here that will benefit all with whom I may be brought in contact.

Praying for the success of the work,

Yours in bonds,
MARCUS H. COOK.

WOODBINE, Iowa, May 13, 1904.

Dear Reader: After enjoying the busy sessions of Conventions and Conference and the association of beloved Saints on my journey to and from, as well as while at Kirtland, returned home with a severe cold that for nearly a week kept me close to the house.

In consideration of the part I took in the work at these general assemblies I can but express my gratitude for the fact that I represented my convictions and constituents as perfectly as God gave me ability.

The work assigned for me to do the present conference year is somewhat new, and yet it has interested my attention at times during all my missionary work. City work, however, is not altogether the most pleasant in some ways, and not always the most encouraging to the laborer; yet the Epistles show that the apostle to the Gentiles was the most deeply interested in the work of God in the large cities, or else the work there needed more attention; and I feel that unless the burden of the work in the city of Des Moines had deeply interested those upon whom the work of assigning labor rested, my labor would have been other than it is, but since the assignment is made I feel resting heavily upon me the burden of the work to be done there, and with deep anxiety do I enter, with my dear brethren and sisters there, into whatever may be our duty, so that there may be no lack in any part of the work necessary to be done.

Those who have friends or relatives in the city whom they desire us to visit, will please write me at my home address or to my mission address, which will be given later, such information, giving full name and street number, if possible.

It is with pleasure I remember the many kindnesses extended to me where I have labored in the past, but no place more so than in the Des Moines District, the city of Des Moines always doing her part in the past, and I look forward to a repetition of similar kindnesses while I shall minister with them and among them this year. I desire not to be forgotten by the devoted child of God, for if ever I felt the need of divine grace and wisdom, it is now.

When I have been able to labor I have been very busy since the General Conference, trying to leave loved ones comfortable, and throw around my children such safeguards as will protect them during this the most critical part of their life—the character forming period. Among the practical helps I find Sunday-school and Religio work second to none other. Here is where they find something to do, and it is a truism that to be safe from evil-doing one must be constantly employed in right-doing. My ministerial work has been altogether in the Woodbine Branch.

The Lord willing I shall depart for missionary work next Thursday. Every year seems to increase the trial to depart from home and loved ones to face a frowning world, as we stand in the positive advocacy of the only plan God has authorized for the full salvation of mankind. Hopefully in the Lord,

J. F. MINTUN.

MEDINA, North Dakota, May 11, 1904.

Saints' Herald: It is five years ago that I first heard the gospel preached by Elder William Sparling and was baptized by him, though I had first read the Book of Mormon and other church publications. I was as prejudiced as any one I ever saw, but I wanted to find out the truth. I had a strange dream about a week or ten days before I came into the Church, in which I saw Bro. Sparling and heard him preach, and I asked for baptism. I laughed over this dream, but when I saw and heard Bro. Sparling a short time after, I knew him as the same man I saw in my dream, though I had never before seen or heard him. I was baptized next day.

I have had many dreams regarding the Church and its work. Although I was sure I had at last found the right faith thoughts such as these would sometimes come: These Methodists are so sure they are in the right; these Presbyterians, the Christian Church, they are all as sure seemingly as I. Have they not as good a right to be sure as I? Although I was sure I was in the right I did not want to be narrow-minded, and I tried to see as others did, place myself with them and continue to investigate. At that time I dreamed that I was looking for the straight and narrow way which I could not find. My mother and a large party were with me, and we were going down a sloping, sandy road, and on each side was a thick growth of brush and foliage. We would stop and part the heavy growth, find a path leading somewhere, which some would try and be lost. Many times this was tried, and I said, "We won't find it; we already have it." At last we came to a sand-hill and it seems we got down and dug into it, dug for it, trying to find the way. Finally we came to the end and it was a beautiful garden of ferns and flowers. A path led into it and a voice told me that here was a road many had tried, but I thought it dangerous and carefully parted the heavy growth of everything beautiful, and found the bottom a swamp. Then a voice told me again, "Many have gone down here and have been lost. You already have the straight and narrow way." Then I remembered the gospel and that I believed in the only faith Christ taught. I must be a true Saint and member of that faith and I would never have to look for the path to everlasting life.

We have had a very hard winter here, and we have also had hard times financially. We have a homestead in Canada and are trying to sell out here. I suppose if it is right we shall go. God will open the way for us. My husband has had to find some breaking to do and will be away from home most of the time. Mother stays with me while he is away.

Will more of the settlers of the Assinaboia please write.

Yours in the one faith,
MARGIE DAVIS.

SANDY, Utah, May 11, 1904.

Editors Herald: We have preached here three times and find a number who are interested in the gospel, some of whom will obey the same ere long, beyond a doubt.

The Saints in this part are trying to let their light shine by keeping up the weekly meetings and Religio. We now have a number of Scandinavian brethren and sisters here who are the fruits of Bro. Swenson's labors. May the good work go on!

I think the Smoot investigation has helped to open the eyes of some of the people of Utah.

I have an appointment out for the noon hour and it is now half past eleven; so will cut my letter short and write more news later.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and laboring for its upbuilding and the converting of the honest in heart,

Your colaborer,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

BERTHOUD, Colorado, May 10, 1904.

Editors Herald: We are working in the sugar-beet fields of Colorado, isolated from the Church, the HERALD being our only preacher and means by which we keep in touch with the progress of the latter-day work. Yet we have a degree of faith, looking forward with hope to the final redemption and consummation of all things. I will relate a dream I had about three months ago. When God has seen fit to reveal anything to me for my own individual benefit it has generally been by dreams. I have had many spiritual dreams, but in most cases could understand the interpretation. This one was very difficult at first and it may be that I do not understand it yet. Would like for some one to give the interpretation.

I dreamed I saw Brigham Young. (I never saw him in my life, but I understood for sure that this was Brigham Young.) His head was severed from his body, yet his head was alive. I did not hear him speak, but could see his lips and eyes move. His face was shaved smooth and I looked with astonishment at his head to know that it still had life sufficient to make the eyes and lips move.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

E. D. BROWNLEE.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 13, 1904.

Editors Herald: Another conference year is upon us, and it reminds us that the missionaries must again leave home and loved ones for the gospel's sake. We would be pleased on our part to occupy as far and extensively into new localities as possible, that all may have a chance to hear; and in our effort to do so we desire to have the coöperation of isolated Saints and friends to the cause, and thus we can become colaborers together with God. So please let us hear from any one inside the Des Moines District who desire preaching in their respective localities.

It must be borne in mind that once upon a time in the bygone past there was an Anti-Mormon Association started and I had the privilege to meet one of their charter members at Sandyville, Iowa, last winter, who was a Christian preacher; and after nearly one half day's talk with him he convinced me that he did not know anything about Mormonism, and yet he announced that he would lecture upon it. But the good people of Sandyville objected and refused him the privilege of lecturing.

Desiring to know something of the work of the Association I subscribed for the Helper hoping it would help me in securing the desired information relative to the work of the Association, as I understood it was to be their official organ. I paid my subscription in advance about the first of last June for one year. Did I receive it? Well, yes, whenever I wrote the editor and jogged his memory, for I do not suppose they have any subscription list, or that would not have been necessary. Be that as it may, I received it part of the time—whenever I notified Editor R. B. Neal.

In answer to my last inquiry I received one sheet dated February and March, and shortly afterward a personal letter, stating that he had been doing the very best he possibly could, that his next number would explain everything satisfactorily. I have not received the April number yet; possibly it is not out yet. I wrote in answer to his letter, but have not heard anything as yet from him or his paper.

The Lord has said that "no weapon formed against thee shall prosper." That seems to be true so far as the Helper is concerned. It is surely not very prosperous, as past and present conditions indicate. God's work rolls forth and the honest in heart obey it, while falsehoods and misrepresentations wither as dew before the morning sun. May we put on the garb of righteousness, for therein, and therein only, is safety.

S. K. SORENSEN.

AKRON, Ohio, April 11, 1904.

Dear Herald: Often have our drooping spirits been revived and brought to active life by the words of cheer and counsel which your pages have contained. The work is onward here. Bro. Briggs and Thomas were with us two weeks before General Conference preaching most every night. Large crowds were out to hear them, and their efforts were not in vain, Bro. Thomas baptizing two the last Sabbath he was here. We also had the privilege of having Bro. Hilliard with us since Conference. He preached four rousing sermons; good crowds and good interest. God has certainly many people to gather out in this city; if the Saints remain faithful many more will be added in the near future. One more was baptized last Sabbath by Bro. Dalberg, Bro. Davis if memory serves me right. He is seventy-two years old and badly crippled, being paralyzed on one side.

We have bought a tent and expect to make good use of it this summer in this city. It seems to be about the only way we can reach the people here. The majority are indifferent and will not come to the hall. Conference has promised us a man to help this summer. With this and the local force we think we can do much good during the summer months. We still meet in the Horst Hall, corner of Main and Bartges Streets. Call and see us when passing by. All are welcome. Wishing you success in your mission of love.

Your colaborer,

JAS. C. MCCONNAUGHY.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Arthur Allen of Holden, Missouri, wrote May 5, 1904: "I leave for my mission field on Saturday morning."

Bro. A. M. Chase wrote from Salt Lake City, Utah, May 11: "We had an excellent meeting on the street here last night; also, each of the three preceeding evenings. Elder Pender passed through here en route for his home in Malad City, and was with us Monday and Tuesday. He was the speaker on the street Monday night, and last night he spoke in the chapel. He went on north about midnight last night."

In a letter of the 16th inst., to Bishop Kelley, Bro. R. Miller, of Painesville, Ohio, writes as follows: "Enclosed find one dollar more for Graceland. Long may she live. It is not much, but if each one would put his shoulder to the wheel it would live for ever. I sincerely hope and trust the amount will be raised."

Bro. Z. M. Santee, Zearing, Illinois, writes, inclosing money for Graceland College: "I feel impressed by the Spirit of the Master to do something to keep up an establishment that will do so much good in educating the young of the Church. My desire is that the Church may do much in bringing many to the knowledge of Christ, and I want to do all in my power to help."

Miscellaneous Department.

Convention Minutes.

Philadelphia—Association met in convention at Baldwin, Maryland, May 7, 8, Superintendent O. T. Christy, presiding, E. B. Hull, clerk. Enrollment of schools as follows: Philadelphia 91, Baldwin 28. Treasurer reported balance on hand at last report, $4.78; collected since, $2.19; expended, $2.13; balance on hand; $4.84. Motion prevailed to dispense with the delegate system according to Article X in the Constitution. Motion prevailed to reunite the Philadelphia and New York associations. The Home Department was placed under the supervision of the district superintendent, he appointing as assistants William Atkinson, of Baldwin, and Walter W. Smith, of Philadelphia. On the evening of the 7th an entertainment was held, which was enjoyed by all, one of the main features being a fine collection of stereopticon pictures by H. H. Bacon, many of which are Book of Mormon subjects. Adjourned to meet at the call of the superintendents of the Philadelphia and New York Districts in a joint convention, to form a new district to be known as the New York and Philadelphia District.

Pastoral.

To the Arizona, California, and Nevada Mission: The assignments in charge within the above mission will be as follows: Southern California, C. Scott; Central California, J. C. Foss; Northern California and Nevada, J. F. Burton. Arizona will be left for the present subject to such appointment as may later be made. Bro. J. C. Clapp is not able to labor there on account of ill health and he will do what his strength permits in the field assigned to Bro. Scott.

Should any changes occur in the above arrangement they will be published later. I will enter the field at the earliest practicable moment and cooperate with all the workers. Let us labor together, being humble and prayerful that our diligence may be rewarded with success.

Yours in the good, great work,
JOSEPH LUFF.

To the Saints in Montana; Greeting: You have all no doubt read reports from the papers of my reappointment to the Rocky Mountain Mission. Having arrived in my field of labor, I am now ready to enter into the labors of another year with you. As one of your missionaries I invite the Saints throughout the state of Montana to cooperate with me in a strong effort to get the gospel before as many people as it is possible the coming conference year. In laboring together—though we be many miles apart—let us keep in touch one with another. The members of the Church, in my judgment, should keep themselves informed as to the whereabouts of their missionary, his movements in a way, his wants and needs; that they may the more successfully labor with him in securing places for preaching, and give him such other assistance as he may stand in need of. Do not wait for your missionary to come to you for you to find out if he is in need of something to assist him to prosecute the missionary work in your district; go to him, or write to him and ask if there is not something you can do to help along the work. Watch as well as pray for him, keep your eyes open to the needs of the work in your district, and especially in the locality you reside in; invite him to come to your home and preach in some church near by or your schoolhouse that you have previously arranged for. It is not enough to say to your missionary when he is about to take his departure from you, "Success to you; may the Lord bless and keep you and open doors that you may have access to the honest in heart." Do first yourself what you can along that line and then ask God to supplement your effort by adding his blessing. See to it, dear Saints, that you are doing what you can to help build up the work of your Master; do whatsoever your hands find to do in his work, and do it with a will. Keep your missionaries in the field busy at work, so they will not become discouraged and drop back into the branches or go home on a vacation. I have heard fault found with some missionaries for being at home or in the branches too much of their time. Did you ever think that if such were true, a part of the cause at least might be traced back to the neglect of duty on the part of those very persons who were finding fault with the missionary for neglect of duty?

In conclusion permit me to invite you to a careful reading of pages 7 and 8, section 122 of Doctrine and Covenants that you may know, if you are not fully conversant with the duties of a missionary, what is not his work, as well as what is his work. And that you may know that the Lord requires you all to work with him, please read paragraph 8, section 119 of Doctrine and Covenants.

I trust our association together this year will be as congenial as last, and I hope to hear from you as often as wisdom may direct. My address will be Bozeman, Montana, in care of Thomas Reese. I remain as ever,

Your brother and colaborer,
J. D. STEAD.

To the ministry and Saints in the Des Moines District: Having been placed in charge I would be pleased to get all the information and help from the ministry and Saints possible, as I am a stranger in the district; let us thrust in with our might and reap while the day lasts. Will be glad to meet all the missionaries at the district conference at Des Moines which convenes June 4 and 5.

In gospel bonds,
DOW CITY, IOWA. N. V. SHELDON.

To the Saints and Friends in the Colorado, Wyoming, and New Mexico Mission; Greeting: Having been appointed as minister in charge of this mission, and having a new phase of the work confronting me, and sense, in a measure at least, the increased responsibility, I plead for the hearty cooperation of all my associate ministers, and let us as men and servants of God strive to live in the bonds of unity and peace, remembering that the more we can make our unity apparent, the more convincing power we wield, according to the prayer of our Master recorded in seventeenth chapter of John. Paul's charge was first to the elders: "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock." Also the assistance of all Saints and interested ones in the mission is solicited and will be appreciated, and of such let me ask that you give me your hearty support and lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven; let the recording angel place upon the page so white and fair in the book of God's kingdom to your credit some good deed. Pray for the spread of God's work and live to make your prayer effectual by being consistent therewith. Send to me all information of the prospects for opening the door of his kingdom to those of new places and of keeping the camp-fires blazing upon the altars already erected. Do not pray for God to bless his servants and then withhold the information you can give, for in such prayers God has no delight, and with all your remembering, remember the Bishop and make your expressed will and hopes good that are so often given in the assemblies of the Saints, by sending to him the Lord's dues and prove Him thereby. This year we have been given five actively and continuously engaged ministers and one appointed by the district, six in all for the mission; this, together with some good, lively local workers, puts us on a reasonably good working basis and if all will do all they can we will see the evidence of advancement and of God's approval in our field by the close of the year. Let the ministers thus appointed be prompt in reporting the first of each quarter, viz., July, October, January, and in addition to last quarterly report, make a full and complete report of the year's labors. Remember also the omissions requested by action of the late Conference, i. e., no report of administrations to the sick, and only the spokesman to report confirmations.

Now to one and all as the year's watchword, let us cultivate a disposition of heart and mind to do unto others as we would have others do unto us; and say nothing of others that we would not have them say of us, and if anything should be said, let it be just that thing that we would like to have said of us under like conditions. Then we will be rooting out the most harmful weed of sin from the garden of our spiritual cultivation and laying a foundation upon which to stand during the tempests of life. And when the warfare is over, we, one and all, can lay down the weapons of our warfare at the feet of the great General who commissioned us to take them up, and wear the crown of life for which we now labor. Peace, victory, and salvation to all the Israel of God.

In bonds,
J. W. MORGAN.

725 East Dale Street, COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado.

Notices.

A FAST DAY.

The Saints of the Eastern Colorado District, and as many others as feel inclined to do so, are requested to observe Sunday, June 5, as a fast day for the benefit of our worthy brother, Elder J. B. Roush, that if it be the Lord's will his health may be restored, the fast to be from the evening meal on Saturday, the 4th, until the evening meal of the 5th. Will the different branch officers request the Saints to observe the fast in their services. Let us fast and pray that our brother's life may be prolonged, and his days of usefulness extended. J. W. Morgan, missionary in charge, E. F. Shupe, district president.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

The Musical Association of Spring River District meets in convention at Joplin, Missouri, from May 31 till June 2. Each choir in the district is invited to come; also each choir in association is expected to furnish special music for concert or entertainment. G. N. P. English, district director.

TENT WORK.

To the Saints of the Des Moines District: As the time for our district conference draws near, it is desired that as many as can possibly attend should do so. We realize the lateness of the season, which will likely prevent some of those who have farms to attend to, from being present; but try to be there. It must be borne in mind that it is the annual election of officers. Bro. H. A. McCoy has been appointed to another field, and some one must be chosen to take his place. It will also be remembered that the tent season is coming; therefore let all, especially the isolated Saints, send to the undersigned their requests for tent services, accompanied by such general information, as will lead to a correct decision in the matter. Requests are especially desired from places where we can get no other openings, so as to give all a chance to hear the gospel; but we can not promise that we can fill all requests, having only one tent at our disposal. We desire an earnest coöperation of all the Saints in the district, both in the branches and the isolated ones, for an earnest, energetic, active, and successful campaign this coming year, and let the word, "fail" never once enter our minds. How can we fail if we do our duty, with Christ as our Captain and Commander? All requests for tent work are desired to be in the hands of the undersigned prior to conference which convenes June 4, 5. Your brother in gospel bonds, S. K. Sorensen, acting district president, Lamoni, Iowa.

Reunion Notice.

The Minnesota District conference and reunion will be held at Fergus Falls, June 10, continuing over two Sundays. The ground secured is in the west end of town and just across the street from where the others were held. There will be plenty of room for tenting, and we would advise all to bring tents or covered wagons to sleep in. Meals can be had at the rate of three dollars per week. With rooms it will be from four dollars per week to one dollar per day. If the hotels are not crowded there will be some reduction from this. We have not as yet secured rate for teams, but there will be a reduction from regular rates. Will give notice further on. Elders F. A. Smith, of the Twelve, and F. M. Smith, of the Presidency, will be present. These, with the missionaries and local elders, will be the speakers. The first service will be at 10 a. m., for organization and social service. Come and bring the spirit of peace with you, and let us have a good time in the Lord. E. A. Stedman, president.

Conference Notices.

The conference of the Nauvoo District will convene at Argyle, Iowa, the second Saturday of June, the 11th. We expect President F. M. Smith and perhaps Elder J. R. Lambert to be present. Argyle is located near the center of the district and we should have a large representation from all quarters of the district present. The annual election of officers will take place and all should come to make choice of their officers and give them their confidence. The matter of delegates has been rather neglected for a time and the matter is especially mentioned here so that the branches may see that they elect their full number of delegates. J. W. Peterson, president.

The correct date for the holding of the Spring River District conference is Friday, June 3, 1904, and it will be held at Joplin, Missouri. T. S. Hayton, secretary.

The conference of the Lamoni Stake will meet at Centerville, Iowa, June 18, at 10 a. m.

Clinton District conference will convene at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, June 25, 1904, at 10 o'clock a. m. A. C. Silvers,

The conference of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District will be held with the Clear Lake Branch near Fremont, Indiana, commencing June 11, at 10 a. m. Bro. J. W. Wight and Isaac M. Smith, ministers in charge, expect to be present. A. S. Cochran, president.

By request of Bro. D. S. Palmer, president of Southwestern Texas District, I hereby announce the time and place of convening the next conference of said district to be June 17, 1904, at Pipe Creek, Texas. Let all come prepared to report and have a profitable time. All being well, I will attend. H. O. Smith.

The conference of the Southeastern Illinois District will convene in the Dry Fork chapel, June 11, 12, 1904. Have all branch reports ready and bring them with you prepared to help make this conference a success in a spiritual and educational way. I. A. Morris, president.

Conference of the Kewanee District, Illinois, will convene at Canton, Illinois, on June 11, 12, 1904, at 10.30 a. m. The change in time was made by me from May 28 at the earnest request of the Canton Saints, and for good and sufficient reasons. I am also requested by them to extend to all a cordial invitation to come, also to our newly appointed missionary in charge, Bro. J. W. Wight. The branch president's address is John F. Jones, 425 South First Avenue, Canton, Illinois. John S. Patterson, president.

Central Illinois District will convene at Beardstown, Illinois, June 4, 5, 1904.

Convention Notices.

Convention of the Northeastern Illinois District will be held at Mission, Illinois, May 27, 1904, at 2.30 p. m. Would like to have all schools send delegates so we can make arrangements for the entertainment and institute work at the reunion. Jerome Wildermuth, superintendent.

Spring River District association meets in convention at Joplin, Missouri, June 3; all reports and delegate credentials to be in before that time. All are invited. Mollie Davis, superintendent.

The Eastern Iowa District association will convene June 3, 1904, at Clinton, Iowa. Morning session 10 a. m. Cora E. Weir, secretary.

Sunday-school convention of the Northwestern Kansas District will be held June 3, beginning at 2 p. m., in Union Star church, Pottersville, Kansas, if use of church can be had; if not, then in gospel tent near same place. We desire a full report from all schools in district and desire the presence of all our well wishers who can attend. Send all reports to the secretary, Miss Myrtle Coop, Downs, Kansas, R. F. D. No. 3. John A. Teeters, superintendent.

The Sunday-school convention of the Fremont District, Iowa, will convene with the Riverton, Iowa, school, Friday evening, May 27, 1904, at 8 p. m., and continue over Saturday, the 28th. District conference Sunday and Monday following. A good program of work is prepared and we hope to see a full attendance from all the schools. There has never been a district convention held at this place and we would like to make a special effort to get out a full attendance, that the results of the work may be as good as we can make them. Mrs. T. A. Hougas, superintendent.

Sunday-school convention of the Northeastern Missouri District will be held at Bevier, Missouri, Friday, June 3, 1904, at 10 a. m. In the evening, in place of the regular program, several papers will be read on interesting subjects, followed by discussion. It is hoped that all schools in the district will be fully represented. W. B. Richards, president.

The London District, Ontario, association will convene at Humber Bay, June 3, 1904, at 10 a. m. Let all who are interested in this branch of the work come prepared to assist. George Buschlen, superintendent.

The semiannual conference of the Northern Michigan District will convene in Saints' church, at Coleman, Michigan, June 18, 1904, at 9 a. m. Secretaries of branches will take notice, and send reports promptly to C. B. Joice, South Boardman, Michigan, up to June 12, afterward to Coleman. We expect the president of the mission, Apostle J. W. Wight, will meet with us. Bring with you the Spirit of the Master, and to make it less burdensome for the residents, bring baskets well filled. J. A. Grant, president.

The district Sunday-school and Religio conventions of the Southeastern Illinois District, will be held in the Dry Fork Branch chapel, on Friday, June 10, 1904, commencing at 10 a. m. F. L. Sawley, superintendent and president.

Married.

MCCLENAHAN—DUNSDON.—At the residence of the bride's parents, Bro. and Sr. James Dunsdon, Tabor, Iowa, May 4, at 8 p. m., Bro. Robert McClenahan and Sr. Agnes Dunsdon were united in marriage, Elder Frank Goode officiating. About forty guests were in attendance and useful and beautiful presents were received.

Died.

RANBARGER.—George W. Ranbarger was born November 19, 1832, at Russellville, Illinois, and died April 23, 1904, at Moline, Illinois. Funeral services in charge of Elders Edward Rannie and F. A. Russell, May 1, 1904. He was baptized by M. T. Short in 1836. He was held in high esteem by his neighbors.

TEETERS.—Ford E., infant son of Harry and Sr. Forest Teeters, was born January 26, 1904, at Clear Lake, Indiana, and died February 10, 1904. Funeral from the house, February 11, 1904. Sermon by Elder Isaac M. Smith. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

EMERICH.—Jonathan Emerich, born December 12, 1843, at Clinton, Ohio. Died February 27, 1904, at Fremont, Indiana. Was married February 22, 1866, to Miss Mary Betzer; and to them were born three sons, two of whom are still living. He united with the Church in 1877; and has been a faithful and devoted worker for the Master, having served the Clear Lake, Indiana, Branch as its president for a great many years. He was loved and respected both in and out of the Church, and will be greatly missed by wife, children, and other relatives, and also by the Church. Funeral from the house, March 1, Elder George A. Smith in charge of the service; sermon by Elder Isaac M. Smith.

HOUGH.—Mrs. Eliza J. Hough was born at Williamstown, New York, April 15, 1823. She came to Council Bluffs with a Mormon immigration in 1846. Soon after settled in Crescent where she resided until the time of her death. She united with the Church in early life and continued faithful until the end. Grandma Hough was loved by all for her loving disposition, and was a friend to all. She was stricken with apoplexy and lived only a few hours dying April 19, 1904. Funeral was held April 21 from the Saints' church in Crescent. She leaves five sons and one daughter, many grandchildren, and a host of friends. Sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by C. G. McIntosh. Laid to rest in the Crescent Cemetery.

PETERSON.—Frederick Peterson was born April 24, 1849, in Denmark; came to this country when a mere boy. He became identified with the Church October 2, 1876, being baptized by Elder James Caffall; was ordained an elder October 16, 1888, by President Joseph Smith and G. A. Blakeslee. He was taken suddenly ill Friday morning, April 22, and died shortly after. He leaves a sorrowing wife, one son, three brothers, and two sisters. He was a kind husband and loving father, a friend to all in need. Funeral was held in the Saints' church in Council Bluffs, April 24, 1904. Sermon by D. R. Chambers, prayer being offered by James Caffall. Interment in Walnut Hill Cemetery.

WISEMAN.—Matilda Wiseman Hutchings was born on Gosmel Street, London, England, December, 13, 1824; came to Utah in 1851; was married to W. W. Hutchings in 1853 and was the mother of six boys and one girl. Died August 25, 1903, in Beaver City, Utah.

HANDY.—At Kansas City, Missouri, April 25, 1904, Bro. Albert D. Handy, aged 51 years. He united with the Church in 1896 at Armstrong, Kansas, was baptized by Elder Edgard Harrington; he was a good man and very much devoted to the Church. He desired to pass on, knowing that God loved him, and passing peacefully over the river of death he rests in the paradise of God. He died at the home of his daughter, Sr. Maud Babcock, who tenderly cared for him during his sickness. He leaves to mourn two children, Bert A. and Maud L., and many relatives and friends. Funeral in charge of Elder F. C. Warnky. The sermon, by his request, was by Elder J. J. Emmett. His body was interred in the Union Cemetery.

LYLE.—Mrs. Margaret Lyle, widow of Elder Robert Lyle, died at North Bend, Nebraska, May 6, 1904, aged 79 years, 1 month, and 11 days. She and her husband lived at Neponset, Illinois, for many years, and she enjoyed attending conferences in the Kewanee District, but did not unite with the Church. They came to the Lamoni country in 1877 and Bro. Lyle died here in 1895. Her body was brought back for burial by the side of her husband in the Lamoni cemetery. Her son, Charles Lyle, lives near Lamoni. Funeral service by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

CLARK.—Sr. Fannie Clark, daughter of Bro. and Sr. W. W. Clark, at the W. C. A. Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa, April 22, 1904. She was born September 26, 1881, at Kingston, Missouri; was baptized July 11, 1897, by H. O. Smith. There is father, mother, four brothers, and a baby sister left to mourn her departure. Funeral was held at the Gallands Grove church and she was laid to rest on the 26th in the Gallands Grove Cemetery. Sermon by D. M. Rudd.

GREENWOOD.—Mary Greenwood was born at Warrington, Lancashire, England, August 18, 1832. Was baptized into the old Church in 1840, followed the lead of Brigham Young until 1870, when she was baptized into the Reorganized Church May 16, by E. C. Brand. She had a stroke of paralysis about seven and a half years ago and had been gradually failing until her death. Husband and two children survive her. She was a faithful Saint and has gone to her reward. Funeral and interment at Gallands Grove, Iowa, sermon by D. M. Rudd.

GILLILAND.—At his home near Lacota, Michigan, April 26, 1904, of paralysis, Bro. Freeman S. Gilliland. He was born January 5, 1838, in Washington County, Pennsylvania; was baptized at Harlan, Iowa, February 14, 1862, by Elder T. W. Chatburn. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn. He died firm in the faith of the gospel.

SALISBURY.—At Lamoni, Iowa, May 15, 1904, Mrs. Jerusha, wife of Bro. Thomas Salisbury, aged 38 years, 11 months, and 19 days. She was born in Montgomery County, Kansas, in 1865, and married Bro. Salisbury in 1885. Six children are left motherless, the oldest seventeen and the youngest six years. Funeral services by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

BENNETT.—Sr. Ann Bennett died April 30, 1904, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. F. Jones, 425 South First Avenue, Canton, Illinois, at the age of 80 years, 9 months, and 27 days. She was born in South Wales; baptized November 5, 1865, at St. David, Fulton County, Illinois, by Jeremiah Jeremiah; confirmed by the same. She leaves two daughters, fourteen grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Services by Elder John S. Patterson, of Kewanee, Illinois.

BLAZEY.—Elizabeth, of Mitchell, Ontario, on March 20, 1904. Born in England in 1826. Maiden name Staff. Married to George Blazezy in 1846; united with Brighamites in 1855; came to Canada in 1857. Heard the gospel through Elder Fred Gregory, then a priest, and was baptized in 1895; confirmed by Elder G. C. Tomlinson. Funeral conducted by Elder Daniel McGregor. A large number of sorrowing friends and acquaintances followed the remains to their last earthly resting place. Truly a mother in Israel has been called home, and we all feel her loss. Her disposition was amiable; her deportment ladylike, and her character rich with the graces of sweet womanhood. To know her was to love her. Her faith in the great purpose of God, as revealed in this great latter-day work, grew brighter and brighter as the days passed. She had been raised up so often under administration it was hoped she would again be restored by the same means, but it was not to be. She was sorry to part with her loved ones for their sake, but for her own she was glad to get home. For nine years she had been a reader of the HERALD and other church papers, and looked for their coming with almost childish delight, and their contents were to her a source of great pleasure and profit. In testimony and prayer, she often expressed a desire for strength to endure to the end, and it was wonderful to see the patience and meekness with which she bore all her sufferings. One of her faithful daughters testifies that she always spoke of this latter-day work as "great and glorious," and wished she could do more for it, but, though she felt her own opportunities limited, I know that she was the light of our home, and I believe we would not have been in the Church to-day were it not for loving, faithful mother; and the sweet influence of her life will surely be to us an inspiration to live holier lives that we may go to be with her, for we believe she is where no more sorrow, sin, or disappointment can assail her. Her husband, Bro. George Blazezy, survives her, being over eighty years of age. Also four of a family, two young men and two young women, all of whom are in the Church but the eldest son. She offered many prayers for her boy that the light of eternal truth might illumine his soul and draw him to the one faith, which if he obey, will lead him to His throne.

DOBSON.—Thomas Cyrus Dobson, born August 7, 1846, Pottawattamie County, Iowa, died May 12, 1904. Was among the earliest settlers in Crawford County. United with the Church, October 7, 1864; ordained a priest March 13, 1865. Was faithful until death. He married Huldah Marie Ward, August 20, 1869. To them were born eight children, seven still living, who with the devoted wife mourn; but rejoice in the assurance that he rests in paradise. His mother, five sisters, relatives and friends feel keenly the separation. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Sermon by Charles Derry.

OLSON.—Elva May, daughter of Bro. Peter and Sr. Anna Olson, was born at Mallard, Iowa, February 27, 1904, and died May 5. Funeral services were conducted in the Saints' chapel at Mallard at 2 p. m., May 7, by Elder C. E. Butterworth. A fair-sized and attentive audience was in attendance at the services.

Dow.—Died at Six Mile Grove, Iowa, April 27, 1904, Sr. Jemima M. Dow. Sr. Dow was born September 12, 1834, in Ontario County, New York. Married John D. Dow October 26, 1851, at Lagrange, Michigan. Moved to Six Mile Grove in March, 1868. To them thirteen children were born, two of whom remain. She was baptized at Logan, Iowa, October 11, 1893. Funeral sermon at home by S. B. Kibler at her request. A large gathering of neighbors and friends showed love and respect for the departed sister.

WHITE.—Bro. Jesse D. White was born April 5, 1843, at Erin, New York; was baptized March 16, 1865, at Galien, Michigan, by Elder James Gillen; died very suddenly at his home in Galien, April 26, 1904. In 1869 he married Emma Brownell and from this union sprung seven children, five of whom, together with the widow, survive him: Mrs. James Cuthbert, Mrs. Thomas Vanderhoof, and Jesse White, of Chicago, and George and John White, of Galien. Bro. White for thirty years was a carpenter and contractor and took active charge of the repairing of the Kirtland Temple in 1883. Bro. White took great interest in church work, being for some time superintendent of the Sunday-school. He took an active and earnest part in the erection of the Saints' chapel at Galien. Bro. White was well respected in the community where he lived, held the office of township treasurer for two terms, and was for many years a member of the school board. He was an earnest friend of education. Funeral services were held from the Saints' chapel at Galien, conducted by Elder Samuel Stroh. His body was laid to rest in the Galien cemetery to await the resurrection.

COLLINS.—Emma May, daughter of Bro. Dwight and Sr. Minnie Collins, of pneumonia, near Fairfield, Nebraska, May 1, 1904, aged 10 years, 1 month, and 12 days. Funeral service at the home of Bro. A. Croft, May 2, conducted by Elder C. H. Porter, after which the remains were interred at the Edgar Cemetery.

MORANT.—Georgia Sibylla, daughter of the late Bro. Samuel, and Sr. Jessie Morant, at North Platte, Nebraska. She was a sweet babe, but neither loving care nor affectionate desire could prolong her earthly life. She was blessed by Elder S. D. Payne, April 26, and died May 5, aged 5 weeks and 3 days. Funeral service at the home May 7, conducted by Elder C. H. Porter, after which she was laid to rest by the side of her father who had not lived to see his child.

Addresses.

W. E. LaRue, Jonesport, Maine.

What is classed as a twentieth century wonder in printing machinery has been installed in the government printing office. It is a Hoe press which can reel off in an hour 80,000 copies of an eight-page form, Congressional Record size, fold and ready for the binder. The machine cost the tidy sum of 38,500 dollars. This huge piece of mechanism requires the services of ten men to operate it. One of the most remarkable features of the press is that its movements are absolutely controlled by the touching of three buttons which could be manipulated by the touch of an infant. There are eight stations on the press, at each of which are the three manipulating buttons—the "on" button for starting the machine, the "stop off" button for stopping the press or reducing its speed, and the "safety" button for bringing the machine to a stop in case of accident. The first pressure on the "on" button causes the press to go ahead slowly, then successive touches cause it to increase its motion until it is going at top-notch speed. The third pressure on the "on" button throws the big press from the small electric motor to the large one and gives it its highest speed. Another interesting feature of the machine is that it is two presses in combination, and can be operated either as one or two presses. The buttons on a near-by switchboard, when properly touched, will give the press seventeen different speeds. This switchboard cost as much as an ordinary dwelling house—3,500 dollars. The inking arrangement is novel and complete, each roller weighing sixty pounds, and can be regulated to print anything from a visiting card to a eight-sheet poster.

And this, think of it,—just on the other side of half a century! Not a single inch of rail in all the empire of Nippon then. In fact, it was in 1872 that the first eighteen miles of railway were opened for traffic. In 1903, there were 4,237 miles actually in operation, with the daily earning per mile as high as 79 yen and 49 sen. The toy locomotive and carriages of Perry's day waxed strong and multiplied to 1,427 engines, 4,864 passenger coaches, and 21,505 freight cars. In the fiscal year of 1901-1902, the number of passengers carried reached 111,211,208, and 14,409,752 tons of freight were transported. The little telegraph line between two houses in Kanagawa, which took the breath away from our good fathers fifty years ago, grew to 84,000 miles of wire in 1903, with 2,198 offices scattered throughout the land. The telephone system, which saw its light in our country for the first time in 1890, has outgrown the telegraph in mileage. In 1903, there were over 108,000 miles of it in the country. In the days of Perry, not one steamer was upon the Orient seas or any other seas under the Nippon flag. In 1901, we had 5,415 vessels, sail and steam, of the European pattern, with a gross tonnage of 919,968. The Lippon Yusen Kaisha alone owned seventy steamers in 1901, of the tonnage of 221,871. You see, then, that the development of our mercantile marine has not been a step behind that of our navy, with which the present war has made you familiar.

When the American squadron was cutting the virgin wake in the waters of Yedo Bay, our foreign commerce was limited to dealings with the Dutch. It was an entertaining joke. No serious-minded person seems to have taken the trouble of chronicling the amount of business done. That joke, however, developed into a rather serious affair in 1902. In that year, our foreign trade amounted to the modest sum of 530,034,324 yen. In the same year, no less than 6,211 steamers, with a tonnage of 11,399,415, entered our ports from foreign countries.

It has been a remarkable commercial and industrial development, that of Nippon, within the past fifty years. Something even more marvelous than this, however, can be seen in the flowering of the intellectual life of the New Nippon.—From "Fifty Years of Japan," by Adachi Kinnosuke, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for May.

The present condition and aspect of the negro problem, as shown by statistics, is presented by Thomas Nelson Page, in McClure's for May, in his third and concluding paper on "The negro: The Southerners' problem."

Mr. Page argues that instead of progressing the negro has, on the whole, retrogressed since the war, and supports his argument with an imposing array of facts and figures. He estimates that the South has spent over one hundred and nine million dollars on the negroes' education, besides thirty million dollars contributed by private charity. Yet the effect of all this on the negroes in the South as a whole has been scarcely perceptible. On the other hand the negro has lost much ground industrially since the war. In slavery all the trades and mechanic arts in the South were filled with negroes. Now all this is changed, and there are few mechanics to be found among them. Neither does Mr. Page believe that the negro has advanced economically or politically any more than educationally or industrially, and offers convincing statistics to sustain his case.

But underneath all this question material advancement, Mr. Page points out, there lies the deeper question of moral advancement, of growth in character and ideals of life. This, he contends, is the true test of progress, and here he considers the negro most backward. Alarming percentages of crime among the negroes are given and while admitting that a certain portion of the race has risen notably since emancipation, yet Mr. Page believes that the race generally has degenerated morally and mentally. The depravity of the negroes in their social life is particularly dwelt upon, and it is maintained that the cause of this frightful immorality is over the church and school and gives no sign of abatement.

Some startling facts are cited to support this contention. For instance, it is said that the crime of rape was unknown during slavery, and hardly known during the first years of freedom. Within the past twenty-five years over five hundred white women and children have been assaulted in the South by negroes. Twenty-five years ago women in the South went unattended, with no more fear of attack than in New England. Today no woman in the South goes alone upon the highway out of sight of white men, except on necessity, and no man leaves his women alone in his house if he can help it.

"This is a terrible showing," says Mr. Page, "and the most depressing part of it is the failing of the negroes to address themselves to the moral improvement of their race." In concluding, he then adds, "None of this will affect the views of the politicians or the doctrinaire; but it should, at least, give food for thought among the rest of our people."

It is a dark picture Mr. Page draws.

Training in Observation.

For training in observation, as in almost everything else, the early years are of course the best. It is a great advantage to have spent one's boyhood in the country under the guidance of a teacher who compels his pupil to keep his eyes open to the life of the out-of-doors world. Such a training will save time in later book studies, for it gives that power of attention which often makes the difference between failure and success. Bad spelling, for instance, is mainly due to deficiency in this particular. A correct speller is a person who, when he learned to read, took such notice of the appearance of the words in his book that if he writes a word wrongly he can tell by the appearance of it that he has made a mistake. So, too, a good proof-reader is one in whom the habit of attention is so strong that he reads in

The Saints' Herald.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance. When payment is made, the date on yellow label always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires. If not changed within a month after payment is made, notify us. The paper will not be sent to persons who are six months in arrears, unless special arrangements are made.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately, as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post-office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for Zion's Ensign, also orders for all Ensign publications the printed sheet what is actually there, and not what he expects to see there. Fortunately, although this habit is best acquired in childhood, it is not impossible to make up, to some extent, for the waste of early opportunities by a diligent use of those that occur in adolescence and manhood. There have been many who in middle age have been tempted by a summer vacation in the country to take up the study of botany, and who have not only discovered in it a new and delightful hobby but have gained the satisfaction of knowing that they have at last emancipated themselves from the class of those who have eyes but see not. It is worth something if the meadows and lanes, while still as of old presenting to us in their general panorama a picture of beauty, now offer us also in every moss and flower a subject of fresh and keen interest. It is worth even more if, by finding that there is both pleasure and profit to be gained from the careful inspection of what what we were wont heedlessly to pass by, we learn at last the value of that rare endowment, the gift of sight.—From "On learning to see," by Herbert W. Horwill, in the Chautauquan for May.

How a great crisis in American political history was met, and threatening civil war averted, is dramatically described by Joseph M. Rogers in a clear and nonpartisan narrative of "How Hayes became president," in the May McClure's. Very little has been written on the Hayes-Tilden controversy and the extra-constitutional means employed for its settlement by the electoral Commission, except in partisan discussion. In preparing his article Mr. Rogers has had access to new material and presents interesting facts hitherto unpublished, giving his work the value of both freshness and lack of bias.

Mr. Rogers outlinks the events leading up to the controversy, describes the complications following the fight in congress, the public excitement, the bargain which finally resulted in the selection of the commission, its decision and the far-reaching results of it. Among the latter were the withdrawal of federal troops from the South, the turning over of State offices in the South to the democrats and the passing of a law for canvassing the vote in future elections so as to prevent a repetition of the contest. Many political animosities and bitternesses were engendered in the contest which affect the whole course of political history.

Mr. Rogers concludes with this statement: "Tilden and Hendricks received a clear plurality of the popular vote, even as counted by the commission, who were chosen presidential electors in the three disturbed States on a fair vote and honest count, even as it was cast, is known to no one and never can be known."

In the May number of the North American Review, Mrs. Flora McDonald Thompson contributes an article that will create a great deal of comment throughout the country. This article, under the title "The truth about woman in industry," discusses the value of women as wage-earners. Mrs. Thompson says that it is to the disadvantage of economical conditions for women to work, for the reason that in leaving her home and her household duties she raises the cost of living, because, if she does not do the housework herself, some one must be hired to do so. As most women do not make their entire living by working, but merely contribute to the expense of the household, they can afford to work for less money; the result is that they cheapen the value of labor. Hence women of industry increase the cost of living and reduce the payment of labor. Mrs. Thompson sums up her opinion on the subject in the following manner.

"Since marriage is a state to which all women in the course of nature, barring accident, attain, it is to effects as determined by marriage that one must look in defining the principles which should govern the action of women. Facts concerning the wage-earning of wives, therefore, do not describe conditions of one class of women only; they represent the final equation of the matter in its bearing upon the sex. Therefore:

"The practice of so-called economic independence has achieved for woman financial results indicated in the fact that her average earnings are less than one dollar a day.

"The effect of the practice upon economic interests is to lessen efficiency and to increase the cost of production.

The effect upon the woman herself is to impair her physical fitness for the maternal function, and to subject her to a false system of education, which mentally and morally unfits her for her economic office in the family.

The effect upon society is to promote pauperdom, both by increasing the expense of living and by robbing men of the responsibility which gives them force and success in their natural office of dispenser of wealth to the family.

In a word, the truth about woman in industry is, she a frightful failure.

Iowa State Fair for 1904 will be held from August 19 to 26. 40,000 dollars in premiums will be given. For the best ear of corn exhibited, fifty dollars will be given. Every effort will be made to keep this fair up to its usual high standard. Particulars can be learned by addressing J. C. Simpson, secretary, Des Moines, Iowa.

The May number of the Open Court contains an interesting article entitled "Cases of insanity in Shakespeare" by Professor Austin Flint. He deals largely with the case in "Hamlet." Whether Hamlet's insanity is simulated or real has always been a favorite subject for discussion among Shakespeare students, there being many earnest advocates of both theories. Professor Flint deals with the question exhaustively, and touches also upon the cases of "King Lear" and "The Winters Tale."

Cash prizes are offered by the Navy Department for the best records, and to meet this expense Congress appropriates about two hundred thousand dollars yearly. England appropriates twenty-six thousand dollars for prizes, and in 1900 Germany's budget included an item of four hundred and eighty-two thousand dollars for ammunition in target practice.—The World's Work.

The Traveler

Who contemplates a trip to Colorado, Utah, California or the North west should know that

The Denver & Rio Grande R. R.

widely known as "The Scenic Line of the World," has more scenic attractions than any other route across the continent, traversing as it does the Rocky Mountain Region through Royal Gorge, Canon of the Grand River, Glenwood Springs, Marshall Pass, Black Canon, Castle Gate, and the world-famed Salt Lake City. Its three through daily trains are equipped with the latest improved cars of all classes. Its dining car service is unsurpassed. For illustrated pamphlets address

S. K. HOOPER, G. P. & T. A.
Denver
Colo.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

"She Wants to Tell."

Sr. M. E. Webber of Queensboro, Ontario, Canada, writes January 12, 1904, saying: "Dear Brother:—I want to tell you how pleased I am with your Quit-to-bac. My brother used less than two boxes and has not touched tobacco since he began to use it and has gained in flesh and is better in every way." If it cures others, why not you? Three boxes sent post-paid for $1.50 with positive guarantee of cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.
Address, (Bro.) B. F. Ordway, 228 Hancock St., Peoria, Ill., U. S. A.

The World's Greatest Newspaper

The Chicago Tribune

---

Up-to-date farmers read

"PRACTICAL FARMING,"

the best Agriculture Department
in the West

---

For Women . . .

Fashions
Beauty Hints
Household Talks
Book Reviews

For Men. . . .

Market Reports
Sporting News
Fair Politics

For Children . . .

Cut-Outs
Comics
Stories

McCutcheon's Cartoons

---

$4.00 a Year Daily
$6.50 Daily and Sunday

KEOKUK & WESTERN R. R. CO.

North—Leave Leon 2: 40 p. m.; arrive at Des Moines 6: 05 p. m.
South—Leave Des Moines 8: 25 a. m.; arrive at Leon 11: 45 a. m.
Trains daily except Sunday; connect with C., B. & Q. at Leon.

TRACTS.

33. Trial of the Witnesses to the Resurrection of Jesus. Each 5 cents; per dozen . . . . . 50

47. The Basis of Brighamite Polygamy. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 . . . . . 60

TO the Saints who may feel an interest in the Independence Manufacturing and Mercantile Company, we beg to say that on account of an almost unexpected heavy trade in our planing mill and lumber yard, we have, in order to meet the demand, increased our capital from $25,000 to $50,000 and now offer stock in shares from $10 up.

We certainly think money so invested will earn from ten to fifteen per cent and at the same time aid in building up and establishing permanent industries of our own, also furnish labor to the unemployed.

Shall not the children of the kingdom be as wise as the children of the world?

Send all remittances to A. R. White, Independence, Missouri.

ELLIS SHORT, President.
A. R. WHITE, Secretary.

19-4t

Herald Office Publications.

All books are sold by numbers. Send numbers only. Send all orders and make all remittances payable to Herald Publishing House, Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County Iowa.

MINISTRY BLANK REPORTS.
209. Per dozen . . . . . 10

REORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
201. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 60

NEW TRACTS.

No. 36. Can Belief Alone Save? Per dozen 10c.

No. 208. Teachings in Contrast. The teachings of the Utah Church and the Reorganization in parallel columns. Per dozen 15c.

No. 209. The Church of Jesus Christ. Where is it? How shall I know it? There are many churches of men; only the one church of Christ. Price, per dozen 20c., $1.50 per 100

No. 5. The Latter Day Saints; Who Are They? Dozen 20c.

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Interest Never Sleeps.

It works while you sleep like a silent partner.
If you have any money that is not earning interest, write at once to the oldest established bank in Lamoni.

The Commercial Bank,
D. F. Nicholson, Cashier. LAMONI, IOWA.

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.
Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

EBELING-RIGGLE DEBATE.

Subject: The Kingdom of God.
A book of 492 pages bound in cloth . . . . . 50 cents

THE OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL.

By Elder Joseph Luff.
A book of nineteen sermons on vital gospel subjects. Makes a good missionary. $1.00

EXEGESIS OF THE PRIESTHOOD.

This book is a compilation of scripture on the priesthood and the duties of the various officers in the priesthood. Every church officer should have one $1.00

Business Men, Elders, and Other Latter Day Saint Friends

We buy old typewriters, rebuild them, and make them practically new, and sell from $10 up. Write us for our special bargain list just out

Sherman Art Company
1224 Congress St., 17r4t Chicago

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
LAMONI - - IOWA

EUSEBIUS' ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

226. Each . . . . . 1 50

The Saints' Herald

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

M. Flora Scott

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, June 1, 1904

Number 22

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR
 I. A. SMITH . . . . . ASSISTANT EDITOR
 FRED'K M. SMITH . . . . . CORRESPONDING EDITOR
 Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
A Word About Graceland - - - - -	497
Press Week at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition - - - - -	498
Original Articles:
An Examination of "Campbellism" - - - - -	501
Selected Articles:
Civilization of the Incas - - - - -	508
Mothers' Home Column:
Admonition - - - - -	510
The Law of God is the Law of Love - - - - -	511
Half Hours With Parents and Teachers.—No. 3 - - - - -	511
Sunday-School Department:
To-Day - - - - -	512
Children's Day - - - - -	512
Our Department - - - - -	513
The Great World Sunday-School Convention - - - - -	513
A Few Hints on Order - - - - -	513
Letter Department:
Letters - - - - -	514
Extracts from Letters - - - - -	517
Miscellaneous Department:
Pastoral:
John W. Rushton - - - - -	518
H. A. McCoy - - - - -	518
D. M. Rudd - - - - -	519
The Bishopric - - - - -	519

Editorial.

A WORD ABOUT GRACELAND.

While it may be true that the maintenance of an institution of learning like Graceland is or ought to be, is not a part of the general missionary work, it has a relationship to the general usefulness of those who study within its walls who may be members of the Church in this sense, that we are under the injunction to study and become acquainted with men, countries, philosophies, sciences, etc., which are common to mankind generally, and thus prepare for taking places in the great conflict among men of the world. Nothing can be lost by systematic study; in fact, the discipline of the school is largely essential unto the final success of men in any and every walk of life. There has been and is yet a strong prejudice among the Saints toward a school instituted and fostered for the especial work of preparing men for the ministry. We share in this prejudice, but while doing so we are strongly in favor of men acquiring a general knowledge in certain directions by which they may be disciplined in thought and word, in order that they may be more effective workers in any way they may choose to direct their talents and their time.

The present outlook for the success of Graceland may seem to be unfortunate, and yet we are not inclined to be pessimistic in regard to it. We believe that the conclusions reached by the committee appointed by Conference have been reached after careful consideration of all the conditions within and without the College proper, and the decision following looking to the collection of sufficient means to continue is a just one. It should be the pleasure of every man and woman who can possibly aid this effort to do so.

It seems to us that the large minority who voted for the continuation of the College ought to be willing now to fortify their opinion by the advancement of so much of their means as they can possibly spare to make their hope good. We say this without reference to the idea of it being a duty. It is a matter of voluntary action, to be governed by the individual judgment, and the sense in which it becomes a duty is that in the general apportionment of the amount which each district may fairly be asked to meet gives it the nature of a sectional pride to meet any honorable demand made in the premises.

The sum total of the entire debt, including cost of erection, etc., is too small to daunt us as a people. We should be neither fearful nor discouraged. The total debt was lessened to some degree, as shown by the last report. A corresponding effort would continue to lessen it and will entirely liquidate it in time. It is very clear that the conclusion is correct that the cost of liquidating the obligations already incurred for the running expenses of the incoming year, should the college be closed, would very nearly equal the amount to be expended to carry the school to the end of the year, and therefore it is the better policy to continue. The committee was appointed by the Conference in good faith, and their action should be taken for what it is, a fair endeavor to meet the exigency of the occasion. Whatever disability we may feel it imposes upon us as a body ought to be cheerfully endured and the burden honorably borne. The resolution presented by the Quorum of Twelve after the vote looking to the closing of the College had been taken, clearly indicates that that body favors the continuation of the educational institution if it can be done in compatibility of our other burden, and indicates that they are willing the experiment should be tried. At all events we so understand it, and with them favor the running of the college if it can be done.

It also appears that the reason assigned by them in the resolution which they offered and which prevailed was a care for the credit and financial good name of the Church, and not that they had any prejudice against an institution of learning. We are impressed with the thought that the Reorganized Church ought to maintain either at Lamoni or elsewhere an institution of the kind; and while we regret any mistakes that may have occurred through which the enterprise may have been considered premature or unfortunate, we can not as yet believe that it was an ill-advised move. We are quite willing to bear our proportionate share of whatever blame should attach for misconception of the idea or inefficiency in carrying it out; and if we were able financially, we would be more than willing to meet every deficit and discharge every financial obligation, whether the doors of Graceland should be kept open or closed.

There are other institutions which we believe the Church should have in contemplation and sooner or later have them carried into effect. For instance, the Church should have an infirmary or sanitarium located in some healthy site, where our people who are ill with chronic ailments, or who may be in need of hospital treatment and who have not the personal means to pay for attention and care necessary to their situation, could be looked after and receive the treatment which the Church believes in, administration, careful nursing, as provided for in the law, together with such surgical treatment as the absolute necessities of cases might demand. Such an institution as this is a growing necessity for the Church; and in the absence of such we are under the necessity of sending our patients to the hospitals, homes, and other places which the world provides, at the expense of being thought derelict in our religious duty. This conclusion of course is not correct, as we are simply compelled by circumstances over which we have no control to make use of such means as are afforded us by the society in which we live.

We are of the opinion that numbers of our sick if they could be given good hospital treatment of their own kind in faith under sanitary conditions similar to what we find in the best institutions of the kind in the country, would be saved from their ailments and become healthy and useful in their turn. We make the suggestion, and hope it may find continuation.

It is not amiss to suggest further: Some of the eldership have sons at home who possibly by reason of the absence of their fathers in the field as missionaries have found their stay at home irksome and have drifted away from the control of their mothers and acquired habits injurious if not fatal to usefulness in the necessary labor which they should perform in order to do their part as men in the battle of life. If these are sent away from home, it must be to the reform schools of the county and State, or to institutions furnished by other churches where proper restraints are put upon those intrusted to their care. There ought to be, in connection with the enterprise referred to above, some place provided where among ourselves we could take care of those who need such care. Each State has its institutions designed to help the home and necessarily to help the State. There are reform schools, orphan and half-orphan asylums, hospitals, asylums for the insane and feeble-minded, and these are open to the Saints in the localities where they live, and at times it becomes necessary for them to make use of them. There should be no hesitancy in doing so in time to prevent serious mischief following neglect thereof; for necessarily we are in the world, and so far of it that we are privileged to make use of its best auxiliaries to life, its development and well-being.

We believe now as we have believed for many years that we ought to assume the responsibility of carrying on an institution of learning maintained by the Church; and if Graceland is not what it ought to be it should be made so, or an institution be established elsewhere that will fill the requisite measure of usefulness.

Let us take heart of grace and continue until the Master says, Come home. We have referred to it, and we refer to it again, that it seems to us that there ought to be some man or men who may be blessed with a fair degree of this world's goods who would be willing to endow Graceland with a few thousand dollars for running expenses until it should attain a celebrity and a support which would make it no longer necessary to ask voluntary contributions. It may follow, however, that if we give it its best usefulness Graceland will need to be patronized by children of the Saints as students to whom it should be the pleasure of the institution to give free tuition. This also is worthy of consideration.

---

THE work at Pana, Illinois, has received attention in the columns of the Sunday News of that place. Among other things the article says: "If they were polygamous Mormons, who are criminal violators of law, they would receive little encouragement in even this 'land of liberty,' not on account of their religion, but on account of their criminal practices."

PRESS WEEK AT THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION.

The eyes of the world are at present centered upon the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis, as one of the "victories of Peace" "no less renowned than [the victories of] war." The management of the great Fair has for years been promising that this exposition would exceed in magnitude any the world had previously seen. That the boast will be made good is apparent to every observing visitor. What the Fair is has been loconically but emphatically summed up by Sir Hugh Gilzean-Reid in the words: "The world's wonder."

Because it is a world's wonder, and because of its importance as one of the "victories of Peace," it is a matter of no astonishment that thousands of editors should avail themselves of the opportunity to be on the Fair grounds during "Press week," from June 16 to 21. Special arrangements for the entertainment of the press had been made for that week, and newspaper men from all the world over accepted the invitation to participate in the great World's Press Parliament and see this the greatest of World's Fairs.

On Sunday noon, May 15, wife and I started from Lamoni, going to Burlington, Iowa, over the Burlington Railway. Various newspaper men got on the train enroute, till by the time we reached Burlington there was quite a party. Through the courtesy of the Burlington and Pullman companies, the Iowa Press Association officers had arranged for a special car to take a large party of Iowa editors from Burlington to St. Louis, and when we reached Burlington the car was awaiting us. A comfortable night's ride put us in St. Louis on time, and the party soon repaired to the Exposition grounds.

The Iowa Building was our first rendezvous, where we found a hearty welcome. It is prominently located among the State buildings, and is a source of pride to all Iowans who visit it. Its outward architectural design is of the French Renaissance, very pleasing yet simple. We were told it was a happy combination of the styles of the old State capitol at Iowa City and the magnificent capitol at Des Moines. The interior is as pleasing as the exterior, and the pleasantness of the well-furnished building makes the visiting Iowan speedily feel at home. This "at home" feeling is enhanced by the cordiality of those in charge of the building, from Ex-governor Larabee down. The secretary of the commission, Mr. Conaway, assisted by his wife, hostess of the building, did everything possible to make the visit of the Iowa editors and their wives pleasant. Iowans visiting the Fair will, we can assure them, find warm and cordial welcome at the pleasant Iowa building.

Nearly all day Monday the rain fell more or less steadily, so not much could be done in the way of seeing the Fair; however, we were all duly "tagged" or labelled to indicate what particular part of the world the party was from, then given our press credentials and the liberties of the ground.

As it would be necessary for us to have some place to lodge, we looked up the home of Bro. and Sr. Arthur Burgess, and found very comfortable quarters for our stay.

To tell just where we were and what we did would be of little interest to our readers. We tried to see as much of the Fair as possible, and found it so big, so grand, that the week afforded us only fleeting glimpses of the much to be seen. So we shall only attempt to tell of the Exposition as a whole, and such details as were of particular interest to us or of general interest to readers of the HERALD.

St. Louis some years ago became possessed of the desire to celebrate in some fitting way the event which gave to the United States a vast and fabulously rich territory without the shedding of a drop of blood. Plans were discussed and a "World's Fair" was decided upon. With the idea of producing the "biggest yet" the enterprise was launched. A splendid corps of officers, with D. R. Francis at their head, began the arduous task. Forest Park, a beautiful natural forest tract in the western part of the city, was secured, hundreds of trees were cut down to make room for the large structures to be erected, and hundreds of men and teams were put to work to build the fairy-land of ivory-white palaces, beautiful driveways, refreshing lagoons and waterways, and delicious garden spots of plants and flowers. With zest the commissioners went at their work, going to all parts of the world in pursuit of their tasks. Over fifty nations have responded to the invitation to participate, and have made displays costing over seven millions of dollars. A good-natured rivalry on the part of over fifty nations, each striving to show proofs that it excels in the arts and products of peace. What a pleasant contrast this to the sanguinary contest of the nations struggling in the far East.

At the Columbian Exposition in 1893 at Chicago, an enterprise, by the way, so stupendous as to startle the world and set a new pace for "world's fairs," six hundred and thirty-three acres were used for the purposes of the exposition, and two hundred acres of it were under roof. The Louisiana Purchase Exposition grounds cover an area of twelve hundred and forty acres and over two hundred and fifty acres are under roof. The principal exhibit palaces at St. Louis cover an area of one hundred and twenty-eight acres, while the Columbian Exposition buildings devoted to the same purposes covered an area of about eighty-two acres. At the Pan-American Exposition, held at Buffalo, the combined exhibit buildings covered an area of fifteen and one tenth acres, a less space than is covered by the roof of the Transportation Building alone at St. Louis. The Palace of Agriculture at St. Louis covers an area sixteen hundred feet in length and five hundred feet wide,—twenty acres. To walk around the outside of it requires a walk of more than three fourths of a mile. All the floor space available for exhibits is taken, and the aggregate of exhibits in the building will constitute the finest and greatest display of agricultural products and implements ever seen.

The foregoing will give some idea of the size of the Exposition. In design as a whole it is harmonious and grand. Festival Hall stands on an eminence, and from it to the east and west run the Colonnade of States, each arm terminating in pavilions. Adown the hill, springing from each pavilion and Festival Hall, tumble the beautiful cascades, beautiful in design even when the water is not playing, exquisitely grand when in operation. Below Festival Hall and the Colonnade of States, to the north and northeast, are spread out, in fan shape, the magnificent exhibition palaces. So grand, so beautifully harmonious is the ensemble as one views the ivory-white buildings from Festival Hall, that the imaginative ones exclaim, "Fairy-land!" It is beautiful beyond description as the sunlight plays gently on the soft whiteness of the grand expanse of buildings, but when one stands on the eminence as the sun sinks into the horizon and twilight steals into the enchanted spot the scene becomes sublime. But a scene of beauty even more striking begins when suddenly above one's head the thousands of incandescent lamps on Festival Hall begin to glow in response to the pulsating electric current. Then the lights on the Colonnade of States and the East and West Pavilions glow out from the darkness, and in response to the deftly manipulated switches in Machinery Hall, palace after palace below become once more sharply outlined by light from thousands and thousands of lamps. Darkness is scattered, and streets, driveways, lagoons, plazas, and sunken gardens are brilliantly lighted. The illumination is a marked feature of the Fair.

Everywhere statuary greets the eye. The architectural beauty of the building is set off by groups of statuary allegorical in design. The lover of architecture is here in his glory. Almost every style is seen, sometimes in nearby contrast. Great as the confusion may appear to the casual observer, yet the pleasing harmony of the whole tells of carefully executed designs. We are told that in the sculpture line alone there are more than one thousand figures in two hundred and fifty groups, the materialized artistic fancies of one hundred American sculptors.

Art is not depended upon entirely to beautify the Exposition. Nature, that lavish but eccentric beautifier, is called upon to do her best, assisted by the most skillful gardeners of the world. The gardens of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition will be world-widely famous. Far abler pens than mine have tried in vain to depict the grandeur of the St. Louis fair, and have not done it justice. To be comprehended it must be seen.

(Continued next week.)

---

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Alma C. Barmore forwards clippings from the Brisbane Daily Mail, an editorial on Mormons and polygamy, in which some misstatements were made, and a correction by the brother in a later issue. In a still later issue a writer, signing himself "Traveler," replies to Bro. Barmore's "A Mormon in defense," and Bro. Barmore was allowed to reply at length to the same. He was inclined to handle "Traveler" rather roughly, but was perhaps justified in doing so, as "Traveler" did not seem to know much about Mormonism.

Mr. Garrett P. Servis, astronomer, writes for the Chicago Examiner, telling of a star which is "a thousand times as luminous as our sun," Arcturus by name, which is placed at such a distance that it appears but little brighter than other stars. He writes as follows: "One reason, perhaps, why people neglect the stars is because they do not stop when they see them to think what they are. But wait a moment and ponder on the fact that in the light of Arcturus billions of intelligent beings may be living upon worlds both greater and more beautiful than this of ours. . . . And there lies the meaning of the miracle displayed over our heads on these beautiful May nights. It means that life is everywhere, and that however far we might wander through the universe we should yet find no place where we would be utter strangers. Nature may present many features under the light of Arcturus differing from those that she presents under the light of the sun, but at the bottom all is the same."

Bro. Judson Cable writes from Norwalk, Connecticut, that the Broad River Saints have paid off all indebtedness on their church and they are greatly encouraged. They hope to have it dedicated soon, and hope "to continue with a zeal and work upward and onward in the faith."

Bro. J. T. Hackett, who, as lately published, was appointed to Pennsylvania, notifies the Presidency that having taken up other employment before notice of appointment reached him, it will be impossible for him to take the mission assigned until September or after. The appointment will therefore be cancelled for the reason assigned. Those who may have been interested in the appointment of Bro. Hackett will please take notice, as he does not wish any misunderstanding about it.

Original Articles.

AN EXAMINATION OF "CAMPBELLISM."

BY ELDER R. C. EVANS.

(Concluded.)

It is not our purpose to discuss the question of the Roman Catholic or Protestant church authority, nor to defend the ministry against the Campbellite attack, nor to discuss the mode or essentiality of water baptism. The main purpose of this paper is to show by the writings of Alexander Campbell and his people that in their books, sermons, and church papers, they denounce all churches as either the work of man or Devil. That there is no salvation outside of the "one body," the Campbellite Church. The reader may think that it is too strong to say that the statements made by Campbellites and recorded in this paper show that they teach that no person can be saved unless he is baptized by a Campbellite into the "one body," the Campbellite sect. Our reason for saying this is, they claim that all the churches are unauthorized of God, churches of men; that no one is a Christian, no one is pardoned or born again, unless he has been immersed by a Christian. And since one not a Christian, not "born again," not baptized has no authority to baptize, therefore the only one authorized to baptize is a Campbellite.

One may say the Baptist ministry immerse their followers. True, but we have shown that the Campbellite Church regards the Baptist clergy as of "an adulterous brood," and the Baptist Church, "a relic of popery" (Christian Baptist, p. 15), and hence not the "one body." And further we have shown that according to the statements made by Mr. Campbell and others of his sect as Baptists preach and believe that water baptism is not for the "remission of sins," not "regeneration," not "conversion," therefore it is not Christian baptism that is practiced by the Baptist Church.

We present one more quotation, in proof of the position taken, that Campbellites regard the clergy of the Baptist Church as not converted, and that the Baptist Church is only a human institution.

I was now glad to inform them that Elder Logan (a Baptist minister) was about converted, and at the same rate of advancement he was making since last evening, that he would soon be a member of the church of Christ,—a divine institution—leaving a human institution which was unauthorized by God's inspired word.—Elder James J. Thompson [Tomson] in Popplewell's Primitive Christianity, vol. 2, p. 8.

We present another quotation from the pen of Alexander Campbell:

Now if our baptism is for any other end or purpose than was that to which Paul submitted, it is another baptism, as much as bathing for health is different from a Jewish ablution for legal uncleanness or impurity. The action has a meaning and a design; and it must be received in that meaning and for that design, else it is another baptism.—Campbell-Rice Debate, p. 439.

According to the Campbellite creed, they believe in the restriction of communion, or, in other words, in "close communion," that is, that none are worthy of the Lord's supper, until they have been immersed for the remission of sins. A conference, held in Richmond, Virginia, in 1866, drew up and subscribed to an article on baptism which ran thus:

Christian baptism is the immersion in water of a penitent believer into the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, for the remission of sins; and is a prerequisite to church membership, and to a participation of the Lord's supper. See Religious Herald, of Richmond, May 3, 1894; also footnote in Disciples and Baptists, by Reverend F. Adkins, p. 54.

In the year 1835, Mr. Campbell had a correspondence with William Jones, a distinguished Baptist minister of London, England. Mr. Jones proposed the following question, Do any of your churches admit unbaptized persons to communion; a practice that is becoming very prevalent in this country? To this query Mr. Campbell replied, "Not one, as far as known to me. I am at a loss to understand on what principles—by what law, precedent, or license, any congregation founded upon the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone, could dispense with the practice of the primitive church—with the commandment of the Lord, and the authority of his apostles. Does not this look like making void the word or commandment of God, by human tradition? I know not how I could exhort one professor to 'arise and be baptized' as Ananias commanded Saul, and at the same time receive another into the congregation without it. Nay, why not dispense with it altogether, and be consistent."—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 6, p. 18.

But we are met with this statement: "Many of the Campbellite sect permit the unbaptized to partake of the Lord's supper with them," and further than that, "Mr. Campbell at times received to the communion those who were not immersed."—Campbell-Rice Debate, p. 785.

All we care to say to this is, If Campbell and his people honestly believed that no one was "a Christian," "born again," "pardoned," "converted," "regenerated," until he was "immersed for the remission of sins," then he and they prove themselves guilty of the charge this paper prefers against them, namely, that they, as a sect, are deceptive, fickle, and hypocritical, in inviting or permitting the "unregenerated" and "unbaptized" to the holy communion. There is no escape from this conclusion, that in every point, they prove themselves unworthy the respect of frank, honorable people.

The Campbellite sect repudiates all theories of special spiritual operations outside of the word, that the word is the Spirit's influence—the only influence the Holy Spirit ever does or can employ in the conversion of the soul. (See Christianity Restored, p. 346-365.)

Mr. Campbell and his followers have held up to ridicule the religious experience of those who have claimed to be wrought upon by the Holy Spirit, but we will let them speak for themselves:

While they can, as they conceit, thank God that they are not like other men, they are very happy; but when this fancied excellency disappears, the glad tidings afford no consolation:

anguish and distress have come upon them. This, with some of the spiritual doctors, is a good symptom too: for, say they, "if you do not doubt we will doubt for you." When they have worked them into despondency, they minister a few opiates, and assure them that they are in a safe and happy state, now they are to rejoice, because they are sorrowful; now they are to feel very good because they feel so very bad. This is the orthodox "Christian experience." This is the genuine work of the Holy Spirit.—Christian Baptist, p. 138.

Query, Was Alexander Campbell an honest man when he wrote the above sarcastic misrepresentation of "the genuine work of the Holy Spirit"? To say nothing about his being converted, saved, pardoned, regenerated, was he even an honest, earnest man?

Now we will hear from two or three of his followers:

The pretention that men of this day, unendued and uninspired, receive testimony directly from the Spirit; experience "pentecostal showers," hear a "still small voice," etc., is a preposterous assumption equaled only by the pope! When the last inspired man laid down his pen, then revelation ceased. Not another word has man ever heard from the Spirit, nor will he till the trumpet sounds: it is not necessary. "His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness."—2 Peter, 1: 3. . . . And the prophet could say, "The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul, the testimony of the Lord is sure making wise the simple."—Psalm 19:7. —Our Distinctive Plea, by Doctor. J. C. Holloway.

We wish to notice just two points in the foregoing: First. No one in this or any other age of the world's history ever claimed to "receive testimony directly from the Spirit," or to experience a "pentecostal shower" (the gift of tongues) when unendued or uninspired. The point this writer desired to make was that no man has been endued or inspired since the time of the apostles. Second. The reason for reaching such a conclusion is found in the quotations from 2 Peter 1: 3 and Psalm 19: 7, as quoted above. Let us see: If because "the law of the Lord is perfect" in the time of David, and "his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness" in the days of Peter; if this is proof that God would cease to pour out his Spirit, as promised to his children, then it proves that from the days of King David, God has not spoken because the law being perfect then, according to the Campbellite idea, he would speak no more. This position removes much of the Old and all of the New Testament from the word of God, but we pass over the point they try to make from the statement made by King David, and go down to the time Peter wrote the words, "His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness." If this means that God would no more speak to his people, then that which Peter and John wrote after the time referred to by Peter is not the word of God. The fact is the Campbellite position is unscriptural, misleading, and God-dishonoring. God's promises to impart the Holy Spirit to the believer still stand and will. All may fully trust in the fulfillment of the words, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Surely the Campbellite gospel, of word only, is not the one that Paul preached, when he said, "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost and in much assurance."—1 Thessalonians 1: 5.

This theory, by which Mr. Campbell and his followers belittle spirit baptism and spiritual experiences as promised in the Bible, and in their mad desire to give prominence to water baptism and make it about all there is to Christianity, is further exemplified in a "sermon preached by Elder F. Osborn, of the Church of Christ, near McDonald, Kansas, and submitted for publication by request of brethren," entitled "Holy Spirit baptism and water baptism." We select a few statements from said sermon:

5. Holy Spirit baptism was for the apostolic age, and passed away with it. . . . 13. In Holy Spirit baptism there is no birth, new or old, whereas in water baptism there is a new birth. . . . 14. There was no regeneration in Holy Spirit baptism. The apostles were regenerated when John baptized them. . . . 15. Holy Spirit baptism had nothing to do with salvation; water baptism had. . . . 18. Those who were baptized with the Holy Spirit were already sanctified, but all believers under the gospel as given by the apostles had to be sanctified by water baptism. Published in Christian Leader, May 25, 1897.

The above is the Campbellite position regarding water baptism and spirit baptism, so well told that the brethren had it published.

We can not leave this subject without giving a few quotations from Clark Braden:

Persons might as well claim the power to create a world, as to claim baptism in the Holy Spirit. All such unscriptural, visionary ideas that leave an open door for fanaticism and folly and have cursed the world with the most infamous delusions and crimes, should be abandoned.—Braden-Kelley Debate, p. 13.

It is a fact that has puzzled many persons, that almost invariably claims of direct influence of the Spirit, inspiration and miraculous power, sanctification and holiness end in infamous lewdness. Let one examine a history of the various parties and sects that have arisen in human history, that have claimed this direct influence as a constant influence of their followers and have laid special claims to revelations, inspiration, holiness, sanctification, second blessing, higher life, and in every instance delusion, fanaticism, crime and especially lewdness have attended them. . . . There is not a church that believes in this direct and immediate influence, that has not had trouble with infamies and pollutions growing out of it. . . . Then we repeat that the most dangerous delusion that has ever cursed the church has been this vagary of a direct and immediate influence of the Spirit. It has been the Pandora's box out of which has come only delusion, fanaticism, and pollution. The polygamy of Mormonism is its last and foulest product, but it is the legitimate fruit of the orthodox dogma of direct and miraculous influence of the Spirit. . . . No believer in the keynote of orthodoxy, direct, miraculous influence of the Spirit, can meet a Mormon in discussion.—Braden-Kelley Debate, pp. 268-270.

We regard the above, from the lips of Clark Braden, the most infamous slander upon the work of the Holy Spirit promised by the Savior that we have ever read. The idea that the power that leads and inspires men and women to "holiness," "sanctification," higher life, is attended, "in every instance," by "delusion, fanaticism, crime, and especially lewdness." That the belief in the promise: "Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, for the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call," resulted in the practice of polygamy in the Utah Mormon Church. That polygamy is "the legitimate fruit of the orthodox dogma"! This slander upon Christianity deserves the combined censure of the Christian world.

We shall now show from another standpoint the unreliable nature of the claims of Alexander Campbell and his sect. They have denounced, with much bitterness, every benevolent or religious association, such as missionary societies, Sunday-schools, Bible and tract societies, declaring them to be the "marks of the beast"; but we shall permit them to speak for themselves. Speaking of the primitive churches he says:

They had no monthly concerts for prayer; no solemn convocations, no great fasts, nor preparation, nor thanksgiving days. Their churches were not fractured into missionary societies, Bible societies, education societies; nor did they dream of organizing such in the world. The head of a believing household was not in those days a president or manager of a board of foreign missions; his wife the president of some female education society; his eldest son the recording secretary of some domestic Bible society; his eldest daughter a tutoress of a Sunday-school. They knew nothing of these hobbies of modern times. In their church capacity alone they moved. . . . They dare not transfer to a missionary society, or Bible society, or education society, a cent or a prayer, least in so doing they should rob the church of its glory, and exalt the inventions of men above the wisdom of God; in their church capacity alone they moved.—Christian Baptist, p. 6.

Our objections to the missionary plan originated from the conviction that it is unauthorized in the New Testament; and that, in many instances, it is a system of iniquitous speculation and speculation. I feel perfectly able to maintain both the one and the other of these positions. . . . Indeed, I think, we have few men of any information, who would come forward openly to defend the plan of saving the world by means of money and science; of converting pagans by funds raised indirectly from spinning-wheels, fruit-stalls, corn-fields, melon-patches, potato-lots, rags, children's playthings, and religious newspapers, consecrated to missionary purposes. . . . By sending out men to preach begging sermons, and to tell the people of A's missionary patch of potatoes producing twice as much per acre, as those destined for himself and children; of B's uncommon crop of missionary wheat, a part of which he covetously alienated from the missionary to himself, and as a judgement upon him, his cow broke into his barn and ate of it until she killed herself; of E's missionary sheep having each yeaned two lambs a piece, while his own only yeaned him one a piece and a variety of other miracles wrought in favor of the missionary fund. I say, what man of good common sense and of reasonable mind, would come forward to defend a scheme of converting the world by such means, and by the means of that very "vain philosophy" and "science falsely so-called" condemned by the apostles?—Christian Baptist, pp. 53, 54.

I honestly confess that the popular clergy and their schemes appear to me fraught with mischief to the temporal and eternal interests of men. . . . How has their influence spoiled the best gifts of heaven to men? Civil liberty has always fallen beneath their sway—inalienable rights of men have been wrested from their hands—and even the very margin of the Bible polluted with their inventions, their rabbinical dreams and whimsical nonsense. The Bible can not be disseminated without their appendages, and if children are taught to read in a Sunday-school, their pockets must be filled with religious tracts, the object of which is either directly or indirectly to bring them under the domination of some creed or sect. Even the distribution of the Bible to the poor must be followed up by those tracts. . . . It is on this account that I have for some time viewed both "Bible societies," and "Sunday-schools," as a sort of recruiting establishments to fill up the ranks of those sects which take the lead in them.—Christian Baptist, p. 80.

The Baptists, too, have got their schools, their colleges, and their Gamaliels, too—and by the magic of the marks of the beast, they claim homage and respect, and dispute the high places with those very rabbies whose fathers were wont to grin at their fathers.—Millennial Harbinger, Vol. 1 p. 15.

Just think of these vacillating and hypocritical people! Only a few years after the above tirade of abuse was hurled at every church, preacher, Bible society, tract society, Sunday-school, missionary society, and college, the Campbellite sect had adopted all those methods of religious work; and to cap the climax, Alexander Campbell, the man who led the attack against these societies,—the man who penned the above abusive language, was made president of the Bethany college in West Virginia.

When writing against the missionary work, Mr. Campbell penned these words: "The Bible gives us no idea of a missionary without the power of working miracles; miracles and missionaries are inseparably connected in the New Testament."—Christian Baptist, p. 15.

Now that they have missionaries, we ask, Do the missionaries receive power to work miracles? The answer is, No, our gospel is in word only. We have no spiritual gifts; these were only given as toys in the childish days of early Christianity. We Campbellites are full grown men and women. We require no divine assistance, no spiritual grace. The word, or what suits us of it, and plenty of water, will do us.

One branch of the Campbellite sect still holds to the above views as expressed by Mr. Campbell, regarding the sinfulness of Sunday-schools, of which the following is proof: After quoting the Ohio Penitentiary News, wherein it is stated that "eighty per cent of those three hundred and seventeen convicted persons sent to the penitentiary during three months, last referred to, were persons who had attended Sunday-school for from five to forty years," Mr. Will W. D. Taylor proceeds to try and prove that the Sunday-school is "neither a cure for, nor a preventive of crime. The Sunday-school, like everything else that has originated in the mind of man, and is used as an improvement on God's plan of teaching the people, is a failure, and always will be a failure."—Gospel Echo, September 3, 1896.

To show that these matters are still live issues between the Church of Christ and the Christian Church (the reader will remember that the above titles represent two of the many divisions of this quarreling people, the Campbellites—the "one body"), we submit a proposition for public debate between two "reformers" each claiming that the other is not sufficiently reformed. One is the editor of the Gospel Messenger and the other is editor of the Oregon Missionary Record. The proposition reads as follows:

Societies, such as the "Foreign Christian Missionary Society," "the General Christian Missionary Society," "the Christian Women's Board of Missions," "the Oregon Christian Missionary Society," and the "Sunday-school," are unauthorized by the Holy Scriptures, diversive in their effects and are therefore sinful.

W. W. STONE affirms.

J. B. LESTER denies.

—Gospel Messenger, April, 1896.

We have heard of Campbellites trying to impress the members of secret societies with the thought that they indorsed such societies, but in this, like other matters already exposed, they are guilty of cunning deceptions that are disgusting. From Mr. Campbell down to their present representative men, we shall furnish the proof of this duplicity.

Why Christians in the nineteenth century should, after they had tasted the sweet influences and blessings of the kingdom of heaven, seek admission through all the pledges, oaths, and obligations of secrecy, into the societies of Free Masons and Odd Fellows, is rather a difficult and perplexing problem.—Millennial Harbinger, 1842, p. 557.

This subject must be discussed. Thousands call for it. All the confederations among Christians with Turks, Jews, and Atheists are, in our opinion, anathematized by Heaven, and are just as useless to the church as to state—fit only for darker times—for ages of knight-errantry, witchcraft, and the Abracadabra—Ibid., 1845, p. 135.

I simply affirm that no Christian man is under any sort of obligation to join any of them; nay, that he can not as a Christian become a member of any one of them, without dishonoring the church of Jesus Christ, or himself, or the founder of it.—Ibid., 1848.

Mr. Campbell, when speaking of Free Masons, Odd Fellows, and Sons of Temperance societies, said, "All mixed communion in religion with the world, under any pretense whatever, is spiritual adultery, or fornication, according to my Bible."—Ibid., 1848, p. 309.

Later he wrote: "Nay, indeed the conviction grows deeper that Christians dishonor rather than honor the church and its founder, by accepting of membership in any one of the three fraternities, (Masons, Odd Fellows, and Sons of Temperance.)"—Ibid., 1849, p. 116.

The foregoing quotations, with many others of like character, were republished in a Campbellite paper, called the Gospel Messenger, February, 1896, and indorsed by the editor.

Some may say, "But many Campbellites are now members of those very societies." Perhaps so, but it only proves they are not sound in the Campbellite faith, or else it's their old game of policy, and "wolf in sheep's clothing" scheme.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL A SLAVEHOLDER.

E. V. Smalley, a son of one of Mr. Campbell's converts, writing of Alexander Campbell and the sect of which he was the founder, records the following brief history regarding Mr. Campbell and his connection with slavery:

Bethany was in a slave State, and thousands of Campbell's converts in Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Missouri, were slaveholders. When pressed for his own views on the rightfulness of slavery, Campbell answered in his Millennial Harbinger, that inasmuch as slavery existed among the Jews and was not forbidden by God it could not be sinful for Christians to hold slaves. Thereupon a large number of antislavery disciples left the church, and were stigmatized as "Comeouters." . . . My father was a "Comeouter" and kept a station on the "underground railroad." . . . To be a "Comeouter" was at that time as unpopular as to be an infidel.—The Sunday Times-Herald, February 23, 1896.

In a tract written by Jerome A. Scott, entitled, A Brief Sketch of Alexander Campbell, is the following, on pages 37 and 38, concerning Mr. Campbell's experience in Edinburgh, Scotland:

The Scotch Anti-Slavery Society having deputed three persons hostile to Mr. Campbell, to elicit his views on the slavery question, they approached him in a friendly manner, and without stating their object, they obtained his views. In a short time they had posted in public places, placards, bearing the following inscription: "Citizens of Edinburgh—Beware! Beware! The Reverend Alexander Campbell of Virginia, United States of America, has been a slaveholder himself, and is still a defender of manstealers."

We may remark that Mr. Scott during his defence of Mr. Campbell, makes several admissions, all of which prove that the Scotch Anti-Slavery Society was not far astray in their charge against Mr. Campbell. He admits: 1. A committee of three waited on Mr. Campbell, "to elicit his views on the slavery question." 2. "They obtained his views on the question." 3. "They approached him in a friendly way." 4. The placards told the facts. (See the admission.) 5. "Mr. Campbell had owned slaves." 6. Mr. Campbell "not only conceded that the Scriptures did not expressly prohibit the holding of slaves, but on the other hand prescribed the duties of the slave to his master, and of the master to the slave."

All the above, taken with the testimony of our former witness, Mr. Smalley, proves that Mr. Campbell believed in and practiced the inhuman traffic in human slavery; and it is in evidence, in authentic history, that he and his sect persecuted with the most inveterate hatred those who denounced slavery, saying, "One hour of virtuous liberty is worth a whole lifetime of slavery."

We willingly record the fact stated by Mr. Scott in the sketch from which we quoted, "that Mr. Campbell had set his slaves at liberty." Public sentiment became too strong and the law of the country too strict for him to keep them. To cover up the shame he felt, it is admitted, as stated in the sketch, that he finally "denounced the institution of slavery, and favored emancipation." Yes, when it became policy to do so. Till then he was a slaveholder and stigmatized those who defended the cause of human liberty as "comeouters."

Before we leave this part of the subject, we wish to show from the history of the above case in Scotland, that Campbell at once, upon seeing the placard referred to, rushed into print, against one of the ministers of the Baptist Church, who was an active member of the antislavery movement. Whereupon the clergyman brought suit against Mr. Campbell for libel and to prevent Campbell's escape from Scotland had him arrested, and he was sent to prison. (See The Sketch, pp. 37, 38.)

Let us take a glance at a few more of the many-sided Campbellite sect.

As they lust after popularity they apostatize from Campbellism, and to-day the "one body" is divided and subdivided into many bodies. For the reformation has been reformed several times, and sects and parties have arisen in the Campbellite movement, each denouncing the other with the old time vigor once displayed against the evangelical churches. But let us repair at once to the Campbellite apartments, and listen to the family jars:

As to Bro. Campbell, he was a great and good man, but he was not inspired, and he made some mistakes, and none worse than failing to adopt the true worship—a thing he plainly taught—and establishing instead thereof this hireling priesthood, which has grown to be the most intolerant, impious, and proscriptive religious corporation on earth, not accepting the Roman hierarchy.—Christian Leader, (a Campbellite paper,) June 1, 1897.

Mr. Ellmore, editor of the Gospel Echo, has spent many years in the Campbellite front ranks. His son is now a Campbellite preacher, yet in writing the above arraignment of the Campbellite sect, he charges Campbell of "failing to adopt the true worship," of teaching one thing and practicing another, and the denunciation hurled against their ministry is as just as any one would demand.

Alexander Campbell spent fifty years of life trying to uproot an army of clergymen, but lo and behold, since the time of his death, which occurred in 1866, we have an army of clergymen in our midst as large and menacing as the one he fought against. The world is about to absorb our distinctive plea.—Editorial in Christian Leader, August 26, 1897.

The great reformation which never was perfect, and lacking in power commensurate with its imperfections, is now practically divided and subdivided. We have the "progressives" and the "loyal" and in each of these parties, there are minor parties.—Gospel Echo, August 13, 1896.

The writer has already, in this paper (the Gospel Echo), submitted articles for discussion between two sects of this "one body." Professor Clark Braden and Elder J. R. Roberts were advertized to hold a debate at Olney, Illinois, beginning February 3, 1903. Again the Church of Christ and the Christian Church will engage in deadly combat to see which is the "one body."

Mr. Braden was in Meaford, Ontario, this winter, trying to prove his was the simon pure article, but the other side would not even permit him to lecture in their church; so he lectured in a schoolhouse. There is the Christian Church, the Church of Christ, the Progressives, the Loyal, the Organ, and the Anti-Organ, the Sunday-School, and the anti-Sunday-school. But why continue? The Campbellite sects to-day, by reason of their divisions and quarreling, are a standing disgrace to the common cause, and a laughing-stock to infidelity. We will not leave this part of our paper till we have wrung from their own lips a further confession of their guilt:

I grow more and more discouraged regarding the future of the church. . . . This reformation can never restore the ancient gospel so long as we, like other religious organizations, are sailing, like comets, in an opposite direction from God's revealed will.—W. B. Wilson, in Christian Leader, September 15, 1893.

When Thomas and Alexander Campbell began the restoration, their design was to restore the church in creed, faith and practice to its native simplicity, but about the time they had restored the law of conversion, lo, the apostasy set in, and diverted them from their work, and the worship in its perfection was never established.—Gospel Echo, August 20, 1896, Editor Ellmore.

Alexander Campbell admits the above statement to be true; in fact, hear him, when speaking concerning his effort to pattern after the Church of Jesus Christ, as described in the New Testament:

We have to pattern after the first [church] as well as we can, but we can never equal it. With all our efforts the great disparity will ever remain, and could the apostles and primitive Christians be here, they would doubtless weep at beholding it.—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 5, p. 40.

Yea, Verily they would!

If there be a church among us, which both in faith and practice, has attained to the ideal New Testament church, which the Disciples claim as their model, we have not either seen it or heard of it.—Elder J. H. Garrison, editor of Christian Evangelist, p. 153, 1893.

A reformer to reform the reformation, may be a necessity in the very near future, and where is he? since prominent teachers dare the fathers.—Christian Leader, October 15, 1895.

Job said, "Oh . . . that mine adversary had written a book."—Job 31:35. If Job was deprived of his desire, surely the true worshipers of the meek and lowly Master, in the latter days, have had his desire in this regard; for the Campbellites, the great adversaries of the true church of Jesus Christ, have written books, sermons, and papers in which they have confessed their human origin, and have made manifest the unscriptural character of the theological hodge-podge, known as the Campbellite sect.

We will now show by a few brief statements from those who know the Campbellites best, that by reason of their false doctrine, they are unworthy of the respect of Christian people. The first work from which we quote is entitled, No Communion with Campbellites, written by Reverend A. P. Williams, D. D., author of the Lord's Supper, Campbellism Exposed, etc. This work comes highly recommended. It was originally prepared by special request of the ministers' and deacons' conference of the General Association of the state of Missouri, and read before that august body previous to publication, hence should be worthy of consideration.

In the work, the author submits a number of reasons why the Baptist Church should not commune with the Campbellites, but as we presume the work has been widely circulated and carefully read, and we do not wish to make this paper too lengthy, we submit just a few statements:

The next disqualification we have noticed is a schismatical spirit. The law on this subject (Romans 16: 17) applies with all its force against Campbellites. How many "divisions" have they caused in our churches? More seditious factionists have never had membership amongst us. Divide and conquer, was the motto on which they seemed to act. What Baptist church would they not now divide if they could? How do they herald the news if one of our members is caught in their theological meshes? And do they not cast stumbling-blocks (skandala) in the way of the unsuspecting amongst us? These questions, I am confident, must be answered in the affirmative. Then, what is our duty? Commune with them? Why the very suggestion is preposterous. No, the law says, "mark" and "avoid" them.—No Communion with Campbellites p. 34.

Only think of it! Campbellites and Baptists around the same communion table, and yet the former call the latter apostates; such a spectacle is horrifying.—Ibid., p. 42.

The ministry of the General Baptist Association, of the state of Missouri, was not far astray in publishing this detector of those "wolves in sheep's clothing," for we have shown by the writings of Alexander Campbell and his sect, that they denounce the Baptist Church, and, in fact, all other Protestant churches as "the relics of popery" and the legitimate daughters of the mother of harlots, yet they will profess friendship, till they sow discord and "steal the sheep," then cry "victory" over the once contented, but now divided, flock.

An intelligent correspondent of the Christian Baptist thus addressed Alexander Campbell:

As I informed you when here, I repeat it again, your opposition to a preached gospel, to the preachers and the Bible societies, secure to you the concurrence of the covetous, the ignorant, the prayerless and Christless, Christians. Should they have any religion, they cease to enjoy it as soon as they embrace your views.—Page 70.

Ah! what an arraignment for the reformer, and his reformation! A "Christless," "prayerless" system, that robs one of the hope he may have had as soon as he becomes contaminated by its touch.

With this reformation the Baptists had no sympathy, believing it to be pugnacious in spirit, unsound in theory, and barren in the fruits of piety. . . . Moreover, the principles advocated by the reformers, were deemed by the Baptists to be not only erroneous, but of pernicious influence, and such as they could not countenance without recreancy to the cause of Christ.—Campbellism Examined, p. 91.

It would be quite easy to select from Mr. Campbell's books, without any perversion of the quotations, a system of doctrine so utterly at variance with the Scriptures, and so repugnant to the feelings of pious people, that it would receive the undivided condemnation of every evangelical denomination.—Ibid., p. 362.

SUMMARY.

We have shown from the writings of Alexander Campbell, and the most prominent men of the Campbellite sect, together with authentic history:

1. That Thomas Campbell arrived in America from Scotland in 1807, and that his son, Alexander, arrived in America from Scotland in 1809.

2. That claiming to be Presbyterians, they were upon application at once received into that Church.

3. That Thomas Campbell acted as a minister in that Church, till causing much trouble, charges were preferred against him, which terminated in the Synod refusing to longer fellowship him.

4. That both the Campbells denounced the Church in bitter and sarcastic terms.

5. That father, mother, son, and daughter were baptized by Reverend Mr. Luse, and became members of the Baptist Church—father and son becoming ministers in that Church.

6. That their riotous and self-assertive methods soon called down upon them the disapprobation of the Baptist Church, and their double-dealing being exposed, the Baptist people refused to sustain them, and they soon left, to save being excommunicated.

7. That Campbell's own confession proves he was a hypocrite, and a bigot: "I would neither pray, nor sing praises with any one who was not as perfect as I supposed myself."

8. That Alexander Campbell, after denouncing all churches as "the relics of popery" and "the legitimate daughters of the church of Rome" became the founder of the sect called Campbellites in history, but calling themselves, at different times and places, Reformers, Christians, the Church of Christ, Disciples, etc.

9. That Campbell, heading the Reformers, and Barton W. Stone, leading the "Christians," united as "the one body," in 1831, with Campbell as chief.

10. That at first Campbell declared his was not a church, not a sect—just a reformation.

11. That the new combination had for its great object the destruction of the sectarian world, and by pen and voice their time was occupied in tracing the origin of every denomination, and showing they were "all man-made," "human," "relics of popery," "legitimate daughters of the mother of harlots," "the trail of the serpent was over them all"; all were too young to be the church of Christ, being organized by man during, or since, the sixteenth century, and must be destroyed, so that upon their ruins the Lord would use Campbell and his followers to build the church of Christ,—Campbellism.

12. That the clergy of every church who were paid for preaching by sermon, day, week, month, or year, were hirelings, and that "Jesus would judge that adulterous brood and give them over to the burning flames."

13. That while they considered "a creed" a sinful thing, "a sect" wickedness before God, salaried ministry "as goat-milkers" and hirelings, yet they became "a sect," "have a creed," and ask for and receive pay for their sermons by the hour, day, week, month, and year.

14. That they not only made a general attack upon the churches, but singled them out and denounced them one by one in the most unchristian language.

15. That they deny that any person was ever converted, born again, or pardoned, in the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, or any other church now in existence, save the Campbellite "one body."

16. That the act of immersion is "conversion," "regeneration," "born of water," "born again," "born of the Spirit," "obeying the gospel." In a word, to be immersed in water by a Campbellite, is to be pardoned, regenerated, born of water, born of the Spirit, and obeying the gospel.

17. That the very instant you are put under the water, your sins are remitted, you are born again, regenerated, converted.

18. That even prayer is not rewarded to the unbaptized.

19. That from the day of Pentecost till now, no one has been converted till immersed.

20. That the belief of one fact (that Jesus is the Messiah), and submission to one institution (immersion in water, into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit), are all that is required of Heaven for admission into the church.

21. That none but Campbellites have the right to baptize, and those immersed by the Baptists or other denominations, must be rebaptized to be saved in the kingdom of God.

22. That no one is worthy of the Lord's supper unless baptized by a Campbellite.

23. That they have ridiculed, in the most shocking language, the claim made by the children of the Lord, regarding the spiritual blessings they have received according to the Master's promise made in the New Testament, asserting that such so-called blessings end in lewdness and crime.

24. That water baptism is the new birth, that Holy Spirit baptism has nothing to do with salvation, but we are sanctified by water baptism.

25. That Sunday-schools, missionary, tract, and Bible societies, also colleges and all educational societies, are sinful. These are "the marks of the beast," yet they, or at least some branches of the Campbellites, have indorsed these very "marks of the beast."

26. That they have and do denounce such societies as "Sons of Temperance," Free Masons, and Odd Fellows. No man can be a Christian and hold membership in these societies. They are anathematized by Heaven, yet where policy suggests, they join these orders.

27. That Alexander Campbell indorsed human slavery, and was a slave-owner, and defended slavery, till policy suggested to abandon the traffic.

28. That they claimed a restoration of the "one body," the church of Christ; but now the Campbellite sect confesses the restoration was never complete, that it is still faulty, that did an apostle see it he would weep over its deformity and weakness.

29. That Campbellism is now divided and subdivided into several quarreling sects, holding public debates, writing books, filling church papers, each accusing the others of being a disgrace to the cause they claim to represent.

30. That the Baptist people, with whom many of the Campbellites once worshiped, have, after careful and prayerful examination of the creed of the Campbellite sect, decided that the Campbellites were unworthy of Christian fellowship, and should be barred from the holy communion,—the Lord's supper.

31. That the Campbellite doctrine was contrary to the sacred Scriptures, and should receive the undivided condemnation of every evangelical denomination.

32. That Campbell's methods drew around him the covetous, the ignorant, the prayerless, and the Christless Christians, who, should they have had any religion, ceased to enjoy it as soon as they embraced his views.

We submit the above thirty-two indictments against the Campbellite sect. They speak for themselves, and when we remember that in the majority of the charges therein preferred the confession of guilt is found in the writings of Alexander Campbell and his leading men, there should be little doubt of their being guilty, as charged.

Now in conclusion: If Mr. Campbell, in his heart, believed that the Roman Catholic Church was the mother of harlots and the Protestant denominations were those daughters,—those harlots, and that he should commence a reformatory movement, he had as much right to form a new sect as any other reformer before him.

If he believed that the ministry of the churches were an adulterous brood, he should surely endeavor to show them their error.

If he believed, the "water baptism is immersion," and that "immersion," "conversion," "regeneration," "new birth," "are equivalent," and that only those who are immersed are pardoned, he had the right to say so.

If he had no faith in spirit-baptism, and fully believed that God did not intend to pour out the Holy Ghost on his children, but the gospel is now in word only, he had the right to say so.

In a word, we would not think of abridging his right of free speech in religious matters.

And, further, if Alexander Campbell believed that in the Sunday-schools, colleges, missionary societies, Bible and tract societies, he saw the marks of the beast, he had the right to express himself in proper language.

If he believed the Free Masons, Odd Fellows, and Sons of Temperance societies were anathematized by Heaven, he had the right to say so.

With regard to the truth or falsity of the claims made and positions taken by the Campbellites, this paper has nothing to say, but we affirm that, believing as they do, as shown in this paper by their own statements, to hide their distinctive features, cover up their real faith, seek to ingratiate themselves into the good graces of other denominations, under false colors, changing here and there to meet the emergency, bending their creed to acquire popularity and prestige, playing the "wolf in sheep's clothing" act, "the spider to the fly" game, are, in our opinion, unmanly, deceptive, dishonest, cowardly, and disgusting even to a man of the world, to say nothing of hypocrisy, when viewed from the standard of Christianity.

We can not close with anything more appropriate than the following quotation from Campbellism Examined:

Like some tall and hoary cliff, against which the mighty waves of the ocean have dashed and foamed, and raged for a time, and to whose strength they have at last rendered homage, by subsiding into a comparative calm at its base, the evangelical faith . . . has received and resisted the threatening surges of the "current reformation" [the Campbellite sect] until their force is spent, and their receding fury proclaims its stability. Commencing its assault on all Christian denominations with dauntless intrepidity, and giving strong assurances of their early overthrow . . . the reformation has been frittered away to nothing, or has ended in a huge mass of inconsistencies and contradictions.—Pages 358, 359.

The history of the Campbellite sect proves the above charge to be true, and to-day the Campbellite movement, as seen in the different sects into which it has been divided, is known and marked, and nothing but the abandonment of false doctrine and an honorable apology to the Christian world for the violent and bitter attack made upon it, will ever give to them the confidence and respect of Christian people.

With a sincere prayer that the honest people who have been led into the meshes of Campbellism, may see its deformity and escape from its grasp, and reach safety and sweet peace in the kingdom of God, I submit this paper.

R. C. EVANS.

LONDON, Ontario, 474 Adelaide Street, February 11, 1903.

Professor P. G. Holden, of Iowa, has been preaching the gospel of proper planting of corn to the farmers of his State, says the June World's Work, with the result that it is expected that next year's crop in Iowa alone will be increased 7,000,000, bushels, valued at $8,000,000. The railroads of the State provided Professor Holden with special trains, and in the three days of the first trip, 450 miles had been travelled, 50 stations visited, 60 lectures delivered, 15 Iowa counties had been crossed and the message of proper raising carried to the tillers of 3,000,000 acres of Iowa farm-land.

Selected Articles.

CIVILIZATION OF THE INCAS.

Mr. Walter L. Beasley, in the Scientific American for May 14, 1904, writes interestingly of the ruins of the Inca Empire and the story they tell to archaeologists:

"It is said that this tribe did not commence to be conquerors until they had first shown themselves to be statesmen and wise and efficient administrators. Having obtained a fairly advanced civilization, they began gradually to overawe and incorporate the territory of less cultured tribes of the coast and slopes of the Andes, who slowly absorbed both the religion and superior handicraft of their conquerors. These conquests extended over a period of several centuries. The permanent establishment of Inca power is attributed to their having secured the good graces of their subjects, and to their liberal treatment and policy of conciliation, than to force of arms. This continued until the limits of Inca rule extended from the central plateau of Bolivia to the western coast of Peru, north to Ecuador, and South to Chile. The inhabitants of this territory embrace many different tribes with local rulers, living in different stages of enlightenment.

"Under Inca sway and influence, both architecture and the various industrial arts reached their highest degree of efficiency. Few, if any, countries of modern times have equaled the extreme and skillful utilization of land that was practiced during the time the Inca empire flourished. In many localities they built their dwellings among rough rocks, on arid slopes of hills, in order to use the limited area of soil for agriculture. They terraced up every hill and mountainside until not a single square foot of surface was left unimproved. They likewise conducted aqueducts for irrigation purposes, and also a series of magnificent roads, from twenty-five to fifty feet in width, paved with blocks of stone, which connected their royal capital at Cuzco with the various provinces. Part of the way these were cut out of solid stone, and often ascended precipitous heights by a series of stone stairways. Traces of these roads still exist in many localities."

Scientists work there at a disadvantage, as the government restrictions limit them materially in "the nature and extent of the excavations." The writings of Spanish historians would throw light on Inca civilization; but they are not obtainable, being in archives at Madrid, and never having been published.

Mr. Bandelier, who conducted the expedition which furnished the information and data for Mr. Beasley's article, explored the ruins of Chan-Chan, commonly called Chimu, near the city of Truxillo. He says:

"The ruins extend for a distance of three miles, and are one and a half miles in width. Nothing remains of the original appearance and former grandeur of the buildings except well-laid foundations, massive and peculiarly ornamented walls and groups of single-story, gable-roofed houses and court-yards. Mr. Bandelier estimates that some forty thousand persons occupied the place. The best ancient information of the Chan-Chan ruins and those in the immediate vicinity is to be derived from the early Spanish chronicler, Cieza de Leon, who visited this locality about a decade after the conquest, and is considered the most trustworthy authority. According to de Leon, this valley in pre-Spanish times was dominated by several powerful chiefs or lords, who waged warfare continually with near and distant tribes, and were feared and obeyed by their subjects. Each lord or ruler resided in a great city, the seat of his realm, which contained various imposing buildings. When these sovereigns were subdued by the Incas, still larger and more pretentious structures were erected. The architectural plan of Chan-Chan comprised a series of about twenty open squares of courtyards intersecting one another. On certain sides facing these were erected a number of palaces or religious edifices. Each square was surrounded by an exterior wall of adobe blocks, twenty-five feet in height. The larger buildings contained innumerable chambers and corridors, traversed by narrow passageways. Many treasures of gold and silver are said to have been found in these chambers and apartments. Around one of the great public squares were arranged some of the one-story adobe dwellings of the inhabitants. These are to-day graphically outlined, and preserve their original appearance, showing sharply-pitched gable roofs. There are no traces of windows. Light and ventilation seem to have been furnished by the door alone. It is supposed that some of the great squares and inclosures were occupied by the various craftsmen and industrial workers in pottery, weavers and dyers of fabrics, and fashioners of metal ornaments for the use of the ruler, his household, and his priests. One of the curiosities discovered by Mr. Bandelier was an altar some fifty feet below the surface, which formed the heart of a great artificial mound, and which evidently occupied the central place in a large building devoted to religious worship.

"One of the noteworthy phases of the Chan-Chan ruins were the ornamented walls of two of its buildings, thought to have been devoted to sacred purposes, or to have served as the abode of the ruler. In one instance, a series of designs had been sunk a half foot or more in the adobe over the entire wall now seven feet high. Possibly these may have been apertures for hiding gold and other ceremonial offerings, and afterward sealed up by an additional adobe coating. Another facade, ten or more feet in height, is tastefully decorated with a network of frescoes in a series of duplicated designs of a conventionalized bird. These walls are surrounded by a mass of fallen debris; and nothing is left to throw any light upon their ancient splendor."

The pyramid on the banks of the Moche River receives comment, and is called the "Spinx of the Incas." Its secret has never been fathomed. At one time a tunnel was made into the mound for quite a distance, and it is said quantities of precious ornaments were obtained. "Probably it was used as a religious shrine or sacrificial place, or on the other hand, from its lofty and commanding position, it may have been used as a strategic point to detect the approach of hostile invaders."

Of the people Mr. Beasley says: "That the coast Indians and Incas were a music-loving people is evidenced from numerous representations on potter vessels of performers in the act of playing upon their instruments, as well as from the large number of actual instruments obtained. In their extensive worship and ceremonial dances music was a necessary feature, and was widely employed. Mr. Charles W. Mead, curator of the Peruvian Department of Archæology, in a recent monograph on this subject, states that he was unable to discover any authentic musical scale or song of the Incas, and the best and only source of information is to be gained from the structure and character of the instruments themselves. It is commonly believed that they employed the five-toned or penatonic scale, so widely used in the primitive music of ancient peoples. The most important of their instruments were the drum and pan-pipe. Both of these are modeled in the shape of water jars representing human forms, and give a clever idea of their construction and appearance. The drums appear to be identical with those in use in many parts of Peru to-day, and were made by stretching a skin over a hoop of wood.

"The pan-pipe was a series of reeds of graduated length, held in position by a crosspiece of split cane lashed to the reed with a cord made from the wool of the llama. The present natives still dance to the beating of the drum and pan-pipe, as did their ancestors hundreds of years ago. Nearly fifty different instruments, all of percussion and wind, were found. Remarkably unique among these are many double whistling jars or musical water bottles. Near the top of the first or front jar, which was usually surmounted by a human or animal figure, is the opening of the whistle. When the jars have been partly filled and are swung backward and forward, a number of whistling sounds are produced. As the vessel swings forward and upward, the water is lowered in the first jar and raised in the other. In the backward motion it rushes back into the first, forcing the air out through the whistle. One of the new musical discoveries heretofore unknown, and worked out by Mr. Mead, is the fact that shells were employed as cymbals. This is conclusively established by a terra-cotta water vessel, which is covered, showing the figure of a man in the act of striking two shells as cymbals."

Mr. Beasley concludes with, to our mind, the most interesting part of his article, as follows:

"The government of the Incas is said to have been the most enlightened despotism that ever existed, and about the nearest approach to a Utopia which has yet been reached by any people. There was allotted to each man, free of charge, a dwelling site and extended area of land for him to till and cultivate for the maintenance of his family. The surplus of products from this tract, left over from the immediate needs of the owner, was given as tribute to the Inca government, and used for religious, charitable, and other purposes at their sovereign city of Cuzco. Under their wise and just civic administration, crime and public corruption and theft were not known. In Cuzco it is stated that a resident with one hundred bars of silver and gold piled up in his house, left it wide open, only placing a small stick across the door as a sign that the master was out—and nobody went in. Agriculture was the chief pursuit followed. Cotton, beans, maize, and coca were raised by the coast people. On the plateau the domestication of the llama and alpaca was a favorite occupation.

"The whole tribe was divided into numerous clans. The powers of administration were centered in the elective dignitaries, a military leader, and the head of the religious system. There was also a council of chiefs. None of these offices were hereditary, and could not be occupied by sons unless they were specially chosen for the position. The succession of the chief Inca did not fall upon the shoulders of his child. This was due to the clan organization, which governed the affairs of the state. Inheritance was by mother-right. A man could not marry a woman of his own clan, but had to select one from another. This was the main unit for holding the tribe together. Woman had no voice in public affairs, but ruled supreme in the home. She was admitted to esoteric societies, of which there were many. They also practiced healing and became priestesses. Many complicated and elaborate ceremonial and religious rites were observed, and frequent sacrifices offered up to their deities. The Incas, under their enlightened system of government, had, however, incorporated in their religious worship some uncanny customs. Human sacrifice was practiced, and on certain occasions a number of young maidens captured from other tribes were offered up to some of their principal deities. These young women were for a long time kept prisoners, and during the interval were employed at making pottery and weaving gorgeous fabrics out of the silk-like threads of vicuna wool for the sacrificial celebration. Owing to their extensive religious code, feasts and offerings of some kind were of almost daily occurrence, and the preparation for and observance of these occupied a great deal of the time of the people. Contrary to statements hitherto made, the sun was not the chief object of worship, but the moon, stars, thunder, lightning, and many natural objects and phenomena were included in the religious code. In Cuzco some forty different shrines existed.

"What height Inca culture might have reached had it been allowed to follow a natural course of development is one of conjecture and speculation. Judging from their cyclopean architectural remains, and from the splendid examples of their technique, which is so strikingly displayed in the specimens obtained, it seems most likely that they would have kept abreast of the ancient Mexicans."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Admonition.

MEDITATION.

My sorrows have been many,
Earth's joys I've known but few;
Prosperity denied me,
Afflictions pierce me through.
But God is love, eternal,
His Spirit he doth send;
His mercies are for ever,
The just he will defend.

THE ANSWER.

God's children walk in darkness
Because of unbelief;
They famish, says the Father,
Through want of trust and faith.
O children, come up higher,
And listen to my call,
My love is still extended
To righteous, yea, to all.
Repent and be believing
My counsels, learn, obey,
And put away all evil,
Let each hard heart give way.
Bring forth thy tithes and tributes
And consecrations pure;
Fill ye my storehouse, children,
My covenants are sure.
Let faith and love be perfect,
With works let them agree;
And be no more divided,
Thy hearts lift up to me.
Let brother love his brother,
In Zion be no poor;
Let pride for ever vanquished
Disturb thy peace, no more.
My children you shall see me
And know that I am He
Who gave my life a ransom,
From sin to set you free.
Be righteous, pure, and holy,
The Spirit shall be giv'n,
Till all my Holy Zion
Shall ring with praise of heav'n.

MRS. BETTY SMITH.

The Law of God is the Law of Love.

Love is an attribute we all more or less possess, and the more we are governed by its holy influence the better men and women we will surely be. In evidence of this God stands supreme. The Bible tells us that he is love, and this divine emotion stands at the head of the attributes that characterize his dealings with humanity. For instance, what greater proof could he have given of his love for us than is furnished in the offering of his Son as a sacrifice for the sin of the world?

Dear Saints, I wonder if we realize and appreciate the love of God. His care for us never ceases; each day brings new proof that he protects us from evil and danger, prolongs our lives and adds to our happiness.

What a beautiful world he has made for us where we may live, and by industry accumulate the blessings he has placed within our reach. Witness the perfect order of the seasons, the regularity with which the wheel of time moves round, bringing seed time and harvest. Supreme in his nature, he is also preëminent in his love.

God gives us ability, and a free agency, which is further proof of his love. Taking God for our guide we should fill our lives with as much love as is possible. First we should love him; love his laws, and delight to do his will. And we should obey his every commandment just as near as it is possible. This is all he expects us to do. Nor does he ask us to do more than we are able to do. His yoke is easy, and his burden is light; and when he gives a special command ought we not to obey it?

I read with a sad heart that Graceland will be closed in June unless the debt that hangs like a pall around it is paid. Dear Saints, let us awake to our duty. Do not let this be done. Think of our beautiful Graceland closed for debt! I am sure there are but few in the Church that could not give a little at least; if it be only the "widow's mite," the Lord will bless you just the same. You who are able to give more see that you do it. Remember all that you have is his. "The cattle on a thousand hills are his." Sell some of them and send the proceeds to help wipe out the Graceland debt. The Lord has promised great blessings to all who sacrifice for his cause, and we know that his promises are sure and can not fail. And he has also said, "He that knoweth the Father's will, and doeth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes." "In vain do you say Lord, Lord, and do not the things I command you," will apply to some of the Saints as well as others.

Then let us be very careful that we do not bring condemnation upon our own heads; for God will not be mocked. We must all stand before his throne and there be judged. Let us all try to live so that we can claim his promises, that we may hear the blessed words, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

This life is but short at best, and we need but little while here; and we can take nothing with us when we are called to go. So let us lay up treasures in heaven.

Were it in my power how quickly I would wipe out the whole debt; but all I can do is to try to urge others who are able to give, to do their duty.

Your sister,

Mrs. PAULINE RUBY.

Half Hours With Parents and Teachers.—No. 3.

A SERIES OF FAMILIAR TALKS INTENDED FOR USE IN LOCALS
AND HOME CLASSES.

Edited by the Daughters of Zion.

The charge is made by an educated Chinese—educated in Europe and familiar with the customs and practices of Christian nations—that "while we profess Christianity we do not practice it—that we could not do so because it is not a practical religion." In this judgment of Christianity he places the blame of failure upon the wrong party to the compact, but if he does not see the teachings of Christ exemplified in the lives of his professed followers, is he not at least partially justified in his conclusion? Does not this thoughtful, deliberate judgment of one studying the Christian religion as he would study any other system or rules given by any great teacher for the government of individual lives, furnish an object-lesson before calculated to awaken most serious reflection? We know the gospel of Christ is practical, but not upon a low plane. The very first requirement made of its followers is: "Let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me." It demands of us self-renunciation, purity of heart and life and a following in the footsteps of our divine Leader.

But if it demands much, what shall we say of its promises? If our hearts grow faint and fail us when we feel our own weakness and realize the holiness of God—realize that he demands of us to become like him and assures us that without this we can never see him—never dwell where he is; what shall we say of its promises? "A hundredfold more in this life and in the world to come life everlasting"! What shall we say of those times when by the power of the Holy Spirit we have been lifted above every trial of earth and have had such a foretaste of that which God has in store for those who love him and obey his commandments, as has made us feel that one hour—yes even one moment of such peace and joy was worth more than all earth had to give and we knew then that we were asked only to renounce the dross, in exchange for pure gold; to give up that which would drag us down and come up to a plane where God could meet us. But if we fail to do this, if we still love the world and the things pertaining to it—things which do not make for godliness,—is there not danger that our children when they come to mature years, will say to us as does this educated Chinese: "Your religion is not practical"?

A recent writer in accounting for the wonderful growth and development of the Roman Catholic Church in the past ten or twenty years, attributes it almost entirely to the fact that the human heart craves something of a definite character, something substantial upon which to build its faith. The divided and uncertain faith of Protestantism not furnishing this, men often turn to Catholicism to satisfy this inborn craving.

Here again we ask, Is this state of things the fault of the gospel or of those who profess the gospel?

When Paul was writing to the Thessalonian saints concerning this matter he said: "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sakes."—1 Thessalonians 1:5. Matthew also records that the people who heard Jesus were astonished at his doctrine, not because of its strange and impractical nature but because "He taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." (See Matthew 7:29.)

Here then is witness that the gospel has inherent in it both authority and assurance and as Saints we ought not to need any reminder of this. But human beings are prone to forgetfulness and we need often to be reminded of things we have known, but have failed to incorporate into our lives so that they have become a veritable part of ourselves. He whose faith is built upon the gospel has a foundation, as firm as the throne of God and when the law of the Lord approves, and the Holy Spirit bears testimony, why should not his faith be strong and unwavering and he proclaim it with a sound in which there is no uncertainty? Why should not parents and teachers in all assurance teach it to their children? The Jews to-day are living witnesses of the efficacy of the principle embodied in the commandment given through Moses concerning the instruction of their children in the law God had given for their government as a people, and we can well understand that such instruction was not imparted in any unbelieving or half-hearted way, but to them and their children it was the veritable word of the Lord and as such they accepted it.

Pope Leo XIII is reported to have said, only a short time before his death, "I may have made mistakes, but, according to our faith, I have done the best I could." If indeed he had done this may we not in all good conscience ask, Had he not done well? If God regards the heart, will he not look with less displeasure upon the individual who holding to a perverted faith, honestly carries into practice and makes the principles of that faith the governing motives of his life, than he will him whose faith is true and pure and who fails to make his life conform to his faith? If not, what is the meaning of the teaching of Jesus in regard to the servant who knew not the master's will being beaten with few stripes though he had done things worthy of many, while to the servant who knew the master's will and had not done it many stripes were given?

Dear fathers and mothers in Zion, you to whom the gospel has been sent in this latter day with much assurance and power—with the Holy Ghost also testifying as it did to saints in former days, are you teaching it to your children as God requires it should be taught? If you love this work and desire to see it prosper this is your surest way of helping it on. Home duty is the first duty and no other work can prosper in your hands while this is neglected or left undone.

In these talks we have dwelt largely upon the subject of faith, because it is the foundation-stone upon which the whole superstructure of a Christian character rests and "without faith it is impossible to please him [God] for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Hebrews 11: 6.

In a letter which came to us last night from a Sunday-school superintendent was this expression: "I wish you would do more to impress upon parents the necessity of strengthening their faith in the gospel." The writer did not make it quite plain whether he referred to parents strengthening their own faith or the faith of their children, but we inferred from the tenor of what had been said before, that it was the faith of the children he wished to have strengthened. In view of what we have been trying to do, the request seemed as a confirmation of the timeliness of our effort. If anything more can be said or done to convince parents and teachers of the absolute necessity of their being in possession of an intelligent, well-grounded faith in God and the gospel of his Son, Christ Jesus—which is the gospel restored to earth by the angel in these last days, and for the last time; then may the Lord cause it to be spoken and heeded, for, as he lives and his word is true, Zion can never be redeemed until her homes are purified and the faith once delivered to the saints dwells in the hearts and controls the lives of her children.

Prayer Union.

Bro. Stephen Drazey, Forest, Idaho, requests the prayers of the Saints that he may have faith and strength to quit the use of tobacco.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

To-Day.

We shall do so much in the years to come,
But what have we done to-day?
We shall give our gold, a princely sum,
But what have we given to-day?
We shall lift the heart and dry the tear,
We shall plant a hope in place of a fear,
We shall speak the words of love and cheer,
But what did we speak to-day?
—Nixon Waterman, in New Century Teachers' Monthly.

SR. GERTRUDE V. LENTZ who is with her husband, Bro. John B. Lentz, a missionary in New York, reports having organized a Sunday-school in her field, the place we are unable to give. We are very glad to hear of her success there as that is largely an undeveloped field and we are glad to learn of the work making advancements. Sr. Lentz was quite successful last year in her work particularly in the Home Department line, and we shall not be at all surprised to learn of much more work accomplished ere the year is past.

ONE matter was overlooked by the presiding officer during the late General Convention, and that was the appointing of the committee to which was referred all the matter pertaining to the "Sunshiners Work." Since then we have appointed and secured the consent to act of Mrs. Susie Gilbert, Fall River, Massachusetts; Floralice Miller, Dunnville, Ontario; and Ethel Skank, Henderson, Iowa. They will take the matter up and make report of their work to the General Convention of 1905.

Children's Day.

The season for the Children's Day services is now at hand and we trust that all schools will endeavor to observe a children's day in some form or other. The preparation for the services need not be elaborate nor the expense very heavy. And the benefits to be derived therefrom to the school, the Church, and the neighborhood are so many that no school or branch should ever think of passing the early summer months without making a modest effort to have a Children's Day service.

We are aware that with many schools the task seems a large one. But it is not necessary to make it so. Do not undertake to make a great display or show for that is not the proper object. Better to keep in mind the true spirit of the day, and that is to encourage the children and make them feel that they are a part and parcel in this great work, to provide for them what seems their very own, and to influence them to want to unite with the Church and grow into lives of usefulness, as well as to have a pleasant day. All this can best be done in a simple way. The results will be better if simplicity marks the work rather than great show or display. Make the work simple, attractive, and appropriate to the day. Prepare and carry out your program with earnestness and cheerfulness and much good will certainly come therefrom.

We have many times urged not to neglect the observance of special days. There is too much to be gained thereby to afford to neglect them. If you want to increase or maintain the attendance at your school; if you want to keep the interest from lagging; if you want to have a school that will do the good needed to be done, you will be obliged to do many things outside of the regular daily routine of work. The holding of the Sunday-school session is but a part of the work. And why will we omit the parts of our work that are the most pleasant and the most productive of good? Have a Children's Day service whether your school be large or small.

"Who it was that first suggested an annual Children's Day that should combine the idea of an anniversary, a special children's service in the beautiful season of the year, on which all parts of the country, and all Sabbath-school workers could unite, it is impossible to discover. Perhaps it sprang up naturally in many childlike hearts at once. To write a history of its development would be no easier than to record the annals of the blossoming of spring flowers and the budding of the trees. We only know that whereas it was winter now it is spring, and so Children's Day is come, on which the Church rises and shines and sings and puts on its beautiful garments.

"What more powerful object-lesson setting forth the love of Christ and of Christ's church than the services of Children's Day?"—James A. Worden, D. D.

"THE GEM OF DAYS.

"Upon the coronet of days
That clasps the golden year,
The anniversaries we love,
Like glowing stars appear;
They sparkle with a hidden light,
With beauty all their own.
And there is one, the children claim,
That shines for them alone.

"It is a gem of purest ray,
Its worth has not been told;
'Tis set with emeralds and pearls,
In summer's heart of gold;
The children greet it with delight,
They hail its heavenly ray;
This gem reflects the Father's love;
We call it Children's Day.

"The gem of days! It first was known
Beside far Galilee,
When little children thronged the way
The Savior's face to see.
'Twas Children's Day in that far land,
When o'er the world was sped
The message, that with blessings fell
Upon each little head.

"And Children's Day, though lost awhile,
Shines now with fadeless light;
Its hidden fire gleams like a star
Above sin's gloomy night.
O gem of days! time can not tell
How rules your gentle sway;
Eternity shall yet reveal
The worth of Children's Day."

—D. C. Cook's Gem of Days.

Our Department.

A sister writes: "We have often been profitably instructed and encouraged by reading some of the articles in the Sunday-school Department in the HERALD, and I am thankful for it." This is but a sample of many letters which come. But the part that strikes us significantly is the "some" articles. This suggests some thoughts that may be well for us to consider. It implies that not all articles are heavy weight and of full value as compared with others. But they represent the best efforts of the writers under the circumstances in which they must do their work. The fact of their being published often encourages the author to try again and to take hold in other lines. It is developing the young or beginning worker it may be into one of great usefulness. We all need the sustaining influences of encouragement and just commendation. Most of us have at some time or another profited greatly by it. And it may be that we have been weakened or discouraged by the absence of some deserved commendation when it could and should have been given. It is the sick that need the physician. It is the weak that need the stimulant. And this is one of the reasons why we have used some of the articles that have appeared in the department.

But there is another thought right here. Who is to be judge? I well remember at one time hearing an address that to me seemed wonderful. It filled my very soul with happiness and enthusiasm. I thought it was just grand, and it was. There was another there sitting by my side who heard it exactly as I did but he was completely disgusted with it. How two persons could listen to the same address and be impressed so differently and to such extremes is difficult for me to understand, for he thought the whole effort was "strained, affected, and shallow." Again we ask, "Who is to be the judge?" That lecture was to that man "shallow" and made no good impression upon him. He was none the better for having heard it. With me it had its weight. It made an impression upon me that I shall ever cherish with pleasure. I am the better for having heard it. Was or was not the lecture a good one? Thus it is with the articles that appear in the Department. To you they may not be interesting, but may be to some one else, or vice versa. You may think them lightweight or on threadbare subjects, but study them and see if you do not get something new from each one. If they are weak efforts, pray God to bless the new worker. We do not know what he may be able to do in the future.

The Great World Sunday-School Convention.

Scarcely had the great International Sunday-School Convention which met in Denver, Colorado, in June, 1902, passed into history, till it became necessary to decide upon a place to hold the forthcoming World's Convention. It was proposed by the editor of the International Evangel to hold it at Jerusalem in April, 1904. At first the thought was regarded as little more than mere sentimentality. But the more it was mentioned the more it grew into favor till it began to be regarded as a substantial proposition. It was finally located there. A ship was chartered for the tour and the rooms offered for sale to officially appointed delegates. At first it looked as if there would be difficulty in getting appointments and rooms. But later on one after another was obliged to abandon the idea of going till quite late there was still room for some two hundred more.

On the eighth of March more than eight hundred delegates sailed from the harbor at New York to be gone about two months. Much of this time would be spent visiting points of interest enroute and returning, besides the points of interest in the holy land. The convention itself would last but a few days. All was done that could be done to make the trip pleasant and profitable to the Sunday-school workers. Cameras were taken by the hundred. In fact there was a public office for camera supplies and for the developing of all kinds of work on board the ship, also an "official photographer" who would assist any one in their work of taking views and finishing them up. These pictures taken will be treasures to the makers as long as they live to prize them. The committee had prepared a series of services, lectures with and without stereopticon illustrations, delegation meetings, and many other ways to while away the time profitably and pleasantly while on the entire tour.

Meetings were previously arranged with the various missionaries at places along the route and a succession of receptions, etc., ensued. As far as present reports carry them, they had touched at Maderia Islands, the fortress at Gibraltar, spent one day in Algiers and one day at Malta, and three days at Athens, where Paul preached his famous sermon on Mar's Hill.

Here we will leave them for the present. We shall make further mention of their work when reported and hope to secure the permission to publish a portion of the report to be found in the World Evangel. It is very interesting and instructive to all Bible students and to others too.

A Few Hints on Order.

[WHILE waiting at a hotel in the South one day last summer we picked up a paper in which we found an interesting article upon the the topic of "order" from which we quote a part. There was but a portion of the paper left, but we think it was the Standard of Chicago—a Baptist publication. The writer expresses several points that we have sought repeatedly to impress upon our workers as very necessary adjuncts to successful work. We give it here to demonstrate the fact that the difficulties experienced by one are also experienced by others in the same line of work and are apt to be looked upon in the same general way.—ED.]

ORDER.

There is no proper place in the life of man for disorder, but of all places its presence in the house of God, and at the hour of worship is most obnoxious. Yet that there is an increasingly large amount of disorder in our religious service, no one acquainted with the facts can deny. And this is true of the Bible-school. The writer has been astonished, grieved and perplexed as he has observed the general prevalence in an aggravated form of this evil. Let us earnestly and prayerfully consider this matter in all its bearings."

First, let our topic be defined. "Order," says Mr. Hughes, "is the condition resulting from an exact performance of duty in the right way and at the right time." A definition almost equivalent is, "Order is doing the right thing in the right place, in the right way, and at the right time." For the Bible-school Mr. Pease defines it as follows: "Order in the Sunday-school is such an adjustment of the different kinds of business and work to each other, and such attention to each its time, as will permit of the accomplishment of all without interference." In determining, then, the orderliness of an act, four things are to be borne in mind: The character of the act itself, and the time, place, and manner of its doing. All the definitions given make it emphatic that order is not a negative condition, but a positive. It is "doing."

With these definitions in mind let us turn our attention to the school and note some of the more common forms of disorder. As soon as the school is called to order several forms develop and become at once apparent. Members are tardy. They are doing the right thing at the wrong time. They are out of order. Most of them are habitual thieves. They steal the time of others. There is absolutely no valid reason that they can assign for tardiness. It is due solely to habit. They are late everywhere, no matter at what hour a service is held. Some are habitually two or three or five or ten minutes late. The only time they may be expected to be on time is at their own funeral. Now there is no form of disorder more destructive of one's value to society than that. Who will employ one habitually tardy? Where is there a place for him in business or professional life?

Another form of disorder that develops at the moment of commencement is conversation. In order, perhaps up to the moment of beginning, it now becomes gross disorder. The only thing in order now is attention. Then there is the unnecessary moving about the room on the part of officers, teachers, and pupils, and other forms of unnecessary noise. Each helps to add to the general confusion, and each leads to a further form of disorder. Being occupied in one or the other of these disorderly acts, the announcement of hymns to be sung, or of scripture to be read is unheard, and a failure to take part in the exercises results. A multitude are not doing the right thing at the right time. It is disorder not to take part in any exercise to the extent of one's ability. It may be that one can not sing, but certainly the place in the book can be found, the words followed, and melody made in the heart.

Disorder in high places, and systematically planned disorder at that, is frequent. Let me picture it to you. The superintendent has given the signal for the class-work to begin, and now the teachers, when the classes have taken their places, enter upon the teaching of the lesson. Just as they are in the midst of a carefully planned introduction which it is hoped will awaken the interested attention of the class, the secretary comes with class-book and offering envelope to which he claims the attention of the teacher. The interesting introduction is broken off short that these may be attended to. But now the teacher faces a distracted class, his ammunition prepared carefully beforehand has been spent, and he is forced to some improptu effort to awaken attention once more. Earnestly he enters upon his task, and once more is succeeding in centering their thoughts upon the lesson when the librarian interrupts with his "Books, please," and again the teacher is robbed of the attention of the class. But the lesson period is rapidly passing and as a general who sees his forces rapidly being dispersed but is powerless to prevent it, and unable to retreat, he presses on into the lesson with the attention of but a portion of his scholars. The secretary returns for the class-book and the offering, the librarian to distribute fresh books to the class, the secretary to pass around Sunday-school papers.

Two deacons whisper in the aisle and many look and wonder what they are talking about. The pastor tiptoes down the length of the room, and all eyes follow him. The superintendent, having carefully turned the face of the blackboard away from the school, busies himself in putting on an outline of a review exercise, while the scholars everywhere in the room watch his movements and wonder what it is. And now the bell announces the close of the lesson period; the teacher—I marvel that he is not insane—sinks back with a sigh of relief; the superintendent addresses a few remarks to pupils whose faces are chiefly hidden behind the aforementioned Sunday-school paper, which has been opened wide; and the school is closed.

The teacher has been interrupted on an average of about every five minutes during the lesson period, and there has been scarce a moment during the entire time when there has not been something going on in the room that has not more or less attracted the attention of his class. Do you call his frantic efforts teaching? No person, though he possessed the ability of a Socrates and the patience of a Job, could teach were he subjected to such constant interruption and such competition for the attention of his pupils! To expect it is to expect the impossible. The school meets for teaching purposes, and when the business of the school is so managed as to interfere with that, it is out of order. If the purpose for which a Bible-school exists is accomplished, it will be by the teacher during the lesson period, and the time allotted to that work should be considered sacred. Absolutely nothing should be permitted that will at all interfere with the teaching work.

We find, then, four important infractions of order in the Sunday-school: Tardiness, inattention, failure to participate in the various parts of the program and the transaction of the business of the school in a way to interfere with its teaching work. Other forms of disorder will be apparent to the intelligent observer.

Letter Department.

FULTON, Kentucky, May 16, 1904.

Editors Herald: I wish to make a suggestion to the Saints generally, for the general spread of the light which God has given us, saying, "Let your light so shine," that others may be caused to turn and glorify our Father in heaven. And again he said through Paul, "That which doth make known is light." So the plan is this: Let us all spend one dollar each this year for tracts and stamps to send literature to those outside of the Church, and let us try to use some wisdom in selecting parties to whom we send the "pearls," for we still have plenty of "swine" in the field. Now, Saints, if about ninety-seven and one-half per cent of us will use our time as we should and leave off one tenth of the unnecessaries for which we spend money during one year we will have the dollar to spare, and more. One of those of old said, "The gifts and callings of God are without repentance," and we see the truth of the statement clearly. Look at the many wonderful gifts God has given us in the latter days. The wonderful mail system, the various and speedy means by which we can travel to any and all points of the known world with all comfort that can be imagined, the almost lightning speed with which we can send our thoughts across and around the earth, with thousands of other grand gifts he has given us, all without our repentance. We now have the rural free delivery of our mail daily. The system is spreading over the earth at a wonderful speed,—one of the gifts of God by which we can, each one perhaps, do much to spread the good tidings of great joy at any time we will. So let us search our HERALDS and Ensigns and get what light they contain for us, and then let us send them forth to some influential honest ones and thereby use this "gift" to the glory of God, the Giver.

I am still in the love of the grand work; but I can not speak the truth and say I am stronger in the faith than ever before, as some do. I am sorry I can not say so in truth. I hope, however, that I will yet be made free and strong in faith and confidence in God and his Son, in all that he has inspired—written, and in all of the members of his body. I ask an interest in the prayers of every humble and charitable Saint in the Church. I humbly request this. May God bless and direct us all is the desire of

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. WILLIAMS.

BRISBANE, Queensland, Australia, April 21, 1904.

Editors Herald: The regular visits of your valuable paper are hailed with delight. Sometimes it comes by the Vancouver, and sometimes by the San Francisco line. We often get three at a time but now and again we receive two by one of these lines and one by the other. The reader understands no doubt that American mail may come or go by the Canadian line and vice versa. The ships of said lines arrive and depart within from the same day to two weeks of each other. The Canadian ships go from Sydney, via Brisbane, Fiji Islands, and Honolulu to Vancouver; the American from Sydney, via Auckland, Samoan Islands and Honolulu, to San Francisco. Each line has three ships. Those of the Canadian line are the Miomera, Moana, and Aorangi; those of the American line are the Ventura, Sonoma, and Sierra.

In this country we have some advantages in reference to church work. These of course we prize since we have disadvantages not found in America. One advantage is that Australia does not charge duty on books. This can not be said of many countries. In Canada a book valued at one dollar, in the States costs one dollar and ten cents. The Saints here get all church publications at the office price. The Gospel Standard, however, charges a small commission on some things, but that is a different matter.

Every department of the work is moving along nicely in this land. Our little Standard is doing a noble work. It would pay the American, English, Canadian, and other Saints to take this paper. In saying this I am not begging, for we can get along without outside help. They would be recompensed by the benefit they would derive from it. Without it they do not fully realize what God and his people are doing in this country. The Religio is doing an excellent work. The membership is now twice and a half what it was when the District Association of New South Wales was organized, in December, 1902. The Sunday-school cause, which was properly organized and firmly established several years ago by Bro. Wells, is also a decided success. We feel profoundly grateful when we think of what God's servants have been able to accomplish in this distant land. Bro. C. A. Davis of Newcastle, who was among the first converts of Bro. Rodger, is delighted with results. The same may be said of many others who have seen the lights and shadows in the history of our cause here. They are now in their declining years and can truly say: Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace; for mine eyes have seen the prosperity and present triumph of thy work. Many of these are the Lord's handmaidens. Among them we mention Sr. Webster also of Newcastle and Sr. Ellis of Sydney. Bro. and Sr. Ellis have indeed been as rocks "in a weary land."

I am getting good openings here. But there can not be much done by public preaching. I preach Sunday night in the church and Saturday night on the street. The rest of my work is done by private contact with the people. I distribute tracts and converse as opportunity offers from ten to twelve o'clock in the forenoon, and from two to five o'clock in the afternoon. Usually the entire afternoon is spent in paying special visits to particular people. Tract distributing of itself does not amount to much. Very frequently the tracts are not read. It is merely scouting; by it we learn where to concentrate our efforts. The nights are employed in holding Bible classes or visiting. This is the best time for the latter since the men are at home. Sometimes of course these visits take the form of Bible readings. I have partially lost my interest in public preaching. Our mission is not necessarily to sermonize or show that we are preachers but to bear our message. There is no wisdom in preaching to empty seats nor in discharging a cannon to kill a mouse. Social work is more direct, more effective, and also much easier.

One was baptized the 2d inst., and others are near. The branch officers and Saints have sustained me well. And my wife has been all that a wife could be. To me of course "there is just one girl." She takes much interest in writing and so do I.

News from the General Conventions and the Conference will reach us May 22. We are anxiously awaiting it.

In closing I extend thanks to Brn. John Bennett and George Wixom of California, Percy Yerks of Canada, and others for sending me literature.

In gospel bonds,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, May 16, 1904.

Editors Herald: As it has been some time since I have written anything for the HERALD on account of work and absence from home, will write a line to say I am still in the faith and striving earnestly daily to do my dear Master's will. The longer I am engaged in this grand and glorious latter-day work, the stronger I feel spiritually and the more confident I am that this is indeed the "faith that was once delivered unto the Saints."

The work is moving slowly, with some somewhat discouraged on account of the evils which will creep into the Church however hard we may try to prevent them, but many are still pressing on with the courage that comes with living prayerfully and watchfully, following closely in the Master's footsteps.

With a prayer for the success of the Lord's work everywhere, and asking the prayers of the Saints in return, I remain,

Your brother in the faith,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

FERRIS, Illinois, May 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: I called on A. R. Simmons of Fountain Green this week and gave him a copy of the HERALD containing his letter to Elder J. W. Peterson. He pronounced it correct. I told him I thought he made a rather bold assertion when he said that nine tenths of the stealing in Hancock County in "Mormon" times was done by Gentiles and laid upon the Mormons. He declared he was right, however, and explained how easy it was to steal anything they wanted and they lay it upon the Mormons. The anti-Mormons called his father a jack-Mormon and threatened to burn him out because he said the Mormons had as good a right to their religion as any other denomination. After the mob had besieged Nauvoo many were on the lookout to murder and rob defenseless Mormons. Lem. William's son had lost his knife, and going to his father said, "Daddy, if you kill a Mormon to-day won't you give me his knife?"

Mr. A. R. Simmons was educated for the Campbellite ministry I am told, but rejected their doctrine and left the Church.

The letter in the HERALD caused several inquiries to be directed to the Fountain Green postmaster, who is a Methodist. D. H. Bays of Woodward, Iowa, addressed him with substantially the following questions:

Does Simmons belong to any church?

Postmaster answered no.

Is he a reliable man?

Postmaster answered yes.

Whom can I address that will give me facts concerning Mormon trouble, in Hancock County?

To this last question the postmaster answered telling Bays that he knew of no one better informed or more reliable than Simmons and advised him to write to Simmons if he desired facts.

Simmons has not heard from Bays yet.

Simmons said he could give names of men engaged in bogus cattle raids impersonating Mormons, but he preferred not to do so now as the man who loaned his cattle for the purpose had two sons still living in Carthage.

Simmons' testimony has caused some comment here, and is a surprise to many, but no one expressed any doubt of its truth. He is a well-to-do farmer and respected in his community.

I am sorry for D. H. Bays. If he comes here now he will find more jack-Mormons in Hancock County than there were Mormons in 1844. Simmons could also give him some items concerning the blighted prosperity and business depression which succeeded the Mormon exodus, from which the county has not entirely recovered yet.

Very truly,

H. S. SALISBURY.

MACHIASPORT, Maine, May 15, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am one of the isolated ones, as there are no Saints here but myself, and the branch I belong to is about thirty miles away. A year ago last December my baby, then nearly two years old, was taken with sore eyes, and my father, Elder S. O. Foss, happened to come to my house that night to stay. So I had him administer to the baby and he was healed instantly. Nearly a month ago baby and myself were both healed. Baby had two convulsions and I looked any minute for her to die. She looked more like one dead than alive, but she was healed almost immediately and now she is the picture of health. Dear Saints, how good we ought always to live so to be worthy of such blessings. I ask an interest in all your prayers that I may live faithfully to the end.

Your sister,

AZNA BEAM.

CARROLL, Iowa, May 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: While at Mallard, Iowa, the writer had the pleasure of baptizing and confirming Sr. Elizabeth Fish. The Spirit testified to the fact that she should be blessed for the effort made some years ago to make the meetings of our ministers a success when there was a great influence brought to bear to prevent her doing so. The noble example and Christian liberty of her parents, Bro. and Sr. Joseph Fish, who were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at the time, and their hospitality many times since will long be remembered by the writer and others. Of course it will be understood that there were other sisters later who, under just as trying circumstances, were pleased to step forward and assist the ministers by presiding at the organ, and other parents whose homes have ever been a restful and pleasant abiding place for the missionaries, and they each and all have our thanks.

Sunday the 15th inst., the writer met with the west wing of the Mallard branch which is under the direct care of Bro. M. W. Hartshorn in the Pickerel Lake schoolhouse, where I preached twice and attended sacrament services. There were eleven members present and all took an active part, including the young son and daughter of Bro. and Sr. Frederick Hartshorn. We had an enjoyable time together and the good Spirit was present as we can testify. May their numbers increase and still greater spirituality be enjoyed by them.

On our way south the writer called at Coalville and reported to the presiding officer, Bro. William Jordison, that if my services were needed I could spend a few days with them, otherwise I would pass on to some other point. I was invited to stay and preached seven discourses, enjoying good liberty, and blessed Rossie Evangeline, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Jordison, and Nina Pearl, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. Samuel Dixon. At this place the Saints have a neat little chapel all paid for which stands as a monument to their faith and sacrifices.

A more hospitable people would be hard to find. They are talking of dedicating their chapel in the near future, and I hope their effort in that direction may be a grand success and bring much good to the Church.

On the 24th we called at Lanesboro and found the few Saints there usually well but the men folks away from home and prospects for holding services poor, so have moved on and am waiting in the depot expecting to reach home this afternoon, and district conference at Deloit later in the week if all goes well.

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

DUPONT, Indiana, May 19, 1904.

Dear Herald: After a period of over four months absence from home in the state of Pennsylvania, I returned home last Friday and found my family as well as common. Will leave on to-morrow for Crawford, Perry, and Dubois Counties to answer several calls that have been made through the mail. I will stop at Willtown first, then go to Grantsburg, and to other points. I am feeling splendid in the work, and will push forward with more zeal and earnestness this year than ever. My field of labor is far and wide. It brings to my mind the message that was given me nine years ago, by an angel, to go to the world and proclaim that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. This I have tried to do with all my might. How grand and how beautiful is this latter-day work. The more we rub it the brighter it shines. The Saints and friends have freely contributed to help pay my traveling expenses. After visiting the counties above mentioned I expect to return to Pennsylvania to complete some unfinished work I was shown would be done. Since my last report to the missionary, February 29, I have opened up five new places with splendid interest in two of them. As a result of a three-week meeting at Leith I baptized eight precious souls into the kingdom of God.

My desire is to hear of all the missionaries this year working faithfully. Let us all do all we can this year to push the work, and win many souls to Christ. Let us all work together as one, and God will bless our labors. I am as ever,

J. D. PORTER.

RED OAK, Texas, May 24, 1904.

Editors Herald: I arrived at Waxahachie about the 18th. Found the Saints well and preached twice to the members and a few outsiders. I then came up here where there are a few members, and preached twice. A few outsiders turned out also who seemed to enjoy my preaching. Am now sick with chills, but hope to recover soon. Expect to go up near Dallas and do some preaching. Bro. J. M. Nunley intends to go with me, and we hope to have good turnouts.

Your brother,

JOHN HARP.

COVINGTON, Kentucky, May 21, 1904.

Editors Herald: A few lines from Kentucky might be of interest to some of your readers. On the evening of the 11th I joined Bro. Harry Smith and Sr. Flora Kelley in the bonds of matrimony at the home of the bride in New Albany. Many of her lady friends were present to witness the ceremony, also many of Bro. Harry's friends from Louisville. On the 14th I preached at the funeral of Bro. and Sr. Krutzer's baby which died on the evening of the 12th. Came to this place on the 16th, and Bro. Kelley and I have been preaching all this week, with some good interest. One lady has demanded baptism. I will go next week to Ophir, Kentucky. Bro. Kelley will remain and push the work here. I called on the mayor and chief of police yesterday and found them real gentlemen. They promised me all the protection that I needed on the street, so will try street work. We have had some bad, rainy, and cold weather, but held cottage meetings. Bro. Hanner is pleased to be with us helping all he can. So may good be the result is my prayer.

J. W. METCALF.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. J. M. Terry, Oakland, California, May 15: "I go to-morrow to Chico to hold meetings and join in wedlock Bro. Hinty and Sr. Cora Wood, both good, noble Saints. Bro. George Dalny still lives in Santa Rosa. I am expecting to go to Santa Rosa some time in the near future. Bro. R. J. Parker is in very poor health, suffering much from his head and nerves. He came up to the city last week, and returned home yesterday, Bro. C. A. Parkin and wife going with him, he to occupy in Sacramento to-day. I preached here this morning with excellent liberty. I go to the city to-night to speak."

Sr. Eunice Beam wrote from Finleyville, Pennsylvania: "Bro. and Sr. Press Lamar, Monongahela City, Pennsylvania, desire the elders to come to their home. They are awaiting help as soon as possible. Brn. Becker and Baldwin, we see you are billed for this district. I do not know if Falls Creek, Pennsylvania, belongs to the Pittsburg District or not, but there is a work to be done there, and when the Lord's time arrives may the work be accomplished all around. May the time speedily come for the harvest to be gathered."

Sr. H. C. Powell, Cayucas, California, writes: "Please find inclosed two dollars for Graceland College from Mrs. Harriet Shipp. She says she thinks it a perfect shame that Graceland must be closed. I also send fifty cents for Graceland, and pray the Lord that other Saints may see fit to send their offerings."

Bro. J. W. Lane writes from Little Sioux, Iowa: "We are doing what we can to keep the campfire blazing, and hope to be true to the covenant with the Master."

Bro. W. Mackie, Melbourne, Australia, writes under date of April 15, 1904: "Our conference just over was one of the most spiritual we have had in Victoria. Bro. Butterworth has just completed the church building at Geelong, where there is every promise of a grand future for the progress of the work. The work is advancing steadily. We trust that the General Conference now over was a great success in every way, and that you have all had a profitable time. We await news anxiously."

Bro. G. T. Griffiths wrote May 18: "I leave again Saturday for a tour to Sharon, Conneautville, and other points in Pennsylvania. I had a splendid time at Wheeling, Steubenville, and Chester. My brother is here and is quite sick, but some better to-day."

Bro. George M. Shippy writes on May 16: "The Lord's work is onward in Detroit and vicinity. Five adult converts were baptized yesterday, four in Detroit and one in Wayne. Others are near the kingdom in both places."

Bro. W. J. Brewer, writing from Dufur, Oregon, May 16: "There is one family of Saints living at Dufur, fifteen miles south of The Dalles, Oregon, who would be glad to see any of the elders and will guarantee them a place to stay and a place to preach and stage fare to and from the The Dalles. We hope to hear from some one in the near future."

Bro. D. W. Shirk, Minatare, Nebraska, May 13: "Elder C. W. Prettyman is with us and doing good work when he gets an audience, but the people are real busy with their irrigation now. I suppose the gospel tent will be on the move about June 1. We are beginning to look for Bro. R. O. Self."

The following are a few letters received by Bishop E. L. Kelley:

Maine.

Bro. and Sr. T. H. and R. M. Summerfield, Madison: "Inclosed please find one dollar to help lift the incumbrance from Graceland College. Would like to send more, but this will help some, and our prayer is that the call for aid will not be in vain, but hope all with one accord will send in their mites and so fulfill the law."

Elder W. E. LaRue, Jonesport: "Inclosed find five dollars as a contribution from myself to apply in behalf of Graceland College. I thoroughly believe in the sentiment expressed in a recent editorial in the HERALD, viz: 'It is neither proper nor right that a progressive body like the Reorganization should permit this enterprise to fail for want of moral and financial support.'"

Michigan.

Sr. Mabel Stickney, Rapson, writes: "As the time is limited for the Saints in general to pay off the College debt I send our mite, five dollars to further on the work, for father, mother, and myself. I pray that every Saint's heart will be touched and put in action their amount, be it great or small, for the payment of the College debt, so when the time comes there will be money enough and to spare."

Kansas.

Bro. W. R. Steele, Nelson: "You can count on me for fifteen dollars for our blessed Graceland College. I am too poor to send my children to it, but may it please God to help us that her doors may never be closed, but ever open for the good of the youth of this Church."

Texas.

Sr. S. D. Riley, Cleburne: "With much pleasure I send you one dollar for Graceland, with the hope and prayer that all who are 'called to be Saints' will also add their mites as I have done, for I feel it would be indeed sad and a shame and reproach to the whole Church to close the College doors, and I do not wish to believe that this will happen to our beloved institute of learning. With kindest wishes and hopes for Graceland I remain," etc.

Connecticut.

Thomas Knox, Terryville: "It is with pleasure that I now write you on account of Graceland College. I think it will be a great drawback to the Church if it be closed, in not having young men and women well equipped for the work. To show my sympathy I inclose ten dollars for the College fund."

Carthage, Illinois.

Bro. J. W. Weaver: "I see published in the Ensign that they are having some little trouble lifting the debt on Graceland College; so I feel for one to help a little. You will find inclosed one dollar. If every Latter Day Saint would pay one dollar or fifty cents how easy it would be to pay the debt! Of course there are some who have paid well. I am very poor financially and also in health, but I am so thankful that I am able and willing to help some, for I know it is God's work which ought to be attended to and can be done."

Country Life in America for June is one of the largest and most beautiful numbers of this superbly illustrated magazine. Country Life has about doubled both in size and circulation, we understand, during the last year; which shows the wisdom of a magazine for those who really love the country. Among the leading features for June is an article on Indian woodcraft and making fire by rubbing sticks, Ernest Thompson Seton; also "How to Sail a Small Yacht," by C. G. Davis; "The Transformation of the Bulldog," with remarkable illustrations, by James Watson; "How to Make a Living from the Land," a fifth installment by Professor L. H. Baily, dealing in a definite way with a pure-milk dairy; "Doors and Doorways," artistically and architecturally considered by E. C. Holtzoper, and "How to Make Fruit Trees Bear," by S. W. Fletcher. Many other articles, all superbly illustrated, deal with widely varied practical subjects such as orchids-raising in the domestic greenhouse, by Wilhelm Miller; "Golfing," by Walter J. Travis; home-building, flower, fruit, and vegetable growing, and useful hints for the vacation months; altogether, it stands for all that is pure and best in American country life, and unlike most magazines, it grows even larger and more beautiful in the summer months.

Miscellaneous Department.

Pastoral.

To the Saints in Great Britain; Greeting: It having pleased God through the Church to appoint me to labor among you for another conference year, I take this opportunity to express my gratitude to all for the uniform kindness and sympathy which has been manifested towards me. I appreciate very deeply the spirit of harmony which has prevailed in our mutual relations, especially among the official brethren with but one or two exceptions, and trust that this feeling of mutual confidence may be increased as these relations are continued.

In my experience in the mission, there seems to be a deepening of spiritual life, a growing desire for a more practical application of the light and knowledge we profess; may this disposition be nurtured and encouraged, for our religion is nothing if it consists only in theory. To-day, as ever, our gospel must come not in word alone; but in power and in demonstration. To have a perfect method is very necessary, but the theory or method is useless, if we fail to "work it out" into the practical results—the concrete Christ-character which is the ideal of our profession. We have a splendid cause, a glorious field of possibilities ever open before us, but simply to talk and preach of it produces but sparse results and often brings us and the cause into contempt; to demonstrate the fruit of the gospel is an evidence which cannot be gainsayed. Let us not be content with a nominal standing in the Church, nor look upon our baptismal certificate in the light of an insurance policy or a talisman; but let us regard our Church associations as God-ordained means for the development of the divine nature in us as individuals, this, the end of which our standing in the Church is but the means. I urge earnestly a deep and prayerful consideration of this, for in this and this only is the opportunity of the Church to exhibit its strength and adaptability to meet present needs. May we by the grace of God be able and willing to improve the opportunity.

I have found in some places a disposition to criticize and find fault with missionaries, local officers, and with each other; also I have been pained to learn of some who have sought to injure the reputation of leading ministry by exposing faults or failings, real or imaginary. Let us cease from this. Our heavenly Father has said such "contention is unseemly"; it can only provoke pain and distress and cause spiritual paralysis. Let us remember that each is imperfect and is in this state of probation, this school of life experience for the very purpose of acquiring knowledge and perfectness. May we try and remember as God's family on earth that we should be as dear and sacred to each other as though we were brethren and sisters in the flesh, inasmuch as we claim a common parentage and membership in and with the household of faith. Kindly consideration of each other's disposition and individual peculiarities should temper our attitude and conduct one towards another, especially among the ministry. Study to be gentle and thoughtful of each other's good in private deportment and in public meetings, especially in business-meetings and conferences, conducting ourselves respectfully and in the spirit of gospel etiquette; as surely as we do so will that same treatment be meted to us again.

In case of any having occasion to find fault with a missionary go to the one with whom you are offended and state the difficulty, giving opportunity for explanation and rectification if the matter is important, and if you can not obtain satisfaction by this means, report the difficulty to the missionary in charge. If it should be any local officer report to president of branch, any district officer to the president of district. If it should be the missionary in charge report him to the Presidency. Do not under any circumstances make it a subject for gossip or scandal. In all matters of individual grievances seek to have the difficulty adjudicated according to the law of the Church; do not let the difficulty cause pain and distress to many by sulking over it and nursing it, as this develops an undesirable complication and lays such a one open to charges of unchristianlike conduct. Let us educate ourselves along the lines of common deportment as members of the Church and we will avoid much sorrow and pain.

I would like to call attention to the conducting of public services; there is much room for improvement. I have noticed that instead of assembling in quietness and reverence which manifest an intelligent conception of and commensurate preparation for the purpose in view in meeting for worship, viz., communion with God, we often are noisy and irreverent, requiring often that the president of the meeting call the members to order, and during service a spirit of unrest seems to keep the atmosphere in a state of agitation. Sometimes this is caused by members in charge of children, making themselves uncomfortable in unreasonable and futile attempts to keep the little ones quiet and orderly. This is unnecessary. Church services offer neither time nor opportunity for training children. This can and should be done at home and the example set before children by the adults manifesting a calm and reverent attitude while in church or meeting-hall. When service is ended let conversation and mutual inquires be controlled by the consciousness of solemnity and remembering that we have, as it were, just passed out of God's immediate presence.

I trust you will pardon me for being careful to detail these matters; they are apparently trifling, but they have much to do with our standing as a whole.

I would like to call attention to the great need for the branch officers generally to strive for increased efficiency in the performance of their respective duties. I do not think it is saying too much to say that largely, if not altogether, the spiritual condition of the branch is depending upon the fidelity and efficiency of the branch officers. In order to cultivate an intelligent regard for the different duties of the various officers in the branch, I would suggest the advisability of the branch officers meeting together often in council, to advise, report the conditions of the branch, and counsel together. Let each regard his calling as sacred and as in honor bound faithfully discharge his responsibilities.

Regarding financial conditions, I need scarcely remind you that the outlook is very discouraging. The past year has been a very trying one. The missionaries have suffered much privation and have been worried by grave anxiety. This year our missionary staff has been reduced in order to bring our expenditure more nearly in proportion with our income, but it will still require a strenuous effort to meet our financial responsibilities. In view of the critical condition of the work I would urge each and all to observe the law governing financial conditions, suggesting at the same time that we all endeavor to pay our tithing systematically and regularly. To do so will greatly facilitate the work of the local bishopric.

I regret to know that some have felt it necessary to withhold their hand in this regard because they disagreed with the attitude of the missionaries. May I remind you that none are justified in neglecting duty because others may be guilty of wrong-doing? God holds us individually responsible for the discharge of our own duty. Let us put suspicion and fear away, move out in the line of duty with strong confidence in God's power and willingness to care for his own work.

The following brethren will labor as appointed until such time as it may be deemed expedient to change their field of operation. I plead for the faith and confidence of the Saints in behalf of these brethren, praying God's choicest blessing may attend all his children in these Islands: Elder E. B. Morgan, in charge of Wales; Elder W. H. Greenwood, Sheffield District; Elder Thomas Taylor, Leeds District; Elder F. J. Pierce, Leeds District; Bro. W. Newton will labor in the South of England, including London District.

Will the missionaries report promptly to me July 1, October 1, and January 1.

Inasmuch as financial conditions do not justify any additional expenditure, it is deemed inexpedient that Bro. J. G. Jenkins should leave his employment and fill his appointment as announced per General Conference, but will labor locally as circumstances may permit. Respectfully submitted,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

HAMILTON, Scotland, 19 Burublea Street.

To the Saints and Friends of Minnesota; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of this mission under Bro. Frederick A. Smith, I write to secure your hearty coöperation in pushing the work. We need your help and will appreciate every effort in that direction and I will ask that every Saint living outside of branch limits write me concerning the prospects for work in his vicinity. If you can secure a place for preaching do not hesitate for fear no good can be done, or because past efforts may have not succeeded as well as you wished. Remember, a sower went forth to sow. That is what we are here for, you as well as the missionary, and because some seed may fall where it will not bring forth fruit, we should not be discouraged. Only one fourth of the seed sown in the parable fell on good ground, but see what a harvest it brought forth!

This field is a very large one and the Saints are scattered and it costs too much for missionaries to go from place to place on uncertainties. So secure a place for preaching first, then notify me, stating the best time for your particular locality and I will do the best I can to send some one at that time.

We are here as your servants. We want to help you and if successful work is done you must help us. Let all come to the reunion so we can get acquainted with you. Write me at Ferguson Falls. I will be there, if nothing prevents, from June 10 to 20. Hoping we can and will labor pleasantly and successfully together this year and bring about an abundant harvest,

H. A. McCoy.

To the Saints of the Gallands Grove and Little Sioux Districts:—Having been placed in charge of the mission work in these districts I wish to say a few words more to you than our missionary in charge has said. Our missionaries are but few and the needs of the work are great, so it is apparent to all that we of the missionaries can not afford to waste any time or occupy our time doing work in branches that the local brethren can attend to. Let me urge upon the local brethren to get out as much as you can and do work for the Master. We should be, and I believe we are, equally interested in the work that is "intrusted to all." "There shall be no sleeping soldiers in the army of the Lord." I would like to keep in as close touch with the work in our field as it is possible and so ask that all who see places where openings can be made or where it is thought good can be done or where there are calls for preaching that the local men can not fill, to notify me and we will do the best we can to supply the need or demand. My permanent address is Dow City, Iowa.

I would like to hear from the missionaries often so I may know where to find you in case there should come an urgent call from your part of the mission. Praying God's blessing upon us in our labor, I remain,

Your brother and coworker,
May, 13, 1904.

D. M. RUDD.

The Bishopric.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S APPEAL.

To the Saints of the Northern Wisconsin District: The Church has again sent the elders and missionaries to various fields to preach the gospel in its fullness. These brethren make a great sacrifice in leaving their loved ones and their homes for the cause we all love so well. The tithing or temporal law is the means by which the families are supported when the missionaries give their time and talents to build up the work of the Lord in the world. If we withhold our support from them it will hinder and injure the Lord's work. Shall we not, dear Saints, show our faith by our works? The Lord has said, "If ye love me, keep my commands." In Malachi third chapter, he tells us he will prove to us the truth of his word by opening the windows of heaven and rebuking the devourer for our sakes. Also, that a book of remembrance is kept of those that fear the Lord. So we want our names on the book of remembrance! "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord, when I come to make up my jewels."

Let us prove the Lord's word by keeping all his commands and he will surely bless us. I wish also to call the attention of the Saints to Graceland College. The Lord has said the College debt should be paid. Our share as a district is one hundred and thirty-eight dollars. If all would give a little, as they can, we could easily raise this amount. I will promptly receipt for any amount large or small on College debt, or for the tithing or offering funds. Hoping to hear from all the Saints and friends in the district regarding this matter. In bonds,

LESTER WILDERMUTH.

NECEDAH, Wisconsin, R. F. D. No. 2.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENTS.

Southeastern Illinois District.—Saints and friends in Southeastern Illinois District please take notice that Bro. F. M. Slover, having been appointed missionary to labor in a distant field, has resigned the appointment as Bishop's agent in Southeastern Illinois District, and upon recommendation of officer in charge, Elder I. N. White, and also former agent, Bro. F. M. Slover, and others, Elder F. M. Davis, Thompsonville, Illinois, R. F. D. No. 2, has been duly appointed agent in the place of Bro. Slover.

The Bishopric take pleasure in extending thanks to Bro. Slover for his efficient and faithful labors in the district in the past and trust the Lord may prosper his efforts where they may extend. We also duly commend the new agent, Bro. F. M. Davis, to the Saints of the Southeastern Illinois District, and bespeak for him the ready aid and earnest help of each and every one to assist him in carrying on the work imposed. Trusting the Lord may bless one and all of the helpers, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Northern Texas District.—The Saints of the Northern Texas District are hereby given notice that Bishop's agent, Elder A. J. Moore, of said district, has duly resigned his present work as agent of the Bishopric in said district and appointment is hereby made of Bro. J. H. Amend, of Oklaunion, Texas, as agent of said district.

Bro. A. J. Moore has performed the work of agent of the Northern Texas District faithfully and well for a number of years and the Bishopric of the Reorganized Church greatly regret the loss of his services at the present time, but we are assured by Bro. A. J. Moore and others that Bro. Amend will make a faithful and energetic agent of financial matters in the district. The Bishopric extends special thanks to Bro. Moore for services as agent and trust that he may be blessed and prospered in the local work in which he now proposes to engage.

Bro. Amend is also commended to the Saints of the Northern Texas District and we ask for him the cooperation and assistance of all those in the district who are interested and love the truth, and we trust all may remember and aid in his work.

In behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 28, 1904.

Conference Notices.

The Northern Wisconsin District conference will convene with the Reed Branch, at Twin Lakes, near Chetek, June 18, 1904, at 10 a. m. Send reports to A. V. Closson, Chetek, Barron County, Wisconsin, care James Mair. Bro. F. M. Cooper, and W. A. McDowell expected, good attendance desired. A. V. Closson, district president.

The St. Louis District conference will convene at St. Louis, Missouri, June 11, 12, 1904, at 8 a. m. Reports should be in my hands before June 10. C. J. Remington, secretary.

Conference of Chatham District will meet in Chatham, June 19, at 10 a. m. Arrangements have been made with the Grand Trunk Railroad, Canadian Pacific Railroad, Michigan Central Railroad, the Pere Marquette, and the Wabash Railroad for reduced rates on the certificate plan. A. Leverton, president.

The Far West District conference will convene with the Stewartville Branch, June 18, 19. Reports and delegate credentials should be sent one week prior to convening of conference to the district secretary, Charles P. Faul.

Those coming to the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District conference by rail please stop off at Fremont, Indiana. Conveyance will meet the 9 a. m., 1.20 and 1.45 p. m. trains. The 7 p. m. train will be met by Bro. Clark, of Fremont, and places provided for Friday and Saturday nights, June 10 and 11. O. H. Storey, Branch President.

Convention Notices.

The Nauvoo District Sunday-school association will convene at Argyle, Iowa, June 10, 1904, at 10.30 a. m. Jessie J. Ward, secretary.

The Minnesota District Sunday-school association will convene at Fergus Falls, Minnesota, June 16-18, in the afternoon of each day. Mrs. G. W. Ochsner, secretary.

Chatham District Sunday-school convention will convene with the Chatham Saints, Friday, June 10, 1904, at 10 a. m. Officers of district and schools report in writing. Jessie A. Hackett, president.

Religio Society of the Chatham District will meet in Chatham, Ontario, June 9, 1904, 10 a. m. Anthony R. Hewitt, secretary.

Reunion Notice.

The Southern California Reunion will convene in the same grove occupied last year near Santa Ana, on Friday, July 22, at 10 a. m. We hope to have with us of the general ministry Apostles Joseph Luff and Gomer T. Griffiths, also Columbus Scott, T. W. Chatburn, C. E. Crumley, A. Carmichael, A. E. Jones, William Gibson. The committee propose to make this reunion the banner one. Notice of arrangements will be given. Let the saints make preparations to attend. Information as to tents, board, etc., will be cheerfully furnished on application by Will Mills, Santa Ana, one of the Reunion committee.

T. W. Williams, president.

Correction.

In Elder Evan's article, on page 478 of last HERALD, first line of fourth paragraph, second column, should read: "Why was it that these stalwarts (I say stalwarts," instead of present reading.

Notices.

SUBSCRIBERS TO THE "RELIGIO QUARTERLY."

A change has been made in the place of publication of the Religio Quarterly. Please take notice and hereafter address all orders and remittances, also orders for constitution and by-laws to Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

"She Wants to Tell."

Sr. M. E. Webber of Queensboro, Ontario, Canada, writes January 12, 1904, saying: "Dear Brother:—I want to tell you how pleased I am with your Quit-to-bac. My brother used less than two boxes and has not touched tobacco since he began to use it and has gained in flesh and is better in every way." If it cures others, why not you? Three boxes sent post-paid for $1.50 with positive guarantee of cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.

Address, (Bro.) B. F. Ordway, 228 Hancock St., Peoria, Ill., U. S. A.

NEW BOOKS

JOSEPH SMITH, WHO WAS HE?

A valuable work of 225 pages completely refuting the charges that Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy. Paper cover 50c. Cloth 75 cents

EBELING-RIGGLE DEBATE.

Subject: The Kingdom of God. A book of 492 pages bound in cloth..... 50 cents

THE OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL

By Elder Joseph Luff. A book of nineteen sermons on vital gospel subjects. Makes a good missionary..... $1.00

EXEGESIS OF THE PRIESTHOOD

This book is a compilation of scripture on the priesthood and the duties of the various officers in the priesthood. Every church officer should have one $1.00

Herald Publishing House

Lamoni, Iowa

BOOK OF MORMON MAPS AGAIN

G. F. WESTON, removed from Buchanan, Michigan, to Walker, Vernon County, Missouri.

LECTURE SIZE.—5x3 feet, on muslin, limp, in colors, for Religios or Ministry. (Postage 25c included)..... $3.25
Same, full finish, varnished, (expressage not included)..... $5.00

HOME AND OFFICE—size 39x51 inches, limp, on muslin, in colors, for Ministry or Religios, very nice, (postage 8c included)..... $1.60
Same full finish, varnished, (expressage not included)..... $2.50

SPECIAL MAP OF ARABIA.—28x36 inches, Book of Mormon features, limp muslin, in colors, (postage 5c included)..... 55c

CHARTS—SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—40x52 inches, on limp muslin, numbers 1 and 2 in colors with various illustrations, signs on Sun, Moon, etc., each (postage 8c included)..... $1.60

CHART—ANCIENT CHARACTERS.—3x6 feet. Book of Mormon and others compared, in colors, (postage 12c included)..... $1.60

SMALL CHARTS.—Which shall we serve? The Christian Race; The body of Christ; The Resurrection; Charity; The Lord's Supper; each 12x36 inches. Illustrated and with bright lettering, on limp muslin, in colors, for Religio and Sunday-school rooms or for preaching, each (postage included)..... 30c

DISPENSATION CHART—by Elder J. D. Stead, 5x16 feet, on muslin, in colors, finely illustrated, varnished in full finish, (expressage not included) $10.

22-4

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

KEOKUK & WESTERN R. R. CO.

North—Leave Leon 2: 40 p. m.; arrive at Des Moines 6: 05 p. m.
South—Leave Des Moines 8: 25 a. m.; arrive at Leon 11: 45 a. m.
Trains daily except Sunday; connect with C., B. & Q. at Leon.

Herald Office Publications.

All books are sold by numbers. Send numbers only. Send all orders and make all remittances payable to Herald Publishing House, Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County Iowa.

REORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

201. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 60

EUSEBIUS' ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

226. Each..... 1 50

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Interest Never Sleeps.

It works while you sleep like a silent partner.

If you have any money that is not earning interest, write at once to the oldest established bank in Lamoni.

The Commercial Bank,
D. F. Nicholson, Cashier. LAMONI, IOWA.

A PRACTICAL $5 TYPEWRITER.

An up-to-date machine. Can be carried in the pocket. Size 9¼ by 2¼ by 1¼ inches, weight 20 ounces. Writes capitals, small letters, numbers and punctuation marks; 76 characters in all. We guarantee safe arrival by mail or express. Circulars free. Address, NEW CENTURY CO., 22-4 P. O. Box 933, Pittsburg, Pa.

Business Men, Elders, and Other Latter Day Saint Friends

We buy old typewriters, rebuild them, and make them practically new, and sell from $10 up. Write us for our special bargain list just out

Sherman Art Company
1224 Congress St., 17r4t Chicago

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
LAMONI - - IOWA

TO the Saints who may feel an interest in the Independence Manufacturing and Mercantile Company, we beg to say that on account of an almost unexpected heavy trade in our planing mill and lumber yard, we have, in order to meet the demand, increased our capital from $25,000 to $50,000 and now offer stock in shares from $10 up.

We certainly think money so invested will earn from ten to fifteen per cent and at the same time aid in building up and establishing permanent industries of our own, also furnish labor to the unemployed.

Shall not the children of the kingdom be as wise as the children of the world?

Send all remittances to A. R. White, Independence, Missouri.

ELLIS SHORT, President.
19-4t A. R. WHITE, Secretary.

MINISTRY BLANK REPORTS.

209. Per dozen..... 10

The Saints' Herald

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

Flora L. Scott

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, June 8, 1904

Number 23

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
 of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR
 I. A. SMITH . . . . . ASSISTANT EDITOR
 FRED'K M. SMITH . . . . . CORRESPONDING EDITOR
 Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

Editorial.

PRESS WEEK AT THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION.*
 (Continued from last week.)

The management of the Fair planned Press Week, and invited the newspapers of the world to participate. It is estimated that about five or six thousand editors responded to the invitation. The National Editorial Association held its annual session in the Hall of Congresses, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Besides the business done, some excellent programs were given, in which men of note and ability appeared. Unfortunately we could not attend all, but the sessions we did attend we thoroughly enjoyed. At these sessions we were privileged to hear Sir Hugh Gilzean-Reid, a noted journalist of London; Edmond Vance Cooke, of Cleveland, Ohio, sometimes styled the impertinent poet; Homer Davenport, cartoonist on the New York Journal; and Henry Watterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal. That Mr. Watterson, one of the ablest of United States editors to-day, and Homer Davenport, an original and successful cartoonist, should appear on the same program, is significant. Mr. Watterson is often spoken of as the last of a line of great editors, who made their editorial pages the attractive part of their papers, and who wielded thereby powerful influence. He spoke on the subject, "The editorial page." His treatise of the subject probably is a close synopsis of what he tried to make his life-work as an editor. That he has been a successful editor the people of the United States know full well. No class of men know it better than do the editors of the country; and as the aged veteran of the sanctum stepped before his audience of editors he was greeted with a rousing applause so warm and sincere that it brought tears to his eyes and a quiver into his voice.

While Mr. Watterson stands as the representative of the newspaper of a decade or more ago, Mr. Davenport might well be termed a representative of the present day tendency in newspaper production. The brilliancy of the editorial page is being dimmed by the ascendancy of the cartoon. However, we trust the cartoon will not entirely displace the editorial page, as intimated by Mr. Davenport. Be that as it may, his lecture was thoroughly enjoyed by his

*In last week's HERALD, under this heading, fifth line of second paragraph, read "May 16-21" instead of "June 16-21."

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
Press Week at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition	521
A Treasure Lately Discovered	526
Original Articles:
Let God be Magnified	527
Forgiveness	530
Selected Articles:
The Unfortunate Russian Jew	531
Mothers' Home Column:
The Availing Prayer	533
Little Things	533
Sunday-School Department:
The Same Question in Another Form	535
Another Question	535
Advantages of the Convention	535
Letter Department:
Letters	536
Extracts from Letters	540
Miscellaneous Department:
Conference Minutes:
Alabama	540
Convention Minutes:
Eastern Maine	540
Pottawattamie	540
Pastoral:
F. J. Ebeling	540
J. C. Foss	541
First Presidency	541
The Bishopric	541

BRO. I. N. WHITE was, on the 2d of the month, in Northwestern Kansas District. He says: "I left Independence on May 16, and have been busy this way since leaving St. Joseph debate. Will be in Kansas City early next week and go to Southern Missouri District about June 15. A twenty-mile ride in Democrat wagon before me this morning."

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN improved composition and increased his vocabulary by rewriting from memory articles he had read. Then he would compare and rewrite it until it was as good as the original.

audience, and his rapid but certain work with the crayon, as he in a few brief, bold strokes would depict the well-known features of some celebrity, was a revelation to many of us who know of the work of the cartoonist only from the finished work as it appears in the daily press.

On the evening of May 18 the Exposition management held a reception in the West Pavilion for the visiting editors. It was an affair which was termed by the papers on the day following as a "brilliant" affair, so we presume it was. Wife and I strolled up to the Pavilion about the appointed hour, and found a cordon of "Jefferson Guards" thrown around the place. Our press credentials, however, enabled us to "break through" and we went in. Not seeing any of our Iowa friends, we felt somewhat lost till we fell in with Mr. and Mrs. Oliver D. Shock, of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. Under his trained guidance the four of us passed through the "brilliant" occasion. In the receiving line were several people of note, as follows: Secretary of State John Hay; President David R. Francis, of the Exposition; Captain Henry King, Secretary Walter B Stevens, of the Exposition; Sir Hugh Gilzean-Reid, permanent president of the World's Press Parliament; Miss Gilzean-Reid, George H. Johns, J. H. Hertel, Joseph A. Graham, and John T. Magner. As each approached the line his name was asked by the first in the receiving line, and then he was passed along to the others, who shook his hand, spoke his name, and gave a neat little inclination of the head which answered for a bow. In response to the question we gave our name as "Smith from Iowa." No doubt that receiving line felt quite a thrill of delight in meeting Smith from Iowa. Anyway, we had opportunity to shake hands with Secretary Hay, one of the greatest of living statesmen. And while Smiths in Iowa may be pretty common, we do not believe they are more common than Hay in Washington, unless, indeed, since the advent of the automobile.

After the receiving line was passed, tea was served by a number of Japanese women, whose dainty little ways and pretty grace quite captivated the editors. Following the tea edibles were served, and then the visitors gradually withdrew. We went away feeling we had quite enjoyed the "brilliant" affair.

WORLD'S PRESS PARLIAMENT.

On Thursday evening, May 19, at eight o'clock, occurred the great event of the week, so far as the visiting editors were concerned, viz., the opening session of the great World's Press Parliament, the greatest assemblage of journalists in the history of the world. The exercises were held in Festival Hall, the first to be held in that splendid audience chamber. On the spacious rostrum sat the newspaper representatives of thirty-five nations, and in the audience were press representatives of every State and great city in the United States. Only press representatives bearing credentials were permitted in the Hall.

Captain Henry King, of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, chairman of the executive committee of the Parliament, acted as temporary chairman and called the assembly to order. In a neat and instructive address, teeming with interesting historical information, he welcomed the visiting newspaper men, after prayer had been offered by Reverend Niccolls of St. Louis.

Following Captain King's address, President D. R. Francis was introduced, who in a neatly worded and earnest talk again cordially welcomed the press. Following him Captain King introduced Secretary John Hay as the chief speaker of the occasion. As the leading statesman of the United States stepped forward in response, the vast assembly arose almost as one man, and greeted him with tremendous applause. His address was appropriate, and so scholarly masterful that we deem it a privilege to here reproduce it in full:

I thank you, Mr. Chairman; I thank you, gentlemen—all of you—for your too generous and amiable welcome. I esteem it a great privilege to meet so many representatives of an estate which, more than any other, at this hour controls the world. It is my daily duty in Washington to confer with the able and distinguished representatives of civilized sovereigns and states. But we are all aware that the days of professional government are gone for ever; that behind us, and behind the rules we represent, there stands the vast, irresistible power of public opinion, which in the last resort must decide all the questions we discuss, and whose judgment is final. In your persons I greet the organs and exponents of that tremendous power with all the respect which is due to you and your constituency, deeply sensible of the honor which has been done me in making me the mouthpiece of the sentiment of appreciation and regard with which the nation welcomes you to this great festival of peace and of progress.

It is possible—if you will pardon a personal word from me—that the circumstances of my life may have commended me to the notice of President Francis, and may have led him to invite me here to-night to take part in this occasion in the dual capacity of host and guest. My years of newspaper work might entitle me to a modest place in your membership, while the valley of the mighty river which rolls by the wharves of St. Louis can never be considered by me otherwise than as my home. The years of my boyhood were passed on the banks of the Mississippi, and the great river was the scene of my early dreams. The boys of my day led an amphibious life in and near its waters in the summer time, and in the winter, its dazzling ice bridge, of incomparable beauty and purity, was our favorite playground; while our imaginations were busy with the glamour and charm of the distant cities of the South, with their alluring French names and their legends of stirring adventure and pictures of perpetual summer. It was a land of faery, alien to us in all but a sense of common ownership and patriotic pride. We built snow forts and called them the Alamo; we sang rude songs of the cane-brake and the corn-field; and the happiest days of the year to us who dwelt on the northern bluffs of the river were those that brought us, in the loud puffing and whistling steamers of the olden time, to the Mecca of our rural fancies, the bright and busy metropolis of St. Louis.

The historical value of the Mississippi is not less than its geographical and natural importance. Its course through the pages of our country's history is as significant as the tremendous sweep of its waters from the crystal lakes which sleep beneath the northern stars to the placid expanse of the Gulf of Mexico. Its navigation was a prize fiercely contended for by every chancellerie of western Europe. Many suitors have looked upon it since that gallant Prince Charming, Hernando de Soto, parted the curtains of its repose, and all have found it fair. It aroused equally the interest of the Briton, the Iberian, and the Gaul. When by virtue of one of the strangest caprices of the great game of diplomacy ever known it became our cherished possession, it gave rise to the fiercest political contests, the most far-reaching combinations. When the accumulated passions and purposes of a hundred years at last burst forth in a tempest of war, it became the center of the world's breathless interest and was flooded with the fatal and terrible light which plays about the battle-fields of fame and "shines in the sudden making of splendid names." So long as its waters roll to the sea, so long will the world remember the high resolution with which Grant and Sherman hewed their way southward and the chivalrous courage with which Johnston and Pemberton opposed them. So immense is the value of that silver bar that binds together the framework of the wedded States.

We celebrate, this year, with the generous assistance of a friendly world, the most important event in the history of this great valley, an event which in far-reaching and lasting results is surpassed by few in the life of the nation. It is perhaps true that to the philosophic mind all periods are critical—that every hour is the end of an era and the beginning of a new order of ages. But to us ordinary observers there occur from time to time crises in history when the line of cleavage between the old and the new is clear and distinct, where the aloe blooms, where the avalanche leaves the mountain top, where the leisurely march of events is quickened to the dynamic rush of irresistible destiny. The transfer of this imperial domain from European to American control was one of those transactions which render the period of their accomplishment memorable for all time. In no other act did the men who made the revolution,—"men," as Lowell called them, "with empires in their brains"—more clearly show their marvelous prophetic insight. The United States was, in 1803, a feeble folk, with hardly enough population to occupy the long Atlantic seacoast; with the great spaces of the middle west scarcely yet picketed by adventurous pioneers; with imperfect means of defense against a world which still looked askance at the half-grown upstart which might prove dangerous hereafter, with the heavy cares incident to the building of a new nation upon yet untried foundations. But weighty as were their responsibilities, they did not hesitate to assume others weightier still. To an undeveloped empire they seized the occasion to add another still wilder and more remote. To their half-finished task they undoubtedly superimposed another full of exacting and perilous possibilities. In their robust faith in the future—their fearless confidence in the force of the new democracy—difficulties were not considered and the impossible did not exist. To men of that strain, in an enterprise which promised usefulness and glory, toil and danger were only irresistible attractions.

While we should give due credit to the individual instrumentalities by which this great transaction was brought about, we should not forget the overwhelming influence exerted by the unseen director of the drama. Whether we call it the spirit of the age, or historic necessity, or the balance of power, or whether we reverently recognize in the matter the hand of that Providence which watched over our infancy as a people, we can not but admit that the acquisition of this vast territory was, in one way or another, sure to come. A wise diplomacy hastened it; a timid conservatism might have delayed it; but it was written in our horoscope. The surest proof of this lies in the eminent personalities by whom the purchase and sale were made. Jefferson was the last man in America of whom we could have expected this departure on the field of illimitable expansion, and Napoleon was, of all the sovereigns of Europe, the least likely to give up so vast an extent of empire.

One of the most brilliant and tenacious dreams of Bonaparte was to establish on the right bank of the Mississippi a Latin empire reaching from the gulf to the Pacific Ocean, extending in future ages the glory of France to the sunset seas. The principle dearest to the heart of Jefferson was that of a strict construction of the Constitution, which, in his view, forbade the exercise by the general government of anything but expressly delegated powers. It would have seemed like a contradiction in terms to expect either of these statesmen to agree upon a proposition which radically contravened the inmost convictions of each of them. But the nature of things was more powerful than either a Bonaparte or a Jefferson. No human influence could have controlled either of them, but the stars in their courses were still stronger, and they gladly obeyed the mandate of fate, which was in each case the mandate of an enlightened patriotism. France, divesting herself of this rich incumbance, was the better fitted for the supreme gladiatorial effort that awaited her, and Jefferson gained an immortal fame by preferring an immense benefit to his country to consistency in a narrow construction of the written law.

No man, no party can fight with any chance of final success against a cosmic tendency; no cleverness, no popularity, avails against the spirit of the age. In obeying that invincible tendency, against all his political convictions, Jefferson secured a conspicuous place in history; while the Federalist politicians, who should have welcomed this signal illustration and proof of the truth of their theory of the power of the government they had framed, through the influence of party spirit faltered in their faith and brought upon their party a lasting eclipse through their failure to discern the signs of the times. President Roosevelt, in the memorable address with which he dedicated last year this exhibition, used, in relation to this subject, these striking words: "As is so often the case in nature, the law of development of a living organism showed itself in its actual workings to be wiser than the wisdom of the wisest."

A glance at the map of Europe gives an idea of the vastness of this acquisition. It covers a space greater than that occupied by France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Spain, and Portugal; it overlaps the familiar world of history and literature. In its ample field grew up fourteen of our commonwealths; a taxable wealth of seven thousand millions of dollars accumulated there and a population of sixteen million souls have there found their homes, drawn not only from our elder communities, but from the teeming hives of humanity—the officinæ gentium—in every land beneath the quickening sun.

But more important than the immense material increase in the extent and resources of the new republic was this establishment of the principle, thus early in its career, that it was to assume no inferior position to other nations in its power to acquire territory, to extend its influence—in short, to do all that any independent, self-respecting power might do which was in accord with public morals, conducive to the general welfare, and not prohibited by the Constitution. Though the Federalists failed to embrace this great opportunity and thereby brought upon their party an Iliad of woes, the precedent had been set for all time for their successors. The nation had outgrown its swaddling clothes. Even the most impassioned advocates of strict construction felt this time that it was the letter that killeth and the spirit that giveth life. The nation moved on its imperial course. The new chart and compass were in their hands. The national principle once established, other things were naturally added to us. Lewis and Clarke, following and illustrating the great law of westerly migration, pushed through the wilderness and planted our banners by the shore of the peaceful sea. In the process of years Texas and the wide expanse of New Mexico came to us, and California, bringing a dower of countless riches that for unknown ages had veined her hills. Even the shores of the ocean could not long check the eagle in his marvelous flight. The isles of the uttermost seas became his stepping-stones.

This, gentlemen, is the lesson which we are called to contemplate amid the courts and the palaces of this universal exhibition: that when the nation exists, founded in righteousness and justice, whose object and purposes are the welfare of humanity, the things which make for its growth and the increase of its power, so long as it is true to its ideals, are sure to come to pass, no matter what political theories or individual sentiments stand in the way. The common good will ultimately prevail, though it "mock the counsels of the wise and the valor of the brave." I know what snares may lie in this idea—how it may serve as the cry of demagogues and the pretext for despots. Woe be unto the nation which misuses it! but shame and disaster is also the portion of those who fear to follow its luminous beaconing.

From every part of the world you have gathered to share in this secular festival of historic memories. You represent not only the world-wide community of intelligence, but the wonderful growth of these modern days of universal sympathy and good will—what our poet Bayard Taylor, speaking on a similar occasion in Vienna and adding, I believe, a new word to the German language, called Weltgemuehlichkeit. Of the phenomena of the last hundred years there is none more wonderful than that increase of mutual knowledge which has led inevitably to a corresponding increase in mutual toleration and esteem. The credit of this great advance in civilization belongs to the press of the world. It is true that it is the modest boast of modern diplomacy that its office is the removal of misunderstandings, that so far as intentions go its ways are pleasantness and its paths are peace; but how slight are the results that the best-intentioned diplomat can attain in this direction, compared with the illuminating blaze of light which the press each morning radiates on the universe. We can not claim that the light is all of one color, nor that there are not many angles of refraction; but, from this endless variety of opinion and assertion, truth at last emerges, and every day adds something to the world's knowledge of itself. There is a wise French proverb, "to understand is to pardon," and every step of progress which the peoples of the earth made in their comprehension of each other's conditions and motives is a step forward in the march to the goal desired by men and angels, of universal peace and brotherhood.

Upon none of the arts or professions has the tremendous acceleration of progress in recent years had more effect than upon that of which you are the representatives. We easily grow used to miracles; it will seem a mere commonplace when I say that all the wonders of the magicians invented by these ingenious oriental poets who wrote the Arabian Nights pale before the stupendous facts which you handle in your daily lives. The air has scarcely ceased to vibrate with the utterances of kings and rulers in the older realms when their words are read in the streets of St. Louis and on the farms of Nebraska. The telegraph is too quick for the calendar; you may read in your evening paper a dispatch from the antipodes with a date of the following day. The details of a battle on the shores of the Hermit Kingdom—a land which a few years ago was hidden in the mists of legend—are printed and commented on before the blood of the wounded has ceased to flow. Almost before the smoke of the conflict has lifted we read the obituaries of the unseparated dead. And not only do you record with the swiftness of thought these incidents of war and violence, but the daily victories of truth over error, of light over darkness; the spread of commerce in distant seas, the inventions of industry, the discoveries of science, are all placed instantly within the knowledge of millions. The seeds of thought perfected in one climate, blossom and fructify under every sky, in every nationality which the sun visits.

With these miraculous facilities, with this unlimited power comes also an enormous responsibility in the face of God and man. I am not here to preach you a gospel whose lessons are known to you far better than to me. I am not calling sinners to repentance, but I am following a good tradition in stirring up the pure minds of the righteous by way of remembrance. It is well for us to reflect on the vast import, the endless chain of results, of that globe-encircling speech you address each day to the world. Your winged words have no fixed flight; like the lightning, they traverse the ether according to laws of their own. They light in every clime; they influence a thousand different varieties of minds and manners. How vastly important is it, then, that the sentiments they convey should be those of good will rather than of malevolence, those of national concord rather than of prejudice, those of peace rather than of hostility. The temptation to the contrary is almost irresistible. I acknowledge with contrition how often I have fallen by the way. It is far more amusing to attack than to defend, to excite than to soothe. But the highest victory of great power is that of self-restraint, and it would be a beneficent result of this memorable meeting, this ecumenical council of the press, if it taught us all—the brethren of this mighty priesthood—that mutual knowledge of each other which should modify prejudices, restrain acerbity of thought and expression and tend to some degree to bring in that blessed time—

"When light shall spread and man be liker man Through all the seasons of the Golden Year."

What better school was ever seen in which to learn the lesson of mutual esteem and forbearance than this great Exposition? The nations of the earth are met here in friendly competition. The first thing that strikes the visitor is the infinite diversity of thought and effort which characterizes the several exhibits; but a closer study every day reveals a resemblance of mind and purpose more marvelous still. Integrity, industry, the intelligent adaption of means to ends, are everywhere the indispensable conditions of success. Honest work, honest dealing, these qualities mark the winner in every part of the world. The artist, the poet, the artisan and the statesman, they everywhere stand or fall through the lack or the possession of similar qualities. How shall one people hate or despise another when we have seen how like us they are in most respects, and how superior they are in some! Why should we not revert to the ancient wisdom which regarded nothing human as alien, and to the words of Holy Writ which remind us that the Almighty has made all men brethren?

In the name of the President—writer, soldier, and statesman, eminent in all three professions and in all equally an advocate of justice, peace, and good will—I bid you a cordial welcome, with the prayer that this meeting of the representatives of the world's intelligence may be fruitful in advantage to the press of all nations and may bring us somewhat nearer to the dawn of the day of peace on earth and good will among men. Let us remember that we are met to celebrate the transfer of a vast empire from one nation to another without the firing of a shot, without the shedding of one drop of blood. If the press of the world would adopt and persist in the high resolve that war should be no more, the clangor of arms would cease from the rising of the sun to its going down, and we could fancy that at last our ears, no longer stunned by the din of armies, might hear the morning stars singing together and all the sons of God shouting for joy.

Secretary Hay was followed by M. Monprofit, of Le Figaro, Paris, who responded with a speech in which he paid pretty compliment to President Francis, St. Louis, Secretary Hay and others, and to the United States. Speaking of these world's fairs, he said:

The expositions are not merely days of joy and rest in the work of the peoples. They appear at long intervals, as some summits from whence we measure the distance we have traveled. They are the necessary agents of the economical and social progress of the nations.

Captain King next introduced Sir Hugh Gilzean-Reid, permanent president of the Parliament. Sir Hugh is a man with an object. Largely through his instrumentality an association of British journalists has been effected, an association which has legal status and rights. He expressed the hope that this Press Parliament would take steps to make it permanent. One could see he was fired with the ambition to be instrumental in a movement which would unite the editors of the world into a great movement which would, as no other organization can, promote the gospel of peace and the brotherhood of man. A most worthy ambition, and we trust the veteran journalist may see his hopes materialize. In a measure he already has, as before the closing session of the Parliament steps were taken to make it a permanent institution.

The first session of the World's Press Parliament at St. Louis, Missouri, held Thursday, May 19, 1904, will go down to future generations as a most historical event.

We were not privileged to attend any more of the sessions of the parliament, but we were very glad we were afforded the privilege of being present at the first.

THE PIKE.

We must not leave this account without saying something of the Pike. What the Midway Plaisance was to the Columbian Exposition, the Pike is to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. Sort of an enlarged Coney Island, in which are found amusements of an almost endless variety. Through the courtesies extended the press we were permitted to see a number of the attractions. It was on Friday afternoon that we became, in the parlance of the Fair, "Pikers." We found some of the attractions entertaining and instructive. The Tyrolean Alps afforded something fine in the way of scenic effects, and one can easily imagine himself in a tram-car ascending the Alps. Views of pretty valleys and quaint towns, waterfalls and mountain crannies, arranged in pleasing manner, give one a very complete idea of the Alpine scenery. Mysterious Asia, Streets of Seville, Ireland, and what not take one by easy stages to all parts of the world. One attraction which we particularly enjoyed was Hagenbeck's Zoo, Circus, and Animal Paradise. There one can see to what an astonishing degree has the art of animal training been carried. Lions, tigers, leopards, pumas, polar bears, and German boarhounds were on the inclosed stage-cage at once, doing tableaux and tricks together, controlled by the dominating genius and will power of a single man. A climax was reached when the trainer caused two tigers and two lions, massive ones, too, to lie down side by side, and then made a couch for himself of their furry bodies, the head of a giant tiger for his pillow. At Hagenbeck's one can see trained animals from a patient elephant down to a tiny pig.

Another attraction we enjoyed as being instructive was "Hale's Firefighters," where one can see a skillfully trained corps of firemen go through the actual operations of a fight against the fire fiend.

Jim Key, the educated horse, one which will do sums in arithmetic, and read, and spell, came in for a goodly portion of wondering praise.

But why attempt to describe the Pike? In the words of another: "The brilliancy of far eastern life, the alluring chatter of unfamiliar tongues, and the graceful garbmentry of flowing robes and turbans of innumerable winding, make a narcotic dream wilder than any phantasm of prosaic slumber. A galaxy of stupendous amusements bewilders the imagination for a distance of nearly two miles."

Some of the panoramic and spectacular representations on the Pike are really wonderful; of such a class are the Creation, Galveston Flood, etc. The former portrays, beneath a tremendous dome, the various stages of creation, while the latter by a wonderful combination of paintings, stage lights, stage paraphernalia, etc., gives a fascinating and realistic description of how Galveston was devastated by a tidal wave.

Too many requests for exhibition space were received to be accommodated in the great exhibition palaces, so outdoor exhibitions were planned. Of such are the mining camp, the anthropological exhibit, and the Philippine Exposition. In the latter one gathers a good idea of what the Filipinos have been, are, and what they promise to be. The natives are found there in conditions ranging from one but little removed from crude barbarism to one consequent upon reaching quite a high degree of civilization. The Filipino has proven himself capable of becoming a good soldier. A battalion of native constabulary, with a band of eighty musicians, drilled and trained to a surprising degree of efficiency, told somewhat of what Uncle Sam was doing for the young Filipinos.

We wish space would permit us to write more of the great St. Louis Fair, but we shall desist, trusting at least a majority of the HERALD readers will have opportunity to see it for themselves.

We have heard the criticism circulated that the transportation facilities to and from the Fair grounds were not adequate to handle the crowds. This is not true. The street-car company has made ample provision to run cars to and from the grounds as often as is necessary, over several different routes. There need be no serious congestion of street-car traffic unless the attendance should perchance be greatly in excess of what is anticipated. What the steam roads are expecting to do is manifest by the abundant provisions made by the Wabash road to handle traffic. The Wabash main line runs directly past Forest Park, and the terminal arrangements at the grounds are such as to accommodate scores of trains daily. The Wabash terminal station, just outside the main entrance, is a spacious, well-designed building, amply adequate to perform the severe task it will be called upon to perform.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In closing we say to all to whom opportunity may come to visit the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, go, by all means. It will be well worth while and expense. It may be the opportunity of a lifetime. While it is true that at present there are very many exhibits not in place, yet there is so very much to be seen that one will not lack for something to see. Indeed, to see it all and see it all thoroughly, one would be compelled to be on the grounds weeks and weeks.

We feel amply repaid for our trip to the World's Fair of 1904, and shall hope that our readers may have the opportunity to go.

---

A TREASURE LATELY DISCOVERED.

By one of the kindly mutations of Providence the Editor is in receipt of the following, recovered from the relics of the past, and by the kindness of a friend placed in his hands, a copy of patriarchal blessing given by Joseph Smith, Sr., and pronounced upon the head of Joseph Smith, 3d, son of Joseph Smith, Jr. It is headed, "Blessing of Joseph 3d."

I lay my hands upon your head to bless you. Your name is Joseph, and it is the name of your father. You are Joseph the 3d; and you shall live—and after you grow up you shall have wisdom, knowledge, and understanding; and you shall search into the mysteries of the kingdom of God. Your heart shall be tender toward all, and your hand shall be open to relieve the poor. You shall be admired by every one who beholds you; and you shall be an honor to your father and mother; and a comfort to your mother and a help to your brothers.

You shall have power to carry out all that your father left undone when you become of age. And you shall have power given you to wield the sword of Laban.

We are pleased to be able to receive and use this relic. The one who sent it to us is pretty well satisfied of its authenticity, and we also believe it to be authentic, as we have recollection of some parts of it when delivered, although we had no copy at the time. It will be remembered that Joseph Smith, Sr., was the father of Joseph Smith, Jr., and that there were three Joseph Smiths at one and the same time. Grandfather Smith was a grand old man, quiet and unassuming, but gifted in the Spirit. The blessing sounds like it might have been delivered by Jacob over his grandsons, the children of his favorite son Joseph.

In this issue we reproduce from the Christian Work and Evangelist of April 9, 1904, and article entitled "The Unfortunate Russian Jews," in which the perilous situation of the Jews in Russia is set forth. Accompanying the article were half-tone reproductions of photographs showing some of the work of the mob at Kishineff. The photographs were furnished Mr. Hallock by B. A. M. Schapiro, and show that men, women, and even innocent babes were killed and wounded by the ruthless mob. A picture of the Schapiro family also accompanied the article. Two of his sisters are now safe in America, but the other members of the family, some six or seven, are still in Russia, and Mr. Schapiro is making great efforts to raise money to bring them to America where they will be safe. From the half-tone of the family, it appears they are a bright, intelligent Hebrew family, who would make very desirable citizens of the United States. Mr. Schapiro is editor of The People, the Land, and the Book, a Hebrew Christian magazine published at New York, and it is by means of getting new subscribers to the magazine that he hopes to raise the money to rescue his family from perilous Russia. It is a worthy undertaking, and we certainly hope he will soon succeed.

Bro. Frederick A. Smith, Des Moines, Iowa, June 4: "We enter upon the work of the district conference to-day with a large delegation present with a prospect for more to come. All missionaries appointed to this district are present, and have been in their fields some time at work. The Saints feel quite hopeful and energetic here in the city."

Bro. John C. Foss, Santa Cruz, California, May 31: "I visited San Jose and spoke three times. On Sunday evening they held a Religio entertainment. Sr. Bates knows how to move the Religio work, and all the young as well as some of the old take hold and are doing well. Bro. C. W. Hawkins and J. Carmichael are earnestly setting the light and liberty of the gospel before the people of their city, and like generals in the great warfare, are holding their own. Bro. F. C. Smith is busy during the week with his portable saw and on Sunday tells the people what they ought to do, whether they do it or not."

Bro. J. W. Wight is confined at home, laid up by rheumatism, which will account for his not being in his field in person, though he is active in getting into touch with his laborers in different portions of the field. He desires us to express his regret in being detained in his labors.

Bro. F. M. Smith attended conference at Bevier, Missouri, June 5; would be at Argyle, Iowa, for the 10th and 11th, thence north into Minnesota, Wisconsin, and North Dakota, to attend conferences and reunions.

Original Articles.

LET GOD BE MAGNIFIED.

Let such as love thy salvation say continually, Let God be magnified.—Psalm 70: 4; 40: 16.

The above text represents the humble attitude that Saints should always maintain. This latter-day work differs from other religions in the fact that it contains more of God. And from this standpoint, too, it is rejected by the most of people. In these modern times men have become very wise in their own estimation. They consider it an insult to their intelligence for God to send an angel to set them right; and especially for that angel to select an illiterate boy of fifteen as the instrument by which to do that work. Hence their ire and indignation when that boy said, "Your creeds are all wrong." But after all they must admit it still remains a fact that God acted like himself. Was he ever known to be governed by human tastes and preferences in making his selections? Isaiah represents him as follows: "I, even I, am the Lord; and beside me there is no savior. I have declared, and have saved. . . . I will work, and who shall let (hinder) it?"—Isaiah 43: 11-13. Paul says:

God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: That no flesh should glory in his presence.—1 Corinthians 1: 27-29.

The Lord appears to be sensitive or is, as he himself admits, "a jealous God." He has reason and right to be. He is absolutely sure that his wisdom is more than equal to that of all humanity combined. Why should he not be consulted? Why should he not be honored? He not only knows that he knows and can do but he sees clearly wherein his creatures would profit by crediting and relying upon his wisdom. The same principle applies to trusting in all his other attributes. Hence his "jealousy" is not a selfish one, but is prompted largely by his consideration for us.

In Isaiah 29: 13, 14, we are told why the gospel was restored. The prophet says:

Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.

Evidently men can not succeed alone. If they could God would not need to assert himself. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." Man has tried and failed repeatedly, hence God must come to the rescue or see the race go to wreck and ruin. The prophet truly says: "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him."—Isaiah 59: 19. It was "this [modern] people" who had relied upon human wisdom and strength. Not only had man ripened in self-confidence, but spiritualism ("the enemy") had lifted its deceptive head. In view of these conditions is it any wonder that God arose to "maintain his own cause and set up his kingdom"?

The reformers realized the apostate condition of the world and saw the necessity for greater divine power. Among these we mention Roger Williams. He it was who organized the first Baptist church in America. This church was established at Providence, Rhode Island. Of its organizer we read: "Mr. Williams remained but four months with Providence church and then retired because he had become a seeker or one who looked and sought for a prophet divinely commissioned to introduce the ordinances anew after the long defection of antichrist."—A Question in Baptist History, Professor W. H. Whittitt, p. 159. The poet in surveying the various epochs of the world's history painted the scene as follows:

"A modern prophet! Yes, a mighty seer!
From Israel's royal line must next appear;
Clad in the spirit of Elijah's power,
To prune the vineyard in the eleventh hour;
To light the dawn of that effulgent day,
When King Messiah shall his scepter sway."

God in "his own due time" "commissioned" his "prophet" and brought forth his "church out of the wilderness; clear as the moon and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."—Doctrine and Covenants 5: 3.

The merits of the men whom God has called are often overestimated. We are not, however, disputing that personal qualities have caused them to be "chosen vessels." But we do deny that men possess divine power independently. No matter how much priesthood or authority they possess it does not make them independent of God. They heal the sick and perform other miracles only because God directly operates through them. They lose their power when they transgress his law. Men who are in transgression work miracles, it is true, but not through God's power. Paul says: "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think anything as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God, who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament."—2 Corinthians 3: 5, 6. Again he says: "We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us."—Ibid., 4: 7. This also: "It is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."—Philippians 2: 13. And this too: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."—Ibid., 4: 13. To him the Lord said: "My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness." To this Paul adds: "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me, . . . for when I am weak, then am I strong." —2 Corinthians 12: 9, 10.

Latter Day Saints are accused of self-exaltation because they believe God is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." They say we are egotistical in claiming that miracles have been wrought through us. They assert that we claim the power to work wonders. This assertion, it is needless to say, is false. Sometimes we are told: "You are not equal to the apostles, are you?" This question involves the assumption that the apostles were superior or extraordinary men. This they never claimed, for Barnabas and Paul said: "We also are men of like passions with you."—Acts 14: 15. In the same chapter we are told that God "gave the same testimony unto the word of his grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their [the apostle's] hands."—Verse 3. Please read also Mark 16: 20 and Hebrews 2: 4. Men can be nothing more than humble instruments in God's hands. One of his servants testifies as follows: "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."—1 Corinthians 2: 4, 5. Inspirational preaching produces faith "in the power of God." If men preach by human wisdom it creates faith "in the wisdom of men." Preaching always produces faith after its kind. The faith produced by the latter kind will believe only what is possible to man. A stream, of course, never rises higher than its source. Neither can men believe in miraculous power when all the preaching they hear is against it. Preachers have made it their business to tell the people what God will not do for them. They have, as a rule, joined in the chorus of "miracles are done away." Hence, the unbelief that exists in the world. Modern Christianity has tried to rule God out of the universe. The churches have neglected, nay, positively refused, to "magnify God."

In James 5: 14, 15 it is written: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." The careful reader will see at once that the credit here is not given to man. Elders of themselves have no power to heal. The sick are saved by effective prayer and the Lord, not man, raises them up. A similar statement is found in Acts, chapter 3. There we are told Peter and John were instrumental in healing a lame man. The people as usual were inclined to look upon the apostles as men of genius because of what they had done. When Peter saw this he exclaimed: "Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk?"—Verse 12. Neither human "power" nor "holiness" performed this miracle. How then was it accomplished? Hear Peter again: "And his [Christ's] name through faith in his name hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know: Yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all."—Verse 16. Through Jesus, then, this remarkable work was done.

But, the question rises, Did Jesus act by virtue of his own power? Our answer is, No. He always claimed to be actuated and helped by strength derived from above. Both before and after his resurrection, God was the fountain of his power. The only difference was this: he had a greater endowment after than before. Of the work done before his death we read: "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him."—Acts 10: 38. Thus the power to do good as well as to heal was received by Christ from his Father. Everything he did was done in consequence of the divine anointing and presence. After he arose from the dead he claimed: "All power is given [by the Lord] unto me in heaven and in earth."—Matthew 28: 18. The consensus of all this is that divine blessings come primarily by faith in God, secondarily by faith in Christ. The question now is: Can or may the required "faith" be exercised to-day? Our decision is, yes, for the Father and Son are unchangeable. (See James 1: 17; Hebrews 13: 8.) They are therefore, willing for it to be. The latter says: "Whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass he shall have whatsoever he saith."—Mark 11: 23. The word whosoever is a compound relative pronoun and is equivalent to he who or any one who. Its antecedent may be the name of any person, no matter who he is, nor where or when he lives. The statement and promise made by the Savior are general. The faith mentioned can not be restricted to Bible times. The basic word will not admit of it. For further proof please read Matthew 12: 50; Mark 8: 38; and John 3: 16. All must admit its universality in these cases.

God is well pleased with the spirit of self-sacrifice. Selfish, ambitious people he condemns and overthrows. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall."—Proverbs 16: 18. Jesus says: "Every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."—Luke 18: 14. This principle applies to both this life and the next. Kings, rulers, nobles, and plebeians as well as apostles, prophets, other ministers, and members of the church have been "abased" by arrogance and "exalted" by humility.

The king of Babylon illustrates the former and Joseph, who seems to be a type of Christ, the latter. (See Daniel 4:28-37; Genesis 41:39-44; 50:20.) We have an example also in the case of the rich man and Lazarus. Abraham said to the first: "Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented."—Luke 16:25. This instance shows that those who humble themselves in this world shall be exalted in the next and vice versa. On this subject God has spoken positively in latter-day revelation. He says: "Although a man may have many revelations, and have power to do many mighty works, yet, if he boasts in his own strength, and sets at nought the counsels of God, and follows after the dictates of his own will, and carnal desires, he must fall and incur the vengeance of a just God upon him."—Doctrine and Covenants 2:2.

In the great struggle now on, two prominent characters are represented. One is Christ, the other Satan. The former is prompted by the spirit of love and self-sacrifice, the latter by that of hatred and ambition. We are told the second vied with the first for the honor of saving the world. He offered to redeem the whole race, but wanted the glory for himself. Christ was willing to be the Savior and give God the glory. His offer was accepted. On this point the Lord says: "My glory will I not give to another."—Isaiah 42:8. This is why he selects humble, uneducated men to do his work. He is determined that "no flesh shall glory in his presence." Titled, wealthy, or educated men are inclined to give themselves much credit for what they do.

When Satan saw he was defeated in his desire he was "moved with envy." Ever since he has been in opposition to the Christ and has sought to hinder his work. He finally rebelled against God and made one third of the angels his helpers. All of them were finally cast out of heaven. Of him we read: "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! . . . Thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God."—Isaiah 14:12, 13. Please read also Luke 10:18; Revelation 12:7-9, 13; 2 Peter 2:4; Jude 3. Well was it said: "Cromwell, I charge thee to fling away ambition. By that sin the angels fell." How different was the course of Jesus! His character and conduct are described as follows: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head."—Matthew 8:20. "Though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich."—2 Corinthians 8:9. "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man."—Luke 2:52. He selected all this for himself. Death itself came of his own choosing. (See John 10:17, 18.) Some say it was easy for him to do this, for he knew that "he came from God and went to God" and would, therefore, take up his life again. Does not the same apply to us? Those who believe in God have certain assurance of ultimate triumph. Our sacrifices will be rewarded as well as his. No matter how low we begin we are equal to him. He began with the lowest rung of the ladder of progress. His development was twofold: he "increased in wisdom" and "in favor with God" as well as "in stature" and in favor with man. He truly says: "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it."—Mark 8:35. We also read: "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him."—2 Timothy 2:12. Those who follow in his footsteps must expect to share his fate. He was not the only person who had "no certain dwelling place." (1 Corinthians 4:11; Hebrews 11:37, 38. In Philippians 2:5, it is said: "Let this mind [disposition] be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." The writer then describes the self-denial of our Savior after which he adds:

Wherefore [for this reason] God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.—Verses 9-11.

Men in their eagerness to immortalize their names have often sought after what God did not want them to have. Sometimes they have obtained great things and reached high stations and then lost them through ingratitude. Nebuchadnezzar boasted of his own achievements and was brought down. He lost his mind and kingdom and wandered like a wild beast until he learned that the Most High rules in the kingdoms of men. The building of the tower of Babel was another ambitious scheme. The builders admit their object was to "make us a name." Concerning this event the following tradition has been handed down:

And it came to pass about this time the people took counsel together, and they said to one another: "Let us build a city and also in its midst a tall tower for a stronghold, a tower the top of which shall reach even to the heavens. Then shall we truly make for ourselves a great and mighty name, before which all our enemies shall tremble. None will then be able to harm us, and no wars may disperse our ranks." And they spoke these words to the king, and he approved of their design. Therefore they gathered together and selected a suitable spot for their city and its tower on a plain toward the east, in the land of Shinar. And while they were building rebellion budded in their hearts, rebellion against God, and they imagined they could scale the heavens and war with him. They divided into three parties; the first party said: "We will ascend to heaven and place there our gods, and worship them." The second party said: "We will pour into the heavens of the Lord and match our strength with his." And the third party said: "Yea, we will smite him with arrow and with spear." And God watched their evil enterprise, and knew their thoughts, yet they builded on. If one of the stones which they had raised to its height fell, they were sad at heart, and even wept; yet when any of their brethren fell from the building and were killed, none took account of the life thus lost.—The Talmud.

Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord.—1 Corinthians 15: 58.

ALMA C. BARMORE.

BRISBANE, Australia, April 15, 1904.

* *
FORGIVENESS.

Under the above heading in HERALD, volume 51, number 12, the subject as expressed somewhat conflicts with my ideas. I have waited for others to answer, but seeing none, thus write.

I am far from posing as an instructor to Bro. Sessions or any others and am willing to stand corrected as to my views by others who prove abler expositors of the virgin truth as taught or revealed by the Spirit. Forgive:

To pardon; to remit, as an offense or debt; to overlook an offense, and treat the offender as not guilty. The original and proper phrase is to forgive the offense, to send it away, to reject it, that is, not to impute it (put it to) the offender. But, by an easy transition, we also use the phrase, to forgive the person offending. . . . It is to be noted that pardon, like forgive, may be followed by the name or person, and by the offense; but remit can be followed by the offense only. We forgive or pardon the man, but we do not remit him. To remit, as a debt, fine, or penalty.—Noah Webster, LL. D.

In few words my belief is thus: All forgiveness is dependent on certain conditions and requirements. If we are to imitate the eternal Father, the question arises, Has the Almighty ever been known to forgive the human race unconditionally? I believe not. To me, a well defined law governs every minute and every intricate influence of the universe. The moment any part becomes out of order, disaffected or unbalanced, the effects are at once swung into operation. Try it; put your hand in the fire and see if any known "natural" law will intervene to save your member from burning. This, to me, is the very essence of the elements of justice. I can not see anything but chaos where cause no longer produces effect (it is "in all around I see"), where a man sows one thing and expects to reap the opposite, when men shall not be rewarded for deeds done in the body. If we are to forgive with abandon, fling principle to the winds and let anarchy to law run rampant, what is the use of law or order? Why make a farce of justice by holding ecclesiastical courts to reform and reclaim those who conflict with ethics and the rigid law?

A good deal of stress is put on the statement of Christ recorded in Matthew, chapter 5. I use the Inspired Translation and in verse 42 it appears to mean that if you are sued and lose, resist not, "and if he sue thee again, let him have thy cloak also"; meaning, let him freely have whatever he wins from you either justly or unjustly without resisting, without revenge, without hatred, without malice or any form of evil; return not evil for evil, eye for eye, etc., but return good for evil after this manner: "If thine enemy [enemy to you, not you to him] hunger feed him." Do him good and use extra exertion in treating him kindly on every turn, for the reason that he may repent and be saved from the effects of his acts that conflicted with the law. (It is to be understood that they are the ones doing wrong; we should never be on the wrong side, or, as sure as we live, justice will work against us and clear those whom we have wronged.) But if he continues in the wrong and is breaking either the law of the land or the law of God, you are partaker of his sins if you warn him not. (Right here I may mention that to me the Utah Church has made a sacrilege of both the law of God and man by the parade of their base lusts and weakness to their everlasting shame, bringing down the punishment of God and contempt of men.)

After warning and he still heeds not the advice, then, if a member, report to the church officers; if not a member to the officers of the land. When a member is cut off from the Church do we forgive him? When a criminal meets the justice of his crime and the law shortens his period of life, does the law forgive him? When we find ourselves among the unwise virgins, with the door shut, and are compelled to accept the glory of the moon or stars, in reference to our position, does even God forgive us? Yes and no; we should be full of pity and love toward them, but hold their ways in repugnance. Yet we have not forgiven them in the absolute sense of the term or law, for they are silenced, reprimanded, cut off, or meet whatever penalty they merit. Can you call a penalty forgiveness? No. It is the demands of justice and is necessary for the preservation of the individual and of the body politic of either the church, the state or the universe which exists by reason of strict conformity to their laws (fixed if perfect) and herein is true liberty while all else is license. To my idea this conforms with the second article of our epitome. We must forgive. This is imperative and final as far as its effects concern ourselves, and forgive from the heart at that, for we can not deceive God by hypocrisy. Many say they forgive, but the way they constantly refer both by word, deed, and mind to the affair, their actions prove the opposite and show that the evil spirit is gnawing into the very soul of their life and blighting them.

Think no evil and you have it all in a nutshell, but seek not to hide an unrepenting fugitive from justice. A good citizen will not only report the deed of a criminal to the officer but will seek to restrain and enforce order himself. Saints should refrain from "man hunts" and the revengeful spirit abroad in the land so beastly and debased. Simply stand by the law. Sometimes we see the same spirit to turn somebody out of the Church. A man would look foolish if he cut off a limb of his fruit-tree just because of the looks or other simple thing, and after cutting off find it to be healthy and ready to sprout, bud, blossom, and bear fruit. "If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him."—Luke 17:3. I am in favor of taking no notice of a personal injury, yet it says rebuke. I believe personal injuries are more or less secret. It is those who trespass against the body whose harm reaches the farthest.

All men are entitled to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," and it is just as necessary for the transgressor's good as for ours that he be brought to time. If men willfully contract debts without any intention to pay, but only to defraud their fellow men, turn them over to the iron law, but be careful no revenge is in your heart. Let charity and forgiveness beam in your eye and shine in your soul; then you will be ready and able to show mercy and compassion to the poor wrong-doer the moment he shows godly sorrow and repentance. A good man will pay what he owes the first opportunity at his command, whether he belong to the Church or not. It is plain to be seen that those of the Church who are in debt, are able to pay but fail to do so, are in error and should be dealt with as the Lord deals with all of us,—let the law work. The Lord does not show the spirit of vengeance or bitterness when we do wrong. He is ever forgiving and at the same time exacting and just. He does not require one man to obey every jot of the law and let another go scott free. We are very apt to misjudge the motives of a transgressor because he seems in no hurry to pay the debt or make other things right. In order not to seem a bigot we should take "the middle of the road" and remember that "charity suffereth long and is kind." But if even God saves or forgives without repentance then we may as well throw up the attempt to be perfect and go back to all the heathenish and unrestrained orgies of the unwashed and thankless horde of fallen angels.

"God is not mocked, whatsoever a man [a society, a nation, or a people] sow that shall he also reap." "And he that repenteth not of his sins, and confesseth them not, then ye shall bring him before the church, . . . that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend him who is your law-giver."—Doctrine and Covenants 64:2. The gaining or losing of temporal substance will not save or destroy our faith or chance of eternal life if we are not unduly influenced thereby. That which will save us is true righteousness and law-abiding and law-enforcing strictness coupled with supreme love, charity, and forgiveness for our fellow man. "For with what measure ye meet, it shall be measured unto you again," "As a man thinketh so is he." If he thinks to defraud he is a defrauder: if he thinks any evil, he is evil to that extent. In closing I call attention to Book of Mormon, Mosiah 11:16.

ARTHUR W. GORBUTT.

SEATTLE, Washington.

Selected Articles.

THE UNFORTUNATE RUSSIAN JEW.

There is no doubt whatever that this inhuman attack (the Kishineff massacre of the Jews) upon a comparatively peaceable and innocent people was the result of a long premeditated plot on the part of the Cossacks, in which the Government was guilty of connivance if not of actual participation. It was the same in the case of the disturbances in 1881. Last year, several weeks before Easter, it was well known in various quarters that there was trouble in store for the Jews, and that they would soon be attacked even more bitterly than in 1881. Many of those best informed appealed to the Government, but with no avail. Count Von Plehve, the Minister of the Interior, gave utterance to the most hostile denunciations against them, saying, among other things, that in his opinion the economic value of the Jew to Russia was at least doubtful. He goes on to say: "I am convinced, moreover, that the activity of the Jews in all the spheres of our political and social life holds in it principles that are pernicious. I am, therefore, opposed to alleviating the condition of the Jew." He looks upon the entire Jewish race as one to be snubbed and held in subjection, even more so than we of this country are accustomed to think of the negro. In 1882, after a prolonged discussion, the following resolution was finally passed by the commission: "The Jews are absolutely forbidden to acquire landed property outside of the Pale of Settlement, to own or lease real estate outside of the cities, and that the execution of such title deeds is to be stopped."

This was not enough, for the commission went so far as to declare that any Jew whose right to own landed property was supposed to be acquired in an unlawful manner, was liable to banishment, and it was agreed by the committee that the Minister of the Interior may apply to these Jews the law of December 7, 1895, according to which, persons endangering the public safety are liable to banishment to Siberia.

All of these resolutions were passed unanimously, and at the time of the commencement of hostilities with Japan were still awaiting the Czar's sanction. Since that time no further action has been taken upon them.

Among the Cossacks and the lower class of Russian peasants the Jews were represented as being the real cause of Russian sorrows, and an artificially stimulated movement, with its absurd accusations, its appeal to religious fanaticism, its hired cut-throats from among the scum of great Russia, was the result. Yet even in Russia the thinking men can see that the Jews are innocent, and that they are being persecuted most unjustly, and for a score of years or more they have been living in wretched poverty and utter helplessness. And yet the lot of the Russian peasant and the Russian industrial toiler has not grown lighter, his burden is not more easy to bear. The great nonproducing Russian bureaucracy, heartless, unscrupulous, and godless, has been eating the heart out of the country, and when the load has grown too great to bear even for the patient, unseeing masses of Russia, they try to tell the ignorant peasant that it is the Jew who is the cause of his miseries. Theirs is the spirit of the French nobility before the Revolution, Après nous le deluge. During the past quarter of a century at least, such have been the men who have been able to control the situation in Russia, and they have made the lives of the Jews a burden which it is hard to bear.

Here are some of the restrictions to which they are subjected by the Russian Government:

First. Jews can not acquire private or governmental estates, even when for sale.

Second. No Jew can be a lessee or agent for property beyond the Jewish pale.

Third. Jews who belong to no guild can not be contractors, and they are not allowed to deliver their productions outside the Jewish pale.

Fourth. All Jews must close their places of business on Sundays, even in strictly Jewish communities (Mohammedan and other non-Christians are not subjected to like ordinances).

Fifth. Jews can not become civil officials, military, officers, even noncommissioned (although they supply more than their proportion of recruits to the center), judges, mayors, aldermen, school-teachers nor policemen.

These are by no means all of the restrictions laid upon them, to say nothing of the frequent massacres, of which there were three in 1882, one in 1883, and three in 1884, and several between that and the great massacre of Kishineff, last year. In all of these, the Jews who escaped with their lives were robbed of all their property. As a result of the last great massacre there are many freshly dug graves in the old Jewish cemetery in Kishineff where many a poor Jew now lies at peace with the world. After a lifelong struggle with poverty in a seemingly unfeeling world, his body returned to mother earth, the bent form carrying on it marks of violence. When they were being hounded to death, detachments of cavalry patrolled the city, and there was undoubtedly pity for them in the heart of many a rough soldier; yet they dared not interfere without the order of the governor. This was not forthcoming, and so the terrible work went on, and the poor Jew was cut down without mercy—the young children and defenseless women, as well as the rest. The dead have found peace at last, the living are homeless and hopeless, and there is not the least probability that they will obtain redress for life and property lost.—Joseph N. Hallock, M. D., in the Christian Work and Evangelist, April 9, 1904.

MORMON POWER IN POLITICS.

In the effort to turn Reed Smoot out of the Senate, the prosecution is now introducing testimony to prove that in Utah political candidates and elections "are no other than a moving row of magic shadow-shapes that come and go" at the nod and beck of the Mormon hierarchy. Brigham H. Roberts, Judge Powers, Moses Thatcher, and others have been giving testimony that is taken by many newspapers to show that in Utah the candidates are "but helpless pieces of the game," which the Church "hither and thither moves, and checks and slays; and one by one back in the closet lays," while, "the ball no question makes of ayes and noes, but here or there as strikes the player, goes." Roberts testifies that the first time he ran for Congress he did so in defiance of the Mormon rule that he must first obtain the sanction of the Church, and he was defeated. Then, as he puts it, he "was enlightened," submitted to the rule, and was elected—only, however, to be excluded as a polygamist by the House. Moses Thatcher tells how he tried to run for office without ecclesiastical sanction, and was not only defeated, but was stripped of all church honors, and even barred from the temple. "And," he adds, "I am glad to say that I am a free American citizen." Judge Powers, of Salt Lake, says in his testimony: "I do not regard polygamy as the worst feature of the Mormon religion. What I object to most is its un-American domination by the hierarchy of the people of that faith, the belief in the right of the church authorities to prescribe rules, the belief that the head of the Church is inspired, and interference of the Church in political and commercial affairs." The opponents of the Church would like to see Congress "grasp this sorry scheme of things entire," and "shatter it to bits—and then remold it nearer to the heart's desire," but it is far from clear how this is to be done. The immediate matter in hand is the case of Senator Smoot. As the Senator is not a polygamist, he would seem to be safe from that charge; and if it is urged that he was sent to Congress with the aid and consent of the Church, the same testimony might be used against the entire Utah delegation in Congress.

The Democratic papers think that the Church made a secret agreement with the Republican leaders several years ago to keep Utah in the Republican column, in return for immunity from prosecution; and the Republican managers are pictured as being in a sad state of perturbation and fright lest the prosecution that they have been forced into by the deluge of petitions shall enrage the Mormons to the point of voting the Democratic ticket.

The Republican game of "working the churches" is handled as follows by the Louisville Courier Journal (Democrat):

"The Mormon Church is not the only one that exerts an influence in politics. There are several others that make their influence felt when they think it worth while. There is no way to prevent the members of a particular church from voting together when they believe that they have reason to do so. But political parties which form combinations with them may well be held to an accountability for such acts. The Republican party has been notable for its disposition to 'work the churches' in its own interest. It has generally had the support of those preachers who convert their pulpits into political platforms. It has repeatedly appealed for support of its candidates because they were members of certain denominations, and not always without success. In Utah it has succeeded in reversing the politics of the State, and not without suspicion of a bargain with the Mormon Church. The protest against Smoot, a Republican, has put the leaders in an awkward predicament. If they expel him, they may lose Utah and several other Western States in November. If they vindicate him, they will displease the elements elsewhere that are fighting him so bitterly. So it is pretended that further investigation is needed, and it is proposed that the whole matter go over till after the election."

The Deseret Evening News, the Mormon daily, resents and denies the accusation that the Church is used as a political machine. It says:

"When the Church is used as a political machine to override the law,' is one of those hackneyed phrases that newspaper writers use who do not know anything of what they write about. When and where has any proof been offered that the 'Mormon' Church has been 'used as a political machine'? There has been much frothy talk about it, but no evidence to support it. That a great many politicians of each party have endeavored to obtain political support from the 'Mormon' Church can be established beyond a doubt, but that they ever secured it is quite another proposition. The anger and bitterness of some of them arise from their failure to get what they sought for in vain.

"And in what way could the political power spoken of be 'used to override the law'? Elections have to be conducted according to the law or the law can be 'used to override' the result, can it not? Why is it that press writers lose their common sense whenever they touch as they suppose on the 'Mormon' question?"—The Literary Digest, May 7, 1904.

The Mormon Spirit.

In Utah there are Mormons and Mormons, says the World's Work. Some are blindly devoted to church interests; some are merely held by business connections; some are Mormon only in name; while certain branches of prominent Mormon families, like the Kimbals, the Rawlinses, the Ellerbecks and the Nebekers have broken away from the Church entirely. Every "good" Mormon is supposed to give a "tithing," or one tenth of his net earnings, to the Church; yet many whose faith is not strong contribute their tenth regularly for the business patronage it brings them. Others who are conscientious followers of Joseph Smith are very slack in meeting the requirements of the tithing law. When, however, the Church is attacked from the outside, or the Mormon people assailed, Mormons of all classes, even apostates, rally to the support of the Church.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Availing Prayer.

If, when I kneel to pray,
With eager lips I say:

"Lord, give me all the things that I desire—
Health, wealth, fame, friends, brave heart, religious fire,
The power to sway my fellow men at will
And strength for mighty works to banish ill"—

In such a prayer as this
The blessing I must miss.

Or, if I only dare

To raise this fainting prayer:

"Thou seest, Lord, that I am poor and weak
And can not tell what things I ought to seek;
I therefore do not ask at all, but still
I trust thy bounty all my wants to fill"—

My lips shall thus grow dumb,
Thy blessing shall not come.

But if I lowly fall

And thus in faith I call:

"Through Christ, O Lord, I pray thee give to me
Not what I would, but what seems best to thee
Of life, of health, of service and of strength,
Until to thy full joy I come at length"—

My prayer shall then avail,
The blessing shall not fail.

—Charles Francis Richardson.

Little Things.

A wise man has said, "Despise not the day of small things," and it is indeed wise counsel.

The great aim and conception of the divine mind was happiness for all the creatures to which he gave the breath of life. But there has unfortunately been a departure from the rule appointed, and the result of this departure operates as a drain upon the happiness that might have been meted out to every one of us.

Beginning at the foundation we enter our homes. At home the child grows up under the influences that give a coloring to all the scenes of its life, and that shape his course and mold him for the future. If this be true how important that we do all we can to render the influence of the home pleasant.

In every family there is a diversity of tastes and disposition. Is it reasonable to ask one child to yield his wishes to the gratifications of one of the others? Should one be indulged and made a favorite and the other made a pensioner upon him and his pleasures meted out to him according to the caprices of the favored one? Justice answers, No; yet we often see this fault in parents. It may not be intentional, but the fact that it is so hurts.

It may be true that parents may see traits in the disposition of one child that they admire more than some possessed by the others; but they should not allow this to make a difference in their treatment of the unfortunate child. He is the one who needs your mother love and watchful care more than the favored one. Many a life has been blighted and embittered for all time through the cruel injustice of parents. It is the duty of parents to do all they can to permeate the happiness of their children. If they petition you for a certain favor, grant it to them if you reasonably can. God pity the children who can not look back upon their childhood and count it the happiest period of their lives.

For instance, during the holidays the children count largely upon having a good time. Our boy is fond of coasting. He has asked his father to let him go to Mr. Brown's to spend the afternoon with the Brown boy. The privilege is denied him, but he tells him he may go some other place and play awhile. He does not wish to go to the other place. His anticipations have all been associated with Mr. B.'s place.

Now who of us can measure the disappointment that child experiences? Who can say how much he had thought of this wish before expressed? No doubt he had planned this pleasure while others slept. All pleasures take their shape from anticipation. If Mr. B.'s had not been a proper place for his boy to go, the father was right to forbid his going there. At the same time he should have told him the reason for it.

Another reason of unhappiness in families is the continual taxing of one of its members for the gratification of others. We often hear it argued: "You are the oldest and should yield to the youngest." There can be no greater mistake. Who is to recompense the older for the sacrifice made to the younger child when he shall reach the years when they may depend upon themselves? These may seem little things to us; but are they small to those who are interested?

The true basis of human happiness is found in the mutual regard existing in families and among friends. It may be argued that words are often used in a spirit of mischief that wound when no slight was intended; but this falls to the ground, if you have a knowledge of the disposition and tastes of your friends. This knowledge comes to us all as the legitimate regard we feel for each other. The lesson taught in those simple words:

"Little deeds of kindness,
Little words of love,
Make this world a heaven
As the heaven above," is one of the truths which we have all felt.

PAULINE.

KERR, Missouri, May 7, 1904.

Dear Sister Frances: It is evening and while the drip, drip of the spring rain sounds from without I will write a few words to the Column which I have loved ever since as a child I read it to mother. How many times since I have grown older I have found in it just the words I needed and how I have loved our editor who has kept the Column going so many years and written so many encouraging things for the young. I know the ideas I received from her writings helped me to form better standards for myself when I was a young girl than I would otherwise have done; for many of my young associates were for having a good time, which to them consisted in getting a beau who took them to the dance and supplied them with plenty of knickknacks and nonsense; it didn't seem to matter much to them if he drank and smoked and swore just so he was very agreeable when in their company. It always seemed to me we might better be trying in some way to prepare ourselves for whatever life was before us.

My life has been full of difficulties, just little things most of them; although I tried to be prepared beforehand I have found that there are many things one must learn by experience, and much that we can not possibly do for ourselves that we must trust the Lord to do for us. And I often think if we only trusted him for more than we do life would not be such a burden for some as it is. We take so much more on ourselves than it seems to me he intended we should. As soon as a difficulty appears, I say in my heart, "Lord help me with this; thou knowest I need thine aid and that I am trying to serve thee the very best I can, and I know that thou art our loving all-powerful God; help me now, I pray." And he never fails when we ask for help in things of life which we must meet. He knows our strength and is ready and willing to help us when we have done all that our feeble power will admit, if we only ask him. But this is where we fail very often; we say, "Oh it is more than I can bear," and so we get discouraged and cast down in spirit and feel that perhaps we have worshiped in vain and there is nothing can help us in our afflictions, when if we had only cast our burden on the Lord everything would have been smoothed and made plain and we would have seen that truly our troubles were but the means to show us God's great love for us.

There are other ways in which we deprive ourselves of needed help, I believe; I hear it said sometimes: "Well, I must get my work done whether I ever get a chance to read the HERALD or not." Now I believe that we should, that it is our duty before God to spend time to feed our spiritual self as well as our physical self.

Of course our bodies must be fed and clothed but it is only the means to an end; that the spirit may have a house to live in while it is taught and trained back to the God-like nature from which it has fallen; and when we say that we can not have time from the cares of the temporal life to read and study and think of the things of God we are nourishing the house and letting the beautiful, imperishable spirit within dwarf, shrink, and shrivel, till by and by it all but dies within us. The talents that God has given us lie dormant till we are powerless to use them, and we stand in the same position as the man who hid his talent in a napkin.

We all call the body the house and the spirit the thing of value to be housed. Would we not think it ridiculous to see a man pay more attention to and take more care of the house in which his children lived than he did of his beautiful children? Would we not say he sinned in doing so? And yet, do we not place ourselves in much the same position when we spend our whole time on the body and neglect the spirit, the intellectual part of us?

I will not take more of your time or space; I had no intention of writing so much when I sat down to write but the thoughts came so I wrote them, but will now close.

MIGNON.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

I live for those who love me,
For those I know are true,
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit, too,
For all human ties that bind me,
For the task that God assigned me,
For the bright hopes yet to find me,
And the good which I can do—Selected.

BRO. J. M. BAKER, our alert and earnest Sunday-school worker and missionary, writing from Akron, Iowa, May 16, says: "I have been holding meetings at this place for one week. We have only five members of the Church here. Yesterday I organized them into a Sunday-school with an enrollment of fourteen. And by just going into their pockets and without the hat being passed, they made up enough money to pay for supplies for six months. They start out very promisingly. May the good work go on." We, too, say, "May the good work go on." How we would all rejoice if in every locality where there are even five members of the Church they could and would do as these with whom Bro. Baker has been laboring have done! How the work would grow. How the Saints would improve. And can it not be done? Ye missionaries, can it not be done? Ye isolated Saints, can you not do the same? Adopt the Home Class or organize a regular school as may seem most suitable to the needs of the case. But do something and do it quickly.

SR. E. ETZENHOUSER, our worthy general librarian, writes under date of May 25: "There seems to be an increasing interest in the library work with a corresponding demand for library supplies which I can not furnish at present." We are always glad to be busy and to have our desks covered with work and especially when the increasing amount seems to indicate an increase of interest in the movement on foot. The library work is quite new with the majority of our workers, and as a matter of course is but little understood in many localities. That is, many of the people are not yet familiar with the good results to come from a carefully selected library in connection with the Sunday-school. By many it is thought that if there is a small collection of books in the home and a good public library in the city or town that this is all that could be necessary or desired. But while they are good in their place and do much good, they can not and do not fill the place intended to be filled by the Sunday-school library. The home library can no more take the place of a Sunday-school library than can the family worship take the place of the public service. Both are needed for many and obvious reasons. And we are glad to see the increasing interest and work in this department. Many school libraries are being installed here and there. Also many districts have adopted the circulating library plan and are building a circulating library in the district. Our general librarian, Sr. E. Etzenhouser, 2401 East Twenty-fourth Street, Kansas City, Missouri, will gladly furnish you any desired information concerning the library work in the schools or districts. She will soon have a full supply of report blanks, rules for circulating libraries, local libraries, etc., which she will supply as samples or which may be ordered from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. All report blanks ten cents per dozen.

OUR worthy editor of the Gospel Quarterlies, Sr. Anna Sal-yards, has consented to furnish us some "teachers notes or helps on the lessons" to appear in the Sunday-school department in the HERALD from week to week. The helps will appear sufficiently long ahead to be used in the teachers' meetings the previous weeks in all points in America and Great Britain. Just how soon we may be able to start them we can not now say, but we hope it to be very early in the second quarter if not from the first of it. Let all teachers and Sunday-school officers secure the HERALD and have it for use in the preparation of the lesson. If you do not have ready access thereto now, subscribe for it at once and start in with it from the first. After the lessons now prepared have been used, the lessons as found in the Quarterlies will be materially shorter and some of the matter perhaps that is now in the Quarterly will be found in some form or other in the teachers' helps in the department. Besides this, there will be many other points of interest to the teachers and scholars that it is now impracticable to include in the Quarterlies. This will, in part at least, supply a long-felt want. We have tried at several times to provide a teachers' help in some convenient and practical way, but as often some insurmountable difficulty was found in the way. If this form of putting out the helps is not what we want, we can evolve something else. But we think it will be all that we need now.

BRO. JOSEPH EBELING, of Wheeling, West Virginia, superintendent of the Pittsburg District Sunday-school association, writes: "Since arriving home from the General Sunday-school Convention and General Conference I have looked over the Home Department literature given me and have become much interested in it. I trust you will have a good report from us in that line by next convention." Thus the Home Department work takes hold. It takes hold because it is practicable work. It is a success wherever tried properly. But, like everything in the world, it requires a little thought and interest and effort or will amount to nothing. But wherever tried with that degree of interest that should characterize our every effort in God's work, it has been a pleasing success. Go on, Bro. Joseph, and let us hear how you succeed.

BRO. H. A. MCCOY, who is now laboring in the Minnesota field, wrote us volunteering to do what he could to secure subscribers for the Quarterly and to help the work in every other way he could. We appreciate the kindness and willingness of Bro. McCoy for more reasons than one. It shows a willingness to help in all parts of the good work. It is a favor to all whom he induces to take the Quarterly and use it, same as it would be to persuade them to take the church papers. It helps financially. Home classes and schools in time growing into branches are the outcome of getting the Quarterlies into the hands of earnest working Saints. We send him samples and thank him for his kind offer in advance for whatever he may be able to accomplish.

The Same Question in Another Form.

A brother asks: "Should a person who is a district superintendent be marked 'absent' when he is away visiting another school, as is his duty to do?" This is about the same question we answered a few weeks ago, but we are glad to make it a little plainer if we can. When the roll is called and the party is not there to answer his name, the secretary can do nothing else than mark him "A." But when that party later brings the information that he attended a school that day and had and recited his lesson, an additional mark should be made in the space to indicate the fact. If you grade your officers and teachers as well as scholars, and you should, a simple figure, 5 or 4, or whatever his report may have been, would indicate that he had reported later. And the "A" would still indicate that it was another school he had attended. And in counting up his scholarship at the end of the quarter, or his number of lessons studied, the lesson studied at the other school should be counted the same as if in his own. Classes competing for honors should be permitted to count lessons studied by scholars and recited in other schools, provided that a proper and reliable report be furnished the secretary in a reasonable time. As we stated before, this will enable scholars attending district conventions, reunions, General Conferences, or making extended visits where there are other schools of the association to keep their records straight, as many take considerable pride in doing. And it is a strong impetus to some to study if they can thus keep a nice, clear record. It will make some little extra work for the secretary, but the work is very small as compared with the amount of good that it will do. Let us spare no amount of work to keep up the interest in our schools. Good, straight records are a strong element in the gaining and maintaining an interest in the class work. Yes, that district superintendent was absent and must be counted so in making up the "total attendance," but in making up the "total credits" or the "number lessons studied" he must be counted if he furnishes the report in time.

Another Question.

"On the Home Class envelopes and membership cards in the space marked 'Class No. —', should a teacher mark all in the one class the same number or successive numbers?" They should all be "1" if they belong to class No. 1, or all be "2" if they belong to that class. It is the class number and not the individual's number. Thus John, Mary, Frank, Bertha, Ward, and Dollie would all have the same number if in the same class.

Advantages of the Convention.

Since the Sunday-school convention is composed of officers, delegates, and Sunday-school workers in general, it is in and through them that the advantages are obtained and the work of the district built up. The advantages are many or few according to the enthusiasm of its members.

DELEGATES.

Much depends upon the wise selection of the delegates. Only zealous, spiritually-minded Sunday-school workers who are capable of representing the needs of the various schools should be chosen. It should be the aim of those present to improve and help others to improve. While all in attendance are expected to be alive to all phases of the convention work, yet the delegates are to be special eyes and ears for their schools. They should be armed with paper and pencil that they may make note of all proceedings of a beneficial character, and on their return home give to the school the benefit. Repeat, explain, suggest, and exhort.

The most successful conventions are those in which the teachers and local workers take an active part. Here is the place to get light on perplexing questions which are in our schools and in our classes. Ask how others have dealt with such difficulties and try to profit by their experiences.

WHO MOST NEED.

My observation has been that those who most need the benefits of the convention are those who seldom, if ever, attend. The question then is, How may such a one receive the advantages of the conventions? Through the delegates; by visits or letters from district superintendent, through the Sunday-school column in church publications, and last but not least through the teachers' meetings, which is the primary convention in the great Sunday-school work; and to me it seems the most important link, since it affords the opportunity to develop and to deal personally with the local worker. It is next to dealing directly with the learner.

THE PROGRAM

is a very important part of the convention, and should be prepared by a committee composed of persons from the various schools of the district with the district superintendent as chairman. In arranging for this feature of the convention work, the most pressing needs of the several schools and of the district should be uppermost. It is a good plan for each school to send to the district superintendent a list of its most pressing needs, etc., as soon after the last convention as possible, that they may be taken into consideration when arranging the program. While certain parts of the program are assigned to different individuals, yet as far as possible the subjects should be open for general discussion that there may be a variety of opinions secured.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION

is the great school for educating Sunday-school workers. It is an assemblage of the best talent in the Church met to mold ideals for our benefit. Then let this district see to it that we have at least one good delegate to represent us at the General Convention and bring to us such ideals as will inspire us to stand at the front in the Sunday-school movement. Let this not be our only source of advancement, but let each one present resolve that between this and next convention we will search every possible avenue for ideas and thus become more efficient. Those who would follow such a resolution would be not only a star in the local but also in the conventions. Let us remember that "wisdom and knowledge sought for and gained can be imparted to others." We can kindle a fire in other hearts only when the living coal has touched our own.

IN CONCLUSION

I will enumerate briefly some of the advantages of the convention: It brings the schools of the district into closer relation; displays practical work; investigates deficiencies; solves perplexities; provides remedies; devises means; studies methods; gains strength of management; gives new ideas; makes more successful teachers and useful workers; unites Sunday-school forces; encourages and builds up.

Trusting that all will leave this convention with renewed determination to do better Sunday-school work,

I am hopefully yours,

Mrs. F. R. SCHAFER.

For the Northeastern Nebraska District convention.

---

Letter Department.

WILBURTON, I. T., May 23, 1904.

Editors Herald: The gospel is moving along very well, and in God's own due time will accomplish the work that God designed for it to do; and that is to save a lost and ruined world. But it has its oppositions. One, C. Stutson, a Free Will Baptist preacher, has been assailing the gospel wherever he could. He persecuted the Saints very hard. He came to Wilburton on the 14th of this month and began to lecture on what he was pleased to call Mormonism. Bro. J. D. Erwin went out to hear what he had to say, and informed him that he must prove his lecture, so they arranged for a debate to begin on the evening of the 16th, and to continue for six nights. So they met on that evening. The Baptist Church was put on trial first. C. Stutson did not want to set up any church. He only wanted to tell what the "kingdom" or "church" meant in Greek. Bro. J. D. Erwin got after him about his Greek and he dropped it. The Baptist Church was traced back into the Roman Catholic Church and there it was left. The fourth evening the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was put on trial, and Bro. J. D. showed that God used one man, Joseph Smith, in the year 1830, to again set up the church of the living God on the earth, as it was nineteen hundred years ago, with all of its blessings and gifts, such as prophecy and tongues, interpretation of tongues, healing, knowledge, wisdom, and faith, with twelve apostles, prophets, teachers, helps and governments, as they are recorded in the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians, and that it set forth the same gospel as was taught by Jesus Christ and his apostles. C. Stutson did not try to answer this argument, but tried to brand Bro. Joseph Smith with polygamy and everything else that was mean. But every argument he put forth was met. J. D. was greatly blessed with the Spirit of God to defend his work. Indeed a grand victory was gained for the truth, and much good done. C. Stutson's moderator said to me this morning that a grand defense had been made for our cause, and Joseph Smith was in line with all God's martyred prophets. The people in town this morning are reading their Bibles, so we anticipate much good from the debate.

District conference convenes here the 28th of this month. We are looking for Bro. Alexander Smith to be with us. We hope and pray a great harvest will be reached in the red man's country this year.

Yours in bonds,

E. A. ERWIN.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, May 18, 1904.

Editors Herald: We are still in the fight for truth, and hope to be able to continue. We have been helping Bro. Chase in his street work for a few days. The heaven is working and people have said to me, You do not know how much good you men are doing here. There are a number of people who get to hear the gospel message by this method who would never get to hear it otherwise.

Sunday was a busy day for us—we attended six meetings in all. At eleven o'clock the writer was the speaker at the chapel; had a fair attendance. At two o'clock we went to the tabernacle and listened to Professor Talmage, the great grammarian of Utah; and he preached to us a progressive God. Immediately after their service we drove to the corner of First South and Main streets, where we met the crowds coming from the tabernacle, and again the writer had the pleasure of addressing about three hundred people, the subject: Presidency. At six o'clock

Bro. Chase was the speaker at the corner of Second South and Main streets, the subject: The Godhead, replying to the discourse delivered by Professor Talmage at the tabernacle.

During the time that was given for questions the subject of polygamy was brought up and Bro. Chase announced that he would take that for his subject the next night, and also said he would prove the revelation on polygamy a fraud; there were a number out to hear and he took two nights in which to handle the matter, and all through the arguments we heard the people respond with, "Amen," and "That is good," and so on. And at the close I heard a man say, "He was going to prove it a fraud, and I think he has"; and another said, "I did not think there was anything in Mormonism; but I have changed my mind. I am going to make a study of it; I am going to read the Book of Mormon." And so the good news is spreading, and the honest among men are beginning to see the truth. May the good work continue to spread until it has reached all.

Our prayer continually is that, God will give us light and strength sufficient to declare his precious truth to mankind, and that the time of gathering home to Zion may be hastened.

As ever on the firing line,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 24, 1904.

Editor Herald: On Monday, May 16, Bro. H. O. Smith and myself left Independence for St. Joseph, in order to be on hand at eight o'clock at the Saints' chapel to defend the cause against an attack made by Reverend George Backus. The history of this affair is, that some of the local brethren had had considerable conversation with Mr. Backus in regard to our faith. Mr. Backus had stoutly affirmed that Joseph Smith had been the originator of polygamy, and had taught and practiced it. He became so sanguine of his ability to prove this, that he asked our people to a public issue of the matter. While I was at Conference in Kirtland, I received a letter from Bro. William Lewis containing not only the above proposition, but one on the Book of Mormon, and asking that I make some arrangement to accommodate Mr. Backus. I spoke to Bro. H. O. Smith about the matter and he agreed to meet the man in a public debate, could it come off before he went south to his field of labor. On arriving at my home, I prepared rules, etc., and they were submitted to Mr. Backus and were readily agreed to and signed. The agreement was to the effect that Backus was to affirm for five nights the proposition before named, and H. O. Smith to affirm for eight nights the divinity, etc., of the Book of Mormon.

We met at night on the 16th with a full house. Had some difficulty in securing a chairman; not being able to secure an "outsider," we agreed upon Bro. I. N. Roberts. A Mr. M. C. Mahoffy was Mr. Backus' moderator, and I acted for Bro. H. O. Two-hour sessions, with one half hour, alternate speeches was the order of the debate.

About the first thing Mr. Backus did, after being introduced to the audience, was to ask a show of hands of all who were Mormons or Latter Day Saints in the audience. He seemed to be very suspicious of the crowd. The vote being taken and seemingly quite a large majority of hands went up, it seemed to deter Mr. Backus from asking "hands up" of the minority, and he said: "You see I have no friends in this crowd; this people are seared over, which gives me no show for my affirmative." Then he informed the people that this was what President Joseph F. Smith of Utah, had written him. Backus had been holding correspondence with Smith of Utah, asking for evidence to prove Joseph Smith, Jr., was the originator of polygamy and that he both taught and practiced it. Joseph F. had sent him typewritten copies of the evidence from the so-called polygamist wives of Joseph Smith, and others, but, says he: "The Reorganized Church will repudiate the whole thing, and you will not be able to convince one of them that there is a grain of truth in any of this evidence," etc. "This is just as I expected," says

Mr. Backus. "This people have been raised up from childhood in Mormonism, and taught to disbelieve this evidence, which is from men and women whose characters are unimpeachable."

By the time Mr. Backus had reached this point, he had worked himself up to that point of excitement that he stepped off from the pulpit (probably accidentally) and found himself stumbling in a very awkward manner to keep his equilibrium. Through this excitement he took occasion to say some hard things about his congregation—the members of the Reorganization. Pointing his finger at some one in the congregation he said, "I'll make that old lady chew her tongue worse than that before this discussion is over." Then presently he blurted out: "I would not believe one of these Mormons from stem to gudgeon." I have held many debates myself, but it has never been my lot to hear such a harangue over the heads of any people as I heard on that occasion—even not in all my debates with Reverend Clark Braden. Yet I must speak to the honor of the St. Joseph Saints that they took all of this calmly and without a murmur, with very few exceptions. Mr. Backus is tall and slender and a rapid speaker, with some ability and force in speech. I admired his courage in a bad cause if he really believed it. He did not raise the ire of his hearers, which probably was his intention, and hence on the second night he had calmed down considerably.

A few (especially of the outsiders) who had attended the first night refused to come the second night, wholly on account of Mr. Backus' unseemly deportment. With a very few exceptions Bro. H. O. was favorably commended for his Christian spirit shown during the debate, though some few said, "They both got mad." This was because of being unable to judge between being real earnest and being mad. While the crowd fell off a little the second night, it increased the third, and held its own to the last.

The third night it was easily to be seen that Backus' evidence to prove Joseph Smith originated and taught and practiced polygamy failed at every point to do what Mr. Backus intended it should. He was unable to conceal his discomfiture, and he showed his defeat badly. A number of Utah elders had stood by him; visited him at his home during the day to give him "pointers," and would attend the debate at night, but when Mr. Backus referred to one of them to prove some point Bro. Smith wished the witness put upon the stand where he could cross-examine him. This "broke the camel's back." The Utah elder arose in his seat, and refused to act as witness or have anything further to do with the controversy. It was evident that this "cross-examination" Bro. Smith had referred to was the very thing which would "let the cat out of the bag." This was too much for these Utahans to face, hence the refusal "to have anything further to do with it." I certainly commend them for their wisdom in that decision.

Bro. H. O. contented himself with making a thorough examination of Mr. Backus' witnesses; so much so that Mr. Backus at the last declared that he did not know if his witnesses swore the truth or not; wished he did know, but declared he knew as little about H. O.'s witnesses. At this point H. O. showed the source from which he produced his evidence, and the character of the witnesses introduced. Along this line H. O. is well posted and made an able defense, so much so that some leading men among the outsiders were heard to say, "I always believed that Joseph Smith introduced and taught and practiced polygamy; but, now I am convinced he had nothing to do with it." And they also said they were now convinced that the Reorganized Church does not favor polygamy and are wholly separated from the Utah people.

At the close of the first proposition the chairman asked Mr. Backus what he thought of letting the debate rest over Sunday and commencing the Book of Mormon proposition on Monday night. Mr. Backus arose and said, so far as he was concerned the debate was over. He felt that he was without friends in this debate, and especially when held in the Saints' chapel. We then offered to change the place of the debate, taking it to some hall, if it could be secured, and the Latter Day Saints would agree to pay two thirds of the expense. This he refused to do, and the Saints were asked if they were willing to furnish their chapel free and pay all the expense of the debate and let it go on. This was put to the house and received an indorsement by the raising of the hands, only two voting against it. But Mr. Backus declared he had enough of the debate and with him it was closed.

The order was good throughout, except at one time some persons hissed at what was said. This was discouraged by the chairman and never was repeated.

"Some one," said Mr. Backus, had thrown a stone at him as he was leaving the house. This was early in the debate. Special inquiry was made regarding this, and we learned some thoughtless boy had thrown a stone into the crowd, which Backus' moderator said had hit him, though receiving no injury. The Saints were not at all responsible for this, and resorted to every reasonable means to prevent all such. The debate was an educator for good, and more fully established the Saints in the contention of the Reorganization that the origin of polygamy and its evils were chargeable not to Joseph Smith, Jr., but came from some other source.

I was well pleased in the way Bro. H. O. handled the debate. He is simply able upon that subject, and I trust no one learned that fact better than did Mr. Backus. Mr. Backus found at the close that he had not fallen into the hands of mobbers or an uncultured and bigoted class of people, as they flocked around him and his wife with open hands and hearts, with "God bless you," "Come to our meetings and hear our people," "You did well considering what you had to do with," etc.

Bro. H. O. remained to lecture on the Book of Mormon for five nights.

Yours hurriedly,

I. N. WHITE.

BROOKLYN, New York, May 24, 1904.

Editor Herald: On the 15th of the month I had occasion to visit the few Saints who reside at Broadriver, Connecticut, and found them struggling along to maintain the cause of King Immanuel. It is quite true that "In unity there is strength," for the few that represent this latter-day work at this place have built a neat little church and now have it free from debt, which is a very commendable feature in gospel work. The brethren are striving to get the printed word among those who are anxious to know the truth of those people who are everywhere spoken evil against. Bro. William Hobson is getting the work before the high class of Norwalk and the result so far is that three Books of Mormon have been purchased for investigation, and so the good work is going on.

There was one baptism here in the city on the 15th; two more next Sunday, May 29. Elder J. D. White, of Independence, Missouri, was with us on the 22d and occupied the pulpit. All enjoyed the visit. Still praying for the success of God's work.

Yours in Christ,

227 McDougal Street.

ELDER JOSEPH SQUIRE.

TRINIDAD, Colorado, April 2, 1904.

Dear Herald: As I am alone to-day, and lonesome, I thought I would write to the HERALD so that all my sisters could hear from me and know how I am getting along out west, as I had promised to write to so many of the Saints.

I am enjoying good health at present and I feel to thank my heavenly Father for his blessings; although sometimes I get discouraged with myself, there being so many temptations set before the young. I am working in a laundry and as I am the only Latter Day Saint I have all kinds of girls to contend with; but I ask God for strength to keep me always from those things of the world not approved by him; and I know he blesses me even when I feel unworthy of his blessings. I have no church privileges. There are but five of us in number: Bro. and Sr. Kent, Sr. Severns, Sr. Pople, and myself. I miss the meetings very much and pray and trust that in the near future I shall have the privilege of associating with God's people. I often think of the Kewanee Saints, and always have a kind feeling for all. I was baptized there and almost brought up among them. I like the West real well, one reason being that I have such good health; I have gained twenty pounds since I left Illinois. Working girls also get much higher wages than they do in the Eastern States.

I am at present stopping with Sr. Pople. She takes the HERALD, and it is such a comfort to us both. The first thing I do is to glance over its pages to see if there is a letter from Kewanee, Illinois, but I fail to see one.

Dear Saints, I ask you to pray for Sr. Severns, who is afflicted. She had a paralytic stroke last winter and one of her hands is completely paralyzed. I also ask you to remember me in your prayers, as I am alone among strangers; but I pray and trust that the Lord will watch over me and keep me in the faith.

Ever praying for God's people, I remain

Your sister in Christ,

1601 San Pedro Street.

HATTIE FLETCHER.

MT. VERNON, Washington, May 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I wrote, but have been so interested in the letters from others; besides did not think I could write any very beneficial words that would be interesting.

My faith is still in the work, and I could not get along without my church papers, especially the HERALD, which contains splendid instructions in sermons and letters. In fact, the pages are full of usefulness from title page to finish, which is needed and appreciated by isolated Saints, of whom there are many. I am one of those who are scattered, and I long for the time when I can have the blessed privilege of associating with the Saints. We hardly ever have any preaching here. I never go to the other churches because I never seem satisfied; and go away hungry.

Will Sr. Alice Cobb write an autobiography of her life in the Church? I would very much like to read it. She used to be my school-teacher and taught me my A B C's. She will remember me as Alice Thompson, of Preparation, Iowa.

Pray for us, that the time may soon come when we can mingle with the Saints. I distribute papers and tracts when I can. Ever praying for the welfare of the Saints I remain,

MRS. ALICE SAVAGE.

CLAY CROSS, England, May 10, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have just been reading the letters in the HERALD and not seeing many letters from this part of the Lord's vineyard I thought I would write just a few lines. We can often read of different brethren and sisters speaking of how they like to peruse the pages of the HERALD. That is just my position; and it often makes me rejoice when reading of the good done by our missionaries and the ministry. In this land we have a great many persecutions to undergo; but it is something we must expect, or else the statements of our Savior would not be true, because he tells us plainly that in the world we shall have tribulations, but in him we shall have peace. What a grand consolation to know this. I have often heard one brother say in some of our testimony meetings that to live and reign with Christ but for one hour would repay us for all our sufferings here below. But we know this one thing; that it is not for one hour, or for a day, or for years, but it is throughout eternity. That brother has passed over the vale. But I can say like one of old once said, "He being dead, yet speaketh," for his words often cross my mind. And we know that the best way is to live the life of a Saint; that when the summons comes, we may, like the Apostle

Paul, leave a bright testimony behind. If we can do this we shall be like the five wise virgins; we shall be able to go in with him to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

I have a brother, Thomas Holmes who resides in Albion, Edwards County, Illinois, who would, I am sure, make any of the missionaries or elders welcome, if any pass that way. He and his wife are members of the Church, having been baptized in England by Elder J. W. Rushton, about twelve months ago. We can not do better than practice one of our beautiful hymns that we sing: "Let us pray for one another," because we know that the prayer of the righteous availeth much. Trusting that we may all keep hold of the iron rod the remainder of our days,
Your brother in gospel bonds,

G. H. HOLMES.

TONGANOXIE, Kansas, May 27, 1904.

Editors Herald: After laboring in Kansas City for seven months, it is quite a treat to get out in the country again for a little while. I came here on the 21st by invitation of Elder J. H. Tibbels. He made all necessary preparations, rented the Masonic Hall and had announced our coming through the press. On Monday Bro. Alfred White came and assisted also. We are preaching every night to small but very attentive listeners. These are the first meetings of our people ever held here. Two of the Utah elders came here a few days ago, and it aided us very much in bringing ourselves before the people in our true light. They attended our meetings and we presented the restoration of the gospel, and the division that had taken place, as Jesus had foretold in the parable of the ten virgins, and Paul's prophecy to Timothy that in the last days some should depart from the faith, and Peter also speaking of the same event, as he says: "By reason of whom the way of truth should be evil spoken of."—2 Peter 2: 2.

We have made a few friends who show a willingness to care for us. Bro. Tibbels and family are doing all they can for our comfort and success of the meetings. He is the only church member in his family. Mr. O. River and wife made us welcome at their home, also Mr. F. Wells and wife gave us a royal welcome at theirs. True Saints could not have done more for us to make us feel at home with them. Mrs. Wells is a Quaker and is already being made to feel a pressure by her church for attending our meetings and caring for us, but she stands her ground and shows that she would rather know the truth and be saved in the kingdom of God than have the friendship of the whole world and lose her soul.

To-morrow night the Masons will meet in the hall, so to-day I secured the opera hall from Mr. J. Laming. It is the best hall in town and he granted us the use of it till we close next night, free of charge. Now as I believe in reciprocity, and as Mr. Laming is a banker, let our members, when they have any business to transact here in Tonganoxie, remember his kind act to us.

May 30. We baptized one to-day and two more have expressed themselves as wanting to unite with us.

Yours in gospel bonds,

F. C. WARNKY.

BOISE, Idaho, May 24, 1904.

Dear Herald: I have been in Idaho three weeks. Before coming I made inquiries as to members of our church living here, and could hear of but one. I have already met three, Sr. Dennis, Bro. and Sr. Kizic, and I think there are a number more but do not know where to find them.

There are a great number of the Utah Church here, and nearly every one I have spoken to think the two churches are the same, or rather they have never heard of but one "Mormon" church.

If there is an elder near here who could stop in Boise for a time and will write to me, we will prepare a way for him; and if there are any Saints in Boise who see this, I would be pleased to have them call on me. I believe a successful effort might be made to stir up an interest and much good done. I have given away quite a number of tracts and nearly every one I have given them to seems astonished and interested. If any one feels like sending tracts that would give light on the difference in the two churches and will send them to me, we will distribute them. I think if the people could be convinced of the difference they would be much more friendly toward the Reorganized Church.

Your sister in the one faith,

614 South Sixteenth Street.

MARTHA E. BALLINGER.

IMBODEN, Arkansas, May 30, 1904.

Editors Herald: In the first part of April last we were living here in the quiet little mining camp of Graceland, Arkansas. We were not Christians, but thought we were enjoying ourselves as best we could in the small place. On the 14th in rode Bro. D. R. Baldwin. He said he had come to preach to us a short time. So he preached to us till the 17th. Then on the morning of the 18th he got ready and was going away. But my wife and I had become interested, so I asked him to stay and continue longer and use our house to preach in and make his home with us. So he consented and the result was that he baptized my wife and daughter and myself on Sunday, May 1.

Then he left us happier than he found us and may God bless him and help him to show others the way as he did us, and we ask all the Saints to pray for us that we may get strong and live faithfully to the covenant.

Respectfully,

L. E. HOLTON.

CENTRALIA, Kansas, May 23, 1904.

Editors Herald: I hear the treasury is low in funds, and you can not send more missionaries into the field. How bad I felt when I heard it, and how I wish I had the means to send one or two myself; for I love this work and want to do all I can to help it along. Inclosed you will find a money order for five dollars; two and a half for the College, and the balance for the Church. I have no children to send, but I have a great many grandchildren, some of whom I hope may attend in the future.

Yours in the one faith,

MATILDA McDOUGAL.

OMAHA, Nebraska, May 21, 1904.

Editors Herald: I wish a little space to offer a few thoughts on the gifts and the blessings promised in the gospel.

The Master told his disciples that as they went forth to preach certain manifestations of the Spirit's power should be manifested at the birth of a believer, as a seal of their authority and apostleship. And before his departure from earth he told the disciples that he would not leave them comfortless; but would come to them,—not in person, but in spirit, leading them into all truth, showing them things to come.

Paul, in the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians, explains how the various gifts were distributed, and their various manifestations. In Ephesians 4: 7, 8 he says: "But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men."

From the foregoing we infer that in the distribution of these gifts there was no favored class, being given to every man to profit withal, or for his profit. The noun man must be used here as a generic term meaning both male and female. In 1 Corinthians 11: 5 we read: "But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head." I refer to this because some seem to think that the gifts were designed for men only, or at least seem to think that however much a woman might desire to use the gift God has given her, she must suppress it and be silent.

Women did prophesy in apostolic times and were recognized of men and God. There are men who would deny to women the right to exercise the use of precious gifts in public. There seems to be no doubt but that the open manifestations of the gifts are growing less as time goes by; but why? If we were to forbid the godly and gifted women of the Church the right to speak in tongues and prophecy, it would be the beginning of the end. Her counsels are good; her love of the work of the very highest order.

In 1 Thessalonians 5:19, 20 Paul says: "Quench not the Spirit. Despise not prophesyings." In 1 Corinthians 12 we are told to covet the best gifts. A brother said to me lately, "Bro. Strain, twenty years ago we had the gifts abundantly in our branch, and what joyful times we had; but now one lone sister of all that number represents the glory of past days, and she has been openly rebuked by one in authority for prophesying." Are we drifting away from the true faith? Are we beginning to allow pride, and human opinion, and fear, to place us side by side with the sects? I am sure the gifts have not always been used in wisdom, especially those called the outward gifts; but that fact in no way proves that they are not necessary as a means of grace. If a man should confess that he had never enjoyed any of the gifts would he be in a position to decide whether a gift exercised was of God or not? If one is not in possession of the gift of discernment, can he consistently rebuke one who prophesies. A man's opinion on such matters is certainly of no weight.

I have always thought that the fact that these signs and gifts followed the believer constituted the cardinal points of distinction between us and the sects; and if one by one they cease to be manifested, what difference would there be between us and others? It is seldom now that one hears a prayer for the gifts. Are we as a people losing interest in these precious means of communication between God and the soul? If the Church shall cease to pray for and desire the precious gifts vouchsafed to us, what does it foreshadow? God has promised to pour out his Spirit upon all flesh in the last days, and are we not in the last days? The Master says, "When the Son of man cometh, will he find faith on the earth?" Paul says men shall depart from the faith and give heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. How do we harmonize the forgoing statements?

This is not written to find fault or to express any doubt of the final triumph of the gospel, but to arouse an interest in the matter; and I hope to hear from others as I believe this to be a matter of vital importance to the cause we love so well.

One thought more in conclusion. If the signs and the gifts now vouchsafed unto his people by the Lord should cease, or no longer be manifested, it would be a sure sign of retrogression and decay.

May God keep the Church true to its exalted status, until all nations have heard the gospel, and the end comes, is my prayer.

J. S. STRAIN.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. H. A. McCoy writes from Herman, Minnesota: "I secured a schoolhouse here for last Sunday, but only six attended because, as my brother-in-law said, people were sowing their oats. The season is very backward. We can get a place to preach here and I will return."

Bro. O. J. Hawn, Snover, Michigan, writes: "The work in Snover is moving. I opened the work here last winter and returned two weeks ago. The seed has been growing, and I baptized two on May 15 and four on the 22d, and there are more nearly ready. The heathen rage, but I feel at home when at the front. We organized a Sunday-school here last Sunday, so they begin to think we have come to stay."

Following are more letters concerning Graceland College:

Sr. Ida L. Condit, Logan, Utah, writes an encouraging letter to Bro. F. B. Blair, one of the College Board of Trustees, and shows what a person can do by a little effort to help along College work. She started out one morning to canvass so as to give the profits for the benefit of the College from her own work, and by night had cleared two dollars and sends it in with six dollars and fifty cents subscriptions from others. She says: "It was a trial for me to go from house to house, but surely the Lord was pleased with the effort as I cleared two dollars which I inclose for Graceland; also six dollars and fifty cents contributed by others. Trusting that Graceland may not be closed and that others will add their mite and the good work of the College go on, and the land be filled with those that have spent part of their time in Graceland and their influence be felt with those whom they come in contact with, is my desire."

Professor Charles B. Woodstock, superintendent of the public schools of Schofield, Wisconsin, writes: "Please accept the inclosed order to apply on the college indebtedness. The College must not close, at least while the divine injunction remains. Pay the debt. There is too much truthfulness in the caption, 'The glory of God is intelligence,' for this fruitful means of enlightenment to fail for the lack of a little financial support. May Graceland live and her power for enriching lives be multiplied."

Miscellaneous Department.

Conference Minutes.

Alabama.—Conference met with the Flat Rock Branch at 10 a. m., May, 21, 1904, J. G. Vickrey in the chair. Branches reporting: Pleasant Hill, 160; Flat Rock, 52. Ministry reporting: J. G. Vickrey, W. J. Booker, W. S. McPherson, G. O. Sellers, J. A. Amerson, W. D. Clark, J. R. Harper, G. E. Wiggins, and A. A. Weaver. The situation of Graceland College as presented by Bishopric and Board of Trustees was read by secretary. It was moved and carried that we sustain their action and do all in our power to raise the amount apportioned the district. Bishop's agent report read: On hand at last report $76.89; received $148.75; paid $212.75; on hand $12.89. Tent committee reported cash on hand $20.50. It was moved that the report be received and committee released. R. B. Booker, J. P. Deason, and J. R. Harper, were appointed as a new committee. The general authorities of the Church were sustained, as also the officers of the district. Adjourned to meet with the Pleasant Hill Branch on Saturday before the full moon in October, 1904.

Convention Minutes.

Eastern Maine.—Convention was held May 29, 1904, at 1 p. m., called to order by superintendent, for the election of officers, with result as follows: Superintendent, Joseph Eaton; assistant, Frank Smith; treasurer, Freeman Hackell; librarian, Flora Smith; secretary, Louisa Knowlton. Schools represented: Stonington, Mountainville, Little Deer Isle. Louisa Knowlton, secretary.

Pottawattamie.—District convention convened at Boomer, Iowa, May 27, 1904. Those present manifested great interest in the Sunday-school work. E. K. Carlile, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Ohio District; Greeting: In HERALD of May 18, is the notice of my appointment as your submissionary in charge, and to the end we may all work for the advancement of God's work I herewith make a most earnest appeal for your coöperation. The time is most opportune for all the Saints, both official or otherwise, rich or poor, isolated or associated, to redouble their diligence. It is workers God wants, and the only ones who shall have part in the haven of rest. If we have not labored and worked in this life we will have nothing to follow and bless us in the life to come.

The improvement of the district must find its origin in the individuals, which will make good branches, consequently a good district.

Many urgent calls have come already for the preaching of the word. Do you want to share in the grand work of soul-saving, and thus rejoice in the kingdom of heaven throughout the endless ages of eternity with this soul? If so, remember your tithes and offerings. Not all are called to preach, but all are called to impart of their substance to support those who are.

Bro. S. J. Jeffers, Radcliff, Ohio, is Bishop's agent. Remember the elders traveling among you; assist them in securing places to preach, distributing tracts, etc.

We have found some noble, faithful, and willing workers in this district from whom we expect good work in the ensuing year. Have received many encouraging letters from different parts of the district, in reply for requests for work. The outlook in those places is very hopeful. You will all have a chance to do something.

If the brethren can not get suitable places in which to preach, go on the streets. This is a very effectual way of getting the gospel before many we could not otherwise reach. We have the best thing on earth and why should we be ashamed to let the world know of it, even in the most public places?

We have decided to make special effort in the three large cities: Cincinnati, Columbus, and Dayton. In all those cities we have some good, faithful brethren upon whom we call for the assistance they can consistently render. Go on the streets and prepare the way.

We shall make an effort to reorganize the district Sunday-school association. Will the superintendents of the different schools bring this matter before them and send delegates? Further notice will be given touching this.

Any one having friends in the district whom they think will receive an elder, or any one knowing of an opportunity to preach, will greatly aid in our work by communicating same to the undersigned, giving full particulars. All branches needing assistance in any way will advise with Bro. S. J. Jeffers, your district president, and we shall consider them. An effort is being made to secure a district tent, and the prospects are far more encouraging than we ever anticipated, three Saints in Middletown Branch having contributed forty-five dollars. The remainder of the district can certainly raise the rest. I think one hundred dollars will cover the entire expense of fixing out a nice tent. Have an offer from the Louisville, Kentucky, Branch for a good large tent; has been used one year, with thirty folding benches, forty by twenty-six, for seventy-five dollars. A small tent for sleeping and cooking, cots, etc., will have to be provided for. Can not the district raise the balance? This is a most effectual way of getting the gospel in many places where we are now barred out. Here is an excellent opportunity to do something for the Lord's work. Do not pass this by as a little matter, but get down deep into your pockets and send what you can to F. J. Ebeling, Sinking Springs, Highland County, Ohio. Send by money order. Full account will be made of all receipts and expenditures. Several years in tent work have proven to my utmost satisfaction the unusual benefits of a district tent.

F. J. EBELING.

To the Good Saints of Central California: No doubt you have seen my reappointment in charge of Central California District. I write you in respect and love to all, as we start out on our year's missionary work. I humbly ask your aid and hearty cooperation, in presenting the gospel to the few we may be able to reach. If you know of any place where we can hold a few meetings let me know and I will try and respond to your call. The Saints are very much scattered in this district, but I will visit you as soon as practicable. I see that I am the only one appointed here by General Conference, but I hope that all the local officers will do all they can to hold up our noble cause.

Yours in the marvelous work. J. C. FOSS.

210 Saquel avenue, SANTA CRUZ, California.

First Presidency.

ASSISTANT CHURCH RECORDER.

The matter concerning the Assistant Church Recorder submitted to the Presidency by the late April session of Conference (see page 715 of minutes for 1904) has been arranged to the effect that Bro. C. I. Carpenter will continue as such assistant until further notice.

JOSEPH SMITH, for the Presidency.

June 1, 1904.

RELEASED.

By direction of Bro. I. N. White, in charge of the mission, Bro. Lee Quick, of Blue Mound, Kansas, missionary to Southern Kansas, has been released from his appointment made last April, at his own request, on account of ill health in his family and other matters which required his attention at home. Bro. White regrets the loss of Bro. Quick to the field, but being a matter of necessity, he acquiesces therein. This release is concurred in by the Presidency for the reasons assigned, and without prejudice to Bro. Quick. He is a good man.

JOSEPH SMITH, for the Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 1, 1904.

APPOINTMENT.

Bro. I. P. Baggerly will, by appointment of Bro. J. W. Wight, missionary in charge, concurred in by Brn. W. H. Kelley, Heman C. Smith, and Frederick A. Smith, of the Twelve, labor for the remainder of the conference year in Southern Indiana; appointment concurred in by the Presidency.

JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 1, 1904.

The Bishopric.

ADDRESS TO SAINTS OF GALLAND'S GROVE DISTRICT.

Dear Saints: We take this means of complying with the expressed wishes of the Board of Trustees of our own Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa, and of the urgent request of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church by calling upon the Saints who have a membership in the Gallands Grove, Iowa, district to assist in paying off the college debt, so it can continue to do the good work outlined by the Board of Trustees and the faculty.

Now, in order that the debt may speedily be paid, the Presiding Bishopric have requested each district of the Church in America to pay its apportionment according to membership, which was certainly the right thing to do. The amount assessed to our district is $386.80, which is only 40 cents for each member, but as we will not be able to secure the addresses of all it will be necessary for some to pay more in order to raise the full amount. Remember, "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." If it is not convenient to pay the money to branch agents, send it to me by post office order, bank draft, express money order, or registered letter and I will receipt you for it. We trust all will respond, thus assisting to free the college from debt, which fact will certainly gladden the hearts of thousands of Zion's earnest workers.

As the prospects and possibilities for the Church to accomplish good were never more favorable than this year, and the calls for preaching never so many and urgent, we sincerely hope that all members of the district will pay their tithes and offerings promptly according as the Lord has prospered them, for he has said "It is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people." Trusting that the blessings of the Master will attend you in every good work, I am,

Your brother in the faith,
C. J. HUNT, Bishop.

DELOIT, Iowa, May 25, 1904.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints and friends of the Eastern Maine District: The beginning of another conference year finds us entirely out of funds with which to meet the urgent demands made upon us for financial assistance. We wish to call attention to the necessity of each member of the Church fulfilling the law as relates to tithes and offerings. This is our positive duty. Let us cheerfully and willingly comply. Just now we need special assistance and we hope this appeal will meet with a ready response from the Saints and friends throughout this district. Do not hesitate because you may think your portion is small. Remember that the widow's mite is as acceptable in the sight of the Lord as is the rich man's thousands.

We are also making special effort to raise the amount apportioned to us as a district to liquidate Graceland College debt. The amount we are asked to raise is $92.40. Let us gladly and cheerfully do it. It can easily be done if we all will only do our humble part. Send all remittances to me by post-office money order at any time to Indian River, Maine.

May 30, 1904.

Your coloborator,
URIAH M. KELLEY.

Conference Notices.

The Eastern Michigan District conference will convene at Flint, June 25, 1904. Send reports to J. W. Davis, 1425 Court Street, West Flint, Michigan. J. W. Wight expected. Those wishing to help the Flint Saints, who are going to serve meals in the hall, will please bring vegetables. William Davis, president.

Notices.

LOCAL HISTORIAN.

Having been appointed to look after the historical interests of the Nauvoo District, I feel it my duty to gather as many facts as possible concerning that district, and more especially of its earlier years, that thereby may be found on file in the Historian's office the required data for future historical reference.

So far, I have been able to find out but very little from the time of the death of the Prophet until 1868; when was commenced a record of the district. If there are any living who know of any facts concerning the matter I shall be glad to hear from them regarding it. Also there are several disorganized branches in the district whose records are not to be found. If any have these records or know anything of their whereabouts, they will be rendering great assistance by either sending them to the Church Historian, or to my address below.

This district being the home of the Smith family from the time of the death of the Seer until 1860, there surely is something of interest for us, to be found. Let us each appoint ourself a committee to investigate the matter.

If you have any old branch records I shall be glad to receive them by express at Adrian, Illinois; or by mail at Ferris, Illinois, R. F. D. No. 1. Do not stop to think of the cost of sending them; I will see to that when they get to me.

In gospel bonds,
M. H. SEIGFRED.

"A CONVERTED JEW."

In HERALD of February 24, 1904, there appears a statement under the caption "A Converted Jew," signed by Bro. C. W. Hawkins, warning the Saints against being fooled by a Jew claiming to have been converted to our faith and suffering persecution on account of his affiliation with us. We were visited last Sunday by a gentleman whom we are satisfied is the same man described by Bro. Hawkins. We discovered his identity before he aroused our sympathies. We wish to warn the Saints that he is still active. J. J. Billinsky, president of St. Louis Branch, St. Louis, Missouri, May 26, 1904.

Reunion Notices.

The North Dakota conference and reunion will convene June 25, at Dunsenith, Rolette County, North Dakota. Bottineau is the nearest railroad station. Teams will meet those coming on the train the 24th or earlier, if the committee is notified. All come that can, and bring the Spirit and have a good time. John Spaulding.

Northeastern Kansas District reunion will convene at Fanning, Kansas, August 26 to September 3. Full announcement later. Samuel Twombly, M. F. Gowell, Frank G. Hedrick, committee.

Convention Notices.

The Eastern Michigan Sunday-school Convention will meet at Flint, Friday, June 24, 1904, at 1.30 p. m. All reports and credentials should be sent to Berta H. Johnson, 710 Hazelton Street, Flint, Michigan. Reports to be made for quarter ending March 31, 1904. If the secretaries of the different locals will make an effort to get reports to the district secretary by June 20 it will be appreciated. O. J. Hawn, superintendent.

The Eastern Michigan Zion's Religio-Literary Society convention will meet at Flint, Friday, June 24, 1904, at 8 a. m. All reports and credentials should be sent to Berta H. Johnson, 710 Hazelton Street, Flint, Michigan. Reports to be made for quarter ending March 31, 1904. If the secretaries of the different locals will make an effort to get the reports to the district secretary by June 20, it will be appreciated. There will be matters of interest to the Sunday-school and Religio workers discussed in the evening. Lewis B. Shippy, president.

Married.

RYUN—EVANS. — At the residence of the bride's parents, Bro. and Sr. David T. Evans, Lucas, Iowa, May 24, at 8 p. m. Mr. Logan Ryun and Sr. Lucy M. Evans were united in holy wedlock, Priest Thomas Hopkins officiating. A goodly number of relatives and friends were gathered to witness the ceremony and to wish them prosperity and happiness. Refreshments were served and a very enjoyable time was had.

Died.

JONES.—Morgan D., died May 23, 1904, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Daniel Thomas, Malad City, Idaho. He was born August 13, 1819, at Gurnetha, Wales; married to Mary Parry, February 11, 1853, on board the ship Jersey. Baptized November 30, 1869, by Alexander H. Smith, at Malad, Idaho. Eleven children were born to him, nine of whom are living. He has forty-one grandchildren, thirty-one living, and six great-grandchildren. The funeral was held in the chapel at Malad City, Idaho, May 26. A large concourse of people were present. Burial by Will S. Pender.

WELLER.—At the home of Henry Southwick, William's Bay, Wisconsin, Sr. Sarah Weller, peacefully passed away May 19, 1904, at the age of 85 years, 4 months, and 24 days. Funeral services were conducted by Elder W. A. McDowell, and the remains were laid to rest in the East Delavan Cemetery.

HATCHER—Near Belaire, Ohio, April 21, 1904, Sr. Hattie A., wife of Bro. Commodore P. Hatcher. She was born March 8, 1877, at Newport, Ohio. Was baptized June 19, 1898, by Elder L. R. Devore. Bro. Hatcher has suffered an irreparable loss as he has five motherless children to care for. This makes the bereavement very sad. Sr. Hatcher was a worthy Saint and died in the full hope of eternal life. Many sympathizing friends who attended the funeral attested the high esteem in which she was held. Funeral services conducted by Elders James Craig and O. J. Tary.

DOBBINS.—Minnie B., wife of H. A. Dobbins, at Jonesport, Maine. Born August 27, 1872; died May 28, 1904. She was not a member of the Church but had taken an active part in the Religio. She met her death by burning. She was alone in the house and when found was lying on the floor near the stove. She died before any assistance could be given. It is supposed that she used kerosene in lighting the fire. She was well and favorably known. Funeral service was held at her late residence, May 31, conducted by Elder W. E. LaRue. She leaves husband, one daughter, and two sons.

AVERY.—George W. Avery, was born near Byrneville, Indiana, August 23, 1849. Was baptized by Charles Harp, May 19, 1903. Departed this life, May 19, 1904. Sermon by Elder M. R. Scott, Sr., from 1 Corinthians, fifteenth chapter, assisted by James Shappenfeld, after which the remains were laid in the Byrneville Cemetery to await the coming of the bridegroom.

POWELL.—Caroline Powell was born June 9, 1831, in Huron County, Ohio, and died April 16, 1904, near Hetland, South Dakota. Funeral services at the house; sermon by Elder Schockley of the Congregational Church of Hetland. She was a member of the Church in her girlhood and was rebaptized in 1863 into the Reorganization at Plano, Illinois, by Elder W. H. Harp, and confirmed by President Joseph Smith.

HUDSON.—Bro. Charles D. Hudson was born May 20, 1844. Died May 14, 1904, at his home in Portland, Oregon. Leaves a wife and five children to mourn the loss of a father and companion. Deceased was baptized in 1865 by Elder D. H. Bays. Services were in charge of Priest J. B. Kinney. Sermon by Elder N. T. Chapman.

WIKE.—Eliza Betz Wike, of asthma and cancer May 1, 1904, at Columbus, Ohio, was born August 8, 1837, in Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania. Was baptized at Akron, Ohio, June 27, 1890, by L. R. Devore. She leaves a husband, two brothers, and four sisters, two stepsons and one stepdaughter. She stated she was ready and willing to go, having a bright hope. Was buried in Rowland Cemetery, Canton, Ohio, May 4. Funeral preached by L. R. Devore from 1 Corinthians 15: 35.

STRADER.—Sr. Maude Strader was born at Ft. Scott, Kansas, November 16, 1882, died May 19, 1904, at Ft. Scott, Kansas. She was baptized December 5, 1897, by Elder C. F. Belkham. Married to Bro. J. W. Strader May 20, 1899, by Elder J. T. Higdon. Maiden name Coberly. Funeral sermon at the United Brethren Church by Elder J. A. Wagoner, assisted by Amos T. Higdon. She died strong in the faith and in the hope of the first resurrection.

BENEDICT.—At her home near Lamoni, Iowa, May 18, 1904, Mary Ellen Benedict, wife of Mr. Melville Benedict. She was born in Jackson County, Missouri, February 9, 1881; baptized April 20, 1893, by V. D. Baggerly. Married October 4, 1899. She leaves a husband, two small children, two brothers, and one sister. Funeral services in Saint's Church, Lamoni, Iowa, and interment in Rose Hill Cemetery, May 19. Sermon by Elder Heman C. Smith, assisted at church by Elder J. R. Lambert, and at cemetery by Elder A. S. Cochran.

FIFER.—Alfred D. Fifer was born July 23, 1851, at Anderson, Henry County, Indiana. Married December 24, 1874, to Sr. Edith Pruden. Died May 22, 1904, at St. Joseph, Missouri. Bro. Fifer was a member of the Church about fifteen years, and died in full faith. He had been for a number of years janitor of the St. Joseph church, and performed his work faithfully. He was the father of eight children. Two preceeded him to the spirit land. Six children and his wife remain to mourn his death. Funeral services May 24, at 3 p. m., from the church in St. Joseph, in charge of Elder H. O. Smith. Interment in Ashland Cemetery.

What College Does for the American Boy.

In the enriching of one's life a father sending his son to college may give a special value to the word friendship. For it is a word most significant in the college language. I have known a wise father to say, "I will send my boy to college even for the sake of the friendship he will make!" College friendships! What a world of love, of associations, and of associates they open! They are wrought into literature, as well as into life. The greatest poem of the last century commemorates a college friendship. There are no friends so natural, so genuine, so warm, so true, so satisfying, as those formed in college. In life's failures, college friends are the ones who still love us. In life's triumphs, their congratulations give the most contentment. The father may, indeed, well think of the friends whom he will give to his son by opening to him the college doors.

But the father will also learn that through the college he is able to fit his son not only for self-knowledge and a knowledge of life, but also for the richest service to the community. His son will become a better citizen by reason of his academic residence. I do not fail to recognize that the impression prevails that the so-called higher education may so lift the man above the uneducated that he is unwilling to try to be of common public service. Neither do I fail to recognize the fact that education refines the taste as well as informs the judgment. I am painfully aware that examples can be found of graduates who seem to glory in their remoteness and aloofness from common interests. But notwithstanding all such conditions and examples, the fact remains that a college education usually not only prepares a man to be of better service to the people, but also inspires him with a wish to be of better service. The education opens his eyes to opportunities to which he would otherwise have been blind. It gives to him breadth and depth of sympathy with the community, as well as increases his power of meeting the demands which it justly makes. It not only gives him a richer manhood, it creates in him a finer citizenship.—From "Sending a son to college," by Charles F. Thwing, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.

A. Henry Savage Landor, who a few months ago returned from a long visit to the Philippines, and who has just published, through Messrs. Harper and Brothers, a book entitled "Gems of the East," describing these islands, writes in the June number of the North American Review, of "The American soldier as he is." Mr. Landor speaks in the highest terms of the character and conduct of the men who enlist under the Stars and Stripes.

They are simple, full of resource, shrewd, good-natured and the most humane soldier in the world. They have, moreover, a blunt code of honor, devoid of conventionalities, but with sound gentlemanly principles in it, and Mr. Landor declares that most of the charges which have been brought against American soldiers for alleged brutality toward the Filipinos are without foundation in fact. As to the American officer, Mr. Landor says:

"I have had the honor of meeting a great number of American officers, both during the Chinese war and in various parts of the Philippine Archipelago, and I was in most cases struck by the morally magnificent type of men who lead the American army—fair, open-minded, businesslike, hard-working officers, combining patience in tedious plodding through excessive office-work, with pluck and dash and, above all, tact and accurate judgement when in the field. It is not to be regretted that the American officer lacks the overwhelming love for wearing-apparel which characterizes military men of many European armies, and his simplicity of clothing is, indeed, well matched by his easy, manly, sensible manner. There is no superfluity of gold braiding, no idiotic monocle deforming one section of the face and impeding the sight, no exaggerated sword dangling noisily upon the ground, no swagger worth noticing; but when it comes to doing the actual work of a warrior, although it is accomplished with no show and no pomp, it is done well, very well."

The Housing of Visitors at St. Louis.

Two years ago, the estimate of the hotel accommodations in the city disquieted the responsible men of St. Louis. Foreign capital seemed reluctant to enter the hotel field. The Business Men's League opened a local subscription for a new hotel, and a million dollars was got and spent in building the Jefferson. That evidence of confidence in the situation was all that was needed. Hotels, permanent and temporary, sprung up as sweet peas in summer do. After that, there was talk of extortion by hotels. The Business Men's League got signed statements as to rates from the principal hotels, and printed a reassuring comparison with the hotel rates of other cities, and the fair built an enormous hotel on the grounds—the Inside Inn—whose rate of two dollars a day European plan, including admission to the ground, regulates the prices at other hotels. Then, to secure a public proclamation of the ability of St. Louis to properly house the people, the Business Men's League went to Washington, and, presenting facts and figures to the Democratic National Committee, induced that body to send the national convention to St. Louis, with its fifty thousand attendants. I have before me now a list of one hundred and thirty hotels, eighty of them so good that I would send my best friend to any one of them if my other best friends had filled my own house. These hotels, excluding ten which are fashionable and expensive, will charge no more than the Inside Inn, some of them not so much. On this same list, whose accuracy is guaranteed by the World's Fair Company, are many apartment-houses and boarding-houses, with excellent service, the rates of many as low as seventy-five cents a day. In fact, the capacity of the St. Louis hotels alone will not be taxed during the exposition. Counting the temporary ones, they have now an unfilled capacity of more than one hundred thousand people. There will be many people who will come to St. Louis having made no arrangements, many arriving at night, and they will go at once to some of the noted hotels of which they have heard. Of course, they will find these hotels full, and they will not get themselves unpacked in a pleasant room without spending that night and part of the next day uncomfortably. Effort is being made to save even the careless people from discomfort. The Business Men's League and the world's fair have official and free bureaus of information which secure accommodations for inquirers and protect them from imposition. So has the Inter-State Merchants' Association, and the Credit Men's Association; the Young Men's Christian Association, and the King's Daughters; the Knights of Columbus, and the National Educational Association. The leading business men, at much individual expense, are conducting similar bureaus. The Princeton alumni have leased a large, well-fitted, many-roomed mansion, where they will provide for Princeton men, and indeed, any university man, by a plan which will secure economy and good service. Letters addressed even vaguely to any of these organizations will be put into the right hands by the post-office authorities.—From "The Art Exhibition at St. Louis," by Halsey C. Ives, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for May.

The Cosmopolitan announces a series of articles on the great industries of the United States. This is a subject that must naturally arouse the widest interest. The June issue contains the first—"Glass-making," by William R. Stewart. The illustrations, which are numerous, give an excellent idea of the various stages of glass manufacture. If the rest of the series is as good as the first article, it will have a decided educational value.

Country Life in America points out that the dropping off of young fruit is not due to insect pests, as it is popularly supposed. More often it is because of the fact that many varieties of fruits are not self-fertile and the blossoms require the contact of the pollen of other varieties before they will mature fruit. Not getting this pollen, many fruit trees do not bear at all or very much. The same trees treated by the new methods of grafting and planting will often bear large fruit and plenty of it.

The Traveler
 Who contemplates a trip to Colorado, Utah, California or the North west should know that
The Denver & Rio Grande R. R.
 widely known as "The Scenic Line of the World," has more scenic attractions than any other route across the continent, traversing as it does the Rocky Mountain Region through Royal Gorge, Canon of the Grand River, Glenwood Springs, Marshall Pass, Black Canon, Castle Gate, and the world-famed Salt Lake City. Its three through daily trains are equipped with the latest improved cars of all classes. Its dining car service is unsurpassed. For illustrated pamphlets address
 S. K. HOOPER, G. P. & T. A.
 Denver
 Colo.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
ABSOLUTELY PURE
 Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

"She Wants to Tell."

Sr. M. E. Webber of Queensboro, Ontario, Canada, writes January 12, 1904, saying: "Dear Brother:—I want to tell you how pleased I am with your Quit-to-bac. My brother used less than two boxes and has not touched tobacco since he began to use it and has gained in flesh and is better in every way." If it cures others, why not you? Three boxes sent post-paid for $1.50 with positive guarantee of cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.
 Address: (Rev.) W. F. Ordway, 228 Hancock St., Peoria, Ill., U. S. A.

NEW BOOKS

JOSEPH SMITH, WHO WAS HE?

A valuable work of 225 pages completely refuting the charges that Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy. Paper cover 50c. Cloth 75 cents

EBELING-RIGGLE DEBATE.

Subject: The Kingdom of God. A book of 492 pages bound in cloth..... 50 cents

THE OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL

By Elder Joseph Luff. A book of nineteen sermons on vital gospel subjects. Makes a good missionary..... $1.00

EXEGESIS OF THE PRIESTHOOD

This book is a compilation of scripture on the priesthood and the duties of the various officers in the priesthood. Every church officer should have one $1.00

Herald Publishing House

Lamoni, Iowa

BOOK OF MORMON MAPS AGAIN

G. F. WESTON, removed from Buchanan, Michigan, to Walker, Vernon County, Missouri.

LECTURE SIZE.—5x8 feet, on muslin, limp, in colors, for Religios or Ministry. (Postage 25c included)..... $3.25

Same, full finish, varnished, (expressage not included)..... $5.00

HOME AND OFFICE—size 39x51 inches, limp, on muslin, in colors, for Ministry or Religios, very nice, (postage 8c included)..... $1.60

Same full finish, varnished, (expressage not included)..... $2.50

SPECIAL MAP OF ARABIA.—28x36 inches, Book of Mormon features, limp muslin, in colors, (postage 5c included)..... 55c

CHARTS—SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—40x52 inches, on limp muslin, numbers 1 and 2 in colors with various illustrations, signs on Sun, Moon, etc., each (postage 8c included)..... $1.60

CHART—ANCIENT CHARACTERS, —3x6 feet. Book of Mormon and others compared, in colors, (postage 12c included)..... $1.60

SMALL CHARTS.—Which shall we serve? The Christian Race; The body of Christ; The Resurrection; Charity; The Lord's Supper; each 12x36 inches. Illustrated and with bright lettering, on limp muslin, in colors, for Religio and Sunday-school rooms or for preaching, each (postage included)..... 30c

DISPENSATION CHART—by Elder J. D. Stead, 5x16 feet, on muslin, in colors, finely illustrated, varnished in full finish, (expressage not included) $1.00

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

KEOKUK & WESTERN R. R. CO.

North—Leave Leon 2: 40 p. m.; arrive at Des Moines 6: 05 p. m.

South—Leave Des Moines 8: 25 a. m.; arrive at Leon 11: 45 a. m.

Trains daily except Sunday; connect with C., B. & Q. at Leon.

Herald Office Publications.

All books are sold by numbers. Send numbers only. Send all orders and make all remittances payable to Herald Publishing House, Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County Iowa.

REORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

201. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 60

EUSEBIUS' ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

226. Each..... 1 50

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
 Lamoni, Iowa.

Interest Never Sleeps.

It works while you sleep like a silent partner.

If you have any money that is not earning interest, write at once to the oldest established bank in Lamoni.

The Commercial Bank,

D. F. Nicholson, Cashier. LAMONI, IOWA.

A PRACTICAL $5 TYPEWRITER.

An up-to-date machine. Can be carried in the pocket. Size 9¼ by 2¼ by 1¼ inches, weight 20 ounces. Writes capitals, small letters, numbers and punctuation marks; 76 characters in all. We guarantee safe arrival by mail or express. Circulars free. Address, NEW CENTURY CO., 22-4 P. O. Box 933, Pittsburg, Pa.

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
 LAMONI - - IOWA

MINISTRY BLANK REPORTS.

209. Per dozen..... 10

NEW TRACTS

No. 300. Eternity of the Marriage Covenant. Price per dozen 15cts., per 100 $1.00

No. 36. Can Belief Alone Save? Per dozen 10c.

No. 208. Teachings in Contrast. The teachings of the Utah Church and the Reorganization in parallel columns. Per dozen 15c.

No. 209. The Church of Jesus Christ. Where is it? How shall I know it? There are many churches of men; only the one church of Christ. Price per dozen 20c., per 100 $1.50

No. 5. The Latter Day Saints; Who are They? Per dozen 20c.

The Saints' Herald

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

110
100
90
80
70
60
50
40
30
20 10
0

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, June 15, 1904

Number 24

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR
I. A. SMITH . . . . . ASSISTANT EDITOR
FRED'K M. SMITH . . . . . CORRESPONDING EDITOR
Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

Editorial.

MUST I FORGIVE?

One of the brothers has written about forgiveness. Just one more question in regard to it: If one wrongs another most grievously, and the one wronged would gladly forgive if it was asked, is the one wronged supposed to forgive if the guilty party makes no sign of repentance, does not ask forgiveness, and keeps silent and allows others to throw the blame on the innocent, allowing them to think the trouble is over some trifling thing which has little or nothing to do with the matter?

One more question: Suppose a brother or sister does things that continually hurt the church and character of the rest of a small body of Saints, what are the other members to do?

We are commanded to "forgive all men," the Lord reserving to himself the right to forgive whom he will. This reservation is based upon his positive knowledge of the environments of every individual, the secret motives that move a man to act, as well as the peculiar organization and qualifications of the wrong-doer. We are commanded to forgive because we can not know the conditions governing the situation in which the wrong is done nor the inner motive of the wrong-doer. We can only judge from the act, and the sense of wrong or bitterness of feeling caused by the injury done us tends to make it almost impossible to judge leniently, and sometimes causes us to judge unjustly. It is difficult to answer the question propounded in the opening of this article because it is asked that a rule be set binding the wronged person to forgive. We can not do this, but believe it to be part of wisdom where the wrong is personal and the results are not extraordinarily injurious for the person wronged to permit himself to forgive the injury already done, and not hold the wrong-doer to too close an account.

Of course it is an aggravation for the wrong-doer to add additional weight to the sense of injury by allowing the inference to be taken that the wrong was small and that the person injured was in the fault. It may be, however, that the wrong-doer is of such organization that he does not realize that he has done wrong or that the party is necessarily injured by what he has done. We think we have known some such persons. They seemed to be impervious to the consideration that others should take offense or be injured by their acts. Even in such cases as this if the person injured can forgive it seems to us that it would bring greater satisfaction of mind to let it pass. The sublimest trait in the Savior's character is found in the expression, "He

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
Must I Forgive	- - - - -	545
Instructions—Leaving the Church, Etc	- - - - -	546
Misquotations	- - - - -	547
Original Articles:
Graceland College Commencement	- - - - -	548
Selected Articles:
Liberty of Bible Reading	- - - - -	553
Science and Invention	- - - - -	554
Fresh Air a Preventive of Disease	- - - - -	555
Mothers' Home Column:
Half Hours With Parents and Teachers—No. 4	- - - - -	556
Program for July Meetings of Daughters of Zion	- - - - -	557
Sunday-School Department:
The Needs of the District	- - - - -	558
Questions and Answers	- - - - -	559
An Essential	- - - - -	559
Punctuality	- - - - -	559
Letter Department:
Letters	- - - - -	560
Extracts from Letters	- - - - -	565
Miscellaneous Department:
Pastoral:
J. R. Sutton	- - - - -	566
M. M. Turpen	- - - - -	566
C. Scott	- - - - -	566
The Bishopric	- - - - -	566
Fifth Quorum of Elders	- - - - -	567
High Council	- - - - -	567

THE bright colors assumed by maples, sumacs, and amelops during the autumn months are the result of the oxidizing of the color compounds, or color generators, of the leaf cells. Long-protracted cool weather is most favorable to the production of autumn tints, and slight frosts that are not severe enough to kill the cells hasten the display of beauty by producing an enzyme that brings forth the bright purples, oranges, and reds. Leaves containing much tannic acid never give bright autumn tints, while those containing sugar give the very prettiest.—Scientific American, January 9, 1904.

endured the contradiction of sinners against himself."

There are wrongs which not only involve injury to persons, but injury to the body social or religious, which it would seem persons would be justified in insisting on the wrong-doers answering to the law. Some question the right of individuals to allow wrongs of this character to pass unnoticed. We have never taken this view. We have been and are now of the opinion that personal wrongs, though they be more or less grievous, may be forgiven by the persons injured.

It is hard to think that persons will wrong others, and when they become conscious that they have so wronged them, will not feel the spirit of repentance, neither seek pardon from the persons whom they have injured. There are such persons, however, and how to deal with them is a serious question.

The latter portion of the question is much easier to answer, because the wrong written of is an injury to the whole body of the church, and should be taken notice of by the officers of the branch, as all of the membership are amenable to the rules of good conduct within the church and are liable to be dealt with for a breach of these rules.

According to the Book of Covenants there are transgressions which the church may not forgive, but for the commission of which they must turn them over to the law of the land. And we are impressed with the thought that if the church would thus proceed in many instances where grievous wrong has been done or crime committed, it would greatly simplify church discipline. There are several cases of wrong-doing mentioned in section forty-two which require to be turned over to the law of the land. If this were done in many instances at the outset it would throw the burden of prosecution upon the officers of the civil law; and if parties were duly convicted and punished, then the church could either condone the wrong without any further action, or taking cognizance of the legal action of the court, disbar the member from further fellowship with the body. Of course this would be an extreme measure and probably would not commend itself to the average church congregation. We incline to the opinion that the book is correct where it says that mercy should not rob justice, neither should justice rob mercy. This seems to suggest the golden mean, after all, and leaves it upon the base: "Whatsoever things ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

If by close analyzation of one's own feeling a person should conclude that if he were the wrong-doer he would like to be forgiven, we should then say that the person injured so thinking should forgive the one who may have injured him. And perhaps this answers the question as well as it may be needful for the purposes of the questioner. We should like to have it understood, however, that answers to questions of this character given in the HERALD are not to be taken as law, but as the Editor's opinions, based upon the impressions made upon the mind when questions are received, and that without reference to any combination of circumstances occurring which give rise to the questions.

To be able to forgive is one of the noblest characteristics of the human mind, and he who possesses it in a large degree will find himself in very pleasant associations with his fellow men, for the reason that he will not be apt to construe small or ordinary things to be offensive to him, or to be intended to be as injuries or insults. It would seem to be a high attribute of the human mind to take the spoiling of one's goods joyfully; and yet it seems that this is one of the injunctions given by the apostle in regard to the exercise of charity. He is in an unfortunate and unhappy frame of mind who allows himself to think that those with whom he is in association are constantly seeking to injure, irritate, or annoy him. It makes him suspicious of even the kindest-intended action; prevents him from greeting his neighbor with cordiality, makes him forgetful of his daily obligations to be cheerful and contented and to make others contented and happy as well. He is an unhappy man who can not forgive injury and wrong, neglect or abuse, one whose mind takes on the somber dark side of every cloud, forgetful of the fact that the hand of Him who is over all still causes his sun to shine and gives the silver lining, beyond which hope should see, were the mind in proper condition to discover it.

We do not remember the detail of the article to which the writer refers, but take it for granted that it was in favor of the widest possible exercise of the faculty to forgive. We must never forget that if we use the Lord's prayer we must say, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."

---

INSTRUCTIONS—LEAVING THE CHURCH, ETC.

By an action of General Conference no person can be dropped from the church rolls or records, notwithstanding he may make request to withdraw, except after labor has been performed with him in regard to his desire to withdraw and charges have been preferred for apostasy and either an individual tried and adjudged guilty of apostasy, he being present, or judgment is rendered by reason of default for non-appearance. We have tried twice to secure the passage of a resolution less rigid in its operation, a rule which would allow persons reasonably intelligent to withdraw from the church by vote of the branch wherein they may hold their membership. Both efforts failed, and the rule first stated remains the rule of the church.

We are sometimes asked whether a member can be released from the church at his request. We have cited the rule, but have stated our objection to its operation and the necessity for keeping the rules of the church as adopted by the conference as being the safer course of procedure. We really see no necessity for persons to be tried on formal charges for apostasy when a change of opinion has taken place and they desire to withdraw from the church. Every man being the arbiter of his own faith to a large degree, he should be at liberty to follow the dictates of his judgment and take the consequences if he errs. We do not question those who come to us from other churches as to whether they have been formally dropped from their connection upon charges of having apostatized from the faith, and we really see no reason why persons may not be allowed to change their opinions and withdraw from the church if they see proper, and suffer whatever loss which may accrue from such action; always made and provided, that they are not otherwise subject to censure for immoral conduct. However, we have stated the rule, and like it is in other cases, we are not at liberty to disregard our own accepted and adopted rules of procedure, however much we may think the rule should not have been adopted.

The officers of the different branches of the church should make every reasonable effort to answer the objections of those who may have objections and to retain in good standing and fellowship every member of the branch; and where persons become dissatisfied or desire to withdraw because of change of opinion, all reasonable labor should be performed with them by which they may become satisfied to remain with the church, and the charge of apostasy should be the last course of procedure to pursue.

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 17, paragraph 18, provides that the officers of the church should have sufficient time allowed them to explain to members uniting with the church by baptism those things connected with the church which they should be entitled to know in order to qualify them for the ceremony of the laying on of hands and partaking of the sacrament as members in full fellowship. We understand this paragraph to cover this ground, that where it is not already known to the officers of the church that the persons baptized have been attendant upon the preaching of the word and other meetings of the church to become sufficiently acquainted with the general beliefs of the church and its practices to have a fair understanding of what membership in the church means, then they should be instructed before confirmation and partaking of the sacrament. It does not usually happen that in regularly organized branches persons are baptized hastily, but most frequently those baptized in such branches are baptized after long attendance at the meetings of the Saints and where they become pretty thoroughly acquainted with the teaching and practices of the church, hence this teaching could not apply in such cases. But where persons are baptized after hearing only one or two sermons at some conference or reunion, if they have not already been in attendance upon meetings in branches, then this teaching should apply.

To take the lead of meetings, as provided for in section 17, means to have charge of the assembly at the time of holding services; and the officer who may do this may be any officer in the church, clear down to the deacon, the highest officer having priority of prerogative to preside or take the lead in every assembly held where there is not already an organization effected with officers properly chosen or appointed to preside. Where organization is existing, then the officers chosen preside in the order of their priesthood, presiding elder first, after or in his absence the presiding priest, then teacher or deacon, the other officers being absent. Any officer of the branch may be asked to take charge by the presiding elder, and it would be his privilege to open and close the meeting, no matter who may have done the preaching. The man having charge is the one referred to as the one to take the lead of the meeting. It seems to us that the meaning of the section in regard to the duties of officers is quite plain, if one will only take pains to read it carefully. We sometimes fancy that persons write to us touching these matters in the hope that our opinion may have undergone a change which would favor extreme views that some hold in reference to the right to take the lead of meetings; but we have seen no reason to change our view as yet. This may answer some questions that have been received of late, and will be sufficient.

---

MISQUOTATIONS.

The following list of misquotations and the original sayings for which the errors are made to do duty is going the rounds in the literary portion of some papers as good reading. We give it that others may be profited by it as we have been:

Just as the popular so-called quotations from the Bible and Shakespeare are commonly misquoted, so it will be found the wise sayings of statesmen have not always been preserved in their original integrity.

For example, there is Washington's apothegm that "To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace." This has been condensed into the familiar "In time of peace prepare for war." Then Jefferson's axiom, "Vacancies by death are few, by resignation none," is almost invariably applied to the office-holding contingent in the shape of the assertion "Few die, and none resign."

Two western newspapers have as their motto "Error ceases to be dangerous when truth is left free to combat it." This is a mutilation of President Jefferson's celebrated saying in his inaugural address that "Error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it." The commonly used phrase "A delusion and a snare" is a compression of Lord Denman's expression "A delusion, a mockery and a snare." Tom

Paine's "One step above the sublime makes the ridiculous" has been modernized into "From the sublime to the ridiculous." Fouche's "It is more than a crime—it is a political fault," has become "It is worse than a crime—it is a blunder."

Josiah Quincy's threat of the secession of some of the States, "Amicably if they can, violently if they must," was so effectually misquoted by Henry Clay that his rendering—"Peacefully if they can, forcibly if they must"—has been commonly received. Jackson's famous toast, "Our Federal Union; It Must Be Preserved," has been amplified into "Must and shall be." Then there is Chief Justice Chase's eloquent characterization of "An indestructible Union composed of indestructible States." This, in the mouth of the average Fourth of July orator, has become "An indissoluble Union of indestructible States."—From the New York Press.

---

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Graceland College commencement began on Sunday (5th) when Bishop E. L. Kelley delivered the baccalaureate sermon at the morning hour in the Saints' church. On Monday night the Athenian Literary Society awarded diplomas to members who had finished the required amount of work in the society and who were to graduate from regular departments of the college. An appropriate program was rendered. The department of music gave a program on Tuesday night, and on Wednesday morning the regular commencement exercises for all departments of the college were held. All exercises were well attended, showing a deep and lively interest in the work of Graceland.

Governor Cummins, of Iowa, has issued a proclamation to the people of the State in which attention is called to the day set aside for the Hawkeye State at the St. Louis Fair. On June 17, Iowa will "take possession of the Exposition," "and will signalize two mighty events,"—it being the anniversary of the date on which civilized man first saw the shores of Iowa. People of Iowa are requested to be present and all railroad companies are offering greatly reduced rates on round trip tickets. (See other columns.)

The business manager, Bro. F. B. Blair, attended the Des Moines District conference at Des Moines, Saturday and Sunday, 4th and 5th inst. He reports a good time and large crowds. Prayer-meeting on Sunday was especially encouraging. Bishop's agent gave notice that the district was responding to the call for Graceland College and that the branches already visited had more than made up their quota.

Very encouraging letters are coming every day in regard to Graceland College. Members from far and near, isolated and in the branches, show a determination to do their part in keeping this worthy institution an active and important factor in the preparation of our young people for life and life work. Watch the letter department for some of these letters.

Original Articles.

GRACELAND COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

BACCALAUREATE SERMON BY BISHOP E. L. KELLEY AT LAMONI, IOWA, JUNE 5, 1904.

Freely ye have received, freely give.—Matthew 10: 8.

The text at once sets forth such a life of usefulness and true greatness as to commend itself to our consideration and lead us to the highest and noblest standard of action. It seems to me that if there was ever a time when the Master placed before the people the particular position or station that they should occupy in this world, it was when he had gathered a few of his pupils, or learners, together, and instructed them as to the work that they should engage in through life.

At the time of the instruction referred to here the circumstances were not so greatly unlike those that meet us to-day. Jesus had been instructing in a school for more than two years, at this time, and had gathered together a number of learners. Upon the occasion when the words of the text were used, he had called all of these together, and from them selected twelve whom he had chosen for the purpose of moving out into the world as proper representatives of the little society. They were but learners; they were called disciples, the true meaning of which is "learner" or "pupil."

Sometimes when we look upon the work that the Master did, and consider that he was a teacher that had been sent from God, we are apt to have in mind the idea of theology, in the sense that he was instructing people with reference to what was contained in the word of God that related more to the next world than to this. Schools of theology in this world are not, or should not be, so far removed from the work and life of the people as to sever duty as it relates to the disciple in this world from true faith as made applicable for their helpfulness in the world to come. So with reference to the instruction that the Master gave when he began as a teacher in the coasts of Galilee. He taught the people with reference to particular duties that devolved upon them in this life, and gave them an understanding of the royal way in which men and women should walk in this world in order that they might attain to the highest worthy honors here, and the fullest reward hereafter. He instructed with reference to our duty to God; but just as particularly as to our duty to our fellows here in this life, impressing as a part of the religious life those things that belong to us as members of one family, a brotherhood, a sisterhood, a unity in the work of creation. And we ought to be a unit to a degree in every good work in life. Christ instructed not only touching especial duties to God and man, but to the state in which they lived. He told them that it was proper and right to recognize Cæsar in his place, and gave instruction that was beneficial to the soldiery, and those occupying positions in the government. He gave proper advice to the scribes; and all classes of society, sects, and parties could come to him and learn wisdom; for the instruction that he had to impart was that which would benefit the world, build up mankind, not only in the sense of a higher religious life as that life is sometimes understood to be separated from duty and care in this world; but in all the affairs of life, everything with which men and women have to do.

He was a lawyer of the strictest school. He taught that man should "live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God." When upon a certain occasion it was said that the customs of the people should be followed, he stated to them that, "By your traditions you have set aside the law of God." In his work he taught the people: "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, he shall not be saved in the kingdom of God." "Not one jot or tittle shall pass from the law till all be fulfilled." Christ was an instructor in the law, a teacher of the law, of which the world has never seen an equal; one who stood for the majesty and dignity of it, and for the particular following out of every demand connected therewith. Yet sometimes in our estimate of this great character that came into the world, we forget his warfare for principle and truth and look upon him simply as one who desired to save the race by his beneficent work in this world by reason of the great example of charity manifested in his life, unsurpassed before or since in the history of the race. Merciful to all with whom he had to do; so much so that in these later times men have contended that his mercy was such as to overreach the work of duty enjoined upon the race; and that all men have to do in this world is to fall upon the mercies that are manifest in this great Savior and it will be as well as though they had improved their time and opportunities. Let us not, however, fall into this grievous error. He not only came to the world to represent the divine attribute of mercy but to enforce justice and equity among men and to impress all of the necessity of obedience to the law of his Father.

It is written that he is "the true light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world." He testified himself: "I am the light of life." Whatever the Master did, then, whatever he came to the world in order to teach men and women to do, is essential that we study and understand. If we should pass through the most celebrated schools of learning of the present, or any other time, and fail to attain to the prime instruction that this greatest teacher of the world has given for our guidance and help, we would fall short of attaining to the highest standard that is possible for men and women to occupy in this world. What is President Elliot's advice and instruction in comparison to the meek and lowly One that traversed the banks of Galilee? Whom could we place alongside of him who has occupied a chair in Oxford, or any of the universities of the East? And yet sometimes men and women fail to see the light and grace and favor, and the means of help, that this lowly One has given to the world in order that the people may enrich themselves.

But it was not only that Jesus came into the world as a light, and such a light that the world might receive instruction from him: but in his estimate of those who were with him and whom he had prepared to go out and engage in the battle of life, he gave them also to be lights. He says to his disciples upon a certain occasion before the time recorded in the text wherein twelve were chosen and authorized to go into the world, "I give unto you to be the light of the world." And in connection with this, as if to impress upon them the importance of the statement, he says, "Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, or a bed, and not to be set on a candlestick?" (see Mark 4:21), showing that these who had received instruction from him were to move out in the world and each represent in his individual work the light that he had received, imparting to others such instruction as had been imparted to him.

There is no selfishness manifested in the life and teaching of our blessed Lord and Savior. There is no idleness possible on the part of those who shall move out under his instruction. All are placed at once upon a platform of duty and obligation, individually and collectively, and every hour is fraught with a work of duty, and every moment ought to spur us on by a proper suggestion of duty; and thus standing as lights in the world fulfill a proper and useful purpose.

The instruction in the text, "Freely ye have received, freely give," does not leave an opening for the baser thoughts to come into the heart, leading us to conclude that this life is made especially for what we can get out of it and for our own personal enjoyment, but rather an opportunity wherein we may gather certain things of worth, and in this stand as lights imparting to others, and by which all may together reach a better and higher life and position than is possible to do without such instruction and effort.

Thirty-five years after the time Jesus gave this instruction to the disciples, to stand as lights in the world, we have an instance in the record of their work made by one who was not a believer in Jesus at the time that the sentiment was uttered. The apostle states in his letter to the saints at Philippi, "That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." This shows that the sentiment that was uttered on the banks of Galilee was not in vain. Men and women did go out and let their lights shine.

They were of courage and faith. They had something to give to the world that was better than the world knew; and they were willing, through that courage and faith which had been given them, to impart it. And, in the provinces, as the people gathered at the seashore, and in every village and hamlet in which they entered, they stood as lights to the people, and were able as the apostle declares, to shine as lights to the world. They had made a success and had simply performed their duty. It is a fact that they had not gathered the riches of the Cæsars, or of what was possible in Judea at that time; but what is that in comparison to standing as lights for a little time in this world, and then appearing on the other side as lights and instructors to continue for evermore?

Those who would measure dollars and cents, position in official life, or the accumulation of earthly gains of whatever nature, with one who has moved as a shining light in the performance of duty reflecting the higher and better sentiments of life, which lead men upward and onward in all that is good, fail greatly in their estimate of a successful life. We are to prove ourselves benefactors and helpers to the race. And should we live in this world and pass the full time in the multitude of years, full of pleasures, but without having done anything to the betterment of our fellows in the neighborhood where we live, our family, or our country, what would we have to commend us when the time arrives that we must be trundled off to the silent city over the hill?

And it is apparent that since it is the well-performance of duty that must commend us in the highest sense here and hereafter, that when young men and young women start out in life to fulfill its duties after they shall have attained to a proper preparatory work, that it is activity in life that should be the first and uppermost thought and in no sense should they shirk the performance of duty as they meet with it in the world. Each should fill his place, and he should seek to feel in his heart that he does not wish somebody else to fill the place that he can fill himself in doing good in the many ways possible; it may in the dissemination of knowledge, wise counsel, helping the needy, lifting up those that are not upon the same plane upon which we through favor have gained a place, and in divers other ways in which men and women may ever do good.

Just a few days ago I received a letter from a friend over in the state of Kansas, with reference to the work of the institution that is represented here this morning, containing a contribution to be used for the continuation of the College amounting to fifteen dollars. He said, "I am a poor man and have a family and am not so certain that I shall ever be able to send any of them to Graceland College. I would like to do so in order that they might receive directly of its benefits but I trust that should they not receive directly they may receive indirectly of its benefits from those who shall be sent out from its walls."

This is the character that Jesus represented when he told his disciples to go out and live a life of unselfishness in the world. "Freely ye have received, freely give." If you can not help in one way you can in another. If it is not your boy or girl that is going to be directly benefited, if you can assist in giving an opportunity to somebody else's boy or girl, they will help to give a chance to your boy or girl by and by.

The work that we are engaged in is in a measure an educational one. It is sometimes said that the work of Graceland College is not so far advanced in its general instruction as some other institutions of the world. But did you never think that the institutions of learning in this country that are doing the most good, are not those that are standing simply at the head; but those rather that are gathering in from every side the boys and girls who can make a step ahead, and who find it impossible to reach those institutions where it requires thousands of dollars, and years of opportunity in order to reach them?

I remember an article that was sent out by an ex-president of the United States only last year in which he commended what was termed "the smaller colleges," the lesser institutions of education in this country and presented these to the people as being the institutions that were doing the greater good. And if you will look over the ground for a moment you will see that this is true. Suppose that it is true as has been claimed by some, that in the work of Graceland the past year the greater part has been of a preparatory character. What is that? Why, it is fitting young men and women for the duties of life. Can you engage in a more important work than this? There is no collegiate work known from the university to the academic but what is preparatory in some sense. Men and women are prepared to some degree in the beginning of their work and when they attain the head of the highest institutions in the world, the work is still being a preparatory one. Preparation for work is had in all these institutions. The actual work is accomplished elsewhere. The whole educational field is preparatory, so that as we move out among the activities of life we shall be able by reason of this preparation to successfully meet the issues of life. If our own institution shall but well perform this preparatory work until its pupils shall reach the freshman or sophomore years only, it will be worthy of the confidence and respect of the entire country. And it is doing this work and doing it well. A gentleman only a few days ago told me of a conversation he had with the dean of our State University, in which the work of Graceland College was referred to, and he said the professor commended it very highly. The students who had gone from this institution to the State University were well fitted in the work they had taken. We ought not to conclude then all at once that because the work is a preparatory one that it is less essential or beneficial than if more advanced. And if it is a fact that in this institution of learning one hundred individuals have taken preparatory work, while only ten have reached the special collegiate or higher courses, has its work not been greatly more advantageous to ourselves and the world than had it had double the number of advanced students to have trained? Is it not performing a far greater work to prepare the one hundred for the general duties of life than it is the ten in the higher branches of science?

Sometimes it is thought that all the preparatory work that is done in an institution of learning of this kind might be carried on in the graded and high schools. Take the young men and women who come to Graceland as a rule. Where would you place them in the high school? Classes in these schools have been graded step by step, and when you take the young people from the city or country districts who have not had the privileges of these grades they are unable to find proper place of instruction in the high school. The high school can in no sense meet the emergency of the instruction of the greater part of the young men and women who need educational advantages, and who have received the benefits of such at our college in the past. It is not possible for them to go to the high school and find a place. The instructors in the high schools have not the time to give to them what they need. These young people have not the time themselves in life to begin at the bottom and go through the grades that the little pupil has had. Their opportunities have been so limited in early life that they are compelled to stand as a separate class and they now need something that will meet the demands and help them regain what has been lost and prepare for usefulness in life and thus stand along with those who have had proper opportunity in the graded and high schools of the country. Where will you place them? Why, you must place them in Graceland, or some institution over which you have no oversight and where they may drink into the evils of life as they strive to enrich themselves in treasures of knowledge. Graceland College has been founded and carried on thus far in the interest of poor yet industrious young men and women, who without its advantages must ever remain at a great disadvantage with their fellows in life, and fail of the good and noble work which they may now do.

What we receive in educational institutions in the way of instruction, to some extent follows us in life until we are able by reason of subsequent thought and courage, after we go out into the world, to discard the erroneous. And there are but few who go out with the mistraining who are able even after years of opportunity after they have left an institution, to review the many lines of instruction in which they were taught and discover the underlying errors. It often occurs that what has been accepted by the world as a scientific fact for a half century is found to be an error. You remember that only a few days ago a scientist in Europe, before a company of leading scientists, made announcement of the discovery, as he thought, of the principle by which the earth was furnished its heat from radium. And he stated before that scientific body that he placed this as the means by which the heat of the earth was continued. That body has been teaching for years and years the theory that the heat of the earth was due to the fact that originally it was a molten mass, and that it had been cooling for innumerable ages and hence the supply of its heat. And these men were unable to answer the position, but had to conclude that possibly they had been harboring an error all this time, and that after all the earth had never been a molten mass, but that there was some other proper cause for the heat of the same. Both theories are possibly only such. I only refer to the incident to show you how men and women are led at times along what is termed the line of scientific research when it is only theory. In the institution where you have studied there is not the probability of being misled that there is in many of the institutions of the world which are not surrounded by the fixed belief and fact that the word of God is first and foremost in all that is true in this world. It is the foundation that will never be shaken. The apostle says, "The foundation of God standeth sure."

Whatever may be evolved by reason of the acquirements of individuals in science and thought that is in harmony with revelation as the great Teacher of Nazareth presented it, will be found in the end to have been true, and fixed upon such a solid basis that it will not be shaken. But whatever is announced as a fact, that is proven to be in contradiction to the revealed word of God, must eventually be overturned, and those, of whatever school, who cling to such, be revealed as sitting in darkness instead of the light. In our work, however, we are not always ready to see and view these things as they are presented in the divine word.

I know that there is a theory among the people that true faith in God is better exercised by men and women in this world who are uneducated and their minds unfettered with any consideration of general knowledge, to a more perfect degree than those who have been so instructed. But the history of the world does not sustain such theory. The teaching of the Bible will not bear this out either. Abraham, termed the "father of the faithful," was learned and schooled above the average of his time, not only in the history of the past, but in the sciences, geography, and war. Moses was educated in all the learning of the Egyptians. Daniel, Michael, Hananiah, and Azariah were especially trained and instructed in the greatest schools of Babylon, and there are no examples in all the annals of divine writ who exhibited a higher or more perfect faith. Indeed the question is, Who of the illiterate of the world ever equaled these men in the exhibition of a sublime faith under similar conditions? Did the development of mind and education that was given to them in any way diminish their faith? No, just the reverse of this is true. The first examples of faith given to the world are examples of men who comprehended what they were doing and who were wise beyond their fellows. It is said with reference to Israel that some time in the economy of God, he will bring them out from the nations where they are scattered and bring them into the wilderness, and there "plead with them face to face," and he will lead them with a strong arm. This is not to the credit of the descendants of the fathers, however. The prophet speaking with reference to such an event refers to the manner of their being led, "as a horse in the wilderness." It is hoped that we shall not be led in that way. It will not be to our commendation to be led not knowing where we go, and without trying to inform ourselves. If this is to be our position we will not be the ones who are to be the builders of Zion in any sense. Israel so led in the last time is to be led to some place; and it is not to their credit that they are in ignorance when they are so led. It is, however, to the credit of the fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who were so faithful in their work that God promised them that he would feel after their posterity until the latest generation. In our work, then, let us not accept the error put forth that individuals in this world who are uneducated and untrained can exercise greater faith than those who have had the privilege of enlightenment in all proper ways possible in our time. If we have a faith that wisdom and intelligent pursuit of knowledge destroys, the sooner it is destroyed the better for the people.

Jesus had the trouble when he came to the world to take these people who had not received proper instruction in their time, and educate them as best he could for their work, and a year after the time referred to in my text, he said to them, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye can not bear them now." They had not yet attained in their educational life to the state and standing that the man of God could reveal to them what he wanted to teach them. This ought to be a lesson to us that the true position to occupy in life is that of searchers after knowledge, striving for that continuous and gradual development which shall elevate and perfect us in acquiring knowledge.

The claim sometimes made that a person has greater faith when he first comes within the lines of association with the people of God than afterwards is absurd, if the person has performed his duty and lived uprightly. If he has lost faith it is not on account of the fact that he knows more, but that through his ignorance he has let some one deceive him and the mind has been corrupted through his lack of wisdom. His faith has been tried and he has been mistaught instead of having been instructed.

One preparation for young men and women is to prepare them against being so easily mistaught either by professed friends or the world. Those who are well taught and instructed in the proper way and kept within proper surroundings during the period of their education in the sciences, and all departments of educational work, will become strengthened in true faith rather than weakened. And with this teach them honesty, uprightness, truthfulness, godliness, and they will be able to resist the evils of the adversary on the outside and greater evils which often arise within.

It is a common thought that we should gather in the stakes for security from the greater evils which are to follow in the world, as the sheep are placed in the fold for protection; but are we to send the children, the lambs of the fold, out among the evils which the older ones can not withstand, to acquire their education? There is no wisdom or common sense in such a course.

Why, the thought of stakes presupposes, to begin with, the planting of an educational institution that can compete with any in the world in furnishing instruction to the young and the middle-aged, of all that is proper and good; and if you want to tear down your stakes at once, tear down your educational institution, and a sure corner-stone in the foundation of the stakes will have disappeared. It is not possible for us to carry on the work outlined in prophetic teaching to be accomplished by the children of God, prior to the advent of the Messiah, without we shall keep chief supervision of the education of our own people whom we expect will assist in carrying out this work.

Sometimes it is said that there is no encouragement for persons to attend Graceland College, for the people think that it is not upon such a sure basis that it is likely to continue; that it may fail this year or next year, and who would want to hold a scholarship or diploma from an institution that is already dead? Why do you think that it is not upon a firm basis? It is incorporated under the laws of the state of Iowa. And there is not a State in the entire nation that is more to the front in educational interests than is this. It is under the laws of such an advanced and enlightened part of the commonwealth that the incorporation is planted. The institution so far as being fixed, should be considered by each and every one as substantial as the State itself, under the laws of which it is incorporated; for the State is bound by every power that it possesses to defend the institution and see that it has the rights and privileges of all other institutions of its kind, if we shall ourselves not violate our Articles of Incorporation. And there is no earthly power, if we shall perform our duty, that can ever shake a single one of the stones that is placed in the building. If it fails, it is because we fail of duty. Then why should any friend of education and enlightenment of the youth among us be found predicting or working for the discontinuance or overthrow of our own college of learning?

While I was over in a distant State from this, upon a certain evening, I was carried all at once to what I thought was a distant country and set down there. And as my feet touched the earth there was a young girl, seemingly between twelve and fourteen years of age, who came and took hold of my arm and begged for protection,—wanted me to give her help. I looked around but did not see any immediate danger. The first thought was that I was in some distant place in South America; but as I looked around I exclaimed, Why, this is just like the praires of Iowa.

As I was considering and pondering over the experience next day, notice came to me for the first time that there was an effort to close Graceland College. I knew then what the young girl represented, and did not stop to confer with flesh and blood as to what I should do. My duty was made clear. And as Paul said, when he saw a man over in Macedonia beckoning to him saying, "Come over and help us," so I was sure it was my duty, whatever others might do, to stand for the institution that God had in his wisdom and mercy permitted to be planted for the good of the youth of his church, and the people in this day and generation.

These young men and young women who go out from these walls are in a position to come to the rescue, be a help, and to defend the beautiful young girl that clung to me for protection. And it ought to be the proper duty of every one of them in life to see that their Alma Mater which sends them out shall be aided and protected. The way that they may do this is to manifest in their work, as they move out in life's battles, that they have not only learned well while here, but that they are willing to impart what they have learned to those to whom they are sent. And as you have received, freely too, from your instructors, let it be said as you go out into the world, wherever your lots are cast, that, "Freely you have received, and freely you have given."

Be men and women with a purpose in life, and in your work do not permit a thought of selfishness to lead you on, neither a feeling of idleness to overcome you on the way. Be of such usefulness in life to your fellows that when the years shall have ended, and your work is accomplished, it shall be said of each and every one here, and in the greater and grander life that is on the other side, You have performed well your respective duties.

Selected Articles.

LIBERTY OF BIBLE READING.

The resisting power of tradition is curiously illustrated by the difficulty which the Revised Version of the Bible encounters in getting into general use. That in some respects the revisers were too conscientious and made their translations too literal a rendition of the original may be granted. It may be true also that the New Testament would have been more acceptable if some passages which long use has made sacred by association had been left unchanged, and if relatively more attention had been paid in certain other passages to classic forms of English and less to a literal reproduction of the Greek. But that, on the whole, the Revised Version more truly represents the original than does the King James Version, and that in the Old Testament it is in every respect superior, can hardly be questioned by any one who has given the two versions a careful comparison, or has compared either with the original Hebrew and Greek texts. This is especially true of the poetical books. The poetic form of Job, the Psalms, Proverbs, and the Song of Songs appears in this version as it does not in the older version; and much that was scarcely intelligible in Job and the Song of Songs and in some parts of the prophets is interpreted by a translation at once more lucid and more consonant with the spirit of the original. In brief, what Doctor Edward Abbott has recently said in a letter to the Churchman may be repeated here in abbreviated form: The work of revision was carried on by the foremost biblical scholars of the nineteenth century, both English and American; the immense historical, archæological, textual, and spiritual material accumulated during three centuries and a half was at their disposal; their competency for their task was immeasurably greater than that of the Revision Committee of 1611; and the product of their labors has been subjected to the test of the severest criticism and to the severer test of actual use for nearly twenty years and has stood the test.

And yet the Bible Society will not print the Revised Version and the Episcopal Church will not allow it to be used in its church services.

This refusal rests, so far as it has any foundation at all, on the curious superstition that the King James Version in an authorized version. "The historical fact is," says a well-considered report on this subject to the Massachusetts Diocesan Convention, "that the King James Version was introduced on its own merits, and had to make its own way in the world. Its only authorization was its intrinsic superiority to other versions, and its long-continued use." Is there any reason why we should not exercise in the twentieth century the same liberty that our fathers exercised in the seventeenth, and introduce another and better version into use, and, if it can prove its superiority, allow it to win authorization by the same process?

This question will come before the General Convention of the Episcopal Church to be held in Boston next October. The Massachusetts Diocesan Convention in 1890 adopted by a large majority a resolution to memorialize the General Convention for authority making lawful the discretionary use of the Revised Version in the reading of the Lessons. The result of the debate was a compromise, by which a special committee was appointed to prepare an edition of marginal readings which might be so used, and such an edition has been published. It is needless to say that no such compromise is satisfactory to the large and increasing number of clergymen who desire liberty to use for the benefit of their congregations in public worship the latest, and it can hardly be doubted the superior, version of the Scriptures, and the demand for such liberty will probably be pressed at the next General Convention, and will continue to be pressed until it is granted. The demand for reasonable liberty always has public opinion on its side in America. Such will be the case now.

As to the Bible Society, our hope is that its managers will discover by and by that they can not expect contributions from all in the churches so long as they refuse to give so considerable a proportion of church members that version of the Bible for personal use and for distribution which they reasonably desire and the advantages of which are so apparent. Even if it is not the best version—though of that we think there is little doubt—it is certainly a good one, and the Bible Society, which should represent neither sect nor party in the church, should be ready to give to the public any good version of the Scriptures which the public wants.—Outlook, March 26, 1904.

SCIENCE AND INVENTION.

HOW TO POSTPONE OLD AGE.

That it is possible, by adopting a daily regimen in line with modern scientific knowledge, to defer the approach of old age is the opinion of Doctor J. Madison Taylor, who has published a series of three articles upon "The conservation of energy in those of advancing years," in the February, March, and April numbers of the Popular Science Monthly. In the last of these articles the writer formulates his hygienic prescriptions for those who have passed the age of three score years and ten. Says Doctor Taylor:

"It will be found that the evidence of those who have studied this subject most carefully shows that normal bodily exercises are not to be forbidden, but rather encouraged. Per contra, if bodily activities are not pursued, there must inevitably follow much more rapid retrograde changes in all the tissues. In respect to the diet it is universally admitted that after middle life the amount of food taken should be less than before that time, and the changes in diet should be rather to use less of the structure-forming materials, though not always to exclude them. Again, there should be used relatively little—indeed, as little as possible, of stimulating articles of food, which make more for acceptability than necessity. In short, the simple rule should be observed of eating no more than perfectly normal appetite craves, and as little as possible of those things taken because they are agreeable. As the period of old age is reached, by which is meant about seventy years, the regimen should be markedly simplified and always taken with the greatest deliberation. A general rule is recognized to obtain in most cases, that the more nearly the diet is reduced to bread and milk and fruits the longer will the person live and enjoy good health. . . .

"Some persons can get along best with long intervals between feeding; others, the majority, do better by taking small amounts of food at short intervals. The evacuations appear lacking in activity, and must be encouraged by rational measures, but not forced by purgative or strongly diuretic drugs. This is best met by suitable articles of diet, bulky and yet not calculated to produce fermentative changes. Such qualities are found in fruits, nuts, cereal compounds, and salads. Probably the best drink is buttermilk, which seems to have a salutary effect on the action of both the bowels and the kidneys. . . . Overmuch yeast bread is objectionable, disturbing digestion and encouraging rigidities.

"The care of the skin is of paramount importance, and the first desideratum is to employ systematic and thorough rubbing and brushing of the surface from head to heel. The flesh brush or mitten made of coarse toweling, used by the patient for half an hour at a time night and morning, serves many admirable ends, and is better than too much bathing. . . . The skin of old age tends to become harsh, rigid, and dry, and after this effleurage it is well to rub into the body a certain amount of some oil, and it will be found that the skin will take up thus sometimes an enormous quantity. . . . Old people are sensitive to cold because their surface-resistance is lowered and their heat-producing powers are waning. The tendency shown by many to stay indoors and keep themselves overprotected and overclothed is a grave error. This habit should be overcome gradually, but firmly, and the patient should be in the open air as much as possible, the clothing used being sufficient, but never too much. . . .

"The most important specific recommendations I wish to offer for the postponement of the degenerative effects of age and for the recovery of so much of the normal vigor as is possible in each have to do with the forms and qualities of the exercise. As has been shown, the tendency of the tissues in advancing age is toward a steady and irretrievable hardening or stiffening or loss of elasticity, due to normal or abnormal increase in the connective tissue."

The writer here illustrates the effect of this loss of cellular activity, especially in the impairment of the special senses, and asserts that much of the dimness of vision, loss of hearing, and general slowness of brain action, common to the aged, can be delayed almost indefinitely by the employment of regulated movements of the neck and upper truncal muscles. He continues:

"What is true of these structures is equally true of the abdominal viscera. A large proportion of the digestive disturbances, even of those in earlier middle life, are due to a relaxation in the supporting tissues of the great organs in the abdomen. It is estimated that dilatation and letting down of the stomach will be found in sixty per cent of all adult persons. . . . This produces a series of alterations in the relationships of the organs, and particularly of the blood-vessels and structures concerned in their function. . . . The first thing to be required in getting rid of these defects is to teach the person to stand correctly and continue to maintain proper attitudes under all circumstances. . . . If the neck-bones are held vertically, the ribs well lifted, and a moderate degree of tension exerted upon the abdominal walls, the viscera will rest upon and within the confines of the pelvis, and this position should be learned and practiced; nor is it at all difficult if the attention is directed that way and some familiarity acquired in maintaining the correct position. The body can not be held in normal attitudes unless the skeletal muscles are in fairly good tone. Most of these effects can be secured by a skillful use of breathing exercise. . . . In short . . . attention to proper attitudes, involving economies in interorganic relationships, is the one fundamental factor in postponing senile changes.

"The exhaustion after fatigue is not well recovered from in the aged, and hence it is not permissible to maintain protracted activities; these should be supplemented by definite periods of rest, and if the heart be not strong, this should be taken lying down; but this is no reason to encourage complete inaction."

The use of inorganic drugs, Doctor Taylor tells us in concluding, has little place in relieving the disorders of the old, although the use of natural mineral waters may be effective, owing to the fact that they contain salts that exert a solvent action on lime salts or other adventitious substances. Drugs, however, serve only a temporary purpose, and the real defensive measure against old age is to aid oxidation of the tissues by all rational means, including special movements and stimulation of the vasomotor mechanism of the great eliminating organs.—The Literary Digest, May 7, 1904.

FRESH AIR A PREVENTIVE OF DISEASE.

Cold, fresh air has special value because it stimulates the organs and all the functions of the body; it quickens the heart to the greatest activity, and increases the number of red corpuscles in the blood. Cold air also contains more oxygen to the cubic inch than does warm air. The volume of air is reduced one five-hundredth part for each degree of reduction in temperature. Consider the difference between a hot summer day with a temperature of 100 degrees and a winter day at 30 degrees. Even a moderately cold winter day marks a difference of 70 degrees. So the air has been reduced one seventh of its volume, and in six breaths of cold air one gets as much oxygen as he would in seven breaths of warm air. Hence the body takes in one seventh more oxygen in cold weather than in warm weather. This increased amount of oxygen taken into the body is a matter of great consequence. This is why one feels better in cold than in warm air. A brisk walk on a cold, crisp winter morning creates a splendid appetite for breakfast, for the same reason that the fire burns brighter on a cold winter night. When the fire burns with a particularly bright glow, people are wont to say: "Winter is coming. See how brightly the fire burns!" This is due to the increased amount of oxygen in the air. The fire burns brighter and faster because it has one seventh more fuel supplied.

So it is with the body—the vital fires burn brighter in cold weather. The whole tide of life moves with greater activity. . . . Cold air aids in the elimination of the poisonous matters which are all the time forming within the body. When oxygen is not plentiful enough to make the vital fires burn sufficiently to consume the fuel and waste of the body, then much of the waste material is left behind in the form of imperfectly burned substances, which may be called cinders of the body. Uric acid is cinders.

As a result of sedentary habits, there is not sufficient oxygen taken into the lungs. The lungs do not expand as they ought to, so enough air is not taken in. Then the overheated air is diluted, and one must breathe seven times to get as much oxygen as he would get in breathing six times out of doors, and so, breathing only imperfectly and slowly, because he is not active, the amount of oxygen taken into the body is insufficient. One exercising vigorously in the cold air out of doors breathes more rapidly, obtains a larger supply of oxygen, and the rubbish of the body—the uric acid cinders—is burned up, and the whole system is kept clear.

This is why cold air is so beneficial to nervous people. The oxygen in the air burns up the poisons which irritate the nerves, and the person is relieved.

When one is tired, he gets rest quicker by breathing fresh, cold air; because weariness and exhaustion are due simply to an accumulation of poisons and other waste matters generated by work and retained in the body, and these are burned up by the oxygen taken in through cold air.

The cold-air cure is coming to be recognized as the most effective for invalids. At Davos, up among the Alps Mountains, there is an establishment for cold-air treatment. Each patient is expected to take a treatment three times daily consisting in lying outdoors from half an hour to an hour, according to his strength. Every one is compelled to take the treatment during the night also, for the windows are never allowed to be closed in that establishment, and yet the winters are severe. But with plenty of warm coverings, and a hood over the head and ears, the patients can bid defiance to Jack Frost while they inhale the life-giving oxygen of the cold, fresh air. This institution is becoming world-famous for the cure of consumption. Twenty years ago this disease was incurable, but it is now regarded as one of the most curable of chronic diseases when taken in the early stage. Fully one half of the patients suffering with tuberculosis, when placed in out-of-door hospitals, make a satisfactory recovery. It is reasonable, therefore, to suppose that if fresh air will cure the disease, it is likewise a preventive of it.

Many people delude themselves into the belief that an accumulation of garments will prevent their taking cold. . . . Artificial clothing is necessary, but any more than is needed is objectionable.

Out-of-door exercise and fresh air are most effectual means, not only of creating an appetite, but of encouraging assimilation. Food may be taken into the stomach without being taken into the blood; and after it gets into the blood, it may be circulated and yet not be utilized by assimilation. Many people say, 'I have a good appetite. I eat heartily, but I don't gain in flesh.' This is because the food is not well assimilated. Assimilation is the process by which food materials are transformed into living, active, thinking, moving substance. Cold air, sunshine, and exercise are among the most effective means of stimulating this process of assimilation. Appetite is simply a demand for new material. It says, "The body has suffered loss, and that loss must be replaced."

It is important, too that one have plenty of fresh, cool air at night when sleeping. If one sleeps in a warm room, he will wake in the morning unrefreshed and feeling miserable. If afraid of taking cold, raise the window and lie so that the air will blow on the face, protecting the back of the head and the ears, if necessary.—Doctor J. H. Kellogg in Good Health.

---

It is my deep conviction, and I say it again and again, that if the Church of Christ were what she ought to be, twenty years would not pass away till the story of the cross would be uttered in the ears of every living man.—Simeon N. Calhoun.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Half Hours With Parents and Teachers.—No. 4.

A SERIES OF FAMILIAR TALKS INTENDED FOR USE IN LOCALS AND HOME CLASSES.

Edited by the Daughters of Zion.

GOSPEL TEACHING IN THE HOME.

"But I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

Unless we have light to make plain our way, we must grope in darkness and may stumble and fall. Jesus said, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." He prayed for his disciples, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." Through the truth (the word of God) Jesus the Savior is presented to us, and in him is found the light which makes it possible to walk in safety, and to grow toward "the stature of the perfect man," for light is necessary to life and growth.

In the mercy of God, his laws are not such that only those who have arrived at years of maturity can understand and receive benefit from them; they are plain and simple and much of their truth and beauty can be comprehended even in childhood. At least, with the help that can be given, enough may be understood to answer for the needs of childhood and to lay a foundation for future growth in righteousness. And, remember, it is a command from the Lord: "Bring up your children in light and truth."

Latter-day parents are not left in darkness as to the time when the Lord requires them to begin to instruct their children in the things of his kingdom. In Doctrine and Covenants, section 68, paragraph 4, we read: "And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes, . . . that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying-on of the hands; and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord."

If this word of the Lord be heeded, children are to understand enough to make them proper subjects for baptism and the gift of the Holy Spirit at the age of eight years. Then, from the time their children begin to understand, how diligent should parents be in impressing these lessons upon them. Is there any time to waste, if you would have them thus ready for membership in the church of Christ at this age?

For further light which may help to guide us in the way, we find in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 28, paragraph 13, the following: "But, behold I say unto you, that little children are redeemed from the foundation of the world, through mine Only Begotten; wherefore they can not sin, for power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children until they begin to become accountable before me; for it is given unto them even as I will, according to mine own pleasure, that great things may be required at the hands of their fathers."

Here is the golden opportunity for starting them in the heavenly way. This sinless condition of little children is, in the good pleasure of the Lord, as he himself says, in order that great things may be required at the hand of the parents. (We notice that the word "fathers" is used, but in the light of words before quoted we may safely accept this as referring to both parents.) Parents are left free to work for a time without the opposing power of Satan, and the Lord calls those things great which they may be able to accomplish. Shall we then call them small, or think of them lightly?

Is it not a great work? Think of it, parents! Here are those immortal souls, whom by the laws of God you have brought into the world. They must exist eternally in one condition or another. Upon you rests the responsibility of starting them aright; of putting them in the way of conquest over self and of rendering willing obedience to the Father of all. And how much toward this end may be done in the days of their innocency, while Satan has not power to tempt them! But while Satan can not tempt them, and wrong is not accounted unto them as sin until they begin to understand right from wrong, yet there are evils to guard against which may make it hard for them to overcome, and may result in that which will give them more to answer for when they become accountable. They may learn from others, children or older people, habits that may be an injury to them, and they can not be too watchfully guarded, having each wrong influence offset by teaching in the right, each evidence of wrong within themselves observed and checked, and they be given light as to what is right, and why it is best to choose it. The struggle of life awaits them, when they, being tempted, may be overcome with evil instead of overcoming evil with good. God has given you a time to forearm them against the day of battle. Shall you avail yourself of it, or rest under the condemnation, "The sin be upon the head of the parents."

What is it to be obedient to the gospel? Simply to turn from past sin and to become members of the church by baptism and the laying on of hands? Is it not much more than this, and does not full obedience to gospel law bring one to make the fullest and best use of life in every way? Men are to be judged according to deeds done in the body, for the way in which their time is spent; for the use they make of their powers and of all things placed in their charge. Our record is made in every-day life, and we can not separate an act of our lives from our obligation to God.

Parents need to do much for their children in the way of causing them to become competent for the temporal work of life; but inasmuch as they teach them that the right use of their powers in this direction is service to God, even that becomes a part of gospel teaching. And failing to teach thus they fail in an important part of their mission. It is a solemn trust that is laid upon parents, and they who realize this, recognizing life as the time of preparation for another condition, the probation given of the Lord, will seek to bring their whole dealing with their children into the line of helping them to become faithful followers of the Lord Jesus.

First of all, there is need for parents to bring their own lives in harmony with gospel law, and to exemplify to their children the love of God, his justice, mercy, and patience, that in their dealing with them they may give no wrong impression of the fatherhood of God.

If a parent tells a child, "I don't love you when you are not good," unconsciously the child reasons that it is the same with his heavenly Father. But if he understands that his father and mother love him all the time and because they love him are grieved when he does wrong, he is drawn nearer to them and gains a right conception of the love of God.

Neither should they be dealt with after the manner of the fathers of whom Paul speaks, who "chastened after their own pleasure," contrary to God's way, which is "for our profit." Let all be for their profit, prayerfully, solemnly kept in view. It is natural for children to imitate. Then how is it, fathers, mothers? If your children follow you, is your example such that they will still be following Christ? How careful should they be who thus stand as teachers by example! How diligently watchful of themselves that they shall be found walking as children of the light, moved by pure motives and showing forth the graces of true Christian character.

Dufresny said that "marriage is a lamb of the living and a prison of desire;" Addison said that it "enlarges the scene of our happiness and miseries;" whereas old Montaigne, who remained a bachelor, says of the wedded state: "'Tis a sweet society of life, full of constancy, trust, and an infinite number of useful and solid offices of mutual obligations," and Doctor Johnson says: "A married man has many cares, but a bachelor no pleasures."

Program for July Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

Theme, "The home."

Hymn, No. 401, Saints' Hymnal; roll-call of members; response, a quotation referring to the home; five-minute papers, "Work for boys"; Work for girls"; "Recreation and amusements in the home"; each paper to be followed by brief discussion; discussion of papers from Home Column with the aid of questions given below; preparation for answering these questions to be made at home; business; hymn No. 408; dismissal prayer. Questions on papers, "Half hours with parents," (to follow in Home Column): When does the Lord require parents to begin to teach their children the principles of right and truth? How can this be done? At what age should children be ready for membership in the church? What preparation is necessary? Are parents responsible for starting their children in the right? Is the opportunity given them to do this? How can it be improved? What are some of the things that need attention?

Do the habits of a child grow from his daily acts? Can parents afford to overlook the question of right or wrong involved in these small acts? Will not those who learn early in life the great lesson of self-control be happier and more useful than those who are allowed in childhood to follow their own wills? If so, is it not real kindness for parents so to deal with their children as to cause them to exercise self-control? How can this be done?

Is there any work more important than the bringing up of a family? To teach is to cause to know; to train is to cause to do. Can gospel teaching be made effectual without right training? Why should children be taught to work? How should they be taught to regard the right use of their powers? What impressions concerning God may children receive from the example of their parents? In what spirit should children be corrected by their parents? What more is required of parents than to set a good example before their children? How can children be taught to believe in God's power and care?

Should the teaching of parents be given in formal talks or as it is called out by the incidents of daily life? What is the only kind of faith that should satisfy us in either ourselves or our children? What idea of repentance should we impress upon children? When should children be taught to pray? Is it best to teach them a form of prayer? Can a child become strong to do the right without effort on his part? Will spasmodic correction of faults strengthen a child in right doing? What evils result from frightening children into obedience and from telling falsehoods in jest? When does a child become accountable for himself? Until then, what is needed upon the part of the parents?

In each local society will the writers of papers upon the topics given, i. e. "Work for boys," "Work for girls," and "Recreation and amusements in the home," kindly leave their papers with the president or secretary, as may be decided upon, to be sent for use in the Home Column or other Daughters of Zion department, as may be deemed advisable.

It will not be possible to use all that are sent in, but for the good of all let all be sent, that the best may be chosen and the greatest good result from their publication. Then with this understanding none will feel hurt whose articles do not appear. Please observe this request not for this one month only but each month send the five minute papers to Mrs. M. Walker, Lamoni, Iowa.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The Needs of the District.

"The needs of the district." What is a need? Webster says it is a state requiring supply or relief; a state in which something is urgently needed. That we may determine our needs we must know the state we are in and the state we hope to be in. The rule is, subtract what we have from what it takes to make the thing and the difference is the need. In our district work if we take what we are from what we hope to be, you will have our needs. I shall not, however, try to solve the problem for you. I shall give you a few facts in the case and leave you to determine your own statement and formula.

Our needs like those of every organization are measured by our aims and stage of development. If we are aiming at perfection, our needs are many and varied. If we have no set mark to which to attain, our needs are few. As a representative of the district, we determine our needs are many and our wants are more. If we can realize our needs, however, we will be satisfied to wait patiently for our wants to become our needs. For just so sure as we reach the place where we consider our needs are supplied, like the meeting of to-day and to-morrow our wants become our needs.

At the present time the most pressing need, the one that is disturbing my slumbers is the progressive, energetic, enthusiastic, available person who can take the place of the superintendent and push the work to a finish. One who can visit the schools of the district and arouse the local officers to special effort along lines of progressive teaching and discipline. With such a superintendent our Bible study could be more interestingly prepared, a normal training-class for teachers could be formed. The Home Class Department could be developed as it should be. Appropriate programs for special days could be prepared and a day set apart to be observed by the schools of the district all at the same time, thus having a uniformity of work that would be beneficial in its results. If there is a single school in the district that comes up to the standard to which it could be brought by such a superintendent as I have in mind I do not know of it. There is not a phase of the work that could not be bettered by proper method and application of work.

Now I have sketched the work of the superintendent we should have, but I do not for one minute think we can not do good work in every line mentioned without him. There is in every school in this district material to do good work which is not being done because,—because—they do not, not because they can not. If there is a school in the district in which every member of the branch is a member of the Sunday-school I do not know where it is. There are in nearly every locality outsiders who could be interested in the Sunday-school work and thus become interested in the church through the Home Class Department if some one would take it upon himself to visit them and carry on the Sunday-school supplies to them once in a quarter.

There was brought before the General Convention an organization for the children known as the Sunshine Band. Now I am not prepared to say anything about the merits or demerits of the organization only as it tends to the spiritual and moral development of the child. With children religion is the result of rightly formed habits and a cultivated taste for good. We can develop in a child a taste for religious work in the Sunday-school, Religio, and church just as a taste for anything else is developed. I can not for one moment think that a child is born morally bad, but the badness comes from the influence in the development of the character of the child. It is just as easy to teach a child to love a good book as it is to like a bad book, to love good company as to love bad company. Our intellectual and moral tastes are formed much as we cultivate a taste for something good to eat. When we find a boy who would rather go fishing than to Sunday-school on Sunday or a girl who better enjoys a buggy ride in the evening than to attend Religio there is surely something wrong somewhere in the development of their taste for Sabbath employment. You know in our eating or drinking there are things we can relish and other things we can not eat or drink at all. Sometimes it is because we have never had the opportunity to develop a taste for the dish and again circumstances have entirely turned us against it so we can never bear the smell of it. Now it is just so with our spiritual development. When we see a boy or a girl who does not enjoy and take an interest in the Sunday-school, the Religio, and the regular church services it is because there has been somewhere in the development of the tastes of the individual something wrong. Either the opportunity for development has been lacking, or the environment and influence brought to bear upon them has not been what it should, or circumstances have in some way turned them from the right course. Now who is responsible for the young people of this district who do not take the proper interest in church work? Can we conscientiously lay it at the feet of the Sunday-school teacher?

In the General Convention last April there was a resolution passed that recommended the observance of a Parents' Day in the Sunday-school, the programs to be provided by the officers of the General Association. Now, to our minds, this is surely laying the ax at the root of the tree. We have been working with the children trying to bring them up higher and we have succeeded to the extent that we must now turn our attention to the parents or we will have the children taking the lead. It is true the Sunday-school and Religio are especially for the young, but the church being for the older ones does not say it is not for the children, notwithstanding some schools march the children out and home after Sunday-school is over, which to our minds is one of the saddest mistakes a parent can make. Children generally follow where they are led, and if the parents do not lead them they will follow some one else and generally to the wrong place, too. In the programs for Parents' Day it is contemplated the educating of the parents along lines of duty toward the church and its auxiliaries. It is necessary that we have the coöperation of the parents to accomplish the best results. Our children are advancing more rapidly than are the parents and are compelled to fill places of responsibility in the spiritual work that could be better filled by older and experienced minds if they could be found. But they are not to be found. It is necessary to develop some of the older minds. In this day of preparation and hastening time it is necessary that all should work for the redemption of Zion, and if the parents sit down and wait for the young to carry on the work, like Israel of old, they will perish in the wilderness and the rising generation will go in and occupy.

Now in recounting what I think can be done I may have overstepped our present needs and anticipated some of our wants. I do not wish to discourage a single worker or school in the district, for I feel we are steadily moving onward and we are not far behind in the race of advancement and progression. I sometimes feel discouraged when I see so much room for improvement but for lack of an available worker it must remain undone. We have much to encourage us in the hearty response of the young especially. Our local workers are all striving to do the best they can; but, as we have said, could we find some one who could visit the schools and work with them the work could be improved. In closing I would like to emphasize the work of the Home Department; and I do entreat every school that has not yet taken up this department of the work to make a special effort to do something in that line before the next report must be made out. Make a start if it is only one member. Observe if at all possible a Children's Day. And when the Parent's Day programs come from the general officers let us as a district be the first to respond. Let us make special effort to develop in our young people a taste for the things of God. The International Sunday-school Association have taken their world's convention to Jerusalem thinking they can better thus equip their workers to evangelize the world through the young. Can we afford to aspire to less? May we ever be found in the foremost ranks of the Lord, striving to fight evil and establish good.

MRS. T. A. HOUGAS.

For the Fremont, Iowa, district convention.

Questions and Answers.

Q.—Where a committee is appointed to solicit money for a Sunday-school entertainment, should the money be turned into the treasury or be disbursed by the committee?

A.—All money collected by committees or in any other way for Sunday-school entertainments or other Sunday-school purposes should be received and accounted for by the treasurer. The school may order it returned to the committee or placed in the hands of any one appointed to make purchases or preparations for the entertainment to expend at their discretion. But the amounts received should appear on the treasurer's book; also the items of expenditure.

Q.—If a committee is appointed at a meeting of the teachers and officers, has the school a right to release that committee?

A.—No, unless the meeting has directed the committee to report to the school or has in some other legal way waived its right to pass upon the findings of the committee. A correct rule is that a committee shall report and receive its discharge from the body that provides for it, unless by special arrangement it is instructed otherwise.

Q.—When should the minutes of the meeting of the teachers and officers be read? At what time of the session of the school?

A.—The proper place to read the minutes of any meeting is before the same body at same or succeeding session. Thus the minutes of the meeting of officers and teachers need not be read before the school at all. But if there are any items that they wish the school enlightened upon, they may make report of such items to the school at a following session. There may be some items of business transacted in a business meeting of officers and teachers that should not be made public. For example, there might be some unruly child to deal with and the decisions of officers or teachers should not be made public. Other matters of a more or less private nature often come up and should not be made public. This is one of the reasons for having such meeting. But all matters involving the work or expense of the whole school should be reported to the school.

Q.—What use is made of the money received in the Home Class envelopes?

A.—All moneys received from Home Class members under the supervision of the school or one appointed by the school superintendent should be turned into the school treasury, and all Home Class supplies should be paid for out of the school treasury, just the same as if for any other department of the school. The Home Department is a department of the school the same as is the primary department or the intermediate department, and should receive the same treatment as to supplies and collections. If outside of a branch and under the district jurisdiction, the money belongs in the district treasury, and out of the district funds should be paid the costs of the Home Class supplies.

Q.—To whom should the district Home Class superintendent report besides the district convention?

A.—All work done in the care of a school must be reported to the school secretary and record made of it. The school secretary embodies it in his report to the district secretary. The district secretary will embody the matter in his report to the general secretary. All Home Classes or Home Class members not under the care of a school will be reported by the Home Class visitor to the district Home Class superintendent who should report the statistics to the district secretary, and this too, will be embodied in his report to the general secretary. There is now a General Home Department Superintendent, Mrs. T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa, to whom the general condition and outlook of this department of work should be reported. Just what form of report she may desire I do not know, but any items of interest will be welcomed by her. She will call for some reports as fast as she finds out who is appointed.

Q.—Who should provide for the supplies, the Home Class visitor or the Home Department Superintendent?

A.—While it is not absolutely necessary that it be one way or another, it would be better in most cases to have the whole matter attended to by the district Home Department superintendent. He should place in the hands of the Visitors such supplies as they will need to properly carry on their work.

Q.—Will not a Home Class near a school tend to decrease the attendance at the school?

A.—We think not. Experience in our work and also the experience of the international Sunday-school people is to the effect that the attendance of the main school is almost always increased by the Home Department work being pushed resolutely. To our certain knowledge there have been many drawn into the school from becoming interested in the Home Class work. More than this, about nine out of ten home classes are more than self-sustaining financially and are, therefore, a help and not a burden to the main school.

An Essential.

One can get along without a great many things while teaching in the Sunday-school, but there are some things without which one can not hope to succeed. It is possible to accomplish great things without a superior education and without being the "born teacher" some men and some women are. It is possible to succeed with but limited resources at hand in the way of helps in carrying forward one's work. One can do good work under trying conditions, but one can never hope to attain the highest degree of success under any conditions unless one loves the work, loves the boys and girls, and loves to serve the Master in every way possible. No teacher can get along without this, or these essentials. Much is gained when the scholars in a class come to realize that the teacher really and truly loves them and is ready to do anything to be helpful to them. A teacher told me at one time that one of her boys, the son of very poor parents, fell ill, so ill that it was thought he could not live. The teacher went every day to see the boy, and always carried him some little dainty or something to lessen the dreariness of the sick-room. Twice she stayed all night in the home and took the place of the worn-out parents at the boy's bedside. That boy had been a very troublesome lad in Sunday-school before his illness, but he was never troublesome when he came back from the very edge of the border-land to life and health and strength. The teacher's love, as manifested in her untiring devotion to him in his sickness, won a victory that might never have been won in any other way.—Selected.

Punctuality.

I have knowledge of a teacher who not only keeps ahead of her class in information regarding the lesson, but she makes it a point to always be ahead of the class in reaching the Sunday-school room. You will, I feel sure, agree with what she one Sunday said to me in regard to this unbroken rule:

"I feel that it is a distinct advantage to be in my place to meet and to greet the very first boy who comes. The few minutes' conversation I may have with him before any one else comes often counts for a good deal in my influence over him. Then, as the other boys come, we have a chance for a little pleasant sociability, and this sociability might degenerate into a good deal of boisterousness if I were not there to keep the boys in check. If the boys become boisterous and too merry before the lesson begins, it is very hard to make them give their attention to the lesson. And of course, as I set forth the beauty and duty of punctuality in all things in my teaching, it is clearly my own duty to 'live up' to what I teach, and I would not be doing so if I came trailing in late Sunday after Sunday. There is much that the teacher may gain by always being on time or ahead of time."

The teacher who comes in late is always hurried and flurried in the very beginning of the lesson, and loses the positive advantage that comes to the teacher who has ample time to attend to all the little details one must attend to before beginning the lesson. "Ahead of the class" is a pretty good motto for any teacher to adopt. Do you not think so?—Selected.

Letter Department.

RICHMOND, Virginia, May 24, 1904.

Dear Saints: I did not think so long a time would lapse after my return from conference, ere writing to you all, but there were so many things to do, and many letters waiting replies, and the days have sped by so fast, that I am surprised to think how long it has been since the last good-bye was spoken, and the last hand-shake was given to the dear children of the household of faith, gathered at our dearly-loved Kirtland. But how thankful I am that one who was with me there has not said, Good-bye, but is with me still; to cheer, comfort, counsel, and lead. Praise his name. How true his words: "Lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

"But how do you know," say some objectors to me lately, "that he is with your church any more than with any other?" And I reply, "Because he manifests himself to us as he does to no other." Christ promised to manifest himself to his disciples as he did not to the world, and he does manifest himself to his church as he does not to the churches of the world, or of men.

Did I enjoy myself at conference? Can one help enjoying one's self when in the element that is the most congenial to him? Does the fish enjoy itself in the water? Does the butterfly enjoy itself in the air and the sunshine, flitting from flower to flower, living the life for which it was created? Take the fish out of the water, and he suffers; put the butterfly in the dark and the damp, and it, too, suffers. And death will result to both, unless restored to their natural elements, where there is perfect correspondence between the nature of each and its environments.

But what has this to do with my enjoying myself at conference? Much; because I found there a more perfect correspondence between my environments and the needs of my higher nature. Were the environments perfect in all respects? No, "That which is perfect" has not yet come. Was there anything to criticize? Certainly there was, and possibly as much in myself as in any other one there. But nothing to discourage nor dampen my love for, nor faith in, this latter-day work. It was so far above all other associations, conventions, etc., in true spirituality, which is Spirit-taught intelligence, as to cast them all into the dark shadows of rayless night. Yet there are higher heights above, where the light is even clearer, and where there are no clouds at all. But, dear ones, it will require effort to attain to those heights; effort, and sacrifice, and self-denial, such perhaps, as were not required of us to reach our present condition. Are we ready to make the sacrifices, to practice the self-denial, to put forth the needed efforts? If we were ready, and were doing it, would the doors of Graceland have to be closed, even for a year? Would our missionary forces have to be cut down when there is an increasing demand for laborers? Who is to do this sacrificing? Must it all fall on the ministry and their families?

I am not one to cry out against everything in the way of ornamentation that the sisters may wear. I think the matter of dress is one of personal liberty, and the question lies between one's self and the Master, whether or not it is right to wear thus and so. But as for myself, I could not buy a fine, costly hat, while a plainer one would answer the purpose, and thus a dollar or two be saved for the church. I am not criticising, but I am just going to drop a few thoughts that I hope may take root in the hearts of our dear sisters, and bring forth fruit to the honor, and glory, and praise of God. I wish I could know that every one who reads this would resolve in their own minds, with an unchangeable firmness, never to spend one cent for the useless ornamentation of our bodies, which will soon be dust anyway, so long as the church needs our help. I verily believe such a blessing would flow to us as a reward for such sacrifice, as would make the vain, transitory pleasure we receive from the possessing and wearing of these things, as less than the shadow cast by a floating thistle-down. Is there one that will respond, and say "As for me, I will first remember Zion and her needs"? And may "the peace of God that passeth all understanding," and which comes from doing those things which are in harmony with his will, be yours.

Was there anything else to be improved on? Yes, without being at all personal, I must say I found in two or three a tendency to lightly and flippantly criticise those holding offices in the church. This was done thoughtlessly, and evidently with only a desire to be entertaining; and was done by those who were young in years, and younger in wisdom, along that line, at least. Just among us sisters it did no other harm than what resulted to the speakers themselves, a leakage, if I may so speak, of spiritual power. Only a little rift in a lute suffices to make the music mute, and only a little worm in the bud may destroy not only the perfect bloom, but the ripe, sweet fruitage that should follow. And should such things be said before outsiders, the tendency would be to belittle the officials of the church and drag them down in the estimation of all who should chance to hear. Besides, it was not following the golden rule. I must not speak behind my friend's back, as I would not want him to speak of me were the tables reversed. But this lesson of always seasoning our speech with salt, who has learned it perfectly? I have not, for one. Therefore I must beware lest my criticisms come home sometime, when I am not expecting them, and prove unwelcome company; but if they shall be merited and spoken in love, as I trust I have written this, I would try to profit by them.

But the saddest thing I saw or heard of while there, or even since I have been in the church, is the suspicioning of each others' motives. I am glad I saw so little of it, but the little filled me with keenest pain. Yet I felt in every instance that love for Zion, and a fervent desire to preserve her purity and integrity, were the movers, even in this expression of suspicion.

The "accuser of the brethren" ever stands ready to suggest to the zealous lover of Zion's weal, an evil motive for any and everything our brothers or sisters may do that we may not quite understand. I believe he sees that will be the surest and swiftest way to destroy the church, or at least the harmony and unity that is, or should be, in the church; and when this harmony or unity, this bond that holds them together, is broken, what is to hinder their falling apart?

Not always can we detect his voice. Like an angel of light will he appear, and calling our attention to something we may not understand, will whisper thoughts of distrust, and suspicions of the motives of our brothers; and unless we discern the spirit, and refuse to listen, the first thing we know, we are believing evil of our brother or sister; and believing evil, we soon let a word drop, which like seeds of weeds, takes root in unexpected places and brings forth an unpleasant, if not a poisonous crop. If we have a suspicion of evil, concerning any one, let us for the Christ's sake, keep it to ourselves, and we will soon see that it was unfounded; or, if just, it will speak for itself, and we shall be clear of "taking up a reproach against our neighbor"; which we must be, if we would dwell on the "holy hill" of Zion. (See Psalms 15.)

Now a word of thanks to each one who so kindly assisted me to get to conference, and while there contributed toward my return. I had sufficient to get home all O. K. and to pay my expenses there, and also to buy some books I wanted. I believe I can use more tracts in this place than I have ever been able to use, and all who wish to help may send me from their treasures, things new and old. I just had a talk with a man who keeps a little fish-market across the street. Picking up a volume of Millennial Dawn he said, "This is the best book I have ever read," and began to expiate on its merits. And presently I spoke and told him wherein I agreed with the book and wherein I differed, told him of the church to which I belong, told him of its raison de atre and left him anxious to see some of our papers, and I have a bundle ready now with a few marked articles. So I will close this long letter and carry him his papers.

May he find therein what his soul needs: The truth as it is in Jesus.

With thanks to all for their kindness to me, their weak and unworthy sister, I remain,

In gospel bonds,

604 State Street.

ALICE R. CORSON.

MAYSVILLE, Missouri, June 2, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am still in the faith and hope to continue, as the work grows brighter and brighter every day. There are two or three families of Saints here; but the nearest branch I believe is Stewartsville. There is a fine church east of here known as Gospel Hill Church, but no services are held there. Bro. Chatburn raised up the work there and the few Saints that are living in this neighborhood are anxious for him to be sent back here. This is the place where Bro. Leonard Scott held a discussion some years ago with Reverend Padgett of the Christian Church which has been a great drawback to the Christian people of this place. I am here temporarily till I get located and would be pleased to see any of the Saints who may be in the city or nearby. Called on two families of Saints and learn there are one or two more families in town. Hope the work will be built up at this place, as well as elsewhere. Will help in any way that I can to assist.

Our district conference in the Nodaway District was well attended considering the inclemency of the weather. Good will result from the efforts put forth at this conference. May the Lord help us all to be humble and prayerful, and hold fast to the "rod of iron", is the prayer of your brother,

JAMES D. SCHOFIELD.

LOGAN, Utah, June 1, 1904.

Editors Herald: If allowed space in your paper to appeal to the Idaho Saints, we would suggest that as the conference year is opening each should determine to do what he can for the cause we are all divinely called to labor in. How to accomplish the most is the great question. It is evident that we should labor as a unit, and hence keep in close touch with each other, recognizing each in his place.

Missionaries who are forced to travel many miles and consume days to make and advertise an appointment, could, of course, do much more preaching and with greater effect if this burden were shared by the Saints. I recall traveling fifty miles one day by wheel to meet an appointment we had expected others to make for us, but which was not made, and we returned without a meeting. Such experiences have caused us to feel keenly the lack of coöperation on the part of the Saints. A refreshing contrast is afforded in the Teton Branch where every Saint's door swings open for a public meeting and the missionary is expected to preach every night while there. I remember spending one night there without holding a meeting and a sister regretting that valuable time was being lost. Such zeal on the part of Saints is sure to bring good results.

I should like to hear from the Saints in each locality, how and when they can coöperate with a missionary to the best advantage, and we will try to provide for their needs. In the meantime let them assist as they can in making openings and appointments, if it is only inviting their neighbors into their own houses to hear the message that we are sent to carry.

As you notice from Bro. Kelley's pastoral, five missionaries are assigned us for the present. We have not been able to plan fully our labors as yet, but hope to have the help of the Saints in this matter by hearing of their needs. Bro. John Condit expects to visit the Weiser Valley and perhaps could visit points further north by team if desired. His address is Bliss, Idaho. Saints north of that point should plan to secure his services as he passes through their parts. Bro. W. S. Pender is at Malad City, Idaho, and Bro. A. J. Layland's address is Raymond, Idaho. Bro. J. E. Vanderwood is now at Blackfoot, Idaho. We could try and accommodate the calls nearest our respective homes, making the burden of expense as light as possible by avoiding unnecessary traveling.

We seem especially forced to consider the question of economy this year, as at least two families of the missionaries in this district, while they are drawing much less than the full allowance for the wife and children, are several months in arrears on this stinted amount. If the Saints would come forward with their tithes this might be averted, and the elders not be forced to leave the field to provide the absolute necessities for their families. In addition to this call just now comes a special appeal for Graceland. I suppose the Bishop's agents have made an appeal to you, but we will risk suggesting that each community of Saints ought to be visited by one of their number who should receive from every member. The amount per capita would not exceed fifty cents, and thus as a district our obligation would be discharged.

One of those poorly aided missionaries' wives recently assumed the (to her) trying ordeal of selling polish from house to house, from which she realized two dollars for Graceland, and her mother and another widowed sister who weaves carpets for a scant living came forward with their mites—five dollars and one dollar and fifty cents respectively—to be applied on the debt. Now can we as a district of two hundred or more members, authorize our agents to say at once that the eighty or one hundred dollars due from the Idaho District will be ready within a month or two? I will speak for one that my proportion will be ready when I hear from the agent.

I hope to visit the Saints between here and the Teton Basin soon, perhaps accompanied upon a part or possibly all of this mission by Bro. W. S. Pender. My address, however, will be Logan, and we hope to hear from all the scattered Saints and branches in the district. Especially let us hear from the official members the first of July, October, January, and March, in the way of a report.

In bonds,

S. D. CONDIT.

PACIFIC JUNCTION, Iowa, June 4, 1904.

Editors Herald: I saw a statement in the HERALD not long ago where Rufus Gunsolley testified that Elder Dow Cook of the Campbellite Church received John Davenport and wife into their church without baptism. It is true. I was at the meeting the night they joined. When they (Davenport and wife) came forward for membership, Elder Cook asked them if they had ever been baptized. They replied, "Yes, we were baptized in Utah by a Brighamite." Elder Cook said, "Brothers and sisters, you have heard what these candidates say. Therefore we take it for granted that their baptism was a Christian baptism. Now all we have to do is to extend to them the right hand of fellowship and receive them as members of the Christian Church."

Not a great while after that Cook was holding another big meeting here and during this meeting Nelson J. Burton came to my house, stayed two or three days, and attended the meeting every night. One day he said to me, "How much money do you give Cook for holding a meeting like this?"

I told him from forty to sixty dollars.

"My goodness," said he, "why, if I had a horse and buggy and they would pay be that amount per week I could soon be a rich man and wear diamonds yet before I die."

Well the next night when Cook gave an invitation for joiners, who should go forward but Nelson J. Burton. Elder Cook asked him if he had ever been baptized. He said "Yes," but did not say when, where, or by whom. So in like manner as Davenport and wife they gave him the right hand of fellowship, and that was all it took to make a full fledged Campbellite out of a Mormon, ready for his forty to sixty dollars per week and prospective diamonds in the near future.

The next day I told Cook to invite him to the pulpit next night and have him preach. This he did. After song service Cook rose up and said, "Bro. Burton will be your preacher for to-night." Burton stepped forward, opened his Bible, and read: "For if the righteous are scarcely saved where will the sinner and ungodly appear?" So he started out very mild and pleasant for ten or fifteen minutes, but I could see that he was away from home, and all at once his old Latter Day Saintism got the better of him and he said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and," but here he saw his mistake and stopped short, turned around and said, "Bro. Cook, forgive me this time. I was so used to preaching it that way that I forgot." I remember that it caused quite a laugh at the time. Poor man, he wanted to preach the gospel as he understood it and as the Bible teaches it, but could not and be a Cambellite. He left us the next day, and I have seen him but once since. He was then living in a dug-out in the cottonwoods opposite Nebraska City chopping cordwood for a living. Whether he ever wore diamonds or not I have yet to learn.

Ever praying for the welfare of all the Saints, I remain,

Your brother,

C. L. EPPERSON.

DUNNEGAN, Missouri, May 24, 1904.

Dear Herald: I feel it my duty to write a few lines to your columns. We would be glad if some of the elders who are laboring in this district would come and preach a while for us. I am young in this faith and have heard but a few sermons since obeying this glorious gospel. I was baptized when nine years of age by Bro. W. H. Mannering. Brn. J. N. Stephenson and Jesse W. Paxton held a few meetings at a Christian church about four or five miles from Dunnegan. I hope and pray that some of the elders will come this way this summer.

Your sister in the faith,

SARAH M. BELLVILLE.

LANCASHIRE HILL, Stockport, England, May 27, 1904.

Dear Herald: Having been restrained from more vigorous enjoyment this Whitfriday through stress of weather, I sought companionship with my HERALD No. 19 and read with more than usual interest the articles by A. M. Fyrando and A. C. Barmore, and the fellowship letters from our brothers and sisters who are with us in this strenuous effort of keeping in line and furthering on the gospel of our dear Lord and Savior. The HERALD does indeed bring the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God very near; and outsiders who examine its pages without prejudice, will admit, I feel sure, that as branches of the vine, we do, as a body, strive to bring forth fruit; that we try to put into practice the teachings given us by our Savior Jesus Christ.

I am indeed thankful that the light has come to me, which has enabled me to comprehend God so clearly; his gospel so simply; his love so fully; and given me such a fullness of joy in this life, and such a glorious hope in the life to come. We are indeed a favored people, blessed beyond any other community on this earth, and need to be grateful to our loving Father that he has permitted us to have the opportunity of accepting his gospel and obeying his will. The truth has been exceedingly clear to me ever since I joined the work; opening up beautiful avenues of thought and inspiring conceptions of the things which God hath prepared for those that love him; and it is my desire to always continue in meekness and service for the Savior who has done so much for me.

Church work in Stockport is also very bright; very good interest among a few; our efforts have not been in vain, and people respect us for our sincerity and quiet strength. We are as yet only few in number, only seventeen in membership which I trust will be increased by either three or five ere this appears in print; and when we think of the population of ninety-two thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, amongst whom we work, it seems an impossible task. God is with us in power, however; enjoying perfect unity, and having a very mine of knowledge in the person of our dear branch president, Bro. George Baty, who does indeed try to feed the sheep over whom he is appointed overseer. The enjoyable position we hold in God's favor is due to our endeavors to further his work, visiting homes wherever we have the opportunity; spending one night each week, perhaps for months in those homes, till they are firmly grounded on the rock of life, and are able themselves to give a reason for the hope that is within them. It may seem slow, but it is sure, and will bring about that which Bro. J. W. Rushton is so earnestly writing for, an educated ministry, for I think we all hold ourselves ready to answer the call of God whenever he sees fit to call us. Ever praying for the furtherance of God's kingdom, and striving for this "assurance of things hoped for" to be shared with others, I remain,

Your brother in the faith.

WILLIAM WORTH.

77 Benair Street, SOMERVILLE, Mass., June 3, 1904.

Editor Herald: Two days ago I returned from a four-month sojourn in Maine, most of the time spent at Stonington, where there is a branch of the church numbering about one hundred. The secretary reported at the late conference that about one third of that number were absent from the place, however. Among those that at present are living in the town, quite a large number are aged and unable to attend to church matters. A number of young married people who are good people and Saints are inclined to let the cares of the world and family encroach a little upon their spiritual duties. Some, alas! are indifferent when it comes to making an effort for the onward progress. Nevertheless there is a band of real working, energetic Saints who are ready to respond to and stand by anybody who is sent there to labor, in any reasonable demand. It is really a pleasure to move ahead for the accomplishment of some worthy object. Not being blessed with a superabundance of wealth they are not able to "remove mountains" in a financial way, simply by saying the word, still by continual, persistent effort they have removed many a financial obstacle, and many of them are still laying up treasure in heaven that way. Upon the whole I enjoyed my labor among them and was sorry to part with them. May the Lord bless them in their future efforts.

Saturday and Sunday last were the days appointed for our Western Maine district conference, and the weather was all that heart could desire. In fact it was remarked by F. M. Sheehy that he could not suggest an improvement upon the climatic conditions all the way through. A goodly number of visiting Saints and friends were present and all the business passed off pleasantly. One feature of the conference was the dedication of the church, which looked beautiful in its decorations of green cedar and flowers. This church, which is a credit to the town, stands as a monument to self-sacrifice and religious devotion. The dedication sermon was preached by F. M. Sheehy to a full house. Besides the local ministry there were in attendance Elders F. M. Sheehy, J. N. Ames, J. J. Billings, S. O. Foss, E. D. Braun, Ralph Farrel, and the writer. Elder J. D. White, of Independence was present a few hours on Saturday and gave us a good talk upon Zion's matters. Ralph Farrel and Henry Eaton were ordained to the office of elder; Freeman Haskill, priest; A. O. Candage, teacher; and Daniel Haskill, deacon. Honorable mention was made of the names of Fathers Saunders and Gurley of early memory, also U. W. Greene and many others who labored later in the cause at this place.

I am to go to Prince Edward Island in a few days. My field address will be Summerside, Prince Edward Island, Canada.

In gospel bonds,
H. J. DAVISON.

ZENITH, Illinois, May 22, 1904.

Dear Herald: It makes me rejoice to read the letters from the brothers and sisters. The more I read and study the gospel the brighter my pathway grows.

Oh! how many there are who reject the true gospel. Jesus says: "He that rejecteth me and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day."

How necessary, then, that we should obey the gospel of Christ, and become new creatures, that we shall be like him when he appears, and reign with him, where there will be no more death, pain, or sorrow,—nothing to harm or molest in all that holy city. How I long to meet my loving mother, who has gone on before. I have often thought and wondered why God should take her from us, for we loved her so dearly. But God knows best. We should always be reconciled to God though it may sometimes seem hard. I desire to live a faithful and pure life before God. Christ says that none but the pure in heart can see God, or enter into the holy city. May this grand and glorious work roll on and on until all the honest in heart be gathered in.

We have a nice Sunday-school. I am also glad that we have the Religio work established at this place. May we ever move onward and upward in the work in which we are engaged, as the poet says, "Ever keep moving on the way." My heart was made to rejoice when I read in the late HERALD about the house of the Lord as seen in a vision. I am glad that I ever have started in the straight and narrow way.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all God's people, that I may be able to pass in at the door and be counted and numbered with the blest of all ages, where parting will be no more.

Your sister in Christ,

SARAH BING.

CRISP, Illinois, May 10, 1904.

Dear Herald: My heart has been made to rejoice this morning that I am a Latter Day Saint, and to know that God has accepted me as one of his dear children. Without this thought of comfort and consolation my soul would not be at rest. Christ says if any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God or whether "I speak of myself." This have I proven to my satisfaction. God's promises are binding; if we only will do our part, live humble, meek, and lowly, ever keeping the commandments of God, then we are entitled to the great blessings which God has in store for the true and the faithful.

I will relate a vision that I had a few years ago, whether asleep or awake I can not tell, but seemingly I was awake, when suddenly before me appeared a ladder which ascended from earth to heaven which looked so long and lone. There were several around the ladder, but only a few climbing it. I felt unable to climb such a ladder; but among the few who were climbing it was my sister, and she being a cripple I felt that if she could climb it I certainly could too. So I made the effort and was about half way up the ladder when I began to be afraid of falling. It seemed that I could not climb any further up, and I knew if I looked back I would be sure to fall. While I was pondering these thoughts in my mind I heard a voice speak to me and say, "Do not turn back." These words were repeated three times. After hearing these words spoken all doubt and fear was banished from my mind and I finished climbing the ladder. When I was at the top round of the ladder I recognized a personage as being Christ, who reached forth his hand and welcomed me in a grand and spacious building. Its grandeur and beauty no mortal tongue can tell,—that beautiful city where God is its light. There I met with dear ones in glory who are now waiting for us. Oh, the joy and satisfaction there will be when we all meet with friends and dear ones in glory, there to live together for ever where parting is no more. When the vision was gone, I regretted that I was back here in this world of sin and strife and not where I had been in vision.

Dear Saints, I want you to pray for me that I may be able to abide the coming of Christ.

Your sister in the faith,
MARTHA E. BING.

FAIRBURY, Nebraska, May 30, 1904.

Dear Herald: We note in the Fairbury News, with great sorrow, the accidental death of Bro. Ralph F. Mayers; and as we do not know the address of the Mayers family, we desire to extend our sympathy to them through the HERALD, praying the Lord to give them strength in this great sorrow.

Yours in hope,
WILLIAM AND CARRIE ARMBRUSTER.

MURRAY, Kentucky, May 31, 1904.

Saints' Herald: It has been some time since I have seen anything in your good pages from C. L., and I am often asked, "Why don't you write more letters to the church papers? We love to read your letters as well as others." So I think the old proverb is true that all people have some that admire them.

Well, our conference is a thing of the past. It was indeed a success, a large turnout of Saints present, and all seemed to enjoy themselves. Bro. T. C. Kelley, J. R. McLain, S. H. Fields, J. H. Adair, E. P. Cook, John A. Cotwell, A. S. Snow, and the writer was the priesthood force. I was glad to meet with the Saints, and to find them so strong in the faith. It did my very soul good to see Sr. Lizzie Cook standing so firm in the work, and manifesting such a willingness to feed and care for the Saints. She and her children were the only Saints who live near the place. Sr. Cook is one who believes in making sacrifice for the work. Some of us went eight miles after the night service, to sleep; but we enjoyed it exceedingly, for we could have the presence of the good Spirit with us, while we listened to the voices of the Saints as they rang out through the night air, relating to each other the pleasures of this grand latter-day work.

While we could see so much at the conference to make us happy, we could also see the power of the evil one trying to make discord and sow the seeds of strife. One teacher says that in trying to settle some hardness between some of the Saints every one concerned would tell him he was all right, he had nothing against any one, it was the other fellow that was off. And of course they themselves felt strong and had great power of late. Let me say, right here, that is no sign that Satan does not work with us. To my mind one thing that he has learned is to make the impression on the minds of the Saints that they are especially blessed with the Spirit of the Master. This is one way in which the Saints can learn what power is working with them: the Spirit of God will not cause us to contradict ourselves in trying to justify ourselves. Remember Satan is cunning, and will get in his work if we are not on our watchguard.

In evidence of what I have said I call attention to what the Lord said to me at the conference of 1903, at Independence, Missouri. It came through the patriarch. "The adversary will seek to throw in thy way stumbling blocks and hindrances, and he will seek, when thou art least expecting, to lead thee away, to cause thee to do things that shall displease the Father. But if thou art on thy watchguard thou canst foil him; and when thou shalt feel strong, take heed lest the influences should be at work to cause thee to fall. Remember, those who suffer their passions to control, and become angry, lose the Spirit of God, and they are subject to the spirit of the adversary." My own experience has taught me the truth of the statement, and if Satan would try one in that way he would likely try another in the same way.

I remember once hearing some of the Saints say they were glad that Satan opposed this latter-day work, and that they had him to fight; and I wondered if they had learned to fight him in self. Some seemed only willing to fight when Satan was in the other fellow. To all such let me say, Turn your gun on yourself and conquer Satan there first, then you will be able to make war against him in the other fellow. Some seem to have an x-ray eye, and can see right through a person, and after looking at him awhile they conclude there is no good in him, and so they start the rounds and let us all know the result of their great discerning power. They say they are willing to look over such fellows, for they are blind; but they do not know that Satan is leading them. I sometimes think these x-ray people are the ones the scripture refers to as having a beam in their eyes. Perhaps it is the beam that has such magnifying power. If so I hope you will remove the beam before taking a peep at me.

I am glad to be able to report that the work in Kentucky and Tennessee is gaining ground, not because C. L. has been laboring in these two States; for I am sure others have labored faithfully here, and are still so laboring. I am glad to know that the work is the Lord's, and I can work the more to overcome the hindrances, and move forward in my duties as a minister for Christ. I am striving to push the work in new fields, and to labor in harmony with my collaborators; am making arrangements to bring the tent to Murray to begin a week's effort. Bro. T. C. Kelley will be with me. I am pleased to say that I have made many friends at this place. I was told a few days ago by one of the ministers who live here that the people in Murray had decided to treat me as a man kindly, but to treat my doctrine with contempt. So I can not say whether we will get as large a hearing as we did last year. This same preacher came to where we were raising the tent then and said he would smash that thing before we got away with it; but the tent was not smashed. So it may be our doctrine will not be treated with contempt this time. Saints, remember that our reunion will begin on the 23d of July at Croston, Kentucky. This town is located three miles west of Hazel, Kentucky, on the Kentucky and Tennessee State line, and ten miles south of Murray. Hazel is the nearest railroad station. Come one and all, and help to build up the work of the Master at that place. Saints will be expected to bring tents and wagons and camp on the ground, as no members live there. Those that can not so arrange come right along; they will be provided for. May the Lord help all the Saints to come up higher.

C. L. SNOW.

LOS ANGELES, California, May 22, 1904.

Editors Herald: After a silence of nearly a year permit a line from my pen. Brn. Scott and Carmichael reached this city yesterday; the latter much improved in health, and the former looking his best. It revived old memories to have Bro. Scott with us to-day. A long experience in quorum and general church work has created quite a "bond of sympathy" between us, and it will be a pleasurable experience to be again associated with Columbus. After all, men of congenial minds can the more effectually cooperate even in church work. Considering the number of missionaries appointed to this coast, we should be able to report an advance into the enemy's country, and several strongholds captured. We must admit the old beaten paths are pretty well worn, and it is rather difficult to strike out into the open; but considering the late pastoral of Bro. Fred A. Smith as good as scripture I do not see how we can do other than push the work "into the new field now opening before us."

The California of to-day is an immense field. Much of it is as yet unexplored in a gospel sense. There are some difficulties here not noted elsewhere, but on the whole the people are about the same. That the people love to be out-of-doors, in the mountains, and at the sea, we admit; but who can blame them in this land of sunshine and flowers? People love pleasure and amusement everywhere. The proscriptions of Mt. Sinai were only provisional and preparatory in their character. It is much better to direct human energy than to coerce it. We can not drive people to church. It is a sin for one to go to church from a sense of duty, having their desires elsewhere. We must so train our people, educate the masses, that it will be a pleasure to them to give attention to spiritual things. It is largely a matter of training. It is difficult to interest people in week-night meetings here. So it is elsewhere. Political agitation will, during the summer, in a measure displace spiritual reflection.

Personally I incline to the opinion, speaking from experience, as well as from observation, that if one wants to he can find ample to engage his attention. For tract work and street preaching there is not a more inviting field anywhere. The climate admits of open air meetings all the year round. Any elder can put in twelve hours per day to an advantage, distributing tracts if he so desire. It seems folly for a man to refuse or fail to do any preaching simply because the people will not come to a church building or hall. One can do very effectual work in the private house. People in California as a rule are well informed. There are several openings which have been waiting for months for some one to fill. San Diego is a promising field, so also is Santa Barbara, with all of the country north, contiguous thereto. We are planning for a good reunion. Can we have Brn. Luff, Griffiths, and Chatburn with us in conjunction with those already on the ground? We sincerely hope so.

The Methodist conference is in full blast. Men considered adepts in politics could get pointers here. In the common walks of life some things might be passed by as a matter of fact; but for men, supposedly religious, and legislating for God and the truth, to adopt tactics hardly allowable among men of no religious pretensions whatever is not complimentary to religion, to say the least. Learning that the bishops were very anxious to have all the local pulpits filled with Methodist ministers I sent the following communication to them:

LOS ANGELES, California, May 9, 1904.

"To the Officers and Members of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

"Dear Brethren: I would be very much pleased to have you supply our pulpit during the remainder of your sojourn in this city. We are ever ready to extend this courtesy to all of our coreligionists at all times and in all places, and our people will be glad to welcome any of your speakers. Church building southeast corner Eleventh and Wall Street. Please notify me of your action at your convenience at No. 301 Copp Building, 218 South Broadway, city. Very truly yours,

"T. W. WILLIAMS."

I received the following reply:

"HAZARDS PAVILLION, May 14, 1904.

"MR. T. W. WILLIAMS.

"My Dear Sir: Your letter dated the 9th inst. did not reach me. I have just been shown this copy. We are unable to supply a preacher for the church you represent.

"Yours respectfully,

"E. A. HEALY, for Committee."

I submitted the following reply thereto, but up to date no answer has come to me:

"LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, May 16, 1904.

"To the Presiding Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Los Angeles, California:

"Dear Brethren: I herewith present some little correspondence between Reverend Healy and myself relative to the furnishing of speakers for our pulpit during the continuance of the conference. Reverend Healy tacitly admitted to Mr. Cooper, a member of our congregation, that the reason why a speaker was not supplied was because of the name we bear, and the fact that people generally classed us with Smoot, Roberts, and the Mormon church. Surely in the face of the disclosed facts of the past few years no intelligent man or minister could be so poorly informed as to make this mistake, which Reverend Healy must well know. While emphatically disavowing any connection with the Mormon church, yet, though it were true it should have no weight in determining the action of your committee. Are we to understand that the church which claims to stand for the bravery, courage, and heroic missionary spirit of John and Charles Wesley refused to send a representative anywhere, and particularly when urgently invited to do so? If the Mormons should extend a similar invitation could you consistently refuse even their request? You send missionaries to convert the heathen with no invitation or glad hand of welcome. Are we worse than they? Surely you can not have it go out that during the conference of 1904, with hundreds of representative men in attendance, all able and willing to represent the cause of Methodism, you refused to send a minister to our church after a courteous and earnest invitation had been extended to you to do so. We claim to be followers of Christ. We are doing our utmost to promulgate his teachings. We may be in error. You may be right. We afford you an opportunity to show us a better way. You refuse. Will this have a favorable impression on our people? Christ went among publicans and sinners. We do not confess to be either, but if by reputation in the minds of your committee we are, then here is an inviting field for missionary work. As men claiming to represent Christ you surely are not consistent in refusing to supply speakers for us whatever our character or philosophy may be. As to changing our name, you know that the name Christian was given to the early saints by way of derision, the name of Christ being despised everywhere, save among his own disciples. If Christ had changed his name the bitter opposition of the Jews would have relented. That name stood for something. The name Methodist was a nickname given Wesley and his followers by their enemies. It was a synonym of fanatics, fools, and general disturbers of the peace in the minds of all conservative churchmen of the established order. Why not change the name? You are aware of the fact that reputation is what others say of us; character is what we are. Others may try to discredit our name; we by our lives indicate what it stands for. We claim to be Saints. This is the name which God has given his people in all ages of the world. We claim to be the church of Jesus Christ, so what is wrong with the name anyway? It stands for something with us, and though the followers of Brigham Young have appropriated it without moral or legal warrant, yet we propose to hold thereto until the name Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints becomes a synonym for virtue, honesty, and Christian character the world over.

"We sincerely hope that you will consider the matter of sufficient importance to have your committee reconsider their action and accept our invitation.

"Very truly yours,

"T. W. WILLIAMS.

"Pastor of the Los Angeles Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

I have had very little time for thought and research the past year. Hope to have a little more time for church work in the immediate future. Have been acting as traveling salesman for a Los Angeles wholesale house. If I so desired could retain the position at financial advantage to myself; but consider the work of God of more consequence than dollars and cents. Mental diversion and physical employment during the past year have been of great benefit to me. I feel ten years younger.

The Methodist conference has refused through its representatives to accept an invitation to speak in our church, tacitly admitting that they could not condescend to such a thing. The conference has been stirred over a consideration of the Higher Criticism of the Bible; heresy charges and other charges have been rife; but what do you think of this as coming from their official church organ, the Christian Advocate? Will this inspire confidence in the Bible?

"Q.—For what company was Eve made? A.—Adam's express company.

"Q.—How did Adam get out of Paradise? A.—He was snaked out.

"Q.—What did he do then? A.—Raised Cain," etc.

If the Bible is the infallible word of God equally and wholly inspired as they claim, then the above is nothing short of blasphemy. The general spirit of laxity on the marriage question, on amusements, and on church discipline has been clearly apparent in the conference.

Yours for the ultimate triumph of truth,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Elizabeth Pickles writes from San Diego, California: "I do not know how I could get along without the church papers. They are instructive as well as comforting to me in my isolated condition. They help me to come up higher than I may, if possible, attain to the glory of the sun in the resurrection. I have not seen an elder here for years. Do not know why San Diego is so neglected. It is a large field to work in, but is left to the Brighamites alone. I would like to go from house to house distributing tracts; but as this is a hilly country, and I am not strong, I can not do it, especially as I have been very sick last winter, but through the help of the Lord I think I have been raised up from a dying bed, for which I am very thankful to my heavenly Father. And my prayers are that I may be made strong again, and a useful instrument in the Master's service. I ask the prayers of the Saints to this end."

Bro. J. L. Goodrich writes from Wellston, Ohio: "This is a new opening. I will go from here to Ironton, Ohio, to meet Bro. S. O. Foss on the 10th of next month, on our way to fields of labor. We expect to canvass both the West Virginia and Kentucky sides of the Big Sandy."

Bro. P. Muceus wrote to Bro. H. A. Stebbins from Christiana, Norway, May 25: "The work here in the capital is moving rather slowly, owing to the long-entertained prejudice against the name Latter Day Saint. It is very difficult to arouse the people to an investigation. Only few attend our services, hence it will take time to convert any great number. But those who attend regularly become interested in the work and find in it something to satisfy the soul. Three grown persons have been baptized, two from the Utah church, and one from the Christian Church, who will all make good members, I think. The Utah people are doing their best in keeping their members away from our meetings, and those poor duped souls are willing to obey. One of the first things the missionaries teach them to do is to be obedient to the priesthood; it matters less whether they are obedient to the word of God or not. And it is peculiarly strange how well they succeed in that. When the missionaries have told them something, even if this proves to be contrary to the written law, they believe their word in preference to the law. Such a course is of course damaging and soul-destroying, and degenerates all who are influenced thereby, which is easily seen in their members. Those who are really honest in heart will not always submit and obey, so I am hopeful sometime of bringing some to a realization of their mistake. There are three or four churches in the city calling themselves Christian Churches, or Church of Christ, independent of each other. But they have very small membership, and make but very little progress. They are much imbued, with the Campbellite spirit. There are some good members among them, and a few of them we may gain, if they can be influenced to investigate.

"I have an application in to the chief of police for permission to preach on the streets of the city, and I am inclined to think I shall receive a favorable answer, though the Brighamites are not permitted; if so I hope to reach more people, and may perhaps accomplish some good. I am anxious to get the work before the people so they may know what we are and what we believe. In a city like this with two hundred and twenty-five thousand people there ought to be some to gain for the truth; and I am interested in doing what I can for the cause.

"At present I am laboring alone, Bro. Anderson being in Denmark, and thus I will have to continue during the entire year, I suppose. Bro. Anderson intends to leave for America in July, and as no one was sent to Norway this year I see no way of getting any aid. . . . We need as good, if not better workers in Europe as in the States, for here we must face the enemy alone, we have no leading men to send for as in English-speaking countries, hence the workers here must be qualified for emergencies.

"The people in these countries demand as good preaching as any other, and when men are sent to open up fields in Scandinavia, and other European countries, they should be able to speak and hold the interest of an audience. I see daily the need of becoming more efficient in presenting the truth in a proper and becoming manner that people may be drawn toward it."

Under date of June 5, Bro. E. F. Shupe wrote as follows: "The Religio gave an excellent entertainment last Thursday night. At the close ice-cream and cake were served, and all enjoyed themselves. The proceeds are to make payment on their piano. At the fast and prayer-meeting Sunday for Bro. Roush, the church was well filled with the Saints. Several earnest prayers were offered for his recovery. We sincerely hope and pray that the Lord will restore him."

Miscellaneous Department.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Southern Nebraska District; Greeting: Again your minister in charge has placed me in charge of this field, and I humbly solicit your coöperation. I feel truly grateful to the Saints for the manner of treatment accorded the missionaries the past year, in both a financial and a social sense; but I wish to remind the Saints that the Lord has said that "the work now lying before the missionary quorums of the church is of such increased magnitude and importance, the field so white unto the harvest, and the need for laborers so great, that the Twelve and Seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers." From the foregoing and in the consideration of the remainder of that paragraph, it may be easily discerned that the Lord desired his missionaries to leave the old beaten paths, and push the work into new fields, and we know of no way that this work can be successfully carried on without the coöperation of the Saints.

We desire to know not only where to go to effect a new opening, but how much you will do to help make the missionary's effort in your locality a success. The local ministers have promised to do all they can to help keep the work alive where openings have been made, and the Saints are willing to help pay the minister's carfare where such is necessitated.

Bro. J. B. Goldsmith, of Nebraska City, has promised to fill appointments wherever possible, as also H. A. Higgins and Joseph Meyers of same place. These men are worthy and able. Help them and they will help you and do good to the work in your locality.

Farther west, at Glenville, is Bro. James Teeter, an earnest worker who will look after the work in that part.

Another thing, Saints, do all you can to help pay off Grace-land College debt, as also to put means in the hands of the Bishop in tithes and offerings that men may be sent to reap in the fields now white unto the harvest. Remember that Christ has said that those who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice will be gathered with him in that glorious day. Try to be exemplars of your professed love for Christ and his law.

My address is Holden, Missouri.

In hope of eternal life,

FAIRFIELD, Nebraska, June 3, 1904.

J. R. SUTTON.

To the Saints of the Fremont and Pottawattamie Districts: As the season for using the gospel tents is here, will all the Saints who want labor done in their vicinities and who live away from the branches, write me at Underwood, Iowa, of the conditions in their localities. If branch presidents know of places where we can labor with tent please inform us. We hope the branch officers will care for the work in their branches, thus freeing the traveling ministry from the care of local work, so they can push out into new fields. Will the local brethren who hold the priesthood and are not branch officers come to our aid and seek places where they can tell the gospel story, or inform us if they can help in tent work.

There are many places in our field where we have not been to warn the people; so let us move out, asking God's blessing on our labors, and we will have the Holy Spirit to aid us.

In gospel bonds,

M. M. TURPEN.

UNDERWOOD, Iowa, June 4, 1904.

To the Saints of the Southern California District; Greeting: You have noted, no doubt, by the HERALD and Ensign that I have been appointed to assist the minister in charge, Apostle Joseph Luff, in the missionary department of the work in your district. To build up the cause of Christ and his truth is the purpose of our mutual labors. Our colaborers for the conference year are Brn. J. C. Clapp, Thomas W. Williams, both of Los Angeles, and A. Carmichael and C. E. Crumley, of Anaheim and Santa Anna, respectively.

To myself, the field is new, locally so at least. I need to learn the needs of the field for ministerial labor by your help. Your coöperation and prayers are essential. We hope you will feel this and aid in the great work. Aid us in getting new openings for the preaching of the word. To win souls to Christ, to save them from the darkness, bondage, and death of sin, is our most earnest desire.

Time and events urge us to be wide awake to the interest of the work committed of God in trust to us all, and that we slacken not our diligence, nor grow weary in well-doing. The prize of eternal life is to those only who persevere faithful "to the end." Note possible openings for the preaching of the word; write us of prospects. Address me at 964 South Court Circle, care William Crumley, Los Angeles, California, and your communications will receive our careful and prompt attention. We are all in the field.

Your brother and fellow servant,

C. SCOTT.

ANAHEIM, California, June 2, 1904.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

Eastern Michigan District. Beloved Saints, I have received a circular from the Bishop, with a statement of the Bishopric, showing they were instructed by resolution of conference to carry out the divine injunction to pay the College debt. And they have arranged for the payment of the debt in a systematic manner: by apportioning the amount of indebtedness to the districts of the church in America, in proportion to membership, and asking that each district raise its proportionate share at the earliest time practicable. The amount for the Eastern Michigan District is $580, and we have about 1400 members in our district to discharge the debt. Let each one say, I will pay my share of the amount, and do it cheerfully, in the Spirit of the work, that the blessings of our Heavenly Father may be and abide with us all.

A word to parents and guardians. It would be well for us to assist our young folks with a little means, that they may be able to respond with us. It would encourage them and comfort us. I trust each officer and member in each branch of the district will respond to this call as you are prospered. Hoping to hear from you all at an early date,

With best wishes,
ANDREW BARR.

Box 76, APPLGATE, Michigan.

Clinton, Missouri, District.—Will the Saints of the district please remember the call for help for Graceland. High water and bad roads have prevented me from making a call in person. As I have sent an apportionment to each branch, shall be pleased to have the same returned by June 24, at Eldorado Conference, as the honor of the church is at stake, and to us, being members of the church, our duty seems clear. Hope to hear from scattered members with what they can contribute.

Do not wait to be last, but try to be on record first. Give name of branch you belong to so as to be credited to your own branch, as that is proper.

Your brother and colaborer,
LEBECK, Missouri, June 8, 1904. G. W. BEEBE, Sr.

Fifth Quorum of Elders.

Dear Brethren: I feel truly glad of the interest shown by the reports of last year's work. It evidences the growing interest had by all, and I feel that my work of corresponding with the members has not been lost, but has resulted in much good. And inasmuch as my counselors desire that I shall again renew the work, I will do so. I feel very much encouraged along this line of duty, and as your servant, desire to labor in unison to accomplish what I can for the Master. In my corresponding with you I want all to be free, if any information is wanted or you have any suggestion to offer. I feel to highly commend you to God, for his blessing that shall make each one efficient for the work.

I am this far on my way to my field and until I get through I can not give any field address. It will not be very long until our secretary will issue our new circular letter which no doubt will be of much interest to all. So may we each work and labor faithfully to bring honor to God and benefit to humanity, is my earnest prayer.

T. J. BELL, President.
PORTLAND, Oregon, June 2, 1904.

Notices.

EASTERN MICHIGAN CONFERENCE.

In last week's issue of the HERALD notice was given to send reports to a certain number on Thayer Street, Flint, Michigan. Instead please send them to J. W. Davis, 710 Hazelton Street, Flint, Michigan. J. W. Davis, secretary.

High Council.

CORRECTION.

In the published record of the proceedings of the High Council appearing in the HERALD for May 18, 1904, page 470, case of Maggie Thompson vs. Rachel Portius, there is an error, made in publication. The name should be Rachel Pontious. This correction is made to agree with the record on High Council proceedings. All parties interested take notice.

JOSEPH SMITH, President of Council.
LAMONI, Iowa, June 8, 1904.

Reunion Notices.

The Northern Missouri reunion will convene and hold a ten-day meeting in the beautiful grove of Bro. B. J. Dice, at Stewartsville, Missouri, it being the twelfth annual gathering, commencing on Friday, August 19. Brn. T. T. Hinderks, A. W. Head, B. J. Dice, Andrew Lewis, Charles P. Paul, are the reunion committee. Charles P. Paul, secretary.

The Fremont reunion will convene at Greene's Grove, three miles south of Tabor, Iowa, Friday, August, 19, 1904. For further particulars regarding tents etc., apply to J. F. Greene, secretary reunion committee, Tabor, Iowa.

The Massachusetts District reunion will convene August 6-15, 1904, at Silver Lake, Plympton, Massachusetts. The price of tents will be, 10x12, $2.75; 12x15, $3.25; cots 25 cents each. An extra charge of twenty-five cents is made this year, in accordance with resolution at last reunion, for putting up and taking down tents. Those wishing to attend will please send in their orders early; those who order early will be first served. The store will be open in full force the first Saturday, likewise the commissary tent. We can not state at present the price of board but do not think it will be different from last year. We will state the price later, also the names of those of the ministry expected to be there. When sending in your order, state if you desire your tent located in the same place it was last year. W. A. Sinclair, secretary committee, 1439 Pleasant Street.

Conference Notices.

The Southern Missouri quarterly conference will convene in the King Hill Schoolhouse, near Thayer, Oregon County, Missouri, on Saturday, June 18, 1904, at 10 a. m. All reports, petitions, and communications pertaining to the conference should be in my hands by June 15, at 1928 Vernon Avenue, Springfield, Missouri. J. C. Chrestensen, secretary.

Died.

EVANS.—Hannah Evans, at London, Ontario, May 31, 1904, aged 85 years, 11 months, and 20 days. Deceased was born June 11, 1819, at St. Andrews, Quebec; married to William Evans June 9, 1843; baptized November 5, 1876, by J. J. Cornish. She leaves five sons, (one of whom is President R. C. Evans), one daughter, sixteen grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren. Funeral services conducted in the Latter Day Saints' church by Elders W. Fligg and F. Gregory. Remains were laid to rest in Mt. Pleasant Cemetery by the side of her husband who preceded her fifteen years.

WARING.—Margaret May Richardson Waring, daughter of Bro. and Sr. James Richardson, departed this life June 3, 1904, at Weir City, Iowa. She was born December 5, 1880, at Lucas, Iowa. United with the church at Lamoni, April 13, 1899. Was married September 7, 1902, at County Line, Iowa, to Joseph Waring. Interment at Bussy, Iowa. She leaves a husband, father, mother, brother, and other relatives to mourn their loss. Funeral sermon preached by Elder W. E. Williams, assisted by Thomas D. Williams.

COHRT.—Erald Vernon Cohrt, son of Bro. and Sr. Frank Cohrt. Born August 21, 1897, at Smithland, Iowa. Blessed August 29, 1897, by H. O. Smith, J. C. Crabb, and F. E. Cohrt. He fell asleep in Jesus, June 3, 1904, aged 6 years, 9 months, 13 days. His little body was laid in Mother Earth, but his spirit rests in paradise, awaiting the resurrection morn. Great respect was shown to Bro. and Sr. Cohrt. The post-office, bank, and most of the business houses were draped in mourning. Funeral sermon by W. A. Smith.

Addresses.

Amos Berve, 629 Water Street, Kewanee, Illinois.
J. F. Mintun, 514 East Garfield Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

Fourth of July.

One fare for the round-trip, plus twenty-five cents, July 2, 3, 4, within two hundred miles from starting point on Nickel Plate Road. Return limit July 5. Chicago depot: La Salle and Van Buren Streets. City ticket offices, 111 Adams Street, and Auditorium Annex. Telephones Central 2057 and Harrison 2208. (No. 9) 24-3t.

In another column may be found an ad. of the E-B Realty & Brokerage Company. This firm is composed of Bro. E. Etzenhouser, formerly of the Ensign, and Bro. W. S. Brown, secretary of the Independence Stake. 24-2t.

July 8th.

The Nickel Plate Road will run an excursion to Chautauqua Lake and return at one fare for the round trip, from Chicago with return limit of August 9, by depositing ticket. Transportation good on any of our three daily trains. Cheap rates to other eastern points. No excess fare charged on any train on Nickel Plate Road. Individual Club Meals, ranging in price from 35c. to $1.00; also service a la carte, in Nickel Plate dining-cars. Write John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago, for particulars. Chicago city ticket offices, 111 Adams Street and Auditorium Annex, 'phones Central 2057 and Harrison 2208. (No. 11) 24-3t.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

HE DON'T CRAVE THAT FILTHY WEED!

Bro. W. A. Welton, of Little Sioux, writes April 7, 1904, saying: "I have used tobacco from the age of eight years. I purchased three boxes of your Quit-to-bac and did not use quite one of them and can say I don't crave the filthy weed. I am now twenty-four years old. I would advise all who want to stop using tobacco to try Quit-to-bac. It is bound to cure for it did cure me!" Why not try it? Three boxes postpaid only $1.50 with a positive guarantee to cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.

Address (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois

NEW BOOKS

JOSEPH SMITH, WHO WAS HE?

A valuable work of 255 pages completely refuting the charges that Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy. Paper cover 50c. Cloth 75 cents

EBELING-RIGGLE DEBATE.

Subject: The Kingdom of God. A book of 492 pages bound in cloth 50 cents

THE OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL

By Elder Joseph Luff. A book of twenty-nine sermons on vital gospel subjects. Makes a good missionary $1.00

EXEGESIS OF THE PRIESTHOOD

This book is a compilation of scripture on the priesthood and the duties of the various officers in the priesthood. Every church officer should have one $1.00

Herald Publishing House

Lamoni, Iowa

BOOK OF MORMON MAPS AGAIN

G. F. WESTON, removed from Buchanan, Michigan, to Walker, Vernon County, Missouri.

LECTURE SIZE.—5x8 feet, on muslin, limp, in colors, for Religios or Ministry. (Postage 25c included) $3.25
Same, full finish, varnished, (expressage not included) $5.00

HOME AND OFFICE.—size 39x51 inches, limp, on muslin, in colors, for Ministry or Religios, very nice, (postage 8c included) $1.60
Same full finish, varnished, (expressage not included) $2.50

SPECIAL MAP OF ARABIA.—28x36 inches, Book of Mormon features, limp muslin, in colors, (postage 5c included) 55c

CHARTS.—SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—40x52 inches, on limp muslin, numbers 1 and 2 in colors with various illustrations, signs on Sun, Moon, etc., each (postage 8c included) $1.60

CHART.—ANCIENT CHARACTERS, — 3x6 feet. Book of Mormon and others compared, in colors, (postage 12c included) $1.60

SMALL CHARTS.—Which shall we serve? The Christian Race; The body of Christ; The Resurrection; Charity; The Lord's Supper; each 12x36 inches. Illustrated and with bright lettering, on limp muslin, in colors, for Religio and Sunday-school rooms or for preaching, each (postage included) 30c

DISPENSATION CHART.—by Elder J. D. Stead, 5x16 feet, on muslin, in colors, finely illustrated, varnished in full finish, (expressage not included) $10.

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK.

Excursions for the Fourth,

via the Nickel Plate Road, at one fare for the round-trip, plus twenty-five cents, July 2, 3, 4, within radius of two hundred miles from starting point. Return limit July 5. Three daily trains in each direction, with modern coaches and vestibuled sleeping-cars, to Cleveland, Erie, Buffalo, New York, Boston, and New England points. Passengers to points east of Buffalo have privilege of stopover at Niagara Falls, in either direction, and also at Chautauqua Lake, during excursion season, by depositing tickets. Individual American Club meals, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00, served in Nickel Plate dining-cars; also service a la carte. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road.

Chicago depot, corner La Salle and Van Buren Streets, the only depot in Chicago on the elevated loop. City ticket offices, 111 Adams Street, and Auditorium Annex. Telephones, Central 2057 and Harrison 2208. (No. 10) 24-36.

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Interest Never Sleeps.

It works while you sleep like a silent partner.

If you have any money that is not earning interest, write at once to the oldest established bank in Lamoni.

The Commercial Bank,
D. F. Nicholson, Cashier. LAMONI, IOWA.

A PRACTICAL $5 TYPEWRITER.

An up-to-date machine. Can be carried in the pocket. Size 9 3/4 by 2 1/4 by 1 3/4 inches, weight 20 ounces. Writes capitals, small letters, numbers and punctuation marks; 76 characters in all. We guarantee safe arrival by mail or express. Circulars free. Address, NEW CENTURY CO., 22-4 P. O. Box 933, Pittsburg, Pa.

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
LAMONI - - IOWA

* * * * *

* IF YOU WANT A home, a lot, a business, or anything for sale in a large city we can save you money * * * * *

* E-B REALTY & BROKERAGE CO * * * * *

* 602 Heist Bldg., Kansas City, Missouri * * * * *

* Brn. E. Etzenhouser & W. S. Brown 24-4 * * * * *

$7 to St. Louis and Back.

$7.00 to St. Louis and Back, June 13 and 27, 1904.

You can buy round-trip tickets from Lamoni for so little money as this on these dates via the Burlington Route.

Tickets are good on all trains, in coaches and chair cars. Good returning from St. Louis within seven days from date of sale.

Ask the Burlington Agent for particulars, or address H. S. JONES,

Division Passenger Agent,
24-2 Burlington, Iowa.

Herald Office Publications.

All books are sold by numbers. Send numbers only. Send all orders and make all remittances payable to Herald Publishing House, Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

The Saints' Herald

RSSalvards m

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, June 22, 1904

Number 25

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
 of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR
 I. A. SMITH . . . . . ASSISTANT EDITOR
 FRED'K M. SMITH . . . . . CORRESPONDING EDITOR

Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

Editorial.

ITEMS FROM A WANDERER.

By invitation of the president of Northeastern Missouri District, J. A. Tanner, we were present at the conference held at Bevier, Missouri, June 4 and 5. We reached Bevier on the afternoon of June 3 by leaving Lamoni at half past four in the morning. By inquiry we found the way to the place where the Sunday-school was in convention. There we learned that one of the brethren had been to the station at train time to meet us, but had failed to see us. Possibly the reason was that we were not attired in the conventional ministerial garb.

Bevier being a place we had never visited, and yet one about which we had heard and read much, we were interested in seeing what kind of a place it was, what kind of a branch we have there, etc.

Inquiry on first reaching there elicited the information that the convention was being held in the Episcopal church building, On the way there the question recurred, Can it be possible that a branch so large as the Bevier Branch, and so long established, has not a place of its own in which to meet? We asked no questions, but the information was soon forthcoming that the Episcopal church building was only temporary quarters. Before long we learned the complete story. Over thirty years ago Bevier Branch built a church building, and used it continually. It has to a large extent outgrown its usefulness and recently it was sold by the branch to a cement company which proposes to make artificial stone for building purposes, a new site has been purchased, and the contract let for building a commodious and well equipped church building. The artificial stone will be used in the erection of the new edifice. We certainly wish the Bevier Saints success in their undertaking, and trust they may soon be in their new home.

Conference began sessions on Saturday morning, at ten o'clock. The writer was chosen to preside; J. A. Tanner was associate. The usual routine of business was gone through with. A letter was read from Bishop Kelley in which the Graceland situation was mentioned. We were glad to see that as a result of the letter the conference took action looking to raising the portion assigned the district promptly. We look for the Northeastern Missouri District to do

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
Items from a Wanderer - - - - -	569
Original Articles:
The Creed of Science - - - - -	573
The Genealogy of Jesus Christ - - - - -	573
A River Mission - - - - -	576
Mothers' Home Column:
A Song of the Night - - - - -	577
Half Hours With Parents and Teachers—No. 5 - - - - -	577
Sunday-School Department:
The Reporting System - - - - -	578
Home Department Work - - - - -	579
A Note on Teaching - - - - -	579
Tell-Tale Affiliations - - - - -	579
The Boy Problem - - - - -	579
Letter Department:
Letters - - - - -	580
From the Land of the Southern Cross - - - - -	581
For Graceland - - - - -	582
Extracts from Letters - - - - -	582
Miscellaneous Department:
First Presidency - - - - -	583
The Bishopric - - - - -	583
High Priests - - - - -	583
Church Historian - - - - -	583
Appointment of Home Department Superintendent - - - - -	583

June.

BY SARA ANDREW SHAFER.

Full-leaved in pride of deepest green,
 The Earth in the sunshine basks serene.
 Where linden blossoms crowded cling,
 A thousand bees are murmuring.
 As showers drift from the freshened land
 With a seven-barred bow is the rain-cloud spanned
 The wild rose yields her subtlest scents
 Where haycocks pitch their fragrant tents.
 The longest day's too brief for June,
 The night too short for such a moon!

—From the Outlook.

its share and more towards liquidating the college debt.

At the election of officers at the afternoon session, Saturday afternoon, the officers for the past year were reelected with one exception. Bro. J. A. Tanner, who for nine years has acted as president, was relieved from that responsibility by the election of Bro. John Kaler.

At the evening hour the writer was the speaker. We tried to talk along lines which would give the Saints a better idea of their duties as members who desired to progress in the work. We occupied again on Sunday morning, to an audience which filled the building and gave splendid attention to the speaker.

On Sunday afternoon a social service was held, which was enjoyed by the Saints. At the close of the service Bro. Fred Mussel, who was in charge of the meeting, announced that the authorities of the First Congregational Church extended invitation to the conference to hold the evening session in their building, which is more commodious. The kind invitation was accepted, and at the evening hour the Saints and friends assembled in the new assembly room, quite filling it. Just one week before the building had been dedicated, and our people had given up one of their regular meetings to attend. That the use of the building should be extended to our people was pleasing to us, as being an evidence that our Bevier Saints had succeeded, by right living on the whole, in living down to a large extent the prejudice which may have existed against them. Bro. J. R. Lambert was the speaker of the evening, and he set forth in a clear and logical way his reasons for believing in the unchangeability of God. Before he closed he told in an unequivocal manner of some of the differences between us and the people of Utah, especially on some of the vital differences. His audience gave him good attention and we trust good was done. When he had closed, the writer, in response to request, spoke for a few minutes. We expressed appreciation of the courtesy which had been shown our people, and thought it a good omen.

Bevier is one of the largest and oldest mining camps in Missouri. Sr. Margaret Davis, now lying on a bed of affliction caused by a stroke of paralysis received three years ago, on being asked how old a place Bevier was, remarked that she came there in the early sixties and "there were two or three 'shacks' here then." It has been a mining camp so long that the coal immediately under the town was long ago all worked out in the only vein which has so far been worked. As a result, the shaft houses and works all lie outside of town from one half mile to several miles. The town is one of about three thousand inhabitants, and is rather more substantially built than the average mining camp. The social conditions of the town are considered exceptionally good, so that despite the fact that other coal camps offer better inducements in the way of wages, yet there are always plenty of applicants for work in Bevier mines. It is the most productive camp in the leading county in Missouri, so far as output of coal is concerned. The vein which is being worked lies but a short distance down, and is reached in most instances by shaft, though in some instances the slope method of working is used. Whether or not there are other workable veins below the one being worked, is a question which I could not get answered definitely. The opinion seems to be prevalent that there are other veins. If there is definite information those who possess it keep it closely to themselves. It may be to their interest to do so.

Bevier has been closely connected with the history of the Reorganization in Northeastern Missouri. Just when the branch there was first organized, I could not learn. It must have been early, however, for the Saints have until recently occupied a church building erected by them over thirty years ago.

We enjoyed our visit among the Saints of the Northeastern Missouri District, and were glad of the chance to visit Bevier. We found there an earnest band of Saints, though there is a spirit of indifference on the part of some. We were pleased to see some very earnest and energetic young people taking hold of the work, both in the church and the auxiliaries. From some of the young people we expect to hear good reports. Keep at work, young folks.

From Bevier we went to Lamoni to attend to some work demanding our attention before going to the conference of the Nauvoo District.

On Friday, June 10, 1904, I left Lamoni, bound for Argyle, Iowa, where the conference of the Nauvoo District was to be held on the 11th and 12th. Going by way of Humeston the train reached Keokuk in the evening about nine o'clock. As no train would go near Argyle till next morning, we went to the home of Bro. and Sr. H. R. Jacobs for the night. On Saturday morning we reached Argyle by way of train to Sand Prairie and team to Argyle. We were taken to the home of Charles W. Newberry, where we were very pleasantly domiciled during our stay in Argyle. Conference began sessions at half past ten in the morning, under the charge of Bro. J. W. Peterson, district president. The morning session was devoted largely to routine business. In the afternoon session the business was finished. The officers of the past year were all reelected. On the whole the business was transacted in a harmonious way, though on some questions the discussion became somewhat animated.

At the close of the afternoon session (which was a long one) there occurred an incident which ought to be of considerable interest to the Saints of the Nauvoo District. Some time ago Bro. George P. Lambert had been recommended to General Conference for ordination as bishop. The conference approved, but

Bro. Lambert asked for time for consideration. At the last General Conference Bro. Lambert's willingness to accept was made known, his selection was reapproved, and as a representative of the First Presidency the writer was present at the Argyle conference to perform the ordination. This was attended to at the close of the Saturday afternoon session of conference. The ceremony was characterized by due solemnity, and the Spirit's presence bore evidence of God's approval. Bro. George has, we believe, the entire confidence of the Saints of the Nauvoo District, and we feel his occupancy of office as bishop will result in great good to the Nauvoo District. Following the ordination several spoke of the evidence they had of the divinity of the call, and then by vote of the conference Bishop Lambert was sustained as financial agent of the district.

The session Saturday evening and those Sunday were devoted to preaching,—Sunday-school in the morning. J. B. Wildermuth was the speaker Saturday evening, the writer Sunday morning, Elbert A. Smith in the afternoon, and J. W. Peterson in the evening. The attendance at the preaching services was good.

Argyle is now the name for what was once called String Prairie, where there has until late years been a branch of the church almost from the very first of the Reorganization. Just when the branch was first organized it is hard to say. What is now the Nauvoo District used to be called the Nauvoo and String Prairie District, the latter part of the name coming from the String Prairie Branch, at one time a very important branch in the church. The conference this year was held in the union church building in Argyle, and Bro. F. M. McDonald, one of the most earnest Saints in the Nauvoo District, on Sunday morning walked from Montrose, nine miles away, in time to be at the morning session of Sunday-school. We were told, though, that Bro. McDonald is not without precedent for his action, for when the Nauvoo and String Prairie District used to hold conferences in the schoolhouse a mile west of where the union church now stands in Argyle, large numbers would walk out from Nauvoo to be in attendance. Are we less zealous now than in years past? Is Bro. McDonald the exception?

Only a few members of the church are left at Argyle. Many have moved away, and others have responded to the call, "Come home." However, the visiting Saints were cordially cared for by the citizens. We were made to feel welcome. We hope the work may be revived and another branch built up at Argyle.

On Sunday afternoon, in company with eight or ten of the Burlington Saints, we left Argyle. A wait of several hours in Ft. Madison gave some who desired it an opportunity to visit the penitentiary. Sr. Manifold, who was in the party, is a cousin of Deputy Warden Hallowell, and under the latter's guidance we went through the buildings. It being Sunday the prisoners were in their cells and not at work; and as we did not go into the cell-house we saw no prisoners, and saw the workshops only when not in operation. However, we were glad of the chance to see what is being done in the Ft. Madison prison; and, incidentally, we were glad when we were again without the walls. When we heard the lock click as the doors were locked behind us on going in, we felt that for a time at least we were prisoners. We tried to imagine to ourselves how we would feel if we knew that for another twenty-five years those grim walls would constitute the confines of our world; and we succeeded in our efforts at imagination so well that when those barred doors again clicked for our egress, we found ourselves without the walls with a genuine sense of relief. We had selected the number of years as twenty-five for the purposes of our attempt at imagination because we knew a prisoner then within the walls who was there under a sentence of that length. Well, we are really glad our life so far has been such as to justify the State in leaving us without those grim buildings; and we really believe that if we had no other incentive for right living, the fear of the monotonous life within prison walls would go far towards keeping us straight.

We got out at last, and reached the depot again. Later in the evening we took the train for St. Paul. At Burlington we bade good-bye to the Saints and continued our journey alone. Our train was due in St. Paul at eight o'clock in the morning, but an accident to the locomotive delayed us nearly two hours. At half past ten we boarded a train on the Great Northern Railway, Mr. Hill's pet road. It was a fine train, pulled by a powerful and fleet locomotive over a pretty good road, and we reached Fergus Falls, Minnesota, on schedule time. We were met at the train by Brn. Fred A. Smith and H. A. McCoy, and at once felt we were not among strangers. Going to the western part of the town we found the Minnesota Saints in reunion assembled.

The reunion is in full blast, under the presidency of Bro. F. A. Smith. The weather is all that could be desired, and the Saints are enjoying the opportunity of communing with each other and the blessed Spirit. The attendance from the outside is very light; but after all the greatest good from reunions is probably derived by the Saints. Of the reunion and the country we will write more later.

FRED'K M. SMITH.

FERGUS FALLS, Minnesota, June 15, 1904.

---

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

There has been no order of the church that we are aware of that defines the manner in which a bishop or bishop's agent should approach persons who are not members of the church, but whose companions are, with reference to the payment of tithing. This is a matter left to the discretion of the bishop or agent who has local knowledge of the situation. Husbands and wives who are members of the church have the right to object to companions paying tithing, if they see fit to do so; and a husband who should have objection would naturally object to a bishop or an agent laboring with his wife upon the subject of her payment of tithing when he was not present. It would seem to be the better way for the bishop or agent to approach the husband in a gentlemanly way and ask him if he had objection, and if he had to drop the matter, as he would have no right to interfere and make trouble in the household. It is presumed further that a wife who belongs to the church and who desires to pay tithing will in her own way secure the consent of her husband without involving the husband in a controversy with the bishop or agent. It has been said that a woman will have her way, either with a smile or a tear, if she sets her heart upon the accomplishment of a desirable object. It is not the business of the officers of the church to sow dissension between husbands and wives, whether such husbands and wives are members of the church or only one of them may be.

Advices from Bro. F. M. Smith, dated June 12, from Argyle, Iowa, in the Nauvoo District, inform us that Bro. George P. Lambert was ordained a bishop according to the direction of the April conference. Bro. Smith says of this: "Bro. Lambert assumes the office keenly feeling the responsibility. He seems to have the complete confidence of the district, and is thus in condition to do much good." He says further: "Some argument occurred on the college question, but a resolution was passed indorsing the action of the General Conference, yet at the same time approving of the efforts of the Bishopric to pay the debt. Active work has been begun towards raising the amount apportioned this district."

By note from Bro. Eli M. Wildermuth we learn that Bro. Richard M. Marks, of Marengo, Illinois, departed this life April 23, aged eighty years and thirteen days. Bro. Marks was one of the early defenders of the faith in Illinois many years ago, but for some reason ceased to be active as a church member, though he remained an honorable, upright citizen to the end of his life. The Marengo News for April 28, gave an excellent obituary notice of Bro. Marks' death, publishing his portrait with it. Three sons and two daughters survive him. His wife and the mother of his children died some six years ago. We had great respect for Bro. Marks, though he was no relation to Elder William Marks, that we are aware of.

Bro. C. C. Joehnk left Boston June 7 for his mission field to Germany. He reports to Bro. Heman C. Smith labor done in Iowa before leaving for the east, having made a new opening at Keystone, Iowa, which he reported to Bro. James McKiernan, missionary in charge. We hope Bro. Joehnk will meet with a good reception among his countrymen on the other side of the water in the Old World.

Bro. David R. Jones, Bishop's agent at Sheridan, Nevada, reports on May 28, that the Nevada District will be ready with its apportionment of the college debt by July 1. Thanks to the Nevada Saints! We are glad to see them stand along towards the head of the list in good works.

Bro. Henry Ellis, secretary of the Western Wales District, writing to the Presidency June 6, states that there are a good many of the Saints who have removed from Wales to the United States, some without taking their letters of removal. Their whereabouts is unknown. He suggests that it would be well for all who have thus removed to the United States who have not letters to write at once to the branches from which they have removed and secure letters, that they may join with and affiliate with the Saints in the branches where or near which they reside, that the records may be kept in correct condition. We suggest that the Saints knowing themselves to be without letters should accept this idea and attend to the matter.

The Durango, New Mexico, Democrat of late date has the following in reference to the death of a Mormon bishop at Fruitland, New Mexico: "Attendance at the funeral of Bishop J. L. Ashcroft of the Mormon church at Fruitland, New Mexico, Sunday, was the largest in point of attendance ever held in San Juan County, New Mexico, there being over one hundred and twenty vehicles in line. The bishop was killed by a blast while working in a coöperative ditch last week and he was well fixed as to family, having left three wives and nineteen children. The bishop was active in church and coöperative work, and his loss is very keenly deplored by those of his faith in the land of the ripening grape and purple of the apricot's bloom. There is no particular danger of race suicide in the New Mexico country where one good Mormon bishop leaves three wives, nineteen living children, and a bill of lading, or expected visit from the stork with two more. The San Juan valley is the one spot where that divine injunction to multiply and replenish is observed in a coöperative and strenuous way."

In another column may be found an ad. of the E-B Realty & Brokerage Company. This firm is composed of Bro. E. Etzenhouser, formerly of the Ensign, and Bro. W. S. Brown, secretary of the Independence Stake. 24-2t.

Original Articles.

THE CREED OF SCIENCE.

By a close examination of the three standard text-books of our faith, viz., the Bible (correctly translated), Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, there will be found therein enjoined every moral and ethical principle known to human experience.

It is absolutely impossible for a man to be a Christian unless he is a moral man in the common conception of that term. The very first object of our faith is to develop man in the highest attainment of moral excellence. Our spiritual proficiency depends upon our moral quality. A man surely can not be good in the sight of God who is not morally good in the sight of reasonable and consistent men. In every human being is found a moral sense which is largely if not entirely the result of environment or heredity. The conscience of man is the imitation or reflection of the current opinion of his progenitors modified more or less by his associations.

True Christianity is not designed in its teaching, to disregard any principle of fact, nor to exclude any moral which man regards as a safe guide to his conduct, the result of his acquired judgment enlightened by his experience. The object of true Christianity is to advance mankind morally and mentally; to take man just as he is, duly recognizing every good he has acquired, and advance him to the attainment of all the morals revealed in human experience and divine wisdom.

R. G. Ingersoll, the great agnostic, has interpreted the "creed of science" and "Religion of reason" to be:

To love justice, to long for the right, to love mercy, to pity the suffering, to assist the weak, to forget wrongs and remember benefits—to love the truth, to be sincere, to utter honest words, to love liberty, to wage relentless war against slavery in all its forms, to love wife and child and friend, to make a happy home, to love the beautiful in art, in nature, to cultivate the mind, to be familiar with the mighty thoughts that genius has expressed, the noble deeds of all the world, to cultivate courage and cheerfulness, to make others happy, to fill life with the splendor of generous acts, the warmth of loving words, to discard error, to destroy prejudice, to receive new truths with gladness, to cultivate hope, to see the calm beyond the storm, the dawn beyond the night, to do the best that can be done and then to be resigned—this is the religion of reason, the creed of science. This satisfies the brain and heart.—Foundations of Faith.

No genuine follower of Christ would reject any principle mentioned in this statement and his belief in Him would be his highest incentive to enable him to carry it out. On every hand is recognized the need of these practical virtues; but while man has recognized their need he has widely differed as to the means of their accomplishment. The divine idea is that man by giving heed to the voice of a superior intelligence gradually grows into the perfection of character. This surely can not be done promiscuously; it must be the result of a definite process—by the operation of law in our life. Every example of genius, every manifestation of individual worth, represents effort, and without effort would not have been accomplished. If man does not labor to overcome the sins that so easily beset him, he will in some unseemly way be overcome by them.

In other words, if he does not use his vigilance, if he does not exercise himself, if he does not hold himself in virtue, he is sure to slide to the abyss of degradation and woe. The gospel is an unquestioned factor in the restraint of evil; its holy precepts teach man the sinfulness of sin. Jesus Christ is the model after which all the world may pattern. He is the shepherd of the soul, the author of the faith, the captain of our salvation, the high priest of our profession. He who follows him will ultimately be led to the comprehension of all truth, whether it be through the ingenuity of men as represented in science or the wisdom of God as revealed by the spirit of truth.

W. E. LARUE.

THE GENEALOGY OF JESUS CHRIST.

There appeared some time since an article in the columns of the HERALD bearing upon the above subject, attempting to account for the differences between the two genealogical tables presented by Matthew and Luke. After carefully reading the two tables, one in Matthew, first chapter, the other in Luke, third chapter, together with genealogical tables given in the Old Testament and carefully comparing what has been offered by some of the best Bible students, I have arrived at the following conclusion: That they are two wholly different tables, prepared by these two authors independent of each other, and to prove two different points, namely, that Jesus was a literal descendant of Abraham and David, and that he was the legal royal heir of the throne of David.

This we find clearly set forth, in both the manner and object of their respective works. Matthew was beyond question a Jew and seems to have written his record of the life of Christ principally for his fellow countrymen, and from that standpoint, as he is most voluminous in his quotations from the Old Testament. He represents the Savior as the fulfillment of the hopes of Israel, the promised Messiah. Matthew seems to have gained his information as to the childhood of Jesus from Joseph, Mary's husband, as he refers more particularly to the things that happen as having been made especially to Joseph. The first mention of Mary is as the espoused bride of Joseph, then the angel informs Joseph of the son who shall be born to her, and again in a vision Joseph is informed of Herod's anger, and when Herod was dead it was Joseph, according to Matthew, who was warned to return to Palestine; in all this but a passing mention of Mary, his mother.

Now concerning the history of Jesus by Luke, we see an entirely different man and hence a different work. Luke was most likely of Gentile origin, and wrote his book much later than did Matthew, as the former is said to have written his work about A. D. 42, while it is quite certain that Luke did not write till A. D. 60. He wrote his book for use among the Gentiles, and being a fine scholar gave more of the particulars, going into detail often. He scarcely ever used Hebrew terms or names. His appeals to the scripture of the Old Testament are very few, and his knowledge of the Savior's family and childhood seem to have been received either directly or indirectly from his mother, Mary. The first mention of Joseph by Luke is as the promised husband of Mary, and it is to Mary that the angel makes the announcement of the approaching birth of Jesus. When the shepherds returned from their watch in the fields on the night of his birth, according to Luke they came and found Mary and Joseph. He records the prophecy of Simeon and he "said unto Mary." And he records only what was said by his mother to him in the temple when his parents found him reasoning with the doctors.

That the two genealogies are different is apparent upon a casual reading; but when it appears that both give a direct male line of descent from David to Joseph, the foster-father of Jesus, the difficulty begins. Many attempts have been made to reconcile these two statements, which seem to be so much at variance. Some of these attempts have been quite successful in part, but the controversy is still waged by critics. One thing is sure: the matter was understood by the early Christians and the Jews of the first three centuries, as no attack was made upon the evangelists till the middle of the third century upon this point, and that too when the documents were at hand to verify or disprove them.

We may therefore conclude that the difference arises by not clearly understanding the object, nature, and construction of the two documents. The following is to the point:

Whatever view may be taken of the genealogies in the gospels according to Saint Matthew and Saint Luke—whether they be regarded as those of Joseph and Mary (as supported by Weisner and Weis), or which seems more likely, as those of Joseph only, marking his natural and legal descent from David, or vice versa—there can be no question, that both Joseph and Mary were of the royal lineage of David. Most probably the two were nearly related.—Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah, Eidersheim, vol. 1, pp 148, 149.

Matthew's genealogical line is an attempt to show the Jews of his day that Jesus was the legal royal heir to the throne of David. He gives three series of fourteen generations each: from Abraham to David, from David to the captivity, and from the captivity to Jesus Christ. In order to arrange it thus he had to omit several generations, as Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah, omitted between Joram and Uzziah, and makes Salathiel the son of Jechonias, when Jeremiah says Jechonias was childless. (See Jeremiah 22: 18, 30.) By reference to genealogies otherwheres we find Salathiel was a son of Neri or Neriah, and was only an heir, or inherited legally the rights of the childless Jechonias. And further he gives the name of Eleazar as the father of Matthan, who evidently is the same as Matthat of Luke, chapter 3, verse 24, which is seventeen generations, leaving out the name of Resa (see Rhesa), according to Luke from Zorobabel, and Matthew gives only eight. Matthew is giving only the royal line of inheritance, the possessors of the regal titles, and as Matthan was the next one to possess the royal estates and be counted an heir after the death of Eleazar he puts him in line, not of lineal descent, but line of inheritance. Hence Joseph, the grandson of Matthan, son of his oldest son Jacob, was the heir; and Jesus as the foster-son of Joseph was heir to the throne of his father David, through this series of successors of David.

Now let us look at the genealogy given by Luke. He, not content with making him son of David or Abraham, shows that he is the descendant of the common father of the race, Adam, the father of the Gentile as well as the Jew. This is in accord with the scope of his work to the Gentiles. And, dealing with a people who could comprehend the descent through a woman, gives the Lord's natural lineal descent through his mother, Mary, the cousin of Joseph. Doctor Schaff defends this position in his Dictionary of Biblical, Historical, Doctrinal, and Practical Theology; article "Genealogy of Jesus Christ": "Matthew writing for Jews gives the succession by male line. Luke writing for Gentiles gives the literal descent of Jesus through Mary, a daughter of Heli, a descendant literal of David."

John Henry Blunt says in his Dictionary of Doctrinal and Historical Theology, article "Mary": "The association between the names, Jehoiachim, Jachim, Eliachim, and Heli, has led many to infer that Saint Luke gives the genealogy of the Blessed Virgin and not of her husband, Joseph. She is also spoken of as the daughter of Heli in the Jewish Talmud."

McClintoc and Strong, in volume 5 of their exhaustive work, say in article "Mary": "Mary, the wife of Joseph and lineal descendant of David. (Matthew 1.) Her genealogy is given by Luke in order to prove the truth of the prediction which had foretold the descent of the Messiah from Adam, through Abraham and David."

The early Christian fathers gave as the name of Mary's parents Joachim (Heli) and Anna. Thus we have Mary as the daughter of Heli the son of Matthan or Matthat, which would make Joseph the son of Jacob as her cousin, and son-in-law of Heli, and reconcile the question of his two fathers, and give us the following as the genealogy of Jesus Christ: (See Luke 3: 23-38.)

1. Adam.
2. Seth.
3. Enos (Enosh).
4. Cainan.
5. Mahalaleel.
6. Jared.
7. Enoch.
8. Methuselah.
9. Lamech.
10. Noah (Noe).
11. Shem.
12. Arphaxed (Cainan of Luke 3 omit).
13. Salah.
14. Eber (Heber).
15. Peleg (Phalac).
16. Reu (Ragau).
17. Serug (Saruch).
18. Nahor (Nachor).
19. Terah (Thara).
20. Abraham.
21. Isaac.
22. Jacob.
23. Judah (Juda).
24. Pharez (Phares).
25. Hezron (Esrom).
26. Ram (Aram).
27. Aminadab.
28. Nashon (Naason).
29. Salma (Salmon).
30. Boaz (Booz).
31. Obed.
32. Jesse.
33. David about B. C. 1083.
34. Nathan about B. C. 1032.
35. Mattatha about B. C. 1008 (omit Menan and Melea, as they are the same as Mattatha, only optional spellings).
36. Eliakim about B. C. 984.
37. Jonan about B. C. 959.
38. Joseph about B. C. 935.
39. Juda (Adaiah) about B. C. 901.
40. Simeon (Maaseiah) about B. C. 886.
41. Levi about B. C. 862.
42. Matthat about B. C. 838.
43. Joram (Jorin) about B. C. 813.
44. Eliezer about B. C. 789.

45. Jose about B. C. 741.
46. Er about B. C. 720.
47. Elmodam about B. C. 700.
48. Cosam about A. C. 682.
49. Addi about B. C. 663.
50. Melchi (Maaseih) about B. C. 644.
51. Neri or Neriah about B. C. 620.
52. Salathiel about B. C. 590 (heir of Jechonias of Matthew 1: 11, 12).
53. Zerubbabel (the Resah or Prince) about B. C. 560.
54. Joanna (Hannah of 1 Chronicles) about B. C. 520.
55. Judah (Obadiah) about B. C. 492.
56. Joseph (Schechaniah) about B. C. 450.
57. Semei (Schemiah) about B. C. 410.
58. Mattathias about B. C. 375 (omit Maath as it is same as Mattathias, only optional spelling).
59. Naggai (Neriah) about B. C. 350.
60. Esli (Eloenai) about B. C. 320.
61. Naum (Johanum or Nahum) about A. C. 285.
62. Amos about B. C. 255.
63. Mattathias about B. C. 225.
64. Joseph about B. C. 195.
65. Janna (Jannah) about B. C. 165.
66. Melchi about B. C. 135.
67. Levi about B. C. 105.
68. Matthat (Matthan of Matthew 1) about B. C. 75 (heir of Eleazar of Matthew 1: 15).
69. Jacob about B. C. 54, or Heli about B. C. 42.
70. Joseph about B. C. 33, or Mary about B. C. 21.
71. Jesus Christ born B. C. 4.

I present here a chart showing the family relations of the apostles and Jesus Christ, arranged from the New Testament Scriptures: Matthew 1:1-25; 4:12, 13, 21; 10:2-4; 12:46, 47; 17:1; 20:20-23; 27:56; Mark 1:19, 20; 3:14-19, 30-32; 5:37; 15:40, 41; 16:1; Luke 2:4-7; 3:22-38; 4:22; 6:13-16; 8:19, 20; 24:10; John 2:11-13; 7:2-4; 19:25-27; Acts 1:13, 14; 12:2; 15:4-29; 1 Corinthians 9:5; 15:7; Galatians 1:18,19; together with data collected from the writings of Hegesippus A. D. 160, found in Eusebius' Historia Ecclesiastica, volume 3, chapters 20 and 22; volume 4, chapter 22; Tertullian in the De Monogamia 8, of A. D. 220, and a dictionary of the Bible edited by James Hastings, New York, 1903; also S. Baring Gould's Lives of Saints.

THE HOLY FAMILY.

A RIVER MISSION.

Often as I have stood on the banks of the great waterway which divides the United States, from Minnesota to the Gulf of Mexico, has the thought suggested by the above heading occurred to me; and in converse with others I find that I am not the only one who has thought along this line.

Several years ago when the writer first entered the missionary field, I labored in Grant County, Wisconsin, said county lying on the river, and a little later I labored in Pepin County, it also being one which is bounded on the west by the Mississippi River, and while so laboring in missionary work have at times met with the following experience: After having preached a few sermons, some one, sometimes a man, sometimes a woman, will come to the preacher and say, "Well, Elder, that's all right, that sounds familiar, that has the old ring." And then of course we begin to inquire, "What do you mean, why do you say it has the old ring?" and we are answered, "Why, my people once lived at Nauvoo and belonged to the church. I was taught that when I was a child."

"Now," says some one, "why should this experience be met with here in these counties along the river more frequently than elsewhere? And we believe the question easy to answer. Be it remembered that when the breakup of the church occurred at the time of the assassination of Joseph Smith, and the scattering of the Saints occurred, the Mississippi River was not then, as now, traversed on either bank by railroads with their fast flying express trains, but about the only available means of travel in these regions was by water, and the most natural thing occurred: Those Saints who did not become the dupes of Brigham Young and follow his lead in the Utah exodus, naturally drifted up and down the river and settled along its shores in the adjacent country and engaged in the common pursuits of humanity. And hence it is that we find their posterity, and even once in a while an old-timer who has followed the drift and lived in seclusion; and while he may have lost all his bearings so far as the church is concerned, and having little or no knowledge of the Reorganization, yet his first love for gospel truth has not died and the memory of his past experience when that truth came to him and he was permitted to enjoy the Spirit which confirmed that truth, has never left him. Hence when they hear the old story told again it brings the old-time memories back and they are ready to say, "That is the gospel, that has the old-time ring."

The foregoing, together with other reasons which might be presented, appears to the writer sufficient to at least awaken thought as to the possibility of taking some steps toward establishing what might be called a "River Mission." Many people who have means are nowadays providing themselves with what are called "house-boats" and spending a portion of the summer months on the river. In these house-boats whole families, and perhaps one or more invited guests, live and enjoy the comforts of life as much as if in their homes. Of course with the above-named class all this is done for pleasure, but why could not some such means be used for the spread of the gospel?

The writer is of the opinion that if some one interested in this matter and who lives in some of the larger towns or cities along the river were to keep a little lookout for chances some small river-boat might be found which could be bought for considerably less than first cost, which could be fitted up with no great expense so that it would accommodate two elders and their wives, making a party of four, who could comfortably live on the boat, which, in addition to being a home, would also be a means of traveling from place to place. A gospel tent could be carried on said boat to be used for holding the services in, and thus a means would be provided by which every hamlet, town, and city along this great waterway could be reached and the gospel story told, and we have no doubt, many of the posterity of the old-time saints who have drifted up and down the river, as well as others, could have the opportunity to have the gospel preached to them.

There are some points in favor of such a mission it might not be out of place to mention, as follows: Missionaries who are so situated that they could engage in a mission of this kind, would be at home all the time, for the boat would be the home, and they and their families could live on the boat as cheaply as elsewhere, and the cost of power to propel the boat from place to place is not very extravagant in these days of low-priced gasoline engine-power.

The writer has recently visited one of the large launch and boat-building concerns in this city, and a Mr. King very kindly took us through the shops, showing us many of the different styles of naphtha launches. He told us that they had practically demonstrated that it required one pint of common stove gasoline per horse-power per hour. Estimating from this basis it will be seen that an eight horse-power engine would only cost about thirteen cents per hour for propelling power, which is not very expensive.

Another point worthy of consideration is the length of time which it would be possible to occupy in this kind of a mission. During the summer months it would be possible anywhere along the river, but to work to the best advantage for the greater part of the year no doubt it would be best to labor in the Northern States until the cool weather gives warning of the approach of winter, then start down-stream keeping ahead of the cold weather, and thus the greater part of the year would be available for missionary work, and that, too, in a comparatively new and untried field without incurring any great amount of expense.

We do not forget that the church has once tried the experiment of a mission-boat which cost considerable money and which unfortunately proved a failure so far as missionary work was concerned; but the above suggested proposition is along altogether a different line. It would not cost anywhere near the amount the island mission-boat did, nor is it for one to sail the high seas, neither is it one which it would require skilled sailors to navigate, but two men with an ordinary degree of mechanical intelligence,—and many of our elders are practical engineers, as well as good preachers, who would be amply qualified to furnish the mechanical skill necessary to the undertaking of such a mission.

Brethren, this is only a suggestion. If some of the rest of you have thought along these lines let us hear from you.

CHAS. H. BURR.

CLINTON, Iowa.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

A Song in the Night.

Be still, my heart, and rest!
Upon the streamlet's breast
The moon is shining in a silver flood,
And o'er the flower-strewn sod,
Gleaming with myriad diamond dew-drops dressed—
Be still, my heart, and rest!
Rest, sweetly rest, and sleep,
Nor let care longer keep
Thee fettered in its weary binding thrall.
Trust thou the Lord of all
To rule thy planning in his love most deep.
Rest, sweetly rest, and sleep!
Sleep on, nor dream of fear,
Thy Father standeth here
Who watcheth o'er these fragile lives of ours,
As o'er the birds and flowers;
In day or darkness He abideth near—
Sleep on, nor dream of fear!—A. Mabel Young.

Half Hours With Parents and Teachers.—No. 5.

A SERIES OF FAMILIAR TALKS INTENDED FOR USE IN LOCALS
AND HOME CLASSES.

Edited by the Daughters of Zion.

GOSPEL TEACHING IN THE HOME.

(Concluded from last week.)

But teaching by example is not enough. Children must understand for themselves the truths which produce a godly life and by which salvation is secured to old and young. The Lord tells us to teach them "the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ, the Son of the living God, and of baptism, and of the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands." We may be accustomed to think of these things simply as first principles, thinking, too, that there is very little which a child can understand. But consider how much is included in them.

"Faith in Christ, the Son of the living God." The fact that there is a God who lives furnishes a theme for much thought and many lessons. Faith in God leads to faith in Christ, his Son, as the Savior, the one sent to carry out his purpose of giving happiness and eternal life to all who will receive them. Jesus lived and died that we might be saved, but he can not save us except as we strive to become free from sin and follow in the way which he has shown. The angel said of him, "He shall save his people from their sins," but this does not mean that they may continue in their sins and yet escape from the consequences because they believe that he will save them. The only living, saving faith, is that which believes all that he taught and causes one to put in practice the rules of conduct which he gave. He is "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." He bears the sin of Adam, so that we have not to answer for that, but evil is in the world and every soul has its tendencies to sin. These must be overcome before the soul can be fitted to dwell with God and Christ where sin can not enter.

In order to drive out the evil and cultivate the good which are within all, the doctrine of repentance needs to be understood, not simply as preparing one for baptism, but as a principle to be applied as often as one is wrong in thought, in word, or in act. True repentance is a turning from evil to that which is good. "A godly sorrow worketh repentance," but sorrow alone is not enough. It must cause one to turn from the wrong, seek to avoid it in the future, and where it has affected others, to atone, so far as it is possible, for the wrong done to them.

The Lord requires parents to teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before him. They should be taught to love the Lord; not simply told to love him, but led to see reasons why they should do so; to be thankful to him and to know that it is right to speak their thanks to him; to trust in him, to be in the habit of going to him with their troubles as to a sympathizing friend who really is near them and does hear their prayers.

The definite purpose of teaching children to walk uprightly before the Lord, lifts the training of them far above such treatment as many parents give, in spasmodic ordering and threatening, allowing them to have their own way or forcing them to give it up in order that the parent may have his way, without the real purpose in view, of developing right character in them which shall be to the honor of God and their own salvation. "Before the Lord" implies a consciousness that the eye of the Lord is upon us and we walk uprightly when not bending to the wrong, but keeping erect in the choice of right. To see that children choose the right is the duty of the parents, for only as one's powers are exercised do they become strong, and this requires patient, never relaxing vigilance, with wisdom which can not be sufficient except by the blessing of the Lord.

In order to know what is right they must be given light. Read to them, reason with them, explain matters to them as fast as they are able to understand, and as soon as they can, encourage them to read the word of God for themselves. Do not force them to read, for this may give them a dislike for it. It is a great mistake to think the Bible teaching which children get in Sunday-school to be enough. It should be regarded only as a help, and parents should realize that the best that faithful teachers would do for their children can not be accomplished unless their home training has prepared them to receive it. Older brothers and sisters can be a help to the younger ones, and any who are inmates of the home can find a way to help if they but will. "I like to sleep with you, Auntie," said one little girl, "you tell me so many good things after we go to bed."

Many mothers are so busy that they think they can not take time to read with their children, but is it not a duty and would it not be better sometimes to let other things get crowded out rather than this? There is not this same excuse for neglecting to talk to them of these things which they need to know, for right along in the daily round, there are constantly recurring times for a few words of helpful counsel, with now and then a time for longer talks. How many times a little gentle advice,

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The Reporting System.

with loving interest in the affairs of a child will turn him to the right, when stern command or railing complaint will fail to this end. Pathetic are the words of a neglected child who said, "Grandma, you are the only one who talks to us about God and being good."

There is so much to teach that it can not be given all at once. It must be given here a little and there a little as is suited to the understanding and needs of the child. And where, we ask, can gospel teaching be made more effective than in the home, where so much of life is spent, where they who learn may turn direct from the teaching to its application? In the simple things of their early life children may learn lessons in being patient, cheerful, sympathetic, self-sacrificing, and forgiving; may learn to be moved by kindly, helpful love, and to be obedient and truthful.

Absolute truthfulness should be required of them and they be dealt with in truth. The habit of frightening children to make them be good, or of telling them untruths even in jest can not be too strongly denounced. Every care ought to be taken to foster in them the love of truth. And withal, whatsoever things are pure and lovely are the ones to which they should be led to give place in thought, in speech, and in action.

As children become acquainted with the life of Christ and his teachings, it is easy to show them that they ought to be baptized, that the Lord has promised the gift of the Holy Ghost to those who thus obey him, and that his way of giving this gift is by the laying on of the hands of the men whom he has called to be his ministers.

In all these matters how many fathers seem to feel but little concern. Their responsibility is equal with that of mothers, though the fact of most fathers being so much away from home may somewhat modify it. But when the necessity of this gospel teaching is realized by parents how many ways and opportunities will present themselves in which to accomplish the desire of making their children familiar with the word of God, as well as to impress upon them the importance of doing his commandments.

These childhood years, how quickly they pass by! How soon are gone for ever! Can they be considered too precious? They are the seedtime. For what kind of harvest? Should not every parent be consecrated to this work of bringing up their children in light and truth? O what need to pray for guidance, for help to speak aright, for power, indeed, to do their whole duty by their children!

None can suppose that this duty is ended when the child, having reached the age of eight years, is ready to make open choice of serving the Lord. He "begins to become accountable." It is a gradual growth, and the two periods, that of the parents' responsibility and that of the child's, overlap each other. At first the parent is wholly accountable for the child. In later years, when his judgment is sufficiently developed, there comes a time when the child is entirely accountable for himself, but until that time, the guiding and restraining power of the parent is needed to be exercised.

And so long as there are any who need to learn, so long should gospel teaching be continued in the home.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Lucy Tyson asks the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of her son, that the Lord will restore him to health, the boy having been operated upon for disease in his limbs.

Sr. M. A. Hughes, Clarinda, Iowa, asks prayers of the Prayer Union that God will heal her of the eczema that is praying on her body.

Remember, in speaking to any one you want to help, the more earnest and unconscious of self you are the better you will help them.—T. T. Carter.

It is pretty generally understood that it is expected that each school will report to the district secretary at the close of each quarter in the year irrespective of when the district convention may convene; and that the district secretary is expected to report at the close of the calendar year to the general secretary. This system has met with almost universal favor and is considered by most of the workers as the simplest and best system of reporting that could be instituted. However, from the superintendent of one of our largest districts comes the question, "What is the use of so much reporting?" And upon investigation it was found that they made their quarterly reports and also additional reports to their conventions. And we, too, thought "What is the use of so much reporting?" The mistake was in making the reports to convention. The school secretary should report quarterly to the district secretary who will consolidate all reports from a school on hand whether it be one, two, or more and present such consolidated report to the district convention. Any report from the school direct to the convention would, therefore, be superfluous.

From the secretary of another of our largest districts comes the following: "I am delighted with the new system of reporting. Think it the best yet, and wish the Religio would adopt the same plan. It makes nicer work for the general and district secretaries." I think she voices the sentiments of a very large majority of the workers on the question. It simply needs to be tried to be appreciated. As it was, there was no system to the reporting further than to use a blank which secured a uniformity as to what items to report, but one was for one time and the next one for another time, and so it went. It was impossible to make out a correct annual report of the association from reports received. The last convention of some districts was in the preceding September and from that till as late as the twentieth of March. The periods covered were from three months to one year and often for thirteen or fourteen months. So with all these things in view it is not difficult to see how the system was the outgrowth of an absolute necessity. We are very much pleased with the success with which the reporting system has met. And we are hopeful that but little time will be required to get it properly before the workers, and once understood will be quite generally complied with.

The general librarian has adopted a corresponding plan of reporting to get items for her department of the work. The plan is identical with that of the secretary, differing only in items. Librarian report blanks are now ready to mail, one for the local librarian to district librarian, and one from the district librarian to the general librarian. The local librarian will report quarterly at the close of the quarter, and the district librarian will report annually at the close of the calendar year. It will be noticed that some of the items will be found in both the report of the librarian and of the secretary, but from the fact that the two departments of work are and probably always will be under the care of two persons or departments, it is a matter of necessity as well as convenience for each to have the information they contain. It may be necessary for the local librarian to get some items from the school secretary, but it is but a small task and will be cheerfully done by all earnest workers. You will, doubtless, hear from our general librarian, Sr. (Mrs.) E. Etzenhouser, 2401 East Twenty-fourth Street, Kansas City, Missouri, on this matter ere long. We trust you will kindly cooperate with her in whatever way she may suggest to make the work a complete success.

Home Department Work.

With the permission of Sr. Floralice Miller, Dunville, Ontario, we give a portion of a letter from her under date of March 16, 1903. It is more than a year old, but it contains some splendid hints or suggestions on the Home Department work so businesslike and practical that we are glad to give them to others hoping it may assist them to make the start. The portion referred to is as follows: "You may be interested to know what I have done, so I will endeavor to report to you, although results are small as yet, the work being new to us and my time being limited for this and other church work.

"First of all, supplies, leaflets, envelopes, etc., were obtained. Each school in the district was sent a letter explaining the work with a leaflet of instruction inclosed and was asked to take up the work as far as practicable; also to send me a list of the names of all the isolated Saints they knew of with their addresses. There are thirty-five schools in our district. Some of the missionaries were written to and sent leaflets of instruction and were requested to encourage the schools, where they visited to take up the Home Class work, and to furnish me with names of isolated Saints.

"This effort resulted in three schools starting the work and secretaries and missionaries sending in the names of sixty-eight isolated Saints. The majority of these have children, so when all are written to we will doubtless have a nice large district Home Class. I also watch the letters in the HERALD and Ensign for the names of isolated Saints.

"But now comes the discouraging part of it. Because of other district work I have as yet been unable to write all the names of prospective members on my list. It will require about forty letters yet, but these will be written this month if possible. As the quarterly reports are not in yet, membership in connection with these schools can not be given. There are seven scattered members who will report to me. I have written fifty letters in Home Department interests and distributed forty-eight leaflets of instruction.

"Yesterday I visited a school and explained the Home Class work and induced them to take it up."

Some have written me to know what would be a good plan to take the work up on. Here is a good one. Write or visit your schools and induce them to take it up, and work it. Ask your missionaries to assist you to reach the isolated members with it. Maybe they can get some members for you. Maybe they can give you the names and addresses of many you never heard of, or did not know of. Keep the work going after being started.

The work of this department of the General Sunday-school Association has been placed in the care of Mrs. T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa, to whom may be directed all correspondence on Home Department matters. You will probably soon hear from her on the matter. But do not wait for that. Go ahead and get the work introduced. Your school needs it and the people you visit need it. It is a good work when done.

A Note on Teaching.

True teaching is not merely telling facts; is far from making an exhibition of knowledge. It lies in helping the pupil to tell in his own words some definite idea such as he is able to comprehend; in putting into his mind something which will for ever remain there as part of his brain structure. The teacher must be content with the child's getting what he can assimilate, not all that she is able to give him. The best of teaching finds a large part of its inspiration in the suggestions of the moment, in the needs unconsciously betrayed by the class. One's knowledge of her pupils must be woven into preparation, yet she must have a reserve store to meet the unexpected which is very sure to rise with a live class. Though the teacher guides the work and influences those before her, yet the class guides her as well. To paraphrase from "Hiawatha":

"Though she bends them, she obeys them;
Though she draws them, yet she follows."

From another standpoint one may be an excellent teacher and yet not be able to answer readily every question as to facts that might be unearthed by wandering off on all possible side-excursions. If she has the purport of that particular lesson well fixed in mind, its relation to other lessons learned or to be learned, the relative importance of its points, and can then guide her class to the right destination, she is doing better by far than she could by trying to entertain those before her with interesting items.—Selected.

Tell-Tale Affiliations.

Surface indications are sometimes a better guide in morals than the deeps of ethical philosophy. One man will tell you why the theater, for instance, is indispensable; another will tell you, no less logically, why it ought to be dispensed with. The deeper the argument goes into foundation principles, the surer each becomes of his position. But here is a program of a pure play, from one of the best classes of theaters. At the end of the bill are several heavy-type advertisements, one of an "ale-house," one of a "saloon," one of a "bar," etc.—all in the neighborhood. These advertisements are not so likely to be found on the program of a symphony concert, an oratorio, or an illustrated lecture. Why not? Never mind the reason. Two things, the stage and the bar, are associated, and openly proclaimed to the audience. The fact ought to count, if arguments do not. Tendencies tell their own tale.—Sunday School Times.

The Boy Problem.

The Sunday-school must play an important part in the solving of the boy problem, which is claiming the attention of so many thinking men and women of to-day. The boy is recognized as a very important factor in the civilization of our day. We are understanding now as never before how true it is that the boy is father of the man, and we are realizing how true it is that during the season of youth more than at any other time the character assumes its permanent shape and color, and the young are wont to take their courses for time and eternity. We know that a great many boys—perhaps the average boy—do not take very kindly to the Sunday-school, and they must be dealt with wisely and tactfully if they are induced to become Sunday-school scholars. We realize with regret how small a percentage of the boys of to-day are regular attendants at church and Sunday-school. And we realize that boys who grow into manhood unchurched and entirely indifferent to the Bible and its teachings, are not likely to make good American citizens.

How to induce the boys to come to the Sunday-school, and to hold them after they are there, is one of the problems that have to do with the great boy question of to-day. It is a question that calls for much thought and prayer on the part of Sunday-school workers.—Selected.

July 8th.

The Nickel Plate Road will run an excursion to Chautauqua Lake and return at one fare for the round trip, from Chicago with return limit of August 9, by depositing ticket. Transportation good on any of our three daily trains. Cheap rates to other eastern points. No excess fare charged on any train on Nickel Plate Road. Individual Club Meals, ranging in price from 35c. to $1.00; also service a la carte, in Nickel Plate dining-cars. Write John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago, for particulars. Chicago city ticket offices, 111 Adams Street and Auditorium Annex, 'phones Central 2057 and Harrison 2208. (No. 11) 24-3t.

Letter Department.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, June 12, 1904.

Saints Herald: Through your columns information comes and goes. While some may wonder as to our whereabouts, we will give a few lines. After reëntering our appointed field of labor, purposed to put in a year surpassing our former efforts, just getting under good headway, we were called home by telegram, announcing the sickness of our only son. Patiently we watched night and day for three weeks, until the eve of June 3, when he fell asleep to wake no more, until the trump shall sound and the dead in Christ shall arise. Our son was sick one month from the time he took down, till he went to his rest. Loving hearts and hands did all within their power to restore, but his mission is ended. A vacancy—how we feel it! But the balm of the gospel of Christ will heal. Oft have we given comfort to those who mourn, but never have felt the loss, as in this our bereavement. Still, yet, affliction is in our family circle, three of our daughters are more or less afflicted; we pray and hope for the better.

To-day is Children's Day in our branch of the church, and Elder W. A. Smith, led seventeen precious ones into the waters of baptism. A goodly little army; all members of Sunday-school, or Religio. May they ever abide the covenant made this day.

As soon as possible we shall return to our field.

As ever we remain,

F. E. COHRT.

DES MOINES, Iowa, June 7.

Dear Herald: Once again we come to your columns to tell of the progress of this marvelous work, of the blessing of God upon his children, and the higher life to which the Saints in this part are coming.

The district conference convened in Des Moines June 4, 5, with Sunday-school and Religio conventions on the 3d. The Saints here were especially pleased to have our new church for the services, and a much larger building than we formerly had proved a necessity. The conference was the largest ever held in the district, as also one of the best in every way. The work of the different sessions began on Friday morning with Sunday-school and Religio prayer-meeting, and the conference opened Saturday morning with social service. Elders F. B. Blair, N. V. Sheldon, and F. A. Smith did the preaching. On Sunday three were baptized, two children blessed, and several sick administered to.

The Sunday-school on Sunday morning was pleasing to all. Old and young were present and all took active interest in the work. The sacrament was administered at the prayer service in the afternoon. At this session our new church building was just comfortably filled and the congregation was almost entirely Saints. It was indeed a pleasing and encouraging sight to see the church filled with Saints of this district, assembled together to worship the true God and feast at his table. At this service S. K. Sorrensen, our newly chosen district president, was ordained a seventy by direction of General Conference, under the hands of F. A. Smith and J. F. Mintun. The Comforter was present to a marked degree. F. B. Blair in speaking during the service said he had known the church when the General Conference was no larger as a body than the one before him, and at one time he personally knew every elder in the church.

At the conference held here in February, 1903, the voice of the Spirit was that of encouragement to the Saints, a promise of greater blessings, and an exhortation to greater faithfulness. The work in the district has made remarkable progress since that time. The Saints manifest greater faith, and a more earnest desire to say "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord," and do what the hands find to do. A specially increased interest is manifested on the part of a goodly number of those holding the priesthood. Of the elders most of them have been active. Several of them have grown old and their strength will not permit of vigorous work. Apostle F. A. Smith strongly urged the local ministry to do more, saying that never before had there been so many openings for preaching. More active work is demanded on the part of all.

There are many things pressed upon the mind from the observations made at this time. Progress must still be our watchword. We are growing into full manhood as a people, and have passed much of the childish years of the past. Things in the way of improvement that once were unnoticed now demand attention. The higher principles of the gospel that lead to the celestial law are being comprehended by us as a people. The unity which we expect to reach is now a realization of the near future. Wisdom is used by all. At the social service on Sunday two hours and a half were occupied and not a minute lost by waiting, nor long, wearisome testimonies given. At one time three were on their feet waiting to speak. One brother mentioned that this work was the grandest college ever established among men, and we all said, So it is.

This conference demonstrates more fully the fact that the Saints of the district will attend when the sessions are held convenient to all. The principle of making the conference a migratory body to different parts of the district and often the most remote parts to accommodate a few in that particular locality, is something of the past here, we believe; at least we hope so. The convenience of all should be the thought uppermost.

The coming reunion will be held in Des Moines, August 5-14. So centrally located as this will tend to make it a very large gathering, and we look for it to extend out to other parts of the State. Why not the Saints of the eastern and southern parts of the State come and join with us when they are not near any reunion meeting?

The Saints were able to entertain the large assembly present with no inconvenience. They were especially glad to have such a large number of visitors present, that they might worship with us in our new church building, that we might associate with them and they with us, that they might be able to see and more fully understand the conditions of the church here, the efforts that have been made, the obstacles we have to overcome in our work, and the very broad field that is before us to be cultivated.

The press of the city is very liberal in allowing us the use of their columns, and great good comes from this. Mention of the notices of the conference as they appeared in the city papers has been frequently made to the Saints by friends whom they would meet, thus showing that the people of the city know that we have a church organization and a house of worship here.

In gospel bonds,

A. A. REAMS.

FULTON, Kentucky, June 6, 1904.

Dear Herald: As I sat here just now reading in the Book of Mormon, I turned to page 535, and I feel impressed since reading the seventh and eighth chapters to write a few words to our valuable paper. I felt rejoiced while reading these chapters in one way, and in another I felt sad. I experienced the influence of God's Holy Spirit while reading, and I felt sad for this reason: Moroni says, "Behold I say unto you that ye shall have hope through the atonement of Christ and the power of his resurrection, to be raised unto life eternal; and this because of your faith in him according to the promise; wherefore, if a man have faith, he must needs have hope; for without faith there can not be any hope."

And again he says that we can not have faith and hope save we shall be meek and lowly of heart. After reading this, I began to fear that a great many of us did not have faith and hope as we ought to have, and even as we felt that we did have. When I look around among our people and see the extreme fashions they follow, appearing so stiff-necked and high headed, with so little that would indicate meekness and lowliness of heart, how sad it makes me feel. It is sometimes hard to tell from outward appearance, that they are of the church of Christ. We all know that the Scriptures teach us to dress modest as becometh women professing godliness. We also know that the Book of Mormon teaches us that we must be stripped of pride before we are prepared to meet God.

I was in company with one neighbor friend of mine some time past and she was just speaking of some of our people with whom she was well acquainted. She said, "It looks to me that if they wanted to exemplify their religion they would not use so much fine, unnecessary dress." I could not uphold our people in it, and I replied, "They ought not to do so. They know we are taught to forsake it." Dear Saints, do you not know it would cause the world to think better of us to dress in plainness? It causes us to seem hateful to them, to carry such high heads, yet claiming to be saints of God, and we can not blame them. Our influence would be much better were we to serve the laws and walk in humbleness. I have not had the great pleasure of meeting with many of you for some time; but I am anxiously waiting for our reunion time to roll round at Crossland, July 23. I hope and pray that I may be permitted to meet you all there. I hope for a large assembly of Saints to meet there, and feel assured that the good spirit will prevail in great degree. I hope that Bro. Heman C. Smith and Bro. Alexander Hale Smith will be with us. I feel this afternoon more than I have for some time that this is such a grand work. How I do thank God that I was led to receive light of the true gospel; it is a source of happiness and peace to me now. I feel so thankful that Bro. Snow and our dearly beloved T. C. Kelley were with us a few hours last week.

They spoke words that were so strengthening to me. I feel so glad that Bro. Kelley was sent here.

Dear Saints, I have felt heavily burdened for the past three months or more; I could not see the least ray of light. There seemed to be a power of darkness overshadowing me; but, thank God, I feel to-day, and of late, the renewal of his Holy Spirit which this eve makes me feel happy and free. I ask you all to pray for me and my family.

BOBBIE WILLIAMS.

CANTON, Illinois, June 14, 1904.

Editors Herald: The Kewanee District conference which just closed its session at Canton, was a most profitable gathering. A number of visiting elders were present; the spirit of peace and unity seemed to prevail throughout the entire session. Peace seemingly was the motto stamped on each one's countenance. On Friday, institute work was the order of the day, in charge of Elder J. A. Gunsolley. This being the first attempt at such work in the Kewanee District, it was met with hearty approval. The speakers throughout the session were Elders M. H. Cook, G. H. Hilliard, J. A. Gunsolley, and F. A. Russell, all being able expounders of the truth. On Sabbath morn a prayer service took place, where a number of beautiful prayers and testimonies were offered. In one testimony, that of Elder J. A. Gunsolley's, he related to the assembly the affliction that was preying upon his little one, although it had been administered to a number of times without much benefit being derived from the administration; still with tear-stained eyes, he said it did not shake his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. He still desired the Saints to remember the little one in their prayers, that the Lord might in his own due time see fit to restore it to its normal health. Oh, dear Saints, how beautiful it is to see such faith exercised; though afflictions may confront us, we know that there is that strength from on high given, so that we may be able to exercise within ourselves that unwavering faith. We are but weak creatures, if left to stand by our own strength. Lifting our hearts to the allwise Creator, may we say:

Thy saints are weak, but thou art strong;
There's all we want in thee,

And thou hast promised us thine aid,
When we united be.

At such gatherings as it has just been our privilege to attend, how sweet it is to see those of all ages to attend, young, middle-aged, and last of all but not least, those whose silvery locks denote to us, that not at many more such gatherings will they be privileged to attend, and mingle their voices in song and praise; may the remaining days of their lives be spent peacefully, their tottering footsteps be made secure on the gospel path-way that leads to life eternal, and when the great summons, "Child, come home" to them is given, may they enter into that sweet and peaceful rest, and then just a few short days, and we that are now just in the prime of life, if faithful, will be looking forward to the day when we shall once again meet to part no more.

IDA L. JONES.

From the Land of the Southern Cross.

Editors Herald: The people of Australia seem to be rather remiss in writing to these columns. Personally, I have neglected to write often, believing that my silence would be taken as a sign that I was busy. However, since Bro. Alexander Smith has reported upon our desolate (?) country in the "Autumn Leaves" the latter thought is robbed of any virtue it might have possessed. Now I shall deem it my duty to periodically inform the HERALD of my safety while I remain in this poverty-stricken (?) country. There is little doubt but that the readers of Autumn Leaves will be most solicitous regarding the welfare of their brethren in Australia, and of the poor missionaries who are struggling in this "never-never" land. We must be considered a meek, humble, long-suffering, and enduring people in view of the fact that we remain here without complaining. Still to us our lot does not seem particularly hard. Perhaps we are used to "hoeing a hard row." We call our land "Sunny Australia," and the American Saints no doubt sometimes sing of the glorious things they will enjoy "In that Sunny land."

American Saints, take notice, that "Sunny land" is not Australia!

But joking aside, our land, though possessing many disadvantages, is a beautiful land. Still we do not think that it is the only beautiful land. Like all lands it has its ugly, barren spots. It can not, however, like some lands, maintain its beauty and fertility throughout a sustained drought. We depend wholly and solely upon the rain for our water supply, for we have no high mountain ranges capped with perpetual snow from which to irrigate, so during a long drought our land is "a land of sin, sweat, and sorrow," especially in the districts that are ugly and barren under normal conditions. These were the only districts visited by Bro. Smith and Gould. Then it must be remembered that Bro. Smith has already admitted a severe attack of homesickness. Under such conditions environments are irksome, and the place for which we long takes on additional beauty—distance lends enchantment to the view. Woe betide the environments of a homesick man, when he escapes them. No doubt that is why our beautiful land, two million, nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand square miles at least, of which he never saw, has fared so badly at the hands of our respected Patriarch. I shall take a lesson from our brother's reminiscences, and when I visit America, and sustain a severe attack of homesickness, will endeavor to keep away from the bad-lands of Arizona[?] and other ugly places in America, so that I may be able to write nicely of a country not my own. Our brother's view of Australia is in striking contrast to the experience of a certain "Yankee" who it is said settled down in Australia under rather favorable conditions. One day he met a friend, and in the course of conversation intimated that he had had an awful dream the previous night.

"Did you dream you were dead?" asked his friend.
"A barr'l-full of trouble, mor'n that," replied he.

"Did you dream you were in hell and that the Devil had you?" again queried his friend.

"Ah, that doesn't begin to describe the awful thing!" said he. "Well, what did you dream!" asked his friend.

"Wa-a-a-1, guess I dreamed I was back in 'Murakey' again!" was the unexpected reply.

Mr. Editor, please keep a watchful eye upon the writing of Bro. Smith, for he picked up some dreadful sayings while in Australia, and if you print many more of them you may have your papers all stopped in the mails. Towards the end of his article in March Autumn Leaves, he wrote something about a "blooming b— liar." Now the word denoted by the dash is one of Australia's worst swear words, and it is vetoed in literature. Say "blanky" instead next time, brother, and we will know what you mean. The work is making steady, but sure progress in this land, notwithstanding its many disadvantages.

Yours in bonds,

WALTER J. HAWORTH.

GEELONG, Victoria, Australia, May 12, 1904.

For Graceland.

Bishop E. L. Kelley received a letter from Mr. Charles Zerr, of New York City, about March 10, inclosing ten dollars for the Kirtland Temple Fund, and on June 7, was in receipt of the following:

Dear Brother Kelley: I now have the privilege of addressing you as such; when I sent you my Kirtland Temple Fund offering I did not have the right to. Inclosed you will find ten dollars for Graceland College, hoping and praying that this may prove an incentive for others to give and that speedily."

Bro. A. T. Davis, Rosedale, Kansas, sends one dollar for the College from himself and mother and writes: "We do not want to see the College closed."

Bro. A. A. Richardson, Oregon, Missouri, in sending in his offering to the College, writes: "My prayer is for Graceland's success, and will add, Long live the institute of learning."

Elder Levi Gamet, Bishop's agent of Central Nebraska District, sends in a remittance from Bonesteel, South Dakota, of twenty-three dollars, and writes: "I baptized eight here, yesterday, children of Saints."

Bro. G. O. Sellers, Bishop's agent of Alabama District, writes: "Inclosed find money order for sixteen dollars and eighty-five cents that I have raised for Graceland College. I send this on that you may use it. I shall keep trying to raise and will send it on as fast as I get it."

HONOLULU, Hawaii, June 1, 1904.

ELDER E. L. KELLEY, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: Your favor of May 16 came to hand a few days ago, and in reply thereto I am pleased to inform you that this mission will provide its proportionate amount of the fund required to pay off the Graceland College debt. I sincerely hope that the plan you have adopted will be the means of clearing off the debt and that hereafter you will meet with no financial difficulty in the running of the College.

Yours in the gospel hope,

G. J. WALLER.

BISHOP E. L. KELLEY, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: We received word from Bishop C. A. Parkin, of San Francisco, that the amount to be raised for Graceland by the Berkeley Branch was eight dollars and ninety-five cents. We immediately went to work, with the result that you will find inclosed a postal money order for ten dollars. We are not blessed with riches here, but a certain consolation comes over us in the thought that we have done our little part.

Sincerely,

SAMUEL WYATT.

FAIRLAND, I. T., June 8, 1904.

BISHOP E. L. KELLEY, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir and Brother: Inclosed you will please find order for five dollars for Graceland College. I have always been opposed to Graceland until a short time ago when the good Lord saw fit to show me Graceland in a dream. I saw Graceland encircled with a bright light and a great crowd of people on the inside of the circle and I saw that those that were in the circle were those that had paid in their mite to assist the College, but on the outside of the circle was a great crowd and I knew some of them, and they were those that had not assisted in the College debt. My husband was standing with his feet on the inside of the circle; he has always wanted to assist but I was not willing. But since I saw I was on the outside of the circle I have been satisfied that it is my duty to assist as when I saw the College in the circle of light and myself on the outside I looked down at my feet and saw a figure 5 and I realized unless I paid my part I would still remain on the outside. And not desiring to be left out I thought it best to do my duty, so I take pleasure in sending this as I am sure it is my duty to send it for myself and family.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. J. T. RILEY.

Sister Uncafer writes to Bro. R. M. Elvin from Apollo, State not given, as follows: "I feel I ought to tell the sisters how I earned a dollar for Graceland, last summer, and perhaps others can act on the suggestion. I made a little garden last spring and put out ten or a dozen tomato plants. They produced wonderfully. I sold one dollar's worth for Graceland, and we had an abundance for a family of five, besides one bushel in the fall for pickles. The lady who bought the most of my tomatoes, last summer, came in the other day to see how my garden was prospering, and told me her mother said my garden was blessed of the Lord, because it was for the gospel. My little garden is coming on nicely. I feel I shall make one dollar and perhaps more for Graceland, this summer. Inclosed is one dollar in advance for Graceland."

HARROW, Ontario, June 9, 1904.

Dear Herald: As it is June it is high time for all Saints to cast in their mites for the relief of Graceland. May the Lord put it into our hearts not to allow such a grand enterprise to fall through. Please find inclosed one dollar to help liquidate the debt.

ORLANDO O. HALSTEAD.

OAKLAND, California, June 8, 1904.

Editors Herald: On last Sunday, according to previous appointment, we made an appeal to our branch in behalf of Graceland, at the closing of the sacrament service. Despite our sentiment against introducing business at Sunday services, yet in this we felt entirely justified. Our portion of the assessment was sixty-nine dollars and forty cents. We started the subscription at five dollar amounts, asking the raising of the hand to indicate. One brother raised his hand twice. A sister working at fifteen dollars a month raised her hand, and said afterward she felt well in giving. A peaceful and joyful spirit prevailed and not a dissenting note was heard. In just fifteen minutes, including the appeal from the elder, the list figured up eighty-five dollars and twenty-five cents, and soon after dismissal Bro. J. M. Cockerton had in hand about half the amount in cash. Can we boast of being the first branch in the church to raise the amount assessed? We hope others will do as well or better, for surely we want Graceland to live. The Lord accepted the offering and the Saints rejoiced.

In bonds,

J. M. TERRY.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. J. W. Waldsmith, Clay Center, Nebraska: "Elder J. R. Sutton and myself were at Lone Tree schoolhouse, Clay County, last Sunday (5th) and continued over Tuesday, where there is a lively interest, and have announced meetings there for next Sunday. I think a branch will be organized there soon. Bro. Sutton goes to Franklin and I to Bertrand, and then to Eustice. I am still soliciting for Graceland with fair success."

Bro. F. G. Pitt writes: "I secured rooms yesterday (9th) at 12 Saint Francis Place, Brooklyn, New York, and hope to be located in a few days. We are both feeling well."

Bro F. M. Smith, Fergus Falls, Minnesota, June 13, 1904: "I reached here safely to-day at twelve minutes past four in the afternoon, on schedule time. The attendance at the reunion is not large, but the weather is fine. Quite a number of the ministry is present: Fred A. Smith, E. A. Stedman, Eli Hayer, C. E. Willey, J. A. McCoy, F. D. Omans, and there may be others I have not met; undoubtedly some local men. The visiting Saints at Argyle were well treated by the Argyle citizens, both members and nonmembers. The weather was most excellent throughout, and on the whole the conference seemed to be much enjoyed by all present. Will be here till Monday next, then at Clitherall for a day or so, then at Dunseith, North Dakota, reunion for another ten days."

Bro. F. A. Smith writes from Fergus Falls, Minnesota, June 11, 1904: "I attended the conference of the Des Moines District at Des Moines, a fine representation present. Business was done quickly and with a good feeling. Bro. S. K. Sorensen having expressed his willingness to accept the office of Seventy, I ordained him at the prayer service Sunday afternoon, assisted by Bro. J. F. Mintun, in accordance with the action of the late General Conference. There was a fine spirit manifest in the ordination, and the meeting following was an excellent one. In company with Bro. C. E. Willey I started for the Minnesota reunion; stopped one day at Minneapolis, preached at night to a nice little audience in the private house of Bro. Lundeen. Continuing our journey in the morning we reached Fergus Falls at four o'clock in the afternoon; found the brethren had the tent up and were perfecting the arrangements for a good reunion. Friday at two o'clock in the afternoon the organization was perfected. Bro. F. A. Smith, F. M. Smith, E. A. Stedman, and H. A. McCoy were chosen to preside, and T. J. Martin, clerk; Eli Hayer, chorister; and Bro. Griffin, janitor. Some good short talks were had, announcements made, and the Minnesota reunion was in full blast with a fair attendance of Saints. A number of outsiders were present at night."

Miscellaneous Department.

First Presidency.

TRANSFER OF MISSION.

By agreement of the missionaries in charge, concurred in by the Presidency, Bro. H. E. Moler is transferred from the Kewanee District to the Southern Mission. Certificate was issued Bro. Moler some time since, and we understand he is in his field at work.

JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 1, 1904.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints in South Dakota and Central Nebraska Districts; Greeting: We the undersigned take this method of calling attention to the effort now being made to clear Graceland College from debt, and request that each member of the church contribute to this worthy purpose. Those in South Dakota, except such as reside in Gregory County, may send their contributions to W. W. Whiting, Bonesteel, South Dakota. Those in Central Nebraska District, including Gregory County, South Dakota, send to Levi Gamet, Inman, Nebraska.

Dear brothers and sisters, please give this matter immediate attention and send your mite, small or great, and thus relieve the Bishopric of a great burden, and comply with the counsel to pay this great debt.

W. W. WHITING.
LEVI GAMET.

BONESTEEL, South Dakota, June 11, 1904.

High Priests.

CIRCULAR NO. 6.

I have this week mailed to each member of the quorum a copy of Circular No. 6. Should you fail to receive the same please inform me; and, brethren, once more permit me to call your attention to the importance of reporting to me any change in your address.

Faithfully your servant,

ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 20, 1904.

Church Historian.

APPOINTMENT OF LOCAL HISTORIANS.

Notice is hereby given that since my last published notice I have made the following appointments of local church historians, subject to the action of their several conferences: William Sparling, Clifford, North Dakota; the Dakotas. M. S. Frick, 2226 Empire Street, Joplin, Missouri; Spring River District (since deceased, no successor appointed). James D. Stuart, Magnolia, Iowa, in place of Charles Derry, resigned; Little Sioux District. Mrs. J. H. Royce, Baroda, Michigan, in place of George A. Smith, resigned; Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District. J. E. Talley, Alden Bridge, Louisiana; Louisiana. Mark H. Siegfried, Adrian, Illinois, in place of H. S. Salisbury, resigned; Nauvoo District. A. A. Reams, Box 761, Des Moines, Iowa, in place of H. A. McCoy, resigned; Des Moines District. Mary Rogers, 176 Pine Street, Attleboro, Massachusetts, in place of M. C. Fisher, resigned; Massachusetts District. Mrs. J. C. Nunn, 1603 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri, in place of A. H. Parsons resigned; Independence Stake. Mrs. Pauline Higgins, 649 North First West Street, Salt Lake City, Utah; Utah District.

We invite the attention of local historians, and also of the ministry and others, to some work recently performed by Elder F. A. Russell, which we believe is a move in the right direction; and where opportunity offers we heartily recommend others to make the effort.

He recently wrote a sketch of the rise and progress of the church in Grinnell, Iowa, and vicinity, introducing it by a historical sketch of the rise of the church in this dispensation; had it neatly type written with record ribbon; a neat and substantial binding placed upon it; and deposited it in the Grinnell public library. Before depositing it he sent it to this office, asking that we approve over our signature as historian, which we cheerfully did. If such a movement as this could be practically universal, or wherever opportunity offers, it would do an incalculable amount of good towards correcting public opinion in regard to us as a body. If it is desired by others that we indorse, as it was by Bro. Russell, we would be glad to do so wherever we can conscientiously; and if we can not, would frankly point out our reasons why.

Respectfully submitted,

HEMAN C. SMITH, Church Historian.

Appointment of Home Department Superintendent.

In harmony with the action of the last General Convention of the Sunday-school Association held at Kirtland, Ohio, April 4 and 5, 1904, and according to the provision in the Constitution and By-laws for appointment of superintendent of Home Department, Mrs T. A. Hougas, of Henderson, Iowa, has been duly appointed to said office.

D. J. KRAHL, General Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 10, 1904.

Notices.

TWO-DAY MEETING.

There will be a two-day meeting at McGregor, Sanilac County, Michigan, July 3, 4, 1904. Wm. Davis, president.

Convention Notices.

Convention of the Nodaway District will convene June 25, 26, with the Bedison school. Let all come early. W. B. Torrance, superintendent.

Addresses.

J. F. Mintun, 514 E. Garfield Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

Fourth of July.

One fare for the round-trip, plus twenty-five cents, July 2, 3, 4, within two hundred miles from starting point on Nickel Plate Road. Return limit July 5. Chicago depot: La Salle and Van Buren Streets. City ticket offices, 111 Adams Street, and Auditorium Annex. Telephones Central 2057 and Harrison 2208. (No. 9) 24-3t.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

HE DON'T CRAVE THAT FILTHY WEED!

Bro. W. A. Welton, of Little Sioux, writes April 7, 1904, saying: "I have used tobacco from the age of eight years. I purchased three boxes of your Quit-to-bac and did not use quite one of them and can say I don't crave the filthy weed. I am now twenty-four years old. I would advise all who want to stop using tobacco to try Quit-to-bac. It is bound to cure for it did cure me!" Why not try it? Three boxes postpaid only $1.50 with a positive guarantee to cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.

Address (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois

NEW BOOKS

JOSEPH SMITH, WHO WAS HE?

A valuable work of 255 pages completely refuting the charges that Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy. Paper cover 50c. Cloth 75 cents

EBELING-RIGGLE DEBATE.

Subject: The Kingdom of God. A book of 492 pages bound in cloth 50 cents

THE OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL

By Elder Joseph Luff. A book of twenty-nine sermons on vital gospel subjects. Makes a good missionary $1.00

EXEGESIS OF THE PRIESTHOOD

This book is a compilation of scripture on the priesthood and the duties of the various officers in the priesthood. Every church officer should have one $1.00

Herald Publishing House

Lamoni, Iowa

BOOK OF MORMON MAPS AGAIN

G. F. WESTON, removed from Buchanan, Michigan, to Walker, Vernon County, Missouri.

LECTURE SIZE.—5x8 feet, on muslin, limp, in colors, for Religio or Ministry. (Postage 5c included) $3.25

Same, full finish, varnished, (expressage not included) $5.00

HOME AND OFFICE—size 39x51 inches, limp, on muslin, in colors, for Ministry or Religio, very nice, (postage 8c included) $1.60

Same full finish, varnished, (expressage not included) $2.50

SPECIAL MAP OF ARABIA.—28x36 inches, Book of Mormon features, limp muslin, in colors, (postage 5c included) 55c

CHARTS—SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—40x52 inches, on limp muslin, numbers 1 and 2 in colors with various illustrations, signs on Sun, Moon, etc., each (postage 8c included) $1.60

CHART—ANCIENT CHARACTERS.—3x6 feet. Book of Mormon and others compared, in colors, (postage 12c included) $1.60

SMALL CHARTS.—Which shall we serve? The Christian Race; The body of Christ; The Resurrection; Charity; The Lord's Supper; each 12x36 inches. Illustrated and with bright lettering, on limp muslin, in colors, for Religio and Sunday-school rooms or for preaching, each (postage included) 30c

DISPENSATION CHART—by Elder J. D. Stead, 5x16 feet, on muslin, in colors, finely illustrated, varnished in full finish, (expressage not included) $10. 22-4

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

Excursions for the Fourth,

via the Nickel Plate Road, at one fare for the round-trip, plus twenty-five cents, July 2, 3, 4, within radius of two hundred miles from starting point. Return limit July 5. Three daily trains in each direction, with modern coaches and vestibuled sleeping-cars, to Cleveland, Erie, Buffalo, New York, Boston, and New England points. Passengers to points east of Buffalo have privilege of stopover at Niagara Falls, in either direction, and also at Chautauqua Lake, during excursion season, by depositing tickets. Individual American Club meals, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00, served in Nickel Plate dining-cars; also service a la carte. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road.

Chicago depot, corner La Salle and Van Buren Streets, the only depot in Chicago on the elevated loop. City ticket offices, 111 Adams Street, and Auditorium Annex. Telephones, Central 2057 and Harrison 2208. (No. 10) 24-3t.

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Interest Never Sleeps.

It works while you sleep like a silent partner.

If you have any money that is not earning interest, write at once to the oldest established bank in Lamoni.

The Commercial Bank,

D. F. Nicholson, Cashier. LAMONI, IOWA.

A PRACTICAL $5 TYPEWRITER.

An up-to-date machine. Can be carried in the pocket. Size 9 $\frac{1}{2}$  by 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  by 1 $\frac{1}{4}$  inches, weight 20 ounces. Writes capitals, small letters, numbers and punctuation marks; 76 characters in all. We guarantee safe arrival by mail or express. Circulars free. Address, NEW CENTURY CO., 22-4 P. O. Box 933, Pittsburg, Pa.

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
LAMONI - - IOWA

IF YOU WANT A home, a lot, a business, or anything for sale in a large city we can save you money

E-B REALTY & BROKERAGE CO

602 Heist Bldg., Kansas City, Missouri

Brn. E. Etzenhouser & W. S. Brown 24-4

$7 to St. Louis and Back.

$7.00 to St. Louis and Back, June 13 and 27, 1904.

You can buy round-trip tickets from Lamoni for so little money as this on these dates via the Burlington Route.

Tickets are good on all trains, in coaches and chair cars. Good returning from St. Louis within seven days from date of sale. Ask the Burlington Agent for particulars, or address H. S. JONES,

Division Passenger Agent,
Burlington, Iowa.

Herald Office Publications.

All books are sold by numbers. Send numbers only. Send all orders and make all remittances payable to Herald Publishing House, Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County Iowa.

The Saints' Herald

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31,
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, June 29, 1904

Number 26

RSSalwards m

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
 of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR
 I. A. SMITH . . . . . ASSISTANT EDITOR
 FRED'K M. SMITH . . . . . CORRESPONDING EDITOR

Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

Editorial.

SILENT OFFICERS.

Elders or other officers who may be silenced, either for cause or pending inquiry, would be justified in refraining from performing any of the duties of their respective offices until the matters causing the silence had been adjusted and restriction removed. While it might be legal for an elder while under silence to administer to the sick by prayer, anointing, and laying on of hands, his license having been surrendered pending the adjustment of the silence, in case of extreme necessity of the party administered to, it would be better for such officer to secure the service of such officer not under disability if it could be done. Necessity knows no law, and in the presence of death many conventionalities become obsolete, and things may be done under such circumstances that under other conditions would not be proper. Paul was of the opinion that all things were lawful, but all things were not expedient unto him. It has been and will continue to be impracticable to formulate a set of rules and directions covering every phase of situation and condition that may occur in the life of the Saints. A similar statement might be made of a president of a branch who when called upon to administer to the sick should ask one who had been silenced either to assist him or be assisted in such administration. The matter of propriety and exigency should govern in the premises. The fact of silence does not necessarily make the party silenced guilty, for after inquiry it may be ascertained that he has been unjustly charged. Propriety would say if an officer silenced were guilty, he should be modest enough not to wish to administer until such time as the disability was removed or his guilt established. If such silenced officer is innocent of what he may be charged with, his sense of confidence in his innocence would suggest to him that it would be better for him not to officiate until the inquiry had established his innocence. It is rather against the prejudices of the Saints for an elder silenced and holding no license to officiate in administering to the sick. The sense of propriety of many devout members revolts at the use of oil and the administering in the name of the Master by those who may be resting under disability of charges of conduct not compatible with their profession of Christianity. Propriety then would say it is better for such officer to refrain.

CONTENTS.

Editorial:
Silent Officers - - - - -	585
Administering and Anointing - - - - -	586
Church Union - - - - -	586
Cure for Cancer - - - - -	586
Original Articles:
Personal Purity - - - - -	587
Present Truth - - - - -	592
Sights and Sounds of a Great City—No. 4 - - - - -	594
Mothers' Home Column:
Half Hours With Parents and Teachers—No. 6 - - - - -	596
Sunday-School Department:
The Sunday-school, What is It? - - - - -	597
Using What We Have - - - - -	598
The Secret of It - - - - -	598
It Pays - - - - -	598
The Round Table - - - - -	598
Letter Department:
Letters - - - - -	599
Zion's Praises - - - - -	600
Miscellaneous Department:
Conference Minutes - - - - -	602
Convention Minutes - - - - -	604
Pastoral - - - - -	605
The Bishopric - - - - -	605
Correction of Publication of Bishop's Report - - - - -	605

NO ONE can disgrace us but ourselves.—Holland.

The student of the Book of Mormon is sometimes confused by the mention he finds of various sets of plates. There are the "plates of Laban," the "twenty-four gold plates," the "plates of Nephi," two sets, the record of the Jaredites, etc. These plates are the subject of an illustrated article by Charles Fry, in the Religio's Arena, July Autumn Leaves. The article with the diagrams accompanying it gives a clear idea of the whole matter and should be read by every Religio student.

ADMINISTERING AND ANOINTING.

Some little inquiry is made in reference to the manner of administering to the sick. Some time ago we gave a series of instructions which it seemed to us were practical and timely in reference to this topic, but like some other things upon which instruction has been given, it seems to have passed out of mind of some or is disregarded. We recommended then that following the scriptural injunction, where any were sick to send for the elders, two or more, and let them anoint with oil and pray over the sick.

We are of the opinion now as then that in many severe cases where life is threatened by fevers and some other maladies we lose the benefit of anointing with oil by not following the instructions literally, anointing the body with oil. It is not proper for elders in every case thus to anoint the bodies of the sick with oil, but where the patient is a boy or man, the elders can do this with propriety. Where the patient is a girl or woman, the elders can have this done by the hand of a sister or competent nurse before the anointing of the head by the elders takes place.

In the case of anointing, pouring the oil upon the head, we recommend this: that the elder who does this pour the oil upon the person's head with a simple statement like this: I pour this oil upon you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, I anoint you with this oil in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, praying that as this is an unction of anointing of the body, so may the Lord grant the unction of anointing of the Spirit; and let this or a similar prayer be sufficient. Sometimes the elder who anoints with the oil immediately lays his hands upon the patient's head and engages in a long prayer, while his companion stands waiting for him to end, and then they both do the same thing. It would be better to end with a short prayer and then let both or all others—elders who may be present—lay their hands on while the prayer is uttered which asks the blessing upon the anointing. It is unnecessary repetition, and this we understand is to be avoided, and think others ought to understand it also.

CHURCH UNION.

A brother sends us the following clipping from some one of the local journals of the time, which speaks for itself. However, the Saints have for a long time foreseen and taught that until there was a return to primitive Christianity in the fullest and most complete sense of the term there could not be desirable church unity which so many have been so anxiously looking for, the lack of which has been so earnestly deplored. Such return only will be adequate to bring to pass a unity, the breaking down of the bars of division will have to come from a better spirit than arises from denominational strife and contention for supremacy and numbers. It will be a long time before the different branches of the Presbyterian Church will ever quit their dogmatic assertion of supremacy; and until they do this there can be no unity between them, and their church creed and polity are not attractive to their neighbors in sufficient degree to overcome the separation that exists. We commend the article, however:

SPEED CHURCH UNION.

Now that the Presbyterians have so strongly denounced divorce as an unholy thing, it is high time for them to wipe out the divorce which separated them at the time of the Civil War and has kept them apart ever since.

If churches themselves can not exhibit a spirit of loyalty, humility, and forgiveness, how can they expect to develop this spirit in others? Nothing else acts so powerfully to raise doubts in the mind of the nonchurch member as the fact that there is so much prejudice and dissension inside the churches.

Missionaries will tell you that this is the chief obstacle to spreading the gospel in heathen lands. The heathen can not get it through their heads how there can be so many Christian churches, all rivals and yet each asserting itself to be the only way. In Japan and China especially this question is constantly being asked by would-be converts, and the missionaries are unable to give a satisfactory answer to it.

Until the churches can get together in counsel, arbitrate their differences and federate under the common standard of the cross, church growth at home and abroad will be slow, and clergy and laity will seek in vain for the reasons why church attendance languishes. Example is a thousand times more convincing than logic, and when the churches show that they are strong enough to govern their own soul they will not suffer for converts.

CURE FOR CANCER.

We have been requested to republish the following cure for cancer:

I have noticed in your columns deaths from cancers, and I have often thought to send you a remedy that has proven successful in many hands in every case that I have applied it to cancers.

The remedy is this: Spread a plaster of common sticking plaster, cut a hole a trifle larger than the cancer, so that there will be a small margin of good flesh, about the sixteenth of an inch, all around the cancer, leaving the cancer and this small margin exposed: then apply over the plaster and resting on the plaster the cancer plaster, composed of one part of wheat flour, one part blood root (sanguinaria), ground fine, one part chloride of zinc.

Mix the sanguinaria and flour with water, then the chloride of zinc. Mix well and apply over the cancer, letting it remain from twenty-four to forty-eight hours, according to the time the cancer has been standing. Then take off the cancer plaster, and dress with any good healing salve. In from a week to ten days the cancer will drop out. (Do not try to press it out.)

Then heal with any good salve. Probably the best healing salve is the All Healing or Black Salve. It is the best for a cancer, which I will furnish the recipe to any one writing for it, inclosing a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

KENT, Illinois.

LEVI CHENEY.

The business manager informs us that the new edition of the Book of Rules is now ready for mailing, No. 161, price forty cents.

Original Articles.

PERSONAL PURITY.

A SERMON BY HEMAN C. SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
JUNE, 19, 1904.

I will read from Isaiah, chapter 52:

Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean. Shake thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem: loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion. For thus saith the Lord, Ye have sold yourselves for nought; and ye shall be redeemed without money. For thus saith the Lord God, My people went down aforetime into Egypt to sojourn there; and the Assyrian oppressed them without cause. Now therefore, what have I here, saith the Lord, that my people is taken away for nought? they that rule over them make them to howl, saith the Lord; and my name continually every day is blasphemed. Therefore my people shall know my name: therefore they shall know in that day that I am he that doth speak: behold, it is I. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth! Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion. Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God. Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence, touch no unclean thing; go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord. For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the Lord will go before you: and the God of Israel will be your rearward. Behold, my servant shall deal prudently, he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high. As many were astonished at thee; his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men; so shall he sprinkle many nations; the kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see: and that which they had not heard shall they consider.

I have read the entire chapter. And you discover, though perhaps you have read and thought of it many times before, prophetic declarations here of glorious events that are yet to transpire, and we might dwell upon those things with profit, or at least with pleasure; but there is a consideration of practical value in connection with them that I want to invite your attention to. In the eleventh verse we find this language: "Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence, touch no unclean thing; go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord." I invite your attention more especially to this language because it requires no argument or evidence to convince you of the correctness of the admonition, and the desirability of being in a condition of cleanliness before the Lord. All that, we are well persuaded of; all men agree in regard to that, no matter what our attainments may have been in that direction, whether we are woefully at fault, or whether we have succeeded in a measure. We all agree that the admonition to be clean is a good admonition, and to attain to that condition would be desirable. We are agreed further, that if we could be absolutely clean in every sense of the word, there would be no doubt in regard to what the future would be; or we would have no doubt in regard to our acceptance before God here, and we would have no doubt in regard to our acceptance in the hereafter, nor as to our peace and our happiness and our future reward. Cleanliness, thorough and absolute cleanliness, would insure all that we could enjoy here, and all that is promised unto the pure hereafter. We are all agreed as to that; but in regard to the manner in which we shall perform our part in order to attain to that, there may be differences of opinion to some extent, and perhaps not largely in that regard, but there may be some difference of opinion as to what cleanliness is. It is not only cleanliness of the body, for this though a very desirable thing is least of all, but cleanliness of soul, purity of purpose, righteousness and virtue, that which cleanses and frees from all immortality and evil and from desires that lead us astray, and fills us with motives that are pure, desires that are elevating, and thoughts that are exalting. That is the kind of cleanliness that I refer to. But in regard to that I am persuaded that men have different standards, and perhaps all are striving to live up to the standard that they have of cleanliness and purity. And what appears to be pure to one does not appear to be pure to another. Some have raised the standard higher than others. I am persuaded that the most of mankind are honest from their standpoint of honesty; but there are some things that some would not scruple to call entirely honest that others would reject. In our conduct I presume the most of us are honest; but in my opinion the standard can not be raised too high, and we ought to be studying all the time to discover wherein our standard is at fault. Our conduct is not so likely to be at fault as compared with our standard, as our standard is likely to be at fault as compared with the higher position that men are called upon to occupy. I hear it said sometimes that it is impossible for men to attain to this condition of life set forth in the word of God; that they are not able to do so. In a sense that is true. No man is able to rise to the standard that is set for him within himself; he needs help to do so, and the help is guaranteed. I do not believe that God would require of us that which we can not do. And the very fact that he has asked us to be pure, and instructed us if we would take part in these glorious consummating events that are spoken of in this chapter, that we are to be pure and clean, especially those who bear the vessels of the Lord, — the very fact that we are admonished to be so, is evidence to my mind that we can be so. For to say that he would ask us to do something that we could not do, would be to accuse him of injustice. I believe he knew what we could do, and has simply directed us to do what is in our power to do if we go about it in a right way.

There is one peculiar thing that I have noticed in my own association with the world; that is, notwithstanding men are ready to believe that we are impure, and that the people that represent the Latter Day Saints, those who began this latter-day work at least, were impure morally, that they were men of corrupt minds, and their purpose was to deceive; notwithstanding they are willing to believe that, (and I grant that some of them do believe it, and perhaps they are honest in that belief,) yet it is curious to me that they expect more of us than of any other people in the world; that when our characters are questioned, or under consideration, they seem to think that the Latter Day Saints, or persons making profession to be Latter Day Saints, ought to be better than other people, and if overtaken in conduct that is simply like other people we are condemned more severely for it. I can not see the consistency upon the part of our friends in this regard, and yet I am ready to concede that this conclusion might be based upon proper ground. If our profession has been correct, then our conduct should conform with that profession, and we ought to be the best people in the world. If we have the most truth, and we claim to have the most truth, there is no excuse if we are not. And I sometimes think it has been a good thing for us as a people that we have been ostracized from society, and that those who call themselves the best society of the world do not care to associate with us. And it may be the care of God has in this regard been around us. If we were to associate with the world we might be partakers of the pleasures of the world more than we are. But when we are driven by force of circumstances to form a society of our own, and to mingle with those of like faith more freely than anybody else, and the lines of demarkation are thus drawn, we are not likely to partake of the pleasures, and especially of the vices of the world, not so likely as we would be if our conditions were different. Then it may be a good thing that we are compelled because of the decision made in the world against us, to be exclusive in our society. I have noticed this: the more we have broken down these barriers, the more careless we have become; the more the world has relaxed in regard to us and admitted us into their society, the more we have partaken of that which is vain, calculated to destroy our integrity, or at least to destroy our faithfulness in keeping the commandments of God. When we are humbled by the evil reports that are circulated in regard to us; and when the people turn the cold shoulder to us, and do not receive us, we feel a little hurt. We sometimes call it sacrifice that we have been called upon to make; the sacrifice of our standing in the world and of our social privileges; and we feel that we have done all that for the work's sake. Yet, it may not be any sacrifice. It may be a blessing to us; it may be wisely arranged so that we can get more good than we would if we had that privilege. We are giving something and getting more, when we give away such things as these. And for my part, (I may be more independent than some,) I do not care so much for these things, especially if I have to pay such a price for them. I do not care to compromise anything that I think to be right and tending to purity for the sake of applause. It seems to me that it is not right; and I am not willing to pay the price. I feel as though if I were required to pay it, I would be making a sacrifice; as it is I have no particular sacrifice to make.

I invite especial attention this morning to the admonition given to those who bear the vessels of the Lord. I understand that this statement, "Ye . . . that bear the vessels of the Lord," refers to those whom the Lord has specially appointed to officiate in his name. It applies to the ministry, and when we are told, "Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord," we understand it to apply especially to the ministry, but not entirely. In a general sense it applies to everybody who has accepted the truth. They in a sense bear the vessels of the Lord; but I think I can see, and I want to present it to you for your consideration this morning, that there is more demand upon the part of the ministry of this latter-day dispensation to be clean than there is for anybody else in this world. So great consequences do not attend the cleanliness or uncleanness of anybody else as attend the minister of this dispensation, in this work of God. I will tell you why, in my opinion, it is more necessary for them to be clean. In the days since the church wandered away, as we believe, into the wilderness, some of the plain and precious principles of the gospel were excluded. It is observable to those who will think and examine, that the things they drifted away from most were those that brought them most nearly in contact with the people; and those things that are restored to us bring us more particularly in contact with the people than the other ordinances that have been retained by the Christian world. Let me cite you to some of them. For instance, in this latter day there has been restored to us by command of God the ordinance of the laying on of hands for confirmation, which brings the administrator more closely in contact with the one administered to, than do the other ordinances by which people are admitted into the Christian church. We have also restored to us that beautiful ordinance of blessing of children which requires the hands of the administrator to be laid upon the innocent head, bringing them more closely in contact than in the old way of receiving children under sectarian rule, where a little water was sprinkled upon the head. There is not the personal contact that there is in laying the hands on the head and blessing the children. We have also the ordinance of the laying on of hands restored to us in the administration to the sick, which brings us in close contact with them, a closer association and personal contact. And in this personal contact of man with man there is something which perhaps I can not explain to you. You all recognize that it has its influence. The touch or the grasp of the hand has its influence upon us, and so it is natural for us in our association with mankind to avoid those who are not pleasant. We recoil from the touch of those whom we believe to be impure. And why? It is natural that we should do so. It is not because we have been taught to do so particularly, nor because it is a studied effort upon our part; but there is something within us that revolts, and we do not care to come in personal contact with the impure and corrupt. And if we yield obedience to their embrace, and allow them even to touch us we partake largely of their spirit and of their disposition, so that the touch of the hand, and the personal contact between individuals will impart the condition of one to the other. It imparts a feeling of love or lust; it imparts virtue or vice. The caress of the loving hand often brings blessing. Personal contact, personal touch has brought about and brings about results that can not be brought about in any other way. It is not altogether an imagination when the child with its aches and bruises brings the afflicted part and asks the mother to kiss it. It is natural for it to do so, and who shall say there is no virtue in that kiss, that there does not come to that child blessing? And thus it is with us, in the presence of those that we love, and especially when we are needy, and when we are weak; how much blessing there comes from the hand of love upon the fevered brow, whether they be authorized to administer or not, when kindly hand of sympathy or love is pressed upon those who are afflicted. And thus we need no special argument to show that this personal contact that we are required to enter into by virtue of being ministers of this gospel brings us into a condition where there is more demand for purity, more demand for the minister to be pure and clean than there is in any other avocation in life. Where these sacred ordinances are not administered, where they stand aloof, there is not so much danger from the personal contact if you be impure, and there is not the blessing in personal contact if you be pure, that there is in these sacred ordinances of God's house. When you turn to the record of Jesus Christ and examine that upon this point, you see that this thought is fully held out in many of the sayings that are recorded. Perhaps you have not considered them as closely as you might, and it will do you no harm, at least, to study some of these things. We want to call your attention to a portion of the history of the Son of God, the One who is spoken of in the chapter we have read as the One who is to establish the reign of peace upon the earth, and all the beautiful things spoken of in that chapter are to be fulfilled under his administration.

I read here in the record given by Luke of a peculiar circumstance right in line with our thought this morning. "And a woman having an issue of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians, neither could be healed of any, came behind him, and touched the border of his garment: and immediately her issue of blood stanch'd." She came in personal contact with the Savior. It seemed that his attention was not directed to it either; but the touch that she gave even the hem of his garment as he passed by brought to her relief, and the record says: "And Jesus said, who touched me? When all denied, Peter and they that were with him said, Master, the multitude throng thee and press thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me? And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me: for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me." He felt the effects of that touch, as well as did the woman. He immediately knew that somebody had touched him for he felt that virtue had gone out from him, had gone from him to the one who had touched him, and the party was benefited thereby. "And when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came trembling, and falling down before him, she declared unto him before all the people for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately. And he said unto her, daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace." Here is an instance where the woman touched Jesus, without his attention being directed to it at the time, and the very touch was felt by both, and good came to the weak, through the virtue which went from the strong. I call your attention to this for your consideration upon this point of personal contact. Those who are called, those who bear the vessels of the Lord in the solemn name of Jesus Christ, the men called upon to touch individuals in the ordinances of the gospel, ought to be pure. They ought, I say, in a measure to possess such cleanliness, that virtue will go out in personal contact; that in the touch of these ordinances blessing may come.

I am persuaded that none of us have arisen to the heights of our privileges; we have none of us enjoyed what it is our privilege to enjoy in this regard; and I call attention to this that it may be thought of more seriously than in the past.

I read again that when the Master had been in communion with God all night, in prayer, at the time that he selected his twelve apostles to be his chief ambassadors, after he had chosen them, it is recorded, that

He came down with them, and stood in the plain, and the company of his disciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judea and Jerusalem, and from the sea coast of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diseases, and they that were vexed with unclean spirits; and they were healed. And the whole multitude sought to touch him: for there went virtue out of him and healed them all. And he lifted up his eyes on his disciples, and said, Blessed be ye poor: for yours is the kingdom of God.

Now here the whole multitude as they thronged about him sought to touch him: those that were weak; those who were palsied; those who were lame; those who were blind; those who were deaf; all those who were afflicted sought, as they thronged around him, that they might touch him; for virtue went out of him and healed them all, showing the great power there is in personal contact. Not only is there virtue in prayer, not only is there power in our supplications, not only is there power in faith; but there is something in the personal contact between the strong and the weak. And where purity exists greater blessing will come than where impurity is permitted. And so those who bear the vessels of the Lord in this dispensation of the consummation of all good that the Lord has in store for his people should be clean. "Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord."

It is written somewhere, I believe, and the very words thrill our souls when we think of them, when the poor afflicted woman came to Christ, "he touched her and the fever left her." Ah, how those words thrill our souls with joy when we think that the touch of the Master would cause the fever to depart, and cause the afflicted one to be healed; the lame to leap for joy; the eyes of the blind to be opened; the ears of the deaf to be unstopped. And when we think that men in this latter-day dispensation, as in former times, have been called upon to act for Christ, not only in administering the word, and teaching men the truth, but in the ordinances of the gospel, that those who are just starting upon their new life, those that have obeyed the gospel, and come out of the waters of baptism, shall be touched by these men, authorized to act, to lay their hands upon them, and put themselves in personal contact with them, in personal touch with them, how clean, how pure, how holy ought to be the hand that is laid upon the head of those who in their weakness are struggling to walk, to start in the right way. And when the afflicted and sick are upon their beds of pain, and these men called of God to act in the name of Jesus Christ are told to go to them, not simply to bow by their bedside and pray, though that is good, but to touch them as the Master touched them, lay their hands upon them; it shows the great good of personal contact. And as there is virtue in man, to an extent, as there is virtue in the Christ, to the extent of that virtue, good will come. But if the man should be impure; if in his person, in his morals, in his character, he is impure, what harm he may do, what injury he may do never can be told, no more than the good he may do can be told if he is pure and clean.

I believe that there is virtue attaching to the office of one commissioned of God to act; but it is not al-there. There is more perhaps in purity than we have been in the habit of thinking. If we have simply been acting by virtue of authority, because we have been ordained, because we hold a certain position, and a certain priesthood, and we think that we have a right to administer because of our holy position, and recognize authority alone, without regard to personal purity, what a mistake we have been making, and a mistake that has perhaps cost us and those to whom we have administered much because of this lack of purity and holiness and virtue that ought to exist in the minds and characters of those whom God hath called to officiate in the sacred ordinances of his house. And oh how sacred, how pure ought to be considered that ordinance to which we have referred, by which the man of God lays his hands upon the innocent babe, the treasure of the household, brought by trusting parents to God's servants; how pure that ordinance, and how pure ought to be the hands and souls of those that lay hands upon children in blessing.

In this connection, and with this thought before us, I can understand some of the figurative language I find recorded here in the prophets. I will invite your attention to one statement given by Habakkuk. He says,

O Lord, I have heard thy speech, and was afraid: O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy. God came from Teman, and the Holy One from mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise. And his brightness was as the light; he had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power. Before him went the pestilence, and burning coals went forth at his feet. He stood and measured the earth; he beheld, and drove asunder the nations; and the everlasting mountains were scattered, and the perpetual hills did bow: his ways are everlasting.

Especial attention I desire to call to what the prophet said of the Lord when he should come with brightness and light: "He had horns coming out of his hands: and there was the hiding of his power." Horns, in scripture, represent power, they represent strength. There was strength, there was power, there was virtue in his hands, in the personal administration of the Son of God, as recorded in those beautiful words, "He touched her and the fever left her." They thronged him desiring to touch him, "for there went virtue out of him and healed them all." Oh brethren, are we called to represent the Holy One? Then let us hear the admonition that is spoken here in this chapter we have read: "Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord." Ah, yes, with holy hands administer in the sacred ordinance of the gospel of Jesus Christ. If there is within you that which is unclean; if there is behind your outward conduct that which is degrading and debasing, you are unfit to represent the Christ. You misrepresent him. You are guilty of misrepresentation when you take his name in your lips. Oh, it is a high standard, but it is worthy of attainment, and it is our duty, our privilege to make the effort to attain to it.

And there is one consideration in this connection that I wish to mention in regard to others of the household of faith and that is, although virtue may exist in the minister, though cleanliness and purity and virtue may be there, it should also find growth in the minds of those to whom they minister, that they may be receptive in order to get the benefit of it; hence the necessity for all to be pure, for all to be clean, for all to practice cleanliness in a moral way, in righteousness, and holiness, and peace, as the word of God says somewhere, "With holy hands lifted to God," everywhere worship him, and then we shall be able to accomplish more than we have ever before accomplished. We have been living as it were in the suburbs of God's perfection; we have not received the power, the light, and the blessing that it is our privilege to enjoy. Let cleanliness come to us; be clean; be holy; be pure in our lives, and greater blessings than ever before enjoyed by God's people will be ours. And he who administers in Christ's name will be as though it were Christ himself ministering. It is written that "He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." And Jesus said to the Father, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I sent them into the world." And if they are sent with the same commission to represent the Christ, the power of God will be with them. And as I said before, I want to impress upon you the thought that there is more necessity, more at stake, for the minister in this church to be pure than in any other; because the ordinances that have been reestablished in the church to-day bring us more nearly in contact, personal contact with the people, than men were brought before; and being more nearly in contact the very touch ought to impart virtue, blessing, and power. You remember, some of you, the statement made in this record where ordaining is spoken of. This is another of the ordinances that brings us in close contact. It says, "He shall be ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost that is in the one that ordains him." This shows to us that there is something in personal contact, in the touch of individuals. Some there are that tell us that this is science, a principle that we find existing in the world by which one mind has power over another, or mind having power over matter, a principle that scientists call psychology; that this is all there is in this power which we claim among the people of God. I do not care what you call it. If psychology is true science, God knows as much about it as we do, and a little more; and if it is true science he can work with it with more power than man can. If the minds of men have power over matter psychologically, it may be on the same principle that we have power over each other, that God has power over us. I do not dispute

it. But I believe that that power is imparted by the direct inspiration of God's Holy Spirit. It may be the increase of natural power; I do not care whether it is the increase of natural power, or whether it is something aside from that, so far as I am concerned. I see the necessity for us who come in personal contact with the people to be clean. I know that from a natural standpoint we have more strength because of that purity; and I know from a spiritual standpoint, too, that it is true.

We are not what we ought to be. We may boast of the wonderful light we have received, if we choose, we may boast of the truth that has come to us by revelation, but our boasting may be vain unless we put ourselves in a condition to get the great benefit that is to be derived from this, and we can not do it without personal purity, without social and moral purity, inspired by a pure motive and clean desire within ourselves to overcome the things that stand in our way, and to refuse the influences of lust, and accept the influences of love, and when we have done this, coming in contact with the world, we will be the saviors of mankind in a sense. And in this way, being clean, and putting on purity of life, we shall fulfill the admonition read this morning: "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean. Shake thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem: loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion." This is the way these things will be brought about, by purity and by cleanliness. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." "For thus saith the Lord God. . . . Therefore my people shall know my name: therefore they shall know in that day that I am he that doth speak: behold it is I. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!" All these conditions will be brought about by purity, not by boasting that we have truth. The better you will be, and the purer you will be, the more truth you may claim, and the better it will be for you.

I want, in conclusion, to invite your attention to another office that comes in personal contact with the people. I refer to that which was once with the Saints in the latter times, and has been restored to us recently. I refer to the privileges that are given to the people of God in the patriarchal office. That is in the same line as the other. And if he who is called to be a father to the fatherless, he who is called to be a father to the church shall be pure and holy, the personal contact with which he comes to the people may impart virtue and blessing. I can see good in that, as I see it in the other ordinances, if it is done with purity and with holiness of purpose, and the men who are called to officiate sanctify themselves, and make themselves fit to be vessels of the Lord, to bear this virtue and power unto the people. I think there is danger there, as there is danger in other places. If it should be made a mercenary thing for the purpose of getting gain, or of getting fees out of the performance of duty, or anything of that kind, oh, cursed be the practice; for if there is virtue to be imparted by personal touch, then the opposite may be true and the good turned into evil. But if it is done with purity of purpose, and not made the principal thing, but be made incidental to the office-work of the patriarch who is made a father, a counselor, a director, a revivalist, to preach and teach, and instruct and revive the spiritual condition of the Saints, as he goes along, we believe that he may impart virtue as it is imparted to the child in his blessing, as it is imparted to the confirmed believer, as it is imparted to the sick who are needing physical strength. But a wise safeguard should be placed around it. It must not be done for mercenary purposes; it must not be done for self-aggrandizement.

In all these ordinances the man who is pure, and will represent Christ in his acts, in his personal relations with the people, and in every other way, will be a "living epistle known and read of all men."

May God help us to bring ourselves into a condition that we shall be clean who bear the vessels of the Lord, and those who receive the administration, those who come in touch with them, through that sympathetic spirit may be touched, and blessing may come to them because of their own condition to receive, and all be blessed together, and be led to a higher life, a better spiritual condition, such as must obtain before Zion puts on her beautiful garments, and Jerusalem arises and shakes herself from the dust of the earth. May God help us to the accomplishment of this is my prayer.

PRESENT TRUTH.

Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth.—2 Peter 1:12.

Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life.—John 14:6.

For the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations.—Psalm 100:5.

The fountain of all truth is God. Truth has been discovered by man in all ages, but with God it is primary. In the essential character it is as unchangeable as its author. What was once revealed or discovered truth always remains such, and the unrestricted procession of time is unable to alter it. Having originated with Deity it partakes of the attribute of its author, and once revealed and known it is never transformed. It retains its distinctive merits and characteristics through all time. Truth anciently revealed does not clash with modern truth, and when understood it always harmonizes. On the part of man it may be brought to light by the forces of thought, or by discovery; but with God it always was known. The inventive genius of man has wrought wonders in this period of time, but this only has been the thinking out and applying of forces, principles, and law already existent with God. Truth is inseparable and singular; emanating from God it contains his attributes, as love, hate, etc.

Present truth we designate as a particular phase of truth given or known to certain periods existing when its proclamation is first made. Successive ages bring additional truth or fact to light unknown to man previously; thus gaining knowledge necessitates the advocacy of present truth as generations pass through time. This age surpasses former ages in the diffusion of knowledge and truth in all but a gospel sense, because man has retained most of the truth filtering through the centuries and also found much in addition, to which their forefathers were strangers. Religiously the masses of humanity are no nearer in truth, the worship of the true and living God, than formerly; but on almost every other line truth has sprung up far more grand and sublime than the majority of our predecessors ever dreamed. The unfolding of the economy of God to man in the different stages of prophetic utterance when man received knowledge of the intention, purpose, and final outcome of God's will necessitated the preaching of present truth.

The redemptive plan when given in promise and also in fact was present truth to the world at such periods. The judgment message and the righteousness proclaimed by the Prophet Noah to excessive sinners, was the present truth of that day. When the Jewish nation had dwindled in apostasy, and had largely forsaken God, they were brought to their senses by being captured and held in servitude for seventy years by the nation of Babylon. This event was truthfully announced by the prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and others, but the present truth they heeded not, and they suffered in consequence.

The Messiah's advent to the world in fulfillment of prophecy was a wonderful event, and the law and government he instituted through his Father's direction was truth indeed.

John the Baptist announced the present truth of that age, and he was followed by many others who labored diligently and manfully. When the Jewish national policy was brought to dissolution by the iron heel of the Roman soldiery under Titus, amid heartrending scenes of distressing calamity; when mothers, voracious with hunger, devoured their darling babes, and one million one hundred thousand Jews perished by the sword and starvation, and the streets of the magnificent city was strewn with the dead, and human blood flowed in rivulets; and later the proud walls of the city broken down, the splendid temple, the pride of the Jewish heart, robbed and burned, then the city razed to the earth and the residue of the people carried forth captive to be "sifted among the nations" of the earth to be "a hiss and a by-word," a "taunt and a curse." The truth of this terrifying destruction of life and property was faithfully announced by Jesus Christ; but only a very few, and they his disciples, profited by this present truth he revealed and escaped in safety.

The Dark Ages was a pall over true Christianity and much of the grand truth known to the saints formerly was covered by the debris of Romanism. The church life became dead. Man directed and ruled and not God. Apostasy was marked on the doors of all churches, and formal ritualism replaced the spiritual power it once possessed. Many noble souls groped blindly for light through this period, but their conscience was held spellbound by the austere spiritual directors who held ignorance to be the best safeguard of their authority. Luxury and pride predominated in upper society while the lower orders, including the majority, were involved in misery and vice; perfidy and treachery manifested itself in all ranks. Those leaders in the Roman priesthood, to whom the masses looked for authority and direction, maintained ignorance to be the mother of devotion, and in their teaching seemed only to harden them in immorality and ignorance; thus the bonds of society relaxed because of this. The conditions of the common schools retarded all advances toward education in branches of useful knowledge.

Faint glimmerings of light and truth began to disperse the midnight of darkness, held aloft by a small number of persons who had been preserved from the corruptions of the papacy. Such men as Grosseteste, Bradwardine, and Wickleff had borne testimony against the usurpations and crimes of the papacy before the dawn of the Reformation; but it was reserved for a later date in history for the launch of the Protestant movement, and not until then did truth during those centuries to any extent obtain. Each reformer, from Luther on, brought to light some truth his predecessor failed to find, thus paving the way for the "restitution of all things" in latter days.

Each rediscovered fact in a gospel sense was the present truth to the people of these dark, benighted ages. All truth of historical moment thus brought out through the different ages are facts just as truly as they were formerly, only by the changeful conditions of the world they have ceased to be present truth because of the cessation of the conditions that called them into existence. From the nature of the case the repetition of that which was new or present truth in a gospel sense to them, does not necessarily prove it is not as grand and noble a truth to us at the present; hence all truth once known and revealed is truth still, but not always new because formerly known.

In latter days, what particular truth is due the world, if any? Is this age barren of anything new scientifically or religiously? We answer, no epoch in history of human or divine achievement is so marked for the calling forth of new facts of widespread interest to all mankind as now. Scientifically, with few exceptions, the world has followed a beaten path, each century using the implements with but little improvement over their predecessors; but to-day of the greatest civilized powers, those of three score years and ten have witnessed a revolution in mechanical appliances of every description, unsurpassed by any age. The crude machinery of their earlier years has been supplanted by that of elegance and beauty, contributing to comfort, and enabling one man now to do the work of many formerly. Steam, electricity, and air are now harnessed, utilizing their powerful energy, affording locomotion to man with rapidity, ease, and comfort. Rapid transit on land and sea gives man the privilege of visiting all continents, seas, and oceans on the globe in a few months, while formerly a lifetime of toil and hardship in travel would not do as much. Continents and nations across the vast expanse of waters are brought to nearer relationship commercially, and by thus commingling knowledge has increased and man benefited. The equipments of war to-day are of a most deadly and destructive kind when applied, showing great skill and knowledge in preparation. The mammoth iron-clads of the navies of the world seem invincible compared to those of former years.

Looking at the world and seeing all that has been achieved in this sense and from this basis we are led to exclaim: Present truth indeed has shown out and dispersed the gloom of ignorance of other years. In this respect it is present truth to us. The characteristics of the age from a scientific standpoint are indeed surprising; and reasons for the probable declaration of present truth in a gospel sense also. The prophets of other periods are not silent on this matter, but clearly have they given a correct portrayal of the present truth to be shown forth in our time. Daniel says in the time of the end "many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." (See Daniel 12: 4.) The running "to and fro" here spoken of seems to have a special application to this age—"the time of the end," as the rapid transit feature is referred to. "Knowledge shall be increased" at this time also, and that is a demonstrated fact to all those conversant with the present situation. A careful examination of all the prophetic testimony in the Bible relative to latter days and the work to be inaugurated, ought to suffice to the candid thinker and prove present truth was due; for these prophetic pictures of conditions to come to a casual observer of the landscape of to-day's history can be found in striking fulfillment.

The coming forth of the divine record of the Book of Mormon is in the direct line of the consideration of our present theme. The Rosetta Stone when read furnished a key for the deciphering of the ancient writing of the remote Egyptian cities of Thebes, Memphis, and Heracleopolis; thus a small thread has put the world in connection with the lost history of those periods, proving the Bible history true. The discovery of the Moabite Stone also has done as much towards the substantiating of Bible narrative. The Book of Mormon furnishes a stronger bulwark of evidence than either, because the evidence it furnishes to prove what it claims to be is more complete and elaborate and at the same time has an equal amount, if not more evidence back of it from the standpoint of archæology.

We admit the tide of public opinion is against the work, but this is not the criterion by which to judge any matter; if so many of the fondest hopes of the Christian would be blasted. In this respect history has only repeated itself in latter days. When we call up the scenes undergone by the early Christian disciples, when the precious truth they advocated was hotly contested by railing slander, abuse and even vile persecution, it ought to satisfy the candid mind that these methods are unrighteous. Indeed "truth has sprung out of the earth" as will be found if proper investigation is made of its sacred pages together with all other evidence in existence. By thus making a cursory examination of all evidence with a careful comparison with all truth given previous, we are prepared to announce and prove this present truth due the world to-day.

The rapid evangelization by the God-sent missionaries of the kingdom to-day, bearing as they do the message of a Savior's love; and in the path the multi-millions of earth have trod, in peace and in war, in prosperity and adversity, in justice and in tyranny, and in righteousness, and in apostasy, amid the busy, moving, restless world, the messengers of the covenant have preached, and are still preaching, the news of salvation as a witness—the truth from God restored in latter days. The world-wide proclamation of the gospel is being made, and this bespeaks the near approach of the Son of the Highest.

The present truth of the gospel has now been heralded upwards of about three fourths of a century and still will be until the purposes of God will be wrought to his satisfaction. Seemingly the Devil is administering an opiate into the hearts and minds of the masses, for they are largely unconcerned, and are passing onward heedless of God and truth. Oh, how this should arouse us to put on the whole armor and labor in the strength of the Lord to the accomplishment of the work. This is the grandest and noblest message of truth ever given in latter-day history, for it has a fullness, a completeness, more sublime than any other present truth. May we heed and live in harmony with the gospel—the present truth.

S. S. SMITH.

REDMOON, Oklahoma Territory, May 10, 1904.

SIGHTS AND SOUNDS OF A GREAT CITY.—No. 4.

It would be unfair to accuse any one of egotism who had obtained even a superficial view or acquaintance with Chicago and who tells you that it is a great city. The qualifying term has application in many directions. If you refer to the cosmopolitan character of its citizenship or resident population, the greatness of its variety appears when we learn that forty languages are spoken within the radius of one block. You need not travel to Germany, Spain, Italy, Russia, Poland, Scandinavia, the English Isles or possessions, China, Japan, or India, to get acquainted with the human product of those countries. You have only to come to Chicago.

Here extremes meet, and are often found in close proximity. It is but a few moments from squalid and abject penury and misery to the places of superabundance of wealth and extravagant waste of material, of earth's bounty, that might nourish with life and hope thousands of the despairing or those engaged in the unequal struggle for securing comfortable conditions of life.

Indeed, the "sights and sounds of a great city" that either exalt or shock the sensitive mind and spirit are varied and multitudinous. From the sights of misery and squalor and filth, and the sounds that betray the presence of crime,—the streets and alleys and gutters, where even the smell is loud enough to be heard,—to the gilded palaces of the millionaires of Chicago, is a small journey and an exposition of the word life as applied to the varied conditions of beings created in the image of God, forms at once a study and a problem the solution of which transcends the power of human knowledge or forecast.

Some of these things relate to the superficial view; but there is the more actual and real analysis of things to be found sometimes in an acquaintance with, and an understanding of, the interior forces of the lives of men and women, especially in a great city like this; and as relates to the ethical or spiritual interest in the history of man's development, from a gospel point of view there may be less difference between the proletariat and the aristocrat than is ordinarily accepted or accredited to be the case.

Among the sights and sounds of a great city, you may, if the senses have been developed by a gospel training, see and hear and discern amid the rush and roar, many, very many reasons for the preaching and practice of the law that is to govern men, when the prayer of our Lord shall have been answered, and "the desire of all nations" shall be permitted to introduce the contrast between the human and the divine order of government,—and present a citizenship where the interests of the whole becomes the intelligent and paramount interest of the individual.

We have listened to the trial, and have known of the execution of the famous and notorious car-barn bandits and men-slayers, and have seen the interest that the public has taken in the legal steps to prevent these notorious crimes by the summary disposal of this class of criminals.

The danger to society and its welfare from the lawlessness of these ignorant, vulgar, and vicious classes is not to be minimized nor ignored. But the sorrows untold, the lives blighted, the hopes that are blasted, and the story of the multitudes that go to the death, or worse, through the refinement of cruelty and of a barbarism, has become so entwined and interlaced with the ordinary and every-day events of life as to lose sight of their importance with the masses, and their relationship as “feeders” to notorious or outbreaking infractions of law.

The acquisition of goods or wealth by barbarous or savage tribes, is obtained by successful and predatory warfare upon the weaker tribes of their fellows; and forcible seizure of wealth belonging to others is not prevented by disturbance of their conscience through study or personal desire for personal application of the golden rule. We are “civilized,” but selfishness and greed and willingness to unduly profit by the toil of others are not banished. “Perilous times” in the “last days” said Saint Paul; “lovers of self,” “covetous”; wanting and seeking by all the permissible and cruel arts of civilized barbarism to possess ourselves of the fruit of other’s toil or enforced sacrifice.

The desire to “rule in righteousness,” and in the interest of the masses, is not believed by anybody to be the dominant motive in political strife to-day. We have witnessed a practical sample of influences that tend toward the loss of patriotism, the love of country, or humanity, at Springfield, in the fight of “patriots” of their own party, and among themselves and their personal friends, for a position and place where first themselves and their immediate and unwavering supporters are to be rewarded with the honors and spoils of office, if they succeed in their persistent and painful endeavors in this direction. Not only patriotism, but even politics has been largely eliminated, and self made the object sought through control of legislation affecting interests that are to be fostered and “protected” thereby.

Go where you will in this city—where wealth and its attendants flourish, vulgar or vain, refined or respectable, at the race-track where the “bookmakers” trade and the pool-room traffickers are a living advertisement of the power of wealth to purchase legislation in their own interest—where not half of the people go to see the running of horses, but where men spend their time between drinks at the bar, betting, or ogling women who are there with money never earned, flushed with the excitement of betting, forgetting their dignity, if they ever had any; and women! and men! of whom we can not write, that throng these places—or on the other hand, find the fashionable church throng so interested and absorbed so much of their time in the acquirement of great wealth too often made possible only by the “protective” influences of a legislation purchased by the wealth wrested from the toil that created, and only made its accumulation by the few one of the selfish possibilities of human government.

To the partisan this may have a sound of “cheap politics,” but “respectable politics,” as we have observed, come high to the masses of voters anyhow. Our object in noting these matters is not to depreciate laudable effort at acquirement of that portion of God’s bounty that insures comfort, convenience, or leisure for cultivation of the tastes that belong to a true refinement; but to say that others, whose toil only renders them a possibility to us, should not be deprived of these same comforts by our selfishness, greed, or lack of human sympathy and Christian obligation toward our fellow men.

There were no poor in Enoch’s community. We are not disposed we think, to attribute the lack of better conditions for the masses altogether to the rich; and we believe that it is possible for a “rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven.” But both Paul and Peter, as well as the Savior, have declared it to be a risky undertaking that will seemingly demand more courage and sacrifice on his part than from the man who has not the trial of having to part with his money—hence the danger.

We prefer, however, for safety, so far as relates to our permanent and eternal interests, to take the explanations and prophecies of the plainly-written statements of Malachi, and of the Apostle James (Malachi 3:5; James 2:1-5; 5:1-6), and the unequivocal warnings of the Scriptures upon these matters, to the explanations of young Mr. Rockefeller to his Sunday-school class.

A man whose father’s income is accounted at over one hundred thousand dollars per day, and who feels and indulges in a desire to further augment this income in raising, by his edict, the price of a gallon of coal-oil to the man that has to depend upon its use, and whose income or accumulation in a life of daily toil for fifty years would not amount to a considerable fraction of the tribute of the American people to Mr. Rockefeller for a single day, has his spiritual, if not his moral sense, so obscured or atrophied as to render him a poor judge of scripture ethics, or real meaning, and who could only possibly deceive those of his kind, or those who never read, or if they do at all are not accustomed to the moral processes of thinking that a safe and truthful analysis ought to furnish.

The moral that we undertake to draw is that "This gospel of the kingdom" and government of God, as I hope we ourselves will more clearly understand it soon, must "be witnessed in all the world" as a warning against the final perils that overtake national injustice; and a persistent refusal to "render to God, the things that belong to God"; and that we, by our life and preaching, may be able so far as we can to illustrate the doctrine of "Peace and good will to all," and especially, like the Master, to those who need helpful words and deeds the most that they may receive, through its divine touch, a foretaste of the time when injustice will not be, because selfishness has been banished.

We are under reasonable obligation to God and our fellow men to publish and proclaim in our great cities, and everywhere, after a clear and understanding fashion, that "the kingdom of God has come nigh" unto the people of this generation, and that the rational evidences of this great truth are at hand for presentation upon opportunity; so that we, as proselyters, though we appear to a great extent unsuccessful from the world's view-point, may occupy with faithful Noah in our true light, in the awful and solemn day of disaster for the enemies of truth and right and righteousness, and of glory and final triumph for its friends.

M. H. BOND.

798 West Adams Street, CHICAGO, Illinois.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Half Hours With Parents and Teachers.—No. 6.

A SERIES OF FAMILIAR TALKS INTENDED FOR USE IN LOCALS
AND HOME CLASSES.

Edited by the Daughters of Zion.

THE MISSION OF THE HOME.

"Every home should be a center from which God's benefits are dispensed."

Home—the place where two souls begin life together as one. What a sacred place! The dearest spot on earth to them, and, after, to their children.

When two young people enter into married life, in the supreme happiness of being together, their interest is likely to be all absorbed by each other and the home they have established. But if they have taken for their motto, "Each for the other, and both for God," accepting the truth that they who serve God must serve their fellow men, they will remember that they have other obligations and will find in their home increased responsibility with added opportunity to do good. They have formed one of those centers from which good should go out to the world.

A bride of a few months said to a friend who was visiting her in her cozy home, "Sometimes my happiness seems so great that I can hardly contain it. I feel that I must share it with others." A blessed thought—that of wanting to share; and sooner or later each home-keeper will find opportunity to give of the comfort and happiness of her home to those who come within it or to whom its influence may extend. How will such opportunities be used?

In wisdom and in love God so arranged that the people of the earth should be grouped in families, and has made it natural that those who are bound together by the family ties should be very dear to one another. And the home associations afford a means of development in character not found elsewhere. And indeed, the question arises, Can a well rounded character be so perfectly developed in any other surroundings? It is true there are circumstances which will, or may, develop some of the attributes necessary to this perfecting, but in the home—the family—God has so ordered it that a demand is made upon every attribute necessary for this work.

The mother who has kept the home and has watched over her children in sickness and in health, from babyhood until they are grown, or until with heart-strings torn she is parted from them by death, and the father who has provided for his family and has shared the joys and sorrows, the hopes and fears and cares of the mother, have gained a depth of experience under which if moved by the right spirit, the manhood and womanhood within them have been strengthened and enlarged beyond human power to measure.

It has been to them a training in patience, in suffering, in tenders and thoughtful forbearance. In this relation they have known the depths of human sorrow, the heights of human love—have, as it were, entered into the sanctuary not made by human hands and have parted the curtain before the holy of holies, where God has spoken to their souls of his own long suffering, tender forbearance, and undying love, and they have learned here as they could learn nowhere else the meaning of God's fatherhood to sinful, erring man.

There is great opportunity for doing good within the family itself, between brothers and sisters, children and parents. And parents have done great work of good in the world who have brought up a family properly. But children have not had the best bringing up who have not been trained to consider the good of others, both those who may come within the family circle and those without who may be reached by the ministrations of its members.

Home is not intended to be a place where the interests alone of those residing there are to be served, but the superior advantages, the blessings of the home are to work for the good of the community and so of the world.

We are only stewards over all that the Lord has given us, and as such should hold ourselves ready to dispense whatever benefits he has placed in our power to bestow. All narrow selfishness is far removed from the generous helpfulness encouraged by the teaching of the gospel, which those who occupy in their own homes are especially in position to exercise.

From the Bible we gain instruction to the effect that we should be "given to hospitality"; "lovers of hospitality"; that we should "use hospitality one to another without grudging." It is likely that this instruction would have a closer application to the hospitality of Martha and Mary and their brother Lazarus, when they gladly received the Savior and made him comfortable in their well-appointed home than to the hospitality of those who throw wide their doors for an array of beautifully dressed persons who will do them credit to be acknowledged as friends and who will fully appreciate and reciprocate the social favors bestowed.

The welcome that warms the heart; the readiness to share a meal even without previous knowledge to enable one to prepare it according to cherished ideals for company; the setting aside of self and selfish affairs to show an interest in one's guest; these are essentials of hospitality.

Wealth and roomy homes are not requisite to the exercise of such hospitality. We know a home in a little, brown, unpainted house in the suburbs of a city the home of poor, hardworking people, that might serve as an example in hospitality. Having always a meager income, the wife doing sewing for others, in addition to the work in the house and more or less in the garden, an aged father and invalid mother forming part of household, these people are never too busy to give welcome to the stranger, neighbor, or friend who might come, though their own work must go on as soon as possible, never too crowded or too tired to make one more bed on a cot or lounge, never too troubled over their own misfortunes to listen and sympathize with some other soul in trouble. Finding a poor country girl, late one evening, who had failed to find work and would be on the streets for the night, the husband brought her home, though a stranger to him, and she slept in the room with his daughter, safe from the dangers of a city at night. Surely it would be of such as this that the Savior would say, "I was a stranger and ye took me in."

It is a matter of wonder to many how this family can take care of so many, as poor as they are, but their store seems like the widow's flour and oil, and the blessing of the Lord is with them.

Is not this home filling the mission which prepares noble sons and daughters to take their places in the world, seeking to live in accordance with gospel teaching, founding in their turn homes from which they shall reach out to help the sick and the needy and in which the good of each other and all who come to them is unselfishly sought after? Is it not "a center from which God's benefits are dispersed"?

In the absence of these hampered conditions, with plenty of room, and comfortable means, how much more could be done! Not much more certainly, in the way of making people feel at home, but the greater ease with which this can be done adds greater obligation. "To whom much is given, of him will much be required." But the obligation rightly assumed becomes a pleasure.

Have you ever noticed how often false pride interferes with this pleasure? We do far better to give of ourselves regardless of embarrassing circumstances. And they lose greatly in pleasure given and received who do not treat the most humble guest with as much deference as the most distinguished one. Paul's advice to "condescend to men of low estate" is needed here. And no doubt Paul meant by this to place one's self on a level with them in a spirit of true humility, understanding their feelings from their own standpoint, not in any condescension of manner. When parents set the example of uniform kindness of manner and of speech, in and out of the presence of visitors, how easily the children fall into the same habit, and how pleasant it is to see them eager to do their part, willing to give up their own wishes for the comfort of a guest. Those who are in the habit of doing this will never be so distressed as was one little girl who could scarcely eat at all because her place at the table was changed.

This kindness, too, will be likely to extend beyond the home, as indeed it should do, and the ordinary family with thoughtful interest in those around them can find numerous ways of being neighborly and kind. In such work, also, the children can be enlisted, helping to keep them occupied and happy, and bringing them a little nearer to obeying the commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

American Teaching the Czar.

An American is teaching the Czar how to develop the resources of Siberia, says the June World's Work. John Rosene has obtained mining concessions in Siberia capitalized to-day at $5,000,000. Three years ago he was engaged in a small way in the Pacific Coast trade. "When a man takes $80 into Siberia and comes back after three months' work with $1,000, you get interested," he says. This experience of a Nome goldmine aroused him to Asiatic possibilities.

He learned that a concession for mining in Siberia, financed by Russian and English capital, had lapsed through the displeasure of the Czar at speculation with the concern's stocks.

"I will get half that stock and the renewal of the concession," said John Rosene.

He got them. The London holders were anxious to unload worthless stocks and they were cheap. Then he went back to Seattle and organized the Northwestern Commercial Company. In a few weeks, word came from St. Petersburg that the concession had been revived by the Czar. John Rosene hastened to the Russian capital, had personal interviews with the Czar, was given a free hand in several kinds of commercial operations. These included taking American miners into Siberia, to mine, to use timber, to fish, to take furs, and to operate between Seattle and Siberia with trading vessels.

Within a month, the Northwestern Siberian Company was organized, capitalized at $5,000,000 and purchased the three Pacific liners recently operated from Puget Sound to the Orient by the Northern Pacific Railroad. Their ships will probably sail under the flag of the Northwestern Siberia Company as Russian transports. Who can tell? The ramifications of American enterprise run to unexpected places.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The Sunday-School, What is It?

Doubtless there are few if any here who do not understand the meaning of those dear familiar words, "Sunday-school"; a school or kindergarden of the work of Christ; a school where not merely the children may attend, but one where those who even can lisp between the innocent lips the name of Jesus, down to men and woman whose locks have silvered with age and whose eyesight and hearing have become dimmed.

It is a school where we are to teach and be taught.

It is a school where the rich may come and where the poor should be equally as welcome. In fact it is a school where the old, the young, the rich, the poor may all meet together for an hour to learn more of the blessed record left here for us to study.

ITS AIM AND OBJECT.

The aim of the Sunday-school is a high one, and if all will but clothe themselves with the whole armor and unite with us in the association we are quite sure it will be reached.

Our aim is to better mankind, to educate in the gospel, to prepare the minds of the younger ones to be more capable of grasping the more advanced truths when presented in the pulpit. To do good is, or should be, the lifework of all God's creatures, and if such is the case, surely we can not learn the lessons too young, for we must first learn the lessons ourselves and place our own toes to the line before we can help others. Therefore let us not hesitate in the preparation; then gather in the young as also the aged ones.

Some have said, "We are too old to attend Sunday-school." Dear Saints, are you ever too old to learn of God, or are you ever too old to help teach others? We need you, you who have had the experience of years, to help us in our work. You who have never known the pleasures to be derived in working for the Master in this line of God's work, come,

"Take the warning sent from heaven,
Present hours glide fast away;
Wouldst thou know a happy moment,
Work while it is called to-day."

Do not wait for a more opportune time to work, but come now with earnest thought and purpose, seeking ever to do the will of Him who loves us and gave his life for us, and you will then not only be helping to mold the characters of the little buds of promise, but you will be helping to unfold in older ones the calyxes of gold.

Then, fellow laborers, let us not become discouraged should the fruits of our labors never be seen here below; but remember that our good deeds, though small they may be, are being recorded in the courts above and will in time increase our reward.

"Then right onward let our watchword be,
Nor look with care behind us;
Then when our captain scans his ranks
On duty he will find us."

ELSIE RUSSELL.

For the Des Moines, Iowa, district convention.

Using What We Have.

Not what we have, but how we use it, is the measure of our power, and that marks the highest degree of our real service. This measure, and this degree, are possible to us each and all in God's service, whatever are our limitations. The little Hebrew slave-maid, who simply told the truth she knew about the prophet Elisha, did a work in the royal court of Syria that no money or royal influence could secure. Thus always in God's service. Doing what we can is doing our best. Each of us can thus say:

"I ask not wealth, but power to take
And use the things I have aright.
Not years, but wisdom that shall make My life a profit and delight."

—Sunday School Times.

The Secret of It.

I once heard a pastor say of one of the most useful members of his church: "He isn't nearly so intelligent as many of the other members of the church, but he is so—so—well, so enthusiastic—that's it! I declare if he isn't the most enthusiastic member in the whole church. He fairly radiates enthusiasm. You feel the contagion of it if you go near him. I tell you enthusiasm like his counts for a good deal in the church."

Enthusiasm counts for a great deal in every good work, and it is of the highest value in the Sunday-school. Every superintendent knows the value of it. Every superintendent knows that the intensely enthusiastic teacher, even though he lack education, will sometimes make greater progress than the most highly educated teacher who lacks the element of enthusiasm. Emerson never voiced a greater truth than when he said: "Every great and commanding movement in the annals of the world is the triumph of enthusiasm." The Sunday-school itself was the outgrowth of a devoted and intensely enthusiastic soul seeking to be more useful for Christ.—New Century Teachers' Monthly.

It Pays.

It pays to give the very best that one has to give to the work of teaching in the Sunday-school, for it is His work, and his blessing will come upon it if it is well and faithfully done.

It pays to give a great deal of time and thought and prayer to the preparation of the Sunday-school lesson, for one can not search too long nor too deeply into God's word, nor can all of its wonderful truths be discovered without faithful study and earnest prayer.

It pays to do all that you can do to win the confidence and the affection of the boys and of the girls in your class. You can teach with greater force and power if you have the confidence and the love of your scholars. The sincere affection of a child is something worth striving for, and fortunate and happy is the teacher whose scholars really love her.

It pays to organize and sustain a teachers' meeting in the Sunday-school. But it must be a real live teachers' meeting if it is to secure the best results. It should have your warm and constant support, and you should go to it prepared to give as well as to receive information. The teachers' meeting should be as informal as possible, and as many as can should "take part" in it. It should really be a class in which all should ask and answer questions. It is not difficult to have a very interesting teachers' meeting when the teachers are interested, heart and soul in their work.

It pays to have a reward for unfailing punctuality in your attendance at Sunday-school. You will find that the teacher who is "always there" will have a far higher percentage of attendance on the part of the scholars than the teacher who is irregular in attendance.

It pays to teach a manly religion to your boys. The splendid and inspiring manliness of Christ and of his religion can not be made too prominent in one's teaching. Treat your boys as if they were men, and forbear the "coddling" ways that a boy of a manly spirit will be likely to resent.

It pays to make sacrifices for the good of the scholars individually and for the class as a whole. It may be a good deal of "bother" to have the class at your home, and it may be something of a "bother" to write letters to the boys or to the girls when you are away from home. It is sometimes a good deal of "bother" to look up all the references and "side-lights" one must sometimes look up in the study of the lesson, but it is a kind of "bother" that pays.—J. L. Harbour, in New Century Teachers' Monthly.

The Round Table.

One very interesting and profitable part of the late convention of the Fremont, Iowa, district was the round table. And for the benefit of all we give in brief the plan and the subjects and the outlines developed.

THE PLAN.

Select the subjects suitable for your workers and for your needs. Assign a certain one or part to a person who shall lead in the discussion. After they have given their views on the subject it is then thrown open for a general discussion. And while this general discussion is going on, let the superintendent or one in charge make an outline on the blackboard of the main points developed and at the close of the discussion briefly review the several topics.

The persons called upon to lead in these discussions should have three or four weeks notice of what is expected of them. And request should be made for them to prepare in writing their part in case they can not attend the convention, and send to the convention officers in time for use that the convention may not be disappointed.

SUBJECTS AND OUTLINES.

Name five things the superintendent should have in mind before the school opens. This was assigned to Bro. ——. He made his reply and from this and the discussion that followed, the following was developed:

1. See that officers and teachers are in their places ready for work.
2. Provide substitute teachers before class time if necessary.
3. See that the place of recitation for each class is in order.
4. See that the books have been properly distributed.
5. To notify the one to be called upon for the opening prayer should you call on another.
6. See that the fire will not need fixing during opening exercises.
7. That the classbooks and envelopes are in the hands of the teachers ere they start to their place of recitation.

Give four ways of increasing attendance and interest. Sr. —.

1. Make the work bright, cheerful, and attractive.
2. Have a visiting committee, one that works.
3. Start and maintain a live Home Department in your school.
4. Observe the special days with appropriate programs.

Name six points to make in teaching a lesson. Sr. —, gave as answer the following:

1. The place. 2. Time. 3. Persons. 4. The event. 5. Bearing upon the previous. 6. Lesson illustrations. 7. Lesson application. 8. Review.

Letter Department.

RIVERSIDE, California, June 14, 1904.

Editors Herald: Inadvertently we omitted the name of Bro. J. C. Clapp as one of the general ministry who will be in attendance at our reunion convening July 22, near Santa Ana, California. Bro. N. W. Best, of Redlands, California, is chairman of the reunion committee, of which we were not aware when we wrote last. Communications should be addressed to him therefore, instead of Bro. Will Mills. We learn that a cooperative table will be in evidence, and that Bro. Kaufman will have charge thereof. The committee will give due notice as to arrangements, etc. Everything moving nicely here.

Respectfully,
T. W. WILLIAMS.

CONDON, Oregon, June 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: The conference of the Portland District, convened here on Saturday last.

There were but few from abroad, but the branch membership here seemed to turn out en masse, which made a good attendance.

A good, friendly feeling prevailed throughout the entire sessions.

Yesterday was general election day, so the Saints took advantage of the occasion and held an all-day social, and until ten o'clock at night, with ice-cream, cake, strawberries, and other nice things. They took in over eighty dollars, netting something over fifty dollars.

The conference voted to purchase a tent, part of necessary funds having already been donated to the district. So three energetic sisters were appointed a committee, to raise the funds. The result was that the money was raised, and seventy cents over, before the conference closed. So you see Oregon Saints are alive to the work, both spiritually and financially.

We expect to use the tent a little later on, when the evenings get warmer, in the city of Portland. We have a big force in this district this year, and of course expect to accomplish wonders. Of the General Conference appointments there are two of us. This branch is well provided with local help—elders, priests, teachers, and deacons.

The Portland Branch has not so many officials in it, but the material that they do have is good, from which I expect to get help enough to run the tent in the city.

The Utah people, I understand, have a larger membership in Portland, than we have, but we will try and help them tell the difference betwixt them and us in faith and doctrine.

A great portion of this State is mountainous, with but two railroads in it; one at the extreme north, the other well to the west; which makes it difficult and expensive to travel, the old-fashioned stage-coaches being in use.

I kept as still as possible as to my abilities or capabilities, and the brethren were unwise enough to elect me district president; so, if any want help in the district, notify me, addressing me at 631 North Union Avenue, Portland, Oregon.

This leaves me well, and hopeful.
J. C. CRABB.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 23, 1904.

Editors Herald: On the 18th and 19th the writer had the pleasure of meeting with the Saints at Centerville in our regular stake conference. There were but few present from the outside branches, but those who were there can testify to the warm hospitality of the Centerville Saints. They have a small branch, but we believe that their members will be materially added to if they are faithful. They have a nice church building to meet in, and the branch seems ready for a good continued effort.

The sessions of conference were all quite peaceful and satisfactory. The preaching by Elders John Smith, D. C. White, and J. S. Snively was good. The only important item of business was the report of the reunion committee. It was decided to hold the reunion at Davis City, September 2 to 11 inclusive. We will have splendid grounds and good water. Tents can be rented for two dollars each for the ten days. We are trying to arrange for an eating-house where meals will be furnished very close to cost. A further notice will be published soon. Several of our leading ministers have been invited, and with our local and missionary force for the stake, who will be expected to attend without personal invitation, will make a strong force of speakers. We trust that all will commence now to get ready by praying for God's Holy Spirit to attend them as they go, that we may have a season of peace and happiness.

In bonds,
F. B. BLAIR.

BRIDGE, Oregon, June 13, 1904.

Editor Herald: Over a month ago I had the pleasure of meeting in Bandon, where I was holding a course of meetings, Elder Keeler who is to be my traveling companion in this field. He continued meeting at Bandon, while I went to Dora and held a series of meetings, after which we met at Myrtle Point, where we were met by Bro. Lawn Cribbins and taken to his home near Bridge. Here we held eleven meetings resulting in the baptizing of one. The meetings were well attended, more coming than could get seats at the last meeting. We then returned to Myrtle Point, spent one day in getting the tent ready, shipped it here and commenced meeting four days ago.

It is one of the worst places I have yet found for tent work. The wind blows so hard it is difficult to keep the tent up, and the dust is something dreadful, covering bedding, books, clothing, and everything. With dust, dirt, and wind by day, and hoodlums at night, it is rather an uphill business.

I find Bro. Keeler a good missionary and a wise counselor. We are both as well as we could expect under such conditions. Tent work is hard, too hard, for a man of Bro. Keeler's age.

More by and by.
HIRAM L. HOLT.

ALBION, Idaho, June 6, 1904.

Dear Herald: It is written that there is a time for every purpose under the sun. The better the cause, the more timely that all Saints should be heard, even the weakest of all who may or can be called Saints. Advice was given in past time to the Saints not to "joggle the boat," but there seems to have been a time to do this. I even felt the joggle far away in the West, even in Idaho.

A justifiable cause sets aside rules, as in this case, and I dare say it was deemed for the best—if not a necessity. When I have read from time to time the appeals for Graceland College it seemed to me some more potent measure should be adopted to secure the payment of the debt which has accumulated.

The building of the college was a church measure and was very much needed either at Lamoni or Independence, if not a similar institution at each place. As an individual I am willing to pay several times my proportion for that purpose at both places. When the church at conference adopts measures for what is deemed the good of the church and the cause, then it should be considered as a legitimate call for the united support of all Saints. How else can we ever hope to take our place on earth as the church and kingdom of God—"a light to the world"?

Institutions of learning are a necessity. Some people, and wealthy ones, too, argue that it is wrong to tax those who have no children for the education of others. I have heard elders who held credentials from the church as ministers of "the gospel of the kingdom" urge that the college could only benefit some in Lamoni and its regions, and far away Saints were paying money for the support of him or his family. A proper education in height, width, and depth of the scope of the gospel is sorely needed by all of us.

I very much wish all our members, and the ministry in particular, had a good education, such as the college is designed to give. It is intended as a means of grace to the lips, as well as manner.

I have been waiting patiently for the apportionment of the Graceland debt, that the ship may sail smoothly along as serenely as if she had not so recently been joggled by her friends. It is a shame that the necessity existed for repeated appeals for Graceland. Let us set her free, and keep her free to bless the children of the kingdom. There are many ways of letting our light shine,—the salt of the earth, an example to believers and to the world.

Yours for the freedom of Graceland,
CHARLES ALBERTSON.

---

Zion's Praises.

BROTHER F. B. BLAIR, Mgr., Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother Blair: I have had it in mind to write you for some time in answer to yours of January 19, 1904, addressed to Bro. William Crumley, in reference to the new Sunday-school song-books, Zion's Praises.

We commenced their use as soon as received and I am delighted with them from the start. I have used a good many different Sunday-school song-books in Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Christian, and other Sunday-schools where I have been, but I think this book has a great many good songs out of several of them as well as our own hymnal, and I also like the new ones we have tried very much. I am especially pleased to see several there out of Voice of Melody, published by Lorenz & Co. The No. 1 by Sr. Vida Smith is a fine song with appropriate music that appeals to me very strongly indeed. We are using No. 167 for little singers and Nos. 200 and 125 for our Children's Day exercises on the 12th inst.

There is a wealth of good music in the book and I like it because it gives us something new to work on for a long time, and they possess a degree of difficulty and have some real music in them that will not be worn out in a few months. Children will learn a good song and of a fair degree of difficulty as well as a poor washy song, and then their taste is raised for something still better as they grow older; and while some seem to think the songs are too hard, I am heartily in favor of them. All it needs is a few leaders and all the rest will soon learn them, and there is music worth the time it takes to master them. I am more than pleased with the book, and desire to extend my unqualified congratulations to the committee. We also use it for our Religio with fine success.

Our Sunday-school made a net gain of thirty-seven last month. Bro. John H. Haxton, superintendent, is a tireless worker, full of zeal for the work in all its branches.

Your brother in the faith,
R. T. COOPER.

LOS ANGELES, California, June 7, 1904.

---

OSAGE, Assiniboia, Canada, June 10, 1904.

Dear Herald: We look forward to your visits with pleasure. You have been our silent teacher for over two years. When we moved here from Lamoni, I felt lost for the association of Saints, not knowing of a member anywhere around. Since then several have moved in, and how glad we were when Bro. Alvin Knisley came in March, the first elder to this part. He has been laboring near Weyburn as best he could. Owing to the busy time of season and thinly settled country, it is hard to get the people out only on Sabbaths.

We had the pleasure of seeing Bro. Knisley baptize and confirm four promising people last Sunday, fruits of his labors south of Weyburn, where he baptized four in April, making eight baptized there and more to follow soon. Bro. Knisley assisted them in organizing a Sunday-school, which will be a great help to all. I do hope the truth will reach the honest hearts of this locality, and that the good seed which has been sown the last few weeks, will bring forth fruit to the honor of God, and that soon there may be a branch raised up here.

I count it a blessed privilege to meet those of the one faith from time to time to labor in the Master's cause, not simply because we feel it our duty to do so, but because of the love in our heart and the desire to do all I can for the spread of the most glorious gospel. I want to appreciate the love of God. His care each day brings new proof that he is protecting me from danger and evil. He gives ability and a free agency which is further proof of his love.

As I witness the regularity with which the wheel of time moves and the divine dealings to humanity, taking God for my guide, I desire to love him, love his laws, and delight to do his will. The longer I am engaged in this grand and glorious latter-day work, the more confident I am that it is the faith once delivered to the Saints. May God bless and direct us all, is the desire of your sister, MARY V. BRANTWAIT.

---

REDMOON, Oklahoma, June 8, 1904.

Editors Herald: I derive much pleasure, satisfaction, and comfort from reading the dear old HERALD each week when it comes laden with its precious message of love. How we would miss its visit each week should we be deprived of it. We long to see the conditions reached by the people, which this paper is striving to bring about in the world. If all people would appreciate it as well as we do, it certainly would be held in high estimation, for we consider it one of the very best of papers in the whole world that we have ever read for the spread of gospel truth.

We are considerably interested in the welfare of Graceland. We can not see the advisability of letting such a worthy institution be suppressed for the lack of support, especially in a financial way, and that by a people who otherwise are noted for generosity. Can we afford it and expect to retain a reputation as we have heretofore done for progressiveness? In fact, can we let this matter pass by unsupported and expect to be wholly acceptable to God, who has said "the college debt should be paid"? Our church of fifty thousand communicants certainly is financially able to maintain a school having such a high and noble purpose in view—the development and training of minds for the benefit of God and man. I think our moral and spiritual obligations should prompt us to respond in a substantial way.

My husband is one of the missionary force of Oklahoma. He is absent from home much of his time, laboring for the good of the people. Thus I am left lonely, often, in his absence, although I feel comforted by the gospel hope in making the sacrifice. The sacrifice would not be so hard to endure were it not for present location, on a homestead in Western Oklahoma. We are convinced more than ever of the unadvisability (occupied as my husband is in the ministry) of being located on a homestead which requires some additional hardships incident to frontier life. That we may be freed in this respect and that we may be better enabled to carry on the work of the Lord, we hope to dispose of it even at some sacrifice and move nearer the center of Zion's land. Holding a claim down according to homestead law requires almost constant residence by the family (wife and children at least) for five years, and of course this hinders some in our gospel work, but we are hopeful of being relieved in this respect by any one desiring such a location. We have a little band of Saints numbering about fifty, located on homestead land as we are. Bro. J. W. Hancock is our branch president. Through considerable sacrifice the Saints have partially completed a little church which we worship in. The Saints here are located in Day and Roger Mills Counties, in Western Oklahoma, on and near the Washita River. We are at considerable disadvantage for the want of a railroad, but good prospects to get one nearer than the Choctaw, thirty-five miles distant. The rainfall here compares very favorably with that in other parts of Oklahoma. This part of the Territory is not as well developed to agriculture as some parts, owing to the fact that there has been no settlement scarcely until two or three years ago, but now, by the enterprise and thrift of the people, it is coming rapidly to the front. The soil is good and water fine. Crops at the present are looking well.

The labors of my husband will be confined to Southern Oklahoma the remainder of the year, having been appointed to labor with Bro. B. F. Renfroe. Those who desire their services for gospel work in those parts will do well to write them of their wants. Bro. B. F. Renfroe's permanent address is Davidson, Oklahoma; and S. S. Smith's permanent address is Redmoon, Oklahoma.

Ever hoping and praying for the welfare of the great work, I remain,
Your sister in gospel hope,

MRS. EMMA M. SMITH.

FINLEYVILLE, Pennsylvania, June 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: The letter of Bro. E. D. Brownlee containing a dream came to my notice. This is the dream as I read it in the May 25 number of SAINTS' HERALD:

"I dreamed I saw Brigham Young. (I never saw him in my life, but I understood for sure that this was Brigham Young.) His head was severed from his body, yet his head was alive. I did not hear him speak, but could see his lips and eyes move. His face was shaved smooth and I looked with astonishment at his head to know that it still had life sufficient to make the eyes and lips move."

The interpretation: The body is the Brighamite church, and the head represented Brigham Young being the head and founder of that body, and severed from the body, meaning that he is cut off temporarily in death. And the head being alive shows plainly that the principles that he set forth, such as polygamy, Adam-god, sealing of wives, and other teachings of his, are still believed in strongly enough to cause the spiritual guides at the head of that body or church to still believe in him as a true prophet, and teach the principles he set forth; eyes represent the light of the body, and the prophet at the head of that church now would be still teaching the same things that Brigham Young taught; seeing that the eyes in the severed head still moved would indicate as much.

EUNICE BEAM.

BERKELEY, California, June 9, 1904.

Dear Herald: We, Sr. H. R. Tupper and myself, arrived home safely after two months' absence. What a grand time we had in attending the General Conference in that temple erected by divine revelation. How we did appreciate all the sermons, every one as ordered by God. In the business meetings we can not say wisdom was used at all times. We can see great mistakes, always, afterwards; but I believe all did the best we knew how. I did not feel good over the college business; but I feel assured that the college debt will all be paid. The Saints are sure to come forward and will see it all paid, and the Lord will bless twofold all that give to it. A dear sister came to see me to-day. She can not read or write, but has faith in God, and gave two dollars two days ago, towards the debt, not knowing what she would live on, as she is poor and her husband gone. But she showed me a check for ten dollars, sent her to-day, which she said was miraculous. I said, So it shall continue with you, and all who trust God for all. I feel to plead for the college. Other churches have them. I have visited many hospitals and sanitariums of different faiths, and I feel that we need them very much, too, in our faith; and we shall have them all in time. We have only to work, pray, and trust; as we seek, we shall find. We read in Psalm 37: "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord; and he delighteth in his way." Also, "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he will bring it to pass." This I know is true. If every Saint would give fifty cents apiece, money would be in the treasury and the debt paid. Who will withhold so small an amount? Surely no one, when the Lord says the debt should be paid.

And oh, to have a prophet to lead us in these latter days! Let us not turn aside from the Lord. We had a lovely day with the prophet and his noble wife, and those dear little boys. How we did appreciate that visit; also with his son Fred, and his lovely wife. Bro. F. B. Blair and his dear wife were so kind to take us over the college building and Saints' Home. Dear Sr. Frances! may God bless her in her noble work. And there was Oscar Anderson, a young man, such a noble and grand worker in the Sunday-school, numbering four hundred and seventy-one scholars we were told, which was a grand sight as the dear brother took us around to the different rooms.

As we went out to visit the stakes of Zion, we went to Kerr, formerly Far West; then to Independence. We can not say enough in praise of that stake. Like Lamoni, it is lovely, and the Saints are just lovely, and the country is grand, the soil rich.

On our return we stopped at Salt Lake City, Farmington, and Ogden, visiting only a part of our relatives,—over one hundred now out there in the valley of the mountains. Found all anxious to inquire about Zion. They contemplate building a temple on the twenty-five acres of land they have bought in Independence. I told them that was right, they would get converted there; for no adultery would be allowed there. They do not get angry with me; we love to the last. Blood is thicker than water. Except we love one another so we can tell each other our faults, we are none of His.

I hope all the dear friends who wished to hear from me through the HERALD, take it, as we could not write to all separately. I distributed all the tracts Bro. Blair gave me, in Utah, and trust that they will do much good to them, and that the seed will take root, as many are seeing how they have been led by blind leaders. Bro. and Sr. Chase are doing good work in Salt Lake City. We visited Sr. Alice Wilson, and Sr. Walker; but visited more of the Mormons, as we had so many invitations, having been there before, and having so many friends. Sisters can get in better there than elders, as they are very much afraid of our elders; but they will listen to relatives, and ask questions. May God bless all.

Your sister,

M. L. DOUGLAS.

The Mountains.

The issue of the Outlook dated June 4 is its Fifteenth Annual illustrated Recreation Number. As is the custom of the Outlook, this issue in addition to the usual editorial and interpretative treatment of news events, important public questions and current literature, contains a group of out-of-door articles, the majority of them carefully and fully illustrated. Most notable among these articles in this year's Recreation Number is the first instalment of Mr. Stewart Edward White's serial "The Mountains." This may be called a companion series to Mr. White's "The Forest," which was published in the Outlook last summer. "The Mountains" describes and pictures the author's experiences in exploration and camping out in a section of a California Sierras very little known. Like "The Forest," it not only abounds in practical suggestions for camping and woods life but is infused with the spirit and love of nature.

Fourth of July.

One fare for the round-trip, plus twenty-five cents, July 2, 3, 4, within two hundred miles from starting point on Nickel Plate Road. Return limit July 5. Chicago depot: La Salle and Van Buren Streets. City ticket offices, 111 Adams Street, and Auditorium Annex. Telephones Central 2057 and Harrison 2208. (No. 9) 24-3t.

Miscellaneous Department.

Conference Minutes.

Mobile.—Conference met at Seminole, Alabama, May 28, 1904, President F. P. Scarcliff in chair. Reports were received: Elders F. P. Scarcliff, W. L. Booker, G. W. Sherman baptized one, Jesse Reeder baptized three. Bishop's agent reported: Receipts, $77.95; expenditures, $58.00; balance on hand, $19.95. Report from Three Rivers approved. Report from Perseverance laid on table. The conference voted that the money contributed to purchase a horse and buggy be turned over to W. L. Booker, Bishop's agent, as a free-will offering. Afternoon session. Report of Perseverance Branch was referred back to branch for correction. Two-day meetings were continued, to be appointed by the president. Following officers were elected: F. P. Scarcliff, president; G. W. Sherman, vice-president; Hulda Porter, secretary; and Frank Huver, treasurer. The following were sustained: F. P. Scarcliff, historian of district; W. L. Booker, Bishop's agent; also the missionaries in charge, and their associates. The conference was a grand one, and meetings well attended. Adjourned to meet Saturday before the full moon in August, with the Bluff Creek Branch.

Northeastern Illinois.—Conference convened at Mission, May 28, 1904, at 10 a. m. President F. G. Pitt was chosen to preside; W. E. Williamson and J. E. Wildermuth secretaries; Belle Anderson chorister; and Mary Anderson organist. Report of president read. Treasurer reported balance on hand last report in general fund, $1.68; tent fund, $2.05; paid for postage, 34 cents; balance general fund, $1.34; tent fund, $2.05. Branches reporting: Unity 23, Plano 163, Mission 115, West Pullman 42, First Chicago 132, Central Chicago 116, and Dekalb 57. Reports of West Pullman and Central Chicago were referred to branches for correction. Branch presidents reporting: M. H. Bond, J. Midgorden, C. J. Clark, and J. L. Cooper. Elders reporting: F. M. Cooper, M. H. Bond, E. M. Wildermuth, Philemon Pement, and J. E. Wildermuth. Bishop's agent, J. Midgorden, reported due church last report, $87.77; receipts, $273.39; expenditures, $306.05; balance, $55.11. Reunion committee reported that the reunion would be held at Plano on or about the middle of September, 1904. The Kewanee and Southern Wisconsin Districts were invited to participate in reunion. Bro. F. M. Cooper was elected president, M. H. Bond vice-president, and W. E. Williamson secretary and treasurer. Bro. M. H. Bond was chosen to act as a member of the reunion committee in the place of Bro. F. G. Pitt. A resolution was adopted favoring the closing of Graceland College until both the church and college debts are paid, and that said resolution with the reasons offered be sent to the HERALD and Ensign with the request that it be published as the unanimous vote of this district. Six were baptized on Sunday, May 29, by F. G. Pitt. Adjourned to meet at Plano on the last Saturday and Sunday of the time and place of the reunion.

Western Wales.—Conference convened with the Penygraig Branch at Gilfach Goch, May 21-23, 1904. J. W. Rushton chosen to preside. The action of district officers in changing time from June 4, 5, was approved. Branch reports: Pontycaetes 8, Llanelly 24, Penygraig 27; Morrison report referred back for correction. President E. B. Morgan reported Aberaman Branch suspended by district officers. Ministers reporting: Elders, J. W. Rushton, E. B. Morgan, William Newton, J. G. Jenkins, D. Lewis; Priests, W. P. Cox, and D. Edmunds. The brethren of Pontycaete sent a united report. Bishop's agent reported: Receipts, £5, 2s, 1d; paid to Bishop £5, 0s, 7d; agent's expenses £1, 6s. Brn. E. B. Morgan, H. Ellis, and Arthur Edwards were appointed to have the numerous copies of the Welsh hymn book bound which we have on hand. A communication was read from the Bishopric concerning their action in not allowing agents to pay out money, etc. It was unanimously agreed that we accept their explanation. A recommendation from the Penygraig Branch was considered for the ordination of Bro. Evan Miles to the office of a priest, but was not approved. A bill of £1, 0s, 7d, was presented by the Penygraig brethren, and ordered paid out of the district fund, also £1, 7s to the secretary for postage, etc. It was also agreed that all district officers be allowed half railway fare out of district funds. A vote of thanks was tendered to the Saints at Gilfach Goch for their hospitality, and the authorities of the church were sustained in order. Officers chosen: E. B. Morgan president, J. G. Jenkins vice-president, Arthur Edwards treasurer, H. Ellis secretary and Bishop's agent. A resolution of sympathy was read concerning the death of Sr. Margaret Bishop, wife of Lot Bishop, and the conference adjourned to meet at Llanelly, first Saturday and Sunday in October.

Pottawattamie.—Conference met with the Boomer Branch, May 28, 29. Chairman F. A. Smith, assistant M. M. Turpen. D. P. Cooper, secretary pro. tem., and G. F. Hough, assistant. Reports were read from Elders F. A. Smith, M. M. Turpen, James Caffall, C. G. McIntosh, J. P. Carlile, H. N. Hansen baptized 15, S. Butler, Joshua Carlile baptized 1, R. McKenzie, D. K. Dodson, D. Parish, William J. Cook; Priests, G. F. Hough, J. C. Lapworth, J. O. Booth baptized 2, S. C. Foote; Teachers Peter Olsen, Jr., John A. Hansen, P. W. Frederickson. Total sermons, 81; baptisms, 18; marriages, 3; ordinations, 2; blessed 4 children; administered to 43 sick; made 39 official visits. All branches reported. Boomer, 53; Carson, 24; Council Bluffs, 266; Crescent, 165; Fontanelle, 38; Hazel Dell, 58; North Star, 113; Wheeler, 51; total branch enrollment 768. A collection of $2.50 was handed to the secretary for expense. Secretary reported having received for expense of delegates to General Conference of 1904, from different branches, a total of $34.12, which was equally divided between C. Scott, M. M. Turpen, D. R. Chambers, and J. B. Lentz. J. P. Carlile, the Bishop's agent reported: Receipts, $881.70; disbursements, $887.75; on hand, $61.91. On request from Carson for a two-day meeting, it was ordered and the presidency authorized to set date; by motion the district tent was placed in charge of the district presidency. On Sunday Charles B. Bardsley was ordained an elder. A motion prevailed to sustain the Bishop's agent, and conference adjourned to meet at Crescent, at call of the district presidency. J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

Little Sioux.—Conference met with the Saints at Little Sioux June 4, J. M. Baker selected to preside and D. M. Rudd to assist. Annie Stuart as clerk and W. R. Adams to assist. Statistical reports were received from the eleven branches in the district, showing a present membership of 1,636, a net gain of 8. Ten baptisms were reported, two marriages solemnized, and four ordinations performed. The spiritual condition of branches as reported, gave much encouragement, as they indicated substantial spiritual growth. The next session of conference is to be held at Morehead, October 22, beginning at 10 a. m. Sidney Pitt was elected district president, and his selection of Joseph Seddon and S. B. Kibler as associates, was ratified by the conference. District tents were placed in charge of the district presidency and missionary in charge, and the bishop's agent authorized to call on the branches for funds to support it, if occasion demands. The time and place for holding two-day meetings was also left to the district presidency and missionary in charge. Ministerial reports were received from twenty-four of the priesthood members, showing an aggregate of two hundred and seventeen sermons preached, ten baptized, one Sunday-school organized, and much other labor performed, not specifically mentioned. A duplicate license as priest was granted to Joshua Lane, the record of his ordination having been destroyed by fire. On recommendation of the Morehead Branch, Robert A. Ballantyne was ordained an elder, and James C. Ballantyne a priest. At the Sunday morning prayer service Elders Joseph Luff, Charles Derry, and D. M. Rudd were the speakers. James D. Stuart, clerk.

Des Moines.—Conference convened at Des Moines, Iowa, June 4, with Vice-president S. K. Sorensen in charge, assisted by F. A. Smith and N. V. Sheldon, A. A. Reams secretary, assisted by E. O. Clark. Branch reports: Boonesboro 68, Clear Creek 34, Concord 47, Packard 19, Richland 80, Rhodes 43, St. Charles 20, Des Moines 238, Grinnell 21, Oskaloosa 71, and Valley 113. Elders reporting: E. Benedict, C. B. Brown, W. F. Clark, E. O. Clark, W. Christy, F. B. Farr, John Hall, J. F. Mintun, J. E. Laughlin, N. Miller, S. McBernie, W. C. Nirk, J. S. Roth, S. K. Sorensen, N. V. Sheldon, James Troughear, W. C. Earhart, C. J. Peters, with a total of four baptisms; Priests V. Boatwright, John Clark, J. R. Epperson, William Park, J. M. Park, and J. Roberts; Teachers F. A. Brown, A. Freel, J. C. Hidy, W. C. Fetter, F. B. Miller, O. L. Sherman, and A. Walls; Deacons F. Chandler, William H. Farr, and H. V. McKinney. Bishop's Agent, W. Christy, reported from February 27, to June 2, as follows: Receipts, $346.78; expenditures, $325.26; balance, $78.05. For college fund, cash receipts, $29.70; subscriptions, $13.25; total, $42.95. S. K. Sorensen was chosen president, J. F. Mintun vice-president, A. A. Reams sustained as clerk, W. Christy as Bishop's agent. The reunion committee recommended holding the reunion in Des Moines, August 5-14; report accepted unanimously. On Sunday S. K. Sorensen was ordained a seventy as directed by General Conference under the hands of F. A. Smith and J. F. Mintun, and three were baptized. Brethren F. B. Blair, N. V. Sheldon, and F. A. Smith were the speakers of the conference. Time and place for holding next conference left to the call of district officers.

London.—Conference convened at 10:30 a. m., June 4, 1904, at Humber Bay, Ontario. Elder R. C. Evans chosen to preside, assisted by the presidency of the district. Bishop's agent's report: On hand last report, $1,184.29; received, $3,667.89; expended, $4,059.87. Report of Canadian Messenger read, received, and referred to the auditors. Elder Evans preferred a charge against the paper for publishing a letter misrepresenting some of the church authorities. Elder Evans was sustained as business manager of Canadian Messenger; Elder Gregory was sustained as editor; and Sr. MacGregor as assistant editor. A resolution was passed that Bro. Newberry of Grand Valley be paid the expense of publishing letters in the Dufferin Post. A collection amounting to $20.93 in aid of the Graceland College fund was taken. Bro. Leech was ordained a priest, and three who had been baptized Sunday afternoon by Elder S. W. Tomlinson were confirmed. Collections amounting to $54.01 were taken during the conference. Monday, Zion's Religio-Literary Society report read and adopted. Credential committees report read and adopted. Resignation of assistant editor, Sr. Maggie MacGregor received and accepted, and the secretary empowered to draft a vote of thanks to the retiring assistant editor. Sr. F. Miller was chosen assistant editor with a yearly salary of $25. A motion that Sr. MacGregor receive $25 was amended, striking out figures "25" and inserting 7½. A delegate vote being called, the motion carried. Resolutions allowing Elder Gregory as editor $10, and Elder R. C. Evans as business manager $25 for past services on Canadian Messenger, prevailed. Sr. Miller tendered resignation as corresponding editor, which was accepted. Resolved that Elder Gregory receive $10 as editor, and Elder Evans $25 as business manager of Canadian Messenger for the coming year. Resolved that secretary of district receive $10 a year for services. Resolved that it be left to the discretion of the presidency to whom they shall donate copies of Canadian Messenger. Resolved that the two members of the board of publication other than the business manager be discharged. Zion's Religio-Literary Society was granted five minutes of conference time. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the Humber Bay Saints for their hospitality. Resolved that balance on hand be paid secretary for district expenses. Resolved that district place a tax on each branch on the per capita basis for the payment of our share of Graceland debt, secretary to make out the list. Appointment of elders then read. Conference adjourned to meet with the Arthur Branch, October 8, 9. Hannah Leeder, secretary.

Fremont.—Conference met with the Rivertown Branch, May 29 and 30, 1904, with Brn. D. R. Chambers and A. Badham in charge. Joseph Luff and J. M. Stubbart were the speakers on Sunday. Monday, 9 a. m. conference convened for business. Reports from the branches composing the district were read, showing them as being in fair condition. The Sunday-school and Religio reported having a very profitable time. The next conference will be held at Henderson, Iowa, October 16, 17, 1904. J. F. Redfield, secretary.

Northwestern Kansas.—Conference convened June 4, 10 a. m., at Pottersville, S. J. Madden presiding, F. E. Taylor secretary, John A. Teeter assisting. Apostle I. N. White was chosen to assist the presiding officers. Branches reporting: Scandia 30, Rural Dale 51, Twin Creek 46; net gain 5. Homestead and Goodland did not report. Ministers reporting: Elders S. J. Madden, Fred S. Ward, L. F. Johnson, L. G. Gurwell, and Fernando E. Taylor; Priests John A. Teeter, H. J. Jemison, E. H. Eberts, and Silas A. Madden; Teacher G. W. Anderson. Bishop's agent, Fred S. Ward, reported: Receipts, $326.14; disbursed, $143.77; balance, $343.45. District treasurer, Olive B. Ratcliff, reported: On hand last report, $2.20; received since, 40 cents; paid out, 85 cents. Reunion committee asked for, and was granted, two weeks longer in which to locate place and time of reunion, notice of which will appear later. Adjourned to meet the first Saturday and Sunday of reunion. The Spirit of the Master prevailed throughout.

Gallands Grove.—Conference met with the Deloit Branch May 28, 1904, at 9 a. m., for prayer service, business session at 10, D. M. Rudd and J. T. Turner presiding. Branches reporting: Harlan 66, Auburn 62, Salem 63, Dow City 130, Mallard 81, Pilot Rock 30, Gallands Grove 233, Deloit 157, Benan 49; net loss 6. Elders reporting: F. E. Cohrt, C. J. Hunt, D. Brewster, N. V. Sheldon, W. A. Carroll, John Pett, C. E. Butterworth baptized 1, D. M. Rudd, A. R. Crippen, J. T. Turner, F. Hansen, J. L. Butterworth, B. F. Wicks; Priests J. H. Greenwood, J. W. Hurst, A. H. Rudd, G. A. Hoisington; Teachers D. A. Holcomb, J. G. Myers, J. T. Spence; Deacon O. Salisbury. The present district officers were reelected for the coming year.

Bishop's report: Due Bishop last report, $291.22; expenses, $595.50, total $856.72. Receipts $694.10. Due Bishop $162.62. A collection to defray the expenses of secretary was taken and $1.82 received. J. H. Bullard was ordained priest, and the district president was authorized to provide for the ordination of J. H. Greenwood to the office of elder. Preaching by D. Brewster, C. E. Butterworth, and C. J. Hunt. Adjourned to meet at Dow City, Iowa, November 26, 1904, at 9 a. m. Helen B. Rudd, secretary.

Northeastern Missouri.—Conference convened at Bevier, Missouri, June 4, at 10 a. m. Brn. J. A. Tanner, and F. M. Smith in charge. Ministerial reports were read from six elders, two priests. Bevier, Higbee, Pollock, and Greenleaf Branches reported. Bishop's agent's report: receipts, $270.65; expenditures, $344.75; balance on hand $124.73. Moved that the amount due from our district to liquidate the debt on Graceland be proportionately divided, each branch to raise their share. Bro. John Kaler was elected president, F. T. Mussell vice-president, and William C. Chapman secretary. A vote of thanks was tendered Bro. J. A. Tanner for his efficient service as president during the past nine years. Preaching by Brn. F. M. Smith and J. R. Lambert. Adjourned to meet at Higbee, Missouri, October 8 and 9, 1904.

Northeastern Kansas.—Conference met with Idylwild Branch at 10:30 a. m., May 28, 1904. I. N. White presided, assisted by Samuel Twombly. Branches reporting: Atchison, Fanning, Blue Rapids, Centralia, Netawaka, Topeka, Scranton. Ministry reporting: Apostle I. N. White; Seventy M. F. Gowell; Elders S. J. Madden, Samuel Twombly, C. E. Tillinghast, U. F. Rogers, Harry Thomas, C. E. Guinand, Frank G. Hedrick, and Henry Green; Priests S. P. Cox, James W. Burns, A. C. Ingle, B. F. Tigner; Deacon J. S. Robinson. Request from Blue Rapids Branch that S. P. Cox be ordained an elder was granted, and ordination attended to by Brn. White and Gowell. Reunion committee reported Fanning as the place for next reunion and August 26 to September 3 as the time. Samuel Twombly elected district president, Harry Thomas vice-president. Adjourned to meet first Saturday of reunion at Fanning. Preaching by Brn. White and Gowell. Frank G. Hedrick, secretary.

Geelong, Victoria.—Conference convened April 9, 10, 1904. Bro. Butterworth president, assisted by Bro. Haworth. Bro. W. Jones secretary. Branch reports: Queensferry, 44; Hastings, 78; Melbourne, 77. Bishop's agent reported. Ministry reports: C. A. Butterworth, D. McIntosh, W. Mackie, Bro. Kippe, Bro. Trembath, and Bro. Eden. Moved that Bro. H. A. Jenkin be ordained to office of teacher. Moved that report from Hastings Branch concerning Bro. Rennie's ordination be accepted, the matter being left entirely in the hands of the missionary in charge, district president, and president of Hastings Branch. Book agent's report referred to Brn. Davis and Good for auditing. Moved that collectors be appointed in the various branches for the tract fund. District officers: Bro. Kippe president, Bro. McIntosh assistant president, Bro. Read secretary. Moved that next conference meet at Melbourne October 1, 2, 1904. Moved that an elder be appointed to visit Bro. Griffiths. Moved that a cordial vote of thanks be given to Brn. Butterworth and Foster and Mr. Isaacs for their untiring efforts in assisting in building the church. Moved that report of numerical standing of the branches be sent in by next conference. The committee appointed to consider the case relating to matrimonial agencies, reported to the effect that, inasmuch as the Scriptures teach that the remarriage of persons divorced for any other cause than adultery is unlawful: Wherefore, Be it resolved that the Victoria District go on record as being opposed to any of our ministry engaging to perform marriages at any worldly institution where such remarriages are likely to be performed. Members of committee: W. Mackie, D. McIntosh, C. A. Butterworth, W. J. Haworth.

Nauvoo.—Conference convened at Argyle, Iowa, June 11, at 10:30 a. m., with J. W. Peterson in charge, assisted by Frederick M. Smith and James McKiernan; M. H. Seigfried, secretary, assisted by G. Ed Schweers. Burlington, Rock Creek, New London, Keokuk, Farmington, and Montrose Branches reported. Ministerial reports: Elders James McKiernan, J. W. Peterson, J. B. Wildermuth, Elbert A. Smith, George P. Lambert, Lawrence Willey, and F. M. McDonald; Teacher J. W. Stobaugh; Priest H. S. Salisbury; Deacon Solomon Tripp. Bishop's agent, George P. Lambert, reported for eight months, on hand last report, $164.17; receipts, $854.08; expenditures, $717.55. District treasurer, Albert Giesch, reported, on hand last report, $10.51; receipts, $19.20; expenditures, $14.30. A bill of $2.99 was allowed the secretary and historian. George P. Lambert, treasurer of tent committee, reported, on hand, $74.76. Committee authorized to borrow amount yet deficient and purchase a tent as soon thereafter as possible. President and secretary were appointed committee to prepare a program for the next conference. Secretary elected standing credential committee. The following resolution was passed: "Resolved that we indorse the action of the General Conference respecting Graceland College, and that we also fully and heartily indorse the effort of the Bishopric to pay the college debt." The following officers were elected: President, J. W. Peterson; vice-president, H. S. Salisbury; secretary, M. H. Seigfreid; treasurer, Albert Giesch. George P. Lambert ordained bishop under the hands of Frederick M. Smith. Adjourned to meet at Farmington, October 1 and 2, 1904.

Northern Nebraska.—Conference met at Columbus, Nebraska, May 27, 1904, at 8 p. m., Bro. R. Wight, president, in the chair, Charles Fry, vice-president, and James Huff, secretary. Branch reports: Blair 32, Columbus 29, Decatur 106, Omaha 312, Platte Valley, 69. Elders' reports: R. Wight, Charles Fry, James Huff, J. S. Strain, George W. Galley, P. L. Stevenson, H. L. Kinning, B. L. Lewis, J. E. Butts, J. F. Weston, and H. S. Lytle; Priests Marcus Bilyen, George Muril, Lloyd Marteeny, and Richard Brown; Teachers H. H. Robinson, James M. Mills, James M. Case, and C. M. Hollenbeck. Bishop's agent's report: On hand last report, $147.19. Received during four months, $226.10 as tithing, and college fund $10; paid out, $345. District funds: On hand last report, $3.41; received, $60.50; paid out, $61.09. Tent committee reported the branches had refused to repair the district tent. Vote of thanks tendered the Omaha branch for their kind offer to loan their tent to the district, and the offer accepted. The sale of district tent referred to a committee with power to act. J. S. Strain and Lloyd Marteeny given permission to labor in the district. Conference closed to meet with the Platte Valley Branch the last Friday in September, 1904, at 7.30 p. m.

Southeastern Illinois.—Conference convened at 10 a. m., June 10, 1904, at Dry Fork Church; I. A. Morris chosen to preside, assisted by F. M. Davis; P. G. McMahan secretary, Walter Boroughs assistant. Branches reporting: Brush Creek, Springerton, Dry Fork. Verbal reports from Tunnelhill and Parish. Ministry reporting: M. R. Brown, S. D. Goostree, I. A. Morris, F. M. Davis, C. J. Spurlock, J. E. Bozarth, F. L. Sawley, F. M. Slover, Henry Walker, A. H. Johnson. F. L. Sawley was chosen to succeed F. M. Slover on the reunion committee. The appointment of F. M. Davis as Bishop's agent was approved. The district officers were sustained. Conference adjourned to meet with the Parish Branch October 22, 1904.

Far West.—Conference convened with the Stewartville Branch, June 18 and 19. T. T. Hinderks and B. J. Dice presidents, Charles P. Faul and Arch McCord secretaries. Bishop's agent, Charles P. Faul, reported: Receipts, $427.10; expended, $408.25; on hand available in bank, $173.83; less $700, the district's debt to agent. Ministry reporting: J. R. Lambert, H. K. Lewis, J. Armstrong, William Lewis baptized 7, John Davis, C. P. Faul, M. Shaw, A. Booker, N. C. Enge, Arch McCord, G. W. Best, J. S. Constance, William Laurence, William Summerfield, T. T. Hinderks, B. J. Dice, J. C. Elvert, D. E. Powell, A. Nesser; Priests, B. R. Constance, D. H. Schimell, John L. Bear, C. J. Cranus, Robert Garlich, R. S. Parker, Samuel Simmons, N. L. Booker, C. W. Ethridge, F. Uphoff; Teachers Robert McLee, John Piepergerdes. The action of General Conference as presented by I. N. White in adding or annexing Carrol County to the Far West District was on motion ratified. Election of officers: T. T. Hinderks president, B. J. Dice vice-president, Charles P. Faul and Arch McCord secretaries. Charles P. Faul sustained as Bishop's agent, B. J. Dice treasurer. The following resolution was passed by the conference and ordered a copy to be given to the local paper, also one each to the St. Joseph dailies: "We the members of the Reorganization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in conference assembled are aware of the movement in this the Far West District by many of the citizens regarding the observance of the Sabbath day as a day of rest, therefore be it resolved that we hereby pledge our moral support in any just method that may be adopted whereby any and all business of a commercial nature, especially the saloon, may be made, and if necessary compelled to comply with the law in regard to closing on the Sabbath day. Adjourned to meet with the Pleasant Grove Branch, October 22.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana.—Conference met with the Clear Lake Saints, June 11, 1904, with A. S. Cochran and G. A. Smith in chair. Branch reports: Clear Lake 174, Coldwater 118, Alto 19, Sparta 29, Hartford 51, Hopkins 22, Crystal 13, Marcellus 16, Knox 51, Buchanan 35, Galien 123. Bishop's agent reported a total of $821.02; on hand and received; disbursements, $644.01. The committee consisting of Elders I. M. and G. A. Smith, also William F. Shaub appointed at Galien to confer with Kirtland District in regard to boundary line between the two, reported as having met the missionary and district president of said Kirtland District. It was decided that the Maumee Branch situated in Paulding County, Ohio, was in Kirtland District, and the Ohio and Indiana line should be the line between the aforesaid districts. This was submitted to the committee appointed on boundary lines, by General Conference, and was presented to, and adopted by that body. Marcellus Branch recommended Bro. Goodenough to be ordained to office of priest which was left in hands of the president. Elders reporting: A. S. Cochran, O. H. Story, W. D. Ellis, Francis Granger, Samuel Stroh, I. M. Smith, T. J. D. Earl; Priests William, S. Omans, T. E. Robertson, Melvin G. Ellis, F. T. Fields. Treasurer's report showed district indebted to him for 88 cents. A collection was taken up amounting to $2.74. Officers: A. S. Cochran president, O. H. Story assistant president, William F. Shaub secretary. Next conference to meet with Coldwater Saints at call of President.

Convention Minutes.

Northeastern Illinois.—Convention met at Mission, Illinois, May 27, 1904, at 2:30 p. m. Clare Sherman and Sadie Sulle were appointed credential committee. District superintendent, assistant superintendent, secretary, and treasurer reported. Reports from the following schools were read: Plano, West Pullman, Mission, Central Chicago, Dekalb, Hope of Israel. A committee of five consisting of C. A. Gurwell, Mamie Williamson, Jerome Wildermuth, James Keir, and S. D. Heavener was appointed to arrange a program for the reunion to be held at Plano, also to request the reunion committee for the Friday afternoon and evening preceeding the district conference to devote to the interests of the Sunday-school work. The resignation of district Superintendent Jerome E. Wildermuth, was accepted. Bro. C. A. Gurwell was elected superintendent. Convention adjourned subject to the call of the district officers. Mamie C. Williamson, secretary.

Fremont.—Convened at Riverton, Iowa, Friday evening, May 27, 1904, in charge of Assistant Superintendent Joseph Roberts. An address by D. R. Chambers, a talk by A. Badham, and a paper by the district superintendent, completed the program for the evening. On Saturday reports of schools and librarians were read. It was moved to adopt the recommendation of the librarian's report which read as follows: "That the week beginning July 17 be set apart for discussion of the circulating library, also that secretary notify each school of such action and a report of results be made to the district librarian." On Saturday afternoon a program, consisting of papers and discussions was given. Saturday evening was devoted to Religio work in charge of Joseph Roberts. Adjourned to convene just previous to our next district conference and at the same place. Mrs. Agnes McClenahan, secretary.

Northwestern Kansas.—Convention met near Potterville, Kansas, June 3, 1904, at 2 p. m. Secretary and assistant being absent, Sr. Mary Boyd was elected secretary pro tem. Zion's Hope Sunday-school reported total enrollment 30. Talks on Sunday-school work by Brn. S. J. Madden, F. S. Ward, I. N. White, Ben Curtis, L. F. Johnson, and F. E. Taylor. Paper by Sr. Myrtle Coop. A very interesting program was listened to in the evening. Moved that the district treasurer purchase a book to keep cash account. It was moved that the secretary notify the other secretary of the convention one month before time of the convention. Adjourned to meet the day before next conference and at same place.

Des Moines.—Association met in convention at Des Moines, Iowa, on June 3, 1904, at 2 p. m. Number of schools shown to be reporting in the district were 14, thus showing a gain over last report of 3. The total enrollment is 349. Schools reporting: Oskaloosa, Rhodes, Clear Creek, Runnells, Des Moines, Boone, Eagle Grove, Grinnell, Richland, Milo, Harding Grove, Packard, St. Charles, Dallas Center. Report of treasurer showed a balance of $8.99 on hand. The advisability of uniting the Sunday-school and Religio work was then taken up and discussed. The remainder of the session and the evening hour were devoted to papers which led out in discussions, being interspersed with some special musical selections. Adjourned to meet at call of district officers.

Northeastern Missouri.—Convention met at Bevier, Missouri, June 3, Superintendent W. B. Richards in charge, Hattie Williams secretary. Reports were read from Bevier, Higbee, and Greenleaf schools. The treasurer's report read as follows: Balance on hand last report, $22.83; receipts, $3.34; expenditures, $3.25; balance June 1, $22.92. Instead of the usual program several interesting papers were read and thoroughly discussed, which proved quite instructive and entertaining to those present. We had the pleasure of having in our midst Brn. J. R. Lambert and F. M. Smith of Lamoni, Iowa, who favored us with some interesting remarks on Sunday-school work. Adjourned to meet at same place as district conference and on day previous.

Southeastern Illinois.—Sunday-school met at Dry Fork church June 10, 1904, Elder F. L. Sawley, superintendent, in the chair. Elder C. J. Spurlock, assistant superintendent. Schools reported: Zion's Hope, Parrish Branch, and Springerton. Four schools failed to report. A report of the Kirtland Sunday-school association was read by C. J. Spurlock. Report of Sr. Hettie E. Davis, Home Class visitor, was read. Moved and carried that Sr. Morris select a library committee. At the evening session a program was rendered consisting of music, papers, recitations, and speeches. Regular session Sunday morning. Collection 15c. Adjourned to meet Friday, 10 a. m., before the next conference. Sunday morning regular session. J. E. Bozarth, secretary.

Little Sioux District.—Convened June 3, 1904, at 10 a. m. with Sidney Pitt, superintendent, in charge, Annie Stuart, secretary. The reports show an enrollment of 835. Two new schools organized. Librarian reports six schools having adopted the plans for circulating library. District adopted plan of holding but one business convention each year. Adjourned to meet at Moorhead, Iowa, in October.

Naavoo.—Convened at Argyle, Iowa, June 10, 1904, at 10.30 a. m., Superintendent G. P. Lambert presiding. Reports were received from the following schools: Fort Madison, New London, Keb, Rock Creek, Montrose, Farmington, and Burlington. Keokuk school has been discontinued. Officers: G. P. Lambert superintendent, J. B. Wildermuth assistant superintendent, Jessie J. Ward secretary, Maymie Geisch treasurer, and G. Edward Schweers librarian. Treasurer reported balance on hand $8.27. In the evening Sunday-school and Religio associations gave a joint program which was very well received. Special Sunday-school session Sunday morning. Adjourned to meet at Farmington next regular session.

Naavoo.—Convention met June 10, 1904, at 2.30 p. m., Argyle, Iowa, Vice-president M. H. Seigfried in charge; Clara Seigfried, secretary. Treasurer Martha Ortleb reported as follows: Receipts, $9.05; expenditures, $7.20; on hand, $1.85. M. H. Seigfried was elected president, Ed Schweer, vice-president. Locals reporting: Farmington, New London, Rock Creek, and Burlington.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Pittsburg and Western Pennsylvania District; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the above-named territory, and in order to effectually and thoroughly canvass the same, I address you. I never have seen the outlook so promising for the advancement of the Lord's work as at the present. Many earnest requests have already been sent in for preaching in new places, some desiring to obey at first opportunity. To successfully meet those demands an earnest effort on the part of all, and especially the ministry, is required. Our missionary force is smaller this year than last, but I trust that the deficiency in that regard may be more than made up by the increase in zeal and earnestness of the laborers who remain, and that the local force may also be awakened to renewed energy. Let all those who desire preaching, or know of an opening, or have friends who would like to have an elder call on them, report immediately to me. Ever hoping and praying that this year will find many precious souls rejoicing with us, and all workers together for good,

Your colaborer in Christ,

RICHARD BALDWIN.

97 Elm Street, SHARON, Pennsylvania.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Kentucky and Tennessee District; Greeting: I take this method of calling attention to the effort now being put forth to pay the college debt. As I will not be able to visit all the branches for some time on account of the harvest, I have sent an apportionment to branch presidents, asking them to report to me at the reunion at Crossland, Kentucky, the last of July. The apportionment for Kentucky and Tennessee is $137.20 and three hundred and forty-three members makes just 40 cents each. It does seem, dear Saints, that we might raise that amount. So let us give the matter prompt attention and let each one pay his share. Remember the Lord has said the college debt should be paid. Scattered members will please send their contributions direct to me with name of branch of which they are members.

Please do not forget your tithes and offerings. We are falling behind along this line. We hope for a brighter future. Hoping each one will respond at an early date,

Your brother and colaborer,

J. R. McCLAIN.

R. F. D. 3, FULTON, Kentucky, June 18, 1904.

Correction of Publication of Bishop's Report.

Under Elders' Summary accounts beginning page 35.

1. Date at top of first and second columns should be January 10, 1903.
  2. The second two columns should be transposed so as to place receipts by Bishops and Agents first.
  3. Top of page 36 correct date. Second and third columns of Receipts all right here.
  4. Top of page 37 correct date to 1903 and transpose second and third columns.
  5. Top of page 38 correct in same way.
  6. Top of page 39 correct in same way.
  7. Report Bishop C. J. Hunt: Read Romanan Wight, not Romanan Sutton.
  8. Bishop George P. Lambert's report: Warnock, Susan, t. $30; not $37.75; Manifold, Susan T., t. $7.75.
  9. Bishop William Anderson's report, page 14: A. K. Anderson and wife, not A. E.; Lucina Cave, not Lucinda; E. W. Cooper, instead of Copper; John Hooper, instead of Hopper.
- Now when we go to Publishing House and inquire, Why these errors, everything is laid on "the devil." Then our book-keeper politely hands over the copy furnished and proves he is not wholly the "feller." We assure the reader that the "old fellow" is not in the Bishop's office; further than this we do not say. Let the elders please take notice and oblige.

Respectfully,

LAMONI, Iowa, June 25, 1904.

E. L. KELLEY.

Reunion Notices.

The Southern California reunion will be held at the same place that it was last year, one mile west of Santa Ana, beginning July 22, 1904, at 10 a. m. The committee will do their best to make this as good as the one of 1903, and better if possible. Therefore hope to see as full an attendance of Saints and friends as can spare the time, making a reasonable sacrifice, to come up and worship jointly for ten days. All the morning and evening trains will be met at the Santa Ana depot by team, and passengers escorted to camp grounds without charge, including hand-baggage. San Diego people should come on the afternoon train in order to catch the transfer buss. Those wanting tents, cots, mattresses, etc., should make their wants known early. The order should be in the hands of committee at least one week in advance of opening day to make success doubly sure. The charges for these commodities will be reasonable. A coöperative table will be supplied on the camp grounds by Bro. Peter Kaufmann. Meals will not exceed ten cents each to the regular patrons, and possibly not more than eight cents, and the more numerous the boarders the less the price.

The following brethren are expected: Joseph Luff, Columbus Scott, T. W. Chatburn, C. E. Crumley, J. C. Clapp, William Gibson, T. W. Williams, A. E. Jones, and Albert Carmichael. The committee, N. W. Best, Henry Pankey, Peter Kaufmann, A. J. Damron, William Mills, Bert Mills, R. R. Dana, have their program of business well in hand, and any person wishing more explicit information will please remember to address their communication to the chairman of said committee only, N. W. Best, 217 E. Citrus Avenue, Redlands, San Bernardino County, California. He is the official head, made so by the unanimous choice of the reunion of 1903. Therefore the statement made in HERALD of recent date, appointing Bro. William Mills to reply to all communications was premature, and consequently unofficial.

R. R. DANA, for chairman.

LOS ANGELES, June 10, 1904.

The northwestern Oklahoma reunion will convene in Mr. William Gowins' grove near Richmond, Woodward County, July 22 to August 1, 1904, inclusive. We expect Elders H. O. Smith, W. M. Aylor, Hubert Case, and S. T. Hinkle of the ministry; the local committee, H. M. Crocker, T. W. Weaver, and G. M. Moore, will make arrangements to accommodate all. Bring your wagons and tents and come to stay until the reunion is over. Good pasture convenient to the grounds for stock. H. M. Crocker keeps a general store near by that will supply all necessary provisions at very reasonable rates. H. F. Durfey, secretary.

The Northwestern Kansas District reunion will be held August 11 to 21 inclusive, in Bro. Frank Berger's grove, five miles east and one half mile south of Osborne, Osborne County, Kansas. Same ground as last year. Stoves on ground. Pasture for stock, and wood, free. The missionary force are expected to attend and we hope to have others. Further notice later. Come, Saints, and let us have a good, spiritual time. Information as to tents, board, etc., will be cheerfully furnished upon application to Elder S. J. Madden, Gaylord, Smith County, Kansas. Apply before August 1. Trains will be met Thursday and Friday evenings, August 11 and 12, 7.38 p. m. S. J. Madden, F. S. Ward, John A. Teeters, committee.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Oklahoma District will convene at the time and place of the reunion, near Richmond, Woodward County, July 22 to August 1, 1904. A full attendance and a full report of the ministry and branches are expected. H. F. Durfey, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

The Clinton District Sunday-school association will convene at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, June 24, 1904. Sadie Dempsey, secretary.

Died.

HELSEK.—Bro. Joshua Helser departed this life at Appleton, Wisconsin, June 2, 1904. Bro. Helser was born at Milford, Pipe County, Pennsylvania, April 20, 1812. He was ordained to the office of an elder under the leadership of Brigham Young but did not officiate. He fell in with the Strangite faction but like many others was not satisfied, until he joined the Reorganized Church in 1862. Funeral services conducted by Elder W. P. Robinson, and the remains laid to rest at Shioction, Wisconsin, beside his wife who died September 27, 1886.

ERVIN.—At Nebraska City, Nebraska, June 19, 1904, after a lingering illness, Gurnee S., daughter of Mr. Charles and Mrs. Blanche Ervin, aged 8 years, 3 months, and 11 days. Funeral service at the residence of the late Bro. Jesse Ervin, grandfather of the deceased, June 20; conducted by Elder C. H. Porter.

TAYLOR.—Frances E. Taylor was born December 24, 1840, at Derbyshire, England. At the age of ten years she emigrated to America. She was married to Robert Taylor in 1857. Eleven children were born to them, nine of whom survive her. She was a faithful member of the church for nearly fifty years. Funeral in charge of O. H. Bailey.

SANDS.—June 15, 1904, at the Little Rock Hospital for the Insane, Elder Hugh Sands. Born November 13, 1854, baptized August 15, 1889, ordained an elder June 26, 1893. He leaves a wife, six children, and numerous relatives and friends to mourn his departure; one child as well as his first companion have preceded him to the spirit land. Age 49 years, 7 months, and 2 days. Bro. Sands recently became afflicted in mind, suffering great mental agony, and was placed in the hospital two weeks before his death. Interment at Shady Grove Cemetery; funeral sermon by W. E. Moler.

FISHER.—Mrs. Anna R. Fisher died Wednesday, June 8, 1904, She was born March 31, 1848, in Killingly, Windham County, Connecticut. Her death was due to apoplexy, after considerable suffering. She is now at rest, and awaits the resurrection of the dead to a life free from pain and suffering. Her loss was deeply felt by her children, but they believe that their loss is her gain, and they look forward to meet her again in the resurrection. Funeral sermon at Chestnut Hill Baptist church by Elder George H. Smith.

BOOTH.—At his home, Lamoni, Iowa, at 3 p. m. June 15, 1904, Bro. Robert O. Booth. He was born in Whiteside

County, Illinois, December 19, 1842. On arriving at age he married Ophelia Delap. To them one child was born, Mrs. G. W. Howard, of Des Moines, Iowa. His wife dying, he subsequently married Mary Jane Foreman, February 10, 1879. His wife, three sisters, one daughter, one child, and two grandchildren survive him. Funeral from Saints' church on Friday, June 17, in charge of President John Smith, President Joseph Smith preaching the funeral sermon. "At rest" in Rose Hill Cemetery.

WHITE.—At Galien, Michigan, May 29, 1904, of typhoid fever, Sr. Myrtie White, daughter of Bro. Silas W. and Sr. Elmina White. Was born at Galien, Michigan, October 23, 1889; was baptized into the Reorganized Church, August 10, 1903, by Elder Warren E. Peak. She leaves a father, mother, two sisters, one brother, and numerous relatives to mourn her untimely loss. She was a good girl and much interested in the work of the church, and will be sadly missed by her friends and associates. A large concourse of people attended the funeral exercises in the Saints' chapel at Galien, which were conducted by Elder M. H. Bond, of Chicago.

ALLEN.—Bro. Charles R. Allen, born August 11, 1867, at Coalspring, Wisconsin, died at his home in Valley Junction, Wisconsin, June 7, 1904. He was baptized May 7, 1894, at Valley Junction. He leaves to mourn a wife, five small children, six brothers, two half brothers, two sisters, one half sister, and many friends. He was loved and respected by all. Funeral in charge of Bro. A. L. Whiteaker; sermon by Bro. W. A. McDowell.

ALLEN.—Sr. Harriet M. Allen, born December 7, 1830, at Parrisburg, New York, died at her home in Valley Junction, Wisconsin, May 27, 1904. She was baptized at Valley Junction, September 27, 1894. She passed away strong in the faith of the latter-day work. Funeral in charge of Bro. Frank Hackett; sermon by Bro. A. L. Whiteaker.

CARMON.—Richard M. Carmon, at Lookout, California, June 1, 1904. He was born in Modoc County, California, September 8, 1875; baptized January 29, 1903, by Elder E. Keeler. The funeral services were held at the home of the parents, in charge of Bro. Charles Rice. He was a young man of more than average ability and leaves a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his loss.

REESE.—At his home, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, by a fall from a ladder while painting the porch roof, Elder Jacob Reese, familiarly known for many years as a faithful and consistent defender of the faith. He was born October 30, 1830, at Baden, Germany; united with the church November 3, 1862, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, being baptized by Elder Josiah Ells; was ordained an elder March 19, 1865. He had previously been connected with the movement of Charles B. Thompson, in Iowa, for a short time, in his search for the true church in succession. He was a man of strong character, earnest and faithful in his work. He leaves sons, daughters, grand-children, and friends to mourn their loss. Funeral services at the Saints' church, sermon by Elder C. E. Miller; interment in Homewood Cemetery.

Addresses.

H. A. McCoy, Audubon, Minnesota.
Walter J. Smith, 3354 North Howard Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Every lover of art should see the productions in the June Cosmopolitan of the wonderful paintings in the Paris Pantheon. For many years the first painters of France have been at work on an historical series to adorn this building, and the best of their endeavors from the illustrative material for an article on the French Westminster Abbey.

An Interesting Exhibit at St. Louis.

One of the foreign exhibits at St. Louis will be especially sought. It is the Philippine Encampment—and one begs one's Malay brother's pardon for having intimated that it was foreign. Here you find out just how these semidetached citizens of the United States live and move and have their being. And this near view is just what we need if we would come into sympathy with the Filipinos. The Spaniard and the Malay are both shown. There is a reproduction of a Manila square and cathedral and a Spanish fort. A little lagoon winds through the encampment, and on its shores are Moro houses built on bamboo poles and surrounded by a wattle wall of defense. Other villages of other tribes, each differing from the others, dot the shores of the lake, and in all of these natives ply their native trades. One may see here a real head-hunter and the Filipino midgets, the smallest adults in the world—a man twenty-nine

The Saints' Herald.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on yellow label always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made, notify us.

The paper will not be sent to persons who are six months in arrears, unless special arrangements are made.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately, as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post-office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for Zion's Ensign, also orders for all Ensign publications.

years old and twenty-nine inches high, and a girl of thirty who stands twenty-seven inches. In a building which is a reproduction of the one in Manila now used as a normal school is a pretty complete educational exhibit. It contains specimens of the work of the schools where two hundred and twenty-five thousand Filipinos are now engaged in learning to be patriotic Americans. As an antidote to this is a native theater, where players give opera and vaudeville.—July Woman's Home Companion.

July 8th.

The Nickel Plate Road will run an excursion to Chautauque Lake and return at one fare for the round trip, from Chicago with return limit of August 9, by depositing ticket. Transportation good on any of our three daily trains. Cheap rates to other eastern points. No excess fare charged on any train on Nickel Plate Road. Individual Club Meals, ranging in price from 35c. to $1.00; also service a la carte, in Nickel Plate dining-cars. Write John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago, for particulars. Chicago city ticket offices, 111 Adams Street and Auditorium Annex, 'phones Central 2057 and Harrison 2208. (No. 11) 24-3t.

Mary Church Terrell, president of the National Association of Colored Women, in the June number of the North American Review, discusses "Lynching from a negro's point of view." Mrs. Terrell denies, with some heat, that violence against white women, is the real cause of negro lynching in the South, or that the negro's supposed desire for social equality has had the influence that is usually attributed to it. She strongly resents the charge that the moral sensibilities of the best negroes in the United States are so stunted and dull, that they do not appreciate the enormity of the crimes against white women so frequently attributed to negroes in the South, and she cautions the people of the country against placing too much confidence in the accounts of negro misdeeds published in the newspapers. Mrs. Terrell deprecates the indifference of the church to the crime of lynching:

"It is a source of deep regret and sorrow to many good Christians in this country that the church puts forth so few and such feeble protests against lynching. As the attitude of many ministers on the question of slavery greatly discouraged the abolitionists before the war, so silence in the pulpit concerning the lynching of negroes to-day plunges many of the persecuted race into deep gloom and dark despair. Thousands of dollars are raised by our churches every year to send missionaries to Christianize the heathen in foreign lands, and this is proper and right. But in addition to this foreign missionary work, would it not be well for our churches to inaugurate a crusade against the barbarism at home, which converts hundreds of white women and children into savages every year, while it crushes the spirit, blights the hearth and breaks the heart of hundreds of defenseless blacks? Not only do ministers fail, as a rule, to protest strongly against the hanging and burning of negroes, but some actually condone the crime without incurring the displeasure of their congregations or invoking the censure of the church. Although the church court which tried the preacher in Wilmington, Delaware, accused of inciting his community to riot and lynching by means of an incendiary sermon, found him guilty of 'unministerial and unchristian conduct,' of advocating mob murder and of thereby breaking down the public respect for the law, yet it simply admonished him to be 'more careful in the future' and inflicted no punishment at all."

Long and Short Railroads.

The longest railroad in the United States is the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, which owns 7,794 miles of track, and operates 7,971 miles. Its nearest competitor, in respect to length, is the Northern Pacific Railway, with 5,519 miles of trackage.

Many Americans are so accustomed to travel long distances on a single railway or system of railways that they pay little heed to short roads. Yet there are many roads owning but eight or ten miles of track which are operated as seriously as a great trunk line. The shortest railroad listed in the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission is the Buffalo, Thousand Islands and Portland Railroad, a part of the New York Central system. This road is three one-hundredths of a mile long—about one hundred and fifty feet. The track for this line requires about ten rails; and a locomotive, tender and two or three cars would fill it from end to end.

Another short line is that owned by the Trenton Delaware Bridge Company. It is more nearly a trunk line than the Buffalo, Thousand Islands and Portland; being about a thousand feet long—nineteen one hundredths of a mile, to be exact. This road is controlled by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, being operated under a lease dated June 20, 1877, for 993 years, five months and ten days. Though the road is short, it should pay its owners good dividends, for the annual rental is thirty-two thousand dollars.

Coming to independent roads, it will not do to pass unnoticed the line of Marine Railway Company, owned and operated by the Manhattan Beach Hotel and Land Company. This is forty-four hundredths of a mile in length. It is operated only three or four months each year, for when the cold, stormy days of autumn arrive the track is taken up and carefully stowed away for the winter, to be brought out for use only when the warm summer days return.—From "Railroad Oddities," by L. E. Taylor, in the June Chautauquan.

Western Union Profits from Gambling.

One would like to believe that it was a sense of moral duty toward the public rather than a fear of Mr. Jerome as a prosecutor that brought about so sweeping and unexpected an action on the part of the Western Union Company. But it is impossible to overlook the fact that this moral issue has not now been presented to the company for the first time, by any means. The Reverend Doctor Newman Smyth declares that for ten years he and other gentlemen in Connecticut have been fighting against the telegraph company's complicity in the pool-room evil. In various other places, at various times, attempts have been made, with more or less temporary success, to induce the Western Union Company to cease its promotion of pool-room gambling. It is a good many years since the Western Union went into the pool-room enterprise; and it had been developed into the most profitable single department of all the ramified business of this great monopoly. It was estimated by the newspapers, last month, that there were three hundred pool-rooms in New York City alone; and some of them stated the gross income of the Western Union's race-track news business to be not less than five million dollars a year. This was probably an overstatement. But a very conservative financial paper, the Wall Street Journal, went into the matter in some detail on May 19, and came to the conclusion that a minimum estimate would be that the company had been deriving two million dollars a year net profits from its pool-room traffic. This figure, when placed in relation with the fact that in the year ending June 30 last the total net revenue of the company was $8,214,472, shows, first, how tremendous an item in the company's profits the pool-room tribute money had come to be, and, second, what a drastic measure the directors adopted on the 18th when they abolished this whole department, throwing, probably, from two thousand to three thousand of their most expert servants out of work without notice, and putting the pool-room proprietors, who had gone into the business under the company's auspices, in a very sorry plight. The directors and chief owners of the Western Union Telegraph Company might indeed have established a pretty large reputation for philanthropy on annual donations of much less money than the total of their side winnings as partners in the pool-room gambling business.—From "The progress of the world," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
ABSOLUTELY PURE
 Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

HE DON'T CRAVE THAT FILTHY WEED!

Bro. W. A. Welton, of Little Sioux, writes April 7, 1904, saying: "I have used tobacco from the age of eight years. I purchased three boxes of your Quit-to-bac and did not use quite one of them and can say I don't crave the filthy weed. I am now twenty-four years old. I would advise all who want to stop using tobacco to try Quit-to-bac. It is bound to cure for it did cure me!" Why not try it? Three boxes postpaid only $1.50 with a positive guarantee to cure or money cheerfully refunded for the asking.

Address (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois

NEW BOOKS

JOSEPH SMITH, WHO WAS HE?

A valuable work of 255 pages completely refuting the charges that Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy. Paper cover 50c. Cloth 75 cents

EBELING-RIGGLE DEBATE.

Subject: The Kingdom of God. A book of 492 pages bound in cloth 50 cents

THE OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL

By Elder Joseph Luff. A book of twenty-nine sermons on vital gospel subjects. Makes a good missionary $1.00

EXEGESIS OF THE PRIESTHOOD

This book is a compilation of scripture on the priesthood and the duties of the various officers in the priesthood. Every church officer should have one $1.00

Herald Publishing House

Lamoni, Iowa

MANUSCRIPT FOUND

Has just been reprinted, and owing to the heavy expense of publishing it the price has been raised to thirty-five cents. Mark your catalogue accordingly.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Lamoni, Iowa.

REORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

201. Per dozen 10 cents; per 100 60

POLYGAMY NOT A DOCTRINE OF THE TRUE CHURCH OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

203. Per dozen 5 cents; per 100 35

THE KIRTLAND TEMPLE. Illustrated. The two martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith; Kirtland temple, and President Joseph Smith.

45. Each 5 cents; per dozen 51

SOUTH SIDE BARBER SHOP.

Laundry in connection. The same old stand. F. A. BLACK. 15

Excursions for the Fourth,

via the Nickel Plate Road, at one fare for the round-trip, plus twenty-five cents, July 2, 3, 4, within radius of two hundred miles from starting point. Return limit July 5. Three daily trains in each direction, with modern coaches and vestibuled sleeping-cars, to Cleveland, Erie, Buffalo, New York, Boston, and New England points. Passengers to points east of Buffalo have privilege of stopover at Niagara Falls, in either direction, and also at Chautauqua Lake, during excursion season, by depositing tickets. Individual American Club meals, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00, served in Nickel Plate dining-cars; also service a la carte. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road.

Chicago depot, corner La Salle and Van Buren Streets, the only depot in Chicago on the elevated loop. City ticket offices, 111 Adams Street, and Auditorium Annex. Telephones, Central 2057 and Harrison 2208. (No. 10) 24-3t.

FIVE PER CENT

From this date until further notice the STATE SAVINGS BANK of Lamoni will pay

5 per cent

per annum interest on one year time deposits either for new money or renewals of matured certificates. The Capital Stock of this Bank has recently been increased to $30,000, and at the liberal rate of interest now offered for time deposits, many can afford to send their surplus funds to this Bank.

Kindly direct all letters to
W. A. HOPKINS, Cashier,
 Lamoni, Iowa.

Interest Never Sleeps.

It works while you sleep like a silent partner.

If you have any money that is not earning interest, write at once to the oldest established bank in Lamoni.

The Commercial Bank,

D. F. Nicholson, Cashier. LAMONI, IOWA.

DIRT BY MAIL.

Only $80 for a large corner residence lot at Lamoni. Size 100 by 175. Send $10 as first payment. Balance on long time.

D. F. NICHOLSON,
LAMONI - - IOWA

IF YOU WANT A home, a lot, a business, or anything for sale in a large city we can save you money

E-B REALTY & BROKERAGE CO

602 Heist Bldg., Kansas City, Missouri
 Brn. E. Etzenhouser & W. S. Brown 24-4

KEOKUK & WESTERN R. R. CO.

North—Leave Leon 2: 40 p. m.; arrive at Des Moines 6: 05 p. m.

South—Leave Des Moines 8: 25 a. m.; arrive at Leon 11: 45 a. m.

Trains daily except Sunday; connect with C., B. & Q. at Leon.

Herald Office Publications.

All books are sold by numbers. Send numbers only. Send all orders and make all remittances payable to Herald Publishing House, Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County Iowa.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE. A dictionary and alphabetical index to the Bible, with a concordance to the apocrypha, and a table and concordance of the proper names of the Bible.

206. Cloth ..... 1 50

MARVELOUS DISCOVERIES IN BIBLE LANDS.

199. Paper covers ..... 30

The Saints' Herald

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32
 "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6

Volume 51

Lamoni, Iowa, July 6, 1904

Number 27

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ
 of Latter Day Saints.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR
 I. A. SMITH . . . . . ASSISTANT EDITOR
 FRED'K M. SMITH . . . . . CORRESPONDING EDITOR

Entered as Second-class Mail Matter at Lamoni Post-office.

Editorial.

A MEMORABLE ANNIVERSARY.

Sixty years ago to-day, June 27, 1904, not far from five o'clock in the afternoon, a scene was enacted at Carthage, Hancock County, Illinois, which resulted in the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, president and presiding patriarch of the church organized April 6, 1830. This organization was effected and carried unto consummation by revelation. From the humble start of six membership on the day of organization to the day when the chief officers were so cruelly murdered they had persistently been engaged in preaching the gospel according to the angelic message, and with their comrades increased to thousands in number, had steadfastly borne testimony to the fact that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God, the redeemer of mankind, and warned the world of the impending judgment to come.

They had faithfully faced danger and death, had suffered imprisonment, had been mobbed and cruelly entreated, without just cause, and at last, while waiting for the action of the courts of the land to which appeal had been made, under a pledge from the chief executive of the state of Illinois that they should have a fair and impartial trial, they had consented to a sojourn in the county jail upon the pledge made by the executive, as stated.

It seems hardly possible that so many years have passed away since this awful tragedy, a travesty upon the proud boast of American citizens that the freest and largest liberty of conscience should be enjoyed in this great republic. What momentous events have transpired since that tragedy, events which have had peculiar effect in the history of the church, through all of which there has been a steady and persistent effort on the part of many to maintain the integrity of the gospel submitted through the angel's message and to resist the evils by which the adversary sought to accomplish the overthrow of the work and defeat the design of the beneficent Master, to whom was committed the arduous task of saving men from their sins.

Well was it said by the prophet that when iniquity should come in like a flood the Spirit of the Lord would lift up a standard against it. And that standard was the persistent and steadfast maintenance of the word of God, as coming down to the present gen-

CONTENTS.

Editorial:

X A Memorable Anniversary	- - - - -	609
Items From a Wanderer	- - - - -	610
On the Preservation of Fruits	- - - - -	612
"Well Done, Nodaway"	- - - - -	613
Graceland College Notes	- - - - -	613

Original Articles:

On the Word of Wisdom and Meat Question	- - - - -	614
Preaching	- - - - -	616
Persecution	- - - - -	618

Selected Articles:

The Philippine Exposition	- - - - -	619
---------------------------	-----------	-----

Mothers' Home Column:

Lest We Forget	- - - - -	620
The Father's Awakening for Hope	- - - - -	620
Novel Reading	- - - - -	621

Sunday-School Department:

"Pray Yea Therefore"	- - - - -	622
The Child Critic	- - - - -	622
Records or Class Books	- - - - -	622
The Sunday-School Lesson	- - - - -	622

Letter Department:

Letters	- - - - -	623
A Word From Wales	- - - - -	623
X Sketch No. 3.—A Dream	- - - - -	625
Extracts from Letters	- - - - -	629

Miscellaneous Department:

Conference Minutes:
Northern Wisconsin	- - - - - 629
Kentucky and Tennessee	- - - - - 629
Southwestern Texas	- - - - - 629
Convention Minutes:
Northern Wisconsin	- - - - - 629
Clinton	- - - - - 630
Fremont	- - - - - 630
Pastoral:
S. J. Madden	- - - - - 630

READ IT—"Ancient Records," by Elder Charles Fry, an illustrated article in the Religio's Arena, July Autumn Leaves.

eration in the revelation of the religion of the Bible, the records which speak from the dust, and the revelations of God direct to men on the earth through the prophet whom he had chosen.

The return of the anniversary brings its reflections, and while time has mellowed the grief, it has not robbed the situation of its significance nor made men to lose sight of man's inhumanity to man and the strong hold which intolerance still has on the minds of the bigoted and the superstitious. The prophet's youngest son, now a gray-haired man of sixty years, is suffering the penalty of mental derangement which many believe can be traced to the prenatal influences which surrounded the life of the prophet and his wife during the stormy period of that fateful year of 1844.

It is with a pang of strange regret that we look along back over the pathway of these sixty important years, fraught as they have been by distrust, the result of evil communication and the divisions which have unavoidably followed through that which could not have entered into the scheme of the prophet and his spiritual advisers under the just regime of the angel's message. We sit at the desk to which we have been called by the necessities of the work left unfinished by the death of the prophet and are made sad by the reflection of what a different situation the church might now have been in had not fatal ambition entered into the brains of designing men and evil counsels prevailed among those who should have taught the way of life unhindered by the wily suggestion of the adversary by which men were beguiled from their allegiance to God and the truth. It is not seemly to laud the wonderful goodness of God in committing so valuable a treasure as the gospel unto men through the ministration of the prophet of Palmyra and to laud his memory with expressions of endearment and affection and to praise the courage and fidelity with which he served as the extraordinary missionary of the new evangel, and at the same time exhibit to the world a disregard for the word of God committed through him, and which has such an extraordinary agreement in the record of the Jews and the record of the people on this continent who represent the "other sheep" of which the Master advised his disciples.

As the years pass and the recurrence of this anniversary brings to mind the tragedy of that June day, now sixty years past, let those to whom it may bring a possible degree of sadness remember that only by steadfast trust in God, a faithful adherence to his word, can the victory be won and the triumph assured. So while these martyrs still rest, the bodies in the graves, their spirits in the paradise of God, let us maintain our integrity of purpose and praise God that the time will come when it will be made clear why the sacrifice was demanded, the evil be rebuked, and the glory be accorded to whom it is due.

ITEMS FROM A WANDERER.

Our last was from Fergus Falls, Minnesota, when the reunion of the Minnesota District was in progress. Throughout, the attendance from the outside was small, but the attendance by the Saints was quite regular. The order of meetings was as follows: Prayer-meeting at nine o'clock in the morning; preaching at a quarter till eleven, at two, and at eight in the evening. This order was followed throughout except on Thursday and Friday, the 16th and 17th, the Sunday-school held sessions after the afternoon preaching services. Bro. T. J. Martin had charge of the Sunday-school work.

The following brethren occupied the pulpit at the reunion: F. A. Smith, Frederick M. Smith, E. A. Stedman, H. A. McCoy, T. J. Martin, E. F. Robertson, Eli Hayer, F. D. Omans, C. E. Willey, and Marcus Erickson.

The preaching as a rule was of a sound nature, free from the emotional element, and seemed to be enjoyed by the Saints. The prayer services were of a quiet, peaceful nature, comforting and encouraging to the Saints. That the reunion was as a whole much enjoyed by the Minnesota Saints was evident by the unanimity with which the vote to hold another reunion next year prevailed. The reunion next year will be at Henning.

The rite of baptism was administered to two at the reunion, one a child reared in the church, the other a young woman who has for years been investigating the work. The latter comes to us from the Catholic Church, and takes the step after due and deliberate consideration. We were pleased to see Sr. C. M. Brown, of Fargo, join us.

There is no branch of the church at Fergus Falls, and only a few Saints live there. The reunion was held there because it was thought the Saints could assemble easily, and because of the hope that many nonmembers would avail themselves of the opportunity to learn of our beliefs. In that hope the Minnesota Saints were disappointed, the outside attendance being very light. However, that should not discourage, for reunions are calculated to benefit the Saints rather than to serve as proselyting meetings. The Saints there come together to renew old acquaintances and form new ones, and to be instructed in the affairs pertaining to the kingdom of God and to the duties of citizens in that kingdom. If the meetings are made of a proselyting nature, then one of the objects of the reunion is defeated in that Saints present are taken over old grounds instead of receiving new food. The primary object of reunions, in our opinion, should be the upbuilding of the Saints. Incidentally those nonmembers in attendance could learn much of what we as a people believe and try to practice. However, what the elders should teach at these reunions can safely be left to the promptings of the guiding Spirit.

The reunion closed Sunday evening, many of the Saints leaving then on the train. Those with wagons stayed till the next day.

Fergus Falls is a town of between six and seven thousand inhabitants, and is the county seat of Otter Tail County, in the central-western part of Minnesota. It is located on the Great Northern and Northern Pacific railways and on the Red River of the North. Founded as late as 1869 or 1870, it is quite modern in appearance and equipment. It has water-works and electric lights, the former owned and controlled by the city, the latter by a company. The Red River of the north is good to the city of Fergus Falls. For some distance above and below the city the river-bed falls rapidly, and the waters of the river rush noisily along, speaking in no uncertain tones of the power stored therein and available to the citizens of Fergus. Several dams within and above the town limits testify that some of the power is being utilized. One dam, up the river two miles or so from town, furnishes abundant power for the city light plant, one a little nearer furnishes power for the pumping station, while the waters stored above two or three dams within the town limits obligingly turn the wheels of several large flouring mills and factories. A woolen mill, several flouring mills, a sash and door factory, a packing factory, and other smaller concerns have their wheels kept turning by the Red River, and the hum of the whirring wheels of these centers of industry as they rumble through their daily routine is a source of pride to Fergus Falls citizens. There is still a vast amount of unutilized power in the Red River at Fergus Falls, which promises well for the future of that thriving little Minnesota city.

Otter Tail County is a country of beautiful lakes abounding in fish. One is not long in the county before some citizen proudly tells that Otter Tail County contains nearly one thousand lakes. This interesting news is enhanced by the information that these lakes are "meandered lakes, too, not sloughs." When you finally grasp the significance of the information, you have learned that Otter Tail County contains nearly one thousand lakes which are of sufficient size to justify the government going to the expense of running "meandering" lines around for the purpose of mapping them. As might be expected where so much water abounds, there is plenty of grass, trees, etc.

There have been much wheat and other cereals raised in Otter Tail County, but it is gradually dropping out of the list of cereal producing counties, we are told. The reason? Grass and water. Grass and water in abundance are a guarantee for cows doing well, and the country where cows feed and drink well is pretty sure to eventually turn the attention of farmers to dairying. Otter Tail County is a veritable dairyman's paradise, and in a State famous for its good bread and butter this county ought to be a banner one for supplying the material for keeping the bread buttered.

We were told by a newspaper man of Fergus Falls that a conservative estimate of the wheat yield for the county would be about fifteen bushels per acre; possibly the real estate men would claim more.

Fergus Falls has one of the State institutions, a State Hospital for the Insane. It is the largest one of four owned by the state of Minnesota. During our sojourn in the city we stayed at the pleasant home of Bro. G. W. Sherman. Bro. Sherman has for years worked in this State institution, and now holds a position of responsibility. We availed ourselves of the opportunity of going through the institution under his able guidance. One afternoon, after the afternoon service, Brn. F. A. Smith, T. J. Martin, and I went with Bro. George Sherman to the hospital and spent the remainder of the afternoon going through and listening to his short but concise explanations of the institution, its work, etc. When we saw the immense size of the buildings and their complete equipment, and learned that there were then thirteen hundred and sixty patients there, being cared for by about two hundred employees, we supposed that it was the only institution of its kind in the State; but an expression of this supposition brought out the information that while it was the largest of such State institutions there were four other State hospitals for insane in Minnesota besides schools for the feeble minded. We were depressed by the news. Think of it, about four thousand now in the Minnesota State hospitals for insane! And the conditions in this State are not unusual when compared to others. Well might we ask, Whither are we drifting; or rather ought we to ask, Whither are we rushing?

